Setting Your Table, by Helen Sprackling. Revised Edition. (M. Barrows & Company, Inc., New York. $3.95)

IT IS A MEASURE of both an individual and a nation that as each grows in civilization the lines of art and everyday living come closer together. In the matter of food no less importance is attached to what is eaten, but more importance to the amenities and graces of the eating. "Beauty becomes a vital need and contributes a gustatory value of its own," says Miss Sprackling in the introduction to her revised edition of this "blue book" of table setting and etiquette.

Miss Sprackling knows her subject well. Her editorial connections with architectural and homemaking magazines and her world travels have given her a background of knowledge and experience in the subject matter of this volume which qualifies her as an instructor. The revised edition has been prepared in the light of the sweeping changes which have taken place in our mode of living since World War II, with the objective of assuring to the family something of old-time graciousness connected with the serving of food.

The author is concerned first with the space in which the table is set, "for," she says, "it is fraught with considerable meaning, with dignity, with hospitality and the graciousness of living . . . the appointments of your table are but further details in this total scheme, accessories to the decoration and arrangement. You can't set your table intelligently and artistically unless you first give due thought to this general background, to the room or particular section of it in which its setting is to go."

After she helps you with setting the dining scene she goes on to the subject of what to put on the table: the china, glass, silver, and linens, describing fully what is available, aiding you in selecting from these items what is suitable for your table, and your style of living, and then tells and shows you how to arrange them in today's simple mode modified to fit the menu for any given meal. Suitable photographs illuminate the instructions.

Several chapters deal with specific kinds of table service, all based on the general principles preceding. How to conduct good table service without a maid is probably the most useful chapter in the book since about 95 per cent of the homemakers in this country have no maid service, and their appreciation of beauty in everyday living is as keen as their moneyed sisters'. How to follow the basic principles of artistic table service yet work out a pattern cut to your own needs is the aim of this chapter.

Party invitations, breakfasts, luncheons, Sunday night suppers, bridal tables, training the maid to serve properly, and the etiquette of eating are the subjects of further instruction.

Setting Your Table has help for both the experienced homemaker and the one who is just beginning to study the problem of providing three meals a day on a limited budget with limited time and energy, and an unlimited urge for artistically creative activity.

Betty Crocker's Picture Cook Book. (McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc., and General Mills, Inc. $3.50)

Tested in the Betty Crocker kitchens of General Mills, and retested in home kitchens all over the country, the 2,161 recipes in this cookbook, which was named for the mythical person in charge of the very real kitchens of that company, are your assurance of cooking success.

Simplicity of preparation and eating pleasure were the bases for the selection of each recipe and its variations. This new plan of giving a key recipe followed by directions for making it up in different ways is something which can be appreciated by both experienced and beginner cooks, and the picture-book method of showing, step-by-step, the cookery techniques involved in the preparation of the various dishes is far superior to the usual recipe which uses only words and, perhaps, a picture of the finished product.

Pictures also accompany directions for measuring and basic cookery techniques, the selection guide for kitchen utensils, and food storage instructions. An especially compact section on food selection and meal planning will be appreciated by the homemaker who has no time to wade through a volume on the subject.

"A cookbook with a heart," says the book jacket. It's right. Along with the precision recipes are little stories about real people and the origin of many of the dishes.

I recommend this book for its beauty, its interest, and its sure-fire directions. It makes a wonderful wedding, Christmas, or birthday gift for any woman, and if the man of the house likes to cook, he, too, will bless Betty Crocker for making it

How to Use Color and Decorating Designs in the Home. By Howard Ketcham. (Greystone Press, New York. $4.50)

There's no longer any excuse for drab home interiors. Howard Ketcham, author of this book and one of America's leading color and design experts, says so. And even though you "can't draw a straight line," you can, by following Mr. Ketcham's instructions, reproduce Pennsylvania Dutch, Swedish, Mexican, American Indian, and New England folk art, or design your own. "The simplest early-school instruction in drawing will be background enough," he says. "We have made all explanations as simple and direct as possible to meet the needs of an everyday family eager to take a hand in the decoration of the home . . . you don't need any great talent or detailed training to carry out the design treatments presented . . . reproduce them with such aids as a compass, ruler, and French curve, or by tracing."

The first chapter takes the mystery out of color; you learn to describe it, to combine two or more in pleasing groups with the "colorstructor," and to mix colors to produce a certain one you can see but can't describe.

In the second chapter the author says: "All decoration is derived from seven basic lines; either singly or in combination: straight, curved, wavy, broken (or zigzag), circle, semicircle, and letter S." He shows how to use the basic seven to make your own designs, how to enlarge or reduce them, and how to cut stencils of them. Instructions for simple lettering are included, with specialized directions for painting furniture, tinware, tiles and pottery, glass, fabrics, and applying color and design to your rooms.

The Homemade Oven

By Louise Wrigley

AT OUR HOUSE, we are like a lot of other people. We plan a lot more than we ever really get done. We dream a little while we are taking care of the everyday things which seem always with us. We wish a little while we go off on some other tangent. We are just as normal as we can be.

For some time we have been browsing through the magazines, when we can find a minute just for relaxing. We have been looking wistfully at beautiful, full-color pictures of barbecue ovens, taking from this one and that one special features which we thought outstanding, and resolving to incorporate them into our own oven when we get around to building it.

Periodically we talk it up, and then there seems to be something else which always interferes or claims its rightful place before something so extraneous, if satisfying, as a backyard oven.

However, the other night we had unexpected guests. Perhaps we can thank youth for what happened, perhaps just once our impulsive urge was heeded and carried through. Whatever the cause, we are grateful. For, inspired by the crisp leaves and the crisper air, buoyed up by the silent beauty of the approaching dusk, young Uncle was moved to put together a makeshift oven so that we might have an unplanned picnic. Six cement blocks, some dry twigs lit under some dry lumber scraps . . . and marshmallows never tasted better than this, golden brown on the outside, warm and runny on the inside.

This oven was no beauty, but it was utilitarian. It drew perfectly. Its roughness seemed to belong with the red-gold pile of crackly leaves that had been raked for burning, the odds and ends of sticks which fed the licking flames.

Most important though, the flickering firelight revealed the serenity on Grandmother's face. It matched the mood of the small fry who rolled in the dry leaves and then came back close to the fire to seek its cozy warmth. Our guests seemed to be drawn closer.

That impromptu, homemade oven did lots more than cook our hot dogs and roast our marshmallows. It drew our family circle tighter in greater love and companionship, with plenty to share with our friends. I doubt if a fine, well-planned oven ever could have fulfilled its purpose any more effectively and brought such homey happiness to us all.

Golden Wedding Club

The Herald has been carrying pictures and stories of those members who celebrate their golden wedding anniversaries as often as these items are sent in. Mrs. R. L. Fulk calls attention to a Kansas City club started some twenty-six years ago by Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Aurand to pay tribute to all the couples who have been married fifty or more years. This is the National True Vow Keepers Club with headquarters at 4915 Baltimore Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. Each June a party is held for club members who can attend. This has become quite a large group, and recent meetings have been held in the Municipal Auditorium. Here prizes are given to couples who have been married the longest, or come the greatest distance, or deserve other special recognition. The Aurands themselves have been married thirty-five years this fall.

Sister Fulk remembers how much her parents enjoyed the attention received from this club and the annual parties which were given, and feels that the children of parents who have been married for fifty years should enroll their parents in the club. There is no fee attached. They will receive a motto in recognition of their enrollment and notices of the June parties.

We concur with Sister Fulk in the idea that too much printed material calls attention to the failures in marriage, and too little attention is given to these older people who have made their marriages a success.

Restoration Principles in Modern Times

By Dr. Evan Shute

The keynote address given at the College Student Conference, Graceland College, August 29. Other conference addresses will appear in future issues of New Horizons.

TRADITION HAS IT that the Iroquois once reached the Mississippi in their triumphal sweep westward only to encounter the Sioux as they, in turn, advanced toward the east. The Sioux shouted across, "Whom do ye seek?" Replied the Iroquois, "We seek men." At once the Sioux answer came back, "You have found them." Battle promptly ensued. Finally, when it was obvious that the two great warrior nations were evenly matched, the struggle came to a halt, a truce was declared, and the peace pipes were passed around. It was agreed that the mighty Mississippi would thereafter be the border separating their spheres of influence—and so it ever afterward remained.

Once again the Committee on Ministry to College People has come to the Mississippi region to seek men and to find ways of molding them to the church, both for their own good and for its renewal and invigoration. Have we found them here? The battle you will fight with the world in the years just ahead will answer that question. It has been said that the best feature of a college education is that it keeps the boss's son away from the business for four more years. But I hope you give a good account of your generation, and I believe that you will. How can we sharpen your arrows, or toughen your shields and your courage? That is our objective in meeting you here.

It is an indication of the latter days, perhaps, that we now seem to be completing a circle the primitive church began. The first apostles had so little education, with the notable exception of St. Paul, that they relied in their work on a recollection of the Master's teaching, on native but crude intelligence, and upon what inspiration God sent them along their way. As the church invaded the world, its weapons became gradually blunted by the subtle and steady resistance of worldly things. Direct inspiration ceased, perhaps largely because men came to rely upon their native wit, and the concept of direct guidance by the Almighty became increasingly naïve in a religion already conquering court and camp. Then, too, the Master's voice became fixed in a Canon of Scripture. It was boxed at last. Already there was so much of his teaching in those ringing pages, and it was so difficult to obey what men knew of it, once the church had left the catacombs and had begun to walk the splendid streets of the Roman world, that no further word from him was either expected or desired. Indeed, when Tertullian and the Montanists tried to revive revelation in the third century, even he was suspect, and the attempt to regain genuine speaking contact with God was never revived. Inspiration, or direct revelation as we call it, died.

FOR MANY CENTURIES Christian men relied for guidance on the Scriptures and such glosses of them, such traditions about them, such interpretation of them as the early Christian writers or fathers had left behind. All this information was not left to individual interpretation, but was mediated to men by the only group possessing suitable education, the priesthood. This was not sufficient to "lighten" the world, although it did keep candles flickering in this corner and that. Its failure is best described in the term, "Dark Ages."

It is an obvious commentary that it seems to be almost useless to leave God's word in a corner of men's lives and thought; each man must explore it thoroughly for himself. It cannot be doled out bit by bit to him. It must be avidly devoured and digested.

The Renaissance came, a time of rebirth of enthusiasm, an epoch of more general information. Men sought truth for its own sake, for themselves, and vigorously scrutinized and criticized it. They rebelled against those who stood between them and the original documents of the Christian faith. They brushed aside the old church that loomed between—this we call the Reformation. It is hard to imagine that God had no hand in this partial removal of the veil the dark centuries had drawn over his face. But at least it now seems obvious that what enlightenment came with this Reformation was largely the work of man, and was something less than a full revelation of God and his purposes. Perhaps mankind was unprepared for such a revelation. Perhaps God was unwilling or unready. Perhaps the Reformation was only the first, but an essential phase, of Restoration. At least one thing is clear in all this. Whatever men do, be the impulse as lofty as can be conceived, it must ever be imperfect and incomplete. God must instigate and direct, then men do well to follow.

In time God revealed himself by his own impulse and according to prophecy; he moved Joseph Smith to a restoration of the gospel. This came when men had acquired a great fund of knowledge and stood on the brink of much more amazing and even appalling further discoveries. Suddenly they were about to have enormous new responsibilities thrust upon them—the ultimate powers inherent in both mind and matter. As man stood near the abyss of the fissured atom and the Communist “confession” God whispered in his ear: “These are the latter days. The world is ripe already for harvest. Heed my voice lest the abomination of desolation come upon you.”

Now it is a facile and superficial view of history that can sum up the Christian Era in three paragraphs. It reminds one of Gibbon’s style in the Decline and Fall of Rome—sonorous, literary, biased, and only half-true. However, I want to hurry over the events of old times that we all know about, in order to discuss the present. History is a meaningless exercise in dates and battles unless it is focused on our own present and future.

HOW SHALL WE characterize our own age? If I say we now know nearly everything, tomorrow’s discovery will inform me I spoke too soon. “In the last days I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh. . . .” We live in such days. If I predict that no further political or economic maneuver is possible, Mossadegh or Peron will undeceive me promptly. We are bombarded with difficulties and their solutions until we are apt to hide our heads in Milton Berle or Fulton Sheen—or in a book by a great rabbi, Liebman. Where has information and education led us? Into chaos? The Russians are educated. Their marshals and aircraft technicians and propagandists are graduates of a profoundly difficult school. When was there another like Churchill in politics or Dirac in physics or Murray in surgery or Toscanini in music or Wright in architecture? We have come full circle. Men as unlearned as Peter or as learned as Niebuhr or Whitehead all get nowhere by themselves. They need Christ—not the Christ of the Tomb but the lively Christ of the dusty road. We must walk with him.

It is a curious thing to come before a group of students like this and talk of the futility of study and learning, and I am not attempting to do anything so paradoxical. What I am trying to say is that human knowledge and wisdom are not enough. That is no new conclusion, but it is one that needs emphatic restatement to every generation and that comes best, perhaps, from a senior member of the clique of scholars.

Every day I see so many dilemmas that learned men get involved in, so many mistakes made by acute business leaders, so many silly things done by the shrewdest and wealthiest, so many stupidities of professors and beauties and musicians and all those who are the glory and splendor of the earth. All have problems that no human wisdom or wit can solve. I sometimes come to doubt that human wit has any final answer at all—perhaps it merely carries every difficulty but one remove further away. The more important men I know, the more pitiful men seem to me. Then I attend their funerals, and their accomplishments and mighty words seem more tarnished and dusty still. It is too easy, indeed, as one passes his physical prime, and realizes how little are the ends for which he himself has striven so mightily, to conclude that all is futility and despair—a conclusion I would by no means leave with you.

MY CHURCH steps into the picture at this juncture—or long before this stage—to show me life in a different light and to give me a truer view. Edward Murrow once said: “Peace is not the absence of conflict. It is the ability to cope with it.” My church gives me peace of this kind. It sets a new value on me. I am not worth what my peers and contemporaries say of me, nor what my children believe of me, nor what history will conclude about me. I am worth what God thinks of me—that God who literally took pains about me 2,000 years ago, that God who called Joseph Smith to show me a new and vivid glimpse of hope, that God who cares for me in these latter days, unworthy as I am of his interest.

It gives my brethren a new value. They are the brethren of Christ. They are his forerunners, sent to prepare a place for him at his next advent. Only in and through them am I given an opportunity to repay the Author of my being and of all the gifts and privileges that I call mine. They are at once my challenge, my helpers, and my objective. My efforts could have no meaning were they not there and were they not what they are. They are my gateway into the Kingdom of Light. I can find no place there apart from them. I have no safety apart from them and the Zion they are compelled by circumstances and training and divine impulsion to create.

It gives knowledge a new power, for my knowledge is no longer aimless. The beauty I begin to comprehend—whether in the arrangement of the cells and canaliculi in a liver lobule, or of the counterpoint in a fugue, or of the reflection of electrons at the interfaces of a crystal—is a revelation of God’s thought and brings me face to face with his incalculable majesty. Psychology is the mechanism of a human mind that mirrors his mind and reaches up toward him. Bio-chemistry is an astounding image of chemical, enzyme, and vitamin structures and reactions which he planned and therefore reveals something of the mazes and profundity of his thought. So for geology or linguistics or even sociology and politics—God is in all. Knowledge is no longer aimless, nor is it a good to be sought for itself alone. That last is a sterile and ultimately paralyzing concept, I suspect.

 VISIBILITY

You have seen the sporty convertible cars that young people like to drive. Everything but the windshield and the license plate can be let down, like socks and hair.

You think the convertible is arranged so the young people can see? A natural mistake, but a mistake. The purpose is to be seen. From five to twenty-five, boys like to call out, "Look at me!" If they don't say it, they act it. And, riding in such a car, they honk the horn at the girls.

There was a startling change on our square last Saturday. Two pretty and well-dressed girls—perhaps on a dare, or just for fun—drove around in their convertible honking the horn at the boys—then kept right on going. Put that down in your book as an example of something or other in our modern age.

 ADOLESCENCE

Now that I have looked it up in the dictionary, I am fond of the word "adolescent." It is such a clean, wholesome word, and it means simply "growing up," with no implications of Freud or any other dreadful debunkers of human personality. And it is good to think of here where we see so many of the young. Yes, here we are flooded with youths from the good homes of citizens all over the state, and some from far-away lands, too. Their jolly songs, their gay laughter, and their colorful clothes brighten the whole city.

They will be here such a short while, and others will take their places: the lads going to fight and die on distant battlefields, the girls to sigh for them, to work in offices, to teach, or make homes. They seem so little and young now, so gay and heedless for the heavy burdens that their shoulders must so soon carry. One wonders where they will find their strength. But they will find it, as generations of their kind have found it before them. With all of its problems and confusion, this chaotic world will soon be theirs, and they will have to run it and manage it the best they can, as we have done, muddling through before them. I do not look at many of these young people without thinking a little prayer for them, that life may be as good to them as they deserve—and a little better than I am afraid it will be, judging from experience.

 THE LAST DAHLIA

It was cold last night, and this morning there was a thick frost over everything—a little warning of what's just around the corner for us. Yesterday our neighbor still had beautiful big dahlias in his yard: golden sunshine yellow, orchid, and garnet. This morning they were all wilted and sick looking, and the man who loves his flowers so much was cutting off the stalks, digging up the bulbs, and putting them away for their winter rest where they cannot be hurt by the cold. . . . It is always a bit sad to put away the beauties of summer, for who knows which of us will be here to greet the warm sunshine and the lovely flowers of another spring when they come again? In the cold months to come, it will warm the heart to remember the last yellow dahlia, giving back to God the beauty he had planted in it.

IT IS SO EASY to deal in generalities in keynote addresses. In fact many a keynoter is assigned such a role just to keep him in an area of relative safety. However, enticing as I find general solutions, I resolutely pass them by for specifics whenever possible. Specifics are really a challenge. They lay bare the difficulties, the how of the here and now.

What does God really have to say to you as a sociologist in a Negro slum? What has Zion to offer you as a dentist married to a Catholic wife? What revelation deals with or is about to deal with drug addiction, or abortion in tuberculosis, or the family tree of the dinosaurs? Shall I regret the man I shot in Korea? What has God to say on that?

Let us work out these answers together. Of course it will mean groping and stumbling and even bitterness and disillusion. Those are all aspects of human growth that even Saints cannot evade. It would have been easy for God to have given us all of this or 10 per cent of it in "yes or no" form, or as in a catechism, but it often seems that he runs an "information please" program. He has given us "categories" and some helps in the Doctrine and Covenants. He has promised more. But we must start from where we stand, and start we must.

effort, and we should assuredly not wait for God to yield or grant us what we can obtain of ourselves. "We know in part and we prophesy in part." The final answer may or may not come during our lives. But when we are extended to the uttermost, when we have really done our best, when we have tried and failed and tried again many times, then we can justifiably demand of God that he come to our aid, and I have faith that he will. He may take pity on us and come before, perhaps with an "endowment" of light and hope—but we have the right to hope only for his help when our own powers are at full stretch or exhausted. An old German proverb advises us to "Pray as though no work would help, then work as if no prayer could help."

Education gives us wider opportunities, gives us an acquaintance with the efforts and thoughts of our notable ancestors and contemporaries, sharpens our weapons for the struggle of life. But unless God informs it, we are utterly poor and pitiful things. The church that is based upon revelation should keep dinning that into our ears. We all continue to need the impulse, which is heavenly inspiration, and to take the direction, which is love, past the milestones which are sacrifice.

This morning I looked through a part of the Kansas City Art Gallery and saw a unique collection of paintings, jewelry, and porcelain. In one room I passed, several men were restoring portraits, bringing out the old lines, the old colors, the power of the masters. Restoring these is important, but quite valueless unless the pictures are then hung high and in a good light. The gospel we have is like that too. It has been restored; now it needs to be hung high and in the best light for all men to see. You are uniquely qualified to do that. I hope you will.

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Frederick Oswald Davies

BROTHER DAVIES was born, reared, and married in England, and has spent most of his years of ministry there, but he is now the new president of Kansas City Stake. He was recommended for his present office at the September 9-19 meeting of the High Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

In taking over his new job, Brother Davies gave up his positions as pastor of the Walnut Park congregation, the church's second largest in Independence, and as counselor to the Center Stake president. He had been pastor of Walnut Park since February 8, 1948. A few months after being transferred to America from England in 1947, he was named pastor of both Walnut Park and Gudgell Park congregations, but he relinquished pastorate of the latter church about three years ago and became a counselor in the Center Stake presidency.

Before coming to the United States in 1947, he had served under church appointment for seventeen years in the European Mission, largely in Britain. He first heard of the church in 1924, he says, from a young lady. "I investigated diligently," he recalls, "and as the result of this investigation and a personal spiritual experience, I was baptized in February, 1927." He was ordained a priest in October, 1928, and in the same year was invited to attend Graceland College for two years to prepare for missionary work in England. "I completed my two years at Graceland, spending the summer of 1929 working with Roscoe Davey," he relates. "And I had the great privilege of attending the Centennial Conference in 1930." He was ordained an elder in the Brick Church in Lamoni on June 1, 1930, and returned to England under church appointment in the same month. "Three weeks after arriving home, I married Ada Taylor, the young lady who first introduced the gospel to me," Brother Davies says, "and we set out on our missionary labors in the British Isles."

In October, 1934, he was ordained a Seventy, and in April, 1940, a high priest. From 1941 to 1945 he had charge of the Northern District of the British Isles and was also pastor of Beresford Road Church. When Apostle A. A. Oakman returned to America in 1944, Brother Davies took over supervision of the European Mission. In that capacity he visited Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark after World War II ended to determine spiritual and physical needs of church members there. Then in 1947 Apostle Myron A. McConley was assigned to the European Mission, and Brother Davies was transferred to America. He and his wife and their daughter, Velma Frances, born in March, 1936, arrived here on October 1.

Brother Davies was born in Wigan, England, October 30, 1904. He attended National Blue Coat School until he was thirteen and then entered Junior Technical College. After leaving the second school in 1920, he served five years apprenticeship for electrical engineering and two years as maintenance electrical engineer of a large clothing factory before coming to Graceland.

Although he left the engineering profession nearly twenty-five years ago, he still enjoys "puttering around with a hammer and some nails," he says. He also likes to do a little fishing once in a while when he gets time.

In the Service

"When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of God."—Mosiab 1: 49.

THE PHRASE "in the service" has a very definite meaning in American homes today. Wherever you hear it, you are reminded that it may refer to a son or a brother, or even a father, who is in faraway Korea, in Germany, or in any one of a hundred or more places in the world, wearing the uniform of his country, enduring danger and fatigue, fulfilling an obligation that he was required to accept regardless of his will or convenience.

When peace comes—if, indeed, we must wait that long—it would be a good thing to borrow the phrase for an older and a far more constructive service. We think, of course, of the service of God. Wouldn't it be a wonderful thing for the sorrowful, suffering world if the phrase "in the service" could mean the ministry of the gospel instead of the occupation of war?

AT OUR STUDENT CENTER the congregation is made up principally of university students. A young man who has held the office of priest a short time was recently presented to deliver the sermon—the very first he had ever preached. With modesty and humility, and yet with the strength of one who had prepared for his task, he discussed his subject.

Among the Scripture citations he presented was this one from the Book of Mormon: "When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of God." The student of English, particularly in the branch of semantics, will probably permit himself some meditations on the force of the word "only" as it is used there.

That should help many serious and earnest church people to answer a question that sometimes troubles them: "Am I working where God wants me to serve?"

Such is the spirit of dedication among the people: they would gladly change their occupations if they were convinced that it was God's will. One finds this spirit especially among the young.

The implications of the text are clear: If you are serving humanity, you are serving God. That gives plenty of scope for every imaginable talent for doing good.

IN OUR LITTLE GROUP of students at the University of Missouri, quite a number of young men are studying agriculture. Here on these fertile prairies where something is growing on every inch of soil, where varieties of grasses compete with each other for space, where grasses together compete with bushes, and bushes compete with trees, it is easy and important, too, that we should think of agriculture.

Here in this productive land is enough, if we use it properly, to feed the hungry millions of the world. There are people in the ice wastes of the polar lands, people in the hot and barren deserts, people in rocky and mountainous lands, people in lands stripped of their fertility by erosion, and people in multitudinous millions in the sprawling and ever-growing cities of the earth, all calling upon these prairies for food, as they do upon the other fertile areas of the world. The news reports bring us stories of hunger, want, and famine. Here, by the grace of God, we have plenty; and here, by study and application, we may raise more, now and in the future, to satisfy the hunger of humanity. This, too, is God's work.

Here in this goodly "land of promise" nature sets a beautiful and bountiful table. There is something to eat for every creature. And from the earliest snowdrops and crocuses of spring to the last zinnias blooming bravely into the season of frosts, there are flowers. Yesterday in our neighbor's yard there were the little white buttons of ageratum along the walk, and a big yellow dahlia like a piece of sunshine. Today there is a lavender-colored bloom, calling for praise. At nature's pretty table here there is always food, and there are always flowers, all through the growing season—and not a cent for irrigation, either. It is not hard to believe, here, that working with the soil to bring food and beauty to people is in some good way serving God.

THE IDEA OF SERVICE presented by the young minister has other testimonials and other supports. A great many people are in agreement with him. It is good to be reminded that an ancient prophet, delivering his messages on the soil of America, expressed the same idea.

The Lord's work is doing good wherever we are.

Perhaps it would be well to let that sentence stand in a paragraph by itself, and not clutter it with other words. The Lord's work is discovering the truth and bringing a knowledge of it to others. And it is serving humanity.

It is too bad if we have belabored the point. It should not be necessary. Yet there are many who are doing good work in the world who think they should be doing something else. We should remember this: The way we do things is important. It is possible to serve God in the way we run a coal business. It is also possible to serve the Devil in the way we administer a pastorate. The spirit and manner in which we work make the difference. If we are trying to help people, we are serving God.

Report of Income

We are presenting herewith a comparative statement of income for the first eight months of the years 1952 and 1951.

	1951	1952	Gain or Loss	Per Cent
January	$162,756.17	$178,696.88	$ 15,940.71	9.8
February	128,535.69	150,410.79	21,875.10	17.0
March	106,087.72	126,748.01	20,660.29	19.5
April	109,852.07	119,979.20	10,127.13	9.2
May	95,549.08	98,632.02	3,082.94	3.2
June	88,935.06	102,284.02	13,348.96	15.0
July	87,926.42	96,271.25	8,344.83	9.5
August	90,756.73	110,247.22	19,490.49	21.5
	$870,398.94	$983,269.39	$112,870.45	13.0

While this shows a favorable trend, the increase amounting to $112,870.45 for the full eight-month period, or a percentage increase of 13 per cent, the budgetary expenditures for the same period have increased 14.16 per cent. It is to be noted that we still have a very good margin of income over budgetary expenses. It is from the annual increases that appropriations heretofore have been made for the Auditorium and institutions of the church, and for our reserves. Consistent support and compliance with the financial law will enable us to maintain and expand the work of the church on the same substantial basis that has prevailed since the inauguration of our present financial policy (adopted by the General Conference of 1932).

We wish to call attention, however, to the fact that the contributions to the Auditorium Fund have fallen short of the goal set. The total amount contributed during the first eight months of the year was $66,486.03. Our goal for the year of $200,000.00 will therefore call for over $133,000.00 in the last four months of the year. The work on the Auditorium can be undertaken when we have the assurance of cash in hand for the special project now being considered, which is that of the front of the building and the foyer. We trust that general and local officers throughout the church will emphasize the need for funds for the Auditorium so that construction work can be started in the near future.

We appreciate the consistent support given by many members of the church to the financial program as a whole and look forward in faith to the completion of this major project.

Respectfully submitted,

Changes in Federal Income Tax Law

Our Church Attorney, Brother Carroll L. Olson, has just called to our attention certain changes that have been made in the Federal Income Tax Law, which we are sure will be of interest to many of our people. We are submitting his memorandum herewith. G. L. DeLapp

The recent changes in the Federal Income Tax Law which are effective for the calendar year 1952 make it possible to increase one's contributions to religious and charitable organizations for the purpose of using these amounts as deductions on Federal Income Tax Returns. Heretofore the limitation on such contributions as deductions has been 15 per cent of adjusted gross income.

The recent amendments to the law have increased this allowable exemption to 20 per cent of adjusted gross income. It would be helpful to those who are considering the matter of how much may be deducted on the Federal Income Tax Returns in the way of contributions for church and charitable purposes, to plan on increasing their contributions during the calendar year of 1952 so as to take full advantage of this 20 per cent provision.

Jesus — Liar, Lunatic, or Deity?

By Apostle M. L. Draper

Again the high priest asked him and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.—Mark 14: 67, 68, I.V.

EITHER JESUS is the Son of God, or he was the greatest liar and deceiver the world has known. Or maybe he was a lunatic!

Some people accept him as a great human teacher and prophet, but they deny his miraculous incarnation, the virgin birth, the literal resurrection—in short, they deny his deity.

Jesus once asked his followers what their friends thought of him. They said that some considered him to be a prophet, maybe John the Baptist, or the reincarnation of Jeremiah. But when Jesus asked them directly what they thought, Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."¹ If this was wrong, an honest man would have corrected Peter's mistake. But Jesus said, "Blessed art thou, Peter," because of this revelation of God the Father to him.

When Jesus confirmed Peter's affirmation he was lying, or he didn't realize what he was saying, or he was telling the truth. Find another alternative if you can! Maybe he was a liar—a vicious, devilish deceiver; maybe he was a lunatic and didn't know what he was talking about; or maybe he was telling the truth.

We Reorganized Latter Day Saints have more reason to believe that Jesus is the Christ than any other professed Christians in the world. We have all the testimonies that others have—the prophetic accounts foretelling his ministry, the New Testament and the writings of the Christian fathers, the personal testimonies of great leaders in the Christian movement. There is no written evidence, no historical data known to any people, Catholic or Protestant, that is not available to us. When some would add the personal witness of the Spirit of God, we say that this testimony is also ours.

Besides these, we have the testimony of some of the inhabitants of ancient America. The Book of Mormon tells of people living in America almost two thousand years ago who received the ministry of the resurrected Jesus. It describes the administration of the gifts and powers of the gospel, the organization of the church, and the ordination of the priesthood. It speaks of several appearances of Jesus, in the presence of multitudes of witnesses, after his resurrection. This evidence, too, we have that Jesus is God the Son.

WHILE CONDUCTING a preaching mission in Texas some years ago, I was approached by a minister of a prominent church. He objected to the Book of Mormon, saying that if Joseph Smith could find it in New York, someone might find something else in another state. Since he believed as he did that revelation is limited in time and circumstances to the patriarchs, Jewish prophets, and New Testament church, the obvious answer he expected was my denial of such a possibility. But he was mistaken. I answered, "If someone can find something anywhere which tells us as much more about the deity and saviorhood of Jesus as the Book of Mormon does over other traditional Scriptures, more power to him."

Then there is the testimony of present-day revelation. These specific experiences are much more than the heart-warming influence of the Spirit of God in our souls. They involve the senses of sight and hearing, as well as the inspiration of the intellect and consciousness. The record of one of these revelations is the most powerful passages of Scriptures ever written. On February 16, 1832, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were praying over a question about the resurrection of the dead. While in earnest and expectant prayer, they shared a remarkable experience.

Now this caused us to marvel, for it was given unto us of the Spirit, and while we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about; and we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and saw the holy angels, and they who are sanctified before his throne, worshipping God and the Lamb, who worship him for ever and ever. And now after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.

This testimony "last of all" was not to be the final one, but the most recent—as of that time, last of all. Since that time there have been others able to testify that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.

I have enjoyed a significant spiritual experience in this connection. In February, 1950, in Niagara Falls, New York, at the beginning of a series of sermons, one Saturday night previous to the opening sermon on the next morning, I was completing preparations for the meetings to follow. I turned to Doctrine and Covenants 76, the record of the vision of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon just quoted, and began to read: "Hear, O ye heavens, and give ear, O earth, and rejoice ye inhabitants thereof, for the Lord is God." When I read that passage of scripture the testimony of the Spirit came to me in wave after wave of power which surged through my body and thrilled even my physical being. I knew that man should rejoice, and I rejoiced, because God is, and because he is our Savior. Then, as my feelings permitted, I read further, "great is his wisdom . . ." And I had to stop again. I couldn't read, both because I couldn't see the page through the tears of joy and because my mind and heart were so full I simply couldn't know any more in that moment. I knew something of the greatness of his wisdom, as only the revelation of the Spirit could unfold. We are almost overwhelmed with what we see even in the glimpses we are permitted by the influence of the Holy Spirit.

"Marvelous are his ways; and the extent of his doings, none can find out." Thus I read the Scripture, pausing from time to time because the impact of the unfolding revelation made it impossible to go on.

One cannot experience the revelation of the glory of God without being humbled. I was humbled that night, and began to become aware of my sin and shortcomings, my inadequacies and rebellions. Under the sense of the responsibility of my calling, yet in growing awareness of my utter dependence upon God, I was overwhelmed—so much in fact that in my agitation I couldn't stay in my chair. I began to walk back and forth in that little room. I remember with wonder. There was a mirror on the dresser, and the only place to walk was in front of that dresser. Every time I passed the mirror, it was almost as if some physical power turned my face away from that glass. I couldn't stand the sight of my own image. In that agony of mind and heart I found myself on my knees, pouring out my soul in prayer. I prayed for forgiveness, for cleansing. I prayed for physical healing to overcome a chronic laryngitis which caused some doubt that the preaching series would be possible. But most of all I prayed to be clean.

While I prayed, the Spirit of God came over me once more to testify of a truth which has been a great comfort to me ever since. Though of ourselves we are nothing, having within us neither reason nor resources for our own beings, when we recognize our dependence upon God and enter into the right relationships with him, we are, in his eyes, everything. "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."² No man can see the glory of God unless he be quickened by the power of the Spirit of God. If he were left to himself in such a state, he would be destitute of the powers of his being, destroyed by the very consciousness of his incompleteness.

I came to know that night in a way that I had never known before that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. If I know anything, it is that Jesus is the Christ. Unless I know this, I can never trust my mind to know anything after such an experience.

WE HAVE MORE REASON to believe that Jesus is the Christ than any other people of the world. We have all the testimonies of every other people, and besides them the testimonies of the Book of Mormon, of the revelations of latter-day prophets, and of the spirit of revelation in our own lives.

We have these alternatives: Jesus was a liar, he was a lunatic, or he is God the Son in resurrected human flesh. If he was honest, he could not be a liar. His works, and the combined testimonies of his supernatural ministry in Palestine and ancient America both nineteen hundred years ago and now, deny that he was a lunatic. We are witnesses to his deity, revealing the ways of eternal life to man and saving those who respond to the leadings of the Spirit and obey the principles of his gospel.

A Conditional Blessing

HERE IS A SERMON: let all the world sit up and take notice. It is a sermon from the world's greatest preacher—the Savior. He speaks from the mountain to all generations of people. Let us read carefully, let us listen, and better still let us give diligent heed to the advice and counsel of Jesus. He tells us what to do, and how to do what he wants us to do.

We have read the Beatitudes, now let us look at verse eleven: "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely."

We must not misunderstand Jesus here; he does not promise blessedness for you if men say all manner of evil about you and it be true. If they say things about you and they are not true, blessed are you; forgive them even though you suffer.

This statement of Jesus to his disciples at the beginning of his preaching ministry can well be considered a warning. To follow Jesus may be to be misunderstood even as he was; it may be to be not only reviled but to suffer and to die!

Campus Ministry Calls Us!

By Dr. Roy A. Cheville

An address to the priesthood members of the Graceland College students at the first priesthood meeting of this college year, September 14, 1952

IT IS A STIRRING EXPERIENCE to stand before almost a hundred young men of the church who have been ordained to minister. I have found myself wishing that many a pastor, a church appointee, a member who carries on his work alone could see this assembly and be revived by the promise of power within you. Awareness of these needs in far-flung places stimulates me to invite you to make the most of this year at Graceland. Truly the church awaits you. Yet it is not of the tomorrow that I wish to speak. It is of today—of today's ministry on the campus.

Is It Preparation?

One of the pitfalls into which student ministers at college often trip is the view that these campus days are merely preparation for life after graduation. Dispel such an idea! It is true that every day is preparation for the coming day, but each day also exists in its own right. Education in the broadest sense continues through life, and preparation never closes. It is better to think of college as contemporary living, which view makes of it something far more than waiting until you get out of school. Your time of ministry is now. If you will live adequately as a deacon, teacher, priest, or elder here and now; you will have foundation for work in branches and districts after your college days. It will be well to throw away this view of education as mere preparation for life; education is life itself!

The Heart of Ministry

Many times college men grow restless for identifiable things they can report. They want to offer prayer, to serve the Communion, to take charge of a service, to preach a sermon. They like to go afar for these things that can be reported. These things are essential. Back of them, however, is something fundamental that cannot be itemized. It seems to me that my most effective ministry cannot be recorded. It bothers me to fill out a priesthood report, for I know that there is no way of mentioning some of the most significant things I do. Such, for example, as the word of greeting and encouragement to a neighbor along the street, the pat on the head of a child, and the passing on of a bit of inspiring reading to an acquaintance. There is an urgent place for this kind of ministry on the campus. The spirit in which these are done can differentiate the priesthood ministry from the ordinary social service.

One day, in the twelfth century, when Francis of Assisi had become well known for his piety and service, a young priest asked to accompany him through a day. The good saint and the youth wandered through the streets doing the little things of seeming insignificance. In late afternoon the youth wanted to know when they were to start their ministry. He was visioning something dramatic, such as reciting the mass before the altar. Said St. Francis, "My son, we have been ministering all day." This constitutes the essential spirit of our campus calling.

A Five-Line Call

Today five aspects of campus ministry are held out to you. They are supplementary to one another. First, you are called to live as young men of quality. Ordination did not make you old men. It did not deprive you of your youth. You have the right and the responsibility to live the normal life of your age group. Play basketball, cheer at football games, strum the ukulele, date the girls, enjoy a new sweater. Yet, somehow you should do all these with a fine, clean quality because you are priesthood men.

A few years ago, I officiated in the ordination of a young man in his teens. His mother, a devoted Saint, was proud and happy. After the service she sought me out and solicited my help. She wanted to be sure that her son would live the "normal life of a young man." She did not want him to become prematurely old. She did not want him separated from youth. She was a wise mother. Today, I want the same wholesome youth for you with all its zest and verve of your young years.

No Substitute for Studentship

Second, you are called to be students of competence. You differ in abilities. All that is asked of you is reasonable accomplishment in accordance with your native capacities. You will not be respected on the campus if you do sloppy or indifferent work in your studies. Your studies constitute a stewardship.

Today our church is concerned with developing a program of priesthood education. There is an urgency about it. In all this program you are now the privileged men of the priesthood. Yet not infrequently ordained students seem to think they are not getting ministerial training, and they ask for "priesthood courses." They wish some short units such as they might get at an institute or reunion. Here you men are getting foundational studies that are basic. You do not develop thoroughness in two or three days. The work you are registered in here constitutes sound ministerial training. For instance, your freshman course in communication is an opportunity. Let no man "flub" on this and then testify that he wants to qualify for the ministry. Analytic and devoted study of the beginning course in religion can lift your sights for personal development and for ministry to others.

Campus Citizens All!

Third, you are called to be campus citizens. Graceland is a community. This does not come automatically. We have to build it. We think of our college as a laboratory in Zion relationships. We have our ups and downs. We know both achievement and failure. The priesthood member who sits on the side and laments the follies and weaknesses of his fellow students does not help much. The holier-than-thou-minister has no effectiveness.

We never have enough priesthood members who live with pervasive influence in all phases of campus life. Fortunate are we when deacons and priests throw their influence into the football squad, the dormitory, the social club, the classroom, the class party. We need vigorous young men who stand for high spiritual quality in campus affairs. Such a man can mingle with his fellow students and leaven campus life.

One World-Wide Fellowship

Fourth, you are called to be members of a world-wide church. We consider this one of the major assets of Graceland. We want you to maintain loyalty to your home branch and home district, but we want you also to push out the radius of the circle of your fellowship. After two years here, you should feel yourself a part of a universal church, not in "word only," but in personal association and in "much assurance."

There is a particular possibility for you ordained men. You can serve in the fraternity of fellow ministers from many places.

In this congregation you join hands with Klaas Kaat from Holland, Bill Muldoon from England, Barry Fuller, Hudson Grundy, and Bob Wood of Australia. During this year you will not be conscious that there is a boundary line between Canada and the United States as you worship and work together. In this country you come from Massachusetts to California, from Michigan to Texas. Here you grow to sense the meaning of the hymn, "In Christ There Is No East Nor West."

The Campus Congregation

Fifth, you are called to be ministers of and to the campus congregation. This is the term we use for the assembly of church-affiliated students. There is no transfer of membership from your local branch, yet here is your church home for nine months. You men constitute a large percentage of the student body. As ministers you hold great potentialities for the spiritual tone of the campus. Here is the first place of your ministry.

What we do in daily life cannot be separated from ministerial functioning. In a metropolitan city it might be possible to act like the Devil on Saturday night on one side of town and parade as a saint on Sunday in another part of the city. We cannot get by with anything like that here. Our living is pretty well unified. A fellow cannot be crooked and cantankerous on the playing field and be received as a minister. He cannot cheat in an examination and be respected because of his ordination. He cannot make love like a cave man and become known for his torrid technique and then expect to pass as a priest of the church. Things have a way of getting around on the campus.

In the public services you are to carry the atmosphere of priesthood. A deacon in our campus congregation is to be more than a receiver of offerings. He is to be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord. His very presence ought to add tone to the meeting. In the service of the Lord's Supper the priest is to be more than a purveyor of morsels of bread and small glasses of wine. He moves among the Saints as a servant of the Lord. What he says in fellowship meetings will contribute to his witnessing for Christ.

In our campus congregation are sixteen pastoral groups. Heading each is a student minister. With him is a student associate and a faculty associate. Here is a training unit for ministry. The significant work is not so much in holding meetings as in keeping in touch with the flock. That kind of ministry does not come by designation of special tasks. You have to catch the soul of it. The perplexities, the joys, the needs, the frustrations, the achievements of your pastoral group members you will carry on your heart. You will learn the art of ministry to those with whom you work and play.

The Immediacy of the Call

This is no call for a distant time or place. It is to Graceland Campus in 1952. It is challenging in possibilities. A heart must be of stone that does not stir at the prospect of this year. Let's begin here in this room. One of our first ministries will be to one another. We can pace each other on the way. We can strengthen each other in high resolves. We can counsel each other in the spirit of fraternity. In this circle I want to be with you as a friend, as a father minister, and as a brother in Christ.

Too many times we have tried to be a "proofy" church rather than seeking to meet the needs of people.

The most effective missionary formula: humility plus conviction.

Stewardship is an over-all attitude, not just the rote keeping of rules.

Show Me the Way

By Ruby Tinkham

Part II

AL NEVER QUITE KNEW how it happened that he joined the Freedom Circle. He only knew that the antagonism grew between his father and himself until they began to avoid each other, and his mother watched them both with sadness and pity. He began working more and more at nights, and that was how he met Lola. She worked in the office on the late shift, and Al noticed that she was silent and aloof. She interested him, and he made it a point to seek her out and make her talk to him. It was as if the two of them had some secret bond in common.

One day she surprised him. "Al, I looked up your record. You haven't anything marked for religious belief. How come?"

"Oh, that—it's just one of those things! I don't believe in professing something I'm not, that's all."

He could tell she was excited. "But, Al, isn't your dad a minister or something?"

He grinned. "Sure, and my grandfather too. He was one of the old-timers—hell-fire and damnation and all that."

She was puzzled. "But why, Al, how come you're not?"

He tightened up, and she could feel the coldness in his voice. "It's a long story, Lola, and I'd rather not go into it. Let's just stick to politics, shall we?"

Later Lola asked him to join her club, the Freedom Circle. It was a self-improvement club for young people, and its purpose was to inform them through speakers about government and politics and how to participate in projects directed toward community welfare. The slogan on the wall of the clubroom read, "It's up to us to clean up!"

Al saw several there from the plant, and they greeted him warmly. It only took three meetings for Al to catch on to what was going on. Self-improvement nothing—it was communism in its infant stage and nothing else. But it fascinated him, and he kept on going. Hadn't his father told him to get acquainted with atheism? Well, here it was. Hadn't he told him to hunt out the agnostics? Well, here they were gathered together. Now for awhile he would watch the other side. Weren't they happy? Didn't they have something too? They weren't hurting anything. They just had big ideas and did lots of talking.

THEN AL woke up one morning and saw that America was fighting another war in Korea. He debated with himself long and hard about joining up again, but he was a little too old now for active combat duty. He talked it over with his boss and found out he could do more right where he was. They were converting to defense work, and Al could help. They transferred him to production, and for the first time he got a thrill out of going to work. Here a man had to have skill and stamina. Al began to realize that he really liked people, and that he had something to give. Production in his department shot up and stayed there. Men liked him because he wasn't afraid to work himself harder than he worked them. Time meant nothing now, except to give it freely to his job and to the men who worked for him.

He forgot all about the Freedom Circle and laughed at communism. He couldn't be bothered with that when fellows were fighting their hearts out against insurmountable odds. Work was the answer, and he gloried in it. It infected his whole department, and production kept mounting higher and higher. Soon plant officials were sending for him and wanting to know how he did it. Then they were moving him up and suddenly, without even knowing it, Al became an important figure to be reckoned with whenever production was mentioned.

He knew that his mother and dad were proud of him, and he welcomed the opportunity to slip back into the old companionship that he had missed so much. Then it began to happen. A little thing here and a little thing there. First, the machines in the shop started breaking down. Then some merchandise was destroyed. The truck drivers threatened to strike, and too many workers were off sick. Production slacked down and began to fall off. Some of his best men began to avoid him. Some of them changed jobs and some were openly disrespectful.

Al wracked his brain trying to discover why. What had happened? Who was to blame?

THE FOLLOWING WEEK he found out. Mr. Watson called him off the job into the office, and Al scented trouble before he stepped out of the elevator into the outer office. As he laid his hand on the doorknob of the inner office he looked back at Lola, and he could have sworn there was derision in her eyes before she dropped her head. He opened the door and met it head on, for nearly all the officials in the company were there, and they sat gravely facing him. The friendliness of former meetings was gone, and in their faces Al saw that for some unknown reason he had been tried and found guilty. Only Mr. Watson could not meet his eyes and fingered his pencil nervously.

Al straightened defensively. Let it come. He was worried too. Maybe they knew something he didn't. Maybe this would clear things up. Anyway, better him than the little fellows.

Mr. Watson cleared his throat apprehensively in the cold silence and ran his hand through his thin hair distractedly. He got up noisily, walked around the big table playing with his watch chain. Al braced himself with his weight equally on both feet and waited. Old memories began to crowd him. This was what it was like just before going into combat—the waiting, the tenseness, the fine edge of strain.

"Al, you and I have never pulled any punches with each other, and I'm not going to begin now. You had a fine record, and we were proud of you." Here he sighed. "You know what's happened lately—how production has slackened down, fallen off. These men want to know why, Al." He paused and pleaded hopefully. "Al, do you know why?"

AL STEPPED CLOSER to the table and looked directly into the closed faces before him. His voice under control was tense with earnestness. "Look, gentlemen, I wish to God I did know why. When I came into this room I hoped that you knew something I didn't. I even hoped you were going to give me hell and tell me why. But I don't know why. I've wracked my brain. I've worked every shift. I've—" and here one of the men jerked back his chair and rose to his feet angrily.

"Quit stalling, Watson, you know what we're here for." Then he shoved himself across the table in Al's face, bracing himself on both hands. "Look, Al, you're not fooling us any longer with your fine talk and excuses. We've had enough. Sure, you worked three shifts, and on every one of them something happened. Who are you trying to fool? We know about your Freedom Circle and your aid to the community—communism, plain and simple! You and your crowd make me sick. Only you were cleverer than the rest. You worked your way up to where you could do big things. Only you're not doing them here, nor anywhere else. You're through, do you hear, through!" He lunged forward and the words spewed out like lava from an angry volcano. "You're lucky you're not in jail. That's where your kind belongs. I hate your guts, using good honest men, fooling them, wringing every ounce out of them and then laughing behind their backs, destroying the very sweat of their brows."

The harsh violence of his words struck Al like a physical blow, and he backed involuntarily away from the table, dumbfounded. Mr. Watson raised his arms placably. "Now, gentlemen, give the boy a chance. We could be wrong, you know."

ONE OF THE OTHER MEN spoke gravely. "We are not wrong, Watson, our information came straight from a member of this Freedom organization. This thing was planned some time ago, and Al was chosen because of his fine record and superior intelligence. It beats me how boys like him who have been through one war can feel no pity for their own brothers."

Anger began to seep through Al's veins. It pounded madly in his head, choked his throat, and swelled his muscles. He clenched his fist violently and suddenly he needed air, fresh air, and lots of it. They wouldn't believe him. They wouldn't listen. They had already heard all they wanted to hear. He was condemned—found guilty, and he never opened his mouth. He turned on his heel and strode to the door. But something impelled him to look back, and he saw Mr. Watson take out his handkerchief and wipe his glasses carefully. They had been good friends for a long time, and Al spoke to him as if he were the only man in the room.

"Mr. Watson, I've never in my whole life done any of the things I have been accused of here this morning. I hate communism. I hate anything that steals or destroys freedom. This thing is a pack of lies to get rid of me, and I'll prove it if it's the last thing I ever do!"

Al closed the door with quiet precision while Mr. Watson studied the faces before him and said sadly, "Gentlemen, I believe that we have made a very grave mistake." He was glad to see that several pairs of eyes fell before his own as he added thoughtfully, "I should not be surprised if we find ourselves on our knees begging him to come back." And then he added humbly under his breath. "I for one should like to be the first."

THE ANGER in Al tortured and tormented him like a live flame that gorges itself greedily on everything within its reach. He never knew how he got out of town except that he was racing his car madly along roads, jamming on screaming brakes, careening wildly around dangerous curves, surging forward with the wind whipping into his face and anger lashing him every foot of the way. He yanked the car off the road beside a tavern and sought a booth to himself. It was the first time in his life he had ever sat down deliberately to get drunk. But his nature denied him the surcease of numbness that comes with complete oblivion in alcohol. He knew after the second drink that it wasn't any use.

He got up uncertainly, paid for his drinks, walked out to his car, and there without willing it, he laid his head down on the steering wheel and broke into sobs.

Great wracking sobs tore him and split him like the thunder and lightning of a terrible storm. The anger that had whipped and tortured him spent itself in huge waves of humiliation. Then Al paid God a great tribute. Where a weaker man might have rushed clumsily and unceremoniously into his presence demanding to be heard, Al refused to go there while there was still violence in his heart. Instead he turned to the only other source he knew. He lowered his head to the steering wheel and whispered under his shaking breath. "Grandpa, what would you do?" He clenched his hands until the knuckles showed white and his body was rigid with strain. Old memories ran through his brain. "You were a fighter, Grandpa, you never ran away; you never gave up. What would you do?" Grandpa preaching with a lantern in his hand because all the lights had been broken. Grandpa in jail holding services just the same with a big crowd gathered outside the jailhouse window. Grandpa stopping in the midst of services to step outside and lick some bully who came back in with a black eye and a grin to help keep order until Grandpa was through.

SUDDENLY THE VIOLENCE ran out of him, and Al felt weak and limp. Grandpa had had bad times too. But he had never been licked. He had never given up. Why? What would he say if he were here now?

"Al, you let yourself in for this. You fooled around with truth and shut your eyes when they should have been wide open. You laughed and said it didn't make any difference what a man believes. You sold God out and denied his Holy Spirit. Open up your eyes, boy. You know God and freedom belong together. You know righteousness is the one and only prevailing power on earth now and forever. Make up your mind, boy. Get on the right side of the fence. Then get in there and fight."

Al knew the sound of that voice. He loved it, trusted it, believed in it. He might make mistakes, but Grandpa knew what he was talking about. He had shed his tears, and he was not ashamed, but in their place came cold determination supported by an iron will and a grim purpose. His military training had taught him many things, and one of them was how to fight. For the first time he was glad, and any scruples he had about being fair were gone. He knew that time was important, and that he needed help. He counted off on his fingers those men he could depend on, and there were enough. He would stay away from the plant. Let them think he was licked.

THE EDITOR of one of the local papers was a good friend of Al's father, and he went there first. Al was assigned a reporter and two photographers in exchange for the exclusive story and the names of all those he knew who belonged to the Freedom Circle. Al named the ones he could remember, and when he included Lola he recalled the sneer on her face that morning.

That evening Al visited the homes of those men he could trust, and one by one they smiled, shook their heads, and followed him. Like men of old they went out silently into the night wearing the banner of freedom. And as with men of old the angel of righteousness joyously joined their ranks and marched along.

Now Al wished that instead of only a small clubroom with a few evil designers he might be marching against the whole organization, smashing and crushing it with one great blow. In fact, there was hardly any fight at all. The paper built the story up and made it seem much more than it was. Finding the leader and getting a confession was a little difficult since the fifth amendment had been designed to protect honest men, and these people used it to cover dishonesty. But they were marched down to the police station, and the paper was out before they were booked. Al knew it could never be made to stick, but he was in the clear, and the company would fire all these who belonged. Things would settle down again until the next bunch filtered in.

IT WAS MORNING when Al went home, and he felt good—tired, but good! He didn't hate those men around the table this morning. They had been doing what they thought was right. He had looked guilty. He could have been. And he sat there in the car thinking how close he had come.

His father came out, opened the car door, and sat down with him. In his hand was the paper, and Al could see his picture and the headlines.

There was real concern in his dad's voice. "Al, your mother and I have been worried about you. Are you all right?" Then catching a glimpse of the tired radiance in Al's face he added, "Mr. Watson has been calling you all morning . . . something about a special meeting."

Al turned impulsively to his dad. "Dad, you won't believe this, but I swear when we were down there last night Grandpa was there with us. I could hear him laughing uproariously, and two or three times I heard the smash of that big fist of his."

He expected amusement, but his father surprised him by answering seriously. "Your grandfather is a mighty man, Al, and it wouldn't be like him to miss a good fight."

Al gazed off into space and pondered slowly, "You know, something happened to me last night, Dad." He turned, and his eyes searched his father's face for understanding. "I feel different—fresh and clean somehow. I feel alive, awake. I can see and understand things I never even thought of before. For the first time in my life I feel warm and content without confusion or anger or bitterness." He laughed softly, exuberantly. "I'm a new man, Dad. I want to go out and make the whole world over, clean it up, and make it fit to live in. I feel strong and confident and sure of myself." He dropped his voice emotionally. "I feel as if I love all people and want to help them, and yet, how can I? Who am I to imagine that I can make the world a better place to live in?"

"Al, there hasn't been a humble man since the beginning of time who hasn't said exactly the same thing. 'Who am I to think that I can do the work of the Lord?' Even the greatest of prophets, Moses, Isaiah, Elijah, all asked the same question. You know the answer."

"But, Dad, will it last? Will I feel this way tomorrow, and the day after, and next week?"

"That depends on you, Al. God forces himself on no one. The radiance you possess now will depend on what you do from here on in. You know enough about obedience and self-discipline to realize that they are important in any united effort. Now tie them up with righteousness and you possess a greater power than you ever dreamed of. Your responsibilities will become greater, too, and that means you must seek the source of your power constantly and continually." He gazed off into the morning sunlight and sighed contentedly.

AL QUESTIONED that sigh with his eyes. His father grinned. "You know, Al, I have prayed for this thing to happen for such a long time that I believe I had actually given up. Who can fathom the ways of the Lord? He moves so unexpectedly and with such telling results. I kept looking to the church, and yet, each man must find his God where and when his work is ready to begin. You are a fighter—like your grandfather. Why couldn't I see that shepherding a flock was not for you? How wise are the ways of God. How well he knows his children." Then he lowered his voice in reminiscence. "To ordinary people you will appear the same. But you will never be the same again. In the kingdom of God another soul has just experienced the miracle of rebirth. There will be a new and understanding kindness in you. There will be warmth and tenderness for the sick, the afflicted, and oppressed. You will think more and speak less, and your whole manner will be permeated with a tender radiance. You will learn to forget yourself and devise ingenious ways of serving your fellow man. Your anger will be directed toward injustice and ignorance and oppression. You will learn to consider the wishes of your Heavenly Father upon even the most lowly of missions." He stretched and smiled happily. "Al, I wish your grandfather were here now."

Al took out the package of cigarettes, shook one loose and held it up to his lips. Then unexpectedly he grinned and tossed it out the window. Al Crawford was growing up. He heard the sound of his own laughter mix with that of his dad's. Boy, what a wonderful world!

LATER AL LAY ON THE BED with his arms folded beneath his head. This decision was the hardest one he had ever been called on to make, and somehow he knew the answer even before he gathered up the forces of argument. A man always had to fight his battles out first with himself, and he knew this was it. Prayer would come later. Suddenly there was a great stillness as if all the earth were suspended in waiting. Al closed his eyes and sank into it gratefully. This must be what it was like after death. Then from afar off he heard them—footsteps—great lumbering footsteps, striding eagerly and breathlessly into the room. Al sat up in bed and looked around. He could have sworn it was Grandpa. Nobody but Grandpa ever walked like that. He moved to the side of the bed and dropped his head into his hands. Then he felt it. The big bony hand on his shoulder with the huge knuckles digging into his shoulder blades. Grandpa was here!

"Well, Son, you finally made up your mind. What took you so long? You young people always thinking there's plenty of time and then rushing around like crazy. Well, let's get started," and he thumped Al joyously on the back.

Al grinned. It was Grandpa all right, and even though he knew his imagination was working overtime he held on tightly lest he dispel the vision. "But, Grandpa, do you think I can do it?"

The old man straightened angrily. "Of course we can do it. Haven't I been sitting around waiting while you made up your mind? Look, boy, I've got ideas. These are new times, but it's the same old world, and people haven't changed a bit. They need the same thing they've always needed, and we're going to give it to them. Now, get up and get at it."

GRANDPA HADN'T CHANGED a bit. He still stirred everything up and made it sound exciting. Al could feel the warmth and strength in the arm across his shoulders. "But, Grandpa, I'm no angel."

The old man shook his head disgustedly. "We don't need angels. We got plenty. What we need is fighting men—good honest, down-to-earth fighting men. We got a battle on our hands. Now quit your quibbling and let's get started."

Al jumped to his feet and paced around the room. He just couldn't sit still around Grandpa. He had to move, think fast, get out and go. He'd make mistakes, yes, plenty. But he'd be breathing deeply, striding forward, living gloriously. He stopped and grinned and spoke to himself.

"Well, Grandpa, here we go. I'll never fill your shoes, but I'll sure to goodness try. If I go wrong, kick me in the seat of the pants, but for God's sake don't ever walk out on me and leave me alone. You got me into this, and I'm depending on you to see me through."

And then he stopped in amazement. He could have sworn that the old man had placed his hands on his head. With startling clarity, Al remembered what his father had said, "Your grandfather is a mighty man, Al!"

He waited reverently, feeling the loving pressure of those big, bony hands on his head. This was it, and he was shaken mightily. Was he dreaming? Could it be true?

Before the solemnity of the occasion, whether it be vision, dream, or fantasy, Al went to his knees and bowed his head.

Question Time

Question:

Hasn't Christianity failed? Look at Europe.
E. C. D.
Colorado

Answer:

"Churchanity" may have failed, but Christianity has not been put into effect actually. If the principles of Christianity had been practiced by individuals, groups, and nations, we would not have these conditions in Europe. These exist not because of God but in spite of him. God gave to man his own agency to decide for himself. God would not be God if he made man into something man did not choose to become.

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

How many appearances are recorded of Christ after his resurrection? Please give scriptural references in order of occurrence.

Kansas C. F. J.

Answer:

It is impossible to list these appearances in absolutely correct order, only approximately so.

1. The two Marys saw the Lord early on the morning of the Resurrection as they returned from the tomb (Matt. 28: 7; John 20: 14-16).

2. He appeared to Mary Magdalene (Mark 16: 8). (Probably same as No. 1.)

3. He appeared to two disciples on way to Emmaus. Luke says it was the day Jesus arose (Mark 16: 11; Luke 24: 12).

4. The same night Jesus came into a meeting of the disciples (Luke 24: 32-35; John 20: 19; Mark 16: 13).

5. Eight days later when the disciples were gathered, "came Jesus . . . and stood in the midst" (John 20: 26).

6. At the shore of Tiberias where disciples had gone fishing, Jesus appeared. John says this was the third visitation to the disciples (John 21: 1, 14).

7. The disciples saw Jesus ascend (Acts 1: 10). It is said that he was seen of them during forty days, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." It is probable that his visitations were many more than the ones specifically mentioned.

8. Paul says Christ was seen of over five hundred brethren at one time (I Cor. 15: 6).

Some subsequent appearances are recorded after his ascension:

9. He was seen of Saul or Paul on the way to Damascus (Acts 9: 27; I Cor. 15: 8).

10. He appeared to John (Rev. 1: 13, 14).

11. He appeared on two occasions to the Nephites in Central America, ministering the gospel to the multitude (evidently during the forty days—III Nephi 5 and 9).

12. He was seen by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, 1832 (D. and C. 76: 3a ff.).

13. He appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, 1836 (Church History, Volume 1, pages 267-270).

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Will Christ come only to the Mount of Olives, or to Zion to gather his people, and then to Jerusalem?

Answer:

The coming of Christ is not so much an event as it is a series of events, covering a period of time referred to as "the day of his coming."

Zechariah 14: 4 speaks of him standing upon the Mount of Olives, but this does not signify his being seen by all the world. It is not clear that even the Jews will see him at that time. A separate event is mentioned in Zechariah 12: 10 when apparently the Jews will see him.

Another coming—in fact three appearances are indicated—is recorded in Luke 12: 37-40 (the Inspired Version is plain-er), where it is said he will appear to his "servants," the ministry of his church. This coming is private and will not be known to the world. Many prophecies speak of his coming to judgment which may reveal his presence and power, but not his personal form. There is his coming to Zion as stated in Isaiah 59: 20, which is to the righteous only. John tells of his coming "in the clouds with ten thousand of his saints, . . . and every eye shall see him" (Revelation 1: 7). This probably is his final coming. It is not possible to list these several comings in consecutive order.

Question:

In the beginning, did God create people other than Adam and Eve? Am I right in assuming that he did, since Cain went to the land of Nod, east of Eden, and found his wife? If not, did sisters and brothers marry each other in that day?

Missouri

Mrs. D. B.

Answer:

In the King James Bible, all we have is: "And the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years: and he begat sons and daughters."—Gen. 5: 4. This leaves us to conjecture as to whom Cain married, and as to whether or not brothers and sisters married each other.

In the Inspired Version of the Bible, however, we are definitely told, "And Adam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters, and they began to multiply and to replenish the earth. And from that time forth the sons and daughters of Adam began to divide, two and two, in the land, and to tend flocks, and they also begat sons and daughters."—Genesis 4: 2, 3, I.V. Then, in the next chapter, it reads: "And Adam also, and his wife, mourned before the Lord, because of Cain and his brethren. And it came to pass that Cain took one of his brother's daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God."—Genesis 5: 12, 13, I.V.

This is but a sample of many obscure passages in the King James and other versions of the Bible being made plain in the Inspired Version. One should read the whole context of the story of the creation as revealed to Moses who was commanded to write the account as we find it in the early chapters of Genesis, Inspired Version.

Ministry Given to Isolated Members

A Labor of Love

By Marian Willmarth

MARTHA LINDSAY paused in her descent of the hillside to admire the view which never failed to give her spirit a lift. Below in the distance, nestled in a grove of pine trees, was the little white church with its slender spire pointing toward an azure sky. As her gaze swept the valley she noted the tiny homes, each with its well-kept garden, while on the outskirts of the village the cattle grazed or lay about in the shade of the willows lining the stream that ran through the meadow. Over all the heat of late August shimmered, while insects buzzed in the breathless air. Overhead white clouds sailed the blue ocean of sky. To the east the mountains rose majestically. In a moment of exaltation she had christened the highest peak the "Mount of Transfiguration." A halo seemed to encircle its summit. On this August afternoon it glowed with unusual brilliance. The view, though changing with the seasons, was ever one of soul-satisfying loveliness. She never failed to pause at this spot on her way down the hill.

Sitting upon a boulder beneath a giant pine tree, she admired the scene spread in panorama before her. The late afternoon sun fell aslant her silver hair, as she sat with her work-worn hands folded on her lap. "Forty years ago," she mused, "John and I came to this valley." Her mind traversed the years, and she stood once again in the congregation of the Saints. The Spirit engulfed them as they sang the song of dedication, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord." John, a newly ordained Seventy, stood with other missionaries on the rostrum. Instinctively she knew that her hour of trial had come. Could she send him, or go willingly with him, to the far-off places that were crying for his ministry? "Yes, Lord," she prayed, "under this influence I can."

THEN FOLLOWED DAYS of preparation for departure when she seemed to stand in her own strength. She relived again the heart-rending experience of leaving friends and loved ones to venture into strange and unknown territory. Weary days of traveling had brought them one evening to the highest peak of the mountains surrounding this valley. Tying their team to a scrub oak, they dismounted from the heavy wagon that contained their earthly possessions and, like Moses, surveyed the distant scene which was to be their future field of labor.

"Let us pray," John had whispered. Martha thrilled at the remembrance of the experience. They rose from their knees, fully assured of the divinity of their mission. It was then that Martha whispered, "This is our 'Mount of Transfiguration.'" They went down into the valley to face with courage whatever might be their lot.

She and John were young then. She recalled the years of service he had rendered to the little hamlets scattered throughout this remote region, while she stayed alone in their home on the hillside, yet not entirely alone, for, as she moved among the people of the valley, she made many warm and lasting friendships. She thought how John, after years as a traveling missionary, had become the pastor of the church in the valley. He moved among them with a dignity and saintliness which won both young and old.

SHE RECALLED the nights he had risen from his bed to go to the call of someone in need. "Better come along, Martha," he'd smile, "they might need a woman's help." Then she'd fill her little tin pail with warm broth, or search the medicine shelf for her homemade remedies, and they'd be off into the night. Many times she had seen the blessing come as he placed his hands upon fevered brows and rebuked the destroyer in the name of Jesus.

Young lovers came to him, and many a beautiful marriage ceremony carried his blessing. Mothers brought their children that he might take them in his arms and bless them. He wept with the widow and orphan, saying the last rites over their loved dead. When he stood in his pulpit on the Lord's day the congregation sat in rapt attention.

A new pastor stood in the pulpit now, and Martha lived alone in their home on the hillside. But her work was not finished, and she must hasten. She rose to continue her way down the hill. Hers was a self-appointed task, assumed years ago. Her friends had suggested that she shouldn't work so hard, but Martha loved the Saturday afternoons she spent alone at the little church. After John's passing, these afternoons became a sacred tryst, as they brought her closer to her beloved.

Home Column

She could see his grave from the church windows, and he always seemed very near as she went about her work.

THIS AFTERNOON she felt unusually depressed and lonely as she crossed the valley and entered the silent church. "I'll just rest awhile," she thought as she sat down on one of the benches.

Sometime later she went about her accustomed tasks of cleaning. She polished the organ till its walnut surface was a thing of beauty. She lingered over the pulpit where John had read his texts on Sabbaths now past. She trimmed and filled the lamps that rested in their metal brackets along the walls, then went out to mow the lawn and trim the grass from around the flower beds.

When all was in readiness for the coming Lord's day she made her way through the little iron gate that led to the cemetery adjacent to the church. "I'll sit with John awhile," she whispered as she sat down upon a rustic bench beneath a weeping willow tree. She gazed toward her "Mount of Transfiguration." It seemed to glow with unusual brilliance in the setting sun. As she sat there admiring the view she heard the gate click behind her, then a light touch on her arm.

A glad cry broke from her lips. "John," she cried, as she attempted to rise. "You've come at last, John," she whispered, as she sank back upon the bench. . . . They found her there, the new pastor and his wife, as they walked in the cool of the evening.

The following day as the peal of the church bell tolled over the valley, the villagers entered the silent church. The eyes of all sought the pew which for years had been occupied by a gentle, white-haired woman. This morning it was empty. The tears rolled down their cheeks, as they thought of the years she had ministered to them. It had been an humble and unassuming ministry, a labor of love.

Report From Seattle

The major goal of the General Church is to build the kingdom of God. To help accomplish this the women of Seattle District have listed the following as some of their immediate objectives:

1. Learn to work together
 2. Develop stewardship of time, talents, and possessions
 3. Build Zionie homes
- To more fully accomplish these things, the women have set up the following goals for 1952 and 1953:
1. Plan well-balanced programs
 2. Stimulate interest in all age groups through personal contact
 3. Observe 9:00 o'clock prayer
 4. Increase friendly visiting
 5. Increase membership and attendance
 6. Have broader participation in group activities and personal study
 7. Enrich children's lives spiritually
 8. Seek to increase awareness of stewardship responsibilities

Plan Your Work and Work Your Plan

Seek to improve leadership in women's groups

Plan well-balanced programs—including a strong devotional at all times (These can be planned more effectively by using the Year Book.)

Stimulate interest by planning activities appealing to various ages, making phone calls, visiting, etc.

Promote friendly visiting and friendliness (Social hours are "ice breakers," also secret pals and secret sisters.)

Win new members (attendance can be increased by interest in non-members, keeping them informed of activities via phone calls and postal cards; they should feel welcome). No group should be cliquish.

Help make openings for cottage meetings and priesthood visits. Women must live their religion so that others will want to become a part of the group.

Strengthen children's lives spiritually by family altar, church school attendance, church group activity attendance. Parents must lead the way.

Increase awareness of stewardship responsibilities by teaching the financial law, building an interest in keeping the financial law, enlarging personal understanding of all that is meant by stewardship, filing inventory, paying tithing, developing talents.

RUTH SELZER

Report From Anchorage

The women's department of the Anchorage, Alaska, mission was organized July 13, 1952, under the name of "Alma's Daughters of the North Land." We have eight active members and hope to gain more during the year, through the interest and activity of our present membership.

Many thanks go to Sister Florence Gilmore of the Second Church in Seattle, Washington, for her help in organization. Most of us are new in women's work, and we were most grateful to her for her suggestions and help.

We are using the theme of stewardship for our class discussions. We have a program outlined and entered in our yearbook for the entire year. Our theme hymn is "Teach Us, O Lord, True Sisterhood," and the scriptural basis for our thoughts is found in Doctrine and Covenants 72:1 and in I Timothy 4:12.

We have planned a hobby sale and social for October 31 and a Christmas party for the entire mission. A harvest festival has been scheduled for next summer, and once a month we have a potluck dinner. The proceeds from all these activities go to the building fund.

We do need the prayers of the women in other districts that we may not lose sight of the true purpose of women's work, "Improving the quality of individual and family life, raising the standard of housekeeping and homemaking, encouraging all families to know and keep the laws of the church or the developing of Zionie homes." Since we are so new in women's work we shall make mistakes, but with God's help we will accomplish what we have set for ourselves this year.

My Testimony of the Restoration

By Apostle D. O. Chesworth

A College Student Conference Address

To complain that life has no joys while there is a single creature whom we can relieve by our bounty, assist by our counsels, or enliven by our presence is to lament the loss of that which we possess, and is just as rational as to die of thirst with the cup in our hands.

SINCE OUR HEAVENLY FATHER is unchangeable, all that happened to the saints at Pentecost can be ours today. The Holy Spirit promised by the Nazarene is still available and is within our reach, but will be ours only as we humble our hearts, seek his presence, and ask for the cleansing process in our lives.

"If my people . . . will heal their land."—II Chronicles 7: 14.

These words are timeless. However, as we look about us, spiritual weakness seems to be evident everywhere. There is a feverish unrest and hatred in millions of hearts. Nations, drunk with atomic energy, are baring their teeth, waiting to spring at each other's throats. Our wealth has increased with unprecedented tempo in the last few decades. Mammon and Christ are contending for mastery. Greed and sensuous pleasures have always been deadly foes to spiritual life; they hold nothing sacred.

We of the Restoration must speak out lest this avalanche put us in a state of moral and spiritual paralysis. The apostles of the early church did not attempt to fit the gospel to the ideas and customs of Greek thought and the social life of Roman cities. Rather, at the peril of their own lives, they called all to repentance at the foot of the cross.

Where is this passion for souls? Where is this burning zeal and fervent enthusiasm? Inspired men will not conform to the world, but will be transformed by the renewing of their minds. Our lives must be a constant rebuke to the terrible germ of compromise.

The week end we have had a renewal of the Spirit. This type of experience made the early Saints a dauntless army of evangelists. They would not permit the spiritual fires to burn lower and lower, making the church weaker and weaker. The light of Christ never dawns where we find the mingling of doubt and unbelief. Consequently we should be better equipped to move out into the lives of puzzled minds and distracted people.

HERE is a significant quotation from a book by E. Stanley Jones, "Christianity has had a rude awakening. It has lived in a smug world, so secure, so eternal, but it has broken down and has left men confused and more alarmed."

Here is our place, our entrance to witness. Hearsay evidence is not too significant and is not of the importance of the supreme firsthand type of witness. To illustrate, yesterday a member of the Jehovah Witnesses came to our door. We received her, treated her courteously in our home, but rather than listen to her extensively—as some people are required to do when representatives of this type come into their homes—I took the lead. I told her that in this community there were 1,200 members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; that in this church, patterned after our Lord's church, there were prophets, apostles, evangelists, seventies, and other officers. "You knew that Jesus sent out other seventies?" I asked, and she answered, "Yes." She then told me that she was a witness; but it was a hearsay witness. This gave me an opportunity to bear my testimony that I was a firsthand witness of our cause.

How did Christianity spread over the hard Roman world like a forest fire? Let me tell you. It was by personal testimony. Let the Elijahs of the Restoration church share this light with the world today. President W. W. Blair in 1862 at Council Bluffs, Iowa, uttered this great challenge: "Oh, when will the ministry manifest a zeal worthy of so good a cause as that in which we are engaged?" It is for us to answer, "Today." We give the church to the world. To say we don't need it is to question the wisdom of God, for he gave it to us.

IN CONCLUSION I wish to leave this definite testimony of the Restoration with you. Three years ago in the arsenal of the world—Detroit, Michigan—thirty of us—church appointees—were assembled. We had met day after day for a week using as our theme hymn every morning Number 112 in the Saints' Hymnal. In the spirit of unity, we grew and we worshiped. The concluding service before we were to part for our various assignments consumed three hours and forty minutes, yet it seemed very brief. It pleased the powers of heaven to endow this group of men. Thirteen individuals received the word of admonition in the spirit of prophecy and were thereby enlisted with the many witnesses of this latter-day dispensation. We could ask with Joseph Smith, and Oliver Cowdery, "Where was room to doubt?" No where, for uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk no more to rise. The following day Apostle Maurice Draper and I were conducting a preaching service at Niagara Falls, New York. This good Spirit remained with us, and after I had preached the sermon that night, Brother Draper arose and told the congregation that the spirit of prophecy was there then and admonished the people to assemble the next morning to receive this blessing. Similar situations developed in many areas, and I doubt that any of those thirty men shall become discouraged and disturbed to the extent that they shall forsake this great calling of witnessing in the latter days. This, to us, was a great testimony of God's kindness and nearness.

Our philosophy appeals to man's best logic. Truth always stands by itself.

We must look to the world to see what we can give it.

We want to prepare people not only for the afterlife, but to live now.

God reaches down to men in proportion to their responsiveness to him.

The material resources of life must be witnesses to a spiritual triumph.

—Quotes from the College Student Conference

Young People in the News

Tommy Cochran

DURING THE PAST SCHOOL YEAR seventeen-year-old Tommy Cochran, son of Brother and Sister Virgil D. Cochran of Joplin, Missouri, was named Missouri's outstanding student leader in a state-wide competition sponsored by the Missouri State Elks Association.

Tommy was awarded a $100 defense bond at the annual state Elks Association banquet in Kansas City and given the opportunity to participate in a national leadership contest in which winners from all forty-eight states would be contestants.

For some time the state Elks' Lodge has sponsored an annual contest to pick an outstanding Missouri high school student in scholarship. This year for the first time the contest was enlarged to include a student outstanding in leadership.

Five fellows competed in Joplin where Tom won first and was awarded a $25 bond. The same scrapbook which was entered in the Joplin contest, composed of letters of recommendations, clippings of activities, pictures, and so forth, was sent to the state contest committee.

It is easy to understand why Tom should win such a contest. He has been outstanding in school, church, and civic activities, taking advantage of all opportunities offered him.

A senior, this past year, Tommy was unanimously elected president of his high school's student body, an honor never before given to a student in Joplin High School. He was also president of his class in both sophomore and junior years.

In sports he lettered in football, basketball, track, and tennis. He was on the first-string varsity football squad, and number one man on the tennis team, which he also captained.

His interests also extend to music and dramatics. He played the bass clarinet in the school band and lettered three years in music. He also had a part in the junior-senior play.

Community service projects were a part of his extracurricular activities. He headed a student movement to open a youth center for high school students at the YMCA. He also took a prominent part in the Joplin Christian Youth Council, of which he was an officer. This organization was largely instrumental in establishing the youth center.

His church activities and responsibilities have not suffered because of his active participation in school and civic projects. He was ordained a deacon at the age of fifteen—the youngest deacon in the Spring River District. So far he has preached five sermons. In youth work he is an active Leaguer and served as president in 1950-51.

Tom is now attending Graceland College as a pre-law student. He is the third of the Cochran boys to attend, and both of his parents are Graceland alumni.

He has truly given of his talents in endeavoring to serve in all areas of his participation. His pleasing personality has earned him a place in the hearts of his many friends, and his dependability and willingness to serve have given him a reputation acceptable of responsibility and admiration. Requests Prayers for Son

I should like Herald readers to pray for our son, Clyde, who is to be sent to Korea in October for seventeen months. He is quite discouraged and needs to be enlightened where God's work is concerned. Although he was baptized when he was eight he has never attended church very much. Both he and his wife are fine people. He is now stationed in Maryland; his address is Lt. Clyde Wyant, Stu. Off. Det., Box 256, Aberdeen Pr. Gr., Maryland.

I shall appreciate prayers for the rest of my family too, and for our mission at Ponca City, Oklahoma. We hope that in the near future it may become a branch.

How I Became a Latter Day Saint

At the age of twelve I became very much interested in God's word. I wanted to join some church, but I found in the Bible that God set in his church apostles and prophets. In my eighteenth year my occupation was herding sheep in western Texas. One night in August many miles from anyone I lit my lantern and laid down to rest. I opened my Bible and read the nineteenth chapter of St. John which gives a description of the crucifixion of Christ. Childlike I cried myself to sleep.

While sleeping I dreamt I was looking east. I saw a valley too beautiful to describe. On my right was a mountain, and on my left was another mountain not quite so high. As I stood there gazing at nature's beauty a man suddenly appeared to my right about one step away. He did not have on hat or shoes; his hands also were bare. A robe covered his body very neatly, and the whiteness of his robe was beyond description. He raised his right hand and, with his index finger pointing ahead of me, said in a gentle voice, "Climb and do not look back."

I regarded him as my superior and proceeded to obey his command. I now saw in front of me a board about ten inches wide standing almost straight up and down. I went to it and took hold with one hand on each side and put my knees to it and started to climb, remembering not to look back. I climbed until it seemed I could not climb any farther. The end of the board leaned against a platform about three feet wide with banisters on both sides. Remembering that he said, "Do not look back," there was only one way for me to go. I started to walk and had gone only a short distance when a stone wall with a gate appeared. The gate did not hang on hinges but closed from the top. When I got closer I could see that it was closing. By the time I reached it it was so nearly closed I had to crawl through on my hands and knees. I stood up and I saw people too numerous to be numbered. They were all on the move and seemed to be happy. I saw my mother and sister who had passed on when I was a child. Then I awoke. My lantern had gone out, and I could not sleep so I got up and walked around my flock the rest of the night, wondering what all this could mean.

For the next twenty years I looked for a church with apostles and prophets in it. I asked all I met—preacher and laymen alike. And I was told we did not need them in this enlightened age. In 1908 I heard a Reorganized Latter Day Saint preacher, and I began to wonder if I had found the church I had been looking for. I heard, believed, and obeyed. All the promises have been fulfilled, and more too. It was then that I could interpret my dream of twenty years before. Today I am still climbing, still remembering not to look back.

Having lost my companion and being isolated from church privileges I would be glad to hear from any members who care to write.

The Mission at Hand

I returned from Korea not long ago to attend Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Georgia. I can't express in words the feeling within me when I put my foot on American soil for the first time since last Thanksgiving. "God has truly blessed me," I thought. Yes, God has blessed me, but what effort did I put forth to deserve such great reward? That unanswered question has wandered through my mind often since my return. Now I'm wondering if I actually completed my mission in Korea—not only to my country, but to my God as well.

