News and Notes

GOING TO HAWAII

President W. Wallace Smith is making plans to leave for Hawaii early in January. He will be gone most of the month.

APOSTLE HIELD SPEAKER

Apostle Charles R. Hield was the guest speaker at a special Mexican night given by Mrs. Josephine Mader for the Quindaro Branch of Kansas City, Kansas, on December 13. After serving a meal of Spanish food which included tacos, enchiladas, and chili con carne, the group assembled in the main auditorium for a lecture and discussion period regarding the evangelical program among Latin-American people.

Brother Hield was in Columbia, Missouri, December 15 and 16, and spoke to the college student church group on the Spanish-American project, and showed pictures on Mexican archaeology. Brother Hield also delivered the morning sermon on December 16.

ARRIVED FROM TAHITI

Phoebe Mervin, youngest daughter of Brother and Sister John Mervin of Papeete, Tahiti, visited in Independence. She made the trip to America in company with Sister Edward Butterworth and children. She visited with Sister J. Charles May and Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Siegfried while in Independence, and went to Miami, Oklahoma, December 31 to continue her visit with the Butterworths. President Israel A. Smith has been informed that Joan Mervin, another daughter of the Mervins will be making a trip to America in time to attend the General Conference in April. Phoebe has also expressed the hopes that her parents will make the trip, and attend Conference.

Also arrived from Tahiti is Seventy F. Edward Butterworth. He spent Christmas week end in Independence with relatives, and joined his wife and children in Miami, Oklahoma, on Christmas night.

WAYNE SIMMONS IN TEXAS

Elder Wayne Simmons has returned from the Texas border on the Rio Grande where he has labored at Brownsville, Texas, from November 1 through December 16. He tracted in Spanish-speaking homes in one of the suburban developments in Brownsville, and lined up five cottage meetings a week for a period of six weeks. On December 9, the first church school period was held at Brownsville. Church school and preaching services were also held on December 16. The group is currently meeting in the Chamber of Commerce building. One candidate was baptized on December 16. Brother Gene Wilder, district president for the Southwest Texas District, is in charge of the group, assisted by Wayne Jackel. Brother Holmes reports that nineteen were present at the church school and preaching service on December 16. Only four of the people present were members of the church; the others were nonmembers who are interested in the church. Several of the people contacted, who have shown interest in the church, are attending services each Sunday evening at the Rio Grande Valley Branch in Alamo, Texas.

WINTER HOLIDAY FOR ORIOLES

An all-day winter holiday was held December 28 at the church property on Truman Road in Independence for the Oriole girls of the Center Stake of Zion. Lee Hart, stake youth leader, assisted the program committee, composed of Mrs. Lucille White, Mrs. Helen Elledge, and Mrs. Rachael Oeser.

In a day when the home sheltered the industrial crafts of the community, the word "economics" was coined. It means house management. All of us know some good housekeepers of blessed memories, but Sister Briggs is "executive housekeeper" of the Sanitarium and the Nurses Dormitory. Perhaps we should call her "economist extraordinary." In her department there are twenty-two helpers, including four men. They care for all the linens, the sewing of new garments, re-upholstering of furniture, cleaning, and sanitation. Sister Briggs serves on the fire, safety, and accident committee.

She is a native of Copemish, Michigan, attended the Cadillac High School, and married Harry C. Briggs at Cadillac in 1926. They have two children: Lorraine (Mrs. Norman) Cox, and Linford. Both are Gracelanders. Lorraine is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing. Her husband is under Conference appointment.

Sister Briggs took special courses in music and art. She worked thirteen years in the upholstering departments of two furniture companies. At the present time she is teaching a class in upholstering at the Social Service Center each Tuesday. Her hobby is cake decorating, and she is especially interested in music. She is a member of the "Messiah" Choir and of Stone Church, Group Four, women's department. Her husband is an elder. They have lived in Independence since 1942.

A New Generation Will Help

IT HAS BEEN our happy privilege to be able to travel and contact quite a number of Saints in the last few weeks. Among other things which we talked about in these contacts was the proposal to finish the Auditorium. To me it has been a happy experience to note the way in which the program outlined to raise funds to finish the Auditorium was received by the Saints. Almost in every instance where we have had a chance to talk with the bishop's agents who were in contact with those who were making the contributions there has been a keen desire upon their part to see that quotas were raised.

In an article in this issue of the Herald the Presiding Bishopric have treated the matter of quotas, and we call to your attention this article for the way in which the quotas have been explained, the way in which they have been set, the necessity for raising them, and pertinent information having to do with the drive to raise these funds to finish the Auditorium.

The need for finishing the Auditorium has been apparent to anyone who in the last several years has had the opportunity to visit Independence and to attend the gatherings which have been conducted in it. We, as a people, have always had the reputation of doing what we have set out to do, and while this is one project that has consumed considerably more time than we originally thought it would, yet there is no need for us to lose heart or to think that it cannot be done.

When one looks at the unfinished front of the Auditorium, there immediately comes into his mind the apparent need for some kind of an entrance which will be adequate to the massive strength of the building. This is one thing which is in the programming for the immediate future as far as the finished program of the Auditorium is concerned.

On the inside the foyer, the ramps, and some offices need to be finished. One of the greatest things for the convenience of the huge assemblies which gather in this building will be the treating of the main auditorium with the proper kind of material in order to make it accoustically usable. There is a need, too, for some type of floor to accommdate the seats which are to be put in on a

WHAT PRICE BROADCASTING?

How far to project religious scruples into modern business comes up sharply in the operation of church radio and television stations.

According to Newsweek (November 12, 1951), how far Mormon convictions regarding tobacco and alcoholic drinks should govern Mormon owned and controlled radio and television broadcasts poses a serious question. A few days ago "foaming beer commercials" broke into homes from the KSL-TV studio. Executives of church and KSL are said to preserve a "stony" but "red-faced" silence.

As a sort of antidote, as it were, the Mormon station has already inaugurated anticigarette programs known as "shorts." This may placate devout Mormons, and it doubtless is a conscience-salving and face-saving maneuver.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

permanent basis. Everywhere one looks there is this apparent need for the job which we have started out to do.

Those of us who are old enough can remember envisioning the Auditorium completed according to the plans and specifications as they were drawn up at the time the work was started. I think many of us knew even then that it would take many years beyond that which was suggested at the time to complete this task. And as we look back now, we recognize that there has arisen a new generation which has not had this original contact with the plans of the Auditorium. We feel that in these people there is still the strong drive to have here in the Center Place a building which will be adequate to our needs and representative of the thing for which we stand. They were not asked to make pledges to donate to the Auditorium, yet many have established homes, and businesses, and are in a position now to help finish the job which was started by their parents. It is to this generation as well as to the older members of the church that we are making this opportunity available to help finance the finishing of the Auditorium.

There is no reason for anyone to limit his contribution because of the feeling that there is a certain quota which his branch or district should raise. As has been pointed out, there must be many who go beyond this matter of meeting the per capita contribution which makes up the breakdown of the quotas assigned to branches and districts in order that there shall be sufficient income for us to do the thing which we would like to do. One needs to consider but momentarily the devalued dollar in order to realize that we cannot do today what we could have done several years ago with the same amount of money. Yet there is still a greater need today for the use of the Auditorium. It is from this angle and to this end that we recommend your careful reading of the article by the Presiding Bishopric entitled "The Auditorium Quotas."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By W. Wallace Smith

Editorial

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Robert S. Farnham, president of Lamoni Stake:

When I summarized the improvements made in the last six years in the Lamoni Stake congregations, in building new churches and remodeling and re-decorating present ones, I was amazed to discover that every congregation was on the list. While much of the work is in process of completion, achievements worthy of recognition have been made.

New churches are approaching the finishing stages in Albia, Creston, and Lamoni.

A schoolhouse has been purchased and moved to a building site in Corydon to be remodeled into a house of worship.

A building site has been purchased at Mt. Ayr and $7,000.00 raised for construction purposes. Plans will soon be ready for consideration and approval.

Additions have been made to the Bloomington and Chariton churches providing increased classroom facilities.

Extensive remodeling has been done at Centerville, Lone Rock, and Pleasanton.

Allendale, Andover, Bloomington, Davis City, Evergreen, Lucas, and Oland achievements include redecorating, painting, drapes and Venetian blinds installed, theater seats installed replacing chairs, improved heating installations, and new pulpit furniture.

Our progress in the county seat towns is encouraging. The improvements at Centerville and Chariton have materially strengthened these branches. The new churches at Albia and Creston have attracted favorable attention and point toward stable operations. The opening of Corydon and Mt. Ayr in the near future seems now assured with these definite plans for houses of worship. In addition we have set for ourselves the goal of opening the work in the five remaining county seat towns in our stake at the rate of one a year.

A fine spirit of co-operation and fellowship has been in evidence throughout the stake congregations and in many instances friends of the Saints have donated labor and contributed money to help in the good cause. While many examples could be given concerning the sacrifice and devotion of our people, two stand out at this writing.

The first one is the story of two families in Creston. Plans had been approved for a basement church with the superstructure to be constructed as rapidly as funds could be gathered. The chance of a General Church loan was very remote for probably two years, as General Church funds were in use and many loan applications pending. The decision to proceed meant that each member of this small congregation must use every ounce of energy and ability to help. A young mother of three children, Sister Jane Ross Mercer, whose college training had equipped her to teach, found employment in the Creston schools, but what about her children? Another mother, Sister A. D. Blair, whose children were now young men, volunteered to assist and care for the Mercer children while the mother taught school. The entire income from this co-operative venture of these devoted women has been placed in the hands of the building committee.

The second is the story of the Lamoni Branch. The record of the Lamoni Saints is one of the wholehearted support of the General Church over a long period of years. The destruction of the Brick Church by fire in 1931 is well-known history. That the Lamoni Saints loaned their fire insurance proceeds to the General Church in the early 1930's is not as well understood. This branch has worshiped twenty years in the Coliseum, a building used for community events but principally as a theater, in order that every penny possible be raised in tithes and offerings and forwarded to the General Church to help pay the debt. With the payment of all of the General Church obligations, the Lamoni Saints turned their attention to the task of building a house of worship. Space will not permit a detailed story of this experience. As the walls began to rise war clouds again appeared on the international scene. At the turn of the year Bishop Higdon's concern that the work proceed without any intermission due to lack of funds found ready support. The General Church had wisely earmarked some funds to lend this branch, struggling on a "pay-as-we-build" basis. These funds were not sufficient, however, and the Lamoni Saints, who had already stretched themselves in recent years, buckled down for another test of their capacity and devotion.

Last October branch leaders shared frankly with the Saints the situation. Funds were depleted with only enough to carry on two weeks. Eighteen thousand dollars would bring the church to the point where the branch could move in and complete the work in easier stages. The money needed to be raised in order to keep skilled craftsmen on the job. At a special Wednesday evening service in the unfinished auditorium

Church Rites in Tahiti

While Brother Siegfried and I were waiting to sail from Papeete, I was approached by a Sister Clarke and her daughter Lucie with a request that I baptize Lucie. Arrangements were made at Tarona church, a goodly number of Saints were present, and the baptism and confirmation were attended to by myself, Brother Siegfried and Elders Horahitu and Paia doing the confirming.

When the Saints assembled, a small lad by the name of Raihoa appeared and also desired baptism.

Recently Brother Siegfried and I received presents from Lucie, and she also sent her picture. Here is Lucie as she appears a year after we were in Tahiti.

of the new church four "generals" were commissioned to lead the campaign. Thanksgiving Sunday was named as the final day of the drive.

The new church bell purchased with the contributions of the children was now in place. It was to ring at 12:30 p.m. on every day the funds were increased by $1,000.00. At the halfway point $9,000.00 cash had been placed in the bishop's hands. The most difficult half seemed yet ahead. Next to the last week the bell rang four times, and twice the early part of the last week. Branch leaders geared themselves for the final appeal on the closing Sunday morning. The last Saturday was an unusually heavy day for the treasurer's office, and when the final count was made we quietly rejoiced in the knowledge we were over the top. But the story is not finished. We knew many were planning to make an offering on Sunday. It was truly a time of Thanksgiving for leaders and Saints when Bishop Higdon shared the news. Then the offering was received and just before the service closed the amount of the offering was announced. The bell was to ring for five minutes and then toll nineteen times—our goal had been exceeded by more than $1,000.00.

In the Land of the Incas

By Paul M. Hanson

(With illustrations from photographs by the author.)

THE BOOK OF MORMON, published to the world in 1830, states that iron was used in pre-Columbian times in America. It records of the Jaredites after they were divinely led from Babel to America about 2200 B.C.:

And they did work in all manner of ore, and they did make gold, and silver, and iron, and brass, and all manner of metals; and they did dig it out of the earth; wherefore they did cast up mighty heaps of earth to get ore, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of copper.¹

And of the Nephites, whose ancestors came from Palestine to America about 600 B.C., we read:

And we multiplied exceedingly, and spread upon the face of the land, and became exceeding rich in gold, and in silver, and in precious things, and in fine workmanship of wood, in buildings, and in machinery, and also in iron, and copper, and brass, and steel, making all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground, and weapons of war.²

One of the problems raised by the Book of Mormon is its foregoing statements of the use of iron and steel by ancient Americans. Some authors have written that iron was not known in ancient America.

May it not be that the reason iron relics of pre-Columbian American peoples have not been found is that iron quickly oxidizes and disappears? There are many things unknown about America's ancient past. To say iron, except in meteoric form, was not known in ancient times on the western continent is negative evidence. Archaeologists would better safeguard themselves if they said, so far as their knowledge goes, iron was not known in ancient America. A theory may be disproved overnight by a discovery.

1. Ancient granite wall in Cuzco.

2. A stone with twelve angles.

Scattered over a large area of Mexico, Central America, and along the western part of South America are ruins of detached and distinct civilizations. Where history and tradition are absent these ruins remain the only means of learning of the ancient peoples. Throughout the area of the Inca Empire are multitudinous remains of pre-Inca greatness. Cuzco, the ancient capital of the Inca Empire, is said to have been founded in the eleventh century. Among notable pre-Inca ruins are those of Pachacamac, Chan Chan, Sacsahuaman, Cajamarquilla, and Tiahuanaco. These leave an impression on the mind as fragments of a great wreck.

In Cuzco, surrounded by lofty mountains and lying in a valley at a height of 11,380 feet, are massive pre-Inca and Inca stone walls, early Spanish colonial architecture, and present-day buildings. Houses are often built on Inca stone foundations. The precision of the ancient masonry probably cannot be excelled anywhere. In some of the walls no two blocks of stone are alike in shape. Each must have been planned before being placed in position. These blocks were sculptured with almost incredible accuracy to fit into an architectural scheme. No mortar or cement was used, and the stones, though huge, are cut and joined with such perfection that even the blade of a penknife cannot be inserted between them.

T. R. Ybarra says:

The pre-Inca period, I think, may be described as that of polygonal stones perfectly joined together by multiple angles. Its architecture is of greater beauty, through its strength, than the Inca architecture. Pre-Inca walls show that those who built them were highly cultured and possessed supreme technical knowledge. The walls they built are unsurpassable. Never did man work better in stone.³

Were it not for the massive stones in the ancient ruins and the perfect fitting of the blocks together, there would be little known of the ancient greatness of the pre-Inca period. It is difficult, if not impossible, in many instances to distinguish between pre-Inca and Inca ruins.

There is clear evidence that many centuries prior to the founding of Cuzco there was a civilization superior to that of the Incas though developed probably by peoples of the same race. (See illustration 1.)

A famous masterpiece of early aboriginal workmanship is the twelve-angle stone forming part of the wall in Cuzco that is shown. (See illustration 2.)

Colossal sculptured stones are also to be seen among the famous ruins of Tiahuanaco, located on the great plateau of Bolivia 12,930 feet above sea level a few miles south of Lake Titicaca. It is one of the most puzzling archaeological sites on the continent. Here was a civilization that advanced to great heights in arts, engineering, and religion, yet nothing is known of its origin or its people, except what is learned from the ruins. The ancient name of the place is unknown.

Dr. Wendell C. Bennett, professor of anthropology, Yale University, says of Tiahuanaco:

The cultural pattern implied by the archaeological remains at Bolivian Tiahuanaco is that of a well-integrated and powerfully controlled religious organization. The large construction units required organized mass labor, careful advanced planning, and skilled masons. The site has every appearance of a ceremonial center, so that it is logical to assume a religious direction. There are many indications that Tiahuanaco was built at intervals and that much of it was never completed. This suggests once more the religious pilgrimage pattern, in which great masses of people assembled at certain times of the year and contributed the labor of hauling, dressing, and placing the large stones. In the interim periods, skilled masons worked on the fitting, joining, and carving.⁴

Tiahuanaco was in ruins when Cuzco was founded. Here are immense remains of a civilization not only prehistoric, but also practically silent as to tradition. According to Dr. Bennett this site attained the peak of its perfection in craftsmanship about A.D. 600-900. However, this is a guess date resulting from piecing together various fragments of evidence.

Remains from this site are in many museums. Notwithstanding great destruction to the ruins, and the site being used as a quarry from which cut stones through the centuries have been taken to build churches, houses, bridges, etc., elaborately carved stones, some of gigantic size, are still scattered over a wide area of the plain. Much remains for the visitor to admire with astonishment.

Prominent among the ruins is a monolithic gateway, with amazing sculpture, cut from a single massive block of stone. (See illustration 3.) The carved designs on the gateway clearly possess religious significance. The principal figure is carved in the center of the great monolith, directly over the doorway. The well-executed carvings show the personage standing on a throne wearing a sort of diadem and holding, one in the right hand and one in the left, true scepters, signs of authority and power; from the eye sockets tears fall on the cheeks. On each side of the central figure there are twenty-four figures kneeling and facing the deity, sixteen with heads of birds and thirty-two with human heads, all of which are winged, crowned, holding scepters, and hastening as though to do obeisance to him. According to Sir Clements R. Markham, the central figure probably represents the deity having jurisdiction over all human beings on the one hand and over all the animal creation on the other.

Writers of eminent reputation have interpreted the central figure as representing Wiracocha. This deity, according to tradition, was white and bearded; he appeared and ministered to pre-Inca people on the Island of Titicaca in Lake Titicaca, after which temples were built to his worship.

The monolith has been broken, it is thought by lightning or an earthquake.

Thomas A. Joyce says of the carvings:

Various explanations of the frieze have been suggested. As far as the central figure is concerned, the mind turns naturally to the great creator-god associated with the locality, Uiracocha.⁵

Philip Ainsworth Means, after stating that the worship of Wiracocha was definitely linked with Tiahuanaco culture and was of the greatest importance in pre-Inca times—both in the highlands and on the coast, says:

4. Reverse side of monolithic gateway.

To my mind there is no doubt but that the Weeping God is Viracocha; for, in the myths of that period Viracocha is the chief personage, a sort of culture-hero as well as a Creator-god, and in the art of that culture the Weeping God, or derivatives from him, is the leading figure. Therefore they must be the same.

Turning now to the objective aspect of the Weeping God, or of Viracocha, as he appears on the monolithic gateway, we perceive certain traits which make it obvious that he was a sky-deity of some sort. No one can be more chary than I am as a general rule of subjective interpretations of ancient decorative designs; but here the indications are so clear that they admit of no doubt.⁶

What a contrast between the culture of this ancient metropolis and the present Indians!

Two views are shown of the monument, the reverse side of which is also most wonderful. (See illustration 4.)

E. G. Squier says of the gateway:

On the reverse we find the doorway surrounded by friezes or cornices, and above it on each side two small niches, below which, also on either side, is a single larger niche. The stone itself is a dark and exceedingly hard trachyte. It is faced with a precision that no skill can excel; its lines are perfectly drawn, and its right angles turned with an accuracy that the most careful geometer could not surpass. Barring some injuries and defacements, and some slight damages by weather, I do not believe there exists a better piece of stone-cutting, the material considered, on this or the other continent. The front, especially the part covered by sculpture, has a fine finish, as near a true polish as trachyte can be made to bear.⁷

If there were only this one monument remaining at Tiahuanaco, it would serve as a means of judging the knowledge, culture, and civilization of its builders as of a high order. (See illustration 5.)

5. Main entrance to Temple area, Tiahuanaco.

At the time of the Spanish conquest, traditions of the Peruvians threw no light on the origin of Tiahuanaco. The evidence points to this place as a center of culture and of religious devotion. Tiahuanaco was overtaken by an unknown calamity. What befell this flourishing civilization was so disastrous as to extinguish its culture and political domination which extended over a large part of Peru and along its coast.

Tradition which has filtered through the centuries indicates that Tiahuanaco is of pre-Inca date and is in a definite manner associated with the worship of Wiracocha.

Viracocha ordered these people that they should live without quarreling, and that they should know and serve him. He gave them a certain precept which they were to observe on pain of being confounded if they should break it. . . . They transgressed the precept of Viracocha and failing, through this sin, under his indignation, he confounded and cursed them.⁸

In reading about Wiracocha, one's thoughts go at once to what is set forth, somewhat in detail, in the Book of Mormon concerning the wondrous visit and ministrations of Jesus Christ in person among his people in America soon after he rose from the dead. (See illustrations 6 and 7.)

Less than a mile from the principal ruins are enormous blocks of sculptured stone, great platforms, and broken monolithic doors—a fantastic jumble of monumental remains in a field of desolation. Some of the stones weigh more than one hundred tons, and were brought a distance of six miles.

What about the iron?

In the Encyclopedia Britannica we read under the heading of "Antiquity of Iron":

6. Colossal ruins less than one mile from the principal ruins, Tiahuanaco.

Few implements of iron or steel survive for many years before they rust away, consequently there is little direct evidence to prove the point; nevertheless the antiquity of iron smelting is great. It doubtless has been discovered and rediscovered many times. . . . An iron blade, probably 5,000 years old, has been found in one of the Egyptian pyramids. Even without this discovery one could plausibly maintain that the ancient Egyptians must have had skilled steel workers in order to have built the great pyramids and other monumental architecture, to say nothing of the statuary and hieroglyphics cut into the hardest rocks.⁹

With the same kind of reasoning applied to the great works in stone of the ancient Americans, one can likewise maintain that the builders "must" have possessed iron.

Marvelous indeed is the testimony borne by ancient monumental remains in America to the accuracy of what is contained in the Book of Mormon.

Auditorium Quotas

SINCE THE ANNOUNCEMENT of plans for raising funds for the completion of the Auditorium, inquiries have been received pertaining to different phases of this most important project. It is interesting to note that these inquiries have been almost 100 per cent constructive and made in the spirit of cooperation. The response to this announcement throughout the entire church—in the United States, Canada, and abroad in the British, European, Australasian, and Society Islands Missions—has indicated a strong desire on the part of church members to move forward in the accomplishment of this task which is challenging the best from us in the way of financial and moral support.

The inquiries made center around the following questions, to which we are making specific answers in the hope that they will prove informative and clarify the methods and objective of our present program.

1. Why are quotas assigned to stakes, districts, and branches?

Our experience over many years of raising funds for specific purposes has proved to us that our members like to know as nearly as possible the size of the task we are undertaking and the approximate amount that it will take from each organized unit to reach our goal.

2. Are the quotas arbitrarily assigned?

The quotas are not arbitrary; they are suggestive. They are based on past performance of financial contributions given to the General Church both in total and from stakes and districts. They are suggestive in the sense that from our experience we feel that the amount given to a stake or district as a quota seems to us to be about what can be reasonably expected from that particular area.

3. Did the Presiding Bishopric assign quotas to each branch?

Quotas were assigned to stakes and districts by the Presiding Bishopric, and the matter of apportionment to branches and unorganized territories within stake or district was the responsibility of the stake or district officers.

4. Was consideration given to financial loads already being carried by some branches because of local projects?

Yes, insofar as possible. Where some few branches were undertaking heavy responsibilities in the way of local buildings, care was exercised not to throw too great a burden upon such groups. However, it is interesting to note that in very few instances where local projects are under way has there been any substantial diminution of contributions of tithes and offerings to the General Church.

5. If a branch, district, or stake oversubscribes its quota for the year 1951, should the credit be carried over into the year 1952?

The answer to this is a very important one. It is much like dividing up the whole amount needed on a per capita basis and each member paying a per capita share of the total amount. This system simply does not work, for there is a wide variance in the ability of individuals to contribute. Many must give a great many times more than their per capita share if we are to raise the amount required. Just as this is true in the case of a per capita division on the part of individuals, so is it also true on a division as among branches, districts, and stakes. It is always anticipated that some areas will oversubscribe and overpay the amount of their quota in order to make up any deficits where the quota may have been beyond the ability of a branch, district, or stake to raise. Therefore, it is highly essential that each organized area raise all it is capable of raising, not only this year, but in each of the two succeeding years when this special effort is being made.

6. The General Church offices have set a figure of $100,000 to be raised in 1951, and $200,000 in each of the years 1952 and 1953, or a total of $500,000. Will this $500,000 complete the Auditorium?

In answering this, we wish to call attention to the fact that in all of the publicity that we have put out, there has been no indication whatsoever that this amount of money would complete the building. It is our opinion that it will not be adequate, and that additional amounts will have to be raised in following years to bring it to a state of completion. The sum of $500,000 was set as an objective because from our past performance in raising funds, in appraising our present needs, we are of the opinion that this amount of money could be raised and invested in this project in these particular years without jeopardizing or retarding our other major activities.

7. What is the order of procedure in the construction work to be done? Where will the money now being raised be spent?

The immediate needs for which plans have been completed and contracts are now being let are for installation of electric power facilities and completion of the council room. The cost of these two projects will approximate $60,000. Plans are now being finalized for the front and the foyer. It seems quite likely that the center of the front and the foyer is the next logical unit for completion.

Plans are also being developed for the finish of the interior. From studies made up to the present time, the interior of the main auditorium will be an immediate need. Included in the completion of the interior, there must be provision for seating. In this connection temporary seating for the balcony and a portion of the main auditorium has been installed. This temporary seating was obtained at a price equivalent to a few years' rent such as we have been having to pay for the use of chairs, and action was taken as a matter of both convenience and economy.

8. By way of repetition, how much will be needed beyond the $500,000?

The uncertainty of economic conditions, inflationary trends, the availability of materials, the possibility of a continuation of war conditions, all indicate the inadvisability of forecasting the cost of completion of this building. Due to the fact that the building has had a degree of utility in past years, it is now possible to complete it on a cash-in-hand basis, taking it one unit at a time, without involving ourselves in debt, but nevertheless proceeding definitely and surely in the direction of its completion.

9. In some instances it is possible for one individual or a few individuals to raise the entire amount of the quota in a stake, or district, or branch, due to their financial ability and willingness. How should quotas be treated where this situation exists?

It is highly desirable that the membership as a whole participate in this project. In situations such as this, we are sure that everyone will be most happy to have any branch, district, or stake double or treble or multiply its quota by any other digit.

For many years now members throughout the church have raised the question time and time again, "When are we going to complete the Auditorium?" The answer to this is to be found in the extent to which we, as members of the church, are really desirous and have the ability to continue in support until the project is completed. This is not a time to limit our contribution to the maximum of our quota if we are able to contribute more. On the other hand, there is no intent on the part of any to ask that members contribute beyond their ability. Let us not look at quotas as something arbitrary, but rather as a guide to give us incentive and determination to accomplish our total goal.

A Family to Fit the House

By August Lee

ALTHOUGH MANY YEARS have gone by, my wife Sophia and I remember vividly the spring of 1920. At this time we moved from Burlington to Nauvoo to establish a business and to help build up the church work there. The first year we rented a frame dwelling on the flat, but we were not satisfied with this as a permanent home. Then we learned of a large, eight-room house with a porch on four sides overlooking the Mississippi. The house was in good shape, and we decided to purchase it. We had only enough furniture for three rooms, but more important the place was too large for just the two of us. My wife suggested that she go to the Children's Home in Lamoni and select a child for us to rear. She said, "If I get one, it will be a red-haired boy—provided you don't mind." I told her to be the judge. She returned from her trip to Iowa on the "Keokuk" holding the hand of a six-year-old red-haired boy with one front tooth out. Down the gang-plank he came with an iron grip on her hand and a big smile on his face. As I walked up to meet them he stretched out his arms for a welcome. There was a feeling that I shall never forget as we put our arms around each other in a welcome of love. A number of villagers who always came for the landing of the boat were wondering what was taking place, and we were not long in satisfying their curiosity. This was on August 6, 1921.

We soon developed a deep love for each other, yet little John seemed lonely at times. Often he would mention his sister who was still at the Home and say that he wished she could be with him to enjoy the big house. The school he attended was a mile up the hill, and we were finally convinced that his sister—four years older—would be a great comfort to him on the long walk.

On November 3, 1921, we arranged for Mary to come live with us and attend school with John. They were happy to be together, but both of them began to wish for their brother, David, who was still at the Children's Home.

My wife and I held another conference. I realized that the extra child would mean more work for Sophia, but she agreed that we should make plans for David to come so we could at least get acquainted with him. He had just two weeks of vacation left before school started, so we had him meet us at the depot in Burlington, Iowa, and then took him out to the house. I never expect to see three happier children. At the end of the two weeks David had no desire to return to the Home, and on August 24, 1922, we became a family of five.

Each child was given some responsibility in maintaining the house. We bought one cow, then another, and arranged for a few milk customers. The children were always ready to do their chores, and we were truly a happy family.

MARY AND DAVID attended Grace-land College after they finished high school, and John went to the University of Iowa for a while. Then he joined the Navy and later received his commission as lieutenant junior grade. He was on Okinawa during a typhoon, and because of hardships experienced there became ill. He was flown to the Naval Hospital at Corona, California, where he remained for thirteen months. After being released with a physical disability retirement, he began working as an electrical engineer for an insurance company in Los Angeles. He is married and has two children.

A Career in Church Education

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

J. A. Gunsolley

PART VII

When the matter was presented to the branch for consideration as provided in the law, strong opposition arose. Some members argued that these men should have first occupied as priests for a time before being ordained elders. Some argued lack of experience, and others said they were too young to be ordained elders. Finally the matter was referred to the next district conference which was to be held at Allendale, Missouri, about forty miles from Lamoni. When the matter came before the conference speeches were made on both sides, and the vote gave a safe and wholesome majority favoring the ordination to the office of elder as recommended by the district president. I was only too glad to take a stand in favor. It was predicted by some that time would show it was a mistake, but time showed that both young men honored their priesthood and did a good work in the church.

Financial Hardships

During the infancy and growth of Graceland College I had varied experiences, some of which were trying, some joyous. The church was without funds to endow the college. Sentiment toward the maintenance of an institution of higher learning was far from unanimous. The number of college age young people in the church was limited, and those who might be ready and desirous of going were so widely scattered that it was difficult to gather a sufficient number to make the effort a success at first.

As a result those dependent upon remuneration from their connection with the college often experienced financial hardships. At one time our family did not have money enough to buy a postage stamp for weeks. I told this experience one time in a sermon, and at the close of the service a sister in the church, wife of a high priest who possessed a competency of this world's goods, came forward and slipped a silver dollar under the pulpit where I could reach it. She said, "Now go and buy some stamps."

While I was glad to get the dollar, I'm afraid her act of generosity was not calculated to call forth remarks entirely complimentary, for we needed something besides postage stamps—they do not have much dietary value. However, our credit with the grocer was good so that we never suffered from lack of food, even though at one time his ledger showed I owed him the largest amount of any of his customers. The account finally was paid in full, and I don't recall that any business concern ever lost a cent because of Graceland faculty members failing to meet obligations assumed.

At one time faculty members accepted deeds to lots in the Graceland Addition to Lamoni in lieu of cash. I chose two lots lying between town and the college building just west of the campus, and hoped to build upon them. However, Marjorie's affliction prevented her ever walking again, so the idea of building a home there was abandoned, and the lots were deeded back to the college at about 30 per cent of cost price.

Call of F. M. Smith and F. B. Blair to Priesthood (1897)

On my way home from the college one evening I was reading a letter from the president of the district. As I walked casually along reading the letter I was visited by the Holy Spirit in power when I read the statement that Frederick M. Smith and Fred B. Blair should be ordained elders. It was a matter of surprise to me, and yet I was filled with the Spirit's testimony that the call was divine. As president of the branch I realized I would be called upon to take a stand either for or against their being ordained. I wanted to be sure what attitude I should take. I thought, If the spirit I have received is a testimony from God, the call for their ordination is divine, and I can have the same experience again. So I went back and retraced my steps praying that if the calling were of God, the Spirit might come upon me when I read the letter again at the same place in my walk. To my great joy and utter satisfaction, at the very same spot as I walked along reading the words of the district president I was again enveloped by the power of the Spirit. I knew then I could favor the ordination.

Acting President of Graceland

I served as acting president of Graceland at two different times. In 1905-6 President E. R. Dewsnup, who came from England as president, was given leave of absence for one year. I was head of the commercial school, which was the largest department according to enrollment, and was asked to take charge during his absence. The second time I served as acting president was from 1909-13, during which time a search was being made for a president. I had neither a master's nor doctor's degree. I'm very certain of one thing however—that to serve as head of the commercial school and at the same time occupy the chair in the president's office didn't leave much time for leisure, family, or church. My wife said to me once, not complainingly, that she thought it might be well for me to take a little time off and get acquainted with the children.

Treasurer and Business Manager

About 1911 I was appointed treasurer and occupied that office until about 1914, when the office of business manager was added, and I occupied the double position of treasurer and business manager until 1924. Then I was succeeded by N. Ray Carmichael. During this time I spent about four hours a day in the classroom. As business manager, I was responsible for carrying on the farm activities including dairying, cropping, livestock, and poultry management. I directed the activities of the commissary. As treasurer I was accountable for disbursing all money under the authority of the general management of those elected by the General Conference to carry on the work of the college.

Lamoni Stake Organized

At the General Conference of 1901 a revelation was received directing that two stakes be organized, one at Independence, Missouri, and one at Lamoni, Iowa. Pursuant to the revelation and approval of the Conference, Lamoni Stake was organized on April 30, 1901. Those chosen to preside over the stake were Elders John Smith, president; David W. Wight and I, counselors; William Anderson and two counselors, stake bishopric; a high council of twelve; and a secretary. Elder Robert M. Elvin was president of Decatur District, and I was president of Lamoni Branch at the time the stake was organized. We both offered our resignations to make way for the new organization.

It had been expected for a number of years that such a change in the organization would take place, for it had been referred to in a former revelation. It provided the means of more effective administration, since many things could be done under stake organization that could not be done under district and branch organization. Frequent meetings of the presidency, bishopric, and high council were held for study and discussion of the functions and duties of the different departments and officers.

Resignation From Stake Office

In time my service in the stake organization became unsatisfactory to a majority of the Stake Council, and a resolution was passed to the effect that the presidency of the stake should so arrange their affairs that they could give full time, or at least most of their time, to stake work. Brother Blair was business manager of the Herald Publishing House, and I, being a member of the college faculty, spent four or five hours in the classroom. I was president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and secretary of the church board of publication, as well as having numerous other duties and obligations of a local nature. I recognized that the decision of the High Council was right, but I could not decide whether to give up my work in local affairs or that of the general church. Failing to be able to make a decision I wrote the president of the church to advise me. My request to him was about as follows: "I believe in the office of prophet in the church, and regard you as the divinely appointed prophet for this generation. I have faith that I might expect to receive light through you, inasmuch as I have not succeeded in making a decision through any efforts of my own. I should like, Brother Joseph, that if you feel so led you would seek God in my behalf, for I want to do the right thing and serve where I can serve most efficiently."

In due time I received his reply: "I do not hesitate to say the Spirit indicates to me that you should continue in your general work and give up some of your work of a local character."

The stake work was the chief obligation of a local nature, being limited to the eight counties comprising the territory under stake government, while the college and Religio both were world-wide institutions. The next stake conference had the privilege of acting upon my resignation from the presidency.

Second Marriage

When David Wight died while on his mission in Utah his widow and child returned to their home in Lamoni. Before her marriage to Elder Wight she spent several months in our home as a student at Graceland College, doing housework in payment for her board and room. Her name was Mattie Brown. My wife and I thus came to know her as an industrious, dependable, upright young woman deserving of help and worthy of the confidence of her friends.

Having so recently been deprived of the companionship of my wife, and she having lost her companion, it was natural that my feeling of sympathy for her and my interest in her should be a little more than ordinary. Then, too, she was the widow of my associate in the stake presidency. Accordingly I wrote a letter to her expressing sympathy and a desire to try to do something to lighten her load. She reciprocated with a prompt reply to the effect that she would be glad to carry on a correspondence. The letters continued, and she granted permission for me to call on her. It was not long until I began seeing her.

We each had dreams which seemed to have been for our benefit. One afternoon as I was sleeping on the couch, I dreamt that she came in and sat down in a chair near me. I asked her how she was getting along, and she replied that she was having a rather hard time.

I said, "I have a work for you. Can you guess what it is?"

She did not seem in the least surprised and without hesitancy answered, "Yes, I'm to come and keep house for you."

In the dream she had she was walking about in the park when I approached her and asked, "Have you ever thought you would get married again?"

Much to her surprise, for she had really thought she never would again marry, she replied, "Yes, if the right man should come along." The dream was short, but it had a significance.

When we related to each other our dreams we were strongly convinced that we should be married.

On September 15, 1905, we were married in our home in the presence of a few relatives and friends. Evangelist J. W. Wight officiated. Two children, Cecil Alden, born September 28, 1906, and Dorothy Estella, born December 4, 1909, blessed this union. Our married life has been a happy one, although in an economic sense we have lived pretty close to the margin line of needs and just wants. We have not lacked for food or clothing of a reasonably good quality, but we have never been extravagant. I lived in the house I built in 1892 until 1945, when we sold it and bought a smaller place. We lived two years in this place, then sold it and moved to Independence, building a four-room apartment addition to Marjorie's house for our home.

Called to Be a Patriarch

One Sunday in March, 1925, Apostle Garver approached me at church and quite abruptly said, "What are you going to say when your name is presented for ordination to the office of patriarch?"

I replied, "I don't know. I suppose I'll do as I've done in other instances when asked by the church to accept responsibilities. I'll do the best I can." It had been intimated once before that I would one day be a patriarch. The occasion was the close of a session at the young people's convention in Lamoni. I was asked to pronounce a blessing upon the assembly by R. V. Hopkins.

He said, "Brother Gunsolley is not a patriarch, but he ought to be." So, in the midst of the heated discussion of the question that had agitated the conference for a number of days a lull occurred in the proceedings, Apostle Garver arose and in a brief statement proposed my name for ordination to the office of patriarch, and made a motion that the ordination be approved. The motion was promptly seconded, and a spirit of peace replaced the spirit of contention. The vote was unanimous, and I was ordained April 19, 1925. This ordination was very significant for it meant release in the near future from my connection with Graceland College, in which work I had spent the best part of my life. At the same time it was a joyous occasion, for I knew I must give up my active work in the college because of my age. The change could not have been more to my liking. The college authorities, as an expression of appreciation, conferred upon me the title "Treasurer Emeritus."

Question Time

Question:

If there is to be only one prophet, seer, and revelator in your church, please explain: “. . . that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch . . . and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph . . .” as it reads in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.

Alabama

J.P.

Answer:

Your question assumes there is to be only one prophet, seer, and revelator. No where in church procedure, practices, or policies, do I find support for that statement. It is true that we as a church believe there is to be only one president of the high priesthood, who in turn selects his own two counselors.

The church has accepted in practice the instruction given in the Doctrine and Covenants, “That my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch . . . and from this time forth I appoint unto him that he be a prophet and a seer and a revelator unto my church as well as my servant Joseph.”—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29. The calling of Hyrum was to be presiding patriarch. He held “the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the head of all” the people of the church. In this sense he was to be a prophet, seer, and revelator. He was to “act in concert” with Joseph and “receive counsel” from him. (Read the remainder of paragraph 29, also 107: 38.)

The calling of Hyrum in this experience is likened to that of Oliver Cowdery. (See Doctrine and Covenants 27: 1, 2.) Surely the prophetic leadership of the entire church did not center in either Oliver or Hyrum the same as it did in Joseph. The church does not hold to the belief there need be only one prophet, seer and revelator, but does support the belief there is only one president of the high priesthood.

The explanation seems to be that there is a sense in which the presiding patriarch is clearly “prophet and seer and revelator” to the entire church. There may even be occasions when he shall so function in the stead of the president or in confirmation of what has been received through the president of the high priesthood. Any revelation to be officially accepted by the church must be endorsed by the quorums and by the General Conference assembled. There seems to be no question but what the distinctive, prophetic, seeric, and revelatory powers which belong “of necessity” to the president of the high priesthood are not shared with the presiding patriarch or anyone else.

DONALD V. LENTS

Question:

1. What is the difference between the Utah Book of Mormon and that published by the Reorganized Church?

2. Are all the various editions or printings of the Book of Mormon identical?
Missouri

H. J. S.

1. From my examination I judge that the Palmyra edition was mostly followed in the Utah Church Book of Mormon, of which my copy is their 1920 edition. Our present Authorized Edition is the work of a committee appointed by act of General Conference in 1906. This committee, through its chairman, Frederick M. Smith, and secretary, Richard S. Salyards, reported in 1908, the revised book itself being published at Lamoni that year. A printed comparison of the Palmyra edition with the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon showed three hundred and twenty-nine differences, most of which consisted of only one or a few words and some changes in spelling that were of little or no importance to the meaning of the text in general. A few cases seemed to indicate error in the manuscript itself, but so far as accuracy indicated the committee stated its decision to follow the original manuscript and the Kirtland edition, 1837, to accord with the work as corrected by Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. Accordingly, we find some errors of the Palmyra edition in the Utah Church edition, and some words and parts of sentences of the manuscript omitted. Most of these are not of vital significance, however, to the general intent of the book itself.

2. As indicated in Question 1, a considerable number of differences are found in some of the editions, generally of little or no importance to the purpose of the work as a whole. Some of these were undoubtedly typographical or clerical. Reprints and copies would of course tend to follow their originals, but slight errors in the latter might exist for the reasons indicated. The Authorized Edition is probably the superior of those thus far published.

Question:

Malachi 3: 1 reads, “Behold I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me.” Who is this messenger? Was his name Joseph Smith? Oklahoma

F. S.

Answer:

I am sorry to have to disagree with one of my illustrious predecessors, but I do not believe that the “messenger” referred to in this question was Joseph Smith. In Matthew 11: 10 Christ himself says that this messenger was John the Baptist. In Luke 1: 75 the father of John, Zacharias, spoke in prophecy at the birth of John and said: “And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest, for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways.” This phrase, “He shall prepare the way before me,” was used in this prophecy; it refers to John the Baptist. Isaiah 40: 3 also uses the phrase, “Prepare ye the way of the Lord,” but gives no other indication as to name of the messenger. But the statement of Christ in this reference is quite clear. The messenger was John the Baptist.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

BOOKS

The Pastor's Wife, by Carolyn P. Blackwood, Westminster Press, $2.50.

The 187 pages of this book are divided into three major parts: 1. In the Home; 2. In the Church; 3. Among the People. Mrs. Blackwood's suggestions, which constitute a very practical guide for the pastor's wife, are based on her own personal experiences in both city and rural churches and on the answers to questionnaires sent to lay women and ministers wives.

She believes that the woman who marries a minister "should feel the call to service almost as much as her husband . . . not . . . to preach the gospel, but she should wish to give herself to a life of service for God and the people."

Among the things that lead to success as a minister's wife are a cheerful personality, neat clothes, a becoming and easy to maintain hair-dress, the discreet use of cosmetics, a graceful carriage, and a pleasing voice (to be assiduously cultivated). She must cultivate warm sympathy and common sense to help her women meet their tragedies and life problems; she must learn to meet the needless, thoughtless demands that intrude upon her home life, often via the telephone, with unflinching courtesy. Mrs. Blackwood writes: "As you grow in grace you will cease to think of yourself as a marked woman because you will become more and more concerned about the spiritual welfare of your flock. The people will love you . . . because they know you are sincere."

The pastor's wife must support her husband in his work. "Believe in your man! Trust him with your whole heart, through faith in God, expect great things from your beloved and attempt great things with him. Confide in him. Pray with him and for him. Co-operate with him in all he undertakes, helping at least by sympathy, often in silence. Shield him from petty intrusions. Cheer him when he deserves praise, and be patient when things go awry."

The minister's wife must set an example of gracious living, with her first duty to make and keep her home orderly and attractive. If she feels she must leave her house in dirt and disorder to work for the Lord she has "a dislocated sense of duty." By long-range planning she learns to entertain easily and tastefully, supplementing her simple menus with genuine warmth of love and kindness.

"Not even a minister's wife has any larger opportunity for service than with her own little ones, beginning at birth." It was by countless repetition that Susanna wisely taught her little John to "love the Lord and keep his day, to hate a lie and tell the truth."

Some fine suggestions are given for family prayer and the family altar in the pastor's home. The minister's family should be taken to church early in life and should participate in all church school and youth organizations. The minister's wife should keep well informed about the work of her own denomination at home and abroad, cultivate at least one favorite poet and novelist, and keep in touch with current affairs and the best in current literature. However, the Scriptures and hymnal should come first in her reading, with choice portions being committed to memory.

A chapter gives practical suggestions, including menus and recipes, for entertaining members of the congregation, church officials, and strangers.

As a financier the pastor's wife must budget carefully, give a tenth to the Lord, and "pay as you go, and if you can't pay, don't go."

Two chapters instruct the minister's wife concerning her duties in the church. She supports her husband and encourages the flock by her faithful attendance. "The wife's presence in the sanctuary at every service does much to hearten the pastor . . . especially when the going gets rough up in the pulpit she wishes him to feel that she knows, she cares, she prays, and expects him to come through with triumph."

She promotes reverence in the church by precept and example. She keeps her eyes open for strangers and serves as "contact woman" for newcomers, winning new friends by her warm but not too effusive greetings. She cultivates the ability to remember names and faces. She helps every woman to find a place in the work of the church and leads the women in organized wise visiting and relief for the needy, the sick, and the shut-ins.

Concerning personal criticism the author advises: "Try to find out, if you can, what lies back of the criticism. Then deal with it, lovingly, in one of three ways: Ordinarily either ignore it or approach the matter indirectly. In any case, accept it as a challenge and before you decide what to do 'take it to the Lord in prayer.'"

As a woman of prayer, the pastor's wife prepares in her faithful daily devotions for leadership in public prayer. She should be willing to spend much time and effort to learn how to pray and should be ready at a few minutes notice to lead her women's group in a short effective devotional service. "First you find the motif, which may come from some verse that suddenly grips you in the daily reading, or else from a snatch of a hymn such as, 'I trace the rainbow through the rain.' The trail will lead through the Bible and hymnal into 'the beautiful garden of prayer.'"

She should be willing to spend hours in her home in heart to heart coaching and training sessions helping other women to learn to pray in public. Many definite methods are given by which she may meet this blessed opportunity to teach another to pray.

The pastor's wife functions among the people "as a friend of everyone," "as a personal counselor," "as a living example," "as a community force," and "as an uncrowned queen." These five final chapters of the book are replete with practical suggestions which should be helpful. The whole book is well worth reading and is easy to read. We agree with this statement on the book jacket: "Any woman who has married, or is planning to marry, a minister will learn from this book much that will help her to fill her challenging position both happily and effectively."—ALICE M. BURGESS

Unpredictable Truce

During the first World War, Marshal Foch's chauffeur, Pierre, was constantly besieged by his comrades with: "Pierre, when is the war going to end? You ought to know."

Pierre tried to satisfy them. "The moment I hear anything from the Marshal, I will tell you."

One day he came to them.

"The Marshal spoke today."

"He did? Well, what did he say?"

"He said: 'Pierre, what do you think? When is this war going to end?'"—Lion Feuchtwanger, The Devil in France (Viking).

Tribute to a Pastor

The earliest known history of Lawrence [Kansas] Branch goes back to about 1913 when Dr. Charles F. Grabske of Independence, Missouri, and several other students attended Kansas University. The group had no set services, but it was influential in having Apostle John Rushton speak at the University Convocation. The members met in homes and were organized into a mission in October, 1924. They started a building fund and bought the Communion service that is still in use in Lawrence Branch.

The group became big enough to necessitate the hiring of a hall in which to hold meetings, growing gradually as new families moved to Lawrence to work or study at the University.

The present church building was purchased in July, 1946, after many setbacks and disappointments. The congregation grew as local war plants and industries drew many to Lawrence in search of employment. The University used the building as a dormitory for two years while the group met at Danforth Chapel on the University campus.

Kaw Valley District was organized on November 26, 1950, with Lawrence as its headquarters.

Through the years Elder G. R. Norris has been the faithful leader and pastor of the Lawrence group. A testimonial service was given him on October 25, 1951, in recognition of his many years of service. Elder Edwin Browne was in charge of the service, and the newly elected pastor, Ammon Andes, was also on the platform. There were twenty-eight members of the Norris family present in the congregation. Elder Norris was given a Bible commentary and a swivel chair for his insurance office.

There are approximately twenty-five families and thirty-three students who are members of the present congregation.

Church Woman in the News

The editors recently received a copy of a Canadian magazine, Saturday Night, which carried a two-column article on Sister Faye Gould McLean. Faye left Independence in 1922 when she married Dr. Charles McLean, a Toronto dentist. She has received publicity recently because of the civic work she does. In 1940 she was invited to become a member of the Board of Governors of Women's College Hospital, which is staffed entirely by women. In 1949 she became president of the Board and is now serving her second term. Because of this position she was among the group of officials who were invited to the reception for Princess Elizabeth when she visited Toronto recently. Sister McLean has also been active in the Home and School Association and was president of the organization when her two children were in school. In 1943 she served as publicity director for the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society and was editor of its magazine, The Courier. From 1945-47 she was president of the American Women's Club.

It seems that the Canadian hospitals, like our Sanitarium, have an ever-increasing problem of handling indigent and emergency cases for which they are never paid. Mrs. McLean went before the Toronto Board of Control making a plea for the sharing of these costs with the city. The magazine states, "When she had finished her address, Controller Balfour sprang to his feet, and said, 'Mr. Mayor, I want to say that I have represented the city in these chambers for many years, but never have I heard as brilliant and clear a presentation of a case as Mrs. McLean has given us this morning.'"

THE FOLLOWING article was printed in The Lamoni Chronicle of December 6, under the title, "A Bit of History." It is reprinted here by permission of the editor, J. R. Terry.

The records of a community reveal the names of many persons who made contributions of its growth.

There were those, such as George Blair and Bert Derry, who spent long lives in the town, giving time and energy to the solution of its problems. Likewise there were those who were here for a short stay.

In this "Bit of History" we will tell you of an interesting personality who flashed across the Lamoni scene in the early days. His name was Moses A. Meeder.

Mr. Meeder was born 150 years ago, December 18, 1801, at Ellsworth, New Hampshire. We have no information concerning his early life except the single fact that he lived for a time in New York City. He was there in 1846.

During the time of the exodus from Nauvoo a group of church members under the leadership of Samuel Brannan sailed from the New York harbor for California, going by way of Cape Horn. It was understood by this group that the destination of the church was California. This plan was changed, however, when Brigham Young, looking over the Salt Lake Valley, said, "This is the place."

After a voyage of six months the ship "Brooklyn" anchored in the San Francisco harbor, July 31, 1846. It is written that after landing Brannan learned that the main body of the church had located in Utah. He then made a very hazardous trip across the mountains from California to Utah in an effort to persuade the Mormon leaders to continue their journey to the Pacific Coast state. He pleaded with Brigham Young for an extended period of time but his effort was in vain. Disappointed he returned over the mountainous route to California.

Moses A. Meeder, the subject of our story, was a member of the group which sailed with Mr. Brannan around Cape Horn to California in 1846.

Six months after landing he settled in Santa Cruz. Here he was visited by W. W. Blair of Pawpaw, Illinois, near Plano, Illinois. In the year 1868 Mr. Blair baptized him into the Reorganized Church. Joseph Smith III, of Plano, Illinois, visited him here also, in the year 1877. As a result of Joseph's visit Mr. Meeder became interested in the community of Saints slowly gathering in the "colony" in southern Iowa. The two men agreed to meet there as soon as the long journeys could be made.

Although transcontinental railroads were still in their infancy, Mr. Meeder, then seventy-six years of age, arrived in the colony, now known as Lamoni, within a few months. Here in August, 1877, he and Joseph Smith met at the home of George Adams. Mr. Adams had formerly been active in the church in California.

Joseph Smith and Moses Meeder spent several days looking over the land in this area. Mr. Meeder purchased 320 acres located south and west of the present site of Lamoni, in which vicinity the town was then expected to locate. The farm of Hank Noftsgger is now a part of the tract purchased.

Being a man of means and of great faith in the future of the church, Mr. Meeder deeded the 320 acres to the church. The records in the Decatur county court house are not clear regarding the transfer but an editorial in the Saints' Herald and a note in the conference minutes state that the land was "deeded to the church."

The Decatur county court house burned about this time, which may account for the lack of definite information. In this regard I quote from a report of the Order of Enoch made in 1871: "The brethren are advised to look well to the title of the lands they propose to purchase, as some confusion in titles has been created by carelessness in stamping and recording deeds."

Moses A. Meeder died in October, 1890. His obituary in the Saints' Herald of that year reads in part: "He was a man of few words but his deeds were many." Undaunted by oceans, mountains, disappointments, or old age he followed the gleam which brought him to Lamoni. Though his stay here was brief his single deed gave a tremendous impetus to our growth and stability.

What a story he could tell us!

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—“The Infant Holy,” a Christmas cantata was presented December 16, under the direction of Mrs. J. G. Barnes. Pianist was Mrs. J. M. Kelly, and soloists were Eunice Hall, soprano; Erline Russell, alto; Donald Breshears, tenor; and Dickie Daw, bass. A thirty-five voice choir presented the cantata. Evangelist A. D. McCall was the guest speaker at the morning service.—Reported by J. D. HALL

CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The district conference and priesthood institute was held November 17 and 18 at Taylorville, Illinois. Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Seventy Cecil Ettinger conducted priesthood classes on Saturday. The conference assembled for prayer service on Sunday in the morning. Apostle Chesworth, Elder Ettinger, and District President Arthur Henson were in charge of the service. Brother Chesworth preached the morning sermon, and the district choir, under the direction of Joe Williams, sang the anthem, “Bless the Lord.”

The business session, held in the afternoon, resulted in the election of the following officers: district president, Arthur Henson, Taylorville, Illinois; secretary, Helen H. Hunt, Taylorville; director of religious education, William Banfield, Taylorville; women's leader, Eva Henson, Decatur; treasurer, Gilbert Elam, Decatur; nonresident pastor, E. E. Thomas, Beardstown; bishop's agent, Kenneth Newton, Decatur; evangelist, O. C. Henson, Sr., Decatur; Zion's League leader, Carl Gordon, Moweaqua; auditor, Melvin Fowler, Springfield; finance committee, Frank Shank, Delmar Jones, Kenneth Newton, Decatur; district historian, Edith Youngs, Winchester; counselors to the district president, Clyde Youngs, Winchester, and Harold Walker, Beardstown; district chorister, Mary Lou Deaver, Decatur. The following men were presented to the conference and recommended for ordination: Floyd E. Henson, priest, Decatur; Howard Skiles, teacher, Beardstown; Harold Lashbrook, deacon, Beardstown; and James Browning, deacon, Decatur.

The following were chosen to serve as delegates to the General Conference: Arthur Henson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shank, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Ettinger, Mr. and Mrs. Mike Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Newton, Mrs. Druscilla Sloan, Harold Walker, and E. E. Thomas. Brother Arthur Henson was chosen chairman of the delegation.—Reported by HELEN H. HUNT

GERING, NEBRASKA.—A new church building has been purchased, and plans are being made for branch organization. Thirty-five are enrolled, with an average attendance of thirty-two to thirty-six.

The annual business meeting was held September 9, with Pastor Orva M. Croft in charge. Brother Croft was sustained as pastor for the coming year, and the following were elected: Elder Goodrich, associate pastor; Glen Harsin, church secretary; Elder Burkey, treasurer; Esther Rundell, historian; Deal Flemming, pianist; Lavinia Foster, music director and solicitor; Valend Rundell, church school director; assistant church school director, Glen Harsin; Joyce Harsin, librarian and secretary; Nell Croft, publicity agent; Madge Rundell, women's leader; Margaret Burkey, Zion's League leader.

District President and Mrs. Ward Hougas were with the group October 31. Brother Hougas presented a slide lecture.

John Banks of Fort Collins, Colorado, district missionary, held a series of meetings November 14-18. On November 18, Pastor Orva M. Croft presided at a baptismal service. Lillian Harsin, Janet Harsin, and Rodney Harsin were baptized by Elder John Banks. On December 2, they were confirmed by High Priest Joseph Hufford of Denver, Elder Gene Cowell of Fort Collins, Elder Goodrich of Sidney, and Elder Croft of Morrill. A Communion service was also held at the same hour. Brother Hufford was the afternoon speaker.

The young people's choir is directed by Lavinia Foster. The women's department is under the leadership of Madge Rundell, and meetings are held twice each month with a lesson study and guest speakers. The group held a harvest sale December 22.

Gerald Harsin enlisted in the Air Corps in September, and is stationed in Texas.

The branch has two projects for the year: to put gas heat and a heater in the church, and to purchase a piano.

The Zion's League sponsored a pie social December 5.

Pastor and Mrs. O. M. Croft, Elder Burkey, and Gerry Harsin attended the priesthood institute held in Fort Collins November 24 and 25.

The third year anniversary of the branch was held October 14. Wheatland, Torrington, and Albin, Wyoming, and the Chadron, Nebraska, groups were invited guests. There were ninety-six present at the meeting. A basket dinner was served at noon, and Elder Judson preached in the afternoon.

On December 9, the women's leader of southern Nebraska, Edith Niehaus, spoke to the adult class during church school.

OREGON DISTRICT.—The Golden Anniversary of the Oregon District was celebrated at the District Conference held October 19, 20, and 21. The slogan adopted for this conference was “Fifty Good Years.”

The district was first organized at Drain, February 2, 1901. The officers selected at that time were Elder Charles E. Crumley, district president; R. A. Cribbins, secretary and treasurer; Alma Morris, bishop's agent; Charles E. Crumley, J. R. Clark, and Guy Buell, auditing committee. Southwest Washington was added to the Oregon District in 1909.

The 1951 conference opened with a banquet, at Portland Central Church, for the priesthood members and their wives. Two hundred and two were present. Elder F. E. Chapman, resident of the district over fifty years, acted as master of ceremonies. Invocation was given by High Priest Marcus H. Cook, oldest living former district president. Elder P. G. Hager, elder in the district over forty-five years, gave a short talk on “Fifty Happy Years.” A welcome was given by Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The principle speaker of the evening was President Israel A. Smith. Benediction was given by Evangelist W. H. Barker, oldest living former pastor. Sister Effie Verhei and Sister Socia Howlet were in charge of preparing and serving the banquet, assisted by many women and young people from the district.

Saturday morning the Camas Branch conducted a worship service, followed by a prayer and fellowship hour. The morning adult classes were taught by President Israel A. Smith, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Bishop M. E. Lasater, and Missionary James N. Kemp.

President Smith, Apostle Gleazer, and District President Verhei were in charge of the annual business meeting. The following officers were elected and sustained: High Priest J. L. Verhei, district president; Elders F. E. Chapman and Miles Whiting, associates; Elder Harold M. Carpenter, director of religious education; Sister Roycie Chapman, women's leader; Elder Keith Kinert, youth leader; Elder Lloyd Shannon, music leader; Sister Matie Young, secretary; Elder Milton Becker, treasurer; Sister Leona Carpenter, dramatic leader; Sister Lillian Livingston, historian; Elder Fred Hawes, auditor; Brother Albert Lasley, district book steward. Those appointed to act on the district council are Elders Miles Whiting, Glen Haviland, Harold M. Carpenter, F. E. Chapman, Lester Comer, Roy Keiser, Keith Kinert, Herbert Hawley, Robert Taylor, Clinton Dobson, George Dyer, James Davidson, John McKee, John Rodley, Cleo Thompson, Lloyd Shannon, Milton Becker, Ralph Chapman, Raymond Linderth, and Priests Burton Huggett and Richard Babcock.

Elder James Kemp conducted a class on missionary methods on Saturday. Apostle Gleazer was the concluding speaker for the day.

Sunday the activities opened with an ordination service. Forty-three men were ordained to the priesthood. The following men were approved and ordained: Paul J. Odell, elder; Homer Noxley, priest; James Phelps, deacon, of Sweet Home; W. M. Swain, elder; Elvin Penrod, deacon, of Salem; Richard Petrie, priest; Jack A. Donnelly, priest, of Bend; Ray M. Rogers, elder; Lyle R. Anderson, priest; Larry E. Bossardt, priest; Harvey B. Anderson, priest, of Forest Grove; Noel J. King, priest; Vern Brewer, priest; Thomas E. Coffman, elder, of Myrtle Point; Harold Mallory, deacon; Harold Crooker, elder; Robert Prothro, priest, of Klamath Falls; Harley Davidson, priest; Dale Ward, priest; John Ward, deacon, of Medford; Milton Petrie, elder; Willard Lyon, priest, of Grants Pass; Robert Taylor, elder, of Scappoose; Roy Sizemore, deacon; Robert Burbee, priest; Ephraim Barnhart, elder, of Eugene; Craig Morrison, priest; Robert Welk, priest; Victor DuVal, deacon, of Central Branch of Portland; Laurence Root, priest, of Tillamook; Carol E. Friend, priest, of Roseburg; Oscar Dixon, priest, of Hermiston; Howard Dixon, priest; Raymond Linderth, elder, of Hopewell; Loren Rhodes, priest; Eldon Dobson, deacon; Teddy Kinert, deacon, of Camas, Washington; Roy Becker, elder; William E. White, deacon; Kenneth Madson, priest, of Longview, Washington; William J. Chapman, elder; Charles Taylor, deacon, of Vancouver, Washington.

President Israel A. Smith was the morning speaker.

“The Rise of the Reorganization,” a play written by Elbert A. Smith, was presented under the direction of the district dramatic leader, Sister Leona Carpenter. Those taking part were Sister Rita Kinert, Elder Clinton Dobson, Elder Lloyd Shannon, Elder Wayne Lapworth, Paul Trimble, and Martha Webberley. The evening class was taught by Bishop M. E. Lasater.

The attendance at this conference was the largest gathering ever experienced in the area. Over 950 were present to hear President Smith's address on Sunday.

High Priest J. L. Verhei, the present district president, has presided over the district for the past twenty years. There are fifty branches, missions, and groups.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

WEST MONROE, LOUISIANA.—The annual business meeting was held October 5, with the following group officers elected: Elder Connie C. Fuller, pastor; Priests Charles M. Malone and A. W. Dean, counselors; Priest Lloyd A. Salter, secretary and treasurer; Brenda Salter, pianist; Joan Parrish, assistant pianist; Mrs. Charles M. Malone, publicity agent and music director; Mrs. Marion Huntsman, women's leader; John David Salter, young people's leader.

Church school officers and teachers are Mrs. Henry Blazier, church school director; Mrs. Lloyd A. Salter, assistant church director; Mrs. James Wallace, secretary and treasurer; Bert F. Gross, adult teacher; Mrs. Charles M. Malone, senior teacher; A. W. Dean, junior teacher; Mrs. James M. Wallace, primary teacher; Brothers Marion Huntsman and Jewell Fuller, church custodians.

Apostle Percy Farrow, Bishop Joseph Baldwin, and Elder James Renfroe toured the southern district and spoke to the Saints in West Monroe, November 6.

Elder James Renfroe held a series of meetings, and the following candidates were baptized: Mrs. Robert Funderburk and Katherine, Bobby, Shelby, and Jimmie Funderburk, Jannie Faye Wallace, and Mr. Truett Carter.

Funds raised through rummage sales by the women's department have been given to help complete the interior of the church.—Reported by MRS. CHARLES M. MALONE

OREGON DISTRICT.—Work week was held beginning August 13 in the district at the new Lewis River reunion grounds. The theme for the week was "Work, Worship, and Play." Before reunions can be held on the grounds, much work must be completed. Regularly scheduled work weeks are planned whenever the weather permits. There was an average attendance of approximately sixty-five people on the grounds. Each day began with a prayer service. After a day's work and the evening meal, classes were held for the priesthood and women followed by an evensong. The closing services on Sunday had an attendance of over two hundred Saints from all over the Oregon District as far south as Klamath Falls and east to Bend and Baker, Oregon. Prayer service began the day, followed by classes and preaching service. After the basket dinner a baptismal service was held, and Sister Ruby Howard was the first candidate baptized by Elder Miles Whiting in the Lewis River. An experience meeting was held at the close of the day, and the camp disbanded.

District President J. L. Verhei, Bishop Monte Lasater, Missionary James Kemp, District Custodian F. E. Chapman, and District Women's Leader Royce Chapman were the leaders for the week.—Reported by ONA LAPWORTH

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—Six women from the branch attended the district women's institute at Rich Hill, Missouri, November 29. Transportation was provided by Sister Roy Graham. Six branches were represented at the institute. Plans are being made to organize Oriole and Skylark groups in various branches.

The branch surpassed its quota on Auditorium Day.—Reported by MRS. JOHN A. GRAHAM

KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON.—Brother Roy Keiser of Vancouver visited the mission on November 25.

Elder Harold Crooker was elected to lead the group at the business meeting. Also elected were Elder Sammie Morris, assistant leader; Etta Shaw, treasurer; Deacon Harold Mallery, treasurer and League leader; Lenten Opegard, librarian; Marie McNabb, social leader; Clara Bell Morris, music director; Grace Carroll, historian and publicity agent; Clarence Opegard, custodian; Y. Carroll, Etta Shaw, Marie McNabb, auditors; Sammie Morris, Harold Mallery, Marie McNabb, building committee.

The mission was visited by Bishop M. E. Lasater from Seattle, Washington, for several days beginning December 1.

The women met November 27 at the home of Mrs. Charley Morris. Ten members were present. The following were elected: June Crooker, leader; Grace Carroll, assistant leader; Irene Morris, secretary; Etta Shaw, treasurer; Marie McNabb, social chairman; Etta Shaw and Vera Murdock, visiting committee. The group held a bazaar in a local store on December 8.—Reported by GRACE CARROLL TORRINGTON, WYOMING.—Seventy E. Y. Hunker, missionary in charge of the unorganized territory in Wyoming and other parts including both organized and unorganized territory in North and South Dakota, Montana, and Michigan, held a series of meetings in Torrington from November 20 through December 2. He preached each evening except Saturday, and preached twice on Sundays. His sermons were illustrated lectures. The branch had prepared by fasting and prayer for Brother Hunker's visit.

There were two baptisms, two ordinations, and one baby blessed during Brother Hunker's visit. Brother Jack Babcock was ordained to the office of priest and Brother George Williams was ordained a deacon. Sister Beverly Babcock and Brother Robert Flowers were baptized, uniting two more families. The baby daughter of Brother and Sister George Williams was blessed.

Members of other towns came as far as thirty and sixty miles to attend the series.—Reported by MRS. T. S. REEVES

COMPTON, CALIFORNIA. — Twenty-one have been baptized since January 1, 1951. The pastor, Brother Felice Cunningham, who has been ill, has resumed his responsibilities.

David Rhodes and Roy Phelps were called to office of deacon, and Stan Tarling was called to the office of teacher in the month of October. Ray Harness and Don Phelps were called to the office of priest, also in October.

The annual branch business meeting was held in October and the following were elected officers: pastor, Felice Cunningham; counselors, A. T. Gray, Dick Hacker, Carl Ruoff, and Paul Sturtevant; director of religious education, Margaret Woodson; women's leader, Hazel Cunningham; adult leader, Don Phelps; Zion's League supervisor, Ray Harness; music and drama director, Marie Sturtevant; publicity agent, Roy Phelps; branch secretary, Mary Hughes; treasurer, Eldon Whistler; book steward, Harold Hughes; historian, Carl Ruoff; bishop's agent, Everett Bowser; church custodian, A. Johnson; adult supervisor, Edna Cotton; children's supervisor, Evelyn Dibbern; auditor, Ray Harness.

Four new members of the church who joined in the past year came from the Zion's League group. They are Pauline Virgin, Harold Ehlers, Myrna Short, and Howard Ehlers. One of the projects of the League is the distribution and sale of church tracts. A fellowship service with the Long Beach Zion's League was held.

The Dorcas group, and the Marymarts of the women's department held a birthday dinner. Each table was decorated according to the month it represented. A cake was the centerpiece for each table. Ninety-four dollars was raised by the group.

The adult supervisor sponsored an apron party. Fourteen aprons were donated, and will be sold at the Christmas bazaar. The county store will function for the third year. Items of hand work are donated and sold for ten cents, and a dinner is served.—Reported by ROY PHELPS

CORRECTION.—In the November 26 column of "Briefs," in the report from Freesoil, Michigan, an error was made. The third line of the first paragraph should have read, "John Blackstock, president of the Central Michigan District."

What Is a Christian?

THE WILL of Dr. W. B. Small, a physician of Waterloo, Iowa, who died in 1939, provided that $70,000 of his estate should be left as a trust fund, the income from which would be given to deserving "persons who believe in the fundamental principles of the Christian religion, and in the Bible, and who are endeavoring to promulgate the same." Upon the death of his wife in 1949, ten nephews and nieces, who were the closest heirs because the Smalls had no children, contested this will on the grounds that it was impossible to prosecute since "there is no common agreement as to what constitutes the fundamental principles of Christianity."

The Des Moines Sunday Register for October 7, 1951, states that Dr. Small was a Methodist. He appointed an attorney and a banker as the trustees. One was a Congregationalist, the other a Methodist. In the trial some distinguished ministers testified that Christianity depended upon certain basic concepts with which all Christians were in agreement. They mentioned the Apostles' Creed, the Holy Trinity, and the Bible. They stressed also that the differences in the denominations were largely those of organization and methods of procedure.

The trustees were at liberty to "choose and change the beneficiaries . . . it being my desire that said fund shall continue permanently and forever, and only the income thereof shall be used." The case of those endeavoring to break the will was supported by even a larger number of clergymen, including a Catholic priest, who emphasized the difficulties that such a will presented to the trustees in the selecting of the beneficiaries according to the statement of the will. The Reverend Mr. Dunnington of Iowa City stated, "There is no meeting of minds on the fundamentals of religion or the Bible." He is also reported to have said, "There are many things in the Apostles' Creed that cannot be accepted by many Christians." The Reverend Mr. Phillips, a Unitarian minister, contended there is "complete disagreement among theologians on Christianity's fundamental principles."

Attorney Van Metre representing the plaintiff stated, "The court must decree the fundamental principles of Christian religion and the Holy Bible." He warned, however, that other courts have held that "it is not the province of the courts to inquire into religious beliefs."

On November 30 Judge Shannon B. Charlton announced his decision in the case which in effect gave the entire estate to the nephews and nieces. In announcing his decision he said, "there is widespread lack of accord [among Christians] in their characterizations of the man Jesus and in their interpretations and applications of his teachings." In effect he held that the will was unenforceable because neither the administrators nor the courts could be expected to "furnish a clarifying definition of Christian fundamentals."

Herald readers have no occasion to rejoice in this confusion among the believers in Christ, and this is not presented in any feeling of superiority or that the Restoration Movement has not added to the area of disagreement. It is our feeling, however, that instead of blandly singing the hymn "Onward, Christian Soldiers" which avers "We are not divided, all one body we," we need to recognize that in something so vast and complex as the Christian religion, Satan has many opportunities of stirring up contentions and blinding the eyes of the people.

Helped in Time of Need

I have a desire to serve my Master as best I can. He has been good to me and blessed me many times when I was in need. I had been ill with high blood pressure and finally suffered a cerebral hemorrhage. Brother R. Melvin Russell came and administered to me, and I received help.

I want to live so that I shall be worthy to call on God for the blessings he gives to those who ask. I need his help in overcoming my weaknesses. I ask for prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful to the end.

A Devotional Story

She looketh well to the ways of her household.—Proverbs 31: 27.

AS JANE SAT idly thumbing through the pages of a book while the children napped, she felt a restless dissatisfaction with herself. The youngsters had been extremely trying all morning, and she still could not dispel the feeling of resentment she held toward Bill because he had scheduled so many church activities for the coming week. It meant she would have to be alone almost every evening again, and she was so tired of having the full responsibility of putting Tommy and Joan to bed. The scene last night when she had refused to let them get up and say their prayers—although it was really her fault prayers had been forgotten in the first place—left her with a disquieted feeling she was unable to throw off. “What is wrong with me anyway?” she wondered. “Where is that love I used to have for Bill, our home, and the children when they were babies? They are so hard to manage now.”

Jane let her eyes drop to the book she was holding and noticed suddenly this poem,

KEEP SWEET

When household duties claim my care
And I seem needed everywhere—
Then tune my heart to praise and prayer,
And keep me sweet at home.

—Laura A. Barter Snow.

Grumpily she had to agree in her mind that it was a good idea, but how could you keep sweet when things were always going wrong? She flipped another page or two, and these words caught her attention:

By Mrs. Donald V. Lents

HYMN FOR A HOUSEHOLD

Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold
That wait thy presence to be blest
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

—David Henderson.

JANE READ AND REREAD the verses. Then suddenly, like a revelation, she felt she had hit upon the center of her difficulty. When she and Bill had first married, they had vowed always to have God's presence in their home. But in the pressures of living they had slipped—particularly, Jane felt, she had neglected her share of the responsibility. Her heart was filled with a great desire to bring back the happiness they had previously known, and she vowed to herself that she would not forget again. Her spirits lifted, and she began to plan how to reinterest her family in the spiritual development she knew they had to make. Soberly she realized that she must be the tower of strength and perseverance, and she felt suddenly inadequate and unable to carry out her desire.

Her thoughts drifted to her childhood home. She reflected that her mother always had seemed able to cope easily and calmly with the problems of managing a large household. What was it she so often had heard her mother say? Oh, yes, “When my problems get too big for me, I just turn to the Handbook for Happy Living—and if I don't find the answer there, I talk to the One responsible for it and let Him take over my troubles.” Jane remembered so well her mother's reference to the Scriptures as the Handbook for Happy Living. She remembered, too, how consistently her mother had studied the Three Standard Books of the church. It had been a long time since she herself had done any real reading of the Scriptures. She would start right now, and perhaps she, too, would find what help she needed. As Jane searched for the knowledge she required to “look well to the ways of her household,” she found her help in the following lessons and challenges from the Holy Scriptures:

Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks; cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening; yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies; yea, cry unto him against the devil, who is an enemy to all righteousness.

Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them; cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase.

But this is not all; ye must pour out your souls in your closets and your secret places, and in your wilderness;

Yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.—Book of Mormon, Alma 16: 219-222.

Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray; and to walk uprightly before the Lord. And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the sabbath day to keep it holy. And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them; wherefore let my servant Oliver Cowdery carry these sayings unto the land of Zion. And a commandment I give unto them, that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

IT WAS WITH A HAPPY HEART that Jane continued in her household tasks that day. As she sought out her Heavenly Father in prayer for the continued strength she would need to fulfill her part of kingdom-building as a wife and mother in Zion, she found that she was able to share in the experience of the morning's reading in Daily Bread she had so casually scanned earlier.

A number of years ago as a young housewife was doing her weekly washing, a prayer of gratitude moved within her heart: "I thank thee, Father, that thou hast taught me to enjoy life's homely tasks." The words came again and again, and finally she reached for her pad and pencil and wrote down the words of her prayer. They were followed by more expressions of thankfulness for the blessings that come from doing the many everyday tasks of her home. She saw the freshly ironed shirt and the mended sock as part of her stewardship and not as dread work. She knelt in prayer. Never before had she experienced such an abundance of the Spirit of God in her home. It was a revelation and one of the happiest days of her life because it taught her a beautiful lesson. Her soul had expanded, and she saw that work was love made visible.—Daily Bread, May 2, 1950.

Accounting Time

By Mrs. William Worth, Jr.

For I live, saith the Lord, as it is written. And every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall swear to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.—Romans 14: 11-13, I.V.

AGAIN THE MONTH of accounting has returned—the month for filing of inventories or our tithing statements as well as our income tax returns. There are many different phases of this accounting business.

We have to give an account of everything we do and say. The accounting of material things is very important, but what about our idle words? "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof. . . ."

Some of the greatest stumbling blocks in the pathway of our friends and neighbors are the idle words we speak. By some thoughtless remark we can cause an interested person to become indifferent to the gospel.

Our idle words are like feathers tossed in the wind—they can never be reclaimed. Once the words are spoken the damage is done. We may be sorry and repent, but the scar of our hastily spoken words remains. It is well to remember that if we can't say anything good, we should keep still. Our tongues can be a source of great blessing, because with them we can confess the goodness of God to our associates. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Our hearts need to be so filled with the goodness of God that our tongues can find no time or reason to speak of anything else.

The Book of Proverbs is replete in thought-inspiring material. A few which we would do well to remember are the following:

"The tongue of the just is as choice silver."—10: 20.

"The tongue of the wise is health."—12: 18.

"The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright."—15: 2.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—25: 11.

We must be master of our tongues. It will take will power, however. James tells us, "If any man among you seem to be religious and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that man's religion is vain." But he also says, "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body."

Let us resolve this year to use our tongues wisely, and when accounting time comes again we can say—not boastfully—that we have kept our tongue from being a stumbling block to anyone.

The Futility of Freedom

The happy people of this world are never free. It is only youth which really wants freedom, or those who have set up a defensive mechanism against life, since to live is also to suffer. The older and wiser know that nothing is of value unless it can be shared, and that the eternal cry of the human heart is to belong to someone else. It is its escape from loneliness, its support in weakness, a solace to its pride. Even youth should think twice before it asks for freedom. Surely to be happy is better than to be free; and to be kind to all, to like many and love a few, to be needed and wanted by those we love, is certainly the nearest we can come to happiness.—Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Which Way in 1952?

By Charles Kornman

I WONDER WHAT GOD is thinking about right now—January, 1952! Have you ever wondered what he thinks about? Have you ever looked up and asked him? Equally important did you wait and listen for him to answer? He always does, you know. Written into the beauty of his creation is the assurance that he will answer when we call. He waits only for opportunity.

In this era of uncertainty (such phrasing has characterized every generation since Adam's) it is imperative that we seek God's counsel. Other generations facing their own uncertain future have sought God. His response came marching across the pages of history in the lives of Abraham, Moses, Azariah, Isaiah, and Hosea. Still other generations have walked in their own way and after the image of their own god—Heth, Riplakish, Kim, Shiblom, and Ahah. The result was the ditch. But rather than for an individual of consummate faith and ability, the need in our day is for a group of people who have lifted their eyes and hearts above the sights and sounds of earth and who have seen and heard unspeakable things. The all-consuming need is for a group of people who have seen the kingdom's glory and who are willing to share that vision with the blind. The Christ saw and went out to share: "I must preach the kingdom of God . . . for therefore am I sent." Dare we do any less?

We are writing our part of history now. The year 1952 is still the future, but it will soon be the past. One day we'll look back at it—at the way we lived and the story we wrote in that living. It can be a drama of magnificent proportions with the leitmotiv of the Restoration sounding loud and clear. In the midst of hate and distrust we can sound the pure sweet notes of faith in righteousness. Just as the beauty of a cardinal stands out startlingly clear against a leafless bush, so the beauty of holiness (personal and social) will stand out in a world such as ours. It can be done—history bears vibrant testimony of that. However, "The Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do," and if this be true of him, he being holy, how much more true of us, we being unholy! The need is eternal, but it has never been more pressing than now for a people willing to listen to God.

THE BASIC AFFIRMATION of the Restoration has ever been that God is—that he is approachable and responsive, that he has individual and passionate concern for each of his earth children. This ability to love each person is what makes God's love so great and our future so sure. Upon this rock, young people can stand as they view 1952 and "with surety hope for a better world." They can do this because God has responded to the needs of the children he loves: "Behold thou art . . . my son; seek the kingdom of God, and all things shall be added according to that which is just."

Written deep into the heart of every person is the ability to respond to God and to grow by that responding: "to as many as received me gave I power to become my sons, and even so will I give unto as many as will receive me power to become my sons." This is what God is thinking about right now! It is the program to which he has committed himself, from which he will not shrink, and to which he seeks to attract all men.

WE DO NOT KNOW all that 1952 portends—military service, marriage, job, college—but we do know of those "religiously social reforms and relationships which have been divinely imposed" upon this church. We perhaps cannot speak of them with the understanding of a Bishop Koehler, but we can speak of faith in a God who loves us and who is guiding us. We can speak of a "brotherhood cemented by the Spirit of God" that we have found in the church of Jesus Christ. We can tell of God's goodness, and as we do this there will come enlightenment from him giving power to our witness.

The need for this is found in the lives of the thousands of young people who do not know of God's love. They have a right to know that his love is real and sure. Their right is our responsibility.

The year 1952 stretches out before us like drifts of pure white snow. As we tread the paths of that snow-white future every step we take will leave an indelible footprint. We are free to choose the path that we want in 1952, but the ends are fixed; 1952 can indicate to those who follow after that we chose the path which leads to the kingdom of God. God is doing his best to get us to take this path—he's thrown all of his magnificent forces into the battle. The path that he wants us to take is the path of a people willing to live and love so that he can reveal more and more of his way of life and his kind of love.

Which way in 1952? Only you can answer!

Graceland

GAZETTE

■ Six Graceland freshmen have been chosen members of the social activities planning committee. They are Howard Sheehy of Greeley, Colorado; Berneice Anderson of Beardstown, Illinois; Clyde Zonker of Wellsburg, West Virginia; Betty Bullock of Haskell, Oklahoma; Carol Olson of Silvis, Illinois; and David Johnson of Puyallup, Washington. The six were chosen from a large number of applicants after a series of interviews by sophomore members of the planning group and Miss Doris Conklin, director of social activities.

The committee plans all-school functions, sings, and half-time entertainments for football and basketball games. It also provides assistance to social clubs and other small groups in planning parties and social activities.

■ Pastoral group fellowships on the theme, "Our World Missions," opened the world fellowship unit of campus religious life. In the second service of the unit on Sunday morning, Glen Johnson of the Quorum of Seventy, recently returned from Holland and Germany, was the speaker. The following Wednesday evening, James G. Moseley, world traveler, presented a film and lecture on the Holy Land.

The last service of the Lord's Supper of 1951 was held on December 9. Students shared in "Communion with Christ."

■ Of Mice and Men, the motion picture version of John Steinbeck's novel, was shown recently on the campus. It is one of a series of eight outstanding motion pictures being shown throughout the year.

■ Dr. W. S. Gould, director of public relations, attended a conference of public relations men in Lincoln, Nebraska, early in December. The conference was held by the American College Public Relations Association and the American Alumni Council.

■ A tree-lighting ceremony in the Memorial Student Center officially opened the Graceland Christmas season on December 14. The pastoral groups met for fellowship on the following Saturday in the homes of Lamoni residents, and on Sunday morning Bishop Higdon of the Lamoni Stake gave the Christmas message to the campus congregation. In the evening the Lamoni-Graceland chorus presented the Messiah. The annual Christmas vespers on Wednesday evening concluded the religious activities for the 1951 Christmas season.

■ Lamoni residents invited Graceland freshmen into their homes for dinner and a social evening on December 9. The students met their hosts in the basement of the Coliseum before the 6:30 worship service there and went with them to their homes afterwards.

The sophomores, after the end of the service, held a social activity hour in the Student Center under the direction of their class officers and sponsors.

■ Zimmermann Hall, the Graceland gymnasium, was opened to the student body on a recent Friday night for organized sports and mixed-team games. On this, the first of a series of such evenings, a large number of students came and participated in a volleyball tournament sponsored by Deam Ferris of the faculty and organized by a number of interested students. The success of the activity, which had long been under consideration by the student council and Coach Richard Carter makes likely the continuance of it throughout the year with other games as student interest demands.

■ A volleyball clinic was held in the Graceland gym on December 15. The Ottumwa, Iowa, team—present state champions—and a championship team from Des Moines played a faculty team and a student team. Graceland strongly emphasizes volleyball in its physical education classes because of its suitability for mixed groups of all ages and its consequent usefulness in church recreation groups. The clinic was designed to demonstrate to students what really good volleyball is and to stimulate enthusiasm for the game.

Volleyball is an important item in Graceland's active intramural program. Intramurals provide an opportunity for sports-loving students without the talent or inclination for varsity athletics to participate in their favorite sports. The program also includes speedball, touch football, basketball, and track.

■ Residents of Herald Hall, Graceland dormitory for women, held open house Sunday afternoon, December 16, for the faculty, students, staff, and all their friends. The hostesses for the afternoon were Mary Midgorden of Osceola, Iowa; Polly Poe of Council Bluffs, Iowa; and Joan Ebeling of Independence, Missouri.

■ The Christmas recess began at 4:30, Thursday, December 20. Most students left the campus for their homes, in a flurry of last minute packing and Christmas well-wishing. Many took guests with them, students who live too far from the college to go home for the holidays. Sunday, January 6, marks the end of this year's vacations when all students are due back on the campus.

MEN'S CLUB HOLDS PARTY

The Men's Club of Independence held the annual Christmas party December 17 at the Laurel Club Dining Room in the Auditorium. The guest speaker was Chaplain Almer Sheehy of the Independence Sanitarium. Virgil Woodside, bass soloist, sang a group of songs, accompanied by Phillip Stephens. The Stone Church male chorus, directed by Mrs. Thomas Deal, sang several Christmas numbers, and Mrs. Arthur B. Taylor gave a reading. The invocation was given by Elder Charles V. Graham, Center Stake president.

THE "MESSIAH" GIVEN

The thirty-fifth performance, and thirteenth annual radio broadcast of Handel's "Messiah" was presented December 23, at the TV Playhouse of Station KMBC in Kansas City, Missouri. Soloists for the performance were Garland Tickemyer, tenor; Josephine Crinklaw Mader, soprano; Virginia McClelland Ehwa, contralto; and Glenn Darwin, bass. The broadcast was well received by the public as is evidenced by the letters, telegrams, and cards which have poured into the General Department of Music at the Auditorium. Before the performance went on the air, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp offered the invocation.

CANTANINA CHORUS PERFORMS

The Cantanina Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood, presented the ninth annual Christmas Eve candlelight service at the Stone Church. The singers were assisted by Elder Arthur Rock, narrator, and a still-life picture depicting the Nativity which was presented by the White Masque Players. The continuity for the program was written by Mrs. Naomi Russell. The chorus consists of thirty-five voices, accompanied by Mrs. Marc Lee. Mrs. Lauren Turner was the accompanist.

WHITE MASQUE GIVES PLAY

"Why the Chimes Rang," the White Masque Christmas gift to the community of the Center Stake of Zion, was presented December 24 at the Stone Church. Members of the cast were Everett Graffeo, Larry Wilkinson, Joe Crum, Pat Pierce, Mark Siegfried, Vernon Kithcart, Mrs. Nell Kelley, Elizabeth Reiss, Louis Whitehead, LeRoy Bradford, and Louise Smith. The play was directed by Mrs. Arline Cackler.

Some will want to know about the record of tithes and whether or not the branch will be able to finish the job. The record speaks for itself and is the prophecy of the future.

Lamoni Branch Contributions:

Year	Building Fund	Branch Budget	Tithes and Offerings
1946	$ 3,547.60	$ 4,639.78	$15,213.08
1947	6,156.26	5,679.78	16,055.04
1948	1,747.36	5,244.65	16,050.49
1949	27,000.02	4,000.04	15,971.95
1950	42,221.45	4,547.79	14,331.58
1951*	33,741.59	3,939.64	13,325.09
Total	$114,414.28	$28,051.68	$90,947.23

*Includes figures up to November 28.

We are planning the services now for Sunday, February 3, the day when the branch shall move in. It will be a great occasion for Saints and friends.

It has been my good pleasure to bear my testimony among the Lamoni Saints to the effect that it has been a privilege to labor in their midst. I believe that their brotherly interest in each other and their neighbors, and their devotion to the cause of Christ has made possible their many achievements, which to me is evidence of the kingdom of God on earth.

Promoting "Herald" Sales

Our attention has been called by Apostle D. O. Chesworth to the fact that, through personal effort expended at gatherings where he has been throughout his mission in the last several months, he has been able to add a considerable number of Herald subscribers. It is not our intention to urge that all members of the general church ministry turn themselves into salesmen for the Herald, but we feel it highly commendable that there are those who feel the urgent need of the Herald in the home of each member of the church to the extent that they are willing to spend some time in promoting these subscriptions.

The ideal situation would be to have our official paper going into the home of every member. I think we could set this up as a goal which we could strive to attain during 1952, and certainly if a little effort on the part of Brother Chesworth can bring such good results, we think the rest of the missionary force should pattern after his example.

There are many times when a lull in the proceedings of a district conference, or some other large gathering, would give an opportunity to insert a "plug" for the Herald.

Mary taught country school around Nauvoo before going to Graceland. After graduation she attended Iowa University. Now she is married to a florist, and they are both operating a floral shop in Los Angeles.

David worked with me in the monument business after he finished at Graceland, but went into defense work during World War II. Now he is married and has three children, and is vice-president of the Dallas and Mavis Automobile Forwarding Company which transports cars, trucks, and buses from coast to coast. His home is in Los Angeles also.

We are grateful to our Heavenly Father for giving us the direction, health, and courage to make a success of our undertaking. We are thankful too that other couples, seeing our happiness, decided to take children into their homes also.

154 Self-styled "Pagans" in Australia

According to a release from the Federal Capital (Canberra) of Australia (Monday, September 17, 1951) "Australia has 154 pagans—or had four years ago—and 22 of them are women." This interesting comment followed: "72 of these pagans are persons not gainfully employed."

The census discloses that 2,957,032 claim membership in the Church of England, Roman Catholic, 613,186, (undefined) Catholic, 956,540, Methodist, 871,425, Presbyterian, 743,540, Baptist, 113,527, Hebrew, 32,019, and the smallest group, Swedenborgian, 47.

"A total of 18,708 have 'indefinite' religion; 26,328 have no religion at all, and 824,824 gave no reply when asked about their religion."

Of the entire population, 6,672,936, belong to the 23 Christian denominations, and only 26,328 report "no religion."

This report is taken from The Argus, Melbourne, Australia (Tuesday, September 18, 1951).—WILLIAM PATTERSON.

*MEMORIES

Bits of history are always turning up. We miss them because we do not observe. . . . A new steel coat rack was brought in recently, and there were old hangers, worn and battered, to be taken away. A wooden hanger carried the name of a girl who worked here more than twenty years ago. She was young and beautiful—a gracious, charming, talented person. She probably brought this hanger in for a new winter coat. After a few years she resigned to be married. Children came to her home, then a tragic illness took her life. . . . The hanger was left behind to serve many others who have come and gone since that time. Yet something of her remains about it, like the fragrance of a jar of rose petals, or an old sachet.

A letter was read over the radio last month, written by a young woman to a friend, describing a Thanksgiving dinner during the Revolutionary War. There were shortages of food and spices. Shipping was interrupted by war, and she and her family had not tasted beef in three years, all of it being required for the men in the army. She told of the substitutes they used, how all helped with the cooking, and how they rotated the family around the table by the fireplace so that they would take their turns to be warmed and chilled. She wrote so pleasantly and cleverly, she would have been a most interesting person to know. She was very like a girl of her age today. The costumes and the setting would be different, but mind and heart would be the same. Many another Thanksgiving has passed over her ashes, but one trusts that somewhere her blithe spirit carries on.

We think wistfully of the fine people who lived before our time, of their goodness and courage, their gayety and charm, and how they must have been loved by those who knew them. The world is poorer when the call comes for them to pass on to another life. But we are comforted by the thought that the great God who made them must love them too, and that he will not permit one of them to be lost, but keeps them close where he can watch over them.

* SARCOPHAGUS

The tombs of dead ideas are more melancholy than the tombs of dead kings. For people are wise enough to let dead kings lie, but they worship dead ideas as if they were still alive.

* SANITARIUM

The "San Piper" (staff and departmental news bulletin of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital) says: "You can live a lot longer if you quit everything that makes you want to. . . . When your money goes to your head, it seldom stays there long. . . . Suspenders are the oldest type of social security. . . . Community Hospital Drive went over the top with $38,310.75." Anybody like to send them another quarter to put it in round numbers? Fourteen sets of twins in 1951, and they seem to come in threes. . . . Nurses' home rooms on first floor are receiving new covering of fabric in flowered patterns. Second and third floors have already been done. One way of being sure to find a really nice room is to be a nurse!

Salute to the New Year News and Notes

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

The soft iron of December has set overnight to steel of winter. It is merciless, realistic—a season of thresholds. Suddenly a door opens; another sadly closes. The past becomes one with unnumbered dead. The ecstasy of highest hope is ashed in disillusion; adoration pale, and the frantic lover turns with relief to new loves. Each fresh desire, like Jacob, supplants his brother, while like a shadowy colossus the New Year leaps athwart the Frame of things. A lock clicks as he rolls back gigantic doors. Inexorably, caught in the dream of life, we pass through, striding as victors or crawling as slaves, and not all our tears nor all our prayers can retrace one step of the way!

Let us, however, pause for one unhurried moment and cast a thoughtful glance behind. A chaotic world, it was: Korea, blood-smearred; Europe, seething with unrest; Asia, uneasy; Russia, menacing; America, bewildered. Relaxed moral values have subtly translated our definitions. Repression has become necessity; rapacity, patriotism; envy, a legitimate desire for the rights of others; while evil is merely a slight personality defect! Is it stuff for wonder then that practicing holiness is charged with bigotry and that the faith, which for God made martyrs, is belabored as a refuge for the mentally bankrupt?

Surely through this sophisticated world of easy explanation and naked brutality the servant of God walks as an alien. Where may he rest and to what claim allegiance? Dissatisfaction and a strange urgency forces him on. Wherever he goes his eyes light upon no kenneled landmark. Craving sanctity he finds it not; and as he reaches desperate hands toward the wonder of cooling streams, the mirage fades in his grasp. Yet, though he falters, he revives, for etched upon his retina is the vision of his native Country. For truly he seeks for a city—a city whose maker and builder is God. To him the future means supreme answer to hope. He is eternally the needy, the loving, the patiently desirous. He is indeed the eternal Pilgrim!

What then of this future? Let us, like him, take staff in hand, bind on our feet the sandals of faith, and search through the highways for the footprints of God. Does it matter if we seek to the world's end, or the year's end, or our life's end, if finding so great a prize can so reward the perils of our journey? Let us, by God's grace, carry in hand the light of wisdom, in our hearts the Grail of sacrifice, that our eyes may recognize in an instant the living presence of Christ. So shall each day grope toward eternity until suddenly, at the turning of the road, we shall see Him face to face, and our hearts shall know him, for the eyes that search our own and the hands that beckon are those of a Friend.

CENTER STAKE PRIESTHOOD SERVICES

Priesthood school for members of the Center Stake will be held for five weeks each Monday night. The classes began on January 7. Pre-ordination classes are scheduled for January 8, 9, 15, and 16. A special Communion service for priesthood of the Center Stake was held January 3 at the Stone Church. President Israel A. Smith gave the Communion message, Bishop G. L. DeLapp presented the affirmation of faith, and Charles V. Graham, stake president, was in charge of the service. The theme was "The Joy and Significance of Ministry in the Restoration."

APOSTLE MESLEY IN MICHIGAN

Apostle C. George Mesley spent the first week of December in the Detroit International Stake speaking at a number of congregations. Prior to that time, he spent week ends at Crosswell, Michigan, and Wabash, Ontario. He was in Independence during the first part of January and instructed at the appointee's institute.

SPECIAL SERVICE HELD

A special ordination service was held at the Stone Church December 30. Elder H. I. Velt was ordained an evangelist by Apostles Paul M. Hanson and D. Blair Jensen; Charles Welch was ordained a teacher by Elders F. Carl Mesle and Arthur Collins; Dick Andersen was ordained an elder by Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder Howard Andersen, his father. Apostle Maurice Draper presented the evening address, and Apostle Charles R. Hield delivered the charge to the candidates for ordination.

YULETIDE CONFERENCE HELD

The City-wide Zion's League cabinet for the Center Stake of Zion held the annual Yuletide Conference December 27, 28, 29. The opening feature of the conference was a special illustrated lecture given by Mr. and Mrs. George Young of Guatemala. Mrs. Young, the former Biloine Whiting, and her husband have taught school in Guatemala for a year, and visited many places of archaeological value while in the area. The couple left Independence December 28 to return to Guatemala for another year. They will be joined there by Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Hurshman of Independence, who are also members of the church. Brother Young was ordained an elder prior to his leaving Independence, and Brother Hurshman is a priest. The young couples are very optimistic about the missionary possibilities in this area.

The second service of the conference was a panel discussion featuring Apostle Maurice Draper, Bishop Leslie Kohlman, Elders Charles V. Graham, Carl Mesle, and Evan Fry. Brother Fry was the discussion leader.

The closing evening of the conference was a special activities night held in the basement of the Auditorium. Approximately 200 young people were present for the special basketball game and other organized recreation.

APPOINTEE'S INSTITUTE

The new appointees attended an institute from December 28 through January 8. The men attended lectures and classes for instruction in all fields of endeavor. The institute was held in Independence.

AT GARDNER LAKE

Over forty members of the Walnut Park Zion's League of the Center Stake spent New Year's Eve at Gardner Lake reunion grounds accompanied by their pastor, Elder Fred O. Davies, Mrs. Davies, and their leader, A. L. Henson.

The Changeless God

And the Changing World

Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest; and they shall all wax old as doth a garment; And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.—Hebrews 1: 10-12.

THE BEAUTY of this language of the Scriptures must impress any reader who is sensitive to the qualities of literature. Its truth is apparent from our observation of life. The impermanence of earthly things is suggested here in phrases borrowed from the Psalms and Isaiah; but the writer of the Hebrew letter gives it new power and majesty, declaring the changelessness of God through all eternity. Another noted passage affirms in the most positive and uncompromising terms, "I am the Lord, I change not."—Malachi.

It is apparent that God does not change, for the principles of the universe remain the same, as far as we can tell, as they were in the beginning of time. The transmission of light and heat, the atomic weight of the elements, the laws governing the movement of the stars apparently do not change. Why should the God who rules all these things be subject to change?

* * * * *

Contrasted against the truth of a God who does not change, and his timeless laws, we have the flickering shadows of a transitory and variable world. There is the alternation of light and dark, sunshine and shadow. The variety of the seasons, of climate, temperature, and growth is with us throughout the year.

People change, too. They are born, come to maturity, grow old, and die. And yet we think that there is a soul within every one of us that endures eternally because God wills it so.

Even in these temporary things, eternal principles are found. The enduring rocks are made upon the principle of the crystal. Plant and animal tissues are made up of tiny cells. Living things depend upon circulation, respiration, and growth. Even in the things that change there are reminders of eternity.

In spite of all this, there has been a degree of confusion in the minds of many people. They think that there are times when God reveals his will to men and other times when he is silent and unwilling to speak. Some have believed in a flexibility of moral and spiritual law, under which things once forbidden can be permitted, to suit human convenience and desire. Some even assert that they have private knowledge of these things, or claim that they have special dispensations, in spite of the clear opposition of the Scriptures.

If we are to know where we stand, if we are to judge anything at all of the will of God and of our duty toward him, we must reject and oppose all such counsels concerning the possibility that God may change his ways, his attitudes, or his laws.

As the quotation from Hebrews indicates, the changeable things perish. The eternal things do not change.

There is even a warning implied here. A God who changes could, very possibly, go out of business and become defunct.

* * * * *

In the last World War the free peoples of the world fought against the dictatorships and tyrannies based on personal rule that changed from day to day. The law at any time was whatever the top man happened to think or feel. He did not have to consult anyone, nor have his laws ratified.

Free people have always sought to establish their governments upon laws that applied to everybody equally and did not change overnight.

The idea of a God who changes, who is so imperfect that he can progress from one state or condition to another, is repugnant to an intelligent mind. The idea of a moral law that could change would leave us on shifting sands. One could not depend on anything.

We live in a changing world that will perish. But we also live under a God and a law that is changeless and eternal.

Most of us are vacillating and changeable to some degree, though we dislike to admit it. But we expect other people to be dependable. And we don't want the rules of life changed in the middle of the game.

We have the same attitude toward the church. We expect continuity and consistency in faith and doctrine. The gospel of the Restoration is the same as the doctrine of the original church of the New Testament. The Reorganized Church is the same as the church restored through the leadership and ministry of Joseph Smith. All apostasy begins, fundamentally, with an attempt to change God.

We believe in a Lord who is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever" (Hebrews 13: 8). We rejoice in the statement of the prophet of latter days, "There is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

How Wrong Is Gambling?

By Gerhardt Mahler

(Used by permission of the Concordia Publishing House)

A SHERIFF takes his life when gambling interest threatens to hurt him. A gangster is killed from ambush by a rival gambling crowd. A merchant is shot to death as he leaves a casino with his winnings. These instances, reported in a single state within a few weeks, are the skin eruptions of a social malignancy that is demoralizing our nation.

Gambling could not be so widespread as it is if the decent portion of society did not condone it. If policemen and firemen sponsor gambling carnivals, there is little hope for improvement. If, to top it all, churches foster gambling with bingo and raffles, the State swings its stick with two strikes against it.

The scaffold of improvement must be erected by courageous Christian instruction.

Characteristic of all forms of gambling is the risking of money or property on an event or contingency. The forms which gambling may take are legion—slot machines, wheels of chance, "numbers," lotteries, "polls," betting on contests, et cetera.

Not every risk is a gamble. In gambling the risk is artificially created, and the "chances" of winning are often rigged. Is such risking of money in which the risk is artificially created wrong in principle? Is it in harmony with Christian principles or not?

Holy Scripture does not speak of gambling. There is no passage that forbids it. The question must therefore be viewed in the light of the whole body of Bible truth concerning the acquisition and uses of money.

God's Word presents a well-defined monetary view, and it is a sad reflection that Christian churches have neglected to make more of it. Our economic ills would be less pronounced if Christianity had emphasized the Christian approach to money.

BASIC to the Christian economic view is the proposition that all ownership belongs to God. This ownership takes in natural resources as well as personal property.

A Christian's income is his share of God's bounty to be received with thanksgiving. In the use of his God-given income, a Christian will not lose sight of the fact that it is still God's property to be handled with an eye to his honor, for his own individual welfare and that of others.

New Granite Markers

In response to a request, Brother Harold D. Smith, well-known photographer of Nauvoo, Illinois, and Fort Madison, Iowa, has prepared a photograph of the new granite slab that marks the graves of the martyrs at Nauvoo. He wrote a letter about its placing, from which we quote:

The stone was placed October 25 without ceremony. Brother John Williams, the property caretaker, received word that the workmen would be there that day to place the stone and was present to assist them. The old cement slab with the three (granite) markers which were imbedded in it was removed, the cement was broken up and the markers stored on the properties where they are at the present time. The new granite slab was lowered into cement mortar in the same location occupied by the old marker in the presence of Mr. Gus Lee, Burlington, Iowa (who figured in the purchase of the marker); John Williams, caretaker; and workmen. The grounds show no indication that it is a new marker, appearing as though it had stood there for years, with no marks in grass or shrubbery as a result of the change. The general effect is much more impressive since the marker is raised several inches above ground level, exposing the thick edge of the marble slab itself to view.

November Returns Indicate 1951 Auditorium Drive Is Half Completed

Approximately $50,000 were received for the Auditorium fund in November. All districts have reported except a few from missions abroad. December reports have begun to come in, but complete returns will not be available until the end of January.

Unforgettable Experiences

in Book of Mormon Lands

By Roy Weldon

AN OLD MAN PRAYS FOR ME

IN JANUARY, 1945, I had the high privilege of embarking on a Book of Mormon expedition to Central America and Mexico with Elders C. Ed. Miller, Charles R. Hield, and Walter W. Weldon. The evening previous to our departure I accompanied Stake President Ward A. Hougas on a visit to one of the larger congregations of Central Missouri Stake. Brother Hougas had asked me to show slides and lecture on "The Missionary Value of the Book of Mormon." During the lecture I flashed on the screen Kodachrome slides of recent discoveries in Mexico and Central America corroborating and supporting some of the Book of Mormon teachings. After the lecture Brother Hougas announced to the people that I was departing the following morning on an extensive exploration trip to ancient ruins in Mexico and Central America. Following the meeting an old man came up to me and exclaimed, "Oh, how I wish I could have heard this story when I was a young man. Now I am an old man with one foot in the grave, and there is nothing I can do." Then suddenly as if some inspiration had come to him he reached forth his hand, clasped mine, and with a quiver in his voice said, "Yes, there is something I can do—I can pray for you."

About three weeks later in Oaxaca, Mexico, I took leave of my brethren to spend five days traveling alone to inspect the remote ruin of El Tajin in the northern part of Vera Cruz. I was riding on a bus through the rugged mountains northward from Jalapa, capital of the state of Vera Cruz. Although the roads were poor and traveling conditions in many respects were crude and primitive, the countryside was picturesque and beautiful. Hour after hour we had been traversing mountain valleys studded with fruit orchards in bloom. Now and then we passed through quaint mountain villages. It was early in the afternoon. My mind had been occupied with some of the problems connected with the organization and effective use of the wealth of Book of Mormon data and pictures being accumulated from the visits to the ancient ruins. We had just passed through a quiet, little village in a fertile mountain valley. The road was lined with fine specimens of the soft shell English walnut such as graced one of my father's ranches in California. Then, unexpectedly and without previous knowledge of its existence in this area, I was thrilled to discover that the road was leading us through the ruins of a buried city. There were large mounds containing ancient buildings covered by the accumulating dust and debris of uncounted centuries.

As the bus wound its way among the mounds and ruins I sat alone on a rear seat and felt the presence of the Spirit of God. It seemed to entirely envelope me. Light came to me, and I reached for my pencil and notebook. I organized data and outlined lecture after lecture. After about two hours the experience began to fade away. I realized that I had just had one of the major experiences of my lifetime with the Spirit of the Lord—experiences the like of which I had not hitherto enjoyed except after periods of special preparation, fasting, and prayer.

I wondered how it was that this had come to me without any effort on my part. Immediately there flashed before my mind's eye the picture of the little old man who had said, "There is something I can do, I can pray for you." I knew then that this good man had prayed for me, and God had answered his prayer.

Almost immediately after my return from this trip I was invited to give lectures at a young people's convention in a midwestern city. I presented three lectures which I had outlined during my experience on the bus. A neighbor girl who had accompanied one of our church girls to the young people's convention was so impressed that she went home and asked the local pastor for baptism into the church. Who converted this precious soul into the kingdom of God? What do you think? Was it I or was it the old man with "one foot in the grave" who prayed for me?

Some people have said, "Roy Weldon has angles on the Book of Mormon I never heard of before." Little do these people realize that Roy Weldon never heard of some of these angles either until a righteous and good old man prayed for him.

This experience has taught me a great lesson. I now have profound respect for the good will and prayers of humble souls in the church. Many of the brethren are trying to carry the burdens of ministry, both local and general, of the church.

Some of us are beset by problems of business, family, temperament, and church. The pressure of burdens and responsibilities eats into our physical as well as our mental and spiritual resources. At times we need others to pay the price for us in fasting and prayer, which we ourselves find difficult to pay because of the vicissitudes and circumstance of life. It seems then that housewives and elderly people—humble, righteous, and true—who perhaps feel they have neither the talent or opportunity to do much for the church can make a major contribution to the work of the Lord by making intercession for their priesthood, their pastor, their missionary, or for brethren of the leading quorums of the church.

THE LORD OPENS THE WAY

During the same trip (1945) all four of us were confronted with a major problem at Villahermosa, capital of the state of Tabasco. We had just completed our memorable visit to the ruins of Palenque. We had flown by domestic or "chicle" (chewing gum) plane from Emiliano Zapata to Villahermosa. We had reservations at the airfield to board the seven o'clock plane the next morning. We went out to the airfield early. It was foggy. Seven o'clock came, eight o'clock came, then nine and ten o'clock, but the fog did not lift. Finally one of the airline officials informed us that the plane for that day had been canceled. We said, "We shall return tomorrow morning." The official then informed us that when a plane is canceled all reservations on that plane are also canceled. The plane on the following day was filled, as were the planes on succeeding days. There were only two ways out of Villahermosa, by plane or by river boat to the sea, and thence by steamer—if one is available. We went down to the river. No barges or river boats were due to depart for a week or more. We considered chartering a special plane, but the cost was beyond our financial resources. Our problem was acute. Time was very important. Brother Hield was due back in Texas for a district conference which he could not meet if we spent a week waiting in Villahermosa. We had spent the entire day in a fruitless search. I had gone to the river. It was about five o'clock in the evening. My companions—C. Ed. Miller, Charles R. Hield, and Walter Weldon—decided to go to the hotel room and present their problem to the Lord.

At this same time I was making further inquiry along the river and was informed that the river boat scheduled to leave a week later was preparing for immediate departure. I rushed to the hotel room and informed the brethren that I had found a way out, but that we would have to make haste. Later, I discovered that they had just finished praying to the Lord for help when I rushed in with the good news. We spent the entire night floating down the river on hammocks stretched out on a barge. There was a full tropical moon. It was a delightful experience.

WE FLY TO COPAN (1941 Expedition)

Copan is a remote ruin in eastern Honduras. There are two ways to reach it: the overland route of mules and mountain trails, which is long, tedious, and arduous, and the air route. Planes fly to Copan only when there are enough people to charter one. When our party arrived in Guatemala in December, 1941, the Second World War was on. It had been several months since a plane had flown to Copan, yet when I walked into the Air Tours office in Guatemala City, I found that a plane was leaving within 48 hours and there were three empty seats, which was just what we needed. We were especially thrilled to discover that the plane had been chartered by eminent Harvard and Carnegie Archaeologists from the United States. Gordon Lee Resch and John Dowker took care of the photography while I learned all I could from the archaeologists about the ruins. It was a memorable day and our good fortune seemed entirely too great to ascribe to mere chance and circumstance.

SENOR LARCO HOYLE'S MUSEUM IN PERU

My experience with Larco Hoyle, famed and wealthy owner of a museum of the world's finest collection of Chimu and Mochica ceramics is another remarkable experience showing evidence of the hand of divine guidance and blessing.

In the bleak deserts of northern Peru is the ancient ruined city of Chan-Chan. Its ruins cover twelve square miles and extend from the sands of the seashore to the foothills of the barren, rocky Andes Mountains. North of the ruins of Chan-Chan lie the vast haciendas of Larco Hoyle, who uses the water of a river which courses out of the Andes to irrigate thousands of acres of sugar cane and cotton. Larco Hoyle has made a lifetime hobby of collecting the remarkable ceramics and other artifacts from the ruins of Chan-Chan and neighboring sites. His collection of pottery is superior to that in the National Museum in Lima.

My guide for my visit to the ruins of Chan-Chan was a pleasant, polite young man named Emilio Gonzalez Garcia, a student of archaeology in the University at Trujillo, Peru. A narrow gauge railroad runs from Trujillo to Chiclin, Larco Hoyle's headquarters. While we were riding on the train to Chiclin Mr. Garcia informed me that I would not be allowed to take any pictures in the museum. He said that not even the university was allowed to take any pictures in Larco Hoyle's museum.

After our arrival at the museum my guide had scarcely commenced to show the ceramic treasures of the Chimus to me when I realized that these were artifacts of major importance to the Book of Mormon story. In Mexico and Central America we consider isolated specimens of the bearded white God to be of major importance, and rightly so. One of the first things my guide showed me in the museum at Chiclin was a showcase containing entire shelves of pottery specimens depicting Viracocha, the ancient white God of Peru. All of the specimens were bearded, and the Peruvian tribes are beardless. Viracocha had promised to return. When Pizzaro, the bearded Spanish conqueror, arrived in Peru the natives thought Viracocha had returned.

As my guide led me from one section of the museum to another he explained that the pottery depicted the activities, practices, and customs of the ancient people. There was a section devoted to the diseases from which the ancient people suffered. There were even specimens of pottery showing surgeons performing operations. Other sections depicted the agricultural life, war, and hunting. When my guide was leading me through the group of ceramics picturing the various criminal offenses and their several punishments, he stopped before a fine specimen of pottery. A man and a woman were tied to a pillar or post. There were spots on the pottery. My guide explained that the two were guilty of adultery. The spots on the piece of pottery represented stones flying through the air. The ancient punishment for adultery in Peru was death by stoning. I had not known this before. Here, thousands of miles from home, I again had an experience I have had many times before. My love for and interest in the Book of Mormon is deep. I had come to Peru in quest of further evidence of its divinity. The Book of Mormon is committed to the proposition that the Nephites kept the Law of Moses, at least until the arrival of their Savior. To be suddenly confronted with clear-cut evidence did something to me, and again I had the experience of a double witness, for I testify that again and again as I have come to the end of a long road of questing and searching, I have not only found overwhelming scientific evidence, but the Lord himself has been waiting to witness to me by the power of his Spirit, even the spirit of truth, that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

Needless to say, I did not have to look at any more pottery to be convinced that permission to take pictures in this museum would be a blessing of major importance. I immediately went to the young lady in charge of the museum and presented my credentials and asked permission to take pictures. Among my credentials was a letter signed by Charles R. Hield written in Spanish regarding the "Society for Archaeological Research." I was told that Larco Hoyle was out in the fields and would return at noon and if I would return at two o'clock in the afternoon I would be told whether I could take pictures or not. When I returned at two o'clock, I was promptly informed that Larco Hoyle had granted me permission to take pictures. In consideration of the fact that the university was not permitted to take pictures there it seems to me a matter for gratitude and thanksgiving that I was able to return from South America with these valuable pictures and that they are now in extensive use in connection with the story of the Book of Mormon.

MACHU PICCHU

When Brother Francis Anderson and I arrived at the base of the mountain on whose top perches the remarkable ruins of Machu Picchu, it was a discouraging prospect. Kodachrome photography requires sunshine for good pictures. It had been raining intermittently for several hours. The Rio Bamba was at flood stage. The sky was heavily overcast. Machu Picchu and the upper reaches of the mountains were hidden beneath heavy shrouds of fog. We crossed the river on a footbridge. A sign pointed out the trail and informed us that it was eight miles to the summit. Riding in a saddle on the back of a horse up eight miles of narrow, steep, rocky, winding mountain trails may not be a pleasant experience in some respects. However, for me it was a thrilling experience. The fog seemed to retreat as we moved upward. The horse I was riding seemed to sense some of the eagerness and suspense that I felt. At least it took the lead of the caravan, and I had an unrestricted opportunity to watch the retreating fog banks as we advanced. It almost seemed as if the Lord were going before us, pushing back the forces of darkness and uncertainty and preparing the way for us to accomplish the purpose of our pilgrimage to Machu Picchu.

The experience reached its grand climax just as we arrived at the outer walls of the ancient city. The fog had lifted from the top of the mountain, and just as we entered the ruins of the city, the sun burst through the clouds and lighted up a limited area around Machu Picchu. I wanted to start taking pictures before the fog came in again, but our guide had us all seated while he gave us a lengthy history of the discovery and excavation of Machu Picchu. The sunshine, however, stayed with us despite the fact that fog and clouds hovered over neighboring peaks. The pictures which we took bear mute evidence to this fact. We spent several hours in full sunshine, carefully inspecting and taking pictures. Late in the afternoon we returned to the base of the mountain and resumed our journey.

One of our party remained at Machu Picchu where the government has limited hotel facilities. We met him two days later at Ollantaytambo. He told us that right after our departure the fog came in again, and there was rain most of the two days he remained at Machu Picchu.

To me our journey up the formidable Andes mountain to Machu Pic-

He Refused To Quit!

By L. S. Wight

THIS IS THE STORY of an old gospel soldier who would not "fade away." He refused to quit.

The old soldier is Brother N. T. Booker, a church friend since my boyhood days. We renewed that friendship last summer on the banks of Lake Geneva in Wisconsin. The incident which is the point of this story happened on the Sunday morning prior to the assembling of the 1951 reunion. But before telling the story, let me give the background to it.

For several years there had not been a reunion in the Chicago and North-eastern Illinois Districts. There was a demand that something be done, so in the spring of 1950 J. C. Stuart and Lloyd Cleveland, presidents of the two districts, set out to find a location which could serve the reunion needs of both districts.

They found a place on Lake Geneva which had been kept for the use of religious groups. The lake is one of God's beauty spots and is solidly built up with many permanent residences. Commercial interests have moved into many spots and have built to serve the demand of those who look for the usual "good time" of summer vacationers. But this property had been kept free from commercial interests.

Arrangements were made for a reunion during the summer of 1950 which was quite successful. Everyone hoped that it could be made a permanent thing. During the fall a retreat was held for the young people of the two districts in an area back from the lake, operated under the name of "Timber Trails." By this time the owner had become a good friend of our church leaders, particularly of Raymond Troyer who had worked with him in handling the 1950 reunion.

Dr. Congdon, the owner, liked our young people because of their behavior and told them that if they would come again for the spring retreat prior to the summer season in 1951 they could come as his guests and could have their choice of place for the retreat at no cost. This meeting also was carried through very successfully.

PLANS FOR THE 1951 REUNION were then developed, and there were many difficulties to overcome. Dr. Congdon asked Brother Troyer to bring his family for the summer and take charge of the entire operation. Since the only source of income is from summer vacationers or religious groups, Brother Troyer decided to get someone, if possible, who would fit into the general scheme of the planning to take charge of the commissary. He requested Brother and Sister Booker to take over this job for the summer. Their meals during the season made the camp the talk of the lake district, and many visitors who came for one week end returned for more.

The reunion was to start on Sunday afternoon, since the regular week-end visitors could not be asked to check out before Sunday noon. Brother Troyer arranged for a worship service on this Sunday morning for the volunteer staff and any camp visitors who might wish to attend. Staff members came in their work clothes as it would be necessary for them to get right back to work to have things in shape for the opening of the reunion that afternoon.

Brother Booker was to be the speaker, and his sermon fitted the occasion. It was evident that he was interested in the group of young people who had been his helpers during the summer. He could have scolded them for their mistakes. He could have criticized them for their failure to measure up to expectations at times. It is hardly necessary to suggest that a group of young people working for their board only, in a vacation spot, would not always be on the job. It would try the patience of a Job to keep them working steadily. I mention this because it would have been so easy for Brother Booker, under the circumstances, to emphasize their failures.

But like a father who loves his children, he quietly and effectively showed them, and the camp visitors, how he could feed them spiritually as well as physically. For a text he used the thirteenth and fourteenth verses of the third chapter of Philipians:

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

And then he told a very simple and a very interesting story of his own life for the benefit of the young people with whom he would be serving the physical needs of the reunion group.

HE TOLD about the hardships of his youth. He was the son of a father who hewed out a homesite in a Missouri forest in the early days. Some of these boys and girls could hardly visualize what it meant to him to go out to the "lasses" barrel in the cold of winter to get enough molasses for the usual "corn-bread and molasses" diet which was the mainstay of the family. When summer weather came and warmed up the molasses it would gush out, sometimes with disturbing results, instead of merely dripping as it did in January. He then added that he hoped to be able to warm up his audience in the same way. He did!

He told about the mark he had set for himself as a boy when he wanted above all else to be a cowboy. He stayed with it until he achieved that goal on a ranch in Wyoming. But then he realized that this was not sufficient for the end result, and he set a new goal for those things which had been taught him in the home he had left. The result was that he joined the missionary forces of the church and for thirty years was an active missionary.

During his missionary experience he had visited a gold mine in the West. His interest was aroused at the way the gold was brought out of the mountain. He could not see how the workers had been able to get the machinery to the top of it. Then someone told him the story. One man approached this mountain from the nearest vantage point, and with a strong bow had sent an arrow with a fine thread attached to the top of the mountain. In the meantime a group of men had walked, climbed, and crawled to the top of the mountain from the other side. Since there was no visible pathway over which to haul this machinery it was necessary to devise some scheme to get the job done.

These men found the arrow to which the fine thread had been tied, and they pulled it to them. To the thread was fastened a fine string, to the string was fastened a larger string, then heavy cord, light rope, heavy rope, and finally the cables on which they could haul the machinery for their operations. He said he would not vouch for the authenticity of the story, but this is substantially the way it was told to him. The point was that they were a group of young people who yet had their lives ahead of them. He said they seemed to be like the tiny threads which could pull the larger strings, cords, and ropes, until they would be able to pull the cables which would be strong enough to pull the machinery of their own lives. He did not even mention any of the things which might keep them from developing. He emphasized the importance of forgetting the past and taking the advice Paul had given to the Philippians.

Then he told about the time it was suggested that he give up his missionary work. He did not want to do so, but being a good soldier he obeyed orders. Yet he was not content. He wanted to be somewhere where he could be doing something. He went to Graceland where he and Sister Booker took charge of the commissary for several years. At the 1951 reunion some of the boys who ate his food in Graceland were actively in charge of the work.

Again the time came when it was thought he should give up this work and retire to his farm in Mississippi. Being a good soldier he again took orders and moved. But again he was not satisfied. He wanted to wear out, not rust out. So he went to Florida and since that time has been active somewhere in reach of people to whom he might minister spiritually as well as physically. So when Brother Troyer asked the Bookers to come to Lake Geneva, they were ready again to go where they could give ministry.

IT WAS RATHER A UNIQUE SITUATION in the camp that morning for the usual week-end visitors to a resort. Here was the camp cook, speaking to them and feeding them spiritually as well as physically. Their attention evidenced their interest in this kind of situation. It showed clearly that if this setup could be continued, it could be the means of reaching many people who now know nothing about the gospel. In fact, early in the season Brother Troyer had accepted a reservation from a minister in New York. Just before the reunion this minister had written that he would be there during the time of the reunion. Brother Troyer advised that the place was sold out for the Latter Day Saints. The minister answered by saying that since he could not change his plans he would be there and would be happy to get acquainted with a "new" religious group. Now a minister who did not know of our existence has some of our books in his library.

Brother Booker ministered to our needs that Sunday morning. No one has to tell a speaker whether or not his audience is listening. But after the meeting, as some of us were commenting on how much we had appreciated the lesson which he presented, young Chuck Lester came up, grabbed Brother Booker's hand, and told him how much he had enjoyed the sermon. I know from experience what it means to have a little fellow respond in this way, and I'll never forget the look of appreciation in Brother Booker's face as he put his arms around Chucky and thanked him for his appreciative response. He did not say so, but it was evident that he felt fully repaid for his efforts even if no more than this one boy had got out of that sermon what he tried to put into it.

The lesson we learned is that if we want to serve, there is a way for us to do so, no matter what the circumstances. Thank God for old soldiers who refuse to quit!

Introduction to Lamoni

By Chi Gamble in Peoria (Illinois) Journal-Star
Sent in by William H. A. Norris

OVER IN IOWA, along toward the close of the vacation trip, road signs began to suggest that the next city was to be Lamoni.

"Seven miles to So-and-So's gas station in Lamoni," said one sign.

"What's Lamoni?" came from one of the two passengers in the back seat.

"Five miles to Butch's Eat Shop," said the next sign, although it might not have been Butch's eat shop. Perhaps it was the Midway, or the Square, or the Doughnut Eat Shop. And at the bottom of the sign was printed the name of the town ahead. It was Lamoni.

Lamoni is a nice little city. I liked it. There are trees, and nice houses, and a good business center that is not overdone. And the city seemed full of fine young people.

In every business house window was a sign announcing the "Graceland Homecoming."

"I wonder what Graceland is?" suggested one of the women.

I didn't know either. Neither did Lewis Woodruff, who knows a lot about a lot of things.

It was time to get a place to stay overnight, so we took the usual tourist routine. If there was a motel we didn't learn of it. The hotels were full. A man had just taken the "Vacancy" sign down from the front of his big two-story house and had hung up "No Vacancy." Thanks to the doctor's wife, who by the way owned the dog that had won best-of-all breeds in the national dog show last summer, we found a woman who had a big house and who could accommodate four people.

"You really are lucky," said the woman, "because the city is packed full of folks who came to the Graceland Homecoming."

"What is Graceland?" asked one of the feminine voices in our party.

Lamoni was an interesting little city and we were curious to know something about it—and about Graceland.

I asked the man who runs the restaurant—a good and rather large restaurant—about Lamoni.

Lamoni was founded by members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. It was at one time international headquarters of that church which now has its world center in Independence, Missouri.

And Graceland? We found out that Graceland is a fine and large junior college maintained by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. In fact we drove out to the Graceland College grounds and found a beautiful, large campus with many fine and large buildings.

The restaurant, when we were in it during the evening dinner period, was full of nice looking, lively, well-behaved young people. I have seen lots of well-behaved young people, but none that were better behaved than these young folk—students of Graceland College and other young folk who had come back to attend its homecoming.

"I notice," I said to the man who runs the restaurant, "that nobody is smoking in here. Back where I come from there certainly would be some persons smoking in a restaurant where 100 young people were eating."

He explained that smoking is practically taboo among the Mormon people. There is no church law against it, but the church discourages its members from smoking. The Latter Day Saints just don't smoke.

And, of course, they don't drink either. Mormons don't drink.

"What churches are here in Lamoni?" I asked the restaurateur.

"We have the Reorganized Latter Day Saints church," he said, "and a Methodist church. The Methodists are quite strong here. And nice people, too."

Further Organization of the Social Service Center

The Herald of March 6, 1950, carried an article on the expansion of the Campus Shop into the Social Service Center. We have had subsequent reports on the activities at the Center and believe that Herald readers are greatly interested in the development of this storehouse project.

Recently General Church officers called into being a public relations committee consisting of one representative from each of the sixteen congregations in the Center Place and certain ex-officio members for the purpose of assisting the management in external problems and acquainting members in the stakes of the needs and opportunities which the Center offers.

Growing out of this committee functioning, each of the congregations has used a Sunday worship period for a panel discussion and a question time period, presenting the work and needs of the Social Service Center. Each member of the public relations committee has recently been appointed to serve on a subcommittee, such as Use of Space, Pricing, Publicity, Finance, Transportations, et cetera. The committee's task will be to study some particular phase of the Center's activities and report back at the monthly meeting of the committee as a whole.

Early in the fall when this committee had its first meeting, a statement of the purpose and functioning of the Social Service Center and the organization and work of the committee was presented in a document written by the Presiding Bishopric. We believe that the members of the church, particularly those living in the stakes, will be deeply interested in the statement which follows:

The following is a general statement of the objectives, policy-making organization, administrative organization, and functions of a public relations committee. This project should be reviewed in the light of the broad aims and purposes of the church to be achieved through economic organization and use of membership personnel.

PURPOSES

The Social Service Center is the result of work which has been carried on under the general supervision of the Bishopric in past years, which work was concerned primarily in the care of the poor through the utilization of goods and available working hours of church members. Such purposes may be set forth by reference to some of the revelations which have been given to the church at various times:

... it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

Behold, I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief . . .—Ibid., 44: 3.

... should travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants . . .—Ibid., 83: 23.

... in your several stewardships, to manage the affairs of the poor . . .—Ibid., 81: 4.

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Ibid., 128: 9.

These purposes may be attained through the institution which we call the Social Service Center in giving special emphasis in the adoption of policy pertaining to the following:

1. To provide clothing, furniture, and various goods to the poor, either at total expense of the church, or at nominal expense to the persons served.

2. To develop facilities and personnel for the training of handicapped and underprivileged persons.

3. To furnish employment to assist those who are temporarily unemployed, that in their time of need they may be aided until better opportunities are open to them.

4. To provide opportunities for those desirous of contributing to the welfare of others of time, labor, and personal property.

5. To give special consideration to gainful activities for the aged and to provide comfortable surroundings where the hours of the aged may be gainfully employed in a productive manner.

6. To develop additional departments and facilities in both vocational and educational fields to enhance the development of character and stewardship qualities of the individual.

7. To conserve clothing, furniture, and other personal property through repair and rehabilitation.

Summarizing this, the objective of the Center is to utilize all resources of time, labor, talents, and material goods, not presently used to productive return, and in so doing to develop the spiritual welfare of persons needing such ministry.

ORGANIZATION

In order to achieve all the foregoing, there is need for defining the organization through which such objectives are to be achieved. Inasmuch as the First Presidency of the church has concern for the spiritual phases of those engaged in such a project, it is highly essential that general policy which is formulated should meet with its approval. This suggests the need for the setting up of a General Policy Board. The function of this board is that of examining the general progress and activities of the Center with a view to relating them to the general program and objectives of the church, and developing and maintaining policies for the Social Service Center as an institution to assure such unity of purpose.

Because of the necessity of utilizing stake personnel and members in the Center Stake to achieve the objectives of this Center, the president of the stake also has vital interest in the over-all policy of the Center and the effect of its activities upon the membership of the stake as a whole.

The stake bishop is the logical person to serve as superintendent of this project because primarily it is a part of storehouse organization, functioning within the stake, supported by General Church oblation funds administered by him under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric.

The general policy board therefore should consist of the three members of the First Presidency, the three members of the Presiding Bishopric, the stake president, and the stake bishop. As this board is concerned primarily with policy, it is suggested that it could meet once each quarter, receiving a report of the financial, vocational, and social achievements in a given period.

Due to the fact, as previously stated, that the work and purpose of this organization is contemplated in the law as a function of the bishopric, it is logical that the administrative work of this Center be vested in an administrative board to consist of the Presiding Bishopric, the stake president, and the stake bishop. The stake president is included in this board because of the necessity of close relationship with the voluntary working personnel which will make for the success of this institution. This board should meet once each month to examine the financial reports, make administrative decisions, and formulate administrative policy.

The superintendent, designated as the bishop of the Center Stake, should make reports to the administrative board.

While the counselors of neither the stake president nor the stake bishop are included in these boards, it is nevertheless to be presumed that each of these officers may have advice and counsel from their counselors relative to matters pertaining to the Social Service Center and their particular relationship to it.

Inasmuch as this is more than a stake undertaking, and is supported with General Church funds from oblation, the Presiding Bishopric is necessarily the final authority respecting financial policy, and such authority will be had in the majority membership on the administrative board.

The manager of the Social Service Center should be employed by the Administrative board but should be directly responsible to the stake bishop. The supervisor of women of the Social Service Center is responsible to the manager and to the stake bishop.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

To supplement the work of the boards hereinbefore suggested, and to maintain proper contact with the membership of the church in this area, it is suggested that a public relations committee be appointed. It would seem highly advisable that this committee and the chairman be appointed by the First Presidency, and that the function of such a committee should be somewhat independent of the administrative board, but it is contemplated that the Presiding Bishopric and the stake bishop, one of the First Presidency, and the stake president meet ex-officio with the public relations committee. It would also be desirable to have, by invitation, the manager of the Social Service Center and the supervisor of women's work in the Center present when the committee meets.

This committee should consist of at least one person from each congregation in Independence; and the president and bishop of the Center Stake, Lamoni Stake, Kansas City Stake, Far West Stake, and Central Missouri Stake should also be ex-officio members. The head of the women's department of Independence should also be a member of this public relations committee.

The function of this public relations committee may be set forth briefly as follows:

1. It should give consideration to the policies which govern the operation of the Social Service Center—that is, determine the extent to which the Center can render greater service and improve its techniques and methods.

2. It should take under advisement any specific problems which the general policy board may refer to it.

3. It should take under advisement any specific problem which the administrative board refers to it, such as studying or analyzing comparative institutions, prices charged by them, services rendered, etc.

4. It should be informed relative to the services that are available through the institution.

5. It is the group to whom the administration can go presenting its needs for personnel, for material, and for other needs which may arise which can be met in making appeals to the public or in the dissemination of information.

6. It should not concern itself with the administration of the Center, but should feel free to make such recommendations to the administrative board as in its opinion will further the interests and service of the institution.

7. It could make recommendations relative to the types of publicity and information that would be helpful to be placed in the hands of church members, both in this area and in the General Church, relative to the functioning, purpose, and needs of the institution.

8. It could investigate such projects as handicrafts, activities for the aged, social activities carried on by other institutions of this character, and make evaluation and recommendations to the administrative board. In the functioning of the committee, the chairman could make assignments to individuals or to subcommittees to investigate special activities or projects to be brought back and evaluated carefully by the public relations committee as a whole and, if found worthy of further consideration, passed on to the administrative board by way of recommendation.

9. It should be on the alert to know the pulse of reaction of nonmember business organizations, in the community to the Social Service Center and assist in guiding the administration in good public relations with both member and nonmember organizations in the community.

10. It should determine the time and frequency of its meetings as soon as appointed. A monthly meeting would appear desirable.

There are undoubtedly many other assignments that could be made to the public relations committee by the administrative board, but the foregoing should be representative of the type of work that could be expected to be done by this committee in its relationship to the administrative board.

Respectfully submitted,

G. L. DELAPP.

Nevada (Iowa) Branch Meets the Challenge

POSTLE D. T. WILLIAMS has forwarded to the editors a personal letter received from Elder Wilbur Chandler of Des Moines, who has been serving Nevada Branch as pastor for the past nine months. Like some others, the Nevada Branch was merely "carrying on" and seemed to need a transfusion which would give it new spiritual life. Brother Williams recalls that he challenged the young pastor "that if he could bring the branch in that town to life he would have performed a miracle." He says the attached letter is an answer to this challenge. From other sources we have learned that in a premissionary series visiting campaign some fifty prospects were contacted.—EDITOR.

Dear Uncle Danny:

Some time ago I reported that Nevada Branch was growing. God has literally been with me, and I can bear testimony that because of his presence our good friends of Nevada are growing some more.

We are building together. On Sunday, October 28, I presented the following resolution: "Resolved that we immediately and completely redecorate the interior of the church, the cost not to exceed $200.00 excluding gifts, donations, et cetera." This resolution was passed 18 to 0, one not voting.

On Monday, October 29, we began—new plaster for front wall, new white paint on ceiling, light green paint for walls, and a picture of Christ, 35 by 45 inches, for front wall. The woodwork was cleaned and revarnished clear and light. The white pine floor was sanded and covered with clear floor sealer. New carpet was put in each aisle and across the back of church. Pews which were three inches below chair level were raised to chair level.

Volunteer help came from everywhere. A nonmember's paint store supplied paint at cost, also a floor sander. Two other stores supplied floor sanders at no charge. A lumber company supplied lumber and scaffolding for painting and also contributed $10.00. The paint dealer, Keith Page, also gave a check for $10.00. Five nonmember men gave liberally of their time; one did all the plastering. Two nonmember ladies helped a great deal. Nearly all the members, except those who are not well, gave all they could and worked wonderfully together to do the job before them.

As the work progressed the enthusiasm grew, and with the presence of God in answer to prayers the work seemed to go easier and faster.

At 11:00 p.m. Saturday night the floor sanding (last thing to be done) was finished and the varnish applied. We were all tired out. It was a marvelous week. I literally saw the people grow before my very eyes. On Sunday morning our congregation was welded by love such as no preaching I had done could do. God was with us. He worked with us, and together we grew and achieved our goal.

I asked the members to contribute liberally at 11:00 a.m. Sunday. Our normal collection is about $7.00 to $10.00, but Sunday our offering was $132.68.

A Career in Church Education

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

J. A. Gunsolley

PART VIII

Patriarchal Blessings

My first appointment as evangelist was to Lamoni and Far West Stakes with Graceland College objective. During this appointment I had my last class in Graceland, two hours a week in religious education. My work in the college terminated with that class in 1926. The first patriarchal blessing I gave was during a young people's convention in Lamoni. Naturally it was with mingled feelings not of fear but unworthiness and deep concern, for I regarded it as a sacred trust and responsibility. Then, too, I was anxious to know whether the Holy Spirit would direct and confirm my ministry as a patriarch. I was fully satisfied with my experience, for light and liberty were given me in goodly measure, affording comfort to me as well as to the young man who received his blessing and his mother who was present. I have given over twelve hundred blessings, and in practically every instance the Spirit of God has been present. My wife, Mattie, has been my associate in this work, doing the recording in shorthand, except in a few instances. She has borne witness to the Spirit's presence in our work, and those receiving blessings have testified of the same thing.

There have been rare exceptions. In one instance a man was disappointed and complained that his blessing was not what he expected. It was revealed afterward that he expected to be designated for the priesthood, and also that he was addicted to the use of tobacco. When he was told that he must be clean in body and in clothing, and was not told he would be called to the priesthood he was grieved. I don't know if he ever reformed, for he was a stranger to us.

I have blessed people over seventy years of age, as well as those under fifteen. At Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, a brother and sister came for their blessings. She was fourteen and he fifteen. I explained that we do not bless children under fifteen unless there should be some especial reason. I made an appointment for him, and when he came, his sister came with him. She said, "Brother Gunsolley, can't I have my blessing?"

I said, "You remember what I told you."

She said, "I'm in the same classes with Paul, and I know just as much as he does. Can't I have my blessing?" I knew there had not been a patriarch in that community for eleven years, and there was not likely to be one again for a long time. Several in the same family came together for their blessings.

I was satisfied the little girl told the truth; so I said, "Yes, you may have your blessing." The Spirit confirmed my decision.

I gave thirteen blessings one hot Sunday in July while attending a four-day conference at Saskatoon; I gave a total of fifty-three during the conference. Upon returning to Fargo, North Dakota, which was headquarters for our mission to North Dakota and Minnesota, we had over eighty blessings in shorthand notes. Our time had been so fully occupied in giving blessings at Weyburn, Saskatoon, and Ribstone, that we did not have time for typing them. It was a great relief when the last one was typed and in the mails. But we had a wonderful trip, preaching and lecturing. My wife became a lecturer of much ability in junior church, home building, and women's work in general. We followed the plan much of the time of putting on "double-header" programs. She lectured the first part of the service and I preached during the time remaining. It got to be that the people were about as anxious to listen to her as to me—perhaps even more so in some instances.

Divine Healing

I have witnessed a number of cases of divine healing, and there was one upon my own person, which naturally was of especial interest to me. I was always fond of singing and had some knowledge of music. Upon one occasion I was even entrusted with leading the Lamoni Choir. A disorder developed in my throat—first a slight irritation that induced coughing, then what seemed to be a growth which interfered with my vocal cords. I had to give up trying to sing, and at times my spoken words seemed to be cut in two. Often after a serious coughing spell there would be a slight discharge of blood. I was administered to for it and took frequent sips of consecrated oil from a small bottle I carried in my pocket, but no improvement was apparent. One evening Brother Frank Cochran and I went to administer some distance from home. In this administration as I was offering the prayer confirming the anointing, my words were chopped into pieces. On our way home I told Frank of my condition and asked him if he would pray that, if it were the Lord's will, I might be healed. A few days later as we sat at the table eating our noonday meal I had a spell of coughing, no more serious than at other times, but I felt something in my throat. Something had broken loose, and I took it out in my hand. It was a little piece of cartilage about the size of a jelly bean. My throat bled a little, and I finished my meal with no further discomfort, except a slight tenderness that was soon gone. I was completely relieved. I wrapped the now unoffending obstacle in paper, put it in my pocket, and decided to take it to the doctor.

I knew Frank would be interested, so I called at the Herald Office where he was proofreader. "Frank," I said, "I want to show you something." He must have discerned from my looks that it had something to do with our recent experience in relation to my throat trouble.

"You wait a minute till I tell you something," he said. "You know what you asked me to do the other night as we separated after the administration. Well, before I reached home I knelt beside the road and prayed, and the Spirit told me that the obstruction in your throat would be removed without the use of a knife."

I took it from my pocket saying, "Here it is, Frank," and laid it on the desk before him. He was very pleased to know he was not mistaken in the assurance given, that the Lord verified the promise, and that I had been healed. I was so happy over the blessing which had come to me that I concluded to give God the glory and not bother to go to the doctor with it.

Pastor at Duluth

While engaged in transcribing and mailing the blessings at Fargo that had accumulated from our trip in Canada, I received a message from church headquarters that I should go to Duluth, Minnesota, to take charge of the branch at that place. This came as a surprise, for section 125 of Doctrine and Covenants states, concerning the work of a patriarch, "He is not to be put in charge of either branch or district." I wrote to headquarters quoting this statement in the revelation and received the reply, "Necessity knows no law." This was an emergency, and it seemed wise for us to go to Duluth. Of course I yielded and arranged to make the change as speedily as practicable. I believe our experience there showed the wisdom of the action of the officers who have the responsibility of regulating and setting in order the affairs of the church in all the world.

Remarkable Baptism

One experience at Duluth showed the Lord's concern for his children. The eight-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister W. C. Stanty asked for baptism at my hands. She was frail; the water of the lake in October was cold; and where we baptized it was necessary to wade out some distance from the shore. When she changed clothes after coming out of the water her underclothes were not even wet, according to the testimony of the women who assisted her. I have no reason to doubt the truthfulness of their testimony and accept the incident as one of the many evidences that God cares for his own.

A Special Blessing

One Wednesday evening at prayer meeting I was moved upon by the Spirit to give a special blessing to a brother acting as deacon in the branch at Duluth. Accordingly, before closing the service, I asked him to come forward and take a chair at the front of the small congregation. After a brief explanation I conferred upon him a special spiritual blessing much to his comfort and to the encouragement of the Saints present, for the power of the Spirit was felt by them. The brother testified that he had felt a keen desire for a blessing before I went away, and we were soon to leave. He had felt a strong inclination to ask for it, but a sense of unworthiness made him hesitate to do so. When I called him to come forward and receive a blessing he was filled with joy.

Appointment to Southern States

Our next appointment was to the southern states without special reference to any special objective, giving us entirely the freedom of all the territory south of the Mason-Dixon Line. We were glad for this appointment, for our knowledge of the life and habits of our church members in the South was very limited. We were grateful, too, for the consideration of the appointing authorities who felt that perhaps the rigor of northern winters might be more severe than we should be asked to endure. We found the people kind and hospitable. Living conditions were widely different from those which we had been used to all our lives. We always knew that what the people provided for the comfort of the missionary, whether in housing or food, was the best they had to offer, and they gave freely. Many times they denied themselves of things in order that we might fare more comfortably.

In one instance a brother came for his blessing. When leaving he offered me twenty-five cents, saying that it was the only money he had. I declined to take it at first, knowing that he needed it more than I. But he insisted, "I want you to have it." I knew he esteemed it a privilege to give it to me, and I could not deprive him of this satisfaction by refusing to accept it. Needless to say he received a good blessing.

Visit to Pensacola

Following the reunion at Dixonville I wrote the president of the branch at Pensacola, Florida, advising that I desired next to visit there, and I would appreciate his arranging a place for us at the train, since we were strangers there. After a few days a reply came saying that the members were having trouble in the branch, and that I would not care to listen to their war cry. He thought I had better not come at that time, but I decided to go to Pensacola at once. Accordingly I wrote him that if there were any place needing a visit in my appointed field, judging from his letter, it was his branch, and that he might expect us on a certain date. I hoped he would see that someone would meet us at the station.

Sister Bessie Roe met us, took us to her home, and made us welcome during our stay. Her house was small, the furnishings modest, and the food plain but substantial. We were made to feel that the best she had was offered us freely.

One experience worthy of special mention for which we were indebted to Sister Roe was a trip to the country quite a number of miles from Pensacola. We went with her in her Ford coupe to visit a family of colored members of the church by the name of "Uncle Ephraim" and "Aunt Sally" Booker and their two daughters. (As a slave Uncle Ephraim was owned by a man named Booker, and slaves, when freed, adopted the name of their late owners.) We received a royal welcome in their modest little farm home, which we found as neat and clean as the average home in the community. We administered the ordinances of the church as we found expedient according to their desires with approval of the Divine Spirit in the same degree that attended our humble ministry upon other occasions. They urged us to stay and eat with them—and we would have accepted—but we had made arrangements to dine with a family on our return trip to the city. Aunt Sally corresponded with us for years.

Experience at Pensacola

Our reception by the presiding elder was not very cordial, for our coming had been contrary to his best judgment. He introduced me, a little reluctantly, to the congregation at the first meeting. The sermon seemed to meet with his approval, and he became more friendly. The second or third sermon stirred him deeply. It was on the subject of responsibility of the priesthood to the membership. He was sitting on the front row of seats with his associate, the priest of the branch, beside him. I was talking very plainly, showing the sacredness of priesthood responsibility and mentioning how ministers in general were guilty of failing to magnify their holy calling. Finally he could restrain his feelings no longer, and he interrupted me saying, "Brother Gunsolley, you are having reference to us!"

"No, Brother," I answered, "I'm not referring to you in particular."

"Well, someone's been coaching you," he accused.

"No one's been coaching me," I assured him.

"You couldn't have hit us any harder," he insisted.

"I talk this way every place I go," I explained. "Here is Sister Gunsolley. Ask her if I've made a special attack on you."

"You know I told you it would be better if you wouldn't come," he reminded me.

"Yes," I answered, "and that's one of the reasons I felt I ought to come."

"I'm sorry I'm here," he said.

"I'm very glad you're here," I told him. "I'm sorry you feel I've picked on you. Now, you be here tomorrow night. I'm going to speak on the responsibility of the membership to the priesthood. I'm sure you'll feel better."

This little dialogue stirred up some consternation, and I think more people were present the following night to hear the other side of the story. There was no interruption, and the brother came to me apologizing for the occurrence of the previous night saying, "We've been rubbed so hard, Brother Gunsolley, that we become sore." At the close of our series of services the president expressed a high degree of pleasure and satisfaction, complimenting us upon the work we had done that he thought was not possible under the circumstances. He expressed the hope that we would return when it was convenient for us to do so.

Question:

Is it the ruling of the church that in all branches sermonettes instead of prayer and testimony should follow Communion service?

Iowa

Mrs. V. L. H.

Answer:

No. The church has not attempted to regiment any of our worship services. Advice and counsel has been given for the leaders to accept and follow if they so choose, but always foremost is the latter-day instruction found in Doctrine and Covenants 17:9 and 46:1. "The elders of my church are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost. . . ."

The leaders of the church for many years were concerned about the undignified manner in which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Due to this condition throughout the church many suggestions were shared, and the church as a whole sincerely tried to dignify and beautify this specific sacrament. As is stated in one of our church publications: "The trend in many of our larger branches now is to center the minds of the congregation entirely on the significance of the emblems. Therefore, extemporaneous testimonies and prayers are not encouraged."

Always, we should remember that it is the right and responsibility of the presiding elder to conduct the service as he is directed by the Spirit.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

At Dickson Mounds human skeletons have been unearthed which are said to be ten thousand years old or more. How does one reconcile this with creation? To me it just doesn't make sense. Illinois H. S.

Answer:

We don't. The age of man, estimated upon archaeological and geological findings is variously set up to 1,500,000 years, the variations being so numerous, and many of them so great, as to betray the lack of unity and certainty. The evidences upon which these estimates are based, though many, are fragmentary and imperfect, and furnish no clear and connected account of man's beginnings, leaving easy grounds for errors of judgment and mistaken conclusions.

The Scriptures do give a fairly clear account of some leading factors regarding human life upon the earth. We note the following:

1. Man was created of God, not on earth but in heaven, first as spirit beings including all men. This creation was on the sixth day or period, and was limited in number.

2. After the seventh day, and after the first creation had long since stopped, a special creation was made on earth whereby God formed the fleshly body of one man, whom he named Adam, saying of him that he was the first man. Adam was of full and perfect form, of capable mentality, though of necessity dependent upon experience for the developing of his mental powers to the gaining of knowledge, wisdom, the power of reasoning, etc. God also made one woman, Eve, and endowed both the man and woman with the powers of parenthood, making possible the incarnation of the whole human race.

3. The entrance of man into earth life was not en masse, but by gradual progression, generation upon generation, which still continues, though with a fixed time for its ending.

4. A chronology of years is given in the Bible from Adam to Abraham at the birth of Isaac—a total of 2,038 years, covering the most difficult prehistorical period. The accuracy of these genealogical figures is questioned by some, but they are indorsed with one minor change in the Inspired Version of the Bible and may be counted as correct. Figures are not given for the subsequent period, but the length can be reasonably determined; and though the estimate is not definite, variations of a few hundred years would be as nothing compared with the estimates of the antiquarians who differ by millions. This leaves the age of man somewhere around 6,000 years from Adam to the present.

5. In Doctrine and Covenants 104—a revelation on priesthood—there is given a genealogical line of high priests from Adam to Noah, but without numbering the years. The names for that period are the same as the Genesis list, thus adding some further confirmation to the latter's correctness.

6. In latter-day revealments (the Book of Mormon and the book of Doctrine and Covenants) are to be found numerous statements agreeing with the biblical account, touching creation, one first man, Eden and the Fall, references to the patriarchs, a limited creation, and prophetic references to the whole period of the present age—that is from Adam to the close of the millennium—as being 7,000 years. The testimony of all the Scriptures is harmonious, being intertwined with the doctrine of God, Christ, and the gospel, the whole story being ONE. To discredit one part tends to discredit all. Such a harmonious and complete testimony to us is far more worthy of credence than that gathered from the broken strata of the earth, and the fragmentary relics of uncertain nature and date.

Question:

How is "had all things common" defined for Zion practice?

Answer:

The statement "had all things common" as quoted in this question is the one found in Acts 4:32. With the coming of the Restoration the law is more fully given, and the process of developing equality is that of compliance chu is prophetic. The Bible informs us (Isaiah 2: 2), "And it shall come to pass, in the last days, when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it." Zion awaits us in the tops of the mountains. The last verse of the song "Admonition" admonishes:

Get ye up then to your mountain
Zion of this closing day!
For the glory of my coming
Waits to break upon your way!

Forth from thence your testimony
Shall to trembling nations go,
And the world confess that with you
God has residence below.

Some people have looked up toward the high places of the mountain of the Lord's house. It seems to be a formidable mountain to climb. I have a deep and abiding assurance that when the day comes that we all determine to climb to higher levels of consecration and activity, the Lord will go before us just as he did when we were climbing the mountain. The fog banks of doubt and uncertainty will retreat as we advance, and when we come to the gates of the city the heavens will literally open as they did at Machu Picchu. Giant and insuperable problems which have long clouded the Zionite goal will be swept away, and the sunshine of God's love and almighty power will burst through the dark clouds of the adversary. My faith in the ultimate achievement of our Zionite goal almost knows no bounds—which brings me to my final and concluding experience.

FLYING THE CARIBBEAN SEA

At the conclusion of our long and thrilling travels in South America, Elder Francis Anderson and I boarded a big Pan-American plane at Baranquilla, Colombia, on the northern shores of South America to fly to Miami, Florida. We embarked at two in the afternoon, and we were told that five hours later we would arrive at Miami. As we were flying across the wide expanses of the Caribbean something went wrong with the airplane, and we landed on the tropical island of Jamaica, where we waited several hours while repairs were made. About sundown the plane resumed its journey, only to stop again at Camaguey, Cuba, where we were again delayed several hours. Finally, in the late hours of the night we again boarded the plane to continue our journey to Miami. I had never traveled in an airplane at night before, and this particular plane had been having mechanical difficulties. I felt a little uncertain about entrusting myself to the captain and the pilot and the instruments of this airplane. As it roared through the night, I continued to watch and was greatly thrilled when far in the distance ahead I saw the lights of the city sparkling like jewels. Then and there I had a deep feeling that my experience in flying across the Caribbean Sea was both symbolic and prophetic. The final embarkation in our journey to Zionite accomplishment will be in the night.

Shortly after the organization and embarkation of the church in 1830, the Restoration Movement rapidly moved forward. Then, because of sins and transgressions, the onward movement was brought to a halt. The progress of the Restoration was long delayed (1844) while repairs and preparations were made. In 1860 the church re-embarked on its journey toward the prophetic city whose sparkling jewels of love, peace, and brotherhood have so long beckoned to those who hunger after righteousness and truth. Thus it has been. Often the church has moved forward only to be delayed again while repairs and further preparations were made.

In our journey across the seething Caribbean of modern humanity we have come to camp on a tropical isle. We have long basked in the balmy breezes of economic prosperity and relaxed in the midst of pleasant and congenial relationships with our neighbors and fellow-religionists. The day is approaching when great storms will sweep these things away. Like the Missouri River which overflowed to flood heights never touched before, the great sea of modern life will be swept by storms and bring a flood of woe and disaster such as has not been known before. Many of us are willing to trust ourselves to great machines built by men. We invest our lives and energies in the ways and institutions of Babylon. The prophets have long assured us of the fall of Babylon. The handwriting is on the wall. We are assured that all worldly things in which men trust will be destroyed. Only the Restoration Movement will survive the storms and floods and desolations to come upon Babylon.

Oh, that we would arise like men and entrust and invest ourselves and our lives in his work while the sun shines and it is yet day. Surely the Lord yearns for his people to come to him, not because they are frightened and fearful of impending disasters but because they love the Lord and their fellow-men and desire to bring the blessing of the kingdom to countless souls who walk in darkness.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Parsons of Larned, Kansas, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on November 21, 1951, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. J. Clayton Buster, in Larned. Present for the occasion were their children: Mrs. Kenneth Ingram of Goodland, Kansas; Mrs. Walter Weldon of Moorhead, Iowa; M/Sgt. Lyman Parsons of Omaha, Nebraska; Capt. Earl F. Parsons of Galesburg, Illinois; and Charles Parsons of Minden, Nebraska. Due to his work, Elder Frank Parsons of Minneapolis, Minnesota, was unable to attend. He was the only one of the children not present.

Briefs

MIDLAND, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting for the branch was held September 12. The following officers were elected: Everett Berndt, pastor; Chester Bartlett, associate pastor; Jacqueline Brown, secretary; Hugh Martin, treasurer; Lena Grice, women's department leader; Gordon Powers, young people's leader; Elsie Yarrington, music director.

Apostle Paul Hanson delivered a sermon and showed slides on the Book of Mormon on October 23.

Don Lents, assistant to the First Presidency, attended the priesthood institute held in Saginaw, and was guest speaker at Midland, November 4.—Reported by J. BROWN

OREGON DISTRICT.—The district Zion's League conference and rally was held in the Camas, Washington, church, November 10 and 11. Approximately 300 attended. The principal speakers were District President J. L. Verhei and Bishop M. E. Lasater. On Saturday evening, a play directed by Leona Carpenter of Vancouver was given. The annual election of officers was held on Sunday in the afternoon.

Elder Keith Kinert, district youth director, selected Elders Thomas Coffman, William Brewster, Robert Taylor, and Herbert Hawley, to assist him in the various sections in the district. The following officers were elected: Marlys Webberley, president; Dale Ward and Carrol Lampard, vice-presidents; Beverly Becker, secretary; Lyle Anderson, treasurer; Cobb Maxom, music leader.

The slogan for the year will be "Youth for Righteousness." The district has decided to print a League paper and assist in the building of a youth center on the Lewis River reunion ground. The youth camp was named, "Camp Israel" after the president of the church.

The second district council meeting was held in Vancouver on November 18, with eighteen members present.

More than sixty members of the district priesthood and wives attended the meeting in Portland, and also representatives attended the meeting at Roseburg for the Southern Oregon District. District President and Sister Verhei, Elder Leonard Hoisington, and Elder Lloyd Shannon were the instructors.

Elder George Njeim of Temple City, California, held a series at the Portland church for two weeks. On the last Sunday six were baptized, and approximately 360 people attended the service. Elder James Kemp directed the singing, and assisted Brother Njeim with visiting nonmembers. A record attendance was noted.—Reported by J. L. VERHEI

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The K's Club of the branch donated $300 to help furnish the guest room in the men's dormitory, Gunsolley Hall, of Graceland. Last year the club sent $300 to the Independence Sanitarium to furnish a room on the children's floor. The project for 1952 is to raise $500 for the Auditorium fund. The group meets once a month for luncheon and fellowship. Each member has an amount to raise as her talent fund, and at the end of the year, each woman relates how she earned her money. The group also sponsors teas, book reviews, and other activities to raise money. The club has four officers, none holding an office for over two years.—Reported by MRS. ARTHUR C. MALLAMS

AVA, MISSOURI.—Brother George Doubledee of Medoc, Missouri, conducted a series of meetings at the Pleasant Green schoolhouse, known as the Pleasant Green Mission, which is about twelve miles west of Ava. Elder L. L. Chrestensen was in charge. The meetings were held from November 16-28. The branch held a basket dinner November 25, following which three adults and a young girl were baptized. Another candidate was baptized on November 28.

Progress is being made toward the new church building. Bake sales and bazaars have been held in Ava. A Pilgrim program and pie supper was given at the church November 15. On December 1, a group of Saints met at the home of Brother Lawrence Epps for a wood sawing, after which the wood was sold for the building fund.—Reported by RAYMOND STONE

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Powers of Torrance, California, had their son, Allan Edward, blessed. Elder W. W. Powers and Evangelist Lynn E. Smith officiated. The parents attended Graceland in 1946-47. Mrs. Powers is the former Aileen H. Ward. The service took place at the Vermont Heights Mission.—Reported by ELDER W. H. HALL

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—Apostle Percy E. Farrow was the guest minister at a special service, October 22.

On October 26, a stage show was sponsored by the Zion's League, the proceeds going to the branch budget fund.

A public supper was served November 9, by the Homemakers group of the women's department. A doll show and needlework bazaar were held in conjunction with the supper.

Evangelist A. D. McCall was in the branch November 10 and 11, for the purpose of giving patriarchal blessings. He was also guest speaker at the Armistice Day service.

At the Sunday evening service, November 18, Mrs. Mary Catharine Smith, Mary Catharine Smith (daughter), and Mrs. Barbara Young were baptized by the pastor. The confirmation service was held Sunday evening, November 25, with Elders J. A. Pray, R. L. Booker, and Brewton Greene officiating.

A general departmental meeting was sponsored by the Young Matrons group of the women's department, November 19. Reports were given by those who attended the Women's Institute in Independence. The twenty-five cents a week donations, saved since April 1, pledged by the women of the branch on payment of the church loan, were turned in to the departmental treasurer at this meeting.

Over ninety were present at the Thanksgiving morning service, with the pastor presiding. Elder Wayne Hough introduced the theme, "My Heart Is Full." Statements of appreciation were made by Helen Pray, R. L. Booker, and Brewton Greene.

A youth rally for the central and southern areas of the Gulf States District was held in Mobile, November 23-25, with Elder Wayne Hough, district youth leader, presiding. The theme of the rally was "We Live for Him." A well-rounded program of worship services, classes, a fellowship service, banquet, and dedicatory service was provided. Personnel contributing to the success of the rally were Elders P. E. Farrow, W. J. Breshears, Franklin Steiner, Bishop J. E. Baldwin, and Evangelist A. D. McCall.

The Communion service speaker for Sunday, December 2, was Elder L. A. Rife, professor at Mississippi Southern College, Hattiesburg, Mississippi.

The ordinance of blessing of children was observed at the morning service, December 9, at which time the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Rogers was blessed by Elders Brewton Greene and Wayne Hough. At the evening service Bishop J. E. Baldwin was the guest speaker.

The Christmas cantata, "The Music of Bethlehem," was presented by the choir under the direction of Mrs. Wayne Hough at the Sunday evening service, December 16.

THE MINISTERS MANUAL

(Doran's)

This 27th edition of a work that has established itself through the years as the standard source book in its field has among its contents the following: outlines for sermons for Sunday mornings and evenings for the entire year and special days; suggestions for children's sermons, themes for Lenten services and evangelistic meetings, sermon seed thoughts and an abundance of illustrations and homiletic material for all occasions, guides for church departments and activities; sections on Holy Communion, missions and missionaries; tables of dates.

Elder H. J. Simons, president of the Central Missouri Stake, was the guest speaker at the Christmas Sunday worship service, December 23. The evening worship service was presented by the children's division under the departmental leaders, Julia Mae Wilson and Delores Miller.

A Christmas evening White Gift service was well attended with Elders H. J. Simons, J. E. Baldwin, and the pastor as ministers.

The final event of the year was a waffle supper and watch party held on Monday night, December 31.—Reported by ARDIETH VICKREY

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—The annual business meeting was held September 2, with Pastor Dale Crown in charge, assisted by LeRoy Beckham, district president; and Elder C. C. Martin. The following officers were elected: pastor, Dale Crown; church school supervisor, Raymond Brooks; Zion's League leader and treasurer, Lloyd Feagins; women's leader, Leah Williams; children's supervisor, Laura Feagins; Marion Lybarker, auditor; Doris Graham, music director; Susie LeNeve, publicity agent; Roy Graham, bishop's agent; Clara Hawley, historian; and C. C. Martin, associate pastor.

Israel A. Smith was guest speaker for the morning and afternoon service on April 29. Members from Nevada, Missouri, Pittsburg and Mapleton, Kansas, were present. Joan Margraves of Pittsburg, Kansas, was the soloist.

The interior of the church has had improvements made upon it.

On February 28, Elaine Boyd, Frank Hoskin and his two sons, Franklin, Jr., and David, were baptized by Seventy Don Kyser, and confirmed by Elders Dale Crown and C. C. Martin. This completed the Hoskin family circle in the church.

The Graceland Band presented a concert in the Eugene Ware School auditorium on March 14.

Bishop and Sister Walter Johnson of Independence visited the branch March 28. Bishop Johnson delivered the morning sermon.

Elder J. C. Stuart of Chicago held a series of meetings for two weeks. On May 27, a baptismal service was held in the afternoon, and Helen Hood was baptized. Members from Mapleton and Nevada assisted with the music. The women's department presented Elder Stuart with a large aluminum tray, made by a local member, to express the appreciation of the branch to Sister Stuart for the sacrifice she made that he might labor among the Saints in Fort Scott.

During the summer months the Zion's League held various programs and socials including an evening with Brother and Sister John Jones of Pittsburg, Kansas, as guests. Brother and Sister Jones showed pictures of their trip to Hawaii.

September 30, the women's department had charge of the service, and invited Brother and Sister John Blackmore as guests. Brother Blackmore, General Church historian, was the morning speaker. A basket dinner was held at noon. Brother Blackmore lectured in the evening, and Sister Blackmore read a special prayer. Musical numbers were provided by the Mapleton and Butler Branches.

Lloyd Hill and his wife Lavone have moved to Sunflower, Kansas.—Reported by SUSIE LE-NEVE

MOORHEAD, IOWA.—Elder Chester Davis was again elected as pastor. He chose Francis Hathaway and Wilbur Mann as counselors. Cloyd Mann is the church school director; Margaret Ballantyne, music director; L. D.

Weldon, young people's leader, and Wilbur Mann, bishop's agent.

A mission has been started at Castana, Iowa. A nice church building has been purchased there, and on October 28 the mission was officially opened with a series conducted by Evangelist Elvin Baughman of Dow City. Elder Francis Hathaway is in charge of the group, assisted by Paul Petersen, teacher.

The Zion's League has charge of the evening church service once a month. The group united with the Castana Saints for a New Year's Eve watch party held at the home of Shirley and Paul Petersen, Jr. Mrs. Thelma Miller is the young people's leader at Castana. The officers elected for Zion's League were Marjorie Weldon, president; Russell Mann, vice-president; and Shirley Petersen, secretary-treasurer.—Reported by JEANNETTE WELDON

TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS.—A series of meetings was held for three weeks by Seventy Cecil R. Ettinger. The first two weeks were cottage meetings, and the third week was spent in nightly services at the church. At the close of the services on December 1, five persons were baptized, completing three families in the church.—Reported by MRS. ODESSA ARMSTRONG

STANTON, TEXAS.—Elder Barnett W. Berridge, missionary to the Western Oklahoma District, is residing in Lubbock, Texas. He held a series including cottage meetings at Stanton October 8-28. On the closing day of the series he baptized Freda Standifer, who was confirmed November 11 by Elder Douglas Church, pastor of the Stanton Branch. Sue Standifer was baptized and confirmed November 11 by Elder Church.

Sarah Lou Standifer entered nurses' training at Lubbock in September. Earl and Gearl Koonce are attending college at Kerrville, Texas. Billy Ray Hamm is in the Navy and was home for Thanksgiving.

Priest Carl Leonard, Jr., visited the DeKalb, Illinois, Branch and gave the evening sermon.—Reported by VIVIAN SAUNDERS

Building Family Morale In Present-Day Crises

Part I

By Mrs. Harold I. Velt

An address delivered October 10, 1951, at the General Women's Institute, Independence, Missouri.

WE ARE LIVING in an age of restless uncertainty—a time prophesied centuries ago and also in latter days as the “hastening time”—an age when men’s hearts are filled with fear for the things that are happening on the earth. It is a period of change unparalleled in world history—an age filled with many and varied perplexities. Twice in our generation young men have been taken away from their homes for war service and the end apparently is not yet. Families are called upon to meet crises and to make adjustments unprecedented in world history. Men’s hearts, and women’s too, are filled with all manner of fears—fears of wars and their devastating horrors, separation from loved ones, financial insecurity, illness, broken homes, inadequate housing, and crime. A Kansas City paper recently told how police abruptly interfered with the crime career of a six-year-old boy. He had just started grade school and already had a number of burglaries to his credit. He was assisted by two other boys, twelve and thirteen years old. We could go on and on talking of the perplexities facing our present-day civilization. Our papers and radios remind us daily of these things. It is not a pretty picture, but we cannot be like the ostrich and cover our heads. What should concern us is how are we going to face and meet those conditions.

We Have Been Warned

These conditions of world distress should not surprise Latter Day Saints. We have been warned in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants that distresses and perplexities are to come. We need to reread and study the prophecies concerning the times in which we are living. It is a frightening age to those who know not God’s promises, but to those who are informed and have faith in God it is a day of promise and opportunity, a great age in which to be alive. We should deem it a privilege to be co-workers with God in bringing about his purposes among the peoples of the earth.

In Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3 we read:

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.

The promises of God are always sure, but conditional. “I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.”—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3.

What We Should and Should not Fear

The Saints should not fear the things that are coming upon the earth. We should spend our energies in building conditions of righteousness and not deplete them in fearful, frustrated living. The Lord spoke to his people in 1831: “. . . if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear” (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6). Disobedience to God’s commandments is the thing we need to fear. A reviewing and reevaluation of church membership will help us tremendously. This is not just another church; it is God’s church restored in these latter days with all its gifts and blessings. Our membership should be the most important thing in our lives. The Lord has told us that we “have treated lightly” the things we have received (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8).

We need to fear breaking the covenant we made with God in baptism, and breaking the renewed covenant in Communion.

We need to fear breaking the command to teach our children to walk in the ways of “light and truth.” We are losing too many of our natural increase from active membership to the church, because we have broken the command to teach and instruct our children.

