But did they have authority to invent new practices or in any way abandon any laws or alter any details of the law so faithfully revealed from God by Christ?

If such transgressions should occur, would not God refuse to recognize and condone these human practices and teachings as a departure from his law?

Would he not withdraw his authority from them for misrepresenting him rather than representing him?

Should men become aware that such transgressions had occurred and that human teachings, ordinances, and procedures were being practiced in the church to which they belonged, would they inherently possess authority to withdraw and organize a new church of their own?

Except God should so command them, would such an organization be "the church of Jesus Christ," or would it possess only human authority?

Can men, however sincere their desires to serve God, become his servants without his selection and his authorization to act?

How does such a divine call come?

Has God set laws to govern this in his church in order to protect his people against those who might usurp authority?

The Pattern of the Past

In times past, when human needs have been great, God has called his servants by revelation. Selecting them thus he has afforded them the divine solution to the problems of men, sent them to do his will in the situation, clothed them with authority to represent him upon earth, and supplied power to supplement their best human efforts.

Almost invariably, before some great work of grace, prophets in previous dispensations have foretold the work to be done, identified events, perhaps described the time or nature of the servant to be selected, that the people living at the time of fulfillment might better recognize their opportunity, accept the proffered help of heaven, assist the servant with the divine work, and receive the approval of the Almighty. In such times, as long as men are willing to continue to respond and obey, God is willing, by revelation, to authoritatively call his servants and commission them with power that the work of righteousness might continue.

This pattern of activity was true of the days of Moses. The Israelites were in sore bondage to the Egyptian taskmasters. By revelation Moses was called to lead in the freeing of this nation. He came in fulfillment of a warning and a promise given to Abraham some four hundred years previously:

Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land which shall not be theirs, and shall serve strangers; and they shall be afflicted, and serve them four hundred years; and also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge; and afterward shall they come out with great substance.—Genesis 15: 17, I.V.

When the four hundred years were fully elapsed, true to the warning, the children of Israel were being afflicted in bondage. It is recorded, however, that "God remembered his covenant with Abraham" (Exodus 2: 24). By revelation Moses was called to deliver this nation according to the promise previously made. Authority was conferred upon him to represent God in this work. Divine power attended such authoritative ministry.

Tragic Violations

Even though the nature of the call of Moses, by revelation, as well as the approval that God vouchsafed to him, was well known to the congregation, the time came when three men—Korah, Dathan, and Abiram—attempted to assume equal authority with Moses. They charged:

Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them; wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?—Numbers 16: 3.

The Almighty moved at once to end such presumption and to vindicate himself in the principle that he reserves to himself the right to call and commission men of his own selection. God desires all to be "laborers together with him," but the fact that there has been and still is presumption of authority indicates that even in basic principles, his will, purposes, and procedures are not comprehended. How in greater things could men of such attitudes accomplish the perfect will of heaven? Moses answered the usurpers:

Hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of my own mind.

If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the Lord hath not sent me.

But if the Lord make a new thing . . . then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord.

And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them;

And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, . . . and they perished from among the congregation.—Numbers 16: 28-33.

On the following day, when the congregation murmured against Moses, charging him with the responsibility for this act, God moved again in divine judgment. Immediately a plague broke out in the midst of the murmuring congregation, and fourteen thousand seven hundred perished as the Almighty again vindicated the principle referred to and certified that the penalties suffered emanated from his own being. What a costly lesson in divine prerogatives!

Additional Lessons

In the continuing history of the Israelites we find that Saul, the first king of Israel, was rejected of God, and his kingdom was stripped from him when he attempted to usurp authority to offer sacrifices. This authority had been restricted to the priests. He was told:

Thou hast done foolishly: thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the Lord have established thy kingdom upon Israel forever.

But now thy kingdom shall not continue; the Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the Lord hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee.—I Samuel 13: 13, 14.

When Uzzah attempted to steady the ark of the covenant in an emergency, when the right to touch it had been restricted to the priests—

. . . the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah, and God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the ark of God.—II Samuel 6: 7.

Later again, when King Uzziah attempted to assume authority to burn incense to the Lord, he was told by the priests, who alone held this authority:

It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the Lord but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense; go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honor from the Lord God.—II Chronicles 26: 18.

Uzziah, angered at the priests who were kindly attempting to prevent him from continuing in his error, persisted, and as he did so—

. . . the leprosy even rose up in his forehead . . . and they thrust him out from thence.—II Chronicles 26: 19, 20.

His error in attempting to usurp authority brought leprosy upon him and cost him his kingdom. What a price to pay for willful blindness!

Christ's Authority

Christ came at a time when the Jews were in subjugation to the Romans. As in the case of Moses, prophets had previously appraised the people of the nature of their Deliverer that they might better recognize him at the time of his coming, and gladly participate with him in his redemptive work. The manner of his birth had been foretold:

Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; behold a virgin shall conceive, and shall bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.—Isaiah 7: 14.

The place of his birth had been pointed out:

But thou, Bethlehem Ephrathah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.—Micah 5: 2.

The type and labors of his forerunner, John the Baptist, had been revealed:

The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.—Isaiah 40: 3.

The nature of the "rulers" work, after the preparations were accomplished, was designated:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 9: 6.

Ample preparation had been made for the ministry of Christ. Prophets had pointed out many of the major events that might be recognized by thoughtful men. Christ was "born of a virgin" in the designated village, "Bethlehem Ephrathah." He was preceded in his ministry by John the Baptist who "cried in the desert" and pointed out Christ as "the Lamb of God." Christ, having been "sent of my Father," accepted the responsibility of making available the powers and blessings of the kingdom of heaven on earth when he said, "I will build my church" (Matthew 16: 19). The responsibility for establishing this type of government and organization rested upon "his shoulder." Christ was fulfilling the Scriptures and doing the work that the prophets had anticipated of him. Divine power and approval attended his representative ministry.

The Authority of the Church

In establishing his church, which was also to authoritatively and accurately represent heaven, Christ carefully sought first his Father's will and direction. After having "continued all night in prayer to God" (Luke 6: 12), Christ ordained the first twelve apostles. Paul assured us that it was the Almighty who directed Christ in this selection when he wrote: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets" (I Corinthians 12: 28).

Christ who did "always those things that please him" (John 8: 29) gave them "power and authority" and "sent them to [authoritatively] preach the kingdom of God" (Luke 9: 1, 3). He reminded them of the exalted standard of representation to which they had been called: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."—John 20: 21.

He later reminded them of his delegated authority and of the faithfulness with which they were to represent the law which the Father had sent Him to reveal:

... All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. . . .

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 18-20, I.V.

Divine approval was to attend only upon exact and perfect representation in all things "even unto the end of the world." So authoritative was their ministry, when they would precisely represent him, that Christ said, ". . . whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (Matthew 18: 18).

To those divinely representing him, Christ promised "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me" (Luke 10: 16, A.V.). Such ministry is authoritative!

Continuation of Authority

This authoritative church continued even after the Ascension of the Master into heaven. Jesus sought counsel from his Father in heaven in the commencement of the church; and by revelation, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles . . ." (I Corinthians 12: 28). God continued to direct in the selection of others as the need arose. When Barnabas and Saul were to be called, God's will was earnestly sought and received. Prophets, whom "God hath set in the church," prayed and fasted for divine direction.

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. . . .

So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed.—Acts 13: 2, 4.

Here was no attempt on the part of anyone, however earnest, to say, "I feel that I have been called." Rather the divine prerogative to select was scrupulously observed. Paul, one of the apostles selected and commissioned in this continuing experience of God's direction, understood that his call was in perfect accord with the pattern of the past and enunciated this principle to govern for all future time: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron" (Hebrews 5: 4).

Aaron's Call

How close a parallel exists between the call of Paul to the office of apostle and of Aaron to the office of priest! In Paul's case, prophets by revelation were commanded of God to ordain the two men whom the Almighty selected and designated. Apparently the office of apostle was pointed out, for from that time forward they were designated as apostles (Acts 14: 14). In Aaron's call to the office of priest the same elements stand out. Moses, the prophet of God, was commanded by revelation:

And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.—Exodus 28: 1.

The four elements which constitute a man's being called of God "as was Aaron" become increasingly clear from these two divine examples: God reserves the right to make his selection as to who shall represent him; a living prophet in the midst of the people receives direction from God by revelation; the candidate so selected is designated, as well as the office in which he is called to function. Then being ordained to the office designated, he moves out with divine sanction. Should any man attempt to enter the ministry by any other method, would he not be guilty of usurping authority and thus find his acts being rejected of God for having taken "this honor unto himself"? Would it "be for [his] honor from the Lord God" (II Chronicles 26: 18) to thrust ahead, rather than respecting the heavenly Father's privilege and his law so clearly set forth by Paul that "No man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron"?

Authority Today

Christendom is sadly divided over the question of authority today. There are those who teach that authority to represent Christ is necessary, and that the authority to represent Christ has come down in their organization from Christ to his first representatives, and then from representative to representative in unbroken succession to the present day. They claim the power of infallibility—that is, they are so preserved of God in matters of morals and doctrine that errors cannot enter or be promulgated. Thus today, as in all ages, they exactly represent the Father Almighty and faithfully administer his laws. This is in essence the teachings today of the Catholics.

But there are many others in Christendom who protest that this is not true. They declare that during the ages following the ministry of our Lord, gross errors crept into the church. So glaring did these errors become, and so out of accord with the spirit and purpose of Christ—and at the same time so obstinate and entrenched were the leaders who were practicing them—that it was no longer possible for honest men to remain in such an organization. Being unable to correct the teachings in this existing organization they withdrew. They and their followers, in order to have proper instruction and fellowship, organized churches in which their reforms were embodied. These exist today as the two hundred and fifty—more or less—churches of the Protestant Reformation.

The Apostasy Foretold

The Scriptures speak with conviction that such an apostasy, or destruction of the church, as perceived by the Protestants was to exist. Christ had warned: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force" (Matthew 11: 12).

John, in his remarkable revelation, saw a terrible and destructive force on the earth, making war with the saints:

And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.—Revelation 13: 7.

Isaiah, too, had seen the time when gross errors in teaching and practice would prevail:

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.—Isaiah 24: 5.

Under the conditions contained in the following Scripture, when such conditions would prevail, the power and authority of God would be withdrawn from men by the Almighty: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God" (II John 9).

Just as Christ suffered violence, and his servants with him, so his church also suffered violence, and "the violent took it by force." The laws were transgressed, the ordinances changed and misapplied. The power and authority of God were therefore withdrawn, and the world sank into the Dark Ages.

An Eternal Standard

We are indebted to the fearless men who pioneered in pointing out the many errors apparent in their day and their heroic efforts to call men to higher standards of life. But the multiplied confusion that exists today between organizations in teachings and in practice causes grave questions to enter the mind. Is it possible that an eternal and unchangeable God has called all of these men to represent him in all of these different ways? Have they all power and authority to administer his laws in all contradictory paths?

Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause division and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them.

For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ.—Romans 16: 17, 18.

Among the doctrines that are expounded by Paul, by which standard we are to judge, is his teaching, "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." Wherein do we find this divine standard being honored today?

Surely something more is required today than an "inner urge" to serve God. Apparently Uzziah, King Saul, Uzzah, Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and their confederates had "inner urges" to serve; but their attempts were not acceptable to God because the divine standard was not observed. Surely something more is required than the authority that is supposedly derived from "the great commission" given by Christ to his apostles long since dead, when he said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations" (Matthew 28: 18).

In governments today it is not possible to derive authority from a commission given to men long since dead. For example, the present commander of the United States Army does not derive his authority from reading the commission given by Abraham Lincoln to General Grant. Should not the same clear principle stand out also in the kingdom of God?

Is it possible that we may be "limiting the Holy One of Israel" (Psalm 78: 41) if we doubt that Christ, who has "all power in heaven and in earth," continues to call and commission his servants? David counseled: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it" (Psalm 127: 1).

Paul, who had clarified the divine standard by which we ought to check the credentials of the ministry ("And no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron") recounted the chastenings of ancient Israel, among which was the penalties for attempted usurpation of authority, and warned the people of his day against similar folly. Then he extended the warning down even to our day:

Now, all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition also, and for an admonition for those upon whom the end of the world shall come.—I Corinthians 10: 11.

Ringling still down the ages are Christ's words: "I will build my church" (Matthew 16: 19).

Authority in the Latter Days

God does not change his ways of working with men. We have already observed that God conferred his authority upon Jesus directly, with no recognition of any organization, no permission from the temple or its officers in Jerusalem. He recognized his Son, the Christ, as the supreme authority of the church. This procedure was repeated in the latter days.

In his desire to know the true church, Joseph Smith read in the Scriptures: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1: 5.

The wisdom that he received was to join none of the churches of the time. None of them had any authority to transmit. God did not recognize them. No human being, in any line of succession, had control of the divine authority. When God wished to convey authority, he went directly to his chosen servants, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery.

When they were concerned with the authority to officiate in such an ordinance as baptism, they went to the woods and presented their problem in earnest prayer. Joseph Smith records the following experience.

Our Story

... in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins. . . . While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never again be taken from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. . . ." The messenger, who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament. . . . It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hands of the messenger.—The History of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Volume I, pages 34-36.

While admiring the Catholics for the diligence and support they give to the teachings in which they have been traditioned, we cannot agree with them that authority has come from one incumbent in office to the next incumbent in office down to our present time. We feel, with the Protestants, that because of the scriptural warnings and the record of history appalling transgression in practice and spirit existed in the Dark Ages. While respecting and appreciating the heroic efforts of the Reformers in their attempts to achieve something better, we find no indication that the divine standard by which men should be called to the ministry has ever been altered. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4. We feel that the statement of Paul, as it would apply to authority and calls to the ministry, is remarkably kind yet unwaveringly true:

And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent;

Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by him whom he hath ordained.—Acts 17: 30, 31.

The Experience Examined

In examining this experience some have expressed doubts that God could empower one of his former servants to return and minister for him as is here suggested that he did with John the Baptist. Yet such is true of God's dealings with his servant Moses:

So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord.—Deuteronomy 34: 5.

Yet on the mount of Transfiguration, as Peter, James, and John bore witness, Christ was transfigured before them: "And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias, talking with him" (Matthew 17: 2).

Here is a clear pattern of divine dealing where such an event formerly took place. Could not God act in such a manner once more?

Before the terrible apostasy and collapse of the church in the Dark Ages, Christ warned that the "kingdom suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." The following conversation is recorded by Matthew in order that we might know how direct authority to reorganize his church and kingdom would again be recommitted to men:

Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.

But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them.

Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 10-12, A.V.

Elias, who the disciples understood was John the Baptist, had already come to prepare a way for Christ in his first advent. He had assisted in preparing a way for the establishment of the kingdom of heaven. And again, after the "kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," Elias "truly shall first come, and restore all things." Authority, having been withdrawn because of willful transgression and ignorance of the laws of God during the Dark Ages, was one of the things which would have to be "restored." John the Baptist is here being designated by Christ as the one he has selected to send to perform this ministry for him.

The fact that such a messenger would be sent from heaven to prepare the way before Christ's second advent—as John the Baptist had so prepared the way before Christ's first advent and here was again designated as the chosen servant—was also known to Malachi, Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of Hosts.—Malachi 3: 1.

This prophecy does not refer to Christ's first coming when he grew up, "before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground" (Isaiah 53: 2), in the obscurity of humble Nazareth. Malachi continues by asking:

But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap.—Malachi 3: 2.

This refers to the time when Christ shall return in judgment upon the world. But note again that before the time when He shall thus appear the Lord "will send my messenger" who "shall prepare the way before me"—or as Christ said, John the Baptist "truly shall first come, and restore all things."

After authority had been recommitted from heaven in this manner, direction continued to be received regarding God's selection of the men he would have serve in the ministry. In this way the church of Jesus Christ has again been reorganized upon the earth. In perfect harmony with the pattern of the past, the prophecies pointing to this marvelous event have been fulfilled that we today might better recognize that, desite the nightmares of war and horror, God in omnipotent power has opened a marvelous era of grace and redemption.

Christ, the great head of the church from on high, having sent his messenger to restore all things, continues to direct his church. Men do not assume this honor but, respecting the divine prerogatives, are called of God, as was Aaron. Prophets in the midst continue to receive revelation pointing out the God-selected men and the God-selected office in which they should function. When the full law is taught by these divinely called and divinely commissioned men, the blessings and gifts, such as were formerly enjoyed, continue to be received.

Observe Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wells of Milo, Iowa, observed their golden wedding anniversary on March 2. More than 125 friends visited them at open house held in their home between two and five o'clock in the afternoon.

They were married at the home of the bride's parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. William Griffin, by Elder Columbus Scott. They spent many years on a farm near Milo before moving to their present home. They have one daughter, Mrs. Merritt L. Gardner of Leavenworth, Kansas, and two granddaughters.

Have you ever wondered why there should be so much division in Christendom in the matter of church organization? Have you ever wondered why there is so much contradiction and contention over the matter of church teachings and practices? Have you ever wondered why there are so many confused apologies as to why the gifts and blessings of God are not enjoyed as they were in scriptural times? Is it not reasonable to suggest, for the protection of the innocent, that the credentials of all who represent themselves as ministers for Christ be examined? Can all show that they have been "called of God as was Aaron"? Has God indeed called all of these men and thus created such appalling confusion? Would it not be wise for us, if seeking full salvation in the kingdom of God, to check against every divine standard, give heed to every divine warning, and hold fast to every divine promise? Does the authority and teachings of all men who profess to be servants of God stem from heaven, or of men?

Question Time

Question:

Were the sons of God referred to in Genesis 6:2 angels, and were any men at that time good enough to be called the sons of God?

Missouri Mrs. M. W.

Answer:

A theory regarding the "sons of God" mentioned in this reference has come down from ancient times; they were supposed to have been angels which came down from heaven and married the daughters of men, producing a type of superbeings. The idea is fantastic and inconsistent with the nature of humanity as well as with the purposes of God. It is without reasonable foundation. Angels are incarnate spirits, or otherwise translated or resurrected humans, and could not occupy on the earth as human beings in mortality. While the Authorized Version calls them "sons of God," the Inspired Version refers to them as "sons of men" who saw the daughters of the sons of Noah that they were fair and took them wives of all (or as many as) they chose, indicating the introduction of polygamy. Because the children born of them became great men, they pointed to that as justification for their conduct. (See Genesis 8, Inspired Version.)

The title "sons of God" has from the beginning of the world applied to those who by obedience to the gospel were baptized of water and of the Holy Spirit. Adam thus became a son of God and received the promise, "Thus may all become my sons." (See Genesis 6:71, Inspired Version; Ether 1:78; Mosiah 11:188; Doctrine and Covenants 24:1.)

Question:

(a) Is it proper for a woman to assist the elder in charge, in pouring the wine and breaking the bread for the Communion services in the Reorganized Latter Day Saint church?

(b) Who should clear the table after the service?

Kansas

Mrs. E. B.

Answer:

(a) No. Especially if this question infers the actual pouring and breaking of bread in the service proper. We are instructed: Any officer of the Melchisedec priesthood may administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, also those ordained to the office of Aaronic priest. Teachers and deacons of the church do not administer in this ordinance.

It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus: and the elder or priest shall administer it.—Doctrine and Covenants 17:22.

Nephi said:

They administered it according to the commandment of Christ; wherefore we know the manner to be true; and the elder or priest did minister it.—Moroni 4:2, page 761.

The late President F. M. Smith said on one occasion (Saints' Herald, January 9, 1937, volume 84, page 36) that the emblems might be prepared prior to the service proper by deacons, assisted by some of the women if so desired and then administered in the service by the authorized officers.

(b) To my knowledge there is no definite instruction having to do with the clearing of the table following the service. Men of the priesthood usually take care of this detail, but it probably could also be taken care of very well by some women of the congregation.

Question:

Why are the missionaries not sent out by twos instead of singly?

Answer:

Many of the missionary appointments, especially of recent years, have been made by twos. However, where their fields of labor lie in organized territory, that is, where there are members having branch and district organizations, they are generally sent singly. Where missionaries are to be sent to new fields, away from any membership, two would undoubtedly be sent together, thus providing companionship, mutual help, and protection against the dangers of persecution, temptation, sickness, or other trouble. Such conditions are considered in the making of appointments by the leading authorities.

Question:

When did the times of the Gentiles begin and end?

Michigan

Mrs. G. A. W.

Answer:

The times of the Gentiles began about 586 B. C. when by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the last remnant of Israelitish rule represented in the kingdom of Judah was destroyed. Israel, which God had designed should become the dominant nation in the world to the establishing of righteousness, equity, and justice, through moral and spiritual disloyalty surrendered to the very evils it was set to destroy, repudiated its divine leader, lost its dominion, and became a prey to enemies. Nebuchadnezzar succeeded to its dominion, becoming the first of a long line of Gentile rulers. (See Daniel 2:37, 38.)

But from the beginning of Gentile rule the Lord made it plain to Nebuchadnezzar that that dominion should be only temporary. The Gentiles do not rule by any right of their own, but by consent, and when God sees proper to restore his kingdom with Israel at the head, the Gentile rule will cease. The whole succession of Gentile empire was shown to Nebuchadnezzar as a great image, which, when complete, was smitten on the feet by a great stone and demolished. That is the fulfilling of the Gentile times as spoken of by Jesus and the prophets.

The fulfilling of the Gentile times is the day of Israel's restoration. The Lord, speaking of the period following the restoration of the gospel, says "in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Doctrine and Covenants 45:4). We are living in that day, and signs throughout the world indicate initial steps toward such an end. Babylon is beginning to fall, and the beginnings of the new kingdom of Israel begin to appear in the restoration of the gospel. The time is very near.

Nursing in Alaska

By Maxine Yahnig Evans

IN EARLY SPRING, 1949, my husband Jack, our four-month-old son, and I found ourselves at the start of a tremendous adventure. I had accepted a fifteen-month Civil Service position as a nurse in White Mountain, Alaska. Jack had accepted a teaching position in an Eskimo Boarding School, one of the three in Alaska.

White Mountain is a snow-covered village forty minutes flying time from Russia and ninety miles from Nome, Alaska, northeast of the Bering Sea.

My job was to keep well the ninety school children, 150 village people, and frequent visitors from near-by villages. A small hospital was also my complete responsibility.

This new employment called for me to learn to take X rays many of which were chest films on tuberculosis patients, for that disease occurs often in the Arctic region. I had a small pharmacy at my disposal for which medicines and supplies had to be ordered a year in advance, because the ship came in just once a year. I had a big job in taking care of the clerical work, for all case histories had to be mailed, along with X rays, government reports, inventories, supply orders, and general correspondence. I did much of this work at night, because as the only nurse I had to be "on call" twenty-four hours a day.

I sterilized dressings and supplies in a pressure cooker. Babies were born with the help of a midwife whose procedure was based on a mixture of old-fashioned ideas and the aseptic technique taught by the nurse. If fish season arrived ahead of the delivery, all was left to me.

In case of emergencies a Doctor's House Order Book was mine for consultation. Every evening, if weather permitted, I could discuss our critical cases by short-wave radio with the service doctor three hundred miles away.

I trained two school children each month to assist me with general clinic cleaning, to shovel coal, to carry diet trays, and to learn first aid procedures. I taught thirty girls in a class in family health and homemaking.

The last six months of my stay at White Mountain I was blessed with a hospital attendant. Her work at times was almost equivalent to that of a graduate nurse, the nurse shortage being what it was.

ONE DAY I was summoned to the bedside of the mayor's son in a near-by village. The trip was made by ski plane.

After inspecting the two-year-old child, who had been having a high fever and convulsions during the morning, I decided that he must have pneumonia. I taught the Eskimo mother to give penicillin hypos and left a thermometer and written instructions (these people were more educated than most Eskimos—they could read). Two weeks later I received a short letter from them saying that their son was well.

Norton Sound is a strait off Bering Sea. I was called by short-wave radio to see a sick baby and a family suffering from dysentery. The schoolteacher was trying to assist them but needed help. I rode rough waters in an open top bomb boat to reach the village fifteen miles away. An Eskimo woman wearing hip boots met us. She carried me to land as we could not dock close to shore. The most critically ill in the family was a girl four years old. She had a temperature of 104°; her skin was very dehydrated, and she was listless with a whining respiration. "Could she have typhoid?" I wondered. I collected culture material to send one thousand miles away to the nearest laboratory. An emergency missionary plane was called in and the child was rushed to a hospital for an immediate clysis. I left paregoric for the family and others in the village. The child's recovery was a happy occasion for the family, even though the mother had her other sixteen children to comfort her.

A SEVERE MEASLE EPIDEMIC of thirty cases broke out in our village. The Eskimos suffer greatly from the disease because their natural immunity to it is low. The people called it fish poisoning. Pyribenzamine didn't clear the rash, and since I had had measles three years before and knew what measles rash looked like, I stuck to my interpretation of the illness. The spots were very definite, much more so than the mild cases in the United States. I ordered serum for one hundred from a thousand miles away. The entire village turned out for the clinic when it arrived.

These measles cases worried me greatly, because the natives often had temperatures of 105° which would last for hours. Doctors were not available, so it was my duty to be on call twenty-four hours a day. I stuck to the doctor's orders: penicillin and serum therapy, lots of nursing care, and my faith in God. All the people recovered after many visits to their homes and dormitories.

Maxine Evans, R.N.

MY EXPERIENCE in Alaska caused me to appreciate a different race of people. I sewed up their lacerations from ax wounds and ice cuts. I treated their infections and set their broken legs and arms. Many times I thought of the years of my training at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, and how the influence of my training was being carried to a people who so desperately needed the care I could give.

I treasure the memories of my "San" days. I'm glad that I had the opportunity to take my nursing education there, and feel that I have learned to become a better steward in God's work. It has helped me in trying to build a Zion-type home. I met my husband, Jack, while I was at the "San." My enthusiasm led my sister Clara to enter the nursing field.

Besides my nursing experience in Alaska, I have nursed in five different states and fifteen hospitals. In the past ten years I have been a doctor's office nurse, school nurse, hospital nurse, industrial nurse, clerk typist in the Safety Record Division of Civil Service, and Public Health nurse. As hospital nurse I have worked in obstetrics and a premature nursery.

We are told: "Serve him [God] with all your heart, mind, and strength." Ever since I can remember I have wanted to choose a profession that would please God and be of service to humanity. My nursing profession has offered this opportunity. As a nurse I have found satisfaction in knowing I am serving humanity and winning a place of honor in people's hearts by helping to ease their suffering and replacing sickness with health.

Nursing Students Speak

THE STUDENT NURSE reached for her crisply starched uniform on the rack sent up from the sunny laundry room of the "San." White and fresh, durable and useful, it symbolized the life she was preparing to give in service to those who needed the touch of her tender, efficient hands.

From the hundreds of student nurses who have thus reached for fresh uniforms on the racks in the lobby of the "San" nurses' home, stories of drama or comedy could unfold. But always there'd be stories of dedication and a desire to serve.

A graduate, Jo Ann Breshears, says this:

Throughout my childhood, my aspirations were always to be a nurse. For a short time after high school I worked in a business office and, although I enjoyed my work, I knew that above everything else I wanted to become a nurse. It was natural that I would want to attend my church hospital school of nursing. I talked with a "San" graduate, and then I was sure that I wanted to train there.

I have found that my training was a full, well-rounded course, a stepping-stone to greater things. The past summer I took a course in polio nursing and worked during an epidemic in Shreveport, Louisiana. I put into practice daily the principles I learned at the "San."

Now I am studying anesthesia. I feel that my three years at the "San" gave me a good background. The course, anatomy and physiology, alone was much more thorough than the same course taught in many other places. I heartily recommend the "San."

Some are still looking forward to their years of nursing education at the "San." Even among those who have not experienced its "feel" are those who have vision for service—some, perhaps, for reasons such as those expressed by Mrs. Donna Baker:

I had often had the desire to become a nurse. After high school, my plans faded when I married. It looked as though my life was pretty clearly cut out for me.

Then I received word of my husband's death in Korea. My plans changed. The work I had been doing did not fill my needs. I wanted to do something that seemed more worth while. Nothing seemed more useful and needed than that of being a nurse. Now I am at Graceland. Here I find church young people of high standards, and well-qualified instructors. Because this is important to me I have chosen to attend the "San" school of nursing.

When I graduate from nursing, if the world remains as it is today, I feel that I can give a great service in some phase of air evacuation of the wounded. I can think of no greater joy than to feel I have helped a man return to his family.

THEN THERE ARE the scores of girls at the "San" school now. It's interesting to notice how similar their pattern of expression is. They want "to serve." They choose the "San" because it is a place of "good instruction and high ideals." And they "like it here."

Marilyn Wismer came from Canada. She says:

Nursing is an art, and in my mind it is the work of God. This is what I want.

My patriarchal blessing states that the expression of tenderness and care given me by my parents would in turn give expression of itself through my movements of thought and hand, except with greater skill and better training.

I never thought of any other school than the "San," because, being a Reorganized Latter Day Saint, I wanted to come to our church school.

I was in doubt as to whether I would get my alien resident's papers. I never had many girl friends who belonged to the church at home and wanted to come to the Center Place to be with girls who belonged to the church and had the same interests as I. My patriarchal blessing tells me I will be many miles from home. This means the "San" to me. Right up until the day before I left I was in doubt about my papers, but I know now that when God makes a promise he keeps it. And I've found what I was looking for at the "San."

Constance Nishimiya came to the "San" from Hawaii. She says:

I want to work with children, and I feel that nursing is the field where I can do this with satisfaction. Being a member of the church, I wanted to come to the "San" because it is our school. I wanted to gain the spiritual fellowship that the school has to offer. I felt, too, that if I came away from home I would develop dependence upon myself, and the "San" would give me good surroundings.

When I graduate I would like to go to Okinawa as a public health nurse. If this is not possible, I'd like to do public health nursing back home in Hawaii.

Elaine Beckman first came to the "San" when she was Elaine Dyer.

Then she met her future husband and left the school. Now she has three children. This is her testimony:

Why did I re-enter the school of nursing after being married seven years and having three children? Both my husband and I have the assurance that I should finish the nursing education that I had started before our marriage. We have made the preparations and provided for the children's care. We feel God is with us in this experience and therefore we have no fears or doubts about its being the right thing to do.

Why did I choose the "San"? I can answer this with the same answer I gave when asked why I am a Reorganized Latter Day Saint. Because I feel it is the right church. That's the way I feel about the "San." I know for sure that the Sanitarium is another of God's institutions and therefore has the advantages necessary for me to accomplish my purpose.

Evelyn Berryman Barritt has wanted to be a nurse as long as she can remember.

Perhaps I was influenced by the pictures of nurses in their crisp, white uniforms. Or perhaps it was from memories of a terrible car accident I saw when I was four. Even then I wanted to help those people. Mother knew I wanted to be a nurse. She used good psychology on me and placed before me articles and pictures from the Herald about the "San." After Graceland it seemed the only place to go.

Now that I am married, I don't know what my next step will be after graduation and state board examinations. I'd like to finish getting my bachelor's degree in sociology. Even if I never put on a uniform again, I feel I'll be a better wife.

Evelyn came from Michigan. Her husband is now in the armed forces.

Here is what Lou Amsberry says:

I've found here among the student nurses, the faculty, the supervisors, and patients, even, that certain "spirit of unity" I sought. Last year at Graceland I felt it and wanted to come to the "San" because I thought I'd also find it here. I have. In our fellowship and chapel services I can feel that others around me are seeking guidance from God to help them in their work as nurses. I believe that God grants them the guidance sought for.

In our class instruction, while there are things still needed to demonstrate, practice, and learn with, I realize that with the many good things we have and the careful teaching of our instructors, we "San" nurses are among the top-trained. I am a freshman and have most of my nursing education before me. I don't know yet what I will do with it, but I'm glad I'm going to be a nurse.

Sue Younger went to Graceland College with a friend from her home town. Her friend was a Reorganized Latter Day Saint. She wasn't, but they had planned since they were girls to go to the same college. Her friend chose Graceland, and Sue went along. She liked what she found there. It was in August following her Graceland education that she became a member of the Reorganized Church. Even before that time she had decided to come to the "San" school of nursing. Here's how she puts it:

I can't say that I came to the "San" because it was my church hospital school, for when I made my choice I wasn't a member of the church. The decision lay in the observations I had made at Graceland, the manner in which the students worked and played together to achieve a goal. I observed how their actions spoke louder than their words, and how they believed in trying to live their religion day by day. I wanted to continue my education in this type of environment, and I surmised that here at the "San" I would find the same type of people, attitudes, faith, and purpose in life. I wanted to live this way of life.

Now I can think of nothing more glorious than having a Zion home. I plan to use my nursing knowledge in helping to establish and maintain such a home, putting it to its greatest use there and in the community. It is something no one can ever take away from me. With it I can have a sense of security, too, knowing that I can always provide for myself and family if need be.

Madge Gravenmier says this:

Some of us who have seen men die know they do not die in a slow, graceful movement, poised bravely to register the finest emotions for the grand close-up. We have seen fear, bewilderment, and shock registered on the bravest of faces. Here, in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, we have a greater opportunity to serve mankind as we work with our doctors and ministers in easing the fear and shock of both the living and the dying.

Says Mildred Sparks:

Nursing is more than an occupation. It places the welfare of humanity above monetary gains and I think it will develop in me some of the best character traits. I feel sorry for the sick and want to help them. I chose the "San" because it isn't a large school. I wanted the individual attention which can be given each student. I wanted the association with other church young people in the extracurricular activities. I can grow in the church at the same time I am learning nursing.

Vera Edwards speaks:

I chose to enter a school of nursing following a discussion with Evangelist Ray Whiting after receiving my patriarchal blessing. I was at that time very dissatisfied with the work I was doing. During the discussion I mentioned that all my life I had wanted to be either a teacher or a nurse. He advised me that since I had given teaching a fair try that I should try nursing.

After another year of teaching and thinking it over, I decided to enter the "San" school. I chose the "San" above the closer-home state schools because it was associated with the church. I have friends who have graduated from the "San" and they also influenced my decision. I wanted to learn firsthand something about the Center Place. I have found the solution to my dilemma of a few years ago, because I have found in nursing the satisfaction I was seeking. Public health nursing holds out a fascination to me that I would like to investigate after I graduate.

Margaret Lee came to the "San" from Honolulu after being told about it by Bishop Howard Miller, Elder Prescott Foo, and another church member, Mrs. Violet Lee. She says:

I earned my way through practical nursing. I always wanted to be a nurse, and these good people influenced my choice of the "San."

What more can be said? The girls of the church who are at the "San" like it there because it offers them something unique that no other school of nursing can give. They plan to come for a purpose. They are there for a purpose. Or they have been there with purpose. The "San" school fulfills that purpose. SADI MOON NAGEL

Choir Sings for Veterans

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist John R. Grice spent four weeks in Flint conducting a missionary series. The meetings were held in the Hamilton Avenue Church with capacity crowds. Three children and nine adults were baptized on the last day of the services, March 9.

Recent ordinations to the priesthood include Lewis Wilcox and Clarence Vickerman to the office of priest; Roy Money and Ernest Bland to the office of teacher; and Thomas Bland and David Russell to the office of deacon. Barent Eliason was approved for ordination to the office of deacon and his ordination will be effected when he is home on leave from the Army.

The annual candlelight service of the department of women was held the evening of January 6 with Mrs. Theodore A. Beck as guest speaker. The theme was "I shall not pass again this way." Bishop T. A. Beck devoted the week of January 6 to speaking at group meetings and making home visits in Flint.

Filmstrips and demonstrations have assisted those in charge of the classes in religious training which are being conducted for nine weeks. Workers and parents from both churches meet each Sunday afternoon for this series of classes.

A choir of twenty has been developed at the Baltimore Church. New choir robes have been purchased. The Hamilton Church Choir gave a concert at the Veterans Hospital in Saginaw the evening of February 21. Mrs. Henry Spencer was soloist. Allen Pohly directed the choir and Kathleen Barker was the pianist.

On the opening night the women's department of the St. Louis Branch served the banquet. Priest Herbert Tourville was toastmaster. Brother Mesle showed slides and the balance of the evening was spent by the young people making new acquaintances and renewing old ones.

Ettinger started the Sunday morning worship service, and Brother Mesle instructed the morning youth class. Elder Daniel M. Belcher, St. Louis District youth leader, preached at the eleven o'clock service. A fellowship service brought the conference to a close.—Reported by THOMAS S. GOUGH

Progress Noted in Mission

SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA.—Since January, 1951, a group of Saints living in the southern part of Marin County has held services in the San Rafael Union Labor Hall, located at Mission and Tamalpais Streets. This group has progressed under the supervision and guidance of Brother Robert Bishop of the Northern California District presidency.

The need for church services was felt when several of the sisters met together in a home the latter part of 1950. A women's group was organized under the leadership of Rosalyn Bussey and started functioning immediately. Funds were obtained from several sources to have available the necessary financing for securing a meeting place for church services.

In January, 1951, the use of the Union Labor Hall in San Rafael was obtained for Sunday morning church school services. Brother Jerry Macrae and Brother Homer Kelley conducted the first few services, assisted by ministers from the Santa Rosa Branch. A project was initiated to obtain some hymnals. Brother Herbert Salisbury wrote to the Saints in Independence and a dozen new hymnals were paid for and autographed by the purchaser and were forwarded to San Rafael.

On March 11, 1951, Brother and Sister Arthur Hawkes and daughter attended the services and expressed an interest in the endeavors of this little group and a desire to assist them in any way possible. Brother Hawkes is a first lieutenant in the U. S. Army, stationed at the Presidio of San Francisco. Brother Macrae requested help from Brother Hawkes because of the lack of members of the priesthood in the group. Brothers Salisbury and Hawkes were the only priesthood members. After this time, preaching services were conducted following the church school hour.

During the first two weeks of July the services of Seventy Herbert Lynn were used in cottage meetings, preaching services, visiting, and administrations.

In September, 1951, the official organization of this mission was accomplished in a business meeting under the direction of Brother Bishop, of the district presidency. The officers selected are as follows: pastor and director of religious education, Brother Arthur Hawkes; assistant director of religious education, Brother Roy McNeil; secretary, Dorothea Hawkes; women's department leader, Rosalyn Bussey; director of music and treasurer, Ethel McNeil; publicity agent, Marie Gosline. The name of Helen Pierce was submitted as historian, subject to approval by the district historian. The church school teachers are as follows: Sisters Ethel McNeil, Beverly Downard, Ernestine Ardito, and Helen Pierce, and Brothers Arthur Hawkes and Wesley Olson. Brother Harry Farrell was selected as custodian and Leona Salisbury assists with the music. Brother Salisbury serves as counselor to Brother Hawkes. Sister May St. Clair, although nearly eighty years of age, is one of the mission's most faithful members.

Activities of this mission other than church services have included basket dinners, rummage sales, bazaars, Christmas card sales, cake sales, and socials. A midweek evening service has been held since August in the home of Sister Ardito. The pastor has taught a class using Brother Elbert A. Smith's book Restoration, A Study in Prophecy as the textbook.

There have been two baptisms since the organization of this mission. These two young sisters are Barbara McNeil and Arthea Hawkes.—Reported by DOROTHEA HAWKES

Seven Baptized

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.—Elder Arthur Dixon of Miami, Oklahoma, was the guest speaker February 10. His subject was "The Importance of the Kingdom." A baptismal service was held in the evening, and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Nash and their teen-age sons, Eugene and Donald, were baptized by Mark Mink. Brother David Lohr and Brother Mink had held cottage meetings for the Nash family. This service made the total of seven people baptized this year. Elder Stephen Black, pastor, preached in the evening. On February 17, a regional priesthood meeting was held at the branch. Other branches represented were Neosho, Webb City, Medoc, and Miami.

The choir is under the direction of May Gray, and Sister Eleanor Hoffman is the leader of the junior choir.

The branch was represented at the Zion's League retreat at Carthage, Missouri, February 17, with their leader, Ted Linder.

Junior church is held on Sundays under the direction of Elder Seth Spangler. Sister Mary Spangler and Sister Grace Lohr supervise the primary work.

The priesthood meets on Monday nights for prayer, study and visiting.—Reported by RACHEL M. TROYER

Series Held in February

BREMERTON, WASHINGTON.—High Priest Garland E. Tickemyer, president of the Los Angeles Stake, held a series of meetings in February. Pastor Glen Davis invited the members of surrounding congregations to attend on specific evenings. Before the arrival of Brother Tickemyer, the local group was divided into two sections, and an attendance campaign held. The campaign was held in the form of a contest with 200 points for inactive members, 100 points for nonmembers and ten points for members and children. The last night of the contest, the groups found they had tied, so the pastor called the contest a draw. On Thursday evening a dinner was served. The winners were supposed to have eaten turkey, and the losers were to have beans, but both groups were served turkey and beans, as a result of the tie. This was also the sixteenth anniversary of the Tickemyers, and they were presented with a lighted cake as the group sang, "Happy Anniversary." The branch hostess, Mary Mascher, then presented Sister Tickemyer with an orchid corsage and Brother Tickemyer with a boutonniere. Team captains Lundeen and Roll were each presented with a corsage as was Sister Rose Lasater; Sister Lasater and her husband, Bishop Lasater, were guests of the evening.

The Communion service on the Sunday of the series was under the direction of Pastor Glen Davis and Brother Tickemyer. A fellowship meeting was held following the service. On Sunday night the services began with a solo by Brother Tickemyer. Each evening he sang an aria from The Messiah or the Elijah. After the Friday night service, Blanche Corbin was baptized by Evangelist A. W. Lundeen. Roy Boling was baptized on Saturday by Brother Lundeen. Several others have also indicated a desire to be baptized.

On Saturday morning the district youth conference convened under the direction of

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—A special ordination and Communion service was held March 2. The pastor, Elder Vernon E. Lundeen, was in charge. Deacon Doyle E. Sundell was ordained to the office of priest; Teacher Sylvester F. Roberts, priest; Deacon Thor K. Olvedt, priest; and Priest Howell W. Champion, elder. Fifteen Baptized

PUYALLUP, WASHINGTON.—Missionary Don Landon divided his time in February between Tacoma and Puyallup, holding cottage meetings for three days and evenings each. He sometimes held three meetings a day. This and previous months of effort resulted in fifteen baptisms. Six were baptized at a service following the Seattle District conference at Seattle Second Church February 10, and the remaining nine were baptized in the new font at the Seattle First Church two weeks later. Other cottage meetings are still in progress and favorable decisions are expected.

Those baptized on February 10 were Larry Dobson by his father Elder W. W. Dobson; Bonnie Dering, Larry Bartolatz, Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Morris and daughter Dandra by the pastor Elder Claude W. Wheeler. These candidates were confirmed at Puyallup the following Sunday evening at a special confirmation service. Mary Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Morris, was blessed by Elder Wheeler, assisted by Elder Landon.

On February 24, the McKean and Woolery families united with the church. Brother Landon baptized Mr. Cecil McKean and daughters Ada May, Margaret Elaine, and Caroline. Elder Dobson baptized Mrs. Clara Woolery and her children, Beverly, Allen, Byron, and LeRoy. The candidates were confirmed the following Sunday morning at a special service with District President Granville Swenson and Bishop Monte Lasater of Seattle; Elder Leonard Rhodes of Camas, Washington; and Will Cornish of Saskatchewan, Canada, assisting. Rosa Annette McKean was blessed by Elders Claude Wheeler and Wallace Dobson. Sister McKean had joined the church years before, so the family circle is complete. Larry Dobson was confirmed, the ordinance having been postponed two weeks before due to illness. Byron Woolery's confirmation was postponed.—Reported by ELMER J. COUSINEAU

Twelve Candidates Baptized

HILL CITY, KANSAS.—Elder Calvin French of Nevada, Missouri, has just recently completed a series of meetings. There were twelve baptisms, and on Sunday morning, March 9, Seventy James C. Daugherty of the Kansas District presidency organized a church school. A Communion service was held, and there were six children blessed. The following were baptized: Lawrence Hedge, Barbara Gene Hedge, Peggy Gene Hedge, Marie Garrison, Alonzo Garrison, Blanch Garrison, Billy Garrison, Leroy Keith, Verla Keith, Floyd Keith, Darrel Garrison, and Gary Dean. Children blessed were Virginia Dee Hedge, Judy Lee Hedge, Jerry Vee Hedge, Larry Marcellis Dean, Patricia Garrison, and Sheila Keith.—Reported by RONALD MANUEL

Stories That Live

Children, parents, and teachers will welcome this book of sixty-two inspirational stories. They are all based on true incidents taken from the lives of church members.

These stories were selected as some of the best published in Zion's Hope and Stepping Stones and are favorites to be repeated over and over. Children will enjoy reading them at home, and they can be used in family worship and church school worship.

Integrating the Newcomer Into the Work of the Branch

PART II

GENUINE INTEREST in others lessens wrong attitudes which lead to regret. Regret is the hard way to learn, although it is the royal road to repentance and repentance makes one strong. The unity of purpose, with a common understanding of the business of integrating (at the same time considering our likes and dislikes in kingdom-building projects) is the achievement we most sincerely covet. We see the need together. We surge forward together. Together we help each other to do the best, and the praise and honor go to our divine leader.

I have in mind a certain instance. Although I never heard who led out in this experience (which is as it should be), there is much of God's love and human love running through the story, or it never could have been. A sister and her husband had made orderly and lawful preparation to move to Independence from a faraway city in order to spend their remaining years together in Independence. A married daughter living here had arranged for the purchasing of a home for her parents which was almost the counterpart of the home they were leaving. The furniture had arrived in Independence, and the couple had almost finished the good-by visits with friends and relatives, when sudden illness took the husband's life. In Independence, neighbors and friends immediately entered into the picture. The newly purchased house was well cleaned under the supervision of the son-in-law; the boxes, trunks, and furniture were unpacked. Things were put away and furniture placed. When the woman arrived at the end of a long journey, she stepped into familiar surroundings and was greeted by solicitous friends and a church family who knew her. These and other groups now continuously benefit from her courageous attitude and her active church and community life.

Another example of timely service in the face of extreme emergency occurred when a mother died in an automobile accident leaving her husband and three children in high school and college. The women of her branch formed committees which kept up the home and the cooking for the four months or so until school closed. There are other experiences I am tempted to relate. The men in various branches have built and painted houses for the unfortunate; they have reaped fall harvests for the handicapped. Wherever Christian communities exist, the concern for each other takes form in action. A remark Bishop Curry once made—"There is a very definite value in doing something together"—is an excellent definition or interpretation of the process of integration. "Cultivate friends," he said, "for there is no substitute for friendship." Friendship will make the poor rich (figuratively speaking) by creating incentive. President Frederick M. Smith once told that he hoped the day would come when there would be no poor among us.

WHICH BRINGS ME to the "poor in spirit"—the poorest of the poor. "If they come unto me," said the Savior, "theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Here is where the casual call, the kindly telephone conversation, the invitation to shop together, to call on another, helps so very much. A friend of ours often comes to my mind. We knew that her husband had left the church, in a way, and we supposed that she had done likewise. However, we kept up our friendship, and one day she mentioned the church for the first time in several years. She exclaimed tearfully, "How I have longed to go back to the Stone Church and grasp Fred M.'s hand again. How I miss my old friends!" As we talked on I learned that she went along with her husband to be loyal to him; that most of their neighbors dropped them, even ceasing to greet them as they passed on the street. I keenly sensed her suffering and loneliness. I urged her to return to the Stone Church the very next Sunday and to sit where she always liked to sit. I added that I was sure she would feel at home, that people would greet her the same as ever, and that many would think she had been out of town visiting her children—which was true, I reminded her. "Anyway, you try it and see what happens," I coaxed. This is a "happy ever after" story, for she went to church every Sunday thereafter and President Smith, "Fred M.," called on her that week. "No poor in spirit" is the goal of goals.

I wish I did not feel that this sad circumstance has been repeated many times among our people, but I do. How often an inactive member (really a discarded member) becomes a newcomer and has the battle to fight alone. More often such sheep never return to the fold, yet the Savior said, "Feed my sheep," which is our first responsibility. Continued friendliness and neighborliness is a good risk whatever the circumstance.

Just the other day a friend telephoned me, wearily breathing, "Oh, we are so low. We have so much sorrow. When will you come out?" "Why, tonight, of course. It is prayer meeting, but we will miss it for an evening with you folk." "Oh, no, you go on to prayer meeting and ask the Saints to pray for us!" Then later she sighed out, "I wish I had some church work to do. That would help." I felt miserable again when I realized that among us she had kept busy alone for years in her kind and friendly way, when she had been and still is competent and trained to take responsibilities few of us have experienced. Somewhere we have slipped, and now she needs the fellowship which she has freely given to others.

HERE IS an outstanding example of the richness which envelopes the lives of those who rise above poverty of spirit even when they lack the material "things" which would make life more comfortable. The family was large. The parents were devoted Latter Day Saints—the kind who radiate enjoyment of the things of the spirit. Home devotions were a part of their daily living—enjoyed and participated in by the children. I have watched these people for many years, and they are my one personal experience with knowledge of what richness of spirit means and brings about. However, they did their part to make friends. They know our church leaders, and so do their children who are all good parents and dependable church workers. Where there are children involved, the urgency of sincere friendship is twofold.

Recently I learned of a young bride, a newcomer (not in Independence, however) who attended her church three times and no one spoke to her—not even the pastor. (There is where a hostess would have helped.) She wrote a letter to her mother, who shortly came visiting. Together they went to church, and when the same thing happened to the mother, she swarmed up front and "colored the pastor." And this is another story with a happy ending.

Surely we have all been newcomers at least once, and some of us a number of times, during our moving here and there in the land, either with our parents or with our families. Forty-seven years ago my parents brought us children to Zion. Father preceded us by three months, got acquainted with the bishop, established a business, and then came for us. In later years (I had married and returned to our old home) my own family and I moved to Independence, and for forty years we have lived in the same home. So we haven't even been newcomers in a different neighborhood since then. But we were all well cared for in those days when the Stone Church more than held the General Conference.

THIS GATHERING and integrating process has been going on slowly and definitely under the leadership, first, of the son of the Martyr, a kindly, mighty, and strong man, and then by his sons. Many living here and near by have inched along from state to state or farm to farm, "hitch-hiking" Zionward until now the hastening time is here and a neighborhood newcomer, even from another part of town, is someone to be welcomed. The simplest courtesies are the most heart warming. If we cannot leave home for a get-together, we telephone a new neighbor to come over for lunch or breakfast. This is a delightful custom among my neighbors. We should feel the call to volunteer service in strengthening the gospel bonds which have brought us together. The simple get-acquainted efforts reveal us to each other, relax our nerves, and prevent adverse attitudes from forming. Most unhappy conditions result from our actually being strangers to each other. Our business is making friends for the Master. "Man is that he might have joy," reads the Book of Mormon.

Here is the story of the conversion of Albert, our bachelor brother in Gloucester, England. The Saints had found a bargain, and they bought it. It was a hall to be converted into a church. The women sang and talked happily during their sessions of cleaning and painting, and the men worked overtime to get the building ready. Then one day the church sign went up, and that answered Albert's questions about these cheerful, busy people he had listened to daily as he passed along the street. He'd have to investigate people who could survive the ordeals of war and demonstrate such enthusiasm and faith in God. To hear Albert raise his voice in prayers of faith, praise, and thankfulness, or in singing hymns is a real treat. Numbers of converts to the gospel in England become interested first through the women's work among their friends who become active in the women's department; at times, children are baptized before parents take the step.

Child interests are great feeders for us sheep! I remember that our very successful church school leader of tiny tots, "Miss Tessie," branched out a bit when her own small girls began to enjoy parties. She liked to have a "couple of couples" over with the children for an evening play together. Mine still remember a certain Christmas party in an upstairs room. What a splendid integration project—this opportunity for parents to exchange opinions and experiences. It was an opportunity, too, for children to form early church friendships. I remember that Bishop Stanley Kelley once said, "If we'd sweat more in times of opportunity, we'd shed fewer tears in times of stress."

WE CANNOT DISASSOCIATE the many and varied aspects of living from the work of the branch. Special responsibilities come when once we are united in the common goal of the church—when once we realize that the "U" in the word "united" means "you"! Personally, I like mixers, serenades for newcomers, yard and garden projects, or any interest which takes us into each other's homes. Hobbies—endless in variety—should be encouraged, they are an indication of talent, skill, and character, as well as an opportunity for conversation and a basis for continuing friendship. Interest in hobbies may suggest a call to see shut-in Lottie's African violet collection; Zella's gay chrysanthemum field on a cloudy day; Lucy's sunken garden, with its surprise plantings, or a gathering to watch the night-blooming cereus open. We know about the music and flowers in heaven, so together let's enjoy more of such interests here.

I am thinking now of Sister Nina Smith and her persistent interest in championing musical development in the young, and of her hobby of collecting flowers. She would try out this and that root or seed, and every May, during the years when she was women's leader in the Stone Church area, she held an exchange of slips, plants, and starts for us women. This was a very enjoyable mixer and friendship builder.

There are endless pleasures and activities we can enjoy together, such as the Red Cross, civic interests, and the very pertinent matter of health forums. All of them provide participation and an outlet for the person who is enthusiastic about building up the interests of the church.

WHEN PEOPLE GATHER or join us here, they expect (and they have a right to) to experience a glowing, glorious spirit of good will, fellowship, and worship. Which brings me to how the Slover Park congregation welcomed the two Norton families who came over from England this summer. As soon as they had had a week or so to get their breath after finding and moving into a house, here came members of the branch one evening, bringing a "pound" party. That was a real surprise and fun! The Parkers are having fun too. (They embarked for the U.S.A. the day we left our shores for England last April. About halfway across we exchanged radiograms as our ships drew quite near to each other about six o'clock one evening.) They made an extra room out of the breezeway in the cottage they have purchased and enjoyed the help of their pastor and friend of their youth, Brother Fred Davies, and the Timms, also recently from England. All four families have been special guests at several large get-acquainted parties this fall—a gesture which will bring the Saints of Great Britain very close to us in spirit. They are sending to the church in England tape recordings of greetings and singing by their American friends, which is the beginning of an integration project. We are hoping for an exchange of records.

Their gifts of culture, music, and leadership are inspiring, as has been demonstrated through the years by those who have ministered to us here. I heard an inspiring talk on prayer delivered by the young pastor of the Enfield Branch in London at the district conference Communion service. I once heard Apostle Hield define prayer as "talking over with God the campaign of the kingdom," and President Smith at the opening service of this Institute admonished us to "cultivate the habitual consciousness of the presence of God." We often heard the Saints of three nationalities pray—pray for you, pray for us, pray for the church—and plead that they themselves might serve well. We were greatly moved by the example of the German Saints who, when ordered from their homes by the Russians, found space in their small bundles for the Three Standard Books of the church. As far as is known, no one left his books behind.

In the spirit of the Gathering let us seek to know more about each other; let us read, perhaps even novels; let more of us correspond.

As we talked about the Gathering with the women abroad, sometimes through an interpreter, we agreed that all our homes and branches should become little Zion workshops. Then we pictured the strength and love and fellowship of the church in the Center Place radiating in spiritual beams out over the earth, contacting all of us who are tuned to receive spiritual stimuli. I urged them all to unite with us to make every day one of preparation for His coming, for by this means we can develop a full endowment of his love. Then Zion living will be a reality, and Zion will become a fact. This time will come.

Christ, the Man

By Josephine Montgomery

TO REALLY APPRECIATE Christ's contribution to the lives of men, we must look at him as a man. After all, he was a man. And as a man he was subject to all the emotions and desires that we are. I particularly like to think of him in the capacity of a friend.

When Christ walked the earth, he was a man of many friends. I believe that he felt the need for human companionship, the need to love and be loved, as much as we do. We are too much in the habit of making broad generalizations when we think of Christ and love. We say that he loved everyone and, in generalizing about his great love for humanity, we forget that he was a man who must have had a special love for close friends.

Just as we depend on our friends' help when we are in trouble, Christ must have depended on his friends for comfort during his life, especially during the hectic three years of his ministry, and more especially during the last week. Near the end he asked his friends to go for a walk with him one night—just as we might seek out our friends when we are in trouble. He took them with him—not because they could help him but because it comforted him to have them near. And when they reached a garden in the city, he asked eight of them to wait there while he took the three men who were his closest friends farther on with him. We are apt to do that when we are troubled. We want many friends with us, but we want our closest friends nearest us.

BUT EVEN CLOSE FRIENDS cannot always share the heaviest part of our troubles. Christ knew that, and because he loved these three too much to have them know how dispirited he really was, he asked them to wait while he went away for private prayer. And in a gesture that marks how human he was, he asked them to stay awake and pray with him.

When Christ had finished praying and came back to these three close friends, he found them asleep. Try to imagine how he must have felt. How would you feel if you were in deep sorrow and your best friends went to sleep when you needed them most? I think Christ's reproach to Peter, James, and John shows how much he was hurt.

"What, could ye not watch with me one hour?"

When he said those words, Christ meant them simply as a reproach for that moment to friends who had let him down. He did not intend them to be prophetic. I do not think he intended them to be used at any other time as a reproach to his church. And yet, is there any other rebuke so fitting? As individuals in every age and as a church in every age, we have not watched with Christ. We have gone to sleep when he needed us most to be on the job.

THE REPROACH could be made to any religion, but especially to the Christian religion. In the first place, let's define what we mean by Christian. The word "Christian" has a twofold meaning. It means a person who believes in the historical fact that a man named Jesus Christ lived on earth. It also means a person who believes that the man Jesus Christ was the Son of God.

I don't like the word "Christian." It has fallen into disrepute in the same way that the words "democracy" and "communism" and "socialism" have. We use the word so lightly now that it may refer just as easily to a boss gambler as to a minister in this or any other Christian church. In place of this, I like to substitute the word "Christlike." To be Christlike means just what it says and, unlike Christian, it is a word which has not been corrupted.

Let me illustrate the difference. The disciples who went with Christ to Gethsemane were certainly Christian. They knew he was an actual living man, and they believed he was the Son of God. They were Christian, but they were not Christlike. Christ would never have gone to sleep when a friend needed the comfort of his presence and prayers. Peter was a Christian. But when he was asked at the inn if he knew the man from Nazareth, Peter's reply was not Christlike. Christ would never have denied a friend.

A Restored Life

By Omar L. Nunn

In his "Introduction to the Philosophy of Law," Roscoe Pound wrote: Jurisprudence must be judged by the results it achieves, not by the niceties of its internal structure; it must be valued by the extent to which it meets its ends, not by the beauty of its logical process.

This ideal has become a fundamental concept in the philosophy of civilized man. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., called it to mind and made it more personal when he said, "Human beings are so constituted that a man's value is determined not by the things he starts but by the things he completes."

Even God bases judgment according to this ideal. "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings" (Jeremiah 17: 10, A.V.).

This concept applies in every walk of life, but it is in religion that it gives us the greatest challenge we have ever received.

We are not being judged by intelligent men and women on a basis of our organizational structure, of the quantity or quality of the Scripture we quote, or of the quality of our sermons, important though these factors may be. Whether we like it or not, we cannot deny that we, as a church, are being judged and will continue to be judged on the basis of the quality of the goals and on our progress toward the successful realization of these goals.

Men and women of quality who are searching for truth look for those characteristics in our individual lives, our branches, and our church which bear testimony to the fact that the Restored Church of Jesus Christ offers more for their real benefit than can any other church or any other organization.

How much greater would be the results of our missionary endeavors if we would but supplement our testimonies of a restored gospel, a restored priesthood, and a restored organization with a further testimony of a restored life through our new birth in Jesus.

Correction

Last week's New Horizon feature, ". . . And Witness Unto Thee," carried the by-line "Biloine Whiting and Lloyd Hurshman." It should have read "Biloine Whiting Young and Lloyd Hurshman."

New Horizons

TODAY THIS CHURCH and every church is weakened because it has in its membership too few people who are Christlike. Missionaries in Eastern countries have a special name for this kind of convert. They call them "rice Christians"—people who are members as long as the missionary has rice to dole out to them, but when the rice is all gone, their religion is gone too. There are "rice Christians" in every congregation—people who take but never give and stay home when there is nothing more to take. I sometimes think that we don't need missionaries to convert new members until we have used missionaries to convert some of our old members.

Today, you can be intolerant and still be considered a Christian. You can be a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat and hate all things Republican and still be a good Christian. You can be intolerant of Negroes and Jews, dancers and canasta players, and still be a good Christian. But you cannot be intolerant and be Christlike.

One of the greatest signs that this nation is Christian but not Christlike is the waste and poverty that we have here in the midst of plenty. Everyone knows that the United States is a Christian country, but nowhere in the world is there less excuse for poverty and starvation. We are Christian, but not Christlike!

We can carry the difference between being Christian and Christlike into our own homes. To be Christlike implies such homely virtues as discipline, good manners, habits of industry, reverence, and orderliness. A Christlike home will combine the example of the parents with teaching to instill the value of Christlike-living into the children.

Too often in our modern law courts, justice depends on who has the best lawyer. Such justice is considered to be Christian in our Christian country. But it is not Christlike. I think we might define Christlike justice as what we owe the other person. Christ would not have bothered with lawyers or complicated legal machinery. He would not have been concerned with receiving justice, but rather with giving it.

CHRIST FOUND OUT in the garden of Gethsemane that one can be a Christian without being Christlike. He needed the love and comfort of his closest friends, but they failed him. They went to sleep. And he reproached them with the saddest question in religious literature: "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" I don't think he intended that question to be asked of us, yet it is applicable. Are we Christians who go to sleep when Christ needs us most, or are we Christlike? From that night in Gethsemane to the present, Christ's question has been a reproach to every generation. We have not watched with him as we should. We grow tired, and it is so easy to fall asleep—so easy to be merely Christian, so hard to be Christlike.

What would be our answer if Christ came to us with that question? Would we wake up yawning, searching for an excuse?

Letter to the Herald

Many changes have taken place since I last wrote a letter for the Herald, but I remain the same in spirit. I am especially interested in the Lord's promise to gather the House of Israel, as recorded in the eleventh chapter of Romans and elsewhere in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

An Answer to Prayer

I have been a very happy wife and mother since my husband joined the church last November. I hope my testimony will be of help to others who may be facing a similar problem.

My husband was a morally good man when I married him, although he wasn't a member of any church. I had not been baptized at that time either, but my mother was a Latter Day Saint and I joined about four years ago. After my husband went into service during World War II, he began drinking, and by the time he came home the habit was so strong he often took the money we needed for necessary things to buy liquor. I kept praying constantly, and my sister and brother-in-law who joined last April prayed too. They live across the street from us, and my husband has a lot of respect for them. He was converted when Brother Bobbitt came and held cottage meetings here in Iola. Others were baptized at the same time my husband was, and now we hope to be able to organize a branch here. We are now a part of the Iola-Chanute Branch and attend services in Chanute.

I know God loves everyone, and he is depending on us to go out and gather his sheep into the fold. If we keep the gospel story to ourselves, we are being selfish and slowing down the progress of God's work. Let us all be missionaries for the One who has done so much for us.

Explains Beliefs in Protestant Church School

Members of a Protestant church school class in our city invited me to explain our beliefs and doctrine to them. I was happy to be given the opportunity to do this, and spent a great deal of time preparing my remarks. There was a great deal to be said, and I realized as never before just how much our church enfolds.

Sunday morning dawned bright and clear, and my wife and I, together with another R.L.D.S. couple—mutual friends of those who had invited us to the class—arrived at the church and received a warm welcome. The group consisted of some thirty-five or forty members, and before class time coffee and doughnuts were served.

I began by telling them that we were not "Mormons," and we did not believe in plural marriages, as they no doubt had always heard. I took along a Book of Mormon, passed it among the group, and marked a passage in the Book of Jacob for them to read. This proved to be most interesting to them, and at the end of forty minutes the book still hadn't been passed half way around the class. I got a third of the way through my notes, when my listeners began asking questions and they didn't stop for the rest of the hour.

I have never seen a more open-minded group of people. They were thrilled by the stories of the Book of Mormon and the history of the early Americans. Of special interest to them was the story of how the people under the direction of the Brother of Jared and God, built eight vessels and lighted them with stones. One man remarked, "Well, that isn't so different from the Old Testament happenings."

They seemed to accept without question our belief in the divine call to the priesthood. They were amazed when they heard how our local men served without pay. They welcomed the truth about our church, and the differences which exist between us and the Utah people. They seemed to drink in the knowledge which I presented to them and wanted to know why we did not publicize our church more. This truly was a challenge.

One gentleman remarked after the class was over, "Well, I've always heard that you people believed in plural marriages, and that the Book of Mormon taught it, but now, I've actually seen the book, and no one can ever again tell me that."

Because of the interest manifested in the Book of Mormon, and the many questions asked, I didn't even begin to tell them all about the church. They were so interested that they invited me back. I am looking forward to the time when I can go.

When I left I realized as never before the magnitude of this work and saw clearly that indeed the field is white already to harvest. I felt very humble and filled with the Spirit of God as I stood before those good people, who had, with open minds, asked to hear the gospel message.

From a New Member

(The following letter was sent to the editors by William T. Guthrie. He received it from a sixteen-year-old girl who was reared a Catholic but asked for baptism in the Reorganized Church after hearing two sermons.)

I don't quite know how to begin this letter. I am not one for telling anybody in person what I think in my heart. I always seem to say it more easily on paper. I want to thank you, Brother Guthrie, for baptizing me. As long as I live I'll never forget that night. Something happened to me when I was baptized that made me feel like a new person. Tears of joy were in my eyes when I went downstairs to change my clothes. Going home I felt something like a child who has just received a new toy. I'll never be able to thank God enough for showing me the right path.

After going to church a month I prayed God would give me something to do for my church. My prayers were soon answered, and I am now teaching a class of little children. In my own sense God has come to me. I am happy to be able to pass on this experience to one who understands.

I am enclosing in this letter my next week's spending money. Three dollars isn't a very large amount, but I hope it will help you. I'm sure I won't miss it because it's going to the church.

On Missionary Work in the South

We have just returned from a vacation in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas. While there we worshipped with the Saints at Alamo; they have a lovely little church, and we enjoyed meeting them. On the last Sunday evening we were there Missionary Wayne Simmons preached. Any minister who expects to serve in that area must be able to speak Spanish, since many of the people speak that language and must be told the gospel story in words they understand. We also visited Mexico.

This trip made us realize more than ever what a wonderful work our missionaries are doing and that we as individual members must support them with our prayers and offerings.

A Democratic Church

This is a democratic church. Sometimes the members may feel that, should they not agree with authority, they would be considered disloyal. This is due to misunderstanding. I hope the day will soon come when the situation will not be so, when both priesthood and members will share with each other on common grounds.

The church has made great strides toward its goal of "Each One Win One." I was impressed when reading that the aim of one branch is to reclaim as many members as have been baptized.

We are experiencing great joy in our small group because of the number of people who are becoming interested in the work. This has been brought about largely through visiting in the homes and interesting the parents of nonmember children who attend church school.

Letter of Testimony

I believe God can speak to his children today as in the past. Experiences I have had have strengthened my faith. Before I was baptized I had very poor health, yet I felt assured that my life was not to end yet. After receiving administration I was able to offer my service to the church as a teacher in the children's department. At other times I have received similar blessings—when I had appendicitis, pneumonia, and a chronic infection. Last year when I was ill I prayed that God would send an elder to administer to me. I do not live near a branch and seldom get to attend services, but an elder came thirty-three miles even though I had not contacted him. He said he had been directed to come.

I need the prayers of the Saints that I may fully keep the whole law.

Pray Without Ceasing

I had the good fortune of attending the last General Conference, but was not as careful of my diet as I should have been during the week. Consequently, because I had not used wisdom, I awoke on Thursday morning early with a severe pain in my side. I felt as if something would have to be done immediately, but I did not want to awaken the other people in the house at that early hour. The Scripture, "pray without ceasing," came to my mind, so I began praying by asking forgiveness for not having been more careful about what I ate, and then asked for relief. I didn't get relief the first time, so I continued to pray until I felt three strokes of a hand on my side where the pain was. Immediately the pain left, and when I awoke later the good spirit was still with me. My heart overflowed with thankfulness to my Heavenly Father for his blessing, and I hope that my relating it will be of help to others who are in pain.

Washington Crossing is located seven miles below the historic Coryell's Ferry, which was originally named for Major Coryell, who was General Washington's aide-de-camp.

Members of the Reorganized Church who plan to attend the Reunion at Deer Park two miles south of New Hope are invited to view this painting. They are urged to make reservations with the reunion committee soon.

P.S.

* A DOCTOR'S HOME

The young doctor built a large home. He wanted room. There would be friends who would want to visit, and perhaps children would come. Children came, and friends visited. The house teemed with life and reverberated with happy voices and children's laughter.

Meanwhile the doctor's tireless steps—aided by a succession of faithful horses—took him to every corner of the town and far out into the country to visit the sick and to bring them comfort in their pain.

Years passed. The children grew up, went away, and lived careers of their own. The friends were older, too, and did not visit so often or so long. The big rooms upstairs were empty, and the doctor and his wife were alone again as they had been in the beginning.

But other people came by, looking for places to live. Why not? The retired couple were content with the first floor, and they disliked climbing the stairs. The upper rooms were turned to apartments. A young couple with small children moved in. There was a teacher, a widow, and a young man. Once more the house was filled with conversation and activity, and the sound of children's laughter.

The wisdom and generosity of the early years paid dividends in the later ones. There was a new source of income—for much of the early work had been done free, and many a bill had been left unpaid. Life went on, full and rich and happy, as life should always be.

* THE TREE

A big tree by my window has been bare of its leaves all winter, but the branches are filled with long pods full of seeds. Every seed is an ambition—an ambition to be another such tree, filled with the same kind of pods and seeds.

Competition is at the heart of nature. Every bush, every tree, every bit of grass has a plan for filling the whole earth with its kind—and would, too, if it were not for other things with the same idea. So the struggle goes on and the result is a compromise in which each one wins a place, but not all it desires. Perhaps there is a lesson for individuals and for nations in these things. Every seed is an ambition; but every ambition will find its limit somewhere.

* UPPER ROOMS

As you walk through the city, look up and notice how many buildings have their upper stories empty, curtains tattered at the windows, gathering dust and cobwebs. The plans called for activity upstairs, but people are unwilling to climb. We want everything on the ground floor, or we don't want it. In the Fearful Fifties, we plan to cover the earth with one-story buildings. . . . And as you pass people on the street, notice how many have well-dressed bodies and empty faces. Not much upstairs. A few memories and a little dust. We live in the present moment, with hardly a thought for history or destiny. . . . It was in an upper room that Jesus instituted the sacred Eucharist. Perhaps the soul is a kind of upper room. Shall we leave ours empty and dusty?

Senator Milton Young's Conference Address

PRESIDENT SMITH, and members of the Latter Day Saint Church. This is the greatest honor that has ever come to me in my life, to stand before a congregation of Latter Day Saints of this size and character. My mind can't help but go back many years to the time when my mother—always a devout Christian but a strong Methodist at that time—attended some meetings held by the once great elder of this church, Elder Sparling, in a little town of North Dakota.

Soon after hearing the gospel my mother became a member of the church and she lived to bring all of her own children, all of her grandchildren, and all of her great-grandchildren into the church. Mother was a devoted Christian. She worked and saved her money that her children might attend Graceland College. She had a different concept of tithing than most of us have. She had a little broader concept. You know, most of us believe we should pay one tenth of our net income. Mother's concept was such that, if she had had her way, she would have given half of the entire family income to the church.

As I look back across the years I think that membership in this church has been the greatest influence of my life. In politics, membership in a church so small as this (in North Dakota we have only 600 members) is not so great an advantage; and oftentimes as I campaigned I was called a "Mormon," but the teachings of the church, its example of morality, fairness, and honesty, were assets that far outweighed any disadvantage we might have in numbers or bitter attacks we were subjected to by other church members. It has been a real source of joy and encouragement to belong to this church, and everywhere I go I never have to apologize for the members of this church. Brother Israel A. Smith, as the former President Frederick M., enjoyed the finest reputation not only inside the circle of this church but throughout the nation. It is this type of leadership and this type of Christianity which we are so sadly lacking in the world today.

I sometimes wonder just what and where we are drifting to. We seem to be paying more attention to military preparedness than we are preparedness for the world to come. I submit that in a long range program, it is more to our own best interest to prepare to meet our God than it is to meet the menace of godless Communism. In my opinion unless there is greater adherence to the teachings of Christ on the part of all world leaders, another great conflict seems inevitable.

Probably you have noticed in the last two or three months a slackening up in our defense efforts. I believe that undoubtedly the thinking on the part of our military leaders is that an attack from communistic Russia is not imminent. We are postponing a time of constructing of all military weapons for some two or three years. I believe that indicates a feeling on the part of our leaders that we may have at least a period of security for war.

As I said before, the greatest need of the world today is a return to Christianity. I can't help but feel as I meet many of these world leaders how sadly they lack in an understanding and belief in the teachings of Christ.

It Was a Great Conference

HISTORY WAS MADE at the 1952 Conference. There were 7,168 people registered. "Satan came also," but he went away disappointed. He failed utterly to throw up a road block to the onward movement of kingdom progress.

It is true that Reorganized Latter Day Saints are apt to label every Conference as the best ever held. However, we rest our case concerning this Conference on the facts. To our way of thinking, the greatness of this Conference is based upon its achievements. Three major pieces of legislature which will affect the church for years to come were achieved, but not without much concern involving prayer and fasting. We want to list these and discuss them briefly.

Rules of Order

For many years the church has been without a publication of Rules of Order for the branch, district, and stake. While some are still in existence, they are out of print and not available to many of the administrative officers of the church. In some respects these do not cover fundamental relationships so as to draw clearly administrative lines of function.

The Rules of Order as prepared by the committee and published in the Daily Conference Herald attempted to clarify policies and procedures on these points. Attempts were made by individuals and quorums to further clarify or protect certain interests by means of substitutes and amendments. However, for three days it seemed that these were only apt to confuse and sharply divide rather than to clarify and to bring harmony. These were finally resolved by three major legislative accomplishments.

1. The Conference arrived at a basic statement of understanding concerning the relationship of the stake president and the stake bishopric to each other and the stake conference.

2. It established a fundamental principle that the stake conference is the legislative unit and that the selection of congregational leaders should be determined at this level rather than at the congregational level. The stake president's right of nomination of congregational pastors runs concurrently with that of the membership.

3. It made clear and definite the right, as well as the responsibility, of the district president to co-operate with the branch president in scheduling branch business meetings and in personally attending or being represented at them.

Background not Clear

It seemed quite evident that many of the delegates were unable to discern the need for so much debate and amendments of the original documents presented by the committee. However, experience over the years has shown that good administrators have found themselves at variance with each other over procedures on the stake level, and the rules needed some clarification. It is not fair to say that this was a struggle for power or due to jealousy. Rather, men are expected to carry their own responsibilities, and when the lines of demarkation between the work of one or the other is not clear, problems are bound to arise.

The greatest discussion arose over the question of whether the members of congregations should be allowed to make concurrent nominations with the stake president for the congregational pastors. This was resolved by a substitute which was brought in on Saturday afternoon declaring that the legislative unit of a stake was the stake conference, and that the people should be permitted to make nomination for pastoral leadership of the congregations at this point. This met with the general acceptance of the Conference, and all controversy seemed to be resolved immediately.

A Solution Proposed

After the session we told one of the apostles who introduced the substitute, that we felt he had done a wise and helpful thing in bringing in this solution to the problem. He replied promptly, "Listen, the basic idea of that was given to me early in the morning, and I do not deserve the credit." Many testimonies have since been received that God did move to avert the division in the church and another 1925-sized controversy through giving a solution which seemed to meet universal favor at the very outset.

The third issue on district and branch relationships had a background of some unhappy experiences where pastors are alleged to have resented the district president's supervision at the branch level. Some pastors, it seemed, preferred that the district officers do not attend the branch business meetings or have any part in the nominating of branch officials. This issue was happily resolved by a resolution which came in from the high priests' quorum, proposing that it be the joint responsibility of pastor and district president to schedule the business meetings at such time and place as will permit district officials concerned to be present and participate in such ways as would seem to be best for the work of the church as a whole.

An Ovation to Alaska

One of the most exciting bits of legislation had to do with the action of the Conference in passing on the Appropriations Report. An amendment was brought in to include a three-thousand-dollar appropriation for the purchase of a lot and to help in erecting a church at Anchorage, Alaska. Some of the speakers thought the amount was inconsequential, but the principle involved of taking away the initiatory rights of the Board of Appropriations was

Dr. Floyd McDowell Resigns From Graceland Board of Trustees

During the recent General Conference held in Independence, Missouri, action was taken on a document submitted by Dr. Floyd M. McDowell who resigned from the Board of Trustees of Graceland College. It was with reluctance that the First Presidency presented this document to the Conference, but because of the nature of the demands in time and energy in order that he shall give his best to the work of the Board, we felt it expedient to do so in order to relieve Brother McDowell of the pressure of this responsibility. He has been on the Board thirty years and has served as its President for three years. During this time he has given unstintingly of his time and, wherever necessary, has gone out of his way to make himself available for the work which is necessary for the conduct of the college. He has seen the institution grow and, with this growth, the problems multiply. The demands upon the time of the members of the Board have been great during this past year and, with our consent, Brother McDowell has been spending the past year at the college representing the Board in studying some of the problems which need to be solved.

The response to the call for a standing vote of appreciation for Brother McDowell's services during the Conference spoke well of the great love that the members of the church have for Brother McDowell. We want to add our personal word of appreciation of the service he has rendered both to the college and to the church which sponsors it.

We are publishing this article so that the total membership of the church may know that Brother McDowell, in offering his resignation, has done so under no duress and only because he feels that the best interests of his own health, the college, and church can be served in this way.

He will continue to supervise the work of Priesthood Education and, being assisted by Brother Evan Fry, will continue to produce literature and courses of study which can be carried on by the priesthood. He will continue to carry on contacts in the field wherever his presence is requested and his strength will permit.

As we are very well aware, Brother McDowell has always been assisted in the work that he has done for the church and the college by his good wife, who has stood by and supported him in his home and in his public ministry. We salute these two grand people at this time and commend them not alone for what they have done but for what they are.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

I would like to talk much longer to you. I haven't had time to prepare any statement, but I do wish to express my deep appreciation for this opportunity of appearing before you today. I assure you that it has been the greatest honor in my life. I have enjoyed it. I only wish that I could stay longer, but in order to make this brief appearance I had to ask that a plane be held up for a few minutes so I could make it.

If any of you are ever in Washington, I would be most happy to have you stop and see me, as some of you do. You know I have as a personal secretary a good Latter Day Saint girl from Lamoni. She is a graduate of Graceland College and she is the most obedient girl I have ever had around the office. When some member of the church comes to the office and wants to see me, she just disregards the schedule I have and makes arrangements accordingly.

I only wish I had an opportunity of visiting personally with some people I met here in Independence when I spent the winter of '16 and '17, and also during that period when I was in Graceland College during 1915-16. I think the happiest days of my life were during that time when I was at Graceland. I think the greatest mistake I have ever made was that I didn't stay there longer.

Thank you again very much.

Presidency's Report

To the Ex Officios, Delegates, and Visitors of the General Conference:

WE ARE HAPPY to welcome you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to report on our stewardship during the past biennium, to reaffirm our faith in the Cause of the Kingdom, and to point the way for the period which lies immediately ahead.

We are happy, also, that the twelve members of the apostolic council are all present with us in this Conference, as are the Presiding Evangelist, the members of the Presiding Bishopric, the Presidents of the Quorum of High Priests, and the Presidents of Seventies. The recent ordination of Elder H. I. Velt of the Presidents of Seventy to the Evangelical Order leaves the only vacancy at present existing in these presiding Councils.

BAPTISMAL GAINS

The 1950-52 inter-Conference period has been a good one. It is probably not too much to say that in this period more members of the church have worked at our common task, more persistently and with better understanding, than in any similar period. As a result the upward trends in baptisms and finances, set in recent years, have continued; the Work has been more firmly grounded in many centers; many well-located new openings have been made; departmental and institutional advances have been registered; and better foundations have been laid for the advances yet before us. We report these things with humility, knowing that we have fallen short at many points, and being deeply moved by our sense of indebtedness to our Heavenly Father. But we report them with deep satisfaction, also, as the best possible justification for the sacrifices which so many of you have made.

Baptisms for 1950 were 4,771, and those for 1951 were 4,952, a total of 9,723 for the two-year period. Of these new members, 4,882 (50.2 per cent) were less than fifteen years of age at the time of their baptism and represent roughly the gains from our homes and church schools. The remaining 4,841 (49.8 per cent) are chiefly from missionary contacts and indicate our outreach to new areas. The nonappointee ministers, responding to the plea of the Council of Twelve to become adept in missionary work, have added materially to these outreaching gains and deserve the thanks of the church. But sound missionary growth demands more than improved missionary equipment and techniques. Fundamentally, our need is for such power as only God can give us. This power will be ours as our lives are ennobled and made attractive through prayer and faith and good works. The call for unmatched missionary outreach is, first of all, a call to revival of that faith which made our fathers confident and strong and good.

LOCAL ORGANIZATION

The General Conference of 1950 authorized the organization of the Center Stake of Zion, the Detroit International Stake, and the Los Angeles Stake. These organizations were carried out with the approval of the Saints in the areas involved, and have already begun to justify themselves by relieving general officers of some of the burdens of responsibility for local administration, and by the growing participation of the stake high councils as advisors to the stake presidencies and bishoprics. While the organization of further stakes is not advisable at this time, and should never be undertaken except in response to clear inspirational direction, observance of the underlying principle involved in stake organization is important in local expansion. This principle has to do with such high-priestly guidance in districts and large branches as will free general officers of detailed responsibility in these areas. Development along these lines is directly influenced by the emergence of leaders of high-priestly caliber. It is also directly influenced by the progress of the Saints in understanding and in the skills of the kingdom way of life. We have been heartened as we have observed the many places where these two essentials of effective local organization have paralleled each other.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP

In the biennium many new churches have been freed of debt and dedicated. Many others have been completed, and will be ready for dedication when loans to the houses of worship revolving fund have been repaid. This fine record continues a trend set in earlier years, eighty-five churches having been built or purchased since 1946 in addition to those which have been extensively remodeled. This has been possible only because of the planning and labor and financial sacrifices of those living where these churches have been built. At headquarters we have specially appreciated the faithfulness with which borrowers have repaid Houses of Worship loans, and have thus enabled the church to assist other needy congregations. Experience gained in building these churches has been distilled in the booklet Planning Your Church Building just off the press.

Thought concerning the functions to be discharged in our churches has led naturally to consideration of our basic congregational ministries: worship, preaching, and teaching. Members of the priesthood, and particularly the elders, are called to leadership in these ministries and should make special effort to develop the insight and skills essential to them. Not many excel in all these fields. But, on the other hand, many can do surprisingly well in one or more of them. We expect to sponsor and support regional and local gatherings concerned with these matters, and believe that before long schools for the ministry should be set up in some of our major centers for the benefit of the growing number of men called of God to local leadership in the kingdom endeavor.

The worship of God is our major and distinctive source of power and unity. We suggest that those who carry responsibility for the administration of worship give continuing attention to the meaning and functions of the ordinances, so that these shall be made to convey the revelation of God at work in the lives of men more and more vividly. We suggest also, and with great seriousness, that in our prayer and testimony meetings the moral and spiritual struggle to which we are committed should have a larger place. The burden of our prayers should be for wisdom and strength to live as the people of God. We should recall yesterday's blessings with gratitude, but chiefly that we might gain heart from them for today's battle. The gifts of God are given to those who fight at his side. Their essential condition is moral earnestness. They may commend and comfort and reassure, and heal. But their ultimate purpose is our salvation, and we are saved as we come to love what God loves, and hate what God hates, and so give active service for his Cause. There are times when we tend to equate the Spirit of God with an emotion. We need to equate it more directly with the power that guarantees victory to those who strive for the right.

Because the worship of God is of primary importance, refinement of the approaches to worship becomes one or our major duties. This is important, as has been noted, in relation to our church buildings. It is possibly even more important in relation to our church music, and we have felt grateful for the increasing awareness of our people concerning the importance of using hymns and anthems and instrumental numbers of such dignity and beauty and sacred quality as make them genuine ministers to spiritual growth.

We believe that the members of the priesthood who are specially called thereto by their peculiar gifts should give studious attention to their preaching ministry. In this ministry doctrine is of fundamental importance. This word "doctrine" has been in some disrepute of late, even among our own people. This is apparently a reaction against narrow concepts of doctrine. Yet doctrine—the clear and sound statement of our faith about God and man—is inescapably necessary. It is the root and ground of wise action.

TEACHING

The teaching ministry of the church has been exercised at a high level in many places. We are perhaps stronger here than in any of the fundamental ministries. We share, nevertheless, in the losses suffered by all religious groups among their children and young people. These losses can be greatly reduced wherever skilled teachers and leaders are available and willing to serve, but their teaching and leadership should be pointed toward fuller life, not just toward correct opinions. Teaching about the love of God should include guided experience in expressing love for neighbors; teaching about stewardship should include guided stewardship practice; teaching about church procedures should include guided sharing in these procedures. In the nature of the situation, such teaching will require the participation of many members of the priesthood. We feel that this participation is entirely consistent with the calling of many of our ordained men, and will help to safeguard us from the all too prevalent tendency to divorce belief from practice.

In recent years, and particularly among our larger branches, alert pastors and church school leaders have been organizing specialized ministry among young adults. Members of this young adult group are beginning to take on the responsibilities of home and children, and they have many interests and obligations in common. A high proportion of them have married members of the church, but are not themselves members. The ministry envisioned in young-adult organization is one of the imperatives of effective pastoral leadership. Even in those branches whose lack of numbers might advise against specific organization, the needs of this group should be kept in mind and should be as fully satisfied as circumstances permit.

During the recent war the widespread public concern over those in danger reminded us to keep in touch with young people in the armed forces. Today, however, some young people who are required to be away from their home branches have a feeling that they have been forgotten. Our experience has taught us that contact with church members in the armed forces or in college is best maintained from the home center. We therefore suggest to all branch presidents that they see to it that frequent contacts are maintained with such young people, and that when these young people return home every effort is made to receive them again into the activities of their local branches.

KINGDOM STANDARD

In the recent past our Heavenly Father has said to us that Zionite conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of his people justifies. There is no divinely approved middle ground between the standards of the kingdom and those of the present world order. We live in our day and generation, and cannot and should not seek to live apart from them. But in our basic intent, and in our growing practice, it is required that we shall "walk as children of the Light."

The practical demands of his own faith must be worked out, in large measure, by every one of us in his own life, according to the light granted him. But, in addition, certain practical demands of our joint faith lay their wider ethical obligations on us. We call attention to some of these:

Respect for personality is fundamental to the Zionite way of life. Individuals are important in their own right. Our differences, as well as our likenesses, make us significant. Free co-operation is to be sought, and not regimentation. Patience with nonconformists, and tolerance of honest differences, are therefore required of those among us whose nature or experience have inclined them to conservatism; even as acknowledgment of majority rights and equal tolerance of honest differences are required of those whose nature or experience have inclined them against conservatism. In the general church, in stakes, in districts, and in branches, the kingdom enterprise can be advanced only as those already serving find and enlist persons of different talents and share the cause with them.

A necessary counterpart of the principle just stated is that both individuals and groups must accept that responsibility which always marches side by side with freedom. The right to be treated as an individual involves responsibility for making a distinctive contribution. It sets forth an obligation to achieve some of the insight and skills which are of value in kingdom building. Long ago the Lord spoke against the idler and against those who are at ease in Zion. The reference is not just to those who do nothing. It includes also those who do not prize their own gifts and opportunities enough to cultivate them. It applies equally to the man of one talent and to his brother who has ten.

Two years ago we called attention to the imperative necessity for safeguarding and elevating the home life of our people. The Conference of that year approved our report at this point. We believe that some progress has been made, but that the problems involved call for the initiation of a program of preaching and teaching growing out of careful studies in which diverse interests and points of view are freely expressed. We expect to make recommendations to the Conference in this connection.

Our work in missions abroad goes forward slowly but, we believe, in fundamentally sound fashion. We, of the Presidency, are convinced that this work should be pushed, and that new areas of endeavor should be opened up as fast as the strength of the church will permit. This grows necessarily out of our conviction that the mission of the church is world wide. But we have learned that the costs of missionary enterprise at places distant from the center are very high, and that to avoid waste and unnecessary delay in the advancement of our work, sound initial planning is of the highest importance. Because of this, and because conditions in Europe are changing so rapidly, President Israel A. Smith and Bishop Henry L. Livingston will visit Europe the summer of 1952 with Apostle A. A. Oakman, who has been assigned to that mission. Others of the appointee force will be appointed to various missions to replace those who have completed their assignments in these fields. And we have every hope that the completion of mission headquarters in Germany and Australia and French Oceania, together with the early publication of our German hymnbook and our projected publication of the Spanish edition of the Book of Mormon, and the gradual development of fundamental literature in the languages of Europe and elsewhere, will lead to the stable and rapid expansion of our work abroad.

AUDITORIUM CAMPAIGN

We are in the midst of a campaign to complete the Auditorium. Over one hundred thousand dollars have been contributed for this purpose, and there is every expectation that we shall not encounter undue difficulty in raising the remaining portion of the five hundred thousand dollars asked for prior to the end of 1953. It should be clearly understood, however, that the slogan "Complete the Auditorium," under which this campaign has been moving forward, does not mean that raising the five hundred thousand dollars will guarantee completion. An additional allocation of funds recommended by the Appropriations Committee will re-emphasize this. What is intended is that now that we have put our hands to this great task, we shall not cease our efforts until the work is finished and the Auditorium is fully available for use by the General Church, the church in Independence and vicinity, and the community.

INTER-CONFERENCE GATHERINGS

The conference of high priests, the Book of Mormon Institute, and the Women's Institute, announced two years ago as our major inter-Conference gatherings, were all attended by the evident guidance of the Holy Spirit. They added greatly to the progress made during this period. After consultation with the Council of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, we are happy to announce that the major gatherings for the next two years will be

Institute on Evangelism

Independence, Missouri, April 5 to 10, 1953

We also call attention to the "Institute on Family Membership" which will be sponsored by Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, June 1-7, 1952, and to an important but smaller conference on Economics of Zion planned for October 17-22, 1952.

As we enter upon the work of another Conference we pay tribute to the men associated with us in key positions of responsibility, and to the many others who are less widely known but who carry their full share of the work entrusted to us together.

The times are critical, as we all know, but they are also full of promise. By the grace of God we are committed to his great cause. In the confidence that he will bring his purposes to pass we subscribe ourselves,

Your servants for Christ's sake,

Report of the Council of Twelve

To the 1952 General Conference

DURING the biennial Conference period there has been a noticeable quickening of missionary activity in the church. This zeal has resulted in a pleasing growth numerically as the spirit of evangelism, spearheaded by the "Each One Win One" emphasis, was shared in the stakes, districts, branches, and missions of the domestic field as well as in missions abroad. The missionary outlook and outreach in the entire field is excellent.

The Council of Twelve, the chief missionary quorum of the church, expresses its appreciation for the support which the membership at large has given to this "witnessing aspect" of our assignment. Splendid interest has been noted in the Department of Religious Education, Priesthood Educational Institutes, and the Women's Departmental activities. Many of the standing ministry have responded to cottage meeting work. Some have requested the privilege of using vacation periods, under the direction of the Twelve, in preaching series of meetings and general missionary work. Appointees have done praiseworthy work in personal ministry and in stimulating and training local mission workers.

The times in which we live call for an aggressive affirmation of our message. We are greatly concerned with the welfare of the souls of men collectively and individually. This is in contrast to the prevailing sentiment of indifference in the world conveyed in so many media of publicity. Our message is ever a dynamic invitation to unite with Our Lord in his church and take part in building up his kingdom in righteousness. We have achieved encouraging success when measured by the baptismal percentage increase of 6.9 per cent for the two-year period of 1950 and 1951 compared with 6.2 per cent for the years of 1948 and 1949.

MISSIONARY EXPANSION

In accord with the revelation of 1948, Doctrine and Covenants, Section 141, which advises perfecting the work in regions closer to the Center, opening the work in new places, we are happy to report that in addition to definite missionary strength given to the stakes, we have directed supervision of full-time missionary personnel in two specific areas close to the Center, Kaw Valley Missionary District and Missouri Missionary Area, where new openings have been effected and existing branches and missions have been strengthened. The development of these and other missionary areas will continue to be the work of this Council.

Our attention is continually directed to the branches which need additional missionary emphasis. Many new branches have been organized during the past two years, but are not indicated directly in the branch statistical picture due to the organization of the Detroit International and Los Angeles Stakes, which changed the classification of many branches into congregational status.

The Seventies, Evangelists, and Missionary Elders have shared the tremendous assignment of witnessing for Christ and in many ways have relieved the members of the Council of Twelve from labor in outlying or undeveloped areas. There remains throughout the church a great need for missionary activity. The brethren of the standing ministry are highly commended for their achievements. District presidents in some instances are likewise sharing the burden of the assignment by conducting series of meetings in their respective districts.

"THE REMINDER"

Ministry to nonresident Saints has been given by many district nonresident pastors and district secretaries in various ways. The publication known as The Reminder, sponsored by the chief missionary quorum, has been issued quarterly during the biennial period; thus thousands of isolated Saints, who are denied branch privileges, have been kept informed of our forward movement. Many have expressed appreciation of the contents of this four-page publication.

REUNION EMPHASIS

The unified instruction offered at our reunions has been accepted with praise as a move forward. Our themes for the past two summers, "We Witness for Christ in the Restoration" and "Sources of Spiritual Power," will be followed this year with unified emphasis on the theme, "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship," and in 1953, "The Challenge of Church History." Let there be no underestimation of the splendid possibilities for conversions during the reunion season. Workshop schedules at some reunions provide opportunities for a discussion of the theme of the day. During July and August extensive baptisms were recorded. With the continued emphasis on reunions and their support by members and friends this achievement should grow commensurately.

SPANISH-SPEAKING PROJECT

This project is gaining momentum, and the officials specifically assigned to it solicit the continued assistance of all in reaching Spanish-speaking people. Several of the larger branches have interested Spanish-speaking families, and members of the priesthood are conducting cottage or home meetings. In widely separated areas contacts are being made; most of these are with bilingual families. A Spanish-speaking mission, the first in the church, has been organized at Brownsville, Texas.

The student body of Graceland College and Midwest Zion's League visitors shared in the spirit of this project recently in a Hispanic Institute on the campus, which was very successful, and should greatly help in the future development of our evangelism in Latin America.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP

Throughout the world our church edifices have been vastly improved. We are giving direction toward new construction in strategic centers where missionary endeavor should result in more efficient organization with our available personnel. Most of our new churches have been planned to provide for growth in membership in their respective localities.

MISSIONS ABROAD

Our Council is inclined toward constant observation of fields of labor in missions abroad. Encouraging reports have been brought to the Council by Apostles Paul M. Hanson, D. Blair Jensen, and Roscoe E. Davey, who have had supervision of fields abroad. These brethren have been ably assisted by General Appointees, Seventies, High Priests, Evangelists, and Missionary Elders who have, with the assistance of the standing ministry, been active in promulgating the Restoration Message.

In the Australasian Mission excellent progress was registered in baptisms in 1950, with 110 new members gained, or 3.1 per cent increase. The financial condition was likewise very good during the biennial period. New church buildings were erected, and existing houses of worship were improved. Men under full-time appointment were active in keeping the "witnessing message" before the peoples of the Australasian Mission.

In the European Mission an encouraging situation exists. Despite the emigration of peoples from Germany, Holland, and England to Australia, Canada, and the United States, the church has held its own in this mission during the period under consideration. The church gained 137 through baptisms in 1951.

On the Continent new buildings are under construction; title has been secured for our properties in Berlin and Hannover, Germany, and representative buildings have been erected thereon. We can report progress in the appointment to full-time ministry of a Holland national and a German national. Our position is strengthened in these appointments.

We continue to share capable and experienced ministers with the missions abroad and feel confident that our appointees in directing will continue to inspire many workers in the European Mission.

Society Islands Mission. In the Society Islands encouraging progress has been recorded. We continue to gain new members there, which is part of the reward for sharing our missionary forces from the United States and Australia with this mission. During the inter-Conference period, President I. A. Smith visited the Saints in the Islands, greatly strengthening the work in the Mission. Ministry has come to this field through the assistance of brethren of the Quorum of Seventy and Order of Evangelists.

THE AUDITORIUM

We share in the expectation of a completed Auditorium, which now houses the various quorums and offices of our church. We urge the participation of the church in the second and third stages of our payment program in 1952 and 1953 looking toward completion.

RECAPITULATION

These are portentous times, not alone in the fact that sin and selfishness loom large before us, but also that in these times the work of the kingdom of God is being advanced. We appeal to all to respond to the redemptive instruction of our Lord. Let us continue to give our better selves to the Cause of Christ.

THE COUNCIL OF TWELVE
Paul M. Hanson, President

The Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

It is fitting that in submitting our report to the General Conference this year we should again express our sincere gratitude to God for his guidance and for the many blessings bestowed upon us as a people. The church has prospered and real progress has been achieved as a result of the sacrifices and devotion of many of its members.

As stewards over the temporalities of the church, we express our appreciation for the co-operation given by those with whom we have associated. We express our thanks to the First Presidency, the Council of Twelve, and other quorums of the priesthood, and to all members of the church who have given their support to the financial policy which has now unquestionably proved its worth.

The reserves which have been established have given soundness to our financial structure and stand as bulwarks of strength which fortify us against the continued encroachment of inflation. We have attempted to make careful analysis of economic trends which have a bearing upon our future, and we are confident that continued progress will be made in the next few years. Nevertheless it seems imperative that we make special effort during the years 1952 to 1954 inclusive to increase our income, to further strengthen our institutions, to work toward the completion of our Auditorium, and to provide additional facilities for the care of the aged.

At the same time we should concern ourselves with the need for accelerating payments on houses of worship loans wherever possible to provide wider use of the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund to meet the increasing needs of branches throughout the church. Care should be exercised in branches not to assume undue burdens in the way of construction of houses of worship, simply because funds have been made available by the General Church through the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund.

In this same three-year period, attention will be given to the fundamentals of Zion's organization, that we may be strengthened and fortified as a more cohesive and co-operative body in the attainment of our social and economic goals. Basic to this is the need for individual compliance with the law of temporalities, including the consecration of surplus. Since the adoption of the document on surplus by the General Conference of 1950, little has been done in the field of further education regarding this principle, and consequently the response on the part of the membership has been minimum. It is pointed out that the response to this on the part of our membership will determine the measure of our progress in the ensuing years.

We give special attention to this three-year period because of the possibility of economic deflation following this brief period. Particularly do we look forward to the year 1960, which will mark one hundred years of church endeavor since Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph the Martyr, was chosen "prophet, seer, and revelator of the church of Jesus Christ, and the successor of his father." We should look forward with faith and hope to these immediate intervening years, and we are of the opinion that the problems that we face and the opportunities that will be present will challenge us beyond anything that we have experienced in the years which are past.

We summarize herein again those areas of endeavor which challenge us presently and in the immediate future:

1. Increased participation in the financial law by all according to ability—filing of financial statements, paying of tithes, giving of offerings, consecration of surplus.