Frequently my heart goes back to the small chapel just outside the City of Pusan. It was nothing elaborate, but it served its purpose. Church services were held there every Sunday for those who cared to attend, and a great share of the fighting men were on hand to worship God in their own way. From the expressions on their faces it was easy to see that they had found an outlet for releasing the strain and pressure of being away from home and living under an entirely new environmental atmosphere.

Occasionally a missionary from the Methodist Mission in Pusan would talk to us in regards to Christianity and its growth among the people of Korea. Through his testimonials, I learned what sacrifice for the building of Zion really meant. Here was a man who had devoted his life to a mission in a country that has suffered the ravages of war and chaos for many years. He is not alone in his convictions that Christianity has a definite position in this land of turmoil, for there are many others like him who are spreading the gospel throughout Korea. From my own experiences, I know the people in all their confusion are ready to accept the word of God.

Rumors have it that the Koreans are offspring from tribes that traveled with Ghengis Khan in the days of old, and to this day they continue to live in a barbaric manner. I accepted this at first because of my ignorance about their customs and doctrines. It wasn't long though before I found out how wrong I really was. I made friends among the Koreans, and they were all eager to learn something about this "new" thing called Christianity. I wonder how many Americans are as eager to learn?

We often criticize others when things don't go our way, but what would happen if the tables were turned, and we were to take their place? Could we then fulfill our duties in everyday life and still sacrifice for the cause of Christ? Could we, as so many Koreans of today are doing, accept the word of God during a time of struggle for survival?

There is unfinished business to be completed, and the doors to the kingdom of heaven have been left unlocked—but not opened.

Have we, as members of the Reorganized Church, united in our common goals, put forth as much effort as we should, in order to spread our love throughout the world? Have we attempted to meet the major challenge of today.

Our mission is at hand—are we willing to accept it?

 YOUTH

There is always something lovely and wonderful about all young things: children, kittens, puppies, colts, calves, and even the baby pigs. There is something about them that makes you want to touch them, gently and kindly, to show your affection. There is nothing softer, more like a fine oriental rug, than the hair of a young colt; nothing fluffier than his new tail with its original marcel wave in it; nothing sweeter than his fear turning to tolerance and confidence as you hold your arms around him, petting and caressing him. A duckling is an animated cartoon, full of incessant unconscious humor. A baby chick is a valentine, a calf has all the serenity of green pastures and sunny skies in his disposition. Does a little pig remind you of anything so much as an old-fashioned pound roll of new-made butter? . . . And a human baby—how should it be described? A really nice baby is nothing less than a love-letter from God.

 JUST LOOKING

You can find whatever you look for in the world, for life is a cafeteria that offers almost everything. You can find beauty if you look for it, and you can find ugliness, too, if you look for that. It is wise to remember that everything is there, but you will be happier if you concentrate your attention upon what you like best.

This will amaze you: there are people who like to be unhappy. They prefer disappointment to pleasure because it is a pattern of experience they have come to expect, and they usually get it. They would rather learn bad news than good, and are pleased when people show their faults and weaknesses. On the other hand, there are men and women who expect the best of us, and for them we gladly give our best.

 THE FATHER

You face a difficult period of your life, and suddenly you are afraid. The security you thought you had vanishes, and the sense of warm protection is turned to ice. You feel alone in a cold world, a cold universe. You remember your childhood prayers, and in a little while the Heavenly Father doesn't seem so far away. Then you have a thought; you put your hand against a place that had looked like an impregnable wall, and miraculously a door opens. You give just a little push, and you find it is there. You ask for things you need, and somehow they come. You knock, and wisdom is opened to you. You seek the lost way, and in some manner it is found again. And soon, in ways you cannot understand, you are led into green pastures, and you walk beside the still waters of the soul. You have not seen the Father, but you can see things move at the touch of his invisible hand. A mantle of love surrounds you that can be only his. Out of the deepest regions of your heart a fountain of appreciation springs up, and you cry out with a gratitude that is akin to pain, "Oh, Father! My Father, I thank thee!"

We'd Like You to Know . . .

James C. Daugherty

JIMMY DAUGHERTY achieved his boyhood ambition when he was hired to pitch for the Joplin, Missouri, baseball league. He had quit high school in his second year to work in a tire shop and later in a shoe repair shop. Then he continued his courses in night school until he finished the twelfth grade. He planned to play ball in the summer and work in a liquor store in the winter, but these plans were cut short by an accident which nearly cost him his life. He took a job with a construction crew, thinking to harden his muscles before spring training commenced. On December 26, 1932, a bank of earth caved in on him, and his life hung in the balance for nearly a week. He had fractures of the pelvis, ribs, and nose, besides internal injuries.

One day Jimmy heard the physician say there was no chance because the internal bleeding could not be stopped. Elder Sidney Gray was standing in the doorway. Jimmy had been in his church school class a few times, so he asked him to pray for him. As soon as Elder Gray administered, the hemorrhaging stopped. Six months later he began to walk. Sister Gray came to the hospital every day and read church literature to him.

These were depression days, and Jimmy started a grocery store, but he sold too much on credit. He sent out the unpaid bills at Christmas time marked "paid in full," and found another job. After working as a salesman for a while, he became department head for Newman's Merchantile Company. In 1937 he accepted a job with the Prudential Life Insurance Company and in five years became assistant superintendent for the Joplin district.

He was baptized in 1934 and the next year was married to Marguerite Sheppard, the daughter of a missionary. In 1935 he was ordained a deacon, and in 1940 an elder. His first appointment as missionary was in 1945 to Central Missouri Stake. The next year he was sent to Wisconsin, where he also served as district president. He was ordained a Seventy in 1947, and Minnesota was added to his assignment at the 1948 Conference, when he was ordained a President of Seventy. His 1952 Conference appointment was to Kansas and Nebraska. The Daughertys live in Independence and have two sons, Harlin, 14, and Tommy, one; and a daughter, Margaret Ann, 10.

Listed as his special interest is "baptizing good people into the church." His zeal in serving people is attested by the civic and church responsibilities he carried in his earlier life. He managed a successful election campaign for Mayor John M. Semple of Joplin, and served on his civic council. He also served as member of the park board and was chairman of the Joplin Layman's Brotherhood. During the war he served as chairman of the Salvage Committee, and his method of handling this project was adopted by the county and throughout the state. He was chairman of the county Juvenile Delinquency Committee and at one time had twenty-one boys paroled to him. For some years he was pastor of the Medoc, Missouri, Branch, assistant pastor of the Joplin Branch, and a member of the Spring River Reunion Committee.

The Two Communion

"And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat."

—Exodus 25: 22

A FEW MILES NORTH of the city we turned off the highway and followed a country road—an old road with trees arching out over it and making spots of shade here and there; an old road fringed with bushes, and grass growing right up to the edge. Such a road was a fitting approach to a poet's home.

The great highways have their use, and they are inevitable in the relentless march of progress, tramping its heavy feet upon our hearts. But we pay a high price for them. They cut deep gashes through our pretty hills. They fill our little valleys with ugly geometrical causeways of rock and clay. They make deep wounds in the bosom of Mother Earth. In them we have a man-made fulfillment of the prophecy: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain."

THROUGH THE GLORY OF AUTUMN—the bonfire colors of the leaves—we followed the old road to the poet's home, a small old-fashioned "castle of content" on a faraway hill. There were persimmons in the fence rows, and cedars guarding the lane to the house; a pond, and waterfowl making themselves happy in it.

The poet's house is an old one. Its builder is gone and forgotten, but he must have loved it as he built it, for it is lovely still; and he may be happy now, wherever he is, if he knows how it is being used. Inside, it is lined with books and souvenirs, for a poet is a collector of many things. There are gifts from cowboys, Indians, scholars, and friends, wherever he has gone to see and to live again the great things he was to make into verse. For above all else, before a poet can really write he must live.

IN THE POET'S HOME, he was not alone. His wife, as gracious and charming as himself, was there, with children and grandchildren filling the generous spaces in his house and in his heart.

"You need not be surprised," the friends who brought us said, "if you find them a little different from other people. They are sort of mystical in a pleasant way. It's almost as if they lived with God as a neighbor just the other side of the hill."

Why had they moved so far out in the country? "I dreamed of it many years ago," the lady said. "We looked for it a long time, and sometimes I was afraid we would never find it. But always the dream remained and we kept looking. And then one day we saw it, and I said, 'This is it.' I almost felt that some kindly Power had been saving it for us." You could tell that they have been happy there.

WE TALKED of many things . . . you cannot keep God out of the conversation of people who believe in him. Those who have leaned upon him all of their lives must take account of him or falsify the record. It is as natural to speak of him as it is to breathe. With the beauty of his world showing everywhere out of doors, and the beauty of his love in the home, it would have been very difficult to hide him, if they had wanted to, which they did not. I said we talked of many things, and we did, but we had the feeling that a great love was at the center of all of them.

While we were talking there, other friends came in from the woods, where they had gone horseback riding. There were five young men from Germany—students at the university, here to study the country and its ways. Later, someone picked up a musical instrument and began to play and sing. The others joined in, and soon the whole group was united singing German songs, American songs, and Spanish songs—with national boundaries for the time erased and nothing but good will to share. The afternoon sped by, and too soon it was time to say good-by and go home. But we took memories with us.

THAT SUNDAY MORNING, in our little church gathering, we had partaken of the sacrament—a Communion of the divine love. That afternoon, in a quite different setting, we had partaken of a sacrament of another kind—a communion of friendship and good will. Back in the shelter of our own home, reflecting on the rich and happy experiences of the day, it seemed that the two communions had something fine in common. It is easy to believe that they go together.

In our earlier years, before we have learned to look into the depths of things, content with surfaces and satisfied with appearances, we see, wherever we go, the works of man. But as we grow older we learn to brush aside superficialities. And then, everywhere we go we see the works of God. It is not that the world changes, or that life changes. We change.

Perhaps the greatest lesson we can learn is to push aside the things that keep us from seeing God. We can find him, if we look for him, in both communions. L. J. L.

Young (63), Hattie Constance (62) Arthur Wood (62), Maggie Head (62), Maggie Powell (60), Anna Dyer (60), Mayme Powell (60), Minnie McCord (60), Dan Dice (59), Elmer Armstrong (59), Mary Armstrong (59), Bert Ivey (59), Cora Lewis (57), Hale McCord (56), Margaret Dice (56).

Brother E. J. Armstrong of Stewartsville presented an excellent resumé of the history of the congregation, which is one of the oldest in the central area. The branch was organized in February 1883, but had earlier organized identity stretching back into the early seventies. The history presented by Brother Armstrong is being prepared for submission to the Church Historian and will prove particularly valuable since it has so many references to the early leaders of the church. The General Conference was held at Stewartsville beginning April 6, 1884.

Plain and Precious Things

A sermon delivered at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, August 31, 1952

By Chris B. Hartshorn

And it came to pass that I beheld the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the book of the Lamb of God, which had proceeded forth from the mouth of the Jew, that it came forth from the Gentiles, unto the remnant of the seed of my brethren; And after it had come forth unto them, I beheld other books which came forth by the power of the Lamb, from the Gentiles unto them, unto the convincing of the Gentiles, and the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the Jews, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth, that the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb are true.

And the angel spake unto me, saying, These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which they have taken away from them.—I Nephi 3: 190-192.

It was 125 years ago, on the twenty-second of September that the golden plates were delivered to Joseph Smith, Jr., from which this record was given to the world. The value of the plates is in the record presented. Many of us who have readily accepted the value need to think and read more, and become familiar with the contents that we may get the full benefit of God's purpose in bringing forth these plates in 1827.

In the Scripture reading, three important divisions were indicated in the purpose stated: first, the convincing of the Jew, the Gentiles, and the Indians that the Bible is true; second, to make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from the Bible; and third, to make known that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father and the Savior of the world. All men must come unto him, or they cannot be saved.

Now we need to think of the condition of our world, even of our religious world of today, to see how important a part this Book is to play. It's too easy to assume that people accept the Bible and that there is not much need for this additional witness, but as a matter of fact there is great need for it today. And it is important that we who possess this precious message be diligent in presenting it to those who are striving for faith in the Word of God.

Liked the Message

In 1949 a friend of mine whom I had known from boyhood came through Independence on business and stopped at my place to visit with me a little bit. He said, "Chris, I'd like to hear you preach if you'd leave out the Book of Mormon."

I must give you a little background of this incident. This man had married one of the finest Reorganized Latter Day Saint girls I have ever known, but always he has resisted her religion. He would never go to church to hear a sermon. I was called out of the state about three months before this visit to preach a funeral sermon in the family. He went to the funeral home and heard this sermon. He took special occasion—I think he repeated either two or three times—how much he appreciated that message. He thought it was so fitting and beautiful for the occasion.

And as he came through Independence, I was surprised for him to bring this up again, for I knew of his long inherited prejudice against the church. But he said to me on this occasion that he had enjoyed the sermon very much and would like to hear me preach more if he just felt sure that I wouldn't be bringing in the Book of Mormon.

I said, "Well, you wouldn't likely know, unless I labeled it if it were from the Book of Mormon or not, because it and the Bible are so nearly alike. Their purposes and their messages are the gospel of Jesus Christ."

"The Bible Is Sufficient"

He said, "That's just all the more reason why I think the Book of Mormon should be left out. The Bible should be sufficient."

I asked for time to explain our position and why we felt we could not leave the Book of Mormon out of our message.

In every Book of Mormon there is published a solemn testimony of eleven men who made the declaration that they handled the golden plates from which this record was made and furthermore that they saw the engravings on these plates which were translated into the record of the Book of Mormon. Some of these men left the church, but not one of them denied his testimony.

I said, "Let's just assume that these men really did see this; that there was a set of plates with this record upon it. If so, then God must have moved to prepare, to preserve, and to translate this record for some good purpose. Now since we believe this, could you feel that we would be true ministers of Jesus Christ if we would neglect such an important record?"

I want to challenge you folks with that same thought this morning. If God was so concerned that these plain and precious truths be preserved and be given to the world in these the last days, we ought not to neglect the presentation of the message of this Book. Yet I think there are some even among us who, because they have failed to read and to study and to understand the plain and precious things of the Book of Mormon, carry with them something of the same attitude of this my friend of whom I have spoken.

I may have to do some reading this morning, more than I usually do, to bring out some things in the Book of Mormon which are important for our consideration. I shall condense the readings for lack of time. First, here is Nephi's prophecy and warning.

Wo be unto him that shall say, We have received the word of God, and we need no more the word of God, for we have enough. For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little: And blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom. For unto him that receiveth I will give more, and from them that shall say, We have enough, shall be taken away even that which they have. . . . And because my words shall hiss forth, many of the Gentiles shall say, A bible, A bible, we have a bible, and there can not be any more bible.—II Nephi 12: 35-38, 45.

These are prophetic words in the light of the experience of your lifetime and mine.

Man's Nature and Relation to God

I should like to present three basic elements of the gospel message from the Book of Mormon to show how plain and precious this record is to us and all who will receive it. The first of these is man's nature and relation to God. From the standpoint of the Book of Mormon there is no question of man's dual nature—body and spirit. That perhaps is not so significant until we realize how many people there are who feel that man is entirely physical—that is the body and the mind. The mind, of course, is physical, the result of physical activity, and therefore when this body has finished its work and is placed in the grave physical man shall cease as an entity. Here is a short reading that shows how plain the Book of Mormon is on man's nature.

Oh how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; Yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call death of the body, and also the death of the spirit.

And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death, of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead, which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell.—II Nephi 6: 24-25.

Dual Nature

This is very plain, isn't it? From the viewpoint of the Book of Mormon, we see that man is immortal, having not only a physical body but a spiritual nature which will survive independent of the body in the way and purposes of God. Those who accept this philosophy will have a different attitude toward human dignity than those who say that all there is to man is physical. For the latter say, "We are of this earth only. The former will hold to the philosophy that man's body is only the tabernacle for the spirit which survives the grave.

There is some very beautiful and plain language concerning this in the writings of Alma.

Now we see by this, that our first parents were cut off, both temporally and spiritually, from the presence of the Lord; and thus we see they become subjects to follow after their own will.

Now behold, it was not expedient that man should be reclaimed from this temporal death, for that would destroy the great plan of happiness;

Therefore, as the soul could never die, and the fall had brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal; that is, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; therefore it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death.—Alma 19: 88-90.

May I refresh your memory from the writings in the Scripture? In Genesis 1: 27, 28, A.V., we read that God created man in his own image and commanded him to be fruitful and replenish the earth. Then in the second chapter, the fifth and seventh verses, we are told that God made the heaven and the earth, and every plant of the field before it was on the earth, and every herb before it grew and "there was not a man to till the ground, and the Lord God formed man from the dust."

The usual explanation of this conflict—that God created man and yet there was not a man on the earth—is that the book of Genesis particularly is a fusion of three different manuscripts, designated by the letters J, E, and P, and there are parts of two stories here.

I think a better explanation is given in the Inspired Version which says that the Lord formed them spiritually before he formed them temporally. In other words, the first chapter of Genesis refers to spiritual creation and the second refers to the physical or temporal creation.

The Plan of Redemption

Connected with this idea of the dual nature of man is his relationship to God. This involves the idea of the fall of man, or what is sometimes referred to as original sin, which dates from the Garden of Eden. It is not understood by many, even of the religionists, and is denied by a great many. Some are not interested in the doctrine of original sin. Yet if there were no fall of man, there would be no need for a Redeemer; some even go so far as to deny the need for the Redeemer, they deny the Son of God.

The Book of Mormon points out that there was not only a fall but, added to this Garden of Eden episode in the life of humanity, there was war in heaven and Satan or Lucifer fell from his high estate among the angelic hosts. Let us refer briefly to what we find in the Bible concerning this. Isaiah 14: 12 says:

"How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer." What is the meaning of this? Certainly we don't think that Satan now has any part in heaven. He would be out of character up there. How did he ever get there? The Scriptures tell us he was an angel of light one time, but he fell and became the Devil. The Doctrine and Covenants says that he took with him at that time one third of the hosts of heaven.

In Luke 10: 18 Jesus says, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." Surely there is need for something a little more plain than that if we are to get the full picture of man's relationship with God and of the nature which he possesses.

We like to read how plain the Book of Mormon makes some of these things:

"All mankind were in a lost and in a fallen state, and ever would be, save they should rely on this Redeemer."—I Nephi 3: 6.

"Spirits . . . become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the Devil."—II Nephi 6: 20.

"As death hath passed upon all men . . . there must needs be a power of resurrection."—II Nephi 6: 11.

A Leader Promised

In the August, 1952, number of Reader's Digest there is an article, "What is a Jew?" in which a rabbi who is a chaplain in our armed forces makes this statement, "Judaism rejects the principle of the vicarious atonement, the idea of salvation through Christ. No one can serve as an intermediary between man and God." Christianity claims to have a scriptural heritage from Judaism, but have you ever tried to find the name Jesus, or Christ, in the Old Testament?

We think we find references to him in Isaiah the fifty-third and the fifty-fifth chapters, where considerable is said about the suffering servant of humanity. Here are some of the phrases: "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows." "I have given him as a leader and a commander to the people," and there is Job's poetical utterance of affirmation, "I know that my Redeemer liveth and on the earth again shall stand."

These are caught up in the oratorio The Messiah which is the Christmas gift of the church to the nation. We have been inclined to see in all these references standing out, Jesus Christ the Redeemer of the world. The Jew doesn't see that. He denies entirely that it refers to the Son of Mary.

Now let's see how plain and precious the truths of the Book of Mormon are on this point. I'm quoting from Jacob, the son of Lehi, who wrote about 500 B. C.

And now I, Jacob, speak unto you again, my beloved brethren, concerning this righteous branch of which I have spoken.

For behold, the promises which we have obtained, are promises unto us according to the flesh; Wherefore, as it has been shown unto me that many of our children shall perish in the flesh, because of unbelief, nevertheless God will be merciful unto many; And our children shall be restored, that they may come to that which will give them the true knowledge of their Redeemer.

[Remember that this was written about 500 B. C. How is it that Jacob talks so plainly about our Redeemer?]

Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ (for in the last night the angel spake unto me that this should be his name) should come among the Jews, among those who are the more wicked part of the world;

And they shall crucify him: For thus it behooveth our God.—II Nephi 7: 1-6.

Faith Looks Both Ways

I can recall that as a boy when I read the Book of Mormon it was difficult for me to feel that God would have mentioned Christ so long before Christ came, even to the organizing of his church and baptizing people in the name of Jesus Christ. It was a stumbling block to me, because I didn't understand it, and yet now it seems so plain that he revealed it through an angel, and this man spoke just as he was told it should happen; our salvation in the name of Jesus Christ through baptism and obedience is no more difficult today as we look in faith back on Christ's coming, than it would be to look ahead on the event. It's the principle of faith and obedience which guarantees to man his salvation.

Then Mosiah makes this statement in the third chapter, and I'm just briefing paragraph six to eleven:

"We are willing to enter into a covenant . . . be obedient to his commandments . . . be called the children of Christ. . . . This day he hath spiritually begotten you; for . . . there is no other name given, whereby salvation cometh."

This was at least two hundred years before Christ.

The Right to Choose

Another fundamental point of the Book of Mormon teaching is the principle of agency. I hope I can make you feel that this is significant in this day and age. Either man is free to choose his course of action or he is an automaton. If the latter, then he is obedient to the mechanistic and psychical forces of fate.

We find quite a few fatalists among us—some in the church even—and there is no need for it. Successful men in economic and social life are inclined to exude confidence in their own ability to direct their lives. They need no help from anyone, not even God, but when adversity strikes or some disaster comes into their lives these same people forget all about their self-sufficiency. Some of them take their own lives because there is nothing for them to lean on except their own ability to look after themselves, and that power has slipped away from them. Of course, there are some upon whom success has never smiled. They, too, get bitter in adversity. They see nothing of goodness in this life except what, through hook and claw, they can get for themselves. They are miserable as well as bitter a great deal of the time. Both of these need to be uplifted.

Fatalism Is False

A beautiful principle has been given to us. God is not responsible for all of our adversities or for all of our successes. Under certain conditions he will guide and help us. But certain abilities and certain rights were made subject to our will and discretion from the morn of creation. When the Book of Mormon was published in 1830 a very popular doctrine was that of predestination. A great many pious people would say, "I'll be over to help you, God willing," or the disaster which threatened them was averted because "it wasn't my time to die." I think both of those attitudes or positions are fallacious. I don't believe there is any one particular time for any of us to die. I do not believe that our going to help a neighbor put up hay on a certain day depends upon God's willingness. It depends upon our willingness, and perhaps upon the weather. Let's see how plain the Book of Mormon is on this. I refer to Nephi's teachings:

And now, my son, I speak unto you these things, for your profit and learning: For there is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them is; both things to act, and things to be acted upon; . . .

After he had created our first parents, and the beasts . . . and the fowls . . . it must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter; wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself.

Wherefore, man could not act for himself, save . . . he was enticed by one or the other. . . .

And because they were redeemed from the fall, they have become free for ever, knowing good from evil; to act for themselves, and not to be acted upon, save it be by the punishment of the Lord, at the great and last day. . . .

Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; . . . they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great mediation of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity . . . of the Devil.—II Nephi 1: 94-100, 119, 120.

Paul's philosophy on the matter is stated about like this: "We are his servants whom we list to obey." We have the choosing. If we yield ourselves to the flesh, we become the servants of the Devil, but if we yield ourselves to the spiritual things, we become men and women of God.

Gifts of the Spirit

A third basic element of the gospel which I think is made very plain and precious in the Book of Mormon is that of spiritual gifts.

The task which confronts the ministry today is not to convince men that the New Testament church possessed the gifts for the perfecting of the Saints and the work of the ministry and the edifying of the body of Christ until "We all come to a unity of the faith, to a knowledge of the Son of God," as we read in Paul's writing to the Ephesian saints. Our task is to see our own need and to covet earnestly the best gifts. The reason I feel that this should be brought home to us is because of certain prophetic statements made by the prophet Mormon.

But wickedness did prevail upon the face of the whole land, insomuch that the Lord did take away his beloved disciples, and the work of miracles and of healing did cease, because of the iniquity of the people.

And there were no gifts from the Lord, and the Holy Ghost did not come upon any, because of their wickedness and unbelief.—Mormon 1: 14, 15.

When the Jews Regain Status

Nephi, the son of Helaman, makes a remarkable statement and prophecy:

Wo unto him that shall deny the Christ and his works; . . . deny the revelations of the Lord, and that shall say, The Lord no longer worketh by revelation, or by prophecy, or by gifts, or by tongues, or by healings, or by the power of the Holy Ghost; . . .

Yea, and ye need not any longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, . . . for behold the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them, and he will do unto them according to that which he hath sworn.—III Nephi 13: 58, 59, 61.

There is an important time element here, and we are beginning to see the fulfillment of this prophecy, when no longer will we "hiss and make game of the Jews." They are coming into a dignity of their own, as they set up their own homeland. But remember, this prophecy depends upon a time when we shall deny the works of Christ, revelations, and prophecy.

The Story of Alma Part I

By Madelyn Galbraith

MADELYN GALBRAITH

THE GAUNT OLD MAN stood among his captors, his hands securely fastened behind him. His torn garments, the wild disarray of his hair, the streaks of blood and dirt on his face spoke eloquently of the treatment he had received at the hands of his enemies.

They had dragged him before the throne, the magnificence of which he had heard so much.

As the setting of a precious gem in a beautiful ring was this throne in the midst of the palace.

The wood, where there was wood, was skillfully carved, inlaid with gold and silver, the slender threads like finest cloisonné. Below and around the throne were seats, also ornamented, but not so lavishly. Placed above and back of these facing the throne were seats for the priests, called "the priests' gallery." In front of each seat was a cushioned breastwork, on which the lazy occupants leaned when instructing the people.

These were now occupied. Some of the priests lay back and yawned in boredom. Others, leaning forward, either laughed in scorn or frowned in anger.

The eyes of the captive met theirs boldly, unafraid, accusingly.

One of the group, evidently the youngest, seemed out of place. He sat apart and refrained from commenting on the prisoner. There was a look of pity in his dark eyes as they rested on the old man, and as their glances met, the prisoner turned the second time to look into the face of the young priest.

"You had better take care, Alma," cried one of his fellows, noting this. "He may place a curse upon you!"

"Perhaps a merited one," the young man returned without changing his position.

"Oh, ho! my fine fellow! What have you on your conscience? You, who have always been considered the . . ."

MOVEMENT among the people in the hall below halted further conversation, and all arose as the king entered.

He walked proudly, surrounded by his retinue, and with much ceremony ascended the steps to the throne.

Turning to the prisoner, he found the old man boldly facing him, his eyes burning with a light that seemed to sear the arrogance of the king. Before the astonished ruler had time to speak, the prophet burst forth.

"Woe to thee, O king! for the King of Kings, even God himself, hath said unto me: 'Lift up thy voice in warning unto this people! Say unto them that unless they forsake their evil ways and come unto me, they shall perish. Because of their iniquities, they shall be afflicted by their enemies and shall be brought into bondage, and there shall be none to deliver. They shall suffer famine and pestilence, for they have forsaken me and have wandered in forbidden paths. And as for thee, oh king, who hath led this people to do wickedly all the days of thy life—yea, ye who hath set an example of wickedness before thy people—thy life shall be as a garment in a hot furnace, for thou shalt know that I, the Lord, am God!"

"And ye priests! Ye who pervert the way of the Lord to thine own undoing! Ye who oppress the people and render false judgment for money! Have ye applied yourselves to wisdom and thy hearts to understanding? What teach ye the people?"

"We teach the Law of Moses as given our fathers in the wilderness!" shouted one.

"If ye teach the Law of Moses, why do ye not keep it? 'Thou shalt not steal,' saith the Law, and every day dost thou rob the people. 'Thou shalt not commit adultery!' How many of ye priests, and thou, O king, art innocent of breaking this law?"

The king sprang from the throne. "Away with this fellow!" he cried. "He is mad! Slay him!"

THERE WAS AN ANGRY MOVEMENT among the priests and people as though they would take him, but the prophet drew back as he cried, "Touch me not or God will smite thee! I have not finished the message the Lord appointed me to deliver." His bright eyes swept over them scornfully as they surged back to their seats. The young man called Alma had not moved from his place, but sat leaning forward breathlessly.

"I am Abinadi," the prophet continued, his eyes upon Alma, "sent by God to warn thee. Ye have heaped to yourselves priests—men not called of God. Ye have become a nation of winebibbers, and thou, O king, hath set the example. Ye are an adulterous people, and unless ye shall repent, God will send thine enemies upon thee, and thou shalt be driven and destroyed."

As Abinadi paused, the king leaped to his feet.

"Who is this God who shall so afflict my people? And who are you to judge us?" he demanded. "You are trying to cause dissension among us! Perhaps you think to exert authority over us!"

"I seek no power but that given me by God, and by that power, I tell thee, O king, thy days are numbered. Not long hence thou shalt suffer death by fire, destroyed by thine own people."

There was an uproar among those crowded in the court, as well as among the priests.

"Away with him! Let him die as he has prophesied for you, O king!"

But Noah was afraid. There was something fearfully convincing in Abinadi's words. No doubt he would have released him then had not the priests began pouring down from their lofty seats.

"He has reviled the Law of Moses and has threatened our king and our people!" they cried. "Our people are guiltless, and our king is a righteous man!"

"Take him," Noah shouted, "and punish him as you see fit!"

YOUNG ALMA sprang to his feet. "I beg of you, King Noah, to listen to one of your humble servants! Don't kill this man, for destruction awaits us if you do! We know that he has spoken the truth about our iniquities, for we are a wicked people. Let us listen to him and humble ourselves that God may turn away his anger from us and that we may be preserved."

"Have you gone mad—or turned traitor?" demanded the king with blazing eyes. "Seize him also, and let him die with the man he would defend!"

But attention was again drawn to Abinadi, who now raised his hand for silence as he addressed Alma.

"Blessed art thou, Alma, for my words have found root in thy heart. Fear not for my life, for this purpose did I come among you. Know this, my son, for every worthy cause blood must be shed. It mattereth not to me that mine must be spilled, for there is a place prepared for me in the mansions of my Father." He would have said more, but the mob bore him away.

One of his fellow priests now turned to Alma.

"You young, impetuous fool! To risk your life for a fanatic! Momentarily the king has forgotten you, but he will remember later on. Get out of his way at once! Hide! I will seek you later! Go now—the rear entrance!"

Alma did as he was bidden and none too quickly, for as he hastened down the stairs, he heard the cry, "Where is Alma? He, too, has been condemned! Let him die with the prophet!" A faint smile spread over Abinadi's face.

"He is safe," he murmured. "The seed has been sown; he will carry on where I must drop the task."

"Come, come, stop your muttering! It won't help you now. The king has decreed your death!" one of the guards said.

"I knew when I came with my message that death awaited me," Abinadi told him.

"Then why didn't you keep it to yourself?"

"My son, when God calls, man must answer. Where he sends, man must go."

Another guard rushed up.

"Take the prophet back to prison, Joel. The king is delaying his death. I think the man's words have troubled his heart, and he fears to proceed with the sentence now."

Joel obeyed, and Abinadi was again imprisoned.

THREE DAYS LATER he was again brought before his accusers. King Noah occupied his throne, the priests were in their places, and all was as it had been before except for the absence of the dark-eyed Alma.

The king called Abinadi to attention.

"Abinadi, we have found you worthy of death. You have said that God would come to earth and take upon himself flesh and blood. Unless you recall your words, you must surely die!"

"Deny the message I came to bear?" Abinadi cried. "That I cannot do, for I would be lying to God and to thee. All the prophecies I have spoken shall surely come to pass. And know this, O king, thou shalt die as I have spoken. And if thou slayest me, thou shalt shed innocent blood, which shall cry against thee at the last day." Abinadi's face shone and his words rang with such sincerity that again Noah was about to release him, when there was a cry from the priests' gallery. "He has reviled our king! Let him die!"

"Have your will, O priests!" and King Noah waved them away.

Immediately the mob surrounded the prophet, and he was hurried to the place of execution. As the flames spread around him, Abinadi spoke, "It shall come to pass that ye shall be afflicted with all manner of diseases because of your iniquities. Yea, and ye shall be smitten on every hand, and shall be driven and scattered to and fro. And in that day ye shall be hunted, and ye shall be taken by the hand of your enemies, and ye shall suffer as I suffer the pains of death by fire. Thus God executeth vengeance upon those who destroy his people. O God, receive my soul!"

For a few moments the mob stood silently by the pyre, then began to move away slowly.

"I don't like the look of this," said the priest who had sent Alma into hiding.

"Nor do I," his companion agreed. "Did you see that ethereal radiance that surrounded him?"

"Yes, and a Personage stood beside him in the flames."

AFTER ALMA left the palace he ran blindly on, seeking the more deserted parts of the city. Darkness found him still dodging his pursuers, and at last he took refuge in a sheepfold.

The next day, by accident—or perhaps by Providence—his one friend among his priestly associates overtook him.

"I have brought you a disguise," he said, "that you may more easily elude the searchers of the king. But you must go far, Alma, for Amulon has excited the king's anger against you, and he is determined to destroy you. If you had only held your tongue!"

"No time to think of that now," said Alma. "Here, does this cover my black hair?"

"Yes, you are at least eighty years old. Here is your staff. Now listen to me . . . three days travel from here there is a body of water. Beside this there is a fountain, and in the mountainside behind the gushing water you will find the entrance to a cave. Make your way quickly to this place. There are fish in the lake, and birds and animals abound in the forest. I can bring few provisions without exciting suspicion, so you will have to provide yourself with food. You will be safe there until I can come to you. Now I must go, for I'm afraid that I am being watched. Amulon suspects me of knowing your hiding place. I will come to your retreat as soon as it is safe for me."

So Helam stood and watched what appeared to be an old man disappear into the forest, then took his way back into the city.

WEARILY ALMA PAUSED. Somewhere near must be the body of water to which Helam had directed him. Behind the fountain spray he would find the cave where he might hide until he decided what he must do.

He was tired and hungry and heart-sick. He picked up his staff, then stopped to listen. Yes, he could hear running water, he must be near his destination. Pushing through the thicket of thorn trees he came suddenly to the place he sought.

Spread before him was a lake, calm and peaceful at this sunset hour. Water birds settled down on its surface, and as Alma watched, two deer came out of the woods, and, after sniffing the air for a moment, lowered their heads to drink.

Alma forgot his weariness in watching bird and beast as they sought shelter for the night, and was thus reminded of his own need.

Continuing his way around the lake, he found the fountain, its silver spray now turned to gold in the fading light. Avoiding as much as possible the flying mist, he stepped behind it and stood in the entrance to a large cave.

Fearful lest some wild animal had also chosen this shelter, Alma took from his robes his flints and in a few moments had made a torch with which to explore his refuge. Finding everything safe, and himself alone, he came back to the entrance, placed his torch in a crevice and sat down.

FOR THE FIRST TIME he had leisure to go back over the events of the past few days.

Helam had asked why he had not kept silent at the trial of Abinadi, but he could find no reason for his interference. He had sat in council before, heard men and women condemned to death and had held his peace. It was no unusual thing for Noah to call his priests together to listen to farcical trials, for when anyone stood in the way of the king's pleasure, death was certain and swift.

With shame he recalled his stolen visits to Esther, the king's favorite wife. Once, Naida, Noah's daughter, had come upon them in the garden. Esther had fled from his arms before they were seen, and Naida had stopped and questioned him regarding spiritual matters that had troubled her.

His mind went back over other events—some he would gladly have forgotten. There were times when he should have raised his voice against evil and injustice, and he had kept silent. This was the first time he had ever opposed the king; he had always been nearer to him than his own son. Small wonder that Noah had been confounded by his opposition. He arose and paced the floor of the cave restlessly.

He felt that Abinadi had some personal message for him. He could not forget the look in the old man's eyes as they had searched the priests' gallery.

He had spoken the truth concerning the sins of the people, and the priests were worse than they. Alma knew the secret lives of his fellows and of the king—knew how corrupt they were, and again he blushed as he thought of his own past.

HE FELL TO HIS KNEES and gave himself over to an agony of remorse. And as he knelt there, he sent up a wordless prayer for forgiveness. A calm stole over him. Something deeper than silence entered the cave, and a low voice called, "Alma." He listened, half afraid. The call was repeated, and he slowly raised his head. There was a soft glow in the dim cavern that gradually brightened until it filled the cave and became more brilliant than the sun. In the midst of this light stood a Personage, who again spoke his name.

"Here I am, Lord," Alma answered.

"Call me not Lord, for I am thy fellow servant, sent by the Father with this message. He has heard thy cries and prayers, and has seen the agony of thy soul, because of thy sins. There is a great work to be done among thy people, and thou hast been chosen to do it. Recall all the words of Abinadi for he spoke the truth, and all of his prophecies shall surely come to pass. Thou must assume Abinadi's task."

"But I am unlearned in the mysteries of which Abinadi spoke!" Alma cried.

"Thou hast the Book of the Prophets; they tell of these things. Apply thyself to learning, and pray always for understanding. Seek God for guidance and comfort. There are many trials and sorrows ahead, but go forward fearlessly, calling on the name of the Lord; he will not leave thee alone. Blessed art thou, Alma, for by thy faith thou shalt see great manifestations of the power and wisdom of God during a long life of usefulness." The Personage disappeared, the light gradually faded, and Alma was left alone to rejoice in his marvelous experience.

ALMA SAT IN THE DOORWAY of the cave roasting a bird he had snared. His fare had been very meager, mostly wild fruits and berries, but he had given little thought to food, as most of his time had been spent in meditation and prayer.

Very soon now, he decided, he must go back to his own people and teach them what had been taught him by the angelic messenger, who had twice returned to instruct him and to strengthen his faith.

As he thought of these things, a shadow fell across the entrance. He started up quickly to find Helam smiling down on him. After the first greetings were over, Helam sat down and shared the food Alma had prepared.

"I am returning with you," Alma told him.

"But you must not!" his friend protested.

"Listen, Helam . . ." and Alma told him all that had transpired since he had been in hiding. Helam was silent for a moment.

"Are you sure," he asked at length, "that your loneliness has not created this personage?"

"No, Helam, I am sure. He instructed me . . . gave me the same message that Abinadi did, only much more detailed. That is the message I must carry back to our people. Oh, if I could only make you see the beauty of it!"

"No, no, Alma," Helam said hastily, "I cannot! Have you thought of what this will mean to you? Alone, driven, hunted . . . your life sought by the one man who has power over the life and death of his subjects! Your home—a home to you no longer; your wealth gone. What will you do?"

"I don't know, except that I must take this message back to my people," Alma repeated stubbornly.

"Then you have considered these things?"

Alma looked up, a slow smile lighting his face. "Satan has tempted me many times before this, offering me my position with Noah again, provided I refused to accept this. On the other side stood the Son of God, silent, but his eyes were upon me. He has sent me, and I must go!"

"Alma," Helam choked over his words, "I don't know how great a thing this is that you have, for I have heard no voice, nor have I seen a vision. But knowing you as I do, your love for pomp and ceremony, your love for the luxuries of life, the magnificence of this mission of yours must pass human understanding that it causes you to turn your back on all these things in order to carry on. I will hear you again, but not now! I must be alone!"

Alma watched him as he circled the lake and disappeared among the trees on the opposite shore. Then he knelt and prayed that the light and understanding he had received might be given his friend.

IT WAS LATE AFTERNOON the next day before Helam returned, but by the look of peace and joy on his face, Alma knew his prayers had been answered. For a moment they were silent, clasping each other's hands.

"How great are the mercies of God!" Helam exclaimed. "To live through last night would recompense a man for going through fire! Now I understand how Abinadi so fearlessly went to his death—he was not alone! Alma, will you pray with me?"

So, kneeling side by side, each poured out the longings of his heart in prayer.

"My sons . . ." Alma had heard that voice before and answered promptly.

"There is rejoicing in heaven this day because of thee! Angels have been very near to thee, Helam, for they have known of thy battle with Satanic powers and have surrounded thee to strengthen and bless. Thou, Alma, hast been chosen the leader of my people, and Helam, thou art chosen to uphold him in this task, that he enter not into temptation. Thou hast been perplexed as to the manner of starting on this mission. First, tarry here a little longer until both of you are better prepared for the work. I have taught thee the necessity of baptism. No man can enter the kingdom without this new birth. The Son of God himself will submit to the will of the Father and receive this ordinance. Go now to the water's edge, and there it will be revealed to thee, the manner of thy baptisms."

They obeyed. Guided by the Power that had promised them instruction, both entered the water and waded out into the lake. Alma paused a moment, then prayed, "O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart."

As he ceased speaking, the Spirit rested upon him, and taking Helam's hand in his, he said, "Helam, having authority from God, I baptize thee as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve Him until thou art dead as to this mortal body; and may the Spirit of God be poured out upon thee, and may He grant to thee eternal life through the redemption of Christ, whom he hast prepared from the foundation of the world." Then he and Helam were both buried in the water, and arose, and sought the cave rejoicing.

Prayer - A Way of Life

By F. E. Thornton

The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth.—Psalm 145: 18.

A FEW DAYS AGO a young lady came into my office wearing a new ring on probably the most important finger of all. Congratulations were in order, and as she held out her hand for me to inspect the visible evidence of her betrothal, I was impressed by the outstanding beauty of the stone. As the light fell on the gem, each of its many brilliant facets cast its own peculiar reflection, according to the particular vantage point from which it was viewed. However, it was not the individual reflections which imparted unusual beauty to the stone, but rather the interplay of the various reflections as they merged into one harmonious whole.

Prayer, it seems to me, has much in common with the precious stones. For Christians it is one of the "pearls of great price"—a jewel more precious than rubies and fine gold. Of all the benefits to be derived from Christian experience, there is none which is intrinsically more valuable than prayer. Prayer is not only a mode of worship; it is also the expression of a universal need for closer association with the Supreme Being for purposes of guidance, consolation, help and forbearance. It is a priceless opportunity to strengthen the moral fabric of one's life, to acquire a renewed outlook and wider vision on life itself, to draw upon an inexhaustible source of strength when one's own energies are depleted and at a low ebb.

BUT WHILE SOME have found a positive value in prayer, it is to be regretted that for so many, even within the church, prayer is still an undiscovered "diamond in the rough." Even the most flawless gem, in its native state, may pass unnoticed by those who are unaware of its potential value or too busy to give it anything more than a passing glance. It is only when the crude gem falls into the hands of the right person that it begins to assume value. And it is the art of the master craftsman who supervises the cutting and polishing that brings out the hidden beauties which make it a "joy forever." In prayer each of us has within easy reach a diamond in the rough; we must first recognize its inherent value, then set about to develop and polish each of the myriad facets until the full potential value has been realized. Prayer is worth little, if little is put into it.

Flaws, in the diamond that is prayer, do not arise from inability to put together nice sounding phrases; the essential ingredient at all times is sincerity. When we permit our lives to become clouded by selfishness, anger, unwholesome thoughts, and other un-Christian defects, we create a yawning chasm between ourselves and God. Prayer, when it is approached without faith, is a hollow mockery. If, through long sinning and hardening of the heart toward spiritual matters, we have divorced ourselves from God, we may expect him to turn a deaf ear to our pleas; for above all true prayer is a way of life.

Prayer is a many-sided jewel, with each phase beautiful in its own right, shining with its own degree of brilliancy, yet mutually interdependent for a harmonious expression of body, mind, and spirit, which we should constantly strive to attain. But if the light be withheld, or if we should fail to develop some aspects of prayer through neglect, the entire gem will suffer by comparison.

PERHAPS IT IS NATURAL that our concept of prayer should center first around our own needs and those of our immediate family. This is typically the approach of a child—guileless, naïve, personal, and in full confidence that his every wish will be granted. But as adults mature in their understanding of God, there should be a corresponding maturity in the prayers which they offer. Christians should develop their capacity to pray for others—for the wrongdoer, for enemies, for God's servants, for the spiritual advancement of the kingdom, all with a full realization of the limitations of prayer, for prayer should be teamed with action.

Today the necessity for prayer looms larger and larger in the affairs of men and nations. The issues are clean-cut, and the lines of battle are being closely drawn. The godless nations have set out to destroy that which is fine and ennobling in religion, and to substitute in its place a degrading philosophy of values which can only have as its ultimate aim the shackling of the mind and body in a slavery that is worse than death itself. While men seek anxiously for personal and national security in the illusion of material things, one of the deepest sources of continuing power is largely neglected. Even the United Nations meeting in San Francisco was opened without prayer, in deference to the wishes of non-Christian nations. Moral issues, striking at the very core of the national conscience, have left us shocked and dismayed at the widespread indifference to state and national corruption. But the issue is not hopeless, for if the power of prayer can again become revitalized in the lives of common men and women, there is yet time that our prayers for a better world may be answered, first in our own lives, and then in an ever-widening circle of men and nations around us. When this happens prayer will be removed from its tawdry surroundings and placed in a true setting of love which will radiate peace, friendship, and good will toward all nations.

WHAT IS PRAYER?

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near.

JAMES MONTGOMERY, 1771-1854

Plain and Precious Things

Seek the Best Gifts

I'm wondering if this last is not applicable to some of us who are very quick to point out to our Protestant neighbors that we have these gifts and that we believe in them, yet have done little to encourage them. There is danger of being imposed upon by overzealous prophets. That has happened a few times. But there is greater danger in an unbelieving and cynical attitude by which we quench the Spirit of God and lose the gifts.

Against this I would leave a warning note. We should not point to our Protestant neighbors as fulfilling this. We might do it very easily ourselves. Some of us need to change our attitudes. We do not covet these gifts as Paul admonished us.

May I summarize my introductory Scripture reading? The Book of Mormon supports the divinity of the Bible. It restores important doctrines. It makes plain that the Jesus is the Son of God and the Savior of the world, and that all men must come to him if they would be saved.

He That Endureth to the End

By David A. Oakman

ONE OF OUR FOREMOST NEEDS is security. It is remarkable to observe the various means we use in our endeavor to establish such a condition. We are easily persuaded to adopt a way of life if it promises to give us security.

In a missionary sense we are called out to promote the way of peace and safety for others. Often it is necessary for us to get down to where they are to lift them up in order to point out their need. In school the best teacher is one who speaks the child's language and starts from his point of understanding so that they can ascend together. The joy of the teacher is in the success of the pupil; he is not satisfied if the pupil fails.

It is not possible for us to start our work before we have learned our job; in order to become competent workmen, we must obey our master's orders. God, who made us, knows best how to govern us. In order to show us the way, God came in the person of Christ and demonstrated the kind of life he wills for us to live. I firmly believe Christ said what he meant and acted correctly in every emergency, never was caught off guard (as we often are), and was so certain of his position that he could conscientiously say, "Follow me." Can we follow him through forty days of fasting? Surely if we can, we shall have spirituality of the type he experienced for his day. Can we follow him in the blessing of men? This was one of his jobs, and he did it as it should be done.

HOW CAN WE follow Christ? Surely if we associate with him and let him be our Mentor, we shall be found doing his will and working with him for the benefit of our associates. We must leave our impression on our fellowmen; they are partly what we make them. Our attitude toward them is what we are; they are our stock-in-trade. Some are wayward, but they are all here to be blessed. We must be just as careful with the pleasant people who are ready to agree with us for they can be pleasantly wrong. We must see things as they really are, and to do this we must pray always lest we be led astray to desire things which are detrimental. Implicit obedience can bring us what we need.

When our earthly leaders tell us to obey, we do or else take the punishment for lawbreaking. How much more strict we should be on keeping divine law! God's rules are definite and emphatic, yet we often ignore them thinking we can somehow escape punishment, but we cannot.

Every transgression will be judged, and we cannot minimize the penalty. We can, however, determine our fate and measure our reward by our works. We shall need to exercise more than patience and forbearance, for men of a worldly spirit seldom deal kindly with those who oppose their will. Success does not come with shouldering everyone out of the way who dares to present a different view; we can have no success apart from others' success; we must walk together as friends.

WE MUST cultivate charity that we may become perfect in every good work to the glory of God. We will find him helpful in every emergency and able to cure each ill. Better than this, God can help us to prevent a recurrence of the trouble. Special help for our special problems will come if we ask in the appointed way, which is through Jesus Christ, acting in the way he lived among men. He endured to the end, freeing us all from the bond of sin if we will have faith in him.

Christ set the way and brought from his Father's throne the very essence of godlikeness; he is the express manifestation of God's will. If we study his word and practice his methods, we cannot go wrong. God cannot be mocked; there are no counterfeit gods. There are other ways, but none of them lead to life eternal. We must continue faithfully in order to enjoy God's promises. We do not know when the end may come but we can imagine how it will be. Is the vision we see worth while in the light of the gospel of Christ? Before we can knit a pair of socks or gloves we must know what the finished product should look like before we can complete our work successfully. The same applies to our goals in life.

We must work for others in order to be safe ourselves. We cannot be saved alone, because our conduct is in our association with, and our salvation is bound up in, our fellowmen. As we treat them, so we are rewarded. The Doctrine and Covenants says, "I will reward every man according to that which he has measured to his fellow man."

We may think this ideal is too high, we may say sin is inherent in us, and thus seek to justify our behavior. The flesh is weak; it has been always, but antiquity is no excuse. It is for us who say we see the light to alter these conditions as soon as possible. The path to perfection is made clear by faith in the one who is perfect. When we can conceive this idea, we should want to do something about it. In Christ we have the pattern of perfect manhood. "He who doeth my will shall know of the doctrine, whether it is true, or whether I speak of myself." We have the doctrine of repentance or learning how to live in accord with God's laws; our purpose now should be to apply this doctrine to our lives.

THERE ARE MANY THINGS to consider, and just as we are careful to follow the laws of our nation, so we must be prepared to obey spiritual laws. If we are baking a cake, we would not think of leaving out any of the ingredients and expect a good result; we would try to get everything in order, and in faith work to complete our task successfully.

How often do we neglect or overlook part of the Lord's work? In some cases it seems only a trivial thing that can turn our mind. We are told that the Spirit of God is very tender and easily moved, but that is not so; it is our attention that is diverted—not the Spirit of God which is disturbed. We cannot disturb such a positive influence. We must attune ourselves to listen if we would hear, because the voice of God is ever audible to those who will pay attention to it.

For the attainment of any objective we must first see it, then work with all our might to gain it. Nothing can be gained by half measures. We cannot go half way to London, then declare we have been there and speak with assurance of the journey. No more can we bear witness of the gospel if we do not know our subject. Our message must be the result of direct association with God's spirit if we are to speak authoritatively to those we would help, and only by lifting them up can we find security for ourselves.

The Name of the Brother of Jared

By Floyd Potter

As I See It

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Limited space will not permit many articles on the same subject to be printed.—EDITORS

IT IS ENCOURAGING to note what appears to be a genuine resurgence of interest throughout the church on the Book of Mormon. Probably more people are reading and studying its contents today than ever before in history. Undoubtedly the production of a concordance in recent years has helped much to stimulate the spirit of research.

Since the translation of the Book of Mormon was first made available in 1830, there have arisen many questions which have both direct and indirect bearing on the claim of its divine origin. Some of the questions are of great import, and others not so great. Who shall say that the name of the Brother of Jared is of only minute significance? It may be important for several reasons:

1. We should not confuse the identity of this important character with some other, for example, "Gazelam."
2. Outside readers of the Book of Mormon expect to have reasonable answers to the questions they raise—including this one.
3. If the answer is available, we are being slothful and negligent if we do not search for it.

Was It "Gazelam"?

In the Book of Mormon itself no mention is made of the real name of the Brother of Jared. This is not because he lacked a specific cognomen but may be due to several good reasons we shall list later. The appellation, "Brother of Jared," is found in the record thirty-nine times, plus ten occasions where we find the phrase "Jared and his brother."

The name "Gazelam," which some erroneously apply to the Brother of Jared, is found only once in the Book of Mormon. It does not appear anywhere in the Bible, but in the Doctrine and Covenants there are several references (77: 2; 81: 4; 101: 4, 8). In these places it designates in prophetic manner Joseph the Seer.

Such evidence is, of course, not conclusive in itself that the Book of Mormon "Gazelam" is Joseph Smith. Many prophets have had names similar or identical to each other, for example, Elias, Enoch, Joseph, and so forth. But a study of Alma 17: 52-65 is, I believe, capable of showing that the "Gazelam" therein mentioned truly refers to Joseph Smith.

Alma is telling his son, Helaman, of the twenty-four gold plates of Ether and their record of the "secret combinations" which caused the destruction of the Jaredite nation. Foreknowing the work of the latter-day prophet, but veiling his identity under the pseudonym of "Gazelam," the Lord indicates through Alma that this prophet should receive "a stone, which shall shine forth in darkness unto light, that I may discover unto . . . them the works of their brethren; yea their secret works, their works of darkness, and their wickedness and abominations" (Alma 17: 55).

Joseph Smith's translation through "the stone"—"these directors" (verse 56), the Urim and Thummim, has already accomplished just that. All who read it can learn from the Book of Mormon just how devilish were these combinations which caused the downfall of both Jaredite and Nephite nations (Ether 3: 94).

But apparently some look for a future revelation of the details of these wicked works by a latter-day prophet who, they say, will be called "Gazelam." We discover that no such expectation can be justified in the light of the following:

And now my son, I command you that ye retain all their oaths, and their covenants, and their agreements in their secret abominations; yea, and all their signs and their wonders ye shall retain from this people, that they know them not, lest peradventure they should fall into darkness also, and be destroyed. . . . And now my son, remember the words which I have spoken unto you: trust not these secret plans unto this people, but teach them an everlasting hatred against sin and iniquity.—Alma 17: 59, 65.

Such commands are quite feasible when we reflect that no good purpose would be served in revealing these techniques of wickedness to a righteous people. Why should we anticipate their future publication?

Thus Joseph Smith is clearly recognizable as "Gazelam." There is no recorded prophecy of any future "Gazelam" yet to come.

The Real Name Revealed

In the history of the church there is a parenthetical reference to the Brother of Jared, apparently indicating his true name. We refer to the Letters of Oliver Cowdery reprinted in tract form (No. 1244) in earlier days of the Restoration. Originally these letters were printed in the Messenger and Advocate, published by the church in Kirtland during 1834-35. Each of the eight letters in this series was addressed to W. W. Phelps and makes very absorbing reading to the student of history.

Oliver writes like this in his sixth letter, page 24, of the pamphlet:

It is said, and I believe the account, that the Lord showed the Brother of Jared (Moriancumer) all things which were to transpire from that day to the end of the earth, as well as those which had taken place. I believe that Moses was permitted to see the same, as the Lord caused them to pass in vision before him as he stood upon the mount; . . .

The following considerations make feasible indeed the theory that the parenthetical insertion "Moriancumer," after the name "Brother of Jared," was this important man's true name:

(a) Joseph and Oliver, as they translated, were no doubt intrigued by the much reference to this anonymous character. It would be perfectly natural for them to ask the Lord for his name. They did the same thing regarding several other queries which arose in the progress of translation. Two such instances were the question of baptism (see Church History, Volume 1, page 34) and the question of John the Beloved's continued earthly existence (see Doctrine and Covenants 7).

(b) The fact that such special revelation to them was not more definitely recorded in the history of the church is quite understandable because it is a relatively minor point, and the history of the times recorded by Church Historian John Whitmer was lamentably sketchy. John was recreant in his stewardship to the point of supplying only 138 pages in longhand covering the momentous early years of our history. Many other interesting details did not get into such an abbreviated record.

(c) In the Book of Mormon period, as in Bible times, it was not uncommon to give names of great men to geographical features, for example, Mulek, a son of Zedekiah; both a city (Alma 23: 31-33) and a land (Helaman 2: 128, 129) were named after him. Lehi, Nephi, Helam, Morianton, and Mormon are also cases in point. Ether 1:37 informs us:

And as they came to the sea, they pitched their tents and they called the name of the place Moriancumer; and they dwelt in tents . . . upon the sea-shore for the space of four years.

What could be more natural than for the little band of migrants to name this important place after the spiritual leader of the colony, using his right name, Moriancumer?

(d) There would seem to be no special or divinely intended reason why the Brother of Jared's name should be withheld from the record. It could be explained on perfectly natural grounds: Moriancumer's personal wish for anonymity in a written record, or perhaps a custom of the times to relate the spiritual leader to the civil leader of the group.

May it not be said of us as a people that we do not know our own history, simply because we fail to study out the relevant facts.

Highway Markings

By Florence B. Hughes

EN ROUTE TO GRACELAND with our daughter and her girl friend from Ohio, we traveled Highway 69 but a short distance when the girls recognized an Independence boy and his Australian guest for the week end waiting for a ride toward Lamoni.

My mother, who was riding in the back seat, commented on how easy it is to get to Lamoni now compared to thirty years ago because of the inadequate system of markings used then. She reminded me how we used to watch for the old Cannon Ball Trail markings, three of which she found still faintly showing on the poles. She remembered the first travel maps in which turns were designated by barns, trees, or other landmarks. The boys marveled at the difference in traveling time now and in earlier years due to the good highways and adequate markings of today.

After the conversation turned to other channels, I found myself meditating. Looking at the Australian boy and knowing he had followed markings to Graceland, and even now had been appointed to chart markings in this great work of God, I felt a new appreciation for the more adequate markings the church is able to provide in comparison with past years.

The Fascination of Slavery

THE SLAVE has one advantage over the free man. He needs to take no risks. He does not need to worry about the rent, the price of potatoes, or the children's education. In return for the pull of his muscles or the use of a more or less good mind, he is assured of food, clothing, a bed—even money.

This has become an alluring picture to some people who are free Americans but who are haunted by fear. Trusting God very little, if at all, they have an unhealthy yearning for security. They say it is natural for every man and woman to want security. That is true. But nobody knows better how to develop the wish into an obsession than the enemies of freedom.

The wish for security tosses about in the mind of all modern civilized men. Not because the times are chaotic. It is a wistful leftover from babyhood when mother placed her darling in a pillowed, shaded carriage for a nap in the sun, when she bathed and fed him, and tenderly put him in the crib for the night. It was a fine life. The grown man or woman who does not know God searches fearfully for a supporting human hand that will help him regain the feeling of being safe.

Over here stands a man with a hard jaw and a rousing voice, who is looking at the free man's harried expression. Waving an arm he shouts, "Follow me and join the union! You are making the boss rich by your labor! Get YOUR share! It costs you nothing but dues!"

Across the street a man jumps off a sound truck. He has a broad smile and extends a hand. "Follow me, my friend! Vote for me and I will pass laws that will produce endless prosperity for you. It will cost you nothing but taxes."

These idealistic men whom he now follows will give him security, thinks the free man happily. Steaks, an automobile, a television set, a new apartment—the free man who had been so frightened already feels the eiderdown baby pillow under head.

But the childish mind does not yet understand that some men want not security first, but power—power of wealth; power over men, women, and children; power over life and death. The craving for it increases as they grasp always more, until even their own security becomes secondary to them.

As the man waits for security to reach him by way of handshakers and union kings he discovers that dues and taxes can extend and grow. The union kings demand a large extra sum when he needs a new place where he can labor and earn. As protection against a host of hazards are dispensed by the handshakers he saves less and becomes dependent on the good will of the dispensers. The price of the daily bread soars—he is ordered out on strike—and he and his family and his home have a lean and threadbare look.

Within himself, and all about him he now begins to hear voices: "Your dollar is worth fifty cents! Your dollar may be worth nothing tomorrow! Your dollar is merely a piece of paper, with no value in gold; why save it? Your old age security will provide you with a hall room—if the handshakers do not spend your money first on pet schemes at home and abroad. Your children shall serve over there and labor here—not where and how they please as you did before them!"

Where now is the eiderdown baby pillow? Where is freedom from fear? True, the boss's wealth has been divided, and his company's income is produced mainly for the administrators and handshakers and not for the stockholders. But the administration's handshakers and union kings have become hard bosses, and some have gathered for themselves more riches than the old boss ever had.

To the once free man with the childish mind there slowly comes a realization. He has succumbed to a heady fascination emanating from an evil force. Security is granted by human power with the accompaniment of slavery—because love is not in the giving. The once free man, rousing himself too late, finds that he has been gagged and chained hand and foot. As he struggles, shadowy unknown men standing behind his erstwhile friends exclaim threateningly: "You have security! You have food, a roof, a bed! We have a five-year plan with longer hours and less pay for your further good!"

The modern slave should have learned in time to understand the words of St. Paul: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child. I thought as a child: but when I became a man I put away childish things."

Only the man who is consciously a child of God is not childish. Wisely entrusting his life's course to the Father's love, he knows little fear. The administrators' handshakers and union kings will never become his masters—but remain his servants. He is free because he follows no less a person than Jesus Christ.—From Christian Economics, September 9, 1952, used by permission of the publishers.

Centers of Faithfulness

A General Conference Address given April 5, 1952

TO BE HERE with so many of you this morning is quite a moving experience. It is not the first such experience that I have enjoyed today, for a short time ago this room was filled with members of the priesthood. As I recognized many of the men of the ministry, and knew of the good work which they do at heavy cost in their several branches, my heart went out to them. And now, to see among you so many whose good work is known to me personally again moves me to gratitude and to renewed assurance concerning the future of the work committed to all of us.

Here at headquarters we are subject to constant temptation to be more concerned with policies and procedures and regulations than we are with people. That is because so many of our problems are group problems rather than personal ones. It is only by getting out among you and seeing you at work in your individual situations that we are made sufficiently aware that a merely "official" approach is entirely inadequate. You help us very much indeed at this point. And I think that I can say quite frankly that we have all made some progress in this regard. As most of you know, the members of the First Presidency work in intimate association with the members of the Presiding Bishopric. We have been very happy to note their concern that the right thing shall be done, and that it shall be done in the right spirit. We do not meet with the Council of Twelve as a Council quite so frequently, but can assure you that among the brethren of that Council there is also concern that policies and procedures shall be administered with regard to personal situations and out of deep concern for individual needs. In like fashion, we are in frequent contact with Sister Arnsen, and in some degree with the Council of Women, and we are ourselves encouraged to note the deep concern of these ladies for the work of the church in its spiritual quality and outreach. With such a background, I am quite happy to come to you this morning and to do my best to promote the mutual understanding which makes for effective unity as we go forward together.

GENERAL CONFERENCE is a busy time. It is preceded by a rather extended period of Joint Council meetings and similar activities. Because of this, what I have to say does not represent any recent consultation between members of the Presidency, nor does it represent any consultation at all pointed toward this specific occasion. But I think it will represent the other brethren in its general direction and import. It is the outgrowth of our thinking together with regard to the work of the church and of this department. It is neither complete nor final nor very adventuresome. But I do hope that it will be fundamental and that what I have to say will carry the confirming influence of the Good Spirit.

Let me say quite early, then, that we are deeply concerned that the work of the church shall go forward as the work of God. This is not just an organization. We are a people—a peculiar people. And we are not entirely free people. Every one of us who has made a covenant with God in baptism has signed away some aspects of erstwhile freedom, just as a newly created citizen has done. We have not abdicated our rights to any man, or to any priest, or to any people. But we have enlisted in the service of Jesus Christ. We are his disciples. And we are under his orders. Strangely enough, we are finding in the church and in the service of God a larger freedom than we have found anywhere else. But it is not our own freedom. It is a freedom won in service. Here we have insight into the obligations and the rewards of life which we could not have except as disciples. We go forward together under the leadership of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are engaged in the work of God.

By President F. Henry Edwards

THE MEMBERS of the First Presidency are not concerned with the details of organization and functioning within the Department of Women. Many of you are and must be so concerned. Many local administrative officers must also be so concerned. Our primary responsibility is with the direction of the total endeavor. This matter of discipleship and the obligations which arise out of it are of vital importance in determining the direction and the strength of our total endeavor.

Our conviction that the church must justify herself by faithfulness to the leadership of her Lord leads inevitably to our concern about the Word of God. Genuinely Christian people are always students of the Word of God. Whenever we lose our regard for the Word of God, we remove ourselves from our sources of wisdom and unity and power. Now, the best place to become acquainted with the Word of God is in the home. The best time to develop love for the Word of God is when we are children. The best atmosphere in which to develop judgment in using the Word of God is in the bosom of the family, and children and the home and the family are your primary fields of service.

Many of you ladies are key members of Reorganized Latter Day Saint homes. It is our deep desire that you shall know the Scriptures for yourselves, and that because of your example and your precepts your love for the Word of God shall communicate itself to those who are near and dear to you.

Some of you ladies are teachers. It is our deep desire that your minds shall be informed, and your hearts made glad, and your wills made strong in the study of the Word of God. There is no need to parade your faith in objectionable fashion. But there is every need for a demonstration of that quality of life which is best nurtured when the sacred Word is known and loved.

Some of you ladies are in business, and there may be times when you think that comparison between the Word of God and the facts of business experience breeds hopelessness. But one of the truly inspiring facts about the Eternal Word is that it does not ignore the facts of life. The hope that runs through the Scriptures is born of the testimony of the Spirit that right and truth and goodness will surely prevail.

ALL OF YOU, whatever your more personal interests, are concerned about principles. You share something of the apostolic eagerness that Saints in every walk of life shall know the peace and poise which rightly become the children of God. Such poise as this draws heavily on the Standard Books of the church. It is made possible in all the vicissitudes of life as the teaching of these books is appropriated under the guidance of the Spirit.

Naturally, we are concerned with the quality of our Sainthood. But we have been impressed from time to time that quality is directly related to our range of vision. A good woman's life is set in right perspective. She is not unduly disturbed by the multiplying phobias characteristic of our times. She is not unduly afraid of people and things and happenings. She is not unduly devoted to the values of the moment. And all this is so because she has lifted her eyes to the hills and has become aware of the resources of Divinity which are available for our salvation. The church is concerned about immortality and eternal life. Here and now we are concerned with that quality of character which will endure, and which ought to endure. All of us are rightfully concerned about our present stewardship—what is happening here and now. But the framework in which our lives are set includes more than what is immediately present. The values which we seek justify themselves in eternity as well as in time. The things that we fear are those which threaten the enduring values of life.

A FEW WEEKS AGO I went into the home of a young woman who had lost her husband in a tragic and utterly unexpected accident. And, as happens so frequently, I—who went to minister—found myself being ministered to. This young woman said to me, in effect, "For some reason it never occurred to me that I ought to think about immortality and eternal life. Then my husband was killed. For a time, nothing penetrated to my inner consciousness. I heard what people said, but the import of what they were saying did not reach me. Then, gradually, I began to listen. To my amazement, my sorrow and my hunger for reassurance helped me toward understanding. The horizons of life were pushed back. I began to see that the best things my husband and I have shared with each other ought not to die and will not die. But I wish I had felt as I do now before he died. Indeed, with all my heart I wish that this note of immortality and eternal life could be sounded more strongly and more joyously than ever I have heard it sounded. Young people need it, and they need it now."

I say to you from the bottom of my heart that there is urgent need for all of us to sound the note of high endeavor, of high and glorious enterprise, of life lived in the sight of immortality and for values which shall endure.

This leads me quite naturally to a plea that we shall catch again the spirit of the kingdom crusade. This is the only cause rich enough and inclusive enough to enlist the finest of men and women for time and for eternity. The kingdom crusade is not a temporary affair, limited by time. It is not a temporal affair, limited by geography. It is not a "this-worldly" affair, limited by men's unaided powers. Time and place and people are important, but the distinctive thing about the kingdom of God is that kingdom-building is an enterprise to which God himself gladly lends his strength, and in which he invites our full and wise and disciplined co-operation. The kingdom enterprise justifies itself whenever and wherever it is pursued with full purpose of heart by a devoted group. And it is justified, most of all, when sin and death are banished forever and the children of the kingdom walk unafraid and unashamed in the presence of God.

THIS LOVE of the eternal Word, this sharing of the divine vision, this joy in the divine quest have been shared in part by many of us. But rich sharing on this level is not the matter of a moment. There is a necessary time element here. Our finest achievements are won through patient persistence in well doing. Habits have their place. Many of these habits are best developed and best expressed in home situations. The building of such homes is a sacramental thing. Here you will find love and imagination joining hands to bless the beloved. Here you will find sacrifice bringing joy to both giver and receiver. Here you will find our surest prophecy of the kingdom. And in the best of these homes you will find an established practice of talking things over with God.

You ladies have a great deal to do about family prayer. May I say very frankly, but in sober earnest,

Our Job Is to Share

By Dan E. Waite

Dental Student, University of Iowa

TO BEGIN WITH I would like to assert that basically college students are no different from any other group of people making up the membership of this church. We breathe the same air and eat the same food and have the same needs and desires concerning the building of the kingdom as other members. If we remember this, we shall be more prepared to see the needs of others as Christ would, and thus our ministry as highly trained individuals can be doubly effective.

The first and most important thing is that we believe in the Restoration Movement and understand its implications. Then and only then are we able to criticize and support it justly. In a recent discussion group, a member of our church said, "I think we're wrong in assuming 'we have it.' People often shy away from us because of this attitude." Certainly we have to use good judgment and tact in presenting the gospel to others. However, if we can't believe our message with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, then surely no one else will. Any good salesman will agree to this. Therefore, for effectual ministry we must have faith and believe in the Restored Church.

As I look at the church, I see how it encourages and stimulates individual responsibility. It is concerned with developing personalities. I was impressed recently by a new member of our church who indicated he was able to see that he himself had a job to do and that the successes and failures of the church were directly related to his successes and failures and those of every other individual. When each member feels this responsibility, the kingdom of God will be much closer at hand than it is now.

I'm sure that the ultimate goal or motive of this conference is to keep in front of us college people our responsibility and contribution to the continued building of the kingdom of God. Because only when we are actively participating are we progressively moving and getting the job done. No one can do our part for us. Others can help, but our personal participation is imperative.

ANOTHER VALUE I consider important is that the Restored Church emphasizes and demonstrates a positive way of life. On a recent trip to Nauvoo I was happy to notice that during the tour of our church property, the guide made no effort to run down the Mormons. He did not mention polygamy or other differences. By stressing the beliefs and the positive distinctives of our own church, he raised its validity to a high plane for his listeners.

This accentuating the positive is well illustrated by the following story. A small town in Nebraska was bothered by a swampy stream infested with mosquitoes and weeds. The citizens employed engineers to remove the weeds and beautify the stream. They tried cutting the weeds and spraying them with poison—all to no avail. Finally an old gentleman of the town suggested ignoring the weeds and planting willows to hide them. When this was done the roots from the willows sapped the nutrient material from the weeds, thus snuffing them out.

SOME TIME AGO a survey was made concerning the needs and desires of adults. It indicated the number one item was health; the second was skill in human relationships. Those surveyed wanted to learn the mechanics or techniques of getting along with people—which is actually part of the purpose of the church.

In a war-torn world people who recognize their needs indicate a step toward progress. And the job is partly done or at least the time is ripe. Perhaps that is what is meant in the fourth section of Doctrine and Covenants, "Behold the field is white already to harvest." I sincerely think that the Restored Church is the sickle or instrument through which people will learn skillful human and godly relationships. Our job is to share this gospel with those searching for a more abundant life.

Quotes From the College Student Conference

(Prepared by Angela Heide and Naomi Russell)

An old Chinese proverb says that it is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness. Thomas Edison destroyed thousands of kerosene lamps, not by smashing them, but by giving the world a better light. When men refuse to walk in the Light, they become self-centered—their own gods. As we live in the light of the love of God, we cannot help following him.—CHESWORTH

Often we drag along our kerosene lamps even though we have a better light to walk by.—CHEVILLE

This work, as the paintings of the old masters, is useless just being restored, unless we hang it high in a beautiful light.—SHUTE

A man may be called of God to do a service to mankind as well as to preach the gospel. A scientist, or doctor or musician may be as divinely called as a minister.—LEUTZINGER

The college-trained person is not of a different species. He is still a human, and the missionary approach to him should be on the basis of his humanity, not his superior intelligence.—MCDOWELL

Specific professions, although they may not be directly usable by the church, provide a common footing for telling other professional people about the gospel.—PARKES

The man of science will respect us in our missionary effort if we don't approach him with the attitude that we have all the truth tied up in a little package with a red ribbon.—CHEVILLE

I have come to have the greatest contempt for so-called intelligence. The great "mental geniuses" are often fools outside their specific fields. Some of our best members are the good housewives and farmers with fourth-grade educations. Crazy frustrations are often a result of intelligence wrongly used. Unless God informs us, we are utterly poor and aimless things.—SHUTE

Real security lies in being wanted and having the ability to fill others' need of us.—GLEAZER

There is a security in doing right.—JOHNSON

Security comes from being intimately attached to something bigger than oneself.—SHUTE

The biggest security we can have as college graduates comes from a God-centered life.—DELONG

Money is good when it is wisely used. Maybe what we really need is a committee for ministry to rich people.—ANKNEY

A man without God is destroyed by his self-sufficiency.—BROCKWAY

Unless a church develops on all fronts it becomes distorted in its beliefs. There must be a balance of truth in the total program God has for his people. It is our duty to share with others our symmetrical plan for developing godly lives.—MESLEY

A farmer of religious bent once saw the letters "P. C." in the clouds and thought they meant, "Preach Christ." He was wrong; they mean "plow corn."—MORRIS

All that has happened of great significance to the church in ages past, even the experience of Pentecost, can happen to us today if we live for it.—CHESWORTH

We are to proselyte in meekness, but let us not forget that meekness, according to one definition, is "power under control."—MRS. MESLEY

Our appointment in witnessing is with our God.—VAN BIBER

One young man converted several young people of another faith to the Restoration. Then he converted their church leader. Other members of that congregation labeled him as dangerous. Now most of us are quite innocuous in this respect, but I would much rather be labeled dangerous than innocuous by those who observe my efforts to convert people.—MESLEY

We must wipe out the germ of complacency; it is deadly to the spirit of evangelism.—CHESWORTH

She cast her bread on the water, and it came back in sandwiches.—BROCKWAY

Choose wisely your thoughts as well as your actions.—VAN BIBER

When men become self-centered they become self-gods, and without God they are lost.—CHESWORTH

When I was visiting college church groups on week ends, I had to be back at my office at 7:00 a.m. on Mondays for staff meetings. "Ankney," one of the fellows said, nursing a hang-over, "you must take drugs to be so wide awake so early." "No," I told him, "it's a secret, but if you really want to know I'll let you in on it. Each week I visit some college kids for my church. I'm supposed to give them a 'shot in the arm.' Instead they give me so much I can hardly carry it back with me. That's the secret of my enthusiasm."—ANKNEY that all of us need to learn to pray rather than to just say our prayers. We need to enrich our faith in the practice of being faithful. And we shall not be faithful unless we come into the presence of God frequently, with our loved ones, in humble prayer.

Let me illustrate this. You ladies are concerned about the physical welfare of your loved ones. It is right that you should be, and you are better informed in this field than any previous generation of our people. You have the good sense to call for the doctor when your children are sick. The wisest among you are deeply grateful for the discoveries being made from day to day in the field of medicine, and in this you recognize the hand of God. But there are many things that prayer will do for us which the doctor never can do. Many of our ills are due to disorders of the spirit, and the only adequate cure for them is a cure which functions before these disorders arise. A great deal of physical disease arises out of frustration and disquietude and jealousy and resentment and vindictiveness. These things cannot exist in a home thoroughly permeated by the spirit of prayer and the awareness of divine blessing.

I sometimes think that we have become too sophisticated in this field of healing. It is your privilege and your obligation to develop and to exhibit that combination of wisdom and humility which becomes the Saints of God. It is fundamental to our faith that we shall acknowledge that God can do much more for us than any of us can do for ourselves. (That does not mean that we can do nothing for ourselves. We can help each other in many ways. Those who are skilled in the arts of medicine prove their worth many times over.) But God is still the Great Physician. If we are wise enough we shall find many evidences of his healing power which is sure without being spectacular. And we shall learn that spiritual health has a great deal to do with physical health. Let us all work together that our children shall grow up in an atmosphere of inner peace, where they draw on divine resources for well-rounded living because they know themselves to be the children of God who have reason to face life joyously and unafraid.

MY TIME is practically gone, and like most preachers I am not through when it is time to quit. There are many things that I would like to say. From these let me pick just one. It is of major importance that we shall have available in the church, for the Cause of Zion, more persons of sound education. At the moment I am not concerned with the skills of the hand, nor professional techniques, nor the scientific training in which our modern world has invested so much. These are important, but what I have in mind is the sound judgment which comes from liberal education pursued in the fear of God. Our people are under a moral obligation to act intelligently. We can do that only when we have some acquaintance with the problems which have confronted mankind and with the solutions which have been attempted. Education will not do everything for us in this connection, but it will do many things for us. The church is therefore concerned with your participation in this business of education. No material thing can protect us in the days which are to come. Our safety and our progress depend on those qualities of heart and mind which enable us to use our material possessions rightfully. If you ladies serve your generation well—as many of you are doing—so that sound spiritual foundations are laid in the lives of those who will carry tomorrow's burdens, you need not fear education. The church needs your sons and daughters to serve wherever God shall call them, faithfully and wisely and steadfastly. You have much to say as to whether God shall continue to find qualified workers for the tasks of the kingdom.

Let us be faithful together, building centers of faithfulness in our homes and in our communities as these are pointed toward the Great Community where all God's people shall be at home.

Introducing

FREDERICK EDWARD THORNTON, Montgomery, West Virginia (page 11), is an educator who has taught in eastern colleges since 1929. After graduating from the Wellsburg, West Virginia, High School in 1923 he attended West Virginia University, where he received his A.B. degree. He continued teaching and working, receiving his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1935. Following this he became instructor in zoology for one year at North Carolina College, then went to Ohio State University as instructor in physiology for three years. He then taught a general science-biology class for one year in the West Virginia High School and the next two years was assistant professor of biology in the West Virginia Institute of Technology. In 1944-45 he was professor of biology at Washington College, and since then has been registrar at the West Virginia Institute of Technology.

Dr. Thornton is a member of the West Virginia Academy of Science and the West Virginia Education Association. For the past two years he has been secretary and treasurer of the West Virginia Association of College Registrars. He is also a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi fraternities. He has belonged to the Reorganized Church since 1925 and holds the office of priest. He and his wife, the former Constance Louise Ayersman, have one son, John Frederick, now stationed at Quantico Marine Base.

DAVID ALMA OAKMAN, Ponders End, Enfield, Middlesex, England (page 12), is the son of David and Ellen (Kemp), who were both first generation Latter Day Saints. He had to leave school at the age of fourteen and took up the carpenter's trade, then turned to plumbing, which vocation he has followed ever since. Being naturally of studious mind, he continued private study and was especially fond of the Scriptures, comparative religion, philosophy, sociology, and literature.

He was baptized in 1898 in London. In 1914 he was ordained a priest, in 1939 an elder, and in 1945 a high priest.

In 1904 he married Miss Ada Brazier. To them were born Arthur A. and Doris M. Oakman. Ada died in 1918. He later married Ellen E. Wicks; they have four children: Lily, May, Roy, and Dora. Brother Oakman is proud of the fact that all of his children are interested and active in the church. He loves to teach the Scriptures. He was pastor of the Enfield Branch for nearly three years, and is now counselor to the present pastor.

MADelyn M. GALBRAITH, San Antonio, Texas (page 8), is the author of a new book, Feather in the Wind, which has recently come from the Herald presses and will be released in December. This is a religious novel packed with stirring drama which tells the experiences of a family of people who found the church, and whose lives were completely changed by their discovery. Sister Galbraith taught school two years and then went into industrial work in the sales department first, and then turned to the production end of one of the largest stationery manufacturers in the Southwest. Later on she served several years at the retail desk and was put in charge of a store at Houston, but after two years she returned to the home office as purchasing agent and supervisor of social stationery.

She says, "I became interested in the Book of Mormon when I was about fourteen, during a series of meetings conducted by Brother Ammon White and Brother J. F. Curtis." She is author of some Book of Mormon plays and dramatic readings which were used by Arthur Rock in radio work while he was attending school in Texas. This article, however, is her first contribution to church literature.

 WHAT TIME IS IT?

There is one of the commonest questions in the world: "What time is it?" And the most famous reply is that given on the old-fashioned sun dial: "It is later than you think."

We have four clocks at our house, three of them electric. None of them agree, though the electric ones keep closest together, and we can't forget to wind them. Two put out little red spots when there has been an interruption in the current, to warn us that the time is wrong. This disagreement of clocks at our house became so marked that one day the beloved lady exclaimed impatiently, "Which one of these things is right?" And we answered solemnly, undoubtedly correct, "None of them, darling, none of them."

It is no better when we go walking down the main street of the town. On the sidewalks are the big, imposing clocks of the merchants, stuck up on lamp poles, all of them telling different tales. As Joseph Smith observed concerning the churches, "All of them cannot be right!"

And what should we think of jewelers who promise to fix our watch, and cannot keep their own clocks anywhere near right? Hopefully, one day, I looked in a window at one of those scientific, precision-instrument "chronometers" that tick off fractions of seconds. At the top it said, "Hamilton—correct time." It had been stopped for six hours, and nobody inside knew the difference.

Radio stations have a unique opportunity, and most of them miss it. In all this mid-western area there is only one station that gives its patrons an accurate time tone-signal on the hour. The others may say, quite carelessly, at 8:03 and a half, "It's eight o'clock." What does time matter to an announcer who has just bored his way through a commercial? He's going out for coffee anyway, and a fig for the customers!