We should fear breaking the marriage covenant. We have not sufficiently kept the command to love and warn our neighbor. These and other commands which we have failed to heed are the things we need to fear—not the material and physical insecurities and disasters.

Spiritual insecurity is the greatest danger we face. Family morale cannot be on a high level unless each member is obedient to the commandments of God. Jesus said, “If ye love me keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter that he may abide with you forever.” With God’s spirit we have no need to fear.

Trouble Inescapable

We know that trouble is inescapable; it is no respecter of social status. There is no sharp line between rich and poor. It comes to all of us. Jesus knew that trouble, pain, and suffering were in the very nature of life and could not be escaped or avoided. He said, “In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.”—John 16: 33.

None of us will ever be called upon to suffer as he suffered, and there could be no greater authority than Christ to prescribe for the ills of the world. He knew what it was to be homeless, to have friends fail him, to be beaten, scourged, spat upon, hated, and finally to suffer death on the cross. There can be no peace apart from Christ. He is the only solution for the world’s ills. Before ascending to his Father he left these encouraging words for us: “Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.”—John 14: 27.

The peace promised by Jesus, when experienced, brings with it courage and confidence. It helps us to go forward with an abiding and steadfast faith. It fills us with love and hope. It helps us to forget our fears and centers our faith not in ourselves, but in God and Christ who offer peace the world cannot give. That is the kind of inner peace and faith we have to convey to the hearts of our children if they are to stand steadfast during these times of crisis.

Developing Courage

It will take courageous personalities to face future conditions. Are we doing all we can to help our children be strong and brave? I think we are inclined to protect and shelter our children too much. We are all guilty of it in one form or another. We want them to escape the hardships, privations, and struggles that made many of their forebears the outstanding men and women they were. We sacrifice to give them very early in life the material comforts that have taken us years to acquire. We overindulge our children and in so doing deprive them of what it takes to build strong personalities. “An oak needs sunshine but grows strong by wrestling with storms.” The same principle holds true in the lives of growing people.

Sharing Joys and Trials

Family morale will be on a high level when children have a genuine part in sharing the joys, cares, hardships and sorrows of the family. They are not helped by being shielded from the unpleasant. Children are more sympathetic with the needs of the family if taken into confidence. It is good for them to learn, to a limited degree, that life is not always easy, that reverses and hard knocks are a part of life and often an asset.

Face Value

Of all the things you wear, your expression is the most important. The next time you catch a glimpse of yourself in a store window or a counter mirror, skip the glance at your hat angle and check up on the expression just below. Then decide if it isn’t worth a little time and effort to exchange that look of grim determination for something a little more appealing.

—Janet Lane in Collier's

Faith to Obey

In building family morale we must have faith in God. We must believe that whatever may come, “all things work together for good to those who love and serve him.” With faith there must be obedience. When the Lord commanded Nephi and his brothers to go and get the plates from Laban, and his brothers refused after losing their gold and silver and narrowly escaping with their lives, Nephi said to his father, “I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them” (Nephi 1: 65). Wonderful things will happen in our families and the church when we can say with Job of old, “Though he slay me yet will I trust him.”

Faith in God and obedience bring strength, power, and confidence to the family.

Love and Security

Family morale grows where there is love. “Perfect love casteth out all fear.” Love is the foundation of security. If we would reach the fullest happiness and give of our best in service, two essential elements in the lives of all of us—from the baby in the crib to the oldest member in the family—are to be loved and to feel wanted.

Babies who are surrounded with the most modern hygienic equipment and deprived of affection and love will not thrive as well as those in less hygienic homes who are given love and attention. To grow normally, children must feel secure in the love of those who are responsible for their welfare; they need to have a sense of belonging. In this they are not unlike older people. A satisfied gleam will come into the eye of even the aged parent if asked to do some mending, bake a pie, care for the baby, do some gardening, or take some other minor responsibility in the home. He or she will feel a part of the home—a sense of belonging.

It was found during the war days in England that children who remained with their parents suffered less physically and emotionally than those who were sent away to the country to escape the bombings.

Were You Robbed?

By James Everett

Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel. (which, being interpreted, is, God with us.)—Matthew 2: 6.

THE ONLY TRUE REVELATION of the integrity and personality of God comes through the Son, whose purpose it was to bring to men an understanding of the beauty, interest, and warmth of the Father's love. It was the event executed after centuries of recorded preparation and in eternity conceived that gave to men a God of personality and reason in the place of the impersonal and sometimes evil demiurge that they believed existed prior to this event. Without this revelation, the highest form of order known to men who attempted to comprehend was the secondary creations of nature—the trees, rocks, stars, wind, and rain. It was not strange for men in their ignorance to turn repeatedly to the worshiping at the altars of various gods, for nowhere was there a tangible evidence of a consistency and integration in the physical and moral universe. Contrary to the opinion of some, nature without the revelation of the Christ only served to obscure God and reduce man to a common beast among beasts, and soon he was worshiping the greatest physical phenomenon or the humanity of which he himself was equal.

This was the setting when the angels bore the glad tidings of "God with us," and the earth was hushed in expectancy of the flood of goodness that God was ushering in. However, men seemingly weren't ready to sublimate their humanity for the divinity that was shared with them, and many of those who had the ability to see were content only to stare. Even the Christ recognized his adversaries; at various times he rebuked them for their emphasis on earthly things and their failure to understand spiritual things. His ringing rebuke, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign," should be sufficient for us to realize that it is not meet for us to limit ourselves to the demonstrative powers of the finite to comprehend the infinite. Christ is the infinite mediator through which all men may come closer to seeing the Father. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." The celebration of the birth of Christ is the one time of the year for all of us to lend an attentive ear and a responsive mind to the comprehension of the Father through the gift of the Son and not be robbed of this glorious opportunity by the things of the world.

WE HAVE MADE this Christmas season a part of history, and now we should begin to analyze it for the interpretation of the present and an intelligent approach to the future. It is legitimate to ask ourselves to what extent we have let Christ enter into our lives through this celebration. Has the season just past been conducive to a higher moral and ethical comprehension and activation on our part toward God and our fellow-men? Was there actually any Christ in our Christmas, or was it the commercialized worship of this "vain world's golden stores"? Did the Christmas tree echo Christ or Santa Claus, a creation of man or God? Were our Christmas cards indicative of Christians, or were they reflective of the tawdry and cheap farce created from a civil holiday for the benefit of greedy men? These are not questions of rebuke or personal criticism; they are intended only as criteria that we might challenge ourselves as to our ability to "be in the world but not of the world."

Our only true calling is to be a light to the world, and if we fail in this, then another must be called upon to take our place. We must be aware of the insidious desire of evil powers to so embellish Christmas with humanity that it obscures Christ. If we have fallen short of bringing our life closer to Christ this Christmas season let us resolve in the New Year to act as Christians worshiping Christ on our religious holidays.

Our Little Gods of Appeasement

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE for any conscientious Latter Day Saint not to sense to some degree the growing public sentiment for a return to the values of Christian living as taught by Christ. Daily our newspapers carry heartbreaking stories of the fatality of man in an atheistic world. A plea is earnestly being made for Christ's birth to again become the center of Christmas. Churches as a whole have sensed their responsibility, and new houses of worship are being opened on every hand to compete in the race to gain human souls. Gradually we are again returning to the revival type of service; and as in the days of the early Saints, religion must meet the test of survival or defeat.

Can we soberly and open-mindedly analyze our present social turmoil and see where we have fallen short of our responsibilities? It is all too apparent that man, while professing Christianity, has, over the years of prosperity, created his own little gods of appeasement to fit into his personal temple. Worship for the masses has become a very comfortable and satisfying experience, to be entered into quietly at the most convenient and shortest possible time. One may accept or reject it.

May we not frankly confess that perhaps all too often we have allowed these "Little Gods" to be comfortably seated in our own temples. While we profess to be the Saints of the most high God, are we actually practicing what we preach? Let us turn to the example of the life of Christ. Very little is known of his early development; in all probability the full meaning of his three short years of ministry cannot fully be appreciated today.

He was about his Father's business. He loved those who hated him. He rejected evil doings, and called every man to follow him. He preached by the sea and on the mountaintops. He feasted in love, patience, understanding, and the glory of God—yet fasted alone in Gethsemane. All lives were precious in his sight. What a contrast to the "accepted values" of this generation. Today the value of a human life has been diminished to almost nil. As long as I am getting what I want, no matter how corrupt or foul my means, the slaughter of literally millions is of no concern—it's good enough for them! Our little god of indifference must sit high in the kingdom of evil!

We as a people can no longer afford to appease our souls. A dying world cries for an example of righteous living. Whether we wish to move forward and demonstrate the workability of the kingdom is up to each of us. However, an immovable power is forcing us to evaluate our goals and objectives. Scientists alone are so close to understanding the laws of the universe that they must acknowledge the workmanship of an Almighty Being. By study, fasting, prayer, and sacrifice, as true Saints we must reflect our way of life in word, thought, and act. We must practice the principles of Zion whether or not we ever attain it. What does it matter if we worship in a barn or a temple, with black or with white? The Lord is our God; each soul is precious in his sight. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Our purpose is to evangelize the world and establish Zion.

Our bluff has been called. Do we mean business?

Gracias a Dios

By Nellie Mae Lindsay

DO WE REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS show our gratitude to our Heavenly Father as often as we should? Do we say thanks to our God even as often as other peoples do?

Time after time as I listened to the conversation of the Mexican people I would hear them use the expression, "Gracias a Dios," at the end of their sentences. As I listened and became more proficient in translating their conversations, I found that they were saying, "Thanks be to God," often throughout the day in their conversation. It was as natural for them to use this expression of thanking God for common blessings as it was for them to say, "buenos dias" or "buenos noches." When people approach each other on the street the conversation almost always goes like this: "Coma esta ud?" (How are you?) "Muy bien, gracias a Dios." (Very well, thanks be to God). Always they murmur these reverent words—thanking God for their well-being or health. If someone has been ill in the family and that person is asked for, Mexicans will say he is much better, gracias a Dios.

Often they used a similar expression as they spoke with me. If someone were planning to come to my home the following day, he would leave with these words, "Manana te veo, con el favor de Dios." (Tomorrow I hope to see you, with the favor or help of God.)

I became interested in finding other expressions commonly used by these people that showed how much emphasis they placed on thanking God for his help and watch care over them. As I listened to their conversations and read their literature I found many more common expressions of their gratitude to God. Some of these are used in the interior of Mexico, and one authority on the history of the Mexican people said that several of these expressions were handed down from the ancient Indians—the Lamanites. Here are a few of the expressions they use in everyday conversation:

"Con ayuda de Dios" (With the help of God). This expression is used very commonly as they tell of something they are going to do.

"Dios lo bendiga" (God bless you). This expression is used often as a person is leaving.

"Vaya con Dios" (Go with God, or go with the blessing of God). Mexicans are careful always to "ask God" to go with their friends and protect them on their trip.

As I continue to associate with these people, I am acquiring many of their customs and habits. One of the habits which I will ever be grateful to them for is teaching me to murmur "gracias a Dios" throughout the day as I give thanks to God for all the small things I would otherwise forget to thank him for.

Rightly does Christian doctrine emphasize that God's ownership is to be acknowledged by regular contributions to him from the income, and such acknowledgment is to be made in proportion to God's generosity to the individual. Having acknowledged God's title to his income by a gift to God, a Christian will spend for his own needs and those of his dependents as well as of dependents who, like poor Lazarus, have been laid at his door.

This is the serious and responsible view a Christian is to take of money. Viewing himself as God's partner, he will avoid every wrong and forcible mode of acquiring funds, and in spending them he will exercise caution to qualify as a good administrator of God's property.

He will test his motives and purposes for their Christian character.

When gambling is viewed against this Christian economic backdrop, a number of misgivings present themselves at once to the Christian conscience. Is it Christian stewardship to risk God's property? Is it good stewardship to chance God's money on risks that are arbitrarily created? Is it Christian thinking to emphasize the element of "luck" that obtains in gambling or the chance to win? Is it Christian to take without compensation money that God has allotted to a fellow-man? Is the gambling motive—the getting of quick and easy money—consonant with God's purpose for a Christian?

The answer on all counts is "No."

OF IMPORTANCE to a Christian are also the reasons behind state laws. Gambling promotes pauperism, hoodlumism, the breakup of homes, corruption, idleness, demoralization. Gambling is economically bad and antisocial.

Can a Christian contribute to this state of affairs?

And is not a Christian conscience-bound to obey the laws of the state when these laws do not militate against a divine command?

Attempts are many to justify the habit of gambling, to find or rationalize some excuse for it.

When Governor Youngdahl of Minnesota waged his successful campaign against gambling, the gambling interests published the statement: "Attention, Governor Youngdahl! If nobody were willing to gamble, nobody would buy a farm or plant a crop, start a new business, take a new job, get married, raise a family, or vote. . . ."

Life, to be sure, is full of risks. But gambling differs radically from the risks inherent in all enterprise in that gambling risks are artificially rigged against the participant.

The risks of enterprise are the normal risks of life, which are inducements for Christians to put their trust in God and to pray for his divine protection and blessing. A Christian takes the risks of life to God in prayer and asks His benediction upon a venture on condition that it may serve His glory and the welfare of man. Gambling does not invite prayer.

JUSTIFICATION FOR GAMBLING is frequently attempted by an appeal to the fact that all (?) kinds of churches sponsor gambling, particularly church bingo games. Because it is sponsored by the church, it is called "good" gambling.

No more shameful a chapter can be found in American church life than that certain churches, in contradiction to the law of the land, contribute to the demoralizing carnival of gambling by sponsoring bingo games. And if bingo, why not poker, dice, roulette, and every other form of gambling? In principle they are the same.

The church is to be supported by gifts. The scriptural command is to give. Behind the gift to the church stands God, who is the real recipient of our church giving. Church giving is to be from a pure motive—the motive of gratitude—and not from a motive of covetousness, which is the root motive of gambling.

BUT IF GAMBLING is for a good purpose, may a Christian not "take a chance" on an automobile or a house? This is the old Jesuit doctrine that "the end justifies the means," a doctrine that will not stand up in a secular court, much less in the divine court.

Motives come before purposes, and the motive of gambling is covetousness. "Thou shalt not covet" is the twice-given command of God, and the best purpose in the world cannot justify its transgression.

The motive of covetousness in gambling may be mixed with other motives but is always present. The craving for excitement is strong in a gambler's breast and causes gambling to become a craze. Sometimes the competitive instinct is strong in a gambler, and he feels a superiority of judgment when he wins.

Justification for gambling is sought in the excuse that nobody is forced to gamble and that the loser stakes his money from a free choice. Agreement in an evil act does not make it less evil. Gambling is stealing by agreement, as dueling is murder by agreement.

May a person gamble for recreation and pleasure so long as the sums he wagers are such as he can afford to lose? The fact that a person can afford to lose does not justify gambling. More important is the consideration whether he can afford to win the money that others are not at liberty to lose.

To contend that gambling is right for the rich and wrong for the poor is to establish a double standard of morality. To agree to the proposition that an action is right or wrong, depending on whether a person can afford to take the consequences, is to agree to an unchristian proposition. If gambling is wrong for the poor, it is wrong for the rich.

Against the spirit of our times, the feverish search for a "lucky break," the lust of gain, the hard egoism that seeks personal advancement at the rude expense of others, let Christians practice the art of Christian stewardship and the contentment that is the fruit of abundant trust in God.

Challenges

Too often the opportunities for the improvement of our social structure have been lost, not because we did not know how, but because no one really wanted to make them effective. In finance, for example, there are techniques which are as able to rebuild and rehouse the United States as they are to equip an army. They have not been used primarily because there was no compelling desire to use them.—Adolf A. Berle, Jr.

Introducing

MARY WATTS JOWETT—I was born in Mapleton, Iowa, November 4, 1928. Accompanying me was my twin brother, Jack, now of Independence, Missouri. My early childhood was spent in Pisgah, Iowa, where I became a member of the church at the age of eight.

In 1941 my family moved to Lamoni, Iowa, where my parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Watts and younger brother, Bob, still reside. I attended Lamoni High School graduating in 1946. That fall I entered Graceland College, graduating with the class of '48. After graduation I came to Washington, D. C., where for the past three and a half years I have been employed in the office of Senator Milton R. Young of North Dakota.

In July of 1950 I was married to George Jowett, formerly of Dearborn, Michigan, now a member of the U. S. Navy Medical Corps at the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland.

Our home is in the District of Columbia where we are also active in the branch here.

P.S.

* SO SORRY

Sometimes people protest against things they find here. It may be a genuine boner—big, raucous, and detestable. Or it may be some whimsical phrase, innocently intended, a flight of fancy or a bit of local color taken seriously, which was never intended. Of course we regret to offend. . . . It has always seemed to us that life could not be endured without the healing relief of laughter, the sparkling sunlight of fun shining through the drab clouds of fear and worry, grief and pain. . . . Letters of protest make us wonder: Does this kind of column have a place in a publication like ours? They would exile us outside the walls of the holy city, make us enemies of the righteous, and consign us to the realms of "outer darkness." . . . We cannot explain these things, because they can never be understood without a sense of humor. A person born without one is afflicted, like being tone deaf or color blind. Would that some skilled surgeon would discover an operation by which a sense of humor could be installed, like a heater or a new radio in an old car. . . . By the way, what year and model number is your mind?

* EXTREMES

In a little job of indexing recently done, it was noted that "Heaven" was next to "Hell."

We reflected that no matter which one you are in, the other isn't far away. If you are in a heaven of happiness, a mistake or loss can throw you down into the Other Place. If you are in misery, a spiritual blessing can lift you up out of it.

* TOBACCO

The Word of Wisdom says, "Tobacco is . . . an herb . . . for all sick cattle."

How many of them one sees everywhere these days!

* FOR THE YOUNG IN HEART

You will appreciate the greeting sent to Independence teachers and principals by L. G. Keith, Superintendent of Schools: "Christmas is a time for devotions, meditation, counting blessings, tender thoughts, and remembering old friends. Family ties are never closer than at Christmas. The windows of the heart are open wide to let out sunshine. . . . We who teach are especially fortunate at Christmas. We are close to Santa Claus land and jingle bells, and we listen to what happens on the housetop and down through the chimney. We never outgrow the magic and sparkle of the children's finest hour. We prolong this divine truth as we teach young hearts that really it is more blessed to give than to receive."

There's something for all the year in relation to our children. Let's never outgrow the child's capacity for wonder and delight in the adventure of living and discovering the beauty of the world.

* SMILES

Smiles—if they are friendly and sincere—are about the most contagious things in the world. We're always catching them from other people, or giving them to somebody.

STORIES THAT LIVE

Children, parents, and teachers will welcome this book of sixty-two inspirational stories. They are all based on true incidents taken from the lives of church members.

These stories were selected as some of the best published in Zion's Hope or Stepping Stones. They are among the favorites which will bear repeating over and over. Children will enjoy reading them at home. They can be used in the family worship, and children's leaders in the church school will find helpful story material in them.

APPOINTEE INSTITUTE HELD

Eighteen new appointees attended the institute in Independence from December 28-January 8. The men attending and their respective assignments were Richard Andersen, Southern Ohio; Kenneth Byrn, Independence; Norman Cox, Northeastern Missouri; Robert Flanders, Detroit, Michigan; Lee Hart, Independence; Bennett Berridge, Western Oklahoma and Eastern Colorado; Harry Black, St. Joseph and Far West Stake; Ralph Bobbitt, Spring River District, Springfield, Missouri; Calvin French, Rich Hill, Missouri; Donald Landon, Northwest, U.S.; Stanley Pfohl, Southern Michigan; Clinton Saxton, Southern New England; Wayne Simmons, Spanish-speaking people; Delbert Smith, Minnesota; Robert Turner, Nebraska; Alan Tyree, Kaw Valley; Clair Weldon, Central Missouri; and Jack Wight, Texas and Southwest. Speakers and instructors at the institute included W. Wallace Smith, Arthur Oakman, Reed Holmes, Maurice Draper, George Mesley, D. Blair Jensen, Dr. Vance Link, Henry Livingston, G. L. DeLapp, Walter Johnson, F. Carl Mesle, and Charles Neff. Present at the concluding fellowship service were Israel A. Smith, F. Henry Edwards, and D. T. Williams.

A well-rounded study program, also included periods of planned recreation and tours of the Herald House, Social Service Center, Rest Haven, and the Sanitarium.

APOSTLE DRAPER IN THE EAST

Apostle Maurice L. Draper attended the Kirtland women's institute December 1 and 2. Guest speaker at the institute was Sister Glen H. Johnson. Brother Draper and Sister Johnson taught classes and discussed with the group the relationship of the women's department to the prophetic, apostolic, and teaching ministry of the church. Sister Johnson also related experiences she had in the European mission from which she recently returned with her husband, Seventy Glen H. Johnson, and their daughter, Glenda.

The following week end Brother Draper and President Israel A. Smith attended the West Virginia District anniversary services held at the Parkersburg and Goose Creek church. The church, Brother Draper reports, was crowded to capacity for the anniversary service.

The next week Apostle Draper preached a series at the Northeast Mission in Philadelphia, though the meetings were greatly handicapped by one of the worst storms that region has ever known. Brother Draper returned home for Christmas and the appointee's institute.

WINS CONTEST

Ethel Hart of the Liberty Street congregation of the Center Stake won $100 in an essay contest held in Independence. The money was to be given to the church of her choice and she donated it to the Liberty Street building fund. She is the daughter of Elmer Hart, retired employee of the Herald House.

"MESSIAH" NEWS

The Radio and Music Department announced that letters and telegrams commending the performance of "The Messiah" are still coming in. Franklyn Weddle and Arthur Rock announce that the department would still like to receive letters from listeners as they will prove helpful in making out reports regarding the broadcast.

Shirley Butler

The assistant director of nursing services is here pictured in conversation with one of the registered nurses whom she has to call in each day to work on a special duty case. The smile was not put on for the photographer's benefit, as Miss Butler likes her work and the smile comes naturally and easily as she carries on her duties of arranging nursing services. Her office is in the south end of the classroom on the first floor. In addition to her duties as director of services, she is a sociology instructor in the school of nursing.

Miss Butler was born and baptized at Inman, Nebraska. After high school graduation in 1927 she entered training and received her R.N. from the San in 1930. She did advanced work at the Universities of Michigan, Missouri, and Kansas City. She had three years private duty nursing, one year as a dental assistant, and was employed nine years as a public school nurse in the Kansas City, Missouri, public schools. She came back to the Sanitarium in 1943 in her present position.

Miss Butler likes her work and takes it seriously. She has some duties seven days out of each week, including several evenings each month when her girls need her. Such devotion must have its own rewards. She is a member of the American Nursing Association, the Missouri Nursing Association, the International Council of Nurses, the National League of Nursing Education, and the Jackson County Civilian Defense Council.

What Do You Think God Is Like?

"The Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations."

—Psalm 100: 5.

THE LITTLE GATHERING in one of the offices was entirely unplanned. At the rest period people drifted in and began to talk. A few minutes later we would be returning to our tasks.

"A man was talking about God in prayer meeting last night," one of our number said, "and now I am wondering what He is really like. This man gave us the idea that God is just waiting for people to do something wrong so he can punish them. He made God seem mean and tricky. I don't believe I could love that kind of God. I don't think he is that kind, either." She was silent a moment, then said, "Tell me. Just how do you think of God?"

IT IS DIFFICULT to try to tell people about God when one knows so little about him. . . . Not that ignorance stops some people. Let them read a few Scriptures, and they think they know everything there is to be known. They will argue from Dan to Beersheba and back again, all without the slightest experience. But if they really knew anything about him they would get down on their knees and pray.

WOULD YOU TRY to explain God? Would you really dare? We, with our pretensions, do not know how small we are. We try to "measure infinity with a yardstick." We inhabit a little island of knowledge in a sea of mystery unknown. We match our ignorance against God's omniscience. We are like children—little children—playing on the beach, with no notion of the thousands of miles of water that lie between us and some distant shore.

Children! . . . The young child does not understand the strong but invisible tie that unites his parents. He knows nothing of the problems of the home, nor of the sacrifices that are made for him.

The child knows one thing, however, very well. He knows that his mother and father love him. He reaches his little hand up to touch his father's strong fingers and be led by them. He is happy when his mother hugs him and kisses him. It is enough, for that stage of his life, to know that they love him.

That is about how much we know concerning God.

THE SCRIPTURES tell us something about God. But they were written by people like ourselves. How much did they know?

Some represent the Heavenly Father as a "God of wrath and vengeance." It is true that he forbids us to worship false gods, but that is for our protection. For that reason he is a "jealous" God. And when people are wicked, naturally, he is hurt. Could he tolerate an evil guiltiness that brings suffering to his other children?

But the Scriptures tell us that God has much more than "wrath and vengeance" to offer us. He is a source of strength (II Samuel 22: 33). He is a refuge in trouble (Psalm 46: 1). He is a helper (Psalm 54: 4). He is faithful (I Corinthians 1: 9). He is true (II Corinthians 1: 18). He is "light" (I John 1: 5). He is "love" (I John 4: 8).

In our own latter-day Scriptures, we have a statement of remarkable clarity and strength: "There is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God." —Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

Modern Christians prefer to believe in the "God of love" who is described in the "golden text" of John 3: 16:

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Read the three Epistles of John, and you will find them filled with expressions of the love of God. And Jesus himself proclaimed the "Law of Love" (Matthew 22: 36-39). These should give us some idea, as far as human beings are able to comprehend, of what God is like.

THINK OF GOD in this way, if you can: When a doctor has a sick child brought to him for treatment, he does not think of punishing it for any wrong, real or imaginary, that the little one may have done. Gently he makes his examination. In his mind is the question, "What does this child need to make him well and strong again?" Then the doctor makes a diagnosis, prescribes medicine, and outlines treatment to bring about recovery. Is not this the greatest and most noble of attitudes of a personality of informed intelligence and dedicated purpose, toward a small, immature person? Is this activity not the finest thing that the highest of human civilizations can produce?

In these same terms, let us think of God. He has been called the "Great Physician." He is concerned with our spiritual health. When a sick soul—ignorant, immature, and hurt—is brought to him, is he concerned with punishment? Is God any less kind, any less loving than an earthly physician? We can imagine him asking, "What does this soul need to make it well and strong?" In his infinite wisdom he knows all things and prescribes well. His love and kindness are very great.

Is it hard to believe in this kind of Heavenly Father? We are little children. We know nothing, except the Divine Love. L. J. L.

March 30 - April 6, Inclusive

The Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during General Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Persons arriving for Conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence. Therefore, those who desire the Committee to make arrangements for rooms should complete the blank below at the earliest possible moment and mail to The General Conference Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

In past years a large number of people have asked that the Housing Committee secure facilities for them and then at the last minute have made other arrangements and failed to keep their appointments. In many cases the hostess involved had made special preparation and had gone to additional expense. We ask that you please do not ask for housing unless you are reasonably certain that you can meet the responsibility your request entails.

Boy Scout Sunday

Boy Scout Sunday is being observed nationally on Sunday, February 10, this year. On that day Cubs and Scouts all over the nation are encouraged to attend their own churches in uniform, where it is expected that some recognition will be accorded them both for their Scouting accomplishments and for their religious participation. The theme of the week and year is one appropriate to the church, "Forward on Liberty's Team."

A few churches will be observing Scout Sunday on February 3, so either date may be used and recognition be given in either the morning or evening service. In order to encourage our Scouts and their friends in this, the official boy's work program of the church, as well as in their general religious life it is recommended that Scout Sunday be observed in our local congregations wherever there are members in Boy Scouting.

Program suggestions will be given in next week's Herald.

Consider Your Ways

By Wayne E. Simmons

Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste? Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord. Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of Hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man to his own house.

—Haggai 1: 2-9

CONCERNED ABOUT THE WELFARE of mankind, God has always sought to bring about peace, plenty, and security of living for his children, whether in the day of Haggai, 2,500 years ago, or now. He has always offered a plan for more abundant living, but he has never prevented man from choosing his own way of life. All too frequently man has chosen for himself and has paid bitter penalties. The following scriptural admonitions show our Heavenly Parent's concern that man choose wisely:

And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.—Jeremiah 21: 8.

The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish.—Psalm 1: 6.

There is a way which seemeth right unto man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.—Proverbs 14: 12.

What a kinship we should feel with the people of Haggai's day! The picturesque statement, "He who earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes," fitly describes one of our great modern problems. "Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little" describes our despair of planning to meet our living expenses with a shrinking dollar. It would seem certain that Haggai's people knew the evils of inflation, as well as we.

Man's way of bringing prosperity to the United States and its people may indeed have tragic consequences. Even here in America, "the land of plenty," we who have so much of good food, clothing, wages, and housing are collectively paying a high price for our way of living. The fact is that we "have not enough," in the words of Haggai, to pay as we go. We are like the prodigal son, living up our inheritance or depleting resources which rightfully belong to a future world. As a nation, we are spending lavishly, and "we have not enough." The following record of national debts is both a record of inflation and of profligacy:

National indebtedness:

The interest on our present national indebtedness is at present 5.6 billion dollars annually. Our trend of indebtedness is doubly frightening when we learn that Congress voted to spend, in 1951, six billion dollars more than the Treasury Department can collect in national revenue. James Byrnes stated in a recent speech that if all salaries in the United States in excess of 10,000 dollars were confiscated by the Bureau of Internal Revenue and all the money thus derived should be placed against this year's deficit, the amount thus obtained would not retire more than two and one half billion of the present deficit. Already taxes take a large part of every worker's income. The average wage earner gives up 25 to 30 per cent of his income to taxes; from the higher wage earner's income, the government extracts 80 to 90 per cent. To stem the tide of indebtedness, the government after the Second World War raised tax requirements to the point where, as early as 1948, the tax burden on incomes alone was equal to all the money paid in wages to all persons working in all United States factories and mines. At present the government is making direct monetary support of 17 million people—one out of every nine. If the trend of our national spending is unchecked, disaster must surely come in its train.

IN THE LIGHT of this data, and in the words of Haggai, we may apply also, as a modern text, the admonition, "Ye have sown much, and bring in little." Consider the sowing of our resources in the Second World War. Most recent estimates show that the astronomical sum of three trillion dollars was sown to the cause of bloodshed and destruction in Europe and Asia. Of this, a great proportion was contributed by the United States for the avowed purpose of bringing peace. Three trillion dollars—try to conceive that amount! It is enough to build a new home for every family on the face of the earth! As in the legend recorded by Homer, where Jason sowed dragon's teeth only to have them spring up into fighting men with the lust to kill, so our sowing has not brought peace, even with the best intentions in our spending. Its harvest is already indicated in the sober planning of this nation to defend its people against the greatest wars of all time. Now we tremble in the shadow of more, vast war-making preparations, as nations build plans to hurl atomic missiles, germ bombs, hydrogen bombs, or whatever may kill, rend, and obliterate.

How little the world has profited from the expenditure of three trillion dollars and the millions upon millions of lives engulfed in destruction! So many ruined cities and broken homes, crippled soldiers, and stunted children must be counted in the harvest. Josef Brozer, research worker of the University of Minneapolis, states that twenty million people paid the price of semistarvation during the recent war, with one million dead as a direct result. These were civilians, not soldiers, and they suffered literally the awful price of knowing what it is to drink and not be filled, to eat and not have enough. Let us consider them as we consider our ways.

YET, LEST WE COME TO feel that our government is motivated by malice and desire to destroy, let us review other fields of sowing in recent years. Vast sums of money are being spent in such well-intentioned programs as the Marshall Plan, the European Recovery Program, the Point Four Program—all manifestations of good will that attest to the United States' desire to assist in alleviating the ills of the world. The sowing of economic "know-how," industrial machinery, flour, and other hundreds of requirements for strengthening neighbor nations certainly reflects the Spirit of the Master in practical channels to a needy world. What nation, before or at any time in world history, has entered a war not of its own making, to spend billions of dollars to end aggression, then other billions to lift the fallen aggressors and restore them to normalcy? America has already spent more than two billion dollars in each of the two aggressor nations of the recent war, Germany and Japan, toward their restoration. No, the spirit of such a nation is not inclined toward malice. It simply has not found God's program or way of eliminating the problems which beset the nations. To use a homely illustration, man's way is like that of the home-owner who spends all his money for pots and pans to catch the water leaking through the holes in his roof instead of repairing the roof. And too often the spiritual counsel that this nation has received, with regard to ending poverty and armed aggression, is just as impractical. Our advocates of the Christian religion have often petitioned Congress to pray for peace (a worthy suggestion if it is not just a passive substitute for building for it). The story of the home-owner whose roof leaks can be applied to this also. Shall he sit down and pray for the rain to stop, or shall he fix the roof? Let us pray for God's help in correcting our problems, but let us also face the realities in which God has always left it up to man to implement and accomplish the things God suggests for him to do.

Some may say, "All this talk of government spending has little to do with me. I am not sowing lavishly in infertile fields, nor am I in a position to correct the problems of such spending." However, lest we retire from the painful task of considering our ways, before we have found the root of our difficulties, let us examine our own spending.

Robert Hartman, of the faculty of Ohio State College, estimates that the American people spent in direct living expenditures, exclusive of taxes for government, approximately 100 billion dollars in 1950. This amount does not include costs of housing or investment in cars or furniture, but in money spent for very personal human wants and needs. Among the heaviest expenditures listed, are these:

- 30 billion dollars for groceries
- 12 billion dollars in bars and restaurants
- 10 billion dollars for gasoline, car maintenance, transportation
- 4 billion dollars for clothing
- 3 billion dollars for cigarettes
- 1.2 billion dollars for jewelry
- 1.2 billion dollars for movies, commercial amusements.

And in contrast, 350 million dollars, spent for support of churches.

Compare the amount spent for food, for clothing, or even for cigarettes and movies, with the amount we spend in supporting the cause of the Prince of Peace. Two hundred fifty-eight different Christian church denominations, preaching and ministering in the name of Jesus Christ, receive an average of one third of 1 per cent of our money. Does not this indicate that man has little faith in churches to accomplish anything toward the building of world peace and brotherhood of man? Consider our ways! We pledged 71 billion dollars in 1951 to carry on armed strife in Korea and to build national defense against aggression, yet we spent only 350 million dollars for those institutions that preach Christ.

JESUS WARNED HIS DISCIPLES of the evils of trusting in both God and Mammon, stating that "no man can serve two masters." He encouraged them to put their faith, both spiritual and financial, in his program for the salvation of mankind:

Therefore take no thought saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? . . . After all these things do the Gentiles seek. Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. . . . Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 35-38.

The disciples who learned of God's kingdom and program of salvation from the lips of the Master knew that his church has a tremendous mission to accomplish. Therefore they were not content just to go to church and worship God, but they planned a militant program to promote equity on earth—not Bolshevism or Russia's communism which forcibly takes man's possessions and liberties, but a kingdom program with Jesus' expressed promise that men who shall continue in it shall know the truth and that the truth should make them free. They met together in Jerusalem, those repentant followers of Jesus, seeking the promised blessing of the Holy Spirit as their guide in building the kingdom. They had already obeyed many of the Master's injunctions: "Have faith in God . . . take my yoke upon you and learn of me . . . Pray . . . Thy kingdom come, they will be done on earth. . . . Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. . . . Whosoever forsaketh not all that he hath, the same cannot be my disciple. . . . Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And they came with one accord, and God met them there with his Spirit, which came as a mighty wind to fill the room in which they were gathered. The phenomenal nature of that occasion is not to be measured in the fact that those who were present were moved to speak in tongues and to prophesy, but that they went out in missionary endeavor to use that power to bring other men into the program. Their harvest of new fellow-workers, at the end of that day, was three thousand souls! But this is not all that developed out of their response to the power of God working among them.

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul: neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. . . . Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man as he had need.—Acts 4: 32-35.

Thus we have a glimpse of an all-too-brief period when God's way was tried upon the earth. This was not socialism or communism in which there are no actual possessors of property. These people simply did not regard the things which they possessed as their own, and they shared them as every man had need. The church served in this program to direct in the sharing, for the prices of the things that were surplus and as such, sold, were brought to the feet of those authorities of the church whom Christ had placed at the head of the program at that time.

HOW MUCH THE PRESENT WORLD needs such a program of life, and how much it needs the church of Jesus Christ with its apostles, as of old, to guide men to the way out of their present chaos! How long must man plunge headlong into conflict after conflict, subjecting himself to unspeakable miseries, while the kingdom of God way of life goes untried and virtually unknown in a so-called Christian world! In a modern world of hundreds of Christian church denominations, one has a right to ask each of them, "What is the program you have for rebuilding and regenerating society to the pattern found in the day of the apostles of old?" Are they praying, asking God to do something, or are they preaching the gospel of the kingdom, a positive program for molding men's lives into a godlike society? Do they believe that the kingdom of God is a feeling in the heart of a disciple, and no more, or are they gathering people together of like faith to accomplish through co-operation and community strength that which hitherto has been impossible for scattered Christians?

We read Isaiah's prophecy of the coming of world peace in the last days, before the coming of the Savior:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it; And many people shall go and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2: 2-4.

This prophecy of the establishment of the kingdom of God awaits a people who will help it come to pass. The members of the restored church of Jesus Christ join in the affirmation that God is now setting "his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people," and that to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has come the commission to build up the kingdom of God. To this program we solicit the aid of all believers in Christ. We realize our numerical weakness, but we have the promise of a rich store of the power of the Holy Spirit to build a new social order, even as it was promised and given in New Testament times. And we have the spiritually authorized ministry to direct the building of the kingdom, the same as then, with living apostles and prophets charged with the task of gathering men into God's program.

We invite you to consider your ways, and to investigate the kingdom plan for the salvation of the world. The Lord's house still "lieth waste," but the commandment to build it up is our challenge to go to work, to seek out his church and kingdom, to put our trust, our money, and our labors in his ways.

The Beloit, Wisconsin, Centennial

By Evan A. Fry

A LITTLE OVER one hundred years ago, the work of reorganizing and setting in order the fragments of the church which had been scattered by the death of its leaders in 1844 began with a revelation to Elder Jason W. Briggs. Elder Briggs wrote that this revelation came "while pondering in my heart the situation of the church, on the eighteenth day of November, 1851, on the prairie, about three miles northwest of Beloit, Wisconsin."

Jason W. Briggs was more than ordinarily concerned about the condition of the church. He had been baptized in 1841, at Potosi, Wisconsin, and the next year had been ordained and sent on a mission. Among the several branches which he organized were the branches at Beloit and Waukesha, Wisconsin, both in the first year after his ordination. When these two branches were less than a year old, Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed at Carthage jail, and the church was scattered from Nauvoo by persecution and by the conflicting claims of many leaders. Briggs, as presiding elder of the Beloit Branch, felt responsible for keeping that branch together and keeping it in line with the faith, laws, doctrines, and practices of the original church. First the branch rejected the claims of Brigham Young and renounced the group that accepted his leadership. Then for a time Briggs and the branch at Beloit accepted the claims of James J. Strang, and Briggs even accepted an ordination to the high priesthood in Strang's organization. But soon he became satisfied that this was not the church or the doctrine or the authority that he had once known and turned to investigate the claims of William Smith and his group. Here he found himself in agreement with Smith's teaching of lineal priesthood, and frustrated, disillusioned, sick at heart, concerned about the people who looked to him for leadership. This was the background of the prayers that resulted in the revelation of November 18, 1851, directing him what to do.

IN THIS REVELATION Jason W. Briggs was told that God had not cast off his people, nor changed his mind regarding Zion. He was told that the law which had been given to Joseph Smith should be kept. He was told that wolves had entered the flock, and that those who called themselves shepherds but who preyed on the flocks of his pastures should be judged. He was told that God still recognized and respected the law of lineage "by which the holy priesthood is transmitted in all generations, when organized into quorums." The revelation continued:

2. The second home of Jason W. Briggs, near Beloit, which he purchased in 1845. It was presumably in this house that he lived when the revelation of November 18, 1851, was given.

Therefore, let the elders whom I have ordained by the hand of my servant Joseph, or by the hand of those ordained by him, resist not this authority, nor faint in the discharge of duty, which is to preach my gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, and the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; and cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, and I will sustain them, and give them my Spirit; and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit. Behold, that which ye received as my celestial law [this evidently refers to polygamy] is not of me, but is the doctrine of Baalam. And I command you to denounce it and proclaim against it; and I will give you power, that none shall be able to withstand your words, if you rely upon me; for my Spirit shall attend you. . . . Write, write, write; write the revelation and send it unto the Saints at Palestine [William Smith's group] and at Vorec, [Strang's former headquarters] and at Waukesha, and to all places where this doctrine [polygamy] is taught as my law; and whosoever will humble themselves before me, and ask of me, shall receive of my Spirit a testimony that these words are of me. Even so. Amen.—Church History, Volume 3, pages 200, 201.

Note that the duty of the priesthood is herein made clear, that is, to "preach my gospel" as revealed in the Three Standard Books, to cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, to proclaim against the "doctrine of Baalam" (polygamy) which some had received as a "celestial law."

Then certain promises were given: that the seed of Joseph should be called to preside over the church, that the quorums with the idea of a temporary guardianship for the "seed of Joseph" which would someday be entrusted with presidency and leadership, but after the October conference of 1851, Briggs began to be dissatisfied with some other claims and suspicious of certain doctrines.

Three times he had thought he had the right leader, the right faith, the group that rightfully represented the continuation of the church he had joined in 1841. Three times he had discovered that he was wrong. Now he was perplexed,

3. The home of Hugh and Polly Briggs, father and mother of Jason W. and E. C. Briggs. The Briggs family purchased this property in 1843. The exact age of this house is not known, but it is presumed that it was in this home that the Saints met on November 24, 1851, to discuss the revelation received by Jason W. Briggs the preceding Monday. ("Church History," Volume 3, page 202.)

would assemble, that the pure in heart would gather, that Zion would be reinhabited, and that those who prayerfully sought a testimony of the truthfulness of the revelation should receive it. Time has fully vindicated this prophecy and the one through whom it was given, who was acting as the highest authority and presiding officer of a branch, the members of which looked to him for leadership and spiritual guidance. As such a leader, holding Melchisedec priesthood, he was entitled under the law to divine guidance and direction for his group.

ON SUNDAY, November 18, 1951, the branch at Beloit celebrated the centennial of this revelation. Concerning that event, Sister Alma May Brookover, Wisconsin District Historian, has written as follows in a letter to President Israel A. Smith:

Every seat in the church was filled for the first service which began at 9:00 a.m. A peaceful, calm feeling prevailed throughout the day, and at times the Spirit of God was very evident. All who were present could not help feeling that God was pleased with the meeting. The prayer service, with Evangelist H. A. Wasson in charge, was outstanding. Many prayers and testimonies were given, and all expressed thanks to God for the revelation given to Brother Briggs and for his faith and courage and that of the Saints here. The desire was frequently expressed that present members would have the faith and courage to continue to do the task here.

4. Home of Henry Pease, one of the leaders in the Reorganization and uncle of Henry C. Stebbins.

Elder Frank Mussell brought the sermon at eleven. His theme was "The First Psalm." He reminded his listeners that Jason Briggs had refused to walk in the counsel of the ungodly and advised them to do likewise. Brother Mussell gave the same counsel, pleading with the branch to complete the task begun here a century ago.

Elder Lester O. Wildermuth talked at two p.m., speaking on "The Restoration and Lineage." His sister, Florence Andes, was the last speaker of the day. She reminded those present of the rich heritage that was theirs. She spoke concerning the history of the Wildermuths a century ago, and completed her talk with a poem she composed while here.

Beloit Branch is also planning to observe the centennial of the first conference of the Reorganization, which was held June 12 and 13, 1852.

IN THIS FIRST CONFERENCE, Beloit Branch was joined by Yellowstone Branch, Waukesha Branch, Jeffersonville (Illinois) Branch, and others—most of them organized prior to the death of the Martyrs and continuing to function as branches. The Yellowstone, Wisconsin, group was organized by Zenas H. Gurley and Hiram P. Brown in 1850, and was presided over by Elder Gurley. In the fall of 1851, at about the same time that Briggs was becoming concerned about the leadership of the church and some of the doctrines of Strang and others, Gurley also made the condition of the church a matter of earnest prayer. One Sunday evening in the fall of 1851, after he had preached to his congregation, he found his mind drawn to the prophecy of the last days found in Isaiah 2: 2, 3.

Under the influence of the Spirit he surveyed in his mind's eye the work of Strang and his Beaver Island colony. The voice of the Spirit said, "Can this ever affect this great work?" He answered, "No, Lord." The voice then said, "Rise up, cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work."

Several weeks afterwards, while he was reading Doctrine and Covenants 85:18, the same admonition was repeated: "Rise up, and cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work."

Gurley's associates in the branch—with the notable exception of Reuben Newkirk—at first shunned him as an apostate, since they had been taught to believe that Strang was Joseph's successor. Soon after the Beloit Branch had accepted Briggs' revelation, David Powell brought a copy of it to Elder Gurley

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

J. A. Gunsolley

PART IX

Sunday Basket Dinners

It was the practice of the people in the South to have picnic dinners on the Sundays they were visited by missionaries or ministers of the church from other parts of the country. Long tables were built near the church in the shade of the trees. After the eleven o'clock service baskets were unpacked and their contents spread upon the tables in generous quantities. When the food was ready the people took their places around the table, a hush came, and the visiting preacher invoked the Lord's blessing upon the food. One was privileged to help himself to anything anywhere on the table. No matter whose basket any article of food came from, when placed upon the table it became community property. When the white folks were satisfied, food was carried to the colored people present who were sitting or standing back and not permitted to come to the table. One could not help wondering if it will be that way at the Lord's table when the Wedding Feast shall be spread at the coming of Christ.

Visit to South in 1914

In 1914 I had a very interesting visit with the branches of the church in the Southern States. I went as a representative of the Zion's Religio Literary Society, the General Sunday School Association, and Graceland College. Hale W. Smith, youngest brother of Israel A. Smith, present president of the church, was the General Conference appointee in charge of that mission. I was very glad indeed for him to make my appointments and accompany me to the various congregations of Saints. He was naturally quite popular among the young people, being youngest son of Joseph Smith, president and prophet of the church. He was proud of this fact and kept it before them by mentioning it quite often. It was a busy seven weeks for me; I delivered an average of two talks or lectures a day as well as conversing upon the work of the church as represented by the departments mentioned.

An incident worthy of mention occurred en route to this field. I had to change trains at a junction point where I had to wait several hours in the night—not long enough to take a room at the hotel, but too long to be spent doing nothing. I decided to write a letter home. In order that I might not become drowsy, and being just a little hungry, I thought it would be a good idea to eat a little before setting myself to writing. I had been cautioned to be careful about drinking water as there was a good deal of malaria there. I was a firm believer in the revelation which advises against "hot drinks," believing it includes tea and coffee. But I had been led to believe that drinking coffee produces wakefulness as a result often experienced. I concluded that the circumstances justified my taking a cup of coffee with my sandwich. So, I ate the sandwich and drank the coffee and proceeded to write a letter home. Soon my stomach was in a turmoil, and I was really sick from drinking the coffee. I resolved there and then that I would not drink it again unless it was prescribed by a physician.

Attack of Malaria

On the last day of my seven weeks ministry among the branches of the southern mission, I lectured three times. During my final talk my ears seemed partly plugged so that my own voice sounded strange. Hale and I went immediately to the home where we were being entertained, the family remaining at the church for rehearsal for some program. I at once took to bed thinking a good sweat would be beneficial. I asked Hale to find a quilt to put over me. It was in August and ordinarily not even a sheet would be needed for comfort, but I was chilling. Soon I asked for another quilt. At last the sweat began to come. By the time the folks got home I was perspiring plenty. I asked Hale if he thought I might have a bath. He said he would find out, and soon reported that my bath was ready in the adjoining room. I went in and to my surprise I found an ordinary dishpan containing about two quarts of warm water. This is my only experience in taking a bath in a dishpan. I have bathed a good many times in a wash basin. I was glad for even the dishpan and managed to remove most of the smell of malaria from my person. I knew these people were doing the best they could for me.

I slept fairly well and had planned to go next day to New Orleans and then home. I had never been to New Orleans and thought this might be the best opportunity I would ever have. But the next morning it did not require much persuasion to convince me that I should buy a ticket for the north instead of going farther south. I was told that when one gets full of malaria it sometimes requires years to get entirely rid of it. So my ticket read "Lamoni, Iowa," instead of "New Orleans." In the course of a few weeks I recovered and felt that the trip was a success in that I understood the southern Saints better and could do more for them.

Writing Quarterlies

While on my mission to the Southern States I accepted an invitation to write a quarterly for the Sunday school department under the supervision of C. B. Woodstock. It was to be on the subject "Beliefs of the Church for the Youth." I did most of the writing of this quarterly as I carried on my ministry in various parts of my field.

I had written two sets of quarterlies before this time for use in the Religio Literary Society. One was on the Book of Mormon, the other on the Doctrine and Covenants. In all I have written quarterlies for three courses of lessons to cover three years of study.

The Gospel Quarterlies

Later Sister Salyards and I were asked to undertake the responsibility of writing lessons to be published in quarterly form under the title of "The Gospel Quarterly." For many months she and I worked together in the home of Sister Marietta Walker where Sister Salyards was living at the time. At first the printed lessons were particularly for teachers and were titled, "Teachers' Helps." Next we prepared "The Gospel Quarterly" for teachers and classwork. This grew into three grades: senior, intermediate, and primary, all grades following largely the International Sunday School Association. The three grades used the same Scripture texts, but they were treated according to the beliefs of our church, adapted to the needs of the different grades. As time passed the idea prevailed that we should have quarterlies distinctly our own, and a complete separation from all other quarterlies was decided upon. Sister Salyards became editor-in-chief and continued as such for many years. Her work of writing quarterlies has been followed by the writing of textbooks to be used in classwork.

Question Books

Before the organization of the General Sunday School Association, material for classwork had been provided. The Primary Question Book, largely the work of Sister Walker, was published by the church. It was a small book—a sort of catechism—consisting of simple questions and answers that might be committed to memory. The Intermediate Question Book was similar, but more advanced in subject matter and language. Then A Compendium of Faith and Doctrine was compiled by Sister Walker and Henry A. Stebbins. This was principally a compilation of Scripture texts from the Inspired Version of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, with appropriate extracts from history. There was little comment by the authors. These texts were arranged under subject headings and sub-headings covering the Restoration and antiquity of the gospel, history and organization of the church, and church doctrines. It was intended for the senior and adult departments and was a valuable reference book.

Graded Supplemental Lessons

Another thing calculated to furnish a fund of biblical and scriptural knowledge outside of the regular lesson courses was planned. A committee was appointed by the general superintendent, authorized by the General Convention, to prepare a "Graded Course in Supplemental Lessons." This was to provide material on subject matter connected with the church and the Three Standard Books that could not well be included in the regular lessons. I was chairman of the committee, associated with Sisters Maggie Blair, Ida Etzenhauser, and B. C. Smith. We had a meeting in the home of Sister Smith and compiled the matter, which was printed in due time. Only one small edition was ever printed, and it never got into general circulation, though the price was nominal.

Appointment to Spring River and South Missouri

We enjoyed our work in the Southern States very much, but some of the brethren of the appointing authorities seemed to think that we were getting too old to have to endure the hardships of the climate and economic conditions that prevail in that mission, though the Saints were willing to make it as comfortable and pleasant for us as possible under the circumstances. Our next appointment read, "Spring River and Southern Missouri Districts."

It was with some degree of reluctance that we made the change. My youngest sister, Stella Wiley, lived in Pittsburg, Kansas; we were glad to have her association and to form the acquaintance of the Saints there. We found there, as elsewhere, that the Saints appreciated the work of missionaries sent them by the General Church and always did what they could to make them comfortable. We visited as many of the branches as practicable for the time we were permitted to labor in the districts. We ministered in Pittsburg, Weir, Cherokee, Coffeyville, and Independence, Kansas; and Miami, Oklahoma. We had expected to visit Joplin and Webb City, Missouri, but were moved to Ohio, with Cleveland as our objective, before we could get to those two places.

One Sunday while holding a service at Cherokee, Kansas, in a room above a store, I found that the temperature was 112 degrees. Had it not been that the one electric fan was trained directly upon me, I doubt that I could have endured it. How the people stood the heat is a mystery.

While preaching at Weir I extended an invitation to my listeners to ask questions. At one service a man asked, "Do you pay tithing?" I replied, "Certainly, don't you?"

"No, I don't," said he.

I asked, "Don't you believe in tithing?"

"Yes, I believe in it," he said, "but I won't pay tithing now."

"Don't you believe it is a debt we owe the Lord?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "but under present conditions I will not pay tithing because I don't think it is being rightly spent or used."

"It is the bishop's responsibility to decide how the money is to be spent," I suggested, "and we are not justified in withholding our tithing because we think he is not spending it wisely. Would you feel justified in refusing to pay a debt to your grocer on the grounds that you believed he would not spend the money as he should?"

"Yes, sir, I would," he said.

"I think this has gone far enough," I announced putting an end to the discussion.

I was more careful after that how I invited questions, and suggested they be submitted in writing with the questioner's name signed to them. This man obviously wanted an excuse for withholding his tithing and offered his objection. Those who want a reason for not keeping God's commandments and assisting in building his kingdom will always find something which may seem to them to answer the purpose.

Cleveland, Ohio, Objective

While conducting meetings at Fairland, Oklahoma, I received official notice of my appointment to Cleveland, and was to be there in time for the district conference. I was in the midst of a series and had made appointments to give patriarchal blessings to a number of people, so felt that I could not be at the conference without doing an injustice to the work in Fairland. I concluded my work according to appointments and proceeded to our new field. We were met at the train by Brother McNeil and taken to his home where we were entertained hospitably until our permanent home was ready.

We occupied a three- or four-room apartment in the church building used as a parsonage. The rooms were small but cozy and convenient. The church was quite a large building with a pipe organ and a full basement. It was well adapted to school work. A baptismal font was built while we were there. The lower auditorium had a dining room which was used for various activities. There was a debt of about $7,000 on the building. It was quite a financial burden to keep the interest paid, but in time the mortgage was paid off. The building was purchased from another denomination, and it was suggested by some that the church had bought the organ, which was a good one, with the building and the mortgage thrown in.

Pastor of Two Branches

We had not been in Cleveland long until, at the recommendation of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, I was chosen pastor. Subsequently, by his advice, I was chosen pastor of the second congregation on the west side of the city called the Lake-wood Branch. This group conducted Sunday services in a little Seventh Day Adventist church; other meetings were held in the homes of the members. Again the principle, "Necessity knows no law," was seemingly the justification for asking a patriarch to occupy in work where the letter of the law says he shall not. While I have never been fully convinced that it is a policy that can be safely defended, yet I can see that in my experience it did not harm the church.

Designs Against Aluminum

By Mildred Nelson Smith

In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you. . . .

—Section 86: 1.

WHEN GOD BADE the prophet pen the words that he called "a word of wisdom," of what did he wish to warn and forewarn us? There is no doubt at all that God knew the ignorance that then prevailed concerning the care of the physical body. He knew, too, the high-pressure advertising that would come as new-found truth conflicted with the economic interests of those who dealt in the harmful. Of these things we are certain because of his very clear warning against the drinking of "wine or strong drink," the use of tobacco internally, and the use of "hot drinks."

That he knew also of the confusion that would reign as the knowledge of the body and its care increased is as plainly shown in the latter portion of the prophecy. In it and related Scripture we find the standards by which we can judge between the claims of science and pseudo-science with respect to the things we should do to maintain really good health.

The science of nutrition is a very new science. The word "vitamin" was not even coined until 1913. Something was known of proteins, fats, and carbohydrates. Sailors had learned to take limes or potatoes with them to prevent scurvy. But it was not until almost the beginning of the present century that other vital substances in foods began to be recognized and identified. Present knowledge of the effects of food nutrients on health and disease almost all have been learned during the past half century.

It is only natural that with such rapid growth of the science, errors of interpretation of data would creep in. Students of medicine, biology, chemistry, psychology, and nutrition probe constantly to learn the truth about how the body works, what foods contain, and how the two work together to produce people capable of abundant living. They patiently record their data as they try again and again to eliminate error and prevent chance from hiding the truth. I know, for I have been one of them. Interestingly enough, their efforts are bringing to light real truth. We know it to be so, for the information they bring is measuring up more and more closely to the standard God has given us as our guide. Their efforts remind us of the injunction of James (3:13), "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge? let him show out of good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom."

But what of the men in whose hearts evils and designs exist? Who are they of whom we have been forewarned? They are men who tell us half-truths as if they were truth. They include those who devise crafty tricks to confuse and deceive us. They are they who are constantly frightening us and taking away our peace with their fearful predictions of what will happen to us if we do not follow in their way and use their products. By their works we shall know them.

LET US EXAMINE a few of their works. Some are described in the November 19, 1951, issue of the Herald, page 12, in the article, "Designs against Health," by Chris B. Hartshorn. These, as suggested, can be cared for in part by adequate legislation and in part by more careful adherence to the instructions of the Scriptures. But there are many more.

There are certain disreputable vendors of stainless steel cooking utensils, for example, who find it profitable to scare an unsuspecting public into paying exorbitant prices for their product. And they do it only by resorting to trickery that confuses those who are not informed. They threaten illness, devastating disease, and death to those who dare use aluminum—which happens to be their most excellent competitor. To "prove" it they boil a large quantity of soda water in each type of utensil and show, with a great display of terror, the murky liquid that comes from the aluminum pan, and with evident delight the clear liquid that comes from the stainless steel one. Actually it's a trick which they hope will dupe their audience, and it usually does.

They know, or the one who devised the trick for them knew, that aluminum is slightly soluble in strong alkali. When strong soda water is boiled in aluminum for a long period of time, sodium aluminate is formed. Although sodium aluminate is harmless, it forms a murky grey solution. Stainless steel is not soluble in strong alkali. Hence there is a difference in the appearance of the liquids.

But there is not one ordinary cooking procedure that employs a strong alkaline solution. Nutritionists even urge that not one bit of soda be used in cooking vegetables because of the destruction of vitamins that results. It would be equally as sensible to pour boiling water into a chilled crystal goblet to prove that it would not hold ice water as to use strong alkali over a long period of boiling time to prove aluminum unfit for cooking food.

AS FOR THE CLAIM that aluminum in food is harmful, that claim has no basis in fact. The only "experiments" on which such a claim can be based are also tricks. Reputable institutions such as the Hygienic Laboratory of the United States Public Health Service, Iowa State College, Johns Hopkins University, and Mayo Brothers Clinic, have repeatedly tested aluminum compounds and aluminum as it would enter the body in foods cooked in aluminum. They can find no harmful results. Of course, there may be some persons exceptionally sensitive to the metal. Some also are sensitive to wheat, and God called it the "staff of life." An occasional sensitivity cannot mark aluminum as dangerous.

When first I heard of the accusations against aluminum, about five years ago, I went to Dr. Louise J. Peet, head of the Household Equipment Department of Iowa State College, to learn the facts. Dr. Peet settled back in her chair with a merry twinkle in her eye, and I knew I was in for a story.

Some twenty years or so ago, she told me, she was studying at Iowa State College when "Dr." Brinkley (the goat gland "doctor") wrote to Dr. P. Mabel Nelson, then head of the Foods and Nutrition Department, saying something like this: "If you don't believe aluminum is poisonous, just cook some tomatoes in an aluminum pan, let them stand in the pan overnight without refrigeration [a thing no good homemaker would ordinarily do], then eat them. And you won't have to ask whether aluminum is poisonous!" He meant, of course, that Dr. Nelson would never live to tell the tale. So Dr. Nelson said to Dr. Peet, "Let's try it."

They didn't think any harm would result, but as true scientists they didn't take unnecessary chances either. Instead of eating the tomatoes themselves, they took two white rats, three weeks old and brothers from the same litter. For three weeks the rats received exactly the same food except that one rat got a dish of tomatoes for breakfast each morning. His tomatoes had been cooked in an aluminum pan and had stood in the pan all night before he got them. The other rat got no tomatoes.

Dr. Peet smiled as she recalled the results. "You should have seen the little white rat that received the tomatoes. When I put the dish into his cage he acted like a cat with catnip. He almost got into the dish he was so excited. And how he ate it! Actually, he tripled his weight in three weeks, while the little rat without tomatoes gained much less."

So Dr. Nelson and Dr. Peet decided to try it themselves. For days they, too, had tomatoes each day—tomatoes that had been cooked in aluminum and had stood overnight in the pan without refrigeration. Dr. Peet's eyes fairly danced and her smile broadened as she climaxed her story with, "Fortunately, we didn't triple our weight in three weeks, but that has been more than twenty years ago and we are both still very much alive!"

ON FEBRUARY 13, 1947, Dr. Russell M. Wilder, M.D., of Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota, wrote a letter that has been published many times in an effort to allay the fears of those being besieged by the anti-aluminum terrorists. Among many other facts given in the letter Dr. Wilder wrote:

Further information bearing on this subject is the quite significant fact that many physicians at the present time are giving hydrated alumina (Al₂O₃·H₂O) as an antacid in the treatment of ulcer of the stomach and duodenum. This treatment has been popular for many years, and so far as I know has never aroused any suspicion of provoking cancer in the stomach. The amount of aluminum given by this means exceeds by many hundred times what would be obtainable from the cooking of foods in aluminum utensils.

I have been assured by those who work with ulcer patients that Dr. Wilder's statement is still true.

For us to eliminate aluminum from our food, we would have to quit eating almost all natural foods. Aluminum is the most prevalent metal known to be in the earth's crust. Every plant that grows picks up its share of aluminum. Every animal that eats those plants has aluminum in its tissues. We eat both plants and animals. Even the water we drink and the milk we mothers or the cows secrete contains aluminum. Had aluminum been a dangerous metal for us to consume in our food, surely God would have protected us from it better than that! Knowing all these facts, God so created us that our bodies take from our food only that quantity of aluminum which we can handle safely and discard the rest.

Even the pits that appear in aluminum pans are merely an evidence of our carelessness. They do not appear during a cooking procedure. Aluminum pans pit only when left standing dirty or wet. When bits of food or moisture containing certain metals from the earth or water pipes are left on the surface of the pan, a small electrolytic current is set up which dissolves the aluminum under that bit of food or moisture. If pans are cleaned and dried soon after the meal is finished or the food emptied out, no pitting will occur.

THOSE WHO by their trickery try to tell us aluminum is a dangerous cooking utensil may not be deceitful. I prefer to believe that most of them are ignorant. Knowing neither the simple facts of nature nor the ways of God, they are not qualified to instruct us. In fact, our government has found it necessary to curb their activities in an effort at least to partially protect us.

The high-handed stainless steel manufacturers (there are good ones, too) never send literature through the mails nor advertise in daily newspapers. The government has put a stop to their using the mails to perpetrate their fraudulent claims. Several (names will be furnished on request) served prison terms for disregarding the postal regulations. Within the past few years the Federal Trade Commission has issued cease and desist orders against such false anti-aluminum propaganda. Copies of some of these proceedings may be obtained from the Federal Trade Commission.

Typical of these Federal Trade Commission proceedings is the one reported in the trade magazine Housewares against Steelco Stainless Steel, Incorporated, of Chicago. The Steelco company conceded as correct the following statements,

1. The consumption of food prepared or kept in aluminum kitchen utensils will not cause cancers, stomach trouble, anemia, blood poisons, or other ailments. . . . Foods so prepared or kept in aluminum utensils are not detrimental to the health of the users by reason of use of aluminum utensils. Poisons are not formed from the preparation of foods in aluminum utensils.

2. The consumption of food cooked in stainless steel utensils will not insure improved health.

3. Failure to use Steelco utensils will not result in decayed teeth, ill health, faulty elimination, rickets, organic heart disease, or any other disease; constipation is not caused by lack of magnesium in food.

In spite of this sort of admission on the part of the manufacturers—when challenged by the Federal Trade Commission to give proof of their claims—quacks, faddists, and ignorant or unscrupulous salespersons continue to perpetrate the hoax. By their trickery they take advantage of the people they induce to throw away or trade in perfectly good aluminum cooking utensils and purchase sets of the stainless steel (many items of which they will never use) at a price that is so far out of reason as to be almost fraudulent in itself.

Actually steel is a poor conductor of heat and, unless it is lined with a good heat conductor or has a copper bottom, food will burn in what is known as "hot spots" in the pan. For that reason it is advisable to purchase all stainless steel cooking utensils from a reputable local merchant. Then if they fail to give satisfactory service, the items can be returned. Excellent equipment can be bought for much less money that way, too. All the first quality, fully guaranteed stainless steel utensils needed in the usual home can be purchased for about $50.00.

GOD FOUND IT WISE to warn and forewarn us, for he knew how potentially Satan could use confusion on any topic to divide God's people. "God is not the author of confusion . . ." If Satan can get us to spend our energies contending about whether aluminum is harmful, we cannot spend them in building the kingdom. If he can get us to spend $175.00 to $300.00 for a set of stainless steel to replace our already adequate and perfectly good aluminum, we can't spend those dollars in building the kingdom. If he can get us so fearful of aluminum that we are afraid to eat a friend's cooking because that friend uses aluminum, our friendship suffers. Chances of fraternal unity necessary to build the kingdom become more and more remote.

God knew that aluminum would be used for cooking utensils when he bade the prophet warn us. He was concerned enough about our health to warn us about strong drinks, tobacco, and hot drinks. Had aluminum utensils been dangerous, he would have been concerned enough to have warned us of their use as well.

Question Time

Question:

When does one come into possession of his or her free agency?

Missouri H. J. S.

Answer:

Agency is a gift of God which is inherent in the human spirit and soul. It is reasonable to infer from the Scriptures that there is at least a degree of agency given to the spirits in heaven before their birth on earth. Lucifer and one-third of the hosts of heaven exercised their agency in rebellion. (Doctrine and Covenants 28:10; Genesis 3:4, Inspired Version.)

There is agency in all animate creation. An amoeba swimming in a drop of water chooses which way he will go. Much more, a new-born infant has agency. His area of action is limited because of his physical helplessness and mental incapacity. Even though he cannot choose to drive a car or solve a problem in differential calculus, he is free to cry or not to cry, to eat or not to eat, just as he chooses. So all men are free to exercise agency, subject to their own limitations.

Accountability, however, is quite another thing. If an infant loses his temper, he is exercising his agency, but he is not accountable, because he is not yet wise or experienced enough to know how to control his temper. If a small child or a congenital idiot steals, he is exercising agency, but he is not held accountable, because he may have no knowledge of the laws against stealing, or no mental capacity to understand them. The heathens, and those who die without law, exercise agency, but they are not accountable as are those who know the law and have capacity to understand and obey it. Knowledge widens the areas of choice and brings with it accountability.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4 that children should be baptized at the age of eight years. Doctrine and Covenants 16:6 and 17:20 speak of the "years of accountability." This places a necessary but somewhat arbitrary chronological limit on the beginning of accountability, but it is probable that accountability develops gradually, as the child gains skill and wisdom and knowledge and experience in exercising the agency which was inherent in him from the beginning.

The following Scriptures may be found helpful:

Deuteronomy 11:26-28, Joshua 24:14-21, Deuteronomy 30:15-19, John 3:19-21, Revelation 3:8, Matthew 6:19-24, II Nephi 1:63-128, Helaman 5:86, Doctrine and Covenants 36:7, 58:6; 90:5; 98:10, Genesis (I.V.) 2:21; 6:57, 58; 7:39, 40, Alma 9:65, 66; 15:55, 56; 19:109, 110.

EVAN A. FRY

Question:

I belong to the _____ church. Why should I be concerned about joining another?

Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

Does your church conform in every respect to the pattern of the church Christ personally organized as described in the New Testament? Does your church practice the principles and doctrines given us in the Scriptures as vitally necessary for salvation? (See II John 9-11, Hebrews 6:1, 2.) Does your church enjoy the spiritual gifts described by Paul (I Corinthians 12)? If not, why not? Considering the fact that God is unchanging, without variation, the same yesterday, today, and forever, how can you account for the fact that you do not have and enjoy these things? If God is not unchangeable, he is not God. Does your church have the complete set of divinely authorized officers we find described as functioning in the church in New Testament times? If not, could not your church be ordered of man and not of God? Is it not proceeding without his approval, direction, and authority? Christ commanded us, "Seek first the kingdom of God" (Luke 12:31). He also promised that we should know by the manifestations of the heavenly Spirit when we have found the true church. Do you have these divine evidences and deep abiding convictions that your church is approved and blessed by God? All churches do much good, but only God's one plan can bring complete salvation.

Question:

The Mormons quote a purported revelation by Joseph Smith which says, in effect, that the church would be driven to the Rocky Mountains where the Saints would become a powerful people. Is this so, and if so, what is the explanation?

California

S. E. T.

Answer:

We can positively affirm that Joseph Smith never gave a revelation which intimates that the church would be driven to the Rocky Mountains. The Utah Mormons publish a purported statement of Joseph Smith's which, upon critical examination, is found to be based upon definitely unreliable evidence. They claim that a man, Anson Call, heard Joseph utter the prophecy at a Masonic Installation Meeting at Montrose, Iowa, on August 6, 1842, and that he entered the alleged prophecy in his personal diary under date of July 14, 1843. This is the only evidence they possess.

Without entering into a detailed discussion of the conflicting statements of this "supposed revelation" in their various publications, we merely affirm that such meager evidence is too flimsy. In none of the writings, sermons, or other statements of Joseph Smith is there any reference to such a prophecy. In fact, this alleged prophecy was never published even by the Mormons of Utah until after 1850 in the Deseret News, published in Salt Lake City, and the Millennial Star of 1857, published in England. The Reorganized Church has constantly challenged the Utah Church to produce more reliable evidence than a purported statement entered eleven months later in the "supposed" diary of Anson Call and not verified by any other witness.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Idle Worshipers

By Courtney L. Hunter

They that make them are like unto them, so is every one that trusteth in them.

—Psalm 115: 8.

THE MOST REMARKABLE PRACTICE of the Old Testament Israelites, which kept them from close communion with their God, was their disposition to idol worship. This course of action was like a recurring disease with them. It was a forcible and potent urge to set up a physical property and invest it with godlike powers. The classic example of the Israelites' neglect of their God occurred when they formed a golden calf of molten jewelry and then with bowed head and bended knee worshiped its form. This they did even as Moses, the means of their divine deliverance from long years of bondage, bent his knee and bowed his head before the presence of his God to hear and know the wondrous things He had to say.

Today when we read of those happenings nearly 4,000 years ago we shake our heads and mutter, "Such fools, those Israelites! It's so hard to understand why they would take a lifeless piece of metal and offer it homage, refusing to honor the real God." And if, as sometimes happens, we are deeply impressed by the story, we might vow, "Had we been there we would not have done so."

The examples of idolatry throughout the Old Testament are almost without number, so very common was this heathen infirmity. But, by the time of Christ's birth the Jews had fairly well rid themselves of this diabolic habit. Through the trials and mistakes and blessings and punishments of hundreds of years they had learned to purge themselves and become fit for Christ's ministry.

But the strict and illogical interpretation of the very laws that Moses had carried down from the mount was now the outstanding practice by which many of the Jews were unable to accept Christ. They had replaced their former idol worship with the worship of the "letter of the law."

When we read of the attack of the Pharisees upon Jesus, because of his reputed breaking of the Sabbath law, we almost laugh with unbelief at their senseless interpretation of the ceremonial law. And if we are concerned personally with our Christ we might say, "Had I been there I would not have done so."

ALL THIS LEADS to the thought, Would we accept Jesus today if he were here upon the earth? The Israelites refused their God, the Jews refused their Christ; would we refuse our Lord? We say with conviction, "Of course not! We would welcome him with open arms and hearts. We would be different."

The strange facet of truth that lies within this avowal of faith is such that most of us would not recognize our Lord if he stood directly before us. God manifested himself in the form of a pillar of cloud and a pillar of fire in the Old Testament; he took the form of a Jew in the New Testament. Today he might appear as a common working man.

WE EMPHATICALLY DENY idol worship, and at the same time we follow the lure and the clink of the silver dollar. A little child said as his mother entered the door from a shopping trip, "Did you buy me anything?" We shudder at the Old Testament practice of child sacrifice to heathen gods and idols, but we smile indulgently as we sacrifice our children to the power and attraction of the currency god.

We deny idol worship and simultaneously accept the soul-deadening opiate of misplaced time. The soldier in the fox hole came face to face with his God for the first time and said, "Who would have thought I had to come to this hell hole before I had time to see your face?" Will it take the calamity of pain and death before our children will have time to see God?

We deny idol worship, yet the denial hardly leaves our lips before we find ourselves bowing to the lesser task. The aspiring and ambitious young singer said, "You can't go on always singing the Blue-tail Fly." Are we, by our actions and examples, forcing our children to compromise with lesser ability? Will they surpass our own personal efforts, or will they bow to the aphorism, "What was good enough for my father is good enough for me"?

AT TIMES we'd like to project ourselves into the past and reprimand the scribes and Pharisees for their neglect of the spiritual law. But let us ask ourselves: Do we partake of the Communion emblems spiritually as well as physically? How long has it been since we have truthfully had a real testimony to share on Wednesday evening? Is it just physical habit and fear of human condemnation which takes us to Sunday morning and evening church services? Do we observe the "letter of Children, parents, and teachers will welcome this book of sixty-two inspirational stories. They are all based on true incidents taken from the lives of church members.

These stories were selected as some of the best published in Zion's Hope or Stepping Stones. They are among the favorites which will bear repeating over and over. Children will enjoy reading them at home. They can be used in the family worship, and children's leaders in the church school will find helpful story material in them.

Building Family Morale In Present-Day Crises

Part II

By Mrs. Harold I. Velt

United Though Separated

UNITY is important in building family morale. There is strength in unity. A family united in purpose and goals can suffer hardships of war, separation, poverty, financial reverses, property losses through disaster, and all manner of distresses. It is the breakdown within the family that crushes morale, not what happens without. United parents—not separated or divorced—give solidarity, strength, and security. While in Hawaii we found in talking to the many boys who came to the mission house on their way to and from battle zones that those whose morale was the highest were those who had faith in God and had come from homes of spiritual stability, unity, and a steadfast faith in the gospel. On a number of occasions we have wept with boys who have brokenheartedly told us of the infidelity of wives and parents. We thought many times of the statement in the Book of Mormon, "Ye have broken the hearts of your tender wives, [but in this case it was the husbands or sons whose hearts were broken] and lost the confidence of your children, because of your bad examples before them; and the sobbings of their hearts ascend up to God against you."—Jacob 2: 46.

What a contrast to that revealed by letter in a recent Herald by Major Sam Toomey (now Lieutenant Colonel and recently cited for heroism and recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross) from Korea to his wife, Winifred, in Independence. In one letter he mentioned missing his family very much and said, "Although you are not near me, I feel your presence." We have known our Hawaiian friends for many years and can well understand why Lieutenant Colonel Toomey is courageous and fearless. He has faith in God; and united with him is his family, upholding him in faith, prayer, and fasting. No wonder he feels his wife's presence. We would that all our men could be backed by such a home as this. There might be a cessation of hostilities.

Elbert A. Smith tells this story of John Garver. He was leaving home for his mission field, and a friend sympathized with him for having to leave his family. Brother Garver assured his friend that when he left home he did not leave his family—in heart and mind he took them along with him and they kept him clean and wholesome. Though separated in body, in spirit he felt the presence of his devoted wife and daughters. Many of us who have had long separations from our loved ones can bear the same testimony. I like the thought expressed in the verse by Leland Foster Wood:

Happy is the family
That is bound together by inner ties

When together they are one,
When apart they still remember
The ties that bound their hearts together,
And even though alone
They are not utterly lonely,
For the blending of their lives gives fellowship.¹

Family morale depends on loyalty, love, unity, security, confidence, and courage. When quickened by the Spirit of God, men and women are enabled to respond to the call of duty, leaving home and loved ones, whether that call takes them to the far corners of the earth in battlefields, occupation zones, mission fields, or fields of business in or out of the church. When homes are united in purpose and there is love, faith, loyalty, and confidence, these ties stretch to the farthest ends of the earth. Many of the wives of servicemen and missionaries have had this experience when they were separated sometimes for years from their companions.

Discipline and Security

For children to feel confident and secure in the love of the home there must be discipline. One writer has said, "Love without discipline is indulgence." A girl said to her mother one day, "I'm glad you're not like some mothers I know. They are more like sisters than mothers to their children, who are allowed to do as they please. I wouldn't feel secure if you didn't have some restrictions." And that is true. A recent survey in 1,300 American high schools was made by questionnaire. Contrary to popular opinion that young people oppose and resent parental discipline, a strong majority thought parents should carefully restrict their teen-age sons and daughters as to hours, frequency of dates, places of amusement, choice of associates, smoking, and drinking.

Parents should stand together in their discipline. If the child knows that his parents are united and that certain standards are required, he will undoubtedly feel secure in their love. There will be greater unity when children have part in making the standards and they are more apt to be kept. Recently, before our daughter went to Graceland College, we were talking together as a family of her childhood life and she made one statement that pleased and amused us. She said one of the things that stood out most to her in her early life was that we (her mother and father) stood disgustingly together in all decisions regarding her discipline. Although her father had been away from home in the mission field most of her life, one time as long as thirteen months in Hawaii, he had kept in touch by letters and cards. She could fill albums with colorful cards sent from all parts of the States, Canada, and Hawaii. On many of these cards and letters would be kindly instruction, reprimands, and counsel which helped, although he was not at home, in her training and discipline. Of course sometimes, unknown to her, timely hints in my letters to her father would precede this counsel and help. The absence of a father from the family need not necessarily deprive children of his help and influence.

Family Worship

There is no better way of unifying and giving a lift to members of a family than for them to worship together. Life is not nearly so complicated when we supplicate the Father for his guidance and help. It brings us closer together. Family life is sweeter; there is less display of temper, and more of the spirit of sharing and unselfishness. Many of our children's behavior problems would disappear if we would pray regularly together. There would be fewer broken homes and families.

Play and Recreation

In building family morale, play and recreation with a keen sense of humor are musts. We should give of ourselves in pleasurable companionship to our children from the earliest moments if we expect to hold them in their teens. Many times I have heard mothers of grown sons and daughters say, "I wish I had taken the time to play with them—they are children for such a short time!" I remember a lady saying that to me when our daughter was only a few weeks old. We occasionally hear a young mother remark, "Perhaps I shall be able to enjoy my grandchildren. I never have much fun with my own, they are so much trouble."

Busy mothers often overlook the importance of escaping from the routine of household cares to take time out to have fun with their families and enjoy their children. There is danger of parents becoming so engrossed in their responsibility as parents that they overlook one of the most important morale builders—play. Buying toys and playthings to keep children amused and to develop skills is very important, but they are not sufficient. We should never neglect to give of ourselves at times in pleasurable companionship to them.

Two men were traveling on a train. One was a prosperous businessman, the other a well-known writer. The businessman asked the writer if he would be interested in knowing what he was giving his son for Christmas. The writer thought that since his traveling companion was a man of much wealth he could afford to give his son a costly gift. The other drew out a piece of paper and handed it to the writer. On the paper was written:

To my dear son: I give you one hour of each week day and two hours of my Sundays, to be yours to be used as you want them, without interference of any kind whatsoever.

The writer wondered how that boy would feel when he read his father's letter on Christmas morning. "How did you happen to think of such an idea?" he asked. Then the businessman told the story of a young man's coming to his office. He had known the young man since early childhood and was stunned to see his face bearing the telltale marks of idleness and dissipation. He was shocked and exclaimed, "Robert, to see you like this—and you with such a father." The boy answered, "I've been told my father was a fine man. All his friends have told me so. I never knew him. He was so busily occupied with his work and clubs that I seldom saw him. I really did not know him." "I resolved within my heart," said the businessman, "that my boy would never say that of me, and that is why I wrote this letter."

Young people need the companionship of parents as much as they need food, sleep, and exercise. Cheerfulness to children is as sunshine to flowers. The relationship between parents and children is very important and should be happy, affectionate, and satisfying from the earliest moments. There would be fewer difficulties with adolescent young people if parents would take the time to "go places" and do things together. It would create a comradeship and confidence in parents which children carry over into adulthood. It takes energy, for even enjoyment takes energy, but more often it is not so much the matter of energy as temperament. Some people turn a picnic into a backbreaking job while others have the knack of making a hard day seem like a holiday.

To take time out of the busy schedule to have fun with children may require rearranging of home duties. Perhaps there could be more efficient methods used in housekeeping. Mothers should concentrate on new ways to shorten home tasks. Perhaps the house can be kept cleaner and more orderly by family

The Spoken Word

When asked how she made her soft voice heard above the notorious roars of her husband and eight sons, Rider Haggard's delicate little mother replied: "That's very simple. I whisper. In the Haggard family a whisper is so unusual that everyone listens to it with profound surprise."—Princess Kropotkin in "Liberty"

The majority of us are for free speech only when it deals with those subjects concerning which we have no intense convictions.—Edmund B. Chaffee co-operation—allowing more time for recreation. The family council will help simplify things. Children are usually ready to do the extras if they think mom and dad are going to do something nice with them.

Sharing Responsibility

Family morale is built by sharing responsibilities of the home. Responsibility makes children feel they are needed. If a mother is a good worker and a poor psychologist she will be apt to do most of the work herself rather than be bothered with the less skilled efforts of a child. If she is a farsighted mother and a good psychologist she will insist that each member of the family share in the work and duties around the home.

Recreation with and without the family has its place. Both are necessary for the fullest enjoyment of family life and for keeping the family morale on a high level. It is easy for busy mothers to get into a rut. Every mother for her own good and for the well-being of her family should have some form of recreation, diversion, and relaxation apart from her family. She will find that after an afternoon or evening outing she will return refreshed in spirit and often with a different perspective. If the children are young, of course she will see that some responsible person is left to care for them. Children develop self-dependence and self-reliance and often do assigned tasks much better when not under the watchful eye of their mother. Husbands need to have their morale boosted, too; often they are neglected. Mothers can be so absorbed in mothering they forget to suggest an evening out with their husbands.

Cherished Memories

Memories are precious in the building and maintaining of family morale. Early memories, happy and unhappy, exert their influence throughout life. All of us have vivid mental pictures of events that happened in our early childhood. It may have been picnics, Christmas customs, singing around the piano, a mountain climb, the aroma of homemade bread and cookies, or the sweetness of freshly laundered sheets and clothing. It may have been the games played together, the work shared, family devotions and worship experiences, or the reading aloud of some choice pieces of poetry or literature. It may have been the wit and humor and happy fellowship at meal times. Consistent fairness in discipline, love, kindness, and real companionship may be among those memories.

If the background, underpinning, and undergirding have been studiously and prayerfully planned and laid upon the sure foundation—obedience to the whole gospel law of Christ and diligence in the work of his kingdom—we have nothing to fear.

FAR WEST STAKE, MISSOURI.—The stake choir of two hundred twenty-five voices presented a program of music in the Krug Park Bowl at St. Joseph, Missouri, August 26, under the direction of Sister Ruth Haden. The accompanists were Sister Stella Hidy of Stewartville at the piano, Sister Pearl Kinnaman of St. Joseph at the organ, and Sister Anna Ranes of Kansas City at the harp. Three trumpeters assisted. They were Norman Swails, Helen De Vorse, and Alma Winborn.

The second annual series of out-door services began Sunday evening, June 3, at the reunion grounds near Stewartville. The theme was "Prophecies for This Generation." Brother Clair Weldon opened the series. Other speakers were Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop Lewis Landsberg, High Priest Fred Davies, Seventy Donald Harvey, Evangelist Roy Chevillie and Stake President Emery E. Jennings.

Beginning September 7, Brother Wayne Simmons, missionary to the Spanish-speaking people, held a series of Sunday night sermons at the First and Second Churches in St. Joseph. During the week he held cottage meetings.

Evangelist John R. Grice of Port Huron, Michigan, held a missionary series from October 21 through November 11, in each congregation at St. Joseph.

Brother Harry Black of England has been working in Far West Stake. He labored in St. Joseph with Seventy Donald Harvey for several weeks.

A stake-wide Religious Education Institute was held at First Church in St. Joseph in September. The guest speaker was Sister Thelona D. Stevens of the General Church. The film "The Teacher Prepares" was shown.

The ground-breaking ceremonies for the new church building at Bedison were held September 24, with Pastor Orville Fannon in charge. Prayer was given by Elder Warren E. Peak. The first spadeful of dirt was removed by Brother Elmer Froyd and benediction by Elder Harry Jensen. The cornerstone ceremonies were held the afternoon of October 25, with about fifty persons attending. The pastor read the history of the rise of Bedison Branch which was organized with the advice and consent of District President M. P. Madison and Elder Henry Kemp, missionary in charge of the Nodaway District, on May 3, 1896, as the Pleasant View Branch (on October 3, 1896, the name was changed to Bedison Branch) with Ole Madison, president; Ras Lorensen, priest; Hans Froyd, teacher; W. B. Torrance, deacon; Anna Ivie, clerk; E. S. Fannon, book agent; W. B. Torrance, treasurer; and E. S. Fannon, chorister. The Epitome of Faith of the church was read; also a record of the present presiding officers and membership was placed in a glass container and sealed within the cornerstone. Pastor Orville Fannon put the cement seal in place and a prayer was offered by Elder Alec Jensen.

Regular church services were opened at Kidder, Missouri, November 4. They will be held in the Charles Mengel residence until a building can be purchased.

The Third St. Joseph congregation had their church newly decorated and two new gas furnaces installed when fire damaged both the main church and lower auditorium. After two months, the sanctuary has been redecorated and remodeled. The first service was a general prayer service Sunday morning, November 4.

The annual stake-wide women's institute was held at First Church in St. Joseph, November 1, with about two hundred in attendance. The theme was "Put on the Whole Armor of God." Women from the various congregations of the stake gave their personal testimonies and high lights of the General Church Women's Institute held at Independence, Missouri. The guest speaker for the institute was Sister Velma Ruch of the Grace-land faculty.

An International Zion's League Rally was held October 20 and 21 at Cameron, Missouri. William S. Gould, director of public relations and counselor to students from abroad at Graceland College, was guest speaker. The theme for the rally was "Missions Around the World." Leaguers from Australia were Valda Poole and Les Gardner; from England, Sylvia Wood and Bill Muldoon; from Rotterdam, Holland, Klaas Kaat; from Hawaii, Helen Metsudo, Gilberta Paoa, and Lily Kaloa; from Canada, Peter Harder and Harvey Nicholson; from Japan, Kisuke Sekine.

The Young Adults of Cameron sponsored a dinner in the recreation room of the church in celebration of the first anniversary of the new church. Apostle C. George Mesley of Independence was the speaker. The proceeds went to the church organ fund.

The young adults of the stake held an afternoon and evening rally at the reunion grounds July 8, with Roy Chevillie of Lamoni, Iowa, as guest speaker and another rally September 30, at Cameron, Missouri, with Brother Wayne Simmons as the guest speaker. In the afternoon he told of his experiences in the Latin-American countries.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—A district women's institute was held November 10 and 11 under the direction of district director, Mrs. Pauline White. Classes were held on Saturday, with a luncheon at noon and a banquet and program in the evening. At the Sunday morning service women who had attended the Women's Institute held in Independence in October gave reports on the meeting, giving the viewpoint of a wife, a mother, an older woman, a business woman and the women's leader. Music was furnished by the choir and a solo by Marjorie Damitz. Elder Laurence MacDonald gave the sermon.

Thanksgiving was the theme of the services on November 18. Pastor Myron Schall spoke on the subject "In Everything Give Thanks." He closed with an appeal to the branch to help complete the Auditorium. A special offering for this fund was then received. In the evening the Zion's League presented a Thanksgiving program. On the evening of November 21 the wedding of Claudette Purvis to Albert E. Gilding was held at the church.

Richard Craig, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Epling of Roseville, was blessed at the morning service November 25 by Evangelist W. H. Dawson and Elder Myron Schall. At the Communion service December 2, two babies were blessed by Evangelist Dawson, assisted by Bishop E. C. Burdick: Wendy Eve, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Dawson, and Douglas Joseph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Vincent.

The women's department held two rummage sales in the fall, and a bazaar and food sale was held at the church on December 7.

The annual Christmas party was held on December 21. The children and juniors presented a program in charge of Marjorie Damitz. On December 22, Zion's League members visited shut-ins, singing carols and presenting gifts. A chili supper was served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Damron at the close of the evening. Keillor Winsor was in charge of the preworship service, December 23. Ten-year-old Darryl MacDonald assisted in the service and told the story "The Boy Who Sang for the King." The choir, directed by Mrs. Edna Burdick, gave the Christmas portion of The Messiah. Soloists were Marjorie Damitz, Virginia Winsor, Hazel Damron, and Laurence MacDonald; accompanists, Ella Dawson, organist, and Phillipa Gann, pianist. "Who Are the Wise Men?" was the subject of Elder Myron Schall's Christmas message. In the evening a play entitled "The Blue Overalls Angels" was presented under direction of Mabelle Nephew, assisted by Shirley Burks. Following the serv-

Football Talent

By Ray Zinser

A speech given at the Lamoni High School Football Banquet held in Lamoni, Iowa, November 12, 1951, in honor of the successful undefeated season of the football team.

Lamoni High School Football Team

And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability.—Matthew 25: 15.

TONIGHT I am extremely happy to speak to you and to be one of the total group here to honor your accomplishment in an undefeated football season. I have used as my text for tonight's banquet a significant symbolism from the Bible. I would like to add a note of seriousness to this jubilant occasion.

You men represent those who have developed certain talents related to a most successful football season. I come as your friend, and as an admirer of your splendid record. I also come as a member of the community.

You now are pointed toward the completion of this school year, perhaps high school again next year, or college work, and then on to farming, business, military service and, I assume, eventually marriage and community integration. There are several principles involved in the utilization of your athletic talents which I should like to apply to your future life. The challenge which I sound tonight is the challenge of using these principles in community citizenship.

Sense of Mission

Certainly as you started the football season this fall you carried a strong sense of mission. Your objective was to do your best and be your best in the football contests. This was a stirring objective and a commanding sense of mission. As you continue in life you must develop an equally challenging sense of mission in terms of a commanding philosophy of life. The keynote for charting one's life pattern is found in a sense of mission.

Sense of Fair Play

Lamoni High School and its teams have a good reputation for fair play. Many comments have filtered back to me from other teams and competing high school systems to the effect that one can automatically "expect" good sportsmanship and fair play when dealing with the Lamoni High School group. Lamoni High School is known for its high degree of integrity. As you have developed this talent in football, so you should use this talent in your future human relationships, whether in business, in farming, or whatever area of life you are participating in each day. Your reputation is always important whatever you do and wherever you are. Hold high the exercise of this talent. Stand for something. Accent the positive.

Sense of Team Discipline

The greatest "star" is he who cooperates most effectively with his teammates. Each member is a carefully disciplined unit of the total co-operating group. Each member is constantly aware of the necessity for self-management and fitting himself into the total picture of the group activity. Your team has shown a high sense of team discipline, and it has been interesting to watch your team discipline as compared to the often disintegrating team discipline of your opponents. Community and personal life also requires discipline or self-management. This talent can determine the effectiveness of your daily routine.

Sense of Hard Work

Hours of practice have been involved in your training. You have followed prescribed rules of diet. The "foreign legion" has been a part of the grueling hours of practice. Time and energy have been consumed in no small degree. The talent of being able to give your all in a sense of diligent, consistent, hard work pays off. Those who build the 1952 team and the 1953 team of Lamoni High School should be challenged to utilize this same talent. Effort alone will not automatically insure a winning team, but it will be a big forward step toward victory. This same talent in community life applies significantly. There is absolutely no substitute for consistent effort. Businessmen of the community know the value of their employees who have developed this sense of hard work. May you be challenged tonight by the consequences of hard work when intelligently applied.

Sense of Citizenship

Each man is a citizen. He is responsible for his job on the team. Team citizenship is a talent worthy of emulation. One cannot do as he pleases on the football field and expect positive results. A high degree of team citizenship is essential. So also you must develop a sense of community citizenship. I charge you with the citizenship responsibility of voting, of holding political office; and I definitely expect some of you to run for local, state, and national office sometime. Support your P.T.A. organizations, your churches, and other positive civic organizations of your community. Lamoni has an unusual opportunity to be an illuminating beacon light for democratic participation in America. Whether your community is Lamoni or elsewhere, I shall expect you to be actively engaged in community citizenship just as you have been in team citizenship this season.

Sense of Togetherness

You have worked together as a "team." You feel close to each other because you have shared some significant experiences. Although the years may tend to exaggerate the exploits of the year you will always hold a special sense of togetherness because you have shared together in the great battles of the gridiron. In any significant form of community life "fellowship" is an essential. Next year's football team must build anew its sense of fellowship. Those of you who graduate and go on must develop a new sense of fellowship. And the great inspiring force working in the fellowship process is God. Actively support the church of your choice. Let divine inspiration integrate your fellowship even more significantly.

Sense of Aggressive Participation

From the start of each football game to the end you have evidenced a sense of aggressive participation. There has been an enthusiasm and an aggressive pursuit of your objectives. I am reminded tonight of the last game of the season when you stood on the goal line ready to push one more touchdown over against a stubborn foe when the game ended. The world today is caught between two great forces—the forces of construction and the forces of destruction. The forces of destruction—corruption, political graft, evil, "the fix" and the "cocktail party"—are aggressive. Our participation in society must be even more "constructively" aggressive. Your talent for aggressive football can become an inspiring force if applied in the attack on the social problems of the day and in pursuit of the eternal quest, a better way of life for all men regardless of race, nationality, culture, or origin.

The Challenge

And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his several ability.

This is your day to use your talents to rehabilitate, renew, and inspire our community and society. You are a significant part of the great moral struggle of all ages—constructive or destructive use of talent or potentiality. I charge you to carry your football season to the great adventure of living.

and the Yellowstone Branch. There were some things in it that Gurley could not receive, but of one thing he was sure—that God would raise up a prophet to lead the church in due time. Gifts of tongues and prophecy were given to the Newkirk and Gurley families as they met together, and these gifts were the means of convincing the rest of the branch (which up to this time was still giving allegiance to Strang) that Gurley and Briggs were right in their position. In one of these gifts of prophecy the assurance was given, "The successor of Joseph Smith is Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith the prophet. It is his by right of lineage, saith the Lord your God."

The Yellowstone Branch met on an appointed day. The people formally renounced James J. Strang's leadership, and acknowledged the right of the seed of Joseph to come forth in God's due time and take the position of prophet, seer, revelator, and President of the High Priesthood. Again gifts of prophecy, tongues, and discernment were abundantly poured out. The promise that the Spirit should bear witness to the truthfulness of Briggs' prophecy was fulfilled. Zenas Gurley joyfully wrote to Jason W. Briggs, "We have received evidence of your revelation."

In both of these experiences, men who had received their ordination in the church under Joseph the prophet, by reason of their priesthood authority and their position as leaders of a branch, received instruction as to their personal conduct and the conduct of the people who looked to them for spiritual leadership. It is notable, too, that although the outwardly manifested spiritual gifts had been sadly lacking under all of the self-appointed leaders, they appeared almost immediately in confirmation of the instruction given to these two men, as soon as the people moved out in obedience to instruction. Once again the principle laid down by James and rediscovered by the boy prophet of the nineteenth century—that men who lack wisdom may ask of God and receive liberally—was vindicated by experience.

the law" and thereby make ourselves slaves to a future of "dead works"? Would we really recognize our Lord, or would we crucify him all over again?

We are horrified at the mental image of the Crucifixion. It is easy for us to understand physical pain, and the thoughts of a modern crucified Lord are unthinkable to us.

Some even now crucify our Lord spiritually every time we ignore or break his commandments. In reality the effects of a physical crucifixion are infinitely less terrible than a spiritual crucifixion. They are temporary fleeting pain, a little blood, and then forgetfulness. The crucifixion of Christ's spirit is everlasting.

We read, "It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed" (Doctrine and Covenants 142:5). We say, "Wonderful! Pearls of wisdom! The truth of the ages!" Then we promptly relegate it to the place already occupied by the hymn, "Work for the Night Is Coming." We sing the "letter of the law" and forget its spirit.

Let us work our all for God's church, grab hold of our boot straps, and pull ourselves from the den of idol worshipers. Idol worshipers are indeed idle worshipers.

Membership Responsibility

I am glad to be a member of this church. A great responsibility rests upon me and all followers of the gospel. We are called to live our religion full time, which leaves no opportunity for us to indulge in worldly pleasures. There are many little deeds of kindness we can do, and they all help to build Zion. Saints should be able to detect the good spirit if they listen for their Master's voice and heed it.

We here in Sioux Falls are trying to carry on with the help of the Sioux City elders. They try to be with us every Sunday, and we are grateful for their help.

The world is watching us. "By their works ye shall know them" applies to us today.

A Letter From Heaven

A TRIBUTE TO ESTHER GATES

It was a pleasant little note written on sky blue paper wreathed in scallops like fleecy morning clouds. It arrived midafternoon on October 8. As I read and enjoyed it, I did not know that the sender, Esther Gates, lay clothed in the garments of death.

In the letter she referred to and thanked us for the nice visit she had with us the Sunday before when she had ridden with us to Vallejo from Berkeley. We had encouraged her to sit with the other guests in the living room when we arrived, but she had said, "I want to be in the kitchen; we can visit while we work."

I still visualize the twinkle in her eyes as she proudly told me she would be eighty-one on November 1. I had thought how well preserved she was at that age. It seemed only a few years since she had retired from active nursing.

These things were in my mind that Monday as I read her letter. She stated that Grandmother Day had stood the trip well, but made no mention of how she herself had stood the journey. It was to be understood, of course, that she was perfectly normal—she was young! She mentioned the sick she had visited during the week and the things she had been able to do for them. She wrote of canning grapes and making applesauce, as well as other activities. Near the end she invited us to have dinner with her.

Later in the afternoon Mr. Day phoned from Berkeley. He said, "I have unpleasant news." I braced myself. "Sister Gates passed away last night in her sleep," he continued.

"Why," I gasped, "we had a letter from her today!"

As I put the receiver down, memory focused pictures on my mental screen—the strong body, the willing hands, the good service, the pleasant thoughtfulness. "The peaceful death," I said to myself. "It is fitting she should have a kind death." Then the two first and last lines of Hanley's "Invictus" came to my mind:

*Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,*

*I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul.*

That evening when my husband came in from work I waited until he had read the mail before I told him Sister Gates was gone. "We have a letter from her today," he remarked.

"Yes," I replied, "it is a letter from heaven."

Showers of Blessings

As the Christmas season draws to a close, I wonder how many look back on the past year and count their blessings. I have had many blessings, and I am grateful for them.

On October 19 our group was organized into the Iola-Chanute Branch. Since last April, fifteen new members have been added to the branch; five of them are in my family: my son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Morrow, and their nine-year-old son, Howard; another son-in-law, Donald Wiles; and my granddaughter, Sheila Morrow. Mr. Morrow was ordained a teacher on October 21. My husband, Sam Matney, who was not a member at the time of our marriage, was baptized about eighteen months ago. My oldest daughter, Stella Wiles, was baptized four years ago. These fifteen recent baptisms are the result of two cottage meetings held in Iola and Chanute by Donald Kyser and Ralph Bobbitt. Two young men besides my son-in-law have been called to the priesthood: Robert Vohs to the office of priest and John Thomas to the office of deacon. One woman who was baptized, Mrs. Chester Moore, was critically injured in an automobile accident about a year ago. Prayers were requested for her in our mission. She recovered and accepted the church.

God is good to all of us if we are willing to go all the way with him. Sometimes that way may lead through pain and suffering and heartaches, but such may be the test of our faith. Whatever comes, we should remember that God never gives us more than we can bear. If we are faithful to our covenant with him, he is by our side in dark moments. I know this is true, because such has been my experience.

Let us start the new year with a greater determination to serve God better, telling the gospel story by word and example, so at the close of 1952 many more will be able to rejoice with us as members of Christ's church.

* ON ROMAN CATHOLICISM

The "Christian Herald" for January, 1952, features one of the most notable articles to appear in a number of years on Roman Catholicism. It is by Thomas Sugrue, a noted writer and a Catholic layman. It will be interesting to see how the church disciplines this plain-speaking son for his article. There is no Spanish Inquisition now, but there are still ways of applying punishment to those who speak or write too freely. Spiritually at least he may be burned at some invisible stake. Sugrue has some warning words for Protestants too, which one hopes will not be forgotten.

One question remains. Will the "Christian Herald," with its admirable editorial policy, be able to find some Protestant layman who can and will write as honestly, fearlessly, and clearly on Protestantism?

* UGMER

Are you suffering from the January Blues? Were the lights of your Christmas tree extinguished by a flood of bills? Are you lower than the tip of the Washington Monument—in the reflecting pool? Maybe this will help you.

You haven't seen anything if you haven't met Ugmer. He is spending the winter on a front porch up the street. Come over and see him sometime.

Ugmer is a moose. That is, he was a moose until he met our neighbor in the woods one day. Neighbor hunts with one of those super-ultra rifles and a telescope sight. He rarely misses.

The front porch would be small for a complete moose, so Ugmer's head and shoulders are sufficient. He is a superb bust. In the recent holidays he had a big red electric bulb on his nose, and looked like a tough uncle to Rudolph the red-nosed reindeer.

Ugmer is a useful citizen, a great morale-builder. . . . Suppose you are discouraged with yourself. Like us, you have shaved your personal map of Lower Slobovia for the gillionth time, observing the deforestation of Mount Baldy, the deepening erosion of wrinkles on the terrain, and other deteriorations too numerous to mention, too lamentable to think about. . . . Then you walk up the street and look at Ugmer.

Nature must have been in a sardonic mood when she fashioned him. She gave him magnificent strength, an irritable disposition, and a face suitable only to nightmares. . . . You look at Ugmer and say to yourself, "Thank goodness, I don't look that bad—yet." And you feel better all day.

The moral (which you should not try to escape, my brethren of the gray and gloomy years) is that you should not feel too sorry for yourself until you consider what others are enduring. Think of it this way—beauty would have no meaning if it weren't for us. It would be too common. But with us for a background, the excellence of beauty shines, precious for its rarity. It is enough of a blessing to see beauty; we can't expect, personally, to have it.

There you are. Feel better?

New Slide Set

Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon

31 slides in color tell the story of how Jesus Christ, the Son of God, visited the scattered descendants of Abraham to bring them the message of salvation according to the ancient promise.

This is the story of the sacred records, of the war that destroyed those people, and of the burial of their records in the ground.

This is the story of how those records came forth in the latter days, fulfilling the prophecies of the Bible, and inaugurating the restoration of the gospel, in a "marvelous work and a wonder."

News and Notes

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Miss Maxine Franklin

Should I feel "all washed up" some day and drag myself into the doctor's office with a do-something-quick plea in my voice, I'd expect some action. But if he says, "A bad case of umteeda, better get in the hospital right away," he'd first have to reckon with Miss Franklin, manager of admissions, before I'd have a chance to go out there and get into bed. If there positively is no bed available, I take my "umteeda" home and wait till she gives me the "come on." Next spring she will be given her twenty-five-year-service pin at the Sanitarium.

Sister Franklin is a native of Iowa. She was born, baptized, and educated at Harlan. She graduated from high school in 1920, from Graceland in 1922, and studied a year in the Kansas City Art Institute. Her first job was that of teaching in grade school at Denison, Iowa. Then she came to Kansas City and worked two years in a Kansas City, Missouri, business office before starting her work at the Sanitarium. She was the only office employee in those days. At present it takes twelve office workers to handle the many details of this modern hospital. Miss Franklin has spent many of her vacations traveling. She has visited in every state in the nation, Canada, and Mexico. She has acted as sponsor for several graduating classes from the school of nursing and has kept in touch with many of the girls who have gone out in fields of service.

She has taught in the church school for twenty-five years. Part of this time she taught teen-agers, the rest of the time beginners and primary ages. When West College Street church opened she left Stone Church and is now teaching a primary class for that congregation.

The delightful smile she has flashed for this picture comes easily. She meets people well and is mild and kindly, in spite of the years of trying work as chief accountant and admissions head. Hospital accounts are hard to collect in many cases. She has learned that the smile helps.

IN CALIFORNIA

President W. Wallace Smith was present at the Communion service of the Venice, California, congregation on January 6. In the afternoon, he participated with Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, Garland Tickemyer, stake president; J. Stanley Kelley, stake bishop; and Herbert Blakeman, pastor, in the groundbreaking ceremony for the new church to be erected at Venice. On January 8, President W. Wallace Smith preached at Long Beach, where the pastor is Everett Niles, and on January 9, he preached at Santa Ana where the pastor is Rodney Engel. Brother Smith is en route to Hawaii.

IN OMAHA AND COUNCIL BLUFFS

Apostle D. T. Williams was in Omaha, Nebraska, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 13. He preached the morning sermon at Omaha, and in the afternoon met with the reunion-planning committee of the Reunion Association of the Associated Districts of Missouri Valley.

CHURCH SCHOOL INSTITUTE HELD

Southern Indiana District held a church school institute at Indianapolis January 12 and 13, under the direction of John R. Darling of the General Department of Religious Education. The worship details were handled by Billy C. Glenn, district church school director; and Chester Metcalf, district president. Brother Wayne Smelzer is the pastor of the host branch.

HOLD WINTER HOLIDAY

Winter holiday was held for the teen-age Zion's Leaguers of the Center Stake, at Gardner Lake January 12. Over 150 young people attended the afternoon and evening of recreation and fellowship. The program was directed by the general chairmen, Cap Hiles and Bob Carver, and was under the supervision of Lee Hart, stake youth director, and the City-Wide Zion's League cabinet.

NEWS OF THE SAN

The Sanitarium maternity department topped the record of babies born by an increase of 115 babies above the previous high of 1,278 born in 1950. An outstanding item of interest was the fact that fourteen sets of twins were born during the past year.

The new hospital laundry is the first to be finished of the five new projects now under construction at the San. The laundry began operation January 4.

SHOWS SLIDES

MISSIONARY DIES

William A. Brooner, an old-time missionary, died January 3. He served under Conference appointment from 1912 to 1922 and worked in Oregon, Kansas, Missouri, Arizona, and California. He is survived by his wife, three children, and eight grandchildren.

To Those Who Struggle

"For we have to struggle, not with enemies of flesh and blood, but with . . . the master spirits of this dark world."

—Ephesians 6:12, American Translation

A WOMAN READER wrote to us some months ago and said, "I wish you would say something to encourage those of us who struggle."

It had never occurred to us to identify such a group. They must be a minority. Yet, when we think of it, we know that there are some people for whom every day brings its portion of trials, problems, and decisions.

The strugglers cannot take things the easy way. They cannot accept things on blind faith. In honesty of conscience they have to know and understand for themselves. It is not possible to put them off with superficial answers. Like Doubting Thomas, they want tangible evidence. Like him, too, they have a greater testimony when it comes.

The struggler will cause extra work and trouble for the church officer, but he is often worth the effort.

* * * * *

Herald House once had in its employ a printer-philosopher (a printer needs to be something of a philosopher) who lightened many a dull day with his clever sayings. One of them is remembered in connection with this theme: "Life is a game for the rich; it is a struggle for the poor." There was many a discussion about people for whom life is, and probably always will be, a struggle. Our "pressroom proletarian" was one of the strugglers, but he eased his life and ours with his gift of a sunny bit of humor.

* * * * *

Arthur Hugh Clough wrote in one of his poems, "Say not, the struggle nought availeth." Charles Mackay, another nineteenth century writer, said, "Each struggle lessens human woe." The struggler wages a war against darkness and injustice and wins victories for humanity.

Paul was certainly aware of the conflict with life. Like him, we know the great effort necessary to overcome external circumstances and conditions. As children, we must sometimes defend ourselves against belligerent companions. There is much to overcome in getting an education. Entering mature life, we take part in the "struggle for existence." Hymn 218 admonishes, "Let courage rise with danger, and strength to strength oppose."

* * * * *

As if the opposition of external things were not enough, we have trouble within ourselves. "I have more trouble with myself than with any other man I have ever known," the evangelist Dwight L. Moody once confessed. Long before Moody, Paul had known the same difficulty, and wrote: "For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do."—Romans 7: 19.

When we find it hard to control our thoughts and actions, it may help us to remember that great and good people have had the same problem. We would like to have friends, but our sharp tongues offend those we love. We would like to be gracious and charming, but our awkwardness betrays us. We make good plans, but fumble in trying to execute them.

Our struggle at times seems endless. In moments of discouragement we may wonder if it is any use to try. Then the mood passes, and we go on again.

An incident was related of a certain branch business meeting in which a woman member arose to ask a question. She was one of the "strugglers" in search of understanding. The officer in charge misunderstood her motive, thought she was merely trying to obstruct business, and dismissed her question with a curt, brusque, impatient answer. She was keenly hurt.

In our church and congregational life, there are some who must struggle to understand. When they ask questions, it is not necessarily to oppose. We should be patient with such people. At the same time, we must be prepared for the chronic hecklers who will do anything for attention, even if it is unfavorable. Their utterances and conduct may bring distress and confusion to the congregation. The people have a right to some protection. But we should be patient with those who are struggling to understand and adjust themselves to the requirements of the gospel.

It should be realized that the honest strugglers are among the most valuable members. They are trying to grow. They seek to expand their spiritual and intellectual horizons. It is often hard for them, and they sometimes make it hard for others, but they are making an effort.

From a church viewpoint—yes, from the Lord's viewpoint—all members deserve credit for sincerity and honesty until they prove that their motives are not right. Implacable critics and troublemakers will eventually exhaust all patience. Those people need to be jolted into repentance.

Spiritual maturity does not come to all persons at the same age. For some it will be delayed. The road they travel is not an easy one. But if some of them are slow in getting there, it may be because they are aiming at a better goal.

Suggestions to Pastors for Scout Sunday

By F. Carl Mesle

SCOUT SUNDAY provides the church an opportunity to recognize its men and boys who participate in Cubbing or Scouting, whether in their own church pack or troop or in a group outside the church. Scouting is the official boys' program of the church and under good leadership has much of value to offer. It requires, however, the spiritual ministry of the church to make it complete and meaningful in the life of a boy or man. Thus each pastor is cautioned not to overlook the occasion of Scout Sunday as an opportunity to minister to the boys of his congregation and perhaps also to their friends.

In planning the observance of Scout Sunday, pastors should keep in mind that it is a church service rather than a Scout program. Scouting observes its birthday on February 8, but on February 10 it is the church honoring its Scouts. Thus, it is well for pastors to counsel with Scout leaders or boys for ideas or to seek the help of the local Scout office, but in the final analysis to create a church observance. If the service is well planned, pastors will have an opportunity to reach at least their own boys; while if it is poorly planned, they may lose them to another church for that service.

For developing the theme, "Forward on Liberty's Team," here are specific suggestions for pastors. They may be used at either morning or evening services:

1. Have Scouts participate in a flag ceremony at the beginning and perhaps at the end of the service.

2. Invite a qualified leader or an outstanding boy to the stand to lead or to assist in the service.

3. Invite boys or men to share in the presentation of the message of the day.

4. Recognize individuals or a unit for accomplishments in Scouting and for contributions to the church.

5. If you desire to better acquaint branch members with Scouting, invite in a Scout official as speaker or deliver the sermon on that subject yourself.

6. If you desire to minister essentially to the boys themselves, have the speaker prepare his sermon for the boys on their level. Subjects may include:

- a. The twelfth Scout Law, "A Scout Is Reverent"
- b. "Forward on Liberty's Team"
- c. Boyhood of Christ
- d. Spiritual qualifications of good citizenship
- e. Christ's "good turn"
- f. The place of religion in character building

7. If your congregation has its own Scout troop a Court of Honor may be held on Sunday evening along with the worship service, though sometimes a Court of Honor is more successful if held on a week night in the church.

8. Include in the service some recognition or encouragement of the "God and Country" award.

Add to these suggestions your own ideas for the kind of recognition from the church you would like to have had when you were a boy, and February 10 should be for one and all a happy and profitable Scout Sunday.

Baptismal Statistics

Even though the number of baptisms reported to The Department of Statistics in November was comparatively low, total reported baptisms for the first eleven months of 1951 are the highest for the same period since 1921. The 283 reported in November make a total of 4,556 reported to the end of November.

The first five stakes and districts in number of baptisms reported in November are Spring River District, 26; Lamoni Stake, 15; Northern California District, 15; Seattle District, 13; and Detroit International Stake, Center Stake of Zion, and Kansas City Stake, 12 each.

The first five branches in number of baptisms reported in November are McGregor, Michigan, 10; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 8; London-St. Thomas, Ontario, 7; and Fairland, Oklahoma; McDermott, Ohio, and Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, 6 each.

Also noteworthy are the reports from three missions: Yuba City, California, 8; Fargo, Michigan, 7; and Ocean Springs, Mississippi, 5.

Church Directory

It will soon be time to issue a new church directory of the branches, congregations, and missions throughout the church. This includes both those in the United States and abroad.

It has been two years since the last one was published. Many locations for our worship services have changed since that time. In fact because some of the pastors and district presidents were slow in sending the data, some errors were found in the last issue in spite of our most careful efforts to have it up to the minute.

We are asking that all district presidents and pastors of groups in unorganized territory make it their responsibility to get this information to us not later than April 20, 1952. Remember that the men of our armed forces and an ever-increasing number of tourists are depending on this source of information. They may even drive far out of their way to meet with the Saints only to be disappointed if the address is wrong or inadequate. We need your help. Take action promptly rather than risk failure and consequent disappointment.

Restoration and Education

By Edward Parker

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

WHEN WE READ this instruction today, we see nothing to surprise us. Education is so accepted that we might even consider the instruction as being needless. But conditions change so rapidly in the world that we tend to forget quickly the past in an endeavor to keep up with the present. However, if we consider this revelation in the time that it was given I'm sure it will have greater importance and significance.

The date is December, 1832—the beginning of a new era. In England there was the great industrial revolution, the effects of which had world-wide repercussions. Prior to this there was exploitation of child labor, and adults were thought of in terms of muscular ability rather than mental capacity. They were herded together in factories and workshops to labor under conditions that today fill us with horror and disgust. They were valued according to their capacity to work long and exhausting hours. Education for the masses was far from the minds of the few who employed them and reaped the benefits of their toil. But if the minority who were learned considered education for the worker as being unnecessary, no less did the workers themselves—and this in a nation that had and still has seats of learning of world-wide reputation. These conditions prevailed while from the minority there emerged men of outstanding scholastic ability whose thoughts and ideals have inspired men down to this day.

H. G. Wells said, concerning this particular time:

The drudge, on whom all the previous civilizations had rested, the creature of mere obedience, the man whose brains were superfluous, had become unnecessary to the welfare of mankind. He had to be educated; he had to understand what he was about. In England, by the thirties and forties of the nineteenth century, the disputes of the sects and the necessity of catching adherents young had produced a series of competing educational organizations for children. The second half of the nineteenth century was a period of rapid advance in popular education throughout the western world.

Such were conditions in Europe just prior to and during the time that Section 85 was given to the church.

LET US CONSIDER some of the things that were happening in America. Only fifty-six years before, the people of this great continent had declared their independence and separation from the controls and bondage of the Old World. But twenty years before 1832, they had been engaged in a war with the forces of the old regime. Emerging triumphant from this engagement, they began turning their endeavors to the settlement of new areas which lay before them. In such a time and condition no one could have criticized them too severely if they forgot formal education for the more important task of establishing homes and providing the necessities of life.

In such a time of great events, and apparently a new awakening in the mind of man, God revealed his mind and will to Joseph Smith, Jr. The outcome of this revelation was the organizing of the church in 1830. Section 85 came to this new group of people just two years later—a pioneering group willing to explore not only a new country but new ideas in the relationship of the mind of God to man. I say new ideas in relationship of the mind of God to man not in the sense of being something that had never been experienced before; but in the sense that the idea of God's speaking to man came forth at a time when men generally believed God had ceased for all time to do so. But with those who believed the testimony of Joseph Smith there arose a strong conviction of the fact that God was still concerned enough about men to make his mind and will known to them. To such a group, surely, would come a desire to be obedient to such revelations as God saw fit to give them.

Many individuals would have us believe that those who were leaders in this company were ignorant men of low mental quality having a lack of even such knowledge as the world recognized to be basic. If we take time, however, to learn something of these men we shall see that this is entirely erroneous. A few of those who were later associated closely with this particular part of Section 85, were Joseph and his brother Hyrum, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt and his brother Orson, along with others whose names are familiar to members of the church.

Oliver Cowdery was a schoolmaster, and both parents of Joseph Smith had been teachers at one time. It might be said that to be a teacher in that day did not demand the high degree of skill and learning that teaching does today, and that those men would not be able to qualify for such a position now. Yet whatever the age or time in history that we care to choose, the teacher has always been respected and looked up to by many of his contemporaries as having more than the average amount of intelligence and knowledge.

Again it must be accepted that those who are ignorant are prone to cling to old ideas and be satisfied with that which they have rather than attempt to move out into new fields of experience. Yet these people were willing to believe in new ideals, new hopes, and new endeavors, even in the face of strong opposition and bitter ordeals. In these experiences they learned many things that were not understood by those who created the experiences.

HOW MUCH MORE OUTSTANDING this revelation becomes when viewed in its own day and time! It came to a people moving out as a part of a new nation into new and unknown experiences. Greater responsibilities rested upon them than upon the individuals belonging to the society of old and stabilized nations whose laws, founded centuries before, formed the foundation by which their communities were ruled. Law and order was to a great extent the responsibility of each individual. In this era the Restoration Movement was beginning to take its place in the nation, even in the face of trials and difficulties and attempts of enemies to wipe it out.

In the midst of the problems, which were many and varied, came the voice of the Lord, guiding, counseling, and commanding. One commandment was for the Saints to teach each other. With all the troubles afflicting these people at Kirtland they might well have been too concerned about their own preservation to bother with teaching or education. Yet with a ready and willing acceptance of the Word of God they moved speedily to fulfill his command.

First of all they were required to teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom. They were to assemble and organize themselves, and in the light of this the school of the prophets was instituted at Kirtland, Ohio, about two months later. But the desire to comply with the commandment to the fullest led them beyond a school merely for the priesthood into the realm of education for all. A prior revelation given to W. W. Phelps in June, 1831, shows how prominent a place education had with these people (Doctrine and Covenants 55). He was instructed to assist Oliver Cowdery in the "printing and selection, and writing of books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instruction."

The Saints who gathered at Independence accepted this instruction literally. A schoolhouse was among the very first buildings erected by them in the new Zion. As the Saints moved from one place to another because of circumstance and necessity, this idea of education was constantly a foremost concern in their minds. They built the first public schools in Missouri in the early 1830's.

The February number of the Messenger and Advocate published at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835 contains the following notice in regard to the Kirtland school:

February 27, 1835

Having been requested by the trustees of the Kirtland School to give a small sketch of the number of students who have attended this institution, and of their progress in the different sciences, I cheerfully comply with the request, having been an instructor therein from its commencement in December last.

The school has been conducted under the immediate care and inspection of Joseph Smith, Jr., F. G. Williams, Sidney Rigdon, O. Cowdery, trustees.

When the school first commenced, we received into it both large and small, but in about three weeks the classes became so large, and the house so crowded, that it was thought advisable to dismiss all the small students and continue those only who wished to study the sciences of penmanship, arithmetic, English grammar, and geography. Before we dismissed the small scholars, there were in all about 130 who attended. Since that time there have been, upon an average, about 100, the most of whom have received lectures upon English grammar; for the last four weeks about 70 have been studying geography one half the day, and grammar and writing the other part.

Since the year, 1827, I have taught school in five different states, and I have visited many schools in which I was not engaged as teacher; but in none, I can say with certainty, have I seen students make more rapid progress, than in this. I expect myself to leave the institution, yet I have a great desire to see it flourish. I therefore most cheerfully recommend it to all those whose circumstances and situation will allow them to attend as being a place where strict attention is paid to good morals as well as to the sciences.

W. C. McLELLIN.

IN SPITE of the difficulties of that day, the people tried to comply as best they could with the command of God.

When the Saints moved to Nauvoo, following their expulsion from Missouri, they again turned their attention to education. In the application for the charter for the city of Nauvoo there was included a request that provision be made for a municipal university, the first in America.

The hopes and aspirations of the leaders of the early Restoration period are clearly seen in a proclamation issued by the Presidency on January 15, 1841.

The University of the City of Nauvoo will enable us to teach our children wisdom—to instruct them in all knowledge, and learning, in the arts, sciences, and learned professions. We hope to make this institution one of the great lights of the world, and by and through it to diffuse that kind of knowledge which will be of practical utility, and for the public good, and also for private and individual happiness.—Journal of History, Volume XV.

The school at Nauvoo may never have developed to the standing of a university, but this item does show the ideals and aims of those men and women who came to make their homes in Nauvoo.

LOOKING BACK to that time we clearly see the wisdom of God as he commanded the Saints to study and gain knowledge of things pertaining to the kingdom of God—"of things . . . in heaven and in earth, things which are; things which must shortly come to pass, things at home and abroad, a knowledge of countries and kingdoms" that his commission may be fulfilled.

As we see and hear daily the perplexities that beset the nations, both in their national and international relationships, we sense more clearly the need for people of knowledge. But more than just knowledge is needed. We must have people endowed with knowledge supplemented by understanding. People who, with intelligence, will apply their knowledge to bringing forth right relationships among themselves and their fellow-men. To do this it is necessary to have the knowledge specified in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21 strengthened and made more complete by the attendance of the grace of God.

We should not lose sight of the fact that this commandment was given specifically to the church. Under its direction the early members moved out to the best of their ability. Today facilities for gaining a high standard of education are much greater. At no time in the history of the Restoration Movement has the opportunity for the climaxing of this commandment been so great as it is today. In so far as we individually constitute the church today, this commandment comes to us. We ought to move forward with the zeal of the early Saints to gain such an education as will enable us to be "prepared in all things" and to "magnify the calling whereunto we have been called."

The need for such a full education is particularly essential for those who are called to go forth and teach the gospel. If men are to go and declare this work to people of other nations, they must do so with an understanding and a deep appreciation of the historical background of the people they would serve. Only with such an understanding can there come an appreciation of problems and factors which many times are very nationalistic.

This gospel of the Restoration must be presented to all peoples as being able to satisfy their needs. Such a presentation can be made only by those who have gained a knowledge and full understanding of the ones they minister to.

The wisdom of God was manifest in this commandment, and the early Saints moved out in a worthy endeavor to fulfill it. Now the opportunities are much greater for us to accept that commandment and to act upon it for the building of his kingdom here on earth.

No Sundays to Throw Away

Sunday, November 4

Somewhere in Korea

THIS DAY IS SUNDAY. To the fighting man it is the same as any other day except for one thing—the opportunity to pause for a moment and worship God. Yet all cannot worship at the same time, for the line must still be held against the enemy.

Our church this morning was a brown, barren spot of level ground. The pews were the earth itself. The front of our church was a sheltering range of hills that hide us from the view of the enemy. The altar was an army jeep. The windows were the wideness of the sky. Behind our church were many pieces of artillery, and all through the service they punctuated the sentences with loud blasts of firing.

The congregation was not large. Even in combat those who seek God are in the minority. These men had crawled from a sleeping bag in the cold fog of the morning. They had washed and shaved in ice water. Many had walked no small distance to attend services, for the services are held as close to the center of the area as possible. Each man carried his gun to church.

We had no beautiful organ to lead us in singing our hymns, only the cold wind whistling down from the mountains accompanied our voices. Yet we were thankful for this opportunity to worship God—thankful just for the fact that we were alive. Even though cold and hungry with a hunger that no food can satisfy, we were thankful.

There are so few Sundays in one's life to go to church. Only fifty-two Sundays in a year, and perhaps seventy years at the most. There are no Sundays to throw away.

You at home have every opportunity to worship God. Surely it is not too hard to get up on Sunday, to eat a hot breakfast in a warm house and drive a few miles to church.

—CAPTAIN JAMES K. VAN FLEET

Power Made Manifest

By Abel Hall

Part I

The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom. . . . The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy. My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord; and let all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.—Psalm 145: 9-12, 20, 21.

I HAVE OFTEN BEEN ASKED by many of the Saints who have known something of my life in the church, why I did not write down some of my experiences for the benefit of the readers of the Herald, and just as often I have hesitated to do so. However, when I have thought of the blessing that I have personally received in reading of the way God has dealt with the men who have represented the church in these the last days I realize I am being negligent in my responsibility to my fellow Saints if I do not write.

It was my privilege to labor under the pastorate of the late Elder John Bailey, who presided for several years over the North Manchester Branch. On one occasion we talked about the experiences of our missionaries as related in the Herald and Autumn Leaves, and Brother Bailey said, "Well, Abel, it has never been my lot to have this kind of testimony, but I do believe these men when they tell me of their experiences, for such is the heritage of the Saints."

Many times since his death I have wished that I could have had the opportunity of relating to him the incidents in my life that I am about to write herewith, for I know he would have rejoiced that one of his pupils in the work had gone through such experiences.

LET ME FIRST OF ALL give a little of my background. My parents were of orthodox Methodist stock, the kind of folks who loved their Bible, who regarded the Sabbath as being a holy day, and who did not believe in doing anything on that day that could be done on any other day of the week. Dad especially was very strict in this respect. He was married twice and became the father of two families. I was a son of his second wife. My half-sister, Elizabeth, was the one responsible for introducing the latter-day message to my parents, and she herself later became the wife of Seventy W. H. Greenwood.

I don't remember anything about my grandparents, save my maternal grandfather. He was a well-known orator in northern England and one of the leaders of the Chartist Movement—a movement very much misunderstood by many people who have never taken the trouble to investigate the real objective back of it.

In those days the only people who were allowed the vote were the aristocrats and landed gentry. The Chartists had six points in their program: (1) manhood suffrage, (2) equal electoral districts, (3) vote by ballot, (4) annual Parliaments, (5) abolition of property qualification, and (6) payment of members of the House of Commons.

Their methods certainly were not always above reproach. In consequence of action taken by the government, the guards were often called out to quell disturbances caused by the Chartists, and my own grandfather was one of the many victims of the military charges made with open sabers. The only time I remember seeing him was when he lay on his deathbed as a result of his wounds in the old Manchester Royal Infirmary, which then stood in Piccadilly where the present famous Piccadilly Gardens are now located. His motto was "Always stand for what you believe to be right, even if it means your death."

Maybe I inherited the spirit that was in him. This, together with the fact that when I was three years old my parents had become members of the church and saw to it that all the children went with them to church and Sunday school, may account for an incident that occurred early in my life.

WHEN I WAS just three and a half years old I was missing from home. For several hours my parents were distressed because, although they searched the neighborhood high and low, no trace could be found of the baby of the family. Eventually news was brought to my mother that a child had been seen some distance from my home, with a crowd of some twenty people round him in a circle, and he was preaching to them. I was that child. I don't recall much of it, but I am told that I was telling them all about what I had heard at church and Sunday school, interspersed with stories of my mother and my father and the family in general. I can only remember seeing the hand of my mother stretching through the crowd toward me, and the words of one person who said, "Leave him alone, Mother, he is doing us more good than the Salvation Army."

When I was fifteen I had as my companions two members of the church of my own age—Brother Curtis Leggott and John J. Weate. We were inseparables, and the church was always our first consideration. In those days there was no place of worship belonging to the Reorganization that was large enough to house a district conference, so we hired the vestry hall of the Hume Town Hall, and as usual we three companions were seated together.

Near by were seated three young sisters of my own age, and immediately I saw one of them that attracted my attention more than the others. I felt there and then that here was the young lady I would like for my life companion.

A big difficulty was in the way, however, for I knew my father's aversion to people commencing their courtship at so early an age, but I was eventually able to have her invited to my home, and to my intense joy as soon as Father saw her he consented to our keeping company together. Eight years afterwards we were married.

At that time none of our branches were registered to solemnize marriages, so we were married at the city register office, and the religious ceremony was performed afterwards at North Manchester Branch by Patriarch Henry Greenwood.

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-SIX and we had been blessed by the birth of our daughter Florence, the emigration fever had bitten very deeply into the membership of the branch. One of the families related to me by marriage was going to Australia. They persuaded me to promise that as soon as they were settled in Brisbane, I would come with my wife and daughter to join them.

Shortly after this, Brother Joseph Dewsnap, Jr., came to me and told me that the Lord had given him a vision in which he had seen me going to Australia, and the Lord had told him to warn me against the project.

I thought it very strange that the Lord knew the number of Elder Dewsnap's door, but seemed not to know mine, so I went on with my preparations for the voyage to Australia.

Another young brother also had arranged to come with us. As time neared for our departure, I set out one evening to visit this brother in order to make our final arrangements. I accordingly boarded the streetcar on my way to his home, and although it is now forty-six years since this incident happened, I remember it as vividly as if it occurred only yesterday.

Taking the only vacant seat in the car, I noticed that in the seat right in front of me was a very old man, his hair was pure white and also his beard. His two hands were resting on a walking stick which he held between his knees. I have always prided myself on my ability to look anyone right in the face, but as I looked across into the face of this fellow-passenger I must confess that I felt somewhat abashed. He was looking directly into my eyes, and I felt as if he were looking right into my soul.

Presently the passenger on my right got up and left the car, and immediately the old man crossed over to my side and seated himself in the seat just vacated. With no introduction on either of our parts, he half turned in his seat, placed his left hand on my right knee and told me point blank that I was not to go to Australia. To say that words failed me does not express in any way the strange feeling that took hold of me. I tried to speak but could not utter a word.

Arriving at my destination I at once turned round to look at this strange messenger, only to find that he was not to be seen in the car, and the seat where he had been was vacant. I was sure then as I am more sure now that he was a messenger from God, and the Lord had indeed shown me that He knew the number of my door. I did not go to Australia.

IN AUGUST, 1914, my wife and I had arranged to take a holiday on the Isle of Man. We had been there often before and were eagerly looking forward to spending another vacation along with our young daughter. That very month World War I broke out, and the government sent out a warning to all who intended crossing the waters that it would be unsafe to take the risk on account of enemy submarines; so we changed our plans and went to a little place called Marton near to Blackpool in Lancashire.

We spent a nice holiday there, for it is in the country and within reasonable walking distance of the sea front. Our holiday over—as I had to be back at my place of employment on Monday morning—we arranged to return home on the three o'clock afternoon train from Waterloo station, Blackpool.

Every effort we made on that day to pack our bags and set off to catch that train seemed to meet with frustration. We reached the top of the steps leading down to the platform in time to see our train steam out of the station.

We had an hour to wait for the next train and seated ourselves comfortably, ready for our journey home. We arrived all right at Preston, which is a big junction in the north through which trains enter from all directions of the country. We had been in Preston station about two hours without moving and, becoming anxious, I looked out of the window and was amazed to find that every one of the platforms had trains pointing in the direction in which we were to travel, and not one single train left the station.

I got out and inquired of one of the officials as to what had gone wrong and was told that the three o'clock train from Waterloo station was smashed up on the bridge just outside the station, so that no trains could either enter or leave.

About midnight our train was made a relief train to carry some of the unfortunate people who had been injured. Never shall we forget the screams of the young folks in our compartment as our train, now steaming backwards toward Blackpool, had the brakes applied. Their nerves were terribly shattered. We breathed a prayer of thanks that we had missed that three o'clock train.

As I have said we were turned back to Blackpool and then switched on to the Southport line making a very wide detour. We arrived in Manchester at two o'clock the next morning.

Feed My Flock

By George M. Doubledee

WE READ the gentle command given by our Lord to Apostle Peter concerning his attending to the duties intrusted to him—"Feed my sheep." To many of us the thought does not arise as to how this is to be accomplished. We permit those who are our helpers to pour out just "any old thing," in any quantity they may choose, to the sheep over which we have been made overseers.

In so many Scriptures we find "the children of the kingdom" compared to the sheep and lambs that grazed the hills and plains of Judea. I have had some experience with them and can readily see why our Lord so often made this comparison. "Spiritual" sheep in many ways are like these woolly animals that furnish meat for our tables and fiber for our clothing.

First of all, the sheep that range in the flocks on our farms simply will not do well without constant attention. This one has become "wool blind." That one has a lame front foot. Another refuses to own a second lamb born to her, and the twin is doomed to die unless steps are taken by the shepherd. The good shepherd knows each sheep and is acquainted with its habits. He can see when it is sick and knows how to minister to its needs. It has been said by many sheepmen that a sick sheep is a dead sheep, but the good shepherd who knows and loves his sheep will recognize symptoms of distress and minister to them before they become sick. The lamb that is blinded by its own wool will not grow fat and will eventually fall in death to some sort of malady. The shepherd will not only save one sheep by the timely use of his clippers around the creature's eyes, but will prevent endangering the others by contact to the disease the weak one has. The lame sheep many times has the vent in the top of its hoof clogged. The good shepherd knows this and will not permit the sheep to hobble along on three legs, trying to keep up with the well ones. He will stop and examine its hoof to see what the cause of its discomfort is.

To work with sheep is to love them, and the shepherd who cannot look upon his flock with pride is not a fit man to be a shepherd. If he does not feel a love in his heart for each one, the small amount of work he does for the flock will pay few dividends. If he cannot rejoice to see weak little twin lambs, which must be held up on their feet until their stomachs are filled for the first time with their mother's milk—if he does not smile at their lambish games, played from dawn till dark—if he fails to swell with pride as he sees these same twin lambs later drop to their front knees on each side of their mother and fairly raise her hind quarters from the ground as they see how quickly they can drain the last drop of milk she has for them—he may own some sheep, but he is not a shepherd.

EACH LAMB knows three protectors: its mother, who does not tolerate visitors for lunch; the flock ram, who is constantly on guard over the flock (a champion who can lick a bull or a boar with amazing speed and ease), and the shepherd who is its constant friend and guide.

It was just after harvest that one of my lambs became ill. I had noticed it but, being busy with other things, put off from day to day the little attention that would have corrected the condition. Soon his body weakened. His chances of recovery depended on immediate action. Internal parasites had multiplied until the lamb's digestive system was out of balance. I reasoned that the medicine which would rid it of the parasites would further weaken it, but since there seemed to be no other course to take, I administered the medicine. The next morning it was a very sick little lamb that I picked up in my arms and carried to the barn. Clover hay and other special feed was offered, but the lamb steadily lost strength. I realized something must be done at once to keep its strength up until the medicine could run its course. I counseled with my wife, and she mixed the "old stand-by"—some warm milk, a couple of eggs, and a little corn syrup in a drenching bottle. Armed with this "liquid strength" I went back to the barn. I tilted the lamb's head and started feeding it. It smacked its lips and gulped as it drank faster and faster. Then it strangled, and the very thing that had the power to save its life ran into its lungs. It died there in my arms. I had killed it—first by neglect, then by feeding it too fast. I bowed my head in sorrow, not because of financial loss, but because I could do so little at such a late hour. I had literally drowned the lamb with attention after almost killing it by neglect!

A great lesson was indelibly stamped on this shepherd's heart. I learned that we must minister to the sheep, over which the Holy Ghost has made us protectors, at the first symptom of distress. Delay spells disaster! The flock must be fed a balanced ration under the direct supervision of the shepherd. Personal attention is demanded. We must either feed them ourselves or personally direct their feeding. Every sheep should feel it has a special friend in the shepherd. We must continually watch over the flock. Personal effort in each life will pay dividends a hundred-fold! We must visit each sheep and study its problems until we know its strength and weaknesses.

IN MANY WAYS the forcefulness of this parable illustrates the understanding and great wisdom of the Master, the Great Shepherd. By our love for the sheep we shall know those who truly love the Lord. Those who love the most stand to lose the most, but they also stand to gain all—the kingdom of God together with their flocks. The others stand idly by while the flock under their care slowly dwindles away and dies.

A few months ago I too was sick—spiritually so. But thanks be to God there was a shepherd who cared enough to spend personal time and labor, above and beyond the call of duty, to help me regain my spiritual balance. To the good shepherd a sick sheep is not a dead sheep! As long as there is a spark of spiritual life, there is hope. As shepherds the only course we have to avoid sorrow, heartache, and misery of soul is to give generously of the love that flows freely from the heart of a good shepherd.

Does Margarine Cause Sterility?

ONE OF THE MOST RECENT brain children of the food fadists is the idea that margarine, if fed from childhood, causes sterility. Here we see evidenced a trick which a designing person uses to catch the unwary. He makes a statement that sounds possible and can hardly be disproved, though it cannot be verified, because of the lack of scientific studies in the field. But where he usually makes his mistake is in becoming specific. When he identifies the source of the trouble, he usually ignorantly undoes his own efforts.

In the case of margarine these unlearned individuals tell us it is the coloring that causes the trouble. Actually the coloring matters used in margarine are the same as those used in butter and cheese. I checked with the dairy industry department of the University of Minnesota, the biochemistry department of the University of Wisconsin, with the Maumee Coloring Company of Maumee, Ohio (which company makes the coloring compounds), with the Encyclopedia Americana, and the Minneapolis Public Library for authority for that statement. This significant fact is often overlooked because the law does not require butter manufacturers to declare the ingredients used in their products.

Surely everyone knows that butter isn't uniform in color all the year round. Natural butter ranges from a dark yellow—almost orange—in summertime to a very pale yellow—almost colorless—in winter, unless the cows are fed certain color-producing foods. People seem to like uniformity. Hence the dairy industry obliges by coloring butter with the same products used to color margarine to keep it uniform all year.

Since only a few people have been making their own butter during the lifetime of the present younger generation, we have all eaten this coloring matter from childhood whether we ate margarine or butter. If this story of those who specialize in giving us false information really had the facts, the race would die out with those born some twenty-five to fifty years ago. Actually the birth rate among this age group is so high as to alarm some who still believe the old Malthusian theory of populations. Even eighteen-year-olds are still able to produce children.

THREE TYPES of materials are used to color butter and margarine. One is carotene, the material which God chose to use to color carrots and other yellow fruits and vegetables. It is chemically similar to vitamin A and has some vitamin A activity in the body. If that would cause sterility, all green and yellow vegetables and fruits would have to be taboo! A second material comes from the pulp around the seeds of the annatto tree—a fruit, mind you, and a wholesome one. What would Section 86 say about that? Sometimes a certified coal tar dye is used. Even then the word "certified" indicates that it has been tested by the Food and Drug Administration and found to be safe for human consumption.

Dr. Royal Lee who popularized this theory has made another blunder in blackballing margarine. He says it causes sterility because it doesn't have vitamin E in it as butter has. Actually animal fats contain little or no vitamin E, and butterfat is no exception. The most excellent sources of this vitamin are wheat-germ oil, cottonseed, and other vegetable oils except olive oil. In 1948 the margarine industry was the second largest user of soybean oil in the States and the largest user of cottonseed oil. Other oils used by the industry include those from peanuts and corn. Some margarines still use refined meat fats, but this is a minor part of the total product. Even if the greater portion of the vitamin E originally in the vegetable oils might be destroyed in refining them, margarine would still compare favorably with butter in this respect. Besides, no one has been able to prove that vitamin E alone can either cause or cure human sterility. The fact that Dr. Lee received his training in dentistry may account for these unsound claims in the field of nutrition.

Since it has been claimed that the "research" done to establish the fact that sterility results from the use of margarine was in Wisconsin, I inquired of Dr. C. A. Elvehjem, Department of Biochemistry, College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin, what research had been done in that field. Here is his reply verbatim.

In reply to your letter of November 18, I know of no experimental evidence that margarine produces sterility. We have done considerable work on the effect of different fats in nutrition, and from our results we concluded that in a mixed diet such as most humans consume, similar results are obtained whether animal or vegetable fats are used. We can demonstrate under certain conditions, especially when the ration is high in lactose, a decreased growth response when vegetable fats are used in place of animal fats. Most margarines are now made of vegetable fat but there are, of course, some on the market which contain animal fats.

By Mildred (Nelson) Smith

As far as we can determine, both vegetable dyes and synthetic dyes are used for coloring both butter and margarine.

Sincerely yours,
C. A. Elvehjem

IN CASE some other ingredients in margarine might be called into question, let's take a look at them all. You'll sometimes find lecithin listed. Lecithin is the part of egg yolk, soybean, and some other fat-containing foods that nature has used to keep the fat from separating out of the product. It is used for the same purpose in margarine.

Monoglycerides may be listed as an ingredient of margarine. The chemist calls all fats glycerides. Monoglycerides are simply fatty substances. Some of them occur naturally in almost all vegetable oils. They help prevent the margarine and other shortenings from becoming oily and may help prevent rancidity. They also help to keep the fat from separating when it is used for frying foods and they help to make a better cake than could otherwise be made. Sometimes extra ones are added.

To some margarines—but not to all of them—sodium benzoate is added to improve the keeping qualities of the product. This preservative has been tested by the Federal Food and Drug Administration and has been safely used in many foods for a great number of years. It is the sodium salt of benzoic acid which occurs naturally in cranberries. It is not toxic in the concentration used in foods. Perhaps enough could be taken at once to be harmful, but it would also be possible to take enough of some of the vitamins to be toxic. If ill effects should result from its authorized use in foods, they could certainly not be charged to margarine, for margarine contains it far less consistently than do many other foods.

Modern margarine has a composition much like butter. Each is approximately 80 per cent fat, 15½ per cent moisture, 3 per cent salt, and 1-1½ per cent milk solids. Both are flavored by the action of selected bacteria known as "flavor cultures." Diacetyl, sometimes listed among margarine ingredients, is a chemical produced naturally by this bacterial action. It gives the characteristic flavor to both butter and margarine.

A Career in Church Education

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

J. A. Gunsolley

Superannuation

We were present for the opening of General Conference (1934) after a brief stop at our home in Lamoni, Iowa, and a few days with our daughter, Marjorie, in Independence. This conference was very significant in my life, in that it marked the beginning of a new epoch. I had been under church appointment since 1925 traveling as a patriarch and evangelist, and serving as a pastor; my wife accompanied me most of the time. No other thought had entered our minds than that I would be continued for a time yet. When the appointments were read on the closing day of the conference, we sat there all expectant, wondering what our field would be. We had hoped that it would be "Southern New England," for we had not visited many branches in the district, having been limited in traveling by my work as pastor in Cleveland. Like a bolt of lightning out of a clear sky came the words of the secretary, "J. A. Gunsolley, superannuated." We were both shocked. We were in good health, and my diary showed that I had preached and lectured more than three hundred times during the year preceding the Conference. No account had been made of the number of lectures and talks made by my wife or the times she conducted junior church and helped in music and dramatics. The amount of work she did cannot be overestimated. We looked at each other, and neither of us spoke a word for some time. I wondered if some report had been made to the appointing authorities that our work was no longer of sufficient value to the church to justify our being continued in the capacity in which we had been laboring. We were not aware of anything having been done to create such an impression. We were consoled and comforted, however, when we were assured by members of the Quorum of Twelve and others, whose responsibility it is to make the appointments, that our superannuation was an acknowledgment of appreciation of our work in the past, and respect for our advancing years. They believed it right and proper that our burden of responsibility should be made lighter for the remainder of our years by permitting us to labor as we should find it convenient and desirable without definite appointment as to the place and character of service to be rendered. A very pleasant thing of especial interest to me happened at the superannuation ceremony. When President Frederick M. Smith pinned the "Superannuated" ministry button badge on the lapel of my coat he said in a quiet undertone, "Uncle Jerry, this is to pay you back for some of the spankings you gave me in school." I would not want it to be thought that by telling this incident I am intimating in the least that Fred was a troublesome boy. It showed that he did not hold any resentment against me as a result of our relations as teacher and pupil, for which I was thankful.

Resumption of Home Life

Following the General Conference of 1934, instead of getting ready for a new appointment as we had expected, we returned to our home in Lamoni which I had retained since building it in 1893, except for the time I had served the church as a general appointee. To give up missionary work and return to home life was almost as much of an effort as it had been to break up home life for missionary work. We both had enjoyed our ministry among the branches, feeling we were able to be of help to the Saints in many ways; and our efforts had seemed to be much appreciated.

Lamoni seemed small, physically speaking, after living and laboring in Duluth, Cleveland, Boston, Providence, and other cities. Many of the houses looked insignificant and neglected. The depression had made it impossible for property owners to keep up repairs. At first I could not avoid some feeling of resentment at having to settle in such a small community for—probably—the rest of my days. This feeling did not last long, for at our reunion I was told through the gift of prophecy that it was the will of the Lord that I should make our home there and minister to the Saints of Lamoni Stake. I had said a number of times in public and in private that when the Lord should decide it would be better for all concerned for me to move to Independence or elsewhere, I would gladly make a change, if he would open the way and let me know.

Since my superannuation I have been fairly active in church work trying to be ready to respond to calls for service. I have given patriarchal blessings as called for, and my wife has taken them in short-hand. She had been active in women's work, serving three years as president of the Patroness Society of Graceland College, and four years as president of the Lamoni Mite Society besides actively participating in the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and in church and community groups of the places where we have lived.

Through my years of ministry many things have occurred that have been interesting, some of which I will briefly relate without reference to when they occurred.

Influence As a Teacher

No one lives to himself alone. Everyone, no matter how humble, influences the lives of others. At the close of a sermon preached by one of the young members of the Quorum of Twelve who had been associated with me in Graceland, I offered congratulations and expressed my appreciation of his excellent sermon. He gave me a look of gratitude and asked soberly, "Do you know how much of you was in that sermon?" I had always understood that schoolteachers had a great responsibility for the power of their example. This incident brought it to my mind forcibly.

One evening a young elder with whom I had been to administer to a sick member turned to me very sincerely and said, "Brother Gunsolley, I want to thank you for the good influence you have been in my life. You will never know how much your example and advice has meant to me."

When I left my work at Graceland I was happily surprised to be presented a "memory book" consisting of a loose-leaf notebook containing autographs, letters, notes, and written expressions of gratitude from scores of the students, faculty members, and others associated with the college, indicating their appreciation of "Uncle Jerry." It gave me a strong desire and determination not to violate their confidence in me or in the church of which I am a representative.

Desired Faith of Elijah

One day I was working in my garden and a neighbor woman came across the street and said, "Brother Gunsolley, Gracia is very sick, and we want you to pray for her. We do not ask you to come to our house for she has scarlet fever and you have little ones of your own and might expose them. We are sure if you will pray for her she will be all right." It was then I wished I might have the faith of Elijah. I went into the house where Sister Gunsolley and others of our family joined me in prayer that God would visit the family and, if he should so will, to restore Gracia to health. The little girl was healed in a short time, and looked as though nothing had been wrong with her health.

Unusual Experiences in Preaching

Heman C. Smith, Hyrum O. Smith, and I, while going to a reunion, stopped to dedicate a little country church in northern Minnesota. Of the three visiting brethren the Smiths were a majority, so the minority had to do the preaching. It was one of the smallest audiences I had ever addressed. But yielding to the "powers that be," I did the best I could and was singularly blessed. After the service the young schoolteacher said to me that what I presented was just what she wanted to hear. She was not a member of the church, and the Spirit had directed me for her edification. I've had many experiences similar to this one.

Returning to Boston one Sunday evening after filling an appointment under the direction of the minister in charge, I was occupying the pulpit and had an experience I never had before or since to the same extent. I found myself asking specific questions concerning the church as though they were being asked by someone from the audience, and then answering them. I noticed two young ladies sitting directly in front of me who seemed much interested. When I answered a question, one of them, who was a member of the church, nudged the other who was not a member, and nodded to her as much as to say, "That's it, don't you see?" At the close of the service they apologized to me for their unusual conduct. That very afternoon they had been together and discussed the same questions. The member was so well pleased I had answered them that she could not refrain from giving her friend the nudge and nod of approval. I counted it as one of those occasions when the promise was verified that in the very hour His servants have need the Lord will give them words to say. This promise is based upon the condition that proper effort had been made to store up in mind principles of truth, for the promise that the Spirit will "bring to your remembrance whatsoever things I have said unto you" cannot be fulfilled unless those "things" have been stored in the memory.

"All Will Be Well in the End"

At a time soon after May's death when I was grieving not only because of this great loss, but also over the terrible affliction under which Marjorie was suffering that would prevent her ever walking again, I was spoken to through the gift of prophecy by one of the brethren in a prayer meeting. He said, in effect, with reference to Marjorie's condition, "All will be well in the end." Of course, I desired to know when and what that "end" would be. But for that I would have to wait, and am still patiently waiting. It gave me comfort, however, and helped me to bear the burden.

Assuring Words

One of the many trips I made in the interest of the work in the various departments of the church was at a reunion of the North Dakota District. I had been absent from home about three weeks and had not received any word during that time as to what conditions might be. Marjorie was a great care, not being able to walk. Her grandparents, Father and Mother Fisher, were staying with the family. Naturally, I was concerned over the matter, but I did not tell anyone of my feelings. At the prayer service one morning in a tent upon the broad prairie with the wind blowing a gale and flapping the canvas—a condition tending to add to my anxiety rather than to my assurance—a brother spoke to me through the gift of prophecy and told me that the Lord knew my anxiety, that he was watching over my loved ones, and that all was well, and I should have no fear.

Work Divinely Commended

Another time when the question of whether or not Graceland College should be discontinued was before the church, I was visiting a reunion. The apostle in charge of the reunion, who was also a trustee of the college, was in favor of closing the college as ordered by General Conference, but under the spirit of tongues and interpretation he commended highly my work in the church, saying the Lord was well pleased with my service, an important part of which was connected with keeping the college open. I accepted it as an endorsement of my work in general and, under conditions existing, of my work in the college.

Change of Residence

Finally we decided our home in Lamoni was larger than we needed and the garden was too large also. Our children had taken up residence elsewhere, and most of our kinsfolk no longer lived in Lamoni. We had quite a desire to go to Independence to live, little suspecting the time might be near when our desire would be realized. Some people from Philadelphia decided they would like to secure a home in Lamoni and asked us if we would sell our home. We hardly knew what to say, but thought we would put the price so high that they would not think of paying it. Much to our surprise they accepted our price and terms. Then the question of a place to live had to be settled. We heard that a nice place just the size we desired was for sale in Lamoni and we went to look at it, little thinking we would be interested in buying it. But after looking it over we went back the next day to purchase it and in a few months were settled in our new home. We liked the place so well we thought surely this would be where we would reside until called to leave this world. However we still had a feeling that, if it were the Lord's will, we would like to move to Independence.

We arranged to attend the General Conference of 1947, going two or three weeks early so as to help Marjorie get ready for it. Her husband, George E. Anway, had died two years previously; her daughter Carol Lee, was in Graceland; and her mother-in-law, Sister Catherine Peters, who made her home with Marjorie, was in poor health. Marjorie had worked up quite a business as a home stenographer, doing mimeograph and other duplicating work for the public. Just before the convening of the Conference a woman came to ask if we would sell our place in Lamoni. She was a widow who had sold her property in Montana and, having friends in Lamoni, desired to locate there. Again we said we would sell but had not offered it on the market. We named a price we thought would be too high, but after coming to see the place she said she would take it and made payment of a hundred dollars to bind the bargain. We immediately set about securing a place in Independence. After consulting Marjorie we decided to build a four-room addition to her house. By the middle of May we had drawn our plans, hired a carpenter, and begun building operations. Everything seemed to work to our advantage, so that by the middle of August we were moved in. At last we were "at home in Zion"—a dream we had long hoped we would be able to fulfill.

(The End.)

Editor's note: J. A. Gunsolley was active in his duties as evangelist almost until his death on July 25, 1949. He took old age and diminishing activity with the grace of a well-disciplined minister for Christ. His death came as a crown of victory over the flesh—a calm repose from a life well spent. His companion, Martha, followed him into the spirit world on December 12, 1951. Their ministry together was beautiful and has left a treasured memory in the lives of many Saints and friends.

Question Time

Question:

Please explain the meaning of the last sentence of the introduction, Doctrine and Covenants, section 7: "translated from parchment, written and hid up by himself."

Iowa

R. S. F.

Answer:

Church History, Volume 1, page 33, states that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery differed in opinion as to the meaning of John 21:22, whether John died or continued to live. They agreed to "settle it by the Urim and Thummim." The revelation which resulted is a reproduction of the record made on parchment by John and hidden up by himself. It is a translation because the original was in another language than the English in which it is now given. It was purely a revelation by revelatory powers vested in Joseph Smith, and here exercised through the use of the Urim and Thummim. The only written word to begin with, which is implied by the source of the controversy, was that of the Bible.

ALMA C. ANDREWS

Question:

What does the church teach regarding our making our own choice of when we are born and when we die?

California

L.M.

Answer:

The church's teaching on all points is to be found in its adopted Scriptures—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. We recall no teaching in them touching this point; the nearest approach being Paul's statement that God "hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation" (Acts 17:26). This, however, refers to nations rather than to individuals. Any conclusion we might reach would be based upon the teachings of the law in general and not upon any specific statement; consequently they would be somewhat speculative.

Free agency, which grants man the right of choice, does not cover all things in human life but only moral issues—questions of right and wrong (Doctrine and Covenants 98:10). We cannot conceive of the human spirit choosing its time or place of birth, for only God knew the conditions of earth, and he alone could make an intelligent decision. Neither is man capable of making intelligent or wise choice as to when he should die, for he cannot know all the factors involved. The time, place, nationality, and parentage of each individual are reserved for God to determine according to his wisdom and understanding, such decisions not coming within the bounds of man's free agency or power of choice.

Question:

I have no life insurance, and I have not paid my tithing, although I have filed my financial statement. Should I take out life insurance or pay my tithing first?

California

Mrs. C. J. H.

Answer:

It is essential that an individual recognize his obligation to his family as paramount. The responsibility of agency places upon him the choice, or the matter of making decisions. He may therefore provide reasonable protection for himself and family even before paying his tithing, if at the same time he recognizes his obligation to the church through the filing of a statement and plans his financial program to meet both obligations. A reasonable amount of insurance, both for life and fire, is deemed practicable and wise in our economy.

He must also keep in mind that he has obligations to others. If he had no insurance on his car, and he had not paid his tithing, he should do one of two things—quit driving his car or take steps necessary to protect his fellow-man, and meet his obligation of tithing as nearly as possible within the range of his ability.

It is not the objective of the church to imperil the position of men or their families, but rather to train them to become good stewards, recognizing their responsibility to both the church and others.

Question:

Is there any revelation, or is there any scriptural basis, for the use of the title, "President," as it is applied to a counselor to the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church?

Alabama

J. A. P.

Answer:

Yes, there is a scriptural basis for the use of such title.

Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church. The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. . . . — Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.

The Quorum of the Presidency is referred to as being made up of presiding high priests, and specifically calls them presidents.

It is the natural outcome of the nature of the office. Even as the members of the quorum of twelve traveling councilors have an apostolic calling and carry the title of apostle so members of the presidency of the high priesthood are called the Quorum of the Presidency and carry the title, president (one who presides).

This, however, does not in any way remove from the president the mantle of his calling as prophet, seer, and revelator of the church. The calling as councilor to the president carries the power of presiding.

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church . . . and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner. . . . — Doctrine and Covenants 99:6.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Briefs

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.—The district president, John Booth, visited the branch December 9. He held a special priesthood service for the men, and also preached in the evening. At the same time, Sister Gladys Pycoc, supervisor of the women for the Toronto District, visited the women of the branch. Brother Gillian, pastor of the Hamilton Branch, was the speaker December 2.

A Christmas party was held by the women's department in the church basement, and the husbands of the members attended.

The choir presented the cantata "The Star of Bethlehem" on December 23, under the direction of Brother Arnold Ware. The Niagara Falls, New York, Branch extended the choir an invitation to perform there, and the cantata was presented there December 30.

A New Year's Eve service was held at the church. The men were in charge of refreshments, and a special prayer service was held under the direction of Brother George Towers, pastor, and Brother Charles Tomlinson, associate pastor.

Missionary Al Pelletier conducted missionary services in January.—Reported by AUDREY WARE

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—The following officers elected were Elbert Guilbert, pastor; B. R. Gilbert and Lewis Adams, counselors; Harold Cline, director of religious education; Katherine Krauter, director of women; Glen Copen, treasurer; Jean Sherman, secretary; Robert Cowden, auditor; Stena Caldwell, historian; Gertrude Sessions, book steward; Edith Young, publicity agent; Lena Guilbert, director of music; Agnes Elam, director of drama; Ray Elam, recorder and bishop's solicitor; June Davis, librarian; Clifford Sherman, youth leader. These were appointed: adult supervisor, Edith Young; youth supervisor, Clifford Sherman; children's supervisor, Zella Cline; social chairman, LaVon Wickner; friendly visitor, Frances Copen; flower chairman, Betty Garrett; finance committee, Robert Alberts, chairman, Robert Thompson, and Lewis Adams; building and maintenance, Wayne Wickner, Howard Davis, and Harley Bates. The budget was set for the year, and the branch also voted to deposit part of the building fund money in the district foundation fund.

Bertha Lewis and Frank Cook were baptized September 28.

The Men's Club served a church dinner October 12, netting fifty-five dollars for the Happy Valley conference ground fund.

Ten men from the branch attended the priesthood institute held in Berkeley, November 2 to 4. Six ladies from the branch attended the women's conference in Sacramento, November 10 and 11.

Pamela Kaye, infant daughter of Mary Lee and Kenneth Cline, was blessed November 11 by Pastor Elbert Guilbert.

Brother Roy Worthington died in San Jose, November 20. His wife and daughter are now residing in San Jose.

The annual harvest festival was held at the church November 20. Proceeds from the dinner and booth sales netted over $175.

A dinner was served at the church December 9. An offering was taken to purchase chairs for the children's department.

Family night was held at the church December 21. The children portrayed a Christmas story, "The Little Shepherd," and conducted a candlelight service. There was a Christmas tree and gifts for the children. The young people went caroling. The Zion's Home Builders held the annual Christmas dinner party at the Hotel DeAmza, December 15. The women's department held their annual Christmas party December 27 and gave an offering of forty-five dollars for the Auditorium.

The Zion's Leaguers attended the district Yule Youth Camp at Happy Valley December 28-30. The Cline family held a family reunion at the grounds on December 21. Forty members of the family were present.—Reported by STENA CALDWELL

LOS ANGELES STAKE.—President W. Wallace Smith and Evangelist Elbert A. Smith joined with Los Angeles Stake and congregation leaders in an impressive ground-breaking ceremony for the new Venice, California, church on Sunday January 6. On the following day the escrow was opened for the purchase of a $30,000 church for the Pasadena Branch. Acquisition of these two buildings brings to a total of six the number of church buildings erected or purchased in the Los Angeles area during the past four years. During this period congregations have been increased from eight to fifteen.

Stake officers attribute this growth to an aggressive missionary spirit, generous co-operation between branches, city-wide planning and to the assistance rendered through the Houses of Worship fund of the General Church.

Since the Venice lot was acquired in 1949 the congregation has increased its building funds from a few hundred to over $8,000. This fund initiated under the pastoral direction of Albert K. Knowlton, and carried on under leadership of William K. Meader, was brought to fruition through the able ministry of the present pastor, Herbert R. Blakeman.

With the promised assistance of workers drawn from other branches of the Stake, the Venice men expect to erect their building with all volunteer labor. The first two units including church school, kitchen and toilet facilities will be erected first with funds now in hand. It is hoped that additional funds will be available to carry the work to completion in a relatively short period of time.

The site of this building is to be at Vienna Way and Walgrove Street, within a few blocks of the Pacific Ocean. It will serve several coastal communities including Santa Monica and Playa Del Rey. Vacationers from inland states as well as the approximate 180 resident Saints will enjoy much needed church housing relief after meeting in a rented store building for many years.

Although it is one of the older congregations of the city, the Pasadena Branch has always met in a rented building. Soaring rents and reduced facilities so hampered the activities of this fine group that their need for a church-owned building had become urgent. After several years of intensive search for a building site or for a church priced within their means, the Unity church building on Michigan Avenue, just one-half block north of Colorado Boulevard, was located. The building is less than ten years old, seats approximately 200 people and is centrally located near the business district of the city. Branch President Harry K. Waylett advises that the church expects to have possession of the building by the last part of February. Only four of the existing congregations of the Stake remain to be housed in their own buildings.

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—Seventy F. Edward Butterworth, who has recently returned from six years missionary activity in the Society Islands, was guest speaker at the evening service December 30. Sister Butterworth and their two children are visiting her parents, Elder and Mrs. B. A. Howard in Miami.

On December 23 at the morning service the choir, under the direction of Mrs. C. L. Rook, presented the cantata "The Dawn of Christmas" by Ray Nolte. Soloists were Mrs. E. G. Gilbert, Mrs. Bill Eagle, Mrs. Frank Althouse, Mrs. John Mount, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rook, D. W. Guinnee, and Harold Van Sickle. The choir was accompanied by Mrs. V. G. Gaston. The Zion's League presented the pageant "Mr. Warnow's Christmas" for the evening service. The pageant was directed by Mrs. Ralph Bobbitt and Brother Guinnee.

A joint meeting of the women's department was held on December 20. Mrs. T. W. Bath, district women's leader of Pittsburg, Kansas, and Mrs. E. B. Shimer of Miami, were guests on the program. Mary Leka, branch women's leader, presided at the meeting.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was the speaker at the evening service on December 16.

Seventy and Mrs. D. L. Kyser and their family have moved to Marion, Illinois, where Brother Kyser will serve as district president.

On November 27, a branch business meeting was held. Elder B. F. Kyser, branch president, presented a new budget to include a building fund for additional classrooms, which was approved.

Elder Warren Chelline of Port Huron, Michigan, held a series of missionary meetings from November 4 to 18.

Elder Guinnee has been selected as Zion's League leader to replace Bill Bays who has moved to Fairland, Oklahoma.

The Primo de Chiesa Music Club met on September 4 and elected the following new officers: president, Brother Guinnee; vice-president, Mrs. O. N. Ramsey; secretary-treasurer, Sister Guinnee; hospitality chairman, Mrs. Traverse Staton; and publicity chairman, Mrs. C. L. Rook.—Reported by BETTY KYSER

CENTRAL TEXAS DISTRICT.—The Bryan Saints held a Christmas party December 22 at the Scout Lodge, temporary meeting place of the group. The following night the young people presented the play, "Glory to God," at the church at Hearne. Members of the Bryan and Hearne groups attended.—Reported by NELLA JUNE DOTSON

MISSOURI MISSIONARY DEVELOPMENT AREA.—Apostle D. O. Chesworth accompanied by Seventy John T. Puckett toured the area during the last of November and the first of December. Apostle Chesworth spoke in the evenings at the various branches.

On November 18 a mission was organized at Belle, Missouri, and one was organized at Rolla, Missouri, November 21. The Huntsville, Missouri, mission was organized into a branch November 28.

A priesthood institute was held at Columbia, Missouri, December 2, and approximately fifty members attended. Classes were taught by Apostle Chesworth, Seventy J. T. Puckett, and Elder Robert Loyd. Brother Loyd is the vice-president of the Master Plastic Corporation of St. Louis. Luncheon was served by the women of Columbia.

Despite icy weather over ninety were present at the baptism and confirmation service held December 16 at the Bevier, Missouri, church. Nine candidates were baptized, and among them was Hienz Timmermann, a German youth from Columbia, Missouri, who has been in this country only six months. Candidates were from Vandalia, Palmyra, Huntsville, and Columbia. Immediately following the service, the Bevier ladies served refreshments. Brother John Vanskike was host pastor.

Following the Communion service at Jefferson City, January 6, John W. Guinnee was ordained a priest by Seventy John T. Puckett and Elder Joseph F. Brown.—Reported by MRS. JOSEPH F. BROWN

PROTON, ONTARIO.—The young people of the branch participated in the church history quiz held at Grand Valley during October and November. The teams were from Grand Valley, Elora, Guelph, and Proton.

On September 30, the five children of Brother and Sister Elmer Jack were blessed by Elder Angus Kennedy of Lisle, by Dr. W. P. Ellis of Holstein, and Robert W. Black, pastor. Elder Kennedy also spoke at this service.

Evangelist Benson Belrose of Owen Sound addressed the branch on November 25, and Elder Arthur Dunn of Elora spoke on December 2.

On December 6, the women's department held their monthly meeting at the home of Sister Eva Goheen. Sister Laura Farthing, district director of women, spoke regarding the Women's Institute held in Independence in October. A Christmas exchange of gifts was held.

The church school presented the Christmas concert December 5. After the program, a special Christmas party was held.

Howard Jack, a young priesthood member, was elected a delegate to General Conference at the district conference held at Warton in October.—Reported by DELL BLACK TOPEKA, KANSAS.—Elder Wayne Simmons conducted a series of cottage meetings in July, and contacted several nonmembers, including some Spanish-speaking people. Brother Simmons gave illustrated slide lectures.

Several families in the branch were affected by the floods in the summer, and lived in the church basement until the water receded.

The Saints from Lawrence have used the baptismal font on several occasions and David Nelson of Topeka was baptized August 19.

On September 4, the following were elected officers: Collier F. Hendricks, church school director; Velta Loss, women's leader; Nell Ellithorpe, young people's director; Marie Huey, music director; Jeanette Harmon, children's supervisor; Esther Giblin, branch secretary; Mildred Goodfellow, branch historian; Calla Kelley, publicity; Huberta Ellithorpe, bulletins; Frank Kelley, treasurer; Clifford Alfrey, custodian.

District President James Daugherty who also acted as pastor for the past year, appointed Elder Collier Hendricks to the office of pastor with his duties beginning in December.

The branch operated a dining hall at the Kansas Free Fair and cleared about $500, using part of the money to buy equipment.

Elder Merle Guthrie, church statistician, spoke September 23. He was accompanied by his family.

Brother Lyman Edwards, instructor at Haskell Institute at Lawrence, was the speaker at the evening service on September 23. Bishop Leslie Kohlman spoke September 20.

Brother and Sister Eddie Jones and son Billy moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma, where Brother Jones works with the radio and TV station.

James Daugherty and Bishop Howard Miller were present at the Communion service October 7.

ference was held there on October 22. Elder Hendricks and Sisters Ellithorpe, Huey, and Kelley attended the worker's conference.

Elder Ammon Andes of Lawrence, former pastor at Topeka, spoke October 28.

A Halloween party was held at the church basement October 29.