2. Improving the efficiency of our institutions, including Graceland College, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, the Herald Publishing House, and the Homes for the Aged, through providing additional facilities according to the need of each and according to our ability.

3. Completing the Auditorium insofar as possible and commensurate with our ability. We have set our goal for $200,000 by way of special offerings in each of the years 1952 and 1953, this to be exclusive of any appropriations that may be made.

4. Developing procedures and effecting organizations contemplated in the law as referred to in Section 128:9 of the Doctrine and Covenants, this to be done as circumstances and needs may require, and as personnel and capital are available.

All of the foregoing is dependent upon a continuation of sound fiscal policy and alertness to economic changes and an adaptability on our part to those changes as they take place.

We again call attention to the fact that our financial policy has been developed and administered in such manner as to give every assurance of continued progress in the areas above enumerated. We call attention specifically to the financial statements and schedules following these comments, which verify the progress to which reference has already been made, and will give evidence of the assurance of future progress by the facts which are revealed therein.

INCOME AND EXPENSE

Our income of Tithes and Offerings (exclusive of Auditorium Offerings and Oblation) reached an all-time high in 1951, amounting to $1,393,496.60. The income for 1950 was $1,261,091.55, and this also exceeded the previous high figure in 1947, which was $1,149,586.61.

Our Operating Net Gain for the two years 1950 and 1951 was $425,585.84 and $504,552.42 respectively.

We wish to call attention to the figures of Other Income of $42,209.61 and $41,656.54 for the two years, which increased the Excess of Income over Expenses to $467,795.45 in 1950, and $546,208.96 in 1951.

The increase in Family Allowances and Elders' Expenses is due largely to additions in our appointee list and the increase in living costs. Interim Conference costs of additional appointees have been met from the Missionary Reserve Fund, and as this fund is replenished according to present policy, the new budget for 1953 and 1954 will include current costs of such appointees.

The Missionary Reserve Fund will continue to supply funds for new appointees not provided for in the 1953-1954 budget. Further reference to this will be made in comments covering the Missionary Reserve Fund.

Elders' Expenses show considerable increase, and this phase of our costs requires constant study. Analyses already made indicate the need for careful supervision, and steps have been taken administratively which will assure such supervision in the future. Included in the figure of $179,718.62 of Elders' Expenses for the year 1951 is Depreciation on Automobiles, amounting to $24,711.35.

Administrative Expenses continue to increase, and attention is called to the fact that these will continue to appear out of proportion to our total budget until such time as we increase our membership sufficiently to bring a more balanced proportionate cost. With our administrative setup, we could serve double our present church membership with nominal increase in administrative costs.

Our expenses for 1950 were within our budget by an amount of $23,238.45, and for 1951 were within our budget by an amount of $7,391.82.

BALANCE SHEET ASSETS

Our Cash Assets at the close of the year 1951 show a very favorable situation, with $1,214,762.64 in the form of Cash on Hand and in Banks, In the Hands of Bishops and Agents, and In United States Government Bonds and Dominion of Canada Government Bonds. Included in this figure is approximately $103,000.00 of Real Estate funds.

In recent months restrictions have been released covering the transfer of Canadian funds, so that such funds and securities are now available for use on the same basis as American dollars.

Notes Receivable consists largely of contracts and mortgages receivable on real estate, and an advance to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital of $35,000.00, for which a request for appropriation is being presented to this Conference.

The amount due, shown as Due from Other Funds, is made up mostly of obligations from the Missionary Reserve Fund and the Stewardship Endowment Funds.

Other Assets and Deferred Charges are made up of the Operating Fund, Equipment, Unexpired Insurance, and Net Worth of Investments in the Australasian and Society Islands Missions.

LIABILITIES

Our Liabilities are made up of current Accounts Payable at the end of the year and of Inter-Institutional Funds. These items are cleared subsequently in the normal course of completing our bookkeeping transactions.

AGENCY FUND

As reported previously, this fund is gradually being eliminated, and it is our policy to keep it at a minimum, as it is made up of deposits made by individuals with the church. This is maintained as a service to the individuals concerned. The assets of this fund are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations is provided for.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

These funds for the most part represent property consisting of cash, bonds, and real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church assumes certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual. This fund is kept liquid and accumulation of capital is left in the fund. At some future time, it will be possible to transfer any excess capital to the General Fund.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

In our report to the General Conference of 1950, we called attention to the increase in this fund arising out of the survey made by the Presiding Bishopric of houses of worship which had not been placed on our books. Since that time many thousands of dollars have been invested in houses of worship, and it is contemplated that another survey will be made in the year 1952; this survey will be for the purpose of getting up-to-date figures on the costs of new houses of worship recently completed. We ask the co-operation of responsible officers in the different congregations to keep our office advised as to improvements, additions, and new purchases of properties.

We have pointed out previously the importance of keeping the Houses of Worship Fund segregated from our Operating Fund. This has continued to be our practice. Loans have been made from this fund to congregations on the basis of 3 per cent when funds were not available from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund. The cash and government bonds are kept in adequate sum to meet current demands of congregations on deposit with us. These funds are considered as and treated as trust funds.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

The amount which has been appropriated to this fund up to the present time by General Conference action has been $600,000.00. The equity in this fund including interest returns which are kept in the fund is $618,128.17. Additional loans in process and applied for are well over $200,000.00 more than is available in the fund. At the time of writing this report, it is contemplated that additional appropriations will be approved by the General Conference to increase this fund.

We have appreciated the co-operation given by practically all congregations in regard to loans requested. We emphasize again the need for congregations restricting their building projects so as to be within the means of their own congregation to finance and repay loans. The administration of this fund requires continuous study, as well as a survey of our needs throughout the church. The amount in the fund is not unlimited, and in the opinion of the Presiding Bishopric should not be of such size as to encourage use of the funds beyond the ability of congregations to repay.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund has been fully discussed in previous reports of the Bishopric. Current appropriations are made as men are appointed, adding to the capital of this fund, and these current appropriations will be in increasing amounts as we add numbers to our ministerial personnel.

We need to call attention again to the fact that the amounts set aside meet only in part the costs of retirement. This fund is kept reasonably liquid except for the investment in agricultural lands which now aggregate in total $300,953.32. Studies are being made as to the needs for increasing this fund, as well as to the type of investments that will best serve this purpose.

AUSTRALIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE

The same policy is being carried on in Australia in regard to setting up funds to meet the cost of our ministerial personnel as is practiced at headquarters.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

The purpose of this fund is to provide support of missionary endeavors in the years which are ahead, to provide funds for the appointment of men between Conferences, for the maintenance of the School of Instruction, and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages. It has served also to provide means whereby additional facilities and equipment could be provided for missions abroad. It is customary to rehabilitate this fund from current cash accumulations to replace withdrawals made.

OBLATION FUND

We have discussed this fund quite fully in previous reports. It has provided means that have enabled us to assist many of our people in the stakes and districts in the United States and Canada, with a total of 306 regular aid cases and 32 in connection with flood relief. Additional aid has been granted in the Australasian, British Isles, European, and Society Islands Missions.

It has provided funds for the establishment of Homes for the Aged, and it is now contemplated that the new Home for the Aged will be constructed this year, plans for which have now been completed and estimates of costs are now being made. When the new building is constructed on the Mark White property on Truman Road, the properties on Winner Road will be sold and the proceeds reinvested in the new project.

It is also planned to re-establish the Home at Lamoni in the property which has been in recent years used for a girls' dormitory at Graceland College. The net expense of operating these Homes for the Aged is met from the Oblation Fund.

The Real Estate Investments shown on the Balance Sheet, amounting to $130,611.40, covers the property on Winner Road, the Mark White property on Truman Road, and the property at 310 North Liberty Street, now referred to as our Social Service Center.

We are not unaware of the need for Homes for the Aged in other centers of the church. It is our opinion, however, that there should be substantial evidence of the needs, and that surveys should be made to ascertain the needs where members of the church are interested in having the General Church establish such homes.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

As stated in previous reports, this is another fund set up for the purpose of assuring us of continuity in maintaining our church program. The amount in this fund has been placed at a figure approximating a year's Operating Expense. This fund is kept quite liquid.

STOREHOUSE TREASURY FUND

The total amount of Surplus consecrated and accepted by the church at the present time is represented in this fund, amounting to $1,003.75.

STEWARDSHIP ENDOWMENT FUNDS

This represents the value of Atherton and Spring Branch Farm lands which were hypothecated for the Graceland Endowment Fund bond issue. The beneficial interest of this fund is $211,966.74, as shown on the General Fund Balance Sheet, as reported previously. Surplus arising out of farming operations provides for capital improvements as conditions and circumstances justify.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This represents funds set up by the authority of General Conference to provide for institutional building needs.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS

This fund consists of appropriations made for Auditorium Construction, Radio Fund, and other items listed which are self-explanatory. The change indicated in the R.L.D.S. Broadcasting Company, Inc., arose out of the necessity of transferring funds to a corporation and then re-transferring back to the Unexpended Appropriations.

STATEMENT OF NET WORTH

The Statement of Net Worth reflects the changes which have taken place during the years 1950 and 1951 and shows the consolidation of all funds. The total Net Worth as of December 31, 1949, was $12,151,293.70; the Net Worth of December 31, 1951, is $12,876,886.40. If we had had current reports on houses of worship completed in these two years, this Net Worth would have been increased substantially. Reference to this was made in our comments regarding the Houses of Worship Fund. A careful study of the Statement of Net Worth will reveal other items which have resulted in the increase.

Excess of Income over Expense for the years 1950 and 1951 amounting to $467,795.45 and $546,208.96 respectively, have gone to increase our Net Worth. While the increase in Net Worth for the two-year period, 1948 and 1949, showed a most unusual increase, the statement herein reflects the normal increase due to actual net increases of income over expenses. We are sure that this unusually fine statement showing our financial status will be deeply appreciated by the membership as a whole.

GENERAL COMMENTS

We would be most ungrateful if we did not state that in our opinion the progress made by the church has been due to the splendid support given by the members who, in addition to supporting the General Church, have maintained work on a local level, and have made outstanding contributions to improve housing facilities which have included new houses of worship, alterations, and general improvement of our buildings. As indicated elsewhere, this is no time for us to rest on the laurels of achievement. The needs of the church increase with its growth.

We have made some progress in compliance with the financial law. Of our total domestic membership of 122,909 (including Canada and Hawaii), 32,335 or 26.3 per cent contributed in 1950. There were 14,049 who filed financial statements, or 11.43 per cent. We do not yet have figures compiled for contributors in 1951, but our records show that 16,313 filed financial statements in 1951, or 13.4 per cent of the membership of 125,091, which shows improvement. It is interesting to note that the contribution per member to the General Fund for 1950 was $9.86, and in 1951 was $10.82. We find that there is an increasing understanding of the temporal law, and more of our members understand its relationship to the acknowledgment of stewardship responsibility.

As hitherto, we wish to express our sincere prayer that financial administration may be directed to the attainment of our spiritual and economic goals, and that our progress toward the building of God's kingdom may be accelerated.

Respectfully submitted,

Church Auditor's Report of Examination

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

I have examined the records of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, an unincorporated association with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, and have prepared the balance sheets of the funds as of December 31, 1950, and 1951, the related statements of income and expense, and net worth for the two-year period ended on that date. Without making a detailed audit, I have reviewed the accounting procedures of the church, the accounting records, and other evidence in support of the financial statements. My examination was made in accordance with the generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances, and tests were made to the extent I deemed appropriate.

The following comments apply to the balance sheets at December 31, 1950, and 1951, and to the transactions for the accounting periods then ended.

Cash in banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and by reconciliation.

United States Government and Canadian securities are held for safekeeping by the First National Bank in Kansas City, Missouri.

GENERAL, LAND AND INHERITANCE, AND TEMPLE FUNDS

The assets, liabilities, and results of operations of the Central Development Association and the Real Estate Department are consolidated in this fund.

Cash in the hands of bishops and agents, except for funds held in missions abroad, was traced to subsequent receipts and deposits.

Funds due from the Australasian and Society Islands Missions are not included in the amount due from bishops and agents but are included in the assets of the Australasian and Society Islands Missions, respectively. Real estate contracts are assets of the Real Estate Department and are detailed in the Report of Examination of that department.

Accounts receivable, which includes amounts due from related institutions, were verified by reference to individual ledger sheets and by other supporting evidence.

Notes receivable were examined.

Inventories of feed, livestock, and supplies were taken and priced by farm managers. I tested the accuracy of pricing and computations of inventories and made tests of the physical count of the inventories at the Atherton and Spring Branch farms.

The beneficial interest in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund represents the difference between the depreciated value of the Atherton and Spring Branch real estate and the amount due Graceland College in the form of bonds and an account payable. The beneficial interest is increased by the expenditure of funds for capital items and reduced by annual provisions for depreciation. Earnings on these lands from farm operations are held in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund as earned capital.

Additions to furniture, fixtures, and equipment were examined, and depreciation in the amount of $5,000.00 for each year was charged to the General Fund as operating expense.

Unexpired insurance on real estate improvements and transportation deposits relative to the Society Islands Mission comprise the amount stated as deferred charges.

The assets entitled "Australasian Mission" represent the net worth of that mission at the close of each year as reported by the bishop in Australia.

Accounts Payable include accounts with vendors, active and inactive allowances payable, and withholding taxes payable. A major portion of the amount stated as payable at December 31, 1951, has been paid.

Schedules of Administrative Expense (Schedule Number 1), Ministerial Expense (Schedule Number 2), and Contributions by Stakes and Districts (Schedule Number 3) are included in this report.

AGENCY FUND

The Agency Fund was created in 1942 in order to segregate from the General Fund and other funds all liabilities which for some reason could not be liquidated. It also acts as a depository for cash and bonds held for safekeeping for individuals and church organizations.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

The Consecration Agreement Fund was set up during 1942 to record the assets and liabilities relative to certain agreements entered into by the Presiding Bishopric with certain individuals.

These agreements arise out of a desire of individuals to make a contribution to the church and at the same time provide for themselves some security for the future. These agreements, as detailed in the accompanying schedules, are described as follows:

Class B: This class represents the type of agreement wherein the individual turns over to the church cash, bonds, or other negotiable assets as a consecration, in consideration of which the church agrees to pay the individual a regular amount each year, with the possibility of additional (liability reducing) payments in cases of need. The total amount of such additional payments is not to exceed the amount of the original consecration. Furthermore, when such additional amounts are paid, the amounts of the annual payments are reduced proportionately. The regular annual payments on the agreements do not reduce the maximum liability.

Class C: Under this type of contract the individual gives cash, bonds, and in some cases real estate as a consecration. There is no provision for regular annual payments, but the additional payment provision, as in Class B, is included. Some of these agreements provide for the payment of last sickness and funeral expenses. Where real estate has been conveyed to the church, the contract and the asset have been recorded at a nominal value. The liability in such cases is limited to the amount which is realized from the sale of the property.

Class D: This represents agreements where there is a definite amount payable per month or per annum but no additional payments are required.

Class E: This class represents non-negotiable notes, payable to the individual, which contain a provision that the note shall be canceled in the event of the death of the payee.

Class F: This class represents bonds payable, at the death of the payee, to the church and both the liability and the asset are carried at nominal value.

Real estate investment represents nominal values, plus costs of acquisition and improvements, of real estate consecrated under an agreement. Some of these agreements provide for a life estate in the real estate by the consecrator.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

Chapel accounts A, B, and C represent church buildings, reunion grounds, and historical properties respectively. As a result of a Houses of Worship appraisal survey, an adjustment was made as of December 31, 1949, to increase Chapel A properties to the appraised value of $5,689,006.94. A like adjustment was made to increase the Invested Equity account.

Mortgage payable in the amount of $880,000 represents a liability of this fund to the General Fund (Real Estate Department).

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

A revolving fund in the initial amount of $300,000.00 was established in 1946 as a means of assisting branches by means of loans, at a nominal rate of interest, in the construction of houses of worship.

Notes Receivable representing loans to branches and districts were examined.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

The Ministerial Reserve Fund was created in 1937 and has been increased in subsequent years by appropriations from the General Fund and by income from investments.

The requirements of this fund are computed by the church attorney and are based on the life expectancy of those appointees now covered. The assets of the fund are held to cover retirement costs, death benefits, and other contingent costs relative to future needs of appointees. This fund does not accrue for the benefit of any one minister or his dependents. The annual transfers of cash, although based on individual cases, build up a fund which can be used to provide the necessities of life to the appointee and his dependents after his retirement or after he has reached the age of seventy. The fund balances are carried separately on the books according to the purpose for which each is intended.

Real Estate represents investments in Missouri farm lands.

The Unallocated Reserve represents the segregated reserves which have been accumulated for those ministers whose appointments have terminated.

The Graceland College Faculty Retirement Reserve was created in May, 1942, and is based on annual appropriations made by the Conference.

AUSTRALIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Fund appropriation of funds received and held in Australia. Subsequent additions have been covered by Conference appropriations.

Cash in banks and government bonds are stated as reflected in the audited reports received from the Bishop in Australia.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

This fund was set up in accordance with General Conference action on April 6, 1944. The original appropriation of $100,000.00 was to provide funds for appointment of personnel in interim conference periods, with further provision that up to $5,000.00 annually could be expended for the cost of a school of instruction for ministerial appointees, and provision for the expenditure of an amount not to exceed $2,500.00 to cover the cost of preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

Subsequent appropriations have rehabilitated the fund and increased the equity to $200,000.00 at the beginning of the accounting period.

OBLATION FUND

The Oblation Fund was created to record the contributions received as oblation subsequent to January 1, 1942, and to record the disbursement of these funds. This fund is restricted only to the extent that it shall be used "for the purpose of giving temporary aid and benevolence, and at the same time to make possible their use for the permanent rehabilitation of those who have become physically incapacitated or disabled, and who are worthy of the assistance and help of the church."

The equity of this fund is increased or decreased by the operational deficit or surplus of Resthaven, Lamoni Saints' Home, and Liberty Home Farm.

Accounts, notes, and contracts receivable were examined and are considered to be well secured.

Real Estate Investment represents the Resthaven property, the Social Service Center Building, the Mark White property, and other property located in Independence, Missouri.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Conference action of April 6, 1944, the purpose being that of providing a fund of sufficient amount to permit the appropriation of operating expense from this fund rather than from the income of the current year.

STEWARDSHIP-ENDOWMENT FUND

General Conference action of April 6, 1944, authorized the segregation of the Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands as collateral for the bonds issued to the Graceland College Endowment Fund. The net difference between the real estate investment and the amount payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund is designated "Beneficial Interest—General Fund" and appears in the General Fund as an asset.

It is the expressed opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that "The net income from these lands is to be made available for improvements as may be necessary and required for the further development of the lands segregated." The equity account of this fund is the net earnings from operation of these lands.

The bonds payable to the Graceland College Endowment Fund mature January 6, 1956.

STOREHOUSE TREASURY FUND

Created by General Conference action of April 9, 1950, the purposes of this fund are detailed in a document presented to the Conference on April 8, 1950. Contributions specifically designated for this fund are included in the fund equity.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This fund was created by action of General Conference on April 6, 1944, and subsequent action. The funds are held subject to disbursement in accordance with the requirements contained in the appropriation.

The institutions for which these funds are held are designated in the balance sheet of this fund.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS FUND

This fund was created in 1947 in order to segregate properly funds held for future needs.

Allocation of these funds is detailed in the Equity section of the Fund Balance Sheet.

R.L.D.S. BROADCASTING COMPANY, INC.

This fund was established by Conference action, as a subsidiary nonprofit corporation. In 1951 the funds remaining in the corporation were transferred to the Unexpended Appropriations Fund. This fund known as the Radio Project had an equity balance at December 31, 1951, of $192,575.70.

OPINION

In my opinion, the accompanying fund balance sheets and related statements of income and expense and equities present fairly the position of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at December 31, 1950, and 1951, and the results of its operations for the years then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

vital. Some speakers on the Conference floor indicated that they felt that the right of the people who provided the funds to amend the Appropriations Report was more vital. It was plainly evidenced from the applause of the delegates and visitors that the people wanted to exercise their sovereignty in this instance, and they did so overwhelmingly. Of course, this did set a precedent which if followed unwisely could disrupt the orderly and balanced use of church finances. On the other hand, it was wholesome in that the Conference was able to demonstrate its basic prerogative in having the final determination of church policy and spending.

It was a great Conference. Its legislative achievements were wholesome and historic.

Special Appropriations Recommended

INCREASE IN HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND.....$250,000.00

This increases this fund from $600,000.00 to $850,000.00 on the basis of requirements as of December 31, 1951. Applications and possible loans are beyond those provided for in the fund of $600,000.00 by $187,513.34. In addition to the amount of $250,000.00 to meet this shortage, there will be repayments to the Revolving Fund in 1952 totaling approximately $48,000.00.

WASHINGTON, D. C..... 47,500.00

The General Conference of 1950 appropriated $15,000.00 and this appropriation now recommended of $47,500.00 increases the total appropriation of the General Church for this project to $62,500.00. An equal amount is to be raised by the Washington, D. C., local congregation. The purpose of this appropriation on the part of the General Church is because of the importance of having a representative church edifice in our nation's capital.

OTTAWA, CANADA..... 25,000.00

This is an appropriation for a church building in the capital city of Canada. The local congregation will provide an equal amount.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND..... 100,000.00

The operating budget now approximates a million dollars. This will increase this fund to $1,000,000.00 This procedure is in harmony with our financial policy and previous action taken by General Conferences.

AUDITORIUM FUND..... 100,000.00

This is in addition to the amount that it is anticipated we will raise during the years 1952 and 1953.

GRACELAND COLLEGE..... 100,000.00

This will provide for the completion of Gunsolley Hall, the men's dormitory, which cost is $40,000.00. $60,000.00 of this appropriation is for the building of a cottage dormitory to provide facilities for girls now domiciled in North Hall (the Old Folks Home building). This will release the Old Folks Home building for its original purpose, and if the appropriation is approved the move will be made shortly following the close of the school year.

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL..... 90,000.00

$35,000.00 was advanced to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital in the year 1951 to provide funds to complete the present project. An additional $55,000.00 cash appropriation is to enlarge the office space and the reception room, and to provide a recreational building for the School of Nursing.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND to rehabilitation up to $200,000.00..... 61,490.37

This is made up as follows:
Interim Conference
Appointees$27,793.39
Books, tracts, personal evangelism project, etc. 7,387.85
Church properties,
Germany 26,309.13

KIRTLAND - NAUVOO..... 25,000.00

Rehabilitation of both of these properties is essential; particularly the Kirtland Temple needs roof repairs. The Homestead building at Nauvoo needs to be rehabilitated.

DRUMMOYNE 11,250.00

This is for Australian church headquarters. The Joint Council of the Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric recommended an appropriation of $11,200.00 ($5,000) for use in the erection of a new headquarters unit in Australia, this appropriation to be made available from General Church funds in Australia.

Business Session Briefs

Monday:

The first business session of the 1952 General Conference began at 2:00 p.m. Monday with the singing of the national anthem and a brief ceremony in which the flags of the United States and the church were brought to the front of the auditorium and placed in standards. Then the flags of other countries were unfurled from the balcony.

Greetings from members in Hawaii, Japan, Germany, Holland, England, and Korea were read to the Conference, and a supplement to the credentials list was presented for approval. Recognition was paid to those fulfilling special appointments during the week, and attention was called to the reports appearing in the first two issues of the Daily Herald.

A resolution prepared by Apostle Roscoe Davey and Bishop D. A. Alberts granting the right of the church in Australia and New Zealand to incorporate so that it might hold property was approved. President F. Henry Edwards then read the Report of the First Presidency. A corrected resolution for the Credentials Committee Report and a resolution to increase the number of members on the Board of Trustees of Graceland College from seven to nine were also approved. At the end of the session representatives from missions abroad were called to the platform and introduced to the assembly.

Tuesday:

Following the reading of Monday's business meeting minutes, Apostle Paul M. Hanson read the Report of the Council of Twelve, and Apostle Charles R. Hield presented a report on missionary activities among Spanish-speaking peoples. A communication recommending personnel for the Society of Archaeological Research was approved, and the time limit for introducing new business was set at 3:00 p.m. Thursday.

The recommendation that Elders Franklyn Weddle and Charles Myron Zerr replace Elders A. B. Phillips and J. F. Keir (resigned) on the Standing High Council was accepted, and short speeches of willingness to serve were given by the two new members. A resolution from the New York-Philadelphia District regarding the publication of a reference manual of informational data, and a substitute recommendation from the Joint Council were presented, but action was moved to be deferred until later.

A document dealing with the clarification of church court procedure and a recommendation that Elders A. B. Taylor, Howard Harder, and J. D. Anderson be continued as a committee to rephrase court procedure were unanimously approved. A communication from the Presidency suggesting the deletion of certain obsolete Conference resolutions was presented and approved. The last official business of the meeting was the setting of the date for the beginning of the next General Conference as Sunday, April 4, 1954.

Wednesday:

At the beginning of the session Mayor Robert P. Weatherford was escorted to the platform by Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Elder Don Lents. He made a brief speech, commenting on the duties of all Christians and paying tribute to the Reorganized Church for the part it has played in the development of the city.

Following the reading of Tuesday's minutes, Bishop DeLapp presented the Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric to the Conference. This and the Auditor's Report were unanimously approved. Bishop DeLapp then discussed the Report of the Board of Appropriations; all items were accepted, as well as a proposal to allot $3,000 for the purchasing of a lot in Anchorage, Alaska, on which to build a church. This item was not included in the original Appropriations Report.

Communications were read concerning the resignation of Drs. F. M. McDowell and Charles F. Grabske as members of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, and a document proposing Earl T. Higdon and L. F. P. Curry as successors was presented, to be voted on at a later date. A similar document recommending that Elder D. R. Carmichael and Dr. Addison W. Brown be elected to fill the two new places on the Board was also presented to be voted on later.

The last communication announced a service to be held Thursday morning at Stone Church for the ordination of the following: E. Y. Hunker, evangelist; James B. Burdick and Norman E. Hield, bishops; Ralph Wicker, O. O. Dollins, Sr., and Ray Vern Webb, high priests; Alvin F. Burdekin, James A. Everett, Stanley W. Johnson, William J. McMurray, Jacques V. Pement, James E. Renfroe, Wayne E. Simmons, and Alfred H. Yale, Seventies.

Thursday:

Lt. Col. Sam Toomey, home on a thirty-day leave from Korea, was presented to the Conference by President Israel A. Smith at the beginning of the meeting. He spoke briefly on the need for faith and prayer in overcoming the forces of evil in the world that would suppress freedom and destroy the Christian way of life. A telegram from Senator Milton R. Young of North Dakota, expressing his hope of being present for at least one session of the Conference, was read to the assembly.

Unanimous votes were given to Earl T. Higdon to succeed Dr. F. M. McDowell, L. F. P. Curry to succeed himself, and Frank L. Parsons to fill in the unexpired term of Dr. Charles F. Grabske on the Board of Directors of Graceland College. Two new members, D. R. Carmichael and Dr. Addison Brown, were also elected. Walter N. Johnson, Harry Barto, David White, Howard Andersen, Arthur Taylor, Shankland Arnson, and Montague L. Parker were approved as members of the Board of Publication, and appreciation for twenty years of service on the Board was expressed to John W. Luff in a communication moved by the Presiding Bishopric.

A discussion of the Rules of Order followed, and several amendments were proposed. The first five sections, some with amendments, were accepted. A communication from the Quorum of High Priests was read recommending that the Reorganized Church reaffirm and record its belief in the absolute separation of church and state, and that notice of this action be given to the President of the United States and other public officials. A resolution concerning the placing of signs along all arterial highways entering or passing near Independence informing travelers of the presence of the church headquarters was also presented.

At the close of the session President Israel A. Smith displayed a sword presented to him by Elder William Ferguson of Richmond, Missouri, which had originally belonged to David Whitmer. It is to be placed in the church archives. The number of Conference registrants was announced as 6,992.

Friday:

Senator Milton Young, presented by President Israel A. Smith, spoke to the Conference about the unwavering faith and devotion of his mother and the high standards she had set for him in his boyhood. He stated that at no time has he felt it necessary to apologize for members of the church, and he extended an invitation for people at the Conference who plan to be in Washington to visit him, assuring them that his Reorganized Latter Day Saint secretary would arrange for them to see him.

Most of the meeting was devoted to a discussion of an amendment to Section VI of the Rules of Order presented at the previous session. Voting was deferred until Saturday. Elder J. Arthur Davis, ninety-two years old April 3, was called to the tribune by President Israel A. Smith. Elder Davis, a missionary since 1888, spoke briefly of his work in the church and also paid tribute to the good men and women in other churches. He then left the platform, escorted by his son, Glen Davis, a delegate from the West Coast.

A document regarding Sections VI and VII of the Rules of Order and a communication relative to withdrawal of church membership were read to the assembly; then President Smith requested permission to add to the minutes recommended resolutions and communications regarding incorporation for which there was insufficient time for oral presentation. President Wallace Smith announced at the close of the session that a total of 7,090 persons had registered for the Conference.

Saturday:

Judge Arthur Crum of the Superior Court of California was presented to the Conference by President Israel A. Smith at the beginning of the session. He assured those assembled, "As long as this body is unified, no power on earth can stay its progress." A motion was approved that all speakers be limited to ten minutes during business sessions, after which Apostle Charles R. Hield introduced three "friends of the church" from south of the United States border: Susanna Mendiola of Mexico City, now attending Graceland College; Cristobal Navarrete of Barranquilla, Colombia, and Francisco Díaz of Guatemala City, both students at Iowa State College. Each gave a brief statement in his native tongue, then translated it for the Conference.

A motion sponsored by Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Arthur Oakman clarifying the much-debated issue of stake organization and policy was read and approved. A proposed substitute for paragraph 1, Section VI, of the Rules of Order was also approved. Paragraphs 2 to 6 were voted on individually and then the entire Section as a whole was adopted as amended. Section VII was then presented for discussion and, with amendments, was accepted. Following the vote approving the entire document, the audience stood and sang, "Glory Be to God on High."

Tribute was paid to Evangelist E. Y. Hunker in the form of a letter of appreciation from the First Quorum of Seventy read by Z. Z. Renfroe of the Council of Presidents of Seventy. Evangelist Hunker acknowledged his gratitude for this recognition, and the congregation stood in silent tribute. A formal letter of thanks was also read to those who compiled and rewrote the Rules of Order. A tabulated report of activities of the Quorum of Seventy was read, and a resolution to amend the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College was presented and approved.

The resolution dealing with the stand of the church on the matter of church and state separation presented on Thursday was ruled out of order by the First Presidency since the Conference was made up of delegates from countries outside the United States as well as its citizens. The resolution respecting road signs was voted to be referred to the Presiding Bishopric. A previously presented document on withdrawal of membership from the church was approved, and the preambles and resolution concerning the incorporation of the church were adopted.

Resolutions with reference to Graceland College appropriations and the transfer of Herald Hall and miscellaneous lots to Graceland from the General Church were discussed and approved. The document originating in the New York-Philadelphia District regarding an annual report of General Church activities was referred to the Joint Council. The meeting closed after the approval of two recommendations from the Quorum of Seventy regarding the selection of Z. Z. Renfroe as Senior President of the Council of Presidents of Seventy and Glen H. Johnson as President of the First Quorum of Seventy.

Sunday:

The final business session of the Conference began with the singing of "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." Following the reading of Saturday's minutes a communication on registration was read. Total registration up to 2:00 p.m. Saturday was 7,168. This exceeds all previous Conference registrations including 1930, when 6,008 persons were registered. A statement of appreciation to the press, radio, and television was read, after which it was stated that the Presidency would take the responsibility of writing additional letters of thanks to those who had been instrumental in making the Conference a success.

An ordination service followed with C. Myron Zerr and Franklyn Weddle being ordained members of the Standing High Council; Z. Z. Renfroe, Senior President of Seventy; and Aleah Koury, Seventy. The business of sustaining church officers was attended to, after which Presidents Israel A. Smith and F. Henry Edwards read the list of appointments. General Church appointees were called to the platform, and their wives were asked to stand in their places on the Conference floor. The congregation joined the appointees in singing the traditional "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord." The appointments were approved, and President Israel A. Smith gave a brief closing address to the Conference. Following the reading of the minutes, the Conference was adjourned, the audience sang, "Brethren, Breathe One Fervent Prayer," and Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith gave the benediction.

O Worship the King

This 208-page book is a manual of helps and materials for priesthood, ministers of music, and others who assist in worship . . . and for all who seek to become more alert and efficient in the service of divine worship.

The major portion of this manual deals with our hymnody and special worship music. Leaders who familiarize themselves with it will feel repaid with the satisfaction they will get in improving the total ministry of music in the worship of the congregation.

Included are special appendices making definite suggestions for church music, music for weddings, music for prayer meetings, worship music for the piano, a list of graded anthems, and suggested music for children's choirs.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

P.S.

* SCHOOLS

Perhaps your city or community is confronted with the problem of housing the children in adequate schools. The stork is far ahead of the Board of Education in the desperate race between students and classrooms. . . . While Independence has just voted a bond issue for new school space, Superintendent L. G. Keith announces that on January 7 alone, sixty-six new students were enrolled. Teachers will probably have to hang them from the chandeliers.

* YOU CAN BECOME

One of our hymns contains the words, "I'll do what you want me to do, Dear Lord, I'll be what you want me to be." The fatalist will say that such things are impossible. But the humble follower of Jesus remembers the promise: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Philippians 4:13.

Few people understand the great power they have over their own personalities, and therefore over their own lives. You not only can do what you want to do—within reasonable limits—but you can be what you want to be.

We can change our lives for the better any time we wish to begin. Great changes will take a long time, of course, but many happy little changes can be made and enjoyed right now, with steady improvements being realized all the time. We are not the victims of fate. We are the products of our decisions, our interests, our learning, and our experiences.

All that we need to begin is the realization that the mind holds the initiative and can act now. Books, places, and accessories are important, but they are not indispensable. The basic equipment is within us. This is the "power to become" that Christ gave us—"power to become the sons of God."

* WATER

It is said that water covers three fourths of the surface of the earth. Yes, but it is only skin deep, so far as the world is concerned. Seven miles at its deepest, and for the most part less than five—no more than the skin of an apple, if you like a comparison. . . . You diligent row-croppers who cultivate your soil to sugar fineness so that every shower dissolves some of it and sends it down to the sea, are hastening the day when your descendants—the human race that survives—will be clinging desperately to the remaining rocks, awaiting with terror the waves of the last storm reaching up for them to make a tragic end to the great human experiment. This may seem fanciful, and yet it is what you decree upon the unborn, by your wasteful ways.

Some believe that all life originated in the sea, and it could happen as a result of our misguided ways that the sea would claim all life once again, unless we mend our ways. . . . It takes a thousand years to make an inch of good soil, but in a few years a man with a plow gives it to the fish who may be his successors.

Our young men are studying the ways of conservation, and we would be wise to listen to them and learn how to save one of our most precious heritages—the land which gives us physical life.

The Land Shadowing With Wings

By Mabel Sanford Atkinson

This book was written for young people who want to get the content of the Book of Mormon in action story form. It is not another book about the Book of Mormon; neither does it attempt to give archaeological or historic evidences in its support; it is the language and content of the Book of Mormon in simplified and abbreviated form.

The chronological order of the original text is followed in this book. The repetitious phrases and even entire paragraphs and sections of the Book of Mormon have been eliminated. Both young and old will find Mrs. Atkinson's treatment fresh, accurate, and delightful.

The Hunt Family Goes Zion

A Drama of Christian Living

This play is designed for use in reunions and for Sunday evening vesper services preliminary to a preaching service. It is written so that it may be given in seven nightly sessions of about twenty minutes each; however, more than one session may be presented on the same evening, if this better suits the local need.

While the play has its lighter side, it is not primarily for entertainment. It carries a strong Zion message and is worthy of all the labors which well-trained characters can give to impress its many lessons in Christian living.

PREACHES EASTER SERMON

On Easter Sunday President W. Wallace Smith met with the Saints of Gary, Indiana, in their new church building. This is the first church building of their own these people have had, and Brother Smith reports that it is very adequate for their needs and will give them an opportunity to expand. Dennis Smith is the pastor at Gary. Brother Wallace Smith preached the morning sermon and attended an afternoon worship service.

Following the afternoon service, he met with the Brainard Branch in Chicago, Illinois, in their new church building. The Saints have been worshipping in the new building since February. Brother Kenneth Lusha is the pastor. District President J. C. Stuart was present at the services over the week end.

DON LENTS AT SPRINGFIELD

By the unanimous action of the joint committee on the church camping property known as Gardner Lake on April 14, the name is to be changed. Hereafter it will be known as Lake Doniphan in honor of General Alexander Doniphan who did much to help the church and its leaders in the troublous times of 1838.

HOUSING COMMITTEE REPORTS

The Conference Housing Committee which was directed by Kenneth Byrn of the Center Stake Bishopric reports that twice as many people were housed by the committee at the Conference of this year as were housed the previous Conference. The committee arranged housing for 1,225 people, and expresses gratitude to the people of Independence for their co-operation and hospitality.

LATIN-AMERICAN FIESTA

The Stake-wide Zion's League cabinet of Independence sponsored a Spanish fiesta in the Auditorium basement April 19. Conference Delegates Appear on TV Program

WDAF-TV, Channel 4, Kansas City, Missouri, presented four members of the church on a fifteen-minute panel discussion on Friday night of the General Conference.

This year, for the first time, a new medium was used to acquaint the people of the greater Kansas City area with news and facts of the church's world Conference. Pictures with short news items were presented on the 10:30 p.m. WDAF-TV program with Randall Jessee. Events pictured on television during the week were the Conference Communion service, the young people of the islands standing before the world map in the recently completed joint council room, President Israel A. Smith giving the first address of the Conference, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp presenting the two-million-dollar church budget for the biennium period, a group of college students before murals painted for the Ministry to College Student's booth in the lower auditorium, and the members from overseas in attendance at the Conference.

Statistics show that over 45 per cent of all viewers have their sets on at this late evening hour. The estimated viewing audience in greater Kansas City is 350,000. It is believed that 157,500 people saw the four representatives of the church and heard these statements.

The 1952 Conference marked a year of unusually good publicity opportunities in four Kansas City and Independence newspapers, the radio stations, and the one television station in the Conference area. When the Radio Department offered news pictures and this special Conference interview, Randall Jessee, program director for WDAF-TV, welcomed the programming as it was pictured, written, and furnished by the church radio personnel.

An Army of Volunteers

"Let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me."

—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.

WHEN this appeal was made, the young and recently established church was in grave peril. The people were "pressed by every foe." Enemies threatened on all sides. Persecution meant something more than hard words and ugly looks. People were killed for their faith. They lost property and savings. They were forced out of their homes and exposed to cold, hunger, and disease. Hell was aroused, and Satan was "playing for keeps."

Strength was needed by the little church. The people were in danger, and they had reason to be afraid. The army of the Lord desperately needed help in the form of numbers; it needed stronger morale; and it had to be in a condition of righteousness.

Power without righteousness is a danger to the world. Righteousness without power is impotent and useless.

DR. ROY CHEVILLE of the Grace-land College faculty sends us a newspaper clipping with the following note: "In the comment of Charles Taft about training and mobilizing the 'army of volunteers' rather than using professionals is something pertinent to our conception of using many auxiliary ministers and members."

Charles P. Taft is a prominent attorney of Cincinnati, Ohio, and has served as president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ. In the clipping mentioned (newspaper not identified) Mr. Taft says:

Some laymen think the way to conduct a Christian crusade is to bring into play successful principles of business, by which they always mean principles of advertising, sales, and propaganda. I haven't the heart to kid them as I might, but really they are off on the wrong foot. . . .

If laymen persuade the professional clergy that evangelism means selling religion to new customers, instead of the management and training of an army of volunteers, which is now badly trained and badly organized, they will have done a great disservice to the cause of Christ and his Kingdom.

The kingdom of God cannot be run like big business, because much of the work of the kingdom depends on volunteers. Big business pays men for their service and demands results. It can crush men, or fire them if they fail. Big business can be ruthless, and sometimes is. This is not for the kingdom of God. In that kingdom we can only persuade; we cannot force people. Volunteers are different from mercenaries.

THE HYMN "Onward, Christian Soldiers" is the marching song of the church militant. Its words of faith and tones of power have stirred the hearts of generations of Christian volunteers:

Like a mighty army,
Moves the Church of God . . .

"Like a mighty army" indeed! The Bible, translated into nearly every written language known to man, is carried by dedicated hands into the farthest corners of the earth. Missionary doctors of many faiths go into the impoverished communities of the most backward countries with no hope of gain, giving their lives in the mercy of healing as their Lord did. The "Word of Truth" is declared by teachers and preachers who bear the tidings of salvation.

IN OLDER DAYS when a king could not muster enough troops to win success in his wars, he hired foreign soldiers to fill out his armies. These were called "mercenaries" or professional soldiers. Switzerland furnished many of them to neighboring princes. In our own Revolutionary War, Hessian troops were employed against our colonial regiments.

One thing was discovered: mercenaries never fought as hard as volunteers who were defending their homes and countries, or a loved cause. The mercenary wanted to save his life, collect his pay, and go home—a natural desire. Victory was second to him. For the volunteer, victory came first.

So it is in the army of the Lord. Without volunteers, no great victory in the struggle between right and wrong was ever won. You cannot outclass, you cannot outfight, you cannot subdue the volunteer.

THE GREATEST of all wars is on—the conflict between good and evil, the struggle between Christ and Satan. Your soul and mine, and the souls of those that we love are at stake in this war. The shock of this battle is heard and felt throughout the world. Sometimes the host of heaven surges forward to rescue beleaguered forces. Outnumbered at times, those who fight under the banner of Christ are in danger.

Christ calls for volunteers. You may have stood on the sidelines, undecided, waiting—for what? But you hear his call. Are you brave enough and good enough to take up the arms of the Spirit and fight at his side? Everywhere in the world this war is being fought. No matter where you go you will hear his voice. You cannot escape it. You may deny it or refuse to obey. He is calling . . . Christ is calling . . . calling for you!

Science Moves Forward

EDITOR'S NOTE: A thoughtful and interesting editorial appeared in the Kansas City Star of February 26. We feel that its hopeful aspect will appeal to many of our readers, and we are reprinting it by the gracious permission of Charles V. Stansell, associate editor.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week of the production of two kindred drugs that are expected to prove of great help in the treatment of tuberculosis. As the Star pointed out in commenting on the announcements, a considerable time will still be required for testing out the drugs to determine whether they may have unexpectedly bad effects, whether they will work in all cases and whether the cures will be lasting.

But these are no fly-by-night discoveries. The research workers have had the co-operation of the New York City Department of Hospitals, and the physicians concerned are extremely hopeful of the outcome. How hopeful may be judged from this fact.

The city has several tuberculosis hospitals, and the recent ones have been constructed on the theory that the new drugs might prove so effective that some of the new hospitals could be transferred to other uses—for patients with such chronic diseases as cancer, heart, and circulatory troubles.

Should these expectations be realized the importance of the work done may be gauged from the fact that tuberculosis, in spite of all the progress made in its treatment in the last generation, still kills more persons each year than all the other infectious diseases combined, that the present treatment is long and expensive, and that it is estimated that almost 500,000 persons in the United States have active tuberculosis.

It happens that the same day this announcement was made about the new treatment for tuberculosis, the New York Times was able to make another scientific announcement of immense economic importance. At a meeting in Boston of the American Research and Development corporation it was announced that a revolutionary new process for extracting salt from sea water had been worked out. It has been possible to desalt sea water by a chemical process. But this is too expensive to be commercially practicable. The new process uses electric energy in conjunction with new synthetic membranes.

Sea water is pumped into a unit equipped with membranes. From this unit it emerges split into two streams, one of fresh water, the other of brine. Two-thirds of the original stream is desalted and only one-third is left with the brine which may be further treated to produce salt and other minerals. Here again the announcement is made by sober scientific men from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and affiliated organizations.

They believe the cost of producing the fresh water will be so small that the process can be widely employed. New York City, for instance, is having great trouble and expense in getting water for drinking and other domestic uses. If the new process proves out as expected the city can get all its domestic water from the ocean.

Of course the irrigation of extensive arid areas by the new process would require time and a long range program. But the scientists connected with the project do not put its practical uses off too long. W. L. Laurence, the accomplished scientific writer for the Times, says, "It is expected to provide relief to key areas in a relatively short time."

We are living in a great and thrilling age when two such announcements as those of a probable remedy for tuberculosis and of a process that will enable sea water to be used to redeem arid lands can be made the same day.

This Is Our Hour to Serve

General Conference Sermon, Sunday, March 30

By Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp

Scripture Reading: John 12: 23-32

IN THIS BRIEF SCRIPTURE LESSON there is recorded the purpose of Christ's ministry among men. Just preceding, many wonderful things had taken place: Lazarus had been raised from the dead; Martha and Mary had set the pattern of devotion to a great cause in ministering to Jesus, the Son of God; Judas Iscariot had given expression to selfishness that has made his name stand as a symbol of evil down through the centuries. The historic entry of Jesus Christ into Jerusalem, riding upon a colt the foal of an ass, had taken place that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. All of this and much more had transpired, and Jesus knew that his hour had come. In this grand hour of his experience he uttered those fundamental truths that were to guide man, not only then, but through the centuries until the consummation of his kingdom:

He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be; if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.

Here and throughout the Scriptures there has been emphasized the fundamental and basic principle of life—that to be honored of God, one is required to serve.

Today we are engaged in a great cause. It is a cause which challenges the best there is in us. It is a cause which calls us to service.

IN SELECTING the subject of my sermon for this evening I was motivated largely by the circumstances and conditions which surround us. We cannot help being impressed, if we face realistically our total world situation, that this is indeed another great crisis in world history. Undoubtedly there have been times in the history of the human race when men have been as confused as they are today; but never has there been so much confusion in a period when there has been so much enlightenment of the minds of men, so much advancement in the fields of scientific development, so much progress in the field of human relationships, and so much improvement in the living standards of society. These improvements pertain largely to western civilization and particularly to America, but their effect nevertheless is felt in the rest of the world. These are indeed days when it seems that the forces of darkness are arrayed against the forces of light—when the forces of evil would seek to overcome the forces of righteousness.

Because the forces of evil apparently are being massed together for a great and final onslaught, it seems fitting we should declare in no uncertain way that this is our hour to serve. There must, however, be something more than the call to serve. There must be a specific cause with which we can align ourselves, and to which we can give ourselves. This cause must be clearly defined; its objectives must be set forth; its goals established. It is my purpose to outline some of these objectives, to consider the procedures by which they are to be attained, and to set up reasonable requirements for those who would participate in their attainment.

THE GOALS we seek to attain are twofold. There are those which are of immediate concern and, although these are highly important, they are nevertheless incidental when viewed in the light of the broader objectives. These broader objectives are achieved gradually, and efforts to attain them are in process over a period of time. These have to do with social improvement and economic organization, and call for a practical application of principles governing our social philosophy; these principles will be touched upon in the course of this discussion.

In the first category we have the current problem of raising the largest budget that has ever been presented to a General Conference for its approval. It exceeds the million-dollar mark. We have, however, every assurance from past experience that this budget will be raised.

In addition to this, the Conference will be asked to pass upon special appropriations of similar proportions. The demands for increased service upon our institutions call for additional facilities; the providing of funds for these facilities is a present consideration.

At Graceland College there is need for the completion of the Men's Dormitory and for the building of a small cottage dormitory for women.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital continues to grow. Despite the project which is now in the process of completion (the cost of which has totaled $529,000.00) there is need for additional facilities; and the Conference will be called upon to provide funds for the enlargement of administrative quarters and to provide recreational facilities for the School of Nursing. In addition to this, the Board of Trustees has already approved the adding of space for the emergency department. Funds for this are in hand.

Across the street from the Hospital is the Mark S. White property, consisting of a large residence and five acres of ground. The remodeling of this building, to which is to be added a fireproof structure to provide facilities for aged and convalescent, both men and women, will be an improvement. The construction of this project will be started shortly after General Conference. Funds are available which, together with the proceeds from the sale of the properties now known as "Resthaven" on Winner Road, assure the completion of this project.

Subject to the approval by the Conference of appropriations for the new cottage dormitory for Graceland, the Old Saints' Home building at Lamoni will be reconditioned and used again for its original purpose as a Home for the Aged.

WE HAVE A PRESENT TASK of completing this great Auditorium building. The response to the initial effort to raise funds for this purpose was most encouraging in the last two months of last year, when we came within $2,000.00 of reaching our goal of $100,000.00 for that two-month period. We expect to raise, in addition to our Operating Budget of 1952 and 1953, $200,000.00 each year for construction work on this building. In this period of high inflation and what appears to be an indefinite continuation of inflation, we would be unwise to make a definite estimate of what the cost of completion will be. Our present financial policy of proceeding on the basis of cash-in-hand will not only determine the extent to which we can complete it, but will also assure us of imposing no greater burden upon our people than they are capable of carrying.

WE CONTINUE TO RECOGNIZE the need for careful financial administration. This is essential if we are to maintain our work at home and abroad on a stable basis. Appropriations are under consideration for missionary homes in the Society Islands and for headquarters buildings in the Australasian Mission. We are in process of completing a headquarters building—a combined church and parsonage—in Hannover, for the German Mission.

Reference is made in the Report of the Presiding Bishopric to the General Conference, covering houses of worship throughout the United States and Canada already completed or in the process of construction.

Additions to our ministerial personnel add to our budgetary expense, but the consistent and careful attention given to their selection by the Council of Twelve and by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric gives every assurance of such additions enhancing and extending the ministry of the church to an increasing number of people.

All of the foregoing are indicative of progress and present themselves as goals for our immediate consideration, action, and support. Their attainment gives each of us opportunity to serve.

THOSE OBJECTIVES to which I made reference as being in the second category pertain to social improvement and economic organization within the church membership. These have been pretty well defined in the Scriptures which are sacred to Latter Day Saints. They are outlined concisely in Section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants. They call for both evangelization and social organization. In respect to the first, these commandments are given:

Ye shall go forth . . . preaching my gospel, two by two, in my name, lifting up your voices as with the voice of a trumpet, declaring my word like unto angels of God; and ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Thou shalt teach my Scriptures unto all men, to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

This commission to the church requires a continuation of the present policy of enlarging missionary personnel. Such enlargement necessarily calls for a continued compliance on the part of the members of the church with the financial law of the church, the payment of tithes, and the giving of offerings.

We look about us today and see much that is wrong with our world—war, political graft and corruption, disloyalty and malfeasance of men in high positions, a general lowering of moral standards. As we see all of this, we cannot help feeling that the elements for good which we have always believed to be inherent in our society must somehow be multiplied and efforts co-ordinated and our thinking directed into channels that will be productive of good. This is the great missionary and educational task of the church.

As already indicated, the church is also commissioned to concern itself with the economic welfare of its members and of society as a whole. The core of this philosophy is to be found in the following commandments:

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property.

Thou shalt remember the poor, thou shalt consecrate of thy properties for their support.

Thou shalt consecrate of thy surplus, a residue for the purchase of land, the building of houses of worship, the building up of a New Jerusalem, that my covenant people may be gathered.

This and much more is contained in this remarkable revelation, which we know as Section 42. It constitutes our stewardship, both collectively and individually.

AS WE CONSIDER the attainment of these objectives, we think in terms of the organizations essential to their attainment. It seems quite logical that there was designated a place of beginning for the building up of the New Jerusalem. The revelation identified as Section 57:1 designated Independence as the center place.

"Behold, the place which is now called Independence is the center place." And in Section 81:4:

For Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened.

The Reorganized Church through its prophet, Joseph Smith III, recognized the importance of stakes, one at Independence, and one at Lamoni, Iowa: ". . . organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law." Further light on the gathering is given in Section 128:5:

It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot, and that the necessities of the great majority of the church in gathering together can only be provided for by settling carefully together as many in one region as may be practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people under the laws existing in the places where such settlements are to be made.

With this as our background, we are in a position to consider something of the work of the church in its total program. In our approach to this, let us consider the conditions which confront us in our present world. I have already made reference to these. It is necessary that we view the principles contained in the revelations given to the church in the light of conditions as they exist now, as well as in the days of something over a hundred years ago when most of them were given. That there is a difference in the application was indicated in the instructions just quoted which came through Joseph, the Prophet of the Reorganization.

Presently there are tremendous forces at work to create disunity and fear among the nations of the earth. There is obvious need for some to think clearly, to maintain faith and confidence in the ultimate accomplishment of the eternal purposes. As Reorganized Latter Day Saints, we partake of a portion of this apprehension or fear and are inclined to turn to some expedient method of organization in the hope that we shall find economic security and peace of mind.

I wish to say candidly that our hope lies not in a program of isolation, geographically or physically, but rather in a program of adjustment to a world situation and an isolation which can come only through the development of a personal integrity and a closely knit social organization which makes possible a unity within the group, despite world forces which seem to be in opposition to the movement of Zion. This was indicated in the revelation given through Joseph Smith III:

... it is incumbent upon the Saints while reaping the benefit of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organizations as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honorably and honestly before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8.

WE NEED TO EVALUATE our own resources and examine our own objectives in the light of other movements which are in harmony with our Zion's goals. Many problems pertaining to the betterment of humankind are being tackled in the councils of the United Nations. These have to do with civil and political rights, but go even further than this, for they are rights which are economic, social, and cultural, having to do with the opportunity to gain a living by work—just and favorable conditions of work—social security, adequate living standards, housing, health benefits, and others. We in America have made great progress in the attainment of many of these, but there are untold millions throughout the world who live in conditions of poverty, with little hope unless a world-wide program and unity among nations make possible the lifting of their standards of living. If this is to succeed it will be in proportion to the understanding that has been developed in the minds of men relative to their responsibility as neighbors, and to their answer to the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" In our approach to this question we should give due consideration to the commandment given to the church, "Go preach." And in another revelation:

Verily I say unto you, that ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing, as with the voice of a trumpet; lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst, and am your advocate with the Father; and it is his good will to give you the kingdom.—Section 28: 2.

The building of the kingdom requires a going-forth among the nations with that certain sound, preaching a gospel of Christian brotherhood and of the establishment of God's kingdom. As men become enlightened, the process of selection and the gathering of our people, both in our own country and in other nations, becomes in fact a reality. The orderly process of the gathering is essential to the forward movement of the church. The organization of individuals into groups such as congregations, missions, and stakes, and the effecting of organizations for economic purposes are responsibilities of the general officers of the church. But organizations should have some purpose, some objective, and meet a particular need. Economic organization in the Zion's program, as in our present world economy, requires capital, management, and labor, and must supply a particular need.

THERE ARE TWO THEORIES of approach being made to this business of Zion's organization. One is that of setting up a framework or government in which there shall be specific rules or regulations affecting the arrangement of economic affairs, and to some extent ordering those affairs in such a way as to bring about proper human relationships. This presupposes an ability to set up such government within the presently prescribed form of civil government.

The other theory, which appears more logical and within the range of our ability, is that of administrative procedure directing the gathering of people on a purely voluntary basis. Through free association of ideas and their implementation we can approach a condition of human relationships contemplated in the principles set forth in the Restoration Gospel. This latter is evolutionary in its development. Through such procedures land areas and physical resources can be acquired, these being basic to any major community development, and yet made adaptable to the changing needs of society. This also permits of the growth of society and its development in social, economic, and cultural fields, and is done within the areas of presently constituted government and its agencies. This seems particularly desirable because of the critical period in which we live, and in a world which is moving rapidly to some destination, to some place with a purpose. This does not preclude the need for careful planning or the development of policy, nor does it preclude the need for setting up patterns of human and economic relationships. These must be done, but with due recognition of the fact that society is ever changing—that it is a living organism and is not to be confined tomorrow within the blueprints drawn for today.

Time will not permit a discussion of ideologies which are today in conflict—namely, Communism versus Democracy. It is interesting to note, however, that Communism, through dictatorship, moves with greater dispatch than Democracy, because it tolerates no opposition. It is ruthless; it uses all and everything to attain its ends. Some have written to me asking me to state the difference between our Zion's philosophy and Communism. May I quote just two paragraphs which will show that one is the antithesis of the other. The first is from an article on the Hegemony of Chinese Communism, written by George E. Taylor in which he comments on the party Philosophy of Communism (September, 1951, issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political Science). He states (and this statement sums up the basis on which Communism functions):

The individual must obey the organization. The minority must obey the majority. Lower echelons must obey higher echelons. And the entire party must obey the basic principles of the central committee.

Contrast this with the doctrine of free agency, in which Reorganized Latter Day Saints believe, as it is set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7:

The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold these your brethren; they are the workmanship of my own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency.

It is in the exercise of this free agency that we, associating ourselves together on a voluntary basis, engage in those activities which are for the betterment of our social, economic, cultural, and spiritual welfare; not through coercion, not because of fear, not because of power in the hands of a despot, but because of our recognition of God and our belief in his Son, Jesus Christ, and because we wish to build his kingdom.

JOSEPH SMITH III, in an editorial in the Saints' Herald of July 15, 1882, gave counsel to the church relative to the gathering and to the organizations contemplated in the law. I wish to quote a few excerpts from that editorial, which present a point of view which is sound and which stands the test of critical scrutiny and examination today. The introduction of his editorial is as follows:

We have long been expecting that some one or more in the church would attack the policy especially advocated and advised by us—that of the Saints ceasing to wander about in uncertain ways, without permanent homes and objects, and settling in the regions round about to stay, to build up homes, by honorable efforts and industry and economy to secure something of this world's goods wherewith to build up temporal Zion when it is built.

He gives counsel to “purchase lands, settle and improve, and accumulate property.” He emphasizes the responsibility that members of the church have regarding the purchasing of land and the settling of that land:

The language of the revelations to the church, freely interpreted, is that the Saints shall purchase all the land in the region that can be bought for money. And what object could there be in commanding a purchase that was or is not to be used by them, and if any part of the increase that a Latter Day Saint may have may be consecrated or paid into the Lord's storehouse, it is certain that the methods by which an increase may be created or obtained are to be followed by them. No portion of the increase can be paid unless there is an increase, and the fact that there is to be an increase signifies that there are ways by which that increase may accrue that are honorable ways in the law of God and in his sight ways that are lawful.

He stated further:

We have never seen anyone who had matured a feasible plan of carrying out a common “all things common” theory as it is usually held, and as we have commonly heard it rendered.

These are indeed the principles upon which we must build today, and I believe that real progress can be made in regard to the establishment of Zion in about the extent to which we yield obedience to the following fundamental principles: the recognition that God is owner and creator; that we are stewards; and that as stewards we have responsibility relative to the management of temporal possessions and talents and the use of time. The right of free agency, the right to think, and the right to express our thoughts, the right to be free from the domination of central committees or groups, the right to organize ourselves on a voluntary basis free from all coercion—these are the principles upon which we can build a truly Christian society, and such a society can be built only within the framework of a democratic form of government.

WHAT CAN WE DO to make progress toward our goals? Let me suggest a few important things which are receiving and will continue to receive our attention.

First, I would like to suggest some needs which pertain to health and welfare. One is the development of a plan to supplement the health, medical, and hospital insurance of existing agencies to the extent that all members of the church can and will be free from the fear and the consequences of sickness and disease. This can, in my opinion, be accomplished in supplementing—not setting up substitutes for such existing facilities as Blue Cross and Medical Care and other forms of health and hospitalization insurance.

The need for a health clinic to be operated in conjunction with the hospital must be kept before us continually. This will require further expansion of facilities and the organization of medical personnel that believes in and is dedicated to the cause of Zion.

I am of the opinion that organizations can be created which will meet these particular needs and be in harmony with the instructions given in Section 128:9: “. . . to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.”

The care of the poor, the rehabilitation of those who, because of physical incapacity or other conditions need financial assistance, can be met through a more complete functioning of the Aaronic priesthood. Today too many cases find their way to the headquarters office which could well be ministered to on the local level. Expansion of the work now being done through the Social Service Center by the inclusion of social service workers seems a logical approach to the co-ordination and educational work necessary to render this service throughout the entire church. Here again such an extension of service by the church would be to supplement and not in lieu of other agencies already established.

The training of the Aaronic priesthood continues to be one of the most essential needs if the ministry that is contemplated in the law of the church is to be given to its members. We again emphasize that it is a ministry of temporalities and of service. We have found from experience that most of the benevolent needs arise from poor management in the home, or sickness, or accident, or a combination of all. Through the Aaronic priesthood we should be able to keep contact with all of our members to meet such needs.

At the last General Conference, a document regarding surplus was approved. We would like to call attention again to the contents of that document, for it is our opinion that herein is to be found the solution to many of the problems that we face, and it provides the medium through which some of our social goals can be achieved. Here are the provisions, stated as concisely as possible:

1. A separate treasury is to be designated (this has been done).
2. Surplus is an outright conveyance to the church, without legal obligation of the church to the contributor. This requires a clear understanding between the Bishop and the contributor concerned as to the purpose of the consecration. Surplus may be used for the following purposes:

(a) Land purchase for the public benefit of the church

(b) Completing the Auditorium

(c) Houses of worship, where the General Church has particular responsibility

(d) To provide for the cost of economic and community planning.

In this connection we would like to point out that there are those who propose other means of providing funds and other measures. We believe that real progress will be attained only as we work within the limits of procedures defined as being within the provisions of the law. This applies also to the provision in that document for the development of business, industrial, and agricultural stewardships.

SUMMARIZED BRIEFLY here are our accomplishments, our present objectives, and the significance of the call which comes to each of us to serve. We have emerged from a financial condition which some twenty-one years ago threatened the very existence of the church to a position of unusual financial stability. This has been done in harmony with the principles of sound finance and the temporal law, including the principles of the storehouse. Surpluses have been placed in reserves and funds have been allocated for our institutions and for the work on the Auditorium, all such funds totaling approximately four million dollars since 1941. This principle of reserves is one that is fundamental to storehouse organization. The reserves that have been set up strengthen the church for its missionary work, for the retirement of its missionaries, and for a bulwark against inflation or deflation.

We have strengthened our institutions and added to our ministerial personnel. We have provided better facilities for the sick and convalescent and the worthy poor, and have improved the standing of our educational institution.

THE CHALLENGE which comes to us in this present hour requires of each of us a consecration anew if we are to meet the needs of the hour and if we are to serve in this hour. Probably never in the history of the world has so much stress been placed upon the problem of providing for the spiritual needs of man. It is the spirit of man which gives direction to all of his activities, whether that spirit is directed toward what is good or what is bad. In either case the quantity and quality of temporal possessions and their use determine in great measure the extent to which the objectives of the

United Nations - Human Rights - Latter Day Saints

By Maurice L. Draper

THE UNITED NATIONS General Assembly approved on December 10, 1948, a Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This did not have the legal binding force of a treaty, being a declaration of ideals only. Now under consideration is the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights. It is expected that this covenant will be eventually submitted to the General Assembly for approval, after which, when finally reviewed, revised, and adopted, it will be opened for signature and ratification. When twenty countries have ratified it, the covenant will be in force.

The basic civil and political rights set forth in the draft covenant are well known in American tradition and law, and relate to the right to life, protection against torture, slavery, forced labor, arbitrary arrest or detention, freedom to leave a country, freedom to return to one's country, right to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty, protection against ex post facto laws, right to recognition as a person before the law, freedom of religion, expression, assembly and association, and equal protection of the law.¹

In addition to these civil and political rights, the covenant deals with social and economic rights. There are far-reaching statements on the right to work and choose a profession, conditions of work, social security, housing, standard of living, health, protection of maternity and children, labor unions, education, ownership of property, equality of men and women, and diffusion of science and culture.

THERE ARE MORAL PRINCIPLES involved in these statements. Social justice is related to righteousness in a way which is of special interest to Reorganized Latter Day Saints. Whether the Draft Covenant should be supported by Saints might well be determined by comparing excerpts from the covenant and from church Scriptures relating to the same rights.

DRAFT COVENANT

1. Right to Life

To take life shall be a crime, save in the execution of a sentence of a court, or in self-defense. . . .—Part II, Article 3, Paragraph 2.

2. Torture

No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.—Part II, Article 4.

3. Slavery

No one shall be held in slavery; slavery and the slave trade in all their forms shall be prohibited.—Part II, Article 5, Paragraph 1.

4. Freedom of Movement

Article 8 provides that a person shall have freedom of movement, freedom to change residence within his own country, freedom to leave his own country, and shall not be subjected to arbitrary exile. Article 9 provides that an alien legally admitted to a country shall not be expelled without adequate legal cause.

5. Freedom of Conscience, Thought, and Religion

Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice or worship and observance.

Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are pursuant to law and are reasonable and necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals for the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.—Part II, Article 13.

R.L.D.S. SCRIPTURE

Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come . . . but he that killeth shall die.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6, 7².

. . . this great abomination . . . doth not exceed that of our people . . . torturing their bodies even unto death . . . for a token of bravery . . . because of the hardness of their hearts . . . brutal . . . without principle.—Book of Mormon, Moroni 9: 10, 11, 19, 21.

It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.

The program of the gathering, colonization, community stewardships, and the Zionic plan presumes sufficient freedom of movement to permit the selective gathering, with representatives from all nations.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10; 45: 12-14.

We believe that rulers, states, and governments have a right, and are bound to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their religious belief; but we do not believe that they have a right, in justice, to deprive citizens of this privilege, or proscribe them in their opinions, so long as a regard and reverence is shown to the laws, and such religious opinions do not justify sedition nor conspiracy.—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 7.

We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members for disorderly conduct according to the rules and regulations of such societies, provided that such dealing be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, to take from them this world's goods, or put them in jeopardy either life or limb, neither to inflict any physical punishment on them.—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 10.

A City in the Clouds

By Paul M. Hanson

Illustrations from photographs by the author.

A TRIP TO MACHU PICCHU is an adventure into the mysterious past of mankind. The city lay hidden among the towering peaks of the Andes for hundreds of years until discovered by Dr. Hiram Bingham in 1911. It was then overgrown with forest and jungle.

Machu Picchu, which not many years ago was accessible only to a few, can now be reached by train or autocarril from Cuzco. The autocarril is a combination of auto and bus that runs on the railway track, carries eight or ten passengers, and makes the trip of about seventy miles to the ruins in much less time than the steam train.

The journey means a blending of archaeology and scenery. Upon entering the gorge of the Urubamba River one travels between walls of tremendous mountain peaks, every mile presenting varying panoramic views of snow-capped mountainous splendor.

2. A beautiful example of coursed masonry.

1. A section of Machu Picchu.

Machu Picchu has been called a "lost city," but its existence probably was never lost entirely to the Incas. In any case, in recent years it has been explored.

This ancient city occupies a site on a mountain ridge in one of the most inaccessible parts of the Andes. It is surrounded by lofty mountains, and on three sides by the magnificent canyon of the swift-flowing, foaming Urubamba River.

The ascent of 2,000 feet from the valley to the ruins is made afoot or by horseback. (About one hour is required for the latter with a guide accompanying. See illustration 1.)

Among the many ruins of the city are those of plazas, temples, houses, streets, innumerable stairways and terraces, and huge constructions, all uniting to form one of the most unique and impressive sights imaginable, including archaeological treasures inseparably associated with scenic grandeur that probably cannot be equaled anywhere in the world.

The ruins are of white granite, some of which are fitted together with a jeweler's precision. (See illustration 2.)

THE FOLLOWING well describes what I was privileged to experience during the three days of my stay in Machu Picchu, where a small but fairly comfortable inn is operated by the Peruvian government:

Machu Picchu is a magnificent panorama of mountains, now veiled in mist, now bathed in sunshine—a ring of huge, towering peaks, crowned by clouds or glistening in the pale light of dawn or the bright light of noon or the waning light of evening. At Machu Picchu you contemplate a row of jagged pinnacles shaped like sugar loaves (Rio de Janeiro has one such, and it is world famous; Machu Picchu has half a dozen, which are not, but are sure to be some day). And rising up from all this gorgeous natural beauty is the broken, mysterious city, a huddle of roofless white buildings of stone, admirably smoothed and polished and joined together, blending in silent harmony with the mountains, merging with the mist and sunshine and shadows in an unending succession of eerie, unforgettable patterns.¹ (See illustration 3.)

Prominent among the ruins is the Intihuatana. A winding stairway leads to the highest point of the city, to this monolithic sundial, which probably was used for determining the seasons of agricultural work and religious functions with the movement of the sun. From this "solar observatory" perhaps the best view of all may be obtained—set as it is in the midst of mountains of unexcelled grandeur and beauty. (See illustration 4.)

We do not know whether we have been looking at Pre-Inca and Inca ruins or just Inca remains. There is a sharp cleavage of opinion among authorities respecting the age of the city. According to one theory, it was built by the Incas in the fifteenth century; others maintain that the city reaches

In the picture of the gate, the excellence of the masonry, the monolithic stairway, a ring stone above the stone lintel at the top of the picture for fastening the enclosure of the gate, and the small stone posts on the sides for further locking are visible.

It is easy to imagine since the city was so well fortified that it was built for defense. It seems to be a stronghold. But the question arises, if the enemies of the people of Machu Picchu had only crude weapons, bows and arrows, and blow-guns, then why was such a place as Machu Picchu needed for security?

back to pre-Inca times. It appears to be a matter of take your choice. Dr. Bingham believes the story of the city "covers many, many centuries." It seems clear nobody knows when the city was built.

There is much mystery surrounding Machu Picchu. Many questions arise. Was it built as a fortress for protection against barbarous tribes? Were the builders inspired by terror? Was it a city or refuge where people could nurture the religion of their choice? What impelled the construction of such a stupendous work as Machu Picchu? Why was it abandoned?

There is much to indicate the city was a stronghold. One side of the city overlooks a perpendicular precipice reaching down 2,000 feet, and on the other side approach was made only by secret passages leading up the steep sides of the mountain. In addition to this the swift, powerful river surrounding the city on three sides, serving as a moat, provided further security. (See illustration 5.)

It would seem that being so well fortified naturally, the inhabitants of Machu Picchu would have been without fear of being surprised or taken by an enemy, yet there were gates that gave added protection.

The Lord's Business

By Bill Caldwell

An Address Given at a Central Research Meeting in Independence, Missouri, on February 23, 1952

I AM A GREAT BELIEVER in the Lord's business. This is based upon my having received much inspiration in my engineering, inventions, and business life from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Recently, faced with an elephantine problem and with only a mere toothpick with which to move it, I reached for the Book and opened it at Jeremiah 33:3: "Call on me, and I will answer thee. I will show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." I could read that a hundred times and learn something more each time. As one who is doing some business with a reasonable amount of success, I give credit entirely to the Lord, because none of us know much. When we die, if we knew one hundred or even a thousand times more, we would still know very little. If all the knowledge of all the men in the world were put into one skull, his knowledge, compared to the total sum of knowledge possessed by the Almighty, would be as if a man standing on the seashore reached down and took a handful of sand and compared it to all the sand on all the seashores in all the worlds.

Anything we do here, to be truly constructive, must be dedicated to the Lord's business. Not long ago I sat with a group of executives and engineers of a very large corporation. When they were told that this country had not produced a single major invention during the past twenty-five years, they became quite angry—but they could not refute this charge. We are a great people to improve and mass-produce, but it is clear to me that invention is inspiration from the Lord.

We are in so much of a hurry that the Lord cannot tell us much. I say, "Let's slow down a little bit!" That's what I'm doing and asking my men to do likewise. What we need most is to get close to the Lord in all that we are trying to do. When a group of men like ourselves gets close enough to the Lord to receive inspiration adequate for our hour and day, the results will help cast up the Lord's highway and make truth shine brightly toward the coming of that perfect day we look to and strive for.

The next pressing problem is that we work together with all our talents and ability. Talent and ability are not the same. One may develop two talents and have the ability to develop eight or ten more talents, but if he is too busy or indifferent to use all his capacity he fails to measure up to his high calling.

INVENTION hasn't really started yet. The applied as well as the abstract sciences are still in swaddling clothes. We go all around "Robin Hood's barn" to see whether the doors of knowledge possess hinges or we pry off a plank at a time in order to get into the stuffy place. There is a realm of light and truth and knowledge that will come down to encompass and lift us above the world's intellectual realm even at its best man-worshipping levels.

This endowment will surely come as we unselfishly, hourly and daily, lay hold of every problem of living together with heart, mind, and soul dedicated to Christ's demonstration of scientific living. In the realm of pure science, He turned gravity on and off, demonstrated transference (the Ascension and visit to America without effort or mechanical assistance), stilled the tempest on Galilee, created food, gave sight, healed the lame, restored life, and translated a city from earth to heaven, all by a word—the word of knowledge. He said, "Greater things than these shall ye do because I go unto the Father." Hard work, study, and inspiration from on high are the catalyst that transforms a working faith into miracle-working power for accomplishing his will.

THE ALMIGHTY is calling on us to be the inspiration of the world. The preachers aren't able to do it by themselves. They have worked hard, and they are conscientious; they're honest in their convictions, but they need the help of inspired men with scientific knowledge. Paul, in writing to the Corinthian saints, said, "The kingdom of God consists not of words but of power." What is power but knowledge? Knowledge of creation makes things and holds them together.

If we associate with spiritual insight, supplementing our efforts, and with our sole objective the Lord's business, there isn't anything we can't do. Let's take hold of the scientific knowledge we have and our experience and ability and do timeless things. If we do this we can accomplish more in the next three years than we have done in the last 130. The minute we begin to trust in our own strength, we are no better than the self-worshipping world which has been milling around for centuries and starts out every year about where it began the year before as far as serving God and the race is concerned.

We have to set our Zion goals, then use all the faith and courage we possess and every tool that we have—mental, physical, and spiritual—to do the job. If we catalogue our abilities and manpower which can be called on to do certain jobs, we can accomplish much.

There are several plants around Independence owned by members of the Reorganized Church. Others aren't owned but are operated by our people. If they are spiritual minded that is the important factor. Let's work with the people who are spiritual minded who have a sense of obligation to the race and to God. If we take the problems we have among ourselves and solve them, the way will open up to do bigger and better things. Money will be secondary. The Lord has told us that he will open the door of heaven if we will only trust and do his will. That doesn't mean just materially.

God wants us to love him and to think out for ourselves the means to serve one another. We may need to work together now in our industrial efforts in a loose association; a corporation can be formed later. If we do work together and use our combined talents with the one objective—to help build Zion—we will succeed. Everything we have belongs to God. If we are supposed to use something as stewards, we must use it or it will be taken away from us. We must use it for the building of Zion, for the advancement of the gospel.

Almighty God has given us a job to do, but if we don't do it he isn't going to sweep us off the face of the earth. We'll do it ourselves by the forces we generate and help to direct against ourselves. God's laws are impersonal. We can't change them; we can either use them beneficially or misuse them to our destruction. A handful of consecrated people, who will use every talent and every possession to advance Zion in the spirit of humility and consecration, can accomplish the Lord's work. Our talents plus the Lord's help can do this, because two and God are always a majority.

The Case Against Gambling

By Ansley Cunningham Moore

EDITOR'S NOTE: This clear and logical discussion on a practice which has become very widespread in America was printed in the "Christian Century" for February 20, 1952, and is reprinted by permission. Dr. Moore is pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and has held important national and international offices in this denomination. It is somewhat alarming to learn that many of our own church members feel justified in buying a chance on an automobile raffle or a baseball pool or in placing a small bet on a game. These people might never enter a gambling casino nor play a roulette wheel, yet—as Dr. Moore brings out in this article—the principle is much the same and un-Christian in character.

WE WERE WALKING from the television studio where the six of us had participated in a program called "The Pittsburgh Story." This particular program had as its theme, "Should Pennsylvania have legalized gambling?" Three young business executives, keen and very much alive, had acted as questioners. A Pulitzer prize-winning newspaperman and the writer were "experts" on the program. A political science professor from a near-by university was the moderator.

The newspaperman gave the program "color" as he had won a national reputation investigating crime, and especially gambling, in this county of 1,500,000 people. He had insisted while we were on the air that gambling is "an easy form of theft," and that it is "the easiest thing in the world to control" if officials want to control it. His investigations here had revealed, so he said, that in Allegheny County there is a gross "take" of 100 million dollars a year, and in Pittsburgh a "take" of 50 million dollars a year. He stood unalterably opposed to legalizing gambling—which, of course, fits in with the report of the Kefauver committee to the effect that no plan suggested for legalized gambling promised success. ". . . much of the propaganda for legalized gambling," that Senate committee noted, "can be traced to organized and professional gamblers."

A Layman's Questions

As we stepped out on the street one of the businessmen, who had listened with unusual attention in the planning conference the day before while I outlined the points I would make when we faced the cameras, turned to me and said, "Well, Doctor, I don't know how much good you did with your last Sunday's sermon, but I'll bet you did more good today with what you said than with ten sermons."

I thanked him, and as we stopped for a street light he went on: "You know, I've never known why the Protestant church is opposed to gambling. I've never heard any sound arguments against gambling, given without emotion. I've never heard my minister preach on gambling. Last night," he continued, "I was at a party with some of my friends. The conversation turned to this television program and I told them the points you had made against gambling. None of them had ever heard why the church opposes gambling. Thank you very much," he said as we parted, "for your help."

I left him—that attractive young businessman, so likely to rise in influence in this great industrial center of the world—wondering how many other men there are in America who, like him, have never heard religion's argument against gambling. He knows that legalized betting hurts legitimate business. He is aware that gangsters rule the gambling business and that they put their greedy hands into legitimate business and spoil that, too. But is gambling at bridge (so-called "private gambling"), shooting "craps," playing poker for money, betting on football and baseball games, pitching to the crack, wrong? Is it morally wrong? If so, why?

Everywhere I have gone since that television program I have run into conversation about gambling. Almost without exception people tell me, frequently with a sheepish grin, that they gamble and see little or nothing wrong with it. As a matter of fact, the American Institute of Public Opinion found by a survey that about 45 per cent of our adult population indulges in some form of gambling. Fifty million Americans can be wrong! And they are—dead wrong. But can one make a case against gambling? Does gambling have moral significance?

Religion's Argument

There are five principal reasons why the Protestant church is unalterably opposed to gambling—all gambling—in all its forms.

In the first place, gambling damages personality. The New Testament, especially the fifteenth chapter of Luke, makes it plain that the most precious thing in the world is human personality. What has this to do with gambling? Here is a $50-a-week clerk who, in the main, functions normally on his income. Suppose he wins $200 on a $2 bet. He now has taken out of society $198 and has put little or nothing back. This does something to him. He is now likely to be rendered incapable of functioning normally at his old job, especially if he wins bets several times. He has learned what seems to be a short cut. Greed enters the picture, and he may come to feel that he was a fool before to work so hard for so little. Something has happened to this man's moral life. Gambling does something to people's characters, and what it does is not good.

This is a familiar story to every pastor. Here is a family man who is respected because he is a responsible citizen. This gambling disease lays its hand upon him and he becomes an embezzler or worse. Usually he becomes pauperized, sometimes seeking escape by way of suicide. I have seen this thing destroy otherwise good men too often to think that there is anything good about it. It does something to character.

Gambling Corrupts All It Touches

But that is not all. Gambling corrupts everything it touches. The racketeers go in for it in a big way. The company it keeps reveals something of its nature. It endows mobsters who buy political—that is, police—protection. This matter of racketeers taking part in government ought to alarm America. Senator Kefauver found that this can be controlled in states where gambling is illegal, but where "gambling receives a cloak of respectability through legalization, there is no weapon which can be used to keep the gamblers and their money out of politics." Gambling ties in with narcotics, prostitution, and all forms of illegality and immorality. Gambling now supports a network of evil which threatens to corrupt this nation. Supporting anything which corrupts others is morally wrong.

In rebuttal, those who favor legalizing gambling to control it usually point to Nevada as a shining example of both how legislation can keep gambling free of corruption and how state treasuries can be filled with easy money. The Senate's committee tore this argument to shreds when it said, "As a case history of legalized gambling, Nevada speaks eloquently in the negative." And the senator from Tennessee adds: ". . . both morally and financially legalized gambling in Nevada is a failure." The facts behind this con-

Question:

What book is referred to in I Nephi 1: 10? I understand that it was Christ himself who gave Lehi the book during the time of his vision which was 600 years before Christ was born to this world.
B. M. C.
California

Answer:

It was a book given into the hand of Lehi by Christ during a vision, wherein he read of the pending downfall of Jerusalem because of its wickedness, in which many of its inhabitants would be destroyed, and others be carried away captive into Babylon, with many other things. We are not to understand that the book was retained by Lehi, its purpose having been fulfilled by what he read in the vision; neither is there any indication as to what book it was.

Question:

Since according to the vision those who died without law are to inherit terrestrial glory (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6), shall we assume that they will have no opportunity for celestial glory? If this assumption is true, would not that be a discrimination and injustice against those who had no opportunity of hearing the gospel on earth?
V. J. R.
Missouri

Answer:

Joseph the Seer and Sidney Rigdon, who together had the vision, spoke of what they saw in the world of spirits, some of whom had not heard the gospel in this life. Neither their account nor other Scripture warrants the interpretation that all who die without a knowledge of the gospel enter the terrestrial world.

The basis of division in the spirit world is not whether men obeyed the gospel or not here, but rather the manner of life they lived and the character they developed. It is their character—that is, their moral and spiritual standing before God—which determines the place to which they go among the four major divisions into which humanity is divided at death: celestial, terrestrial, telestial, and perdition.

In this world the gospel reaches only a small minority of the people, and were salvation dependent upon obedience here alone few would be saved. Justice requires that the privilege of hearing the gospel should reach all men, thus making necessary its ministry in the next world.

The teaching of Scripture is that "the gospel is preached to them who are dead" (I Peter 4: 6). Those who did not hear it here will hear it on the other side in whichever glory they may find place and their salvation will be complete in that glory. In another vision Joseph saw his brother Alvin in the celestial kingdom and wondered how it could be, since he had died before the gospel was restored. He was told: —

All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts. And I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the years of accountability, are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven.—
Church History, Volume II, page 16.

Salvation comes by Jesus Christ through the gospel, but the degree of reward or glory is determined by character as the Lord has said, "Their glory . . . is given for their works" (Doctrine and Covenants 116: 2). This was said of Saints, for even those under the gospel in this life attain only to that glory for which they have lived and are prepared. This can be no less true of those who die without the gospel, for it is still their works which determine the glory they enter; and since they hear and are privileged to accept the gospel over there, we discover that God's dealing with them is exactly on a par with those who accept the gospel in this life. It is said that the preaching of the gospel in the terrestrial glory is "that they might be judged according to men in the flesh" (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6). The teaching is oft repeated in the Scriptures that "all men will be judged or rewarded according to their works." There is no discrimination either in judgment or in reward, and the same requirements for salvation are exacted of one as of another, subject to variation of circumstances. We know of no reason why those from darkened lands, as well as civilized or Christian lands, who live up to the light they have and cultivate the requisite nobility of character may not be received into celestial glory, and through their acceptance of the gospel there have eternal inheritance in that kingdom with others of like character. Thus all men are given equal opportunity, and God's justice is maintained.

Question:

Is "the least" spoken of in Matthew 11: 11 Christ?
MRS. F. G. C.
Missouri

Answer:

Comparing the various texts on this point, Jesus seems in all of them to be impressing upon his disciples the lesson of humility. He said that those of the world seek greatness through domination, but it should not be so with them. His way was through humility and service. The disciple who sought to be great could attain it only through service to others; he must humble himself by becoming a servant of all; or, in other words, by making himself the least he could become the greatest, for true greatness is in service and not in the power of domination.

Christ made himself an example of this sound principle, seeking the welfare and eternal life of every man, more than other men could do. Thus making himself the least, he proved himself the greatest. He was offering himself as an example. Of all who ever came into the world, Jesus was at the same time the least and also the greatest. "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." He who would follow Christ and approach his greatness, let him follow through the valley of humble service, making himself as the "least" in the kingdom of heaven.

Am I a Stranger - A Gentile?

By H. Paul Eads

EDITOR'S NOTE: Many readers will be interested in this unusual article. The writer is a veteran of World War II. His wife and children belong to the Reorganization. He was moved to write his thoughts after hearing a recent sermon by Apostle D. Blair Jensen.

A FEW EVENINGS AGO I heard a sermon. It was an amplification of words of instruction used many, many years ago, yet it was so interpretative that even a child could grasp and hold its meaning.

It was not the speaker that I found most interesting. He was but as millions and millions of others in my mind's eye. It was his interpretative ability plus the unraveling of a practical way wherein the subject matter could be put to use.

In his discourse there was no semblance of fear fostered, no devil, no hell, no condemnation for acts. He made no effort to appear superior to his listeners—to prove that I or anyone else was a Gentile and he an Israelite. It was a straightforward, simple chain of related events culminating with the necessity of knowing the doctrine of the law of surplus service to others and recognizing that each is but a unit of the whole.

He quoted:

The voice of the Lord is unto all men; there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see; neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated.

Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men.

Recognizing that it is God who holds dominion over all things and acknowledges man in his goodness of service to his fellow-men as well as to and for himself, and that it is not the work of God which frustrates, we realize that the work of man (which holds no power) is but a false domain and merely exists in his adverse thoughts, actions, and deeds.

. . . the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed. . . .

I AM MY OWN MIRROR, reflecting my own inner self as I truthfully am. When I criticize and look for faults in others, damning their actions and beliefs, I am damning myself, since it has not yet been given to me to live in a house other than the body which God has given to me to live in. Therefore I should be rebellious if I should declare, even to myself, "I am this and thou art that." The very process of breathing is proof sufficient that all of us are approved of our Heavenly Father, else we could not breathe "the breath of life" with each passing moment.

To deny that each is a unit of the whole or of the oneness of God is to deny the truth of this Scripture: ". . . and the voice of warning shall be unto all people. . . ."

All people are spoken of as a single unit. But we find hope, even though we may misinterpret it, in this quotation:

. . . the Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his [and here, I believe is meant each and every individual] work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he [I believe, once again, is meant the individual] has measured to his fellow-man. . . .

This places the responsibility on every individual and firmly establishes the importance of tolerance to all regardless of established ideals and customs.

To me, these quotations give a clear and concise description of the individual who cannot or will not recognize that "except God build the house, they labor in vain who [try to] build it."

They seek not the Lord to establish his [I believe this means our Father's] righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol.

I am convinced that if I look into the face of any living person and see there nothing but sadness, sorrow, condemnation, and sin I am denying God's very sustenance of myself. Since God gives to all impartially, I must see goodness and mercy in the "least of his children" or the most exalted if I would see goodness and mercy in myself.

Weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow-man, neither trust in the arm of flesh—but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world.

THE CONCLUDING POINT of this sermon was the appeal to be tolerant and be of service always to all people ". . . that faith also might increase in the earth."

If I am a Gentile and not an Israelite, I append my last thoughts from my searching. If a person would be free, he must find his freedom in "giving of more than that which is required that will do it."

It is but the doctrine of the law of surplus service, "a heart full of love."

Young Adults Meet

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—Two hundred fifty young adults of the Central Missouri Stake met at Lee's Summit Church, March 9. The theme was "The Book of Mormon." At the twenty minute worship period Howard Martin, assistant stake leader, gave a flannelgraph on "The Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon" and A. Carlos Smith sang a solo which told of Joseph Smith's praying in the woods. Following this was a class period "Why the Book of Mormon?" taught by the stake president, Harry J. Simons. Clair Weldon, the stake missionary, preached on "The Book of Mormon, an Added Witness." Special music was furnished by Blue Springs and Warrensburg.

A basket dinner was served in the basement. As the group gathered back in the upper auditorium, Melba Troyer, stake music director, led twenty minutes of group singing.

Roy Weldon of the stake high council, gave a talk followed by group discussion. Leonard Smith, stake young adult leader, and his two assistants, Cecil Eddleman and Howard Martin, were in charge of the meetings.—Reported by LOUISE LOVELAND

Increase in Baptisms

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—The ninety-seventh regular conference of the Kansas City stake was held March 7, Stake President J. D. Anderson presiding. Thirty-eight delegates to General Conference were elected. Stake Bishop Howard F. Miller, who has charge of all funds—congregation and stake—gave the financial report for 1951.

Total stake income for regular operations and buildings was $43,515.34, or about $7,000.00 more than 1950 for the same purpose. The total contribution to the General Church was $56,572.22, or almost $9,000.00 more than the year before. This figure includes slightly over $4,000.00 for the Auditorium, which was our quota.

A resolution authorizing a building fund for the recently organized mission at Raytown was approved. Two recommendations for ordination were approved: Lawrence Werges of Malvern Hill congregation to the office of priest, and Fred Young of Van Brunt congregation to the office of teacher. The conference approved a three-day stake conference for June 13-15.

The stake president's report emphasized the encouraging success in missionary work during 1951 made possible by the increasing amount and quality of witnessing under the promotion and guidance of the stake missionary supervisor, Seventy Albert A. Scherer. The 152 baptisms of 1950 and 154 of 1951 are nearly 100 per cent increases over the yearly average for several years previous.—Reported by J. D. ANDERSON

Young People Win Attendance Banner

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—The branch has continued to progress under the leadership of Pastor Paul Fishel who succeeded Elder Roy Keiser, October 1. There were two baptisms in November, Mrs. Zella Pritt and Mary Lou Nelson; two in December, Mrs. Ruth Slothower and Norma Jean Watts; and ten baptisms in January, Jay Elli-thorpe, Willard C. Maxon, Roger Dunn, Philip Dunn, Nellie Zahar, Alexander B. Gordon, Clara Gordon, Larry Chapman, Laura Martin, and Duane Benfit. These baptisms followed a missionary series held by Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs at the church in January, and completed several family circles.

The branch is having food sales and rummage sales, and plans to give a play in May, as money-raising projects.

Priest Melvin Chapman and his wife Eileen and three children have moved to Wenatchee, Washington, where he is employed as an electrician in the new Alcoa Aluminum plant.

Members of the branch are looking forward to improvements in the church building this summer and are starting a campaign to increase the building fund. Elder Paul Fishel will be in charge of construction of new buildings on the grounds.

Members of the branch who attended General Conference were F. E. Chapman, Roycie Chapman, Harold Carpenter, Leona Carpenter, and M. H. Cook.

The senior high class of the church school has held the attendance banner longest and deserves special commendation for consistent attendance. The young people have been loyal in their participation in the branch choir. Gypsy Root is choir director and directed the choir in the Easter cantata.—Reported by RUBY FISHEL clusion, as revealed by the committee, are plain: (1) The state of Nevada receives a pittance in comparison with the amounts the gamblers extract from the public. (2) Reno and Las Vegas have become headquarters for some of America's worst mobsters. This has resulted in more expense for police protection. (3) Gambling is an economic blight. In Crime in America the author says that Senator Hunt, a member of the Senate's investigating committee, testified that when he was governor of Wyoming gambling was outlawed and immediately business increased and thus sales tax revenues rose.

In the next place, the gambler assumes the right to take out of society more than he puts in. This is what Ray Sprigle meant when he said gambling is "an easy form of theft." Gambling then is stealing and is a violation of the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." The original meaning of the word "gambler" was "a fraudulent gamester." The gambler is a fraud. He sets out to take something that is not his. The Seigels and the Costellos make no pretense at an honest bargain. The gambler is a fraud first, last, and always. Jesus had a good bit to say about honesty, sincerity, integrity.

Denies Man's Chief End

Our case would not be complete without saying categorically that gambling denies man's true ideal. In the Bible, man's true goal is sometimes set forth as the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, sometimes as the attainment of eternal life. One of the great creeds puts it, "... to glorify God and to enjoy him forever." The wise man, in the biblical sense, is the man who has a clear vision of this true goal or ideal of life and pursues it persistently. This gives to life harmony, strength, and worth. By no stretch of the imagination can it be argued that gambling glorifies God. It glorifies Lady Luck, chance, hunches, and rabbit-foot superstition.

In the face of the charge that we are fanatical, ethical religion and Protestantism must oppose all gambling. Just as we cannot approve a little murder, a little housebreaking, a little incest, so we cannot countenance a little gambling. The Roman church's approval of gambling because the money goes to good causes shows that it is interested in power, not people. The end does not justify the means when the means corrupt character.

The case against gambling is not a flimsy one. It is watertight, being based upon incontrovertible fact and experience. Let the church say so.

Management in Family Living, by Paulena Nickell and Jean Muir Dorsey. Second Edition. New York: John Wiley and Sons, Incorporated. $4.75.

THEIR THINKING stripped of every vestige of maudlin sentiment on the subject of homemaking, the authors of this book have, in their second edition, drawn a revised pattern for what we Latter Day Saints aspire to establish: Zionic homes.

Although there are important changes in this new edition, the book remains fundamentally what it was originally: a study of (1) the place of management in homemaking and family life, (2) the development of methods of analyzing and solving the management responsibilities in family living, and (3) the role of the democratic home in the development of the socially adjusted individual.

The authors have wide experience in teaching and practicing homemaking. Miss Nickell is Associate Dean of the Division of Home Economics and Head of the Department of Home Management at Iowa State College; Mrs. Dorsey taught for six years at the University of Minnesota and then became a full-time homemaker.

THEIR UNDERSTANDING of the subject shows in the logical organization of the subject matter in the book, and in the ways in which theories and facts are woven into one easily understood whole. The reader is shown how to measure her own family management problems and her solutions against what research and experience have proved to be the best solutions.

What research and reporting in the area of business and industrial management have done for all business and industry, this book does for an equally important segment of human activity—homemaking. The homemaker who studies this book thoughtfully and plans an enlightened program of home and family management can proudly stand up and be counted along with captains of industry, professional workers, authors, artists, musicians, and career women as a very important person in the world's work! She possibly may come to the conclusion that family management is the most demanding, most rewarding, and most exciting job in the whole world.

THE CONTENT of the volume is divided into five parts: (1) "The Place of Management in Homemaking and Family Life," (2) "Time and Energy Management in Homemaking," (3) "Family Finance Management," (4) "Family Housing Management," and (5) "Other Managerial Responsibilities in Family Living" which covers the managerial aspects of feeding and clothing the family, assuring family health and recreation, and operating the household. It is definitely not a cookbook, housekeeping manual, or child-care directive. It does not touch upon sex and its relation to family happiness. It is based upon the assumption that husband and wife are well pleased with their marriage, and that all family members are amenable to logical thinking and discipline.

Before going into the techniques which result in effective home management, the authors explore the subject of family living and set down some definitions which are necessary to the homemaker's orientation. They say:

Homemaking is that part of human experience that centers around life with another individual or with a group of individuals in a home. This experience in family living consists of the sharing of resources in common, the developing of individual personalities, the attaining of satisfactions through shared work and experiences, and the contributing to and taking part in the social responsibilities which make up the societal setting of the family.

THE FAMILY'S PHILOSOPHY, which forms a guide for the conduct of the individual family members and also the group conduct, is studied—how it is formed and how it is the source of the goals of the family and the individual family members. To reach these goals entails the use of human and material resources, explain the authors, and it is the job of family management to learn how to use these resources the most effectively and economically (since no resource is unlimited) and to put that learning into action.

That the goals for each family differ is admitted by the authors, but they believe that there are seven long-time goals which are essential aims for every family. They are (1) good health for each family member, (2) continuous development for each—physical, mental, social, and spiritual, (3) satisfying personal and family relationships, (4) accumulation of sufficient resources to assure the accomplishment of goals, (5) adequate housing, (6) individual and family participation in local and national affairs and an informed interest in world problems, and (7) management of the family resources to ensure attainment of these goals.

To help the homemaker in her role of home manager to reach these long-time goals, and also any short-time goals the family thinks desirable, is the purpose of this book. Following this orientation of the home manager in the meaning, scope, and purpose of her work, the authors supply and explain managerial techniques, and where and when to use them.

Many additional references are supplied at the end of each chapter; these are of value to those who are deeply interested in building an adequate home library.

I recommend this book not only for practicing homemakers, but also as a text for women's department study classes, and mothers and young adult classes in the church school.

Which Are Swear Words?

By Minnie A. Harring

IT HAPPENED in a little country school more than fifty-eight years ago. Tracy then was a lovable little boy of five. It was his first term of school, as children were permitted to attend school when five years old in those days.

I was in a quandary to know what to do to break Tracy of his bad habit of swearing. He had been told repeatedly that he must not use profane language but persisted in emphasizing what he had to say with an oath. At last I threatened to punish him severely the next time he said any bad words on the playground. Still Tracy swore. So the next time school was dismissed for recreation, I told him to keep his seat.

I sat at the teacher's desk wondering what to do. I just couldn't punish the little fellow. Pretty soon Tracy slipped out of his seat and started up the aisle. I sat still and thought to myself, I suppose when Tracy gets opposite to me he will make a dash for the door and go out in the schoolyard to join the other children eating their dinner under the big tree. But to my great surprise, Tracy turned and came up on the platform where I was sitting.

He climbed up in my lap, put his little arms around my neck, and said, "Teacher, which words are swear words? If I knew, I wouldn't say them." How my heart went out in sympathy for him. Who could blame him? Profanity was in common use in his home.

I offered a silent prayer for help to know what to tell him. Then I explained to him that God is our Heavenly Father; that he loves us and does many things for us, and that it is very wrong to use his name in vain. He asked me many questions which I answered as best I could. Then Tracy ran out to join the other children. I do not remember ever hearing Tracy swear again. How glad I was that I had treated him with kindness and consideration—that I really had love in my heart for an innocent little child.

APRIL MAGAZINES reflect the approach of warmer weather, especially in the food and fashion sections. World affairs and politics receive their share of attention as well.

"How to Help Your Child Find Faith," Parents' Magazine, tells how the parents of five children answered their children's questions about God.

"Prevention and Care of Home Accidents and Childhood Diseases," Parents' Magazine, is a manual covering this subject; it was read and approved by prominent medical authorities.

Another valuable article in the same magazine is "How to Handle Anger in Young Children."

Those interested in birds will want to look up "American Birds," Woman's Day. It would be valuable for reference, too.

Today's Health contains a number of very good articles. However, those of most general interest are "Home Call vs. Office Visit," "Use and Abuse of Milk," and "If You Are Hoarse, Whisper, Please."

"Every Woman Should Learn a Trade," Good Housekeeping, emphasizes the need for every woman to know how to be self-supporting, should she have to be, and offers suggestions for choosing a vocation.

Those women fortunate enough to own a home freezer, or those planning to buy, will find a wealth of information along this line in "How to Use the Home Freezer," Good Housekeeping.

Do you have an old rowboat lying around? Well, neither do I, but I wished for one when I saw "Make an Old Rowboat into a Sandbox for the Kids," American Home. This magazine also has illustrations of nineteen lovely bedrooms and several clever, practical outdoor ideas.

"The building of personality begins at birth" is the theme of the article, "The Child as a Person," National Parent-Teacher.

"The Swayze Family—a Spirited Team," gives an example of a family that shares adventures and chores and laughter. You may glean some ideas for added warmth in your own home circle.

"The More They Laugh, the More They Eat," Woman's Home Companion, is illustrated with color pictures of ingenious ways of arranging fruits and salads to make them have more appeal for children.

"Escape to Freedom . . .", Ladies' Home Journal, is the dramatic account of the escape of members of a family from Czechoslovakia, and of the life they are building for themselves in this country.