One of the most majestic references to time in all literature (in this clerk's opinion) is that in "The Green Pastures" where De Lawd asks Gabriel, "What time is it, Gabe?" And Gabriel squints at the sun and says, "It's half-past, Lawd." It was the Meridian of Time, in which the Son of God was to appear. Only heaven, with Eternity at its disposal, could afford to deal with Time in such casual terms.

What time IS it? Don't believe all that you hear and see on the subject. And anyway, even if you were to get the correct answer, by the time it could register in your consciousness, it would already be "later than you think."

 TRIAL

There is pain when we are born into the world, but out of the pain comes the beauty of new life. There is pain when we are born again spiritually into the kingdom of our Lord, but out of it comes a growth and a happiness we did not dream could be possible. There is pain again when we are taken, or reborn into the eternal life. Trials hurt, but when we have them the spirit can either grow or die, as we make the choice. If you are going through a period of trial, be patient and wait. Look around you as you pray, and somewhere you may see the hand of God moving to make a bigger, better, nobler man or woman out of you.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

William Joseph Breshears

THERE IS ONE THING about "Joe" Breshears you are bound to notice if you know him. He likes his job. In fact, he says, "The happiest days of my life have been spent as a missionary under General Conference appointment." Although he is president and missionary of the Rock Island, Illinois, District, he has not been a Conference appointee, or even a member of the Reorganized Church, for many of his forty-six years. How he became a church member, and later an appointee, is an interesting story. Here it is.

He was born and reared in Springfield, Missouri, in what he calls "a very good Baptist home." He was active in sports in high school and as a senior lettered in football, basketball, and track. He was the only three-sport letterman of the high school's 1,800 students. After graduation in 1924, he attended Drury College in Springfield and Southwest Missouri Baptist College in Bolivar. He became an apprentice machinist and later a journeyman machinist. His trade, as well as a desire to preach, played a part in bringing him into contact with the Restoration Movement.

He had been baptized into the Baptist faith when eleven; at thirty, after having served as a church school teacher, youth leader, and deacon, he became interested in becoming an ordained minister. He obtained a license to preach and was later ordained and served as pastor of five churches in the Springfield area; but his theological studies and experiences led him to question the doctrines of his church. "After a thorough investigation," he says, "I became convinced that God had more to offer than I had yet found." He prayed for direction, and in 1940 went to Bremerton, Washington, where he worked as a machinist in the Puget Sound Navy Yards. His supervisor there was Elder A. W. Lundeen. The two men "became fast friends," Brother Breshears relates, "and I sought to convert him to my Baptist beliefs. It didn't work, however, as he had more to offer, and he converted me after about eleven months."

With his wife, the former Frances Evelyn Curtis, he investigated the claims of the Reorganized Church; they and their daughter, Jo Ann, were baptized on July 13, 1941. "It wasn't easy to give up everything that I had gained in the Baptist Church and start over," he recalls. "I had to be sure this church was right. God gave me that assurance in no uncertain terms, and without hesitation I gave up my ministry in the Baptist Church and made my covenant with God according to his plan." He was ordained a priest during his first year in the church and an elder a year later. At the 1947 General Conference he was ordained a high priest and appointed president of the Gulf States District where he served until he was transferred to the Rock Island District this year.

His daughter Jo Ann is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing. He also has two sons, Donald Lee, eighteen, and Robert Lewis, fifteen. They are both church members also.

Thanksgiving 1952

ONE OF THE CONNOTATIONS of the word "thank" is gratitude. When we are thankful we yield to a sense of obligation to someone for something done for us or bestowed upon us. The word "gratitude" is nowhere to be found in the Bible, the Doctrine and Covenants, or in the Book of Mormon, although there are numerous injunctions to give thanks.

Paul in I Thessalonians enjoined the Saints: "In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

"In all things"—well, there are many things for which, at first thought, we have difficulty in being thankful, but which, when considered afterward, we find worked for our best good.

Robert Ingersoll once gave what historians have called a "thanksgiving sermon," in which he very eloquently contrasted the conditions of civilized man with that of their barbarous fathers who lived "in dens and caves." He pictured those ancestors as "slowly, painfully, almost imperceptibly" advancing:

They crawled and stumbled, staggered and struggled toward the light. To them the world was unknown. On every hand was the mysterious, the sinister, the hurtful. The forests were filled with monsters, and the darkness was crowded with ghosts, devils, and fiendish gods.

Notwithstanding this atheist could see these primitive men struggling "toward the light" on this road "from the savage to the scientist—from a den to a mansion—from leaves to clothes," from "fear to reason," yes, he said, "for the blessings we enjoy, . . . for the happiness that is ours," we ought to be grateful. Our hearts should blossom with thankfulness.

Then, as if he were suddenly thrust into a cul-de-sac, a blind ally, or against an insurmountable wall, Ingersoll asked, "Whom, what should we thank? Should we thank the church?" This second question was the basis of several pages of caustic indictment of Christianity and God in whom of course he did not believe. So he argues, first that there is no church to be thanked—no God to be thanked, although he admitted "we do not know" that a God exists. Does "Nature" know we even exist? So nature is out, and Ingersoll finished his sermon by giving thanks for the kind fathers and loving mothers "of the savage days," for the inventors and discoverers, the thinkers of past ages, the poets, statesmen, scientists, heroes, destroyers of prejudice, the apostles of reason, the disciples of truth, and the soldiers of freedom, who "held high the holy torch and filled the world with light."

TO US who believe in a living God—who made us and all the good things of life on this sphere, who is all powerful and without whom the world and the universe, the heavens, all with such evident planning for man's happiness, could not have been, could not now be—what an empty thing was the life and spirit of such a man as Ingersoll and his patron saint, Voltaire!

So much by way of argument.

But we begin beyond a point just out of the reach of such men. Our daily lives and all our thoughts are premised on the fact of God and his Son Jesus, who became the Christ of God. How easy it is for us to give thanks, especially at this season, when millions of God-fearing men turn their thoughts toward the national holiday known as Thanksgiving.

A few years ago a very successful man whom I had known for many years, when greeting me after a long separation, said, "You know, I have reached the point where I am thankful for just the simple things of life—for health and food, for raiment and shelter." The next time I visited his city he had passed into the beyond.

And today, as I write these lines, I sense more than ever before how grateful all of us should be for just those "simple things."

Emerging from the personal level, and considering ourselves on the church level, we have abundant reason for giving expression of our gratitude. Some poet said: "Gratitude is the fairest blossom which springs from the soul; and the heart of man knoweth none more fragrant."

We parents have observed with pleasure when our children have ceased to accept things for granted and have expressed their appreciation for favors and blessings provided for them. If that has been our experience, may we not sense how our Heavenly Father accepts our appreciation of and gratitude for his beneficence?

THE CHURCH has been much blessed in this good year of 1952. We have witnessed a steady growth in numbers and—what is more assuring—an increase in the spiritual growth of the members. Every district and stake gathering has given evidence of development. All reports made to us attest this fact.

The church as an organization has prospered also in a temporal way, as evidenced by the report of the Presiding Bishopric recently published in Herald columns.

Shall we not at this time express, and in our lives witness, a spirit of thanksgiving in excess of anything in past years?

As the quorum on which responsibility in spiritual matters chiefly rests, we call upon all the hosts of Israel to call upon God "from whom all blessings flow," our rock of defense against the adversary and everything that might threaten our progress, with thanksgiving and praise, and fervent prayers for our upward march.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Elder Abel Hall, 48 Corelli Street, Manchester 10, England, October 10:

I thought you would like to hear of an experience we had in our home this week. There were present at the time my wife, her sister and daughter, and myself, and at 6:45 in the evening we tuned in to the American Forces Network in Germany, Medium Wave Band, 275 meters, and heard the service sent out by the Church. We got out our hymnals and joined in the singing of the hymns, and it would be impossible to put into words the feelings that rose in our breasts as we sang the hymns along with our people over five thousand miles away. Brother Arthur Rock's voice was very clear and distinct, and we heard every word without the slightest distortion or interference of any kind. The words of the hymns, the organ, and the voices came to us as though they were in our very kitchen, and our eyes filled with tears as we joined in the service. We listened with attention to the sermon on the theme of forgiveness and admired the telling of the story of the prodigal's return to his home.

I feel sure you will also be glad to know that this morning I received by post an invitation to attend the Council Meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance to be held in the Friends Meeting House, Manchester, on October 21. Our pastor, James Barrington, and Elder Alma King are also invited, and tickets of admission as well as tickets for a lunch have been sent to us. This Society has been in existence for many years now, but this is the first time any of our ministers have been invited, and it betokens the fact that much greater respect is being shown to our church now than formerly. Incidentally, I must say that after the service previously referred to, when the announcer came to the microphone as the service ended and said: "That service came to you from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters in Independence, Missouri," our hearts

"Messiah" Publicity Depends on You

Dec. 21, 10:30-12:00 p.m., CST

There is every reason to believe the fourteenth network presentation of "The Messiah" will have more listeners than any previous broadcast. Great quantities of advertising materials are being assembled for distribution to the membership of the church, who in turn will use it on the local level to invite their friends to listen.

A recent survey of C.B.S. station indicates that it will be possible to hear the broadcast in nearly every part of the United States and Canada. The attitude of the stations reflects the quality of the broadcast. It also reflects, perhaps more emphatically, the enthusiasm demonstrated by the members of the church who write the stations each year. Many of the program directors report tremendous listener response to the broadcasts. That is the greatest single factor in getting the program scheduled the following year.

Again this year, Christmas cards will be available for you to mail to your friends. The pastor or publicity person in your branch may request the cards, plus other advertising materials such as posters, newspaper ads, radio publicity, etc. However, if your need is not supplied in that manner, or if you are an isolated member, write directly to the "Messiah" Publicity Director, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, requesting additional cards. They will be sent you promptly.

Obviously, the nature of "Messiah" advertising calls for individual help. Every member must be a "committee of one" to invite friends to hear this immortal classic. The performance this year will undoubtedly be outstanding; the chorus is hard at work in weekly rehearsals. This broadcast, because of the quality of performance and widespread interest has become the finest single public relations effort attempted by the church. With your help, many more new friends will be made and the message of the church will find its way to more and more persons.

The "Messiah" Publicity Director is Charles Neff. Write him, in care of The Auditorium, for information or publicity materials.

The First Presidency
By Israel A. Smith

From Elder Herbert M. Scott, pastor at Des Moines, Iowa, October 6, 1952:

The branch work is moving along splendidly. We baptized fifteen people in August. Every member seems more than eager to help. Five were baptized in our Ft. Des Moines mission recently. The work in the three missions is growing steadily and more permanent with great blessings.

How Shall We Prepare?

STATESMEN AND PREACHERS differ on the principle of whether and how much the country should be prepared against armed conflict. The Bible is used in support of those who believe that the nation should be strongly prepared to defend itself, and those who feel that peace can come only through righteousness and faith in God. As Kipling wrote:

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard;
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And, guarding, calls not thee to guard;
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!

There is still a third group of people who believe that it is not "either or," it is not either arms or prayer, but that the wisdom of the ages, through the lessons of much bitter experience, shows that people should not ask God to do something in the way of their own protection which they can by some effort do for themselves.

The copyrighted poem by Clayton M. Wallace quoted below is used with permission of the Christian Century. The author is not alone in his feelings that Christian people put too much trust in armed might, and too little in the power of brotherly love, but he is unique in using prayer as a medium of chastisement.

BUT FIRST

Dear God, we hear that half the world
Is hungry now, and long has been.
We know our bounty we should share
With all these suffering ones—our kin.
But first, our arms we must increase
To guarantee a lasting peace.

Dear God, we hear that many lands
Are fearful of our wealth and power.
Our friendly heart we need to show
To calm them in this troubled hour.
But first, more A-bombs we must make
For our own peace and safety's sake.

Dear God, we're told that poverty
And need are rampant o'er the earth.
From our abundance, well we know,
We could relieve this tragic dearth.
But first, more planes we need to buy
To gain supremacy in the sky.

Dear God, our world is sore distressed
With bitterness and racial hate.
Help us real brotherhood to show
To every nation, small and great.
And, Lord, before the A-bombs burst,
Teach us to put thy first things first.

The Reality of the Kingdom:

Is Zion Here?

By Clark E. (Tommy) Vincent

TO BRING FORTH and establish the cause of Zion," or to "build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness," is the commission of the Restoration Movement.

Throughout recorded history many other groups and individuals have earnestly sought to build the "perfect society." Plato, Augustine, Aquinas, Bacon, Moore, Fourier, and a host of others have written about, and even experimented with, their respective concepts of the ideal community. Civic and world organizations, from the local P.T.A. to the world-wide UNO, are likewise committed to the task of building a better world. And the espousal of the "social gospel" has focused the attention of many religious denominations upon the improvement of social conditions in the present life.

Even the idea, "from each according to his ability and to each according to his needs," is not new. It is expressed in Greek writings, in Roman law, in the literature of the French Revolution, and quite explicitly in the writings of Karl Marx.

Two Distinguishing Aspects

In what way, then, does the Restoration concept of Zion differ from many of the foregoing plans for the "perfect society"?

There are at least two significant aspects which distinguish our attempts to build a better society. First, we believe that such a society must be God-directed. This implies at least two things. (a) Men must look to God for guidance, and there must be a means of receiving, validating, and recording that guidance. In other words, there must be an open canon of Scripture which is received through a divinely appointed prophet, and which is validated through the assenting voice of the members of the body of Christ who are witnesses of that same spirit of revelation. (b) It also implies that spiritual development is primary, and that social planning, social security, and industrial productivity are secondary.

In the majority of Utopian plans, the "perfect society" is man-directed, man-planned, and has as its primary objective to establish physical and social security for its own members. The failure of countless such endeavors furnishes empirical evidence (for those who require the tangible and measurable) of the wisdom of the Scripture:

Wherefore, seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.¹

F. Henry Edwards has made this point very succinctly in his discussion of the first specific mention of Zion in modern revelation.

Zion is not merely a social or industrial experiment. It is a "Cause," having moral and spiritual significance, as well as social and industrial resultants.²

Quite recently the Lord has indicated that Zion is not dependent upon our social planning or provisions for industrial productivity, but upon "the spiritual condition of my people."³

This is not to suggest that the Restoration Movement is unconcerned with physical and social well-being or that "spiritual development" is an ethereal concept unrelated to everyday life. The point is that we cannot build the kingdom by a type of social planning which becomes an end in itself, or which concerns itself primarily with security and refuge for self—whether that

"self" be an individual, a church, or a nation. It is this overconcern with social and physical security for their own group which has frequently contained the destructive seeds of most Utopian plans. As the Master indicated, it is this attempt to save self which results in the loss or destruction of self.

The social planning as well as the various institutional and organizational aspects of Zion are indispensable. However, they are means to be utilized in achieving the end or goal of individual spiritual development. Most of us have experienced in various types of committee work how planning and organizational concerns can become ends in themselves. All too frequently the original purpose for which committees or organizations are set up becomes forgotten or pushed aside. Jesus was quick to remind his followers that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. When social planning in its organizational aspects becomes primary, then we need again the Master's reminder that organizations, committees, and institutions were made for man and his spiritual development, not vice versa. And just as the social planning and organizational aspects of Zion are means to the end of individual spiritual development, so material prosperity and social security are resultants or by-products of such spiritual development and Christlike living.

Second, we believe that the kingdom of God, the perfect society, will be "in the world but not of it,"⁴ and that the objective is to qualify as many people as possible, rather than limiting it to a chosen few.

Many of the Utopian schemes have sought to establish a "perfect society" by leaving all the problems and "problem people" behind, while a few escape to a geographical and/or ideological island of refuge. The ill, the retarded, the criminal, and all the misfits were to be left behind while a select few were to have peace and security for themselves. The fruitfulness of such procedures is made evident by their failures. Men and women who refuse to help solve the problems and bear the burdens of others have suddenly found similar problems and burdens created in and among themselves. We believe that establishment of His Kingdom necessitates recognition that it is the sick who "have need of the physician." Our commission directs that the Restoration Message be taken to all men.

We do not believe that the perfect society will be established by excluding the hungry, the strangers, the sick, or those in prison. For the righteous will be those who feed the hungry, welcome the stranger, help the sick, and visit the prisoners.⁵ Nor do we believe that Zion will be built by withdrawing from our neighbors or from civic activities and responsibilities. Rather, it will be built by

... living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, *that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.*⁶

This idea is also expressed in many of the parables of the thirteenth chapter of Matthew through which Jesus sought to describe the development of the kingdom of heaven. It was to be "like unto leaven" which lifts the whole. It was like "a grain of mustard seed" which starts as an insignificant and unnoticed thing, but becomes the "greatest among herbs." Or it is "like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind," and the angels (not men in the form of Plato's philosopher kings) shall "sever the wicked from among the just." And again, the "kingdom of heaven is within you." Or it is like to the man who sowed good seed, but tares sprang up during the night. When the servants wanted to pull up the tares, the master of the house said to leave them together "lest ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow until the harvest . . . the harvest . . . is the destruction of the wicked." (Destruction perhaps by conversion?)

These parables, and the foregoing modern-day revelation cited, stress that we are not to withdraw, nor are we to judge or pull up what we think are the tares, lest we destroy ourselves in the process. Rather we are to build the kingdom of God by being "in the world but not of it," by leavening the whole, by being wheat among the tares, and by having the kingdom within us so that the "places where they [we] occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord."

Is Zion Here?

Suppose that tomorrow morning as we pick up the newsboy's well-aimed missile from our front porch, or as we hurriedly pass a newsstand on our way to work, we note a large headline: ZION IS HERE!

What would we do?

(1) Perhaps many of us would simply shake our heads in disbelief, mutter something about the things they do to sell newspapers these days, and go on about our daily tasks. We would feel secure in the assumption of the five foolish virgins that the Lord would have informed us far enough in advance for us to have made adequate preparation.

(2) Others, after the first few moments of disbelief, might proceed hurriedly to reorganize their lives, change their occupations, clear up certain "questionable business deals," and begin to live as if Zion were here.

(3) And perhaps still others, like the five wise virgins, would feel within them the burning affirmation of the validity of such a headline, and continue living the same high quality lives that had filled their lamps with oil.

Is it possible that Zion is here? Is it even possible that startling as such a headline at first appears, it is really out-of-date? If we view Zion as a static concept—as something we sing and dream about that will "happen one of these days"—such a headline is heresy and blasphemy. For with a static concept of Zion we could feel confident that we would know in advance when Zion will arrive, and "we just know" it hasn't arrived yet. For we look at our own lives, as well as at the world, the nation, and community through our lives, and feel assured that Zion is not yet here.

If ours is a static concept of Zion, we will feel, in spite of the lesson of the five foolish virgins and in spite of the Lord's answer in the following scripture, that we will know in advance. But when Jesus was asked by the Pharisees as to when the kingdom of God should come

... he answered them, and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; Neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, Lo, there! For, behold, the kingdom of God has already come unto you.⁷

Zion As a Place AND a Condition

There was a time when arguments were frequent as to whether Zion was a place or a condition. However, even a casual or superficial examination of the more than fifty revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants pertaining to Zion indicates that it is both a place and a condition.

Is Zion here as a place? When you instruct someone to work in San Francisco, or if you can describe the geographical limits of San Francisco, then San Francisco must exist as a place. When individuals have been instructed of the Lord to "labor in Zion,"⁸ and when the Lord has designated a "Center Place" and "regions round about" that can be described and measured geographically, then Zion must exist as a place.

This does not mean that Zion as a place is static. The second distinctive aspect of our concept of the perfect society notes that God does not desire to limit Zion to a few people. Thus he has indicated that, when it is needed, the "borders" of Zion may be enlarged.⁹ It is tempting to want to fall into the mistake of other planners of the "ideal society" who sought to limit the number of inhabitants, and narrow the geographic area of their society to contain a privileged few. God desires to draw all men into a great army to form an ever-expanding kingdom. It does not behoove us to limit the extent, or the manner, in which God may expand the borders of Zion.

Lest we be misunderstood, it must be emphasized that this is in no way to be construed as a de-emphasis upon the importance of the Gathering and the Center Place. The Lord has told us quite explicitly on a number of occasions that we "shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed."¹⁰

The point we are attempting to make here is that Zion does exist as a place with administrative guidance and supervision reaching out from that Center Place to various parts of the world. However, we cannot "wait until we move to the Center Place" before we begin living Zionically. For the Lord has indicated that whether our place of residence is two blocks from the Auditorium and we work in the Herald Publishing House, or whether we live in Germany and we are employed in a factory, our commission is to live and act with the full realization that the "places where they [we] occupy may [can] shine as Zion."

Is Zion here as a condition? This is not as easily answered. However, the Lord has told us that "Zionic conditions," or Zion as a condition, "is no farther away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies."¹¹

Zion As a Process and Its Achievement As Relative

The preceding revelation depicts Zion as a process and its achievement as relative. That is, we are more Zioniac at one time than at another, depending upon our spiritual condition. Thus we might testify as an individual, a family, or as a branch, that we were more Zioniac last year than this year. Or that Zion was here in our branch to a greater degree this Sunday than it was last Sunday.

With such a concept of Zion, the phrase "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God" takes on new meaning. Surely there have been times in our lives, in family experiences, during a church picnic, or throughout the sacrament of the Lord's Supper when Zion was here to a degree, for a time, and we were "not far from the kingdom of God."

But it is not enough for a few occasionally to have Zion for short periods. Our need is for more people to have that spiritual condition, and for all of us to have it more often, if not all the time.

In reading the sketchy account of Enoch and his people in Zion, we get the impression that they grew and developed during those 365 years. That is to say, they were probably more Zioniac at the end of the 365 years than at the end of the first 100 years, yet it was referred to as Zion for the entire period of 365 years. At least, it is recorded that even after the Lord referred to the people as Zion, Enoch continued preaching to them, presumably because increased spiritual development and greater degrees of Zioniac living were yet possible.¹²

Such was true of the Nephites during the "Golden Age." Zion for them was a process of relative achievement which flourished and developed to a high degree in the lives of several generations, but then diminished in the fourth generation.

Zion is not something for which we must wait until a certain fixed day or year has arrived. Rather, it is a process involving spiritual growth—growth which stands each day or moment upon the shoulders of the thoughts and experiences of preceding days and moments.

Thus the question, "Is Zion here as a condition?" would be answered differently by different individuals and branches. Zion is here to a greater degree and more of the time for some individuals, families, and branches than it is for other individuals, families, and branches. Or, as we sometimes put it, some branches and some individuals are "spiritually dead" while others are "spiritually alive." Perhaps to the degree that one is living Zioniacally and another is not, "the one shall be taken and the other left."¹³

Even as with Enoch and his people, there are those whom we know today who have walked and talked with God. There are homes in which we have visited that are Zioniac homes, and there are Zioniac branches—but they are not so all the time, nor to the greatest degree possible. For perhaps if they were Zioniac all the time and to the greatest degree possible, they, like Enoch, would no longer be with us.

Living As If Zion Were Here

As a people we have many outstanding experiences at reunions. Frequently we hear individuals say, "If it could just be like this all the time!" But one of the reasons we experience Zion at reunions is because we live as if we were in Zion. As a result, Zion does exist for a time and to a degree. It is not so much that people associated with us in our occupations or neighborhood prevent us from having Zion on the job and in our community. Rather, it is our attitude of "this is not Zion and these are not church people" that keeps us from acting Zioniacally and consequently from experiencing Zion.

But God has admonished us that we are to build the kingdom by being "in the world but not of it," by leavening the whole, by being wheat among the tares, and by having the kingdom within us, wherever we are, or with whomever we associate, so that the "places where they [we] occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord."

God does not ask the impossible.

The point is this—if Zion is to be, then we must live as if Zion were here! To return to the newspaper headline, what would we do if we thought Zion really were here? Would we pay our tithing? Would we change our occupations? Would we continue working in a brewery, a liquor store, or a cigarette factory? Would we drive differently, vote more conscientiously, or treat our neighbor differently if we thought Zion were here?

In discussing this idea of the reality of the kingdom of God with our church members, we find they sometimes reply that if they thought Zion were really here they would definitely change their occupations and modify their lives. Such individuals are like the five foolish virgins relying on some advance notice to give them time to fill their lamps. If we wait until Zion comes before we make these changes, then Zion will never come for us. If we make those changes now, as if Zion were here, then Zion will be here to a greater degree, more of the time, and for more of us.

As Proverbs tells us, "Where there is no vision, the people perish."¹⁴ Perhaps our vision of Zion too often stalls at the singing and dreaming stage. Like the delegates at a political convention, we sometimes prefer to wait until a "sure thing emerges" before we climb aboard the proverbial bandwagon. Lacking a vision of the reality of the kingdom, and being unchallenged by the remoteness of the "sweet bye and bye," we perish!

Daydreaming about saving a drowning person or facing the enemy's mortar shells does not make a hero. Nor does having a blueprint for the perfect society qualify us for celestial glory. If we are to remain true to the Restoration commission to bring forth and establish the "cause of Zion," then it is imperative that we be caught up by the vision that Zion can be here today, and it is imperative that we live as if Zion were here.

Our incarnation and demonstration of such a vision of the reality of the kingdom would soon lead us to testify that Zion is here, and as was said of Enoch's people, many would "confess that with . . . [us] God has residence below."

Not Appreciated

Deep in every heart is the yearning to be accepted, to be loved, and a feeling that one means something to somebody. But people do not express their appreciation very much. Most of them are like the nine whom Jesus healed. They just go on and forget.

Samuel Leibowitz, now a famous judge, and formerly a great criminal lawyer, saved seventy-eight persons from the electric chair. Yet not one of the seventy-eight ever bothered even to send him a Christmas card. Art King had a radio program called "Job Center of the Air." He got good jobs for 2,500 people, but only ten ever thanked him.

In his very first political speech, Abraham Lincoln said to the voters of Sagamon County, "I have no other ambition so great as that of being truly esteemed by my fellow men." Look into the hearts of most people and you will find their greatest desire is the same as was Lincoln's. And many feel they have missed it.—Charles L. Allen in In Quest of God's Power (Revell)

Corrections and Improvements

THOSE WHO GLANCE through the new edition will immediately notice that one great improvement is the historical background material printed in italics at the beginning of each section. Heretofore, usually only the date, with perhaps the individual to whom the revelation was given, was mentioned. The revelations will be much better understood in the light of the setting in which they were given to the church.

The next improvement which will be noted is that the longer paragraphs have been subdivided without changing the section or paragraph number, nor breaking up the sentences with periods. Each division of a paragraph carries a lower case letter from "a" through the alphabet according to the number of divisions made. The index, as well as Starks' Concordance to the book, refers only to the section and paragraph number and will be just as usable with the new text as with the old.

It has long been apparent that the reading of the book has been marred, if not misunderstood, by certain grammatical errors. After considerable research these corrections were listed and submitted to the Presidency for approval. In several instances the changes were not approved lest they open questions or issues which might change the content or disturb some reader. None of the changes made have in the least altered the meaning of these Scriptures; they have only corrected the language to more nearly say what it obviously was intended to say.

The authority for these changes rests in the editorial responsibility of the Presidency and, therefore, does not require a General Conference approval nor involve administrative rights. It should be apparent that it is always right to do right and is "never too late to mend."

Doubtlessly there will be many who, for financial or sentimental reasons, will not wish to give up their old Doctrine and Covenants at this particular time, but will want to know about these grammatical changes. We are, therefore, appending the complete list of the 140 corrections which have been made in this 1952 edition, so that those who wish may use it to correct their old editions.

Books

They Dare to Believe, by Robert M. Bartlett, Association Press, New York.

This book tells of moral courage exemplified sometimes amid great physical distress. It is a great and wonderful thing to know that in the twilight zones of this earth's existence there are those from all walks of life, speaking different languages, of all races, in whom the light of truth burns brightly. This book is well worth reading, for it reminds one of a statement made by President Elbert A. Smith in 1920, when he stated to the assembled priesthood that our Heavenly Father had many forces at work in the world that we knew not of, forces which were in movement to bring to pass the divine purpose.

There are seventeen men and women featured in this little book. They come from the United States, Great Britain, Norway, Germany, Lebanon, India, Korea, China, Poland, Japan, France, and South America. A more cosmopolitan cross section could not be found. Yet in this one thing they all speak the same language. None of them fear the face of clay; not one of them is daunted by adversity; all of them share a vision of world brotherhood; all of them believe in the ultimate good and in the freedom of man. One cannot but take a deep breath and stand a little straighter, lift his head a little higher as he feels his resolves strengthened by their beckoning courage and their faith in the vision for the future of mankind.

As to the literary style of the book, I found no difficulty in reading it. The style, and the simplicity of the presentation appealed to me, and I can recommend the book to our church members, and especially to the men of the ministry, for it will broaden the horizon and strengthen the faith of our people in mankind.—ARTHUR A. OAKMAN

There Was a Man Named John

The funeral sermon of Elder John F. Sheehy given at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, on October 4, 1952

By Elbert A. Smith

ONE OF OUR BEST-KNOWN PASTORS at one time said that a funeral sermon should do three things: first, it should bring a tribute of respect to the departed; second, it should stress the hope of the resurrection; third, it should comfort the bereaved.

Our Affectionate Tribute

My hope and prayer is that I may minister at this time in all those ways. Wherein I fail or fall short may the good Spirit minister adequately. From deep down in my heart I can render an affectionate tribute to the memory of my long-time friend; John Sheehy. Our friendship, I believe, went back to his early ministry. Jesus sanctified the word "friend" when he said to his followers, "I will no longer call you servants; I will call you my friends."

Your presence here today in such great numbers is a tribute to his memory. The presence here of representative men from all the leading quorums and councils of the church is a tribute rendered on behalf of the priesthood and the membership of the entire church throughout the world. Thousands who are not here today join in this tribute as they remember him and his many acts of kindly ministrations. We have heard from the lips of the president of the church how Brother John ministered in the home of the president in his time of sorrow. With equal devotion he ministered in the homes of the unknown, the obscure.

His official ministry began in the New England states, Maine, Massachusetts, and New York. He came to the Middle West, to Cameron, Independence, and Kansas City in Missouri, and then went on to California, and later into Canada, at Toronto. As a missionary he visited other areas too numerous to mention.

He served for eight years from this pulpit of the Stone Church in his public ministrations and privately in his visitations to many homes in counsel and comfort to many individuals. His voice was well known over the radio.

We honor him for his sincerity, for his good cheer, for his devotion to duty. We honor him as a church worker; we honor him as a good citizen; we honor him as a home builder in co-operation with his good wife.

Brother Sheehy was fortunate to have had a wife so devoted, so loyal, and so efficient in helping him in the ministry and home building. He was fortunate to have had the love of children and grandchildren, to have three sons to follow in his footsteps in church work and in the priesthood.

He did his work well, and he was able to work almost to the very end of life. This is, I think, as he would have wished it. In fact, his wife said, as nearly as I can remember, that his last words that she heard were, "I must be at work."

LET ME DIE WORKING

Still tackling plans unfinished, tasks undone!
Clean to its end, swift may my race be run.
No laggard steps, no faltering, no shirking;
Let me die, working!

I believe Brother John Sheehy could very well have voiced the farewell that Paul wrote to his friend Timothy in the very last chapter of his epistle.

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—II Timothy 4: 6-8.

Life's race well run,
Life's work well done,
And now comes rest.

After a period of rest we may very well believe that again comes service, without which a man accustomed to serve could not be happy, even in heaven. I am sure that a man of John's temperament, much as he loved to sing, would not be happy to spend eternity singing hymns or playing a harp. I think that we are quite well justified in the Scriptures, especially in the Doctrine and Covenants, in believing that in the great beyond we shall find something to do—something very fine and worth while, even exceeding our present power to imagine.

Our Hope in the Great Beyond

Brother Sheehy believed and preached all the gospel principles, including the doctrine of the resurrection. He understood, too, something about that period of time between death and the resurrection of which Alma, in the Book of Mormon, writes so very plainly.

Therefore there is a time appointed unto men, that they shall rise from the dead; and there is a space between the time of death and the resurrection. And now concerning this space of time. What becometh of the souls of men, is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know. And when the time cometh when all shall rise, then shall they know that God knoweth all the times which are appointed unto man. Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow.—Alma 19: 39-44.

The book of Revelation is difficult to interpret in many of its passages, but here is one statement that John the Revelator makes so clear anyone can understand:

I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, . . . that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.—Revelation 14: 13.

Jesus very plainly said:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they who hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man. Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all who are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they who have done good, in the resurrection of the just; and they who have done evil, in the resurrection of the unjust.—John 5: 25-29, I.V.

A little later, when he was about to raise Lazarus from the dead, Jesus said to Martha:

I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11: 25.

Where Turn for Comfort?

However much we believe in the resurrection and eternal life, we grieve because of the loss of present companionship with those whom we have loved, and still love. Where shall we turn for comfort? True and loyal friends may comfort us. They bring moral support, warmth, and affection. Their ministry, however, is limited. Most of us at such times, however much we wish to comfort the bereaved, find our words so inadequate that we are almost tongue-tied. Often the things that we do speak louder than anything that we can say. We may best turn to the words of our Lord and Savior for comfort:

In Everything Give Thanks

By Charles A. Reedy

ON THE COMING Thanksgiving morning, I shall attend church services with my family—the usual custom among our people. In response to the minister's invitation for members to express their sentiments, I shall arise to my feet and say:

I'm thankful that I'm able to attend this special meeting dedicated to Almighty God and testify of the many blessings we enjoy.

In full possession of my faculties I'm exceedingly thankful for the fine state of health which I have today. When I see the handicapped I'm doubly grateful of the fact that I have a sound body. Then I renew my determination to do all within my power to lessen the burden they bear and increase their happiness. As one of the blessed, I must never shirk my responsibilities to my church, my home, my community, and my country.

I'm thankful that I live in a land of plenty, a land blessed of God above all other countries. By being so richly endowed, I'm mindful that we should share our blessings that all might have a goodly portion. I'm thankful that my children are not ragged and diseased, homeless outcasts sleeping in doorways and eating from garbage cans. I'm thankful that I'm able to provide nourishing food for my children, that they are not skin and bones, or their stomachs bloated from lack of food. I'm thankful that we don't have to mix our mashed potatoes with sawdust to stretch our rations, nor strip bark from trees, nor boil the grasses from the fields to keep from starving. I'm thankful that we don't have to stand in bread lines or in front of soup kitchens to get our daily sustenance. Therefore I'm deeply concerned with the policy to eliminate these conditions in less prosperous nations by donations and outright gifts through C. A. R. E.

I feel I'm deeply privileged on this national Thanksgiving day to be able to sit down to a turkey dinner with all the trimmings, surrounded by my loved ones and invited friends and ask the grace over a bountiful meal.

After partaking of this wonderful feast, I can drive in my own automobile to the local stadium and witness a football game played by healthy American youths motivated by clean sportsmanship. I'm thankful that I can cheer my favorite team without the man by my side feeling offended about my partisan attitude.

I realize that if I lived in other countries where war instead of sports occupies the interest of the people, I might be forced to stand at attention while armed troops goose-stepped along. While listening to muffled drums and marching feet, I would not dare to protest against the leaders or utter my thoughts aloud for fear that the person next to me might be a member of the secret police. A fate worse than death could await me for broadcasting my personal convictions.

I'm thankful I can listen to the radio, tuning in whatever program I choose—a privilege denied citizens of other nations at various times; for the penalty is death to be caught listening to foreign broadcasts and special propaganda sent their way.

I'm thankful that a man's home is his castle, that this is the ideal pattern in the scheme of daily living, not only approved by our nation but ordained by our Heavenly Father. I'm thankful that it is a home founded on the principles of love and personal sacrifice to provide the right kind of environment for the building of decent characters in children.

I'm thankful that I live in a land dedicated by our forefathers to the philosophy that all men are created equal and entitled to life, freedom, and the pursuit of happiness. Regardless of where we were born or who our parents are, it is possible for us to rise to the top in any chosen profession, overcoming the barriers of race, creed, and color. I pray God that the time will soon come when men in all countries will be freed from the shackles of bondage and be able to govern themselves, when wars and strife shall cease and the world will be dominated by brotherly love.

I'm thankful that if I desire to travel, I can do so without having to apply at the nearest police station for a permit, to be granted after satisfying the authorities that my motives for sightseeing, visiting relatives, or business reasons are not subterfuges for undermining or spying on the nation's defenses. I'm thankful that we have a heritage of freedom to pull up stakes, settle elsewhere, and work on a new occupation if we so desire.

I'm thankful that our country does not believe might is right, but that justice, fairness, and equality are stronger than brute force and tyranny. I'm thankful we have the right of free speech and the right to serve God through the medium of any religion we choose. I'm thankful that I can choose my friends and reject meddling individuals who try to make my business their business. I'm thankful that my home is a symbol of independence where outsiders cannot enter and destroy.

I'm thankful for the gospel and the message of Jesus Christ. It has given me hope of a life in the beyond. When daily tasks and troubles prove to be a burden, the words of the Master are not an empty promise, "Come unto me and I will give you rest." I'm thankful for the church and the moral uplift it brings as it teaches the deepest religious convictions to members of my household.

I'm thankful that the church provides an outlet for service not only to the local congregation but to the world at large. By service and with love for our fellow-men, we find the happiness that Jesus Christ intended we should find on earth. I'm thankful that I've been taught that if we obey the law of the land and God, we shall have no need to fear anything or anyone.

I shall carry this spirit of thankfulness into the Christmas season, celebrating the birth of Jesus Christ. I shall thank God for the coming of his Son to this earth and his influence in shaping the destiny of mankind. When I enter into the spirit of giving, it shall be done freely without thought of what I might receive in return.

I shall carry this spirit of thankfulness into the new year, being grateful that I'm permitted to play the role of a good citizen, father, and a Christian in shaping the lives of my loved ones, doing each day the tasks that are mine, keeping a firm hold on the rudder of the church of Jesus Christ, unafraid of what may lie ahead.

Yes, I believe "in everything give thanks."

The Story of Alma Part II

By Madelyn Galbraith

ALMA STOOD beside the lake which was called Mormon, a large crowd around him. His flock had grown until now more than four hundred people occupied pleasant homes, where but a short time before he had dwelt in a cave alone.

As he stood among them, ready to teach and baptize, the approach of two women disturbed the service. Their rich gowns and heavy veils proclaimed them strangers. Alma paused in his speech as they drew near.

"Alma, I must see you alone," a low voice answered his greeting.

Leaving Helam to continue, he led them to his own home. Once inside, one of the women threw aside her veil, and Alma started forward.

"Esther!" he cried.

"Yes, it is I, Alma. I have searched for you a long time. I have come to take you home."

"Did Noah send for me?" For a moment Alma had visions of openly teaching the people; he saw beautiful churches rise all over the land—but Esther's reply banished all these dreams.

"Noah is still angry, but I am sure that if you come back and sue for pardon, he will reinstate you. Then we can see each other as before."

"Do not tempt me, Esther! It is with shame that I recall the past—false to my God, false to my king, to you, and to myself! Can't you see how grievously we have sinned?"

"What has come over you, Alma? I have heard of your fanatical teachings! Do you think you are more righteous than Amulon, Heziah, Shezer, and the other priests who are older and more experienced than you?"

"No, I tremble before my God because of my past sins and present weakness. But he has redeemed my soul from hell, and I now glory in His gospel which he has sent me to preach."

"You have been misled by that crazy Abinadi, who has met his just fate. I will leave you to consider what I have said." She came closer to him, her silken draperies billowing about her.

"Think what we have been to each other, Alma! Think of your wealth—lost to you if you continue in this mad scheme. Think of your position in Noah's court! Can you throw all that away to lead the rabble you have gathered about you here? If you do not come home soon, I shall return for you. Come, Naida."

Her companion obeyed, but paused before Alma long enough to whisper, "Don't come back, Alma. It isn't safe."

ALMA WATCHED them go, then sank on to a bench and covered his face with his hands.

"A beautiful woman, Alma," said the voice of the Tempter, "and she loves you still. Her lips are soft and warm. Can you give her up for this? And what of your wealth you were forced to leave behind? And Noah always favored you. These things can be yours again, if you want them enough! One word from you . . ."

"Alma." It was the voice of Helam. He stood in the doorway looking at the bowed figure of his friend. Then, kneeling quietly beside him, he prayed humbly and earnestly that Alma be given the wisdom and strength to make the right decision. When he had finished, Alma spoke.

"I thought it was forever past, Helam. Then Esther came and held it up before me, and I saw it all as in a mirror. I didn't know I could be so weak. But it is past, for the present, at least, and I am determined to continue my work, even though death awaits me."

With renewed courage and diligence Alma went on with his preaching. Periodically he called the members of the priesthood together and discussed with them the problems that daily arose. They sought divine light and guidance and went out from these meetings, each to his particular group, blessed and strengthened. The people also grew in things of the Spirit. Peace, happiness, and contentment dwelt with them until one day the small community was thrown into an uproar. Again it was a woman who caused the excitement.

NAIDA breathlessly forced her way through a group to Helam.

"Quick," she cried, "where is Alma?"

Helam motioned his companions aside and, taking the girl's arm, led her away.

"What is the trouble, Naida? Is Esther coming back?"

"No, it is much worse! My father learned of our absence and forced Esther to tell where we had been. As soon as the Harvest Feast is past, he will send an army to take Alma and all of his followers!"

"This is news! Alma is in his garden. We shall go to him at once."

Naida again told her story. "I came as quickly as I could," she concluded. "What will you do?"

"What will you do?" he asked by way of answer.

"May I go with your people? I dare not go home."

"Are you sure you want to go? Remember what you are forsaking if you cast your lot with us. We have no riches—all are equal here."

"There must be much to compensate for the loss of wealth and position, Alma, else you would not be here. I would rather be numbered among the people of God than to be the king's daughter." Then suddenly remembering their danger she asked, "Had we not better hurry away?"

"We will ask for divine guidance," Alma said. Following their example she, too, knelt.

THE PRAYERS these young men offered were a revelation to her. Of a deeply religious nature, she had often sought instruction from the priests of her father's court and had been put off with evasive answers. She had listened many times to long, meaningless prayers that were of no inspiration to anyone.

But these two—once members of that priesthood—now prayed with a reverence and assurance that surprised her. They felt no doubt about receiving the directions they asked. God had made them certain promises, and they had come to prove him, never questioning his ability nor willingness to answer them. As she thought of these things, a third voice spoke.

"Alma, it is my will that ye leave this place, for the armies of Noah will soon come in search of thee. Let everything be done in order, that there be no confusion. Gather the people together, and instruct them in the manner of their departure, that there be no unnecessary delay. I have brought Naida to thee for a purpose. She has sought knowledge of those not sent to teach, and has been wandering in spiritual darkness. She has pleased me in seeking light, and she shall be blessed with understanding. My Spirit shall rest upon her, and her faith in me shall never waver. There are great trials awaiting thee, Alma. Thy faith shall be tried until thou shalt wonder if anything, even life eternal, be worth so great a price. But remember, I am with thee always and will never leave thee alone. And when the darkness engulfs thee, reach out thy hand and clasp mine, and lo, I will lead thee on."

Two days later the small village was deserted, and the moon looked down on the silent streets. The waves washed the shores of the lake; the fountain still sprayed its silver mist over the entrance to the cave.

Down to the water's edge two deer came to drink. In a thicket near by a night bird called, to be answered by its mate farther back in the forest.

A WEEK HAD PASSED when a band of soldiers entered the deserted town. "It has a strange look to me, Sam," said one.

"I agree with you. Do you remember the prophecies of the fanatic, Abinadi?" his companion asked.

"Perhaps he was not a fanatic," the first speaker replied, closely watching the other's face.

"You mean . . . ?" Sam asked guardedly.

"Did he not prophesy dissension among us? Did he not foretell failure of our crops and the death of the king? A part of his prophecy has already been fulfilled. We expected a large grape harvest. There was every indication of the heaviest yield we have ever had; never have I seen fruit look more promising. We planned our harvest festival; we gathered our grapes; their skins seemingly ready to burst with juice. And when we crushed them, we found them empty! Not one drop of new wine throughout the entire kingdom!

"Alma led away a part of our people, where, we know not. We have come to what must have been a prosperous community, and there is not a soul in it! We know they were here, tending their flocks, cultivating their gardens, and today there is nothing! Weeds are running over garden plots, wild animals lurk in the deserted dwellings, and although they cannot have been gone two weeks, yet they have left no trail. It seems impossible for so large a group of people, with their herds, to have gone, leaving no trace."

"Yes, and their herds must have been large, judging from all the evidence around here. Men do not build folds and enclosures so spacious unless there are animals to confine in them. But hush! Here comes Shem!"

"Did you see any trace of them, Shem?"

"No, I think they must have flown! What will King Noah say? He has sworn to destroy Alma."

"It were better that he make no idle boast! A greater power than Noah's seems to be over Alma. As for me, I'm tired of the tyranny of this pompous king. He is bringing destruction upon us, and the prophecies of Abinadi will yet be fulfilled!"

* * * * *

A LMA PAUSED and looked out over the valley that lay before him before he signaled his people to halt.

"This," he said, "is the place the Lord showed me. Let us rest here and give thanks to him who has led us to so pleasant a land."

The hills, hung with a veil of purple mist, hovered over a valley, quiet and peaceful in the glow of the moon's soft radiance. The trees cast long wavering shadows over the grass-carpeted earth.

Reverently, the people knelt where they were, and as Alma uttered a simple, heartfelt prayer, the Holy Spirit seemed to rest upon everything in the valley; even the cattle ceased their lowing, and lay down in silence.

* * * * *

IN THE YEARS that followed, the city grew to noble proportions and pushed out to the purple foothills. And the people were righteous and happy and became more prosperous as time passed.

On to this scene of peace and contentment burst the news that an invading horde was pouring through the mountain pass. Flocks and herds were driven into the city, while Alma was told the distracting news.

"While I was gathering my grain," said one, "I looked up and they were coming down the mountainside like ants!"

"Or like bees that seek a new hiving place," another offered. "How can we defend ourselves, seeing we are a pastoral people?"

"We are not prepared to defend ourselves," Alma agreed, "but we have a Protector whom our foes do not know. We will call upon him in our hour of need. Come with me, Helam."

"What are your plans?" Helam asked.

"I hardly know. If I only knew what lay ahead! I am going to offer myself, if in doing so I can save my people. Other than that, I have no plans."

"It will not save them. I am constrained by the Spirit to say that we must pass through some very troublous times, a period that will test our patience and our faith. But we must remain faithful and pray always, for God is indeed our only defense," Helam assured him.

MONTHS PASSED. The Lamanites moved in and took possession of the pleasant Land of Helam. Alma and his people were virtual prisoners.

One evening he stood at a window gazing outside moodily. Behind him sat a group of priests and teachers, called together secretly for prayer and counsel.

"We should have known they meant us no good, in spite of their promises," he said. "They have increased their guards and put taskmasters over us as though we were slaves. We cannot even worship God publicly!"

"If Amulon and others of Noah's priesthood had not been among them we would have fared better. Amulon was always jealous of your position with Noah," Helam said.

"And my people must pay for his hatred of me! My wife, burdened beyond her strength, must go about at the command of these godless men!" Alma cried rebelliously, his hands clenched at his side.

"But do not forget," the soft-voiced Naida spoke, "that God has heard our prayers, and the burdens are no longer heavy to bear." She found his hand and clasped it as she repeated softly, "But remember, I am with thee always, and will never leave thee alone, and when the darkness engulfs thee, reach out thy hand and clasp mine, and I will lead thee on."

Alma fell to his knees with a cry of repentance.

"Lord, I believe! Forgive my weakness!"

A voice spoke reassuringly, "Be comforted, my son, for tomorrow I will lead thee out of bondage. 'Thou, Alma, shalt go before this people, and I will go with thee.'"

With great rejoicing the news was spread among the people, and all night they were busy gathering their flocks and herds.

At daybreak, Alma, his faith and courage renewed, led his followers out of the Land of Helam. At the end of the day they came to a narrow valley where they found water and pasturage for their flocks.

Alma called them together for thanksgiving and prayer, and in a short time the moon looked down on the sleeping camp.

They were astir early the next morning, and Alma had again called the hour of prayer when the voice of the Spirit spoke:

"Alma, arise and hasten out of this place. Thine enemies are awake and in pursuit of thee. Lose no time, but go quickly! I will stop them here."

The camp was soon in motion, and when the sun rose, Alma was leading his people to a new place of refuge.

The last of them had passed beyond the mountains that formed the valley when a mighty noise caused them all to turn and look back. As they watched they saw one of the mountains split in two, and a part of it slide into the passage through which they had so lately come!

Alma and his people were at last free from the persecutions of their enemies, for the gateway from the valley was forever closed.

(The End)

A Man Named John

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. . . . And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. . . . The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.—John 14: 1-3, 16-18, 26, 27, A.V.

Jesus was preaching his sermon of consolation just before going out into the Garden of Gethsemane. Forgetting his own dangers, he was comforting his followers. He was not speaking to just eleven men; he was speaking to all people, to you and to me, and, miraculously, his words uttered to those few men eventually found their way into print. I am told they are in almost a thousand languages and dialects, and have gone to peoples throughout the world of every race and color.

A Personal Testimony

May I bear my own testimony? I have known sorrow. I lost my father and mother, my first-born son, and more recently my companion of so many years; and I have not found anywhere words of more comfort than those I have quoted. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. . . . I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. . . . Peace I leave with you . . . peace give I unto you. . . . Let not your heart be troubled, neither afraid."

To you who mourn just now—his wife, his children, his grandchildren, his friends—may I remind you that John Sheehy preached the gospel of good cheer. He was a very cheerful man. May I remind you that without question he would not wish you to grieve as those without hope. If he were here today, speaking in my stead, I think he would say as I do to you, "Take up the tasks of life and go on with courage and with faith and in good cheer. Be comforted. Find peace and courage." Believe the things that he believed; trust the promises that he trusted.

Church News From Japan and Korea

TOKYO, JAPAN.—Since our last article in the Herald we have received several letters from members who have friends or relatives over here. We wish to take this opportunity to thank each of them for letting us hear from them.

Colonel Deane Gough from Pennsylvania passed through Yokohama on his way to Korea recently. He obtained the names of the Samuelas and the Crums from the Saints in Seattle. He and the Crums were able to have dinner at the Samuela home before he left. The day before he left they spent the afternoon with him in Yokohama and took him to meet the O. R. Tice family in that city.

We received a letter from Mrs. Seth Osborn of Lawton, Oklahoma, telling us of her husband, M/Sgt. Seth Osborn who is stationed in Korea. He is due for a rest and rehabilitation leave and we hope to meet with him at that time.

Mr. and Mrs. Cothorn from Independence have written telling us of their son, George, who is here in Japan working with Boeing Engineer service. He called recently and told us that his work takes him so far away from here to Guam, that he finds it hard to attend regular meetings.

We had a letter from Mrs. Giberson of Myrtle Point, Oregon, telling us of a nurse, First Lieutenant Ella Leary who is a nonmember but interested in the church. Mrs. Giberson sent her pamphlets about the church and also The Call at Evening. After she finished the book she passed it out to the patients in her ward in the evacuation hospital in Korea where she works, and she reports that as one patient finished it he passed it on to another.

Alma Blair of Independence who is in Korea recently spent some time in Tokyo going to school. While here he found the time to visit with the Crums and the Samuelas.

Pvt. Blair told us of Dale Swall who is in Korea. We have not met him as yet but hope to when he comes to Japan on his rest and rehabilitation.

Neil Rew who is stationed at Otsu, Japan, called Elder Crum recently and hopes before too long to get a five-day pass to come and visit the Saints in this area.

Darrell Radcliffe called Elder Crum recently telling them that he is now stationed at Camp Fuji. Not long ago he processed through Camp Drake and I was able to go and get him and bring him to our home for a few hours before he left for his new station.

Recently we saw the little article in the Herald by the Lester Denton family of El Dorado, Kansas, asking for members to contact them. We had Mrs. Tice of that city call her and now we have Mrs. Denton and three of her children in our group.

Some of our members have served their time overseas and have now gone back to the States. Among those are the following: Sgt. Thelma Perry who visited with us before she left. Alvin Stevens who also visited with us before he left. We have had a letter from him since he arrived in the States. He has been released from service and is now home with his parents in Cross Timbers, Missouri. Robert Wehling called me from Sasebo before he left for the States.

In August Carol Crum sailed on the "President Cleveland" for the States after visiting with her parents, Elder and Mrs. Crum, this summer. Upon arrival in Independence she is entering nurses training at the "San."

On September 21, sixteen adults and children met at the O. R. Tice home to make plans to organize a church school and for an occasional preaching service. After a potluck dinner, plans were made to have such services at the Tice home each Sunday as there were more people in that area and the Tokyo members have cars for transportation. At the finish of the business meeting Elder Crum blessed Christine Samuela.

Recently Elder Crum had a letter from Major Caldwell who is in Korea. He is making every effort to get all the members there in Each member has been notified here in Japan by letter of our church school.

On October 1, Lt. Fred Lysinger of Lamoni, Iowa, and Second Lieutenant Francis Preseler of Fort Collins, Colorado, processed through Camp Drake, Japan. While here they visited with us and also had dinner one night. They attended church services in Yokohama on Sunday. Later that day they visited with Elder and Mrs. Crum and had dinner in their home.

Now in New Church

GARY, INDIANA.—After many years meeting in the homes of members and holding services in different halls throughout the city, the Saints purchased a church building from the United Brethren, located at 4357 Massachusetts Street, in Gary. The first services held in the church were on Easter Sunday when the Saints from Hammond and Chicago met for an all-day meeting with the group. President W. Wallace Smith was the guest speaker.

District President J. C. Stuart gave a report on General Conference and introduced Sister W. W. Smith who spoke to the women during the class period in church school.

Smith, in the afternoon prayer service.

The men and women of the branch have worked all summer on the church building. The exterior has been painted, the upper auditorium decorated, and the men are putting in a cement floor in the lower auditorium, planning a kitchen, dining hall, and classrooms.

On October 5, a candlelight installation and Communion service was held. The installation service was under the direction of Elder A. H. Tomlinson who introduced Elder D. H. The Foreign God mand money at her death. And as she talked about her God and sang the one hymn she knew, "Jesus Loves Me," Tao's eyes would have a strange, almost hunted look.

By Lois Ernsberger

EVEN WITH EIGHTY WINTERS behind him, Tao was proud. His step was still firm as he balanced the wooden yoke with the large buckets of water from his shoulders. He lived with his wife in one small room of the servants' quarters, halfway down the hill from the big house, located in the Chungking hills. The master of the big house was captain of a ship on the Yangtse River. Tao was night watchman of the big house, for being captain necessitated the master's being away many nights. He made his bed on an alcove of the veranda and at intervals throughout the night circled the house, testing the shutters. But as the first streaks of sunlight foretold the coming dawn Tao hurried down the hill to Mrs. Tao.

There were other servants who shared the Taos' quarters, yet it seemed as though the old couple lived all alone. They took their meals together, apart from the others, and while the others would harangue and debate noisily, they remained quietly on a bench outside their room. Tao might be busily repairing a bamboo basket and Mrs. Tao intently doing her mending. Sometimes she would hurriedly lay aside her mending, and Tao would drop his basket to support her frail body as she sat taut with convulsive coughing.

THERE WAS SOMETHING infinitely tender about Tao and his wife. They never kissed "hello" or "good-by" or gave any other outward demonstration of their affection, but one could sense they cared. It was noticeable at mealtime when Tao insisted his wife have some special tidbit he knew she was fond of. And it could be seen in the way Mrs. Tao smoothed the creases from Tao's washed and dried garments.

Even when they argued it was noticeable. And they did argue—not the noisy, irritable harangue of the other servants, but quietly and in their own dignified way they argued. For Mrs. Tao was a Christian, and Tao was not. In fact he feared this foreign God.

The two of them were old, he said. There was not much more time in the present world. She should give up this untried God and return to the beliefs of her ancestors. Did she wish her spirit to be lost and crying? Forever to be banished from a safe life in the next world because the ancestral gods hadn't been appeased? The foreign God would forget one poor old woman's spirit. He was busy with the foreign souls. It was best that she take many coppers to the temple and buy herself new favor—and a good life to come.

But Mrs. Tao remained unwavering. Her new God cared not whether she was rich or poor, nor did he de-

THE MASTER was home on stop-over when Tao came to the big house with the news that his wife was dead. He would take no money to help with the funeral. He spurned sympathy. There were no professional mourners with their wailing and chanting. The clang of cymbals and the weird cry of the fiddle were not heard. For Tao had refused the mourners. He refused to have a feast, and no paper money would pay his wife's way to the next world.

Already Tao had bought lumber and was fashioning the casket. A couple of days later he trudged up the hill to the big house. Would the captain and his wife help with the burial? He didn't know the Christian God's custom. With the shiny pine casket balanced on his shoulder Tao took his burden to the grassy knoll on the side of the hill. The captain and his wife followed. Kneeling, Tao shifted the box tenderly into its oblong hollow. The captain said the service, and his wife offered prayer. Tao picked up the spade. "Please, Missy," he said suddenly, "sing that song she loved." And the captain's wife sang softly, "Jesus Loves Me."

When the song was through Tao turned to the woman. Fear and grief struggled in his usually placid expression.

"There is little time left me," he said, "but I will be a Christian." And as he turned and patted the earth with his spade once more he murmured, "I will follow you, old woman, even to your foreign heaven."

Neighbors in Zion

By Marie Gosline

WHEN ZION is established, our neighbors there may surprise us. I used to think when I was a small child, "Won't it be wonderful when the new day comes? Then all my friends will be sorry they aren't Reorganized Latter Day Saints. Yes—even my teacher will be sorry." I seemed to take morbid delight in believing that only Reorganized Latter Day Saints would arise from the graves in the town cemetery, wearing robes of white. In my childish mind I had skipped an important part of the Bible which says something about Jesus being sent to save the people—not just Reorganized Latter Day Saints—from their sins. I had skipped the part which says, "Come unto me all ye who labor and I will give you rest."

Now, in maturity, I know that when the Lord comes to Zion, he will have to meet him there those whom he has picked and chosen. He will place there those who have used their talents to glorify his work. He will place there men from all corners of the earth. He will place there many who have "walked in his paths." Some of these may surprise us.

IF I AM FAVORED enough to be able to sit in a rocking chair on my porch in that beautiful city of Zion, I will probably have for my neighbors some who are my friends now. Here in this small county of Marin, we have about a half-dozen women—active members. Yet there were twenty-one persons at church in our rented hall the other day. That, I believe, is a near record. But, of those half-dozen active women, all of them—save perhaps myself—are talented, and they use their talents to glorify God's work. When one speaks of talent, one usually means that a person can sing, play the piano, or write a poem. These are not the only talents that the Lord has blessed his servants with. We have found, here in Marin County, that much can be done for the Lord's work by those with other talents. We have here several who are excellent seamstresses. They use their talent willingly and usefully in his cause. We have another who is adept at giving home permanents. This she does, and each customer donates a small fee, which goes into the General Church fund. We have others who make excellent cakes, so I am certain if ever there is a cake sale in that heaven on earth called Zion, the Lord will have need of these women.

BUT NOT ONLY these will find a place there. I believe that the Lord will search deep in the heart of each individual, and if he finds what he is looking for in that heart he will pick that person up from the crowd and place him in Zion. I am thinking now of a man nearing eighty years of age, who, although not a member of any church, will surely have a spot in Zion. I am sure this neighbor of mine, with his blue patched overalls, his worn straw hat, and his mended shirt will be one of my neighbors in Zion; for each year he plants six rows of corn—two for his wife and himself, two for his children, and two for his neighbors and friends.

I am just as certain that that neighbor of mine, who, though not a member of our church, brought me broth the day I was ill, will find a home in Zion. Each time she goes to the big city, she comes back bringing among her numerous parcels, packages, and bundles, some little tidbit for me. Perhaps it will be a choice bit of pastry—perhaps a few pieces of candy. Again it might be a loaf of freshly baked bread from our favorite bakery. But how well I know that the Lord sees all her good works and smiles upon her for them. How well I know that when he chooses those who will greet him in Zion, this neighbor of mine will be among the numbered ones.

BUILDING ZION is a great undertaking—so great it is going to call for all who have a willing heart to help. It is going to call for everyone to find his talent and to use it. It is a work which calls for skilled hands. We want no crude workmanship in the building of Zion. It is a work which calls for those with clean hands and pure hearts—who have deep in their hearts the love of the Father.

It is not too soon to begin training ourselves to be Zionite neighbors. It is not too soon to show the world that we are Saints who know how to live, how to treat one another, and how to share. The rest is up to the Lord, for he and he alone will choose our neighbors in that great city.

The Unknown Soldier Speaks

By Jennie Z. Elliott

To the nation I am the Unknown Soldier, and I lie in a marble tomb in Arlington among the nation's heroes dead. But to you, the nation's gold star fathers and mothers, I am Bob, I am Bill, I am Jim, I am Jack, Sam, Tom—I am your son. Whether it was where poppies bloomed, blood-red in Flanders Field in that war to end all war, or on some tiny coral atoll of the Pacific in World War II, or on Korea's Heartbreak Ridge that I gave my last full measure of devotion, I am your son. And when on this Armistice Day the bugle sounds and the wreaths are laid upon my tomb, you will be proud because a grateful nation honors me.

On this Day of Remembrance it is for your other sons, my brothers, that the nation prays that war and strife shall cease. In its stead may peace—Christ's eternal peace—come to reign on earth, even as it reigns in heaven.

Bob Dawson and His "Seeing Eye"

The story of two brave people who have learned to make every day Thanksgiving.

By Camilla Collins

IF YOU SHOULD VISIT the Graceland College campus and see a tall, husky, alert man with a white cane, just say, "Hi, Bob," and the smile that flashes back will make you want to pause for a chat. Bob will not be alone. Neither will he have a seeing-eye dog, for as he explains, "Why should I have a dog when I have a faithful wife like Edie? Then, too, God has given me a marvelous blessing which not all blind folks have. We call it facial vision. It's a sensitivity to approaching objects which enables me to sense the presence of an object five or more feet away. Of course I don't know whether it's a tree or a telephone pole," Bob smiles, "but it's a great help."

Bob and Edith came to Graceland as freshmen in the fall of 1951 because they felt they wanted to be among church people during their college career. They say they have found in Lamoni and on the hill everything that they had hoped for: kindness, helpfulness, clean living, and best of all a glowing friendship . . . "a little corner of Zion," as Edith expressed it. "When I was ill at the Sanitarium recently our friends and neighbors brought our family such good food and did so many kind deeds for us—it was wonderful! We've also found peace of mind, for while Bob and I are in class we know that our three sons are being well taken care of and taught at the day nursery of Sister S. A. Davis."

You may wonder how with three boys the Dawsons manage even occasional moments for study. Your amazement will increase when you learn that Robert Bruce is five, Mark Steven, three, and Gregory Dean, only two.

HOW DO WE STUDY?" Mrs. Dawson sighed. "Oh, we slip out of bed early in the morning and tuck the children away shortly after supper. Bob and I are taking practically the same subjects, so I read aloud."

"And the Soundscriber that the government gave to me is a wonderful help," Bob's face brightened. "Edie takes notes all day. Then at night we record them and listen to them on the Soundscriber."

"It really works." A proud light shone in Edith's eyes. "Last year Bob made four A's and three B's."

"Now, Edie, we don't need to mention that," Bob frowned.

"I know, honey," she smiled, "but that is really a vital part of our story, for when we think of the accident and how all the doctors said those first two weeks that it was improbable that you would live, and that if you did your faculties would be gone . . . well, it certainly makes us realize that your life has been in God's hands and both of us have developed a tremendous amount of faith because of his blessing."

Bob and Edith Dawson

IF WE WERE to list Bob's recovery under a specific heading it would surely be divine blessing. But in order to build up an appreciation of his experience, we should first tell you about his life previous to the accident. Bob met Edith Joy Parker when she was a sophomore at the Cameron, Missouri, High School. He graduated from Cameron High in 1942 and went into the service as a Marine aviator, flying in the States until April, 1945. In the meantime Edith graduated in 1944 from the Argentine, Kansas, High School, and they were married in North Carolina. In the spring of 1945 Bob was transferred to the Pacific theater, flying transport planes from Hawaii to Japan. Edith was with him in Hawaii for ten months; then he was transferred to Australia, the Philippines, and Japan. Bob enjoyed flying and began thinking of it as a career.

Then came the fateful day in January, 1949, when he was making a routine flight at Santa Ana, California. "I just don't know what happened," Bob's face became very serious, "but my buddies said that I blacked out. The plane broke in two, and they found me with my left arm caught. It has been practically useless ever since. For two months I was in the hospital, and then in and out for various operations for the next eleven. I had twenty-seven facial fractures, ten fractures in my left arm, one eye was completely gone and the optic nerve destroyed in the other. At first the verdict read 'no hope,' but I hung on and Edie took things into her hands and the Lord's."

Bob smiled as Edith took up the story. "I was almost frantic, but very reluctant to call the elders. You see, I had been a member of the church since I was eight, and my mother's people were church members in Far West, Missouri, Stake; but Bob's family didn't belong, and he had been quite prejudiced. You can see my predicament. But my faith gave me courage and finally, after two weeks which seemed an eternity, I called for the elders to administer." Edith's eyes were misty as she continued. "We have the photostatic copy of the doctor's reports. On the day before the administration he had written 'recovery impossible,' and on the next day 'remarkable recovery.'"

FROM THAT TIME ON Bob Dawson continued to mend. Edith feels that Bob's clean life made it possible not only for God to bless him, but for nature to do her part, and in two months he attended the Easter service at the Santa Ana Branch. "I could have been up before that," Bob grinned, "but they wouldn't let me."

For a long time Edith prayed that Bob would again receive his sight, but now she realizes that receiving his sight was not the important thing and that this disaster has been a blessing in disguise. Many good things have come out of it. First of all, Bob was baptized shortly after his accident. Since then, other members of his family have joined the Reorganized Church, partly because of his interest. Bob and Edith have sensed a growing desire to aid in the spiritual growth of their children—Robert Bruce and the two little fellows whom Bob has never seen. Out of this experience they have gained a greater appreciation of the love of God. At times they feel that they have more problems than most any one else. "Ours are so different," Edith sighed, "but God has been good to us. He has always given us strength and wisdom to cope with our problems and has never given us more than we could bear."

The Dawsons feel that they have truly achieved a major accomplishment, for, in spite of their constant team work, they never get on each other's nerves. Since they were both very impatient before the accident, they look upon their increasing patience as one of their greatest assets, for they are learning together that things can be accomplished only one at a time.

RECENTLY one of the bright spots for the Dawsons was an interview by Tommy Bartlett on Welcome Traveler's Television Show. "We had gone to Chicago for Bob's new plastic eye," Edith explained. When I mentioned that I hadn't noticed any difference in his eyes, Edith patted Bob's hand exclaiming joyfully, "See, honey, I told you that no one would know the difference!" Then she continued more seriously, "We would like to have given answers a bit more on the religious side to Tommy's questions. But we did manage to slip in a plug for Graceland." They are very appreciative of the sponsor's gifts of warm winter clothing for the whole family, furniture, dishes, and so on. Again God knew their needs.

The Dawsons expect to finish the two-year Liberal Arts Course in three years. At present Bob is taking twelve hours and Edith eight. Bob hopes to find a vocation, but as yet they have no definite plans for the future. Since Bob is only twenty-eight and Edith twenty-six, they feel that there are many good years ahead, and they are determined to make them the best.

IF YOU ARE EVER TEMPTED to feel down in the dumps, or out of sorts with the world in general, take a trip to the Graceland campus and listen for Bob's gay whistle and the tap of his cane as he and Edith go cheerfully to their classes. Then try to absorb a bit of Bob's philosophy. "You know, I had always led an active, adventurous life, and I've found that I've had to redevelop my whole personality. It's been a big job, but I've had a lot of help; and I know I'm going to need a lot more. It has helped me to readjust my life as I find that there are a lot of people much worse off than I. Only recently I visited a blind man who had also lost both legs. It certainly made me conscious of my blessings. I'd like to be an inspiration to other blind people—to fellows like him—the kind of inspiration that Carol Rowe has been to me here on the hill. Sometime I hope to be able to take notes in Braille as expertly as she does and develop latent talents as she has done. Being blind isn't all a bed of roses and I feel depressed at times, but when I recall all of God's marvelous blessings I realize that being blind isn't really a handicap. Perhaps I may be able to help others in ways that would be impossible if I had my vision."

Neither Bob nor Edith are lacking in spiritual vision and their philosophy of life is soul cheering to all who pass their way. After 1954 they will be missed on the hill, but the prayers of many students and friends will go with them.

Why I Am a

Reorganized Latter Day Saint

As a child I loved the Bible and even before I could read I enjoyed hearing older people read from it. I always sat with my ears open as they read from the apostles and prophets. Then I wished that I could see and hear them as people did in times past. Feeling as I did I often asked, "Why don't we have apostles and prophets today?" The answer was always the same: "We don't need them today, so they were done away with." Then I would ask, "Who did away with them?" The answer was that I was too young to understand. "Some day when you are older then you will know," I was told. But I never stopped wondering. I always attended Sunday school and church either in the Methodist, Baptist, or Christian Church, but none of their teachings satisfied me, so I kept looking for a church that had these officers in it.

When I found some Reorganized Latter Day Saints and started attending services with them, I found the church I had been looking for. I knew right away my searching had not been in vain. I was baptized into this church in 1914, and I am still rejoicing. I do wish to share the gospel with others. It is the only thing that will bring peace and happiness.

Ninety Percenters

I have been an intermittent tithpayer for some years, and I must admit that this has weighed heavily on my conscience. I knew all the reasons why I shouldn't be careless, but still I didn't get myself in line. However, after reading George Armeson's article, "Where Your Treasure Is," in the October 20 issue of the Herald, I can't be lax any longer. Such forceful and inspired writing simply can't be wasted, I know that the future progress of this church depends on me and others like me. Assuming our full responsibility we shall move from the 90 per cent into the 10 per cent until these percentages are reversed.

I pledge that starting today I will get my accounts in order and comply fully with the financial law of the church. Am I alone in this, or are there others who will join me? Those who do might write a note to the editors of their pledge.

From an Eighty-six-year-old Member

I was brought up to believe the doctrine of another church and was baptized when I was nineteen years old. I did not receive the assurance of the Holy Spirit at that time as I had expected to, so I was not completely satisfied although I continued to drift along as a member of that denomination for years. When the time came that I grew tired of hearing the same old story of what was good enough for my ancestors was good enough for me, I was led to investigate other churches. This soon brought a knowledge of the truthfulness of the Restoration. I am thankful for this gospel and the wonderful source of comfort it has been to me since I accepted it.

I am eighty-six years old and live alone. My eyesight is failing, but I am not afraid of the dark. I know God will still be with me.

God's Love

The tragic experience we passed through last August, when our twenty-year-old son Sgt. Alfred Tarrant was killed in a plane crash soon after being assigned to fly to Korea, has given us a better understanding of the Scripture, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son . . ."

When I have seen large crowds of people going to places of amusement while comparatively few go to church I have felt that the pleasure-seekers did not deserve the love God has for them. Yet, after our son's death, neighbors from all walks of life and various religious beliefs opened their hearts and homes to us. Many sent cards, letters, telegrams, and called us on the telephone to offer their sympathy. Some who were strangers to us but knew our son took time out of their busy lives to write words of comfort to us. Because of this I have come to know that God looks on their hearts while I had been judging them from their "outward appearances." Because of the type of life our son lived, and because of the many prayers offered in our behalf, we have been able to accept our loss without bitterness.

I see now that all humanity is God's creation and merits his love—a love so great that he was willing to sacrifice his Son so that all of his children might be brought back into his presence.

P.S.

 SUNSHINE

Soak up all the sunshine you can during these beautiful, golden days of autumn. There is health in every hour that you saturate yourself. Soon the long cold nights of winter will be here, and for weeks on end you will see nothing but brief glimpses of the sun, and skies a dishwater gray most of the time. Between the first of December and the last of February you will lose most of your summer tan, and you will be hungry for the sun.

In the months of long nights and short days, we must carry sunshine in our hearts if we are to have any. That kind will cheer the spirit, but it will not replace the healthful rays of the sun.

 THE DIFFERENCE

The church gives us inspiration. The movies, too often, merely gives us "inspiration."

 WAS IT MURDER?

We were driving along the highway in "October's bright blue weather," admiring the wonderful variety of color in the trees as far as the eye could see. We have not had a more brilliantly beautiful autumn in many years. Then a car passed us with the bodies of two deer tied to the back, their heads hanging down, their eyes closed, their poor mouths and tongues dry and coated with dust.

Two days before, these beautiful animals had roamed the woodlands, free and happy, offering no threat or danger to any man and harming nothing as they followed their own wilderness trails.

Then the brave "sportsmen" appeared with their rifles. With no risk whatever they raised their guns to shoot these innocent creatures. There are men so cruel and bloodthirsty that they can smile and take pleasure while watching the death agonies of the deer, their blood spilled in the dust, and the departure of life from those splendid bodies. It is a kind of depravity that sickens the heart.

I have seen the deer families in the forest, enjoying their life together as human families might. Deer know when a person has no gun, and it is often possible to observe them at close range from horseback. The stag with his beautiful antlers is the protector. The timid doe is always watchful for danger. The fawns are tiny and lovely with their great dark eyes. Imagine their terror and grief when the stag is killed. I have seen a little fawn, a mere baby, waiting in the bushes for its mother, out browsing for food, to return. Love and loveliness are as beautiful in animal families as in human ones. Then men come and kill them. What must God think of them? Is it murder?

 THE WING

The preacher had been invited to Sunday dinner and was asked to offer the blessing on the food. The prayer was long and eloquent, for there was a smell of chicken and many other good things in the house.

When the chicken was served, little Johnnie got a wing. The family was surprised when he began to hum the song, "Coming in on a wing and a prayer."

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Arthur Orlin Crowover

IF you are ever in the office of Orlin Crowover, Hawaii District and Honolulu Branch president, you will see on his desk a wooden stand inscribed, "Others First." That inscription is there for a purpose.

A few years ago Orlin was concerned, he explains, because he thought he was "too self-centered." He did not regard himself as "basically selfish," he recalls, "for I was happy to share with others when put to the test, but I did feel that my interests were centered too much in myself." Guilty or not, he determined to overcome what he regarded as a fault and consciously to "cultivate the art of loving and helping others." "Others First" became his motto, then, and he feels that as a constant reminder the inscription on his desk "has helped to enrich my ministry to our Heavenly Father's greatest creation, people."

Orlin's ministry has been in Hawaii since 1950, but before then in 1949 he served as assistant to the First Presidency for one year. Prior to that he had served as the church-appointed pastor of the Mobile, Alabama, Branch and as a counselor in the Gulf States District presidency for three years. Baptized July 24, 1927, at Calumet, Oklahoma, when nine years old, he was ordained a priest in 1933, an elder in 1940, and a high priest in 1949.

He accepted church appointment only eleven days after being discharged from the navy on March 21, 1946, with the rank of lieutenant, senior grade. He had served in the Civil Engineering Corps of the navy for more than three years and had been stationed in the Hawaiian and Midway Islands for two years of that time.

Before entering the service he worked as a junior engineer for a pipe line corporation in five states from Texas to Illinois and for the Lake City Ordnance Plant near Independence, Missouri. Born in Odell, Texas, he was graduated from the Calumet, Oklahoma, High School in 1936 and received a B.S. degree in civil engineering in January, 1941, from Oklahoma A. and M. at Stillwater. He has also taken graduate work in philosophy at the University of Hawaii.

Photography and coin collecting are his hobbies. In high school he played football and wrestled, but is now content with swimming and fishing, although he finds little time for the latter and coin collecting.

"One of the reasons I have not found time to fish in Hawaii," he says, "is that we are working harder than we ever worked before. A tremendous task challenges us here, the mission is growing and the progress is encouraging. We all like Hawaii very much." By "we" he refers to himself; his wife, the former Maurine Jones of Pittsburg, Kansas; daughter Orlene, nine; and son Craig, six.

Except They Be Agreed

Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

—Alma 3: 3

IN RECENT YEARS we have received a number of letters of which the following, just at hand, is a fair sample:

During the last two months a number of the Utah Mormons have been telling the story that you tried to arrange a uniting of the Reorganization and the Utah church.

I realize that this is another infamous untruth, but it is annoying to us who know the facts and confusing to our friends. I wish there could be a statement available in tract form explaining the utter impossibility of such a proposal.

In considering this latest suggestion, I fully concur with the writer and herewith present a statement of denial and my own belief why there cannot and never will be any coalition or merger between this church and the Mormon organization. My reasons are sufficient and easily presented.

On August 29, 1852, Brigham Young announced to the world that the Mormons were and had been practicing polygamy, although it is undenied that until then such practice had been consistently and repeatedly denied by Mormon leaders. Pressure had been made, and the time had come to "proclaim" it, he said.

From that day to the present time, polygamy as a doctrine of salvation has been taught by the Mormons. For proof, let the inquirer read Section 132 of the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which beyond cavil makes polygamy—at least a belief in it—compulsory on penalty of soul damnation.

ABOUT THE TIME of this proclamation in Utah, an organization had been effected among faithful Latter Day Saints who rejected Brighamism in all its phases. At a meeting early in January, 1853, this group sought the Lord in earnest prayer to learn: "Is polygamy of God?" The record of the meeting (Church History, Volume 3, page 215) informs us, "About half an hour afterwards we received through the Spirit the following, as near as we could write it:

Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God: it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrines of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men who practice it. . . . Their works shall judge them at the last day. Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine; many will be led into it honestly, for the Devil will seek to establish it, and roll it forth to deceive.

They seek to build up their own kingdoms, to suit their own pleasures, but I countenance it not, saith God. I have given my law: I shrink not from my word. My law is given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but they have disregarded my law and trampled upon it, and counted it a light thing, and obeyed it not; but my word is the same yesterday as today, and forever.

IN THE LIGHT of the fundamental differences between the doctrines of Utah Mormonism and the Christian doctrines of the original church (now the Reorganized Church), it is obvious that no true Reorganized Latter Day Saint could ever compromise or yield his faith in the simple, pure doctrines of the original church, a yielding that would be required if he should accept the Mormon doctrine of celestial marriage—better understood as just plain polygamy.

Efforts were made for many years to reclaim those who found themselves in the ranks of the Mormons, and many were convinced of the sins, the heresy, and the errors of the Mormon Church and did come out. Many of those who did so fellowshiped with the Reorganization.

Now, I am familiar with the work done on behalf of those who were misled, from the first elders sent on these missions to Utah. I am familiar with the work done there by Joseph Smith III and associates and by Frederick M. Smith. I know whereof I speak: No proposal of a merger of the churches was ever made by any member of the First Presidency of our church to anybody in authority in the Mormon Church; and only those lacking a knowledge of the insurmountable doctrinal differences between the two organizations have ever suggested such a thing. The way for the accession of members by us from Utah is only that of their abandonment of heretical doctrines held by Utah. On no basis other than this could we accept their members. Needless to say, our members who know Mormon doctrines and practices cannot give allegiance to that organization without a surrender of basic Christian beliefs—which cannot be done.

Just one instance is needed. Marriage was endorsed by Jesus: what is set forth in the New Testament is "Christian marriage." The Mormon doctrine of marriage, as taught in Mormon Church law, is in its requirements anti-Christian. And there are also other abysmal differences, such as the doctrine of a progressive God, as well as a plurality of Gods, to which we cannot subscribe.

Let it be settled for all time: there is no basis in the law of Christ for us ever to accept Mormon tenets. We do not contemplate any surrender of Christian doctrines. Therefore we never have considered, do not now, and never will consider any union with the Utah Church and its doctrines, and no effort has ever been made by us even to suggest it.

Official

Procedure on Withdrawal

District and Branch Presidents,
Dear Brethren:

In harmony with the recent General Conference action concerning members who desire to withdraw from the church, we submit the following statement of procedure governing this matter.

The resolution adopted by the General Conference on April 4, 1952, is as follows:

That in the event any person desires to withdraw from membership in the church, the First Presidency be authorized to make such investigation as may be necessary or desirable through the proper officers of the church, and, if no sound reasons against such action are found, may authorize the Church Statistician to remove the names of these persons from the records of the church, provided that in the event persons whose names have been thus removed from the records of the church shall desire to resume their membership in the church, and no sound reason for denying this request shall be found, the First Presidency may authorize the reinstatement of the names of such persons on the church records; and, further,

That the General Conference resolutions of 1884 (284), 1903 (529), and 1948 (October 7, page 94), having to do with this question be and are hereby rescinded.

This resolution is not to be construed as an easy way to clear from our church records either inactive or undesirable members. Inactivity is not grounds for expulsion, and for those whose conduct is such as to bring reproach upon the church, court action is still the only proper procedure.

The following may be used by pastors as a general form to be followed in submitting requests for release from church membership:

To the First Presidency:
Ministerial labor performed and has failed to dissuade, born
Name
..... from an expressed desire to withdraw from the fellowship of the church.
Investigation shows the character and reputation of this person to be good and there is no known reason why any charges should or could be preferred.