The Zion's League is under the leadership of Nell Ellithorpe. A fellowship service was held in August at Lake Shawnee with Wayne Simmons in charge. In September the young people went to Kansas City and were served a Hawaiian dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Howard Miller. Fifty-six attended. The League sponsored a dinner at the church on September 25 to raise money for a new electric sign for the church. The sign is now being used. Officers for the year are president, Francis Kelley; vice-president, Alan Zirkle; secretary, Jeanine Johnston; treasurer and service chairman, Marilyn Crooker; devotional leader, Huberta Ellithorpe; study chairman, Sharon Johnston; recreation leader, Shirley Alfrey. A candlelight installation service was held with Sister Ellithorpe in charge, and Brother Frank Kelley presenting the charge.

Bishop Howard Miller gave the pastoral address November 4 at the Communion service. Elder Ralph Freeman, pastor of Sugar Creek, spoke on November 11. Deacons Clifford Alfrey and Harry Pitchford spoke on the evening of November 11. Roy Stearns, secretary to the Council of Twelve, spoke on November 18 in the morning, and Larry Hastings spoke in the evening. Collier Hendricks and Merle Zirkle were the speakers November 25.

Alan Tyree, district missionary, held a two week's series of meetings beginning December 2, using illustrated lectures. This was followed by three evening sermons by James Daugherty.

The Kaw Valley District women met at Lawrence for an institute December 8. Patriarch Higgins, Velma Ruch, and Margaret Hoecker were speakers.

Elder Lew Richards of Independence spoke on December 8, and Elder Charles Graham, also of Independence, spoke December 26. On December 23, Bishop Henry Livingston was the guest speaker.

A Christmas program sponsored by the Zion's League was presented December 23, and gift baskets were collected.

The Men's Club has a dinner meeting in the basement once a month. They have sponsored the purchase of a new electric organ. Elder Burrell Landes is the church organist.—Reported by CALLA L. KELLEY

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—Elder James N. Kemp held a series of missionary meetings from November 27 to December 2.

The branch business meeting was held November 30, Elder J. L. Verhei, presiding. The following officers were elected for the coming year: Elder John Rodley, pastor; Elder Joseph F. Ruchaber, auditor; Harry Ruchaber, church school director; Mrs. Doris Friend, social leader and director of music; Mrs. Anna Laird, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Thelma Ruchaber, women's leader; Mrs. Lee Schmitt, librarian and publicity agent; Carrol Friend, young people's leader; and Binger Laird, building committee. Mrs. Helen Goins was recommended as branch historian. At this time, also, Carrol Friend was ordained to the office of priest under the hands of Elder James Kemp and Elder Jasper Giberson.

Following the business meeting, Elder J. L. Verhei conducted a priesthood class for the Southwestern District, while Sister Effie Verhei talked to the women's class. The evening was concluded with a social hour, refreshments being served by the women's department.

Sunday, December 23, three children were blessed under the hands of their grandfather, Elder J. F. Ruchaber, with Elder John Rodley assisting. The youngsters were Joseph Kurt, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ruchaber; Gary David, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ruchaber; and Joseph Michael, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol Friend.—Reported by LEE SCHMITT

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—Evangelist John R. Grice of Port Huron, Michigan, conducted a series of meetings from November 25 to December 9. At the close of the series, four candidates were baptized. Before the series, the upper and lower auditoriums were redecorated, floors refinished, and new draperies hung.

The women's department held its Christmas party on December 20. A covered dish luncheon was held at noon, with the pastor, Francis W. Bishop, as a special guest. The afternoon program was a candlelight service with musical numbers. This was a joint service with the women's department of Scenic Chapel.

The annual Christmas program was given December 23. The children's division under the direction of Sister Adena Browne gave "The Shoemaker's Guest," and "The First Christmas in America" was given by the Zion's League. This was under the leadership of Brother and Sister Buford Palmer. Special music was provided by the choir, under the direction of Brother Kenneth Cady.

The Zion's League was in charge of the New Year's Eve program which had as a theme "New Life in Christ and Services." Games were played, refreshments served, and a special service held before midnight. Former members of the League home for the holidays, who participated in the program, were Marian Bishop, daughter of Brother and Sister Francis Bishop, from Syracuse, New York; Keith Scott, son of Brother and Sister John Scott, from Missouri University; and Janet Cady, daughter of Brother and Sister Kenneth Cady; and Charles Browne, son of Brother and Sister Clifford Browne, both home from Graceland.—Reported by HELEN NYE CRESTON, IOWA.—Four persons were baptized December 16 in Creston's new, but unfinished church. Those baptized were Mrs. Lela Boyd, Alvie Rundberg, Galene Johnson, and Nancy McMichael. The confirmation service was held the following Sunday.

Earl Christopher, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Outhouse, was blessed by Elders A. D. Blair and Floyd Hirst on December 23.

Apostles D. T. Williams and Charles Hield visited the branch December 6, with Lamoni Stake President Robert S. Farnham and Missionary Virgil Billings.

The annual New Year's dinner was held at the Propst home, January 1. Before and after the dinner, the men poured the concrete floor of the new church.—Reported by DAVID BLAIR

Almost all margarine contains 15,000 units of vitamin A per pound, which is equal to or above the average for butter. Butter varies in vitamin A content with the feed of the cow. It usually has a high vitamin content in summer and a low one in winter.

If there are some essential fatty acids or substances in butter that are not found in margarine, their lack does not affect the American consumer who also uses whole milk and cream. From these products his need—if there is a need—is easily filled. Many reliable tests have indicated that when fortified margarine is used instead of butter in a mixed diet, no nutritional difference can be observed.

"For the Pebble Has Dropped in the Water"

Comments of Appreciation on the General Women's Institute

October 16, 1951—Mrs. T. W. Bath—Spring River District Women's Leader:

The Institute was wonderful from beginning to end. It was a thrill just to be there with such a large gathering of fine women. We feel very grateful to the Council of Women for sponsoring such a worth-while project.

October 16, 1951—Mrs. Jennie B. Page—Leader, Des Moines, Iowa:

We shall ever be grateful to our Heavenly Father for permitting us to attend the Institute. It has been one of the finest experiences of our church life. From the opening meeting to the closing program on Friday we were given direction, instruction, and inspiration for the task before us. Many times we have fasted and prayed for just such help.

October 20, 1951—Mrs. Harry Lorange—Lamoni Stake Women's Leader:

I wish to take this means to thank you and your council for planning and so ably conducting the Women's Institute. It was more than we expected, and we truly feasted on divine food. My cup was full—running over—and I know that this joy becomes our own as we share it with others. We are planning a stake institute to give each woman who attended the General Institute a chance to express some of the high lights she received there.

November 20, 1951—Mrs. Alva Dexter—Michigan:

I take this occasion to tell you what splendid help I received from the Institute. It was excellently prepared and administered. I thought that everyone who participated accomplished his point well in the limited time. So much was given for our profit that it seemed we must have been together for weeks rather than days. The good Spirit was there to edify far beyond the power of speech. It struck me as prophetic, parallel to the blessings promised those at the High Priests' Conference, when in the closing address you stated that the spirit of love and inspiration we had gained through the week would remain with us. Again and again I wondered how anything could be added to what had already been given, and yet the blessing continued to the last moment and carried with us as we journeyed home.

November 10, 1951—Lucinda N. Madden—Attorney at Law, Columbus, Ohio:

I have been wanting to write you ever since we came back to tell you what a wonderful week we had there with all of you. I feel that you and your Council are to be congratulated and commended for the fine educational week we spent at the Stone Church. In all my years of attending conferences and institutes, I feel that this was the best which has ever been offered. The speakers were all of such high quality with a direct and understandable message which came from the heart, and the service of the last morning was a fitting climax to a wonderful week. Please convey to Sister Blanche Mesley my appreciation for her inspired talk.

We also would like to thank those who took care of the registration, the assigning of rooms and meals. It was a very gracious thing for the women of Independence, who were our hostesses, to open their homes to us.

I am sure that no one who attended could have failed to catch the spirit of the Institute or upon returning home would fail to put into practice the lessons learned there.

November 24, 1951—Mrs. D. H. McCormick—Austin, Texas, Leader:

We should like to express our appreciation to you and to the women of the Center Stake for the wonderful Institute. We gained so much by attending.

December 3, 1951—Iowa (Personal letter):

After two months I am still so filled with the spirit of the wonderful General Women's Institute that I must write my appreciations.

It was my first trip to the Center Place and the fulfillment of a life-long dream. I truly experienced Zion there in the friendliness and high quality of personalities, in the spirit of the classes, and in the tours of church institutions. There was that intangible difference which sets us apart from the world. Twice during the meetings that week the Spirit of the Master so filled my being that I was nearly overcome with joy.

This will be a long letter because of the testimonies that have come to me as a result of the Institute, but I know that you will be happy for me to share them.

My husband is an elder, and we have labored for two years among nonmembers in our community. We are twenty miles from a branch and have attended regularly. We have a number of members here. Since the Institute the way was opened for us so that we could purchase a small church and open our mission here. We had a series of meetings for two weeks with attendance as high as sixty. We reached over fifty non-member friends and have distributed literature. We are following up the contacts, and interest is high. At our recent prayer service my husband was told in prophecy that he would be a guiding light to this community. Much of the material I gained at the Institute has helped him. I took notes on everything.

At our regular women's meeting I gave a talk and presented the Institute as best I could to our group. I was blessed in my efforts, and nearly all told me the talk inspired them to do more in their church work.

The first week in November I had an outstanding experience with the women of the Community Church here. The leader asked me to present my Independence trip as the program. I was able with divine help and guidance to present a most pleasing picture of my church and the good work that we are doing. I passed photos of our buildings in Independence and described the function of each. I brought to them high lights of our classes that would be of general interest. We attended Graceland College Homecoming on our way back and I told them about that also. The response after the meeting was overwhelming, and three of the ladies attended our series that evening.

The lecture, "Cancer and Women," by Dr. Addison Brown has literally saved my life. For two years I have been ailing, but my doctor hadn't found the trouble. The material Dr. Brown presented struck me with such force that I talked with him after the lecture and obtained a specialist's name to get an examination.

You can sense how much these things have meant to me. May your labors be blessed.

December 7, 1951—Luther S. Troyer — Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan District President:

Ruby had the richest spiritual experience of her life at the Women's Institute in October. She felt you had done a marvelous work in organizing and directing the Institute.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

The new year in January magazines begins with a wide variety of materials from which to choose, most of which will help readers to keep some of their new year resolutions.

Today's Health contains a number of good articles, one of the best being "Health on the Budget," which treats thoroughly every type of expenditure and gives suggestions for getting more for one's money. "Eating Is Fun" and "Cosmetic Advertising Is Your Business" are also good.

"Are There Strings Tied to It?" Woman's Day, discusses the matter of give-and-take and how to extract the most joy from either.

"Rags to Riches," Woman's Day, shows how to turn castoffs into something useful, and most of the suggestions are quite practical.

The National Geographic Magazine is excellent, as usual; one very interesting feature this month is "Our Home-town Planet, Earth."

Reader's Digest gives aids for maintaining physical well-being with "If You Really Want Healthy Teeth" and nourishes the spirit with "This Is Our Greatest Danger," whose author says, "... the forces of righteousness can be just as active as the forces of sin."

"Your Eyes Must See You Through," American Magazine, is an authoritative report telling how to keep eyes sound and healthy.

"Do You Favor Sex Education in Our Schools?" McCall's, is a two-part article, one affirmative and one negative, on this controversial subject.

American Home offers two articles concerning homes and maintenance that meet special needs, one with plans for a house for larger families, "Big House for Big Family Living," and the other for those who like to do things themselves, "How to Tile It Yourself." Also along this line is "Wanted: A New Kind of 'Old People's Home,'" which gives one couple's ideas for "a cottage for two with room for twenty" (the "twenty" refers to children and grandchildren visitors). "Take a Can of Pineapple" gives recipes for some delicious and different dishes.

"How to Give Your Baby the Right Start," Parents' Magazine, is helpful reading for any new mother, whether of a first baby or not. The two-part article, "Teaching a Child the Value of Money," is for parents of children above babyhood; part 1 deals with the child of preschool age, part 2 with the older child.

The Ladies' Home Journal continues its crusade to awaken women to civic and political responsibilities with "It's Time Women Took Direct Action" and "To Make Your Vote Count."

"Breakdown and Recovery" is a woman's account of her own mental illness and her stay in a mental hospital, written in a frank, honest, and unsensational manner.

The women who enjoy making delicacies in their kitchens will want to look up "Flaky Cream Horns," Woman's Home Companion.

The National Parent-Teacher contains, as usual, several articles of high quality, and it is hard to select the best. "The Crucial Test," based on the Golden Rule, is designed to fill "the spirit's hunger." "Why Children Cheat" deals with a serious and ever-present problem.

Graceland Compels Me To Choose

IF SOMEONE WERE TO ASK ME to compile a list of the things I have learned at Graceland during the past three semesters, I would find it nearly impossible to satisfy him with a concrete list of any sizable proportions. However, reviewing my Graceland experience, I am humbled as I consider the positive impact upon my thinking resulting from social interaction in that challenging atmosphere. Some have reasoned that Graceland could not offer them enough in the academic field. I say to them, "You can never know what you're missing, and equally important, what your church is missing."

Something very vital to me has happened, is happening, and I hope will continue to happen throughout my life. Directly resulting from Graceland's influence, my understanding of the nature of God and his purpose in mankind is widening to a point at which I have a growing desire to discover and apply the basic laws of Christian living in my own life. Graceland has enabled me to begin thinking of Zion in terms of "How can I fit in?" Slowly I'm beginning to find a lifetime stewardship in the total program—a stewardship which must continue to develop and expand if the kingdom of God is to develop to its greatest possibilities. Graceland compels me to affirm these things with deep conviction.

We, not the leading quorums of the church alone but we the members, are facing the greatest, noblest task that man could hope to have the intellect and impulsion to undertake. We must, if we would live our covenant, work with God increasingly to evangelize the world's philosophy of life. Also we must work more closely with God to reconstruct the existing social order.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Born in Independence, Missouri, Dick Howard was baptized at the Stone Church, graduated from William Chrisman High School, and attended Kansas City Junior College one semester. After working in Independence for over two and a half years, he enrolled at Graceland College, where he is now a Sophomore.

A liberal arts major, Dick is president of the Graceland student body. Besides his social club, he is a member of the Graceland Players and is the faculty assistant to Ray Zinser. Barring the draft, he plans to attend Kansas University next fall.

As a church, we are a numerical minority, comprising merely .00007 per cent of the world's population. This fact alone magnifies the fallacy of the popular alibi, "there just doesn't seem to be a place for me in the branch." Each of us, regardless of age, has an important part in this kingdom-building program. Our job is never done in spite of the amount of work we do or the age we attain. We have an important role simply because we have made a covenant with God and his church. The size of our task, plus our numerical insignificance, reveals the dire necessity for unity of individual and collective purpose in our lives.

BECAUSE OF GRACELAND I sincerely believe that this task of reconstructing the social order will advance only—

1. When our intellectual abilities and sincerity of our desires to understand the will of God concerning his kingdom continually expand.

2. When our patterns of social interaction consistently result from intelligent choices evolving from a growing union of hearts and minds, harmonizing with the will of God.

This is where every church member's importance is evident. Each one of us has the agency to choose individual goals in life—in varying degrees, of course. Otherwise it is folly to think of intelligent choice making. If we make our choices wisely, we can accomplish anything we set out to do. However, we must analyze these goals we have chosen from the standpoint of our wishes, needs, and resources, with God as our partner and with reference to four basic principles of collective and individual planning (which I learned at Graceland).

1. Mutual compatibility. What must I consider if I will make my vocational goals compatible with my desire to work in the church? Intelligence is needed here to determine any conflict which might present itself.

New Horizons

www.LatterDayTruth.org

2. Order of priority. Which should I do first, with my limited resources—get little Johnnie's tonsils out or build another room onto the house for the expected addition to the family? Modern society requires that we constantly be choosing between best and second best. Intelligence here is a necessity.

3. Probable consequences. In choosing, I need the intellectual ability and foresight to have some sound convictions regarding what might happen in several different situations. An expanding knowledge of probable consequences often conditions choosing more than any other single factor.

4. Selection of the most efficient and acceptable means of attaining goals. I want to be an executive in the retail business. Shall I get in at the bottom now and work my way up, or go to college four or five years and then start in? Every creative power of intellect is important, as conditions force choosing the best means to accomplish ends.

THIS THEORY of social and personal planning is beginning to find use in my life, and basic to its fuller expression is the element of intelligence. Two questions might arise at this point—questions which I find difficult to answer adequately. First, what constitutes intelligence? Second, how does one get to be intelligent?

When I visualize an intelligent person I usually come out with a picture something like this: He seems to have a keen insight into the present world situation. He knows quite well the operating economic and political forces of this society. He is extensively acquainted with historical events and can relate with amazing logic the implications of history with present trends. His advice and predictions of many future events seem to have very sound basis. He apparently knows every detail concerning the operation of federal, state, and local government—even many of the various bureaus. He knows something about almost everything, and nearly everything about his profession. He seems to know why he is here and where he is going, and his ability to choose one course of action as opposed to another in a given situation is extraordinary, revealing a good sense of values. His words and actions originate from something deeper than impulse. The humble courage with which he stands for his convictions makes others believe that there must be some great force sustaining him in his actions and choices. He has a love for people and an insight into human nature which enables that love to be expressed through untiring service.

If I were to ask this type of person, "How did you get to be intelligent?" he would probably say that he is still striving to learn—still on the growing edge of a lifetime study of human relationships. He would probably say that it began in his home many years ago with parents who lived and taught him to "seek learning even by study, and also by faith" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36). He learned early in life that faith in God is essential to the fullest development of the educative process. His father impressed upon his thinking the eternal truth, "To be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God" (II Nephi 6:61). He would probably add that his parents taught him by their own choices that alignment with the counsels of God is fundamental to intelligent choice making.

I BELIEVE DEEPLY that the call of Christ's church is to all of us, to the further development of divinely inspired intelligence, which would reward us with a clearer vision of the will of God concerning the kingdom. The call of Christ's church is to all of us, to a more perfect union of hearts, minds, and action. The call of Christ's church is to all of us, to develop our personalities through intelligent, prayerful choice making.

Graceland College compels me to choose this day to discover what God wants me to be, and then to be it. This is my calling, this is my stewardship.

The Game of Life

By Chaplain (Captain) Floyd Engstrom

We Americans are great lovers of sport; we pack stadiums for football, baseball, or track. Thousands of fans follow a foursome in a golf tournament. Most Americans enjoy some sport and make an attempt either to participate in or to follow it regularly.

Each game has its rules and regulations governing those who engage in the game. As Americans we do not like those who cheat. We say they are poor sports, a disgrace to the game. Such action sometimes casts a shadow on some particular sport and brings dishonor to the person.

Do you cheat in the game of life? Do you evade, ignore, or defy the rules? Perhaps you had not thought of life as a game with rules. The Mosaic Laws, including the Ten Commandments, were given a long time ago, and even these have been summed up in two simple ones: first, love of God; and second, love of neighbor. You may say that is easy, but think about it and you will see it's the only basis of living in this troubled world.

When we give ourselves wholeheartedly to the task of love, then there will be no room for hate, anger, misunderstanding, envy, and strife. When we find people who do not know the rules, we have the task of getting them into the game and helping them play it correctly. Because we love God we show our love by devoting ourselves to each other's welfare, by seeking understanding, by learning to co-operate, by treating all men with respect and kindness. In following these simple rules we become experts in the game of life.

Introducing

EDWARD PARKER, Independence, Missouri (page 5), came to the Center Place from Nuneaton, England, last May. He was born in Nuneaton in 1917, where he also received his education. He was baptized at Birmingham in 1937. Four years later he married Florence L. M. Coggan. They have two children: Madison John, 7; and Meribeth Jane, 3. Brother Parker's hobby is photography. He has been in the pharmacy business for fifteen years, and for eight years was superintendent of a pharmacy warehouse in Nuneaton. He served as pastor of the branch there for two and a half years prior to coming to Independence. He also was editor of the Mission Courier for eight years.

GEORGE M. DOUBLEDEE, Oronogo, Missouri (page 10), has served the church in several capacities since his baptism in 1935. He was born at Royal Heights, Missouri, in 1913 and attended the Nashville High School until his father was killed in a farm accident. George continued his education at night school in Phoenix, Arizona. In 1941 he married Juanda Winnifred Harrell. They have four children: John Harrell, 8; Lois Katherine, 7; Melvin Douglas, 4; Stephen Lynn, 2 months. His hobbies are photography, fishing, and writing. He worked as weight-master shipping clerk for a packing firm from 1936 to 1941 and did war construction work from 1941-1943, when he took up farming. At the present time he is pastor of the Medoc (Missouri) Branch. He was ordained a teacher in 1940 and an elder in 1944. He has carried on considerable missionary work and was away from home for eighty-eight days last year, made possible by his wife's carrying on the farm activities while he functioned as nonresident pastor of the Spring River District. He has been instrumental in bringing fifty-eight new members into the church.

 LISTEN

Polly was doing a walk-away in the middle of an argument.

"Come back heah!" Barbara protested. "You didn't finish listening!"

Some time or other in our lives, most of us get to finish talking. Few can talk forever, though some manage even that. Many a time I have finished what I was going to say (if only the opposition had the courtesy to remain) with only Me listening.

But how many of us finish listening?

We walk away when the story is half told, and never know how it came out. We go to sleep in the middle of the sermon and miss the preacher's main points. We turn off the symphony or the grand opera when the great arias are still to be sung. We interrupt the serious statement of a thinking person with some small irrelevant witticism. We hear half of what is said when we submerge like a porpoise in the deep limpid pool of our own reveries.

And what we do in a prayer! . . . We send all our requests to the Lord very much as we order groceries by telephone, expecting the blessings to be delivered in neat packages and promptly on time. But do we listen to what God might have to say to us in the accents of "the still small voice" of the spirit?

Have you finished listening today?

 SAVED OR LOST?

It is more fun, of course, to mourn for a lost soul than to go out and save him. But Jesus would go out and save him.

 JUDGMENT

When you think of passing a harsh judgment upon any other person, it would be well to stop and reflect first. He may have problems you know nothing about. You do not know what disappointment, grief, or pain may be bearing down on him. You cannot see what clouds of darkness in mind and spirit he may be trying to find his way through. Before you pass judgment, it would be well to remember these things. Then, "go easy." This applies to everybody, including men and women, young people, and even little children.

We like the line in the story of "The Littlest Angel" where the Understanding Angel takes this troubled little fellow upon his knee and says, "Tell me all about it, Cherub."

 DISCOURAGED?

If you are feeling low—say about the second rung on a sixteen foot ladder—go find some other discouraged person and cheer him up. It will do wonderful things for both of you.

 SHORTAGE

Our nice printer came in with a proof of an editorial entitled, "The Healing Faith." It did not quite fill the page. He said, "I need a little more of The Healing Faith."

"Don't we all?" the editor replied. "At least, it seems that I am short of it this time."

Stories That Live

Children, parents, and teachers will welcome this book of sixty-two inspirational stories. They are all based on true incidents taken from the lives of church members.

These stories were selected as some of the best published in Zion's Hope or Stepping Stones. They are among the favorites which will bear repeating over and over. Children will enjoy reading them at home. They can be used in the family worship, and children's leaders in the church school will find helpful story material in them.

Roy Benson

ROY BENSON is a teacher of piano, organ, music theory, and music history. He joined Graceland's faculty in the fall of 1944.

Born in Neath, South Wales, Great Britain, on October 17, 1914, Roy attended grade school in Neath until moving to the United States with his parents in 1925. They made their home in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated from high school in 1933. He then attended Graceland and was graduated in 1937, majoring in music. He is a member of Lambda Delta Sigma, Graceland's honorary scholastic society. In 1937-38 he attended both the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Conservatory. He taught private lessons in piano and organ at the Conservatory. He continued his education at Drake University the following year and received his bachelor of music education and bachelor of music degrees. After his graduation he taught public school music in the Otho (Iowa) Township Schools, and then went into school administration work and was principal and superintendent at Otho. From 1939 to 1944 he attended summer school at the University of Pennsylvania and Iowa State College studying educational administration and supervision before he came to Graceland. The following summers he studied toward his Master of Music degree at Northwestern and Drake Universities, receiving his degree from Drake in 1947. At the present time he has been accepted at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, and has studied there three summers toward his doctorate.

Roy was baptized in 1926 and holds the office of priest. He has taught church school classes and has taken an active part in church music activities. He married the former Mable Wilkinson of Florida, and they have three children: Carol, 10; David, 8; and Robert, 2½. He enjoys golf, reading, and playing with his children. He is a member of the Lamoni School Board, the National Music Teachers Association, and the Iowa State Music Teachers Association. In 1929, '30, and '31, he won an organ contest sponsored by the Fellowship of American Guild of Organists, and in 1931 he won the Outstanding Boy Award in Philadelphia.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN THE NORTH

President F. Henry Edwards is back in the office after church contacts which took him to London, Ontario, and Detroit, Michigan, in association with Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder F. Carl Mesle. The men held a leadership survey with emphasis on ministry to young people, priesthood, and church school leaders.

Brother Edwards was also in Columbus, Ohio, in the middle of January in association with Apostle Maurice L. Draper.

STAKES REPRESENTED AT MEETING

A report has been given by President F. Henry Edwards that a very successful meeting of the officers and departmental leaders of the five central stakes was held January 20 and 21 at the Auditorium. This concluded a series of conferences that have been held by Brothers Edwards, Reed Holmes, and Carl Mesle.

YOUTH INSTITUTE HELD

A youth institute was held in Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 25-27. Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder F. Carl Mesle were guests and taught classes, lectured, and preached during the rally. A banquet was held on Friday evening; Pat Hansen of Council Bluffs was the master of ceremonies. Classes were held on Saturday, and leaders as well as young people were in attendance.

RECEIVES GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENT

Elder Frank Mussell, district president in Wisconsin, has been appointed as Director of the Machinery and Implement section of the National Production Authority at Washington, D.C. He was recommended by the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company as their nominee for appointment in connection with the agricultural industry and farm equipment institute. His former position was manager of the Eastern Division of the Tractor Division of the Allis-Chalmers Company, and when his leave of absence for government service expires he will return to his company.

NEWS OF COUNCIL OF WOMEN

Mrs. S. A. Burgess left Independence January 23 to conduct an institute for women in the Utah District at Salt Lake City January 26 and 27.

Mrs. C. C. Petersen has returned from Mayo's Clinic and is recovering slowly.

CENTER STAKE YOUTH ACTIVITIES

The second winter holiday for senior Zion's Leaguers of the Center Stake was held at Gardner Lake January 19. Over fifty young people attended. Following a chili supper, a number of the group attended the Graceland-Wentworth basketball game in Lexington, Missouri.

The next city-wide Zion's League endeavor is a special Book of Mormon institute to be held February 25-March 1, at the Stone Church. Featured on the program will be Seventy Glen Johnson, Apostles Reed M. Holmes, Maurice L. Draper, and Arthur Oakman, and Evangelist H. I. Velt.

STAKE HAS PAPER

The first issue of "Centerstake News" was mailed to church families in the Stake of Zion the last week in January. This Stake paper will be mailed monthly, and the Stake presidency and Stake bishopric will serve as editors and treasurer, respectively. The managing editor is Jay Keck and the assistant editor is Clyde Perkins. The paper features articles of interest regarding church activities as well as news from the branches in the Stake.

A Lad's Gift to Jesus

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?"

—Andrew to Jesus, in John 6: 9.

YOUR GIFT may seem very small to you, but Jesus can use it to accomplish great things. You may be young, or weak, or afraid, but he has a place for you in the work of his kingdom.

Consider how He found a place for an unnamed lad one day by the shores of Galilee.

Jesus had not planned for the great crowd to follow him and the disciples across the little inland sea that day. He needed peace and rest, with time for spiritual refreshment. But the multitudes had seen his great ministry of help and healing, and they came after him because they felt a great need.

When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith to Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

THERE WERE five thousand men in that crowd. Women and children, if present, were not counted. Five thousand mature, responsible men—and all of them empty-handed. Not one of them had brought a lunch or provisions of any kind. They had nothing to meet their own needs, let alone the needs of Jesus.

There was just one exception—"a lad" whose name is unknown. Who but a hungry boy would think of carrying a lunch on such an occasion? Who would have stopped to take along five tough barley loaves the size of hard rolls and a couple of perch he had caught? One wonders if his mother knew he had taken them from the kitchen. Only a boy, who knew that hunger might seize him anywhere, would be prepared.

There were five thousand men sitting there on the grass with nothing in their hands. Jesus was expected to take care of them.

WITH THAT SMALL GIFT—five barley loaves and two small fishes—Jesus was able to feed five thousand men, and an unestimated number of women and children.

Other occasions came when Jesus needed things for his ministry. At the marriage in Cana of Galilee the host had large earthenware jars and servants to fill them with water to be turned by divine power into wine. The Pharisees and Herodians who came to trick him with a question had a penny with which he gave them a lesson in loyalty. Mary of Bethany bought a jar of costly ointment for his feet, and will be known forever for her act of loving service. Simon of Cyrene had a strong back and could carry the cross for him. Joseph of Arimathea had a new tomb that was used for three days to shelter the broken body. After the Resurrection he appeared to the disciples, who were fishing, and asked them, "Have ye here any meat?" The accounts of Luke and John differ, but they gave him a piece of broiled fish and some honeycomb, which he ate. These people had many things that he needed.

THERE WAS ANOTHER LAD who possessed something that Jesus needed—a love of God, a desire for truth, and a trusting implicit faith. In the spring of 1820 there were many thousands of people in America trying to find Jesus. They needed his help, but they were far from him. Their souls hungered and thirsted, but they were not fed. The churches of the time gave them little help. Most of them were empty-handed.

All except one lad, young Joseph Smith, who had what Jesus needed. He was prepared to take part in the miracle that his Lord was about to perform.

WHEN DAVID was a fugitive from the wrath of Saul, he came to the priest Ahimelech and said, "What is under thine hand?" David was hungry and needed bread. Whether from sympathy or fear, Ahimelech supplied him from the sacred store.

That question comes to us today, "What is under thine hand?" What do we have that the Lord can use for his work?

There is no reason for us to be empty-handed like the five thousand men who sat on the grass by Galilee. Sitting was all they could do. They had nothing to offer but their emptiness, their want, their hunger, and their needs. Jesus found what he wanted in the hands of a youth.

CONSIDER the needs of the church today. There are little groups of Saints languishing spiritually for the lack of leadership. Branches have passed out of existence because men did not train themselves for pastoral work.

Jesus is calling, "Feed my sheep," but thousands who wait for him on the hillsides are as empty-handed today as those others were so long ago. In the midst of such throngs may be found, here and there, a lad or a girl, a man or a woman, who has been seeking Jesus, and has brought something in hand that will be useful.

What have you in your hand? What can you give? What are you prepared to do? Will five thousand, or fifty, or even five perish because you have come empty-handed to your Lord, or will they be fed?

Auditorium Income

We are very glad to submit the figures covering receipts of income for Auditorium construction for the months of November and December. $49,618.55 was received in November, and $47,383.91 for December, or a total of $97,002.46 for the two months.

While we did not quite reach our goal of $100,000.00, we feel that the response throughout the church was most encouraging and is indicative of the fact that we will reach our goal of $200,000.00 in 1952 and the same amount for 1953. We are especially gratified because of the limited time to bring this to the attention of the membership, for to have suggested a goal of $100,000.00 for the last two months of 1951 seemed a rather stupendous undertaking. We were short only $2,997.54.

We wish to express our appreciation for the splendid response and for this expression of interest in this very important project.

Respectfully submitted,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DeLapp

Leave of Absence for Leonard Lea

By arrangement with the First Presidency, approval has been given to the application of Leonard J. Lea for permission to devote some time to studies in the fields of publication and journalism at the University of Missouri. During his absence he will continue to carry on editorial work for the church through the Herald Publishing House. Brother Lea has been engaged in church editorial work continuously since 1929, serving as Managing Editor until February, 1949, and since then as Associate Editor of the Herald, and Editor of Books and Tracts. It is his purpose to study recent developments in publishing techniques and organization.

FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

A Day of Prayer and Fasting

The General Conference of 1952 will be in session March 30 to April 6, inclusive, as provided in the action of the Conference of 1950. In harmony with our custom, and in response to our own deep feeling of need, we request that members of the church shall observe Sunday, March 2, as a day of fasting and prayer. Where wise and possible we suggest abstinence from both the morning and noon meals, and ask that specific time shall be spent by individuals and families in meditation and prayer for the church and her needs, the elders and delegates who will meet in Conference, and the business to be transacted. Let the whole church be united in prayer.

ISRAEL A. SMITH,
F. HENRY EDWARDS,
W. WALLACE SMITH,
The First Presidency.

Tribute to Isaac M. Smith

Isaac Monroe Smith, veteran church missionary, passed away on Saturday, January 19, in Independence, at the age of ninety-eight. He had suffered from an extended illness and was receiving care in the Allen Rest Home.

Brother Smith was born in 1853, received his first ordination as a teacher in 1875, and went under General Conference appointment in 1887. For forty years he was a missionary in the Southeast Illinois District. A patriarch since 1914, he gave a splendid spiritual ministry, and was beloved in Independence where he moved in 1927, at the time of his retirement.

Brother H. Arthur Koehler, who labored with Brother Smith, has recently written the following tribute to him:

Nearly half a century ago I was placed under the charge of Brother I. M. Smith, whom I have regarded as one of the finest men I have known. As a young preacher, I was often conscious of the great distance I would have to climb to equal him. He was in all respects the greatest Bible preacher this church has had. When he was laid to rest, I was thrilled as the organist played "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," a song I sang at his request on many occasions. For three weeks during my first year as a missionary, Brother Smith nursed me day and night through a very dangerous attack of malarial fever. May I pay tribute to his excellency of spirit and the unfathomable depth of his love for humanity.

Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund

The Independence Music Club is pleased to announce that applications for loans from the Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund will now be accepted.

This fund has been established as a perpetual memorial to the memory of Mrs. Nina G. Smith who was a fine musician and always interested in the musical education and development of young people. It is hoped the fund will be increased through gifts of individuals and organizations.

Further information regarding this loan fund may be found in an official announcement in the Saints' Herald for July 30, 1951, or obtained from Mrs. Evan A. Fry, secretary of Independence Music Club, 701 North Cottage, Independence, Missouri. All applications should be addressed to Mrs. Fry.

MRS. A. G. CAMPBELL, President,
Independence Music Club

John Charles Mottashed Dies

News comes of the passing, on Friday, January 18, of Brother J. Charles Mottashed of Belden, Michigan. For many years he was a self-sustaining minister in the church, serving as pastor and as district president. He had marked ability as a preacher, organizer, and administrator in church affairs. He devoted much of his time to church work in Detroit, Michigan, and adjacent areas. He was known, too, for his attendance at General Conferences and for his contribution in legislative problems and questions brought before that body.

"That Man Might Have Joy . . ."

By Paul Wellington

THE NEW HIRED MAN had been working at his job in the apple orchard for only half a day when he quit and went to the owner for his pay. "What's the trouble, Jones?" asked the boss, "Why are you quitting?" "The work's too hard!" replied Jones, looking down at his shoe as he kicked the dirt under his feet. "Too hard? Why, all you've been doing is grading apples by size and putting them into boxes! It doesn't take much exertion to do that!" exclaimed his boss. "Oh, it isn't the physical labor that's hard," explained Jones, "it's making all those decisions that wears me out—big ones here, little ones there, middle-sized ones in between. I can't take it!"

And so the story has gone ever since the days of Adam and Eve! Man has been shying away whenever possible from the "hard task" of making decisions. Whole nations have placed their destiny in the hands of dictators in order to escape a frightening problem they feared to face. We in America (and England) are more and more letting our government solve problems which rightly are ours individually. We sell our spiritual and mental freedom in order that our physical bodies may be sure of their "mess of pottage." Apparently we feel that it's "making all those decisions" that wears us out!

The Opposites of Agency

What an opportunity for happiness we give up when we transfer to another a decision which is rightfully ours to make. One of the great purposes of our existence in this life is to learn how to make proper choices, how to use our agency correctly. God has placed "opposites" in all of life that force us to "try our wings" in gaining and applying a knowledge of agency.

Lehi, in speaking to one of his sons, said that life itself would not exist without this combination of opposites. In II Nephi 1: 81-128, he offers example after example of the need of opposite forces in our lives:

For it must needs be that there is an opposition in all things . . .

. . . all things must needs be a compound in one; . . . if it should be one body, it must needs remain as dead, having no life . . .

Things to act, and things to be acted upon. . . .

Having no joy, for they knew no misery. . . .

Doing no good, for they knew no sin. . . .

Man could not act for himself, save . . . he was enticed by the one or the other.

Then he summarized his presentation of the need by saying, "But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of Him who knoweth all things."

And indeed it "has been done in wisdom." For what would we be if we did not have this ability to make choices—if we were incapable of being enticed by good or evil?

It does seem it would be nice sometimes to be free of conscience, free of moral law. But with such a change, all of our dearly loved human privileges and freedoms would disappear. Our plane of living carries heavy responsibilities; but with it comes joy and happiness that we would not exchange for anything else.

God created us so we would have to make moral decisions, so we could think on a level unknown to any other type of earthly creation. And he did it for a definite purpose: "Men are that they might have joy" (II Nephi 1: 115).

Joy comes in making decisions—in acting. That is, joy comes in making the right decisions—in right acting. But we can make decisions that bring sorrow. Lehi says we are free to choose either. He calls it "choosing according to the flesh" or "choosing according to the spirit"; and he says we may choose "liberty and eternal life" or "captivity and death."

The Effect of Environment on Choice

Today we are all surrounded by environments which greatly affect our ability to make right decisions. Two young people in a Seattle, Washington, congregation came to prayer service one Wednesday evening soon after the opening of the fall term of public school—and there told us of the great environmental change they were going through after a summer of association with only church youth. During June, July, and August they had attended youth camps and reunion. All their social activities had been with the Zion's League group. And now, suddenly, they were being plunged into the midst of a group of young people whose moral standards were different in many ways. In the summer, it had been easy to choose rightly; now it was much more difficult.

Our shifting from environment to environment often plays tricks on our resolution to choose rightly. We often set up double standards for ourselves. Among "real" saints we are saintly; among "aint's" we are sinners. It's hard to realize sometimes that we're fooling no one but ourselves when we play along with such double standards. Shakespeare stated it correctly when he wrote: "This above all—to thine own self be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." A single standard of choosing rightly is important.

Our Variation of Standards

There are no two people who are agreed on the definition of what constitutes righteous or sinful acts. To some people, smoking is a horrible sin; to some it's a minor evil; to others no moral issue is involved. And so it is with thousands of acts: there are hundreds of degrees of variation in viewpoint on each one.

And within ourselves there is a constant shifting of values. Of course there are some things we would never do; and there are other acts that we always do. But in between these extremes are the many hard-to-make decisions encountered daily. With these we are often "wishy-washy." Our standards are not stably set.

For most of us there are definite taboos: murder, kidnaping, adultery, extortion, etc. And for most of us there are some definite "do's": attend and support church; be honest in most physical, visible acts; be clean of body; treat our companion and children decently, etc.

But under many other conditions we greatly vary our standards: for instance, when is a theft to be considered a theft? As a child in the first grade of school, I had a standard which made picking up a pin from the school ground and keeping it an act of theft. Today I don't have such a Puritanical view on the subject. Was my view of theft at the age of six correct? And why did I change my standards? What constitutes a theft? Who sets the standard? Is there a definite standard?

The Bible tells us that certain acts are sinful: being proud, being envious and covetous, worshiping idols, being at strife, etc. But what is an act of pride? What is an act of envy and covetousness? When and how do we worship idols? When are we at strife? Can somebody else set up a standard for me that I may use as my guide for avoiding these sinful acts?

No, it seems impossible! At least there has never been an entirely satisfactory one publicized to our knowledge. In the field of moral decisions, the individual is placed in the laborious position of having to make his own decisions—as long as he does not infringe on the rights of other members of society. And as a result, we indeed find great variance of standards throughout the world today.

Time, Talent, Resources— And Sin

Perhaps our greatest variance in standards lies in our concepts of the values to be placed on the use of our time, talents, and resources. What is the right use to make of our time? How shall we use our talents? For what purposes shall we expend our resources?

Is it righteous to go to church every night of the week and twice on Sunday? Or is it sinful to go to that extreme? How should families spend their evenings? Do they have any responsibility to other families in the neighborhood or church? Should they spend every night out visiting friends, never staying at home? How often should they go to the movies? What should be read? How much time should be devoted to reading?

How much of talent should be devoted to hobbies? Should a man be satisfied with driving a truck when he has abilities which fit him for some other type of occupation? Shall women "work out" and allow all their talents to be absorbed in economic labor? Is it sinful to fail to develop a talent of singing or playing a musical instrument when early youth experiences indicate an inborn gift to so do? What is a person's responsibility for the talents he possesses? Is this a moral responsibility? Is he accountable to God for their use?

And resources—what should be purchased, a television set or a home freezer? Or shall more be contributed to the community chest and the church? Has the church become too proud and money-minded; is it "draining" its people beyond what is right? How many luxuries are allowed before one is labeled as a squanderer?

Actually there is no one right answer that can be given to most of these questions. As an example, many people can buy television sets without being sinful. But others will "take the food from their children's mouths" if they attempt to buy such a costly item. Also, it is possible that some individuals should take the opportunity to watch television every night (invalids, for example), but for most families it is probably unwise and un-Christian to spend very much time on such entertainment. Two people can give opposite answers to these questions, and both can be right. Or they both can be wrong. Many circumstances and conditions enter each situation. The decision and the responsibility for it must come from within the individual.

A Basis for Establishing Standards

Since it is our individual responsibility to make decisions in the field of morals, we need an acceptable definition for "sin" and "righteousness" as a foundation for determining choices.

In my opinion, the simplest and most comprehensive definition on which to build our understanding has been written in recent years by President F. Henry Edwards. Viewing our time, talents, and resources as gifts to us from our Creator, he defines sin as being "The misapplication of these gifts received from our Father—a sort of spiritual embezzlement by which we use trust funds for our own purposes."

Apostle Arthur Oakman often points out in his writings that our "original" or inborn sin is "placing ourselves in God's place"—viewing ourselves as the center of the Universe—being self-centered.

A Scout Leader's Tribute to the Church

By H. Roe Bartle

The following article is a radio address delivered from the Stone Church over KMBC on Scout Sunday, February 4, 1951, by H. Roe Bartle, Scout Executive for the Kansas City Area Council which includes Independence. The article was recorded by Eagle Scout Robert Rannie, son of Dr. Paul R. Rannie, Scoutmaster of the Stone Church troop. The talk was transcribed by Sister Esther Brockway.

Mr. Bartle, the son of a Presbyterian minister, has always been deeply interested in religion and highly respectful of our church. In addition to serving as Scout Executive of one of the largest councils of the Midwest, he has many interests and abilities. He is at present Regional Director of the Office of Price Stabilization (Economic Stabilization Board) for this section, and Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Missouri. He established the American Humanities Foundation a few years ago and was then chairman of the board; he is now acting as administrator. He is also a member of the board of trustees of the Menninger Foundation, Topeka, Kansas; a member of the board of American War Dads; and a member of the board of the Mercantile Bank and Trust Company.

Because it comes from one of the leading citizens of the Greater Kansas City area, this radio address carried a real import to a wide listening audience and is therefore of more than usual interest to members of the church.

F. CARL MESLE.

IT IS WITH GREAT HUMILITY of spirit but with a heart that beats high with joy that I annually appear on the first Sunday of every February in this institution, the old Stone Church, the mother church of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

As we think in terms of youth and the great movement of the Boy Scouts of America that has meant so much to our cherished democracy during the past forty-one years, our hearts are heavy because of the world situation. On every hand we find chaos and turmoil and strife. We are disturbed as to where our America may be traveling and what will actually happen to the world. In recent days we have heard of the new atomic gas, and when we realize the power of the atomic bombs—when we realize that physicists, as they have delved deeply into the sciences, have been able to conceive and project a weapon that might destroy us—we begin to come back to those fundamentals of life and living.

I, for one, would want to be a builder in this day and age; and if I would build well, I would think in terms of youth. I would try to build into the hearts and minds and souls of this generation those fundamental principles that would give, to America and to the world, decency and wholesomeness so that we might survive and those things that we cherish might be perpetuated.

Recently I picked up these lines. They are very simple, but to me they tell a tremendous story and hurl a challenge:

I watched them tearing a building down,
A gang of men in a busy town,
With a ho-heave-ho and a lusty yell,
They swung a beam and a side wall fell.
I asked the foreman, "Are these men skilled
And the men you'd hire if you had to build?"
He gave a laugh and said, "No, indeed!
Just a common laborer is all I need.
I can easily wreck in a day or two
What builders have taken a year to do."

And I thought to myself as I went my way,
Which of these roles have I tried to play?
Am I a builder who works with care,
Measuring life by the rule and square?
Am I shaping my deeds to a well-made plan,
Patiently doing the best I can?
Or am I a wrecker who walks the town,
Content with the labor of tearing down?

—Unknown.

Everyone today, it seems, has become a supercritic of the body politic. Many are critics of the church. There are those who would proclaim that the homes of America are being destroyed. I, for one, would say that if we are to save America and those things we cherish, we must start building today. The homes of America are the very foundation stones of our democracy, and if we would have strong homes and wholesome homes for youth that they may understand fully the richness of life and living, we must think in terms of the church. A home without a religious background is merely a house in which to live. There must be fundamental religious training in the home if that home is to give to the world a product in the younger generation who will assume our responsibilities on the morrow.

Thinking in terms of the church, I cannot help realizing that Scouting looks to the church to house its program and to give to the movement the leadership that has faith and courage and determination. It is through the church of Almighty God that we of Scouting work in dealing with the youth of the nation.

Forty-one years ago in this old Stone Church in Independence, there was a man by the name of W. O. Hands. This man had vision and faith and courage. He inaugurated this great program of Scouting, and he did it under the banner of the church. Today in the Kansas City Area Council, we have more than 33,000 men and boys who are a part of the game of Scouting. Only recently I checked the record and discovered that more than a quarter of a million have been under the banner of Scouting in this area since the program was inaugurated here forty-one years ago. In my humble judgment, Scouting would have faded into insignificance had it not been for the vision of those who were a part of the movement of Scouting in its early days. Those men believed in God. They wanted to build wisely a program that would gear the personalities of boys into the church and make them God-fearing and God-loving youngsters who would grow to manhood prepared to assume the real responsibilities of life and living, whether it be in the professions, in business, in the field of religion, or in education.

TODAY WE LOOK to the church as never before; and all of the great religious denominations are now recognizing the work which boys of Scouting do in the church of their choice. They study the history of the church, and they are ready and willing to give hours of toil and labor to the clergy and to the ministry of the church. They are willing to do their part in carrying forward the program of building the kingdom of God here upon the earth. I say today, without any mental reservations, that lads who wear upon their khaki uniforms the "God and Country" award have received an honor far greater than the coveted Eagle rank.

This church has blazed a trail in the "God and Country" award. Literally scores of boys who are a part of this faith, as well as those who belong to other denominations, proudly wear the "God and Country" award. Those young men, in my judgment, have a clearer conception of their responsibility to Almighty God and to their fellow-men. They should grow to be fine, wholesome, upstanding men on the morrow, who can play the role of husband and father well. When I think in terms of the program of the church, I know of no phase of it that is more important than the young people who look to it for guidance.

We in Scouting had a pilgrimage to Valley Forge during the summer months. This is February—a great patriotic month when we think in terms of the birthdays of George Washington, the father of our nation, and Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator. Two things seemed to stand out in the minds of all of the boys who were there. One was the fact that at Valley Forge, when our armies were starving and naked, there was a General Washington who had faith in Almighty God. The picture of George Washington kneeling at Valley Forge, praying for strength and health and guidance and asking God to sustain the Continental Army, helped to form their first impression. Second, I noticed that the lads wanted to sit in the pew that Mr. Washington occupied before and after he was president of the United States. Indeed it was the religious life of George Washington that had made a profound impression on the youth of this section of America. While Washington may have saved us back in the time of the Revolution, while he may have given strong leadership as the first president, while we have his famous Farewell Address, all those Scouts realized that the father of this nation loved God, believed in him, and wanted to do his will. This being true, I think it is quite fitting that we of Scouting should celebrate our birthday during February—the month in which we can think of the great men who made America in by-gone days, the men who thought in terms of things so fundamental in 1951 that if we forget them, we lose all.

IF WE WOULD BE WISE in dealing with young people, we would give them the rights and benefits and privileges of this great patriotic organization known as Scouting. We would teach them how to take care of themselves physically that they might care for the needs of their fellow-men, that they might become truly participating citizens of the highest order. But fundamental today as it was forty-one years ago in the inauguration of this, the original troop in Independence, we want through the program of Scouting to give the young people of America an understanding of their responsibilities to Almighty God.

I know of no words that are more noble than these: "On my honor I will do my best to do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout law, to help other people at all times, to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

I ask for the prayers of God-loving individuals that Scouting may thrive and grow and prosper in the days to come if we are to be true to the responsibilities which are ours.

The Old Issue Again

THE EDITORS HAVE received several news clippings since the pictures and publicity appeared concerning George Meril Dutson of Mesa, Arizona, who was arrested recently on a charge of bigamy. Mr. Dutson is a self-styled osteopath and was excommunicated from the Mormon Church some twelve years ago according to press reports. The Herald is not particularly interested in the stories of his six wives and many children, though it does resent the paragraph that slips into nearly every newspaper account similar to the following quotation taken from the Kansas City Star, of January 3, 1952:

The bishop said he talked to Dutson two years ago about his many wives, but the husband stoutly professed his religious conviction in plural marriages. The Mormon church practiced polygamy after its founder, Prophet Joseph Smith, said it was approved in a revelation to him in 1840, but the church has not sanctioned plural wives since 1890.

The fact that neither the Mormon Church nor anyone else has produced valid evidence that Joseph Smith ever advocated or practiced polygamy or that he ever gave any revelation for it seems not to deter the Mormons or the press from circulating this notorious charge. The Reorganization has challenged the statement now for one hundred years. It has pointed out that his public utterances and the revelations published in the Doctrine and Covenants since 1835 absolutely forbid polygamy, and that two of the courts of the United States have weighed all the evidence on the origin of Mormon polygamy and have supported the contention of the Reorganization, yet this seems to make little difference.

The Star had received a letter concerning these errors of statement from Roy Weldon and has published one from John Blackmore, church historian, who is also writing to the Chicago Tribune which syndicated the article. The editors thought readers of the Herald should know that church officials are alert to this propaganda.

The Legend of Daganawidah

By Stan Johnson

AMERICAN INDIAN LEGENDS hold many people spellbound as tales of the spirits of woodland and nature drift skyward, tinged with the pungent aroma of wood smoke and the sense of well-being which is friendly with the outdoors.

The Book of Mormon student, however, is especially fascinated, as many of these tales of suspense and adventure begin to form a picture which substantiates his faith in the story of the Golden Plates. It was in such a position that I found myself as I sat and listened to the legend of Daganawidah told by an Iroquois chief who shared the same faith as I in the gospel of Christ as brought forth again in the Restoration.

Clinton Rickard, Sachem Chief of the Tuscaroras, the sixth nation of the six-nation Iroquois Federation, and three of his children joined the church in January, 1951. His wife had preceded him by several months in making the covenant.

It was some time after I had been appointed to New York District that I had a chance to talk with Brother Rickard at length about the beliefs of his fathers. The story he told amazed me as many details in it fitted the story of the "Lost Sheep of Israel." Further research in some books written about the legend merely substantiated my beliefs.

This is the story as related to me by Chief Rickard.

Chief Rickard (on left) and two other Iroquois chiefs examining the club.

THE SIX NATIONS of the Iroquois confederacy are joined together in a peaceful treaty for the sake of common ideals. This confederacy is said by many to have been the model for the transformation of the thirteen colonies into the United States of America.

Benjamin Franklin wrote:

It would be a strange thing if six nations of ignorant savages should be capable of forming a scheme for such a union, and be able to execute it in such a manner as it has subsisted for ages and appears indissoluble: and yet that a like union should be impracticable for ten or a dozen English colonies to whom it is more necessary and must be more advantageous, and who cannot be supposed to want an equal understanding of their interest.

When this was written the Iroquois composed the strongest Indian nation on the continent. These nations—the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, Senecas, and finally the Tuscaroras—more or less peacefully dominated the other tribes throughout New England and west to the Illinois River. This domination came not through force as much as through statesmanship of which the Iroquois were rightfully proud, because their statesmanship was motivated by a deep will for peace among the people. Prominent among the motives was the oft-told tale of the example set by two culture heroes. Daganawidah and his spokesman, Hiawatha, who bears no relationship other than name to Longfellow's hero.

The story of Daganawidah is somewhat mixed up among folk tales and fact. However there can be no doubt that someone at some time made a deep impression upon these people. There seems to be ample evidence that Daganawidah existed as both man and supernatural spirit. This finds a counterpart in the story of Quetzalcoatl from farther south where his history is mixed between the legendary god and the earthly leader who seemingly followed the appearance of the god and ruled in his manner.

Oral history tells us that Daganawidah was a Huron Indian by birth and a Mohawk by adoption. We are not so much concerned with the physical hero, however, as with the legendary figure which brought to a warlike people new ideals of peace.

The Indians of the original Five Nations (the Tuscaroras did not join the confederacy until 1710) were not particularly a philosophical people. They were more Hebraic in nature than Hellenic, and their belief in peace emphasized this. Peace was not a negative thing—a lack of war; it was law. In fact the same word was used by the nations for both peace and law. They founded their peace not upon ethereal poetic beliefs, but upon tangible, earthly institutions which could be perceived by all, friend and foe alike. This was their reaction to the peace messenger, Daganawidah.

THE BIRTH OF DAGANAWIDAH is somewhat obscured by numerous legends, but the most evident stories say he was born in a Huron settlement on the north shore of Lake Ontario. Before his birth his coming was foretold in a dream to his grandmother. As she witnessed the vision, the legends tell us, she questioned the Great Spirit as to her future grandson's office.

"His office is to bring peace and life to the people on earth," replied the messenger.

The younger years of Daganawidah's life are not too plain, but it is said that when he reached manhood he was anxious to assume his designated tasks and go abroad among the various nations. Without fuss or bother he gathered his materials on the lakeshore underneath the shady birches and the stretching pines and built a canoe for his journey.

"I go to seek the council fires of the nations," he said. "It is my business to stop the shedding of blood among human beings."

As he prepared to leave he was stopped by his grandmother who questioned, "Your canoe—it is made of stone and will not float."

"It shall float," he replied, "and this shall be a sign unto all men that my words are true."

With this Daganawidah stepped into his canoe and rapidly paddled south across the "Beautiful Great Lake," as the Iroquois knew Lake Ontario. Nearing the opposite shore he saw men among the trees, and he turned his canoe toward land. As the men saw the sun sparkling on the stone sides of his craft they came out of the woods and explained that they were hunters who had left their villages because there was strife and bloodshed there.

"Go to your chiefs and tell them that peace has come. If they ask from where, simply tell them that it will come," stated Daganawidah from his canoe.

"Who are you to speak with such authority?" they questioned.

"I am Daganawidah as I am known in the world," he replied.

The men returned to their villages and there bore the news of peace and told of the wondrous things they had seen and heard.

"This shall truly be a good thing if the people shall turn away from warfare," said the chiefs around the council fires.

From then on Daganawidah passed from settlement to settlement and found that men truly sought peace, but that they did not know how to find it. Always when he arrived at a settlement the people placed food before him, and after he had eaten they asked him his message. His answer was always the same.

"I carry the mind of the Master of Life, and my message will bring an end to the wars between east and west. The word I bring is that all peoples shall love one another and live together in peace. This message has three parts—righteousness, health, and power.

"Righteousness means justice practiced between men and between nations: it also means a desire to see justice prevail.

"Health means soundness of mind and body: it also means peace, for that is what comes when minds are sane and bodies cared for.

"Power means authority, the authority of law and custom backed by such force as is necessary to make justice prevail: it also means religion, for justice enforced is the will of the Holder of the Heavens and has his sanction."

"Thy message is good," said the women, "but a word is nothing until it is given form and set to work in the world. What form shall this message take when it comes to dwell among men?"

Then Daganawidah set in motion the wheels of a new found democracy and established precedence for action around a council fire with each family and each clan and each tribe and each nation having the right to speak together in peace and to establish justice throughout.

HAVING ACCOMPLISHED THIS he set out for the land of the sunrise where lived, he had been told, a man who ate humans. Arriving at the lodge of this man he climbed to the roof and looked through a hole down upon the man as he prepared his dinner in a pot of boiling water. As the man looked into the kettle he saw the face of Daganawidah and thought it was his own. But there he saw wisdom and courage and intelligence, and he had never noticed these things in his face before.

"Surely," he said, "this is not the face of a man who will eat human flesh."

From that day on the life of Hiawatha was a changed one. He sat in loneliness contemplating his mistakes, wishing for someone to come and tell him how he could atone for his wrongdoings. He did not wait long, for soon Daganawidah came again and noticed the change in Hiawatha. Merely a glimpse of the face of the Peace Messenger was enough to change men's hearts.

This time they sat across the fire and talked; Daganawidah lectured, and Hiawatha listened and learned. Daganawidah taught him words of peace. He taught him to dip water with the current so he would not fight the ways of nature. He taught him to eat the flesh of deer so he could use the things which the Great Spirit had placed there for his use and benefit. Above all he inspired him with a desire to tell others of this way of peace and sent him throughout the land to spread the joyous word.

With the simple beauty of the native tongue Hiawatha accepted the challenge saying, "I shall embrace it, for it is the truth!"

THE LIVES of both Daganawidah and Hiawatha were filled with many wondrous things as they roamed throughout the forests and plains spreading the word of peace. Daganawidah was dashed to the floor of a canyon through a waterfall as the tree which he had climbed was cut as a test by uncertain men. Yet he lived miraculously to tell them more and convert them to his message. Hiawatha lost his three daughters through death and wandered many days in his grief, crying for someone to console him, when Daganawidah suddenly appeared by his campfire and spoke words which have become immortal to the Iroquois as their Requickenin Address always used at their Condolence Ceremony.

Taking the wampum string of grief from the hands of Hiawatha, Daganawidah said, "I wipe away the tears from thy face, using the white fawn skin of pity. I make it daylight for thee. I beautify the sky. Now thou shalt do thy thinking in peace when thine eyes rest on the sky, which the Perfecter of our faculties, the Master of all things, intended should be a source of happiness to man."

Thus was Hiawatha's mind cleared and his grief lifted, and together they continued preaching peace.

Strange legends creep in and out among the oft-told tales of Daganawidah. It is told that when he left to do his work in the land of strange people, he feared that he might not return and that his friends might wander in ignorance of him, so he left them a sign.

Stripping a tree limb from the trunk he pointed to the rude gash in the green bark and said, "If I should not return, watch carefully this stump. If it should remain as it is, then I am well and my mission successful. If it should bleed, then you will know I have been slain by my listeners and my words have gone unheeded."

According to the legend the broken stub of a branch never did bleed and the people then knew that Daganawidah had not perished but had been successful indeed.

WHAT SIGNIFICANCE can these legends hold for us? Passing from legend into history we find that the Iroquois did band together and enjoyed friendly relations within their tribes for years. They were greatly respected for their honesty.

When did this union happen? No one knows for sure, and dates vary. A dependable source explains it this way.

"It was established and working when the first white man came."

The constitution which they adopted is not a defensive instrument dealing solely with safeguards against oppression and war. It is a positive thing, giving expression to the five and later six nations' way of life. It expresses a great unity in the midst of diversity. It gave to the founders of our own country a model of men living together with all the opportunities for brutal and unpunished savagery yet enjoying a calm and peaceful existence. The expressed purpose of the union was to provide a peace and strength that would cast out all fears. Is not this one of the purposes of the gospel?

They were to live together, eat and hunt together, and die together in a fellowship of serenity. Even if the stories are only centuries-distorted tales of the visit of the Savior to this land, they at least carry a message to our hearts.

Men may live together in peace and be happy and joyful. They may establish the laws and commandments of the Great Spirit within their souls and live as men, not beasts. They may remember the ages past and the visit of a Daganawidah to their people and the principles for which he stood. As to when Daganawidah actually died or where he actually went, no man knows. But the Iroquois believe today with a stanchness that comes only from a union of centuries that his work was not a failure, that his words were successful. His works bear a testimony which might well be borne into the heart of every man who ever has prayed, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

(Author's note: Many thanks to Dr. Paul A. Wallace, the author of The White Roots of Peace, who so kindly gave me permission to quote at will from his beautifully told story.)

Every Man's Occupation a Christian Vocation

(Excerpts from an address by John Oliver Nelson at YMCA Convention, Cleveland, Ohio, June, 1951.)

ONE OF THE GREATEST TRAGEDIES of modern life in these United States is evidenced by the fact that Every job survey taken in America today shows that the chief occupational disease we share is the occupational disease of being terribly bored with what we do in our working life.

This kind of living is wrong for no reason so much as that it is contrary to the will of Almighty God.

Our Lord, as he sat down with a little group of laymen around him, said to them, "Look, you men, the very hairs in your head are numbered." The kind of God we know is the kind of God who says, "There is an intention for every human life among you, and you are born for that intention. Not a sparrow falls to the ground but that your Heavenly Father knows of it; and you are of more worth than many sparrows."

People do not take that seriously. In the first century of the Christian faith, sweepers and housewives, soldiers and farmers were told: "Christ died for me and for you." And they said, "For me? Good heavens—nobody ever paid me any mind before." And yet, when a civilization did begin to believe that God had an intention for every person, that civilization was overturned and renewed.

Unless we find that sense of intention, this civilization cannot stand. We need to reclaim the whole idea of Christian vocation.

What does one need to become a minister? Someone puts up a wavering hand and says, "You need a call of God."

But the next question is, "Do you need a call of God to be a grocer? Or an engineer, or a lawyer, or a nurse, or a bus driver, or street sweeper?" If this is asked of laymen they will look at each other and say, "Now the man must be joking. Of course you don't need a call of God for those jobs. You just see the vocational advisor in your school or look at the want ads in the newspapers and you find your job."

Do you know what this says? It says that Almighty God in his heaven, the God whom we know in our Lord, is interested in the life plans of parsons and of missionaries, but he is really not very much interested in the life plans of businessmen or lawyers, of teachers or of doctors. And to say that is the greatest heresy we can commit in the Christian faith in this day.

What does this mean? What does this mean in your particular situation? What is Christian vocation? Look at some of the marks of that life work which in our day can be done as unto God.

Your job can be your Christian vocation if what you do in it is worth while in society; God calls no one to a trivial job.

It is your Christian vocation if it takes the best you have to offer of skill and of will.

It is your Christian vocation if it insists that you deal with people as children of God and as human beings instead of depersonalizing them.

It is your Christian vocation if you can pray on your job about your job.

Ye Are My Witnesses

By James F. Keir

The purpose of witnesses is to establish the truth. Our faith is strengthened by the testimony of men who know.

When I was in my teens a Mr. Lewis, who later operated a variety store in Lamoni, Iowa, visited in our home in Braidwood, Illinois. He related to us that before he joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints he had heard of an outstanding experience Elder John Landers had shortly after the assassination of Joseph Smith in 1844. So he wrote to Brother Landers and requested him to put in writing his experience. Brother Lewis had the reply from Brother Landers with him, and I was so impressed with it that I made a copy of it and kept it among my papers for years. It has since been lost, but the contents of it were so deeply burned into my memory that I shall never forget them.

Brother Landers wrote, in substance, that after the death of Joseph, there was confusion, some saying, "Lo here," and others, "Lo there." Different men were aspiring to leadership, and he did not know what to do or where to place his allegiance. So he went down into a hollow in the earth to pray for the counsel and advice of the Almighty.

An audible voice spoke to Brother Landers and told him to "continue to preach my gospel, and in due time young Joseph shall come forth to lead the church, and never again shall there be an active rejection of the church."

The testimony of this witness for Christ has been a comfort to me when conditions have arisen in the church which tried men's souls and tested their faith. I share it with the hope that others shall be helped by it also.

Pasteurized Milk and Yogurt

By Mildred (Nelson) Smith

LET'S CHECK ANOTHER tale of those who are unwittingly confusing the minds of the people about foods. They say that it is harmful to use pasteurized milk. In fact, some say we should not use milk at all. But what does God say about it? Throughout the Scriptures God, through his prophets, describes a land in which his people shall be happy. He describes it as a land "flowing with milk and honey." Does that sound as if milk should not be used as a food?

Now let's examine the charge against pasteurization. They say the "friendly" bacteria are destroyed leaving the milk to rot rather than to sour. Have you known anyone with undulant fever? Have you seen the way they've suffered for weeks, months, and even years? Have you seen their emaciated bodies fight bravely to come back to health? The bacteria that causes Brucellosis (undulant fever or Malta fever) is killed by pasteurization. Would you call that killing "a friendly bacteria"? Have you had tuberculosis in your family, and then had the family cow "test out" with the disease? Have you seen someone suffering from typhoid fever? Have you suffered "strep" throat?

These are the bacteria which, if present, are killed by pasteurization. Of course, a very small portion of the milk contains these bacteria because of the large scale preventive measures that are in effect, but there is no practical way of knowing which milk is safe. It's easy to say, "Test the cows and be sure they're healthy," but a cow that is free of disease today may be infected tomorrow. And, of course, the one who milks the cow often is the carrier for the disease germ that invades milk secreted by a perfectly healthy cow. It's far better for all to be safe than for even a few to suffer. The one to suffer might be you or your child.

The "friendly bacteria" to which these persons really refer are those that cause milk to sour because they change part of the milk sugar into lactic acid. Actually these bacteria are contaminants of milk. When milk is secreted it is sterile, except when the cow is infected with the bacteria causing disease. Any other bacteria found in milk have come into it because the cow's teats, the hands of the milk handlers, or the equipment used in obtaining and caring for the milk are contaminated with those bacteria, or the milk is exposed to air which is laden with bacteria. Since cows lie down in dirt, they usually acquire some such bacteria, so it is practically impossible to obtain milk without some. Absolutely sterile milk, if it could be obtained and maintained so, would never sour whether it was pasteurized or not.

IN PRACTICE our milk does have bacteria in it. In practice, too, properly pasteurized milk will sour. Enough of the lactic acid-producing bacteria are killed, however, to cause the souring to be somewhat delayed. In the absence of the large quantities of acid that would otherwise be produced, other bacteria that entered the milk along with the acid-producing bacteria multiply. They often produce what we call "off" flavors and "off" odors because we do not enjoy them. They would, however, be present even if the lactic acid bacteria were there, except that their multiplication would be slowed down and the flavors and odors they produce covered up by the flavor and odor of the acid. They are not dangerous to health, if the pathogens (disease-producing bacteria) mentioned above are killed by pasteurization. Certainly few people enjoy milk that has soured or otherwise developed "off" flavors. In practice, refrigeration accompanied by the use of the milk in a reasonable length of time prevents this being a problem at all. And once the milk is inside the body, the usual normal human digestive system is equipped to digest either raw or pasteurized milk.

Dr. Royal Lee, the dentist writer, has raised a great cry over the fact that the enzyme phosphatase is destroyed by pasteurization. (See "The Battlefront for Better Nutrition" by A. Royal Lee, Prevention, September, 1950.) It is true that phosphatase is inactivated by heat. In fact, the inspector uses a simple test for residual phosphatase activity to determine whether milk has been correctly pasteurized. If phosphatase activity still is great, the inspector knows that the disease-producing bacteria, if any were present, may still be alive. Hence he cannot permit that milk to be sold and endanger health.

But strangely enough, phosphatase is also inactivated by souring. When milk is soured by the "friendly bacteria" which are so prevalent in unpasteurized milk, phosphatase is as effectively inactivated as by pasteurization. (See Borden's Review of Nutrition Research, September, 1950.)

Meat, like milk, is rich in phosphatase, but no one recommends the exclusive use of raw meat to provide phosphatase.

These enzymes are also present in grains, vegetables, fruits, yeasts, and even molds. If we needed to eat them, we could get them in abundance without subjecting ourselves to the dangers that go with the use of raw milk. Most sick people do not lack phosphatase. An excessively high phosphatase activity is found when cancer, old age, broken bones, and many other diseases occur. Even near starvation produces increased phosphatase activity in the body.

God was wise enough to place the mechanism for producing phosphatase and the other enzymes in the body tissues where they are needed to make possible body metabolism. We do not need to eat them. In fact, eating them does no real good. What we really need is to provide the needed vitamins, adenylic acid, and amino acids. Our bodies will use these nutrients to form their own enzymes. And these needed nutrients are provided by the well-balanced diet which we shall discuss later.

ANOTHER CLAIM IS THAT pasteurized milk has little cream left. In this indeed they do show ignorance. Ask any homemaker who pasteurizes her own milk what happens to the cream line. As a result of the heating process some globules of fat are broken down to such small particles that they are dispersed through the milk as if it had been homogenized. As a result there is less to float on top. The cream is still there. It can't be seen so plainly, that's all. Actually even skim milk contains the nutrients most needed from milk for abundant health. We eat enough butter and margarine to provide needed fatty acids and should eat enough vegetables and fruits for the vitamin A.

Homogenization is a purely mechanical process. Milk is forced through a very fine screen by tremendous pressure. In passing through the screen all the fat globules are broken up into particles small enough to remain dispersed throughout the milk. It must still meet the legal requirements for fat content and still has all its nutritive qualities. Because of the change in the size of the fat particles, it may be a bit more easily digested by babies and people who are ill. Otherwise there is no change.

The charge of Dr. Lee that homogenization permits the sale of "stale" milk with fresh and prevents curdling is ridiculous! Natural curdling occurs only from the action of the acid produced in the milk on the milk proteins. Homogenization cannot cover up the flavor of acid and spoilage.

MANY OF THESE recommendations are most unreasonable. One writer says milk should not even be scalded in making bread. The poor fellow surely never tried making yeast bread in the summertime with raw milk not strictly fresh. With an economical amount of yeast, bread dough must stand at about 85° Fahrenheit for five to six hours or more before baking. In that time raw milk even a few hours old can develop off flavors and often enough acid to be detrimental to the gluten that gives the bread its shape.

It's stupid to refuse to scald milk when the bread is going to be baked before it's eaten! The inside temperature of a loaf of bread reaches 165° Fahrenheit before the gluten coagulates and stops the rising. It becomes much hotter than that before the bread is baked. The milk will certainly get hotter in the baking than it could ever get in pasteurization. The highest pasteurization temperature I've ever known to be recommended was 165° Fahrenheit. Usually either 143° Fahrenheit for thirty minutes or 160° Fahrenheit for one-half minute is specified.

If pasteurization really were detrimental, then what of all the milk used in soups, puddings, custards, etc.? These have far more heat applied than is used in pasteurization. Would they not be harmful rather than nutritious? Dried milk and evaporated milk have much higher heat treatments than those used in pasteurization. Yet in the group with those who condemn pasteurization are those who recommend the use of dried milk in quantity.

We have many studies available that indicate the excellent quality of dried and evaporated milk when it is used, even in infant feeding. So also are there many studies that show pasteurized milk to be extremely nutritious. Almost all scientific studies that have proved milk to be so valuable in human nutrition, have been made with pasteurized milk or milk otherwise heat-treated. Investigators have not been willing to expose their subjects to a possibility of serious illness by using raw milk.

Although the nutrients for which we need milk most remain virtually unchanged in the process of pasteurization there is some loss of vitamins C and B¹. These we get in abundance from other foods if we follow the advice of God in the word of wisdom that He gave us.

WHAT OF YOGURT? Gaylord Hauser, a prolific writer and teacher, insists that to live long and healthfully yogurt must be a part of our daily diet. In the first place yogurt's cost is all out of proportion to its nutritive value. In Minneapolis, at least, it's cost is four times that of regular milk. Under most conditions it has only about the same nutritive value as regular milk. Some manufacturers do add dried skim milk to increase the proportion of nutrients. If the proportion is doubled, the cost is still more than twice that of regular milk, for dried skim milk costs only about eight cents a quart for reconstituted milk.

Real yogurt has additional bacteria added. These "cultures" cause it to ferment. Soured or fermented milk when eaten does form a small curd that is readily digestible. But a healthy adult can easily digest regular milk curds. The smaller curds do have an advantage in cases of certain illnesses or undernutrition. Likewise the extra acid is probably of no consequence to the normally healthy individual, but may be decidedly disadvantageous in certain other diseased conditions. Certainly if a cultured soured milk is desired, one can buy more real nutrition for his money by purchasing the cultured "buttermilk" commonly distributed by dairies than by paying exorbitant prices to maintain a culture of bacteria to partially predigest food.

It is claimed that yogurt is the ingredient of the diet of the Bulgarians which causes them, according to certain persons who profess to be wise in the ways of health, to live extremely long and well. Actually the Bulgarians have used yogurt because they have had little refrigeration. Now let's examine the claim that Bulgarians are a very long-lived people. The last period for which figures from Bulgaria were available to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for the 1946 "Length of Life, Study of the Life Table" was 1925-28. Those figures indicate that a Bulgarian child born between 1925 and 1928 could expect to live 45.9 years if a male or 46.6 years if a female. The closest comparable period for which figures on the population of the United States are available is 1929-31. A white child born in the United States during those years could expect to live 59.1 years if a male and 62.6 years if a female. In other words, two decades ago a child born in the United States could expect to live fourteen to sixteen years longer than one born in Bulgaria. At the age of ninety years the Bulgarian had no real life expectancy left, according to the same statistics. The person who lived to be ninety in the United States could reasonably expect to live at least three years more. Statistics from Bulgaria show that there are also more older people for each 1,000 population in the United States than there are in Bulgaria.

And further, with respect to the "old days" which professedly wise men refer to with such freedom, I should like to quote extensively from Maurice Ernest, The Longer Life, Adam and Company, 85 New Oxford Street, London, W.C. 1.:

Indeed the figures about centenarians that statistical departments publish are invariably further from the truth, the lower the educational standard in the particular country happens to be.—Page 36.

Lastly I must now refer to the many alleged Bulgarian centenarians, in whom some biologists, in ignorance of the evidence to the contrary, [italics mine] still try to believe. As is well known, Bulgaria, previously a Turkish province, became semi-independent in 1878—the new state organized a census and it is on record that on that occasion throngs of men and women claimed to be 120, 130, and even 140 years of age.

According to a communication of Professor St. Watoff of Sophia, the fame for phenomenal long-livedness acquired by Bulgarians at the end of the nineteenth century was, however, quite unmerited. Government enumerators had no means of investigating even the most extravagant claims.—Page 39.

The appeal to Bulgarian longevity to prove that yogurt has magic to insure long life has no foundation in facts. Surely the calcium, riboflavin, vitamin A, protein, and other food nutrients found abundantly in milk are extremely valuable. Dr. Henry C. Sherman has proved that abundant supplies of the calcium, riboflavin, and vitamin A do prolong life and extend the prime of it. To receive the benefit, however, we do not need to have it fermented—and incidentally line the pockets of those who have designed to take our money. In fact, one of the biggest objections to the use of yogurt is that users are apt to get less of the milk nutrients than they need, because it costs so much and tastes so different.

Could it be possible that manufacturers and sellers are really so ignorant that they do not know the facts? Or is it another "evil design" to take our money and our thoughts from the things of the kingdom? Certainly when their fabricated ideas are checked against the facts which actual studies and tests provide, they may be classed with those who "professing themselves to be wise, . . . become fools."—Romans 1: 22.

Vital Statistics

"We always take statistics with a grain of salt in our family," once said Frances Perkins. "My great-grandfather, who lived to be one hundred four, was an eccentric old fellow, and at the age of ninety-nine had a great argument with the town bootmaker as to how a pair of shoes was to be made.

"'Look here, Mr. Perkins,' said the shoemaker, finally becoming impatient, 'why do you make such a fuss about a pair of shoes? You are ninety-nine. Do you think you'll ever live to wear them out?'"

"My great-grandfather looked at him severely. 'My man,' he said, 'don't you know that very few people ever die after the age of ninety-nine? Statistics prove it!'"—Milwaukee Journal.

Power Made Manifest

By Abel Hall

PART II

IN 1916 I RECEIVED my first full-time General Church appointment and was assigned to the Leeds and Bradford area. Here I had some remarkable experiences as I traveled back and forth from Leeds and Bradford and the surrounding districts. In the course of my visits to Bradford, meetings were held in the home of the Sisters Wormald and Schofield—maiden ladies who lived together and were true examples of what Latter Day Saints should be. Their home was situated in front of a field, and in order to get to the house one had to go through a door set in the wall which surrounded the field.

Often as I passed through this door I would see a little old lady leaning on her garden gate and watching me enter the Wormald's home. After a while she began to inquire as to the nature of my visits, and both the maiden sisters had the opportunity to tell the gospel to her. Eventually she came into our meetings, heard me preach, and soon gave her name for baptism.

Now the council authorities were much opposed to our church, and when we made application for the use of the Bradford Council baths for the baptism, they wanted to make an exorbitant charge of two pounds each for the candidates and a similar exorbitant charge for all who came to witness the ceremony. I knew that by traveling to Leeds we could get the use of the baths there for a few pence each, so we arranged for the baptism to take place there.

Just as we were about to go into the water, the man in attendance at the baths came to me and told me that he had just received a telephone call advising him that the Germans were about to come over the city of Leeds and giving him the order to put out all lights. This was in the days of the Zepellin raids, and as the baths were covered with a glass roof it was necessary that all lights be extinguished that could be seen from the air.

After consultation with the attendant it was agreed that a small gas jet in a side alcove would be left burning, but I was personally to take the risk involved. I assured him that he need have no fear and after asking the candidate if she would be prepared to go into the water with me under these conditions, the brave old lady at once agreed.

The light in the alcove just gave a meager gleam on the water, and as we went down the steps we heard the raiders overhead. Presently the sound of their dreaded missiles caused some to be apprehensive, but the woman never flinched, and under what must have been the strangest of experiences attending a baptism, she was born into the church and kingdom of God.

SOME YEARS LATER when I returned to Leeds after a long absence, a note was handed to me telling me of the death of this sister and inviting me to attend her funeral.

Her family, while not interfering with her and her attendance at church, steadfastly refused to have anything to do with her religion, and she had said several times that she would willingly give her life if it would bring them into the church.

After the interment we retired to a small cafe for refreshments. The family kept a respectful distance from me, showing by their attitude they had no further use for me. However, I went over to them and told them that on the following Sunday I would preach the memorial sermon of their departed loved one, and gave them an invitation to be present. Their answers were somewhat evasive, but to my great joy on the Sunday in question every one of them was present. Thus began a series of meetings which ended in my baptizing all the family with the exception of one brother and his wife. This sister whom we had buried had indeed died that her family might be brought into membership with the church. She was Sister Aldridge; two of her sons are elders, and one of them is the pastor of the Bradford, Yorks, Branch, and also a member of the bishopric of the British Isles.

AT THIS TIME Brother Dan B. Sorden was laboring with me, and I don't suppose he ever forgot another remarkable experience that we had together. In Leeds Branch both he and I took alternate nights in giving lectures. We would form the class in a semicircle around the blackboard, maps, and charts. Then we would hand out Bibles, paper, and pencils to members of the class.

There was one sister however that would never accept these aids as she was not able to read or write. She was sixty years old, and I had known her for several years. She was very conscious of her handicap.

One day she sent for Dan and me to administer to her, and I was the spokesman. The Spirit of the Lord rested on me in power, and it was made known to me that she had been earnestly praying for a gift from the Heavenly Father. It was not shown to me what the gift was, but the Spirit promised that it would be given to her if she continued faithful.

The following Sunday Dan and I went to see her in her home once more. Dan sat on a chair to the left of her bed, and I made my way to the right side near the window overlooking the street. Near the window was a little table on which was a Bible. Sister Brookes pointed to the Bible and asked me to turn to a chapter for reading. Thinking that she wished me to read the chapter I began to read, when she gently touched my arm and asked me to pass the book to her.

Wonderingly I gave her the Bible while Dan and I stared across the bed at each other. We both were amazed as we heard the dear sister read the chapter through to the end. This was repeated three times, each time I found the chapter and each time she read it herself. Both Dan and I fell on our knees by the side of the bed and gave thanks for what we had witnessed. It was indeed a manifestation of God's wonderful power.

ANOTHER EXPERIENCE that occurred while I was at Leeds also stands out in my memory. It was still during the war years (1914-18) and I was staying at the home of the late Thomas Taylor who had been under General Church appointment for several years. His home was on top of a hill overlooking a beautiful valley through which the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway ran. Beyond this and across the valley lay the town of Low Moor where stood one of the largest munition factories in the north of England.

One night after I had retired, I was awakened by the dull, thudding noise of a Zepellin somewhere in the distance. As I listened the noise seemed to be getting nearer, and rising from my bed I went to the window that overlooked the valley beyond. Suddenly my heart missed a beat as I saw the silvery, fishlike shape of the airship passing within a few feet of my window and level with my face. I uttered a silent prayer that God would protect us and the home, and then I saw it turn in the direction of the Low Moor munition factory on the far side of the valley. As the moon was at full I could see it clearly as it made its way to its objective, but I was astounded to find that no bombs were being dropped as there were no explosions. How wrong I was!

The next morning as I sat writing my letters I was near a window that looked across the valley toward the Low Moor factory, when I was startled by seeing a big cloud of smoke ascending skyward followed by a most terrific explosion which shook the windows and rocked the walls of our house on the hill. Almost quicker than I can write these words down on paper, there followed another series of five similar explosions which again shook our building to its foundations. Then I knew what had happened! The airship of the night previous had laid six bombs which were timed to go off nicely just as the majority of the workers were at their jobs.

My wife was staying with me that week, and Brother Taylor quickly got out his horse and trap and took us down to the scene of the disaster. What a sight met our eyes on our way. Windows of houses miles from the actual town itself were smashed, and when we arrived at Low Moor we found damage beyond description. The streets were covered with debris eighteen inches thick which came over the tops of our boots. Roofs of houses had been completely lifted up into the air, turned round and rested again edgewise on the houses. Walls were torn from the fronts which left the inside rooms open to the gaze of the passers-by—like looking into a doll's house. Furniture and household goods were strewn all over the streets.

As the police were engaged with the firemen in doing all they could to quell the fires which had been started by the explosions, we found that we were at liberty to get very close to the factory. Then just as we drew close we saw almost in front of us only a few yards away, a huge gas holder fly into the air like a balloon, and when it had reached several hundred feet upwards, it burst with a loud report. Pieces of the metal flew all round us and one piece that I touched with my foot was hot and twisted into the shape of a corkscrew. We breathed a prayer of thankfulness for our preservation and asked God's blessing upon the ones who had been bereaved of their loved ones.

I MUST HERE RECORD another event that occurred while I was in Yorkshire. I arose one morning and related to the Taylor family a dream that I had during the night. I dreamt that I had finished writing my letters and was making my way across the two fields that separated the Taylor's home from the hilltop where one could get a streetcar into the city. In my dream I had reached the car and had just put my hand on the rail, when I remembered that I had not brought my letters for posting. I turned back for the letters, and the car proceeded on its journey to the city.

The track went down a steep grade from the top of the hill, and I thought I saw the driver lose control with the result that the car gathered speed. At the bottom of the hill the track took a sharp turn to the left. The vehicle was not able to negotiate this turn and fell over on its side, injuring several of the passengers, especially those on the top deck. That was the dream.

After breakfast I went into the front room where I usually wrote my letters, then prepared myself for the journey into the city. I crossed the two fields, and came to the car which was waiting in its place on the hill. Just as I reached out my hand to grip the rail I saw that I had forgotten the letters and turned back to the house. As I was walking back I remembered the dream and thought to myself, "How strange that I should see all this in a dream," but it never dawned on me that the rest of the dream would be true. When I returned with my letters I learned that the car had actually got out of control and gathered speed, turning over at the bend. Several people had to be taken to the hospital with severe injuries.

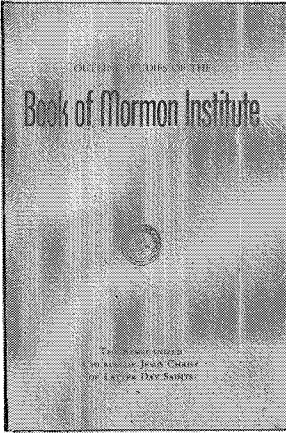

IN APRIL, 1923, I received a letter from Elder John W. Taylor of Manchester asking me to try to be present at the conference to be held in that city at Easter. Brother Taylor was president of what was then the Manchester District. At that time the funds of the church were very low, and often wives of missionaries were left without their allowance for several weeks after they were due. Often the missionaries themselves had no money with which to meet their expenses. It was such an occasion when Brother Taylor's letter arrived. I did not have even the necessary amount to buy a stamp in order to write to him.

I had often walked the forty miles between Leeds and Manchester, but on this occasion I was not able to do so, because I had just recovered from a serious attack of the flu and was too weak to attempt to walk that distance. I retired to my bedroom and knelt in prayer. I told my Heavenly Father that he knew of the request that had been made and of the position I was in. I said I knew that if it were his will I should attend that conference he would see that ways and means would be opened up for me to go.

That afternoon I walked into town and was going along Boar Lane near the city center, when I felt my eyes turned by a power that I could not see to a piece of paper that lay at my feet folded up to the size of two inches. I picked it up, opened it, and to my great joy found that it was a ten shilling note—my fare to Manchester and back. I was present at that conference.

Question Time

Question:

Is it right to permit smoking in our churches, in lower auditoriums, when we are serving public dinners?

Iowa Mrs. A. T.

Answer:

No, it is not right to permit smoking in our churches—lower auditorium, reception hall, dining hall, or what have you.

As a church we have definite ideas and standards having to do with the use of tobacco. The Doctrine and Covenants, section 86, states: "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man." The church in conference assembled has at various times made these statements: "The church deprecates the use of tobacco" (General Conference Resolution 92); "The church declares the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious and filthy" (Ibid., 217); "This conference discourages the use of tobacco" (Ibid., 235).

At no time should the sanctity of our churches be jeopardized or the standards lowered. I believe it is good public relations for us to share our physical plant and equipment with those having a desire to use our facilities, but if they use our property they certainly should comply with our standards and practices.

Never should we willingly lower our standards and ideals in our houses of worship.

Question:

Since deacons can't baptize how can you reconcile Acts 8:26-39 and Doctrine and Covenants 17:11?

Pennsylvania Mrs. A. J. J.

Answer:

The first ordination of Philip is described in Acts 6:5. Nowhere in the Scripture text is he called a deacon. That word was supplied for the chapter heading by later editors. It was omitted in the Inspired Version. According to our understanding of priesthood, the quality of these men, and the areas they represented, might have indicated that they were ordained as bishops.

However, we have stronger evidence to consider. According to the Holman Bible "Chronology of the Acts" the ordination of the seven men occurred in A.D. 35. The event described in Acts 8:26-40 is indicated for some time after A.D. 36. During this time Philip was engaged in church work, growing in experience and recognition. By the time he baptized the Ethiopian eunuch, the editors were calling him "Philip the Evangelist." In our understanding of the office, this would be in the Melchisedec priesthood, and he would have the authority to baptize. There would certainly be an opportunity for other ordinations subsequent to his first one.

Question:

Job 1:6, 7 and Job 38:7 refer to "the sons of God." Who were these sons of God at that time?

Missouri Mrs. M. W.

Answer:

The Authorized Version reads: "There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord." The Inspired Version puts it "the children of God." Either form carries about the same meaning, pointing to the people of God or his righteous ones.

In Job 38:7 the words have a quite different, yet similar, application. They apply to the host of faithful and loyal spirits of men in the precarnate world, who, seeing the earth being prepared for their habitation, rejoiced exceedingly. Job, speaking of the day when God laid the foundations of the earth, says of these people, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." They were at that time the obedient ones—truly sons of God.

Question:

My husband and I are isolated members. Our close friends enjoy occasional card playing (canasta, cribbage, etc.) in their own homes, without gambling, drinking, or smoking. Our hesitation to join them has prevented maintaining social contacts which we need. Will you please advise the stand of the church in regard to card playing?

Vermont Mrs. K. R. W.

Answer:

A number of years ago the church in General Conference assembled passed Resolution No. 377. A part of that resolution was "that card-playing among or by the Saints should be discouraged." The resolution does not say you can't participate, for the church was aware that legislative action cannot solve moral problems. Personal rights and privileges are to be decided by the individual involved.

Perhaps the best way to make choices relative to some of these questions is to meet the problem by answering this statement written some years ago by John Blackmore: "That activity which injures your physical body, or endangers your mental development, or lessens your appreciation for the beautiful and true or in any way retards your influence for good in your community, that activity is wrong for you."

Question:

When was Satan cast out of heaven? Was it after he tempted Eve or later when there was war in heaven?

Missouri Mrs. M. W.

Answer:

Satan, with a following of one third of the host of human spirits which God had created, rebelled against God and made war upon the loyal ones. This resulted in their being cast out of heaven. "He was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." All this was in the precarnate spirit life, before man had been created in the flesh. Satan was already upon the earth when Adam and Eve were created, for it was he who put it into the heart of the serpent to tempt Eve and to cause the fall of man. (Read Genesis 3:1-12, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 28:10; Revelation 12:3-9, Authorized Version.)

The social committee held a social on November 15, and a fireside service December 2.

On December 1, Teuvo O Kahtava and David Garber were baptized by Elder W. A. Bushila. Brother Kahtava was confirmed by Elder Bushila and Brother Garber was confirmed by Elder G. A. Edwards.

The annual church school Christmas concert was held December 17, with Brother F. Miller acting as chairman. On December 23, the choir, under the direction of Sister Oris C. Flood had charge of the evening service. Featured on the program were solo numbers as well as choral renditions.

On December 21, the young people went to the Davey Home for the Aged, and entertained by singing Christmas carols. Little Sharon Edwards assisted by reciting.

On December 29, Vern H. Darby was baptized by W. A. Bushila. On January 2, he was confirmed by Elder W. A. Bushila, assisted by Elder G. A. Edwards.—Reported by WINIFRED SPENCER

Baptismal Service Conducted

BEVIER, MISSOURI—Elder Norman E. Cox, associate missionary of the Missouri area, conducted a series from November 25-30. Saints from Macon and Huntsville attended.

The priesthood of the branch attended the priesthood institute in Columbia, Missouri, December 2.

The Bevier Saints worshiped with the Macon Saints in the evening of December 2, when Apostle D. O. Chesworth delivered the sermon. The group attending included Saints from Palmyra, Trenton, and Chillicothe, Missouri.

Seventy John Puckett conducted a baptismal service December 16. Ninety were present for this service where six candidates from Vandalia, two from Palmyra, and one from Huntsville were baptized. After the service refreshments were served.

The annual Christmas party was held December 14. Exchange of gifts and group singing followed the turkey supper.—Reported by GRACE VANSKIKE

Church School Presents Program

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—A cantata, "The Dawn of Christmas," was presented by the music department of the branch December 23. Soloists were Dolores Vincent and Mary Lou Chamberlain. The director was Lenora Nixon and the organist was Helen Phillips.

The church school presented their annual program on Christmas Eve, directed by Don Treiber, church school superintendent. Melvin Robey, Roy Givens, and William Young were ordained deacons under the hands of Evangelist R. E. Rodgers, High Priest S. M. Zonker, Bishop Otto Melcher, and Elder John Treiber. Brother Treiber gave the opening remarks, Samuel Zonker delivered the prayer of consecration, and the charge was given by Otto Melcher. Paul Lannum welcomed the men into branch activities. A duet was sung by Leona Hanes and Lenora Nixon. Over one hundred persons attended the service.

The last Sunday of every month is observed as family night in the branch. Following the preaching service, the congregation meets in the back room where an appropriate program is presented and refreshments are served. The venture has increased attendance at the family night fellowship service.—Reported by LEONA HANES

Hold Missionary Meetings

GREAT BEND, KANSAS.—Seventy James Daugherty and Missionary Harry Black held a series of meetings in the G.A.R. Hall from October 27 to November 11.

The Christmas party and dinner was held December 16 at the Hall. Patsy Hembree, Patty Spangler, and Rearon Rambro served the banquet for fifty Saints and friends. The following children were blessed: Allen Eugene Snapp, Donald LeRoy Snapp, Carolyn Mae Horner, Albert Olen Horner, and Hazel Irene Horner.

On November 11 the group was officially organized as the Great Bend Mission. Elder J. C. Shannon of Wichita serves as the pastor.

Elders Ronald E. Manuel and J. J. Wilson have ministered to the group recently.

Lots have been purchased, and the amount of $5,250 has been pledged for a church home.—Reported by DARLIN R. HARDIE

Officers Elected

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—The annual business meeting of the San Leandro Mission was held September 5 and was presided over by Elder Alma C. Andrews of the district presidency. The officers elected for the year are as follows: pastor, Elder D. C. Holden, with Elders Eugene Bivens and Paul Stanfield as counselors; director of religious education and home visitor, Priest Audy Henry; youth leader, Burdett Tordoff; women's department leader, Lenore Bivens; director of music, Leilani Reid; director of drama, Mardel Holden; secretary, historian, and publicity, Nellie Mac Dougall; treasurer and custodian, George Campbell; book steward, Arthur Davis; bishop's solicitor, Orral Hartwig; missionary supervisor, George Anderson; auditors, Paul Stanfield and Harold Korell; building committee, Audy Henry, Harold Korell, Paul Stanfield, George Anderson, and Lenore Bivens.

On March 25, 1951, Deacon Arthur Davis was ordained a priest, Audy Henry, a priest, and Harold Korell, a deacon.

Recent baptisms have been Vernon Melton, Joy Murray, Dorothy Stoel, Kent Stoel, Phyllis Stanfield, Larry Erickson, Diane Hart, Joseph Ross, and Dorothy Carter.

Barbara Mac Dougall and Burdett Tordoff were married June 17, 1951. Grace Bundage and Jerome Black were married August 28, 1951.

Missionaries who have held services at San Leandro Mission in the homes of members and at Livermore Mission are Seventy George Njeim, Patriarch William Patterson and Patriarch William Dawson. Other visiting ministers have been Elder Jerry Runkle of Graceland College; Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Reed Holmes; Bishop Burdick of Sacramento; and Glen Smith of San Bruno.—Reported by NELLIE D. MAC DOUGALL

Priesthood Holds Retreat

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—A priesthood retreat, comprising thirty members of the ministry of the Scranton, Archbald, and Bloomsburg Branches was held in mid-December at the home of Brother Frank Dipple, Hazelton, Pennsylvania.

High Priest John T. Conway of the Philadelphia area was in charge of the meeting, assisted by Elder Harvey Grice of Connecticut. Following the Communion service where the emblems were served by high priests, a prayer service was held. A discussion panel was conducted in the afternoon with talks given by Brothers Conway and Grice. Among those present were Elders Richard J. Hawkins, William H. Hyde, and Edison Dipple, pastors of the Scranton, Bloomsburg, and Archbald Branches respectively. Brother Conway preached at the Scranton Branch in the evening.

Other events during December were the annual Christmas party of the adult Zion's League, the church school Christmas entertainment, the Scout Christmas party, and the party held by the junior Zion's League.—Reported by H. DAVID MORRIS

Women at Work

By Louise Scott Wrigley

THE ORGAN NOTES settled over the auditorium in a whisper, as if laying a mantle of peace while young women and older ones filed silently down the carpeted aisles to find seats. Those who were already seated wore looks of serenity. The carefully selected music had already purged many of them of their problems, and their hearts were given to worship. More women came in through the several doors of the old Stone Church, filling the empty places. It was 10 a.m. on a Thursday morning.

There were still many places vacant—places which should have belonged to those who were occupied elsewhere or didn't realize what they were missing in this service, for here were gathered the devoted women of the Center Stake with love and longing in their hearts and a thirst for greater knowledge, for more effective avenues of service. These women came to be fed.

The worship center was simple, for they had learned that in simplicity was the greatest beauty of all. The arrangement which had been fashioned by earnest hands and prayerful hearts ministered to the quiet women as they brought their thoughts from all manner of things to this one point.

The women's leader, sincere and deeply concerned about her responsibility, consecrated to her work and aware of the importance of woman's influence for good, guided the opening service skillfully, pouring out upon these listening women the benefit of her wisdom, her attention to the detail behind a smoothly executed program, and her humility which acknowledged God and invited his Spirit. Hearts could not help being drawn out in a sudden surge of spiritual sweetness and urgency. This set the tone for the day's work.

FROM THE WORSHIP SERVICE the women separated to classes where much thought had been woven into the material presented. Here were women of all ages banded together by a single purpose—to increase their own capacity to serve with a greater degree of efficiency and with the right spirit. Here again was that careful preparation, that realization of responsibility and privilege, that overwhelming desire to do it the wise way, the spiritual way. Women who had come prayerfully were glad they had come, thankful all over again for their opportunities. They were fired with a new determination to tackle their problems from another angle and united with a will to see it through. Women who had come haltingly found themselves taking new steps forward into the light of service to others. Women who had come indifferently found a spirit of love which filled them with a desire they had never known to be of good use in their own groups.

In the friendly visiting class there was special emphasis on the importance of the individual, the need of the sick and poor-spirited, the ministry that a woman holds in her fingertips, her smile, and her gracious spirit when she enters the home of the troubled and the sorrowing.

The Daughters of Zion were being advised about their own problems, peculiar perhaps to the young married women with families, possibly with disinterested young husbands, all of them with cares and duties which seemed to overflow their days and threaten to crowd out the service which they alone could give to their churches. With enthusiasm they discovered together that there were ways around their difficulties. They joined others who shared the same problems. They found theirs was not the only trial or the only solution, and above all, they found that each was praying for the other that together they might forge ahead.

The women in the leaders' class, mostly teachers, were being told about study guides and material with such a number of background references and such complete coverage of subjects that they felt they had never before had such a privilege, nor such adequate training to take back to their own branches.

In the class for leadership training, fine speakers were telling of practical helps and down to earth suggestions for the assistance of these women who were charged with the responsibility of guiding a particular group to a successful year, both from the standpoint of the organization and the individual. Here again the undercurrent of unity marked every moment.

A general class brought many pointers of value and interest on varied subjects, all of them worth while, all of them applicable to the everyday life in the average home. This was one more solid brick available for the foundations of the homes of Zion.

From these classes and this influence these women returned to their own homes, their own neighborhoods, filled with new hope. They learned, they served, they waited impatiently for the return of the special monthly Thursday which would teach them more.

The support of the priesthood was greatly appreciated, as priesthood members gave of their time and thought to help the program move along in a constructive and inspiring manner.

AND AFTER EACH day was over, once again plans went into effect for the next month and the next and the next. In a quiet little office room which God seemed to have blessed with a beautiful spirit of dedication, seven women gathered to discuss the last meeting and look ahead. They met after seasons of prayer in their own homes. They met with the growth of the women of the church uppermost in their thoughts and their desires. They planned with faith, knowing that God would supplement their efforts wherever need be if they brought their very best to the planning of the meetings ahead.

That was Preparation Day in the Center Stake last year. This year the program is going forward with unabated momentum and spreading wider the influence which we so need. It is bringing to more homes the sweet message that Christ is vitally concerned with us day in and day out, that our homes are precious in his sight, and that it is in our own homes that we can fortify ourselves and each other against the outside influences which would deter or discourage us.

That was Preparation Day in the Center Stake. It could happen in your branch, with your group of workers. It could be you who hold in your hearts the serene faith and trust in God from which springs such fine ministry to others. It could happen where you live. Won't you help it happen?

The Home Library

By Grace Pennell Tousley

Enjoying Leisure Time by William C. Menninger, M.D., Science Research Associates, Incorporated, 40c.

WHILE THE INK is still wet on our New Year's resolutions is an excellent time to read this forty-nine page pamphlet on the subject of leisure, because many of us resolved this year, as we have in the past, to make better use of that time left over after we have done the things we have to do every day.

According to the author, who is one of the nation's outstanding psychiatrists and General Secretary of the Menninger Foundation at Topeka, Kansas, each of us has up to eight hours of free time every day. He believes that what we do in our free time actually helps to determine whether we are happy or unhappy during all of our waking hours.

While this booklet was written primarily for the young, it is full of wisdom for the adult reader. From it, parents will learn how to help their children choose the free-time activities best suited to their needs and resources. Adults will learn, also that they should do something definite about their free time rather than merely "passing it away."

Doctor Menninger argues that since recreation has been found of distinct value in the treatment of the mentally ill its use should be of value in the prevention of both minor and major mental disorders, in the maintenance of health, and in the promotion of a feeling of well-being in all of us.

He distinguished between leisure and recreation, defining leisure as "free time" and recreation as "constructive use of that free time." The latter definition should dispel any Puritanical ideas we might have concerning the moral aspect of enjoying ourselves.

Doctor Menninger says that "well-used leisure, like a good tonic, affects every aspect of your life . . . by answering your many needs—physical, social, and emotional." While the way in which recreational activities meet our physical and social needs is easily understood, the manner in which it meets our emotional needs is somewhat complicated and intensely interesting.

ACCORDING TO THE AUTHOR, we usually consciously select recreation to meet our physical and social needs because they are easily measured. But when it comes to choosing recreation to answer our emotional needs, we use another method. We select unconsciously, often with ineffective or even disastrous results.

"Far below this conscious level," says Doctor Menninger, "in the deep layers of our personality make-up, all of us have unconscious but powerful drives that seek expression. We sometimes refer to them as instincts. We are born with them, and they serve as the chief sources of our energy throughout our lives." He describes the creative and aggressive drives for which well-chosen recreation serves as an outlet. Other psychological needs which recreation meets are the need to be able to do exactly as one pleases at least part of the time and the need to compensate for some inferiority by achieving excellence in a field within one's powers.

Planned leisure time activity is recommended by the author as the only way in which one can be sure of getting the most good out of play hours. To plan properly, he advises that one first survey oneself, admitting one's physical, social, and psychological needs. Then the recreational field is to be surveyed for what it offers. He has classified recreation under the types of activity: creative, collecting, educational, competitive and non-competitive games and sports, spectator, and social group work.

AFTER THESE SURVEYS comes the time to choose one's recreation, and the author sets down a list of questions to be answered before a final decision is made. His method for choosing one's leisure time activities is little different from that used in deliberately choosing one's life work, for to the doctor the choice of play is fully as important as the choice of work.

Even though these preliminaries were absorbing, the fun begins when one actually starts on the job of making wishes come true. The author outlines the route that should be taken to get started with the least loss of time. Doing what one wants to do no longer looks impossible.

In the final chapter, Doctor Menninger writes about security. He thinks of security as based on resourcefulness as well as on the possession of money and property. He insists that recreational activities in youth and middle age will provide a happier maturity through the mental resources such activities have developed within us.

Three Leads to Happiness

By Naomi Russell

NOW THAT I AM THIRTY and have an obvious streak of gray in my hair—regardless of how I comb it—I feel that I can join the ranks of self-appointed advice-givers. At least I can look back and sort out the things I did at fourteen and sixteen and twenty and twenty-five that have helped make life at thirty happier. I can see, too—although I would prefer to forget—some things I did that haven't made me or anyone else any happier.

Growing up is no snap. The competition—whether in school or business or social life—is plenty hard to face. Somebody else is always smarter, and it's easier to settle for a "c" than to try to match the brains of the "a"-makers. The most promising jobs require men and women of experience—and who fresh out of high school or college is experienced in much of anything except going to school? It's no wonder escapes become more and more popular as the world of competition increases its demands. Yet anyone with average intelligence can meet it successfully—if he believes he can.

SELF-RESPECT is number one on my list of musts for happy living. Nobody is tops in everything, but almost everyone can become competent in some line of work. The fellow who finds "math" a push-over often fights a losing battle with English. The girl who takes honors in the state music contest may never be able to comprehend chemistry. People who are brilliant all-around students may be so lacking in practical know-how they are unable to fix a leaky faucet or darn a sock. It is not for anyone to look down his nose at those who aren't skilled in his particular field, nor did the good Lord intend that anybody lose respect for himself because his special ability differs from the abilities of those around him. Any product of talent or skill or manual labor that makes the world a better place to live deserves appreciation—especially by the one producing it, whether he sings at the Met or polishes shoes in the neighborhood barbershop. The competition isn't so frightening when it's narrowed down to one field, particularly to the person who believes he can do the job well.

This type of confidence does not breed egotism, for that is often nothing more than a cover-up for inferiority. It does, however, minimize the importance of error. I can remember worrying for weeks—as an adolescent—over some faux pas I had committed almost without knowing I was committing it. I would avoid the people who witnessed my blunder, thinking they would remember it as I did. Then I began to reason things out. First of all, I wasn't the only person who made mistakes—so there was no sense in my walking around regarding myself as an exclusive social sore thumb. Everyone is a sore thumb some time or other. Second, when I belatedly apologized for mistakes, few people ever remembered what had happened. If they forgot, why shouldn't I? It was a wonderful freedom knowing I didn't have to carry a headful of regrets around with me. Some things, of course, demand amends, but these should be made promptly, not mulled over for hours or days or months before being executed.

Gaining this new personal point of view brought a kind of understanding sympathy for all the other blunders in the world. Where I had been intensely critical of myself and everyone else, I learned to excuse and forget quickly both my mistakes and others'. Which brings me around to the second essential of a happy life—appreciation.

SOMEONE HAS SAID the only people who aren't appreciative are those who are too lazy to count their blessings. While everyone has "down" days when even the finest weather and best food seem mediocre, such melancholy seldom lasts. Most of the time life is good—for the man or woman who stops to look at it closely. As such it deserves to be appreciated.

I think the first things I felt a down-deep gratitude for were lilacs, because they smelled so good; for homemade bread, because it tasted so good; for a bath, because it made me feel so good; and for snow because it was so out-of-this-world beautiful. Gratitude for people, beginning with the ones at home, grew rapidly, and for me people remain way ahead on the list of to-be-appreciateds. I am amazed at the accomplishments of my friends—and of people I shall never know intimately. Because of them I live, vicariously, a thousand lives. Because of their experiences I have come to know joys and sorrows, triumphs and defeats I could never experience myself, and life is infinitely richer. When I hit a blue day, I remember how much worse things are for someone I know, and just thinking about it is good medicine for me. When I have some particular good fortune, I try to share it, and the sharing makes it more meaningful.

THE LAST OF MY THREE musts for a happy life is creativity. Man is never so like his God as when he is creating, and the stimulus he receives from it is unequalled by any other human experience. What is created is not so important as the act of creating. I felt the same warm glow of satisfaction when I made doll furniture at eight that I feel now upon walking into a new home that I have helped to plan and build. I suppose the more work that goes into a project the greater the pride in its completion, but whether it is a first-grader marching home to Mamma with a made-it-my-own-self valentine or a Thomas Hart Benton presenting a new mural to a worshipping public, the type of satisfaction is the same, only the degree varies.

Creativity is not limited to tangible things. The person who gives birth to a song, an inspiring sermon, or a great idea knows an incomparable thrill. The man or woman or child who is able to create something should never be lonely.

These three leads to happiness, plus a generous amount of faith in God, are about the best formula for abundant living I have been able to arrive at in thirty years. I pass it on to anyone who may be shopping around for a philosophy. It has worked well for me.

And the Rains Came

By Garland E. Tickemyer

January 17, 1952

EVERY SILVER LINING is likely to have a dark cloud. Such is the plight of southern Californians tonight. After years of parching drought in which farmers have watched a constantly lowering water table with apprehension as they sunk wells to depths of over a hundred feet in fields that were once irrigated from artesian wells, the heavenly floodgates have been opened. At first it came in drizzling showers which were immediately soaked up by the thirsty earth. We offered thanks and prayed for more. Drizzles turned to downpours, and still we said, "It's good—can't get too much of it!"

For two days now there has been a steady downpour, and we have said, "Lord, it is enough." Five and one-half inches fell yesterday in our community of Arcadia, bringing total rainfall for the year to over twenty inches compared to about four inches for the same period last year. Drenching rain has fallen all through this day, and as I now write at midnight it continues to beat on the roof.

I have just driven in from Los Angeles. A trip usually taking thirty-five minutes consumed two hours of my time, and I'm fortunate not to be sitting downtown in the middle of a street that has turned suddenly into a small river.

Leaving Central Church at 10:00 p.m., I drove north on Flower Street to the downtown section of the city. Streets were filled to the curb on either side but most of the center of the street was above water. At Sixth Street the current flowing against me became deeper, but there were car lights ahead which were evidently moving on, so keeping in the center of the street I drove on. Between Fifth and Sixth a church service had just been dismissed, and forlorn looking people stood in the doorway looking at their cars. Water was half-way up the radiators, and motors were hopelessly drowned out. Cars were stalled ahead of me on either side. One man was on his fender with the hood of his car up trying to dry out his carburetor. Another was barefoot with trousers rolled to his hips. He had left his car and was making for the doorway of an apartment building on the higher side of the street. One man had shed his trousers altogether and his white shirttail trailed like the drooping tail feathers of a wet rooster.

I THREADED MY WAY CAREFULLY through a fairly open lane down the center of the street, driving very slowly to keep water from piling up ahead. I was thankful that the motor of a Chevrolet rides a little higher than some other cars. A slight ridge in the street caused a ripple that removed my margin of safety. The car coughed and died. I saw myself—minus pants—seeking the safety of the buildings. I pushed on the starter; the motor sputtered but keep going on about three cylinders. Breathing a sigh of relief I pumped the accelerator until the motor was running smoothly. There was only one way to go and that was forward, for cars had stalled behind me. Cars were crossing Flower at Fifth Street. If I could only make it that far I could turn off to higher ground. Forgetting for the moment that Fifth was a one-way street, I started to turn to the right against traffic. With disgust for myself but with appreciation for sympathetic motorists who saw my plight and refrained from honking their horns, I backed up sufficiently to head for the other side.

A motorist who hadn't quite made it across was standing on the running board motioning for help. I pushed him out and suggested that if he would let the car set for a little while the heat of the motor would dry out the water. He said he couldn't wait because he was rushing medicine to his sick child. He left the car setting, hailed a passing car, and was on his way.

I drove on over to Figueroa Street and headed for the freeway. Despite the fact that there is a fairly steep grade on Figueroa at that place, the street was full and running over the sidewalks. People were moving out of apartments on the level below the sidewalk. Some had made barricades to keep the water out.

At last I reached the Arroya Seco Freeway, a well-drained and broad trafficway. The relief I had experienced on reaching the freeway was short-lived, for as I drove along I noticed that large sections of the vine-covered grades had sloughed toward the highway. Traffic was slowed almost to a standstill and was jammed at the first tunnel. Once on the freeway there's no way to turn back, so I waited it out. After about ten minutes I inched my way through the tunnel. On the Pasadena side I saw what looked like a small tree come sliding over the large stone retaining wall. It was followed by a sheet of mud and shrubbery that poured over the top and out onto a large bus below. Policemen, directing traffic, opened a lane for the bus to get out. Beyond that point the freeway was blocked by landslides. We were directed off to the right and I ended up on Huntington Drive.

ROADS WERE CLEAR and open to within a half block of Rosemead at the edge of Temple City, ten miles east of Los Angeles. Here a bridge had been undermined. Floodlights illuminated a large crane; the operator was picking up big boulders and skillfully swinging his bucket in such manner that when he released it in mid-air it neatly threw the boulders across the stream and into the water at the foot of an apartment building that was in danger of dropping into the stream. Here, as everywhere, civil defense workers were on the job, protecting property, assisting motorists, and keeping the arteries of traffic open. A Red Cross tent was set up at this point to provide dripping workmen with shelter, hot coffee, and full-course meals. I took comfort from the thought that this minor disaster would have value in providing opportunity for a full dress rehearsal for the Civil Defense Organization in preparation for the greater disasters that are so much feared in this atomic age.

Just as I drove past the Santa Anita race tracks I caught a radio sports reporter's summary of today's winners and the assurance that if weather conditions were favorable the horses would be running again tomorrow at Santa Anita. Up to that time I thought water was the only thing that was running in southern California.

Our task becomes one of discovering and realizing that "God is the Center!" Then our lives must become patterned to this truth. Co-operating with God, we can perfect our nature. Our growth and development, our immortality and eternal life depend absolutely upon finding and maintaining proper relations with our Creator.

With these basic truths as a foundation, we ask ourselves questions similar to this: "Is my act selfish, or will it contribute to the growth of my personality and add to the development of the kingdom of God? Am I misapplying my talents, time, and resources? Am I considering God in making my decisions?"

Christ emphasized in one of his parables (Matthew 5:31-34, Inspired Version) the need of eliminating from our lives any or all conditions leading to our spiritual destruction. He recognized how much man loved life—even to the extent of allowing his eye to be removed or his hand to be severed from the arm if it were necessary to save his life. So he tried to show us how we must also be willing to cut "spiritually gangrened" acts, thoughts, and attitudes out of our body if we would continue to live.

Are we prepared to do this?

Shall we set our standards high for a co-operative venture with God in perfecting our lives? Shall we eliminate substandard practices? What shall our decision be?

[Men] are free to choose liberty and eternal life through the great mediation of all men; or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil . . . to bring you down to hell, that he may reign over you in his own kingdom.—II Nephi 1:120, 125.

The reward for decisions properly made will be tremendously satisfying. Joy and happiness shall be ours when we choose liberty and eternal life!

* WORKADAY WORLD

Took the Lady to the bus station in K.C. early one morning last week and on the way home faced long lines of cars driven in a continuous stream by people going to work and taking paying passengers with them. It would be conservative to say that for every person who rides a bus here today, a hundred go in privately owned autos. If public transport had to handle all this traffic, it would take at least five years to get ready for it. A fair job is required to keep every one of those private cars in operating condition.

At a board meeting of a leading service club, there was discussion of an auxiliary for wives. One member said, "My wife says she has too much to do now." Another, "Most of the women are working." If this is true in a group representing the top economic bracket of the city, how is it in the lower income groups? One wife says, "It takes two incomes to maintain a decent standard of living." If that includes steak and nylons, it certainly does.

There was a time when a man could support himself and his wife, and sometimes a family of children. She would ask him for money, and it made him feel like a lord and master to hand out a little, with a musical accompaniment of subdued groans and growls. Those days, along with the nickel bus fare and loaf of bread, are gone forever. . . . A woman likes the luxury of an income of her own, and the privilege of spending a little without having to beg or explain. Her wages may be helping send a son or daughter to college, pay off a mortgage, or provide meat instead of vegetable stew.

The word "housewife" has a new meaning. She is no longer a drudge, confined to her kitchen, sequestered from the world, and totally dependent on a man. She may be highly trained and skilled, making more than her husband does. But she pays a price. Sometimes the children pay, too, more than is good for them. Yet this is a situation beyond the control of any person or family.

Our impression is that, despite all the social and economic changes that have come to our country, the women are just as brave, good, self-sacrificing, beautiful, and fine as their mothers and grandmothers were. Clothes and manners may vary, but the deeper qualities of the human mind and heart remain rather constant through the centuries. A little attention to history will verify this.

One can't help being impressed on early mornings by the patient faces of working men and women as they wait in the dark and the cold for buses that seem never to come. They are tired, resigned, and enduring. Contending with drowsiness and fatigue, they come unwillingly out to take up the monotonous routine of the world's work once again. It is not easy to find time enough for rest and sleep, to maintain health and happiness. At six a.m. the candle of hope sometimes burns low, and it seems that a small wind could easily blow out its tiny flame. But somewhere, somehow, it always keeps flickering.

News and Notes

We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us.

STAKE CONFERENCE HELD

The Center Stake of Zion met in conference February 1 to elect delegates for General Conference and approve budgets for the congregations and the stake. Following the meeting, a birthday reception was held for President Israel A. Smith in the Stone Church Annex. Brother Smith was presented with a gift from the stake.

IN HAWAII

Brother and Sister Walter J. Swain, Sister Irene Poole, and Sister Ruth Henricks arrived in Honolulu, from Australia, January 26 on the S. S. "Aoraagi," according to a report from President W. Wallace Smith who is on the Islands. The branches of Hawaii met in a district conference January 27 with Brother Smith as guest speaker.

CONDUCTS SERIES

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman conducted a series in Mobile, Alabama, January 10-24. The average attendance at the series was 185 each evening. He spoke to the Optimist Club while in Mobile; his topic was "Spiritual Resources in the Struggle Against Communism." The pastor of the branch in Mobile is Elder Jack A. Pray.

HOLD SERIES OF INSTITUTES

Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder John R. Darling held a series of regional church school institutes in the Central Missouri Stake. Meetings were held at Holden, January 29; Lexington, January 30; and Blue Springs, January 31. This program will be repeated in February.

SEVENTY IN DETROIT

Seventy F. Edward Butterworth left Independence January 30 to travel to Detroit, Michigan, where he will minister until General Conference. His family will remain in Miami, Oklahoma, with his wife's parents, Brother and Sister B. A. Howard.

REPORT ON STATISTICS

Brother Merle Guthrie states that the first baptism reported to the Department of Statistics for 1952 was Brother Ammon C. Conoley, baptized by Elder J. H. Ross at Spring Branch, Independence, Missouri, January 9.

The greatest number of baptisms performed in the church in one month was in June when 1,247 were baptized. This is the number reported up to December 31, and is approximately one-fourth of the total baptisms reported in the entire year.

NEWS OF MUSIC

Franklyn S. Weddle conducted the Independence Symphony Orchestra of sixty-nine players at a concert January 27 in the Memorial Hall in Independence. Over 500 persons attended the concert.

Auditions were held January 28 for parts in the folk opera, "Down in the Valley," by Kurt Weill, to be given March 8 in Independence by the Community Music Association. The opera will be directed by Brother Weddle who serves as music director for the Association.

Brother Weddle was in Joplin, Missouri, February 3.

RECEIVES HONOR

Elder Ammon Andes, pastor of the Lawrence, Kansas, Branch, was appointed acting chairman of the department of aeronautical engineering at the University of Kansas. Brother Andes is an associate professor in the school of engineering at the college.

Brotherhood Week

"All ye are brethbren."

—Jesus to the Disciples, Matthew 23: 8.

The late William Rose Benét, a noted American poet, novelist, and editor, prepared a poem for use in connection with Brotherhood Week. It is made available to all publications through the National Conference of Christians and Jews:

THE CHOICE

Fear said to Hate,
"Come, let us build a State
Proscribing all save one tribe or skin
From joy therein!"

But Spirit said to Love,
"See a huge world, whereof
All are one body. Quickly, in every land, Reach hand to hand!"

Alarmed for ambush, sullen before all light,
Crouch Fear and Hate within the caves of night,
While Spirit and Love, from no man fugitive,
Walk in the sun's free dower through which we live.

* * * * *

On more than one occasion, Jesus talked politics. Is that an impious statement?

Read and ponder the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, and you will see that he was talking politics, but of a different brand than had been known in Palestine for a long time.

To paraphrase it, here is what he told the disciples: people of the world love power; they are dominating, greedy, and vain; they covet honors they have not earned; they grasp for power over others, and force people to do their will. But you are not to be like them. Remember, you are brothers!

* * * * *

One of the greatest experiences in the history of the Christian church—the manifestation of spiritual power on the day of Pentecost—was shared with representatives of most of the civilized nations of the world at that time. What a miscellaneous crowd was gathered at Jerusalem that day! In the second chapter of Acts we read how many of them there were:

Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews, and proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians.

No wonder that Peter exclaimed, "God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."—Acts 10: 34, 35.

The principle of brotherhood has its roots deep in the gospel.

* * * * *

Read the different versions of the Great Commission. Christ sent his missionaries out to "teach all nations" (Matthew); He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark); and Luke records he said that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations."

Here is a breadth of concept at the base of Christian ministry that includes all the world in its invitation.

If we think about it we know, of course, that we stand on equal terms before the throne of God. We are judged by the same law. And God's judgment will deal with us on the basis of what we have done with our lives and to the lives of others. The gospel offers to everyone an open door.

At some point here we must make room for an admission that, in the spirit of brotherhood, we have often failed. We have hurt other people. We have grieved the Lord. We must try again.

John who wrote the three epistles had a great understanding of brotherhood. This, of course, he had learned from Jesus. Consider some of the many splendid statements he made:

He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.—I John 2: 10.

For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another.—I John 3: 11.

He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.—Verse 14.

Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.—I John 4: 7.

If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar.—Verse 20.

Brotherhood is based upon the relationships, first of individuals, then of groups. Idealists have been known who professed to love the masses of humanity, but could not get along with individual persons. That seems ridiculous, and it is. A great many of us have been guilty of this fault.

Let us cultivate a genuine liking, a real love, for those who are near us: members of our families, our working associates, members of the same branch and community. This is fundamental. When we can love all these people, then we may be able to say truly that we love humanity and that we understand the meaning of brotherhood.

Love is in us if we bring harmony among people, if we make them happier, lift them up, give them hope, and help them to be better.

The Next Mile of Progress

The first milestone has been passed in the latest effort of our generation to complete the Auditorium! The sense of pride, appreciation, and recognition of need on the part of church members and friends throughout the world has resulted in a successful campaign to accumulate funds for initial work on the early phases of the completion program.

While you have been diligent in helping raise funds, those persons charged with the responsibility of administering them have not been idle. As soon as the money began to come in, plans were made and work was begun on an improved electrical system in the building. Work toward the finishing of the library and counsel room got underway, and detailed sketches of the new front to the Auditorium were begun.

While we can assume satisfaction for a job well done in 1951, even greater responsibility looms ahead. The goal for 1952 is double the amount raised last year. But the time allotted for this phase of the effort is some five or six times longer. This longer period of earning, saving, and sacrificing should insure at least the same degree of success enjoyed in 1951, with a strong suggestion that the current emphasis will result in a banner year of improvement and expansion. The General Conference will provide opportunities for thousands of us to receive on-the-spot evidence of the important function of the Auditorium in the program of the church. Thus we shall realize and understand the handicaps which shackle the kingdom-building endeavors of our organization and be motivated to give tangible expression of our desires to alleviate the crucial situation.

This year, your share of the goal of $200,000 can be contributed over a year-long period, thus reducing the burden of sacrifice which comes with the rather instantaneous impact. If your branch uses the duplex envelope system of offering, you can direct contributions to this fund by merely checking the space marked "Auditorium." If this is not the procedure employed by your branch, your contribution, regardless of amount, may be labeled "Auditorium Fund" and will be directed according to your stipulation whenever it is received.

There will not be a church-wide Auditorium Day this year. Instead, the month of June has been declared as the period of special emphasis. Of course, your branch or district may choose—and will be free to do so—to establish a specific day, or days, of concentration on the project.

Your general officers look with anticipation to your response during this year. If hopes materialize, more pronounced improvements may be undertaken to make the Auditorium the kind of place you want it to be.

With your help, the job will be done!

Spiritual Therapeutics of Repentance

By Clark E. (Tommy) Vincent

SEVERAL MONTHS AGO a man leaped to his death from a Chicago hotel window. A terse note—containing little comfort and solace for loved ones, yet profound in its implications—was discovered later in his hotel room.

The note read simply: "I'm fed up!"

There are many individuals today who, like the man taking that fast trip to the pavement, are "fed up." To be sure, there are many differences between people who do and people who do not commit suicide, but one difference worthy of note is that the majority who are fed up are still blaming the pastor, the president, parents, husband, wife, neighbors, the church, cost of living, the Russians, or a number of other people, leaders, incidents and situations, whereas the suicide-to-be is fed up with self! The concise message found in the hotel room might have been even more self-explanatory and profound had it contained two additional words reading, "I'm fed up with myself!"

It is a noble achievement to "see ourself as others see us," and to admit that "the fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves that we are underlings." But introspection alone can be dangerous. Sometimes the awareness of ourselves as we really are can lead to utter despondency, despair, and occasionally to suicide. Those who have suddenly come face to face with the blackness of some of their deeds and then had to continue living with themselves must appreciate a little more the depth of meaning contained in that passage, "your sufferings be sore—how sore you know not!"²

The Need for an Adequate Self-picture

But why should insight into ourselves as we really are be so discouraging and in some cases lead to self-destruction? The findings of clinical psychology suggest quite conclusively that basic to mental and emotional health is a confident, positive regard for self, or what has been termed "an adequate self-picture." Mental and emotional illnesses—ranging from the minor neuroses and psychosomatic disturbances to the more serious psychoses—are accompanied by distorted or inadequate pictures of self.

It would appear then that if we are to live abundant lives we need to have a confident, high regard for self, for if we do not have a feeling of self-worth and dignity we cannot extend to others an attitude of worth and value. This is documented not only clinically, but as many writers have pointed out, the Master Psychologist implied this principle almost 2,000 years ago in the commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Such a commandment assumes an intelligent and worthy self-love, for if we did not have an adequate enough self-picture to value self highly, then our neighbor would be better off without the kind of "feelings toward our neighbor as we have toward self."

It is interesting how many times we take our cues from the Greek philosophers rather than from the teachings of Jesus. Plato's dualism of individualism on one side and collectivism on the other has misled us into thinking of any regard for self as being evil. We often debase ourselves physically in the manner of the medieval monks, or in the manner of the stoic individuals with their beds of spikes, rather than appreciate the physical body as the tabernacle in which we live, as Jesus taught.³ Many times and in many ways we torture ourselves mentally and emotionally as we follow the notion that the abundant life is not joyous, but restrictive, burdensome, and filled with drudgery. Too often such self-abuse ends in physical harm or in spiritual suicide as we become despondent and begin to blame, defame, and destroy others.

WE NEED A HEALTHY REGARD FOR SELF. We are created in God's image, and to debase self or to have less than an adequate self-picture is to insult that which God created in his image. God has faith in us, and we ought to have faith in ourselves. Sound advice is expressed prayerfully in the musical, Oklahoma: "Dear God, make me see that I am not better than my fellow-man . . . but that I am every bit as good as he." Perhaps we need more of the sort of self-pride expressed somewhat negatively in the play, Green Pastures: "I ain't much, but I's all I got." Too often we have everything but ourselves. Our greatest contemporary inflation is in the worth of human individuals. In a day when we trade 10,000 lives for a beachhead, the story of the one who had ninety-nine in the fold but went out to find one that was lost needs retelling.

Human worth is so inflated that we see it readily exchanged for alcohol, greed, lust, and "things." As Eric Fromm has indicated, the trouble with modern man is that he does not love himself.⁴

Methods of Obtaining an Adequate Self-picture

At what price and by what means shall we maintain this feeling of self-worth in the face of reality which contains our misdeeds, mistakes, and evil thoughts? Down through recorded history, man has been apt at maintaining a pseudo-adequate self-picture that soothes his conscience by a variety of techniques. The following are only a few of those techniques.

1. The most popular method is probably the one just referred to which was practiced by Adam and Eve. This method projects our faults, evil desires, and shortcomings onto others. Most of us are acquainted with this procedure through first hand practice. We gain, regain, or preserve our own adequate self-picture by talking about the faults of the pastor, censuring the incumbent political party, wondering why the General Church doesn't do something, trying to change our wife or our husband so things will be better, or by wishing we had different neighbors so that life would be easier.

An interesting account in the Scriptures on this point is the story of Rebekah. Having engineered the deceptive switch of the firstborn blessing from Esau to Jacob, one might think that Rebekah would have some pangs of conscience. However, after the switch is completed she appears to be "fed up," but true to contemporary practice she is able to blame someone else as she tells Isaac, "I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth."⁵

The trouble with utilizing this method to maintain an adequate self-picture is that the cost is too great. It results in marital rifts; congregational splits; vehement, un-Christian verbal tirades against others, and wars as each party blames the other until it becomes a dispute settled by force. We often forget the humorous caution contained in one of the lyrics of the moral rearmament musical, Jotham Valley; it is impossible to close your hand to point your finger at your neighbor without having your other three fingers pointing back at you.

2. Another method utilized to maintain an adequate self-picture is by suppressing or simply denying mistakes and faults. However, this practice has its price also as the suppressed doesn't remain suppressed, but usually erupts later in various personality problems that may distort the picture of self and reality even more drastically.

3. Yet another method involves a combination of catharsis and rationalization. Through various means the patient is aided in bringing past misdeeds to verbal consciousness. Then a mental bath is taken as new names are given to the misdeeds to make them socially palatable. The misdeeds may be viewed as being not really wrong, then labeled as the result of a complex of one kind or another, and a parent or childhood experience may be held responsible.

4. An attempt to establish an adequate self-picture is also made by some through an ostentatious accumulation of wealth, educational degrees, and/or material possessions that are used to gloss over personal misdeeds. This method, however, never seems to satisfy even its most ardent adherents as the quest becomes unending—the first million must be followed by the second million, et cetera.

There are other methods utilized by people to create or maintain an adequate self-picture, but somehow most of these techniques appear to produce as many problems as they solve by resulting in distorted and pseudo self-pictures. Too many of them are like much of our canned food—"vacuum packed."

A Dilemma

But how shall we solve the dilemma? If there appears to be excellent clinical evidence to support the concept of a need for an adequate self-picture, what shall we do with the principle of Christian teaching which insists that we frankly acknowledge our human mistakes? How can we possibly retain an adequate self-picture if we really "see ourselves as others see us"? If we admit our mistakes, and acknowledge our present situations and troubles as largely self-imposed, rather than being caused by others, won't this destroy our self-confidence, mar our self-picture, and perhaps lead to self-destruction?

One side of this dilemma is frequently overstated in the criticism that religion errs because it degrades man and makes his self-picture even more inadequate by forcing unyielding penitence to a Diety who is satisfied only when neurotic guilt complexes have been built up in the penitent subjects. Of such critics we ask, "Is this the kind of God who gave us the principle of repentance, or is this the kind of God his critics have created in their own image?"

Repentance Is an Answer to the Dilemma

One of the most dominant and persistent teachings given to mankind from God down through recorded history has been the command to repent. Unfortunately, the word "repentance" has gained a negative connotation. Too often it is viewed as a principle exacted by a vengeful, wrathful God who is a majestic time checker recording every misdeed and then exacting an act of repentance. Such an interpretation of repentance holds little appeal to the majority of people because it serves only as a direct threat to the need for an adequate self-picture about which we have been talking.

Unfortunately, repentance is too often limited to the concept of a negative act that occurs prior to the positive step of baptism. Even the average congregation stirs uneasily when "repentance" is announced as a sermon topic, because such a negative emphasis has been attached to the principle.

Using a fairly literal translation of the Greek word which has been translated as "repent," we get something like "change your mind" or "get a new point of view." Repentance is thus less a static act and more a dynamic process or attitude. It is the attitude expressed by the publican in his prayer, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Repentance requires that we face the reality of our imperfection, but unlike many amoral couch cleansings, it does not leave us naked with our souls bared to suffer by introspection after diagnosis. Rather, it contains the primary dynamics of forgiveness.

We repent, not for the sake of repenting, but rather because in combining (1) an attitude of reality concerning our imperfection with (2) the knowledge that the God we worship is a loving Father who forgives, we are able to maintain our adequate self-picture of dignity and self-worth and thus continue to strive to perfect our conduct. The earthly life of the Master, revealing his development from Jesus to the Christ, stands as a monumental assurance to every individual that a spiritual life of eternal quality is possible—not in spite of being human, but in part because we are human.

Faith Must Precede Repentance

Interestingly enough, faith precedes repentance. No individual can repent without the faith that someone will forgive and continue to love and help him or her. Without that faith, we of necessity fight like cornered rats with lies, deception, denials, and bribes in order to maintain our adequate self-respect. Our newspapers are filled with the vituperations of man against man and nation against nation as each feels compelled to maintain a feeling of worth by pointing to the errors of the other. To many it is the only recourse, but the positive assurance of Jesus is that we can admit our mistakes and still retain that feeling of worth and dignity through the principle of repentance which is premised on the faith that there is a God who forgives and continues to love, and thus enables us to perfect our conduct.

Preaching Repentance

But how do we "preach repentance to this generation"? How do people best learn that there is a loving and forgiving Heavenly Father? They learn from those who are loving and forgiving. A child will learn with great difficulty that there is a loving and forgiving Heavenly Father if he or she has never had loving and forgiving earthly parents and associates. The individual who truly repents can do so only if allowed to maintain his or her feeling of self-worth. If that is destroyed, or if there is no cause for believing that it will be maintained, one cannot expect repentance from people. To have the attitude of the publican and to accept the reality of one's own imperfect conduct is possible only when his experiences with others and with God reveal to him that he will be forgiven and loved.

But this places a responsibility on us to so live as to give others cause for faith that we will forgive and continue to love them, and that there is a Father in heaven who loves and forgives—thus facilitating their repentance. There is hardly a more effective way to teach or preach repentance, for repentance is best taught in the spirit of love, not in the spirit of denunciation.

One of the hardest lessons we have had to learn in the treatment of criminals or of defeated countries is that they must be allowed to retain a feeling of self-worth. In fact, for many individuals, crime is but a means of trying to correct the distorted picture of self which has been imposed by a lack of love and understanding. This is a difficult lesson to learn about human beings. We are only beginning to appreciate that the so-called egotistical person is really suffering from so-called feelings of inferiority. Lacking an adequate self-picture, a distorted front is utilized to gain one. If we could only understand that those whom we would like most to punish, humble, or "bring to their knees in repentance," need in reality not punishment and debasement, but confidence, encouragement, love, and forgiveness before they can become humble. True humbleness comes from confidence and a feeling of worth. Without self-respect we become self-centered, bitter, and mean. We extend to others the same regard, or lack of regard, we have for self.

Individuals Cannot Repent Alone

Unfortunately, many who talk repentance the loudest often appear to lack a real understanding of what it comprises. For example, many married couples end their association in bitter divorce because one has erred and the other companion awaits his or her repentance. The "wronged" companion fails to realize that the erring mate might have repented long ago if he or she had any cause for believing that the other companion would love and forgive, instead of "beating him to his knees" verbally with the confessed act or thought. Many a marital discord could be harmonized in its early stages if the erring husband or wife could be assured that his or her companion would really forgive and continue to love. Lacking that assurance, denials, counter accusations, and evasions are utilized to preserve the self-picture as the breach widens and becomes irreparable.

Jesus gives us a masterful lesson in his encounter with the adulteress. Many of us in his position would undoubtedly have reminded her of her sin and "commanded her to repent." But in his infinite wisdom and insight into that which he helped create, Jesus knew that before the woman could possibly repent she needed the assurance that she would be forgiven and loved. After having put her accusers in their place, he is reported to have told her simply, "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."⁶ How much more rapidly and effectively we could bring this generation to repentance if we emphasized first the positive assurance that we are not condemning but seeking to understand, forgive, and continue to love, and that such understanding, forgiveness, and love stems from a Heavenly Father who does the same—only more so.

Psychologically, we often find that those who complain the loudest about a specific misdeed of others are often in reality projecting their own guilt onto others because they lack the faith that God forgave them for that same misdeed years ago. Or perhaps they seek to punish a secret desire to commit the misdeed. Cartoons have spelled this out in a humorous way with the town's gossip complaining about a newcomer to the city who is a gossipmonger. Then there are the individuals who rush to "punish and tell about" a member of the congregation for a misdeed they themselves may have been guilty of previously. We need so much that profound affirmation: "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."

Our inability to love and forgive first, rather than condemn, may be partly related to our own lack of faith in a forgiving Heavenly Father. We sometimes are not sufficiently forgiving of others because our own self-picture is marred by the doubt that perhaps God didn't really forgive us. Then we use the misdeeds of others to restore our self-picture by saying in effect: "Look, at least I'm not that bad, I'm better than he or she." But if we really believe the dynamic principle of repentance with the assurance of a God who forgives, our own feeling of self-worth is restored and we are enabled to forgive rather than to condemn others.

How Many Times Should People Be Forgiven?

Mosiah records the Lord's answer to the question of how many times we should forgive people. "Yea, and as often as my people repent, will I forgive them their trespasses against me,"⁷ and adds, "He that forgiveth not his neighbor's trespasses, when he says that he repents, the same hath brought himself under condemnation."⁸ Thus the responsibility is as great for the one who is to forgive as for the one who is to repent. Or as we sometimes say, "To err is human, to forgive is divine." We commit ourselves to this principle of forgiveness when we pray, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us."⁹

Does Repeated Forgiveness Teach Compromise With Sin?

It has been observed that because so much criticism has been made of the "hell-fire and damnation" type preaching, with its production of neurotic fear and guilt complexes, contemporary ministers tend to err in the opposite direction by "permissive preaching," in which a compromise is made with sin. The view is sometimes expressed that if people think they can always be forgiven, then they will deliberately sin and later seek to repent. Such a view sees repentance only as an act and not as an attitude. The principle of repentance follows a line midway between these two extremes. The individual must acknowledge his imperfect conduct and reveal a truly penitent spirit, not as regret for being apprehended but by a "changed attitude" which seeks to perfect conduct in the faith that in so doing past imperfections will be forgiven. Thus there is no compromise with sin, yet man is afforded the dignity of remaining a responsible individual with a feeling of worth and an opportunity to begin anew.

The Positiveness of Repentance

Repentance is not for weak people. It is not a psychological exercise! It requires humble acceptance of one's imperfect conduct in the spirit of the publican, and it takes intellectual integrity and genuine courage to admit error. But even as it requires strength, it gives strength, when accomplished. The knowledge that one is forgiven and loved in spite of mistakes enables him to face others in a confident, loving, and forgiving manner.

This is the positive message repentance contains and the therapeutic value of which many in the world are in need. Too many people today are caught up in the despondency of this philosophy,

"For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'It might have been.'"

Too many today agree with Omar Khayyam's thought:

The moving finger writes, and having writ,
Moves on, nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line;
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

The saddest words of tongue or pen are not "It might have been," but rather that so few know there is a way of beginning again. There is a way to cancel what the moving finger and the active life have written. Despondency need not overcome us, nor need we seek to negatively cover up what "the moving finger writes" by accusing others; for with repentance and a new attitude we write anew.

Group Repentance Needed

Not only individuals but also groups need to repent. This is not to argue the point for a "group mind" but rather to acknowledge that there is such a thing as group action and group responsibility. Just as individuals need an adequate self-picture, so groups and organizations need an esprit de corps, a pride of regiment, and group loyalty. Researchers suggest that the most insecure groups are often the most prejudiced and bigoted groups. Lacking a feeling of confidence in their worth as an organization or group, the members may become quite defensive. As individuals they may be humble, but as a total group they may become arrogant and bigoted.

As an organization we sometimes reveal a lack of confidence and faith in the Restored Church by becoming defensive and in some cases trying to improve our self-picture by pointing out the faults of other churches. It is interesting that the passage which states that we are "called to cry repentance unto this people"¹⁰ is followed by the instruction to "contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil."¹¹

as an egotistical individual. Dr. L. O. Brockway has commented, "We have raised up a generation of those who act as if we have an exclusive commodity in the truth."¹² Though it sounds paradoxical, the more pride and real faith we have in the true worth and mission of the Restored Church, the greater confidence we shall have as a group and the easier it will be to admit that other churches also contain truth and light, with missions to fulfill for God. It takes intellectual integrity and courage to admit that as a group of people our conduct—historically and contemporaneously—has not always been perfect, but we cannot preach repentance to others in the spirit of the Pharisee, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men."¹³

The Japanese Peace Treaty will go down in history as one of the most significant Christian documents showing that it is possible for one nation to truly forgive another aggressor nation. Historians should find it intriguing to follow how much more successful this Christian principle of national forgiveness is in bringing an aggressor country to repentance than the principle tried with Germany after the first world war when repentance was interpreted as the philosophy of "punish them, make them sorry, and beat them to their knees in penitent submission." As a nation we have much to be grateful for in this instance for the inspired leadership stemming from the Christian convictions of John Foster Dulles. As a nation, however, we still have much for which to repent. As a church we can best teach repentance to our nation by being loving and forgiving toward other groups and churches, and by adopting as a group the attitude of the publican with full recognition of our imperfections and limitations.

Repentance not a Panacea

In order to state a point or principle it is difficult not to overstate its importance or oversimplify its meaning, because we can talk or write about only one thing at a time. There are many facets to repentance which have been competently discussed in books and Herald articles. I have tried in this discussion to stress only some of the therapeutic merits of repentance which reveal how much it is needed in the world in which we live. However, repentance will not solve all our problems, nor is it the most important or only Christian principle. It is one among many principles that God in his infinite wisdom has given us by which we might perfect our conduct and thus reach the goal he has set before us and himself—eternal life or life worthy to be lived in association with God and godlike people.

"I'll Take Those Five Minutes"

Bernard Bain tells the story of a young Englishman who had made a brilliant scholastic record at Oxford before the outbreak of World War I. After hostilities began he distinguished himself on the field of battle, and then one day an exploding shell blotted out his life. Shortly afterward, the young man's mother dreamed that an angel visited her and informed her that she could have her son back with her for five minutes.

Which five minutes of their life together would she choose to live over again? Would it be at some ceremony when he was given academic recognition? Would it be the five minutes during which he was honored on the battlefield? No, not as a brilliant scholar, nor as a distinguished soldier. "I would want him back as a little boy on a day he disobeyed me. Hot, angry, and rebellious because of my scolding, he ran into the garden. In a little while he came back and threw himself into my arms and said he was sorry. I can still feel his tiny arms around my neck and see his face as he said, 'I'm sorry, Mother.'" Turning to the angel the mother replied, "I'll take those five minutes."

So it is with God. Few moments are as precious to him as those times when we go on bended knee to say, "I'm sorry," and go to those whom we have hurt to ask for forgiveness.

But the important point of the story is that the small boy would never have returned to tell his mother he was sorry had he not known from previous experiences that she would forgive and continue to love him. This is the kind of a Heavenly Father we worship. This is the Heavenly Father we must reveal to the world through our own love and forgiveness as individuals and as the Restored Church.

To teach or to "cry repentance unto this people" of our generation we must first convince them through our own love and forgiveness that there is a Heavenly Father who forgives and loves all mankind in spite of imperfect conduct and mistakes. The therapeutic power of God's love and forgiveness—as practiced by people—restores our sense of personal dignity and worth and makes it possible for us to perfect our conduct.

The feeling of self-worth, which is restored through the principles of faith and repentance rids us of that "fed-up" feeling. We need not face the black abyss of self-destruction from the ledge of a hotel window, nor add to the imperfection of ourselves and others by blaming them for our shortcomings. Without a sense of individual worth, we cannot experience repentance and we shall con-

Power Made Manifest

By Abel Hall

Part III

IN THE SPRING of 1922 I was giving a series of lectures at the Leicester Branch when I received a call to be present at a conference that was to be held in the Clay Cross Church, Derbyshire. As soon as I made known to the Saints at Leicester that I was to go to Clay Cross, twenty-four of them decided they would go along with me. Accordingly it was arranged for three Ford vans to take us there on Sunday morning in good time for the first service.

Each van was fitted up with seats to hold eight people, and early on Sunday we set off on our journey. We arrived in good spirits and had a splendid day's worship. However, after refreshments were served in the afternoon, I heard some murmurings among the sisters of Leicester. It seems that having considered how many hours it had taken us to get from Leicester to Clay Cross, they had decided among themselves that it would be better to set off right after tea, so that they would get back home early enough to allow their menfolks to have a good night's rest before going to work on Monday morning. Bishop Charles Fry was with us at the time and was to be the evening speaker; so I felt somewhat concerned that this might seem an affront to our good brother for whom I had the greatest admiration and respect. So I told him of the proposal of our sisters. He looked at me for a few moments, and then as though he had the Spirit of prophecy resting upon him, he said, "Brother Hall, if they set off on their journey before the evening service is through, they will regret it, for I see nothing but trouble, but if they remain, you will all have a safe and comfortable journey home."

Although I conveyed this message to the women, it did not have the desired effect, for they had evidently made up their minds, and so the Ford vans were brought round and we set out on our return journey. Never shall I forget that journey! When we left the meetinghouse it was a bright, sunny day, and we seemed to be traveling along all right until we got about eight miles away. Then we were suddenly enveloped in a thick fog which seemed to close us in our vans and cut us off altogether from the outside world.

As I knew that district well I felt some apprehension for our safety, for I knew that there were several monuments, water fountains, and memorial crosses in the middle of the roadways, and I knew that if we came in contact with any one of these we could easily have an accident. Though our drivers took us along slowly, several times we felt the vehicle rub along the side of one of these obstructions. I thought of the words of Brother Fry, and sent up a silent prayer that God would forgive us for not heeding the warning of the Spirit through our brother. Then suddenly the first vehicle came to a stop, having hit some obstacle head on, with the result that the cars following it collided with this first van.

Without any further mishap we arrived at the meetinghouse just as those who remained were dispersing after the service. As soon as we entered the building, the fog lifted and disappeared completely. The first person we met was Bishop Fry, who just smiled and seemed pleased to see that we were all safe. He said not a word of chastisement, not even an "I told you so." What his thoughts had been as he stood up to preach I do not know.

WE ALL DESCENDED from our seats and stood in the roadway, not knowing what had happened, when the driver came to me and said, "I'm sorry, Sir, but we cannot go any farther in this. I don't know what we have hit, but we shall have to stay here until this fog clears."

Past experience with this type of fog told me that it was not likely to lift for some hours, and the Saints looked to me to suggest what would be our line of action in this distressing condition. I told them there was only one thing to be done, and that was to return back to the Clay Cross meetinghouse, and as I was the only one of the number who knew the locality, I trusted them to obey me implicitly in everything I asked them to do. I felt like Moses in the wilderness, but I had faith in my Heavenly Father that he would help me to get this band of Saints safely back.

My first task was to see if any of our party had electric torches and luckily I found two good ones. Taking hold of one I picked out the tallest of the brethren and gave him the other. I was to go in front and he was to keep at the back. He was not to allow a single person to get behind him, and I was to see to it that no one would go beyond me. Periodically I was to call a halt and flash my torch toward the rear, and if I got an answering signal from him we would proceed on our way. If I got no answer I would know that he was too far back to see my light and would wait until I did get a response. In this way we traveled about three miles of our strange journey, when suddenly I heard a scream from one of the sisters at the back. Bidding everyone to stand still I returned to the point from whence the scream had come. There I found Sister Newport of Leicester in great distress. She had brought with her a babe that was only a few months old, and in order to protect it from the thick fog had wrapped it up in a large shawl. Suddenly she found that she was carrying only the thick shawl—the babe had slipped through onto the roadway some distance behind. I had everybody search, and about half a mile back we found the babe fast asleep in the middle of the road, unhurt. How the people coming up behind had missed trampling upon it remains a miracle indeed.

Without any further mishap we arrived at the meetinghouse just as those who remained were dispersing after the service. As soon as we entered the building, the fog lifted and disappeared completely. The first person we met was Bishop Fry, who just smiled and seemed pleased to see that we were all safe. He said not a word of chastisement, not even an "I told you so." What his thoughts had been as he stood up to preach I do not know.

The Clay Cross Saints came to our help and soon we were comfortably settled for the night. The next day the Ford vans arrived early after breakfast, and once again we traveled the road of the previous night. Coming to the place of our hold-up at that time, the drivers called our attention to the obstruction that had so suddenly brought us to a standstill. It was a stone wall about three feet high, and it showed where the van had come in collision with it. Just over the stone wall was a drop of 100 feet. The babe we lost on the way is now a grown woman with children of her own.

ONE CHRISTMAS DAY I received a telegram from the president of what was then London District asking me to come down as soon as possible to London to help him with a difficulty that had arisen in one of the branches. After we had got over our Christmas festivities I prepared to answer the call.

That winter had been a most terrible one. Snow had fallen until it was three feet thick on the ground, then it had thawed, after which a keen frost set in making the roads a menace to travelers. After a prayer for protection I got the car out, placed my luggage in the rear seat, and set out on my journey of over 200 miles.

All went well until I got to Daventry. While driving along the road toward this town I saw a police officer some one hundred yards ahead waving his arms frantically. Pulling up just in front of him, I inquired the reason for his signals, and he told me that he only wished to warn me of the danger ahead.

A little farther on from where we were conversing, the road took a sharp bend to the left and then led down a steep hill. He warned me to be careful as some motorists had already come to grief on that hill.

As I came to the bend I put the car into low gear so that it might act as a brake. Then to my horror I saw that right across the bottom of the hill was an eight-wheeler truck. It had evidently been trying to climb the hill, but had slid back until it completely blocked the way to any kind of traffic either coming up or going down the hill. Three motorists who had preceded me evidently had become panic-stricken when they saw the obstruction and steered their cars to the left of the road, turning them over on their side.

The drivers of these cars stared at me expecting any moment to see me and my vehicle follow their example, for though I had the car in low gear and also had applied the hand and foot brakes, yet the car was sliding down the hill right toward the eight-wheeler.

As I look back I can truly say that although it seemed as if disaster were inevitable, a simple calmness took possession of me. Suddenly I felt as if someone were speaking into my ear giving instructions as to what I must do to avoid a catastrophe.

On my left where the other cars had overturned was a ditch about two feet deep, and over on the right side of the road was a very thick bushy hedge. As there was no sidewalk, this hedge came flush with the roadway. Turning my steering wheel just a fraction of an inch toward the right I steered for that hedge.

I dared not turn my wheel too far nor too swiftly, for it would have had the effect of spinning the car right about face and I would have crashed into the truck. As soon as I felt the radiator touch the hedge I gave a swift turn to the right and the car rested safely on the hedge in the reverse direction to which I had come. I was just six inches from the truck.

The men standing round came over to me, thinking they had seen a smart piece of driving on my part, but I turned and said, "Thank God for that." I knew to whom I owed my safety. The men then pushed me and the car right through the hedge into the field beyond, down the field to the other side of the track, and through the hedge again, setting me on my way with a wave of their hands. I arrived in London without any further trouble.

IN THE EARLY PART OF 1927 I was laboring around and in the Sutton Branch, Notts, and was staying at the home of Brother and Sister Trenam of the Sutton congregation. One night after I had retired I had a most vivid dream in which I saw two huge gas holders blow up with terrific explosions, allowing the escaped gas to roll along through the streets near my home, causing destruction to several buildings. I came down the next morning and was relating my dream to the Trenams when the brother handed me that morning's paper. There on the front page was the picture of these gasworks and the remains of the holders. The paper told how the escaping gas had rolled along the streets like waves of the sea in flames and caused destruction in its path. You can imagine that I quickly got myself ready to take the first train home to see what had happened to my loved ones. I was intensely relieved to find that though they had undergone a most terrifying experience, they and our home were safe. They described how they had left the house along with their neighbors, fearing that it was about to fall down upon them. When they got in the street they had to run for their lives to open fields in order to escape the waves of flaming gas that rushed along.

Any attempt to relate all of the experiences in which God has made manifest his power on my behalf would take too long a time, but I do wish to close with one of many incidents that occurred during World War II.

It was the memorable Christmas of 1940. Night after night we had had to stay in the air-raid shelter, spending almost the whole of those nights down underground and getting no sleep, after which we had to be at our daily occupation. Often we felt that we had almost reached the end of our tether. On this evening when the dreaded sound of the signals came to us over the air, we somehow felt that this was going to be even worse than anything we had hitherto endured.

That night my wife was seriously ill and it was impossible for us to get her out of the house into the shelter; so, along with my sister-in-law and her daughter, I sat under the staircasing in the hope that we would have some measure of security there. What a night! A bomb was dropped to the right of our house destroying a railway station, another to our left destroying a full row of houses and damaging an engineering workshop. Just behind our home a full block of houses was wiped out, killing some of the tenants. Across from that block a colony of over 190 houses was completely wiped out of existence and the people who had not got into their shelters were killed.

All around the city of Manchester incendiary bombs had been dropped, and as I went to my place of business the next morning I saw a ring of flames around the whole town. It looked as though the fire brigade would never be able to cope with the situation; but thanks to the bravery of these men—many of whom were volunteers that had joined to swell the ranks—the city was saved from total disaster.

In our shelter under the stairway we offered our silent prayers, and, although it looked as if with each exploding bomb that fell it was our end, yet all the damage that we sustained were broken windows and cracked walls. How well we can say with the Psalmist, "The Lord is good to all . . . the Lord preserveth all them that love him. My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord; and let all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever."

I pray that the relation of these experiences helps others to believe that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

(The End.)

Question Time

Question:

Is there any need for healing after the resurrection or in the new world? (See Revelation 22: 2.)
Missouri Mrs. M. W.

Answer:

The teaching of Scripture is that men are to be raised in immortality, which means there will be no more physical death, neither sickness nor affliction. Physical healing will no longer be required.

The healing spoken of in Revelation 22: 2 is in reference to those nations who are still living in mortality during the millennium, and still subject to sin, sickness, and even death. Though men will grow up to old age and die, the Lord says, "Old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13. When Christ comes to reign, he, with the redeemed and resurrected saints, will occupy the land of Zion where the Holy City will be. While the wicked will be destroyed "by the brightness of his coming," remnants of the nations will be left throughout the earth and will continue in mortality, growing again into great nations. The gospel work will continue among them and likely the great majority of them will be saved.

Sin will remain among these mortals; and where sin is, sickness will most likely be, and healing may be needed. It is possible however that the healing here mentioned may be national—"the healing of the nations."

Question:

Do the spirits of those who die in infancy grow up in heaven under the influence of the gospel light?
Nebraska Mrs. S. S. S.

Answer:

The word "gospel" means good news. This good news, however, was to sinful men living on the earth and to those spirits confined to the "prison house." Christ came to call "sinners," not the righteous, to "repentance." A child who dies in infancy is not corrupted by the sinful environment we live in, and the good news that cleanses men from their corruption does not apply to it, because it is pure.

To say that an infant would grow up in the "gospel light" after its death in infancy would be admitting the existence of evil in heaven, and that we cannot admit. Satan was cast out of heaven, and heaven is now free from rebellion (Isaiah 14: 12; Luke 10: 17-20; II Peter 2: 4-9; Revelation 12: 6; Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10).

GEORGE NJEIM

Question:

In the book Blood Atonement and the Origin of Plural Marriage by Joseph F. Smith, the Mormons present quite a lengthy quotation, purportedly from the editorials of the first two issues of the Saints' Herald published by the church in 1860. In these editorials Isaac Sheen admitted that Joseph Smith did receive from God and publish the revelation on celestial marriage. The author further quotes the Saints' Herald as stating that, after giving the revelation, God smote Joseph Smith for his wickedness in asking for the revelation and poured out wrath and indignation upon the Saints for their participating in the iniquities.

Answer:

I have before me a copy of the book published by the Utah Church, Blood Atonement and the Origin of Plural Marriage, by Joseph Fielding Smith in which he quotes Isaac Sheen's articles in volume one of the True Latter Day Saints' Herald. Mr. Smith entirely misrepresents Isaac Sheen by the processes of distortion and inference. He tries to make Isaac Sheen admit Joseph Smith as the author and participator in the doctrine of polygamy. Isaac Sheen does identify Joseph Smith with the "spiritual wife doctrine," which is not polygamy. However, a study of Sheen's history indicates that he is speaking from hearsay and not as an original witness. He cancels his own reliability as a competent witness of this history by stating, "This branch of the subject we shall leave to some of our brethren who are qualified to explain it satisfactorily." In these articles, Isaac Sheen brings into focus the Scriptures of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, condemning polygamy in no uncertain terms. There is no proof in any authoritative reliable history that Joseph Smith received, published, or taught any revelations justifying the practice of polygamy. Isaac Sheen's articles in volume one of the True Latter Day Saints' Herald is a stalwart attack based on the Scriptures against the Utah teachings of the doctrine of polygamy, with which they would like to associate Joseph Smith. His two articles are a defense of the position of the Reorganization in its opposition to the teachings of Utah and in its defense of Joseph Smith.

Question:

Is it necessary to obey the law of tithing as taught by the church to obtain celestial salvation?

Answer:

The Scriptures indicate that compliance with law is essential to celestial salvation. The law of the accounting and of stewardships has been emphasized in the revelations received through the restored church, and therefore constitutes a part of the total law.

G. L. DELAPP

Question:

Are the leaders of Israeli literal descendants of Jews?
Michigan Mrs. G.A.W.

Answer:

Probably so, but in the absence of a complete genealogy it would be impossible to prove it. The Jews have strongly held to their Jewish status, and would not be likely to include in their association, especially as leaders, men of whose lineage they are doubtful. On the other hand men of Gentile stock would not be likely to seek position among them. There have been some mixed marriages, but persons of such marriages generally tend toward amalgamation with the Gentiles rather than with the Jews.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Man - A Creator

OUR THREE-YEAR-OLD GRANDSON had been given a toy tractor. There was a man fastened to the seat in position to drive the machine. One day I noticed that the little man was gone. Upon being asked where it was, Grandson said simply, "I took him off. I didn't want him to drive the tractor. I want to drive it myself."

There is the explanation for countless heartaches from the cradle to the grave—for normal people. That inborn desire to "do it myself" must find fulfillment, or the person is frustrated and often becomes a failure.

When I want to understand a problem, usually a study of the Scriptures gives an explanation—often an answer, and always a revealing sidelight worthy of consideration. I find that in the beginning God created, that his Son created; and that he created man in his own image and likeness. This gives us the reason why man likes to create. He was made in the likeness of God.

Again, the Master said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." This is why man likes to work—if he can do work he likes. Sometimes the project as a whole is so desirable that he does willingly even that part of it which he dislikes.

One woman who allowed her daughters to cook and do housework remarked that they had broken a lot of dishes, but they had learned. When one of them took home economics in high school the instructor often asked her advice. The mother died when the girls were still in their early teens, but they were capable housekeepers.

Once I bought enough dishes at a cost of around four dollars to set the table for twelve. They made an attractive looking table, too.

Mother, if your daughters want to help, and you are afraid they will break your good dishes, buy some cheap ones. Better yet, talk it over with the girls, give them some money and send them to buy the dishes themselves.

THE OTHER DAY WE heard a story on the radio about the dreadful things a little boy had done to the furniture with his daddy's saw. Dreadfulness wasn't in his mind, but the victory of accomplishment was asserting itself. He was doing something. If his parents had given him a saw, hammer, nails, screws, a screw driver, and some boards in a corner of his own, the furniture would have been safe. He would have been creating and working. Also, it would have been a wonderful opportunity for his parents to teach him the right of possession, and respect for other people's things.

We would look with horror upon a parent who would deliberately break his child's leg or arm. Yet many parents break their child's spirit of accomplishment and adventure into the world of exploration.

I knew a man who, as a boy, figured out part of an invention for a farm machine not yet on the market. He told his father about it and said he would like help to complete the idea. His father looked at him, told him he better go back to doing the work by hand, then took up his paper and began reading again. That father broke his son's spirit of invention. It was far more serious than a broken arm or leg would have been. The boy lived to be nearly eighty years old. He saw his idea completed and the machines in operation, and he carried with him always a spirit of frustration. It is true that some people would have gone on with the idea. All great inventors have had the never-give-up spirit, but often there has been some one person who has given encouragement. The easily discouraged person is the one who needs the most understanding and help so that he may get a firm grip on himself and develop to his highest capacity.

CHILDREN SHOULD BE ALLOWED early to make choices on the clothes they wear and on much of the food they eat. Sometimes they cannot be allowed to have their choice. Such times provide a good opportunity for them to learn to respect the law of obedience to proper authority. In most instances a reason can be given that will help the child to understand.

Our capability to accomplish depends most importantly upon our natural ability and whether we are a one-, two- or five-talent person. So it is very important that a one-talent person find the line of work for which he is fitted. Some people scoff at the man or woman who changes jobs often. This may be due to a lack of perseverance and lack of training. More frequently, however, such people have never found their niche.

I often think of the boy, reared on the farm, who as a young man married and started farming under very favorable circumstances. He had never done any other kind of work. Within a few years he was worse than a simple failure and divorced. He went to an altogether different type of work in another part of the state and is now reunited with his family and making good.

If it is right to "try the spirits whether they are of God," it should be just as right to try different occupations until the right one is found. Circumstances may make it necessary to "tarry for a time" in some work that isn't pleasing, but that need not end the search. If you see a person, young or old, floundering in his job, help and encourage him to find the one the Lord intended him to have.

HERE IS AN IMPORTANT THING for one who wants to help another to remember, a person must learn according to the processes of his own mind—not those of another mind.

Did you ever see an expert, impatient car driver try to teach a beginner? It's "Turn the key, shove that button in, push that pedal. No, don't do that. Shove in the clutch." And on and on until the one at the wheel is confused, perspiring, and unwilling to try further. (Thanks to the latest models, and a good instruction book, one can almost teach himself to drive.)

A person must learn according to the processes of his own mind.

The difference between a good teacher and a poor one, regardless of how much or how little either knows, is how well he can teach according to the processes of the student's mind.

Have you ever heard a student say, "Now, wait a minute, just let me ask what I want to know, and let me understand that first. Perhaps you'll have to tell me several times, but be patient. I'll get it after a while"?

The Scripture says that there is a time for everything, and that knowledge must come line upon line. If we are to help any one to create—to fulfill any of the great missions of his existence—we'll have to adjust our teaching mind to his learning mind, not his mind to ours. The lines may have to be short, and they may have to be repeated many times. However, we must not be weary in well-doing, for in due time he will understand it.

THERE HAS BEEN an important discovery in science—each person has an individual body rhythm. There are certain times in the twenty-four hours when he does his best work along some lines. It has been found also that some people, lacking one or more of the various vitamins or minerals, work best at night. They can't seem to "get into gear" for working at their best before late forenoon or afterwards.

Some people will say that such an idea is nonsense, but I know that for some cause or other I always do my best studying, creative, and often physical work when the house is quiet at night. Also, I really accomplish more in the day if I don't try to do anything more difficult than sewing or reading for two or three hours after lunch.

We should study this body rhythm, both in ourselves and those we are trying to help, whether it is a child with his lessons or those much older with their daily tasks. By doing this and working with it instead of against it much "tearing apart" of ourselves and others can be avoided. There will be smoother operation, as with a machine when all parts are fitted together and well oiled.

Stewards

By Chaplain (Captain) Floyd Engstrom

"It is required of a steward that he be found faithful." That we should be faithful in everything we do needs little affirmation. Our time, our talents, and our substance are given to us as stewards. The use we make of them is up to us.

To be good stewards we need make temporal things spiritual. We do this by praying about our work, our recreation, and the everyday occurrences of our lives. Not only do we need to pray about them, but we need to think about their improvement, about bringing them from the commonplace into the spiritual realm.

Not forgetting our prayer and our thinking, we need to make decisions about moral values—about our ambassadorship for Christ who gave so much for us. Having made such a decision, we must develop the courage not only to do his will, but to gain friends for him by so doing. We must learn to smile and to say "no thank you," in an appealing way. We must spiritualize our activities.

As his ambassadors we are being watched. People are listening to what we say. Are we making the impression our family, our nation, and our church would have us make? It is a responsibility we must face, each in our own way.

We are stewards, and as such we are expected to be faithful in those things which come into our possession. Whether we are found wanting or not will be determined on how we discharge our stewardship. What kind of a steward are we? Have we spiritualized our time, talents, life? Because of him and our stewardship to him, are we happy, well-adjusted individuals? We can be.

Are You Passive or Dynamic?

By Bessie Taylor

CHRISTIANITY IS A WAY of life. It has its ideals, its policies, its philosophy. Christianity thrives and spreads rapidly when led by flaming prophets like Paul, Luther, and Joseph Smith. These leaders combined high ability and great intellectual capacity with passionate emotional devotion to the causes they espoused. Their followers became as passionately devoted as they, and the result was a great spiritual enhancement.

The protoplasm in man has a something in addition to its instincts and habits. It has a capacity for God, and the soul waves its tentacles feeling after God. In every age men have had a religion. For all human achievement an ideal is indispensable. Christianity holds up to the believers and nonbelievers the Perfect Man. The problem of religion is to explain and exemplify Christ. The test question of Christianity is "How is the process to be practically accomplished?"

Is not Zion the solution? Zion, the ensign of the nations! Zion, the kingdom of God on earth! The failure to understand the dynamics of Christianity is what hinders its growth. To extend the kingdom of God is what life is for. The ultimate is unity of man and man, God and man, God and Christ and man, till "all shall be one." Could science anticipate a more brilliant future? This is the climax to which all creation tends; yet this grand termination is impeded because of men's passivity and complacency.

OUR WORLD is composed of millions of people with no two exactly alike, yet we attempt to classify them into various categories and divisions. In fact we are constantly evaluating people. The classification Christ often made was that of the "sinners" and the "righteous." Among all the numerous orders to which man has been ascribed, there are two which perhaps include everyone to some degree. These two we are pleased to call the "thermometers" and the "thermostats." Upon first analysis, these terms seem very similar, but with a closer study we see that actually they are as different as night and day. In one is resident vitality, initiative, aptitude, energy, perseverance, steadfastness, independence, and life. In the other is nothing but dependence, conformity, gullibility, will-o'-the-wisp.

THE THERMOMETER people are those who are controlled by their environment. When the wind changes, they agree and follow right along. Politically, they are always in bondage. They are easily intimidated and led by dictators. Socially, they are always running to keep up with the Joneses. Spiritually, they are hot one minute and cool the next. They are easily moved by any doctrine or propaganda. Economically, they need a boss to guide them in their work. They are always gullible and easily sold. They don't think for themselves, and are always influenced by others. They have no power within themselves to progress. They take the course of least resistance. They are always ready to compromise on the other fellow's terms. They are passive and introverted.

THE THERMOSTAT type makes up the backbone of the community and church. These folks control their environment. They are imbued and connected with a power greater than themselves—something that is higher and outside them. With this power they are masters, not mice. The thermometer says, "What can't be cured must be endured." The thermostat says, "What can't be endured, must be cured."

In politics, the thermostat person is democratic. He knows that God grants liberty and freedom only to those who are willing to maintain it. Socially, he is an individual with a capacity for discrimination. He is emotionally stable and intellectually mature. In religion, he has the power to resist evil and to use the forces about him for his own benefit. He makes the world about him a much happier place because he is dependable. He is active and diligent in his responsibilities. He uses the forces at his command and becomes their master. He is able to standardize and idealize his life and to live nobly no matter what may happen around him. He does not compromise indiscriminately. He creates new atmosphere. He changes things by allowing no degeneration. His advice is "Be ye not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds continually."

Christianity faces its greatest challenge today in all history. Let's be dynamic; let's stand for the Church and reap with all our might!