The Stingiest Man in Town

By Ruby Tinkham

George would never know how earnest and eloquent his speech had been.

THERE WASN'T A PERSON in Oakdale who hadn't called Jeb Stires the stingiest man in town—and the richest. He had the biggest farm, the finest cattle, and drove the shrewdest bargain in five states. His clothes were patch upon patch; his car was an old '29 Chevrolet, and he still made a ceremony out of opening his long purse that snapped at the top. That's why George hated his job this afternoon and had put the Stires' place off until last.

A man's duty to his church got him into some ticklish situations sometimes, and this was one of them. But George had promised himself to see every member in the congregation personally this year and make an attempt to explain tithing and help fill out statements. So far, he had met with better than average success, and he kept telling himself that even if he failed in this case, at least he had done his best.

He had mapped out several lines of approach, but the minute he drove into the wide spacious yard he knew that none of them would work. He heaved a sigh and slid slowly out of his car. He felt the papers in his coat pocket and murmured under his breath, "I'm scared to death, Lord, and you know it, but I'm going to try anyway. Just don't make it too long."

He faced toward the kitchen window and Mrs. Stires motioned him eastward. He turned halfway and saw Jeb riding the big tractor on top of the slope with the wet furrows spilling into clean symmetrical ridges behind him. He smiled, nodded his head at her, and turned to the field.

JEB SAW HIM COMING but he made no move to stop or speak until the giant had rounded the slope and sat ready to bite into the rich earth at the slightest motion. Then without bothering to shut off the noise he hollered gruffly, "Well?"

George crawled under the fence and groaned inwardly. "Isn't he even going to shut that thing off? I can't yell at him sitting way up there like God almighty." And then miserably, "I take my only afternoon in the week off to come out here and the old tritwad won't even get down off that thing."

George straightened and shouted upward, "May I talk to you, Mr. Stires? It's important."

Jeb frowned appraisingly over the newly turned furrows, then shut off the tractor and climbed down reluctantly. "Got to plow this ground while she's still wet or she'll never work up." He turned his back coldly on George and began knocking the clods of dirt out of the huge treads with his heavy worn shoe.

George fumbled in his pocket and pulled out the papers. It was a bad start and he knew it, but he goaded himself with, "Get it over with, you fool, and then you can go home." He would not walk across those wet furrows, a man had to have some self-respect. He'd yell first.

"Mr. Stiles, I came out to see if you needed any help with your tithing statement."

The old man finished his kicking and then turning slowly he gave George a long look, replying shortly, "I don't need no help. I ain't making out any."

GEORGE COULD HAVE QUIT THERE, but something kept nagging at him to go on. Before he knew it he was stepping recklessly into the muddy ditches. He had forgotten about his pride. He walked up to Jeb's side, and, taking a deep breath, stated firmly, "That's your business, Mr. Stires, what you do, but it's my duty to explain about tithing and to help you if you need help in making out your statement."

Jeb shrugged, started to mount the monster, then straightened and spoke levelly, "Well, you've done your duty, Son." And it was as if he had added, "Now, git!"

George flushed under the sting, but as he turned to leave, some perverse notion made him swing back angrily. "It's hard to believe that any man who has been as richly blessed as you, Mr. Stires, doesn't believe in tithing."

The old man brought his gaze around hard to the young one and replied coldly, "I didn't say I didn't believe in tithing. I said I wasn't going to make out any of them fool statements telling everybody how much money I got, and how I spend it. That's my business."

George didn't realize he was pleading. "But you have to do it that way, Mr. Stires, or how will you know whether you're being fair with God and paying him what you owe him?"

Jeb took his time answering, and he let his gaze travel lovingly over the fields and the barns and the cattle before he spoke. "Look, Son, you do it your way, and I'll do it mine. I'm not no good with words, but me and the Lord understand each other. You keep right on preaching and telling people about giving a tenth of their increase; that's good and fine. But me, I'm afraid that might be a mite miserly after all the Lord's done for me. I'll just keep right on doing it my way."

George felt dismissed like a child before his elders, but he would not go now. Someone had questioned the integrity of his church's policy, and it must be vindicated even at the cost of personal feelings.

"Mr. Stires, the church has to have a steady flow of income to keep up its expenses and to send out missionaries. God expects us to carry on his work here, and a tenth isn't very much. We must have a definite system and order or confusion would result if every man decided to do it in his own way. It's the law and we are supposed to comply with that law. We honor God and his church by being obedient."

George would never know how earnest and eloquent his speech had been. He flushed under the old man's steady gaze. Then he turned and stumbled toward the house. Jeb followed him thoughtfully and held up the fence, neither saying a word. Then Jeb laid his hand on the young man's arm, and his voice was rough but kind. "Son, I guess you don't understand. I aim to pay the Lord what I owe him, but I ain't got enough money."

GEORGE COULDN'T BELIEVE his ears. This was the richest man in the county talking. "You see, this farm don't really belong to me anymore. I'm working it on shares. Several years back when we had the big flood I went out there on the hill and me and the Lord had a little talk. I didn't even have enough money to buy insurance. So I told him if he'd look out for the farm I'd be glad to work it for half, and he did.

Now, me and him have a system of bookkeeping, but it's a little bit different than other people's. With him as my partner I'm a counting everything he does in the business. It ain't no accident that I got the finest cattle in the state, or get the most rain on these slopes, or grow more corn to the acre. That's why I said I can't pay him—I owe him too much." Then he grinned and the change in his face was magical. "Give me the paper, Son. I'll look it over and see what I can do."

George thought about it all the way back to town. A man who counted his blessings along with his money was something he'd never even thought of before. Why, nobody could ever repay God on that basis. It would be impossible even to figure it accurately. It was incredible, unbelievable. But he couldn't say it was stupid or foolish, for weren't they gifts? And wasn't a man accountable for the gifts he received? He shook his head and thought of the times in the past year that he had been willing to bargain with God. When they thought Peggy might have polio, hadn't he prayed all night offering anything he possessed? Then when she was well, had he paid his debt? He knew he hadn't. Suddenly that one tenth looked shamefully small.

Several days later George received a letter. It contained a blank tithing statement, a note, and a check for one thousand dollars. He stood and stared at that check in astonishment as if he couldn't believe his eyes. The note was a scrap of paper torn from an old ledger. There was no heading, no signature. It read:

I ain't no missionary and I ain't no preacher but I'm a darned good farmer and me and God knows how to run our business. Put the money where it belongs and keep your mouth shut.

George started toward the door to call his wife and suddenly the words on the paper blazed into his consciousness. "KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT!"

He went back to the desk and sat down weakly. He stared at the check and the blank statement. Yes, he would put the money where it belonged. And then with startling clarity he knew where the money to finish the church had come from, and the big donation for the new youth recreation hall, and the extra time on the radio for the ministerial association, and the playground equipment for the orphanage. He felt humble before this new knowledge, and he hung his head in shame. "Forgive me, Father, for being so busy with the letter of the law that I almost lost sight of the spirit." And then he added fervently, "Please, God, bless the stingiest man in our town."

New Horizons

These are some of the provisions of the political and civil rights of the Covenant for which there are clear parallels in church law and the revelations of God. I find nothing in the additional provisions covering rights of free assembly, equality before the law, presumption of innocence until proved guilty, and protection from ex post facto laws contrary to our highest concepts of the dignity of man as a creature in the image of God.

WHENEVER SELFISH INTERESTS have an investment in any situation, where men are denied any of these rights, they vigorously resist efforts to guarantee them to such men. Even the strange spectacle of selfish men using noble slogans and appealing to humanitarian ideals in cleverly concealed propaganda designed to preserve the evil status quo greets our eyes and ears. Let us not be blinded by sentimental, patriotic misrepresentations of the "American Way of Life." There are those who conceive the American way as freedom to restrict men in the exercise of their inherent rights as men and as citizens because of their skin color. Others interpret the American way as freedom to create conditions which they can manipulate to the advantage of special groups at the expense of other groups or even of the majority.

One politician (now deceased) is reported to have publicly said, while campaigning on a "white supremacy" platform, "The time to keep a 'nigger' from voting is on the Saturday night before election." Current management-labor clashes are concerned not so much with labor abuses as with power politics in which the power is economic rather than military. There are evidences in cases like these of the superficial, or even immoral, concepts lying behind some propagandistic uses of patriotic phraseology.

Our deeper concern is to interpret spiritual purposes in our practical exercise of political and civil rights. Reorganized Latter Day Saints have a fundamental interest in the Draft Covenant on Human Rights because it is an effort at the highest level of human political and civil relationships to project ideals inherent in the restored gospel into human civil affairs. Every step toward the practical implementation of these ideals is a step toward the kingdom of God.

Every church member is encouraged to obtain a copy of the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights in its current state of revision, and become familiar with its provisions. Copies may be obtained by addressing the Office of Public Affairs, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

spirit are attained. The world saw the use of temporalities to the attainment of specific ends clearly demonstrated in war, but it has been very slow to comprehend the tremendous power that might be developed in the proper use of temporalities toward peaceful ends and objectives. This is our mission as the church of Jesus Christ.

If there is one thing that stands out above all else in the Restoration Movement, it is that light was received which revealed the will of God regarding the use that men were to make of the temporalities and physical creation, the end purpose for man being that of immortality and eternal life. What, then, is our duty to serve in this hour? It is the assumption of our stewardship responsibilities. It is a recognition that God is Owner:

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

Stewardship requires of the individual faithfulness, diligence, good management, wisdom, and concern for others. The application of the mind and the heart to the attainment of these qualities cannot help but make the individual a stronger, better character; and in their development he gains the power to control those things which are temporal, the skills to acquire them, and the wisdom to use them in the interest of himself and his fellows. Stewardship then becomes a medium through which temporalities become spiritualized, and power comes to the individual and to the church.

The gospel of the Restoration requires the sublimation of temporalities. To achieve this requires courage, faith, devotion, and the spirit of consecration. The call of the hour is to draw to the church the strength of men of business, industry, science, the professions, labor, agriculture, and men and women devoted to a great cause, to heed the call to minister to a world which is in distress and, responding to the call, to serve.

May I again quote the passage of Scripture which calls us to service:

He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be; if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.

Correction

An error appears in the article "Indian Mounds in the United States," by Melvin Fowler (issue of February 25, 1952), originally printed in the Missionary Courier for October, 1951. The mistake occurs on page 10, column 1, with the paragraph beginning, "It is generally believed . . ." and continuing through the paragraph ending, "So states an antiquarian authority." This section was lifted from another article, "Who were the Mound Builders?" by Charles Blake, which was set up for the same issue of the Courant.

* ACROSS THE WIDE MISSOURI

Travel across the great central prairies of the country reminds one of the popular song, "Across the Wide Missouri." There is a haunting quality in the music, suggestive of songs around the campfire, pioneer clothing, the high-wheeled Conestoga wagons in the background, the neighing of horses hobbled for grazing, with bison and Indians in the distance. . . . Where prairie schooners rolled in the dust, today there are long slender ribbons of concrete. Where caravans camped by dim fires, the lights of thousands of headlights slice their way through the darkness as motors roar and cars speed onward in the night. . . . The Missouri, the old river, is broad indeed in both time and space. How many generations of men and women, red and white, have paused on its banks to view its flooding waters and estimate their chances of getting across safely. How many hearts have filled with anxiety and hope, knowing that once having crossed it they would leave a familiar world behind them, perhaps never to return, and go on to adventures yet unknown. The Missouri is wide, and wider still the flood plain in which it has made its home, wandering back and forth many a mile in centuries past, when red men were its only visitors. . . . Your heart and mine fill up, too, clear to the brim and running over, as we think of our pioneers and what they went through in the wide valley of the Missouri, the bright hopes with which they came, and their dark grief and despair as they left, knowing that someday their children would return. In a spiritual sense, there are many of our people who have yet to cross "the wide Missouri."

* MORE ON SLEEPING SICKNESS

Your article in the "Herald" on February 18 reminded me of an incident that happened at a Northern Michigan District conference years ago. Brother John J. Cornish at that time was bishop's agent for that district and was in charge of an afternoon business session. At a morning meeting Brother John A. Grant had accidentally tipped over in a chair, so at the beginning of the afternoon meeting Brother Cornish said, "If anyone falls asleep during this meeting, it will cost $1 tithing, and if anyone falls asleep and tips over in a chair, it will cost $5 tithing." As the meeting progressed, a sister spoke up and said, "Brother Cornish, Brother _____ is asleep." Brother Cornish took his receipt book in his hand, hastened down, tapped the brother on the shoulder and said, "Brother, $1 for tithing. And Sister, $1 from you for telling!" He then went back to the platform and continued the meeting. Perhaps that would be good medicine for the "sermon nappers" as you call them.

President W. Wallace Smith preached on April 20 at the opening service of the new Harrisonville, Missouri, church in Central Missouri Stake. Others participating in the morning service were Orlando and Milford Nace, Elder S. E. Mifflin, counselor to the stake president; Elder R. R. Rowland, pastor of the branch; Elder W. C. Becker, stake bishop; Elder H. J. Simons, stake president; Mayor William Kimberlin, Mrs. A. Troyer, the Blue Springs Sextet, and Elder M. Kearns. Bishop W. N. Johnson delivered the sermon in the afternoon, and a vocal solo was presented by Mrs. H. J. Simons. Seventy Glen Johnson began a series that evening.

FEATURED SPEAKER AT CONVENTION

Ruth Ann Ziegenhorn, senior at William Chrisman High School of Independence and a member of the church, was the featured guest speaker at the annual convention of the Missouri Senior Girl Scouts at St. Louis, Missouri, April 19. She was selected by the program committee in St. Louis. Between 500 and 600 girls were present at the convention. Ruth Ann is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Ziegenhorn of the Walnut Park congregation in the Center Stake.

ATTEND CAMPING INSTITUTES

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, attended the biennial convention of the American Camping Association in Chicago, Illinois, April 16, 17, and 18. He represented the church at the convention. Other church members also attending were Doris Marriott of the Graceland faculty, Jan Briggs of the Graceland camping class, and Mrs. Francis Bishop, executive secretary of the YWCA of Springfield, Missouri. Brother Mesle met with the representatives of other church camps from all over the nation, and with the National Committee on Spiritual Emphasis in camping. He returned to Lamoni, Iowa, April 19 for a special camping institute which was held on the college campus. Also assisting in the institute at Graceland were F. M. McDowell, Leslie Kohlman, Edna Easter, and Aleta Runkle.

WOMEN'S COUNCIL BUSY

Mrs. Pauline Arnson, General Church Women's Director and the General Council of Women have been holding extra meetings in preparing material for use in women's classes at reunions this summer.

WIFE OF LATE APOSTLE DIES

Mrs. Jacobina Andersen, wife of the late Apostle Peter Andersen, died at the Independence Sanitarium April 19. Mrs. Andersen was the mother of Howard P. Andersen, member of the Standing High Council of the church. She was ninety years old.

SKYLARK-ORIOLE WEEK OBSERVED

Skylark-Oriole week was observed in the Center Stake of Zion April 20-27. Girls of both organizations took part in the church school, junior church, and evening services of the branches. On Wednesday evening, members of the organizations and their leaders participated in the weekly prayer services. On the following day, the girls wore their uniforms to school. There were handcraft displays in a number of store windows throughout the city. On Saturday afternoon, the Daughters of Zion gave a city-wide party for the girls at the South Chrysler Church. Over 600 girls and their leaders attended.

Island Young People Appear on TV

THE HAWAIIAN YOUNG PEOPLE who attended General Conference met in the beautiful new Joint Council Room at the Auditorium and saw their homeland pointed out to them on the map which forms a mural for one wall of the room. The above picture appeared on WDAF-TV in Kansas City during the week of General Conference. Included in the group of Hawaiian students is Miss Phoebe Mervin of Tahiti, who is a student at Graceland College.

A unique process was used in producing this map. The map was painted in reverse on the white plastered wall. A transparent plastic material was then placed over this and painted, then sent to the factory for processing, and when returned was adhered to the wall. This process insures the permanency of the mural. The land areas are shown in coral coloring, the water in aqua, and the lettering in yellow. In the lower left-hand corner of the wall, the church seal has been painted.

The opposite wall, which is also curved, was treated with the same process and is in aqua. The mural is just one of the unusual and beautiful designs of the Joint Council Room. With walls seventeen feet high, special direct and indirect lighting has been installed to produce a pleasing effect on the ceiling, which is a recessed elliptical dome. BARBARA PEAVY

Methodology in Interpretation

RECENTLY, in considering questions of church law and doctrine, I have found it necessary to determine the sources of authority, the relative weight or precedence to be accorded each of the Standard Books of the church—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

With theologies and religious systems based solely on the Bible, similar questions are not so likely to arise. If there are any with them, they would be limited obviously to those where there is thought to be conflict between the Old Bible and the New Testament or inconsistent statements within either. Such problems are probably minimized, but also more difficult with those churches that hold the Bible to be infallible, since it is generally agreed that there are apparent inconsistencies in those records.

With us, however, in formulating our "creed" our inspired leaders were wholesomely realistic, I believe, and so, in contrast with most other sects, we have held that the Bible contains the word of God in so far "as it is correctly translated." This position is eminently safe in the light of the facts known to have existed in the writing and preservation of this sacred literature. And besides the implication of this statement is that the Bible has not been correctly translated.

That the Bible as a whole presents the essential doctrines of the gospel is apparent, but in the light of Sections 26: 2 and 42: 5 of the Doctrine and Covenants we believe the Book of Mormon has something additional, at least by way of clarification and essential for doctrine, for we are told in those revelations that the Book of Mormon contains the "fullness of the gospel." "Fullness" connotes "perfection" or "completeness" (Webster's dictionary). Something is added—at least complementing the Bible—the inference being that the Bible is more or less lacking. A case in point is the clearer statement in the Book of Mormon about life after death in Alma 19: 42-47.

APPARENTLY out of recognition of the place the Bible has always held in the faith of untold millions, it has always been mentioned first in our books; but in view of our belief in the divinity of the revelations to the church, we hold that wherein there appears to be conflict or inconsistency between the Bible and the Book of Mormon in matters of doctrine, the latter prevails. To us it is more authoritative because it contains the gospel "in its fullness," and because it has come to us in a more authentic way.

Because of our faith that the revelations given to the church are the direct word of God by way of specific instruction in doctrine, when considering the question of authority, we must accord primacy to the book of Doctrine and Covenants which contains the accepted revelations and interpretations of doctrine.

In matters of doctrine, then, we place the revelations first, the Book of Mormon second, and the Bible third, with this notable exception, that wherein the Bible (meaning the King James Version) has been changed in the Inspired Version, changed readings of the latter must, in my opinion, be held on an equality with the revelations to the church, because we believe such renderings were divinely inspired.

Wherein there has been any necessity for interpretation of our theology or the principles of the gospel, that is, the so-called "cardinal" principles, considerable interpretation has been given through the years by those who may well be considered to have spoken with the authority of their calling. Some of this material has been found in the "Lectures on Faith" which were published in early editions of the Doctrine and Covenants.

DIFFICULTIES OF LANGUAGE and records, and questions arising therefrom which come down to us, I believe are generally admitted. Our most eminent Bible scholars have recognized and struggled with them, and we have many books on the "historicity" of the Bible. There has been unanimity of opinion that the New Testament records have come to us but little impaired by the processes of translation and transmission. As between the Old and the New Testaments it is generally recognized that on matters of doctrine the New Testament is more authentic and therefore more authoritative.

The Prophet Mormon indicated that difficulties of transcription existed in the Book of Mormon. In chapter 4, verse 99, he says: "If we could have written in the Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record." The implication of this statement is inescapable: there are imperfections in methods of expression in that book; but whether such imperfections relate to matters of doctrine or mere records of facts, we can only speculate, though we have the assurance that the "fullness of the gospel" has not thereby been impaired. We should not expect the details of all the fundamental truths to be given in the Book of Mormon. Interpretation of this "fullness of the gospel" is one of the roles of present-day prophets and modern revelation.

LET US NOW CONSIDER interpretations made by inspired leaders. There is conflict of opinion, but there are strong indications that the Prophet Joseph Smith wrote the "Lectures on Faith," which we will now consider. A high council at Kirtland, held in 1834 "to arrange

Editorial

Nauvoo Expulsion

As Seen by a Newspaper Editor

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is largely concerned with an editorial published in 1846 and shows rather clearly both the character and the motivation of the enemies of the church of that day. Obviously the editor had no clear idea of the doctrines of the church and shared the distorted opinion of its social program, which he calls a "community system." Yet we feel that "Herald" readers will be interested in his frank appraisal of the personal issues involved in the expulsion of the Saints.

PEOPLE INTERESTED in historical research have many problems in attempting to evaluate attitudes and ideas of citizens concerning controversial problems. Quite often newspapers of the period have provided the most useful information. The western newspapers of one hundred years ago were in a large degree composed of three features: editorials, letters to the editor, and national politics. Two of these, the editorials and letters to the editor, do much to enable those looking for the best possible historical picture to understand the significance of occurrences. However, it must be remembered the editorials were the writings of the editors who normally felt no hesitancy in expressing themselves.

In doing research in various parts of the country, I have searched hundreds of newspapers covering the period 1830 to 1860, especially the papers of Missouri, Illinois, and Kansas. Having a personal interest in the "Mormon troubles" of Nauvoo in the 1840's, I often read and study the various editorials and letters to the editor as well as news reports of the activities. The story of the conflict between the Saints and the "Gentiles," the murder of Joseph Smith, and the final removal of the Saints from Nauvoo is an old story to most people in the church. No doubt the Saints had a highly ambitious program which neither they nor frontier Illinois was able to adopt in that stage of development. Perhaps the best summary of the conditions surrounding the expulsion as considered by an outsider was given in an editorial in the St. Louis Daily Union on September 23, 1846, just shortly after a large group of Saints had left Nauvoo. Though quite lengthy, it is worth being quoted in its entirety:

The Mormons—The Hancock county difficulties, we suppose, are, for the present, at an end. The Mormons, and those who for humanity's sake, have dared to become their friends, have been driven forth from Illinois, as the kindred of the former were from Missouri. The Mormons dare to believe an absurd creed, and this has afforded a pretext to men who care naught for any creed—men who regard not laws, human nor divine, and whose so called principles are as vague and undefinable as the wind—to raise in their might and dispossess the objects of their rapacity—to drive them forth from their homes and their fire-sides—to despoil them of the hard earnings of years, leaving them to perish on the wide prairies of the west—miserable vouchers for the supremacy of lynch-law, and damning witnesses to that spirit of insubordination which goes but too far, at this time, to characterize a portion of the most enlightened nation on the face of the earth!

This war, from the beginning, has not been one of religious intolerance. It has been instigated by cupidity—a desire to dispossess the Mormons of their property, as well as to get rid of their political influence. Demagoging politicians and stump orators have exerted their utmost to keep alive prejudices against them, that offices which they held might be transferred to other hands. Those who have been the prime mover in all the crusades against Mormonism, have not had even the apology of religious zeal to palliate their conduct. They have been actuated alone by sordid motives. At the same time that they have charged upon the Mormons immorality, they have exemplified their own regard for the cause of virtue by the repeated commission of the foulest crimes, not excepting robbery, arson and murder. We are no apologists for Mormonism, but to us there appears but little difference between the degree of criminality imputed to the Saints, and that which has uniformly stamped the conduct of their persecutors.

But the Mormons have gone, and it remains to be seen whether peace and quiet will be restored to Hancock—whether the just and moral "old citizens" can remain at peace among themselves. Most probably, the next act in the drama will present them at war among themselves, contending for the spoils of victory, and cutting each other's throats in defence of assumed prerogatives. Well, be it so. We do not know that the world would have much right to complain at the proceeding.

In the mean time, what is to become of the infatuated, but most unjustly treated Mormons? During the spring and summer, they have been so harrassed by their persecutors that they have been unable to make provision against the coming of the winter, and now that an inclement season is at hand, they are sent forth to seek a place of refuge in the wilderness. Truly their condition is a deplorable one, and one which appeals strongly to the sympathies of the humane, of whatever religious belief they may be. We hope, for humanity's sake, that the hand of the government may be stretched forth for their relief.

It is highly desirable that the Mormons should relinquish their community system. Were they to do so, they would become more enlightened and intelligent by mixing with the people of different belief; and we feel confident that they would be no longer annoyed, as they have heretofore been, by heartless and designing men. Any relief afforded them should, we think, be coupled with a strong recommendation towards the adoption of such a course. In this city there are many Mormon families who have forsaken the community system. They are respectable people, and are prospering. They enjoy their religious principles, the same as do other sects, and are free from the thousand ills under which they labored while belonging to the parent community. Their example should furnish a lesson to others of their faith.

The Kingdom of God

By Apostle Arthur Oakman

A lecture delivered to the Appointees on December 28, 1951

MANY AND VARIED have been the interpretations given from time to time of the historical process. In 1681 Bishop Bossuet wrote his Universal History in which he affirmed his belief in God the Father and said that history was the manifestation of divine providence. Every event held a hidden lesson taught from heaven. Even revolutions were ordained by God to teach humility to princes. He was certain of much which seems to have become uncertain with the passing of the years. He believed in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and said that without faith there can be no knowledge.

In 1725 The Principles of the New Science by Giovanni Vico was published. He suggested that there were laws to govern the historical processes just as there were laws which governed in the physical world. The processes of history were governed as exactly as Newtonian physics governed the rolling spheres. He believed that all cultures pass through three stages: savagery, barbarism, and civilization. The Roman Empire, he said, represented the loftiest of all civilizations.

Voltaire published An Essay on the Morals and Character of Nations in 1756. His view contradicted flatly the assumptions of Bishop Bossuet. To him history was a picture of crimes and misfortunes. The only providence he found was chance.

Carl Marx is asserting a tremendous influence on our own lives today, and it will be well to mention briefly his idea concerning history. For him it was a struggle of the poor against the rich with material factors playing the largest part. All wars, he said, truly can be seen as a struggle for the markets of the world. There are no moral forces in history. Economic factors alone determine events. When Lincoln freed the slaves it was a war measure undertaken to weaken the South economically. Ideals on either side were fig leaves. An ideal, for Carl Marx, is a material need phraseologically disguised as moral aspiration.

Lately, H. G. Wells has told us of a theme based on universal brotherhood, which is the goal of all our strivings.

There is, of course, an element of truth in all of these interpretations of history.

The Apocalypse tells a different story. It sets forth the course of human history as a struggle between two great cities. One is represented by a great beast that dwells in Babylon the Great and uses a false prophet as an instrument to gain his ends. The other city is depicted as Holy, in the midst of which there is a Lamb "slain from the foundation of the world," and sets forth the doctrine that the Lamb is in the midst of the throne. The Lamb governs the world.

ALL OF OUR CONCEPTIONS of the kingdom of God go beyond speech. Effective symbols must be employed to bring understanding, and here symbols are employed by the seer—or rather presented to the seer—in order to bring understanding of the nature of the kingdom. These two cities or powers are, of course, pride with its instruments of force and false promises of plenty; and love with its implement of sacrifice as the throne from which the universe is governed.

As one looks at our present society, he is impressed with the thought that it rests on both of these. It is partly strong and partly weak. To restrict men's selfish desires we have a police force and law courts. Without society, or some other arrangement by which men mutually agree to restrict their selfishness, we should have a state of nature described by Hobbes in which man would be "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short." When man obtains all he desires, he finds the hands of all others are against him, and as this becomes true of each in turn, then all combine together in an agreement or social contract to neither commit nor suffer injustice. This is the basis of Babylon the Great.

But, on the other hand, if men were wholly unselfish, society would still arise; but it would be based on the abilities of each supplying the needs of all. "From each according to his ability, to each according to his need." This would be the spirit binding men together. It would sustain them in their work, it would lead them to make mutual sacrifices in the spirit of joy with no thought of reward save the joy of service. The capacity for ever-widening fellowship would be the sign of brotherhood and the scale in which each personality would be weighed and its worth determined. This is the foundation of the kingdom.

Political progress has always been the advance of fellowship over pride and selfishness, and therefore in a measure the triumph of the lamb over the beast. It is the perpetual triumph of the Holy City over Babylon. It is always, to some extent, a "coming down from God out of heaven."

What will one day be seen in the heavens and experienced by all men in its fullness, thus casts its shadow upon the earth before time and is experienced in part by great souls who are blessed with good dreams and visions by the Lamb of God, to prepare the way of his coming.

THIS IS THE MEANING of history according to the prophets and apostles. It is a war of spiritual powers. The power of the kingdom is the power of love. The weakness of the beast is the strength of pride. The power of love has been in the world from the beginning, for it was made by God in order that beings of a celestial nature might inherit it. "So that it doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." God loves us not because we are lovable so much as the fact that he is love and works with us in order that our own natures might be changed, and we become transformed into the kind of creatures in whom he can find reflection of his own nature. There is no rest for God until this is accomplished.

But the power of love to win answering love in the hearts of men cannot be completed until it has been revealed in its fullness. We can respond fully only to what we fully understand. So, in the midst of the course of time, God himself came down here on the earth. In Jesus he emptied himself of visible glory and veiled himself in flesh. He took all that wicked men could do to him and defeated it in his own person on the tree.

The kingdom of God rests on love.

The kingdoms of this world rest on pride.

But the kingdoms of this world are not left without a witness. They are not abandoned by their maker. The Holy City hovers above them, and its influence reaches down among men. The stone is "cut out of the mountain" of Zion without hands, and the truth (which is that love is the ultimate ruling power of the universe, and immortality means love and vice versa) rolls forth from age to age. One day it will fill the whole earth, and "the knowledge of the Lord" be spread abroad until it encompasses all.

BISHOP BOSSUET was partly right; God is above all and does order the affairs of men. "He ruleth in the heavens above and among the armies of the earth." He is above all—transcendent.

Giovanni Vico was partly right. There are principles in human affairs which move to judgment. Every catastrophe is in some measure a coming of the kingdom. If we cannot learn in any other way the futility of selfishness, then there is ordered the roar of a million guns to sweep away the false sense of security which man builds for himself when he trusts in empire. If Jerusalem will not learn in any other way that resentment against Rome and hatred of her conquerors are more damning than the state of bondage they resent, then let the armies of Caesar lay the city waste. For judgment which sweeps away vested interest and makes way for a fresh start is in a measure a coming of the kingdom, "for the kingdom of the Devil must shake and the inhabitants thereof stirred up unto repentance." God is in all—imminent.

Voltaire was partly right. So far has God loved men that he has given agency to them. This is a condition of righteousness which can also be used as a means of degradation. Certainly where choice is involved, the element of chance must naturally be in the picture.

Carl Marx was partly right for "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another, wherefore the world lieth in sin" (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3). This must not be construed to mean that Communism is co-existent to the kingdom of God. But no man should be so situated as to make what he has achieved impossible for others to achieve. "Above another" does not mean "more than another." It means that society should be constituted so that what any man achieves can be possible of achievement for all. All these ideals or theories of the nature of life and history are partly right. In the language of the poet they are "little systems which have their day and cease to be. But broken lights are they of Thee, but Thou, O Lord, art more than they."

H. G. Wells came very near the kingdom in asserting that survival depended on fraternity.

JESUS SPECIFICALLY CONTRASTS his kingdom with other kingdoms. In them the great ones exercise authority. But in his kingdom the greatest is the servant. "He who is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than all." This is the power of love to call forth answering love. This is done when Christ offers up on Calvary the perfect sacrifice of his own life in loving service.

What is amazing about this is the fact that Jesus took the occasion when the world put forth its greatest evil power in an effort to exterminate him and made it the means by which he completed the manifestation of his own love. The cross is not a revelation of the glory of God, it is the glory of God. Thus, Calvary was the supreme act which laid the foundation of the kingdom of God in the course of time. Forever afterward, wherever it be told or witnessed, it is the power of love, which is the power of the kingdom, at work. Although the full results of this power lie yet in the future, in some sense the kingdom of God "is within you." Thus, God himself enters into human life. Not only is he above all, not only is he through all, but "in you all"; God is redemptive.

Of course, as we view the course of history from the Christian point of view, we see divine Providence moving upon the chaos of this "wild and irregular scene" as did his Spirit anciently "move upon the waters" to cause the earth to rise complete at the creative word. Thus now among men, as then among the elements, there is a rising order—a pattern is taking shape. The Constitution of the United States and the rise of this nation “under God” surely reveals that his intention is that agency shall be given to men, that they shall be free. But here we are concerned alone with the theology of the kingdom and not with the historical aspects, although the two are intimately related.

THUS IT IS that the world and the works of men therein constitute a province of the kingdom of God, not to be viewed as beyond his control, but as included in his purpose. Perhaps we may say, even, that this world—a province of the kingdom of God—is just now enemy occupied country. The church is, so to speak, the underground secret movement, preparing and recruiting men against the day when the King will land in force and overthrow the usurper. If God is love, and love is supreme, then every selfish man—every bit of selfishness in every man, every selfish association or community of men, every prideful empire—is doomed to dissolution. This is a tremendous doctrine, and upon it I cannot lay too much stress. If God is almighty, and God is love, then we must suppose that wherever the human will is asserted to reject that love such assertion represents a defeat for Deity. But even so, the soul that turns away from the burning illumination of the love of God eventually finds itself left to itself; and it finds in itself no principle of immortality. Such a soul must of necessity go into outer darkness where human minds cannot scan, or perhaps to “some sad sequestered state where God un-makes but to remake the soul else first he made in vain, which must not be” (Robert Browning). But let no one think that such stark judgment is a painless swooning out of existence. The kingdom of God requires that all who remain outside it must eventually suffer the pain which comes from the breakup of selfishness. But be it noted also that such pain is but an expression of divine love which seeks all men, even though they be rebellious.

Thus the world, a province of the kingdom of God, was entered by the Son of God in his incarnation. His body represented the fount from which the divine life issued to the sons of men. Since he ascended to his Father, his church undertakes the functions which he himself initiated. The church also is the body of Christ born from his sacrificial love and answering the purposes of Divinity. In the church there is fashioned the infant kingdom which, when it is brought forth and grows to maturity, is destined to rule all nations with the Word of God.

I HAVE DELIBERATELY CHOSEN this point of view because I feel that other points of view have been adequately presented elsewhere in our church literature. Everywhere and always the love of God is the foundation of the kingdom. Everywhere and always fraternity is strong, and division is weak. Everywhere and always nations, communities, families, and individuals abide or decay as they are obedient to or rebellious against this divine love.

We shall have more to say later about the origin of the kingdom, its nature as a divine gift, as an achievement of free men under God, and as a community of the elect, the city set on a hill.

Suppose for a moment that all human beings felt permanently and universally to each other as they now do occasionally to those whom they love best. It would follow that all the pain in the world would be swallowed up in the joy of doing good. Then go further, and suppose every particle of energy in the world animated by the equivalent spirit to “love” in the particular form of energy which we call human consciousness.

So far as we can conceive such a state, it would be one in which there would be no “individuals” at all, in the sense in which “individuality” means mutual exclusion: there would be a universal being in and for another: where being took the form of “consciousness,” it would be the consciousness of “another” which was also “oneself”—a common consciousness. Such would be the “atonement” of the world.—R. L. Nettleship, Philosophical Remains, page 42.

I conclude with a parable:

Once, so an old story goes, there was a city called Beautiful. It was the Master City of the world. Through it flowed a river—a life-giving river, named the River of Love. It watered the fertile valley and bore ships with cargoes from other lands. By its sweet water the city was cleansed and the inhabitants refreshed. It furnished fountains around which the children played, youth and maiden wooed, and age rested. Its banks were alternations of grassy slopes and busy marts with ships and wharves and stores. Its placid spots reflected the blue sky and the brown hills far away.

When the sun kissed the hills “good morning” and glittered from the towers and minarets, the men went to work in the valley, and when the shadows were long, they returned, bearing the fruit of their toil. At the gate through which they all passed, for it was a walled city, stood an urn with the inscription From each according to his ability, unto each according to his need. Into this each man deposited his earnings liberally, saying, “This I do for the common good” and the River of Love flowed through the City, the Master City of the world.

Then a change came, silent and unobserved. The river flowed on as before, reflecting the blue sky and the brown hills. The children played no less happily, the youth and maiden courted with uncooled ardour, and the peaceful rest of age was undisturbed. The fields yielded their accustomed harvest. But when the men returned from their labors, each walked on the side of the gate opposite the urn and with diverted eyes, hugging his earnings to his bosom, said, “This is mine; with my own hands I earned it.”

The fountains became clogged. The river ran murky and black. Death lurked in its waters. The happy laugh of the children was gone. Youth and maiden no longer lingered at the fountain, and age paused not at its vacant seat. Man looked at his neighbor with a suspicious eye, and there were those who cried out against the doings of the Almighty.

Today the city is forgotten. Its altars are broken. Its temples have tumbled to ruin. Its homes have crumbled to dust. The valley is a desert of restless sand inhabited by the serpent, the jackal, and the owl. The river has long ago disappeared, but the place where it once ran is called the Valley of Shriveled Hearts.—Thos. J. Walker, Iowa State Teachers Magazine, 1926.

Changes in Chicago Church Centers

By Raymond E. Troyer

District President J. C. Stuart

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS, the actual centers of church population in the Chicago area have been changing. As a large percentage of members moved to different sections of the city and suburban areas and as new families moved into the district, the need for an extensive study of church locations became obvious. It was the hope of district and general church leaders in the surveys conducted that church centers could be determined which would permit well-balanced programs for the nurture, ministry, and Zion's community living of present members which, at the same time, would facilitate the missionary aims of the church.

Landmarks, which hold sentimental ties for many people throughout the church who have studied in Chicago or have lived there and have been ministered to through the various church activities, have been disposed of. New church centers have been chosen, and it is anticipated that others may be added as the district program expands. Briefly, the changes which have occurred during the past three years are as follows:

1. West Pullman congregation sold its church at 11936 Parnell Avenue and met in the 111 Street YMCA for about a year, during which time the members sought a new location and worked to increase their building fund.

2. Central and West Pullman members merged last summer and met in the Central Church building at 6601 South Honore Street until February 24 of this year. On that date they entered their new church home at 8805 South Throop Street, which is in the Brainerd section of Chicago. It will be known as the Chicago Brainerd Branch. Elder Kenneth D. Lusha is pastor of this group.

First Services Easter

3. The Gary (Indiana) Saints, under the leadership of Elder Dennison H. Smith, have purchased a church home at 4357 Massachusetts Street in Glen Park subdivision. The first services were held in the building on Easter Sunday, April 13. An architect is working with them in a remodeling program. They have met in the YMCA of that city for several years.

4. The First Chicago Church at 4416 West Gladys Avenue was sold last year, and the Saints have been meeting in the Austin YMCA since July 1. Lots have now been purchased at Major and Montrose Streets in the Northwest section of Chicago and architects are working on plans for the building of a new church there. Elder Elert Chandler is pastor of the branch.

5. Members of Chicago's West Suburban Branch, which was organized about three years ago, are meeting in the Lombard Community House. They have been conferring with both an architect and a contractor in making preparation for a new building which they hope to begin soon. Elder Robert Kent is pastor.

6. Hammond Branch, under the leadership of Elder Harold Talcott, is working to increase its fund for a building program in the future.

7. The only Chicago group not mentioned in these developments is the Ashburn mission under the leadership of Elder John Cooper, which meets in the Ashburn Community Center. It is anticipated that the new Brainerd church will help in providing a more adequate ministry to this group.

Giving guidance to such an extensive building program has been a challenging task. The Saints have felt that the district president, Elder J. C. Stuart, has provided inspired leadership in this work. It has required many committee meetings, branch business sessions, conferences with technical and professional people, and counsel and help from General Church officials. These many special responsibilities which have been added to his usual task of carrying on administrative work of the district have not detracted from the fine ministry which Elder Stuart has provided. With one group in its new home, and with tangible progress by the other groups, the Saints are encouraged and hope to see greater spiritual growth and a renewed missionary effort through work toward and realization of their dreams.

Opening Services at Brainerd

The church was filled to capacity on February 24 for the opening services at the Chicago Brainerd Branch. Pastor Kenneth D. Lusha was in charge of the morning service assisted by one of his counselors, Elder Marion F. Cooper. Elder Stuart was the speaker for the day. In his sermon, "The Place Where Thine Honor Dwelleth," he said the distinctive function of the church is to reveal God to man and lead men to him. God dwells in a church (1) where he is placed first, (2) where his spirit is sought and obeyed, (3) where his truth is taught, (4) where his qualities are cultivated, and (5) where his work is done. The seeking process is that God's Spirit will speak to an expectant people. Elder Stuart closed with the prayer, "O Lord, let this be the place where thine honor dwelleth!"

The ministry of music was provided by the choir under the direction of Mrs. Lynton Lusha. It sang the anthem, "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes" (Weaver), with Mary LaMaster at the organ. A solo, "Open the Gates of the Temple" (Knapp), was sung by Richard F. Keir.

In the opening church school service, Elders Leslie Epperson and Stephen Lester were in charge. Mrs. Hattie K. Bell is church school director. Mrs. Bernice Cooper was in charge of the junior church service and Elder Raymond Troyer gave the sermon, "I Will Build My Church." During the afternoon, the Zion's League met under the supervision of Mrs. Donald Lusha to plan future activities and to prepare for the evening worship service.

"The Lamp Within Thine Hand," an impressive dramatization of how men in all walks and professions of life may discover God in their work and serve mankind most effectively, was given in the evening. Zion's League members then rededicated their lives to the unfinished tasks of the church in a beautiful candle-lighting ceremony.

Need for Prophetic Ministry

In the closing sermon of the day, Elder Stuart spoke of the prophetic ministry of the church. After pointing out that God has always spoken through men at times of great religious progress, he stressed the need for prophetic ministry in the interpretation of truth to convince men to do God's will through testimony of the Holy Spirit. He said men need to hear the voice of holy servants speak, "Thus saith the Lord." He then bore testimony that prophetic ministry is now given through the church.

The new church home for the Brainerd Saints is one that can provide a program of ministry and nurture for all age groups. The upper auditorium is equipped with a pipe organ and a baptismal font. Just back of the auditorium is a large room with a fireplace where the kindergarten and nursery children meet under the supervision of Mrs. Edna Lester. It also will be used for other group meetings and worship services. There is a large lower auditorium and kitchen to provide for junior worship and special activities of church groups. The lawn is to be landscaped to make an attractive neighborhood setting. The building committee, which has performed an outstanding service in procuring and directing remodeling of the edifice, is composed of Chairman C. A. Ward, Chester Bates, Stephen Lester, Marion Cooper, and Leslie Epperson.

Its members hope to make this building a place where God's honor will dwell through prophetic ministry—a place of beauty and inspiration to all who come seeking truth.

President W. W. Smith at Gary

President W. Wallace Smith delivered the sermon for the opening service at the Gary church on Easter Sunday, April 13. The Gary Saints rejoiced to be able to worship for the first time in a church building. The work began in that city when Mrs. Elizabeth Werner and Mrs. Ida Langley invited friends into their homes to hear the message. Members from Hammond provided help for these two sisters, and eventually quarters were rented in the YMCA for services.

President Smith used the Easter theme, "The Resurrection and the Promises of Life as Revealed in It," for his opening sermon. He also told of the relationships between the various attitudes of Jesus and the problems which men face as revealed in the "seven last words" of Jesus. The service was in charge of the pastor, Elder Dennison H. Smith, with one of his counselors, Elder Albert Tomlinson, assisting him.

Superintendent Hugh Smith was in charge of church school. Mrs. W. Wallace Smith spoke on "Faith" at this service, and Elder J. C. Stuart gave a review of the recent General Conference. In the afternoon, a prayer service was held, the theme of which was "Why Seek Life Where There Is no Life?" President Smith brought a challenge to the Saints at this service to find life in the gospel message of Jesus Christ. At the closing service of the day a sermon, "What Is Life?" was delivered by Elder Stuart. President Smith spoke to the Saints at the Brainerd Branch in Chicago that night.

The Gary church provides adequate space for every kind of activity the group may desire to participate in. The main auditorium will seat 180 people and has a large space for the choir. Two other classrooms are on the main floor. There is a full basement with other classrooms which will provide for junior church and the children's division of the church school. The lawn will also provide space for outdoor social activities in the summer. An extensive remodeling program of the building is being engaged in so that a full church program can be provided to meet the needs of the Gary congregation.

The True Nature of Democracy

By B. L. McKim

DEMOCRACY is a wonderful word. It is more than a way of life—it is of the divine life itself. Its roots run back to before the creation of man. Its source is God—the fountain of the divine essence of love.

The principle of democracy was in the beginning with God and is a part of God. It has been given different names—free agency, freedom of choice—but they all have the same meaning.

Freedom of speech and freedom of action stem from freedom of thought and a free conscience; for without these there could be no real freedom of speech or action. Freedom of thought is in a sphere of action beyond the reach of man but within the realm of the Omnipotent One. If free agency (democracy) were not a part of the Infinite One, then man would be a creature of instinct as the birds and animals, and he would act or think the same way over and over again from generation to generation as do birds and beasts. He would be intellectual without growth as willed by the Creator in the beginning.

Man, being by nature a part of the divine, has passed on to posterity the knowledge and understanding of things new and different. Birds and beasts build no better nests today in which to rear their young than at the beginning of creation. What a difference with man's ability to change his environment.

Freedom can grow, bud, and blossom only as equality of opportunity opens the way. And for democracy to be a success and bring about perfect work, there must be political, economic, and religious freedom. People, individually and in groups, must work toward the end that every person has equal opportunity to live so as to be able to develop the best that is in him; thereby the whole will be made strong and healthy.

Democracy being inherently something of the soul, it cannot be made to unfold or bring about an active, living, virile state by wars and killings, nor by enactment of coercive laws. Democracy has not produced by such methods, and cannot be continued by such a way of life. External things can neither make a democracy nor destroy it. It can be destroyed only when that which is within becomes perverted, twisted, corrupt, and selfish.

We are only fooling ourselves when we look outside of ourselves for help to save democracy. We can save our democratic way of life only by looking into the soul of the nation as a whole.

Dancing —

A Frank Approach to an Age-old Problem

By C. Merlin Miller

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTION No. 317, passed in 1886, reads:

That the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel.

No. 377, passed in 1893, reads:

That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints.

For years we of the church have considered dancing to be one of the things that is taboo among "good" church members; yet the fact that the General Conferences have passed resolutions "discouraging" it has not deterred some members from practicing it. As a result it has become a sore point which has provoked many an argument. This is an attempt to take off the dark-colored glasses and see this problem as it really is.

This article is not just another defense for dancing. It is written primarily to help solve the spiritual problems of our day in a positive way.

If any belief is sound, it can bear examination in the light of the Scriptures combined with honest reasoning. It is well for us to re-examine our beliefs from time to time and make sure they are firmly rooted in the principles of the gospel as revealed in the Scriptures and are not merely a matter of human opinions and prejudices. And we as Reorganized Latter Day Saints are probably as susceptible to prejudice as any other denomination.

I realize that the reasoning in this article will be quite unacceptable to many in the church. However, it is being written as a result of a diligent and prayerful search for truth, and as an answer to a problem that has long plagued the church. The conclusions I reach may be different from what has been written on the subject by others. However, it is here presented with the prayer that it may be of help to the young people of the church.

THE ARGUMENT is often put forth that dancing is usually accompanied by drinking and an unwholesome atmosphere. While this is true, we must admit that almost any activity may be accompanied by immoral conduct. Non-Christian people are frequently immoral in their recreation, just as they are immoral in their business affairs. It does not necessarily follow that a Latter Day Saint must be immoral in his participation in similar activities with his fellow Saints. Non-Christian people are frequently dishonest in financial matters. Yet no one would suggest that Reorganized Latter Day Saints shun all financial transactions in order to avoid the temptation of selfish dishonesty.

Many kinds of recreation are frequently combined with vice and immoral conduct. The beach party (without dancing) is something commonly enjoyed by Zion's Leagues throughout the church. Yet among people of the world the beach party is frequently the scene of the most vicious immorality. Even a summer evening car ride, which would be harmless enough among people of high moral caliber, may lead to such things as adultery and broken lives when indulged in by those whose moral stature is not sufficient to resist the temptations which may present themselves.

Incidentally, mixed bathing was at one time considered immoral, especially by some religious groups. The church, to my knowledge, has never gone on record against mixed bathing. Actually, whether the modern beach and ultra-brief bathing attire are less a source of temptation than the dance floor is a subject which those who oppose dancing might well give serious consideration. I believe, however, that church members have sufficient character and self-control to enable them to go to a bathing beach without experiencing anything of which they need be ashamed.

Our problem would seem to be one of deciding whether any given pastime will present temptations which may be too great for us to withstand and so cause us to fall from the high standards of Christian conduct which the church is trying to promote. It would be mockery for us to pray with our Master, "suffer us not to be led into temptation," and at the same time walk headlong into temptations to which we know we may succumb.

IT SHOULD BE APPARENT that dancing, apart from the sex consideration, could hardly be condemned as injurious to morals any more than weight-lifting, pole vaulting, fencing, or a score of other forms of physical exercise and expression, in which we all participate. Hence, its relation to sex will be the main consideration here.

Sex is a God-given faculty which, when combined with fidelity and devotion, is a beautiful thing that enriches life. Close physical contact, sufficient to arouse the sex instincts, when indulged in indiscriminately, may lead to a cheapened attitude toward sex and a lowered respect for the sanctity of virtue in the opposite sex. Caresses become merely a form of amusement instead of expressions of love. Sex becomes only a means to a sensual thrill, instead of a God-given gift to be regarded as a sacred stewardship. With this unhealthy attitude of mind young people become handicapped for the task of choosing a life partner and establishing a stable home life because they think only in terms of the physical and have an underdeveloped appreciation of the spiritual.

Modern ballroom dancing often degenerates into a sort of necking party set to music. By this I mean the close, clinging, cheek to cheek sort of dancing which, when done to certain types of music, can hardly be called dancing at all. It may be difficult to repress sex feelings when this form of dancing is indulged in. Such feelings, when once aroused, become easier to arouse on future occasions. Dancing may, under these conditions, be a source of temptation. However, these conditions are impossible in square dancing, and even modern dancing need not involve such intimate contact between partners unless it is done deliberately. Usually a person who pets on a dance floor does so elsewhere as well. Young people whose moral standards are low enough to permit petting indulge in it without the excuse of dancing. Young people who have never danced in their lives indulge in petting—proving that loose sex practices do not necessarily find their genesis in dancing, but rather in a lack of fundamental Christian convictions.

And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 5.

But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.—Matthew 5: 28.

In examining these Scriptures it might be well to suggest that there is a difference between natural physical attraction and lust. The latter term implies a desire to commit adultery. From the foregoing Scriptures it becomes apparent that not only the act is regarded as a sin, but even the thought that precedes it. Licentious thoughts are something to be repented of as well as licentious acts. Granted it is not always possible to control every thought, but certainly we should not encourage lustful thoughts. We should choose the cleanest, purest possible environment so as to encourage constructive, wholesome thinking. Our thoughts, like our acts, can be channeled on either a high or low plane, according to our aspirations. If we desire to be a morally upright disciple of Christ, let's take the advice of Paul: "Whatsoever things are just . . . pure . . . think on these things" (Philippians 4: 8).

IF OUR DANCING causes us to think unwholesome thoughts, then there is something wrong with our dancing—or with us.

Some types of motion pictures may also lead us to unwholesome paths of thought. In fact, anything which can be said of dancing can also be said of movies. The back seats of a movie theater afford ample opportunity for petting to young people who are so inclined. However, this does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that there is anything fundamentally wrong with motion pictures. They can be and have been used to spread the story of the gospel.

Many of us enjoy reading for recreation. We can derive a great deal of enjoyment and satisfaction, as well as knowledge, from good reading. However, if we read, as much of the modern world reads, dime novels, murder mysteries, and sex thrillers, we shall commit spiritual suicide.

Some of the "parlor games" which are used in church-sponsored recreation involve more physical contact than there is any need for in dancing. I am not passing judgment upon them here; probably these games are harmless. However, if we consider this physical contact to be innocent, why is it considered harmful in dancing?

Opponents of dancing often cite the fact that dancing involves holding hands and the boy's placing his arm around the girl. But everyone knows that roller-skating is usually done with the boy's arm around the girl; and to skate together at all they must at least join hands. But rollerskating is frequently encouraged (and I believe rightly so) as a part of the Zion's League program. If we are opposed to this sort of thing, we should be consistent in our attitude in order to be fair. It has been said that dancing would be all right if a line were drawn down the middle of the floor and all the girls were made to dance on one side and all the boys on the other. Surely the popularity of rollerskating would diminish sharply if this were done in roller rinks. In fact, we cannot remove the sex factor from any part of our League program without crippling it; it has been proved that Leagues composed entirely of either boys or girls are never successful.

A NUMBER OF SAINTS have borne testimony to having spiritual experiences concerning dancing. No doubt the Spirit of God directs the lives of each of us, enabling us to see and to avoid the pitfalls that lie before us. It is only reasonable to believe that God, in his love, will warn his children in any circumstance where their spiritual well-being is in danger. Our human vision does not always enable us to discern what is in the hearts of men. Hence there may be unknown danger in any circumstance in which we associate with others, especially so where non-Christian people are concerned. It may be a dance, or it may be a box social. Therefore, the fact that various ones have been warned by the Spirit about the dangers that lie in their dancing does not necessarily mean that all dancing is wrong.

In this connection it may be worthy of note that although dancing has been common since the days of Joseph Smith, Jr., whom we all regard as one of the greatest of the prophets, neither he nor his successors have brought a word by way of revelation concerning it. If dancing is a sin, as some believe, surely the Lord would have responded to our need and spoken against it through the prophets of the church. Surely we who boast of being a church founded on the "rock of revelation" do not have to supplement the revelations God has given us with "resolutions" of our own making.

A careful reading of the General Conference resolutions on dancing will reveal that dancing was regarded by the church at that time as a practice which "should be discouraged." Today we all too frequently read a direct prohibition into the resolutions which just isn't there. Undoubtedly these resolutions were meant as good advice to the members of the church, but not to restrict them in any way. However, many people of the church have become so prejudiced against dancing because of the liquor and other immorality associated with dance halls that they have attempted to make it say more than was intended. Incidentally, the atmosphere of the average dance hall is as repugnant to me as to anyone else.

It has been alleged that dancing often leads to spiritual decadence and separation from the church. This is admittedly the case in many instances. Those church members who dance usually have strong convictions as to the propriety of their conduct. It is not surprising then that they become indignant when criticized by their fellow Saints. Hurt feelings and resultant separation from fellowship ensue, for none of us can bear criticism indefinitely. In this as in other things it may be well for us to heed the admonition given in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7, ". . . be merciful . . . be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word."

Even if it could be proved that dancing is not good, surely those who dance should not be subjected to more criticism than, for instance, those who consistently and openly disobey the Word of Wisdom and the financial law, which have been given to the church by revelation.

It is true that young people may become intoxicated with dancing to the detriment of other pursuits, including church work. This is true of many other forms of recreation. Here again dancing may be compared to movies; some people have the "movie habit" to the extent that it consumes three or more evenings each week. This is not to say that any form of recreation does not have its place. It provides relaxation, fellowship, and physical exercise which promotes both spiritual and physical well-being. But if we become unbalanced we may rob ourselves of many worth-while things.

AT THIS POINT I wish to say that, though I did at one time dance, I do not now—not because I believe it is fundamentally wrong, but because as a minister for Christ I have become involved in the work of the church and have more important things to which to devote my time. It is a case of sacrificing the lesser for the greater worth. Most of us who are active in the church use the time which others consume in recreation and just plain "having fun," in doing church work. We might wish that more of our young people would do likewise. But if they must have recreation they have as much right to dance as to roller-skate or go to movies. Let's face the fact that most young people want to have good times and to enjoy each other's friendship. Let's accept them as they are and try to minister to them at their point of need. Let's not make greater demands of any young person than he is spiritually ready to give. It is an old but true saying, "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." The urge to dance is a passing phase in the life of almost every young person which will pass with the coming of maturity if we are understanding and sympathetic. Let's win young people to Christ one by one, not try to coerce them.

In some branches young people are made to feel that they must give up dancing or else suffer loss of reputation among the members. To one who is fond of dancing and sees no wrong or harm in it, this can mean a severance of church fellowship, which is just as effective as excommunication.

We might speculate as to whether or not some form of dancing, done in an atmosphere of Christian fellowship, might not help to build that close fellowship so vital to Leagues, just as have beach parties and roller-skating.

Even if we feel that we must "discourage" dancing we might at least do so in a positive rather than a negative way. Instead of sounding shocked when the question is brought up, we might be democratic enough to allow it, and at the same time plan enough interesting activities of other kinds so as to avoid it as much as possible. This would avoid the dogmatic, flat refusal which brings indignation and rebellion from most young people.

ACCORDING TO SOME PSYCHOLOGISTS dancing may even serve a useful purpose in the lives of young people. Those who are interested should read page 76 of the well-known book Return to Religion by Dr. Henry C. Link, an eminent psychologist and Director of the Psychological Service Centre of New York City. Dr. Link says: "Dancing has great merit, and I have recommended it to literally hundreds of clients."

I believe one of the finest things that could be done in our League would be to establish a custom that at the close of each evening of recreation, or whatever the activity, the young people would pause for a moment, form a "friendship circle," and sing one of their favorite hymns—perhaps a moment of silent prayer—thus inviting the blessing and benediction of God into their midst, and at the same time recognizing for a moment the bonds of Christian love which unite them. Nor is there any reason why we cannot invite the Spirit of God to attend any evening of good, clean fun in dancing as well as any other recreational activity.

I believe that allowing some form of dancing at League functions, providing there is proper supervision, would be at least harmless, if not actually beneficial. Square dancing is again becoming popular and, in the light of all that has been said, it should be as good for our young people as any kind of recreation. Why should we ban something which is little different from "musical chairs," except that it is called "dancing"?

If our young people are allowed to dance with each other in the privacy of the League gathering the only valid objection would be removed—namely the dance hall environment. As it is, the only place where our young people can satisfy their desire to dance is, in most cases, the public dance hall, or a house party in a non-Christian home, which may be even worse. Dancing could be allowed in private homes, under supervision. Attendance might be limited to church members, or to church members and friends invited with the permission of the supervisor. The nature of the dancing itself could be controlled, mainly by the selection of proper music. If the music were limited to square dances, for instance, there would be little opportunity for anyone to do anything else.

All this might involve making something of a bargain with our young people, wherein church officers would be granting a special privilege in return for co-operation and good behavior on the part of the young people. However, we should have sufficient faith in the morals and integrity of our young people to do this.

Many church young people dance already. Shall we allow them to dance openly with each other in a clean, wholesome atmosphere, or shall we continue to allow them to go where we cannot supervise them?

In one branch four fine young people about to be baptized were driven from the church because of the vigorous stand of the branch officers against dancing. The latter even went so far as to actively discourage some of the church young people attending a private square-dancing party held in the home of these young people. Hard feelings resulting from this have contributed to at least two other young members becoming inactive in the church.

THIS ARTICLE has not been written in an attempt to encourage moral laxity, nor is it even an attempt to promote dancing among church young people. I do feel, however, that each church member, or any group of church members, should have the right to freely follow the dictates of their own conscience before God in their choice of recreation, without any restraint save the "still small voice."

I think it is time for us to evaluate our present uncompromising stand and see if it is justified in the light of the gospel as revealed to us in the Three Standard Books. If it is not, then perhaps it is time to reorient our thinking.

There are thousands of young people whose need for the gospel of Christ in their lives, and the clean wholesome fellowship which grows out of it, is urgent. These young people cannot be attracted and won to the gospel of Jesus Christ if that gospel is accompanied by "resolutions" on moral issues which are unreasonable, inconsistent, and dogmatically administered.

This is a day when for millions the issue is indeed "Christ or chaos." Daily the young people of our nation are becoming involved in sin, the consequences of which they may never escape. In some cities juvenile gangs roam the streets—a situation which requires police action to safeguard life and property. Activities of these gangs promote the most vicious forms of vice, including narcotics and prostitution, among young people whose only crime is that they do not know their mistakes until they become too deeply involved to escape. Surely this is a day for positive action by the church of Jesus Christ!

By all means let us do our best to guard the virtue of our young people—let us teach them and the youth of the world the Christian way of life. Let's teach them to apply the philosophy of Christ not just to one but all aspects of their lives—even to dancing.

Question Time

Question:

What became of the ark of the covenant? and what did it contain?

California

Mrs. M. S.

Answer:

Information regarding the ark of the covenant is meager. It is clear that the two tables of stone containing the Ten Commandments were kept in it, and Hebrews 9: 4 suggests that the pot of manna was also placed there. Some have thought that the rod of Aaron and the gold ornaments returned with the ark by the Philistines were kept within, but more probably they were placed by its side. It is said in I Kings 8: 9 that "there was nothing in the ark save the tables of stone."

As to its disposition, its last known place of deposit, as far as the Scriptures show, was in the Temple of Solomon where it apparently remained to the close, or near the close, of the kingdom. Smith's Bible Dictionary states that the ark was probably destroyed or taken to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar when Jerusalem fell and the temple burned. But there is no mention of it in the list of temple treasures carried to Babylon, notwithstanding it was the most important of all (II Kings 25: 13-17; Jeremiah 52: 17-23); neither is it mentioned as being in Babylon.

The apocryphal book of II Maccabees (2: 4-8) supplies a more probable disposition of the ark. According to records mentioned, Jeremiah, being warned of God, took the ark and had it deposited in a cave of a mountain east of Jordan—the mountain from which Moses viewed the promised land—and sealed it up. When some of his assistants, presumably priests, came back again to mark the place, they could not find it. When Jeremiah heard of this he said:

As for that place, it shall be unknown until the time that God gather his people together again, and receive them unto mercy. Then shall the Lord show them these things, and the glory of the Lord shall appear, and the cloud also, as it was showed under Moses, and as when Solomon desired that the place might be honorably sanctified.

It is inconsistent that the Lord should permit the ark either to be destroyed or to fall into the hands of a heathen nation. It was made to endure and is most likely preserved somewhere for future use.

Question:

When or how long before Christ did the Lost Tribes disappear?

California

MRS. R. MCC.

Answer:

The kingdom of Israel suffered final defeat at the hands of Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, and his son and successor, Sargon, in 722 B. C. after a three-year siege. Tens of thousands of captive Israelites were carried into Assyria and distributed in groups in various parts, to gradually disappear from human knowledge. These are the ten lost tribes of Israel whose recovery the Lord has promised.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is there an after life for animals? It seems that it would not be so lovely in heaven if there were no birds or pets there.

Washington

B. N.

Answer:

We know of no Scripture which directly or indirectly affirms the perpetuity of animals in the spirit world. That the life of animals was created as spirit prior to the physical creation is indicated in Genesis 1 and 2, Inspired Version, but what becomes of it after death is not revealed.

Life in its created forms is not necessarily eternal. Anything that has beginning may have ending; and any created thing may revert back to its original state. A created thing becomes eternal only as God decrees it so and by his un-failing power maintains it eternally. What has been created only for temporary purposes ceases to exist when those purposes are fulfilled.

Animals will be on the earth during the millennium, but that will be among the people still living in mortality. No mention is made of them in the Holy City, the abode of the redeemed. If such beings are necessary to the welfare of man no doubt God will provide them. Conditions in the kingdom of God are altogether beyond man's present power to conceive, and we may rest assured that every need of the redeemed will be fully met by the Redeemer, and man's joy will be complete.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

What is meant by the great endowment to be rested upon the priesthood in the future? Will it be the power to heal the sick, to restore sight to the blind; to have power to raise the dead; or is it to be the Three Nephites to be among us as the church but not known to the Gentiles (III Nephi 13: 39)?

Answer:

The endowment is a special outpouring of the spirit of power upon God's chosen ministry for the especial purpose of preaching the gospel to the convincing of the people. Miracles and healings are not the primary purpose, though they will occur as contributory to the converting of the people. It is yet future, though probably not far distant, and seems to be associated with two other great events—the conversion of the Lamanites or Indians, and the establishing of Zion. Under it the gospel will also go to the Gentiles. The Three Nephites may participate in the great work, but otherwise they have no immediate connection with the endowment so far as we know. It is to be given in Kirtland Temple. Much preparation is necessary before that day comes. (See III Nephi 10: 4; Doctrine and Covenants 87: 4; 102: 3, 5.)

Question:

What was the Brother of Jared's name?

California

MRS. R. MCC.

Answer:

This great man, one of the co-founders of the Jaredite nation, is, for some unstated reason, referred to in the Book of Mormon only as the Brother of Jared. His name is not given.

CHARLES FRY

Spiritual Hunger Satisfied

As a girl I had a limited church life. When I was fourteen I began to attend the nearest Protestant church, and although I never seemed to receive complete satisfaction with its teachings I decided that I should join before going away to college. I felt that I needed to belong to some church, so I asked for baptism. When the time came for the candidates to go forward, I stepped into the aisle. Then a powerful force seemed to grip my shoulders, and my feet seemed glued to the floor. A voice seemed to say, "This is not the church you are looking for," but since I had decided I should belong to some church, I struggled to pull away from the power that had held me and went to the front of the church to receive baptism. This experience caused me to go from one denomination to another seeking the church the voice had caused me to believe existed somewhere.

Then I met my husband and began going to the Reorganized Church with him. Slowly I realized this was the church I'd been searching for, and for the first time in my life I could go home from services feeling that my spiritual hunger had been satisfied. I have challenged this work in every way, and each challenge proves to me more surely the truthfulness of the gospel.

I thank God for this experience. Without it I am sure I would never have searched further for his church.

Divine Assistance

I believe that if we observe the word of wisdom and exercise faith we can be healed in times of suffering. Recently I was filled with misery and would have called the elders to come and administer to me, but I didn't feel that I should ask them to get out of their warm beds and travel through the cold and storm to my house. As I grew worse I knew that something would have to be done. Then I remembered that I had a blessed handkerchief, so I got it at once and laid it across me, offering a sincere prayer for God to help me. I was immediately relieved, so I offered a prayer of thanks.

If we put our trust in him, God will often help us in our distress.

Enjoys Conference

It seems to me that anyone who attends a Conference would want to go to all that are held. This last one was the greatest experience of my life.

Those who took the "System of Creation" charts home can get additional copies free by writing to me. Those whose addresses I have will receive theirs in two or three weeks. Anyone who fails to get his chart should contact me by mail. The number is limited to about 2,000, so all who are interested should act promptly.

Diamond in the Rough

He wasn't very big, this Tommy Jones (which of course wasn't his real name) as he stood on the waterfront of one of the ship-building centers and looked at the tall trestle which seemed to go straight across country and reach into the sky. As he stood, he decided to be one of the best engineers that ever guided an engine over those shining rails into the night.

Years passed and Tom grew up; his determination grew also. He had no one to care for him, but he did make many friends, especially among the men in the roundhouse. When the nights were cold, they would fix a bed inside where he would be warm. Other times he would sleep in old packing boxes outside. While still a boy he worked around the engines, greasing and polishing them and loving every minute of it.

He met a girl, homeless and poor but good. She, too, lived on the waterfront. They married and had a happy home. Then came the promotion—he was going to be a fireman on the special train that was going out the next day, with the regular fireman to show him how. He hurried home, full of expectation to tell Mary, his wife. However he was met at the door by a neighbor who told him to be quiet, that Mary was dying and was waiting for him. He hurried to her bedside. As he knelt by her bed she asked him to pray for her. Somewhere Mary had heard of God and prayer. Tom had never prayed and didn't know how; he didn't know about the Bible, God, or anything like that. He didn't know what to say, but she asked him again to pray for her.

When he looked at Mary again, she was gone. It was a terrible shock, and after the funeral was over, he was so lonely that every evening he would go for a long walk.

One night as he was walking, he went in a different direction than usual through a quiet neighborhood. From across the street he heard singing and saw a store window lighted up. It was clean and inviting, and, as he listened, these words came to his ears:

We come with joy the truth to teach you,
To sow the seed in every heart;
We hope the evidence may reach you,
That from all error you may part.

He listened, then walked across the street and entered the building where an elder was holding a series of meetings. He sat down near the door so he could easily step out if he didn't like the sermon, but he was very interested, and each night found him closer to the front of the building. By the time the series was over Tom Jones arose and told of his life and his desire to serve God as long as he lived. He was baptized and later ordained. He became one of the finest workers this church has ever had—kind, considerate, and humble. God did teach him how to pray. Humility and love were in every word he spoke. He became one of the most careful and expert engineers on the road. This is the diamond in the rough that was polished into a jewel.

CORRECTION

In the April 14 issue, page 11, column three, paragraph one, line five, the statement is made that the author, a nurse, set broken legs and arms. It should have read that she x-rayed fractured legs and arms, since bone-setting is in a doctor's field. The author has never set broken bones, as such is against nursing ethics.

The Importance of Zionics Home Life

By Lenora Nixon

THE WORD "home" is one of the dearest words in our language. The building may be humble and the furnishings plain, but it is still the dearest place on earth—a place where one can relax, a haven of contentment.

Everyone who is a member of the church has a desire to serve. Service is an expression of love and consecration; it is the only way of acknowledging allegiance to our Master and pledging devotion to his cause. Men can find their place in priesthood and leadership work. Women, too, have a place many times parallel with the men.

We are entering the spring season, the time when housekeepers begin taking inventory of their homes. We look forward to the day when, after the long winter of fires, closed doors, and windows, we can get everything in tiptop shape again. But do we give as much thought to our spiritual homes? How often do we have spiritual house cleaning? We need to clear our minds of all seeds of doubt, ill-feeling, and prejudice—to take out our faith, which we may have stored away, wash it, mend it, and shine it so it again can be used.

Psalm 96: 9 reads, "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." Our bodies are compared to temples. We wouldn't fill our homes with filth and trash. Our "temples" are to be filled with beautiful thoughts and active desires. And if we so clothe our bodies, the place where we dwell will be a counterpart of the things that we are.

All nature is God's television program. Our home service is a televised account of our program and attitude toward church. We should not fill the program with things which retard our "commercials" (for much as people dislike them they still sell the product—the good product that we've tried and tested with prayer, accepted with faith, and used with gratefulness). Many companies will not endorse products unless they are tested and tried. We should be careful so that service in our homes presents an attractive product that will stand trials, burdens, criticisms, and emerge shining and pure.

YOU WHO HAVE ATTENDED commencement exercises know the chief theme of discourse is the future before the class. Since famous persons are in the minority, the best thing that could be told young people is "Go make a life for yourselves. After all, what's in a name? It's simply a mark of identification. What's in a life? Eternal glory or condemnation! Who was the good Samaritan? Who put in the widow's mite? Who was the man that lent his donkey for Christ's triumphal entry? Who were the women that stayed near Jesus at the cross? Who was the innkeeper that permitted Joseph and Mary to stay in the stable? Evidently none of these people desired to be famous. They were simple people who served when the opportunity came. Surely all of them had some good training in the home. They used good desires."

We can all serve in the home. Our home life proclaims the kind of members we are, the kind our children will be. An attractive home is to be desired, but even Jesus, in talking to Mary and Martha, said there is a "better part."

Many times our homes are visited by people who are not members of the church, and, during their stay, we are preaching and testifying. Our Master was interested in our home life, not merely our homes.

It is a known fact that mothers carry the responsibility of home life, especially in teaching children. Children of other faiths often associate with our children in our homes. They can be influenced by the way our children act. All children should have responsibilities in the home. Having certain things to do helps them to become good stewards. Daughter has to keep her bedroom clean as her stewardship in the home. She has charge of that room and is to be held accountable for its appearance. "Sonny" is a steward over the basement or lawn.

We have heard much about the virtues of the family altar. Those who have instituted it in their homes know of the joy and fellowship felt at these gatherings. How often they are thrilled and humbled by the sincere contributions of young children. It certainly should be maintained faithfully, for it binds parents and children together.

Brother Richard Baldwin once said, "Mothers, let your children hear you pray aloud." Periods of family worship and grace before meals should be a most delightful experience in home life. All children should be taught to bow their heads in thankfulness for the food provided. Family prayer helps keep many from temptations. For those having musical instruments in their home there is a blessedness that comes from playing and singing together. Christian mottoes upon the wall are constant reminders of God's presence. A young mother was told in her patriarchal blessing, "Let thine example as a mother be such that all may know that thou believest in order, in discipline, and in self-control. Teach well thy children. May they come to know that the words of their mother are like unto the words of God. May they be taught to respect thy commands. May they be taught to believe in prayer, and in His word, and in His church." A small part of the work of mothers is expressed in these words.

Zionics homes should be kept free of criticism—of those in the home, of the church, of neighbors, especially when children are near. It is true there have been, and will be, times when all do not see alike. Problems will be discussed which in no way concern the children. If they hear harsh things said about someone, then see that person treated with friendliness to his face, they will quickly see the insincerity of their parents and have less respect for them.

REOORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS are firm believers in the philosophy found in Proverbs 22: 6: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Some people cite instances of where children were forced to go to church and after they got older refused to attend. I contend since the Scriptures give that promise, it is true. Perhaps in many cases the training was at fault—not the Scripture.

The attitude we display toward God and his church will be instilled in our children. It is inevitable. We can teach them to worship God through love or duty. Our lives can be songs of praise or funeral marches.

We hear a great deal of criticism about the younger generation and its lack of respect for older people. Do we act in such a way that we invite respect? Can children respect a person who teaches one thing and practices another? Many times we forget the way we acted when we were young. Perhaps if we stop for one moment and ask ourselves, "How did we act at thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen?" we'll feel a little more tolerant.

We cannot gain respect without giving it, or confidence without making ourselves worthy. If we carefully scrutinize our own spiritual standards we might be surprised at what we find. A child may learn what the Christian virtues are at church school, but the everyday practices of them must come in the home. The Zionite home should be an example of what the church school is trying to teach. Where there are blessings of faith, love, and peace, our Lord is glad to share his presence. He is happy to be the "unseen guest at every table and silent listener to every conversation."

Thousands of children being reared in homes of professing Christians never hear a prayer or the reading of Scriptures. They see their parents dance and play cards

Accent on Scent

If you love the scent of flowers, plant those which smell the sweetest near the house. Border the walk to the entrance with English lavender or old-fashioned pinks; plant clumps of phlox, climbing roses, sweet alyssum, mignonette, stock and sweet William, narcissus and hyacinth near the living-room windows. Nicotiana, which smells sweetest at night, belongs under bedroom windows, as do lilacs. Brier and other old-fashioned roses and flowering currant blooming near the dining room will waft their delicate perfume into the room. For your garden walks, try Francis Bacon's plan, and plant them with "burnet, wild thyme and water mints, which perfume the air most delightfully when trodden upon and crushed, so that you may have pleasure when you walk."

—but never pray. Parents go to the movies and take their children with them, but they do not attend church with their families. Devotional habits need to be encouraged.

There is one virtue we all need to polish and use, and that is reverence in God's house. Too many times God's Spirit does not linger because of irreverence—not the restlessness of small children but the indifference, disregard, and disrespect of adults toward the one who is trying to minister to the congregation. The right attitude toward church can often be cultivated in the house.

MANY FAMOUS PEOPLE have given tribute to their mothers as being largely responsible for their fame. Let us consider the mother of Jesus. How many young women sing "My soul doth magnify the Lord" when they learn of their pregnancy? How many would make a long journey near the time of delivery and endure the hardship of confinement in a stable? Despite the circumstances there was much dignity attending that birth. Mary did not shout aloud that she had mothered a remarkable babe. She did not even tell the shepherds; she permitted them to tell the story, but she herself did not once boast about her son.

We read little of Mary during the years, but what we do read tells of her teaching. She gave gentle reproof to Jesus when he caused the family grave concern by remaining behind in the temple. The words, "and the child grew and waxed strong and increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man," are very familiar. They denote efficient physical care and a well-developed personality. Such a child would be a living tribute to any mother. The child is a gauge whereby motherhood is measured. What about our own? We sometimes murmur and complain about the work of rearing children. Our children's services are gifts to the church, yet none of us gave the greatest gift, as Mary did. Besides hers, all of our gifts are small. Hers truly must have been a Zionite home.

An Open Letter to High School Seniors

Dear Friends:

I am writing this because I think I can more easily express my feelings and convey my thoughts in a letter than I can in speaking. I am going to tell you why I think you should go to Graceland.

I know it isn't always easy to choose the right thing. Life isn't like a railroad track with the curves all planned. It's more like traveling down a highway, not knowing for sure where you are going, or what road to turn on next. It's like a tree—you start at the trunk with only one way to go, then comes the branches—a big decision. Choose one of two branches and you have eliminated half the possible ends of your life.

Up to now you have made thousands of choices and you have come to a time when your choice will determine your whole future. Graceland offers varied courses which will help you regardless of your future plans, but the main thing it offers is the Graceland way of life—what we call the “plus element.” Just what this consists of no one is quite sure, but it is an ever-moving force that has made Graceland what it is.

Graceland has much to offer to those who take it. Even some who do get here don't take it. It is up to each person to determine how much he will take. It is here for the asking. This “plus element” seems to lie very close to Zionistic principles, and it can help you plan a Zionistic life. You must have a plan, you know, before you build anything—a house, a garage, a church, a life. And what better plan is there than Zionistic living?

Set a goal for what you want in life. “A person who makes money only to satisfy his wants without putting a limit on the wants is doomed,” says Jerry Runkle, economics teacher here at Graceland. The same thing goes for living. The person who merely exists without living for something and setting a goal toward which to live is doomed.

I'm not saying you have to come to Graceland to do the right thing. It's just that I believe at Graceland you can find some of the things you will need later on, and learning these things here may be a lot less painful than having to learn of them from experience.

You may not find Graceland everything you expect it to be, but even if you come only for a year Graceland can help you. Graceland is not a gathering of angels, rather it is like a net cast into the sea. It gathers all kinds of fish, good and bad, but the good are more numerous and are trying to live together in a way that can be called, I believe, the most truly Zionistic community in existence today.

I have seen some young people come up here and get in with the wrong group, and it might have been better had they not come. They could have been helped, but they chose the wrong branch of the tree. Still this is not all Graceland's fault—they might have gone wrong wherever they went.

There are some people who shouldn't be here. They are not really bad, but they are not good for the needs of a growing Graceland. They come for fun and fellowship, but not for work. Graceland was made of work and will not run on fun any more than I can skate through biology and get an “A.” Fun is necessary, but so is work.

Graceland wants people who are not afraid to study and learn more so they can use their education later on in daily living. These are the ones who really make up the “plus element” of Graceland. These are the ones who make good in the world. These are the ones who will build Zion. The rest are but superficial frills and “leaners.”

Which are you? I think I have you stacked right. I think you can make a go of it. If you are still uncertain about coming to Graceland go to God with your problem. Pray about it for a week—not that God will tell you what to do, but rather that as you think about it he will guide your mind to the right conclusions.

As I said before, it may not really be the best thing for you to go to Graceland. I close in the hope that you will do the right thing.

Sincerely,

BLAIR BRYANT

GAZETTE

■ The fourteen pastoral groups into which the campus congregation has been divided this year met for the last time on March 2 for Sunday night supper. After this date the congregation was reorganized into sectional groups according to the geographical location of the members' homes. The reorganization was made to enable students to prepare for their work back home, to get better acquainted with the people from their own area, and to study the problems of their own areas.

■ The Utah Latter-day Saint Church has presented Graceland a copy of the Book of Mormon in Braille. It is comprised of seven volumes, each considerably larger than an ordinary copy of the book.

■ The girls took over the campus on leap year week end the last of February. They assumed the masculine prerogatives of asking for dates, opening doors, and carrying books. The Social Activities Planning Committee arranged an all-school party for Friday night and ten varied small group parties Saturday, so the girls didn't lack events to get dates for.

■ The campus congregation met for a Communion service on the last Wednesday evening before spring recess. Deam Ferris was in charge, and Clifford Cole delivered the theme talk, impressing the students with their responsibility for contributing to the success of the 1952 General Conference.

■ The assembly on the last Thursday before Conference took the form of a General Conference business meeting. Staff members took the part of the presidency and chief quorums of the church, and all the students acted as delegates from their particular districts. A motion to increase the membership of the Graceland Board of Trustees from seven to nine was made and discussed. A yea and nay vote was taken on this motion. It was carried. This assembly served to acquaint students, many of whom had never attended a General Conference, with the procedure followed in Conference business sessions.

■ Jim Postlethwait, business manager of The Acacia, Graceland yearbook, has announced that alumni and friends of Graceland College can now order their copy of the 1952 Acacia. The Acacia provides a graphic record of the students and events of the 1951-52 school year at Graceland. Orders may be submitted now, with five dollars, to Jim Postlethwait, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

■ Hundreds of Graceland's students and faculty members trekked southward to Independence on March 29 to attend the 1952 General Conference. Many of them fulfilled Conference responsibilities there. W. S. Gould, Director of Public Relations, was in charge of the Graceland Booth in the lower auditorium. There a photographic display of Graceland life supplemented the literature about the college made available to all prospective Graceland students and other interested persons. Mr. Gould also served as commentator for the "Graceland Night" program in the Auditorium on Wednesday evening. At the climax of this program, the Graceland concert choir sang "The College on the Hilltop," written by Mr. Gould and Miss Betty Ann Mosier, Graceland piano instructor.

■ Dr. R. A. Cheville, acting president, taught a series of classes on "Young Adults and the Church." At one of these, six of Graceland's young married students presented the major needs and interests of their group. He also spoke to a meeting of patriarchs on the subject of counseling young people, led congregational singing, and took part in a program on religious education.

■ Other faculty members having Conference responsibilities included Mrs. Olive Mortimore, Deam Ferris, Miss Velma Ruch, Mrs. Charlotte Gould, Clifford Cole, and Henry Anderson.

■ A high light of the Conference for junior visitors was the junior banquet. Attended by children eight to twelve years old, with a program presented by Graceland students, it was intended to start the juniors thinking of and planning toward attending Graceland. Three hundred three youngsters had a good time and carried home Graceland favors.

■ Graceland students attended Conference well-prepared by special classes and services all pointed toward the coming event. They returned to school enlightened and inspired, with a fresh outlook on the work in which they are engaged.

■ The Graceland track squad defeated the Kirksville College (Kirksville, Missouri) squad 69-67 on April 16. Outstanding performances were by Dick Braby of Mason City, Iowa, who won firsts in the 100- and 220-yard dashes, and Jack Stephens of Seminole, Oklahoma, who scored firsts in the high hurdles and pole vault.

the items of doctrine . . . for the government of the church," made a report, signed by Joseph Smith and others; in it was stated, "the first part of the book [Doctrine and Covenants] will be found to contain a series of lectures as delivered before a theological class in this place [Kirtland]."

Our Church History, Volume 1, page 539, has the following: "During the month of January [1835], I was engaged in the school of the elders, and in preparing the lectures on theology for publication in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which the committee appointed last September were now compiling." In the light of this statement there is every probability that when Joseph was "engaged in the school of the elders" he delivered some of the lectures. Furthermore, since he mentioned no other person involved "in preparing," et cetera, we are justified, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, in believing he was the author and responsible for the contents of such lectures. In any event, we may rightfully hold, I am sure, that the lectures were fully endorsed by him.

Elder John Smith, taking the lead of the high council in Kirtland, bore record that the revelations in said book were true, and that the lectures were judiciously arranged and compiled, and were profitable for doctrine.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 4.

I personally feel that great weight should be given to what he wrote or what he so unqualifiedly endorsed, and while every presumption raised by the record indicates he was the author, he must at least have been a co-author.

These "Lectures on Faith" were printed in the first edition (1835) of the Doctrine and Covenants. They were included in all other editions up to and including the 1894 edition. They were first omitted from the book in the edition of 1897 on the theory that only revelations should have place in it.

A MOST SIGNIFICANT STATEMENT was given by the Prophet Joseph Smith and is found in the Inspired Version, Genesis 5: 45: "And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance; and the gospel preached; and a decree sent forth that it should be in the world until the end thereof, and thus it was." Since we believe the gospel in its purity and completeness was restored in latter days, we must hold that if there seems not to be full harmony between the doctrines set forth in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, the Bible record must be the one that is defective—not the Book of Mormon.

For purpose of illustration, and making a specific application of what I have presented, I call up the much-discussed question of the Godhead. By assuming that Joseph Smith prepared lecture five, as I believe from the record that he did, much if not all of the confusion existing in the minds of some is or should be dispelled; this, considered in connection with other statements by him, is conclusive in such controversy.

If inconsistencies as to doctrines seem to have crept into the Bible or exist between its account and the Book of Mormon and the revelations to the church, we must remember that although we believe God has never changed, and that the true gospel has always been the same, pronouncements by him later in point of time should be considered as clarifications of former ones. Another factor important to remember is that records handed down through the centuries depend for their validity and correctness on many scribes and the fidelity of their work in copying.

Summing up, in point of authority, the books should be evaluated thus: first, latter-day revelation, included in the Doctrine and Covenants; second, changed readings in the Inspired Version of the Scriptures; third the Book of Mormon; fourth the Bible; and fifth, authentic interpretations by the Prophet Joseph Smith or his successors.

We do not want to be understood as holding that apparent inconsistencies in all sacred books may not be harmonized in reason. As did my father before me (see Saints' Herald, Volume 29, page 74), I believe doctrine taught in each of our Three Standard Books, when rightly interpreted, will be found practically always to support the truths contained in the others.

Public Relations for Churches

By Stewart Harral

Abingdon-Cokesbury Press—$1.25

Here is an inexpensive brief and to-the-point book which can be of help to every minister who is interested in improving both publicity and public relations for his church.

While offering simple and practical suggestions in the field of improving the church's relations with the public, Mr. Harral's book is of most help in its practical suggestions in the area of the local church's relations to the community newspaper. Illustrations provided include those of church bulletins, missionary tracts, newspaper articles, letters, and even highway signs.

The author might well have gone even further into detail and have given more suggestions in the layout and development in each of these fields. No interdenominational book, of course, can go into the specific helps which are needed and most appropriate in the Restoration Movement. Until such a guide is produced, Mr. Harral's book can be used profitably even by small branches.

 APT. LIFE

Here is a social note on the coziness and charm of modern apartment (the ads appropriately call them "apts.") life. While shaving you become aware that an incineration is taking place and call to your wife, "Darling, the toast is burning!" She replies, "But I'm not making any toast." Then you are embarrassed because you know that you have been overheard. There is a squeak on the other side of the wall as somebody else's wife realizes that she is burning somebody else's toast. . . . You hear a rattling of wire hangers in the closet, then a crash as everything falls down. You look, but everything is in order; it all happened on the other side of a cardboard partition.

 ONE CIGARETTE—$17,000

You may say, "That's a high price for cigarettes!" Believe it or not, that was what just one cigarette cost recently according to a Sunday morning radio newscast. A lazy smoker, falling asleep with a lighted cigarette hanging from his lips, set his bed afire, which set the room ablaze, which spread until it caused $17,000 damage to a hotel and drove 350 other tenants out into the night, with many additional personal losses. . . . People smoking in bed burn up their homes, their children, and sometimes even themselves. . . . But apparently smokers never learn from the tragic and costly experiences of other smokers.

 BEWARE!

A wisely written magazine article says that you should never drive a car when you are angry, when you have had a quarrel, or suffered a great disappointment. You will probably crash, hurt or kill somebody, or do something regrettable. You can't think about such things and drive safely. . . . If you think, don't drive; if you drive, don't think. Pay attention to the road and the traffic. People with single-track minds make better drivers. The average chap, perhaps too dumb for great thoughts, is a safer driver than a genius.

 DEMURRER

Title of a popular article: "You Are Smarter Than You Think."

Ha! Have you any evidence for that, sir? A few of our experiences have given us a contrary impression.

 QUESTIONS

What people seem finer, when you have been among strangers, than your friends? What place seems more beautiful, when you have been traveling, than your home? Who is more lovely and wonderful, when you have been away, than your own wife?

 DREAMS

What do you want today, my Dear?
What are you thinking now?
Tell me your dreams, and never fear:
They will come true, somehow.
Yesterday's dream was of country lands,
Of children bright and gay,
Of rural peace and plenitude.
But that was yesterday.
Today new dreams are coming on,
New hopes, new plans do grow,
Like castles in ancient Avalon.
They will come true, I know.

News and Notes

T H E B I B L E

Born in the East and clothed in Oriental form and imagery, the Bible walks the ways of all the world with familiar feet and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace of the monarch to tell him that he is a servant of the Most High, and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is a son of God.

Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word of peace for the time of peril, a word of comfort for the time of calamity, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels whispered in the ear of the lonely.

The wicked and the proud tremble at its warnings, but to the wounded and penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad by it, and the fire on the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn page. It has woven itself into our dearest dreams; so that love, friendship, sympathy, devotion, memory, and hope put on the beautiful garments of its treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh.

No man is poor or desolate who has this treasure for his own. When the landscape darkens and the trembling pilgrim comes to the valley of the shadow, he is not afraid to enter; he takes the rod and the staff of Scripture in his hand, he says to his friend and comrade: "Good-by, we shall meet again"; and, comforted by that support, he goes toward the lonely pass as one who walks through darkness into light.

STAKE HAS SPANISH NIGHT

The Kansas City Stake held a Spanish Night April 24, with a banquet at the Ivanhoe Temple in Kansas City. Approximately 325 people were present. Seventy Al Scherer was the master of ceremonies. Featured on the program were Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, apostle in charge, and Apostle Charles R. Hield, guest speaker. Herbert Lively, pastor of the Kansas City Central Church, directed the group singing which included hymns in Spanish. Sister Tillie Bootman taught the group the Lord's Prayer in Spanish, and Sister Bootman and the Malvern Hill Zion's League taught the group "Redeemer of Israel" in Spanish. The stake young adults decorated and set the tables; the stake women prepared the dinner; and the stake Zion's League sold tickets to the banquet. A travelogue movie was shown.

SEVENTY IN CINCINNATI

Seventy Wayne Simmons was in Cincinnati, Ohio, April 13-27, presenting cottage meeting materials during the week in the evening. He preached a series on the "Internal Evidences of the Book of Mormon" to members of the church and Spanish-speaking friends. Brother Simmons reports that the attendance at the series was good and interest seemed to be outstanding among the congregation. He talked to the church school on Sunday, and also spoke at the priesthood class. The pastor of the branch in Cincinnati is Everett L. Smith.

CENTER STAKE WOMEN MEET

Mayor Robert P. Weatherford, Jr., of Independence, Missouri, spoke to the women of the Center Stake of Zion at a preparation day meeting May 1. His subject was "Good Citizenship." In honor of Mother's Day, the stake executive committee presented a devotional pantomime in which the following participated: Mrs. Morris Jacobsen, Mrs. Russell Frazee, Mrs. Lawrence Jones, Mrs. John Darling, Mrs. Paul Kelsey, Mrs. James McEldery, Miss Patricia Andes, and Karen Graham. Mrs. W. Wallace Smith was the reader and director. Mrs. William Nichol was the soloist, and Mrs. Gail Wilson, stake women's leader, presided over the day's activities.

ATTEND INSTITUTE AT KNOBNOSTER

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, attended the spring institute of the Missouri Valley Section of the American Camping Association, held at Knobnoster, April 25-27. Carl conducted a vesper service at the camp, and was elected a vice-president of the section. Lee Hart, Center Stake youth leader, also attended the institute. Other members of the church who were present included five Graceland representatives, Mrs. Francis Bishop of the YWCA of Springfield, Missouri, and Pearl Hoskins of the Girl Scouts from Independence. Approximately 150 people attended the institute.

PRAYER SERVICE HELD

A prayer service for young people of the Center Stake was held at the Englewood church April 27. Elder Ted Scott, pastor of the branch, was in charge of the service. Chaplain Almer Sheehy of the Independence Sanitarium gave the theme talk.

The Problems of Young People

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."—Ecclesiastes 12:1.

A YOUNG GIRL, reporting the high school news in the paper of a good town not far away, had this to say of the social life of the young people there:

Ours is a nine-o'clock town, so after the movie was out there was nothing to do. The boys all went somewhere, so the girls decided to have a slumber party at Madeleine's house. Of course there wasn't much sleep, but they had a pretty good time.

The enthusiasm sounds a little tepid, doesn't it? Perhaps that situation is typical of small towns all over America. The only community building, the schoolhouse, was locked. The churches were dark. The library was closed, too.

That's only a part of the picture for the young people.

THE ONLY PLACES interested in entertaining young people at that time of night were the taverns down on the highway, where they could dance to the cheap music of a juke box, drink beer, smoke, and play pinball machines. In some places they would find slot machines, the "one-armed bandits," a rather expensive form of entertainment.

The young people could go riding if they had cars. But if they stopped and parked they might be assaulted, beaten, and robbed by criminals who watch for such opportunities.

Nine o'clock was too early to go home because they weren't sleepy. Home would probably be deserted anyway, with mother and father away on some entertainment of their own.

Who is responsible for the fact that many young people go wrong?

A YOUNG MAN visited the office recently. He is interested in books, and occasionally writes for publication. Among other things he said:

Because I am still young myself, I am interested in the problems of the young people. I wish we had something better to offer them. Really, there aren't enough decent places for them to go in the evening. Some person with money, who wants to do something for the church and its youth, could do a fine work here. We need a good year-around swimming pool. We need a skating rink where the manager doesn't sell beer or permit gambling devices. We need a place for young people to meet socially where they aren't under pressure to do things and buy things that are not good for them. I wish something could be done.

PERHAPS we have talked too much as if the young people were the problems. Perhaps we have thought that these questions are the problems of adults concerning their young people. Have we?

Let's try to take another look. What we have here are the problems of the young people.

Has it ever occurred to you that children and young people have problems too? Do you know that they worry and wonder and ask questions for which nobody seems to have any satisfactory answers?

They worry. They think things over. They encounter obstacles. They try to find their places in life. They must choose businesses or professions. They must finance their education. They must find work, a place in life, and homes to live in. Young people have more problems than older folk do, who have already solved many of their most perplexing ones.

THIS POINTS to the need of social centers in every town and community, with full-time directors of recreation. Social life is a necessary part of every young person's education and development. Under good conditions, boys and girls learn how to be responsible citizens and fine men and women when they grow up, study, learn, and play together.

Suppose that fine small town had a good social center where young people could bowl or skate. Suppose it had a snack bar where they could have light lunches, warm beverages, and nonintoxicating cold drinks. Suppose it had a reading room with the best magazines and the latest books, and places where youngsters could talk. Suppose there were meetings for them, with nature studies, special projects, and planned activities. Probably very few of those young people would go to a tavern by choice.

WHY are the churches dark so many nights of the week? Here is a field of service in which churches could help, if they could organize for it. Should a church be closed when young people have no place to go? A church that would help would increase its membership.

Why should schools be locked up in the evening with young people wandering about aimlessly or riding the highways at excessive speeds?

Here in America we have done a great deal of boasting about our technical skill, our enormous production, and our abundant harvests. Yet we neglect our greatest crop, our most valuable harvest, shamefully. This crop is our young people. We are letting it go to waste. We let the enemy sow tares in the fields. We let thieves break through and steal them. And sometimes it seems that some of us don't care.

Yet some do care, and they could be organized to save this most precious harvest of the church and the nation.

To the Women

Have you put a circle around the dates of June 1 to June 7 on your calendar to remind you of the Institute on Family Membership?

Here you will have an opportunity to refill your reservoir with ideas and helps to equip you to be of service to your family as well as to others.

The program is too good to miss and will be of special interest to you whether you are a young woman, a mother, or a worker in the local women's department. Each subject programmed applies to some phase of family life in the home or in the church. The lectures and the discussions should prove of great assistance in developing wholesome family life.

The cost is small when measured against the good that can be received. Perhaps your women's group can help share the expense of a representative who could attend if some funds were available.

Circle the dates, determine to attend, begin now to plan and save. Write the Registrar to make your reservations. I'll be seeing you there. MRS. S. S. ARNSON

To Pastors and Local Priesthood Members

While this institute is open to all ministers, parents, departmental workers, and young people, it provides an unusual opportunity for members of the local priesthood. Family life has again and again been stressed as an area of vital importance to our church endeavor and to social life in our times. Ministry to the family has been and remains the central emphasis of our priesthood education program. The opportunities of this Institute on Family Membership at Graceland constitute the next and somewhat advanced step in the training of our local priesthood.

A qualified staff will be provided. An excellent library is available. A week of intensive study, wholesome, stimulating fellowship and worship on a beautiful campus is assured.

Why not see that your congregation is well represented? Send a carload or two of workers, including a good representation of your priesthood.

The opportunity is unusual. The theme is most vital. The church awaits an effective, trained leadership. Graceland sends to you a most cordial invitation. The time is short. Write at once to the Registrar, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, enclosing a deposit of $2.00, payable to the Treasurer of the College.

In the Temple of Science

Science, the partisan of no country, but the beneficent patroness of all, has liberally opened a temple, where all may meet. She never inquires about the country or sect of those who seek admission; she never allots a higher or a lower place from exaggerated national claims, or unfounded national antipathies.

Her influence on the mind, like that of the sun on the chilled earth, has long been preparing it for higher cultivation and further improvement. The philosopher of one country should not see an enemy in the philosopher of another; he should take his seat in the temple of science, and ask not who sits beside him.

The Temple Lot Suit Again

By President Israel A. Smith

THERE HAVE BEEN A NUMBER of articles in the Herald, historical and otherwise, about the litigation known as "The Temple Lot Case." The latest was a compilation by the writer published in the Herald for July 3, 1943. It consisted of an article prepared by the late Elder Samuel A. Burgess—a man of fine legal attainment—which had appeared in the Herald for November 21, 1933. To this I appended comments on certain legal questions in answer to strictures of a Mormon attorney of Utah, who wrote quite a sizable book entitled The Reorganized Church in Court.

Present Issue

Ever since this suit, which was an action in equity, reached a conclusion in an appellate court, there has been a conflict of opinion with respect to the legal implications of the decision or opinion of the judge who tried the case in the lower court. We of the Reorganized Church have claimed the benefit of his findings of fact on which his decision was based, notwithstanding the appellate court dismissed our complaint on a technicality, while representatives of the Mormon Church and the Church of Christ (Temple Lot, often called Hedrickites) have denied our right to so claim. As the cause reached a finality in 1895, this disagreement has now become almost an ancient controversy.

Again Challenged

On the eve of adjournment of our 1952 General Conference, which was in session from March 30 to April 6, letters addressed to the First Presidency and the Council of Twelve were received from three elders of the Church of Christ,¹ in which complaint was made with respect to a statement by one of the editors of Saints' Herald in referring to the Temple Lot Case. This was followed by an attack on the integrity of the First Presidency and Council of Twelve and charged the Reorganized Church with "bare-faced fraud" in the litigation in question.

Before we had any opportunity to answer, copies were sent to other of our church officers, multigraph reproductions were circulated among the members of the church on the street and elsewhere, and on the next day this letter was publicized in the paid advertising columns of a local newspaper.

Realizing that there are many who are not acquainted with or have forgotten the facts in connection with the litigation, we have concluded that a statement should be made in the interest of the truth, showing our justification for the position we have taken and calling attention to misstatements of law and fact in the letter to which we have referred.

A Brief History

We do not believe it will be necessary to deal exhaustively with this matter. A concise statement of the history of the case and a discussion of the legal questions arising from the trial and the way it was concluded will, in our opinion, be sufficient.