Since we believe further ministerial labor would be useless and even undesirable, and since the character and reputation of this person are good, we recommend that the enclosed request for withdrawal, signed by the above named, be honored, and this person issued a statement showing dates of baptism and withdrawal.

It is particularly desirable that no one shall be permitted to withdraw from the church without some effort being made to reclaim him. We should endeavor to minister affirmatively, seeking to reclaim those who are disinterested, inactive, or even in sin. In the latter case, such persons should not be permitted to withdraw from the church, but should be subject to court action, the usual procedure being followed in a last effort to bring about repentance and save them to the church.

Yours sincerely,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

"We're on the Air" in the United States

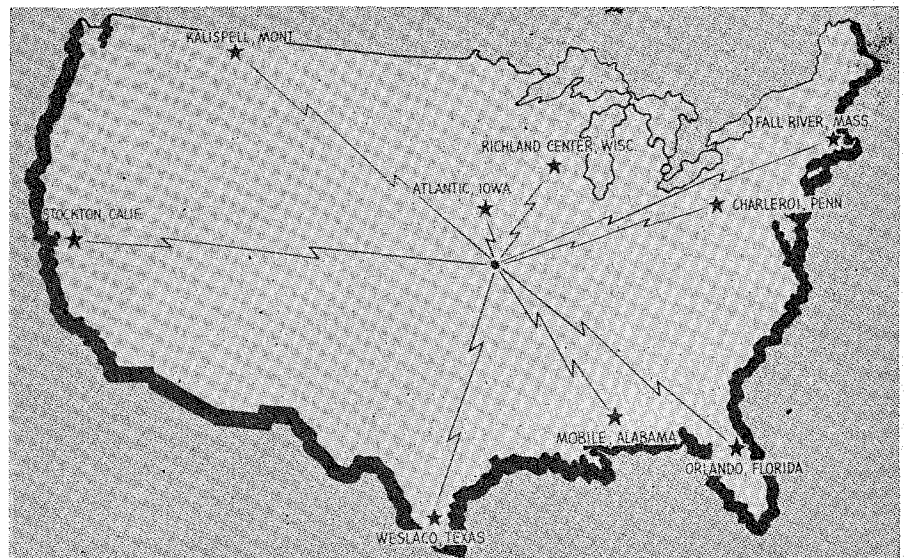

"From Independence, Missouri, world headquarters of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we bring you this transcribed service." These words introduce the fifteen-minute recorded programs now heard in many parts of the United States and Europe.

The recorded radio programs are being placed on the air in many communities where we have never before had church broadcasts. The map below does not show all programs very recently placed on the air. From time to time this map will be brought up to date. A complete weekly listing appears in the bulletin board section of the Saints' Herald. Listeners in these areas are urged to write the local station, commenting on the program. This helps the church and station relationship.

These programs are maintained on the air by the local congregation or district. The leaders of the area contact the local broadcasting stations and offer this devotional program, presenting a sample tape for audition. The quality of the programs brings favorable results, sometimes offers of free time. When sustaining time is not available the local branch assumes the cost of the fifteen-minute broadcast.

These fifteen-minute taped broadcasts are furnished by the Radio Department of the General Church without cost to the local branch. With this help, every enterprising branch with radio time available may present a series of recorded programs. For details and help in placing programs on the air, write the Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Latter-day Concepts of Revelation

By Glen H. Johnson

IT IS A GOOD THING for us to consider and discuss latter-day concepts of revelation. Many of our people have failed to understand and appreciate their true significance.

Unless we know something of the content of divine revelation, the voice of God may mean nothing more than the tinkling of a cymbal. Revelation is not revelation until it is in us. We should be concerned about divine revelation, and I think most of us are. It should be an experience in learning to understand how God works and moves among us. A casual knowledge of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants brings to our understanding the fact that it has been the purpose of God to reveal himself to us, that through this revelation we might become like him.

It is not enough to have a few beliefs about God. Let us consider what he said to his Son, the Christ: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." God was revealing himself when he made that statement. We consider the revelations in Scripture very important. But even more significant is the fact that God seeks to reveal himself to us. He has been doing it since the beginning, and he placed in us a spirit by which we may receive that revelation. He placed in us the power to become the sons and daughters of God.

My next statement may contradict some concepts that people have regarding our human natures. I have heard many people say that this man—our physical being—is an enemy to God. I cannot understand how anything that God has made in his image can be an enemy to himself. It is only the misuse of that which God has created in his likeness that is an enemy to him. People in the Dark Ages separated themselves from society, torturing themselves, thinking that perhaps in that manner they could subjugate the spirit. It was never done, and never shall be done. The only way man can subjugate the spirit—that is, allow it to come into its proper relationship to God—is in the enrichment of the spirit, and lifting it up to God to become like him. Then the body comes into its proper place. It becomes an instrument through which the Spirit of God can be revealed in the spirit of man.

Men have misunderstood God's purpose in making them in His image. They have tried to make God in their image, after their likeness. In other words, they have tried to make humanity, rather than God, the center of reference.

IT IS BASIC to our Reorganized Latter Day Saint concepts that we have this belief in God—that we know something about him—what he is, and what his nature is. When Moses spoke to his people and revealed the commandments, that was not the end of divine revelation for them. The end of revelation was not fulfilled when he laid before those people the Ten Commandments. We are thrilled over the fact that Moses went to the mountain and talked with God face to face. It was a wonderful experience, but what was Moses' problem when he came down with the law to the people? The problem was the transfer of the things that were written upon the tablets of stone to the tablets of the hearts of the children of Israel by his preaching and teaching ministry. The people were slow to learn the things God had revealed. God was patient, kind, and considerate, but there were many times when he drew a line against their transgressions. There was destruction on every hand until those people who could be refined were refined as a result of their willingness to learn the mind and will of God as to how they might live in righteousness upon the earth.

The question of their being a chosen people was whether they would accept that which God would reveal through them—the truth of his mind, the excellence of his kingdom, the beauty of his Spirit. When they would learn to absorb this into their hearts and minds, they would become chosen. The only time they revealed God was when they revealed him in their individual and collective lives in terms of his revelation.

WHEN JESUS CAME to his people he had the same problem. He declared that God is our Father, that he is a present tense God, a revealing God. For instance, the Lord's Prayer.

The revelation of the person of Jesus in his personality and being was the greatest revelation the Father had to offer the world. This was not a matter of theological propositions set up for men to believe; rather the real revelation of God was in a person, Jesus the Christ. He was the word made flesh and dwelt among the people. For us, revelation must be manifest in human experience. The beauty of forgiveness, the strength of faith, the cleansing of repentance, the self-giving in stewardship are not so much for spoken and printed words as for a way of life.

Jesus revealed himself to the people in the Sermon on the Mount. How many of you have read that sermon in the last year, or the last Conference period? If you have been confused about a problem of conduct, or some phase of kingdom building, ask these questions: "Have I read the Sermon lately? Have I read the Doctrine and Covenants lately?" Or do you sit and moan over the fact that God has not spoken to you recently? When I hear people complain that God hasn't spoken, I say, "I know why he hasn't spoken to you. It is because you have not listened to the primary source of inspiration he has already given." We ought to do as Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon did when they sought for light. "While we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understanding so as to see and understand the things of God." In contrast, many of us sit and wait for some voice to speak out of the heavens to us.

GOD DOES SPEAK to us when he chooses. But if I know anything about him and the movements of his Spirit, it is this: even though he speaks to us by the still small voice, or an audible voice, he always directs us to the foundations of his revelations — the commandments, laws, and principles by which the righteousness of his kingdom shall come upon the earth. If we come to understand this primary source of revelation, the revelation that comes to us personally will be meaningful because we have written in our hearts and minds this standard, this primary source of inspiration that he has given us. If I feel anything of the Spirit, even now, it is to urge you to study that primary source of inspiration so that when revelation comes to you, you will not be deceived. You will know if it is true or false, because you will know the basic revelation of God by which it must be measured and judged. The Three Standard Books of the church reveal what is in the mind of God.

When we know this, the experiences that come to us personally will be meaningful.

WHEN I WAS SENT into the mission field, I followed the usual procedure arguing with members of other churches that their organizations were not as good as the New Testament organization, that they lacked apostles, prophets, etc. But the time came when I had to get at the real heart of the message of the kingdom. As much as I had been taught at home and in church concerning Zion, it was one of the most difficult themes for me to proclaim because I understood it least. I had to get hold of the heart and the purpose of the Restoration, the purpose of priesthood, the ordinances, church organization, and go beyond the ecclesiastical system into the very heart of the kingdom of God. For years I have continued the study of the things that relate to Zion, the kingdom of God.

Several years ago my wife and I had an interesting experience. It is my personal testimony in regard to the things I've been relating. In 1947 my wife, daughter, and I were living in Oklahoma. I was in charge of the reunion association which included the Central and Western Oklahoma Districts. The two district presidents and I formed the personnel committee for the reunion, and it was our task to request certain personnel for the staff at the reunion. I had been praying about the matter, especially about the ministry of a patriarch for our people. The name of John R. Grice would come to mind, so I wrote the First Presidency requesting his services. Within the week a letter came informing us he could be with us the first week in August.

THE THEME for the reunion was "Living together with Christ." Brother Grice was in charge of the prayer services, and I was assisting him. Seventy Edward Butterworth and his wife were there. They had just returned from their first mission to the Society Islands. Seventy William Haden and Bishop Leslie Kohlman were there also. During the course of the meeting a part of my patriarchal blessing came to my mind. "Your work in life will call you far afield. You will have to associate with many men, but sometime in the fulfillment of all things, you will be able to stand with your elder Brother, even Jesus, in Zion, and there will come to you such a joy, a transcendent joy, that your mind cannot now conceive."

In April, 1947, we had received our first appointment abroad, and testimony at the prayer service was centered around that. Shortly after I had borne my testimony, Brother Grice said, "When Brother Glen was giving his testimony, the Lord revealed to me something to tell him," and turned and spoke to me in a foreign language, then he turned and spoke to my wife, Alice, who was sitting about the second row back, then turned and spoke to me again. A part of the interpretation was this: "I, the Lord, have watched over you all your boyhood days, though you knew it not. I have recognized your desires as a child to preach my gospel, and you have preached my gospel, which is the gospel of my kingdom . . ." He turned to Alice and said, "I have heard your prayers in behalf of your husband, my servant, as he has been out in the mission field preaching my gospel . . ." Then he spoke to Brother and Sister Butterworth in this same tongue and gave the interpretation. Brother Butterworth spoke in confirmation of the language used. He said it was the Northern Island dialect of the South Sea Islanders, and if the islanders could speak the language as perfectly as Brother Grice spoke it, it would be wonderful. I didn't know until after the prayer meeting that Alice had been praying about our going abroad. She said she felt led to pray that if God had a message for us, he would speak through Brother Grice in the Polynesian tongue.

Now, the significant fact wasn't that this tongue was used, but it

PICTURES OF GOD

THE LATE MR. HASKELL, of the Kansas City Star, loved to collect children's stories to enliven his "Random Thoughts" column in the Sunday edition. This is one of his stories, as I remember it. A little girl was busy with pencil and paper. Her father inquired, "What are you doing?" The girl replied, "I am drawing a picture of God." The amazed father declared, "You can't do that. No one knows what God looks like." With calm assurance the little girl replied, "They will when I get this picture finished."

At that I think even a little child can draw a better picture of God than did the old-time creed makers in their doctrines of predestination and infant damnation. True, the dogma of predestination has now been deleted from Protestant creeds or watered down to the point where it is not too objectionable.

On the doctrine of infant damnation, as late as 1919 in a book entitled Question Box Answers, with preface by Cardinal Gibbons, the Rev. Bertrand L. Conway of the Paulist Fathers, in his chapter, "The Sacraments," dealt with the subject of baptizing little children. He laments that Protestant church members are tossed to and fro by conflicting doctrines and neglect to have their little children baptized by "divine authority." As a result he says, "In the meantime countless little ones die, as they were born, children of wrath."

I think a little child could draw a better picture of God. We have a better picture in the Book of Mormon (Read Moroni 8: 13-16).

The Restoration Movement brought us a vision of a God of justice, an unchangeable God: "By these things we know that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

We have a vision of God still at work, as creator:

Worlds without number have I created . . . and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21-23.

Where Shall We Turn to Find God?

Some have found God in the Kirtland Temple. You may find him in your own church service, especially on Communion Sunday. You may find him in your home when the family joins hands for the evening prayer.

You may see him at work in the great out-of-doors: "He is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things: and all things are by him, and of him; even God, forever and ever."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 10.

September in the Rockies

Helen Keller, born blind and deaf, was once asked what she would do if she could have her sight for three days. She replied that the first day she would spend looking at her friends and loved ones whom she had never seen. The second day she would go into the city to see what man had done. The third day she would go into the forest and hills to see what God had done.

This September I had again a chance to go into the mountains back of Denver to see what God had done. All summer, along most of the length of the Rockies, there are unnumbered aspen trees among the evergreens. Dressed in their pale green leaves, they are little noticed. They are dreaming of their day of glory. In September they put on their beautiful golden robes—the "golden aspen." Some few prefer a trim of scarlet. Singly, or by the hundred, or closely massed by thousands, they splash the mountains from the foothills almost to timber line—each tree, its roots in a pot of gold.

In the first chapter of Genesis we read that God worked at his task of creation for a time, then paused at intervals and viewed his work, and, rejoicing in it, said, "It is good!" And at last he said, "It is very good!"

I think that when he heaved the Rocky Mountains heavenward, clothed them with evergreens, and capped the high summits with white snow, he must have said, "It is good!" But may I imagine, that not yet quite satisfied, he comes back in September and flings those gorgeous robes of golden aspens along five hundred miles of mountainsides, and then stands back to admire and to say, "It is very good!"

Such scenes I beheld as in a company with kindred spirits we drove up the mountain roads, at each turn coming upon splendor that seemed to eclipse all other splendors. Kipling dreamed of a time when painters in the great beyond shall splash colors on seven league canvasses with "brushes of comet's hair."

Here we saw the Great Artist at work on an infinitely greater canvas, working with living colors. We saw not what God had done. We saw what he was doing—even God for ever and for ever. Amen!

Line Out of Order

By Nellie B. Hulshizer

THE WARM SUNSHINE of a bright March morning was stirring the sleeping bulbs, and tiny green shoots were beginning to push through the damp earth.

Elder John Stone and his wife Mary surveyed their little garden with a great deal of pride. To John it was more than a garden; it was a place where he could be close to nature—a place where he could get in tune with his Creator. It was his refuge when the problems of his people seemed too heavy a burden to bear.

This morning, however, he and Mary were looking only for new green shoots and visioning the happy hours they would spend there now that nature was waking from her winter sleep.

Suddenly their thoughts were interrupted by the sound of sobbing. Looking across the hedge into the adjoining yard, they saw a woman sitting on a rustic garden seat. Her face was buried in her hands, her whole form quivering with emotion.

"Why, that's Alice—something terrible must have happened. We must go right over," Mary exclaimed.

The two of them made their way swiftly through the gap in the hedge which separated the parsonage from the beautiful house next door.

The sobbing did not cease nor did the woman seem aware of their presence until Mary sat down beside her and slipped an arm protectingly around her. "What is it, Alice?" she whispered. "Can we do something to help you?"

IT WAS SOME LITTLE TIME before Alice Dalton could control herself enough to speak. Then between sobs she cried, "Oh, Mary, it's Jim; I'm so worried about him. He's becoming so bitter and cynical that he just isn't like the old Jim at all. I sometimes wonder if his grief is preying on his mind. He spends more and more time at the office and out on the road. When he is home he just sits and stares into space or else paces the floor, smoking one cigarette after another. Then last night . . ." At this point she stopped as though she had been talking to herself and, suddenly realizing that she had an audience, did not wish to divulge what she had been about to say.

Neither Mary nor John spoke, as they had no wish to force their friend's confidence unless she wanted to confide in them.

After a few moments of silence she went on, "I hate to tell you this, but it seems I cannot bear it unless I talk to someone. Then perhaps John will have some idea of what I can do to help Jim. I have known for some time that he was drinking a glass of beer now and then with his men. While I felt terrible about it, I didn't say much to him, for I felt criticism would only make matters worse."

Again Alice paused for some time before resuming her story, then reluctantly she continued, "Yesterday he had a sales meeting here and didn't get home until after midnight. Then two of his men brought him home and helped me put him to bed. He was still sleeping when I came out here. I'm dreading the time when he awakens and remembers last night. It's going to be so hard to know what to say or do. He is quick to resent anything I say which he can possibly construe to mean the slightest criticism." Then raising her tear-dimmed eyes to meet the sympathetic gaze of her friends, she asked, "What would you advise me to do?"

AFTER SOME THOUGHT John replied, "I believe it would be best for you to just ignore the fact that there is anything wrong. Don't mention last night unless he refers to it himself. I know that will be hard to do, but I believe it is the best way since you say he is inclined to misconstrue your words. The first opportunity I can devise, I will have a talk with him. I've been worried about Jim for some time, and I've tried to talk with him but perhaps I didn't put enough thought and prayer back of what I said."

"Thanks, John. I'll try to do as you suggest. It will be easier, knowing you are going to talk to him. I'm sure if anyone can help him you can, for he has always had a great deal of confidence in you. I'm glad both of you came over. You don't know how much lighter the burden seems now that you are helping to carry it."

Alice went back to her vigil while John and Mary retraced their steps to the parsonage. While Mary prepared breakfast, John went into his study and from his knees sent up an earnest petition for divine guidance. Then on his way to the post office, where he was an employee, he reviewed his contacts with Jim Dalton in the past.

THE TWO BOYS had grown up together in a small midwestern town, each in a Reorganized Latter Day Saint home. After high school they had gone on to Graceland together. It was here they met Mary and Alice, and shortly after graduation there had been a double wedding. Then had come a parting of the ways. For several years they met only a few times. During this time John had been ordained to the priesthood. He gave his best to the civil service job which he held, hoping it would serve as a steppingstone to greater work for the kingdom. Jim's first thought was to make a success for himself in the business world. He began as an insurance salesman; this led from one promotion to another until he became state manager and located in the capital city.

The paths of the two men crossed again when John was transferred to a civil service job in the post office of that city. Soon after moving there he was elected to serve as pastor where a new church had been erected by the north side congregation. A large house next door, owned by the church, had proved a real help as a pastor's home for them.

It had been a source of great joy to Mary when she moved into the parsonage to find that Alice lived next door.

The meeting between the men had been an occasion of mutual pleasure. Yet John detected at once that there was not going to be the old spirit of comradeship which had bound them together in their youth. Their interests were too widely separated now.

JIM'S NAME was recorded on the church membership roll, and he contributed quite generously of his means, though John soon learned that he neglected to file his inventory or to tithe regularly. Neither could he be depended upon to do any real work for the church. John tried repeatedly to persuade him to assume some personal responsibility but always Jim excused himself by saying he was too busy. When John remonstrated with him he would laugh it off and reply, "Now, John, we can't all be preachers and church workers; someone has to look after business. I'm still a Reorganized Latter Day Saint all right. I don't stop to keep accurate figures, but I think I pay my tithe. I send my wife and daughter to Sunday school and church regularly, and I go when I can get away."

This answer did not satisfy John, for he knew that Jim was only stalling and that deep down in his own heart he knew he was cheating the Master. He was not only devoting all of his time to his business for six days but many times the seventh as well. Another thing which caused John much concern was the reports which came to him again and again that Jim was associating with men who cared little for the finer things of life. Within this group, drinking was the social thing to do. While Jim did not drink to the point of intoxication, he wouldn't refuse a glass with the rest of his men.

John and Mary had both noted the worried look in Alice's eyes which told them she, too, had heard these reports, though she never mentioned it to either of them.

Jim still spent most of his evenings at home when he was in the city, for he was really devoted to Alice, and their little daughter Sandra was almost an idol to him. But under his capable leadership his business was growing and expanding until he was compelled to spend much time out on the road.

MATTERS HAD CONTINUED much the same for a year. Then one winter evening Jim returned from a conference with some of the executives of his company. His thoughts were on the events of the day, and John suspected his mind was a little cloudy as a result of the friendly drinks which had been a part of the conference program. At any rate he did not notice Sandra come dashing out to meet him. Her little feet slipped on the icy drive, and when he stopped the car her body was crushed beneath the wheels.

For a time Jim was almost insane with grief. Then when he was forced to take up the routine duties of life again, he became cynical, especially about anything pertaining to the church. John tried to talk to him, but he seemed to resent any overture of sympathy. When John tried to remind him of the source of all comfort he received a bitter retort.

"It's no use, John, you are just wasting your breath talking to me about God. In fact, I'm not so sure any more that there is a God. If there is, he isn't the loving Father you preach about or he wouldn't have allowed this terrible thing to happen to me."

With that he had walked away, giving John no chance to refute his statements.

From that time on Jim had avoided his old friend, and when they did meet he had been careful to see that there was no opportunity for serious talk. He had not been inside the church since the day of Sandra's funeral.

As John looked back over these past few months he wondered what approach he could use to reach the man now. He decided it was best to wait for the leading of the Spirit when the time came.

AS SOON AS he reached home that evening he called Alice on the phone and asked if Jim were there. He gave as his reason for calling the fact that he wanted to ask a favor of Jim. Alice replied that he had been suffering from a headache but was resting now; when he awakened she would deliver the message and call back. It was about eight o'clock when John received permission to stop by. When he entered the Dalton's living room he found Jim dressed and shaved and sitting in his easy chair before the fireplace.

After shaking hands, John proceeded to state the favor he had come to ask.

"Jim, I need your help," he began. "We are short of cars and competent drivers to take our young people to the League conference. I came over to see if I could persuade you to take a little vacation from the office and help us out."

There was much of the old bitterness in Jim's voice as he replied, "I'm sure I'm not the man you want, John. As a pastor it is your duty to protect your young people—I might contaminate them."

John was silent for a few moments. Then he said, "Jim, I think it is about time I did some plain talking to you. I am still your pastor, and I am interested in you from that relationship as well as the bond of friendship which dates back to our boyhood. I'm going to ask you a question, and I want you to give it some serious thought. Don't you think you owe the church a little of your time and talent? I know you pay generously in cold cash, but that isn't all tithing means. You owe the work of the kingdom a portion of your time and the talent God has given you."

"It's no use, John, you're just wasting your time and mine. One thing I won't do is act the hypocrite—not with a bunch of youngsters at least. In fact I think it would be best for you to just take my name off the church record and sever my connection with it entirely. It certainly isn't doing anything for me, and I really can't see any point in contributing anything to it since I no longer believe in it."

"Jim, have you given the church a chance to do anything for you these past months? Have you even given God a chance to help you? You know we are free moral agents and God won't force himself upon any of us, but he's always waiting to help if we'll let him."

"Now, John, don't start any of that old line about a God of love who sends guardian angels to watch over us and who warns us of danger and all that. If that is so, why didn't he warn me that Sandra was coming down the driveway? Where was her guardian angel that she was allowed to slip on the ice and go under the car? Can you answer these questions?"

YES, JIM, in a measure at least, I think I can. First you ask why God didn't warn you. I want you to think a moment and see if you can honestly assure me that you were in a position to have either heard or heeded any warning he might have tried to send you. Were you in the habit of listening for his voice or asking him for help or guidance? Didn't you imply, by your attitude at least, that you felt you were competent to run your own life without his help? You know all of God's promises are given on condition that we do our part. We must want his help and ask for it if we are to receive it. He won't do anything that interferes with our own free agency. If you were not enjoying personal fellowship with him and depending upon him for help and guidance you have no right to blame him for your sorrow."

"Just why don't I have a right to say he is responsible for it? If he is as powerful as you say, he could have prevented it, couldn't he? I still contend there was no justice, love, or mercy in his allowing Sandra to be taken from us—not in that way at least. And I am convinced he is not a God of justice or mercy—that is, if there is a God."

John made no reply to this bitter outburst, instead he asked a question. "Jim, do you remember Bill Allen who graduated from high school with us?"

"Sure, he was a pal of mine. But why mention him . . . what does he have to do with our topic of conversation?"

"Nothing, except that an experience he had while Mary and I were home last winter is a good illustration of what I am trying to say to you."

Jim sat with bowed head and was silent except for an occasional question as John told his story.

BILL ALLEN still lived on his father's old farm a few miles north of town in the community which had been the childhood home of the three in their boyhood. He was a good farmer and had prospered. He had all new equipment, and his home had the maximum in modern conveniences. The barn he had built a few years ago was his special pride, and he had every right to be proud of it. It was the finest in the community.

Bill was a happy-go-lucky sort of fellow and always had the habit of postponing to a later date anything he did not feel inclined to do at the moment. It was this habit that brought about the disaster John was most interested in relating to Jim.

During a bad storm early in December a lot of telephone poles and wires went down, and many of those left standing were damaged. The telephone line was still owned and operated by the same company that first installed it. Each patron was required to keep in repair that part of the line running from his home to the main line.

A pole in Jim's yard was loosed from its moorings enough so that it leaned against a giant tree for support. It didn't bother the phone any unless the wind was blowing from a certain direction. Then the wires would touch in such a way as to disrupt service. Bill's wife Elsie called his attention to it several times and urged him to fix it, but he was always too busy to do it right then. She warned him that he would put it off until something happened that would cause them to really need the phone and it would be out of order.

Bill carelessly replied, "It isn't far to town, and there is always a car on the place that either one of us can drive in case we need help in a hurry. I don't see that we need a telephone at all except for you to visit with the neighbors."

But when Elsie suggested that they call the company and have the phone taken out Jim protested. "No, we won't do that, we might need it sometime. It doesn't cost much, and I know you enjoy talking to your friends. You couldn't keep track of your social affairs without it," he teased.

EVERYTHING went along fine over the holidays. There wasn't much wind, and the phone was in working order most of the time. Then on the fourth of January there came a worse blizzard than the one in December.

About midnight Sam Brown who lived on the hill south of Bill happened to look out his bedroom window and saw that the shed on that side of Bill's barn was on fire. He immediately went to the phone to call Bill. He rang again and again but there was no response. The tree branches thrashing about in the storm had broken the wire in two so that the connection was completely severed. Sam called the fire department, and then set out for the Allen farm. He reached the road leading to Bill's yard a few moments ahead of the fire truck. The road there was so badly drifted that it took some time to break a track through.

The barn was some distance south of the house, and since the wind was in the north, it took the smoke the opposite direction. As a result Bill and Elsie were unaware of the fire until they heard the siren blowing as the truck was breaking a road through their lane. By the time they reached the barn the firemen were there, too, but it was too late to save the barn or any of its contents.

Bill assured his sympathetic neighbors that it was all pretty well covered by insurance. But when he went to collect he had a sad awakening. The premium had been due the last day of December. Elsie had reminded him several times during the month, and he always promised to attend to it the next time he went into town. The day before Christmas Elsie saw to it that the check was made out and the papers all placed in an envelope properly addressed. She gave it to Bill as he started for the mail box. That morning the mail man had several items of news to relate, and he talked to Bill for some time. Then the postman declared he must be on his way, handed Bill his mail, and drove on. As Bill started back to the house he discovered he still had the insurance letter in his hand. He put it in his pocket and said to himself, "I'm going into town this afternoon; I'll mail it then."

Of course Elsie supposed the letter was mailed, and neither of them thought of it again until Bill went to collect on his insurance and found that his policy had lapsed. Then he remembered the letter was in the pocket of the spare coat he happened to be wearing the morning he went to the mail box.

AS JOHN FINISHED the story he asked, "Jim, would you feel that Bill had a right to blame his loss on either the telephone company or the insurance firm?"

"No, of course not; but I still don't see how any of that applies to my case," Jim replied.

With another prayer for guidance John tried to bring home the application. "Your line of communication with God works something like that telephone system, Jim. You are responsible for keeping up your end of the line. When you fail to do your part the contact is broken. The trouble with many of us is that when everything's going well we regard our prayer life much as Bill did his telephone. We gradually come to depend more and more on our own strength and ability, and cease to ask God for guidance. Since we seem to be managing things pretty well on our own, we assume that we are capable of ordering our affairs without his help.

"It's Satan's business to encourage this attitude, Jim, for he's more than anxious to see our line of communication disrupted. If he can do something to weaken the anchor of faith in which the line is grounded, he has won his first victory. When this groundwork of faith is shaken, the wires lean more and more heavily on the tree of self-sufficiency. When this happens we cease to use the line even to say 'Thank you' for the blessings we enjoy, except at Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, or some other special occasion. The rest of the time the line is allowed to deteriorate from lack of use or care on our part. Most of us, like Bill, wouldn't think of deliberately cutting the wire, because we want to feel it is available in case of an emergency. But prayer is like any line of communication—we can't be sure it's functioning unless we test it occasionally.

"We also have some eternal insurance on which we must pay certain premiums to keep it in force.

"It's true that our salvation is a gift from God which Christ purchased for us, and it's free to all who will accept it; but accepting that gift places a responsibility upon us. We'd be most ungrateful if we were to accept such a marvelous gift and then do nothing to show our appreciation. We need to remember that this gift, when accepted, only guarantees our escape from the prison house. What realm of glory we shall enter and what reward we receive there depends upon our works. It's on these works that we need eternal insurance. If we study the first chapter of I Corinthians we discover that before we receive any reward our works are all to be tried by the fire of God's judgment. That which the fire has power to destroy will be consumed. It is only the gold from which the dross has been burned that determines our reward. The premium on this insurance is service in the work of God's kingdom and to our fellow-men."

JOHAN NOTED a glint of anger in Jim's eye as he made this application of his story, but he did not heed it. He felt that the time had come when Jim must be made to stop and think—to realize the unjustness of his reasoning—if he were to be saved from more heart-break.

When John paused for a reply it came in bitter tones, "So you think my wires are down and my insurance policy has lapsed, do you? May I ask what right you have to judge?"

"Jim, I'm not attempting to judge your relationship with your Maker. I only pointed out to you how things can happen. I wanted you to do some clear thinking before you severed your connection with the church which you know, as well as I, has God's plan for kingdom-building in this generation. Can you go back over the past and be sure in your own mind that you have done nothing to weaken the line of contact between your own heart and your Creator? Can you be sure you have lived up to your part of the contract with the church 100 per cent? If, after such a careful check on your part, you still have no faith in the church and wish to sever your connection with it, of course I will be forced to grant your request. I wanted only to be sure that you weighed the matter carefully before you made a definite decision.

"I'll answer your other question according to my understanding—then I'll be going. You ask where Sandra's guardian angels were that she was not protected. I think they were there attending to their duties. They saw that she did not have to lie and suffer or spend a long life as a cripple, which could easily have been the result of the accident. Instead they escorted her immediately into the presence of her Savior. For some reason beyond our power of comprehension an all-wise Heavenly Father saw that it was best to transplant her from this life to the heavenly garden. Perhaps he saw that down along the way there would be hardships and trials she could not bear—something which would bring her sorrow and heartbreak, something which would possibly have been harder for you to bear than this has been."

As he arose to leave John laid his hand for a moment on Jim's shoulder. He said, "I love you, Jim, just as I always have. I hope you will not hold what I have said against me or let it interfere with our personal friendship, whatever you decide to do about the church. I had to say it, Jim, to make you think this thing through."

Jim did not reply or even raise his head, so John went quietly out and left him alone.

Alice told Mary the next day that Jim had been silent and moody the rest of the evening, but had not mentioned his conversation with John. She knew he had not rested well that night, but the next morning he seemed more cheerful when he left for the office.

THIS WAS WEDNESDAY and John's mind was occupied with preparations for prayer meeting, so he had no time for more than an occasional prayer in Jim's behalf. His prayer was that the Holy Spirit would so direct Jim's thinking that he would be able to examine his own heart under the searchlight of God's truth.

It was with this burden still resting heavily upon him that John made his way to the church earlier than usual in order to have time for prayer and meditation before anyone else arrived.

To his great surprise and joy, as the first hymn was announced he saw Jim and Alice enter the church together. It was the first prayer meeting Jim had attended since John had been pastor of the church.

When the time came for testimonies Jim was the first one on his feet. John's heart sang as he heard him say: "My friends, I want you to know that tonight, for the first time in many years, I can say I have peace and joy in my heart because I have again found fellowship with my Maker. I realize now that I have been drifting away from that fellowship for a long time. I tried to tell myself that I was a Christian, and everything I did was all right, but deep down inside I knew better all the time. When Sandra was taken from us, I allowed myself to grow bitter. In my own heart I knew I was not living as I should. I do not know how long or how far I might have drifted if it hadn't been for our pastor here taking me in hand. He came to see me yesterday when my spirits were at a pretty low ebb. What he said to me was hard to take at the time, even though I knew it was all true. After he left I still couldn't get away from some of the things he said.

"I looked up and read the Scripture you mentioned, John, about our works being burned if they were not the kind that would stand the fire of God's judgment. I had to admit I hadn't accomplished much that would stand the test. Then the thought came to me that even if I escaped the prison house after my works were destroyed, I would still not be prepared to enter the eternal realm where I could meet my little girl. That thought was the straw that broke my stubborn will and drove me to my knees in complete surrender of my life and my all to God.

"I hope you folks will believe in my sincerity until I have a chance to prove that I really want to do all I can to help in the work of kingdom-building."

After the service, as the two men's hands were clasped in a grip tighter than ever before, Jim said brokenly, "John, I can never thank you enough for what you said to me last night. I also want you to know that my car and I will be available for that trip to the League conference . . . if you still want us."

identified a revelation that had been going on through the years—the continuing revelation of the vision of the kingdom of God, and I thank God that it has come not only to me, but to many people of this church. We know the gospel which we proclaim is the gospel of the kingdom. Priesthood has meaning when it is related to the business of the kingdom. The ordinances, organization, our economic and social and spiritual aspects of the church also have meaning when related to the kingdom of Zion.

I HAVE THE TESTIMONY that the church is moving forward, and I thank God for the few months I have been in Independence. I've felt a wonderful spirit here to challenge the people to come up higher, and I see evidences of the desire to build the kingdom of God in the lives of young people, young adults, the middle-aged, and the old people. They are letting the dominion of God have sway in their lives.

I look forward to the time when a fuller expression will be given to the revelation of truth through our daily walk and conversation. That under the leadership of his Spirit we shall be prepared to meet him and be with him here in Zion, that we may love him and keep his commandments is my prayer.

Worship That Counts

By Grant Dobson

JESUS KNEW that men must be assured again and again of God's love and concern for them. Knowing full well how they often forget this basic truth, Jesus repeatedly endeavored to impress upon his disciples the fact that God stood ever ready to minister to their needs. The Master continually brought these assurances of the Father's love, because he understood how important the acceptance of such a philosophy would be. Without the realization that God loved them and that he was greatly interested in them, the disciples would become burdened with the doubts and fears which are ever present in the lives of men. Jesus knew that where persistent fear and worry abide there can be no true spirit of worship.

Any student of psychology recognizes the important part that fear plays. Without it, men probably would become indifferent to danger and perhaps foolishly forfeit their lives. On the other hand, worry renders no service, for it prevents the mind from thinking clearly and often leads to subnormal living.

Today men worry about a multitude of things, many of which are beyond human control. They frequently are disturbed about family, job, business, debt, war, social position, public opinion, glamour, the number and quality of friends, and even physical stature, which Jesus said was not within the province of man to change. In all ages they seem to have been more interested in the fashions of the world than in the ways of God. Because of this, they have been plagued with worries, simply because they have not taken the trouble to know God and have deprived themselves of the divine perspective.

A STORY was printed in the newspapers recently that some time after the pilot of a plane had started on his mission he heard a noise which sounded like the gnawing of a rat. Immediately he thought of the possible results should this animal succeed in cutting through some vital part of the ship's structure. Suddenly he recalled that in a science class the instructor had mentioned that rats cannot live at high altitudes. As the plane rose to greater heights the noise ceased. When the mission was completed, a dead rat was found hidden in the wall of the plane.

As long as a man lives on low levels he must expect to be buffeted by the forces which occupy that level. Only as he rises to new heights can he expect to be relieved of the blind uncertainty which afflicts so much of the human race.

There is a tendency to become like that which is admired. When a man worships, he has communion with God. As he worships and thinks of Him, he senses the majesty, goodness, love, unselfishness, understanding, and concern of Deity. There comes, too, the feeling that all is well because of the recognition that God is at the helm. With this realization all worry, doubt, pride, and carnal desires fade away. It is then that the world's greatest truth—that God is—comes to the worshiper. Because God is the type of personality that he is, this association, this worship, is automatically uplifting. When a man attends church without leaving his problems, cares, worries, selfishness, and foolish desires at the altar, he has not truly worshiped.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints should do more than teach, pray, and testify. Nothing is complete unless the God who loves all men has been truly worshiped.

What Makes Prayer Service Worth While?

THE PRAYER SERVICE as a part of our church life has meant spiritual strength to a great many people. Age has not mattered in the appreciation of this service, for to some of many years' membership in the church, the prayer meeting is a very dull affair, while to many young people and those of short membership it is of great value. What makes the difference?

The Apostle Paul in Colossians 2:16 says, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

I think the value of God's people coming together to worship is of unmeasurable worth. The preparation we make before we come to the service is also important. Having our hearts full of love for those with whom we worship and our souls full of forgiveness, loving our Lord and wishing to testify of his goodness in our everyday lives by our hymns, our prayers, and our testimonies brings us into rapport with him, and he comes into our midst to bless. It is written in Doctrine and Covenants 38:2, "I am in your midst, and ye can not see me."

God ministers to our needs. We come in sorrow, he comforts; if depressed, he gives light. It is right, then, that when we come with joy we give praise to whom praise is due.

Wisdom, faith, and knowledge are needed in prayer service. If we are wise we do not tire our friends with unprofitable testimony or a long prayer that does not minister. Faith will help us to stand and acknowledge our Lord before men. Knowledge will bring edification as we testify of what God has done for us. If we have need as a group, we are helped as we seek the Lord together. Even a hymn can mean much when two or three have the same melody in mind and the Spirit prompts its being sung. I have known people who ordinarily could not carry a tune to sing melodiously in a prayer service.

Prayer is the key to spiritual power as souls draw near to God. We prepare for group prayer meetings in our meditations and prayers at home, never failing to remember the weaker Saints and those who have not yet covenanted with their Lord.

Fasting, too, has a part. This is not just abstaining from food. We can fast acceptably and eat enough food to nourish the body if we abstain from those things that rob us of communion with the Lord.

Today it is hard to find time for communion, meditation, or study. If we do not come together with the spirit of worship, we cannot taste of that which God has to give. No doubt many in their zeal have failed to measure to the heights they might, but I believe the souls that pray will have the mercy of God extended to them and will be led step by step in the path of righteousness. The power of prayer, either individual or collective, cannot be measured in words. The person who has touch with God can testify of his goodness and taste of the treasures he has for his saints.

Books

Donald M. Maynard's book, Your Home Can Be Christian, price $2.00, Herald Publishing House, is a challenge to thinking parents. While it might well be used as a textbook and guide in any home, it deals particularly with the establishing of a Christian home.

Dr. Maynard believes this has been accomplished when parents, at least, and children, according to their abilities:

1. Believe in the God that Jesus revealed.
2. Acknowledge Jesus as their Master and try to follow him.
3. Engage in some form of prayer or family worship.
4. Appreciate the Bible.
5. Attend and participate in the activities of a church.

In a Christian home parents adjust to each other. It is a home founded in love for each other and for God, where all mutually share the joys and responsibilities. These parents have arrived at an emotional maturity with understanding, patience, self-control, and a reliance upon God.

The problem of child behavior is discussed ably and at length. Examples of different behaviors are given, with causes and remedies for the problems. Physical health influences personalities; fatigue, faulty diet, and excitement all take their toll on the nervous system, causing behavior problems. Dr. Maynard outlines ways to help children develop self-confidence and make social adjustments. The ever-present problem of discipline ceases to be a problem under wise and loving guidance.

The author feels that children can be brought to a knowledge of God and Jesus through love and a happy home, through association with friends, and an appreciation of the beauties and wonders in nature. One needs to clarify his own belief to answer childish questions about God. Through doubts one often reaches his faith. Parents must not only know what they do and do not believe but also be able to give a reason for this belief or disbelief. They should remember that children believe literally. In answering questions about God, they should be frank and honest, even though they do not always understand how best to answer. With God's help through prayer, these questions can be studied together as a family; thus children are helped to realize that coming to know and understand God is a family quest and that experiences can be and should be shared. It is a growing process.

Helping children to grow spiritually is the responsibility of parents, shared by church school teachers. Here the church, parents, and church school teachers cooperate. An attitude of reverence toward God, thankfulness, and a desire to pray arise out of experiences that are meaningful. Parents are responsible for providing the kind of stimuli that tend to produce the desire to worship through their example and loving, thoughtful guidance. When the church is an integral part of the Christian home, there is proper respect for it and attendance comes naturally. This again is taught by example and attitude.

The adolescent problem is more acute in today's world because of present chaos and unrest. Parents need to watch their own emotions in order not to become problem parents. Dr. Maynard handles this subject very wisely and gives sound advice. If parents could only follow directions and always be well adjusted themselves, there would be no problem and they would be super parents; they would have a Christian family where all loved God and their fellow men. Throughout the book Dr. Maynard stresses the fact that families cannot isolate themselves. They are "their brother's keepers" and must be concerned about the sufferings and problems of others. They must not only be concerned, but do something to alleviate sorrow and want.

The writer brings a word of comfort to parents in the closing chapter, with emphasis upon the influence of parents and a list of do's and don't's. He says, "Wholesome parents tend to have wholesome children." One may not agree with all the suggestions in the book, but it is a challenge to parents and well worth their reading and thoughtful consideration. It will help one to evaluate his parenthood and sense the tremendous responsibility attached to establishing a Christian home.

MRS. B. F. MOATS

Sun Eagle, by Geraldine Wyatt, Longman's, Green, and Company, 1952. 172 pages. Price $2.50.

Sun Eagle by Geraldine Wyatt is a stirring novel of the early West. The action centers around the trek of a trader's band pushing its way to the "gold country" through hostile Indian territory. The arduous journey is filled with the hazards of enemy tribes. No less formidable are the barriers that nature imposes. The rugged paths, the barren wastelands, the relentless stretches of desert heat wrestle the traders' powers for supremacy. The expert guidance of Jesse Chisholm, experienced leader of the party, and the adroitness of Painted Hair, a former captive of the Comanches, preserve the group from destruction.

Though the tense action of the novel seems to revolve around the struggles of the traders, Sun Eagle is a character portrait. Painted Hair, as he was known to the Comanches, is really white Brit Mason, who was stolen from his home as a small child. He becomes the foster son of old Tabbyquene, the medicine man. In the Indian village he acquires the lore of his new people. He not only achieves the skills of young braves, but in his soul Painted Hair becomes a native son.

The day that Jesse Chisholm purchases the white lad from his Indian family begins a new life for him. With the traders he is no longer the Indian Painted Hair, but the white Brit Mason. Though he secretly planned to be so conspicuous that Chisholm would ask to buy him, Brit is lonely on the trail with the white travelers. Some scoff at his strange rites. Others openly oppose him. Only Jesse Chisholm seems to understand. Brit yearns to return to his tribe and daily schemes to steal away. Then dangers challenge the traders. In facing common foes, Brit and the men are at times drawn together in the bonds of self-protection. By the end of the weary trek, Brit admires the insistent perseverance of the white traders. In turn these veterans of the trails freely concede the wisdom and skill of young Brit.

The constant motif of the novel is the emotional conflict between the Indian Painted Hair and the white Brit Mason. The love of the nomadic life of his tribesmen keeps drawing Painted Hair to his Indian home. The curiosity about his white heritage prods Brit Mason to new experiences. This pulling between two lives is the basic theme of Sun Eagle. At the end of the trail Brit is at peace. He will return to his Indian village—but as a white man. He will take the culture of his white race to the adopted people of his childhood.

Mrs. Wyatt has written Sun Eagle for junior and junior high age readers. The novel has all of the exciting drama and suspense that appeal to pre-adolescents. There are tense moments and adventurous episodes. The plot is fast moving. Besides possessing these basic storytelling qualities, the novel is historically accurate. A panoramic glance of the West of the 1800's is vividly portrayed. Perhaps most important of all, the novel is essentially wholesome. It is free of the "cop and robber" tale that permeates so much of the younger adolescent reading material. It is refreshing to find a novel that combines good storytelling technique with a good story.

Holloman of Dallas, Texas, three sons, James A. Fligg, Philadelphia, Kenneth I. Fligg of Kansas City, Missouri, and Myron A. Fligg of Independence, Missouri.

In his passing, the church has lost an honored and much-loved minister. He was considered a good pastor and was interested in church development generally. He was co-operative, congenial, and kindly disposed to all persons. He was much interested in the young people and was highly respected and much loved by the Saints wherever he went.

Of his life and work, Apostle E. J. Gleazer says, "Brother Fligg was associated with me while I labored in Ontario and Michigan. He was the oldest appointee assigned to that territory at that period and was one of our most enthusiastic workers and spoke well of all his associate ministers. The success of any of the brethren was always a delight to Brother Fligg. He was a strong and enthusiastic member of the team for which I had definite responsibility."

A baptismal service was held Sunday, October 19, at which time Charles Baldwin, Daphne Ann Peavy, Charles Day, and Raymond Gilbert were baptized by Elder J. E. Baldwin. Elder H. H. Jernigan baptized Roy Hancock, Shelby Jean Hancock, and Anita Duke. The candidates were confirmed at the evening service by Elders J. A. Pray, J. E. Baldwin, R. L. Booker, and H. H. Brown Biologist to Push Study of Nucleic Acid Work in Cells

Dr. Frederick Sherman Returns From Project in Swedish Radio Biological Research Laboratory

By Leslie H. Horn

Editor's Note:

Dr. Sherman is a graduate of William Chrisman (Independence, Missouri) High School and a member of the Providence, Rhode Island, Branch. His father, Elder W. J. Sherman, lives in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

WHEN Dr. Frederick G. Sherman, a Brown University associate biology professor, returned to Providence Monday night from a fourteen-month project in a Swedish radio biological research laboratory, he brought home vital information in the battle against disease.

In Sweden, Dr. Sherman studied the life and death drama of living cells under the influence of radiation. He worked with a Nobel Prize winner who operates one of the greatest radiation laboratories in the world.

What he brought back with him will enable him to apply new techniques and methods in discovering how nucleic acids are built up and broken down under the influence of radiation in the living cell.

In coming months and years Dr. Sherman will probe further into the operation of nucleic acids, and he will do it in a laboratory to be specially outfitted in the Brown University Biology Building at 97 Waterman Street.

Key Role in Cell

Nucleic acid molecules play a key role in the work of the cell. Human beings, and other organisms, are merely individual collections of these cells and, if they function properly, so does the individual.

The laboratory will be fitted out so that Dr. Sherman can work with isotopes, radioactive tracer materials, which will chart the course of certain body secretions through tissue.

He went to Sweden under a James Picker Fellowship in Radiology administered by the National Research Council. He was one of two fellowship winners in an international competition.

At the Institute for Research in Organic Chemistry at Stockholm he worked with Dr. George Hevesy, who won a 1943 Nobel Prize for his achievements in designing experimental techniques for the use of tracers. One of the first workers in this field, Dr. Hevesy has trained more people in the radio-biology field than has any other laboratory.

Also Has Two Cancer Grants

Dr. Sherman is also the recipient of two American Cancer Society grants for work in his special field.

A good deal of Dr. Sherman's work has involved the use of P-32, radioactive phosphorus. This requires the use of mice, especially their livers, which is the seat of the biochemical factory in which more than 200 processes involving the metabolism of food take place. "The trick is to devise and set up techniques which will show these processes," Dr. Sherman says.

In his coming experiments Dr. Sherman will inject into the mouths of mice a solution containing P-32. Twenty minutes later the mouse is killed, the liver taken out, frozen, then ground up with a number of chemical substances. Each compound is then isolated and the amounts of P-32 retained in them is measured with a Geiger counter. The results will show whether the enzymes in cells have been interfered with to prevent their normal functioning. "We hope to discover which enzyme systems are most sensitive to irradiation," Dr. Sherman explains.

Many Parallels

Results of Dr. Sherman's work with mice will be deeply significant in the fight against human disease, for there are many sharp parallels in the function of the human and the mouse liver. His efforts to learn more about the anabolism and catabolism—building up and breaking down—of nucleic acids in living cells is a study of only one of the 200 functions of the liver.

He is particularly interested in how the building up and breaking down process is modified under X rays, and for further study in this sphere a quarter-million-volt X-ray machine in the basement of the building will be utilized on mice. The mice will come from the department's extensive mouse room, which houses a total of 5,000 animals in three colonies.

One Thing Certain

Back only three days, Dr. Sherman hasn't yet discussed details of his new laboratory with his boss, Dr. J. Walter Wilson, head of the biology department. One thing is certain, however: special care will be taken to set up the laboratory for handling of radioactive materials—they're dangerous and expensive.

On his way home from Sweden, Dr. Sherman stopped off in Paris to attend the Second International Congress of Biochemists during the last week of July. Here he delivered a paper which he wrote on the subject of "Incorporation of Radioactive Phosphorus into Trichloroacetic Acid Soluble Compounds From the Livers of Irradiated and Non-irradiated Mice."

Note of Appreciation

Before my mother, Cora Roberts, died she asked that I write to the Herald and thank all who remembered her in prayer during her final illness. We believe that she was spared much suffering because of these prayers, and even death came as peacefully as one going to sleep. I shall miss her presence in our home, but I am thankful that she has entered into the Divine Presence. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may live so I shall be worthy to meet her again someday.

I am especially grateful to the good people of Sacramento Branch who were so helpful in our time of sorrow. That God may bless them richly is my prayer.

Prayers Were Answered

A year ago last April I was in the Sanitarium for a serious operation. The doctors doubted for my life. I asked the chaplain to place a request for prayers in the Herald. This was done and God answered those prayers in a marvelous manner. I was given much comfort and assurance as I prepared to go to the operating room; during the surgery I am told a fine spirit was present. Afterward the doctors told me, "It is astounding how you are getting along." The nurse said, "The doctors call you the miracle lady." I know God surely was with me.

After the operation in April I fell in November and crushed a vertebra. In an experience of comfort I was given the assurance that healing would come. Pain ceased suddenly and I knew that friends were praying for me. I believe in prayer and am so thankful to my Heavenly Father. Now a year later I can walk with ease.

But Where Are the Nine?

By Pauline J. Arnson

DO YOU REMEMBER the story of Jesus and the ten lepers?

And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men who were lepers, who stood afar off: And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us. And he said unto them, Go show yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass as they went, they were cleansed. One of them when he saw he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God. And he fell down on his face at Jesus' feet, giving him thanks; and he was a Samaritan. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? But where are the nine?

This story always comes back to me during the Thanksgiving season. It is a good thing to give thanks to God for his unspeakable gift—for all things—in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Thanksgiving, if used for praise and to express appreciation for the many blessings, is of special worth to souls. World conditions need not hinder us from giving thanks.

In many places the church provides a morning service on Thanksgiving Day where family groups have an opportunity to worship, sing praises to the Lord, and acknowledge his goodness to us in all things. Even the men in charge consider the mother's responsibility in making this day a home-coming for the family; they plan the service for an earlier hour than usual and make it a short meaningful one. I like to think it is the universal custom for Reorganized Latter Day Saints to go to the house of the Lord on this special day for praise and thanksgiving. In Independence a service is always provided; there is an anticipation in the air and a feeling of thankfulness as one approaches and sees the family groups entering the church.

One year a former pastor of the Stone Church, the late John Sheehy, was visiting in Independence at this time and was the morning speaker. When he arose he looked all around the church and then said: "When I knew I was coming home I wondered if I would see the people in their accustomed places. Yes, you are here. There is Brother Brown on the first row, there are the Harder and Smith families under the east wing. I see Brother Elbert on the west side. All are in their places as they should be." He continued to match names with familiar faces, and how happy we all were that we were there to honor this good man. How much more important it is that we are in our places to give thanks to our Master.

MEN OF OLD, like Jesus, were interested in helping the people see the need of giving thanks. Throughout the Scriptures we find them giving thanks. In Psalms, David prays for many things, but most of his prayers are concerned with praise and thanksgiving to the giver of all good gifts. His thankfulness finds expression in many beautiful and favored psalms: "Bless the Lord, oh my Soul"; "Rejoice in the Lord, oh ye righteous: to praise the Lord is comely for the upright in heart"; "I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth."

An outstanding testimony I remember was one given each year by Brother U. W. Greene at our group prayer service. He reminded us that we should give thanks in all things—for the wonderful gifts made possible to us because of God's love, for the sense of smell, taste, sight, hearing, and feeling, and also for the little things God has helped men develop such as matches, bedroom slippers, easy chairs, push buttons instead of drop cords, and the flashlight.

THERE IS NO LIMIT to the things we have for which we should give thanks. We thank God first for our homes, our church, our family, our friends, and for the land in which we live—the promised land, Joseph's land. The Pilgrims came to exchange oppression for freedom to worship God. They were poor in this world's goods, but they were rich in courage and hope and in the will to work for God as they saw fit and believed. Liberty they sought—the liberty defined by a distinguished lawyer, Judge L. Hand:

Liberty lives in the hearts of men: no law or constitution can save it. Freedom is not ruthless, unbridled will. It is not freedom to do as one likes. That is the denial of liberty that leads to its own overthrow. The spirit of liberty is the spirit which is not too sure that it is right, which seeks to understand the minds of other men and women, that weighs their interests along side their own, it remembers that not even a sparrow falls to the earth unheeded. Liberty is of Him who taught the lesson never quite learned. The spirit of liberty knows that there may be a kingdom where the least shall be heard and considered side by side with the greatest.

The last part of this quotation is of especial interest. "The spirit of liberty knows that there may be a kingdom where the least shall be heard and considered side by side with the greatest." The church is commissioned to build this kind of a kingdom; we as members have the privilege of assisting. It is a tremendous task, but we believe that it can be accomplished by a consecrated people, aided by divine guidance.

WE SHOULD GIVE THANKS this season, for if we choose we can have a part in the perfecting of this Zion, the pure in heart, a place

Climbing the Spiritual Mount Zion

By Dona Clark Haden

A SMALL GROUP of earnest workers in Oklahoma had spent several weeks studying the church books. They had enjoyed many rich experiences when one of the group said, "Why can't we establish a mission here in our city? Why not invite our neighbors to come and study with us?" It wasn't long before the congregation in Miami, Oklahoma, was sending an elder to preach to them several Sundays each quarter. Church school was organized and a fine attendance record established. Now after a few years a branch has been organized, a building purchased, and a fine group of members are studying God's laws and seeking to adhere to them. This we know is an example of what is happening in many places.

From the constant use of Daily Bread, a family with whom I am well acquainted has found a deep source of joy. After the Scripture reading and prayer, the father, mother, and their three daughters of beauty and refinement destined to be an ensign to the people of the world and the abode of our Lord.

I am thankful for the heritage which is mine because of the belief and teachings of my parents. I am thankful that when I am trying my best to live up to these ideals I can be blessed with the good spirit which guides, comforts, and leads into all truth. I am thankful that Jesus taught us by precept and example and illustration. I do not want to be included with those about whom the question was asked, "But where are the nine?"

spend a delightful period in singing the songs of Zion. The memories these children have of these rich experiences will serve as a pattern when they establish their own homes and are ready to erect their family altars.

The pastor of a small congregation announced that one of the faithful elders had been chosen to preside over the Wednesday night prayer services for the month. The whole group attended well. It was evident that many prayers for the success of the weekly services had been offered in the homes. Many participated, both children and older people. God blessed them with light, and love, and unity.

AN ACTIVE FRIENDLY VISITOR told this experience. She had called a number of times in the home of a prospective member. Each time she made special effort never to stay long. Rather she wanted to leave her friend hungry for more of the good things she brought in the story of the gospel. The visitor was delighted when her friend told her that she was studying the Bible daily, and earnestly praying for guidance. Her following conversations proved that she was sincere and eager to know more about the church.

One day as the visitor said goodbye, the lady said, "Come back and sit down, I have something I want to tell you." It wasn't with surprise that the visitor heard her say, "I want you to know that many times when I am reading the Scriptures, especially the good things Christ teaches, my heart is filled with a joy I have never felt before, and I am made to know that I am soon to experience the greatest joy and happiness it has ever been my delight to know. Surely a new day is dawning for me." This made the heart of the visitor rejoice. She had noted that there was a change in the woman's attitude, and that she received an unusual welcome each time she came to visit.

ONE MORNING an experienced friendly visitor was busy putting her house in order so that she might make a few calls in the afternoon. She heard the still small voice say, "Go at once to Sister Brown's." She pushed the suggestion aside at first but the voice whispered again that she must go. It wasn't her custom to make calls in the morning, but she knew she should go. When she reached her neighbor's home she found her alone and very ill. She was glad she had left a note telling her own family group where she had gone, for she had truly been divinely directed to this place where there was need.

Such are the experiences that the good people of the church are having daily. God is speaking to them because they will listen. Isn't it good to know that in the work of kingdom-building there is work for each one of us? And isn't it good to see so many finding work to do? As we do the humble yet important things each day brings, we help others to find the path of joy and happiness. Then the mountain of the Lord becomes more apparent, and we can all together climb Mount Zion.

The Doughnut or the Hole?

By Lynn Weldon

PLEASE, WILL YOU HELP me find a toy for my son?" was the plea of a weary mother to the busy salesman across the department store toy counter. After listening to the mother's description of her son's likes and dislikes, the salesman replied, "I have a toy that is just the right thing for your son." Reaching under the counter he pulled out a complicated contraption. "This," he said, "is an educational toy which will help your son to adjust to the world as it is. No matter how he tries to put this toy together, he can't, because there is no right way to put it together."

Similarly, many people today find no right way to put the world together. Negatively and fearfully they focus their attention on the inflation, Korea, floods, strikes, and the apparent failure of the United Nations organization. Other people view the world positively. Courageously they are attempting to rebuild it. To them this is a time of great opportunity, and many wonderful things can be done. We also can think about the world in either a positive or a negative way.

Why should we be concerned about positive and negative thinking? In Proverbs 23: 7 we find this statement: "As [a man] thinketh in his heart, so is he." If this statement is correct, we are what we think.

IN MY COLLEGE WORK I took a course in art. During the afternoons I often watched the artists painting. I particularly noticed the paintings of two students. One painted a picture of beautiful flowers; the other chose a rusty garbage pail with trash strewn around it as the center of attention in his painting. If a person is what he thinks, could it be assumed that the person who focuses his attention on garbage pails will develop a garbage pail type personality? Dire predictions have been made that in fifty years one-half the people in the United States will be in insane asylums. The rate of mental illness is increasing alarmingly. Could it be that through negative, fearful, suspicious thinking many people are making themselves into emotional garbage pails? It is estimated that 75 per cent of all illnesses are caused by negative thinking. Drinking, for example, is often an outlet for negative thinking. Worry is one of the quickest ways to get stomach ulcers. We must be concerned about positive and negative thinking because "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

THIS BRIEF BIOGRAPHY of a man who said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," shows what positive thinking can do:

Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until he was thirty, and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never wrote a book. He never put his foot inside a big city. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompanies greatness. He had no credentials but himself. While still a young man, the tide of public opinion turned against him. His friends ran away. One of them denied him. He was turned over to his enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed to the cross between two thieves. His executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth while he was dying, and that was his coat. When he was dead, he was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend. I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has that one solitary life.

Jesus Christ had only his positive self to give to the people of his day. What are we giving to people today? Are we helping by our trust and confidence in them, or are we hindering them with our criticism and backbiting? An ancient children's story says that once upon a time an evil mirror was made by some evil spirits. When people looked into this mirror, things which were lovely and good were made to look ugly and evil, and things which were ugly and evil were made to look lovely and good. This mirror mysteriously exploded into trillions of tiny particles which were blown all over the world by the restless winds. Some people got specks of this mirror in their eyes. The lovely and good things their neighbors did were seen as ugly, evil, and suspicious.

Richard Byrne

This is another in the series of biographical sketches on young Reorganized Latter Day Saints who are outstanding in church and school or civic activities. Readers who know of other young members worthy of special recognition are invited to submit material on and pictures of their candidates to the Youth Office, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

PORTRAYING "DE LAWD" in Green Pastures, the Walnut Park Zion's League summer dramatic project, was Richard Byrne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Byrne of Independence, Missouri.

Dick, as his friends call him, has done a great deal of dramatic work in his four years of high school.

Have we specks of this mirror in our eyes? If so, this poem may help us:

There is so much good in the worst of us
And so much bad in the best of us
It hardly behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us.
JOAQUIN MILLER

THIS SIGN was in a doughnut shop window: "As you go through life, my brother, whatever be your goal, keep your eye upon the doughnut, and not upon the hole." We can focus our attention on the good things people do (the doughnut) or on the bad things they do (the hole). Which do we look for?

Positive thinking is valuable only when we do positive things. What are we doing to satisfy the needs of people around us? We might begin by doing one positive thing extra for someone each day for a week.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Are we thinking positively or negatively? Are we roses or garbage pails? Are we looking upon the doughnut or the hole?

While he had obtained recognition each year, his senior year brought the grand climax. He was chosen the best actor in the one-act play contest, and had leads in both the annual speech play and the senior class play. He was rated as the outstanding Thespian at William Chrisman High School with ninety national honor points. On commencement night he was recognized by the White Masque Players as being the outstanding drama student in the graduating class.

In addition to his dramatic activities he lettered in the high school band for five years. For the past two years he was student director as well as soloist with the band. At the Missouri state contests he has won two blue ribbons for horn solos, one for ensembles, and one for band.

In ROTC work he has also been at the top, being one of the two Chrisman winners of the Colonel Robert McCormick National ROTC award, and also a winner of the national outstanding cadet award presented by the Department of the Army.

His grades have been in the upper 5 per cent of his class. According to results shown by a scholarship test given by the National Honor Society, he was within one question from being one of the highest 5 per cent in the nation.

His participation has not been limited to dramatics, music, ROTC, and scholarship. He has been president of the National Thespian Dramatic Society, Boys' Pep Club, National Science Club, and the Junior Classical League, and also served as president of his home room for five semesters.

Dick was a member of the National Forensic League, Future Teachers of America, National Rifle Association, a junior member of the National Honor Society, and the William Chrisman Student Council for four semesters.

Besides winning the White Masque award he was given the Harry Sturges Essay Award, a gold medal for the best senior essay on English literature. Along with David Freeman, Delores Tandy, and Celia Fry, he gave one of the commencement talks.

In addition to his numerous school activities Dick has been president of his church school class, is president of the Walnut Park Zion's League, and participates regularly in the City-wide Zion's League programs. He has just finished narrating the Restoration Story for the weekly Sunday evening city-wide Zion's League service. This past year he was narrator for the annual city-wide music pageant.

Dick is now attending William Jewell College, to which he was given a scholarship.

Observe Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Brother and Sister Lee Quick will observe their sixtieth wedding anniversary Sunday, November 30, by holding open house from two to five at the school auditorium in Mapleton, Kansas.

They were married at Fort Scott, Kansas, in 1892 and united with the church about a year later.

 DEFINITION

Working on a scientific piece, I came across the word "micrology." In the context it seemed peculiar, and so I opened the dictionary to see what would be said of such a word. The definition was this: "Attention to petty items or differences."

And then it struck me that here was something characteristic of many people I have known. The man who spoiled our church school class sessions with his hair-splitting arguments was not an obstinate wretch, as I had supposed, but a micrologist. And the other man who quarreled with everybody for an hour at a branch business meeting over a twenty-five cent item in the budget was not a penny-pinching skinflint, as we all thought, but a micrologist. And the two ladies who talked so long over the back fence, reducing the reputations of their neighbors to shreds—these ladies were not gossips, but micrologists. And the children's endless chattering and fussing over transient interest and possessions is not nonsense, but micrology. It helps wonderfully to find a new word for an old thing and makes its stubborn persistence so much easier to bear. If you can't get a new hat, get a new word; it will cost you less, and you can have just as much fun with it. Science is wonderful, but can it match the magic and mystery of linguistics?

 THE STRANGER

Going into a city, making a fresh start at becoming acquainted with the community, one has all sorts of interesting and exciting adventures. You learn which concerns like to welcome the stranger, and which ones do not like him, which ones give him a fair deal in the hope that he will return, and which ones try to trim him on the assumption that he will never come back. Best of all is the adventure of meeting people.

It was interesting to discover, for example, in one of the better barber shops that the best educated and most interesting person there is a young colored man who operates the shoeshine department and keeps the place tidy. A competent operator, he employs some magic by which he makes shoes appear two years younger than they are. Back of his excellent service is a philosophy.

"It is good for a man to take pleasure in his work," he said. "I like to do something for people that will please them. If people like a person who serves them, they will come back again. I have enjoyed working here because I meet many new and interesting people." Obviously, this man is a student, and his present work is intended to pay his expenses while he prepares to go on to something better.

If that young chap had a white man's opportunities in life, he would go far. He may go far anyway. Who knows what service he may yet give to his country and his people?

It is tragic, in our kind of civilization, that some of the finest people are limited in opportunity and must take the menial tasks. Isn't it a tribute to them that they are not crushed by their experience—that they can rise above circumstances and meet life with a song in their hearts and a brave philosophy in mind?

We'd Like You to Know . . .

John W. Blackstock

TO JOHN the hope of the kingdom of God is the greatest challenge of the church. Even as a young man he was attracted more by the idea of the kingdom than by any other aspect of the gospel. But in spite of the appeal of the kingdom and a conviction that the Restoration was true and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, he recalls, "I rebelled against church membership until I was past twenty-one."

He started attending church school with his sisters as a child in Lucas, Iowa, at the invitation of two women who belonged to the Reorganized Church. "I shall never know what was said," he relates, "but in the years attending the Lucas Sunday school before I was ten years old, the conviction was born within me that the Restoration was true and that Joseph Smith was a prophet. This conviction has been an abiding thing from that day to this."

After several years in Lucas, John moved with his family to Chariton, Iowa, but he did not attend the Reorganized Church regularly for some time. He even served as an altar boy at an Episcopalian church for a while. "During these years of my stiff-neckedness," he recalls, "I was told by the Lord on more than one occasion that my place was in the household of faith. It was during one of these experiences that I decided to be baptized."

He was baptized in Chariton in October, 1928, just a month before he married the former Leona M. Cackler. He was ordained a priest in February, 1933; an elder in February, 1935; and a high priest in August, 1940. In 1944 he was placed on the Lamoni Stake high council and in 1946 became a counselor in the stake presidency. Four years later he was appointed by the church to serve as president of the Central Michigan District. That is his present position.

John was born on a farm in Lucas County in July, 1907. He was graduated from Chariton High School in 1925. As a young man he started to work for an outdoor advertising company as a helper on a construction crew. When he quit to accept church appointment twenty-two years later, he was vice-president of the firm and plant superintendent.

The Blackstocks have three daughters—Donna Jeanne, Leona Mae, and Elizabeth Anne.

The Modern Marriage

"Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband."—I Corinthians 7: 3.

ST. PAUL has been widely criticized for his views on marriage, especially because he was "only a bachelor." But there isn't any finer bit of advice in the literature of marriage than the verse quoted above. Let any couple follow that verse through life, and they will have a very good chance for a happy and successful marriage.

Why is it that those who preach on the subject quote only the fourth verse? It deals only with the physical aspects of marriage. Even so, rightly understood, it teaches us that we should not live only for ourselves, but for each other—a point too generally overlooked. But benevolence is much more important; it is in the realm of the spirit.

WE WERE SHOCKED recently by the sensational story of the divorce of a noted New York theatrical producer and his actress wife. Their real trouble seems to be that they are surfeited with wealth, pride, publicity, vanity, and attention. People who try to manage a marriage like a night club will go bankrupt. Their newest theatrical production, their divorce, could only come out of the red-ink imagination of a circus press agent. Since so much has been made of it and similar affairs, is it any wonder that common people ask how much longer the institution of marriage can survive? And what gives young people the courage to try it?

Fortunately, the fate of marriage does not depend upon New York's Broadway, nor upon Hollywood. Marriage survives because of the great majorities of good people who make it work, tend to business, and keep out of trouble.

The foundations of marriage are still, as always, basically spiritual. St. Paul saw that. Unless marriage has a spiritual foundation it cannot stand the shocks and strains of modern life. What makes a man or woman say, "I love you, Dear," to the same person for fifty years is a matter of the heart more than of the mind.

WHAT ARE the special problems of modern marriage?

There is a heavier economic burden on the home than ever before. It costs more to rent or buy a home, more to equip it, more to keep it going. The standard of living is much higher, and the marriage partners have a greater burden to bear.

Modern living exerts greater strains on personality, and it is not always possible for people to endure them.

Taxes, education, clothes, social life, food, fuel—all things cost more. These are material things, but they invade the realm of mind and spirit with the burdens they impose.

We have heard and read much about the failures of marriage. The successes do not make the headlines. Only the failures reach the news. Perhaps it is time to say something in praise of the happy marriage.

JUST ABOUT DUSK we went for a ride to the city park where a new shelter house was recently dedicated. The lights were blazing cheerfully, and there was a good fire on the hearth. Between the fireplace and the tables was a group of young married couples and their children making ready a picnic supper. They appeared to be happy together. It seemed to us that in all America there could be no more beautiful sight than this: men and women in love, working together in partnership and bringing up fine children as citizens for the future. We lingered there watching them for some minutes.

The oldest team in history consisted of a man and a woman. God knew that they needed each other, and he brought them together. He meant them to help each other, and to be happy. A good marriage is one of the finest things in human experience.

HAPPILY MARRIED PEOPLE are builders. A single man is content with a hotel room or a boarding house. A lone woman gets a tiny apartment somewhere that she can look down on the world from the safe distance of the sixth floor. But let the two of them marry, and they go out into the suburbs to build a home, plant a garden, organize a new school district, support another shopping area, and build a community. Married people are workers and builders because they do not live for themselves, but for each other.

IT IS TRUE that modern conditions give us many more things for health and welfare than people used to have. At the same time modern life places greater burdens and strains upon us. But we need the happiness and security of homes, the beauty of love, the dear companionship of marriage, as much as any generation ever did. Success in marriage will take work and self-denial, as it always has in the past.

Marriage was instituted in the divine wisdom, and if we want to make it succeed, we often need to turn for help to the Heavenly Father. When a man remembers that his wife is God's daughter, and that he is responsible to God for the way he treats her, he will be a better husband. And when a woman remembers that she entered marriage with a heavenly commission, she will give all she can to make it work. And that is why there are so many happy, successful marriages that never reach the headlines.

New Mechanized Equipment

We are pleased to announce the installation of new equipment at the Auditorium which will greatly strengthen the service offered our members. A group of International Business Machines are being placed now and will be in full operation in the near future.

Obviously, the purpose of the IBM system is to produce our records more speedily and by easier mechanical methods, and in this way serve the total church, including all departments and institutions. Of even greater significance is the fact that it will now be possible to open up new fields of statistical data which were not previously available due to tremendous manpower required for the production of such data. This should mean better ministry in many fields.

The IBM system, in its initial stages, is to act as a service division of the Statistical Department and the Tithpayer's Service Department. The machines will produce for the Statistical Department its membership record, enrollment cards, balance sheets, and all other forms. For the present it will serve the Tithpayer's Service by recording all contributions by type, and produce an annual statement which will be submitted to the contributors.

The use of the equipment will necessitate some changes in procedures of branch recorder's and solicitors. Further information will be sent to these workers from headquarters.

We feel this is a definite step forward, and one which will directly assist every active member, branch, district, and department. Subsequent issues of the Herald will carry articles and pictures which will offer detailed information as to the function of this mechanical system.

New Radio Program

On January 4, 1953, the church will start a new series of broadcasts on KMBC-KFRM in Kansas City. These programs will be broadcast each Sunday morning between 8:30 and 9:00 and heard in the following stakes and districts: Center Stake, Kansas City Stake, Far West Stake, Central Missouri Stake, parts of the Lamoni Stake, Kansas District, Rich Hill District, parts of the Spring River District, Missouri Missionary Area, Kaw Valley District, and possibly some sections of northern Oklahoma, eastern Colorado, and southern Nebraska.

The theme for the year-long series is "Hear Ye Him." Evan Fry will be the speaker, and the sermons will be doctrinal. In addition to the sermon, each program will also include Scripture, organ music, and vocal music by a special radio choir.

DECEMBER THEME

Christ Is King

It is intended that this radio effort will be tied in with an intensive missionary endeavor in every district and state covered. Accordingly, it is important that the series receive as much publicity as possible in the areas where it will be heard. A special brochure has been prepared for distribution by our members to their friends. Attractive posters are being printed for display in our churches and other prominent public places in the communities.

General appointees serving the above named areas are informed as to the availability of the advertising materials. They are also planning the follow-up missionary work.

Members living in the listening area can share in several helpful projects: 1. Help distribute the advertising folders—every home in the community should have one; 2. Call at least five friends every Sunday morning just prior to broadcast time and invite them to listen; 3. Volunteer to assist in follow-up work (telephoning, keeping records, personal calling); 4. Maintain prayerful concern for the success of the effort.

This radio program is an investment in missionary work. Certainly it will do much to promote good will for the church. Coupled with a renewed effort on the part of our members to witness, there is every reason to believe it can be an outstanding tool in our kingdom-building effort.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

By Israel A. Smith

Graceland Survey

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College has requested E. J. Gleazer, Jr., President of the College, to make a study of anticipated needs and services at Graceland for the next five years. All pastors should have received a request from Graceland for information concerning high school students in the church. The implications of this study reach far beyond Graceland to concerns of the entire church. Recognizing the importance of this study, the First Presidency offers its endorsement and urges all pastors to make a prompt response to this request for information.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

By F. Henry Edwards

Death of August Weigelt

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, minister in charge of the European Mission, received notification of the death of August Weigelt, on November 5, who has been pastor in Brunschweig, Germany. He was a veteran of World War I.

Brother Weigelt was one of our outstanding ministers and his loss will be keenly felt. He has served the church well. Records of his ministry will be secured and a statement of appreciation will be published in a later issue of the Herald.

Experiment Upon My Words

By Ray Zinser

Adapted from a sermon presented at Lamoni, Iowa, on June 1, 1952

But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith; yea, even if ye can not more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words.—Alma 16: 151.

CERTAIN ASSUMPTIONS or hypotheses are always made in any experimentation. I would like to suggest some assumptions for our consideration as we study this quotation from the Book of Mormon.

Experimentation Begins with Assumptions

Our first assumption is that God is Creator of all things. Our second assumption is that man is created by God. Our third assumption is that man is invited to share creative processes with God, not only in the "becoming" process of personality development but in the group life which seeks to establish and perpetuate God's purposes. Our fourth assumption is that the creative processes of God include the establishment of Zion communities. Finally, we assume that God is interested in having the Zion message carried to the world.

Past Experience Gives Assurance

Past experience gives us assurance of the ultimate success for any experimentation based upon assumptions that are God-centered. Throughout the history of the dealings between God and man, we can see the relatedness, consistency, and triumph of the experiments conducted with God in the creative processes. People who accept the challenge and adventure of living with God in the kingdom community find their faith completely sustained.

During the days of the Old Testament prophets in ancient America, and during the periods of greatest growth and achievement at Kirtland, Independence, Far West, and Nauvoo, "miraculous" results followed those who truly experimented with God in kingdom living. This is demonstrated for us today in youth camps, reunions, and congregations motivated by Zion objectives.

Experimentation Is Always "In-process"

People experimenting with God in establishing righteousness do not usually begin with a blank slate. Rather, all forms of present knowledge and enlightenment come from past cultural developments, and the best and most noble of all previous achievements become ours to enjoy. Each cultural age experiments according to the level of accumulated culture of that age. Whether in technological or ideological areas each age is experimenting with new forms. At the same time many resistances develop to inhibit ongoing culture. However, no matter how strong the resistances, history points to the creative minorities willing to take "calculated risks" to attempt a better way of life through ideas and machines.

The "level of response" or what we might call the "level of readiness" to experiment depends in part upon "personality types." Let us identify these types. (1) The "Bohemian" personality type tries anything new just because it is new. Any new fad, any new craze, any new political theory or anything which is different from the status quo is experimented with by this type.

In sharp contrast we have the (2) "Philistine" personality type which holds fast to the old at all costs. This type is more than "conservative." Typical of it is a myopic viewpoint which objects to any proposed change and usually labels the person who desires change a "radical" or a "liberal" or a name which attaches considerable emotional disapproval.

Our ideal type is called the (3) "creative" personality. This type believes in social change when that proposed change gives even a limited assurance that it will be beneficial to society. This type believes in "calculated risks." New ways of thinking and doing are attempted which by all past experience, present knowledge, and future expectations promise to be of value to ongoing society.

Jesus believed in many radical social changes because they gave promise of something better than the status quo of his day. In addition certain basic "laws of God" were defended by Jesus; probably one of the significant ministries, among others he performed, was a radical interpretation of the principles of godly living held within the status quo belief systems.

An "Examined" Life

While it is true that an "unexamined life" may not be worth living, any examination that is constructive must have a sound basis for evaluation. This includes standards or criteria for that evaluation. The examined life worth living is one which first finds God and then relates life goals and actions to him. Thus each person must examine himself constantly, using godly goals and values as the central frame of reference.

The dynamic power of God will of necessity invite self-examination of personal objectives to see if they relate to divine purposes. This type of evaluation will be completely consistent with the ideal "creative" personality type. The good of the old and the good of the status quo will be retained as each has value in the execution of godly goals in the age of which we are a part.

Similarly, we must continually discard the unnecessary and outdated of the status quo. In addition, the best of proposed action patterns will be experimented with as a result of the self-examination process. If we agree on these assumptions—and if we are intellectually honest—can we be satisfied with our attempts in experimentation with God and Zionics development? How do we measure up to the experimental attempts undertaken from 1830 to 1844?

Joseph Smith Renewed the Call to Experimentation

God has always called his people to experiment when just a particle of faith is exercised by men. The agency of men is always involved. God can become operative in social relationships only as men respond to his invitation and call.

Joseph Smith was not unique in the fact of calling people to experiment with God, but his call was unique for the conditions of the world at the time he lived.

However, God has timelessly called those who would listen to him and comply. Adam complied, as did Enoch, Noah, the prophets, and a host of others through the centuries who presented the inspired picture of the kingdom of God. We can also refer to the consecrated, creative minority who marched from New York to Kirtland and on to Independence, Far West, and Nauvoo, clearly portraying people willing to work with God in attempting the great Zionics experiment.

That same call came to Zenas Gurley and Jason Briggs who responded to the dramatic call to "reorganize" and continue on in the great experiment. Many other names could be given who have responded since 1851 to the eternal call of kingdom living.

Joseph Smith brought forth the eternal call. Let us set forth that call in three steps: (1) "Hear him" and join the creative forces of God in the plan for immortality and eternal life. (2) Build the kingdom of God, Zion, in all of the practical details of living with spiritual dynamics as the key motivation. (3) Carry the message to all men who are willing to be creative participants with God in the eternal plan of salvation.

Central Experimental Stakes

Lamoni Stake and other central stakes are in a strategic position in the church. Experimentation is "in process" right now in a limited way and shall continue in ever-expanding ways in the future. Our concern should rightly be the direction, degree, intensity of the Zionics experimentation, and in the willingness to develop the "particles" of faith to experiment further.

The extreme complexity of modern living places serious handicaps on the gathering process today and upon our ability to get experimental Zionics communities in actual operation. Present-day transportation, communication, scattered Reorganized Latter Day Saint living, vocational opportunities, and related situations impose staggering problems in urban areas for Zionics experimental communities.

World conditions today are demanding some significant demonstrations of not only good will but the practicalities of social and economic conditions based on Christian values. Lamoni, in particular, is in a strategic spot with numbers, homogeneity, Zionics heritage, and a college community permeated with high ideals. Many significant gains have been made in this area and other areas in the church. Yet, how tragic that we cannot present the kind of a community here that could be a shaft of light in a world of tragedy, tyranny, chaos, and corruption. I would not discount in the least our past efforts, but I would reaffirm the urgency which exists for us to demonstrate more "practically" our Zionics principles.

Recently, a medical doctor attached to my military unit listened to me tell about the "Restoration," Joseph Smith, and Zionics communities. He listened attentively. He asked penetrating questions. Finally came the question which undoubtedly many of you have received. "Where is one of your communities now operating?" I had to tell him honestly that I could not point to one community yet practicing Zionics principles as Jesus portrayed and as Joseph Smith visioned.

My friend wanted to visit such a community dedicated to godly objectives. He is a brilliant thinker and aware of the times in which we live. He is looking for social justice, equality of races and minorities, and was anxious to see in the most practical detail a living Christian community.

Saints of God, let us find that motivation which will bring our dreams into stark reality. Is it possible that we can speed up the process of social change? Is it possible that our Zionics community "in process" can take on more full bloom?

Need for Zionism Experimentation

It does not require someone from the Pentagon to tell us that we are facing a world crisis of uncomprehended proportions. It is unfortunate that we are moved primarily by crisis. While crisis does exist in some forms at all times, must we always wait for the cataclysmic event to motivate us to live righteously, to consecrate our economic surplus, and to build Zionism communities?