Letters

A Letter of Gratitude

Even before my baptism I was healed through administration. I had often suffered from severe headaches which would make me ill for several days at a time. An elder was visiting at the home of my parents when one of these headaches afflicted me, and he asked if I would like to be administered to. I was glad to receive this ministry, and following the administration I felt fine. That was in 1915, and I have never had a headache since. After my father died and my mother was ill I prayed that she would be spared a while longer. She lived for many years afterwards. I have received other blessings, and I am very grateful to God "from whom all blessings flow."

Helped by Administration

When I read the letter by Clara Kelly of St. Joseph, Missouri, I was reminded of the time I received help through the administration of Elder Russell, who was then living in Flint, Michigan.

Several years ago while I was suffering from hay fever, I took an overdose of antihistamine. By evening my body began to grow numb and my tongue became so thick I could hardly talk. I knew little about such reactions and felt panic stricken. Although I knew Elder Russell had just returned from youth retreat and was in need of rest, I had my sister call him. He said he would be at our home in a few minutes. Those were wonderful words. Just knowing that he would come quieted my fears. Needless to say I received a great blessing from the administration. Since then I have ceased to use antihistamine. Each year as hay fever season draws near I call for an elder. Because of these administrations I have experienced little discomfort from the allergy.

God is wonderful, and so are these "special helpers" of his. It is a privilege to be a Latter Day Saint and receive such abundant blessings.

MRS. GAROLD GILBERT

From an Isolated Member

I wish every Latter Day Saint could experience the baptism of the Holy Spirit such as has blessed me this past year. It is a wonderful feeling; only those who have felt it can appreciate it. It is priceless, for money cannot buy it.

I have been isolated most of my life, and my spiritual hunger has been great at times, but the promises of Christ have comforted me. He can give a greater understanding of the truth and be near anywhere and anytime.

There are three small churches here. I pray for the church school and teach a class in the Congregational Church. I am grateful for this opportunity to use my talent and to explain the gospel. The members of this church did not know the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Mormon Church. Now that I have explained the differences to the pastor he says that he believes the Book of Mormon would be a good book to read. I pray I may continue to do a good work in this community.

Soon I must go to the hospital for tests; the doctor fears that I have cancer. Pray that I may be spared to help spread the gospel message.

Note of Thanks

I want to express my sincere thanks to all who so kindly remembered my brother, Arvid Anderson, during his recovery from a broken back. He is able to get around now. He certainly received a blessing, and I thank each and every one for the interest shown in him.

Letter From Japan

(Excerpts from a letter written to Elder A. L. Nunamaker, 5757 North Agnes, Temple City, California)

Camp Schimmelpennig
Sendai, Japan

Just a few moments ago I shook hands with Elder Carl Crum, and we bid each other farewell. What he brought with him will always stay with me. This day truly has been filled with the Spirit of God. This morning, after we had studied lesson seven of Book of Mormon Studies, Robert Anderson was ordained to the office of deacon; then we had Communion (bread and water). With our arms around each other we listened to the closing prayer by Elder Crum. We ate the noon meal in our dining hall, with Dick giving the prayer of thanks. In the afternoon we continued with a review of the church, the Restoration, and a comparison of the present with things that are to happen in the last days. The time went quickly. Elder Crum wanted to look over the camp for a while, after which he ate supper at "F" Company with Bob Anderson. All too soon the day was over.

* * * * *

It will be good to get back and really get down to studying. We—Dick, Charlie, Bob, and I—have received much from our studies the past few months. God has been close at hand during our discussions. An army camp is not the best place for communing with God at times; there are many interruptions—blaring radios, wrestling, swearing, arguing, and drinking—around, but perhaps we won't have to be here much longer. I wish now that I had helped more in the building of Temple City Branch when I had the time to spare. There is still much to do, I know, and I can hardly wait to really begin serving. Maybe, if it had not been for the Army, I would have been years in getting around to this. There are a few things I want to tell the members at home when I get back.

From Mile 300, Alaska Highway

We are now living at Mile 300 on the Alaska Highway. We were previously located at New Liskeard, Ontario. After having been so active in church work, we miss the association of the Saints very much. If there are members in Grand Prairie, Dawson Creek, Fort Nelson, or other points on the highway, we should like to contact them. There are several families at White Horse, but that is six hundred miles north of us. It may be possible, however, for us to make the trip sometime during the summer.

We are living at an army camp, so it has been impossible for us to organize anything other than a nonsectarian church school. There was no religious education at all for the children when we first came. Now we have an enrollment of twenty-eight, ranging in age from three to fourteen years. We have had fine co-operation from the camp authorities, and the wife of a sergeant major—a good Baptist woman—has offered to help by teaching the beginner's class.

We shall appreciate the prayers of any members who care to remember us.

HOW TO MAKE CHALK TALK

By Stella O. Barnett

Here is another outstanding selection of story lessons, such as God's Holy Word, God's Protection, The Christian Home, The Four Seasons and many other wholesome chalk talks, useful to any age group. Chalk talks engrave lasting truths on the minds, because to see as well as hear is more impressive. If you can draw even a not-so-straight line, you can master chalk talk.

FIRST BRANCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Elders E. W. Chandler, A. O. Skinner, and L. P. Hancock participated in the Communion service September 2, 1951. The morning service, September 9, was under the direction of the women. Participating were Mrs. E. W. Chandler, Mrs. Harry Striblen, Mrs. Elmer Gelhorn, Miss Juanita Stuart, Mrs. Ralph Delmont, Elder E. W. Chandler, Mrs. H. T. McCaig, Sr., and Mrs. Louis Hancock. The talk was given by the district women's leader, Mrs. L. S. Wight.

Family night at Austin Town Hall was held September 14. The program was planned by Mrs. J. C. Stuart on the theme "Making Our Church a Growing Concern." Speakers for the month were Elders E. W. Chandler, H. T. McCaig, Sr., Charles Homuth, and L. P. Hancock. Special music was a duet by Mr. L. P. Hancock and Mrs. Ralph Delmont.

Elders H. T. McCaig, Sr., A. O. Skinner, L. P. Hancock, J. C. Stuart, and Priest E. F. Epperson, participated in the Communion service October 7. The piano interlude was by Ruth Skinner, and Mr. Donald Mee sang a solo, accompanied at the organ by Mrs. Pauline Jones.

The following are officers: branch president, Elbert W. Chandler; counselors, Buren Lenox and H. T. McCaig, Sr.; religious education, Louis Hancock; children's division, Alice Skinner; women's leader, Mrs. E. W. Chandler; business administrator, Robert Brown; supervisor of young people, Elbert Chandler; secretary, Ruth Skinner; branch solicitor, Hulda Edstrom; Herald correspondent, Velva E. Castins; music director, Helene Hancock; adult supervisor, Edward Kohn; book steward, Bob Pawley; junior church leaders, George and Lillian Wamsley; building fund chairman, Herbert Jones.

Speakers for the month of October were Elders J. C. Stuart and H. T. McCaig, Sr., Priest

E. F. Epperson, and Patriarch L. S. Wight. The Communion service on November 4 was under the direction of Elder Wayne Smith. A trio was sung by Mrs. Herbert Jones, Mrs. Ralph Delmont, and Mrs. Louis Hancock, and Miss Ruth Skinner was pianist. A. O. Skinner gave the benediction.

During the month of November, Seventy Wayne Smith preached every Sunday morning and held cottage meetings. As a result of these meetings two candidates were baptized November 25. They were Kathryn Box and George Wamsley. Seventy Wayne Smith officiated.

Many of First Branch attended the Institute held November 9-11 at the Chicago Mt. Vernon Church. Apostle Reed Holmes, Director of Religious Education, and Elder Carl Mesle, Director of Youth, were in charge of the institute.

Elders E. W. Chandler, J. W. Pettersson and Priest Paul Whitman participated in the Communion service December 2. A trio was sung by Mrs. Elmer Gelhorn, Miss Delores Jones and Miss Juanita Stuart.

Speakers for the month were Elders E. W. Chandler, J. C. Stuart, L. P. Hancock, Mr. Donald Zion, Mrs. Louis Hancock and Mrs. Warren Joseph Hinkle of Rock Island, Illinois, sang solos during the month, and a special women's chorus also sang.

A Christmas vesper service was held at the Austin YMCA December 21. Elder J. C. Stuart was in charge. The program was planned by Eleanor Chandler, Eleanor Stuart, and Helene Hancock. The children of the church school took part in the vesper service. Treats were given to the children and adults. Judith McCaig Schmidt gave a reading. Closing prayer was by Elder Elbert Chandler.

The Friendship Guild met at the home of Mrs. Mae Ryan on December 13 for their Christmas luncheon and a silent auction.

Mrs. Frances Salomon was hostess to the North Side Circle. Proceeds from the luncheon was turned back into the circle treasury by the hostess toward the building fund.

Mrs. Herbert Jones was hostess to the Senipah Guild Christmas party.

A lot has been purchased for a new church location at Major and Montrose Avenues. The building fund for future expansion is steadily increasing.

Prayer and fellowship meetings are held weekly in various homes. First Branch welcomes anyone coming to Chicago in the area. Meetings are held at Austin YMCA, 501 North Central Avenue. Ladies acting as hostesses at the YMCA have been Emerine Gunderson, Eleanor Chandler, Beverly Whitman, Marie Swanson, Helene Hancock, Grace Edstrom, Betty Fisher, Anna Transberger, Olive Battersby, and Velva E. Castins.—Reported by VELVA E. CASTINS

Building Plans Made

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—The church owns a block of land situated on the corner of Lakeville and Meadowoods Roads in the village of Lake Success, a mile from the city limits. With the acquisition of the land, building plans are being organized. In the meantime, meetings are being held each Sunday morning in the YMCA Hall at Highland Park. During the year 1951, $5,000 was raised by the Saints. The women raised $425 at a combined smorgasbord and bazaar on December 1. Sister Anne Squire was in charge of the evening. Two other groups have been started in the Greater New York area. The Manhattan group is meeting on Monday evenings under the leadership of Brother Norman Bernauer, who is living in the city for a few months while training in the field of television production and direction. Another group led by Brother Paul Frisbie is meeting at Levittown, serving the Saints on Long Island, especially those in Nassau and Suffolk counties.

Brother Bill Lord, formerly of California, is a new member of the New York congregation.

Two weddings were solemnized during the yuletide season. Doris Harris and Lindal Mark were married on December 29, and on January 12, Janet Harris was married to Paul Teeter.—Reported by BERYL JUDD

College Students Honored

SOUTHWEST PORTLAND.—Recent guest speakers have been Evangelist Mark Yeoman, Evangelist Walter H. Barker, Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, Elder James F. Kemp, and Elder Keith Kinert, Oregon District Zion's League leader.

The women's department held a dessert luncheon December 6, at the home of President Jessie Bowles. Sister Bowles and her assistant, Ethel Sander, were in charge of the preparation. Each member brought a guest. The proceeds went into the project fund.

The branch held their annual Christmas program December 23 with Sister Grace Comer in charge. The children presented a playlet, songs, and drills. A pageant was given by the adults with the choir and soloists furnishing the background music. Soloists were Joyce Gamet, Orba Randol, Ray Trotter, and James Smith.

Treats were given to the children with Stanley Holm, Sr., in the role of Santa.

On December 28 the branch gave a no-hostess dinner in honor of the branch college students. Those home for the holidays were Betty Comer from Graceland and Stanley Holm, Jr., from the University of Kansas. Miss Martha Hare, the fiancée of Stanley Holm and a Graceland student from Royal Oak, Michigan, was also a guest of honor.—Reported by TRESA MAE SHARP Hufferd is counselor to the district president, Ward A. Hougas. Brother Kemp serves with Brother Hougas in the Denver Branch as associate pastor.

The yuletide Zion's League retreat held in Denver for the district over the week end of December 29 was under the direction of E. Robert Fishburn, district young people's leader. Emery E. Jennings of St. Joseph, Missouri, president of the Far West Stake, was the guest speaker.

A series of priesthood institutes were held in eastern Colorado at five strategic points and resulted in contact with a high percentage of the priesthood of the district. The instruction was offered by the three members of the district presidency, Ward A. Hougas, Ernest E. Crownover, and Joseph A. Hufferd.—Reported by WARD A. HOUGAS

Mission Observes Anniversary

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS.—The mission observed its first birthday the first Sunday in December. However, the anniversary of organization is April. The membership totals thirteen, but visitors from Sheppard Field help increase the group. Two baptisms have taken place since April. Brother Dan Hotson, husband of Ann Hotson, formerly of Independence, Missouri, and Ernest Goff, son of Floyd and Dorothy Goff, were baptized. Clyde Johnson, Jr., son of Clyde and Ruth Johnson, was ordained a deacon in October. The pastor, Elder R. W. Bunch, is conducting slide lectures in the homes of nonmembers.—Reported by L. MAE CARROW

Work Organized in Japan

JAPAN.—Elder Carl Crum of Seattle is now in Tokyo working for the Federal Government. He is making contacts with the members in the area and expects his family to join him in the future. Warrant Officer O. R. Tice works from Yokohama but is able to travel all over Japan and contact people. His family joined him in January.

Harold Fowler and Charlie Bragg of the Navy are at Yokosuka on an LST. They have contacted several members there. Lela Gurwell of St. Joseph, Missouri, is working for the Civil Service in Tokyo. Pvts. Tommy Kemple and Curtis Pettigrew of the Engineers were contacted.

SFC Pat Samuela is stationed at the Camp Drake Replacement Depot. He has been in Japan for twenty-six months, and his family has been with him for nineteen months. Major Samuel Toomey was through Japan on his way to Korea. Peter Chosokabe plans to meet with the Saints in the spring. Kisuke Sekine of Graceland, whose family lives on the outskirts of Tokyo, plans to unite with the group when he returns to Japan. Sgt. T. S. Perry is stationed with the WAC's in Yokohama and works in the women's and children's ward in the hospital there.

Sgt. R. L. Anderson, A. R. Hacker, Vernon Smith, Charlie Bickle, and Roland Postlewaite are all with the Fortieth Division in Sendai. Brother Crum has made telephone contact with them, and he and Brother Samuela plan to visit them.

Harold Martins has been contacted by letter.

An invitation is extended to all members who come to Japan to contact Elder Carl Crum, whose office phone is 57-8178, and hotel phone is 26-7271, or to contact SFC Pat Samuela whose home phone is Camp Drake 2044 and may be called without toll.—Reported by PAT SAMUELA

Holidays Celebrated

LENNOX, CALIFORNIA.—After church, December 23, the Zion's League went Christmas caroling, following which they met at the home of Perry Woods. A fellowship service was held, and then the group listened to the Messiah broadcast.

Ed Slepika was home from overseas duty for the holidays. Irby Webb was home for Christmas from Kansas State Teacher's College in Pittsburg.

George and Doris Williams and their two children, Georgia and Pamela, who have moved from the state of Iowa, are now in the branch.

Elder Joseph Nuckles and his wife were in an automobile accident.

Dennis Albert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pearson, was blessed December 27 by Elders Joseph Nuckles and Ray Webb.—Reported by ARLENE HOLMES

Annual Business Meeting

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—The annual branch business meeting was held September 21. Officers elected were branch president, Elder K. W. Anholt; secretary and statistician, Sister C. R. Bowerman; treasurer, R. E. Osler; custodian, A. Johnstone; church school director, Teacher D. W. Bowerman; auditor, C. R. Bowerman; music department, Eleanor Bowerman; publicity agent, Muriel Pearse; young people's supervisor, Kenneth Nevels; historian, Patriarch William Osler; book steward and hostess, Myrtle Bowerman.

Counselors to the branch presidency were Seventy D. K. Larmour and Elder C. W. Owen. Teacher N. E. Olson was also appointed as assistant to the church school director.

The women's department elected Sister O. McKenzie as president, and the Zion's League elected LeRoy Anholt as president.

Elder Aleah Koury spent the month of September in the branch, during which time he held cottage meetings contacting members and nonmembers. He also held a series of meetings.

The annual ice cream and strawberry social held in September netted $24.00. The Thanksgiving harvest sale in October raised $40.00. On November 23, a turkey supper and bazaar profited $202.98. All these projects were sponsored by the women's department to aid the building fund.

The Zion's League gained another $30.00 for the building fund from the sale of Christmas cards.

Sister M. Crane has moved to British Columbia, but before she left she donated $800.00 for the building fund.

Progress is being made on the upper auditorium of the new church.—Reported by MYRTLE BOWERMAN

Women Raise Money for Building

LOMITA, CALIFORNIA.—The pastor, Elder W. J. Moyle, Sr., was ordained to the office of high priest and to the Stake High Council at the stake conference. The five other men from the branch ordained during the year were Albert Simpson, elder; Gene Davis, priest; Milton Johnson, teacher; and Paul and William Billar, deacons.

Fourteen persons were baptized last year; most of the candidates were adults.

Elder Manford M. Ralston is the junior church pastor. Sister Dorothy Moyle was in charge of the Christmas program at which time 110 persons were present. At the close of the service, the children were presented Christmas treats.

The young people had a candlelight Communion service January 2. W. J. Moyle, Jr., gave the address.

The women's department, divided into two groups, meet regularly, and aid the building fund with projects to raise money. The Mariettas sponsor a potluck luncheon the first Sunday of the month, and the money raised is donated to the building fund. The Emmas meet Wednesdays for handwork, worship, and study. They have completed the course, "Developing Spiritual Power." There are fourteen members in the group, and they have set $1,000.00 as their quota for the year for the building fund.

On Christmas Sunday an offering for the Auditorium was received. The missions quota of $100.00 was raised at that time.

Meetings are held at 1260 Broad Avenue, American Legion Hall, Wilmington, California.—Reported by INEZ I. BRUMBELOW

Apostle Holds Series

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Apostle Arthur Oakman was the guest speaker on Sunday and Wednesday nights from November 25 to December 9. He visited in the homes of members during the two-week interval. He was the house guest of Pastor and Mrs. T. W. Bath during his stay in Pittsburg.

The women's department invited the husbands of members to be guests at the Thanksgiving meeting November 19 at the home of Roy and Esther Heller. Mrs. Al Comstock led the devotions. Pat Mosier sang a solo accompanied by Mrs. Kenneth Coyer. Mrs. J. W. Jones conducted the lesson. The hostess served refreshments. The department invited the families of members to the Christmas party at the home of Sam and Irma Landrum December 17. Mrs. Joe McAdams and Mrs. Curtis Pearson had charge of games. Gifts from secret pals were distributed. Refreshments were served by the hostesses. Mrs. Bill Shaw was hostess January 7. Mrs. I. G. Wilson conducted the lesson. Mrs. Clyde Wiley conducted the devotions. Refreshments were served.

The five Graceland graduates who are students at the college in Pittsburg have been participating in many local church activities. They are Conrad Faulk, Irby Webb, Kenneth Cooper, Kenneth Stubbart, and Newell Yates. The numbers for the choir's Christmas program on December 16 were planned by Brothers Faulk and Stubbart. Brother Faulk has been elected music leader and Brother Stubbart is young people's leader. Kenneth Cooper has been selected by the college music department to share a scholarship given by the local Treble Clef Club and was honored at the college band concert January 14, when the announcement was made. All five Gracelanders play in the band.

The Zion's League held its Christmas program December 19. Elder R. G. Smith told the story of "The Other Wise Man," by Van Dyke. Kenneth Stubbart was in charge of the program.

Joan Margrave, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Margrave, married Robert Trimble December 23.

William Miller, Galesburg, Missouri, was guest speaker November 18.

Dale Swall, Graceland graduate and former Pittsburg college student, visited the branch during the holidays on leave from the Army. He was en route to California. He spoke at church Sunday evening December 30.—Reported by MRS. ROY T. HELLER

Raise Funds for Building

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—Leon Ultican, Harold White, and Dean Hintz attended the priesthood conference in Berkeley November 17 and 18. On November 10 and 11, Evelyn Riley, Eva Dodge, and Helen Hintz attended the district women's conference in Sacramento.

Under the leadership of Harold White, the Zion's League was host to the congregation at a venison stew supper. Surprise visitors that evening were Elder and Mrs. Glen Smith and daughter Betty, of San Bruno, California.

Pastor H. D. Hintz again participated in the union Thanksgiving service sponsored by the local Ministerial Association.

The women's department raised $150.00 at the rummage sale held at a downtown location. In November they sponsored a harvest home dinner for the branch and friends. On December 5 a meeting was held all day with a potluck luncheon at noon. The women prepared bazaar articles for sale the following day. Cooked food was sold, bringing the amount raised to approximately $130.00. The women sponsored a Mexican fiesta dinner for the congregation January 25.

On December 8, the pastor presented "The Christmas Angel" on the regular radio program of thirty minutes sponsored by the Chico Ministerial Association. Assisting him in the program were H. M. Brown, and Marjorie and Cora June Hintz.

The adult and junior choirs in a candlelight professional preceded the special program at the morning hour December 23. The story of the first Christmas was given by the pastor, interspersed with anthems and carols by the two choirs, respectively, to dramatize the story in song. Marjorie Hintz was the director. Mrs. Fern Sliger accompanied both choirs.

In the evening the annual church school program was given. A play was presented by the junior girls. Special music was again provided by the choirs. The missionary class decorated the tree and filled the candy boxes. Sisters S. D. Glatz and H. A. Hintz directed the program and Mrs. H. M. Brown was in charge of baskets for needy families.

The fourth annual Christmas Day program was presented at the morning hour. A message, "Keeping Christmas," was presented by the pastor. The choir sang carols.

Messiah listening parties were held in various homes, and many favorable comments were received from people who heard the program.

Elder E. L. Hamilton was the guest speaker January 13. He is from Yuba City, California.

Attending the youth retreat at the new reunion grounds at Santa Cruz on December 28-31 were Joanne Schardt, Betty, Lois, and Norma Ultican, and Shirley Sliger. Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Ultican furnished the transportation.—Reported by HELEN HINTZ.

MILL SPRING, MISSOURI.—On December 2, Melvin Knight was ordained to the office of deacon. Elders Gomer Malone and J. A. Phillips of Kennett, Missouri, officiated at the ordination.—Reported by OPAL NELSON

Silver Anniversary of Branch

AURORA, ILLINOIS.—November was the silver anniversary of the branch. The work was begun there when a church missionary, Jerome E. Wildermuth, moved his family to the city and meetings were held in their home. Permission to organize was sought and granted to the group by the conference of the Northeastern Illinois District, meeting at Plano on November 7, 1926. Two days later, J. F. Garver, then an apostle, presided over the organization meeting of the branch. Many faithful members have contributed to the work and growth of the congregation.

In 1948 the branch purchased the Swedish Methodist church at Cedar and Locust streets and held its first meeting in this church home on September 26.

On Sunday, November 11, all-day services were held at the church to celebrate the anniversary. Pastor A. J. Settles was active in the meetings of the day. District President Lloyd Cleveland was in charge of the morning devotional and testimony service. Evan A. Fry was the speaker at meetings 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Local leaders and musicians contributed to the programs. The history of the branch, written by Charles A. Reedy, historian, was presented in a booklet with the anniversary programs. A number of church workers from Aurora have been called into district work, and people of the branch are happy to be making a significant contribution to the church.

Women Raise Money for Branch

SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA.—Two children of the group were baptized at Long Beach December 30. Eight-year-old Barbara McNeil was baptized by her uncle, R. L. Macrae, pastor of the South Gate Mission. Arthea Hawkes was baptized by her father,

A. E. Hawkes. She is also eight years old.

There has been an attendance of approximately twenty-five at the Sunday morning services which are held in the Labor Hall, at San Rafael. On Friday nights a study class is held at the home of Ernestine and Art Arditto.

A bazaar and rummage sale was held in Larkspur January 10 and 11. The Tamalpais Circle of the women's department raised $140.00 on the sale.

A surprise birthday party was held January 11 in the home of Ethel and Roy McNeil. Approximately twelve couples attended.—Reported by MARIE GOSLINE

"Return of the Talents" Service Held

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—A two-day meeting was held January 12-13 with District President S. M. Zonker in charge. Brother Zonker preached the evening sermon on Saturday. Carl Anderson, district church school director of Clarksburg, conducted the Sunday morning church school worship, and the junior choir sang. The young people's leader for the district, Lawrence Phillips of Clarksburg, spoke at the eleven o'clock service. The senior choir under the direction of Lenora Nixon sang. Dinner was served by the women's department, following which a discussion was held on cottage missionary services, with S. M. Zonker supervising.

Elder Otto Melcher concluded services of the day with a sermon.

On January 20, at the morning service, "Return of the Talents" was the theme. Those who had participated in exercising their talents by accepting $1.00 two months previous, turned in the results of their labors. The amount received was six times the amount given out. The three oldest sisters in the branch, Sister Mary Allen, Sister Anna Blankenship, and Sister Cora Melcher, contributed the most by baking bread, crocheting edging on handkerchiefs, and making apple butter.

January 27 was the regular family night. Evangelist R. E. Rodgers preached after which the congregation retired to the church annex for a short program, fellowship, and refreshments.—Reported by LEONA HANES

Wins $100 for Branch

OILTON, OKLAHOMA.—Elder Bill Hayden held a series of meetings for ten days, beginning January 5. Four persons were baptized as a result of the missionary endeavor.

Inez Slover of the Oilton group won an essay on "The American Way of Life," sponsored by the Crosley Appliance Company and received $100.00 for the branch. It was deposited in the building fund.—Reported by MARY E. SLOVER

Six Candidates Baptized

BLACK GUM, OKLAHOMA.—The mission is progressing. Church school classes are held each Sunday, and Book of Mormon study is conducted each Thursday night. The women's group meets on Wednesday evening. A special Christmas program was held for the church school, and a basket dinner at the schoolhouse. Brother Schlup baptized six candidates January 6.—Reported by MRS. LILA PEARL SIMMONS

What and How Shall I Tell My Neighbor?

Prepared from notes on a talk given at the Women's Institute, October 10, 1951.

By Evan A. Fry

NO ONE OF US is free from the obligation to tell his neighbor the story of the Restoration. It is one of the obligations assumed at baptism. We are instructed in the Doctrine and Covenants, "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor." No one of us is really in possession of salvation until he has shared it with someone else. No one of us is in full possession of the Restoration story until he has given it away to someone else.

What are some of the principles to be followed in telling or warning a neighbor? These principles are quite simple, but sometimes because of their very simplicity they are overlooked or forgotten.

Start Where Your Neighbor Is

The first principle to be observed in telling your neighbor is Start where your neighbor is. If he is intoxicated, your first job is to get him sober—not to try to preach to him. If he is hungry, your first job is to feed him; he will listen better on a full stomach than on an empty one. If he is half frozen, you must first warm him before you can warn him. If he is in dire and abject poverty, your first task is to do something about his poverty. If your prospect is a teen-ager, you will take one approach. If he is a stanch Christian from some other denomination, you will take a different approach than if he is a confirmed atheist or agnostic. If he is a believer in one of the non-Christian religions, your approach will be conditioned by his beliefs and customs.

If you are wise and alert in trying to warn your neighbor, you will study his present condition in the hope that it may suggest a possible line of approach. If your prospect has recently suffered the loss of a loved one, he will probably be receptive to a friendly explanation of your belief in the hereafter, the resurrection, the glories, reward and punishment, etc., or in other words, eschatology. If the prospect has been married recently, he is ripe for a friendly discussion of the place of religion in the founding of a home. If there has been a recent birth in his family, he will be interested in how to train and provide for that new life. If a son has been drafted into the service, there will be need of comfort, faith, and perhaps a discussion of man's agency and his obligation to defend freedom for himself and others.

If there is serious illness in the family, your prospect will be ready to listen to the beliefs of the church about the laying on of hands and the gifts of healing. If he has heard something about your beliefs and has made inquiry on any specific subject, that of course will be the place to start. If he is prejudiced and hostile, his attitude will condition your approach. If he is dissatisfied with his present religious affiliation, he will be more willing to listen than if he is smugly satisfied. Study the condition of your prospect, and start where he is. If you start ahead of him, you have lost him before you begin, because he will never catch up with you.

Make Friends Before You Make Converts

The second principle to observe in telling the Restoration story to your neighbor is first to make friends with him. No one ever converted an enemy; though many people have converted friends who were once enemies. Study some of the good books on popular psychology to discover the laws and principles of making friends. Show your friendship by doing several favors for your neighbor, without thought of reward. Let him see that you are interested in him as a person, not just as a prospect or a possible statistic on a baptismal record. Let him do a favor or two for you; people have a vested interest in those they put themselves out to serve, and one of the surest ways to make a friend is to let him serve you—to place yourself under obligation to him. Then he feels that he has a part interest in you—and you in him.

Making friends may take a long time. Building confidence may take a long time. Some people thaw out quickly; others take years. Don't excuse yourself into procrastination by saying that it takes a long time to make friends. On the other hand don't try to ram your religion down the throat of a total stranger who is not ready to accept either you or the thing you want to say to him.

Perhaps you will make your approach through the prospect's interest in psychology, or temperance, or agriculture, or science, or astronomy, or literature, or mechanics, or Bible study.

Begin With Something He Believes

If you begin by telling your prospect that he is all wrong and you are all right, then you are all wrong; you have lost your case already. Begin by finding something good about his present beliefs—something which you believe in common with him. Talk first about your common belief in God, in Christ, in the Bible—about the sanctity of marriage, of Sabbathkeeping, of basic morality, or something on which you can pretty much agree. Each denomination has something which it holds as more or less distinctive—some strong point of doctrine. Many times you can find ground for at least a partial agreement even in these distinctive and positive beliefs. Catholics maintain a strong belief in an authoritative priesthood; so do you. Seventh Day Adventists stress Bible prophecy and Sabbath observance; so do you. Other churches believe in life after death; so do you. Other churches place great stress on the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith; so do you—though you go on to stress the importance of works.

I have heard George Njeim say that the best way to approach a Mohammedan is to discuss his belief in Mohammed as a prophet of God, and then turn to the Latter Day Saint belief in modern prophets. A few years ago there came to my home one Sunday afternoon a highly intelligent and well-educated man from India—a Mohammedan—who had dropped in to the morning service at the Stone Church and met somebody who referred him to me. He was intrigued by the fact that we believe in prophets and wanted to hear all about Joseph Smith so that he could compare our belief with his, and our prophet with his.

I am fond of pointing out that although we have many things in common with other peoples, it is the differences which identify. If the police or the FBI were to put out a "WANTED" circular describing Evan Fry, they would not bother to say that he belonged to the genus homo sapiens, or to remark that he had two hands, two feet, two eyes, ten fingers, ten toes, one nose, one mouth and one head. That description could apply to almost any man in the world. They would rather list the things which were different and distinctive about me—the identifying marks not apt to be found on anyone else—the differences that identify. Just so, after discussing the things which our church holds in common with other churches and establishing a tie of common belief, it is then time to proceed to the differences that identify—the things which are peculiar and distinctive about this church. To start with the differences draws a line of division which can never be crossed; but once a commonality of interest is established—once the prospect sees that we belong to the genus homo sapiens, and do not wear hoofs and horns, the differences can be safely mentioned.

Use Language Your Listener Understands

Each denomination has certain cant words and phrases which are habitually used. Sometimes they mean much to those who use them; sometimes they are used so habitually that even to those who use them they have lost most of their meaning. Such trite phraseology, however much it may mean to members of a particular denomination, is apt to mean less than nothing to others. You should therefore be very sure that your language is intelligible to those to whom you are trying to tell the story. Assume that your listener is completely ignorant of such familiar words and phrases as "revelation," "quorum of twelve," "apostles," "stake," "Zion," "celestial glory," "tithing," "financial law," "Book of Mormon," "Doctrine and Covenants," "Inspired Version," "priesthood," "Melchisedec," "Aaronic," "patriarch," "elder," "priest," "teacher," "deacon," "bishop," "seventy," "branch." Likely he will not know what you mean by "holding fast to the rod of iron," or "the Old Jerusalem Gospel," or the "Center Place," or "the Gathering," or the "first principles" of the gospel. Make sure that your listener knows what you are talking about. Assume that he is ignorant, unless you know otherwise.

Be Positive, Not Negative

In the past, too much of our missionary work has been devoted to telling what we do not believe, to disproving others' doctrines, and to disapproving of their beliefs and actions. In our zeal to prove others wrong, we have often alienated them completely and lost forever the chance to prove that we are right, or even to gain a hearing for what we do believe. Our preaching and our personal evangelism should be devoted to explaining and establishing in a kindly, constructive, positive way the things we do believe. If we present these beliefs reasonably, logically, kindly, affirmatively, constructively, a prospect with mentality enough to make a good church member will be able to see for himself wherein his old beliefs are inadequate or wrong. Pointing out his errors will only arouse his antagonism; letting him find them for himself will give him a feeling of achievement which will be an invitation to further learning.

In radio work particularly (where I have had my principal experience) I have found it necessary to stress this principle, first because it is the only reasonable way to preach on the radio, and second, because the code of ethics of the broadcasting industry forbids making an attack on any religion by radio. To illustrate: I could take the negative approach that we do not believe in infant baptism, and state categorically that all who so believed were wrong, apostate, unscriptural, and feeble minded for believing such a patent error—whereupon all who believed in infant baptism would turn the dial to shut me off and write a letter of protest to the radio station. Or, on the other hand, I could state affirmatively and constructively that this church believes baptism is only for people mature enough to make a choice and a covenant. I could state that we believe in baptism by immersion for such and such reasons. I could quote applicable Scripture. If this is done kindly and addressed to people who are receptive because of the application of the principles laid down previously in this talk, the prospect will at least be informed as to what the church believes, rather than what it does not.

The negative approach destroys friendship, closes the door, and alienates even those who are not concerned in the argument, as they observe our ill humor, pugnacity, and unreasonable hard-headedness. This does not mean that we should pussyfoot; it means simply that we should use sound psychological principles when presenting our doctrines, our beliefs about baptism, marriage, tithing, apostasy, or anything else.

Use Illustrations

Many times a good illustration will get a point across better than reams of argument. Ask a person who cannot see the logic of close communion, whether a life-long, dues-paying member of the Loyal Order of Moose could expect to enjoy the privileges and benefits of the Masonic order, and then ask why not. Are not both fraternal organizations? Are not the aims and object of each similar? Are there not the same kind of men in each—citizens of the same republic, creatures of the same Creator? Why should not the members of each fraternal order recognize and share their benefits with the members of every other order?

Ask why any citizen who knows the postal regulations cannot walk into the postmaster's office and take over, especially if there is a long line of people waiting at the window to be served, who ask him so to do—and you have started some thinking about authority. Ask whether the fact that two legs attached to a body couldn't agree on which way to go wouldn't indicate something radically wrong with the body—and apply this illustration to the disagreement between the two hundred fifty-odd denominations which all claim to be the body of Christ. When a man says that he can be just as good without the church as with it, ask him how good a spark plug is without an engine or motor in which it can take its place and perform its function. There are hundreds of good illustrations to be found in Paul's designation of the church as the "body of Christ." Be alert for them; use them. They make your teaching interesting and understandable as no amount of argument can do.

Meeting Indifference

The most common form of indifference is the almost universal belief that one church is as good as another—that all are headed for the same place but by different roads. I like to meet this sort of indifference through a process of reductio ad absurdum, that is, carrying out the logic to an absurd or ridiculous conclusion. If one church is just as good as another, then the philosophy of Father Divine is just as effective in achieving salvation and creating human happiness as any other philosophy.

If you narrow the field by asserting that one Christian religion is just as good as another, you need to be reminded that there are many non-Christian religions which teach good ethics and good morals—many of them with their own peculiar kind of messiah or savior. A little study of world religions will disclose that "saviors" are a dime a dozen in the religious market. If one is as good as another, why believe in Jesus? Why won't some other savior do? If your adherence is merely a matter of social custom or geographical propinquity, don't you have rather a flimsy excuse for being a Christian at all?

If one church is as good as another, why isn't one doctor as good as another? All doctors are devoted to one end—the healing of disease. Yet the man who says that one church is as good as another will choose very carefully between the surgeon, the allopath, the homeopath, the osteopath, the naturopath, and the chiropractor. He even may carefully look up the credentials of the individual prac-

The Little "Extras"

By Marie Gosline

TOO MANY OF US are not inwardly religious. We have never allowed Christ to enter our souls. We have never permitted his law to be seared upon our hearts. Outwardly we are Christians. We go to church. We bear our testimonies. We even pay our tithing. But often we don't do those little "extras" that mark us as Christians and Saints. We fail to feed a hungry person or clothe a neighbor's child. We seem not to remember that "faith without works is dead."

Perhaps we are like Mandy, the colored woman. Our "sinning" may not run the same direction as hers, but in our failure to help others we commit greater sins. Mandy had been caught for the third time stealing chickens. This was too much for her mistress who asked, "Mandy, why is it that you of all people will steal chickens? You go to church every Sunday. On Wednesday evenings you go to prayer service, and the cleaning woman tells me you pray louder and longer than anyone. Why do you steal chickens?"

Mandy saw no connection at all between going to church and stealing chickens, for she replied, "Lan' sakes, Missus, ah wouldn't let a little thing like a chicken come between me and my God."

We may not steal like Mandy. We may not lie. We may not kill. We may not commit adultery. We may remember all the Ten Commandments and still not enter the kingdom of heaven. Only when we remember to love our neighbor as ourselves and to perform some service daily to someone who is not related to us by blood or ties of any kind—a neighbor or someone who is in need—will we as Christians and Reorganized Latter Day Saints be on our way to Zion.

I REMEMBER A neighbor my mother had. This woman, still in her twenties, had three little children. The family lived in a trailer on the acreage where they were building a home. She was building it mostly by herself, for her husband was a marine and could help only on week ends. They had spent most of their money on the land and could not afford to hire labor. The job was up to her. When I was "home" Christmas she was laying the hardwood floors. These were happy days for her, because she could see her dream coming true. Soon she would be able to move her family from the crowded trailer. All of her "building days" had not been such happy ones, however. There was the time when she was shingling the roof and her mother came to visit. Nothing suited the mother. Nothing was quite right. "Who ever heard of a house without a dining room?" was only one of her comments.

When the mother had gone home after three days the little woman came to my mother. "I just can't go on. It seems everything is wrong," she said. "It was all a mistake. We never should have started it." Valiant as she was, the constant haranguing of her mother had worn her down.

That was when she needed a "little extra"—not material assistance but an encouraging word. "Listen to me," said my mother, "your little home will be the prettiest on this old country road. Very few houses have dining rooms nowadays. If ever you feel that you want one—you have plenty of room. You can build one right out off your kitchen. You go on and finish that house. Just think how wonderful it will be to have a home of your own."

"Listen to me," said my mother, "your little home will be the prettiest on this old country road."

That little speech did the trick. It gave the woman courage when she needed it most.

Zion is not something afar off. It is here now, in our hearts! It is a habit we must form—the habit of doing something for others. Zion will be redeemed only by those who love their neighbors. There is no place in Zion for anyone else. Mandy had her good points. At least while she was in church she couldn't be out stealing chickens, but her religion didn't go deep enough. Christ had never entered her heart. But Mandy's sin was only a minor one compared to many of ours—the sins of omission, the sins of not helping others who are in need. May we as Christians and as Reorganized Latter Day Saints let no day pass without remembering the "little extras."

As We Understand It

By Emma Phillips

SOMEONE HAS SAID that great men never die. It has been many years since Abraham Lincoln was president of this nation, but the things he taught us are still useful in daily living.

Maranda Bailey had been teaching grade school for twenty years, and during that time she had always had breakfast at the same little table in her home. And every morning she had looked up at the same picture of Abraham Lincoln that hung on the wall before her.

Generally Maranda had no objection to looking at the picture. She could always visualize her grandfather, a Civil War veteran, standing beneath the painting and boasting of the achievements of President Lincoln. Every year Grandfather had dressed in his faded uniform and, brandishing a scarred sword, recited the Gettysburg Address. As a child, Maranda often wondered how he could make such a short speech last such a long time.

Yes, generally she looked at the painting just as anyone would look at a painting on the wall. But this morning things seemed different, for there was surging within her that attitude that makes one annoyed with the problems of mankind. Yesterday she had quarreled with the principal of the school, and, well, she would likely quarrel with him again today. She was not going to be dominated by the school board entirely. She knew she was on the right side of the argument, and she had dared to speak her convictions. The principal, on the other hand, had tried to reason with her to let the members of the school board have their way. It was a small matter, he had said. It would not affect the children very much.

As Maranda Bailey mused over yesterday's happenings, she again looked up at the picture. Sedate and calm he seemed to look down upon her. The look angered her. She had a sudden desire to hang her breakfast bacon over his ear. Then realizing the high cost of bacon, she lamented the desire. But she made another hasty decision, so hasty that her argument of yesterday was temporarily forgotten. She would get rid of that painting of Lincoln. Twenty years she had looked at it. She was tired of it, and she had a right to be.

She got up suddenly and, stretching to her full height, took the painting from the wall. She laid it face down on the table. As she did so a fingernail ripped the timeworn paper that was pasted on the back of the frame. Still full of resentment, she pulled the rip into a larger hole. It was then she noticed the handwriting on the back of the picture. At first she had to squint to make out the faded, gray scribbling. A smile of satisfaction came to her face as she slowly read: "These are the words of Abraham Lincoln—'Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith, let us, to the end, dare to do our duty as we understand it.'"

Why, thought Maranda, it was her duty to stick up for her convictions—her beliefs. Carefully she hung the painting back on the wall, and prepared to leave for school. As she left her home, she muttered something about "a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition . . ."

How Shall I Tell My Neighbor?

titioner he chooses from these categories before entrusting his life to him. Why be so narrow minded in the field of medicine, where only the physical life is at stake, and so broad minded in the field of religion, where the immortal soul is at stake?

Meeting Special Problems

Sooner or later the one who would tell his neighbor about his beliefs will have need to understand the special or peculiar or distinctive beliefs of other religions, and how to meet such beliefs in his proselyting. Some of the dogmas or theories which will be encountered are "once in grace, always in grace," the seventh-day Sabbath, soul sleepers, predestination, congregationalism or disbelief in any form of central church authority or government, apostolic succession through Peter, transubstantiation, and nonreality of matter. All of these will require special study in order to bring familiarity with the belief itself and with the best methods of meeting it.

What to Tell

As has been pointed out in the preceding paragraphs, what to tell must be largely determined by the character, interests, background, and beliefs of the prospect, and by the point at which you have arrived in your teaching of him. At some time before baptism, he should probably have a fair knowledge of our beliefs about the apostasy and restoration, about continued revelation and prophets, about authority and priesthood, about the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, about God and Christ and the Holy Spirit, about the ordinances of the church, about church organization, tithing, and marriage. He should know something of the church's eschatology, departments, institutions, policies, objectives, etc.

Personal Testimony

Whatever other methods or materials are used in telling the story to your neighbor, there is one thing which must not be overlooked, neglected, or forgotten. That is your own personal testimony of what the church has done for you, what it means to you, and why you know it to be the church of God. In this connection, always remember that your own life is a testimony, whether you utter a word or not—that "what you do speaks so loudly I cannot hear what you say," and that more good prospects have been converted by the saintly lives of their friends and neighbors than by sound logic or flowing oratory.

New Horizons

From W. J. Breshears, President of the Gulf States District:

As we review 1951 we find that definite progress is indicated in the kingdom-building program in the Gulf States District.

Baptisms represent conversions and tend to serve as a spiritual barometer in the local congregations. The active and growing branch keeps the baptismal waters disturbed often. We are pleased to report a substantial increase in baptisms for 1951—our best record since 1948. The report by congregations is as follows:

Alafloa	3	Coldwater	5	Montgomery	4
Atmore	0	Crane	2	Ocean Springs-Biloxi	6
Bay Minette	4	Escatawpa	5	Pascagoula	4
Bayou La Batre	2	Evergreen	2	Pensacola	17
Bellevue	4	Huxford	0	Pensacola Negro Mission	0
Berrydale	15	Janes Mill	2	Pleasant Hill	14
Birmingham	7	Lone Star	0	Robertsdale	0
Brewton	11	Mobile	20	Vanclave	6

Total baptisms, 133

Per cent of gain, 3.7 (Based upon membership of 3,600)

When we consider that we retain probably only 1 out of every 10 baptized, as far as active membership and contribution to the program of the church is concerned, we realize that our record for 1951 could certainly stand improvement. We are proud of our achievement, but we think that we can and should do better. It is necessary that we show a 3 per cent gain in baptisms even to maintain our existence, and a 5 per cent gain to realize growth. We should, therefore, be baptizing from 180 to 185 each year, as we have a total of 3,600 members.

In addition to the baptisms reported, the following were baptized on the last Sunday in December and will not show up in the Department of Statistics report for 1951: Escatawpa, 8; Bayou La Batre, 4; Atmore, 1—total, 13 (grand total, 146).

During 1951 our building program progressed as follows:

Ocean Springs-Biloxi: first unit of new church home now approximately complete. Present investment $2,100. Value of property, including gift of old building by the Escatawpa Branch, approximately $6,500. All labor donated by members of the congregation.

Vanclave: Construction now under way for new building of solid masonry construction. Estimated value approximately $25,000. All labor being donated. Concrete blocks being manufactured on the grounds.

Bayou La Batre: Beautiful new brick veneer house of worship completed and property landscaped. Approximate value $20,000.

Brewton: Property acquired at 414 Bellevue Avenue, valued at approximately $50,000. Will be converted into church home as funds are available. Now being used by the congregation.

We sincerely trust that this is only an indication of more to come and that the district building program will continue until every congregation is adequately housed and educational units are provided.

Ordinations in the district during the year were as follows:

Alafloa, 1 elder; Bay Minette, 1 priest; Bayou La Batre, 1 elder; Bellevue, 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 deacon; Berrydale, 1 priest; Birmingham, 1 deacon; Brewton,

1 elder, 1 priest; Coldwater, 1 priest, 1 teacher; Escatawpa, 1 elder, 1 teacher, 1 deacon; Huxford, 1 priest; Lone Star, 1 elder; Mobile, 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 3 deacons; Ocean Springs-Biloxi, 1 priest; Pensacola, 1 elder, 2 priests, 2 deacons; Vanclave, 1 elder, 2 deacons; total 9 elders, 10 priests, 3 teachers, 10 deacons.

One new branch was organized during the year at Birmingham, Alabama; and one new district mission was set up at the old Crane Church, five miles northwest of Milton, Florida.

District activities during the year were as follows: The Annual Gulf States Reunion conducted at Brewton, Alabama, June 30 to July 8. Two district conferences were conducted during the year, February 17 and 18 at Mobile and July 7 at the reunion. The Annual Woman's Retreat was held at the reunion grounds on Sunday, April 29; a district-wide missionary rally at Pensacola on October 13, 14; and the annual Liahona Youth Camp at the reunion grounds from June 10-17. In addition to this a northern division priesthood and workers conference was provided at McKenzie, Alabama, on December 8 and 9 and monthly priesthood meetings for both the central and southern areas throughout the year.

Two pastors were lost by death during the year. Elder Albert G. Miller, who had been a faithful pastor at Vanclave for a number of years and who had formerly pastored the Mobile and Pensacola Branches, died in February. Elder Oscar Tillman, pastor of the Bayou La Batre Branch, and a pioneer minister in that area, died in August. Their loss is keenly felt, but younger men are now carrying on in a splendid manner the work which they loved so well.

The longer I remain in the Southland the greater becomes my concern for the welfare of this people and for an adequate program of administrative supervision that the South may take her rightful place in the church. If the South has not made progress in the past, it has been because the church has not provided adequate leadership. This is truly a rich field with great potential.

Besides branch work she is also active in the Home Demonstration Club and the P.T.A.

CORRECTION

In the issue of January 28 it was stated that Edward Parker edited the Mission Courier for eight years. It should have read that he was in charge of printing and distributing it, rather than editing it for eight years.

P.S.

* THE WALL

Whenever I feel complaints beginning to take form in my mind, I go into my room and shut the door. Then I take my gripe to the wall. . . . A wall is a wonderful listener. It never interrupts your flow of thought. It does not confuse you with advice. It never repeats what you have said to anyone else, unless you talk too loud and people on the other side can't help hearing you. It doesn't embarrass you the next day by reminding you of what you said yesterday. It may be a dull and unresponsive witness of your tears, wrath, and fears; but a wall is the safest confidant when you are cleansing your spiritual wastebaskets. It has no memory, and it makes no predictions. It never says, "You'll be sorry," nor "I told you so."—Bobbie.

* HELLO THERE!

Jessie Heide of Lamoni, Iowa, is making it her task to edit and distribute for church members who are physically handicapped a journal of cheer and inspiration titled, "Hello There!" Certainly these people have special interests and needs with which this magazine deals sympathetically and understandingly. It is mimeographed and receives contributions from many writers. Those who are interested may write to Sister Heide.

* NAME AND ADDRESS

F. Edward Butterworth, back in this country after his mission in the Society Islands, was asked to fill out a "Biographical Data" sheet for use in our publication. Like many other men in church service, he awaits General Conference and his next appointment with great interest. In the line for his new address he put these significant words: "The Lord only knows."

* REHOBOAM'S TAX POLICY

Are we witnessing a return to the tax policy of Rehoboam, King of Israel?

"And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father hath made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

"And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke; my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

—1 Kings 12: 10-13.

* THE NARROW WAY

While you are seeking the "narrow way" which "leadeth unto life," be careful that you do not fall into a rut.

* HEARD ON THE RADIO

Mr. Roper: "God help you, my dear."
Mrs. Roper: "Of course he'll help us. He helps all kinds of people. That's his profession."—From "The Port of Missing Men," on the Cavalcade of America.

* ADVICE TO THE LOQUACIOUS

Be conservative in utterance. Extravagance exhausts your credit.

THE PRIESTHOOD MANUAL

The priesthood manual was prepared under the direction of Dr. Floyd M. McDowell, director of priesthood education. Greatly enlarged in scope including much new material completely rewritten, this book should prove to be a great help to young ministers as well as to those who have given years of service. A basic item for the library of every member of the priesthood.

Leonard S.
Delano

Leonard S. DELANO joined the administrative staff of Graceland College in 1949 as director of food service. In addition to the many responsibilities connected with the planning, purchasing, preparation, and serving of well-balanced meals, next year he will be teaching a course in consumer economics.

Born in New Bedford, Massachusetts, in 1918, he attended high school in that community, graduating in 1936 as a four-year honor student. He was graduated from Graceland in 1938, and was president of his class. After Graceland, he attended Iowa State College at Ames, from which he received his bachelor of science degree in Industrial Economics in 1941. He was the first man to study foods at both Graceland and Iowa State. His minor studies were in consumer economics, chemistry, bacteriology, and institutional administration.

After graduating from Iowa State, he spent five years in the Army, serving three years in the Pacific theater. His major occupation in the service was directing food service and bakery units. He holds the rank of captain and is still in the reserves.

Leonard received his master's degree in business administration in 1947 from the University of Chicago, his major work being in the field of restaurant administration. He took his general managerial apprenticeship in a large department store in Detroit where he remained for six months. In 1948 and 1949 he worked for a large industrial catering firm in Chicago as an operational manager, and then came to Graceland in the fall of 1949.

Leonard was baptized into the church in 1934. He has worked in Zion's Leagues, church school, and participated in the activities of the church groups at Iowa State College and in Chicago. He is interested in music, golf, tapestries, china, languages, and foods of different nationalities and races. He is a member of the American School Food Service Association and the National Restaurant Association.

TOUR FAR WEST STAKE

Apostles Charles R. Hield and D. T. Williams visited the Far West Stake during the week of January 27 through February 3 to determine the missionary potential of this stake. They report the building of new churches in Maysville and Bedison, with the church at Cameron just having been completed. At Hamilton an old schoolhouse has been purchased and remodeled to fit the needs of the group. All three churches in St. Joseph have been improved over the last year. Brethren Hield and Williams visited every congregation and mission in this stake, speaking each evening at a different place. They were accompanied by Stake Appointees E. E. Jennings, Don Harvey, and Harry Black. Bishop Lewis J. Landsberg and Elder Gerald Gabriel accompanied them on one of the days. On February 3, Brother Williams preached at Cameron, and Brother Hield at Hamilton.

STAKE CONFERENCE HELD

About 500 members of the Center Stake of Zion attended a business meeting February 1 at the Stone Church. Eight recommendations for ordinations were approved, and ninety-eight delegates to General Conference were elected.

Those recommended for ordination were Howard Cook, elder; Tramville Halfhill, priest; George Smith, teacher; Vern E. Hays, teacher; Noel Leon Mason, deacon; Blair Bryant, deacon; William Whenham, deacon; and Frank Vickers, deacon. Kenneth Byrne was recommended and approved as a member of the stake bishopric. The financial report of 1951, and the budget for 1952 were also approved. Following the meeting a birthday reception was held in the annex for President Israel A. Smith.

C. E. HARPE DIES

Charles Edward Harpe, General Church appointee for almost thirty-two years, died at Mt. Ayr, Iowa, January 26. After being honorably released from appointment, Brother Harpe served as pastor of the Saints' Home in Lamoni, Iowa, for over sixteen years. His health forced him to discontinue this service in 1951. Brother Harpe was seventy-six when he died, and is survived by his wife, four children, and two brothers.

COUNCIL OF WOMEN BUSY

Members of the General Council of Women have been active in the past weeks. Sister H. I. Velt addressed the women of the Eden Heights Branch in Independence, and Sister M. A. McConley spoke to the women's department at the Stone Church.

WEEK OF PRAYER ANNOUNCED

Plans have been made for the annual Week of Prayer held in the Center Stake. The dates have been set as March 9-16, and the meetings will again be held in the Auditorium.

Young people in the Center Stake have been informed of the Stake Youth Series which will be held February 25 through March 1. The series will center around the Book of Mormon, and will be held at Stone Church.

DEATHS AT GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Elder E. B. Blett died January 15 and High Priest Walter H. Ryder died January 27. Both of these ministers have a long record of service in the district and they will be greatly missed.

The Descent From the Mountain

Moses went down from the mount unto the people. . . . And the two tables of the testimony were in his hand.—Exodus 19: 14; 32: 15.

IT IS LATE to mention such a thing, but here in the quiet days of a long and eventless February, the mind looks back to Christmas—a week of “wonderful days.”

At our home it was a beautiful and happy experience, and perhaps the reason that it will linger in memory is that we had a worship center as one of the principal features of our observance: a richly decorated Christmas book, opened to the story of the Nativity by Luke; on the antique chest beside it, a big decorated candle, whose soft light is best for the ancient charm of the sacred story; above them on the wall, a framed print of Madonna and Child, in such reverence for truth and beauty as Murillo could impart. We had a Christmas tree, of course. But we said our evening prayers by the Book, in the light of that candle.

From Christmas to New Year's was a week of wonderful days indeed. And when at last the tree was taken down and ceremonially burned in the fireplace, we had a closing prayer in which we thanked God for all our happiness and peace and for the friends and loved ones who had been with us. For us it was a “mountaintop” experience, a time of exaltation.

That was our week of wonderful days.

YOU, TOO, have known some week of wonderful days. It may have been a reunion, a conference, or a retreat. Then when it was over you went home. You could not always live in such a state of spiritual intensity. There was a job waiting for you somewhere, and you had to go back to work. Perhaps it was a routine job in shop or factory, or at an office desk; perhaps washing the clothes and dishes and cleaning up the house.

You can postpone your return to everyday life about so long and not much longer. If you don't go back to work, life just goes to pieces in your hands, and you go to pieces with it.

HAVE YOU ever had a trip to the top of a mountain? If not, and you are physically able, you should do it for the good of your soul. But pick your mountain carefully. The highest and most difficult may not be the one for you. The outlook from the peak is more important than the mountain itself. You will see so little of the mountain, but so much of the world around it.

One summer afternoon we stood in the thin air and chill wind on top of Mount Evans in Colorado. There among the bare boulders mists and clouds brushed our cheeks like cold ghastly fingers. Above fourteen thousand feet the air is almost too thin to fill the lungs and one gasps like an asthmatic. A leather jacket feels good, and bare hands are bitten with cold.

There was a magnificent view in all directions. We counted thirty-seven separate showers going on at once on the plains, the clouds moving across the sky like watering pots, with long curtains of rain sweeping the earth below them. Farms and fields made an intricate pattern, decorated by woods and stream, the dark earth of the summer plowing contrasted against the yellow harvest and the green pastures. Above these, we could look away to vast distances; we were so overwhelmed with the majesty and beauty of creation that our minds could hold no more.

Clouds whirled round our heads, denser by the moment. The wind squeezed them like sponges, got a hatful of raindrops, and whisked them up into snowflakes. The glorious view was obscured as mist enveloped the peak. We went back to the car. Six hundred miles away at home a job was waiting for us, and our vacation was nearly over.

But we carried something away from that mountain peak that we did not have when we came—a vision of beauty, an experience of spiritual exaltation such as Moses might have felt on Sinai.

WHEN MOSES came down the mountain he brought something with him. There were the tables of the testimony in his hand. He was returning to his people because he was needed there. Sinai could never be his home. It was the antechamber of heaven where he saw the throne of God. He was a visitor there, not a resident.

When you are on the mountaintop, there is only one way to go, and that is down. You could live there in the spirit but your body would die. Few are so anxious for the heavenly mansions that they would want to go to them now. No matter how humble the home, no matter how heavy its work, they go back to it.

Descending the mountain is much more dangerous than going up. We are more likely to slip and fall. We need to learn how to go down. And after every great spiritual experience, every week of wonderful days, we must return to reality. Our work in the world awaits us. People need us. God intends for us to go back and take up our lives again. There are perils in this descent too. In going down the mountain, let us not go empty handed. We must, like Moses, bring back some memorial of God to the people we try to serve.

Sanitarium Day

In harmony with the action of the General Conference, the date of Sunday, April 27, 1952, has been set aside as Sanitarium Day. On this day recognition will be given to the work of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, an institution of the General Church maintained to provide professional nursing education for the young women of the church.

We respectfully request each district president and local pastor and others in charge of the 11 o'clock services of that date to give recognition to the work of this institution and to arrange to have a special offering at that time.

Englewood Congregation Makes Progress

We have just received a report from Bishop Harold W. Cackler regarding the fine progress made on the reduction of a loan made by the General Church to the Englewood congregation. We are quoting directly from Brother Cackler's report:

We are attaching hereto a check in the sum of $5,250.00 to apply on the Englewood Houses of Worship Revolving Fund Loan. There was a balance of $8,250.00 due on the loan to be paid off in five and a half years at the rate of $1,500.00 per year. In October of 1951 the pastor, Ted P. Scott, the bishop's agent, Lyle McFarlane, and a good corps of solicitors set about to eliminate the debt. Following their leadership the congregation contributed the attached $5,250.00 during the closing weeks of 1951.

At the Englewood White Gift Service on December 23, there was contributed $3,000.00 in local and General Church funds. The congregation plans to pay off the remaining $2,250.00 of the debt during the fore part of 1952.

We have commended the Englewood congregation for this splendid effort, through which more funds are made available for other branches from the Revolving Fund. We will endeavor to instill the same idea in the minds of the people of some of our other congregations—that is, of not waiting the full ten years to pay off their debt.

We sincerely trust, as Brother Cackler has suggested, that this sort of action will be an incentive to other congregations to do likewise. There are many requests for additional loans that cannot be met, and the Revolving Fund could be used much more broadly if a number of the congregations that are in a position to do as Englewood has done would develop their plans accordingly. We, too, wish to commend the Englewood congregation.

A Day of Prayer and Fasting

The General Conference of 1952 will be in session March 30 to April 6, inclusive, as provided in the action of the Conference of 1950. In harmony with our custom, and in response to our own deep feeling of need, we request that members of the church shall observe Sunday, March 2, as a day of fasting and prayer. Where wise and possible we suggest abstinence from both the morning and noon meals, and ask that specific time shall be spent by individuals and families in meditation and prayer for the church and her needs, the elders and delegates who will meet in Conference, and the business to be transacted. Let the whole church be united in prayer.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From a recent report written to the Presidency by Herbert M. Scott, district president and pastor at Des Moines, we present the following interesting paragraphs:

In December Evangelist William Patterson conducted a series of services for two weeks. We have had deplorable weather, but attendance was good, and twelve baptisms resulted. Thank you for letting him visit us.

The first of the year we inaugurated a program to reclaim 100 of our church members. Our slogan is "100 new for 1952." 100 what? 100 new baptisms, 100 newcomers who were inactive, 100 new Sunday school people, 100 new dollars each week as a result. We have had department meetings and Sunday school meetings, and the branch is 100 per cent behind the program. As a result, we are already enjoying increased attendance and interest in spite of beastly weather. We are stepping up the use of mails and telephones. We appointed Sister Florence Freberg as our lay visiting chairman. She visits each of the nine departments of the women's division of the branch, assigns the names of families to be visited by them—new and old members alike, and the sick. We have subscribed to a weekly League paper, giving names of all newcomers to the city. These people are invited to attend our church. Mrs. Freberg has devised a marvelous nine-point program. It is getting results.

From James B. Welch, Louisville, Kentucky:

On December 12 Apostle Arthur A. Oakman arrived in Louisville and began an eight days' series of services.

We, the members of the Louisville Branch, wish to extend to The Presidency and Brother Farrow our sincere appreciation for making this possible.

Brother Oakman was received cordially, and a growing interest was in evidence each evening as the services progressed, despite the disagreeable weather which lasted almost throughout the series. Near the close one young lady came forward and asked for baptism.

The unique ministry which Brother Oakman gave was invaluable, and we sincerely hope he may be able to return in the not too distant future.

Stewardship

By Apostle D. O. Chesworth

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

THE PROPHET ISAIAH (32: 17) wrote that the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness, and assurance forever. Today we seek peace of mind and soul, often overlooking the truism that through right living—right at-one-ness—we are vouchsafed peace which brings to us quietness and assurance forever. The Saints were pioneers over a century ago in a philosophy of life in which peace was promised through acknowledgment of a partnership with God. This we have called stewardship, again popularizing a term which Jesus used in his ministry upon the earth. Having pioneered with this social program we have cause to rejoice that even today a stronger faith exists among our membership in its ultimate triumph.

Stewardship not New

Stewardship is a unique and important phase of the practices and beliefs of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. While the principles of stewardship are as old as the gospel, true stewardship was reintroduced in this dispensation through the restoration of the gospel message. Stewardship is a partnership of man with God in building His kingdom through sharing the possessions of this world; namely, the blessings of time, of talent, of spiritual, and of material means. So important was this philosophy to Horace Bushnell that he said: "One more revival, only one more, is needed—the revival of Christian Stewardship. When that revival comes the kingdom of God will come in a day."

Strongly Supported by Witnesses

Witnesses of the Restored Church have defined stewardship as follows: "The management of an investment of God in you, the management of the affairs of another—in this case God; the acknowledgment of our Heavenly Father as owner and men as stewards." Stewardship means from every man will be expected according to his capacity and to every man will be given according to his needs and wants based upon conditions. It involves every phase of life. The steward says, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." He considers himself trustee for a portion of it; he holds in trust to the Heavenly Father time, talent, and treasure. Systematically, faithfully, he returns the Lord's portion—traditionally and legally a tenth of the increase—and is accountable for the use of the other nine-tenths. The nonsteward in effect says, "The earth is not the Lord's, nor the fullness thereof; it belongs to me and the rest of the people. I'll pay my share of the running expenses." We have consistently claimed to be an authorized institution of the Lord Jesus and in our presentation of stewardship are not left without witnesses:

1. Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures

a. And Abram gave him [Melchisedec] tithes of all he had taken . . . wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need.—Genesis 14: 20 and 39.

b. And the place of this stone which I [Jacob] have set for a pillar, shall be the place of God's house; and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28: 22.

c. And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock . . . the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

d. Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year . . . the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds and of thy flocks.—Deuteronomy 14: 22, 23.

2. Book of Mormon

a. And again, Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given.—Mosiah 9: 60, 61.

b. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God . . . and they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and their wants.—Mosiah 9: 62, 64.

c. He [Jesus] commanded them [the disciples] that they should write the words which the Father had given unto Malachi, which he should tell unto them. . . . Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Nephi 11: 2, 13.

d. I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants . . . in wisdom and order: for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength.—Mosiah 2: 43, 44.

3. Doctrine and Covenants

a. Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.—42: 9.

b. It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. . . . The elders of the church . . . shall render an account of their stewardship unto the bishop. . . . These things shall be had on record. . . . This shall be an ensample for all the extensive branches of my church, in whatsoever land they shall be established.—72: 1, 4.

c. It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures.—101: 2.

d. And also my servants who are abroad in the earth should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion, for the land of Zion shall be a seat and a place to receive and do all these things.—69: 2.

e. And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws; . . . and whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward, shall enter into the joy of his Lord, and shall inherit eternal life.—51: 4, 5.

Danger in Disobedience

Jesus came asking questions; for example (Luke 16: 2), "How is it I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship." This was pointed to one who had wasted the goods entrusted to him. Here was one man who could not cover his record of neglect and waste. Truly the voice of the Lord pierces the barriers of selfishness and greed in order to reach the human heart. He came teaching stewardship and referred to it on many occasions, enabling his followers to get a clear picture of their privilege and responsibility as recipients of the gifts of God. Today maybe some believe that the word is old fashioned. Have we substituted getting, building, and expanding rather than remembering such words as giving, sharing, and loving? Maybe the term is old fashioned, but so is the idea of the kingdom of God. Let us never forget nor neglect either. In teaching stewardship Christ covers the whole of our accountability. Nothing that we have of personality, powers or possessions is exempt from consideration. When related to property it embraces all the methods of acquiring and distributing wealth—money-making, money giving, moneysaving, and money spending. However, let us remember that stewardship is vastly greater than the money question, for the personality of God is involved in this subject.

We develop our knowledge of this "way of life" as we increasingly understand the attitude of Jesus toward the whole of life, not omitting the mechanics but being deeply concerned with the spirit of stewardship.

Fundamental in Curing Social Wrongs

Stewardship is basic and fundamental in the process of building character, and our hope of social reform is through individual regeneration in this better pattern of society. Discipline is often needed in the achievement of desired goals. We must remember that a steward is cooperative, dependable, and adaptable in community relationships. He strives to be worthy of leadership by developing initiative, resourcefulness, and proficiency. He becomes self-sustaining to the best of his ability, developing competency in his chosen vocation or profession. He accumulates resources to the end that he and others may be provided with an inheritance in harmony with the principles set forth in the revelations from Deity. A steward earns what he can honestly, lives frugally, spends wisely and saves to have a substantial increase from which he pays his tithe; but furthermore, he utilizes the nine-tenths in developing personal security, assisting worthy causes, and supplying himself with some of the extras which are common human wants. As a steward, he will not be guilty of diverting to his exclusive use the potential increase; he will pay gladly the tithe which is due the Lord. Stewardship then is not only good religion, it is good economics, good sociology, and good ethics. It is the hub of the social system instituted by Christ. In this system we have revealed the will of God and provision for the cure of social wrongs. We acknowledge "ability" as a gift from God and "capital" as the means provided to utilize this ability. Great men in every generation fix their goals and drive toward them, refusing to be swerved or enticed by the allurements of easier things. Jesus stated, "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom." Looking back retards anticipated accomplishments and tends to create an attitude of ease. "To be always intending to lead a new life but never to find time to set about it is as if a man should cease eating, drinking, and sleeping from day to day till he is starved and destroyed," wrote Tilton.

Purposes of Stewardship Are Significant

Reorganized Latter Day Saints cannot think of the restoration of the gospel without thinking of the kingdom of God. Neither can they think of the kingdom without stewardship which is an attitude of thinking, living, and doing. Likewise we cannot think of stewardship without tithes, offerings, and the filing of a tithing statement. Stewardship includes ownership, agency, responsibility, and accountability. The following purposes are to be attained:

1. Creation of greater equality
2. Elimination of poverty
3. Cultivation of a sense of sharing
4. Lifting of standards of living for individuals and society
5. Greater appreciation for the good things of the earth and fuller and better use of them

6. Greater individual desire to serve and improve talents

The procedure for every steward is to:

1. File a first financial statement
2. Keep an income and expense record
3. Pay tithes and in addition, offerings if possible
4. Once a year file an annual tithing statement

Many believe in this and testify of the richer life resulting from responding to the divine law. Dr. F. M. Smith in a General Conference sermon said:

The perfected society which will justify the return of the Son of Man to earth is what we catch up in the doctrine of stewardships.

Stewardship comprises complete consecration of every Latter Day Saint, consecration first of spirit that will give the spiritual dynamic of his activity a certain and ever-present direction toward higher goals toward which he has been called, and the consecration of abilities, and activity—speaking of every individual as well as of groups. Consecration of what we possess, our wealth—of all capacities and capabilities—caught up in the one expression, unreserved devotion to the cause of Christ and to the cause of the church . . . is much of the material development which will be required of this people.

Peace in God's Plan

Reader, we invite your more careful consideration of this teaching of the Master of Men. In Palestine he found many pseudo leaders promising people great things, but he expects today to enlist those consecrated by the Holy Spirit. There shall be a development of stewardship by those who desire to obey him, who take his commands seriously, who care more for the salvation of men than for personal gain. It shall be done by those who are aflame with an interest in his message. The Lord ingratiated himself not by external or coercive measures, but by elevating the thoughts of his followers, by contagion of character, by the sure method of control of friendship and affection. He came into a world when many a heart was weary and heavily laden. The stage is being set again for his return. We feel our responsibility is to create and preserve those social interrelationships which must prevail among his people in order to justify his return. We Reorganized Latter Day Saints not only believe in but diligently seek to bring about the constant development of stewardship in the hearts of men. We are certain that ultimate achievement will come by hard work, supplemented by the divine influence. Former President Calvin Coolidge once said that the success made in any walk of life is measured almost exactly by the amount of hard work put into it. Stewardship is a philosophy of life, an attitude toward our Heavenly Father and all the world. It is not something that applies to one's giving of money, or one's use of time, or one's action in some isolated department of life; it includes these and much more. It is not concerned with a portion of something or with a part we owe to God. It considers the meaning and the use of the whole. We don't really get or possess stewardship; it gets and possesses us.

You are invited to consider seriously Jesus' way of life called stewardship. In our educational program we appeal to all ages in our offering of junior, youth, adult, and group stewardship. It is much needed today, but its ultimate triumph awaits a people divinely endowed who will sense that it is God's way of sharing. Find the peace of God in his plan and gain that which was suggested by Isaiah, "quietness and assurance forever."

Saved by Hope

IT IS PROBABLY SAFE to say that few people would accept Christianity and abide its tenets if there were no hope offered of reward. Paul makes a statement to the effect that if our hope is vain, then we are of all people the most miserable. We deny ourselves in so many instances the desires which, were it not for our Christian faith, we would seek to satisfy.

Perhaps the best testimony we have of the sureness of our hope is in the record of history. Christ's teachings are measured by results in the lives of the people who recognize and obey them. Time permits true values to be proved, just as it will expose the false.

The hope of eternity lies in the laws of God which create eternal things. Christ taught eternal law; he lived by eternal law; and his life was restored by eternal laws.

A famous American philosopher once said, "The best proof of immortality is to see a man living it." History records a man named Jesus who lived it. And yet this statement may cause some to conjecture, "How can that be proof when every day, year in and year out, we see both good and bad men die? Where is the proof of immortality?"

Immortality is to be found in the way a person dies. Future events have a way of casting their shadows before them. And in the serenity of hope with which the Christian faces death we have a concrete answer.

Some of us have witnessed such testimony; we have seen men and women face death with calm assurance, because of the Spirit's witness to them that death of the mortal body here is but the first step into a greater life. Indeed, some face it with an eagerness hard to restrain.

Many things of the Spirit are hard to evaluate because we have no concrete way of measuring them; but to the man who walks with God, appreciates his blessings, and reposes his faith in him, the inner testimony of the Spirit is sufficient.

Where we see God at work, we see eternity in existence. Where we see man obeying the laws of God we see the same thing.

A Visit to Ollantaytambo

By Paul M. Hanson

with illustrations from photographs by the author

LONG BEFORE COLUMBUS discovered America, highly developed civilizations flourished in western South America no less than in Mexico and Central America.

One of the most important archaeological fields of South America is the region of Peru and Bolivia. Among the archaeological remains left in this area by pre-Inca peoples are cities, great engineering achieve-greatly superior to what was developed under the Incas. The ability with which the Incas built up and administered their wide-spread empire suggests they must have been of a race of people of superior attainments.

Little or nothing is known of the origin of the Incas. There is a gap of unknown length between the beginning of the Inca period and the pre-Inca remains; of the cultural antecedents of the pre-Inca period nothing is known.

The reason it is often difficult to distinguish pre-Inca from Inca ruins is because the Incas for construction purposes availed themselves of much of what had been left by their remote predecessors and imitated their style. (See illustration 1.)

CUZCO, one time capital of the Inca Empire, in many respects is still a primitive Indian city. The cathedral, built almost entirely of cut stones from the ruin of Sacsahuaman, faces one side of the great square. Around the square are arcades, the site of busy markets and quaint shops. The square is usually a center of much animation. Laden llamas move through the city; and everywhere one sees the Quechua Indians, descendants of the Incas, dressed in colorful clothes. The population appears to be of pure aboriginal ancestry and of mixed Spanish and Indian blood. Cuzco is South America's most picturesque city. Its narrow, irregular streets are roughly paved. Because of its altitude the least exertion on the part of one not acclimated brings weariness. In many of the streets are remains of pre-Inca and Inca stone foundations on which Spanish buildings have been erected. In the magnificent stonework under the Spanish structures the spirit of the Inca Empire seems to be imprisoned.

ments, colossal polygonal blocks of stone perfectly placed together without mortar, temples, pyramids, and extensive cemeteries. What are to be seen probably are few in number in comparison with others of similar character that once existed.

There is much mystery surrounding the ancient peoples of America. "Mystery is the effect of greatness upon minds that are unequal to it, or are insufficiently informed." The element of mystery lies in the mind, not in the facts themselves.

South American archaeology is yet in its infancy. There are hundreds of unanswered questions. Though there are gaps in the knowledge of America's ancient races possessed by scholars, yet by means of archaeology their history can be partly reconstructed.

The Incas emerged from the mists of legend about A. D. 1040 according to some writers; from Cuzco, the capital, their empire spread as their armies conquered nation after nation, until it included all of what is now Peru, Bolivia, most of Ecuador, and part of Colombia, Argentina, and Chile, embracing about one third of the continent. It appears probable that the civilization of the Incas developed from elements of a primitive empire that was destroyed five or six centuries before the founding of the Inca dynasty. Numerous remains at Cuzco and in the Andean highlands establish the existence of a civilization

2. A bridge over the Urubamba River, just below Ollantaytambo

Cuzco has deservedly been classified as the "archaeological capital of South America." From here one can move out and visit numerous important and interesting ancient ruins. It is possible to visit what is generally called the fortress of Ollantaytambo, forty-five miles distant, by auto train, the route being along the valley of the turbulent Urubamba River. On the way one crosses a suspension bridge. The pier in the river is of prehistoric origin. A suspension bridge similar to the present structure, on the same pier, has been in use from prehistoric times. (See illustration 2.)

It may be Ollantaytambo was used both as a fortress and as a sacred place, for among the ruins on the hilltop is an unfinished open temple. (See illustration 3.)

From the village of Ollantaytambo, stone steps lead from the ground up to three well-cut stone terraces and on to the summit of the hill where the principal ruins are. On the summit one's attention is attracted to a row of six huge, polished, reddish granite slabs perfectly fitted together without mortar. A peculiar feature of the construction is the huge blocks joined together by thin slices of the same kind of stone.

These great stones are so shaped and placed that the very weight of the stones, balanced one against another, operates by the constant force of gravity to bind them to each other as though they were but one stone instead of several. By the genius of the builders the six great stones, and the several smaller ones which constitute and fill the joints between them, become in the solidity of their emplacement, as one solid rock. Though the true arch is generally supposed to be unknown in prehistoric Peruvian architecture, the essential principle of the arch, whether flat or curved, is exhibited in the utmost perfection of execution in this splendid antique structure of the Vilcanota. As the two end stones of this magnificent wall are sufficiently braced and anchored, the wall would stand unmoved even if all supports should be removed from underneath the other four. In other words, it would span, as a solid stone beam, a chasm 21.1 feet wide, or serve as a lintel over the doorway of some vast cathedral.¹

6. Sawed stone

(See illustration 4.)

This entablature appears possibly to have been the back wall of a temple.

7. A tired visitor (the author) sitting on one of the "Tired Stones"

The great stones of the standing wall were quarried about six miles distant from a mountainside. (See illustration 5.)

To move these tremendous slabs over the powerful current of the river and carry them to the summit of the rocky promontory several miles up the stream and three hundred feet above it, would tax the resources of modern science.²

It is astounding how the almost unbelievable exploit was performed. By what means were the cyclopean blocks of stone moved such a distance and hoisted into position? According to the Book of Mormon the Nephites possessed not only iron and steel but also "machinery." Evidently the builders of Ollantaytambo, whoever they were, possessed machinery. (See illustration 6.)

Of special interest to me among the ruins was a block of stone which appeared to indicate that the ancient builders possessed knowledge of sawing stone.

Lying on the inclined way between the quarry and the fortress or temple are two huge stones, for some reason abandoned. They are known as the "Tired Stones." The larger one is 20 feet in length, 15 feet wide, and 6 feet 6 inches thick. (See illustration 7.)

Who knows how the great stones were moved from the distant mountain across the river and placed in position on the hilltop? The ruins are so marvelous as to be unique in the history of the world.

It seems almost certain that the six great granite slabs forming the wall, other parts of the ruins, and the "Tired Stones" date from the megalithic age, which suggests they are of pre-Inca origin.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College

EDITOR'S NOTE: The discussion which is here presented by Brother McDowell is timely and of great importance to the whole church. We hope that those who carry the responsibility of transacting business at the next General Conference will keep in mind the content of this article.

By F. M. McDowell
Chairman

—THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

GRACELAND was incorporated June 6, 1895, and reincorporated on April 29, 1944.

The Articles of Incorporation provided that:

This corporation shall be a perpetual succession in a Board of Trustees.

The Articles also set forth the number of trustees, the method of their selection and organization, and their duties and responsibilities, including

The selection of the administrative officers, instructors, agents, assistants and other helpers necessary to the purposes of the organization—and the making of all conveyances, mortgages, assignments, and releases of contracts for purchases, and sale of real estate, construction of buildings—and the power to make and adopt and enforce by-laws and other rules and regulations, not inconsistent with these Articles for their own government and the government of the corporation.

Wisely Planned

Thus with courage, wisdom, and foresight the founders of Graceland provided for her administration and perpetuation, with major responsibilities resting in a Board of Trustees. It is to their everlasting credit that these provisions have stood the test of time and are found to be almost wholly in harmony with the recommendations of those in authority in the administration of higher education today. The passing of a half century has required few changes in the original Articles.

From 1895 to the present time, responsible persons have been elected to membership on the board. These have, with marked devotion and sacrifice, sought to measure up to the legal and moral responsibilities imposed upon them by the Articles, by the church, and by the recurring crises of passing years.

And Graceland Has Prospered

Graceland has been growing up, and this has brought added opportunities and responsibilities for all. The extent and rapidity of her growth will be found surprising to all except those who have been in close touch with the college. Figures are readily available for the twenty-year period ending June 30, 1951. During that period the total enrollment increased from 168 to 615 students; educational costs of faculty, administration and building maintenance from $46,882.00 to $241,171.00; and the total institutional budget from $70,315.00 to $436,518.00, which includes the costs of all educational and auxiliary activities.

After a complete cessation of building operations, due to the depression and war, the last four years have seen the erection of Kelley Hall, the Heating Plant and Service Building, the Student Memorial Center, and Gunsolley Hall (not completed), representing a total investment of $519,347.17.

In addition to the supervision of such major projects as these, the board shares with the faculty and staff responsibility for the welfare of several hundred young people of the church each year. Surely the choosing of members of the board, as terms are ended or vacancies occur, is a matter deserving the most careful and prayerful consideration of each delegate and ex officio member of the General Conference. At the hour the vote is taken, all share alike in the responsibility for the successes and failures of Graceland in the years ahead.

While Problems Multiply

President Emeritus Raymond M. Hughes of Iowa State College writes in his A Manual for Trustees (now in its third edition):

The times are difficult for all education . . . education and particularly wisely administered higher education is more important to our country than ever before. Fifty years ago even our greatest colleges and universities were rather small in size and simple in organization. Today even the small colleges are rather complicated organizations.

The number, variety, and complexity of the problems confronting Graceland today can be appreciated only by those who are informed as to current trends in the educational world and the significance of the terrific impact of these revolutionary years upon higher education in general and upon the small college in particular.

The cost of living has more than doubled since 1939, making adequate compensation for the growing staff increasingly difficult. Building costs have skyrocketed to the point where they are almost prohibitive, even for tax supported state and municipal institutions. How shall Graceland find the ways and means to adequately house those who come to her doors? The constant ominous threat of war, the uncertainty of draft requirements for young men, the competition of rapidly multiplying junior colleges, many of which receive state and municipal support—all such combine to make Graceland's enrollment a most uncertain quantity from year to year. In 1914 when Graceland became a junior college, there were in the United States seventy-four such institutions with a combined enrollment of 2,363. In 1950 there were 648 such institutions with a combined enrollment of 465,815 students.

Does this mean that Graceland may be compelled to become a four-year college or perhaps to offer only the junior and senior years of the standard college course? Other questions constantly arising are: What courses of study should be regularly offered? What courses should be dropped? What new courses should be added? How much emphasis should be given to preprofessional and how much to terminal courses? Cannot some way be found to utilize the facilities of the college during the summer months? How many young people should the college endeavor to serve each year, 400, 500, or 600? These represent but a few of the perplexing and most vital problems confronting the Board of Trustees today. Wisdom and experience are needed to find the right answer.

The Present Membership of the Board

At present writing, Graceland's Board of Trustees consists of the following persons: F. M. McDowell (Independence), chairman, term expires 1952; Lawrence O. Brockway (Ann Arbor, Michigan), vice-chairman, term expires 1954; A. Neal Deaver (Independence), term expires 1954; L. F. P. Curry (Independence), term expires 1952; Mrs. George Mesley (Kansas City, Missouri), term expires 1954; Verne L. Deskin (Lamoni), term expires 1956; Frank L. Parsons (Minneapolis, Minnesota), selected by the Board to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. Charles F. Grab-ske, subject to the approval of the General Conference; if so approved his term of office will expire in 1956.

Thus the conference of 1952 will be asked to appoint successors to F. M. McDowell and L. F. P. Curry, to approve the appointment of Frank L. Parsons and if the proposed Amendment to the Articles of Incorporation prevails, to select two additional members, which will increase the number on the Board from seven to nine.

The Proposed Amendment

The Amendment to the Articles of Incorporation which has been recommended and of which advance notice appeared in the Saints' Herald of December 24, 1951, simply provides for nine instead of seven members on the Board of Trustees. Why this amendment?

Authorities in the field of higher education in general and in the fields of Junior Colleges in particular have recommended nine as the ideal number to constitute a board. Many schools provide a much larger number but experience has proved this practice to have serious limitations. With one exception the present members of the Board of Trustees have only a very limited amount of time to give to the work of the board. They are already overloaded with personal, family, and church activities and responsibilities. They serve without remuneration. There is, therefore, most certainly a limit as to how much they can be asked to do as members of the Board.

As previously stated the problems involved in carrying on the administrative work of Graceland have multiplied. Hundreds of hours should be devoted to the work of the several committees of the board. Much long-time planning will be essential. Frankly and simply, the board needs more help, hence the amendment.

Qualifications for Board Membership

What are some of the criteria which should be kept in mind by delegates and ex officio members of the Conference in selecting members of the board?

1. Availability—Do the proposed members live close enough to headquarters that they may be expected to attend four to six meetings each year without too much expense or sacrifice? Are they so situated vocationally that they can provide a reasonable service to the work of the board without being unfair to their own personal and professional interests?

2. Representation—The membership of the board should broadly represent the clientele of the institution it is designed to serve. This means that the combined experience of the members of the board should be broad enough to enable it to consider and decide upon the problems faced by Graceland in the fields of education, finance, local and general church interests and needs, as well as the areas of life for which the students of Graceland must somehow be fitted.

3. The duties and responsibilities of the board—Certainly anyone nominating and voting upon a candidate for membership on the board should have some appreciation of the nature of the work to be done. Generally, the board of trustees of a college is responsible for:

- a. The determination of general policies for the organization, administration, and operation of the college
- b. Serving as custodian over all properties for which the college holds title
- c. Appointing the executive head (president) of the institution
- d. Approving appointments of instructors and other members of the staff
- e. Approving the annual budget
- f. Authorizing and executing contracts for major capital investments
- g. Acting as a court of final appeal in matters properly referred to it by the administration, faculty, or students
- h. Sharing with the faculty and staff responsibility for the welfare of the students enrolled in the college
- i. Approving of graduates and the granting of degrees

4. Personal qualifications—Among the personal qualifications which should be looked for in candidates for membership on the board are the following:

- a. Real and profound concern for and devotion to the cause of the church
- b. Real and profound concern for and devotion to the cause of education
- c. More than average knowledge of and interest in higher education
- d. Integrity, courage, intelligence, and sacrificial devotion
- e. A full understanding of the duties and responsibilities of the board and competency from the standpoints of experience and wisdom to discharge such duties

"A Great Business—A Great Pleasure—A Great Service"

Certainly there is no place here for careless, uninformed, politically minded persons who are chiefly concerned with personal or class interest and ambitions. Certainly no mere passing whim or the desire to make a friendly gesture toward some person or organization would justify the nomination of and a vote for any candidate. To quote Dr. Hughes again:

This business of being a college trustee can be a great business, a great pleasure, and a great service. It can also be a very small, useless, and perfunctory performance. A shocking percentage of the 17,000 men and women serving as trustees, directors, and members of the boards controlling our American colleges and universities know little of their responsibilities and care little about their institutions, perfunctorily attend board meetings, and approve presidential recommendations without understanding or serious consideration. On the other hand, there is no finer or more valuable group of people in the country than our able, responsible college trustees. And there are no more rewarding services in which to work. The effective trustee renders an unpaid service of which he may well be proud. To be an active, useful, stimulating factor in the life of a great institution; actively to help unite the administration, the trustees, the faculty, the alumni, and the students in a drive toward noble goals in education; to feel that you are a useful factor in developing the best that is in American youth—all this can mean much in the life of a man. No public trust today is more important than the trusteeship of American colleges and universities.

Those attending the coming General Conference should remember that the right to nominate and vote for members of the Graceland Board of Trustees carries with it the responsibility of doing so only with some genuine knowledge and appreciation of the serious and vital interests involved. Democracy as a privilege justly belongs only to those willing to pay its price.

The Good Neighbor Policy at Work

Charles Stanbridge is a streetcar conductor in Vancouver, British Columbia. He has heard the story of the Good Samaritan many times, in many fashions, but the parable was given to him to work out the morning after Halloween. News travels fast, and Charley heard about the calamity that confronted Mr. and Mrs. Bob Ouston and family when their home burned down. The Oustons of Deep Cove had been at a Halloween party for the neighborhood when the police car drove up and the officer informed them that everything they owned had gone up in flames.

Bob Ouston, a World War I veteran and an invalid, had been managing to rear his family on a tiny pension and was happy. But now—what of tomorrow with no home? Bob and his family are members of the Reorganized Church and so is Charley Stanbridge.

When Charley heard the news he began calling friends. At the end of each trip, while the car laid over for a few minutes, he contacted people by telephone. Charley called people in Kitsilano, Hastings, East and North Vancouver, and New Westminster. He phoned a real estate man. This was a situation that called for action, and Charley was acting! The response was amazing. People volunteered clothing, furniture, and food. The Red Cross found out about the program and sent help.

Then the church volunteered to put a house on the back of the church property for the family, and on Charley's day off he collected all the donations. He has been working so that the Oustons can have a new home—a new beginning.

Charley has found that the results of sharing are far reaching. He was heard to say, "I tell you it makes you feel good to do a thing like this. When you're working on a streetcar, you get to thinking that people are nothing but a bunch of old crabs. Then a thing like this happens, and you see how good and kind they can be."—BARBARA PEAVY

Justification Faith and Works

By F. Edward Butterworth

THE CENTRAL THEME and most essential teaching of the early Reformation Movement was "Justification by Faith Alone." It was the German reformer Martin Luther who is said to be the father of this doctrine, and the early reformationists who followed him accepted it as the fundamental, all important undergirding of the Protestant movement. It was, therefore, referred to as "The article of the standing or falling church." Thus being a product of the Reformation Movement, this new doctrine became an outgrowth of the feverous disputations with the Catholic Church.

A Look at the Father of This Doctrine

To fully appreciate the full import of this doctrine, one should first consider the personality behind it. It must be emphasized at the outset that Martin Luther was a great man and an important figure in ecclesiastical history. He alone had the courage to face the dangers of his age in opposing the deep-seated rituals of so-called Christianity. This made him eligible to become the first great reformer, and as such he was likely to be radical, outspoken, and determined in his convictions.

His radical nature was inherent in him by reason of his environment. His father was a miner, and formerly it was the rougher people who followed the mining trade. Luther's temper was conspicuous on many occasions. Chief among these was the rudeness he displayed toward King Henry VIII, for which he later apologized. Again it is said that he directed the princes to "Strike down the devilish opposition with stabbing, striking, and throttling." He justified Philip of Hesse in bigamy, but warned him to keep it secret. Luther said, "I believe I can justify this act before God, though I cannot do it before man." It is also said that he married in a spirit of defiance of the rule of celibacy and in retaliation of the innovation that the clergy remain single, rather than for love. He admitted that he was in a continual spiritual conflict with himself. He writes, "I am constantly in a hand to hand struggle with the Devil."

This is a brief sketch of the father of the doctrine, "Justification by Faith Alone." In his book Luther's Table Talk, page 152, he writes of himself, "I never work better than when I am inspired by anger; when I am angry, I can write, pray, and preach well . . ." It is not surprising, then, that Luther would espouse some radical teachings.

Luther Breaks With the Catholic Church

His first break with the Catholic Church was upon the policy of selling indulgences for sin. Luther's subsequent sermons were somewhat colored by this experience. The selling of indulgences was a "work" of the Catholic religion. Martin Luther rightly opposed these "works" as an innovation in the accepted forms of Christianity. He writes,

A Capuchin says: wear a gray coat and a hood, a rope round thy body, and sandals on thy feet. A Cordelier says: put on a black hood; an ordinary Papist says: do this or that work, hear mass, pray, fast, give alms, etc. But a true Christian says: I am justified and saved only by faith in Christ, without any "works" or merits of my own.—Luther's Table Talk, page 148.

Luther is not condemning the "good works" of the gospel of Christianity, but the mundane works such as the mode of dress, superficial alms-giving, and fasting which had been inculcated by the clergy without divine authority into so-called Christianity. In opposing these innovations, Martin Luther became an extremist, developing his own radical innovation of "faith alone" for salvation, while in reality he was right in opposing these so-called "works" of salvation as essential penances rooted in the law.

AS FURTHER EVIDENCE that the "works" referred to by Luther were the works coupled with penances and satisfactions, we present the contemporary views of the Greek Church on this doctrine. "The Greek church looked upon 'works' as necessary, not only as a means of promoting sanctification, but also as penances and satisfaction. In the Roman Catholic church, the necessity of good works is fully carried out only by the inculcation of penances as satisfactions."

This corresponds with the Pelagian views: "Among the people the Pelagian views prevailed, that man, by merely outward works, had to gain his salvation; and the church became, especially through the traffic of indulgences, a prey to the immoral and insipid worship of ceremonies."

This was the crux of the whole matter. Martin Luther spoke of opposition to the "works" of indulgences, the insipid worship of ceremonies, modes of dress, and the satisfaction of the clergy. He rightly opposed these innovations as having no part in the salvation of the individual. It is reasonable to believe that he did not oppose the "good works" of the gospel, such as faith, repentance, and baptism, as these are doctrines rooted in the Scriptures and expressly denoted as essential principles of salvation. But the Jews did not receive the gospel law. Their premise was that of the Mosaic Law, and it was in this Mosaic Law that the Jews boasted. Thus it is written, "Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God" (Romans 2: 17). Therefore, many of Paul's writings were directed to the Jews in order to show them the necessity of the gospel covenant.

The Two Covenants

Unless one has a clear understanding of the two covenants he cannot possibly understand the true meaning of the controversies between the Jews and the Gentiles. He cannot possibly explain the seeming contradictions in Paul's writings and those of James. In writing about the two covenants, Paul addressed himself to a young Jew by the name of Timothy. He was deeply concerned about the Jewish rejection of Christ and the new gospel covenant. He attempted to impress Timothy with the fact that the gospel law had rendered impotent the works of the old Mosaic Law:

Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling not according to our works [as in the Mosaic Law], but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.—II Timothy 1: 8-10.

It was the gospel that was from the beginning and not the Mosaic Law, for the Mosaic Law was four hundred thirty years after the gospel. Abraham had the gospel preached to him (Romans 4: 16), and the Law of Moses was not yet in existence. "And this I say, that the covenant [gospel] that was confirmed before God in Christ, the law [Mosaic Law], which was four hundred thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect" (Galatians 3: 17-29). The Law of Moses was a schoolmaster law added to the gospel to bring the people to repentance and to accept Christ. When one comprehends this distinction of the two covenants, the meaning of Paul's words is simple and clear and not in conflict with James.

There Are Two Kinds of Faith

Faith is used scripturally as a "fruit" of the spirit and as a "gift" of God. "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith" (Galatians 5: 22). While in Ephesians 2: 8 faith is mentioned as a gift of God, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." The gospel is often referred to as the faith, such as the statement in Colossians 1: 23, "Continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel . . . whereof I Paul am made a minister." The gift of faith then is the gospel which is the power of God unto Salvation, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel . . . by which also ye are saved" (I Corinthians 15: 1, 2). We must be careful to distinguish between the gift of faith, which is the gospel and did not come by any works of righteousness upon our part, and the fruit of faith, which is acquired by good works.

Another distinguishing mark of the gospel as against the Mosaic Law is the fact that in the Mosaic Law there was a sacrifice for sin, while in the gospel law there was repentance for remission of sins.

Christ Taught Justification

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father" (John 14: 12). "Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him. Jesus answered them, Many good works have I showed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?" From the following statement of Jesus we assume that Jesus valued his works even more highly than the testimony of his own faith: "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe me not, believe the works; that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him" (John 10: 37, 38). "Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed me not; the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me. But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep" (John 10: 25, 26). A mark of discipleship is the belief in works, and the works shall bear witness at the day of judgment.

Paul and Justification by Works

Paul recorded the mighty works which were wrought aforetime by faith, which included the framing of the worlds, the subduing of kingdoms, stopping the mouths of lions, quenching the violence of fire, and escaping the edge of the sword. True faith was always accompanied by mighty works. Paul said to Titus, "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine . . . sound in faith . . . In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works" (Titus 2: 1, 2, 7). Again he said, "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers . . . to be ready to every good work" (Titus 3: 1).

Saved by Grace

Webster defines "grace" as "favor" or "mercy"; but it is singular to note that the Scriptures do not use grace and mercy interchangeably. Grace and favor are translated charis, while mercy is translated eleeo in the Greek. Grace, then, would seem to mean favor and not mercy. Those who expect to be saved by the mercy of God will do well to remember that mercy cannot rob justice. If he has not worked the works of righteousness, he has not found favor in the eyes of God and will be condemned, for it is written, "I will give unto every one of you according to your works" (Revelation 2: 23). Again, "And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works" (Revelation 20: 12). "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven" (Matthew 7: 21). I would not relish standing before the judgment seat of God if I were an advocate of "justification by faith alone."

James and Justification

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? . . . Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. . . . But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? . . . For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.—James 2: 14-26, A.V.

Conclusion

Justification is defined as a judicial acquittal, the opposite of condemnation. There should, then, be some kind of witness in this great trial of faith, who will either substantiate or condemn us before the court. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come" (Matthew 24: 14, A.V.).

The Old, Old Path

By Mabel Williams Crayne

IT WAS SUNDAY MORNING and Jessie Allender was getting ready for church, but she doubted that even the peaceful atmosphere of the Lord's house could calm her upset nerves and take away the fears that possessed her.

Her father, age eighty-four, partially blind and hard of hearing, never missed a news broadcast between the hours of nine in the morning and ten-fifteen at night. In between times he listened to Squeakin' Deacon, quiz shows, cowboy lamentations, jazz, and boogie woogie. Sometimes Jessie felt like putting her fingers in her ears and running out of the house.

On this particular morning the nine o'clock news was all bad, and at ten o'clock it was worse. The commentator elaborated on each shocking item as though he would turn the hot iron of despair deeper into every mother's heart. An eye witness to the explosion of the atom bomb explained in detail the horror it produced and his reaction. He said, "It was the largest and most terrifying explosion that has ever been upon the earth, and I felt as though I was standing at the very gateway to Hell."

Other high lights in the news were "Still fighting in Korea"; "Peace negotiations broken off"; "Our American youth, beginning with the age of twelve, ruins body and soul by the use of dope"; "One out of every ten persons in America should see a psychiatrist"; "Long-shoremen strike, tying up our merchant ships with their cargo"; "Telephone workers threaten a strike that will paralyze industry"; "Heavier taxation levied by Congress"; "Drunken drivers and sex offenders on the increase"; "A big squabble in Washington threatens to reveal vital secrets to our enemies."

IT WAS ALL just one big headache to Jessie, and added to that her dearest friend and neighbor, who lived across the street, had her rent doubled so she moved away. She went to the door of her father's room and shouted above the noise of the radio, "Dad, when do you suppose this is all going to end? Where is this world going to, anyway?"

The old man turned the radio down a bit and shouted back, "This world is going straight to Hell."

For a moment Jessie was shocked by this blunt pronouncement of doom, but in thinking it over, it seemed that the whole chaotic condition was summed up in Psalm 55: 15-21:

Let death seize upon them and let them go quick down into hell, for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them. . . . They have put forth their hands against such as be at peace with them, they have broken the Lord's covenant. The words of their mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in their heart. Their words were softer than oil, yet they have drawn swords.

Jessie could find no comfort in the verse following:

Cast thy burdens upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.

Questions crowded into her troubled mind: What about the finest and best of our young men, some from our own congregations, slaughtered because of man's greed for power and wealth? There have been many righteous among the casualties in Korea, including my nephew Lee, who was nurtured in a Christian home and had no desire to kill. Surely these have been moved. What is the answer?

As she walked the three blocks to the church, Jessie tried desperately to shake off the pessimistic gloom that had taken such a firm hold on her for the last few weeks. As she opened the chapel door, the strains of music from the organ seemed to reach out and enfold her in a soothing embrace, shutting out the problems of the world that had so beset her. Her friend, Bertha Austin, was playing a medley of familiar hymns on the organ. Jessie's mind followed the words as she went down the aisle:

*Oh, how praying rests the weary!
Prayer will change the night to day;
So when life gets dark and dreary,
Don't forget to pray.*

She had forgotten to pray and had let the woes of the whole universe weigh down upon her.

Then the organ played another hymn, and she again repeated the words to herself:

*Oh, sometimes the shadows are deep,
And rough seems the path to the goal,
And sorrows, sometimes, how they sweep
Like tempests down over the soul!*

Jessie remembered when Bertha had felt such sorrow and loss that her only comfort had been playing the organ and hearing the Spirit of God speak peace to her soul through the words and music of the hymns. Probably she had never realized the peace and comfort she gave, by the same Spirit, to those who listened.

BROTHER LOUIS OSTERTAG was the speaker that morning, and Jessie noted the calm assurance in his face as he took his place at the pulpit. She wondered if it bespoke such an inward peace that it kept him unafraid even in the present world crisis. She was a bit startled when he asked, "Where are we going? On what road are we traveling?" and then mentioned some of the very things that had so greatly disturbed her. She listened closely as he compared God's pattern to a tapestry composed of all the peoples of the earth, every race and color.

He said, "As early as June, 1831, God revealed himself to the church, saying, 'And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances.'—Doctrine and Covenants 52: 4. That is only one of the safeguards that God has given, else he would not have used the term, 'and again.' Peace is not the absence of war. Peace is our intelligence quickened by the Spirit of God which gives us the assurance that, while we are fighting evil, God is with us and helping us to win.

"It is always interesting to read the extract from the prophecy of Enoch in Doctrine and Covenants 36, and to note the anxiety of Enoch in regard to the future of the earth, for his reactions were very similar to ours. He was afraid, and wondered what the end would be. 'And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah: and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve.'

"Note this thought, 'But my people will I preserve.' The Lord could have used the term 'protect,' but he chose instead the term 'preserve.' There are many preservatives for many things on the market today but God uses only one element, the Holy Spirit. With it we can endure any trial.

"When the Nephites began to disbelieve in the spirit of prophecy and the spirit of revelation, the church began to dwindle, and they saw that they had become weak like unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and the Spirit of the Lord did no more preserve them; yea, it had withdrawn from them, because the Spirit of the Lord doth not dwell in unholy temples.'—Helaman 2: 59.

"Those of us who can testify that this is the church of Jesus Christ know that the Holy Spirit is indeed our Preserver. We are not free of trials nor of tribulations, for God wants a tried people. As human beings we make mistakes so we must pay the price for them. It has always been so and ever will be. That is an immutable law of God. But his chastisement is given in love, as parents chastise their children in love for the children's good.

"The Lord has made promises to us, and the words of Nephi might have been spoken by our present prophet at the last General Conference, they are so pertinent to our day and age. Here is the quotation: 'Blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; and if they endure unto the end, they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb.'—1 Nephi 3: 187, 188.

"We have the promise of the Holy Ghost not only as a preservative, but as a gift—a gift that we receive the day we are confirmed in the church through the laying on of hands. Where are we going? We are going to the place Jesus has prepared for us, but before we get there we pass through thorny places; we walk in the land of the shadow; but like the Psalmist we can say, 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil for thou art with me.'

"We see all manner of evil about us. We are not entirely free from it. Even listening to the radio brings unwanted ideas and thoughts, but we must live with them; and what we cannot cure, we must endure. However, God's preserver is still ours, and this Holy Spirit will lead us into all truth—that is a promise—and the truth will make us free.

"In our trying moments we should read or sing the words of 'The Old, Old Path.' At the end we shall find celestial glory—that is where we are going. Celestial glory can be ours, but we must be willing to pay the price and earn it, knowing that at the end is peace. Experiences are severe in appearances, but the power of God is not less today than it was two thousand years ago. We are his people, and he will preserve us.

"This land of America is a choice land 'above all other lands; wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off' (Ether 1: 32).

"Our journey upon this earth can be made pleasant indeed, and remembering the promise of God who can have fear? Of whom shall we be afraid?"

"Behold, this is a choice land and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.—Ether 1:35."

AFTER THE SERVICE Jessie went to Brother Ostertag and said, "You'll never know how much I needed that sermon. Having to listen day after day to the radio and hearing nothing but crime and destruction everywhere and warnings of a possible atom bomb attack almost any time has made me as scared as I was when I was a child and used to crawl under the bed every time we had a storm with thunder and lightning."

Brother Ostertag smiled, "Stay close to the Lord, Sister Jessie, and he will take away your fears. You might try putting cotton in your ears for awhile to shut out the radio voices so you can hear God's voice instead."

Jessie's face brightened as she answered, "That cotton idea is not bad. I think I'll try it. Thanks a lot."

She was reluctant to go home for fear the spell would be broken and she would lose this wonderful peace that filled her being. She sat down in the back pew and listened to Kay Buller practicing a beautiful solo for the evening service. If only she could remember all the things that Brother Ostertag had said and close her ears to the calamity howlers. If only she could live at home in the same atmosphere she found at church.

Alice Reinhart came by and said, "Are you coming my way, Jessie, or are you waiting for someone?"

"No, I'm not waiting for anyone. I'll walk along home with you. I was just sitting here thinking of what Brother Ostertag said. He helped me to see the whole world as a gigantic pattern that is gradually taking shape into a picture of world conditions which, we are told, will exist before the second coming of Christ. We have to come to church to be reminded that there are a lot of good people in the world trying to live right."

"Well, I made up my mind I was going to be at church on time, this morning," said Alice, "I left my breakfast dishes in the sink and my bed not made. To some folks that would be an unpardonable sin, but I needed to attend church and I can wash the dishes while I'm getting dinner. Did you read that article in the Herald by Brother Elbert Smith? I think it was the June 25 issue."

AN EMBARRASSED FLUSH came over Jessie's face as she answered, "No, I didn't. My subscription ran out the first of the year, and I didn't renew it. I know I should, but I have just been putting it off. My next door neighbor has been giving me her magazines, and I have been reading them in the evenings after the house gets quiet, trying to forget the terrible things I hear during the day. But it doesn't help much, and sometimes I don't go to sleep until almost morning."

"Well, for goodness sakes!" exclaimed Alice. "It's no wonder you can't sleep. I'm going to bring you that Herald, and I want you to read it, especially the article by Brother Elbert. He said: 'For every criminal that makes headlines in the newspaper, or the radio, there are hundreds of law-abiding, industrious, honorable men, quietly at work, who never rate the least mention in the news. The world is not all bad, for there are millions of worthy people who have good homes and go about the work of life paying their taxes, building homes, serving their country, and offering their prayers, and these will not be forgotten by our Heavenly Father.' I keep saying to myself the last words of the article, 'Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget.'"

"I guess I have forgotten a lot of things that I should have remembered," said Jessie. "I think I'll subscribe for the Herald right away and get myself back on the right track. If you are not going to need your old copies you might let me have them for awhile, and I'll try reading them in the evening. I'll put the sleeping pills away and trust God to give me a restful sleep."

"I'll bring them over Wednesday evening for sure," said Alice. "I had a bad spell of worrying not long ago and couldn't see my way because of tears and self-pity but I read a book about leaving all doubts and worries in God's hands and letting him take care of them. One night when I was lying awake worrying about having to move I made a decision. I said, 'Dear Lord, I'm going to stay near the church and let you take care of the freeway.' It was like a miracle, for the next thing I heard was that the city engineers had changed their minds and were not coming down our street. Why don't you trust God and let him take your worries?"

AS ALICE TALKED Jessie could see that she had not given God a chance to help her overcome her fears of the future. Wiping her tear-filled eyes, she said, "I'm going to try, Alice. I am so glad I walked home with you. I can see now that I have been off the road that leads to God, and I'd better get back on it if I want to travel with the Saints toward Zion."

"Here's where I leave you," said Alice, "but don't forget that I am going to stop in on my way to prayer service Wednesday evening. I hope you will be ready to go with me. There is nothing like a good old-fashioned prayer meeting to take you out of this world's troubles and plant your feet on the old, old path. Good-by now."

Jessie was in no hurry to get dinner, as she always served it late on Sundays. She sat down for awhile in her father's old rocker on the porch and gave a sigh of relief, for the sweet influence of the Spirit was still with her. Thinking of her wonderful friends and the influence of church environment, she rocked gently to and fro unconsciously keeping time with the song that ran through her mind:

*Find the old, old path,
'Twill be ever new,
For the Savior walks
All the way with you.*

Question Time

Question:

In checking our branch contributions we find more money has been paid in tithing than in offerings. We know how our branch offerings are spent. How is the tithing spent, and what use is made of it?

Answer:

The General Conference approves a budget which shows just how the money contributed as tithing and as offerings to the General Church is spent. This is printed in the minutes of the General Conference. The one approved by the General Conference of 1950 is to be found in the Saints' Herald of April 17, 1950, page 27.

Question:

In the blessing of infants is it necessary that the elder place his hands upon the infant's head? If this is not necessary, why do we say that this is one of the ordinances making use of the "laying on of hands"?

Ontario

L. W. H.

Answer:

The blessing of children may or may not be done by the actual laying of hands on the infant's head. We know of nothing that requires the exact placement of the hands on the head. Ordinarily the child is taken up in the arms of the officiating elder. When the child is a bit too old for such treatment or when other conditions make it seem unwise to pick the child up the mother generally holds the child and the officiating elder lays his hands upon the child.

This would seem to have been the procedure that Jesus followed as both ways are mentioned. Mark 10: 14 (Inspired Version) states: "And he took them up in his arms, and put his hands upon them, and blessed them." It is quite apparent that Jesus did not do both at the same time. Neither does it say that he put his hands upon their heads. Without question this is a part of the ordinance of the laying on of hands.

Question:

Do we or the Mormons have the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon? If we have it, how much of the original manuscript do we have? If the Mormons have it, how much do they have?

Missouri

D.V.L.

Answer:

This question regarding the possession of the manuscripts comes to our desk regularly. The Reorganized Church possesses the only complete manuscript in existence of the Book of Mormon.

There were two original manuscripts. The one copied by Emma Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others as Joseph Smith, Jr., translated the writings on the Book of Mormon plates by means of the Urim and Thummim. When this work was finished, Oliver Cowdery made another copy from the original before the manuscript was placed in the hands of the printer. This to all practical purposes created two original manuscripts.

One of these originals was placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House. In later years when the Nauvoo House was remodeled by Major Bidamon it was found that the copy placed in the cornerstone was ruined except for a few sheets. These were divided between the two churches, Reorganized and Utah. Those given to the Reorganized Church soon disintegrated. A Utah Church publication A New Witness for Christ in America, by Francis W. Kirkham, gives the number of pages possessed by the Utah Church as twenty, and only a few pages and fragments are decipherable.

The other manuscript was kept by Oliver Cowdery; just before his death he handed it to David Whitmer, who kept it until his death. It was finally turned over by his heirs to the Reorganized Church. This copy is in the handwriting of several scribes indicating that it is at least a portion, approximately two-thirds, of the "original" of the two originals. Portions of it has the printer's marks which indicates that a portion of it was the printer's copy. For safekeeping it is deposited in the vault of one of the large banks of Kansas City. However, a photostat copy for research and study is in the Historian's vault at the Auditorium.

Question:

When Christ comes to set up his kingdom, will it be an organization patterned after his church organization as we have it today?

California

Mrs. N.S.S.

Answer:

It cannot be the same, though there may be similarities. The church is a spiritual organization, performing a spiritual function only; while the kingdom will be a theocracy having both ecclesiastical and civil functions, requiring of necessity a different form of organization. As a civil power it will require many laws, which at present have no relation to the church, and a different set of officers to administer those laws.

In the days of Moses and Samuel both ecclesiastical and civil powers were vested in one man; though at other times they were separated, the judge or king looking after civil affairs and the high priest administering religious affairs. Among the Nephites the arrangement also varied; Nephi and some others held the double authority, and at other times the authority was divided. Alma held both for a time, but finding the double burden too much, he resigned his civil office to another and devoted himself wholly to spiritual work.

We recognize the general principle running through history that while there is a general pattern, organization must needs be adaptable to changing circumstances and conditions. In practice it never has been perfect or complete. The new conditions of the coming kingdom of God, internal and external, will require new laws and new officers, and an organization adapted thereto. It will develop toward perfection until the time that Christ shall reign in person as Lawgiver and Ruler; then it will attain a state of perfection both in organization and administration. Missionary Holds Series

EUGENE, OREGON.—A series of meetings was held at the Springfield-Eugene mission by District Missionary James Kemp. The meetings started November 20 and lasted through Sunday, November 25. We were entertained Saturday evening by a musical program prepared by Brother Kemp and his wife. Slides of Hawaii were shown. The women's department served the refreshments.

The mission held the annual business meeting January 6 under the leadership of Elder Lowell D. Shultz. Officers for the coming year are as follows: pastor, Lowell D. Shultz; church school director, E. N. Barnhart; secretary and treasurer, Guelda Barnhart; music leader, Rena Whittington; women's leader, Guelda Barnhart; dramatic and social leader, Dorothy Moore; Zion's League leader, Rena Whittington; librarian and book steward, Darelene Peacock; publicity agent, Caroline Shultz; historian, Zela Peacock; auditor, Mrs. E. L. Marquis; building committee, Ephraim Barnhart for three years, Rena Whittington for two years, and Guelda Barnhart for one year.—Reported by CAROLINE SHULTZ

Branch Officers Elected

DAVIS CITY, IOWA.—Stake President Robert Farnham was in charge of the branch business meeting where the following officers were elected: Hollis Yarrington, pastor; Roy MacDonald and James Snethen, counselors; Una Scott, secretary; Ida Mae Hill, treasurer and solicitor; Philinda Henderson, auditor; Charles Snethen, librarian; Marjorie Colyer, music director; Gerald Dawson, church school superintendent; Neva Ballantyne, women's leader and Belle Boswell, Zion's League leader.

Funds being collected for a church basement total over $1,600.00. Gifts to the church include light fixture and a painting from the Dale Wilson family, pulpit chairs from Erald Scott, a collection plate from Philinda Henderson, new hymnals from Helen McAllister, and an American flag with a flag stand from the V.F.W. Auxiliary.

The women's department sent boxes of food and clothing to a family in Germany. They sponsored an all-day meeting with a basket dinner and a special Thanksgiving program.

Apostle Charles Hield spoke at the branch in December.

Prayer meeting attendance has increased during the past year from around twelve to around thirty-five.

The Clarence McDaniel family moved to Centerville, Iowa, and the Charles Watt family moved to Davis City.—Reported by IDA MAE HILL

Mission Becomes a Branch

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—On Sunday evening, November 4, 1951, about 150 Saints and friends attended the organization of the new San Leandro Branch.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President L. A. Mac Donald presided. They were assisted by District Bishop E. C. Burdick; Patriarch William Dawson; Bay Area Pastor Alma Andrews; San Leandro Mission Pastor D. C. Holden.

Brother Andrews gave a brief biographical account of the San Leandro Mission which was organized March 24, 1946. About 200 members of East Bay Branch, of which San Leandro Mission is a part, are being officially transferred and will become the charter members of the San Leandro Branch.

Mission officers elected in September were sustained in office. The choir sang the anthem, "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem." The service closed with a blessing and benediction by Patriarch William Dawson.—Reported by NELLIE D. MAC DOUGALL

Women Hold Meeting

BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN.—The department of women held a mass meeting January 24. Mrs. Lappan, county nurse, was the guest speaker. A short film on children's diseases was shown, followed by the business meeting. Refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. Grace Fitzke and Mrs. Esther Snyder.—Reported by NANCY MUNN

New Building Being Erected

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.—The Branch has been working together in all departments to raise finances for the new church. Over $13,000 has been raised for building fund and local expenses during the past year.

Special services included a service of appreciation for the many years of leadership of Elder A. F. Shotwell as pastor. He was presented with a gold wrist watch and a scroll. The Young People sponsored a special Thanksgiving service at which $125.00 was raised for the building fund. The Women's Department has been very faithful in sponsoring many projects which have greatly helped the building fund. The special Christmas service in the junior department and the annual Men's Club Christmas service were interrupted by heavy snows. However, a large contribution came into the Men's Club which has also helped.—Reported by ETHEL HILDRETH

Young People Meet at Odessa

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—One hundred seventy-five leaguers of the stake attended an all-day meeting at Odessa, January 13. The theme for the day was "Choose Ye This Day."

The first meeting was a talent program by a number of Leaguers chosen from the various groups.

Richard Cheville of Lamoni, Iowa, presented "My Trip Abroad" in an interesting and unusual way.

At the morning service Roy Cheville, of the Graceland College faculty, was the speaker. He presented three special choices of Joshua that helped Joshua to become a man of God and gave very real examples of youth making decisions, showing the need of courage, wisdom, and faith in God.

After dinner, which was served by the Odessa women, Roy Cheville led the group singing. At two o'clock a business meeting was held. The following officers were chosen for the year: president, Elbert Heath of Oak Grove; first vice-president, Dwight Heath of Buckner; second vice-president, Margaret Hughes of Atherton; secretary, Marion Baird of Blue Springs; treasurer, Leamon Johnson of Lexington; and councilman at large, Ruth Ann Zulauf of Sedalia.

Merton Loveland, stake League leader, was in charge of the dedication hour. Clair Weldon, stake missionary, gave the opening remarks. The Leaguers responded readily. A number of stake officers, group League leaders, and group pastors were present.—Reported by HARRY J. SIMONS

Missionary Series Held

SALEM, OREGON.—Elder James N. Kemp has just completed a series of missionary services at Salem which were well attended. Four baptisms resulted from the efforts.

Martha Ann Swain, infant daughter of William N. Swain and Mary Lou Swain, was blessed at the morning services of January 27, with elders William C. Swain and George W. Speed officiating. Brother Swain, the spokesman, is the grandfather of the baby. Mary Lou Swain is the former Mary Lou Nunamaker of Temple City, California, daughter of Elder and Mrs. A. L. Nunamaker of that city.

Several men of the branch have been getting together one night of each week, called work night, and have been repairing and making improvements on the building. They have done much to help the appearance and utility of the chapel and church school rooms.—Reported by WILLIAM C. SWAIN

the APOSTASY and the RESTORATION

by JOHN W. RUSHTON

revised by LEONARD J. LEA

This popular tract is once more in print. It has been revised and rewritten by Leonard J. Lea and covers briefly the foretelling of the apostasy in the Scriptures, the identification of Christ's church, the prophecy of the Restoration, and the historical fulfillment of the prophecy.

Making Our Homes Workshops in Christian Living

PART I

FOR OVER THIRTY YEARS Christian churches and leaders of religious thought have been concentrating on the home and the family as the most important basic field and agency for religious education and have analyzed the Christian home and family to see wherein they lack and what can be done about it. Over twenty years ago, when I was writing a quarterly on religion in the home, I used the following quotation from Fiske's The Christian Family:

Every Christian home with growing children should be a school of Christian living. It should be a place where the ideals of Jesus and his way of living are being tested as in a laboratory and practiced as in a school of art. For living is a fine art. The finest of arts can never be learned by instruction only any more than the fine arts of painting and singing can be taught by the lecture method. . . . Lectures about religion or the Bible never made a Christian character. They may have made you want to be a Christian. They may have told all about it and induced you to decide to try it; but the actual experience of growing a Christian character is gained exactly like skill at the piano—by faithful, painstaking, daily practice.

Last week, in a 1951 study course put out by the Methodist Church titled The Family—A Christian's Concern, I found the following:

Just as it is the family which is basically responsible for that rearing which will result in good citizenship, so it is the family also which is primarily charged with the education of the child in the Christian view of life.

These words are being written during the war in Korea, long days with the radio reporting events and names sadly reminiscent of World War II so recently past. Since it appears that again the normal course of life will be interrupted and disturbed, we ask of our homes, can they creatively serve their members, in peace or war, come what may, in such a way that these same members can serve the community and possibly the world?

Obviously this most basic and primitive unit of social life needs to re-examine itself constantly, and especially in times of crisis see whether its regular or extraordinary role can contribute anything to the larger circles of society. Successful co-operative living has to be discovered within the family or it is scarcely discernible elsewhere. Moreover, in a sense, the more disturbed and confused the "outside" world becomes, the more certain is the need for stable grounds of family living.

Steward Hiltner, in the first chapter of this same little book says: "The trouble with the family is that it is like psychology—everyone considers himself an expert. . . . Like the man who believed he had covered the subject of sin by being against it, we tend to think we have covered the family by being for it."

MY SUBJECT should dispell such an illusion. I am asking you to consider your home as a workshop—a plant which is continually manufacturing some type of living. Some product emerges, whether or not it is as purposeful and efficient as it should be. What tools, what resources do we need to use to produce Christian living? And how may we judge our product to determine whether it is the type of Christian living that is developing consistently toward the great Zionitic pattern?

First, last, and all the time the most basically necessary tool for our workshop is love. Without love—though we know all the principles and all the best rules of child psychology, home maintenance, diet, budget, household art, and culture—our efforts become as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal," and as homemakers we are nothing.

In the first weeks of life, the baby soon learns to love people and to accept love in return. In the first years is established a sense of loving trust in a parent who is consistently kind and understanding, and the baby who learns to love people and accept love in return, by being confident that he is loved at home, is grounding his personality and life on the basic principle of emotional maturity. On the other hand the child who feels rejected at home is handicapped from the start since he is unable to reach out warmly to others.

Another important tool is sincerity. The child must feel in parents—and the husband and wife in each other—real down-to-earth sincerity and integrity of life and personality. If parents have not learned to be honest with themselves, a child will not take seriously their expectations of him. A high school girl's mother reproached her for not reading the required poems in an English course saying, "How is it possible you'd make a low mark in poetry when I've always loved it so much!" But the daughter knew her mother never bought books of poetry, and what poetry she had was relegated to the dusty top shelves of the bookcase. Of course she did not take her mother's reprimand seriously. If we are not honest with ourselves and have failed to face reality, our shams, and pretenses are readily detected by our family—and integrity and truth are not well established in our homes.

THEN THERE IS the important subject of self-control in our pattern of family living. This product of our workshop is all bound up with the principle of authority and discipline and developing in the child the capacity for self-direction. Parental authority is absolutely necessary, but it must be based on love and must be recognized by the child as inherently right and fit. Such authority expects only a reasonable and willing obedience. Even a little child should have a certain amount of free agency and be taught very early to make right choices, not coerced. Time should be taken to convince the child that it is the practical thing, the best thing for him to do. Yet he needs to feel the security of a firm, higher wisdom, a kindly helpful protection. Parents should avoid stubbornness on their own part. In fact, I'm sure all experienced mothers would say with me, "Avoid whenever possible

I can see our little two-year-old standing by me in front of the open refrigerator “helping Granma get brefust.” Suddenly one little vise-like fist in a lightning quick grab bears aloft her favorite food. “I get cottage cheese, Granma.”

If I want a battle royal before breakfast, starting the day off wrong and probably resulting in little Alice eating nothing, I could just as quickly snatch it away from her with a “No! No!” But it’s very simple to take a moment longer to say, “That’s right, cottage cheese—but we want that for lunch, not breakfast. Can you put it back in the refrigerator for Granma? Do you remember where it goes?” “Alice put it back for Granma,” she echoes and deposits it just as triumphantly on the same shelf.

It is wonderful to me to observe a young, intelligent mother in action. How automatically she picks up an interesting toy on her way to still the troubled waters, how ingeniously she laughs the little one out of her frustration with a merry little jingle or almost sleight of hand change of the situation. With what patience, ingenuity, and understanding she meets each childish thought and fancy even when some innocent whim wrecks her whole kitchen in one fell swoop.

The first law of discipline is, of course, to make few commands, but when a rule is made take time to see that the child carries it out. The mother who calls Johnny to supper, then becomes so absorbed in finishing her task she lets him go on playing till she has to call him again and again and again is piling up trouble. It usually takes only a few moments to stand by and see that he comes in—or better yet establish the custom of a few minutes warning to let him finish his project, then the final warning with an artful reminder of his favorite food in the offing—“Hurry up, the steak is just done,” or a social enticement, “Father has some interesting news for us tonight.” It’s up to parents to establish the habit of a willing and reasonable obedience by making rules and then seeing them through. The willingness to obey is strengthened by showing a reasonable amount of pleasure and appreciation. Social approval early can become a motivating force in the little child’s life. He soon learns the joy of conforming to another’s ideas if he is rewarded by becoming for an instant the focal point of family appreciation. (This can be overdone. No child should be conditioned to expect a lot of attention whenever he does any little service. Some adults I have seen have retained this childish trait.)

PATIENCE is a wonderfully important tool in our workshop for Christian living. Many of us, especially as we grow a little older, are like the nice old gentleman who said he liked children—but not in the concrete. He had just poured a new sidewalk in front of his home, and the neighborhood children had walked in it.

In the home the child early learns to develop the ability to postpone immediate pleasures for ultimate goals of happiness. He learns to be guided wisely into choosing to deny himself these immediate pleasures without a feeling of self-pity. All normal children naturally ask of life all that life can give, but the fortunate child is the one who learns to seek his desires through careful planning with the underlying assurance that the world (i.e., his parents) will help him eventually to achieve his goals. He learns to plan within the limits of (1) his family’s budget, (2) his age, and (3) his community. The wise mother neither cruelly nor arbitrarily denies his wishes nor indulgently acquiesces to every whim.

This means that each member of the family group feels he is an important person in his own right, that each one has the chance to develop his capacities and to find his needs fulfilled in so far as the family is able. Yet there grows in his life the ability to yield when the greater good of the family as a whole is at stake, the development of what Mildred Cranston, in The Family—A Christian’s Concern, calls the principle of flexibility and alternation, wherein first one and then another individual is served by the family as a whole. It’s the old, old principle of taking turns and giving the other one a fair chance. One of the first words in our littlest granddaughter’s vocabulary was “turn!” This flexibility and alternation is gained only with patience and affection and involves careful planning, tactful explanations, and endless adjustments. A good mother learns to be a good umpire.

As a companion principle each member of the family must feel necessary to the whole. This is particularly true of the two age groups—the grandparent in the household, and the children. If there is a mother or father included in the family circle, all members of the family should avail themselves of the advice and rich experiences this older one is able to pass on. The six- or seven-year period when my father lived in our home was a wonderfully fine experience for all of us. And the elderly person must be allowed to take up the household chores he wants and likes to do and make his contribution to the daily work of the home as far as he is able (dishwashing, errands, gardening, et cetera.)

CHILDREN MUST BE GIVEN household tasks early in life, and parents need to take care to increase the importance and amount of a child’s work to meet his growing development. The time comes when mother should do the uninteresting dishwashing and allow daughter (and son) do the cooking. As soon as the Speak Up!

By Barbara Peavy

I'LL DO ANYTHING—say a prayer, sing in a duet, play the piano—but please don't ask me to give a talk. I just can't give talks." This is not an uncommon remark heard by any Zion's League commission chairman who is planning a program and wants to follow a suggestion that "the same old people not be used to give talks again. Why not get someone who hasn't done anything up front?"

"I just can't give talks. I just can't bear my testimony. I get so scared." Yet in 367 B. C., a young man whose speaking was limited by weak lungs, speech impediments, and a shrill voice wanted to defend himself. He determined to be a speaker. And so it was that Demosthenes recited with pebbles in his mouth, shouted speeches against the tumultuous ocean. He shut himself up in a subterranean room for months with his head shaved, that he might not be tempted to go out, and practiced before a mirror to acquire dignity in his delivery. Demosthenes had a cause, and he was determined to defend it.

What greater cause can challenge young people in the church today to acquire the skill of public speaking, the art of bearing a testimony, than that of the kingdom of God? Speaking, like music and art, may be a special talent. But with training and opportunity, any young person in the church can overcome fear and develop the ability to speak in public. This does not mean that a life well lived will not speak volumes for the power of the gospel, but to combine the two is the ideal method.

HIGH SCHOOLS TODAY in many cities offer courses in public speaking, but in small towns where the young people in a branch may number six or seven this opportunity may not be available. Any group regardless of the size can make certain objectives its goal and organize its efforts. Regardless of the size of the League, every member should have a testimony of the goodness of God, the power of Christ, or the desires of his heart. Jesus said, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." A Zion's League must first offer experiences that will touch the young people who participate. Rich fellowship is the best incentive for a desire to testify.

However, public speaking has been overlooked by many leaders of young people, and in an average size League the same six or seven people make talks week after week. A Zion's League should plan a specific workshop to develop speakers. This could be outlined and organized by the cabinet with the assistance of the pastor, district missionary, or youth leader. One month could be devoted to various types of classwork and lectures; as a climax a speech festival could be held, with every member of the League participating in some event. Drama, oratory, debate, all may be included if the size of the group demands them.

In the branch the need for trained speakers is not only in the priesthood, but also in the membership. Worship talks, church school classes, group meetings, youth retreats, institutes—the field needing public speaking is vast and varied. The personal approach to a nonmember friend is a challenge to any young person to learn the technique of good speaking.

MANY DEVICES employed by the average speaker are unknown to those who consistently refuse to participate in speech activities. The few simple rules are covered in any high school or college speech text and are applicable to everyday usage. There are ways to begin a speech that will capture the attention of the congregation. There are methods of speech organization that will hold the audience. It is possible to be an interesting speaker by learning a few, simple methods.

A pastor tells that when he preached his first few sermons, he fainted several times before he was through speaking. "I was afraid that I was going to be an arm-chair speaker at the rate I was going," he says. Yet today his delivery is dynamic. He is able to inspire old and young by a simple, straightforward approach to righteousness. One of the qualities of speakers in the church is the personal manner in delivery. The shouting, screaming, Billy Sunday-type speaker is as distasteful as the self-righteous, critical, "holier-than-thou" speaker.

One of the first rules of good speaking is to be concerned about people in the audience—their needs, their interest, their backgrounds. One of the first commandments of kingdom-building is to be humble and full of love. The two are parallel. "Love thy neighbor" is always basic in good speaking. A little girl in a small branch once said, "I like to hear Brother John talk, Mommy, because I can tell he loves me."

The eloquence of Lincoln's language lay in its simplicity. The straightforward message of the kingdom was the language of the Master. Verbosity, insincerity, and clichés have no part in the vocabulary of a missionary-minded Zion's Leaguer.

PLANS FOR A public speech are not difficult to make. Leaguers should remember several points in preparation:

1. Learn the simple rules of good delivery.
2. Be sure of the subject by study and prayer.
3. Be sold on the topic by consecrated activity.
4. Overcome fear by willing participation.
5. Remember to combine any ability with the highest quality life.

There are many other rules, ideas, and suggestions which will grow out of a group experience. Beginning a project which involves the four commissions in Zion's League—worship, study, service, and recreation—will bring new interest in the activities of the League. Plan a speech clinic designed to create Zion's thinking in terms of missionary and personal development. Work with God as a partner, and then accept the challenge Jesus gave, "Go ye therefore. . . ." Speak with power, and speak right up!

■ The Graceland Alumni Association has presented the college with the flags of thirteen nations and the United Nations which will be on display in the near future. These flags represent the countries from which Graceland students have come—the United States, Great Britain, Canada, France, Alaska, Netherlands, Mexico, Australia, New Zealand, Syria, Palestine, Japan, and Hawaii. The college expects to keep adding more flags as other countries send students to Graceland.

■ Graceland students elected six freshmen to the student council in the last week of the first semester. The six are Howard Braby of Mason City, Iowa; Phyllis Hansen of Conception Junction, Missouri; Lee Ourth of Nauvoo, Illinois; Howard Sheehy of Greeley, Colorado; Viola Velt of Independence, Missouri; and Jack Waddell of East Moline, Illinois. They were elected from a field of thirteen candidates chosen from the entire freshman class and will replace six sophomore members who were elected at this time last year.

The council attempts to co-ordinate all areas of campus life and is concerned with easing and solving its problems.

■ Mrs. Dewey Bolen will join the Graceland faculty, teaching two classes in social problems, during Ray Zinser's absence in the Navy. She is a Graceland graduate, has attended Iowa State and Simpson College, and has been teaching high school for seven years.

■ Dr. Ruray Sibley, of the Kansas University Department of Lectures and Concert Artists, spoke to the student body on "The Universe of Palomar." Dr. Sibley has interpreted astronomy to general audiences for eighteen years and illustrated his lecture with a motion picture.

■ Stewardship is the theme of current religious activities on the Graceland campus. The first fellowship after the return from Christmas recess was on the theme, "I Look Forward, I Choose, I Pledge." The following Sunday students met in a Communion of Stewards, and on Sunday, January 20, Bishop G. L. DeLapp spoke to the campus congregation on "The Church's Stewardship Message for 1952."

■ The motion picture, Green Pastures, was the third in the series of outstanding films being shown on the campus. Based on the well-known play of the same name, it presents the stories of the Bible as told by a Negro preacher to a children's Sunday school class and shows the constant disappointment of "De Lawd" over the inability of his people on earth to behave themselves.

■ For one night the Memorial Student Center became Le Chateau de la Neige (The Castle of the Snow), as Graceland students attended one of the gala events on their social schedule. The entire student body was invited to attend a "magnificent ski resort in the Swiss Alps" for dinner and entertainment. Le Chateau was one of the major functions of the school year and one of the activities planned by the Social Activities Planning Committee.

■ Four more freshmen were recently chosen to serve on the Student Activities Planning Committee. They are Florine Cline of Orinda, California; Scott Fisher of Boston, Massachusetts; Bill Walden of Lamoni, Iowa; and Shirley Vallier of Council Bluffs, Iowa. These four will hold office until the end of next year. The committee works with the Director of Social Activities, planning all-school parties and half-time entertainment at varsity games, and is available to help small groups plan parties and entertainment.

■ Reverend John Tunstal, minister of the Burns Methodist Church in Des Moines, Iowa, addressed the Graceland student body on "Human Ties in Race Relationships" on February 7. The preceding day he spoke to the communication classes on the subject, "What Can I Do as a Student to Strengthen Race Relationships?" Reverend Tunstal has been an instructor of Races and Minorities at Penn College in Iowa and is well qualified to speak on race relationships through his own experience as a member of the Negro minority.

interest and ability appears, the parent should advance these chores proportionate to the child's growing ability. This will save time in the end, as well as advancing the production of Christian type of life and character in the child. The boy may advance from lawn mowing to house painting earlier than one might think. Mildred Cranston says this rotation of jobs is as important to co-operative living as the rotation of crops is to good farming.

Opportunities for new experiences should be planned.

- a. A child should be allowed to take his own bath and attend to other personal needs early in life.
- b. Parents should inspect to be sure a child is not forming slipshod habits. He may need a little unobtrusive help till his powers become equal to the task. He should never be discouraged by his inability to do a task too great for his powers.
- c. Children should not be held back. They can make surprising advancement if they are allowed to try.

Routine and order are necessary in the home, but they are good only in so far as they serve the family. Don't become a slave to your schedule or sacrifice the comforts and needs of your family. Don't be overrighteous and stubborn about sticking to a certain system or policy if it does not work out well in the home. Change to another scheme—consulting, of course, all people concerned.

A sense of family loyalty and solidarity can be built and maintained by participation in the family council at even an early age. Discuss together and settle such practical problems as work loads for each, budget problems, the purchasing of new home equipment, use of the car, radio, television, etc. Emphasize thus with the children that the home (yard, house, furniture, car, radio, etc.) belong to all the family. Give him a knowledge that right of ownership and responsibility for maintenance belong together and that he is involved in both. Make the aged member of the family equally one of the group—or if this adjustment is too hard for him to make let him have at least one room that is entirely his domain.

In this mutual community of family interests the child learns the truth that the strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak—that babies and old people come first.

 SLEEPING SICKNESS

Every preacher has noted—sometimes with amusement, sometimes with alarm—the development in his congregation, about two-thirds of the way through his sermon, of signs of acute encephalitis lethargica (commonly known as sleeping sickness) a pernicious somnolence that attacks most listeners sometime or other. Bright lights, warmth, comfort, a feeling of security, and common boredom are contributing factors.

Somniloquy—a dictionary term meaning "talking during sleep"—is the word for such an experience. Only in this case the preacher is talking during other people's sleep.

So many preachers suffer from sermonophilia—they never know when to quit. And so many congregations suffer from sermonophobia—they never know when to wake up and listen.

The composer Haydn is said to have found the same tendency in his musical audiences. Tradition says that he composed the "Surprise Symphony" especially to play a trick on them and wake them up. One day he was playing this piece for a court audience. Wine, food, and tight costumes were putting them to sleep. The melody was very soothing, and the orchestra was playing along, tootlootlootl. Suddenly Haydn raised his baton and brought it down sharply; the musicians hit everything in sight with all their strength—tympans, drums, and whatnot. The ear-shattering noise frightened the sleepers and made them wake up. Then, quite impishly, he returned to the tootlootlootl of his peaceful melody.

Perhaps preachers could employ similar tactics. I, for one, would like something I could pound that would sound like the roll of thunder or the smashing of furniture. In the old Puritan churches there were beadies armed with goads to waken sleepy worshipers. Alas, there is nothing like that now. All a preacher can do is say, "Quick, Watson, the needle!" and bring out the funny story he has been saving.

Maybe it is the preacher's fault. There should be a beadle to poke him. We heard of a lady who complained about her minister—"He keeps me awake!" Does one have an inalienable right to go to sleep in church? There could be a great ecumenical council to settle this question.

Well, how about you—do you suffer from Sunday somnolence? Are you a sermon-napper?

 FOR THE WOMEN

We were condensing a manuscript for publication the other day, and since this story was being "edited out" we thought we could salvage it here. Brother Ward A. Hougas collected it:

"I heard this story . . . one man asked another, 'Do you believe in clubs for women?' He replied, 'Well, only in cases of extreme disobedience!'"

 TEMPERANCE ARGUMENT

The beer barons will never use this verse in their commercials:

Don't Drink Beer

It gives Blatz on the landscape,
And Schlitz in the clothes—
No Hamm for your sandwich—
But a very red nose!

News and Notes

RETURNS FROM HAWAII

President W. Wallace Smith has sent word from Hawaii that according to his plans he was sailing from Honolulu February 14, and would arrive in Los Angeles February 19. He will be accompanied on the boat trip by Brother and Sister Swain, Sister Henricks, and Sister Poole of Australia; Brother and Sister Earl Moore of Fort Worth, Texas; and Brother and Sister Russell Archibald of St. Louis, Missouri. The Moores and the Archibalds were in Hawaii on a winter vacation.

ATTENDS UNESCO

From January 27-31, Apostle Maurice L. Draper attended the third national conference of the United States National Commission for the UNESCO in New York. While in that vicinity he visited the New York, Norwalk, Providence, Brockton, and Boston Branches. Brother Draper spent the next week in north-west Ohio, visiting Lima, Toledo, Oak Harbor, and Sylvania, and giving attention to the building projects in these places.

On February 10, he was in Independence and taught the Y.K.T. class on Book of Mormon research evidences, preached a Boy Scout sermon at the morning service at West College, participated in a service of blessing of babies in the afternoon, reported to the West College Zion's League on UNESCO, and delivered an illustrated lecture at Stone Church in the evening.

IN AMES, IOWA

Apostle Charles R. Hield met with the college students at Iowa State College at Ames, Iowa, February 10. He showed pictures on the archaeology of the Book of Mormon, conducted a prayer service, preached the morning sermon, and spoke to the Latin-American students in the afternoon. Brother Hield reports that the group at Ames is one of the most active with the Spanish-speaking project. Brother Norman Nelson is their leader.

RECOGNITION GIVEN BRADYS

Brother and Sister Dale Brady of the Liberty, Missouri, congregation were featured recently in an article in the "Kansas City Star." In the October 17, 1949, "Herald" is an "Interesting Personalities" sketch on them by Sadi Moon Nagel. Brother and Sister Brady operate a nursery home, and at the present time have thirty-four children in their care. Many of the children are assigned to them by the Clay County circuit court. Others are left by their parents. They are very active in their congregation and take all the children to church each Sunday.

AWARDED MEDAL

Richard Byrne, a church member who is a senior at William Chrisman High School in Independence, was awarded one of the Robert R. McCormick "Chicago Tribune" R.O.T.C. awards. The awards are presented on the individual merits in leadership, citizenship, character, scholastic record, and R.O.T.C. achievement.

STEWARDSHIP CONSECRATION DAY

Sunday, February 3, was observed as Stewardship Consecration Day in the Center Stake. Financial Statements, tithes, and offerings were given special emphasis at the Communion service. President Israel A. Smith was the morning speaker at Walnut Park, and Stake President Charles V. Graham was the speaker at Stone Church.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Charlotte Gould

CHARLOTTE GOULD joined the Graceland College faculty in 1947 and is a teacher of secretarial science as well as being a wife, mother, and an active church worker. Her husband, Dr. William S. Gould, is director of public relations.

Charlotte was born in Colorado and was graduated from high school in Colorado Springs in 1931. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Darnell, then moved to Denver where she worked for a year before coming to Graceland. At Graceland she was a member of the Crescents, Lambda Delta Sigma, and the Graceland Tower staff.

After finishing at Graceland in 1934 Charlotte worked at the Herald Publishing House and at the Blue Valley Lamp Company in Kansas City until her marriage in June, 1935, to William Gould. They then moved to Iowa City where he attended the university working toward his master's degree, and she worked in the College of Medicine. After Bill received his master's degree they moved to Pella, Iowa, where he taught at Central College until he joined the Graceland faculty in September, 1939. While living in Pella and Lamoni, Charlotte spent a great deal of time writing junior quarterlies and study guides for leadership training. After coming to Lamoni she taught one semester at the high school and English at the college for two semesters while Tess Morgan was ill. When Bertha Deskin died in January, 1947, Charlotte again filled in, teaching secretarial science until the college could find a permanent faculty member. During the summer of 1947 she enrolled at the Columbia University Teachers' College in New York City, from which she received her bachelor of science degree in business education in August, 1950.

While at Columbia University she was elected to Pi Lambda Theta, an honorary educational society. She is a member of the United Business Educators Association.

Charlotte takes an active part in community and church activities as well as campus life. She has been superintendent of the junior department in Lamoni Branch, supervisor of the children's department, and at the present time is church school director. She also sings in the choir and participates in dramatic productions as well as other activities. The Goulds have one son, Eddie, 13.

The Nineteen Fifty-two Conference

GENERAL CONFERENCE is just over the horizon. Visitors from Australia are already on their way; others from Europe will be starting very shortly. Still others, from every corner of the United States and Canada, are planning to be with us here in the Center Place for this most important church gathering of the biennium. Every indication seems to prophesy a happy and enlightening and stimulating meeting.

Planning has been going forward for several months. The heavy burden which the members of the Presidency used to carry in this connection has been considerably lightened by reason of the able service given by Elder Donald V. Lents, Assistant to the First Presidency. Similarly, the pressure on the Presiding Bishopric has been considerably reduced by reason of the able assistance of Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman. The remaining burden has been heavy enough, but all who have labored and will yet labor will be amply repaid, we feel sure, when the Conference shall actually convene and we shall sit together in the great Auditorium under the benign influence and enlightening power of the Spirit of God.

It is anticipated that the three members of the First Presidency, Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, the twelve members of the Apostolic Quorum, the three members of the Presiding Bishopric, the six Presidents of Seventy, and the three members of the Presidency of the Quorum of High Priests will all be present. Subject only to the vacancy created by the recent ordination of Elder Harold I. Velt to the Evangelical Order, all the presiding officers of the various quorums and councils of the church will be fully represented. This is somewhat unusual, since General Conference time frequently finds some member of the Twelve in missions abroad.

The body of ex officios will be somewhat larger than usual, and we who are older in the service will be glad to welcome both those members of the Melchisedec priesthood who have carried the burden for many years and those younger men who are now coming into places of responsibility.

The number of delegates also will be larger than at any prior time. A net increase of nearly six thousand church members since the last General Conference, scattered among the various stakes and districts, will make an increase of fifty in the number of delegates participating.

The church is making important strides forward. This is due to the blessing of our Heavenly Father and the loyal support of many thousands of good men and women and young people. Yet, despite the success which has blessed our efforts, we know that we—the human partners in the Great Enterprise—have failed our Master on many occasions. While we shall meet in the spirit of joyous fellowship, we shall therefore meet with sober realization that now, as always, we have deep and urgent need for divine guidance and blessing. To the end that we may be so blessed, may we come together in the spirit of prayer and of fasting, with deep concern for the Cause committed to our care and with a determination to participate as wisely and as devotedly as we possibly can.

We extend our personal and official greetings to the ex officios and delegates who will share in the General Conference activities. And we send similar greetings to those who cannot meet with us but who, we trust, will sustain the Conference with their faith and confidence and prayers. The First Presidency

General Conference Program, Sunday, March 30

WE EARNESTLY SOLICIT the co-operation of the Saints of Independence and the stakes, and of Conference visitors generally, in the Conference activities for Sunday, March 30. This is particularly necessary because we have again found it advisable to plan for two Communion services in the Auditorium.

Saints from Independence and vicinity are urged to attend the earlier Communion service which will begin at 7:45 a.m. This service should conclude about 9:45 a.m., and a preaching service will be held at 10:15 a.m. at the Stone Church. Elder Paul M. Hanson, President of the Council of Twelve, will preach.

This arrangement not only will give assistance to Conference visitors who are driving in on Sunday morning and want to have opportunity to attend the later Communion service, but also will permit local Saints who have guests to get home a little earlier to prepare the noon meal.

A general prayer service will be held at the Stone Church from 8:30 to 9:45 a.m. and will be planned with visiting Saints in mind. The president and bishop of the Center Stake of Zion will preside.

The second Communion service will commence at 10:00 a.m. The program of the two Communion services will be identical.

There will be a memorial service in the Stone Church at 2:00 p.m. with Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith in charge.

President Israel A. Smith will deliver his Conference message at 2:45 p.m.

A piano festival will be presented in Memorial Hall at 5:00 p.m.

There will be congregational singing at 7:30 p.m. at the Auditorium as a prelude to a sermon by Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp.

Death of King George the Sixth

The people of the United States share with the rest of the world their grief in learning last Wednesday (February 6) that King George of England had died that day in his sleep.

The late King was the son of another King George (the Fifth) who died in 1936, a sovereign who commanded the respect of the entire world for his dignity and kingly demeanor. An ambassador for the United States to the Court of St. James in wartime was quoted as saying that he was not much for kings; but if he were to have a king, "Give me George." And George the Sixth was a "worthy son of a noble sire."

Accompanied by his wife the King had six days earlier visited the London airport to bid good-by to their daughter, Princess Elizabeth, and her husband, Phillip, as they were about to take a plane to Africa for a planned visit abroad of some months. The King's face was drawn and haggard, yet it was the countenance of a man of fortitude and extreme patience. He was a good man, a kindly man, of whom the British Empire could well be proud.

In these days of domestic instability, when disruption of home life threatens the foundations of national existence in the United States as elsewhere, what an example of Christian marriage and domestic happiness the life of King George and Queen Elizabeth has been! It is a story that will be recalled with profit by the English people.

Prime Minister Winston Churchill in a world radio broadcast spoke of the King as a man who had "walked knowingly and unafraid in the shadow of death the last few months," and we believe the following tribute by Mr. Churchill was well deserved by the deceased ruler:

The King was greatly loved by all his peoples. He was respected as a man and as a prince far beyond the many realms over which he reigned. The simple dignity of his life, his manly virtues, his sense of duty—alike as ruler and servant of the vast spheres and communities for which he bore responsibility—his gay charm and happy nature, his example as husband and father in his own family circle, his courage in war or peace—all these were aspects of his character which won a glint of admiration, now here, now there, from innumerable eyes whose gaze fell upon the throne.

President Edwards, long since an American citizen but born in England and thus inheriting an Englishman's respect and reverence for the royal family, perhaps feels the death of King George more keenly than I, although to me, a traditioned American-born citizen, his untimely passing comes almost as a personal loss, such is my regard for the country that gave us so much by way of law and government and history.

"The King is dead—long live the Queen." Such is the formula of government in the Empire, and so begins another reign under a queen, Elizabeth the Second. Having seen her recently in Washington, I can attest that she is truly a beautiful and gracious woman.

We recognize in this, as in many incidents in the lives of kings and queens of Great Britain, that the royal family, symbol of sovereignty in that Empire, is once more a solvent of differences and the tie that binds even closer together the millions of Queen Elizabeth's subjects.

Apostolic Appointments

It is usually advisable to determine the assignments of the members of the Council of Twelve at General Conference time, and we follow this course so far as circumstances permit. The pressure of circumstances and the best interests of the church in the areas concerned have required us to take action prior to Conference with regard to two of the Apostles. We therefore wish to announce that Elder A. A. Oakman has been assigned to the European field and will succeed Elder D. Blair Jensen in charge of that field at General Conference time. Brother Oakman will be assigned additional responsibilities later, but will spend much time in Europe as his calling and the work in Europe make advisable.

Elder Reed M. Holmes will be continued as Director of the Department of Religious Education for the next inter-Conference period.

Further apostolic assignments will be announced, as is the usual practice, at General Conference time.

Attention, Teachers and Deacons

All teachers and deacons who plan to assist in the General Conference Communion Service are asked to be at the Auditorium, Thursday, March 27, at 7:30 p.m. They will report to Brother J. E. Campbell who will be in charge of their work and will direct the rehearsal for the Communion service. The teachers and deacons will prepare the emblems Saturday, March 29, and will close with a brief prayer and fellowship service in the Auditorium Choir Room at 7:30 p.m. All teachers and deacons who attend the Conference are asked to register at the deacons' booth in the main foyer of the Auditorium. Those arriving in Independence after the rehearsal, who wish to participate in the service, are asked to leave their names and local addresses at the deacons' booth in the main foyer of the Auditorium.

Notice to Church Educators

The First Presidency would like to meet all in the teaching profession who are to be in attendance at the forthcoming General Conference. This meeting will be held Wednesday, April 2, at 1:00 p.m. in the Auditorium choir room (215).

Attention, Seventies and Missionary Elders

All pre-Conference and Conference meetings for seventies, including those in which the appointee missionary elders are invited to join, will be held at 9:00 a.m., March 27 through April 5, in Room 514 at the Auditorium.

E. Y. HUNKER

Attention, Priests and Elders

The priests and elders who will assist with the Communion service at General Conference will rehearse at the Auditorium, Friday, March 28, at 7:30 p.m. Those who are planning to arrive in Independence after the rehearsal, who wish to participate in the service, are asked to write Brother William Worth, Jr., 1440 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri, making reservations for a place to serve. This contact should be made immediately. Upon arrival in Independence they should phone IN 0814 for verification.

General Conference Business

A Statement by the First Presidency

THE BASIC REASON for holding General Conferences is to transact business of church-wide importance. The General Conference is the highest legislative body in the church. It is therefore important that in the business sessions of the General Conferences there shall be the freest and best-informed discussion possible. Obviously, not every delegate or ex officio can take all the time that he may desire, for this would restrict the rights of the other members of the Conference. So far as time permits and the necessities of good legislation require, we encourage participation.

It has been suggested many times that one of the prerequisites of intelligent voting is that delegates and ex officios shall know before they leave home what are the principal matters to be considered while the Conference is in session. So far as this can be achieved, we agree this is very desirable; but it cannot be fully achieved. A great deal of the Conference business arises out of Council action, which is as it should be, and much of this action cannot be had long before Conference since it is based on reports which are not available until well after the close of the business of the preceding year. Then, too, it is of the very nature of the Conference activity that actions shall be started from the floor at any time that they are in order. The Presidency cannot anticipate what may be presented.

Despite the foregoing, advance information concerning Conference action is desirable wherever possible; particularly if it is clearly understood that other legislation is not prejudiced by lack of prior notice.

At the forthcoming General Conference carefully prepared reports will be presented by the First Presidency, the Council of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, the Board of Appropriations, and various departments and institutions of the church. These reports will present some important recommendations. They will be printed in the early issues of the Conference Daily Herald so that recommendations can be studied before action is taken.

AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1950 the revision and publication of the Book of Rules was referred to a committee composed of one member each from the First Presidency, the Council of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric, together with the president of the Quorum of High Priests, and the Senior President of Seventy. A preliminary report from this committee has already been printed in the Herald (November 26, 1951, page 1133). Although committee members were authorized to act, and they have done their utmost to see that no change of principle is embodied in the new Book of Rules, some significant elaborations of church practice have been made and the committee is asking that the Conference act on these. The major points for discussion have to do with Stake organization and procedure, General Church mission organization, and the duties of district presidents. One further detail concerns a recommendation that General Conference Resolution 687 be rescinded, since all its provisions except one are included in a revised statement concerning General Church missions. The detail which it is proposed to eliminate is the requirement that the secretary of the mission conference "shall be appointed from among the elders."

Closely related to the Book of Rules revision is the republication of General Conference Resolutions. In 1934, and again in 1936, the Presidency were authorized to omit from such a publication those resolutions whose provisions have been fulfilled or which are in other ways obsolete. In harmony with this principle members of the Presidency will recommend that they be authorized to delete from future publications these resolutions adopted since 1936 but not embodying principles or requirements of action. (See table at bottom of page.)

For many years the only way in which a member of the church could have his name taken from the church record was through court action. This was modified somewhat at the General Conference of 1950, but the resolutions now in force are somewhat conflicting. The Conference will be asked to approve a recommendation of the First Presidency:

No.	Daily Herald Page	Topic

That in the event any person desires to withdraw from membership in the church, the First Presidency be authorized to make such investigation as may be necessary or desirable through the proper officers of the church, and, if no sound reasons against such action are found, may authorize the Church Statistician to remove the names of these persons from the records of the church, provided that in the event persons whose names have been thus removed from the records of the church shall desire to resume their membership in the church, and no sound reason for denying this request shall be found, the First Presidency may authorize the reinstatement of the names of such persons on the church records; and, further,

That the General Conference resolutions of 1884 (284), 1903 (529) and 1948 (October 7, page 94) having to do with this question be and are hereby rescinded.

From the New York and Philadelphia District comes a recommendation asking the General Conference to order:

That an Annual Report of General Church Activities be prepared and published each year, to be made available to all interested persons at a minimum cost, and such report containing among other things the following:

- (a) Annual reports from all General Church quorums and departments, indicating major objectives and accomplishments, and including such statistical data as would best present and interpret the various activities and accomplishments during the past year, and
- (b) That it include other material and data as might be considered appropriate by the First Presidency.

SOME IMPORTANT ACTION must be taken concerning the Trustees of Graceland College. Successors must be chosen to college trustees F. M. McDowell (whose term of office expires at this conference), L. F. P. Curry (selected to serve the remainder of the term of the late John F. Garver), and Frank Parsons (selected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Dr. Charles F. Grabske). The church has also been informed that it is proposed to amend the Articles of Incorporation of the College so as to provide for two additional members of the Board of Trustees (Saints' Herald, December 24, 1951, page 4). If the Conference should approve this action, two additional trustees should be selected.

It should be kept in mind that members of the Conference can secure Conference attention for matters they desire to have considered by getting the floor and proposing the action they desire. An alternative, which is sometimes helpful to the presiding officers, is to deliver to the Presidency copies of proposed actions. Persons who have supplied such copies should then secure the floor in the usual way and ask for their proposed action to be read.

None of the foregoing is intended to stimulate unnecessary debate. Time at the Conference is at a premium, and debate for its own sake is not helpful. But it is an attempt to make available information which will be useful in the proper consideration and discussion of the issues before the body.

Handcraft at Conference

For several years a display of fancy-work and many other articles has been arranged for sale in the General Conference booth by the ladies of the Needlecraft Department. Since this organization and the Social Service Center have become one, we are planning to arrange a display for next Conference as usual.

Mrs. Lottie Sarratt, who served as president of the Needlecraft Organization over a period of years and is now associated with the women at the Center, joins with us in requesting that handcraft materials such as pillowcases, tea towels, aprons, dresser scarves, quilts, and crochet work be sent to the following address:

Church Directory

It will soon be time to issue a new church directory of the branches, congregations, and missions throughout the church. This includes both those in the United States and abroad.

It has been two years since the last one was published. Many locations for our worship services have changed since that time. In fact, because some of the pastors and district presidents were slow in sending the data, some errors were found in the last issue in spite of our most careful efforts to have it up to the minute.

We are asking that all district presidents and pastors of groups in unorganized territory make it their responsibility to get this information to us not later than April 20, 1952. Remember that the men of our armed forces and an ever-increasing number of tourists are depending on this source of information. They may even drive far out of their way to meet with the Saints only to be disappointed if the address is wrong or inadequate. We need your help. Take action promptly rather than risk failure and consequent disappointment.

March 30—April 6, Inclusive

The Housing Committee again requests that all visitors to Independence during the General Conference make reservations as early as possible. It is requested that those who can make private arrangements for rooms do so. Those who desire the Committee to secure rooms for them are urged to advise the Committee as soon as possible by completing the blank concerning Conference Housing information which appeared in the Herald of January 21, 1952, and mail it to the Auditorium.

A Dream Come True

By L. S. Wight

ONE OF THE SIGNIFICANT THINGS of Christ's teaching was his attitude toward children. Because of his example my preaching has been on this subject in one form or another as much as on anything else. I have some strong opinions on the need to do more than we have done in the past for the children if our Zionics hopes are ever to be realized. I have some hopes and dreams as to what we can do. When I see one of these dreams realized, I must tell about it.

Jesus faced the huge task of building his church from nothing. He had to find men who could absorb the principles which he presented, and who would have the capacity to grow into an understanding of those principles so they could carry on Jesus' work after he would leave them.

But he wasn't too busy to take time to minister to the needs of the little ones. It took a rebuke from him to make his disciples understand his attitude toward children. Luke's reference to this incident (18: 15-17) doesn't give us much information about the details of the situation, but in telling the story I have always given free reign to my imagination.

It is not hard to imagine a group of people coming together to hear this man Jesus. They were curious to see what he was like and to hear what he had to say to them. At the same time I can imagine those little Jewish children crowding in to get up front—because all children do just that. Then I can imagine young mothers who believed that if only this man Jesus would touch their little ones, it would mean something to them. Probably they were doing this to the annoyance of the older men who were trying to get the crowd in order. And, manlike, they decided that Jesus should be given first consideration. The gathering crowd should be controlled for his sake.

BUT JESUS FELT that he was the servant of the people. So when he saw that the disciples were pushing the children back and asking young parents to please not bother Jesus with the little ones, he discerned that they did not have what we might now call a Zionics perspective. They were thinking only of the moment. He was thinking of life.

He rebuked them and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." He could see the future. He could understand that if his church was to grow, it could be accomplished only if the little ones were nurtured in the beliefs of the church, and only if their needs as children should receive ministrations from those older. He took advantage of the situation to impress on them their responsibility to minister to the children.

I wonder sometimes if we today have caught the vision which Jesus described at that time? Oh, yes, many have, or we would not have made the growth that we see in the church today. But the percentage of people in each congregation, and the percentage church wide is not yet great enough to insure the growth of the church which must come before we can have the Zionics we talk about.

Jesus went on at this point to rebuke the people by telling them that anyone who will not receive these little ones—or in other words are too busy to do those things which minister to their needs—will not even enter into the kingdom of heaven. This statement from Jesus gives great emphasis to the importance of ministering to children effectively.

The story in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew gives further emphasis to the importance of so planning our church work that people of all ages from babyhood to old age receive the ministrations which they need. Christ said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." And how can we become as little children unless we do those things for them which will minister fully to their needs?

A GAIN IN MARK 8: 37, 38 we find instruction on the attitude of the adult toward his life. Jesus tells us plainly that the only way we can have life is to give it in service. He said, "Whosoever will save his life, shall be willing to lay it down for my sake; and if he is not willing to lay it down for my sake, he shall lose it. But whosoever shall be willing to lose his life for my sake, and the gospel, the same shall save it." Do we want to save our life? Of course we do. Then how better can we save our own life than by giving it in service to the young people who need the guiding hand of those who have had a share of life experience? The answer to that seems to be obvious also, but in our planning for church services too often we have failed to give them a full share of consideration. The same is particularly true in the planning of our buildings. The needs of adults come first. The children may use what adults do not need.

The percentage of loss to the church of the ones who might help build it had they received the right kind of ministration is appalling. And it might be a good place right here to mention that Jesus put the responsibility of ministering to our children squarely on our shoulders—yours and mine. He said, "Even so, it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish" (Matthew 18: 14). How many children have perished as far as the church is concerned because we did not have, nor take, the time to do that which was in our power to minister to their needs?

Too many of us want to do the "more important" things. But what is more important than helping a child through his period of development so that he will have an understanding to help him in his adjustment to life?

Whenever I think of this problem I am reminded of a neighbor in my boyhood days who complained because he had to pay taxes to support the public school when he had no children to go to school. He did not understand what Jesus said about youth. Apparently he could not sense that the development of children is a community responsibility. And if it is such a responsibility as far as organized society is concerned, how much more important is it that the church make sure nothing is left undone to minister to the needs of the children? It is a church responsibility, and the fact that my children are now grown does not give me freedom to say that I need to do no more of this.

BECAUSE OF MY DEEP FEELINGS ON this subject I have had a dream for years that some day I would find people so intensely interested in the needs of youth that they would provide in the church a place which the children could call their own, and which would be a place where all the needs of the children could receive ministration without the usual interferences which constantly interrupt their worship services.

On Sunday November 11, 1951, I went to church in Des Moines, Iowa. There I found myself in a district priesthood institute at which Brother Don Lents was the speaker. The service was fine and ministered to my needs. The music was particularly good. There was a beautiful solo, and just before Brother Lents spoke the choir sang the "Lost Chord," which always ministers to me as few other choral numbers do. Brother Lents preached a spiritually uplifting sermon. This day he was a hometown boy returned from other fields. He was able to minister effectively to many who had ministered to his youthful needs. His parents probably felt repaid a thousandfold in this rich experience for whatever they had done for him.

During the lunch hour I heard a story from Sister Florence Elvin Freberg which was a prelude to the realization of the dream which I have always had—that somewhere I might find people who have built a "church within a church" for the special ministry to children.

In company with Brother Don and Sister Helen Lents I had the privilege of going into the special chapel which the Des Moines Saints have provided for their children. Sister Freberg took pride in explaining the details to us. It is complete in every respect. It is far removed from anything which might disturb their worship services. The pews are made for the comfort of children. They can sit at ease in their own services. The pulpit is not quite as large as the ordinary one, but large enough that I would be proud to stand behind it in ministry. I was happy to note that this pulpit was the gift of friends of Maudeway Conklin, who recently died. She was the daughter of "Mother" Smith in Lamon who is known far and wide among Gracelanders for the "mothering ministry" which she gave for so many years to the girls in Graceland.

The total cost of the chapel was $1,300. Of this sum $1,057 came as a bequest in the will of Sister Julia Williams. The electric organ and pews were the gift of Dr. and Sister Addison Brown. There are seats for fifty persons.

THIS VISIT with Sister Freberg reminded me of the time when we had the privilege for a number of years of working with her in Minneapolis. We can recall some of the experiences to which it was not easy for her to adjust. But she did adjust so effectively that she developed a full sense of responsibility as to what the opportunity to work in church means. She is a worker who never loses a minute; she makes every one count. In fact, if my memory serves me correctly, it was her enthusiastic interest in doing something for someone else, as well as her willingness to get up at five in the morning if necessary to study any particular lesson before starting her regular chores for the day, that was one of the reasons Harold, her good husband, became interested in the church. One of the greatest thrills which I ever received in church work was at General Conference when I stepped into the Auditorium during the hour in which Bishop Cackler was conducting a class for the Aaronic priesthood. There I saw Harold Freberg assisting him. They had become acquainted in Des Moines and were now working together as old friends.

Such is the result of the work of a good woman who is sincerely interested in giving herself to serve. But her efforts to direct the children in the Des Moines church were offset by the usual obstacles to this work. I was particularly interested in her story about what was done to get the children's chapel. The children were asked to meet in the basement room and to conduct their worship services with people coming and going at all times. She said they finally were able to get such a meeting of adults in the same room. But they had carefully planned to have every possible diverting incident happen, like someone coming

Indian Mounds in the United States

This article appeared in the October issue of Missionary Courant, James S. Menzies, editor, published by W. A. Schoenian, 1302 Ninth Street, Moundsville, West Virginia. Melvin Fowler is Curator of Anthropology at the Illinois State Museum, Springfield, Illinois. (See Herald, September 30, 1951.)—Editor.

By Melvin L. Fowler

IN ALMOST ANY STATE east of the Mississippi River, monuments of the Indians of America are to be found. These monuments are mounds of different sorts and look very much like hills to the casual observer. Mounds can be distinguished from hills, however, by the fact that they are usually symmetrically shaped, whereas hills, ridges, etc., are normally not. Practically every state has its Moundville, Blue Mound, or Mound Park, so abundant are these monuments.

Naturally the query is made regarding the nature of these mounds, and details are sought as to what they represent. Twenty years ago the theory was put forth that they were built by a group of people who lived in America before the Indians and these people were given the name Mound Builders. Later research has proved that these "Mound Builders" were merely the ancestors of the American Indian and not a mystery race at all. Twenty years ago, too, all mounds were attributed to this mythical group of people, but it has subsequently been demonstrated that there are different kinds of mounds built by different Indian cultures at different periods in the history of America before Columbus.

First of all, let us discuss the different types of mounds and then find out something about what they signify.

Perhaps the earliest type of mound built by the ancient Americans was one which they didn't intend to build at all. In many places these earliest inhabitants of North America lived on the abundant clams found in the rivers. As they removed the meat from the clams and threw the shells out the door quite a pile would gradually accumulate. Another generation would build a house on the pile and continue the practice until a large shell mound had accumulated. These shell mounds are scattered along the major rivers and coastal areas of the entire eastern United States.

Later groups of Indians built mounds especially for the purpose of burying people in them. These mounds became quite elaborate with a tomb built of logs and bark in the center containing persons who apparently were rulers of the community, for fine tobacco pipes, copper implements, and other signs of wealth were usually buried with them. The people who built these burial mounds are called Hopewellians by archaeologists today. The Hopewellians lived over much of the eastern United States, probably one to two thousand years ago. One of the large centers of importance in the Hopewellian culture was in southern Ohio, another in Illinois, and another in Louisiana.

A third major type of mound was built as a platform upon which temples were placed. These temple mounds, as they are called, were built in the shape of a pyramid with the point cut off. Often a ramp was built leading up to the flat top upon which the temple sat. They were built in the center of large walled cities. The largest of these in existence is called Monks Mound and is just east of St. Louis, Missouri. Another large Mississippi mound is at Etowah, Georgia, where apparently one of the largest of prehistoric Indian villages was located. These mounds were built by a group of people that archaeologists call the Mississippi People. They lived in the eastern United States about one thousand five hundred years ago.

THESE THREE TYPES of mounds are the most significant as far as we know today; however, there are other types. For instance, in Wisconsin and northern Illinois are mounds built in the shape of animals and birds. These are called effigy mounds. There are other mounds built up incidental to the process of burying many dead persons. In this latter type of mound the dead Indian was apparently laid on the ground and covered over with some dirt. This process was repeated whenever anyone died, and as a result a large cemetery mound was built up.

These mounds are significant in that they show us some of the history of the people in America long before Columbus came.

The shell mound people lived almost entirely upon the food that they could collect from the wilds. They had no agriculture, consequently it is surmised that they lived in small groups and had only temporary camps as this kind of living, by hunting and gathering, cannot support a large population and so much time is spent in getting food that there is little time to develop anything of consequence.

Somewhere, and in some as yet unknown time and way, agriculture was introduced into the eastern United States area, and then the people began to collect in larger groups (villages) and were able to give time to the manufacture of many things that were not used before. The people who built the cemeterial mounds were agriculturalists and skilled craftsmen. Some of the carvings they made could proudly be displayed in a museum of modern art today. We know, too, that they had important rulers, for surely only people of importance were buried in the elaborate tombs enclosed in the mounds. The common people of the Hopewellians were buried in cemetery mounds.