On August 6, 1891, the Reorganized Church filed a complaint in equity in the Federal Circuit Court at Kansas City, Missouri, to recover possession of a certain tract of land in Independence known as the "Temple Lot." The respondents were the Church of Christ and certain persons in trustee relationship with it. Judge John F. Philips heard the case and after a lengthy trial decided the issues in favor of the Reorganized Church.

The good faith of the Reorganized Church has been challenged before by members of the Church of Christ. Testimony at the trial showed that some of their leading men charged us with being their enemies—also that they had, before this litigation, accepted money and support from the Mormon Church and were anticipating further help from that direction, which supported Judge Philips' statement in his decision that in the defense of the action the Mormon Church was "the power behind the throne."

In justification of the institution of this action, however, it should be remembered that the original tract of land—of which the Temple Lot is a part—was bought with money belonging to the original church by Edward Partridge, presiding bishop, thereby creating a "resulting trust" in favor of the original church; that the land had been bought and dedicated for church edifice purposes; and that the leaders of the Reorganized Church in the 1890's believed even as we now believe, that the Reorganized Church was and is the continuation of the original church in law and equity. We do not believe they should be charged with ulterior motives in trying to recover what they in good conscience believed was the property of the church—that is, the Reorganized Church.

Appeal

In his decision Judge Philips made numerous findings of fact in favor of the Reorganized Church, on which he premised a decree of possession as follows, to wit:

Decree will go in favor of Complainant, establishing a trust in its favor against the Respondents, removing the cloud from its title, enjoining Respondents from asserting title to the property, and awarding the possession to the Complainant.

From this decision the Church of Christ appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, Missouri.

There have been some erroneous claims by elders of the Church of Christ respecting the decision of the Court of Appeals. The syllabus of the printed decision in the Seventieth Federal Reporter (which is not the decision, but is controlled by it) is as follows, showing the decision turned on but two points, one of them being that of laches, a question outside—not within—the merits of the case. In fact, as will be seen, the case was not considered "on the merits," but turned altogether on laches, which is a technical defense:

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, September 30, 1895.)

1. Equity—Asserting Title to Land. A complainant who has only an equitable title to land cannot maintain a suit in chancery to recover possession of the land from an adverse occupant, unless such occupant holds the legal title and the complainant seeks to obtain it, or unless the adverse occupant acquired possession of the land under the alleged equitable title, or is so connected therewith that it may be asserted against him. Accordingly, held, that a complainant asserting an equitable title to land could not maintain a suit in chancery to enforce it and to recover possession from occupants who were alleged in the bill to be without any title, legal or equitable, to the land, and therefore occupied the position of being mere trespassers.

2. Same—Laches.

The R. Church of Latter-Day Saints brought suit, in 1891, against one H., trustee, and others, to assert an alleged equitable title to land occupied by the defendants, and held by them for another church. It was alleged in the bill that the person from whom both parties deduced title had, in 1839, conveyed the property in question with other lands, in trust for a church of which the complainant was successor. It appeared that this trust deed was not recorded until in 1870, and its existence was unknown until then. It was then recorded, and its existence thenceforth well known to the complainant and its predecessors, but no claim to the property was asserted until 1887, when a demand was served on the defendants by the claimant's predecessor. No suit, however, was commenced until 1891. In the meantime the widow and heirs of the original holder of the title had conveyed all the land alleged to be granted by the deed of 1839 by a deed executed and duly recorded in 1848, under which title had been made to numerous persons who had built upon and improved the property, down to the bringing of the suit in 1891, and parts of the land had been laid out and plotted as additions to a city, and maps thereof filed. The defendants and their predecessors had paid all the taxes upon the land in controversy from the year 1867, and had built a church thereon and occupied it since the year 1882. It also appeared that, some years before the commencement of the suit, the R. church had erected a building for church purposes near, but outside of, the land in controversy, which was at the time occupied and used by the church for which the defendants held it. Held, that the complainant and those whom it represented had been guilty of such laches as should bar them from relief in equity, even though it were established that the original grantor held the land charged with a trust for complainant or those whom it represented.

While, as already stated, a syllabus is not a part of the decision, it is evident that the reporter who prepared the foregoing perceived very clearly that the trust upon the land could possibly have been established in favor of the original church, had the action been timely, and that the Reorganized Church would have been recognized as the beneficiary in succession.

What Was Reversed

What was the "decree" to which Judge Thayer of the Court of Appeals referred when he closed his opinion with these words?

In accordance with the views herein expressed, the decree of the circuit court will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill of complaint.

The answer to this question is found in the statement of the case prepared by the court preceding the opinion. This statement is found on page 180 of the Seventieth Federal Reporter and begins: "This was a suit in equity," etc., and the fourth paragraph of the statement, on page 182, begins as follows: "In the Circuit Court there was a decree in favor of the complainant. 60 Fed. 937. By the terms of the decree it was adjudged among other things," etc. The closing sentence of the same paragraph is as follows: "From the foregoing decree the defendants have prosecuted an appeal to this court."

Thus we can definitely ascertain the scope and range of what Judge Thayer and his associates reversed and what the "other things" were. Here it is in its entirety:

In the circuit court there was a decree in favor of the complainant, 60 Fed. 937. By the terms of the decree in favor of the complainant, among other things: "That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints . . . is a corporation duly and regularly organized under the laws of the state of Iowa, and as such includes in its corporate capacity the whole of the membership thereof, wherever found; and that the complainant has the right to maintain this action in its corporate capacity. That the property in controversy, to-wit, lots 15 to 22, inclusive, in Woodson & Maxwell's addition to the city of Independence, in the county of Jackson, state of Missouri, is and stands charged with a trust in favor of the complainant, and that complainant is the owner of the equitable title in and to said land, the possession of which is now held by the respondents. . . . That the purported deed from three of the five heirs of Edward Partridge to James Pool was not acknowledged according to law, and the record thereof imparted no notice; and that neither said respondents nor any person through whom they claim title ever had actual or constructive possession of said property until about the month of September, 1882, and within ten years of the bringing of this suit. . . . That the said complainant is the owner of the property in controversy; and that the said respondents or either of them have any legal or equitable interest therein, and are not entitled to the possession thereof; and that complainant, as such owner, is entitled to the immediate possession thereof, free and clear of all rights, claims, interests of the respondents, or any of them. . . . That is, upon demand by complainant upon respondents, and a refusal to obey the decree or order of this court, complainant shall be entitled to a writ of assistance from the clerk of this court, upon proof made by affidavit of such demand and refusal to obey, which writ shall command the marshal of this court to eject the defendants, and each and all of them, from said land, to wit, lots 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 in Woodson & Maxwell's addition to the city of Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, and put complainant in possession thereof." From the foregoing decree the defendants have prosecuted an appeal to this court.

That portion of the foregoing within quotation marks is what the Court of Appeals said were "terms of the decree" entered by Judge Philips.

On the face of the record, then, we shall briefly state the "terms of the decree" which were adjudged and which were reversed by this opinion and decision. We have the right to assume that the "other things" in Judge Philips' decision, not specifically mentioned by Judge Thayer, could not be and were not affected by the final decision of reversal.

Here are the "terms of the decree" which were reversed, briefly epitomized:

1. That the Reorganized Church was an Iowa corporation and had right to maintain the action in corporate capacity.

2. That the property in question was charged with a trust in favor of the Reorganized Church.

3. That the purported deed from Partridge to Pool was not acknowledged according to law, therefore the record thereof imparted no notice.

4. That the Complainant was the owner of the property in question.

5. That absolute title to said property was vested in the Complainant, and the Complainant was entitled to immediate possession, etc.

6. That the Complainant was entitled to a writ of assistance, to eject defendants, etc.

Findings of Fact

As we have already stated, we take the position that other facts found to be true by Judge Philips should be considered on the same basis as if the case had been considered on the merits; the law with respect to this question is well stated in Corpus Juris, which I cited and quoted in my treatment of Mr. Reimann's criticisms on page 23 of the Saints' Herald of July 3, 1943, as follows:

It is very generally held that the findings of fact of the chancellor will not be disturbed when sustained by the evidence although the reviewing court might have drawn a different conclusion from the facts, where it appears that substantial justice has been done, or unless the decree or findings are manifestly erroneous or against the clear preponderance of the evidence, or unless contrary to the evidence. The rule as laid down in a large number of decisions that the appellate court will not disturb the findings of the chancellor when they are based on conflicting evidence, if there is sufficient evidence in support of the findings, unless it is clearly wrong, or unless the findings are clearly against the weight of the evidence.

In support of this, Corpus Juris on "Appeal and Error" cites decisions from courts of thirty States and from Federal Court decisions.

Here are additional and later statements of the law respecting findings of fact on appeal:

Fact findings of the trial court based on substantially conflicting oral evidence, and not unwarranted as a matter of law, are accorded particularly great weight and are almost universally regarded as binding on the appellate court.—Corpus Juris Secundum, Volume 5, Section 1,657, page 722.

In accordance with these rules, findings made under such circumstances are almost universally given the effect of a jury verdict, or regarded as binding and conclusive on the appellate court and not to be disturbed.—Idem, page 723.

It is the rule that, where the trial court has heard conflicting evidence and considered and determined the weight thereof, the appellate court will not re-examine the question or go beyond the conclusions thus reached, or substitute its conclusions on the facts for those of the lower court, but will resolve any conflict in favor of the judgment, and give to the findings of the trial judge the greatest or utmost weight.—Idem, page 739.

The weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses . . . are matters with which the appellate court will ordinarily not concern itself, because the trial court is in much better position to pass on them.—Idem, page 739.

Under each of these statements numerous Federal and scores of State cases are cited.

Thus we have the assurance that had the Court of Appeals decided this suit on the merits—which was not done—his findings of fact would undoubtedly have been controlling and his decision would have been sustained so far as and on the basis of the facts found by him.

Therefore, for the reasons stated, when one of our representatives characterizes Judge Philips' decision as a "victory," he is entirely within his rights. I personally shall continue to so feel, as all claims to the contrary fall flat in the light of the decisions of the courts.

Pertinent Issue

It is significant that the Court of Appeals in this equity proceeding made the following comment:

But in the suit at bar the respective parties assert different legal titles held by different persons upon different trusts, or for the use of different religious sects or congregations.

The most important question presented by the record would seem to be whether the legal title now said to be held by the heirs of George H. Blakeslee or by E. L. Kelley, his successor in office, for the use and benefit of the Reorganized Church, is superior to the legal title said to be held by Richard Hill in trust for the Church of Christ at Independence, Mo.; and that is a question which should be determined by a court of law. Moreover, it would seem that the settlement of that question will, at the same time, determine upon what trust, if any, the property in controversy is now held.

Does this sound as if the Court of Appeals believed all the issues would be settled by dismissing the case on the ground of laches?

Fraud Imputed

At this juncture, since the appellate court set out what the real issues between the two organizations were, as they viewed it, a contest between alleged legal titles, it may be well to note briefly the statement by Elder Clarence L. Wheaton and others in which they refer to the "alleged Cowdery deed" as "a barefaced fraud," which imputes a knowledge of the fraud on the part of the Reorganized Church, a gratuitous insult to the leaders of the

Fifty Years of Growth in Australia

EDITOR'S NOTE: While the people of Australia were celebrating the fiftieth year of their existence as a federation, the Balmain Saints in New South Wales decided to dramatize their own history. On Sunday, August 12, the following historical script was presented. The author took the part of the historian.

By W. J. Haworth

HISTORIAN: This is the year of jubilee in Australia. Fifty years ago our first federal parliament was opened by the Duke of York, representing the British Crown. The story has been told in newspaper, on the radio, and in the re-enactment of many historical events in pageantry. We have heard how the challenge to nationhood of fifty years ago has been met through the years. It is the story of a young giant's achievement and steady growth—a story of which every Australian may feel justly proud.

Other churches have celebrated their share in the Commonwealth Jubilee, and we are met this afternoon to recount our tasks, trials, and achievements during this period. But first permit us to present a little prologue which will explain the very genesis of the Balmain Branch. Those in the choir seats are the children and grandchildren of certain persons who met with the Saints of the Tuncurry Branch about 1889. They are engaged in a social service. As they sing, let us sing with them.

APOSTLE T. W. SMITH (A. J. Corbett) presiding with others at table: Let us sing hymn number 414, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," after which Brother Loving will lead us in prayer.

ELDER C. A. LOVING (Alvin Peisker) leads in prayer.

ELDER JOHN WRIGHT (Leslie Dalziel) reads I Thessalonians 5:14-21.

HISTORIAN: And so the meeting proceeded until, in the portion allotted to all, Sister T. W. Smith arose and spoke to Elder Alexander Seaberg and his wife, delivering spiritual direction to them. As the little band of Saints listened, they knew it was the word of God, for their hearts burned within them.

SISTER T. W. SMITH (Flora Haworth): My servant, Alexander Seaberg, and his wife, Margaret, are directed to leave their pleasant home in this coastal village and go to the suburb of Balmain in the city of Sydney. There my servant will find employment, will meet people of like faith, and will firmly plant my work. Yea, from this place a mighty work will go forth and the branch that will be established will blossom and flourish as the rose. Many hundreds of people will be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Yea, furthermore, other branches will be planted from the Balmain Branch, until many thousands will hear the truth through the work that will be set up according to my direction to you, my servant and handmaiden. There will be trials; difficulties will beset you on every hand; yea, you will be sorely pressed and even tempted to look back; but be faithful and obedient, and great will be your reward and your share in the establishment of my work in this country.

(ORGANIST plays chorus of number 414.)

HISTORIAN: The Seabergs recognized the voice of God and were obedient. The Flood family also willingly went to Sydney. Unfortunately, a great maritime strike made things very difficult. Work, and consequently food, became scarce. The Seabergs secured a home on Short Street, Balmain, and Sister Seaberg immediately started a Sunday school going with a home class.

The contingent from Tuncurry soon joined with eight of the remaining members of the defunct Sydney Branch, organized in 1875 by Seventy C. W. Wandell. In due course, after some street preaching by Seventies J. W. Wight and G. R. Wells, the Saints came together on January 22, 1893, for a special purpose. Let us briefly look in on them. We see their descendants and some of them in person, participating in the final features of a splendid Communion service. Elders Wight (Paul H. Henricks) and Wells (Les Dalziel) are presiding.

ALEXANDER SEABERG (J. V. Seaberg): Mr. Chairman, I move that we be formed into the Balmain Branch of the church.

RICHARD ELLIS (Alvin Peisker): Mr. Chairman, I second the motion.

J. W. WIGHT (Paul H. Henricks): You all seem to be of one mind. There have been no adverse remarks, and there is no amendment. Those who favor the motion that the Saints present be formed into the Balmain Branch, please show the right hand. . . . The vote being unanimous, it is so ordered.

HISTORIAN (Read from here on by Flora Haworth): Elder Richard Ellis was chosen as president, the title then used to designate the office now known as pastor. Sister Minnie Blom was chosen as secretary. She is the sole surviving official elected that day. She is now Mrs. Joseph Parkes, and her children and grandchildren are with us. One other surviving member, Sister Eleanor Peek, is also here today.

In time, the branch looked for more commodious quarters, and meetings were held in the Masonic Hall, Darling Street, Rozelle, and later in Hampden Hall, Beattie Street, Balmain. About 1896 the present church building was commenced. It was then a small edifice forty feet long by twenty-four feet wide, with a small porch in front. Elder John Kaler, the resident missionary, had built a small four-room cottage at the rear. The font, in which so many of our early members were baptized, was at the back of the building. The Saints greatly rejoiced in the small building, for it was their very own, and in it some of their richest spiritual joys were experienced.

They had gathered to the fold local recruits—the Smith, Holden, Henricks, Parkes, Ferrett, Baggs, Fordham, Swain, Elliott, Blackmore, Parton, White, Haworth, Corbett, Bennett, Kidd, McKinley, Dohrn, McLaughlin, and Dickinson families, as well as others. At the close of 1900 the branch membership was 154. Five members had died, so that the actual added number who had been on the records in the seven years to the end of 1900 was 126, or an increase of eighteen a year on the average.

Elder G. R. Wells and family, who had been instrumental in much of the pioneer missionary work, left for America for a short period on February 6. On January 1 of that year, in the small church here, the Lord spoke through Seventy John Kaler. The full text of the message was published in the second Historical Brochure, December 13, 1942. This message gave wonderful promises of success in our endeavors, but it also challenged us to greater humility and diligence. History will record our response to that challenge; but our recognition of the challenge and the Lord's part in fulfilling his promises will be sketched this afternoon.

We may fittingly close the prologue by singing hymn number 395, "Yes, we trust the day is breaking, joyful times are near at hand."

A. S. FRATER: It falls to my lot, as the seventh pastor of the branch, to greet you on this home-coming Sunday. My predecessors, all good, noble servants of the Lord, have carried the administrative burden of the branch for forty-nine of the fifty years of this jubilee. Enlarged photographs of them adorn the walls of our church hall, setting forth the period occupied by each. Their lives were dear to the Saints, and their work precious in the eyes of the Lord. Two of them have passed to a higher sphere of activity, and one has been ordained a patriarch. The remaining three are full of years and replete with divine approval of work well done. As I have received the torch of truth from the hands of these men, I shall pass it on to other hands someday. In the meantime, with the blessing of God and the assistance of my associates in the priesthood and the confidence of the members, I shall do my best to magnify my calling.

The total membership of the branch now is 338. Considering the fact that much of the development in three other branches came from the removal of many of our members to the suburbs where these branches are located, together with a large number of deaths through the years, it is evident that the Lord has kept his promise to bless our efforts as we have responded to the call for more humility and diligence. We have forty-seven members of the priesthood.

At the beginning of 1901 the branch membership was 154. The amount paid the bishop that year was 48.18.6 pounds. In 1950-51, with a membership of 338, the total of tithes paid was 950 pounds.

On May 6, 1908, letters of removal were granted by the branch to twenty of its members who, by petition, desired the organization of a branch at Leichhardt. After intensive tracting, street preaching, and tent missions in various parts of Leichhardt, thirteen converts had been baptized. Accordingly, on May 24, in the Dispensary Hall, Petersham, Leichhardt Branch was organized by Elder W. J. Haworth, acting missionary in charge, assisted by the district president. I shall call upon the pastor to tell you of the growth and development of that branch.

W. F. JOHNSON: I am happy to represent Leichhardt Branch as its pastor. A number of good men have acted in this capacity before me, and as a result of the efforts they and their ministerial associates have made, the work has been built up in our branch. As you have heard, the branch was organized in a hall in Petersham, but it is well to remember that that hall was just on the other side of Parramatta Road from Leichhardt. The missionaries and their local associates met on Friday nights on that road and for an indoor meeting place took the Dispensary Hall. But the pioneer spirit could not rest content in a hired hall. A little over a year after the branch organization, the church on Macauley Street was erected and opened for services.

We have a commodious church, a social hall, and a spacious lawn at the rear of the buildings. Services of church school, Zion's League, women's department, and Wattle Club are regularly conducted, and we have a fine corps of workers in addition to nineteen members of the priesthood. Since the organization, our numbers have been increased by the blessing of God from approximately 30 to 160; and while we face the problem of our younger members marrying and moving to the outer suburbs, the good work is still going on, and we are gradually gaining members.

A. S. FRATER: It is pleasing to remember that Leichhardt Branch gave to the General Church a member of the Presiding Bishopric, Bishop Walter N. Johnson. Leichhardt is one of the "other branches" which the Lord said, through Sister Helen Smith at Tuncurry in 1889, should be planted from the Balmain Branch. But the story is not yet half told. On February 1, 1928, Guildford Branch was organized by the mission president, Elder W. J. Haworth. It, too, has prospered, but of its growth and development, I will ask Elder Norman Smith to tell you. He is the grandson of the late Elder J. W. Smith, one of the pioneers of the Balmain Branch.

NORMAN SMITH: I am glad that I represent one of the "other branches" raised up by the Lord from Balmain Branch. Other branches have helped; fine missionaries have sown the seed; others have baptized quite a number; but it is God who has given the increase. Guildford Branch has forty-nine members who meet in a hall. They have land for a church building and plans are in hand for the erection of it. Under the blessing of God they hope to be meeting in it soon. There is a fine church school under the direction of Elder Hudson Grundy, a live women's department under the leadership of Sister Dorothy Davis, and a Zion's League which holds regular meetings and outings. This has been a source of development for the younger members of the branch. Sister Jean Aiken is youth leader, and her contribution is resulting in healthy activity among the young members. Guildford has a fine body of workers led by nine members of the priesthood.

A. S. FRATER: So we see the unfolding of the Lord's plan among us. According to the faithfulness and diligence of his servants, his work has prospered and other branches have been raised up. We shall now hear from Elder C. Broadhead, pastor of Campsie Branch.

C. BROADHEAD: As pastor of Campsie Branch, I followed Elder R. E. McLaughlin, who, after eleven years of the leadership, resigned to give more attention to the task of presiding over the Southern New South Wales District, of which the Sydney area is a portion.

While he is a product of Balmain Branch and the son of one of its pioneers, I am a product of Leichhardt Branch. Still, we both accept the one faith—"the faith once for all delivered to the Saints." Our branch has seventy-two members, and twelve ordained men form the spearhead of an able and willing corps of workers.

A. S. FRATER: You have doubtless added up the membership totals of the branches in the Sydney area as the brethren have stated them—619 in all—and have learned that the aggregate number of the priesthood is eighty-seven. But, as Brother Broadhead has stated, these are but the spearhead of the force that God is assembling among us for the accomplishment of his work. As we contemplate it, we are wont to exclaim, in the word of the Prophet Joseph: "Courage, brethren, and on, on to the victory. Let your hearts rejoice, and be exceeding glad."

I deem it fitting at this juncture that we sing number 205, "God Is Marshaling His Army."

HISTORIAN: We must not forget to call to mind the assistance of the missionaries in the work that has been outlined. General Church representatives who have contributed to the happy results we have outlined include Apostles T. W. Smith, J. W. Wight, G. T. Griffiths, P. M. Hanson, C. A. Butterworth, J. W. Rushton, M. A. McConley, C. F. Ellis, G. G. Lewis, C. G. Mesley, and R. E. Davey; Seventies C. W. Wandell, G. Rodger, J. W. Gillen, G. R. Wells, J. Kaler, W. J. Haworth, J. W. Davis, E. F. Robertson, A. V. Robinson, J. C. Cornish, and F. Potter. Patriarchs A. H. Smith, F. G. Pitt, J. T. Gresty, J. H. N. Jones, John Jones, J. W. Barkus, C. A. Dickinson, W. Dyke, and W. J. Swain. Of the First Presidency, A. H. Smith, J. F. Garver, and I. A. Smith have visited us; and of the bishops, W. N. Johnson and M. H. Siegfried; of the high priests, C. Ed. Miller, A. J. Corbett, John Blackmore, Wm. Patterson, G. W. Stewart, and G. H. Parker. In addition to these, work of an excellent character has been done by local high priests, elders, and other priesthood members.

Besides the results of the work done by missionaries and local ministers in the branches, we may look further afield. At Port Kembla there is a branch of forty members, with five members of the priesthood. The original members of this group came from the Nambucca River and adjacent districts. To their assistance went Elders Corbett, Haworth, Vaughan, Robert McLaughlin, and G. W. Stewart in the early days; later they were ministered to by Elders Potter, J. V. Seaberg, and other local elders. Now the branch is presided over by Elder Amos W. Mensell, a fourth generation Saint from the Nambucca River.

R. E. MCLAUGHLIN: The missionaries, Elders Haworth, Vaughan, Gresty, Corbett, and local officers including Elders W. H. Ganmidge, W. Whitby, J. V. Seaberg, D. B. Parkes, H. Thompson, and others made some efforts to plant the work at Cattai, Maroota, Leura, Hazelbrook and Lithgow. It still continues at the nearest of these points. Baptisms at Cattai-Maroota were mainly by Elders Vaughan and Whitby. Elders Gresty and Haworth baptized a number at Leura and Hazelbrook. Elder Haworth also baptized about a dozen persons at Lithgow in the Marangaroo River during a July sleet storm. Unfortunately the movement of people has kept the attendance of meetings in these districts rather small. Still, the church has benefited in other places because of the losses in the near west. We shall continue our efforts to serve the Saints in these parts, always hoping for results.

QUARTET sings "Earnest Workers for the Master" (Zion's Praises, number 99).

THOMAS VORIAS: My grandfather, John Holden, was certainly an earnest worker for the Master. He loved nothing better than to tell the gospel story. He did not wait for opportunities to come to him but went about creating them. So, after he went to live at Orange, it was not long before he got to work talking about the truth to all who would listen. He introduced two men to Elder Haworth. This resulted in the baptism of Brethren Colin Hobden of Geurie and Charles Law of Armatree. This opened the door for preaching farther west and so a great deal of work was done by Elder Haworth in those two centers. At Geurie he baptized a dozen people. As these centers were in the Northern New South Wales District, he took Elder G. H. Parker, district president, with him for a fortnight's mission. During that period Colin Hobden was ordained a priest and, I understand, served well. Sister Hobden helped with a Sunday school. Unfortunately for the continuation of this work in a promising district, many of the new members moved away from Geurie. I am not informed of the state of affairs of the church there now. My people some time ago moved from Orange and for many years have been engaged in business at Cowra, while I am attending Balmain Branch, of which my great-grandfather was one of the pioneers. I am happy that he found the gospel so many years ago, and that, partly through his teaching, it has been passed on to me.

W. J. SWAIN: It is my privilege to present some of the remembrance services featured by the branch. The first was a memorial tablet erected in the Old Balmain Cemetery, Leichhardt, to the memory of our pioneer missionary Seventy C. W. Wandell on December 5, 1902, in an impressive ceremony conducted by Elder Wells. The monument was financed by the Daughters of Zion, forerunner of our present women's department. In 1941, the tablet was removed from the Leichhardt site, which has since become a public park, to the grounds of the church here.

We understand that a suitable marker has been placed to indicate the last resting place of his fellow-worker, Glaud Rodger, in Lamoni, Iowa.

Many of our local and general priesthood have fallen in this jubilee period. It would take too long to mention them individually. Many of our members have gone to the higher sphere—some, in seeking their country's welfare in two world wars; the majority in just plain living and loving—the normal lives of good Saints.

We have not always waited for some of our workers to die before remembering them. There is a plate on the front of the organ which calls to mind the work of Brother William C. Henricks, so long a dependable organist and priest in this congregation—one who never failed to let shine the gospel light vouchsafed to him. Under the electric clock there is another plate, placing on record our appreciation of Elder and Sister W. J. Haworth and Elder and Sister A. J. Corbett. This single tablet, suitably inscribed, sets forth another act of the collective branch memory.

On this side of immortal life we shall not be able to retain our membership complete, without the breaks that must come because we are mortal beings. We believe that all who have left us have made a good record, and that has brought solace to the loved ones left behind. May God send the comfort of his Holy Spirit to all who mourn. I think it would be a fitting gesture if all would arise in remembrance of some loved one, for the following prayer-poem:

Lord, comfort the mourners in their need,
Give strength to those in sorrow,
Be very near indeed
To those whose hearts are heavy
With the sense of bitter loss;
Heal those who're broken,
Faith renew, help them to bear their cross.
Teach us to know that those who're gone
From this mad world of strife
Have only passed to their reward—
A new and richer life.
Hear us, we pray, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

ORGAN: Chorus only, number 241, Lord, Lift Me Up."

A. S. FRATER: Before we have brought to our attention the work of the departments of the branch, let us unite in singing number 390, "Send Forth the Sowers."

R. A. SMITH: The church school is a most important factor in the work and development of Balmain Branch. It has functioned successfully during the entire jubilee period. A number of other church school directors have supervised its work in that period, and I am happy to have been afforded the privilege of building upon the fine foundation laid by the superintendents before me. Our school caters to all—from the cradle to the grave. We have the nursery, kindergarten, primary, junior, junior high, young people, and adult divisions. There is certainly no retiring age for our scholars; there are classes suitable for all. It is our aim to instruct both old and young in the ways of the Lord, but we also seek to foster the devotional spirit. There is a weekly worship service for all, and a junior devotional period. In these ways we seek to give full religious instruction, and God has blessed our efforts.

We have always felt the need for greater space for our classes. True, facilities have been expanded over the years, but it is not any boast for me to declare that our church school has far outgrown the space available. We are therefore wholeheartedly behind the project to build a new church at Drummoine, where we shall have more room and where adequate provision will be made for the requirements of the church school. To this end we have worked and saved, and not the least effort has been put forward by the children themselves, so eager are they for it. It will not be our fault if the building is not soon available for church school and general church services.

ORGAN fades out with verse of 258, "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly."

R. HARRISON: During the past fifty years the needs of young people have been catered to variously by Zion's Religio-Literary Society, Mutual Improvement Society, Department of Recreation and Expression, "K.K." or "Culture Club," and Zion's League. Each of these names has been used to designate the society that has cared for the young people of the time, and each seems to have done a good job through the years. In these circles our missionary and local priesthood members have been nurtured and spiritually educated. It is good for us to think of John Blackmore, William Patterson, A. J. Corbett, W. J. Vaughan, C. A. Dickinson, W. J. Swain, F. Potter, and other leaders, past and present, and to remember that those men got their grounding in our church school and young people's societies. Sister Flora Delofski, through a mission-wide oratorical contest, won a trip to General Conference in 1930 and a place at Graceland College, which she, unable to accept, made available to Walter N. Johnson. We all know the contribution that Walter is making to the General Church as a member of the Presiding Bishopric. Brother Colin Ferrett went to Graceland also at that time. More recently, Don Swain, one of our young people, went to Graceland in 1945 and is still in the States continuing his studies. Valda Poole and Les Gardner are there now, and our present Zion's League leader, Barry Fuller, will be leaving us to go to Graceland early in the new year.

The youth of the branch are keenly interested in the proposed new church at Drummoyne, where we hope to have more room for the various exercises of the branch. To that end we have also bent much of our energies and will continue to do so.

We would like you to share with the young people in singing the hymn that expresses so well the spirit of youth, Saints' Hymnal number 1, "One Day When Fell the Spirit's Whisper."

SISTER J. ANDERSON: The women's department has functioned within the branch throughout the entire jubilee period under one name or another. It has always been keenly interested in the work of the church, and has been willing to share in the many tasks comprising that work. The women have always been to the fore in providing funds for the enlargements of the church. This has been done by direct giving, sales work, bazaars, dinners, et cetera. In these ways God has blessed our efforts, and we have rejoiced as the church has been enlarged and extended. Our greatest joys, however, have been the spiritual and numerical growth of the branch. Early in the jubilee period, we provided the tablet which is now at the rear of the kindergarten room, to mark the last resting place of our pioneer missionary C. W. Wandell. Our records show that we have, on several occasions, provided utensils and cloths for the Communion table. And now we are joining wholeheartedly in the project of building a new and more commodious church at Drummoyne.

Quite a number of leaders preceded me, many of whom have passed to their reward and are lovingly remembered by us. There have been societies of women running in conjunction with our department—the Sunshine League under Sister Gresty and others, and the present LaDaSa Club, each of which has done excellent work. We have had the valuable assistance of the wives of several members of the apostolic quorum, including Sisters Sadie Hanson, Fern McConley, Edith Lewis, Blanche Mesley, and Mabel Davey. These have brought to us firsthand knowledge of the women's work in Zion, and we have greatly appreciated this link. Valuable assistance was also given by Sisters Rosa Pitt, Inez Davis, and Lily Barmore, helpmates of other American missionaries. We look forward to continuing, with the blessing of God, such work as falls to the lot of the women of the branch, and among other things we look forward with earnest hope to the building of our new spiritual home in Drummoyne.

T. PARTON: Balmain Branch has always thoroughly realized the value of music in the worship of the Almighty. Our young men and maidens have earnestly heeded the admonition given in revelation to "cultivate the gift of music and of song." The older members have not forgot the gladness of their youth in this respect.

We have always had a good choir and quite a number of fine directors of music. Among these we may mention Joseph Parkes, J. T. Gresty, C. A. Thearle, G. T. Rawson, Ross Parkes, Linda Ferrett, W. Davis, and Fred Rawson. As organizers we have had the services of Sister Fordham, William C. Henricks, Ivy Dickinson, Jennie Parkes, Eleanor Ferrett, W. H. Gresty, W. Davis, Linda Ferrett, Joan Flood, Fred and John Rawson, Ken Hardwick, and Marjorie Davies. Two of our directors have made outstanding contributions to the composition of the music sung in the branch—Elders Parkes and Gresty, the latter giving to the church the excellent oratorio "The Course of Time," conducted twice before the General Conference of 1930. There are also several hymns in the Saints' Hymnal composed by members of the Gresty family. Some of the music of this historical Sunday will be recognized as compositions of either Elder Parkes or Patriarch Gresty. Let us unite in singing one of them now, number 130, "God Is Love! The Earth Proclaims It."

HISTORIAN: Your historian cannot remember when Balmain Branch has not had a building fund. First it was to build the original small church. On that erection there was much labor donated by missionaries Butterworth, Kaler, and Wells, directed by the branch president, Elder R. Ellis, and assisted by a number of the local brethren. By 1905 the urge to take the gospel farther afield caused the branch to buy a tent. This served for several local missions, but finally was blown to pieces in an October wind storm. The mission then entered the tent field and Balmain Branch went back to having a building fund for the enlargement of the church.

Fifteen feet was the extent of the first addition. The site occupied by the church office was acquired, and then a move was made for a further enlargement. This necessitated another building fund. In the meantime the branch had bought, on the installment plan, a block of land with eighty feet frontage to Balmain Road, near Vallan Park gates. The sale of this produced a profit of £300. The women's department contributed about £275, and the members the remainder by means of the building fund. The present pews, which had served in another church for seventy-five years, were purchased, reconditioned, and put into place in the church under the direction of Brother William C. Henricks. Later another building fund effort gave to us the present vestibule and the church school hall. We fell heir to the present kindergarten about 1933.

But still the urge to expand was with us. Our brethren at Leichhardt have also expanded and provided themselves with a school and social hall. Guildford and Campsie Branches have building funds and are preparing and formulating plans for building. There is a revolving building fund controlled by the district to which we also contribute our quota.

Our main efforts, however, center around plans to build on a large section of land facing Victoria Road, Drummoyne. There we hope to erect soon a building to architectural plans already being considered. Our fund is increased by about £1,000 per annum and, at the present time, through ceaseless and combined efforts, we have in the fund, land and buildings, cash and liquid assets totaling more than £5,000.

Our efforts have been blessed by the Lord, because he knows that our plans are for the extension of his kingdom through the preaching of the gospel in a new and thriving locality, as well as to provide better facilities for the spiritual growth and development in new and commodious quarters.

We have sown the seed in weakness during this jubilee period, and the Lord has blessed our efforts. Doubtless we could have been more diligent and received greater blessings. Be that as it may, the Lord has been with us according to our faithfulness and response to his calling. This should encourage us to greater humility, faithfulness, and diligence in our future efforts to extend his cause.

"Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." Shall we not continue to be co-workers together with him?

Getting More for Your Money

Wherefore spend ye money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not?—Isaiah 55: 2.

OF A SURETY the prophet was speaking in spiritual terms. But he would not have used the simile if the words were not just as true when applied to the things that we consider temporalities. The apostle Paul tells us, "The love of money is the root of all evil" (I Timothy 6: 10). And so it is—the root even of the "Evils and designs that do and will exist in the hearts of men in the last days" against which God has warned us.

It is obvious to all that it is the love of money that prompts the advertisement and sale of tobacco, strong drinks, and "hot drinks." Already we have seen how the love of money prompts unwarranted claims for some cooking utensils and false propaganda against others. Yogurt, too, has no other valid reason for being urged upon the American public. With some other recommendations, however, their root in the love of money is perhaps less obvious. Let's examine some of them.

Some are telling us that instead of milk we should use juices and "nut milk." I have at hand the September, 1949, issue of Nature's Path, which someone sent to me. On page seven there is an article called "Why Fruit Breakfasts Are Best." Throughout the article the use of milk for breakfast is discouraged—in spite of the fact that there is ample scientific evidence that without it almost all, young and old alike, fail to get the recommended amount of calcium.

On page thirty-five of the same magazine there is a picture of a woman who very obviously is suffering. The captions suggest that she has upset nerves, poor teeth, brittle nails, premature aging, low backache, leg cramps. Then it questions, "Can these troubles be caused by a calcium deficiency?" There follows the recommendation that we should buy Kal for "calcium at its best" from our health food store to supplement a diet that must be low in calcium.

There are also, of course, several lengthy advertisements and a long article on yogurt. The article, incidentally, contains many untruths, inaccuracies, and false references to the Bible. If one follows the recommendation to use a diet low in milk, and hence low in calcium, how can he be other than calcium deficient? So it becomes necessary to flock to the "health" food stores to buy calcium pills to replace the milk that should have been used. And once there, one may purchase yogurt, at two to four times the cost of regular milk, or yogurt culture advertised at $1.80 to $2.00 for a month's supply. Which is the more natural way to get calcium, from milk or from pills? How does nature provide us with milk, curdled and fermented by bacteria, or fluid, sweet, and delightful to the taste? How can those who sponsor such recommendations pay lip service to nature's way?

BUT THE RECOMMENDATION goes further. Juices or "nut milk" are to take the place of milk in our diet. How does one obtain fruit and vegetable juices and "nut milk"? Why, only with a juicer, shredder, extractor, osterizer, or other piece of special equipment. These gadgets may, of course, be purchased from "your health food store" or directly from the advertisers listed in the "health" magazine. The issue of Nature's Path which I happen to have at hand has at least seven such pieces of equipment advertised at prices that range from $34.95 to $187.50. Add to those prices the high cost of the huge quantities of fruits and vegetables that are recommended and it is easy to see that persons who desire to be good stewards cannot afford to follow this fad.

Nor is the cost the most important difficulty involved. Let's return to our consideration of the calcium supplied to replace that not taken in milk. To obtain the amount of calcium we would get from one quart of milk we would have to consume 3 pounds of shelled walnuts, pecans, or peanuts, 1 pound of almonds, 5½ cups of broccoli, 25 cups of string beans, 146 medium bananas, 144 apples, 23 medium oranges, 1½ pounds of parsley or water cress (approximately seven cups chopped), 210 leaves of lettuce, 5 pounds of celery, or 7 pounds of carrots. In addition to calcium, milk provides large quantities of other nutrients among which is riboflavin, the B vitamin in which the American diet is most apt to be deficient. The nuts, fruits, and vegetables are, in general, like the average American diet, low in this vitamin.

Nor do the difficulties stop with quantity only. Nuts are extremely high in fat and therefore high in caloric value. To consume one pound of almonds daily, with no other food whatsoever, would start the moderately active woman well on her way to obesity in a few weeks if she did not become ill from the diet. The calories contained in 3 pounds of walnuts, pecans, or peanuts a day, if he could take them, would put weight on the hardest working lumberjack at the rate of about one-half pound a day.

Even the sodium chloride (salt) so loudly proclaimed as an attribute of vegetable juices, especially celery juice, can be a detriment as well as a help. Surely the body needs sodium. But sodium is well distributed in almost all of our foods. Meats are about 1 per cent salt. All vegetables contain salt. And we constantly add sodium to our food in the form of table salt. Most of our bodies use it well, but many persons are finding it necessary to restrict their sodium intake to maintain their health. As for the sodium content of celery, either oysters or white bread has three times as much sodium weight for weight as celery has!

Organic iodine is claimed for many vegetable juices. Actually vegetable juices, including water cress, have organic iodine only if the soil and water in which they are grown have iodine in them. Iodine is not found in the soil and water of a large portion of the United States in quantities that provide for the body's need. To be safe, we should use the inexpensive and time-proved iodized salt from our grocer's shelf.

SIMILARLY the love of money is surely behind such false accusations as Dentist Royal Lee directs at commercially ground whole wheat. In Prevention magazine for September, 1950, Lee charges that there has been a 400 per cent increase in the bleach chemical used "to keep bugs out of commercial 'whole' [Lee's quotes] wheat flour." As a result, he states, whereas 54 per cent of the animals feed on white bread in some experiment survived, none that were fed on commercial "whole" wheat bread lived. Furthermore, he charges, whole-wheat flour is almost as perishable as milk, and if bleach preservatives were not used, it would have to be distributed from cold storage warehouses.

Obviously the last statement is false. You need only visit your local miller, write to Harold Smith, the Nauvoo Miller, or talk to an old-timer who remembers the day when he took his own wheat to the mill to be ground into flour, to get the truth. Personally I have kept Enright's whole-wheat flour and whole-wheat flour ground by The Nauvoo Miller in a cool place over a period of several months with little or no detectable change in odor or flavor when checked with a fresh shipment of flour.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Neither Enright nor Smith bleaches his product or uses cold storage warehouses, except as nature provides them in winter. Actual studies show that the loss of vitamin E due to age is practically nil. The loss of B vitamins in a sixty-day period can hardly be measured even with the very accurate methods available in the modern laboratory. In fact, the loss in a year of storage is so slight as to be inconsequential.

Now let us examine the implication that commercial whole-wheat flour is not whole wheat. In mills which produce white flour as their principal product, the roller mill is generally used. If whole-wheat flour is desired, it is more convenient to follow the regular procedure than to reset all the machinery. Therefore the wheat is separated into its component parts and then reassembled for packaging. In this process there is a vague possibility that the reassembled proportions might vary slightly from the original. There are, however, standardized portions of every component of the wheat berry reassembled to make the final product worthy of the name "whole wheat."

There are other companies that have 100 per cent whole-wheat products as their major business. Often they crush the wheat berry with burrs of stone or metals. In the preparation of their product there is no separation, and hence no possibility of variation from the original proportions of the wheat berry. In either case the Food and Drug Administration requires that flour labeled "whole wheat," "graham," or "entire wheat" contain all the wheat berry if it is to pass into interstate commerce. It has no jurisdiction over flour that is sold only in one state, but most states have their own laws to protect their citizens.

AS FOR THE BLEACH, that, too, is cared for by the Food and Drug Administration regulations. When the roller-mill process just described is used, the portion of the endosperm that would ordinarily be sold as white flour is sometimes bleached before it is recombined with the wheat germ, the bran, and any other parts to form whole wheat. Incidentally, the bleaching is not designed primarily to keep out the bugs. It is to get the aging effect that makes dough from the flour more easily handled. This bleaching may destroy or inactivate some of the nutrients of the flour. But one can always determine whether whole-wheat flour has been so treated, for it must be labeled "bleached." Sometimes potassium bromate is added to make the dough easy to handle and to give a larger loaf. If bromate is used, flour must be labeled, "bromated" or some such identifying term. In fact, Food and Drug regulations require that in case bleach or bromate is used, wherever the name of the flour appears so that it may be easily seen, the appropriate word, "bleached" or "bromated" must immediately precede or follow that name. (References used to obtain this information will be furnished upon request.)

What could possibly be the reason for attempting to make the public suspicious of commercial whole wheat? The one who attempts to arouse those suspicions has home grinders and electric mills for sale, and he seems to have little conscience about the way in which he obtains a market for them! To be wise in the use of your time and money in this respect, choose a 100 per cent whole-wheat flour that suits your purposes and patronize the one who prepares it. You need not prepare it at home or purchase it from a "health" food store to have a nutritious product:

ONE OF THE BIG PROBLEMS in nutrition is to decrease the use of concentrated sweets, especially in the diets of children. That problem arises not because sugars are not good foods, but because we use too much of them. Were the scriptural injunction to "be temperate in all things" applied in this case, the major portion of the problem would disappear. As it is, concentrated sweets in the form of candy, cakes—especially frosted ones—soft drinks, et cetera, crowd from the diet the foods that are needed to promote and maintain health. At the same time, the extra calories which they provide increase the need for certain B vitamins, which need in turn is not filled because foods containing B vitamins are crowded out by excessive use of sweets. There develops a vicious circle.

Sugar is almost pure calories whether it is white or raw. Raw sugar is that portion of the cane juice that first crystallizes out in the refining process. Almost all the molasses is left in the pan. If you could look at raw sugar completely as it is, you would find that it is largely white sugar (sucrose) plus a small proportion of crystals that would become brown sugar if they were further separated out, coloring matter of no particular nutritive value, and perhaps ever so small an amount of molasses. Raw sugar is not a natural sugar in the sense that it comes to us just as nature provided it with nothing removed. All the nutrients that are found in all three extractions of molasses have been taken from it before it appears on the merchant's shelf. To call it natural sugar would be equivalent to calling separated cream natural milk. As the major portion of milk nutrients that we need are still in the skim milk, so also are the major portion of the cane nutrients that we need in the molasses.

WHAT, THEN, of its reported value? Particularly let us check the iron content since that is the nutrient in which it is richest except for calories. One cup of raw sugar with approximately 770 calories provides as much iron as $\frac{1}{4}$ cup brown sugar with only 206 calories, or 1 egg with 70 calories, $\frac{2}{3}$ ounce of beef liver with 30 calories or $\frac{1}{3}$ cup cooked beet greens with only 13 calories. In our town raw sugar costs 20c a pound. Brown sugar costs 13c a pound, and white sugar costs 10c. That means that if we buy raw sugar for its iron content, we are paying 10c a pound for that nutrient. On the same basis eggs would be worth \$1.20 a dozen plus their value as a protein food; beef liver would be worth \$2.40 a pound plus its other value as a food, and beet greens worth \$1.20 a quart plus their vitamin value. With the extra 10c we would have to spend for raw sugar we could purchase a whole pound of whole-wheat flour with ten times as much iron as the pound of raw sugar contains.

Raw sugar does contain some thiamine (B1). The amount, however, is so small that it would take six pounds a day to supply the recommended daily allowance of a moderately active man. The six pounds would in turn increase the caloric intake until it would require several more pounds of sugar to supply the thiamine necessary to utilize the calories. And so begins the vicious cycle again. We would be much more nearly able to eat turnip greens, which provide one fourth more thiamine and incidentally seven times as much iron in each pound as does the raw sugar. The tenth of a pound of pork liver required to provide the amount of thiamine in a pound of raw sugar would be only half a serving. And the full pound of whole-wheat flour mentioned above would also include ten times as much thiamine as the raw sugar.

Traces of potassium, calcium, and magnesium are present in raw sugar. The use of other foods as recommended in the daily food plan also provides these trace minerals in much more economical form. Even brown sugar has the trace minerals concentrated with the iron so that $\frac{1}{4}$ pound of the brown sugar provides as much of them all as does 1 pound of the raw. And $\frac{1}{4}$ pound of brown sugar costs only $3\frac{1}{4}$ cents.

In other words, it is a much more sound nutritional practice to buy a small amount of white sugar instead of raw sugar and use the money that is saved for the purchase of vegetables, meats, milks, whole-grain cereals, and brown sugar. Honey and molasses, too, are a much better buy. Good as it is, however, even honey will not support itself in the diet, and must have ample supplies of B vitamins and other nutrients from other foods to be utilized properly. So whatever concentrated sweet you choose to use, use it moderately. "Be temperate in all things" and when it comes to food, be especially temperate in sweets.

IN ORDER to accurately judge the value of blackstrap molasses, it is first necessary to dispel some of the superstitious mysticism that has been thrown about it. First there was the superstition of unlearned plantation folk who found in the dark dregs of the sugar refinement a bitersweet potion to put alongside their parched hog's hoof tea and asafetida necklaces which were supposed to prevent or cure their many ills. Then came men like Gayelord Hauser who dignified the superstition by putting it into a book with the pretense that it was based on scientific fact. They labeled blackstrap a "miracle food" essential to healthful long life, and were so persuasive that they convinced many it was true.

Unfortunately, however, blackstrap does not merit its new-found fame. The claims that a small portion daily can "add five years of youthful life, is effective in B vitamin deficiency, menstrual and menopausal abnormalities, tiredness, heart trouble, baldness, and in treating changes due to old age" are so far from the truth and so misleading as to constitute legal false labeling when such claims are associated with the food. It has been necessary for the Food and Drug Administration to seize a shipment of blackstrap molasses accompanied by Hauser's books bearing the claims, because such false labeling constitutes a violation of the Pure Food Laws. Other claims that blackstrap can cure cancer, tuberculosis, neurosis, paralytic stroke, and insomnia have no real evidence to support them.

Nor is blackstrap a "natural food" in the sense that nature provides it to us as such. It is the by-product of sugar refining—the third extraction of the syrup after the raw sugar is removed. Its long contact with the machinery and the continued settling of the heavy particles into it causes it to be contaminated with iron and copper dust and rust from the machinery, some of which has no food value but does appear in the analysis of it. Much of its calcium comes from the limewater used in sugar refinement.

Fortunately blackstrap is, in general, a wholesome food. It is a concentrated sweet, however, and as such should be used sparingly. In blackstrap will be found salts of potassium and magnesium which are laxative in nature. Hence benefit may be derived in some cases of constipation. It also has calcium, iron, copper, phosphorus, and some of the B vitamins. These are not in colossal proportions, however.

A tablespoon of blackstrap with all its mineral contaminants provides 2.3 milligrams of iron. This is far short of the recommended 12.0 milligrams daily for adults. Blackstrap has $\frac{5}{8}$ as much iron as pork liver. Good country sorghum, with all its delicious flavor—a contrast to the disagreeable flavor of blackstrap—provides more iron measure for measure than blackstrap.

It would take 25 tablespoons, or 1 1/5 pounds, of blackstrap a day to provide a moderately active woman with her recommended allowance of thiamine (B1). Forty-four tablespoons would be required to fill her riboflavin need, and about that many would fill her niacin allowance. Her moderately active husband would require even more. Yet Gayelord Hauser says blackstrap is effective in B vitamin deficiencies. Do you see why the Food and Drug Administration was forced to consider the claims of Mr. Hauser false?

It is obvious that this product of the faddist's art is not an essential to healthful living. In fact, it is an unnecessarily unpleasant and relatively expensive way of obtaining the nutrients that it offers.

BREWER'S YEAST is an excellent food. One tablespoon will provide about two-thirds of the adult allowance of thiamine for one day, one-fourth the allowance of riboflavin and niacin, and one-tenth the allowance of iron, and half as much protein as an egg. But a good diet that includes recommended amounts of the vegetables, fruits, whole-grain cereals, eggs, meat, fish, or other protein foods, and milk will provide all the family with all it needs of these and all the rest of the nutrients needed. Brewer's yeast is a good food, but it is not needed if the advice of the modern prophet is heeded. Its general use is just another added expense for us that helps to increase the income of those who would have us believe that we cannot live healthfully without it.

Exactly the same things may be said about wheat germ that are said about brewer's yeast. The B vitamins and iron are not as concentrated in wheat germ as in brewer's yeast, but it is a good food with fairly acceptable flavor and a fairly reasonable cost at most stores. It is not needed by those who follow good eating practices.

VITAMIN CONCENTRATES also are extremely useful materials when they are needed. To use them routinely, however, even if we have been assured that they are strictly food concentrates, is a tremendous waste of money. In 1944 it was estimated that the American public was spending $250,000,000 for vitamin preparations. Only $50,000,000 of that amount were prescribed by physicians. Two things are wrong with such a procedure. First, we could have purchased a lot of food worth $200,000,000. Our real need is for more of the right foods, for vitamins do not do their work alone. They must have proteins, carbohydrates, fats, minerals, and other vitamins with which to work. Second, nobody knows all that should go into a pill to insure us against vitamin deficiencies. We are constantly learning of new ones that are important. For example, pills made some five years ago did not include the very important B12 which we now know must be had by both animals and humans for growth and health. Only a few years ago nobody knew what it was or how to include it. What other vitamins still are to be discovered, no one knows. No matter how the advertising of a particular product is worded to make us feel sure that it does have all the needed nutrients, no one can give us that assurance.

There are several preparations being sold that purport to be pure food concentrates. A one-pound can of such a product that I saw was supposed to contain the value of 600 pounds of food. Almost all of the succulent vegetables and juicy fruits are from 85 to 95 per cent water by weight. Tomatoes and celery are 94 per cent water. Parsley is 84 per cent water. Milk is 87 per cent water. To be really safe let us use the 95 per cent figure. If 95 per cent of the weight is removed as water, there must of necessity be at least 30 pounds of food left, or something besides moisture is being removed. There is no possible way to simply condense 600 pounds of food into one or even five pounds of concentrate.

ANOTHER VERSION of the food concentrate hoax is that perpetrated by companies that largely use untrained individuals to represent them in selling a product that they say is a vitamin and mineral-rich food concentrate. A month's supply of the one I have examined personally costs $20.00 for each family member (and incidentally good Reorganized Latter Day Saint sales persons were trying to convince General Church appointees that they could not afford to be without them). A medium-sized capsule held the vitamin preparation. The mineral was in tablet form. The representatives of the company were genuinely surprised when we read together the list of ingredients printed on the label in conformance with the Pure Food and Drug Law requirements. In the capsules was a filler of dried parsley, water cress, and alfalfa. The amount it contained was of necessity very small—too small for real nutritional significance. Then came the list of effective ingredients. They were all crystalline vitamins, the very same kind that can be purchased at any drugstore for about a tenth of the cost of these capsules. Then we turned to the minerals. The body of the tablets, so the label informed us, was bone meal, a very inexpensive by-product of the packing house industry commonly used in stock feed. To the bone meal were added iron and other minerals all in their chemical, not food, form.

At that time I was pregnant and traveling so that I had to eat in restaurants much of the time. My doctor thought that I should have a supplement to be sure that I received generous quantities of certain vitamins and minerals known to be especially needed during pregnancy. In the preparation that he recommended, I was getting generous amounts of the same vitamins and of the same kind of iron that were in the purported food concentrate, plus liver extract to help fill in the unknown nutrients needed. My supply cost $2.25 for one month. By buying a four and one-half months' supply at one time I could get it for less than $2.00 a month. In other words, by reading the labels and by following the advice of a competent physician, I received the benefits that safeguarded my child and me at a saving of $159.75 in nine months—$17.75 a month. That's more than the combined bills of the doctor, hospital, and druggist.

Let's imagine what would happen if all the General Church appointees were convinced that they needed "Nutralite" or a like preparation. At $20.00 a month for 150 appointees for 12 months, the cost would total $36,000.00. If they were convinced that their families also must have the supplement, the cost to the church would run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Vitamin preparations are good when they are needed. There is ample evidence, however, to show that one who has a good diet and no particular strain on the body as in pregnancy or illness is seldom vitamin deficient. A person who is not vitamin deficient does not benefit from the use of added vitamins.

OF ALL THE PRODUCTS that have recently been labeled "wonder foods," dried skim milk is the most deserving. Although no one food can bring abundant health and long life, Dr. Henry C. Sherman, who has been called the dean of living nutritionists, has shown by long experimentation that an abundance of calcium, riboflavin, and vitamin A in the diet will prolong the prime of life. They must, of course, be used in conjunction with an otherwise well-balanced diet. Dried skim milk is our cheapest good food source of two of these nutrients, calcium and riboflavin. It can be especially helpful to those on a strict budget who cannot afford the amount of milk that their family should have daily, to those on a reducing diet, or to those who have not learned to enjoy drinking the amount of milk that they need.

Dried skim milk may be purchased at almost any grocery store. Sometimes it may be purchased directly from the milk plant at much more advantageous prices if several families wish to go together and purchase a large amount. In either case, directions for its use may be obtained from the place of purchase or from the United States Department of Agriculture. Your local Extension Service should be able to assist you in getting full instructions.

Wherever you buy, dried skim milk at present prices should not cost you more than 8c a quart for reconstituted milk. This must be mentioned because there is a wide discrepancy in the prices being charged. Recently I found that a friend of mine was paying 51c a pound for it at a "health" food store at a time when I was paying less than 20c a pound for it in a plain package at the grocery store, and it was on sale in fancy packages there at 38c a pound.

A DISCUSSION of the stewardship that is ours which requires that we get our money's worth when we purchase our family's food would hardly be complete without a note about the "health" food stores to which reference has been made frequently. "Health" food stores provide a real service when they offer foods for special diets as those needed by diabetics or those needed by some who can have no salt in their foods. Sometimes they offer other desirable foods that can be found nowhere else. All too often, however, the products that they popularize and merchandise do not contribute to health in proportion to their added cost.

Recently I visited the leading "health" food store in Minneapolis. There I found "natural brown rice, 12 ounces net weight, River Brand," for 21c a package. I purchased a package. The next day I found "natural brown rice, 12 ounces net weight, River Brand" in our grocery store for 13c a package. On the shelf of the "health" food store there was Elam's stone-ground 100 per cent whole-wheat flour—5 pounds for $1.10. From our grocer's shelf Elam's stone-ground 100 per cent whole-wheat flour was selling for 5 pounds at 70c. From our grocer, too, we were purchasing Enright's stone-ground 100 per cent whole-wheat flour for from 44c to 49c for 5 pounds—less than half as much, and the flours are quite comparable. Other good 100 per cent whole-wheat flours were also available at the prices paid for Enright's. There was a whole-wheat flake cereal on the shelf. I purchased a package—12 ounces for 26c. On our grocer's shelf I found a whole-wheat cereal with identical ingredients—12 ounces for 18c. At the health store I purchased dried, pitted dates for 25c a pound. I then walked about five blocks to the market and purchased a much better quality dried, pitted dates for 22½ a pound. Patronize the "health" food stores if you choose, but do so with your eyes open.

latter church, since we do not think anybody who knew those men would believe they could be guilty of conspiracy or fraud. The father and uncle of one of the Church of Christ elders who make the above charge were at the time of the suit members of the First Presidency of the Reorganized Church and were as much parties to the proceedings as any of their associate church officers.

Not Free From Taint

Let us turn our attention to the Pool deed, under which the defendants claim title. Here is the language of Judge Thayer of the Court of Appeals:

Besides, it was alleged by the plaintiff corporation, and the circuit court so found, that James Pool was not an innocent purchaser from the Partridge heirs, and that all subsequent purchasers of the Pool title bought with notice of that fact.

This was not one of the "terms of the decree" which were reversed by the Court of Appeals, and it speaks loudly against the source of the title of the Church of Christ.

Some years ago I carefully read Judge Thayer's opinion, and now that the Church of Christ has seen fit to broadcast their letter to the public, I have again read it several times, and I can say truthfully that in the last analysis, the judgment of the Court of Appeals to the effect that we had "slept on our rights" and were out on the ground of laches came as a result of our negligence and not because of any strength of the title of the Respondents which, upon a careful reading of the record, anyone can see was considerably impeached.

Although the appellate court did not appraise the title of the defendants, Judge Philips did, in the following language:

Who are the respondents and in what do they believe? Looking at their answer in this case, and their evidence, the idea occurs that in theory they are Ecclesiastical Nondescripts, and in practice

"Squatter Sovereigns." They repudiate polygamy while looking to Salt Lake City for succor. They deny in their answer that this property was ever bought for the church, or impressed with a trust therefor, and yet, when their head men were on the witness stand they swore they are a part and parcel of the Original Church. . . . They are but a small band, and their seizure of the Temple Lot, and attempt thus to divert the trust, invoke the interposition of a Court of Equity to establish the trust and prevent its perversion.

This is harsh language, we agree, but Judge Philips was dealing with one of their defenses, specifically pleaded by them, as follows:

That on the 8th day of November, 1869, . . . said Church of Christ, respondents herein, received possession of said lots . . . and has actually, openly, notoriously, exclusively, hostilely, and adversely continued to occupy and enjoy the possession of the same against the claims of all persons.

These are allegations commonly used when pleading ownership by adverse possession—not under "color of title."

The Letter Impeached

Now, before I close this article I wish to deal briefly with some of the erroneous statements in the letter signed by Elders Wheaton, Smith, and Robertson.

This case on appeal was not one of controversion. All argument based on the merits "go by the board" when the pleas of statute of limitations or of laches are upheld.

The decision of Judge Philips was not reversed. What was reversed was the decree which was but a small portion of his decision.

These elders of the Church of Christ are very much in error also in their letter, second page, where they state that we appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, "which court sustained the decision of the Appellate Court and secured the Church of Christ," etc. This case was not considered by the Supreme Court of the United States, therefore it did not "sustain" the Court of Appeals. The Reorganized Church attempted to have the matter reviewed by the Supreme Court on a writ of certiorari, which is the prevailing method; but the writ was denied by that tribunal.

Nothing Favorable to Respondents

The only comfort the Church of Christ can take from this now famous Temple Lot Case was and is that the Reorganized Church lost on the ground of laches—no other reason whatever. If the appeal had been tried on the merits, the findings of fact by the judge would have been accepted by the appellate court. In that case what the outcome would have been is of course speculative. And in the event an action at law had been taken, as suggested by the Court of Appeals as a proper proceeding, who can say with any assurance what the result would have been, though in such an attempt the statute of limitations might have operated as a bar to a satisfactory trial and decision.

In the last analysis we have nothing to retract, except perhaps that Elder Lea named the wrong court. There is far more error in their letter than in the statement of which they so bitterly complain.

These Church of Christ elders who speak so unctuously should not falsify the record as they have in their fifth paragraph, since the Court of Appeals did not say what is there quoted. What they have erroneously added may be intended as explanatory—it would be unobjectionable if that were so explained—but it does not represent what the court actually said.

Conclusion

Notwithstanding the Reorganized Church lost in this action, the Court of Appeals recognized a pertinent fact and made acknowledgment of the same, for which we are grateful and have the undoubted right to set up as an indication of "victory" in this case. On page 187 of the decision we find the following statement:

In view of the foregoing facts, we think the plaintiff church and those under whom it claims to represent have been guilty of such laches as should bar them from all relief in a forum of equity, even though it appeared that the premises in controversy were originally held in trust by Edward Partridge for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and even though it appeared that Reorganized Church is at this day the legitimate successor of the original beneficiary.

This suggestion of the truth is very significant indeed as indicating that the appellate court recognized the merits of our claims on that point. However, members of the Church of Christ ought not to be agitated by it, since they have effectually estopped themselves from claiming to be a successor to the original church, as was set out by Judge Philips.

Decisions of fact by a chancellor are binding on all concerned. It is good law and universally recognized. It is also good in logic and common sense. We have asserted our right to claim the benefit of Judge Philips' findings, except those specifically reversed by the Court of Appeals, and shall continue to do so.

*If findings of fact are binding on appellate courts, they must be conclusive also on parties litigant—much more so on everybody else.*²

Choir Presents Easter Cantata

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—Baby David Slater, grandson of Vernon Stuart, was blessed March 9. Roy Reed was baptized April 6 by Elder Lewis Adams and confirmed by Elder LeRoy Harris and Brother Adams. Denise, baby daughter of Brother Roy Reed, was blessed on the same day.

The children's department was in charge of the Easter worship service. LaVon Elam sang a solo. The cantata "Life and Death" was sung by the choir with Lena Guilbert as organist. Soloists included Mary Lee Guilbert Cline who was a visitor for the service with her husband, Kenneth, and baby daughter, Pamela.

The church was decorated with many Easter lilies presented by Cal Lewis of the Flower Basket.

The building fund has grown to over $13,000. A ham dinner was sponsored by the women's department, netting $50 for the building fund.

Marjorie Bradley was honored for her achievements in literary talent. She is an active church worker.—Reported by STENA CALDWELL

Baptismal Service Held on Easter

CLIO, MICHIGAN.—A series of Sunday evening services was held during the month of March, with Deacon Franklin Hester, youngest member of the priesthood of the branch, as the speaker. The average attendance at the meetings was ninety.

The Easter services opened with the baptism of four children. They were Sherrv Ann Hester, Sharon Bechtel, Sandra Thomas, and James Walker. The Easter cantata, "Radiant Morning," was presented by the choir at the eleven o'clock service under the direction of Della Ross. The confirmation service and blessing of babies was held in the evening. Pastor James McBride welcomed those who had been baptized into the church.

The branch is privileged in having among those baptized within the last year, a German war bride and her husband, Gertrude and Donald Flewelling. Gertrude lived formerly in Berlin. They became acquainted with the church through the neighborly missionary work of Eleanor and Donald Dubois.

In March, 1939, a few of the Saints began to gather in Clio, Michigan, for services. They met first in a Grange hall, and later in a schoolhouse. When they could no longer meet in the schoolhouse, Anna and Stanley Horton opened their home to the Saints. Many times Anna accommodated as many as ninety people in her home for preaching service.—Reported by ANN PHILLIPS

Out-of-town Visitors to Branch

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Visitors to the Stone Church from out of town during the month of March were Irene Adams, John R. Chambers, Clarence Crabb, Ruth Crabb, J. F. Curtis, Dene Fahey, Gene Fahey, Mrs. J. F. Fisher, Reed Guthrie, Mrs. Ruth Henricks, Margie Hinton, George E. Johnson, Mrs. Clark Livingston, Donald Meredith, Phoebe Mervin, Mrs. A. Van Ort, David M. Parson, Mrs. Irene Poole, Joseph Ruppert, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Sampson, Norman R. Shannon, Norman Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Summers, Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Swain, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Volz, and Samuel Winship.

Elected Outstanding Mother

LAMAR, COLORADO.—Mrs. Roy Eagan of the branch was selected as one of the ten outstanding mothers of Colorado. She was nominated for the position by a friend who felt that she should have some recognition for the life she has devoted to her family, her church, and her community. Mrs. Eagan, with nine other outstanding Colorado mothers, was presented an award at a luncheon at the Shirley-Savoy hotel in Denver on May 3.—Reported by MRS. JOHN FLETCHER

Reports on Conference Given

VENICE, CALIFORNIA.—The work of the congregation is progressing. Pastor Herbert Blakeman preached April 20, and reported in his sermon on the work of the Conference. Brothers William Meador, Walter Bullard, Bob Wallace, and Harold Bullard spoke on the Conference also.

Brother Charles Melton and family have moved to the Berkeley congregation. During the past year three members of the priesthood have been lost by death: Brothers L. W. Smith, Foster White, and Charles Clark.—Reported by ROSE CAMPBELL

Pre-Easter Services Held

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Pre-Easter services on the last seven sayings of Christ were conducted the week before Easter. District President S. M. Zonker spoke on Monday and Tuesday on "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise," and "Woman, behold thy son." Elder Otto Melcher spoke on Wednesday and Thursday on "I thirst," and "My God, why hast thou forsaken me." Evangelist R. E. Rodgers spoke on Friday evening, combining the sayings "It is finished" and "Into thy hands I commend my spirit." Appropriate music was rendered each evening by the senior choir, using the cantata "The Seven Last Words," under the direction of Chorister Lenora Nixon. Organist for all services was Sister Helen Phillips. Communion service was held at 8:00 a.m. Easter morning. The resurrection sermon, "He is risen," was presented by Pastor John Treiber at the morning hour. The senior choir sang "He Arose!" Don Treiber was the evening speaker. His subject was "The great commission."—Reported by LEONA HANES

Building for the Future

By Mrs. Lehman Hansen

I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth, but . . . you have not . . . and this is the cause of your affliction.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

ARE WE BUILDING for the future? Where else can we discover the foundation for such a serious and grave undertaking but in the home, and who but parents are more ably fitted to help children attain a high standard of spiritual, cultural, and social life?

Parents who leave the whole burden of religious education upon the church and do nothing to strengthen the influence of the church will probably be disappointed in the spiritual development of their children. Unless parents care about the church, children are not likely to either. Such homes often lose a whole generation of children from the church and God.

The Lord advises us to teach our children of him before evil crowds into their minds. Those who most often bring worry and grief to their parents are the ones who are taught "too little too late." It seems as if a child must be enticed to do good or evil. When he reacts to the stimuli we provide by expressing himself, then he has begun to learn.

CHILDREN CAN LEARN by feeling before they understand what we say to them. When a baby cuddles down into its mother's arms because the mother is frightened, it senses her feelings. And if a mother enjoys a prayer service because of the good Spirit there, a very small child can feel that too. Most of us can remember things in our early spiritual development that were influenced by "how mother felt about it."

Child musicians, actors, and even "boy preachers" are children like ours that someone has succeeded in teaching before their minds got cluttered up with other things. It is surprising how great an understanding of music little tots can absorb, under the right conditions, before their fingers are developed enough to play.

Chosen Mothers

AS A MOTHER I was recently challenged by a sixteen-year-old Zion's Leaguer. In a discussion of marriage, motherhood, et cetera, she made this statement: "I want to be the kind of mother that, had I lived years ago, God might have chosen me to rear the child Jesus." What a wonderful goal!

Although I know this lovely young girl was not directing her remark to me personally, it caused me to do some thinking, and to remember the attitude I've occasionally taken toward my own children.

There was the day that little fingers pinched out a huge chunk of the angel food which was to be a gift birthday cake—and the time the same exploring fingers opened the door of the automatic washer, flooding the basement. Was I understanding of a small child's curiosity and eagerness to learn? Would I have qualified in those days to be a chosen mother? Or should I rather have heeded Peter's words, "Add to temperance, patience"?

In these busy times, when there never seems to be enough hours in the day for all the worth-while activities, what have I neglected? Could it be that I have stolen time from my children? Will they be able to say with Enoch, "My father [mother] taught me in all the ways of God"?

Would that not only I, but all the mothers in the church might qualify in case the Lord should ever want to say to all, or any of us, "Thou art chosen and blessed among women."

DONNA WEDDLE

A certain woman cared for a little girl an hour or more every day for some time. The child could say only a few words and seemed backward. This woman began by having her repeat what she said, then nursery rhymes, songs, and stories. Soon she was memorizing new ones every day. She began expressing herself, and her family decided she was very bright. She had two older brothers who were slow in learning at school, but she began taking honors her first year and eventually became a high school teacher.

Some children are considered "dumb" because no one ever took the time to teach them to talk or to express themselves in any way. They will find self-expression later, probably in ways society frowns on.

It is necessary, too, that all good and worth-while contributions to the world be taught. In fields of science and medicine, discoveries have to be brought out and translated into a terminology which is understood by children, as well as adults. Statesmen believe that the home is the foundation of a strong nation, for within the home is taught the principles of democracy. Also when homes are not maintained or if family life is broken down, there is strife and turmoil, delinquency and crime.

PSYCHOLOGISTS, doctors, or teachers say that every child reflects the spiritual, moral, and economic conditions in the home, and that disturbances of home life often make it impossible for the child to learn or study. Fear, insecurity, and lack of love make children desperate. Many are betrayed by weak, selfish, or immoral parents. A child may resist the evil conditions of a community if he has a good home. However, he is practically helpless if there is weakness both places.

Our homes should be better than those of our parents. The qualities we possess and the type of children we rear should improve each generation and come closer to the goal of perfection. All the good should be passed on and incorporated into our own homes. The characteristics of honesty and work which were so much a part of the older homes should be in ours. Children should be taught to respect work and to do their share.

Mothers and fathers often make the mistake of not wanting their children to have some of the hardships they had. The greatest kindness is to prepare children to be useful people, trained and able to do their share capably.

IT HAS BEEN SAID, and I agree, that the greatest privilege we have is to rear our children righteously and help them establish stable Christian homes.

I feel it would be wise to present at this time the picture which has, for the most part, been given as "norms for the Reorganized Latter Day Saint home and family." Norms have been defined as the "standards by which we shall estimate what we have and by which we shall set the direction of our course."

The home is divinely patterned. The purpose and character are written into the very structure of life itself.

The home is rooted in love. Nothing can take the place of just plain, old-fashioned goodness and loving kindness in a child's life. He needs to be loved, wanted, and respected.

The home is personality centered. It exists for persons. Each member of the home must be made to count for something. In the home, everybody is somebody.

The home is a place of mutual sharing with each for all and all for each. The child shares in the responsibilities and opportunities. He participates in family activities.

The home builds for health—physical, mental, social, and moral health. Such a home is law-abiding. It willingly pays the price of obedience for the blessings it would enjoy. The home is a balanced relationship. It emphasizes the wholeness of life.

The ability to read well and appreciate good literature is stressed. The very small child can be taught a love of books and stories; then wise parents must see to it that he is provided with good books and magazines suitable to his age.

A family altar set up with the reading of Scriptures and the practice of prayer once every day provides a splendid opportunity for the whole family, including children, to worship. In addition to this there should be study periods for the children when parents help them with their quarterly lessons.

Parents should be alert and adjustable. Recognizing that they do not exist in a vacuum, they should be keenly conscious of social change and meet those changes with skill, patience, and courage.

Interwoven throughout, of course, is faith. An official of our church has said, "Teach children to have faith in God, in their fellow-men, and in themselves." Without faith in God there is no solid foundation on which to build; without faith in our fellow-men we find life is not worth living; and without faith in ourselves, we shall have difficulty building firm characters, which are so needed in the church and world today.

There is no doubt that the home will be effective in the great program of evangelism that is now being stressed in our church. People look to members when they become interested in a new religion. "What has this religion produced in the lives and homes of those who belong to it? Are they living what they preach?"

To live religiously in the home is to bring the love of God into the hearts of our children. What greater understanding can there be than this?

Building Christian character is our biggest task and our greatest contribution to the program of evangelism of the church. If we, the women of the church, are successful in this responsibility, many people will be attracted to the teachings which produce such qualities in the lives of its followers, and the world will benefit because we have been faithful in the performance of our duty.

A Living Sermon

By Dorene Moore

I AM REMINDED of the sentiment of Edgar Guest's poem, "Sermons We See," as I recall an unforgettable experience at General Conference. I had the unexpected privilege of meeting Jennie Z. Elliott, whose contributions of writing are familiar to most readers of Herald publications. In chatting with Sister Elliott, I was amazed as I became aware of the full and faithful service this good woman is giving to her God, in spite of her handicap of total blindness. She anxiously told me of the little room in which she lives, even to describing details and colors associated with it. Sister Elliott also explained the manner in which she must write her stories; naturally the process requires considerably greater time and effort for her than it does for people who can see.

Sister Elliott's blindness does not seem to be a barrier at all; perhaps her mental eyes see more beauty and purpose in life than do ours. So often we take too much for granted. I was compelled to ask myself, "How much more could I—could all of us who have no handicap to limit our service—do for our church?" To me, Jennie Elliott is a challenge—a living sermon in faithfulness to the cause in which she believes, and for which she works so ardently.

AS FAR BACK as I am aware my family has been of very small stature. I am not the smallest, yet I am only four feet and ten, so receive my full share of teasing. How it used to infuriate me! I still recall that on one occasion a “bully” neighbor boy teased me beyond my endurance in tolerance. While chasing him one day in a fit of anger, I caught my toe in a shrubby wire. I fell to the ground and dislocated my elbow. This stopped the chasing, but by no means the teasing and anger tantrums when I was reminded of my small stature (and, incidentally, red hair). As I look back on that and similar instances now, I know that it was not the smallness of my stature which annoyed me, but rather that fact that I was “different” from the average child my age. This constituted a “hurt,” a feeling of inadequacy and self-consciousness which haunted me day after day.

Then one night I dreamed that I had been taken from this world to the judgment bar. And in this dream I had that same injured feeling, for all around me were men and women of immense stature. As I observed further, trying desperately to lose myself in the crowd so that I would not be noticed, I heard individuals being called to the judgment bar. I noted that as they responded to their calling, they would become either shriveled and ugly or they would grow tall and beautiful. As I tucked myself even tighter into the crowd I thought to myself, “This is a measurement of one’s spiritual height.”

I don’t remember whether or not I was measured in my dream, and I am not inferring at all that this was a vision, for I believe that it was a normal dream provoked by my mental frustrations concerning my own small stature. I do know, however, that it started me thinking, and, as I did, my yearning for a more beautiful physical self was swallowed up with a concern for a more beautiful spiritual self.

Now I am an adult, and one of the most effective spiritual gymnastics which I take is attempting to measure my spiritual height.

Although too often I discover I am even more stunted in my spiritual growth than I am in my physical growth, I react to such a realization in an adult way and benefit from it rather than childishly bringing injury to myself.

MAY I INVITE YOU to measure yourself? You may sketch your own yardstick for your exercises, if you like, remembering only that while this age in which we live demands the most of us, God is compassionate and understanding of those qualities wherein we have need of help. He has said, “Whatsoever ye shall ask it shall be given you” (Genesis 6: 53, I.V.). Would it, therefore, not be profitable to determine what is stunting our spiritual growth, then ask God for wisdom and strength to overcome this threat to spiritual growth? It won’t be easy, and it won’t be rapid, to change selfishness to unselfishness, et cetera, but those who have long been servants of God will, I’m sure, tell us that this is a golden age of opportunity where the challenge of right, the aggression of sin, and the need for inspiration and wisdom are being felt and that all of us, both young and old, must feel growing pains each day of our lives. Are you willing to bear the uncomfortable feeling or self-examination for the hope of becoming a more useful person in the hands of God?

This yardstick, however, let me warn, is an unusual instrument in that it cannot be successfully used on anyone else. If you use it to measure your friend, it may result in severe pain and injury to him, just as I was injured when I was measured physically by the neighbor boy.

Strange, isn't it, that during the short span of time between my childhood and now there has been a complete "about face"? As a child I was very unhappy to be thought of as "different," and now in my adulthood I find my greatest desire is to become "different." I desire to be different in my relationship with God, with my fellow-man, and with my husband—different in the way God meant when he admonished us to be a "peculiar people." I desire to be different not for the sake of being different, but for the purpose of being a blessing to others and an instrument in the hands of God. I believe that we all may grow tall and become beautiful through prayer, and through spiritual gymnastics, as well as association with "tall and beautiful" people.

How tall are you? Will you—with me—periodically measure yourself up to the perfection, the kindness, and the greatness of God who yields his measuring stick to your particular talents and abilities?

Graceland Gazette

■ The Graceland Players presented Oscar Wilde's famous comedy, "The Importance of Being Earnest," in the Student Center on April 17 and 18. Directed by Roscoe Faunce, the cast included Dick Howard, Charles Hield, Marion Robinson, and Lucille McCormick of Independence, Missouri; Sylvia Wood of Manchester, England; Valda Poole of Sydney, Australia, Les Gardner of Wallsend, Australia; Bud Sheehy of Greeley, Colorado; and Neil Nixon of Wellsburg, West Virginia. The play was given "in the round"—that is, the audience sat in a circle around the playing area in the center of the floor. This technique tends to make the audience feel itself a part of the play and has been used at Graceland with great success as it has by many amateur and professional groups.

■ Miss Velma Ruch, instructor of communication and English literature, will attend the summer session of the University of Oslo in Oslo, Norway, this summer. Miss Ruch will work on her minor of Scandinavian literature, which she is studying in conjunction with her doctorate field of literature. After the session is over August 4, she plans to visit the northernmost part of Norway and spend two weeks touring the Continent.

■ Graceland College conducted a Camping Institute on April 19 and 20. Designed largely for the benefit of those students unable to enroll in the regular class in camping, the institute's classes were conducted by Leslie Kohlman, Edna Easter, Aleta Runkle, and Carl Mesle. Topics of the classes included management, safety and health, circles and campfires, and an overview of the camping program.

■ A new cottage-style dormitory for fifty women will be built on the Graceland campus this summer. Funds for the construction of the dormitory will come from this year's General Church appropriation and next fall's College Day offering. This building will replace North Hall, originally used for an old people's home and loaned to the college by the church several years ago for use as a dormitory. A living room, kitchenette, pressing room, and a laundry annex will be included in this building's facilities. The laundry will serve the physical education and food service departments and will include self-service facilities for the use of all students.

■ Mrs. Gerald Evans will join the Graceland faculty next year as instructor in education and psychology. Mrs. Evans has attended Graceland, Maryville State Teachers College in Missouri, and the University of Minnesota, from where she will receive her Master's in education this summer. She has taught school for fifteen years including seven years in the Lamoni schools.

■ The concert band of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, presented a concert in the Memorial Student Center on April 16. The eighty-piece ensemble made its appearance as part of a five-day tour which includes fifteen communities in eastern and southern Iowa.

■ Carlee Wilson of McAllen, Texas, and Gordon Grant of Windsor, Ontario, have been chosen editor and business manager of The Tower, student news publication. The two were chosen by the publications board after being interviewed along with several other applicants. The board bases its selection on past experience in related fields, work done on publications during the past year, and personal qualifications. The two positions automatically carry positions on next year's publication board as well.

P.S.

* BLACK MENACE

The bright lights of the city were behind us, and the country was dark as we drove down the highway into the rolling mists. The rains beat a steady tattoo on the windshield, and the clack-clack of the wiper could be heard above the throb of the motor. Out there in the country it seemed quiet and safe, and the heavy bus slowly gained momentum and speed for the long run ahead of us. Visibility was poor. We had a feeling of isolation from the world.

Rounding a curve, the headlights swept across a black unlighted car, two wheels in the mud and two way up on the slab. Cars were coming the other way then—we could not pass, and it seemed impossible to stop. Quickly the driver applied the brakes, trying to avoid both a skid and a crash.

It seemed we would never stop, but finally we did, and there were only inches to spare when those tons of metal and their human cargo came to rest. The cars in the other lane roared by, their drivers unaware of what they had missed. . . . Our driver took off his cap, wiped his forehead, and breathed a sigh. We breathed again, too. He waited several long moments before he moved. His face and body held very still. . . . I wondered if he was saying thanks for the answer to a wordless prayer that brought help to stop the bus. . . . He started the motor, and we moved down the highway again.

* SONG OF SPRING

The winter is past,
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds is come,
And the voice of the turtle is heard in our land;
The fig tree putteth forth her green figs,
And the vines with the tender grape give a good smell.—Solomon's Song 2: 11-13.

* STARGAZING

We were hurrying to go somewhere. I cannot remember why now, but it seemed important at the time.

The stars were beautiful, and suddenly my friend halted to look at them.

"Why do you stop now?" I asked. "You can see the stars any time. They will always be here."

"Yes, they will always be here," he replied. "But I will not!"

* JUDGMENT

Remember, wherever two persons are involved, there are two judgments. . . . If someone has judged you unjustly, remember that you judge him also, and that your judgment, to you, is just as important as his. . . . And if you should happen to judge somebody unjustly, remember that he also is judging you, and that his judgment is as important as yours.

* SLEEP

Here is a modern variant on the old "Early to bed" nursery rhyme your mother taught you:

Late to bed, and Early to rise
Make a poor human
Have pouchy eyes!

Schofield

THIS PICTURE was taken April 5, 1952, at General Conference. The speaker is High Priest John Franklyn Schofield of Enfield, England, which is a part of London. He made his first trip to America with his brother Fred C. by plane to attend the General Conference.

His subject for the Saturday morning sermon at the Stone Church was "Give and It Shall Be Given Unto You." The church was filled to capacity. He emphasized that we must not expect to reap where we have not sown. "The value of the church to us is measured by what we have previously given."

Elder Schofield was born at Warrington, Lancashire, England, in 1906 and was baptized at the age of thirteen. Three years later he was ordained a deacon. He was ordained an elder in 1931 and a high priest on August 6, 1950. He is pastor of the Enfield Branch.

The editors are pleased with the beauty and dignity of this picture. The church seal is an oak plaque which blends with the altar. The photographer with his professional eye has caught Brother Schofield in a congenial mood which adds a personal charm to the setting.

ASSUMES NEW DUTIES

Elder Charles Neff officially began his duties as Assistant to the First Presidency May 5. He has moved to Independence with his family, and succeeds Elder Don Lents who will leave for England in June. Brother Neff was formerly the pastor of the Omaha, Nebraska, Branch and was replaced by Elder Frank Fry.

CONDUCTS SERIES

Apostle Roscoe E. Davey conducted a series of evangelistic services at the Enoch Hill church in Independence every night except Monday, Thursday, and Saturday from May 4 to 18. The sermons were illustrated with slides. The theme was "Christ Meeting the Needs of the Hour." Frank D. White is the pastor at the branch.

MINISTER TO COLLEGE STUDENTS

Dick Ankney has been appointed as a member of the Committee on Ministry to College Students and will travel and visit with the various groups of college young people. He met with the students at Ames, Iowa, April 26 and 27. Norman Nelson, pastor of the group at Ames, is to be the new agriculture teacher at Graceland next fall.

On May 3 and 4, Dick and Carl Mesle were in Columbia, Missouri, where they met with the student group for a fellowship service, a discussion, and Communion service. The discussion was held before the Communion service and centered around "The Relation of the Committee on Ministry to College Students to the activities of the local campus groups." Bill Higdon is the pastor of the group.

Fred Olson of the group will graduate from the University in June with a straight "A" average in chemistry for four years.

The services at Columbia are held in the new church's Student Center House, which houses ten students and a young married couple as well as the chapel for the church group.

WHITE MASQUE MEDAL PRESENTED

The White Masque Players of the Center Stake of Zion presented the annual medal for dramatic achievement to a high school senior, Richard Byrne. Richard is a member of the Walnut Park congregation, and at the regular meeting of the players read cuttings from some of the plays in which he had lead roles during his high school year. The medal will be presented to him during the commencement exercises May 23, for 1952 graduates of the high school.

Following a business meeting, Stake President Charles Graham spoke to the players on past achievements, and Mrs. Pearl Gardner, historian, gave a report of the past programs presented by the players. Mrs. Blanche Gault was elected president of the group, replacing Mrs. Eleanor Heady who will serve with Mrs. Nell Kelley and Arthur Rock as counselors to the president.

PASTOR DIES

Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe reports that he has received word of the death of Brother James Cornish, pastor of the Senlac, Saskatchewan, Branch. Brother Cornish was the son of Seventy J. J. Cornish. Brother David Larmour preached the funeral sermon.

The Moral Background

"Unless we recognize the moral background to the business of human living, unless we are spiritually on the right track, we cannot solve our problems and work together. I have a distinct feeling at times that we have been lacking on the moral side."—Dwight D. Eisenhower.

THE ABOVE STATEMENT was made by Eisenhower in January, 1950, during an interview with David Lawrence, Editor of U.S. News and World Report, and was released in the March 28, 1952, issue of the magazine. Whatever may have been the reason for holding that important interview so long, it comes to us with particular force and significance at the present time. Its impact will be stronger, in view of the corruption and scandals, the revelation of a lack of moral foundations in trusted public servants, and in public persons who should not have been trusted under any circumstances. Eisenhower's "feeling," if revealed today, would be regarded as a great piece of understatement. In 1950 there was already a sufficient foundation for it, if we had known the facts.

The statement will stand by itself, for it is justified by events. It is made more significant and given greater strength by the fact that it comes in a time of political corruption unsurpassed in the history of our country, when people are beginning to look to the author of it as to a needed deliverer. Quite independent of its authorship, it calls for consideration by the people of America today.

WE HAVE FORGOTTEN ONE THING in this country: a sense of moral values does not come as a built-in, standardized part of the equipment of a human being. It must be taught if it is to be possessed and used. We pretend to be indignant at wrongs exposed. Very well, who is responsible for them? Those who will not teach them, who will not tolerate their being taught, and who will not learn them.

At the Nurnberg trials, there was an amazing revelation of human character. The Nazi war criminals at the bar of justice showed no evidence of any consciousness of moral principle that should have prevented them from doing the frightful things they did. Confronted with the terrible facts, they showed no shame, no regret, no pity for the victims. At least that was what some reporters said. It is an amazing, a baffling, sometimes even a sickening experience, to find a creature who is in every other respect a human being, but without moral equipment. We know that a civilized society cannot be conducted without it. Only dictatorships can be run by such persons. We find them sometimes in criminal trials, and the public recoils with horror from a being that freely confesses the most revolting of crimes and sees no wrong in them. We found and destroyed a government that was directed by such persons. And now we find some of them—too many of them—in our own government. They are caught up to the armpits in corruption. They pretend innocence; they affect astonishment; they think what they did was all right; they cry for the newspapers and photographers; they plead that they are guiltless, "framed," misunderstood—but the damning facts are revealed, and facts do not lie. And the most damning of all is the utter lack of moral background, of moral principle, of sense of justice and right, of consciousness of duty and integrity.

LITTLE THINGS lead to big things. If a person will put slugs in a parking meter, he will steal. If he will break speed laws, he will break other and greater laws. Eventually he gets into trouble.

People who refrain from doing wrong because a policeman is watching, or because of the fear of getting caught, are really morally weak. The safe morality, and the only one, is one that will not do wrong because it is wrong. All other reasons are secondary.

The thing we need to remember is that all wrong, sooner or later, brings pain, and loss, and hurt to other human beings. If it shifts a burden to the shoulders of someone else, it is wrong. If it enables us to escape a payment, but eventually increases the cost to others or to society, it is wrong. If it is taking something that does not belong to us, that we did not earn, it is wrong. A teacher once declared to a student who had no sense of values, "It's bad because it's bad, and there is no argument about it!"

IT WOULD BE A PITY, it would be a mistake, it would be an evasion, if we were to stop with making examples of the more prominent politicians who are caught and exposed. Trace it back to ourselves. Such people are in office because we vote for them. We put party membership ahead of citizenship. Some would rather vote a straight ticket than be true to God. And in our own lives we fail many times to see that what we are doing on a small scale is exactly the same sort of thing that we are condemning on a large scale in others.

So much for the Jeremiad. Of course it is true that there are many fine, honest, honorable people in every nation, our own included. Perhaps we are neither better nor worse than others. The criminals make everybody suffer. We all—the whole nation—the whole world, are in need of moral background. As Eisenhower says, "Unless we recognize the moral background . . . unless we are spiritually on the right track, we cannot solve our problems and work together." L. J. L.

Baptismal Statistics

The first quarter mark for 1952 finds us with an encouraging baptismal record. We have had the best March since 1939. (March, 1939, had 574 baptisms reported, but 491 were German baptisms accrued in previous years.) This year we had 310 baptisms reported in March, which is 106 more than for March, 1951, and 771 for the quarter, which is 72 more than for the first quarter of 1951.

Branches and missions with ten or more baptisms reported in March are Denver, Colorado, 16; Wichita, Kansas, 16; San Bernardino, California, 15; Hill City, Kansas, mission, 12; Puyallup, Washington, 10; and Eugene-Springfield, Oregon, mission, 10.

Stakes and districts with top baptismal records for the month of March are Kansas District, 29; Center Stake of Zion, 23; Central Oklahoma District, 19; Seattle District, 19; Detroit International Stake, 18; Eastern Colorado District, 18; and Southern California District, 18.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS
By Merle P. Guthrie

attended the District Youth Institute at Bremerton on the week end of the eighth. I gave three lectures and the Sunday morning sermon. I don't believe I have had the privilege of working with a more enthusiastic group, and I am sure there are few groups which are as well led as are these young people under the direction of Brother Ray Sowers and Zion's League President James Clark. Brother Ray told me that attendance at this institute was the largest they have ever had.

We drove the two hundred miles to Portland, Oregon, after the close of the institute on Sunday morning. Arriving just in time for the evening service, we found the building filled almost to capacity with over two hundred people there. I sang and preached to a most appreciative congregation. Although Hazel and I were dubious of the advisability of her accompanying me on this trip, it was rather fortunate that she did, for everywhere I spoke I was also billed to sing. She played the piano for me.

Across the Desk

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following reaches us from W. P. Sterling of Anchorage, Alaska.

As you probably know from many previous reports, this mission was inspired and propelled into action from a small group that started meeting here some three years ago. The group in part consisted of the Dale Briggs family, the Roger Langdons, the Pershing Tousleys, and Georgia Harrison.

Through Brother Tousley's wise ministry the group kept together, meeting regularly at private homes. The group was intensely interested in developing a lasting church up here and finally requested a missionary.

Brother C. G. Mesley came up and gathered together many of the Saints that were scattered about, and thus added to the original nucleus. Then Seventy A. F. Gibbs came up, and the record speaks for itself on the good job of missionary work he did here.

We were organized into a mission in August, 1951. Since that time we have met regularly every Sunday. Our attendance has varied from 18 to 40. Our biggest trouble has been a meeting place. For a while, we didn't know where we would meet from one Sunday to the next. This, of course, had a direct bearing on our attendance. If the church is hard to find or get to, people feel justified in not attending regularly.

We also have a changing membership here. The military people come up for a two-year enlistment and then leave, and usually there's another new military family or person to take up the vacancy.

We seem to find at least one new Saint every week, which we acquaint with the branch.

We have a standing advertisement in the daily paper, which we feel is necessary because of the many newcomers. I feel that the mission here is gaining strength and that someday, if we continue to have diligent workers, we'll organize a worthy branch.

In a recent letter Garland Tickemyer, Los Angeles stake president, makes these interesting comments:

I have just returned from ten days in Washington and northern Oregon. The wonderful reception that was given us at Bremerton and Portland gave a definite uplift to our morale.

Brother Glen Davis did an unusually fine job on the advance publicity for the six night series at Bremerton. There are ninety-two members and attendance averaged eighty-six each evening. They assured me that this was the best-supported series they had ever conducted. There were two adult baptisms, and two other persons who expressed their intention to be baptized. There are two children to be baptized on Children's Day. Altogether, there are good prospects for a high percentage of baptisms for the year at Bremerton.

Over a hundred young people, mostly between the ages of thirteen and eighteen

Choosing

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; as for me and my house we will serve the Lord." Joshua suggests there are three conditions in this inescapable, imperative, exacting process.

We must make a choice. Everything around us demands that we choose. Our body requires that we select food, clothing, and shelter to live. Our social adjustment causes us to make selection of friends, work, and strata in society. There is no other way; we must choose.

Our choices become habitual, and in a sense habit becomes our master. Our habits, however, are acquired through choice. Our choice also develops our ideals, shapes our character, and sometimes gives us motives. A wise choice may promote health, culture, and intelligence; while a foolish one may cause a handicap that would be insurmountable. Esau, Judas, Benedict Arnold, and Quisling made choices even as Joshua, Paul, John Howard, and Schweitzer made choices. These choices caused either shame or disgrace or immortality. Your choices will forge bonds of slavery or open doors of freedom.

We must use wisdom in making our choices. Socrates chose death rather than stoop to evil. Roger Williams chose freedom to think and worship, and became a pioneer in establishing a new church dedicated to religious liberty. Jesus chose to serve God with his all; he served God by being a servant of mankind. He is the perfect example of right choices, of true nobility and greatness. We are making choices each day. Whom are we serving?

The Advance of the Restoration

By President W. Wallace Smith

A summary of the sermon delivered at General Conference on Sunday, April 6.

A FEW DAYS AGO I received a pamphlet from the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company. It was entitled, It's Your Money. I wish to quote a few significant lines:

The officers and directors, who manage this company as trustees on your behalf, are glad of this annual opportunity to give an account of their stewardship. The following brief report gives the essential facts about the year's results and discusses some of the major problems confronting company management. We hope it will make you feel that the dollars you have entrusted to us are in capable hands.

If it suggests any subject on which you want further information, or if there is any way in which the report can be improved, please feel perfectly free to write to us. The more of you who express your views, the better we can meet your wishes in the future.

We approach this hour with somewhat the same attitude. We wish to give an account of our stewardship. While I am not specifically representing the Presidency here today, what I say, of course, reflects some of the views which we have discussed; and, as a consequence, I am bringing to you these matters out of the background of my own thinking.

The Gains of the Church

In the report of the Presidency we have called your attention to the favorable condition of the church at the present time. First, we are pleased to note that our quorums are filled, with the exception, of course, of one vacancy created in the quorum of the presidents of seventy by the calling and ordination of one of the number to another work.

Second, we note that there is an addition to the number of men serving under appointment in church work. The number now totals approximately 160. This is a formidable army arrayed "in shining armor." Let us keep it bright and unsullied.

Third, we note with satisfaction the gains by baptism. In 1950, the baptismal gains were 4,771. In 1951 they were 4,952. Our task is to build these added members into our program and consolidate our gains.

We take this opportunity to salute our nonappointee ministers for the marvelous work they have done in utilizing the materials and tools made available to them by the Council of Twelve, the Department of Religious Education, the Department of Priesthood Education, and other sources.

Stronger Organization

Several years ago the Council of Churches of Christ in America advanced an idea which to them was revolutionary—a layman's visiting program. They may not have known that we had been carrying on that kind of a program in excess of a hundred years. This, in effect, is the very essence of the Restoration Movement, and we have for years devoted the time and energy of many people to carry it on.

This we have attempted to do through local organizations; and, in order to make these organizations function more perfectly, we have set up stakes in various centers. As you recall, the General Conference of 1950 authorized the organization of the Center Stake of Zion, the Detroit International Stake, and the Los Angeles Stake. These, added to the already existing stakes of Lamoni, Far West, Kansas City, and Central Missouri, make a total of seven. In them we have a closely knit organization which we hope can function more efficiently and as a consequence be more effective in the lives of people. These stakes, coupled with the efficient districts, branches, and missions aid in completing the organization of the work of the church and account in a large measure for the advance of the Restoration.

New Church Buildings

We have said something about the many new churches acquired in this interim period; it is gratifying to know that there have been eighty-five such churches built or purchased in addition to the many which have been remodeled. We recognize that this particular period is one in which we are able to spend some of our money for this purpose. It is gratifying to know that the Saints are willing to sacrifice and are eager to make the kind of advancement that is called for in their lives in order to accomplish this goal.

During this Conference we have found it necessary to meet with building committees from Washington, D.C.; Venice, California; Dayton, Ohio; Creston, Iowa; and others. We are glad to have money in the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund from which to extend loans.

We call your attention to the brochure which has been published, entitled Planning Your Church Building. It outlines effectively the procedures to be followed from the standpoint of financing the building project, methods, loans, and repayments which are available for that purpose through the proper channels of the General Church. In outlining them to you and making them available for your consideration we will in that way be able to follow the proper procedure. Without going into detail, we are quite sure that you understand there is available both 1 per cent and 3 per cent money for the purpose of building churches. These funds are made available under varying circumstances. We particularly commend this brochure to you and suggest that it be in the hands of every group contemplating construction, remodeling, or doing any type of improvement on church buildings.

Our Task

Since our task is great, we must approach it with great expectation. Great causes have produced great men. We look into the lives of Moses, David, Jesus Christ, Martin Luther, John Robinson, and Joseph Smith. We feel that we need to stop and attempt to evaluate our lives in terms of the things which we have to do. The worship of God is one of the major objectives of the Restoration Movement, and we wish to strive so that all things which are possible of accomplishment shall be done in harmony with the laws and principles laid down in the life of Jesus Christ when he was here on earth. It is our task to bring a realization of the truth of these teachings to men and women making it known to them and helping it to become effective in the control of their lives.

The Tools

Some of the tools which have been placed in our hands are the brochures produced by the department of priesthood education for the training and extension of the work of the priesthood, the study of family life, and ministry to all people through the various officers of the priesthood.

This was called to our attention effectively by Bishop DeLapp in his address before the priesthood at the Stone Church on Friday morning. We are in complete harmony with what he said regarding the necessity for every member of the priesthood, to be effective in his ministry, being trained and having the skills necessary to carry out his special function.

We feel deeply about the idea of "rank" in priesthood which is revealed in such statements as "He is just a priest," or "just a teacher," or "only a deacon." These men stand side by side with their brothers of the Melchisedec priesthood as ministers for God, and they are just as precious in his sight.

While the tools of which we speak are not the same as the material implements used in the garden, they are just as necessary and must be kept bright and shining. Sharp tools are considered essential by good workmen, and even the poor workman can do better when he has the right tools.