Future Trends

Whether we like it or not there are certain trends shaping up which are seriously influencing our Zionism experimentation and which must be reckoned with in the future by our awareness and by our Zionism action. Let us review these trends.

(1) Police action throughout the world is here to stay and will continue for years to come with or without war. Military service will be required of our young people for the next ten or twenty years or longer. Many of these are now on active duty for the second time since 1940. Many will have spent from 30 to 50 per cent of their last twelve years in active military service. How much more service will be required of veterans of World War II and the Korean War is yet to be seen.

(2) It is conceivable that an economic depression of world-wide consequence may overtake us. The vagaries of the international situation are such that it is entirely possible that we may be caught in another economic maelstrom. Foreign aid cannot last forever without cutting into the United States' standard of living. The Soviets are ruthlessly intent on seeing domestic and international economic upheaval disrupt and destroy the United States and Western economies. One of the major objectives in current Soviet strategy is to price us out of democratic life.

(3) As maniacal as it may seem, it is possible that we may be engulfed in all-out war. With this we can be assured that all of the available weapons of war will be heaped upon us. Biological and chemical warfare, atomic and hydrogen weapons, guided missiles, internal sabotage, economic strife and attendant evils may hit us and force us into an active interest in answering God's call to kingdom participation.

(4) Internal disintegration may occur in the USSR. However, it is dangerous to wishfully think ourselves into complacency by waiting for a possible collapse in the Soviet Union. Even if collapse came the rehabilitation problems there as well as in Eastern and Western Europe, China, and India are almost beyond imagination.

(5) When and if it can come, peace and world-wide rehabilitation will be long, difficult, and costly. Other antidemocratic "isms" will spring up as rapidly as present "isms" disintegrate or are destroyed. How detrimental the new "isms" will be will depend on how rapidly we are able to fill the social, economic, political, and spiritual vacuums with a positive program of democratic and religious action. Imagine for just a moment, if you will, what the influence might be if we could say we have "pilot" or "laboratory" communities in operation which demonstrated Christian principles in all areas of life!

And Now

The problems are immense even without war; yet we find ourselves enmeshed in hostilities in Korea, a cold war with the USSR in the psychological, economic, and political areas, and huge commitments to the free world in terms of money, arms, personnel, and promises of assistance in case of aggression. The Russians are presently madly pursuing militant objectives of world-wide revolution and Soviet domination and tyranny. Because of this our own national fiscal policy is geared to objectives which defy total implications.

Let us be soundly aware, too, of the impact of socialist thought throughout the world with or without war. The world will never "return to normalcy." In addition, it will be impossible to return to any economic, political, or social life previously experienced. The dynamic, complex, interrelated world in which we live will constantly seek some sort of equilibrium "ongoingly." The belief in collective responsibility is here to stay, and we may need to do a great deal of mental reshuffling. The world still desperately waits for the Christian message of collective concern, individual initiative and responsibility, and divine revelation.

Sharing God's Creative Purposes

As never before in world history, God calls us to Zionism experimentation. It is an experimentation with him for godly objectives. Each of us is called to be a co-participant with God in the eternal creation. Each is called to assist in bringing to pass the Zionism way of life which can attack the multitudinous problems of life from a Christian frame of reference. Each is called to evangelization possibilities in the local areas as well as in far-off places.

The bold adventure with God is in personal and social reconstruction and rehabilitation. Christian communities can yet develop a distinctive style of life in which each is allowed equal opportunity to develop his best in all areas of life. This means a life where all races and minorities may integrate in a common godly experience of brotherly love and concern for all. The message of Jesus is desperately needed today. Patterns of personal and collective responsibility based on our theocratic-democratic principles can serve as a guide to the world.

What a dramatic witness we can yet give through our experimental Christian communities! The kingdom of God can be ours for the doing. The price for Zionism demonstration is extremely high, but the results envisaged are magnificent.

Personal Experimentation

Certain qualities are urgently needed to fulfill the dream we have before us. We must desire to experiment with God. We must be willing to respond to the eternal invitation of righteousness. Personal initiative, self-management, and personal responsibility are qualities required of each Zion builder. A deep sense of mission, deep-seated convictions, and a deep sense of adventure with God and with each other are top priority items. The person and the group must find a transformation of attitudes and habits which meet Zion standards.

A Particle of Faith

A particle of faith can go a long way. Faith born of desires to follow objectives can motivate us to experiment with the Zion system of community interaction. This must be shared unreservedly in personal life, social, economic, and political activity, in diligent study and ceaseless work for kingdom goals.

Specifically, how shall we experiment in the areas of youth recreation, adult education, community improvement, and agricultural developments? What shall we try in order to develop effective church participation, rich spiritual experiences, and Christian neighborliness? What shall we do to achieve a love for all people without regard to skin pigmentation, income, or any other superficial identification which might separate us from each other and God?

Can we visualize camping, reunion, and other similar experiences as renewers of our spiritual tone as well as good times with Reorganized Latter Day Saints? Can we see our spiritual manifestations as means to the accomplishment of Zion ends? Can we see little things and the routine activities such as doing dishes for mother as related to building the kingdom? Can we see romance in teen-age associations as stewardships? Can we picture courtship, marriage, and family life as godly phases of the great drama of kingdom building? Can we see voting in our elections for the best candidates available and also running for office as essential stewardship responsibilities of an alert and Zion citizenry? Can we consider our businesses and vocations as community stewardships?

The time is always ripe. The time is now. Will you experiment with me, with others, and with God in the marvelous Zion adventure?

Some Pertinent Observations

A Call to Trusteeship

The primary aim of most of our older universities was to teach youth to worship God and obey his laws. Harvard's motto was formerly "In Christo gloriam" (to the glory of Christ).

It is a long way down from that to the statements that one now hears on campuses and in classrooms, that God is the foolish fantasy of ignoramuses, that religion is bunk, and, to quote a professor of philosophy in one of our larger institutions, "Priests are like salesmen of worthless oil stocks."

The devout founder of Wellesley College said to a group of its early students: "You mistake altogether the significance of the movement of which you are a part if you think it simply is a question of a college education for girls. I believe God's hand is in it . . . that he is calling to womanhood to come up higher . . . for noblest usefulness." Upon another occasion he said: "Education without religion is a rayless night without a star, a dead world without a sun."

Written into the deeds conveying property to Wellesley College were such clauses as the following: ". . . It is required that two-thirds of the Trustees shall be members in good standing in some evangelical church . . . and of decided Christian character . . . and in manifest sympathy with the religious spirit and aim in which the College was founded, and that the study of the Holy Scriptures be pursued throughout the entire College course." Also, "The property aforesaid is conveyed and accepted upon the express condition and with the express covenant that the grantees and their successors shall not defeat or change the trusts and uses for which the premises are conveyed . . ."

The founder of Smith College directed in her will that "the Holy Scriptures be daily and systematically read and studied . . ."

Such were the motives and the directions given by the founders of our great colleges and universities. We believe that every effort should be made to stamp out of these institutions angosticism and atheism, and that they should observe the sacred trust committed to them by their founders to promulgate the Christian religion and to develop true Christian men and women.

Communist Religion

"Eliminating the study of religion is the stated goal of communist education," writes a prominent Hungarian educator who is now exiled from his homeland.

He states, according to News From Behind the Iron Curtain, that in Hungary only about 3 per cent of the school children are able to receive religious training today—as compared with 50 per cent less than two years ago.

"By requiring parents to register with the authorities for their children's religious education, which invariably results in a black mark on the child's career, the government is eliminating this training," the educator declares.

And what is being substituted? Here is an excerpt from a lecture recently delivered in a Hungarian trade school: "There is no God, because he is not visible. We can only believe what we see. We believe in Stalin, because he can be seen. He is the head of the world."

Socialist Sees Need of Incentive

Mr. Richard Stokes, late Minister in the British government devoted to the doctrine of equality, is beginning to see the light. "More incentives must be given to enterprise and efficiency," he said recently. "The gap between the skilled and the unskilled in their earnings must be widened to make the attainment of skill worth the effort."

A case in point is a British railway engineer earning 143 shillings a week and a railway porter earning 110 shillings a week. The engineer must have skill and carry heavy responsibility. The work of the porter requires little skill and slight responsibility.

This is a good illustration of the leveling that takes place under socialism. The reward for acquiring skill and greater efficiency is so slight that special abilities are little developed. Socialism can supply only a common denominator level of existence with low production and general misery. Top rewards go only to political bosses.—Reprinted from Christian Economics of September 9, 1952, by permission of the publishers.

A Christmas Vesper Service Suggestion

By Franklyn S. Weddle

GOOD CHRISTMAS CANTATAS are so hard to find and there are so few good ones that we are often hard put to prepare an effective Christmas program of music for the choir.

The vesper program herein suggested may help your choir this Christmas season.

We would suggest that the service be held at about 4:30 or 5:00 p.m. in place of the regular evening service, perhaps on December 21 this year. It will time nearly an hour in length which is about right for a vesper worship.

The church decoration should be simple, not overdone with garish Christmas trees and tinsel, and the church should be at least partially candlelighted.

During the reading of Luke 2: 1-20 the interpolations of the Christmas hymns sung by the choir should not be abrupt. If the organ will softly play a few bars of introduction while the narrative is being read, timed to come out just right as the reader finishes, the choir may begin to sing without an awkward break or a wait for the pitch.

You need not feel obligated to follow exactly this particular selection of Scripture or for that matter this selection of hymns. Others may be substituted for these or added. Christmas hymns may be selected and interpolated in other places in the reading of the narrative.

The organ prelude should begin about fifteen minutes before the service and should preferably be a selection of Christmas carols and hymns not otherwise used in the service. Care should be given to key relationships so that one leads smoothly to the next.

The service should proceed smoothly without stops and starts or awkward waits, and without any announcements during its course. Everyone who participates should be coached so as to know what to do and when to do it without verbal or visible direction during the service.

If possible there should be a printed program in the hands of each worshiper, and if so the words of the anthems should be printed.

ORDER OF SERVICE

Prelude: (Fifteen minutes preceding the service)

Call to Worship: O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!—Isaiah 40: 9.

Opening Hymn: No. 135, Saints' Hymnal—"Angels, From the Realms of Glory," Congregation.

Invocation: (Short, not over one minute, invoking God's spirit to bless the worship of the hour.)

Choral Response: Refrain only of No. 135—"Come and Worship . . ." with an "Amen" at close.

Anthem: (Christmas anthem of your choice) The Choir

Scripture Reading With Music by the Choir—Luke 2: 1-17; Matthew 2: 1-15.

And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.

(And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judaea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.—Luke 2: 1-5.

Choir Sings: "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," No. 137, Saints' Hymnal.

And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

And she brought forth her firstborn son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.—Luke 2: 6, 7.

Choir Sings: "Away in a Manger," No. 149, Saints' Hymnal, or No. 75, Hymnal for Youth.

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.—Luke 2: 8-10.

Choir Sings: "While Humble Shepherds Watched," No. 139, Saints' Hymnal.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord.

And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.—Luke 2: 11-14.

Choir Sings: "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," No. 136, Saints' Hymnal.

And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.—Luke 2: 15, 16.

Choir Sings: "O Little Town of Bethlehem," No. 144, Saints' Hymnal.

And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.—Luke 2: 17.

Choir Sings: "O Come, All Ye Faithful," No. 74, Hymnal for Youth.

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.—Matthew 2: 1-3.

Choir Sings: "Silvery Star, Precious Star," No. 347, Hymnal for Youth.

And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judaea: for thus it is written by the prophet,

And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel.

Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.—Matthew 2: 4-10.

"I Am the Same That Leadeth Men to All Good"

Ether 1: 1-7

By W. J. Haworth

GREATER LOVE hath no man than this, that a man should die for his friend." But there are greater depths to the Savior-love "than this sad world dreams of." He who died for his friends lives again for them. "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore" (Revelation 1: 18). We are saved or reconciled to God by the death of Jesus, but "much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life" (Romans 5: 10). "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me" is indeed a precious assurance, but the active, present-day work of the Savior is also of inestimable worth. Leading men from evil to good is saving work of the highest order.

In Jerusalem Jesus promised that whosoever would do the will of God should know of the doctrine. He gave the same assurance to his followers in ancient America:

He that believeth those things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestations of my Spirit; and he shall know and bear record; . . . for it persuadeth men to do good; and whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do good, is of me; for good cometh of none, save it be of me. I am the same that leadeth men to all good; he that believeth not my words, will not believe me, that I am; and he will not believe . . . the Father who sent me. For behold, I am the Father, I am the light, and the life, and the truth of the world.—Ether 1: 105-108.

Jesus here reveals himself as the present-tense Savior—the "I Am" of the Christian church. The Almighty also called himself by this name when, out of a burning bush, he commissioned Moses to go down to Egypt and set his people free. "Say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto thee." When the Jews boasted to Jesus that Abraham was their father, he replied, "Before Abraham was I am." He thought it not robbery to be called equal with God (see also Revelation 1: 5, I.V.; Philippians 2: 6; John 5: 18), yet humbly he declared: "I am meek and lowly in heart."

JESUS WAS THE MANIFESTATION of the eternal God, with the special mission of Savior of the world. In furtherance of his saving work, he made a number of "I am" pronouncements which reveal him as the Savior with timeless tense, or a perpetual present tense. Here are some of these announcements:

I am the way, the truth, and the life.—John 14: 6.

I am the light of the world.—John 9: 5.
I am come a light into the world.—John 12: 46.

I am the bread of life . . . I am the living bread which came down from heaven.—John 6: 48, 51.

I am the door of the sheepfold . . . I am the door.—John 10: 7, 9.

I am the good shepherd.—John 10: 11.

I am the true vine.—John 15: 1.

I am Jesus Christ, the son of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 12.

I am the resurrection, and the life.—John 11: 25.

I am the same that leadeth men to all good.—Ether 1: 107.

I am he that liveth, and was dead.—Revelation 1: 18.

He who made all these "I am" declarations, after giving the great commission to his disciples authorizing them to preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing the believers in the name of the Deity, assured them, "And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matthew 28: 20).

Implicit in all these "I am" announcements is the fact that Jesus personifies the way, the truth, the light, and the life; he is the good shepherd, leading his sheep to salvation; the true vine, giving its saving sap to all who abide in him; the bread from heaven with its saving communion, the resurrection and the life, with its promise, "As I live shall ye live also."

AT THE VERY INCEPTION of the latter day work, it was stated in a divine revelation that a great and marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men. After giving certain directives to his ministry, the Savior declared:

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world. I am the same who came unto my own, and my own received me not; but verily, verily I say unto you, that as many as receiveth me, them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 12.

Here we have the ring of divine authority. Who but the very Christ could give men power to become sons of God through belief in his name? Jesus, who had this power and authority in the first century, retains it today as an eternal possession. Hundreds of thousands have accepted him in the Restoration and enjoy the divine blessing of "becoming" a child of God. The way, the truth, and the life that Jesus brought to earth and personified are still available to the obedient. He lives. Through the influences of his Spirit he still leads men to all good.

THERE IS THE DELIGHTFUL INTIMACY of the good shepherd with his saintly "sheep" in the parable of the sheepfold (John 10). The gentle shepherd of the Twenty-third Psalm goes ahead of his saints, calling each by name, leading them beside the waters of life and along the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. He knows his sheep. They know him. In him, above all, they have confidence. The delightful cadences of his voice are dear to them. He gives them assurance of complete safety. They turn from the voice of any stranger who preaches the least departure from his commandments.

We look in on the little intimacies of the sheepfold. After the Crucifixion and Resurrection, Jesus surprised his disciples by the Sea of Tiberius. While they dined the Master asked Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these [food and drink]?" "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." Christ's reply was "Feed my sheep." The same question was asked and answered again, and Jesus commanded, "Feed my lambs." A third time came the same question and answer and the commission, "Feed my sheep."

Soon Jesus was returning to heaven, and Peter, as representative of the ministry, received for the priesthood the charge to care for the flock. We grow on what we feed on, hence the spiritual food of the "sheep" must be that approved by Jesus. It is well to keep in mind that Christ said: "I am the good shepherd." Note that he did not use the past tense. Though his disciples were told to feed the flock, he is called the "chief shepherd of souls."

Peter, searching his mind about the status of John the Beloved, was told by the Savior who perceived his question, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." Out of this intimacy of the sheepfold the lesson comes to me that the chief concern for me is to do my allotted task and to follow my Lord. There is joy in following if I do it single-mindedly, not allowing jealousy or envy to cause me to question the Lord's seeming favors to my brother.

THE SHEEPFOLD was not limited to Jerusalem, for Jesus said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd" (John 10:16). Jesus is the universal Savior—the good shepherd who will go into deserts and mountains, and even down to the very pit of hell, seeking his lost sheep. Not in the writings of Krishna of India, or of Buddha, the Light of Asia, in the pages of the Koran or any other theological or historical record do we find anything that compares with the parable of the Good Shepherd who was so concerned with his lost sheep that he went to the extreme of dying to save them.

Far away, beyond trackless seas and oceans, in a land which men thought to be yet undiscovered, an ancient American prophet proclaimed: "Behold, I give unto you a sign; for five years more cometh, and behold then cometh the Son of God to redeem all those who shall believe on his name." The sign was that at the end of five years there were to be two days with no dark night intervening. The day following the "night that shall not be darkened," the Son of God should be born. There were scoffers among these ancient people who sneered at and tried to cast discredit upon the prophet and those who believed. These created a great uprising.

So, on a given day, it was decided that if the sign were not given, all who continued to believe in it should be put to death. Satan raged in that far land as in Jerusalem, and the faith of many was sorely tried. Yet, amid the trials of the faithful, Jesus spoke to them through the Prophet Nephi:

Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world to show unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.—III Nephi 1:12, 13.

The sign was given, to the dismay of the unbelievers. "A new star did appear according to the word of God" and there was a renaissance of the righteous way of life. One day, some time later, a concourse of people gathered around the temple. Their conversation was of Jesus Christ, of the sign of his birth and other signs of his death. At the sound of another voice their conversation was stilled.

It was not a harsh voice, neither was it a loud voice, and notwithstanding it being a small voice, it did pierce them that did hear, to the center. . . . Yea, it did pierce them to the very soul, and did cause their hearts to burn. . . . And it said unto them, Behold, my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased . . . hear ye him.

As they watched they saw a man descending out of heaven, clothed in white, who stood in the midst of them and announced: "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified." He told them of his crucifixion and invited them to look at and examine the scars and wounds of his suffering. Multitudes believed, and the church of God was set up in ancient America. Among other statements he made to them was one which identified them as the "other sheep" of the parable of the sheepfold:

And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.—III Nephi 7:20.

The record of these "other sheep" is rich in the same kind of experiences between God and man as recited in the record of the Jerusalem flock. Like the Bible, the books of this western record were written by many prophets; they were finally consolidated into one by Moroni who called it after his father, The Book of Mormon. It is another witness for the living Christ, showing that after what some Christians believed to have been the finish of his work for men on Calvary, he organized his American church according to the same plan as that used in the organization of the Jerusalem church. Under his ministry and continued direction his followers attained an almost perfect spiritual standard for two centuries before apostasies marred their progress. In this their history is similar to that of the Jerusalem flock.

CONTEMPORANEOUSLY with the translation and publication of the Book of Mormon, the Savior revealed the pattern for the organization of the latter-day sheepfold. When ancient Israel was in physical bondage, God appeared to Moses in a burning bush, commissioned him to go into Egypt and set his people free. He did not go personally, but used Moses to accomplish the task under the authorization: "Say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto thee."

When Jesus set about freeing modern men from spiritual bondage, he revealed his will through Joseph Smith and his associates, hence the "gospel of the kingdom" is being preached to "other sheep," who belong neither to the New Testament or Book of Mormon fold. The "I AM" of the twentieth century is the living head of the great fold being made ready to receive him in person when the "whole family both in heaven and in earth" shall be gathered to honor and serve him; the consummation shall be realized—"one fold and one shepherd."

In the present age of international, national, and personal conflict and uncertainty, there is peace within the fold. All who will may enter, for the living Christ has issued the invitation: "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved and shall go in and out and find pasture."—John 10:9.

Christ is the living door of every Restoration congregation or fold, though the stout portal out front is the door of the church building. "I am the door of the sheepfold," he reiterates. He does not say, "I was the door." Note the perpetual present tense that tells of an ever-living Savior, who calls to his "sheep" saying, "I know my sheep and am known of mine," and "A stranger will they not follow."

Is it strange that Jesus should say, "I am the door"? He also said, "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber" (verse 1). Did he not also say, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me"? Paul told the saints at Rome and Galatia that when they were baptized into Christ, they put on Christ. This is the sense in which he is the door into the sheepfold. Why should one wish to climb up some other way when by simple acts of obedience he may enter through Christ, the Living Door?

THE SAVIOR'S HUMILITY is demonstrated in the parable of the sheepfold when he says of himself: "He that entereth by the door is the shepherd of the sheep; to him the porter openeth." The same truth is historically related when Jesus sought out his forerunner, John the Baptist, and requested baptism at his hands. Against John's protest, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" he answered, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." The humility of the Lamb of God is inherent in this obedient attitude.

It is evident also in the statement, "I am the bread of life." "The Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world" here was speaking of the Communion sacrament which he inaugurated in remembrance of the giving of his life for his sheep. The Jews had given him a sign of their sonship of Abraham, referring to the falling of manna in the desert. They demanded a similar sign from him. He might have said, "I am the manna," but instead told them,

"Before Abraham was, I am." Here is the sign he gave:

I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. . . . Verily I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.—John 6: 51-54.

"I am the resurrection and the life" and "I am he that liveth and was dead and behold I am alive for evermore" are here linked with "I am the living bread." In his God-nature Jesus had eternal life, but in order to save the human race he took on the dual nature of the Son of God and Son of Man. Through the human in him he became mortal and could die on the cross in our stead and could give us his flesh to eat and blood to drink. We do this in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Not that we eat the real crucified flesh or drink his actual blood, but the bread and wine assume for us this relation, because he ordered it so. After all, scientifically, they belong to the common pool of physical life from which his body was formed. He made but one crucifixion offering, but by that "one offering hath he perfected forever them that are sanctified." Those whom he has sanctified are from different periods of time. How appropriate that there is no change in the announcement, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven"! It would be fatal to the race for Jesus to have been the living bread twenty centuries ago, but not the bread of life today.

I AM THE SAME that leadeth men to all good." The continuous presence of the Christ is with his obedient followers through all age groups, actually leading them from evil to "all good." He keeps pace with us through the changing years. With childlike faith we recognize his answers to the earliest prayers we lisp. We know him through the ordinances at the age of eight. Through the sometimes turbulent years of adolescence we are conscious of his powerful leading from the evil to the good.

We know the glow of his presence and power as we stand and pledge ourselves at the matrimonial altar. He is with us as we carry the heavy responsibilities of parenthood. Through these mid-years that bring to us the sure knowledge of the short span of life, he whispers, "Fear not. I am with you always" in righteousness. And when the shadows of life lengthen we hear his assurance, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." All the way he leads us to do good and assures us of the Comfort of the Holy Spirit.

I AM THE TRUE VINE and my father is the husbandman." The Savior's plea for unity in his church is again apparent in this symbolic parable: "I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing." If we are to bear fruit we must abide in him, for in no other way may the power-giving "sap" be carried through to us. If, by disobedience, we cut ourselves off from the source of supply we soon wither and die spiritually. Jesus requires us to bear fruit: "Herein is my father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." That is precisely what has happened to the churches that do not have the living, revealing, directing Christ at their head. To be co-workers with Jesus Christ in the active saving work he is doing will certainly bear much fruit in our lives. We must not "leave it all to Jesus," for that is the way of the unbelieving and disobedient.

Jesus foresaw that many professing believers would be inclined to reject the fact of his continued personal saving work as the operative head of his church. "He that will not believe my words, will not believe me, that I am." He would not have insisted upon this recognition in so many "I am" pronouncements if it were unnecessary to accept him as the living, active Savior he is. All of his "I am" announcements breathe the humility of this one, "I am meek and lowly in heart."

He left it to Isaiah to prophesy:

Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Paul was inspired to write:

I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: Which in his times shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords.—I Timothy 6: 13-15.

At long last the Savior will round off his work for the emancipation of mankind from sin as foretold by Paul.

Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.—I Corinthians 15: 24-28.

In the meantime he is the head, the "I am" of the latter-day church, actively directing the building up of his church and the saving of human souls.

Question Time

Question:

What is the second death?
North Dakota E. F.

Answer:

The Lord says it is the same as the first death, the one in Eden which was spiritual, and consisted of a separation of man from God. We read:

Wherefore, I the Lord God, caused that he should be cast out from the garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression: wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed (D. and C. 28: 11).

They who are the sons of perdition . . . are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, . . . in eternity, . . . these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power (D. and C. 76: 4).

John says they "shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever," also that the casting of them into the lake of fire "is the second death." Alma speaks of a time when those who have died in their sins "shall also die a spiritual death; he shall die as to things pertaining unto righteousness." Many other prophets speak of the second death as being the cutting off, or final separation from God and all that is godly. They live with their sins.

Question:

We have been confronted with a problem as to who should vote at our branch business meeting. Some of the business conducted has a definite legal bearing on the branch and the church. Will you please discuss in the Herald the wisdom of extending or denying the vote to those not actually members of the branch?

District of Columbia K. G. M.

Answer:

All members of the church enrolled in a branch are entitled to voice and vote in the branch business meeting. According to a ruling made some years ago, persons whose requests for transfer have been received in the Department of Statistics are regarded as members of the branch to which they are transferring. Of course, this is only known in the branch concerned from an up-to-date report from the local statistician or from the general church statistician.

It is not unusual for a branch business meeting to grant the right of voice, or of voice and vote, to members of the church who are not members of the branch, but who are present at the business meeting. This is not always a wise procedure. Indeed, it can lead to considerable resentment if the persons granted such privileges exercise the right of vote on important matters of branch policy or personnel or expenditure.

Question:

What becomes of the wicked who will be destroyed by fire during the little season after the millennium?
North Dakota E. F.

Answer:

During the millennium the people living in mortality outside of the territory of the redeemed will all have the gospel preached to them, until it is said that all shall know Him. Yet when Satan is loosed at the close many will turn to sin and rebellion under his leadership, and will seek to destroy the people of God. Divine judgment will destroy them by fire and they suffer a physical death. Since they sin against light and knowledge, they are guilty of the sin against the Holy Ghost for which there is no forgiveness; and like all others who die in that condition, they undoubtedly go to that hell prepared for the irredeemable, to await the final resurrection. They will be among those who at the judgment are sent away with the devil and his angels into the "lake of fire." They belong to the class described in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4h as "sons of perdition."

Question:

Since polygamy and adultery are an abomination to the church, how can we account for the blessings of Gad, Asher,

Dan, and Naphtali—the polygamous sons of Jacob?

Ohio

MRS. R. W. D.

Answer:

We do not know just what blessings you have in mind, but usually the Old Testament writers thought of blessings in the terms of temporal or material advantages. The answer to this is that "the Lord looketh upon the heart and not on the outward appearances." We are told in the Scripture that he sends the rain upon the just and the unjust. A little reflection on this should convince us that any other course would put God in a position of coercing men to do his will and violate the principle of agency. If he gave material blessings only to the righteous, then this would form a pressure which would gradually whip all of us into line and deny one his right of choice. God cannot do this and be true to his promises.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

Question:

Can one's good works ever be balanced against his evil deeds (as in the case of David)?

Ohio

MRS. R. W. D.

Answer:

We think they are always so balanced. God rewards men according to both their good and evil deeds. There's a rewarding and balancing. This does not mean that the sinner will be beaten for a while, and then treated to the very best in the way of living for a while; but rather an environment (or mansion) will be found suitable to his condition when everything is considered.

It Is Not Enough

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

THIS MORNING I saw in the newspaper a picture of a very small boy, and it impressed me again with some thoughts I have been having for some time. This child was one I have never seen, and it is very unlikely that I shall ever see him, and yet in a very real way I feel that he is my responsibility. He was naked, and clutching a tin can, and on his face was unspeakable fear and grief and bewilderment. The caption beneath said he was one of the Korean children orphaned, or separated from his parents, by war, and was found wandering about begging food in his tin can. Tears came to my eyes, as I compared him with my own secure family. Then I thought, "Tears in my eyes—a touch of grief in my heart—it is not enough."

When I was younger, contemplating marriage and motherhood, I was full of resolve to do my very best by the responsibilities and privileges that would come to me. I was very thankful for my heritage in the church, and for the ideals that were mine because of it. I was sure that because of the gospel I would be able to do a better job than I otherwise could have done.

On the other hand, I often felt that I could not possibly measure up to the big responsibility of rearing children in such a way that they would be instruments in God's hand. Many times I felt—and still feel—entirely inadequate to the task, and know keenly my shortcomings and limitations.

Because of all this, I felt that if by study and prayer I could in some measure qualify myself as a homemaker in Zion, it would certainly be all that could be required of me. As our family continued to grow, until there were five children in our home, the responsibility seemed constantly greater. I knew that God would require an accounting of my stewardship for these souls entrusted to me as their mother. Surely no more could be expected of me.

Just when it began to dawn upon me that discharging this responsibility in my own home was not enough, I do not know, but I realized one day, as I looked at our own new baby, that doing a good job with her, and her brothers and sisters, is not all that will be required of me as a mother. I cannot turn my back on that Korean baby, nor the hundreds like him, nor on the starvation-bloated infants of India, nor on the thousands of war orphans of Europe. Even less can I ignore the dirty, neglected children in localities much closer than that.

IT IS NOT ENOUGH that I shall budget and buy wisely, and sew that my children shall be adequately and tastefully clothed. Somehow I must make my voice heard, my influence felt, in making it possible for naked children everywhere to be clothed.

It is not enough that I shall study proper diets and plan tasteful meals that will promote the health of my own family, when millions are starving. Many times as I have looked at my plump, healthy baby, I have thought of the terrible grief in the hearts of the mothers who must watch their babies die of starvation. I know then that I, too, am responsible in some measure for their plight.

It is not enough that I shall try to work cheerfully at the ever-recurring drudgery of housework, in order that we may make the best of our home, and enjoy cleanliness of body and clothing. I see before me the parade of cold, shivering children, in patched-together rags, often shoeless, with no homes at all, or at best crowded into unheated hovels. I must feel a measure of shame that such inequality exists.

It is not enough that I shall try to teach my children the beauty of the gospel, and of God's goodness, and of the joy of upright conduct, when all about me are spiritually neglected children whose only knowledge of God is through cursing.

It can never be enough for me to work only at the task of setting my own household in order, even though that task may seem far beyond my limited strength. I simply cannot concentrate on my home, my family, and feel that all these other hordes of children are outside my realm, that there is nothing I can do for them. If I shed a few tears for them, and stop at that, I have failed in my stewardship.

THIS I BELIEVE is true of each of us who are the mothers in the church. It is quite true that I can see no possible way personally to give immediate help to the pitiful Korean baby whose picture I saw. In fact, he may be dead by now. Yet surely if enough women of the church felt a strong responsibility to all the children of the world, we could make ourselves felt. Certainly there are many who now feel this, and many not members of the church who also feel this, and are doing something about it.

As a church we know that we have the solution to the ills of the world. As individuals we must certainly start with ourselves and in our own homes to demonstrate the truth and the power of the gospel, but we must sense the larger responsibility and the urgency of the situation.

We must build the Zion ideal into our homes, and demonstrate the fact that it works, and we must then take advantage of every opportunity to make our influence felt. It is true that as one woman I can see little chance for me to change the world situation, and yet, I have not really tested how much change I could effect, and in company with enough others we could certainly bring about far-reaching changes. Not only must I work with others who are now of like belief, but I must do my best to bring others to this knowledge, thus increasing the numbers who might work together. I must take an active part in community and governmental affairs, and whenever possible I must send my aid to foreign lands, even at personal sacrifice.

Each of us must find her own particular area of work and influence—no one person can do everything. By doing this and working together, we can better conditions in an ever-widening circle, and eventually for the world family, so that no mother must endure the living hell that so many are experiencing today.

It is not enough for us to build Zion homes for ourselves. Zion is for the world, and is desperately needed by the world. I have resolved, as I keep so very busy with my home and church work, to remember that as long as I see only the needs of my own family and my brothers and sisters in the church, it is not enough.

Do You Recognize Answered Prayer?

By Ermajeane Jackson

HAVE YOU EVER SAID, as I have, "God does not answer prayer"? And have you ever been told, "He does answer prayer"? When you have experienced such feelings you have been unable to recognize the way in which God has answered your prayer; for often the answer may have been the very experience which perplexed you.

Perhaps you have prayed for patience and encountered further tribulation. It often takes tribulation to develop patience. Paul told the Roman saints that they should glory in tribulation for it "worketh patience" (Romans 5:3).

Perhaps you have prayed for submissiveness to the will of God and then endured suffering that tempted you to be bitter. Paul told the Hebrews that obedience is learned through suffering (Hebrews 5:8). Suffering may be the answer to prayer.

Perhaps you have prayed for unselfishness, and God has given you opportunity to sacrifice yourself by thinking on the "things of others" (Philippians 2:4). Did you recognize this as the answer to your prayer? Or did you say deep within your soul, "God doesn't answer prayer. He hasn't answered one of mine"?

Perhaps you have prayed for victory in Christ, and the things of the world have swept down upon you in a storm of temptation. "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (I John 5:4).

Perhaps you have prayed for forgiveness and did not feel that you were forgiven at all. Did you search your soul to find whether you had forgiven those who had sinned against you? Or did you want God to forgive you without your complying with his law (II Corinthians 2:10)?

Perhaps you have prayed for union with Christ, and have found that your best friends misunderstood you and seemed indifferent (John 15:18-20). Did you recognize the answer to your prayer in such a situation?

Perhaps you have prayed that you might love people more, and God has permitted your lot to be cast with some very unlovely persons. Paul has said that love suffers long and is kind (I Corinthians 13). It is easy to love some people, but to develop the kind of love Jesus felt for all men you may have to be with those who test your ability to be charitable.

Study your Scriptures and you will be better able to recognize answers to your prayers. Do not say, "God does not answer prayer." He does. Prepare yourself to recognize his way of answering them.

Letters

Pictures Renew Contact

For many weeks I have felt a desire to write and express my thoughts and bear my testimony through the means of the Herald.

The visit of President Israel Smith to this country and particularly to the northern district seemed to me to be the culmination of the hopes and ideals which I have held since I was old enough to take an active part in the church.

My grandfather, Thomas Brien, was a charter member of the branch to which I belong, namely, the North East Manchester Branch, or James Street, as it is often called. My grandfather is now eighty-three years old and it is still his joy to meet regularly with the Saints and to bear his testimony to the truthfulness of this church.

My earliest memories have James Street Branch as a background. My parents gave of their love and care, and under their influence and the teaching of the ministry I came to understand and appreciate the wonderful opportunity that was mine. When war came, bringing doubts and fears in its train, the ministry of Apostle Oakman was invaluable. He baptized me and ministered to me, helping me along with so many other young people to catch a glimpse of the kingdom and what it has to offer to mankind.

It has been my privilege to take part in district work, and also to act as stenographer for Patriarch John W. Worth, and in this work I have found joy unspeakable. It has helped me to appreciate and to know the Saints with whom I have come in contact, and helped me to realize the importance of understanding one another. The fellowship of the Saints has proved a wonderful blessing in my life.

After the war years, we of the British Isles Mission received of the ministry of those who have come to us from General Church. We have learned much and have valued greatly all they have given to us.

Since my marriage and the arrival of our family, the Lord has continued to bless us, and it is our desire to serve him sincerely and in love.

When President Smith visited the Northern District after his arrival in the British Isles, we had the privilege and pleasure of having him stay with us. We felt a wonderful influence in our home and that is why I said at the beginning of my letter that Brother Smith's presence seemed a confirmation of my hopes and prayers. Our two small boys speak of him many times.

I have attended many conferences, but the conference over which the president presided held a spiritual significance felt by all. Love, joy, and peace seemed to prevail and to me it was a testimony indeed.

I can think of no better phrase than that used by our mission president, Brother Don Lents, who has endeared himself to all. He invariably tells us that he wishes to share with us the good news of the kingdom.

We read with interest of the different church activities in many parts of the world. Pictures taken by those of our number who have attended General Conference are very much appreciated and we renew our contact with those who have left this country. It helps us to see events as part of a whole. May God help each one of us to be true to ourselves and his church is my prayer.

Growing Up

WHEN I WAS A SMALL BOY, I became fascinated by the phenomenon of growth. I wanted to see something grow, so I planted some corn. After about fifteen minutes, I dug up the grains to observe their growth. They had not grown at all, so I replaced them in the ground, loosened the dirt around them, and watered the area thoroughly. Twenty minutes later, I again dug up the seeds. Still there was no growth. This time I added fertilizer, some rich dirt, and plenty more water. Half hour later—still no growth!

I decided that these little seeds needed some help to break through their tough shell, so I took a nail and scratched through their outer covering, but even then they didn't grow. Each time I tried to assist a grain of corn to break out of its own shell, I killed it. I discovered this when, weeks later, I dug up the grains that had never sprouted. They were rotten inside, or just didn't have the stuff in them.

Some of the grains I had dropped and forgotten broke through the ground with little sprouts. I conceived a wonderful idea, dug up one of the sprouts, and replanted it upside down. This, I reasoned, ought to make the corn grow down. Several days later when I was going to dig up my experiment to check its growth (to see how far down it had grown), it broke through the ground. Again and again I tried to get it to grow down, but each time it would turn about and grow up.

By Dick Ankney

I tried to get one sprout to grow sideways but it refused. Regardless how I positioned the seeds, if they grew at all, they grew up.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Dick Ankney has lived such a colorful life, it is difficult to give a true picture of him in a short biographical sketch. As Wally Smith expresses it, "You can't describe Ankney; you have to experience him." Putting it briefly, Dick attended Graceland in 1939 and played football, basketball, and baseball; he was also a member of the Student Council and a College Player. After World War II he returned to Graceland for one semester and was graduated with the class of 1948. In '49 and '50 he attended Ohio State University. His travels have taken him to five continents and thirty countries. At present he is working in the sales department of the Texas Tool and Machine Company in Houston, Texas. He gives liberally of his time to church work and is the latest member to be added to the Committee for Ministry to College People.

MY FATHER once told me that a lily would not bloom unless it could see the sun. I planted one under our house so that it would be impossible for it to see the sun. That lily grew twelve feet to the side of the house, and when it turned up, it bloomed.

My father explained that it bloomed because it saw the sun, but I know now that it wasn't the sun. It wanted to see God, and when it did, it broke open to reveal its beauty, which was a reflection of the God it saw.

Years later while studying philosophy, I saw a correlation to people. Everything in the universe that grows must grow up. In my early years parents and teachers explained that things grew up to be nearer the sun. Now I see that they were right, but they didn't spell it right—things grow up to be nearer the Son—and the Father. It's an unwritten law of the universe that all things will grow up.

BUT WHAT of the seeds that didn't grow, the ones that I tried to help? It's another unwritten law—though the Father has designed that all things grow nearer to him, he has also designed that they must do it of their own choice. No force on earth must break a shell to initiate growth. All growth must get its impetus from within. Then the Father and his servants can water, nurture, and cultivate. This is his design.

Reaching for the Roses

He who cannot stand the thorns should never reach for the roses. After all, what of a few painful pricks when God has placed so many beautiful roses among the thorns. Perhaps they were given the rosebush to protect it from greedy hands and make us more fully appreciate the beauty of the rose it offers us. And in life, what of the thorny criticisms as long as God knows we are reaching for the roses.—EDITH G. BEGGS

Shirley Campbell Adds to Honors

Dominating the headlines and front page of Toronto's metropolitan newspaper, the Globe and Mail, on August 28 was another news story on the latest achievement of Miss Shirley Campbell, Canadian swimming star and Zion's Leaguer, who, with her sister Joan, was featured in this column in the August 25 issue.

Competing for the first time in professional ranks and against swimmers from Canada, the United States, and Mexico, Shirley won the Canadian women's professional championship in the three-mile event at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto, earning new honors and a substantial prize. But for an eel, which attached itself to her leg during the race, she might have broken the record.

Only a few days before Shirley had set a new record in winning the women's senior Canadian amateur mile title and the Ross Gold Trophy at the Exhibition, while her younger sister, Joan, placed second in the junior amateur one hundred-yard race. Joan was also a member of the winning relay teams in both junior and senior events. Another sister, Eleanor, twelve, gives promise of some day making her mark in swimming competition. Swimming is not the only sport in which the Campbell sisters excel. They have earned cups and trophies in figure skating and in running and jumping, all the while keeping up their school work.

Shirley and Joan helped instruct and direct the swimming program at the first Ontario Youth Camp held early this summer at the Port Elgin reunion grounds on Lake Huron. Both girls were excellent campers, adding much to the camp and displaying a deep devotion to the church.

Excerpts from the newspaper story follow:

A 16-year-old Fergus stenographer yesterday showed a smooth stroke and expert flutterkick as she swam to the women's professional championship and $1,650 in prize money before a crowd of 8,000 at the CNE waterfront.

Shirley Campbell, her face dark from the oil slick which covered part of the course, emerged from her first professional race with a winning time of 1 hour, 21 minutes, 41 seconds. She was 17 seconds off the record set in 1938 but a minute and a half faster than any other winner of a three-mile race since that time.

Pushing herself as fast as 66 strokes to the minute at times, Miss Campbell led at the end of each lap. . . .

Her competition, as well as her fast time, testified to the young veteran's ability. She conquered a strong international field, as fast as any gathered by the Exhibition in the last few years.

Miss Campbell's style earned the praise of Referee Ernst Vierkoetter, winner of the first CNE men's race. He remarked that she stroked swiftly holding herself high in the water, and had beautiful swimming form.

The course wasn't without obstacles. Besides the oil from the harbor, which covered several spots the swimmers could not avoid, Miss Campbell had trouble with an eel which attached itself to her leg during the last lap, just before she started her closing sprint.

But the slight, five-foot-two-inch brunette never was in real trouble. She took the lead on the first half mile, relinquished it temporarily because of Miss Clark's fast pace, then took it back and steadily increased it.

. . . Miss Campbell told reporters she would use $500 of her money to make the last payments on her widowed mother's house. Some of the rest, she said, would go toward a business course she was planning.

She seemed happy about the fast time but said, "I could have broken the record if I had known I was so close." Except for the oil and the eel, the water, with a temperature in the mid-sixties, was fine for a three-mile race, she said.

Her mother, Mrs. Florence Campbell, said, "I can't believe it. I think she did it for her mother and I'm proud of her." The money, Mrs. Campbell indicated, would help to educate Shirley's younger sisters, Joan, 15, and Eleanor, 12.

The victory completed the best season in the 23-year career of Bert Crockett, who coached Miss Campbell from a row-boat throughout the race. Of his Fergus Swimming Club proteges, Miss Campbell won the senior amateur mile title at the CNE last Saturday, Doreen Howatt followed up with a first in the junior mile Monday and in the Olympic trials earlier this season the FSC scored four seconds.

SHIRLEY CAMPBELL

In honor of Shirley, her sister, Joan, their team mates and coach who put Fergus on the swimming map, most of the town's 3,400 population turned out for a Shirley Campbell night, which included a parade and a reception in the town's memorial arena, where her friends and neighbors paid tribute to their heroine.

The Elora Branch and near-by church members also honored the girls with a special church supper and remembered them with gifts, including church books.

The proud mother, Mrs. Florence Campbell, a widow, in writing of her daughters, shows her deep interest in their spiritual welfare also as she says, "My prayer is that my daughters will also win the race for eternal life."

Property Being Improved

HAWAII DISTRICT.—The activities of the summer in Honolulu began with vacation church school, June 14-22, in which the Kalihi, Kapalama, and Makiki congregations participated. Maurine Crownover was in charge.

The second annual Hooluana youth camp was held at Kawaihae, Hawaii, June 17-21, and at Kaaawa, Oahu, June 25-28. Elwin R. Vest and A. Orlin Crownover were directors of the respective camps.

Apostle M. L. Draper and family arrived in the Hawaiian Islands July 16, and departed August 15 for Australia. After spending the first week of their stay on the island of Hawaii, where they witnessed the eruption of Kilauea volcano, they returned to Honolulu where they were treated to a luau by the Honolulu Men's Club.

The Hawaii District Reunion was held at Mokuleia, Oahu, August 3-10. In addition to Apostle Draper, the administrative staff included the district presidency: A. Orlin Crownover, Elwin R. Vest, and Henry Mahi. Other district and staff officers present were Evangelist Charles A. Lee; District Bishop's Agent Tsunao Miyamoto; Avon Yap, Peter Ahuna, and Esther Sakata in charge of registration; Maurine Crownover in charge of children's activities; Inez Vest, in charge of women; Emma Kaawakauo, Sr., music; Charles and Esther Aki, and Isaac Harbottle, recreation; Elias Kaawakauo, bookstore; John C. Ledo, camp security; Emma Kaawakauo, Jr., camp bulletin and newspaper; Marcelo Pagot and Virgil Bradley, concession stand; Ruth Draper, campfire and evensong; Clara Camara, dining hall; and Leila Miyamoto, nurse. This was the fourth annual reunion.

At the district conference on August 9, the following were elected: district president, A. Orlin Crownover; counselors, Elwin R. Vest, Henry Mahi; secretary, Yoshimi Nii; treasurer, Elias Kaawakauo; church school director, Maurine Crownover; women's department supervisor, Inez Vest; music department supervisor, Emma Kaawakauo, Sr.; young people's supervisor, Andrew Kashimoto; director of drama, Leila Miyamoto; statistician, Emma Ruth Bromann. Tsunao Miyamoto was elected auditor and sustained as district bishop's agent. Priscilla Kramer was sustained as district historian.

At the elections held the latter part of August, A. Orlin Crownover was continued as Honolulu Branch President. Henry Mahi was elected pastor of the Makiki congregation and Elias Kaawakauo counselor; Akira Sakima was made pastor at Kalihi, and David Kumata, counselor; Tsunao Miyamoto was made pastor at Kapalama and Peter Ahuna, counselor. Avon Yap was continued as pastor of the Wahiawa mission.

Considerable work has been done on the church properties recently. Kapalama has done redecorating and refinishing in its church building, Kalihi is reroofing both the church and annex, and Makiki is making roof repairs. Both Kalihi and Makiki have done much landscaping.

The new chapel at Makiki, being built as a district worship center in memory of Evangelist Gilbert J. Waller, is nearing completion and should be finished before the end of the year. It is drawing a great deal of attention and favorable comment from the community.

A good many tourists who are church members have been here in recent months. There have also been a large number of servicemen. Some of them and their families are now stationed here. More than one hundred visitors, other than Honolulu people, have been at the mission house within the last six months.—Reported by A. ORLIN CROWNOVER

New Building Being Erected

PORTLAND, OREGON.—First Branch held its annual election of officers September 9, at the IOOF Hall. Elder Albert Nelson was again selected to serve as pastor for the coming year. The following leaders were elected: Aileen Hartley, branch secretary and floral chairman; Cecil Fletcher, business manager; Chester Gregory, church school director; Arthur Minor, Zion's League leader; Caroline Larson, women's leader; Argene Stansbury, social leader; Lil Lampard, with daughter Carol to assist, dramatic leader; Leonard Hoisington, librarian and auditor; Eula Stoyhoff, publicity; and Elder Fred Hawes sustained as branch solicitor. A second business meeting for the purpose of approving the annual budget and deciding on the year's future plans was held in the home of Brother and Sister Albert Gardner on October 14. The pastor recommended the following elders to be approved to act as his associates for the coming year: C. C. Bryson to be in charge of visiting; Elmer Larson in charge of the building program; and Fred W. Hawes and Earl Bryson. These men were unanimously approved by the branch. The budget for the coming year was then presented and approved with the stipulation that it could be changed at a future meeting if it became necessary to do so because the needs of the new building could not be definitely anticipated.

Elder Elmer Larson then gave a short talk in regard to the progress being made on the new building. A motion was made and carried that the present building committee be sustained for the duration of the building program. The present committee consists of Morris Nelson, Leonard Hoisington, Forest Moore, Cecil Fletcher, and Elmer Larson.

At present, First Branch is embarked upon a building program whereby the original church is being replaced with a much larger one. It was first planned to enlarge and remodel the old building, but after work was begun it became necessary for most of it to be torn down as it was inadequate to hold the additional weight of the proposed new classrooms and so forth. All material from the old building was salvaged and used to supplement the new materials purchased. At present the outside of the building is completed, also the entire concrete work for the basement. Much of the labor and some material has been donated by the members and as soon as a heating system is installed, it will be possible for the group to meet in part of the building for some services. Since March of this year the group has held services in the IOOF hall at N.E. 80th and Glisan Streets. The attendance has continued to remain steady and has shown some increase during this period.

The Laurel Guild gave an afternoon tea at the home of their leader, Sister Caroline Larson, on October 9. The two other branches, Central and South East, were invited to attend and participate. "Friendship" was the theme used and a short program was built around this.

A special installation service for the new officers was held during the eleven o'clock hour on October 19. Elder Nelson gave the main talk. Each officer was called upon to pledge his support and services for the advancement of the work during the coming months.—Reported by EULA STOYHOFF

 PRICES

We were trying to plan some simple, inexpensive decoration for the big windows of a sun porch. So we looked in the stores and got out the catalogs, and when we had the figures all down on paper we knew it was going to cost too much, no matter what we did. "There isn't anything cheap any more, at all," said the lady. "No matter which way you turn, there is a wall of exorbitant prices to shut you in or out, or keep you away from whatever you want."

 LIGHT

You can see the light of heaven shining in the eyes of many a small child. What a pity that, before he is very old, the experience of this world should put it out and let the luster of his eyes grow dim.

 PEOPLE!

It is probably fortunate for the race that people's threats are often as empty as their promises.

If all the promises were kept, we would be overwhelmed with gifts we didn't want, visitors we couldn't remember, books we would never read, and advice that wouldn't be good for us.

And threats! The awful things that have been said in the hope that they would make the children be quiet for three minutes.

If anybody threatens you, be sure that, at the moment, he means it. But keep quiet until the next day and it is possible that he will have forgotten it, or be too tired, or change his mind.

Take the village sign: "This road is patrolled." Maybe it was—for a week. Then the officer had a sore arch, or ran out of gas for his motorcycle, or took a nap. Since then, the heat has been off.

We all have our grumbling spells when we would like to do a bit of barking at the moon, just to make people respect our rights and property.

The neighbor's dog barks at all visitors, just as a matter of principle. He looks quite fierce, but his tail wags and gives his peaceful intentions away. And, if you are diplomatic (in dog diplomacy, of course) he is susceptible to any little bit of blarney.

There is a sign tacked to a tree: "Trespassers will be prosecuted." The two sagging strands of what was once a barbed-wire fence need some such reinforcement. The sun has bleached the sign and the rain has made the thin paint run. Birds have roosted upon it, and the ants have made it a highway. Cats have ignored it in their nocturnal hunting, and squirrels have resolutely refused to read it. The man who put it there wouldn't know the first step of a prosecution and wouldn't take it anyway. He may even be occupied with his long sleep somewhere on a hill by this time, so that he couldn't possibly care what you do.

There is much to persuade us that the human race was started by the ringing of a dinner bell, and that most of our troubles are caused from stumbling and blundering while trying to get there first.

The Hedonist

"He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man."

—Proverbs 21: 17.

THERE ARE MANY REASONS why the lover of pleasure will be a poor man. A few of them can be noted here. He will think more of spending than of earning and saving, so he will be financially poor as his career progresses; he will waste his resources. He will think more of his own wants than of the needs of others, more of himself than of other people; so he will be spiritually poor too. He will avoid hard work, and his body will be soft; so he will be physically poor. He will avoid serious reading and be intellectually poor too. How much will he be worth? The great Proverbialist was surely right. The lover of pleasure will be poor in all of life's greater values. This does not mean that we should not try to be happy, nor that we should neglect to give happiness to others. But that is another subject.

IT IS THE LORD'S BUSINESS, not only to help you, but to use what you have and what you are to help His other children. Never forget that you are more than an object of God's love. You were also planned to be an instrument of His love.

Look back over your life and you will remember a number of times when you were sent, apparently by accident (but on deeper reflection you observed a design in it) to some place where help was needed. Or somebody came to you by what seemed at first to be mere chance, who needed the advice and assistance you could give. Did you see the shadow of the Father's hand in those circumstances?

People, you know, are traveling bundles of problems. Listen to anybody for a minute or two, and between the lines of the monologue (aren't all of us monologists when we find a good listener?) you will find his problems poking up their querulous heads.

A YOUNG MAN recently crossed my path. Despite his intelligence, despite his education, he is as full of problems and difficulties as a truce conference. He has told me on several occasions, "I am a hedonist." That is always a warning signal. It is the statement of one who has decided to accept the "dead sea fruit" as a substitute for the "bread of life" that he has not yet found. It is the utterance of a soul that needs to be saved from self-destruction.

When anyone says that he is a hedonist, he is not declaring his philosophy but exhibiting the symptoms of intellectual adolescence. To be a hedonist at seventeen is not fatal; it can be cured. But to be a hedonist at twenty-five or thirty is a disease. A hedonist is one who devotes himself to pleasure and the satisfaction of his appetites. There are perhaps fifty million or more people in America today who, without knowing the label, fall into this classification.

This reminds us of a comment of one of our leaders who returned from a trip to Hollywood some years ago. He said, "They're a lot of lotus-eaters," referring to the people of the Odyssey who lived on lotus in a state of dreamy indolence. Hedonism is an illusion, a mirage that leads nowhere. And there are so many people who cannot distinguish the difference between hedonism and heathenism. The latter can lead to moral and spiritual diaster.

THERE IS NO DIGNITY or enduring worth for humanity without a recognition and acknowledgment of the great moral and spiritual foundations of life. If we are mere bodies, directed by nervous systems that we call minds, we are fit only to die and perish without memory and without regret.

It is only as we implement the great moral and spiritual powers of the universe in our lives that we become anything of enduring worth and arise to merit the eternal life that the gospel has made possible for us.

If anyone says he is going to be a hedonist, if he thinks that a pagan philosophy is sufficient for his purposes, tell him to be a good one and not an imitation or a mistake. For that young man I am recommending a reading of Marius the Epicurean by Walter Pater, as it lifts hedonism out of the mire and into the realms of a higher concept of life. Here it is exalted, purified—something that can be respected. But if one follows the book that far, he is certain to see beyond the mere physical aspects of life.

IF YOU HAD TO CONSIDER only the hedonist himself, the problem would be less complicated. You could take your time about rescuing what is left of his soul after the deprivations of his faulty and carnal philosophy—his theory of mere animalism. You might even excuse him for taking the "worm's-eye view" of life. But this man is married to a lovely little woman, and because of his philosophy and consequent behavior he is not giving her the happy life that she has a right to expect. He is not according her the dignity and worth she deserves. They have two fine children. You can imagine the moral and spiritual influence he exerts over them.

It may be wonderful to be a hedonist and not care what you do to other people's hearts, to live for pleasure, and forget the moral and spiritual standards. But those who embark upon this way should realize that their philosophy has its origin in hell, and that it will make life a hell for those who love them and endure their thoughts and ways through the years.

"Listening Groups" for "Messiah" Broadcast

How many listening parties have been planned for your congregation on the evening of December 21? Are you planning to have a group of friends to your home to hear the Messiah broadcast?

This splendid experience of the Christmas season—the singing of Handel's Messiah by the Independence Messiah Choir—will be enhanced tremendously in the localities where groups of friends gather to listen in an atmosphere of fellowship.

Reports reaching the Messiah publicity office tell of plans being made in all areas to organize listening groups, some of them in homes, others in churches. Group listening has become a custom in many places, and members look forward to such an evening of fellowship.

We recommend that you help organize a listening group this year.

Notice to KFAB Listeners

Radio station KFAB of Omaha, Nebraska, will carry the "Messiah" by delayed broadcast on Monday, December 22, at 10:00 p.m.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Elder Henry Castings, an Evangelist of Des Moines, Iowa, reports that he has just held three series of meetings in Oklahoma and Kansas with good results. At Skiatook, Oklahoma, Brother Castings gave seven blessings, preached ten sermons, and had an average attendance of 74. Immediately following this he was at Sperry, Oklahoma, and preached five sermons and had an average attendance of 64. The next week he was at Fort Scott, Kansas, where he preached four sermons, gave 17 blessings and had an average attendance of 48. He reports the missionary fervor of the area high and prospects good.

Appointee Eugene A. Theys reports as follows on a recent short missionary trip into Central Oklahoma District: "Brother Witte [Victor] had arranged for me to preach and to visit in the Sand Springs mission, which is just outside of Tulsa. I spoke on Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday evenings. During this time we spent mornings, afternoons, and evenings visiting interested friends. The result of our work culminated in an additional five decisions for baptisms. I believe that the work in Sand Springs is definitely on the upgrade. A keen interest is being shown by our men in the Tulsa Branch for the missionary opportunities in the mission group."

Just a line to let you know that we had a very outstanding fall district conference in Portland. Our attendance came from all over the Oregon District. The conference was from Friday to Sunday, November 7, 8, and 9.

The largest attendance was on Sunday morning with a total of 827 present. The attendance was not less than 400 at any meeting. Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr., never did better. They were marvelous in classes, preaching, and social contact. The spirit and unity of the people was outstanding.

J. L. VERHEI

Oregon District President

In a letter dated November 11, 1952, Russell F. Ralston, of Salt Lake City, Utah, writes:

We have also had nine baptisms in our district within the past five weeks, and six of these were adults. The best of this is that they were the result of co-operation of local forces with the church-appointed missionaries. Three of the adult decisions were the direct result of several months of follow-through by a local priest following work done by Brother Everett. All of them are at least partially the result of the fine consistent work of Brother Everett over the past two years.

The Function of the Holy Spirit

A sermon given July 20, 1952, at the Campus in Independence, Missouri

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. . . . For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. . . . Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. . . . For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.—Romans 8: 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 14, 16, 17.

I now send upon you another Comforter, even . . . the Holy Spirit of promise. . . . This Comforter . . . is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1-3.

Verily I say unto you that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

IT IS DIFFICULT to define the Spirit of God. We find, however, that the power of the Holy Spirit and the kingdom of God together form the outstanding feature which attracts many people to the truths of the Restoration.

That is particularly true of Latin Americans, to whom I have been giving considerable time. They are attracted by God's command to build a kingdom of God, a Zion. They are thrilled to find a group of people unitedly working out a type of society which can demonstrate the philosophy of Christ in their lives.

They are, however, a little perplexed concerning the power of the Holy Spirit. They don't know what it is. They have heard of El Espiritu Santo but have never felt its power in their lives and do not comprehend exactly what it means.

Many times we can understand the Spirit of God by examining the things we know it would not be. Many people who consider the kingdom of God probably think first of the Lord's Prayer wherein Christ asked us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." In moments of meditation we wonder what the will of God is and how "it is done in heaven." We ask ourselves if there could ever be war in God's kingdom, and we believe that there will not be conflict at least until the end of the millennium when the fight against evil will occur. In God's kingdom there will be no selfishness, killing, stealing, poverty, exploitation, immorality, dishonesty, injustice, divorce, nor strikes as we have today.

I doubt that people will rebel against God and the government in the hereafter. And there will be no damaging pride, greed, race prejudice, disease, pain, sorrow, hate, or worry. I doubt that anybody who gets into celestial glory will be indifferent about that society. What do you think? I doubt that there will be anybody who will get into celestial glory who will not "be sold" upon that type of life. And we would expect complete honesty in the character and personalities of the people, a deep comprehension of stewardship and brotherhood and of the sacredness of their own as well as of others' personalities, a deep appreciation of the beautiful, whether it be in nature, people, music, or other things. We would expect each one to take his needs and just wants and to love his neighbor as himself. We would expect equality, peace, kindness, and truth, would we not?

Latin Americans are fascinated with such a kingdom possibility, as are Orientals. I think we people here should be, too.

UNFORTUNATELY many people are confused and a little perplexed when they speak about the Holy Spirit. When we think of it, we often think of the Holy Ghost (which, by the way, is synonymous with Holy Spirit; the words "Holy Ghost" were used in the ancient English language and are now being done away with in modern translations of the Bible).

There are, of course, some false spirits. Sometimes people become confused when they find that there is a power beyond themselves. They sense a super-force and may try to get some of this power by means of mystic balls, or by having their fortune told by the position of the stars, the secrets from pyramids, or the Sphynx of Egypt. Sometimes they seek the power by reading books on the subconscious mind; other times they turn to belief in presumptive curative power of a nail, a bone, or a piece of wood, in palmistry—reading fortunes by lines on the hands—in worshipping a statue, or in studying the shape of the head.

About 90 per cent of the Christians—I wonder how many of our own people—have had no spiritual experience in their lives, and therefore have no good testimony of the power of the Holy Spirit. Many are hungry for some contact with the divine mind.

TODAY MOST PEOPLE realize that because of almost continual war somewhere in the world we have little security. I can remember back, as many of you can, when my dad had steady work and he seemed to sense no particular insecurity for the morrow. But today we do not know what is going to happen tomorrow. We live in expectation of crises. There may come severe unemployment and even higher taxes and inflation. I shudder sometimes to think of the huge debt which my children and your children are going to have to pay in generations to come. We think of the contest for world domination by Russia, of the seething millions of Chinese and Hindus in Asia, of the socialistic plan in England, and of the Peron dictator government in Argentina. I presume we were thinking a few weeks ago of the Republicans' and Democrats' efforts to solve some of the world's great problems. The clear fact is man is not sufficient alone to solve his problems. We have tried to use diplomacy, then force, but our vaunted cleverness has failed. Nor has huge populations, the reckless spending of billions of dollars, or the science of atomic warfare brought us peace.

Dr. C. E. Joad, professor of philosophy and a former agnostic, has written in his book, God and Evil, the following: "The simple truth is that one cannot help himself . . . one's character is not strong enough."

The power of the Holy Spirit proves to be exacting. Some people complain because it is so exacting, but we find exacting things also in science. The power of energy under the same condition is always the same; 100 per cent of the time, if we do certain things in chemistry, there will be an explosion. That's true of all forces—of the laws of physics, astronomy, biology, and the human body; they are unchangeable and function in accord with predetermined law.

WE WONDER sometimes why so many people want the power of the Holy Spirit. That power comes to those—we find from reading the Three Standard Books and from experience—who will use it in helping build the kingdom of God.

Why do you want the power of the Holy Spirit? Why do you want, for instance, health? Some people pray that the power of the Holy Spirit will heal them of bodily afflictions. I hope they want it to help them be strong that they may acquire a beautiful home, and to better assist in building branches and districts, and to aid them in giving a demonstration of Zion's living. I hope they do not ask for the Holy Spirit to heal them so that they can "make whoopee." So many people ask for things and, when they get them, use them for wrong purposes. Many times God must deny people their requests because he knows, in his wisdom, that they would not use them for righteous purposes.

We do the same with our own children. We would not give our child an old-fashioned open razor to play with, even though he cried for it, would we? The parent should know more than the small child. Many times I believe God denies people the power of healing, and the power of the Holy Spirit for their minds because he knows that if it were granted to them, they would but use it to damn their own souls.

You may want divine guidance to help you get a job, solve your marriage problem, buy a farm, or make some financial investment. What use is to be made of this power if granted? We believe that if man will use the power of the Spirit for the benefit of the building of God's kingdom he will be much more likely to receive these powers.

Another thing that we must do in order to receive the power of the Holy Spirit is to get in motion. God cannot steer anyone who is standing still. One can't steer a boat unless it's in motion, or a bicycle, an airplane, or an automobile. We must move by faith, seeking to build the kingdom of God, and then his Spirit may be expected to come to us to assist. This law is very specific. In Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3, God instructs Oliver Cowdery to get in motion. Similarly he asks us to study things out in our own minds and then to ask him what is right.

THERE IS A DIVINE SPARK in each one of us. But so many in the church fail to fan that spark into a flame, and it remains many times a smoldering little fire, which eventually goes out. The Holy Spirit comes to teach us, as the Scriptures say, "all things." "Teach" is an interesting word. It doesn't mean "give" at all. A teacher at school has considerable difficulty sometimes getting students to understand and apply his teaching. God says that the power of the Holy Spirit will "teach" us; he doesn't say it will give us anything without any effort on our part. He says it will bring things back to memory, but not things which we haven't studied before. After we have studied and done all that we possibly can with our own efforts, then God will sometimes bring back to our memory the things which we have experienced, particularly the things he has taught us.

HOW LONG should people be fed elementary philosophy concerning the Spirit of God? How long should we feed our children with a spoon? How long should we carry them about in our arms? How long should we put on their shoes and stockings for them? How long should we hang up their pajamas and take care of their room? How long? Not any longer than we have to! Just as soon as possible we should teach them to do things for themselves and then continually hold up in front of them higher and better methods and goals. To lead us to higher levels is always the purpose of the Holy Spirit. Continually it seeks to raise us from one level to a higher one, giving us a new and better incentive, a different method, and a more efficient application of the use of power.

We are concerned when we find in the church today, people who have to be fed with a spoon most of their spiritual lives or else they lose faith in God. Whoever is born of God, says the Inspired Version, "does not continue in sin." In other words, we should change, grow, and improve continually. The Holy Spirit will do for us what we permit it to do. We all have agency and do or do not allow the Holy Spirit to help us. God's high power line is always near. If we do not utilize it, it is our own fault. We might say we are wired for this power through baptism and the laying on of hands. But if we will not use the wiring for the building of the kingdom of God, we may lose it. Mankind has tremendous potentialities, and the Holy Spirit comes to release some of them so that we may grow in the likeness of the Son of God. My, what man could have been!

SOME PEOPLE want to see physically the Holy Spirit. I'll never forget a debate I heard in Wisconsin.

The opponent of Apostle J. W. Wight asked him to "trot out" the Holy Spirit so that he could see the shape of its eyes and the color of its hair.

We have to remind people that the power of the Holy Spirit is a field of force—a power—an energy. We don't actually see many forces in our world. We don't refuse to use electricity, however, because we do not understand all the mechanics of it. We know what happens; we know the laws which control it; yet we do not know exactly what it is. We do not refuse to use television because we don't know how to build a set. We don't refuse to use an airplane because we can't construct one. We use dial telephones even though we may know nothing about their intricate construction. We listen to beautiful violin music, even though we can't make a Stradivarius.

The world is made up of forces and powers. Scientists tell us that it is composed of positive and negative charges of electricity called protons and electrons. There are also neutrons, which make up the uncharged circle or nucleus about which protons and electrons revolve. About 99½ per cent of these little particles are positively charged. About a half of 1 per cent are negatively charged. Then there are the mesons—the binding units of energy.

All matter, scientists tell us, is in motion. Atoms are made up of different combinations of positive, negative, and neutral particles of electricity with the little negative charges revolving around the center at a terrific rate of speed. In a physics laboratory we saw the shadows of the particles making up an atom of radium. A strong light was shone across the place where this atom was—we couldn't see it—and the image was thrown upon a screen. We could see the center which looked about like a basketball, and little electrons flying around it. Once in a while one of them jumped off into space. That's why radium disintegrates over thousands of years and results finally in what we know as lead.

Similarly, we are told, the wood of the chairs we sit on is in motion. The iron on the legs of the benches is in motion. Everything is in motion—cloth, glass, etc.—and gives off waves of energy.

OUR WORLD is largely made up of these forces of energy, among which there could well be the manifestations of the power of the Holy Spirit.

The human ear can pick up a certain musical scale, a certain number of low notes, a certain number of higher ones, but not very many. There are sixty-two complete scales of sound in the world, scientists tell us, and man has the capacity unaided by radio, etc., to hear only one of them. There are sixty-one other scales—not just single notes, but scales like in music—what we humans cannot hear at all. We know hardly anything about many of them. All of these sound waves travel at the same rate of speed, 1,100 feet per second, though the length of the wave may vary. Color, we are told, is also a matter of vibrations. Each dye gives off a different wave length. Scientists now have perfected an instrument by which color can be perfectly matched. They will put an instrument over a piece of cloth and it will register the exact wave length coming from the color of that piece of material. Then they can duplicate the color exactly.

Man has catalogued things as temporal and spiritual. God has no way, I presume, to reach our understanding except to speak to us of some things being spiritual and others temporal. Yet God himself describes life in a different way. In Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8, 9, he says: "By the power of my spirit, created I them; yea, all things both spiritual and temporal. . . . It is given unto you that ye may understand. . . . But all things unto me are spiritual." This he tells us in our own terminology and language so that we can understand.

MANY FORMS OF LIFE use forces with which humans are not equipped. Bats, for instance, fly about mainly at night. Scientists tell us they fly by a little radar-like set, emitting sounds which we can't pick up because of our deficiency in hearing. Amplified, these sounds resemble the din of a boiler factory. They emit sounds and, according to the time required to return the sound wave, bats can tell how far they are from a wall, a tree, or anything they might run into. Evidently because of this apparatus they avoid collisions.

We know that dogs' ears can pick up many sounds that the human ear cannot hear. Some families have purchased special dog whistles. Humans cannot hear the sound, but dogs can hear and will recognize the call after a little experience. Moths, we are told, have an excellent sound apparatus and one of the world's sharpest senses of smell. They can smell another moth blocks away.

Who is not fascinated also by the skill of the homing pigeon! One may take homing pigeons to Alaska, let them go, and they'll come back to Independence—if they started out from here. We don't know how they do it. Someday perhaps man will find out more about the waves of the air and the magnetic currents about the earth. Some birds migrate south in the wintertime. The young birds go alone, not conducted in flight by the old birds, and return next spring to the same place.

Sound waves make a fascinating study. Today sound can be made to do a number of things. It can balance a ball in the air. Special sound waves are forced through a pipe, and a ball is placed a short distance in the air above the end of the pipe. You can't see or hear the sound, but the ball revolves and balances there without visible support. Scientists and doctors now are able to break up gallstones in rabbits with high frequency sound waves. The last we heard they haven't tried it on human beings.

ONE OF THE MARVELOUS THINGS scientists are doing today is experimenting on determining the age of ancient ruins. Apostle Paul Hanson and I are particularly interested in the dating of these ruins in Mexico, Central, and South America. Much of this research is being done by the study of cosmic rays through what is known as Carbon-14 dating. Cosmic rays were discovered a number of years ago by one of the outstanding physicists of the United States, Robert Millikan. The cosmic ray evidently comes from somewhere out in the universe—no one knows exactly where. It's a kind of an atomic bullet. It travels at a terrific rate of speed and can pierce anything. When scientists sent up rockets, they found in the upper atmosphere that about two hundred of these little atomic bullets strike a square inch of surface each minute.

As they come closer to the earth, however, the rays hit other little particles in the air, such as particles of nitrogen. When that happens, there is a fusion between the two, and as they come closer to the earth, there is a scattering shower of these little electrons, protons, and so forth, over the earth. Millions of electrical volts are in these cosmic rays, and so far man has been unable to effectively harness this power. We have been able to do something with the atom of uranium, but very little. In the atomic bomb, we are told, there is released about one tenth of 1 per cent of the power of the uranium atom, and the power of the cosmic ray is much stronger. These rays will penetrate up to twenty miles of earth. They pass right through us, through a building, through brick. It takes up to forty-nine feet of lead to stop them. Uranium rays can be stopped with about an inch or so of lead, so we can see the difference in the power of the cosmic ray and uranium ray. Yet nobody knows where these rays come from. They do not come from the sun; they come at midnight as well as at noon and are constant through the centuries. They're coming now. Scientists can count them with a Geiger counter, which generally consists of a tube of metal containing a cloud of alcohol vapor, a little water vapor, and argon gas. The cosmic ray will pierce this receptacle of metal, and, passing through this cloud of vapor, it will cause a little flash of light one can see with the naked eye. Electrical impulses may be created by that flash and sometimes cause little neon lights on a board to glow. In other instruments they move a needle on a gauge.

ALL OF US here are being pierced now with twenty of these little rays every second, but we don't feel them. Scientists are trying hard to find out where this power comes from, what it is, and how to use it. It comes from out of our solar system somewhere. The scientist, Robert Millikan, says that it comes from the "black, unimaginable depth of space" beyond the sun. Scientists think it may hold the secret of life. Nothing lives where cosmic rays cannot reach, and where cosmic rays penetrate, there one may find life of some kind. Scientists think, too, that perhaps when the earth was created, before life came on it, there were no cosmic rays, and that the cosmic ray is the power of the Creator God in the universe, coming and bringing life to plants and animals, including human beings.

Several governments are studying this force very carefully. The United States is spending billions of dollars trying to find out what the cosmic ray is. We may be sure Russia is, too. We have huge laboratories at Berkeley, California, where we have built the famous Berkeley cyclotron. We have spent millions of dollars in research upon Mount Evans in Colorado and a large amount on research at the White Sands proving grounds in New Mexico. Planes studying these rays fly at high altitudes from the North Pole to the equator. They find that more of the cosmic rays pierce the earth at the equator than at the North Pole, quite largely because the positive charge of the North Pole repels the positively charged protons of the cosmic rays.

Some scientists have speculated that maybe these flying saucers we hear so much about are the products of some space people who have learned to harness the power of the cosmic ray. Imagine a ray which will penetrate twenty miles of earth and will not be stopped by less than forty-nine feet of lead. The nations of the world are in a race to find out who will capture this secret power first.

CARBON-14 DATING is possible because of cosmic rays. The cosmic ray, a positive proton, coming near the earth hits some of the many particles of nitrogen. Then there is a fusion of some kind, and also a scattering, about as when one shoots a rifle bullet into the top of a pile of sand. The bullet will continue slightly deflected, but there is a scattering of some of the sand. So these protons come into the air and, hitting molecules of nitrogen, form carbon isotopes with radioactive factors. This isotope is called Carbon-14 because it is heavier than ordinary carbon. The atomic weight of ordinary carbon is twelve. This heavy carbon floats around in the atmosphere and comes into our bodies through breathing or in food. Continually we absorb it and give it out. As soon as one dies his body will no longer absorb these heavy Carbon-14 particles. Slowly they disintegrate, since they are in motion, too, and fly off into space. After twenty years, by means of tests with a Geiger counter, one can tell that quite a few have gone.

After 5,680 years, half of the radioactivity of a gram of Carbon-14 has disintegrated. That's how scientists are measuring the approximate age of ancient ruins. It requires a skillful scientific process to separate the Carbon-14 from ancient trees, bones, shells, etc. Thus we may come someday to understand by such or similar studies of world forces how God by his supreme power can activate our minds and can heal the tissues in our bodies.

THE POWER of the Holy Spirit can be anywhere, as can cosmic rays. Christ says inspiration was given to the Psalmist when he wrote, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there."—Psalm 139: 7, 8.

It is considerably to the credit of the church that its prophet, seer, revelator, and president had this light back in the early days of the church. He wrote an editorial in the April 1, 1842, Times and Seasons, page 745, in which he said:

We find a very little material difference between the body and the spirit. The body is supposed to be organized matter, and the spirit by many is thought to be immaterial, without substance. With this latter statement we should beg to differ, and state that spirit is a substance; that it is material, but that it is more pure, elastic, and refined matter than the body; that it existed before the body; can exist in the body; and will exist separate from the body when the body will be mouldering in the dust; and will in the resurrection be again united with it.

It is most interesting that in 1842 the prophet of the church said that the spirit is matter, but that it is more pure, more elastic—sounds like plastics today, doesn't it?—and more refined than the body. It cannot be seen, of course, by the human eye. We members of the church know, of course, that the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Spirit, is the mind and the power of God. Again the prophet of the church, Joseph Smith, very distinctly and very clearly said in the Lectures on Faith (published in the early Doctrine and Covenants) that the Holy Spirit is the "mind," "wisdom," "glory," "power," and "knowledge" of God (Lecture 5).

WE ARE QUITE CONCERNED sometimes in the church what people think to be the true gifts of the Spirit. There are many gifts. There are the gifts of charity, patience, love, discernment, tongues, and healing. The greatest gift, however, in my opinion, which Christ manifested was the gift of wisdom. I'm not opposed to the others. I think the church should have the gifts of tongues and interpretation of tongues as long as we are human and on this earth. But to me these two are earthly gifts for this age and these times. I challenge you to think whether we shall need to have the gift of tongues and the interpretation of tongues in eternity. In celestial glory we may well have a universal language, and God and Christ shall be there in person. I should hate to have to learn Russian, French, Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Hindu, etc., in eternity. So would you.

Another of the marvelous gifts which the church has while we are here upon the earth is the gift of healing. We also would be in apostasy if we did not have this gift. But I challenge you to think again whether we shall have to have the gift of healing in eternity. These two gifts are very fine. We can but express some concern, however, that so many of our people put so much emphasis on those two, and leave others out. One of the greatest gifts of God is the gift of wisdom. Now wisdom is the right use of knowledge. We may know the answer to the $64 question, and yet not know how to use it to bless mankind. We may know a lot of things but still go to hell.

THE POWER of the Holy Spirit, I repeat, comes to those who will use it to help build up God's kingdom. We should go to God intelligently and ask him for his power and help and know what we are going for. One of the things that rather nonpluses me sometimes at reunions and elsewhere is that persons will come up to me and say, "Brother Hield, you've been down in Mexico, haven't you?" And I say, "Well, yes."

"You know how to talk Spanish, don't you?"

"Yes."

Then they will sometimes touch me on the arm and say, "Oh, please say something."

I don't know what to say, neither do they have any idea what they wish me to say. If I say a few sentences in Spanish they laugh. I generally ask them, "What do you want me to say?" Similarly I find a number of our people who come to church, prayer meetings, and General Conference, who seem almost to come to God (I wonder if you would, if you met him on the street) and as if touching him on the arm say, "God, say something."

We should come often to God, but we should have some specific need or truth about which we desire help. I'm interested in the prayers and revelations of the church. Read them sometime. Many of these revelations to the church have come in response to a great need and only after long prayer, meditation, and sometimes fasting. Read the first two or three lines of these revelations. Quite often the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church will say, "I have given prayerful and careful consideration and meditation . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 134), or "Before and since the decision of the Conference to have a season of prayer . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 135), or "I am directed to present the following as the will of the Lord" (Doctrine and Covenants 140).

GOD'S SPIRIT can reach you anywhere—more than can the cosmic rays—no matter whether you are up in an airplane, or down in a submarine, or in a mine. The power of God's Spirit can reach you, whether you are in a hot or cold climate, are free or slave, are in prison or at liberty, have health or are sick, are rich or poor, are hungry and thirsty or well fed, are in darkness or light.

Many ask when the endowment of God's Spirit will come to his church. The endowment will come as soon as our people prepare themselves for it. It will not come unearned. It will come as soon as and in proportion as we obey God's laws. There is no mystery about it. It is much like radio. I think of the little old crystal sets we used to have in our homes compared to the marvelous radios and television sets we have today. What has happened? Scientists have found the laws of God and have applied them better, that's all. Similarly as we apply the laws of God, we may anticipate a greater degree of the power of God's Holy Spirit. As our people become more honest, more skilled—and use those skills toward building the kingdom—as they become better stewards over time, talents, homes, and money, we may expect that Spirit in greater power.

CHRISt WAS QUITE SEVERE with the early church, and I presume he could well be so yet. He rebuked the Saints for not sharing their material substance. He said: "In your temporal things you shall be equal and this not grudgingly; otherwise the abundance of the power of the Spirit shall be withheld" (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3). We need not anticipate a large endowment of God's Holy Spirit until a greater percentage of our people comply with the financial law. Only about twenty-seven to thirty thousand are complying with it now. We need to know a little bit more about justice and be more unselfish and much more interested in evangelism. Today we are annually baptizing about three persons to each hundred members; in some places 4 or 5 per cent. I don't think we'll have an endowment of God's Holy Spirit in great power until our people learn to be more devoted and skilled in evangelism. This also is one of the requirements.

I AM CONCERNED, naturally, with the descendants of the people who lived in Book of Mormon times—the Lamanites and Nephites. Yet we find some people in the church who do not want to converse with them, or to convert them, who do not want them even to attend our churches because they claim that they were cursed way back there and it is not the will of God that we try to convert them. That's not true! God has said that, when these people accept the gospel, they shall become white and delightful. Christ covenanted with them that the gospel will be taught to them. And I think that we shall not have the power of God's endowment in our church until we become more world missionary minded. Christ came personally to the Nephites in America and said:

. . . if they [Gentiles] will repent and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them. . . . And then shall the power of heaven come down among them . . . and then shall the work of the Father commence, at that day when this gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people.—III Nephi 10: 1-4.

There should be nothing mystical about the kingdom of God. Zion is a colony of the kingdom of God. As we think of heaven, that shouldn't be so mystical either. It's a place where those who obey the laws of God willingly and intelligently are permitted to reside. I don't think there will be any sin in heaven, not because God shuts it out—because we will always have our agency—but because the people who get there will be too intelligent to sin.