The day of the Hopewellian culture faded and passed, and the arts known to these people seemed to lose their vigor, for the people following them were not the craftsmen that the Hopewellians were. It is not known just when the temple mound or Mississippi People came into the area nor is the place from which the culture came known for sure, although the temple mounds are very much like the so-called pyramids of Mexico and Central America. At any rate the Mississippi culture flourished and lasted up until the time the Europeans first began to explore America. DeSoto saw many of these large cities with the temple mound in the center when he marched across the southern part of the United States. When the French came first to Louisiana they saw temple mounds in the town of the Natchez Indians. The Natchez worshiped the sun, and the temple mound was the place from which the priests and chieftains daily greeted the sun as it arose.

There is slight evidence that they worshiped graven images, as no large graven images have been found in the vicinity of the temple mounds. In addition to being a mound temple for worship, and a central rallying place for the thousands that lived in the valley of the Ohio, the mound has served the purpose of being the burial place of one or more of their great chieftains or leaders.

IT IS GENERALLY BELIEVED the Mound Builders had no written language, at least there has been found no evidence of such unless the famous Grave Creek Stone found in the upper vault of the mound when it was explored in 1838.

The mound is to the valley of the Ohio what the pyramids are to the valley of the Nile. And here in increasing numbers world travelers will come to view the silent sentinel, monument of a departed race.

It is also generally believed that the Mound Builders had a sort of national religion; to confirm this fact, there were celebrations of the most imposing and pompous nature a semibarbarous people could devise. Such occasional celebrations were attended with much ostentatious display, often in the presence of the priesthood; altars smoked with the hecatombs of unfortunate victims.

It is thought that on the summits of the great mounds altars were erected for the worship of the sun, moon, and stars. Here perpetual fires burned day and night. The religion of the Mound Builders, like that of Mexico, Peru, and eastern nations was a part and not separate from the state or government. And like the nations mentioned, the priesthood had a dominant influence in the government. History shows that in such government, oppression, superstition, and ignorance prevail, and the rights of the common people are denied. Around these altars the priesthood assembled, and with strange songs marched in solemn procession while, as the evidence shows, one or more of their number offered up a human sacrifice. Many of their own nation, and often poor victims taken as prisoners of the warring tribes, were condemned at once to pour out their life blood in obedience to the forms of a superstitious and sanguinary religion. They, like the idolatrous tribes everywhere, presented the things they held valuable to gain the favor or appease the wrath of their gods. So states an antiquarian authority.

We do not have enough detailed information about the different mounds to enable us to correlate them with the facts given in the Book of Mormon, for there is much to be known yet about the mounds that dot the country and the information they hold about ancient America. Archaeologists have scratched over the surface of this interesting study. From the information within the mounds and from other traces left by the prehistoric Americans a more complete picture should someday be available. Until this time it is well to see that the existing mounds are preserved so that this history may be worked out.

Return of the Jews

RECENTLY someone sent to the Presidency an issue of The Houston Line printed in Philadelphia, and from the January issue we find a rather interesting discussion from their correspondent in Baghdad, Iraq, having to do with the migration of the Jews from Babylon to the State of Israel.

In spite of the difficulties found by this young nation to care for the hundreds of thousands which are pouring in to the land, these people are leaving Iraq in what amounts to a "mass migration toward a future that looks brighter than any to be hoped for in an Arab land."

The correspondent then continues with the following statement:

Having visited the ruins of Babylon, fifty miles away on the Euphrates, a few days ago, I find something singularly impressive about this great modern return of the Israelites from the scene of their ancient Captivity. It has an awesome Biblical quality to it, in spite of the fact that today's exodus is going on, not by camel caravan, but in shiny U. S. transport planes, with a breezy American running the service. Some fifty thousand people are involved in this movement, roughly half of Iraq's Jewish population, and they are being flown out at an astonishing rate. They must be pretty brave people, it seems to me, to leave a milieu in which they have been so long established to start life anew in a new land.

A Dream Come True

in, throwing a coat down and starting to talk, someone going across the room at the back, etc. Certain individuals had been asked to watch the effect on those assembled during each interruption, and then they reported the results to the adults in that meeting. For emphasis she added: "And this is the condition under which you expect us to give your children an appreciation of worship."

The Children Got Their Chapel!

THIS STORY IS NOT TOLD with any thought of reflection on anyone. The sad fact is that there is a lack of proper facilities with which to minister to the children in too many of our churches. Perhaps too few of us have been impressed with the specific statement of Jesus which puts full responsibility on each of us to give ourselves in some way to minister to the needs of our younger members as well as the children who do not yet belong to the church.

As I sensed the spirit of worship and love possible in that little chapel which the good folks in Des Moines have given to their little ones, I could not help wondering how many times I have failed to minister to some child who might have been saved to the church if I had only done what was in my power to do for him.

Each one of us can give this ministry if we only will.

Never lose an opportunity of making a child happy; it is often beyond your power to make a grown man or woman happy, but a child you can always make happy.

Question Time

Question:

Some feel that in these, the "latter days," an economic collapse is imminent which will void our present system, hence making it foolish to carry insurance. What is the church's attitude on the question of life insurance?
California

Mrs. C. J. H.

Answer:

This question has arisen in the mind of many, not only in recent months but in the last twenty years, and there are always those who predict a complete collapse in our economic system. This is really two questions—is such a collapse imminent, and what is the church's attitude on the question of life insurance?

There is no doubt that our economic system is under terrific strain. Following the period of deflation, the war years brought on an opposite condition, and we have witnessed a great expansion in our whole credit system, which has resulted in inflation and great depreciation of the value of the dollar. It is obvious that investments in insurance made a number of years ago have depreciated in value. If history repeats itself, which it has done consistently down through the years, we can reasonably expect a period of deflation; but a collapse, such as some people anticipate, does not appear to me to be imminent. One should not be too hasty in sacrificing equities which he has through life insurance. Despite the fact that through the inflation which has taken place losses in insurance equities will be sustained, it nevertheless must be regarded as a substantial part of our present economy. A reasonable investment in life insurance to cover one's liabilities in the event of death and to provide an estate for the family is in most cases a good investment for the average family. Beyond such protection, it is a matter for individual consideration and study. As far as I know there has been no action taken by the General Conference relative to the attitude of the church toward insurance.

Question:

Can you give any definite information on a law prohibiting more than one wife, which I believe was effective in the state of Illinois at the time the Mormons claim the church was starting to practice polygamy?

California

S. E. T.

Answer:

The law regarding polygamy at the time of the church in Nauvoo is given in "Section 118 of the Criminal Code of 1827 of the State of Illinois" as follows:

Bigamy consists in the having of two wives or two husbands at one and the same time, knowing that the former husband or wife is still alive. If any person or persons, within this state, being married, or who shall hereafter marry, do, at any time, marry any person or persons, the former husband or wife being alive, the person so offending, shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned not exceeding two years. And where such second marriage shall have taken place without this state, cohabitation, after such second marriage in this state, shall be deemed the commission of the crime of bigamy, and the trial in such case, may take place in the county where such cohabitation shall have occurred: Provided, That nothing herein contained, shall extend to any person or persons, whose husband or wife shall have been continually remaining out of this state, for the space of five years together, prior to the said second marriage, and he or she, not knowing such husband or wife to be living within that time: Provided also, That nothing herein contained, shall extend to any person that is, or shall be at the time of such marriage, divorced by lawful authority, from the bonds of such former marriage, or to any person where the former marriage hath been by lawful authority declared void.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Should our ministers marry those who are divorced? Would this not be contrary to scriptural teachings? Is there any scriptural basis for divorce?
Ontario

L. W. H.

Answer:

This question cannot be answered with a positive "yes" or "no." Several factors have a direct bearing on your answer. From a scriptural standpoint adultery has been set up as a determining factor as to whether or not the party sinned against had a right to a divorce. The marriage covenant (Doctrine and Covenant 111: 2) states two general conditions on which marriage is based: "keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." It is quite evident that keeping yourselves "for" each other is just as important as "from" all others. The keeping of this covenant fully and in the proper spirit is vital to successful marriage. The breaking of either of these covenants would seem sufficient basis for the dissolution of the marriage.

There is, however, a spirit of tolerance developing in recent years which may tend to make possible more equity in the solution of the problems of unhappy marriages. Ministers would undoubtedly be justified in marrying former divorcees if the conditions in the case indicate to the minister that the offending party was guilty of breaking the basic requirements of marriage.

WARD A. HOUGAS

Question:

What is the season which is mentioned in this passage: "And then cometh the season and the end; and my vineyard will I cause to be burned with fire"?—Jacob 3: 153.

Oklahoma

Mrs. W.A.P.

Answer:

Verse 150 refers to the millennium, after which "the time cometh that evil fruit shall again come into my vineyard." The season referred to is a short period following the millennium, during which Satan will be loosed and will accomplish his evil work in turning many mortals (not the resurrected saints) to sin and rebellion against the Lord, in an attempt to destroy the righteous. When these mortals are destroyed by fire mortal life ends, and there are none upon whom Satan can work. He can do no more. Then comes the last resurrection and the judgment when Satan and all his following will be sent away into eternal death. (See Revelation 20: 3, 10; Doctrine and Covenants 28: 6; 43: 7; 85: 35.)

Stewardship

By John W. Blackstock

WHEN WE THINK of a steward, we think of one who oversees or looks after property, lands, or money that belongs to someone else. To be a steward in the church of Jesus Christ one must be responsible to someone, but the question is to whom is the steward responsible? Much of the teaching and preaching tends to make some believe they are responsible to the bishops. This is incorrect.

If we could truly believe that God created the heavens and the earth and all things in them, and recognize his ownership in all things, many of our problems would be solved. When we begin to see that everything we have comes from him and for the most part was here before we came, we shall overcome much of our selfishness. We need to have our hearts as well as our heads converted to the idea that God is in reality the owner while we are only the stewards of his creation.

When we think about this for a moment, we suddenly become aware that we ourselves are included in this "all" business of God's creation. Since we spend more time with ourselves than with anybody else it would be well for us to consider the stewardship of self.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF SELF involves everything we are or hope to be. It has to do with all we touch, possess, or think we own. It cannot be separated from other aspects of life. In fact sooner or later we are apt to reach the conclusion that there is no other stewardship than that of self, and our attitude and response to this shall determine our success or failure as stewards.

There are people who loudly proclaim that one who does not pay his tithing is a poor steward. To this we agree. But with the inference that the paying of tithing makes one a good steward, we wholeheartedly disagree. The payment of the tithe, important as it is, is only one of the many things required of a steward.

Is it any more of a sin for a steward to withhold his tithing than to fail to attend church or to refuse to preach, teach, or pray? Is it any less of a sin to withhold time, talent, musical ability or any other thing God may have given us as stewards? The importance of tithing should never be minimized but we should understand that it is only one of the many privileges God has granted to us. One ingredient never makes a cake. It takes several things in proper proportion to make a delicacy that delights the taste. So it is that a steward does many things (and refuses to do many other things) which make of him a being that is a delight to his Creator and a blessing to his fellow-men. It is true that stewards must contribute. Most of them will have tithing to pay. We have known wicked people who were great tithe-payers but they were not good stewards.

STEWARDSHIP AND KINGDOM-BUILDING are so closely related it would be impossible to separate them. Some people are inclined to think of both as being somewhere beyond us. They look to the day when they shall participate in what they call the stewardship plan of the church. We have known others who lived for the day when they would have the glorious privilege of moving to the Center Place to help build the kingdom. They seem never to realize that we build the kingdom as we build into ourselves and those with whom we live the qualities of stewardship. No one geographical area has a corner on this kind of building.

Jesus made many significant statements about the kingdom. Among them he is reported to have said, "The kingdom is within you." Another rendition of the Holy Scriptures puts it, "The kingdom is among you." At different times he and others said, "The kingdom is at hand." The Lord called the people to whom he addressed these remarks, "hypocrites, vipers, perverse and adulterous people." Could it be that Jesus saw in the people of his day the potential needed to build the kingdom, hence he said, "The kingdom is in you, it is among you, it is at hand"? If this was true in that day it would be no less true today, and so the stewardship of self takes on new meaning. The Lord Jesus recognized himself as a steward. "My doctrine is not mine but his who sent me," he said.

THIS BUSINESS OF STEWARDSHIP and the kingdom should be snatched from the tomorrows. It needs to be taken from the realm of the mystic. More and more of our people are seeing that kingdom-building starts with self. I have been in homes many times that were dirty and cluttered—not with the dirt of a day, but with the accumulated filth of many days. Regardless of the other good qualities a woman may possess, one who lives in dirt and rears her family in filth is not a good steward. She is far below her calling as a kingdom-builder. Dirty homes like dirty lives are repulsive to people of quality. I have seen men who loudly proclaimed their allegiance to the kingdom conduct themselves on the job in such a way as to make it almost impossible for them to ever receive promotion. I have observed others doing just enough to get by, yet expecting a day's pay for stalling around. These never seem to realize their job has some relation to their inheritance in Zion. I have seen farmers who refused to take up good soil management because it was too much trouble. These same people were professed believers in stewardship and the kingdom. Sometimes one's soul is tempted to cry out, "How long, O God, how long before the children of the covenant will see it is an accumulation of all the activities of life, temporal and spiritual, that makes kingdom-builders?"

We have said the steward must contribute, and this contribution should not be measured in money alone. The Lord could, if he wanted to, get along without our money. This has been proved many times. When the children of Israel needed water, the Lord didn't say, "Pipe it up out of the Nile." He said, "Strike the rock, Moses, and let them drink"! When the old prophet came knocking at the door of the widow's home, he said in effect, "Stir up the biscuits, Sister, I'm hungry." She, aware of surrounding conditions, hesitated. But the prophet said, "Go ahead, the Lord will take care of us." God could get along without us, but you and I cannot get along without proper attitudes and a balanced approach to material and spiritual things.

THE FIRST THING you must contribute is a self that is righteous. Righteousness means being right with men and right with God. Need I add there can be no such thing as being right with God if you are at odds with your fellow-men.

Maybe your contribution will be a home that is clean and wholesome—a place that invites the spirit of worship, a place where fellowship and fraternity can be found. You can be the kind of workman or student or merchant that causes those around you to say, "This man's life is motivated by a great faith."

Along with these and many other qualities of saintly stewardship, don't forget to earn all you can honestly. You are not doing this any longer for self. You are doing it so the necessities of life may be had by you and yours. It is done that you may wisely manage so that your tithing payments may be larger, so the day may hasten when your inheritance shall be provided. Then work in hope for the day when surplus shall be yours to consecrate. I have known those who were amply supplied with ideas about what the Presiding Bishop should do to hasten the day when Zion would no longer be a dream, yet many of them never saved enough money to possess their own homes.

We must grow in this thing until the day comes when we no longer think we are paying tithing to the bishop but that we are returning to God that portion of his creation which he has asked for. We give it trustingly to men holding the office of bishop or those representing the office of bishop. God has called them to represent him in this field of work. Part of their stewardship is to work in the office of bishop. But the tithe and service rendered is returned to God and his Son Jesus Christ. We return it to them in recognition of our stewardship over time, talent, and money. We return it to them because we have in our hearts a love for men that can best be expressed in kingdom-building. We return it to its rightful owner because in us is the hope that has been in the hearts of righteous men and women down through the ages. We seek a city whose founder and framer is God.

Skeptical About Democracy

And what were those doctrines? They were that the people could not be trusted; that they were their own worst enemies; that all the disorders, real or imaginary, that prevailed, were attributable to a wild spirit of democracy—to popular frenzy. . . . A gifted son of genius, Fisher Ames, declared that the disease which threatened general and universal ruin to our institutions and our future prospects was rooted deep; that it had found its way into the very hearts of the people. This disease was democracy; it was the will and sovereignty of the people. . . . Yes, the people were corrupt, even to their bones. Ames conjured up and predicted greater evils for his country, which were to flow from this wild spirit of democracy, than have been portrayed on the present occasion. His country was to be visited with all the horrors of the French revolution; anarchy, confusion, and bloodshed were to desolate the land. . . . The ghosts of Robespierre, Danton, and Marat were seen fitting throughout atmosphere. The disease of that period was democracy, . . . and it was the aim of those in authority to put down that wild spirit of democracy by the strong arm of power.

—Senator John M. Niles in the United States Senate on January 4, 1837.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From C. F. Muir, President of London District:

On October 17, 1833, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon arrived at Mount Pleasant (which is near Brantford, Ontario) on their way to the first mission to Canada. They went there to convert the two sons of Freeman Dickerson, a prosperous farmer of Dayton, New York.

On Sunday, October 19, they conducted meetings in Brantford and Mount Pleasant, and by the twenty-eighth of the month they had baptized and confirmed eighteen persons and ordained one man to the office of elder. Thus the light of the gospel came to the Brantford area.

Most of the years since that time Brantford has not had much place in the news of the church. While much effort has been given to the work in this city during the past, the church failed to function continuously there.

It was during the spring of 1950 that Victor Byrnes, a Collegiate teacher, with the help of his good wife, decided to do something about getting the work established in Brantford again. After consultation with the district president, he placed an ad in the newspaper requesting those who were members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to telephone him. Victor said, "One of the greatest thrills of my life was when I received the first call." During the weeks that followed seven families, totaling twenty-eight persons (nine of which were members of the church) were located in the city. Most of them had not been in contact with the church for a long time. "Get acquainted" meetings were held in the Byrnes home. Visiting ministers, including Apostle G. Mesley, Elder L. Zonker, and local ministers of almost every congregation of London District gave encouragement. The families were organized into a church school, and in September, 1950, became a district mission. Also active in the development of this mission is Dalton Culp and his wife. They were transferred from Hamilton to Brantford. Both had been active in the church at Hamilton, and their move to Brantford came at a time when they were most needed. Dalton, a deacon, at that time was the only member of the priesthood. Arlie Taylor and his wife of Paris, Ontario, soon came in contact with the others and gave their good support.

Meetings of the mission are now held in the YMCA building, and all are enthusiastic about the growth of the church in Brantford. Attendance has reached a high of fifty-seven, and the Saints have established a building fund anticipating the day when they may begin erecting a church there.

During the past year, as a result of missionary work done by Louis Zonker and William McMurray—but mainly because of the consistent work of V. Byrnes, D. Culp, and others of Brantford—there have been thirteen decisions for baptism. Nine of these people have already been baptized and confirmed. Six children have been blessed.

Brother Byrnes is now a priest and a successful pastor of the mission.

There has come to our desk a clipping from the daily paper of Port Huron, Michigan, which carries the heading, "Joseph N. Muir Retired From Bank After 29½ Years."

Brother Muir started his career as a telegraph operator and then worked as chief clerk in the freight office of the Pere Marquette railroad. He was promoted later to train dispatcher. The article contains this paragraph concerning his church association. "Mr. Muir, active in church work, is bishop's agent for the Flint-Port Huron District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

From the Presiding Bishop:

I am happy to say that the Des Moines District reached an all-time high in tithes and offerings for 1951. This record is in addition to the contributions made to the Auditorium fund. The district not only reached the quota assigned but exceeded it. I have not received a report from one of the solicitors, but even in the absence of this report I am able to advise that we exceeded our quota.

STEPHEN ROBINSON
Bishop, Des Moines District

From Seventy Philip W. Moore, appointee to Idaho:

In the past year we have added to the church rolls 40 names through baptism. This total added to the totals of the two preceding years, 1949 and 1950, makes a grand total of 104 baptisms in Idaho. This figure compares favorably with the total number of baptisms in the ten-year period from 1939 to 1948. During that time, if memory serves me properly, we had between 135 and 145 baptisms.

Letters

Obedience Rewarded

I lived a worldly life until a Saturday in December, 1914, when I met Brother J. N. Madden in Ramona, Oklahoma. We had quite a discussion about the Salvation Army. Later the same evening we met on the street in Collinsville, where I lived at that time, and he asked me to come hear him preach that night in an empty store building a block from my home.

I did not promise to come, but as I walked down the street toward my three-room apartment I kept thinking about our two conversations that afternoon. When I got home I asked my wife if she'd like to go hear a "Mormon" preach. She was so surprised she could hardly answer me, for she knew that throughout our married life I was disgusted with all denominations and said they were just a farce.

I had never heard a Reorganized Latter Day Saint before that I knew of. Finally she said she would go. We took our three children with us. We were both interested in the sermon, so we went back the next day to both morning and evening services.

Brother Madden held a three weeks' series of meetings there, and my wife didn't miss any of them. I was working at Bartlesville on the Bartlesville Examiner and had to go back on Monday to my work. Interestingly enough that trip I was transferred back to Collinsville as distributor and correspondent. I also took on the circulation for the Collinsville Times Daily.

When I returned home my wife told me she wanted to be baptized. I told her I didn't like the idea as it would separate us in a way, for I wasn't in condition to be baptized. I drank some, smoked, and chewed tobacco. She still insisted she wanted to be baptized, but Brother Madden would not baptize her unless I agreed to it. One day during that week after I had eaten my lunch, she was walking past me and the smoke from my pipe blew in her face. She gave a little cough and made a face at me. I remarked, "You will not be bothered by my smoking any more." I knocked the tobacco out of the pipe, laid it on the dresser, picked up all the tobacco and cigarettes and laid them there also. She was very happy. In two or three days she threw my smoking equipment into the stove and burned it up.

I agreed to her baptism but still said I would not join. The date set for her and an elderly lady to be baptized was the next Sunday morning after the eleven o'clock service. I had some business to attend to that morning, so I didn't go to church, but got back in time for the baptismal service.

As Brother Madden walked down to the water's edge it was made known to him that if he baptized the older lady first I would be baptized, too. As he led my wife out of the water I pulled my coat off and told him I wanted to be baptized too.

As I went home a dreadful feeling came over me that I had made a fool of myself. We had to go to Vera to be confirmed. I told my wife I would go and take her, but I was not going to be confirmed. When we got to Vera, Brother Quick and Brother Shoemaker called me to the side of the church and talked to me. They told me to pray over it. I still had that terrible feeling until Brother Shoemaker announced after the meeting opened that the ones baptized that morning would come forward and be confirmed. The power of God again took hold of me; I walked up, sat down, and was confirmed. A joyous, contented feeling came over me, and I rejoiced that I had made the start for a better life. Nothing worried me, and I began to prosper.

Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Garrett of Bay Minette, Alabama, observed their golden wedding anniversary on August 5. They held open house and served barbecue dinners to approximately five hundred relatives and friends. They are the parents of ten children; the eight who are living, together with twelve grandchildren and one great-grandchild, were present for the occasion. They and all their children are members of the Reorganized Church. Six of their children and one grandchild attended Graceland College.

Herald House INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

I rented a nice four-room house and furnished it better than I had ever been able to before. The elders came and preached in my home. By that time there were about fifteen or twenty members around Collinsville. We organized a church school, and I served as superintendent. The elders who came stayed in our home. We rented an empty store building to hold meetings. I have never regretted my decision to join this church.

I have many testimonies of God's love and power. I have been healed of arthritis and a heart ailment after doctors said they could do nothing for me. I have seen others healed too.

Difficulties came into my life. I was isolated from the church for several years, and again I started drifting back into worldly ways. I did not pray. I lost everything financially. I had no home, no furniture, very few clothes, and sometimes very little to eat, when at last I really got down on my knees and poured out my heart to God. I promised to obey him, to pay my tithing, to go to church and worship him and testify of his great love for those who do his bidding. Then I began to prosper again. He gave me back more than I had ever lost. For this I thank him, and pray that I shall be able always to do that which I know is right.

Last October 31 my wife died. It was a terrible blow to me, but God has strengthened me and soothed my pain. I prayed that he would send her to me in a vision, to tell me that she was happy. The third night I prayed thus a beautiful light appeared around me. It seemed there was a small gathering of people congregated behind me, and out of the light my wife appeared a few feet away coming toward me with her arms outstretched. She took me in her arms, and I asked her if she was happy and at peace. She said she was. Then we were taken up in the spirit and seemingly carried through that beautiful light a short distance. She disappeared the same way she came, still smiling. I was then wide awake and had that same peaceful feeling. I had when I first came into the church. I rejoice that she is not having to suffer as she did during her last years of life.

A Testimony of Healing

In the fall of 1914 I was seated on our front porch holding my eight-year-old daughter who was almost lifeless after a severe attack of asthma. She had suffered from this affliction for five months, and I knew that if it continued much longer she would die. I had prayed for her, and then wondered, "Why, oh, why doesn't God hear my prayers? He healed the sick when he was on earth. Why doesn't he do the same now?" As I looked up, I saw an old man standing just a few steps away. His hair and beard were white, his clothing immaculately clean, his voice kind and sympathetic. He asked me why I was crying, so I told him about my daughter. Then he said, "She will be better soon." A few weeks later I learned about the Reorganized Church and the ordinance of administration. After my little daughter received administration, she was healed.

I asked the neighbors if they had ever seen an elderly gentleman who looked like the man I talked to on my porch that day, but no one had ever seen such a person around that vicinity. I feel certain that God sent him to comfort us.

Now that I am a member of God's church my testimony is that his promises are sure. He has always been with me in my hours of need. Even when my husband died five years ago I had an experience which has caused me to say, "No longer faith but knowledge." God is so good to me.

Tribute to Charles Harpe

The passing of Brother Charles Harpe brings to my memory a spiritual experience he had years ago when he was engaged in missionary work. He told me that he had been conducting a series of meetings and, after prolonged efforts, felt that he was accomplishing nothing. He became discouraged and decided to leave the place. Having arrived at this decision he went to his room. While he was sitting on the side of his bed, a heavenly personage sat down beside him and encouraged him to continue his efforts, since there were some who would accept the gospel. He remained and, as the angel had told him, several persons were baptized.

Note of Appreciation

I appreciate the prayers in behalf of my family. I am feeling better, and my husband, who was suffering with asthma, is able to lie down and sleep now. I ask the continued prayers of the Saints for the spiritual welfare of my loved ones and myself.

Helped in Time of Need

Over a year ago I became very ill as the result of an infection. When I lost consciousness, my son called Elder R. D. Davis to our home to administer to me. A doctor and nurse were present also. During this time I knew nothing of what was taking place, but as soon as I received administration I regained consciousness and began to recover. I cannot express in words my gratitude for this wonderful blessing.

About two weeks later we had some oil consecrated. When I awoke several days after that with a severe pain, I felt led to take some of the oil. The pain left and did not return. We have had several such experiences in our home recently for which we thank God who cares for us.

Experience in Fasting

When the announcement was made in the Herald that the fast preceding General Conference would be observed March 2, I read it with mingled emotions. I thought of my varied experiences and with what expectancy each individual would approach the day. I presume some will ignore the request. Some will look toward the day with dread, not being able to distinguish the great need of the spiritual food above the physical. Some will excuse themselves, saying, "I will not be able to attend the General Conference, so why deny myself?" We are all one body; so if we make the proper preparation, we can have the witness of God's Spirit whether or not we attend Conference.

A number of years ago when the day was set aside to observe the general fast, an occasion arose that seemed advisable to have a basket dinner that day. What was one to do under such a condition—stay at home? Because of the nature of the occasion, this did not seem the thing to do. It was a very wonderful experience for those who desired to fast. Not wishing it to be known that they were fasting, they mingled with the group assisting with the dinner and serving the children in a way that it was unobserved that they didn't partake of the food. The desire for food was removed and not one who came fasting had any desire to eat. They could say like Jesus, "I have food that ye know not of." LOLA QUICK MCCOLLAM

A New Church for Pensacola Branch

On Sunday, October 14, members of the Pensacola Branch held official opening services in their new church building. Moving into this new home and looking forward to the opportunities and enjoyment to be afforded by the enlarged and increased facilities, they took a look backward over the course of events that had brought them to this point.

Several still remain in the congregation who recall the twenty-fifth of June, 1925, when thirty-two charter members met for organization as a branch. Apostle John W. Rushton came to Pensacola to direct the organization. Thus culminated the efforts of a few Saints who from 1916 had been active in this city.

Perhaps the first group meetings were held in the home of Sister Kelly, now deceased. Through the efforts of this good sister, aided by Elder D. M. Rudd and family, a small group of five or six Saints met regularly for services. The General Church was not unaware of these meetings, and such men as F. M. Slover, T. C. Kelley, Alma and N. L. Booker, Charles May, and others were sent to aid the group.

As the years passed others were added to the group until in the early 1920's there were enough to require a permanent church home. By the hard work and sacrifice of the few, the group was able to build by their own labor the first Reorganized Church in Pensacola.

With the memory of rich experiences and motivated by the faith of the early Pensacola Saints, the present 350 members look forward to new and richer experiences. They are not unmindful of the help they have received from General Church ministers, including D. T. Williams, M. A. McConley, Charles R. Hield, Wallace W. Smith, Percy A. Farrow, M. L. Draper, and W. J. Breshears. They are well aware of the wonderful ministry of such local men as D. M. Rudd, James Cooper, Jesse Simmons, F. B. Baldwin, C. J. Davis, Fred Willis, Alma Dungan, Heman Cooper, Bruch Jones, and others who have served the branch throughout the years.

Pensacola Saints may well be proud of their accomplishments. But while they are justly proud, they are determined that they shall not become complacent and satisfied with prior accomplishments, but shall use them as a steppingstone to perform their portion (and perhaps a little more) of the task of spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ.—BLANCHE R. MERRON, Historian.

Interior of Church Redecorated

KEOKUK, IOWA.—In October, Shirley Thornton and Beulah Kiser attended the Women's Institute held in Independence, Missouri.

At the worship service on October 28, Ralph Thornton was ordained to the office of priest by Elders W. H. Gunn and W. H. McKiernan of Fort Madison, Iowa.

On November 19, Ruth Hagmeier won the South Lee County "I Speak for Democracy" speech contest sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded a portable radio.

At the December 2 morning service, two babies were blessed by Elder W. H. Gunn. They were Charles Alfred, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cramer; and Chester Edward, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jones.

Brother Thornton organized the boys of his church school class into a basketball team and entered them in the city church league. Don Kiser is the coach.

On December 23, the Christmas story in scripture and song was given by the newly organized choir, directed by Ruth Hagmeier.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jones, and the junior and senior high church school classes, had a New Year's Eve party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Thornton.

On January 12, a team of the men of the branch played the church league team at basketball, at the YMCA, after which members and friends enjoyed a basket supper in the dining room.

We have redecorated the interior of our church building and have installed new lights. The church school is growing and more room is needed, so a basement for the church is included in our future plans.—Reported by PHYLLIS HAGMEIER

Ordination Service Held

EAST ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—A special ordination service was held November 25, when the following three young men were ordained: Brothers Wilmer T. Anthony, George Rupprecht, and William A. Havlen. The service was conducted by Pastor Charles B. Fletcher, assisted by Elders Frank F. O'Bryan, counselor; Roy I. Benson, counselor to district president; W. C. Carl and Charles E. Smith. The invocation was offered by Brother Carl, and Brother Benson gave the charge to the candidates. Martha Lea Brown sang "My Task" accompanied on the piano by James Carl. Brother Smith gave the benediction at the close of the service.

Brother Havlen is one of the pastor's counselors and also branch recorder. Brother Rupprecht, a second year student at Graceland, is one of the youngest men to have been ordained in the branch. Brother Anthony is branch treasurer.—Reported by MARIE ANDERSON

Men's Club Organized

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—The branch was organized November 5, 1950, and since that time progress has been noted in the attendance. Last year there was an average attendance of seventy-nine at church school, and an average attendance of eighty-one for preaching services. There is a total membership of eighty-two baptized members and 82 per cent of this number made tithing contributions in the past year. There were five ordinations as follows: B. A. Howard, Jr., elder; Kenneth Smith, elder; Warren Hinkle, Jr., priest; John Kay, teacher; and Henry Steinecke, deacon. Six people were baptized and six babies were blessed in the past year. During the two years of organization as a branch, $3,954.35 has been raised for the building fund.

The annual business meeting was held August 19. The following officers were elected: branch president, Elder Charles Shippy; counselors, Seventy F. C. Bevan and Elder Kenneth Smith; branch clerk, Marcene Howard; branch statistician, Eul Blackledge; treasurer, George Shippy; publicity agent, F. C. Bevan; church school director, Etta Cosner; director of wom-

The general meeting of the department of women is held once a month at the homes of the members and a special program is planned for these meetings with particular emphasis being placed on the theme for the year which is "Developing Spiritual Power." The Liahona Circle meets twice a month and they are studying the Book of Mormon. Last year the department of women turned $1,300 over to the branch building fund.

A Men's Club has been organized, and meetings are held once a month. Henry Steinecke is president. The Zion's League is an active group in the branch with meetings held twice a month. Progress has been made in the children's division of the church school. When the branch was organized there were seven children ranging in age from two to twelve attending class. Now about twenty-five children attend four organized classes. In order to stimulate interest in the church school, contests have been sponsored. January 25, the losing team gave a party for the winners.

Two of the women attended the Women's Institute in Independence in October. They were Sister Ruth Shippy and Sister Blanche Lindsay.

During the summer and early fall many of the prayer services were held at the B. A. Howard farm. A potluck supper was held before the service each time.

Instead of the usual Sunday evening preaching services in October and November, a special teacher-training class under the direction of Sister Etta Cosner, co-ordinator of elementary education for the Davenport public schools was held. Another class on "Fundamentals" was taught by B. A. Howard during this period.

The Christmas program was sponsored by the church school. This was in three parts, a pantomime by the small children, followed by a play entitled "Christmas Round the World" given by the Zion's League, and "Living Pictures" portraying the Christmas story by members of the adult division. A "White Christmas" offering was given by each person present when the final picture was portrayed. This offering was sent in to the General Church.

A missionary series was held in January and February, 1952. Patriarch W. W. Richards gave lectures on the "Internal Evidences of the Book of Mormon." These lectures were followed by sermons by District President Elder Lyle Woodstock. His subject was "The Restoration Movement."—Reported by MARCENE HOWARD

First Anniversary Celebrated

LAS CRUCES, NEW MEXICO.—The first anniversary of the group was held in January. Progress has been noted in the group, and the Saints anticipate being organized into a mission before General Conference.

Seventy Russell Ralston met with the Saints on October 14, 1951, for a Communion service. He delivered a sermon, and Bantz J. Dowis was ordained to the office of teacher. A fellowship was held followed by a covered dish luncheon, with twenty adults and eight children present.

Apostles D. T. Williams and Charles R. Hield preached at El Paso on October 30. Several families drive fifty miles or farther each way to attend church activities.

A Christmas party was held at the chapel December 16 when gifts were exchanged and refreshments were served.

Church members have come into the area because of connection with the Army and Air Force. Private Milton Bachlor and P.F.C. Dan McQueen have contributed in the musical line. Welcome has also been extended to Captain and Mrs. Clair Robinson and children of Biggs Air Field, Lieutenant Virginia Fitch of Beaumont Hospital, and Mr. and Mrs. Cedric Hougas of Las Cruces.

A permanent meeting place has been secured for services which are held on Sundays at 1:30 p.m. at the Chaplain's Center in Old Biggs Air Field. Further information may be had by contacting Bob Porter in Las Cruces, New Mexico, telephone -0385J-4; Captain Kenneth Walker, 3528 Grace Street, El Paso, Texas, or Biggs Field; or Bantz J. Plans for New Building Begun

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The annual business meeting was held June 25 with the following officers elected: pastor, A. W. Powell; church school director, George Krahl; branch treasurer, Thomas T. Forbes; women's leader, Nellie Wahl; music director, Marilyn Davison; young people's leader, Tom Mortimore. Lyle Steede was sustained as book steward, and Jackie Gernhart as publicity agent.

Plans are being made to erect a new church building. A site has been purchased on Massachusetts Avenue, and men of the branch have started cleaning the grounds. Construction is planned for the late summer of 1952. The building committee is under the chairmanship of Keith C. Harder. An architect has been nominated by the committee and his name forwarded to the General Church officials for approval. Over $33,000 has been raised for the building fund, $13,000 of which has been raised since a concentrated building fund effort was started in September of 1950.

The fifteenth anniversary of the branch was celebrated at a banquet November 9 at the YWCA. Main speakers were President W. Wallace Smith and Apostle Maurice Draper. Richard Wahl was toastmaster. At special anniversary services on November 11, the following men were ordained to the priesthood: Keith C. Harder, George Krahl, and Richard A. Wahl to the office of elder; Mark Crown and Jack Gernhart to the office of priest; and Tom Mortimore to the office of teacher.

Visitors to the branch in recent months have included Israel A. Smith, W. Wallace Smith, and F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency; Apostle Maurice Draper, and High Priests Jack Conway and Thomas M. Carr. Meetings are held in the Pythian Temple, 1012 9th Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.—Reported by JACKIE GERNHART

HOPEWELL, OREGON.—An all day meeting was held January 27. Brother Keith Kinart was the speaker at the morning hour. A basket dinner was served at noon by the women. Worship service was conducted in the afternoon by Sister Effie Verhei. Sister Roycie Chapman, district woman's leader, conducted a class for the women. Other classes were the young people's class taught by Brother Keith Kinart, district young people's leader, and a class for the men by Elder F. E. Chapman. Election of officers was held in the afternoon with Elder F. E. Chapman of the district presidency in charge.

Officers elected or appointed were Ray Linderoth, pastor and bishop's solicitor; James Clevenger, church school director; Alene Dixon, secretary; Vivian Linderoth, treasurer and young people's leader; Eddie Guy, auditor; Tom Dixon, custodian; Sister Guy, women's department leader; Pat Guy, music leader; Martha King, social leader; Sister Worden, book steward, James Clevenger, Tim King and Jack Davis, building committee.—Reported by VIVIAN LINDEROTH

PART II

WE MOTHERS of middle age or past, who have somehow with the Lord's help muddled through these great problems, look now with pride and sometimes awe on these wonderful young men and women who have come up from our firesides. As we look back through the years we would encourage you who are in the beginning stages of this greatest and noblest task that God has given to womankind. For often we find today that many of our parental worries were unfounded; phases of behavior that seemed so faulty soon passed. Often the one who in early childhood was unsympathetic and unappreciative becomes the altruistic one, spending his life in service; the aloof and self-centered one grew to be co-operative and understanding; and the two who quarreled most in childhood developed later the closest of friendships.

Concerning peace in the family I agree again with Miss Cranston:

Under the roof of the home there is seldom peace, for members are growing and changing, the situation is never static, and creative development has to come through new experience, pain, debate, disappointment, and suffering. Yet at home in an atmosphere of affection and at least relative security there seems to be the nearest approach on earth to perpetual peace, and certainly it is in the home that one learns first, last, and perhaps best the ways in which people learn to live together in harmony and mutual respect.—The Family—A Christian's Concern, page 57.

I was surprised by this summation from an excellent new book by Dorothy Baruchs, New Ways in Discipline. No matter what his age—whether two months old or two years, thirteen or thirty, every human being needs certain emotional foodstuffs.

1. He needs affection.
2. He needs a sense of belonging and being wanted.
3. He needs the lift of pleasure that comes through his senses.
4. He needs zest of achievement and the relish of appreciation from others for what he does.
5. Above all he needs acceptance and understanding, the secure knowledge that some person accepts him essentially when he is himself without pretense or sham.

Obviously none of these satisfactions will pervade life in an uninterrupted stream. The idea is we have some of each in sufficient quantity to give us a modicum of inner peace. We do best when we ask ourselves, "Am I giving love and affection to others? Am I showing them appreciation? Am I accepting others with warm understanding, not criticizing or blaming but taking them as they are? Am I offering myself and what is inside me? Am I contributing? Am I drawing from the creative spark within me? Am I shaping something with hands or head or heart to share?" For this truth stands above all others: we get as we give.

John, the son of one of our younger church appointees, lives in the heart of a big city. When he moved there with his family they soon became aware of a small undernourished, underprivileged little boy who lived in the immediate neighborhood. This illegitimate child of a drunken mother, totally rejected by all his kin, frequently ran across the busy street in the dead of winter, clad only in underclothes and often pursued by other children with taunts and missiles. John brought the neglected child home for his mother to help. Since John was the most popular boy on the block, the other neighborhood children changed their attitude when they found he accepted the stray.

The important thing for us today is that John's young mother stood behind him in this bit of missionary work, and when the poor little waif pitifully asked, "Could you rock me, too, a little?" she rocked him and loved him. When the time came for the boys to start public school, John's mother took them both; she told the teacher about the child's handicaps at home. The change in the boy has been almost miraculous. He is doing fairly well in school and is a sturdy, self-reliant little person.

WHAT MIGHT BE SUMMARIZED as the distinguishing differences between the fine product of Christian living being planned and produced in the fine Christian homes of the secular world today and the more far-reaching ultimate goals of the Zionics life which we try to mirror in our Latter Day Saint homes? Let me crystallize some suggestions in a few words.

We, as a part of the Restoration Movement, should feel more urgency in our religious life; we should be more vitally Christ-centered and wholly consecrated to his purposes. We are called to a return to the great joy and absolutely victorious faith of the early Christian church. We have a more definite call to intelligent living. One of our young college students, when challenged by his professor of philosophy to produce something in modern Latter Day Saint revelation which equals the inspiration of the Bible, quoted at once that gem, "The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words light and truth." His professor agreed that was equal to anything in ancient scripture.

By Mrs. S. A. Burgess

We should have more dynamic devotion to the things we know. We have a greater impetus to develop every member of the family to his greatest capacity and work together as a Zionics unit to bring to pass God's will on earth, beginning with our own lives.

Nothing is more important to a Latter Day Saint than this. Our groups of women need to study, plan, pray, and work continually for a finer product of Christian, Latter Day Saint, Zionics living from our home workshops. There are many phases and many interesting topics for group study and discussion. Here is a list I found the other day:

The participation of youth on an equal basis with adults in planning and promoting church activities and policies.

The use of family car, radio, television. Methods of educating children on the value of money.

Ways of teaching children responsibility and independence.

Clothes Make Magic, by Emmi Cotten. E. P. Dutton Company. $6.50.

One of the first things an experienced writer does when planning a written production is to visualize his potential public, its character and size. Then he slants his writing accordingly so that his ideas will be received by that public. Rarely does a writer hope to have as much as 50 per cent of the population clamoring for his literary output.

Emmi Cotten is one of the few writers who does just that. She says, Whatever you may be like, you have a clothes problem. Every woman has one, because clothes affect every woman. It is not just a matter of playing up good qualities and camouflaging bad ones; the point is that there are things about your figure, your skin, your personality, and your kind of beauty that can appear good or bad, depending on the way they are treated. . . . Many, if not most, of the things about you are clay in the hands of clothes. Remember this, and you will have taken a step in the right direction toward knowing how to wear clothes that make magic.

Every woman who has given even minimum thought to the building and maintaining of a wardrobe will realize that there is a nice distinction between Miss Cotten's handling of the clothes problem and the usual method. She focuses her attention on the woman first, not on the clothes. She analyzes her customer for body lines, colors of skin and hair, and personality, then designs clothes which take into account all of that particular woman's physical and personality assets and liabilities, thereby saving more of her beauty and charm for the delectation of the beholder. Miss Cotten believes in fashion but not in being its slave.

This book is an exposition of her method of analyzing the person and personality of her customers, and with attention to her directions, any woman can do the same job of analysis for herself.

PART I deals with line analysis. "Nature," Miss Cotten says, "has produced endless combinations of different kinds of waists and hips and shoulders in figures. But different as they are, figures can be classified if they are considered from the standpoint of comparative proportions."

She provides the reader with a yardstick—a basic figure of medium proportions—against which to measure her own figure's proportions. The chart which is based on this basic figure contains twelve figure types to be used as guides in analyzing one's proportions and determining the lines one's clothes should follow. Included also are charts to aid in line analysis preliminary to solving special problems posed by profile, neck, bust, diaphragm, abdomen, and flat and curved back.

Study of this section and practice in looking at clothes and seeing line, claims the author, will enable a woman to look at any garment in any season and know what its lines will do to her figure.

That twin-tipped wand, color, is the subject of PART II. "Color can make both good and bad magic, but there's nothing supernatural in the way it goes about it. Because there is a reason for every trick that color plays, its powers can be captured, harnessed, and employed to manufacture beauty," is Miss Cotten's teaching. It seems that colors affect each other, and that whether a color is becoming to you or not depends upon the effect that it has upon your skin and hair coloring. Six skin color types and thirteen hair color types are listed and described. From these types the author has made seventy-eight color analyses to which the reader can refer when planning a wardrobe or merely the purchase of one garment.

Luring the reader into deeper thought about clothes is the purpose of PART III. Miss Cotten writes convincingly about the relationship between the character of a woman and the character of her clothes. She has little time for the prevalent belief that a woman should express her personality in her wardrobe, for, she says, "The mood of your clothes should be in harmony with your personality, but it shouldn't express it so much as to form a background against which it can't express itself to the best possible advantage."

She admits that it is a delicate matter to analyze oneself in order that one may determine the mood of one's apparel, but it can be done. She demonstrates the method by describing the Atmosphere Game and citing case histories of women who have profited by wise choice of mood in their wardrobes.

Miss Cotten began her career as a costume designer for New York theatrical producers but found that it was more exciting to design clothes for real people in a real world. Clothes Make Magic is the result of the author's fifteen years of research and experiment in line and color and in the psychological effect of clothes on the individual woman.

FEBRUARY is a good month for getting budgets back in line, for sprucing up our homes, and for planning spring clothes and gardens. Pictures of gay flowers and clothes have a particular fascination, even though furnaces are burning brightly, and snow swirls outside our windows. February magazines cater to these interests and offer a wide variety of material.

"Just Like Mother Used to Make," McCall's, gives twelve recipes for stand-bys in American cookery. If, after trying these out, you feel the need of "getting back in shape," in the same magazine you will find "Four Steps to a Fine Figure" (rather strenuous, we must admit).

"Linen-Closet Repairs," Good Housekeeping, offers suggestions for extending the life of worn or damaged household linens.

"Sew It Quicker," Woman's Home Companion, pictures some hints and short cuts that will make you say, "Why didn't I think of that?" To help your budget, you will find "Here's How to Save on Your Milk Bill" in the food section.

"How to Prepare the Soil and Plant the Seed," American Home, looks ahead to the bright promise of spring tasks. "How to Hang Pictures" illustrates unusual arrangements. "Get Your Hook in These" gives color pictures of available patterns for hooked-rug enthusiasts. The food section offers some delicious recipes.

The Ladies' Home Journal's section on "Political Pilgrim's Progress" is particularly interesting this month, for one feature contains short sketches about thirteen women who represent all the things women do in politics.

We sometimes get critical of our own country, many times rightly so, but if you find it occurring too often, read "We Stole a Ride to Freedom," American Magazine, which is the account of the risk taken by two Czech railroad men who commandeered a train and took it to freedom through the Iron Curtain. It tells how they feel about America, now that they are living here.

Woman's Day has a sizeable section, "New Seats for Your Chairs," for those who like to work with their hands.

A variety of materials and methods are described in detail. Also of interest to those with small children are the directions for "A Toy Village," for which the only "tool" needed is a sewing machine!

If you find yourself saying "Sorry, I didn't hear you" too often, look at the

Make Friends of God's Children

By George P. Young, Jr.

WHILE TEACHING A CLASS in ancient history I was asked how we managed to find out how people lived so many years before things were written down. I mentioned in answering that archaeologists made many discoveries which gave us insight into the ancient cultures, and I also mentioned the group of natives called the Tasmanians who were discovered several years ago. These people were years behind the rest of the world. They hadn't even learned to domesticate animals. By studying Tasmanians, an idea of the life of ancient people could be gained. My students couldn't understand how the Tasmanians could be so far behind. "Didn't they want to improve themselves?" one student asked. I explained as best I could that, not knowing about the things the rest of the world knew, they couldn't improve. In fact, they probably thought they were rather well off, as modern as could be, and they were probably happy under those circumstances. But they did not know the fullness of life which it was possible to obtain and could not know the possibility for the greater happiness which goes with that fuller life. Not being able to try the things which go with civilized living, they could not become civilized.

There is always a chance that we may become somewhat like the Tasmanians. We may become satisfied with a certain condition and not want to change. We may say we are happy that way. But being satisfied may mean that we miss a greater happiness, a greater opportunity to serve.

There is one area in which this could be true—the area of fellowship. We talk a lot about it and I'm sure that at every prayer meeting we thank God for the opportunity for meeting with others. But too often the fellowship we enjoy so much is that which we have with other church members. We meet with the friends we have been meeting with for years; we enjoy them and the things they talk about—and we call this fellowship.

Well, it is, but it may be ego-building fellowship. This fills a basic need and thus is satisfying, but if we stop there we miss a greater happiness. We should expand our fellowship to include people who are not friends—people we don't know, people who may not be of our belief, of our country, of our race. This is true kingdom-building fellowship. We are bound to take the Word of God to all people, and to do this we must enjoy fellowship with them. To be satisfied with less is to be like the Tasmanians.

But how do we go about having fellowship with people we don't know? This question was answered for me as I sang one of our favorite hymns at a prayer meeting in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. I sang the words, "Make friends of God's children." It's as simple as that! There is nothing easier; I know from experience this is so. I want to tell of a particular experience which my wife and I have had which showed us that making friends of God's children is inevitable if we but mingle with them.

WE WENT TO GUATEMALA CITY last July and found opportunity to stay there for awhile. The months passed, and soon it was time to begin planning for our return trip home. This posed quite a problem for us. We wanted to come home, but transportation would be very expensive. Our decision finally was to buy two motorcycles. This would be an investment, our money would be in property which later could be sold. As neither one of us had ever ridden a motorcycle before, we decided to get small ones. Perhaps someday we'll graduate to the larger models.

With this problem out of the way another presented itself. We had to decide the road to take north. There were two possibilities. The one involved going the regular way which included a train ride over a stretch where there was no road. The train takes almost forever to get to its destination and goes about 250 miles out of the way to get there. The other possibility was to head north from Guatemala City to a place called Huehuetenango. From there it's north again to the end of the road, which goes only about twenty-eight miles to the Mexican border. We compared 250 miles with 28 and decided on the shorter distance. The route we decided to follow is the same the Pan-American highway will follow when it is finally completed in Guatemala.

We made it to Huehuetenango without much difficulty and from there to the end of the road it wasn't too bad either. At the end of the road, however, we ran into our first real problem. There was a vine hammock bridge to cross. This wasn't an ordinary bridge. It was attached to a tree and had to be approached by climbing a ladder. So up the ladder Billie and I went, pushing and pulling a motorcycle along with us. When we finally did get to the top and onto the bridge we found the cycle was too wide and kept catching in the vines of which the bridge was made. I managed to take the pedals off, which helped a bit, but we had practically to carry the machine across. I held the rear up as high as I could to clear the sides of the bridge while Billie tugged and guided at the front. It took us forty-five minutes of hard labor to do it, but we finally made the other side. We breathed a sigh of relief, turned around and saw the other machine waiting to be carried across. That was too much.

I approached two Indian men who had been watching us with great interest and asked them if they would carry the second machine across the bridge. We had proved that it could be done. After a long discussion they agreed to do it. Then came the all important question concerning the cost. Again there was a long discussion at the conclusion of which the spokesman looked up at me and said, with a questioning tone in his voice, as though he was wondering how much he could get out of us, "Ten cents?" I told them that if they did a good job I'd give them each twenty-five cents. They really earned their money.

ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE of the bridge there was a mountain to climb, and I'll bet we are the first people to have run up the side of it. The trail was much too steep and rocky for us to ride the cycles so we had to go alongside the machines making the attempt to keep them upright as they leaped over the rocks and fallen trees. Even though we had them in low gear we had to run alongside them. We would go about ten feet and then fall to the ground utterly exhausted. We began to think there was no top to the mountain—that it kept going up and up. When we had reached the halfway point we were about ready to call it quits, but an Indian came along and gave us each an orange which was enough to revive us. He wouldn't accept a cent in payment and by this simple act made two friends. This man—only half-civilized by our standards—found it easy to make friends.

Before leaving Guatemala City we had been warned of the danger of traveling through the territory of the Highlands, as northern Guatemala is called. "American surveyors have been killed there by the Indians," we had been told. When we finally did reach the top of the mountain we were in the heart of the Highlands. The warning we had received came back to us now, and I began to think that perhaps it would have been wise to have brought a gun. It soon became apparent that we were approaching a village; there were more and more Indians on the trail. They were extremely amazed and interested in us and our motorcycles, but they certainly weren't hostile. By the time we reached the village we had quite a following, and even when we stopped at a small tienda for something to eat we had an audience. Billie counted thirty-five people ringed around our little table, and there were at least that many more outside the shop looking in.

AFTER ABOUT AN HOUR'S STAY in the village we headed once more for the border. The trail north wound around a deep canyon, and after traveling for about half an hour we were almost opposite the village. At this point the trail split, and we didn't know which part to take. We heard a strange noise then and looking around we discovered that at least fifty people were watching us from the village on the other side of the canyon. They were all trying to shout to us to tell us which way to go. We couldn't understand them, so Billie started up the trail to the right. Immediately there was a thunderous "No" from the crowd. At that we both went along the one to the left, and a joyous "Si" echoed among the hills. Just before we rounded a bend we looked back at those wonderful people and all were waving and shouting "Adios, adios." Make friends of God's children? We had no trouble at all in this village of Indians.

Hours later we were still on the trail. The sun went down, and the mountain air became very cool. A little after midnight we had to stop; we were too tired to go farther. I sat by the side of the trail against a large rock, and Billie huddled against me. At least once an hour we had to get up to do exercises or move the machines a few feet in order to warm ourselves. All night long some animal moved about on a ledge of rock just above us. It was probably a puma, though we never saw the animal so we can't know for sure. Of course,

I had my Boy Scout knife for protection, so we weren't worried—much!

There haven't been many nights longer than that one. When the sun came up we decided to push on again. We went to the machines but found we couldn't move them; our strength was gone. We couldn't believe it. These were the same machines that we'd carried up a ladder, pushed up a mountainside, and pulled over boulders, but now we could not move them at all. For the first time since we'd started the trip, real worry hit us. Since we couldn't move the motorcycles we left them in the trail and started walking toward the next village. Soon hunger began to bother us, but by far our greatest discomfort came from the lack of water. The fact that there were streams near by and that there was a river roaring along within sight didn't help matters. The water wasn't safe; we were afraid to take the chance. If one of us had become ill there in the middle of nowhere it really would have been a disaster.

The morning passed and we still hadn't reached the village. By this time we were almost too weak to walk. Our mouths were so dry we couldn't speak distinctly. Then we met an Indian who gave us a dozen lemons. Like our other friend he refused to take any money. That man can never know the extent of our gratitude. We ate the lemons like apples, they were really lifesavers. Shortly after this we found a little hut by the trail. We asked if we could have something to eat, and the señora assured us we could. We had four eggs, six oranges, and coffee which we knew was safe to drink. For all this we were charged sixteen cents; it was worth sixteen dollars.

A FEW HOURS LATER we reached the village where we hired two men to go back for the machines. By this time it was evening, and we were tired—much too tired to mind the lack of beds in the place we stayed. The thin straw mats on the dirt floor were a great improvement over a rock on a mountain trail.

Sometime during the night I was awakened by a knock on our door. The men whom we had hired had come back to tell us that it was impossible to bring the machines. The next morning we hired four men and six horses. We rode back along the trail with them, and the six of us managed to get the cycles to the village by night. We carried and pulled and pushed those machines over ten miles of the most rugged mountain trails we had ever seen. The people of the village turned out en masse when we finally staggered in. There was much shouting and laughing and shaking of hands. This was quite an event—we were the first people ever to have brought motorcycles into the village. In fact we had brought the first motor vehicle of any kind there.

We went to bed but got up again at 1:00 a.m. to start for the border. The four men and their horses went along with us, for the trail ahead was just as bad as any we had covered so far. At about ten in the morning we came to the top of a large hill and there below us was Mexico and the road! We had been four days covering twenty-eight miles. The border was nothing but an old rail fence. On one side was Guatemala and wilderness, on the other side was Mexico and that beautiful highway.

As far as we could find out we were the first to take motor vehicles over the route that the Pan-American highway will one day follow in Guatemala. Now we were actually on a highway again and our troubles were over, we thought. By late that night we were in San Cristobal where we slept, this time in a bed. The next morning we were off again. We traveled all that day and all night, too. When we arrived in Oaxaca we stopped for breakfast, wrote our families, and were on our way again. At about five that afternoon we were riding along a mountain road. I was very happy—we were heading home for Christmas. I can remember that I was singing as I rode along. Billie, who was riding ahead of me, noticed that I wasn't following, at least she couldn't see me in her rear view mirror. She stopped to wait, but I still didn't put in an appearance. Suddenly she knew that something had happened, that I wasn't coming at all. She turned her machine around and headed back going down the center of the road so that she couldn't see over the edge. She found me about five miles back. I had blacked out while riding and had fallen from the motorcycle. My face was badly bruised and cut, and there were pools of blood on the highway. I couldn't remember anything about being in Mexico or anything about our stay in Guatemala. We were taken to a very small village near by where a nurse cleaned my face and bandaged it. Late that night I became rational again, but I couldn't remember a thing about the accident.

By some miracle there was sulfa and penicillin in that village. The nurse came to see me every three hours to give me a shot of the penicillin. She also prepared food for Billie and me during the two days we stayed there. I was so weak that Billie had to feed me the first day and a half. After two days in bed I was strong enough to travel again. Before leaving we asked the nurse how much we owed her for her services and the food she had prepared. She told us that her payment had been the opportunity to help us. She would not allow us to give her any money and neither would the doctor who had come to see me. They had had an opportunity to help someone in need, so they had helped—that was all. They were making friends of God's children!

THE REST OF THE TRIP home was made without much out of the ordinary happening. However, after we had crossed into Texas we were stopped by the police. It seems that two people on small motorcycles had just robbed a bank, but it wasn't very difficult to show that the small amount of money we had couldn't have come from a bank robbery.

The trip was an experience which Billie and I will never forget. It proved that making friends of God's children is simplicity in itself.

Kingdom-building fellowship brings with it the full satisfaction of utmost service in the work of God. To make friends of God's children gives the opportunity for this kind of fellowship. If we but associate with them, they will be our friends.

"What Shall We Tell Our Children About Death?" National Parent-Teacher, is a very helpful discussion of this problem that confronts parents. "Character That Clicks With Youth" is another excellent offering. If you read these two, you will no doubt also be attracted to several other fine articles in the same magazine.

All of us are, or should be, quite interested in politics in this election year. "Help Nominate Your Presidential Candidate," Reader's Digest, dispels any thought you may have that there is nothing you can do about who will be chosen to run. There are various ways in which each person can help to have his choice for President nominated.

Morris in 1889; three children were born to them. In 1901 she was married to Hezekiah Rozell; three children were born to them. One son, Glen, died while serving with the Armed Forces in World War I. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for many years.

The children who survive are Aaron Morris and Virgie Barr of Sweet Home; Rita Furrow of Portland, Oregon; Harold Rozell and Lillian Tabler of Foster, Oregon. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Cleo Thompson and J. L. Verhei. Interment was in the Ames Cemetery at Sweet Home.

LIKINS.—Charles Roland, son of John W. and Martha Likins, was born May 30, 1880, in Owosso, Michigan, and died October 24, 1951, in Berkeley, California, after a lingering illness. He was married to Anna L. Rainey on January 4, 1908, and baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1912. He was a member of the Aaronic priesthood. Besides his wife he leaves a brother, John Wesley, of Yountville, California.

NOLAN.—Sarah M., was born October 31, 1884, at North Elmsley, Ontario, and died December 8, 1951, at the home of her daughter, Dorean Nolan, after an illness of fourteen months. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 15, 1919, and was one of the first members of Ottawa Branch.

She is survived by two daughters: Dorean, with whom she lived, and Lillian Boivin; a son, Elmer Nolan; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Veitch Memorial Chapel. Elder A. E. Caldwell officiating. Burial was in Pinecrest Cemetery, Ottawa, Ontario.

ANDES.—John William, son of Samuel C. and Elizabeth Wine Andes, was born November 20, 1870, near Stanton, Virginia, and died January 22, 1952, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 21, 1881, ordained a deacon on February 26, 1893, and a teacher on December 8, 1898. For a number of years he served as pastor of the Coal Hill Branch in Missouri. He was married to Myrtle Rose Anderson on March 11, 1896; ten children were born to them. They moved to Independence in 1925 where they have resided ever since.

Besides his wife he leaves six daughters: Mrs. Gladys Preston, Mrs. Leola McCarty, Mrs. Velma Frisbey, and Maybel, Fern, and Audrie Andes, all of Independence; four sons: Hollis of Eldorado Springs, Missouri; Orral, Ivan, and Leo of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Martha Cool of Temple City, California; a brother, Jacob Andes of Independence; nineteen grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and E. W. Lloyd officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

* SUNDAY WALKING TOUR

A Sunday afternoon in January—not cold but with enough of a nip in the air to keep one moving—was an occasion for driving to an unfamiliar part of the city, parking the car, and taking out on foot. Sunday window-shopping is safe; there is no need to fear temptation because you can't buy anything, but you can look and learn. The store windows, the sidewalks and streets, though empty, confess so many things about the busy people who are there on the other days of the week. Walking is good for the mind as well as the body. You miss 90 per cent of the things to be seen riding by in a car. And freed of traffic worries, your mind has a chance to think.

On a good quiet walk, you are keenly aware of two things: the world without, and the world within. It isn't alone what you see that matters; it is what you think about what you see, and what you remember, that enriches your mind.

* THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH

In the great junk yards by Sheffield Steel, where vast quantities of scrap metal are moved to the furnaces every day, we saw a railway track with a string of steam locomotives standing, cold, rusting, and forlorn, awaiting their end. On the main line not far away a brightly painted new Diesel engine pulled a long train of cars. . . . A very few years ago, these obsolete steam locomotives were the latest thing. They bumped boxcars noisily about the switchyards. They snorted in the night. They tugged at the stream of the nation's commerce and industry on the rails. Nothing has ever been heard like their whistles. Little boys watched them go through small towns, a symbol of the romance of travel. . . . Now they rest a while in this cemetery of discarded things. Through the furnace, through the heat and the hammering of the mills, and they will undergo a resurrection, appearing in new bodies as weapons of war and instruments of peace.

* THINK

A friend is employed by the great International Business Machines organization that publishes a magazine called "Think." It's encouraging to know that somebody is interested in this almost lost art. Have you ever observed that the world is a vast conspiracy to prevent your ever thinking clearly about anything? Radios blare away in the homes never ceasing; telephones, television, and advertising pour themselves into the consciousness like a flood.

Commerce wants you to believe, no matter how preposterous the lie; government wants you to obey, no matter how unjust the tax; multitudinous drives and appeals want you to give, no matter how much your own family may be in need.

But think? In all our great democratic way of life there is no provision for it. There comes a time when, if you would possess your soul in peace, you must turn off radio and T-V, escape from the phone, throw the paper in the fire, and listen to the still small voice of your own mind.

Foundations of Zion

By Frederick M. Smith

This 87-page paper-bound text contains a series of radio addresses delivered in 1938. Into them has gone much of the basic philosophy of our stewardship program. Some of the topics are "Social Themes in Jewish and Christian Law," "Problems of Capital and Labor," and "Laws of the New Jerusalem." Prepared especially for study in priesthood groups, church school classes, as well as for personal meditation.

Henry Anderson

HENRY ANDERSON joined the Graceland faculty in the fall of 1945. He is a teacher of voice, music theory, and conductor of the concert choir. He also teaches courses in elementary school music methods and church music.

Henry was born in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1917. He was baptized there in 1929. He was graduated from Omaha Technical High School in 1935 and after working a year enrolled at Graceland. At Graceland he was on the student council, the Acacia staff, was a member of the quartet, A Cappella Choir, Oratorio Society, Graceland Players, and Lambda Delta Sigma, an honorary scholastic society. After his graduation from Graceland in 1938, he attended Omaha University and Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, from which he received his bachelor of music education degree in 1940. In 1940-41 he taught at North High School in Omaha, then went to Chicago to work in radio. He was a member of a male octet called "The Northerners" which, together with a fifteen piece orchestra and a soprano soloist, had a half hour radio program. In the fall of 1942 he went back into the field of teaching and taught in schools in Colorado and Nebraska before coming to Graceland in 1945. After joining the Graceland faculty he studied at Northwestern University and received his master of music education degree in 1948. At Northwestern he became a member of Pi Kappa Lambda, an honorary music fraternity. He was also a member of the National Association of Teachers of Singing.

Henry has taught church school classes and was on last year's staff at Camp Yopeca where he taught a Book of Mormon class, a class in sketching, and assisted on the camp log. He is director of the Lamoni Branch Choir and is active in other church activities. He is a priest.

In October, 1942, Henry married the former Bertha Mae Lorange of Lamoni; they have one son, Larry, age 8. Henry is well known for his cartoon books (published by Herald House): The First Americans, two volumes of Our Church's Story, and a set of coloring books, Peter and Pamela. He has sold cartoons to the Meredith Publishing Company, has done some illustrating for the Stepping Stones and Graceland publications. He also sponsors the Art Guild at Graceland.

News and Notes

LETTER RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT

President Israel A. Smith received a letter February 6, from Brother Lee Quick, an old-time missionary who now lives in Mapleton, Kansas, expressing his appreciation for the many cards, letters, telegrams, and phone calls received on his eightieth birth anniversary. The First Presidency sent Brother Quick some flowers, and he expressed his appreciation for these, also. He stated in his letter his thankfulness for the many blessings God has given him, and a desire to continue serving the Lord.

CHURCH HAS TV BROADCAST

The First Presidency in behalf of the administration and the General Church has expressed appreciation to Garland Tickemyer, president of the Los Angeles Stake, and his associates for securing and televising a church program. The program appeared on the television show, "Great Churches of the Golden West," and originated at Central Church in Los Angeles. Evangelist Elbert A. Smith was the speaker. Also on the stand during the broadcast with Brother Smith and Brother Tickemyer were Bishop Stanley J. Kelley and Elder Tom Beil.

EDWARDS IN MINNEAPOLIS

President F. Henry Edwards was in Minneapolis, Minnesota, the week end of February 16 and 17 and attended the conference of the Minneapolis District. Associated with Brother Edwards were Seventy John Puckett and Elder D. D. Smith, appointees. Elder Wesley Elvin is the district president. Brother Edwards reported that there was a fine spirit present and good attendance.

ATTEND INSTITUTE IN IOWA

Apostle Maurice L. Draper and Elder Merle Guthrie, General Church Statistician, attended a priesthood institute in Missouri Valley, Iowa, February 16 and 17. They conducted class for approximately seventy-five priesthood members, and Brother Draper delivered the Sunday morning sermon. Apostle Draper reports that the afternoon panel and forum held on Sunday was a stimulating discussion with widespread participation, and was considered by many to be the spiritual climax of the institute.

CONDUCTS SERIES

Apostle Aruthur Oakman conducted a series of meetings in San Antonio, Texas, February 10-17. Elder Joseph Berry is the pastor there. An excellent response to the series has been reported.

COUNCIL MEETINGS HELD

The Council of Twelve was in session from February 19 until February 26 when the Joint Council meetings began.

IN ST. LOUIS

Elder F. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, was in St. Louis, Missouri, February 16 and 17 for a youth rally. On Saturday he was present at a leader's meeting and attended the banquet, where he and District President Frank McDonald were guest speakers. Seventy Cecil Ettinger conducted a worship service on Sunday and Brother Mesle taught a class. Brother Dan Belcher, director of the rally, preached the morning sermon on Sunday. A fellowship service was held in the afternoon, and Brother McDonald was the speaker. The theme for the rally was "Youth United in Action for Christ."

An Enlightened Leadership

More and more I am impressed with the thought that the progress of the church is tied up with the vision and clear thinking of its leadership in its various departments. Because of that feeling we are happy to call attention to the efforts made in recent months to provide leadership helps and ideas through priesthood studies, tracts, Herald articles, and particularly in Guidelines.* Some of our best resource materials for leaders are now appearing in the last named magazine where it can be kept in more convenient reference form.

I have just scanned through the March-April, 1952, issue and will mention a few of its offerings, as space will not permit me to give more of its many good features.

In its Priesthood section Bishop G. L. DeLapp discusses "The Spirit of Stewardship" and Apostle A. A. Oakman presents "The Need of Man" in a helpful and inspirational way. Elder Evan Fry has skillfully presented some of his best thinking in "The Treasure House of the Mind."

In "Whatever Things . . ." the editor gives some practical suggestions to such topics as "Public Relations" helps, "Cradle Roll" guidance, using the Herald "Bulletin Board," publication of "Obituaries," processing "Calls to the Priesthood," presenting "New Member Gifts" at confirmation services, and "Blessing Certificates."

Two timely articles are presented in the Religious Education section. "Prebaptismal Instruction for Eight-year-olds" is discussed by Elder Glaude A. Smith, while Mrs. Aarona Booker Kohlman gives some good ideas on "Preparing Children for Conference."

The Women's Department gives a seasonal emphasis in "Easter Means Life Anew," by Mrs. S. A.

Burgess. The Music Department presents an interesting analogy in "Music and Kingdom-building," by Brother Wallace Fike.

We realize that leaders are usually selected from the busiest people in our groups. They cannot read all of the good things which appear in print, and some that they should read must wait for a convenient season. We suggest, however, that they get these helpful articles regularly every two months. They can examine the contents so they will know what is available, then file the magazine where it can be reached conveniently when the need arises.

Regarding Collier's Encyclopedia

When I was in the Pacific area in 1950 I noted certain advertisements in magazines and other publications by the Collier Company that it was preparing to publish an encyclopedia. I addressed a letter to this company while in Sydney, Australia, which went to the editors from the Auditorium. I said:

Because of confusion in the public mind the church I represent has not had a fair representation in histories and encyclopedias, and in the interest of historical accuracy and in fairness to our organization, we should like to confer with your editors before your work goes to press. I have contacted Grollier, Americana, and others with profit to them, and believe I can be helpful to you.

Will you kindly write me?

Receiving no reply—not even an acknowledgment of this inquiry—after waiting three months, on Deember 6, 1950, I wrote again, this time quoting my former letter, and stating no acknowledgment or reply had been received, and adding:

Inasmuch as I represent an organization of approximately 150,000, it seems to me you would have an interest in seeing that we were given some consideration. We have a weekly paper reaching the homes of perhaps 20,000 (estimated); we should like to be able to give your work at least a favorable report.

To this request, reasonable as it was, no attention was paid.

Now, from our members come protests because of the allegations in Collier's Encyclopedia under the heading, "Mormons," about Joseph Smith, which are grossly false, containing untrue statements about both himself and Emma Smith.

We have written to this company, calling attention to their discourtesy in failing to answer our letters, in which we say:

If this case is any criterion of the quality of the work of your editors, then your encyclopedia is certainly impoverished and most undependable and unworthy of the patronage of honest people.

The editors were invited to learn the facts, as I have shown, and they spurned our offer to enlighten them as to our position, and as we did give them this opportunity, I believe in fairness to our cause and the fight we have made since 1852 to get the facts about Joseph Smith before the world, our members should not give their support to this publishing concern or encourage in any way the sale and distribution of the encyclopedia.

The statements are so grossly erroneous, our members, in my opinion, should write this book company (640 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, New York) and register their earnest protest.

Duties of the District President

(The following statement was prepared by the General Conference Committee on the Book of Rules and will be presented to the 1952 General Conference for such action as the Conference may think wise.)

The district president is the co-ordinating administrative officer of the church in the district over which he presides. He is entrusted with the care and direction of the branches and district missions through the properly constituted officers of these branches and district missions, and of the nonresident members of the district directly or through the nonresident pastor. It is his duty to plan the extension and development of the work of the church within the district.

All district officers should report to the district president and hold themselves subject to his general direction and counsel. District bishops and bishop's agents have specific trustee responsibilities in which they are subject to the direction and counsel of the Presiding Bishopric but where either a bishop or bishop's agent serves as trustee of a district, or a branch, he is directly responsible to the district or branch president.

The district president should be kept fully informed of the condition of all branches of the district and should have frequent consultation with the branch presidents concerning their plans and difficulties. He should be informed of the business meetings of the branches of the district and invited to attend and offer any suggestions or nominations he may desire to present. In emergencies, and especially when the branch president is incapacitated or the branch shall have fallen into decay, he may request or call a branch business meeting; in this or any other necessary situation he may recommend procedure, present nominations for office, or do such other things as will best protect the interests of the church. When these interests shall require, he may take over direction of the branch for a time, administering the work thereafter—either directly or indirectly—until a more permanent arrangement can be made. If the district president is thought to have proceeded unlawfully in any of these matters, appeal is to the next higher administrative officer.

In all his work the district president may be assisted by one or more counselors chosen from among the elders and sustained by the vote of the district; provided always that the responsibility of decision in the district presidency shall rest on the district president and shall not be transferred from him to a majority of the district presidency by any action of that presidency.

The district president should seek the counsel of the general church officers concerned, and should respect this counsel, subject to the appeal provided in the law (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4).

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Charles Joseph Hunt has gone to his eternal reward. His passing came at the Independence Sanitarium Sunday morning, February 24. By all human standards a great and noble man has left us. He was born in a log cabin in Nebraska ninety-one years ago. After graduating from high school, he entered the merchandising business in northwestern Iowa where he labored for fourteen years. He was baptized in Deloit, Iowa, in 1886 and received five ordinations during his many years of ministry: teacher, elder, seventy, high priest, and bishop.

He received his first General Conference appointment in 1892 and labored continuously in the field for forty years. He was noted for his enthusiasm and cheerfulness. His mind remained active till the last. He carried on extensive correspondence in missionary endeavors after he was no longer able to travel. He was a frequent contributor to the Herald over a long period of years.

Considering his opportunities for training and service, few men have served their age as well as C. J. Hunt. If he ever receives an adequate recognition and commendation it will have to come in the courts of heaven where his works are best known. A glorious resurrection awaits him.

Court Procedure

Recommendations concerning changes in court procedure (adopted April 13, 1932) will be presented at the forthcoming General Conference. The Presidency will be pleased to receive any suggestions concerning such changes from administrative officers and others concerned.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Report on Baptisms in 1951

The 4,952 baptisms reported in 1951 give the church a baptismal increase of 3.43 per cent. Forty-one districts and stakes equaled or topped this figure, while 31 fell below it. Five missions abroad topped this figure. Ten districts had a baptismal increase of 5 per cent or better: 1. Spring River District, 6.27 per cent; 2. Kaw Valley District, 6.22 per cent; 3. Oregon District, 6.05 per cent; 4. West Virginia District, 5.86 per cent; 5. Southern Indiana District, 5.53 per cent; 6. Rich Hill District, 5.37 per cent; 7. Nauvoo District, 5.21 per cent; 8. Des Moines District, 5.07 per cent; 9. Northern Michigan District, 5.02 per cent; and 10. Idaho District, 5 per cent.

Ten districts and stakes had 125 or more baptisms reported in 1951 as follows: 1. Center Stake of Zion, 316; 2. Spring River District, 174; 3. Northern California District, 157; 4. Kansas City Stake, 154; 5. Far West Stake, 134; 6. Gulf States District, 134; 7. Oregon District, 133; 8. Central Oklahoma District, 130; 9. Los Angeles Stake, 128; 10. Detroit International Stake, 127.

Repentance for Our Time

By Dr. Otto H. Elser

Revision of a sermon given at West College Church, Independence, Missouri, on August 19, 1951

AS A CARDINAL GOSPEL PRINCIPLE, repentance has received major emphasis in both ancient and modern Scripture. Simply and forcefully, the mind of God concerning the great importance of this principle has been constantly revealed. Early in the Restoration Movement, Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and David Whitmer received light on this subject by way of commandment.

Behold, I command all men everywhere to repent, and I speak unto you, even as unto Paul, mine apostle, for you are called even with that same calling with which he was called. Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; for, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him on conditions of repentance. And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth. Wherefore you are called to cry repentance unto this people. And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

Repentance implies the existence of sin; since the beginning of time, sin has been a corollary to human existence, and no one will deny the widespread presence of sin in the world today. It is a most insidious process, and only as we realize the constant danger that we face from it can we guard against its inroads in our lives. Going one step farther, we find that sin always implies the co-existence of bondage, and it entails the greatest bondage that man can know—removal from the power of God. The inevitable end result of such processes is spiritual death, as surely as malignant disease causes physical death.

These vital, fundamental issues have enormous implications in our spiritual development and salvation. Several years ago, in one of his missionary sermons, Apostle Arthur Oakman emphasized a statement which points up the importance and necessity of repentance in the life of man. He said, "No man ever delivered himself from the bondage of sin." In sin we are cut off from the saving power of God, and only the power of God is capable of delivering us from this bondage. Through the avenue of repentance only is it given to us to be redeemed and to be released by that power from our sin and from ourselves. The love of God frees us from sin when repentance opens our hearts to him.

THE NEED FOR REPENTANCE today is as widespread as the sin which envelops our society. We need repentance on all levels—international, national, local, individual. Most of our own individual sins are the insidious sins of omission—the things we fail to do—and of these we need constant reminding. But what of the church at large—all of us together? What might the pattern of repentance be for the church as a whole in relation to the times in which we live? Of what things need we be especially aware? It is, after all, the awareness of our sins, the realization of our problems, and the understanding of the forces that motivate our actions that open the floodgates of repentance and make possible, through the saving power of God, the deliverance from bondage and the return to the pathway of light and truth. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom"; just so, the awareness of our sins is the beginning of repentance. What, then, are some of the more important problems which we face as a church today? What are the sins of our time for which we are all responsible together, and of which we all need to repent in order to accomplish the work of our Heavenly Father?

Perhaps the greatest indictment against the church today is the sin of conformity to the world about us. It is inevitable that the body of the church, individuals or groups, should be as much as any other segment of the population of these days, relentlessly driven toward conformity in external things. Because we are part of the age, we become aware, ever more acutely, of being caught up—at times under protest, but at other times with less resistance—in the great leveling process, the trend toward standardization and regimentation, the reduction of all things to the common denominator. It is the age of mass production, mass education, mass entertainment, the attempt to achieve "the greatest good for the greatest number." It is the age of statistics; everything we do, somehow, is never an individual or isolated act, but fits into some trend or cycle which, whether significant or not, lends itself to statistical analysis. And while no one will count such standardization an unmixed blessing, yet in terms of leisure and convenience some aspects of this evolution have contributed greatly to the enjoyment of life.

THE CONFORMITY which constitutes the real sin of the church is that which compromises the principles, the ideals, the hopes, the faith of the Restoration Movement in the direction of alignment with those of the world at large. Every age has had its achievements, its crossroads, its crises. The marvelous achievements of our own age have tended to generate trust in the power of man, and the church has not been free from that tendency. Neither have we escaped entirely the disillusionment of the last generation with its two world wars, nor the confusion and turmoil of the present crisis. The transition from firm conviction to indifference and doubt on the part of many has not been altogether surprising. Irwin Edman, in a recent essay, has echoed this indifference:

If it is not the psychiatrists, it is the theologians who remind us what depths unmentionable are in our natures. All this should, one supposes, have a tonic effect upon us. But it is clear to some of us, at least, that these home truths about ourselves do not help us much. If human nature is the sink of iniquity happily claimed for it by the neo-St. Pauls of our time, then, save for grace (which it is hard to believe will ever reach such as us), the world is really doomed. . . . Well, if we cannot be washed clean, we may as well wallow in the dirt of our sins and enjoy our own nastiness.²

The purpose of the Restoration was, in part, to provide the direct antithesis to such a progression of ideas, to substitute a philosophy of life and hope for one of despair and abandon. To come out of the world is the very essence of Reorganized Latter Day Saint philosophy, and this admonition is accompanied by the strong voice of warning:

Verily I say unto you, Ye are clean but not all; and there is none else with whom I am well pleased, for all flesh is corruptible before me, and the powers of darkness prevail upon the earth, among the children of men, in the presence of all the hosts of heaven, which causeth silence to reign, and all eternity is pained, and the angels are waiting the great command to reap down the earth, to gather the tares that they may be burned; and, behold, the enemy is combined.³

A PROPOS OF THE TIMES in which we live, especially with respect to the drives for conformity, Howard Mumford Jones presented a lecture on Emerson, that great nonconformist, to a group of senior students at Harvard College. He said that he was speaking of Emerson in order to revalidate an old Harvard custom—the custom of dissent. The protection of dissent, he continued, is old at Harvard, and long may it be so. “Dissent may have no other place to go if the drives for conformity continue. For a slow, irresistible drive against dissent does go forward. That is why Emerson is important.”⁴ He emphasized, finally, that the great contribution of Emerson was that he believed each person—anyone—had infinity behind him. His faith was not in machinery, but in man thinking, whereas we today are proud of machines that think, and suspicious of any man who tries to.

The pattern of repentance for our time ought to shape itself about this concept of “man thinking.” Perhaps the significance of the term “dissent” may come into sharper focus if we think of its meaning not as “disagreement” but in terms of its Latin equivalent—“thinking apart.” Therein lies the true essence of the Restoration Movement. Therein is the real significance of being a “peculiar people.” Zion shall be redeemed by a people thinking and acting apart from the rest of the world. The principle of dissent is inherent in the revelations to the Saints of today as well as those in ancient Scripture.

Consider the following: “For I will raise up unto myself a pure people, that will serve me in righteousness;”⁵ “And go ye out from among the wicked. Save yourselves. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord.”⁶ It is this kind of repentance that will free us from ourselves and give us opportunity to possess our souls. Repentance of this sin of conformity will bring the church to new heights of endeavor, will regenerate a sense of commission to teach the children of men and send the testimony into all the world, and will inspire an awakened conscience of the destiny which is ours to fulfill.

Emphasis has been placed on repentance for the church at large, all of us together, but in the final analysis repentance, like marriage and education, is a private affair. It is the personal and special relationship of one human being with his Heavenly Father, and in that relationship no one else can substitute for us. May we, each one, be constantly aware of this basic truth and, having entered in by the gate, let us then “press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men.”⁷

The Price of Fear

An Arab folk tale relates that Pestilence once met a caravan upon the desert-way to Bagdad. “Why,” asked the Arab chief, “must you hasten to Bagdad?”

“To take 5,000 lives,” Pestilence replied.

Upon the way back from the City of the Caliphs, Pestilence and the caravan met again. “You deceived me,” the chief said angrily. “Instead of 5,000 lives, you took 50,000!”

“Nay,” said Pestilence. “Five thousand and not one more. It was Fear who killed the rest.”

The Wheel in Ancient America

By Paul M. Hanson

AMONG the engineering achievements of pre-Columbian peoples in Peru and Mexico are great roads, remains of which still exist. We read of paved roads in Peru at the time of the Spanish conquest:

In the Central Andes, the Inca were famed for their roads. It is highly probable that roads were built in much earlier periods, but archaeological confirmation of this is lacking. The Inca, however, maintained a network of roads which covered the four principal divisions of their empire.¹

Traces of the Inca roads are found in many parts of Peru. Some roads are paved with slabs and are as much as 12 m. (about 40 feet) in width.²

Two main roads ran the length of the empire, one along the coast and the other in the highlands, while traverse roads connected all important towns with these roads and with one another.

The coast road was 12 to 15 feet (4 to 5 m.) wide and, where it passed through irrigated valleys, it was lined with molded mud walls, which were sometimes painted with figures of animals and other designs. A channel of water ran along its side and in places fruit trees overhung the walls for shade.

The highland road was narrower and unwallled, but the broken country demanded even greater engineering skill. On steep slopes it zigzagged to reduce the grade and was provided with stone steps where necessary. In marshy places or in areas subject to inundation, it ran on a causeway built up of sod blocks. The causeways were 15 to 22 feet (5 to 7 m.) wide, and 3 to 6 feet (1 to 2 m.) high. They were sometimes paved with flat stones, and at intervals had culverts roofed with stone slabs.³

There were many of these roads, traversing different parts of the kingdom; but the most considerable were the two which extended from Quito to Cuzco and, again diverging from the capital, continued in a southern direction toward Chili.

One of these roads passed over the grand plateau, and the other along the lowlands in the borders of the ocean. The former was much the more difficult achievement, from the character of the country. It was conducted over pathless sierras buried in snow; galleries were cut for leagues through the living rock; rivers were crossed by means of bridges that swung suspended in the air; precipices were scaled by stairways hewn out of the native bed; ravines of hideous depth were filled up with solid masonry; in short, all the difficulties that beset a wild and mountainous region, and which appall the most courageous engineer of modern times, were encountered and successfully overcome. The length of the road, of which only scattered fragments remain, is variously estimated from fifteen hundred to two thousand miles; and stone pillars, in the manner of European milestones, were erected at stated intervals of somewhat more than a league, all along the route. Its breadth scarcely exceeded twenty feet.⁴ (Photograph by the author).

Roads were built on an extensive scale also in Mexico.

In ancient times Chichen Itza and all the great and lesser cities of the Yucatan peninsula were linked by a network of smooth, hard-surfaced highways. The Mayas of today call these old roads zac-be-ob, or white ways. . . .

The largest and longest of these ancient roadways connects Chichen Itza with the once important cities of Uxmal and Tiho. It is twenty-five feet wide. The long road from Chichen Itza to ancient Zac-ci (now Valladolid) and the unnamed but important towns between Zacci and Lake Coba, is bifurcated again and again into more and more narrow highways, resembling creeks flowing together to form eventually a mighty river.⁵

UNDER THE TITLE of "The Great 'White Ways' of the Maya" we read:

Recent discovery in the jungle-covered region of northeastern Yucatan, forty miles out of Coba, of a segment of solid stone, 13 feet long, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ feet in diameter, and weighing about five tons, nicely fashioned into cylindrical form, draws attention once again to the fact that the ancient occupants of an area, long uninhabited, numbered among the other remarkable skills to which they had attained, the building of raised roads of paved stone. . . .

Study of Coba and the region thereabouts has revealed the fact that it is at the center of a network of raised, constructed roads which run off north, east, south and west and connect various groups of ruins located about the chain of small, fresh-water lakes that is such a distinguishing feature of the district. . . .

It was while cutting his way through the thick bush, twenty-two miles out of Yaxuna, that Villa came upon the stone roller—which may fairly be called the first American road roller—lying on top of the causeway toward one side, in all probability just where it had been left by the builders centuries before. . . .

The magnificent causeways of Coba testify eloquently to the fact that the Maya of that region and period, in possessing the capacity to plan and execute community projects, calling for so great a degree of organizing ability, had come a long way along the path of civilization.⁶

MANY WRITERS, some of eminence, say the wheel was not known in America in pre-Columbian times. The implication of this, if not the argument, is that the ancestors of the Indians did not come from Asia—if so, they would have brought with them a knowledge of the wheel.

In the Book of Mormon are several references to the use of chariots, of which the following from about 90 B. C. is a sample:

Now the king had commanded his servants previous to the time of the watering of their flocks, that they should prepare his horses and chariots, and conduct him forth to the land of Nephi.⁷

It is now established that the wheel was used in America long before Cortez conquered Mexico.

For a long time it was thought that the Mayas were unfamiliar with the use of the wheel. Recent findings by the Smithsonian Institution in Vera Cruz, reported upon at a conference of the Mexican Society of Anthropology in September, 1946, appear to put this theory in doubt.⁸

The following is from Gordon F. Ekholm, who writes under the heading of "Wheeled Toys in Mexico":

In my opinion, the evidence to be presented indicates that the Indians of Mexico had some knowledge of the principle of the wheel in pre-Conquest times. This will come as a surprise to many, because the supposed absence of any knowledge of this principle in the New World has often been stressed in discussions concerning the origin of the American Indian and his culture.⁹

A considerable number of wheeled vehicles have been uncovered. One was found by Roberto Pavon in the town of Panuco, Vera Cruz. Dr. Ekholm in referring to this states he found "twenty-two examples of separate wheels identical to those belonging to the complete toy. Many of these were found in the suburbs of Tampico." He further says: "The evidence reviewed so far seems to me to indicate fairly conclusively that miniature wheeled vehicles were made, and there was therefore some knowledge of the principle of the wheel in pre-Conquest Mexico."¹⁰

It does not come as a surprise to believers in the Book of Mormon that a knowledge of the wheel was possessed in America in pre-Conquest times. Truth is bold, often making affirmations and waiting for the future to disclose confirming evidence. This is strikingly true concerning numerous claims in the Book of Mormon which was published to the world in 1830.

A wheeled relic, obtained by Marshall H. Saville on one of his expeditions to Oaxaca between the years 1898 and 1902, is in the American Museum of Natural History.

Under the heading of "Additional Evidence of Wheeled Toys in Mexico," we read in the American Antiquity:

Two recent articles have pointed out the use of wheeled toys in pre-Spanish times in Mexico. Evidence points to ceramic wheeled toys having been used in several localities in that country. Ekholm found them at Panuco, Vera Cruz; Staub collected one just south of Panuco; Drucker describes several from Tres Zapotes, Vera Cruz; Charnay dug up some at Tenenepango, southeast of Mexico City; and one was obtained by Saville in the "Valley of Oaxaca."¹¹

Because of statements from leading writers that the wheel was unknown in the New World, we now read: "The presence of wheeled toys in the New World must be recognized as completely unexpected."

IT IS REASONABLE to believe that such an important mechanical principle involved in the toys was put to practical use by the ancient Americans who proved themselves capable of many marvelous achievements. (See illustration 2.)

I saw the wheeled vehicle shown in the picture in the Natural History Building of the United States National Museum (Smithsonian Institution). It was excavated at Tres Zapotes, Vera Cruz, Mexico, by the Smithsonian National Geographic Society Expedition of 1938-40, under the leadership of Dr. Matthew W. Stirling.

And now we come to the argument to end all arguments against the diffusion of knowledge or traits from the Old to the New World—the so-called absence of the wheel in America.

This has been dinned into our ears, in season and out, and it would be difficult if not impossible to find any book on American anthropology in which this lack has not been stressed. . . . We even tried to confound our inquisitors by countering with the question as to why the Maya and the Inca needed miles of paved roads, 25 feet or more in width, if wheeled vehicles were unknown—but answer there was none (and we doubt if there is one).¹²

Tres Zapotes is a rich archaeological site lying about midway between Vera Cruz and Coatzacoalcos, the Gulf of Mexico port of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. The archaeology of the region is virtually unknown. Colossal heads and numerous other carved monuments were excavated here in 1940 under the leadership of Dr. Stirling. Among the relics are some of the finest examples of stone carving of ancient America. It is said no rock of the type from which the monuments were carved exists at any point closer to the site than fifty miles.

Here remains have been found that are attributed to the "Olmec" civilization. The region is part of what appears to have been occupied by the Book of Mormon peoples until the destruction of the Nephite civilization in the battle of A. D. 385. Very little is known of the "Olmec" culture; it was very early, and one wonders if it may prove to be the basic civilization out of which was developed the Maya, Zapotecs, Teotihuacan, Toltec, and other classic American cultures.

Just Follow the Form

By Bishop W. N. Johnson

TOMORROW, the fourth Sunday of January, was to be Stewardship Emphasis Day throughout the district. Tithing statements were to be handed to the bishop following the morning sermon. That was the immediate reason for Brother Jones being busily engaged at the desk in his living room, trying to complete his tithing statement. The figures obstinately refused to tell the simple facts as he saw them, and he was becoming more unhappy by the minute. He grumbled to himself, and Sister Jones, who had prayed patiently for the day when the family would be found complying fully with the financial law of the church, sent another prayer on its way.

New Year's Day last year Brother Jones had filed a First Tithing Statement which showed he owed $500 tithing on that date. During the year he had paid $500 tithing and was very happy about the achievement. Altogether it had been the best year he had known in the church, and he felt the tithing payment had something to do with his enriched spiritual life and that of his family. His income during the year had been $5,000, his necessary living expenses, $4,000, leaving an increase of $1,000 on which tithing was due. He had already made a check for $100 to be attached to his statement, but the figures were not working out correctly.

His first penciled draft lay before him. He read the last six lines again:

(Q) Increase for period subject to tithing (Subtract Y from X)	$	1,000	00
(R) Tithing due on the increase (one tenth of Line Q)		100	00
(S) Balance tithing due shown on previous report(Line Z from last report)
(T) Total (add lines R and S)		100	00
(U) Amount paid during period covered by this statement		600	00
(Z) Balance Tithing Due at Close of Period (Paid in Advance)		500	00

HE HAD SCRIBBLED the figures on the last line in disgust, for he knew his tithing was not overpaid.

"It's no surprise to me that the average member contributes less than ten dollars a year to the 'General Fund,'" he said to his wife. "Look at our situation. We decide to file our inventory and make our annual accounting, but when I follow this form through logically, it shows us $500 overpaid on our tithing. The church ought to be able to design a form that a person of average intelligence could complete without all this difficulty."

He appeared to be on the verge of thrusting everything back into the desk, and Sister Jones had a brief moment of panic before sending another silent petition to the throne of grace. Brother Jones erased the offending figures, and made a second attempt.

That was more like it, but he was still unhappy. He didn't want to brag

(Q) Increase for period subject to tithing (Subtract Y from X)	$	1,000	00
(R) Tithing due on the increase (one tenth of Line Q)		100	00
(S) Balance tithing due shown on previous report(Line Z from last report)
(T) Total (add lines R and S)		100	00
(U) Amount paid during period covered by this statement		100	00
(Z) Balance Tithing Due at Close of Period

about the $600 tithing he had paid in thirteen months, but he had probably contributed more tithing last year than anyone else in the branch.

He looked at Line "S" again, and read it carefully for the first time. There was the source of all his trouble! He had been thinking that as he had paid the tithing due on his previous statement, he should write "none" on that line. He took the pencil and revised the figures:

(Q) Increase for period subject to tithing (Subtract Y from X)	$	1,000	00
(R) Tithing due on the increase (one tenth of Line Q)		100	00
(S) Balance tithing due shown on previous report(Line Z from last report)		500	00
(T) Total (add lines R and S)		600	00
(U) Amount paid during period covered by this statement		600	00
(Z) Balance Tithing Due at Close of Period

"Now that looks more like it," he said to his wife who had been looking over his shoulder furnishing moral support. "It's really simple if a fellow just reads the form." That reminded him of the class on financial law at the last reunion. The bishop had devoted one lecture to the matter of filing tithing statements, and had kept repeating the advice to "follow the form." He had spent more time than seemed necessary in emphasizing the two figures needed in order to complete the Annual Tithing Statement correctly after ascertaining the increase for the period. One was the last figure on the preceding statement, which must always be brought forward to the new statement and served to tie the tithing statements together. The other was the amount of tithing paid during the period covered by the statement. A considerable number of filers made errors on either one or both of these lines, according to the bishop.

HE LEANED BACK in the chair and reviewed his statement. He had filled in the upper left hand corner to read: "This Statement Covers Period From January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1951." He smiled as he remembered the bishop telling about a very devoted church member who some years previously suddenly awoke to the fact that he was paying only about half his tithing because of a very simple error he was making on each Annual Tithing Statement. This brother always made a substantial tithing payment when filing his statement each January covering the year just closed. He would take credit for this payment on the statement filed at that time, and would include it again with the "Amount paid during the period covered by this statement" on the next year's statement. He had occasion to review his statement for several years and discovered that he owed an additional $1,000.00 tithing!

Suddenly Brother Jones sat up straight, and then grinned sheepishly. "Follow the form," he said to himself. "If I had left that $600 entered on Line "U" the bishop would have been investigating to see why it had not reached his office with our solicitor's report, and when I received my Annual Statement of General Church Contributions from headquarters, it would have shown $500 paid during the year and not $600 as I was about to claim."

He corrected his pencil copy, filled in the identifying data carefully on a new form, entered the corrected figures, and signed the statement with a flourish, then took the form and the fountain pen to Sister Jones in the kitchen for her signature. They read the closing lines of the statement together.

from headquarters by the Annual Statement of General Church Contributions. It's hard for me to believe what the bishop told us last reunion about so many folks making errors in lines 'S' and 'U'."

For a moment Brother Jones thought his good wife was laughing at him, but kind in grateful recognition of his redeeming love."

Stewardship, to be effective, should be an integral part of the whole church program. This doctrine applied should help to develop within the church a power for witnessing which will lead the people individually and collectively into the more abundant life.

The book is recommended on the basis of clarity of expression. To some it may be disappointing to see the rather strong emphasis placed on stewardship as a means of raising church budgets and meeting church obligations, when surely it must have been the intention to have shown more of the social aspects of stewardship.

YOU KNOW," Brother Jones commented, "it is really a very simple task to complete this Annual Tithing Statement form. First you determine your increase for the year. If you have the last figure from your previous statement and the amount of tithing paid during the year, you can't go wrong in computing your tithing due at the end of the period. This statement is a continuation of our First Tithing Statement. It agrees with our solicitor's report, and the amount on Line 'U' will be confirmed she merely said, "Don't forget, my dear, that lots of folks can't handle complicated figures as you do."

"Perhaps not," he agreed modestly, "but this is really very simple. The average person can complete it without any trouble at all if he will just follow the form. That's all there is to it."

He went back to the desk to attach the check and place the statement in an envelope for tomorrow's service.

Sister Jones' silent prayer was one of sheer thanksgiving.

Public Relations Manual for Churches

By Stanley I. Stuber

Doubleday and Co., $3.00

Taking as his text, "Religious principles can win the world—provided the voice of the local church is heard," Mr. Stuber has prepared a book full of sound suggestions and advice on how to make the work of the church most effective in the community.

While covering the field of public relations thoroughly, he goes well beyond the field of publicity into the particular areas of church administration which can be made instrumental in creating either a favorable or an unfavorable impression on the public, especially upon those whom the church is seeking to evangelize.

In twenty-five chapters divided into nearly three hundred sections, each on a specific phase of public relations, the author touches everything from the preparation of a newspaper story to humanizing the church budget. His advice is as sound for Latter Day Saints as for any other religious group except that many of his helps are impractical for small branches.

The weakness of Mr. Stuber's book for use by Latter Day Saints as a public relations manual is in its lack of sufficient and well-selected examples and illustrations of layout and content for church people who are not versed in the field of church publicity, and in its almost too voluminous coverage, which is obviously aimed at professional ministry.

This book should be most useful to church appointees and to district presidents and pastors who are particularly interested in and willing to take the time to provide sound public relations as well as to assure good publicity for their churches.

Stewardship Enriches Life

By C. W. Hatch

Warner Press, 75 cents

The theme of this book centers in the change which can come to people through sharing experience of the Christian religion. The author has indicated a wide experience in the field of Christian stewardship in so far as it pertains to the usual interpretation of such things as an acknowledgment of the divinity of all things created. A sense of loyalty and devotion results as one is led through the steps of acknowledgment, sharing, and the ultimate results of such experiences.

Stewardship is indicated as a form of divine entrustment, which, by its very nature carries spiritual connotations. It begins with God, the owner of all, and results in the teachings that every true Christian is a trustee who has a responsibility for the wise administration of his entrustment. As such, stewardship results from a deep sense of one's responsibility.

The author has indicated that it is unfortunate we today do not have a more suitable synonym or substitute for the word "stewardship." There are entirely too many people who associate with it only the giving of money. While it is true the giving of money is a part of stewardship, the more important factor is that it is a principle of life.

There is built into the very structure of each individual the principle, man must give to live. Man's spiritual enrichment is enhanced by giving. Abundant life results from an outflow from the individual. The keynote of stewardship teaching, according to the author, is found in the words of Jesus as recorded in Matthew 16: 24, 25: "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

No one can avoid being a steward—stewardship responsibility applies to all. It is a sharing life which first blesses the steward, then those who receive from him. The definition of stewardship used by the author is one widely accepted among Christian leaders. It is as follows: "Christian stewardship is the practice of systematic and proportionate giving of time, talent, and material possessions, based on the conviction that these are a trust from God to be used in his service for the benefit of all man-

The Lord's Supper and Spiritual Health

By Ray Ashenurst

WE NEED the sustaining power of the Lord's Supper. The nourishment we obtain from this ordinance can be measured only by the progress we make toward the kingdom of which every ordinance of Christ prophesies. We are born into a new family life when we become members of the church through baptism. To suppose that we can do without the spiritual "vitamins" furnished through the ordinances is to be just as inconsistent as the farmer who broke his horse from eating, only to find to his chagrin that the horse died.

Jesus expressed himself well. Sometimes his words were so gracious that the Nephites could record them only in their hearts. The language of the kingdom uttered by Jesus through the ordinances is of such magnitude that the most adequate record found of such language is in the hearts of the people, made readable in their lives. To have an unwholesome attitude at Communion service is to be in poor spiritual condition for the food offered. In his compassion Jesus desires to help us overcome our willfulness. The effective antidote for a grudge held against a brother is a kind feeling; thus Jesus says, "First go and be reconciled." When we are ill there is no part of our digestive system that seems to work properly, and food may cause us to become even more miserable. When ill will is fostered in our hearts, yet we insist on reaching forth our hand and trying to "cram" the spiritual food down, our chagrin may be in that the spiritual "juices" are not flowing in the digestive tract of our spiritual body, and no progress toward the kingdom can be noted. A grudge that is pushed deep into the soul by the pressure of undigested spiritual food may become lodged so tightly that the striving of God's Spirit is ineffective in dislodging it.

HOWEVER, emphasis should be placed upon our great need for this spiritual nourishment. Jesus never used any symbol as an ordinance but that any thinking person could be blessed by taking part in it. We are dependent creatures. The physical body of the dust is not sustained through eating a handful of dirt but in eating the foods prepared by the hand of God in creation. We are dependent upon plant and animal life for our very existence. We are able to walk this earth because God has provided nutriment in such a way that our bodies can digest it. We walk in the way of his kingdom when we accept the fact that we cannot take spiritual elements directly but must partake in the ways provided by our Heavenly Father.

Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE at General Conference is inspiring and wholesome because of the common understanding had of the Lord's Supper. This blessing of the Spirit of God can be had in a large or small group. Around the table is the age-old place of sincere fellowship. So vital was the need for fellowship and unity in his body, the church, that Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.—I Corinthians 11: 23, 24, 25.

The power of godliness is made manifest as we fellowship in the warmth of his spirit, found through the Lord's Supper. We feel assured that he will "drink it new with us in his Father's kingdom."

IS MY NAME WRITTEN THERE?

By Mable A. Hill

A NONMEMBER attended one of our churches a number of years. One Sunday he became weary of the inactiveness and disinterest he found there and started going to another church.

Where were the members those many Sabbath days? "Oh," said one, "we don't have to go to church every time the door is open." No, we don't have to go. We can let visitors go and feel alone when they get there. We can let them sit in a class where no one has prepared the lesson but the teacher. We can let our neighbors become discouraged because they see no fruit in our lives. And then we can criticize them because they go to another church where they find active classes and a lively interest in church life.

Another said, "I was repairing my combine that morning, and I had to harvest grain that afternoon. It looked like rain and if I didn't get my wheat in that day I might never have got it. I couldn't afford to take the chance."

Another said, "We were having a family reunion that Sunday. I didn't want to get there late and keep the rest waiting to eat dinner, so we didn't try to go to church first."

"Well," said Brother X, "I had promised the kids a fishing trip, and it seems like Sunday is the only day we can get away."

Brother Y, trying to justify his absence, said, "You know about the registered stock show that was held in Big City? Well, I took my children to that. I thought it would be very educational for them to see the different breeds of livestock. They're in the 4H club and such things help them a lot."

And so it went—much like the story in the fourteenth chapter of Luke where Jesus told of the man inviting people to a supper. One had bought a piece of ground and had to go see it. Another had bought some oxen. Another had married a wife. All were giving the Lord second place in their lives.

SOME DAY we shall stand before God and have all things brought to our remembrance. Maybe a paper will be produced headed, "Those who hindered someone from finding the fullness of my gospel." Quickly we shall scan this list asking, "Is my name written there?" Then another paper may be shown headed, "Those who failed to visit the sick, the fatherless, and the widows." And again we shall ask, "Lord, is my name written there?"

It will not be pleasant if we are told, "Yes, your name is there." Perhaps we shall try to explain, "I thought I was living a pretty good life on earth. I do remember now, though, that I heard about all these things you wanted me to do. I guess I was just—just too busy. I see now that I didn't really love you, Lord, because you said that those who loved you would keep your commandments. If I had done that my name wouldn't be written there."

Redeemable at Par

Selections From a Recorded Message

By Ward A. Hougas

Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.—Titus 2: 14.

The Dimness of Our Souls

It seems appropriate to our theme that we borrow a thought from the beautiful song that we have just heard: We need somehow to make contact with God so that he can't "take the dimness of our souls away." We need a clearer vision, not only of the eyes but of mind and heart, to understand and appreciate the opportunities and privileges that have been ours and to solve the problems that have faced us.

The Apostle Paul wrote to Titus, reminding him that Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity."

I don't know why, but when we begin to talk about redemption we really mean something that is for someone else—not for us. Perhaps that is just a part of human nature. It is in the dimness of our souls that we see other people's sins but are blind to our own.

Redemption at Par

For some years I was in the banking business, in which we handled a number of stocks. When the depression came, we found that some of them could be redeemed at par, some of them below par, and some could not be redeemed at all.

When God made us he set a par value on our souls, and it is his purpose that, when we are redeemed, it shall be at par value. Christ, in his love for us, wants not a single one to be discounted. And yet, because of the "dimness of our souls," we do not see or understand the things that would make it possible for us to be redeemed at par. We miss the values that should be incorporated in the pattern of our lives.

The Meaning of Redemption

Just what is the redemptive process? I discovered a long time ago that God meets man's upreach. Whenever we try to put our hands in the hands of the Master, he reaches down to help us. Of course, there is a great deal of talk about this, and while some of it is significant some of it doesn't mean much.

There is a hunger in us for God. We are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth"—prodigal sons and daughters who have journeyed into a far country. There are moments when we "come to ourselves" and long for our Heavenly Father and our heavenly home. Redemption begins its work when we turn about to go in the direction of God. It calls us out of the pagan land where we are, across the boundaries into some Galilee where we shall find the Savior.

A Word to Redeemers

We may think that when we have put up a fine building for the church meetings we have met our responsibilities in the work of redemption. If so, we are mistaken. It is very wrong.

In the parable of the lost sheep, Jesus indicated the responsibility of the shepherd to leave the majority that were safe in the fold and go out in search of the lost one.

In a sense, we are all assistants of the shepherd. We all have a responsibility. We talk about winning the one who sits next to us or works near by. What about the person who doesn't sit near us, or any member of the congregation?

We begin to realize that the process of redemption needs organization. There are group responsibilities as well as individual ones. We can do some things better working together than separately.

In the first pastorate I ever had, I came to the conclusion that I should not try to convert anyone but spend my time bringing people to a higher level of spiritual life. I struggled along for a year, and every month we slid a little lower. Then I called a meeting and said, "We are all wrong." We needed to forget ourselves, to reach out and touch other lives. We decided on a new course. In that year, we touched other lives. Our spiritual power increased, and there came to us strength and understanding that we had never known before.

Lord Jesus

In 1948 the World Youth Movement met in Oslo, Norway, with the slogan, "Jesus Christ is Lord." I wanted very much to go, but I couldn't.

"Jesus Christ is Lord." Simple, isn't it? Or is it?

It is easy to say that Jesus Christ is Lord. But when we face the meaning of the statement, understand its greater implications, its effect on the way we live, and how we spend our time and money, we see that it is not so simple.

Bottlenecks

You can't pick strawberries from a pumpkin vine for the simple reason that they don't grow there. Neither do kingdom-of-God children grow up under leadership that is not devoted to the kingdom of God.

Too high a percentage of local leaders—teachers, musicians, preachers—are not actually devoted to the kingdom of God. They do what comes handy; they perform their little tasks, but let everything else go by. They don't pay the price of being really diligent, loyal, and on the job. The world takes the bigger share of their lives, and the kingdom gets what is left.

Too many of us are nurturing our children and guiding our church work when we have only one foot in the kingdom. We dabble around because we have some abilities that, without the Spirit of God, are not of much real use. Training and skills are good if they are devoted to God.

Anything can become a bottleneck. There are few limitations on it. It happens when we fail to link any part of our life or activity with the Spirit and purposes of God.

Fellowship

When we discover people—when we learn to understand them and love them as God does—we begin to know something of the redemptive power of fellowship. This was a basic part of the New Testament ideology: "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship . . . had all things common. . . . And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

We have no right to take people out of their setting or to separate them from their fellowship, unless we in turn provide for them a greater and more powerful fellowship that is blessed by the Spirit of God.

This is the purpose behind our "Family Nights." People come, not because somebody puts pressure on them, but because they have a deep yearning in their souls for this type of gathering.

A Job for You

Jesus said to Peter one day, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Peter had been in the church ever since it began. People looked up to him as a person of importance. He was one of the pillars of the kingdom. A pillar is rather imposing to look at. It may be very decorative. It is useful for holding up buildings and porches. But it never changes, never goes anywhere, never starts anything.

Jesus didn't fancy such a model of a Christian. So he deflated Peter by giving him a job and moving him out into channels of service. "Peter, when you are converted, go out and strengthen your brethren."

That task is given us today. It is a job for each member of the church.

Let Us Go On

It was Paul who said, "Let us go on to perfection." He said that after a discussion on the various steps of the gospel and its principles. He was suggesting that there could be no stopping, that we must go on.

Too many of us turn all our attention to the word "perfection." We hardly need to worry about that, for few of us are likely to attain it. But all of us can "go on" in that direction.

I think there are still great climactic experiences ahead of us. They depend on our willingness to set the stage that they may come to pass. Too much of our work is quantitative rather than qualitative. We count numbers instead of analyzing what we have.

Touch Base

In a ball game recently a player ran clear around the diamond, but was called out because he didn't touch first base. He and the crowd were unhappy about it. But players must touch their bases or the game means nothing. We don't make any home runs in life if we don't touch first base. It is very important, if we accept the validity of the game. We can't keep by-passing things and still qualify for life. We would like to by-pass some of the requirements of the gospel, but it will not do.

Kiplinger said, "Our England is a garden." I sometimes think that the church is a garden, too. It isn't made by singing, "Onward to Zion," or other songs, though songs have their places. This church garden must be made the hard way. Participation demands response, trust, willingness to carry responsibility and share it.

Our Redemption

We face the possibility of being redeemed at less than par. Unless our upreach is such that we make contact with Divinity, unless our conversion is such that we are willing to give ourselves to the kingdom, unless our leadership is such that it gives an example of our faith to the world, we face this danger. We must let our lives and services express and verify our ideals. We must be loyal to our church, our convictions, and our Lord. People were not meant to be buckets for receiving and containing the blessings of God, but pipes for conveying them to others.

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

THE GENERAL OPINION seems to be that actual war is not likely this year; however, it is "just around the corner." With such an attitude of despair, we sometimes wonder if we really want peace. None of us could think that the millions of parents and relatives of the men in the forces want war, certainly not the weeping mothers whose sons have perished in Korea or elsewhere. But abhorrence of war is not enough; we must desire peace with our whole heart. We must have a positive program for peace; as a nation we must get out of the present fatalistic drift toward war and set our course toward the sun of peace and a better world.

It is clearly evident that the present policy of United States leaders toward peace is determined by fear of being accused of appeasement or loss of prestige. Some religious leaders also seem to think that God has decreed wars on the earth—that such "wars and rumors of wars" are to be a sign of the latter days that must therefore be accepted as a part of God's purpose. It is true Christ said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10: 34). Isaiah makes the Lord say, "I make peace and create evil: I the Lord do all these things" (Isaiah 45: 7). People who interpret this and similar passages to mean that wars are inevitable and that peace is irrevocably taken from the earth apparently think they themselves will escape the coming destruction by some special dispensation of Providence; they also feel little responsibility for the betterment of social conditions, since the work would be fruitless anyway.

But Christ had a positive, constructive program of vital importance to mankind. From the first, it was "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." It was "peace on earth, good will to men." "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" was surely a great goal set for attainment that would demand the entire mobilization of the forces of both heaven and earth. Truly it has been and will continue to be a bitter fight, for the work and mission of Christ was revolutionary in character and aroused intense opposition. There could be no compromise with evil. At one time Christ made a scourge of small cords and drove the money-changers out of the temple: "Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise" (John 2: 16).

Christ was the passionate scorner of the rich and the incorruptible lover of the poor, he was the most appealing figure in history, who claimed to have left a previous existence of glory to demonstrate a new way of life of service and sharing in which material gain played no part. Such a message as this hit hard at the very root of the economic system of the day, based on gain and profit and inequality; so of course it divided families and brought not peace but a sword in its initial stages of development. Nevertheless there was in the philosophy of the Nazarene the only basis and hope of a genuine peace, because it sought to remove the inequalities in social, economic, and national life—as James put it, "the poor are exalted in that the rich are made low."

All wars have started because of the "haves" and the "have nots," between nations and individuals. The mission of Christianity is to find the point of equilibrium, the center of gravity, where only stability, rest, and peace can be obtained.

WHEN ONE SECTION of society rises above its fellows, peace can be maintained only by force. This is a law of physics, a law of economics—indeed of life. It is the meek only who can inherit the earth—all else must fall, being top-heavy and unstable. So Christ said to the rich young man, "Go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and come follow me." He said, "He that forsaketh not all that he hath he cannot be my disciple."

As Paul put it, "But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be an equality" (II Corinthians 8: 14). In another place he said, "Bear ye one another's burden and so fulfil the law of Christ." But the "laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish" (II Nephi 11: 109).

Is it any wonder then that the people killed such a reformer as Christ whose kingdom of good will and equality would be as the ax laid at the root of their economic system which was based on the theory of profit* and gain and freedom to exploit their fellows? Yet the teaching of this Welfare Worker was the only hope of peace, because it alone removed the causes of war.

TODAY, if Christ should visit America, would he have a different message? If he stood at some central place and looked to the north and the south, to the east and west, would he not say, "O America, America, how often would I have gathered thee together, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wing"? Would he not weep and say, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes [Luke 19: 42]. . . . Thy house shall be left unto thee desolate"?

The nation or individual that finds the message of Christ too impractical, too severe, has the privilege of following another gospel, but it is hypocritical to call itself Christian, furthermore to hope for peace, by building overwhelming power to force its will in negotiations. Such would mean destruction of our civilization if carried to its logical end.

Robert M. Hutchins, former, Chancellor of the University of Chicago, says:

American science and technology have produced a stockpile of new and improved bombs, large enough to destroy every city on earth. Our wartime and post-war genius has produced devices which will wipe out our victims who escape from the bombs, but it is thought that the imitative Russians have been fiendish enough to produce the same devices. If we wish to be saved we shall have to practice justice and love, however humiliating it may be to do so. Our civilization will have to Christianize itself in a hurry; universal brotherhood which alone can save us must be sought under law.

It is possible the Supreme Intelligence may see a better and more pliable material for his purposes elsewhere than America. "They that take up the sword must perish by the sword."

*EDITOR'S NOTE: There is nothing inherently wrong with the profit system. Money is not "the root of all evil," but an ungoverned love for it leads to wrongdoing (I Timothy 6:10). On this score the Lord has warned the "have nots" in the same revelation as he condemned the greedy rich.

Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not staid from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with their own hands!—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.

A system of barter is subject to all the evils of a money system and much more clumsy. Both socialism and communism have used in practice the profit system. All other systems so far tried have broken down when attempted on a big scale. "Production for use and not for profit" on a national basis is still just an arm-chair philosophy.

True, we have been warned against those in Zion who labor for "money" rather than for the good of Zion. To assume that the use of a system of money profits will be displaced by a community of goods or barter is absolutely contrary to the laws and teachings of the church.

Letters

A Modern Prodigal

I was converted on my sick bed at the age of sixty-three. My wife and I traveled 1,000 miles from Biloxi, Mississippi, to Independence, Missouri, to be baptized. This is my testimony.

I was born in Carrollton, Missouri, on March 10, 1883. Until 1946 I gambled, smoked, and drank. In fact I was drunk for thirty years. I feel sure that if I hadn't quit when I did, I would not be here now to tell about it.

I have heard many times from the "boot-leggers" that the stuff I used to drink (and it's the same today) was "made to sell, not to drink," but they would take my money as long as I could stand on my feet. I used to work hard for that money too. It took me thirty years to find out what a big sucker I was—throwing away my money like that. I used to say that if everyone felt as good as I did when I was drunk, then everyone would drink. However, I didn't feel so good the next day when I tried to sober up.

In my opinion, the drinking is not so bad as what it makes the drinker do. Jails are full of people who commit crime under the influence of liquor. They don't care at the time they are doing it, but when they wake up and find out what they have done, they feel bad. I could go on and on telling of the bad things about drinking, but I can't say a single good thing about it. I think its worst evil is that it dulls the brain so the mind is gone and the drinker is unable to act normal; no one wants anything to do with him.

I feel sure I was close to the end when the good Lord picked me up. I was in the hospital when I first realized my relationship with the Lord. I remembered what my mother believed, and I hunted up her church—the Reorganized Church. I read my Bible, and it didn't take me long to find out more about God. He is good and kind to us, but we must also be kind to him. I made up my mind that there was still a chance for me, but at the same time, I realized it was going to take a lot of will power to give up all my bad habits. I had sufficient will power, and I did give up those bad habits. I then began to think of all the time I had wasted—living a life of foolishness, doing no good for anyone. Then the thought came to me: "If the Lord will take me at my age, I had better get busy and do something about it."

I would like to tell of one of my worst habits—smoking. I had smoked for such a long time that I had to get up in the night and smoke to settle my nerves—I had to have one but several cigarettes before I could go back to sleep. I used to smoke two, three, or four packs a day. I have talked to many people who say there is no harm in smoking. I have asked them if they have ever tried to quit and most of them have said they just can't. I know the reason they can't—old "nicotine" has them, and I know from experience it is one big job to quit.

I used to pray to God to help me to quit smoking. I asked him many times. Finally I found out it wasn't God's fault that I smoked, and it was up to me to quit by myself.

One evening I was alone at home, and I said to myself, "I will quit these cigarettes." I went into the bathroom, took a pumice stone and cleaned the nicotine from my fingers; I gargled with antiseptic, cleaned my teeth, washed my mouth, then got down on my knees and prayed to God in earnest. I told him I was not going to ask him to help me quit smoking any more. That night I promised God that I would never smoke another cigarette as long as I lived. It has been four and one-half years since I made that promise; I haven't broken it, and I never will. This is one sure way to quit smoking.

Today, I should have plenty of money for I have made plenty, but the devil got most of it. I will say one thing now: The devil has all he is going to get from me. I am through with him for good. There isn't one good thing that Satan does for anyone in this world, so—"from now on, Satan, you will have to get behind me, for you and I have fallen out; good-by!"

I would like to say a few words on the other side—God's side. I read in the Scriptures where the Lord said if anyone will repent, (that is, give up the wicked way of living) and do right, God will forgive him. God said, "Repent, and be baptized for the remission of your sins." That meant he would forgive me if I repented—forgive everything I had done wrong in the past sixty-three years! Wouldn't that make anyone happy? It did me. God said that after baptism I must take up my cross and truly follow him. I am finding out that to live his way is real living, and I like it better each day as I learn more about it.

God promises that he who will take up his cross and follow his commandments, enduring to the end, shall have eternal life—that means a life with him forever and ever. He wants us to love him, to love each other, to be honest and truthful with our fellow-men. The Scriptures teach us that we must be born again. This means that when we are baptized and come up out of the water, we are to be confirmed in order that we may receive the Holy Spirit. When this Spirit comes, we enter upon a new life, and a new way of living. As we thus give up and leave the old ways and take up new ones, we are truly "born again," and become new creatures.

I think I made a good deal when I traded my old associates for God and Christ. Now I am working for him, having made a lifetime contract with him. I have been promoted already and got a raise! I have been given some special responsibilities, and the joy I find is my very special pay. I love my work, and I love my Boss. I wouldn't sell or trade my contract for all the money in the world. What good would money do me? I cannot take it with me when I die, but my contract is good for ever and ever if I am faithful to my part of it.

In closing I would like to say to those who are still living a wicked, sinful life, "For your soul's sake, don't wait too long, as I nearly did, to correct your mistakes. I know it is hard for anyone to make the start, and some will never try. Some will, however, and they will find help along the path. I urge you to take an old-timer's advice and make your change-over now. If you ever plan on being saved, you will have to start where you are, wherever that is, and find out what God wants you to do. In my imperfect way I have told you when and where I started, and how close I came to waiting too long.

"Remember, the prodigal son started from a pig pen to return to his father's home. Any start ought to be as good as that. Don't say you can't do it. I know from experience that you can, with God's help. Don't put it off any longer, for you will find you have plenty of work to do to bring forth fruit meet for repentance" and baptism. Sign your contract with God now, and I assure you, if you will live up to your side of the proposition, God will abundantly fulfill his."

Tuberculosis Patient Contributes to Auditorium Fund

I am a patient at the Indiana State Tuberculosis Sanitarium, Rockville, Indiana. I have been here for the last four years, but will be discharged this spring, and through a Latter Day Saint patient here, John Collins, I am preparing to become a member of the Reorganized Church.

I am fifty-seven years old and have had a lot of sorrows. I have one boy in the service, and while I have been in here my wife has left me. The branch where I am going to join is at Indianapolis, Indiana. I hope the Saints there will pray for me. I have very little money, but here are two dollars to help with the finishing of the Auditorium. I owe God so much, and there seems so little that I can do for him.

May he bless all of you out there.

From Anchorage

We have a new mission here in Anchorage with Elder Bill Sterling as leader. We are few in number and at present are renting a place to meet, however we hope to have a church of our own someday. There are quite a few GIs here at the fort, and although they are stationed at Anchorage for only eighteen months, they do not forget the church. If any members have boys stationed here, we invite them to write to us so that we can contact their sons.

Briefs

Pilot Returns Home

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Captain James R. Lewis was in the branch in January after returning from Korea where he was pilot-commander of a B-29 bomber which was badly shot up in one of the largest air battles of Korea. Brother Lewis is the son of Brother and Sister Arthur J. Lewis of St. Louis. His wife Marian also lives in St. Louis. He holds the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with ten oak leaf clusters.

Donald Joy has been awarded the Eagle Scout Badge. He is the son of Elder and Mrs. Edward Joy. Elder Joy is active in the St. Louis District. Another son, Richard, is working on his Eagle award.—Reported by THOMAS S. GOUGH

Pastors Hold Institute

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—On January 6, Alice Smith, wife of Brother Raymond Smith, was baptized by Pastor Elliott Gilberts in the baptismal font and confirmed before the Communion service. Twin sons of Brother and Sister Smith, David and Dennis, were blessed on the same day by Elder Gilberts.

On November 18 Brother Harold Johnson was ordained to the office of priest by District President Granville Swenson and Elder Gilberts.

Pastors of Seattle District met for an institute December 8 and 9, at the Everett church and continued study and discussion through the afternoon and evening. The Women's Club served the luncheon and dinner on Saturday, also dinner on Sunday. The pastors were overnight guests at the home of Sister Neva Willett. After an early morning service the pastors met for the eleven o'clock service with the Everett congregation when Branch Missionary Winston Inslee delivered a sermon on "The Very Heart of Religious Experience."

The institute continued after dinner on Sunday until early evening. District President Granville Swenson was in charge of the institute, assisted by High Priests Paul Wellington and Alma Johnson and by Evangelist Adolph Lundeen.

The Liahona Club, a group of young married adults, enjoyed a dinner together December 29 at a dining room on Puget Sound. Seventy Arthur Gibbs and his wife Dorothy were among the group as they are making their home in Everett. Sister Betty Willett Blanchard is the leader of this group. The club meets twice a month, once for a social evening and once for a potluck dinner and for business the first Sunday of each month.

Brother Larry Roberts is in charge of the basketball team in the church league.

Sister Agnes Johnson is leader of the Women's Club. At the present time the group has a home study schedule for all the members to read the same sections each day of the Doctrine and Covenants. The project began January 1 and will continue each day until April 19. The women also have a project of writing letters to isolated Saints throughout the world. The women's club had two rummage sales last quarter in the basement of the church. They served lunch at a nominal cost and people from all over the city have learned of the low-cost, worn clothing and used merchandise offered at these sales.

The Christmas activities were especially nice this year. On December 23 Bishop Monte Lasater delivered the Christmas message and the choir sang two anthems. Music Leader Neva Willett is music director for the Seattle District.

On the evening of December 23 the church school presented a Christmas program for friends and neighbors. Sister Luella Foster planned for each child to participate in the program. Zion's League provided the tree and assisted in decorating the church. The choir and orchestra assisted.

Elder Arnold Rhoades and Priest Loren McDole were guest speakers during the last quarter.—Reported by HELEN GILBERTS

Yule Camp Held

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—A young people's yule camp was held at Happy Valley conference grounds, and over 120 young people attended. Every branch was represented and almost every mission. The young people participated in classes, a vesper service, worship service, and a recreational program. Classes were under the direction of Kenneth and Mary Lee Cline, and followed the theme, "Does It Make Any Difference." Celia Schall and Jean Powell presented a vesper service, following which a campfire was held. Harold Cline was camp cook, and Lucille Engle was camp nurse.

A business meeting was held Saturday, and the following council members were elected: Joyce Colville, Glenvil Crownover, Clyde Workman, Roy Peck, Kenneth Cline. Officers sustained were Leroy Burdick, president, and Myrtle Burdick, secretary.

Guest speaker Sunday was Elder Clark Vincent of Berkeley.—Reported by L. A. MACDONALD

Uses Wire-recorded Sermons

SALINA, KANSAS.—The mission held its yearly business meeting at the YWCA in Salina with District President Ronald Manuel and Elder J. O. Shannon of Wichita presiding. Officers elected were mission secretary, Marguerite Tyree; church school director, Maude Reiff; assistant, Mary Turner; treasurer, Evon Kueker; music director, Edna Henry; assistant, Barbara Parker; Herald reporter and solicitor, Irene Weigand; teacher of adult class, historian, and women's leader, Edna Henry; primary teacher, solicitor, and librarian, Evon Kueker. Jimmie Lee Weigand was baptized by Elder J. O. Shannon in the YWCA pool, preceding the business on September 30.

A Christmas program was presented on December 21, and each child was given a gift. On December 28, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Henry and children of Muncie, Indiana, were visitors of the group.

Visiting priesthood and families from Wichita since the election of officers have been Frank Westwood, Sr., and wife; Deverne Davis, Allen Shepard; Bill Newman and family; Ronald Manuel and wife; and Clyde Shannon. Evon Kueker has purchased a wire recorder and the recorded sermons from the Stone Church have been given when the priesthood was not present.—Reported by IRENE WEIGAND

Class Organized

BEAUMONT, TEXAS.—Sunday, February 10, fourteen were present in the Lloyd Standley home in Groves, Texas. Families came from Orange, Port Arthur, and Beaumont, Texas, for church school class, after which class officers were elected and a church group established. Officers included J. Henry Porter, elder, of Orange, director and class leader; Mrs. Ralph Sherrell, Port Arthur, secretary and treasurer; and Mrs. Walter Rennick, Beaumont, recorder. Everyone in the Sabine area is invited to join the group, and should contact J. Henry Porter, 260 Destroyer Drive, Orange, Texas.—Reported by MRS. MARGERY RENNICK

Church Redecorated

BLOOMINGTON BRANCH, LAMONI, IOWA.—The branch is located about four miles north and west of Lamoni. Elder Ross Cole is serving as pastor. Church school attendance averages about twenty-eight.

During the winter months the pastor conducted a class one night each week for the priesthood members. The topic was "The Restoration Story."

The women's department has had as a project during the past year the beautifying of

Zion's League Organized

PALMYRA, MISSOURI.—On Wednesday, January 23, 1952, the Palmyra young people were organized. Seventy John Puckett and Elder Delbert Smith were in charge of the organization. Officers elected were as follows: president, Pat Linder, Hannibal, Missouri; vice-president, Cecil Peters, Palmyra, Missouri; secretary and treasurer, Joan Hazelrigg, Kinderhook, Illinois.—Reported by PAT LINDER

New Officers Elected

ODESSA, TEXAS.—James Wilbur and James Wilburton were baptized June 17 by Elders W. T. Page, Iral Parker, and Douglas Church. Donald Lee Sader, infant son of Ralph and Doris Sader, was blessed by Pastor Iral Parker September 2.

There were thirty-three members from the Odessa mission that attended the reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma.

At the regular business meeting held September 20, Iral Parker was given a unanimous vote of confidence as pastor. Other officers elected were Mrs. Henry Moles, secretary and treasurer; Lawrence Hickman, church school superintendent; Mrs. Troy Parker, music director; Ralph Sader, publicity agent; Mrs. Otis Baker, book steward; Mrs. Leo Moles, mission historian; Mrs. Jim Hobbs, junior League leader, Mrs. Pug Smith, women's leader. The ways and means and the flower committees were combined with Leo Moles, chairman, Valeria Pim and Jim Hobbs, helpers.

Elder Barnett W. Berridge of Lubbock, Texas, held a special series of services November 9-19. At the conclusion of the series, Gary Eugene Hickman, Theresa Hayes, and Doris Marie Parker were baptized. Lawrence Leon Hickman was ordained a teacher. Elders Barney Berridge and Iral Parker performed the baptismal, confirmation, and ordination services.

Elder Iral Parker and Pastor Otis Baker attended the priesthood convention at Oklahoma City.

Women's Club held a rummage sale November 23 and all the money raised was put in the building fund.

The members of the church under the direction of Doris Parker presented a Christmas play. After the play all the children were given packages of Christmas candy and fruit. Brother Lawrence Hickman's father, L. L. Hickman, played Santa Claus.

A New Year's watch party was held at Brother Jim Hobb's home. A special service of prayer was held. There were four members of the Stanton Branch present at the party.

Elder W. T. Page of the Lamesa mission gave the closing prayer for the first Communion service of the new year.—Reported by RALPH SADER

Silver Anniversary Observed

AURORA, ILLINOIS.—The Saints celebrated the silver anniversary of organization of the Aurora mission into a branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on November 11, 1951.

The day began with a prayer and testimony service with the district president, Lloyd Cleveland, presiding.

Evan A. Fry presented the morning message, "Restoration's Responsibility Today," and the afternoon message, "Come Ye: Go Ye."

Vocal solos were sung by Gloria Settles, Gwen Leighty, and Vernon Pettit. Ernest Tente played several violin selections.

A fifteen-page history written by the branch historian, Charles A. Reedy, and printed by the pastor, Arnold J. Settles, was presented to all in attendance.

The Aurora Saints feel they have made excellent strides since the day in 1925 when a mission was established. Early meetings were held at the home of J. E. Wildermuth and Roscoe Davey. Later they met at the home of C. Malcor. When these quarters became too small they gathered at the G.A.R. Hall. At the present time they are remodeling the church building they purchased two years ago at the corner of Cedar and Locust Streets. Among the charter members present at the anniversary services were Clement Malcor, Mary Lankow, Charles Reedy, and Effie Gorton. Some of the children then present and now grown to membership are A. J. Settles, Marvin Settles, Orpha Tatar, and Bonnie Datschewski.

The committee for the day was Pastor Arnold Settles, Charles Reedy, Gloria Settles, Anne Pettit, Bill Hicklin, Alice Weber, Bill Settles, Ethel Malcor, and Cleo Settles.

One hundred and twenty-eight members are now enrolled in the branch.

The branch officers are as follows; president, Arnold J. Settles; counselors, C. Observe Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Needham of Mapleton, Kansas, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on December 23 by holding open house at their home between 2:00 and 5:00 o'clock in the afternoon. Acting as hosts and hostesses were their eight children: Mrs. Walter Leonard of Pueblo, Colorado; Alvin Needham, Mrs. N. G. Myrick, Mrs. Earl Wellington, and Mrs. Alph Dennis of Mapleton; Mrs. Harley Coldiron of Columbus, Kansas; Richard Needham of Mapleton; and Mrs. Eldon Kastl of Independence, Kansas. One hundred twenty friends were present for the occasion.

The Needhams were married on Christmas Day, 1901, at Kincardene, Ontario. They first moved to Missouri and then to Kansas where they farmed from 1914 until their retirement. They are living in town now.

A Personal Knowledge of the Restoration Movement

By Mrs. W. Wallace Smith

IT IS IMPORTANT that we believe in a Christian order if we are to have a personal knowledge of the Restoration Movement. First, we believe in God and revelation through Christ. Next, according to our interest shown and earnest desire to seek further light and understanding, comes Christian values, Christian standards, and finally Christian practices. We must have some part of this philosophy in our thinking or we cannot have even a partial conviction.

We have been groping in uncertainty because of the aftermath of the second world war, and we are faced with what could easily be World War III. Even though we feel that it is an unnecessary and stupid war, it is nevertheless shockingly real, for we are constantly now grieving for our wounded and our dead.

We have heard the challenge, "Go forward with steadfast faith." Indeed, we must have faith if we are to go forward at all. Editors of our leading newspapers, scientists, and even some in high places of government are calling for a rebirth of our childhood faith in God—a return to religion. Even these men do not admit that religion has failed; rather they admit that religion hasn't been tried sufficiently.

We have the answer as a church. It is found in two significant texts: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth" (Revelation 14:6). This was a part of the apostle John's vision regarding the coming apostasy of the early church. The other promise is "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally; and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him" (James 1:5). Joseph Smith read this text after having attended several revival meetings held by different denominations. And because he had such an earnest desire to know, because he had faith in God's promises, and because he had the courage to follow his better impulses, we have God's restored church on earth today.

SELDOME do our missionaries engage in debates with either ministers or members of other denominations regarding our belief. Rather they prefer the discussion method—with, of course, proper emphasis. We do believe that this gospel was restored to the earth by an angel of the Lord, otherwise we would have no reason for our existence as a church. We know that all churches accomplish much good in the world today, but we also know that we are the only true church, having been organized through present-day revelation. We make no apologies for this statement, but rather gladly witness to our friends that our gospel is true because it was restored to earth by an angel of God in all its fullness.

In a monthly magazine, published by a religious denomination, I recently read the following: "To believe yours is the only true religion is the sin of pride." In answer to this statement, we may point with interest to the words of the angel after Joseph Smith had asked which of the popular churches he should join: "This is my beloved son, hear him." This statement has been considered the keynote of the Restoration Movement. Christ told Joseph to join none of the churches, for they were all wrong and their creeds were an abomination in his sight.

There is a difference between conviction and knowledge. "Conviction," Webster says, "is a strong belief." Knowledge "is a clear understanding of a truth." A personal knowledge, then, would be one's own clear understanding of truth. If one's belief were strong enough, it would grow into a personal knowledge.

THE TESTIMONY of Christ's resurrection spread particularly for two main reasons. Many people actually knew the facts of his crucifixion and resurrection and, as Brother F. Henry Edwards says, "because those who knew were so transformed as to bear convincing testimony which carried assurances to others." Thus we see how important it is to let our lives reflect our personal knowledge of this work, for to some is given the gift to know this work is true, and to others, the faith to believe. Therefore, patience and love should be given those whose faith is weak or who doubt. Here we have a perfect example of Thomas doubting the resurrection of Christ. Christ didn't chastise him for doubting, but instead said, "Be not doubting, Thomas, but reach forth thy hand and thrust it in my side—feel the wounds of the nails in my hands." We, too, must be eager to witness for Christ through our personal testimony, for we are commanded, "Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:22).

This personal knowledge is passed on from generation to generation by means of the Bible through the prophets, the Book of Mormon through records kept, and the Doctrine and Covenants—the recording of present-day revelations —through the priesthood. A true conviction—the result of having a personal knowledge of the restored gospel—has as its fruits a purer faith, hope, and peace. Joseph Smith once said, “We as a church preach a purer faith than others, but we must also preach a purer practice.” As we women of the restored church go about our everyday living, constantly striving to “preach this purer practice” by exemplary living, we shall be the means of assisting others in their search for a personal knowledge of the Restoration Movement. The greater our desire to have this personal knowledge, the greater faith we will have in its truthfulness; and that same faith, strengthened by study and prayer, will bring about a clear understanding, and we shall be able to testify, “I believe in God; I belong to his restored church; I serve him gladly.”

Our everyday living is our greatest testimony to the truthfulness of this work. We must be diligent in studying the word of God and grow to feel the need of prayer. We must attend church regularly, walk and talk in a godly way; pray for the ability to love more, and determine to be a willing worker.

BECAUSE of our personal knowledge, we shall tell our friends and families of our heritage in the church or our outstanding conversion, testimonies of different members in the church, our pleasant associations with friends of the church, the church’s scriptural basis. We shall also talk freely of healings, miracles, blessings received or witnessed, and of the social program radiating from the Center Place. We shall teach our children to look forward with joy to these moments spent together recounting such spiritual experiences, lest later in their young adulthood, they show embarrassment because of not having heard of these things as a natural and frequent topic of conversation.

Let us not call a miracle “luck.” If we with our children or companion have had a near accident, do we call it luck, or God’s great mercy which spared our lives? When there is illness in the family and the elders are called, do nonmembers who are present know and feel God’s spirit in the room through our great faith? Do they hear us offer prayers of thankfulness as well as petition? Our faith, love, and trust in God’s watch care over us must be transmitted to others until it becomes a part of them and they, too, have this full confidence and trust in God.

I FIRST HEARD of this church when I was a little girl, as my mother sang to me the songs of Zion. Later, I heard more about the church while standing beside my sister, Helen, as she listened, convinced of its truthfulness, as Evangelist Ammon White preached upon a street corner in Warrensburg, Missouri. Later still, I heard of these truths during my high school days, but I closed my mind and heart to all this, lest I weaken and join the church. I felt that the demands were too high—I could no longer engage in the social activities of my friends. This feeling persisted as I graduated and prepared for college. All these years I attended churches of various faiths, but always there was a feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction. Finally I felt so strongly along these lines that I decided to unite with the church. This decision came only a short time before I left home to attend Graceland College.

A little group of Saints gathered on the banks of the Boise River in Idaho. The river was swollen, bank full, due to torrential rains in the mountains. The elders selected a point near the river’s edge where there was a small sandy beach. I had asked that my brother-in-law, Elder Earl Hoisington, baptize me. As I saw him wade slowly and carefully out into the deep, fast-moving waters, I experienced a sudden fear that I might be drowned, as I wasn’t a good swimmer. He carried a sturdy stick and felt his way, farther and farther out into the river, making sure there were no dangerous holes. Finally satisfied that he had found a safe footing, and firm foundation on which to stand, he turned, smiled, and held out his hand beckoning me “to follow.” As I took my first steps into the water I felt another deep fear, and my heart seemed to stand still. I prayed that God would give me courage and that my fears would leave me.

Suddenly the Saints began to sing, and their words floated gently and beautifully out over the water, seeming to guide me on:

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word,
Fear not, I am with thee, Oh, be not dismayed,
For I am thy God, and will still give thee aid.

With these words accompanying me, I came nearer and nearer, and finally Brother Earl, with his loving and encouraging smile, stepped forward, took me by the hand, and guided me to the place he had chosen. As he baptized me, there was borne upon me the sure knowledge that as we had searched for and found a firm foundation in the waters of the river, so also I had found that this restored church has a true and firm foundation. It is God’s church, as he himself organized it.

How grateful I am that there were those who cared enough and who had the patience to nurture and feed me until I could accept this restored gospel in all its truthfulness and purity. Always I shall pray that I may eagerly share this wonderful truth with others who need it so much in these chaotic and trying times.

With each new day there comes a challenge to climb to the mountain-top of a better life. If, through faith, prayer, study, and service we have gained a personal knowledge of the Restoration Movement, then, indeed, we will have “communion and fellowship with God, our lives will be changed, our nature refined; and we shall reflect the light of God’s glory in a life dedicated to his service.”

The Primary Tools of Creative Men

By Roland C. Lambkin

HOW DO NEW DISCOVERIES come about? It is generally a hunch that starts an inventor on his search, an inward assurance that the solution of a problem lies in a certain direction or in a certain group of facts.

Willis R. Whitney, Dean of General Electric's scientists and an inventor who has contributed to almost half a century of electrical progress, said, "A man may think that he reasons out the answer to a problem by cold logic. Actually he reaches the solution through a hunch."

Charles F. Kettering of General Motors says, "A research problem is not solved by apparatus, it is solved in a man's head."

The apostle Paul saw eye to eye with these modern thinkers: "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Such faith has been the great self-starter of our mechanical age. Creative men everywhere have agreed with Paul. With keen insight into the mechanics of creative thinking, Albert Einstein said, "Not the eye but the spirit furnishes the proof of theory."

Intelligent faith is the marriage of logical research with pure inspiration. Edison, the wizard of the mechanical age, never began a new line of experimentation until he had mastered the range of literature on that subject. In the early 1900's, Boss Kettering was called to Detroit to find the trouble in the relay of the Delco system that he had developed for Cadillac. It stuck, and always at the wrong time. After hours of work, the problem seemed insurmountable. He started back for Dayton, taking his problem to bed with him in a Pullman berth. He had reached a dead end in his thinking. And yet, there was within him that burning evidence of the thing he couldn't see. He reached over to feel of the relays in the dark, and suddenly the obvious answer came to him. Of course—the pole pieces on the tip were round, not flat. Therefore there must be a residue or concentration of magnetism on the point of the piece. The answer must be to make them flat. And it was the answer!

Octave Chanute asked the then unknown Wilbur Wright to address the Western Society of Engineers at Chicago about his experimental flights with a $15.00 glider that he and his brother had made. Wilbur prepared to say in his speech that all of the tables prepared by the scientists concerning the effect of wind on an airplane wing were wrong, but here again was an evidence of things that no one had seen. So as a precaution Orville decided to test the scientist's figures. He took an empty wooden starch box, knocked out both ends, put a fan at one end to make wind, and a glass top in it to look through. Then he shaped tiny wings, put them in his wind tunnel, and found the evidence of things never before seen to be true.

WHEN he proposed building ships on an assembly line, Henry Kaiser knew nothing about shipbuilding, yet he considered this to be a distinct advantage. Since he did not know what couldn't be done, Kaiser proceeded to turn things upside down, assemble parts as in auto manufacturing, and build a ship in ten days. "It couldn't be done" but by obstinate, intelligent ignorance Kaiser moved the art of shipbuilding farther forward than it had gone since the famous fight of the "Monitor" and the "Merrimac."

THIS INWARD ASSURANCE of things hoped for, this burning evidence of things not seen, is dead without some work. The Wright boys were exasperated because they so seldom found the right wind to fly their glider. It came in gusts or it blew too hard or died at the wrong time. They decided to make their own wind by putting a giant motor-driven fan in their glider. At exactly thirty-five minutes past ten in the morning of December 7, 1903, Orville Wright climbed aboard the roaring craft, stretched flat on his stomach, and pulled the release. Snorting flame and smoke, the contraction arose from the ground and flew. Orville Wright admitted that he didn't get any particular thrill out of the first flight. He said, "I expected the thing to work, and it did."

PERHAPS ONE of the most heroic stories of our modern use of this faith and the work that goes with it is the story of Madame Curie and her husband, Pierre, in the discovery of radium. It was their theory that in the material called pitchblende existed a new metal that shot rays into surrounding space by some unknown power (hence the name "radium"). The announcement of their theory threatened to upset all the theories which scientists had believed in for centuries. Some, doubting that such a metal could ever exist, challenged the Curies with "Show us pure radium." During four long, hard years of labor (1898 to 1902), they boiled down and refined eight tons of ore. They worked in dire poverty in an open shed hardly better than a horse barn, shivering and nearly starved. But finally they produced one decigram of pure radium, an amount about one half the size of a pea!

"For faith without works is dead" being invariably alone in the world; but by works is faith made perfect.

Graceland

Gazette

■ Graceland students climaxed the stewardship unit in the campus religious program in a "Service for Stewards" fellowship on February 6. The service featured the collection of financial statements from the members of the congregation. This was the result of work begun on January 9 in a general fellowship, which included general and priesthood instruction classes on financial stewardship and sermons by G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop; Jerry Runkle, Graceland economics instructor, and Virgil Billings, Seventy, on three successive Sundays.

■ Students had the opportunity to receive assistance from selected members of the student and faculty priesthood on their concept of stewardship, their interpretation of the financial law, and their financial statements. Every student was personally contacted by a student priesthood member and offered aid in filing an annual report or a first financial statement. In this way, Graceland is teaching the financial law of the church.

■ Graceland students recently completed registration for the second semester of the school year. Among them were fifteen either new to the school or returning to take more work after an absence. They come from such scattered points as New York, California, Alabama, Arizona, Texas, and Canada. From Papeete, Tahiti, in the South Pacific comes Phoebe Mervin, who will be the first girl from Tahiti to attend classes on the Graceland campus.

■ The Graceland campus congregation is attending a series of three classes on the narrative of the Book of Mormon in preparation for the Hispanic Institute to be held on the campus February 23-24. Evan Fry introduced the series, speaking to the congregation on "The Book of Mormon Today." The classes are on "Nephite Migrations," "The Ministry of Christ in Ancient America," and "The Golden Age; the Decline; the American Indian." The congregation was divided into six groups for these classes which were taught by Graceland instructors.

Graceland Reception-Mixer

■ KGRA, Graceland student radio station, marked the third anniversary of its first broadcast during the month of February. The anniversary found the station in the midst of improving its studio facilities and about to step up its reception in the college dormitories. The program department is planning a series of new programs, and the station management is anticipating an active period of broadcasting until the end of the school year.

■ The Graceland music faculty is planning to attend the annual convention of the Music Teachers' National Association in Dallas, Texas, from February 24 to 28. The conference is for all music teachers and professional musicians and will include many well-known lecturers, soloists, and outstanding musical events.

■ The faculty is making a study of existing policies of inter-relationship between the faculties and the governing bodies of other colleges and universities. The study is being made with the possibility in mind of developing similar policies of relationship between the Graceland faculty and board of trustees. A committee of three men—Dr. G. A. Platz, Clifford Cole, and Deam Ferris, appointed by Dr. Cheville—is in charge of the study.

■ Boris G. Alexander of Des Moines, Iowa, district economist for the Office of Price Stabilization, spoke to students in economics and business classes recently. His subject was "The What, Why, and How of OPS."

■ "Rhapsody in Blue," the motion picture biography of George Gershwin, was shown on the campus recently. It was another in the series of outstanding pictures being shown throughout the year.

■ The Graceland Players presented their latest production "January Thaw," on February 11, 12, and 14 in The Playshop, Graceland's little theater. Roscoe Faunce, director of the play, says that he used this play, a comedy, to break the jinx of tragedy hanging over The Playshop. All the plays produced since The Playshop was remodeled from the old heating plant two years ago have leaned toward the tragic.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse H. Friend of Littleton, Colorado, announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Alice, to Harry B. Hamblin, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Hamblin of Manchester, Iowa. Harry recently was baptized at Denver Branch.

BIRTHS

A son, Paul Edward, was born on January 15 to Mr. and Mrs. George A. Smith of Independence, Missouri. He was blessed on February 17 by Elders Oscar Case and Fred Fry. Mrs. Smith is the former Vernamae Lehman.

Mr. and Mrs. Cedric H. Hougas of Las Cruces, New Mexico, announce the birth of a son, Robert Holliday, born February 4.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. McSparren of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Marta Sue, born February 13.

A son, Steven Allen, was born on October 25 to Mr. and Mrs. Albert R. Taylor of Grain Valley, Missouri. Mrs. Taylor, the former Jean Parsons of Kirtland, Ohio, was graduated from the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing in 1948. Mrs. Taylor attended Graceland in 1946.

A son, Alan Curtis, was born on September 15 to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Middleton of Fremont, Indiana. He was blessed on December 31 by Seventy Luther S. Troyer and Elder H. C. Binkley at Clear Lake, Indiana.

A son, Mark Evan, was born on December 23 to Mr. and Mrs. Floyd E. Henson of Decatur, Illinois. He was blessed on February 17 by Elders O. C. Henson, Jr., and W. E. Phillips, his great-grandfather. Mrs. Henson is the former Priscilla Crowell. Both parents attended Graceland College.

DEATHS

REILLY.—Almina, was born March 16, 1864, at Springfield, Ontario, and died January 17, 1952, at Memorial Hospital in St. Thomas, Ontario, after a long illness. She was married to James Reilly who preceded her in death on May 1, 1923. Her only son, Clarence, died on August 2, 1947. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 1, 1889.

She leaves no immediate survivors. Funeral services were held at the P. R. Wetbain Chapel, Elder Frank Gray officiating. Burial was in St. Thomas cemetery.

WILHOITT.—Derral, son of Walter P. and Etta Wilhoitt, was born July 4, 1938, at Paradise, Missouri, and died December 25, 1951 at Smithville, Missouri. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 31, 1947, and was active in Zion's League at Trimble Branch. He also belonged to the Boy Scout Troop at Smithville.

Besides his parents he leaves four sisters: Mrs. Walthin Lynn of Kansas City, Missouri; Arlette Lee, Joyce Hellen, and Virginia Kay of Smithville; and a brother, Walter Plenny, Jr., also of Smithville. Funeral services were held at Nashua, Thomas E. Hale officiating. Interment was in the Smithville cemetery.

SENEVEY.—Zelma B., daughter of Henry D. and Louie Jane Havelly, was born June 10, 1890, at Mt. Ayr, Iowa, and died November 10, 1951, at Goshen County Hospital (Wyoming) following a long illness. On May 15, 1912, she was married to John E. Senevey, who died in 1937. She became a partner with Mrs. J. J. Hanks in an alteration shop and was active in the Business and Professional Women's Club, the W.B.A. Lodge, and the Triple O Club. She was also a member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by one son, Pershing, of Detroit, Michigan; a daughter, Lois Daring of Cheyenne, Wyoming; seven brothers: Otis and Dana of Torrington, Wyoming; Ora of Myrtle Creek, Oregon; Herbert of Slater, Wyoming; Mark of Wheatland, Wyoming; Worley of Portland, Oregon; and Seigel of Bell, California; one sister, Lulu Havelly of Torrington; and two granddaughters. Funeral services were held at the Colyer Chapel, Elders Mark Billyue and Orville Croft officiating. Burial was in the Linglie cemetery.

SWAYZE.—Sherry Lee, three-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Swayze of Salina, Kansas, died January 8, 1952. She is survived by her parents; her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Charles H. Sutton; her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Venora Swayze; and her maternal great-grandmother, Mrs. Jessie L. Anderson, all of Independence. Funeral services were held at the Henry Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elder R. D. Weaver officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

STOWELL.—George William, son of Falu and Hannah Stowell, was born December 1, 1874, in Eau Claire County, Wisconsin, and died January 9, 1952, while visiting at the home of his son, James, in Kingsville, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 8, 1892, and ordained to the office of deacon on August 2, 1914. On July 10, 1901, he was married to Arizona Weddle; seven children were born to them. One son, Joseph, was drowned in 1925. After moving to Independence in 1924, Brother Stowell served as bishop's agent and custodian at East Independence Church for a number of years; he also worked as fireman at the Auditorium for about five years.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Hannah Crabb of Weatherbee, Missouri; Mrs. Lodica Friend of Littleton, Colorado; and Mrs. Nevada Grubb of Chatfield, Minnesota; three sons: James S. of Kingsville; Charles E. of Cando, North Dakota; and Benjamin A. of Independence; three brothers: Frank of New Rockford, North Dakota; Edward and B. H. of Independence; three sisters: Mrs. Ernest Blackley of Barhorne, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Bessie Stocker of Gordon, Montana; and Mrs. Grace Wagner of Pleasant Hill, Missouri; thirty-four grandchildren; and twenty great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Charles V. Graham officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LARABEE.—Hazel Benoti, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Jane Larabee, was born January 3, 1901, in Raleigh Township, Ontario, and died January 10, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium. She lived in Ontario until 1920, then moved to Independence and attended school there for a short time before entering nurses' training at the Sanitarium in 1922. After graduation in 1925 she did private nursing, much of the time at the Sanitarium. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 21, 1915.

Surviving are two sisters: Mrs. Linda J. Rumble of Gary, Indiana, and Mrs. Bertha M. Martin of Independence. Funeral services were conducted at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and William Cowan officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery, Independence.

BUDD.—Jennie, daughter of Pleasant and Lydia Burch Young, was born October 21, 1867, near Harwood, Missouri, and died January 14, 1952, at the home of her son, J. Calvin Budd, in Independence, Missouri. She was married to James Calvin Budd on October 20, 1885; ten children were born to them. Mr. Budd and two children preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April 17, 1892.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Gertie B. Gilbert and Mrs. Lida Budd Robertson of Independence, and Mrs. Virginia Elion of El Paso, Texas; five sons: Charles S., J. Calvin, Ammon W., and F. Earl of Independence, and Roy S. of Polo, Missouri; ten grandchildren; twelve great-grandchildren; and two great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Henry Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Leonard Lea officiating. Interment was in El Dorado Springs, where Elder E. W. Lloyd conducted the graveside service.

ELLSWORTH.—Arnold E., was born July 10, 1911, in Kansas City, Missouri, and died October 9, 1951, near St. Louis, Missouri, as the result of an automobile accident. He attended Kansas City University for three years, and from 1942 to 1946 served in the Army. For two and a half years he was a captain in the Ordnance Department overseas. Upon returning to the States he continued his schooling at Kansas City University and was then employed as regional supervisor for the accessories department of Chevrolet Motor Company. On August 16, 1947, he was married to Gloria Andrew. A daughter, Marsha, was born to them on September 20, 1948. A member of the Reorganized Church since July 27, 1919, he was ordained a priest on October 23, 1942, and an elder on August 23, 1949. He served as assistant pastor in Topeka for a time and as pastor of the South Crystals congregation in Independence from the summer of 1950 until his death.

DRAMA EXPERIMENT HELD

With the co-operation of the White Masque Players, an experiment in drama is being conducted at the Walnut Park church. One-act plays are presented on Sunday evenings centering around a family and the different phases of church life, including methods of conducting cottage meetings, administration in the home, etc. "The Hunt Family Goes Zionic" is the title of the series which is being directed by Audrey Hurshman and is cast from members of the Walnut Park congregation.

Besides his wife and daughter he leaves two brothers: O. M. and Harold Ellsworth, both of Kansas City; and two sisters: Mrs. Joseph Bay of Independence and Mrs. Darrell Hottman of Liberty, Missouri. Funeral services were held at Stone Church in Independence, Elders Charles Graham and L. J. Richards officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove cemetery.

STOUTENBURG.—Mrs. Arthur, was born July 26, 1882, at Ravenna, Ontario, and died September 9, 1951, at Ravenna. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 9, 1902.

She is survived by her husband, Arthur, and five children: Katie, Stanley, Lottie, and Joe of the home, and Murray of Warrensburg, Missouri. One son died on October 26, 1922.

PENNELL.—Ellen A., daughter of David C. and Mary Ellen Crandell, was born April 3, 1873, at Boone, Iowa, and died February 8, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital after being ill two days. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1886, and in 1896 was married to Elmer Pennell. They made their home in Galland's Grove, Iowa, until 1912, when they moved to Independence.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Gladys Myers of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Grace Toutsley of Independence; three sons: Wayne E. Rogers and John E. Pennell of Independence, and G. Darwin Pennell of Kansas City, Missouri; three sisters: Mrs. Catherine Pett of Woodbine, Iowa; Mrs. Ruby Partridge of Windom, Minnesota; and Mrs. Bessie Reimer of Independence; and one brother, F. A. Crandell of Plattsmouth, Nebraska. Funeral services were held at Walnut Park Church in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Fred O. Davies officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove cemetery.

MOTTASHED.—J. Charles, was born August 25, 1883, in London, Ontario, and died January 18, 1952, at Blodgett Memorial Hospital in Grand Rapids, Michigan, after an illness of several weeks. He became a member of the Reorganized Church when he was eight years old and served in various ministerial capacities during his life. He was also influential in the city where he was living, having served as president of the Ionia County Cancer Society, secretary-treasurer of the Ministerial Association of Belding, and holding membership in the society for the advancement of management and the Chamber of Commerce.

He is survived by his wife, Nellie; two sons: Richard of Youngstown, Ohio, and Clifford of Grand Rapids; a daughter, Marie Mottashed of Montreal; and a sister, Mrs. Arthur Jaynes of Hiawatha, New Jersey. Funeral services were held in the Central Methodist Church in Belding, Apostle Paul M. Hanson officiating. Interment was in Kirtland Cemetery, Kirtland, Ohio.

LANE.—Clora May, daughter of Thomas J. and Yency Scott Bell, was born November 11, 1879, in Davis City, Iowa, and died January 3, 1952, at the Decatur County Hospital in Leon, Iowa. She was married on September 17, 1902, to J. Arthur Lane; three daughters were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1887, and had lived in Lamoni, Iowa, for fifty-six years.

She is survived by her husband; three daughters: Thelma Silsby and Alice K. Chesworth of Lamoni, and E. Grace Kanowyer of Reedley, California; a sister, Mrs. Ethlyn Sprague of Lamoni; two brothers: Edward Bell of St. Louis, Missouri, and Herbert Bell of Artesia, California; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Lamoni Coliseum, Elders Roy Chevillie and Robert Farnham officiating. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

WARD.—Ruth E., was born November 5, 1902, in Winona, Oregon, and died January 6, 1952. She had spent her entire life in southern Oregon. After graduating from high school in Grants Pass she taught school in Josephine County. On August 1, 1923, she was married to John F. Ward. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 27, 1950; she also belonged to the Central Point Group, and the Nivita Chapter of Eastern Star.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Dale F., of Central Point; and two brothers: Rollin F. Gorman of Rochester, New York, and Herbert M. Gorman of Rondono Beach, California. Funeral services were held at the Perl Chapel in Medford, Oregon, Elder James Davidson officiating. Interment was in Sis-kiyou Memorial Park.

ELLISON.—Lehi, was born near Woodbine, Iowa, on May 6, 1874, and died on January 27, 1952, at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He was married to Fannie Jones on August 14, 1909; eight children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 8, 1892.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Frank and Harold; three daughters: Mrs. Minnie Witt, Mrs. Mary Grund, and Mrs. Delia Janicek; and eighteen grandchildren, all of Council Bluffs. Three children preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Beem-Belford Chapel in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

EPERLY.—Hiram, was born July 23, 1875, at Joy, Illinois, and died at the age of seventy-six in the Methodist Hospital in Peoria, Illinois (date of death not given). On February 6, 1901, he was married to Pauline Schafer, who survives him. He was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons: Virgil of San Diego, California, and Kenneth of Vallejo, California; a daughter, Mrs. Clarence Fuerst of Kewanee, Illinois; and five grandchildren. His parents, two sons, two sisters, and two brothers preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Seifert and Smith Chapel, Elder E. R. Williams officiating. Burial was in Pleasant View Cemetery.

HOUGAS.—Lida E., was born March 7, 1860, at Watrousville, Michigan, and died January 31, 1952, at Boulder, Colorado. She was baptized by her husband, Almon D. Hougas, soon after their marriage on January 1, 1882. He preceded her in death on May 9, 1886.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Elda May Sanborne of Boulder, with whom she made her home for many years. Funeral services were conducted at Denver, Colorado, and Henderson, Iowa, by Elder Ward A. Hougas. Her cremated remains, and those of a grandson, Claire Graves, were interred in the family plot at Henderson on February 12.

Introducing

OTTO H. ELSER, Independence, Missouri (page 5). Dr. Elser is now serving his internship at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kansas. He was born in Haubersbronn, Germany, September 24, 1921. He moved to New York City with his parents when he was six years old. He was graduated with honors from the Bushwick High School in 1938. He received scholarships to attend the New York University College of Arts and Pure Sciences and was graduated from this school in 1942 with highest honors, being the first in a group of seventeen at the college to receive the Phi Beta Kappa key. At that time a write-up in a New York daily paper stated he "maintained a scholastic average of 94.4 per cent during his four years of study." Active in student affairs at University Heights, he was treasurer of the Classical Society, and a member of the Heights Symphony Orchestra, the Hill Historical Society, the undergraduate scholarship committee, and secretary-treasurer of La Societe Francaise. He was also a member of the Alpha Pi, national honorary political science society.

He served three and a half years in the United States Army, ten months of which was in overseas duties in the Philippines. When he returned to this country, he took one year of pre-medical work at New York University, following which he completed the four year course at the Harvard Medical School, graduating in June, 1951.

He was baptized on April 10, 1929, ordained a teacher in 1942, and an elder on March 11, 1951.

ROSAMOND (BUNNELL) SMITH, Independence, Missouri (page 18). Mrs. Smith has lectured and taught classes in many parts of the church but this is her first contribution to the columns of the Herald. She was born in Corning, Iowa, but soon after moved to Idaho where she spent much of her youth. She was graduated from the Twin Falls high school in 1917, attended Cottey College of Nevada, Missouri, in 1917-18. Next year she went to Graceland where she majored in music and dramatics and returned to Idaho and entered the Conservatory of Music where she studied in 1920-22. After her college training had been completed she took up secretarial work in Idaho and in Kansas City, Missouri. In 1919 she was baptized in Boise, Idaho. In 1924 she was married to W. Wallace Smith. They have two children: Rosalee and Wallace Bunnell.

Mrs. Smith is a past president of the P.T.A., of the O.O.H., and the Independence Music Club. She is assistant stake women's leader and is interested in music, drama, and women's work.

P.S.

* LEAP YEAR

Marriages do not increase in Leap Year, according to Metropolitan Life Insurance Company statistics. The spinster and the widow—young or old, dark or fair—do not, apparently, take advantage of their privilege of proposing marriage to an eligible man. So another myth is exploded.

What can a lady do but make herself attractive and available? Then, if the stupid man doesn't get the idea and propose, he would probably be a poor, dull, craven, unimaginative wooden-Indian of a husband. Who would want him?

Can you remember the quaint old Victorian traditions of love and marriage? Then a maiden sighed and hoped at home, filled her hope chest with exquisitely embroidered linens, crochet, tatting—and dreams. Discreetly she appeared at church with her family, or at some nice social affair at the home of friends. There, according to the best traditions, some young man observing her had his heart set aflame. He moved heaven and earth to win her affections, acquire commercial substance to provide a home, and overcome the most formidable of parental objections. This was the perennial theme of romantic novels, plays, pictures, magazines, and the small talk of the ladies' boudoirs and men's clubs. True or not, that was how people liked to think about it.

But now! Lo, and be careful what you behold! The lady, gowned like a tigress, may be lurking anywhere, ready to spring upon the helpless prey. In the look of her eyes and the touch of her pretty hand there is something more powerful than the love potions of the Middle Ages, an anodyne that renders the man insensible to the scheme that she so cleverly conceals. This is the perennial theme of our romantic novels, plays, pictures, magazines, radio, television, and all the places where young men and women met together or separately. True or not, this is the way modern people seem to like to think of it.

Between you and me, Dear Reader, both of them are a lot of tosh. People are people. We are all human beings together, and despite the difference in sex, a great deal alike. We hunger for companionship and homes; we need the love of a good companion, and it isn't funny. It isn't silly. Someday, when the world is civilized, there will be an understanding of this great human need that will respect the dignity to which every person, man or woman, has an inalienable right.

Every normal good man will, in the course of his career, want a home and a companion. He should have the courage to go out and seek her.

Every normal good woman will, in the course of her development, desire a home, a good husband, a share in some useful work that will help the world, as she assists him, and children to love. She has a right to be sought, to be admired, to be considered beautiful, and especially precious to the man who becomes her companion. She has a right to all the dignity and respect accorded to any human being in fulfilling the conditions of life placed upon her by her Creator.

Leap Year may be worth a smile. But behind the smile there should be a serious thought and genuine understanding.

News and Notes

JOINT COUNCIL IN SESSION

The First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric began Joint Council meetings which will include plans for General Conference February 28. The Council of Twelve had met in session up to February 27. All the Apostles, with the exception of Apostle Roscoe Davey, have returned from their fields for the meetings.

APOSTLES TRAVEL

Apostle D. O. Chesworth has returned from three weeks in the Northwest associated with Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The men visited the Portland, British Columbia, Seattle, and Spokane Districts. Brother Chesworth attended the Hispanic Institute at Graceland College February 22 and 23 with Apostles Paul M. Hanson, Charles R. Hield, and Reed M. Holmes. The men taught classes at the institute, and participated in the various activities. Apostle Hield gave the closing address.

BOOK OF MORMON INSTITUTE HELD

The City-Wide Zion's League cabinet of the Center Stake sponsored a Book of Mormon institute February 25-March 1. The average attendance for each evening was over 500 young people. The speakers for the week included Apostles Reed M. Holmes, Maurice L. Draper, Arthur A. Oakman, Seventy Glen Johnson, Evangelist Harold I. Velt. F. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, was the moderator for a panel held on Friday evening. The purpose of the institute was to acquaint church young people of Independence and nonmembers with the Book of Mormon. Lee Hart, stake youth leader, was the general director of the activities.

PREPARATION DAY HELD

The women of the Center Stake met in their monthly Preparation Day, February 7. Elder John R. Darling, Associate Director of Religious Education, was the guest speaker. Classes were held in the afternoon under the leadership of Mrs. Gail Wilson, Elder Almer Sheehy, Mrs. Fred Stevens, and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith. The Englewood women's choir furnished music for the services, and Mrs. Cecil Burton was the organist.

ACTIVITIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE PLANNED

The City-Wide Zion's League of the Center Stake, under the direction of Lee Hart, has announced plans for youth activities following the evening services at General Conference. These activities will include a mixer, a talent program, a forum on "What We Believe," a Graceland reception, "Whom Shall I Marry" discussion, and a fun night. The climax of the activities of the week will be an early morning fellowship held on the closing Sunday of Conference. Young people who plan to attend Conference are requested to bring their musical instruments or come otherwise prepared for Talent Night.

SPEAK TO WOMEN

Members of the General Council of Women have been busy with various speaking engagements as well as Conference plans. Mrs. Pauline Arnsen addressed the women of group eight at Stone Church. Mrs. Charles Grabske and Mrs. H. I. Velt also addressed women's groups.

JERRY C. RUNKLE has been a member of the Graceland College faculty since the fall of 1942. He teaches subjects in the field of business and economics.