Steps in Our Progress

In his address last Sunday afternoon, President Israel A. Smith called attention to the fact that the Reorganization has made great strides in qualifying for its return to the place from which it had once been expelled. I will not attempt to quote figures on the membership of the church from 1900 to the present. We forget figures easily. Many of you have been here and have seen this growth with your own eyes. I recall some of my own experiences in the early Conferences of the church which I now compare with those which we are holding here in this huge Auditorium. Some have said that it is a sign a man is growing old when he starts to recall things which have happened in the past. Yet if progress is to be made, we must of necessity become older. But as we do so, we should be able to increase in wisdom and understanding and appreciation of the necessity for being better ministers, better leaders, better teachers, and better men.

Quality of Leadership

The advance of the Restoration Movement depends upon the quality of leadership and on the quality of men who follow that leadership. We have around us many opportunities to furnish leadership. Sometimes we do not recognize them. This brings to mind one of the important admonitions of the Restoration message:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

A story is told about a sculptor named Pygmalion who lived in Athens a long time ago. This man was given a large and expensive piece of ivory. After contemplating what he would do with it he decided to make a statue of a girl. He began work, and as the creation took form he gave it the name Galatea. As he worked he fell into the habit of talking to the figure as if it were a real person, for it seemed to him that his creation was truly a beautiful and remarkable girl. In time he was invited to leave his task to work for rich people who could have given him wealth. He refused and continued to labor at his task in poverty until the girl seemed even more precious and real to him. One day as the figure was nearing completion, he stepped back, looked at her and said, "Now, Galatea, I have done everything I can for you." Then he walked up to her, knelt, and put his arms around her. As he did so he felt a stir, and she looked down and smiled. Then she put her arms around him and kissed him.

This story from classical mythology—a tale from the realm of make-believe—has more in it than entertainment. Each of us may be a Pygmalion in the daily work of leading others to a fuller life. That is why I say this leadership which we are attempting to provide is the kind we hope to release in men and women so that they shall be able to step out into a more abundant life, patterned after that of the Christ.

Material Progress

You have heard Bishop DeLapp's sermon in which he called attention to the following things:

The largest budget ever presented to a General Conference, $1,100,000 for 1952, and a little over that amount for 1953.

Appropriation of funds for necessary enterprises, such as Houses of Worship Revolving Fund.

The Operating Reserve Fund of $100,000. An addition to the Auditorium Fund of $100,000.

Appropriation for Graceland College, which calls for the completion of Gunsolley Hall (men's dormitory), the erection of a cottage type dormitory for women with laundry facilities.

The past expenditure of $529,000 by the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

The Missionary Reserve Fund.

Historic church places, such as Kirtland and Nauvoo.

Headquarters buildings at such places as French Oceania; Australasia; Hannover, Germany; Washington, D. C., and Ottawa, Canada (capital city building programs).

Additional missionary personnel.

As you know, the missionary force is what enables us to equip ourselves to proceed with "the building of the kingdom," and doing this requires a "going forth among the nations." We need your support in this. The bishop also suggested certain things for rebuilding this Zion condition which we talk about:

1. Health and welfare (Aaronic priesthood program).
2. Health clinic of medical personnel.
3. Care of the poor—oblation.
4. Priesthood training program for the city of Zion and the whole church.

We wish to lend our support to the program which has been submitted by the Presiding Bishopric regarding surplus. This has been mentioned and explained at various times during the Conference and in previous statements:

1. A separate treasury designated
2. Surplus, a conveyance to the church
This surplus shall be used to:
 - A. Purchase land for public benefit of the church
 - B. Complete the Auditorium
 - C. Help finance houses of worship, where the General Church has a responsibility
 - D. Provide the cost of community and economic planning.

Growth According to Capacity

We feel this program catches up some of the things which indicate that the Restoration Movement is going forward. It is our hope that we can continue to point the direction in which this advance shall be made. We are told in Scripture that we should not advance faster than we are prepared to sustain ourselves. It is a known fact that in military circles an army cannot advance any faster than its supply line. Relating that to the work of the church, we must follow the same principle. We have indicated many times that we are willing to put men under appointment equal to the number who have prepared themselves and are willing to give their services to the church, measured against the ability of the church to support these men and to give them the type of direction which they need. I recall in reading Church History that my father advocated that the church could not expand beyond its ability to support its outreach. We have many times related this outreach to that made by a tree. We know that a shallow root system cannot support a huge tree except when it is in the midst of the forest and is held up by surrounding trees. We need, therefore, other stalwarts standing shoulder to shoulder with those of the ministry to support the progress we have made. My father indicated that it was necessary for the church to grow strong; as a consequence of this we find that he held ambitious members in check so that they should not make their outreach too great until they were ready to support it. His great task was to unify the people who had found themselves scattered after the disastrous experience of 1844.

Spiritual Development of the Reorganization

We would never minimize the spiritual development which the early church made in its growth under the leadership of Joseph Smith. I would like at this time, however, to call your attention to those things which have been accomplished that we feel have enabled the church in this last inter-Conference period to grow and expand. We call your attention again to the High Priests' Conference which was held in Kirtland, to the Book of Mormon Institute held in Independence, to the Priesthood Institute held at Lamoni, Iowa, and to the Women's Institute which was held here in Independence last October. We do not want to expand unduly on them at this moment; yet we want to call your attention to some of the things which we think they indicate.

The spiritual growth of the church was strengthened materially by the personal experiences of many of the High Priests who attended the Conference at Kirtland. There was renewed within them a recognition of Divinity and also a determination to make it available to people. There was reborn in them an abounding desire for service. This has been reflected in the spiritual growth throughout the church as men have gone back into their home districts and branches and administered on this basis. We call for a continuation of this through the leadership in the various districts on the congregational level.

The Book of Mormon Institute was one of the best attended and least publicized of the various gatherings held. At it there was brought to light many things which have aided materially in the advance of the Restoration Movement in this area of study and I think it has reached out into other areas.

Under the able leadership of Brother F. M. McDowell, the Priesthood Institute was held in Lamoni in June, taking advantage of the facilities of Graceland College which were available after the students had gone home for the summer vacation. We who attended were taught wonderful things and projected areas of service were called to our attention. Many have taken advantage of this since. Those who were not there will never know until they have had the opportunity to attend and learn first hand of the inspiration received through the fellowship of so many members of the priesthood assembled in one place.

The importance of the Women's Institute held last October must not be minimized and could hardly be overemphasized. We feel that the large attendance at this year's General Conference indicates that the interest created there has carried over to the work which we have been able to accomplish at this Conference time.

Inter-Conference Gatherings Projected

In line with our attempt to give the type of leadership which will be acceptable to you—and as was called to your attention in the report of the Presidency read by President Edwards at the business session of the General Conference—we have suggested an institute on "Revelation and the Doctrine and Covenants" to be held in Independence from September 28 to October 3, 1952. Detailed plans for this of course have not been worked out yet, but we hope to be able to give general and specific attention to a study of the revelations and their background.

The second gathering proposed—also to be held in Independence, Missouri—is the Institute in Evangelism. As has been emphasized for years by the Council of Twelve in their outreach, we need to know how to promote evangelism. Those of you who attended the missionary service conducted by the Council of Twelve on Saturday night are familiar with the pamphlet which was put in your hands. This is an additional tool for you to use in the prosecution of this missionary effort. We recommend for your continued perusal the pamphlet entitled The Missionary Policy and Program, as well as the brochure Testimonies of the Restoration.

Conclusion

I would like to remind you again of Brother Sam Toomey's testimony as he spoke before the Conference business session. He had just returned from the front lines in Korea where he had been up against forces who leave God out of the equation, and where he had come face to face with an ideology which says, in the words of Lenin, "Any means are justified if the end has the sanction of the Central Committee." Thank God that we do not hold this kind of philosophy.

The advance of the Restoration up to now has been in the hands of your fathers and mothers. Today it is in your hands. Tomorrow it will be in the hands of your children. We pray God that they shall—and I believe they will—be prepared to carry the load.

We feel this has been a good Conference. The registration, as has been pointed out, is the largest ever. Participation in classes has been excellent. The members attending have pushed our facilities to capacity. The sacrifice and devotion of workers have been wholehearted. For this we wish to thank each one publicly. A great deal of preparation goes into the conducting of a Conference. Many hours of planning have been necessary to bring us to this point. We are happy that we were able to have had some small part in it, and for the realization that it has been successfully concluded.

Quite some time before the Conference convened, as we traveled and made contact in various places, there seemed to be the feeling that it would be successful and well attended. It has exceeded our fondest expectations, and we are thankful for it.

May God's blessings attend each one of you as you go forth from this gathering to do your part in the advancing of this wonderful Restoration Movement.

General Alexander Doniphan Honored

FOR SOME YEARS the church has owned a property near Excelsior Springs, Missouri, which has been used for reunions and sundry church and priesthood meetings. Heretofore it has been called Gardner Lake, a name given it by a former owner.

We are pleased to inform our members that hereafter this place will be known as Lake Doniphan in honor of General Doniphan.

General Doniphan was one of the truly great men of Missouri, as he befriended the Saints in an early day and saved the state of Missouri from the ignominy of killing our church leaders. The story is pretty well known to our members.

General Doniphan was a modest but fearless man, and, when the late President Joseph Smith and his brother, Apostle Alexander Hale Smith, called upon him to thank him for his generous protection of their father and uncle, he graciously said that what he had done was his duty: "I deserve no thanks for doing my duty. I had a long time to live, and I could not afford to burden my conscience and life with the blood of my fellow men."

Many years ago General Doniphan wrote his recollections of the "Mormon War" of 1838, and, we believe, upon the occasion of honoring him by naming our lake property after him, readers will be interested in reading his account. It is taken from the Herald of August 1, 1881:

The Settlement of the Peculiar People in Missouri and Subsequent Expulsion

General Doniphan's Recollections of the Troubles of that Early Time

There is probably no man in western Missouri who is better acquainted with the various causes of the difficulties between the citizens of Jackson and Caldwell Counties and the Mormons during the years of 1833 and 1838 than General Alexander W. Doniphan, then a resident of Clay County, but now of Richmond, Ray County, Missouri; and there is, perhaps, no one who took such an active part in the events of those years who can now look back and relate the history of these troubles as dispassionately as he can. In view of these facts a representative of the Journal called upon General Doniphan at his rooms at the Hudgins' House in Richmond for the purpose of interviewing him on the subject. The general, after learning the object of the visit, seemed very willing to communicate all he knew in regard to the history of the Mormon troubles, and, after a few introductory remarks, related the following:

"I came to Missouri in 1830, and located in Lexington, where I lived until April, 1833, when I removed to Liberty, Clay County. The Mormons came to Jackson County in 1830, and I met Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, and Christian Whitmer—three of the elders—in Independence during the spring of 1831. Peter Whitmer was a tailor and I employed him to make me a suit of clothes."

"What kind of people were the Mormons?"

"They were northern people, who, on account of their declining to own slaves and their denunciation of the system of slavery, were termed 'free soilers.' The majority of them were intelligent, industrious, law-abiding citizens, but there were some ignorant, simple-minded fanatics among them, who people said would steal. Soon after they came to Jackson County, they established a newspaper at Independence, called the Morning and Evening Star, edited by W. W. Phelps, in which they published their peculiar tenets and pretended revelations, in which they set forth that they had been sent to Jackson County by divine Providence, and that they, as a church, were to possess the whole of the county, which then embraced what is now Jackson, Cass, and Bates Counties. These assumptions were evidently made use of for the purpose of exciting the jealousy of persons of other religious denominations and the more ignorant portions of the community.

"This, of course, caused hard feelings between them and the people of the county, but I think the real objections to the Mormons were their denunciation of slavery, and the objections slave holders had to having so large a settlement of anti-slavery people in their midst, and also to their acquiring such a large amount of land, which then belonged to the government, subject to pre-emption. From these and other causes a very bitter feeling was engendered between the Mormons and citizens, which culminated in the month of July, 1833, when a public meeting was held at the courthouse in Independence, at which it was resolved to tear down the Mormon printing establishment, which resolve was immediately carried out. The mob also committed numerous other outrages, the most brutal of which was the tarring and feathering of Bishop Partridge. I can't positively state who were the leaders of the mob, but it was participated in by a large number of the leading citizens of the county.

"The Mormons made little if any resistance, but submitted to the inevitable and agreed not to establish another paper, and there was an apparent tranquillity existing until about the first of the following November, when, from imprudent conduct on both sides, both Mormons and Gentiles—as the citizens were then called by the Mormons—seemed to arm themselves as if expecting a collision. The first clash of arms took place at Wilson's store on the Big Blue, about four miles east of Westport, about the third or fourth of November, which resulted in several persons being killed on both sides and several others wounded.

"In a few days after this the citizens organized and determined upon ejecting the Mormons from the county, which soon after was done. During the ejection a great many outrages were perpetrated and the Mormons were compelled to leave almost everything they possessed behind them, and it was only by a hurried flight that they saved their lives. As it was, quite a number were killed upon both sides. The majority of the Mormons, after being driven from Jackson County, went to Clay County, where they were received and provided for as well as it was possible by the citizens. The Mormons remained in Clay County until 1836, in an unorganized community, when it was agreed between them and the citizens of Clay and Ray Counties that if they (the Mormons) would buy out a few inhabitants then inhabiting what is now Caldwell County, then a part of Ray County, the balance of the land being public, they could enter it at their leisure, and we would urge the legislature to create a county for them, which was done at the session of the legislature of 1836-37.

"I was a member of the legislature and drew the bill organizing Caldwell County for the Mormons exclusively, and the offices of the county were given to their people. The new county filled up very rapidly, and they made great progress in agricultural and other improvements. They continued to live prosperously and tranquilly until the summer of 1838, when Joseph Smith came out from Ohio, and soon after they commenced forming a settlement in Daviess County, which, under their agreement, they had no right to do. This occasioned difficulties with the citizens of Daviess County, and in September, 1838, a large number of citizens of Daviess and adjoining counties collected with arms in the Mormon settlement called 'Adam-ondi-ahman' in Daviess County. The Mormons also gathered at the same point, and I, being at the same time brigadier-general of the western division of Missouri, was sent out by Governor Boggs with a regiment of Clay County Militia to prevent a collision, which, after being there one week, I was able to do, and left them apparently harmonious—the Mormons agreeing that they would return to Caldwell County as soon as they could take care of their crops, et cetera.

"About one month after this, new difficulties arose between the citizens and Mormons, from what causes I never knew, which culminated in the Mormons burning and sacking the Gentile towns of Millport and Gallatin, then very small villages. A few days after this a battle took place on the line between Caldwell and Ray Counties between the Mormons under the command of Captain Patten and citizens of Ray County, under command of Captain Bogard, in which two Ray County citizens and several Mormons, including Captain Patten, were killed. The place where the battle occurred is still known as 'Bogard's Battle Ground.'

"General Atchison, who was afterwards United States Senator, was then major general of northwest Missouri, and ordered me to raise a regiment of militia from Clay, Clinton, and Platte Counties. I did so, and proceeded at once to the battle ground. The next day I received an order from Governor Boggs to take command of all the forces and remain in Ray County until the arrival of General Clark with the state troops. Being satisfied that the governor had overestimated the number of Mormons, I went to Far West, the county seat of Caldwell County, where all the Mormon forces were assembled. I sent for Judge King of the circuit court to come to my camp, and at that juncture General S. D. Lucas of Jackson County arrived with a small number of men sent out by the governor. I opened negotiations with the Mormons by going up to their lines in person. When Judge King came out I consulted with him, and upon his advice the Mormons gave up their arms and turned over to me such men as had violated the laws of the land, and those upon the other side who had done the same were arrested upon warrants issued by Judge King. It has been said that in the treaty I made with the Mormons I stipulated that they must leave the state under penalty of annihilation if they refused to do so. This is entirely untrue, as I made no stipulation. It is true, however, that in an order to me and other officers Governor Boggs used the expression 'that the Mormons leave the state or be exterminated,' whereas this order was entirely illegal. I paid no attention to it. In my report to Governor Boggs I stated to him that I had disregarded that part of his order, as the age of extermination was over, and if I attempted to remove them to some other state it would cause additional trouble. The Mormons commenced immediately after this to move to Nauvoo, Illinois, and I know nothing further about them. While the Mormons resided in Clay County, they were a peaceable, sober, industrious and law-abiding people, and during their stay with us not one was ever accused of a crime of any kind."

General Doniphan is now in his seventy-third year, but is still hale and hearty. He is a man of fine appearance and intellect, and is well known and highly respected all over the state. He has resided in Richmond during the past several years. His statements as given may be relied upon as strictly the truth in every particular. There are a few old citizens still living near Independence who were in this county during the troubles of 1833, whose statements will be given in the near future.—Kansas City Journal

All honor is due the man who defied the order of a court martial and prevented what history would no doubt have recorded as a disgraceful and unwarranted killing.

The Value of Integrity

The integrity of the upright shall guide them.—Proverbs 11: 3.

Bishop DeLapp once said, "When I am looking for a man to do any certain piece of work, the first thing I look for is integrity."

No matter what his financial standing, his social status in the community, or his political affiliation, if he did not possess integrity, he did not fit into the picture.

What is integrity? Webster defines it as "uprightness, virtue, honesty, uninjured state, unbroken completeness." Some of these words are, as Brother Ellis Short used to say, "scopetive." They include truthfulness. Regardless of what other virtues a person might have if he tells "little white lies" occasionally he lacks integrity. I have drummed this into my children: "There is no situation that will justify a lie. People may sometimes ask you a question that is so personal that you may not care to answer in the way that they would like you to do, but answer it without falsifying." A friend of mine who, when closing a real estate deal, was asked, "Now, just how much do you make on this deal?" said, "Well, on some deals I make more and on some less. On this one I think I will make less." There is always a way out.

Integrity is the sum total of all desirable traits, habits, and attitudes of mind. It is the life blueprint of those who seek uprightness. It is a guide and when strictly followed develops wisdom and good judgment. It opens the door of opportunity for us. Businessmen everywhere are looking for people of integrity.

The most helpful tool in shaping a happy, prosperous life in which integrity will be in evidence at all times and under all conditions is the idealism of the Lord Jesus Christ as revealed in his gospel and nurtured by the Holy Spirit. I recommend it to young and old.

Telling the Gospel Story

By Donald R. Bayne

FOR A RELIGIOUS PERSON of any faith or creed, the telling of the gospel story is an integral part of his experience.

Most of us have had the somewhat embarrassing experience of listening to someone tell a new or an old ideology, which in itself was not obnoxious, but the manner of presentation made us wish to withdraw.

The need of a better presentation has been recognized by most churches, and studies have been made which have resulted in changes, sometimes bringing a totally new pattern of organization for their introductory material.

The Unchangeable God

One change in presentation has been very significant. In the pioneer and colonial days of our country, it was customary for the clergy to present a story of a wrathful and vengeful God, more interested in the destruction of the wicked than in the few who might possibly, with great difficulty, qualify for salvation.

Today the popular churches present quite a different story of a God of love who has little interest in hell and punishment. The effort to frighten people into repentance has signally failed, and the churches know it. There are reasons for a shift in emphasis.

However, there is still before us the task of telling to the world the story of a "God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God" (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4).

Anonymous and Silent Saints

Many good people in the world are acquainted with members of our church who never tell them the gospel story. In fact, they never hear anything about the church. Why? Are they not interested? Do they not think the salvation of the souls of their friends is important?

We have been admonished to warn our neighbors in a particular way: "Let your preaching be the warning voice, every man to his neighbor, in mildness and in meekness" (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9). If our warning is to be effective, we must assist people in understanding what it means.

The Making of a Contact

How shall we tell the story of Christ in a way that will be representative of him and win friends for the church? It is not easy to introduce the subject and carry on the conversation in a way to win and maintain the interest of those who hear.

We cannot warn our neighbors unless we begin the conversation. It is true that skill is required to begin the conversation, but even more will be needed to guide it tactfully in lines that will give them the essential information.

Anyone can start an argument, and many things will come to mind to keep it going. Yet we must prepare ourselves to make the presentation in a way that will be a credit to the church and win a respectful hearing for the gospel.

Experiences

The engineering staff of my department was going to give a party, and an invitation was extended to all. Alcoholic drinks were served. When asked to attend I said I thought it would be inconsistent for me to go to a party of that kind and attempt to teach a Sunday school class the next day or preach the following evening. Later one of the men asked what church I belonged to, and I told him. There was the usual confusion with the Mormon church, and I found that one of the men was rather well informed on the western organization, the Book of Mormon, and other matters.

I was able to introduce our church pamphlet, Differences That Persist, which so carefully and inoffensively analyzes the facts. He agreed to read it. I have been amazed at times by the tolerance that other people show toward a faith that has good in it, even though it may not accord with their own reasoning.

There is an example for us in the tribute which appeared in the Kansas City Journal on December 12, 1914, about Joseph Smith, the first President of the Reorganization. It contained these words:

He was a prophet, but first of all he was a Christian gentleman, and a good citizen. . . . Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his creed, tolerant of all others.

This establishes a precedent for us in presenting the gospel story, in warning our neighbors and friends.

One day while I was going from Kansas City to Lawrence, Kansas, a man gave me a ride. He said that he was a minister and had a congregation in the country.

He asked a number of questions, and I sought to find a common ground of understanding, while at the same time making clear our special position, and the unique contribution that our church makes to religious thought in our times.

It was my intention to avoid contention over specific questions. After having put forth the idea that it was possible for people to become better, I introduced the need of certain helps—steps that had been used by the New Testament church and that are necessary today. . . .

We came to the end of our journey too soon and the conversation was cut short. As we parted he said that he liked our ideas on religion, which were different from those presented in theological studies but seemed logical and interesting.

While I was not able to cultivate the soil, it was gratifying to have sown the seed. It is my hope that this man will come in closer contact with the fullness of the gospel, and by faith, prayer, and thought make the steps forward into the fuller light.

Worst Coward

Of all the cowards, of all the wobbly pussyfooters, the man who is afraid of his own record is the worst. The thing that should govern a man is not what he has said, but the truth as he sees it. Consistency is a paste jewel.—WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Question Time.

Question:

Did Adam's transgression in the garden of Eden bring both physical and spiritual death?
Michigan

G. A. W.

Answer:

Yes! However the Lord held the spiritual death tentative rather than final, pending man's response to the great plan of salvation prepared from the foundation of the world, by which it was made possible for man, through repentance and obedience to his plan, to be renewed to spiritual life, thus giving to every man free choice between spiritual or eternal life and spiritual death, the promise being that those who do conform to the gospel shall have eternal life, while those who choose to abide in sin must suffer the spiritual death pronounced at the beginning.

The physical death which was passed upon all men because of the Edenic transgression was delayed in order to give to man a period in which to repent. This life is the time for repentance. "The days of the children of men were prolonged, according to the will of God, that they might repent while in the flesh; wherefore their state became a state of probation."—II Nephi 1: 107. The physical death followed not from divine anger and vengeance as has been supposed, but as an act of mercy and compassion, for it is God's way of getting rid of the evil which became inherent in human flesh because of the fall, and that by the resurrection man could be raised with recreated bodies free from inherent perversion, to possess immortality and (if worthy) eternal life.

Question:

From reading Genesis 14: 34, Inspired Version, I infer that Melchisedec's city was taken to heaven as Enoch's city was. Later in the same chapter it says Melchisedec received tithes from Abram. Could it be that the city was taken but Melchisedec himself was left to carry on? Genesis 7: 79 tells of Methuselah being left when Enoch's city was translated.
Kansas

E. H.

Answer:

The text is so far without positive affirmation on the point raised in the question that we would hesitate even to infer that the people of Salem were taken to heaven by translation as were the people of Enoch. The statement in verse 32, "And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven," refers to Enoch and his people, who were translated long before. The further statement in verse 34, referring to Melchisedec, that "his people wrought righteousness, and obtained heaven, and sought for the city of Enoch which God had before taken, separating it from the earth," would hardly lead to the conclusion that Salem was translated like the city of Enoch. Rather it suggests that they were trying to emulate Enoch's people, and did with some success. The question regarding Melchisedec being left is automatically answered in the foregoing.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

We believe that God is "all wise" and "unchangeable," and that he has a foreknowledge of the future of his people collectively. Are we not then limiting God's knowledge and denying his unchangeability when we say that he cannot foresee the future of his people individually? What should be our belief concerning this?

Missouri

Mrs. W. R.

Answer:

It is utterly beyond the power of man to comprehend either the scope or the processes of God. Yet He has assured us that he is "the same which knoweth all things, for all things are present before mine eyes," for which reason he is able to "declare the end from the beginning" (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1; Isaiah 46: 10).

Prophecy is but a forecasting of the future as seen by God, and deals with both general or social and personal affairs. Many prophecies describe persons and their works, as in the case of Moses (Genesis 50: 24 I.V., which chapter also describes the coming of a choice seer in the latter days, the birth and ministry of Christ as given in many places, and the Prophet John who was to prepare the way).

Within the narrow compass of our human mind and its limited range of thought, we cannot comprehend God in the infinity of his being. We do not know how he is able to see the future more perfectly than we see the past. But he says, "All things are before me." He can reproduce the past, as will be done at the day of judgment, and he can see the future. Nor does such knowledge upon his part interfere with the right of free agency upon the part of man. Without knowing the future acts and attitudes of individual men God could not know the social and national developments of the future, for his power in the latter case is dependent upon the former.

Infinity is so much beyond our ken that there are many things relating to God which must be accepted on faith; but when we accept them they prove out in our developing experience, and we find them true.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Why did young Joseph and his mother cross the Mississippi from Nauvoo, Illinois, into Iowa, to get to Amboy, Illinois?

A. H. D.

Answer:

There was no railroad on the Illinois side of the river. They crossed to Montrose to get a Burlington train south, and crossed over to Illinois on train to Quincy in order to get to Amboy.

Planning for Summer Camps

By Carl Mesle

Twelve Hundred Campers in '52

Typical of the remarks which fall from the lips of the youth campers was that of a young man describing his week to a buddy, "Just think! I've had the best week of my whole life and haven't had to be bad once!" Another comment came from a girl upon greeting her parents at the end of a camp (to which her parents had almost had to force her) "Oh, Mother, it's been the shortest week I've ever known. You should have been at our closing fellowship service this morning. You never attended anything like it!"—and mother and daughter began debating which had attended the best young people's prayer service.

Such remarks indicate the value of youth camps to young people themselves and demonstrate the way of life which in most church activities is taught more than lived.

Increasing recognition of these values to the church as a whole is expressed in the continual increase in the number of church youth camps. Last summer there were approximately one thousand teenagers in seventeen church camps—a number which represents quite an expansion from the twenty-six campers in the first youth camp of the church in Nauvoo in 1928. This summer there should be twelve hundred young people in our camps.

1952 Theme: "We Define Our Stewardships"

In harmony with the general church theme for 1952, as well as the reunion theme, which concerns stewardship, the 1952 camp theme is "We Define Our Stewardships." Suggested helps for worship, classwork, evening chats, and campfires are being supplied all camp directors from the Youth Office and are available to others concerned upon request.

The breakdown of daily themes follows:

- Sunday: What Is Stewardship?
- Monday: Our Heritage (Purpose)
- Tuesday: Our Personal Life (Righteousness)
- Wednesday: Our Training (Skills)
- Thursday: Our Contributions (Demonstrations and Service)
- Friday: Our Family Life
- Saturday: Our Church Participation (Perpetuate)
- Sunday: I Accept My Stewardship

Local Administration Encouraged

The establishment of new youth camps wherever possible is strongly recommended, but action should not be taken without certain safeguards. Where camps are contemplated, studies should be made to determine if there are adequate camp facilities, sufficient number of potential campers, and an available pool of potential camp leaders.

It is expected that all districts or groups contemplating new camps will advise the General Church Youth Office so the work may be co-ordinated with other camps, and so the new leaders may share in the wide camping experience that has come to the church over the years. At the same time, the actual administration of all camps by local leaders who are "on the ground" year round is encouraged. Those planning camps should seek the help of people experienced in other camps, particularly church camps, and should participate in training courses for camp leaders such as given at General Conference.

It is presumed that no local or area planning will take place without prior consultation with the Apostles in Charge and the officials of the district involved.

Those contemplating new camps are referred to articles previously published in Guidelines: "How Can We Start a New Camp?" July-August-September, 1947; and "Check Points for Church Camps," May-June, 1950. The latter article provides some good guideposts for leaders of established camps.

Objectives and Methods in Youth Camping

Contrary to normal expectations, the major purpose of a youth camp is not to indoctrinate campers with church history and beliefs, though these are extremely important, but to give church youth a living experience in Christian fellowship. The whole camp is designed to provide an atmosphere of satisfying fun and challenging adventure, set off in a wholesome spiritual environment wherein you can catch the spirit of the Restoration Movement.

To accomplish such an objective requires careful and imaginative planning. So far as possible, a wide variety of constructive and desirable activities should be provided. These may include woodcraft, nature crafts, athletics, aquatics, camping out, outdoor cooking, hiking, and whatever else available leadership and the camp setting makes possible. Supporting the physical activities should be a balance of church-centered study and discussion on an age level of those being served.

Opportunities for worship upon the highest possible level, even though without customary setting, should be assured, because it is here that the hearts of young people are captured.

Once motivated, young people like to do something about it. Service projects involving actual camp improvement are highly valuable if carefully planned, presented, and supervised.

Interwoven throughout all activities, discussion, worship, and service there must be an atmosphere of genuine affection for each other and for Christ.

Staff-Camper Relations

The tone of a camp is to a large extent determined by the attitude and spirit of the director, but without staff members who reflect the highest spiritual values in all their relations, the influence of his example is greatly reduced. There is no room among staff members in church camps for temperament or for any interest greater than that of unselfish service. The responsibility for the success of the camp, and the atmosphere, must be shared first by the entire staff before it can be caught by the campers.

Since the camper age in youth camps is fifteen through eighteen, with some camps including those fourteen through nineteen, the staff must have a balance of mature adults. Selected college age staff members will add a great deal in pep, enthusiasm, and example, but a sufficient number of fatherly and motherly leaders and counselors are essential because of their experiences which provide them much more of depth to give to campers and younger staff members alike.

To provide for the wide variety of program features and instruction expected of a camp, and also to assure personnel and opportunities for counseling, a sufficient number of staff members is a necessity. The ratio of program and counselor leadership to campers is recommended one-to-five.

As a church we are in competition not so much with other churches as with secular and worldly influences which we permit to rob Christ every year of hundreds of our young people. These competing influences are powerful in the lives of our youth and are not overcome by any but the utmost measures. Our church youth camps represent an effective weapon in our war against the influences of evil. The matter of putting our youth in camps "if it is convenient" is a halfway measure which will not suffice.

A few years ago a father drove into a youth camp and deposited his son with this comment, "Loosing my son's help this week in sending him out here is costing me considerable money, but I feel it is worth it." That parental concern and sacrifice, plus the influence of the youth camp and other spiritual forces emanating from the church, played an important part in the life of that young man. He has since been graduated from Graceland, has married happily, has been called to the priesthood, and is now giving his time freely to the church and community.

Blessed Through Administration

Our five-year-old son had not been well since having whooping cough and pneumonia when he was nine months old. We took him to various doctors, but he never seemed to fully recover. He wouldn't eat and became very thin and pale. In November he suddenly got much worse. We took him to another doctor who gave him penicillin, and he seemed to improve, but in a short while he became extremely ill and had such high temperatures we didn't see how he could survive them. The doctor said he had a virus infection in his blood. We prayed for him, but he didn't improve. One Friday when my husband came in from doing chores, I told him I thought we should take our son to the doctor again, but he said, "No, we're going to take him to our pastor for administration." After the administration, he seemed better and for a while the fever left. On Saturday, however, he became quite ill again. Since the doctor said the infection was not contagious, we took our son to church with us on Sunday and made a bed for him in the seat. After the service, the pastor and another elder again administered to him. During the administration both my husband and I had the assurance that he would be healed. The next morning he ate his first meal in five days, and he has been eating normally ever since. He feels better than he has in years, and we are so grateful for his healing that we want to share our testimony of it with others. We truly hope we shall be able to at least partially repay God for this wonderful blessing.

The Evil of Self-love

As I was reading page 154 in the Compendium of Faith and Doctrine concerning the governing of the tongue, I thought of how often we ask God for blessings when we are not worthy of them. My heart aches when I hear Saints say condemning things about each other. I truly believe that selfishness and the desire for self-glory prevents the growth of the church. Until we forget ourselves and give our all to Christ we cannot have Zion. Is it doing too much for our Father if today we forget our petty resentments and live as Jesus would have us live?

Comments on "Word of Wisdom"

After reading "Question Time" in the issue of April 7 concerning the answer to C.F.D. of Ohio, I wonder why we quibble about the use of tea and coffee, especially at church functions, when Section 86 is so clear in stating that "strong drink in any form" and also "hot drinks" are harmful. And what about chapter fifteen of Romans that says it is not good to eat or drink of anything that will cause a brother to stumble or be offended or made weak? I know of several instances when this has happened because tea and coffee were served in our churches. I was disappointed at General Conference when the odor of coffee came drifting through the door at one of our services. At Nauvoo Reunion last summer one of the General Church workers drank coffee with her meals; to me this made her teaching less effective. I have heard many people, members and nonmembers, express these same feelings.

On the Mountain Top

The editorial in the February 18 issue of the Herald brought to memory some of the experiences I had when I first joined the church. At times the spirit was with me in such force that my feet seemed not to touch the floor as I went about my work. I had a large family and worked both in the house and outside, yet I was always able to attend church with my family. I have had trouble and sorrow, but God has been with me in my trials. I pray that he will stand by my side to the end of my days, and that I may be worthy of his wonderful blessings.

Now We Are Brothers

I don't know just how these events in my life started, but as I look back over the last five or six years I know a wonderful thing has happened to me. I will begin by telling you about my acquaintance with Brother Wentzel. He was just plain Wentzel to me then. We were both electric welders at the Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Company.

We became fast friends before World War II and resumed our friendship after I returned from service.

Ivan Wentzel at that time was a small dour man of medium build, eleven years my senior. He belonged to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and was outspoken in his criticism of others. One day, he was accused of this. Somebody said, "If your family were starving, you wouldn't be so honest." Ivan hotly replied, "I would be honest." I overheard this remark, and I thought a good bit about this. I asked myself, "What does this man have? What gives him such conviction?" Somehow we got on the question of religion after this. Every working day at noon I would seek him out and we would talk. He answered many questions to my satisfaction. Through him I learned that the preachers in his church worked for a living. I became familiar with the law of tithing and realized how just and wise it was. I learned about the fall of Satan, evil spirits, et cetera. I was becoming less and less confused as he gave direct, logical answers to my questions.

Then I had a severe attack of yellow jaundice and suffered from almost unbearable worry. I had been in a confused and bitter state of mind because I did not ask guidance of God. What relief I could have had if only I had done this during the time of my illness. I got well the hard way. The Lord helped me without my asking him.

One day Ivan Wentzel brought in a blue book, The Call at Evening. At this time we were welding on the assembly line, and in between working on the railroad cars we had a ten-minute wait. These intervals occurred about fifteen times a day. In these intervals Ivan and I read this book. There was not a word of reprimand from any boss. I was thrilled as I read the book and by reading it a little at a time I "digested" it thoroughly. I thought of little else in my spare moments. The Bible really made sense after all! The proof of all statements made in the book amazed me. After two weeks I finished the book and felt that I had been inspired by reading it.

I began to reason with myself. What would happen if I joined this church? What would my wife think? I had not told her much about my new interest. Would the church accept a sinner like me? One Friday night about a year later as Ivan and I were returning to the locker room he turned to me suddenly and asked, "Bates, why don't you and your family come to church with me on Sunday?" I started to say, "no"; and then in a sudden, cheerful mood I said, "I believe I will." I remember Ivan's words to this day, "Maybe, you will receive a blessing." At this time Marguerite, my wife, and I were building a new house and we were working every spare minute of our time even to cutting our hours of rest to a minimum. However, Marguerite consented to go to church. That Sunday in May, 1948, was beautiful and warm, and a conference was being held at the Pittsburgh Branch. Apostle Jensen was there and many other prominent men including the missionary of the district, Merle Guthrie. At this time I knew little about the priesthood, but Ivan explained briefly who the men were. I remember well that day as my wife and I, Lillian, my stepdaughter, Michael and Gerard, my stepsons, walked up to the second row and took our seats. The church was full, and a testimony meeting was in session. Elder Henry Winship was in charge. Different persons were getting up to give brief testimonies. I did not hear much at first, but soon I became conscious of a new feeling—a feeling I had never experienced before. I could not concentrate on the testimonies of the others for I realized that I, too, had something to say. This feeling grew and pressed down on my soul. It was so strong I could not refuse its urge. I tried to resist it, and yet I did not want to resist. From long habit I was afraid to speak before many people. I felt inferior, but this new feeling caused me to forget my timidity. Ivan Wentzel got up and gave his testimony, and sat down again. Others got up and gave theirs, and all the while this good feeling was dictating to me. I had never experienced anything like it before. Suddenly Elder Winship arose and said, "Is there anyone else who wishes to speak? Remember, this is not for us alone."

When I heard this my heart was filled with joy by the kindness of his words. He seemed to know what I was feeling. I arose quickly to my feet. To think that this congregation would listen to an outsider was almost too much for me, and my voice trembled with emotion as I spoke. Here are my words, as nearly as I can recall: "I am an outsider. I do not belong to your church, but I have something to tell you. Before the war I yearned for a wife. Every time I thought I had met the right girl something would happen to let me know that she was not the one for me. Then the war came. I was drafted and went overseas to England. There I met a nice girl. I thought surely she was the right one, but our company was quickly moved to France, so we were separated. In Paris I met my wife, and she is with me now. Now that this yearning within me is satisfied, I am ready for greater things."

I sat down, profoundly moved. I had never experienced anything like this before. Now I realize what a marvelous work the Lord does with people.

Not long afterwards I was baptized and confirmed into the church of Jesus Christ. Since then Ivan Wentzel and I have been brothers.

Tribute to Harry Sheffer

Harry Floyd Sheffer, minister to isolated Saints in the Southwest, is dead. After suffering ill health from the age of six, he died at thirty-five, leaving a wide circle of friends.

He received his education in Oklahoma and Missouri, where the Sheffer family moved in 1933. The first services in King City were held in the Sheffer home; later a mission was organized in that town as a result of these meetings. Harry met his future wife, Shirl Winn, at Stewartville Reunion in 1937; they were married on May 24, 1942, and established their home in Phoenix, Arizona, where they immediately became active in the church. He was ordained a teacher in January, 1943, and served with devotion in this office until he was ordained an elder in October, 1945. The following year he was appointed by Apostle John Rushton to be pastor of the isolated Saints in the unorganized territory of New Mexico. He found his greatest happiness in traveling to the most remote parts of the state and ministering to the needs of the members who were not privileged to attend church. The work was to be voluntary—a spare time service—but it soon became his prime interest and almost a full-time occupation. He laid the ground work and organized the mission at Albuquerque—the first in the state of New Mexico—and supervised its activities from 1946 until 1950 when illness forced him to cut down on his work. He also helped to establish the work in Eunice and Las Cruces, but it was his personal ministry to families that gave him the most joy.

Although his was a constant struggle against illness, he felt that many times his life was spared through administration because his work was not finished. Often he arose from his bed and went out to administer to others, always with thanksgiving in his heart for strength sufficient to go to someone else's aid. Even during the last eighteen months, when he suffered most, he gave much in service to the church and his fellow-men. He had a deep sense of humility, and his ministry was one of gentleness and love. It can truly be said, "He gave his life for his church."

What Can I Give?

"Well, this is it," someone said as we drove into the parking area of Palos Park, Illinois. The dream of a retreat for the Hammond young adults was at last a reality.

As we walked up the path to the main lodge, my mind went back to a year and a half ago when we had our first young adult get-together. We had planned a potluck, and although only fifteen came (that was including the children) we felt it was a good beginning. Gradually our enthusiasm and our number more than doubled. Our potlucks became monthly affairs. We organized ourselves, following the pattern laid out for Zion's League.

The idea of a retreat for our group came up last fall. The question was, How could it ever be done? For one thing, we all had small children. Here we learned that nothing is impossible, if everyone is working toward a common goal. The older women of the branch graciously consented to care for our small ones.

Then came another problem, common to most of us. How would we pay our expenses? Palos Park's price was $5.00 a person; that meant, of course, $10.00 for each couple. We had a bake sale down town, and once again the older women helped us. We made enough to cut our expenses in half. Our main problems were solved. We made reservations for the last week end in April, and now here we were!

Palos Park is a beautiful place with huge trees, wild flowers, and picturesque buildings. All Saturday afternoon, we wandered about the camp, doing as we pleased. Our retreat didn't officially begin until supper-time Saturday evening. This was so those who had to work on Saturday would be able to get there for the very beginning.

After a substantial supper, we gathered around the piano for a songfest. Then we felt ready for some games. As the rafters rang with our laughter, the cares and problems of everyday living slipped from our shoulders, and we felt young and carefree. Just as we began to catch our breaths from so much laughter, we found ourselves with flashlights in our hands, off on a treasure hunt. The treasure turned out to be a blazing campfire with wieners and marshmallows. As we finished eating and the blazing fire became glowing embers, we began to sing the old songs so close to the hearts of those who have attended reunions, conferences, and Graceland. We said good night, and as the young women went to their cabin and the young men to theirs, we each knew in our hearts that it had been a good day.

"Six o'clock, time to get up!" I opened my eyes in time to see one of the girls pounding on her bed. Soon we were up and dressed, ready for our Sunday activities. We gathered in a small room in the main lodge for our worship service. There the theme for the day, "What Can I Give?" was presented to us. At that meeting we began to feel a portion of God's spirit that was to be with us throughout the day.

After breakfast we had two class periods. Here we tried to lay down some concrete ideas of what each of us can give in our home, church, and community.

For our preaching service we were privileged to hear Calvin French. He was driving through Chicago, so the one service was all he could attend. We were very grateful to him though, for he did much for us in that one hour. While Brother Calvin spoke, God's Holy Spirit became more prevalent than before, and the hour passed all too quickly.

After an excellent Sunday dinner we went to the dedication service which was to bring the retreat to a close. The weather was so beautiful we gathered on the side of a hill in front of the lovely little chapel where we held our morning services. Down below us was a big highway with the steady stream of Sunday traffic. It seemed impossible that people could be hurrying to and from places—we felt so far removed from the rest of the world.

As we began to sing the opening song, our hearts were filled with joy. The prayers and testimonies were short, but very humble and sincere; and we felt at peace with our Heavenly Father. As the phrase "Thus saith the Spirit" fell from the lips of the one in charge and words of individual counseling and wisdom came to us, tears of joy and humility rolled down our cheeks and our very beings shook before the presence of so great a power. As we arose to sing the closing song our souls were filled with so great a love for our Heavenly Father and for each other that our hearts seemed to be at the bursting point. We walked down the hill hand in hand, arm in arm, a joyous group.

We know that as long as we stay in touch with God, no power on earth can break the bond of love now holding our group together. Surely there can be no contentions in such a group. There will always be differences of opinion, of course, but we now feel that these can be ironed out without causing any delay in God's work here on earth.

From experiences such as this, not only will our small branch grow, but the entire church will prosper and Zion will be built!

Saturday, April 26 for their spring women's institute. The opening session was testimony and prayer service under the direction of Seventy G. Wayne Smith and Elder Victor Eklof. Sister Doris Woodstock, wife of appointee Lyle Woodstock, now of Moline, Illinois, and newly assigned to Chicago District, was the guest worker. The day's theme was "Strengthening Our Spiritual Reserves." Sister Woodstock's classes dealt with spiritual reserves in the home through church-centered youth activities and through witnessing. The luncheon was served by the Plano women's council in the lower auditorium of historic Plano church. The closing service was a dedication of the efforts of the women toward building Zion. Elder Lloyd Cleveland, district president, was in charge and was assisted by several of the district women representing young mothers, young wives, women's leaders, friendly visitors and others. Sister Hazel Blakely is the District Director of women.—Reported by DOROTHY ANDERSON

New Memorial Chapel Under Construction

HONOLULU, HAWAII.—The Hawaii district conference was held in Honolulu at Makiki, January 25-27, with President W. Wallace Smith in attendance. Brother Smith, who was making his first trip to the Islands, visited the entire district with Elders A. Orlin Crownover and Elwin R. Vest and gave considerable ministry in Hilo before returning to Oahu. From there he sailed for the mainland on February 14.

In company with Brother Smith on his return voyage were Brother and Sister Walter J. Swain, Sisters Irene Poole and Ruth Henriks of Australia; Brother and Sister Earl Moore of Ft. Worth, Texas; and Brother and Sister Russell Archibald of St. Louis.

On April 6, ground-breaking ceremonies were held for the Waller Memorial Chapel. A joint Communion service was held and was followed by a rally for the Waller Memorial Chapel, in which more than $4,500 were raised in cash and pledges.

Sister Helen Paoa Sterling passed away April 12. Representing a large and old church family, she had given many years of service to the church. She was organist in the old "gospel tent" when Brother McConley was in the Islands forty years ago.

Easter services began with a sunrise pageant directed by Maurine Crownover. This was followed by a breakfast at the church and then by the other services of the day culminating in the rendition of a cantata by the Makiki choir. Puarose Mahi was the director and Rachel Carnavas the accompanist.

Thelma Reinhardt, Rosalyn Takazawa, Nancy Terada, Joan Sakata, and Eleanor Sakata were baptized April 27. They are all from the Kalihi congregation.

The women of Honolulu and Wahiawa sponsored a bazaar May 3 under the supervision of Sister Thelma Bugbee. Over $1,000 were raised to add to the building fund.

On May 5, construction began on the Waller Memorial Chapel. After five years, the project initiated by Bishop Howard F. Miller, and into which the dreams and labors of many consecrated Saints have gone, is becoming a reality.—Reported by A. ORLIN CROWNOVER

Church Activities in Tokyo, Japan

A Report by Pat Samuela

Progress has been made in the group since the article which appeared in the Herald February 11.

Ada Sherman of Mississippi, a civilian worker for the Air Force, has met with us several times. Glen Swain of the Army in the Tokyo vicinity has visited in our home and met with Elder Crum. Eldon Armstrong of the Navy Air Force has been contacted by phone, but as yet we have been unable to meet with him personally.

Harriet Mohler of Columbus, Ohio, called recently. She arrived here in February to be with her husband who is a captain in the Army. They have two small boys. We visited in her home, and hope to have her in our group. Marvel Tice of Anderson, Indiana, arrived here in February to be with her husband, Warrant Officer O. R. Tice of the Army. They have two children, Linda and Raymond. We have met in their home and they have visited in ours.

Charles Church who is in the Army in Korea contacted Carl Crum while here on a five-day Rest and Rehabilitation. Normal Charles of Ohio who is in the Air Force in Korea contacted Brother Crum and spent the evening in our home with him, while here on a five-day Rest and Rehabilitation.

Alvin Stevens of Missouri who has been in Korea and has now been rotated and assigned in Japan was able to spend a few hours in our home while he was processing through Camp Drake. He also met Elder Crum who was spending the evening with us. Recently we had a letter from him and he had arrived at Camp Fuji.

Gerald Knutson who is on the Philippine Sea contacted Brother Crum, and also spent the night in our home while on an overnight liberty. He called recently while he was in a rest camp here in Japan after having served once more in the Korean waters.

Gaynor Fox of the Air Force just recently arrived in Japan. He contacted Elder Crum and they were both able to spend the evening in our home.

Sgt. Thelma Perry of the WAC's has been transferred from Yokohama to Tokyo. She has been in our home several times and has met Brother Crum.

Curtis Pettigrew has been contacted by phone on several occasions. He is up for promotion.

Tommy Kemple who is in Korea is still doing fine, but has written that it would be some time before he would be able to come to Japan on Rest and Rehabilitation. He has made contact with the Saints in his home branch in regard to sending a Korean boy to Graceland. I understand progress is being made toward this end.

Harold Fowler and Charles Bragg have made several trips away from Yokosuka, but always meet with the Saints while in port. Harold should be home for discharge from the Navy by the time this is in print.

Carl Crum served the first Communion ever served in Japan in January when he visited the boys of the Fortieth Division in Sendai.

We plan to have meetings once a month as soon as arrangements can be made. It is difficult for us to meet more often as most of our members are in the Armed Forces and it is not always easy for them to get leave.

Elder Crum received a letter from one of the boys in the Fortieth Division in Korea and they were all doing well, even though they were on the front lines. They had met another member since going to Korea.

Recently Elder Crum and our family made a trip to Tachikawa Air Base to meet Lyman Parsons. Elder Crum had a letter from his sister in Iowa asking him to meet him. While there, we also visited with Ada Sherman for a short time.

As soon as arrangements can be made we are planning to have a picnic for the members, to one of the many beauty spots in Japan.—

Outside Influences on the Child

By Mrs. James Ish

UNTIL A CHILD enters school, he lives in a very small world all his own. Then when the school experience begins, the child finds a new world. It is at this time the child begins to find himself.

The period covering ages six to twelve is characterized by three great outward pushes:

1. There is the push out from home and into a social group of other children near the same age.
2. There is a physical thrust into the whole world of games and sports and work, which requires special neuromuscular skills.
3. There is the mental thrust into the world of adult concepts, ideas, communication, and logic.

In these six short years children must perform certain tasks if they are to develop normally.

1. They must learn the physical skills necessary for ordinary games.
2. They must develop wholesome attitudes toward themselves as growing individuals, learning habits of care of the body, cleanliness, and safety.
3. They must learn to get along with children of their own age—to develop a "social personality."
4. They must develop the concepts which will guide their behavior socially—their everyday living. They must have help in finding a concrete basis for their ideas.

Children who have the right kind of help in performing these "developmental tasks" will come through with exciting experiences, sound in mental health, and eager for life.

HOW CAN "OUTSIDE INFLUENCES" best help the child? It seems that every child needs the influence of a good organization such as the Cub and Boy Scout movement, 4-H, the Woodcraft Rangers, Campfire Girls, Orioles, Skylarks, Junior Police, Young Men's Christian Association, Girl Scouts, or Young Women's Christian Association, for all such organizations seek to be a help to the growing child.

Most such organizations have a religious influence . . . and the joining of such organizations is a conditioning factor for adulthood. Since I am interested in the Scouting program, I shall use Scouting for an example of good "outside influence" in the life of a growing child.

The Scouting program has two and one-half million members. It is world wide; it gives the parents a chance to work with the children—to help them achieve; it starts with the boy of eight and leads him through an interesting experience to the end of high school—the Cub, the Scout, and the Explorer.

THE GROWING-UP PROCESS is often painful and the child needs the guidance of secure, well-adjusted, understanding adults. An organization such as Scouting reaches toward the needs of children and influences for good toward the meeting of those needs. Here is a list of some of those needs with suggestions on how Scouting assists in this area of the growing-up process.

1. The child needs consistent praise, encouragement, outward warmth and patience from adults. Perhaps I can point this out best by relating an experience I had with a colored boy who came into my Den of Cubs. At first, as leader of the group, I didn't want the boy in the group and wasn't sure how to act. He was very dark, and very loud. However, he was treated just like the other boys when he arrived. He was corrected like the other boys when correction was needed. I soon discovered that, with a little patience on my part (which is required normally with a group of boys), this boy became one of our best Cubs. He was always the first one to the meeting, and was helpful and polite. One day as we were taking the boys on an outing this young fellow came to me and said, "You're so good to us, I just love you!" Patience and encouragement and outward warmth had paid dividends.

2. The child needs to feel that he belongs. What better way can he achieve in this area than through an organized program? The boy of Cub age is normally an active, restless, alert, questioning bundle of energy. He is an individualist and needs to be dealt with as such. He will probably respond better to suggestion than to bossing.

3. The child needs to have independence—the right combination of independence and support. The Cub program is set up so that every child has a chance to "try it"—to do something himself—and so assists in developing self-reliance. Wise parents will make the most of this phase.

4. The child needs to achieve—to live in situations which provide more success than failure. In the Scouting program achievements are a part of the work—electives too. These give the boy something to work for, and he will probably work like a demon to get his "arrow-points." The competition is keen between Dens in a Pack, and Cubs work hard to achieve the success which is possible to be had. One of our Dens had won the cleanliness award two months in a row, and our boys were determined to work for this achievement. It was a co-operative project; each boy brought his shoe polish to Den meeting, and each polished his shoes. Mothers washed and ironed uniforms; each was taken—one at a time—for a good facial scrubbing—with a brush. Nails were cleaned and polished. Needless to say, our boys won the award—and what's more, they enjoyed doing it!

5. A child needs social approval—the opportunity for association with other children of the same age and sex. The church with its worship and educational program, and its youth activities under leadership of wholesome persons, is a steadying force. And again, outside agencies such as the Scouting movement, the YMCA, the YWCA, Campfire Girls, et cetera, will prepare the child through experience to fit into the adult world toward which he is heading.

6. And the child needs self-esteem—a sense of his own worth. Under wise guidance, with a minimum of interference, he may develop his own interests and learn to accept responsibility commensurate with his abilities.

In the Scouting program there is a motto which reaches around the world; it is "Do Your Best!" We adult leaders should try to do our best with the responsibility we have accepted. We have an important work in helping boys and young men, girls and young women to find the better way of life characterized by the giving of oneself to the achievement of the kingdom of God. So much of life these days is concerned with getting, and children often lose sight of this goal on the "higher levels." Outside influences can, and will, do much to assist in leading them toward physical, mental, social, and spiritual levels of goodness. These are lasting influences.

As a closing thought regarding the wholesomeness of "outside influences" in the lives of growing children let us consider this promise given by each Cub Scout: "I, . . . , promise to do my best, to do my duty to God and my country, to be square, and to obey the law of the Cub Pack." Could anyone doubt the good influence of such an organization as this?

Summer Vacation Without a Headache - By Aro Gail King

OH, BOY, MOM, school'll be out soon and we'll have three months vacation!"

As these words resound in your ears, do you get a sinking feeling inside? Do you secretly wish school were in session for twelve months? Do you shudder as you remember last summer when Johnny broke his arm, Jimmy set the garage on fire, various kinds of four-legged pets invaded your house, and Susan placed the Oxydol box in front of the new picture window and used it for an archery target?

If the summer does present the two-sided problem of keeping your children engaged in worth-while activities while you also keep yourself in sound mind, perhaps the following experience will help you.

One summer when my children were very small I got the idea of having a Bible story period each morning immediately following breakfast. We remained at the breakfast table, and I introduced the story while the cereal was being finished, thus catching the attention of wandering little minds before the morning "wiggles" developed. As I learned to make the most of what little dramatic skill I had and incorporated the use of pictures, I found my three children were enjoying themselves (almost as much as I was). We always closed our original fifteen-minute story period brief prayer period.

Gradually we added music to our story hour. At first I accompanied the little songs. Later this aspect of our program became even more fun when the children began to play simplified hymns.

Then I made the discovery that my kiddies loved handcraft with their Bible stories. Through the Herald supply catalog we secured dot-to-dot books, paintless paint books, and coloring pictures of the life of Christ. By this time our original fifteen-minute story period had lengthened to an hour-and-a-half program, every minute of which three youngsters and I enjoyed.

MOTHER, may I invite Mary Ann to our story hour?" my daughter asked several years after our beginning at the breakfast table.

"And can we have some of the boys in too?" demanded my oldest son (then nine).

Before I could answer either request, all three children burst out, "A Bible school, that's what we'll have. A vacation Bible school!"

"Heaven forbid," I thought to myself. I simply couldn't clutter up my house every morning with a bunch of lusty-lunged, wiggling, and often sassy little neighbor children. Where would I put them all? Anyway, I didn't feel well enough to undertake such a job.

As I was rationalizing, a thought of a different nature forced its way into my mind. A voice seemed to say, "I have provided you with countless blessings. Can you refuse to do this for me?"

The result was a vacation Bible school in my own house. My children invited their friends and, over a period of four weeks, we studied the life of Jesus, his teachings, and sang and prayed together. At first the visiting children could not pray, having never been so taught at home or in their churches, but by the end of our Bible school they were able to pray aloud, and I hope secretly also.

The co-operation and appreciation of the parents of the neighbor children surprised me. I expected to go through the usual explanation of the name of my own church and then have them hesitate because of some old antagonism. One mother even offered to help stand the expense of the school. My happiest moment came when the children, with their parents, gathered in the lower auditorium of the Denver church and presented a little program. They showed their workbooks, recited Bible verses, and sang several hymns, concluding with "The Old, Old Path."

IN SUGGESTING a similar project for other Latter Day Saint mothers who are not located near a Bible school for their children, I want to emphasize the great advantages which come to their own families. Children are sociable creatures, and here they can associate with their friends under your supervision. Your children need to acquire leadership. Here they can develop their talents as they help you plan the stories, prayers, and music. Children love to tell their friends about their choicest possessions. Here is an opportunity to let them develop this inherent trait by spreading the gospel of Christ.

You will grow intellectually and spiritually, too. Instead of sighing with relief next fall on that first day of school, you can glance back over the summer with satisfaction for at least two summers. You have helped your children have a happy vacation, and you have helped in building Zion.

Loving and Being Loved - By Marcella Schenck

WE ARE ENRICHED by those whom we are permitted to love." How rich we become will depend upon the amount of love we ourselves radiate.

Sister Marietta Walker once asked me, "Which is more important—to love or to be loved?" I was young and had given the matter no thought. I answered quickly, "Oh, it is very nice to be loved!" "Yes," said she, "but you will learn it is more important to be able to love."

How very true! Those who love the most are enriched the most. And it is truly a privilege to do that loving. Whom, then, should we love? Our parents, our family, our friends? Wait! Even sinners love their "ours." We must go beyond the common, natural instincts to reach all neighbors, teachers, and associates—all races, creeds, and peoples. Christ's advice was even to "love your enemies."

Enriched? In times of trouble and sickness, a love given out comes winging back from everywhere. The frail and aged are seldom lonely if long ago they learned to love. I once heard a wonderful teacher say, "I have never yet seen the child I could not circle to lean him against me and love him."

Permitted? Who granted the permission? God did when he created us. Abuse of that permission automatically separates us from all things love could reach. May we be worthy of the confidence of Paul when he said, "For I am persuaded, that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God."

Birth and Rebirth

By Harry Black

AS A BOY I lustily sang the words:

A ruler once came to Jesus by night,
To ask him the way of salvation and light;
The Master made answer in words true and plain,
"Ye must be born again."

It was not till I became a man, however, that I fully understood the meaning of being born again. Rather vaguely I perceived the depth of truth behind those words and my boyish wisdom looked quietly over the shoulder of Nicodemus and questioned with him as to the possibility of one's re-entering his mother's womb.

Years slipped by, and the poetic utterances of Little Jack Horner faded to the oratory of "Friends, Romans, countrymen. . . ." Yet still the essence of true birth had failed to impregnate my being.

Years slipped by accompanied by the slipping of a comb and brush over my hair. The shy glances of certain young ladies caused my heart strings to become tied in knots. Manhood stood just ahead.

One day my mother told me that my sister was expecting a baby, and that much preparation would be necessary by all the family to make sure that the child would feel at home in his new world. Shortly afterwards I gazed down into the small pink face of a new individual and noted the helplessness of his body. My sister watched him with the look that only new mothers have. Everybody seemed happy over the event, and the seed of truth as to being born again started to grow within my heart.

ABOUT FIVE YEARS after my nephew was born I entered Graceland College. There I learned more of the truths of humanity, both social and physical. The wonders of childbirth filled me with admiration for the great Creator, and more food for thought was offered to appease the hunger for light. Often I sat with my roommates and talked over the things which were offered to us in the classroom, and though we did little perhaps to find a definite solution to questions that arose on the necessity of baptism (rebirth), we kept the room warm with our heated discussions.

The years passed and Graceland became a cherished memory. I was a man among men and given the honor of speaking to men of Jesus, with a commission to go and proclaim the gospel of Christ to all, telling them of the necessity of rebirth. One Sunday I was asked to give the charge to members of a family who were to be baptized, and the thought which ran through my mind was that of physical birth. Once again I stood and looked into the face of my nephew, saw the joy on the face of my sister, heard my mother speak of the preparatory efforts which the family must put forth. My eyes were opened. How great is the joy when a new soul enters into physical life, but how much greater should be the joy when a new soul enters into eternal life. ". . . this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God."

THE BIRTH OF A CHILD represents the seal of the covenant of love between a man and his wife. The laws of nature, coupled with the affection of man and wife, produces a new being through which the attributes of its parents can be glorified.

Husband now becomes father; wife becomes mother; mother becomes grandmother; father becomes grandfather; the family becomes larger. Schedules that w so important have to be changed, and much planning is necessary to fit the new arrival into his surroundings.

The rebirth of an individual represents the covenant of love between God and man, and the new life which comes forth as a result of this birth is the culmination of love and hope. The obedience to certain divine laws coupled with the affection of man and God produces a new being, through which the attributes of God can be glorified. God now becomes father; man becomes son; members become brothers; the family becomes larger.

I no longer looked over the shoulder of Nicodemus, for the words of the song now are plain. In no other way could birth be so represented than through the ordinance of baptism; the water envelopes the body and shuts out the world for a fleeting second, then it comes forth anew, having a remittance of sins and the promise of more power from on high. Even as blood and water are elements of physical birth, so the blood of Christ and the water of baptism are part of spiritual rebirth.

Years are slipping by. For those who hesitate to accept the necessity of rebirth by immersion, I would say, "Remember that in the sight of God entrance to the kingdom cannot be gained by any other door."

First Things First

By Naomi Russell

THE Herald has long been a battlefield for ideas.

I have watched with interest the coffee war, the "land shadowing with wings" feud, the feathered-serpent conflict, and currently the battle of the dance. It is good to know both sides of these debatable topics, and the right to voice opinions is one of the truly democratic features of church policy. Yet these much-discussed issues get more attention than some of the really vital problems.

No doubt a coffeepot is the bone of contention in many homes where he drinks and she doesn't, or vice versa, but the chances are that any real arguments over the matter have their roots in some deeper maladjustment and the coffeepot is only a tangible outlet for this frustration.

The same goes for dancing. If broken marriages are accredited to the evils of the dance, it is only the symbol of some basic character weakness—generally jealousy, emotional immaturity, or downright "cussedness."

If I were asked to pick one of the most lethal enemies of happy homes I would give little thought to these outward manifestations of inner insecurity. Continual disagreement, across-the-table bickering, habitual belittling—I haven't quite decided which term is most fitting—would go at the top of my list of deadlies. Perhaps much of the husband-wife trouble originates in the fact that two people who have lived very independent lives up to the point of marriage discover that "they twain shall be one" involves a lot of compromise if their new state of oneness is to endure.

It is not easy for the average bride, who has been used to fixing only one breakfast, lunch, and dinner (if even that much), to suddenly have to cook and wash dishes for two. In addition to this responsibility she has a house or apartment to maintain—probably by herself—instead of only a room or an apartment which another girl or two helped to keep clean. She has twice the washing and ironing, and quite probably she has a budget to curb any wild desire to hire a maid or send the laundry out.

But the bride isn't the only one who has adjustments to make. The average groom finds his expenses doubled from the moment he says, "I do." He can no longer think in terms of how he'd like to spend his pay check. Most of it will go for food, rent, utilities, medical bills, clothing, and entertainment for two. He may be irritated more than a little by the way his inexperienced wife spends the household allowance, yet if he is not tactful in suggesting a better use of the money he may start a chain of arguments that stretches to the end of their lives together.

BESIDES FINANCIAL MATTERS there are physical adjustments to make, varying temperaments to cope with, in-laws to consider, and frequently differences in cultural and religious interests to be worked out. Added to this in a year or so will probably be a baby who demands a great amount of time, attention, and money. It is not difficult to see why some marriages end in divorce. It takes a tremendous amount of patience and understanding and unselfishness, plus the magic of love, to build a marriage that will last.

I am amazed at the lack of common courtesy in many homes—the uncontrolled tempers, the peevishness, the jealousy, the unthoughtfulness, the near sadism people who are supposed to cherish each other indulge in. None of these need to be permanent fixtures in any personality. Temper can be overcome. I know of a man who used to become so violent when someone crossed him he would pick the offending person up and throw him on the floor, yet he has succeeded in subduing his fury by promising himself he will walk away from his offender before he loses control. He has to walk several miles sometimes to use up the adrenalin, but he does it.

The jealous person often finds his solution in increasing his own personality assets. By overcoming his feelings of inferiority, he has little to resent in others.

Sadism—the kind that drives a person to berate or abuse others—usually stems from some inner fear. If the person who refers to members of his family (or anyone else) as stupid or incompetent or otherwise abnormal can find security in himself, he will have no need to belittle those about him.

I CANNOT OFFER suggestions for the solving of all humanity's problems, but I am convinced there are people who, because of personal experience, can speak with authority on how various human weaknesses can be overcome. Personal testimony can often help more than any other type of therapy. Alcoholics Anonymous makes good use of this practice, and I see no reason why the same principles can't be applied in other fields. Along with coffee, feathered serpents, biblical terminology, and dancing, I'd like to read some articles or battles that have been waged against jealousy, temper, contrariness, selfishness, arguing, criticizing, envy, impatience, fear, and emotional insecurity. These are the things that most often frustrate the individual and undermine family stability. These are the real enemies of the Zionite way of life.

* THE FLOOD IN MISSOURI

Only when you have lived and traveled in Missouri for some time do you begin to realize that it is a land of great rivers. The major streams of the north central states either cross it or wash its boundaries. If you travel in any direction you will cross many bridges. Transcontinental traffic depends on them. Here are some of those rivers: Missouri, Mississippi, Illinois, Ohio, Des Moines, Grand, Osage, Kaw, and many smaller ones.

Among all the rampages of nature—which the insurance companies with mild blasphemy call "acts of God"—there seem to be none more terrible and destructive than the flood. Take earthquake, fire, hail, and tornado—the flood is still an awful thing.

"When It's Springtime in the Rockies" the warm Chinook winds blow upon vast fields in the north and west, melting the winter's snow and filling thousands of streams and tributaries like brimming cups to spill into the outstretched arms of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. Overflowing their banks, they cut across farmlands, gouge out trees, float homes away and smash them, crush bridges, wash out highways, drown cattle, and drive numberless snakes out of the bottom lands into the hills. Last year it was the Kaw that went berserk, and in Argentine and other places on the Kansas side it still looks like "The Land of Desolation."

This year it is the Missouri. A "flash flood" may be over in a day or two. An earthquake lasts a few terrifying seconds. A tornado is gone in a few dreadful minutes. But here on the Missouri we live with a flood for weeks, and weeks, and weeks. Warnings come from the Weather Bureau. In a few days the river begins a gentle rise. You are not impressed. It becomes bankful, and your feelings change. Foot by ominous foot it creeps up the sides of the levees. The National Guard protect the threatened areas. Hordes of men work day and night putting sandbags on the weak spots, building levees higher, higher, higher. Inch by inch the water creeps up, licking hungrily with tongue-like waves at the earthworks, soaking and weakening them, seeping through, going underground and spouting up in geyser-like "sandboils" that must be ringed with bags of earth like small fortresses. In some places battles are won, and homes, lands, and factories are saved. In others, brave struggles are lost, a section of the dike collapses before the wall of water, and the flood pours through like an evil thing.

Out in the center, the stream races with the speed of a train—dark and muddy—boiling, swirling, twisting, writhing like an angry snake. Trees, logs, parts of houses, bodies of drowned animals rise to the surface, roll over and disappear again.

On the sides, wide lakes cover fields and crops. Houses, barns, and trees stand soaking their feet in muddy water. There will be a grim clean-up job when the owners go back.

Some young church men, interested in the rich lands of Missouri, are studying these floods and their causes under scientists at the universities. Our future welfare depends on these studies. There is a battle to be fought—and we hope someday to be won—against the violence of nature. It will affect today's children and their children's children after them.

The Stranger Within Thy Gates

"I have been a stranger in a strange land."

—Exodus 2: 22

YOU HAVE OFTEN SEEN the small, plain sign that appears inside of some restaurants and places of business:

WE RESERVE THE RIGHT TO REFUSE SERVICE TO ANYONE

I have wondered, "To whom does it apply? How does it work?"

It could be for drunks. There are enough of them, and decent people do not like to be disturbed. Not a bad idea. Is that what it means?

Last night I found out.

IT WAS LATE. I was on the way home. The bus stopped in a town at a regular station restaurant. I was hungry, so I went in, ordered something, was served, and began to eat.

In a moment I became aware that something was not going well at my right. A young man, also a passenger on the bus, hungry too, was asking for something to eat. The waitress, standing under the sign quoted above, was in awkward confusion, and told him three quick lies in an effort to avoid serving him. Finally she said, "I cannot serve you here."

I looked at him. He was clean. He was well dressed. He was polite. He had the money to pay. But he was not allowed to eat in the only place open at that time of night.

He arose quietly and said softly, "It's okay," and went out.

Why was he refused service?

The place was clean, but as common as a town pump or a horse-trough. "White" men in dirty clothes were served. Untidy women, sometimes a bit intoxicated, had been served there. A "white" man who was really darker of skin than this young man was served that very night. It wasn't primarily a matter of color. It was a matter of race.

I thought that I was inured to feelings about such things. One sees so much in public that is revolting. It does no good to feel. I tried to continue eating. But suddenly I knew that my food would not go down. It was much more likely to come up.

I picked up my check and paid. I, too, went outside into cleaner air.

It was not okay with me. I was sick at the stomach. I was sick at heart, too.

THIS YOUNG MAN is a citizen of the country. He was born here. His parents and grandparents were born here. It is the only country he has in the world. He cannot go to any other. But he is rejected—socially, commercially, and in many ways. All the rest of his life he will go on enduring embarrassing experiences like this, for something that is not his fault, for something that is not wrong, for something he cannot help. I was sick when I remembered that my people do that to his people.

At home he has a mother, sisters, and a father who get just such treatment in public places.

But the young man is healthy and subject to the draft. Soon the government will tell him that he is wanted to fight to defend "democracy" against Communism and aggression in Korea.

He is good enough to fight and die for the country. But here at home there are people who think he is not good enough to buy food when he is hungry. He may die defending that woman who wouldn't feed him. (She wasn't responsible; her employer had given the orders.)

He is good enough to fight and die, to defend you and me, that we may live in comfort and safety here in this land. But we do that to him.

How do you figure it out?

I will probably never go in that place again to spend any money. I wouldn't feel like it.

WE ARE AGAINST the caste system in India. We think it is cruel, stupid, outrageous, and abominable. We have tried to get them to abandon it. Their country will be an economic morass, a spiritual desolation, a political hell, until they do. But we maintain a caste system in the United States.

Our sociologists invented a term, a euphemism of contempt, for the discrimination against Jews under Hitler. They called it "second-class citizenship." Yet we have enforced second-class citizenship upon some of our people. We are no better.

I didn't make any protest in that restaurant. Like the colored man, I went out quietly. But he went out bravely. I did not. I didn't know what to do.

What should I have done? What would you do? . . . Now just keep off that soap box and tell the truth. What did you do the last time you saw something like that? L.J.L.

If we could read the secret history of our enemies, we should find in each man's life sorrow and suffering enough to disarm all hostility.—Longfellow

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The recent Missouri River flood was a history-making spectacle in many ways. Not the least spectacular was the manner in which the residents of the Council Bluffs-Omaha area united in the successful all-out effort to keep the angry waters from homes and business establishments.

Because there is a heavy population of church members in this area, the flood naturally affected living conditions of many of them. A letter from Elder V. D. Ruch, pastor of Council Bluffs Branch, describes the situation:

For several days I have been trying to find time to write a brief report of the flood conditions which recently threatened our city. Council Bluffs has just passed successfully through the greatest crisis of its history. The largest volume of water ever seen in the Missouri River Valley came roaring down from the north threatening the very destruction of this community of 46,000 people.

The flood stage of the river here is 19 feet. The highest the river ever reached before was in 1881 when it crested at 24.60 feet. This time the water reached a height of 30.24 feet. After a flood in 1943 levees and dikes were built on both sides of the river for 23 miles to protect Omaha and Council Bluffs against any flood up to 26 feet. The water had never been that high before, so everyone thought both cities were safe.

When word was received from Army engineers up the river that we could expect a crest of at least 30 feet and perhaps 31½ feet a frantic effort was started to save our city and to evacuate all of the families living west of Sixth Street, which amounted to nearly 30,000 people. All of these families along with their furniture and belongings were moved to safety. The people living on high ground were wonderful in opening their homes for the evacuees. The Red Cross set up twenty-three shelters for those who didn't have anywhere else to go. Our church had the oversight and management of one of these shelters where 76 people stayed for more than a week and received their meals. Much praise was received for the efficient manner in which our shelter was conducted. In addition to that many of our ladies were engaged in making sandwiches, coffee, soup, cookies, etc., for the thousands of men working out on the dikes and levees.

Every able-bodied man and boy in the city as well as hundreds from outlying communities worked twenty-four hours a day building the dikes and levees higher for twenty-three miles in length to protect against the anticipated crest. The levees were patrolled constantly and watched for any leaks or weaknesses that might develop. The moment one was spotted hundreds of men were rushed to the place with thousands of sand bags to strengthen it. All kinds of heavy dirt-moving machinery were moved in from miles around to be used in the fight against the river and several National Guard units helped. All unessential businesses were closed for the emergency.

Very few people thought the fight could be won. It seemed such a hopeless thing to battle against the relentless strength of the river which seemed determined to destroy everything in its

OFFICIAL

INSTITUTE ON FAMILY MEMBERSHIP CANCELED

The Institute on Family Membership, scheduled for June 1 to 7 on the Graceland College Campus, has been canceled.

Officers at the college announced that problems of transportation due to the gasoline shortage, and lack of advance registrations make the cancellation advisable.

path. But such an exhibition of unity and co-operation as was displayed here has seldom been seen anywhere in the world. Many people were praying, but as they prayed they worked realizing that if they expected God's help, they had to do all they could themselves. As the water got higher and higher everyone knew that unless God intervened a terrible disaster would take place and our city would be left desolate. City officials, engineers, army personnel—nearly everyone—openly and frankly expressed themselves as feeling the need of God's help if we were to win against the "Mighty Mo." The levees were becoming saturated with water. The more desperate people became the harder they worked and prayed. I have never witnessed anything like it before. As the crest approached it was an anxious and tense time. Would the levees hold? People had their radios on constantly night and day listening to reports and expecting to hear any moment that the levees had broken and the city was being flooded.

They knew that if the dikes broke a wall of water 10 to 15 feet high would come roaring down through the west end of the city sweeping houses before it as if they were match boxes.

The crest came at 30.24 feet. The dikes and levees held. The water began to recede. After being away from their homes for 10 or 12 days the people were privileged to move back and to find them just as they had left them. What a blessing! About 620 of our members had to be evacuated. That is just about half of our congregation. If those 328 homes that were represented in that evacuated group had been destroyed or even badly damaged, it would have been a terrible blow to the work of the church here. Council Bluffs has played an important role in the history of the church since 1847. Our present branch will have been in existence 90 years on May 18. Since I have been here the Spirit has witnessed to me several times that God has yet a great work to be done here—far greater than that which has been done. I sincerely believe that the best years of this branch are in the future.

Our new church will be finished next fall. We believe that will be a great help in the onward movement of our work here. I sincerely believe that God walked in our midst, manifested his power, and saved our city. If he did there must be some reason for it. I believe he saved the city for the sake of hundreds of people who will yet accept the gospel here. He saved the city for the benefit and blessing of unborn generations. God has helped us in so many ways in the building of this new church. Without his help we could not have gathered the funds or obtained the materials necessary for this project. After helping us in the marvelous manner he has he would not allow Council Bluffs to become a ghost city which people would avoid. The work of the church looks brighter to me here than it ever has. Great things are yet before us. I trust that as officers and members of the church we may measure up to God's expectation so that through us he can accomplish his great purposes here.

In Omaha about a dozen church families were evacuated from the East Omaha and Carter Lake sections, and many members spent long hours of duty on the levees. The Ace Construction Company, owned by church member Parker Erickson of Omaha, responded to the need for dike building and levee repair by putting many units of huge earth-moving equipment into the fight on the Council Bluffs side.

The Four Horsemen

A sermon given at Liberty Street Church, Independence, Missouri

By Apostle M. L. Draper

AMONG THE DRAMATIC SCENES of the Revelation of John is the strange parade of the four horsemen described in the sixth chapter. The first horse is white; the second is red; the third is black; and the fourth is described as "pale." The descriptions of the riders are interesting and significant. The first one carries a bow and has a crown on his head. The second carries a sword and has power to "take peace from the earth." The third has a pair of balances in his hand. The fourth is called death, with Hell following after.

The symbolism of color is significant. So are the objects and other descriptions. We can identify the historical movements described symbolically in this prophecy by interpreting the meaning of the color, the descriptions of the riders, their activities, and the information given by the voice which John hears as the horses appear.

The White Horse

In another part of the vision, John sees a white horse again.¹ This one is enough like the one of the sixth chapter to justify the belief that he is describing the same movement in each case. In the second appearance, the horse and his rider are definitely identified as the "Word of God."²

The additional information given in Revelation 19 is that the name of the rider is called "The Word of God." This suggests the identity of the white horse and rider of the sixth chapter. There, too, the vision represents the going forth of the "Word of God."

We observe that the rider carries a bow. There is no mention of arrows. He goes forth "conquering and to conquer" and in the nineteenth chapter is described as making war in righteousness. When a bow and arrow are used, it is the arrow which causes bloodshed and death. This rider, making war in righteousness, evidently is to conquer without bloodshed. The bow is a symbol of power. The absence of the symbols of bloodshed suggest that the power is a conquering movement of the Word of God, overcoming in a war of righteousness the enemies of the kingdom of God. Paul wrote to the Romans, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."³

What does the crown stand for? It is an insignia of governmental authority. The crown of the rider of the white horse obviously represents authority.

The white is consistent with the rest of the symbolism since it stands for purity, suggesting cleanliness and sanctity.

The total symbology suggests a movement of purity and truth, of power, and of authority, identified as the Word of God. It has been suggested by some that John sees the New Testament church of Jesus Christ. But consideration of another statement in the Revelation will show that this is not the case. In the beginning of the vision John is invited by the angel to "Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter."⁴ This was about A. D. 96. The New Testament church had already been established for some years. This horse and his rider could not represent the New Testament church as something to come "hereafter" in A. D. 96. We must look for another revelation of the Word of God at a later time.

An Apostasy

There are those in the Christian world who believe in the apostolic succession of the church from the days of Peter down to the present time. There are many others who believe that there was a falling away, a departure from the faith. Paul says:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.⁵

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.⁶

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed." This was about twenty years after the ministry of Jesus, and Paul says that already some were removed from the gospel of Christ and led into perversions of the faith.

We are among those of the Christian world who believe that there was such an apostasy. We are not among those who believe that the losses of apostasy can be restored by reformation. If there were such losses in which men forfeited the right to represent their Heavenly Father, only he could take the initiative to restore that right. A new revelation of the Word of God was necessary.

Israel to Be Scattered

When the Master answered the questions of his disciples: "When shall these things be which thou hast said concerning destruction of the temple and the Jews; and what is the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world?" he said, that men should hate them and persecute them and revile them; that nation should lift up sword against nation; that there would be famines, pestilences, and earthquakes. Then he said, "See that ye be not troubled; for all I have told you must come to pass. But the end is not yet." The Scripture goes on to say that after the scattering of the Jews, the destruction of Jerusalem, wars and troubles among men, it would be as eagles gathering together around a carcass—"so likewise mine elect shall be gathered from the four quarters of the earth." There shall be wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, and other calamities. The Master then significantly says, "Again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."⁷

This, then, is the sign of the day of God's judgment. God is too fair to judge men without a standard known to them by which they can be measured. He will not judge men in terms of the gospel of Jesus Christ until he has first made it possible for every man to know of the possibilities in his own being through obedience to the principles of truth. So he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature."⁸ He also said, "And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." He will not judge men until the standard of judgment is set up, and men are given an opportunity to measure up to that standard.

It is apparent that John saw in vision that which the Master had prophesied. He saw that sometime after the New Testament days there would be a new revelation of the Word of God—typified in its purity, authority, and power by the white horse and rider, with bow and crown, going forth in a war of righteousness.

The Restoration

This new revelation of the Word of God was the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in 1830 under the prophetic spiritual impulsions which quickened the heart and mind of the young prophet Joseph Smith in fulfillment of the prophecies. Some of these prophecies deal with features of the Restoration Movement.

Isaiah tells of the appearance of a book containing the words of those from Jerusalem who have slept in the dust.⁹ This is related to the work of God among men which Isaiah calls "a marvelous work and a wonder" which is to cause the meek of the earth to increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.¹⁰ The translation of the Book of Mormon as a miracle of divine power fulfills this prophecy. Its testimony of Jesus comes to us from descendants of former inhabitants of Jerusalem, and through it many have increased their joy in the Lord.

Another reference to the records of the Word of God, related to John's vision of the coming forth of the Word, is in the prophecy of Ezekiel. He foretells that the "stick of Joseph" (the Book of Mormon) will be united with the "stick of Judah" (the Bible), and "shall be one in mine hand."¹¹ The mutual testimony of these records is that Jesus is the Savior of men. Though written by peoples of common origin who have become widely separated from each other, developing diverse cultures, experiencing differing social and national events, these records are truly one in testimony and revelation. With this added support from the uniting of the testimony from two peoples, the Word of God bearing the message of the Saviorhood of Jesus goes forth conquering and to conquer.

Prophecy of the Great Image

Another prophecy supporting the revelation of the Word of God in the last days is in the record of Daniel. The prophet tells of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar in which the king sees a great image.¹² It had a head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet part of iron and part of clay. Daniel interprets the dream for the king, telling him that the sections of the image represent the appearance of nations or empires upon the earth. He says that Nebuchadnezzar himself is the head of gold. Given this starting point, we can follow the fulfillment of the prophecy through the history of subsequent events.

The Babylonian empire was succeeded by the Medo-Persian empire, represented by the breast and arms of silver. Following that came the Grecian empire—the belly and thighs of brass. After that came the Roman empire, later divided into eastern and western Rome, represented by the two legs of iron. Then came the division of modern Europe and Asia into the various nations represented by the feet and toes. That these nations would not enjoy unity is indicated by the description that the feet and toes were of mixed iron and clay, which do not cling together. "In the days of these kings," Daniel said, "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."¹³ The prophet saw a succession of historic events culminating in the latter days¹⁴ with the manifestation of the power of God as "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands"¹⁵ in the sending forth of his Word through the setting up of his kingdom, never to be destroyed.

There is no question that the appearance of the white horse with his rider is representative of the restoration of the gospel and church of Jesus Christ in the latter days, which we believe had organic expression through the organization of the church under the prophetic direction of Joseph Smith on April 6, 1830.

The Red Horse

There went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given him a great sword.¹⁶

Now comes a horse whose rider has a sword—obviously the symbol of bloodshed. Moreover, power is given to him to take peace from the earth, and people are to kill one another. The horse is red. Undoubtedly it is the color of blood, associated with death and destruction, which leads us to use red as a signal of danger.

The symbolism seems to be consistent. Sometime after the appearance of the white horse (that is, after 1830) a movement which causes bloodshed is to appear. The description of the red horse and rider is strikingly warlike. When the prophecy says that "peace" is taken from the earth, this seems to indicate that men are not to know ever again, until the fulfillment of the purposes of God through his kingdom, any sustained periods of peace.

This increase in the tempo of warfare which actually takes peace from the earth is foretold in some of the prophetic utterances of the prophet Joseph.

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willet that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth.¹⁷

In other words, this prophetic utterance says that not in 1831 when the prophecy was given, or 1835, perhaps, or even in 1840, but soon, peace shall be taken from the earth.

Prophecy of the Civil War

On Christmas Day, 1832, the prophet delivered this warning message:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place: for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations.

And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war.

And it shall come to pass also, that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn.¹⁸

The state of affairs in 1832 might have led others to prophesy in their own wisdom that the nation was headed toward civil war. Unrest in the state legislatures included discussion of possible secession in some instances, notably South Carolina. But the conditions causing the friction seemed for a time to be improving, breaches in national unity seemed to be on the way toward elimination through Henry Clay's Compromise Tariff Act of 1833. In the lull which appeared to further national peace and unity following the prophecy, the wise among men might have scoffed at the warning of the prophet. But those who believed in the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith were so bold as to publish the prophecy of the rebellion in Liverpool, England, in 1851—almost ten years before the events it foretold began to occur. In the words of Brother Elbert A. Smith, "Time vindicates the prophet!"

Though it may have seemed to worldly-wise men that this was a false prophecy because of the apparent trend toward solution of the problems between the states after the prophecy was delivered, yet the prophetic wisdom stood the test of time. In 1860 South Carolina did secede, followed by others. The Civil War began. The Southern States did call upon Great Britain! Strained diplomatic relations occurred between the North and Great Britain when two of the South's emissaries, Mason and Slidelle, were taken by northern naval forces off the British ship, "Trent." Alliances and treaties, both secret and open, were formed and have been formed in continuous succession in modern Europe's "balance of power" politics. When the "balance" was disturbed in 1914 the disastrous result was the First World War, and its second chapter, the Second World War. The implication of the prophecy is that such will continue until men learn the way of the kingdom of God, for peace has been taken from the earth.

The Black Horse

Some time after 1860 we can look for the appearance of this horse. His rider has a pair of balances in his hand and there is a voice saying, "A measure of wheat for a penny and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."¹⁹

In the highly commercialized civilization of our time, it is easy for men of evil designs to take advantage of their fellows. Adulteration of packaged products, particularly foodstuffs and medicines, has led to the enactment of numerous laws for public protection. Could the prophet be describing social pressures for legal protection against such adulterations in the words, "See thou hurt not the oil and the wine"?

Then, "A measure of wheat for a penny and three measures of barley for a penny" sounds like price legislation. Farmers are being told today that minimum prices are guaranteed for their products through government subsidies. On the other hand we also have price ceilings ostensibly to protect the public from being exploited in ruinous inflation. These parallels indicate that the black horse has to do with modern commercial activity. His rider seems to be concerned with commercial relationships leading to price setting and social legislation for public welfare. That commercialism is the setting for the functions of this horse and rider seems a safe assumption.

Trouble and Justice

What does the black suggest? Black is the color for mourning. Black veils, black suits, black arm bands are used in mourning a death.

This is a peculiar situation. The color represents trouble; the balances represent justice. How do we reconcile them? Our purpose is to find a movement in which the motivation is justice and social welfare against the background of modern commercialism, but which is accompanied by trouble and distress.

Such a movement is trade-unionism. Our industrial civilization with its factory production methods has fostered the growth of trade unions which has from the beginning claimed as its purpose the establishment of economic justice and social welfare. Hence the balances, and the social legislation, related to price control and pure-food and packaging laws.

There have been humanitarian purposes in trade-unionism, but there has been trouble. It has been accompanied by bloodshed, loss of life, destruction of property, and loss of productive time on the job, altogether too often without any significant relationship to social welfare.

The black horse comes in the sequence revealed in the prophecy, some time after 1860, and more specifically about 1880-1890, continuing to carry on his purposeful activities to the present day.

The Pale Horse

And I looked, and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.²⁰

The description of this movement is sufficiently clear to require no explanation. Death, misery, famine, depravity, moral degeneration, the very judgments of God on rebellion and sin are portrayed here. The conditions accompanying the pronouncement of the angel of judgment seem to be described. "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication."²¹ The message of this angel follows that of the Restoration angel, "And I saw another angel . . . having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth."²² Similarly, the horse and rider of judgment over the earth follow that of the Word of God as revealed in the Restoration Movement of 1830.

This condition is to exist over the fourth part of the earth. The earth has a land area of about 55,000,000 square miles. This is in comparison with water area of 192,000,000 square miles. In other words, the land area is 27.9 per cent of the total. Though not all the land area is thickly inhabited, it is on the land that man lives. One might well say, then, that the habitation of men (the land area) is under the judgment of the law of God in that "the wages of sin is death" and the result of rebellion is hell. The systems of the world are built on human selfishness. Jesus rightly said, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight . . . but now is my kingdom not from hence."²³

Hell Follows After

Since the kingdoms of this world are morally unsound they can only be maintained, and temporarily at that, as men fight. With growing technical knowledge and skill, men's fighting becomes increasingly vicious. We are now living in a period in which men have at their disposal forces of physical violence, physiological and bacteriological weapons, and economic powers. Practically every technical skill achieved by man can now be used for destructive purposes. Godless

Marriage in Abraham's Day

By Israel A. Smith

A STATEMENT I made in all sincerity which was published by Time has caused quite a furore in the Mormon camp: I suggested that if Joseph Smith became a polygamist, "then he broke the law of God and the laws of the land, and to that extent was a fallen prophet."

A number of Mormons have written me, also one or two cranks, and Mr. A. William Lund, Assistant Church Historian at Salt Lake City, has published his views about the matter in the Deseret News (Church News) of recent date. Since better and abler men than I have taken the same position for many years, including Joseph Smith III, my own father, I have marveled at the perturbation on the part of Mr. Lund and others of Utah.

On examination of the statement complained about, in the light of undisputed facts, I see no reason to modify it, and I believe I was justified in the position I took:

On August 17, 1835, a General Assembly of the church was held; certain revelations given through the Prophet were presented and each one by a unanimous vote approved and accepted as the law of God. Nobody can deny that monogamy was on that day adopted as the rule of the church on marriage. Not only do the revelations accepted then fix that rule upon the church, but by separate resolution—not purporting to be a revelation—Christian marriage was set forth as the rule of the church, with specification that its purpose was to relieve the church of being falsely accused of polygamy.

Thereafter, so long as that rule was not abrogated or rescinded by action of the church (general or "sacred" assembly or General Conference), or until another and contrary rule was adopted by either of those legislative bodies, any member becoming a bigamist (one who marries while still legally married to another) would thereby violate the law of the church. One who violates the law of God is a sinner—he "falls" from grace into sin. Joseph Smith was amenable to the law of the church just as any other member.

WAS THE RULE of the church on marriage which was adopted and fixed on August 17, 1835, ever rescinded or in any way modified prior to the death of the Prophet?

Even if we could believe Joseph Smith received a revelation commanding him to take plural wives, could he have complied without violating the law of the church? One who enters into sin undoubtedly "falls" to the extent of the gravity of his sinning. Need I spend any time or energy on the nature of polygamy as characterized by Jacob in the Book of Mormon! Besides, bigamy was a crime under the law of every state in the United States during the years 1835 to 1844. The Prophet would have been guilty of a felony had he married any woman as a "plural" wife.

I challenge Mr. Lund to show (1) any action by the church prior to June 27, 1844, by which the law of marriage was changed, or (2) that Joseph Smith was ever relieved from the necessity of observing the rule adopted in 1835.

Furthermore, my statement was conditional, and I specifically denied the premise; no amount of sophistry or specious reasoning can justly construe my letter as saying that Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet. I have never so believed or so stated. And I said nothing about him being a false prophet. I have never so believed and have never so stated.

Mr. Lund says:

If Joseph Smith became a fallen prophet because he gave to the Church this revelation, and because he had plural wives, then Israel, to be consistent must also maintain that Abraham was a fallen prophet, notwithstanding the fact that the Scriptures call him "the friend of God," and notwithstanding the further fact that the Lord called him out of his own country and placed upon him his name with an everlasting promise that Abraham's descendants should be the chosen people of the Lord. Moreover, promising him that all, henceforth from his day, who accepted the gospel should be called his "seed" and through this blessing they should receive "the blessings of salvation, even of eternal life."

Then again to be consistent, Israel must maintain that the ancient patriarch and founder of the twelve Tribes of Israel, after whom Israel A. was named, also must have been a fallen prophet, and yet the Lord blessed him and made the descendants of the twelve sons by Israel's four wives, Leah, Rachel, Bilhah and Zilpah, his chosen people. The Lord said that when he divided the inheritance of the sons of Adam, he did so according to "the number of the children of Israel, for the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob (Israel) is the lot of his inheritance." How it must trouble this grandson of the Prophet to be called by the name of such a character!

Here is where Mr. Lund is illogical: his conclusion as to Abraham is a non sequitur. Is there any record that God, prior to Hagar's appearance, commanded Abraham to have but one wife and one wife only? He certainly was not under the law as stated by Jesus. To have a true parallel, Abraham must first have been forbidden to have more than one wife, and, later, to have been commanded to take additional wives. Besides, Mr. Lund overlooks the material fact that the Lord did not command Abraham to take any wife. It was Sarah who directed Abraham to receive Hagar.

IT IS TRUE that every implication of the stories of Adam and Eve, Noah, Isaac and others is that the Lord of Creation placed the seal of his approval on monogamy. But there seems to have been a dearth of specific divine instructions on that question.

Reverend T. K. Cheyne, D.D., in Historians' History of the World, Volume 2, page 30, says:

The scientific historian of today looks askance at all unverified traditions of antiquity, and it is becoming more and more common to begin the history of Israel with the Egyptian sojourn, or at least to treat the prior history of the race as merely traditional.

How much beginning with Genesis 13 is tradition and how much fact?

Another bit of Lund illogic is that blessings bestowed on Abraham means the Lord approved everything Abraham had ever done! He was blessed, and the covenant was made to his children because of his great faith in God. Mr. Lund adds something to the covenant (on his own motion, I assume), but I do not find biblical reference to acceptance of the gospel.

For Mr. Lund's enlightenment I was not and am not named after Jacob (or Israel), except perhaps as to time; but this is very, very immaterial and irrelevant. His argument with respect to Jacob is as weak as his showing regarding Abraham. Where was there any specific rule of marriage theretofore established by divinity which could have been either honored or violated? There was none.

Mr. Lund also says:

Then still again, the Lord himself must have fallen from his exalted throne, according to Israel A., when he went so far afield as to place the names of these twelve sons of the four wives of the ancient Patriarch Israel on the gates of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, where they are to remain forever.

Here Mr. Lund does not read far enough. True, the Lord directed them to place the "names of the children of Israel" on the stones to be put upon the shoulders of the ephod "for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel." Mr. Lund limits this to the twelve sons. By what authority? Jacob had more than twelve children; but there were only twelve tribes established. And these twelve tribes were mentioned in scores of places in the Bible as the "children of Israel," meaning the members of all the tribes—all of Israel. The children of Israel—not the sons of Jacob—were obviously thus honored by the Lord.

Brother Lund again gets facetious and speculates on how I should feel if I should be permitted to see the New Jerusalem and there find the names of polygamous Jacob's sons on the gates. He is again in error, for when that happens, I shall know the immediate sons of Jacob are not honored, but the millions of their descendants—the great tribes that made up ancient as well as those of modern Israel.

And I am not as "self-righteous" as Mr. Lund, because he has already judged me and thrust me out of his own Holy City, while I say to him, "Let the Lord judge between me and thee."

Of course the children are not condemned for the conduct of their fathers, and the Lord will continue to bless all people on their own merits.

One thing more—the Mormons are not willing to leave Isaac and Moses outside their select polygamous circle, while as a matter of historical accuracy, neither had more than one wife. Why does not Mr. Lund bring up David and Solomon!

Now I aver that both the Hagar and Bilhah episodes were but tribal customs, and Mr. Lund would surely not give all Mesopotamian tribal customs the approval of Divinity. I quote from Lights From the Ancient Past by Jack Finegan, pages 54 and 55:

Other materials which have an important relationship to biblical narratives are found in the tablets from Nuzu. In the second millennium B. C. this city (cf. p. 39) was a provincial center of the Hurrians. The latter were a people who seem to have come into Mesopotamia from the north in the second half of the third millennium and who became a dominant ethnic element throughout the Middle East during the second millennium B. C. They were the Biblical Horites (Genesis 14: 6, etc.), but aside from the few references to them in the Old Testament have become known only through the archaeological discoveries of the last two or three decades. At Nuzu thousands of clay tablets were found which had been written by Hurrian scribes in the Babylonian language but with the occasional employment of native Hurrian words. The bulk of these tablets date in the fifteenth century B. C. or just shortly after the Old Babylonian Period. Since transactions of all kinds are recorded in them, much information is given concerning the life of the people.

Among the customs and laws which the tablets reveal to have prevailed at Nuzu are many which cast light upon incidents recorded in the Bible and particularly upon events of the patriarchal age. Adoption was frequent at Nuzu, and in particular childless couples often adopted a son who would care for them when they were old, bury them when they died, and be heir to their estate. It was specified, however, that if, after the adoption, they had a son of their own, the adopted son would have to give way to the real son as the chief heir. This provides a legal explanation for Genesis 15: 2-4 where the heir of the childless Abraham is expected to be his slave Eliezer, until the promise is given that a son of his own will be born to become his heir.

Marriage contracts at Nuzu contained a provision obliging a childless wife to provide her husband with a handmaid who would bear children. This explains the action of Sarah in giving Hagar to Abraham (Genesis 16: 1f.) and of Rachel in giving Bilhah to Jacob (Genesis 30: 1-3). According to the Nuzu documents the offspring of the handmaid could not be driven out, which shows that there was a legal basis for Abraham's apprehension over the expulsion of Hagar and her child (Genesis 21: 11).

Halevy is quoted in The Historians' History of the World, Volume 1, page 505, in writing about marriage among the Hebrew children:

A contract was necessary for legal marriage . . . if anyone has married a wife but has not drawn up a contract with her, that woman is not a wife.

When did Jacob contract with Leah?

In closing, I restate the one hurdle the Mormons cannot make. I say give us the book and page of the record where the church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830 is shown to have taken any action rescinding

May I Share Some Experiences With You?

When we have a thrilling experience it stirs in our mind and we wish to tell it to our friends. If we get a firm grip on the coat lapel of a friend, as Brother Griffiths used to do, we are sure of an audience. He can not get away gracefully. When we put the story in print our friends may turn from it and depart, and no hard feelings, since we "know not what they do." So that is understood.

I. Viewing a Great Picture of the Crucifixion

The day before I left Los Angeles in February to return to my home in Independence, in company with my son Lynn and family I went to Forest Lawn to view a picture of the Crucifixion. Forest Lawn Cemetery is very much like a vast park with hills and valleys, lawns and flowers and trees, and here and there a shrine or church dedicated to a special purpose. In the latter class is the Church of the Last Supper, devoted exclusively to a great stained glass reproduction of Leonardo da Vinci's magnificent painting of the "Last Supper."

This church and its famous stained glass window is one of three shrines planned by the board of regents of Forest Lawn to commemorate the three epic events crowded so close together in the closing days of the life of our Lord: the Last Supper, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection. The second building fitting into this project was dedicated one year ago, in March, and is known as "The Hall of the Crucifixion." The third one is yet in the lap of the future. We went to visit the "Hall of the Crucifixion."

I was but poorly prepared in my expectation for what I saw. Lynn and Lorene had purposely left me open to a surprise. When at last we were seated in the big assembly room with many other visitors, and curtains were drawn aside and flood lights turned on the picture, I was amazed to see a painting one hundred ninety-five feet long and forty-five feet high, and as great in quality as in size. Kipling visioned a time when artists "shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comet's hair." Here was a canvas vast enough to entrance mundane mortals; too big for any gallery in America, the "Hall of the Crucifixion" had been built especially to house it.

Jan Styka, a Polish artist, had spent much time in and around Jerusalem studying and making sketches, and long years in Poland putting his vision on canvas. His palette and brushes used in that work had been given by his widow to go with the picture and were displayed in another room.

In the background in this great picture were the hills and mountains around Jerusalem. In the nearer background were the outlines of old Jerusalem with its walls. In the middle foreground was Calvary.