WE SAY we don't know much about the mysteries of the physical world, about molecules and light, the secret of steam and color, etc. One of the great mysteries of life is how the power of the Holy Spirit can energize the mind of human beings; but from the discoveries of science today we have some inkling of how it might function. The Holy Spirit is the great positive controlling power of the Godhead. It pervades all things. It is the agent of God who organizes and puts in motion all the world; it is the true light that illuminates the mind, makes our world visible, gives us reason and concern, causes us to judge, comprehend and remember. The Holy Spirit centers in God and is also under the immediate direction of his Son. Christ says to us, "All things

God Moves in a Mysterious Way

By A. Orlin Crownover

THE QUESTION OF STATEHOOD for Hawaii has come in for a great deal of heated discussion during recent sessions of the United States Congress. During this last session the issue has been kicked around like the proverbial political pigskin. As in any political maelstrom, the antagonists of the statehood bill have conjured up almost every conceivable means of defeating the bill. Some of the best talent and oratory of Congress have been spent in the melee, and a great number of taxpayers' dollars sustain the combatants as they fan their tempers and whet their words for fresh attacks on various facets of the issue.

We would not say that the question should not be debated. There have been good points both for and against statehood. This is also true of the Alaska bill. It is not my purpose here to discuss at length the course of these bills, but I do wish to consider briefly the recent stalemate in the Senate, since that is apropos to this article. While many points have come to the fore in these debates, most of us have known that the real issue is the civil rights versus states' rights. The bloc of southern senators and the coalition formed with a few sympathetic contemporaries from other areas naturally do not want four more men in the Senate who will probably vote for most civil rights legislation. When they are already perilously near the sinking point, they do not relish the idea of having in their ranks men or women from Hawaii, where all races live happily together, who may change the balance of power. While I am a Southerner by birth, I am unable to share the views held by the majority of senators with respect to Hawaii. I have been unsympathetic to their feelings both before and after coming to Hawaii. Doubtlessly the issue of statehood will again be debated by the Eighty-third Congress, and I believe the political pugilists will witness a swing in balance of power in the next session. Though there may be good objections to statehood for Hawaii, I am certain the reasons for approval are weightier, and I would regard Hawaii's acceptance in the union as one of the nation's greatest gains, notwithstanding the fact that I am a native of Texas.

Whatever the outcome of the next Congress, Hawaii is quite certain to become a state in the near future. Let us now trace the events leading up to the present condition.

MANY BELIEVE the Polynesians to have descended from American Indians who migrated from South or Central America to Tahiti (read of the Kon-Tiki expedition in this regard), Hawaii, Samoa, and New Zealand. The Hawaiians brought with them a story of a God, Lono, somewhat parallel to the story of Quetzalcoatl told by the Aztecs and other Indian tribes in America.

When Captain Cook, sailing under the English flag, discovered the Islands in 1778, the Hawaiians thought Lono had come again as he had promised their forefathers. Though they later killed Captain Cook, after learning he was not their God, the way had been opened for settlement and control of the Islands by England. There are still evidences on every hand of British influence.

Here is a great stroke of Deity in what I regard as a purposive movement of God to bring to pass his eternal design. The Islands might have been claimed and settled by a nation that remained an enemy to the United States. It is indeed fortunate for Hawaii, the United States, and the world that a nation interested in the welfare of humanity should discover and settle these Islands.

ALL EIGHT ISLANDS of Hawaii were brought under one governing head by King Kamehameha in 1795. Queen Liliuokalani was the eighth and last to occupy the throne and was the ruler when the monarchy was succeeded by the Republic of Hawaii in 1893. Hawaii was annexed to the United States as a territory in 1898. It seems to me to be not inconsequential and not by chance that Hawaii came under control of the land from which its ancestors were believed to have sprung. The Hawaiians strongly believe in the Book of Mormon and are convinced they are of Lamanitish origin. They are happy to feel allegiance to "Joseph's land." Here again, I think, the hand of God continues to move in accomplishing his purpose.

We should note further the settlement and development of these Islands. The Caucasians here are still definitely in the minority. Their presence is quite significant, however, and provides strong ties with the United States, England, Australia, and Canada. A good many Tahitians, Samoans, and Maoris are here, as well as people from Guam and other Pacific Islands. The Atlantic islands are represented with a considerable number of people from Puerto Rico and other islands. The Philippine Islands have a large representation here and already some of these fine people have affiliated with the church. But the largest section of Hawaii's population has come from the Orient, of Korean, Chinese, and Japanese ancestry, the largest number being Japanese. Actually, there seem to be natives of every country on earth now residing in Hawaii, so that the Islands are not only the crossroads of the Pacific but have become the melting pot of the world. Here again the hand of Deity is seen moving in a great international experiment in teaching all men to live together as brothers. Here is evidence of the workability of the plan of God, wherein he "hath made of one blood all nations for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17: 26). Matthew 25: 33 tells us that when the Son of Man shall come again, "before him shall be gathered all nations." Does it not seem fitting that this gathering is already taking place in a land that wants to become a part of "the choice land of all the earth"?

IN ANY great evolutionary movement, there needs to be demonstrated the feasibility of accomplishing the goals. This the church seeks to do in developing men for Zion living. Hawáii is the great test tube of society in which many of the formulae for building Zion are now being tested on a smaller and less adequate scale. When men witness the practicability of the small-scale model experiment, they will be much more receptive to our call for participation in a world-wide endeavor. Then "it shall come to pass . . . when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it; and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord."—Isaiah 2: 2, 3.

While Hawáii certainly should be regarded neither as the only nor as the greatest contributor to Zion advancement, the contribution is nevertheless of great moment. Through the centuries the Creator has moved silently, though determinedly. And while we often cannot comprehend his movement at the moment, as our maturation enables us to view his handwork more nearly as he does, we can but exclaim, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

Much more could be said on this subject, but I shall present only one or two additional thoughts. It may have had little significance for some and it may have been ardently opposed by others, but the move of the last Congress to grant citizenship privileges in the United States to certain Orientals was, to my evaluation, another splendid stroke of the pen of Divinity. Already, here in Hawáii, some three hundred people of Oriental ancestry are members of the church. The greatest number of these are Japanese. Several people of the different races are developing into consecrated, qualified leaders and teachers. Undoubtedly prophecy is in the making as these people begin to accept their part in taking the gospel "to every nation, kindred, tongue and people." In my measured opinion, the next great field of expansion for the church should be in the western Pacific and Asia. Hawáii, as the springboard to these areas, is of strategic importance to the church, especially in view of the fact that here are bred cultures familiar with the Occidental way of life and the goals of the church and indigenous to the Oriental pattern of living.

As the unfolding purpose of Deity becomes increasingly apparent, we are called to join with renewed vigor in the crusade of Eternity, the winning of all nations unto him. Let us with unassailable conviction join with the inspired poet, Brother Joseph Luff, in his "Admonition," "Forth from thence your testimony shall to trembling nations go, and the world confess that with you God has residence below."

A LESSON IN FAITH

IT IS STRANGE that we, who have so many material blessings, have such little faith while many persons of simple tastes and less good fortune are sometimes equipped with so much. I remember the story of the missionary who was stationed in West Borneo, where today stand hundreds of churches, each with a relatively well-paid pastor. These churches were built by tithes from the natives, and the pastors are also supported by tithes.

It was not easy for this first missionary to "put over" tithing to the natives. They were extremely poor—so poor they believed the missionary rich. Didn't he have a table and four chairs in his hut? It just didn't make sense to the natives to give one-tenth to Someone Else. The missionary read from the third chapter of Malachi again and again. He explained very carefully, "Tithing means simply this: if you have ten chickens you give one to the Lord. If you have ten eggs, you give one." Finally, when the missionary thought that they never would see the light, and that all his efforts had been in vain, a group of the natives held a meeting. Later they told the missionary that they had chosen a leader who would collect the tithes. Needless to say, the missionary was overjoyed. He read the third chapter of Malachi to them again, and after he finished reading the tenth verse, he held his Bible high in the air and said, "God means it. You believe the Bible—so believe this. He will bless you."

The next morning when he stepped outdoors he saw the porch filled with chickens, cucumbers, vegetables of all sorts, precious rice, and eggs. This went on all year, and the products were sold to the Chinese merchants.

As the successive years came the natives found they had much more produce to give. Each coming year brought more. The missionary was amazed at such an overabundance, but the natives were not surprised in the least. God had promised, hadn't he?

Fortunate are the ones who are born with the great gift of faith. Nothing can be accomplished without it; with it, all things are possible.

Question Time

Question:

(1) Who are they of whom it is said, (D. and C. 63: 13e; 98: 5f), "They shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye"? (2) Does this change take place at the coming of Christ? (3) Will it include the "honorable men," the heathen, and those who died without law? (4) Will all these dwell on the earth during the millennium?

North Dakota

E. F.

Answer:

(1) They are the living saints who have by obedience to the full gospel law prepared themselves at the time of Christ's coming for the change from mortality to immortality, the change being equal to death and the resurrection in others who have passed on. Not all the saints at that time will be changed, but some, especially the young will be left to live out their normal lives and to perfect their preparation when they, too, will be changed. The delay is no discredit to them, but only the granting of necessary and ample opportunity for developing to full stature, spiritually, in preparation for the kingdom of God (D. and C. 26: 3; 85: 27).

(2) Yes! When he comes to dwell with his people.

(3) No! This change from mortality to immortality does not include any others than the saints spoken of. The "honorable men of the earth," and the heathen, being outside the gospel, can not be among those changed to be caught up to meet the Lord. Their glory will be of the terrestrial world.

(4) They of the celestial order (described in D. and C. 76: 5) are they who will, after their redemption at the coming of Christ, dwell with him on the earth in the Holy City during the thousand years. They of the terrestrial order, who will also have part in the first resurrection, are not raised until just after Christ comes. As to the place of their inheritance, whether on the earth, or in some other world, the Scriptures are silent, except for some passages from which inferences may be drawn favoring the latter view. These "must inherit another kingdom." "These are they who receive of his glory but not of his fulness." "They receive of the presence of the Son [probably by visitation] but not the fulness of the Father." They receive the ministration of the Holy Spirit "through the ministration of the celestial."

Such passages as quoted suggest a complete separation of the celestial and terrestrial groups. Some have assumed that because the terrestrials are resurrected on the earth that that is proof sufficient that here is where their inheritance will be. But it is well to remember that the celestials and the sons of perdition are also resurrected on the earth, though neither have inheritance here. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9-15 points out that other planets of our solar system are kingdoms and places of human habitation. After the millennium the whole earth will be crowned with celestial glory, and be the possession of celestial beings only for ever and ever (D. and C. 85: 4).

CHARLES FRY

Question:

I am stuck on the meaning of the word "prevail" in Jesus' statement, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16: 18). The Catholics say it proves that there will be no apostasy and quote: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28: 20). I am now investigating your church.

Ontario

A. D.

Answer:

The men and women around Jesus knew the importance of military strongholds such as fortresses. When such a fortress was under attack, the gate was a crucial point. If the invader could break in, all might be lost. If he could be kept out, then those within were secure. The whole question was whether the gate would "prevail" when under attack; whether it would stand up.

With this in mind consider the whole verse. Jesus had assured Peter that he would build his church on the "rock" of the heavenly revelation that Jesus is indeed the Christ. It is easy to remember in this connection the story of the man who built his house on the rock and so was secure (Matt. 7: 24-27). One has the thought of the church which is so firmly grounded standing against every possible assault.

Then the metaphor is reversed and one has the mental picture of the stronghold of the powers of evil. This is now under attack, as it must always be under attack, from the men and women who know that Jesus is the Christ. The Master says that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." I think that he is saying that the powers of righteousness shall certainly be victorious, and that in time even the final citadel of evil shall be overthrown. The gate of that citadel shall not prevail.

It is unfortunate that some who have not caught the pictorial background of this passage have thought that it was a guarantee that the church should withstand all opposition. This is the Roman Catholic position. And, of course, it is true of the church built on this rock of revelation. But that has already been covered when Jesus says, "Upon this rock will I build my church." The gates of hell do not get up and attack the church. The only chance for a gate to prevail is when the gate itself is under attack. It prevails when it holds out the attacker, and it does not prevail when the attackers break through.

Question:

Can a person who has been found guilty of adultery a second or third time hope for forgiveness if he truly repents? Ohio

MRS. R. W. D.

Answer:

Forgiveness is largely a matter of conscience. It happens only when a change is made in the thinking and attitude of the individual concerned. We cannot anticipate a change in God, for he never changes. God has commanded the church not to forgive a second offense of adultery, and directed that the guilty person should be cast out (D. and C. 42: 7).

Branch Officers Elected

BRENTWOOD, MISSOURI.—The branch pastor, Dan Belcher, had to resign as his business moved him from the area. Elder Ralph Briggs was acting pastor until Elder Roy Benson of the St. Louis Branch was elected pastor for the coming year at the business meeting. The following officers were elected: counselors, Elders Ed Kent and Ralph Briggs; secretary and music director, Pat Dayton; treasurer, Charles May; religious education director, statistician, Cedric Evans; young people's leader, bishop's solicitor, David Cooke; assistant and branch historian, J. R. Miller; book steward, Claude Oliver; women's leader, Altha Dayton; publicity agent, Lois Benson; dramatic leader, Dorothy Evans; flower chairman, Blanche Cook; auditing committee, David Cooke, Don May, Claude Oliver; building committee, J. R. Miller, Claude Oliver, Charles May; finance committee, Claude Dayton, Ralph Briggs, Joy Brown; business committee, pastor, treasurer, building committee; and missionary supervisor, Elder Ed Kent.

Paul, young son of Mrs. Ruth Wright, and Dan Vencent, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudy Ginter, were blessed. David Kraft was baptized.

A family dinner was held October 23.—Reported by LOIS BENSON

Church Building to Be Repaired

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN.—At the recent branch business meeting all of the former branch officers were returned to their respective offices. Elder John Blackstock of Central Michigan District presided.

Elder Lee Pfohl of Lansing conducted a two weeks' series with preaching and visiting in late September and early October.

October 19 was home-coming for the branch. Many former members of the branch and relatives attended from Flint, Saginaw, Lansing, Scottville, Prudenville, Farwell, Muskegon, Ludington, and Independence, Missouri.

J. R. Vest was ordained a deacon by Elders John Blackstock and Charles Martin. Other ministers present for the home-coming services were Jay Doty of Prudenville, Carl Larson of Saginaw, David Larson and Glen Foster of Lansing, and William White of Muskegon.

On October 26, members of the branch went to Muskegon, where President F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker.

The church building which was dedicated by Joseph Smith III in 1901 is now in need of some repairs and the branch is undertaking the project. The ceiling will be lowered to strengthen the side walls and make the building easier to heat. This will also improve the acoustics.

Garth Jeltema of Grand Rapids who is attending Freesoil High School was baptized in September by Elder Charles Martin. He is an active member of the church school.—Reported by BLANCHE HILL

Working on New Building

LINN, MISSOURI.—A school building was purchased in the spring and is now being converted into a church as the Saints raise the funds to do so. Before buying the building they met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Lytton.

In August the branch had a picnic, and on Halloween a chili supper and masquerade party. Brother Jack Wight of Columbia, Missouri, held cottage meetings for two weeks during October. Two candidates were baptized at the end of the series.

On November 3, a business meeting was held under the direction of John Puckett and Ross Mortimer of Jefferson City, and the following officers were elected: Ross Mortimer, pastor; Paul Litton, assistant pastor; Juanita Helmgig, church school director; Orlies Lytton, music director; Nannie Kemple, women's leader; George Kemple, Russell Lytton, Edward Huot, building committee; Dorothy Heidibrink, historian; Orlies Lytton, reporter; and Nannie Kemple, clerk.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was the speaker on November 9.—Reported by ORLIES LYTTON

Twenty-two Men Called to Priesthood

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The agenda for the annual stake conference necessitated two business sessions for satisfactory completion. The first session was at Central Church, September 10, and was devoted entirely to the consideration of a large list of recommendations for ordination to the priesthood. Twenty-two men received unanimous acceptance from the assembly. They were as follows: to the office of deacon, Richard Booth, Walter Cook, Leonard J. Barr, Frederick Root; to the office of teacher, Thomas Willard; to the office of priest, Theodore James Edwards, Jr., Mearl McCollum, Laverne Phillips, Bernard H. Pearl, Edwin Chambers; to the office of elder, Earl McIntosh, Sr., Otto Berndt, Gerald Fitch, John Moses, James Stanton Shotwell, Athol Packer; to the office of high priest, Asa Jones, Roland Arnold, W. Guy Oatsvall, and to the office of high priest and to the stake high council, Paul Crinzi, Rigby Leighton, and S. C. Sharer.

The second conference session was held at Post Intermediate School on Sunday, September 14. This session was under the joint direction of President W. Wallace Smith and Stake President W. Blair McClain. Following devotional prayers by Elders G. Booth, D. Dowker, and C. Carlson, President Smith spoke regarding the Melchisedec priesthood. The following were then ordained: John Moses by High Priests R. Moore and W. Garnier; Athol Packer by High Priests C. Carlson and B. Brown; Asa Jones by High Priests G. Booth and A. Grant; Paul Crinzi by President Smith and High Priest H. Voltmann; Roland P. Arnold by High Priests L. Wayne Updike and R. Hulse; W. Guy Oatsvall by Stake President McClain and High Priest H. Voltmann; Rigby Leighton by High Priests L. O. Brockway and D. Dowker; S. C. Sharer by High Priests E. V. Osborn and L. O. Brockway.

A comprehensive progress report was read by Brother McClain, followed by a brief financial progress report by Bishop Updike.

W. Blair McClain was sustained as president of the stake, and L. Wayne Updike as stake bishop. L. O. Brockway and E. V. Osborn were sustained as counselors to the stake president, and Bishop C. O. Carlson was sustained as counselor to Bishop Updike.

The stake high council was unanimously sustained, and missionaries to the stake, F. E. Butterworth and R. Flanders, received unanimous endorsement. Patriarchs G. Booth and B. Brown were similarly endorsed. Other stake officers are H. E. Depew, secretary; Gladys Wilkinson, stake historian; Elsie Gibson, stake recorder; Edward Williams, book steward; Milton Carswell, young people's leader; Ena Slasor, women's leader; Mona Knight, church school director; R. L. Gault, music director; D. McLeod, visual aids director; and J. Beaudette and H. Voltmann, Bluewater Reunion committee.

New business provided for greater activity and expansion in the northwest portion of the stake particularly, as well as increased action in the northeastern section.

President W. W. Smith was the guest speaker at the evening worship service.—Reported by H. DEPEW

Rally Held

REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN.—A rally was held in Regina in the new church October 11-13. Approximately 100 were in daily attendance. Among those present were friends and members coming from all over Saskatchewan including the far north and distant south.

Services began each morning at 8:15 a.m. and followed with services and activities throughout each day including study classes, and open forums, under the leadership of Elder Carl Mesle, General Church youth director, and Missionary Howard Fisher. Assistance was given by Pastor Arthur Bergersen, Regina; Brother Peter H. Harder and Brother Orville Fisher of Saskatoon; and Brother Len Jensen of Wayburn.—Reported by MAY RICHARDSON

Mission Becomes Branch

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA.—Several outstanding missionary efforts have been noted in the branch and its Turlock mission in the past year. These have included meetings of Elder Herbert Lynn in the spring, followed in the summer by Seventy Glen Johnson, and in the fall again by Brother Lynn. From these efforts directly or indirectly, the congregation has received twelve new members through baptism.

The mission at Turlock was formally organized into a branch on August 31. Elder Bill Hays was installed as the president.

The following have been ordained in the past year: Homer D. Gatchett, elder; Frank P. McGill, John F. Weaver, and H. R. Green, deacon. The following have moved into the congregation: Elder Gene Bivens and his wife Lenore; Priest Robert Collville and his wife Joyce; Deacon Donald Hawley and his wife Lois; and James and Rogene Templin.

At the beginning of the year Sister Mary Stark accepted leadership of the church school and the rotation plan for teachers was instituted. This plan provided that teachers be appointed for a period of three months during which time their assistant or substitute teacher prepared to accept the responsibility for teaching a class during the second three months. Sister Stark has recently accepted the office of church school director for the Northern California District for the coming year.

The music department has given special programs during the year under the leadership of Irene Gatchett.

The women's department under the leadership of Naomilee Rose has held a welcoming and friendly visiting program through the year. The friendly visitor representing the group for the past year has been Sister Eva Stark. The women's department has also contributed over $250 to the branch.

A talent calvacade sponsored this. George Shimel, former Graceland, supervised the production of the Modesto League.—Reported by ILAH G. ROSE

Sponsors Project

SHERMAN OAKS, CALIFORNIA.—The Saints sponsored a project for five days at the annual San Fernando Valley Fair which was held in September. The project began four years ago when Sister Florence Guy, now of Oregon, seized the opportunity to sell popcorn and peanuts at the fair. The mission had just started and everyone was enthusiastic to help raise money for the building project. Each year in January a contract is signed with the Fair Association for the following September. The first year was done on a small scale, and each year improvements have been made. Sister Guy, Sister Lois Swanson, Sister Mary Winslow, Sister Leanore Minghini, and Sister Alberta Woodring have been in charge of the project in the past years. Mr. Rodolph Morrissey was in charge of the people who sold in the grandstand, and usually ten people worked in the crowd. Six people worked in the booth each shift, and Brother J. C. Ruchabor was the barker this year. In the past four years approximately $2,000 has been raised.

The branch is represented by students at Graceland. They are Dorothy Morrissey, Vinia Carla Davis, Deacon Robert Anderson and his wife, Elizabeth.—Reported by LEANORE MINGHINI

Vacation Memories

By Helen Hester Hintz

PART ONE

SEPTEMBER AND OCTOBER are delightful months for vacationing for several reasons. It is cooler, the highways are less congested, the big rush of motel and hotel season has abated, and after the busy summer months one still has a trip to look forward to. Having a daughter to take to Graceland, we had a twofold reason for delaying until the first of September. On Labor Day, bright and early, we set out from California on the first lap of our journey of over eight thousand miles which was to consume almost six weeks. The Nevada and Great Salt Lake deserts' usual glare was softened by the lovely September haze, making them a rich blue and violet in the distance. Four tan and white antelope, small and graceful, came toward us and crossed the highway in Wyoming. Alfalfa mills were booming in Nebraska, and the many green acres of this crop were pleasant to look upon.

Stopping in Independence to attend a wedding, in which Apostle Oakman officiated, we spent a day or so visiting points of interest. At the reception Brother Oakman recalled the days spent in California and looked somewhat wistful. At the Auditorium, Brother Wallace Smith of the First Presidency graciously took us to see the newly finished council chamber of the Twelve. Finished in walnut paneling on two walls with a beautiful long walnut table down the center of the room, soft rose carpeting, and indirect lighting, it is a room worthy of the most distinguished visitor. Herald House and the Book Shop were buzzing with activity. The nurses of the Independence Sanitarium were giving a Hawaiian luau, replete with leis and orchids flown in from Hawaii. Colorful placards announcing this feast of roast pig, poi, etc., to be served for five dollars a plate were placed in the downtown store windows. The purpose was to swell the fund for the little chapel at the San.

September 7 found us attending Communion services in the new Slover Park church. The typical Reorganized Latter Day Saint friendliness prevailed; the service was excellent. The good people volunteer freely so that there is a fine spirit of co-operation.

SOON WE ARRIVED in Lamoni, Iowa, where we delivered our Graceland. The friendly girls at the dorm soon made her at home. Families were busy wrestling with trunks and luggage, helping to get their girls established in their "home away from home." They had come from Canada, New York, California, the South, Hawaii, Holland, and Japan. Someone was playing the piano in the comfortable lounge downstairs, completely oblivious of the hubbub. There are 585 registered students; 60 had to be turned away for lack of facilities. Officials are working toward expansion of this most worthwhile institution. It is here that the students truly learn to live Zionically—"all for one and one for all." The consecration of teachers goes far beyond academic responsibility. Nowhere in the world is there such a wonderful spirit of co-operation, brotherly love, and wholesomeness. It is no wonder that higher institutions of learning welcome Gracelanders as the "cream of the crop" each year. In these critical times, with the world so topsy-turvy, this school gives something to our children at the age when they need it most; something so precious it can never be measured in dollars and cents.

Visiting the new and beautiful church in Lamoni was another wonderful experience. It is modern in every way with a seating capacity of approximately seven hundred when the extra room is thrown open by sliding doors.

Creston, Iowa, is known as the "biggest little city in Iowa" and is a pretty place. The new Reorganized Latter Day Saint church there is spick-and-span, yellow brick with blond wood trim. Sister Ruby Strand told us of the recent missionary series there, netting ten baptisms.

The Mississippi River on a warm September evening is a pleasant sight with the little river boat, "Addie May," all lighted up for her final run of the season. The city of Keokuk nestles in the hills above the river and it was here that former Chico friends were located. Their infant son was blessed in the church there, which has been newly redecorated.

Traveling along the Mississippi to Nauvoo is a never-to-be forgotten experience. Around each curve is a beautiful scene and soon we were entering the town, driving down the quiet street that leads to the guide office where we should hear the story of how our church came to be. Pictures of the Martyr, the grove, maps, and other aids were attractively placed in glass cases with indirect lighting and forest-green draperies to give an introduction to the story. From the guide office we were taken to the old homestead where Joseph and Emma first lived in Nauvoo, and which is now undergoing extensive repairs. The Nauvoo House which stands on the river bank was used as a hostelry in those early days and is now used by the young people for meetings during summer retreats. The Mansion House which is farther down the street from the river is remarkably well preserved. It is furnished with furniture of the period, some are the original pieces. A large painting of Joseph hangs over the dining room fireplace. Woven rag rugs cover the floors. Solid walnut was used for the doors.

A collection of fancy dishes of the period was on display in a glass case, together with a leather hatbox which was used for Joseph's silk top hat.

The grounds are well kept with wide green lawns, shrubs, and flowers. The river makes a horseshoe bend so that Nauvoo has an unusually beautiful setting. Beyond the old homestead are the three graves which have been re-covered with granite and lettered. They are on the site of the old springhouse among the lilacs. As we stood there we thought of the early days of Nauvoo, the leading city of Illinois with a wonderful militia and Joseph as mayor, and the events leading to its downfall. The guide pointed out a broken slab from the temple, showing the moon and sun. He gave a very clear word picture of this historic period.

BLOODSTAINS are covered with glass on the floor of the jail at Carthage, Illinois, where Joseph and Hyrum were killed. The shot that killed Hyrum went through a thick walnut door which still stands. According to the Mormon guide there, the mob, with their painted faces to hide their identity, were finally traced, their names secured and it was found that each and every one met horrible deaths.

Indiana was somewhat cooler and greener than Illinois. We noted the birthplace of James Whitcomb Riley with a swimming pool and park named for him. The states are not so wide as in the West, and before we knew it, we were nearing Ohio. Rolling hills with many farms were interspersed with small communities; corn, sheep, cattle, and hogs are raised. Mountains are heavily covered with trees, similar to California. Leaving Akron and traveling for quite some time we drove through beautiful rolling hill country with small cities every little way. A sign pointed to Kirtland Hills, three miles! We drove down a winding road and could see the spire of the Temple with its weather vane rising above the trees. Around a turn and there it was; simple in line, yet so dignified. Extensive repairs are being made to the outer walls, every effort being made to copy the original finish as nearly as possible. The interior is beautiful, having been newly redecorated in pale pink with white trim. The walls of the structure are two feet thick; the glass in the Gothic windows has nearly all been replaced, and only occasionally one may see the pane of a wavy original. Intricate carving in Grecian is hand done. Oxen were used to drag the implement used for the scroll design of the pillars. Beautiful fans are over the two main windows in colonial design, front and back. The most unique thing about the temple is the group of pulpits which are built into each end of the building; one used for the Aaronic and one for the Melchisedec priesthoods. There are two upper floors; one was used for a school of instruction and the other for the school of the prophets. The guide called our attention to the beautiful rose design of the east window in the second floor room, all hand carved.

The pews in the sanctuary are the originals which were enclosed with little doors that latch. It was thought that the early Saints decided upon the enclosed pews because of the lack of heat in the building. Often they would come and bring "foot-warmers" to help combat the cold as they sat through the meetings. The beautiful temple was completed in three years, using the most primitive of tools. We ponder this as we look at the intricate designs and the beautiful curving staircases. We know God had a hand in this work and the struggle and sacrifice of the people were abundantly repaid.

THE AREA IS RICH and fertile with many beautiful country estates and thickly settled communities. Individual fruit stands, selling luscious fruits and vegetables, were everywhere. Painesville has numerous nurseries with gorgeous displays of roses among acres of shrubs. Cooled by the breezes of Lake Erie, it is an ideal climate for growing things. A picnic on the shores of the lake was a high light of the trip. Many industrial and manufacturing plants were seen throughout Ohio as we returned south to Wheeling, West Virginia. It is a beautiful drive along the Ohio River with everything green and dotted with small communities; many barges and commercial boats are on the river. We saw fields of waving goldenrod.

Foliage in West Virginia was already turning pink, gold, and red. Schools which dot the countryside are all large and everything has a prosperous look. A gas station attendant told us that people often struck oil through this area, became rich overnight, started their own towns and named them; thus accounting for the many new small towns. Away back in the hills there could still be found folks living in little cabins with burlap sacks at the windows and a Cadillac in the yard. A great deal of coal mining is carried on here.

In Beckley, West Virginia, we met a group of Saints; Leonard Pack and his family are engaged in building a new church there with the help of the members. We were encouraged by finding so many new churches throughout our journey over the country.

At Narrows, Virginia, in the state-ly old Narrows hotel, we were served a sumptuous meal for a dollar. We thought we must have been dreaming. There was baked ham, delicious hot beef stew, yams, baked beans, cole slaw, sliced tomatoes, relishes, corn bread, biscuits, beverage, and cherry cobbler. Food was served family style with groups at large and small tables.

So the Armed Forces Want You

By Private Jim White

ONE SUNDAY NIGHT I noticed in the barracks that most of the boys had gone out to have what they called "a hot time in the old town tonight." This really caused me to be concerned, because I realized then more than ever that each of you who goes into the armed forces will have to make some important decisions which will have a very definite bearing on your future life as an individual, as a Christian, as a Reorganized Latter Day Saint. The two or more years which you will be spending in the service are going to be perhaps the most crucial years in your life; they will have much to do with determining the future pattern you will follow, because if you haven't already made them you are going to make some of the most important decisions of your life.

In civilian life you have been able to choose pretty much your own associates, friends, environment, and vocation. However, in the service your environment, job, associates, and to some extent your friends are not of your own choosing. You will be assigned to a barracks with numerous other men; some will be good Christians; others will be the most ribald characters you could possibly meet. Generally the men are quite indifferent toward religion; they just let life go along day by day with little thought of God or his influence on their lives, or on the lives of others. You have to get along with these men, because you just can't pack up your possessions and move to Utopia. If you do not like your job, your location, or the men you work with, you can't leave, but you can start making adjustments. At this point you have to decide whether you're just going to follow along with the crowd, or whether you are going to stick by all the convictions you have developed throughout your lifetime (or at least should have developed).

You are going to be tempted by everything in the books, and you are going to see and hear things that will violate a great many of your standards. There are many fellows who can't seem to say "no." They feel they must go along with the crowd. You will have to be able to stand by your convictions when the situation demands it. Don't compromise on your religious or moral convictions just to make friends.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Jim White was drafted into the Army in August, 1951, and is presently stationed at Camp Atterbury, Indiana. His home is in Lamoni, Iowa, and he was graduated from Graceland in 1949. While there he was in the band, business manager of Station KGRA, a letterman in track, and a member of Alpha Phi Omega and Lambda Delta Sigma. After Graceland he attended Drake University from which he was graduated in 1951. He enjoys young people's work, most sports, reading, traveling, and music. As soon as he gets out of the Army he plans to return to school for graduate work.

ONCE YOU HAVE ESTABLISHED yourself as an individual, as a personality, and the other men know where you stand, it is pretty much a case of live and let live. If they discover that you are a person of high caliber with high moral standards they will have a definite respect for you, even though they probably won't admit it.

There is a man in the group I am in who bows his head and says grace before and after each meal regardless of the commotion around him—and there's plenty in an Army mess hall. I have heard some of the seemingly most unreligious men in the outfit say how much they admire this fellow. He does not compromise when it comes to his convictions. He does not have to tell the other men he thinks they should bow their heads and say grace too. He is letting his actions set an example, and he does not need to say anything. Are you going to let your life be such an example when you get in the armed forces?

AT TIMES you will find it isn't easy to be the good Saint you want to be and should be. Sleeping in each Sunday morning, failing to read any church publications, and just taking a spiritual vacation for the time you are serving in the armed forces can come pretty easy. Often you will be asked what church you belong to, especially if you are observed as a person who has high ideals. At this point you must remember most of the men you are going to run into have never heard of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church before. Since it is new to them they will judge it by you. You are going to be an ambassador for the church whether you want to be or not. It is your responsibility to establish a high opinion of the church. Just remember, "For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed" (Romans 10: 11). This Scripture has helped me immeasurably during my Army life, and I am sure it can give you strength sometimes when you would rather stick your Bible under your pillow than get caught reading it in a barracks where no one else reads it.

There will be times when you'll be so disgusted with some of the fellows you have to associate with you'll get pretty depressed. This is when your faith in God should be your greatest strength. God is not going to let you down; do not let him down.

YOU DO NOT NEED to neglect your religious life while you are in service. If you can't go to your own church, visit some of the other churches. I like to compare going to church to refueling a car with gas and oil. By going to church you get the incentive to be a better Christian, and it keeps you in constant tune with the purposes of God and the work that needs to be done, but when you stop for two years or more your incentive and interest may stop completely, just as a car stops when it runs out of gas. If you do not actively use your religion it is of no value to you. I have seen lots of men run out of fuel in the Army because they became inactive in their religious life. This need not happen to you.

Besides going to church you can spend considerable time studying your church books and periodicals, and other good material. You may find more time in the armed forces for study than you do as a civilian. Make sure you have a church directory so you can get in touch with the closest church. If there is no church near by, try to contact isolated church members. They are usually as glad to see you as you are to see them. You also may find other servicemen who belong to the church, although this is difficult to do since our church maintains no type of serviceman's directory.

In closing I would like to quote from Doctrine and Covenants 142:7: "The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed." Are you going to wait until you get out of the armed forces to do your part? You can't take a spiritual vacation and be the same man when you attempt to start back in as when you left off several years before. You may not want to start back in again at all if you don't keep in practice.

While in the armed forces are you going to carve or just whittle? You must decide. Will you be able to say, "I have come out of the service a better man than when I went in"?

Young People in the News

Nanna MacLean

NANNA, daughter of Mrs. Janet MacLean, was born September 1, 1935, at Pittenweem, Scotland, on the Forth River, amidst historic surroundings. "Pitten" is the old Pictish word for "under the ground," and "weem" means "home." Pittenweem is famous for its underground caves, the remains of these Pictish ancients. Macduff castle, of Shakespeare's Macbeth fame, is also located there. In 1948, Nanna came with her mother to Dundas, Ontario, Canada, a little valley town about five miles from Hamilton.

In Scotland there is keen competition for the high school entrance scholarships, the requirements being extremely high, and at the completion of Nanna's public school education at Denbeath Public School, Fifeshire, she received the Dux Scholarship for highest marks, general intelligence, and proficiency. She then attended Buckhaven High School for one year before coming to Canada, and has attended Dundas High School for three years, where at fifteen years she was elected president of the student council.

Although her scholastic achievements are outstanding, it is in the field of drama that Nanna is happiest. Her first introduction to competitive drama was at a Burns School competition in Scotland, where she took first place three years in a row. At the yearly Dumfermline Festival, in classes of two hundred and more, she placed first once, and second twice. In Canada, at the Hamilton Kiwanis Festival, open to competitors from any part of Ontario, for the last two years she has been awarded the highest speech, art, and drama scholarship of the festival. At present Nanna is working toward her A.R.C.T. speech, art, and drama solo performer diploma from the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto, and passed the Grade X examination

Winner of speech, art, and drama scholarship—Hamilton, Ontario, Canada

(equivalent to second year University exams) in June with first honors.

Nanna's principal hobby is singing, and she is well known in the district for her Scotch comedian singing; however, a very heavy study schedule has curtailed this. She is active in young people's work, a member of the Hamilton Branch choir, and fond of working with children.

At Port Elgin Reunion this past summer Nanna contributed in many ways. She served as secretary of the reunion Zion's League, appeared in camp drama and, even before joining the church, offered testimonies that will long be remembered by those present. At the close of the reunion Nanna was baptized by Elder Carl Mesle, General Church young people's director, at a beautiful early Sunday morning baptismal service. She was confirmed the following Sunday at Hamilton by Elders Leslie W. Hill and Eldon Oliver.

At present she is employed by the United Gas and Fuel Company. She plans to attend Graceland College.

highway wound through the Appalachians. Many people sit out on their porches at all hours of the day, which is an odd sight to us.

Approaching Kermit, Kentucky, we passed a small boy riding a bicycle and nonchalantly smoking a pipe. Small fields of tobacco or corn were seen wherever land is available. Near Lexington were the fabulous thoroughbred horse farms with miles of white painted fences, bluegrass turf and southern mansions. Many Negroes were employed at menial tasks. The University of Kentucky is located at Lexington. It seemed to us a very clean city.

We located the church in Flora, Illinois, as we were returning to Independence for the Doctrine and Covenants Institute the last week of September. It is an attractive new church in yellow brick with the church name carved in a stone plaque. Restful pale-green walls and blond woodwork formed the interior with a recessed baptistry and stained glass windows. Evangelist J. R. Grice was the morning speaker.

Two days were spent in St. Louis taking in the major sights. Forest Park and the Zoo were high lights. We visited the Cherokee Caves, discovered some 140 years ago, with its many translucent formations . . . a full mile of walking 85 feet underground. It was 52 degrees and dimly lit. Formations resembling Mama and Papa Moose, Santa Claus' stocking and Grandma in Her Cap were among those seen. Bones of ancient animals were on display.

Many cotton fields with black and white pickers were seen in Arkansas. This part of the country was the least prosperous as evidenced by the fact that the homes were unpainted and battered, some with no windows or doors.

At Carthage, Illinois, we met the pastor, H. Plumb, of the branch there and attended a prayer meeting. Several children were present and took active part. The interior has been newly decorated. Two classrooms have been added; also a pleasant room for junior church and a modern spacious kitchen downstairs. These people show a real consecration of purpose.

are spiritual." That means there is no excuse for anything—for property, automobiles, money, land—unless it can be used for the righteous development of people. The purpose of God is to redeem people and bring them back into his presence that they may live intelligently and happily. Such is his kingdom.

God calls upon us to build Zion and promises the power of his Holy Spirit to help us. There is no greater challenge than this in the whole world. He dares us to prove him. I dare you to try God and the Holy Spirit. If you do, he promises that he will open up the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing the likes of which you have never known.

There shouldn't be anything mystical about the power of God's Spirit. It comes to bless, love, and help us, to bring us back into God's presence. May we with faith and courage accept the challenge!

* DEPTH OF MISFORTUNE

Personality counselor, speaking to overweight, self-pitying male patient: "Mr. Kumquat, your case is going to be difficult. You tell me that your business associates do not understand you—a rather common complaint. You tell me your wife does not understand you—which is not unusual. Now brace yourself for a really bad piece of news—you do not understand yourself!"

* COST, PRICE, AND VALUE

A young woman, in her first year at the university, was driving an aged car at a high rate of speed on the wrong side of the road and crashed into a large transport truck. She was killed and her companion, also a student, was injured. Impatience is often very costly. That bit of impatience cost about $20,000. Rather a high price, wasn't it?

It was stated in some publication a few years ago that it cost about that amount to bring a child into the world. Riding the bubble of inflation as we are, we would have to pay more now. But the figure gives you an idea of what that accident cost.

It wouldn't be right to say that the young lady threw that much money away. But she had charge of an investment and she was unable to take care of it. It wasn't her money in the investment, either. Somewhere in the situation a moral obligation seems to be implied.

So far, we have thought of costs and prices. But something greater is involved—value. What is the value of a human being? How much was that young woman worth to her family, her sweetheart, or her country? You couldn't calculate it in money. The greater human values are found in the realm of mind, character, and spirit. All we know is that she was precious, and now she is lost. In her place there is grief, and nobody can put a price on that.

We should say to drivers: "Save yourself, please! We need you."

* IN WHOSE NAME

We who have been nurtured in the Christian faith have been taught a certain way of concluding our prayers. At the end of our petitions and just before the "Amen" we say, "In Jesus' name," or some such phrase, all meaning the same thing.

Recently we went to a large gathering where non-Christians as well as Christians would be gathered. There was beautiful music, and we had come especially to hear a friend sing.

As a part of the worship, a young woman arose to offer a prayer. It was addressed to God, which would suit everybody. But how would she conclude her prayer? We wondered and waited.

These were the words she said: "We ask it if it be Thy will, Amen." I will probably always follow my childhood training and pray in the name of Jesus. But I think I could add this too: "I ask it, Lord, if it be Thy will."

* LIFE

You have heard the phrase, "The quick AND the dead."

In these days of wild traffic, it is "The quick OR the dead."

 LEARNING

In a recent discussion of "The miracle of learning," these good thoughts were given: Learning is not only the foundation of our past; it is the hope of our future. We learn to feel at home in strange situations. We learn to be friends with strange people. We learn new tasks and skills that yesterday seemed impossible and today are commonplace. We unlearn the fears and hatreds, the errors of the past; we unlearn the tensions, the resentments, and the dislikes. We even learn to be friends with ourselves. And by learning, we build ourselves up in the areas where we are weak.

 RAIN

The drouth has been severe. For weeks that have seemed endless, the whole Midwest has had nothing but clear sunny weather, while the soil turned to dry powder, the grass dried, the ponds turned from water to mud and from mud to dust, and the grass became as dry as tinder and any tiny spark could start a dangerous prairie fire. Some days there were "clouds and wind without rain," and nothing came of them.

One day last week there was a haze on the horizon. It thickened up a bit, and the sky was overcast. Then, peacefully, the clouds came quietly in and a slow rain began that lasted for a night and a day. There were green patches in the pastures again, and the air smelled fresh and clean. It reminded us that God's biggest blessings often come to us very quietly.

 DEATH OF A CHAPLAIN

Recent news from Korea announces the death of five Army chaplains. This comes at a time when the Army needs 200 more chaplains.

Back of this news is something to think about. The chaplains do not have soft jobs in protected places. They are out in the front lines, helping their men under battle conditions. They go unarmed. Their purpose is to save life, not to destroy it. Yet they are killed in the performance of their duty.

What kind of man would it take to be a good Army chaplain in Korea today? Surely, not just any minister, temporarily without a pulpit, could qualify for so great a responsibility. He would need to be a man of courage, and a true man of God. He would have to be able to talk to his men of eternal life in the presence of death.

An Army chaplain would need physical courage to share the dangers that his men live with every day. He would have to visit the wounded under fire. He would need to be able to talk to dying young men and comfort them. He would need to be able to look at suffering and not flinch. He would need to carry with him the spirit of the Savior's love.

The Army knows what it is about. And the Army knows that it is not enough to minister to men's bodies and physical needs. A man has a soul—a uniform cannot alter that fact. And the soul has its hungers too. Only the chaplain can do certain things for the men.

Five chaplains have followed the thousands of soldier lads from the battle fields of Korea into eternity. Who will replace them? Who can replace them?

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Ralph A. Bobbitt

AFTER GRADUATING from the John H. Regan High School, Houston, Texas, in 1945, Brother Bobbitt entered Rice Institute on a football-basketball scholarship. Like the famous Red Grange, he conditioned himself by delivering ice in the summer. His father owns an ice plant. "Bun," as his Texas friends call him, wanted to be a psychiatrist and finished his four years in premedic work. Then things began to happen which changed his plans. He was ordained a priest in November, 1947, and began to feel that his primary interest was in men's souls rather than their bodies or minds. He entered Texas University in 1949, married Burdina Root in 1950, and received his M.A. with a major in psychology in 1951.

Ralph is a native of Houston, Texas, where he began life in 1928. He was baptized at the age of eight. He began his first Conference appointment July, 1951, to the Southern Mission. Five months later he was transferred to the Spring River District where he has labored since. The Joint Council has just assigned him to the New York-Philadelphia District, with Philadelphia as his objective after November 1.

He says his hobbies are photography, cooking, sports, and singing. He was president of the Rice Institute Choral Club. His special interest is "developing building stones for Zion." Ralph was ordained an elder in April, 1952.

PRESIDENT IN WEST VIRGINIA

President I. A. Smith left Independence December 4 for the West Virginia District conference which was held December 6 and 7. From there he went to Washington, D. C., and New York on church matters.

VISITS COLLEGE STUDENTS

President F. Henry Edwards was in Columbia, Missouri, December 6 and 7. He met with the college students and the group there. He was present at the Brainerd Home-coming, Chicago, Illinois, November 29 and 30.

BISHOP DE LAPP IN THE EAST

Bishop G. L. DeLapp left Independence December 6 to go to Washington, D.C., and New York City on church business.

APOSTLE HIELD IN TEXAS

Apostle Charles R. Hield was in western Texas from November 4 to 25. He visited Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio, Uvalde, Rio Grande Valley, Houston, and the Sabine area which is composed of Saints from Beaumont, Orange, and Port Arthur. Brother Hield reports that a new lot has been purchased at Fort Worth and the Saints are making plans to build. The Austin Saints plan on a new location for their church. A growing mission has been started at Uvalde and Pearsall where they meet in the Veteran's Hall. Brother Hield met with the Saints at Brownsville. He spoke at 10:00 a.m. in Spanish and at 11:00 a.m. in English. He also reports that the group in Houston is looking for property for a new mission.

APOSTLE FARROW HOLDS SERIES

During the month of November, Apostle Percy E. Farrow held a series at Escatawpa, Mississippi, for a week and at Bayou La Batre, Alabama, for another week. Along with Evangelist H. I. Velt and Bishop Joseph Baldwin, Brother Farrow was at Hot Springs, Arkansas, for a district conference and institute. Brother James Renfro was elected district president. Brother Farrow reports that progress is noted in the New Orleans mission. Evangelist Wesley Burwell recently held a series there.

APOSTLE IN THE WEST

Apostle D. Blair Jensen has returned to Independence after a couple of weeks in the field. His work took him to Colorado, Kansas, and Oklahoma.

IN MINNESOTA

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was at a priesthood and women's institute in Minneapolis, Minnesota, November 28, 29, and 30, for the Minnesota District. He attended a conference for the Chicago District at the Brainerd Branch on November 23.

REPORT FROM APOSTLE OAKMAN

Apostle Arthur Oakman has reports from Appointees Alma C. Andrews and John G. Wight who have been working in a missionary endeavor in St. Louis, Missouri, with excellent results. Five have requested baptism and the interest is continuing with missionary duties organized by the priesthood. Dr. F. M. McDowell has also held a successful priesthood institute in St. Louis and further gains are hoped for in both missionary and pastoral aspects of the church work.

A Song in the Night

*"I call to remembrance my song in the night:
I commune with my own heart."—Psalm 77: 6.*

AT SOME TIME in your life this little passage from the Psalms may touch your heart. Whether you find it or not, you will need it. Your day has been filled with burdens almost too great to bear, with problems too difficult to solve. Exhausted when night comes, you go to bed hoping to escape everything in a few hours of sleep. But you awaken sometime between two and three in the morning, and you lie there alone staring into the dark. Your mind and nerves are sputtering like telegraph wires, reviewing the news of the day past. In that darkness your fears are magnified and your worries multiplied. The hosts of despair seem encamped against you.

Then you lift your soul in prayer, and something comes to you from the great universe beyond the darkness, vibrant with meaning and power; it comes surging down toward you, as if seeking to be understood. God is your Father. All the power there is belongs to him, and he has what you need waiting for you. You feel very close to him for a while, and then you know that everything will work out all right. A great gratitude overwhelms you, and you feel like "singing songs of everlasting joy." Then you can go to sleep again, a different creature. And when morning light comes, you open your eyes to see a world transformed by a new spiritual meaning. You remember your "song in the night."

WE ARE PLACED in this world, as far as we know now, without our consent, and we must live here under conditions that we cannot control. From the moment of birth, it is a test of our resourcefulness and ingenuity to make the best of life.

Existence is a mixed blessing in which trouble is rarely absent from the combination.

If we stop to analyze ourselves, we can see that most of our dissatisfactions in life arise from our own limitations and inadequacies. But human vanity is such that we do not like to admit we are weak, and faulty, and wrong. So vainly we attach the blame to others and criticize them, or we find fault with our jobs, our homes, our family, our friends, or our city. But it is all a mistake.

The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

We must learn to accept responsibility for what we are and for how we feel about life.

We cannot change the world very much, but we can change ourselves in great and significant ways. When you sang your "song in the night" you knew that no change had occurred in the world, or in the conditions of life. But you were changed, and that made all the difference between success and failure, heaven and hell.

Here is the secret: Do not ask God to change the world alone; ask him to change you. Then the world will serve well enough.

A TIME CAME in my life when I was bored with the dull prospect of having to live with myself all the rest of my days. I did not like the kind of person I was. Looking in the mirror during my shave one morning, I said, "It seems that I am stuck with you. It would be a pleasure to leave you, to trade in the old face and the tiresome personality for a better model. Unfortunately, that's out. All I can do is try to make something interesting out of you. It will be a hard struggle, but here we go!"

A lot of work and heat are required to make the difference between the lump of raw clay and the finished porcelain. We may be discouraged by failures and worn out with toil. We may find ourselves lined up against the wall with old Omar's misshapen pots. But it is better to try and fail than never to try at all.

THIS MORNING I was at a gathering of newspapermen and publishers. The news editor of a small city daily was giving an address on community service. Among his remarks were these sentiments: "I would like to say a few words for the church as a force for good in community life. The message you hear may be crude, but it will be sincere. The church is the only institution that offers a message, a way of life, a worth-while program, without hope of gain. There is no way of measuring the good a church will do."

The church is not alone an institution for reforming the world: it is for helping you, personally and individually, now.

LONG, LONG AGO, a little grandmother spoke to a group of children about Zion. Her eyes shone as she quoted the promise that people would "come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." She did what she could to put that song into the hearts of others.

The "song in the night" that the Psalmist remembered was a song of hope and gratitude.

If we can do nothing else in this life but bring a song to other hearts and a smile to other lips, we shall not have lived in vain. And in giving the song and the smile to others, we find them for ourselves.

Remarriage After Divorce

The Presidency receives a number of requests for information concerning the right of members of the church who have been divorced to be remarried with a member of the priesthood as the officiating minister. A large proportion of these letters asks for an answer in so short a time that it is not possible to secure the information needed for a sound decision.

Many of these cases should be resolved by the local administrative officers, who are likely to be apprised of the circumstances and have access to information not readily available at headquarters.

In view of the foregoing we wish to advise that the branch president or other presiding officer most directly concerned should be consulted as early as possible when remarriage after divorce is contemplated. Where this presiding officer is not clear as to the requirements of the church law he should have ample time for whatever consultation may be necessary. In the event such time is not given, the brethren of the ministry are advised not to officiate.

The Presidency prefers not to give advice until the local administrative officers have been respected in their places, and a copy of their ruling is available.

Auditorium Reminder

In the remaining days of this month we need to raise approximately $100,000.00 for construction work on the Auditorium, if we are to achieve our goal of $200,000.00 for the year 1952.

In a number of districts and branches real effort has been put forth and assigned quotas have been met; but in many other areas the quotas have not been met and, therefore, adequate funds are not available for construction needs.

We are calling this to the attention of pastors and solicitors so that in these last few days of December every effort can be made to meet this need.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Elder J. D. Imrie writes from 42 Leslie Avenue, Auckland, New Zealand:

I write briefly in the course of our labors in this land to indicate a feeling that, with the enthusiasm generated by the presence of Apostle Draper in Australasia, and with the development of more ability and power in the local ministry here, the work in this land could well be about to make significant progress. The year ahead will tell us. I am in the process of reporting to Brother Draper, at his request, regarding such matters as this.

Elder Anton D. Compier, Roze-marystr. 44, Rotterdam, Holland, November 6:

I hope to show myself approved of the great confidence that the Joint Council has in me. Right now, I am trying to find a teacher of Norwegian, so that I may start studying the language as soon as possible.

The people in Holland are still talking about your visit here and I am sure that this has done them a lot of good. We shall do our utmost to make the work move forward here. We are glad to know that the Witte family will come to Rotterdam to live and I am sure that they can be a great help to the work here.

The Presidency received a letter from Louis Zonker, seventy in Germany, from which we quote the following:

Recently in Hannover we had a baptismal service, at which time a fine man was added to the cause of Christ. He is Brother Badelt and we feel sure he is going to contribute to the church program in this area. A fine spirit was present at this time and I am happy to be able to report that nonmember interest is increasing in Hannover as well as in our other church groups.

This week our work here has been given a shock. Our pastor of Braunschweig, Brother Robert Weigelt suffered a heart attack while at his work and passed away. Brother Weigelt has served the church long and well. He has been very co-operative with the church appointees and has left a fine example for those who remain to serve. He has served in the capacity of an elder for some twenty-six years. You brethren who have been to Europe will remember him, I am certain. Today he was buried, with Brother August Weber of Hannover in charge of this service. We are challenged to continue the good work done by this brother.

The Saints send their best greetings to you and pray that God's richest blessings might be yours, permitting you to carry out the terrific responsibility which is yours. We are doing our best here to forward the cause of the kingdom. We do this conscious that the Saints in all the world are doing likewise and that this cause will be victorious. May God bless you and all of his people that his kingdom might come.

From D. J. Williams, Burlington, Iowa:

It is with regret that we inform you of the passing of Brother Gerald Gunsolley of Burlington, Iowa, on Wednesday, November 26. He had suffered a heart affliction for some years, but continued to work until the day of his death. Brother Gunsolley, nephew of Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley, was a high priest.

While he was limited in some measure in his priesthood work because of his affliction, he contributed to the ministry in presiding, and by assisting in preaching and Communion services. And for some time had taught a class of young married people in the church school. He will be greatly missed by our people, and also by many friends outside the church who highly respected him for his clean living. We regret, too, the loss of his influence as a minister for the church.

Death of Fred Schoefield

The Presidency has just received a cable from Franklyn Schoefield that his brother Fred died unexpectedly on Friday, December 5. He was a well-known elder in the British Isles and officiated at the last General Conference, at which time Franklyn preached.

Another Bible

By Israel A. Smith

lowed by this paragraph as a sub-head:

After fifteen years of labor, scholars have given the English-speaking world a more accurate King James Bible. The text is easy-to-read, the language up to date, but the revision keeps the quality which made the translation a literary classic.

The Colliers writer is Herbert Yahres who states that the new version is "intended to replace the King James Version," and that a "top advertising agency" is directing "the promotion campaign . . . at a cost of $500,000."

Inaccuracies or errors of translation in the King James Version are mentioned but not stressed. These, it appears to us, would more fully justify a revision or a new translation. Here is what the Colliers article says:

For more than 200 years it (King James) was the only Bible most English-speaking people knew. Although English scholars produced a fourth, or English Revised, version in the late 1800's to correct numerous errors in the King James, and a slightly different American edition came out in 1901, neither version became popular. The reason, according to critics, was that the revisers had produced literal translations that spoke well for their knowledge of Hebrew and Greek, but poor for their knowledge of English. Most people continued to read the King James for its beauty and force.

It appears that in 1929, the International Council of Religious Education appointed a committee headed by Dean Luther A. Weigle of Yale Divinity School to explore two questions: "Is there a need for another revision? If so, what kind should it be?" This committee recommended revision, but suggested the King James Version be "followed except where it was wrong." The committee also reported that modern scholarship had "uncovered nearly 6,000 errors in the New Testament alone"!

We will not go into details as to the kind of changes made or reasons for making them, although there were more than four hundred of them of various kinds.

Finally the Colliers article adds:

The old version (King James) had some definite mistranslations.

Changed readings in this new Bible do not arise, altogether, from words having changed their meanings and mistranslations:

New discoveries are behind other changes in the latest revisions.

And the writer relates that the most recent find—occurred in 1947, when a Bedouin shepherd stumbled upon a cave near the Dead Sea, in Palestine, and found several big clay jars.

These jars contained ancient scrolls which have been "analyzed for its radiocarbon," and as a result these scrolls by this method were said to have been in existence as far back as 100 B.C.:

In the case of Isaiah, this means that the text is ten centuries older than any Hebrew text known to have survived.

On the theory that the extreme age of these scrolls has added authenticity, certain readings have been changed to harmonize with them, though the corrections or changes from this source have not been many. The Colliers article contends that though the scrolls have brought us "one thousand years closer to the original, yet it is almost precisely the same as the texts with which scholars have been working since medieval times."

WITHIN RECENT DAYS we have witnessed the most ambitious and widespread propaganda in the press and pulpit to promote interest in a new Bible. Nephi foresaw that when his words would reach "the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel, many of the Gentiles shall say, A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there can not be any more bible."—II Nephi 12: 44, 45.

Such resistance to the suggestion of a "new bible," which indeed was experienced when the Book of Mormon was announced, was premised, of course, on the belief quite universally held by modern Ephraim or Israel that the Bible then generally recognized was most holy, wholly infallible, and not to be questioned in the least respect.

The Bible of a hundred years ago was the King James Version, printed first in England in 1611, which received the royal approval of King Henry VIII, the title page bearing the words, "appointed to be read in churches," words which have been carried ever since.

Most of the great weekly magazines early in October (1952) published articles about this new Bible which is called the "Revised Standard Version." I have before me Colliers for October 4. On page 15 we find this heading, "A new Bible for the Twentieth Century," fol-

Again, from Colliers:

Already there have been a few complaints that the committee has tampered with the Bible. To these, Dean Weigle responds that the revisers were language scientists whose job was to determine the real meaning of the words in the old texts and then to express that meaning in English as exactly as possible. "We haven't been changing the Bible," he says. "With the aid of the oldest manuscripts yet known and with new knowledge of Greek and Hebrew vocabularies, we have really been recovering it. In that sense, this new Bible is actually the oldest."

As noted in Colliers there are dissidents. The Kansas City Star for October 10, 1952, uses an Associated Press dispatch from Jacksonville, Florida, to the effect that "fundamental Baptist pastors" of that city—have rejected the new revised standard version of the Bible because they say it is "the attempt of the Devil to discredit the holy Word of God."

These ecclesiastics assert the virgin birth of Christ, "a fundamental doctrine of the Christian faith, has been eliminated from the text of the Old Testament." They said in Isaiah 7: 14 the word "virgin" had been deleted and "young woman" substituted. The culmination of their indictment is made by Doctor R. D. Ingle when he said the new translation is the—attempt of the Devil in this twentieth century in attacking the Word of God, and also to establish world government, a world church and a world Bible.

Signs of the Times, Adventist periodical, of October 7, 1952, presented two articles on the Bible, in one of which the new revision is mentioned almost casually, adding:

It is interesting and comforting to know that one of the major purposes of this committee was to preserve as much as possible the beauty of the King James English.

This urge through the centuries to keep the Bible up to date is inevitable. (Italics are ours.)

And then this same paper follows with another article: "Many Versions—One Bible," with a sub-heading: "How can so many different translations still be the Word of God?"

Then follows an account of the many translations, including the story of a movement begun in 1947 in Great Britain "on still another Bible translation," by an interdenominational committee "set up by the Church of England, the Church of Scotland, and the Free Churches of Great Britain, with representation from Ireland and Wales, to prepare a new translation of the entire Bible 'into modern English.'" Representatives of certain Bible societies have also "joined in the planning."

The purpose of this movement, as stated in a book written by Professor Hunter, "Interpreting the New Testament 1900-1950," is that the English language has changed since 1611; that "the common man does not speak or properly understand the great accents of his Elizabethan ancestors." It is to be an entirely "fresh translation from the originals into good contemporary English."

Look magazine has also raised certain questions about the Standard Revised Version, questioning the authenticity of a large share of the biblical text, and making reference to an enormous research project in progress at Oxford and Chicago universities, in an effort to check the sources of the New Testament text "in the thousands" of Greek manuscripts, early versions, the "lectionaries" of the early Christians.

Well, one commentator says, "There is still only one Bible, but more and still more versions." That conclusion, as comforting as it may be to most people, hardly satisfies those who have convictions about doctrine and see contradictions in the versions. He also adds that—

Any version sincerely prepared by an adequately qualified scholar or committee of scholars—and this would include all of the better-known versions—may rightfully claim to be the Word of God.

We have not the slightest intention of casting any cloud on the King James or any other of the many versions of the Holy Bible. Indeed we pray no such a result will follow the reading of this article. We greatly deplore that history records, for many decades now, a turning away from the Bible. The common man of today does not make of it what men of one hundred years ago did—a source of help and strength by frequent reading.

The issuance of this newest Bible strengthens our position as to errancy in the King James Version; but we assume, as the corps of able scholars assures us, that the Revised Standard Bible has less error than any of the former.

This whole matter greatly enhances the wisdom and righteousness of the position taken by Joseph Smith, as set forth by him in 1842:

We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly.

Thus, in conformity with our creed, "all truth," we accept the truth contained in the King James Version, the truth contained in any other version, as a matter of fact, but have reserved our right to reject error in them wherever discovered. And we believe that many of the errors of translation in the Bible have been indicated by the corrections made by Joseph Smith in our Inspired Version. We recognize there may be thousands of errancies in the historical accounts in the Bible; but we believe in matters of doctrine and tenets the mistakes of the Bible have been made known to us.

The publicity about this new version has stimulated the Utah Mormons to deal with Bible versions, asking the question, "Which shall we use?" In the "church section" of the Deseret News (October 4, 1952) they allege, editorially—

That the Revised Version was prepared under the direction of a set of critics known as extreme textualists who cast doubt upon many passages which are sacred to us. . . .

Some translators changed the wording of the Scriptures to fit their own sectarian doctrinal notions. The widely advertised Revised Standard Version admits such changes, saying in the preface that alterations would have been entirely inappropriate for the universal faith of the Christian Church.

And they question the authority of "uninspired and argumentative translators to determine what is appropriate for church doctrine."

The Deseret News editor finds by comparison of "biblical excerpts" in the Book of Mormon with the same passages in various Bible versions that the King James Authorized Version is the most correct. He then adds this paragraph:

The Prophet Joseph Smith made a revision of the entire Bible under the inspiration of the Lord. It is known as the Inspired Version. But the Prophet was martyred before he could complete the work, and for that reason our Church does not accept this volume for general use. Yet the Prophet did enough work on this revision to set a pattern which is valuable in this discussion. Which other version of the Bible most closely resembles the revision partly completed by the Prophet? Once more comes the answer: the King James' Authorized Version.

He states also that the King James Version is one of their "Four Standard Works." He charges that the views of some of the men who have been "used" in revising the Scriptures are dangerous and apostate.

Again, in conclusion the Deseret News article says:

For Latter-Day Saints there can be but one version of the Bible for Church doctrine, and that is the version supported by the inspiration and revelation which came to the Prophet Joseph Smith. It is the King James' Version.

We grant that there are many imperfections in it, and for that reason we make the qualification we do in our Articles of Faith. But it is the nearest to the sure word of revelation which came through Joseph Smith.

This Mormon writer, in spite of his declaration that there are many imperfections in the King James Version, advances the position that they have but the King James "for church doctrine."

We of the Reorganization occupy a much better position: We hold that in matters of "church doctrine" we are fully advised through the inspiration of the Prophet Joseph Smith, all of which the Mormons reject on the specious plea that his work "was not complete," a poor argument for rejecting what he did accomplish.

But we deny that his work of correcting the Scriptures was incomplete. He declared that the work of correction was a "branch" of his calling, and in a blessing placed upon his head by the Patriarch, his father, he was unequivocally promised that he would live to "finish" his work. Prophetically speaking, Joseph Smith said, "Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety" (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15, see also 34: 5 and 42: 5). In a letter written July 2, 1833, from Kirtland, Ohio, "To the Brethren in Zion," Joseph said, "We this day finished the translating of the Scriptures, for which we returned gratitude to our Heavenly Father."—Times and Seasons, Volume 6, page 802.

In the vision of Moses (Doctrine and Covenants 22) the Lord told him that "precious parts" of the account Moses would write would be taken away, but that another would come who would restore the "words." We believe and aver that that promise was fulfilled.

Bible revision may properly be greatly appreciated by the world in general. We watch such proceedings with judicial attitude of mind, but we also have our convictions.

Gratitude

CHRISTMAS, Thanksgiving, gratitude—these are somewhat synonymous words that are used universally to remind us of God's love. We, as Reorganized Latter Day Saints, do want to celebrate Christmas in a solemn way even as the first Christmas was celebrated over nineteen hundred years ago.

As this season of the year approaches we are made more conscious of the blessings and the bounties of life that are ours to enjoy. To enumerate them would take volumes, but we can live each day to show our gratitude.

My heart is touched when I think of the love that is so lavishly bestowed upon me—even me in my insignificance and unworthiness. I have so many friends who are always ready to extend favors and many kindnesses—favors that they never expect to be returned—all motivated by the love that emanates from their hearts.

I can look into the eyes of my companion and see the reflection of my own love—coming back to me a thousandfold. My little boy smiles as he looks to me, knowing that only something good can happen to him. His smile and simple faith and trust in me is God's pure love that He bestows with the stewardship of motherhood.

By Maurine Van Eaton

My loved ones are concerned with my spiritual and physical well-being the same as my friends, and I feel strongly the tie that binds us together, making us all a part of God's family.

The privilege of drinking in the beauty of a lovely sunset, or gazing heavenward on a moon-drenched night with the magic of the stars beckoning my thoughts upward, soaring on wingless flight until I reach the infinite—this is God's love descending upon me, covering me with a crown of happiness and making my heart rejoice. There is no treasure on earth that can bring such glorious happiness. To keep this happiness so that it will grow I must share it with others and make them happy also. This I shall strive to do in the coming year.

Thoughts on the "Messiah"

By Franklyn S. Weddle

THE "MESSIAH" CHOIR of Independence was founded in 1916 by Mrs. George Hulmes. Under the sponsorship of the church it will, this December 21, give its thirty-sixth annual performance of Handel's Messiah and its fourteenth C.B.S. network broadcast. These do not include numerous other local and General Conference performances of this oratorio. Mrs. Hulmes directed the first few performances; following her Paul Craig held the post of conductor for over twenty years, the longest tenure in the history of the choir.

My active association with Messiah dates back to my high school days and a performance in Fargo, North Dakota, then two performances at Graceland during my college days, for which I helped prepare the chorus by directing sectional rehearsals for the men in the basement of the old Brick Church at Lamoni, Iowa. The men's sections consisted mainly of college boys who insisted on giving me a rough time. They delighted in singing "halitosis" instead of "hallelujah" in the "Hallelujah Chorus."

Following my school days I located at Flint, Michigan, where I became a member and later the president of the Choral Union of the Flint Community Association. There again I helped prepare the chorus for the yearly performances of Messiah, and I believe on one or two occasions I played clarinet in the orchestra for performances.

In 1942 I was invited to conduct Messiah at a performance by the Independence "Messiah" Choir on the first Sunday evening of General Conference in the Auditorium. I recall that the soloists for that occasion were Josephine Mader, soprano; Annajean Brown, contralto; Eugene Oliver, tenor; and James Stanley, bass; with accompaniment, I believe, on two pianos, by the Miller brothers, Robert and George.

Beginning with the 1943 Christmas performance my present tenure as musical director of the "Messiah" Choir began. I have already lost track of the number of times I have conducted Messiah here. Until last year it had been our custom to give a local performance in the Auditorium using the Independence Symphony Orchestra, besides the regular network broadcast using the orchestra made up of members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra. With the opening last year of the new facilities at KMBC, the C.B.S. origination point, which includes a beautiful concert hall with a seating capacity of around twenty-six hundred, we have discontinued the Auditorium performance in Independence and have invited our local people to attend the broadcast instead.

ABOUT 1946 a new edition of Messiah was published by Carl Fisher, Inc. This edition was the result of over fifteen years of research by Dr. J. M. Coopersmith, now of the Library of Congress. Dr. Coopersmith consulted the autograph scores, of which there are several and each one different. In the preface of the new edition Dr. Coopersmith states:

"To ascertain Handel's intentions, the collation of a large group of original sources was required. Doubtful readings have been resolved by reference to the original autograph at the British Museum and the autograph sketches and fragments at the Fitzwilliam Museum. Also examined were the Smith transcript used as a conducting score by Handel at the first performance, which contains important autograph corrections and additions, and several transcripts prepared for later performances, which contain variant versions. Of the latter transcripts, the most significant are the two full-scores at the British Museum, the manuscript at the Hamburg Stadtbibliothek, the Newman Flower version, which contains some autograph text-variants in "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," and finally, the most interesting and complete transcript, owned by the Rosenback Company of New York, formerly in the collection of Otto Goldschmidt, Jenny Lind's husband.

"Of the remaining sources, the transcript, willed by Handel to the Foundling Hospital, and the separate choral and instrumental parts are mentioned here merely because they represent contemporary evidence of the correct balance in typical performances conducted by Handel.

"Handel's original may readily be examined by reference to one or both of the autograph-facsimiles that have been published by photolithography: the first, by the Sacred Harmonic Society (London: 1868) is carelessly done; the second, with one small exception, was carefully edited by Friedrich Chrysander for the German Handel Society, Vol. 96 (Hamburg: Strumper and Company, 1892).

"By a careful collation of the word-book used at the first performance with the autograph and the King James Version, it is now possible to publish a definite Messiah-text."

Very evidently this is the definitive edition of Messiah, and in 1949 we adopted it as the official score of the "Messiah" Choir.

IT IS HARDLY SHORT of a crime to cut the work, but the amount of time we have for the broadcast (one and a half hours) allows us to present only about half of the entire work, so cuts are necessary. I try to vary the different numbers used in the broadcast from year to year. I must, however, keep the continuity of the text; keep the timing at exactly 89 minutes and 30 seconds; balance the number of solos, each part, with the choruses and orchestra numbers; and make

Question:

May a priest preside over a prayer service on request of the pastor when there are elders in the congregation? If so, please explain Section 17: 10 in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Ontario

A. B.

Answer:

No official of the church can delegate another person to perform that which is not inherent within the priesthood already held. Illustratively, a pastor could not authorize a teacher or deacon to serve the sacrament of the Lord's Supper or administer to the sick, or the priest to confirm one a member of the church. The pastor may delegate, as occasion may require, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon to perform any particular part in a service in keeping with the work which may be done by the priesthood member as designated within the law.

When a pastor asks another to take the leadership in a prayer service, the pastor does not relinquish his oversight and actual charge of the proceedings. He has, with this limitation being understood, requested that another who is duly ordained perform some designated and understood part in a church service, functioning under the immediate supervision of the pastor, or the next highest authority present. It would be wrong for the elder, priest, or other officer to presume that he was now in complete charge and not subject to supervision and regulation by the pastor, should this be necessary.

The Priesthood Manual, page 23, reads: "He [the deacon] may also take charge of meetings in absence of higher officers, or if no provision has been made, or at the request of the presiding officer of the branch" (General Conference Resolution No. 490).

Speaking of the teacher (on page 26) it reads in part, ". . . he is not to do so [preside] when an elder or priest is present, unless requested to do so by the presiding officer of the branch." Page 28 states, "He [the priest] may be selected to preside . . . over any particular church service with similar privileges and restrictions binding upon the teacher or deacon." Priesthood is ambassadorship. To accept or reject those properly functioning under actual or delegated authority is to accept or reject the ones who so delegate, the church they rightfully represent, and God from whom divine authority is received.

Question:

How did Moroni, being the angel of Revelation 14: 6, preach the everlasting gospel "to every nation, kindred, tongue and people" when he appeared only in America, or are there different writings pointed to in other lands? Where? Which ones are they?

New York

C. D. Q.

Answer:

The Scripture cited does not indicate that the angel was to do the preaching. Rather he was to come to earth to commit the gospel to men who would preach to every nation. Church History reveals that this angel did visit Joseph Smith three times one night and talked with him about the gospel and about the Scriptures which had a bearing on the Restoration. To this extent we feel that the prophecy in the Scripture was fulfilled.

In Matthew 24: 14, Jesus said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and then shall the end come." These Scriptures, when taken together, prove that the gospel was to be restored by an angel, and would be one of the last signs, by its being preached again, of the near advent of Christ, and the end of the world as it is now constituted. The writer knows of no other Scriptures or angelic ministrations for preaching in this last age before the advent of Christ.

Question:

Is there a being or personage called the Devil or Satan? Or is sin a result of our own process of thinking for which we ourselves are responsible?

Massachusetts

E. R. B.

Answer:

There is a personage called the Devil or Satan. He was before Adam. In the beginning he was an angel in authority in the presence of God, but because of rebellion was cast out from the presence of God. He also led a third of the hosts of heaven into rebellion. (See Gen. 3:

4, 5, I.V., and D. and C. 28: 10.) Moses saw and conversed with Satan (D. and C. 22: 8-15). Jesus said, "I beheld Lucifer as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke 10: 18). One of the ways the Devil works with human beings is indicated in the following: "And behold others he flattereth away and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them, I am no Devil, for there is none."—II Nephi 12: 27.

However, though Satan is allowed to tempt us, and certainly has great influence and power, the Lord also invites us to do good and to resist temptation to evil, and thus we are free agents, and are responsible before God for our own actions, especially after being enlightened by the Holy Spirit through the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Question:

II Nephi 12: 81 states that the Nephites are descendants of the Jews. Alma 8: 3 states that Lehi descended from Manasseh. How can the Nephites be descendants of both the Jews and Manasseh?

Missouri

T. F. J.

Answer:

After the division of the Kingdom of Israel about 936 B. C., the tribe of Benjamin and part of the tribe of Manasseh aligned themselves with Judah, and thereafter were called Jews; while the remaining tribes, because of Ephraimite leadership were at times called Ephraim. The apostle Paul for this reason, though a descendant of Benjamin, was called a Jew. In the same sense Nephi spoke of descendants of Manasseh as Jews, and also in the Doctrine and Covenants (D. and C. 18: 3c, and 57: 1e) the Lamanites or Indians are sometimes referred to as Jews, though actually descendants of Joseph through Manasseh.

Mental Tensions

By Roland W. Scott

ONE DARK, CLOUDY NIGHT quite some time ago, I boarded a plane out of Portland, Oregon, for Denver, Colorado. At 1:00 a.m. as our plane roared away into the night I thought, "How in the world can that pilot know how to find his way in clouds and darkness such as this and guide his plane to its destination?" I was not a seasoned plane traveler, and as I thought of the vast Rocky Mountain ranges we were required to fly over, with but few landing places, my mind became suddenly tense with the thought of what might happen. The plane was filled with passengers, all seemingly in good spirits and apparently not in the least disturbed in apprehending any danger. Then I recalled that electric impulses were continuously beamed over the airway between Portland and our destination, and though the night be dark and cloudy, by this safety device the pilot could safely guide his plane.

Thus my tension of mind speedily left me, confidence returned, and I was able to fully relax.

In relating this little episode I have endeavored to bring out the inescapable fact that tension of mind is based upon fear in the great majority of cases, and with fear removed the mind relaxes and regains its normal condition. I shall have much more to say about the great harm growing out of mental tensions.

IN THIS FAST-MOVING AGE in which we are living there are rapid means of transportation (faster than sound); communications picturing events in the moment they happen and thrown immediately on a screen 3,000 miles away; mass productions with gigantic economic upsets; wars with their accompanying sorrow and grief as families are touched with loss of loved ones; nation rising against nation; and the rapid and fantastical changes in the fundamentals upon which we base character values and abilities as translated into dollars.

Is it any wonder that with all of the changes which have taken place in our political economy in the last twenty-five years running counter to standard methods of living that men's hearts are failing them for fear?

Is it difficult to understand that the principal cause of this shift is that gross materialism has so far greatly outstripped the spiritual?

Is it not probable that the driver of a motor car in many instances feels that his mind needs stimulation to catch up with the fast pace of his 100-mile-an-hour automobile, with the result that he generally goes to the hospital or morgue and his machine to the junk heap? There are 35,000 to 40,000 deaths with 200,000 wounded each year on our highways. Not all of these are due to liquor; many are caused by emotional high tension.

Is it any wonder that doctors are besieged by patients with all forms of mental tensions causing many types of nervous diseases?

AS PHARMACIST for many years, I have noted the gradual increase in use of sedatives to quiet the nerves.

Many persons dreading to face life's realities obtain a so-called "lift" or temporary relief by anesthetizing the intellect by drinking liquor or inhaling nicotine (cigarette smoke), thus becoming a habitual user of those forms of drugs which eventually impair the body machinery by so lowering resistance to bacteria that it becomes an easy prey not only to the diseases of the digestive tract but the respiratory system as well.

Those who are maladjusted, emotionally unbalanced, and afflicted with nervous disorders are very prevalent in America today. The number has reached its present high ratio through exhausting the natural energies of the body in wasteful and useless activities, which lower the moral tone and show outward manifestations which indicate the trend in spiritual breakdown of modern society.

Heretofore I have been writing in general terms, but the tragic conditions happening to modern society is no surprise to Reorganized Latter Day Saints, for they have long been taught that with the outgrowth of materialism these things spoken of would come to pass.

As we look out upon life today and endeavor to predict the future of society at large, we can only arrive at the conclusion that "every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion for safety" (voiced by prophecy, Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13).

THIS BRINGS UP the subject which I had in mind when I started to write this article—a subject which has challenged every nation, kindred, tongue, and people for the last four thousand years. It has been a subject of poetry and song over the centuries, representing a task which has been held out to this people for its accomplishment—Zion the beautiful.

President F. Henry Edwards, in his Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants regarding Section 59, has this to say:

The Lord's day is not set apart for idleness. Nor is it primarily a day for physical recuperation, although it serves this great purpose.

The purpose of the Sabbath among the children of Israel and of the Lord's day among Christians is to guarantee that a definite period of time shall be dedicated to worship and spiritual meditation.

Effectual Zion building is dependent upon the spiritual quality of the people. Careful and willing observance of the moral law, the relaxation and recreation which comes from rest and genuine worship, the power which comes from complete dedication to a great cause, and the strength born of willing compliance without bargaining are all directly contributory to this effectiveness.

What greater opportunity is offered to the children of the Covenant than to assemble on the Lord's day for rest, doing no unnecessary labor, that he might speak peace to the soul which has been harassed by mental tensions during the week, and to meditate upon the everlasting love and mercy of the Lord for his children that he might bless and heal them and forgive them of their sins?

Not long ago I watched a television program one Sabbath afternoon. I didn't feel exactly right about it, as my conscience bothered me, and I retired one night with the subject on my mind.

I WAS SHOWN in a dream the marvelous love in the heart of the Father who created the world, and everything therein, laboring incessantly to bring it forth in all its majesty, beauty, and harmony, for the sole benefit of his children.

On the seventh day he rested and blessed the day and made it holy. As I thought on this dream it seemed to me that the people of God should meditate upon the great things which their Father in heaven has done for them and keep the day sacred in memory of those things. It would be in harmony with the spirit of the revelations if we should do no unnecessary work upon this day and all modern instruments of television and other instruments which do not reflect or bring forth the word of God and which may interfere with the communion of the Holy Spirit should be kept silent, even to our refraining from all worldly amusements.

I was deeply impressed that when we comply with this covenant of keeping sacred the Sabbath day—for verily it is a covenant—we shall be blessed in a special manner, and when we keep all the commandments God will lead his people from bondage by his Spirit, and "behold, Zion will come."

When our hearts are filled to overflowing with the love of Christ, all tension and depressing fears will

"All Things to All Men"

Editor's Note: An article in the September 16 issue of The Reporter discusses a "new force in Europe." Theodore H. White, the author, particularly writes of the Catholic Leftist Movement in France. We are impressed with certain parts of this article as we feel it has significance for our own movement. Its theme emphasizes Paul's statement in I Corinthians 9:22, "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."

IT HAS LONG BEEN KNOWN that when missionaries show an interest in the kind of work that the men whom they are trying to reach with the gospel do, they are much more likely to attend the meetings and be drawn to the gospel message.

WHITHER THOU GOEST . . .

The Mission de Paris itself was not founded until the recent Liberation. Its inspiration came from an obscure chaplain, the Abbé Godin, whose experience in organizing Catholic working-class groups had convinced him that French workers should be appealed to not as if they were strayed sinners but as if they were pagans who had never heard of the Church. In 1944 he persuaded the Diocese of Paris to open a new mission whose sole purpose was to re-establish the Church in the slums. Today the mission counts twenty-odd priests who are at once priests, missionaries, and workers. They wear no frocks, for in certain parts of Paris the frock is hated; they work in factories on the regular eight-to-four shifts of Paris workmen. They wear overalls and working blues and live on their earnings. They dwell wherever they can rent a room in the slums, as other bachelor workers do. Only one thing sets them apart from the others—at night, when they come home, they don their vestments and offer Mass in their rooms in the presence of any fellow workers who wish to attend.