He was born September 27, 1915, at Pisgah, Iowa, and was reared on a farm. He was graduated from the Pisgah Consolidated High School in 1932 and then worked for a year at a produce station before entering Graceland in 1933. He then attended Iowa State Teachers College for his sophomore year, and received his bachelor of science degree in June, 1938, with a major in the field of commercial education. In 1938 he started teaching commercial subjects at Clarence High School in Clarence, Iowa, where he remained for three years. From 1938-40 he worked summers as a playground supervisor for the Waterloo Recreation Commission where he also worked while attending Iowa State Teachers College. From 1940 to 1942 he attended Saturday classes and summer sessions at the University of Iowa receiving his master's degree in August, 1942, with a major in economics. In the fall of 1942 he joined the Graceland staff.

In the summer of 1945 he attended Northwestern University, and in the summer of 1946 he began his doctorate studies at the University of California in Berkeley. From June, 1948, to September, 1950, he was on a leave of absence from Graceland for residence study on his degree. He has only an oral examination and thesis left to complete.

Jerry was married to the former Wilma Michael of Woodbine, Iowa, in August of 1938. They have two children, Michael, 7, and Jane, 2.

"Learn to do all kinds of sports as well as you can, but do not spend too much time on one" is Jerry's theory; however, he does prefer hunting and golfing to other types of sports. He has become very interested in astronomy after a course or two in this science in college.

He is a member of the American Economics Association, a high priest, and member of the Lamoni Stake presidency.

A Democratic Church

THE MEMBERS of the first Presidency have often had occasion to discuss the question of democracy in the church, the right of the majority to control, the freedom of action within the body, and the right of delegates or the individual delegate to initiate and assist to enact legislation at our General Conferences not inconsistent with our organic law.

We have wondered if, as the church has grown and the pressure of routine business has been multiplied in recent years, the net result has been to limit the operation of "common consent," a rule applying, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 25, to everything in the church.

After consideration of this question prior to the General Conference in 1947 the Presidency sponsored an editorial on the subject, which may be found on page 3 of the Herald for March 8 of that year.

While we in no way wish to invite hasty or ill-advised proposals—our Conference days will be too short for any waste of valuable time—we do believe we should reaffirm what we then said, and therefore quote as follows:

PARTICIPATION IN GENERAL CONFERENCE LEGISLATION

Deep concern has been felt during recent years over the lack of participation from the floor in the business sessions of General Conference. This concern has been shared by both general officers and members of the body, although the reasons for their concern have been widely different.

The general officers know from experience that mere legislating is not enough. To fulfill its purpose, legislation must lead to vigorous action, and unless the delegates and ex officios have a sense of participation in the business of the General Conference, their voting is likely to be perfunctory and to fail to commit them to vigorous and enthusiastic action in the branches and districts.

Some of the ex officios and delegates, on the other hand, are concerned in the working of democracy in the business sessions of General Conference because they feel so many matters are "cut and dried" before they come to the attention of the body and that, once they are there, these matters tend to be "railroaded" through to a vote. This concern is not satisfied by pointing out that the presiding officers make a special point of waiting for those desiring to speak to claim the floor, or that—in the nature of things—the Conference has a right to expect the leadership of the general quorums in fields where the general officers have special experience and responsibility, or that extended and repetitive debate itself tends to destroy the rights of the body. Despite all explanation, there still remains a feeling that members of the body should share more freely in the shaping of legislation than they now do and, fundamentally, this is right.

What can we do?

(1) The enactment of General Conference legislation is a joint problem. The general officers responsible, especially the members of the Presidency, must see to it that the clearest possible explanation of proposed legislation is made available to the body, and that ample opportunity for discussion is afforded. And members of the body must give careful attention to the Conference reports and other information available to them, with a view to making any necessary contribution of which they are capable, and they must see to it that this contribution is actually made.

(2) The simple fact that recommendations are presented by the Presidency or the Joint Council gives these recommendations great weight in the Conference. This is as it should be. But such recommendations should not be received and approved as a mere matter of loyalty to the general authorities. Our loyalty is to God, to the church, and to the best interests of the church, before it is to any quorum or group of general officers in their official status. Conference members opposed to recommended legislation should therefore express their views freely, and presiding officers should and intend to be especially alert to recognize any who seek the floor and whose questions or contrasting points of view may lead to wiser or better informed action.

(3) It is not always possible to give advance notice of impending legislation, but where this is done, it is quite in order for members of the legislative body to give to the presiding officers prior notice of their desire to be heard in regard to any action. Members of the Presidency will welcome such co-operation.

(4) Sometimes a question is much more helpful than a speech.

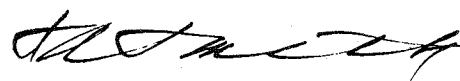

(5) We are all brothers and sisters in Christ. No one should hesitate to express before the family of Christ his deliberate judgment in matters of concern to the family. And, certainly, no member of the family should be scornful or derisive when a brother fails to express himself well because of inexperience or stage fright.

(6) The affairs of the Conference are important to the whole church, but especially important to those who take their saintly duties seriously. The best preparation for constructive participation in the General Conference business sessions is constructive participation in branch and district affairs.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Let us all work together toward wise and freely determined Conference legislation, "according to the covenants" and "by common consent . . . by much prayer and faith."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Threads of Divinity

FOR OVER twenty-five years I dictated mail to a stenographer. When interrupted I would, upon resuming the dictation, invariably ask the stenographer, "Where did I leave off?" or "What was the last thing I said?"

In the light of this almost universal procedure among businessmen, the following statement by Emma Smith recorded in Church History, Volume 3, page 357, portrays either the work of a genius or of a man whose intellect was quickened by Divinity.

My belief is that the Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity—I have not the slightest doubt of it. I am satisfied that no man could have dictated the writing of the manuscripts unless he was inspired; for, when acting as his scribe, your father would dictate to me hour after hour; and when returning after meals, or after interruptions, he would at once begin where he had left off without either seeing the manuscript or having any portion of it read to him. This was a usual thing for him to do.

Recommended Resolution

Notice is hereby given that the following preambles and resolution will be presented to the General Conference which convenes in April, 1952, with the recommendation that the resolution be adopted:

WHEREAS the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on April 7, 1938, adopted a resolution authorizing the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric to take such steps as are necessary to incorporate the church in the respective states of the Commonwealth of Australia and the Dominion of New Zealand for the purpose of holding title to real estate in said areas; and

WHEREAS, in taking these necessary steps, some uncertainty has arisen in respect to the authority of the Board of Trustees of said proposed incorporation, as to whether the Board of Trustees as such would have power to supersede locally elected committees and officers in the management of their affairs, and it is the desire of this General Conference to clarify this point;

THEREFORE BE IT AND IT IS HEREBY RESOLVED that the said Board of Trustees when officially constituted in connection with the corporation in any of the states of the Commonwealth of Australia or the Dominion of New Zealand is hereby directed that local management of branch, mission, and district projects be left to their respectively elected officers and committees, and that the purpose of setting up the said incorporation under the direction of its Board of Trustees is to take title to church properties and have power relating thereto in the matter of buying, selling, or transferring in harmony with the decision of the proper church bodies concerned.

Attention: Anyone Bringing Recording Equipment to Conference

Because of the many recorders brought to the General Conference, provision must be made in advance for adequate space and line connections. Anyone planning to record any phase of the Conference (at the Auditorium, Stone Church, Kansas Street Chapel, etc.) must first register with the Radio Department located in the Auditorium. This must be done prior to the opening of Conference to assure adequate space. This space will be limited and will be assigned as the requests are received in the radio office.

A Day of Prayer

Information comes to us from Major General Roy H. Parker, Chief of Chaplains, Washington, D. C., that he would like the clergy of all denominations to set aside April 27, 1952, as a time in which prayers may be offered for our soldiers who are on active duty. It has been suggested that there are many men in the National Guard Units which are not on active duty who would like to join in such a service and would be found anxious to don their uniforms and attend such service in honor of the fellow soldiers who are on active duty.

Special prayers shall be offered Sunday, April 27, for every member of our armed forces who is serving his or her country in the present emergency. The personal sacrifice being made by these citizens seems sufficient to elicit our prayers. We are deeply grateful for the service which they are rendering. We, as a church, are happy to co-operate with the National Guard and the Chaplain Service in doing this.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Don Landon, Missionary to the Northwest:

I am happy to share with you the fine results of a recent series of cottage meetings in Puyallup and Tacoma, Washington. As a result of the preparation and support of the Saints in both branches, nineteen persons were baptized at the end of the series.

The Puyallup Branch is desperately in need of a larger meeting place since the past month or so has seen the attendance reach 110. The Tacoma Saints are actively engaged in continuing the cottage meetings started during the series.

All of the nineteen baptized are of high caliber and will make a splendid contribution to the branches. The priesthood potential in many of the new converts is high. The cottage meeting series extended over a five weeks period with three days of each week spent in each branch.

We are happy to report such fine success and recognize the hand of God working as he "giveth the increase" to the church.

Many readers will be interested in this letter sent to the Presiding Bishop with a contribution to the Auditorium. It comes from Albert F. Cruse as a memorial to his grandfather James Kemp who will be remembered by many older members in this region.

Many thanks for the receipt covering my contribution to the Auditorium fund.

My grandfather, James Kemp, arrived in the United States from England in 1865 in search of the new religion, as spoken by Joseph Smith. He had been an evangelist in England and was a married man with three children when he reached these shores. He first trekked from St. Louis, Missouri, to Salt Lake City, Utah. When he got there he did not believe in the practice of polygamy, but had to remain there some time before a wagon train was headed back East.

During his stay in Salt Lake City it was necessary for him to work for Brigham Young. When he returned to Missouri, he joined the Reorganized Church and was a minister all of his life. He died at the age of 83.

I am very glad to make this contribution in recognition of the service to the church given by my grandfather.

Save Us, Lord, or We Perish

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

Condensed from a message recorded at Liberty Street Church, Independence, Mo.

And when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him. And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us: we perish.—MATTHEW 8: 23-25.

THE SCRIPTURE READING presents a scene that took place during the earthly life of the Lord. There is something significant in the story for us today when we are concerned for the work of God that is in our hands and should be carried on to completion. We wonder at times why we are not doing more to bring to pass the purposes that were in the mind of God when he restored his church among men.

A Cry for Help

A few weeks ago I listened to one of our leading radio commentators. His remarks were such that I found myself repeating the words, "Save us, Lord, or we perish!"

I read in today's paper an item about a man who has made considerable fame for himself as a newspaper reporter in various parts of the world, and just recently he arrived at the conclusion that we are helpless to do anything in this present world situation unless we return to God. This gentleman has retired to take up religious orders in the Catholic Church. I agree with his findings, but I do not agree with the method he has taken to solve the problems of the world. Probably he has never heard of the Restoration Movement—and that may not be his fault. There are a great many people today, not only in our land but abroad, who are becoming conscious of the danger that humanity may not be able to continue upon the face of this earth, and they are looking for some means to save themselves from this terrible situation. I have noticed in the Good Book not only that our Lord used parables to impress upon the minds of his people certain spiritual truths, but that there were various incidents in his life which suggested great events to take place in the future. In other words, there were a number of situations in which the Master had experiences that foreshadowed modern conditions.

Now let us review that scene on the little ship where Jesus slept and see what lesson it may contain for us. One other writer mentions the fact that there were several vessels that sailed forth on this occasion upon the Sea of Galilee. Then a storm came up. In fact, it was a tempest of exceptional violence.

The companions of Jesus on this occasion were experienced sailors. They were acquainted with the Sea of Galilee and knew how to handle a boat. This storm was out of the ordinary, or they would not have troubled the Master to the extent of awakening him from a much-needed sleep. They became aware of the fact that the situation was such that they themselves could not control it. They recognized from past experience, and no doubt from their faith, that he who was asleep was the only hope they had.

So they addressed him, as one other writer describes the situation, "Carest thou not that we perish?" Jesus awoke. He reproved them for their lack of faith; then he rebuked the elements of the sea, and the wind became calm. They marveled, "How great a man is this, that even the sea and the winds obey him?" These experienced fishermen on a familiar sea became conscious that of themselves and by themselves they could not bring to pass their own safety, so they turned to the Son of God. And answering their petition he arose, rebuked the elements, and saved their lives.

Our Modern Distress

Let us regard the present world situation as a terrific storm in which all nations are concerned. It is sad but nevertheless true that our physical being sometimes must be jeopardized before we recognize how dangerous a situation is. A great deal of the fear in the hearts and minds of men today rises out of their worry for what may happen to their bodies. Some of our missionaries have lectured on life after death, but few people are concerned about what happens after these three score years and ten—more or less. It is too bad that our physical beings and material interests must be in danger before we become concerned about our real welfare, which after all is the salvation of the soul. Maybe it isn't too bad, in the larger sense, that our physical existence is threatened, for in our attempt to do something to preserve our life here we may succeed in preserving our souls for the hereafter. A great many experienced individuals who have succeeded in the affairs of state in our nation and other nations are today recognizing as never before that they themselves do not possess the power to bring calm out of this present storm.

Where Do We Look for Help?

Some of our leaders are attempting to do all in their power to bring to pass what they call a lasting peace. I think that many of these individuals, regardless of their political affiliation, are sincere. When we have wars and rumors of wars, our whole economy is upset. The whole social fabric is in great danger, and we know not what to do. We have turned to all of the established and recognized solutions that this world knows about.

When I was a young man we worried, not because of any opposition that we encountered in our attempt to introduce this work, but because of the lack of concern of men and women for the things that pertain to God. They were not interested in religion, and it was difficult to make them see the importance of the Restoration of the gospel.

In Our Trouble, Hope

I trust you will not misunderstand me if I say that I am glad people are becoming more concerned. I cannot rejoice in the price they are having to pay—in the loss of their sons in Korea and in sacrifice and uncertainty at home. But I do rejoice that as a result of the world situation more and more people every day are becoming concerned with life, looking about to find some avenue of escape or some solution for the problems which they cannot meet and successfully solve. As these conditions continue—and it is probable that they will—we may expect more and more people to show concern.

But for a while at least they will not be looking in the right direction. They are trying human sources and human powers, hoping that they can find a solution for their problems. I wonder how long it will be until they turn to the living Christ.

If there are any people on earth who should be in a position to testify that Jesus lives, acts, and works today, we—the Reorganized Latter Day Saints—should be. For, more than any other organization that has existed before us or has come into existence since the beginning of our own era, we stand out as a people who bear the last real testimony that Christ lives. What other church, originating since 1830, can bear testimony that a living Christ appeared and made himself manifest to men? No one has yet duplicated that experience of young Joseph Smith. In this sense, we are still unique as a people.

We can say—those of us who are members of this church (and if you can't you have never been born again, whether you are a member of the church or not)—that we join in the testimony of Sidney Rigdon and others: "We know that he lives." We who have this testimony know that God is concerned with the welfare of mankind. Reorganized Latter Day Saints are no more exempt from the terrific storm that threatens to engulf and destroy mankind all over the earth than any other people.

As members of this church, we should have this one thing in common. Of all the peoples on the face of this earth, we should know where to turn. We should recognize the fact that the Son of God has the power, and as a people we should be sufficiently concerned to call upon him and give him an opportunity to bring calm to this storm-tossed world.

Those men of two thousand years ago remarked how wonderful it was that the winds and the waves obeyed him. Would you be surprised if I were to point out that it is easier for the Son of God to control the elements than it is for him to control us?

A Difference in Us

There is a great difference between the elements and mankind. The elements—so far as I know—do not have agency as men do. We have our agency, a right and a power that distinguish us from most other creations of the universe. It is important in relation to a question we often hear.

People, including members of our church, sometimes ask, "Why doesn't God do something?" It is much the same as the question of the disciple, "Carest thou not that we perish?" There are some people who think it would be easy for God to help us by removing some prominent enemy leader. He could have an accident. But I do not believe that God is responsible for accidents. We bring them about ourselves.

When we were all troubled about Hitler, I said that some day Hitler would be no more. I have lived long enough to see that prediction come true. But when I made the prediction, I also called attention to the fact that it would not solve our difficulties. All of our enemies could be taken from this earth, but it would not solve our problems. There are people who have no doubt prayed that God would intervene. There are people praying all over the world, "God, do something."

It Is Our Move

I think they ought to change their prayers. They ought to give consideration to the fact that we should do something—all of us together—including Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

What opportunity have we given the Son of God to bring peace and calm to this storm-tossed world? Do we want God to destroy the agency of man? That is about the only way he could do it, if he were to grant our prayers.

Our great problem is not one in which the elements are involved. The real problem of the moment is mankind, and God cannot answer our prayers to bring calm and peace where we are involved unless we utilize our agency in such a way that we will choose to become and behave as the sons and daughters of God by the virtue of our relationship to him.

Peter said that our natures must be changed. We must put on the divine nature. God isn't going to put it on for us. We must become transformed, and we can do this only by recognizing the law that governs our true relationship to God. The power behind that law is his Spirit. Every promise in the Good Book or in modern revelation stresses over and over again the necessity of obedience to the law of God. The obedient shall eat the good of the land in these last days. I am concerned about this storm that overshadows us. I wish it could be rebuked. I, too, would like to see lasting peace; but I know that peace and all associated with it can never be realized until mankind listens to the voice of God and conforms of its own free will to the mandates of heaven.

In studying the Scripture, we used to think how terrible it was that the people of Jerusalem rejected the Son of God. They told us that the shortest and saddest statement in the Bible was "Jesus wept." We know, of course, why he wept. It was because the people had rejected him. And most of the people of the world are rejecting the Son of God now. I do not think we do it deliberately. It isn't that we want to be disobedient, but we are not conforming to his teachings and his way of life to the extent that we become men and women of good will; for only men and women of good will can bring a lasting peace. God has done everything in his power to save us, while protecting our agency. The next move rests with us.

The Time Is Now

When are we going to make the move? The only answer I know is when we become sufficiently concerned. First of all we must become aware of the fact that there is no solution outside of Christ and his way of life. We must recognize that our existence is threatened, and that the only source of deliverance is Jesus Christ and his gospel. This means compliance with that gospel.

I have been amazed that there are so many people, even in our own church, who make the mistake of assuming that because we are in possession of the means of salvation, therefore we are saved. I can come to no other conclusion than that because I have heard individuals say, "Thank God, I am a member of this church." But when they don't do anything about it, they are showing in effect that they consider themselves saved. There's all the difference in the world between possessing something and utilizing it.

I appreciate very much the contribution that one third of the members of this church are making, for only about one third contribute by their presence and with their substance and with their ministry. I am referring now to the men who minister and support themselves in business and labor while they minister. They are the people responsible for whatever success this church has achieved, and I think we have made some success during the past few years. I have often wondered what would happen if we could have another third of our membership join us.

However, I have yet to meet those who are really active who are satisfied with the contribution they are making, for the most active members are the people who say, "We want to do more to bring to pass the purposes of God on this earth." There are few of us who have any reason to be satisfied with whatever contribution we have made up to date.

A Greater Concern

Not only must the members of this church become more concerned about the storm that is threatening our very existence today, but there must come a greater concern in the minds and hearts of others, so that they will be willing to listen to the message of the Restoration.

Some have asked, "Why is it that the church was organized in 1830, and this is 1952, and Zion has not been established?" I do not agree with those who say that it could not have been established before now. I would rather take my position with the Lord. He said many years ago that it could have been established, and I still believe it could be established now if there were enough members sufficiently concerned to make a present-day application of the principles of the gospel to their way of life. We have gone part of the way, but we haven't gone far enough.

Predictions for the Future

I am certain that conditions will become such that there will be a sufficient number of us who will find it necessary to go all the way with God. When we do, then this way of life which we call Zion, or Zionism, will be revealed in and through us, in such a way that people will know where safety can be found—not because of a particular place, but in a way of life that guarantees safety, because this manner of life is free from dishonesty, corruption, and every other kind of sin that one can imagine. That is the only way we can ever really be safe, the only way we can ever find real security.

We may expect that unfavorable conditions in this world will continue to develop, regardless of any intermission, regardless of any false situations in which we think, "Well, now this is over." For instance, if we have a "cease fire" order in Korea tomorrow, many people will return to their old way of life. They are not going to be concerned at all. In fact, some of the boys who are coming back from Korea are telling me that they are shocked to find us taking the attitude we do. They can't understand why some of us, in spite of income taxes, are making money during this terrible situation.

Worse than this I find it necessary as a minister of this church to go into homes that have lost sons over in Korea. I went into a home where there was a sick father, and where two boys already had made their contribution in another war. After shaking hands, I learned that one of the finest lads I have known in this church was killed just two weeks after he went into action. If one can go into a home like that and say to the parents, "Well, all this is helping to speed the day of Zion's redemption and to bring a lasting peace," then these parents can lift up their heads and say, "Thank God, our boy has not died in vain."

No Hope in War

Regardless of the sacrifices that war entails, there has never been any promise that war is going to bring peace and calm on this earth. I wonder, "How long, O Lord, how long" before the inhabitants of this earth realize their helplessness to such an extent that they are willing, like the disciples of old, to turn to the only power that is capable of bringing salvation and, turning to this power, become obedient to divine instructions?

Jesus said on one occasion, "Ye call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say." The key to our failure is our disobedience.

A Better Prayer

What would happen if we, the members of this church, sensed the world situation to such an extent that we would go to God with open minds and hearts, not asking, "Carest thou, Lord, if we perish?"—for he does care; he has done everything in his power to prevent our perishing—but saying, "Lord, reveal to us wherein we lack; and give us the necessary power so that we can transform our lives to subject ourselves to thy will, that we might be able to manifest that thy Spirit can bring peace and calm and, exercising our agency in harmony with thy will, become thy sons and daughters."

If we could approach General Conference with open minds and open hearts like this—if we could give God Almighty the opportunity to inspire us—then we as a church would be in a position to reveal a condition of life to those who are turning today from the affairs of men and seeking relief elsewhere. We would give them an opportunity to see God made manifest in the flesh again. The same power which brought this church forward is still manifesting itself wherever it has an opportunity in the body of Christ. The Spirit of God has not been withdrawn from us. It will continue, and the promises of God concerning this church are sure, for there will be a sufficient number of Reorganized Latter Day Saints who will become so keyed to the voice of heaven that peace and all that pertains to peace will be experienced upon this earth.

Efforts to Shackle Christianity

DOUBTLESS many of our readers are watching with interest the conflicts in certain European countries where Communism has supremacy and national efforts are being made to bring Christianity into subjection to the state. Protestantism has suffered less than the Roman Catholic movement because it has less invested in its properties and has never reached the proportions in numbers and influence which Catholicism has. The struggle, however, is of equal interest because, we need make no mistake about it, the teachings of Christ are the real issue.

The subjugation program in Czechoslovakia illustrates the situation rather well. Catholics make up 75 per cent of the population. The government started its campaign by stripping the churches of almost all their possessions and revenues. In the midst of the frustrations which followed, it offered to put the clergy on the government payroll. All that was necessary was for the clergy to take an oath of loyalty to the "People's Democracy." In 1949, while the bishops themselves held out, they advised the clergy to accept the offer. All but a dozen did so. However, this was only the beginning of the campaign. The government soon began telling what they were to say to the people. The clergy protested that they would not instruct the people in anything that was "contrary to the law of God, the Church, or the natural rights of man."

One may have wondered why the Communist officials tolerate the church at all. The evidence was not long in coming. They needed the church for propaganda purposes. The fifty million Catholics living in eastern Europe could not be immediately driven out of the church by an edict. Their program, therefore, was one of gradually corrupting the priesthood and bringing it into subjection to the will of the state. How well they have succeeded is not yet clear. Messages scrawled in scarcely legible letters reached the Vatican by circuitous routes which asked, "Shall we bury our dead like dogs? There is no Catholic priest here." "How can I baptize my baby?" "Can we marry a young couple at home?"

The church has paid back by excommunicating unfaithful priests and denying the sacraments to professing Communists. However, all the state had to do was to force many of the legitimate bishops whom it had put in jail to consecrate, as a bishop, some renegade priest. Thus endowed with spiritual powers by a Roman Catholic bishop, he could proceed to ordain new priests and consecrate new bishops who had learned to serve the state.

The Vatican then decreed that "any bishop, archbishop, or cardinal who consecrates a new bishop without the approval of Rome incurs the severest form of excommunication, even though he may have been 'coerced by grave fear.'"

Once again the church of Rome is going underground behind dark shades; laymen well grounded in the faith, secretly ordained as priests, say Mass in private homes. Men in overalls or business suits, secretly consecrated as bishops, have taken over in some dioceses where the bishop is no longer free. "We are going back to the catacombs," admitted one priest. "Harder times are ahead than the Church has known for centuries."

Question Time

Question:

We have been asked by the church to make an inventory of our resources, also to file a tithing report annually. Does the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants teach this, and where can it be found? Or who is the authority?

Iowa

E.M.C.

Answer:

The scriptural authority for this is found in the Doctrine and Covenants:

... every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property. . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

Now, verily, I say unto you, That . . . every elder in this part of the vineyard must give an account of his stewardship unto the bishop in this part of the vineyard. . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 72: 4.

... for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable as stewards over earthly blessings. . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

The foregoing set forth the principle of the accounting. This is amplified in a letter written to Bishop Partridge by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams, which indicates that this accounting is to be through the filing of inventories:

Brother Partridge, Sir:

I proceed to answer your questions concerning the consecration of property: first, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this, a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the Bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion. . . . —Church History, volume 1, page 300.

This was further clarified by the action of the General Conference of 1923, General Conference Resolution Number 847, October 13, 1923:

... that the Order of Bishops believe it to be the duty of every member of the church to acknowledge his stewardship by complying with the law as given in the Scriptures:

- Filing his inventory
- Paying his tithe
- Paying his surplus
- Making his offerings
- Thereafter giving an account of his stewardship annually as required by the law of God. . . .

Further action was taken by the General Conference, Resolution Number 851, April 6, 1925:

... (2) that the Bishopric secure completed financial statements by the selection of a corps of men qualified by special training if possible, who have been assigned territory with the view of securing these financial statements by personal contact. . . .

(4) that the members of the church be requested to file their financial statements annually.

PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

Question:

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 125, verse 9, we have this statement: "The only qualification for delegates chosen by branches or districts should be membership in good standing, it being given by the Spirit that those other than the eldership should be represented in this way."

Does this language mean that in the choosing of delegates, the Aaronic priesthood and lay members should be given preference, rather than filling the delegation with elders who already have all rights in Conferences, saving the casting of delegation votes, a thing very rarely called for in Conferences?

Missouri

D.H.S.

Answer:

This instruction was given at a time when many felt that General Conferences should be confined to members of the Melchisedec priesthood. We believe that the intent of the language quoted is to make clear that persons other than members of the Melchisedec priesthood may serve as delegates to General Conference. We do not think that the intention is to exclude the elders, but rather to include others with the elders. Certainly no action of General Conference and no interpretation given by the Presidency of which we are aware has been based on the assumption that this section means that those not holding the Melchisedec priesthood should have prior consideration in determining delegates.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Question:

What is meant by the Scriptures which say that Christ came in the meridian of time?

Ohio

W.E.K.

Answer:

The statement was made to Enoch in answer to his question, "When shall the day of the Lord come?" "It shall be in the meridian of time" (Genesis 7: 53, Inspired Version). Christ, speaking by revelation in latter days, says that he is "the same which came in the meridian of time" (Doctrine and Covenants 39: 1).

We do not have a clear or certain chronology of time prior to Christ's coming so that the year of his birth is not definitely known, but the commonly accepted figure of 4,000 years from Adam to Christ is probably not far from correct. Estimating that whole period of the world of humanity from Adam to the close of the millennium at 7,000 years (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 34, 35), and adding to that the unmeasured "little season" which is to follow, and then the further period known as "the day of judgment," of which the length in years is not given, and which may be of considerable duration, we have a total of somewhere between 7,000 and 8,000 years. The prophecy was not intended to be exact, but it will be seen that Christ's coming was somewhere near the middle or meridian of this period.

Since Christ's mission was to the whole world, both those who lived before he came and those who should come after, a midway point for his coming would be most natural and appropriate.

Friends of the Master

By Leona N. Hands

IT WAS EARLY MORNING. Though the sun had scarcely peered over the horizon, Martha had already laid the fire, set the table, and prepared breakfast.

Apparently everything was in readiness. The table, with its beautiful hand-drawn linen cover which Martha herself had woven looked very inviting. There were freshly stewed figs, a dish of honey, and wheat bread which had been baked the day before in the public ovens. Bowls and spoons were in place waiting for the wheat meal Martha was keeping hot. There was plenty of fresh, cold milk to drink and to pour on the wholesome porridge.

Yet, Martha surveyed the table critically. It still seemed to lack something. Her face brightened. A few flowers were needed to add cheer and color. She stepped outside into the courtyard where flowers were blooming in abundance.

The temptation to linger was almost overwhelming, for was this not the most beautiful part of the day? The air was sweet and fresh, the morning dew still heavy on flowers and green grass. Birds were filling the air with melody.

Martha paused to drink in the beauty of the bright morning—but for only a moment. Breakfast was ready and there was much work waiting to be done. Selecting an assortment of the brightest blossoms, she quickly picked a bouquet and hurried into the house.

"Mary will be delighted with this centerpiece," she reflected as she skillfully arranged the flowers in a blue bowl and placed it on the table.

MARY—where was Mary? They had risen from their beds and dressed together. What had Mary been doing all this time, Martha wondered impatiently as she brushed aside the woven tapestries that separated the rooms. At the sight of Mary, seated on a low stool gazing out the window, she spoke sharply, "What long thoughts are you thinking now, dreamer? And why do you linger here when it is long past sunup? Come! Have we not been warned against idleness since we were mere children at our mother's knee?" Then in a kinder tone,

"Mary, would it not be better for you to be helping me with the morning tasks? Surely there is plenty of work for both of us."

Mary arose quickly, smiling. "Of course, you are right, Martha," she answered—her voice displaying no hint of rancor. "I was but meditating on the sayings of the Master." After a moment of silence, she continued thoughtfully, "Some of them are so deep they seem as mysteries. Why is it that he speaks mostly in parables? Do you not think it strange that he should do so, even among his friends and those who love him?"

"I am sure I cannot tell," replied Martha rather curtly. "I have thought of it myself. Many of his teachings are deep and difficult to understand and would require much thought and study to uncover their meaning. And who, with many tasks, and the cares of life added, can sit and ponder for long? But come, our morning meal will be cold and not worth the eating after all my care in its preparation."

"Dear sister," said Mary affectionately, as they left the bedchamber and approached the breakfast table. "You are always so thoughtful of life's comforts." As they took their places Mary fingered the cloth of snowy whiteness and continued slowly, "I am sure I shall never be able to take such good care of a household."

Martha gave Mary a look of silent reproach just before they bowed their heads and together repeated a prayer of thanksgiving over the food. After filling the bowls with porridge Martha spoke abruptly, "I am sure that you could easily learn much more of the ways of household duties, Mary." A certain sharpness crept into her voice as she continued, "Have I not tried earnestly to teach you, even as our mother first instructed me? But you, dreamer, you do not think of the thing you are doing. It is a grievous matter to me. Surely I have tried, have I not?"

"You have indeed," Mary replied, humbly. "It is I who remain a poor pupil, though not because of any fault of yours, dear sister. But I fear that I shall never be able to accomplish as much during the daylight hours as you, Martha.

You move so surely and so quickly at even the smallest of tasks."

"My dear Mary," counseled Martha, "that is indeed the secret. You must keep your mind on your work. Instead, your thoughts are far away on other things; hence you work slowly. Have I not endeavored many times to teach you this lesson? Indeed, we have both been given much instruction concerning these things. Did not our dear mother often repeat to us the counsel of the prophet, 'Every wise woman buildeth her house'?"

"Verily, all these things I have heard and bent a listening ear whenever our mother would repeat the sayings of old," said Mary earnestly. "I dearly loved to sit at her knee for instruction and hear her repeat the teachings of the wise ones over and over again."

MARTHA regarded her sister silently for a moment, then spoke sternly, "You are inclined to much learning which I fear is not for your good. This is not the first duty of a woman, as I have tried to tell you. First you must look well to the ways of a household, and here again, I am giving you our mother's counsel which was in turn handed down to her. These are not idle sayings, but great truths from the past."

"I perceive that you are right indeed," agreed Mary, eager to please her sister. "And today, I shall endeavor to work diligently so that you shall yet be proud of me for my industry."

"Then let us begin at once to apply ourselves to the many tasks that await us. We have much to do in preparation for our honored guest tonight. Surely you have not forgotten that the Master has promised to have supper with us," reminded Martha.

"I have been looking forward to that hour for many days," Mary said, her face glowing with pleasure.

"Then come, there is no time for idleness," Martha urged, rising from the table. "Even now I must go to the market place, while it is yet early and the choicest meats are plentiful. After the dishes are washed, sweep the rooms well and see that all corners are free from dust. Do not linger over these tasks, Mary. There are herbs to be gathered from the garden, and the courtyard should be swept also, if there is time," Martha finished with a worried expression.

"I shall begin at once," Mary assured her, picking up the bowls and clearing the table. "It is well," Martha replied as she tied a colorful scarf of intricate design on her head. It was one that she had made and dyed herself, and she adjusted it carefully. Taking a market basket, she moved toward the door, then turned to give her sister a few parting words. "Try to finish before I return, Mary. If you do, I may be able to prepare some small cakes that will go well with our supper."

"Now I am sure that I will be through with the tasks early," Mary said eagerly. "Some of your small cakes will turn our supper into a feast indeed."

"What a child you are," chided Martha, "to show such happiness over a few small cakes." She smiled indulgently at her sister and left for the market.

ALONE, Mary worked diligently. Soon the dishes were washed and dried and put back in their accustomed places. Then she swept the rooms carefully as Martha had admonished. Completely absorbed in her work she began to hum contentedly. The music brought the words of the song to her mind, for it was a hymn of praise. "How lovely are thy dwellings, O Lord, my God." She sang it slowly, as her mind pondered over the meaning of the words. "The dwellings of the Lord, God." That would be God, the Father, of course. But "Lord!" Why, that was Jesus, the Master! To dwell with God and Christ—how wonderful that would be! Again and again Jesus had mentioned his kingdom. When and where would it be, Mary wondered, as she sat down on a low stool, unmindful of the broom which she still clasped in her fingers.

And so it was that Martha, returning from the market, found her sister deep in meditation and the work unfinished. With an exclamation of impatience she set the market basket on the table, while Mary sprang to her feet in guilty surprise.

"Must I always be here to prod you to your duties?" questioned Martha angrily. "And what would our good mother say to your slothfulness? Would she not berate you soundly? Yes, and punish you also, though you are a child no longer. Indeed, I wish she were here, for I fear you hold my counsel far too lightly." She regarded Mary sternly then continued determinedly, "I shall speak to Lazarus when he returns from his visit. Perhaps he may be able to think of something to say to you that will cause you to correct your careless habits."

"Please do not make mention of this to our brother," pleaded Mary. "I fear he is not too well of late. Truly, I shall endeavor to do better and follow your wise example, Martha."

"Then let us have no more of this dreaming. Come, let us finish the work together, and I trust I shall no more have occasion to admonish you to be up and doing. Are we not both eager for the Master to find all things in order when he comes to our dwelling place?" asked Martha.

"Surely," answered Mary, quickly. "And I hope he shall be able to tarry long enough to visit with us and explain some of the things which I have been pondering over in my mind."

MARTHA gazed at Mary deeply, a look of perplexity on her face. With a sign of resignation she began to busy herself, keeping her own counsel, but inwardly feeling resentment as she poked the coals of fire to quicken the blaze. "Mary knows I do not like to hurry my cakes," she thought, as she put the meat on to cook with just the right amount of herbs.

Martha did not hold her resentment long. Soon she was deeply interested in the preparation of the cakes—mixing the meal, egg, and oil, then adding spices to the flour. In a short time she placed the cakes in the oven to bake with a murmur of satisfaction.

"Now I shall gather fresh flowers for the table," she thought. "There is still time before the Master comes, if I make haste." She made her way to the small garden and quickly began to pick the choicest blooms. Completely absorbed, she did not see the Master coming until he was approaching her own courtyard. Running to the doorway of the house she called hurriedly, "Mary, our guest is here, and we are not ready. Perhaps he is hungry and would like to partake of the evening meal early. Hurry and set the table while I bid him welcome." But Mary, coming to the door to listen to her sister's instructions, had caught sight of her beloved friend and forgot all else but to hasten and greet him.

So Jesus met them both and smiled at their eager greetings. Well he knew that he was a welcome guest in this Bethany home which was but a scant two miles from Jerusalem. Often, though weary, he walked the extra distance so that he might spend the night with these beloved friends.

Lazarus, the brother, was one of his first and most earnest followers. Mary's keen intellect made her a joy to converse with, and Martha, the elder sister, was mindful of even the smallest physical comforts. Each one ministered to his needs, making this home a welcome retreat of peace and rest. Yes, he looked forward to these visits with those of like mind and understanding.

TODAY he felt the undercurrent of some disruption in this usually serene home, but wisely kept his own counsel, greeting them both with a smile.

Mary was the first to speak. "I am happy indeed that you have come early," she said eagerly, as she led the way into the house. "I have some questions to ask, if you are not too weary, my Lord."

"It shall make me very happy to answer them," replied Jesus.

"First the Master must bathe his feet," said Martha, giving Mary a significant look for her thoughtlessness. "I have everything in readiness. You may set the table, Mary."

"Surely," agreed Mary quickly, her face flushing beneath Martha's gaze.

Under Martha's deft administrations, performed quickly and efficiently, the Master's feet were soon bathed and he was given the seat reserved for honored guests.

"It is good indeed to be in the house of friends who know one's needs," said Jesus.

Mary, who had finished her task, brought a low stool and, seating herself at Jesus' feet, gave the Master a troubled look. Jesus, the Son of God, the Messiah (for such she knew him to be)—what could be his needs? She weighed the matter carefully in her mind. Of a truth he had little of the comforts of life. Disappointment had come to him often, else why that look of deep sadness that often appeared in his eyes when he mingled with the people. Many of his friends misunderstood him; some of the closest even quarreled among themselves (so Lazarus had told her). Her face brightened. Jesus was happy to come to their dwelling place, to visit and sup with them.

"And what are the questions you have been keeping for me?" asked Jesus, smiling at her.

"The parables you relate so freely, Master. They are full of hidden meaning, and my heart yearns to know more of these mysteries."

MARTHA, busy with the food preparations in the outer room, listened to the voices of Jesus and Mary as they rose and fell. She thought to herself, "Jesus loves to visit with Mary. She gives him all her attention. Indeed," she contemplated with surprise, "they are alike in many ways. They talk and think alike. Perhaps," she decided shrewdly, "there are not too many who could fill this need of the Master, in the meeting of minds. But I, too, can meet his other needs for the comforts of life. Do I not see to it that all things are in order and a good meal is in readiness whenever he comes? Yes, it is I who must always take charge of all the duties in this household. Mary would never put the work first." The color in her face, which was already flushed from the heat of the oven, deepened in sudden annoyance as she left the room with firm tread. Without apology she interrupted the conversation between Jesus and Mary and addressed the Master.

"My Lord," she said, impulsively, "do you not see that my sister has left me to serve alone? Bid her help me, for she is wont to leave all cares of the household on my shoulders."

Jesus gave Martha a look of deep understanding. "Martha," he said to her kindly, "will you thus so willingly receive me into your home and not into your heart? I do indeed see that you are full of care and troubled about many things. I did not come to dine, but to sup with you. A simple meal would have been sufficient, Martha. Then you, too, would have time to partake of the bread of life which I alone can give."

The words of the Master sank deep in Martha's heart. Sudden tears filled her eyes and in tones of utter humility she said, "Lord, I have yearned to learn more of thee and thy ways. It is only that my days are so filled with many tasks. There is so much to be done," she ended helplessly.

"It is indeed true," said Jesus. "But if my kingdom is to be built on earth it must needs come first in the lives of those who love me more than the things of this world. Will you not choose first the good part even as Mary has done?"

It was then that Martha forgot all else save love for the Master and the sweet Spirit that was flooding her heart and mind with a great peace. "I shall always cherish this moment," she thought, dedicating herself wholeheartedly and without reservation to the Master's service.

"Let us partake of the good meal that Martha has so ably prepared for us," Jesus said kindly, in recognition of her loving service, knowing full well the good intents of her heart and seeing the change that was even now taking place in her life.

"I shall help serve," Mary offered, promptly rising to her feet and hastening to bring to the table the dishes of good food that Martha had prepared.

There was food in abundance. While Martha lit the candles Mary brought in a huge tray, piled high with large, purple grapes from their own arbor, and a round gold plate which held nuts in the center, surrounded by dates and figs. The small, spice cakes on a gold plate also were placed on the table with a dish of honey. There were olives, wheat bread, fresh greens, and lentils from the garden.

Last of all Martha carefully dished up the flavorful meat and gravy into a large bowl, placing the cover on it immediately to keep it hot. This she set directly in front of the plate of their honored guest.

Now all was in readiness and Martha graciously invited the Master to be seated at the head of the table. The two sisters took their places, one on either side of Jesus, quietly bowing their heads while he asked the Father's blessing on the food and on these two friends who loved him so dearly.

Outside a flaming sun sank below the horizon, shadows lengthened, and darkness settled over the land. Yet the three friends still lingered at the table. They had enjoyed their meal together; now they were deep in conversation and loath to break the magic spell of fellowship which bound them so closely together.

It was Mary who finally rose and left the room in search of a candle that she might light the wall lamps and dispel the darkness. As she re-entered the room, bearing the lighted candle, she paused in the doorway, halted by the sight that met her wondering eyes. Then her face lit up with an expression beautiful to behold. The Master had once more seated himself in the guest chair, and Martha sat on the low stool at his feet. She was looking into the face of Jesus and listening with rapt attention to the words of life as they fell from the lips of the Savior of men!

Wash Your Heart

FOR CENTURIES the Chinese people had a pure concept of God, believing in him wholeheartedly as their prayers attest. There is a great similarity between their earliest statement on the beginning of creation and that found in Genesis in the Bible. It was not until around 2000 B.C. that idolatry began to creep in. Prior to that time the religion of the country was monotheist, the worship of one God, just as in the Christian doctrine. How did they keep that pure concept all those years? Why did they change?

Deeply religious by nature, the Chinese spent more money in the building of temples than on any other project. There are some holy mountains in eastern China and among these near the village of Ching Foo (where Confucius was born) is a lofty mountain at the top of which is erected the Temple of Heaven. The holy mountains are reached by flights of steps which have been laboriously cut out of the rocks by the Chinese. Sight-seers are transported by chair-bearers; the trip requires about four hours to go up and two to return. At various levels there are temples which are used as stopping places for the people to rest. Outside of the temple there may be a small court and pavilion for tea. Pine trees grow out of the naked rock. All along the way, the traveler sees numerous inscriptions in Chinese, carved in the rocky ledges. About half way up the mountain to the Temple of Heaven one encounters a very steep slope and an inscription which reads, "Wash Your Heart," which in effect is admonishing the traveler to prepare himself spiritually for the perilous journey ahead. The next inscription is at a place where one slip could plunge the climber to a great depth below on the rocks. It reads: "Go on at your own risk, but if your conscience is clear there is no need to worry." It was at this point that many Chinese would give up because of their sins and hurl themselves over the abyss, unable to face what was ahead. Later the ledge was blocked by huge boulders to try to stop this practice. Inscriptions in Chinese are everywhere in the rock. There are many beautiful spots along the way—waterfalls and low clumps of scraggy pines. The sky grows bluer. At last in the distance may be seen the azure tile of the temple roof, erected in three tiers. The plaques and monuments along the way are all square in design but this last temple is built upon a circle of solid white marble. The Chinese used the number three in multiples, and there are three flights of steps leading to the temple. A circular court fenced in stone has a floor of flat rocks. In the center of this court is a square block upon which the emperor prostrates himself during the sacrificial ceremonies and prays to Tio for a blessing on the crops, etc. The holy temple is circular too, and the interior is beautiful beyond description. Few Americans have seen it, as it takes a bit of doing to obtain permission. The room of the Most High Tio is supported by huge pillars of a golden hue and steps leading up to a square plaque containing the one inscription: "Tio" meaning God.

"Wash your heart." Does this not coincide with our religion? The road is rugged and steep with many pitfalls along the way. Our fears and temptations make the climbing perilous, but we must climb on, clinging tenaciously to that Rock which never fails us. The inscriptions along the path are plain and simple to follow if we place our trust in Him. We catch glimpses of beauty in the climb to our mountaintop in the sincere smile of a fellow-traveler whose word of encouragement urges us on. As we progress we must reach to help those weaker than we and skirt that great abyss which waits to hurl us to destruction. At that most dangerous spot where the sign reads: "Go on at your own risk, but if your conscience is clear, there is no need to worry," we must examine ourselves sharply, remove the thorns of doubt and fear, the dirt and grime of wrong thinking, selfishness, and distrust. It is then that we wash our hearts. HELEN HESTER HINTZ

Urban Survey of Minority Groups

By Chris B. Hartshorn

CHRISTIAN PEOPLE living in the urban centers of America often feel a sense of outraged justice when they are made conscious of the discrimination that is practiced against some of the minority groups; yet they do nothing about it except to criticize. A few months ago a race riot occurred in Cicero, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago, where Negroes attempted to move into a house they had purchased. We also recall the war hysteria which did unconscionable things against fellow Americans of Japanese and German ancestry. Every now and again we catch the tail wind of a whispering campaign against the Jews in this community and that. All of these things are so contrary to the spirit of the Christian religion that we wonder why those who know something of the tolerance and kindly consideration of Jesus would be found aiding and abetting, if not actively fomenting, racial prejudices.

One of the most heartening articles we have read in recent years appears in the Woman's Home Companion for last October entitled, "How Minneapolis Beat the Bigots." Minneapolis, Minnesota, as recently as five years ago, became stigmatized as "the capital of anti-Semitism in the United States." It was also noted for its cruel barriers against Negroes, Japanese-Americans, Indians, and Mexicans.

MANY MUNICIPALITIES have promised to treat more kindly their minority groups only to find that after considerable talk, the people settled down to cultivate their own brand of prejudice. However, in Minneapolis it was different because they set about their problem in a different way. The mayor—young Hubert H. Humphrey, now a United States senator—read a critical article of the city in a journal called Common Ground. It created a sensation in Minneapolis. Indignant readers denounced the author and the magazine as liars. Mayor Humphrey said, "Let's find out if these charges are true. Let's make a survey and get all the facts." However, instead of using a small social committee for the survey, an appeal was made to Fisk University, which gladly provided a team headed by Dr. Herman Long, a brilliant sociologist, to organize a Community Self-Survey program. Dr. Long's team contacted the Mayor's Council on Human Relations, a small group of private citizens who had set out to do something about the race and religious relations. He showed the group exactly what needed to be done and that an aroused public opinion would have to be developed.

Dr. Long worked quietly and unobtrusively in selling the idea to some of the leading citizens who could best help with this survey. A vice-president of the city's largest flour mills was over-all chairman of the project. A priest, a rabbi, and a minister agreed to look into the church situation. The president of the Minneapolis realty board led the study on housing. A society woman and a labor union official were among the survey leaders. Volunteer groups—mostly women—were organized. Altogether it took about four hundred to do the job. They set out to find out what the real situation was. They interviewed real estate men, businessmen, and teachers; they rang doorbells and talked to the everyday citizens. Their mission was not to argue but to learn the facts.

JUST HOW did the Jew, Negro, Japanese-American, Indian, and Mexican fare in Minneapolis? What careers were open to them and what ones were closed? Where did they live and how?

One of the first discoveries made was that there is far less prejudice than appears on the surface. The bigots make all the noise; the people who would like to do something about the situation remain silent. The social pattern—the exclusion of the Jews from the service clubs and the Negroes from jobs—gets set in the direction of bigotry and everyone goes along. People are afraid to violate the social pattern because of what their neighbors may think. There was some resistance, of course, but when the facts were publicized the decency of the people in Minneapolis rose to the top.

Even the Communists got in on the act. They made a charge that the public schools were discriminating in hiring teachers. Members of the Mayor's Council showed that Minneapolis did advertise under the new policy for Negro teachers in the southern colleges. They did away with the practice of requiring photographs with applications. The city has made enormous strides in stamping out discrimination.

Since this self-survey became effective, two hundred Negroes have attended a union convention in Minneapolis. They lived at two of the finest hotels, ate in all the different restaurants, and went anywhere they pleased. All during the convention there was not a single unpleasant incident. Later a union official wrote to the Mayor's Council: "A few years ago our organization couldn't even think of holding a convention in your city because of the discrimination that existed."

It seems that a group of property owners of the old type got together to keep a Negro from buying a house in their neighborhood. They hired a lawyer and told them their plans. After listening carefully he said, "What are you objecting to?" They gave him the old story of property values. "Did you buy your home to live in, or as an investment

Organization of the West Virginia District

FIFTY-NINE years old and still growing" can be said of the West Virginia District, for which anniversary services were held on December 7, 8, and 9. The conference was honored by the presence of President Israel A. Smith and Apostle Maurice L. Draper. Many had never met President Smith, and that privilege alone was one of inspiration to the Saints who gathered at Parkersburg, West Virginia, to commemorate the fifty-ninth anniversary of the organization of the district.

It is not definitely known who the first Latter Day Saints were who lived in West Virginia, but Joseph Smith and associates stopped in Wheeling, Virginia (now West Virginia), on April 5, 1832, where they bought large supplies for the printing press in Independence, Missouri. They took passage on the steamer, "Trenton," and went down the Ohio River to Louisville, Kentucky, thereby passing several towns along the river where active branches are located today (Steubenville and Bellaire, Ohio; Wheeling, Wellsburg, and Parkersburg, West Virginia).

In 1870 a "Bickertonite" missionary from the Pittsburgh section was doing missionary work in Shinnston, West Virginia, then a small village near Clarksburg, and baptized two families—the Dexter L. Shinn and George Prichards.

About ten years later, Missionary Luther R. Devore of the Reorganized Church was sent to visit the family of Sister Eliza Jane Leeson who lived in Doddridge County on Cabin Run. Sister Leeson had been baptized in Kansas on February 26, 1879, by Brother J. N. Roberts, and on returning to her West Virginia home requested that a missionary be sent to establish the work there. The church sent Brother Devore, and it so happened that he stopped off at Shinnston on his way, met the Shinn and Prichard families, and explained the differences between the two Saints' churches. This resulted in the baptism of the two families into the Reorganized Church.

Brother Shinn was ordained to the office of elder, and a branch was organized on October 18, 1880, with him as president. This was the first branch in the old West Virginia District; still an active branch today, it is known as the Clarksburg Branch.

From there Elders Devore and Shinn visited Cabin Run and baptized Charles G. Ruley and others. A branch was organized there on February 5, 1885, known as the Cabin Run Branch, with Brother Ruley as president.

Brother James Brown of Pennsylvania and others also did missionary work in this district. He and Elders Devore and Shinn continued their travels and organized branches at Fairview (Yellow Creek) on January 30, 1888, and Mount Zion (Goose Creek) February 28, 1888.

In the 1880's missionaries came from Ohio into the southern part of West Virginia, held services, and organized branches in Union Grove on January 8, 1882; Wayne on April 16, 1882; and New Hope on December 12, 1886.

On December 10, 1892, a conference was held at Mount Zion (Goose Creek) with Apostle W. H. Kelley and Elder T. W. Williams presiding. At this time the West Virginia District was organized with Elder D. L. Shinn as president, J. B. Russell as secretary, and Baronet Beall as bishop's agent and treasurer. There were seven branches comprising the district at that time, with five being represented at the conference. Apostle Kelley and Elder Williams were selected to represent the new district at General Conference.

The following day the new log church at Goose Creek was dedicated, the dedicatory sermon being given by Apostle Kelley and the prayer of dedication by Elder T. W. Williams. An ordination service also took place the same day, Elder D. L. Shinn being ordained to the office of seventy.

The work in the district grew, with branches being organized during the next few years at Buffalo City in 1893, Harmony (Indian Creek) in 1896, Bell Grove in 1897, Genoa in 1901, Girta in 1910, Morgantown in 1911, Parkersburg in 1920, and Fairmount in 1924. In later years many of the isolated branches became disorganized, and of the fifteen that had been organized since the beginning of the work in the state, eleven had been disorganized, with only four branches remaining in the old West Virginia District in 1941: Clarksburg, Harmony (Indian Creek), Morgantown, and Parkersburg.

A special conference was held on September 13 and 14, 1941, at Moundsville, and the Wheeling and West Virginia Districts were amalgamated under the supervision of Apostle J. F. Garver. This newly combined district was to be known as the West Virginia District, with Elder Robert E. Rodgers as president. The union of these two districts resulted in a much stronger district spiritually and numerically. The Wheeling District added six branches, making a total of ten branches at the time of the amalgamation: Bellaire (Ohio), Clarksburg, Fairview (Glen Easton), Harmony (Indian Creek), Morgantown, Moundsville, Parkersburg, Steubenville (Ohio), Wellsburg, and Wheeling.

On October 2, 1951, the Follansbee Branch was organized under the supervision of Apostle Maurice L. Draper, with Elder Willard Allen as branch president. This increased the number of branches to eleven in the district today, with missions being located at Beckley, Greenwood, Orlando, and Morristown (Ohio).

On December 7, 8, and 9, 1951, the Saints met to observe the fifty-ninth anniversary of the organization of the old West Virginia District. On Friday evening a reception was held at the Parkersburg Church for President Smith and Apostle Draper. Slides were also shown the same evening by Brother Draper on the Restoration; the theme of the anniversary program was "The Christ of the Restoration."

On Saturday afternoon, December 8, the anniversary service was held at the Log Church at Goose Creek, where the district was organized on December 10, 1892. An address was given by President Smith, and a history of the growth of the work and the organization of the district was presented by Elder Harry B. Smith.

The anniversary program was made possible by the untiring devotion and work of the district officers. According to their schedule a special program of ministry is given to all branches of the district regularly. This has helped to build up the interest of the Saints.

President Smith spoke again on Sunday morning, and Apostle Draper on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

"Fifty-nine years old and still growing" can be truly said of West Virginia District, where the Saints are more determined than ever before to assist in the building of the kingdom of God.

APOSTLE IN MICHIGAN

During February 9-16, Apostle C. George Mesley visited Toronto, Ontario; Detroit International Stake, and Port Huron, Michigan, setting up reunion programs for the coming season, and participated in the final organization meeting of the Blue Water, Michigan, Branch. This branch is comprised of the members and congregations in St. Claire County in Michigan.

APOSTLE FARROW IN FLORIDA

January 23 through February 5, Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Bishop Joseph Baldwin made a trip through the lower part of Florida, contacting Orlando, Miami, Tampa, Jacksonville. They held a priesthood and workers institute for the entire southern organized territory of Florida, at Tampa from February 1-3. The institute closed at noon on February 3, and on the same day, the men participated in the organization of the Orlando Branch. At Tampa plans are underway for an annex to the new church. Miami is sponsoring, under the supervision of Edgar Chevalier and L. O. Tankersley, a mission of about thirty-five members at Fort Lauderdale. The men also visited the Brewton, Alabama, Branch which is now meeting in the new church building. On February 23 and 24, Brother Farrow with Bishop Baldwin and Seventy J. H. Yager attended a district conference for the Kentucky-Tennessee District at Memphis, Tennessee.

Letters

From an Isolated Member

The Herald and Daily Bread bring much food for thought and strength to go on when I yearn to attend church. Isolation has made me appreciate church all the more whenever I do have the opportunity to attend. Brother Dykotra of Nashua, Montana, has held some services here and plans to have two each month when the weather permits. We ask the Saints to remember our little group so that nonmember loved ones will awaken and help us carry the message to others. We request prayers also for those who are investigating the work.

That God may bless his church is our humble prayer.

What Prayer Service Means to Me

Prayer meetings are inspiring, strengthening, and a means of coming into closer contact with God. In prayer meetings a person seems to have more of a part in the service; everyone present has an opportunity to offer a testimony of the many blessings that God has given to them, and to share in the testimonies and prayers of others.

There have been many outstanding spiritual manifestations of the Spirit of God in the prayer services at our branch in Council Bluffs, and we have had many inspired messages and prophecies given to us by Brother Ruch.

The two most outstanding experiences I have ever had were given to me recently at prayer services. The first was in September, 1951, while I was recovering from a severe illness. The Lord spoke to me through Brother Ruch, telling me to be of good cheer even though I was unable to work, for I still would be able to perform my priesthood duties and help in the Master's work. Since that time I have made wonderful improvement in health and have been able to teach my Sunday school class and continue in my priesthood work without any ill effects.

My second experience was at prayer service on December 5 of last year. At this meeting I arose and gave my testimony. It seemed that the Spirit was with me throughout this meeting, and I knew I had a testimony that I should give to the people gathered there, yet I waited until it was nearly too late. But I did give my testimony after many promptings of the Spirit, and after I had given it a sister from Crescent, Iowa, who was visiting our branch arose and said, "I didn't intend to give a testimony when I came here tonight, but something has happened which has changed my mind."

This is her testimony: "While Brother Hoyt was giving his testimony I saw a personage in white standing behind him with its hands held over his head. This personage held that position until Brother Hoyt had finished his testimony and sat down, then it disappeared as though through the window behind him."

When this sister arose to give her testimony the Spirit was so strong within me that I knew she was going to speak to me.

Truly it is a wonderful feeling to know that God is always with us, willing to strengthen us and work with us, and give knowledge and understanding as we need it.

Charles E. Harpe

The passing of Brother Charles E. Harpe on January 26 has removed from our ranks another veteran who served in the time when Lamoni was the administrative center as well as a spiritual powerhouse of the church. He was one of the school companions of President Frederick M. Smith and was always proud of this personal friendship. He expressed his devotion to the church and its gospel in more than thirty-one years of missionary work under General Conference appointment and sixteen years of pastoral ministry. His was a familiar figure at the Conferences, and on occasion he participated in the debates on the floor. A speaker of force and conviction, he possessed a colorful personality and a gift of originality in expression. His face was often lighted by a genial smile, and he had many friends. Granted a long life, he survived many of his contemporaries. There are not so many of his generation remaining here now, but he will be reunited with hosts of friends on "the other side."

Church Men in the News

Honor has come to Samuel S. Smith, Jr., for bravery in the Korean War. The Bronze Star Medal was awarded to him for heroic achievement during 1951. At that time he was serving as commander of a rifle company and was a captain with the First Marine Division (Reinforced). He displayed "outstanding tactical ability in the deployment of his platoons" and "coolness under intense enemy fire. . . . His personal bravery and heroic actions were an inspiration to all members of his command."

Brother Smith has also been awarded the Navy Cross "for extraordinary heroism while serving as Commanding Officer . . . in action against enemy aggressor forces . . . on December 6 and 7, 1950. . . . He daringly exposed himself . . . to direct his company. . . . Personally leading his men up the icebound, rocky incline in the face of overwhelming odds, he succeeded in attaining his objective. . . . By his brilliant strategy and leadership, he contributed directly to the capture and maintenance of valuable ridge lines."

Captain Smith received his commission as Major in January, 1951. He has been stationed at Camp Joseph H. Pendelton, Ocean Side, California, since his return in August, after spending eleven months in Korea.

He is the son of Mrs. S. S. (Pearl) Smith, Sr., 1011 South Main Street, Independence, Missouri, and of the late S. S. Smith who was a missionary of the church for forty-nine years.

His wife Alice and son Stephen have been with him in California. He was released January 10 and returned to his home in Independence, where he is a member of the Missouri State Highway Patrol.

District Conference Held

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The district conference was held in Berkeley, January 26 and 27. District President L. A. MacDonald presided. Every branch and mission in the district was represented. The first class, on stewardship, was presided over by Bishop E. C. Burdick. Elder Alma Andrews taught a class on evangelism following this. Apostle Gleazer was in charge of the business meeting in the afternoon, and the following men were approved for ordination: from Berkeley—Charles F. Mottashed, priest; Russell H. Bessire, elder; Roy G. Peck, elder; Billy G. Rogers, deacon; Raymond G. Lucas, priest; from Fresno—Alvin O. Woods, elder; Kenneth Cline, elder; Wayman A. Vance, teacher; Jack C. Smith, teacher; Caesar Milla, deacon; from Sacramento—Keiller M. Winsor, teacher; Jabez A. Elam, elder; Ives J. Honeychurch, priest; Lawrence R. Schall, priest; Donald J. Damron, deacon; Neil R. Honeychurch, deacon; Earl E. Horton, priest; from Santa Rosa—Maynard E. Whitley, deacon; Glenvil D. Crownover, priest; from Seaside mission—Robert G. Park, priest; from Yuba City mission—DeWitt Filer, priest.

Thirty-three delegates were elected to represent the Northern California District at General Conference.

Luncheon and turkey dinner were served in the lower auditorium by the East Bay Branch women.

Apostle Gleazer was the evening speaker, and the choir was directed by Lena Guilbert. Hazel Damron sang a solo.

The Sunday morning service opened with a prayer meeting. Homer Gatchett sang a solo during the anthem by the choir, and Brother Gleazer gave the closing address of the conference.—Reported by EULA DAMRON

Travelog of Mexico Given

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—Elder W. Williams of Kirtland, Ohio, held a series of cottage meetings in Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

On January 24, a movie travelog in color was shown of the ruins of Mexico. Exhibits of Mexican handwork and relics were on display. Elder Williams, Elder Stanley Johnson, the pastor, Elder Harold Constance of Blue Springs, Missouri, and Priest Robert Auther made a trip to Mexico in December.

On November 14, High Priest Percy Weegar was ordained to the office of evangelist by Apostle Maurice Draper and President W. Wallace Smith.

The combined choirs of Niagara Falls and Buffalo presented the Christmas cantata entitled "Chimes of the Holy Night" during the holiday season at both branches, under the direction of Sister Maurine Whitehead.

Elder Stanley Pfohl, new church appointee from Buffalo, and his wife Lois are living in Lansing, Michigan, where Brother Pfohl will assume his new duties.

The church has been redecorated. The upper auditorium has been painted, and new light fixtures have been installed. Work is being done on the basement.—Reported by JEAN AUTHER

Seventy Hold Series

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA.—The following children were blessed by Elders H. L. Bausell and Charles Mottashed November 25: Donald Stephen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald White;

Rodney Franklin, son of Major and Mrs. Milard Caldwell; William Fredrick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Nichol, Jr.; and Diana Gail, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Harrison.

The Christmas program was held December 23. A play entitled "Christmas Lost and Found," written by Mary Lynn Nichol, a member of the Zion's League, was enacted by other members of the group.

Elder George A. Njeim of the Quorum of Seventy held a series of meetings January 6-25 in the San Bernardino Branch, including Redlands and Riverside missions. On January 25, eleven people were baptized by Elder Njeim. The following were converts of the Riverside mission: James Harold Shriver, Mildred Shriver, Delores Shriver, Billie Schriver, Evelyn Peters, June Nichol, Sharon Buschbaum, and Donald Peck. An all-day meeting and basket dinner was enjoyed on January 27. At the afternoon service, six people who had been baptized were confirmed by Elders H. L. Bausell, Charles Mottashed, and James Cooper. The other two candidates were confirmed at the weekly prayer service January 30, by Elders H. L. Bausell, Walter Morey, and J. Bates.

On February 2, another baptismal service was held. Violet Steele, Carol Erickson, and James Henry Shriver were baptized by Priest M. F. Caldwell. They were confirmed prior to the Communion service February 3, by Elders H. L. Bausell and Charles Mottashed.—Reported by ANNA M. CALDWELL

Missionary Holds Meetings

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—During the month of February, Missionary Aleah Koury, assisted by the branch missionary, Edwin Spargo, and the priesthood of the branch, held a series of cottage meetings. Several homes were visited, and at the close of the series seven candidates were baptized on February 3. They were Benjamin Dack, Norman Dack and his wife Betty, John Dack, Douglas Evans, Ethel Mogg, and James Wadsworth. Elder Koury and Priest Alfred Beer officiated.

The confirmation service was held in the Vancouver church February 10, with Elders Koury, Spargo, Taylor, Embleton, and W. Cornish of Senlac, Saskatchewan, officiating. After being confirmed members of the church, Brother and Sister Norman Dack brought their infant daughter, Beverly Jean, to be blessed by Elders Koury and Cornish.

Apostles E. J. Gleazer and D. O. Chesworth, together with Bishop Monte E. Lasater, visited the branch. Brother Chesworth spoke to the Saints in Vancouver and New Westminster. This was his first visit to Vancouver, and while at the branch he also spoke to the women's department.—Reported by EDWIN SPARGO

Baptismal Service Held

CHEROKEE, IOWA.—Five adults and a twelve-year-old girl were baptized January 27. The service consisted of the dedication of the new font, the baptismal service by candlelight, and the confirmation service. District President Sylvester Coleman was present and gave the dedication talk, as well as the charge to the candidates. The new members are Mrs. Rosella Miller, Egon Hansen, Albert Witcomb and his daughter Beverly, Gilbert Nielson, and Mrs. Gayle Ballantyne.—Reported by EDWIN J. HOEPPNER

High Lights for the Year

MCGREGOR, MICHIGAN.—Various activities were held in 1951, beginning with a class in the financial law of the church taught by the solicitor, Kenneth Rich. Four babies were blessed at the Children's Day program which was under the direction of William Stollicker, director of the church school.

The women's department sponsored a special Memorial Day service. Alice McFarlane and Wendall Whitman were married at the church in August. One of the high lights of the year was the baptismal service where ten candidates were baptized. Six of these were adults, and the service united five families in the church. At the annual business meeting Trayton Rich was chosen branch president.

Branch Organized

WEST MONROE, LOUISIANA.—Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe held a series from January 20-27. He spoke to the women's group at their Wednesday meeting. On the closing day of the series a business meeting directed by Brother Renfroe was held. Sister Lloyd Salter, in the absence of her husband, served as secretary of the group. Brother Renfroe was acting in behalf of Apostle Farrow, who could not attend the meeting. Brother C. C. Fuller spoke to the group stating the progress made, and made the motion that the group be organized into a branch. Brother A. W. Dean seconded the motion, and it was carried unanimously. The same officers were elected to serve until the new church year. Missionary James Renfroe welcomed the group into the Arkansas-Louisiana District. Brother Henry Blazier, a member of the building committee, presented the key to the church to Brother Dean, the group solicitor. He presented it to the pastor, Brother C. C. Fuller who gave it to Brother Huntsman, the custodian. Each man spoke concerning his position as he accepted the key. The dedication sermon was delivered by Brother Z. Z. Renfroe, and Brother James Renfroe offered the benediction.—Reported by Mrs. B. A. JARVIS

Alaska and Hawaii Pictures

BREMERTON, WASHINGTON. — Elder Davis was installed as pastor of the branch in the fall. Other officers installed were Helen Davis, secretary; C. R. Glover, treasurer and solicitor; Harry Turner, church school director; George Weller, young people's supervisor; Gladys Glover, book steward; Stella Heins, women's leader; Eva Lundeen, historian; Mary Mascher, branch hostess; Edra Boling, music director.

In November, Missionary Arthur F. Gibbs assisted by Don Landon held a series of meetings. Each evening before his lectures Brother Gibbs showed pictures he had taken in Alaska and Hawaii as a travelog.

On the last Sunday of the series, Lee Glover, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Glover, was baptized by his father. He was confirmed by Elder Harry Turner and his grandfather, Evangelist A. W. Lundeen.

The church school presented a Christmas program December 21. The pastor gave the morning sermon, and Elder Harry Turner spoke in the evening.

A hall is rented once a week for the branch to have recreation together, and volleyball teams have been organized.

At the January Communion service, Bishop Monte E. Lasater of Seattle was the speaker. A potluck dinner was held at noon. In the afternoon, Bishop Lasater held a class pertaining to the financial law.

On January 13, Brother and Sister A. W. Lundeen were honored on their thirty-fifth wedding anniversary.

The Laurel Club was active during the fall and winter. They were privileged to see a picture, "Children Limited," taken at one of the state schools for defective children.—Reported by EVA LUNDEEN

Active Zion's Leagues

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, DISTRICT. — The Zion' League of the Fort Madison, Iowa, Branch sponsored a Parent-Leaguer banquet for the Nauvoo District on December 4 in the church basement.

Seventy-three Leaguers and parents attended. The tables were all decorated to represent one of the four commissions—study, service, worship, and recreation. Edward McKiernan, Fort Madison, served as master of ceremonies, and presented the welcoming address. Madelyn Hartman, Nauvoo young people's leader, spoke on "Worship"; Lloyd Tripp, Nauvoo, spoke on "Study." Then a duet, "Christ of the Upward Way," was sung by Delores and Loretta Breeze of Fort Madison. Alice Johnson and Ralph Gunn of Fort

Ordained at Hilo

Four men were ordained on Sunday, February 3, at the church in Hilo, Hawaii. They are (left to right) Frederico Cachola (Filipino) of Kohala, Hawaii, deacon; Arthur Kong (Chinese) also of Kohala, elder; Elwin R. Vest (General Church appointee), seventy; and Lloyd Hara (Japanese) of Hilo, deacon. Officiating at the ordination service were President W. Wallace Smith, Evangelist Walter J. Swain, and High Priest A. Orlin Crownover. Elder Kong is in charge of the work at Kohala.

Madison then spoke on "Service" and "Recreation." Following these talks, the entire group sang "Give of Your Best to the Master."

Betty Tripp, district young people's supervisor, completed the evening's program by presenting a challenge to the parents.

On December 31, the Nauvoo Zion's League was host to the district young people at a New Year's party. The theme for the program was "We Turn a New Leaf." The first part of the evening was spent in recreation, headed by the recreation chairman, Edith Nehring. One hour before midnight, the group of forty young people assembled in the main auditorium for a candlelight fellowship service. Lee and Lynn Ourth of Nauvoo were in charge of the service.

At midnight a chili supper was served and the Leaguers spent the night in the Arnold Ourth, Harold Smith, Floyd Hartman, Elbert Tripp, and Albert Nehring homes.

Breakfast was served in the morning, with a special worship service following.—Reported by BETTY TRIPP

Youth Convention Held

ONTARIO, CANADA. — A youth convention was held at Ontario at Camp Geneva, near Orillia, October 6-8. Recreation was held Saturday afternoon, and Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin was the speaker that evening. Apostle C. George Mesley conducted classes, as did Apostle Paul M. Hanson. They also showed slides on the Book of Mormon and Australia. Missionary Al Pelletier gave the address at the Sunday fellowship. The committee planning the camp were Apostle C. G. Mesley, C. E. Muir, E. M. Kennedy, Alex Cadwell, A. Pelletier, William McMurray, and Shirley Green.—Reported by E. M. KENNEDY

HERALD HOUSE INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Second Forty Years

By Mrs. Alec Jensen

MUCH IS BEING WRITTEN on this subject today. The old saying, "Life begins at forty," may be true. Some think forty is the peak, and after that, one starts downhill. This, of course, varies with different people.

If you have lived intelligently and formed the habit of enjoying life, you will find it fun to be forty. If you haven't kept your mind active, your body healthy and firm, and your emotions under reasonable control the first half of your life, you may find it difficult to freshen your outlook and change your poor habits into good ones. Amiel says: "How to grow old is the master work of wisdom and one of the most difficult chapters in the art of living." According to him it will not be an easy task to age successfully.

The University of Chicago has been studying old people to see what makes some of them happy and some unhappy. Four things were found which people should have to be happy:

1. Health—good health
2. A comfortable place to live and enough money to live on (no definite amount of money will meet the needs of all kinds of people)
3. Recognition and approval by neighbors, family, and community
4. Social participation—taking part with other people in social, business, and community affairs.

The first amazing and astonishing medical fact of today is that between 35 and 50 per cent of all sick people are sick principally because they are unhappy. It causes pain and malfunction in different organs of the body and is brought on by unpleasant emotions such as fear, anxiety, discouragement, and disappointment.

ALL OF us change with age whether we want to or not, and whether we choose to bless or regret this day-by-day process. Some of us are eager to make use of these changes in a constructive, agreeable manner. Others prefer to imitate the proverbial ostrich and pretend that growing old is something that happens to someone else. But every once in a while our fear makes us take a quick look at our lives and, hard as it is to admit, we note that in all living things, including ourselves, life must go on.

HOW CAN we have a satisfying life as we get older? How long our life will be no one knows. The Insurance Actuary observes that our life span is judged by how long our parents and grandparents have lived. Some people who have lived to be over one hundred years old have not had any specially favored environment or better medical care or advice than others who lived only a short while. Negative cautions, such as "don't do this," "avoid that," "rest," "give up this or that," tend to make time seem longer and duller.

An older person's daily schedule should be filled with many interesting and useful things to do. Perhaps some changes in vocation have to be made. Practically considered, we achieve more when we seek to add "not years to our life but life to our years." A successful life should be able to give much good counsel to younger people.

No matter how long or how short one's life expectancy, to be still interested in the possibilities of one's future is a major youthful trait that is always appropriate because it is basic to the life process. To lose interest in setting up personal goals—some distant, some near—and to give up the struggle for achievement is to grow old, regardless of when it happens. Emerson said, "We don't count a man's years until he has nothing else to count."

Age is not a matter of years altogether; it includes habits, attitudes, and activities. Everyone needs to work as long as he lives. Purposeful activity which does not overtax is essential to physical and mental health. Feeling wanted and needed is essential to the happiness of both old and young. The sudden stoppage of work and the subsequent idleness leads to a loss of force for most people. They brood and tend to exaggerate whatever physical ailments they have because they have more time to think of themselves. The saying "We are what we eat" is changing to "We are what we think."

Superior achievement is partly a natural gift, but mostly it is persistence, self criticism, and reworking. If we do not make new acquaintances as we advance through life, we will soon find ourselves alone. We must keep our friendships in constant repair. "To have friends we must be a friend."

There are three times we have to grow up or struggle anew to achieve what is maturity for that period: eighteen, forty, and sixty. In adolescence we have the problem of growing to life. In the forties we realize we are becoming too old to be young, yet still too young to be old. People live longer today than in grandpa's time. With the new discoveries in medicine, more babies grow to childhood and maturity. More boy babies are born than girls, but girls can withstand the dangers of living better than the boys. Mrs. America can expect to outlive her husband by four years. The average Missourian lives nine months beyond the nation's average. So it makes a difference where we are born as to the number of years we live.

THERE ARE eleven million grandparents in the United States. In Mellville, New Jersey, there is a small colony of three-room cottages for old people who are living on pensions. That community is trying to keep them healthfully and profitably occupied. These are homes, not institutions, which allow them to be individuals.

President Truman called a conference to find new ways to help people live happier in their twilight years. At this conference it was pointed out that health, vigor, and spirit must be retained if life is to be enjoyed. Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, an artist of 104, stole the show. She said:

I have always walked the straight and narrow way, which has kept my conscience clear. I believe in God and the Bible. I couldn't have lived as long without God's blessing and help. I have done most what I wanted to do. . . . To live a long and happy life, keep busy. Work will keep you from fear and worry. Diet and regular habits are very important. For fifty years I have not eaten fish, flesh, or fowl.

She gets her daily protein requirements from buttermilk, American and cottage cheese, eggs, nuts, and legumes, avoiding heavy sweets, pastries and desserts. She finishes her meals with fresh and frozen fruits and plain pound cake. She is a nonsmoker and teetotaler. When asked why more Americans didn't reach her age she answered:

Too many are getting soft on the luxurious life. The easy life is robbing us of our full powers of accomplishments. We do not work as hard as the pioneers, many of us deteriorate on soft, highly refined, commercial foods and habit-forming beverages we drink. . . . Kind friend, strive to be patient, relax, and keep fear and worries from your mind. Refill both mind and hands with noble, useful work and deeds. Age is merely a state of well-being, and well-being comes by being temperate in all things. Keep working and exercising in some fashion.

If we profit by these quotations and experiences we may be able to improve our second forty years. We are fortunate to live where we can do many of these things. Our church is one of the biggest assets to help us all through life and is a cure for many trials and disappointments if we have a desire to help in every way we can.

Many aged people have lived a very enjoyable life in their last years because of their association with the church. Among our objectives in the women's department number thirteen reads: "To encourage all homemakers to prepare for a satisfying life in their later years."

God's Way

By Violet Adair

FAR ABOVE the earth's surface the Matterhorn lifts its hoary head. Its stony brow sends the clouds in tatters on their way. There, the ageless mountain stands an eternal challenge to the spirit of adventure in man. To climb the mountain we must journey to its foothills, gather supplies, pack animals, food, tents, clothing, and knowledge of the mountain and its moods. We then start our climb and leave behind us a base camp to shuttle supplies to the next stop. At last we must leave our pack animals, due to the lack of oxygen, and carry on our backs the supplies we will need for our last camp high above the timber line. At this point we even leave our friends and all the help and co-operation they have given us to bring us so far on our climb. Now we go on—just two of us—to the final assault upon the peak. Shall we succeed? Our success depends upon the base camp and all its mates strung up the mountainside. It depends on the strength we have gathered in arms, legs, heart, and lungs. If we succeed, we shall stand where few have stood and see what few have seen.

How like the Matterhorn is life. Its foothills are the world. Its base camps are steps to higher ground and broader views. As we progress we find fewer companions at our side, until at last, God willing, we see the peak. We may even then still have one to lend us a helping hand and in turn be helped on toward the peak of a Christlike life.

Let us strive to stand upon the summit. Let us never be content to gaze up to its majestic heights and say, "Impossible! Others have tried and failed. I shall not bother to try." Let's start our climb and take with us all who will go. Where we falter others may walk with assurance, giving us aid and courage. In turn we may be strong where others are weak. Each year that slips away without finding us at a higher camp is a year lost. Each year we drift with the tide of humanity among the foothills is a backward step. Each hesitation and postponement may leave us too little time remaining to succeed. Let us rise up, take our friend's hand, and be on our way—God's way!

for profit?" To a man they said, "We bought them to live in." He reached for his hat as he said, "Why don't you just go on living in them and forget all this?"

The results of later investigators show that the property values have not been depressed by the new policy. It also shows that stores which have hired Negro sales ladies have not lost customers or accounts. Bigotry can be licked by Christian tolerance and enlightenment.

The Tonic of Praise

Praise is not only gratifying—it is the source of fresh energy which can be measured in the laboratory.

Dr. Henry H. Goddard, in his years at the Vineland Training School in New Jersey, used the "ergograph," an instrument devised to measure fatigue. When an assistant said to a tired child at the instrument, "You're doing fine, John," the boy's energy-curve soared. Discouragement and faultfinding were found to have a measurable opposite effect.—GRETA PALMER

All in a Hat

By Emma M. Phillips

MOTHER," Merilee Clark said as she came into the kitchen where the evening meal was in the process of preparation, "I got the most darling hat for Easter. It's navy blue straw with little white bows and just a whiff of white veiling."

Her mother, knowing that no woman can pass her opinion on a hat while she is making a salad, dried her hands hurriedly on a towel. The hat was pulled from the bag and Merilee put it on. She primped before the small mirror that hung near the back door. To her, the hat couldn't have suited her better if she had designed it herself.

"It's beautiful," her mother agreed. "It's becoming to you. I think we must have the same taste in hats. I always like yours, and you always like mine."

"After I got through work at the office I took a little walk around town. It was so nice out today. I saw this in Miller's window, and I just couldn't resist it."

Mrs. Clark smiled, "I'm glad we had nice weather today, or you might never have found that particular hat." Her smile increased to a laugh. "But I know what your father and Bob are going to say about it."

"What, Mother?"

"They are going to say it looks like a flowerpot turned upside down. Men are all the same. They either say that our hats look like baskets of fruit or like flowerpots turned upside down."

"I'll be on the alert," Merilee answered as she took off the hat and started upstairs to her room. "Bob and I are going to the play tonight. I'll tell you what he thinks the hat is like." She hummed a bit to herself as she went up the stairs. "I can cross another day off," she told herself. She could remember how she had counted the months before her marriage. Now she could count the weeks until June 10.

AFTER DINNER she put the hat on for her father's inspection. "It looks like a flowerpot turned upside down," he commented. When both the women laughed he declared, "Well, it does. It's got a hollow place in the top just like a flowerpot turned upside down would have."

"That's just what mother said you would say," giggled Merilee. "Tonight I'm going to find out what Bob says about it."

Merilee helped her mother with part of the dishwashing then hurried upstairs to bathe and dress. She hurried, but time seemed to be hurrying faster. In her haste she upset a box of body powder. It puffed across her dark skirt and spread powder across the floor and her suede pumps. "Oh, rats," she said, and stamped her foot. The powder puffed out around it. "Now I've got to change my clothes and clean the floor before someone tracks through this mess." She heard her mother letting Bob in the front door.

She continued to hurry. On a last minute impulse she grabbed the new hat. She would wear it tonight. There was little chance to talk until she and Bob were in the car.

"Got a new Easter bonnet, dear?" he asked.

"Yes. What's your opinion of it."

"That's a dangerous thing to ask."

"I want your honest opinion, Bob. We ought to learn to talk frankly to each other."

"Even about hats?"

"Yes, even about hats."

Bob took a quick look at the hat then looked back at the road. "It looks like a crow's nest on a ship. If you had a couple of little sailors up there I'd be tempted to hit you over the head with a bottle for a launching."

"Bob Kivel, that's a perfectly horrid thing to say."

"You asked for it."

"You didn't have to be so blunt about it. Now my whole evening is ruined."

"Aw, honey, just because the hat doesn't do you justice is no reason to get upset. Forget it."

"I won't forget it." She brooded about suede pumps still covered with powder. And her hat looked like a crow's nest. She sat silently feeling sorry for herself.

"I'm sorry, Merilee."

"Oh, shut up."

"Ok, ok," he shrugged his shoulders.

The evening wore on somehow and came to an unpleasant ending. When Bob said, "I'll see you tomorrow at church," she answered, "If you want to." She slammed the car door and ran into the house without a moment's hesitation.

SHE LAY AWAKE a long time trying to decided just what her next move should be. By the time morning came the smart of having her new hat referred to as a crow's nest had diminished—not entirely but a little.

With an air of determination she put the hat on when she went to morning services. Her friend, Patty, sat next to her in the young people's class. "That's a cute hat," she whispered. "It does something nice for you."

Merilee smiled. But she knew the hat didn't do something nice for her. It caused her trouble. It caused trouble with Bob; it had ruined the play for her. It had made her feel sour and bitter inside.

After the services Patty remarked again about the hat. "Bob doesn't like it," Merilee said dryly.

"Men never understand women's hats."

"He was insulting enough to tell me so."

"That's not insulting. That's being honest. That's the way you want to train him to be, if you plan to marry him."

"Sometimes I don't know if I should marry him."

"Why?"

"He said my hat looked like a crow's nest."

"That's not a good enough reason."

"It is to me."

"Merilee, you ought to read a book I have about growing up socially."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that physically you may be old enough to get married in June, but emotionally you throw tantrums like a three-year-old."

"I'm just as mature as you are."

"I'm no shining example, but I still think you ought to read that book."

ALL SUNDAY AFTERNOON Merilee waited for Bob to call. There was no call. Time seemed to creep along. Late in the afternoon she decided to call his house. She was thankful that it was Bob's mother and not Bob who answered the phone. "I just wondered what time Bob would be over," Merilee asked hesitantly.

"The way he looks right now, you wouldn't want him," said his mother.

"Why?"

"He had car trouble this morning. He's been working on it all afternoon, poor guy. Do you want to talk to him, Merilee?"

"No, he's busy. Just tell him whenever he comes I'll be waiting."

After the phone call Merilee went back upstairs to her room. There on her dresser was the hat. She wondered how anyone could ever call such a beautiful thing a crow's nest. As she stood looking down at it she thought of the conversation she had had with Patty.

She began to weigh her own actions. She pretended she was someone else watching herself, checking her behavior. She had been childish. What if Bob had made fun of her hat? That wasn't as important as the other ideas he had. He was a grand guy. He was the type of man a woman should choose for a husband.

A twinkle of amusement suddenly appeared in her eyes as she stared at the hat. She picked up a sheet of typing paper, folded it over and over, and began cutting it with her small scissors. The result was a row of little sailors holding hands. She penciled in their faces. From her shoe bag she took the green crayon that she used to cover the cracks in her green shoes. She colored the face of one of the sailors a pale green. He was seasick. She stood the row of sailors inside the "crow's nest" part of the hat.

She put the hat on and giggled audibly as she viewed herself in the mirror. That's the way she would wear it for Bob when he came tonight. And she did. Bob took one look at the hat and turned away as though he wanted to avoid an argument. Curious, he took another look. Then he began to laugh.

"You said it needed some sailors to be a perfect crow's nest, so I put some sailors on it. But please don't break a bottle over my head."

Bob walked around her as he viewed the hat. "What's the matter with this guy? His face is green."

"He's seasick."

Bob laughed louder. He gave her a bear hug and said, "You're precious."

HER PARENTS came from the next room to see what was causing so much laughter.

"Look what this crazy kid has done," Bob said, pointing at the hat, "she's put sailors in the crow's nest, and one is seasick."

Her parents joined in the fun. Merilee's father observed, "Bob, you're right. It does look more like a crow's nest than an upside down flowerpot."

Bob lifted the paper sailors from the hat and handed them to the father. "Be careful with green-faced boy," he grinned.

After they were in the car, Bob said, "Merilee, I want to apologize for the way I acted last night. Instead of carrying a grudge, you managed very cleverly to make me see my mistake. I don't care how crazy your hats are. A fellow would be mighty stupid to let a hat interfere with his getting a good wife."

Merilee smiled but she thought, "I must get that book from Pat so we can both read it."

Meetings Held at YMCA

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS.—The Saints meet in a mission church school each Sunday morning at ten o'clock at the YMCA. As frequently as possible a Sunday morning preaching service is held. Brother Raymond T. Jackel, 909 Park Avenue, Corpus Christi, is in charge of the group. Servicemen stationed in or near Corpus Christi are urged to attend services.—Reported by JOHN G. WIGHT

Women Contribute to Building Fund

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—Alvie Barrett, Rt. 3, Box 3502, telephone 3-3616, is pastor of the group. Church school and preaching services are held regularly each Sunday at the V.F.W. Hall, 416 North Second Street, with an average attendance of 40 to 50.

A Halloween party was held in October under the direction of Georgia Rose at the home of Zelma Schrader. There were forty-five in attendance.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Nettie Shepherd, meet twice a month and are studying "Witnessing for Christ," by Blanche Mesley. On December 7, the women held a bazaar and bake sale. The proceeds amounted to $175, which was given to the building fund.

A Christmas party was held December 19 at the home of Mildred and Cole Moffett. The children presented the program, directed by Jane Watson. Paul May was in charge of the treats for the children.

Evangelist William Patterson visited the congregation January 13-15. Evening meetings were held at the homes of Brothers Ott Jones and Gerald Rose.

Seventy Russell Ralston conducted a missionary series February 10-24, using visual aids.—Reported by MILDRED MOFFETT

Box Supper for Church Fund

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—At a baptismal service on December 30, James Arthur Bosarge, James Earl Bosarge, Nadine Tillman, and Bobby Pendarvis united with the church. The confirmation service was held January 6 immediately following church school, enabling those confirmed to partake of the Communion on the first Sunday of the new year.

Elders W. J. Breshears and J. A. Pray were in attendance at an ordination service held January 27. Priest Alma Tillman was ordained to the office of elder. Calvin Gazzier and Willard Pendarvis were ordained to the offices of teacher and deacon respectively.

A box supper social held February 14 at Irma Tillman's home netted $83.85 for the church fund. The adults joined with the Zion's League for this social.

The Saints in Bayou La Batre attended some of the services held January 13-27 at Mobile, Alabama, by Apostle Arthur Oakman.—Reported by HAZEL RUTH NELSON

Cottage Meetings Held

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—Richard Allan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kirby Vickrey, was blessed by Elder Ira Hawks, assisted by Elder T. F. Vickrey, on February 3. Brother T. F. Vickrey is the grandfather of the infant.

Evangelist A. D. McCall and District President W. J. Breshears alternated Sunday nights between Pensacola and Belleview Branches, holding cottage meetings during the week in December and January.—Reported by J. D. HALL

Priesthood Institute Held

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—The south Florida priesthood and workers institute was held at the Tampa Branch February 1-3. The theme was "We Go Forward With Christ in 1952." This was the second institute held in this area. Miami, Fort Lauderdale, and Orlando Branches attended.

Apostle P. E. Farrow and Bishop J. E. Baldwin were in charge of the institute. They were assisted by Seventy B. H. Doty, Traverse City; and Evangelist E. R. Carter, Lansing, Michigan. Also assisting were the pastors of the following branches: A. J. Chevalier, Tampa; Edgar Chevalier, Miami; William Martin, Orlando; and L. O. Tankersley, Fort Lauderdale.

Classes were conducted for the priesthood, and general classes were held. A banquet was held on Saturday night with an attendance of over one hundred. There was an early morning Communion service followed by a prayer and testimony service.

At the morning service, L. O. Tankersley was ordained a priest by Elders Arthur and Edgar Chevalier. Perry Snyder was ordained a deacon by Elders N. L. Booker and William Martin. Bob Dobry of St. Petersburg, a graduate of Graceland College, sang "The Lord's Prayer." Apostle Farrow and Bishop Baldwin directed the services at which over 175 were present. Visitors were from the Middle West and Canada.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN

Women's Group Active

ANAMOSA, IOWA.—Election of officers was held October 7, and the following officers will serve: C. A. Beil, Clinton, Iowa, pastor; Mrs. Ruth Hoke, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Nada Globes, church school director, women's leader, and solicitor; Mrs. Hazel Raymond, church school and women's department secretary; and Maurice Raymond and Mrs. Wilma McIntosh, auditors.

On December 1, Debra Key Knott was blessed by Elder Lyle W. Woodstock; on January 13, Barbara Jean Allison was blessed by Elder C. A. Beil.

The women's department meets twice a month. One meeting is the usual business meeting with lesson study. The second meeting is an all-day social with dinner held at the home of Nada Globes. The women as well as the entire branch are working to boost the building fund. The Anamosa Saints are handicapped by the lack of a church building and priesthood members. Church and church school are held in the home of Sister Nada Globes. Church is held the first Sunday of each month when the branch pastor, Elder C. A. Beil, makes an eighty-mile trip from Clinton, Iowa, to conduct the Communion service.

John Stiegel of Moline, Illinois, conducted several evening services during July and August. Seventy Fred Bevan and Warren Hinkle were present for services in July. Patriarch W. W. Richards of Davenport, Iowa, met with the Saints on August 25 and 26 to confer seven patriarchal blessings. Elder Eckright assisted in recording the blessings.

Lyle W. Woodstock, Rock Island District President, conducted preaching services. He also spent a week in November, holding evening preaching services in the community room of the Jones County Courthouse at Anamosa.—Reported by RUTH HOKE

Youth Rally Held

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND.—The Southern New England District youth rally was held in Attleboro, Massachusetts, January 19-20. A roller skating party was held Saturday afternoon as a mixer. Elder Sanford L. Fisher, president of the Fisher School, Boston, was the guest speaker at the banquet held Saturday evening. Elder Ralph Powers of Attleboro was the speaker at the fellowship service on Sunday. A discussion period followed this. Lloyd V. Gress, the new district youth leader, was the morning speaker. The theme for the rally was "The Strength to Lead—The Faith to Follow."—Reported by LLOYD V. GRESS

Christ in Poetry

Compiled and edited by Thomas Curtis Clark and Hazel Davis Clark

More than 450 of these 529 devotional poems were written in the present century. This is a Christ-centered anthology. The selections are arranged, mainly chronologically, in sections dealing with "The Nativity," "The Way of the Cross," "Resurrection," "Calvary," "Come, Follow Me," "The Continuing Christ," "The Revolutionist," "The Lost Christ," and "The Triumphant Christ."

DEATHS

ROGERS.—Abraham L., son of Mr. and Mrs. David Rogers, was born at Plainfield, Illinois, on September 23, 1861, and died December 17, 1951, at Independence, Missouri. He moved, at the age of three, with his parents to a farm near Manteno, Illinois, where he lived continuously until June, 1935, when he moved to Independence. He was married on October 14, 1908, to Mildred Bell; two sons were born to them. Baptized on October 11, 1906, he was ordained a deacon on June 5, 1910, and a teacher on November 30, 1919. While living in Independence he attended Liberty Street Church.

He is survived by his wife, Mildred, of the home; a son, Wardell, and two grandsons, all of Independence. One son died in infancy. Funeral services were held at the Dixon Kopley Chapel in Independence, Elders R. D. Weaver and Elmer Hart officiating.

SPRINGER.—Anna, daughter of Jacob and Caroline Hines, was born May 22, 1886, in Dallas County, Iowa, and died February 8, 1952, in Perry, Iowa. On August 30, 1908, she was married to Alonzo Springer; one child was born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 5, 1920. She was also a member of the Garden Club in Perry, and one of her chief delights was to cheer others by giving them beautiful bouquets of flowers from her garden.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Marker of Perry; a sister, Mrs. Lena Berkemann of Perry; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Workman Chapel, Elder Asa E. Smith officiating. Interment was in the Violet Hill Cemetery, Perry.

SELBE.—Sarah Grace McLeod, was born April 30, 1868, near Lebanon, Missouri, and died January 1, 1952, at Blue Rapids, Kansas. The family moved to Kansas in 1879 and to Ontario in 1881, where she received her education. She learned the dressmaking trade and was head seamstress in a shop for several years. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of seventeen and remained a faithful member until her death, although most of her life she was not privileged to attend services of her faith. She was married to Alonzo Selbe on September 30, 1896, who preceded her in death on August 5, 1905; two children were born to them; a son, John, now of Phillipsburg, Kansas, and a daughter, Dona Hardman of Blue Rapids. She also leaves a brother, W. T. McLeod of Pontiac, Michigan; six grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Miles Chapel, the Reverend F. M. McDonald officiating. Burial was in the Fairview Cemetery.

JACK.—Hannah Martin, was born April 15, 1880, and died suddenly at her home in Dundalk, Ontario, on January 17, 1952. She was married in 1901 to William Jack who preceded her in death on April 10, 1949. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1902 and was active in the women's department of Proton Branch until her death.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Nathan Haw of Dundalk, Mrs. Emerson Gallagher of Wareham, Mrs. Harry Hinton of Trenton, and Mrs. Robert Switzer of Mt. Forest; three sons: Willard of Proton, George and Ernest of Dundalk; three brothers; and three sisters. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Proton, Elders Fred McLean and Robert Black officiating. Interment was in the family lot in the cemetery adjoining the church.

SMITH.—Joseph M., son of Joseph and Eliza Hester Smith, was born June 10, 1874, in San Antonio, Texas, and died January 23, 1952, at the Jackson County Emergency Hospital near Independence, Missouri. He was married on August 18, 1905, to Grace B. Joiner; nine children were born to them. Two sons, Elbert and Cary preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on November 5, 1912. The family moved from Texas to Independence in 1930.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Miriam Sellmeyer, Mrs. E. E. Perry, and Mrs. Grace Lewis, all of Independence; four sons: Edward of Devine, Texas; Glau, Milton, and David of Independence; a brother, Albert of Von Ormy, Texas; a sister, Mrs. Ruth Steele of Bakersfield, California; a half-brother, Amos Smith of Hebronville, Texas; five half-sisters: Mrs. Olga Utz of San Antonio; Mrs. Amelia Klempkie of Von Ormy; Mrs. Ella Speakerman of Victoria, Texas; Mrs. Nora Dozier of Jennings, Louisiana; and Mrs. Lena Posch of Benavides, Texas; and thirteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Almer W. Sheehy officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SELF.—Walter Mann, son of Robert Mann and Emily Baldery Self, was born August 25, 1855, in Norwich, England, and died January 27, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium. He came with his parents to America in 1867, settling in Lowell, Massachusetts, and later homesteading at Palmyra, Nebraska. On January 1, 1878, he was married to Minerva Jane Tucker; nine children were born to them. Two sons died in infancy, and his wife Minerva died on August 22, 1907. On September 11, 1909, he was married to Rachel Kuykendall, who preceded him in death on April 21, 1934. He became a member of the Reorganized Church on April 28, 1886. On February 19, 1888, he was ordained a priest, on October 7, 1889, an elder, and on April 18, 1902, a seventy. He served thirty years as a local and General Church minister in Nebraska and Iowa.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Lottie Sarratt and Mrs. Leta Chapman of Independence, and Mrs. Jessie Sarratt of Collins, Missouri; three sons: Carl T. of Omaha, Nebraska; Owen H. of Genoa, Colorado; and Warren H. of Nebraska City, Nebraska; twenty-six grandchildren; and thirty great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the H. W. Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Harmon Higgins officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BRACKENBURY.—George Wesley, son of Lester and Cora Hammon Brackenbury, was born December 1, 1888, at Riverside, California, and died February 8, 1952, at Research Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri, following a heart attack. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 12, 1898, and on April 5, 1909, was married to Myrtle Dunning. One son, George Wesley, Jr., was born to them. Prior to his retirement three years ago he was office manager for Armour and Company's Sioux City, Iowa, plant, where he had been for fourteen years. He was visiting relatives in Missouri at the time of his death.

He is survived by his wife and son; his mother; a sister, Mrs. Irene Cassell; a brother, Lester H. Brackenbury; and a grandson. Funeral services were held at the George Carson Chapel in Independence, Missouri, Elders Glaude A. Smith and C. Ed. Miller officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MASON.—Lodusta, was born October 1, 1899, at Ansley, Nebraska, and died February 4, 1952, at Denver, Colorado. She was married on December 9, 1919, to Ira Mason. Their only child preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December 9, 1951.

She is survived by her husband; three sisters: Mrs. Clarence Searl of Ft. Morgan, Colorado; Mrs. Hugh Dever of Cheyenne, Wyoming; and Mrs. Louis Marion of Dallas, Oregon; three brothers: Adolph and Rudolph Martin of Cheyenne, and E. W. Martin of Helena, Montana; and her mother. Funeral services were held at the Howard Chapel, Elder Ward A. Hougas officiating. Interment was in Crown Hill Cemetery.

STRAYER.—Clara May Williams, was born October 22, 1869, in Sullivan County, New York, and died February 7, 1952, at her home in Independence, Missouri. She moved with her parents to Missouri when she was very young. On October 24, 1906, she married J. F. Strayer, and on October 27, 1923, they were baptized into the Reorganized Church along with their adopted daughter.

She is survived by her adopted daughter, Mrs. Fred T. Holland of Chihuahua, Missouri; a stepson, A. E. Strayer of Gary, Indiana; fifteen grandchildren; twenty great-grandchildren; three great-great-grandchildren, and a brother, Lewis Williams of Springfield, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Fred O. Davies at the George Carson Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HEWITT.—Amelia May Wilder, was born in 1889 in Macomb County, Michigan, and died February 4, 1952, in Windsor, Ontario. Her husband, George G. Hewitt, preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. F. Frank Moore of Windsor and Mrs. George Body of Lakeview, Ontario; a son, Wilmer James of Windsor; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Wilder of St. Cloud, Florida; a brother, Andrew Wilder, also of Florida; and a sister, Mrs. Eva Hunt of Yale, Michigan. Funeral services were held in Windsor, Elder James Pycock officiating. Burial was in the Victoria Memorial Park Cemetery.

* YOU LIVE AGAIN

If your life has fallen into a daily pattern, a routine with no change or surprise, no disappointments and no hope; if the safe walls of every day have turned your cozy refuge into a small prison, here's hope for you.

Monotony is a deadly thing, and the rut of experience needs only to be chopped off to become a grave. You feel a kind of desperation. What to do?

Go and learn something new. Learn more about your work if you can. Do not be satisfied with what is near at hand. Find new sources of information. Meet new teachers if possible. Doors will open and bars will fall down if you put your weight against them and push. New worlds of discovery and adventure will open to you.

The most fatal of all illusions is the idea that you have learned all there is to know about your specialty. It is false because you have been stopped by small obstacles and have quit trying.

Make the move, and you will soon find yourself traveling on a new highway. Challenge and uncertainty re-enter your experience. The gray overcast of your personal sky will be broken up into storm and sunshine; you may climb to new heights if you will, and the horizons that were closing in upon you will expand to vast distances. Years will roll off your shoulders, and you will become young in heart. It is in learning something new that you live again.

* SMILES

So many kinds of smiles in the world. Do you ever notice all the different varieties? As an old song says, "There are smiles that make you happy, There are smiles that make you blue. . . ." A small boy's smile that wallows in sunshine like a sailboat on a choppy sea, sloshing all over his face and sending ripples to the ends of his fingers and toes. The bland commercial smile that is broadcast at the world in general and means nothing to anybody in particular. The rich warm smile of your sweetheart, accompanied by stars in her eyes, and meant for you alone of all people. The smile of your mother, full of wisdom and understanding. The smile of a little girl, unconscious of her charm and loveliness, the bud that will open into the full flower of beauty. The tight smile that appears briefly on a bleak face, quickly snuffed out like a stinging candle, a poor thing peeking for a moment out of its prison cell. The unhappy smile, shining with the light of courage above a broken heart. The smile of an old friend who knows all about you and likes you in spite of it.

* CLUBS

The cover picture of a recent "Herald" shows "an old war club used for ceremonial purposes." . . . So? . . . If the tales that come out of the divorce courts are true, there isn't much ceremony in the way that warring couples hurl weapons of all kinds—including clubs—at each other. Question for debate-of-the-month forum: Should war clubs be included as standard domestic equipment? It would save the smashing of so much costly furniture, dishes, pictures, etc.

Deam Ferris

MR. FERRIS is a teacher in the science division, director of the teaching materials and audio visual department, and director of campus life at Graceland. He joined the faculty in 1948.

Born in 1912 at Mankato, Minnesota, he moved at an early age with his family to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he was reared. He was graduated from Central High School in 1930 and continued his education at St. Joseph Junior College. He then studied at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, from which he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1934 with a major in sociology. He taught biology, physics, and hygiene at the Osawatomie, Kansas, high school from 1935 until 1938, and then completed his Master of Arts degree in zoology at Drake in 1938, his studies being primarily in the field of parasitology. From 1938 to 1942 he taught in Des Moines high schools.

In 1942, he enlisted in the infantry, and from 1943 to 1946 served in biological warfare, leaving the service as a captain. At the end of the war he served six months as head of the Research Photographic Laboratory in Biological Warfare. He has recently been appointed Division Chemical Officer of the Thirty-fourth Infantry Division of the Iowa National Guard, holding the rank of major.

Deam returned to school in 1946 to work on his doctorate at the University of Wisconsin, teaching full time in the Audio Visual Aids Department and working half time on his degree. He returned to Des Moines for a year before joining the Graceland faculty, and has continued his studies during the summers. He is studying a virus disease in cattle similar to hoof and mouth disease. His particular problem is to discover the cause and why it strikes in the United States about every twelve years. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa, an honorary professional fraternity for teachers, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the American Society of Parasitologists.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT AT LAMONI SERVICE

The new church at Lamoni was opened March 2. In spite of the weather, for a heavy snow fell during the preceding night, the church had a capacity attendance, and appropriate services were held under the supervision of President R. S. Farnham, pastor, and his assistants. A fuller account of the service will appear in a later issue.

General officers present and participating were President Israel A. Smith, Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, President Paul M. Hanson of the Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

MEMBERS OF PRESIDENCY SPEAK

President F. Henry Edwards delivered the Communion address at the Stone Church, March 2. On the same day, President W. Wallace Smith, recently returned from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands, spoke at the Communion service at the Englewood church in the Center Stake.

MEETS WITH STUDENTS

Apostle Maurice L. Draper was in Iowa City March 2 and met with the student group and church members for sessions with the priesthood, a class, and a sermon. The sermon topic was "Research Evidences of the Authenticity of the Book of Mormon." The class topic was "Reorganized Latter Day Saint Marriage Standards." Brother Draper commented on the fine attendance despite inclement weather.

IN HUNTSVILLE, MISSOURI

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was in Huntsville, Missouri, March 2, in association with Brother John Puckett and Brother Norman Cox, missionary appointees.

APOSTLE JENSEN IN OKLAHOMA

Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp attended a district conference in Tulsa, Oklahoma, at which time R. J. Jones was ordained an evangelist.

JOHN DARLING AT INSTITUTES

Elder John R. Darling, Associate Director of Religious Education, was in St. Joseph and Cameron, Missouri, February 28 and 29, respectively, for religious education institutes. "How Persons Learn" was the theme developed in these Far West Stake conferences. Elder William Twombly is the stake director of religious education and presided at both meetings.

HISTORIAN IN NEW OFFICES

Elder John Blackmore, General Church Historian, and his department have moved into new offices. Sister Pearl Gardner is now working in the department. Elder Don Lents, assistant to the First Presidency, has his office located with this department. The new offices feature a reading room for persons who come to the historian's department to do research.

CHOIR REHEARSING FOR CONFERENCE

The Stone Church choir is working on "Fantasy on the Old One Hundred and Fourth Psalm Tune" for General Conference. The Independence Symphony Orchestra and the choir will accompany the piano soloist for the performance. Doris Gray, pianist, from Mt. Prospect, Illinois, will be the soloist. This will be directed by Franklyn S. Weddle.

Are You Going to Conference?

"How sweet to my soul is communion with saints."

—Hymn 107.

THE SPIRIT of our church life is indicated in the familiar words of the prayer meeting hymn quoted above. We appreciate deeply the "Sweet bonds that unite all the children of peace."

In the early days of the church when the forces of persecution and the hope of Zion kept the people on the move, they lived—as we may paraphrase the words of Sholem Asch concerning the family of Saul at Tarsus—in little islands of faith surrounded by seas of sin. Their leader often spoke to the people of the "congregations of the wicked."

The early gatherings and General Conferences had among their principal functions the edifying of the people, giving them the association with others "of like precious faith," and permitting them to enjoy in groups greater blessings of the Spirit of God than they could alone. Conferences often brought beautiful Pentecostal experiences. Church people had great business to transact with God.

THOUGH the Gathering has been going on for years, and numbers of our people live near the "Center Place" and in other concentrations, there are still thousands who worship in tiny groups or live "in a scattered condition." And for many of our people today, as in earlier times, a great value of the General Conference is the opportunity for fellowship and united spiritual experience.

In earlier days of the Reorganization, General Conferences were held in the basement of the Stone Church in Independence. The church leaders and workers in the general offices and ex officios would fill that space today, with scant room for visitors.

In those days, the church people who could attend Conferences slept on cots, tables, and floors in the homes of relatives and friends. Meals were served in the homes, too. People who lived here would have scorned the idea of letting anybody "stay in a hotel" like a stranger—such was the hospitality of the times.

The 1952 General Conference will probably bring many hundreds of visitors into the city from distant points. They will find conditions crowded, for in recent years the spacious old homes have been divided into small apartments for the many working people who need homes. Different standards of comfort and convenience prevail today, and visitors prefer to receive (and pay for) better accommodations and more privacy.

Conference visitors will notice, too, that transportation costs have increased. The intercity bus service charges twenty cents for the shortest ride anywhere, and a quarter to Kansas City. In many cases, "group riding" in automobiles will be cheaper.

THE SIZE of our General Conferences has increased so that a large and complex organization is necessary to provide all the services required. So much more is done for the people than ever could be done in the old days.

A mother said recently, "It used to be possible to know everybody that came to the Conference, and we were proud that we were able to do it. But we can't do it any more."

Yet it is true today, as it always has been, that one of the principal reasons our people come to General Conferences is for fellowship—for the sweet "communion with Saints." Many church members are still isolated, or worshipping in small groups where they are still little islands of faith surrounded by seas of doubt. Conference brings them something deeply personal and necessary to their souls.

"Are you going to Conference?" is a question that will be asked wherever "two or three are gathered" in the name of Christ. It is a question that each one asks of himself—"Can I go to Conference this year?"

GOING to Conference is something of a pilgrimage. It is more than a vacation, more than a social event, more than a trip. It is taking care of the business of the soul with God. For in visiting this historic place, where bright hopes and dreams have envisioned the walls of a city of light, and where dark tragedy has stained the soil with blood, church people feel, and have always felt, that they are treading on holy ground.

Conference in this place reminds us that we cannot forget the sacred memories of the past; we cannot ignore the hopes and dreams that lie ahead as the goals of future effort and achievement. Conference is more than a convention. It is a pilgrimage of faith. It is a religious memorial. It is a symbol of that greater Gathering, from which we shall never be dispersed again.

Baptisms for January

There were 224 baptisms reported to The Department of Statistics in January, 1952. This compares unfavorably with the 311 for January, 1951, but otherwise is topped only by January, 1930, and January, 1950.

The five districts and stakes reporting the highest number of baptisms in January are as follows: Flint-Port Huron District, 25; Center Stake of Zion, 20; Central Oklahoma District, 18; Gulf States District, 17; and Eastern Colorado District, 14.

The five branches reporting the highest number of baptisms in January are as follows: Port Huron, Michigan, 17; Denver, Colorado, 10; Escatawpa, Mississippi, 8; Skiatook, Oklahoma, 7; and Wichita, Kansas, 7.

Also noteworthy are the figures reported by two missions: Little Sioux, Iowa, 7; and Black Gum, Oklahoma, 6.

Reserved Conference Parking

Always at General Conference there are people who raise the question why some people are given preferred or reserved parking. Reserved parking is arranged and provided for those whose duties at Conference make this imperative. Many people have considerable business at the Conference, as well as at their respective church institutions, and need available parking space so that work can be accomplished.

If you drive to Conference, we ask you to please park in the unmarked section south of the Auditorium and in the Stone Church parking lot. Conference visitors have also been invited to use the parking lot at Slover's Drive-In.

Your consideration and co-operation in leaving the reserved areas available for those assigned space will be appreciated very much.

Conference Prayer Services

The success of the Conference prayer services will depend upon the quality of the participation during the allotted time. For this reason we have asked members of the Council of Twelve to be in charge of the services, and through their careful planning we anticipate we shall attain a high level of spiritual participation. We would specifically urge, however, that members of the quorums of high priests, seventies, and elders, be prepared to participate in these meetings to help assure their success.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Elder Eugene A. Theys, Rotterdam, Holland, February 11:

On January 15 we started work on the new mission house at Hannover, Germany. On the twenty-fifth we laid the cornerstone and held a short service invoking God's blessing on our building and the work to be accomplished through its building. Brother Franz Beil, former pastor at Hannover and now mission patriarch, gave a short address and I placed a small metal box containing several letters, newspapers, German coins, and one of the late copies of the German mission paper in the cornerstone. At present weather has slowed up construction but we still have plans to finish the building completely by the end of June. When this is done, my work here in Germany will be completed for the time being. I am enjoying this opportunity to acquaint myself with this phase of our work, as well as learning something about building construction.

We find the work in the German mission making steady progress. Brother Louis Zonker is fitting in fine with his new work. We are also proud of the good work that Elder Oskar Stüve, our new missionary in Germany, is doing among the members and nonmembers. We believe he will be able to render a fine contribution to the work in this mission.

We hope that President I. A. Smith can visit Germany this year and dedicate the new mission house and the church in Berlin. We believe that the ministry he can bring to the people in this area will have a lasting effect upon our work here.

I have counted these years in the German mission one of the greatest experiences of my ministry. I only hope that the Saints and friends have received as much from my ministry as they have given to me. I know, when we leave Germany, that part of our life will remain with them. One cannot labor in this work unless he has love, and truly we have come to love these good people.

Our prayers go with you brethren as you prepare for the arduous tasks that are a part of the General Conference.

From Evangelist J. Charles May, Papeete, Tahiti, February 20, 1952:

Since Communion Sunday, April 1, last year, when Elder Horahitu was ordained to the office of Seventy, I have been associated with him most of the time. We visited most of the islands of the mission during the months of May, June, and July. During these months we visited twelve of the leading branches of the mission. It was Horahitu's first visit among them as a seventy, and my first appearance among them as a patriarch. We were given fine receptions on all of these islands. Our first visit was for the purpose of reviving the Saints, advising them that we would later return, and that then I would give them their blessings, also advising them to make the necessary preparation for the receiving of their blessings.

We spent several months again with the native Saints in these same branches, and I am happy to report that up to the present in our labors together Elder Horahitu and I have baptized fifty-three. Seventy Horahitu did most of the preaching and baptizing, and I gave 325 blessings. Several more members will be blessed within the coming week. This is much more than I had anticipated at first.

I have enjoyed my association with our native missionary, Horahitu, and feel much encouraged by reason of the work accomplished. I am pleased to report, too, that several of our Saints have repented and made themselves ready for their patriarchal blessings.

During last December I had the happy privilege of meeting with Elder Sorensen and his good family for the first time. I am also glad to report that Elder Allen Breckenridge and family are well and doing fine.

I have my reservations for returning to America by plane, leaving here March 6, via Fiji and Hawaii. I will spend some few days in Hawaii and hope to reach Independence by March 25.

The Church on TV at Los Angeles

The Herald is glad to present the story of some excellent public relations promoted by the president of the Los Angeles Stake, Garland E. Tickemyer, and his associates on February 10. This is the first time any branch has had an hour's program televised. Short programs were televised this winter by the Stone Church and Central Kansas City pastors, Glaude A. Smith and Herbert Lively, from the Kansas City studio of WDAF-TV. Elder Tickemyer learned, by accident, of an opportunity to appear on the "Great Churches of the Golden West"—a regular Sunday program—sold the church and himself to the sponsors, and was accepted for the service.

This program has the second largest listening audience on the air at 11:00 a.m. Sunday mornings in Los Angeles. With a 2.8 rating it is believed that 27,600 sets tuned in to the service or a total of 77,208 listeners—a rather large congregation for the Reorganized Latter Day Saints to serve.

From Elder Tickemyer's letter to the Presidency we present the following graphic paragraphs:

Sunday morning, February 10, the service was televised over KTTV—Channel 11, one of the largest stations in the city. The program cost the Inglewood Cemetery fifteen hundred dollars and was a full hour in length. A choir made up of singers from all congregations was as fine as any choir presented on this program to date. There were a considerable number of technicians on the job to handle the four large cameras which were set up in the church. Mr. Moore allowed us to write our own continuity with no restrictions whatever; and since he had to be out of the city, asked us to select our own narrator. We chose Blaine Bender, and he was splendid.

Bishop Kelley, Tom Beil, Brother Elbert, and I were on the stand. We selected our finest looking young men as ushers, and they made a good appearance. Despite the distractions of moving cameras and floodlights, Brother Elbert had excellent liberty, using well-prepared notes and seeming to be completely relaxed. Preaching on the subject of "Repentance," he gave a message that was acclaimed a masterpiece.

Mr. Reedy who had charge of the program for the sponsor told me that ours was the friendliest congregation that he has had the privilege of seeing in action. The ladies prepared a dinner to be served following the morning service. They invited the technicians in and gave them hot drinks, and the men felt very much at home. They were surprised and delighted with the treatment they received. Brother William Moyle talked with them for about fifteen minutes, and the information that he gathered from them and passed on to me was that ours was the most carefully prepared and most genuine service of worship they had televised. They were especially impressed with the beauty of the choir music and the vigor of the congregational singing.

During the week preceding the broadcast, we mailed out newspaper releases to the 125 news and trade papers on our mailing list. I have no way of knowing just how many of these papers carried the announcement, but five or six of them have been sent in to this office. There were a few Mormons present at the service, and I feel quite sure that we had a considerable audience of Utah people.

We feel fortunate also to be able to present the sermon Brother Elbert A. Smith preached for the occasion on the subject of "Repentance." Sometimes our leaders see big opportunities to serve the Master but fail for lack of man power or preparedness. Often they are ready, but the opportunity to serve in a big and effectual way is lacking. In Los Angeles the opportunity and ready servants met on this grand occasion.

Repentance

By Elbert A. Smith

MY THEME is repentance. In view of the fact that the audience immediately before me is composed largely of church members, that theme may seem inappropriate at first glance.

Our late President Joseph Smith once told of one of our young ministers who was out for his first Sunday of preaching. At the morning service he had a congregation of church members and took for his text, "O generation of vipers, who has warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" In the evening, having moved on to a new appointment, he had a congregation of non-members and chose the text, "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

I trust my theme is not that inept. It might seem to be if we take a superficial view of repentance. Repentance is not all tears and sackcloth and ashes. It has two phases. The prophet Isaiah stated the proposition tersely in his admonition: "Cease to do evil and learn to do well."

We may cease to do evil in a short time, given will power and divine aid. Learning to do good and to do it well is a lifetime job and longer. It may continue in the beyond until we reach the full development of all our inherent powers. So my theme has a challenge to all—and always. Perhaps some of you have powers and talents you have not even begun to explore.

An Old Doctrine

Repentance is an old doctrine. Adam learned it the hard way when he was cast out of Eden. He repented and, according to the Inspired Version of the Bible, preached repentance to his children and grandchildren.

Jesus began his work preaching repentance. We are told that he began preaching in Galilee, "Saying, Repent ye, and believe the gospel."

In a revelation to this church in these modern times we are told, "Say nothing but repentance unto this generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 10:4). That would seem to limit us most strictly did we not recognize the twofold character of repentance, ceasing to do evil and learning to do good. That view opens a field of vast possibilities.

Again we have been told, "Cry repentance to a crooked and perverse generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 33: 1).

How About America

Is there need for such preaching today in America? Revelations that have come to us day after day through the Kefauver commission and other agencies, concerning crime conditions in America, have shocked right-thinking people. It is a time to cry repentance in no uncertain tones.

The Promises to America

We believe in the Bible, and we also believe in the Book of Mormon—not in any sense as supplanting the Bible, but as an added witness for God and Christ. From the Book of Mormon we learn that long before Columbus, God declared through his prophets that America was to be "choice above all other lands." And the promise was given that its inhabitants should never be brought down in bondage to any other people. But the promise is conditional, the condition being that the people must be righteous and obey God.

America is in danger today—at home. Recently the Attorney General appointed ninety-five special grand juries to investigate crime conditions in all parts of the United States. The guilty should be uncovered, apprehended, and punished. But punitive measures do not get at the roots of crime. In Jesus' words, "the axe shall be laid at the root of the tree."

Today, perhaps more than when Lincoln stood up at Gettysburg to make his great speech, America needs a new birth. America must be made strong in arms and men, but first she must be made strong morally and spiritually. She must be a regenerated nation rededicated to the ancient religious and political beliefs that made her great. Her citizens must be rededicated to honesty and decency, and the service of God and Christ.

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget!"

Back to the Individual

Let us go back to the individual. The nation is only as strong and fine as her individual citizens. So also is the church strong and fine only as her members are strong and fine.

Jesus had a social message—and still has. But first and always his message is personal. To Nicodemus the message came, "You must be born again."

On the day of Pentecost the message to those to whom the apostles preached was "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ."

To Paul, so miraculously converted, the same message came: "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins."

Not so long ago we celebrated New Year's Day. Any day may be the beginning of a new year and a new life to the person who will accept and obey that message.

Repentance is an abiding principle. It is a time of sorrow and also a time of rejoicing—a time to start life all over, having washed the slate clean, a time of getting right with God and self and fellow-men. This is righteousness.

That is the beautiful side of repentance—the bringing forth of "fruits mete for repentance." Sin consists not alone in doing that which we should not do. In a major sense it may be a failure to do the things we should do.

We Are at War

In a very real sense we are engaged in a warfare of a spiritual nature—even within ourselves. It is a war against all the forces that destroy the souls of men—body and spirit.

It would be a wonderful thing if we could fight the battle all in one day and have done with it. Life is not like that. Each day calls for decisions. They should be made in accord with the over-all decision made the day we were baptized.

These day by day decisions confront us in amazing variety, sometimes suddenly and in subtle ways.

I recall an experience when I was young in the ministry. I was pastor of the church in Burlington, Iowa. The world's fair was in progress in St. Louis. Those were the days of wonderful world fairs in which nations united to build a miracle city where each might display its arts and culture. I wanted very much to go to that fair, but times were hard and money was scarce. It would cost me, I calculated, twenty dollars. And I did not have twenty dollars.

Then one day, not far from my home, I found a billfold lying on the sidewalk, and in it were twenty dollars and twenty cents. I had a decision to make. The twenty dollars did not tempt me—the world's fair did. There I held in my hand the world's fair and twenty cents left over for incidentals. The decision was made in harmony with my baptismal covenant. I inquired around in the neighborhood and found the owner of the billfold. I never did get to the world's fair. But I had something better—a clear conscience. More grave temptations assail us. We see around us daily the ruin of those who surrender. We see the fine lives of those who fight and win.

Conversion Is not Instantaneous

Conversion is not instantaneous as some suppose. Some of you may have decided to remodel and redecorate the house in which you live. Such a decision may be made in an hour. The job requires more time. You may buy materials, if you can find them, and hire workmen, if they are to be had, and expedite the work of remodeling.

But this conversion of which I speak is not something that you can hire someone to do for you. It is a growth, and growth takes time. A mushroom springs up in a night—and wilts down in a day. Jesus is not interested in cultivating mushrooms.

Even after Peter had been with Christ for nearly three years and had been ordained an apostle, Jesus said to him, "When you are converted, strengthen your brethren." Was not Peter converted the day he chose to follow Christ? No, his conversion had just begun.

The Law of Liberty

The Apostle James compares the gospel to a mirror in which men see themselves as they are. Discontented with what they see, they may repent. More than that, they see in the mirror the sort of men they should become.

Years ago a young man came to some of my services in San Bernardino. Later, Elder George Wixom and I called on him in his hotel rooms. He was a wealthy, well-educated, talented young man, and had traveled the world over. He seemed impressed by our message but broke down and confessed, "The trouble with me is I know what I ought to do, but I can't do it. I know what I should not do, but I can't keep from doing it." I looked at him in surprise and said, "You—young and strong and talented—know what you should do but cannot do it and what you should not do and cannot keep from doing it? You are not a free man."

It was his turn to look at me in surprise. But it was true. He lived in America, "the land of the free." The constitution guaranteed his political liberty. The Army and Navy existed to protect his liberty. The flag floated over him, but he was not free.

Christ said, "If the Son of Man shall set any man free, that man shall be free indeed." That is why his gospel is called "the perfect law of liberty." Under that law of liberty we have the right and the power to do what we should do and to be what we should be.

The Greatest Miracle

When Christ and the apostles of old were on earth wonderful miracles of healing were wrought upon the bodies of men who had the faith to be healed. I have been personally knowing to miracles of physical healing in these later times that seem as wonderful to me.

But the greatest miracle wrought by the Master was through his gospel in the healing of men's souls—both spirit and body. There was Peter, at the first a loud-mouthed, violent, profane fisherman. He was transformed and became one of the greatest of the apostles.

There was Paul, bent upon the destruction of Christianity. He went about casting Christians into prison and consenting to their murder. Converted, he became perhaps the greatest missionary of all time.

There was Mary Magdalene, a wayward, abandoned woman, said by some to be possessed of seven devils. People thought one devil could not think of all the wickedness that Mary Magdalene seemed to personify. Converted, she became a fine Christian woman and one of the witnesses to the Resurrection of her Lord.

I have seen the transformation of human lives that seemed to me as great a miracle as those recorded in the Bible. The gospel of Jesus Christ "is the power of God unto salvation"—not alone in the great hereafter, but here and now. If they would accept that gospel it would save men and women from the pit of hell into which they fall while still alive.

It was my privilege to be associated for some years with Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who succeeded his father, the Prophet Joseph Smith who functioned in organizing the church in 1830.

President Smith presided over this church for fifty years (1860-1914). He was such a person that when he died in Independence, Missouri, the leading daily paper in Kansas City bore him an editorial tribute, which in part said, "He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen."

This fine man lost the vision of his eyes in his old age—not his spiritual vision. One day I visited him and found him for the moment sitting alone. He was trying to bring to mind all the words of a favorite song, Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

He said to me, "Elbert, what is that stanza which begins, 'In the beauty of the lilies?'" So I repeated the stanza for him.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that trans-figures you and me.

His memory thus refreshed, President Smith then repeated the hymn in its entirety, stressing the words, "With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me." Yes, there is a glory in his gospel that transfigures you and me—if we wish to be transfigured. It comes to us through faith, repentance, and baptism and grows brighter and stronger as our lives develop under his guidance:

Till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Ephesians 4:13.

Deam was a track and cross-country runner throughout high school and college. In college he was elected to the Sigma Tau Delta, an honorary writing fraternity, and participated in music and drama activities. Photography is a hobby he uses in teaching biology. He is also interested in the philosophy of science and religion. He enjoys hunting, fishing, boating, and swimming. He and his family live in a tent near Lake Mendota in Wisconsin for two months each summer in connection with his doctorate at the university.

In 1935, he married Merle Wildey, a Graceland alum; they have three children: Sarah Jo, 13, Tary Jeanne, 11, and Deborah Joanne, 6. Karen Tiner from India, who is six years old, is also living with them while her mother and stepfather complete their doctorate studies at the University of Illinois.

Deam is an elder in the church and is a leader in campus religious life.

A Day in Our "College of Nursing"

By Sadi Moon Nagel

I HEARD the sound of young girls laughing, smelled the aroma of good food cooking, and found myself in one of the most interesting places anyone can go—a kitchen.

This was more than an ordinary kitchen, and these were more than ordinary girls, for beyond the laughing and the cooking stands the promise of a better society, formulated by those who love to serve others. These young ladies were in the diet laboratory of one of the church colleges—the college of nursing, whose purpose is to graduate from its three-year, basic course in nursing, professional nurses who are capable of filling first level positions, such as those found in hospitals of all types, physician's offices, health centers, and public health agencies.

2 The student nurse learns her medicines. Graduate nurse Josephine Thompson Stewart instructs student Delores Hawkins.

1 Instructor Iola Tordoff with the model of a human torso in Medical Diseases class. One student points to a chart showing a large figure of the heart. Both the model and the chart were purchases for the girls from "San Day" funds.

"We're getting ready for our big dinner tomorrow night," one of them volunteered. A neat and friendly instructor dressed in her starched, crisp uniform invited me to be a guest at the annual dinner which is given by the freshmen girls for the supervisors of the school and hospital.

"We're practicing our cooking on them, but we think they'll not be disappointed," she said. Mrs. Myrtle Quitmyer is herself an alumna of this most pleasant college. She looks like anyone's favorite aunt, and wields a most loving—though at the same time, a most demanding—hand over her share of the education of these young Reorganized Latter Day Saints and friends who are in her classes.

"Come here, and let me show you what we're working on now," she invited me. I went to a neat and colorful bulletin board where she unpinned a list of "Elements of Social Grace When Dining."

"Why do you teach nurses such a thing as that?" I queried.

"A nurse should be a very social citizen, at home in every social situation," she answered. I read down a sheet of thirty-two points on the subject, including "How to Spend the Food Dollar," "Menu Planning," "The Formal Dinner," "China," "Linens," "Use of Silver."

"This looks wonderful," I said. "I wish every Reorganized Latter Day Saint could have the privilege of seeing the facilities of our college of nursing." I remembered my own college days in other schools and universities and recalled the classes we had in the foods laboratory. Perhaps this wasn't much different in physical equipment, but I knew it was different in spirit. Most of the girls themselves were young Reorganized Latter Day Saints preparing to be of service in the building of Zion. This instructor, as all the others, was well trained, true, but more than that even, she was a woman who prayed over her work, bringing God's own spirit into her teaching.

THIS was my introduction to the girls in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

"How many are there?" I asked.

3 A scene in the nursing arts lab. At left is instructor Myrle Quitmyer. The girls are seated on the observation bleachers watching proceedings.

"One hundred four," was the answer. "Forty-one freshmen; twenty-eight juniors; and thirty-five seniors." I looked at some of the addresses opposite their names: Denison, Iowa; Osseo, Minnesota; Hilo, Hawaii; Memphis, Tennessee; Madison, Wisconsin; Portland, Oregon; Bald Knob, Arkansas; Lemon Grove, California; Otis, Colorado; Cleveland, Ohio.

I didn't have to ask what drew girls from such wide areas. I knew. I was seeing the spirit of Christlike teaching in the faces of the girls and the eyes of the teachers and staff members.

Certainly it is no accident that such should be the case in a college that sets forth such aims as these:

1. To assist the student in developing so that she might live a successful personal life and be a contributing citizen in her community.

2. To give the student a basic course in the theory and practice of nursing which will enable her to give expert bedside nursing care; this includes the care of the patient's environment, his physical and mental comfort, his personal hygiene, assistance to the physician in diagnosing and treating the patient, and observation of the emotional, social, and physical factors involved.

3. To teach the student to attain and maintain good physical and mental health for herself, and to create within her the desire and the ability to co-operate with other professional and lay persons in the community in promoting a program of positive health.

4. To stimulate the student to continue her education beyond the bounds of the three-year basic course in nursing.

5. To assist the student in developing a philosophy of practical religion which will motivate her to serve others with tolerance and understanding, and help her to derive personal satisfaction from this service.

I was seeing that this college of our church was fulfilling well these aims, for I knew the marks for good its alumnae left upon Independence and the creative influence they carried back to their home congregations. I was seeing the provisions made to accomplish the first four aims, and I have known for some time of the excellent environment that the Center Stake gives to these student nurses who come from far places. Many of them become active in local congregations, and can take home with them not only a profession that gives service, but an enlarged soul and trained spirit.

4 Student nurses Barbara Moore and Mary Lundgren, Independence, relax in their room waiting to go on duty at the Independence Sanitarium and hospital.

WHEN we think of college instruction we think of having the best in teachers. Proudly our own nursing college can present the best trained instructors. Among them is Miss Vida Butterworth, R.N., B.S., M.A., who is the educational director of the school. The girls must think a lot of her; they dedicated their attractive yearbook of last season, the Sanilog, to her.

My guide showed me her office. My attention was immediately drawn to a lovely painting of the grand lady of all nurses, Florence Nightingale, hanging above the desk. I saw in a cabinet a collection of dolls, all similar in size, some ten inches tall, dressed in many different styles of nurses' uniforms. "These aren't for fun," my guide said, "though it makes learning the history of nursing a lot of fun. Miss Butterworth uses these dolls in her teaching. You can see the various costumes of different periods and localities."

I asked about other members of the faculty. "Of course there is Miss Nelle Morgan, director of nurses at the hospital. She's away now at the University of Michigan for a year's special training. She and Miss Shirley Butler, the assistant director, are both on the teaching staff. Miss Signe Carlson, supervisor of operative rooms, teaches a course in operating room nursing. And then the doctors have their special fields of instruction." As the guide named some of the excellent surgeons and physicians of the community, I knew the girls were really getting the best of teaching.

Science instructors include Iola Tordoff, Helen Hinde, and Florence Welch. Several instructors have been taking further nursing education on funds provided by the Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing Day. I saw the chemistry laboratory where some of these teachers work and sniffed the "usual" laboratory odors.

We walked on a bit. I saw a blond-wood pulpit and a piano with chairs lined up neatly, filling an average-sized room. "Oh, this is the famous chapel," I exclaimed, for like so many church members I have heard about the daily worship services which are held in the early morning hours. The chaplain, Almer Sheehy, directs them and often invites ministers of the several churches in Independence to help him in the services. "You'll notice that this chapel is not in the nurses' home itself, but in the hospital," I was reminded. We have it here because patients like to hear the girls singing hymns in the morning, and sometimes some of them are able to attend."

I saw the chaplain hurry around a corner and pick up a phone. "He's part of the teaching staff, too," I was told. "He teaches psychology and sociology to the students. He's a fine teacher, too, bringing several years of public school instruction to the job besides his many years of youth work and general church ministry."

WE CONTINUED our walk through the halls of the lowest floor of the nursing home where the classrooms of the school are found.

"How wonderful," I thought, "to be able to live in the same building where classes are held." I could see how it facilitated a better use of energy, otherwise the girls would have to put on wraps and go outside several times a day, for with students interspersing classes with floor duty at the Sanitarium itself, they could save themselves much energy in having everything so convenient. The nurses' home is connected to the hospital by a large brightly lighted tunnel, the use of which gives one the illusion of being in a single building rather than in two. This provides a similar saving of time and energy.

There are three floors of the nurses' home entirely above the ground. The classes are held in cheerful rooms on the ground level. As I passed one door I saw one of the maintenance staff polishing the floors until they shone like satin. As he finished he shoved back into place a large cabinet which I couldn't resist looking into, for its contents were most unusual.

My guide said, "These are some models. They are expensive, but very useful in instruction on the

When the Lamp Burns Low

By Ruby Tinkham

TIMOTHY CARVER, the fourth in a line of illustrious missionaries, sat at the small desk and studied his hands miserably. The long length of him was sprawled in a kind of dejection that filled the tiny room with despair. The frown on his young face clung stubbornly to his hands. Hands were made for work, to create, to beautify, to accomplish! He envied those men whose hands were big and hard with callouses and huge knuckles and overpowering strength—men whose sweat came from shoveling coal, lifting freight, or driving a truck. He hated his hands, slim and soft and white like a woman's.

He clenched them into fists and laid his head on them in a kind of agonized frenzy. He wanted to pound them on the desk but that might bring Margie, and she had it hard enough being a missionary's wife. He compelled himself to sit there quietly, to talk himself into some kind of forced tranquillity. "Go back," he said, "go back and go over it all again. You wanted to be a missionary. You asked for it. You wanted to burn up the world with your eloquence and save souls. You thought you had something. You were going to set people on fire and change men into supreme beings. Now face it—you're a failure! You, Timothy Carver, the man who was going to light the whole world with your lamp, have burned out." Two years in the mission field and he was through. He knew it. He had failed. They could pat him on the back and say nice things like, "Now, Timothy, you have to have experience. It takes time. You have to learn things as you go along." Even his own father had been kind, "Look, Son, you grow up with God; you don't take him by force. You expect too much. Slow down; quit trying so hard."

There was nice casual talk from men who had accomplished big things. Men who had felt the Spirit of God like his father could afford to be generous with kids just starting out. But they didn't fool him. A man either had it or he didn't. And if he didn't, it was better for him to find it out in time.

HE GOT UP and rammed his hands into his pockets. It was better this way. Maybe if he moved around a bit—loosened up—he could think of something to say Sunday. It would be his last sermon. Funny how he had thought of that before. It was always going to be when he was an old man; all the people would love him and have tears in their eyes when he spoke. Even the children would be very attentive so as not to lose a word he was saying. He sighed bitterly. He knew how it would be all right! About half the congregation would be there. Margie would sit up front to encourage him. The children would squirm and be restless unless he told them stories. He stopped pacing and grinned. That was one thing he could do . . . he could really tell stories. Maybe he'd go into teaching. He closed his eyes and shook his head against the thought of this last sermon. A few would nod quietly, and old Mrs. Barnes would sit there like the Almighty waiting to pounce on any mistake he happened to make. He studied the toe of his shoe belligerently. Funny how that woman bothered him. She never missed a chance to remind him of how little he knew. He cringed inside whenever he had to meet her eyes. How he'd like to tell her off, just once!

Somewhere he had read, "If you write down all the things you have to be thankful for, you can change your whole attitude toward life." He sat down at the typewriter and rolled in a clean sheet. But the sight of that glaring white expanse was like the accusing barrenness of his own soul. Thankful for what? For losing his place? For being a failure? For having to throw away his hopes and dreams and admit defeat? Resentment and bitterness rose like nausea inside him, and suddenly he was angry, furiously angry. All right, so he had failed. Why? Why had God let him down? He had tried. He had tried harder than he had ever tried at anything. He jerked the sheet out of the typewriter and just as violently shoved it back in again. OK, he would write down the things he didn't like. Other men could go to their boss and find out what was wrong. They could ask and get a straight answer. They could complain or find fault and work out something. They could even get mad and speak their piece before they got fired. He would too! The typewriter responded vehemently to his angry touch.

Dear God:

You will notice that I did not call you Father, because this is strictly business and I do not expect any favors. This is a letter of complaint and I hope you are not too busy to consider it carefully yourself. Don't push it off on some angel who has not been to earth recently and does not understand what I'm talking about. I will not use any fancy words, for you already know how I feel and can read between the lines anyway. When I started out two years ago I felt positively that you were with me and that you were pleased because I was going to work for you. Now I am not so sure. But wait a minute, I am not complaining about the places, the small congregations, or the salary. It's like this:

I don't like working a whole week—reading, studying, and praying—and then preaching a sermon to less than half of my congregation.

I don't like being pounced on to prove every statement I make with a backlog of scripture a mile long.

I don't like administering to the sick and then having them doubt you and me when they don't get well.

I don't like praying and fasting to prepare myself to serve Communion and then finding my congregation in a turmoil over some business aspect left unsettled at a previous meeting.

I don't like visiting in homes with the hope of telling the story of the gospel and winding up trying to prevent my hosts from telling me the life story of every other member in the branch.

I don't like living frugally and then having other members with new cars tell me they can't pay their tithing.

I don't like preaching the truth and then having individuals come to me and ask me to make exceptions in their personal lives for they have so much more to bear.

And most of all, I don't like people expecting Margie and me to give up our right to a freedom of choice and expecting us to live without errors simply because we are missionaries.

But, God, I can't finish this letter without telling you how much I've enjoyed the children. They are wonderful. I've loved every one of them, and teaching them has brought me the only real happiness I've ever known, outside of Margie. So if you could just accept my resignation and make room for me somewhere with them we'll call it even.

MMARGIE came quietly into the room and laid her arm across his shoulders. She felt the tenseness before she spoke, "I heard you writing, Tim, and I knew you had finally found out what you wanted to say. How's it coming?"

Without bothering to acknowledge her kindness he tore the sheet of paper out of the typewriter and handed it to her with exaggerated politeness. "Yes, dear, I finally found out what I wanted to say." Then letting his glance strike hers boldly he added brutally, "Read it and weep; you are looking at my last sermon." That wasn't enough; he had to dramatize his act with sarcasm. "The light of the world is going out in a blaze of glory. Timothy Carver, the boy wonder, is going to preach a sermon that will knock your eyes out. For the first time in his life his congregation will listen to what he is saying."

Margie pulled away in mock consternation. "My, don't we feel sorry for ourselves today?" Then grinning good-naturedly, "I knew I should never have left you in here alone so long. Better you should be drying dishes." She glanced at the sheet of paper in her hand. Tim watched her face covertly and waited impatiently. She read it through slowly without glancing up and her face showed no expression when she finished. That was bad, and Tim knew it. Up went his guard.

She laid it carefully on the desk. "Timothy Carver, you are not going to make that the basis for a sermon Sunday." It was a flat statement with just the right note of contempt. Ordinarily it would have worked, but not this time. Somehow it became extremely important to Timothy that he say all of those things; that he flay himself and his congregation mercilessly; that he inflict some of the pain he felt on others.

"It will be the best sermon I've ever preached, Margie. At least it will be the truth."

"But you have no right to say those things. You might hurt somebody."

"And who has a better right? Didn't the prophets of old scourge their people when they felt they needed it?"

"Not unless God directed them to do it, and then they weren't personal grievances like these. You have no right to carry personal grievances into the pulpit. Your job is to teach and preach Jesus Christ and leave people's faults out of it."

Suddenly he hated her firm rightness. He pointed his finger dramatically at the sheet of paper. "I suppose none of these things have ever hurt you. You live in a perfect little heaven with God loving and protecting you and answering your every prayer."

Margie's voice rose. "What's got into you? Of course I'm not perfect. Neither are other people, but that isn't God's fault."

He came back scornfully. "He created them, didn't he?"

"Yes, and you'd be out of a job if they were all perfect. Jesus didn't come to save the well, he came to save the sick." And then defiantly, "And there were probably days when he worked hard and didn't save anybody, but he didn't run back to heaven. He stayed and finished the job!" With that she marched righteously toward the door. There she paused, and he could see her lip tremble. "Tim, if you feel that you want to quit, that's all right. I'm with you all the way. But let's not blame God or the people. Let's just go out quietly with what oil we have left in our lamps still burning."

He dropped his head quickly and felt a sudden flush of shame. It had always been a secret between them about keeping their lamps burning.

THEY left it like that until Sunday. But Margie saw Tim slip the sheet of paper in his pocket, and she prayed silently. She didn't understand this new Timothy with the bitter determination to hurt—he who had always been so quick to understand, so eager to help.

Timothy felt justified in what he was going to do. He looked down at his congregation and felt no surge of pity or regret. He glanced over his people appraisingly. There was no hurry. A thing of this kind had to be worked into, built up cunningly, with fuel added gradually so there was no suspicion of intent to scorch and burn. He took out the sheet of paper and unfolded it carefully before him. Margie was waiting anxiously in the front seat with a little girl beside her. The child had her hand tucked warmly in Margie's, and her eyes were raised expectantly to his. He saw the eagerness written on her face and the childlike innocence. She smiled at him engagingly, and he knew she was waiting for a story. Tim could never resist that kind of look. Where could he find a story that would fit in with this sermon? And just as suddenly he knew one. He would tell her about Moses. It wouldn't take long. Before her eyes he began to draw pictures of a little baby hidden in a homemade boat. He was weaving weeds into a basket and dabbing them with mud to make them watertight. He noticed his hands and was fascinated by them. He felt as if he were standing off somewhere and seeing them for the first time. They were creating, and he felt a sudden exultant joy in them. He knew that never again in his whole life would he ever be ashamed of them.

As he continued he forgot about the child, for he was telling the story completely. He was under compulsion to finish it, for he was lost in the telling. He heard the words drop from his lips as if they were coming from someone else; he knew the story was for him and him alone. The story of a man who time after time had wanted to give up, in humiliation, in dejection, even in anger. A man who had labored, suffered, and died outside the boundaries of his hopes and dreams. A man who had gone back again and again over the same road trying to teach a rebellious people about God. And yet, a man whose refusal to desert those same people had won for himself the highest honor of all—the right to walk and talk with God.

As Tim listened to that story he looked out over his audience and knew that none of them suspected what was happening—that right before their very eyes a man was being reborn. And he was certain then that many such miracles occur all the time. He wanted to shout, "Timothy Carver, you fool, you blind, stupid fool. God never let you down! He's only been waiting for you to open your eyes and grow up!"

Suddenly he felt humble. He was so humble that he felt great. In that moment he discovered something amazing. He learned that a man earns the right to the possession of God's Spirit by his willingness to love and forgive his fellow-man.

The luminous quality of Margie's eyes told him that she understood in part what was happening. He finished his story and sat down. Now that it was over he felt weak and very tired.

AFTER the service his listeners gathered around him shaking his hand and patting him on the back. They told him what a fine sermon it was and wished him well on his new assignment. Up through the throng came Mrs. Barnes. She clapped him on the shoulders and pumped his hand up and down like a man. "Well, Son, I hate to see you leave. You've got a brilliant future, I can tell you that. But no matter where you go you'll never preach a better sermon than you did tonight." With that she clapped him again and was gone. He watched her plodding down the aisle and felt as if he wanted to run after her and hug her. He didn't resent her anymore; he loved that old woman. She had prodded him, pounced on him, and antagonized him until she had forced him to grow up. He could see that now. And he knew as surely as he stood there that she would do it to the next missionary, and the next, and the next. He grinned in spite of himself and thought, "More power to her!"

When the church was empty he took Margie's hand, and they walked out into the night. Without speaking they matched their strides and were content.

Her voice came out of the darkness softly but tremulously, "We're not quitting, are we, Tim?"

He came back strong and triumphant, "No, not now—or ever!" Then affectionately, "Margie, did you pray for me?"

"Oh, Tim, I couldn't pray. I just kept saying over and over, 'Please, God, don't let him make a fool of himself.' And you didn't!" She squeezed his arm lovingly. "What did you pray for?"

"Well," and she could feel his grin in the darkness, "I didn't exactly pray. I said, 'Just leave me alone, Lord; I'm going to preach the best sermon I've preached in my whole life!'"

She joined him in loving laughter. "And you did, darling. God surely answered our prayers."

"Yes, but not in the way I expected. You know, Margie, I learned something tonight. It happened to me while I was telling that story. I found out that God can work miracles right under your nose or before your very eyes and no one know it but you and him." He stopped and turned her toward him. "I found out something else, too. God can make a man feel humble and not make him feel little at all. It's wonderful, it's exciting—like starting out on a special kind of adventure."

She stopped him with her hands on his chest. "And I found out something too, Tim." Her voice dropped so low he had to bend over to catch it. "I found out that when your lamp burns down until you think it's going out, that's when God pours in a fresh supply of oil!"

STAKE HAS INSTITUTE

The church school teachers of the Center Stake of Zion met in an institute February 20, 21, and 22, at the Stone Church. Classes were instructed by Kleta Finley, Aleta Runkle, Franklyn S. Weddle, Chris B. Hartshorn, John Darling, Glaude Smith, Carl Mesle, and Reed M. Holmes. Stake President Charles V. Graham was in charge of the closing service at which Apostle C. George Mesley gave the dedication sermon. Vernon C. Young is the director of religious education for the stake, and the institute planning committee was Fred W. Burrows, chairman, A. Neal Deaver, and John McArthur. Projectionists were Edna Easter, Marvin McDole, Mrs. George Kelley, Warren West, Lee Hart, and Stele Bryant.

ATTENDS WEST VIRGINIA INSTITUTE

Merle Guthrie, General Church Statistician, attended a district institute at Wellsburg, West Virginia, February 22 and 23. Associated with District Missionary James Menzies, Brother Guthrie taught classes and preached.

Question Time

Question:

Does the fact that an individual was told in his patriarchal blessing that his life would be spared until his work was completed give any indication that it would be a lack of faith on his part to carry insurance for the benefit of his family?
MRS. C.J.H.

Answer:

It should not be considered a lack of faith. Insurance is but one of the means whereby such benefit could be provided for his family, and it would seem there would be no greater lack of faith in carrying insurance than there would in making other provisions through savings in some other form.

G. L. DELAPP

Question:

Have we, as men called by God and ordained and therefore having authority to represent him, any right to take, either on their request or our invitation, men of other faiths who have no authority or right to represent Christ whatsoever, into our pulpits to preach?
Ohio W.E.K.

Answer:

Our church stands unique among churches in that it holds a system of gospel truth and ordinances distinct from all others, which system was revealed directly from heaven in original purity and fullness, in substitution of the perverse systems which have arisen since the days of the apostles. To administer that primitive gospel restored in latter days, the Lord delivered from heaven to chosen men by angelic hands the holy priesthood, giving them power and authority to officiate in the preaching of the word, the administering of its ordinances, and in the government of the affairs of the church, which he made the repository and administrator of that gospel.

It is apparent that the divinely appointed and commissioned officers of the church (as it would be in any other organization) are without right to turn any part of the official administration over to anyone who is without official standing within the organization. Any action performed in such a case by an unauthorized person would be without force, nonbinding, and must remain without sanction by the Lord and the church. The rule of consistency applies here.

However, this does not require that our pulpits may not be opened to proper representatives of other movements who may come desiring to set forth their appeals for help in social, charitable, community, educational, and other needs, in which the Saints are concerned in common with their neighbors; or to educators who may offer helpful instruction and counsel to the Saints in such matters as health, economy, obedience to civil law, et cetera. There might be special occasions when those of other faiths could be permitted to state their faith, though the identity of that faith should be clearly expressed. Even a contrast may help clarify the gospel in the minds of members. In all such matters wisdom should govern, and a consistent policy be maintained.

Question:

In my patriarchal blessing I am told that I belong to a certain tribe of Israel. I do not understand this and wish it could be explained.
Ontario Mrs. R.C.

Answer:

In "Evangelists and Patriarchs," etc., by Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, we find the following:

A Word of Caution: In the past some have come for blessing, seeking primarily to find out about their lineage. However, naming of lineage is not the primary function of the blessing. It is more important to be counseled concerning a Christian way of life and to be blessed and dedicated and inspired for such a life than it is to learn about one's far-off ancestry. The naming of lineage must have importance or it would not be provided for. Still it is not the essential feature of the blessing, as it may be omitted entirely. At this point the patriarch is guided by the Spirit. He may or may not name lineage (See Doctrine and Covenants 125:3). And the Saints should understand that failure to name lineage in no way invalidates the blessing.

There is some justification for pride in tribal or family ancestry if it be honorable. But such pride may become bigotry. The Jews at the very time when they were plotting to kill Christ boasted to him that they were "of the seed of Abraham." Paul had a pride in that he was "of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews" (Philippians 3:5). Converted to Christ, all that meant less to him, and he saw that in Christ there "is neither Jew nor Greek," but all are "one in Christ" (Galatians 3:27, 28).

Concerning the twelve tribes of Israel: This subject takes us back to the twelve tribes of Israel. The Jews are of Israel, but not all Israelites are Jews. Judah was one of twelve. The naming of lineage does not as a rule go back of or outside of the twelve tribes. It has been observed that the lineage of Orientals is seldom if ever mentioned in a blessing. Probably that is because such races go back in antiquity too far to be of Hebraic origin.

This matter of Israel is of great importance. God did make covenant with Abraham. In him and his seed the peoples of the earth were to be blessed. The promise has been kept in part—gloriously. From Abraham's seed came the inspired prophets, the apostles of the Christian dispensation, Christ himself, the books of the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, and the Book of Mormon. Not all of these things came from the Jews. And not all of the prophecies concerning Israel have yet been fulfilled.

Value of naming lineage. It may be of comfort and inspiration to some people to feel that they are members of a certain group of the "chosen people" of such distinguished religious history. The matter may also have a forward-looking phase of it, looking forward to the return of Israel and the appointment of inheritances before or during the millennium. The older patriarchs dwelt on that theme. A blessing given by John Lake said: "You belong to the tribe of Ephraim, and when the time comes that the allotments shall be made by Jesus Christ, you shall receive your inheritance with that tribe, and there carry out the purposes of God in the great thousand years." There seems to be scriptural ground for such hope. In Matthew 19:28, it is said that Jesus is to judge the twelve tribes of Israel. (See also Revelation 7:4.) ISRAEL A. SMITH

The Music of the Dance

By Alan D. Tyree

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

THE DANCING QUESTION is still one that commands attention in many Latter Day Saint homes; thus it demands attention from the church as a whole. Even those young people who have no inclination to engage in dancing find its study is included in their school curriculum as a required subject. It has been defended for its social benefits; it has been attacked from a sensual viewpoint; it has always been left to the individual as a matter of his personal stewardship. There is one area of this question which probably has not been previously discussed—the music and its effect upon the dancer.

Really, this should be of prime consideration, for in a study of the history of the dance, one finds that dancing came as a response to the rhythmical aspects of music. As a musician, I believe that if there is anything inherently wrong with dancing, then it must be at least partially the fault of the music.

Anyone who has caught the spirit of the Restoration Movement and experienced somewhat of the purposes that God has in mind for mankind is impressed with the many ways in which man perverts himself and his desires. We so often seek for ends which in reality or in eternity do not exist. The drunk can find nothing more pleasurable than another bottle. The gambler will stake all he has or holds dear for another card or the next race. The business tycoon will inflict poor health upon himself in order to make another million. The father who unwisely loves, who sacrifices all he has in order to spoil his son, thinks that the greatest thing he can do is to make life easier for his son than it was for himself. The "jazz hound," while listening to the latest "terrific" record, is "sent" so far that he more nearly resembles a dope addict or a drunk than a rational human being. These are forms of perversion—seeking to satisfy selfish desires, instead of God's desires. Music can be an instrument of perversion.

SOME MUSIC elevates; some degrades. The soul-stirring music of a worship experience, the driving, forceful beauty of a Beethoven symphony, the cohesive Zionism of a chamber ensemble, the voices of Brother Joseph Luff, or Sister Josephine Mader, or others, as they have sung under the influence of the Spirit of God—these win men's souls to beauty, to truth, to God. These challenge men and women and children, calling forth the best that is within them. But music can take on other forms—serve other masters.

Plato was one of the first to discover this. Realizing that the emotions are susceptible to the suasion of music, he saw great possibilities in the Perfect State's educational system of developing good moral character through the wise use of music and the other arts. "Wrongness of form and the lack of good rhythm, poor use of harmony, are," says Socrates, "fraternal to wrongness of mind and character; and the opposite qualities to the opposite condition—the temperate and good character: fraternal, aye, and copies of them."

Educators have long since been advised of this, and the current studies of leading authorities in psychology confirm Plato's earlier statement. And yet, partially in order to keep the young people out of the taverns and to cut down delinquency, the educators have found it necessary to organize recreation centers which serve as tame night clubs. The "new philosophy" of education proclaims that it is the business of the school, since the home is failing as well as religion to "save souls." This is an admirable ambition, but I very seriously doubt if many souls are going to be saved from the night club by compromising with it.

A RECENT ARTICLE released to the United Press by Dr. Grey Walter, formerly of Kansas City and now of London, England, states that scientists are discovering correlations between types of music and "brain waves." Dr. Walter, famous for his research at the Burden Neurological Institute, says: "There is an intriguing relation between the rhythm of the music, the rhythm of the dance, or the way the pop fans move to it, and the brain waves." He carefully indicated that intelligence had nothing to do with the effect the music had on the brain waves. Dr. Walter also said that he found that closing the eyes changes the rhythm rate of the brain and may explain why jazz fanatics often close their eyes as if in ecstasy as they listen to the music.

Actually, just what all these "brain wave" studies may mean is not certain. Indeed, any direct relationship between the emotions and "brain waves" has yet to be proved, but it has long been known that music "has been an emotional governor for every tribe, nation, and race of people."¹

To illustrate briefly, we can contrast the music which was a part of the American diet during the last war, and the music which appeals to us today. During the war, we were easily swayed by the rapid, energetic, erratic type of music. Jitterbugging came as a natural response to the type of music that was both created and craved for consumption. Today, people demand the ballad, and our hit parade indicates folk songs such as "Shrimp Boats," "Good Night, Irene," et al.

In Communist Russia, where authorities recognize how music may shape the nation, the composers are compelled to write according to a dictated pattern and are forbidden to imitate the current styles of composers of other nations. The psychology of music in Russia is definitely calculated to create a pattern of thinking and action in the minds of the people.

"Music, in many cases—even more than language—functions as a moving and dynamic agent because it meets with little or no intellectual resistance and does not need to appeal to logic or reason to initiate action. . . . It may secure at times an emotional dominance of undesirable aggression and the purely sensual."²

From a further reading of the same source I have observed that in scientific studies of people and their music the world over, it has been proved that sexual activity is generated in direct proportion to the emphasis of rhythm, to the increase of tempo, to the increase of dissonance, to the increase of dynamic intensity, and to the diminution of melody. And thus it is not surprising that we find it historically recorded that there is an increase of illegitimate children following a revival series which employs the highly rhythmical, emotional, and excitable aspects of so-called religion. This includes the attitude of preaching as well as the use of the music in the service.

ACCORDING to one of the leaders in this field of psychological research, the lusty moan of the torch singer, the wail of the trombone in its high register, the "gut-bucket" tone of the tenor saxophone—these and other influences of the modern jazz ensemble are psychologically representative of the mucous and saliva secretions of the body under sexual stimulation.

There is nothing wrong or sinful about sex in its proper relationships, but there is something wrong with music and musical environments which stimulate promiscuous sexual responses. It does make a difference of what music we partake.

It is not like the situation of the person who attends the "strip-tease" show for the excitement which he may get from it. For he goes purposely, knowing why he goes. But these musical effects enter the subcortical (or the relatively uncontrollable) part of the brain and lessen the inhibitions without his apparent knowledge of it. And, unless he has a sound religious background and greater than average will power, his passions rule him.

While teaching a class of young people on one occasion I attempted to illustrate to what extremes some individuals go in their perverted sense of music. Unwisely, I imitated the actions of young men and women, "bop fans," as they listen to their favorite records. I have had ample opportunity to observe their behavior, for I once worked in a music store and became well acquainted with them. Out of its usual surroundings, such action is ridiculous to say the least and caused persons in other church school classes to think perhaps I was having an epileptic fit. But had I been in a small night club such as youngsters often frequent, my behavior would have been quite acceptable.

IT SHOULD make a great deal of difference to Reorganized Latter Day Saints what kind of a musical diet they feed their children. For, whereas the night club is always associated with popular music, bop, and jazz, the church is always connected with classical and sacred music. Classical and sacred music more often than the popular and secular is uplifting. Popular and secular music more often than the classical and sacred is degrading.

For a good, well-rounded musical education, our people should know all music and appreciate it for what it is, not what we think it is. This is not a matter of taste—instead it is a matter of the difference between that which is temporal and that which is eternal or absolute. It is a common belief today that it doesn't make any difference what one believes—that all churches have the same goal, that all roads lead to Rome—each man according to his taste. Reorganized Latter Day Saints revolt at this idea, for they believe it does make a difference what one believes; and this is true in the field of music. The prevalent philosophy here is that it doesn't make any difference what music we like to listen to; it's all according to our taste.

Quite to the contrary, however, it does make a difference what music we like. My music professor was amused at an immature statement I made one day. I had said that I didn't care for Mozart's music. And he wisely replied, "Do you know what you have just done? You haven't judged Mozart, for his music remains the same and stands for what it is. You've just judged yourself, and 'have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.'"

Many of our homes are also found wanting when it comes to the question of music appreciation and dancing. Are we going to sell our spiritual birthrights for a mess of musical pottage and physical pleasure? Many have.

Here is an opportunity for us to build Zion in appreciating the elevating, and casting aside all that tends to degrade.

District Conference Held

OREGON DISTRICT.—The Oregon District spring conference was held February 1, 2, 3, at Portland, Oregon.

The conference opened Friday night at the Central Church of Portland, with classes taught by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Apostle D. O. Chesworth.

Saturday the sessions convened at Washington Hall. Prayer and fellowship meeting was held with Apostle E. J. Gleazer in charge, associated with him were Apostle D. O. Chesworth, District President J. L. Verhei, Elder Miles Whiting, and Elder James Kemp.

The morning classes were taught by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Apostle D. O. Chesworth. The young people of the district, under the leadership of Elder Kieth Kinart, served the noon lunch.

At the district business meeting in the afternoon the following delegates were chosen for General Conference: J. L. Verhei, Effie Verhei, James Kemp, Arthur Gibbs, Elvin Chapman, Roycie Chapman, Harold Carpenter, Leona Carpenter, Robert Taylor, Wanda Taylor, Lloyd Shannon, Leonard Hoisington, Albert Nelson, Nan Nelson, Jack Livingston, P. G. Hager, Lillian Livingston, M. H. Cook, Floyd Whiting, Lloyd Mathison, Virgie Mathison, Ephraim Barnhart, and Elvin Penrod.

It was decided at this meeting to give the reunion committee power to set the date for the Lewis River reunion.

A sack lunch was prepared and served by the women's department of Forest Grove. The concluding service of the day was a sermon by Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

The Sunday services began with prayer and fellowship. Apostle Gleazer was in charge, assisted by Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Bishop Monte Lasater, District President J. L. Verhei, Elder James Kemp, and Lloyd Shannon.

The morning sermon as well as the concluding service of the conference was given by

President at Anniversary Services

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—District officers visited the Follansbee Branch November 10 and 11, and the guest speakers were High Priest Samuel Zonker, Elder Clyde S. Rice and Bishop's Agent Otto Melcher. Evangelist Robert E. Rodgers gave the special prayer at the morning service of November 11 in observance of Armistice Day. Carl Anderson, district church school director, was in charge of the church school hour. Dinner was served in the hall where the meetings were held.

Clyde Zonker, Jr., was ordained to the office of deacon on October 22 at Graceland by Evangelist Roy A. Cheville and Elder Raymond D. Zinser.

Sister Blanche Martin, district women's leader, visited several branches, giving instruction which she received at the Institute in Independence in October. She visited Follansbee, Wellsburg, Bellaire, Wheeling, Glen Easton, Morgantown, and Parkersburg.

Samuel Zonker, Robert E. Rodgers, and Otto Melcher attended services at Parkersburg November 17 and 18, and Brother Rodgers gave several patriarchal blessings. Speakers during the meetings were Brothers Zonker, Rodgers, and Melcher.

The fifty-ninth anniversary of the organization of the West Virginia District was observed December 7, 8, and 9 at Parkersburg, and also at the old Goose Creek Branch where the organization took place. President Israel A. Smith and Apostle Maurice L. Draper were present for the services.

Apostle Draper gave an illustrated lecture on the "Restoration Story" December 7. Following the service a reception was held and everyone was given the opportunity to meet President Smith, as it was his first visit to Parkersburg.

Brother Draper conducted a business meeting December 8, and recommendations for ordination of the following men were approved: James Jeffries, Morgantown, elder; Charles Dueker, Wheeling, elder; George Ries, Wheeling, teacher; William Young, deacon, Wellsburg; Charles Nixon, teacher, Wellsburg; and Melvin Robey, deacon, Wellsburg; Laco Wilson, priest, Follansbee; and Carl Chadwell, deacon, Follansbee.

Twelve delegates to General Conference were elected. They were Elder Wayne Wilson, Evangelist Robert E. Rodgers, Elder Clyde S. Rice, Seventy and Mrs. James Menzies, Bishop's Agent Otto Melcher, High Priest Samuel Zonker, Elder W. A. Schoenian, Elder Willard Allen, Elder Charles Dueker, Elder Samuel Martin, and Sister Margaret Pack.

A Graceland College scholarship fund has been established for worthy young people of the West Virginia District, to be designated as the "George G. Lewis Scholarship Fund."

A committee was appointed, consisting of Lawrence H. Phillips, Sister James Menzies, and Carl Anderson to study ways and means of providing a camp fund for young people of the district to attend the area camp in 1952.

President Israel A. Smith and Apostle Maurice L. Draper were in charge of the priesthood meeting held before the morning prayer service December 9. President Smith delivered the morning sermon. Apostle Draper preached in the afternoon. Soloists during the services were Mrs. Charles DuBois, Mrs. Eva Black, and Miss Peggy Schupbach.

A district council meeting was held in Wheeling on December 15 and 16 to outline the program of work for the officers for the next three months. Meetings were held under the supervision of the district president, Samuel Zonker.

On December 30, Seventy James Menzies, missionary to West Virginia, Ohio, and Pittsburgh Districts, was called to Lacombe, Alberta, Canada, because of the death of his mother, Sister Florence Menzies.

Continuing the policy of visiting a different branch each week end, the district president and counselors met with the Morgantown Branch on January 5 and 6; the Follansbee Branch on January 12 and 13; the Wellsburg Branch on January 19 and 20; and the Moundsville Branch on January 26 and 27.—Reported by MABEL L. SMITH

New Study Course for Women's Group

PAINESVILLE, OHIO.—The annual business meeting was held September 21, and the following officers were elected: Elder H. T. Freeman, pastor; John Hardy, church school director; Dorothy Davidson, secretary; Clifford Buck, treasurer; Mable Bushnell, women's department leader; Lillian Hardy, young people's leader; Dorothy Buck, chorister; Mable Freeman, book steward.

October 4 was the first new church year meeting of the Temple Workers, the women's group of the branch. The new officers began their duties then. "The Angel Message Tracts" is the new study course. Various activities have been held. On November 17, a bazaar was held. Potluck suppers are held for the branch twice a month. A rummage sale was held December 7, and a Thanksgiving program and Christmas dinner were held for the group. Two speakers reported on the Women's Institute held in Independence.

On October 11, the Zion's League held an installation service. The young people have also had a Halloween party, birthday party, and box social.

A Christmas program was presented by the church school members December 23, under the leadership of Dorothy Buck.—Reported by GLADYS WEBSTER

Building Fund Is Branch Project

DU BOIS, PENNSYLVANIA.—Under the leadership of Elder Thomas Freeland, pastor, the mission has been working to raise funds to build a new church. The women's department has been sponsoring projects for the building fund, and approximately $1,000 has been raised for the purchase of a lot.

Bishop's Agent Clarence Winship held a two-day conference, using slides and flannel-graph teaching the financial law, November 17 and 18.

The church school under the supervision of Vernon Wilson presented the play, "The Christmas Story." The white gift service was also held at Christmas, and a special offering for the building fund was collected.

The New Year's watch service was held with a special prayer circle at midnight.

David Freeland was home from Graceland over the holidays.

Members of the priesthood who visited the branch were Priest William Horn of State College; Elders Donald Ross, Sr., and Donald Ross, Jr., of Pittsburgh; Elder Sam Winship, Elder Arthur Warner, and Priest Barker of Fayette City; and Elder Earl Brennan of Punxsutawney.—Reported by BESSIE ROSS WILSON

Utah District Women's Institute

Reported by Lara Louise Jones

A GOOD INVESTMENT in your home was the advertising forerunner of the Utah District women's institute. Women from Provo and Ogden, Utah, and Malad, Idaho, who made advance arrangements for the care of their families and came to join with the women of Salt Lake City January 26 and 27 found that the two-day meeting lived up to the advance advertising. Beginning with a truly beautiful worship service on Saturday morning, where an abundance of God's Spirit was present, through every meeting flowed rich fellowship, inspirational teaching, and answers to many specific problems.

Guest speaker at the institute was Mrs. Alice Burgess of the General Women's Council. Many of the women felt that they already knew her for they had used her quarterlies. She was particularly well qualified, not from her work with women on the General Church level, but also from the richness of her experiences as a homemaker, mother, and grandmother. She brought a warmth and humor into the sessions that made each class a vital experience.

FIFTY-FIVE women registered for the institute, which was under the supervision of Mrs. Adah Mueller, Utah District women's supervisor. The theme for the institute was "Let us liken our lives to the beautiful garden of prayer." This theme was memorably introduced at the Saturday morning worship service, first meeting of the series. A beautiful setting of red and white carnations and tall tapers directed all eyes and thoughts to the altar with its picture of Christ in the Garden. Beautiful violin and piano music added much to this service.

A get-acquainted period followed, during which time the women met Mrs. Burgess from Independence; Russell F. Ralston, President of Seventy; and the following women's department leaders: Mrs. June Goodman, Provo; Mrs. Goldie Egan, Salt Lake City; Mrs. Nada Silverster, Ogden; and Mrs. Ella Thomas, Malad.

The opening class was "The Challenge of the Restoration for the Women of Today." Mrs. Burgess reminded her listeners that part of the philosophy of Christ was that every personality has somewhere the divine spark. During this session the women were made aware of the important role they play in religion. Examples were given of outstanding women in Bible times and in the early days of the Restoration. With such inspiration the women of today should feel keenly their sense of responsibility and a challenge to carry forward the important work that only they can do!

At noon a buffet luncheon was served downstairs. After the meal a capable crew of men took over the dishwashing and clearing up.

The subject for the first afternoon class was "Centering My Children's Lives in the Church." Mrs. Burgess said that mothers could not accomplish this unless they truly centered their lives in the church without reservation. She stressed the importance of taking children to church as soon as they are old enough to go at all, of teaching them reverence and the acts of worship at an early age (such as kneeling at family prayer and bowing the head when grace is said), and of the responsibility of preparing them for baptism. Finding God is the only real security children can be given in a changing world.