In the center of the groups of people on Calvary stood the Christ—erect, composed, awaiting the crucifixion. Before him were his mother, other relatives, and some of the disciples. At one side stood Lazarus, Mary, and Martha, his dearly beloved friends. Then there were groups of priests and rabbis, members of the Sanhedrin, and Roman soldiers. And at one side multitudes flocked up the hill.

In a picture of that size the figures in the foreground were nearly if not quite life size. They seemed to be alive and moving in a setting so real that it appeared to be more than a painting. As the unseen narrator told the story of the Crucifixion, an arrow of light moved about over the canvas to indicate a particular group or point of interest being discussed.

The people who listened sat in silence, and there was no question concerning the profound impression upon them and the reverent attitude of most of them. I hope to see that picture again. If you visit Los Angeles do not fail to see it.

I was reminded again that down the ages men have borne witness to the greatness of Christ through every means of expression that humanity commands: art, architecture, music and song, oration and sermon. Yet the greatest witness ever borne for him, and the one in which he takes delight, is transformed lives. There was Mary Magdalene, so depraved that people said she had seven devils. Converted, she became one of the first witnesses to the Resurrection. There was Peter—at first violent, profane, ignorant—who became the great apostle. Paul, devoted to the slaughter of the Christians, became the greatest missionary of all time.

The gospel is yet "the power of God unto salvation," capable of transforming lives as it did of old. It is the work and mission of the church to develop men and women whose lives will be a greater witness than any painting or cathedral, which must in time fade and crumble while the immortal soul shall endure.

"This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

II. The First Sermon in Two New Churches

Theme: "The Open Door"

Recently I have had the pleasant experience of preaching the first sermon in two new churches. The first of these was in the new Lamoni church for which so many people planned and waited so long. The second was in the new Slover Park Church in Independence.

Of late years we have been building or buying a considerable number of new churches in different parts of the world. Others are in process of construction. We have been more careful in selecting our building sites—to have them advantageously located and in a good neighborhood.

We have given more and better attention to the planning of our church buildings, particularly to make preparation for the care of children and young people in the general setup of the church school.

Personally, I am jealous for the prerogatives of the pulpit. I hope the ministry of preaching shall not lose its dignity and authority and influence, but I believe I am no less enthusiastic for the ministry of teaching. Jesus said, "Go preach"; but he is also quoted as saying, "Go and teach." The ministry of teaching opens a field to many who have that talent. It reaches more persons in the average congregation than are reached from the pulpit, and it reaches many of them in the early, formative years of life. Here is a field right at home in every congregation which is both missionary and pastoral and challenges particularly young men and women who have the gift and hence the calling to minister in this way.

Christ gave two commissions, both of them after his resurrection. The missionary commission was "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." The pastoral commission was "Feed my lambs; feed my sheep." For some reason, and I think deliberately, he mentioned the lambs first. I am enthusiastic about the reawakened interest in missionary endeavor and the well-thought out, well-planned, and well-implemented missionary program.

Perhaps I am not altogether enthusiastic about the architectural lines of the new Lamoni church. However, the tower breaks the flat lines; and there is a church bell, and I love a church bell. Also in California I have seen so many variants in styles of church buildings that I have developed a tolerance. Be that as it may, the Lamoni church in its interior arrangement is, I believe, the best equipped church that we have in the world to minister to children and young people; this is as it should be, because the church in Lamoni has an opportunity that is not had in any other one of our congregations.

I refer to the steady flow of young people to Graceland College, coming from many parts of the United States and Canada, from Europe, Australasia, the British Isles, and the Islands of the Pacific. We may presume that in years ahead these will come in increasing numbers and also young people from other fields.

The church in Lamoni in past years and up to the present time has ministered to many of these young people. It will continue to put its mark for good upon many who, coming to Graceland, are not only willing but desirous to receive the ministry of the church in a church building dedicated to that purpose.

So as I, an old-time preacher, preached in a modernistic church edifice, having before me a congregation including many young people from Graceland, a text came to my mind: "Behold, I have set before you an open door, and no man can shut it."—Revelation 3: 8. The temptation was to go back to the old days in the old brick church for my theme. The challenge was to look forward, as Paul admonishes: "This one thing I do, leaving past things behind, I press forward."

May I add that I found the assembly room, known as "The Sanctuary," a pleasant room in which to preach. The altar arrangement is symbolical of the Restoration Movement. Across the front of the altar in raised letters is the legend, "If any lack wisdom let him ask of God." Then on a higher level is the response, "This is my beloved Son, Hear him."

I preached the first sermon in the new Slover Park Church in Independence on Easter Sunday. At present only one unit of the church is complete. Classwork will continue in the old building formerly occupied by the congregation, which will take care of the church school very well for the present. This church has a beautiful, well-planned main assembly room for the ministry of preaching, and the choir loft that morning was occupied by the junior choir.

I have had a personal interest in the Slover Park Church through association with friends numbered in its congregation, also because the Slover Park congregation is the direct result of missionary endeavor. I remember when Liberty Street mission was founded and occupied, I believe, in a hall, and seemed to have little promise for the future. In fact, when I invited an elder to preach there one Sunday he refused, saying, "When you find an appointment worth my time let me know." He was a good man ordinarily, but something must have gone wrong on that occasion. Others thought the little mission was worth their time, and presently there was a very fine congregation of the church on Liberty Street. Liberty Street Church, in its turn, sponsored the Slover Park mission. It very soon grew in numbers and became an organized congregation occupying a remodeled dwelling house; now it is moving into its new church building.

In most of the branches I have been able to visit recently I have been rather surprised and greatly encouraged to see the increased percentage of children and young people as compared to years past. I found this true in the Slover Park congregation. Again I was reminded of the old, well-loved text: "Behold, I have set before you an open door, and no man can shut it."

Not long ago my neighbor, Sister Shippy, handed me a poem which was first used in the program at the opening of our newly purchased church in Pasadena. I read this poem several times with increasing admiration and interest. It was written by Sister Nelda Thompson, one of my relatives, daughter of Evan and Earlita Inslee, and granddaughter of Apostle Heman C. Smith of pleasant memory, and Vida E. Smith, author of "The Old, Old Path." I was happy and rather proud to close my sermon at Slover Park with Nelda's poem entitled, "The Open door."

Why the Church Discourages Dancing

As I See It

DANCING IS A WORD that conjures up many different pictures to many different people. It is viewed as everything from a harmless, lighthearted form of pleasure to a dangerous source of constant temptation to human weakness. Opinions vary widely and are dependent upon many factors of experience and conviction.

More than a half century ago two brief General Conference resolutions were adopted which in essence simply urged church members to avoid dancing as a practice "likely to lead their minds from Christ and the gospel." In the intervening years many other resolutions have been long forgotten, but those discouraging the practice of dancing continue to live as almost a part of our doctrine. While it might be difficult to determine exactly what circumstances led the Conference delegates of 1886 and 1893 to vote as they did, it might be worth while to try to analyze those elements in dancing which still lead many and varied individuals today to discourage its practice as being potentially harmful to the best interests of "Christ and his gospel."

There are many kinds of dances—social, square, folk, and ballet, and some people even include musical games. Forgetting for the moment the important matter of outside environment, let us start with the assumption that the church were to consider sponsoring all forms of dancing. In which forms would it be considered innocent and in which dangerous?

What of musical games? They seem to supply sociability, rhythm, generally wholesome gaiety, hand-holding, arm-swinging and other elements designed to get people acquainted. To set the stage for other activities, selected musical games might seem to have their place.

Tap and ballet provide vigorous physical exercise and audience interest. Real ballet can be most graceful, tap quite clever and entertaining. They are show pieces, but because they are not done as a group they add little to sociability. The tragedy of tap as taught to children and young people is that it seems generally to place the emphasis on physical glamour, thus giving it an undesirable pro as a source of entertainment.

THE QUESTION of folk dances creates something of a dilemma. The association of the term "dance" condemns it in the minds of many people. Some folk dances would seem to belong more appropriately to the area of musical games while others include more of the ingredients found objectionable in the social dance. For that reason care must be taken in pronouncing all folk dances harmless.

The revival of square dancing and its renewed popularity in many communities draws attention to its value as a socializer and tends to put the stamp of approval upon it as a worth-while and harmless form of recreation which, in limited quantities, it might be. On the other hand, it is not difficult to obtain examples of church participation being seriously cut and the course of lives turned away from the church when square dancing became the practice.

To illustrate, in recent years a young woman and her husband busy with church activities, business, and home affairs turned down an invitation from their married friends to join in a square dance club. Later she remarked, "So many scandals came out of that square dancing club!" Apparently even in square dancing there are problems created by the practice of one man dancing with another man's wife or girl friend.

Another problem resulting from public square dancing is that it is not at all unusual for a square dance to slide into a "Paul Jones," which is a transitional movement ending in social dancing with chance partners. Many a square dancer has suddenly found himself expected to waltz or fox-trot, whether or not he could or desired to, and in a situation where it was difficult to break from a partner without giving offense or embarrassment. And that brings us to the social dance.

THE CASE FOR SOCIAL DANCING is heard on all sides from those who enjoy and promote it. It does provide opportunity for companionship, offering to the accepted dancer a sense of belonging, the development of social ease, a measure of physical grace, and seemingly greater matrimonial opportunities. Recognizing that there are some advantages to social dancing, let us try to see why within the last year, for example, the Central Kansas Methodist conference went on record urging the 1952 World Conference of Methodists to protest against the growing "evils of dancing."

Confining the problems of dancing within the church once more, let's try to see what would happen if our church should approve social dancing and our Zion's Leagues should sponsor it as one of their activities? One way to find out is to check up on some of the churches that do. From one of our larger congregations comes the story of a joint evening's party by a Zion's League with a young people's group of another faith. The Zion's League was to put on the first half of the program and the other group the second half. In preparation the Leaguers worked up a number of typical League games and stunts. When they had used up their half of the time they turned to the other group and said, "Your turn now," but the other group said, "Oh, no, this is too much fun; let's play some more of your games." And so they continued. Before they realized it, the time to go home had come and they drew the party to a close. As they left the Leaguers apologized to the others for monopolizing the program and asked what they had planned to do. Their spokesman said, "Oh, we were just going to dance." This report jibes with the experiences of many of our young people who have found real satisfaction in working up parties of their own and who, upon reporting the activities of some other church youth groups, have said, "Oh, all they do is dance."

CREATIVE PARTIES which require some ingenuity and exercise of creative imagination in their planning and executing should be enthusiastically encouraged by the church when they develop leadership and stimulate the satisfactions of personal and group accomplishment without objectionable results. Dancing, in contrast, is so easy to provide that groups continually fall back upon it in a lazy sort of way and miss the fun and experience which comes in continually reaching for new and creative party ideas. Time and again young people new in the church or who have joined an active League have been heard to say, "I never knew parties could be so much fun; all we ever did at our parties was dance."

How ballroom dancing ever came to be called social dancing is something of a mystery, for there are few group activities more antisocial than so-called "social" dancing. Partners who like to dance together resist any infringement on their privacy, and tag dances often create ill feeling.

The Mormons include dancing as one of the four major areas of instruction for their young people. Upon questioning, our missionaries in Utah and other members closely associated with Mormon congregations have reported the concern seemingly held by many officials of that church over the continual cropping up of liquor and other undesirable influences in the church dances as well as their loss of young people from the ward dance to the downtown dances where the big-name bands and orchestras play. A few other faiths permit dancing under church sponsorship, but many others believe as we do that it carries with it too many problems to make it worth the risk. Safeguards which always have to be set up are too easily broken down.

Other writers have treated the question of dance music with more authority* and completeness than is possible here, but the music associated with dancing creates one of the major objections. At its best, popular music occasionally reaches a high quality, but the best is not used as standard dance music. There is ample authority that there is a lessening of moral restraint under the influence of common jazz or dance music. The regular dance crowds are rarely satisfied with the best in popular music but patronize bands which provide the kind of music required to give them increasingly bigger thrills. The moods which result eventually degenerate to a sensual level—with lyrics to match. It is at this level, generally slipped into quite unconsciously, where girls and fellows—and even men and women—get into trouble, where the stage is set for the loosing of passions which at best leave heartaches and deep confusion, and at worst end in divorce, suicide, and even murder. Fortunately most persons who enter into dancing don't go this far. Other forces in their lives bring them up short of the pitfalls which they may not even have suspected lie ahead. Others find out too late. Nevertheless, deliberately stepping into any situation which artificially stimulates the physical passions is too much like stepping off a ten-story building and trying to stop at the first floor.

*See "Music of the Dance," by Alan Tyree Saints' Herald, March 17, 1952.

THIS BRINGS US to another major problem of dancing—that which most concerns parents and others interested in the normal, happy development of youthful lives free from tragedies and scars and dominated by spiritual rather than sensual motives. Just as dance music is designed to arouse the sensual emotions, so are the intimacies of the dancing positions and the bodily movements found in most social dance steps. The comment of a dancer, "Where else can I step up and put my arm around a perfect stranger," would seem to lay dancing open to the charge so often brought against it of providing the setting for a round of "promiscuous necking." Such a suggestion is resented by those who see only the rosy hues of dancing, but others more honest if not more experienced recognize it. For example, in a recent Public Affairs Pamphlet So You Think It's Love! we find the following:

Recently a university president expressed concern that on his campus the pattern was rapidly becoming one in which a boy danced all evening with the same girl. "Dancing is no longer sociable," he said. "They don't exchange dances; they don't even talk, they just put their arms around each other and walk around." A college student put it a little differently when asked why he wasn't going to a dance. "Frankly," he said, "I don't like dancing. Dancing to me is just petting to music."

It is difficult in such an atmosphere, whether in the church or outside, to resist that which the whole environment is designed to create. Even high school students who dance much soon learn that the most popular part of the dance is apt to be the intermission when it is possible to break away from the crowd and to express more freely the course of action suggested on the dance floor.

Whether or not this is simply the opinion of church members or of "old fogies" may be indicated in the experience of one community where the mayor, a tough, politically minded nonchurch man, instructed the city recreation director that he was to have nothing to do with the local teen-town where social dancing was the major activity, because, as he expressed it, "The administration cannot afford to be involved in a scandal." Apparently he had reason to believe that social dancing, even well chaperoned, can bring undesirable results.

ONE OF THE PROBLEMS in trying to explain to young people the reasons for the church's traditional stand discouraging dancing lies in the fact that few of those who have been through the dancing mill from beginning to end, and who might know the answers, are left to bear testimony of the results. They simply have not survived either the influence or the pitfalls, or if they have they are reluctant to tell their story. Most of those in positions of leadership and active in the church have had limited personal experience, if any, in dancing and consequently find it more difficult to explain their stand. Many of them have simply accepted on faith the church's stand, while others have had something greater to hold to when the choice between dancing and church activities became apparent.

If social dancing is difficult to defend as an activity in the church, how much more difficult it is to justify it in the typical dance hall environment. Should the church be in the position of introducing and encouraging its young people to take part in an activity which by its very nature induces people to moods and actions of self-gratification and therefore away from a concern for the welfare and best interests of others?

Could the church by compromise expect ever to accomplish its purpose? League dances would probably increase attendance, at least at the dances, but what would it do to the quality of League worship? If we have adult leaders who are incapable of giving strong leadership to our present program of wholesome recreation, how can we expect them to give strong leadership in the establishment of the necessary safeguards to dancing? Probably the major function of our social activities and study is to set the stage for worship experiences which lead us toward the presence of God where his purposes may be made known. With the many degrading influences surrounding us, even in the finest of our American communities, do we have any right to ask the church to encourage an activity of such questionable nature, or should we look to the church for something better?

MORE AND MORE, through the spirit of inspiration, the church is emphasizing the positive aspects of life rather than the negative. While some churches are compromising with dancing this church has endeavored to develop youth of a quality which recently caused one high school principle to say, "Why is it that Graceland College always gets the cream of our graduating classes?"

There has been a change in recent years from denouncing the negative to emphasizing the positive. This is perhaps best illustrated in this particular relation by the 1934 General Conference Resolution on Leisure Time, which says, in part,

Whereas the problem of the wise use of leisure time concerns human life and conduct ranging from questionable commercialized amusements to creative church service, and . . . whereas it is impossible to specify all the ways in which leisure time may be used not in harmony with the ideals of the church, and therefore the futility of attempting further to secure righteousness by legislative action, . . . BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED: That the pastors, members of the priesthood, and all others (especially parents) having direction of all the activities of the Saints, reaffirm their belief in the wisdom of restraining our activities so as to exclude any and all forms of amusements and uses of leisure time which in any way tend to break down our moral standards, or which would hinder our spiritual development, and that we further be urged and trained to give special attention to developing creative interests and abilities which will lead to the realization of ideals of the church in the daily lives of its members.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints have been instructed to be a distinctive people. How can we be different if we join the world in its questionable activities? We have many young people of the church standing out in their schools and communities who do not depend upon false props to make them popular. They enter ably into the various fields of school, community, and church activity which encourage the development of skills and interests which make dancing relatively unattractive and unnecessary.

Even the young people of the world follow capable leadership. Actually many young people, particularly fellows, do not especially care to learn to dance but a great number are driven into it by the social pressure of "Everyone's doing it," and by those who promote dancing for their own personal gain. As in the instance of the young people who preferred typical League games to dancing, the church can and must provide leadership for more creative and satisfying activities. Every school and community needs leadership in assembling forces to make right popular. No other church holds to standards as high as ours or for better reason.

THE CHIEF BUSINESS of the church is to develop persons who are ruled by their love of God and their fellowmen rather than by a devotion to the satisfaction of their physical desires. The church's task is to build into the lives of individuals convictions which will lead toward God rather than away from him. By its very nature, therefore, the church has no choice but to include in its program only those activities which prepare the way for or actually provide spiritual growth and to omit any activities or influences which would tend to lead to dominance of the physical.

There is no longer any serious question of the survival of this church. The church is not only surviving but is growing and on the way to becoming an influential church. The real question is, What kind of church is it to be? What kind of influence will it exert before the world? The early Christian church stood for the purest of life. When it became "accepted," it grew in numbers but at a cost in quality. As it adopted the standards of other religions and compromised with its own deepest convictions it lost its moral integrity and spiritual leadership.

To illustrate, there is the example of service which the small but effective Quaker sect has demonstrated to the world. The example of the Friends has probably done as much or more to challenge the larger denominations to render Christian service on a world-wide basis than any other single factor. Our example, too, is being observed. Recently a prominent minister of another faith in Independence made a comment to this effect: "My ministry here has been one of the finest experiences of my career. Your people [R.L.D.S.] have given us standards to shoot at." The calling of the church of Christ across the centuries has been to the highest standards of personal righteousness expressed, not in inaction or in compromise, but in exemplary action in everyday living. That challenge to the highest standards is our strongest point, our most rewarding gift.

For this church to go on record approving as a perfectly suitable form of recreation any activity which time after time has demonstrated its power to warp human life would be like the Catholic church's approving gambling on the practical basis that "it's human nature to gamble, so let's have the church make the profit from gambling."

IT IS MY CONVICTION that this church should never place itself in the position of compromising with social dancing purely on the basis that "it is driving members away," or that "everyone else is doing it," or that "young people will dance anyway, so let's have them dance in the church." That is equivalent to saying, "Let's start them dancing in the church," or as the Catholics would do, "Let's teach them to gamble in the church." If ever it can be shown, scientifically and beyond real doubt, that people can be taught social dancing and encouraged in it for the advantages it may offer without any serious possibility of its warping or retarding their spiritual growth, then this church should reverse its stand. If sufficient evidence were produced, or opinion brought to bear, to indicate that our members could engage in social dancing with considerably less danger than we have presumed, it would seem wisdom to recognize it at least as one of the less desirable forms of recreation. Such a stand might reduce or eliminate most of the unfortunate clashes of opinion over dancing which have divided people. It would, however, still be our responsibility to concentrate our church and league efforts on the teaching and promotion of those recreational activities most desirable from the standpoint of youthful fun and spiritual growth.

It has sometimes seemed unfortunate that the earlier Saints picked out dancing as a practice to be avoided when no mention has been made of such customs as parking, petting, et cetera, which, while usually associated with dancing, are often engaged in by "reputable" persons who wouldn't think of dancing. The difference is that the latter two activities are frowned upon by nearly all churches and most parents, while dancing is not. We have simply drawn the line at a higher level, as we have with smoking; and those who choose to live at a lower level thereby frequently remove themselves from the fellowship of Christ's church.

The tragedy is that because of our inability to make our position understandable, we have too often been guilty of far worse sins than are committed by those who, not understanding, have chosen to dance. By a "holier than thou" attitude rather than one of Christian love we have contributed to their loss. Because we have lived below the standard in other respects we have lost their confidence and have given them ample excuse for indulging their own desires. Because we have violated the Word of Wisdom to the serious detriment of our health and substituted excuses in place of keeping the law, we have driven away those who were ready to be challenged to the highest levels of life—then turned and blamed them for our own negligence.

This church has been given a mission, part of which may be caught up in the text, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved," and another part in "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Verbal floggings or gossip do not generate love; they express, rather, condemnation, with a "thank God that I am not as other people" attitude. Virtue, kindness, encouragement, and understanding are the qualities necessary to save people from their own weaknesses; they do not drive people from the church unless those individuals choose, as many do, to turn their backs on the spiritual qualities of life in favor of the physical.

As expressed in the 1934 General Conference Resolution on Leisure Time this church stands for the highest and finest in recreational activities, leaving it in most instances to the individual or group to determine which may be most valuable and which least helpful in the attaining of their goals. Because of our lessons of the past as well as present, there will probably always be those who, recognizing the dangers in social dancing, will earnestly seek to share their convictions with whoever will listen, regardless of what resolutions may stand on the books. May those who arrive at such convictions seek to share them with skill and genuine Christian love.

Question Time

Question:

Is it a common practice in all branches of the church for the wife of a priesthood member to accompany him on all visits to the church members?

Answer:

No, it is not common practice. Although the Doctrine and Covenants does not state specifically how priesthood members are to "visit the house of each member," it is quite evident the ministry thus required must come from an authoritative priesthood. The priesthood, however, must perform this ministry in the spirit of wisdom, and this might indicate that it is wise for the minister to take his wife on some occasions, particularly if he would otherwise have to make the visit alone. It is suggested by the church that priesthood members visit two by two when possible.

SYLVESTER COLEMAN

Question:

In the beginning of creation was man made perfect before the fall of Adam?
California F. G.

Answer:

Man was made innocent but not perfect—innocent because he was without either sin or righteousness, having done no wrong and no right, and having no past experience and no knowledge. This is true whether the word "beginning" in the question is meant the beginning of man's spiritual creation before he was in the flesh, or the beginning of carnate life, as with Adam in Eden and others at birth. All knowledge of the spirit life is withheld on coming into the flesh, and man at birth makes a new start. The Lord has said, "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning, and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again in their infant state, innocent before God."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

In the beginning of human life man was imperfect because perfection is the result of development along right lines, and that by personal initiative. God cannot give a man as outright gifts such attainments as experience, knowledge, wisdom, and righteousness; they can be attained only through self-effort. It is by such as these that perfection is reached. Acts of volition performed according to the law of right lead on to righteousness and perfection, as the Lord has said, "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same" (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8). The man who acts in violation of law cannot be sanctified nor perfected, neither can the man who remains in indolence, doing no positive acts of right or wrong. His very passivity becomes a sinful barrier to perfection. God provides every necessary means for man's becoming perfect, but man must do the work. The law of all life is growth by internal activity. Perfection is conformity with Christ.

Question:

I took Christ as my Savior ten years ago. Am I not saved now? E. C. D.
Colorado

Answer:

The Scriptures make it quite clear that salvation is not a single act but a series of acts continuing throughout our entire lives. No one is "saved" until he has completed life successfully in the eyes of God (Philippians 2: 11-16). Salvation is from the heart and not just "in" the heart. What we do counts, and why we do it also counts (I Corinthians 13). Through obedience to the principles of the gospel we will enjoy the power of God unto salvation and go on unto perfection (Hebrews 6: 1, 2).

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

What became of the stone box that the plates were found in? Mrs. J. L. B.
Washington

Answer:

This is the question we asked when visiting Palmyra and Hill Cumorah in the summer of 1927, the centennial year, with President F. M. Smith and Elder John A. Gardner, church publicity agent. We were told by old residents that for many years remains of the stone box were still on the hill, but that by the action of souvenir seekers the pieces were one by one carried away until all had disappeared.

We were also informed that seekers after gold dug a number of holes in the side of the hill in possible anticipation of finding gold relics which they imagined might have been there. This could easily be believed since we found traces of such diggings still visible. The account of the stones disappearing is probably correct.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is a church member justified in disobeying any law of the land because he believes it to be unfair and only man made?

Mrs. H. D. C.

Michigan

Answer:

The whole tenor of the Scriptures, and particularly the Doctrine and Covenants, makes it the duty of every man to honor the law of the land, holding that in such obedience will be found liberty; while disobedience inclines to anarchy and terror. Disregard of law by any considerable number threatens the foundations of government and leads toward the breaking down of all civilization including the church.

Jesus taught and showed respect in obedience to Caesar and the Roman law. He has told us that there is no need for the man who keeps the law of God to break the law of the land, and has counseled the people of his church to "be subject to the powers that be." It is not for the citizen to judge the righteousness or validity of the law for himself, the constitution providing for legal processes to that end through the courts, so that no man is justified in assuming the prerogative of making himself a judge of the law or becoming a law unto himself. Every man's security lies in obedience.

Groups' Projects

YUMA, COLORADO.—Elder Gerald Gabriel spent two weeks in Yuma from April 15 to 30 conducting a missionary series. Cottage meetings were held in the homes of members. A baptismal service was held at Wray, Colorado, May 3.

An all-day meeting was held at the church April 27, with the pastor, Walter Lutz, in charge. Brother Gabriel showed slides.

Recent ordinations to the priesthood include Forrest Lutz to the office of priest; Frank Buchanan to the office of elder; Bernerd Buchanan to the office of teacher; and Donald Korf to the office of deacon.

A district priesthood retreat was held in Denver, Colorado, May 17 and 18, and the Yuma priesthood attended. From there they went to Pinecrest to help on the construction of a youth building.

Sister Edna Buchanan is the choir leader with Sister Velma Foos assisting at the piano. Approximately fifteen people serve in the choir. New robes have been purchased.

Sisters Darlene Korf and Janey Buchanan supervise the primary church school, and Teacher Bernerd Buchanan directs the adult church school.

Donald Korf was recently appointed as solicitor for the Yuma Branch.

Priest Forrest Lutz represented the branch at the General Conference.

The "Go-Getters," young adult group, meet twice a month at the homes of members. The first meeting of the month is a study hour and the present topic being studied is Differences That Persist. The second meeting is a social hour. The group has varied projects. One has been the beautifying of the church grounds. In March a bake sale was held to raise funds to buy United States and church flags which will be used in the church. In February the group painted the church basement. Pastor Walter Lutz and his wife Fay are the leaders.

"Loyal Workers," the women's department, hold meetings the second and fourth Tuesdays of the month. The first meeting is a study period, and at present the group is studying Tapping Spiritual Resources. The last meeting is a social hour. Sister Margaret Korf is the women's leader. The group sponsors the church leaflets and annually a St. Patrick's tea, to which everyone is invited. A Polish family has been adopted and packages are sent regularly. They also give donations to organizations, including the hospital, crippled children, and W.C.T.U. There are twenty-five members in the women's department.

The regular church supper is held the last Wednesday of the month, with a program under the direction of Sister Ruth Lutz. In May, a formal supper was held, and slides were shown by Brothers Settles and Gabriel. —Reported by MARGARET C. KORF

Increase in Tithing Statements Filed

SOUTHERN AREA.—District President James E. Renfroe and Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin visited the following branches in the Arkansas-Louisiana District during April 21-30: West Monroe, Louisiana; Dalby Springs, Texas; Texarkana, Winthrop, Grammis, Hot Springs, Bald Knob, Fisher, Hardy, Jonesboro, and Caraway, Arkansas. This was Bishop Baldwin's first visit to several of these branches. The new lots recently purchased at Texarkana were checked and location discussed with the pastor, Frank Owens. The tornado damage at Dierks, Judsonia, and Bald Knob was inspected and terrible destruction noted. Bishop Baldwin spoke in each branch on the theme of "Stewardship." He could not speak each night however, due to a case of laryngitis. Brother Renfroe spoke in his place on these nights.

Brother Baldwin reports several districts of the Southern Mission show good increases in tithing statements for January and February of 1952. In Arkansas and Louisiana the following is reported: 16 in 1951, 46 in 1952. Gulf States reports 49 in 1951, 151 in 1952; and Southern Indiana 39 in 1951, 43 in 1952.

Women Hold May Day Breakfast

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—The women's department held their annual Christmas party December 13 at the church. Secret-sister gifts were exchanged.

The annual Christmas program was held at the church December 23. The children presented a playlet, "The Beautiful Christmas Story." The congregation brought their gifts to the altar. The Zion's League gave a musical pantomime, "These gifts I bring," at the evening service.

Priest George Pegler was ordained an elder January 27. Elder I. E. Turner officiated, with Elder A. H. Hartman assisting.

The 1952 Arizona state conference was held at the Mountain House Lodge at Tucson on February 1, 2, and 3. The theme of the conference was "Of Such Is the Kingdom." General church appointees present were Seventy Russell Ralston and Evangelist William Patterson. Elder Marion Blakely was state coordinator; Russell Wood, secretary and treasurer; Grace Wood, registrar cashier. The following classes were taught: children, Phoenix and Tucson teachers; young people, Seventy Russell Ralston; adults, Evangelist William Patterson. Approximately ninety people attended.

The women's department, under the leadership of Hazel Doon, meets twice each month at the church. The following projects have been conducted: food sales, silent auction, and three church dinners.

THE OPEN DOOR

Dear Lord, when we open this door today, erased may it be of age
And new as a virgin vellumed book; but before we turn the page,
The first of countless leaves to come, numbered alone by thee,
May we pause, and with reverent fingers clashed think of the days to be—

Days when the door is opened wide to the holy, the heart in doubt,
The cynic, the prayerful, the sad of soul, who have found it dark without.

The young, the aged, the bowed with grief,
the loser who longs to win,
The joyful, the sick, the misunderstood; we pray that they find within

Solace and light and the song of the soul, surging with all its power
And echoing still in the halls of the heart to last through a darkened hour—

An hour when God seems far away and the anguished kneel to pray.

Lord, leave the memory here in the heart, of the song of the starting day.

We pray this day, as we open wide the blessed and initial door,

Within we may glimpse a world of love
we have never seen before.

On the threshold we leave our woe, our pain, our malice, our fear of night—

That from this day on the world within will become our haven of light.

Consecrate then this door, these walls, the symbol we understand,

Connoting the warmth and the light of love,
the guide of a sheltering hand.

We offer it here to you in prayer, humility, faith, and pride,

Recalling a manger was sanctified by the haloed light inside.

Take it, we pray, within thy hands, to bless and to love and reign.

The door is open! Thy Spirit come! By the grace of our deeds, remain.

or modifying the rule on marriage adopted "unanimously" by it on August 17, 1835!

I know the proponents of polygamy claim Joseph Smith was not present when that "unanimous" action was taken—that he had not wanted the action taken. All that is merely quibbling, because he wrote from Liberty Jail in 1838 denying certain charges made against his people, and called specific attention to the action on marriage taken "unanimously" in 1835.

ness among such people can result only in judgments brought down upon their heads by their own behavior—death with the sword, with hunger, with war—the beasts of the earth meaning destruction through mechanical, economic, and biological warfare. And hell follows after!

But God is not taken by surprise. The first of the four horsemen is the Word of God. While the judgments called upon the world by sin are taking their toll, the call to righteousness is unmistakable. The word of God represented by the white horse and his rider goes forth "conquering and to conquer." Let war, greed, famine, social injustice, and tribulation of nations come! Let the evils of economic maladjustment prevail among the wicked! Let war and crime take their toll! The prophecy begins with the coming forth of the Word of God. The prophecy reveals the judgments of sin. But the hope of the righteous continues to be in the "conquering" power and authority of the Word of God. Many other conditions are revealed in the vision of John in symbols which are difficult to interpret. But for the ringing words of the triumphant promise of the prophecy no interpretation is needed: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."²⁴

Preparing for Marriage, by Clifford R. Adams (E. P. Dutton and Company, Inc., New York. $3.50.)

NOBODY KNOWS when marriage began.

"Of all the customs of mankind," writes the author of this book who is a professor of psychology and Director of the Marriage Counseling Service, Pennsylvania State College, "that of mating and marrying is the oldest and most universal. Even in the most isolated tribes uncovered by explorers, males pair up with females to live together as man and wife. There is no society known to history which does not accept marriage and the family. Were this not so, culture could not survive."

Knowing all this, Doctor Adams, like so many before him, still has the courage—or the temerity—to try to improve marriage, an institution which has had the toughness and the utility to keep alive and growing from its mysterious beginnings countless ages ago until now. On first thought it would seem that marriage can get along very well without our help, that all we need to do is cooperate with the almost inevitable. But evidence to the contrary abounds—historical, statistical, psychological evidence unearthed by research and counseling in the field of marriage, by psychologists, psychiatrists, biologists, sociologists, sexologists, social workers, marriage counselors, home economists, to say nothing of off-the-record statements made by disillusioned parties to the marriage contract. There are, consequently, many books dealing with marriage and how to make it more successful.

DOCTOR ADAMS has looked at this mass of evidence with eyes made sharp by his own experience as a psychologist and marriage counselor. This book is the result. It is a manual of procedures to follow in promoting and preserving a happy marriage. Admittedly, marriage is approved practice in America. Its 38,000,000 couples out of a population of 157,000,000 prove that. But the divorce rate is climbing, too, and is now, he says, nearly thirty times that of sixty years ago.

Doctor Adams thinks that something can be done to remedy the marriage situation. "Unfortunately, marriages are not made in heaven," he says. "Quite often people marry by hunch or impulse . . . or because their parents wish it . . . or because they get themselves so deeply involved romantically that marrying seems the only proper thing to do."

He is not advocating marriage by slide rule. But he does believe that in marriage, as in any other undertaking, there are "sound principles which if followed can well mean the difference between success and failure." His book lays down principles and provides the techniques for carrying them out.

Doctor Adams sees marriage as related to all the rest of living, as just one phase of interpersonal relationships. "Getting married is one of the biggest steps a person takes in life," he says. "In fact, for most people life boils down to coping with three big problems: learning how to get along with people, choosing a career and succeeding in it, picking a mate and living happily ever after. The three are interdependent. Marriage counselors have noticed the significant fact that the individual who likes his work and is successful in it, is also the person who tends to choose an excellent mate and work out, with that mate, a happy marriage."

THROUGHOUT THE BOOK he keeps before the reader the idea that happy marriages are made, and continued, by persons who are well adjusted to life in general. Yet he does not forget to treat thoroughly of the facts of interpersonal relations which belong to marriage alone.

He pleads for an understanding of, and respect for, sexual desire as a determining factor in marriage success. He writes: "To ignore or fear sex is no more sensible than to ignore any of the other emotions you possess . . . the two strongest ties binding husband and wife in marriage are sexual satisfaction and companionship. No other ties have such permanence, strength, and stability. Though one tie be weak or nearly absent, the other may be sufficiently strong to keep the couple united. Separately or together, these needs and their satisfaction constitute the emotional relationship of marriage." And he stresses the fact that attitudes toward sex originate in childhood and youth, which fact has serious implications for parents who unwittingly may, by their behavior toward each other, make it difficult for their children to build happy marriages.

Doctor Adams is a realist. He knows that "courtship is when a man pursues a woman until she catches him." He advises women accordingly. He says, "The marriage prospects for girls today would not be quite so unfavorable if our men would all seek mates." As it is, with 10 per cent preferring to remain single, at least two million girls will not have an opportunity to marry. One reason behind this masculine perversity is that boys, unlike girls, are not indoctrinated with the idea that marriage should be one of their big goals in life."

He then devotes a large portion of his book to showing girls how to become women who are both likable and lovable, practically irresistible to men! And "for people who are still a little baffled about the whole business of courtship, here is a tried and true formula for winning a mate. It can work wonders," he says, and presents the same formula that is used to snare customers in the business world, the tried and true AIDA formula.

And on women he lays the heavier obligation to make a marriage successful. His observations cause him to say, "Though husbands can cause marriages to fail, it is almost always wives who make them succeed."

THE AUTHOR covers the ground from orientation in the subject of marriage through preparation for an engagement, the actual engagement period, the wedding and honeymoon, to the end of the marriage contract, guiding the reader every step of the way by means of charts and questionnaires. He also devotes a chapter to the problems of the divorced, aimed at helping them analyze the reasons for the failure so that it won't happen again.

Doctor Adams believes wholeheartedly in marriage. Of it he says: "No person has any greater psychological need than to love and be loved. Only through marriage can this need be completely satisfied."

This book may be ordered from Herald House, Independence, Missouri.

The Friendly Church

By Berde Rooney

MARJORIE BLAND dreaded moving to a new neighborhood. She had been what her mother termed "a backward child," and through the years had not overcome her shyness. Marjorie loved having friends, and once she had made them, the very thought of leaving them and going to live among strangers was depressing. But Tom's company had assigned him a position in a distant city, and the move was necessary.

The first few days were taken up with getting settled in her new home, but after that she began to miss having her friends and relatives near. Then there was the problem of finding a church home, for she had been brought up in the firm belief that Sunday was a day for worship.

One morning a minister knocked on the door and invited the Blands to attend his church, which, he said, was only two blocks away. Marjorie promised to go. Later that day a woman came with the same kind of invitation. She was so pleasant that Marjorie wished she had been first, but a promise was a promise, and besides the woman's church was much farther away.

When Tom came home she told him what had happened, speaking rather wistfully of the pleasant Mrs. Willis. Tom solved the problem for her. "Go to one church this Sunday and to the other one next Sunday. Then make your choice of the one you like better."

On Sunday morning Marjorie dressed herself very carefully and made her way to the church two blocks from her home. After the service the minister stood at the door and shook her hand cordially and invited her to come again. Outside the door the people gathered in little groups talking happily together. One woman nodded brightly as Marjorie passed her then turned her attention to a friend. For the merest moment Marjorie hesitated, hoping the woman would speak to her again, but the woman moved away, and Marjorie, embarrassed and lonely, walked home.

"It was a beautiful church," she told Tom when he came home from the extra work he was having to do on Sunday. "If you had been with me the people might have noticed us; I guess I don't look very sociable."

"I'm sorry, Honey, I hope I can get things lined out so I can go with you before long. I'll be working again next Sunday though, so you'll have to brave the storm alone once more. Try the other church; maybe the rest of the members will be like the one who came to see you. However, that church is so much farther away I hoped you would like it where you went today."

It was with some misgivings that Marjorie walked up the steps of the church the next Sunday. "I hope Mrs. Willis hasn't forgotten me," she thought, looking around at the strange faces. Evidently she was early, for not many people were there. She sat down near the door. It would not take long to get out when the service was over.

"Good morning, I don't believe I have met you. My name is Della Hale."

Picked From Periodicals

by Aarona Booker Kohlman

No one subject seems to predominate in the May magazines, but there is a wide variety available to suit the interests of different women and to fill certain needs for help. If any one topic does prevail, it would seem to be babies, and all mothers of babies will profit from a careful perusal of whatever periodicals are available to her.

"Four All-Important Months in Baby Care," Parents' Magazine, is an easily understood and helpful article on the growth of a baby from the fourth through the seventh months, with suggestions on feeding and on handling mild ailments which may appear.

"What to Do When Your Child Refuses to Eat," Parents' Magazine, recounts some familiar situations, with suggestions that may help to solve the problem.

"Don't Over-Protect Your Toddler," Parents' Magazine, advises parents that the small child will be safer if they give him a chance to strike out and try things on his own.

If you have been considering a factory-built home, there is a section devoted to discussion of this type of house in Parents' Magazine and also in Good Housekeeping.

Three more short articles on child-feeding appear in Parents' Magazine: "How to Feed Your Baby the First Year," "Food for the One- to Six-Year-Old," and "When Children Join the Family for Meals."

Following the policy of including a comprehensive manual on some phase of homemaking or cooking, Good Housekeeping this month devotes the space to a "Book of Flower Arrangements," which is beautifully illustrated and very complete.

And that was the beginning. Before the service began Marjorie had met four others and was chatting with them like an old friend. After the service several came to make her welcome, among them Mrs. Willis, who apologized for not being there to greet her first.

"Well, how did things go today?" asked Tom when he came for lunch. Marjorie's face was radiant. "Oh, Tom," she said. "It was like being at home. I want to go there all the time. I won't mind a bit that the church is farther away and not so beautiful. I think friendliness is better than stained glass windows."

"From the effect it has had on you I'd say it certainly is," he agreed. "You've got me looking forward to going with you."

Cecil B. DeMille, known the world over for his contributions in the entertainment field, emerges in a new role as the author of "The Word Is the Rock," in which he shows his belief that the Bible furnishes guidance through the maze of present-day problems.

Do you, as a woman, sometimes feel down-trodden, insignificant, and unappreciated? Maybe that is putting it a little strongly, but even so, every woman will find a challenge and new inspiration in "The Mothers of Mankind," National Parent-Teacher. "The mission of women as mothers and teachers of the young is to learn and teach love. Only as this mission is fulfilled can the world of the future arrive at a realization of the age-old ideals of liberty, equality, and lasting peace."

Often we are in doubt as to the worthiness of the many organizations which appeal to us for donations. "Watch Out for the Charity Rackets," McCall's, is a discussion of this situation, containing tips to help us to give wisely as well as generously.

The old adolescent problem of acne is discussed by a doctor in "What You Can Do About Acne," Today's Health. He gives some simple rules for dealing with less severe cases.

"Avoid That Accident," Today's Health, reminds us of the many types of carelessness that may result in tragedy.

Reducing being as popular as it is, "Common Pitfalls in Reducing," Today's Health, is a timely article which tells how to save not only time and money, but also health.

Where Brotherhood Holds Sway

By Barbara Peavy

LATE NIGHTS are very chilly in Mobile, Alabama. I had just finished my spelling lesson and was on my way to the back yard where the family was raking leaves. The age of ten is often the age of imagination, but after hearing the insistent sound outside the front door, I knew that I wasn't imagining things. I opened the front door and there she was, standing at the foot of the steps, a thin emaciated body in a ragged dress. Her dark arms outstretched in a gesture of anguish, the little Negro girl's lips seemed to form the words, "Please, help me." Frightened, I ran to the back of the house and called Mother. When we reached the front door she was gone. I never saw her again. I never knew what she wanted. I only know that her face was a poignant picture of hopelessness and despair. I know some of the things she could have used: security, love, hope, faith. I shall never forget her face, for it has become a symbol of what I must never cause to happen.

THE FOUNDATIONS of prejudice are insecure. I was a sophomore at Graceland—a product of the teachings of the deepest South—when I fought my own civil war. The opening battle occurred in the first few weeks of school. The simple statement, "Did you know there's a boy on campus who's part Negro?" was the shocking beginning of a series of new ideas. Nothing eventful regarding the racial issue had occurred during my freshman year. Faced with the problem of association, I knew the crisis had come.

Graceland is no place for prejudices of any sort. The friendly "Hi" is not limited to a special few. I could not avoid speaking to another Gracelander, and it was inconsistent for me to enjoy the fellowship of Hawaiian students (many were darker skinned than people I had considered inferior all my life) and not be friends with one who had Negro blood in his veins.

But this was just the beginning. A course in "Races and Minorities" opened my mind regarding many fallacies I had accepted as truth. It was a new experience to meet people who were anti-Semitic and to know that some people were prejudiced against Mexicans and Japanese. I had never thought of anyone being superior to a person of any race but the Negro. There were people who preached tolerance when I was growing up, and the idea sounded nice. But even now, I don't like the word "tolerance." Nothing is more disgusting to a person than being tolerated. Growing up in the understanding of the love of God brought a new meaning to equality. God, our Father, Creator of all people, was a new God I found at Graceland.

IT WAS NOT an overnight conversion. Yet in the gradual process of breaking down old ideas and narrow concepts, I could feel the first pangs of truth. I remember nights when time had no meaning and discussions were carried on until morning. I remember the testimonies of girls who had attended school with Negroes, whose best friends had been Negroes. I remember the guilty feeling I had when I thought of the Negro children who had lived not too far from my grade school. Pushed back on the side streets, denied decent educational facilities, and blamed for every misdemeanor, they became delinquent. What other course was open to them? I could not forget as we discussed social problems in the dorm night after night that one of the most refined, kind, clean, educated men I knew was our Negro postman. I thought of Alberta, who was our servant for over seven years when I was a child. Loyal, clean, and Christian, Alberta taught me beautiful things in life.

However, the fulfillment of the Scripture, “. . . the truth shall make you free,” came one evening when a group of students were privileged to eat with Sister Mattie Willis of Battle Creek, Michigan. Sister Willis had been the soprano soloist at assembly that morning and was staying over for a day at the college. We were sitting across the table from each other. I had not even thought of her color, when simultaneously we reached for the salt shaker. As I saw my white hand and her black hand stretched across the table, my eyes filled with tears. I was breaking bread with a Negro. This is against the law in my home state. There was no sign on this table which said, “Colored only.” There was only a wonderful spirit of love and fellowship, and we were sharing together. It seemed in that moment that chains which had bound my heart and mind were broken, and a new understanding of freedom came.

Since then, when I have felt inclined to be prejudiced, I’ve tried to recapture the spirit of that experience. God had given Sister Willis a beautiful voice, a gift I certainly had not received. I was inferior in some respects to her. The next morning her mother spoke to our “Races” class. Her faith and conviction stirred every student. Her God was a God of love, whose eternal mind was not bound by little petty prejudices. In shame I listened to her testimony.

PERHAPS THE INCONSISTENCY of prejudice is the most frustrating aspect. In many homes servants are not permitted to eat at the same table with the family, yet they prepare all the meals and take care of the children.

The unbiased mind of childhood is wonderful, for children love, regardless of color. I remember thinking, as a child, when Alberta would make pancakes on cold winter mornings, that God must have many servants in heaven who were just like her. If love and devotion are characteristic of servants of God—and I am certain they are—then many of God’s servants are like Alberta.

The little things that are taught through childhood are the basis for discrimination. It was something I heard in school that created a certain feeling of superiority over the little Negro girls I passed on the street. When I grew up, I wanted to be a lady, but these little girls would only grow up to be women. It was an unwritten law that a Negress was never called a lady—only a woman. Many people use the phrase “Jew him down,” without realizing that it implies a racial prejudice.

SINCE COLLEGE I have found added strength in the testimonies of people of the Negro race. Brother Blue, pastor of the Negro branch in Pensacola, Florida, has been the personification of a life which is “humble and full of love.” Sister Pauline Frisby of Detroit has ministered to me with her beautiful, rich voice and the wonderful spirit which is present with her.

Now when I am privileged to meet and shake hands with people of other races, when I listen to them speak or sing, I can hardly fight back tears of gratitude and repentance. All the hurts and heartaches that my people have brought to their people seem to be so purposeless. In a moment of desire, I want to help change the world overnight. Then there comes the realization that through love and education a person grows into an understanding of a Father of all nations.

There has never been a sense of disloyalty to the South in my new ideas. The slow-talking Southerner is no more bitter than the native of Chicago, New York, or Detroit. Prejudice is no less evil because it is in a different area. Suspicion, fear, and hate are results of ignorance and lack of understanding. I cannot be consistent and hate the Catholic and Mormon and profess to love the Negro, the Japanese, the Mexican. I have to learn to overcome the problems that bring about prejudice.

One dramatic and enlightening experience does not erase all past prejudices. One experience can begin a chain reaction which makes each experience create a new sense of awareness. Where before I felt a degree of superiority over Negro people, I cannot honestly feel that way now.

The first step in repentance is awareness of sin. One of the first steps in overcoming prejudice is an awareness of the attitude.

Peter had no love for Gentiles until he saw and heard that “. . . God is no respecter of persons.” He had to be taught. The song, “Carefully Taught,” from the musical South Pacific had a great deal of meaning to me when I first heard it the summer after graduation from Graceland. Then I knew through a process of “unlearning discrimination,” of being “carefully taught not to hate or to fear,” I had found freedom in truth.

The Alma Mater is significant to any alum on graduation day. Yet after two years on the hill, I found it was more than a benediction on fun, fellowship, and learning. As the graduating class sang, “Oh, come, ye sons of Graceland all,” the song became a prayer of dedication to the purposes of the “home of vision wide, where brotherhood holds sway.”

He loved his family dearly, and was almost irreconcilably grieved when his oldest son, Robert, was killed in an automobile accident in 1937. Through his last illness his greatest worry was that he had to be cared for rather than caring for his wife.

Kinnaman, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Mrs. George C. Johnson of Des Moines, Iowa; and Mrs. Mark Holman of Independence. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church, Elders Glaude A.  SIGNS OF SPRING

Somebody's small daughter playing in a swing under a tree. Forsythia, the first of the flowering bushes to offer its cascades of bright yellow blooms to the sunshine, and the brilliant red flowering quince—the "fire bush"—not far behind. A bold robin showing you the worm that he found—right there!—in your lawn. . . . The hardware merchant filling his windows with temptations for gardeners—bright new tools, and packets of seeds with pictures of things out of this world. Nothing more marvelous than the flowers that bloom on those small envelopes with their stingy supply of seeds and their great promises of hope. . . . A man's dream stuff—spading up a little patch of rich black earth, warmed by the sun; a woman's—towel around her head—housecleaning.

 THE TREE

Outside my upstairs window there is a tree that looks two ways: to the past, and to the future.

Long brown pods, empty now, hang from the branches like the tattered garments of yesteryear. They have been there all through the winter. In the past few days a new growth has been appearing—the small green leaves that will be the gay finery of new summer clothes. Next fall the old empty pods will be gone, and new ones will replace them, fat with thousands of seeds from which this kind of tree can grow. The tree gives its principal attention to the future.

Do not spend all of your time thinking of the past. You will find many empty pods there. You cannot live on the banquets of long ago. The love of those who are gone is a sacred memory, and the soul reaches out into the dark for "the touch of a vanished hand," but finds only the empty mists of eternity. If one is to live, and not be a lingering revenant from the past, he must find some reason for living in the present.

Remember the example of the tree, and keep your eyes on the future.

 COLLECTIONS

The well-known journalist, Hal Boyle, writes an article rating King Farouk of Egypt as one of the more "serious" monarchs because he is making a coin collection. Lovely idea. . . . We, too, have tried making a coin collection throughout the years. More or less seriously, of course. But we found that grocers, and department stores, and public utilities, and a million and one other persons are making coin collections, too, always getting most of ours away from us. In quite a number of years we have barely kept even in this collecting business. When we get money for a new shirt, the car needs repairs. When we are ready to buy a new tire, the pants wear out. . . . Farouk has a lot of company. In fact, the whole world seems to be standing around with a tin cup in its hand, waiting for somebody to drop something into it.

 NOTE

To borrow a little from the Scriptures, "Where two or three are gathered together"—it's probably a committee meeting.

The Curse

"Keep yourselves from the accursed thing, lest ye make yourselves accursed."—Joshua 6: 18.

AMERICA TODAY needs to consider an ancient Scripture: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Proverbs 20: 1.

Every bottle of beer, every glass of wine, every dram of whisky sold today furnishes its unhappy proof that the admonition is true.

THE DRIVER had brought the big bus safely over some hundreds of miles of highway, some of it narrow and rough. Everything had gone well. Then, turning from U.S. 24 south on to Noland, we found ourselves behind a befuddled driver who could not make a left turn. We lost two changes of lights, wondering what was wrong with the car. But the car was all right; its only trouble was "the nut at the wheel," who was drunk. For half a mile we chugged along behind him as he plowed into a pile of gravel and cut wide arcs across the pavement into the left lane. Finally, he stopped in the middle of the intersection and let us go by.

Last night I was driving home and met a drunken driver who was taking his half of the road in the middle. By going far out on the shoulder I avoided a head-on collision. Thankful, I pulled the car into my own drive a few minutes later and went into the house to meditate on my rights as a citizen, and on the habits of some other people.

The liquor dealers who sold these men, and many others, the poisonous stuff will buy expensive cars and build beautiful homes. They will not pay for a cent of the damage caused by their liquor. Yet the American people are such foolish sheep that they will vote for this thing to stay in power.

THE "accursed thing" that caused the destruction of Achan and all his family (Joshua, chapter 7) was dishonesty in sacred matters. There is an accursed thing in America today, and it is liquor. It has destroyed many thousands of individuals and families, and is destroying many more of them every day.

This "accursed thing" takes the money that should go for food and clothing for mothers and children. It steals the rent money. It takes love from the parents. It breaks up homes. It makes beasts of men, slatterns of women, and orphans of children.

Many liquor stores carry signs, "Paychecks Cashed Free." Well, cashed, but not quite free. If the person who cashes one there gets away without taking a drink, it will be a miracle. If he takes the drink, the liquor merchant gets most of the check, and the fool who cashes his check there takes home an aching head, an empty pocket, and a dangerous disposition. Grocers will cash paychecks free, too, without wanting to take all the money.

IN REFERENCE TO LIQUOR, the most terrible loss that the American people have sustained is their will to fight it. They will not make the effort. They think it useless. They have given up to the beast. Yet it should be remembered, by those who can, that the war against liquor at its very worst under prohibition was better than what we have now.

One can quote all the terrible statistics about the cost of alcohol, and the losses and consequences of it, but people pay no attention. The liquor interests have spent enough money to condition the minds of the public just as they desire them. We have yielded to the argument that resistance is useless. Evil has always been like that. It makes the victim believe that he is powerless. Yet this supposition is founded upon a lie, as all evil is.

It seems that people do not care. Is it impossible to make them angry, as they once were, against this great evil? Something fine and strong seems to have gone out of our moral fiber.

We should remember that it is always possible to overcome evil by resisting it. Everything depends upon the will and the spirit of the people. If they are content to be "like dumb, driven cattle," then they can accomplish nothing against sin. But if they want goodness and cleanness and are willing to struggle and fight for them, they can accomplish what they wish to do.

"Keep yourselves from the accursed thing, lest ye make yourselves accursed." The curse can be lifted. The evil can be destroyed. But the will to destroy it must be built in the minds of men and women.

PROBABLY what we need is leadership. The quiet, timid, logical attack accomplishes nothing. It does not stir the imagination. It makes nobody angry. It attracts no attention. Some new Carrie Nation, swinging a hatchet and demolishing cocktail bars and taverns, is needed—some evangelist who can dramatize the attack on the enemy. We move by herd action. Perhaps better, the people of the churches should organize, and carry on a vigorous program of education, teaching the people to go to polls and defeat the enemy.

If we are content to yield, our country and our freedom may go down in ruin, corrupted from within by greed and lust. If we are determined that we shall be morally free and clean in our national life, no external enemy can conquer us.

What About Your Auditorium Contribution?

The contributions received for the first three months of 1952 for the Auditorium indicate the need for renewed emphasis of this project. The receipts were as follows:

January	$ 12,399.15
February	6,420.34
March	5,563.67

Total.....$ 24,383.16

The General Church goal for the year is $200,000.00. Quotas have already been given to stakes and districts. Will you help your stake, district, or branch to achieve its particular goal?

Comments at the last General Conference indicated that this is a goal which practically everyone in the church wishes to reach. Plans are in process of completion for the front of the building and the foyer; it is hoped that final decision regarding this can be made in the near future, and that construction can commence.

We appreciate the support already given and solicit the continued support of the membership of the church to make this project successful.

Baptismal Statistics

After a fine March in terms of baptisms reported, April has reversed the trend of recent years. There were 215 baptisms reported, making this the poorest April since 1947—101 less than last year, and 7 less than 1950. The total for the four months is 29 less than last year, but is 82 more than 1950. Thus, even though we have fallen below last year, we still have a good record, and a concerted effort to "Each One Win One" can still make this a banner year.

The 5 highest baptismal totals for branches and missions are as follows: Flint, Michigan, 24; Tulsa, Oklahoma, 13; Battle Creek, Michigan, 8; Parkersburg, West Virginia, 8; Council Bluffs, Iowa, 7; London-St. Thomas, Ontario, 7; and Yuba City, California Mission, 7.

The 5 highest totals for districts and stakes are as follows: Flint-Port Huron District, 29; Central Oklahoma District, 14; Detroit International Stake, 12; Northern California District, 11; and Eastern Colorado District, 10.

Memorial Service at Nauvoo

June 27 is the anniversary date of the martyrdom of Joseph Smith. It was on this date in 1844 that the Prophet met death as a result of mob action.

Accordingly, a memorial service will be held in Nauvoo on Sunday,

June 22. This service which will convene at 2:00 p.m., will be in charge of Nauvoo District officers at the Pavilion. Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, will be the speaker. Wreaths will be placed on the graves of Joseph, Hyrum, and Emma by descendants of the Prophet.

Church Directory

In compiling the information sent in for the new Church Directory, we find that considerable information is lacking. We are making the final appeal to district presidents and Conference appointees. Please check the current Church Directory affecting your areas and let us know any changes which should be made in the old Directory in the listing of the meeting place or its address. This is the only information that is needed, but unless we get prompt information to the contrary we will assume that the listing now shown is correct.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From David K. Larmour:

Elder A. James Cornish of Senlac, Saskatchewan, died of a cerebral hemorrhage on April 27. Brother Cornish served the Artland Branch for more than two decades as pastor and was active in this office up until his recent illness which forced him to relinquish the responsibility. He was a man of great earnestness and deep humility. He was greatly loved by the Saints and highly respected in community and business life because of his constant desire to live a Christlike life. He inherited the missionary spirit of his parents and was eager to win souls to Christ. I have never officiated at a funeral that was so remarkably blessed with the joy of the testimony of the truth of the resurrection. Sister Cornish was blessed in having all her family with her during the trying days following her husband's passing. Her son, Vernon, was a tower of strength. She has been visiting her daughter in Edmonton but expects soon to be with Vernon in Kansas City.

The Hope of the Kingdom

A lecture given at the Priesthood Conference, Lamoni, Iowa, June, 1951

By President F. Henry Edwards

FROM THE BEGINNING of time, the great men of our spiritual tradition have been moved by something far greater than they knew—something which laid hold on them, and which now lays hold on us—the hope, the promise, the assurance of the kingdom of God.

In the work of the ministry, morale is tremendously important, and in the building of morale, hope is a major factor. If a man has no hope, he is through before he begins. On the other hand the amazing hope of Christian people has been one of the most potent factors in the growth of the church of Jesus Christ.

The Apostle Peter had been down in the depths, and he had been up to the mountaintops. Out of this rich experience he wrote:

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

It was part of the experience of the early Saints that the precious promises by which they lived gave them access to sources of life and power and joy and assurance which lifted them out of despair, hopelessness, and passive mediocrity, helping them to live as God lives. In the power generated from inspired hope, they lived each day as though they already possessed the things promised. Such a hope—such a power—is the possibility held out to us in the gospel.

It is the nature of hope to be much more than wishful thinking. It is an expectation which has promise of fulfillment. The soundness of such hope is obviously related to the soundness of the grounds on which it rests. Young people are married, and they hope for a happy home life. It is a reasonable hope if they are the right kind of people. It is not a reasonable hope if they are not the right kind of people. The men nearest to God have always been fired with great expectations. They have believed big things; they have expected big things; they have hoped for big things; they have had the assurance of big things. The ground of their hope has not been in themselves but in the power and the promise and the loving kindness of God. It would be foolish for us to hope that we could build the kingdom of God of ourselves. If we tried to build in our own strength, we could build only our own kingdom. It would be equally foolish, as we know, and as any student of history knows, to hope to save mankind by any combination of the evil forces which dominate the councils of worldly men. There simply isn't any hope for men without God; but for men who will work with God and trust in him, there is abundant hope. This hope is our ever-present assurance of victory. The conviction that God has called us to the task of building his kingdom is a firm and abiding conviction, for he would not call us to waste our lives in attempting the impossible. God gives this conviction, that men in such a day as ours might have hope and courage and power to lay the foundations of the kingdom which shall be.

THE HOPE OF THE KINGDOM is not just wishful thinking. It springs up in the hearts of all men who know God and share his nature. It is one of the "exceeding great and precious promises," which Peter mentions so confidently and by which he says that the Saints "might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." By these great and precious promises the people of God live, the servants of God minister, and the kingdom of God is built.

The ground of our hope is in God, but there are many supporting indications that it is a sure and sound hope. Every valuable thing, every fine thing points to the kingdom. There is a certain "oughtness" that goes with good things, with fine things. Of a fine piece of machinery we say, "This ought not to be abused. This ought to be made available to people who know how to use it." There is a certain "oughtness" about the beauty of flower and field and forest. We instinctively feel that such beauty ought not to be shut away from people who have the capacity to appreciate it, that it ought to be freely offered to them regardless of how much money they have. There is an "oughtness" about beauty which points beyond self and says, "Because this is good, some other good thing ought to be so." So we say that the powers of great men ought to be used in leading and serving and blessing humanity; and that atomic fission—a great and epochal discovery—ought to be used to unite people, not to destroy them. There is an "oughtness" about all fine things. All these fine things together ought to minister in the fullest sense to the deepest needs of mankind.

Similarly, there is an "oughtness" about the kingdom of God. We feel in our inmost hearts that man was made for such a kingdom, and that such a kingdom ought to be. There is an inherent attraction about good things which we feel have been matched with certain needs of the hour. They do not exist simply for their own sake but that they, in turn, might minister to something beyond themselves.

GOOD MEN have a humble yet a prophetic appreciation of their own goodness: all good men of vision have believed that they portended something better. In the midst of the darkness they have said, "This ought not to be." When the light has shown they have said, "This ought to be." In years of failure and delay, these men prove their goodness by their continuance in brotherly love, in hopefulness, and in determination of endeavor, that what ought to be can someday somehow be brought nearer to realization. The hope of the kingdom has never been quite crushed out. Good people still believe that although the history of man is largely a story of man separated from his brother and every man's hand against his neighbor, yet there is a prophecy and a promise that in the last chapter, sometime, somehow, somewhere, men shall have the good will and the good sense to live as brothers.

This was the hope by which the Son of God lived among men. He said, "Repent ye [change your lives]. The kingdom of heaven is at hand." For almost two thousand years the readers of these words have said, "Yes, it's very near. The kingdom will come soon." Maybe Jesus meant—if we would but listen—"Repent ye; the kingdom of heaven is within your grasp. You can have it now if you will do as you ought; if you will exercise the powers of your own agency; if you will be pure in heart; if you will be sensitive to the necessities of people around you; if you will love one another; if you will do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Jesus lived in the confident hope that some day we would respond.

AFTER TWENTY CENTURIES, the kingdom is still within our grasp, just as it was to the people of Jesus' day and of every day since. The coming of the kingdom of God is guaranteed by the nature of the God in whom we have put our trust, whose Spirit we have felt, whose call we have recognized. He says to us in everything we know of him that he will not be content so long as his creation falls short of his own great excellence.

We are not ministers of a little God; we are ministers of a God whose great work and great glory is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, and who will not rest or fail until all his purposes are accomplished. The finest handiwork of God is not a great man, or a brilliant man, or a clever man; it is good men. It is not like the kind of God in whom we put our trust to cease from his wise and patient endeavor until somehow, sometime, somewhere, some people have been raised to the standard which he set for us in the morning of creation. In that day the kingdom of God shall be. It is in the conviction that God will leave us free to choose for ourselves, and yet will finally persuade us to become his worthy disciples; it is in this conviction that we go forward to build the kingdom.

JOHNSAYS, "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [the Lord Jesus] is pure." The hope of the kingdom is not that God will do great things for us, but that he will do great things in us. It is that even though the worst that can happen does happen, yet in the long run the best that can happen will happen. The best that can happen is not that he will do it all, but that it shall be done. It is part of the best that our own efforts shall be important in the final achievement of his will.

About one hundred sixty years ago an English shoemaker was asked to talk to an assembly of ministers. He divided his talk into two parts. First, he said, "Friends, let us expect great things from God." That was fairly customary and usual and traditional, and the ministers all nodded their heads. Then he went on: "Because we expect great things from God, let us attempt great things for God." And he moved that group of men so profoundly that when the meeting was over they came to him and said, "William Carey, did you mean that?" And he said, "Yes, I did mean it." And they said, "What is the greatest thing we shall expect from God?" And Carey said, "That the heathen shall be converted." They said, "What are you going to do about it?" And Carey said, "I will give my life to it." And he did; and they did. That was the beginning of the foreign missionary movement.

THERE ARE SOME THINGS that can be learned only in the act of worship. Real worship is the greatest of the arts. In the presence of God, with mind alert, with heart warm, with resolution fixed, we look at things eternal and know with assurance things that we do not know and cannot know anywhere else. As we have worshiped God together the sure hope of the kingdom of God has been quickened in our hearts. We know that God himself could be engaged in no better work. It is the task that he has set for himself and in which he seeks our willing collaboration. It is the work for which we were fashioned. Having felt the assurance of the kingdom we shall now go forward, if we will, with a far deeper conviction than before that, through the power of God revealed in the Restoration, the kingdom can and will prosper. It is destined to be. A people so endowed ought to move forward with faith, with

Serving God and Country

By V. A. Verhei

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

I HAVE ENJOYED READING many of the fine articles in the Saints' Herald and have felt an urge for some time to contribute an article to it. My only object in presenting these views is to further the cause of Christ and help hasten the answer to the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven."

While we are longing and waiting for the fulfillment of this I feel we should not sit idly by and contribute nothing to the cause which will bring to pass those wonderful events.

Christ has said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." We are assured of this rest only to the extent that we come to him. There is a verse of an old hymn which lingers in my mind: "On Christ, the solid rock, I stand, all other ground is sinking sand."

If I were to take a text it would be, "Whoever serves God best serves his country best."

There is always the question of duty to family, to country, and to God, with the problem of which to serve in case their paths lead in different directions.

In studying the Old Testament we find Daniel had to make a choice of obeying either the king's decree or God's law. Daniel chose the latter and was cast into the lions' den but came out unharmed. This caused the king to reverse his decree; he then said that everyone throughout his kingdom should worship the God of Daniel. Daniel served his country best by serving God best. The same was true of the Hebrew children when they were cast into the fiery furnace.

Many of us are looking for conditions on this earth to get much worse instead of better. We have been told to come out of the world because peace will not come again until Christ returns." And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.

I will try you, and prove you herewith; and whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake, shall find it again; even life eternal; therefore, be not afraid of your enemies; for I have decreed in my heart, saith the Lord, that I will prove you in all things, whether you will abide in my covenant, even unto death, that you may be found worthy; for if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me; therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

In Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12, 14, we find that Zion, the New Jerusalem, is to be "a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there; insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it, and it shall be called Zion. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." In Section 102: 11 we are told to "lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth."

THERE ARE MANY OTHER SCRIPTURES in the books which substantiate the thought I have tried to convey. We know that in our day and age if we are to serve our country and the world best we must teach the brotherhood of men and the fatherhood of God, denouncing war and proclaiming peace. We are to love our enemies if we are the followers of Christ. The church cannot be divided against itself by the membership of one nation fighting the membership of another nation. We need all for the building of Zion.

I feel it is the duty of this church, since we have received the light of the restored gospel, to take an active leadership in setting up an ensign of peace and asking the peace-loving peoples of all nations to join us in this movement. This would give us common ground and a cause in which to form a mutual working basis and understanding which might bring great results to all connected with the movement and add many more souls to the kingdom.

Many of our young people are despairing at the thought of going to one war after another. We have a son twenty-six years old who is serving his country in his second war. He and other young married people are called upon to sacrifice a lot. We are told the wicked shall destroy the wicked, not the righteous destroy the wicked or the righteous destroy each other. This destruction is to be the natural result of evil-doing. We should take a definite stand for peace and start building Zion with all the zeal we can in order to have a place of safety and peace for the righteous of the world to gather to. Time is growing short. We know that Zion is soon to be a reality.

I had the wonderful experience on two different occasions of seeing the gathering of Zion and of hearing the everlasting song of joy. I saw the people of the West start traveling toward the East singing this new song. As they traveled their number increased as did the volume of the song, until it seemed to fill the countryside. Joy and happiness shone on their faces as they sang.

THE RACE IS NOW on between the building of Zion and the destruction of the earth by modern warfare. We should all hasten the building of Zion by righteous living, sacrifice, and prayer.

What should be the attitude of our boys in regard to serving in the armed forces, and the attitude of the church toward active military service by its members? These are grave questions and the decision we make may have a greater effect on the coming of the kingdom than is possible for us to imagine.

When we study the teaching of Christ we are very impressed by the authority and positiveness of his statements. Christ said:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5: 43-45.

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.—Matthew 7: 12.

And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus, stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword, shall perish by the sword. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?—Matthew 26: 51, 52.

Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews.—John 18: 36.

THE QUESTION ARISES, "Are we servants of God if we fight?"

We are most fortunate to live in a democracy where religious views are tolerated and protected by the constitution of the United States. We have the right to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience. This gives us the right as a church to take a stand in any issue confronting us. Our government recognizes this right. When I filled out my questionnaire in the First World War one of the questions asked was if I were a conscientious objector, and if the church I was affiliated with opposed war. How I would have liked to have said, "Yes."

Can churches be opposed to war and still be true to their government? Yes. If churches would take a stand against war, they would have a tremendous force for good and for peace. The members

And the Truth Shall Make You Free

By Don Savage

From time to time during the last 120 years men have vigorously contended against claims of divinity for the Book of Mormon. These men have sought diligently to find some flaw in the substance or surroundings of this Book which would substantiate their arguments. But nothing impressive has ever been found.

Some Old Charges

A "theory" more or less popular since early in the last century is that the Book of Mormon was a fictitious work copied from Solomon Spaulding's Manuscript Story (a novel put together about 1800 but never published by him). Fortunately for the advocates of that theory, no copy of Mr. Spaulding's novel was available for some years for means of comparison, and the Book of Mormon suffered from the attack for want of proof of the falseness of charges against it! However, in 1885 in an almost providential manner the original manuscript of the Manuscript Story came to light. It was placed on display at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, where anyone may examine it. This change in affairs placed the attacker under considerable handicap. For, in the language of one of our more illustrious predecessors, the Book of Mormon resembles Mr. Spaulding's novel just about as much as the Bible does Peter Rabbit. Nevertheless, a few theological dispensaries still persist in trying to dispose of the Book of Mormon via the Spaulding Manuscript route, and a few persons are still deceived.

Earlier it was commonly whispered that Sidney Rigdon, a learned professor of religion, was the true author of the Book of Mormon. He and Joseph Smith, it was said, collaborated in its deceitful presentation under the guise of Joseph's lack of learning. ("For who would believe that Joseph wrote it when obviously he had not the learning to do so?") But the stumbling block to accepting this explanation of its origin is that there is documentary evidence that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon never saw each other until after the Book of Mormon was in print. And try as men will, that missing link of their previous association has never been found. (See page 343, Volume IV, Church History.)

Other stratagems of greater or lesser subtlety have also been devised; but they, too, have fallen to the dust because their foundations were found wanting. Meanwhile the Book of Mormon has continued to thrill the hearts and bring gladness to the souls of many who read it and believe.

Some New Charges

Recently the validity of the record of the Nephites was again challenged in "Some Questions and Answers About the Book of Mormon" (Saints' Herald, February 12, 1951). The inquirer lists ten questions concerning the language and translation of the Book of Mormon. The tenor of these questions is "I cannot believe the Book of Mormon is divine because . . ." These ten charges do not deal with vague suspicions about the origin of the Book and the like but directly question facts contained within its covers. Therefore they are of the utmost importance, for, if sustained, the claims of the Book must suffer a serious blow.

Apostle Maurice Draper replied to these questions in light of all that is known concerning the circumstances surrounding them. But some of them cannot be answered easily, because the questions themselves are the result of a sizeable amount of study, and the answers must accordingly be given only after an equal amount of study. ". . . we might say that one of the greatest areas for study of the Book of Mormon is suggested by this question, which we cannot fully answer with information now available."

In accordance with the need outlined by Apostle Draper I began a series of studies based upon several of the ten questions of reference to determine for myself as much as possible what truth, if any, the charges held. Being a mechanical engineer, however, and not one learned in languages, I may have missed some points which someone with more training would have observed.

Question number three reads as follows:

The Book of Mormon is supposed to be translated from ancient plates. How do you account for the many, many passages that are identical with the Bible—but always with the Authorized Version, never the Revised Version or the Douay Version or such—even down to phrases in the Authorized Version that have been proved not to correspond with the old Greek and Hebrew Codices?

This can properly be considered to present two implications: 1. If the charge is found to be true, it is strong evidence that the Book of Mormon was not inspired. 2. But if the charge is proved to be false, it is equally strong evidence of the divinity of the Book. Establishment of the facts should prove one or the other. I wonder if the inquirer considered that?

The Book of Mormon Vindicated Again

Books I and II of Nephi contain portions of, or in their entirety, chapters 48-51, 2-14, and 29 of the writings of the Old Testament prophet Isaiah. These total some 440 Book of Mormon verses. We believe they were copied by the Book of Mormon writers from brass plates containing many of the Old Testament writings. These brass plates were carried to America shortly after 600 B. C. by a Hebrew family journeying from Jerusalem. Other biblical quotations appear in the Book of Mormon, but the following discussion is based upon the chapters mentioned.

The question states that the Book of Mormon passages always are identical "with the Authorized Version, never the Revised Version, or the Douay Version or such . . ." As a systematic means of discovering if this were true, I listed the exact text of each verse of Isaiah from the Book of Mormon, and beside it the corresponding verse from the Authorized Version, the Inspired Version, the American Revised Version, and the Smith-Goodspeed Version. This afforded an easy means of comparison. The findings from this comparison are presented in a tabulated form for clarity:

1. The statement already referred to that the Book of Mormon always follows the Authorized text is false. Over sixty cases occur where the Book of Mormon disagrees with the Authorized text while agreeing with the Revised and/or the Smith-Goodspeed texts.

BOOK OF MORMON	AUTHORIZED VERSION	REVISED VERSION
II Nephi 8: 64	Isaiah 3: 26	Isaiah 3: 26
And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she shall be desolate, and shall sit upon the ground.	And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she being desolate shall sit upon the ground.	And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she shall be desolate and sit upon the ground.

The doctrinal point contained herein isn't important, but the principle is. The Authorized text contains two clauses

BOOK OF MORMON	AUTHORIZED VERSION	REVISED VERSION
II Nephi 9: 63	Isaiah 9: 3	Isaiah 9: 3
Thou hast multiplied the nation, and increased the joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.	Thou hast multiplied the nation, and not increased the joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.	Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

SMITH-GOODSPEED Isaiah 9: 3
Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased its joy; they rejoice before thee as with the joy at harvest, as men exult when they divide the spoil.

Obviously, here the doctrinal sense of the Authorized text is jumbled by the addition of the word "not." Apostle Draper notes that this is a direct mistranslation of the Hebrew word, "lo." "Lo" may be translated either as "not" or "to it," and the authors mistakenly used "not."

Example 3:

BOOK OF MORMON	AUTHORIZED VERSION	REVISED VERSION
II Nephi 8: 75	Isaiah 5: 5	Isaiah 5: 5
And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and I will break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:	And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:	And now I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; I will break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:
SMITH-GOODSPEED Isaiah 5: 5
	So now, I pray, let me tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will remove its hedge, so that it shall be ravaged; I will break down its wall, so that it shall be trampled down.

Though the sense is left unaltered, the Authorized text omits the words "I will" immediately preceding "break down the wall." And still the writers or correctors who brought forth the Revised and Smith-Goodspeed Versions did add those two words. These two versions were the result of much study by learned men. Those men deemed it correct to insert these two words. Many decades earlier, an unlearned farm boy added the same two words. He did not do it by his wisdom or learning, therefore there is only one remaining avenue by which it could have been accomplished—the power of God.

Example 4:

BOOK OF MORMON	AUTHORIZED VERSION	REVISED VERSION
I Nephi 6:15	Isaiah 48: 8	Isaiah 48: 8
Yea, and thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time thine ear was not opened; for I knew that thou wouldst deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.	Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldst deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.	Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from of old, thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou didst deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.

This text does not contain the obvious differences of those preceding. The only difference between the Book of Mormon and Authorized text is the addition of the word "that" in the latter. But this single word both alters its meaning and forces the remaining words to form an incomplete sentence. The Book of Mormon and Revised Version say something like this: "Your ear was not opened from the time that you refused to hear and know; and I did this because I knew that you would deal very treacherously if it were within your power . . ." But the Authorized text says: "You heard not; you knew not. From the time that your ear was not opened, for I knew that you would deal very treacherously . . . ? (The sentence is never completed.) No unlearned young man ever made such a subtle correction in the Holy Scriptures. It required able scholars to bring it out in the Revised Version. It required the power of God to show it forth in the Book of Mormon.

Example 5:

BOOK OF MORMON
II Nephi 8: 67

And it shall come to pass, them that are left in Zion, and remain in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem:

The similarity of text sense and form between the Smith-Goodspeed and Book of Mormon are quite obvious. Reference to those to remain is in the plural, while the Authorized Version is singular. Also the words, "he that," added in the Authorized text with reference to those who remain in Jerusalem, are understood and thus omitted in the Book of Mormon and Smith-Goodspeed.

Scores of instances occur wherein the Book of Mormon and Revised or Smith-Goodspeed Versions agree exactly as to singular or plural forms of words contrary to the rendition of the Authorized text. Brevity forbids the placement of them here. It is sufficient that we say the implication of question three is without Therefore we ought rightly to expect that in some cases the rendition of a text would be superior in the Authorized Version and in other cases superior in the Book of Mormon. This is exactly what happens. In the first four examples following, the Book of Mormon is, in my opinion, superior in sense to the Authorized text.

B. The Old Testament was translated from Hebrew to Greek to English. The Book of Mormon (that portion taken from the Brass Plates) was translated from Egyptian as used among the Jews in 600 B. C. to English. Through human weaknesses, changes are almost certain to occur in translations. Therefore we ought rightly to expect that in some cases the rendition of a text would be superior in the Authorized Version and in other cases superior in the Book of Mormon. This is exactly what happens. In the first four examples following, the Book of Mormon is, in my opinion, superior in sense to the Authorized text.

Hope Is Life

THE WORD "hope" has great significance for all mankind, but especially so for the Saints of the church. To each of us hope, even in the midst of darkness, suggests a gratifying faith in the future. Hope is life and shines forth even as a light which shines in the darkness. Hope is an ingredient in all of our lives. It gives us happiness. Only through building up hope in life day by day can we truly live and enjoy happiness.

So long as the sower holds the seed in his hand there is no hope; yet, the instant he places it in the prepared seedbed, there is promised the hope of the harvest from the reaping of which there again is bread to eat—and so we live. Hope is life.

The voice of God came to Abraham saying, "You shall become a father of my people." Even though ninety-nine years old and beyond human expectation of fatherhood, Abraham had hope, and he did become the father of many peoples. Only as we grow through faith can we find peace with God and Christ Jesus. Peace we must have within and outside the church. When we have peace we press forward, and even in darkness and difficulties, with faith and hope we praise God.

Abraham obeyed the voice of God, but he was not the only one. Many men in the course of time have heard the voice of God. Paul obeyed when Christ told him what he should do. Joseph Smith truly perceived the voice of God, even though he was not yet a prophet. He had read in the Scriptures that when one lacked wisdom he should seek God in prayer. This he believed and went into the quiet woods where there was no man to see or hear him. On bended knee he prayed that he might know what he should do. The darkness in the woods and in his heart changed to brilliant light.

We can compare our lives to the slender weak saplings pushing up through the darkness of the dense forest into the sunlight above, and finally becoming perfect and strong.

We hear the voice of God through the president of the church and through all of God's servants. When we are willing, we hear it in the whispering of the branches in the quiet woods. We see God in the perfect form and pattern of flowers. We sense him in their lingering perfume. When we really open our eyes, we can see God; and when we unstop our ears, we can hear his voice.

My hope is in God, and my assurance is that his gospel is for all mankind.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them— Mules Included

By Mabel Williams Crayne

JUDSON FLYNN, attorney at law and temporarily retired, straightened his back and mopped his perspiring face with a red bandanna. He was almost to the end of the last row of his popcorn patch.

A car turned into the driveway and an attractive young woman got out and came toward him.

Jud's face lost its tired look and beamed with pleasure as his daughter Elizabeth walked toward him. He leaned on his hoe and assumed a dramatic pose as he called out to her, "Well, drat my hide, if it ain't my gal Liz come all the way out to the farm to see her old pappy. How be ye, gal?"

The girl gave him an indulgent smile and asked, "Don't you think you're overplaying the part, Dad? That may have been true to life in the old days but our world has changed, and our farmers believe in education. Many are college graduates, or have been educated by travel with all expenses paid by Uncle Sam. . . . And for goodness sake, stop calling me Liz."

Jud's face lost its smile. "Now listen here, Miss Uppity," he said, "your mother was named Elizabeth and called Liz, and she loved it. She was the belle of the town, and as you came toward me, you reminded me of her, but she always laughed at my tomfoolery. I'll try to remember that you're Miss Elizabeth Flynn, English teacher, and be proud of you, but I'd be a blame sight prouder if you had married Tony Lawton and given me a grandson to help hoe this corn."

"I'm sorry, Dad," she said, "but in my work I have to pretend, at least, to be dignified. Liz is not a name to suggest dignity. How is Aunt Minerva?"

"Your Aunt Min is fine," answered Jud, with emphasis on the "Min." "She's baking oatmeal cookies and whole-wheat bread, trying to cheer me up, but if Doc Andrews doesn't tell me I can go back to my office before long, my blood pressure is going to hit the top."

"You're not very observing, today, Dad," said Elizabeth. "I'm surprised that you've not seen the man sitting in my car. He is another GI and has been in my English class this last semester. He is in need of a place to stay for the summer where he will get good, wholesome food and a chance to build himself up. We came out to see if Aunt Minerva would mind having him here. He'll help you with the garden, Dad, and I'm sure you'll like him. He is studying to be a minister and is taking English, public speaking, and music."

"Upon my word," sputtered her father, "I've about decided that Doc Andrews trumped up that diagnosis on me just to keep me out here as nursemaid to all your ailing GI students. That last one about got me down."

"Shame on you, Dad," chided Elizabeth. "Why don't you be honest about Larry? You know that down in your heart you were sorry to see him go. He was almost like the son you never had. You got me, instead. He was even a good chess player."

"Well, don't rub it in," said Jud, "by reminding me of what an old softie I am. I did love the boy, and I often wonder what ship he is on, and where it's sailing. Go get your friend out there and let's look him over."

"I knew I could count on you, Dad," said Elizabeth. "I'll be back in a moment." A good looking young man was with her when she returned. He was leading a little boy by the hand, who had big dark eyes and black curls.

"Huh!" said Jud, "Liz didn't mention the boy. Where does he come in? They look like foreigners."

THERE WAS A LOOK of honesty and sincerity about the man and Jud's face softened into a smile. He held out his hand as Elizabeth said, "Joseph, this is my father, Judson Flynn."

The man bowed with the old world courtesy that still clings to the Latin race as he took the proffered hand and said, "How do you do, Sir. I am Jose Samaniego, and this is my little son, Ricardo. In your language I am Joseph, and he is Richard. My parents came from Spain, and I was born in Mexico, but now I am an American, and Ricardo is an American. I lost my wife when the boy was born and my sister has cared for him. Now I am home from the war and want him with me."

In the child's eyes was a look of eagerness and expectancy, and Jud knew that he understood and was waiting for the verdict. When it concerned children and their rights, Jud was indeed "an old softie," and many a divorce case was settled out of court for the children's sake. He looked thoughtfully at the man and boy before him, pleading for the chance to be together, and said, "Come along, Lad, we'll go in the house and see what Aunt Min has to say about it."

Minerva Flynn had never married, but she had a mother's heart. She put her arms around the child and told him how glad she was that he had come to live with them. The courteous and kindly ways of the man and boy soon won for them a firm place in the affections of both "Uncle Jud" and "Aunt Min."

ONE DAY when the two men were alone together, Jud asked, "Joseph, have you ever thought of marrying again and making a real home for your boy?"

"No, Uncle Jud," replied the younger man, "I cannot think of it, because in my heart there is so much love for my Consuela. It leaves no room for another woman."

"I know what you mean," said Jud, "every time my daughter walks toward me I see my wife instead. They are identical in looks and manner, but in personality Elizabeth is too much like me. I have been wanting to tell you, Joseph, that Min and I are very fond of you and Ricky, and you both have a home with us as long as you need one."

"You cannot know what relief and happiness your words have given me," said Joseph. "It will be a great comfort to me if my little boy can stay with you and Aunt Min when I go into the mission field next summer. He is very happy here. I'm trying to make myself ready for the time. I want to speak correctly, and I need to know more of the music that will help me in my work of saving souls. Sometimes the songs with a message touch the heart when a sermon will not."

"You sing well, Joseph," replied Jud, "but you need to know the organ and piano, also, as a missionary often has to play his own accompaniment."

"You speak as with knowledge," said Joseph. "May I ask, were you ever a missionary?"

"No, I've never been," replied Jud, "but my father was, and I know that his family had to live on a pittance from the church, and sometimes that was long overdue. My father received for himself only what the church members cared to give him as he traveled from place to place. Many times that was only a straw bed and a scanty meal."

Joseph asked eagerly, "Could it be that you are my brother in the faith? Are you also a Reorganized Latter Day Saint?"

"When I was eight years old I was baptized into the Reorganized Church," answered Jud, "but that is as far as I ever went with it. We children knew what it was to be hungry and cold, but my mother would not hear to father giving up his mission. It took the heart out of me to see them sacrifice so much. I guess I just soured on the whole thing. I was pretty young when I went to work in a lawyer's office. He was a friend of my father's and no doubt paid me more than I was worth."

"Your wife and daughter, were they not members?" asked Joseph.

"My wife was a member of another church," said Jud. "I have left Elizabeth to find her own religious belief, and Min has respected my wishes."

IT IS VERY SAD, my brother, that you have never known a closer walk with our Heavenly Father," said Joseph. "My parents were not poor in possessions, but very poor in happiness until I met my Consuela. She taught us the way to eternal life and the joy in serving our Lord. Your father and mother knew that joy and would not exchange the bread of life for the bread that feeds only the body."

"I never heard them complain," said Jud, with a note of bitterness in his tone, "and that is what irked me. They gave thanks to God for what they had and trusted him for future doles. They never mentioned that the sacrifice was too great. My sister Min has all of father's books and papers that he carried with him as he traveled in rain, snow, heat, and cold to tell the story of the Restoration. She goes into town sometimes and stays with Elizabeth over the week end, and I think she attends church. You are welcome to use the car and take her and Ricky every Sunday."

"Thank you, Uncle Jud," said Joseph. "I shall speak to Aunt Min about it."

THE SUMMER PASSED QUICKLY. When school began Joseph rented a room in town to take advantage of evening classes, but he spent week ends with Jud and Min. His voice had developed into a strong baritone, but he was learning to soften it, at will, so that it touched the hearts of his listeners.

Christmas was a joyful time because there was a child in the house. Joseph taught Ricky to sing some of the Christmas carols, but he liked best "Away in the Manger." One day while he was building a block house and singing his favorite carol, he stopped suddenly and came and stood by Jud's knee, looking at him with serious eyes. Then he said, "I guess little Lord Jesus didn't have any Uncle Jud to give him a nice bed like you gave me."

Jud couldn't trust himself to speak for a moment, then he laid his hand affectionately on the boy's head. "So you like your little bed," he said. "That used to be my little girl's bed."

Ricky stood thinking, a puzzled look on his face, then asked, "Was Lizbef your little girl, one time, Uncle Jud? Did she sleep in the little bed?" When Jud answered in the affirmative, the boy's face lighted up with a new idea and he said, "I love Lizbef, and I love Lizbef's little bed, but couldn't we give it to little Lord Jesus?"

"But, Ricky," explained Jud, "if you give away your little bed you'll have no place to sleep. You'll be just like the little Lord Jesus."

Without hesitation, the boy answered, "I want to be like little Lord Jesus. I want to sleep on the hay."

Jud had no answer for this, so he took the usual way out. "We'll talk it over with your daddy when he comes home again," he said. Ricky went back to his block house, apparently satisfied, but leaving Jud troubled in mind, and thinking, "There must be something I've missed. A real compensation not visible, but deep in the heart—something I've not understood. Could I find the answer in father's books? I wonder if Min reads them and considers me her cross because I won't go to church with her? I guess I've been just a stubborn old mule."

SPRING CAME EARLY and Jud and Min got out their seed catalogues and planned a garden. The popcorn patch that Jud had sweated over the previous summer had given them so many delightful evenings of corn popping, and so many sticky, delicious popcorn balls that he decided to add another row.

All went well until July. Joseph had left on his first missionary journey, and Elizabeth had gone to the coast for a month's vacation. Then came a most devastating heat wave. It grew so intense that the grass withered and died on the hillsides, and the lawns and gardens had to be watered every day to survive. No rain was in sight. The nights were not long enough to bring relief after a day of scorching sun, and people woke up in the morning as weary as they were the night before.

The gray dawn was just stealing into Ricky's room one sultry morning when he was awakened by hearing Aunt Min call his name. His room was next to hers with a door in between that was never closed after she had tucked him in for the night. He climbed out of bed and went to her side. "Ricky's here," he said, and heard her say, "So sick." He saw her face contorted with pain and ran to waken Jud who went at once to call Doc Andrews.

Ricky came back into the room and stood looking at Aunt Min with frightened eyes, then the tears rolled down his cheeks as he sobbed, "Don't be sick, Aunt Min. I love you, Aunt Min. If my daddy was here he would pray for you and God would make you well." Then his face brightened like sunshine after a rain, as he said, "I know how to pray, Aunt Min. I'm going to ask God to make you well. My daddy says God likes to have little boys pray to him."

When Jud came into the room he was worried. Doc Andrews was out on a call. He saw his sister lying white and still and the little boy on his knees. Ricky was saying, "Dear God and Little Lord Jesus, my daddy is gone away and there's no one to pray for Aunt Min but me 'cause Uncle Jud has forgot. I hope you don't mind. Aunt Min is good to everybody. Please, won't you be good to her and make her well and take away the hurt, 'cause she's awful sick. With love and best wishes from Ricky, Amen."

Jud's throat tightened until he thought he would choke. He turned and went back into his own room and knelt in earnest prayer, then he went to the phone and called the pastor of the church he had ignored for so many years.

When the elders came Min's eyes opened in wonderment and joy. After the administration, she told them of the excruciating pain that had been in her heart and how it had gradually eased away as the little boy prayed.

The next day the rain came, the air cooled, and the gardens were saved.

The following Saturday Jud got out the car, and cleaned and polished it until it was like a mirror. The next morning he surprised Min by telling her to get Ricky and herself ready for church and not to bother about dinner as they would eat in town.

When Joseph came home he had many interesting experiences to relate. He told them of finding members in isolated places and the joy his coming gave. He told how he had been able to start several groups studying together that promised to bear fruit and become missions in time. But the greatest joy that came to Joseph was the story Aunt Min had to tell of his little boy's prayer and the great change in Jud, who had asked for his father's books and was now attending a class in church history every Sunday.

"God be praised," said Joseph reverently. "Little children are like music. They touch the heart when sermons will not."

Here again, scores of examples might be quoted to further illustrate the point. However, these should be sufficient to demonstrate that this second mark of truth is stamped indelibly upon the record of the Golden Plates.

C. Similar to the thoughts already presented, whole thoughts have been omitted from one text or another. However, some of these omissions do not seriously affect the sense.

now stand (100 per cent minus 67 per cent).

These figures thus show that the Authorized Version received about 21 per cent change at the hands of men down through the years, while the Book of Mormon received about 33 per cent in a similar manner. This is misleading, for we have based it upon the assumption that the Inspired Version corrected all Authorized Version errors, which it did not. A more reasonable conclusion is that an average of 21 and 33, or 27 per cent, is the true figure for verse changes in both the Book of Mormon and Authorized Version from the original.

Isn't it remarkable that these very faults evidenced by cold statistics are a magnificent proof that the "Record of the Nephites" is exactly what it purports to be—the work of many hands through many centuries? To the best of my knowledge, no claim has ever been made that the miraculous translation of the Book of Mormon plates through use of the Urim and Thummim automatically corrected errors which must have existed in the writings of Mormon, Moroni, or Nephi.

... and if there be faults, they be faults of man. But behold, we know no fault; nevertheless, God knoweth all things; therefore he that condemneth, let him beware lest he shall be in danger of hell fire. ... Condemn me not because of mine imperfection; neither my father, because of his imperfection; neither them who have written before him, but rather give thanks unto God that he hath manifest unto you our imperfections, that ye may learn to be more wise than we have been.—Mormon 4: 21, 22, 97.

Conclusion

A very considerable number of fine and gratifying points are certain to arise in such a study as this. Some of them are strange and need further explanation. Many at once lend their small voice to glorifying the latter-day wonder. But this much can be said, the work and glory of God are not frustrated by the designs of men. The Book of Mormon has a work to do, and it will be done. Skepticism and subtle charges will not change the facts of its divinity nor purpose. The truth will prevail.

Nor in its immovable course does the truth leave its seekers wondering. "Seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you" are not hollow phrases. The evidences presented herein are proof of that. The archaeologist's spade is proof of that. The Spirit of God is also proof.

And finally, journey from error is made by walking with eyes ahead and mind open. Too many pillars of salt about us testify that other means are attempted. There is a job to be done! There is a kingdom to be won!

Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free!

Thus is portrayed a third mark of the truth of the Book of Mormon. These omissions occurred down through the centuries as the texts were copied and translated. The Inspired Version corrects a number of the Authorized omissions to conform to the Book of Mormon.

D. The question of the Inspired Version's place in these textual conflicts has likely come to some minds. "Does it follow the Book of Mormon or the Authorized Version?" Perhaps a percentage analysis of agreement between the verses studied will offer a partially satisfactory answer. Here are the percentages of verses in which texts exactly agree:

B. of M.—A.V., I.V., R.V., S.G.	0%
B. of M.—A.V., I.V., R.V.	6%
B. of M.—A.V., I.V.	46%
B. of M.—A.V.	46%
B. of M.—I.V.	67%
I.V.—A.V.	68%

Three general rules are established from these figures.

1. Almost always when the Authorized text agrees with the Book of Mormon, the Inspired text also agrees.

2. About 25 per cent of the cases show that the Inspired Version agrees exactly with the Authorized but disagrees with the Book of Mormon.

3. About 25 per cent of the cases show the Inspired Version exactly agrees with the Book of Mormon but disagrees with the Authorized text.

These figures reveal a powerful stroke of evidence. The Book of Mormon and Authorized Version came originally from a common source. Of course they were then identical. But down through the millenniums the two copies were corrupted independently by the hands of men. Joseph Smith, in making the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, erased many of those scars from the Authorized text.

Now it appears that since the Book of Mormon and Authorized Version agree exactly in about 46 per cent of the verses under consideration, that this 46 per cent came down through the centuries in either channel unchanged. These figures indicate that the Book of Mormon and Inspired Version have identical verses in about 67 per cent considered. Thus we may conclude that the Inspired Translation must have corrected about 21 per cent of the Authorized verses (67 per cent minus 46 per cent).

If we assume that the Inspired Version is 100 per cent correct with the ancient original (which has never been claimed) then we must conclude that about 33 per cent of the Book of Mormon verses of Isaiah are corrupt as they

Mission Organized

SHAWNEE, OKLAHOMA.—For years a few women in Shawnee prayed for the opportunity to attend their own church. In answer to their prayers, first Elder Neil Dickinson transferred into the city, then a local man, A. J. Goodwin, was ordained an elder, and this spring the district conference organized a mission here.

The saints met Sunday, April 20, for church services in Shawnee. Following church school, District President Victor J. Witte preached on "The Apostasy and Restoration." High Priest O. J. Stephens, of Tulsa, ordained a third local man, Brother Ralph Patterson, a priest. A basket dinner was held at noon, and a prayer meeting that evening with the theme "I Will Help Build the Kingdom" concluded the day's activities.

At present twelve to fifteen Saints are meeting in the home of the pastor, Brother Goodwin, each Sunday morning for church school and preaching service. The sermon topics have been arranged in a series to present basic doctrinal concepts as suggested in the tract, "Epitome of Faith." Prayer meetings are held on Sunday evening; a Book of Mormon study class on Wednesday evening. Friday evening is designated as missionary visiting night for both priesthood and members. The women's department meets for a class and social hour every other Thursday and building fund project every other Tuesday. The building fund is growing rapidly by sacrificial offerings, individual consecration projects, and group projects so the group expects to have a building soon.—Reported by A. J. GOODWIN

Kitchen Redecorated

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILLINOIS.—An electric organ has been installed in the East St. Louis Branch. In less than two months after the project was started, almost two-thirds of the purchase price was contributed; the remainder of the total cost was pledged.

The kitchen in the church has been completely redecorated through the efforts of the women's department. This group purchased material for the construction of cabinets which include a double sink with formica tops. These cabinets are beautiful in appearance as Brother Herndon DeLany is an expert cabinetmaker. Had the cabinets been constructed in the factory, the total cost would have exceeded $600.

Thirteen members of the branch, including five members of the priesthood, attended the recent General Conference. The pastor, Elder Charles Fletcher, reported that a spirit of unity and harmony prevailed in the various meetings he attended.—Reported by MARIE ANDERSON

Young People Receive Honors

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—Three Topeka young people have won recognition in the Music Department of Topeka High School. In the tryouts held recently, Marilyn Crooker was chosen as a member of the a cappella choir of the high school. Huberta Ellithorpe and Francis Kelley were given special parts in a band concert held during music week. Huberta played a clarinet solo, in "Interlude," with band accompaniment, and Francis played the solo part, "Hello, Young Lovers," from "The King and I." Francis plays a baritone horn. Huberta also received an honor "T," an award given for extracurricular activities. These young people are active in the Zion's League.—Reported by MILDRED GOODFELLOW

New Pastor Installed

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—At a special branch business meeting May 2, Church Appointee Elder Frank A. Fry was elected pastor of the Omaha Branch. Following the business meeting a reception was held for Elder and Mrs. Fry in the lower auditorium. Elder Fry was also elected president of the Northeast Nebraska District at a special district business meeting in Omaha May 4. Former pastor and district president, Elder C. D. Neff, was released to assume his new duties as assistant to the First Presidency. Apostle Blair Jensen conducted both services.

Pastor Fry preached the Mother's Day sermon. The vesper service theme, "Faith of Our Generation," was presented under the direction of Elder and Mrs. Emerson Link. Around a dining table sat several members collectively representing a family in a home and each telling actual experiences of life pertaining to the theme. Among those participating were Grace Wallace, Ruth Harpster, Esmond Crown, Eva Constance, Laura Grace Salzbrener, Wendell Wallace, and Bruce Bradbury. Roy Bray sang "Bless This House."

The annual vacation Bible school will convene June 9 to 20 with registration set for June 6. The school will be under the supervision of the pastor, with Sarah Nurnberg as principal. The children will have an opportunity to display their work at a special achievement day vesper service June 22.