"NEITHER FOR NOR AGAINST"

They join the dominant union in their plants—usually the Communist-controlled CGT. They do so not because they are for or against the Communists, but because whatever the experience of any worker may be—in hunger, in unemployment, in sickness, in strike, or even in riot—they must be part of it. When the Communists called for a demonstration against Ridgway, the two priests went with them—neither for nor against Ridgway, says the mission, but simply because the men they worked with at their automobile plants were going. Their presence was commanded by a strategy which has a longer range than Communist tactics. The strategy is to convince the workers that wherever they struggle, the Church is there too.

The adventure of the mission in Paris's industrial agglomeration is duplicated by 420 other worker-missionary-priests in other parts of France. Specially trained at a seminary in Lisieux for assignment to the "pagan" strata of French life, they have gone out to all of France's major industrial departments. They fish with the fishermen on the Channel coast; they hack coal in dark mines of the Nord; stripped to the waist and bronzed by the sun, they unload cargo as stevedores at the Marseilles wharves among the Senegalese, Algerians, and Italian immigrants whom the Communists now dominate.

FAITH IN ACTION

It is a hard, lonesome life—toil by day and devotions by night. Occasionally the Church fathers worry about their young priests, isolated from monastery or parish, hungry for human warmth and affection in the squalor all about them. Boarding in family homes, as some of them do, or drinking in the evening at cafes with other men, they are exposed to temptations that test them severely. One of the worker-priests, indeed, has recently married and left the Church—but continues to spread the gospel and faith among the workers in his own way.

The worker-priests have no politics. They have no blueprints of the Christian City to come. Their sole purpose is to win back souls to the sacraments in an adventure that, as the Mission de Paris says, will take fifty years before a first judgment can be made. Yet their work, whether the Church fathers recognize it or not, would lead to no larger a change than the opening of a few more churches in a country already equipped with hundreds of empty ones unless it were framed and sustained by a broader movement rising from the same restlessness of faith that has inspired their work.—Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

On Stewardship

By Don Savage

STEWARDSHIP, though made to appear complicated by the nicety of Webster's etymology and found a hard word by the conscience of the greedy, is a beautiful thing to those souls atune with the Master Artist. It was he who brought forth and directs the harmony of the universe, that eternal blend of spirit and material that heals the death of man and brings him once more to breathe in with wonder the beauty of the Master's handwork.

Growing up in a rural atmosphere, I was able to see God as a part of the daily joy of being. Unincumbered by the modern thought that joy can be found only in the latest bit of black wax and that beauty is eternally existent in Hollywood's backdrops, we lived a much different sort of life than would be considered common today. Hunting, fishing, swimming (I could swim well before being old enough to be baptized), stalking, rowing, and long hours of hard work was the life I learned to know; and it was a good life.

Few men can pilot a combine down long, golden aisles of billowing wheat day after day without being bigger than they were before. And that bigness is a touch of the light which flooded ancient Enoch's soul, whose heart swelled wide as eternity when he was lifted in the arms of God. Nor can one spend many hours seated alone beneath the mighty arms of a fatherly cottonwood, while the rain splashes steadily down in muted pats against last fall's leaves, without realizing that he is not alone. Were that man to leap to his feet and hurry far away, the same sounds of the raindrops would continue to whisper in a million tongues though unheard by human ears. The same gray shadows would continue to march and retreat tirelessly on the timber floor, though not beheld by human eyes. The fingers of God would remain there still; for who is man that God should perform for his benefit alone?

But a man who has had the privilege of knowing something of the scriptural God will not hasten to leave this scene. Nor will he try to interrupt that great concert which he is privileged to attend. He will seek to be a part of it and add his own small but courageous note to the eternal swell. He knows that the hands he sees in multiplicity around him are the hands of the Creator. Whether it be a moldering twig, dampening to dust unnoticed at the feet, or a fine woven coat about the shoulders, it is the work and property of God.

We at our very best are but blessed children free to live and be happy in the Lord's garden of the earth. Simply because we have in our hands a loaf of bread, or because concealed in a deep pocket is that slip of paper which declares a bit of the earth to be ours, does not mean that we are either possessors or owners. We are but caretakers, stewards of "him who laid the foundation of the earth, who made the heavens and all the hosts thereof, and by whom all things were made which live and move and have a being" (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1).

He Built the Earth

In these United States there are exceedingly few places where you or I could set foot which were known to our ancestors of a half dozen generations ago. A few short years past and this land of America was virtually a wilderness, uninhabited save by a few bronze-skinned men who wandered about in its lonely vastness. Yet today there remains hardly a stone which is not declared to be the property of a man. By extending our vision back a few centuries before America, this same setting will be appropriate for every nation on earth. There was a time when Idumea was untrod by human feet.

Wherefore the questions must be raised: What strange thing happened in this world? Where did these millions of inhabitants come from? By what right do they own the land that was here before them? Was it not God who ground down the rocks into dust and planted living seeds in the new soil; who watered the seeds in their season; who brought forth all the living creatures on the land and hid the mineral treasures in the land's depths? Was it not the finger of God which planted the mighty sequoias in the mountaintops and gave them life for millenniums on end, and then let them melt back into the everlasting hills to make room for other living things? Was it not God who turned other mighty trees into agate and buried them in the desert sands of Arizona for untold generations? Can anyone imagine that the land was unattended before our hearty ancestors came?

Our Lord was here when the Pilgrim Fathers clambered up the first beach, and he is here yet. America, as every land, belongs to him, for no man possesses title or bill of sale from God for his farm or plot. Neither is there any material thing which did not come at one time from mother earth. Our very bodies came from God's earth. We cannot even call ourselves our own. We belong to God.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. Let no man deceive himself.—I Corinthians 3: 16-18.

You, I, and all men are but caretakers, stewards over small portions of God's creation. He expects us to use our portion in harmony with the intent for which it was created. That is, God counsels us to invest our material wealth or responsibilities in ways that will cause love to increase in the earth. The man who will not recognize the Master's ownership of all things will shortly be filled with anguish when, standing before the eternal judgment bar, he is made to explain the manner in which he handled God's property intrusted to his care. "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." "Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."—I Timothy 6: 7; Doctrine and Covenants 118: 4.

And He Created the Spirits Also

Is there anyone so burdened with the cares of life or so fettered by the affairs of men that he has never taken time to ponder the great question of what life is, and what makes a living creature? Life is everywhere. We think man the major form of life—and surely he does have the best mental tools of all living creatures—but there is also life in animals, birds, fish, reptiles, and millions of small sea creatures composed of but a few cells. There is life in trees, and in their seeds, as well as in all kinds of seeds. There is individual life in the millions of cells that make up a human body, each with a life quite separate from that man's spirit. And these minute portions of life are not partial to any man but can be transplanted to another with comparative ease.

Who is the giver of this huge measure of life? Obviously it is not man, who in his highest achievement can detonate an atom bomb but cannot make a blade of grass.

Where is stored the vast reservoir of living spirit which is poured out so lavishly and taken away almost as steadily to never again appear? Who is the keeper of life itself? Is it not God? Is it not the One who urged, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—John 8: 12.

No one alive can recall when his spirit was yet without its earthly tabernacle. Likewise, no one can have power even over his own spirit in the day of death. As that spark of life is laid before God, it must be valued in the measure of Christ which unerringly tells forever what celestial harmony was attained in mortal life. In that day the stewardship of man will be revealed.

As we love the workmanship of God and live as a part of that creation so will we continue to be co-creators with Christ in eternity. Within our grasp and ability is the opportunity to sing in the joyous choirs forever. Every word of God and every breath of wind bears witness and directs us toward the understanding of him and his work.

Let us live together in love and charity. Let us be God's friends as he has sought to be our friend. Let us be gentle. In all things that we do, we should look for his hand, and make our lives of those things lasting and beautiful. If we keep the commandments so faithfully offered us, we shall find peace to our souls both now and forever.

Beyond Sham

By Collins Ewing, Jr.

When I became a man, I put away childish things.—I Corinthians 13: 11.

THE passing parade of life leaves many people behind—sick people who have never learned how to live. Behind the face veiled with paint and wearing a forced smile, behind the loud talk and empty laughter, is a frustrated personality. Most of these unfortunates blame their plight on other people or on world conditions; they have not learned to carry the responsibility of their mistakes on their own shoulders. Some try escaping through alcohol, but society has laid down rules for the lawbreaker, and any excessive indulgence carries its personal and social punishments. The individual who speeds down the highway is not escaping either and often his indulgence results in suffering not only for himself but others as well.

Some, of course, break the laws and apparently get by with it. However, careful observation and a few minutes of honest conversation will reveal the real person behind the wheel of the luxurious automobile, the fur coat, the cocktail. No camouflage can hide insecurity long; the man or woman who has never mastered the arts of self-expression and self-control is easily detected. Many miss their big chance for a happy life when they are children. They do not learn to make decisions for themselves, to find an outlet for expression, to consider others. They have not discovered and developed the small glow inside that would lead them to the life beautiful that Christ displayed.

Matthew writes about the meek and how they shall rule the earth. He doesn't mean the people who let the world push them around; he's talking about those who hold steadfastly to the ideal which Christ preached. From the lions' roar of the ancient Roman arena to the neatly piled rows of bodies in concentration camp comes the cry of people who honestly and wholeheartedly try to live up to Christian principles, and it echoes down to the tar-paper shacks by the river as well as to the elite sections of the city. This cry will never cease.

The number of homes broken by divorce each year point to the fact that the true followers must stand up and declare the way of the full life. They must assure those who have not yet found it, "We shall always be waiting for you, but hurry—you have such a short time upon earth. Let us show you the way which will lead to complete happiness. The longer you wait, the more hell on earth you will have."

People of all ages, education, and color who have found this complete life are the happy ones. There is no greater proof of this than to look into their eyes. Soldiers who have seen action at the front can easily tell if another man has been in battle; they can tell, too, how he controlled his feelings under the pressure of combat. Christians can be similarly identified by the look in their eyes. All the shams, the cover-ups, the camouflages in the world can't take the place of that look.

How does a man find his way to life abundant? First he must pray humbly, "I want to be a Christian. Please help me." He will never find it by saying, "Lord, I am a Christian; I have been saved." He must find out what Christ would have him do and pray for strength to think clearly, to walk steadfastly, to ignore the interference of unimportant things.

All the happiness of the world and Christ's kingdom belongs to the person who will live by this kind of prayer.

Celebrate Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary

On October 25 Brother and Sister R. H. Counts of Iron Mountain, Missouri, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They have been members of the Reorganized Church for forty-two years, and Brother Counts spent some time under General Conference assignment as a missionary. They have eight children living, all married, twenty-two grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Brother Counts was seventy-one years old August 20, and Sister Counts was sixty-six years old on May 22.

depart. Then as we look forward with increased faith and confidence, the full light of the gospel will reveal the transcendent beauty, holiness, and glory of the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man.

When our spirits fully respond to this glorious vision, somehow the commandments and rules of behavior instituted as a disciplining force will fade away, and our sole guidance will be the great eternal mind of the beloved Son of God, even Jesus Christ; and thus, after thousands of years of toil, sacrifice, labor, and patient enduring love, our Father will bring again Zion.

Sunday's activities included worship and study. This was the first attempt at a leader's retreat, and although it did not draw personnel from all the branches, its value was apparent in the establishment of a unified League program throughout the district.

Copies of the findings for the week end were mailed to all branch leaders. Plans included a meeting scheduled for January.—Reported by ELDER WILLIAM G. RIMES

Barnes. The conference came to a close at the evening service with Bishop Baldwin delivering the sermon.—Reported by MYRTLE JENNINGS

Women's Group Organized

NORWALK, CALIFORNIA.—The mission has been growing since the group first met in the home of Brother and Sister Johnnie Miller on May 6, 1951, to organize a church school. In December of the same year arrangements were made to rent an auditorium in one of the new school buildings in the area, where the group is worshipping at the present time. Brother E. G. Yager is the pastor. Plans are developing to purchase a building.

Norwalk is a growing community and several hundred homes have been built in the area in the past two years. There is now a membership of ninety-seven in the group, with seven men in the priesthood. Fifteen have been baptized since the organization.

The women's group, the Maryetta's, was organized on November 6. The group meets every two weeks at the homes of the members for fellowship and study. "Overviews of the Book of Mormon," by Roy A. Cheville is now the study course. The activities for the coming months are planned at these meetings.

On September 23 at one of the meetings a candlelight service was held at which time new officers for the coming year were installed for the Maryetta women's group as follows: Mrs. Lucille Clapper, women's leader; Mrs. Beatrice Semonds, president; Mrs. Wandalee Billings, vice-president; Mrs. Eva Mae Dietz, secretary; Mrs. Alta Hamilton, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Myrtle Yager, treasurer.—Reported by MAE PRICE it all come out in a well-rounded performance. Besides all that, I try to satisfy the wishes of our listeners as regards their favorite choruses and solos.

The mechanics of preparation, in ten rehearsals, and broadcast would make another story. Needless to say, there are many hours of work involved in timing, rehearsing chorus, orchestra and chorus, orchestra and soloists, arranging for seating of chorus and orchestra on the stage, setting of microphones, etc.

It is generally conceded that no other work in the history of music has had so many performances as Messiah. More than ever, in this world of turmoil, is the message of this work needed today.

The Kingdom Within

By Mrs. C. A. Skinner

THE KINGDOM OF GOD, though it has its tangible, visible, and practical aspects, is first of all spiritual. Except a man be born again, born of water and of the spirit, he cannot see the kingdom. For us the kingdom must begin within, with an acceptance of the kingdom, a spiritual awakening and re-birth, else we cannot see the kingdom.

We may ask, Is the kingdom within us? The kingdom of God is available to us, it is in reach of us now, at any time we want to accept it. Our inner attitudes determine our actions. The things that defile a man come from within (read Mark 7: 15, 20, 21). "But if ye would rather give alms of such things as ye have; and observe to do all things which I have commanded you, then would your inward parts be clean also" (Luke 11: 42).

I would like to read from Matthew 23: 23-26. We see by this Scripture that Jesus was more concerned about the inside of the cup, for as he said in the twenty-sixth verse, "Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also." Few of us are guilty of any major sins, but the little besetting sins make self-examination imperative. We see here a fearless red-blooded Christ telling the scribes and Pharisees of their hypocrisy. Many think of Jesus as mild and meek, but I like to think of him striding up and down the dusty miles of Palestine, sun-tanned, bronzed, and fearless. Think of his strong carpenter's hands as he overthrew the tables of the money-changers and glared at the racketeers. We can feel the terrific dynamic of the personality that walked through a lynching mob that sought to throw him over a cliff. He strode through them, and no man laid a hand on him. He was a Christ who did not mince words!

Christ placed a high estimate on the worth of the individual. He was concerned with the individual and his inner personal life. Jesus insists that the essential things are within, for it is from the heart that the issues of life proceed. He pointed out in this chapter that it is not enough to polish life, it must be renovated throughout, and pointedly shows that external white-wash can no more cover inner rotteness in the moral world than in the physical.

In our anxiety to move forward rapidly in building the kingdom of Zion, we sometimes forget this principle that, to be lasting and effective, social change must involve the individual; just as it takes sound timbers to build a sound ship, so it takes sound people to build a sound community.

If there is one quality more important than another in the building of a life or in building Zion, it is character. It should be the crowning glory of every life, for it is the noblest possession of man. The following are a few tests of character.

FIRST THINGS FIRST. The talk of two women on a bus was overheard. They were bosom friends, and in an hour's tete-a-tete they gave a comprehensive resume of their characters. They loved to play bridge, and played it apparently a good deal of the time. They loved to dance; evidently, when they were not playing bridge, dancing was their chief diversion. One listened to see if any other interests in life would be revealed, but this was all. Their talk had struck bottom.

They represent the commonest failure in character—the crowding out of things that really matter by things that do not matter much. They have missed the primary duty and privilege of life—putting first things first. We may say to ourselves, I am not guilty of that. Perhaps not, but how do we spend our time? Are we putting first things first? Read the story of Mary and Martha, and Jesus' answer when Martha complained to him of Mary's neglect. We let first come be first served, forgetting that the finest things do not crowd. It is up to us as parents to set an example before our family in this matter of choices of putting first things first.

STABILITY. Stability indicates poise, balance, peace, steadfastness. Most of us at this present time are living under a strain that human nature never was intended to bear. The resultant need is evident. Renewed emphasis must be made upon those spiritual forces which stabilize and fortify us, confirm us in self-control, give tenacity to meet tension and steadfastness to meet strain. Many of us lack adequate spiritual reserves. A tree needs deep roots to weather the storm. So it is with us, we need to plant our roots deep in the teachings of Jesus and to know his will concerning us that we may have stability and thereby have peace of mind and soul.

A HIGH OPINION OF SELF; SELF-RESPECT. We see all around us characters in whose eyes little if anything is sacred. Truth is not sacred—they lie with ease. Friendship is not sacred. An old Edinburgh weaver used habitually to pray, "O God, help me to hold a high opinion of myself." The sense of possessing in ourselves something inwardly fine that must not be desecrated is essential to great character. It is one of the supreme gifts that any home can give to its children. We must plant deep within them the consciousness that in themselves is something sacred. It is generally caught by contagion, not taught by admonition. To be entrusted with little children is sacred. To have powers by which we can make this earth a more decent place is sacred. Honor, honesty, truthfulness, fidelity, and love are sacred. So if we would have the kingdom within, let us think seriously on these things, and have a high opinion of ourselves.

HAPPINESS IS A TEST OF CHARACTER. In home, happiness clearly is a test. Often marriage sinks to a burdensome obligation—no more; two people are true to a legal arrangement, not having the delights of a joyous fellowship. They laboriously keep the vows to which once they swore. There are other homes, however, where folk live together who would not be married to anybody else for all the world. Happiness is a real test of the fineness and success of our relationships. In a book I was reading the other day I found this statement, "Christianity can be fun." Under it was this Scripture, "These things have I spoken unto you . . . that your joy might be full" (John 15: 11). In considering this, these thoughts came—God is a God of laughter, as well as of prayer, a God of singing, as well as of tears. God is at home in the play of his children. He loves to hear us laugh. We do not honor God by our long faces. God wants us to be good, not "goody-goody." There is quite a distinction. If God's spirit does not enter our kitchen, there is something the matter with our kitchen. If we cannot take God into our recreation, there is something wrong with the way we play. The kind of insight which discovers happiness in difficult situations, commonplace people, and customary tasks is one of the surest tests of character, for it brings out generosity, appreciativeness, and love. The person who cannot know abiding happiness is the self-absorbed person.

Vacation Memories

By Helen Hester Hintz

PART II

IT WAS A GREAT EXPERIENCE to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute which opened September 28 with over 400 registrations. Those in charge handled the classes very ably, as the rapt attention of the audience attested. The Stone Church was comfortably filled and to hear the hundreds of voices raised in singing the opening hymn with the great pipe organ accompaniment was a memorable experience.

Emphasis was laid again and again on the centrality of Jesus in our lives. If we keep him always at the center of life we shall not veer from our course. He is to be central in religious and personal life; the only spiritual dynamic is the life of Jesus and his teaching. We must go out and live life as we see Jesus lived it. The centrality of Jesus is beyond question in the Doctrine and Covenants. When he is the center of the church and the center of our lives, we shall no longer hesitate and wait for a more convenient season for the cause of Zion.

"Questions are being raised by our youth. In academic circles they are being confused by the ideas being taught. What about the unique nature of Jesus? Take the First Pentecost; the disciples were in accord with the realization that Jesus was the Christ, and the glory of all this was revived with the boy in the grove in 1820. We are witnesses of these things. Most of all," said Brother Holmes, "we need to be profitable servants of Jesus Christ."

Apostle Roscoe Davey advised that the Sermon on the Mount be read by the people at least once a month and pointed out things that must be recognized in order to meet life. "Seek Ye First the Kingdom." Too many of us put everything else first. If there is any left over we put our little talent to work. If Zion is to be redeemed we must have faith that Jesus meant what he said.

"Repent ye!" he cried, "for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The cause of the kingdom was paramount in his concern, also his disciples'. About 85 per cent of the Doctrine and Covenants has to do with kingdom-building, stewardship, and their application.

Each class was so good we were reluctant when they finally came to a close. Having said our good-bys to the good people, we were on our way home.

A long-to-be-remembered sight was the sunset as we approached Albuquerque, New Mexico. The clouds hid the sun as it was about to sink behind the hills, turning the sky a brilliant rose-violet with gold at the center. The mountains were a deep midnight blue, truly a scene that only God could paint.

It was difficult to find lodging in Albuquerque due to the State Fair being in session and the many activities of a large city on Saturday evening. A special treat was a real Mexican dinner at a very clean place recommended by the motel manager. Later we took a stroll through Old Town, a unique part of the city preserved in its antiquity, established in the 1700's by a Spanish family and used as a fortress in times of Indian trouble. It has been combined in a village with Mexican, Spanish, and American cafes, shops, and curio stands. Various Indian tribes do native dances in costume. Church services in Albuquerque are conducted in the VFW building with Elder Barrett in charge. Their group is growing and we enjoyed meeting and worshiping with them.

There was frost on the car at Williams, Arizona, "the gateway to the Grand Canyon," at an altitude of six thousand seven hundred feet. Highway 66 is excellent and open all year round. Before long we were in Kingman, and then Needles, our beloved California.

How Shall I Make Ready for a Patriarchal Blessing?

By Roy A. Cheville

An interpretation made to students of Graceland College who were inquiring about this field of ministry, November 2, 1952, college chapel.

THIS MEETING is full of promise. It is a healthy day for the church when her youth can come to such a meeting in honest inquiry about this field of ministry. Too often we seem to have looked at areas in which inspiration is involved as those in which we ought not or could not ask any questions. Sometimes we have considered such experiences too sacred for analysis. Not infrequently we have felt that an inquiry might be taken as an expression of lack of faith. It is well that we are seeing that a ministry so essential to the life of our membership cannot function adequately unless soundly understood.

It is good, too, that you are inquiring about the kind of preparation you can make that will equip you for a rich experience when you receive your patriarchal blessing. I find that many think of something they ought to do in the last two or three hours that will give them a specific fitness. It is to the total pattern of and outlook on life that we shall be looking.

You ought to look toward a patriarchal blessing with high anticipation. Effective religion must have sound expectancies. Life without these aims and hopes is anemic and colorless. It is not enough, however, that you just expect. These expectancies must be sound and realizable. The person who drifts along hoping something will turn up will likely never experience much of high significance. He who sets up dreams of spiritual castles in Spain or who ignorantly hopes for manna from heaven may actually get in the way of worthwhile blessings.

1. Get an understanding of the total functioning of the patriarch in the ministries of the church

The church of Jesus Christ has a diversity of ministries. Each office of priesthood involves a specialization of function. All blended together make a marvelous working force. The patriarch-evangelist has a significant function that needs to be related to the work of the church as a whole. This dual title suggests a twofold function. The patriarch is a fatherly counselor; the evangelist is an inspiring revivalist. His work is essentially with the membership in contrast to the seventy who reaches outwardly to those outside the church. Do not divorce patriarchal ministry from all the other ministries, but relate it to them. For instance, in a branch or district, I prefer to make appointments for blessings through the regularly constituted pastoral administrators.

The patriarch is free from administrative responsibilities. This freedom permits an objectivity of viewpoint. After my ordination to this office I had to think this through. Since my youth I had been involved in administrative work in district and stake. Did this mean that henceforth I was to have no ideas in these fields in which I had been so busy? Not at all. It meant that now I could think clearly, generally, and objectively in these matters without personal involvement. It is sound that the church includes such a ministry. This means that the patriarch will not give direction about specific procedures but will offer general principles.

2. Develop an overview of the several ministries of the patriarch

I ask you to see the patriarchal ministry involving much more than giving patriarchal blessings. For convenience I am naming four major functions that are interrelated.

a. Teaching and counseling. I place this in the forefront. The patriarchal ministry is expected to achieve the clear spiritual perception, the insight into human nature, and the teaching and counseling skills that will qualify him in this function. At the time of my own ordination I was advised more than once that my calling would be to "lift the sights" of our people. The counselor need not be an expert in every field; he cannot be. Many times it will be his function to direct to others for specific consultation. I recall one reunion when a man with financial reverses came to me perplexed and discouraged. I talked with him about his outlook on life and about available encouragements. Then I introduced him to the bishop for the counsel that he was more qualified to give than was I. I do not attempt to give medical advice: I direct to men of the medical profession.

b. Revival. Sometimes we call this evangelistic. Our evangel is good news. In the ups and downs of life our vision often gets clouded and our sights get muddled. Then an understanding soul can assure us on the good way. Congregations often need such a ministry. I suspect your picture of a revivalist includes shouting, sawdust trails, and hip-hip hooray singing. Let us think of revival as something more than surface expression.

c. Confessional. Healthy religion must offer opportunity for a person to speak out of his soul and start anew with a clear slate. We have been inclined to frown upon confession because of some misuses of it. Inherent in the Restored Church is a ministry for confession. The patriarch occupies a significant role. Inasmuch as he is not an administrator, the confessor does not come to him to sign statements. The patriarch may and will likely advise someone who has missed the way to go to his pastor, but it is not the patriarch's duty or right to tell the administrative officer. The consultant, the patriarch, and God shall carry the conversation.

d. Benedictory. The ministry of blessing is usually associated with the patriarch. With the laying on of hands he speaks the prayer of dedication, counsel, and supplication. The usage of the church provides for one blessing to be taken down and filed. Other benedictions may be given as circumstances call for and as wisdom indicates.

3. Expect to assume the responsibility for problem-solving

Healthy religion does not take choice-making from its members. The patriarchal blessing is no escape from decision-making. It is no fortunetelling device to unveil the future. In this light I ask you to look well to your expectancies as you come to a patriarch for a benediction. If you expect to shift the responsibility to God for decision-making, you will probably be disappointed. If you come wanting some specific promise of personal achievement, you will likely turn away unsatisfied. If you come to escape from realities of life, you will not find the haven you hope for. God is not going to do your problem-solving. The patriarchal blessing is not to give us easy answers. It is not intended to predict the itinerary of our lives. Young people of quality do not want this kind of thing. Nor does God. He wants disciples of understanding and ability who choose to go along with him. The prophetic gift in the blessing does well to give counsel that we may understand ourselves and understand God. The blessing will set forth guidelines for life planning. The actual choosing must be ours.

4. Be concerned with the total pattern of your life

You need to be mature enough to look at life as a whole and the conditions that can make it blessed, if you are to receive a patriarchal blessing. When you are concerned with your total life rather than some one phase of it, you are ready. Sometimes a youth will be perplexed about some specific question. It may be the choice of a course of study, romantic perplexities, or financial questions that arise at the moment. It is not sound to seek an answer for these, except as they are integrally associated with the entire life program. I have found these days at college especially suited for patriarchal ministry in blessings. Now you are piecing life together. Now you are working on life objectives. Here you are pushing out the radius of your world. Today you are reinterpreting your theology. Now you are working on plans for vocations, family mates, church participation, advanced education. I can think of no more appropriate time than now when you are looking to the totality of your life.

5. Be dedicated to the total work of God

This spirit of dedication is indispensable. I cannot expect God to give counsel unless I am disposed to respond. This dedication must be more than a one-sided whim. I do good work when all of me is devoted to all of the divine endeavor. This is more than interest in some specific part of the life of the church. God can direct us only when we are wanting and willing to be directed. The patriarch needs to sense the fullness of consecration. Only then can God bring to a life direction for the ordering of its course.

6. Develop a workable idea of what a blessing is

The word "blessed" means "happy." Essentially a blessing is a counsel for a commitment to a way of life that will achieve enduring happiness. We do well, then, to think through what values we prize most and to ask ourselves whether these will bring us Zion well-being. A blessing's purpose is not to bestow gifts and hold out spiritual allurements. Our prayer is that God will help us to see the good way.

7. Be clean and effective in personal living

For integrity and personal competence there are no substitutes. God cannot place a benediction on sordid, smutty living. This does not mean that we must be angelic beings before we are blessed. The blessing is designed to help us achieve this quality of character. But we ought to be trying. It is a great experience to place hands on the head of a youth and sense the illuminating presence of God, indicating that the life is clean and worthy of God's approval. Many a time I have experienced this sanction as a life has come before me clean and consecrated. It is wonderful to be able to say, "You are loved of the Lord, and your life is approved for its goodness and purity."

8. Plan over a period of time

There is no hurry about receiving the patriarchal blessing. One does not rush up to a minister and ask if he has a few minutes to spare for a blessing. I have been reminded by fellow-ministers that I am very fortunate here at Graceland. There are no hasty or transient requests. You make your request and your name is placed on a list. Then some time in the next months I shall summon you. I have been told that the day might come when the patriarch might take the initiative in calling men and women for their blessings. I am very happy that many of you are saying that you want a few weeks or a few months that you may mature sufficiently.

You want to grow into the experience. It is well, too, that you are making your own appointment. I have met situations in which a parent has wanted to make an appointment for a son or daughter. Sometimes the youth was disinterested or getting off on the wrong track. In such times I have observed that some of the patriarchal ministries might be serviceable but not a patriarchal blessing.

Then comes the day when you meet the patriarch. You ask if there is any specific preparation you can make. Again I would say that the general basic background is the important thing. The daily way of life, the insight into one's self, the allegiance to God's work, the consecration to the total program of the church, the relaxed relationship with God—all these and more constitute the the major fitness. Generally we set a time that is free from inner confusion and strain from any specific situation. When a specific date is set, we shall endeavor to keep free from attitudes and outlooks that would mar our spiritual condition. We do not rush hastily into the presence of God. We come step by step until we feel ready to commune with him as our Father. There need be no anguish of spirit, painful introspection, and exacting fast. The essential relationship is that of Father and child, the one in benediction, the other in dedication.

The patriarch must follow a well-ordered pattern of living. Our church has been growing in conception of what this is. A few decades ago the patriarch was stereotyped with cane and whiskers. A short while after I was ordained, a brother somewhat older than I told me in kindly spirit that I was too young for this ordination. In his mind twenty years from now would be a more fitting time. I turn, however, to the counsel given to the church in 1938 when it was pointed out that ministry in this order requires "vigor, deep faith, and unreserved consecration." Here, again, it is the total pattern of life that matters. It is the total pattern of life that is important. I shall be frank to acknowledge that the ministry is exacting. One cannot come to the hour of blessing with animosities and ranklings in his soul. He must come clean "before the Lord." He must come with faculties alert. And finally, he must expect confidently that God will meet him at the appointed place.

Now a word of testimony

I came into the church at the age of sixteen. A few months later at the suggestion of friends I received my patriarchal blessing. I did not know what to expect. No admonition came to me about going on to school: that was not necessary. Nothing was said about selecting companions of proved character. One bit of counsel came to stand out, which I did not understand at the time. Others had always considered me a person of restrained temperament. Later I came to see myself as a potential zealot in whatever was my compelling interest. I was advised to be "consistent and even," without radicalism, and I would make friends among those who oppose the church, and they would respect it because of my integrity. This was no bait to goodness, no promise of a great future. It was a call to self-management. How well I have achieved, I cannot say. This I know: Since that day no one has ever spoken to me in disrespect or derogation of my faith. This holds for religions from the Utah faith to Judaism.

New Horizons

I have sensed the illuminating presence of the Holy Spirit in this ministry. I have been stimulated to study the field of counseling and teaching, to delve into theology, to understand human nature, to study the nature of inspiration. To these disciplines has come enlightening inspiration.

Always this has brought counsel to other lives. I recall the young man of cynical turn of mind who was told to look for the good in others. There was the young woman about to be married who was advised not to be tied to things and household duties when babies came to the family. There was the fidgety young minister who was counseled to relax and see God as a father who expected only a reasonable service. Always there is uplift and recognition in the business of developing self-directing and God-loving lives.

To be sure, this world is often a desperately difficult place to be happy in, for life is a queer mixture. Good fortune and ill befall us all. Most of us have our share of both. Happiness depends on a man's insight, on his capacity to find in any situation something that makes it worth while. It is inevitable that what a man is inside determines what he will find outside. Those who have a positive and appreciative attitude will find plenty of things to be happy over. The happiest people very often are those we have known to have been in difficult circumstances, handicapped within and hard-beset without; but for all that, they live radiant and victorious lives. There are many examples which we could sight, but we mention only one, that of the life of Helen Keller.

MINDING ONE'S OWN BUSINESS. Dwight L. Moody once said, "I have had more trouble with myself than any other man I have ever met." I imagine most of us could say the same thing. We do not travel far in the experiences of this life as mature persons without encountering ourselves. In the story of the Prodigal Son as he sat among the swine in the far country it is said, "he came to himself"; whichever way he turned he ran into himself.

The resolute grappling with our own lives is one of the most searching tests of character, for most of us are willing to grapple with everything else under heaven rather than face squarely our individual responsibility for our own lives.

How many of us after hearing a sermon will often think to ourselves, "This hits So-and-So exactly. He needs this. He always is meddling in other people's business." So we shy the truth at somebody else. Instead, let us turn the searchlight on ourselves, and be honest as we say, "I applied it to myself." I heard Evan Fry give a talk not long ago along this line of character traits, and as I turned the searchlight on myself I found I was guilty of some of them. I have been thinking seriously about them since, and trying to do something about it. For if we would have the kingdom within we must be willing to do that very thing, to make self-analysis and then set about doing something about it.

MANAGING OUR OWN MIND. An adequate control over the mind will solve some of our problems; it will not solve all of them. The thing for us to do is to distinguish between the situations in which an improved mental attitude will do the work and the situations in which it will not. So if we want to manage our own minds more effectively, how can we start? Here are just a few suggestions—take them for what they are worth. But this problem of managing our minds is very vital to us in establishing the kingdom within.

An excellent start then might be by banning from our minds some common but extremely dangerous thoughts. To begin with, let us ban from our minds the idea that we would have been happier and better off if we had made our major choices differently. Repeatedly this thought enters our minds, especially as we grow older. If we allow such thoughts to establish themselves within our minds, they do infinite damage. They might rouse emotions of regret, self-accusation, and fear for the future; these in turn might lead to chronic nervousness, habitual self-distrust, an ever-dwindling power to achieve. So let us ban from our thoughts the idea that the road of life which we did not take would have been better than the one we did take. Do we really know anything about the road we did not take? As a matter of fact, the situation in which we find ourselves may be the best life had for us. With the help of a kind Heavenly Father, let us make the most of our lives as we find them. Let us ban from our minds the idea that, as we make successive efforts in any phase of life, we are likely to fail.

If this is hard, let us recall this fact: our inner resources, our abilities, our courage, and our strength are variable things. They can be made larger, in fact they are made larger when we adopt an attitude of confidence and hope. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Let us ban from our minds the notion we would have been a finer and a better person if our life situation had been easier. Let us consider this: If life had given us less to do, we would never have developed the strength we now possess. If life had made our problems simpler, we would never have gained the wisdom which is now ours.

A closing suggestion I would like to leave is "Keep serene within." We may feel within we can accomplish little in the task of building the kingdom. We will accomplish much if we will take the example that Christ set before us and apply it to our lives, and let him reign within.

THIS IS MY TASK

TO LIVE TODAY TO THE FULL. To try to make my highest moment permanent. To give everyone whose burden is greater than my own a lift. To make every moment count; to try to be somebody with all my might.

To be generous, tolerant, considerate, kind, forbearing, and magnanimous.

To keep my mind open to truth, responsive to the world's best thought, and to be true to the best I know.

To look forward, not backward; to look up, not down; to make the utmost of my opportunities, and never whine at the lack of them.

To be a man before I am a salesman, a doctor, a lawyer, or a merchant, and, whatever my profession or occupation, to accomplish something infinitely bigger, of greater service to the world than collecting dollars.

To realize that "Man is master of thought, the molder of character, and shaper of conditions, environment, and destiny," and to use my power intelligently. To face life with a smile; to keep a stiff upper lip no matter how gloomy or depressing conditions may seem; to have confidence in my power to conquer every difficulty and reach my ambition's goal. To make my life yield its highest possible service by being faithful to the duties of each day, trying to do everything I attempt to a complete finish; by being scrupulously honest in every transaction; by always ringing true in my friendships; by holding a helpful, accommodating attitude toward those about me; by fulfilling to the best of my ability the obligation to be noble, to be loyal to my highest ideals. This is the task that comes to me every morning—to be true all through the day to my higher self. Its fulfillment demands all the courage, all the strength, all the manhood or womanhood, all the divinity that is in me.

 LEARNING

In a recent discussion of "The miracle of learning," these good thoughts were given: Learning is not only the foundation of our past; it is the hope of our future. We learn to feel at home in strange situations. We learn to be friends with strange people. We learn new tasks and skills that yesterday seemed impossible and today are commonplace. We unlearn the fears and hatreds, the errors of the past; we unlearn the tensions, the resentments, and the dislikes. We even learn to be friends with ourselves. And by learning, we build ourselves up in the areas where we are weak.

 RAIN

The drouth has been severe. For weeks that have seemed endless, the whole Midwest has had nothing but clear sunny weather, while the soil turned to dry powder, the grass dried, the ponds turned from water to mud and from mud to dust, and the grass became as dry as tinder and any tiny spark could start a dangerous prairie fire. Some days there were "clouds and wind without rain," and nothing came of them.

One day last week there was a haze on the horizon. It thickened up a bit, and the sky was overcast. Then, peacefully, the clouds came quietly in and a slow rain began that lasted for a night and a day. There were green patches in the pastures again, and the air smelled fresh and clean. It reminded us that God's biggest blessings often come to us very quietly.

 DEATH OF A CHAPLAIN

Recent news from Korea announces the death of five Army chaplains. This comes at a time when the Army needs 200 more chaplains.

Back of this news is something to think about. The chaplains do not have soft jobs in protected places. They are out in the front lines, helping their men under battle conditions. They go unarmed. Their purpose is to save life, not to destroy it. Yet they are killed in the performance of their duty.

What kind of man would it take to be a good Army chaplain in Korea today? Surely, not just any minister, temporarily without a pulpit, could qualify for so great a responsibility. He would need to be a man of courage, and a true man of God. He would have to be able to talk to his men of eternal life in the presence of death.

An Army chaplain would need physical courage to share the dangers that his men live with every day. He would have to visit the wounded under fire. He would need to be able to talk to dying young men and comfort them. He would need to be able to look at suffering and not flinch. He would need to carry with him the spirit of the Savior's love.

The Army knows what it is about. And the Army knows that it is not enough to minister to men's bodies and physical needs. A man has a soul—a uniform cannot alter that fact. And the soul has its hungers too. Only the chaplain can do certain things for the men.

Five chaplains have followed the thousands of soldier lads from the battle fields of Korea into eternity. Who will replace them? Who can replace them?

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT SMITH IN THE EAST

President Israel A. Smith met with the Saints in Wheeling, West Virginia, on December 7. Following this he left for Washington, D. C., and New York where he was joined by Apostle D. T. Williams and Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN IOWA

President F. Henry Edwards was at Pisgah, Iowa, for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the branch. President Joseph Smith III officiated at its organization meeting.

PRESIDENT W. W. SMITH

APOSTLE GLEAZER HOME FROM NORTHWEST

Apostle E. J. Gleazer returned to Independence after a trip through the Northwest with Bishop G. L. DeLapp where they were present for three district conferences and also visited in British Columbia. After Bishop DeLapp returned to Independence, Brother Gleazer stopped in Eugene, Oregon, where with the district president he inspected a church which is being considered for purchase by the Saints. He also preached there that evening. Before returning home he preached in Sacramento, San Jose, San Francisco, and Berkeley. He preached twice in St. Louis on December 14, as well as lecturing to the priesthood.

APOSTLE CHESWORTH IN INDIANA

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was present at the all-day services in Fort Wayne, Indiana, on December 7. He attended the seventy-fifth anniversary services of the Clear Lake, Indiana, Branch on December 14.

NEFF CONCLUDES SERIES

Elder Charles D. Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, spoke to the group at the Student Center in Columbia, Missouri, on December 7. On December 14, he concluded a series on "Practical Religion" at the Englewood church in Independence.

ORDAINED IN JAPAN

The General Church department of statistics has received word of what might possibly be the first ordination service ever to be held in Japan. Major Millard Franklin Caldwell was ordained to the office of elder by Elder Carl F. Crum in Tokyo, Japan, on November 19. Brother Caldwell is from San Bernardino, California, and his ordination was authorized by his branch and district, but since he was ordered to active service it was not possible to consummate the service until he was able to come to Tokyo on special leave.

The office of statistics has also received word of what might be a record baptism in one family. Brother Willard M. Corlew and his six children were baptized at Oak Grove, Missouri. Sister Corlew was already a member of the church.

IN OKLAHOMA CITY

Pauline Arnsion, director of the General Church department of women, attended an institute for women in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, December 5-7.

Greetings From the First Presidency

To the Church:

In the spirit of the season we send our sincere Christmas Greetings to every member of the church and to the many friends of the kingdom.

This is, and should be, a time of great rejoicing in Christ, our Savior. Let us keep him in the center. We have many reasons for rejoicing, but all the sound reasons center in Jesus, our Lord. He gives warmth and beauty to our joy in each other, and in our possessions, and in our freedom, and in all that we rightfully hold dear.

The Book of Mormon says, "Men are that they might have joy." Quite evidently this joy is not any shallow or temporary satisfaction. It must be joy which is so sound and rich and stable that it justifies and explains our very existence. This is the joy most deeply felt and most widely shared at Christmas time. It is joy in God, our Father, and in Jesus Christ, our Elder Brother, and in the spirit of light and truth. It is joy in our knowledge of the gospel, and in our hope of the kingdom, and in the promise of immortality and eternal life. At its best it is what the Apostle Peter called "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Joy like this has to be shared. That is why we celebrate the birthday of Christ by giving presents. But this beautiful custom should not be confined to our friends and relatives only. Following the example of our Savior, and in his Spirit, we should give gifts that are love offerings, not carefully calculated exchanges. Such love offerings call forth joy in unexpected places and enrich our own lives as well.

The best of these love offerings has value reaching beyond the Christmas season and carries the Spirit of Christmas far into the coming months and year. Among such gifts are good books, beautiful music, and fine pictures. But the best gift that we can give is our glad and grateful testimony of the love of Christ--the "good tidings of great joy" of which the angels sang. Bearing such testimony effectively demands courage and insight, generosity and sympathy, wisdom and hope, but these are of the very nature of the Christmas experience. We should share our joy in the gospel this Christmastide.

In order that the material needs of the poor and unfortunate may be met, we also suggest that those who are in a position to do so express their joy in the birthday of the Lord Jesus by sharing food and clothing and toys, thus ministering to the immediate needs of those who can make no return except their gratitude.

By reason of the generosity of the Saints, expressed in contributions to the oblation fund, the church is already sharing with the needy in the Spirit of the Christmas season. More men and women and boys and girls than we can readily realize will be helped through this fund. Persons in many of the states of the domestic field, and as far away as East Germany and Korea, are included. All of us should find deep satisfaction in this.

We, the members of the Presidency, know a surprising number of the members of the church personally, for it has been our privilege to minister in every district and mission in the church. We know many others through the good work that has been done and the fine testimonies that have been borne. We therefore send these greetings and good wishes with warm feeling and in the confident expectation that our Heavenly Father will make you rich in the joy of his Spirit.

Yours in the fellowship of the Gospel,

J. Dewey Edwards

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Evangelist John R. Grice, Paw Paw, Michigan:

Just closed the series at St. Thomas last Sunday with splendid results. Three young women were baptized which makes a fine addition to the force there. Two of these women's husbands are already stanch members. This completes the two family circles. The other one is a widow whose children have been regularly attending church school. One of them had already been baptized, and we are happy to see the mother also a member now.

I had splendid liberty in preaching and our prayer services were a spiritual feast which was badly needed by the membership there. St. Thomas has every opportunity to move forward and great things can be accomplished because of the material they have that can, by careful labor, be utilized for future service in the church. We have some coming back to church who have been "non-attenders" for years. This also is encouraging to the Saints. I trust Brother Stuart and Brother Gray will be able to lead them on.

Just commenced a series in Kalamazoo Sunday and am hopeful we may be able to give assistance here also. The good spirit is with us in our preaching so we trust good may grow out of the effort. Wishing all the members of the First Presidency the compliments of the season, I am

Fraternally yours,
John R. Grice

From a letter written by Lee R. Oliver, pastor at Pensacola, Florida:

We closed our missionary series here in Pensacola November 9 and three were baptized. Attendance was fair throughout the meetings, increasing as the nights progressed.

We feel there is a lot of follow-up work to be done as a result of this series and are attempting to meet this need with cottage meetings. . . . I am happy indeed at the progress which is being made here.

DECEMBER THEME

Christ Is King

The "Messiah" Chorus—1951

The above picture was taken last year at the broadcast of The Messiah. The huge chorus and orchestra taxed the facilities of even the large stage at the TV Playhouse of KMBC. About 2,000 persons were in the audience to witness the performance.

The Messiah will be presented this year on Sunday, December 21. The chorus will exceed 280 voices, and the orchestra will include members of the Kansas City Philharmonic. The director will again be Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of Music and Radio for the church. Soloists will be Josephine Crinklaw Mader, Marcella Uhl Robnett, Garland Tickemyer, and Maurice Nord.

The Columbia Broadcasting System will beam the broadcast to all parts of America, and its affiliate stations will take the message of The Messiah to countless homes throughout the land.

It will be the privilege of about 2,600 persons to attend the broadcast. The church and KMBC have made tickets available to a number of special guests and to others who desire to attend the performance.

The broadcast will originate at 10:30 p.m., Central Standard Time. You are invited to listen. If you are not certain of the time of broadcast in your area, telephone your nearest C.B.S. station and request that information.

Voices in the Street

By C. R. Ettinger

From a sermon given at the Napierville, Illinois, reunion

"Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets."—Proverbs 1: 20.

SINCE THE BEGINNING OF TIME, man has sought for a visible testimony of a supreme creator. As man has sought, so has God placed around him "voices in the street" which bear witness of Him. The prophet Alma, who ministered to the ancient Americans, uses this testimony in confronting the atheist, Korihor:

Thou hast had signs enough; will ye tempt your God? Will ye say, Shew unto me a sign, when ye have the testimony of all these thy brethren, and also all the holy prophets? The Scriptures are laid before thee, yea, and all things denote there is a God; yea, even the earth, and all things that are upon the face of it, yea, and its motion; yea, and also all the planets which move in their regular form doth witness that there is a Supreme Creator: and yet do ye go about, leading away the hearts of this people, testifying unto them there is no God? And yet will ye deny against all these witnesses?—Alma 16: 53-55.

Today we can listen to the voices of nature and feel the presence of God. We look at the mountains and see the majesty of God; at the sun and know the brilliance of his light. We listen to the voice of the sea and feel the depth of his love; to the voice of the storm and sense the power of his word; voices in the street, for "wisdom crieth without."

In this, the twentieth century, life is a scene of toil and struggle. The voices of pretension and sham commingle with the voice of wisdom, yet each bears its witness as we listen with our hearts tuned to Christ. How very much we need to be attuned to him.

Yesterday I picked up a voice in the street—a great Chicago newspaper. Its headlines glared at me: "Chicago streets are no longer safe for our girls." A subhead added its voice, "There is still danger of hammer slayings in Grant Park." These voices gave warning of the inadequacy of man without God, warning of increased need of the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. "It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22a.

IT IS A HARD THING for a man to get his heart right for life with God. It is a hard thing because the voices of distraction close the eye, mind, and precept to the eternal voice of truth. Only the voice of "wisdom" that crieth without can return us to the freedom of the truth of the lowly Nazarene. So often we think of the laws of Christ as the laws of restriction, yet the word of the Lord gives adequate evidence that his laws are the laws of freedom.

I had an interesting experience as I held a series of priesthood classes in St. Louis last January. I was staying with some friends in Belleville, Illinois, just across the river. Being of a mathematical turn of mind I wondered, on the first evening as I left the St. Louis church, just how long it would take me to get to Belleville. As I approached the first traffic light, it turned green. I tried to keep my speedometer just on the speed limit. I traveled down Natural Bridge, jogged over to Franklin, across Veteran's Memorial Bridge, out Broadway in East St. Louis, used Route 460, and arrived at 3410 West A in Belleville in twenty-seven minutes. It was an interesting experiment, so I repeated it each evening that week and found that at that time of the evening, I would travel the route in twenty-seven to thirty minutes. Then on the last evening I realized that I was free to go to Belleville within the half-hour only because certain traffic laws had been created. Without those laws confusion and destruction would reign. I would not have been free without those laws, for most certainly an accident would have interrupted my experiment on the first evening. This voice in the street bears witness of freedom. So it is with the gospel of Jesus Christ. His laws are not the laws of restriction and restraint, but through them we achieve greater freedom. "Wisdom crieth without, she uttereth her voice in the streets."

AS WE LISTEN FOR and observe the voices in the street, we see a great field for Christian consideration. There we observe hunger, suffering, want, and wretchedness. How much the world needs the kingdom of God! Today we hear the voice of war, economic strife, social unrest, famine, and disease despite our tremendous strides in technology and culture. We must listen to this voice of warning in the street.

We can listen to another voice, too—the voice of those who slumber in the dust, bearing record of an additional testimony of our Lord. Isaiah spoke of this voice to come forth before the fruition of Lebanon (Isaiah 29: 17, A.V.). It is too late for that voice to come forth today. During the last half of the nineteenth century, Lebanon did turn into "a fruitful field," and today that fruitful field is "esteemed as a forest." We must look "just a little while before" in order to hear the voices of those "who slumber in the dust." The Book of Mormon came forth in 1830 as a record of the ancient Americans and as an additional testimony of Jesus Christ. It remains as the challenging feature of the Restoration. Luther, the father of the Reformation, in testing the divinity of the books included in the Bible asked, "Does the book in question occupy itself with Christ, or does it not?" The preface of the Book of Mormon states that its purpose is "the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations." The book closes with this invitation:

Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and if ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind, and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; and if by the grace of God ye are perfect in Christ, ye can in no wise deny the power of God.

Here, then, is a voice in the street, wisdom crying without, calling men to Christ, and offering solutions to the voices of despair. "Go not without care through the streets. Learn things to avoid, caution concerning temptation, opportunity to do good, opportunity to serve our fellowmen."

IT IS SAID that on one occasion Fritz Kreisler paid a visit to a friend who owned a Guarnerius violin, although he, a collector, kept it locked in an air-tight case. Mr. Kreisler admired the instrument and asked to purchase it. The friend refused to sell, saying that the violin was his prized possession. It gave him a sense of artistry to own such an instrument despite the fact that he could not play it. On several other occasions the artist admired this supreme example of the craftsman's art with a burning desire to add his

He Is Coming

By Vivian L. Amundsen

ON A CERTAIN HILL near Bethlehem, a group of shepherds rested about a small campfire. It was night. The sheep were gathered together near by. Only an occasional bleating of a ewe which had become separated from her lamb broke the stillness of the hillside.

Suddenly one of the shepherds leaped to his feet. "I tell you, it is unbearable. These Romans are robbers. Each year our flocks grow smaller. Soon we shall be shepherds without any sheep. Oh, that the long-promised Messiah would come and liberate us from these overlords who seek our very life's blood with their taxes!"

One after another the shepherds talked of their poverty, their bondage to these heathen rulers. Their hearts were filled with bitterness. They had lost hope—all except one. Martimaeus, who had remained silent while the others were voicing their protests, leaned upon his staff and said very quietly, "I have not lost hope for a deliverer. Always, when I am permitted to go in to the city of Bethlehem, I go to the synagogue and hear the reading of the scrolls. The prophets all foretell his coming. The writings are sacred and of God. I believe and trust in his holy words." Turning away from the group at the fire, Martimaeus walked farther across the hillside to better view the sleeping sheep. "It was always thus," he reflected as he gazed searchingly at the sky, "no faith in the promises. But God's promises are sure; they never fail!"

The night wore on. One by one the shepherds fell asleep in their places. A chill breeze sprang up. Martimaeus drew his mantle closer about his lean body. Suddenly he realized there was a soft light breaking from the east. He whirled about. Surely it wasn't sunrise yet. But this light came not from the horizon; it came from high in the heavens. A new star, very large and very brilliant, gave off this radiance. But as he gazed wonderingly, the light grew even brighter—the heavens seemed to open and heavenly hosts began chanting, "Glory to God in the highest, peace and good will to all men. Glory to God in the highest, peace and good will to all men." It seemed the air was filled with these heavenly messengers, each chanting praises and singing with joy.

Martimaeus fell to his knees. The very glories of heaven seemed to unfold before his eyes. The other shepherds, awakened by the bright light, fell to their knees in amazement and fear. An angel drew near and said, "Fear not, for I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord. And this is the way you shall find the babe—he is wrapped in swaddling clothes, and is lying in a manger."

AND IT CAME TO PASS, when the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, "Let us now go, even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord has made known unto us."

And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

It seemed to Martimaeus that he would never forget the wonders of that night—first the opening of the heavens, then the sight of this little babe. About him was the same soft radiance as shone from heaven when the star appeared. His face was pure and sweet, and Mary's countenance was reverent as she held this little child, God's own son, his gift to all mankind.

"Oh, that all Bethlehem may know the blest news!" the shepherd exclaimed. And they went about among their friends telling of the marvelous experiences of the night

A Modern Samaritan

By W. T. Leeper

(Reprinted by permission of "Kiwanis Magazine")

THE SIGHT OF TEARS shed by grown men is an unusual one, but need not be sorrowful. Not only are there tears of joy and laughter, but there are tears of triumph. These are the kind that come with released tension. And these are the kind that epitomize the emotions of Christmas—the triumph of all that is good in man.

Last year I saw those tears shed the day after Christmas at a meeting of the Red River Club of Shreveport. The scheduled speaker was not able to attend and the president of the club asked me, as a guest, to conduct a suitable program. I asked each member of the club to make a short observation about Christmas. One by one the men of this club made brief two- or three-sentence observations about the true spirit of Christmas as opposed to the commercial one, until we came to a man who, when it came his turn, left his place at the rear of the room and came up to the speakers' table beside me. He told the group that he had not yet recovered from the emotion of the previous Christmas Day, which had been so characterized by the true spirit of unselfish brotherhood that he wanted to relate the incident in some detail.

Some weeks before, this man and his wife witnessed an automobile accident involving a man and woman and little girl. This family group was driving in an old automobile that overturned, injuring all of them in some degree which obviously required medical attention.

Our Kiwanian put the three persons in his car and drove them to the nearest hospital. And then, typical of the Good Samaritan, whose feeling of responsibility to his brother man cannot be turned off with a lever nor fulfilled completely when he has obviously done more than his share, he waited in the hospital to find out how serious the injuries were.

AFTER WHAT IS ALWAYS a long period of waiting, regardless of the number of minutes that elapsed, our Kiwanian and his wife were brought into a room where the injured husband and father had been sent. He lay there heavily bandaged, his less injured wife and daughter beside him with only minor cuts and bruises. The doctor was there and insisted that the man stay in the hospital for several days for observation and to recover from shock.

The injured man struggled to rise from the bed, protesting that the cattle he had bought with a mortgage only a short time before had to be cared for or he would lose them.

"Doctor, I just can't stay. I'm a poor man, and if I lie here in bed my cows and chickens will die. I can't pay a hired hand, and we don't have any money to buy more stock. Don't you see why I have to go home?"

The injured man spoke eloquently—but not sufficiently to overcome medical science. The doctor insisted that he remain in the hospital, not because the physician was oblivious to the pressing duties of the farm, but because he knew that even if he released his patient, complications would result that would prolong the period during which no farm chores could be accomplished.

But after the injured man made his plea, he sank back exhausted. If understanding, sympathy, and love could heal immediately instead of in the slow manner that it does, the emotions of his wife and daughter would have enabled him to leap from his bed at the moment. But the sorrowful expressions of those two—the light touch of their fingers on the bedcovers—only made more pitiful and tragic the plight of the stricken man.

IN THE FEW MOMENTS of silence that followed, the plea of the farmer for the opportunity to save his livestock and his farm re-echoed, if not in the room, at least in the minds of all in the small group at the bedside. The actual silence was tense and dramatic—too much, in fact, for Mr. Kiwanian to bear. And too much for him, too, was the sorrowful gaze of his wife who, without uttering a sound, confirmed the decision that he was trying to make.

And so, in a quiet, calm voice and with words that will never be chiseled out of rock nor cast in bronze—but should be—this businessman from the city clasped his wife's hand and said to the helpless country brother, "We'll do your chores."

Never before had this man and his wife made a decision more quickly. Never before had it been so easy. The weighing of what it would involve against what it would accomplish, the pros and cons which really amount to a consideration of the selfish factors that ordinarily temper our actions, never even entered this situation. Never could it be more obvious that two people with the feeling of brotherhood made a decision with divine guidance. By all the earthly rules their obligations had been discharged when they took the injured family to the hospital.

AND SO IT WAS that Mr. and Mrs. Kiwanian went out every day to the farm to look after the calves, the cows, the chickens, and perform the many chores of the farm that take so much time from dawn to dusk. Milking cows is not a great task for those who do it regularly, but for this businessman who had not done it since his early youth, the will to go on and keep his promise to his brother man was sorely taxed.

But in a week or so the farmer returned from the hospital and there was great rejoicing all around at the farm with the usual thanks and the usual, "Oh, it was nothing"—the biggest and finest lie that a man ever told.

But this was only chapter one in the story unfolded from the head table extemporaneously by one of our members, who had little thought that the opportunity for making public this true Christmas story would

We Can't Shoot Santa Claus

We live in a day when too many people want something for nothing. It seems that the laborer wants eight hours pay for five or six hours of work. The farmer wants subsidies; the businessman maneuvers for tax deductions. The little man, Mr. Public, wants to buy it wholesale. It is a day of "get yours" before the other fellow gets it. We fool ourselves into thinking that the government will pay for it. Who's the government? He appears to be Santa Claus. It's not easy to do away with Old Saint Nick! He is a jolly fellow of good will that everybody likes to have around. Nearly everybody wants him three hundred sixty-five days a year.

Do you labor honestly? Do you seek deductions by means of legal loopholes? Do you want more than is justly yours for your crops? The friendly fellow with the red nose and the long white beard is quite a guy! But, the "gifts" he brings have to be paid for sometime by someone. No, it isn't easy to shoot Santa Claus!

J. A. Pray

come so soon. He went on to relate the second chapter.

IT OPENED on Christmas Eve a few days later, after he and his wife turned the work of the farm back to the man they had befriended. There was a knock at their door, and when they opened it they found their guests were the farmer, his wife, and daughter. They entered the Kiwanian's house awkwardly, embarrassed, but quite obviously with a determination that resulted from a decision made a short time before. When the usual solicitations were over and the guests were seated comfortably, the farmer said he had come with a gift. Mr. and Mrs. Kiwanian, knowing his financial condition and the misfortune he had just undergone, together with the circumstances under which he lived, were grateful but not happy with the prospect of receiving a gift from this man. They hoped it would be trivial.

With a little speech that had been well-planned and rehearsed, the farmer took an envelope from his pocket and handed it to Mr. Kiwanian with these words: "All I own is the farm which you saved for me. It covers fourteen acres and the acre on the corner near town and on the main road would be a good place to build a home some day. In this envelope is a deed made out to you for this property, and the Mrs. and I and my little daughter hope you will accept it and come to live with us soon."

The farmer's wife added, "Ten days ago we did not know that you even lived in the world, and today we feel that we have known you all our lives and that you are part of our family."

Mr. Kiwanian who was being rewarded for his kindness—and who was telling this story to the members of his club—choked up at this part in the recital.

Then he went on to say, "It probably would be nice to say that we thanked the gentleman for his gift, but turned it back to him—but that isn't what happened. We took it—and we're going to build a home there. We like this man and his family, and we want them for our neighbors."

It Must Be Selfishness

On this Christmas Day, 1952, as we look about us and observe conditions at home and throughout the world, we cannot help wondering: "After Korea, what?"

As we observe our own people here in America when they gather about a community or other Christmas tree, eagerly waiting to receive their gifts, we cannot help wondering if they ever will learn the greater lesson so wonderfully portrayed in the Nativity, when a divine Savior was given to the entire world. Will they ever receive him and his message?

We are told that he went to his own and they received him not. Will the time come when all men will learn that the gathering around a lighted Christmas tree is symbolic of the gathering around that manger, where gifts were left but none taken away except those in the heart?

As the years have passed since World War I, it has been very evident that the spirit of getting rather than giving has become the aim of most people.

Naturally the world is fearful of war and its destruction; but the thing that has destroyed more peace than war is the spirit of selfishness. In the eleventh Psalm (A.V.) we find an answer: "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

We have been admonished to fight wickedness in high places; perhaps we should start that fight by centering our effort on selfishness.

A Nephite Follows the Star

A Christmas Fantasy by Jennie Z. Elliott

BEHOLD, I am Lehi, the Nephite, who followed the light of a star until it led me to the Christ child.

When my forefathers, Lehi and Nephi, crossed the Great Sea out of the old promised land into this new promised land, they carried with them the books of the law and the prophets. Out of them they taught their children, from generation to generation, of the Christ that was to come.

Thus six hundred years had come and gone since my fathers came to this new land. And, behold, Samuel, the Lamanite, told us that the time had arrived for the Christ to be born, and that God would set a sign in the sky, whereby we would know the night of his birth. So we who believed watched and waited to see that sign.

And lo, one night the sign was given. For even though the sun went down, the sky was brighter than at noonday. And in the center of this brightness, there glowed a wondrous star.

And lo, as I looked, I had a vision wherein I beheld shepherds abiding in a field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And behold, the sky grew bright around them as an angel of the Lord, clothed in purest white, stood between earth and heaven saying unto the shepherds:

Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And there came a great host of heaven's choir, praising God, and singing, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.

And, lo, the angels and the light faded from my sight. And the shepherds forsook their sheep, and went to this city of David, to a stable, where they found a new-born babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, asleep in a manger, while his parents watched near by. And the shepherds knelt in worship before this child, as before God.

Then the vision faded. And, in its stead, an angel of the Lord stood before me, saying, "Fear not, Lehi, for I am the angel who, this night, has told the shepherds of Bethlehem of the birth of Christ the Lord. And if you will but follow yonder star, its light will lead you to him, even as it now leads Gaspar and three of his brethren unto Bethlehem. Go now! Perchance, you will meet them along the way."

And then, even as the angel prepared to depart, he said, "Lehi, you must carry a gift to this Child, as to a king."

"And what shall be the gift I give this Kingly Child?" I asked.

And the angel made answer, "Give him of the golden maize."

WHEN THE ANGEL had gone again into heaven, I rose up and made ready for my journey, which I knew would be long and hard. And going into my storehouse, I took twelve unblemished ears of maize to carry as a gift to this Child of Bethlehem. And taking my staff in my hand, and my pack upon my back, I set forth on my journey.

I slept by day and walked by night as I followed the star northward, ever northward. It led me through jungles and deserts, and over mountains, plains, and rivers; but always my course was beside a sky-blue sea. And as I journeyed, it grew ever colder, until I came to a land of snow and ice, where it was always night. By and by I came to a narrow, frozen sea, and I walked across this sea into another land. Now the star led southward, ever southward. Again, the star led over deserts and plains, mountains and rivers, until I came to the land called Persia. And 'twas there, beside the way, that I met Artavan. For he, too, followed the star. And Artavan said that his brethren—Gaspar, Melchior, and Belthasar—had all gone on without him, because they would not wait for him to help a traveler who had fallen ill beside the road. And Artavan and I journeyed on together.

Now the star led us along a traveled way to Bethlehem. But we were too late, for when we asked the keeper of the inn about this Child we were told that only the night before, his parents had fled with him for fear of Herod who sought to kill the child.

And even as the innkeeper spake with us, a mother with babe in arms cried to us to save her child from Herod's soldiers. Artavan flung himself between the mother and the soldier-band. And he was struck with a sword which wounded him sorely. So Artavan could not go on. I gladly would have stayed with him, but Artavan bade me go, follow the star and find the Child.

But even though the star went before me, to show me the way, I could not overtake the Child and his parents. Yet the star led on and on until one night it stood still over a tiny house in a village beside the River Nile.

When I knocked, Mary—the young woman of my vision—opened the door and bade me enter. Within the house, Joseph—the man of my vision—worked at a carpenter's bench while a beautiful boy of two played in the shavings that had fallen at his father's feet.

And lo, a voice whispered into my ear, "This is the child whom you sought." And I knelt down and worshiped him. And I gave him the twelve ears of golden maize.

Christmas in Korea

By Lucille Oliver

JIM SAT THERE CROUCHED in the same position he had held all night, eyes alert, gun in position, his stomach recoiling from the stench of death around him. Out there in the night enemy snipers were crawling like snakes along the ground, rising at intervals to strike. Soon the dawn would come, the sun would slide up into the heavens and rest over the mountain, bright and shining, as though there were no war, no hate, no death. Tomorrow? Tomorrow, thought Jim, would be Christmas Day. Funny how long it seemed since last Christmas. Could it have been just a year ago? Or was it centuries? Jim couldn't understand, and his mind went back to the Christmases of his childhood when war had been just a small boy's fancy, and the roar of a gun had been only a noise in his mouth.

UP IN VERMONT the snows were heavy, and Christmas was always white with the crisp even snow lying over trees and on roof tops. The smell of pine burning in the big hearth made him feel good inside. He remembered more clearly than any others the Christmas he was ten. That was the year Aunt Martha had given him a shiny new bicycle, and Mother and Dad had got him the bright red sled. That was the Christmas, too, that he had understood better than ever before just what Christmas was, for somehow he had glimpsed its real purpose as he had made the rounds with Uncle Ben, going from door to door delivering Christmas baskets to the poor. He had seen their looks of gratitude and heard their words of appreciation. Uncle Ben had said that folks had forgotten the real meaning of Christmas, and how the Christ child, born in a manger, was to bring peace and good tidings to all people. Uncle Ben was an elder in the church, and Jim had thought that maybe someday he'd be like Uncle Ben and take baskets around to the poor. He recalled the huge Christmas tree that stood in the front room reaching the ceiling and laden with tinsel, popcorn, and bright ornaments. He remembered the carols that year, because he had been allowed to join the group in singing. He had especially liked the sweet music of "Silent Night," as they stood caroling while the moon cast a silvery glow on the snow.

As his mind raced back to other Christmases, he wondered what had happened to the "Peace on earth, good will to men," and why he was here in Korea, hugging the earth, fearing for his life, and wondering when the end would come. Why, he asked himself bitterly, was it his lot to spend Christmas in a fox hole?

THE CHURCH was filled that Christmas morning. The organ swelled triumphantly, "Oh, Come, Let Us Adore Him," and those in the congregation lifted up their voices in worship to Christ, the king. The minister spoke of the magnitude of Christmas, of the Prince who was born that all men might know peace and good will. In closing, he read from Micah:

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains. . . . And nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord . . . and he will teach us of his ways. . . .

And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more . . . for all people will walk every one in the name of . . . God for ever and ever.

As the service ended, and the people gathered to share the joy of the season with one another, a lonely figure departed by the side door, lest those around her see the tears in her eyes and look into the deep grief in her soul. Jim's mother had thought once she wouldn't come to church this morning but had decided that she needed the sweet communion of Saints and friends; as she had shared in the worship of the morning hour, she had felt strengthened and encouraged for the days ahead. But that last Scripture the pastor had read had brought back all the doubts, the wonderings, and the question, "When?" Why was it her boy and thousands of others were sacrificed to the lords of war and greed? She had reared her family in the church and had looked forward, as did others, to the time when Zion would be redeemed and peace would come to the earth. She hadn't thought much about the actual killing and brutality of war until Jim had gone. Her last letter from him had come two weeks before and had sounded brave enough. He had written, "Maybe the miracle will happen, and I'll be home for Christmas." She felt this morning that Jim was in terrible danger, and that perhaps even now she was losing him. She remembered a statement one of the church men had made from the pulpit, "It matters not so much how or when we die, but whether or not we are fit to die." Well, she knew Jim was a good boy. She recalled the Christmas he had been ten. He had come running in to her as she was preparing the Christmas dinner and exclaimed, "O Mom, Uncle Ben let me help him deliver baskets to the poor. That's the real Christmas spirit, isn't it, Mom?" And later, as they sat around the big fireplace discussing peace on earth and good will to men, Jim had remarked, "But, Mom, people wouldn't fight on Christmas, would they?"

HIGH ABOVE the clamor of earthly things, on the heavenly throne the Father of all men, the Creator of the universe, spoke to his Son. He pointed down to earth to a remote spot called Korea. "Look, www.LatterDayTruth.org

Starlight and Song

By John Thoman

OUR BRANCH plans to hold its children's Christmas service soon. The most trying time of all the year for parents is rapidly approaching.

For a limited time only the Christ of the cross gives way to the winsome Christ child of the manger.

At our house we have always enjoyed this wonderful time which comes to us like a veritable armistice in the battle of life. But it is by no means a time of rest. This year as usual we approach it in the customary state of tension, looking forward with mingled feelings and backward with nostalgia.

The most vivid chain of memories of our growing up together at Christmas is centered around our church home. So, piecing it all together again, here is the whole blessed thing as it always has been and (God willing) as it will be again this Christmas.

Son," he said, "see that lonely soldier over there? He's wondering why all this war and hell and death, especially on the day when you were born as the Prince of Peace. What can we tell him?" Jesus looked at his Father, then pointed his hand toward the earth, to his church, and then in tender tones, pleadingly he said, "O my people, O my people, how oft would I have gathered you unto me, as a hen gathers her chicks, and ye would not, ye would not." Then he, too, turned to his father, and his lips formed the question, "How long will my people wait?"

Back in Korea the sun shone more brilliantly than ever. High in the heavens, the drone of a plane could be heard, and on a lonely hill there was a loud explosion. A boy named Jim, who couldn't understand why men would fight on Christmas, closed his eyes in death.

TWO HOURS before the program one of the girl's hair (after the curlers come out) will refuse to allow the comb to go through properly and a quiet struggle, marked by brave tears, will end in painful triumph! Her sister will be unhappy because a scarf is mislaid, having been used by someone without authority, but it will be found eventually. Small Fry will remember that she has a last minute rehearsal for her part. It is almost five o'clock, and she should have been there at four-thirty. Then comes a hasty examination of the family bathrobes for one of the Three Kings who of "Orient are"—to wear as a costume. Yes, we can use this one—but wait, it must be pressed because it is sadly wrinkled. Quickly the ironing board is set up, "It won't take long." Mother moves about swiftly and efficiently and it doesn't.

The organ is playing as we arrive. The children have already preceded us to take their places for their appointed roles. There is a bustling and scurrying behind the curtain across the front, and we parents find ourselves seated and thankfully relaxing with the organ music.

Soon the organist moves to a higher octave and begins a determined rendition of "Oh, Come, All Ye Faithful." The children come marching down the aisle to the stage as the curtain in front is drawn to reveal the manger and the star and the shepherds—all very beautifully spotlighted this year.

The Three Kings are leading the procession up the aisle from the rear. They will eventually join the kneeling shepherds on the stage. The silent shepherds are wavering a little now and trying, without changing their position, to see what is holding up the procession. We look closer and suddenly recognize a blue scarf upon the head of a shepherd. The singing procession is coming up the aisle slowly with the Three Kings still in the lead. They, too, are singing, their voices deep and full, but their bearing adolescent.

They are at the manger now and kneel self-consciously beside the shepherds. Of the kings of last year, one is in boot camp, one in the Navy, and one already in Korea.

Across the front of the platform the juniors and primaries are being deployed as they arrive. The singing has moved a bit to the right side of the keyboard, and the song is "Silent Night."

Four or five of the older boys in uniform, home on furlough, are standing silently near the side door and thinking of other music they have heard. One or two of the kings of a Christmas past are listening from fox holes to that music.

Mothers and fathers are looking hungrily at each fresh face and counting once in a while the gaps in the groups of their own or a neighbor's family.

There is a brief pause in the music, while the pastor gravely reads the passages that give meaning to the whole wonderful pageant.

The juniors and primaries are all in front now, singing again. The sweet old music weaves its spell—"O Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Away in a Manger." At last we all stand and join in our own precious Christmas carol, "Starlight and Song."

The program over, we gather in little groups and finally start for home through the cold, crisp starlit night.

Next Sunday the crib will be gone and the pulpit back in its place. Our pastor will recall to us our Christian duty of bearing the cross for others. But still, for a little time tonight, as we walk home together with the bright stars above us and the carols lingering in our hearts, we know that the Christ child holds sway across all this heaven-blessed land.

Christmas Prayer

GRACIOUS FATHER, God in heaven,
Who in ancient times did send us
Jesus Christ, thy Son, to bring Us light, and peace, and life abundant,
Hear our prayer of invocation
For this evening's Christmas vesper.
Light we now the fire symbolic,
Symbol of the pure, the vital,
Symbol of the light of wisdom,
Light of truth and life eternal.
As the dancing flames reach upward,
May our minds be stretched with reaching
Toward the fountain of thy wisdom.
As the growing flames are nourished
By the logs, so wilt thou feed us
Till our hearts are warm and glowing
With thy love, so strong and tender.
As the fire grows hotter, brighter,
May our growing souls burn also
With the zeal to build thy kingdom.
As the brightly glowing embers
Disappear in smoke and ashes
May we be consumed completely
In the flame of sacred purpose.
Like the swift white smoke ascending,
May we find our souls expanding,
Till we mingle with all peoples,
Free as air, and share their sorrows,
Share their dreams and their rejoicing.
As our prayers ascend this evening
Like smoke rising from an altar,
Wilt thou hearken to our pleading?
In this time of sore confusion,
We are sad, ashamed, and humbled,
By our lack of comprehension.
Prince of Peace, we long have hailed thee,
Yet this Christmas time we greet thee
With a world, sick, torn, and bleeding.
Fear rides with us like a shadow,
Stinging us with sharp suspicion.
Therefore, in this time of trouble,
Teach us to reveal thy glory.
Teach us, Lord, to reinterpret
Christ to modern men and women.
May he be reborn within us,
Drawing us to be more like him,
Wavering minds and souls rekindling
Till, through us, his love reflected Warms and comforts all his children.
Offer we our prayer this evening
In the name of Jesus, Amen.

MILLIONS OF MONUMENTS

TONIGHT was the night! Everything was in order, and it was almost the time. He lit the new Star and watched in satisfaction as it blazed in the heavens, shining down on the Place. It was a beautiful Star—the finest He had ever created. But then it was fitting that His greatest Star should shine tonight—the night of His greatest gift to the earth—His Son!

He checked the Star's beam of silvery light and saw that it was off a little, so He moved it slightly to the left, and it shone brilliantly through the stable door.

Looking down He could see the consternation caused among the people of this Palestinian village, Bethlehem. Shepherds gazed upward in wonder and fright, and so great was His dislike for fear that He turned to the Chief Dispatcher and said, "Send an angel down to tell those shepherds not to be afraid—no, wait, send a host of angels. After all, this is the greatest night in the history of the earth."

Then He looked out at the Star again. "You know," He said, turning to the Board of Directors, "it's too bad that this Star can't be duplicated so it will be remembered always." Suddenly an idea came—it would be just the thing! Why hadn't He thought of it sooner?

He made a call to the Head of the Weather Department, and gave a few instructions. Immediately changes were made, and to this day—one thousand nine hundred and fifty-two years later—snow falls in the shape of a star so men can always remember that wonderful night and the Star which led the shepherds and Wise Men to the birthplace of Christ.

GLAD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY

AS I REREAD the story of Christ's birth again this Christmas season, I thought what a far cry our manner of celebrating Christmas today is from the actual humble birth of our Lord. The birth of Christ also signified the birth of a new way of life which he was to show to the world as he grew into manhood. I am wondering how far we have come in this new way of life since that memorial night.

As we look about us and see the sins of the world manifested in so-called Christian peoples, we are forced to conclude that this "new way of life" has somehow been lost through the centuries. At Christmas, Santa Claus has replaced the Christ child, and the spirit of "give because he's giving to me" reigns supreme over the spirit of love and charity.

In many instances Christmas is celebrated by big family dinners or parties and the exchange of gifts. This type of festivity may be all right as far as it goes, but in too many cases Christ, for whom Christmas should be celebrated, is left out entirely.

We would not think of having a gathering for some particular friend or relative on his birthday and then not even mention the reason for the festivity nor present him with at least a small token of our esteem and good wishes.

It seems to me that Christ's birthday should be commemorated in a similar fashion. A good start for Christmas day would be a well-planned family altar in which the real meaning of Christmas is brought out. Then there should be the offering of a gift to Christ; this could be of a monetary nature for the promulgating of his work or, if there is no money to give, the promise to serve him by serving others would be acceptable.

As the angels proclaimed glad tidings of great joy to the shepherds on that Judean hillside, so may we as Reorganized Latter Day Saints re-echo the glad tidings of our Restoration Movement, not only during the holiday season but throughout the entire year. In this way we can best show to others the joy which the gospel has brought us.

Question Time

Question:

We saw the moving picture, Viva Capata, about the Indians. They all had moustaches and beards. Do we know of any bearded Indians now?
New Mexico MRS. C. P. H.

Answer:

The picture, Viva Sapata, shows many Indians who have been mixed with other races, especially the Spanish. There are said to be at least three times as many Mexicans of mixed blood in Mexico as pureblood Indians. We have read of bearded Indians, and doubt not that there are such, but if so they are rare, for Indians as a general rule have no beards or, if any, very thin ones like those of the Chinese. It was because of this, and the difference of color, that the Spanish missionaries and other explorers have expressed surprise at the tradition so general among the Indians of the full-bearded white God, Quetzalcoatl, who appeared mysteriously and miraculously from the east, across the ocean, where he had been born of a virgin, and whose symbols were the cross, serpent, and quetzal bird.

Question:

If we are to be different from the world, should we follow the styles of the world so far as to wear those unbecoming shorts and halters in public? I have often wondered why our ministers or women's leaders never say anything on this subject.
Oklahoma MRS. M. E. C.

Answer:

Because of the wide variations in social customs in different communities and countries, it is impossible to give a categorical "yes" or "no" answer to this question. Certainly the problem belongs more to the field of "good manners" than to the area of morals.

From the viewpoint of one generation the styles of another may appear to be indecent. Neither can we impose the styles of one country upon another. For example: the use of lipstick, almost universally accepted in the United States, is the mark of a woman of the street in at least one part of Holland where we have church members. In the average American community the wearing of scanty clothing on a downtown shopping trip would be in poor taste, but might be accepted for warm summertime lounging in the privacy of the home and back yard. To regard this as a question of morals would require a universal standard which does not exist.

Most of us will probably welcome changes in clothing styles for both men and women which are in the interest of comfort and healthful living. We will do well, however, to avoid radical departure from customs of the community that would be regarded as being in poor taste and which might bring criticism upon ourselves and upon the church.

The admonition to be "in the world but not of the world" and to be a "peculiar people" undoubtedly has reference to right attitudes and good deeds rather than to peculiarity of dress.

G. E. TICKEMYER

Question:

When are the wicked raised from the dead?

Answer:

Two different groups are raised in the first resurrection when Christ comes—the children of God under the gospel, and those who never in life heard the gospel, referred to as heathen. The rest of humanity remain without resurrection during the thousand years, their spirits under condemnation and in tribulation and suffering. These also are two distinct groups and come forth in separate resurrections; one the telestial group who suffer reformatory woes because of their sins, but receiving the ministry of the gospel whereby they may come to repentance and salvation in the telestial kingdom. Their resurrection takes place at the end of the little season following the millennium. The other group of the wicked are the irredeemable "sons of perdition," who are "reserved in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day." The gospel which they have before rejected is no longer available to them, and they remain without hope. They have willfully sinned against the Holy Ghost and all that is good, and of their own will chose that which produced in them spiritual death. They are the last to come forth and that just before the judgment when they receive their final condemnation and are sent away with the Devil and his angels (Read D. and C. 45: 7-10; 85: 27-30; 76: 4-7; 38: 1).

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Please explain I Timothy 5: 22: "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure."
Ontario B. J. M.

Answer:

In the chapter previous to the one containing this quotation, the ordinance of the laying on of hands is mentioned, and in II Timothy 1: 6 we read, "Stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." This leaves no doubt that the text in question signifies not the laying on of hands as in violence, but as a sacred ordinance of the gospel. This ordinance, whether in confirmation, ordination, or for any other special blessing, was to be performed only under solemn and sacred conditions.

It is a sin before God to have part in any sacred ordinance without prayerful consecration of heart. Timothy, or any officiating minister, would be guilty of participating in the sins of others, if suddenly, or without due preparation or qualification, he should thus officiate. Purity of heart must necessarily accompany both administrator and recipient in any sacred ordinance. Otherwise, condemnation follows instead of blessing.

From Bondage to Freedom

Life from childhood to past threescore years and ten has been a growth from gloomy and despondent days to spiritual light and a greater hope. From the time of my earliest recollection I was afflicted in my speech, stuttering and stammering. My parents wanted to help me, but in their anxiety made me worse.

I became despondent, and fear entered in; I felt my inferiority and lost confidence in myself. School days were anything but happy days; many a time I could not recite my lesson, although I knew it.

In my youth I could not take part in social activities because of my condition. It was very embarrassing to others as well as to myself. At eighteen I took a six weeks' course at the Lewis School for Defective Speech in Detroit, which helped me some at the time.