A ROUND table discussion on "women's work in the branch and district" followed. In her first class Mrs. Burgess pictured for her listeners a "woman of stature"—reliable, wise, discreet, understanding, dependable. Then she reminded them that these were the qualifications for leadership in women's work. Such a woman not only could inspire and uplift her family to Zion living, but could be of inestimable value in furthering the work of the branch and district. The discussion concluded on the thought that in order to work successfully as local women's groups it is necessary that all work together in harmony with the laws of the church.

On Saturday evening ten men volunteered to cook and serve the dinner without feminine assistance. The piece de resistance was a meat loaf containing beef, pork, venison, and elk; it was fittingly dubbed "Mongrel Meat Loaf." Russell Ralston, minister in charge, revealed a new side of his versatile nature when unaided and without an apron he baked more than 150 delicious biscuits and didn't get a single smudge of flour on his dark trousers. Newcomer Bob Fredenberg (formerly of Independence) proved to be a talented man with the salad bowl; while Jim Everett, resplendent in a white coat, presided over the punch bowl. The food was delicious, and the women were amazed at the quiet efficiency with which the men worked.

Realizing that the men had dipped into their own pockets to buy the food, the women took up a freewill offering to help with these expenses. Upon being presented the money, the men conferred and decided to donate the entire sum to the women's institute fund.

After dinner Mrs. Burgess conducted an interesting class on the techniques and objectives of friendly visiting. She said that one of the main purposes of this program is for the women to keep in touch with each family of the branch so that in times of illness, death, or other emergencies they are able to offer needed assistance. There are times of family rejoicing also when the interest and congratulations of one's fellow church members is strengthening. Again during this session Mrs. Burgess reminded her listeners that the "woman of stature" could serve well in this capacity, for the friendly visitor must be understanding, wise, and discreet as well as friendly.

THE FIRST activity on Sunday was a consecration service. An organ prelude, lighted tapers, and an altar picture of Christ helped to create an atmosphere of worship. A duet, "Heed the Voice," was sung by Mrs. Burgess and Russell F. Ralston.

District President Jim Everett gave a short talk on the real meaning of prayer. He said that wishes are wasted effort and that sometimes prayers are merely "wishing sessions" in which "we wish God would change us." Prayer, to be effective, should be the first step in action. Following the singing of a hymn by the congregation, short prayers were offered by a number of women. Prior to the testimonies a talk was given in which the listeners were reminded that if they dedicate themselves to Christ, that dedication should be made on the basis of what they would do immediately and what they should strive to do in the future. Short dedicatory testimonies followed.

During the church school hour Mrs. Burgess conducted a class for women on the financial program. She stated that women administer and spend from 75 to 80 per cent of the family income. She talked of their responsibility to educate themselves wisely so that they can give stability and peace to their homes. She said that thrift and good management are a part of religion. Giving children a feeling of co-ownership in family possessions and including them in family budgeting counsels will help to give them a feeling of responsibility regarding money. Being kind to a child does not include a purchase for him that is not within the family's means. Overspending and overindulgence are merely expressions of personal pride. A brief question and answer period followed, after which Mrs. Burgess closed the service with a brief address.

At 11:00 o'clock a solo, "Rest in the Lord," was sung by Mrs. Burgess. In his sermon, Elder Everett told of the important place held by various women in biblical history. He said the Bible records that the first witness for Christ was a woman, and that a woman was the first to catch the vision of atonement. Coming down to the present time Mr. Everett spoke of churches in the Utah area, where in many cases women alone had carried on capably until suitable priesthood leadership could be provided. He pointed out that the tools of service are increasing and challenged his listeners to press forward for the high mark and calling of Jesus Christ.

IT WOULD be impossible to list all of the people whose efforts made this women's institute such a success. On the planning level Mrs. Adah Mueller, together with Elder Everett and his counselors, Richard Nies and Hilton Williams, functioned well. Advertising and the printing of programs was handled by Mr. Nies. Ivan Vallier helped with registrations. Music was furnished by Kenneth Walden (violin), Florence Raiston, Elizabeth Fife, Goldie Egan, and Eliza Ward. Other men who helped with the dinner were Hilton Williams, Marvin Jones, Wendell Silvester, Smith Ridgeway, Lavon Herbert, Orville Richards, and James Wardle. Gretchen Wardle arranged for sleeping quarters for out-of-town guests. Much credit also should go to the many husbands, daughters, and sons who stayed at home to care for families so that women could attend the institute.

The Seeds of Faith

By Grace E. Crocker

A FLOWER in full blossom is a thing of beauty. But such beauty does not spring out of mid-air. It was planted as a tiny seed by someone who cared. The Heavenly Father sent sunshine and rain to nurture this seed until one day it pushed itself upward, broke through the ground, and was on its way to becoming a plant. It had to have proper care, or it would never have blossomed into a flower. The laws of God prevail, and only as we work in harmony with them can we expect them to tap the spiritual roots of our soul.

Faith is much like the flower. It is planted as a tiny seed within us by someone who cares very much—our Heavenly Father. It must be nurtured or it will die. The joy that comes to us when we work and pray with others, when we know of a surety that "the fellowship of kindred minds is like to that above" helps our faith to grow. Byron said, "All those who would win joy must share it; happiness was born a twin."

But we need more than joy. We need responsibilities, for through them and the faith of others in us we begin to grow. We need to become discontented in the sense that we do something to improve our lives. And when things come that are not easy to understand we need to remember that the Master has said, "Fear not." The unpleasant experiences of our lives are never so important as what we do about them.

In the book Magnificent Obsession by Lloyd Douglas we see the seed of a great surgeon sown within the life of Bobby Merrick—young, rich, carefree, and usually drunk. It took the death of another man, a famous brain surgeon, to awaken the seed within him. Here was a boy who realized that what he had done was not so important as what he did in the future. And so he consecrated his life to studying medicine and to living as the Master Physician had lived and taught others to live.

The gospel is the keynote of the faith in our lives, and the way in which we live the gospel taps the roots of our faith so that the power of God is able to work with us in love and understanding. Then we begin to grow.

THERE is the faith of a young soldier in Korea that I would like to tell you about. He writes:

I know no fear over here, for I have seen the hand of God directing many things that have happened to me. That is why I looked forward to being here. God had a purpose, and I trust in him. Part of the purpose I see, for here I have been able to do the studying I never would have done otherwise. I have gained a deeper love and understanding of humanity, regardless of race. My mind is clearer than ever before, and I am just beginning to grow spiritually.

Here, out of an experience from which self-pity might have been the result, we find the birth of a deep faith in the purposes of God. Instead of prejudice, this soldier has seen the beauty of the Christ in the lives of other peoples.

There is Mary, a music director, who because of her faith drives forty miles to church each Sunday that she might share her talents.

There is Bob, a religious education director, who was able to give up some of the temptations of life because of the faith of others in him. He smoked and often drank; he was out fishing the Sunday morning the branch elected him director. Here the seed of faith opened, for he decided that if the people had that much confidence in him, he would do something about his life.

There are the Jacksons who for two years opened their home that the Saints might have a place to meet on Sundays. Here a little group of seventeen started out in faith, and one year later was organized into a mission. Two years later they bought a lot and now are well on the way to building a church. They have grown from an average attendance of seventeen to fifty. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for."

There is Brother Storm who lives forty miles from church on unpaved roads, yet even when it is snowing he drives to services. He has faith enough to come, and because of his faith others are strengthened.

There is Sister Newman, an older woman, who keeps smiling through the heat of reunion. Those who have known her for years say, "We never heard her complain." Faith has given her a surety about life, and no matter what happens she sees the good and goes on from there.

There is Grandma Morris who is in her eighties (when most people would be settling down to a comfortable rocking chair by the fire). She is women's leader of a group. At reunion she is one of the most ambitious workers when it's time for her group to help in the kitchen. Her faith is a living thing, and she finds happiness in sharing it with others.

Faith and what it can mean in our lives is largely up to us. I remember what I heard Dr. Cheville say one day as I sat in religion class, "Faith is meaningful only as interpreted in the world in which we are functioning." And somehow I believe that how big our world is may depend on how deep and alive our faith is.

The Expanding Universe

By Bernard Butterworth

And worlds without number have I created . . . for behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power; and there are many also which now stand, and numberless are they unto man; . . . The heavens they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine.

—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21, 23

IT IS DIFFICULT for us sometimes to appreciate the wisdom of men who lived a century ago but who have lived in advance of their time in regard to their thinking. The last hundred years have brought outstanding and phenomenal advancements in the physical and natural sciences. Coupled with this advance has been improvements in means of communication which make dissemination of this information available to the common man. Our vast background of information at times obscures our appreciation of the work of men who anticipated their age.

The revelation, as recorded in Section 22 of our Doctrine and Covenants, must have sounded strange indeed to the people at the time it was given. Nothing was known then about stellar systems. It was incredible that anyone in 1830 would imagine the earth as a mere speck in space. Yet the prophecy suggested that, and later investigation is finding it to be true.

The expanding universe theory is relatively new. Astronomers in 1830 did not think in terms of outer space or systems of stars. In fact, it was not until the middle of the century that distances to stars could be determined. And yet Joseph Smith spoke of countless worlds, both past and present, and many heavens—numberless to men. The invention of such giant eyes of the sky as the one-hundred-inch telescope on Mount Wilson and the enormous two-hundred-inch reflector telescope on Palomar Mountain is bringing to light facts which are vindicating the utterances of the youthful leader of the Restoration Movement.

ASTRONOMY, like so many of man's creations, began in a homocentric world. Man was all-important. Around him was the earth, and over him bent the sky full of stars which nightly rose and set and moved westward with the changing seasons. Ptolemy and Hipparchus upheld a geocentric view—that the earth was the center of the universe—and that the sun and planets were revolving around it. Later Copernicus established the heliocentric view—that the sun is the center with the earth and planets doing the revolving. Each of these advancements provided solutions to unanswered questions. Newton's laws of motion and gravitation further aided in the discovery of the natural laws. Emphasis was shifted gradually from the earth to the solar system. Later, details of stellar systems began to appear. The motion of the sun in star fields, double stars, clusters of stars, and galaxies aroused interest in regions beyond the solar system.

Only recently, with the aid of the spectroscope, photographic plate, photocell, and larger and more penetrating telescopic power, we have been able to piece together the picture of our own Milky Way system. The difficulty lies in the fact that we are inside the system looking out. The job of determining what the system looks like is a problem similar to a worm inside an apple trying to picture what the apple looks like to those on the outside. But man, using his instruments, counting stars in all directions, studying spectra of those stars which reveal motions by the Doppler shift, came up with some important facts. Amazing as it may seem, the sun is no longer the center of the universe, but is merely a medium-sized star in the vast Milky Way galaxy. In fact it isn't even in the center of the galaxy, but is some 30,000 light-years from the center. Larger and more powerful telescopes have found other galaxies similar to the Milky Way. It was found that our galaxy which measures some 100,000 light-years across, is one of a system of galaxies which operates on the same fundamental laws of motion as found in the solar system. Current studies with the two-hundred-inch telescope on Palomar Mountain suggest the possibility of clusters of galaxies!

EVIDENCES from spectral studies indicate that each of these galaxies is speeding away from the others at tremendous speeds. This suggests that the universe is expanding and that this expansion has been going on for millions of years. Theories are being worked out. The problems are largely mathematical. Already the great distances stagger us. No matter how far out in space we look, we continue to find stars and star systems. We are beginning to picture a universe without end. We can now only slightly understand the words of that revelation in which the Creator speaking to Moses said:

The heavens they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.

Joseph Smith could have perceived this information only by divine revelation.

Earlier in the revelation Moses cast his eyes and beheld the earth:

and he beheld many lands, and each land was called earth; and there were inhabitants on the face thereof . . . and Moses called upon God, saying, Tell me I pray thee, why these things are so . . . and the Lord said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things . . . and worlds without number have I created, . . . but only an account of this earth and inhabitants thereof, give I unto you; for behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power; and there are many also which now stand and numberless are they unto man.

We have long been speculating as to whether life exists on other planets. Most of our contemplations, however, have been restricted to our solar system, which, with the exception of the earth and possibly Mars, barred the possibility of life. Recent advancements in the study of star systems reopens that speculation. There are vast numbers of suns with their planetary systems. Any number of these could possibly contain planets which fall within the exact conditions necessary to support life.

METICULOUSLY science continues its probing—working with precision instruments and complicated calculations. Many things must remain hypothetical. Many theories have been worked out already with great precision and mathematical accuracy. These theories can be defended by facts. The test of these decisions rests with time. The decisions are valid only if they explain the present problems and also stand the test of what future discovery will reveal. In any event, we are learning of the vastness of our universe and of its uniformity in the structure of matter. Gradually genius is confirming some of the things revealed to Joseph Smith over one hundred and thirty years ago. This is another test of the divinity of his work—time vindicating the prophet.

The most significant part of the revelation lies in its dramatic climax. God lays before us the grandeur of his creation—a vastness inconceivable to the human mind. Yet, all this glory centers in us. “There is no end to my works, neither to my words for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.” The theory of a universe, operating in harmony with physical laws, expanding to produce new worlds, or contracting to begin the process anew is still in the investigational stages. This need not concern us basically. Those minds which have been orderly arranged to such matters will keep us informed of their findings. Our minds, however, must be turned to our purpose in creation. God has placed us on this massive sphere with the great potential of earning for ourselves an eternal life with him. In this universe so great, we cannot afford to be small and insignificant; we must work diligently to enlarge our understanding. The challenge of God in us adds to our appreciation of him. A Creator of universes incorporating law, beauty, truth, and intelligence—this is the God I worship.

Sightless—She Brings Music to Many

THE PEOPLE of Macon, Missouri, smiled as the music from the organ drifted out on the crisp December air. The sound of Christmas carols created a feeling of good will to the harried shoppers. The music came from the second floor of a building on the main street of Macon, where the offices of Dr. M. E. Walker, osteopath, were located. Adjoining the professional office was the apartment of the doctor and his wife, Mrs. Thena Thomas Walker. Mrs. Walker was the organist whose music was heard in the downtown shopping section of Macon during the Christmas season.

This would not be a very unusual story were it not for the fact that Dr. Walker, osteopath, was blind at birth, and his wife Thena has been blind since she was fourteen. An automobile accident resulted in the loss of Thena Walker's sight. Yet now in her thirties she enjoys a rich full life, is independent in her radio career, and has made over forty public speaking engagements in the past year.

Mrs. Walker's natural abilities have played a major part in her conquest of a handicap. Yet she asserts that her greatest inspiration came from her husband whose philosophy was "Never let anyone tell you that you can't do anything, Thena." Dr. Walker encouraged his wife's interest in music, and two and a half years ago had a Hammond electric organ installed in their apartment. He purchased a tape recorder so that Mrs. Walker, who has never taken music lessons, could learn the melody of songs that were recorded from radio broadcasts.

Mrs. Walker lives alone in her apartment now, as Dr. Walker died in November. She does all her housework, conducts a radio program without any help, and solicits advertising for her sponsors.

A direct telephone line to the radio station KNCM in Moberly, Missouri, connects her living room to the studio. She gave a thirteen-week hourly series of organ programs before Christmas, and is now giving a spring series.

MRS. WALKER is not completely alone, however. Nicky, her cream-colored collie and German shepherd dog, is her constant companion. Nicky, a leader dog, was trained in Rochester, Michigan, and has been with Mrs. Walker for the past five years. The dog is a little over seven years old, and is perhaps one of the few canines who is a regular member of a congregation of the Reorganized Church. Nicky has even attended General Conference.

Mrs. Walker is fortunate in that she has the Book of Mormon and the Bible in Braille. She feels that her ability to face obstacles has been from the source of strength she has found in her faith in God. Courageous, happy, and useful is the life of Mrs. Thena Walker whose talents have brought music to many.—By BARBARA PEAVY parts of the human body. You'll be interested in knowing that some of them were purchased from funds of the past three 'San Days' of the General Church." I saw life-size, and larger, models of the heart, the eyes, the brain, skull, and torso, all with movable parts. Such lifelike visual aids! I wondered what the teachers did before they could purchase them.

Another feature that was interesting to me was a large long room with quite a number of hospital beds. At one end observation bleachers were arranged so students could see over each others' shoulders. "This is the nursing arts laboratory. There are different kinds of beds here, two-crank and three-crank, giving the girls experience with both kinds. And notice this end of the room." We walked to the other end. "Here is the utility room," she said pointing out one small section with supplies, "the drug room, the kitchen, the linen closet, and the dressing room." For each she indicated a small section equipped in such a way that the student nurses can have experience in using standard hospital equipment before they ever go out on the hospital floors.

I WAS amazed at the completeness and efficiency of the entire school and living quarters. There was the dining room for the nurses; their own personal laundry room; an ironing room; a lounge with a baby grand piano, a record player, and a fine large television set, which was the result of combining several cash gifts to the girls themselves. I saw the newly decorated rooms, the attractive blond furniture, the sunny recreation room, and the library.

"We have definite needs, however, which must yet be supplied," my guide smiled. "One of them is more room and enlarged equipment for recreation." I nodded, realizing that one hundred girls would fill many times over the facilities I had seen for such.

I was proud that the college embodied one of our church institutions, and I sensed the responsibility of all of us in sustaining it. That's what the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing Day is for. "San Day" is the one day of the year when we can show our personal interest in this college and the service it brings to the cause of kingdom-building. On April 27 in all the branches of the church, we can bring our individual offerings and know that they will be used to enlarge the facilities for and improve the training that these young Zion-builders shall receive as they learn to minister efficiently to those in need.

Requests for Prayers

Viola Capellen, Lamoni, Iowa, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her children, particularly for her son in Germany.

Mrs. Jess D. Henson, Box 382, Rankin, Illinois, requests prayers for her three-year-old granddaughter, Kathy Ann Henson, who has not been able to hear since she has had pneumonia and whooping cough. Being deaf she has not learned to talk either.

Mrs. Arthur Matthews, Route 2, West Branch, Michigan, requests prayers for the spiritual and physical welfare of her father, Eber Goheen, who is a patient at Gladwin Hospital. He has both legs broken.

Mrs. Iona Dustin, Rural Route 1, Weyerhauser, Wisconsin, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Wheeler, and family, who recently joined the church.

Prayers are requested by Mrs. Marie Anderson, Box 71, Davilla, Texas, for her mother, Mrs. M. B. Keith, who is suffering with rheumatism and has been bedfast the last few weeks with flu, and for her five-year-old grandson who, because he cannot hear well, is slow in learning to talk. They are isolated members and will appreciate hearing from other Herald readers.

WEDDINGS

Grover-Prince

Helen Marie Prince of St. Louis, Missouri, granddaughter of Mrs. G. M. Knight of Mill Spring, Missouri, and Robert J. Grover of Mill Spring were married February 19. They are making their home in Mill Spring.

Gurwell-Schneider

Erma Schneider, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Schneider of Loveland, Colorado, and John Gurwell, son of Elder and Mrs. K. S. Gurwell of Loveland, were married February 10 at the Reorganized Church in Fort Collins, Colorado, Elder Gurwell officiating. They are making their home in Kingsville, Texas, where Mr. Gurwell is stationed with the Navy.

Bayless-Snively

Mary Ellen Snively, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Frank Snively, and J. C. Bayless, son of Mr. and Mrs. Cleo Bayless, were married February 22 in Tulare, California. The bride's father performed the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Visalia, California.

DuRocher-McQueen

Mildred Virginia McQueen and Robert J. DuRocher were married February 28 at the Reorganized Church by the bride's uncle, E. B. Sherman. The bride, a graduate of Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing, is employed at the Veterans' Hospital in Biloxi, Mississippi. The groom is an electrician at the veterans' facilities. They are making their home in Biloxi.

BIRTHS

A son, Tommy Allen, was born on December 12 to Elder and Mrs. Edwin C. Kent of St. Louis, Missouri. He was blessed by Elder Ralph Briggs. Elder Kent is pastor of the Brentwood, Missouri, Branch.

A son, Randall Mark, was born January 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Roy M. Smith of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Mrs. Smith was the former Gerry Metcalf. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

A daughter, Jo Ann, was born on February 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Darmon of Independence, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence D. Pack of Beckley, West Virginia, announce the birth of a son, Jon Stephen, born February 1. Mrs. Pack is the former Frances Leise of Albion, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy M. Smith of Minneapolis, Minnesota, announce the birth of a son, Randall Mark, born January 6. Mrs. Smith is the former Gerry Metcalf. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

A son, Ricky Lynn, was born on February 4 to Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Corbett of Osborne, Kansas. He was blessed on February 24 by Elder H. F. Chapin.

A daughter, Peggy Jo-Ann, was born on February 13 to Mr. and Mrs. John A. Grant of Detroit, Michigan. Mrs. Grant is the former Carole Ross. Mr. Grant is in the Mediterranean with the United States Navy.

DEATHS

ANDERSON.—Eva, daughter of John and Susan Whitesel, was born September 27, 1860, in Grant County, Wisconsin, and died January 8, 1952, at her home in Excelsior, Wisconsin. She was married on April 20, 1879, to John W. Anderson; three children were born to them. Her husband and a son, Theodore, preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 15, 1892.

Surviving are a son, William, of Rock Falls, Illinois; a daughter, Phoebe Harwood of Excelsior, Wisconsin; ten grandchildren; twenty-three great-grandchildren; and two great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the church in Excelsior, Elders Philip Davenport and Howard Sheffield officiating. Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery.

BROONER.—Velma Edna, daughter of John A. and Mable Waterman, was born August 31, 1897, at Logan, Iowa, and died February 15, 1952, at Des Moines, Iowa. On August 29, 1929, she was married to William H. Brooner, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth.

Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, Marilyn; a son, Keith; her mother of Logan; two sisters: Mrs. L. M. Spence of Council Bluffs and Mrs. Franklyn Weddle of Independence, Missouri; and two brothers: Carroll Waterman of Logan and Orville Waterman of Persia, Iowa. Funeral services were held at Dallas Center, Iowa, Elder Herbert Scott officiating. Burial was in the Logan cemetery.

GRAY.—Ada May, daughter of Dudley and Sarah Emerson Closson; was born March 25, 1865, at Sedgwick, Maine, and died February 13, 1952, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Austin Saunders in Ellsworth, Maine. She was married on July 19, 1884. Her husband and two daughters preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 12, 1913, and served as clerk of Sargentville Branch for thirty-five years.

Surviving are four daughters and a foster daughter: Mrs. Lura Black of Surry, Maine; Mrs. Masie Closson of North Bluehill, Maine; Mrs. Alta Saunders of Ellsworth; Mrs. Beulah Filous of Detroit, Michigan; and Mrs. Gladys Flannery of North Penobscot, Maine; twenty grandchildren; and twenty-seven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Sedgwick, Elder Ray Ashenhurst officiating. Burial was in Walker's Cemetery, Brooksville, Maine.

WINSHIP.—Jesse B., died February 25, 1952, at Baltimore, Maryland, at the age of seventy-five. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since he was thirteen and held the office of teacher at the time of his death.

He is survived by his wife, Blanche Heeter Winship; two sons: Robert H. of Yakima, Washington, and Frank L. of Baltimore; a sister, Mary Givens of Baltimore; and two brothers: Sam of Fayette City, Pennsylvania, and Bob of Lock Four, Pennsylvania.

WOOD.—George Elias, son of Henderson M. and Nancy Ann Wood, was born December 12, 1874, at Woodbine, Iowa, and died February 1, 1952, at his home in Woodbine. On March 12, 1907, he was married to Myrtle Shundlemire; five children were born to them. His lifelong occupation was farming. Since November 4, 1917, he had been a member of the Reorganized Church.

Besides his wife he leaves two daughters: Lucy Wagner of Woodbine and Florence Vanderpool of Albert City; three sons: Fred James of Marathon; Raymond Lester of Storm Lake; and Frank Elias of Neola, Iowa; and twenty-two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Woodbine, Elders Francis Harper and E. L. Edwards officiating. Interment was in Bigler's Grove Cemetery.

Miss Betty Bills, student nurse at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, was one of the six queens chosen at the fiftieth anniversary celebration of Kansas City's American Royal Live Stock Exhibition last year. A significant fact was that she reigned as queen for one day in that event. April 27 is the day when each student nurse at the "San" is Queen for a Day, sponsored by each church member.

Foundations of Zion

By Frederick M. Smith

This 87-page paper-bound text contains a series of radio addresses delivered in 1938. Into them has gone much of the basic philosophy of our stewardship program. Some of the topics are "Social Themes in Jewish and Christian Law," "Problems of Capital and Labor," and "Laws of the New Jerusalem." Prepared especially for study in priesthood groups, church school classes, as well as for personal meditation.

* THE DOG

A cheerful dog has taken up a station on the main street. He likes people and always returns a lick of the hand for a friendly pat on his head. He has conceived the idea that it is meritorious to chase cars from the street. They are always coming, and he always chases them away. It is an exhilarating and noble sport. One of his companions, engaged in that same sport, was killed the other day, and his crushed body lay in the street until a city employee came and removed it. But this dog learned nothing from the lesson. He will never be able to do much thinking about the utility of chasing cars. We smile at the poor dog. . . . But we, too, engage in the game of life, and we never stop to think how useful some phases of it are. We do them, we know not why. It is an exhilarating and noble sport. We see some of our companions crushed, but we learn nothing from their tragic experiences. We are brave—we are braver than wise—as we play the game of life. The machines are too fast for us, and may some day exterminate us. But there will always be people willing to play the game. . . . Sometime there will be a people who will learn that God has a better plan for his children—a kingdom to build.

* KNOW YOUR MAN

The visitor to the club had a figure like a duck. He seemed a dull, unimaginative sort of man. His face was stolid and expressionless. He never said anything, never registered any excitement or interest. We sometimes wondered why he came, and what he got out of the meetings.

At our dinner meetings we sat four to a table, and one day he came to ours. Something was said that started a conversation, and he took part in it. He was well informed and talked fluently. His eyes sparkled with interest. In a moment he revealed himself as a very different kind of man than we had supposed him to be. We were delighted with him. How easily we underestimate other people! How careful we ought to be. How long we should reserve judgment.

When you pass a ship at sea, you know nothing of the ports it has visited nor of the cargo it bears. You see the outside only, battered by storms, dark with sea and weather. Only when you know the ship, read its log, and meet its captain, do you know what kind of ship it is.

People are like that too.

* THE ANIMALS

Now a big manufacturer is featuring "the poodle skirt" for teen-age girls. There has already been too much emphasis on the pooch look for bobby-soxers. The pony tail hair-do didn't help matters. What are they trying to do to our children?

As Job inquired (18:3), "Wherefore are we counted as beasts?" Then there is Joaquin Miller's line, "A brother to the ox" in the famous "Man With a Hoe."

Perhaps, in the words of the proverb, "It is best to let sleeping dogs lie." . . . Oh, this is just Uncle Towser, wanting to know a few things.

BUILDING PLANS DISCUSSED

President W. Wallace Smith, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and Henry Livingston met with a delegation from Dallas, Texas, to discuss the possibility of building a new church on the lot which the Saints have purchased in Trinity Heights in Dallas. The officials have expressed appreciation to the committee composed of Hal Davenport, Henry Williams, and Glen Fordham who made the trip from Texas to Independence to discuss the matter.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS PREACHES

President F. Henry Edwards preached at Bennington Heights in Kansas City, Missouri, at the Sunday morning service March 9. The Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Council of Twelve are meeting in Joint Council in preparation for the General Conference.

YOUTH SERVICES AT CONFERENCE

Three special programs will be featured each day for young people at General Conference. They will all be held at West College church, with the exception of the closing fellowship service on Sunday morning, April 6, which will be held at the Kansas Street church. In addition to the classes for young people, a class for young adults will also be held, instructed by Dr. Roy A. Cheville.

The classes for young people begin each morning at ten o'clock with a panel on "My Vocation and the Church," and will feature people who are making contributions to the church as well as being successful in their vocations. Following this a class will be held with representatives of the quorums of the church speaking and answering questions on the programs and objectives of the church for the next ten years. Each evening, following the regular preaching hour, a special young people's program will be held.

Daily classes will also be held for junior high leaders, including Scout workers, and Orioles, taught by Lee Hart; Zion's League leaders, taught by Carl Mesle; and youth camp workers, taught by Lyle Woodstock.

PREACHES IN MEDOC AND BUTLER

Apostle D. O. Chesworth preached in Medoc and Butler, Missouri, March 9. He preached at the morning hour in Medoc, and was present in Butler in the evening, and preached following an ordination service where six men were ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood.

AUSTRALIAN SAINTS TO CONFERENCE

Evangelist and Sister J. Swain, Sister Ruth Hendricks, and Sister Alfred Poole have arrived in Independence from Australia to attend General Conference. Brother Victor Alberts and Norman Smith will fly from Sydney, Australia. Apostle Roscoe Davey and family with two Australian young people are en route via England. The two young people, Barry Fuller and Jo Parks, plan to attend Graceland next year.

RECEPTION TO BE HELD

A reception will be held Wednesday, April 2, in the basement of the Stone Church for women who are participating in Girls' Work. The reception is planned for General Conference visitors, and will be handled by women of Independence, directed by Mrs. Helen Elledge.

HISTORIAN IN KANSAS

Elder John Blackmore, General Church Historian, preached at Topeka, Kansas, March 9. He also spoke at Lawrence, Kansas, March 16.

DR. GUSTAV A. PLATZ has been a member of the Graceland faculty in the science division since the fall of 1920 with the exception of three years for advanced study.

Born in Burlington, Iowa, in 1885, Dr. Platz moved with his family to Schuyler, Nebraska, at the age of one and was reared on an acreage about two miles out of Schuyler. He was graduated from high school there in 1904, and then taught in a country school near by for three years, after which he moved to Scottsbluff County on a homestead and taught school, as well as working at other odd jobs. In 1912 he returned to eastern Nebraska and taught school for another three years before coming to Graceland in 1916 as a student. After graduating from Graceland in 1918, he continued his studies at the University of Iowa and the University of Nebraska, receiving his bachelor's degree in 1920 with a major in education and a minor in science. He received his master's degree from Iowa State College in 1924 and his doctorate in 1928, his major being in the field of plant pathology. He is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Iowa Academy of Science.

Dr. Platz is a charter member of Graceland's scholastic honor society, Lambda Delta Sigma. While at Iowa State College he became a member of Gamma Sigma Delta, an honorary agriculture society; Phi Kappa Phi, a scholastic honor society; and Sigma Xi, an honorary science society.

On December 27, 1913, Dr. Platz joined the Reorganized Latter Day Saints Church at Omaha, Nebraska. He was ordained a teacher on November 30, 1919, an elder on February 5, 1922, and a high priest on August 2, 1931. Since 1931 he has been a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council, and for a number of years has taught college and high school students in the Lamoni church school. He was superintendent of the church school in 1928-29.

In June of 1920, he married Nellie L. Grover of Omaha, Nebraska. They have two girls, Mary Louise and Amy Grace.

Within the last several years Dr. Platz has completed an attractive brick home which he has largely built by himself. His main hobby is gardening.

Regarding the Use of the Church Seal

Questions as to various uses made or desired to be made of what has been called the "church seal" come along almost perennially. A few years ago a question as to the existence of such a seal was raised. I prepared an editorial on the subject which was published in the Herald for March 29, 1947. It was as follows:

The Church Seal

Having occasion to look up our records as to the Church Seal, I find that on April 8, 1874, a "committee of three was appointed to draft a style and form of church seal"; that "on the same day the committee reported a design for the church seal, with legend, date, and motto as follows:

"Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Emblem, a lion and a lamb lying down at rest. Motto, "Peace." "Incorporated 1872." The report was adopted, and the committee empowered to purchase the seal.

In 1917 General Conference Minutes, we find:

Adoption of the following was moved and seconded:

Moved to amend as follows General Conference Resolution No. 163, referring to the church seal.

Third paragraph, second line, insert, "a child" after emblem, and cross out, "lying down at rest," following the word "lamb."

Third line same paragraph insert "and 1891" after "Incorporated 1872."

Paragraph as amended will read, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Emblem, a child, a lion and a lamb. Motto, 'Peace.' Incorporated 1872 and 1891."

A motion to refer to the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with power to act was adopted.

We have not found anything to show what the quorums named did under their "power to act," though we may suppose that the design used now for many years was produced by them.

The church was incorporated in Illinois in 1872. That corporation still maintains perpetual legal existence. In 1891 the church in Iowa was incorporated in that state. And it is obvious that the leading men were of the opinion that the second (Iowa) incorporation superseded the former (Illinois). That may have been the intention of the church administrative officers, though there have developed many legal difficulties since then, not essential to explain in this article.

The Iowa corporation being limited to fifty years by its terms, as also by the law of that state, it became necessary to reincorporate in Iowa in 1941, which was done.

It is apparent that at some more recent time the seal now used on our letter heads has been modified, as it obviously does not comply with the specifications set out in the action of the church in 1871 or in the proposed action in 1917. The present seal was not intended apparently for use as a corporation seal, but simply as a "church seal," although there is no record of the seal of present design ever having been adopted by official action.

It does not appear that a new seal has yet been "prescribed" by the 1942 Iowa corporation or that a new seal has been prepared for use by it.

So much for the history of church corporation seals.

Church "Emblem"

About forty years ago, while I was engaged in editorial work for the Herald, I called attention to the fact that the articles of incorporation of the church in Iowa provided that it would have a corporate seal, but no seal had actually been used by it; no seal had even been "adopted" by it. Soon thereafter President Frederick M. Smith asked Brother Henry C. Smith to design one, and what we have known through the intervening years as the "church seal" was what he prepared. The design on this seal or emblem was used in preparing the corporate seal for the Iowa incorporation referred to.

The church corporation (Iowa) never took any official action to constitute this design as its official corporation seal. A seal of another design was secured, as we have shown.

There never has been any attempt to copyright this emblem or to protect it by law, or—so far as I am advised—to register it. The corporation seal showed incorporation in "1872-1891."

From these circumstances I have always held and must necessarily hold now that the church has no such proprietary ownership in the design, or any legal interest in it that entitles the church to forbid its use.

Under the Federal Fair Practice Act, now in force for some decades, it is conceivable that attempts to use the seal to deceive might be prevented or stopped, though the whole intent of the Fair Practice Act is to protect business concerns from imposture by the use of trade names or trademarks or even similarity in advertising, the theory being that business, after spending money in establishing a reputation as to a product, should not be the victim of piracy in appropriating designs or advertising matter. However, this could hardly be applied to our situation.

Therefore, as a matter of law, no one has any rights in and to our seal which the law is obligated to protect. How, then, can its use be denied lawfully? And no one having any legal ownership with respect to it, who can lawfully grant its use to anyone?

I can and do recognize that with members of the church there may be sentimental reasons involved in considering the church seal, by virtue of which they, or many of them, would not ignore official resistance or embargo on its use; but sentimentality does not have legal implications.

Emblem of Identification

I am a member of a civic club, and today we realize civic clubs are doing a tremendous work in every city or town of any considerable size. We note that members of these clubs exhibit a commendable pride in wearing a pin or lapel emblem giving the name of their clubs. If this may be done without impropriety, why may not a member of the greatest association on earth wear with equal or more pride—and with more justification—an emblem designating himself as belonging to the church?

Directory of Churches

In the Herald of February 25, 1952, a call was made to all stake and district presidents, as well as pastors of branches and missions in unorganized territory, to provide a list of all places of meeting. The time limit for receiving this list so that the next issue of the Church Directory will be complete and accurate is getting close. Surely all the facts on locations of meetinghouses are as well known to you today as they will be a month from now, so why not act now?

Please send the list to Herald House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri, giving only the name of the city with the street and number or nearest town and direction in miles from the nearest town in the case of a rural church. Check the data carefully just before you seal the envelope.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

By Israel A. Smith

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From a recent letter by Elder Carl F. Crum (address: General Service Administration, Emergency Procurement Service, GHQ FEC, APO 500, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, California) we excerpt the following which will be of interest to many readers:

I welcome the opportunity to be of service to the men and women of the church who are in the Armed Forces. The following is a list of members I have contacted either by telephone or personal visit: O. R. Tice, Harold Fowler, Lela Gurwell, Pat and Betty Samuella, Sgt. Bob Anderson, Sgt. Thelma S. Perry, A. R. Hacker, Vernon Smith, Charlie Bickel, Rollin Postlewaite, Thomas Kemple, Sgt. Clifford Brown, and S/Sgt. Norman Charles.

In addition to these I have the addresses of several others but have not yet been able to contact them: Charles Bragg, Peter Chosocaba, Robert Moran, and Harold Martins.

We have not been able to get together as a group, although some of us at various times have enjoyed the hospitality of the Samuella home at Camp Drake. New Year's Day, Lela Gurwell, Curtis Pettigrew, Thomas Kemple, and I had the privilege of partaking of a bountiful New Year's dinner with Brother and Sister Samuella and their children. I express the gratitude of the group by saying we thoroughly enjoyed the delicious home-cooked food. After dinner the dishes were pushed aside, and for nearly two hours, while the snow was gently covering the countryside with a blanket of white, we enjoyed a gospel feast around the dining room table. We talked informally but as the Scripture unfolded regarding Christ and his mission, we sensed very keenly the responsibility of witnessing in this strange land where Sunday is not observed or recognized. The seriousness of the present world situation seemed to weigh heavily upon us, and we each felt and expressed a desire to live a life of example with the hope that somewhere among these eighty-three million people some might learn of the hope contained in the message of the Prince of Peace. I can't help wondering what the young people of this nation have to look forward to or to hope for—eighty-three million people cooped up in an area no larger than the state of Montana with approximately $\frac{2}{3}$ of that area mountainous. These young folks remember that nine million were killed or starved to death during the last war, and they realize the possibility of other wars and other millions to die. It is not something they need—it is someone, and that one is Jesus Christ the Savior of the world.

In late December I received a telephone call from Bob Anderson and Dick Hacker requesting me to meet with them for a Communion service at Camp Schimelpennig near Sendai, Japan (approximately 200 miles from Tokyo). I could not make the trip immediately. But upon learning their division would soon be leaving it seemed necessary that I make a special effort. I also received a cablegram from Brother Clark, pastor of Sherman Oaks Branch in California, stating that one of this group had been called to the priesthood and his ordination was in order if I could arrange it. So it was on the evening of January 12 that I took the train for Sendai. I arrived at seven o'clock the next morning and was met at the station by Bob and Dick. We drove to the camp in an army jeep and had breakfast with the boys at their regular mess. It was then that I realized this was my last opportunity to meet with them because the barracks were like a deserted village. The whole division was packed and ready to move on ten minutes notice. I know now something of the feelings and concerns of soldiers about to move into battle action.

I haven't heard from any of the fellows since they moved into the Korean battle zone, but I know they will long remember that Sunday when six of us met, undisturbed in the quietness of that "upper room" on the third floor of an almost deserted army barracks to partake of the emblems in remembrance of the broken body and spilt blood of the Savior of the world. Preceding the Communion I had the privilege of ordaining Sgt. Robert Anderson of Sherman Oaks to the office of deacon. I am not sure, but this is perhaps the first official act of the Reorganization in this land of the "Rising Sun."

Participation in this service was 100 per cent, each one offering a prayer and bearing a testimony—not a pleading for protection in battle as would naturally be expected under the circumstances, but rather of thanksgiving for the privilege of partaking of the Communion and of being called a child of the kingdom. With our arms around each other we promised and pledged to live clean lives worthy of God's blessings and asked him to watch over and protect us from all evil of any nature.

I am happy to report also that Harold Fowler and Charles Bragg are doing their bit to spread the gospel among their shipmates. Both are deacons and are stationed aboard the Navy LST No. 715. I am informed they conduct church services aboard ship every Sunday while at sea. They say it is not always possible to hold services while in port, because most of the fellows are on shore leave. They are to be commended for their desire and willingness to serve in the capacity of chaplain in addition to their other duties.

Probably there are other servicemen and women over here who belong to the church. I would like very much to hear from them, or to receive addresses from parents or relatives so I could contact them. I hope that sufficient numbers can be located in or near Tokyo and Yokohama so it will be possible to arrange for regular services.

Significance of the Priesthood

By Apostle D. T. Williams

A message delivered preceding the ordination of Charles D. Neff to the office of high priest at Omaha, Nebraska on November 18, 1951.

And again: my brethren, I would cite your minds forward to the time which the Lord God gave these commandments unto his children;

And I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son, to teach these things unto the people;

And those priests were ordained after the order of his Son, in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption.

And this is the manner after which they were ordained: being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil;

Therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceeding great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such;

And thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this, they might had as great privilege as their brethren.

Or in fine: in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the only begotten Son, who was prepared;

And thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest,

This high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world:

Or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things.

Now they were ordained after this manner: Being called with a holy calling, and ordained with a holy ordinance, and taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order, which calling, and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning or end;

Thus they become high priests for ever, after the order of the Son, the only begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity, and truth. And thus it is. Amen.—Alma 9: 62-73.

WE HAVE GATHERED HERE today for one of the most solemn ordinances of our church, in fact, one of the most solemn ordinances that God has initiated in connection with his work. In this ceremony we will set aside one of his servants to occupy in the high priesthood of His church upon earth. This is such an ordinance as that in which the good consciousness of man who accepts responsibility under God is recognized.

As we come to this house of our Lord, we feel that there should be and probably is in the heart of each present a disposition to better qualify himself before God and seek humbly the presence of his Spirit. Without this sweet influence we can accomplish nothing which would be worth while. We are called constantly to a recognition of God's power. We should realize something of his concern for the human race, which concern is manifest in his desire to bring salvation to the souls of men. Looking toward this human exaltation, God had a plan of operation. Sometimes our own movements may seem without point or purpose, but this is only because we have not already acquainted ourselves as fully as we should with the divine will and purpose. But God has a plan, and that plan has been instituted for the salvation of humankind. He has expressed this desire and purpose in beautiful language: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23). Here we have set forth for us what is the essence of his hope and the center of his purpose.

God is passionately concerned in bringing to pass the "immortality and eternal life of man." He thought so well of this plan that he sent his Only Begotten Son as part of its implementation into the world that whosoever would believe in him might be saved, and that those who accepted him would find the character of salvation which we often speak of as being celestial.

At times some of us find a response without doubting in God and his purpose; at other times we find ourselves lacking. Our lack is in not reaching out to the high ideals his plan implies. As a consequence, we may fail so utterly in our own minds of achieving the godly purpose that we know there is no help for us except it be by the mercy of God which mercy has been manifested in his willingness to give us such a precious gift as his Only Son. All of this was so that we might be brought to a point of proper evaluation in right thinking as well as right living. Only thus can we be worthy of the ultimate salvation he has in store for us.

IT WAS NOT ENOUGH that God's Son should come into the world to spread the gospel of salvation. Jesus knew his time here would be limited, so through three and one-half years of ministry he invited earthly individuals to assist in bringing this great hope to achievement. When he left this world, he gave of his responsibility to men, and to these men he said: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." Indeed, they had not called him. He was sent as the first-born of God; they as his ambassadors were to go forth and perform for him the task which he could not further implement here because he was to go back to his Father. So God through him left responsibility and a commensurate authority with his servants that they might assist other men in working out this salvation in their lives.

The opening quotations indicate that God has a work, and that his work is his glory, and that the purpose of his work and his glory is to bring to pass man's salvation. The Lord said through Alma that this high priesthood, being after the order of his Son—which order was from the foundation of the world—was above all other authority in his church and kingdom. And thus men are "called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest."—Alma 9: 69.

The responsibility of holding high priesthood is to teach others the way of God, that they in turn might "enter into his rest." While such a heavy responsibility is laid upon us, there comes along with the arduousness of the task the blessings that attend the ordinances that God has initiated through this ministry. In all these tasks and privileges we are vouchsafed the leadership of his Spirit, that his church upon earth may be directed according to his intent and purpose. None of this authority or privilege is granted for any man's aggrandizement, but for the purpose that God's will may be accomplished among the children of men and that his kingdom shall be built in these last days.

TODAY WE LOOK out on the world and discover how critical the human need is in this tragic hour. How can we observe the unseemly conditions existing throughout the earth and not know something of the need of man for the saving grace of our Lord Jesus Christ? How can we survey the ungodly conditions evidenced upon every hand and not realize that the world is in no way capable of saving itself? It was Jeremiah who said: "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" (10: 23). There is some power aside from our own which must be recognized within us, for we do not possess such knowledge and understanding of spiritual forces as will lead us in a successful attempt at self-government, except we be directed through the Spirit and revelation of God. Before the nations of the world can learn to walk with God, they must make themselves available to God's Spirit and presence through individual action. We must have this help which God has made available if we are to succeed in any attempt at self-government. Because of God's knowledge of our inability to follow alone and unaided the path of salvation, he gave us his Son to be our guide. No wonder Jeremiah, who was looking forward to the coming of the Lord, gave vent to such sentiments as he expressed in recognizing that man cannot walk successfully except as directed by his Maker.

One of our chief difficulties in this present age is that we seem to have a mistaken sense of our own self-sufficiency. We seem to think that we can make the most and the best of life by caring only for ourselves. We know enough about God to know that he is concerned about our well-being. We cannot reach out to the ultimate in the good available without having the help of our Father in heaven and of his Son, Jesus Christ. We know, too, that in this age in which we live, as well as in ages past, God has made the Spirit of that Christ available to us through the extension of his authority in men chosen by revelation to represent him. This is true today as well as in past ages of the world's history. Without this Spirit and power of priesthood there is no salvation for humanity. It seems that the whole matter simmers down to the realization of the truthfulness of the statement of Jeremiah: man cannot of himself guide himself. Any attempt upon his part to do this and thus set aside God's power and authority in the affairs of the race is to prove both futile and ultimately disastrous to the nations of the world.

ONLY as we learn to accept the direction of God as manifested in his Son, Jesus Christ, as well as in those whom Christ has sent, can we find the ultimate rest promised through doing the will and keeping in mind the purpose of God. This God whom we serve may easily become meaningful to us if we observe his manifestations in nature. We often look into the sidereal universe to see the greatness of our Creator. The wonder which is his is so tremendously great that it is incomprehensible to us. I wonder if we know that the observable universe extends into space from our point of vantage twelve sextillion (12,000,000,000,000,000,000,000) miles. I cannot comprehend such distances. Man has been able to push his vision that far out into the universe. Yet the universe evidently goes on and on far beyond the ability of man to observe it. Nevertheless the God who has made so great a universe and placed it in space has made a world so infinitesimally small that it takes a microscope which magnifies eight hundred thousand times to see even the dim outline of the atom.

Scientists tell us that by comparison the space inside the atom leaves room for the movement of its electrons (positive and negative electricity) with such relative distance between them and their nucleus as is the case in the heavenly universe. The Creator has made one universe so magnificently large that it challenges us with its enormity and another so infinitesimally small that we have not reached the point in our scientific development where we can observe its creative units clearly except by calculation.

Scientists say that to observe the atom at all, there must be, first, such calculations which reveal its position and tell where the atom is before they are able to focus the sights of their microscope upon it. They cannot observe it in the ordinary sense of observation. They inform us that a perforation of one ten-thousandths of an inch in a piece of mica must be had and the atom must be brought into focus through this small aperture; but even then the atom still can be observed only in dimmest outline.

What an amazing world we are living in! Yet, no matter how small the atom may seem, it is through this small creative unit that we have learned to realize the power with which we can disintegrate cities. However, we are not to be satisfied to use this vast power to destroy civilization. We are now hunting for even greater power. It is said that the bomb which is to be empowered with this same atom will now be a thousand times more powerful than those used in the past. What kind of a world are we living in? What kind of a God are we worshipping? It is demonstrated through the powers we have mentioned that God who created all things must be greater and more powerful than all of his vast creation. His power is beyond all description or comparison. We cannot comprehend his greatness nor understand the smallest element of his creation. Yet he has invited us to such a partnership with himself as is manifest in the high priesthood into which we shall induct one of our brethren this morning.

I imagine that we would consider it a great honor to be asked to be an assistant to the man whose job it is to look through the giant telescope at the heavens which God has created. To look these twelve sextillion miles into space should humble us and make us teachable. The God that we worship has asked us to be his partner in working out the salvation of the human race, and he who invites us to this magnificent partnership made the worlds. He made the hundred billion suns which constitute the great constellation of which we are but a very small part. Should we not think of it as an honor today that we have been called to assist him in the salvation of our brothers and sisters?

THIS HIGH PRIESTHOOD is the greatest authority God has bestowed upon any of his children—and may we add not only the greatest authority but also the greatest responsibility. Because of its presence among us, men are called and ordained to various offices in the church. They are set apart to be bishops, because they hold the high priesthood. They are called to be evangelists because they, first of all, are of high priestly authority. They are called to be apostles because they possess this same power. They are called to the First Presidency of the church because of this fundamental authority which lies underneath and is the source of all godly authority to men upon earth. To all who occupy in these responsible places, God extends his Spirit to work with, in, and through them.

Seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel has separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself to do the service of the tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?—Numbers 16: 9.

Today, as Brother Neff accepts the responsibility of the high priesthood, he will be coming nearer to God, and likewise, nearer to the hearts of God's people. If the people respond and are brought nearer to their Father in heaven, then God is brought nearer to them. It is the responsibility of those to whom they would minister to lend themselves to such ministry in co-operation one with another. The minister and the people thus may be lifted up and come nearer and nearer to the throne of God. Jesus said, "I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me."

The significance of this priesthood is that it exercises leadership, but not as the world exercises it. It is the leadership of love, of humility, and of direction which helps men and women to see the way. If with the exercise of this leadership there is also the exercise of fellowship upon the part of the people, and a willingness to be taught, then this combination will lend itself to the achievement of God's high purpose in the ultimate salvation of those who participate by receiving the benefits of this ministry. God's purpose is the ultimate salvation of those who participate here by receiving the benefits or by the exercise of this holy authority which God has brought to pass through the ministry of his Son Jesus Christ.

Today, my friends, heavy responsibilities come to Brother Neff. To the congregation that meets here in Omaha, to the district over which he presides, and to others to whom he may be called to minister in future years, comes the responsibility of working together with him toward the purpose of God to realize in men "immortality and eternal life." In such working together will salvation come to the human race far beyond man's ability to anticipate in his present state.

Thoughts About the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper

By Callie B. Stebbins

THE COMMUNION SERVICE is so called because it is intended to bring us into communion with the One whose body and blood we hold in remembrance.

It is some years since I was present in a Communion service. My condition of health has kept me at home, where, by the kind provision of the church, the emblems have been brought to me.

Hearing the sacrament prayers read once a month did not satisfy me, so I sometimes read them at home. Recently I desired to study them. I looked up all the passages referring to the blood of Jesus Christ "that was shed for us." I have kept in mind the thought, "We are not our own," for Christ "hath purchased the church with his own blood"; he "suffered that he might sanctify his people." And "if we walk in the light as he is in the light, his blood cleanseth us from all sin." I gained added light by reading these and other references.

I found "the body of Christ" mentioned in Hebrews 10: 5. "When he cometh into the world, he saith, . . . a body hast thou prepared me." That would be the perfect body of the Son of God of virgin birth—beautiful as a baby and as a little child. We see that body increased in size and strength as pictured in the boy of twelve years. Developed in perfect manhood, it carried him through the years of his ministry. Standing before the high priest, Caiaphas, he was buffeted and spit upon, then sent away with his cross to Calvary. There he was nailed to the cross, and it was then set up in its place.

After enduring all this agony there, he let his precious blood be shed for us—blood from the nails in his hands and feet, from the crown of thorns, from his side pierced by the spear.

That is the body and the blood we hold in remembrance as we take the bread and wine. This sacred body—moved from youth to death by the sacrificial spirit that overcame the world, and by doing the will of the Father—is our pattern.

Can we comprehend it? I know I have been slow to take it in, and yet I am reminded of it every Communion day. I am reminded too that, as members of his church, we take his name upon us and are always to remember him and keep his commandments. This is for the purpose "that we may always have his Spirit to be with us"—the blessed Spirit that teaches and leads and comforts. There are certain things necessary if we are to remember him. We must read his word; we must know his life and teachings; we must seek him often in earnest prayer.

From the old hymnal we used to sing, "How can I forget my Lord? Dear Lord, remember me." He always remembers us. It is for us to remember him and receive his rich blessings as members of his body, the church.

Prayer Logic

One of the best prayers I ever heard was that of a little Negro boy who was competing in a race. He kept dropping behind and his chances seemed slim; then suddenly his lips began to move with great regularity, his legs picked up speed, and he won the race. Asked later what he was whispering to himself, he said he was talking to the Lord, saying over and over: "Lawd, You pick 'em up, and I'll put 'em down. You pick 'em up, and I'll put 'em down."—A. Miss Jean Nagel

WHO DOESN'T LIKE a good adventure story, particularly when it is about real people? The story is in its first pages for two young women who are closely related to us, though not members of the church. They are of special interest to church members because they are products of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

Miss Jean Nagel, a gentle, soft-spoken young woman, graduated from the "San" college three years ago. She is an Independence girl and chose the Sanitarium because it was a good school close home. After her "San" days she spent three years in the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago taking a course in Missionary Christian Education. Today she is preparing to take a trip—far from home and friends. She's going to sail April 8 from Brooklyn, New York, for Togoland, South Africa, as a medical missionary among the Ewes.

It was while she was a student nurse that the idea of using her nursing experience for the good of those in distant lands came to her. She was doing affiliation work in pediatrics at the Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, where she became friends with some nurses interested in foreign service. Since then that has been her goal.

She is a member of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, which church does much of the missionary, educational, and medical work in British Togoland. There are some two hundred schools in the territory sponsored by her denomination, but there is great need for medical help. Already preceding Jean Nagel is Dr. Doering, a German doctor of the same church, with his wife and four children. He has started a small dispensary, and it is to this settlement that Miss Nagel is taking her talents as a nurse.

Adventure for Nurses

HER WORK THERE will be mostly of a medical nature. She will be teaching nurses' aid courses, hygiene, and home-nursing techniques to the native women. She may start a nursing school of her own, and of course she will be assisting Dr. Doering in her capacity of a registered nurse.

But first comes the responsibility of learning the language. There will be native helpers for this. For a year she will room with another American girl. Then her friend will go to a native group near by. The two young women will be learning different native languages while they are together.

Miss Nagel received her commission in her church on February 10. She has taken this assignment as a life-long mission. She will be in Togoland for three years and then have a year's furlough to the United States, followed by another three years in Togoland, and then nine months at home.

For this long journey and working under such primitive circumstances Miss Nagel must go prepared with clothing, cooking utensils, a one-burner kerosene stove, stainless steel tableware, plastic dishes, and bedding. She will wear a light spring coat and take a raincoat. All her clothes must be suitable for the tropical climate. Her nurse's uniforms will be seersucker, for she will have only an old-fashioned flatiron for pressing. There is no electricity where she is going. She'll buy a gas refrigerator necessary for perishable drugs and foods when she reaches there. It is an expensive item, but if she took one from here customs would make the cost equally prohibitive.

"I'm grateful for the good training I've received at the 'San,'" she said, "for there I was given a chance to learn more techniques than in many other schools. I find that I can go into any hospital anywhere—and I've worked in several since graduation—and do any kind of nursing."

SENIOR nursing student Doris Beckstrom is eager for this coming year to pass. She is the first married student to be accepted in the school. Her good record has paved the way for others.

Mrs. Doris Beckstrom

Mrs. Beckstrom lives in Independence with her husband Carl. Together they are officers in charge of the local corps of the Salvation Army.

A year from now this young couple will be making a long journey to a spot only about 150 miles from the place where Jean Nagel will be serving—the Gold Coast of South Africa.

Carl asked for missionary service to the Gold Coast a few years ago. He had heard that it is called the "white man's graveyard," because the climate is so hard on light-skinned people—the torrid swampy conditions being a hotbed for fevers and tropical diseases—but he wanted to go to that place because there is such a great need for workers. Of course when Doris married Carl, she made application to go with him as an officer.

When Carl applied for the appointment to the Gold Coast, world headquarters of the Salvation Army in London requested that he receive his M.A. degree in education. The British government, which has jurisdiction over the Gold Coast, insists that educational missionaries go there educationally qualified. In the meantime he was appointed to Independence with his wife. During the past few years they have been here he has finished his A.B. in psychology and his M.A. in education from Kansas City University.

When it appeared necessary for Carl to take the several years of training before he could qualify, the regional staff of the Salvation Army in Chicago said to Doris, "Why don't you apply to a school of nursing and become a registered nurse?" which is exactly what she set about to do, applying immediately for admittance to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School.

"It's hard work for a married woman to be a student nurse," said Doris. "The five months of affiliations in St. Louis demanded our being separated for that length of time. Then, too, as a Salvation Army lieutenant, I have joint responsibility with my husband over the local corps."

The two of them are in charge of all church services and daily meetings for the corps, as well as supervision of all the social work, which includes care of needy families and aid for unmarried mothers. Her staff, knowing she is preparing for foreign missionary service, has excused her from much of what ordinarily would be her responsibility as joint officer with her husband.

THEY will learn their exact assignment in about a year. At first they will be in a colony where they can learn the language of the natives. They may be in one of the colonies close to the coast. Later they want to go deeper into the jungle. In preparation for the work she knows she will be called upon to do, Doris wants to take a course in midwifery when she reaches Africa. In their African mission they will be paid from the world mission fund, according to the standard of the place where they work. Here in the United States they are sustained from offerings of the local corps and community where they work.

"We're both looking forward to our experience," says Mrs. Beckstrom. "Once we are there it will be nine years before we can return to the United States, and then for only six months. But we know we will have a grand adventure, and we want in every way to serve. We know there is great need in that part of the world for education and medical care, and we are glad to have the opportunity to prepare ourselves here for that service."

"I like the atmosphere of the 'San,'" she adds. "It's nice to be with girls who believe in clean living." Her husband Carl says he can also sense the difference between the San and other hospitals where they have worked, and he too appreciates the good spirit.

"I'm so grateful for the opportunity to take nursing education," Mrs. Beckstrom says. "When I was a young girl I had wanted it. Then I decided to take Salvation Army officers' training in Chicago. After that I was assigned hospital work and thought that would be as close as I could get to nursing. But I came to independence and the way has opened up for me to fulfill my dream. I do want to be of service, and what I'm getting at the 'San' will mean I can really help in our work on the Gold Coast of Africa."

"San" Day Funds Help Many Students

WHEN you place your offering in the basket on April 27 it will begin a chain of events which will bring Zion closer in a very special way. April 27 is "San" day. On that Sunday throughout the congregations of the church all general offerings will be tagged for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing. It will be used to help your church college of nursing education by providing important items that the students would have had to go without. Your gift, then, will mean better teaching for this important institution of the church.

The first "San" day was in the spring of 1949. Over $12,000 was received. Two such special days have been held since, in the spring seasons of 1950 and 1951. Each day brought over $12,000 to help make this a better school.

WHAT has the money been used for? First of all $2,000 is taken from the amount as a reserve for future major needs of the school. This has made $10,000 available each year for the immediate benefit of these college students of nursing. The Board of Trustees is ultimately responsible for the expenditure of these funds.

The first thing done back in 1949 with the money was to add another instructor to the nursing faculty. That was Mrs. Florence Nowack Welsh, herself a graduate of the school. Mrs. Welsh is teaching today while her husband is with the Army in Germany.

Each year one member of the faculty has been given the opportunity for advancing her own nursing education for benefit of the girls at the "San." At present Miss Nelle Morgan is at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, finishing work on her B.S. degree in Public Health nursing. Others who have gone to school are Miss Iola Tordoff and Miss Shirley Butler. These instructors go to school with assistance from these funds. The system of bringing the latest in nursing education and techniques to the students has already resulted in many obvious benefits.

Each year about $500 has been set aside for instructors to attend nursing conventions, helping them thus to keep up with the newest and best methods available. About $500 this year is set aside to buy new books for the nursing library.

The microscopes used in the School of Nursing have become antiquated, so each year two new ones are bought to replace two old ones. They cost about $250 apiece. Some valuable anatomical models and charts have been purchased for classwork. A tape recorder and a typewriter have been purchased also. These items are materially increasing the technical facilities of the school.

OTHER major improvements have been realized. A new asphalt tile floor has gone into the diet laboratory. This is an obvious improvement over the dull, hard, concrete floor it covers. Fluorescent ceiling lights have been put in all the rooms of the nurses' home, replacing the one small bulb that previously hung in the center. The student nurses do most of their studying in their own rooms because of crowded library space, so good lights are important. Soundproof ceilings have been put in all their rooms—first floor is still in the process of this change—which has made studying easier for the girls. Nurses must work and sleep at irregular hours. The soundproofing on the ceilings has been an added blessing to them by cutting out the noise from the floors above. The ceiling for the first floor this year will require an expenditure of approximately $1,600.00.

Each room of the nurses' home has been redecorated with an attractive wall-paper known as Fabron. It is a washable plastic paper of many interesting designs. Each room is different. Here again, work on the first floor awaits more funds.

What student, whether in a school of nursing or a liberal arts college, would feel complete without her book shelf? Brother Will Smith, the man who can make anything, has made a bedside cabinet for each room, using "San" day funds. This holds books and a lamp beside the beds. Before he made these the girls had to use orange crates.

A most popular center is the lounge of the nurses' home. Here is the piano, also some chairs and davenports providing places to relax. Here the girls entertain visitors and gather in small groups to talk between classes. The furniture receives much wear, and this year two new sets were purchased for the girls. No wonder this is a popular place, for the tiny library is housed in two small rooms just off the lounge. The girls stop to relax on their way to read text books.

Venetian blinds and new linens have been bought for the nurses' home, including bright new spreads. Articles such as pans and silverware have been purchased for the diet laboratory. The observation bleachers in the nursing arts laboratory were constructed with part of the "San" day funds and comfortable pads made for them. The chemistry laboratory has benefited with some new equipment.

THE MONEY you have given has stretched a long way and yet there are pressing needs for the better instruction and well-being of our girls in this college. The lounge isn't adequate for their recreation. Many student nurses say, "We wish we had a place to play ping-pong." Many times they look about them with discouragement at the meager space available for small socials, for teas for their town mothers, and for dinners. There is no place to go for quick snacks when the dining hall is closed. It is natural that the girls and faculty alike dream about the erection of a recreation center.

The nurses' home redecorating needs to be finished. More teaching models are needed. The diet laboratory needs a new stove, and a mixer for the large-quantity cooking the girls must do. More typewriters and microscopes are needed. And most of all, there is a desperate need for library facilities. In fact, a larger library has one of the first priorities on the "must" list for the girls at the "San" college. You can help them receive it.

Petroglyphs

The editors have received from Mrs. Bertham Norman of Seattle, Washington, a copy of the newspaper The Constructionaire, which is published on the Island of Guam. She has called our attention to an article and some accompanying pictures showing petroglyphs found on the walls of a cave on the Island of Guam. These are carved on the stone by a prehistoric people. Dr. J. Henry Baird is making a study to interpret the hieroglyphics. However, this seems to be very difficult with the data available. Our interest is largely that peoples of all ages seem to have tried to preserve their records by the best means available to them, and in some instances, like the Rosetta Stone and the Book of Mormon, these efforts have proved of great value to succeeding ages.

Democracy in Action

The Lord has admonished the church that when the wicked rule, the people mourn, therefore, "honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently" (Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2). It then becomes our duty to uphold such men in the performance of their duties.

One of the problems confronting an electorate in a democracy is that we are faced with a choice between one of two or three candidates, no one of whom may represent our ideals entirely. Sometimes we vote for a man as a protest against the policies for which another man stands, rather than for a candidate who entirely satisfies us. This situation has discouraged some voters from going to the polls entirely. It is wrong to say that people are indifferent to the kind of government they have simply because they do not vote; rather it is that their vote is too ineffectual to bring about the changes desired.

There is some degree of blame attached, however, that so many of us fail to take any interest in party caucuses and nominating conventions. It is well known that the party leaders who select the candidates are much more concerned about the clever candidate who can win votes and who will permit the politicians to dictate the terms of his administration and the patronage accruing to it than they are to select a man of high quality who will consider as primary the best interests of all the people of the nation. The remedy for this evil, however, is in our hands. We must take an interest in nominating the candidates who will be our standard-bearers and then support them, not only until they are elected, but as long as they need our support.

This is election year in the United States. We are bound to hear a great deal about platforms and policies. The only thing which lies within our control, however, is to nominate the men who stand for the policies which we think should control our government.

Recently there came to our attention a list of ten questions written by Wheeler McMillen as "a test for voters." This was published in Pathfinder, December 26, 1951, and is reprinted here by permission of the publisher.

1. Does the candidate propose to take from one group of people in order to give to another?
2. Does he promise favors to a group or locality at the nation's expense?
3. Does he advocate any new powers for government?
4. Does he appeal to prejudice of any kind to gain favor?
5. Does he support measures which will be found to put limits on individual freedom of choice?
6. Does he view government as a manager, or only as an umpire and a fair policeman?
7. Will his program increase the cost of government, and thereby further lessen individual ability to save?
8. Does he support measures which will interfere with freedom to buy and sell?
9. Do his record and associates indicate that he will restore strict integrity to government on all levels?
10. Does he appear to understand that all physical well-being and goods result only from work—energy and tools—applied to materials? And that laws cannot create wealth, but only the conditions under which it may be produced?

We believe that it would do any of us good to review these questions occasionally, so that we can have them in mind as we go to the polls from time to time to exercise our sacred rights of franchise.

How Is Your "G.Q."?

By Verda E. Bryant

YOU'VE HEARD about the "I.Q." (Intelligence Quotient); some of you may know about your "E.Q." (Educational Quotient) and other "Q's," but at this time of the year when you are visiting Independence for General Conference, have you considered your G.Q. (Guest Quotient)? How are you going to rate as a Conference guest?

There is no relationship in this world that compares with that of the host and guest at Conference time in Independence. Emily Post's etiquette rules don't always apply to this situation, because General Conference is the important factor and the host-guest relationship revolves around it. General Conference demands so much from both host and guest that understanding must exist between them in order to keep the association happy.

To begin with, remember that Independence people have made preparation for you. They aren't merely "lucky because they are already here." Your preparation has consisted of arranging for your transportation, packing your suitcase, settling details for the care of little Johnny, and considering the needs of your congregation as a basis of selecting among the many activities offered at the Conference.

Here in Independence the preparation has been different—but preparation it is, none the less. A paint brush and a mop are synonymous with Conference readiness. Every nook and cranny must be shiny clean, and even though the weather man may not be the least bit co-operative, the yard must be raked and the winter's accumulation of rubbish hauled away. After all, "Zion must put on her beautiful garments" so that the visitors will see her at her best, brightest, and cleanest. Toward this effort weeks are spent throughout our fair city.

THE HOUSING COMMITTEE, in order to secure rooms for the multitude of guests at Conference time, often asks people not of our faith to share their homes. Appeals are frequently made through the local newspapers. What kind of impression are you, as representatives of the church, giving these people? You are as truly representative as a church official in his capacity at Conference. In some instances your host may be getting his first glimpse of our church through you as a Conference guest. Sometimes the hosts may be people who are on the borderline of becoming affiliated with us. Your G.Q. may have a de-cidenced effect on his future relations with the church.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints are moving to Independence in large numbers each year. As more of our people come in, those of other faiths are being cramped a little more. If we are to be allowed to bring in so many people, a fine relationship must be maintained between our people and those not of our faith; otherwise resentment might be built up as our numbers grow, rendering the establishing of Zion more difficult. We want no repetition of events of a century and a quarter ago.

With the intimacy of a woman whispering to another when a fringe of white shows beneath her dark dress, we caution, "Pardon me, your church is showing" in all that you do while in Independence. Keep your G.Q. high!

HERE are some types that rate a low G.Q. as Conference visitors.

1. The holiday-seeker. Regardless of any arrangements, financial or otherwise, your host has put himself out to take you into his home at this busy time. He is happy to accommodate you because he wants to share the privilege of attending Conference with as many as possible. The visitor who uses General Conference as an excuse to get away from home and to have a holiday may find relations strained between him and his host. It is irksome to have a guest who can't attend some part of Conference because there is a movie he must see or some shopping he wants to attend to. The one who comes to Conference to attend Conference rates high on the G.Q. list.

2. The meeting-skipper. If you are too worn out to attend a particular service in which you may have no specific interest, bear in mind that your host may want more than anything to attend that particular one. Retiring to your own quarters will leave your host free to follow his own inclinations. And if, after you've rested, you take a moment to run the vacuum sweeper or dust the furniture, your G.Q. goes high.

3. The pernickety guest. The meticulous, squeamish, finical person who is too nice to come down to earth rates low in his G.Q. If he wants a private bathroom, he'd better go to a hotel. If he wants the best in food and service, he should eat at the Lounge or the Pioneer. Simple living is a must during General Conference, and more meals are eaten at the kitchen table than in the dining room.

4. The bathroom hog. Common sense indicates that guests and hosts alike share equitably the bathroom. If the man of the house and the children are on a normal schedule of work and school, their needs must be considered. The guest who squeezes in his bath during a time when the traffic is light, and who remembers that the one who follows him also likes a neat bathroom, rates high in his G.Q.

5. The washer-outer. Akin to the bathroom hog—possibly the one—is he who constantly washes things out and hangs them in the way of others in the home. Find out from your host if he minds your using the kitchen sink or if there is a laundry room in the basement.

6. The Utilities Waster. The guest who never turns a light out, who leaves the water running in the bathroom, and who runs up toll calls on the telephone (without reimbursement) will find his welcome wearing thin by the end of his stay.

7. The V.I.P. General Conference is not held for the main purpose of entertaining visitors. Independence people are not here solely to serve the visitors. The Very Important Person who must have his meals served on time, be bowed into and out of the house, and handled with kid gloves hits the zero point on the G.Q. thermometer.

8. The armchair administrator. He who knows definitely what is wrong with the church and all its officials, who knows all the answers, and who, if given an opportunity, would pull the church out of its doldrums, is a decided bore and his G.Q. goes down and down.

ON THE WHOLE, I would rate our Conference guests of the past as very high on their G.Q. Some of my friends have not been so fortunate. Possibly our H.Q. (Host Quotient) may be lacking in some respects.

When someone is with us for the first time, I like to tell him in the beginning what to expect. He knows from the start that at our house we go to General Conference. That comes first on our priority list. All other things give way to the Conference. My husband works that week and our children (now young people) are in school. That much of their schedule must be kept "business as usual."

We don't attempt to feed our guests, though there is seldom a meal that some of them are not present. Usually some special evening is set apart during the Conference period as a get-together at dinner time. Then the best linens, china, and silverware are brought out for the occasion. Other than that it is "potluck" or eat out.

Our meals are the simplest during Conference. Everyone who stays with us knows that there is cereal in the cupboard and milk in the refrigerator, and for those who must have their "waker-upper," the coffee pot and coffee are handy. Most every morning I put on something in the deep well or oven—soup, stew, or a casserole dish. It is ready to eat at noon. Anyone who wants to come home at noon is welcome to eat—family and guests alike know that. Dinner in the evening is what is left from lunch and something that is easy to fix. Even the family knows that everyone is free to follow his own inclinations to eat in the dining hall or at the corner cafe if he wishes. Each person cleans up his own dishes, or a group joins to make the work light.

Each guest is responsible for his own sleeping quarters, and each assumes some share of responsibility toward the living quarters. Keeping the space between the four walls livable becomes a co-operative venture for guests and hosts.

DURING the four Conferences we have been in Independence, in our seven-room, one-and-a-half bath home (which includes also a basement recreation room) we have had from nine to eighteen guests in addition to the four of us. When the housing shortage was most acute we lined up cots upstairs and in the basement. Most guests bring some bedding with them.

We have found that a good sense of humor helps span the rough spots. The year we were most crowded my husband made a clever sign for the newel post in the front hallway. It showed a man with his feet sticking out of the covers trying to sleep on a davenport; it bore this caption, "Bryant Flop House, where you hang your hat and lay down your head—you hope." Every time anyone came into the house he saw that sign and couldn't help smiling. A sign on the bathroom door read "Whistle stop only—no layovers" and was illustrated with an animated train. It was a gentle reminder that there was a line waiting.

Conference time is a joy for us. We renew old acquaintances, make new friends, and "eat, drink, and sleep" General Conference. When it is over, we are tired—even worn out—but we always agree that it was wonderful. But for some of my friends it has been different.

One friend has lived here through five Conferences and never yet has been able to attend more than a couple sessions each time. Why? She is too busy taking care of her eight or ten guests. There are meals to be served on time; cakes, pies, light rolls, and other delicacies to bake; beds to make; and personal service to be rendered. By the time the evening dishes are done she is only too glad for a couple hours to relax. When I asked, "Why?" she replied, "Oh, there are always some of our people among our guests. They expect it, and I do want them to enjoy Conference." But she always adds, "Some day I'm not going to have any Conference guests, I'm just going to Conference myself." Are relatives naturally low on the G.Q. thermometer, or are their Independence kin-folks just afraid of them?

Keep your G.Q. high during General Conference and you will find an open door for you on your next visit to Independence. If that visit occurs other than during General Conference, you may be assured that even Emily Post will be satisfied with the reception accorded you.

Regarding the Use of the Church Seal

Rotary members meeting in foreign places instantly become fraternal when coming into contact. Why should we not have an appropriate emblem so that we may let our fidelity to the great cause be at once known to other members whom we chance to meet?

Graceland College pins are worn by alumni every place. For what purpose? The answer is obvious; it need not be stated. Is loyalty to Graceland College a thing to be declared in this simple way? The church is a far greater cause. Why limit the wearing of a pin or an emblem to civic clubs, or to colleges, or to secret societies?

Not long ago a young man was killed. He had recently been baptized into this church. His sorrowing mother rejoiced that he died within her church, and desired to have cut into his grave marker the design which we called the "church seal" (though the term is not wholly proper—it should be "church emblem"). When the question was presented to me I was happy indeed, in the light of my knowledge of the facts and the law, to inform the sister's pastor that it was a matter wherein there is neither "let nor hindrance"—nobody having any lawful right either to give permission or to prevent.

There is still a further question involved. Even if there had existed or now existed any legal protection, only a perfect—or at least an exact reproduction—could come within its terms. A similar design might come under the ban of the Federal Fair Practice law, provided any trade or business or monetary factors were involved. But as a matter of fact, I do not suppose that this "seal" of ours used in different ways has ever been a real and true facsimile of the original, if indeed there is at this time any drawing or sketch that could rightfully be held to be the official seal or, more properly speaking, official emblem.

The question so lately raised refers to "official use." I really do not believe there is in fact any official use of our seal. I do not believe it has ever been placed on deeds of conveyance or similar legal instruments. Perhaps its portrayal in articles and books comes as near "official" as any.

As I view it, there is no right on the part of anybody to "permit" its use or any right on the part of any to "deny" its use. It is not protected by any law, statutory or common, and no right of any kind is invaded by its use for any purpose.

Real Listening

The first requisite of a good conversationalist is not ability to talk, but ability to listen. And very few of us know how to listen. Real listening is something positive, not merely closing the mouth, letting another talk, and waiting until you can break in again. If you think it an ordinary trait, try paying strict attention to the next person who addresses you. Decide firmly to make no reply until 30 seconds after the last period. Listen to the tones of voice, watch the speaker's eyes, observe how he puts his sentences together, his choice of words, the cogency of his ideas, his sincerity or lack of it, his shrewdness or naïveté. Follow it as closely as if you intended to write it down. You will realize you are having a new experience. And from the face of the person opposite you, you will realize that he is having a new experience, too. —Loren Carroll in Esquire

Question Time

Question:

Is there any difference between the Holy Spirit and the Holy Ghost?
Oregon Mrs. W. W.

Answer:

The terms "Holy Spirit" and "Holy Ghost" mean the same. Notice I Corinthians 12: 3 which says:

No man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

The word "Spirit" and the word "Ghost" in this passage are from the same Greek word, pneumati, according to the New Testament in Greek by Westcott and Hort, and also in the Emphatic Diaglott. Many other passages of the New Testament are the same. In all the versions of the Bible made in the last hundred years the term "Ghost" has been dropped and the term "Spirit" only is used. The connotation of the word "ghost" has come to have an objectionable meaning since the King James version was printed 300 years ago.

Question:

Which did God create first—animals or man? According to the biblical account of the six days or periods of creation, the animals were created first. However, our Inspired Version states man was "the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also" (Genesis 2: 8, Inspired Version). This seems contradictory.

Answer:

The creation story as given in the Inspired Version of the Bible contains no contradiction upon this point. Two distinct creations are described, the first being upon the fifth and sixth days, the animal creation first, and man second. But the Lord tells us that this creation was spiritual and not natural or physical, and what he created was the spirit forms possessing life, at which time he says, "There was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air."

For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth.

And I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men, and not yet a man to till the ground, for in heaven created I them, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air.—Genesis 2: 5-6.

At a later time Enoch, by the Spirit of God, "beheld the spirits of men that God had created" (Genesis 6: 38). They were as yet the unborn of humanity, and lived in the spirit world. All these forms, both animal and man, were before prepared for life upon the earth; the animals first and man second.

The account of the physical or temporal creation is a distinct story. In this the Lord began with man, forming him "of the dust of the earth," and breathing into him the breath of life, or in other words causing the spirit of life to come into him, and "man became a living soul—the first flesh upon the earth." (The soul is the spirit and body united. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.) It was after this creation that "Out of the ground, I the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and commanded that they should come unto Adam to see what he should call them. And they were also living souls."—Genesis 2: 25, 26.

This second creation took place after the six days and also the rest day had passed, and was altogether distinct from the first. While the order is reversed in the two creations there is no conflict.

Question:

Is the church in position at this time to receive surplus? What is surplus used for, and how can I find out if I should pay surplus to the church?

Answer:

Yes, the church is at this time in a position to receive surplus. At the General Conference of 1950 a document was presented to the Conference and approved by it which invited members to pay surplus. This document was printed in the Conference Daily Herald of April 9, 1950. In this document were listed specific purposes for which surplus can be consecrated. These are

1. For the purchase of lands for public benefit of the church

2. For the completion of the Auditorium
3. For houses of worship which are peculiarly the responsibility of the General Church
4. To provide for the costs for economic and community planning
5. For the development of business, industry, and agricultural stewardships
6. For funds for the care of the poor and needy

There is also included in this document the method by which one can determine whether or not he should pay surplus. It calls for the filing of the financial statement and payment of tithing in full. There must be mutual consideration of this by a bishop and the contributor consecrating it. Individuals should not send in funds as surplus through a solicitor or a bishop's agent, unless approval has been given by the Presiding Bishopric.

Question:

Was the Jewish Sanhedrin composed of only married men, and if so does this warrant the belief that Apostle Paul was a married man or widower?

Oregon

N.W.

Answer:

We are not aware of any rule relative to the Jewish Sanhedrin restricting membership to married men. Whether there were or were not such a rule, it does not appear that it would prove anything at all as to whether Paul was married, for there is no evidence that he was ever a member of that council. However, since in the New Testament writings which deal with Paul more than with all the other apostles together, no mention is made of a wife or children, it would be a natural assumption that he must have remained unmarried.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. The Land Shadowing With Wings

By C. J. Clark

A department for replies to debatable articles printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Limited space will not permit many articles on the same subject to be printed.

"Woe to the land shadowing with wings, beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."
—Isaiah 18: 1.

WE ARE TOLD that some versions translate this woe, ho, ah, O, and ob. The Inspired translation says "woe," and that's good enough for me. Besides I believe it's right. This was given about 640 B. C., and at that time the Jaredites, after enjoying the blessings a just God gave them, departed from the truth and were on the road to complete destruction.

About 1,400 years later, the Nephites were in the same predicament, refusing to hear the counsel of a kind and loving Heavenly Father. But that's not all. Today America is facing conditions that are as bad or worse than it has faced in the past. Members of the present government warn that the United States is facing another war, not later than 1952. Such a war could mean national extermination. In view of this, "woe" seems an appropriate term.

I think the outcome depends on this church. The hastening time is here, and I believe that if we get down to work as God has made it known we should, we can see the fulfillment of the prophecy which says, "Come, let us go up to the house of the Lord and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, and they will beat their swords into plough shares and their spears into pruning hooks, and they shall not learn war any more."

The Scripture doesn't say, "Woe to the land shaped like wings," but "shadowing with wings." There's a lot of difference.

At one time in American history both North and South America were ruled by foreign powers; all of them, I believe, were monarchies. The United States was the first to rebel against foreign governments. It adopted for its symbol of liberty the bald eagle. From the earliest times the eagle has been universally regarded as the emblem of might and courage. National Encyclopedia, Volume 2, pages 879 and 880, says that the eagle can fly higher than all other birds, so it is a symbol of liberty that the United States has lived up to.

In 1810 South America was subject to the nations of Europe. We are told "All South America was ripe for revolution" (History of the Nineteenth Century Year by Year, Volume 1, page 372). We are also told (pages 404, 405) that two men had come to South America to help the patriot cause: Francisco Miranda, who had served with Lafayette under Washington, and Bolivar, who had just returned to his country after a personal study of republican institutions in the United States.

On July 5, 1811, after a fiery speech by Bolivar, Venezuela was declared a republic. Its declaration of independence was modeled on that of the United States of North America. The United States of Brazil has a constitution with a general resemblance to the constitution of the United States of North America.

Canada has a governor-general appointed by the crown, but members of the house of commons are elected by the people for five years. The governor has a right to veto, but appeal lies with privy council. British dependencies in the Americas have governors appointed; but the legislative councils or executives are elected.

All the rest of the South American countries, also the islands of Cuba and Haiti, are republics patterned after the United States with presidents and houses of representatives, patterned like our senate and house, elected by vote of the citizens. In other words the wings of the American eagle, symbolic of a government for the people and by the people, have cast their shadow over the whole of America.

So when Isaiah says, "Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia" he meant just what he said. He meant North and South America.

Foundations of Zion

President W. Wallace Smith Visits Branch

EAST BAY BRANCH, BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA.—The following people were elected as officers for the year: Alma Andrews, pastor; James Cummings, E. A. Miller, Jack West, and Clark Vincent, counselors; Margaret Christensen, director of religious education; James Cummings, youth leader; Pauline White, women's leader; Cleo Cummings, director of music; Jane Vincent, director of drama and secretary; A. C. McDonald, treasurer; Roy Day, auditor; Luella Hawley, recorder; A. C. McDonald, bishop's solicitor; Gladys Carmichael, historian; Mabel Roy, book steward; Thelma Gibson, publicity agent; Russell Bessire and Edward Lewis, missionary supervisors; Jack West, visiting supervisor; Lily Peslin, Elmore McDonald, librarians; Fred Peslin, assistant treasurer and assistant bishop's solicitor; Archie Severy, building committee; Roy Day, finance committee. Ernie Miller was elected president of the priesthood group.

Five new members joined the church. Blessings at the East Bay Branch have included Pamela Souza, daughter of Pat and Carl Souza, and Leslie Rogers, son of Joe and Ann Rogers, now of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

On January 13, President W. Wallace Smith spoke in Berkeley. District conference was held there January 26 and 27. Apostle Gleazer assisted with classes and lectures. About 300 members of the Northern California District attended.

The Berkeley choir presented the Christmas portion of The Messiah on Sunday evening, December 23. They gave a variety show on February 4 in Berkeley and the same show at the San Leandro Branch on February 16.

The following men were ordained February 9: Russell Bessire, elder; Roy Peck, elder; Billie Rogers, deacon; Ray Lucas, priest; and Charles Mottashed, priest.—Reported by JANE VINCENT

Zion's League Has Party

JUNIATA, MICHIGAN.—Mr. and Mrs. George Davison were honored at a twenty-fifth anniversary party February 16 at Juniata Branch by their children, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Davison of Juniata; Mr. and Mrs. George Davison, Jr., of Germany; Harry of Pontiac; Don, Larry, and Ruth Ann of Mayville. A program of music and speaking was presented. Guests were present from Juniata, Mayville, Reese, Pontiac, Port Huron, and Sandusky. Refreshments were served in the church dining room, following the presentation of gifts to the couple. The wedding table was centered with a six-layer wedding cake baked by Mrs. Raymond Seabright, and Mrs. Angus Dickerson took pictures of the bride and groom.

Brother Davison was ordained a teacher February 10, and Angus Dickerson was ordained a priest. The ordination service was performed by Pastor E. S. Grinell and District President Jack Pement. Three candidates were baptized in the font at Marlette on February 10.

The Zion's League meets on Sunday evening for an hour of study which is followed by a song fest. The parents meet with the young people, and the group is studying Commentary of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Christmas drama, "The Unwanted Child," was presented by the League; Sisters Bob Davison and William Wells were the directors. The League held a box social and valentine party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Phelps, as a farewell party for President Keith Kowits, who left for the service.

Mrs. Angus Dickerson has organized a junior choir, which has nine members.—Reported by MRS. WILLARD PHELPS

New Building Under Construction

DECATUR, ILLINOIS.—The branch is in the process of building a new church. Plans have been made for the cornerstone-laying service to be held in May, at which time President Israel Smith will meet with the group. Also at the cornerstone service will be placed a stone from the Nauvoo Temple. The building fund is being helped by soliciting for suggestions for the inscription to go on the stone, accompanied by a consideration fee. The church building was planned by the architects who planned the Auditorium and will feature several unique ideas, including a cry room with one way glass, a baptismal font backed by glass brick, the church seal painted in colors on a glass panel four feet in diameter. This will be placed in the tower and will be lighted each evening. An amplifier will carry music from the tower preceding the services. A radiant heating system will be included in the building.—Reported by O. D. HENSON

Group Organized into Branch

CHANUTE-IOLA, KANSAS.—Mrs. T. W. Bath, district women's leader, addressed the women October 19, at the home of Mrs. Earl Bain in Chanute. The theme for the day was "Faith for These Times." The theme was also carried out in the devotional talk given by Mrs. W. R. Hill.

In the evening of the same day, Apostle D. O. Chesworth, District President Stephen Black, and Missionary Ralph Bobbitt were present at the organization of the group into a branch. The group met in the Federation Room of the Memorial Building in Chanute. The following officers were elected: Elder A. C. Barker, pastor; Priest W. R. Hill, assistant pastor; Mrs. George Carlson, women's leader; Mrs. Robert Vohs, young people's leader; Mrs. George Carlson, secretary; Leon Morrow, treasurer; Mrs. Howard Earnest, music leader; Mrs. Roy Trammel, historian; Mrs. Ennis Starkey, recorder; Mrs. Earl Bain, auditor; Mrs. Howard Earnest, solicitor; Robert Vohs, church school director; Mrs. Earl Bain, book steward; A. C. Barker, Leon Morrow, George Carlson, Roy Trammel, and Sam Matney, building and finance committee.

Missionary Ralph Bobbitt gave the sermon November 25 in Chanute and conducted a class at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Vohs in Iola, Sunday evening. He conducted a series for two weeks, holding cottage meetings, from November 19 to December 2. As a result of missionary endeavor, eight new members were baptized by Brother Bobbitt at the branch in Independence, Kansas, December 2. They were Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Maple and son Charles; Mr. and Mrs. Chester Moore; Sheila Morrow, Donald Wiles and sister, Miss Thelma Wiles. Elder Guy Cadwell was in charge of the confirmation service, assisted by Elders Myron Cadwell, Charles Cadmus, Norman Gray, Charles Anderson, and Stephen Black. Fifteen people joined the church in the past year from this group.

Robert Vohs was ordained to the office of priest and Leon Morrow to the office of teacher at the priesthood institute held at Racine, Missouri, October 21.

John Thomas was ordained to the office of deacon on November 15, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Walton, Iola, Kansas. Elder Black was in charge of the service. Brother and Sister Thomas and family are living in Lawrence, Kansas. Their small daughter, Jan Ann, was blessed at the service in Independence, along with the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Maple.

The women's department sponsored a Christmas party and covered dish dinner for the branch Friday evening, December 14, at Iola, and another dinner at the Little Theater in Iola on January 24. This was a covered dish birthday dinner, and each member brought his birthday offering. Brother Black was the guest speaker. Approximately seventy members and guests attended.

The regular Sunday morning services of the Chanute-Iola Branch are held in the Odd Fellow's Hall in Chanute where the group has met since 1943.—Reported by MRS. EARL BAIN

Money Raised for Building Fund

CHEROKEE, IOWA.—The women's department sponsored a fried chicken supper February 14 in the basement of the church. They served approximately 200 people, and $130 was cleared. The proceeds will go to the building fund, to help in the completion of the remodeling.—Reported by Mrs. H. F. MCCARTY

New Pastor Elected

LAWTON, OKLAHOMA.—The group meets in the I.O.O.F. Hall, Sixth and "D" Streets. The women's group meet twice each month and have named their group the Achichoyho Society.

On December 16, the group held a Christmas party at the Clyde Detty home. The children exchanged gifts and provided the entertainment. Thirty-five guests were present, and refreshments were served.

Brother Francis Presler was elected to succeed Brother Seth Osborn as pastor. Brother Osborn is now in the Far East Command. Sister Marie Detty was elected to replace Brother Alan Stiles as church school director, and Mrs. A. R. Johnson will act as his assistant.

On February 14, Brother R. W. Bunch of Wichita Falls, Texas, met with the group, and presented an illustrated lecture.

Several members attended the district conference in Davidson, February 23 and 24.—Reported by MRS. BETTE LINDMARK

Appointees at District Conference

MCALLEN, TEXAS.—The winter conference of the Southwestern Texas District was held February 9-10 in the Rio Grande Valley. On Friday evening prior to the conference, Elder and Mrs. J. E. Martin of Independence presented a study of technique in the use of flannelgraph. District President J. E. Wilder directed the opening service of the conference. Bishop Joseph Baldwin was the speaker on Saturday and Sunday mornings. A district business meeting was held on Saturday afternoon, at which time General Conference and reunion committee delegates were elected and several recommendations for ordination were approved.

The evening speaker was Evangelist L. S. Wight of Skokie, Illinois. Following the evening service, the young people had charge of the evensong.

Also present for the conference were Elders Wayne Simmons and Jack Wight.—Reported by SALLY WILSON

Seventy at Stake Conference

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The February stake conference had an attendance of 512 members of the stake. Thirty-nine delegates were elected to General Conference. Approximately 100 or more will be in attendance at the Conference from the stake. Seventy F. Edward Butterworth preached the evening sermon and told of his experiences in Tahiti.

The stake presidency and the stake bishopric presided over the conference. Some of the features were a children's chorus, a string trio, a male quartet, and pictures of the islands. The conference was held in the Piemontese Club, 13221 Puritan Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.—Reported by W. BLAIR McCLAIN

Five New Members Baptized

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—Elder Al Pelletier brought to a close a two-week series of missionary services on Sunday, February 17. Five new members were baptized Sunday morning. They were Linda Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Smith; Kenneth Flegel, son of Mr. Herman Flegel and the late Mrs. Flegel; Dorothy Benn, fiancée of Kenneth Flegel; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence McCooeye. Mrs. McCooeye is the former Leona Carkner. The confirmations took place at the evening service with Elders Pelletier, Evan Shute and A. E. Caldwell officiating.—Reported by MARIE FARROW

Mission Organized

ORLANDO, FLORIDA.—On Sunday evening, February 3, the branch was officially organized under the direction of Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Bishop Joseph Baldwin.

The Saints of Orlando and surrounding area were organized as a mission in December, 1948, by President W. Wallace Smith who was then apostle in charge of the Southern Mission. Average attendance has grown to around fifty on Sunday mornings. Midweek fellowship services have been well supported by attendance and participation.

Meetings have been held for the past two years in a studio which has been available on Sunday and Thursday evenings. Plans are developing for their own church home.

All officers elected in September, 1951, who chose to remain in office were re-elected. Mrs. Howard Roberts, recently of Kirtland, is the new leader of women.

There are approximately fifty charter members of the new branch.—Reported by GERALDINE MARTIN

Five Men Ordained

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—The church has had improvements made on the interior. A new front for the church has been completed and the kitchen has been remodeled. An electric organ has been purchased. Five men were ordained to the priesthood. They are Leo Sheppard, elder; George D. Sheppard, teacher; Jack Waddell, priest; William Shafer, deacon; and Abe Miller, deacon.—Reported by ORA BURGESS

Successful Carnival Held

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The women sponsored a carnival, and the amount of money netted was over $1,000. A large club hall was rented that offered space for the many varied and interesting booths. Activities of interest were offered, and the money will be used for the Commodity Shop to be opened in Detroit. Other projects to raise money for this are being planned.—Reported by MINNIE TRUDELL

Activities in English Mission

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—At the annual business meeting in September, High Priest J. F. Schofield was sustained as pastor; he appointed Priest D. A. Oakman and Elder F. W. Judd as counselors.

Other branch officers sustained were Rose Worth, secretary, Deacon Albert Worth, treasurer; Elder Frank W. Judd, young people's leader; Violet Worth, church school director; Freda Schofield, women's leader; Dover A. Judd, musical director; Walter S. Wicks, historian; Lily Oakman, publicity agent and librarian; Flossie Tatman and Rose Worth, auditors. William Lawrence is bishop's agent; Frances Castle, Oriole leader, and Joyce Maloney, assistant; Jennie Wicks, Skylark leader, and Lillian Carr, assistant; Albert Worth, Boy's Club leader, and Phillip Maloney, assistant.

An alteration was made in the finance and maintenance committee to which Brother F. W. Judd was elected in place of Brother D. A. Oakman. The latter has served on the committee for the past ten years, and a vote of thanks for his services was passed.

At the Zion's League business meeting Roy D. A. Oakman was sustained as president, Lillian Carr as vice-president; Gladys Castle, secretary; and Frances Castle, treasurer.

The women's department re-elected Freda Schofield, leader. Edith Lawrence was elected assistant leader; Kitty Elmes, treasurer; Nellie Wicks, secretary; and Rose Butler and Gladys Judd, visitors to the sick.

The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Frank W. Judd, born March 2, 1951, was blessed April 1, and given the names Ruth Florence. The pastor officiated.

Baptisms since February, 1951, have been as follows: Miss Ida Hart, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hydes, J. A. Judd, Sr., Adrian Adams, Lewis Folkes, David Worth, Derek Judd, and Peter Judd. James Worth, elder son of Seventy and Sister Thomas E. Worth, was baptized and confirmed at Enfield in August.

Two members have been lost by transfer. They are Sister Barrett and her daughter, Merle North, who emigrated to the United States in June. Two other members, Brother and Sister W. Tearall have moved to Bognor Regis, a south coast resort, for the benefit of Brother Tearall's health. Lois Schofield of Birmingham is worshiping with the branch and helping in the church school, while attending college in London.

Priesthood institutes, under the direction of District President F. A. Fry, were held in March and November of 1951.

The following projects were sponsored during 1951 to raise funds: A Zion's League rummage sale, Boy's Club paper drives; women's department socials; and the annual bazaar in November. Monthly contributions are also made to the building improvements fund.

Youth services are held periodically, and junior worship services are held once a month.

Special services have been held including Sanitarium Day, Graceland Day, Auditorium Sunday, and special Christmas programs. The church school presented a missionary Christmas play December 16.

Seventy T. E. Worth visited the branch for missionary work in the fall.

The Skylarks and Orioles presented plays in April. An outing to Kew Gardens was held on Easter Monday. The annual church school outing was in June at Southend-on-Sea. The women's department also went to this resort for their annual outing in June. In July and September Saturday afternoon rambles were held. The first was followed by tea and a vesper service at the church, and the second was to pick blackberries with a picnic tea and recreation following.

A statuette of Christ holding a child, made by Brother J. A. Judd, Jr., to hold the Three Standard Books, and an Inspired Version of the Bible, given by Brother Arthur H. Wicks, have been presented as gifts to the branch. The front of the school hall platform has been redecorated by young men of the branch with the aid of the Boy's Club. Albert Lawrence, a nonmember, donated many hours to help paint this.

Visitors to the branch during 1951 were Brothers Fred and George Furness from Kansas City, Missouri, and Owen Sound, Ontario, respectively, in May; Bishop and Sister Mark H. Siegfried in June; Brother and Sister Fisher of Boston, Massachusetts, in July; Richard Cheville of Lamoni, Iowa, in August; Brother and Sister Hicks in September; and Elder Percy Judd of Brooklyn, New York, in November.—Reported by LILY E. A. OAKMAN

Seventy Shows Slides of Tahiti

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—A joint meeting of the women's department was held February 14. The worship setting and devotional was centered on our country. Mrs. Edward Butterworth, the guest speaker, gave a very interesting talk on the homes in Tahiti and the work of the women, after which a short business session was conducted by Mary Leka, branch women's leader. A valentine motif was carried out in the refreshments. Hostesses were Mrs. Charles Angel, Mrs. Carl Angel, and Mrs. B. F. Kyser.

District President Stephen A. Black was guest speaker at the morning service on February 10. His sermon was on "Witnessing."

The first meeting of the Skylarks for girls between the ages of seven and ten was held at the home of Mrs. Ralph Bobbitt on February 5. Skylarks will meet each Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Bobbitt and Mrs. D. W. Guinee are co-leaders.

Sixty-four members were represented in the filing of financial statements which were presented to the bishop's agent, Walter N. Sample, at the Communion service on February 3.

Margeva Bishop and Alex Lakebrink were married by the pastor at the church on Saturday evening, January 26, in the presence of relatives. Lois Washington and Clifford Carr, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Carr, were married by Priest E. G. Gilbert at a candlelighted afternoon service January 27. Lois and Clifford are making their home at Norman where he is a student at the University of Oklahoma.

A party for the children's department was held January 26 in the lower auditorium. The program was planned by Mrs. Bob Warnberg.

The Young Matrons are sponsoring a story hour for children between the ages of four and twelve each Saturday afternoon in the lower auditorium. Mrs. Carl Angel is directing the story hour. She is assisted by Mrs. Guinee, program; Mrs. Charles Angel, transportation; Mrs. J. D. Rook, refreshments; and other members.

Seventy F. Edward Butterworth showed colored slides, which were taken in the Society Islands, to the Marietta Circle in the lower auditorium on January 25. Husbands and members of the Young Matrons were guests. Brother Butterworth was the speaker at the morning service on January 27. At the evening service he showed several sound movies followed by a short talk on some of his experiences in Tahiti.

The pastor, Elder B. F. Kyser, was presented with a birthday gift on his birthday January 20.

The Zion's League raised $46 with a cornbread and beans supper on January 18. This will be sent to the district funds for the swimming pool project at the reunion grounds at Racine, Missouri.

Spring River District Missionary Ralph Bobbitt was the speaker for the morning and evening services on January 13. Alex J. Lakebrink was baptized by the pastor. He was confirmed by Elders Alvin Smith and B. F. Kyser.—Reported by BETTY KYSER

Evangelist Holds Series

PALM CITY, CALIFORNIA.—Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag conducted a series at the National City mission the week of January 20-27. Meetings were held every evening except January 26. Brother Ostertag also gave five patriarchal blessings. Those receiving blessings were Sisters Grace Kelly, Jean Bradshaw, Adeline Bozarth, and Ermine A. Garris of National City, and Brother Robert Martin of the Escondido mission.—Reported by W. BRUCE BOZARTH

Bishop Visits Branch

CLIO, MICHIGAN.—Five new members were baptized at a special New Year's Eve service. The confirmation service, a flannelgraph story, and a candlelight Communion followed this. Refreshments were served in the basement of the church. Lois Bechtel, Robert Luce, Elaine Hagel, Violet Walken, and her son Edward were baptized. The flannelgraph of the Nativity story was presented by Sisters Little and Morrison of Flint.

A Flint poet, Reginald Holmes, presented an "Hour of Poetry" one Sunday in January. He attributed his talent and inspiration to God. Mr. Holmes is a cousin of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Zion's League is printing a monthly paper, "The Zion's Messenger." The name was suggested by Sister Cora Cook. The first edition was dedicated to the late Robert Luce who was the first elder in the Clio Branch to pass away.

Bishop T. A. Beck and his companion, Sunshine, visited the Clio Branch on February 3, 4, and 5. He was present for the priesthood early morning prayer service and the Communion service. Bishop Beck met with the young people in the afternoon and discussed the "Youth's Responsibility in the Financial Law." He visited the choir rehearsal, and ended his visit at a potluck dinner for the priesthood on the evening of February 4.—Reported by ANN PHILLIPS

Baby Blessed

ANDOVER, IOWA.—Crystal Leone, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Snethen, born January 9, 1951, was blessed Sunday, November 11, by Elder Roland Prather and Bishop Earl T. Higdon.—Reported by MRS. RALPH NAUMAN

Seven Baptized at District Conference

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.—The winter-spring two-day conference of the Spokane District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was concluded Sunday afternoon, February 17. More than 280 were in attendance from various church branches and missions throughout the district comprised of eastern Washington and northwestern Idaho.

Delegates selected to represent the Spokane District at the General Conference were Elder R. V. Webb, pastor of the Spokane Branch, Dallas Webb, J. F. Curtis, Warren Farber, Eunice Farber, David W. Gordon, Donna Myers, Leo V. Taylor, and Ella Goodfellow, all of Spokane. Also selected was Dwaine Whiting of Richland, Washington.

The calls of the following men to the priesthood were ratified by the conference membership: to the office of elder: Warren L. Farber, of Spokane and Charles M. Emslee, of Bridgeport, to the office of priest: Leo V. Taylor, Elbert Elefson, David W. Gordon and John L. Portor.

There have been seven baptisms in Spokane in 1952, all taking place during the district conference. Irene Collins, Gary Collins, Larry Collins, Billy Collins, Louis Purcell and Betty Elefson were baptized. Also baptized was Harold Cosand of Lewiston, Idaho.

Conducting the two-day conference were Apostles D. O. Chesworth and E. J. Gleazer, Sr.

The North Hill Mission has been organized since November 25, 1951, with Elder A. F. Coleman in charge, assisted by Elder T. A. Beck. The mission enjoys an average weekly attendance of seventy.

A birthday dinner was held Friday, February 1, sponsored by the women's department of the branch and mission. The women's department has also conducted a number of successful bake sales.—Reported by DAVID W. GORDON

Ordination Service Held

SEASIDE, CALIFORNIA.—On February 3, preceding the Communion service, Robert G. Park was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Lewis H. Adams and Kenneth Richmond. A building fund has been started and progress is being made in the group.—Reported by LEWIS H. ADAMS

Fitly Framed Together

By Mrs. C. G. Mesley

THIS ASSIGNMENT of gathering up the various speeches of the Institute might be easy or difficult, according to the individual's point of view. One speaker said that while she sat in the congregation, piece by piece some of her choicest thunder was stolen. That was about three quarters of the way through the sessions. Now, at this closing day, it would be easy to say everything has been said so beautifully that all that is needed is a good-by and "pleased to have been with you." It would be equally easy to wax poetic by quoting—

What shall I sing when all is sung
And every tale is told,
And there is nothing in the world
That was not long since old.

—then sit down.

It would even be possible to be perverse by saying, "I am so full of good things brought by the speakers, that I am not in the mood to talk—I just want to sit and think!" I could even quote Scripture to support this position: "For if you have not the spirit, you shall not teach." But a person of unsavory reputation is credited with quoting Scripture when it suited his purposes. That would put me in undesirable company. So, putting all frivolity, light-mindedness, and natural naughtiness behind me, I accept a difficult assignment.

I WANT to thank God for the privilege of being here. There are many sisters overseas whose hearts and prayers are turned toward this institute and who long to be here with us. In this country there are hundreds who would be here if they possibly could. I am here—and I want to express my deep gratitude for the privilege.

I want to thank you for coming, and for coming in so splendid a spirit. It has not been easy for some of you to make the necessary arrangements. Perhaps it has meant giving up some treasured project in order to finance the trip. But you are here.

From the Council point of view I should have found it most disappointing if, after all the weeks of preparation, you had failed to respond to our invitation, or if, having come, you were in supercilious or critical mood. But by the grace of God and your own earnestness you are here—intelligent in your listening and generous in your response. For this I thank God.

In this spirit of gratitude I wish to read part of Paul's letter to the saints at Ephesus:

In time past we walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in . . . fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ, And hath raised us up together, and hath made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. . . . Wherefore, remember, that ye being in times past . . . aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise . . . now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both, one; and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us . . . that he might reconcile both unto God.

Therefore ye are no more strangers . . . but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God:

And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone;

In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord:

In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

LESS than a week ago we came here—not as strangers exactly, but certainly as individuals. We came from various parts of the country. At least one sister is here who lived in Maine until recently. Some are from California, Alabama, Texas, Canada, Michigan, and all the middle western states. Some are from overseas. We came from varied homes, some small, some larger; some modern, some not so modern; some spilling over with babies; some with a moderate supply; some where the babies have grown up and gone away; some where there never have been any babies; and some where the babies are just beginning to arrive! Various occupations are represented here. We are mostly homemakers, but we have been teachers, stenographers, nurses, secretaries, photographers, writers, actresses, and so on. Indirectly, through the occupations of our husbands we represent lawyers, doctors, dentists, ministers, and craftsmen. The industries, commerce, and agriculture are all here, and all cast their influence over our homes and help to form the patterns of our daily living.

We came from varied backgrounds. Racial backgrounds are here—Welsh, English, German, Dutch, French, Greek, Polish, and those who came in the "Mayflower." Different cultural, social, and economic backgrounds are here. What a heterogeneous group! No wonder no two of us are alike.

During these days together something has been happening—a divine alchemy has been at work. In medieval times alchemy was a chemical science having two great objects: one, to transmute base metals such as lead, tin, and iron into gold; the other, to discover the universal cure for diseases and the means of indefinitely prolonging life. During this week a divine alchemy has been at work on some of the less worthy aspects of mere individualism, transmuting them into a "togetherness." We may have come here as individuals—and we still will preserve some of our individuality—yet we have grown into an integrated whole. We stand here today as a group of women different in many ways, but, because of our having been here, we are more united in the greatest Cause on earth—the establishment of the kingdom of God. We have been lifted up, together, into heavenly places.

THESE last few days have brought us many speakers on various subjects. Specialists have most graciously given of their knowledge, training, and experience in such far-flung fields as public speaking, welfare work, music, and evangelization. These talks were prepared separately with no collaboration, and with very little help from the Council. Yet through these diversified fields one note has been sounded common to all—a note fundamental to success in each area and every undertaking—and sounded either consciously or unconsciously by each speaker.

In the very first address of this institute, Sister J. Harry Paxton struck that note when she spoke of having come to the place when she wanted to love and understand everybody. This is a big step forward in spiritual maturity. Sister George Shippey spoke of the many practical ways of loving and sharing in helping a new leader begin her work. Sister W. S. Bennet and Sister Stephen Black, speaking on the preparation and delivery of a speech, both emphasized that a speech must well up from the overflow of a loving, eager heart. Sister S. A. Burgess pleaded for an especial outreach of loving understanding in all welfare work, and Brother Evan Fry listed this same quality as basic for successful evangelism.

So it went through speech after speech—when two of our guest speakers came in just for a day or even an hour, this same note was emphasized. Doctor Adams spoke of our obligation to try to understand our young people and the need to stand by them at all times, especially when they make mistakes. Sister Velma Ruch, not having heard other addresses here, was completely in tune, begging us not to condemn young people but to understand and serve them. Through speech after speech ran this fundamental requirement of intelligent, disciplined, sacrificial, joyous love. Nor has this been mere theory alone with these speakers. Each was a personal testimony; each was motivated by this spirit of divine sharing. Because of the messages they brought, and because of the quality of lives behind those messages, our hearts have been thrilled, our souls uplifted, and our strength renewed. "All fitly framed together"—musician and executive, friendly visitor and public speaker, teacher and doctor, homemaker and evangelist—all made one in purpose by the grace of God and by his Spirit dwelling in and among us. This Spirit of God is the divine alchemy that has been at work among us, unifying the work of the speakers, purifying the motives of us all, and transforming us from a group of individuals into a great and worthy fellowship.

Paul, writing to some of his converts, reminded them that "God had set in the church apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ." To this list might be added the various departments through which the work will be done. Something like this: "And God set in his church, his priesthood, and the department of music, and that of drama, the Department of Religious Education, and the department of recreation and of young people, the financial department of the church, and the Department of Women, for the perfecting of the saints, until we come to the measure of the stature of Christ Jesus."

THIS WEEK we have seen the Institute enriched by contributions from various phases of church endeavor and have caught a glimpse of the possibilities of this department in turn strengthening and supporting their work. All individuals in each department, by the grace and power of God, are "fitly framed together."

Very soon we shall be leaving here; going back to stakes, to districts, to branches; going back to Maine and California, to Canada and the Gulf. We stand here today in proud humility. We go back to our responsibilities as those who gladly serve.

Some shipping companies have an interesting custom. Passengers are supplied with several rolls of brightly colored paper streamers. From the deck of the liner, they hold one end of the streamers and toss the rolls to friends waiting on the dock. As the ship moves out the streamers unwind making hundreds of gay ribbons stretching from ship to shore. You will be going. We shall remain. Between us will stretch the invisible streamers of mutual endeavor, devotion, faith, prayer, and the power and presence of God—streamers going from here to the smallest group in which you serve.

And as you go, what will you take to your branches? Important techniques that you have learned? Your broadened vision? Yes, for without vision the people perish. Your enthusiasm and renewed strength? Yes, indeed. Your memories of happy friendships? Surely. Take these, for they are important. Take them, but take infinitely more. Take

Release for Barabbas

By Berde Rooney

THE HOME of Barabbas was not a beautiful place—only two rooms in a large, dingy house that sheltered many families, most of whom were concerned only with their own way of life, asking little more in the way of diversion than the privilege of exchanging stories and jokes as they drank their wine, sitting around the tables of the tavern in the lower chamber of the big apartment house.

They had all things in common, these tenement dwellers of the old world. No one was considered better than his neighbor, only more or less clever, for, by profession, they were thieves.

This was the only home Barabbas had ever known. His parents had lived here before he was born, and he had been trained since childhood in the art of thievery.

But such was not the case with his wife, pretty, dark-eyed, soft-voiced Rachel. She could remember a childhood home in the country, with clean rooms, good food from a carefully tended garden, and a grassy meadow for a playground.

That was before her parents died leaving her bewildered and heart-broken. Her only known relative was a distant cousin who generously offered to care for her. He brought her to this house to live with him and his wife.

Rachel was then but ten years old, and Barabbas a handsome lad of fourteen. Something about the shy little stranger touched his heart, and he at once assumed the role of protector, for the tenement boys were often rude in their play and Rachel was frightened. As the years passed their friendship ripened into love, and they were married.

By that time Rachel had, in a measure, become accustomed to surroundings so that she made no outward sign of her true feelings, but secretly she never ceased to hate the whole evil business of which she had unwittingly become a part.

Often she dreamed of a time, somewhere in the future, when she would be able to persuade her husband to seek a better way of life. Although his profession brought out a cruel side of his nature, Barabbas was kind to Rachel, and in the only way he knew he loved her devotedly. He did not suspect that his gifts of beautiful garments and flashing jewels lost their value in her eyes because they were stolen goods.

Then little Nathan was born, and her desire to leave their sordid way of life behind them grew stronger day by day. "Surely," she told herself, "there will be some way out. Nathan must not grow up in such an environment."

But no way presented itself, and Barabbas continued to slink stealthily through darkened alleys, or way-lay unsuspecting merchantmen on lonely highways until almost two years had passed by.

ONE DAY when the tiny boy was playing near the stairs that led to the basement, he dropped his ball and it rolled down the steps to the floor below.

In baby fashion he slid from one step to another until he reached the bottom and with the bright red ball in his hand was making his way again to the top.

At that moment Barabbas, trying to elude the officers, dashed into the house and down the steps on his way to a secret hiding place in the basement.

As his huge bulk encountered the creeping child half way down the dim stairway, there was a sickening crush, a scream of pain, and father and son rolled down the stairs together. Frantic with dread Barabbas gathered the now unconscious form of his baby in his arms and, carrying him to his bed, sent a neighbor to summon a doctor. Breathlessly the parents waited while the doctor examined the broken little body and shook his head.

"It is better that your baby should die," he told them, as kindly as he was able to say it. "If he lives he will always be a cripple."

Then the officers came and took Barabbas away to a dungeon to await trial for his crimes, and Rachel was left to bear her burden of grief alone. Friends came to offer help and sympathy. As the days went by, someone told her of a healer called Jesus who could work miracles when even the doctors failed to cure. He claimed, they said, to receive his power from the Almighty.

RACHEL remembered when she had prayed to Jehovah, kneeling with her parents in the home of her childhood. Now, in her despair, she fell on her knees again, praying that God would help her to find the healer. Then lifting her precious little one in her arms she set out in search of Jesus.

Meanwhile Barabbas had been found guilty and was sentenced to death. On the day set for his execution, which was to be crucifixion on Golgotha, there was confusion in the court of Pilate. It was the custom, during the feast of the Passover, to release one prisoner who had been condemned to die.

Pilate would have released Jesus of Nazareth, in whom he found no cause for death, but had condemned him at the insistence of the mobbers who again cried out riotously for his execution, demanding that Barabbas be released instead. For the second time Pilate yielded to their wishes, and Barabbas was set free.

It was good to leave the darkness of the dungeon, but Barabbas was not happy as he walked out into the sunshine. There was no exaltation in the thought that he no longer needed to be on his guard to escape apprehension by the law of the land. Dully he thought that now, freed of the fetters that had held him bound to his companions in crime, he could take Rachel away to seek the life for which she longed. But the thought brought him no joy.

Before him rose the picture of little Nathan, who but for his own blundering to escape punishment for his evil deeds would be strong and happy. How could he go home to face the tragic eyes of Rachel and look upon the suffering of his child?

AS HE LINGERED Barabbas heard the people talking to the man who was being taken to his execution—the man who was to die in his stead. Fascinated he followed the crowd to Golgotha. He saw the mother of Jesus as she watched her son being nailed to the cross.

His heart was heavy as he thought of Rachel, also mourning because she was helpless before the suffering of her son.

Barabbas drew nearer. What was it the friends of this man were saying? That he went about doing good! That he healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, lifted up the fallen! Then why should he be put to death?

Puzzled he turned away and slowly started for home. Reaching the door he opened it softly, dreading to enter. But a shout of joy greeted him as little Nathan came running to meet him.

Stunned, Barabbas fell to his knees and the baby's arms went around his neck. There Rachel joined him, her eyes shining.

"Jesus healed our little son," she said. "Oh, Barabbas, let us go together to find him again and follow after him, for his is the good way of life."

Barabbas' face paled. "Who?" he stammered. "What is the healer's name?"

"Jesus," was the glad answer. "Jesus Christ! He healed our child and spoke peace to my soul. Oh, I wish you might have seen him."

For a moment Barabbas stared at his wife as one paralyzed. Then his lips moved. "Jesus Christ gave me back my son." The dark head bowed against Rachel's shoulder and his words came in sobs. "I have seen him. . . . I watched while they nailed him to a cross that was meant for me."

From Heels to Souls - By Jane Parks Vincent

THE LITTLE BELL tinkled merrily as I opened the door of the shoeshop. It was almost closing time on New Year's Eve, and the shop was deserted. A short, smiling man in a black shoemaker's apron came toward the counter. I set my shoes down on the bright, linoleum-covered top and said, "A pair of heels, please."

The little man placed my shoe on an old iron frame and began to repair the heel. His tired eyes smiled as he looked up and asked—over the hum of the machinery—if it were still raining outside. I replied that it was, and we discussed briefly the "unusual" California weather.

"Too bad—this bein' New Year's Eve. So many people will be out celebrating." Then he added: "I suppose you're going out, too."

I explained that my husband and I had just returned from a week-end church yule camp with 120 teen-agers, and now felt like a quiet evening at home.

"What church was it?" he asked as he tacked away at the heel of my shoe.

"Here it comes," I thought to myself. I took a deep breath. "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

I thought he would gulp as he waded through that and forget the whole thing. But instead he said, "Oh, yes, I'm familiar with your church."

Thinking immediately that he must have the wrong church, since so many confuse it with the large Mormon church in town, I quickly added, "That isn't the Mormon Church, you know."

"No, yours is down on Ashby Avenue, isn't it?"

"Why, yes—that's the one."

"A member of your church gave me a little pamphlet to read some time ago, and I was quite interested in it."

We talked for some time, and I was amazed at his ready willingness to discuss religion over the counter. He asked me several questions about the differences between our church and the Mormon Church, and I explained as well as I could, telling him that the next time I came in I would bring him a tract that would explain our doctrine more in detail.

I fully expected him to shy away at this point, but he was very eager to receive the tracts and to pursue the subject at a later date.

He handed me the shoes, and I paid him. As I turned to go I thought how very much it had helped our discussion to have had someone prepare the way by giving him the first tract.

I had been almost overwhelmed by his eagerness to hear the Restoration Message as I realized perhaps more fully that, "The field is white, all ready to harvest."

to your branches this "togetherness"—which has been demonstrated again here—that with all your individuality you may be one in your devotion to the building of the kingdom. Take to your branches this sense of the grace of God working in our hearts and lives as it has worked here this week. Take back the deep love that, if need be, suffers long and is kind, is not easily provoked, thinks no evil, is not puffed up, seeks not her own. Take them a sense of obligation. God has been so good to us; he has raised us up together and has made us to sit together in heavenly places.

God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love, . . . hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down any middle wall of partition between us; . . . for through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.

Ye are . . . built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, . . . an habitation of God through the Spirit.—Eph. 2.

Letters

On the Word of Wisdom

I feel that the Word of Wisdom is particularly timely now because of the blessings promised to those who observe it. Yet I believe there are many who do not fully understand it. One sister said that we should not use hot soup or any other hot liquid, but God said he gave us the Word of Wisdom in consequence of designing men. I am a living witness to the benefits received from observing it. I do not remember that there was ever a time when I was too ill to get up and dress myself, and I have never called for a doctor—except the Great Physician.

I wonder when we shall learn to govern our appetites instead of letting them govern us. I am convinced that God's plan is sufficient for every need I have and that it will provide for me to the end.

The Lord Will Provide

I am writing this little sketch on the island of Niau, a Tuamotuan island, where Seventy Horahitu and I are waiting for a schooner to take us to Tahiti. It was upon this island at a mission conference in 1911 that we had a very wonderful experience. Saturday, April 17, our food supplies were very low indeed, save for a few sacks of flour. We were wondering what to do for food for the following day and we found no solution until late in the afternoon when a great flock of birds were seen dipping down into the sea. This was a sign of fish, the aubopu, and the birds were feasting on the small fish on the surface, while the aubopu were feasting on them from below. A great call was made and several natives with their canoes and aubopu fishing tackle made haste to reach the point where the fish were. They made a great haul, bringing in 880 aubopu. The average weight of the aubopu is about three and a half kilo or seven pounds, which amounted to over three tons of fish—more than sufficient for the thousand and more Saints and friends who had gathered for the mission conference.

Our mission paper, Te Orometua, of April, 1911, had this to say: "Because of this gift of food all the people rejoiced as they 'ate the loaves and fishes.' The people marveled at this gift of food for the like of it had never been known on this island from the beginning."

I might also add that this is the island where Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and I dedicated one of our finest church buildings in the Society Island Mission in 1935, which together with the new assembly house makes a very fine appearance.

From a Little Child

Soon after I was baptized into the Reorganized Church I wrote to my Catholic parents to tell them about my new belief. At first they didn't write to me at all, but one sister, who had been closer to me than the others, did. She said, "You are dragging our mother's and father's souls to hell by leaving the church!" As I read, tears filled my eyes, but since my four-year-old daughter Betty was near and wouldn't understand my emotions, I fought for composure. Then I went to the woodpile and started chopping, thinking I could work off my pent-up feelings. Tears came so fast I could hardly see, and I could almost feel the pain in my heart because of those words of condemnation. Suddenly I stopped; little Betty had walked out on the porch and was singing, "He promised never to leave me, never to leave me alone." Ordinarily Betty couldn't carry a tune, but she was singing this perfectly, so I knew it was a message from heaven for me. I went up on the porch and put my arms about her. She said, "Mamma, you worked so hard your eyes are wet. Oh, you're squeezing me too tight!"

Just as I believe this was a revelation from a loving, living God, so I believe the testimony of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in Section 76 of the Doctrine and Covenants. I am thrilled to know that this wonderful hope is not for me alone, but for all who will listen. Someday I believe my family will hear and accept the gospel as I have.

I have had other experiences that have comforted my troubled heart and brought peace to my soul. I sincerely hope these lines may bring comfort and hope to others who are burdened.

Hears "Messiah" Broadcast

For various reasons we had never listened to the "Messiah" broadcast until this year. We began planning early in December to listen, but then the radio broke. We sent it to the shop to be fixed, and for a while it worked well. Then it began grinding and roaring around December 20. The only way we could listen to a program was to sit by the radio and turn it off when the static started, and then turn it on again immediately. On the evening of the program we turned the radio on before the "Messiah" broadcast, and the noise was worse than ever. However, when the program did start, the radio cleared with the first few strains of music. We enjoyed every note of it and didn't have to turn the radio off once. After it was over my husband said, "Wasn't that wonderful? It's the clearest reception we've ever had." I said, "Yes, God's hand was at the switch."

The next morning when we turned the radio on, the same roaring and grinding was back again. Truly God works in many ways his wonders to perform.

To All Wahdemnas

The Wahdemna Choral Club will sing at the evening service on March 30, the first Sunday of Conference. In preparation there will be two rehearsals: the first at 2:00 p.m., March 23, in the choir room of the Auditorium for all those in the greater Kansas City area who have ever been members, and the second at 8:00 p.m. in the Englewood Church, Saturday evening, March 29, for both residents and conference guests who have belonged to the organization. This second rehearsal will be combined with a reception. If you are a former Wahdemna and have not been contacted, please save these dates and attend one or both of these rehearsals if possible.

In 1914 she was married to Frank Hester, who preceded her in death in 1925. One daughter was born to them. On April 15, 1925, she was married to Willis Garner, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Besides her husband she leaves her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Ellen Hester of Kansas City, Missouri; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Ruth Barker of Independence; a half-sister, Mrs. Rosa Henson of Independence; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HEATH.—Frederick Joy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Heath of Milford, Missouri, was born March 7, 1908, at Taberville, Missouri, and died February 7, 1952, at his home in Milford. In 1935 he was married to Guma Shirk; four children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since early in life.

He is survived by his wife; three sons; one daughter; his parents; five brothers; and three sisters. Funeral services were held at the St. James Community Church, Elders John Noyes and Dewey Stukesbury officiating. Interment was in St. James Cemetery.

DAWSON.—Stella L., died April 29, 1951, of a heart attack in Cottage Hospital, Galesburg, Illinois, at the age of sixty-seven. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty years and was always a faithful worker.

DeFRANCE.—Mont R., was born February 5, 1872, at Sandy Lakes, Pennsylvania, and died February 25, 1952, at El Reno, Oklahoma. He was married on February 12, 1905, to Nettie Thomas; six children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 6, 1925.

He is survived by his wife; two sons, Fred and Clifford of Calumet, Oklahoma; three daughters: Mrs. Mildred Kappus of Calumet; Mrs. Mabel Dyer of Geary, Oklahoma; and Miss Rose DeFrance of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. One son, Jim, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Red Rock Church, Elder Elmer Richards and William Slanaker officiating. Interment was in Red Rock cemetery.

MILLMAN.—Rosella, daughter of John and Barbara Millman, was born February 11, 1866, at Winona, Minnesota, and died January 28, 1952, at Manteno, Illinois. She spent the early part of her life caring for her parents. After their death she resided in Chicago and Manteno. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 15, 1896.

Funeral services were held at her home in Manteno, Elders Earl D. Rogers and Elmer L. Kahler officiating. Burial was in Beverly Cemetery, Chicago.

HAMPTON.—Grace E., daughter of Lon R. and Marie E. Holmes, was born on March 21, 1912, in Ft. Worth, Texas, and died February 22, 1952, in Independence, Missouri. As a child she moved with her family to Colorado, where she grew to womanhood. On September 3, 1930, she was married to Frank Schaeffer; one son was born to them. After this marriage was dissolved in 1935 she was married to Robert D. Hampton; one daughter was born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eight years old and was an active worker, especially in the music department.

She is survived by her son, Pvt. Wayne D. Holmes of Ft. Riley, Kansas; her daughter, Barbara Myrna, of the home; her father; a sister, Mrs. Vernon Young of Independence; and a brother, Glen E. Holmes of Englewood, California. Services were held at the Dixon Kopley Funeral Home, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Almer W. Sheehy officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BISHOP KOHLMAN TRAVELS

Bishop Leslie Kohlman was in Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 13; Fort Madison, Iowa, and Nauvoo, Illinois, January 20; and in St. Louis, Missouri, January 27. These trips were made in accordance with special Financial Emphasis Day observance. On February 24, Brother Kohlman was in Springfield, Illinois, for the Central Illinois District Priesthood Institute.

SCOUT CONFERENCE HELD

Over one hundred Independence Scouters attended the two sessions of the training conference on Church-Boy Scout relations March 9 at the Stone Church Cottage. This is the first meeting of this type ever held in Independence. Carl Mesle, General Church youth director, was speaker at the meeting, and a group composed of Jay Keck, Kenneth Taylor, Mason Stobaugh, Carl Mesle, and the chairman, Lee Hart, discussed the techniques of instruction in the award program. Following this, Lee Hart conducted an open discussion in which the Scouters gave ideas and "recommendations for the promotion of the God and Country Award program."

 THE TWIST

At the local provisioner's I obtained a quaint bottle of "1890 French Salad Dressing." It bore the usual exhortation, "Shake Well Before Using." But then it added an odd phrase, "With a twist of the wrist." How long is it since you heard that antique expression?

Something to be noted: In the Gay Nineties they had the idea that they might accomplish something by just the right twist of their own wrists. Our trouble today is that we try to twist somebody else's wrist.

 HOW FAR TO KANSAS CITY?

On the highways, the driver takes a great interest in the mileposts. Outside each town and major intersection is a sign that records the distances to cities that lie ahead. Independence people watch for mileages to their neighbor, Kansas City. How far is Kansas City? Does the mileage mean to the city limits, or downtown? It spreads over a great area, flows around the little satellite towns, and slops over into surrounding counties, like a bucket much too full.

Independence is closer to downtown Kansas City—a mere nine miles—than is some parts of the south end of the city itself—fifteen miles from Tenth and Main.

In other respects, Independence is far, far away from the same city. Over here, we call folks by their first names. Over there, they may not speak at all, except for commercial purposes. Over here, we go to church on Sundays. Over there, they may go to the movies. Over here we have more homes. Over there they live in flats and hotels, unless they go far out.

Another thing has increased the distance to Kansas City—the bus fare is 25c now. We'll do more shopping at home after this. Local and neighborhood stores everywhere should pick up a bit of business.

Spiritually, the Auditorium, Stone Church, and the many church homes of our congregations make a great difference. We are far away from the city, in purpose, in hope, in outlook. We always will be different in that way.

 AMBITION

A tiny eating place carries this bold sign: "We serve a thousand, eight at a time."

If small churches could work on that plan, they could bring the gospel to great congregations. It has become a convention that the time to go to church is Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. This keeps a church dark and idle too much of the time.

 SURPRISE

It is not unusual, near the campus, to hear the long, low, two-note whistle that indicates appreciation, invitation, and expectation. For some reason they call it a wolf-whistle.

This time the notes were startlingly clear, but there was no car passing by, no lad on foot. In fact, there was no girl around. But high in a tree there was a mockingbird, practicing something he must have heard in the neighborhood. Think what higher education is doing for the birds!

Everyone Vote

1952 is to be a political year. The citizens of the United States will choose thirty-six senators and all members of the House of Representatives, as well as many state and city officials. So now, early in the year and before our plea can be thought of as favoring any specific party or candidate, we say to the members of the church who are also American citizens: "Be sure to exercise your franchise. Everybody vote." And what we say to members of the church in the United States we say, in principle, to members of the church everywhere: "Everyone vote."

There are some among us who regard politics as a sordid affair. In many places and on many occasions, this may be true. But it is not necessarily true. It is true only in so far as politicians are sordid persons; only in so far as the business of government is left entirely to selfish men or is given only spasmodic attention by men of good will.

The Saints were admonished long ago that "honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold."—Doctrine and Covenants 95:2. We have been impressed that for our people today this means more than appears from a casual reading. Honest and good and wise men should be sought out diligently and upheld steadfastly. And as part of our diligent searching some should look steadily and honestly into their own hearts and lives to see if, perchance, they now qualify as such men; or if they can so qualify by diligent, sustained, and devoted effort.

Citizens discharge an important function when they exercise their franchise with intelligent understanding. But some must go further than this. If politics is to be redeemed, some among us must be willing to work in the precincts and wards and on committees, and to get out the votes, as well as to head the tickets. Surely, for some of us, this is included in the obligation of diligence so reasonably laid upon us.

One of the marks of the Zionically motivated citizen is his eagerness to be of both immediate and continuing service to his fellow-men. Here is a notable area for such service. Many can and should make distinguished contributions in local, state, and national affairs. Everyone should vote.

The foregoing advice is applicable to local elections, and we trust our members will by all means cast their votes in the Independence City election on Tuesday, April 1, 1952.

News and Notes

SPEAK IN ST. LOUIS

President F. Henry Edwards and Mrs. S. A. Burgess were speakers at the St. Louis District women's institute March 16. The institute was held in St. Louis.

WEEK OF PRAYER HELD

The Center Stake of Zion held its annual Week of Prayer March 9-16 at the Auditorium. Assisted by local and appointee priesthood, the Stake Presidency conducted meetings each evening with a weekly attendance averaging over 1,600, and an attendance of 2,400 on the first Sunday night and 3,000 on the closing Sunday night. During the week a total of 92 prayers and 233 testimonies were offered. The total offering received from the three offerings was $1,187.65. The theme for the meetings was "The Christ of the Ages." The Stake Presidency has stated that this is the most successful endeavor of this type ever held in the Center Stake.

ATTENDS LAMONI STAKE CONFERENCE

Apostle D. T. Williams attended the first stake conference to be held in the new church building at Lamoni, Iowa. He preached at the morning service and attended the business session in the afternoon. The conference was held March 16.

SPECIAL SPANISH MEETING

Apostle Charles R. Hield attended a "Spanish night" at the Lawrence, Kansas, Branch March 15. He showed slides of archeological discoveries in South America. There were nine Latin-American students at the meeting. On March 16, Brother Hield delivered the morning sermon at the Malvern Hill church in the Kansas City Stake.

NEWS OF THE APOSTLES

Apostle C. G. Mesley spoke at Blue Springs, Missouri, March 16. Speakers from the Council of Twelve who delivered sermons in Independence on that date were D. O. Chesworth, Reed M. Holmes, Percy Farrow, D. Blair Jensen, E. J. Gleazer, and Maurice L. Draper.

Apostle Roscoe E. Davey arrived with his family in Independence on March 15, and met with the Council of Twelve and Joint Council in preparation for General Conference. Accompanying the Davey family from Australia were Barry Fuller and Jo Parks. Irene Adams of England made the trip to America with them and also arrived in Independence with the Daveys.

ATTEND PUBLICATIONS MEET

Kenneth L. Graham, manager of the Herald Publishing House, Mrs. Jeanne Miller, assistant to the manager, and Mrs. Audrey Howard, office manager, returned March 14 from Indianapolis, Indiana, where they attended the first annual meeting of the Protestant Church Owned Publishers Association. Mr. Graham was elected to the executive committee of the board of directors for a second year.

NEWSPAPERS FEATURE CONFERENCE

The two newspapers of Independence featured special editions for Conference. The "Independence Examiner" published the Conference edition of March 31, and the "Daily News" special edition was released March 28.

The Power to Do Good

"The power is in them."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

IN USING THE MICROSCOPE you must narrow the field of vision in order to increase its sharpness of detail. That is often true of language, too. If you would have a quotation remembered, make it as short as possible. Otherwise the point may be missed.

Consider, for example, the familiar and often used passage from Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness.

That much has been read to you many times. But how often your attention has wandered before the speaker reached an important corollary: "For the power is in them."

THERE IS A POWER in men to do good. This is a promise wrought out of God's love and wisdom. At first consideration it may seem to be a very small promise; but it is rich in implications and possibilities. Repeat it to yourself until you understand it. There is power in us. Each person has some of it. No one is left without. "The power is in them" are the words of the prophet. It lies within us as a reserve of strength that can be used at will. In many a person it lies dormant, never called into action in life's emergencies.

This is a power that can be used for good or evil. And each one of us has the right, or the agency, to use a more significant word, to determine what its use shall be.

Every man and woman is given an opportunity to leave the world a little better than he found it. It is a tragedy that so many, untouched by the divine love, leave it worse.

It is a pleasure to meet a man or woman who does good because he enjoys it and wants others to be well and happy. He knows, of course, that the Scriptures promise a reward for some future time and place, but he doesn't do it for the reward, and he would do it anyway even if there were no hope of reward.

Such people carry within them the honor of true nobility. We respect them for their integrity and unselfishness. The Good Samaritan didn't expect any reward for helping a wounded man. In fact, his helpfulness cost him money and caused him to contract a debt for the future. But who can say that his satisfaction was not an immediate reward for his kindness?

"The power" was in the Good Samaritan. "The power" is in you and me, waiting to be used.

THERE IS a certain good man that I have known for some years. He is noted for the amount of good work that he does. I would have said that he loved God and his fellow-men. Recently, without knowing it, he revealed the object of his love. He said, "I must keep working to insure the salvation of my soul."

Remember what the Rich Young Ruler asked Jesus? "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" He had "I" trouble—I, I, and more I. Jesus tried to turn his attention away from himself to the greater obligations of service to humanity; to get him to save his own soul by first saving others. But he had so much power to do good, and he was hoarding it. There was power in him, but he wanted to use it for himself exclusively. He loved himself. And self-love is at the very heart of hell.

THE POWER is given in odd ways. In a certain home the wife is an excellent cook. She is also a gifted musician, and to hear her sing is a spiritual experience. She brings happiness to others with these and other gifts that she uses in friendly ways. There are times when she needs to be freed of the burden of household drudgery in order to exercise her gifts. . . . The husband, alas. . . . Well, one might say that he has no gift. He cannot sing. His bathroom baritone is best with the door tightly closed and the radio going. His limit on the piano is "Sweet Hour of Prayer" with one finger. How he ever managed to marry that lovely woman is a mystery to their friends. But I was wrong about his talents. He has them, of course. They are for washing dishes and picking up things around the house. He can make it easier for his wife to serve. Perhaps the Lord knew he would be needed and made him for a very special purpose. His marriage brought him his field of service.

THERE is power in them." How could the Lord's wisdom be better expressed? Power—but so often it is hidden behind masks and screens of laziness, selfishness, and indifference.

Consider how many people remain hurt, needy, and suffering in the world because persons with power do not use it to do good. Consider what our homes and families lose. Consider what the church loses. Consider how the coming of the kingdom of God is retarded because men and women of power will not serve.

There is power in you. Sometimes you have heard the still small voice calling you into action and responsibility, but you sat in your chair. Sometimes people have come to you wanting help, but you have refused to serve. Your power, through the years, becomes a rusty chain in your hand, a little pile of ashes in your heart. At the great judgment, the testimony of your condemnation will be within you. L.J.L.

"We Are on the Air" *

For those who may live in or near the areas where church radio programs are on the air, a listing will appear each week in the Herald.

These programs are fifteen-minute devotionals of doctrinal and nondoctrinal nature and are available for a small rental fee and shipping charges. For better quality, the programs are available on tape. Where tapes cannot be used, sixteen-inch discs will be furnished.

For the branch that can locally furnish someone to give the radio talk, there is recorded music available, sung by a mixed quartet or the Stone Church Choir. Stone Church organ music for interlude and background is also available for local programming. An album of "Restoration Hymns," sung by the Stone Church Choir, may be purchased from the Herald House. The regular fifteen-minute devotional transcriptions for broadcasting are complete with music, devotional talk, prayer, and opening and closing announcements. Background organ music closes the program, leaving time for any local announcement. For information, recordings, and any particular local problem in broadcasting, write The Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

FRANKLYN S. WEDDLE
Director of Radio

*See the Bulletin Board section each week for a listing of church radio programs.

Mail to Conference Visitors

All mail and telegrams for those attending the Conference should be addressed to that person "c/o The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri." Visitors should call regularly at the post office in the Auditorium foyer for mail. They should not expect personal delivery nor announcements from the stand.

Conference on Family Membership

This June Graceland College is sponsoring a Conference on Family Membership to be held on the campus June 1-7. This is offered as a service of the college to the membership of the church. It will be open to ministers, educators, departmental workers, family members, and young people. It will study the ways of participative membership in the modern family and of the family in contemporary church life. Announcements concerning registration, staff, program, and costs will be made in subsequent issues of the Herald and at General Conference. The program will be built for a registration of 200.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following report comes from John R. Darling, associate director of religious education.

I was in Topeka, Kansas, March 7 and 8 completing a survey of the Kansas State Department of Education being made by the Midwest Administration Center Co-operative Program in Educational Administration of the University of Chicago. Persons interviewed included Adel F. Throckmorton, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; Ralph Stinson, secondary school supervisor; M. E. Cook, elementary supervisor; F. Floyd Herr, director of certification and junior college accreditation; and C. M. Miller, director of the State Board of Vocational Education. The main purpose of this research project, being conducted by the University of Chicago in co-operation with the Kellogg Foundation, is to aid in the improvement of school administration by improving consultant services provided by state departments of education. This extensive study is being directed by Dr. Francis Chase and Dr. Raymond Troyer, research associate. Brother Troyer, an active member of our church, recently received his Ph. D. from Chicago University.

From Priest C. R. Kramer, Jr., Honolulu, T. H.:

We will never know how to thank you for sending Brother Wallace to visit us. His simple, straight-forward manner of address, his mien and cognizance of his calling certainly bring dignity to his office which inspires faith in the young people of this congregation. It aids the young members of the ministry, particularly in the Order of Aaron, to continue their tasks in this part of our Heavenly Father's vineyard. I wish to thank you personally and in behalf of my class of young adults for scheduling this most timely visit in what we know to be a very busy time in the preconference arrangements.

Our prayers are for you and all the brethren in the various departments of the General Church as you prepare for the coming General Conference.

Our Risen Lord

By Chris B. Hartshorn

Based on a sermon given February 25, 1951, at the South Chrysler Church. Taken from a wire recording by Floy Patience.

Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.—I Corinthians 15: 12-22.

FAITH IN THE RISEN LORD is fundamental in the gospel. I know of no theme about which I would rather preach at any time of the year than this one. It is so full of hope, of encouragement, of power!

Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." Now note that peculiar address. "I," Jesus speaking, "am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live." What a challenging statement! Jesus is the resurrection and the life of men, and he promises that we, upon conditions of the gospel, may live with him even though we pass through the portals of death. In Paul's fifteenth chapter of I Corinthians is this statement: "If Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

Preaching in Vain

Now the preaching of the word might be in vain to you for other reasons than that Christ has not risen. It might be in vain to you because the preacher does not touch a responsive chord—because the message is so presented that it does not appeal to you. Only as you are in accord with the same spirit the speaker has—which should be the spirit of the gospel, the spirit of God—will much happen to you when you hear the spoken word.

There have been all kinds of logic, sophistry, and historic criticism on this theme of the resurrection of the dead. I am old enough to recall Clarence Darrow in his heyday. I remember when he went down into Tennessee to act as the defense attorney in the Scopes trial on the teaching of evolution. Many of his blasts reported in the press concerned the faith we have in Jesus Christ and in the power of God. One of the things that he said was "The beginning of a life yields no evidence of the beginning of a soul." Another time he said, "There is no more evidence of the persistence of consciousness after death than that coal survives fire."

I do not wish to set up straw men or even Clarence Darrow as a challenge to your thinking; I'm just using this by way of saying that all of us do not approach this theme from the same point of view. Some of you may feel that you are willing to accept part of the verities of the gospel, but you have your own reservations with regard to the fact as stated by Paul and others that Christ is risen from the dead and lives today. Perhaps the same applies to Korea. Twenty-five or thirty years ago you probably had never heard of it, but that did not mean its existence could not be demonstrated. You do not have to be there and see it and know for yourself by material evidences to have a sound faith and belief—though it does help many times and in many cases.

Proof or Reason

I agree with Brother C. Ed. Miller who says that there is nothing in nature to prove the Resurrection, but there are some strong evidences and reasons for faith as we look to nature. He wrote to me several years ago about one of his demonstrations, and Brother C. Ed. is very good at making clear his thought by way of demonstrations. He told about using a mounted caterpillar to attract the attention of his audience. He explained the life cycle of a certain caterpillar. In the fall it climbs slowly up a tree and finds a choice spot where it decides it will make its winter abode. Then it sets about excreting a salivary secretion in which it finally encrusts itself. This covering becomes as hard as cement. There it is ready for the winter. He said that science had long been wondering how this little creature could ever get out of its stone tomb. Of course a caterpillar doesn't stay a caterpillar; toward spring certain forces in its nature set to work and it changes its shape, its color, and its purpose in life.

But how can it get out of this cement house? Some scientists resolved to find out. They learned that after it changes itself to a butterfly, nature supplies it with two vials of chemicals. One is caustic potash and the other formic acid.

They are harmless when kept apart, but the intelligence of nature has so designed that at the right time this little butterfly can compress its wings so that the vials in which these two chemicals are kept will be broken, and the potash and acid are permitted to come together. The effect of the fumes and the acid so formed is sufficient to attack this cement and cause it to disintegrate. Then the butterfly, with a little pressure of the helmet on its head, makes its way out of the tomb.

That doesn't prove anything. It is interesting, but it doesn't prove anything if you do not want to believe in the power of the resurrection. There are other reasons, however, why you should believe in it. When this little butterfly comes out, it has an intelligence that causes it to protect itself. I've often wondered why a butterfly flies with such erratic movements. That again is some of the intelligence with which nature has endowed it. Its enemies have a more difficult time catching it.

With a Body

In the writings of the prophet Isaiah this is called to our attention: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead shall they arise. Earth shall cast out the dead." Then Paul asked, "With what body will they come?" The caterpillar comes out with a different body. Paul reasons in this same epistle,

Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body which shall be, but grain, it may be, of wheat, or some other; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body.—I Corinthians 15: 36-38.

Yes, there is a new body given to us, but we retain the same spirit, the same man.

Alma gives us a little light on this:

Yea this bringeth about the restoration of those things of which have been spoken by the mouths of the prophets. The soul shall be restored to the body and the body to the soul; . . . and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame. And now my son, this is the restoration of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets. And then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God.—Alma 19: 57-59.

Defying God

A certain atheist who lived many years ago in Germany spent much of his time trying to demonstrate his disbelief in the story of the gospel. He said that he did not believe in God or in the powers and miracles of the Bible. He requested that when he died the statement, "This grave shall never be opened," would be inscribed on his tomb. Yet I read to you this morning, "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." All—not just the believers; the resurrection will have its force in the life of every man who has lived on the earth. Death, hell, and the grave shall give up the dead that are in them at some time. It is interesting that a little seed, smaller than the caterpillar, got in the dirt, in a crevice in this atheist's tomb. Now a tree a foot or more in diameter has turned the stone up on end. How man proposes and God disposes! We may defy God and ignore his words, but sometimes our foolishness is revealed in a little thing like this.

It is reasonable to believe the gospel writers were telling the truth concerning Christ's resurrection. I will present the evidences I have in four different lines of reasoning.

Christ's Mission

First, I think it is consistent with the extraordinary mission of Jesus that he should not have remained in the tomb, that he should have come forth to bridge the chasm between this life and the life to come. I do not need to labor that point. We accept the mission of Jesus Christ as being that he should come here and present a godlike life, and demonstrate that a man could live here on earth and do the things which God had asked him to do under conditions that are similar to our lives. His purpose was not finished until he had bridged the chasm between this life and the life beyond from which we came and to which we shall return.

Second, it is in harmony with his predictions. Jesus, at a certain time in his ministry, charged the disciples to tell no man that he was the Christ. From that time forth he began to show his disciples how he must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things of the elders, chief priests, and scribes and be killed and then raised again the third day. He predicted not only his death but his resurrection. This was not some evidence manufactured for post eventum telling, but something that had been told years before the actual experience of going through the calamity on Calvary, the darkness of the tomb, and the light of resurrection on Easter morn.

Results Followed

Now let's take another line of thought, because when this experience happened it changed doubters even among his own disciples to men of great faith and power. Nothing in the whole teaching experience and mission of Jesus changed the attitude of his disciples quite so much as his resurrection. I want to refer to some of this evidence as recorded in the history given to us by Luke in the Book of Acts. After the Resurrection and Ascension, after he had appeared to the disciples and they knew for a certainty that he had conquered death, Peter who had been a doubter, a disbeliever, stood up under the power of the gospel and said to those who were almost ready to take the disciples and do the same as they had to their Master:

Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know; him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.—Acts 2: 22-24.

That's strong language. A man who does not have convictions, a man who is bent on deserting the cause, would not say that in the face of what might seem to be death. But Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit after the day of Pentecost, stood and told these men that Jesus whom they took with cruel hands and crucified had arisen from the dead. And so I think it is reasonable to believe the gospel on this point too.

Then there was Paul, a strict Pharisee enemy of the church in his early life, who knew all the evidences that could be marshaled in his day against the church and the gospel, against the claim of this remarkable return from the dead. But Paul did not attempt to use his power and influence to disprove the power of the resurrection; rather he gives us our most potent argument for it in his Corinthian epistle.

We Are Assured

These four reasons should give us assurance that the good news of the gospel is true; that Jesus was able to bridge the chasm between life and eternity. Joseph also takes recognition of this fact of the Resurrection. In his book of Antiquities, the eighteenth section and the third paragraph of the third chapter he says that "there was one known among the Jews," and tells the story of his miracles, of his death, and of his resurrection as believed by the Jews of his time.

Many men have lived holy lives, have made sacrificial offerings of those lives before and since Christ's time. Simply that he died does not prove his divinity. There I find fault with those who used to hold up the cross and preach the blood of Jesus Christ. This blood and the cross are effectual but if the mission of Christ ended on the cross, it would have ended in failure. The thing I like to present is the risen Christ who triumphed over the grave, who is alive today and forevermore.

When I tell you that Christ did bring life and immortality to light, I give you the greatest hope there is in the gospel. This appeals to me as making a valuable contribution to the faith, the thinking, the aspirations of the human race. The power of God as manifest in so many wonderful ways would scarcely be worth while if all were to end with the grave. I appeal to your intelligence—is it logical to believe that one who has all power in heaven and on earth should prepare man just for three score and ten years; that he should enable us to have such a glorious existence here as we are privileged to have when we use the forces of nature and our lives aright, and then when we have achieved perhaps the very acme of knowledge, experience, and the comforts of life, suddenly to cause or permit death to forever end it all? I cannot believe that such is worthy of the God of power whom we know.

In my boyhood I had a fear of death that I think is not uncommon to children, especially if they have lost loved ones. I have overcome much of that fear as I have learned the hopes of the gospel.

For a few years it used to be part of my responsibility to go to Holden, Missouri, where the church had a home for the aged, and speak to the elderly ladies there. I remember that the matron told me on two or three occasions that the thing these sisters wanted more than anything else was the reassurance of eternal life. Maybe you have thought of that too. Maybe you are dissatisfied when you go to a funeral and no mention is made of the assurance of a life beyond. There's a sense of emptiness in that type of message.

Demands of Justice

People instinctively, as well as from the standpoint of their own reason, want to think that God has created them for a purpose. Inasmuch as justice cannot be done in the span of three score and ten years, God provides eternity for that which is imperfect to become perfected. The disadvantages of time and space and wealth and power are equalized in the mercies of a just God. Now this type of justice is a necessary concomitant of life eternal. John explains it in his writings: "And Jesus answered them saying, The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."—John 12: 23, 24. There is some reality and some value in the planting of these bodies that there might come forth from the grave an immortal life capable of existing with God and being eternally in his presence. Again I say that death is a necessary concomitant of eternal life.

Witnesses Speak

Now let's turn from logic to testimony. Men can brush aside the evidences that I have given and say, "Yes, but I don't believe it." And as Brother Miller has said, there is no evidence in nature that proves the Resurrection. In this matter of proving things I like the old adage, "Convince a man against his will and he's of the same opinion still." We've got to rely upon some different approach. I want to turn now to the statement of men who testify from personal experience that Jesus Christ is our risen Lord.

Let's go back to the very first experience. Let's think of the women who came to the tomb that morning to anoint the body of Jesus which they thought was still imprisoned in the wrappings and the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. They found that the tomb was empty, and they saw what they believed to be a gardener and asked him where the body of their Lord had been put. Then Jesus spoke in such a way that Mary ran to tell the disciples that he was not in the tomb; that he lived, because he had revealed himself to her.

Paul says in this same fifteenth chapter of Corinthians that Christ "was buried, and that he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once. . . . After that he was seen of James, then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time."—I Corinthians 15: 4-8. Paul was not acquainted with the gospel. He was born about the same time Jesus was. We don't know why he hadn't heard about the gospel until after Jesus' resurrection and ascension into heaven. Then, as he was going about the business of destroying the church, the heavens opened and a voice declared, "I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest." Paul says, "As of one born out of due time he was seen of me," so Christ couldn't be seen of Paul and these others if he had remained in the tomb, or if by some clever subterfuge his body had been stolen away by the disciples, and somebody else—some impostor—was posing as the risen Lord.

But that's not all; he was seen of Stephen too. When Stephen was being stoned a vision appeared to him; he looked up, and the heavens opened and he saw God, but he also saw Jesus at God's right hand.

And then there is the experience which came to the people on this continent. The Book of Mormon was given for this one purpose—to convince both Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ and that he lives. Soon after his ascension into heaven, Christ did truly manifest himself to the early inhabitants of America, showing his body to them and ministering to them. He spoke to them saying, "Behold, I am Jesus Christ whom the prophets testify should come into the world." We can't deny that these men had unmistakable evidence. They had the revelation that Jesus Christ lives, that he is our Risen Lord.

Last of all, in the year 1833 Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon had a wonderful experience in which the heavens were open to them and, like Stephen, they saw God sitting upon his throne and Christ at his right hand. They declared in words of solemn testimony: "Last of all this is the testimony which we bring to you that he lives for we saw him."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

I hope I have brought you some reassurance of eternal life. The purpose of the gospel is to bring life and immortality to light. I know of no greater hope than that of which I have been talking. I want to close by reading the testimony of our Lord from the seventeenth chapter of John's gospel:

These words spake Jesus and lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, Father, the hour is come, glorify thy Son that thy Son may glorify thee. As thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him, and this is life eternal that they may know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. I have glorified thee on earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.—John 17: 1-5.

Symbols

All of man's written history on the earth, all of his philosophy, his research and learning, and all of his imaginative storytelling are expressed in an alphabet of twenty-six letters, more or less, according to the language. Then Braille, the written language of the blind, takes six little dots and by various arrangements can express all that the regular alphabet does. Think of it—all the literature of the world can be put into those six little dots! Teletype machines employ six dots, too, to send news stories over long distances, operate typewriters by wire, and run typesetting machines, able to express all we know in those dots. If, as they say, the great things are simple, it seems that the six-dot language qualifies for greatness. L.J.L.

One World - and the Restoration

By Maurice L. Draper

THE MORAL ISSUES involved in matters before the United Nations were dramatized in the sessions of the Third National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO which I attended in New York City in January. The questions of human rights, disarmament, international economic co-operation, and the speedy solution to present military problems are fundamentally questions of moral and spiritual righteousness. For this reason we ought to be more concerned about them than a large segment of the American population is and at a level of higher intellectual and spiritual discernment than is usually the case.

Does the concept "one world" have real significance for the Restoration Movement? The answer must be sought honestly in terms of the divine intent about the nature of man. It must be found in terms of the overt expression of our highest spiritual ideals.

God "hath made of one blood all nations of men." For centuries men have theorized as to why individuals are born into such diverse circumstances. Some are poor; some are rich. Some are culturally favored with parents of talent and training; some are in cultural poverty. Some are black; others are all shades of brown, from the light complexion of the "white" man to the darker colors of the Mongolians, Pacific Islanders, and the American Indian. We theorize today and find no final answers. But this much we do know—our prejudices and narrow insights rob us of much rich fellowship and constructive association.

Not only do physical differences divide us because of lack of understanding, but national and lingual traditions are barriers to the elimination of misunderstanding. Surely one of the inevitable results of the industrial civilization which makes the world a neighborhood will be the gradual break down of lingual barriers, and in generations to come men from opposite sides of the earth will have little difficulty in communicating with each other.

THE NATURE of our present problem was dramatically portrayed in a short film shown at the UNESCO conference. Dialogue was in Polish. A young woman crept into the kitchen door of a city apartment, obviously fearful of being caught returning home too late at night. But, unfortunately for her, the way was not clear. Indignation and anger showed in the expression and gestures of her father as he flicked the light switch. What curiosity we all had as they engaged in a heated exchange of conversation in a strange tongue. At the height of the argument he picked up a kitchen knife. How our imaginations went to work as he flourished it in the air. We could already see in our mind's eye the flowing blood of her unfortunate sweetheart, as the scene closed with his mutterings.

Then the whole scene was repeated in English, with exactly the same gestures, flourishes, and dialogue—but this time we could understand. Was the father about to decapitate a lover? A lover wasn't even mentioned. What were his flourishes? His way of emphasizing that a bowl of potatoes on the table hadn't been peeled because of her tardiness. What were his mutterings? "I'll peel the potatoes myself."

If we could only understand the scores of Indian dialects, of Asiatic tongues. If we could only understand the Chinese coolies, or the Russians, is it possible that many of our wild imaginings and dreadful fears would be similarly dispelled?

THE NEED for growing international understanding is basic to the program of the Restoration Movement. The gospel of the kingdom envisions the brotherhood of many nations. Understanding between nations on the broader scale, however, depends upon a willingness to understand and the growing insight through accumulation of knowledge by many individuals in these nations. To us, the believers in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ and the kingdom of God on earth, this need for understanding is basic.

The history of civilization reveals an interesting pattern. Associations of men have developed from family groups into clans. Clans have grown into tribes. Tribes have developed loyalties which later provided the basis of political organization, even when the peoples concerned were still wandering hunters. In community life villages grew into cities, which extended their influence into the surrounding area to form "city-states." Then came federations of city-states and far-flung military empires. During the Middle Ages these empire areas became differentiated and grew into the modern national state. The trend is unmistakable—federation of individuals or families led to consolidation in the clan; federation of clans led to consolidation in the tribe; federation of villages and cities led to consolidation in the city-state; federation of city-states led to empires and consolidation in the national state. Is it unreasonable to suggest that federations of national states will lead inevitably to the world-state? This is, of course, oversimplified. Yet the end seems clear, whether we adopt the historical view of social evolution, or the mystical view of the divine plan as revealed in the sayings of the prophets.

FOR REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS the objective is clear:

And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven . . . for out of Zion shall go forth the law . . .

Christian Living and World Crisis

EDITOR'S NOTE: The author wrote this article while serving with the Armed Forces in Manila in June, 1945. Today, nearly seven years later, our country is still engaged in war in that area, and we find all of the ideas presented here still apply to our lives.

By Dr. Otto H. Elser

ANY PERIOD of great stress involving the nations and peoples of the world has occasioned, on the part of thinking persons, a re-examination or re-evaluation of human values, human rights and obligations, and their relationship to the events at hand. The great world conflict which recently had enveloped almost all the nations brought forth an abundance of such thoughts and focused attention once more on the lessons of history and on the means for attaining future world security and happiness. Evidences today point to the fact that the problems of international co-operation and right living remain elusive and that the world still gropes for the proper human relationship which will do away with the periodic conflicts that have plagued mankind to the present day.

In this situation there lies a particular challenge for Reorganized Latter Day Saints who profess an insight into the conditions of the dispensation of the fullness of times and a knowledge of the sure solution to the ills of society. The fact that we do not yet have a working example of righteous living for the world to follow should bring to mind again the slowness and the faltering steps which have marred the onward progress of our Zionistic movement. It would be well for us, the followers of Christ, to make our own re-examination of our sense of values, our hopes and aspirations, and our obligations to the great task in which we are engaged.

Undoubtedly one of the most vital questions for us to ponder is the attitude with which we regarded the prosecution of the war and with which we intend to regard ensuing world conditions. For us, whose fundamental and peculiar objective is the establishment on earth of the kingdom of the Prince of Peace, the fact of war demands a mental adjustment and the formulation of an attitude in harmony with the tenets of our religious ideals. Necessity and the demands of government influenced the thinking of many of us with regard to our position in the conflict. A great number of young people rushed willingly into hazardous duty with the Armed Forces, taking for their own the attitude of hatred and vengeance which inspired the vast multitudes. Such action was, in most instances, deemed justifiable through obedience to the demands of lawfully constituted government, which is a prime statement in the creed of the church. It is in keeping with our idea of Christian living that we obey and adhere to the laws of the land, and there can be no question that in time of national crisis our people are bound, as good citizens, to contribute their full share to the preservation of our rights and liberties, even though that contribution involves the shedding of blood. But whatever our part may be in world events, it is secondary in importance. The primary considerations for us, as Reorganized Latter Day Saints, are our attitudes, our personal convictions, and our interpretations concerning the conditions of present times. They are a measure of our conversion to the gospel of Jesus Christ, of the seriousness with which we regard our calling as witnesses for Jesus. It is certainly a matter of deep concern to Almighty God whether his people seek first the kingdom of God or lose themselves in the vain efforts of men to establish justice and peace on the earth.

There have been many among us who, influenced by the pressure of events and the emotionalism rampant in the peoples of the world, have spent their total energies wallowing in the depths of confusion, despair, uncertainty, and fear. There have been those who have permitted themselves to be influenced by the spirit of hatred, greed, and vengeance and have engaged in the war against our enemies to satisfy the demands of their perverted attitudes. There have been still others who, forgetting the powers of Divinity, have placed their trust in human devices and limited their hopes for the future to the gropings of unenlightened men.

CAN IT POSSIBLY be hoped that the mind of Jesus can reside in men who profess a knowledge of divine truth and then fall prey to the evils of a confused world? Can the church ever realize its ultimate goals as long as its members fail to live up to the standards of those goals and tend rather to devote their energies to lesser ambitions and ways of life which are more in accordance with human than divine values? Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians (2: 4, 5) makes this statement: "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power, that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." Here is emphasized, as it is in so many other parts of the Scriptures, the infinite gap between human and divine wisdom, and how necessary it is for us to put aside the things of the world if we are to demonstrate, as a people, the same spirit and power of which Paul writes. Whatever our position in the war or coming disturbances, we must consider them as things apart, not to be permitted to hinder our progress or thwart the purposes of the kingdom. Our goal is before us; our prime task must always be the accomplishment of God's purposes on earth, all other things remaining secondary.

Some time ago a church member in Britain wrote some observations on the subject of "Reorganized Latter Day Saints and the War," which merit a good deal of consideration. They indicate a sincere desire to uphold the ideals and principles of the gospel, even under the duress of conflict and bloodshed. The article says in part:

Why is it . . . that the church doesn't come out into the open and renounce war and proclaim peace? We shall never kill hate with a bigger dose of hate. We shall never end war by war. No one is cleverer with the devil's weapons than the devil himself; we cannot defeat a master craftsman at his own game. We can only hope to build Zion and teach the world the way of peace as we ourselves show them the way to live and the source of life. . . . I know the hand of God is moving among the nations, but if the church had more zealously heeded the commands of God, Zion would have been a reality now and, instead of dashing off to kill, there would have gone forth a stream of sanctified men and women from Zion to bless the warring nations. But instead, we who claim the light of the restored gospel walk in darkness at noonday.

These are challenging statements for us to ponder in the present day, and they may well serve as a basis for evaluating our attitudes and responsibilities in regard to the future work of the church. There remains a tremendous task to be accomplished, and it will require a higher level of Christian living, a more consecrated devotion and service than has been manifested among many of our people. How glorious is the inspiring vision of a united people, living and working together in the reality of Zion, witnessing before the world the final and irrepressible triumph of the principles and purposes of Jesus Christ. How much more glorious still is the opportunity and the calling to engage in the task of translating the vision into the working reality of the kingdom of God among men. The Saints of the latter days have been called to that divine purpose.

IT IS OF LITTLE VALUE now to think back on the war and reflect regretfully on the fact that the church was not able, in this great period of crisis, to advance its mission and purpose more effectively in the world. The past becomes vital to us only when we learn its lessons and apply them to our future course of action. The tragedy of the days to come will be our refusal to awaken to the possibilities before us, and our unwillingness to lift our level of living to the Christlike plane which is demanded of those who would build Zion. There are all too many whose course of action in this direction waits upon the improvement of conditions sometime in the hazy future when Zion may more readily be established than at present. Too many concepts and plans for the glorious days to come remain confused and ineffective through dependence on the passage of time to work out desired results. It is safe to surmise that there will never develop favorable conditions for the completion of our task if we refuse to act now. Periods of crisis, evil times, wickedness, and bloodshed have not been done away with, and they will certainly continue to plague mankind in times to come. The efforts of men, however sincere, in attempting to establish justice, peace, and brotherhood have been shown to be ineffective in the past, and there is little to hope for in the future. Jesus Christ came to earth to set the pattern; no other way can possibly succeed. It is a dangerous fallacy to assume that God can in any way be limited or circumscribed. He requires complete, unqualified obedience to his commandments, and he has opened up for us the only way for the accomplishment of his purposes.

It is for us, living in the last days when the hour is surely drawing near for the fulfillment of all prophecy, to heed the divine call to gather to Zion and build the kingdom. May we sense the importance of meeting the challenge and so order our lives as to consecrate our full endeavors to the completion of the task.

PRAYING AT A PRICE

To those of us who are used only to liberties of the democratic countries it must seem strange that men would be arrested for holding a prayer meeting of ten people in their own homes, yet this is reported by the Montreal Herald of December 2, 1951.

Rabbi Ferenc Lewy, a refugee from Hungary, was arrested recently for violating a city bylaw which forbids religious or educational activities in any building without a permit. Having suffered from religious persecution in Nazi Germany, as well as in his native land of Hungary, he came to Canada and was greatly surprised when brought into court.

He had held two Passover sessions in his home where he lived with his wife and four children, and was arrested because a neighbor had complained to the police.

Rabbi Lewy speaks neither English nor French, but through an interpreter explained that he was baffled by his arrest as he was under the impression that there was no law in Canada against a prayer service like this in one's own home. It was explained to him that the purpose of the law was to check meetings of questionable groups. He cried when he was given a suspended sentence explaining, "Where I came from you probably would be shot for anything like this. That would happen even if you could prove you didn't know the law."

Under Jewish regulations certain prayers cannot be said without the presence of at least ten persons. This incident should remind us that some of our own brethren in neighboring countries and in lands across the sea may still suffer persecution for their religion and may do so being innocent that such a simple thing as a prayer meeting is in violation of some city or state law.

The Communist Bible

By F. Edward Butterworth

KARL MARX, who wrote the bible of Communism, was born a Jew, baptized a Protestant, and buried in exile outside of his native land. This prophet and founder of Communism had a philosophy which, as expressed by him, was "I detest all the gods." In some respects he resembled the typical patriarchs of early Christianity, having a beard and pious appearance.

Winston Churchill once described the Soviet policy as "a riddle, wrapped in a mystery, inside an enigma." This adequately sums up the western reaction to Communism. Only the first volume of his work entitled Capital was published during the lifetime of Marx, but the other two volumes were prepared by a faithful friend, Friedrich Engels, after his death from notes which Marx had left. A careful study of these three volumes is necessary in order to understand the message of Communism.

The appeal of Communism is extremely intense as it allies itself with the massive merchant class against the so-called feudal lords. The fallacies of the scheme are at once lost in its tremendous emotional appeal. The Marxian view can best be summed up in the following simple statements: Human history is like a river. From any given vantage point it looks much the same from day to day, but is actually changing daily. Its banks are crumbling, the channel widens and narrows and deepens as the torrent rushes on. Suddenly the rains descend; the banks weaken and burst; the river floods and may even take a new course. This new course, the Communists say, is the course of Communism—the natural "synthesis" brought about by the clash of two accumulated forces, "thesis" and "antithesis."

As an example of the natural evolution, better known to Communists as revolution, it might be pointed out that the early United States could be called "thesis" and the rebel confederacy as "antithesis," while the modern United States is called "synthesis." But the United States synthesis did not suit the Communist end, as it did not end in a synthesis of socialism. Thus the Communist agents seek a constant agitation of the working class, splitting the nation into two hostile camps: the bourgeoisie capitalists and the proletariat workers.

They expect capitalism to become so intolerable to the worker that he will rise up and destroy it. Marx analyzed the capitalistic system and listed competition as its most immediate evil, as the producer in order to meet his competitor must keep his costs, and hence his wages, low. To speed supplies and fill the great demand, machinery will displace many workers and make "automata" of the rest. The middle class will virtually disappear into the proletariat as the weaker capitalists are eliminated. Markets will be glutted by fierce competition, and the dwindling market will produce a world-shaking depression. The foundation for the revolution is then laid.

This in its dazzling simplicity is Marxism—a brilliant achievement in the history of propaganda.

In 1850 Marx sent to the Communist League a letter advising a temporary alliance with an enemy in order to destroy another. Communists, he observed, would naturally ally themselves with the "petty bourgeois democrats" in revolt against Europe's autocracies, "But from the first moment of victory," he continued, Communists should turn on their previous allies, and while prolonging the revolution, agitate the former allies in "every conceivable concession and promise . . . the surest way to compromise them . . . dictate to them such terms that the rule of the bourgeois democrats shall bear within it from the beginning the germ of its destruction, and its displacement later by the rule of the proletariat become considerably easier."

THE BEST counterpropaganda in the world is found in Marx's own personal history. He lived in an environment of filth and condemned his family to lives of wretched poverty. Four of his seven children died in infancy, and two of the three remaining daughters who survived committed suicide. This shows a lack in his comprehension of the basic unit of society, the home. His own father called him "egoistic," neglectful of his parents, and possessed of a "demon."