Special services are being planned for Children's Day, June 8. A baptismal service will be the special feature of the day. Several children are now enrolled in a prebaptismal class which is being held during the church school hour.—Reported by C. B. CONSTANCE

Young People Make Tour

SAULT STE MARIE, ONTARIO.—On April 19 and 20, the young people traveled to Little Current for a crokinole party Saturday evening and young people's prayer service Sunday morning.

On April 17, the social committee sponsored a social after the preaching service in the lower auditorium.

The Zion's League held a box social April 25 to raise money for their treasury.

On May 2, 3, and 4, the annual youth conference was held. On Friday evening, a wiener roast and evensong was held at Gros Cap. Saturday was the tour through the Abitibi Power and Paper Mill, with recreation in the afternoon. Saturday evening a banquet was held with Brother Rex Stowe present and Brother Harry Doty as the guest speaker. Sunday the young people held a prayer service, Communion service, and class. The conference concluded with a class.—Reported by W. SPENCER

Six Candidates Baptized

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO.—Elder Richard Andersen visited the Middletown Branch from March 9 to 23 for a series of meetings. These meetings were well attended and on the closing Sunday a baptismal service was held at 2:30 p.m. Floyd Rockwell, Catherine Fain, Jacquelin Rice, Nancy Sixt, and Jean Clemmons were baptized, Elders Richard Andersen, Everett Smith, and Russell Rockwell officiating. The confirmation service was held at the evening service.

On March 17 the Zion's League gave a fellowship dinner at the church for League members and their friends.

The branch has engaged an architect, Mr. David O. Maxfield of Oxford, Ohio, to draw up plans for the new church building. Those serving on the building committee are Elder Russell Rockwell, Elder Leonard Barker, Ray Wikoff, Melzo Gaw, Roberta Treber, Edith Sintz, Mary Stultz.

The branch shows a marked increase in attendance and interest.—Reported by ROBERTA TREBER

Women Raise Funds for Church

ODESSA, TEXAS.—Elder E. C. Riebolt of Lamesa was guest speaker for the morning service January 20. After the service, a pot-luck lunch was held. Elder W. F. Page of Andrews spoke at the evening service.

Brother V. L. Harmon of Salem, Illinois, attended Sunday service February 11.

The priesthood from Odessa, Stanton, and Eunice, New Mexico, are holding monthly priesthood meetings. At each meeting, a chapter in the priesthood manual is discussed, with Brother W. F. Page presiding.

The women's department under the direction of Sister Opal Smith held a box lunch social February 16. One hundred and thirty dollars was raised from the sale of boxes. The women's department plan to present an evening of entertainment each month, with all proceeds to be added to the church building fund.

Twenty-two members of the Odessa mission attended the Oklahoma-West Texas District conference, February 23, at Davidson, Oklahoma. Brother Iral Parker was appointed chairman of the committee to raise the necessary funds to furnish the district missionary with a car. Brother Jim Hobbs was accepted for ordination to the priesthood as priest. He is to be ordained at a later date at Odessa. Brothers Hobbs and Page were elected to the group of eight to represent the district at General Conference.

Brother Irby Mundy of Colorado Springs, Colorado, gave a very interesting talk Sunday evening November 2 on his experiences contacting isolated Saints in the United States. Brother Mundy has probably visited more Latter Day Saint homes than any other member in the church.

Brothers Lawrence Hickman and Jim Hobbs gave their first sermons on Sunday, March 16.

The Caldwell family of Riverside, California, stopped over at Odessa on their way to General Conference. While here, their daughter Carolan had an emergency appendectomy making it necessary for her to remain in Odessa. Brother Caldwell attended Wednesday evening prayer service at Brother Iral Parker's home.—Reported by RALPH E. SADER

Two Families United

TOLEDO, OHIO.—Seventy Loyd Adams was in Toledo during January and February. He held Friday night classes of instruction on how to make and develop contacts for the church, and he also held cottage meetings. The Sunday night sermons by Brother Adams were illustrated with colored slides.

Apostle Maurice Draper spoke to the Toledo congregation on February 5. On February 17 the Fellowship Class sponsored a buffet supper for the young married people, with about forty in attendance. Elder Loyd Adams directed the entertainment.

March 22 marked the uniting of two families in the church as Elder Wayne Crandall baptized Mr. Meanno Gosses and Mrs. Charles Teeple. On Easter Sunday these two were confirmed by Elders Wayne Crandall and Donald Winquist, and Fermon Lee Wheeldon was ordained to the office of deacon by Elders Crandall and Winquist. Fifteen from the Toledo Branch attended General Conference, and on Sunday evening, April 20, reports were given on the various activities and classes attended. The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Pearl Emahiser, has been active. February 14 a valentine party was held in the church basement, with a valentine box filled with offerings to be added to the building fund. Two rummage sales have been held, and the usual study class and day meeting each month.

On January 13, Deborah Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Skiles, of Toledo, was blessed. On March 16, John Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Rowen of Morristown, New Jersey, was blessed. Mrs. Rowen was the former Marian Rightmyer.—Reported by MRS. MARIAN WILLMARTH

Branch Holds Banquet

YUMA, COLORADO.—On April 9, teacher Frank Buchanan was ordained to the office of elder; Bernard Buchanan to the office of teacher; and Donald Korf to the office of deacon.

On April 30, the branch held a semi-formal dinner with Elder Gerald Gabriel as honored guest—a festive and social occasion with the young girls of the branch serving the tables.

During the course of the evening Brother Bernard Buchanan presented Brother Gabriel a gift of remembrance from the group. Brother and Sister Burt Reynolds of Ft. Morgan were present, too. Brother Gabriel held many cottage meetings, home visits, and a class. On May 4, he baptized three candidates. They were Allan Gundersen, Mary Bushner, and Rose Hamp.

Youth Choir Raises Funds

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA. — Elder Alma Andrews of Berkeley met with the priesthood at their monthly meeting March 3.

Associate Pastor Robert L. Nephew presided at the morning service March 9. John Edward, infant son of Elder and Mrs. John E. Gann, was blessed by Elder Nephew assisted by Elder Lawrence Hendrickson. Marjorie Damitz sang "Suffer Little Children." Elder Cecil Jacks gave the sermon.

The Youth Choir held a Country Fair and dinner at the church on March 28. Of the fifty-seven dollars cleared, they have donated twenty-five dollars to the Auditorium fund, and twenty-five dollars to the Happy Valley reunion grounds.

Observance of Palm Sunday was held in connection with the Communion service April 6. Music was furnished by the youth choir, directed by Nelda Horton and accompanied by Phillipa Gann. A duet, "Palm Branches," was sung by Virginia Winsor and Marjorie Damitz. Pastor Myron R. Schall presided at the Communion, giving the pastoral address and prayer. Elder Robert Nephew presented oblation thoughts. The invocation and benediction were by Evangelist W. H. Dawson. In the evening the sound picture "Barabbas, the Robber" was presented.

Two identical services were held on Easter Sunday, the first at 9:30 A.M. and the other at 11:00. Special music consisted of two anthems by the choir and a solo by Virginia Winsor. Elder Myron Schall presented the message. The Zion's League held a worship service at 7:00 A.M., followed by a breakfast. In the evening the choir and drama department presented the cantata, "The Story of Calvary," combining music, choral readings and drama. Music was directed by Edna Burdick, choral readings by Celia Schall and drama by Mabelle Nephew.

Bishop E. C. Burdick spoke at the morning service on April 20 on the subject "The Return to Zion," giving some impressions gained from his attendance at General Conference. Other delegates gave their reports on the Conference at the evening service.

The Zion's League held a Snow Camp at Pine Croft near Colfax during the week end of April 25. Young people from Chico and Yuba City Branches were invited to attend.

Seventy George Njeim began a series of missionary meetings on April 27, speaking at the morning and evening services at the church. Cottage meetings were held during the week with various age groups, with a preaching service at the church replacing the Wednesday evening prayer service. A special meeting for the priesthood was held on Saturday evening, when Elder Njeim was joined by Apostle E. J. Gleazer. They presided with the pastor and his counselors, Elders John E. Gann and Robert L. Nephew, at the Communion service on May 4. Elder Njeim presented the Communion talk and Apostle Gleazer a brief pastoral address. Elder Laurence MacDonald sang "Beside Still Waters," by Hamblin. The missionary meetings continued through the week of May 4-11. Sanitarium Day was observed at the April 27 service, with a special offering for the Independence School of Nursing.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Question:

The first statement in the Epitome of Faith reads: "We believe in God the Eternal Father and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." Are we Trinitarians? Do we believe that the Holy Ghost is also a person, as we sing in one of our hymns—"God in three persons, blessed trinity"?

Michigan

B. E. B.

Answer:

Joseph Smith, Jr., who wrote the Epitome of Faith, taught that there were two persons in the Godhead. In the fifth Lectures on Faith he states: "There are two personages who constitute the great, matchless, governing, and supreme power over all things. . . . They are the Father and the Son . . . the Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, a personage of tabernacle, made or fashioned like unto man." The Holy Spirit he alleged to be the mind or power of God: "And he being the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, and having overcome, received a fullness of the glory of the Father, possessing the same mind with the Father, which mind is the Holy Spirit, that bears record of the Father and the Son, and these three are one."

His son, Joseph Smith III, held the same viewpoint. In an editorial in the Saints' Herald of March 1, 1882, he states: "The opinion held by two of the Presidency [There was no third member then] agreed herein is, that there are two personages in the Godhead; God, the Father, and Jesus Christ, the Son . . . and that the third power named in connection with them is the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, the mind, will, and power of both the Father and the Son."

We believe that this doctrine held by the prophetic leadership of this church for nearly one hundred years is still the position of the church, or at least the vast majority of its leaders.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

Question:

1. Does the King James Version teach that Jesus' return will be to Independence or New Jerusalem?

2. Please explain Zechariah 14: 4.

Missouri

MRS. M. W.

Answer:

1. All versions affirm that upon his return Christ will come to Zion. "The Redeemer shall come to Zion" (Isaiah 59: 20). "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory" (Psalm 102: 16). There are a number of evidences in the King James and other versions indicating that Zion will be built up upon a land far away from Palestine, and in the midst of a Gentile population, though the place is not sufficiently identified for us to point it out without using rather voluminous and complex evidences, which cannot be done in this column. The Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants both show that the latter-day Zion will be upon the American continent. (See III Nephi 10: 1-4; Ether 6: 2-8; Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1.)

2. The passage is to be understood only in relation with its context. The prophecy deals with latter-day events when all nations will gather against God's people to overwhelm and destroy. The Lord will permit the destruction to begin, perhaps so that he may be justified when he shall "go forth to fight against those nations," to their destruction, and to the deliverance of his people. He will come in person, and the verse says "his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives," which shall cleave apart, creating a valley, apparently giving opportunity for safe flight and salvation. (The Scriptures mention several appearances of Christ prior to his final coming to dwell with his people, besides this one. Luke 12: 40-43, I.V.; Malachi 3: 1; Zechariah 12: 10.) Such prophecies are impossible of a positive and detailed interpretation until the time of their fulfillment.

Question:

Why should I believe in prophets now? Weren't they done away with long ago?

E. C. D.

Colorado

Answer:

Only because of the wickedness and unbelief of man have prophets ceased to exist (I Corinthians 12: 28). God "set" prophets in the church along with other officers. They were to remain "until we all come unto the unity of the faith" (Ephesians 4: 13). With hundreds of churches, each believing something different, there certainly is no unity as yet. Malachi said, "I am God, I change not"; therefore, we know that the "Lord will do nothing save he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets" (Amos 3: 7). Nowhere in the Scriptures can evidence be found that prophets were done away with because of God's plans or desires. Prophets are a part of the organization that Christ put in his church. It is reasonable to expect an unchangeable God to continue with the same type of organization.

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

Is there any Scripture in the Bible which proves that we will know each other on the other side or in eternal life? I mean will we know our loved ones (like father and mother) as we know them here?

MRS. P. B.

Washington

Answer:

We recall no Scripture touching directly on this point, but the general teaching strongly maintains the perpetual identity of every individual person. Changes of nature, character, spirituality, intellectuality, allegiance, and even name, may take place, but these can never destroy identity. I will always be I, regardless of condition or location. Yes, we shall know each other.

But this is not to say that we shall still carry the natural love of family relationships, for stronger ties and closer relationships than those of family will take their place. The love between parents and children, brothers and sisters, will be swallowed up by a greater love which will not stop with family relations, but extend to all the children of God. Our love will be as God's love—universal toward all, and not related to or dependent upon carnal flesh.

The fact that in the kingdom of God the saved are not all in the same realm precludes the likelihood of families necessarily being all together, for some may be in one glory and others in another.

The Power of Prayer

While reading "Unforgettable Experiences in Book of Mormon Lands" by Roy Weldon I felt my heart burn within me. In this article he tells of an old man who, after hearing one of Brother Weldon's lectures on the Book of Mormon, said he wished he had heard it when he was young because now he was too old to do much. Then he brightened and said, "Yes, there is something I can do. I can pray for you." Brother Weldon said he remembered this man's promise as he outlined material for lectures while traveling in Book of Mormon lands; inspiration came to him so strongly that he realized his elderly friend's prayers were being answered.

Often I have felt sad because I am not doing more for God and his kingdom. Being the wage earner and caring for my home and children take most of my time and strength. I do read before retiring at night, however, and articles like this often bring a spiritual feast to me.

When I read of the old man who prayed for Brother Weldon, I thought of the people who have prayed for me. I know it was because of their prayers that I received a fuller understanding of the Restoration work and a deeper desire to serve. Often I sense the trials and temptations of others with whom I worship, and I pray for them. I have seen many of these prayers answered as people have been strengthened and lives have been changed because of God's love for his children. This has been a comfort to me and has given me an even greater desire to serve. I feel I can never do enough to be worthy of the blessings he has given me. I am deeply grateful for the gospel and want to help in any way I can.

A Testimony on Anointing With Oil

Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.—I Corinthians 1: 10.

This long has been a favorite text of ministers of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I hope it will always be.

In the last year or so I have noticed somewhat of a difference of opinion about some of the details of anointing with oil and administering to the sick, some teaching that the oil should be applied to the head only. With this some of us disagree since we were taught otherwise.

I remember that some years before his death, Joseph Smith II lectured to a large body of priesthood members. Here, briefly, is what he said:

I expect we could have experienced many more blessings had we exercised more faith in administering from time to time. I do not think it sufficient to anoint the head only; we should also anoint that part of the body where the pain seems to be located. If the ill person is a sister, and the pain is located where it would not be proper for the elders to anoint, they should request a woman to do the anointing, during which time the elders should absent themselves from the room. Then they may return, anoint the head, and administer as they may be lead.

I remember that he emphasized this greatly. Since that time I have tried to observe it, and I wish to testify that it has brought results. I feel that I should not stand alone in this, as there are several still active in the ministry who must be living witnesses to this and remember what he said. No doubt they have observed his advice.

I remember one sister about sixty-five years old. Dr. Archie McDowell (uncle to Floyd M. McDowell) and Dr. Peterson, both of Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, had diagnosed her disease as scrofulous leprosy and said that she would not live more than three or four days. I anointed different parts of her body; she recovered in seventeen days and lived twelve years. I preached there in the town seventeen nights and she was out to hear the last sermon. She had been a teacher in the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church from her girlhood.

I also wish to say that I have witnessed many occasions when consecrated oil has been taken internally and wonderful healings have followed. Of course all of this is by faith in the blessing of God attending the consecrated oil and not any healing power in the oil of itself.

Many are the experiences in my fifty-four years as an elder of the church. I hope there are others who remember the instruction of Joseph Smith at that General Conference.

courage, with expectancy, with endurance, with persistence, and with power in the kingdom enterprise.

Saints live by the precious promises that have been made to them. I have such a promise; you have such a promise. It includes the promise of the kingdom. There are those who say, "I don't know how long I shall be here. I do not know whether I shall live to see the kingdom in my day." That is right. I do not know; you do not know. But it does not matter too much. What does matter is that the kingdom shall be, and that here or in the hereafter we shall have part in it if we will.

The testimony of Jesus in our souls is that the time shall come when the work of God through good men shall be crowned with success, and the kingdom shall be built. In that day the truly great people of every age—of the yesterdays, of today, and of the days yet to be—shall realize the fruits of their endeavor. Soldiers who have fought for right against the background of eternity shall share with Christ in the victory of a kingdom not made with hands but established in the power of God—a kingdom from which fear, doubt, and death have been removed—the culminating, the glorious, the magnificent demonstration of the power of God. In the conviction that God is at work to bring such a kingdom to pass, let us move out, forward, and upward together.

Serving God and Country

would have a chance to claim exemption from bearing arms and would be put in noncombatant service where they could become ministering angels to those in need.

We find that war with all its horrors and destruction is the work of Satan. Christ's mission was to overcome Satan and destroy his works. How is this to be brought about? Surely not by Christ's followers engaging in the terrible slaughter of one another and of mankind.

We find by studying the teachings of Christ that his whole philosophy of life was based on the principles of love. There was never a hint of malice in his noble character. Even while Christ was enduring the terrible suffering on the cross of Calvary he said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." To my mind this act of interceding and asking the Father to forgive those who had driven the cruel nails through his hands and feet was the most wonderful climax to the greatest demonstration of love the world has ever seen. Can we find a greater leader to follow, or base our lives on a better philosophy?

Who serves God best serves his country best.

The Change Within

PART I

By Mrs. R. E. McLaughlin

*Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will prevail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take;
What parched grounds refresh as
with a shower!
We kneel—and all the distant and the near Stand forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how

THE LINES of this poem are very beautiful. But if we would experience this change within, there must first be a vision of God and of his son, Jesus Christ; there must be a communion with him; there must come to us a recognition of his Spirit's presence in our lives and a dedication to his will. How shall we vision God? He may be seen in many ways—through beauty and love, in nature, in sorrow and pain, in a thousand other ways—but one which cannot fail to bring certainty is the face of Christ.

"He That Hath Seen Me, Hath Seen the Father"

I never grow weary of Sallman's "Head of Christ." It has been said to me that this is not a true likeness of Christ, for he was a Jew and there is no likeness to a Jew there. We read that he was not comely to look upon, and this face is a handsome one, but I see embodied there all that I have visioned in his life.

I see strength, character, humility, courage, and love transforming spiritual power from his life to mine.

We Are New Creatures

If any man live in Christ he is a new creature (II Corinthians 5: 17). Spiritual life must have a beginning, and that beginning is made when God sends to us his Holy Spirit which plants in our soul a consciousness of him. Then this life grows within, causing us to feel in harmony with all that is good; there is within us love and compassion, a desire to forgive if we have been dealt with unjustly, charity, tolerance, and humility.

As Christ walked the streets of Jericho, he was followed by a multitude of people, some merely curious, some seeking to be healed of their infirmities. But there was one—the man Zaccheus—who heard the voice of the Master. Zaccheus was so short in stature he was unable to see Jesus, so he climbed a tree and looked over the heads of the crowd. He had no theory to defend; he did not want to be healed; but he did know that he wanted to expand his vision. Christ saw possibilities in this very human man and said, "Zaccheus, make haste, for today I must abide in thy house."

As he talked with his master, Zaccheus experienced the wonderful change which can come only by touching the divine life. Zaccheus decided to reform and live up to the better way afforded him. He chose simply to adjust his life and be a follower of the Nazarene. Can we do less?

What was it in the life of Jesus that caused fishermen to leave their nets by the lakeside and answer the divine call: "Come, follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." If we would understand the love Christ had for men and the attraction men were to have for this great teacher, let us vision a scene by the shores of Galilee where the aged Zebedee and his two stalwart sons sat mending their nets. Jesus spoke, and they were attracted. There was a majesty in the calm assurance of his face that impelled them to feel that they could safely follow this man anywhere as he sought to help them fully understand the truth. So great was the confidence of Jesus in the undeveloped goodness of men and women that he called for the best in them and qualities, unsuspected on their part, flowered into, enriching fullness at the touch of his almighty power. Their lives became attuned with his. He at once saw in these rugged fishermen potentialities which they knew not of. So it is today in our lives, where the Spirit of God takes control of people like these fishermen—and all people for that matter—all else is forgotten and we recognize that this power is ever present if we seek it.

If we would grow spiritually, we must see ourselves as others see us, becoming more aware of our weaknesses and seeking to overcome them. Mosiah, in the Book of Mormon, tells us by the Spirit: "It is necessary to be born of God, not alone by water but by the Spirit," thus becoming his sons and daughters.

Power Is Recognized

Spiritual power is recognized as mankind seeks to conform wholly to the truth and promises of God. In Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3 we read: "I the Lord am bound, when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." God's promises are conditional—"When ye do what I say." When Jesus truly enters our lives, he blesses, uplifts, and encourages us. And when we feel this spirit we lift and encourage others. As we give of ourselves we, too, are nourished. Thus the promise, "Give, and it shall be given unto you," is fulfilled.

The story of Helen Keller is a striking example of the way in which God reveals himself to the pure soul, the reverent heart, and the spiritual mind. Helen Keller was blind to all the beauty of the earth and deaf to its sweet sounds, yet the time came when her teacher resolved to try and convey to her the idea of God. It was quite an easy thing to do. When God's name was conveyed to her in the sign language which she had been taught, she quietly said, "Is that his name? I have always known him, though I did not know his name."

To her simple heart and mind the glory of God was revealed, and the realities of the unseen world were familiar things.

Christ in Us

We should not be satisfied with any small measure of attainment. If Christ dwells in our lives we should be like him. We should be able to say, "Look at me and see the reflection of the Master."

This will become true in the measure that the Christ in us is allowed to rule and transform our lives. It should be our aim and prayer that the abiding influence of the Holy Spirit be without hindrance, that no part of our lives remain unfulfilled. Children of God are recognized by the kind of lives they are willing to live, not in theory but in practical service to God and his church. No individual who is lukewarm spiritually can be called a child of God simply because his name is on the church record. The world must see Christ and his works in us.

The Transforming Power

The Spirit of God has always been the greatest force in the church. This same Spirit can quickly guide us in the practical affairs today, the same as it did with Paul on his way to Damascus when he received that wonderful experience which brought about his conversion. "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard the things which God has prepared for them that love him." The natural man does not know the things of the Spirit. They are foolish to him and mean nothing. He cannot comprehend spiritual things, because they can be discerned only spiritually.

If those who have not felt this transforming power in their lives will really desire it and truly live for it, that realization will come. It is ever close at hand, but unless our souls are attuned we cannot feel its presence. We are promised this gift if we walk uprightly before God and obey his commands, for the faith of the Father seeks such to worship him.

How may we recognize this spiritual power? We have seen it evidenced in the life of the leader of this church. We have seen it in the life of a deacon in one of the smaller branches. Both are just average men who have heard and answered the call, "Follow me." They are human as we are, yet in their eagerness to bring the love of God into the lives of men, and the lives of men into the kingdom of God, there has come to them that transforming power from within—the power of God.

Spiritual Power in Different Ways

In Balmain Branch there is a sister, now aged, who for years has given a wonderful ministry by beautifying the church with flowers. I have never heard her pray aloud or heard her spoken testimony, but an enduring testimony is written in the lives of those who came a little closer to God because she has beautified his house of worship. In this setting one can find calmness pervading the hearts of those who covenant together to dedicate anew their lives to the work whereunto they have been called.

I remember an occasion during the last Tiona Reunion, when in an early morning prayer service, thirty-six prayers were offered in thirty-eight minutes. Only the Spirit of God in the lives of people made that experience possible.

Often we have sought the quiet of our room and knelt by our bedside in prayer, asking for a solution to a problem that has become too great for us to solve. Our minds have been in confusion and turmoil. As we poured out our hearts to God there has come an indescribable peace—quieting our troubled hearts, and we have been strangely comforted.

Spiritual power is not always felt or heard in a spontaneous manner as on the day of Pentecost. It may be experienced through the singing of a soul-stirring hymn, or a testimony. Perhaps it is felt in the heart of the woods where we have sought to be alone with God; perhaps by some lake at sunset as we have gazed across the water and caught the vision of divine handwork; perhaps in the everyday opportunities in our home.

The abrupt, impetuous Peter and the refined, educated Paul did not speak after the same manner, yet the Holy Spirit so inspired the hearts and minds of both that each gave a message to the souls of men.

God has not always spoken through a gifted Isaiah. At times he has used as an instrument to bring his purposes to pass such men as Joseph Smith the Prophet and Alexander Seaberg who established the work in Balmain. The same spirit was working for the salvation of souls and these men obeyed the urge to prove God in their day. "I am the Lord; I change not." This same spirit is available to us today.

Change Your Life Through Prayer

By Stella Wild

SOME PEOPLE THINK that Christianity is impractical and consider God much as one would think of Santa Claus—wonderful, if only he could be true.

Having faith is like a savings bank—we have to put something in before we can draw it out, but if we continue to make deposits the interests that add up will be amazing and sure.

Prayer is the most powerful force in the universe. It solves many problems. There have been healings through prayer, but here, as in other areas, results depend on certain laws. Contrary to long belief, God does not punish us. We live under spiritual laws which are self-operating. If we try to operate our lives and satisfy our desires outside those laws, we hurt ourselves. It is like running against a barbed wire fence. The fence and the law hold. Prayer is a conscious effort to communicate with the Infinite Spirit of the universe which we commonly call God.

Prayer falls under three headings:

1. The prayer of petition or asking—the purpose of which is to have God move on our behalf. In this prayer we may ask for guidance—for things or conditions which may apply to persons.

2. The prayer of thanksgiving or acknowledgment. The purpose of this type is to relieve our feelings by pouring forth words or thoughts of worship and to pay our debts, or to acknowledge blessings received. It may cover gratitude of any of the things for which we pray, the mere joy of existence, or the awe-inspiring experience of having been in touch with God.

3. The prayer of search, the heart's honest desire to be assured that God does exist, the urge to draw near to and co-operate with God without either asking or thanksgiving. This is the highest form of prayer, and under it comes all honest effort or work toward an honest end. It expresses the highest desire known to man—the desire for final wisdom or truth. All three types involve man's free agency. Conscious prayer requires desire, decision, and action on the part of man.

All growth is from within. No human spirit ever loses contact with God. When we learn to listen to these inner promptings of the soul, we create good.

THE FIRST STEP in prayer is knowing exactly what we want. When we have reached a clear and honest decision we must next ask whether our desire is spiritually legal. Sometimes we make the mistake of asking for definite things that are not in line with God's law for the progressive good of all men. We ask amiss when our purposes are confused, or when we fail to count our blessings. We need to give first, then to forgive.

The second step in prayer is believing. All of us have more faith than we are using. We are familiar with the Scriptures, "Ask and you shall receive," "Whatsoever you shall ask in faith, believing, you shall receive," and "All things are possible to him that believeth." These, and many more, are promises of Jesus, who knew more about prayer than anyone else who ever lived. Faith is the assurance beyond any doubt that God exists, that he is our Creator, and that he guides and protects us. We do not have to beg God, but we do have to know him.

The third step in prayer is "waiting on the Lord." Webster says that to wait means to watch or look (mentally); to stay in expectation; to act as attendant or servant. This definition contains the three essentials of the third step of prayer. Most of us fail in one or more of them. We forget the element of time. We wouldn't dig up a radish seed to see if the laws of nature are being kept, but we forget to "wait on the Lord" when we plant a spiritual seed. We fail to be in expectation, for we doubt, hurry, worry, and end up trying to do it ourselves. But where we fail most often is to wait on the Lord and be a servant to him.

So often we pray, ". . . Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." We are saying that we are willing for God to work through us, but do we let him?

I HAVE A NEIGHBOR who says that she is a good Christian. She spends an hour a day at it by reading stories about Jesus and the Bible to her girls. Then when the hour is up, she hurries to get the housework done. She turns on the radio (only to know what time of day it is, she says) and listens to war news and the "soap-box operas" filled with tragedy, bad luck, and unhappiness. By the time the oldest girl comes home from school, this mother is physically and mentally worn out. She doesn't have patience with the four-year-old and often asks, "What am I going to do?"

My suggestion to her and to anyone else is to draw up a time schedule. On one side put down approximately imately the time allotted to the Lord's work. That would include praying, reading, guiding your children, singing songs of praise, and meditating. On the other side tabulate the hours given to fear, worry, gossip, or any type of negative things. I have no doubt that the majority will tip the scales on the side of defeat.

We must pray without ceasing for good, work without stopping for good, and think without pausing for good. With our ideas grounded in the faith that God exists, we cannot fail. If we can learn to live by faith and not by fear, even 51 per cent of the time, we can make over our lives. We must constantly keep in tune with God.

■ The Lamoni community sponsored a music festival during the week of April 27 in which the college actively participated. Miss Aleta Runkle, director of music for Center Stake, and director of public school music in Independence, Missouri, spoke on the ministry of music at the Sunday morning service at the college. On Sunday evening the Graceland Concert Choir sang several numbers at the Lamoni church.

The Lamoni High School presented a music program at the college on Monday evening which included four choruses, junior band, and junior orchestra. The college music department reciprocated with a program at the high school on Tuesday.

Graceland students participated along with townspeople in a hymn sing on Wednesday night in the Student Center.

The college heard another musical program in the Thursday assembly period presented by the college music department.

The climax to the week was the appearance of Floyd Worthington, baritone, in recital. Mr. Worthington has an impressive reputation in the concert and opera fields and aroused an enthusiastic reception at Graceland as he did in his appearance last year. He was accompanied on the harp in one group of songs by his daughter, Diana, a Graceland freshman.

■ The Student Publications Board has chosen Alice Eastwood of Independence, Missouri, to edit the '53 Acacia, Graceland yearbook. Howard Braby of Mason City, Iowa, will be the Acacia business manager. Alice became familiar with printing through her father who is an engraver and off-set platemaker. She was sports editor of the weekly paper of William Chrisman High School in Independence and has written for the Graceland Tower this year. Her sister was editor of the '48 Acacia. Howard worked on the photography staff of his high school annual. His brother, Dick, is chief photographer for this year's Acacia.

■ Mr. Harry Dennis will join the Graceland faculty next year as instructor of American and European history, and hygiene. Mr. Dennis, originally from Hagerman, Idaho, was graduated from Graceland in 1947, received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, and will complete his Master of Arts degree at the University of Idaho this summer. He is now teaching at Rupert, Idaho.

■ The motion picture A Midsummer Night's Dream was shown recently in the chapel. Made several years ago, this movie version of Shakespeare's comedy features James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Mickey Rooney, Dick Powell, and Joe E. Brown, and reveals to today's students how these stars looked and acted when they were younger.

■ Jack Waddell of East Moline, Illinois, was elected Graceland student body president for 1952-53. Two primary elections had narrowed the field of nominees down to two, Jack, and Howard Sheehy of Greeley, Colorado. Jack, a pastoral group leader for next year, was elected a member of the student council earlier this year.

■ Bishop Earl Higdon of Lamoni, newly elected member of Graceland's Board of Trustees, was elected chairman of the board at the annual organizational meeting held on the campus May 4. Mr. Higdon is a graduate of Graceland and has attended the University of Iowa and Northwestern University. He has taught at Graceland and is at present under General Church appointment.

■ Mrs. Olive Mortimore, communication instructor, is planning to return to the faculty next fall. She had previously announced her resignation.

■ The annual sophomore banquet and the freshman picnic were held on May 24. The sophomore banquet is sponsored by the alumni in order to introduce the sophomores to the alumni association. George Waddell of East Moline, Illinois, sophomore class president, was toastmaster.

The freshman picnic is held yearly as the last all-class activity. Lynn Ourth of Nauvoo, Illinois, and his committee were in charge.

■ Mrs. F. M. McDowell recently presented a lecture on Madonna art. Mrs. McDowell displayed her large collection of Madonna pictures by different artists and explained how the pictures could be used in worship settings.

■ Scott Fisher of Somerville, Massachusetts, and Phyllis Hansen of Conception Junction, Missouri, were elected king and queen of the May Festival held in the student center on May 3. This formal all-school function featured the coronation of the king and queen in an impressive ceremony. Entertainment was provided by "the royal jesters."

P.S.

* PENS

Since men first began experimenting with runes in the dawn of literature they have invented many kinds of writing instruments: the chisel for cutting in stone, the stylus for inscribing on a tablet of wax or clay, and the quill for papyrus and parchment. The Chinese deftly used a brush, which is usually slop-happy in the hands of any other people. Since then we have had pens and ink, pencils, typewriters, Linotypes, electric writers, and even airplanes doing a Spencerian hand in the sky. (The Lord wrote the first edition of the Ten Commandments with his finger—Exodus 31: 18. And Jesus wrote with his finger on the ground.)

One of the less happy experiments was the ball point, which is neither a pen nor a pencil, having all their faults and none of their virtues. It is not the worst writing instrument known to man. Probably the Post Office pen holds the world's undisputed, long-distance, all-time heavy-middle-and-lightweight championship as the most miserable of all literary instruments. Yet the ball point is not far behind. It has been credited as the only thing that will make six carbon copies and no original. It skids when it ought to roll. It dumps extra ink on the curves and corners. It fuzzes the straight-aways and scants the periods and dots. It goes with beautiful ease when you are trying it with mere squillions and zip-zap, but has a perverse will of its own when you write.

In honor of the ball point I have composed the following letter to be mailed to my friends who may use it—

Dear Merlin:

It was so nice of you to write to me. Fortunately, your printed stationery enabled me to identify you. Knowing you, I have the most complete confidence in what you have said.

Examining the script, I still don't know what it is all about.

Won't you come up and see me sometime and tell me what you wanted?

Trustingly yours,

Arthur

* PREDICTIONS

There were three fine barometers in the window of the jewelry shop. All of them pointed to "fair." It was indeed "fair" in the window—the climate was perfect.

But out on the sidewalk where I was standing, there was rain, thunder, and lightning.

Perhaps the mechanical weather prophet is no more dependable than the other kinds.

* ADVICE

Don't jump at conclusions. Some day you may intercept one, and it will be the finish of you.

* COUNTERCHECK

- A. (discouraged), "I might be wrong."
- B. (enthusiastic), "You are so right!"

* CAUTION

The throng is often wrong.

* HELP

Whenever one person tries to help another—if wisdom is used—two receive a blessing.

The Mansion of the Soul

"Narrow is the mansion of my soul; enlarge it, that Thou mayest enter in."

—St. Augustine, Confessions

THERE ARE TIMES in our lives when we obtain brief and entrancing views of some field of knowledge new to us that we would like ever so much to explore. Or we meet a traveler who tells us of far lands and strange people that we wish we could visit. Perhaps we hear someone talking of great teachers under whom we would like to study. A man expresses a thought by which we know that he has gone far in the search for truth, or has had an experience with God.

At such moments, windows open where we thought there were only walls, and we behold vast distances that invite us to come and see. In such experiences we become acutely aware of our limitations of knowledge, experience, and capacity; and out of the depths of mind and spirit an overwhelming discontent wells up within us. The mansion that we have built for the soul is too small—"too narrow," as St. Augustine expressed it.

The prophet Isaiah said it in another way:

For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it.—28: 20.

Isaiah must have been a big man, and was probably acquainted with some strange small beds and guest rooms during his travels. But, like any philosopher, he found illustrations for his talks and writings even in his physical discomforts. In the beds of his countrymen he found a symbol of their spiritual narrowness.

At times like these, we feel that "the mansion of the soul" is too narrow, our culture insufficient, our knowledge too little, our experience too restricted. We see some Mount of Sinai where a Moses has climbed to walk on holy ground and be with God. We would like to climb that mountain, too, to see the world from that clear height, and to withdraw from it at the same time to dwell in the presence of a supreme spiritual power.

VERY RECENTLY I saw this situation in the lives of three young men. Two of them sat together in a coach seat. Their voices were clear and, since this is a free land, they were not afraid of expressing themselves. Anybody could hear them. So I learned a great deal about them with no effort at all. Obviously, they were university men, with all the advantages of education and the refinement of culture. They talked of politics, business, and world affairs. They quoted the latest books and the best magazines. They had a fine time together, and they made a most attractive picture of young American manhood.

Across the aisle from them, about the same age, another young American sat alone. From time to time he looked over at the other two. Something was going on in his mind, and I wondered what. His clothing was rough and poor. His hands were calloused by toil. His face was bronzed by exposure to the wind and sun. He looked tired, and he was very quiet. There had not been much opportunity for the "finer things of life" for him. If I could judge by his expression then, he was finding "the mansion of his soul" a little too narrow.

The two university men seemed unaware of him. Probably didn't consider him worth a thought. They were nice chaps, but if they had a fault it may have been their preoccupation with secular interests, their lack of awareness of spiritual realities and responsibilities. . . . If the time should ever come when their neat, elegant world goes to pieces on economic and political rocks, they may find themselves face-to-face with that other young man, and incredible numbers of his kind, and they will have to give him some attention.

I did not need anything further to understand these two. They had explained themselves quite clearly, for all the world to hear. But I was concerned about the third young man. There are more of his kind in America and in the world today than there are of these younger versions of Dean Acheson and (to borrow one) Anthony Eden. His kind has taken over in many parts of the world, and their kind has lost the reins of leadership.

Let no one think "It can't happen here." The man across the aisle may be more important than we think. The time may come—indeed, it is here now—when the younger Achesons and Edens must pay attention to him.

THERE ARE THOSE who know and can remember all too well what it was like to be in that lonely place across the aisle, looking with wide eyes and hungry minds at other young men who were more fortunate in the opportunities of life. They know what struggles and sacrifices it costs to cross the aisle by their own efforts, into another fellowship.

Still, there are greater mansions to build for the soul. There are new adventures, spiritual and intellectual, to be undertaken.

Most of us will find, if we really try to reach God, that the mansion of the soul is too narrow to allow him to enter. We aren't as big as we ought to be and could be. We need a new vision and the determination to make a greater effort.

We hope, of course, that God may use our hands in the work of building his kingdom. We shall need larger mansions of the soul to be that kingdom-building people.

Comments on the Social Service Center Booth

All the women, members of the staff of the Independence Social Service Center, and Bishop Norman E. Hield, manager, extend their appreciation and heartfelt thanks to everyone who so generously contributed in helping to make the Social Service Center display booth a success during the recent General Conference.

The display booth was located on the lower floor of the Auditorium. Some contributed by making and donating things to be sold. Others came to the booth and bought what they needed, while others gave their services in helping to arrange the displays and selling.

Many were interested in knowing the total amount received during the week and for what purpose the money is to be used. The amount was a little over twenty-two hundred dollars. It is to be used by the Bishopric for the expansion of the Social Service Center—a unit of the Storehouse—and thus provide a more efficient ministry to those who are in need.

Through comments made by those who came to buy, and the choices they made, we learned a great deal about the articles that were preferred.

We are now beginning to prepare articles to be offered for sale in the booth at the next General Conference. We feel sure those who have so kindly assisted in the past will have a desire to contribute during the next two years; and no doubt many who have not responded hitherto will now have a desire to make their contribution to this worthy cause in the future.

The articles most preferred by those who came to buy were aprons (large and small), embroidered pillowcases, guest towels, fancy handkerchiefs, quilts, children's dresses, quilts for baby beds and sets, baby booties, rugs of all kinds, fancy work, pot holders, tea towels, and practical articles to be used in a home.

Perhaps the women in the different districts and branches, while planning their work for the year, would consider making some things for the Conference booth as one of their projects. The Social Service Center is in need of such help and will be more than thankful for all co-operation given.

Packages should be sent to the Social Service Center, 310 North Liberty Street, Independence, Missouri.

Assistant to Presiding Bishopric Appointed

Lewis E. Scott of Covina, California, has been placed under General Church appointment as assistant to the Presiding Bishopric. Brother Scott comes with special qualifications to serve both in a field of ministry and in special assignments having to do with construction work and the management of the Auditorium.

The accelerated building activity throughout the church has placed an increasingly heavy load on the Bishopric at the same time that other church activities require more than usual attention.

Brother Scott will represent the Presiding Bishopric in working with designing architects and with the church architect, Henry C. Smith. He will be available through the Presiding Bishopric to serve various architectural committees for church buildings, district reunion grounds, and other properties belonging to the church. He will represent the General Church on all architectural construction work in the central areas to see that the construction, the specifications, and the plans are met as called for by the architects.

The growth of the church is placing more and more demands upon the Auditorium. Much of the building is twenty-five years old and requires increased maintenance. A great deal of temporary work was done on the Auditorium because of lack of money at the time the building was under construction. These factors, together with the problems faced in completing the Auditorium, make it necessary that more supervision time be given to these problems.

In harmony with the General Conference provision, major construction work requires the approval of the First Presidency, member of the Twelve concerned, and the Presiding Bishopric; therefore, all letters regarding the purchase of lots, building designs, construction costs, houses of worship financing, et cetera, should be directed to the office of the Presiding Bishopric.

Requests for the assistance and help of Brother Scott also should be directed to the Presiding Bishopric. Many demands already are being made upon his time, but we will be very glad to co-operate with branch, district, and stake officers when it is felt that his service can be utilized to advantage.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

By G. L. DeLapp

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Mrs. Robert J. Costello, the former Miss Janet Fredrick:

Our Orlando Branch is growing. Last week six eight- to twelve-year-old youngsters were baptized. There was also a new family baptized this year. The women of our branch fast Thursday and pray at 9:30 a.m. for the nonmember husbands and wives, and I think we are getting some results. God is blessing us all.

There seems to be a spirit of missionary outreach in this group which is bringing results.

The Christ of the Restoration

Our Answer to Modern Gnosticism

By Evan A. Fry

Selections from a sermon delivered to the Slover Park Congregation, Independence, Missouri, December 9, 1951. Transcribed from a wire recording by Mrs. Norman Brooks.

Scripture Reading: I John 1: 1-10; 2: 1-5.

IN THESE TIMES we are concerned with the mission and message of Jesus Christ. This mission, this message, and the person of Christ himself are under attack today by a powerful heresy that assumes the character of an apostasy in our times, as it did in ancient times.

Here I would like to review briefly the history of that apostasy and examine its character, in order that we may see the strong defense that we have against it in the inspired literature of the Restoration. We have a great blessing in the belief and philosophy of our faith.

The Beginning of the Apostasy

During the last two years, more or less, I have made a study of some of the heresies, or some of the elements of apostasy which entered into the New Testament church. Although we Reorganized Latter Day Saints say for the sake of convenience that the apostasy began with Constantine about A. D. 325, I think that the apostasy started long before that—almost before Jesus had ascended to his Father, and certainly in the days of Peter, Paul, John, and the other apostles, and the men who wrote our New Testament, the seeds of heresy and apostasy were already sown in the church. They are present with us today in greater or lesser measure. Still remaining with us, even in this Restoration Movement are the danger and the possibility of entering into some of these heresies which were partly the cause of the downfall of the early Christian church.

One of the most important of those early heresies was called Gnosticism, which comes from a Greek word, "gnosis," meaning knowledge, or wisdom. Gnosticism was the philosophy of those who said they knew, that they had a higher intelligence, a broader knowledge, a greater wisdom than anyone else about them. This wisdom was reserved for the elect, for the intelligentsia, for the people who were called out to receive a direct revelation from God. They did not try to share it with common folk, but regarded it as an esoteric secret and tried to keep it to themselves.

What Gnosticism Was and Is

Gnosticism was a blend of pagan philosophy from several different sources, both eastern and western, superimposed upon Christianity. There were in it some elements of what is now Buddhism, some of Platonism, and some of other Greek philosophy. The Gnostics themselves were a divided sect, broken up into many divisions, so that there was no absolute uniformity to their belief; but their beliefs, though widely different in some cases, stemmed from or grew out of some rather simple, basic beliefs with which they started.

They held the idea of the incompatibility of God and matter—that God was above matter and had nothing to do with it. Matter was evil. God didn't touch it, didn't care what happened to it. God was up in his heaven, and down here in the world was matter, and from matter came all of the evil of the human race. That is one aspect of Gnosticism, the first heresy that entered the Christian church.

Then in order to get around the story of the Old Testament that God created the heavens and the earth, they said that out of Almighty God went certain emanations, called "aeons," and that as these "aeons" got farther and farther from God, they got lower and lower in the spiritual and moral and social scale, until eventually they got down to man, and finally through man to earth or matter. The earth was not made by God Almighty, but was made by one of these lesser emanations, or gods, who was therefore responsible for the evil inherent in the matter he had created. This lesser god was the one responsible for the Old Testament which says, "I, God, made the heavens and the earth." But that wasn't the Omnipotent God speaking at all! The lesser god who made this earth dabbled in matter, got his hands dirty, introduced evil into the universe, and made it impossible ever after for man to be completely divorced from that evil or separated from it. Therefore, man was estranged from the supreme God.

The Rejection of Personal Responsibility

What are some of the implications of that philosophy? That philosophy denies man's free moral will and agency. If all evil is simply the fault of the body in which I live, and if I am evil simply because I am so mixed up with matter that I can't help myself, then where is my agency? There is no agency. I can find no salvation in a Savior who comes to earth in human flesh and dies to save me. My only salvation is somehow—by right thinking, perhaps—to achieve a complete and total release from the matter by which my spirit is now surrounded and limited. Until that time I am not responsible for what I do, because evil is inherent in me. I can't help being evil as long as I am in my body. Sin is only a physical tendency or quality inherent in the body, and inherent in all matter.

If we carry that philosophy a little farther what do we get? The fall of man is not a fall at all; it is not the result of rebellion and disobedience. It is simply the fault of the fact that somehow, somewhere, through no mistake of his own, man finds himself in a physical body, and finding himself there he continues to act as a physical body built of evil matter is supposed to act. And that is that; there is no help for it. Salvation means merely finding out how to escape from matter, how to find complete emancipation from the flesh. Salvation, according to that philosophy, doesn't come through Christ and his atonement at all; it comes simply through correct thinking. If you think strongly enough, long enough, and in the right direction, you will discover that there is no such thing as matter. Then you are freed from it, and then you are saved.

The Rejection of Moral Law

There is another implication growing out of this philosophy, which goes by the name of Antinomianism, which means simply this: that moral law is of no more use or obligation or consequence to one who has found out that there is no matter. The only thing necessary for salvation is faith, or belief, or right thinking. This is very close to some of the heresies that we hear today—that the only salvation we need is faith; that once we have achieved that salvation by faith, we are saved. Once saved, always saved. Once in grace, always in grace; we cannot sin; we cannot fall. Once we have set our spirit right and divorced its desires from the desires of the body, we just make up our mind that the body isn't here and that we are not going to be bothered or governed by its desires or needs at all, and we are saved. Let the body go its way unhindered; our spirit, regardless of what the body does, can do no wrong.

The Rejection of Christ

Now let us take another step in the investigation of the Gnostic philosophy.

The Bible says that God became flesh and dwelt among us, but the Gnostics said that God couldn't become flesh and dwell among us, because all flesh or matter of every kind is evil. Therefore Christ did not come in the flesh; he never died; he was never resurrected. There was no atonement made for our sins and the sins of the world. We have no hope of a physical resurrection.

The Gnostics had an explanation for that, too. They said that Christ was not God, but he was one of the "aeons" or emanations from God. The man Jesus was born—just like any other human being—but Christ was not born in the body. Being a lesser God, he could risk the evil contamination of the flesh; but the idea of a miraculous conception (in which God would again have to deal with matter) a virgin birth and the Almighty God being born in human flesh were all wrong. Up until the time of his baptism, Jesus was a man just like you or me. When the Holy Ghost came and dwelt upon Jesus as a dove, that was the Christ spirit coming down into the man Jesus. The spirit of Christ left Jesus before the death on the cross, so it was only Jesus, the man—not Christ—who was crucified; it was only Jesus deploring the departure of Christ who said, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me." Of course, if Christ was never born, never crucified, never died, he never rose again. He only floated off into space to become again one of those "aeons" or emanations. Christ was never conceived by the Holy Ghost, was never born, never died, was never buried, was never resurrected. What does that do to our whole philosophy of the atonement and the redemption of man?

Gnosticism Leads to Asceticism

"If all matter is evil," said some Gnostics, "we had better deny the body everything, and get it under absolute control as quickly and as easily as we may." This school of Gnosticism practiced asceticism. They said, "Deny the body everything; don't eat, don't drink, don't marry; wear a hair shirt to mortify the body, and if you must sleep, sleep on a hard board with spikes in it, and no covers. Don't bother with cleanliness. Deny the body everything it craves in the way of comfort, health, cleanliness, or physical satisfaction, and you will bring it into subjection." Contrast this with the Restoration philosophy in Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4!

Gnosticism Leads to Licentiousness

But there were some Gnostics who didn't believe in asceticism. They went to the other extreme, and with equally good logic said, "If the body doesn't exist at all, if there is no connection between spirit and body, and if the body alone is the source of all evil as we have been taught, then if I just get my spirit right, it doesn't make a bit of difference what the body does." That group of Gnostics went off into all kinds of sin. They lived in the utmost moral depravity and utter abandonment to the physical senses, but their spirits meanwhile were supposed to be up above the clouds, spiritually pure and undefiled.

That is a sketch and outline of this heresy known as Gnosticism.

The New Testament

In reading the New Testament—particularly the epistles—we find evidence after evidence that the men who wrote them were writing to warn the people against Gnosticism. Read the second chapter of Colossians, for example. In verse 8 Paul says, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit." What kind of philosophy did he mean? Gnosticism! That is made evident from other verses in the same chapter. In verses 16, 21, and 23, it is evident that Paul is taking a slap at the asceticism idea as held by the Gnostics. "Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink." Don't pay any attention to the fanatic who says, "Touch not, taste not, handle not." Asceticism is wrong. There are certain things that the body needs; the body and the spirit together make the soul of man. In verse 18 he talks about some foolish people who worship angels. Paul believed in angels, but in this verse he is talking about those "aeons" of angels, which according to the Gnostics emanate out of God and finally get down to earth level and become man and matter.

In I Timothy 1:4, Paul advises against spending too much time on endless genealogy. Genealogy of what? Of the endless and complicated systems of these "aeons" of angels that supposedly emanate from the throne of grace. Another slap at Gnosticism! In I Timothy 4:3 Paul attacks people who forbid marriage and the eating of meats. In I Corinthians 8:1, 2, he talks about people who have a form of knowledge untempered by charity, and who therefore do not truly know God. In the famous "love letter" of Paul to the Corinthians (I Corinthians 13:2) one little phrase shows that Paul—even when he was writing about charity or love—had in mind the Gnostics. "Though I understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and have not love, it availeth me nothing." The Gnostics claimed a special knowledge of mysterious origin.

In II Timothy 3:2-4, Paul gives a quite lengthy description of Gnostics and some of their actions, ending in verses 6 and 7 with a phrase about those who "creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts." He is talking about the licentiousness of Gnosticism—of those who convinced the foolish that sin was not sin so long as the spirit did not join the body in committing it. Note also the phrase, "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

The whole book of Jude has something to do with the Gnostics. It says there are certain men who creep in unawares, who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, and deny Christ. They speak evil of things they know not; they corrupt themselves. Condemnation of Gnosticism is even in the book of Revelation (2: 6, 15). John is there talking of the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which was very similar to the licentious branch of Gnosticism. They claimed liberty for the body to sin, while the spirit remained pure. Licentious, they ate the meats offered to idols; they indulged in fornications. John calls them in Revelation 3: 9, the "synagogue of satan."

Of all the places in the Bible where Gnosticism is confounded, I think the First Epistle of John is the best, because here this condemnation is boiled down and made very specific and pertinent. Let us notice some of the phraseology which indicates John's concern about Gnosticism. In the first chapter he mentions the things "which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled . . ."—all sensory experiences through the physical body. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." What about sin? "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." "He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." "Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin."

What about the divinity of Christ? "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son."

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is the spirit of that antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now it is already in the world.

Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God; and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him. . . . Who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

It is enlightening to take the First Epistle of John and read it through with Gnosticism in mind; many verses are aimed directly at this heresy.

Modern Gnosticism

Today Gnosticism is being preached again from a great many pulpits of the world by men who deny the virgin birth, the true incarnation of God, the death of Christ, his resurrection, and that there is anything at all to this business of original sin and atonement. They say that they don't believe Jesus was the Son of God, he was just a good man with a lot of outstanding features and admirable qualities. He was this; he was that; he was something else, but he was not God.

Defense in Latter Day Scriptures

Today when this kind of philosophy is being preached from so-called Christian pulpits, we Reorganized Latter Day Saints have a message to bring to the rest of the world. The Book of Mormon in its entirety, according to its preface, is dedicated to the convincing of Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. And not once, but again and again in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that affirmation appears.

In Section 17, paragraphs 5 and 6 is given what I call our "creed" or our basic affirmation about Christ and his mission and how it was accomplished. "Wherefore the almighty God gave his only begotten Son, as it is written in those Scriptures which have been given of him: he suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them." "He suffered temptations" implies that man has a physical body and will or agency to choose the acts by which the spirit is known. "He was crucified"; yes, his spirit suffered through matter. "He died, and rose again on the third day; and ascended into heaven to sit down on the right hand of the Father, to reign with almighty power according to the will of the Father, that as many as would believe and be baptized, in his holy name, and endure in faith to the end, should be saved." And in the closing phrase of this paragraph we find this language: "which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end." Jesus was not an "aeon" or an angel or some mystic emanation from God. He was the Son of God; he was Deity incarnate in human flesh.

"We know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God. And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true; and we know, also, that sanctification . . . is just and true, . . . There is a possibility that man may fall from grace and depart from the living God." (Not "once in grace, always in grace.") "Therefore let the church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptations; yea, and even let those who are sanctified take heed also."

I like the statement in the first chapter of Mosiah, beginning with verse 97: "Behold, the time cometh and is not far distant, that with power the Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven, among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay." There again is the incarnation—Deity in human flesh. God is interested in matter; he has given us matter or substance in order that through it we might give expression to that which we find within our spirit. And in very much the same way, it seems to me, God gives expression to what he is by the things he has placed here in a material world and a material universe to give witness and testimony of him. The Doctrine and Covenants tells us that he who has seen the least of the stars, moving in its glory and majesty and order, has seen God (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12). Paul says, ". . . things which are not seen [are] understood by the things that are made, through his eternal power and Godhead" so that men are left without excuse for disbelief (Romans 1: 20).

One of the finest passages, I think, in all the Book of Mormon, is Mosiah 8: 28, where Abinadi says, "I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men and shall redeem his people." There has been some disagreement in interpretation of this passage as to whether God and Christ are one person or two. With that disagreement we need not be concerned here. This much is plain and clear and unequivocal. Jesus was not simply an ethereal emanation out of a God who is so far off that we can never reach him; he is not something which is half evil because of his incarnation in and contamination with "evil" matter, because there can be no redemption from evil through evil. Jesus was Deity incarnate. God used a human body in which to send his Son among the children of men, to express his love and concern for men, and to reveal Deity to them. "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," wrote Paul to the Colossians. And in the Book of Mormon passage, Abinadi continues:

God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people, and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God; and having subjected

The Catholic Dilemma in America

Thomas Sugrue, noted Roman Catholic layman and well-known author, analyzes the problems of the Catholic who wishes to be a loyal American, and presents the difficulties, which he calls an "iron curtain," that stand between Catholic and Protestants. From two articles that appear in the "Christian Herald" for January and February, 1952, permission has been granted to quote passages presented here. Harper's will issue the articles in book form at the price of one dollar.

FROM CHILDHOOD you have been aware of the "Catholic problem" in the United States. You have been encouraged to be suspicious, perhaps hostile, toward this large and powerful minority which now numbers about one fifth of the total population. The high fences, the locked doors, the walls around Catholic properties have filled your mind with the feeling that something secret and mysterious, perhaps sinister, was under the shadow of the cross that marked them. Stories of the tortures of the Inquisition in the Dark Ages, of massacres of Protestants such as that of St. Bartholomew's Day in France in 1572, and tales of priestly sins have not reassured you. For that matter, in Spain today the attacks on Protestant churches, approved by a cardinal, and the persecution and torture of Protestants in Colombia, South America, have greatly augmented Protestant apprehensions. The determined effort of Catholics to fill public offices, to get control of public schools, to supplant them with parochial schools wherever possible, and to obtain public funds for books and buses for parochial schools have aroused Protestant opposition to a keen pitch.

In a whole generation, nothing has angered American Protestants more than the appointment of a "personal representative" to the Vatican by President Roosevelt, and the recent move to send an ambassador to the Vatican by President Truman. As a Catholic, Sugrue thinks such a move is unfortunate, and he is against it.

The Catholics Here First

Only in English-speaking United States and Canada are the Catholics a minority today. In American countries to the south they outnumber Protestants to the point that the latter are practically powerless.

It is hard for Protestant Americans and Canadians to remember that the Catholics were in America first. Columbus, a Catholic, discovered the New World in 1492. In 1521 Cortez invaded Mexico and the conquest of that country was completed. In 1533 Pizarro conducted the equally cruel and bloody conquest of Peru. From Mexico a chain of Catholic missions was extended up into California. All this was taking place before the first Protestant settlement at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607 and the Puritan settlement at Plymouth, Massachusetts, in 1620. True, Cabot had discovered the North American continent for England in 1497, but England had done nothing about it.

With their colonial peoples coming from the south of Europe, Catholics were more interested in the warmer parts of the Americas, with the exception of French emigration to eastern Canada. The coming of Protestant peoples to North America has done much to strengthen the Protestant position in the world, and to save religious freedom for future generations. The Catholics came first, but Protestants, though coming later, came in greater strength in most of North America. These historical items are significant in today's situation.

Sugrue's Dilemma

Describing the experiences of his boyhood, his suffering at being held apart from other friendly young Americans, Sugrue came to some independent decisions, certainly not inspired by the teachings of his church, but emerging from his own independence of thought and action.

Today he asks the question: "Does my Catholicism interfere with my Americanism, as some non-Catholics are inclined to think, or, as Rome might put it, does my Americanism interfere with my Catholicism?"

We have discussed this very problem with some Catholics, and they have emphatically stated that they have been trained from childhood to give greater loyalty to the Catholic church than to their country. They defend this position. This may not be true of all Catholics, but numbers of them apparently are so indoctrinated from their earliest years. We should recognize that there are many Catholics who are loyal to their country. Individual freedom is still the right of every American, and many Catholics cling to that right. But this is not according to the will of the church.

The importance of the issue is indicated in another question to which Sugrue has given special emphasis: "Does a totalitarian religious system interfere with a democratic political system?" He goes on to elaborate his idea that the Catholic church is of a totalitarian character and expresses his view that its authority should be confined to spiritual matters and rigidly excluded from the political and economic affairs of the nation.

Catholics Afraid of the Pope

This is not the first time in history that Catholics have feared and opposed the power of the pope. Sugrue says: "Even Catholics sometimes fear the power of the pope; they are afraid his rule in religious matters will spill over, as it has in the past, into secular matters."

Throughout past centuries the popes have continually asserted and extended their temporal and secular authority. Kings and emperors have opposed them. Peoples have thrown off their power. Italy, France, Mexico, Germany, and England are among the examples.

The basis of this fear is the misuse of power by the popes. They have no right to such power as they have sometimes acquired. Further, it is not good for them or for the church, says Sugrue.

The popes assumed temporal power, became worldly in their personal lives—and the trouble was on. A man who represents himself as the "Vicar of Christ on earth" cannot make political deals with emperors, traffic in indulgences, and sell bishoprics to the highest bidder without reducing the general opinion of his spirituality more than a few degrees. . . . Power, as both peasant and prince know, corrupts—and absolute power absolutely corrupts.

The pope may be the "vicar of Christ on earth" to Catholics, but still many of them do not trust him.

An Ambassador to the Vatican?

As a Protestant, you may have supposed that all Catholics in the United States were in favor of the political move to send an ambassador to the Vatican. You will be surprised to learn that some are opposed to it:

As an American Catholic I am now expected to approve the idea of sending an Ambassador to the Vatican. I don't. I see no good that such a move can do for anyone. It will upset non-Catholics. It will revive old suspicions of the pope's plans and hopes. It will cheer an already over-truculent element in American Catholicism.

Candid Camera on American Catholicism

As a Protestant, too, you will be surprised and interested in what this Catholic thinks of his religious group in this country:

Catholicism in the United States is totally non-mystical; it is booming, aggressive, materialistic, socially ambitious, and inclined to use its membership as a paranoid pressure group, threatening anyone who so much as criticizes the way it ties its shoelaces.

And when it comes to fear, Rome is afraid of the power of American Catholicism. Isn't that interesting?

American Catholicism may soon be dictating to Rome; there is suspicion, in fact, that this is already so. It may be a polite dictatorship, but where the money comes from, thence also the orders are apt to originate. Before too long there may be an American pope, with a "summer" residence here, and a College of Cardinals packed with local bishops. The government of the United States might then find itself sending an ambassador to an American citizen.

Sugrue's Suggested Program

In fairness to the author, we should give a brief statement to his principal aims and purposes. He would have his church drop its political objectives and secular aims. The basis of the fears of non-Catholics would then be dispelled. He would abolish the cultural and spiritual isolationism that now separates Catholics from their fellow citizens—he would destroy the "iron curtain" in America.

As Americans, we are against iron curtains; we should not maintain one between ourselves, particularly one so old, so rusty, and which marks a division never intended by God to exist among men. If we cannot begin to lift this curtain which separates us from one another, if we cannot at least talk about lifting it, how then can we expect to lift the other iron curtains which all over the world seal people away from other people? We must lift our own iron curtain, the curtain of religious sectarianism. We must lift it, or it will divide us to our destruction. If we cannot lift it, then by a paradox of satanic splendor our separation through sectarianism not only will bring us to ruin, but will have existed in vain, since as a people we will have proved that we do not even believe in God!

Can It Succeed?

Do you underestimate the wrath of the Roman Catholic organization in America that will descend upon this critical and rebellious son? Do you think that he does not know the risks of his frankness, that he has not calculated the tremendous force of the disapproval and opposition that will descend upon him? Do you think the church that fashioned the Inquisition and put uncounted numbers of "heretics" to death in darker ages than ours—and still persecutes Protestants wherever it can and dares—will not know how to hurt and punish him?

He must be a very brave and good man, a very honest man.

Sugrue's suggestions are fine and idealistic. They could remove and prevent a great deal of trouble in the world. If followed, they would be perfectly practicable. But it seems that they do not take the character and the history of the Catholic church into account. For, like the Bourbons, the church has never forgotten anything except its sins and has never learned anything new, except ever more ambitious desires. Certainly the church will not pull down its "iron curtain" of nonco-operation, nonassociation, and nonrecognition of any of the Protestant organizations. Certainly the church is not likely to relinquish one of its claims, one of its demands, or one of its plans for the control of all the world in every aspect of life. As Sugrue himself has suggested, it is totalitarian in nature, and all it wants is everything.

WALLER MEMORIAL CHAPEL GROUND-BREAKING CEREMONY

Pictured here is a portion of the group that met from the three Honolulu congregations and Wahiawa to participate in the ground-breaking ceremony April 6 for the Waller Memorial Chapel. The Chapel is being built as a district project in honor of Evangelist Gilbert J. Waller who joined the church in San Francisco and began the work in Hawaii in 1890. Brother Waller, who gave fifty years service in the mission, died in 1945.

Due to distances and costs involved, members outside Oahu were not present for the occasion.

The new chapel will be located adjacent to the present Makiki church which, after some remodeling, will serve as a junior chapel, dining hall, and recreation center. These changes will greatly increase the facility of the central plant and district headquarters.

In the ceremony of ground-breaking, District President A. Orlin Crownover, on behalf of the General Church and the district, turned the first spadeful of sod. He was followed by Ernest Hara, architect, and M. Yamauchi representing the contracting company. They were followed in the ground-breaking by members of the building committee.

Oren E. Long, governor of Hawaii, was invited to the service but could not attend. He sent a nice letter by Brother Henry Paoa, which was read during the ceremonies. He paid tribute to Brother Waller and designated the proposed chapel as "a fitting tribute."

Construction on the project began May 5.

Power to Give

A Journey With an Idea

Part I

By L. S. Wight

SOME TIME AGO I was asked to write something about my association with church people. My work takes me to all parts of the country, so I have been able to visit Saints in many states. My experiences have given me nothing new, but they have helped me to gain a better view—a broader understanding of existing truths.

San Francisco: Why Men Crack Up

My outstanding experience of 1951 had its inception in San Francisco. The church there was one I had never before visited, unless it was as a four-year-old en route from Australia. I thought I could walk in and sit down as an unknown and enjoy the services. But as usual I ran into friends. Hubert Baker was the pastor. He had been in the field with my son Jack, so he proceeded to put me to work. Ed Buckley, husband of the former Alice Zion, was to preach but since he and Alice had been caring for a neighbor's little tots as well as their own during the week, he insisted that he had a good excuse for favoring the visitors.

Following that service I spent a wonderful day with the Bakers and their friends the Zenders. We dropped in on the Buckleys late in the afternoon and then took Alice Buckley with us to the church for the evening service, leaving Ed to do the baby-sitting.

The evening class was one of a series under Alice's direction. Her enthusiasm and ability to handle a class made for an effective service. I picked up some ideas on the ministry of priesthood which I had not been aware of before. We wonder sometimes if we should permit the women to do such teaching. My experience, including the association of my companion who is a teacher, is that we should give well-trained women full opportunity to minister in that capacity. We will profit from it if we do.

The next day I had the privilege of attending the third annual meeting of the General Practicing Physicians of the United States. I have attended a good many medical meetings, but I got a new viewpoint from this one. The age of specialization has caused the general practitioners to form a National Association to insure full development of their work. The first day was given over entirely to discussion of the mental and spiritual needs of patients. It was a mass meeting, attended also by the wives of the physicians. The thought was forcibly brought out that these physicians cannot minister to their patients effectively without the full support and help of their wives. Problems of all ages were discussed frankly. I was shocked at the extent of my own ignorance after listening to these enlightening discussions.

On that week end when I saw Hubert again I suggested that he would have enjoyed sharing that meeting with me. He is a lieutenant in the army, in special work. At that time he was assigned particularly to work with Korea returnees who had become mentally unbalanced. In my conversation with him I suggested that as a result of my experience at the medical meeting, I was now certain that one thing is standing between us and our Zionist goal. Passing judgment on the basis of my own experience, I believe that one thing is ignorance. After a moment's reflection he said, "No, Les, you are wrong. It is not ignorance. It is our lack of ability to give ourselves to a cause." He, too, was judging on the basis of his experience. He told me that the records of his hospital showed conclusively that most of the mental cases were from homes with no religious background. The boys who came from good homes, where some kind of effort is made to maintain a spiritual standard, did not "crack up" under stress of battle. They had something to live for. They could, if necessary, give up their lives because they had a "cause" for which to give it. The boys without such training had no such ideals, and the only thought in connection with death to them was "losing." The strain of losing all they had was too much, and many came out of those experiences with unbalanced minds. Of course I am not equipped to discuss these problems, but I listened carefully to Hubert's statements, and then suggested that it looked as if he had the better argument.

Denver: A Theme Receives a Name

My work soon took me to Denver, and during the intervening time I had given a lot of thought to this problem. I discussed it with Brother Ward Hougas in Denver after he had asked me to preach on the following Sunday. He seemed to think it had some merit, so when I said, "What shall I name it?" he said, "Never mind that, I'll give it a name." And he did. I went to church the next Sunday wondering what the subject of my sermon would be. He had listed it on the program as "The Power to Give." So with the help of my good friends I was able to put together some thoughts which might help others get a new picture of their own power to give to the cause which means so much to all Latter Day Saints.

The primary reason for my trip to the West was the sudden passing on February 17, 1951, of my brother Rupert A. Wight, in Long Beach, California. It was the second time in less than three years that it had been necessary for me to make a sudden trip to Los Angeles to participate in the last rites of a brother.

Cyril E. had passed away suddenly in August, 1948. En route to Los Angeles I suddenly realized that Rupert's passing left me the lone survivor of the little Australian family which my father, Elder John W. Wight, had brought from Australia in 1894. My youngest brother Keith G., now a businessman in Tulsa, Oklahoma, was born in this country.

In the light of the experiences with Brethren Baker and Hougas, my mind went back to the experiences of my father, mother, and the two brothers, who had all given of themselves unreservedly to further the cause they loved so much. All of them did not do the same thing, but each in his own way had made an effective contribution.

Australia: A Devoted Father

John W. Wight went to Australia as a young missionary in company with C. A. Butterworth in 1888. Each one married an Australian girl, Brother Butterworth electing to stay in Australia where his record and that of his family is one of the bright spots in the Restoration Movement. During the summer of 1948, coincidentally on the very day that my brother Cyril passed away, I preached in Maywood, Illinois, with Brother Virgil Butterworth in charge. I mentioned the fact at the time that some sixty years previously his uncle and my father had gone to Australia together as missionaries. My father returned to the states bringing his family to Lamoni in the spring of 1894. He returned to that country as an apostle in 1902 but could not take his companion or family with him.

Two incidents will indicate the kind of power with which he gave himself. While in the Utah mission in 1898 he received a wire stating that if he would see his only daughter again, Juanita, not quite four, he must hurry home. My mother had become reconciled to the loss of her only daughter, and she prayed only that the girl might be spared so that he could see her before she passed away. But she died less than an hour before he arrived home. His only answer to a query about what he thought of a God who would deny him that privilege was that if God felt the need to put him to that test so that he could minister more effectively, he was willing to accept it. Later in life, when he had passed his prime, he was asked to go to Council Bluffs to preach to an overflow meeting in the basement of the church while Brother Dan Williams was preaching a special series in the upper auditorium. One of his good friends twitted him about this, asking him how it felt to be playing "second fiddle" to one of the younger men. His answer was typical, "I don't care which fiddle I play as long as they give me one to play."

Lamoni: A Sacrificing Mother

In some ways my mother was called on to give the most. She came to a "foreign" country to raise her family, and it was not easy. Family allowances in those days came irregularly, sometimes not at all. But she gave all she had for the cause she loved so dearly. Prematurely gray, in fact her hair was almost snow white, her friends suggested that she should take life easy. But she loved to sing, and having been denied the privilege of voice training in her family-raising period, she did "tattooing" besides all her regular chores to pay for music lessons so that she could qualify to sing in the Lamoni choir. She gave herself so completely that she used up her reserve strength which she needed in an emergency operation, and died long before we felt her time was up. Perhaps the celestial choir was short one soprano, and she was chosen to fill the vacancy.

California: Brothers Who Gave

In spite of a weak heart, Cyril had given himself without reserve all of his life. Recently while going through some papers I found a letter from Apostle C. George Mesley in which he told me about Cyril's work in Kansas City Stake. He mentioned then that they could not understand how he could carry the load. He loved young people and had been called on to perform more than the ordinary number of marriage ceremonies. Young people came from all over southern California to the services in Temple City to pay their last respects.

It was a shock to receive the message of Rupert's passing, because only a few weeks prior he had been in our home in Chicago, apparently in the best of health and finest of spirits. He had been a volleyball player for many years and probably thought that he could always keep up his competition with younger men. But the strain of athletic competition and of constant work, much of it for others, was too great. Even his strong body gave in. I recall a visit with Brother W. A. Teagarden in his office in Long Beach after the services. He told me about the many times Rupert had sat in the very chair I was in, discussing the various things he was trying to do for the people in the branch he loved. He had never said anything about it to us. Brother Teagarden had delivered the address and suggested that it is easy to talk about someone who has always given of himself to help others. Racial barriers meant nothing to him. His Jewish business partners were impressed with the way he could give himself to his work with them. They felt his loss keenly and made a substantial donation to the California Heart Fund in his name.

Rupert "died with his boots on." He had preached at the Long Beach church on Sunday night and was taken to the hospital immediately after, where he passed away on the following Saturday morning. I was asked to speak from the same pulpit two weeks from the day he preached his last sermon. It was not easy to do, so soon, but if an actor can face tragedy and hide his feelings because the "show must go on," certainly those of us interested in the work of the Restored Gospel can meet these changes and go right on ministering to the needs of others.

Question Time

Question:

If one companion dies and the other remarries, which mate will he (or she) have during the 1,000 years reign? In heaven all are to be as angels, not marrying nor giving in marriage, but does this apply to the millennium also (that is, if all companions were godly people)?
Alberta
MRS. R. H.

Answer:

When the Jews presented to Jesus the hypothetical case of a woman who had successively married and lost seven husbands, asking "Whose wife shall she be in the resurrection?" they were answered: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, neither the power of God. The children of this world marry and are given in marriage; but they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, through the resurrection of the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage."—Matthew 22: 28, 29, I.V. Luke 20: 34, 35, I.V.

From this teaching we can draw no other conclusion than that in the eternal world marriage is a thing of the past: there is no renewing or extending of it there. Marriage, birth, home, and family relations, parental love, blood ties, and other affiliations are conditions associated with the present life, and the present life only. There is no occasion for them in the resurrection. The redeemed do not go on bearing children. The joy of life will be that of the spirit and not that of the flesh—life being altogether on a higher plane. Love of kindred, which in this world is too often narrow and selfish, will be swallowed up in the universal love of God which binds all in one great family.

Two types of people will live on the earth during the millennium—not together but separately—mortals and immortals. The mortals will continue much as now. They will marry, bear children, have their homes, grow old and pass through a change corresponding to death and resurrection. The immortals are the righteous of earth from the beginning who have either been translated without death or raised from the dead. They are redeemed and no more subject to sin. For them the earthly relationships and conditions of mortality will have forever passed.

The doctrines advocated by the church in the West relative to celestial and eternal marriage, plurality of wives extending into eternity, the making of exaltation and glory dependent upon the begetting of a great progeny over which there will be perpetual ancestral rule, etc., appear dark and unworthy in the light of the Scriptures, and smack too much of the carnalities and ambitions of this present world to have sprung from a wise and holy God. Between this life and the kingdom of God the Scriptures show a transformation. Paul says, "We shall be changed." Christ said we "shall rise again a spiritual body," not with the old carnal lusts, but "sanctified from all unrighteousness," and "prepared for celestial glory." We shall have passed from the "earthly" to the "heavenly," and Christ will be our ruler.

Question:

The Book of Mormon states: "Behold, there are save two churches only: The one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations."—I Nephi 3: 220-222. Does this mean that all churches other than ours are of the Devil? B. E. B.
Michigan

Answer:

This undoubtedly refers to the great movements of God as opposed to that of the devil or adversary of men's souls. Note the language: "whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations."

If we assume, as many have, that the language refers to denominational organizations such as the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church versus the Roman Catholic Church, it ignores many important facts in the world, both religious and political. Consider the argument from this angle. If we say that the Catholic Church is the church of the devil, then all other denominations or religious organizations must belong to the church of the Lamb of God. The old axiom of debate says, "that which proves too much, proves nothing at all." It is much better to interpret this statement of the Book of Mormon to be inclusive of two great world groups rather than specific organizations. This is in harmony with Jesus' statement in Mark 9: 38-40, A.V., which concludes with this statement, "for he that is not against us is on our part." CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

Question:

Is it proper and right for sermons to be interwoven with political issues from the pulpit, prayer meetings, and quorum meetings?
R. E. W.
Missouri

Answer:

The message given of heaven to the elders of this church is the most important and the most urgent matter confronting the world in this day. How great, then, is the need that such a message be declared in simplicity and plainness, unmixed with error, and unweakened by extraneous and incidental matters which are without value!

The Lord has required the elders, priests, and teachers to "teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel," and saying "none other things than that which the prophets and apostles have written." If the trumpet has an imperfect mouthpiece it will not give a clear and certain call. There is no consonance in a drum stuffed with straw. God's message is worthy of clarity, singleness of purpose, and complete fitness to the greatest and most urgent of human needs. Again the Lord speaks, "Let your preaching be with the warning voice."

The more we seek to imitate the world's methods in our ministry, or to advocate principles relating to secular things—and that at the expense of the counsel of God—the slower will be our progress, and the less our accomplishment. "Ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4.

Books

Psychology, Religion and Healing

By Leslie D. Weatherhead. New York: Abingdon-Cokesbury Press. 1951. $5

THIS BOOK has a message of importance for every Christian.

Written by the Methodist minister of City Temple (London) who is also a certified teacher of psychology, this evangelistic volume examines the use of psychological and religious methods of healing from primitive man to now. The author makes an appeal for further study and action in these nonphysical, therapeutic techniques and for better co-operation between doctors, psychologists, and ministers in the complete treatment of the sick.

Doctor Weatherhead is convinced that many people are suffering, even from supposedly physical illnesses who need not suffer (a) if we knew how to release and direct to them the resources of the spiritual world, and (b) if both ministers and doctors were alert to see and understand the early signs of psychological disturbance and to secure immediate treatment, ideally in some environment where physically, psychologically, and spiritually the patient could be investigated and the whole personality integrated. We are only at the very beginning of such work, but a vast area of useful service opens up, and I can only hope that this book may be of some small service in this field, and perhaps provide a stimulus to others to devote their lives to a piece of work which so badly needs doing.

To implement his conviction that this work does need doing, Doctor Weatherhead has established at City Temple a church psychological clinic in collaboration with psychiatrists and doctors.

Primitive man had an idea that physical illness was related to the mind and soul. The author says:

... long before the Christian Era and long before anything resembling medical science was born, men were healed of their diseases by nonphysical methods directed toward their minds rather than their bodies. . . . It was religion which first attacked the misery of disease and tackled the problem of suffering. . . . Modern man is turning again to the condition of his mind and spirit in order to account for many illnesses of the flesh.

Although Doctor Weatherhead investigates and evaluates all nonphysical healing methods, his whole book is a plea for the spiritual regeneration of the church, that the energies of the kingdom which Christ released for the healing of the sick might again be available to us.

OF CHRIST'S MIRACLES he says:

It seems to me that all healing methods known to modern science, including psychological methods, are on one plane. Many are efficacious and we wisely continue to use them and to seek others in the same category. But Christ functioned on a higher plane and used methods in a different category altogether. His unique relationship to God made him at home in the spiritual world and when he broke into a situation of human pain and distress, of body or mind, he brought with him the energies of the plane on which he himself lived. To put the matter in another way, the energies of the kingdom broke through.

To him a miracle is "a law-abiding event by which God accomplishes his redemptive purposes through the release of energies which belong to a plane of being higher than any with which we are normally familiar."

In this discussion of earlier methods of healing through religion, the author accounts for the decline of this activity in the early church. He is serious, also, about the possibility of demon possession as an occasional cause of illness.

Earlier methods of healing through psychology include mesmerism, hypnotism, and autosuggestion, which latter healing technique was taught by the French apothecary, Emile Coué, who set millions of sick unhappy persons to chanting, "Every day in every way I am getting better and better." The author says that surprising results often occurred from the use of these onetime popular psychotherapeutic techniques.

MODERN METHODS of nonphysical healing next engage Doctor Weatherhead's attention. Adhering to his plan for keeping the appraisal of psychological and religious methods separate for the time being, he looks first at the modern religious therapy.

Of the practice of laying on of hands for the recovery of health (which although of ancient origin is still practiced) he says: "If the patient is well enough it should be made clear to him that the aim of the practice is the patient's unity with God, and that this has priority even over the aim of his recovery to health."

Other modern types of healing through religion are reported: bathing at Lourdes, Christian Science, healing missions, psychic phenomena (sometimes connected with spiritualism), various healing movements in the churches, and the practice of intercessory prayer for the sick. In writing of intercessory prayer he returns to his theme: "The spiritual world has immense therapeutic energies which are scarcely tapped in this modern age of reliance upon pure science and organic therapy. We must be called away from a materialistic interpretation of life which is invading the church and cheating men of power which is their heritage in Christ."

In the section on modern methods of healing through psychology, the reader is briefed on the basic teachings of Freud, Adler, Jung, McDougall, and Watson, and shown how those teachings are used in composite methods of modern psychotherapy.

At this point the author begins to tie together the two nonphysical methods of healing he has so far discussed separately. He asks and answers, at length, the question: "Do psychological and religious methods of healing need each other?" He answers in the affirmative.

HEALTH IS DEFINED by Doctor Weatherhead as "the complete and successful functioning of every part of the human being, in harmonious relationship with every other part and with the relevant environment." In the final section of his book he considers how religion, psychology, and medicine can best co-operate in healing and states the goal of such co-operation—the integrated personality. He lists the three needs of this integrated personality: maximum physical health attainable, maximum mental health attainable, and maximum spiritual health attainable.

By healing, then, is meant the process of restoring the broken harmony which prevents personality, at any point of body, mind, or spirit, from its perfect functioning in its relevant environment; the body in the material world; the mind in the realm of true ideas; and the spirit in its relationship with God.

From his experience in the psychological clinic at City Temple, the author has advice of importance on the subject of pastoral and medical co-operation. Pitfalls are pointed out to both minister and physician, and they are told how best to avoid them.

In the last chapter Doctor Weatherhead makes his strongest plea for a recovery of the lost art of healing through "the direct activity of God." He says that there is no need to urge the doctors or psychotherapists to prosecute the search for better methods of healing in their special fields. But the church has fallen down, he believes; it has failed to preserve its supernatural gift of healing. He reminds the church: "Let us never forget that there is a spiritual power to heal which has not been withheld. It has only been unappropriated . . . when the church returns to her early devotion to Christ and creates united fellowships, even faintly like the body of men who went out in the power of the risen Christ and his Spirit to turn the world upside down, then a power more potent to heal than any atomic bomb to destroy will once more surge through sick souls and minds and bodies. It will be his own power and recognized as such."

Enter Into His Rest

By Addie Spaulding Stowell

And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.
—Isaiah 11: 10.

WE OFTEN HEAR the remark, "The world is moving so fast these days!" We can have breakfast in Los Angeles and dinner in New York. We can sit in our living room and see happenings all over our land. We are really living in a dizzy whirl of events. But in the midst of our busy life we may not stop long enough to examine our prospectus and decide the goal we wish to attain for our future when we leave this fast moving world for the one which we know nothing about but in which we have faith is a condition of rest.

If we are striving only for the material things of life which today is, and tomorrow may end, how futile is our aspiration. Are the things that gratify the physical body of more importance than the things which will nurture and enhance the spirit within the physical body?

To those who believe the Bible and Christ's words, there is the assurance that someday the spirit will take its departure, and the physical body will be laid in mother earth. God has been very kind to give us this short time here on earth to dwell in the physical body as a period of probation and complete the consummation for the final existence of the soul. The spirit without the body is not perfect, and the body without the spirit becomes a thing of naught. The spirit and the body must be fitly joined together to become the soul of man. And it is through this short period of probation that the final resting place of the soul is determined.

IN THE BEGINNING of time, when our first parents succumbed to the wiles of the tempter, the evil one began his battle for the supremacy of power. But from the partaking of the forbidden fruit there has been a knowledge in the human heart of good and evil, and there has been an intuition to resist the evil. Some individuals possess a stronger will power to resist temptation than others. Whether it can be attributed solely to early training, where the child is surrounded with influences for good, may be questioned—but it is undoubtedly a major factor. Usually we find even in small children a tendency to be selfish and jealous. As they grow to adulthood these tendencies may develop and predominate, and in time that seed sown becomes ripe to receive the subtle promptings of the tempter over better judgment.

A murderer does not often become a hardened criminal over night. The evil act has its beginning when the individual gives heed to the tempter's first suggestion which may seem small and innocent, but like a mustard seed it grows to damaging proportions. I have known the wild mustard in North Dakota to choke out whole fields of grain.

The evil one is cunning in his approaches to draw us away from God. To thwart his advances toward us we might say within ourselves, "Oh, if only we could live a secluded life—fenced in from the evils surrounding us—so there would be no temptation to do worldly things!" But this would be like the man who buried his talent because he feared he would not be able to enlarge it.

IT IS BY our efforts and through God's forgiveness that we are saved. Our efforts must be in meeting the problems of daily living, whether in the affairs of business or home, or even on beds of affliction where our battle is with our innermost thoughts against a dominant spirit that questions the mercies of our Heavenly Father to permit suffering to come to us. In all things, whether in health or sickness, if we disobey the laws of God and nature we must suffer the penalty.

But God is a God of love and mercy. He is ready to forgive the penitent one who has transgressed his laws. It is not his plan that his children shall suffer, but that those who seek him shall find, and those who knock shall have the door opened to them. It is only by obedience to God, and relying on his omnipotent love and forgiveness, that we may enter the straight gate. If we are deceived by the treacherous one so that we harden our hearts against the righteousness of God, then we put ourselves in a position where the door will be closed.

Although we are living in a time of great stress, let us stop long enough to take an inventory of ourselves to see whether we are following in the steps of our Savior sufficiently to meet his approval.

We must have sufficient faith to put our hand in his, bow in humility, and ask forgiveness of our sins because, as human beings, we are not without sin. Then, holding tightly to his hand, we must follow him into the waters of baptism. With the spirit of forgiveness in our hearts we may hope to be forgiven. As we walk in his way we shall seek out the lowly and distressed, and give them comfort. His love will overshadow us until our lives are filled with the same desires as he expressed—"Love thy neighbor as thyself." Happy are those who have walked by his side and followed in the things he stood for. They shall be permitted to enter into his rest.

the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son; the Father because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and the Son; and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth; and thus the flesh becoming subject to the Spirit, or the Son to the Father, being one God, suffereth temptation, and yieldeth not to the temptation, but suffereth himself to be mocked, and scourged, and cast out, and disowned by his people. . . . Yea, even so he shall be led, crucified, and slain, the flesh becoming subject even unto death, the will of the Son being swallowed up in the will of the Father; and thus God breaketh the bands of death; having gained the victory over death; giving the Son power to make intercession for the children of men.

Through original sin, man lost to some degree dominion over his own body, and it became subject to death; through the redemption of Christ that perfect and complete dominion of the spirit over the flesh is restored. Christ laid down the body and took it up again to demonstrate his control over physical matter and to make that same dominion again possible for us.

A Great Modern Testimony

Now this Jesus, this Christ, is not a God afar off. He is not just another man. He was that, but he was vastly more. He came in human flesh. He subjected that flesh to his will when he laid down his flesh voluntarily in death. "No man taketh it from me; I lay it down of myself." When he laid that flesh down he took it up again in order that we through the power of his resurrection might also take up our bodies. He is a resurrected Lord; he is not someone who came and was an interloper in another's body for a few short years and then left before that body could suffer death. He was one who felt and suffered and was tempted as we suffer and are tempted. After all his temptations, his trials, and even his death, he arose again and went to sit on the right hand of God his Father.

I am in your midst and ye can not see me, but the day soon cometh that ye shall see me and know that I am; for the veil of darkness shall be rent, and he that is not purified shall not abide the day.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 2.

If we haven't brought our bodies under dominion, under subjection; if our spirits have allowed our bodies to run riot, then we won't be worthy of seeing the one person of all time who perfectly solved the problem of bringing the body under subjection. "Wherefore gird up your loins and be prepared. Behold, the kingdom is yours and the enemy shall not overcome you."

"I am in your midst." Christ lives today. "He lives, for we saw him." This is the testimony of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in Section 76, paragraph 3. He is not a far off God. He is Lord and Savior resurrected, who lives today, who is still in active charge of his work on earth. His Spirit ministers to us and mingles with us from time to time, giving us a witness and a testimony that he lives, and a promise that we too shall live if we will be obedient to his laws. He is the one who reigns in the heavens:

They have done unto the Son of Man even as they listed; and he has taken his power on the right hand of his glory, and now reigneth in the heavens and will reign until he descends on the earth to put all things under his feet.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 2.

That time is not yet, but soon.

We still hear of Gnosticism in our day, but we have the Bible to combat it. Also all these references I have given plus many more in the Doctrine and Covenants and in the Book of Mormon which depict in unmistakable language and simple philosophy the Christ of the Restoration, the Christ who is the Son of God, the Christ who was Deity incarnate in human flesh, the Christ who came that we might live again in the flesh, and that we might have life more abundantly.

May we give our lives more wholeheartedly to him and live according to his laws, not trying to justify ourselves for the things that our bodies do that our spirits don't want to do. This is Gnosticism; but we should be those who live in him and give expression to the life that is in us through the deeds that our bodies perform while we are in this period of probation on earth. That God may help us to this end is my prayer.

The Hunt Family Goes Zioniac

A Drama of Christian Living

This play is designed for use in reunions and for Sunday evening vespers preliminary to a preaching service. It is written so that it may be given in seven nightly sessions of about twenty minutes each; however, more than one session may be presented on the same evening, if this better suits the local need.

While the play has its lighter side, it is not primarily for entertainment. It carries a strong Zioniac message and is worthy of all the labors which well-trained characters can give to impress its many lessons in Christian living.

The Change Within

PART II

By Mrs. R. E. McLaughlin

"The Spirit of God Cannot Dwell in Unholy Temples"

Through the spirit we gain a vision for that higher life which we may enjoy if we are obedient to the commands of God. It will transform us into the kind of children he would have us be. We recognize that we are called to be co-workers with him. What a wonderful privilege!

We have an increasing desire to learn and practice all things good, to reject those forces of evil which are ever around us tending to lure our minds away. We raise the standard of our ideals and press forward with Christ each step of the way.

God expects us to appreciate the opportunities that are afforded us and to use them to the best advantage. Each day brings fresh possibilities where we may help one another, sharing the love of God with all we meet.

If we do not keep the temple of our bodies fit for God's spirit it will be withdrawn from us, and we shall be in spiritual darkness. We will realize too late that the years have gone and we have lost life's dearest treasure. God does not speak in idle words. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

Spiritual Urges

Because Joseph Smith felt the urge to pray for guidance in his search for truth, he was granted a vision and the task to bring about the restoration of the gospel. This same urge comes to us today—maybe to visit one who needs the courage and uplift that we alone can give; maybe to send a letter of cheer to some sick person.

We might have had spiritual triumph and the joy of satisfaction that come when our best has been given if we had but followed the leading of the Spirit. What about those who once worshiped with us and have stepped aside for awhile, perhaps discouraged over some fancied slight or hurt? Could we not make these dear ones a matter of personal prayer and endeavor to bring them back again? They may need only our interest to help make a readjustment. Surely it's worth the trying. We, too, will be benefited as we seek to supply another's needs.

I recently came across these beautiful words:

Not merely in the words you say,
Not only in your deeds confessed,
But in the most unconscious way
Is Christ expressed.
Is it a beautiful smile?
A holy light upon your brow?
O no! I felt his presence while
You laughed just now.

For me 'twas not the truth you taught—
To you so clear, to me so dim,
But when you came to me you brought
A sense of Him.
And from your eyes He beckons me,
And from your heart His love is shed,
Till I lose sight of you and see
The Christ instead.

What is it that could cause a servant of God, after seeing four of his loved ones pass into the Great Beyond in the space of a few years, say, "I can still rejoice, for I know that my Redeemer lives"? What hidden power made this philosophy possible?

The faith of this church is built upon a doctrine of life—not death. In sorrow God's Spirit is comfort; in darkness it is the light we need, and the other world shines out in a radiant loveliness. Above all it means his presence, and his presence is the fullness of joy. His Spirit makes us feel very humble, yet able to do anything and be anything for the work's sake. The real Christian is one who has the inner conviction that all things work together for good to them that love God.

"Seek and Ye Shall Find"

In our religious life there are many frequently used phrases which we should stop and analyze. So often we hear the prayer, "Be with us, Lord, today. Show us thy face." We sing "Gracious Spirit, dwell with me." What do we expect to happen—some miracle?

To me this is very important, for I do not think there is anything which destroys the reality of our church life so much as to repeat words which have become trite or which we say without understanding what they mean.

What is meant by the presence of Jesus? How was this manifest to his disciples after he had left them beyond the sound of voice and vision? "Lo, I am with you alway. . . . Seek and ye shall find. . . . My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth . . . but my peace and tranquillity of spirit."

His Presence Is Manifest Today

1. His presence is in that inner strength which makes us feel that we can face up to any situation, that nothing can down our will to come out victorious, not in the sense to escape from things which we have to face, but in a "new strength and power" to face them. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

2. His presence is in that happiness which somehow is different from all others and radiates from our entire personality.

3. His presence is in a calmness of spirit. What is more needed today in the world's mad rush than the peace of which Christ told when he left this earth to dwell with his father? It provides a calmness which the world has never been able to give. The same ills and troubles assail all men but to those who live in the companionship of the Spirit there comes a fortitude which helps them triumph over evil. The result of these experiences is not an escape. In all things men are more than conquerors because of that indwelling power.

Leslie Weatherhead gives us these words: "Freedom from disaster is not the greatest thing in life, as one day we shall probably understand." The greatest thing is to triumph over disaster. It is not what happens to us but our reaction to what happens that counts.

We have a striking example in the life of Emma Smith, who, notwithstanding persecution, hardships, and trials, remained faithful to her sacred trust, rearing and giving her family to the church. Her courageous living endeared her to all. Evidenced in her life was a supreme strength unknown to the outside world, enabling her to carry on the work so dear to her heart.

Those who are sanctified by the Spirit and keep their lives in harmony with God have wonderful experiences.

Jesus has said: "The works that I do shall ye do also." Are the works that were done in Jesus' time being done in his church today? If not, we are not fully sanctified by his Spirit.

"Peace I leave with you." The same Jesus who spoke to his disciples long ago speaks today through his servants. "I will not leave you comfortless." Today God, through his Son, calls us to serve him with all our might, mind, and strength. If we do he will be with us by his Spirit. What does this priceless gift mean to us? Shall we accept or reject it?

It can be ours if we live for it. If we would but strive to cultivate the intimacy of the Spirit, our lives would be much richer. Many of us have a good many years recorded to our names as members of this church. I wonder if we could examine ourselves and ask: "Have we spiritually been born again?" Do we place a correct sense of value on spiritual things? We have sat in meetings when our hearts have thrilled to the utmost as we heard God's servant bidding us "come up higher." We have knelt in prayer and asked, if not audibly, then silently, for strength and courage to rededicate our lives to him. No power on earth can destroy the testimony that comes to one who has really been born of the Spirit.

We remember that wonderful transformation scene which took place on the way to Emmaus after the crucifixion. Two of Jesus' disciples walked and talked together of their Master and of the dreadful thing which had been done. As they talked, Jesus himself drew near, but in their human vision they did not know him. Jesus asked them why they were sad. They replied, "Art thou a stranger in Jerusalem and knowest not the things which have come to pass?" As he dined with them their spiritual eyes were opened. They saw not a stranger, but their risen Lord. They understood that strange sensation they had felt within as he told them the full purpose of life. "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way?" I wonder if our hearts have burned within us as he has talked with us by the way? May we seek to recognize his spirit as it comes to us from time to time.

We often sing, "Onward to Zion," yet I sometimes wonder how much nearer our goal we are today than when we first sang those beautiful words.

God wants fully consecrated people who are willing to give of their best to his service. How do we measure up to the standard of fit inhabitants of this Zion of which we sing? If we are fully converted to the Zion program, let us do something about it. We must not, as Sister Mesley once said, "lull ourselves to sleep with just being good."

Unless religion is active it is valueless. We march to our goal, not by physical footsteps but by deeds of the Spirit expressed in service to our fellow-men. We cannot truly love God and not serve others, for Jesus has said, "Feed my sheep." He came not to be ministered unto, but rather to minister to the needs of others.

Recently there came to us through divine revelation these words: "The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies." How do these words affect us? Have we spiritually grown since they were spoken? I trust that at the close of 1952 we shall find we have indeed developed spiritual power. Let us not regard lightly this wonderful gift that may be ours for the seeking.

Bravery

Bravery in a woman counts for little in time of peace. She may not need it once in a lifetime. A knowledge of shorthand is infinitely more useful. But war changes this, and bravery—real steady courage—becomes the nicest quality any man or woman can have, and people who don't have it suddenly don't count.

Graceland Inaugurates Agriculture Curricula

By Roy A. Cheville
Acting President

THIS FALL Graceland College will offer two curricula in agriculture. One is designed for those who intend to specialize in agricultural studies and will, therefore, continue in advanced studies in other colleges and universities. The other, called the "rural life curriculum," is intended for those who will spend two years in Graceland and then return to farming and to life in rural communities.

Ten years of investigation and preparation have preceded the inauguration of offerings in agriculture. The college wanted to attempt only those things it could do well. Administrators knew they could not and ought not compete with state-supported agricultural schools in equipment and staff. Yet deep in the hearts of a few has been the conviction that the church college had a responsibility to its clientele in this field and that there are some things this church college could do that no other school could achieve. G. A. Platz and Roy H. Mortimore in particular have worked for years to achieve these curricula. Church leaders have been consulted.

THIS GREW out of a belief that we are stewards of the soil. Early in the Latter Day Saint movement we were commissioned to become stewards of quality. We were to purchase the land and till it. Our first Zionie communities had an agricultural base. Today our movement centers in the Midwest with its strong, rich farming resources. Three of our central stakes are basically agricultural: Central Missouri, Far West, and Lamoni. There was also the feeling that our people ought to be leaders in rural life, in farming community development, and in participation of youth of quality in our agricultural enterprises.

These convictions also entered into the investigations: 1. Farming is now a profession calling for sound training and effective methods; it is not a vocation for the leftovers.

2. Good farming does not come by accident; competency is achieved.

3. Agricultural life must be made attractive if young men and women of get-up-and-go are going to live on farms.

4. Present-day farming calls for co-operation abilities; the days of the isolated farmer are passing.

5. High-type agricultural communities, "Zionie" communities, necessitate planning for a balanced, long-time program.

6. Rural life holds out one of the pioneering fields for Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

A sound agriculture curriculum must deal with more than alfalfa seeding, corn plowing, or hog raising. It must involve social relationships, communication, cultural developments, religious fundamentals, awareness of world trends, et cetera. Reorganized Latter Day Saint farmers must develop the broad foundations, the wholesome attitudes, the skills in social interaction, and the church background that will enable them to be resourceful and co-operative. There is agreement as to the need for general education. In other words, they must have both (1) the ability to live and (2) the ability to make a living.

Students who intend to continue studies at other colleges and universities will be counseled to study the requirements of these schools and plan their courses accordingly. Basic courses in communication, sociology, economics, chemistry, and the like may be selected. Specific agricultural courses can be chosen which fit into the requirements of the school of their choice. Graceland recommends inclusion of such offerings as get at the distinctive aspects of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Movement.

THESE COURSES will be available in the two years at Graceland for those enrolled in the rural life curriculum: (1) animal husbandry, (2) farm crops, (3) soils and soil management, (4) farm operation and management. Each of these will be a three semester-hour course. The student may take basic work in sociology, psychology, economics, and related fields. A course in rural sociology will be offered in the second year for one semester. Courses in the department of religion are available.

Norman Nelson will be the instructor in the specific agriculture courses. He brings a "grass roots" contact with life in midwest agriculture. He grew up on a farm in Far West Stake. He has received his Master's degree from Iowa State College of Agriculture and has been doing field work on soils for that college.

Graceland introduces these offerings in the belief she can contribute to the total program of the church through developing farmers and farmers' wives of competency, co-operation, and consecration. The college wants to have an auspicious beginning this fall.

What Would a Prophet Say?

Roland Lambkin made a rather unique approach in the teaching of a church school class on the text "Restoration—A Study in Prophecy," in the Spring Branch congregation recently. Taking a tape recorder with him, he called on a few Kansas City ministers and, after introducing himself and his purpose, secured on-the-spot statements in reply to the question: "What would you expect a prophet to say if he were to come into your congregation today?"

Two of the most interesting replies were received from the Reverend Leonard Osbrink, assistant minister of the Linwood Presbyterian Church, and the Reverend D. Allen Martin, pastor of the Ivanhoe Christian Church. Their statements follow.