At about the age of twenty years I went to work in a lumber camp. One time on my way across the lake I desired to know what time and what boat to take, but because of my stuttering I could not utter a word. I wrote my request to accomplish my task, pretending to be dumb.

Many, many times through my lifetime of affliction and despondency, I have wished that God would see fit to take me out of this world, but somehow my life has been spared. I hope I can accomplish God's work and do some good for others that my life will not be in vain. In my youth I heard the gospel story by J. J. Cornish, but did not heed the call until I was in my thirties. I joined the church on October 3, 1915.

Since the time of my adoption into the church, I cannot say I have been as faithful at all times as I should have been, but God has seen fit to grant me one of the greatest blessings I could have received. Since I have tried to serve God to the best of my ability he has removed this affliction, for which I cannot thank him and praise him enough.

When I am neglectful the affliction comes back to a certain extent, but I know God is merciful and forgiving. My prayers are that I may overcome myself, have patience, love, and charity, and endure to the end.

From an Eighty-three-year-old Member

I have belonged to this church sixty-nine years, and I have received several blessings through administration during this time. A year ago last June I had a bad pain in my knee, but when Brother Snyder invited me to his home one Sunday he called an elder who came and administered to me. When he removed his hands from my head, the pain left and I recovered quickly.

I have "L.D.S." on my signs, and when people ask me what the letters stand for I tell them about the church. As a result of this one person investigated the church further and was baptized.

I was eighty-three years old in June.

HERMAN D. SMITH

On Business for My King

This experience has stayed with me through the years because to me it carries an admonition that we must not allow small things to keep us from serving God. If we do, we lose the blessing we might have received.

The summer of 1914 will long be remembered because of the continuous intense heat that characterized it. I arose early on this particular Sunday morning in August and dressed carefully in white. Even though the temperature was crawling steadily toward the 100 mark on the thermometer, I felt quite comfortable as I prepared breakfast.

Mother came down stairs just as I finished setting the table. She looked pale and tired. "Uncle Charles (my stepfather) and I have spent most of the night trying to find a cool spot and a bit of sleep," she said. "We're not going to church this morning. I'm sorry to miss church, but under the circumstances I hope that God will forgive me for staying at home."

"Well, there's no reason why I shouldn't go and there's no one to take my place as branch organist," I answered.

We lived two miles from the hall where services were held, and while usually I enjoyed the walk, I decided that the intense heat made it wisdom to ride so I took the streetcar.

When I reached the hall only Elder C. was there. His wife was ill and his daughters had gone out of town for a vacation trip. By ones and twos and threes the few Saints attending service straggled into their seats. The hall had never looked quite so shabby and uninviting as it did that morning. Soon the pastor, Elder N., and Sister N. came in and took their places.

With Elder N. came the calm, peaceful influence of the Spirit of God. The church school hour passed swiftly, and I forgot how few Saints were present and the uncomfortable atmosphere. All present were comforted and glad that they had made a special effort to come.

During the benediction that marked the close of church school, I heard the door open softly and glancing up I was joyfully surprised to recognize dear friends, Evangelist and Sister F. G. Pitt. They had recently returned from a missionary tour of the South Sea Islands and with Sister Pitt's cousins, the Bohlanders from El Paso, Illinois, they had driven over to spend the day with us.

Evangelist and Sister Pitt sang "Earnest Workers for the Master," in the South Sea Island language and he took for the subject of his sermon, "I'm here on business for my King." His earnest message was a challenge to all of us.

Mother had changed her mind and had ventured out in spite of the heat. She said, "How glad I am, Brother Pitt, that I was at church service. To me, you resemble the Christ in your white broadcloth suit and your face shining with his Spirit. Suppose that you were He and I had been found absent from my place and neglecting my duty as his child! It has, indeed, been good to be here."

Note of Thanks

In 1951 the members of the Ancella Club of the Liberty Street Church distributed pastel paper plates as a means of raising money for the purchase of a public address system for the new chapel. The total amount contributed was $632.00.

The same project has been continued for the 1952 program. The proceeds will be turned over to the church building fund.

This opportunity is taken to express sincere thanks to the many members and friends for their most welcome contributions.

On Sunday morning a prayer service was held and special prayers were offered for District President Granville Swenson who was very ill. Bishop DeLapp gave the eleven o'clock sermon. A vocal solo was presented by Sister Betty Steward, and a trumpet solo was played by Norman Swails. The choir sang "The Twenty-third Psalm."

New Missions Opened

TULSA, OKLAHOMA.—The branch has received news of the Victor Witte family's appointment to Europe in the early part of 1953. Brother Witte has served as pastor at Tulsa and as district president for four years and will be missed by the branch.

For some time the attendance at most church functions had overflowed the building capacity and many times the group was handicapped. After months of preparation and planning, a mission was opened at Turley, a community just north of Tulsa, with Otis J. Stephens as the elder in charge. It has grown rapidly. Just recently another mission has been established in Sand Springs, a town west of Tulsa, with W. J. Sherman in charge. The over-all attendance is now much larger.

There has been a new plan begun with the distribution of the Saints in prayer meeting groups. They are now meeting in homes in four areas in the city, one in Jenks, and the two missions. On October 15, the attendance at the seven prayer meetings was over 120.

Several of the priesthood members attended the institute at Oklahoma City, September 27 and 28. They reported excellent instruction by Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Bishop Henry Livingston.

At the annual business meeting, the following officers were elected or appointed: pastor, Victor J. Witte; group pastors, E. L. Bailey, W. J. Sherman, O. I. Stephens, C. R. Auxier, W. R. Yeubanks, and A. D. Kelley; cottage meeting director, C. R. Auxier; membership recorder, C. A. Bear; secretary, Mrs. E. L. Bailey; treasurer and historian, Earl D. A Nephite Follows the Star

And behold, the gold of the corn matched the gold in his hair. So my search had ended—a search that had brought me footsore and weary more than halfway around this earth.

Joseph and Mary pressed me to tarry with them until my travel-torn feet had healed again. And I, being a carpenter, helped Joseph at his trade.

One night, an angel of the Lord bade me go to the Great Sea and there upon its shores, build a ship to carry me home to the land of Nephi, even as Nephi of old builded a ship to carry him and his people out of the old and into the new promised land.

So after many, many days of sailing across an unknown and oftentimes stormy sea, I came once more to my homeland.

And as long as my earthly life did last, I told my people of the star, and of the Christ. And I told them, too, how once the shadow of a cross arose when the Child flung out his arms in play.

He Is Coming (Continued from page 6)

—the angelic message, the little babe. At last the Savior had come! They would be liberated! All received the news gladly, though they wondered much at the shepherds' sayings.

NOW AT THIS CHRISTMASTIDE, in the year 1952, we have something to share, just as the shepherds did. A light broke into a world of darkness in the form of the Restored Gospel. Each of us who has seen this light should be as the shepherds of old, eager to share the good news with all who will listen.

We today are also watching for the promised Messiah, but this time when he comes, we know he will not come in the form of a little babe, but as the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven to judge the earth. Let us, like Martimaheus, have faith in God's promises and by our faith win souls to Christ.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

A Christmas Fantasy

By Elva T. Oakman

IT WAS A HAPPY LITTLE ANGEL who presented himself before the great carved oak desk of Saint Peter on that glorious morning. His brown curls were cut quite short, but very carefully brushed on either side of the middle part. His blue eyes sparkled. His hands were clasped tightly behind a white robe that was spotlessly clean.

Saint Peter smiled down at the little fellow as he carefully laid down his Everwriting pen and eraser. "Good morning, Lad," he greeted him, "and what can I do for you?" He seated himself on his chair, and placing an elbow on the desk leaned across toward the small boy.

"It isn't anything you could do for me, Sir, but just something I'd like to know, and I was going by so I stopped to ask." The little angel had a most engaging grin.

Saint Peter's heart warmed, but he hesitated, "Sure you shouldn't be polishing on the golden street, or plucking the strings of your harp, or rehearsing with the heavenly choir?" he asked.

"Oh, no, Sir!" gasped the little angel, "Why, I polished on the street until the Street Angel said I'd nearly worn it through in one spot, and I know all the harp music perfectly, and the celestial choir isn't quite ready to begin, and . . ."

"Never mind," grunted the Old Saint, "let's hear the problem."

"Well, it really isn't a problem at all," confided the little angel gently, "but you see, I've just been to school and I've been thinking. They don't tell us very much about the earth down there." He pointed behind him toward the big oak lintel over the doorway in which were carved the words this way to earth. "And of course, that's where I came from." He paused to swallow slowly and then hurried on, "But I don't remember too much about it 'cause I only stayed just a little over two earth years."

"No, of course you wouldn't," conceded Saint Peter gravely, "in fact . . ."

"Oh, pardon me, Sir," the little angel broke in quickly, "but I always think about my mother and my daddy, and I remember once every earth year they said it was my birthday and they gave me gifts and made me a cake, and we had such a happy time in my home." He brushed his hand over his eyes quickly, and as quickly put it behind him.

"Yes, of course," nodded the Old Saint, "homes are like that, and you've done fine at remembering. Is that what you are wondering about?"

"Oh, no," he answered quickly. He was holding firmly to the desk now while he swung one foot back and forth across the floor. "I was thinking about the time that Jesus went to earth. I guess you remember it, too." His eyes searched those of Saint Peter eagerly as he continued, "When he told us he was going to leave us for awhile and go to earth because he loved the people so much and they needed him, we all felt sad, but we sang our loveliest songs until he was out of sight, and some of the angels even went with him and sang . . ."

"Yes," nodded Saint Peter gravely, "they sang to some shepherds down there to tell them he had come to bring peace and good will to men."

"So I heard," admitted the little angel, "but your saying it makes it be more real. And then heaven seemed so empty it was hard to sing for a long time, and when we asked about him the big angels just said, 'He's busy telling the earth folks about God and showing them how to live.'"

"That's right, that's what he did," said Saint Peter leaning back in his chair with a faraway look.

"But the angels looked sad when they told us," the little angel went on, "and we'd cry ourselves to sleep just thinking about him. Then one day Angel Gabriel went all over heaven calling, 'Prepare for the return of your Lord,' and we learned a new anthem, and we polished the streets and the walls and the gates just twice as hard. It was strange though, for we didn't know if we were glad or sad, and we didn't know why. Then all heaven was dark that day. There wasn't any light anywhere." He paused apologetically, "I'd always thought light was just . . . well . . . eternal and everywhere, but that's when I knew he was the Light of Heaven."

Home Column

SAINST PETER rose up quickly from his chair and began to pace the floor. "Son, you've surely done a lot of thinking," he said brusquely.

"Yes, Sir," answered the little angel quietly, "I like to think when it doesn't hurt like this does." His hand was over his heart now, but he went on speaking. "And the light returned and it was with him, and we started to sing, then . . . then . . . we saw him. His hands and feet had nail marks through them, and his side was pierced, and we cried. Our Jesus . . . hurt like that!" The little angel was crying now himself.

Saint Peter brushed a tear away and turned quickly toward the little angel, "Son, I know it all. Now just what did you come to ask me?"

"Well, Sir," began the little angel apologetically, "I was thinking, are they sorry they hurt him . . . the folks down there?"

"Some of them are," said the Old Saint, "and some don't even know about him yet."

"They don't know about him!" echoed the little angel with a sigh. "They don't even know he went to earth because he loved them?"

"No," reiterated the Great Saint gently, "they don't even know."

"But some do?" questioned the little angel falteringly. At Saint Peter's nod he went on, "And what about those who do—do they live like he showed them? And do they tell everyone about him? And do they still remember his birthday in their homes like my mother and daddy remembered mine?"

THE OLD SAINT sat down on his big oak swivel chair with a thump and picked up his Everwriting pen and began to examine it carefully.

"Son, I'm going to tell you something fast, and then I've got to go back to my recording, for I'm getting far behind. The people down there on earth don't half appreciate what has been done for them. They call his birthday Christmas, and on that day they give each other gifts and even in his church some of them have a Santa Claus that gives out candy and gifts."

"A Santa Claus in the church!" gasped the little angel. He wasn't even moving now; he was standing his straightest and looking right at Saint Peter. "A Santa Claus! Why, who is he?"

"Now be still," said the Old Saint gruffly, "and listen. They don't even know themselves. They're too busy entertaining each other to find out." He glanced up and saw the eyes of the little angel filling with tears, but the little fellow turned his back quickly and stood looking up at the big earth sign. "But don't feel too bad, Son, because some of them do remember. In their homes they have their own gift giving before Christmas. On Jesus' birthday they give him gifts and have a lovely cake, and his picture adorns their walls. Yes, and truly they do worship." His voice quickened. "And there are churches where he alone is especially honored on that day. You see, Son, wherever the homes and the church unite to give him praise there's a bit of heaven there."

The small angel turned slowly around, his head was lifted now, his cheeks very red. A smile was beginning to light his face, but his eyes were still questioning. Noticing this Saint Peter asked gently, "Is there one more question that you want to ask?"

The little angel nodded the while he rubbed his cheeks hard to be sure that no telltale tear should remain. "Sir, heaven is so lovely it seems like they'd all want heaven there."

Saint Peter nodded and smiled, "They do, my son! they do! but they just don't sense how much they want it; for after all . . . a lot of them even in his church just don't know Jesus too well." And now his face lit up with an inner light that transformed it as he promised, "The day will yet come when the splendor of heaven will cover the earth."

Unconsciously the small angel had moved around the table so close to the Great Saint he could have touched him as he asked pleadingly, "Sir! could I go to earth again and visit the homes and help to let them all know? Please, Sir, can't I go?"

The Old Saint slipped his arm about the little angel and drew him close. "Maybe someday, Son. Yes, maybe someday you'll go. But now . . . how about that celestial choir that's just about to begin?"

Traditions in the Making

By Emma Phillips

YOUNG HELENA POOL paused with her hands on the edge of the dishpan and automatically moved one finger back and forth in the white foamy soapsuds. Her mind was on the television in the living room. It showed the picture of a polished nut bowl fashioned into an intricate design from many pieces of expensive woods. A voice that was pitched at an unnatural whisper-and-a-half tone was saying, "Ladies, make this exquisite nut bowl the Christmas tradition in your household."

Helena turned her eyes back to the dishwashing, but she was thinking about the aluminum star that her husband Steve had made for the top of the Christmas tree. That was seven years ago when their oldest son, Tad, was only a few weeks old. Every Christmas Helena lamented the loss of that star. Seeing the traditional nut bowl on the television made her miss the star more than ever before.

"We haven't any Christmas traditions in this household," she told herself. "Our two sons will grow up without any traditional memories of Christmas. Someday they will be men with children, and they will want to tell those children about the special things that Grandmother Pool did every Christmas. There will be nothing for my sons to tell." She put a dried plate into the cupboard and laid down her dish towel. If traditions for Christmas were to be established in the lives of her boys, she had better start immediately.

Instead of buying the expensive nut bowl in the television advertisement, they could use the copper dish that she had hammered so hard to create at the hobby hour of the women's department. She got it out of its place of concealment in the far corner of the closet. She searched the December issue of her magazines to find a cooky recipe that could become a tradition of hers. The one she decided on was called Golden Star Dream. It called for a large quantity of finely ground nutmeats, and a rich golden frosting loaded with gold-colored coconut. There was a lot of work to them, but since she was establishing a tradition, Helena believed herself duty bound to give it her time.

She pulled a box full of cloth remnants and scraps from the closet and took out a large piece of white percale that had been left over from the summer shirts she had made the boys. She tore this into four table napkins. She folded them and laid them on her workbasket. She planned to hem them and embroider Christmas motifs in the corners later when she was resting. The napkins would be used only at Christmas time.

As she worked, she mentally created two more traditions for her household. First, only blue and silver trimmings would be used in the house and on the tree. Second, she and Steve would trim the tree after Tad and six-year-old Bill had gone to bed. The boys would see the tree in the morning when they came down the stairs. Their eyes would light up with surprise as did the eyes of children pictured on the covers of the December magazines.

HELENA HUMMED as she went about her housework. She found it a thrilling experience to create traditions for Christmas. She reasoned that Steve and the boys would be just as thrilled as she was. She wished she had a special star for the top of the tree—not a glittering, tinsel affair such as the stores sell. She wanted something different, something unusual—something like the aluminum star that had been lost.

Tad and Bill came home from school hungry as ever. They shook the soft snow from their helmets and coats as they came up the walk to the porch. They wiggled out of their boots and carried them to the newspaper on the floor in the hallway.

"Any of those peanut butter cookies left?" asked Bill as his chubby hand dug into the depth of the brown bear cooky jar. Tad plopped into a kitchen chair and gave his mother a detailed account of the afternoon's happenings at school. His glowing account ended abruptly with, "And when do we get our Christmas tree, eh?"

"Your father will bring it home tomorrow," Helena answered.

THAT EVENING after the boys were in bed, Helena took the table napkins that were to become Christmas traditions from her sewing basket. She smiled at Steve. He was sitting on one corner of the davenport with a tipped-over pile of priesthood publications beside him. His feet—minus shoes—were propped on a chair. Steve always took off his shoes with the explanation, "I've got to cool my brains before I can think." Whenever he sat down to study, the boys waited for him to make that remark. It had become a tradition; it was something they would remember to tell their children.

Helena thought about traditions. "Steve," she said, "I'd like to talk to you about something."

Steve laid down his book with a smug grin. "I won't be able to concentrate on this serious reading until we get it off your mind. What did the neighbors do this time?"

"It's about traditions for Christmas. There was a piece on the television today that said every family should have special traditions for Christmas."

Steve grinned. "We had a tradition in the Pool family."

"Oh, Steve, what was it? Tell me."

"It was about my Aunt Beatrice. She was always the first one to sit down at the table. She ate like a starved dinosaur until it came time to do the dishes. Then she got a dizzy headache and had to go to bed. As soon as the dishes were done, her dizzy headache ended. That was our tradition. Everyone—including Aunt Beatrice—knew when her headache would start and when it would stop."

"I'm very serious about this. I have been thinking all afternoon about traditions we could establish for the boys."

STEVE WIGGLED his toes. "What have you been thinking?"

Helena spread a napkin out on her lap. "I'm going to make us each a napkin to be used only at Christmas time."

"Good idea," agreed her husband.

"I thought we might use that copper dish I made at the women's department for a Christmas nut bowl. We can pack it away with the Christmas trimmings every year."

Steve nodded his approval. "I like that too." He paused, then added, "I don't mean any offense at your art work, but I think that sea horse design on the bottom of that dish would look best covered up with nuts."

"Be serious, you nincompoop."

"Any more traditions?"

"I found a special cooky recipe. It is expensive, and it takes a long time to make. It can be our traditional Christmas cooky."

"Good idea, dear."

Helena became enthusiastic with her own ideas. "And I thought we would use only blue and silver on the Christmas tree, and we would trim it after the boys went to bed. Then their eyes would become bright and shiny with surprise when they saw the pretty . . ." Helena's voice came to a slow stop. Steve was shaking his head back and forth in a negative manner.

"That would never do. The boys' eyes would become bright and shiny, but it would be anger, not surprise."

"Why?"

"Trimming the tree belongs to the kids. It's the trimming, not the completed job, that is fun. The boys ought to have the right to trim the tree—and even retrim it if they want to. This is the case where it is the method, and not the result that counts."

Helena picked up a tradition napkin and began to embroider. Steve wiggled his toes.

Helena thought deeply through the following moments of silence. Then she heard Steve's voice, "Who wins?"

"You do, dear. You're right. The tree belongs to the boys. I'll settle for the copper nut bowl, the napkins, and the expensive cookies."

THE NEXT EVENING Helena and Steve did the supper dishes while the boys trimmed the tree. The parents spent much of their time peeking at the children. The boys were oblivious to everything but the tree. From red paper that was in the box of Christmas trimmings, Tad made several Indian canoes. He tucked these among the branches so that they appeared to be sailing on a sea of evergreen.

"I do wish we hadn't lost that beautiful star for the top of the tree. The boys would have enjoyed it, and besides it would make such a nice tradition."

"Haven't you any idea what happened to it?"

"No idea at all. I have looked all over the house and I couldn't find it."

"Buy an angel. I saw some tinsel ones at the store."

Helena sighed. "I suppose I'll have to, but I don't want to. Those angels are just like the ones everyone else has. Our star was different."

Steve peeked in the next room at his sons. "Yipe," he said softly to his wife. "You don't need any special star to make the tree different. Any Christmas tree that can sport red Indian canoes is different enough."

Bill came into the kitchen carrying a dented old baking pan. "Mother, did you get any nuts to put in here?"

Helena put her copper dish on the corner of the table and put several generous handfuls of peanuts-in-the-shell in it. "This Christmas we are going to use this pretty new bowl instead of that old pan."

Bill hugged the pan to him, then deposited it on the table beside the copper dish. "Tad says we always use this pan for our peanuts 'cause it doesn't matter much if we hurt it: Tad says he gave his zebra a ride on top of the peanuts in the pan and it was lots of fun. I want to have fun at Christmas and give somethin' a ride too."

Helena dropped the peanuts into the pan, and Bill carried it into the next room. Another beautiful tradition was ruined in the making: Now only the cookies and the napkins were left.

THE BOYS stayed up later that evening. They were too full of excitement to sleep. They also decided that a certain piece of tinsel

WEDDINGS

Cooper-Landrum

Barbara Jean Landrum, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Landrum of Pittsburg, Kansas, and Kenneth Dale Cooper, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cooper of East St. Louis, Illinois, were married November 23 at the Reorganized Church in Pittsburg, Elder T. about three yards long would look better on a different part of the tree. In order to move it properly they had to strip the tree of most of its trimmings. It was a long and serious job for the boys.

When they were finished Helena announced, "I made some very special Christmas cookies today. Would you each like one before going to bed?" Of course they would.

Helena went to the kitchen and made coffee for herself and Steve. She poured two glasses of milk for the boys, then set out four large star cookies—golden coconut and golden frosting.

Tad finished his cooky first. "It was good," he said, "but it made me thirsty."

Bill said, "I like peanut butter cookies. They don't stick you up. Can I have another cooky? Any kind will do."

Steve observed, "They are good, Honey, but don't put them in my lunch. They're mighty sweet. I'd spend all afternoon running to the water fountain."

LATER THAT EVENING when the boys were in bed and the house was quiet, Helena sat sewing on her Christmas napkins. She had lost her enthusiasm for traditions. It seemed to her that traditions grew by themselves. There was no means of guiding them into certain channels. She looked at the tree with its red canoes sailing down the boughs. The tree was not beautiful, but the sight of her two sons trimming that tree was more precious to her than any beautiful arrangement of trimmings. She smiled and sighed at the same time. She still had her napkins.

The phone rang and Steve reached out his hand quickly to get it before the ringing would waken the boys. Helena heard him say, "Well, hi, Ed. Long time no hear from you. What's up?" There was a pause, then, "It sure is ours. I made it for Helena when Tad was a baby.

She's been looking high and low for it. Where'd you get it?" There was another pause, then, "Sure, I'll be glad to pick it up tomorrow."

He hung up the receiver and turned to Helena. "You have a tradition with an interesting story attached to it. Three years ago you took that star to church to decorate the top of the tree in the junior department. Ed Burdee was a teacher there then and he accidentally took it home with him. It got packed in with his family's Christmas trimmings. Then both Ed and his wife went into the service. Now they're home for Christmas. When they unpacked their box of trimmings, there was your star."

Helena closed her eyes to conceal her joy. "That is going to make a marvelous story for the boys to tell their children—about the star on the top of the tree."

Steve stood up and stretched his youthful body. "Grandpa is tired. How about going to bed, Grandma?"

artistry in the creation of music. Each time, however, his friend refused to sell. Then on one occasion Mr. Kreisler asked if he might play the instrument. As he lifted it to his chin, his soul thrilled, and as the bow touched the strings, he played as a man condemned never to play again. He summoned all of the talent within him and played, combining the gifts of craftsman, artist, and composer. As the last exquisite note died, the friend stood with moist eyes saying, "Take the instrument, but I cannot charge you for it. It would be a sin to keep such music bottled in an air-tight case. Go, play that the world might hear." As this voice was given to the world, so we say to all who know of the voice of the Restoration, "Go, speak that the world might hear."

 NEW SUPERSTITIONS FOR OLD

We are very modern and mature, and we are no longer superstitious, we think. At least we do not believe in the old ones, like having to plant potatoes on Good Friday, or throwing salt over your left shoulder, or having bad luck for seven years if you break a mirror, and that sort of thing.

No, in that sense we are not superstitious. We just have a lot of funny ideas like this: that if you read a thing in a book, it is true; or that you can believe it if you hear it from a total stranger on a street corner; that politicians will keep their promises; that psychology can explain all the phenomena of the human mind; that science will solve all human problems. We are just as naive and credulous as any generation that ever lived. We have discarded the ancient superstitions, but we have replaced them with a nice collection of new modern ones.

 PERCENTAGES

Look over the congregation. One or two of them will really attain to the qualities of sainthood. The majority will be better—really fine people, but not perfect. And then there is the inevitable handful who will fail miserably on all counts.

In a class of a hundred students of biology, or any science, maybe two or three will attain distinction. The majority will learn something, but will never make a real contribution in the field. And then there is the little crowd on the back row who might just as well have stayed home for all the good it will do them.

Take a big class of art students. If the instructor gets three fine artists out of it, will he not be very happy? The rest of them have fun, and waste their paints and canvases upon hopeless things.

If we would excel, we must work and strive very hard. But in the beginning, we need the genius for it that only God can give.

 DISCIPLES OF SELENE

In the ages of mythology it was thought that a goddess was associated with the moon—sometimes called Selene, sometimes Luna. People thought that certain forms of insanity underwent changes according to the phases of the moon. Well, a full moon in the summer time certainly has its effects on lovers, so there may be something in the idea.

Another superstition is that if you sleep with the moon shining full on your face, and wake up, you will be slightly daft forever afterward. Well, it's a thought. Who can fail to be reminded of lovely music and great poetry by the moonlight? Who is so dull that he can forget the magic and the mystery of the night, a feeling of romance that makes the moon always the special property of lovers? Who can fail to be stirred by moonlit landscapes etched in silver, and by white clouds, trimmed with gold, floating through seas of blue?

And afterward, one thinks more soberly of that great Mind who conceived all this wonder and beauty and gave it form. When we consider the marvels of creation, then think how little we are, it is harder to take ourselves very seriously, or think that we could possibly be sane very long on any subject.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT SMITH HOME

President Israel A. Smith has returned to Independence from a trip to the West Virginia District conference, Washington, D.C., and New York. He will be in the Center Place until the middle of January.

SPEAKS AT CENTRAL

President F. Henry Edwards was the speaker at the Sunday morning service at Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri, December 14.

PRESIDENT W. W. SMITH HOME

President W. W. Smith has been released from the Independence Sanitarium and is expected back to work soon. Brother Smith had been in the hospital for a submucous resection.

BISHOP RETURNS FROM EAST

Bishop G. L. DeLapp is back at the office after returning from a trip to the East where with President I. A. Smith and Apostle D. T. Williams he attended to church business matters.

APOSTLE HANSON HOME FROM WEST

Apostle Paul M. Hanson has returned home from an extended visit among branches and missions in Utah, Idaho, western Colorado, and Nevada. In all branches he reports he found encouraging signs of growth.

APOSTLE WILLIAMS TRAVELS

Apostle D. T. Williams has returned to the office after an extensive trip in the East. He attended a conference and institute at Jackson, Ohio, in the company of Apostle Reed M. Holmes, October 25 and 26. On October 28, 29, and 30, he was at the Kirtland appointee institute. In the month of November he visited the following places: Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania; Washington, D. C.; Jonesport, Maine; Barber-ton, and Toledo, Ohio. He reported on the celebration of the organization of the Wash-ington, D. C., Branch which was held November 7-9. Secretary of Agriculture Brannan, who is a mem-ber of the church, was the guest speaker at the banquet during the week end. Brother Williams was at the West Virginia District con-ference, December 6 and 7, and then traveled with President Smith and Bishop DeLapp to New York City, following a trip to Washington, D. C., with them.

REPORT FROM ENGLAND

Elder Donald Lents reports to Apostle Arthur A. Oakman that the Seventies in the British Isles Mission have recently been successful in baptizing a number of fine people. Elder Tom Worth has gained the decision of a family in Birmingham, and Elder Eric Rowe has baptized four people in Leeds, England. The pastor at Birmingham, Elder Cyrus Allen, and the pastor at Leeds, Elder John Taylor, have been sup-porting the missionary endeavor, Brother Lents reports. This brings the baptisms in the British Isles, at the end of November, to a total of sixty-five. This compares favorably with the total of last year, which it is hoped this year the brethren will exceed. Elder John Coggan has been active in missionary work in Nuneaton, where mainly through his efforts a family was baptized recently. Apostle Oakman sails for Europe again on January 23.

Raymond James Ashenhurst

AT THE AGE OF NINE I was baptized, and I have always felt proud to belong to the Restored Church." Brother Ashenhurst thus describes his relationship to the church he now serves as a Seventy in the Maine District. Before accepting church appointment in April, 1947, and becoming a Seventy in April, 1950, he had served the church in the priesthood for several years. He was ordained a teacher in November, 1935, and an elder in June, 1946. Before being assigned to Maine, he served at Kirtland Temple and in northwestern Ohio.

Born May 1, 1913, in Denlo, Missouri, he was baptized in 1921 at Ava, Missouri. "I was privileged to be one of a family of five children—four still living and all members of the church," he says. "The knowledge of this movement came to my two brothers, sister, and me as a heritage from our parents." Brother Ashenhurst's parents moved from a farm in southern Missouri into Iowa, he recalls, where his father "endeavored seriously to save his sister, Mrs. C. T. Kirkwood, from further 'contamina-tion' with the Reorganized Church after she had joined it with her hus-band." But the plan backfired, and after "two years of brotherly concern," his father and mother were baptized. "I often marvel," he says, "that we came in contact with the Restoration at all."

Brother Ashenhurst was graduated from Roosevelt High School in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1931, where he was selected a member of a scholas-tic national honor society. He began vocational work as a bookkeeper in a wholesale house. Next he became a bookkeeper and teller at a national bank in Des Moines where he worked until 1947, except for the two years he served in the Navy as a radio technician. He enjoys radio work, elec-trical wiring, and reading as hobbies. His special interests are preaching a missionary series and use of visual aids in home religious discussions.

In 1936 he married Eva Phipps; they have two children: Patricia Bell, 13, and Harry James, 4.

"I walk through the valley of the shadow of death."

—Psalm 23: 4

SHE WAS A LITTLE THING, and she seemed very young. But her heart was full of grief, and there were tears in her eyes. She showed us her ring—an engagement ring given to her only a few evenings ago by a young man who left last night for Korea. Their last few days together are precious memories now. Neither one knows whether he will come back from that strange land, nor what his condition will be if he comes. She and other girls were visiting, and we did what little could be done to make the heartache and the loneliness a bit easier. There isn't much one can say, and very little to be done. It seems silly to tell a girl to be brave, when you both know that you simply are not facing the problem she is and are not likely to face it.

IT CAN DO NO GOOD NOW to try to fix the blame; but whoever made the war in Korea arranged a "rendezvous with death" for the young men who have no choice but to go there and die. Call it a "police action," or by whatever euphemism political expediencies may direct you to prefer, but death is just as bad and just as permanent no matter what you may call the fighting that caused it. And for those who remain behind at home to love, to yearn, and to suffer loss, the final result is the same.

The shadow of death is the dark cloud that hovers over the young wherever they are, whatever they are doing. It may help us, in remembering this, to understand why they feel, speak, and act the way they do—a way that is not always comprehensible to those who do not have to walk in that shadow.

ONE CANNOT WITHHOLD a deep love and sympathy for the young in these days. They have so much to fear. They have so little for hope.

We give them vitamins, clothes, shelter, education, entertainment, ice cream, and candy. We give them so many things of secondary value. We give them everything—everything, that is, except the few things they want and need most. We bring them right up to the point where they want to take care of themselves—where they want homes, jobs, careers, love, and companionship. Then we tear them apart, send the boys to war, leave the girls at home, and wonder why they are upset and emotional, why they are moody and difficult. It is not easy to be young in these times.

Korea—the valley of the shadow of death—is never absent from the thoughts of the young. They have no relief from it. And let us remember that the girls have their Korea, too.

THE GOSPEL of Mark has a significant phrase in the story of the young man who came to Jesus, asking how to attain eternal life. "Jesus beholding him loved him." How beautiful that is!

We look at the young people. If we look carefully, we see much that is wonderful and admirable. We behold them, and we love them. Thanks be to God who put the love of all young things in our hearts. It is one of his finer gifts to us to keep us from becoming old, selfish, and miserable. It is good to look at the young people and love them. Loving them is the first necessary step before we can give them any kind of help in getting ready for life. If we love them we can do something for them. If we do not love them, we can do nothing whatever that will be any good. Other things are important, but love is the key. We must love them. That is what they need most. Especially if they have sealed orders in their future saying: "Destination, Korea."

DESTINATION, KOREA. We have shipped thousands of planes there, many to be shot down, each carrying its human cargo to destruction. We have shipped vast quantities of materials and supplies. An endless stream of things has been going over there.

Most valued of our shipments: human cargo—fine young men.

When you read the casualty statistics, try to realize what each dead young man represents. He isn't just a numeral, or a commodity like a bag of potatoes. His death brings grief to a father and mother, perhaps to brothers and sisters, and probably to a wife or sweetheart. Yes, the girls who love these servicemen and miss them have a right to be considered, too. The loss of every man represents tragedy not only for himself, but for at least five other people.

If you have been complaining about the young people lately—if you don't understand them, if you think they aren't as good as you think you were (and probably were not) when you were young, remember that they have many problems that you don't have.

They walk in "the valley of the shadow of death." Neither they nor we can help it. But we can love them while they are here and while they are young. Love works miracles in human life as nothing else can. One could say that it is a master key to almost any door, to nearly everything. At least you know this: without it nothing at all can be accomplished.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

This week Bishop Earl T. Higdon brought into the office what appears to be the original of the revelation of 1882. It was handed to him by Miss Anna Bassett, Matron of Liberty Home, who found it on a shelf which she had cleaned two days before. Apparently it had fallen from a desk in an upper room, slipped between two loose boards, and after years of hiding, dropped through to the place where it was found. The revelation is on a single sheet of paper in fairly good condition. It has been lodged with the historian.

From Elder Thomas R. Beil, California, December 10, 1952:

Occasions such as we enjoyed last Sunday (December 7) here at East Bay Branch happen so seldom that I must write to share our joy with you. Twelve people were baptized in a service which started at 9:45 a.m. Six of the twelve were adults. Seven were of one family—a mother, her daughter, the daughter's husband and two children, her son, and the son's wife. The husband, Brother Belville, was already a member. There are yet smaller children who will soon reach baptismal age and join the rest of this fine family in the work of the church. These people live in Concord, a little city east of Berkeley in the Walnut Creek area where surveys are being made to determine the readiness for mission organization.

One of the adults baptized was the husband of a sister of the East Bay Branch. He has been attending here for some fifteen years. The other children were normal increase, two of them eight years old and the other two in early adolescence.

The family I have mentioned (the Belvilles and the Hammonds) came to East Bay to church school at the suggestion of Brother Belville. They mentioned to a worker in the kindergarten (Sister Dora Welboan) that they would be interested in learning more of the church. She placed them in contact with our missionary supervisor, Brother Edward Lewis, who began cottage meetings in their home immediately, with the result of this happy occasion.

Saints of the East Bay have been inspired by these baptisms and made to realize more and more that there are literally thousands waiting to hear the message of the Restoration. Our prayer is that many more such occasions may occur—not only here but in all parts of the church.

From Elder Louis Zonker, Hannover, Germany, December 9, 1952:

We have written all the soldiers that we know of here in Germany inviting them for Christmas. Thus far we have knowledge of three coming for sure. We hope to be able to arrange some special worship service for these fellows and keep them tied in with the church. We have very high quality servicemen stationed over here; they are representing their church, their home, and their country very well.

Mail for Leonard Lea

Mail intended for Herald publication continues to come in addressed to Brother Lea, though in these columns we have mentioned that Brother Lea has been writing on a part-time basis while attending university. He is not able to handle Herald correspondence at the present time. Personal correspondence may be addressed to him at 1213 East Walnut Street, Columbia, Missouri.

Church Publicity in Moline, Illinois

Writing for the feature page of the Moline Daily Dispatch of November 21 and November 28, 1952, Fred Klann, the feature editor, presented nearly seven columns of the story of the church and some of its officials, local and general.

The first issue carries a picture of Joseph Smith III, while the second issue contains pictures of the Moline pastor, R. W. Martens, and district president, W. J. Breshears. Both articles are sincere efforts to present the history of the Reorganization and show a painstaking effort to consult source materials and interview church representatives to avoid being misled by some of the sensational statements which have found their way into print.

President Smith has already written a word of appreciation to the Dispatch and to editor Klann for these articles.

Social Service Center Ships Clothing to Korea

Recently we have received a request from Major M. F. Caldwell, a church member in Korea, setting forth the needs of the people of that country. The Social Service Center responded to his request and a substantial amount of children's clothing was sent to him for distribution. It will undoubtedly be interesting to many of our people to know that the Social Service Center has already been sending a considerable amount of clothing for this purpose, and as goods have accumulated they have been sent through the Church World Service, which handles transportation costs.

In addition to that which has been previously sent direct by the Social Service Center through Church World Service, the Center has also sent goods to Sgt. Bruce G. Vanderford at the request of the Oak Grove, Missouri, Branch. Where these goods are sent to an individual for distribution it is necessary to pay the costs of shipment to San Francisco. These shipments are handled through Bishop Norman E. Hield, who is Manager of the Center.

Undoubtedly every one of our church men in Korea is deeply concerned with the extreme need of the people of this country. We are sure that our church members, as well as our men in the Armed Forces, will be glad to note that through the Social Service Center the church is functioning to help other organizations meet this great need.

Brother Hield will continue to send goods as they accumulate, and these will go forward through the Church World Service, which provides the transportation costs, except when shipped to an individual. The Center will also be glad to continue to meet specific needs as they arise.

Our Call to Leadership

By Gerald Gabriel

JACK, a promising young salesman, had just returned from his first trip and was being interviewed by Mr. Jones, his supervisor. For two hours they discussed the details of each venture. At the close of the interview Jack went home discouraged and ready to quit his job—the job that he had looked forward to since childhood, the one he had so eagerly prepared for. Had he failed, or had Mr. Jones failed?

Mr. Jones' technique to develop had been applied to an individual with great promise. Every sale's contact Jack had made was criticized, his total sales discouraged, his "feathers beaten down." Mr. Jones had hoped to make Jack want to go out in the field fighting to "show him"—a technique he had learned from his athletic coach in college.

Frequently our good intentions for helping others are typical of this. Our call to leadership is developing others. We need to cultivate some important techniques in handling of potentials. Our own personal contacts are limited, but through others the gospel of Christ which we represent can go out in power in an ever-widening field. Mr. Jones had used tactics that work on the football field but are seldom effective elsewhere—especially where human relations are involved, and even more so when the gospel of love is at stake. Let us look further into this example.

Jack returned in high spirits—he had made some sales, in fact, more than the average new salesman. He anticipated some complimentary encouragement. Instead, the opposite resulted; he was not prepared for this. He went away with his "feathers drooping." The thing uppermost in his mind was to turn to another company where the supervisors were more understanding. Our call to leadership does not require us to send our helpers away with the "fighting spirit of 'I'll show him.'" Such procedure may work where muscular response is desired, but volunteer service in the work of the kingdom, for the most part, does not call for muscular exhibition.

What Is This Technique

A co-worker in the kingdom has every right to expect encouragement when contacting a department head, pastor, or district, stake, or General Church officer for a period of council. He should return to his work of assisting in kingdom-building with determination to give better service because of the appeal to the best within him. In these competitive times one is most likely to find enough discouragement without his having his wings clipped.

One technique used in the 4-H movement is called the sandwich method—a genuine deserving compliment, the necessary criticism kindly and tactfully given, followed by a genuine deserving compliment for hopes in the future. This method has been molding the rural youth for a period of years—and it has been successful. Another method that has been used successfully by leaders is the genuine encouragement for the good they do, and silence on anything negative. Most of us grow on genuine approval and tend to cultivate that phase of endeavor; the undesirable becomes crowded out with giving much time to that which brings approval. Leading executives have discarded the old, stupid idea that best results are secured by constant criticizing and inspiring fear. On the other hand the best stimulant for renewed effort is a sense of achievement.

It is said that John D. Rockefeller rebuilt his partner, Edward Bedford, when the latter scored a failure. Bedford had just returned from South America, and John D. heard of his failure. Rockefeller slapped him on the back and complimented him on such a fine job. Bedford, thinking he misunderstood, explained the 60 per cent loss. John D. reminded him that some of his own losses exceeded that, and they were due to his own personal handling. Bedford stayed with the company and continued in many years of fine service.

Praise Must Be Genuine

A good merchant tries to give quality and quantity for the price he asks for his product. Lack of genuineness in either will drive customers away. In community or church service the only pay the laborer receives is a sense of achievement. This often causes him to do more than if he were paid a salary to do the work. The devoted leaders of the church are most effectively rewarded by genuine praise in those areas of their own uncertainties or doubts and where they would most like to excel. Herein lies a most effective tool. I dare say that most members want to serve the church, but have only half the confidence to perform a task efficiently. You as a leader can supply a portion of the other half and pray God will supply the remainder. However, people may be insulted by flattery or compliments on those things they know they can do well.

Flattery should never enter the picture; on the other hand all men want credit for the good they accomplish, but that credit should be fair value for what is produced.

Genuine praise is often repulsive to those who dislike the one giving it, and in some instances will cause them to cease from their good works. In such cases genuine praise can be given indirectly. It may be given publicly without mentioning names, or given to persons who are most apt to pass it on to the deserving one without inference for them to do so. Prejudiced members have often been turned into good supporters.

I know of a pastor who went out of his way to find something for which to genuinely compliment a family of troublemakers. For two years he tried to win them without success. Finally one day he noted they grew flowers in which they took great pride. When asked if they would furnish the flowers for a coming series of special speakers, they felt highly complimented. Public attention then was called to the arrangements by his assistants in charge of each of the meetings. It brought results.

There are times when we need to let others do something for us. A troublemaker in one of my cottage meetings was turned into a friend when my wife asked her to make a centerpiece for our table when we were honored by having a doctor and his family for Sunday dinner. Her pride was in table centerpieces, and she felt complimented by the request for that special occasion. She spent more than half a day on it, would take no pay, and received her greatest joy in learning of our great pleasure. Before that she had delighted in our displeasure.

Our call to leadership is in building others for the great task of kingdom-building. We must not turn them away downhearted.

Making Friends and Keeping Them

By Pearl Gardner

ALMOST WEEKLY newspaper clippings come to the office of the First Presidency or the Historian's office that grossly misrepresent the church and its founders. In every instance when these are referred to Brother Blackmore, he considers his reply carefully and answers these stories by the newsmen or editors in a way that, if possible, will make friends for the church and perhaps keep them. An example of one such correspondence is given here.

A member of the church in an eastern city sent us a clipping from the Pittsburgh Daily Press. The story was by a well-known staff writer and titled, "The Book of Mormon." He headed his article with this question: "Was the famous Book of Mormon written under another title by Reverend Solomon Spaulding who died here in 1816?"

Here followed the story of Manuscript Found, linked up with the Book of Mormon—a story with which all Reorganized Latter Day Saints are familiar and which has been discarded by many investigators of note as false—without any factual evidence. Brother Blackmore replied:

Dear Mr. White

My attention has been called to your article in the Pittsburgh Daily Press of July 24, 1952, under the caption of "Book of Mormon." To all well-informed people on this matter the Spaulding manuscript theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon has long been exploded. The Spaulding manuscript is now in the library of Oberlin College of Oberlin, Ohio. It was presented to the college by Mr. L. L. Rice of Honolulu, in June, 1885. He had acquired it when he purchased, in 1839-40, from E. D. Howe the Painesville Telegraph of Painesville, Ohio. Scholars who have compared it with the Book of Mormon agree that there is no resemblance. You only indicate your ignorance of these facts by your article, which is unfortunate for you and for those who accept the Book of Mormon.

Your reference to Sidney Rigdon is also very unfortunate. That story has been proved false on definite evidence which may be documented from original disinterested sources. The facts are that Sidney Rigdon never met Joseph Smith until after the Book of Mormon was published. He was a minister of another denomination, which facts can be documented.

May I suggest that the Spaulding story is both outdated and proved to be without factual basis. Also, the story of Rigdon's participation in the origin of the Book of Mormon is without factual evidence. We shall be very pleased to forward to you citations to original source material to substantiate these statements if you wish us to do so. Your article does an injustice to thousands of good citizens of America who accept the Book of Mormon.

JOHN BLACKMORE
Church Historian

The reply:

Dear Mr. Blackmore:

I am sorry that my column on Reverend Spaulding has offended. I have been in touch with Donald Ross (a member of the church in this place) and your pastor John Tenos here, and I am sure they know I had no such thought in mind. I was simply retelling in connection with a story of the town of Amity, Pennsylvania, an age-old legend, and if you have seen the column you will know that I did say there was reason to believe no such Spaulding manuscript ever existed. Of course you will have to agree that there are still persons who hold that the manuscript at Oberlin is not the one that created the talk. On the other hand, I don't believe there is anything to show that he ever wrote more than one manuscript, which would of course, if true, have to be the one at Oberlin.

I would certainly like to do something to correct any erroneous impression resulting from my column, but most of all I would like to do something that would take away the hurt that it apparently caused you and others. Just what that might be I don't know at the moment

... but you might be of great help to me, because you could refer me to original source material. Of course in doing this it would necessarily mean that the original legend would have to be revived again, but I believe this could be satisfactorily done. . . .

All my information came from local histories, which do not contain most of the facts in your possession. I would be glad to hear from you and to have any material which you think might be of value. And please believe me, I have no inclination to offend any religion. I am a firm believer in a man's right to worship as his conscience dictates and in the church of his choice. May I hear from you?

With very best wishes,
W. A. WHITE

A reply from the Historian's office:

Dear Mr. White:

Your letter has been called to our attention. Since Mr. Blackmore is not in the office at present, we shall be pleased to answer. He has appreciated your friendly attitude, and for him, we shall give you any information you may wish that will be authentic, not legendary.

A letter from Donald R. Ross informs us that he has placed with you a copy of the Book of Mormon, Manuscript Found, and two of our tracts. Surely a story can be told from the factual history and from our affirmations of the Book of Mormon without making a definite and pointed attack on the character of Solomon Spaulding.

Some evidence refuting the theory that the Book of Mormon and the Romance were one follows.

Briefly stated, the Spaulding theory is to the effect that Solomon Spaulding, who died in 1816, wrote a story about 1811 which he submitted to a publisher in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, some time prior to the close of 1814, and that Sidney Rigdon either stole or copied this manuscript, or that Joseph Smith stole or copied it after it passed from the hands of the publisher, according to the fancy of the one defending the theory, imagination not being hampered by the facts of rules of evidence in this matter.

For many years the Spaulding manuscript was lost sight of; but in 1885, Mr. L. L. Rice, who over forty years previously had purchased the Painesville Telegraph from E. D.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Howe, and had transferred the printing department with type, press, and manuscripts to Honolulu, discovered this manuscript while going over old documents in connection with his friend, President Fairchild of Oberlin College.

They read the manuscript carefully and reached the very just conclusion that it could never have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. The manuscript was delivered into the care of President Fairchild and placed in the library of Oberlin College. Mr. Fairchild prepared, under his own supervision, an exact copy of this manuscript, which was published.

One has but to read this manuscript to be convinced that it never served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. Nor will it do to think that any revised copy of that manuscript by the same author might have served for such a basis. The personality of an author appears in every book he writes. Those who read this Manuscript Found will soon conclude that no book ever written by Solomon Spaulding could possibly have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon.

The preceding is quoted from a pamphlet written by Elbert A. Smith and titled "The Spaulding Romance Theory Reviewed."

President Fairchild says:

The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the traditional manuscript of Solomon Spaulding will probably have to be relinquished. . . . Some other explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon will have to be found, if any explanation is required.

The Reverend D. H. Bays says:

The long-lost Spaulding story has at last been unearthed, and is now on deposit in the library of Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio, and may be examined by anyone who may take the pains to call on President Fairchild of that institution. . . .

The Spaulding story is a failure. Do not attempt to rely on it—it will let you down.

The entire theory connecting Sidney Rigdon and the Spaulding Romance with Joseph Smith in originating the Book of Mormon must be abandoned.

These quotations are based on and taken from a paper read before the Northern Ohio and Western Reserve Historical Society in 1886 by James Fairchild (Volume 3, pages 185-200). Also from Encyclopaedia Britannica (Eleventh edition, Volume 18, page 843).

We sincerely hope this information will interest you to a further investigation of our church story.

Sincerely,

PEARL GARDNER, Secretary

A reply to this letter has not been received to date, but we know that this newsman has written to our local men in the spirit he wrote to this office. May we meet all unfair, "hard to take" stories and inferences in the same kindly spirit that our association may be mutually helpful.

LANDMARKS

BY MADELYN GALBRAITH

I HAVE OFTEN THOUGHT of a crude old barn I saw this summer while vacationing with my sister in the Smoky Mountain country. To me its walls all but spoke. They were made of logs, hand hewn and unfinished. The grooves into which one log fitted another had also been hand cut, the ancient axe marks still plainly visible.

It was quite a large barn with a wide open space running down the center and four partitioned cubicles on each side. Two of these were floored with split logs, and had no doubt been used to store grain. The others had, I surmise, housed poultry and livestock during the winter months.

It was always gloomy inside, for the windows were small and high just under the eaves—so the light had to come through the doors at each end.

Summer suns and winter rains had weathered it to a pearl gray, and as we left the mist sweeping down from the mountains enveloped it in even deeper shades.

I didn't hear much about the builder. I was told that he lived ninety-two years and was active until his death. His farm was always well tended and productive; his apples were the finest in the country; and he had built the barn without aid!

Even though I heard so little about him, I believe I know the sort of man he was. I am sure he was a stalwart chap who used, to the best of his ability, the material he had at hand. He was strong and husky, too, for no physical weakling lifted these logs one above the other.

No doubt he would have preferred building with smooth milled lumber and sharp nails, but since these were not available, he did not hesitate to use the timber around him and to fit the pieces together by hand. He was also a man of faith and ambition, else he would never have provided so large a storehouse.

I like to think that on Sunday mornings he took his family to the little church, the rotting remains of which we passed on our way to the village.

All these thoughts passed through my mind as I stood there in the dusk and quiet, the only sounds audible being the contented clucking of the chickens and the buzzing of the wasps as they attended to the business of nest building.

That barn has become a landmark. We were directed to "take the first turn to the right after you pass that big log outhouse on the old Reisinger place."

It occurred to me that I, too, am building landmarks along the highway of life. Will they outlast me? Can they someday be used as guides to the right? Or, after a few years, will anyone remember that I have passed this way?

A HISTORIC SPOT

BY LEE A. HARTSHORN

ON A RECENT MORNING following the arrival of the October 6 issue of The Saints' Herald, I was en route to New York for the usual day of business, and on the way had read the Campus sermon by the late John F. Sheehy, delivered on the twenty-fourth of last August.

Having performed research work on the subject of the visit by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon, a renowned instructor in languages at Columbia College in New York (See Saints' Herald for August 7, 1937), I noted with added interest the statement of Brother Sheehy that "Martin Harris said he took copies of the strange characters from the plates of gold to Professor Anthon of New York City, and this learned man of Columbia University said, 'I cannot read a sealed book.'"

This historic event took place in the month of February, 1828, at which time Mr. Anthon was head of the language department of what was then known as Columbia College in lower Manhattan. The account of the Harris visit to Anthon in Church History does not indicate his background and college connections. The college was broadened to university status in 1897.

I had occasion on this particular morning to leave the train when it reached the Chambers Street Station, and from there I proceeded to walk westward toward the Hudson River. As I approached the street intersection at Park Place and West Broadway, three short blocks from the river, my eyes caught sight of a tablet placed at the entrance of the corner building known as 55 Park Place. On this tablet was engraved the following inscription in which is veiled a story of great interest to those who have accepted the Restored Gospel. It reads: "1755-1857 KINGS COLLEGE FOUNDED BY ROYAL CHARTER IN 1754 IN THE REIGN OF KING GEORGE II AND RE-ESTABLISHED IN 1784 BY THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK UNDER THE NAME OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE WHICH OCCUPIED THIS SITE FROM AUGUST 1755 TO MAY 1857." As I transcribed these words there came a realization that on this very spot, in February, 1828, the prophecy as recorded in the twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah was fulfilled when the "learned man" told Martin Harris, "I cannot read a sealed book."

Partners

By Harry Whipple

THE STRENGTH and quality of a man's character may well be judged by his attitude toward his fellow-men—that is if he has been properly instructed in the ethics of being a good citizen. Take the case of Fred Conners. Fred thought he was doing all right, but there were some things that he didn't understand any too well.

He had been made superintendent and junior partner of the Acme Furniture and Appliance Company, an established firm with retail stores in ten cities. Fred worked mostly on a profit-sharing basis. Every three months he gave a complete report of all business transactions and of the profits earned. After deducting his share, he turned the balance over to the senior partner. This seemed like a fair arrangement to both of the partners, and they prospered and were happy.

Fred could well understand his duties as manager and the need of a strict accounting of all transactions. After all, the senior partner had owned the whole business in the beginning and had taken Fred in on faith and trusted him to be wise, energetic, honest, and reliable. The faith placed in him had proved to be justified by the growth and prosperity of the firm.

THE PAST FEW WEEKS something had been disturbing Fred's peace of mind. He was a member of the Reorganized Church and was a regular doner to worthy projects. He, his wife, and their two small children were regular attendants at all meetings. He had been too busy to do much studying, but ever since the bishop had conducted a series of classes to explain the financial law, Fred had realized something was lacking in his compliance with the commandments, according to the way the bishop told it.

However, he couldn't understand why he should have to fill out an inventory blank or report to the bishop on how he stood financially. Why should it matter to the church how much he owned, or how much his annual income was? If he was liberal with his donations to the branch and gave to the special collections, that should be enough.

ONE DAY Brother Smithers, the local bishop's agent, stopped in at the store to make a purchase. Fred had a sudden urge to ask him about the tithing laws—maybe he could get the thing straightened out for him. An appointment was made, and the following evening Brother Smithers came to the Conners' home for a discussion of the financial law.

"What is it that you don't understand?" he asked.

"Well," said Fred, "it's the idea of filing a statement with the bishop. If I give as much as I feel able to give to the church, isn't that enough? What good will it do the bishop or the church to know how much I own or earn annually? All I have of this world's goods, I have earned by hard work. I feel it is my right to say how much I want to give."

"Yes, you do have a right to say how much of and where you will spend your share of your income," explained the bishop's agent, "but what about your partner's share?"

"I have nothing to say about spending his share," said Fred. "I check the books and send him his profits every three months, but I can't tell him what to do with his money."

"That's the point I want to bring out," said Brother Smithers. "You recognize your senior partner in the furniture business and carefully account to him for all that the business earns. But you have another—an unseen partner—in your life's work too. He is God."

"But I don't get the connection," said Fred. "I give an accounting to my partner in business because the whole thing belonged to him in the first place. I just work on a percentage basis. He is entitled to know how things are going."

"Again you have answered your own question. God gave you your life, your intelligence, the opportunity for an education, and the talents which enable you to do the job you are doing—just to mention a few things. He has called certain men to act as bishops—to collect and disburse the tenth that is His share. This has always been his way of dealing with his people. Abraham paid tithes of all he possessed. And when the law was again given to Moses, he said, 'And all the tithe of the land whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord' (Leviticus 27:30). So you see God requires us to pay one tenth of our increase annually."

FRED SAID, "I guess you're right about my owing a tenth of my increase to the Lord, and you're probably right about the filing of a financial statement, but I don't see why or how the statement is going to do any particular good as long as I pay the money due."

"You recognize the right of your business partner to an accounting, don't you?" Brother Smithers asked. "God has a great deal more invested in you than that man has. He gave his only Son to die for you as well as the rest of mankind. He has taken the trouble to establish a church and call men to the ministry so that people might learn the truth and be saved. To me, filing an inventory with the bishop is but the recognition of God as our Father and our Partner in all things.

"In addition to this, the bishop is helped greatly in his work when he knows the financial status of the members. On him falls the burden of planning and raising and disbursing the money to carry on the work of the church. It also helps him in gathering the Saints to Zion to know of the talents and resources of those gathering."

Fred said, "That's enough—I'm convinced. Can you get me a tithing blank soon?"

"I happen to have a couple with me. Look them over, and if you need any help in filling them out, let me know."

Fred filled out the papers and mailed them to the local bishop's agent, along with the amount due. And he has been filing his annual statement every year since.

The other day he said, "You know, it's a funny thing, but I seem to be more prosperous now than ever. And the knowledge that God is now my partner—why, that's the most wonderful thing of all!"

I'll Tell the World

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND LEADERSHIP TRAINING CURRICULUM Is Good

THE DEPARTMENT of Religious Education proudly tells the world—members of the church in particular—that it has a splendid plan of study, “tried, weighed in the balance,” and found excellent.

There is nothing boastful in this statement, just simple statement of fact. Records prove outstanding accomplishments by branches and church schools which have given this program of study a fair trial. Teachers and leaders in many instances have shown marked improvement in performing their services, and many individuals testify of their increased appreciation of the church through knowledge gained as a result of their correspondence studies. Not a few converts have been made to the church through attending credit training classes.

Thousands of members and friends of the church have tried this method of study, and we are confident that not one can truthfully say he is not richer for it, according to the amount of study he has done and the application he has made of the truths learned. Only good can come of systematic, humble, faithful study, in compliance with the many commandments of our Father that we do this very thing. (Search the Scriptures to see how many times and in how many ways he has made this commandment.)

The latest edition of Christian Education and Leadership Training—Bulletin No. 104 is now available, just off the press. It is announced with perhaps a justifiable degree of pride, for we admit being proud of the expansion of this study program, as evidenced by a number of new courses in several of the groups, a whole new group, and a whole new series.

The new group of courses is called Group V—The Parent, Teacher, Child, and is designed to be of special help to young parents and teachers.

The new series is Series Four, for which the “Fourth Certificate of Progress” is offered. This is the result of popular demand for continued study under this plan by many who have completed work for their first three certificates of progress.

A number are already at work for the “Fourth Certificate of Progress,” but none so far have gained the distinction of being the first to qualify for it. Will you be the first to whom we can issue this new certificate? If you have not advanced this far in your credit studies, will you not join the army of God’s servants who are studying faithfully for greater knowledge of him and his work, even though it means starting with many others at work for the “First Certificate of Progress”?

If you have already started this kind of study, we urge you to continue. If you have never given it a trial, there is no time like the present to begin. You may request a free copy of Bulletin No. 104 from the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.—BY THELONA D. STEVENS

UNANSWERED?

Her child lay ill, and he had been such a noble son,
A lad in whom the whole community had taken pride.
Now, he lay stricken and about to die.
The loving mother lifted up her heart in prayer,
Even as you would have lifted yours.
She prayed unceasingly that God would spare the boy to her.
Already she had given a daughter back to God;
If this one died, only one would be left.
Could it be that God did not hear her pleading cries?
So many times she had heard the testimony of answered prayer.
Of course God knew her agony. Had not his own Son died upon the cross?
Had not the mother of the Christ known sorrow, too?
God understood, but shook his head in answer to this latest prayer
And took the lad unto himself.

Life slipped on.
A woman’s steps grew a little slower. Marks of age wrote lines upon her face—
Precious lines that dear friends loved, and read in them the sweetness of her character.
Each day she found some loving way to serve another’s child—
Endeared to the motherless, loved by the fatherless,
She lived on.

Then one day God beckoned her to come.
She went shyly, hesitatingly, wondering,
Crossed the tide,
And from outside the gateway looked inside.

Oh—was this heaven?
She had asked life for her children.
God had given them life abundant. So much more than her weak prayers had asked for them.
Beyond her greatest comprehension he had endowed them;
Neither Scripture, nor prayer, nor minister, nor friend had revealed the greatness of this life beyond.

And all these years her children had enjoyed God’s best.
It was God himself who beckoned her to step inside.
When she entered she would have all heaven and her children, too.
Just one lingering thought delayed the step—
She wanted to return to earth just long enough to say to someone else, “God answered when I prayed. He gave my children more than life.
I’m glad he knew mine was a normal mother’s prayer—wishing for my children—
For now I see through clearing mists his ways are far beyond us, Far as heaven is high above the earth.”

Question Time

Question:

Can you tell me what is known about how the Urim and Thummim was used in translating the Book of Mormon?
Iowa E. G. T.

Answer:

The one man (Joseph Smith) who was qualified to tell us just how the Urim and Thummim functioned passed on to his reward without leaving behind any detailed information on the subject.

There are two theories regarding the use of the Urim and Thummim. One theory based on instructions to Oliver Cowdery (D. and C. 6: 5, 11, 12; 8: 1, 3; 9: 1-4) is that by using the Urim and Thummim Joseph Smith received the ideas and then clothed them in his own words. I am at this time doing research in the peculiar expressions and grammar of the Book of Mormon to determine if those peculiarities are characteristic of the known writings of Joseph Smith. Such expressions include "it supposeth me" (Alma 25: 11, 26: 5), "wax strong" (Alma 29: 61), "durst" instead of "dare" (Helaman 3: 36), etc. My research is not sufficiently advanced to draw final conclusions, but the evidence at this point would seem to indicate that the Book of Mormon is not couched in the language of Joseph Smith.

The concept that the Urim and Thummim worked like the gift prophecy is readily understandable in view of what the Lord told Oliver Cowdery. It is very interesting to note that instructions in the Book of Mormon (Alma 17: 71-76) regarding use of the "Liahona" or "directors" are similar to the instructions given Oliver Cowdery. In both cases, faith, humility, and spiritual attunement were required.

The Urim and Thummim refused to function unless Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were humble and just right (see Church History, Volume 4, page 448). The theory that this divine instrument did not show the words to the eye of Joseph Smith but simply gave him concepts and ideas which he had to translate into his own words is very inadequate.

It is my opinion that Joseph Smith looked into the instrument and read the English words. This position is very strongly backed up by the Book of Mormon prophets who possessed the instrument and knew how it worked (Mosiah 5: 73, Ether 1: 99, etc.). If Joseph Smith read the English translation as he passed the instrument over the Nephite characters, then the Urim and Thummim was the interpreter. If, according to the Oliver Cowdery theory, the idea came into Joseph Smith's mind and he had to clothe it in his own words, then Joseph Smith was the translator. Joseph Smith made an interesting comment concerning the title page of the Book of Mormon: ". . . the said title page is not by any means a modern composition either of mine or of any other man's who has lived or does live in this generation."—Times and Seasons, Volume 3, pages 928-931, 943.

Mormon and Moroni knew there were errors in the Book of Mormon. They knew that the interpreters would carry those errors over into the Gentile language. Moroni says, ". . . when we write, we behold our weakness, and stumble because of the placing of our words; and I fear lest the Gentiles shall mock at our words" (Ether 5: 26). Except for typographical and manuscript errors, it would appear that errors in the Book of Mormon are those of the original Nephite authors.

Book of Mormon statements indicating how the Urim and Thummim functioned seem almost conclusive in their co-ordination of the theory that the instrument did the interpreting and that the "Seer" saw the words in the instrument. The very word "seer" suggests looking and seeing. Possession of the Urim and Thummim constituted a seer (Mosiah 12: 21).

And behold, these two stones will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things which ye shall write.

For behold, the language which ye shall write, I have confounded; wherefore I will cause in mine own due time that these stones shall magnify to the eyes of men, these things which ye shall write.—Ether 1: 88, 89.

An exploring party sent out by the Nephite King, Limhi, discovered Jaredite records but could not read them. He asked Ammon if there was anyone who could translate the records. Ammon's answer is very significant:

Now Ammon said unto him, I can assuredly tell thee, O King, of a man that can translate the records: for he has wherewith that he can look, and translate all records that are of ancient date: and it is a gift from God. And the things are called interpreters; and no man can look in them, except he be commanded, lest he should look for that he ought not, and he should perish. And whosoever is commanded to look in them, the same is called seer.—Mosiah 5: 72-74.

Nephi in instructions to Joseph Smith says:

Touch not the things which are sealed. . . . Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee . . . then shalt thou seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may preserve the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom, to reveal all things unto the children of men.—II Nephi 11: 143, 144.

If Joseph Smith "read the words," he must have seen them in the Urim and Thummim.

Concerning the use of the Urim and Thummim David Whitmer says:

The letters appeared on them in light, and would not go off until written correctly by Oliver. When Joseph could not pronounce the words he spelled them out letter by letter.—Church History, Volume 4, page 448.

It has been urged that words appearing in the Urim and Thummim would make it a mechanical instrument and that the seer would be deprived of his agency if he could not use his own mental faculties in composing the matter being translated. I do not see how such a marvelous spiritual gift from God which functions only when the prophet is spiritually attuned can be called "mechanical"; neither can I see that the prophet was deprived of any of his agency by reading the words which appeared in the divine instrument.

Mormon authorities in Utah who have done research study in the use of the Urim and Thummim agree that the English words appeared in the instrument. I quote from B. H. Roberts:

The Nephite characters with the English interpretation appeared in the sacred instrument.—New Witnesses for God, Volume 2, page 110.

Church Plans in Anchorage

In behalf of the Saints of the Anchorage Mission I would like to express our sincere appreciation to all the Saints who supported us so generously at the last General Conference and since that time. We have known from the beginning that God wants a church in Alaska; and although there weren't many of us, we have set out to accomplish our mission. Now with the encouraging support we have received we know God's will shall be done.

At our last business meeting September 4, 1952, definite plans were formulated to start building in early June of 1953. Many of our members have pledged financial support and new pledges continue to come in. A report on our building fund status, building plans and lot locations is being sent to the First Presidency and Bishopric.

We have about sixty-five members in and around Anchorage with excellent missionary opportunity, especially with the servicemen stationed at Fort Richardson and Elmendorf Air Force Base. Our Sunday attendance usually runs about twenty-five and we have had forty at a meeting. The Saints here are enthusiastic with their task of building the kingdom in this land and I am sure will not betray the confidence of the church in them. We ask the Saints throughout the world to pray for us that we may continually hold Christ's banner high.

The Eastbrook Congregation, Kansas City, Missouri

On June 18, 1950, the Eastbrook congregation of Kansas City Stake in the very first service was organized and the church building dedicated for divine service. As unique as this is in the history of our church buildings, it is no more impressive than the development of the entire work in that area.

Situated off 50 Highway on Bennington Street, among spreading elm trees, it is the worship center of a hard-working group of Saints. With six large motor courts, trailer camps, and a fast-growing community near by, it presents a very desirable situation for growth and practical missionary work.

Some years preceding the dedication, a group known as the Fourth Branch held services in a building erected in the vicinity of Twenty-fourth and Wabash as the first and only church building we possessed in Kansas City at that time. Later it was moved to Forty-third and Garfield and used by the Fourth group. When the structure became uninhabitable, it was sold and the members scattered to attend other congregations. The group, however, held together as a social unit, planning to pick up their work at a distant date.

Sooner than was expected, the stake president, J. D. Anderson, and Bishop L. W. Updike, seeing the many advantages of a school building that was for sale, purchased the property and moved the Fourth group into the area as part of a missionary expansion program. President Wallace Smith and Bishop Leslie DeLapp assisted in the dedicatory service. Morris Worden was put in charge as pastor and Floris Hands assisted him. Soon a full retinue of officers was selected.

One of the notable features of this group is the Thursday work night when the members have supper together and then work on the church—expanding to meet demands for more room.

In the main auditorium the center point is the pulpit built by the pastor. It has received many commendations from visiting ministers.

The members are loyal and responsive to the work of the church in the midst of a challenging community.

Challenge to Saints of Northern Plains District

Business took me to Sanish, North Dakota, on November 8. Here I located Paul Holt on top of one of the eighteen concrete piers being constructed to support the massive bridge which is to span the Garrison Reservoir at this point on North Dakota Highway 23.

Paul invited me up to his perch on the cap of the pier. After scanning the almost perpendicular ladder which scales the pier, speculating on the depth and speed of the icy waters of the river below, and noting the chill northern wind so typical of North Dakota in November, I politely but firmly refused the invitation. Well I know how my form trembles, my knees smite together, and my teeth chatter as my mind rushes forward to the judgment day. "Thank you, Paul, but I'll try to climb to the heights some other way."

Sunday found us in Logan schoolhouse near Minot. Here we found a full house at church school under the direction of Brother Gordon Wheeler. I spoke a few minutes at the close of church school on "The Stewardship of Cheer." Church school was followed by a Communion service in charge of Pastor Joe Ballantyne and Assistant Pastor Nelt Wagar. Paul Holt then spoke to the very attentive listeners for thirty minutes on "Eternal Judgment."

During the church school and other services my mind when back to the summer of 1948 when we were attending M. S. T. C. summer school. During the summer a few Minot Saints organized a church school with Sister Reese Whitted as director. Returning to Fairview, Montana, for the district reunion that summer some of us expressed our concern in regard to priesthood leadership for the Minot group. This was at a Communion service. Seventy Percy Farrow rose and spoke in prophecy. Among other things he said that the Lord would provide the desired leaders for the Minot group.

As I sat in the services Sunday I beheld before me active and positive proof that the promises of God are sure. God is pushing his work in this place under the able leadership of Brother Ballantyne assisted by Elders Nelt Wagar and Gordon Wheeler.

Other district and local leaders are being aroused to a sense of their great responsibility as other groups and isolated Saints receive ministry. Responding to invitation, Bishop's Agent Elder W. R. Hillman has visited most of the groups of the district. He was at Nashua, Montana, November 2. Other groups should extend invitations to make the ministry feel more welcome.

Elder W. C. Redfield was in Nashua, November 9, and spoke on "Building the Kingdom." Priest Tom Finnicum cares for the Culbertson group in the absence of their pastor, W. C. Redfield. On Sunday, November 16, I was at Nashua by invitation to be at the annual church school election.

Priest Benjamin Dykstra has been instrumental in starting a church school at Opheim, Montana, with Ted Miller as director. Brother Dykstra alternates between Nashua and Opheim while Pastor John Hentz of Kinsdale, Montana, keeps the work active when others fail or go on other missions.

The Williston, North Dakota, group is now meeting in the Gusher Room on the Lower Floor of the New Plainsman Hotel. We hope to hold this room till we can build a church, as it is fine for present needs. Transient Saints and ministers are welcome at Williston for church school, 10:30 a.m., and preaching, 11:30 a.m., every Sunday.

Towns and cities of the Northern Plains District are on the boom. This is especially true of Williston, Minot, Tioga, Watford City, and Sanish, North Dakota; Glendive, Sidney, Circle, Wolf Point, and Plentywood, Montana. Millionaires are springing up almost overnight.

As industry speeds up and all classes of people rush here for employment, the responsibility resting on the Saints becomes increasingly heavy. Greater attention to the call for service is necessary if the church is to perform her work in this vast mission. It is up to us all to answer the call.

The Pearl of Great Price

Recently I was made treasurer of our women's department. I saw no reason why I would not be able to do the work satisfactorily, so I assumed the responsibility willingly.

Then our women's department was asked to serve the lunch at a public auction sale. We appreciated the invitation, and a number of women helped. It was my job, since I was treasurer, to act as cashier, with an assistant. After the sale I found myself responsible for a number of one dollar bills, a few fives, and considerable change. Suddenly I felt a greater responsibility in this new office of treasurer. To many this sum of money probably meant little, being under $200.00. But the money wasn't mine and I felt responsible for it until it could be properly disposed of.

With this fresh in my mind I was going about my daily tasks when the New Testament story of the pearl of great price came to me. It came with such force that other things were driven from my mind. I told myself, "You were entrusted with this gospel, the greatest jewel on the face of the earth. Some people have been willing to give every worldly thing they possessed that they might have this one great jewel."

I realized how small indeed was the value of the money I had been caring for. Then I wondered how much concern I had felt for the gospel, the greatest possession anyone can hold. For years I had had this pearl. But what had I done with it? I realized I had not put the value on it that it was due. I had not protected it from Satan's grasp, nor from the unrighteous.

Satan could grasp it in many ways. One important way was by closing my eyes to the value of time. I have allowed much precious time to slip by. Today I am unacquainted with much of the Scripture, lessening my ability to be of service. Unimportant things have devoured much of my time. I have used too little time for meditation about God and his love for mankind. I have permitted myself to be robbed. Then and there I developed a new value of the stewardship of time. Like the money I had it; also like the money it was for a purpose.

The past is gone. What I have lost in time and thoughtlessness I cannot retrieve. But I can go on from where I am and with study and prayer I can yet learn the true value of this great jewel—the pearl of great price—and use it for its intended purpose.

Program Held for Auditorium Drive

BOYNE CITY, MICHIGAN.—The branch set the month of November aside as sacrifice month. A family get-together and program was planned for November 25. Adele and Floyd Schnieder were in charge of decorations. On the rostrum for a background is a dark-blue velvet panel on which hangs a picture, "Head of Christ." Below this picture was hung a plaque which read, "God Gave His Son." Beneath this was placed a white cross surrounded with lights and cedar boughs. Out on the main floor in front of the rostrum on a table was placed a replica of the Auditorium. The dome was made of silver and green tinfoil. The auditorium was lighted and had green boughs for shrubbery. This was the setting for the offering. Hazel Dodds and Mildred LaBreque were in charge of the program. This was built around the Thanksgiving theme, and Brother Walton Fritz offered the opening prayer. Ella Clute sang "America." All characters in the program were dressed in Pilgrim costume. The ushers, Alma Fallette and Darlene Sparks, were also dressed in Pilgrim costume. They ushered the members up to the setting of the replica of the Auditorium. The dome was lifted back and the children placed their Auditorium banks and the adults their envelopes inside. The pastor, Elder Delbert Dodds, gave the closing prayer. Auditorium posters were made by Zion's League members and prizes were given to the winners.

Refreshments were served in the lower auditorium of the church by Priscilla Jenkins and Helen Sparks who were dressed as Pilgrim mothers. The offering for the evening amounted to $109.—Reported by HELEN L. SPARKS

■ Thirty-four members of Graceland's Engineering Seminar, accompanied by instructors Ned Jacobson and Delmar Goode, recently spent two days in Kansas City on the seminar's annual field trip. They attended the Central Branch in Kansas City and held a panel discussion between engineers and the church. They visited a number of industrial concerns where they saw engineers and engineering in action and looked for answers to questions about their field which cannot be answered in the classroom.

■ This year Graceland College commemorated its twenty-eighth home-coming. Kicking off the week end was the home-coming welcome by President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Friday at 7:45 p.m. preceding the home-coming play, "The Great Big Doorstep." The activities Saturday began with the home-coming assembly at 9:30 a.m., followed by an alumni meeting at 10:45 a.m. At 2:30 the Graceland Yellowjackets swamped the Burlington Blackhawks 27-0. The high light of Saturday evening's entertainment was Dr. Roy Cheville's "Acacia Memories." A more serious note was struck on Sunday morning with a 9:00 a.m. fellowship. "Call Us On With Memories" was again emphasized by Apostle Arthur Oakman at the 10:45 service. Home-coming was a very memorable week end.

■ Earle Spicer, nationally known baritone from New York, appeared recently at the campus' first Lyceum number of the year in the Student Center. Mr. Spicer has appeared as guest artist with many of the leading symphony orchestras and oratorio societies in the United States and England. He has a knowledge of folklore, unexcelled ability to entertain, and delightful informality. Graceland students were well entertained with his unique presentation of English and American ballads.

■ The Alumni Association has chosen as its new project the construction of a track, field, and play area for the college. All of the area now used for football, hockey, et cetera, will be leveled, and the trees will be removed. A lawn will be planted to provide a grassy playing surface. There will be six new playing fields which will be used primarily for intramural sports and physical education classes, in addition to the new football field. This space will also provide for about four baseball diamonds with backstops. The track area will be a level, well-drained cinder track. Concrete bleachers will be built on the football field.

■ Graceland College has a cosmopolitan Concert Choir this year, with members from the United States, Canada, England, Hawaii, and Australia. In addition to providing church music for the campus congregation it presents concerts off the campus.

■ Bruce Logeman of Independence, Missouri, was elected president of the sophomore class, and Barry Fuller of Globe Point, Australia, is the presiding officer of the freshman class for the coming year. Other sophomore officers are Charles Thompson of Independence, Missouri, vice-president; Hattie Harper, Woodbine, Iowa, secretary; and Kisuke Sekine, Japan, treasurer. Tom Cochran, Joplin, Missouri, is the freshman class vice-president; and Kathy Frisby, Detroit, Michigan, is secretary-treasurer.

■ A number of gifts which were purchased with money from the Missions Abroad Fund were mailed from the Public Relations Office recently to church folk in Holland, Germany, and Norway. The articles which were sent to foreign countries included two of Sallman's paintings of the head of Christ; two sets of records, "Hymns of the Restoration," by the Stone Church Choir; a sacrament service (glasses, trays, collection plates); and several Saints' Herald and Daily Bread subscriptions.

■ The 1952 grid season brings back stirring memories for the Graceland football fans. Coach Dick Carter guided the Yellowjackets through five wins out of nine foes. Graceland scored 137 points to the opponents' 102 as the season ended. Graceland has had a terrific season, with plenty of bounce back, fight, energy, and the do-or-die spirit. Graceland not only won the conference championship, but has five players on the all-conference team. They are Ray Brown, New London, Iowa; Russ Hampton, Bakersfield, California; Dave L. Johnson, Puyallup, Washington; Cecil Kelley, Marion, Illinois; and Earl Koonce, Lenorah, Texas.

She wrote a series of twenty-eight half-hour radio plays on the Book of Mormon, and fourteen on the life of Paul, which were produced over KMBC of Kansas City, Missouri. Pearl co-sponsored with Della Haberlien the first Oriole movement and served the General Church as superintendent of the Young Women's Department, secretary of the church school, and secretary of the Women's Department, each over a period of several years.

She is a daughter of Hyrum O. Smith and the widow of John A. Gardner, former publicity director for the church. They have two sons: Jack A. and James E.

Sister Gardner is at present working in the Historical Department and for ten years before that worked in the United States Department of Agriculture. She has served as president, secretary, and historian of the White Masque Players, and has worked for several of the civic clubs in city projects.

* REHEARSAL

It is a rehearsal of the "Messiah" chorus. Eager and hopeful, the director taps the music stand with his baton for attention. It is time to begin, and about half of the performers are there. He taps, but the roaring Niagaras of conversation thunder on. He taps again, but he needs a sledge hammer and a steel boiler. Finally all but two are quiet.

Then they begin. Down comes the baton and the violins sound with it. The phrase is "For unto us a child is born," but it sounds like, "Fm, umpa us a ile ss orn."

"For," pleads the director. "I said attack it. Don't wait for it to attack you. You attack it. With both vocal cords. Please!" After six tries it sounds faintly like an attack.

Five minutes later the two whisperers are still going. They aren't rehearsing, yet. "Young man, young lady—please! Yes, you. We invite you to join the chorus. We are practicing the 'Messiah.' Will you help? Good!"

There are sounds that have nothing to do with the musical score. "Five seconds out for everybody to clear his throat!" says the director. Like magic the coughers cease. They will resume just as soon as the sopranos do.

Fifteen minutes afterward, late arrivals are still coming in. It is a contest between men and women to see which will be last. Brunetta, with a violin, seems about to get the prize, 29 minutes late. But no, here is Blondella, 30 minutes tardy. Then at 43 minutes, Waldemar, a bass, clatters in, a victory for the men. Two minutes later, at 45, the women have the last word; Peroxida, a tall blonde, sails grandly in like a cup winner.

By this time you are wondering if this is "our" "Messiah" rehearsal. No, it isn't. But it shows you what some directors have to go through to get a chorus ready to do justice to this great music.

In deference to the music, a "Messiah" rehearsal should be a holy occasion, and the practice room should be sacred ground. We should bring nothing in that we would not be willing to bring into the presence of God. We should be on time and in our places. And we could very well refrain from idle chatter for a while. It would be good for all of us to recognize that the music is a great spiritual experience.

* MORE OR LESS

A man paused on the sidewalk downtown to count his money. There were just four bills. Apparently he was puzzled, for he counted it again. But there were still only four. It reminded one of a song the young people of another generation used to sing:

"One, two, three, four—Sometimes I wish there were more!"

* LIKING

The distinguishing mark of young people is their tremendous enthusiasm for other young people. Their class consciousness and group loyalty are marvelous. Children may fear and hate other children, with good reason. Older folk may sicken of each other and seek solitude from the society of their kind. But young people never tire of each other, never lose interest. They do not ever get too much of themselves. It is so refreshing to find any group of people who really and thoroughly like each other.

Feather in the Wind

by Madelyn Galbraith

Just released . . . a brand new novel! "Feather in the Wind" is about a family whose lives are deeply touched by the message of the restored gospel. This is the moving story of how they became members of the church and of their work in their Texas community.