A police officer who inspected his home in the slums of Soho where the Marx's lived for six years wrote,

There is not one clean or decent piece of furniture in either room, but everything is broken, tattered and torn, with thick dust over everything and the greatest untidiness everywhere. In the middle of the parlor is a large old-fashioned table covered with oilcloth. On it there are manuscripts, books, newspapers, as well as the children's toys, odds and ends from his wife's sewing basket, cups with broken rims, dirty spoons, knives and forks, lamps, an ink pot, tumblers, some Dutch clay pipes, tobacco ashes—all in a pile on the same table.

When you enter Marx's room, smoke and tobacco fumes make your eyes water to such an extent that for the first moment you seem to be groping about in a cavern until you get used to it and manage to pick out certain objects in the haze. Everything is dirty and covered with dust, and sitting down is quite a dangerous business. Here is a chair with only three legs, then another, which happens to be whole, on which the children are playing at cooking. That is the one that is offered to the visitor, but the children's cooking is not removed, and if you sit down, you risk a pair of trousers.

Gethsemane

By Robert J. Miller

FOLLOWING THE FEAST of the Passover which Jesus observed with his disciples—and which he also chose to make the first Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (Luke 22)—he and his disciples went to a garden called Gethsemane. There he awaited the hour of his betrayal.

The record of this vigil is familiar to us for we have read it in the testimonies of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. It was a long night for our Lord—a night of heavy sadness. He must bear his watch alone; although he had asked Peter, James, and John to stand by and watch with him, sleep overpowered them.

During the dark and lonely hour Jesus turned to his Father, for his soul was exceeding sorrowful, and prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Again the second and third time he prayed to God saying, "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done" (Matthew 26: 34-41).

The passion of this night has been dramatized by all Christianity. The mental torture Christ suffered has been stressed, and the reasons for his intense suffering debated. Was Jesus afraid to face Calvary? Did he fear the jeers of the mob, the physical suffering, the pain of death?

It is very doubtful if any who are familiar with the life story of the Master, and have partaken of his Spirit, would concede that these fears played any part in the agony he suffered. He was a brave man. He proved that conclusively throughout his ministry, for he had never wavered in doing what became his duty. He was a man of such stature that others were attracted by his forceful personality and fidelity. He championed a cause so big and important that church and state alike feared his power and sought his destruction. He accepted this assignment with full knowledge of the cost to himself; indeed, he volunteered for the job (Genesis 3: 3).

IN VIEW OF THESE FACTS, can we even dare to suppose he shrank from his hour of trial because of personal fear? It is said the two causes of greatest physical suffering are childbirth and migraine headaches. Thousands upon thousands suffer these torturous pains and endure them patiently without sweating, as it were, "drops of blood." In very truth countless thousands of women have accepted the pains of childbirth as a reasonable price to pay for the privilege of motherhood. Love surmounts this fear with ease. Yet we do not dramatize these many acts of personal devotion and stoicism.

There was a far deeper reason for the mental pain Jesus suffered—a reason so great that even he was shaken in his faith and cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matthew 27: 50).

It must be remembered that Jesus was and is the true Son of God, by whom all things were created and made, according to the testimony of the Father and the prophets as recorded in the Holy Scripture (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21; 90: 1; Colossians 1: 15-17).

It should be remembered also that Christ's mission upon earth was to effect a reconciliation between God and man, that God's work—which is "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23)—might be advanced.

The purposes of God could not be promoted as long as men remained in ignorance of his will—as long as they remained in sin. It became necessary, therefore, for them to receive the truth that they might intelligently choose the way they would go. Jesus said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin."—John 15: 22.

JESUS CAME NOT as a mere man among men, who had developed his natural powers to a marked degree. He came as the true Son of God by whom all things were created and made. His knowledge of the facts was complete because he was and is a genetic part of all creation. This is a pertinent point to remember in the drama of Gethsemane.

During his ministry he spoke the words to his disciples and the multitudes which it was wisdom in God that he should speak (John 12: 49). At no time did he give testimony from his vast store of knowledge except that which was commanded of God.

In Gethsemane he reviewed his work, he considered the feeling of the people toward him, he felt their resentment—their failure to grasp his message. He even discerned that his own disciples (John 17: 6), whom God had given him out of the world, recognized in him unusual power but failed to grasp the fact that he was actually the Son of God. He discerned that they failed to realize that his kingdom was not of this world, but universal—eternity itself.

Jesus foresaw that Peter, the bold and fearless, would be so confused in his failure to comprehend that he would deny him. He foresaw the mobbers as they scorned him and laughed at his claim of fellowship with God. He knew the majority of those whom his life had touched would refuse to believe and accept instead the judgment of the masses.

These were the things which tortured the mind of Christ, as he reviewed the past and looked to the future. These people were all a part of his creation, by the will of God. He had made them in the image of God and after his likeness (Genesis 1: 27), and they denied him. These he loved—the workmanship of his hands—laughed him to scorn.

Jesus wanted to reach them and save them from themselves. He hoped sincerely there was a way compatible with the designs of God that these people could be helped to see, to know, to understand. And he probably wanted to be vindicated in the eyes of some at least before he faced Calvary.

We who are parents know the sorrow—the Gethsemane—that must be endured when our children refuse to take our counsel and persist in their own willful way. We know what it is to pray for them unceasingly that they will see the truth and turn to God. We know how we wish we could take upon ourselves their pain when they become hurt or afflicted. We know in part the sorrow that Christ felt; for it is God's way that the souls of some be placed in our keeping.

THE "BITTER CUP" was not personal fear. The Master probably gave that no thought, for he had received a commandment of the Father that he had the power to lay down his life and take it again (John 10: 17, 18). But he grieved because of the people's unbelief, which is reflected in his answer to his accusers when they asked, "Art thou the Christ?" And he said, "If I tell you, ye will not believe" (Luke 22: 67).

Is it any wonder that as Christ hung from the cross on Calvary, with the powers of evil so heavy about him in an atmosphere of complete unbelief, that he should examine himself for some failure on his part, either in the creation of these souls of men or in his mission among them? Is it any wonder that he should cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" when he found no answer to his self-examination?

Truth itself was about to be crucified.

Question Time

Question:

Do our missionaries receive a salary from the General Church as well as the offerings taken up for them in the branches?

Answer:

Missionaries' families receive a family allowance which covers the expenses of the family. The amount contributed to the elder from offerings either individually or by branches or districts cover his traveling and personal expenses. These are reported to the Presiding Bishopric, and each contribution is accounted for.

Question:

Why is Detroit Stake called the International Stake?
Michigan

Mrs. G.A.W.

Answer:

The International Stake was so named because the term most fittingly applied to the territorial extent which was partly in the United States and partly in Canada. To have called it the Detroit Stake (U. S.) or the Windsor (Canada) Stake, would have given a wrong impression as to its location.

Question:

How would you interpret "and whosoever among you are sick . . . shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild foods, and that not by the hand of an enemy" (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12).

No one would, knowingly, rely on a personal enemy. Could it mean an enemy to this method of treatment? There are opposing methods in the field of medicine.

L.C.

Missouri

Answer:

We may take the words of this admonition for their face value. We have more enemies than personal enemies. We do have enemies because of the way of life for which we stand and the Christ whom we serve.

This certainly does admonish us not to trust our welfare to the hands of personal enemies or to enemies of what we stand for in Christ. This includes those who carry animosity to Christ's method of bodily care.

The use of "herbs" (medicine) is herein recommended by God. We have them for a purpose and, when used for the right purpose, we may have their benefits.

The phrase, "with all tenderness," carries a connotation of love, compassion, and skillful concern. This cannot be done at the hand of one at enmity with the individual or what he stands for.

For our best welfare, we should submit ourselves to the ministry of good, skilled persons whose ideals are compatible with God's purposes. Through such persons the healing Spirit of God can minister, supplementing their skill with his own.

Question:

In whose possession was Kirtland Temple between 1838 and 1860?
Michigan

Mrs. G.A.W.

Answer:

Kirtland Temple remained in the possession of the church with Joseph Smith, Jr., holding title as trustee in trust for the church until his death in 1844. In the breaking up of the church at that time nothing was done as to securing the title; since Kirtland was generally forsaken by the Saints, the Temple remained without legal title, not being in the legal possession of anyone. It was open to whosoever chose to use it. Several factions attempted to revive the work there without success, and one did some urgent repairs. For a time an academy was held there by Drs. Lord and Nichols, the story being current that James A. Garfield, whose parental home was at Mentor three miles away, attended there. Ministers of various faiths held services there, candidates held political meetings, and showmen exhibited their juggling. Sheep at times found shelter in the pews of the main floor. Vandals tore off gilt letters from the pulpits, and bits of trim for souvenirs. The building fell into great disrepair.

Several families of Saints moved into the locality about 1860, and two faithful women, Rebecca Dayton and Electra Stratton, successively assumed charge of the building in love for its sanctity and henceforth the doors were locked and visitors entered only with their presence. Their names are worthy of record, for they did much to preserve the property.

In 1880 the Reorganized Church entered suit in the courts, asking a clearing of the title, and was given a clear title as being the successor of the original church which built the temple. The building was in due time restored and improved, and for many years an attendant appointed by the church has been present to conduct through the many visitors numbering as high as twenty thousand a year. The temple is yet to serve important divine purposes.

Question:

Are those candidates for baptism for the dead (Church History, Volume 2, pages 552-790) recorded on church records? Who were they? How were their names revealed to the church?

Michigan

Mr. W.D.H.

Answer:

There are no records of the candidates baptized, or for whom they were baptized, in any instance in which baptism for the dead is noted in the Church History. This being true, it is not known who they were.

The whole matter of baptism for the dead is so very indefinite that it would be difficult to come to any conclusion as to just what did occur. There are no records of any revelation of God coming through the prophet telling any one individual to be baptized for any specific dead person. Since there are no records of such, I feel it is safe to assume that there was no such revelation.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Jesus Christ Stranger or Friend

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and be with me.—Revelation 3:20.

IT SEEMS INCREDIBLE that Christ, the Lamb of God, the Savior of the world, the creator of the universe, should have to plead for entrance into the lives, the homes, and the hearts of men. Recently Canadians welcomed with open arms a virtuous and beautiful princess, now the Queen of England. Men, women, and children traveled hundreds of miles, spent money lavishly, or made incredible sacrifices to catch a fleeting glimpse of this gracious lady. To the children she was the princess in a fairy tale, while to their parents she represented loyalty, devotion, and adherence to a tradition.

When Christ, who gave his all for mankind, comes knocking, he is refused admittance by the masses and granted reluctant entry by many of his supposed followers. I once knew a woman whose person and home were in a perpetual state of untidiness. She owned a dog whose warning bark announced that a vehicle had turned in at the gate a quarter of a mile distant. Immediately all was hustle and bustle in an effort to present a semblance of neatness. Invariably, the visitor knocked at the door minutes before the minimum of tidiness had been attained. The visitor waited, listened to the scurrying in hot haste, knocked again and yet again, growing cold or impatient, until finally he was admitted.

EVEN CHURCH MEMBERS have been known to refuse to admit the Prince of Peace into their lives until they had accumulated material wealth, become surfeited with the pleasures of the world, satisfied their craving for success, or were ready to sacrifice their ease for the gospel's sake. They would not dream of casting Christ from their hearts completely, but he was given a secondary status. They intended to give him entrance and to listen to his pleading at some distant time when their own plans had reached fruition.

For several years a young priest devoted all his talent and spare time to the work of the church. Then one sad day he decided that through industry and thrift he would accumulate sufficient of this world's goods so that he could give his entire time to the church. Intent on other objectives he had no energy to spare for God's work. Although he worked feverishly, instead of accumulating money he lost it. Disaster followed disaster, and misfortune dogged his footsteps. Before long the Spirit of God ceased to strive with him. He had sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.

WHEN CHRIST is invited into a home he has promised that he will abide there. Imagine being able to talk to the Savior at will! What a privilege to ask wisdom from the fount of all wisdom, to seek help from the giver of all good gifts, to discuss problems or to express appreciation for blessings, to receive words of comfort in times of distress or difficulty.

When fears arise, what a blessed solace to hear or sense that welcome phrase, "Fear not!" After attending a district conference, a sister was returning home by a late train. From early childhood she had been terrified upon entering a dark unoccupied house. Dreading the ordeal she bowed her head in prayer. Then a still, small voice spoke these words, "Fear not, for my angels will watch over thee." As she made her way through darkness and rain across the vacant lots her home loomed out of the mist. How beautiful it was, and what a joy to be back she felt! Without fear she entered the front door. The spirit of love and peace enveloped her, for the promised angels were indeed there. With the confidence of a little child she slept through the night, and at five in the morning was awakened by an audible voice calling her twice by her first name. A phobia had ceased to exist through the mercy of God.

IN THESE TIMES of uncertainty men's hearts are failing them for fear of the things which may come to pass. To whom can they turn if not to the Lord whose promises are sure, who knows the future and all the answers, and who holds the destiny of mankind in the hollow of his hand? At least three decades have passed by since I was much concerned about moving to Zion. The Spirit gave definite direction, assurance, and comfort in the following message, "The time has not yet come for you to go to Zion. I have a work for you to do here; nevertheless perils are coming upon this land, but if you are faithful, you will be protected."

The predicted perils are yet to come. Through the intervening years I have been concerned only about the condition attached to the promise. If one measures up, God's promises are sure.

In James 1:5 is the promise, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."

If Christ has been given entrance to the home of a Saint and abides there, he is at all times accessible and ever willing and able to give to his children that which they lack. Adults in a different degree from children feel their inadequacy many times a day. Perhaps a child is ill, some article becomes lost, buying must be done to the best advantage, a question of guidance or discipline arises, or an intricate garment awaits completion. All the time One stands ready who is the fount of all wisdom and who needs but to be asked.

Mothers, have you ever known the sorrow of losing the confidence of your teen-age daughter? What a joy was yours when she again opened her heart to you, when she came to you because she needed you. How much greater than the love of a mother for her child is the limitless love of Christ for his Saints. If mothers and fathers are vulnerable to teen-age slights, how much more sensitive is the Savior, who yearns over these whom he died to save.

Take him at his word. Cast your daily burdens upon him and grant him the joy of service and the unutterable ecstasy of being needed. At the same time receive for yourselves wisdom, added skills, security, poise, freedom from worry, and a satisfaction and peace beyond the imagination of those who know not God.

THE MOTHERS CLUB in Independence is very proud of its record regarding family "grass roots." For almost forty-two years (it was organized in June, 1911) the club project has been child care. At first it helped provide for the children of the Children's Home located in Lamoni, Iowa. Then along came the new Sanitarium and Hospital and its needs; so the nursery was adopted and for thirty-six years has really been the pride and joy of the club members.

It has been like watching a family develop and prosper under parental care and vision as the privileges and opportunities accompanying modern living beckon to parents from day to day. Women all over the U.S.A. have helped during these years—helped with sewing and earning for the nursery.

There were twelve of us young mothers in 1911, and we have enlarged our membership gradually until now there are twenty-seven of us to mark and cut, sew and embroider. Here we make special mention of a much appreciated facility, the use of the cutting tables and equipment of the Kimport Doll Studios in Independence. When well over two thousand articles are cut during the year, it is a boon to be able to make one marking do for several layers of material. At the Arthur and Ruby McKim home next door—for they are the Kimport people—the Mothers Club has for many years held most of its General Conference guest teas, and will do so again this year.

One more special mention concerns a group of young mothers in Independence, the Pan-delphia Sewing Club, which for several years has been designing and making spreads for the thirty-six tiny cribs in the nursery. These women are embroidering and appliqueing clouds and sleepy bunnies on the spreads this year instead of the former frisky pet lambs. They also have taken over the embroidering on the little robes, the yokes, and cuffs.

No wonder Miss Ina, nursery supervisor, chortles over the compliments the nursery patrons make about how precious their babies look in the hand-trimmed robes and blankets! Miss Ina says that the nurses who come in from outside hospitals say that the Sanitarium has the cleanest and prettiest nursery they have seen. Our regular display of nursery sewing may be inspected during General Conference at the Sanitarium and Hospital exhibit.

BESIDES OUR TWENTY-SEVEN PAIRS of hands and those of the Pan-a-delphias we are always delighted to have more help. Recently a box containing fifty-five finished and beautifully embroidered articles and garments for the nursery arrived from the women of the Santa Ana Branch in California. The women in Boston were sent patterns at their request as they have again felt the urge to shop and sew for the nursery.

Often the nursery is full and it is not unusual, although it may seem strange to most of our readers, for the thirty-six babies to be asleep at the same time. The nurses keep them dry, warm, and comfortable. Not long ago the first "doorstep" baby arrived, just inside the lobby. Twins are arriving at the rate of four pairs a month since January, 1951. The February, 1952, ones weighed over six pounds each. There are more girl than boy babies.

The Mothers Club has furnished incubators and the oxygen therapy which are so often lifesavers. And now the "infantry" would like a cart—so that the babies can be wheeled down the long halls to their mothers at feeding time (four times a day).

Our officers are Mrs. Charles Grabske, president; Mrs. John Moser, vice-president; Mrs. C. R. Smith, treasurer; Mrs. Reginald Loosemore, secretary; and the undersigned, historian.

Financial Dedication Day Observed

CANTON-MASSILLON, OHIO.—On February 17 the district conference was held and district financial dedication day was observed. Following church school there was a general class in stewardship for the young people of the entire district. Bishop Howard Miller of Kansas City Stake spoke at the morning hour. At noon, dinner for 175 guests was served in the church dining hall.

There was a business meeting in the afternoon with Bishop J. C. Wildermuth in charge. Delegates from the district to General Conference were elected at this time.—Reported by VERA M. RASOR

Women in Institute

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—The Zion's League, under the leadership of Sister James Menzies, held a minstrel at the Park School on February 24, with Seventy James Menzies and Elder Dick Anderson as main characters.

A reception was held in the church basement February 25, honoring Brother Merle Guthrie of Independence, and his son Richard.

Six women attended the newly established women's department institute at Moundsville, West Virginia, March 1 and 2. They were Sisters Mae Griffin, Van Rice, Julia Cooper, Alice Miracle, May Cottrill, and Virginia Cottrill. This was the first meeting of its kind in the West Virginia District for over thirty years. Sister Blanche Martin, district women's department leader, was in charge.—Reported by VIRGINIA COTTRILL

Branch Officers Elected

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.—The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: pastor, E. E. Workmon; assistant pastor, C. J. Nephew; women's leader, Gertrude Slover; Zion's League leader, Flora Workman; church school leader, Kenneth Cline; music director, Beckey Nephew; bishop's solicitor, Caesar Milla; treasurer, Jay Smith; secretary, Eathan Godfrey; branch statistician, Loren Godfrey. The meeting was presided over by Bishop E. C. Burdick.

Patriarch William Patterson held a series of meetings in October.

W. A. Vance was ordained a teacher on February 3. On February 10, Kenneth Cline and Alvin Woods were ordained elders, and Jay Smith was ordained a teacher.

Three people have been baptized this year.

The young people have an active group. About twenty Leaguers attended the Yule Camp at Happy Valley December 28, 29, and 30.

The women's department meets twice a month. They have several projects to help the branch. The priesthood meets every Sunday evening for reporting and a study hour. The two groups have combined and organized an extensive visiting program.—Reported by W. A. SLOVER

Branch Celebrates Organization Anniversary

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—The sixtieth anniversary of the branch was celebrated December 30. Elder Ross Higdon of Kansas City, Missouri, a former pastor, preached in the morning and evening. Brother Higdon was pastor from 1914 to 1922. At noon, a basket dinner was served by the ladies and local members in the basement of the church.

Visitors and former members attending were former pastor Elder Amos T. Higdon, and family of Shell City, Missouri; Mr. and Mrs. Zeno Booker of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Frances Dunham of Roscoe, Missouri; and several members from Mapleton, Kansas.

Former pastors of the branch were Elders Ezzell, L. A. Quick, H. L. Kinning, J. T. Higdon, Cornelius Quick, Amos T. Higdon, F. A. Hawley, C. C. Martin, and Marion Goodfellow. The present pastor is Elder Dale Crown.

The branch was organized December 29, 1891, at the Lebanon schoolhouse, west of Fort Scott, by Apostle James Caffall. The Mapleton, Kansas, territory was included in the Fort Scott Branch, but the two branches were formed July 16, 1911.

Mrs. Zeno Booker is the former Helen Hawley, daughter of a former pastor, Elder F. A. Hawley, and served in the branch many years. A basket of flowers was presented to Clarence Higdon of Kansas City, Missouri, in memory of his parents, the late Elder J. T. Higdon and Sister Higdon.

The Mapleton Branch was in charge of the afternoon service. Elder Lee Quick, the oldest missionary worker in the territory, spoke on "The Power of the Restoration." He told many of his missionary experiences. A duet was sung by Mrs. Ellsworth Clayton and her daughter, Beth.

The Fort Scott Branch has exceeded its goal for the Auditorium.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE

W. Wallace Smith Guest Speaker

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—President W. Wallace Smith was a guest at the branch dinner January 11, and spoke at the morning service January 13.

Attendance at Wednesday evening prayer services is increasing. In addition to the services at the church, meetings are also held at the home of Brother and Sister Paul Schurter in North Sacramento. Elder Jabez A. Elam has been placed in charge of these meetings.

At the close of the service January 23, a business meeting was held at which time seven men were approved for ordination and accepted the call. Five of the men already held other priesthood offices. The action was ratified by the district conference at Berkeley, January 26. A large number from the branch attended the conference.

At the Communion service February 3, Karen Allene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker, was blessed by Evangelist W. H. Dawson assisted by Bishop E. C. Burdick. Mrs. Walker is the former Dee Squires. The annual "filing day" service was held in the evening. Bishop Burdick spoke on the financial law. Music was furnished by the Youth Choir, directed by Phillipa Gann.

An ordination service was held on February 10 when the following were ordained: to the office of priest, Ives J. Honeychurch, Earl B. Horton and Lawrence R. Schall; deacon, Neil R. Honeychurch and Donald Damron; elder, Jabez A. Elam; teacher, Keillor Winsor. Pastor Myron R. Schall presided at the service and assisted in the ordinations. Other ordaining elders were John B. Dawson, John E. Gann, Robert L. Nephew, James A. Damron and Laurence A. MacDonald. Music was by the choir and a duet by Virginia Winsor and Marjorie Damitz. A poem was read by Celia Schall. Elder MacDonald delivered the charge.

"Plodding Brings Us Faster to Where We Go" was the subject of the sermon by Pastor Myron Schall on February 17. Earlyynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Horton, was blessed by Elder Schall assisted by Elder John E. Gann. Mrs. Horton is the former Nelda Bridges. At the morning service February 24 Elder Lawrence Hendrickson spoke on the topic "Consider the Work of God." Dale Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Glauner, was blessed by Elder Hendrickson assisted by Elder Jabez A. Elam.

The Zion's League held a farewell party on February 2 for Robert Dawson, son of Elder and Mrs. John Dawson, who has entered an army training camp. On February 9 the League gave their annual valentine banquet. The program theme was "In the Park," and consisted of four scenes dramatized by singers and actors in a park setting. Visiting League members were Pat Gann of Berkeley and Ann Wright of Stockton.

A son, John Edward, was born to Elder and Mrs. John E. Gann on February 8. Mrs. Gann is the former Phillipa Honeychurch.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Conference Delegates Selected

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The district conference was held at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, with the theme, "Witness All—Always."

The conference convened Sunday morning with a class for men taught by Seventy John Puckett; for women, by District Women's Leader Hazel Kyser; for young people, by Seventy D. L. Kyser. Classes for children were taught by the regular church school teachers.

Seventy D. L. Kyser directed the morning service. Special music was provided by the Marion Branch. A trio was sung by Sisters Geraldine Kobler, Meribeth Vaughn, and Jennie Racine.

The morning preaching service was by Seventy John Puckett of Jefferson City, Missouri. The trio at this service was Opal Fuqua, Melba Hertenstein, and Jennie Racine, accompanied at the piano by Norma Lee Rockett.

A basket dinner was served at noon.

The business meeting in the afternoon was under the direction of the district presidency, with Seventies Kyser and Puckett in charge.

The following were selected as delegates to General Conference: Seventy and Mrs. D. L. Kyser, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Poore, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Colvin, Stella Henson, Otto Henson, and B. R. Yochem.

The following recommendations for ordinations were approved: Otto Henson, elder; Ralph Wilson Rockett, elder; J. V. Whitehead, elder; Gordon Lambert, deacon.

Seventy D. L. Kyser was the speaker at the evening service. Brother Kyser has conducted cottage meetings throughout the district.—Reported by MRS. RUBY ELLIS

Seventy Cecil Ettinger Holds Series

BRENTWOOD, MISSOURI.—In June the pastor, Elder Edwin C. Kent, baptized Sandra Patchin, Shirley Briggs, and Nancy Sue Adams. Elders Charles Remington, Ammon Andes of Lawrence, Kansas, and David Cooke officiated at the confirmation service.

The business meeting for the election of officers was held August 15, with Elders Roy Benson and Ed Joy in charge. Elder Edwin C. Kent was re-elected pastor. The following officers were elected: secretary, Pat Dayton; treasurer, Charles May; church school director, Don May; women's leader, Eutha Wise; music director, Vi Dickerson; young people's leader, Dan Belcher; publicity agent, Marge Kent; program director, Naomi Langguth; auditing committee, Don May, Claude Oliver, and David Cooke; building committee, J. R. Miller, Roy Dayton, Claude Oliver; flower committee, chairwoman, Blanche Cooke; finance committee, Ralph Briggs, Joy Brown, and Claude Dayton.

In August and September, Missionary Cecil R. Ettinger held three weeks of missionary meetings. Five people were baptized by Brother Ettinger. They were J. R. Miller, Marvin "Mac" McBrayer, Mrs. Marilyn Dette, Mrs. Mattie Bell Nichols and daughter Jackie.

Several babies have been blessed. They are Carolyn Louise, baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dette; Carolyn and Armand, Jr., children of Mr. and Mrs. Armand DeMargel;

Mrs. Dorothy Evans was elected district women's leader at the district conference in Belleville in November. Dan Belcher was elected young people's leader. At the district conference in January, Brother Belcher was chosen to be one of the delegates to General Conference.

Marie Ruhl was baptized by Elder Edwin C. Kent in December. She was confirmed by Brother Kent, assisted by Brother Remington.—Reported by MARGE KENT

Building Program Growing in Stake

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—The spring conference of the stake was held at Warrensburg on Sunday, February 17. Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the visiting minister. At the business meeting in the afternoon the financial report for 1951 was approved, twenty-six delegates to General Conference were elected, and other matters of business concerning the Stake Houses of Worship Program were approved. Five men were accepted for ordination to the priesthood. They are Russell McCarroll, Blue Springs, elder; Wallace Butler, Blue Springs, priest and James Parker of Buckner; Burford Page of Harrisonville and William Crowder of Blue Springs, deacons. It was also decided to sponsor a stake reunion again at Lake Venita, July 26 to August 3.

Special missionary emphasis has been stressed recently at Knob Noster, Warrensburg, and Holden where Evangelist Ray Whiting conducted three series of meetings. Stake Missionary Clair Weldon has recently completed almost a month of labor at Blue Springs. Elder Roy Weldon has presented missionary illustrated lectures at both Blue Springs and Oak Grove.

Last November work was begun on the construction of a new church at Harrisonville. The church is almost completed now and all the work has been done by volunteer labor.

A building committee at Richmond, one of the historic spots in church history, has completed plans for a new church building and plans are that construction can begin early in the spring.

At both Kingsville and Buckner building plans are being drawn and the hope is that a new church can be constructed in each of these places within the next year or two.

At Blue Springs, a building committee has submitted tentative plans for an extensive building program which will involve the eventual tearing down of the present building and the construction of a new plant which will include ample educational facilities. Recent speakers at Blue Springs have been E. P. Darnell, S. E. Mifflin, W. C. Becker, Glaude Smith, John Darling, Apostle Reed Holmes, L. V. Butterworth, and Charles Graham. On February 14 a turkey dinner was sponsored by the young adult group.

The Holden congregation recently suffered the misfortune of losing, through death, the services of a good faithful servant in the person of Wilbur Criley, branch solicitor and treasurer. Robert Stewart, Jr., has been appointed to succeed Brother Criley. Holden is well represented at Graceland this year, with eight young people in attendance. They are Fred, James, and Doris Christensen, Norma and Marion Kendrick, Mary Alice Thompson, Dick Petre, and Charles Barnhart.

The third anniversary of the Odessa Branch was observed on January 27, with Stake President H. J. Simons speaking on the theme "Home-coming" that morning and Elder Otho Clark, counselor to Bishop W. C. Becker, speaking in the afternoon. Other visiting speakers at Odessa since January 1 have been Burr Bronson, Dr. Roy Cheville, Evangelist A. C. Martin, and H. C. Ferguson. On Saturday, February 2, the Laurel Club sponsored a bake sale and cleared $102.29.

Improvements have been made on the church at Atherton. Under leadership of the branch custodian, Brother Ray Curtis, the auditorium has been redecorated, an electric water system has been installed, and water piped to the baptismal font. The women's department has provided new velvet curtains. News from Atherton also brings the information that Thelma Hughes is at Graceland and that Fred Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Otho Clark, entered the Army Air Force on December 30 and is now at Camp Sampson, New Jersey. The Dean Fryes have moved to a farm near Buckner and the Clyde Odells are moving to a farm near Odessa. Mrs. Glen Lewis has been elected to succeed Mrs. Clyde Odell as leader of women.

Pleasant Hill reports that Dorothy Lee Bailey was baptized on November 25, 1951. The women's department has been busy in various activities, the Zion's League was well represented at the recent Stake Zion's League all-day meeting at Odessa, and the music department presented the cantata "The Babe of Bethlehem" at Christmas time. A ladies trio composed of Lucille Suddath, Alice Miller, and Pauline Bailey, and a soloist, Paul Brown, have sung special numbers at various churches recently.

The young adults of the stake are now looking forward to the next all-day meeting to be held at Lee's Summit on March 9. "The Book of Mormon" will be the theme and instructors will be Clair Weldon, Roy Weldon, and H. J. Simons.

Twelve stake Zion's Leaguers attended the Hispanic-American Institute at Graceland College on February 23 and 24.

Three regional priesthood institutes have just been completed with considerable encouraging success in each place. Every priesthood member in the stake had opportunity of attending the institute which included a two-hour session each Monday night for six weeks and terminated with a Communion fellowship service at the Odessa church on March 3. Approximately 140 members of the priesthood in the stake attended the meetings.—Reported by CAROL MACDONALD

Boy Scouts Presented Charter

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—Donna Jean, infant daughter of Thomas and Dorothy Watkins Griffiths, was blessed at the church on February 3 by Elders Richard J. Hawkins and Alfred E. Jones.

The women's department has bought a new double oven, ten-burner restaurant-type stove.

The new church school teachers' class, taught by Elder John R. Jenkins, is conducted each Sunday evening, following the regular preaching service. The class is to graduate qualified church school teachers.

Boy Scout Troop 33 was presented with its charter on February 29. A ceremony was performed, initiating seven Scouts into the troop. A social hour was held following the ceremony.—Reported by H. DAVID MORRIS

Ordinations and Delegates

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The stake conference was held February 24 at the Piemontese Club, 13221 Puritan Avenue. It was under the direction of the stake presidency, W. Blair McClain, Lawrence O. Brockway, and Elder V. Osborn; stake bishopric, L. W. Updike and C. O. Carlson; Evangelist B. Brown, and Music Director R. Gault.

The following men were unanimously accepted for ordination: Harry George Scherer, Joseph Lorane Mifflin, Gerald Leonard Arnold, Donald Weisenbach, deacons; Earl Henry Jones, William Gittens, teachers; George Bishop, Murray Earl Jones, Richard Lee Wilson, George Warner, James E. Lancaster, Jr., Vernon Forrester Hyslop, priests; George Laverne Perritt, elder. Sister Pauline Frisby sang the twenty-third psalm at the business meeting.

Seventy F. E. Butterworth was guest speaker. Thirty-nine members were chosen as delegates to the General Conference.—Reported by H. E. DEPEW

A Job for Every Woman. By Louise M. Neuschutz. New York: H. W. Wilson Co., $3.

ARE YOU A WOMAN WHO—is faced with the sudden need of supporting herself, without training or experience? or is a white collar worker nearing forty, out of a job or facing unemployment? or must earn money while staying at home? or though elderly, needs added income? or can go outside the home for part-time work?

If your answer to one or more of these questions is "Yes," then this little book will help you find, as the author says, "your niche in the work-a-day world." It is a survey of the paying jobs which women have created for themselves in recent years, and thus it serves as an index to the various fields of money-making activities open to women, and as a stimulus to further research on the subject.

Miss Neuschutz warns against slap-dash methods of selecting the field of work in which you expect to earn extra money or all your living. She advises you to carry out on yourself something of the same program the personnel office of a big business sets up for its employee selection routine.

First, you are to appraise yourself—your health, personality, aptitudes. Seek the guidance of your librarian concerning books which will help you make this appraisal. It might even be profitable to consult a vocational counselor for an aptitude test and advice. If your personal survey reveals that you need to do a bit of rehabilitating, whether in health, personality, or skills, get busy and remove the obstructions in your road to success, the author urges.

After you have surveyed the fields of opportunities and decided which you will enter, then plan carefully is her advice. Figure ahead; plan some sort of tentative program; learn what legal regulations pertain to the job.

Each chapter covers a different type of work, giving an over-all view, and is followed by a selected reading list directing the reader to specific information in that field.

The following selected chapter titles will illustrate the type of subjects covered: Helping Busy Mothers; Food Services; Commercial Services; Organizing Lectures and Entertainments; Needlecrafts; Handicrafts; Free Lancing; The Green Thumb; and A Small Business of Your Own.

Secretarial Efficiency. By Frances A. Faunce and Frederick G. Nichols. Second Edition. New York: The Gregg Publishing Co., Business Education Div., McGraw-Hill Book Co. $3.75.

That secretarial training should be career training in the best sense of that expression, something more than narrow vocational training, is the belief of the authors of this book, now in its second edition.

The book contains most of the information which secretaries look for in their conventional handbooks, but there is also a higher-level approach to the secretarial occupation. The authors claim that the first edition of the book pioneered a new field of business training beyond the secondary-school level. They suggest that employers, secretarial students, and those who have the supervision of teaching for the vocation of secretary will find it as valuable as will the secretary herself. This reviewer suggests in addition that home administrators (housewives!) will find a world of help in running their own home offices, which in these days are so much more than the sugar bowl in which Grandma kept her receipts and pin money.

The aim of the book is to help the secretary increase her value as a worker at this time and develop in her the understanding of the business world that she may, if she chooses, advance to even more responsible work and hire secretaries of her own. This latter aspect of the job in no way minimizes the importance of the secretary's present position in business, and that position is made so satisfying that no woman need be ashamed of spending her working years behind a typewriter.

United States Government Organization Manual 1951-1952. Washington, D.C., Federal Register Division, National Archives and Records Service, General Services Administration. $1.

If a session with the newspaper or newscaster leaves you somewhat confused by the references to Federal Government departments, divisions, agencies, bureaus, and governmental personnel, this is a book you need. It is the official organization handbook of the Federal Government, published annually. It has text describing the organization of all branches and subunits of the government and organization charts for each. Brief descriptions of quasi-official agencies and selected international organizations and much other information is included.

This book is recommended for every home library, especially where there are children of high school or college age. Frequent consultation of its pages will aid the reader to form an orderly mental picture of the Federal Government, which today affects all of us to an unprecedented degree.

This Manual should be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D.C.

The Value of the Holy Spirit

By Lola Quick McCollam

HURRY, MOMMIE! Give me money or I won't get to be in the 'Bittsy Botts'," little Janis would tell her mother occasionally before starting to kindergarten. I wonder if the mention of the Holy Spirit to the prebaptismal child doesn't mean just about as much to children as this "Bittsy Botts" did to this mother. After several such requests her parents discovered that if she took some money to buy stamps and later victory bonds she could march in the victory march.

The instruction given to parents to teach their children the doctrine of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old is perhaps most often limited to the teaching of the baptism of water, with little or no explanation of the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Perhaps it is better to refer to the Holy Ghost as the Holy Spirit when speaking to children. One lady wrote about experiencing a fear of receiving the Ghost which caused her much distress.

The candidate should be instructed that baptism is not complete without both water and spirit although one might not sense the baptism of the Spirit at the time of confirmation. This part of the baptism should be discussed with the child.

The story of the child Samuel's hearing the voice of God when the priest Eli didn't is a good example of a child's receiving the Holy Spirit.

A child may be taken out on a windy day and told that while no one can see the wind, anybody can see what it does. Similarly, if he makes preparation for the gift of the Spirit, it will come and he can see the result. It will make him better. He will want to do good.

It is natural that children would understand more about water baptism, because they can see the person being immersed but the baptism of the Spirit is different as it is inward. It doesn't seem to come just by merely asking. Nephi says, "It is the gift of God unto all those who diligently seek him" (1 Nephi 3:26). The Doctrine and Covenants says, "Pray always and I will pour out my Spirit upon you."—18:6.

A number of members do not seem to realize that the Holy Spirit is promised to each individual. Jesus said, "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever." It is necessary that this part of the plan be understood, because not much growth can be accomplished without the Spirit—"Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Jesus said, "I am the vine; ye are the branches." He is showing us how necessary it is for us to receive our spiritual food from the source of divine power. I like to think of the little curls that cling to the trelis as being individuals who receive spiritual food direct from Deity.

In Acts 5:32 we are told that the Holy Ghost is given to those who obey God, hence the necessity of teaching continual diligence in keeping God's laws. The first time I read the Doctrine and Covenants I was impressed with the number of times the Lord counseled the people, "keep my commandments," especially in the revelations given previous to the organization of the church. He must have been schooling them for the gift of his Spirit.

"If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally" is just as true today as when the fourteen-year-old boy went to the woods to pray and received an answer to his problem.

There are many spirits in the world. God has placed a safety valve to protect us from evil spirits. This is fasting. Jesus once told his disciples, "This kind [evil spirit] cometh not out except by fasting."

Fasting means much more than refraining from food. It means refraining from worldly pleasures and activities that draw us away from God.

"I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:21.

March issues of the magazines are definitely devoted to the spring outlook as regards homes, food, and fashions, with a good supply, also, of material of a political and civic nature.

Two articles on school safety appear in different magazines: ". . . But Suppose She Falls!" Woman's Home Companion, and "She Fought for the Children," Reader's Digest. Both concern the danger of playgrounds covered with asphalt.

"Save That Injured Eye," Today's Health, warns that there's no such thing as a minor eye injury. "Stop That Headache," in the same magazine, tells of the progress being made in treating and curing this common ailment.

"Is Your Medicine Chest a Fibber McGee?" Woman's Home Companion, lists the items needed for simple remedies and first aid. In the same magazine is an illustrated description of the new method of artificial respiration, "You Could Save a Life This Way."

Read "The White Lady," Reader's Digest, and you will find that you have probably lost at least some of the aversion most people have toward bats. It is fascinating reading.

Good Housekeeping offers another "complete cook book," this time on the cooking of fish.

Methods of doing several household tasks are featured in American Home. "How to Re-web and Re-tie Springs," and "How to Re-upholster a Chair," plus "News in Plastic Upholstery" take care of your ailing furniture. "How to Cut Glass," "Painting How-to Tricks," and "Solder and Save" may furnish you with sufficient additional information to give you courage to tackle long-neglected jobs.

The Man Who Stood Alone

By Heber F. Colvin

The cross with its pitiable burden stood stark against the sky. Suddenly Peter felt with startling force a renewed emphasis concerning man's freedom of action. This freedom was held by all men for either good or ill. The wrong use of power, evil in its most deadly degree, was on parade. Evil shorn of all its animal appeal stood revealed in its nakedness to the eyes of those who willed to see. Exhibited for what it was, the spirit of error, in its insanity, gloried in its vandalism, seeking the destruction of the supreme values of life.

PETER CONTINUED to philosophize. It is necessary for men everywhere to learn to choose goodness as the governing law of their lives. Godlessness is the enemy of all well-being. Men must be drawn together by common interests, justly held, and those interests must be bound together by the bonds of mutual consideration for one another. That esteem necessary surpasses courtesy and is known as brotherly love. To serve one's own best interests, it is necessary that the just interests of his neighbor be served also that there may be mutual satisfaction and amity.

Good men must band together since in union there is strength. Evil is very well organized. How else can men stand against it unless they stand together, led by God? The fruit of righteousness is found in the results of right thinking and right living. Truth is of God. In his ways truth and justice are to be found. Aside from God, there is no life, no order in anything. Where there is weakness, men fall prey to the forces of destruction. Right ways are sound ways. At the heart of error lurks the sting of death.

WITHOUT THE CHRIST, Simon Peter knew he stood alone, leaderless and without effectual help.

A man of simple tastes, he had earned his livelihood as a fisherman until, one day, there came a man who was more than a man, for as he conversed with Simon by the sea, it was as though the eternal lapping of the waves against the shore stilled themselves to listen. Gone was the prosaic course of events which he had never questioned before. Suddenly it seemed to Peter that some great thing for which the ages patiently waited had begun to come to fulfillment. "Come, follow me," the stranger had said, and Simon cast away his nets, for it seemed his heart was aflame with the intensity of a dawning assurance which culminated in the quiet conviction, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

All the familiar tortures beset him now. "If only I had another chance, I would serve him better. How differently I could do things." The fiasco was so complete that the music died in his soul as the world closed in around him. He turned again to the rut of his old

IT WAS A DAY of stern realities. Spent with the emotional storm accompanying his repentance, Peter witnessed silently the perfidy of the mob, his very silence condemning their hateful demands, for his stoical attitude did not extend to the object of the mob's cruelty. He felt powerless to help in any way.

With a majesty that did not once desert him, the gentle Nazarene faced the accusing throng. About him there was an air of serenity that could not be shaken. He listened to the death sentence humbly but bravely—every bit a king. Action Simon could understand, but this passive submission to the will of the enemy baffled him.

The Roman governor was still speaking: "I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see that ye do nothing to him." Yet he delivered the prisoner to the soldiers for crucifixion. Pilate's hands were clean. Had he not washed them publicly?

Unhappy disciple! Peter might yet have chosen to die in defense of his Lord, but Jesus' last words to him still echoed in his ears: "The cup that my Father gives me to drink, shall I not drink it?" Thus, with others Peter followed afar off while another helped carry the condemned man's cross to Calvary.

Was it only yesterday? Yes, only yesterday there had been words of affection and smiles exchanged, joy of living for the choosing, and now—this! The same sun which had seemed so benevolent then appeared to give only a harsh glare upon this otherwise darkest of days. Yesterday! It seemed so long ago. The life of one man made the difference. Now that life was about to be forfeited to satisfy the cupidity of the corrupt priests and politicians.

ways. "I go a-fishing" was his most revealing comment. What was left? "We trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel."

FOR ALL of us who have loved and lost, the story of Peter strikes, perhaps, a sympathetic chord. We are weak; we are strong—a mixture of good and inferior qualities. So was he. Yet, while at his fishing, when Peter once again knew the voice of his risen Savior, with one glad cry, "It is the Lord," he jumped into the water and swam ashore.

So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, . . . lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith unto him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus said unto him, Feed my sheep.—John 21: 15-17.

Thereafter, Peter never turned back. He became Cephas, the rock, the immovable one. The gospel story and that of the Restoration Movement cannot be written without including his name.

How many times have we failed Christ? Was the question "Do you love me?" directed to Peter alone, or may we also be included in it? The earnest counsel is given again,

If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.—John 14: 23, 24.

The servants of God, whoever, wherever they are, best evidence their love when they feed the sheep and lambs of the Lord's flock. They feed them for the sake of the risen Lord that none need stand alone.

The Godless Quest

By John M. Wallace

WE OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY will take part in the most epic struggle in the history of this planet. This conflict is destined to shake the soil of five continents and froth the waters of the seven seas. It is probable that millions now living will have the breath of life snuffed from them in this colossal upheaval. It is certain that millions of those remaining will have to choose sides and pledge their allegiance and years of sacrifice to the faith of their choice. Two ways of life, two systems, will clash as the knights of old with a titanic clang of steel on steel, blood against blood, ideal against ideal. What are these tremendous forces which threaten to tear the world apart?

Both forces are inconceivably powerful. Both systems are able to appeal to the best minds of our time. Both ways of life can stir men and leaders of men to the depths. We might expect two forces so opposed to be entirely different in every way, but such is not the case. Both claim to have the good of mankind as the ultimate goal.

THESE TWO twentieth century titans are Christianity and the godless quest of Communism. We cannot sigh with relief and consider the battle won merely because Christianity is in the fray. Of the more than two billion souls on this earth, far less than half are Christian. Of the more than fifty centuries of recorded history, less than half have felt the sway of the Christian religion. Is it impossible that our precious gift be taken from us unless we guard it closely? We have only to remember the parable of the talents to sense the truth. We are being called upon to use our gift, to fight for our blessings.

Our battles, whether they be battles of ideals or battles of physical forces, will not always end in victory. We realize this when we see the fine scientific mind of a Klaus Fuchs turn against us. We shudder from the shock when we see a brilliant young Alger Hiss in the ranks of the enemy. We wait with bated breath when a fine American army is hurled back in defeat as was the case in the dark days of December, 1951.

MAKE NO MISTAKE about it, we are in for a fight. This is a fight we can all share, however. A great deal of the enemy's strength lies in our weakness. We of Christianity have had two thousand years and have not healed the wounds of mankind. We have not erased the slums of our cities. We have satisfied neither the physical nor the spiritual hunger of all our people, and therein lies the source of the calamity threatening us today. These things we must do if we shall pass on to our posterity the heritage of our forefathers. We want our children to bask in the warming knowledge of a friendly God. We want them to be able to see the hand of God in a crimson sunset as it splashes its hues and tints across the heavens in a symphony of brilliant color at evening time. We do not want our little children to shudder in the bleakness of a world of cold materialism which recognizes no God.

So we must fight for the things we want. We cannot all command armies. We cannot all bring the message from the pulpit. But we can do the little things necessary to make our lives truly Christian. Without our help the best of leaders will be doomed to failure.

The time to act is now. The next wireless dispatch will bring news from many fronts. The battle has begun. The world is the field, and the soul of man is the prize.

New Horizons

The Communist Bible

Living in such squalor was no doubt a contributing factor to the many ailments which beset Karl Marx. It is said that he was afflicted with carbuncles and boils, chronic insomnia, liver trouble, eye inflammation, headaches, rheumatism, neuralgia, bronchitis, pleurisy, and a lung tumor. In these surroundings and circumstances he wrote the communist bible. But true to the communist nature, he despised and even shunned the toiling masses whose cause he championed.

The only existing plan for world peace and equality is that outlined in the sacred Word of God. Doctrines that have come through good and holy men who have lived in poverty and in wealth, but ever in purity of mind and body, are sufficient for free men. Communism has not proved to be adequate to offset the ills of the Western world.

One World—and the Restoration

and he shall judge among the nations . . . the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13; Isaiah 2: 3, 4; Revelation 11: 15.

The present challenge for us is to recognize that we cannot find all the answers to mysterious questions about why men are not born equal as to circumstances—to remember that the intention of God evidently is for us to discover the values in the gifts and cultures of peoples in different parts of the world; that he has made all nations of men of one blood; that he expects us to work out our differences and overcome our prejudices; and that we must see to it that our political and spiritual ideals become one and the same.

One world? It is inevitable. Let all believers in the Restoration evaluate political and economic issues in terms of their spiritual insights into the kingdom of God.

Parents' Magazine contains several very good articles. "Stars to Steer By" tells of the ideals that help a child to grow straight and strong and true. A piece that deserves several readings is "What Are Children Really Like?" It is delightful, and yet full of real help and rare insight that all parents need. "Remember Me? Letters

The Faith of a Child

My little grandson was only three when he had the misfortune of getting his finger wedged beneath a window. As he screamed I rushed to him and raised the window, freeing the bruised finger. He tremblingly put his arms around me and said, "Pray, Grandma, pray!"

I took him to a chair in the living room and with his hand between mine prayed in words I thought he would best understand: "Dear Jesus, cause the hurt to go from this little finger and make it well."

When I removed my hands from his, he looked at his finger and said, "Hurt gone." Then he jumped down and picked up his book, Tell Me About God. He climbed upon my lap, opened the pages to the picture of Jesus with his arms around little children, and said, "There's Jesus." I told him that Jesus was loving the little children. He sat there for a while patting the picture, then lifted it to his lips and kissed it. Having "thanked" God for his blessing, he closed the book and went back to his play.

That morning I truly worshiped God. It is no wonder Jesus said we would have to become as little children before we could enter the kingdom.

Encourages Fasting

Soon after my baptism when I was a child, President Joseph Smith requested the church to fast preceding a General Conference. I wanted to fast with the older folks, but they protested that I was too young. I told them that I was a member, too, and that I was supposed to do what Brother Joseph asked. I did observe the fast and was so blessed that I wasn't even hungry.

Elder Robert Farnham asked the members in Lamoni to fast and pray during the last week of February so that when they began worshipping in their new church they would enjoy more of the Spirit. I fasted each morning.

It was a sad experience when the old brick church burned, but it is a thrill to have this beautiful new church to worship in. For nearly twenty-one years the Saints in Lamoni were without a church.

One of my happiest occupations is visiting the sick people and shut-ins. When I go I offer a prayer before leaving my home that I may cheer those who are discouraged and bring a little sunshine into their lives. I have always enjoyed more of the Spirit when I make preparation for these visits than when I go unprepared.

I ask the prayers of others that my family and I will serve the Lord well and do his will.

Milestone for Peoria Branch

Peoria, the second oldest branch in Kewanee-Rock Island District celebrated its twelfth anniversary of re-establishment on March 17. For this reason, a brief resumé of the history and growth of the branch may be of interest to Herald readers.

In connection with Peoria, the words of the Master seem appropriate: "Fear not little flock for it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." A floating membership has been a serious handicap to the growth and development of the work here. Also, members have been poor and scattered from the time of the first organization by Elder Mark H. Forscutt in 1874 to the re-establishment of the branch in 1940. Nevertheless, many of the most illustrious men of the General Church have visited Peoria, and the Saints were strengthened through their ministrations.

Services were blessed many times by the peaceful, comforting influence of God's Spirit and, though discouragements were many, a few faithful Saints remained through the years even though district officers suggested disorganization. For five years after 1934 services were not held because the only elder in Peoria and his family moved to Galesburg, Illinois. When the former district president, W. W. Richards, sent Elders J. O. Dutton and Ambrose King to Peoria to see what could be done, they found that a large group of Saints, talented and of moderate means, had moved to Peoria and were anxious for the re-establishment of church activities.

Since 1940 the branch has steadily gained in membership. There is now a graded church school, the young people are organized into an active Zion's League, and the women have worked faithfully in their efforts to aid the priesthood in providing a varied social life within the branch and have contributed generously in financial assistance also.

Priesthood personnel is organized better than ever before for study of particular problems, for more effective visiting in the homes of the Saints, and for finding and trying to reawaken the interest of scattered members.

Gradually Peoria is taking an active part in district affairs, and the Saints there look forward to the celebration of the twelve years of branch activity. They humbly pray that they may be worthy of God's blessing and that, with his help, they may ultimately reach their long-sought goal—a church home of their own.

Helped Through United Prayers

Two years ago I sent in a request for prayers for my sister, Mrs. Gus Johnson of Garfield, Minnesota, who had been bedfast for over ten years. Now I wish to thank all who remembered her; she has truly received a blessing. By last spring she had gained enough strength so that she could be up part of the day. During the summer she was able to visit friends occasionally. Now she helps with the housework, and attends church when the weather is favorable. She is not a member of the Reorganized Church, but is active in the church of her faith. My hope is that the day will come when she and her family will understand and accept the gospel in its fullness.

A Letter From Germany

(Editor's Note: Three years ago the women of Davis City [Iowa] Branch "adopted" Elisabeth Kutsche in Germany and have sent about a dozen boxes of food, clothing, and gifts to her since then. Before her baby was born, they gave her a shower. The picture mentioned in the letter is a jigsaw puzzle of a country church. Louise McLain of Davis City is translator.)

Today I received the good news that I could go and get that package. You just can't believe how thrilled I am to think that you thought of me again. I was so happy to see all the pretty things.

First of all the doll. We don't get anything like that here. My little daughter is so happy she hugs and kisses the doll. She is fourteen months old and quite smart for her age.

Dear sisters, I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart for all the lovely things you sent. You are so good to us I could take you in my arms and kiss you. Never in my life have I seen such great love. I can't imagine just what good, kind hearts you have. You have done so many good things for me. The dear Lord will bless you for all this.

Some time ago we heard about the floods in America. We thought about you and wondered if you were among the ones who suffered.

The church paper is nice. It is too bad we cannot read the language. Father gets my uncle, Otto Schmolny, to translate it. He can read and talk English. When the apostle comes to Berlin he has to translate for him into German. I wish I could do that, then we could write to each other better. He was in America four years.

We had quite a thrill out of the picture puzzle. It wasn't easy to put together, but there wasn't one piece missing. My father framed it, and it is now hanging in our living room. People ask where did we get such a pretty picture.

I wish you the best in the new year, and first of all good health. I close with best wishes.

Note of Thanks

The women of Wenatchee mission take this means of expressing their thanks to all who sent packages for their "mystery package auction" held on February 11. The auction was very successful. Packages were received from the president, senators, radio and movie stars in addition to church members.

DEATHS

FRASER.—Allan, was born April 24, 1860, at Picton, Nova Scotia, and died February 15, 1952, at the Riverside Nursing Home in East Providence, Rhode Island. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December, 1897.

He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Edmund M. Brown of Cranston, Rhode Island. Funeral services were held at the Carpenter-Jenks Chapel, Elder Clinton K. Saxton officiating. Burial was in Pontiac cemetery, Pontiac, Rhode Island.

FISHER.—Annie Laurie, was born August 18, 1869, in Jackson County, Missouri, and died February 28, 1952, at Los Angeles, California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 27, 1912, as a result of the ministry of her blind brother, Chris. She gave long and faithful service to the church.

She is survived by her daughter, Lucy Worcester, and a grandson. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Thomas R. Beil. Interment was in Roosevelt Cemetery, Los Angeles.

REMINGTON.—Charles J., was born March 21, 1870, in St. Louis, Missouri, and died February 12, 1952, in Brentwood, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of nine. In 1907 he was ordained a priest, and in 1912 an elder. He was married in 1894 to Patience Cooke. With his wife and children he assisted in organizing Brentwood mission forty years ago. For nearly twenty years he served as president of Brentwood Branch and for thirty years as district secretary. Mrs. Remington preceded him in death in May, 1938.

Surviving are two sons: Charles Roy, Sr., of Rolla, Missouri, and Ralph N. of Independence, Missouri; two daughters: Blanche R. Silvers of Independence and Altha M. Dayton of Brentwood; fifteen grandchildren; and seven great grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Jay B. Smith Chapel in Maplewood, Missouri, Elders Ed Kent and David Cooke officiating. Burial was in Oak Hill Cemetery.

ADAIR.—Leo Henry, was born December 23, 1889, and died January 4, 1952. He was married on December 29, 1908, to Verda Ethyl Hopkins, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Besides his wife he leaves a son, Orvel Lee Adair; a daughter, Elvana Rose Brumley; two brothers: Lyman and Charles Adair; three sisters: Grace Shufeldt, Lucille Sheffer, and Flora Bailey; and three grandchildren.

BROWN.—Alpha Joy, daughter of Cale and Emma Amos, was born April 20, 1891, and died March 8, 1952, at her home in Newton, Iowa. On June 23, 1909, she was married to Will Brown; two daughters were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for thirty-two years.

She leaves her husband; two daughters: Mrs. Beatrice Staley and Mrs. Loretta Bumgardner; a sister, Mrs. Carrie Pattison; a brother, Sam Amos; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Evangelist Henry Castings and Elder Clyde E. McDonald at Dunreath Church. Interment was in Dunreath cemetery.

* BLIND COURAGE

I first saw him groping for the door at the bus station. Then somebody took him by the hand and led him in. A little later he was seated beside me in the bus. He slept for some miles, and when we reached Marshall he awoke and began to talk. A severe illness had made him blind at eight, he had gone to military academy, to a school for the blind, and was now in the law school at the university, hoping to make a career for himself. Fully aware of the seriousness of his handicap, he was not afraid, nor did he indulge in self-pity. "I don't want to be dependent on others more than I can help," he said. "I want to do my share as far as I can. I can't just sit on a street corner with a box of pencils in my hand. Adjustments are difficult, of course, when you can't see, but I force myself into as many situations as I can and meet many people so that I can learn. I don't want to be dependent on a seeing-eye dog. I don't even like to carry a white cane because it would mark me for special consideration. I need to build my confidence by doing what other people do. Other blind people are doing it, and I can do it too."

The son of Greek parents living in one of our small cities, he was coming home for a brief visit. His father, who had spent large sums of money in an effort to cure him, met him at the station, his pride and affection for his son apparent.

We sometimes speak of blind courage in those who shut their eyes to the facts of life. How much greater is the courage of those who are really blind and can never see again in this life.

I thought of this young man's brave philosophy. It would be a good one for those who can see.

* LIFE

Groups of college girls were on their way, some to evening meetings, some to a soda fountain, some to a movie.

One called across the street to a friend: "Are you going to see that show?"

"Yeah."

"Oh, you'll laugh, and you'll cry—and you'll love it!"

There are the basic ingredients of life: comedy, tragedy, and love. If we have some of each, life is balanced and full. If we can enjoy the laughter, knowing that someday there must be tears; if we can accept the tears in faith that someday there will be laughter, if in taking both of them we can remember to love, then we shall be loved, and we shall find our share of happiness too.

* THREATS AND PROMISES

The weather man has a specially repugnant dish that natives here call "Conference weather." Two days ago it was spring. There was a bird ecstatically ruining his voice in a tree. There were hopeful buds here and there, and a blush of green on the lawn. Then it came—a great big sopping, sloppy snow in our laps and faces. Tonight there is a glaze of ice on the walks, and a wind with the cutting edge of freshly broken glass. Summer that was "just around the corner" is still there.

PRESIDENT RECEIVES CHECK FOR HOSPITAL DRIVE

A $1,000 check for the Independence Sanitarium was presented to President Israel A. Smith by W. G. Wilson, chairman of the Plant-City committee of General Motors at a luncheon at the Sanitarium, March 13. The donation was made as part of the $35,000 hospital drive, but if it is not needed to complete that campaign, the contribution may be credited toward the hospital's next building project—a completely new Emergency Department.

REGISTRATION AT CONFERENCE

Conference visitors and delegates began to fill the Auditorium and register the week before Conference. By March 27, the total registration numbered over 2,000. Handling the arrangements was the registration committee with Bishop Howard Miller as chairman, and Elders Fred O. Davies and Herbert Lively assisting. A staff of about twenty volunteer workers also assisted with the registration.

Conference also brought people from missions abroad as well as from every part of the United States. James and George Barrington, and Franklyn and Fred Schofield arrived in Independence from England March 26. The Schofield brothers flew from London to Kansas City, and the Barrington brothers came across the Atlantic on the "Queen Mary." Brother James Barrington is not only in the United States on church business, but is also representing a firm which manufacturers stained glass windows for churches and cathedrals. He will probably remain in the States until the middle of June.

CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE HONORED

Joe Taylor, son of High Priest and Mrs. Arthur B. Taylor of Independence, has been named editor-in-chief of the "University Daily Kansas," student newspaper at the University of Kansas at Lawrence. He will fill the position for the last half of the spring semester. A graduate student of William Jewell College, he has been associate editor and city editor of the "Kansas." He will receive a Master's degree in journalism in June, and has been named to Who's Who in American Colleges.

David Livingston, son of Bishop and Mrs. Henry Livingston of Independence, was awarded his Eagle Scout award April 6. David has also just completed his God and Country award.

Frank Jennings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jennings, and George Lund, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lund, both of Independence, were members of the Kansas University rifle team which won second place in the annual William Randolph Hearst R.O.T.C. rifle competition.

STAKE LEADERS CONFER

Kansas City Stake leaders, pastors and departmental directors for the twelve congregations met on March 8 and 9 to discuss departmental objectives, problems, and solutions. The conference used the new group techniques in the discussions and all was recorded on tape. The conference leaders were J. D. Anderson, stake president; Wardell Hinderks, stake coordinating promoter of departments; Fred L. Young, stake promoter of adult department; Ray Fisher, stake promoter of youth departments; and Kleta Finley, stake promoter of children's departments.

New Church Home for Canton-Massillon Branch

The new meeting place for the Canton and Massillon Saints is located at 708 Federal Avenue Northeast in Massillon, Ohio. It was purchased in 1951 from the St. John Lutheran congregation and has since been remodeled and redecorated by the ninety-seven members of the branch.

Elder Bernard Rohrer serves as pastor, having succeeded the late Elder W. C. Neville who served as pastor of the Canton Branch for many years until his death in 1950. Donald Neville is church school superintendent; Frank Greene, assistant superintendent and leader of the young adult League; Mrs. J. C. McKelvey, president of the woman's auxiliary; and Mrs. G. D. Burger, director of music. Vera Rasor, who directed the Canton choir for five years, had to resign because of ill health.

The main auditorium contains thirty-six pews and will seat two hundred fifty persons. In addition to this there are two large rooms adjoining the auditorium. The church also contains a choir loft and a pipe organ.

"World" Religion

WE HAVE A LETTER from a publisher promoting attention to an article in his magazine entitled, "What is a Protestant?" He inquires, "What do Protestants stand for? How do they differ from other religions? Why are they split into 222 denominations?"

To answer the first of these questions would indeed be a large undertaking, and it is possible that no common denominator could be found. It is commonly thought all Protestant movements originally stemmed from the Roman Catholic Church and resulted in resistance to it or in protest to alleged apostasy or innovation in doctrine or practice. So it may be thought that all Protestant churches have been born of Roman Catholicism, have been emancipated from it because of higher or better beliefs or otherwise, or that all of them—because of antagonism to Romish doctrines—are entitled to be called Protestant.

We have discriminated in our own thinking and have not considered that we are Protestant for the reason that we did not "come out of" Catholicism. We are a restoration. We can be held to be Protestant only by a sort of dichotomy which would divide all religionists into Catholics and non-Catholics, or Protestants. We have been classified by some as non-Christian which, of course, is an indication of pride or prejudice or both by those who do the appraising.

The third question, "Why are they (Protestants) split up into 222 denominations?" stimulates us in offering the criticism that the question assumes too much. The connotation of the word "split" is that at some time the 222 bodies were one and the same, which, of course, is not and never was true.

We would hold that the term "Protestant" is too comprehensive to define with any assurance, and that the so-called Protestant churches are so many and varied in doctrine, it cannot be satisfactorily stated wherein they differ from other religions, the latter calling up many religions neither Catholic nor Protestant, such as Mohammedanism, Brahmanism, and, to be sure, so-called Mormonism.

CLOSELY ALLIED to the foregoing reflections is the ever recurring proposals of church union. Doctor Harry E. Fosdick has recently taken the position that religion, because of its many forms, is hindering the development of the "spiritual culture" that is "desperately" needed by mankind, because the adherents of each religion are not willing to compromise or give up their peculiar beliefs in order to secure unity of understanding. Religion, he says, is often a wall of separation and even cause of hostilities. Countries are divided between themselves and among themselves. Antagonistic religions exist "side by side." Contrasting and conflicting beliefs—a "salmagundi" he calls it—divide mankind. He also finds there are some principles common to all religions, such as belief in a supreme being, prayer, love, charity, etc. If they could but unite on the common beliefs, "dropping" those wherein there is difference, and thus arrive at what he calls a "unifying spiritual culture"! In the meantime men go from catastrophe to disaster for lack of this desirable "culture."

Theoretically this is fine! But it is because of so many peculiar beliefs, in conflict with others, but adhered to tenaciously, that have brought into existence the two hundred odd different churches or religions. To ask zealous religionists to abjure their sacred convictions in order to conform to a theoretical "culture," a composite of many ideas as to what is "culture," is a hurdle their judgments cannot take.

ONE WRITER suggests the impracticability—if not the impossibility—of a "universal spiritual culture" ever being "evolved in this world" or if so evolved, it could ever save the present world situation. Though it is conceivable that many people have so little real conviction as to doctrine and tenets, they could abandon any or all without doing violence to their intellectual integrity.

Prophets of old saw that division would exist in the latter days: Paul in II Timothy 3: 1-15 says:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come.

For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away.

For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts,

Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.

But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was.

But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me.

Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.

But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;

And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

Can we believe this confusion would not exist in the religious

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Bishop D. A. Alberts, Rorzelle, New South Wales, Australia:

I recall with pleasure my own experience at the 1948 Conference appointee dinner and felt then it an honor indeed to be associated with such a fine body of men.

I am sure the dinner scheduled for March 29 will be rich and worth-while fellowship for all those present. We here in Australia will be near in spirit.

On March 2—the day set aside for special fasting and prayer for the needs of General Conference—I happened to be visiting our Port Kembla Branch. Although there were only a few people and they were isolated from the larger church experience, their response to this request was whole-hearted and uplifting. It revealed to me again the growth that is steadily being made toward unity and world-wide church appreciation.

I trust divine guidance will be yours and that the Conference will be blessed.

From a personal letter Apostle D. T. Williams has made available to us, we have selected a portion which has considerable to interest our readers. Marion is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Brown of Independence, Missouri.

I think there is a definite need for ministry to the men in service. They are taken from home, church, and the activities they enjoy to be thrown into a melting pot of servicemen. It is during this time, it seems to me, that many of our young people are lost to the church. Some branches have set up systems of correspondence but others lose contact with the individual when he leaves for military service. I believe all branches should keep contact with their young men, inform them of the activities going on, and make them feel as though they are still a part of the group. The pastor shouldn't be required to carry all the burden; League groups should make it a project.

The only way to keep contact with young people is by mail. Since this is my job in the Navy, I can vouch for the fact that mail has a high effect on the morale of a crew. When the mail decreases, the morale and standards of the men also fall. An example: I have noticed a boy of eighteen who had high morals and came from a good family, yet over a period of about nine months he has swung the other way. To me it seems that if his friends and the people who know him would have written to him more often possibly this would not have happened. These boys think in their own minds that nobody is concerned about them, and so they meet the world problems the easiest way. Possibly this young man receives a letter once a week.

I am deeply concerned about our young men who are having to go into service. With more and more of them leaving home I think that as much interest should be taken to minister to them as is necessary to carrying on the ministry in home branches. The young people we keep will be the church of tomorrow.

Regarding "Collier's Encyclopedia"

We are pleased to publish the following from Elder John Blackmore, Church Historian:

A CORRECTED COPY

The pressure of many protests to the Collier Corporation, publishers of Collier's Encyclopedia, has resulted in a letter of explanation to President Israel A. Smith from Editor-in-Chief Charles P. Barry. Accompanying this letter were tear sheets of an improved version of the article under the caption of "Mormons" in the fourth printing. The correction is not entirely satisfactory in terms of historic accuracy. Further contact with the company has received courteous and co-operative attention.

I received a long distance telephone call from New York from the president of the corporation, Mr. A. G. Smith, seeking our cooperation in rewriting the article for the fifth printing, which will be published in September of this year.

I am pleased to inform our members of this much more co-operative attitude on the part of the corporation. In return we shall reciprocate by supplying information, which we hope will result in a satisfactory and historically accurate representation of Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church.

We have the assurance that Colliers will exchange for our people any copies of volumes 14, 16, and 17 of the earlier printings for the revised printing, if they contact the home office of the Collier's Corporation.

The Importance of Love

By Herbert C. Lively

A FEW MONTHS AGO I talked with a friend who is a child psychologist. He told me that he had several hundred maladjusted children under his care, but most of them were placed in private homes. As soon as possible, a child who needs help is subjected to a normal family environment. When he feels he is loved and wanted, he responds by engaging in those common activities which develop personality and character.

We adults are no different. We respond to love and affection also. Isn't it true in our congregations that the newcomer must be sought out by someone who shows a warm interest in him before he gives himself wholeheartedly to the fellowship of the church? Many people today are lonely and confused. They could be helped if someone would only give them understanding affection. Like children, they would respond, living useful lives.

Yet even normal friendships and family affections are not enough to satisfy the deep, inner restlessness which all of us feel. We yearn to make our lives count for something. And until this restlessness is satisfied, all of us remain to some degree basically unadjusted and discontent.

We, too, need to be placed in an environment in which we shall feel a truer and deeper affection than even home and friends can give. That environment is available. It is available in our consciousness that God is concerned about us individually. He loves us. When we realize that God is seeking after us, we respond, again like the child, by doing the things which the one who loves us wants us to do. God wants us to love and help others; so we seek ways of service. God wants us to solve the great social problems of our world today; consequently, we share this burden. He wants us to be responsible for the way we use our time, our money, and our abilities; so we become his stewards, working together with him.

One of the religious pioneers of our land, during the last century, began his life's work as an unlearned country boy. He became a skilled servant of God in response to a thrilling experience that told him God loved him and had a work for him to do.

Are you thinking, "I don't have this feeling that God loves me"? Do as this humble boy did. Learn about Jesus by reading the Scriptures. Then, with the story of His life on your heart, get down on your knees and talk with God. Do this often until you get to know that God wants you and has a work which only you can do.

The Unfinished Furrow

By Clifford Cole

And it came to pass, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head. And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father, and Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God. And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, who are at my house. And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.—Luke 9: 57-62.

GREAT LITERATURE AND ART have many unfinished masterpieces. Dickens left an unfinished novel. Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" is a joy to all who hear it. The gospels abound in unfinished stories. For instance, I have often wondered what may have been the future attitude of the elder brother of the Prodigal Son.

In these few short verses of Scripture are several unfinished stories. The answers are not given. To the man who said, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my Father," Jesus said, "Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." To the one who would have returned to bid farewell to his family and friends, Jesus spoke a profound truth: "No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God"—nor, may we add, is he prepared for the new and dynamic life with Christ which challenges him onward. The basic truth of this persists in every age and is found in all men.

I knew a man who heard the gospel preached and apparently believed it with all his heart. He testified privately that he knew it was true. When he was approached about being baptized, however, he replied, "I believe the church is true. I believe the gospel that you preach is the gospel of Jesus Christ. But I'm involved in a financial deal with people in my business who are bitter about your church, and if I should join the church now I would be pushed out of my business. I'll have to wait two or three years until I get financially established, then I'll be baptized."

I know of another man who was asked several years ago to go under church appointment. He was keenly aware of the days in 1930 when church appointees were released from appointment with very little by way of financial resources. He replied, "No, I won't go under church appointment now and put my family in a precarious position; but I have a pretty good business, and when I get $20,000 saved I will accept appointment. Then my family will have financial security if another depression comes." The man acquired the twenty thousand dollars, I understand, but he has never gone under church appointment.

A few years ago I worked in a grocery store. A good friend of mine wanted to stop smoking, and I am sure he was sincere in his desire. On several occasions he came into the store, bought a carton of cigarettes and, looking me squarely in the eyes, said, "Clifford, when I get this carton smoked, I'm going to quit. This is my last one." He came back and bought many cartons of cigarettes. The last I knew he was still smoking.

I know a man who wants to file his financial statement. He has been wanting to for several years, but he always approaches it like this, "Whenever I can get my financial affairs straightened out, and my debts all paid, I'll file my financial statement." So far he hasn't.

JESUS UNDERSTOOD human nature that day when the men came to him and said, "We'll follow, but first let us—" He had no choice but to speak bluntly: "No man having put his hand to the plow" dares to look back. If he does he is not yet ready for the varied and exacting experiences which challenge him on as a partner with God.

I think I understand something of what the Master meant when he said these words. I remember vividly the days of my boyhood when my mother and dad moved to a homestead in Wyoming. Many times I accompanied my dad out on the prairie to break up the sod for a new field. We had an old rod breaking plow that we had shipped out on the immigrant car. Memory takes me back to the times when I saw my dad set up a stake at one end of a prospective field and tie a white rag at the top of the stake for a marker. Then going back to the opposite end of the field, he would begin his first furrow. With his lines tied together and looped under his arms, and his hands on the handles of the plow, he plowed toward the mark as I watched and followed along behind. It was fun for me to watch the rabbits and mice, and hunt for birds' nests; but my dad, who was plowing the furrow, looked only at the mark toward which he was going. It took plenty of concentration to get the furrow straight. He had no time to look back. The mark toward which he was going was ahead.

Life is always like the furrow; yet by nature we are tempted to look back, aren't we? We resist change; we feel at home in the "old rut." We hesitate to let go of the past and reach out to a new and vigorous future, even if that future is with Christ. We tend to think back to the good old days when we were children.

LIKE MOST ADULTS I recall the days of my childhood with a great deal of relish. Among the places I remember with pleasure is Gumbo Butte. It was easy to climb Gumbo Butte from the north side, but as I moved around to the south the slope became progressively steeper until the sides were nearly perpendicular. It was great fun to slide down the sides of Gumbo Butte or to go on adventurous excursions in the canyons which surrounded it. As I grew older, I always looked back on the days of Gumbo Butte with nostalgia. While I was away from home in high school and college I thought it certainly would be nice to go back and slide down Gumbo Butte again, but when I finally tried it, I discovered an important principle in life. I found that time changes things and the experiences of boyhood which I remembered with such pleasure were no longer fun. My clothes weren't made to slide down buttes any more; I got dirt in my shoes, and the whole experience was disappointing. How often some of us want to go back and be kids again, but the so-called "good old days" weren't as good as we remember them. After all, there is no road back; it is a phantom of the imagination. The only road is ahead. Joy and happiness are found in that road, not in what has already happened.

We dislike the strain of dynamic adjustment. The Scriptures abound in examples of this. For example, Lot and his wife were directed to leave their home in Sodom. The wicked city was to be destroyed. Like most of us they were reluctant to leave the security of their home and friends. Lot's wife, unwilling to break all her ties with the luxury and temporal security of the past, turned to gaze back at the city. I cannot interpret the full significance of the story, but I do feel justified in making this comment about it. The direction in which the woman looked was of little importance, but in her heart there was a longing to hang on to the things of the past. She didn't want to go out to a vigorous new life even though God himself had called her to pioneer with him in building a more righteous community.

The sons of Lehi didn't want to leave Jerusalem. They tried to persuade their father and Nephi to stay in the city. In the wilderness and on the ocean the constant source of dissatisfaction on the part of Laman and Lemuel was their unwillingness to give up the patterns of the past and look forward to the future with God. On some occasions they even planned to take the lives of their father and brothers in order to return to Jerusalem.

The children of Israel often complained as they followed Moses and Aaron in the wilderness. Time and time again they cried out with childish anguish. What did they cry for? Well, a good share of the time it was for the onions, and garlic, and leeks, and fleshpots of Egypt. At times they would have been willing to give up their freedom and go back to the bondage of Egypt, not because they were against God, but because they didn't want to give up the things they were accustomed to. They preferred to remain in the same old rut.

POLITICALLY AND ECONOMICALLY the world is plowing a new furrow today. Ever since the birth of America the tempo of life has increased so rapidly that it is difficult for us to adjust quickly enough to keep up. Here again the constant temptation is to turn our eyes backward rather than ahead. Following World War I there was a political campaign conducted on the slogan, "Back to Normalcy." We elected a president on that slogan, which supposedly meant that we were going back to conditions as they were before the war. Well, we didn't go back, and those who lived through the twenties and the depression of the thirties know that we did not return in any sense of the word even though we tried. Again during World War II we sang such songs as "When the Lights Go on Again all Over the World." As we sang we envisioned the time when we would be able to return to life as it was before the war began. But we haven't gone back—there is no back. The road is ahead, and anyone who looks back thinking to return is feeding an illusion which doesn't exist.

Religiously and socially we must set our hands to plow a new furrow which will give a godly meaning and purpose to the technical progress of our day. In this field the church must give a confident and ever growing leadership. It would be quite easy for us to shake our heads and mournfully lament about the fact that things "aren't like they used to be." Shakespeare hit a responsive note in his day when he had Hamlet say, "The world is out of joint, O cursed spite that ever I was born to set it right." Frankly, I don't feel like Hamlet. If I could have chosen any time in which to live, out of all the past, I would have picked now. I don't know of a time that would have held more challenges. When we are honest with ourselves, most of us are glad that God saw fit to match us with this day. Certainly we are living in dynamic times—times of great change—and I am glad of it.

God has not left us unequipped. The gospel of Jesus Christ and the spiritual power resident within the church offer the measure by which we may evaluate and interpret new developments. They will guide the way in utilizing these developments toward the building of the kingdom of God. It may well be that the scientific and technical progress of the past century has been a God-given prerequisite to make possible the social and spiritual objectives envisioned in the Zionite community. We are all well aware that material progress can lead to the literal destruction of mankind. It is the business of the gospel of the kingdom to utilize it toward wholesomeness and the abundant life. It is not the business of the gospel to hide in the security of the past or the status quo.

SOME OF MY FRIENDS who were in the Pacific area during the past war told me about the typhoons of that area. I was interested to learn that when a big ship in harbor receives a storm warning it gets out of harbor before the storm strikes. My first reaction was that if I were the captain of a ship and learned that a typhoon was coming I would get in the best harbor possible and put down all the anchors on board. But my friend said, "No. That is the way to get yourself wrecked on the rocks. If you get out on the high sea and head straight into the storm you can battle it out; that is your only salvation."

The experience of the sailors might well be applied to our job. It is not by timidity toward the right, or by clinging to the harbor of worldly security, that we shall achieve the thing which God has called us to do. When we head into the winds of social and moral disorganization and the heavy seas of political and economic upheaval, moving with assurance in the direction which God leads we shall find a very real salvation.

The story of Christopher Columbus never fails to thrill us. Many sailors were willing to sail the well-charted seas of the Mediterranean and out as far as the Azores, even daring at times to go a little way into the unknown before darting back. But our admiration goes out to one who had such faith in a great idea that he was willing to push out beyond the charted lane—to cut his ties with the well-tested and yield himself to the constant tug of the trade winds to sail on toward his mark. Many followed, but he alone had the courage to break the trail.

In a real way God has called us to just such a task as this. No man reads the headlines in the newspaper or walks down the street without a keen awareness that the worldly wisdom of the past will not solve the problems he sees on every hand. Yet the world is searching for a way. As Apostle Paul has so well said, "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" (Romans 8:19). Today we need to see the markers which God has set and move out on the untried road without fear but with the caution which comes from observing the instructions he has given us and shall give as we push out on the frontier with him.

Here are a few questions which kingdom builders might be considering these days. Can we honestly face up to God when he asks, "Are you willing to become a skilled craftsman for Christ?" For some young people this may mean a willingness to give years in school, disciplining their habits of spending, sacrificing many offers which would bring immediate rewards in favor of hard work and refining growth toward the more perfect gift. For all of us it means the willingness to give time in personal study and preparation. Certainly it means for every one of us time spent each day in prayer and devotion that our gifts may be consecrated to God. Too often we're guilty of saying, "I couldn't tell Bill about the church. I don't know enough about it myself." "I couldn't teach a church school class." "I couldn't offer prayer."

Are we willing to give our lives in service without regard to personal reward or position? It is the modern way to say, "What do I get out of it? I'll do it if there is enough in it for me." How many branches are divided because someone gets his feelings hurt over the fact that his work has not been properly recognized?

Are we willing to discipline ourselves to an affirmative wholesomeness of thought and conversation? One of the great stewardships is conversation. If, unbeknown to us, someone should record all of our conversation today on a wire recorder and play it back tonight, how would it sound?

Do we dare to throw off the second best and give ourselves to the very best? Like the rabbits that jump up and the mice that scurry across the path, the second best distracts our attention from the mark. One of the major qualifications of a kingdom builder is that he must have "an eye single to the glory of God."

Do we dare to bear testimony of the gospel to our friends and associates?

Do we dare to obey the financial law of the church and teach it to our children, beginning today?

Do we dare, honestly, in every situation to say, "What would Jesus want me to do in this circumstance?" and then to do it, no matter what our associates say or how it affects our personal pride or pocketbook?

These are questions which must be answered as the church moves forward. This is not a call to ease. It's not a means of escape. It is not radical. The way which God himself has pointed is not a "fly-by-night" plan. It is the plan which all the world seeks. It is the fulfillment of the revelation of God to the ancient prophets. Isaiah and Micah both spoke of it:

In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains. . . . And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Micah 4: 1-3.

This is the task which faces us. In its fulfillment are to be found the answers to the problems facing the United Nations, the problems of labor and management, the problems of economic confusion and political chicanery. In a world of desperation where men do not know the way, this holds forth the promise of God. We need not be "crepe hangers." We are called to be the hope of all mankind. We ought to be willing to move out with faith and complete dedication to the call of God as we interpret the principles of Jesus Christ to a world that is dying amid gadgets and material debris.

We may not see the end of our furrow but we dare not look back, for eternity stretches on before, beckoning us with a continual challenge.

world? Besides, were we not told by Paul that "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears"?

The peoples of many nations and many races—having nothing in common but "one blood" and "itching" ears perhaps—in their dislike for sound doctrine, denying the power of the gospel, have been attracted to and led away by many "teachers," so we today have verily a multitude of beliefs of a variety to meet every taste or fancy, and yet adhered to so closely and reverently that a common religion or even a "universal spiritual culture" is but an iridescent dream and an impossibility.

The Ballot Box

By Bruce E. Brown

We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same, and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people (if a republic), or the will of the sovereign.—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 3.

ON ELECTION DAY the citizens of this land will exercise one of the privileges of their citizenship by entering a booth and casting a vote for the candidates of their choice. It is a sacred privilege.

F. R. Hayward has written:

It took a thousand years to shape this box. Only by centuries of struggle was that lock fastened upon it to preserve my ballot in honor. One generation of men after another beat themselves against the door of this room, and died upon its threshold before it could be opened to let me enter and choose my government. Dreamers and poets of liberty; martyrs and prophets of truth; soldiers and seamen; statesmen and philosophers; all who have labored and suffered in the costly human march toward freedom—these are my unseen companions beside the ballot box today.

Millions of people in many nations are engaged in a gigantic struggle in which the question of the rights of the citizen to his government is basic. Men are still dying for the privilege we enjoy here in America.

The best guarantee of democracy is a conscientious citizenry, in the creation of which the Christian church has a responsibility that cannot be delegated to any other institution. Democracy cannot exist without Christianity. Neo-paganistic forces are on the march against democracy. It is high time that we wake up and rediscover the heritage and purpose of democracy.

What is a democracy? The Encyclopedia tells us

Democracy is a term of wide and variable signification, and comprehending such diverse but related conceptions as a society based on equality, a state in which the actual power of government is lodged in the mass of the people; and a form of government in which the authority of the state is directly administered by the people through their chosen representatives.

DEMOCRACY makes real demands upon each member of society if it is to continue. Every citizen must be able to consider matters of the state and the fitness of men to hold office; he must exercise his judgment and be informed as well as intelligent. He must have the ability to discuss and debate questions, basing his conclusions upon accurate information. "Let us look at the record" was a favorite statement of a clever politician. Each citizen must be vitally interested. He will not take his privileges as a matter of course and be indifferent. Those who do not register and vote, and those who do not vote intelligently, place democracy in peril. When we permit considerations of convenience, the pressure of business, or the spirit of indifference to come between us and responsibilities as citizens we betray the trust of those intrepid men who, under divine impulsion, founded our republic.

The first and fundamental implication of democracy is the value of human personality. This has been lost in parts of continental Europe. There men are not persons. They are instruments of the state. This is followed by the idea that all individuals have equal value. The Declaration of Independence expresses this. Men are equal, not necessarily in ability or opportunity, but equal as men. Democracy, furthermore, holds that ownership of property and private enterprise should be widespread. There is social stability in property ownership. A further implication is that democracy holds within itself the possibility of progressive change; also, the principle of referendum and recall. The ballot of the voter is the most potent agency in estab-

Atonement

By Robert J. Miller

THE ATONEMENT is important to us because it is the act of reconciliation between God and man—the event which bridges the gap between fallible man and infallible God. It is God's way of concluding a victory over Satan, of giving renewed hope to mankind, of proving the possibility of eternal life, and of assuring us of his love and concern for our eternal welfare. We should give the Atonement serious thought so that we might better know our Father and his way with us.

It is probably safe to say the act of Atonement, in its largest sense, began in the mind of God when man was in the process of his spiritual creation. Most certainly it can be said to include the entire period of Christ's ministry from the day John baptized him until the time of his ascension into heaven to resume his place at the right hand of God. During the imprisonment of John the Baptist, Christ said, "From the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. But the days will come when the violent shall have no power" (Matthew 11: 12, 13). Then at the close of his ministry we hear him say to the Father, "I have glorified thee upon the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."—John 17: 4, 5.

Christ gives us a most logical reason for having taken upon himself the work of atonement—the task of saving that which is lost (Matthew 18: 11; Luke 19: 10). "For it is I that taketh upon me the sins of the world; for it is I that hath created them" (Mosiah 11: 131).

JESUS UNDERTOOK the task of redemption because of his personal interest in man. He had created man by the will of God; he would therefore conclude the responsibility of the Godhead toward man by preparing the way for his salvation.

The period of ministry he performed among the people was a normal part of the sequence of events which rounded out his mission on earth. It was imperative that we be given the law; for if we know the truth, then the truth can make us free (John 8: 32). Truth alone could break the bands of death—truth alone insure eternal life. And so we read in Holy Scripture the fundamental laws he taught; we follow in sacred history the manner of his own life, for his is the life which must be surrendered in the ultimate test to prove the power of God over death.

Death represents evil—the power of Satan. If there be no resurrection of the dead, then our faith is not justified. But if our mortal selves can put on immortality, if we can live forever, then we have the final proof that the way of God is right—that our faith in his Word can save.

The statement has been made on various occasions that Christ could raise himself from the dead because he was the Son of God with all power given unto him, and because his flesh was different from ours due to the manner of his conception. If these conclusions are right, then there is no basis in fact for us to believe we, too, can be raised from the dead.

HERE IS A VITAL POINT to be cleared up. We believe, as Abinadi stated in Mosiah 8: 28, 29, "that God himself [did] shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh he was called the Son of God" (God in the personification of his creation—the Word, the Law—Truth [John 1: 1, 2]). We also believe that the flesh of Christ or God as represented by the Spirit was not different from the flesh of man because of holy conception.

Science has not, to our knowledge, yet been able to definitely lay its finger on the spirit of life, or the spirit of man, and hold it up for examination. What the unseen or intangible power is that brings life into being we do not presume to say; but to us it seems perfectly logical to believe the Spirit has power to create for itself a human temple without the aid of man.

The record tells us clearly that Jesus was born of a virgin named Mary; it also informs us that the body of Jesus was nourished by the same food his disciples ate. Since Mary, the mother of Jesus, and Jesus himself derived the substance from which their bodies were created and sustained from the earth that furnishes substance to all living creatures, then it is right to believe there is no difference in the element content of Christ's body and ours.

When Adam and Eve were still in the garden of Eden a curse was placed upon the earth, and the promise given that all flesh which came from it must die and return again thereto (Genesis 3: 23-25). The curse which has been in the flesh of all mankind was also in the flesh of Christ. For this reason Abinadi continued by saying, "And thus the flesh becoming subject to the Spirit, or the Son to the Father, being one God, suffereth temptation, and yielded not to the temptation" (Mosiah 8: 32). While Christ was in the flesh he did not suffer it to see corruption (Acts 2: 31) but grew from grace to grace until he was worthy to be called the Son of God (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 2).

The flesh of Christ was under the same curse as man's and likely the same biological urges, for "he suffered the pains [temptations] of all men; yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women and children, who belong to the family of Adam. And he suffereth this that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great judgment day" (II Nephi 6: 46, 47). Would he have suffered this had his flesh been different?

When the disciples would call him Good Master, he rebuked them saying, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good, but one, that is, God" (Matthew 19: 17). And in Christ's prayer to the Father he said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself" (John 17: 19), leaving clear inference that there was a definite need for sanctification or purification on his part. The curse of the earth had to be lifted, just as was needful in the case of the three Nephites who would tarry (III Nephi 13: 27).

The day shall come when this curse shall be lifted, when the earth will be purged and inherit celestial glory (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6); but until that day comes all flesh must return to earth and in God's time experience a regeneration.

JESUS PROVED that the element (flesh) and spirit can become inseparably connected, and that in such union there is perfection, a fullness of joy, eternal life (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5). He demonstrated the power of the Spirit of God over the power of Satan. He proved that this was possible, however, in only one way, by and through the Spirit of Christ, "for being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Hebrews 5: 9). "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (I Corinthians 15: 22).

"It must needs be that there is an opposition in all things. If not so . . . righteousness could not be brought to pass; neither wickedness; neither holiness nor misery; neither good nor bad" (II Nephi 1: 81, 82). It was requisite in the plan of God that there be opposing forces; if not, man could never become like God, there would be no choice to make, no need for agency, and little need of intelligence. But "intelligence is the glory of God" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6), and there are opposing forces.

MAN'S TROUBLE has always been in his failure to rule his spirit and to properly subject the flesh to the will of the spirit. This is a challenge which he cannot meet alone. The spirit of man has never been able to bridge the gap and never will, because the elements of which all flesh is composed is subject only to the power which made it. That power is the spirit of truth, which is God's law that governs all things. Thus man's hope of redemption lies wholly in the power of Christ or of God in the flesh. That is why God came down and dwelt in flesh and mastered it—to prove that only in and through Christ can men inherit eternal life. That is why the promise was given that if they obey his law they shall have his Spirit which can overcome all flesh (John 14: 23).

Christ was both Son of God—by Spirit of God, the holy conception—and son of man—by virtue of natural birth. He was the Spirit of God and spirit of man in one temple. But the Spirit of God overruled the man spirit, which is subject to the sins of envy, jealousy, selfishness, greed, personal ambitions, vanity, and desires of the flesh which so often run counter to the purpose for which it is created because of the workings of the adversary.

Christ suffered these pains (temptations) and overcame them, for "he received not of the fullness at first, but continued from grace to grace, until he received a fullness; and thus he was called the Son of God, because he received not of the fullness at the first" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 2).

Yes, from the days of John the Baptist the kingdom of heaven suffered violence; the wicked took it by force in Gethsemane and Calvary; but the day shortly came when they had no power over the kingdom, and Christ arose from the dead.

"Behold, as in Adam, or by nature [men] fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins. And moreover . . . there shall be no other name given, nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent."—Mosiah 1: 115, 116.

Nailed to the Cross

By Camilla Collins

The children's department was planning a dramatization of the Easter story for the morning worship service. Mary the mother, Mary Magdalene, Peter, John, and all the important characters had been carefully chosen and the Scripture readers and singers appointed for each scene. One starry-eyed, primary boy sat silently watching, then impulsively dashed to the leader's side. "Oh, please! May I be nailed to the cross?"

Of course he knew that no nails would be pounded in the makeshift cross; but the light on his face and the eagerness with which he volunteered to portray the role of the suffering Christ touched the hearts of all who listened, and a reverent hush enveloped the little worship room.

Just how willing are we, as kingdom builders, to be nailed to the cross? Can we hold our tongues when slanderous statements are made about our beliefs? Are we willing to do our best in spite of difficulties? Can we rise above the discouragements that beset our paths and remain true to our ideals? Are we willing to make the sacrifices necessary in using our time and talents to teach others the way of the cross? Christ has said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."

Analysis of 1951 Auditorium Campaign

IN VIEW of the short period in 1951 during which the Auditorium Campaign was under way, the results were most encouraging and indicated that the goal of $200,000 for 1952 should be well within reach.

Despite the brief time allowed for organizing such a campaign throughout the stakes and districts, many branches reported contributions in excess of the quotas assigned them. Twenty-three stakes and districts (or nearly one-third of the total) exceeded the quotas assigned by the Presiding Bishopric. The Southeastern Illinois District exceeded others by contributing 195.84 per cent of its quota.

The amount in excess of the quota raised in the twenty-three stakes and districts accounted for approximately 6 per cent of the total funds raised and was an important factor in bringing the total close to the goal of $100,000.

Of necessity, quotas are based largely on the past performance of the district in contributing to General Church funds and therefore vary widely in terms of "per capita contribution" in a district. The average quota called for about $1.00 from each enrolled member, and it is interesting to note that nineteen stakes and districts contributed amounts in excess of $1.00 a member. (These figures are based on the stake and district enrollments as of January 1, 1951.) In this regard Chatham held first place, with Southern New England, St. Louis, and Owen Sound following in that order.

Giving equal weight to the rank achieved in "Percentage of Quota Contributed" and the "Per Capita Contribution," and combining these rankings into an over-all rating, the Bishopric found that Chatham District occupied first place with Southeastern Illinois and Owen Sound sharing second place, and Rich Hill and Southern New England occupying fourth and fifth places respectively.

A summary of this analysis should be of special value to district presidents, pastors, bishops, agents, and solicitors and is therefore being presented here as a matter of information for the many church members who are vitally interested in the completion of the church headquarters at Independence, Missouri.

lishing ideals and of righting wrongs.

It should be evident to us that, unless we re-establish in America the true meaning of democracy and cause our citizens to understand and act on their God-given rights, we shall find ourselves in a totalitarian state. It can happen to us. Mussolini said, "The people [in Italy] do not want to vote, for less than half of them voted when they had the privilege." The polling booth should be regarded as a sacred shrine, and the exercise of suffrage as a God-given responsibility.

"Hope for Tomorrow"

By Mildred Finger

Last year over a half-million people came to see the painting. We were enthralled by its beauty and meaning. It was a masterpiece.

Leaving a rushing, milling city, we sat in awe and reverence in the Hall of Crucifixion at Forest Lawn Memorial Park. We were waiting for the unveiling of "The Crucifixion."

The soft tones of the organ were heard, then a golden silence enveloped us.

The curtains were drawn, and there it was—195 feet in length and 45 feet high—a painting no one could describe! As the story of it was told, we lived every minute of it.

Looking about in the vast audience I saw several minority races represented. I tried to see some of their reactions to the story of the outstanding life that was given for all humanity.

In the red velvet covered seats ahead of us sat four Japanese people. I saw one of the women reach for a handkerchief in her purse, and raise it to a tear-stained face. The story was complete.

His love was so great that he gave his life for all. The promise is that while we, too, will meet death, we shall be resurrected. It is a promise of eternal life for all races. This I saw in a tear-stained face.

Joseph Smith's Vocabulary

As Revealed in the Book of Mormon

It is well known that Joseph Smith in early life had little formal schooling. It was asserted by his enemies that he was ignorant, uncouth, and illiterate. If these statements are true even in a small degree, they indicate what Joseph constantly proclaimed—that the translation of the Book of Mormon was indeed a miracle and a mystery. Joseph was only a young man—twenty-four years and three months old—with a scant amount of formal schooling when the Book of Mormon was published. Yet he possessed no meager vocabulary.

Arthur E. Starks of Elizabeth, New Jersey, has made a count of the different words used by Joseph Smith in the Book of Mormon. It is a meticulous piece of work. He has carefully listed the words under four headings: Major Words, 2,624; Derivatives, 1,706; Proper Nouns, 360; Minor Words, 253.

This is a grand total of 4,943, which is no mean vocabulary for a young man who is usually described as unlearned. However, to determine accurately a person's vocabulary is very difficult. Many individual words have a variety of meanings. Such words as "present," "chest," and "row" have various meanings. The use of the correct derivatives of a word in a sentence is also a mark of learning and enriches the vocabulary.

We would also point out that Joseph dictated to the scribe the Book of Mormon. Therefore, in a practical manner, Brother Stark's classification indicates the "oral" or "speech" vocabulary of Joseph Smith. Joseph was aided by the Urim and Thummim, and undoubtedly his personal vocabulary was enhanced. His vocabulary as revealed in the Book of Mormon was not that of an unlearned, ignorant young man.

Question Time

Question:

Will Protestant Christians live during the millennium if their works here are good, even though they have refused to believe that Christ's church has been restored again?

If such Christians do not live during the millennium, in what glory will they come forth afterwards? Will they be lost by refusing to obey the latter-day gospel?

Iowa R.M.

Answer:

Church membership of itself alone determines no man's place in the resurrection, neither guarantees him place with the redeemed in the millennium, but rather his attitude and faith toward God, and his devotion to light and truth.

Any man, who in this life loves God and desires truth and gladly receives and seeks to follow the light which God gives to him, will be led of the Spirit until he finds the fullness. He "cometh unto God," and "the Father teacheth him of the covenant" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7). He will find the true church, and in it he will be able to qualify for the first resurrection and a place in the millennium. If circumstances prevent his finding the true church and gospel here, the opportunity will be extended to him in the spirit world.

On the other hand, people who are indifferent to the truth, careless of the right, and permit their years of life to pass without moral and spiritual improvement, whether belonging to a church or not, will not be fitted for the first resurrection and consequently will not have part in the millennium. They await the telestial resurrection at the end of the thousand years, and if in the meantime have become repentant and obedient will come forth to salvation in telestial glory. Those to whom the gospel appeal is clearly and convincingly made, and who are enlightened by the Spirit until they know the truth, and yet will not believe, and when the door of the kingdom is opened wide for them and they will not enter, they thereby forfeit their right of salvation in any glory, and must await the final resurrection to condemnation and eternal death.

Many people do works which the world counts good but which are profit-less to God. Such works do not make for salvation or reward, and are referred to by the Lord as "dead works." Jesus warned of such when he spoke of many in the day of judgment rising up and pointing to their religious works for which they would expect a reward, to whom he will say, "Ye never knew me; depart from me ye that work iniquity." He followed this statement with the further word that the works acceptable to him are performed by those who "heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them" (Matthew 7: 33, 34, Inspired Version). To be of eternal value our works must be those, and of that character, of which Paul speaks, ". . . works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."—Ephesians 2: 10.

Question:

In your Question Time section of February 4, 1952, you submitted an answer to a question by Mrs. A. T. regarding smoking in our churches in lower auditoriums when we are serving public dinners. I like your stand very much. Will you not include the use of coffee and tea in this manner also? C.F.D.
Ohio

Answer:

Tea and coffee are not mentioned in Section 86, and thus they do not come under any "ban"—if such term can be applied—of that section unless indeed they can be held to come within the category of "hot drinks" or "strong drink" (paragraph 1); but tobacco is specifically mentioned: "And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man . . ."

Tobacco and "strong drink in any form" are condemned in another revelation (Section 119, paragraph 3), which certainly is a directive, an unqualified prohibition, whereas Section 86 (Word of Wisdom) is advisory, there being neither penalty nor "sanction" for non-observance, even though "given for a principle, with promise" "of health" and "wisdom," et cetera, if "these sayings" are "remembered," and "the destroying angel shall pass by them and not slay them."

The question of barring tobacco from all assemblages in church buildings is hardly on a par with any question involving tea and coffee drinking, because many persons are nauseated by the smell of tobacco smoke, whereas the use of tea and coffee in any form, hot or cold, does not affect any but him who drinks.

Question:

Does Genesis 14: 17, 18, Inspired Version, mean that Melchisedec served the sacrament to Abram? The wording is somewhat different in the Authorized Version.

Ontario

H. F.

Answer:

And Melchisedec, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine; and he break bread and blest it, and he blessed the wine, he being the priest of the most high God, and he gave to Abram, and he blessed him, and said, Blessed Abram, thou art a man of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth.

This ceremony performed by the high priest of God, with official blessing upon the bread and wine, was undoubtedly sacramental, and not the mere asking of divine blessing upon daily food; but whether the ordinance was of the same intent and purpose as that instituted by Christ at the last supper is not clear in the absence of any further testimony regarding it. This is the only mention of the use of bread and wine in a sacramental ordinance in the Old Testament, neither is it mentioned in the Book of Mormon prior to Christ's appearance and ministry after his resurrection. It is possible that the sacrament of bread and wine as instituted by Christ was an ordinance of the church in patriarchal times, since the gospel was had from the beginning (Genesis 5: 44, 45), but we are hardly justified in so asserting with the meager evidence at hand. The church of that day knew of the coming of Christ and of the shedding of his blood (Genesis 6: 61-65).

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

A Patient's Story

By Raymond L. Holloway

AT 5:30 a.m. the darkness of the room was split by the beam of a flashlight. It was Mrs. Schmidt, a nurses' aid, coming to take morning temperatures. Although 5:30 was early, the kind, friendly way in which Mrs. Schmidt worked made the beginning of our day in the "San" a pleasant experience. And from that moment on the day had dawned for us in Ward 302. We knew not what it might bring, but we could be sure it would be interesting and, as far as possible, pleasant. Usually one does not think of a stay in the hospital as a pleasant experience, but a stay in the "San" has many pleasant moments. I want to recall several to help others understand and appreciate it.

One of the first events of the day was the visit of Brother Almer Sheehy, hospital chaplain. He had a smile that was certainly contagious. We were glad to have him come in and exchange greetings and possibly tell one of his short and humorous tales. He is often as serious as he is humorous, particularly when he senses the needs of the people, patients, doctors, and nurses. As a result he ministers to all, and many are blessed because of it.

Another event in the daytime activities of a patient at the "San" is the arrival of mail. Cards and letters from loved ones are a real aid to recovery. It makes a big difference when a patient knows he has the prayerful support of friends and neighbors.

As visiting hours approached, we began to speculate as to who would visit us during the afternoon or evening. In our ward no one received many visitors that could be considered his alone. We shared our guests with each other. Since three of us were there for over two weeks together we became well acquainted with each other's friends and relatives. I might say something here about good and bad visiting techniques.

MANY PEOPLE come to visit those who are sick with the best of intentions to comfort and cheer, but sometimes they don't know how to do it properly. If they have spent any time in a hospital, they are sometimes prone to tell of "my operation" or "when I had so and so." The visitor should be happy and express himself optimistically. In conversation he should try to talk about the bright side of things. He should assure the patient he is concerned in his behalf. If the patient believes in prayer, the visitor does well to assure him he is being remembered in family and personal devotions. This assurance counts for much in the recovery of one who has been ill. If the patient doesn't know the value of prayer, the visitor can still give him the assurance that he is interested in his welfare, because everyone—regardless of how he feels about God and His power—needs to have the feeling that someone cares.

The length of the visit is important too. If the patient is very ill, a short visit will probably do quite well. When a person is sick the hospital does all it can to bring him back to health, and a visitor that stays too long can detract from the good being done. Also, if visiting in a ward where one patient is quite ill and the others are not, the visitor should be thoughtful of the sick one. If the patients are convalescing, the visitor may stay longer.

ANOTHER PHASE of the experience in the "San" I like to remember is the relationship of three different parties. The first is God; the second are the people who care for patients; the third is the patient. In no other hospital have I found so many doctors and nurses attempting to fulfill the stewardship they have with their Heavenly Father. It is a big factor in the care of the sick. One incident will illustrate this point. In our ward there were three of us who were quite seriously ill. Paul, a middle-aged man, was a heart patient. Ray, twenty-one, had a severe hand injury caused by an accident with a corn picker. I was hospitalized for surgery. The morning I was to be operated on, Chaplain Sheehy administered to me. God came to my aid and made possible my rapid recovery. He helped me to remain calm and secure in my faith toward him.

The thumb on Ray's hand was not doing as well as the doctors had hoped, and they were afraid they would have to amputate it. One morning I told Ray about our views on administration for the sick. One of the student nurses told us that in their morning devotions they prayed that we as patients would be blessed by our Heavenly Father. Ray believed in the value of prayer, even though he did not belong to our church.

The following morning when Chaplain Sheehy came to our room Ray asked him if he would pray for him. The chaplain was happy to fulfill a request. He explained administration a little more and then after the nurses' aids had finished the morning care of the room, Brother Sheehy administered to Ray. It was a fine experience; I felt the Spirit of God in the room strongly. Ray's bed and mine were side by side and, after the prayer of confirmation was finished, I glanced over and saw that he was deeply moved. No words were spoken for a long time. During those minutes of silence I knew that Ray had communion with God as did Paul and I. The experience meant a great deal to me, and I know it has influenced the lives of the others. Even though Ray's thumb was not wholly saved, it is still useful; what happened in his spiritual life is even more important. He is a better man today as a result of the experience.

So it is that I think of the pleasant experiences I have been permitted to realize because of illness. I have not recounted all the good things that happened to me, because they were many indeed. I made friends with both patients and hospital personnel. Even though I never desired to become ill, there has been a bright side to remember. I know the sun is always shining even through the clouds. I found myself in the sunlight of God's love as I lay on my bed in Room 302 at the "San."

Running Away

By Chaplain (Captain) Floyd Engstrom

Nobody likes to be called yellow. There is little pride attached to running away from problems. Paul wrote one time as follows: "I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost. For a great door and effectual is opened to me there, but there are many adversaries." (I Corinthians 16: 8, 9.) Ephesus was a capital of culture and trade. There were many people, and to Paul it looked promising, but he found obstacles there. It was a city of heathen temples, magic statues, and other barriers to his teachings.

Sometimes men give various excuses; they ask for transfers, they go AWOL, drink, gamble, or otherwise engage in unwholesome activities. Actually they are not facing their problems; they are only running away. These things do not help; they do not cure.

Paul did not go on to Corinth until he established himself in Ephesus—until he had overcome the problems which confronted him there. He gave a valuable lesson for all of us. Good soldiers stand their ground. Men can lick their problems if they will learn to overcome their weaknesses, instead of running away from them. Success comes through facing a problem, understanding it; and then doing something about it.

Note of Thanks

Over a year ago when I was very ill with an eye infection I had to have surgery for glaucoma. I suffered a great deal and called the elders a number of times for administration. Always this brought relief and a spirit of peace. In September I had a cataract removed from my right eye and am much improved. I wish to thank all who offered special prayers for me. Now I am able to write and, with God's help, look forward to being of some service to others.

A Testimony of Healing

My mother, Malinda Sanders Coddington, experienced a remarkable divine healing in the early 1860's. At that time she was about fourteen years old. Her father, John Sanders, had taken turns with her reading a copy of the Book of Mormon given them by a Mr. Booth, for whom he worked. After they finished reading it he said, "I believe this book is a true record and I would join the church, but I am afraid the two factions may unite." This was soon after Young Joseph accepted the presidency of the Reorganization. My grandfather remained a Baptist until his death.

Malinda became ill—so ill that for three months her parents had to turn her over on a sheet because she was completely helpless. They called for medical aid, but no doctor was able to diagnose her illness. At one time she was believed dead, but as her father watched her she whispered, "Tell Mother not to weep. I am not dead."

Malinda had read the Bible a lot, and one day when the Christian Church minister came to visit her, she said, "I want you to do what it says in James 5: 14 and 15." She wanted him to anoint her head with oil and lay hands on her head and pray for her.

The preacher said, "I believe that, but I wouldn't dare do it, for I am like Paul. If eating meat offend thy brethren, I'll eat no meat as long as I live, and this would offend the brethren." He arose and went home.

At that same time a Latter Day Saint lady was sitting in the room. She said, "What did you ask your preacher to do?" Malinda repeated, "I asked him to do for me what it says in James 5: 14, 15." The lady said, "I can get a man to do that for you."

She left and soon returned with Elder George Morey. He anointed Malinda's head with oil, laid his hands on her, and prayed for her. When he was through Malinda called for her clothing. Her mother was fearful but got her clothes. Malinda dressed and sat up. The illness was gone, rebuked by the power of God through his servant.

On November 5, 1865, Malinda married William Coddington, a young soldier of the Union Army. They lived in Iowa for some time, and for awhile in northern Missouri. Four boys and four girls were born to them. I am the seventh child.

We moved from Missouri to Alexander, Kansas, in 1885. In 1899 the Restored Gospel was sent to our town. The schoolhouse doors were closed to the elders, so my father opened our home to them. The outcome was good. I was baptized by Elder T. E. Thompson, confirmed by Seventy W. S. Pender and Elder Thompson. Four years later my father and mother also were baptized. Later my brother James and sister May joined the church.

I am thankful for the many testimonies I have had that this is Christ's church and that God answers prayers.

BEYOND CALVARY

By Heber F. Colvin

HEAD BOWED AND NUMB with shock, Mary stood weeping. Out of the past a voice long since stilled spoke again, bridging the time of her young motherhood with this hour of sorrow. "Yea, a spear shall pierce through him to the wounding of thine own soul also; that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed."

Torn with love for him, her being cried out for understanding of this woe. Such is the nature of love. So often it stands helplessly by and bleeds with the beloved sufferer, wondering, questioning Divine wisdom. Many since Mary have longed to understand.

In the poverty of her soul's sorrow, Mary learned a lesson that the world does not teach. There are things which are worse than death. It was precisely these things which stunted the souls and warped the thinking of men—that caused them to crucify Jesus. Physical death is a passing phase for the righteous, but for the unregenerate the death of the spirit is complete. The Easter triumph may have caused Mary to reflect: "If I grieved so for my son, what must God feel for his children going blindly down the paths of everlasting darkness? For so great a cause, did it not become Jesus to suffer, portraying for us in terms of flesh and blood the grief of the universe over erring man?"

THE GREATNESS OF CHRIST is reflected in all that he did. Persevering in the face of our inconsistencies and rebuffs, he showed us God by his life, death, and resurrection.

Small victories are often easy victories because they are small. The price of great triumphs comes high. Mary lost her son and found, instead, her Lord. He refused a crown at Satan's hand and found a cross but, because of that cross, he gained the world. Had he not died, men would not have believed; by conquering death, he proved himself the Lord of life.

For those who accept him as Lord, the sun of hope mounts as high as his glory. Faith in God gives a power of spiritual vision that, coupled with obedience to his commands, knows no horizons.

Beyond our trials lies what? Accomplishment is a part of the joy of living. Let us overcome through Christ and learn to look beyond our Calvaries!

Church Basement Redecorated

MT. VERNON, ILLINOIS.—The annual business meeting was held August 30, with the following officers elected: pastor, W. W. Colvin; church school director, George Wolfe; book steward, Lula Henson; publicity agent, Norma Lee Rockett; branch secretary and children's supervisor, Ruby Ellis; treasurer, Ralph Rockett; women's leader, Daphne Wolfe; music director, Ruby Rockett; Zion's League supervisor, Lewis Wolfe; junior pastor, Verl Moore.

Nancy Lynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hal Wolfe, was blessed by Pastor W. W. Colvin, assisted by Elder Lewis DeSelms, on November 11. George Wolfe was ordained to the office of elder by Lewis DeSelms and W. W. Colvin.

Kathy Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ellis, was blessed December 8 by Elders George Wolfe and W. W. Colvin.

The annual Christmas party was held December 20. Gifts were exchanged and treats were given to the guests.

The average attendance at mid-week prayer service is approximately 30 people. A general class taught by Norma Lee Rockett follows this service. The group is studying church doctrine.

A New Year's Eve watch party was held at the church.

The women's department sponsored a chicken supper February 12. On February 17, the children's department held their morning worship service at the home of Brother Henry Feltman, a shut-in.

A special baptismal and ordination service was held March 2. Seventy D. L. Kyser conducted cottage meetings, and as a result three young adults were baptized by him. They were Sue Ann Stewart, Dorothy DeSelms, and Leo Holman. This united all three families in the church.

Seventy D. L. Kyser, W. W. Colvin, and George Wolfe performed the confirmation service.

Ralph Rockett was ordained to the office of elder by Pastor W. W. Colvin, assisted by Seventy D. L. Kyser and Elder George Wolfe.

The interior of the church basement has been redecorated, and a new piano has been purchased for the upper auditorium.

Recent speakers have been District President D. L. Kyser, Patriarch O. C. Henson, Seventy John L. Puckett, and Lowell Wilson.—Reported by RUBY ELLIS

Priesthood Classes Conducted

FAR WEST STAKE.—The Far West Stake conference was held February 24, 1952, at the St. Joseph Junior College auditorium. The program began with the ministry of song by the Celeste Chorus composed of members from the Maple Grove, Osborn, Stewartville, and Cameron congregations. President Emery E. Jennings presided at the business session. Reports from all the departments were received. The following councils were sustained: stake presidency, consisting of Emery E. Jennings, president, Orville Moffet and Evan Agenstein, counselors; stake bishopric, Lewis E. Landsberg, bishop, Lawrence Keck and Kenneth Piepergerdes, counselors; and the stake high council. The following stake officers were elected: council of religious education, William Twombly, director, Duane Constance and Virginia Bean; council of Zion's League, Garland Snapp, director, Wesley Ballinger and Emerson McCord; council of department of women, Grace Salisbury, director, May Salisbury, Charity Bowman, Pearl Clark, and Dorothy Siebert; council of music, Ruth Haden, director, Pearl Kinnaman and Stella Hidy; council of young adults, John Newhart, director, and Maynard Newcom; director of Boy Scouting, Edwin Swails; stake historian, Marie Agenstein; stake attorney, John Newhart; stake secretary, Juanita Pettigrew.

The resignation due to ill health of Alexander Jensen who has served on the stake high council for the last twenty-eight years was approved. John Newhart was recommended and ordained to the office of high priest and then set aside as a member of the stake high council. Other recommendations to the priesthood were Harry Black, elder; Donald S. Sturgis, elder; Charles Mengel, elder; William Bruch, priest; Robert Bruch, priest; Robert Gould, priest; Eugene Coffman, deacon; Lloyd Parks, deacon; Alden Dyer, deacon; and Charles Leffel, deacon.

Brother Jennings gave the statement to the called men. John Newhart was ordained to the office of high priest by Evan Agenstein and Emery Jennings; Harry Black was ordained by D. T. Williams and Donald Harvey; John Newhart was set apart to the stake high council by Emery E. Jennings and Orville Moffet.

Apostle D. T. Williams was the guest speaker for the morning and afternoon services. The priesthood chorus furnished the music in the morning and the stake choir in the afternoon.

Thirty delegates to represent the stake at General Conference were elected. A baptismal service was held at the close of the conference. Four persons were baptized. During the past year there were 135 baptisms in the stake.

A week of priesthood classes was conducted at Cameron February 11-15. February 18-22 priesthood classes were held at St. Joseph. The instructors were Stake President Emery E. Jennings, Seventy Donald Harvey, Bishop Lewis E. Landsberg, Apostle D. T. Williams, Apostle Charles Hield, and Dr. Floyd McDowell. A dinner was served at the Penn Street Church in St. Joseph for all priesthood men in the stake and their wives on February 22.

During the week beginning January 27 through February 3, Apostle Charles R. Hield and Apostle D. T. Williams met with the different congregations of the stake.

Religious education institutes were held at Penn Street Church, St. Joseph, on February 28, and Cameron, February 29. Brother John Darling of Independence was the guest speaker. The film "How Persons Learn" was shown.

The Zion's Leaguers of the stake attended the institute on Hispanic-American Missions at Graceland College on February 24. The Leaguers annual yuletide formal banquet was held December 20 at Penn Street Church. The theme was "Say It With Music." The guest speaker was Almer Sheehy from Independence.

The Leaguers have organized a correspondence club which will try to build friendship between young people of our church and young people in Latin America. The activity is called "Pen Pals Pan-America."

Activities for Building Fund

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—W. Wallace Smith spoke at the church on the evening of January 15. Following the service, a reception was held in the lower auditorium.

On the morning of January 20, Elder James Damron was the speaker. Elder B. R. Gilbert died suddenly on January 8.

A group from the branch attended the district conference at Berkeley January 26 and 27.

Evangelist William H. Dawson held a series of meetings at the church February 10-17, and gave blessings also.

An enchilada dinner was served at the church February 15, before the evening service. Proceeds from ticket sales netted $55.

Lora and Rex Sommers are now living in San Jose.

Don Alberts was inducted in the Navy February 15.

Brother Dawson spoke to the women February 14, at their meeting held in the home of Sister Betty Garrett. The women also sponsored an enchilada sale which together with the dinner netted $101 for the building fund.—Reported by STENA CALDWELL

Stories That Live

Children, parents, and teachers will welcome this book of sixty-two inspirational stories. They are all based on true incidents taken from the lives of church members.

These stories were selected as some of the best published in Zion's Hope and Stepping Stones and are favorites to be repeated over and over. Children will enjoy reading them at home, and they can be used in family worship and church school worship. See it at the Conference bookstore.

Women Purchase Equipment for Kitchen

CARAWAY, ARKANSAS.—Elder T. B. Sharp visited the branch January 14-28, and held a series of meetings. He visited the homes of the Saints while in the area. On the closing Sunday, a baptismal service was held during the morning hour. Sue Wine-miller, Sharon Carmack, Wayne Pickett, and Kerry Clements were baptized. The confirmation service was held following the baptismal service.

A new program has been introduced by one of the district counselors, Clarence Carmack. The local ministers go to another branch to speak on one Sunday each month. In this program, Giles Turner and Tom Emde have been guest speakers at Caraway.

On February 27, District Missionary James Renfro visited the branch. He was making a tour of the northeastern part of the Arkansas-Louisiana District.

The women's department has a project of equipping the kitchen of the church. They have purchased cabinets, sinks, range, water heater and other fixtures which are to be installed soon.—Reported by GERALDEAN CARMACK

Seventy Holds Series

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—Seventy Russell F. Ralston completed a very successful two weeks' missionary series on February 24. The following eight people were baptized: Randall Clevenger, Wayne Clevenger, Mildred Clevenger, Mrs. Marcella Winegar, Dora Clevenger, Paul May, Terrence Ellis, and William Winegar. The average attendance at the meetings was about forty, and the record attendance for this group at any meeting was on the closing morning when there were sixty-four present.

Seventy Ashenhurst Visits Group

NEW BRUNSWICK, CANADA.—In February, the small group of church members in Fredericton, New Brunswick, was visited by Seventy Ray Ashenhurst of Jonesport, Maine, according to a news letter received from Sister Lillian (Mrs. T. L.) Hall, who lives at 422

Queen Street. Church people in near-by areas could give friendship and encouragement to this isolated group by letters and perhaps some visits. Sister Hall hopes that some day there will be enough members in Fredericton to make possible the beginning of a branch.

Young People Visit Lansing

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—Elder James Phillips, district president, spoke at the Jackson Junior College Y Club on the organization and teachings of the church on February 28. Questions were asked by the group and answered by Brother Phillips. A social hour with lunch followed, to which Elder Phillips and Pastor John Cox were invited. The discussion followed through the social hour.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Sarah Monroe, meet twice a month and are studying I Witness for Christ, by Blanche Mesley. One meeting is the business meeting with lesson study, and the other is an all-day social with a devotional hour and lunch. The meetings are held in the homes of the Saints. The women are raising money for the building fund.

The young people of the branch attended a "Let's Get Acquainted Day," at the Lansing, Michigan, Branch, sponsored by the Lansing young people. The speaker was District Missionary Stanley Pfohl. On February 28, the young people met at the home of Brother and Sister Case to discuss and make plans for the organization of a Zion's League. Business was discussed, and a social hour followed.—Reported by NANCY TURNER

Attend Youth Conference

YAKIMA, WASHINGTON.—The church is located on the corner of Seventh and Spruce Streets. There are eight members of the priesthood in the branch and a large number of young people. Paul Anderson is the pastor. Missionary Don Landon held a series of meetings. An organ has been purchased and dedicated. Brother Robert Winship directed a musical program which was held at the branch.

A number of the Saints went to the district conference in Seattle, and on March 8 and 9 the young people attended a youth conference at Bremerton.

On February 20, the music director of the branch and his wife were called to Baltimore, Maryland, because of the death of Brother Winship's father.—Reported by R. H. WINSHIP

Plans for Church School Building

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.—The annual business meeting was held December 12, with the following group officers elected: Elder J. Adelbert Withee, pastor; Mrs. Dick Gravenmier, secretary; John Stephens, church school director; Mrs. Virgil Creach, women's supervisor; Harry Miller, bishop's agent and treasurer; Mrs. James E. Clark, publicity agent; Mrs. J. Adelbert Withee, music director; Bill Cook, Zion's League leader; Dorothy Smith, historian; Mrs. John Stephens, librarian; John Stephens, church custodian; Corbett Fears, Mrs. Ina B. Cramer, Dick Gravenmier, Wayne Mink, and Ivor Johnson, finance committee; Bill Sutton and Ralph Shrader, auditors.

The Zion's League had a chop suey dinner February 8. A new Communion service set was purchased with the money raised.

The Kentucky-Tennessee conference was held February 23 and 24. Apostle Percy E. Farrow, Seventy J. H. Yager, and Bishop J. E. Baldwin were visiting speakers for the conference. At the business meeting eleven delegates were elected to represent the district at General Conference. An ordination service was held February 24 and the following were ordained: Bill Cook, priest; Ralph Shrader, elder; and James Pakala, deacon.

Wednesday night prayer services and Sunday night preaching services are being held for the Saints at Frayser, suburb of Memphis, in the home of Brother and Sister Albert Lee.

The branch is drawing up plans for building additional classrooms for church school and a recreational room.

In 1951, nine people were baptized which brought the membership to 104.—Reported by MRS. JAMES E. CLARK

Young People Hold Banquet

HUTCHINSON, KANSAS.—Mary Ruth Deck was baptized at the lake near Buhler September 21, by Elder R. E. Wilson. The confirmation service was held in the afternoon under the direction of Elder R. E. Wilson and Priest Bill Miller.

On October 20, the young people entertained the district young people at a banquet held at the Ranch House.

Elder Edwards of Lawrence, Kansas, Elder Black and Seventy James Daugherty had charge of the morning service on October 21. Elder Charles Neff, pastor of the Omaha, Nebraska, Branch was the speaker at the evening service.

A candlelight service was held at the church November 23, after which over forty met at the home of Laurence Deck for Thanksgiving dinner.

On December 23, the young people's class gave the Christmas story, assisted by the primary department.

On March 2, Kendall Mark, son of Priest and Sister Bill Miller was blessed by Elder W. L. Miller of Medoc, Missouri, assisted by Pastor R. E. Wilson.

The project of the women's department for the year is to purchase new pews for the church. On February 29, a chili supper was held and $98.00 was raised. The group has $130.00 in the bank toward the project.

A buffet supper was given for the Grace-land basketball team when they were visiting in Hutchinson.—Reported by JENNIE WHITED

Foundations of Zion

Integrating the Newcomer Into the Work of the Branch

PART I

I'D LIKE first to direct our thoughts back through the years of American history which present a continuous pageant of discovery, immigration, and development—the record of groups of peoples from many nations responding to the “American fever.” Sturdy pioneers, imbued with faith and enthusiasm, soon learned to love their adopted country and were not long in changing their manners, customs, and traditions. They contributed wholeheartedly of their skills, zeals, and cultures to help develop the greatest nation under heaven; where, above all the freedoms opened to them, they could enjoy freedom to worship God. They made loyal citizens. There was much special effort and legislation to bring about such perfect integration among many peoples, and without peaceful co-operation these things could not have been. It is interesting to consider this international situation as a Christian example in integration in our present-day business of welcoming and using newcomers in church groups and branches, not only in Independence, but in cities on the coasts, the waterways, and along the international borders where immigrants stop for a time when they come Zionward.

“We, the people” will always be in the testing stage, contributing our gifts to the American way of life. There is not a family formed or a meal spread which is strictly U.S.A. (I am reminded here that my mother-in-law raised peas annually which grew from seed brought by her mother from England in 1840.)

America glories in her mastery of physical things. What about her mastery of spiritual things? More and more her men of science recognize the hand of a Master Creator over all. Should it not follow that we of the Restored Church of Jesus Christ, the first truly American church, should be so blessed in spiritualizing all aspects of our living together that our togetherness may become known throughout the world? There is no surer way for this message to go abroad than through the families of our immigrants—the same manner in which our national story has gone abroad through the years.

America is the biggest-hearted nation on earth. It was the first country to open its doors to war refugees whatever their creed or conviction. This is a very proper demonstration of the “age-old law of hospitality” or the urge to share and be fellows together for better or for worse—a very proper example for us in the light of our laws and practices concerning “the Gathering.” Our responsibilities as mothers and hostesses are multiplying and becoming more and more interesting. There is much to be done, and no burdens will be too great if each of us shows keen interest and is willing to do the part allotted to her. Just here we are reminded that one of our greatest responsibilities in branch integration is our support of priesthood members. They need this anchor as a home needs a mother.

OUR FAMILIES ABROAD are genuinely concerned and interested in the matter of integration in church work as well as in the American way of life. These phases of living can hardly be separated. They who plan to come across “some day” are feeling after helps for amicably and consistently blending their lives with ours. They want to perfect their lives with us. They exclaim, “How wonderful it must be to see and meet the leaders of our church walking the streets, to hear their voices, to clasp their hands!” Because God is good to all and is no respecter of persons, they, too, have testimonies of his goodness to them and of his special protection. There is abundant interest, enthusiasm, ingenuity, and talent among our people abroad and a definite desire to be performing simultaneously with us, to know our ways in order to be one with us. While they appreciate certain American advantages and freedoms, their prime urge is to participate with us in serving and being served in the development of the Zionite ideal.

When our church members come to us from abroad and meet with some of our nationally inherited strict conventions, with some of our set convictions, with our seemingly unrestrained speech and actions; when they are exposed to our informal gaiety and our very different national government and living standards, and our rather free use of money, differences in our dialects, languages, and customs, they suddenly face a tremendous hurdle, difficult for a newcomer to surmount happily. It becomes a real venture for them and a challenge to us, too, when we play our part with patience, good will, and love during their orientation experience.

LOCAL INTEGRATION PROGRAMS would be conducted much the same in any locale at home or abroad, I think. I once heard President F. Henry Edwards make the statement that God's gifts are social; that we belong to each other; and that another man's need is our challenge, our stewardship. The Heavenly Father expressed this challenge to the Reorganization in these words: “Love ye me and love all people. Love as I have loved you.” And our neighborly philosopher, whose memory we cherish, intrigued the world when he said, “I never met a man I didn't like." That was Will Rogers, and he had the philosophy of a Zion builder. The business of successful integration into the life of any branch depends upon our concern for the happiness of each other.

Jesus had a unique way of making statements. My memory is that, for the most part, he uttered each commandment or statement just once and then left the matter with his hearers. His words have echoed down the corridors of time into our ears, and there is a ring of urgency in his voice, that the time for each one of us is today. Jesus was a man of action. Just once did he, in no uncertain terms, define for all generations to come the basic law of all things common when he said, "Ye are my mother. Ye are my brothers." That was when someone interrupted his sermon with the message that his mother and brothers were waiting without to speak with him. And his startling reply is history: "Who is my mother? Who are my brothers? Ye are my mother. Ye are my brothers." With such unselfish love and general concern for all humanity he invoked that spirit of hospitality, that intriguing friendliness which will eventually draw all men unto him.

MANY OF US need to cultivate the art of being friendly. It is the Golden Rule in action, our crowning achievement if we would be like Christ. The cultivation of friendliness involves sincerity of motive, and in that we must graciously trust each other to be working out our own personal salvation (by the trial and error method mostly) with the same missionary zeal that we practice on nonmembers.

The consistent and successful migration of the early-day Saints is a demonstration of what a missionary-minded people can do by way of integrating their interests and abilities. Coming to a foreign land to begin every phase of life anew was an absorbing demonstration of a determination to test the divine philosophy of all things common—the pooling of the gifts of the spirit and of brotherhood and fellowship. These attributes pale into insignificance the possession and the pooling of the tangible things of earth life. Their goal was to build the kingdom of God on earth in the Land of Promise. And it is ours!

In cultivating the Gifts of the Spirit we may use the same technique suggested by Alma related in the Book of Mormon as to the cultivation of faith. In order to develop this gift within us, we must start with the spark, the grain of desire. We must use a little; do a little, use more and more; do more and more. We must never stop desiring and doing until finally we possess the gift in its fullness. The Center Place, the hub of the great international wheel of Zion living, is fast becoming a city of friendliness. Our churches in Zion have for some ten years been concentrating on a friendship project, originating with the visiting department of the women's organization. One phase—that of having hostesses at Sunday services—has been used with gratifying results. These hostesses spot and greet visitors, nonmembers, and newcomers, have them register, and then contact them later in follow-up work. Feeling a keen interest in the variety of customs, problems, and adjustments to be met by a newcomer is a wonderfully stimulating, satisfying experience. It is a prime factor in our Zion development.

MY FAVORITE RECIPE

By Marcella Schenck

LEAFING THROUGH the yearbook of the women's department of our group, I discover I am to reveal my favorite recipe. In some respects that is a laugh, because cooking is the least of my talents. Frosting won't frost; candy won't candy; ice cream won't ice; jelly won't jell without a fool-proof commercial ingredient; cookies won't cook; and I can easier roast myself properly than the meat.

Must I reveal this to the women's department publicly?

But then I do have a lot of favorite recipes. To name a few—Merle's upside-down cake, Aunt Julia's fried mush, Mabel's pear spread, Carrie's lemon dessert, Ethel's grape jelly, Lettie's pineapple cheese dish, Cleo's holiday loaf, et cetera.

You may be sure most of these women have written down those tasty recipes in black and white for me to try, and what is the result?

The upside-down cake came out with the delicious "gooey" sticking to my pan while the cake part stood like an ugly relief map of hills and hollows. The mush couldn't fry because it was mush soup. The pear spread lacked a certain tang. The lemon dessert was flat. The grape jelly poured out a sticky juice. Surely I left something out of the pineapple cheese—so why bother to ask Cleo how to make that loaf?

You would think anyone could cook with a recipe right in front of her eyes but, checking and double checking, something is lacking. I think I am beginning to realize why I fail. Thinking it through carefully I have reached some conclusions.

That upside-down cake needs a bit of Merle's-cute-wit stirred into it. A lot of Aunt Julia's-frank-honesty goes into making mush. Her honesty is something solid of itself. There is a loyalty about Mabel that flavors everything she does. Carrie's lemon dessert needs to be served in her hospitable way with a blessing like her husband's asked upon the food. It tastes better so. When Ethel preserves, the dear soul intends to share it, and the sweetness of the wishing to share jellies, her jells and her life. The pineapple cheese gets mixed together with Lettie's friendly neighborliness. And I'm sure that Cleo's holiday loaf was seasoned with poetry.

If it is cooked up by others, I enjoy it. I like the types of people the foods represent. What then is left for me to do? Find a dish that stands for me? Oh, no! Not in the food line. Please, just let me eat it.

WE'VE A NEW TERM for an old idea. The new term is “civilian missionaries.” The idea is as old as the church—as old as the day a member first told the good news of the gospel to his neighbor. We know that this telling of the story by the laity works; many of our strongest branches are in existence because some devoted Saint told our message wisely and beautifully to a friend. But most of the time this telling of the story of the church has been casual—something that has been done or not done just as the occasion presented itself. We are wondering now if perhaps this missionary work by the members could be taken out of the realm of the casual and placed close to that of the career.

For example: The church has no missionaries in San Salvador, and no members that we know of. We have no Spanish-speaking appointees free at the moment who could spend the years it would take to establish a self-supporting mission in Salvador. What then is to be done? Are the Salvadorians to be left to their own devices until some future date when the church has a greatly increased missionary budget?

We think there is an answer to the question—civilian missionaries. Why can't a young church couple who has no close ties in the United States find a job in Salvador, become a part of the community, and then begin to hold cottage meetings in their home? Such a step would involve a great deal. The couple should expect such a course of action to change at least a decade of their lives, perhaps all of it. They would have to be willing to go without authorization of any kind from the church, without financial support, without the regular ministrations of a pastor or missionary. And they must be ready to go with the idea before them that they might conceivably fail.

Any couple who would attempt such a thing and make a success of it must be of a particular type. One or both should be skilled in some work, because first on the list of things to be done is earning a living. The proper mental attitude must be cultivated.

Living in a foreign country does have its difficulties, and anyone who is frightened by the word “malaria,” or is disturbed because the water that runs from the tap is not safe to drink, had better stay at home. Most important of all, there must be a feeling of affection for the people among whom they are living. The couple would have to want so much to help others that that feeling would be transmitted and people would be drawn to them. The advantages to the church of such activity are obvious. A missionary, going into a territory where he knows no one, loses much time in just making contacts. However, if someone has prepared the way for him, has made the friends, has a home in which meetings can be held, then progress can be sure and rapid. Such adventuring for the church by truly devoted and wise young people could change the course of many lives and perhaps the religious history of a country.

THE EFFORTS of us four civilian missionaries have not gone far toward changing the history of Guatemala, but have affected the lives of the four of us and of one nonmember, a Mr. A. The history of our group in Guatemala began last July when George and I decided to stay here. We found jobs and kept ourselves busy making friends and helping with the activities of the local Union Church. In January Lloyd and Jean Hurshman came to live here and help us establish a mission. For two weeks we did nothing but help find jobs for them, arrange for housing, and, in our spare moments, discuss how we would begin holding meetings. Since our Spanish was still very limited, our meetings would have to be in English. At last we decided to give a party for all our friends in Guatemala. At the party we would make introductions and mix freely with our guests, praying earnestly that the names of those who would be receptive to our message would be presented to us. We brought God into partnership with us, for without his assistance—his most direct assistance—we were doomed to failure from the beginning. I doubt if four people ever went to a party with more solemn feelings than did we. When it was over we all had one name—Mr. A. He had been an English student of George's. He was born in Spain, married to a woman from Poland, and was now employed as a commercial secretary in the French Legation. We had no idea what his religious background was, but on the strength of our “feeling” about him, we invited him to attend a discussion the following Sunday on the subject of religion. He received the invitation with pleasure, shook our hands very formally, and was gone. We had a prospect!

The next week was a difficult time for us. What should we say in our first meeting? Should the procedure be formal or casual? What if we antagonized him at the beginning? What if he didn't come at all? What if . . . ?

We had one other prospect—Miss P., a student who had been contacted by the church student group at Iowa State College. We had been given her name and address before leaving the States, but had yet to contact her. Through the early part of the week we wondered how to approach her.

New Horizons

An account of the first Communion service to be held in Guatemala since Book of Mormon days

Then, on Wednesday, the day on which George was going to walk in "blind" to ask her to attend our meetings, a letter came from a former student at Iowa, describing her to us and serving as an introduction.

Despite the reassurance of the letter, we were still deeply concerned about the coming Sunday. That was when we decided to hold a Communion service for ourselves. The service would have to be held in the evening, as Lloyd would be on a Scout expedition until late in the afternoon. I had dinner to supervise, and we had promised to go for our guests of the evening. Still there was time for a short observance of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Lloyd arrived at 6:30, still shaking sand from his trouser cuffs. George, Jean, and I had already prepared the emblems. I left final instructions with the maids, and we were ready.

"And I give unto you a commandment . . ."*

The bread was broken and the wine poured in readiness for the Communion of the Lord's Supper. A throbbing of eternal purpose seemed to press upon us as we silently seated ourselves about the small table.

One thousand nine hundred years before, the resurrected Christ had stood before an awed multitude and directed the first Communion service of what was then the western mission. Some students believe the location of that inspired incident to have been within a matter of miles from the small alcove where we were seated in meditation. But whether the actual spot was physically distant or close, the spiritual proximity between the saints of A. D. 34 and of A. D. 1952 was a source of great power.

We four had joined together in planning the order and clarifying the objectives of the service. We decided that it should be brief and simple, without pomp or show. Everyone joined in the arrangement of the utensils and furniture. It was with a strong sense of communal achievement that we took our places for the period of meditation.

With an air of solemnity we stood, and I, Lloyd, prayed that the Holy Spirit might attend this reobservance of the fulfilling of Christ's commandment. Billie's clear voice penetrated the hushed expectancy of the room:

And it came to pass that Jesus commanded his disciples that they should bring forth some bread and wine unto him . . . he took of the bread, and break and blessed it . . . And this shall ye always observe to do, . . . in remembrance of my body . . . he commanded his disciples that they should take of the wine of the cup . . . for this is fulfilling my commandments . . . that ye may witness unto the Father that ye do always remember me . . . And I give unto you a commandment that ye shall do these things. And if ye shall always do these things, blessed are ye, for ye are built upon my rock.

With an expression upon his face that revealed the significance of the moment, George stood and said, "We have read the commandment which was given, and the promise that was made should we keep that commandment. . . . As we do these things, the commandment is kept in this land for the first time in hundreds of years. We pray that this fulfillment signifies a return to this land, and the people therein, of this 'church of Jesus Christ': We break the bread and drink the wine and thus seal the covenant that by doing these things we shall be built on his rock. Neither failure in our efforts here, nor success, can shake us, for we are built on his rock . . ."

Jean's soprano rose softly, with the calm restraint of a high spiritual moment: "Let us break bread together . . ."

Three thousand miles of travel at the maximum speed of a sixteen-year-old Ford had brought us together in Chalet Mercedes, situated in the barrios of Villa De Guadalupe, Guatemala City.

"Let us drink wine together . . ."

Four hearts and heads were full of desires and ideas to promote a missionary program in this new home, but inexperience seemed a heavy obstacle. George, ordained an elder the night before leaving Independence, had conducted his first administration of healing in a small Mexico City hotel room. Now he was in charge of his first Communion service. I, a newly ordained priest functioning for the first time in an official capacity, was his only assistant.

"Let us praise God together . . ."

New strength vibrated through the room with the realization that once again more than human power would be available for the kingdom-building effort. The time for rededication had arrived. We all knelt as the beloved words began:

"O God, the eternal Father, we ask thee in the name of thy Son, Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this bread . . ."

The serving of the emblems was simple, George served me, and I served him, then Billie and Jean.

" . . . to bless and sanctify this wine . . . that they may witness . . ."

We would witness of mercy and light to "other sheep," witness of love and hope, witness of a purposeful way of living. The moments of silent prayer were fraught with deep meaning and great joy; in the final spoken prayer four souls were one upon the eternal highway.

At the end of the service it seemed as if we four were the only people in the world. The students and teachers eating in the next room, the Indian girls in the kitchen, the little boys playing marbles in the living room had ceased to exist. We were completely and utterly at peace. Awareness of other people, nervousness, fears—all had gone. When the boys arrived with Miss P. and Mr. A. we were able to be calm, friendly, objective in our discussion.

That first night was easy, and the next Sunday, and the next. Mr. A. in particular seemed deeply concerned with what we were presenting. His questions became more and more pointed, and the search for Bible references soon spread from George to all five of us. Finally the lines of agreement and disagreement were distinctly drawn, and the urgency of it was summed up when Mr. A. stated in a voice deeply troubled, "I must come to know the truth of this." His attitude, for the first time, was withdrawn. All of us knew that the moment of decision was almost upon him. None of us cared to guess which way he would decide. Everyone was silent when Lloyd and George left to take him home. They were very late getting back, and Jean and I had begun to worry. The car had broken down, and they had had to repair it in order to get home. Despite the late hour we all met in our room to offer prayers for Mr. A. We had done all that we knew to do. The rest was in God's hands.

In the week preceding, Mr. A. had asked where he could buy an English Bible. On Monday we visited a Bible institute here and purchased one of the last Bibles available in English. Lloyd took it to Mr. A. as a gift from the four of us. On Thursday George stopped as usual at the French Legation to ask Mr. A. if he would be able to meet with us on Sunday. To our immense joy and relief, his answer was, "Si, con mucho gusto."

It is far too early to evaluate the work we are trying to begin here. Right now all of our hopes are pinned on Mr. A. If they should prove to be unfounded, we shall merely have to find another Mr. A. and try again. We are not at all sure that we are going to succeed. We only know that some day some person is going to tell our story in these countries and will find an audience. We want to see that happen.

ORIOLE BADGE SHOW HELD

The second annual Oriole badge show was held February 29 in the lower floor of the Auditorium in Independence. Oriole circles provided various activities, including movies, nature displays, fashion show, first-aid demonstration. Booths displaying games, dramatics, phases of homemaking, and handicraft were also open. Following the booth activity a short campfire was held. Over 400 parents and girls attended the show.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

DEATHS

RICHESON.—Charles M., son of Martin and Elizabeth Hughes Richeson, was born February 16, 1873, near Rhodes, Iowa, and died following a stroke on March 20, 1951, at his home near Rhodes. On May 21, 1902, he was married to Helen Pratt, who survives him. He held the office of elder and served as pastor of Rhodes Branch for nearly forty years. He had attended services at the Rhodes church the Sunday before his death.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons: Martin of Rhodes and Howard of Brooklyn, Iowa; three daughters: Mrs. Elair Roush of Cook, Colorado; Mrs. Clifford Mailen of Wichita, Kansas; and Mrs. Leonard Nichols of Clarksville, Iowa; a sister, Mrs. Bessy Christy of Sun Valley, California; nine grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Rhodes church, Elders V. G. Lents and Clyde E. McDonald officiating. Interment was in Eden Cemetery.

BOOKER.—Florence Eugenia, daughter of James and Eugenia Parker, was born October 8, 1888, at McKenzie, Alabama, and died February 15, 1952, at the Mobile Infirmary in Mobile, Alabama. On December 7, 1910, she was married to Elmer L. Booker; three children were born to them. Her husband preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Surviving are three daughters: Merlie and Eleanor Booker of Brewton, Alabama, and Mrs. Myra Sharpe of Evergreen; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the home in Brewton, Elder E. A. Ledsworth officiating. Interment was in the union cemetery.

URSENBACH.—Alfred P., son of Frederick and Ella Ursebnach, was born December 6, 1895, on Angell Island, San Francisco, California, and died March 11, 1952, at the osteopathic hospital in Kansas City. As a boy he moved with his parents and brother to Independence, Missouri, where he spent the remainder of his life. He cared for his mother and father during their last, long illnesses, and on January 14, 1938, was married to Mrs. Anna Julia Roberts. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 7, 1904. He also belonged to the Joseph A. Harder Club of the Public Service Company, of which he was an employee for thirty-three years. His brother, Roy, preceded him in death in 1949.

He is survived by his wife, Anna; and two stepsons: Paul and Jack Roberts of the home. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Evan A. Fry at the George Carson Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LEE.—Mary J., daughter of William Nelson and Sally Morse Shedd, was born September 12, 1883, in Frankfort, Wisconsin, and died March 11, 1952, in Independence, Missouri, where she had resided since 1906. She was married to William J. Lee on December 25, 1909, who preceded her in death on July 10, 1946. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 5, 1896, and was an active worker in Stone Church throughout her life. She also belonged to the Fraas Fain Auxiliary of the V.F.W., Post 1000, and the Rebekah Lodge. She is survived by her son, Dr. William J. Lee of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Mercia Perkins of Durand, Wisconsin; and a brother, Manley Shedd of Independence. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Almer W. Sheehy at the George Carson Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

DUNNE.—Jane Hildreth, daughter of Marvin and Sarah Hildreth, was born October 30, 1876, at Auster, Ontario, and died March 5, 1952, at her home in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 13, 1887, and on June 22, 1897, was married to Fred C. Dunne in Chatham, Ontario. Since January 1, 1900, they had made their home in Independence.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Marvin Dunne of Albuquerque, New Mexico; a sister, Mrs. Anna Williamson; and one granddaughter. Funeral services were held at the Ott and Mitchell Chapel, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HOLMES.—Lon R., was born June 1, 1876, in Buchanan County, Missouri, and died March 5, 1952, at Phoenix, Arizona. In July, 1903, he was married to Marie E. Leach; three children were born to this union. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1919; for many years he held the office of deacon and served as bishop's agent in Denver, Colorado. After moving to Independence, Missouri, he was ordained an elder. He was an employee of Swift and Company for over forty years, doing supervisory work. After his retirement he was employed by the government to procure meat for the lend-lease program. He also supervised the procurement and shipping of food and clothing for the relief of Saints in Europe. His wife and one daughter preceded him in death.

Surviving are a son, Glen, of Englewood, California; a daughter, Mrs. Vernon Young of Independence; two brothers: Emmett W. of Stewartville, Missouri, and Pearl of Kincaid, Kansas; two sisters: Mrs. Cora Pepper and Mrs. Willard Smith of St. Joseph, Missouri; and seven grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Stone Church in Independence. Elders Glaude A. Smith and Hubert Case officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

TESMAN.—Leo, son of Charles A. and Alice Tesman, died July 14, 1951, in Midland, Michigan, at the age of forty-three. He was married to Gladys Mott, and four children were born to them. He attended the Reorganized Church in Coleman, Michigan, and held the office of teacher. He served as superintendent of religious education for a number of years, and at the time of his death was young adult teacher. He also took an active part in the Liahona Park Reunion each summer. For the past fourteen years he had worked at the Dow Chemical Company in Midland.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Patricia Ann, Marilee, and Sally Jean; a son, Richard Leo, and four sisters: Mrs. Alice Drake, Mrs. Lillian Kline, Mrs. Edith Nobbs, and Mrs. Blanche Fisher. Funeral services were conducted by Elders John Blackstock and Jay Doty. Interment was in the Coleman cemetery.

RAWSON.—Vern Avesta, daughter of Fredrick N. and Mary Ann Shaw, was born October 11, 1884, at Dow City, Iowa, and died March 16, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was married to Grover Rawson at Holden, Missouri, on February 11, 1908. In 1916 they moved to Kansas City, Missouri, and in 1922 to Los Angeles where they lived until 1934 when they returned to Missouri. Mr. Rawson preceded her in death in July, 1942. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 14, 1894.

Surviving are two brothers: John Shaw of Hawthorne, California, and Samuel Shaw of Holden; and two sisters: Kezia Lovell of Holden and Mary Olive Earl of Kingsville, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted at Enoch Hill Church, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Frank White officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BELL.—Ethel B., was born July 23, 1873, at Shelby, Nebraska, and died March 17, 1952, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eighteen years old.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Mary Hansen of Council Bluffs and Mrs. Ellen Luckiesh of Weston, Iowa; two sons: James Yocom of Woodbine, Iowa, and Arthur Yocom of Oregon City, Oregon; two sisters: Mrs. Rebecca Osborn of Calgary, Alberta, and Mrs. Ruth Feller of Underwood, Iowa; two brothers: Paul Snyder of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Winfield Snyder of Weston, Iowa; nine grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Downsville Cemetery near Weston.

JOHNSON.—John Martin, was born September 24, 1878, at Forest City, Iowa, and died March 13, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium. On September 24, 1904, he was married to Marian Hawks; six children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth and was instrumental in bringing many of his people into the faith.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: George of San Diego, California (a chief petty officer in the Navy and pastor of the Reorganized Church at Escondido); Henry J. of Mobile, Alabama (a sergeant in the Army); and Goodwin of Minneapolis, Minnesota; three daughters: Mrs. Garnett Stevenson of Independence; Mrs. Emma Thompson of Garden City, Kansas; and Mrs. Rosamae Jarmer of Portland, Oregon; three brothers: Charles H. and Alfred W. of Independence, and Anton of Minneapolis; three sisters: Mrs. Ida Ambley of Mason City, Iowa; Mrs. Alice Allen of Independence; and Mrs. Emma Hunt of Dixon, California; twenty-one grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders J. J. Teeter and Lyndon Wagoner at Stahl's Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Introducing

CLIFFORD ADAIR COLE, Lamoni, Iowa, (page 5) teacher and minister, was born in Lamoni in 1915. As a boy he moved with his family to Wyoming, where he was baptized in 1924. He was graduated from the Moorcroft, Wyoming, High School in 1933, received his A.A. degree from Graceland College, after which he attended the University of Wyoming and then Central Missouri State Teachers College, where he received his bachelor of science degree in education in 1943. He had the highest grade-point average of his class. He was a member of the International Relations Club, Kappa Delta Pi; Zeta Kappa Epsilon, Phi Sigma Pi. He took some graduate work at the University of Iowa. In 1935-39 he was rural school teacher, then spent a year as manager of a mercantile store. He taught in Lamoni High School in 1943-46, and at Bellevue, Iowa, the following year, after which he went under church appointment, becoming district president of the Northwestern Iowa District until he was called to the Graceland faculty last fall, where he is dean of students.

In 1936 he married Lucile Hartshorn. They have three children: Alethea Rae, 14; Beverly Sue, 6; and Lawrence Dean, 3. He claims as his hobbies fishing and writing. His special interests are history, travel, and ministry to children. He was ordained a priest in 1935, an elder in 1939, and a high priest in 1950.

MADGE (CRAIG) SIEGFRIED, Independence, Missouri (page 18) is a well-known church worker, writer, and hostess. While still in her teens she was a teacher in the Sunday school and became superintendent. She later served as choir leader; and through the years she has contributed to Zion's Hope and Autumn Leaves. She was assistant editor of the latter periodical for nearly four years and edited the Women's Column in Zion's Ensign for a time prior to 1914. She has been very active in the women's department work, serving for a time as city-wide women's leader and developing the women's visiting program for the stake.

She was born in Burlington, Iowa, where she was also baptized and educated. She came with her parents to Independence in 1903, and in 1906 she married Mark H. Siegfried. They spent their honeymoon in and around Nauvoo where Mark was reared. They have three sons, Craig, Cedric, and Charles M., and a daughter, Pauline (Mrs. Frank) Fowler. She belongs to the Independence Music Club and the Mother's Club. She sang in the Aeolian Women's Chorus for several years and was a member of the Mother's Quartette which sang on the radio for a few years.

The Siegfried home is noted for its hospitality. Sister Siegfried has been especially thoughtful of the Saints coming from abroad. In the summer of 1951 she accompanied her husband on an extensive trip through Europe.

P.S.

* ALL NIGHT LONG

All night long the wind blew, and great banks of clouds went scudding before it, torn and tattered like holiday streamers when the fete is over and the people have gone home. The trees swayed before the blast, and the wind moaned in the cornices and whistled through cracks in the wall. Fear stood by my bed, and a shadowy host behind him. My mind was filled with apprehensions and forebodings of danger. At length, weariness took charge, and I slept as my dark guests went quietly away.

When I awoke it was morning. The skies were swept free of clouds, and under their bright blue the golden sunshine heralded a new day of promise and hope.

Trouble and pain are always worst when it is dark. When the light comes, we can be brave again.

* GOOD AND BAD

If you should listen to gossip, do it in the right way: not to be taken in by it, but to analyze it.

This week, Rattle tongue says that the new man is wonderful. Next week, he will be saying that the new man is awful. Which will you believe? Nobody changes that much in a week.

You may take it as a general principle that all people are combinations of strength and weakness, graces and faults, big chunks of generosity and little bits of selfishness. Individuals vary widely. We may as well know in the beginning that they will be that way and spare ourselves the disappointment of disillusionment. The worst of people may have some virtue, and the best will have some weakness. If we make allowances, we can forgive and adjust.

And anyway, Sir and Madam, what right have we to judge? We are as full of faults as the ocean is of water, spilling over at the edges in tides and storms of trouble-making. Consider Rattle tongue himself—you wouldn't trust him with the reputation of a good dog, let alone yours.

* INCIDENTALLY

The polite European who questions a statement will lift an eyebrow and say, "So?" An American expresses his skepticism with a blunt, "So what!"

* THE YOUNG

The two of them were at the bus stop, waiting to go to the city. They were smiling happily, very pleased with themselves and with each other, as it is fitting and proper for young people to be.

Life is wonderful for the young. They like people, and they swarm together just for the fun of being in a crowd. Life is beginning its great adventure. Their purses are full of golden years waiting to be spent however they will. Burdens and responsibilities have not yet touched their shoulders, and they hardly seem to know the meaning of care. With their splendid healthy bodies they can go wherever they wish, as long as they desire. Age has not slowed them down nor weakened their limbs. . . . Life is wonderful for the young in heart.

News and Notes

MEMBERS OF THE PRESIDENCY TRAVEL

Immediately following the adjournment of the General Conference, President W. Wallace Smith traveled to Chicago, and President F. Henry Edwards went to Washington, D.C. It was announced at an opening business meeting of the Conference that President Israel A. Smith would visit Europe this summer with Apostle Arthur Oakman and Bishop Henry Livingstone.

DEPARTMENT IN NEW OFFICES

The Department of Statistics moved into new offices prior to the General Conference. The offices are on the third floor of the Auditorium, and provide the department with more space. The walls are a soft cream shade, and the office of Elder Merle Guthrie, church statistician, is separated from the outer office by partitions of glass.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT PRAYER MEETINGS

Over 5,000 people attended the General prayer services each morning in the Auditorium during General Conference. The meetings were under the direction of Apostles E. J. Gleazer, D. O. Chesworth, and P. E. Farrow. Dr. Roy Chevillie was the song leader during the week.

RADIO DEPARTMENT HAS BOOTH

The General Church Radio Department featured a special booth at General Conference in the lower floor of the Auditorium. The booth was to give the people an opportunity to know the work being done and the services available by the Radio Department.

SPECIAL GUESTS OF CONFERENCE

Special guests were presented at the rostrum during the General Conference business sessions. On Tuesday, April 1, Mayor Robert P. Weatherford of Independence was presented and gave a short address to the Conference. On Wednesday, April 2, Lieutenant Colonel Sam Toomey, just returned from the Korean front, spoke to the gathering. On Thursday, Senator Milton R. Young of North Dakota addressed the Conference at the business session. Brother C. R. Davis was honored at this same session on his ninety-second birthday. Brother Davis was a missionary for the church for many years.

ORDINATION SERVICE HELD

A special ordination service was held at the Stone Church on April 3, when the following men were ordained: E. Y. Hunker, evangelist; James B. Burdick, and Norman E. Hield, bishop; Ralph Wicker, O. O. Dollins, Sr., and Ray Vern Webb, high priest; Alvin F. Burdekin, James A. Everett, Stanley W. Johnson, William J. McMurray, Jacques V. Pement, James E. Renfroe, Wayne E. Simmons, and Alfred H. Yale, seventy. Elder Ralph Bobbitt was soloist at the service.

JOHN LUFF RESIGNS FROM BOARD

At the Conference business session of April 3, the Board of Publication was re-elected, with the exception of Brother John Luff who resigned. Brother Luff's position was filled by Brother Montague Parker.

BANQUET FOR JUNIORS GIVEN BY ALUMS

A Graceland banquet for boys and girls from eight to twelve years of age was held at the South Chrysler gym April 3. The banquet was sponsored by the Independence Alumni of Graceland, and featured special entertainment by students of Graceland. Favors and prizes were awarded. Approximately 300 youngsters attended the banquet.

BETHEL DAVIS KNOCHE is organist for the Stone Church and the General Church Radio Department.

Born in Arcadia, Kansas, on December 24, 1919, she moved with her family to the Center Stake where she was baptized at Second Church in 1929. She was graduated from William Chrisman High School of Independence in 1937, and attended Graceland in 1937-38. In 1946 she received her B.S. degree from Central Missouri State Teachers College. Before that time she worked four and a half years as music librarian for radio station KMBC of Kansas City. She has five summers of graduate work toward a Master's degree at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York.

She was married to Joseph T. Knoche on December 1, 1946. An interesting note regarding Bethel's wedding is that the Stone Church was being redecorated at this time, and her wedding is probably the only one that has ever been held in the Auditorium.

She was a pupil of the renowned organist, Powell Weaver, and was honored in 1949 when she presented his annual spring concert. Mr. Weaver was ill at the time and requested Bethel, as one of his "most talented and gifted pupils," to present his concert. At the death of Mr. Weaver, a special memorial service was held for him by the First Baptist Church and the Congregation B'Nai Jehudah where he was organist for many years. Bethel was privileged to be one of the two organists who played at this service.

She is a member of Kappa Delta Pi National Honorary Fraternity, Alpha Phi Delta Honorary Sorority, the American Guild of Organists, the Independence Music Club, and the Independence Young Matrons.

The Knoches have a daughter, Anne Louise, who is seventeen months old.

Is the Vatican a State?

THE RELIGIOUS PEOPLE of America have been disturbed considerably during the past few months because of President Truman's insistence on recognizing the Roman Catholic Church, not as a religious body but as a temporal power. You will recall the editorial which appeared in the issue of December 17, 1951, on this subject.

In the Des Moines Register for February 9, 1952, appears a letter from an old friend of mine, George Cosson, a former Iowa legislator, analyzing the Protestant case against this appointment very effectively. I believe church members should be informed on the issues involved and take this opportunity to make further analysis of the subject.

Mr. Cosson's article points out that Americans have good reason to fear the growing temporal power of the Vatican because of the lessons of history. He says that even in recent years Pius XI declared, "The church is independent of any earthly power in her mission as educator." However, history shows that she has not been content to restrict her power to the area of education.

Pope Hildebrand, who became Gregory VII, deposed King Henry IV of Germany in the eleventh century by excommunication and interdict, absolving Henry's subjects from allegiance to their king. Innocent III, who succeeded Gregory (1198-1216), went even further and dominated all western Europe and England. Emperors, kings, and nobles were compelled to recognize his overlordship. He claimed to be "the judge of all but by none was he judged."

I quote from The Register with the editor's permission:

The Church of Rome knows that it has lost many a battle, but it still believes in its divine mission—that it is the one true church and will ultimately triumph over all. What could be accomplished by Innocent III by excommunication, interdict, and absolving subjects from loyalty to the king is now achieved by different methods:

1. Strategy, diplomacy, and agreements, open and secret, by the pope and Vatican, global in extent.

2. Clericalism, the control of legislation and government, through the influence of the pope, the hierarchy, and Catholic action groups which have been organized for that purpose.

3. Catholic education, which the church regards as of supreme importance and paramount to the rights of the state.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE have traditionally felt that the public school system was an essential concomitant to our democratic system. As expressed by Jefferson, the Protestant theory has been that all power inheres in the people from which the government derives its just power through the consent of the governed. Catholicism would determine both the temporal and spiritual power through its educational processes from the Vatican.

I wrote to Mr. Cosson for permission to quote him, and he sent a copy of his letter to The Register. The following three paragraphs were not printed:

It is, therefore, with great apprehension that we witness the assault made upon the neutral public school system, not only in the United States, but throughout western Europe. That is especially true in France, Holland, and Belgium. The church seems to be winning the battle in all three countries. In France, the law of 1905 separating church and state is recently being nullified by granting public funds for the support of parochial schools. Here in the United States the battle to preserve the public school system and the separation of church and state never ends. It is being waged in every state, and thirty states grant some form of public aid to parochial schools.

The press reported on August 9, 1951, that the Greenwald public school building near St. Cloud, Minnesota, had been sold to the Greenwald Catholic parish for a parish school. In Pierz, Minnesota, a Catholic layman was excommunicated for taking a secret ballot of Catholics to learn whether they preferred the building of a public or a parochial school. Mrs. Roosevelt was labeled anti-Catholic and an unworthy mother because she expressed the opinion that public funds should be limited to public purposes, including public schools. Instances could be multiplied indefinitely.

All this in spite of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared: "The first amendment erects a wall of separation between church and state," and "Separation means separation, not something less." Justice Black, speaking for the Court, said: "The religious clause of the fifth amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the federal government can openly or secretly participate in the affairs of any religious organization or groups or vice versa." In a concurring opinion, it was said: "We have staked the very existence of our government upon the principle of separation of church and state," and "Good fences make good neighbors."

REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS are not justified in making emotional attacks on other churches. They are, however, justified in becoming intelligently informed about issues which affect the government and ultimately affect the church by such constrictions upon their liberties as would result in a repetition of history should the Vatican accomplish its purposes in further extending its influence over the United States government.

The President's efforts to validate his appointment of a full-salaried ambassador to the "State of the Vatican" (108 acres, less than 1,000 inhabitants) would be amusing were it not so involved with bitter memories and serious consequences.

Directory of Churches

In the Herald of February 25, 1952, a call was made to all stake and district presidents as well as pastors of branches and missions in un-organized territory, to provide a list of all places of meeting. The time limit for receiving this list so that the next issue of the Church Directory will be complete and accurate is April 20. Surely all the facts on locations of meetinghouses are as well known to you today as they will be a month from now, so why not act now?

Please send the list to Herald House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri, giving only the name of the city with the street and number or nearest town and direction in miles from the nearest town in the case of a rural church. Check the data carefully just before you seal the envelope.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
By Israel A. Smith

From Elder Olaf Fossum, Oslo, Norway:

For years I have been concerned about the Scandinavian Mission; the field is quite wide, and the workers are few. Maybe the statistics of the General Church's expenses and the statistics of the members won shows that it is a hard mission field.

Oslo for instance is quite a great city with over 400,000 in population. It is evident that a headquarters for the church and permanent missionary work are needed here to make our message known to the people.

Several years have passed since Brother and Sister Ruch left this mission and returned to the U.S.A. We have missed them.

I am expressing our hope herewith for better opportunities to come for the Scandinavian Mission, and am asking you brethren to give consideration to the need for missionary help in Scandinavia.

The General Conference is at hand. May God's richest blessing be upon you and all who are attending the Conference.

The Bible - How Authentic?

A POPULAR MAGAZINE recently featured an article entitled "The Truth About the Bible," with a sub-head to the effect that the New Testament we read may have fifty thousand errors—the authority for such statement: "leading theologians."

The article is written by Hartzell Spence, and if Mr. Spence speaks authoritatively, the claim comes as a result of a twenty-year project to determine the extent of the discrepancies and errors among the various versions of the Bible.

What a startling claim this must be to those religious organizations that not only have accepted the Bible as infallible but have loudly proclaimed such a belief!

Now it is asserted that more than a hundred of the world's foremost Christian theologians have engaged in a common cause "pooling their brains" and original manuscripts in an effort to discover what is original and what has been added or what changes have been made as "after-thought." It is said all branches of the Christian church, including Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Eastern Orthodox, assisted in the project.

The article in Look for February 26, 1952, makes interesting reading to Reorganized Latter Day Saints, who were told long ago by what we believe was inspiration and which appears now to be established as such, that the Bible contains the word of God "in so far as it is correctly translated."

My reflections on this matter have rather transcended realism, I believe, for I have been impressed for some years that could the facts be ascertained as to the real teachings of the Savior, even some of our General Conference resolutions might be found to be out of harmony with the truth.

The world has long wrestled with this problem of infallibility, and we wonder if it is but another demonstration of Paul's indictment in II Timothy 3: 7 where men in the "last days" would be "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

We are reminded, too, of the Savior's injunction to "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."

Could it be that Jesus was discriminating—was indicating that some thought-to-be scripture was not Scripture—at least not scripture because it did not "testify" of him? Also, may we speculate that the Savior was questioning the authenticity of former scripture: if any there were who did not properly testify of him? We know from the record that he quoted frequently from the prophets, and that in one instance he asked for the "Book of the Law" and thereupon read something from Isaiah that did testify of him and his work.

But Jesus was making history himself during his short ministry—history that was not written on the spot, and so we have several accounts written after the events took place, which it seems, now more than ever, have been added to and detracted from by numerous persons, and all of it suffering from the vicissitudes of transcriptions, copying, and translations.

Perhaps we may yet have the privilege of "searching the Scriptures" to determine what is error and what is truth as regards the Savior, and what testifies of him, and what in fact is false and does not testify of him. We welcome the honest work of these researchers, and as we believe we have an authentic and truthful witness for Christ in the Book of Mormon, we will await the result of their work with great anticipation.

Authority- From God, or From Men?

By James S. Menzies

THE WAY Jesus received his authority indicated a pattern of God's manner of dealing with men, particularly with his servants. God's approach to man is personal and direct. When Jesus went to John for baptism, it was not John who gave him his authority to enter into his ministry. God himself intervened and spoke: "And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 3: 17, A.V.).

Jesus did not draw his authority from Judaism, although he apparently had authority to minister in the synagogue, as when he taught the congregation one Sabbath day at Nazareth (Luke 4: 16-19). He did not bow to the authority of Judaism when he declared, "I will build my church" (Matthew 16: 18), nor did he recognize that the old organization at Jerusalem had any jurisdiction over him. He made a new beginning with no human agency for transmission.

But inevitably the question of his authority would be brought up by leaders of the organization in Jerusalem, who began to challenge his right to teach in the Temple:

And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? And who gave thee this authority?

And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I, likewise, will tell you by what authority I do these things.

The baptism of John, whence was it? From heaven, or of men?—Matthew 21: 21-23, I.V.

Who Gave It?

The question, "By what authority doest thou these things?" was sharply put to the Master. It was followed by another equally as direct, "And who gave thee this authority?"

The elders and chief priests, who believed themselves to be the authoritative ministers of the divine law given through Moses, were raising this question. They believed that the authority to represent God had come down to them from one living officer to another, in unbroken succession, direct from Moses.

From their study of the Hebrew Scriptures, they believed that such authority was necessary before anyone might participate in the work of God. Anyone who would attempt to assume such authority was rejected of God and might suffer immediate and eternal loss for his presumption. Jesus, while surely aware that authority was essential, was organizing a church differing widely in spirit, teachings, and purposes from the organizations which they represented. Now they were demanding of him, "By what authority doest thou these things? And who gave thee this authority?"

In the two parables that Jesus told to the chief priests and elders in the temple (Matthew 21: 28-41) he clearly challenged their spiritual integrity as well as their authority, and in verses 42 to 44 he issued a warning to them that the kingdom of God would be built without them, and in spite of them, regardless of their hollow, dead authority.

Delegated Authority

We are aware that in existing kingdoms upon earth today the king is not able to discharge all responsibilities for the benefit of his subjects. He himself cannot supervise the erection of all public buildings, make all arrests over the length and breadth of his kingdom, sit in judgment on all cases of traffic violation, settle all litigations over property, or represent his kingdom in all foreign capitals. It is necessary that others be selected to properly represent him and administer the laws of his kingdom. These representatives are carefully selected by the king. He, personally, is aware of their abilities, their knowledge of the laws and purposes of his kingdom. When thus selected they are empowered to act in the place of the king and are required to accurately represent him in all details. Their acts, when so selected, authorized, and empowered—and when in harmony with all the laws of the kingdom—are binding upon the subjects of the realm.

The power to thus select and authorize his servants is a privilege reserved for the king. No other person is permitted, unless so directed, to make appointments, or to exercise this power to represent the king, however earnestly he may desire such honor. For example, no private citizen is permitted to make appointments of those who are to serve in the police department. Neither can any man by purchasing a policeman's uniform legally make arrests without authority so to officiate first having been conferred upon him. This protective principle is also operative in the kingdom of God.

Many questions come to mind regarding the ministry of our Lord. Did the Father Almighty authoritatively commission Christ to represent him on earth?

Did Christ, by the direction of his Father, call others to assist him in bringing to pass his Father's will on earth?

In the organization of the church, did not Christ observe the principle that the king has the right to select his own representatives?

Did not Christ seek and receive direction from his Father regarding the officers whom the Almighty would choose before empowering them to go forth also representing God?

Did not these servants, when thus selected and thus empowered and when "teaching all things whatsoever I have commanded you" have power to "bind on earth and bind in heaven" and "loose on earth and loose in heaven"?