—EDITOR

The Reverend Leonard Osbrink

First of all, I think of myself as a prophet. A prophet is anyone who forth tells God's message—God's truth—from out of the Scripture and from the experience of God's men throughout the ages. I believe myself that John the Baptist was the end of the line of Old Testament prophets and that Christ was and is the divine Savior, and in this sense also the supreme pattern of prophecy for all time in that he revealed God's truth by his life, his death, and his resurrection in our behalf.

In the sense of a prophetic teaching, a prophetic message today, we must more and more come to the place where our message of the gospel is introduced with "thus saith the Lord" as in the case of Old Testament prophets. No more of this namby-pamby sort of thing, this opinions of men. The Scriptures must be taken as they are written for our day and interpreted in the light of Christ, of his teachings, and of his life. And we must have a definite, passionate, warmhearted, zealous message for Christ and his kingdom in these days. That's the kind of a message that all true prophets, those that forth tell the good news of the gospel of Christ, must have in these days. That is what I would expect of a prophet—one who would bring God's truth to the hearts of men in terms that they can understand so that their hearts might be changed. We can't change world conditions until we change the hearts of men who make up the citizenship of the world.

The Reverend D. Allen Martin

As I think about it, the first matter that the prophet might deal with would be this principle of stewardship. In its broadest sense, this includes not only money, but time and talent—all of our possessions, mental, spiritual, physical.

A few months ago when I visited Arabia and Palestine, I saw about 850,000 refugees just inside the Arabian border of Palestine. There were about 300,000 of them camped out on a desert with nothing for a shelter but what they had been able to pick up in the way of brush, cardboard, pieces of tin—something to keep off the sun. They had no sanitation system; their water supply was one spring a mile and a half from the camp. Babies were being born there and dying literally by the hundreds. People were starving to death. There was little or no medical care. When I think of people without food and means of support, with no hope of ever being any better, and then look at our congregations of people who are dressed so well—95 per cent of them overfed, a doctor at their telephone fingertips, and almost no want that they cannot satisfy—I say, "Surely if God is the kind of God I believe him to be, a God of justice, this cannot continue."

Since God is just, the people who call themselves Christians must, somehow, pay for this injustice being suffered by so many of the world's peoples—not only those in Palestine, but those in Korea, Japan, and India. If Christians were to face the responsibility of stewardship, of the gospel, of money, and of abilities, surely the complexion of the whole face of our world would be changed.

I think also if a prophet were to come and speak to my congregation, he would have something to say about the conditions as we find them here in America. I suppose there's one subject about which I may be radical—more radical than any other one subject—that's the subject of liquor. It's one of the greatest problems that faces our country today. And my feeling is that if he were a genuine Christian prophet who had no fear of any kind from any of the congregations (he might have to be independently wealthy if he wanted to live) I am sure he would take some mighty square licks at liquor which we are allowing to go almost unchallenged in our country today. Not only ministers, but those who are in positions of authority and could do something about it would hear from a real prophet about the evils of drinking.

I think also of this matter which we call juvenile delinquency. It isn't a juvenile matter at all—it's primarily an adult matter. We ought to call it parent delinquency. It seems that the social structure of our country is falling apart on this level—on the family level. The family has always been the basis, the foundation of society in great civilizations. Civilizations have crumbled and fallen because they have decayed first on the family level. I believe that the genuine prophet would mention, as one of the great problems that is facing our world today, the decay of family life.

P.S.

* RESPECT FOR LIFE

Our driver was one of those courteous, friendly chaps who help to make travel a pleasant, agreeable experience. Men reveal their characters and personalities in many little ways. This one seemed to respect and like everybody. . . . Then something interesting happened. We were rocking along on a piece of narrow, winding old slab, soon to be replaced. As we came up over the peak of a sharp hill, there were two very small and frightened chicks in the middle of the pavement. The driver made a quick effort to save them. Whether he succeeded, I'll never know. But he tried. He was not too important, nor in too much of a hurry, to show his respect for life, even in one of its humble forms. Respect for life is the mark of a gentleman and a lady. It is the badge of honor, the bright flower of true civilization.

* THE DECLINE OF HOME COOKING

Believe it or doubt it, but there is a generation of people growing up who do not like homemade things.

A friend gave away half a loaf of homemade bread that had been given to her. "It goes a long way with us," she said, "and we'll never be able to finish it." On her table for supper that night were the mechanically cut slices of factory bread they had always known since childhood.

Another woman gave a quart jar of delicious home-canned peaches, far different from the hard clings canned by the factory in a gummy, pallid glucose syrup. "My family just doesn't eat them up," she apologized for the rich and delicious fruit.

Incidentally, do you know that it is so long since many women have baked bread that most of the young matrons do not know how to slice it properly, and don't even own bread knives?

Something happened that we needed a new bread knife. We failed to find one on the market. So we took a file and cut teeth into a stainless steel blade that was useless for any other purpose. It has worked very well.

Millions of human beings direct their petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," not to the Heavenly Father, but to the great bread factories. Military personnel have rather appropriately called it "punk."

It is necessary to make some distinctions. At some of the fine little neighborhood bakeries you can still buy bread "like mother used to make" but doesn't any more. Millions of children are growing up without ever knowing the tantalizing fragrance of delectable home-baked bread. Odorless and tasteless, except for its contact with the waxed paper wrapper, "production line" bread is seldom eaten for itself, but rather serves as a base for butter, cheese, or jam, and as building material for the always popular sandwich.

Friend, just how long is it since you tasted a piece of good, rich, sweet-smelling, delicious homemade bread?

Friend, just how long is it since you tasted a piece of good, rich, sweet-smelling, delicious homemade bread?

News and Notes

PRESIDENT SMITH TRAVELS

President Israel A. Smith recently spent a week end at Lansing and Charlotte, Michigan, and dedicated a church at the latter place. Prior to this time he was at a rally at Hagerman, Idaho. He officiated at the cornerstone laying for the new church at Decatur, Illinois, on May 18. On June 1, he participated in the rededication of the Shabonna, Michigan, church which was dedicated fifty years ago this month by his father, the late President Joseph Smith III. On June 8, he met with the Saints in Ottawa, Canada, before sailing from Montreal, Quebec, on June 11. Also sailing with Brother Smith was Bishop Henry Livingston and Don Lents and family. Brother Smith and Brother Livingston will tour the Continent, and will return accompanied by Apostle Arthur Oakman who is now in Europe. Brother Lents and his family have been assigned to the English Mission.

W. WALLACE SMITH IN ST. LOUIS

President W. Wallace Smith was in St. Louis June 1 and installed Alma C. Andrews, formerly of Berkeley, California, as pastor of the St. Louis Branch. Seventies Cecil Ettinger and G. Wayne Smith were also in St. Louis. Brother Smith was in Lamoni, Iowa, on May 29 for the first Graceland College Alumni Day, at which time he participated in the presentation of a plaque to Brother F. M. McDowell, and the presentation of a picture to Brother and Sister McDowell. The plaque and the picture were gifts of appreciation to Brother McDowell for the many years of service he has given to the college.

ATTENDS WASHINGTON, D.C., CONFERENCE

Apostle D. T. Williams left Independence April 24 and returned June 2. While away he attended the following district conferences: Columbus, Ohio; Youngstown, Ohio; Kirtland, Ohio; Wellsburg, West Virginia; Buffalo, New York; and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. While at Columbus he was present for the organization of the new Columbus District with Brother Elwood Smith as district president. In between each conference, during the week, meetings were held in the various branches of the districts, with the exception of the Pittsburgh District. Also during this period, Brother Williams spent three days at the State Department in Washington, D. C., representing the church at the request of President Israel A. Smith at a Conference on Foreign Relations.

VISITS IOWA CITY STUDENTS

Carl Mesle visited with the Iowa City student group May 31 and June 1 for a meeting of the group leaders, preaching service, Communion service, and picnic. He was accompanied on the trip by Dick Ankey. The week end prior to this visit, Dick met with the student group at Missouri Valley, and the church group at Marshall, Missouri, where he spoke to the group at the church school hour regarding the Book of Mormon.

Is It Nothing to You?

"Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?"

—Lamentations 1: 12

A FRIENDLY READER in Dallas, Glenn W. Fordham, sends us a full-page article from the Dallas Morning News for March 4, containing a sermon by Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, Jr., minister of the First Methodist Church, on the subject, "Is It Nothing to You?" Dr. Goodrich had picked up a piece of advertising put out by the liquor people, who argued that it is nobody's business if a man drinks, and that we must preserve this piece of personal liberty in the United States. Liquor men do not care what happens to this nation or its citizens, so long as they make their profits. They don't want anybody else to care enough to do anything about it, and they are spending millions of dollars to preserve mass indifference.

Dr. Goodrich says in this article, paid for by the classes and departments of his church:

Today we stand within plain sight of the tragedies wrought by the liquor traffic—the threat to the nation and its homes, the cost in human life and health and happiness. This is tragedy enough! But there is a deeper tragedy: the fact that so many are indifferent to it all. No wonder we want to borrow these words and cry, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?" . . . About a year ago, Quick Magazine reported that when the General [George C. Marshall] was asked what was the greatest threat to America's security today, he answered that it was the cocktail bar of the . . . Hotel in Washington. Is it nothing to you? . . .

Let's be specific. Is it nothing to you that the very integrity of America is at stake, that the nation is in danger? America today is the nation of distinction. That distinction is that we are probably the drunkest nation in history.

Senator Kefauver was quoted in the Christian Century as saying:

Without fear of contradiction I say that corruption of law enforcement officers is rampant in many American communities today on a scale that makes the corruption of prohibition days look like a kindergarten party.

The Voice for February, 1952, reported: "Fifty-five per cent of the beer sold in America today is sold in food stores to the housewife."

SO MANY DO NOT CARE. But some do. And those who do care can do something about it. Dr. Goodrich suggests three steps. First, we must recognize that we must do something by law to save our society, from community to nation, before it is too late. Second, we should use our influence against the kind of advertising that is flooding our country in favor of liquor and see that it is made illegal. We can write to our senators and congressmen about this. Third, we must take a stand against the use of liquor in our own homes and families. There is no compromise, no possibility of a safe dalliance with this enemy. Fourth, we can, before God, commit ourselves to total abstinence in our own lives. "We must do what we think is right or gradually we will come to think what we do is right."

THIS HAPPENED on the main street of a college town. Five young men in an open car pulled up to the curb. One bought a bottle of liquor and passed it around. All of them drank. Then the driver pulled away from the curb and out into the stream of traffic with a great roar of the motor and a screaming of tires, going at a high rate of speed through red lights and on the wrong side of the street, endangering the lives of pedestrians and the property of other drivers. That evening there was a head-on collision on the highway outside of town and several were killed, including some innocent parties. . . . Is it nothing to you?

And this. An elderly woman was beaten to death one evening at her home by two drunken youths who were looking for money to buy more liquor. . . . Is it nothing to you?

LIQUOR MEN say that it is a man's own personal business if he drinks, and that nobody else—including the government and the machinery of the law—has any right to do anything about it. They put this into all kinds of advertising and propaganda, and they do it so attractively and cleverly that many people are shallow enough to believe them.

That same argument would fit any other kind of crime. Has a man a right to commit murder with no interference from officers or society? Yet people become raging drunk and go out and kill. The bottle is a weapon of death as surely as a gun is, or a badly driven car.

Whatever is dangerous to individuals or to society is subject to restriction by law. There is nothing more dangerous in America today—or in the world either—than liquor.

THIS VERY EVENING, while you are sitting safely at home, perhaps reading these words, a drunken driver may smash into your friend's car or force him into a ditch. It may cut years off his life or destroy a great deal of his property. Is it nothing to you?

Whenever you read of an accident or crime in which liquor is involved (and the responsibility of the bottle is often concealed in the news these days) it may help you to say to yourself, paraphrasing Dwight L. Moody's famous statement, "That, but for the mercy of God, could have happened to me!"

If you could strike a blow against liquor that would destroy it—if you could unite with millions of your fellow-Americans for the removal of this enemy—the life you save could be your own!

Is it nothing to you? If you think so, you are tragically wrong.

College Student Conference

A Conference of college students will be held over Labor Day week end, August 30, 31, and September 1, on the campus of Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, according to Dr. Lawrence Brockway of the University of Michigan, chairman of the General Church Committee on Ministry to College People.

Announcement of the Conference, which will be the fifth such meeting of students, has been made directly to all campus groups and will appear in the current University Bulletin. Details will appear in the Saints' Herald in the next few weeks.

The theme of the Conference will be "Frontiers in Zioniac Performance." It will be the concern of the Conference to evaluate the present-day distinctive principles of the church and to attempt to establish a relationship between today's college people and the present unique functions of the Restoration in terms of everyday performance.

A staff of college and professional people and church leaders is being assembled to assure a challenging program of rich worship, stimulating discussions, and informal sociability. College students from a dozen or more campuses are expected to attend.

Early Periodicals Needed

Recently a good brother sent to the General Church Research Library some copies of the Voree Herald published by James J. Strang from 1846 to 1848. These works are valuable for research study. They will be placed in the library vault and preserved for present and future students. Many valuable books and documents relating to the history of the church may be decaying in somebody's attic or resting unused on the shelves of a library. We are suggesting that these books, letters, and documents may be more valuable and useful if presented to the Research Library of the General Church. We are asking for only those books and documents which deal with the history of the church or leading persons who have made history in the Restoration Movement.

Some of the old books and documents which we would appreciate receiving are copies of the Times and Seasons, Evening and Morning Star, Messenger and Advocate, Journal of History, Journal of Discourses, and any other early periodicals of the factions which divided the Restoration Movement.

These old publications should be preserved for students fifty to one hundred years from now. Let us cooperate and continue to build up a library of this valuable material.

Please write or send books to the Historian's Department, R.L.D.S. Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Encouraging Response in Compliance With Financial Law

Our records show that during the month of February, 1952, tithing statements of 4,332 members residing in the United States, Canada, and Hawaii were received in the office of the Presiding Bishopric. This is the largest number ever received in any one month. It is also interesting to note that the second largest number on record was received in March, 1952, with a total of 3,942. 1,448 were received in January, making a total for the first quarter of 9,722, covering the first three months of 1952. Our goal for 1952 has been set at 18,460 tithing statement filers in the domestic field. We believe that with the continued support of our bishops, bishop's agents, and the general and standing ministry, our members will reach this goal.

We have tried to emphasize in the teaching of the financial law that these statements are the symbol of our stewardship. They are evidence of our recognition of the fact that God is owner, and that we are stewards over that which has come into our possession. There are undoubtedly simpler methods by which money could be raised, if money alone were our goal. There are ways of getting a measure of compliance with the financial law; but the whole purpose of stewardship is the development of character, and it is through this process of filing financial statements that there is evidence

Arise From the Dust

By Ray Zinser

A sermon given at Washington, D. C., on March 23, 1952

Arise from the dust, my sons, and be men, and be determined in one mind, and in one heart united in all things, that ye may not come down into captivity; . . .

Shake off the chains with which ye are bound, and come forth out of obscurity, and arise from the dust.—II Nephi 1: 36, 39.

YOU HAVE JUST HEARD the call of God to man in every age. This call is always related to the nature and function of God.

All men from the beginning of time have attempted to explain God—the great power beyond man. But let us recall the simple yet dramatic picture of God found in Genesis 1: 2, 3, I.V.

I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things.

Yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest.

God is the central ruling power of the universe. God is the great creator of the universe and clusters of galaxies. God is law; God is orderliness; God is beauty; God is truth; God is intelligence.

God Speaks to Man by Divine Revelation

From the earliest days God has spoken to persons attentive to His spirit and willing to accept his invitation:

And it came to pass, that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven and this earth; write the words which I speak.—Genesis 1: 1.

Isaiah also had communication with God:

Also I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.

And he said, Go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed.—Isaiah 6: 8, 9.

God also spoke to the carpenter's son.

God Speaks Through Jesus Christ

On the mount of transfiguration God again revealed himself to man through Jesus. Peter, James, and John were present when Jesus “. . . was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light” (Matthew 17: 1, I.V.).

Peter suggested the construction of tabernacles on this mount. But the intent of God was something far more basic than physical structures at this moment:

While he [Peter] yet spake, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them; and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.—Matthew 17: 4.

Jesus carried the message of God to the people on the earth. This message included an ever-expanding interpretation of God as the God of love, the God of power, and the God of concern for all people. The Creator of the heaven and earth intended for the children of men to live together in godly or “creative relationships.” These relationships must find expression in the economic, social, political, and spiritual conditions of the living process. This we call Zion.

God Speaks Through Joseph Smith in the Latter Days

Not many decades after the days of Jesus, through the evil intent of many people in leadership positions and because of the chicanery of political power groups of the day, the church of the Living God (or the church of Jesus Christ) disintegrated. That is to say, the people fell away from the essential objectives of “kingdom-building.”

Ritual and ceremonial became ends rather than means to kingdom participation. Kingdom-building was sacrificed for organizational and political power through ecclesiastical subterfuge and intrigue.

Reformation

Through the centuries as men listened more attentively to God's inspiration (and oftentimes his voice) reformers arose to challenge the great apostasy. The Reformation was the forerunner of the “Restoration.”

The Restoration

In the 1820's in the United States many Protestant groups were holding revival meetings in the eastern part of the nation. A youth in his early teens went to many of these meetings. It was not clear to him which church he should join. One Scripture, however, sharpened his attentiveness to God's spirit, and he sought to follow God's invitation. These were the scriptural words:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

Joseph Smith, heeding this eternal invitation, went into the woods to pray. God's Spirit rested upon him as it had on Moses, the prophets of old, and Jesus. It was made known to him that he, Joseph Smith, was to be the special emissary of God's "restoration." In this stewardship Joseph Smith was to restore to the earth the church of the Living God, or the church of Jesus Christ in the latter days.

Through this and many experiences in the following seven spiritually maturing years, Joseph Smith gathered around him those who were attentive to God's Spirit and willing to accept the invitation of God. In 1830, a formal organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was effected, with Joseph Smith as the "prophet, seer, and revelator."

God's revelation, as in all previous eras in which men became copartners with Him was active once more and the church of the Living God experienced an overflow of divine gifts—prophecy, healing, miracles, tongues, the interpretation of tongues, wisdom, knowledge—mentioned in the New Testament (I Corinthians 12: 8-10).

The Restoration brought back not only the gifts manifest in the days of Jesus and shortly after Jesus' death but also the church organization (Acts 6: 7; Ephesians 4: 11-13; Luke 10: 1; and Acts 14: 23). Today in this church (which claims to be the church of Jesus Christ or the church of the living God) we find deacons, teachers, priests, seventies, bishops, evangelists, and high priests. We find a Council of Twelve Apostles, other quorums and councils of priesthood, and organized priesthood work.

The Restoration brought these back as Joseph Smith and his followers became attentive to God's spirit and accepted God's invitation to sainthood and service. Yet something must happen in addition to the operation of the Holy Spirit, the gifts, and priesthood organization. Three outstanding things have always occurred in God's revelation:

1. God's purpose is revealed—or the call to coparticipation with God in creation.

2. God's kingdom is revealed—or the practicalities of living with God and each other by the godly blueprint (Zion).

3. God's plan of world evangelization is revealed—or the way in which all men are invited to share in God's work.

God's Purpose

The most basic purpose of God is creation. Creation has a timeless identity for God. It has ever been and ever will be. Joseph Smith renewed in dramatic form the early manifestation of God to man in these words:

There is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

Thus we can visualize the "release of creative power" as the timeless and eternal purpose of God.

Creation is found in the physical forms of the universe, in trees, in flowers, in mountains, in rivers, in lakes, in the myriad forms of nature, and in atomic energy; these are all a part of God's eternal creation. Creation is also found in the biological processes of man by which a minute speck of a human egg is fertilized, resulting in the human embryo and baby.

Similarly, we find creation in personality. The release of creative power in man becomes a complex and sacred process and a significant part of God's creative purposes. Let us review again the divine words:

There is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.

To bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man is a continuing process of God's sharing his creative purposes with man—always extending the possibility of godlike qualities, and hence creation in each person or the release of creative power.

The creation and development of man becomes a part of the eternal creation as seen in physical and biological processes in law, in orderliness, in beauty, in truth, and in intelligence.

God's Kingdom

To accomplish the purposes of God as related to the "creation" of human personality, a plan of action has been continually revealed by God. This plan was clearly identified in the days of the Old Testament prophets as the "kingdom of God." Attempts were made in those days, according to the level of the prevailing culture, to bring this about. We read that in the days of Jesus there took place a remarkable and dynamic venture in the actual establishment of Zion. Let us review God's revelation in the days of Jesus—a revelation of what people can do when they are attentive to God's Spirit and willing to do his will:

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common.

And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all.

Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold.

And laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.—Acts 4: 32-35.

Please note the specific, practical, social, and economic aims and functions of the kingdom of God. Man's highest form of release of creative power can come only when there is an adequate supply of food, clothing, and shelter. So a God who gives divine revelation teaches a way of social and economic life to set the stage for the higher forms of creation in human personality.

Then comes the majestic words of God to man—the eternal invitation of God to those attentive to his spirit and willing to respond: "Therefore seek ye to bring forth the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Luke 12: 34.

This was God speaking in the New Testament days.

Joseph Smith "Reveals" Zion

God speaking through a prophet in the latter days will of necessity speak of this same thing. Joseph Smith through latter-day divine revelation elaborates on the mechanics of the Zion order. But before the specifics of the Zion order comes the same invitation: "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 3.

In 1829 Joseph Smith first made mention of building Zion and indicated that all were invited to participate with God in this great opportunity and task.

Zion Process

Let us review some of the specifics of Zion-building which came by way of prophetic ministry through Joseph Smith from the days of the early 1820's to 1844.

1. Zion is a process. It is a part of the eternal creative process. We are participating in that Zion today in a limited way. More direct participation is possible today and in the tomorrows. It is a continuing process by which man lives a godly way of life in God's kingdom.

2. God is the center of the life of each person. How refreshing it is to renew the revelation of the centrality of God in a materialistically mad generation and a frustrated, ulcerous age!

3. Education. God's basic revelation to Joseph Smith on education contained these words: "Seek learning even by study and also by faith." Many times we attempt a false separation of "study" and "faith." Through God's revelation we learn that both go together in an inseparable unity. God also spoke through Joseph Smith to indicate those things which should be studied:

"The doctrine of the kingdom"—theology, the gospel, Zion or community building

"The laws of the gospel"—church procedure, church beliefs

"Things in heaven"—spiritual realities, astronomy, meteorology

"Things in earth"—biology, agriculture, botany

"Things under the earth"—geology, archaeology

"Things which have been"—history, philosophy

"Things which must shortly come to pass"—prophecy

"Things which are abroad"—diplomatic service, industry, travel

"The wars and perplexities of the nations"—international law, international peace

"The judgments which are on the land"—drought, cyclones and other wind disturbances, labor disputes, economic depressions, delinquency and crime

"Things which are at home"—sociology, politics, race relations

"Countries and kingdoms"—physical and political geography, languages

These are the words of the prophet of God in the latter days (See Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21).

God is truth and intelligence, hence freedom. The absence of these qualities produces captivity, either physical or mental. Note the words of Isaiah in this respect: "Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge."—Isaiah 5: 13.

Joseph Smith (speaking for God) declared eternal hostility to any form of captivity or bondage which holds man back from building the Zionite personality and Zionite community life. The plan of God includes learning by study and also by faith as the prerequisites for the kingdom practice.

Whether you are a prospective member of the church of Jesus Christ or a member of that body, an unwillingness in mental attitude creates a giant barrier between you and God. Paul and Silas, preaching in Berea, had a remarkable experience relating to mental attitudes because those in Berea:

... were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.—Acts 17: 11.

This readiness of mind is the same process revealed to Joseph Smith in 1832 in the words received from God: "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith." A church leader today states in an explanatory way:

Understanding is not a matter of the mind only, but also of the heart; not just of intelligence, but also of character. Those people can best understand the purposes of God who have faith in him and through faith come to share his way of life.

With this background the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints sought to establish schools for its people wherever it went. The "School of the Prophets" was opened in 1833. The first elementary schools in Jackson County, Missouri, were founded by the followers of Joseph Smith. The Nauvoo University was the first municipal university of the United States giving free education through its four years.

4. Socio-economics. We have already seen how in the days of Jesus and shortly after his death the early Christians took inventory of their possessions, selling of their substance, and then dedicating the returns to the church. The church officials, in turn, gave back to the people an "inheritance" or those items of real estate and material things which were needed by the people to carry on their vocations and for the satisfaction of their just wants and needs. This is a foundation stone in Zionite development. A basic principle is involved here which is written in Luke 12: 37:

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

One's heart follows what one treasures. If that treasure is money or material wealth, there will one's heart be also. If one treasures God's purposes and the development of Christian living and Zionite participation, one's money and total substance will go toward Zionite ends. This is God's will and invitation in all times. Jesus was the spokesman in his day. Joseph Smith was spokesman in the latter days restoring the same message and spirit of Jesus:

... inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given unto my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 2.

The call sounds to all of us today—for those who are intellectually and spiritually honest enough to truly seek to establish the kingdom of God.

5. Stewardship. This brings us to another distinctive of Zion-building—of fulfilling the invitation to match the consecration of our material things with a consecration of time and talent. This is the invitation extended by God to each person so that each person might become a "steward" in his kingdom. "Stewardship is the management of an investment of God's creation in you." Each person has a personal responsibility to God. Trust, management, and accountability are the essentials for the use of one's time, talent, and money.

The following statement on stewardship applies equally to all areas of man's life, including time and talent:

... every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

6. Social organization. A basic part of building Zion is found in the "gathering process." Joseph Smith as spokesman again said: "... it must needs be that there be an organization of my people..."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

People must gather together in neighborhood and community units:

... in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

This is sound counsel, and social science has confirmed divine revelation by studies in culture and personality. Culture exerts a tremendous impact on personality. We tend to reflect environmental forces around us. God intended and still invites us to build cultural patterns through which personality has a more ready response to Zionite principles.

Independence, Missouri, the Center Place and hub of Zionite communities, the stakes, and districts, all are laboratory demonstration units in Zionite enterprise. Graceland College is a form of gathering of young people for collegiate experience and experimental activity in Zionite living. Other institutions of the church operate in similar manner.

7. Theocratic democracy. Zionite participation involves principles of government in which God and man work together for the direction of the church and its objectives. God gives his revelation through the prophet and leader of the church. The people work out the details of the prophetic vision. One of the problems and great challenges facing our organization today exists in refining the methods by which God and man work together. The spirit of bold adventure is always a part of God's revelation.

Ultimate loyalty should be always to God and not to any particular priesthood member or official position, quorum, or agency of the church. The support of each member should be directed toward truth and what one considers to be one's best interpretation of God's will. Disagreement or diversity of opinion is not disloyalty. An effective unity is one which is aggressively pursuing Zionite objectives and in which problem situations are worked out with all having an equal opportunity to present opinions and work toward consensus. These are essentials of the divinely instituted theocratic democracy.

The Call to Action

May I, as a minister of Jesus Christ in the church of the Living God, extend the invitation to you to participate in this great adventure—through baptism in case you have not yet joined; through participation to those of you who are members but who have not yet gone all the way with God?

This is a call to action by the aggressive pursuit of God's purposes in kingdom-living. This is a call to action in becoming a part of the great creative processes of the world and of the immortality of man. This is a call to self-evangelization. Hear again the invitation:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

Evangelization of Others

The final call to action is an invitation to all people of the world to share in the unfinished tasks of kingdom-building. Participating with God in the eternal expressions of creation requires world evangelization: Creation is always shared with all people through the grace of God.

And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.—John 10:16.

And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations. . . .

Let us end our confusion about who shall participate in Zion's redemption. The Scriptures are unequivocally clear in this regard:

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons;

But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.—Acts 10:34, 35.

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.—Acts 17:26.

And he inviteth them all to come unto him, and partake of his goodness;

And he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female;

And he remembereth the heathen, and all are alike unto God, both Jew and Gentile.—II Nephi 11:113-115.

This is the great challenge that all people have who are willing to be a part of the great adventure in Zion-building.

Let us be attentive to God's Spirit and accept his invitation to build Zion in our time. Let us arise from the dust! Let us come forth out of obscurity; let us build Zion and identify ourselves with God's eternal purposes and share in the immortality of God's creation.

Arise from the dust, my sons, and be men, and be determined in one mind, and in one heart united in all things, that ye may not come down into captivity; . . .

Shake off the chains with which ye are bound, and come forth out of obscurity, and arise from the dust.

of the consecration and devotion to a great cause. Consecration in the fullest sense includes those things which are of temporal character; and it is through the utilization of our temporal possessions that we grow in spiritual understanding and power.

We are sure that the membership of the church will appreciate with us that this record is evidence of spiritual growth within the church. As it continues, we will find it possible to advance the cause of the gospel and bring about the building of the kingdom of God.

Final Report on Our Application for Radio License

In the Herald of March 13, 1950, an official report over the signature of President Israel A. Smith was made on the decision of the initial hearing of Federal Communications Commission regarding the church's application for a broadcasting license. The decision at that time was as follows:

The proposal of the Reorganized Church is in all other respects acceptable; its application must be denied at this time because of the presently undetermined applicability of the First Amendment (United States Constitution to licensing radio stations for religious purposes).

Following this initial decision action was taken to appeal for a hearing before the full Board of the Federal Communications Commission. This hearing was granted and was held on July 16, 1951. The decision, however, was not handed down until April 23, 1952, and the application was denied.

That portion of the decision pertaining to the question of the constitutional rights is as follows:

Finally, there remains for consideration the question of whether the type of operation proposed by the Reorganized Church would contravene the constitutional prohibition contained in the First Amendment prohibiting "aids" to religion. The Reorganized Church is before this Commission like any other applicant seeking the use of a frequency in a part of the radio spectrum which for a long time has been allocated for the use of standard broadcast stations. By the instant application, the Reorganized Church proposes the establishment of a standard broadcast station on a noncommercial basis to be operated in accordance with the Commission's Rules and Regulations and its Standards of Good Engineering Practice. While the Reorganized Church proposes to utilize the station in the interests of the religious association, as shown in the Findings of Fact, it proposes to broadcast a diversified type of program service in order to fulfill the radio broadcast needs of the community's religious, civic, charitable, governmental, agricultural, labor, and industrial interests. Its program schedule includes educational, civic, news, and music programs, dramatic programs, varied discussion and organizational programs, and religious programs on behalf of other denominations. In our view, therefore, the proposal of the Reorganized Church is subject to no constitutional objections which would constitute a bar to a grant of its application.

However, while the preceding is favorable, the technicality on which our application was denied is covered in another portion of the written decision, which is as follows:

In view of the foregoing, the precise effect of Section 310 (a) (4) upon the application of the Reorganized Church is clear. Section 310 (a) (4) provides the Commission with no opportunity for discretion in granting or refusing a license. Among other matters, Section 310 (a) (4) imposes an obligation upon the Commission not to license an applicant which has an alien officer or director. As

Travelog

ONCE AGAIN I take up the burden of writing something about my activities abroad and at home during recent months. The thing that amazes me and mildly condemns me is how rapidly time steals up on me and how far in arrears I suddenly find myself.

I find that the memoranda I have set aside to refresh my memory sometimes have been set too far to one side and cannot be found, in spite of what I thought were requisite precautions. For instance, I have a notation in my diary—meager indeed—to the effect that I was in Fort Scott, Kansas, on Sunday, April 29, last year. I remember that the commitment to be at Fort Scott was made many weeks in advance, but the program of the day's meetings seems to have vanished and the several indorsements I usually make for reference afterwards have also passed from my memory. Perhaps a little later from Herald columns I may be able to reconstruct the events of the occasion.

I recall, however, that late in the afternoon certain of the young people of the branch took me by auto to Kansas City where I caught a late train for Omaha. There I was domiciled for a few days with relatives.

On May 12 I left for San Antonio, Texas, where by appointment I was met by Apostle Hield and Elder David Elliott, pastor of the Modesto, California, Branch. After a splendid dinner at the home of Missionary John Wight, where we met with Missionary Wayne Simmons, we left in the Elliott automobile for Mexico, crossing soon afterward into that Republic at Laredo and getting as far as Monterey by nightfall where we stayed at a hotel during the night. As we approached Mexico City we stopped to look over archaeological ruins and pyramids—the objective of Brethren Hield and Elliott. I could not help being interested, since all of what we were seeing speaks so much for the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.

WHILE WE WERE IN MEXICO Brethren Hield and Elliott were very busy visiting and taking pictures of some of the pyramids and ruins of ancient structures which were not uncovered on former visits of some of our missionaries. While they were thus engaged, I worked on certain office matters that had been neglected; I also learned something of the facts concerning Mexico and its laws.

I secured an English translation of the latest Constitution of the country, and found that while the people apparently stopped the encroachments of the Roman Catholic Church, confiscating all parochial school properties as well as all lands used for church purposes and making drastic regulations affecting the clergy and nuns, the new Constitution established what would seem to an American very unnecessary restrictions with respect to churches in general. Whenever lands are used for church edifice purposes the title thereto immediately vests in the Republic, and nobody not a native-born Mexican can be a minister of the gospel or officiate in any of the so-called sacraments.

MEXICO IS A COUNTRY of contrasts. One can see people of rank and class, highly educated, rich and wealthy, and at the same time women and children in rags, dull of countenance, and obviously benighted of mind. Everywhere in the cities and even small towns and communities there are many cathedrals—literally dozens in the larger cities—with ornate altars, in some cathedrals many altars, highly ornamented with gold leaf, giving evidence of the expenditure of vast sums. Worshipers, most of them evidently poverty-stricken and bare-footed, come and go to the confessional, making offering of their pittance, while their children are in veritable rags.

I could not help wondering if the millions of dollars that have gone into these cathedrals had been used through the centuries for the education of the masses of the people what a difference there would be in their present condition!

We saw how the natives are living throughout the country with thatched houses along the hillsides, evidence of wresting a bare living from the mountainsides, with small acreage, with but primitive facilities and no sanitary provisions. If the government of this people were inclined to do so and had the billions in money necessary, the people might be lifted up to a decent level of life in perhaps one hundred to two or more hundreds of years.

I contrasted the experience of the Mexican people with that of the Hawaiian people who, under the fostering care of the United States, in a short time have developed a modern country that is now knocking at the door for admission to the Union of States.

THE PROBLEM that came to me is how we may inaugurate and maintain any kind of missionary effort in Mexico. We found that there are missionaries operating in the country, perhaps illegally, since they are in the country on tourist visas, but they evidently are not being molested.

When we contemplate the possibilities of gospel work in such a country we could be enthused—if government restrictions were removed. But we are appalled at the task under present conditions. Mexico has some of the finest agricultural areas in the Western Hemisphere. Some of the valleys through which we traveled are magnificent already and, with proper cultivation, there would be little limit to their possibilities.

Perhaps the best hope for our work there lies along the line of co-operative endeavor, wherein we may be able to bring economic freedom to the natives. A wise member of the church in Mexico City said: "It is needless to offer these people a better salvation than they think they will get. The best way to help them is to lift them up in an economic way."

The time is perhaps not opportune—that is, conditions are so adverse we may not be able to lay a sure foundation for work in this Republic for a time—but if enlightenment can be brought to the people, the story we have to present to them ought to bring forth much fruit.

After about three weeks in the country, my associates left by auto for points in Texas. Certain problems came up which I deemed to need immediate attention, so I returned home by plane, well repaid for my difficulties of travel and accommodations but considerably discouraged at the outlook for present missionary labors in Mexico.

"This Is the Place"

The Iowa Department of History and Archives in a brochure discusses traditions associated with the origin of the name "Iowa" which is the name of one of the Midwestern states of the United States.

One tradition has it that a group of Sacs and Foxes Indians crossed the Mississippi River in search of a suitable place in which to settle and live. The old Indian Chief, leading his followers to the banks of the river, set his staff in the ground and said, "I-o-wa"—meaning "this is the place."

It is an interesting sidelight that when the Mormons trekked across Iowa toward the West, and during their encampment on the borders of western Iowa, their leaders came in contact with the Indians. We are intrigued with the idea that there may be a direct relationship between the Indian word "Iowa" (this is the place) and Brigham Young's dramatic action when he reached the Salt Lake Valley and (allegedly) exclaimed "This is the place." According to the Iowan tradition the famous exclamation is not original with Brigham Young.

The Creator God Wiracocha

By Paul M. Hanson

With illustrations from photographs by the Author

A DEITY, knowledge of whom among the Incas was derived from Tiahuanaco times, a period long preceding the foundation of the Inca Empire, was Wiracocha, sometimes spelled Viracocha, Uiracocha, and Huiracocha. This is "made abundantly clear by a long list of the most important chroniclers."¹

The God was held to be maker and ruler of all things in heaven, on earth, everywhere. So great was he that the Inca did not allot to him estates and tribute, as he did to the Sun, for Viracocha was already master of the entire universe.²

The Inca, "when he prayed to Viracocha, supplicated him with greatest humility."³

2. On the way to the Island of Titicaca

The greatest god was the Creator, a being without beginning or end, who created all the other supernatural beings, animals, and men, and ruled them very much as the Inca Emperor ruled his empire. He was represented as a man, and the Spaniards saw several statues of him in various temples. The most important of those in Cuzco was a standing figure of solid gold, about the size of a ten-year-old boy, with his right arm raised as if in command and the right hand clenched, except for the thumb and forefinger (Molina of Cuzco, 1913, pages 126, 127). The Creator had no name but a long series of titles, the most usual being "Ancient foundation, lord, instructor of the world." The Chroniclers generally call him Viracocha.⁴

The meaning of the name Viracocha is given by the distinguished archaeologist, Sir Clements R. Markham:

Uira is the storehouse or depository of all things—of creation. The ordinary meaning of Cocha is a lake, but here it is said to signify an abyss—profundity. The whole meaning of the words would be "The splendour, the foundation, the creator, the infinite God." The word Yachac was occasionally added—the teacher.⁵

The natives of the Collao say the same as all the other people of the Sierra, that the Creator of the world was called Huiracocha, and they know that his principal abode is in heaven.⁶

From the pre-Inca period traditions relating to Wiracocha filtered through the centuries into Inca times, even a description of his person being retained. Numerous prayers that were offered to him, preserved in the original Quechua, reveal unusual spiritual depth, of which the following are excellent examples:

O conquering Viracocha!
Ever-present Viracocha!
Thou who art without equal upon the earth!
Thou who art from the beginnings of the world until its end!
Thou gavest life and valour to men, saying,
"Let this be a man."
And to the woman, saying,
"Let this be a woman."
Thou madest them and gavest them being.
Watch over them, that they may live in health and in peace.
Thou who art in the highest heavens,
And among the clouds of the tempest,
Grant them long life
And accept this our sacrifice,
O Creator.⁷

O Creator! who doest wonders and marvels. O most merciful and almighty Creator! multiply our flocks and cause them to bring forth young, let the land continue in peace and free from danger, and these whom thou hast made, hold them in thy hand.⁸

Dr. Daniel G. Brinton says, "Change the names, and some of the formulas preserved by Christobal de Molina and Sahagun would not jar on the ears of a congregation in one of our churches."⁹

He further says:

The oldest Indians, especially of those of noble birth, including many descendants of the Incas [rulers], were assembled at different times and in different parts of the country, and carefully questioned, through the official interpreter, as to just what the old religion was. The questions were not leading ones, and the replies have great uniformity. They all agreed that Viracocha was worshiped as creator, and as the ever-present active divinity; he alone answered prayers, and aided in time of need; he was the sole efficient god. All prayers to the Sun or to the deceased Incas, or to idols, were directed to them as intercessors only. On this point the statements were most positive. The Sun was but one of Viracocha's creations, not itself the Creator.¹⁰

EVEN A DESCRIPTION of the personal appearance of Wiracocha was carried down the stream of tradition from pre-Inca times to the Incas. Tradition is like a river that starts from melted snow in the mountains but gathers a certain amount of debris on its way to the ocean. Nevertheless it is the "most enduring of all man's form of expression. In all parts of the world oral traditions of man's creation and earliest experiences are passed on in full vigor to the new generation, while libraries of books and manuscripts have been lost and destroyed and the mightiest monuments of brick and stone forgotten."¹¹

Sarmiento de Gamboa says of the Peruvians:

Whether it was in one way or the other, all agree that Viracocha was the creator of these people. They have the tradition that he was a man of medium height, white and dressed in a white robe like an alb secured round the waist and that he carried a staff and a book in his hands.¹²

The religion of the Inca was the worship of the ancient deity, stories of whose power and goodness had been handed down by tradition. Illa Tici Viracocha, the Creator of the universe, was the supreme deity of the Peruvians. His temple formed one side of the great square at Cuzco, and the present cathedral is on part of the site.¹³

Cieza de Leon, one of the most important authorities on Inca history, gives the Peruvian account of the appearing of Wiracocha:

Before the Incas reigned in these kingdoms, or had ever been heard of, the Indians relate another thing much more notable than all things else that they say. For they declare that they were a long time without seeing the sun, and that, suffering much evil from its absence, great prayers and vows were offered up to their gods, imploring for the light they needed. Things being in this state, the sun, shining very brightly, came forth from the island of Titicaca, in the great lake of the Collao [Lake Titicaca] at which everyone rejoiced. Presently afterwards, they say, that there came from a southern direction a white man of great stature, who, by his aspect and presence, called forth great veneration and obedience. This man who thus appeared had great power, insomuch that he could change plains into mountains, and great hills into valleys, and make water flow out of stones. As soon as such power was beheld, the people called him the Maker of created things, the Prince of all things, Father of the Sun. For they say that he performed other wonders, giving life to men and animals, so that by his hand marvelous great benefits were conferred on the people. And such was the story that the Indians who told it to me say that they heard from their ancestors, who in like manner heard it in the old songs which they received from very ancient times. They say that this man went on toward the south, working these marvels along the way of the mountains; and that he never more returned so as to be seen. In many places he gave orders to men how they should live, and he spoke lovingly to them with much gentleness, admonishing them that they should do good, and no evil or injury one to another, and that they should be loving and charitable to all. In most parts he is generally called Ticiviracocha. . . . In many parts they built temples in which they put blocks of stone in likeness of him, and offered up sacrifices before them.¹⁴

Thenceforth the Island of Titicaca, in Lake Titicaca, was regarded as most sacred.

LAKE TITICACA, about 100 miles long by 35 wide, 12,500 feet above the level of the sea, is the highest body of water in the world that is navigable by steamers. The scenery surrounding the lake is beautiful and inspiring, some of the snow-capped peaks rising to great heights. All possible color combinations appear in the sunrises and sunsets on the lake.

Copacabana, a town on the shore of Lake Titicaca (see illustration 1), is a great pilgrimage center, the "fair that is held there, probably the largest in all South America, being a survival of an ancient ceremonial gathering that has come down from immemorial time. Copacabana as a place of assemblage was comparable to Teotihuacan in Mexico and Tiahuanaco in Bolivia."¹⁵

At Copacabana I arranged with two Aymara Indians to take me in a sailboat to the Island of Titicaca, some miles distant. (See illustration 2.) For a time the wind was favorable, then there was a complete calm, so that both Indians had to row. Finally a landing was made on a rocky portion of the island. This, the largest island in the lake, abounds in ruins of buildings, temples, palace foundations, paved roads, and terraces, the skilled workmanship of Inca or pre-Inca peoples.

The setting of this sacred and historic island is beautiful. Looking from the island across the lake to the west, one sees a range nearly 100 miles in length of snow-covered mountains, some of the peaks rising about 20,000 feet. (See illustration 3.)

ALL THE TRADITIONS assign to a remote period when Titicaca Island first came into prominence among the Indians, and in the older legends the creator God Wiracocha is associated with this region.

It has been shown that Cieza records that statues in likeness of Wiracocha were placed in many temples. It was in the special temple in Cuzco, apart from the Temple of the Sun, occupying the land now partly occupied by the cathedral that he was symbolized by the massive golden image about the size of a ten-year-old boy.

Another temple dedicated to Wiracocha was at Cacha, ruins of which are about fifty miles south of Cuzco and four miles from the railway station of San Pedro. From the train, on the way from Cuzco to San Pedro, one can see in the distance near the mountains, a part of the remaining wall of the temple. This temple was constructed as an offering to the God Wiracocha in commemoration of his aid in the war against the Chancas. The Inca Wiracocha, when a prince, informed his father that Wiracocha, the Creator God, had appeared to him in vision, instructing him to inform his parent that large armies were moving to destroy the sacred capital, that the Inca must prepare, and he and the empire would be protected. The father listened impatiently, ignored the warning, and made no preparation for the threatened invasion. Within three months word came of the approach in great numbers of the enemy. The father abandoned his capital, and awaited his fate. The son moved to preserve the empire, collected a force of warriors, and in battle gained a signal victory over the invaders. For some reason, not clear, he took upon himself the name Viracocha.

At the demand of a grateful people, Viracocha afterwards set aside his father and assumed the imperial Uautu. In recognition of the power and interference of the divine Viracocha, the young Inca ordered the construction of a sumptuous temple to his worship in Cacha.

The floor of the second story was paved with lustrous black stones, brought from afar. In place of a great altar was a sort of chapel, twelve feet square within the walls, roofed with the same kind of black stones, fitted together, and raised in the form of the capital of a column with four angles. This was the finest piece of work in the whole structure. In this chapel, and sunk in the wall of the temple, was a kind of tabernacle, where was an image of the celestial Viracocha, in honor of whom the temple was built. . . .

In the tabernacle just mentioned, on a great base or pedestal, was a statue of Viracocha, as he appeared to the young Inca in Chita. It represented a man of good stature, with a long beard and flowing robe like a tunic or cassock reaching to the feet.¹⁶

All this was carved out of stone, and as the sculptors had never seen the figure they had to carve, nor a picture of it, the Inca himself dressed like it many times and he would not consent that any other person should do so, that there might be no appearance of disrespect for the image of his god Uiracocha, by allowing anyone but the king himself to represent him. . . .

The chief reason which moved the Spaniards to pull down this and other buildings, was that they thought there must be treasure under them. The first thing they pulled down was the statue, because they believed there was much gold buried under its feet. The temple was then destroyed, first one part being thrown down, then another, until the whole was in ruins. The statue of stone continued to exist for some years, though disfigured by the stones that had been hurled against it.¹⁷

Cieza says of the temple at Cacha:

This temple was built in memory of their god Huiracocha, whom they call the Creator. Within it there was a stone idol the height of a man, with a robe, and a crown or tiara on the head. Some said that this might be the statue of some apostle who arrived in the land.¹⁸

Cieza speaks of the statue as an "idol." It should be remembered that the early Spanish writers, of the Catholic faith, had strong prejudices against the beliefs of the conquered. (See illustration 4.)

The Spaniards, after seeing this temple and the statue with the form that has been described, wanted to make out that St. Bartholomew might have traveled as far as Peru to preach to the gentiles, and that the Indians had made this statue in memory of the event.¹⁹

Evidently the statue differed greatly from the appearance of the Indians.

Some writers say the prince who defended Cuzco against the Chancas, thus saving the Inca realm from destruction, became the great Inca Pachacuti.²⁰ He stands out in history as a very notable military and religious leader. In the Temple of the Sun, in Cuzco, he convoked all the priests from every part of the empire so that religious matters might be set in good order. In addressing them, he called them back to the worship of Wiracocha. He "presented to them his concept of a great, omnipotent Creator—god, Viracocha or Pachacamac, the Foundation of all that is Excellent, Maker of the World. The priests accepted the teachings of their master and accorded to this God the supremacy of sky and earth."²¹ (See illustration 5.)

The "simple faith in Illa-Ticci-Uiracocha was overlaid by a mass of superstitions, represented by the cult of ancestors and the cult of natural objects."²²

It is an interesting fact that the title of Wiracocha was applied to the Spaniards, and in the Andes today the name is a colloquial term for any white man.

Hubert Howe Bancroft has this to say of the tradition of the white and bearded person:

Although bearing various names and appearing in different countries, the American culture-heroes all present the same general characteristics. They are all described as white, bearded men, generally clad in long robes; appearing suddenly and mysteriously upon the scene of their labors, they at once set about improving the people by instructing them in useful and ornamental arts, giving them laws, exhorting them to practice brotherly love and other Christian virtues, and introducing a milder and better form of religion; having accomplished their mission, they disappear as mysteriously and unexpectedly as they came; and finally, they are apotheosized and held in great reverence by a grateful posterity. In such guise or on such mission did Quetzalcoatl appear in Cholula, Votan in Chiapas, Wixtepecocha in Oajaca, Zamna and Cukulcan with his nineteen disciples in Yucatan, Gucumatz in Guatemala, Viracocha in Peru, Sume and Paye-Tome in Brazil, the mysterious apostle mentioned by Rosales in Chile, and Bochica in Colombia.²³

IS IT NOT POSSIBLE that only one white, bearded personage visited ancestors of the Indians—the traditions of him becoming diffused and attenuated with the passing of time? Dr. Brinton says, "There is irrefragable evidence that these myths and this ideal of the hero-god were intimately known and widely circulated in America long before any one of its millions had ever seen a white man."²⁴

What is the explanation? Is it that Indians, dark-skinned and practically beardless, in the various regions in America imagined that a white and beardless personage visited their ancestors, initiated them into religious rites, exercised miraculous powers, disappeared mysteriously, promised to return? Is it this imaginary personage whom they worshiped and to whom they built temples?

It is not a satisfying answer that what has been herein set forth relating to this deity rests on baseless imagination of the Indians.

Who was the white and bearded deity who ministered in person in ancient times to ancestors of the Indians? What accounts for the traditions of him, existing in both continents of the New World?

The most reasonable answer is to be found in Christ. After his resurrection he appeared in about a dozen instances in various parts of Palestine, in which he engaged in conversation, expounded the Scriptures, established his identity, and gave commands. To his apostles he "showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God."²⁵

It is known what Jesus was doing in a part of the foregoing forty days. These words of his to his disciples indicate his personal ministry was to extend beyond the confines of Palestine: "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."²⁶

As Christ, after his resurrection, appeared and ministered to his disciples in widely separated regions of Palestine, so he may similarly have appeared and ministered in person in South America as well as in Mexico.

A part of the wondrous truth in the Book of Mormon, the sacred book of ancient America, is its record of the visit and marvelous ministrations of Christ among his people in America, soon after he rose from the dead. Ancient American prophets foretold this visit, and historians recorded it.

It is stated in the Book of Mormon that he appeared in the land Bountiful,²⁷ which many students believe is in the region of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, to the east. Jesus said to his people in the land Bountiful:

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister.²⁸

A process of diffusion appears to have operated, extending knowledge of the actual appearance, or appearances, of Christ in America, resulting in traditions of the white and bearded personage reaching out in both continents of the New World.

Varied, but harmonious, are the evidences that contribute in establishing the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon: its contents, the Bible, testimony of witnesses, archaeology, and pre-Columbian American traditions.

IN LIFE'S SCHOOL

EDWARD R. MURROW has had an interesting and thought-provoking theme on the radio with guest speakers each day entitled, "This I believe."

As the speakers have formulated their thoughts into concise sentences, I, too, have tried to put mine into a logical statement of belief and decide what caused this basic belief.

I remember our graduation class of many years ago, and our long summer days of vacation, when as a group we planned picnics and various meetings to clasp tightly that bond of friendship that had grown through the years of our school life, soon to be dissolved as we moved out into varying activities.

I remember the earnest discussions of our religious beliefs, because we were a group representing several different faiths. How mixed and immature our conceptions were because of our own mental immaturity. But I do carry with me some basic truths that emerged from that period of my life. At that time high school classes had graduation mottos; two of them were "Out of school life into life's school," and "The heart of education is the education of the heart."

While in school we endeavored to grasp the basic fundamentals, the three R's, the sciences and handcrafts that are given in a well-rounded educational program.

To some is given the opportunity to pursue these subjects on higher levels of learning, but no matter how many years we spend in school life, eventually we leave it for life's school.

As school life demands teachers and a superintendent, so does life's school. Knowing this, God gave us one in the person of his Son Jesus Christ. In life's school the education of the heart starts and does not end until death.

When we have educated our hearts, we realize that every one we meet is in some way superior to us; accepting this basic truth, we lose prejudices and learn to truly appreciate the intrinsic worth of all mankind.

If we will so educate our hearts, selfishness will disappear, wars will cease, there will be food enough for all, fear and want will be swept from the earth, and the reign of love, peace, and good will toward all men will be our individual and group reward.—MRS. ERNEST O. SHERMAN.

Power to Give

A Journey With an Idea

PART II

By L. S. Wight

MY FIRST IMPULSE when thinking about "The Power to Give" was to suggest that I had received a new idea. But there is no such thing. The newness is only in a changed understanding.

Certainly I did not get any new idea, but Hubert Baker did give me a new vehicle for the expression of a fundamental truth. And I shall always be grateful to Ward Hougas for giving me the words which makes this thought stand out so clearly. It is the very thing which Christ did, in proving to the world that every man has the inborn power to give himself to some task. Every bit of progress in the entire history of the world has come because someone somewhere "gave" himself to doing the job.

An Early Influence

On my first Sunday in Denver I had a nice visit with Apostle Paul M. Hanson. It has been my privilege to meet him in many places. That morning he gave us a sermon which proved to be a fine setting for what I had in mind. Certainly if anyone has earned the right to talk in retrospect Brother Hanson has. He told us of all the beauties which God has put into the world within our reach, if we will do the things necessary to grow into an understanding of them.

Brother Hanson is part of one of the most profound experiences in my life. He went to Australia in 1902 with my father, who returned to that field as an apostle. As a boy of twelve I went with Dad to the early morning train in Lamoni when he left for Independence to start that trip. As I stood at the depot watching the train pull out I realized that I had a responsibility as the oldest son. My tendency to be too serious at times may have come from that experience. He was gone for a year and a half and undoubtedly the responsibility made an impression on my mind which has stayed with me throughout life. In his letters he constantly referred to Paul Hanson and the good work he was doing, so without his realizing it Brother Hanson became a part of my church life.

Men Who Give

After what both Hubert and Ward had done for me, it was quite a coincidence later in the year to see each one again within a week in different places. One Sunday, in San Antonio, Texas, I met Hubert and Alice with their new daughter Leslie. It was a pleasure to be able to tell Hubert how much he had done for me during the year. Then on the next Sunday I found Ward and three of his workers at the Priesthood Institute in Oklahoma City. The previous year I had met Ernest Crownover at the High Priests' Conference at Kirtland Temple. He reminded me that the ancestors of one of us had baptized the ancestors of the other, and in this fact we found a basis for a friendship which will always last. Seeing Joe Hufford with these men from Denver reminded me of that first Sunday in Denver when I sat with Apostle Hanson listening to Joe direct the discussion in a class of older men. Paul turned to me and said at the close of the class, "We do not need to worry about the future of the church when we can see such men taking over." He was developing and using his power to give.

When I read the subject which Ward had put in the program for my Denver sermon, my mind went back to my first introduction at the Denver church. I shall never forget my first greeting as I walked into that beautiful building the previous Sunday. Sister Marie Pointer approached me as the official greeter. And I pause here to say that the memory of any church is determined largely by the kind of greeting one receives when first entering. There is no more important job in the entire worship program than that of host or hostess. When Floyd Whiting acted as official greeter in Minneapolis for several years, it was a heart-warming experience just to go into the church.

It had been my privilege to meet Sister Marie only once previously, and at first we did not recognize each other. "Didn't you live at one time in St. Paul or Minneapolis?" My answer to that was that I had lived in Minneapolis, and then she asked, "Didn't you come down to the hospital in Rochester to administer to my husband?" Of course I recalled the incident. Her husband, Tom, was in a very serious condition with a throat infection which finally made it necessary for him to wear an artificial instrument in order to talk. We did very little, but the power to give in the hands of men who stand in the stead of God is beyond human calculation. I shall always associate the warm welcome of her greeting with the Denver church.

The Meaning of the Gift

When looking for a text I naturally thought of God's gift to man. Giving his Only Begotten Son was his method of expressing to man, for man's sake, his power to give. This is best expressed in the favorite text in John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." This text was my choice for the subject, "The Power to Give." We give to those we love most. God gave that his earthly children might see the light. The Son, Christ, gave himself to the uttermost. He not only had the power to give but gave without reservation. His final act of giving himself in earthly death was for the purpose of breaking the veil between this life and the hereafter so man could see that there is something to work for beyond death.

If, then, the laying down of life or the giving of it in service is a requirement, it is axiomatic that we have within us the power to do that which is required. This is verified in Jacob 3: 8 in the Book of Mormon, which reads "Nevertheless, the Lord God sheweth us our weakness, that we may know that it is by his grace, and his great condescensions unto the children of men, that we have the power to do these things." There should then be no question as to whether or not we have the "power to give," but there should be a great question in our minds as to whether or not we are utilizing this power to its fullest.

Christ is the outstanding example of giving. The result was the infusion of his ideals into the thinking of his followers to the extent that many emulated his example to the point of giving up their lives for their convictions. The exercise of that power was so great that the church was built and flourished as long as the same spirit characterized its efforts. The time came of course when, as a result of the loss of this spirit, the church deteriorated into a tool of the state for the control of men's lives. This condition was not changed until the time of the reformers when men became restive under the impositions placed on them. This innate power was asserting itself and continued to do so until parts of the then controlling church broke away. The men who caused this change were men of God as much as any in the world's history. They were expressing themselves to the limit of their ability. Out of this movement came the Puritans to the shores of the Western world. To the extent of their ability they tried to use their power to give. They gave to the world a basis for free government under which we can now do the things required of us in the building of God's kingdom.

Question Time

Question:

a. In Church History, Volume I, pages 77, 78, dealing with the organization of the church, Joseph Smith records, "We now proceeded to call out and ordain some others of the brethren to different offices of the priesthood. . . ." At the organization there were only six men present. Joseph and Oliver ordained each other to the Melchisedic Order. The question is, To what order of priesthood were the others ordained?

Ohio

b. Why were there only six present when the church was organized?

Iowa

Mrs. M. W.

Answer:

a. There are two viewpoints regarding the actual number present at the organization of the church on April 6, 1830. One viewpoint based upon the statement in Church History, Volume 1, page 76, is that those present "being six in number" constituted the total number of members present. The phrase, "being six in number," is taken from the history written by Joseph Smith, Jr., in Times and Seasons, Volume 3, page 944, 1842. However, the phrase "being six in number" is in parentheses. We are sure that other persons were present, as Joseph Smith in his history states, "Several persons who attended the above meeting got convinced of the truth . . . and were received into the church." He mentions the names of his own father and mother.

An interesting statement is made by David Whitmer in his pamphlet, An Address to All Believers. He states that there were about seventy members prior to April 6, 1830. We believe this estimate too high. The Evening and Morning Star published in Independence, 1833, page 167, states, "In October (1830) the number of disciples had increased to between seventy and eighty." From the published statements it would appear that more than six persons were present on that memorable day.

Section 17 of Doctrine and Covenants constitutes a series of revelations given to Joseph Smith prior to April 6, 1830. It outlines in detail the duties of the various offices of priesthood and would indicate that provision already existed for the ordination of men to these various offices.

In my opinion, what actually happened on April 6, 1830, was that the church was "organized and established agreeable to the laws of our country . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1) and legally became a church giving to its ministers the legal right to perform marriages. Some research into the matter reveals that the laws of New York State in 1829 involving incorporation of churches required that the number of trustees elected be no less than three and no more than nine. Evidently at that particular meeting setting up legally the organization of the church men were called to various orders of the priesthood in harmony with the instruction previously given in Section 17. There is no known record that gives the names of men called to priesthood office at this meeting. However, we must revise our assumption that only six persons were present at this meeting.

Question:

Recently someone said that Jacob 2: 39 of the Book of Mormon approves of plural marriages where it says, "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things." Please explain.

Answer:

Unfortunately there are frequent passages even in the Holy Scriptures which are obscure and indefinite as to their meaning, many of them probably due to difficulties of translation. Idioms, and some other expressions, and sometimes certain words, can seldom be translated from one language into another with clarity and exactness, insomuch that sincere attempts to translate such fail to give the original thought in its completeness.

The passage in the question seems to be of this nature, being somewhat obscure in meaning and difficult of interpretation; yet it leaves no possible indorsement of polygamy or kindred evils, especially in the light of the whole address of Jacob in which it appears, for speaking by the authority and command of God he condemns polygamy unequivocally throughout and demands that the one-wife rule be observed by his people. His whole intent is so clear and emphatic that no shadow of doubt can be entertained regarding it.

A rule of interpretation is—and it applies in law and other things as in Scripture—that where a point of principle is clearly established by several statements or enactments, no interpretation conflicting therewith based upon an indefinite and obscure expression is to be maintained. The rule applies in this case, for Jacob in this bold and remarkable utterance most definitely affirms the law of monogamy—one wife only—and condemns any variation of the rule which even hints at violation.

In Jacob's important address he expresses condemnation of polygamy and kindred evils more than twenty times, and that in the strongest terms; yet some men, having had the desire to set aside the law, lay hold upon a single obscure expression, and by mental twisting, attempt an interpretation which subverts and destroys the force of all else he had said. At a former time Peter had a similar question to answer, and wrote of certain men, who because Paul had written some passages that were hard to understand, they "wrested, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction" (II Peter 3: 16). Such attempted interpretations tend to open wide the door for the allowance of every evil which Jacob so strongly condemns.

Lehi, the founder of the nation, by divine direction, laid down the law of monogamy as the perpetual and universal law to the nation. Various other prophets throughout the thousand years of their history strove to maintain it. The Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants maintain it, and even the Law of Moses maintains it (Deuteronomy 17: 17).

God does not change either in his person or his law; neither can he approve what he has before condemned as being wicked and abominable in his sight.

Women Sponsor Banquet

SANTA PAULA, CALIFORNIA.—Each month individual members of the women's department sponsor a money-raising project for the church building fund. As soon as enough money has been secured for a down payment, land will be purchased near the city of Ventura, which will be more centrally located for the scattered members of Ventura County.

A cookbook, sponsored by Mrs. Hugh Kensler, 129 Arthur Avenue, Santa Paula, will soon be available to all interested. It will contain favorite recipes from many members of this and other localities, as well as a few other features. It will be plastic-bound and will sell for one dollar. Orders may be sent to Sister Kensler, and will be greatly appreciated.

Mrs. Howard Neuman and Mrs. Al Grossfield gave a Mother and Daughter Silver Tea at the hall on May 9, with mothers and daughters participating in the entertainment.

On May 27 Mrs. Robert Haven, with the assistance of her husband, put on a new and unusual type of entertainment by projecting their stereoscopic, or third dimensional, color slides of scenic areas of the western states, which added to the building fund through a freewill offering.

The Santa Paula women's group were hosts on the evening of April 4 to the Santa Barbara women, when a banquet and evening of fellowship was held. Both Easter and the birthday of the church were incentives for the decorating themes used. Tables were arranged in the hall to form a large, white cross, and the church colors were carried out in the flowers, candles, souvenir menus and other appointments. Mrs. Jack (Maxine) Evans, R.N., decorated the banquet hall. The planning and cooking of the menu was done by Mrs. Aubrey Merrill.

Proceeds from a box supper, held May 23, will be used to aid in sending children to the church youth camp this summer.

A special meeting of the Santa Paula Branch was held on June 5 with Apostle Gleazer as speaker.—Reported by MRS. ROBERT HAVEN

Active College Group Represents Church

AMES, IOWA.—A newly initiated visiting program has been undertaken in preparation for a missionary series here in the fall. The congregation has set Sunday evenings aside for this purpose, with both the priesthood and the members working together.

Also being conducted is a drive to raise the funds necessary to build the long needed branch building. Every project available is being used to raise this money. A successful box supper was held by the women's department on April 18 and $110.45 was raised in one evening with only twelve men contributing. Dale Paterno was the auctioneer. Another project has been to mail small bags to friends and acquaintances, asking them to put in as many cents as they are old and mail the bags back. Good results are accruing.

Another area being developed is the field of promoting the name of the church. Four of the twenty head advisors in the men's dormitory at Iowa State College are members of the priesthood. They are Lloyd Young, Bill Young, Jack Ross, and David Shipley, all graduates of the 1950 class of Graceland. Also three of our group received honors at Honors Day at I.S.C. These were Lloyd

The women of the branch have a bake sale the second Saturday of each month for the building fund.

Evangelist E. R. Carter visited the branch morning and evening of February 24. Brother Carter gave six patriarchal blessings while in Orlando.

Irene Crane and Warren Jennings were given a wedding shower by the branch at the Community House in Mt. Dora on May 17.

Final Report on Our Application for Radio License

previously pointed out, it is undisputed that one member of the Joint Council of the Reorganized Church is an alien. Accordingly, the application of the Reorganized Church must be denied on this ground alone. Moreover, the burden of establishing the United States citizenship of a substantial portion of its membership lies with every applicant "association" seeking a license for a broadcast station in accordance with Section 310 (a) (4). As previously shown, the Reorganized Church has not sustained its burden of proof in this respect. Thus, the application of the Reorganized Church must be denied for the additional reason that there has been an utter failure of proof with respect to the United States citizenship of a substantial number of its members. Since it has been determined that one member of applicant's governing board is an alien and that the applicant has not established the United States citizenship of a substantial number of its members, Section 310 (a) (4) provides the Commission with no opportunity for discretion and requires that the application of the Reorganized Church be denied.

Inasmuch as the Commission's regulations preclude our filing a new application before a period of one year, and inasmuch as our legal counsel was of the opinion that it would be inadvisable to pursue the matter further at this juncture, we see no other course than ceasing our efforts to procure a broadcasting license.

The whole matter of radio policy has been under consideration by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric for a number of years, and the General Conference of 1952 referred the matter again to the Joint Council in the following action:

General Conference is requested to authorize the Joint Council of First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric to take such action as it deems necessary and advisable when final decision of the Federal Communications Commission is received on the application of the church for a radio license; and General Conference is requested further to authorize the Presiding Bishopric to expend from the radio station operating budget the amounts of $7,500 in 1952 and a similar amount in 1953 to expand the present radio services, if after additional study by the Joint Council, such expansion is found to be advisable.

As the situation now stands, the matter of determining radio policy will come before the Joint Council at its next session.

It is interesting to note that many changes have taken place in the entire field of radio since our application was first filed in 1948, the most important development being the rapid expansion of television. Since we discontinued broadcasting on Station KMBC-KFRM on March 15, 1951, the Radio Department has developed other areas of service as indicated in the report of that department to the General Conference of 1952. It is anticipated that with the funds that have been set aside, and with budgetary appropriations, adequate radio facilities and program material will be available for the expansion and development of such policy as may be determined by the Joint Council.

How Shall We Feed Our Families?

By Blanche Neal Shipley

DURING THE PAST FEW YEARS Americans have been surprised at the number of young people who fail to pass physical examinations. Military training centers have released figures concerning such failures, and their significance is felt by all thinking citizens. America cannot be strong unless its citizens are strong.

Just how much of this physical unfitness is due to improper diet is still a matter of speculation, but we are sure that much of it can be traced to improper eating habits as well as to foods deficient in nutrient values.

Recently we took our children to a gardening meeting. We felt that it would be good for them to hear the all-important facts concerning vegetables from someone outside the family. Even adults are prone to be so accustomed to family wisdom that it takes a slight jolt from an expert to make them realize that truth is truth, whether it is from Mom's wise old head or from the congenial home demonstration agent. During the lecture, when such items as spinach or greens, sweet potatoes, and green beans were being discussed as to vitamin content, I gently nudged the girls for emphasis, and they nodded knowingly, for they had heard it often. Then we looked at their father who was perched up in front where we could easily see him, and he winked back to us, as much as to say, "I'm in for it now." On the road home they readily reminded him, "Mom has said that lots of times."

The next day we had greens for dinner, and into each plate went a small serving that had to be cleaned up before dessert. The girls watched their dad like paid little hawks, and when he ate every tiny morsel without a word of complaint, they were duty bound to do likewise, for they had talked too much!

FOR YEARS the subject of whole-wheat bread had been rather controversial in our household, and although my arguments of high nutrition were based on authoritative statements, my good husband flatly refused to eat it if he could find a crust of white bread anywhere. You can imagine what that did to the girls! Repeatedly they came out with, "I'm just like Dad. I just don't care for whole-wheat bread." Occasionally I managed to get a few slices down the three of them, but it was a difficult feat, believe me.

Then one day, as if by an act of Providence, our minister at church gave statistics and facts concerning the use of whole-wheat products in the prevention of heart diseases. It sank in deep. The next day, all unassisted from me, my good man called for whole-wheat bread at the local store. When he couldn't get it, he asked, "Why, don't you keep it all the time?" "Can't sell it," was the answer. "Can't sell it? Why, it's twice as good for you as white bread."

In a few days the proprietor of the store had his rack well stocked with brown bread, and has continued to do so.

"I thought you couldn't sell brown bread," giped my husband one day when he was trading. "What have you done to get up such a demand for it?"

The proprietor chuckled good-naturedly. "I just gave people the same line you gave me, and they buy it."

To me, the Scripture lesson in I Corinthians 3: 16, 17 has always been very significant. It reads: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

I WONDER how many of us defile our bodies by eating foods so low in food value that we might as well eat so much sawdust or by satisfying our appetites with those foods or drinks that lend absolutely nothing to our general good health. It is pitiful, in this age of accessible information, that scores of young mothers have such a misunderstanding of what and how to feed their families. Pop and soft drinks are substituted for milk and orange juice; candy bars are substituted for eggs or meat in the children's lunches; and in many instances such foods as carrots and spinach or other greens are as foreign to the growing child as it was foreign to the young mother or father in their youth. Ordinarily, the parent is only a grown-up child who has many of his childhood food habits governing his present eating habits. Until those parents acquire at least a minimum knowledge of food values and their importance to health, there is little hope of improving the eating habits of the children.

How many parents realize that in order for milk to be able to do its job of building bones and teeth properly it must have a co-worker, such as tomato juice, orange juice, or fish oils, with a good supply of vitamin C handy? Inasmuch as our bodies are unable to store up vitamin C, daily servings of these foods are required.

How many parents realize that the greener and darker the bean pod, or spinach leaf, or the kale leaf, or the mustard leaf, the higher it is in vitamin content? The same thing is true of the yellow vegetables—the deeper yellow the carrot, sweet potato, corn, pumpkin, or squash, the higher in food value it is. How many parents realize that tomatoes grown in the shade have less vitamin content than those grown in the sun? How many parents realize that foods grown on poor, worn-out soils are bound to be low in nutrient value, no matter what the outward appearance may be? This applies to meat, too. Animals grown on deficient grasses or grains will produce deficient meats.

PROPER FEEDING of our physical bodies is an important problem that deserves careful consideration. Our country has been acclaimed by the world as being rich in all the aspects that go into the development of a great nation, but if we are innocently—or ignorantly—allowing ourselves to become physically unfit through the foods we eat, or don't eat, then we must do something about it.

Home demonstration agents are doing a splendid service for their counties by holding nutrition and gardening meetings. So are the county nurses, the farm agents, and the schoolteachers. But it is alarming how many people willfully isolate themselves from all such meetings, as well as all such literature that could be theirs simply for the asking.

Last winter I was the only mother besides the teacher who attended the nutrition meeting in our local school district. Surely I am not the only one who needs such training! Equally significant was the gardening meeting, at which not more than twenty adults were present, and it was county-wide. An interesting, and also disturbing, fact about this meager attendance was that most people there were well over fifty years old. We all agree, of course, that knowledge of foods is important, no matter what the age, but when young parents have small children to feed, such knowledge becomes increasingly important, and when those parents do nothing to acquire such knowledge, it becomes dangerous and perhaps disastrous.

AS INDIVIDUAL FAMILIES we can resolve immediately to eat more wisely, to fertilize our fields and gardens more wisely, and to grow our own foods more wisely.

In order to eat more wisely, we will include in our daily diet just as often as we can the seven basic foods. These are

- (a) Leafy, green, and yellow vegetables
- (b) Citrus fruit, tomatoes, raw cabbage
- (c) Potatoes and other vegetables and fruits
- (d) Milk, cheese, ice cream
- (e) Meat, poultry, fish, eggs, dried peas, beans
- (f) Bread, flour, cereals (whole grain, enriched)
- (g) Butter and fortified margarine

If problems rise—and they will—we will use new recipes, vary the preparation of the foods, and add a touch of glamour occasionally to give zest to the meal. A white tablecloth, or perhaps a gaily colored one, a bouquet of flowers, and the best silverware lend admirably to the atmosphere when spirits are low and appetites sluggish. Little children like to help prepare meals. They should be allowed the privilege of arranging the table; the result will probably be a surprise, but it will be interesting. Dad may be sitting in the baby's place, and Mom may be elevated to Dad's place. The plates may all be of different shapes and designs, and the glasses may include some playhouse cups; but whatever the outcome, it will be fun, and the wee folks will eat better because of it. Once in a while, we let our girls eat in their playroom, which is really the back porch, with the promise that they will clean up their plates. Sometimes they are Mr. and Mrs., with Madelyn the Mister and Sharon the Missus. Other times they are two old ladies having lunch together, and they call each other "Marion," their favorite imaginary name. Then again they may be mother and daughter at a cafe. There is no end to their imaginations, and as they ramble along in conversation, they clean up vegetables and brown bread and milk and are ready for dessert.

The high light of every meal should be the asking of God's blessing upon the food, giving him thanks for his merciful goodness. A humble, straight-from-the-heart prayer enhances the natural beauty of any meal and gives it the dignity it deserves. "Ye are the temple of God." In short communion with our Creator we seek his blessing upon the food that our physical temples may be strengthened. How could anyone under such a spirit refuse to eat properly?

Yogurt Recipe

Following the publication of Mildred Nelson Smith's article on Yogurt, Mrs. J. L. Gray sent this recipe which some readers may be glad to have. As Sister Smith points out, yogurt is just another way of taking milk, but should not be depended upon as the only way in which milk is made available in the diet.

Bring the milk to a full boil, turn fire down, and let simmer for fifteen minutes; set off and cool till you can test it on your wrist, then add the yogurt starter (which you can get for a quarter at any kosher store. Put it in a quart jar and close it. Take a heavy vessel and fill it with water the same temperature as yogurt, then wrap the whole thing in a blanket and let it set for two hours or until the yogurt has congealed. Then put it in the refrigerator for six hours.

To make additional yogurt, save two tablespoons of the congealed yogurt to use as a starter. In that way you have to buy the yogurt starter only once.

The Flying Merkel

By John Thoman

TO BE BORN and reared in a small southern town in the first decade of the twentieth century was as special and wonderful a privilege as any boy could have known.

In my own small town, so well loved and well remembered, there is a special story that centers around my father. Each Father's Day it comes back to my mind with a host of other memories and brings my father very close to me again.

When I was thirteen years old I wanted (along with a few million other American boys of that time) a bicycle more than anything else in the world.

There were fewer ways of making money in those days, but what I got my hands on I saved. For some time I had been saving and by giving up penny candy and other luxuries I finally had a balance on hand of $8.05, an impressive sum, but not nearly enough for one of the new bikes pictured in the tattered Mead Cycle Catalogue I carried with me almost everywhere I went.

Then one warm Saturday afternoon something happened that made me realize my dad knew about my ambition and had known about it all along. Dad got home at noon, and after lunch we were sitting together on the front porch. He was skillfully carving something with his sharp penknife. He carved wooden puzzles mostly, but sometimes it was a miniature piece of furniture or a small figure of a man. Always it was wonderful to watch the wood take shape in his firm, capable hands.

HE BROUGHT UP THE SUBJECT of the bike himself. Without looking up from his whittling, he suddenly asked, "Son, how you coming with your bike money?" "Just fine, Dad," I said, and then went into the house and came out with the cigar box in which I kept my wealth along with arrowheads, "aggies," shells, and other treasures. We counted the money there together on the steps, and while I thought it made a brave showing, I was still conscious that it was not more than half enough. Also I knew that Dad couldn't possibly afford to add the other half.

After we had counted the money again, we were both silent for a few moments. Then Dad spoke choosing his words carefully, "Son, if you would care to trust my judgment, I might possibly be able to locate a second-hand bike and you wouldn't have to wait any longer. I might be able to buy it with what you have already."

My heart leaped, and I couldn't wait to have him leave on the errand. Slowly he put the money in his pocket and then, mopping his brow and putting on his hat, he started walking up the dusty road toward town.

THE NEXT TWO HOURS were about the longest I had ever had to wait. I walked about the yard at first, and, then, I just sat on the porch and waited.

I finally caught sight of him coming back down the road. He wasn't walking now. He was riding. He was riding my bike. But when he got close my heart sank. The bike was certainly not new. The paint job was chipped, and suddenly I felt a hot flush of resentment and anger. There was only one mudguard and it was a different color than the frame.

I stood like a statue beside the cement block at the end of our front walk. When Dad got closer I noticed something further to bring dismay and disappointment. Though Dad rode steadily enough the front wheel definitely wobbled. Suddenly I know why—the rim was warped! My fists clenched, and tears came to my eyes. I wiped them away hastily, for now he was only a few yards away. He rested the bike carefully there by the block and seemed to keep his head down a long time as he removed a rusty pant's clip that he had worn to keep his trouser cuffs out of the chain and spokes.

During those few seconds while I was given a blessed chance to compose myself, I knew that the bike just wasn't right. But I also knew in a surge of strange grown-up emotion that I loved Dad and wouldn't hurt him for all the shiny bikes in the world.

Then he straightened up and looked at me. His face was grave. I walked stiffly to the carriage block and grasped the worn handle bars, and every second I was conscious of his eyes upon my face.

I SAT on the tattered seat, and my feet just touched the ground—at least it wasn't too big or too small. Father took his eyes off my face long enough to mop his streaming brow with a clean white handkerchief from his hip pocket. Tentatively I put my foot on the pedal and then Dad spoke, a bit gruffly "Try her out, Son, see how she goes." He stepped back, and I pushed on the pedal. The wheel moved slowly out into the dusty road and mechanically I continued to pump the pedals.

I went around the block moving along faster and faster as I felt the wheel responding to my effort. I thought of all the catalogues that I had sent for, still resting there on my study desk. They were full of pictures of bikes—but not like this one! For months as I had saved my pennies, I had fed my dreams on all those catalogue pictures, and now—this was such a weary wheel to carry such a shining dream.

Now that no one could see, I bent my head over the rusty handle bars, and tears and sweat flowed freely dripping down upon the dust of the familiar roadway as I rode along. Soon I turned the last corner and saw Dad sitting on the block waiting. He wasn't even whit-ling. He just sat there. Maybe he was praying. All at once everything was all right. I pushed down on the pedals with all my might, the chain creaked a bit but the bike flew ahead. I stood up on the pedals and pumped with all my might. Dad looked up and saw me coming. He stood up as I came alongside and skidded the tires to show how good the brakes were. We both commented on it, and again I saw my Dad's rare smile.

"Look at the name," Dad said, calling attention to the tarnished plate. "It's a Flying Merkel, a good name I think."

"Dad," I said impulsively, as we both sat down on the grass and admired the bike which leaned against the block, "now that I've got a bike I can do lots more things than I did before—messenger boy or Saturday Evening Post route. What would you like to be if you could be anything you wanted, Dad?"

Just then we both looked up to see Mother at the front door calling us to supper. We rose together and moved up the walk side by side.

"What would you be if you could be anything you wanted?" I asked again.

As I glanced sideways at Dad's face, he was suddenly very grave again.

"Son," he said, "I'd rather be a good dad than anything I know of."

Dreams

Campustown has a common quality wherever you may find it, all over America. It is a city of dreams.

The dreams may be the gossamer of the mind, but the people are real, very real, young, and full of life.

Here they are studying, listening, and learning; and all the while they are dreaming, working out the mysterious and intricate pattern of the future. Here are the engineers, the scientists, the craftsmen, the teachers, the managers, the musicians and artists of the future. In one building you can hear them singing. In another, white-smocked, they bend over charts and test tubes. In the morning they carry heavy loads of books to class. In the afternoon they haunt the libraries or take a brief turn at sports. On warm evenings they go walking hand in hand, smiling into each other's eyes, looking pleasant and wonderful to the world, as the young should. They are enchanted by their dreams of future businesses and homes, careers, travels, achievements, and recognition.

Ah, you say, but so many dreams do not come true. In youth we imagine ourselves to be something special and wonderful. But as years go by we discover that we measure up only to God's great averages, and that we are one with all humanity.

Without dreams, however, nothing is ever accomplished. Without dreams, you may just as well give up, get a job dishwashing or pushing a broom. Without dreams, nothing wonderful will ever happen to you. We may fall short of our dreams, but we lift ourselves closer to heaven on their powerful wings.

Campustown is a charming place to be, just because it is a city of dreams. You can easily become infected with the atmosphere of hope, the stimulating draught of imagination, the determination to do something important.

Of course, you really don't have to come to Campustown to dream—but it helps. You can dream where you are, and work for your dreams. It will be harder, but you can do it. You can have your own Campustown wherever you live; you can be a learner all the rest of your life; you can make your own university, where you are a student body of one, and the faculty, too! You can arrange your own curriculum, select your bibliography, and write your own examinations.

* IN DISPRAISE OF BEANS

When David's men were tired and hungry in the wilderness of Mahanaim, Barzillai the Gileadite brought them, among other foods and supplies, a quantity of beans. Probably long before that time, and ever since, somebody has been eating them somewhere.

We were reminded of this recently at a bus station restaurant, where bowls of bean soup were served, as innocent of flavor and as devoid of charm as any food in the world. The beans were simply immersed and boiled, with nothing added. No wonder Chaucer exclaimed, more than five hundred years ago, in disdain, "Nat worth a bene!"

With just the right treatment, and all the proper accompaniments, there is nothing more delectable, more drool-whetting, or more richly satisfying than those same beans. The accompaniments wouldn't be very good food without the beans as a base. The beans alone are the ultimate in base fare. But together they have made picnics and Saturday night suppers memorable, and have won the hearts of millions. . . . We must keep off the subject of what the soy bean has done for, and to, humanity.

Perhaps there is something to think about. Some of us are what we are—plain, honest, and without charm or personal flavor. We have no accompaniments whatever. And others are all accompaniment, with no basic value. Every useful machine, in these days, is made beautiful (or at least relieved of its ugliness) by the refinement of a streamlined exterior. . . . How about our personalities? Are we plain beans?

* NOTE FOR YOUR PURCHASER

Nothing is a bargain unless you need it.

* TRAINING

There is a nice grass lot in our neighborhood. Each evening a man takes a young dog out there to train him to be a pointer, or a retriever, or a bird dog, or something. The dog doesn't know what it is, and neither do I. And sometimes I wonder if the man does.

The procedure is this: The man tells the dog to do something. The dog doesn't understand English, wags his tail uncertainly, and cringes. He knows what is coming. Then the man becomes angry and whips him. The dog howls. Then the man tries kindness. The dog distrusts this, because he can't understand this off-and-on beating and petting, swear words and endearments, brutality and kindness. I find it hard to understand. . . .

It is the man's dog, and I have no right to interfere. But my sympathies are all with the dog. . . . In my cowboy days I used to have a bull whip that I wish I could have now. I would like to give that man a few vigorous flicks around the legs just to show him how it feels to a dog. . . . I wonder what the dog would do if he ever learned to use the whip? This little dog seems to want nothing so much as love and friendship. Only a man could think up a deal like that. . . . Now let some bland imbecile write and tell me that it isn't cruel to the dog, that a dog cannot feel pain!

A Good Word for Jesus

"He helped the sick and gave the people hope."

—Carl Sandburg

A POPULAR EVANGELIST was touring the country, rabble-rousing vast crowds of people to extreme emotional excitement. He shouted louder than any other preacher of his time. He pounded the pulpit like a politician. Perspiring, he tore off his coat, tie, and collar (detachable in those days), and he used the language of the street. He play-acted a fight with the devil. He made the front pages of the newspapers. He was a good actor.

In the course of his itinerary he came at length to the "wicked city" of Chicago, where his bouts with Satan reached new heights of sound and fury. In the audience one night a poet sat, and he compared the speaker with the Lord Jesus he was supposed to represent. The contrast was so revolting to his mind that he went home and wrote an amazing poem entitled, "To a Contemporary Bunkshooter." What he said about the preacher sounds too angry even today, when our ears have been dulled by political billingsgate. But the poet also had something good to say for Jesus:

He helped the sick and gave the people hope. He never came near clean people or dirty people but they felt cleaner because he came along. . . . This Jesus was good to look at, smelled good, listened good. He threw out something fresh and beautiful from the skin of his body and the touch of his hands wherever he passed along.

In all literature there are few more humble or sincere tributes than those words from the pen of Carl Sandburg. They were like the words of Luke: "Jesus . . . went about doing good."

THIS STORY is remembered from many years ago, and it is impossible now to lay hands on it to verify details. J. M. Barrie's story,

The Little Minister, was about a young Scot who had been sent to the seminary in Edinburgh at tremendous sacrifice by his poor mother. He was graduated eventually and came home to preach his first sermon at the little kirk where he had attended as a boy. He wanted to pour all his offering into it—all that he had learned and a lot more. While he was fretting and worrying, his mother stopped him and said, "Say a good word for Jesus, Laddie, and it will be all right."

That was the essence, the main thing. Sometimes we become involved in a lot of precious fine-spun thinking that leads nowhere and helps nobody, all the while forgetting our main task, to "say a good word for Jesus."

MOST OF US have had an opportunity, at some time in our lives, to meet one great and good person. In him or her we find all the graces we most admire, and never hope to attain—the dignity, honor, wisdom, and intelligence that represent the best we could possibly imagine. Our attitude toward such a person is a combination of love and awe, respect and devotion. There is a degree of worship in us for those qualities which are most like Christ.

Surely Carl Sandburg, with a poet's insight and understanding, with his gift for finding the right words to express them, has described the kind of person Jesus was, and his effect upon people. John meant the same thing when he said, "He . . . dwelt among us . . . full of grace and truth."

SOME WEEKS ago one of God's saints passed to her reward. She was full of years and held in honor. If there is really such a thing as saintliness in this world, she had it. She loved the Lord, and she loved the people. With all her strength and with all her heart she had served both of them.

After her death, a daughter-in-law was straightening up the room. Under the glass on the dresser top she found a number of little clippings, quotations of Scripture, and other inspirational things. As she read them, it occurred to her that here was a key to the life of the departed woman. She gave a handful of them to Brother Glaude Smith, pastor of Stone Church, who built around them a beautiful memorial sermon. Now the younger woman plans to make a scrapbook of many such things the mother had collected, so that the family can read them. It will be a spiritual legacy for them.

Sister Jennie Budd spoke a good word for Jesus all her long life.

THERE ARE many testimonies in the world today. There are millions bearing the testimony of materialism or communism, chanting the names of persons as if they were gods. There are many voices in the world; some of them are false, and some are true.

More than ever before, we need a good word for Jesus. Even as in ancient time, he still goes about doing good through the hands of those who love him. Today, too, he helps the sick and gives the people hope. While war, greed, and dishonesty chant a creed of despair, there is still this light—an inextinguishable beacon to guide us on our way.

John said, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." That is still true.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Changes in the Graceland College Board have now been completed in harmony with the actions of the recent General Conference. Membership on the board is as follows:

Dr. Lawrence O. Brockway	Term expires 1954
Bishop A. Neal Deaver	Term expires 1954
Mrs. Blanche Mesley	Term expires 1954
Elder Verne L. Deskin	Term expires 1956
Elder Franklin L. Parsons	Term expires 1956
Dr. Addison M. Brown	Term expires 1958
Elder D. Ronald Carmichael	Term expires 1958
Elder L. F. P. Curry	Term expires 1958
Bishop Earl T. Higdon	Term expires 1958

In view of the resignation of Dr. F. M. McDowell as Chairman of the Board, Bishop Earl T. Higdon was selected for this important responsibility. Dr. Brockway continues as Vice-Chairman of the Board, and Brother Deskin as Secretary.

Graceland has just concluded a successful year, and we look forward with confidence to continuance of her splendid record.

From Elder Samuel Zonker, president of West Virginia District:

Nearly a year ago Brothers Melcher and Rodgers and I contacted a member who had been somewhat isolated for years—Brother Laco Wilson. He and his family received us very well and invited us to return. We have gone regularly each week to tell our story, and recently Brother Wilson was ordained a priest. He is making splendid progress, and on May 1 he baptized his wife and daughter Shirley.

A few months ago Bishop Kohlman contacted us about some folks named Hickman who live at Smith's Ferry, Pennsylvania. Again Brother Rodgers and I went. We have been meeting with these folks each week, with fine assistance from Brother Allen, pastor of Follansbee Branch; Brother John Treiber, pastor of Wellsburg Branch; and Brother Laco Wilson. During our visits, others came to the services. On May 1, at the same service the Wilsons were baptized, we also baptized Sister Hickman (her husband was already a member), their son Wade, George Hickman and his wife, and James Hickman.

In our confirmation service there was a great degree of the Spirit. Some fine promises are assured this group if the people will be faithful. We plan to continue meeting with them until such time as they are able to carry on alone.

It seems there are more opportunities to minister than we can ever hope to meet. I am encouraging our pastors through visiting and am inviting our young men and women to find their places in this great movement.

From Seventy Eugene Theys in Germany:

Brother Zonker and I have just completed a trip through the German Mission, and we are happy to report that our work in that mission moves steadily forward.

You will be glad to know that we are making excellent progress on the Hanner mission house. At present the building is up with the roof on and guttering finished. Floors, windows, heating, and wiring are also completed. By the time you get this letter the stairs will

The Mission of Christ's Church

By Leonard Lea

One of a series of missionary sermons given by various speakers for the Nashua, Missouri, congregation, under the direction of Pastor David France.

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Luke 4: 18, 19.

How Jesus Proclaimed His Mission

One of the great dramatic events in the life of Jesus was the proclamation of his mission. In preparing for it, he went to the River Jordan where he was baptized by John, afterward receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit. Filled with that Spirit, he went on a retreat into the wilderness for a period of forty days. During that time he received the ministry of angels and, as he considered what occupations and interests were to have the dominant emphasis in his life, he withstood the temptations of the evil power. There he declared his loyalty to God and determined what his service should be. There he accepted the mission that God had prepared for him. And in that same Spirit he returned to his home country and the city of his childhood to begin his work.

Jesus was a person of learning and maturity of mind. Even as a youth he had carried on a discussion with the doctors in the temple at Jerusalem. Now, as a man, he was able to stand in his place in the synagogue at Nazareth and read the difficult language of the Scriptures.

The "minister" of the synagogue had given him the scroll of the Prophet Isaiah from which to select his reading, and he chose the beginning of what is the sixty-first chapter in our Bible.

Upon that Scripture he based the proclamation of his mission. He declared with the greatest solemnity, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." What a privilege it would have been to be present in that congregation. Yet it is doubtful if any person there, except Jesus, understood the significance of what he said.

Let us overlook for the time the angry response of the congregation to his words and consider the import of the announcement. It may help us to read the proclamation again, this time in the modern language of the Goodspeed Version:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, for he has consecrated me to preach the good news to the poor, he has sent me to announce to the prisoners their release and to the blind the recovery of their sight, to proclaim the year of the Lord's favor.

First of all, the mission of Jesus was a preaching mission. He was to teach a new way of life to the people. Literally and figuratively, he was to bring good news to the poor in spirit, offer freedom to the prisoners of sin and shame, turn on the light of truth and intelligence in the souls of those who had wandered in darkness, and proclaim to all men the love and favor of God.

The Mission of the Church

The mission of Jesus was the mission of the church. Is there anyone who would deny that statement? He said, "I will build my church." Would not its mission be identical with his?

We would not understand that the quotation from Isaiah would fully define the mission of Jesus, nor outline its scope and range. However, the broad implications of that mission are there. It was a mission of mercy. Its objectives aimed at the needs of individuals as well as the problems of society. It was social in character, spiritual in content. Its broad background was the love of God for his children.

Undoubtedly Jesus had a purpose in selecting that particular chapter for the announcement of his mission. There was joyousness and hope in it. Notice the words that follow it: "To give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

This was the mission of Jesus. This is the mission of his church. It is the work that we, under the guidance of our Heavenly Father, are to do.

God's Love for All the World

The gospel represents a great gift of love to the world. Since God loved, he would give; and he would give the very best and greatest gift he had to offer:

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

This is the great "Golden Text" of the New Testament. It is the bedrock upon which the whole Christian faith is built. It is not a mere broadcast aimed at everybody in general and missing the individual. Its "whosoever" is singular and personal: it means you, and it means me. The very least one of us has a chance to qualify.

Consider the promise of immortality. The world assumes, as a result of observing purely physical forms, that life ends in death. It happens to vegetation, trees, animals, and birds. It happens to men. When a candle burns down to its end, when the charred wick falls upon the last small bit of melted wax and is extinguished, the flame goes out and that is the end. People who do not know God assume that life is like that too.

But God himself exists independent of physical form as we know it here on earth. He is a Spirit and a power more lasting than any material thing. And he assures us that there is something else in us too—something that does not die with the body, something that came from him in the beginning and that will return to him at the end.

The mission of the church, like the mission of Christ, is concerned with the eternal part of us.

The Sons of God

One of the most precious and beautiful of all the promises in the Scriptures is the one that informs us of what we may become.

As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.—John 1:12.

The church is the instrument of the gospel—the servant of God—to bring to people that spiritual, intellectual, social, and cultural development which will make them fit to be the sons and daughters of God. The growth of soul that is necessary to this relationship is something that we cannot accomplish by ourselves. It is true that we can do something, but not as completely nor as well. We need the help of others who are engaged in the same work.

Education needs the school. Medicine needs the hospital. Science must have the laboratory. Literature needs the printing press. Commerce must have its factories and shops. Even so, religion needs the church. The church is the school in which we train to be sons and daughters of God. It is the spiritual hospital in which the healing of souls takes place.

How great is the universe where the principles of good and evil, light and darkness, love and hate, are in eternal opposition to each other! In the presence of such vast powers, what chance would one weak soul have to survive? If we would escape hell, we must accept the protection of heaven. Only by belonging to the kingdom of God can we be saved.

The Gift of Life

God's gift is life. Evil brings death. We can choose one or the other. There is nothing in between. There is no other choice. If we do not choose God, evil will take us. Jesus came to give us life.

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10:10.

"The abundant life" is a great phrase. It was once appropriated as a political slogan, but that will be forgotten. The spiritual meaning of it is everlasting. The Psalmist wrote, "My cup runneth over." And the Prophet Malachi said, "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there will not be room to receive it."

The Heavenly Father is not parsimonious. Jesus will not ration us. There is plenty for all. The Prodigal Son, returning to his Father's home, said, "How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger." Spiritually hungering and thirsting, if we return to our Heavenly Father, we shall find that he too has enough and to spare for us.

This is the abundant life. The church provides the place, the people, and the opportunity where the abundant life is lived.

The Law of Love

We could not comprehend the mission of the church if we were to fail to take account of the great thought that is back of it: the Law of Love.

The circumstances of the proclamation of the Law of Love are rather striking. The Sadducees had come intending to confuse Jesus, but he silenced their questions and put them to flight. Then the Pharisees came together to see what they could do. One of them, a lawyer, shrewdly chose a question of law with which to break his calm and poise, hoping to start trouble. An argument, sometimes even a fight, could be provoked with a question about the law.

"Master," he said, with pretended respect, "which is the great commandment of the law?" Jesus knew the law and could answer. There was one principle, and it had two objects. He drew the first part of his answer from Deuteronomy 6:5, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . ." For the second part he quoted Leviticus 19:18, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The Law of Love is the great motivating power of the gospel. It is the guiding principle of the church. It is at the heart of the mission of the church.

The spirit of hate is abroad in the world. International relations are rife with it. Peoples, races, and nationalities hate each other. Everywhere hate leads to destruction and death. But hate cannot be cured by more hate. It can only destroy. It can give no peace except that of annihilation, as in the tragic end of the Jaredites.

The mission of the church is to win everybody, from the lone individual who comes to church to worship, to the whole wide world. We would win them to the kingdom of God, to the rule of the Law of Love.

We know that his world will never be anything more than a colony of hell as long as hate rules in the hearts of men. We can be saved, and we can make this world the kingdom of God by obedience to the Law of Love. The mission of the church calls for love between husbands and wives, parents and children, neighbors and friends, cities, states, peoples, and nations in all the world.

The church invites you to share in its fellowship. It offers you a shelter in a stormy sea of life. It is a safe harbor in the midst of spiritual danger. Here you can find the love of God. Here you can find the love of your fellow men. Christ issues the call, "Come unto me."

Will you come?

A Young Man Preaches in His Home Town

By Elbert A. Smith

THERE WAS SOME SPECULATION in Nazareth. In a small town everyone knows everyone and nobody's business is exclusively his own. It was weeks since the Carpenter's Son had gone away so suddenly. He had just laid his tools down, told his folks good-by and walked away over the hills into the wilderness. He went with his head bowed down as though some problem troubled him. He did not seem to see or hear friends who stopped to greet him as he left the little town. That was strange! He always was so friendly, and everyone liked him.

That is, almost everyone liked him. Some of the rabbis and elders in Israel had reservations. They never were able to figure him out. At times he seemed to know more than they did, which was not right. Some of the young people went to him with their problems instead of to them. Why should that be? Besides he had a disconcerting way of asking unexpected questions.

Some of the elders remembered that strange visit the Carpenter's Son had made to the temple in Jerusalem when he was twelve years old. He had surprised and embarrassed the learned doctors of the law by his questions and answers. And he had given such a strange answer to his parents: "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" What did he mean by that? His father was a carpenter—was that all the lad meant?

As a matter of fact the Carpenter's Son, Jesus, had been about his Father's business from that day on—some eighteen years. His business had been one of preparation. He had read the Scriptures diligently, studied, prayed, and thought. He had worked with his hands, with timbers and tools. He knew what it was to deal with working people. Later he could say, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden . . ." and say it understandingly. There were callouses on his hands—not on his heart.

He had talked with all kinds of people: fishermen from the Sea of Galilee and even from the Mediterranean, farmers, vine dressers from the hills, and shepherds from the valleys, some of whom remembered a strange incident in Bethlehem—a star, a song at night, three wise men. He had talked with Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, scribes, publicans, merchants, and adventurers.

He had walked the hills and the seashore. He had seen the lilies of the valley arrayed in all their glory—rivaling the raiment of Solomon. He had observed the birds nesting, the foxes in their holes. He had seen the sower going forth to sow. He had seen the prodigal son go away into a far country and return broke, ragged, and repentant. He had seen the father forgive.

The Carpenter's Son had stored his mind with many things and had thought about them. He had come to understand men and their motives, their dreams and their temptations, their joys and their sorrows. Now he had to correlate everything in his mind and tie it up to his Father's business. He had to make a decision—a very great decision.

The Young Man Comes Home

How much time passed we do not know. There is no clear-cut chronology of his activities at that time. It is plain, though, that his problems had been thought through and his decisions made. He had been baptized of John in the River Jordan. He had gone into the wilderness, the King James' Version of the Bible says, "to be tempted of the Devil." The Inspired Version says "to be with God." Satan came uninvited and tempted him. The Carpenter's Son had fought a real fight, as most young men must do, and had won a great victory.

Already he had begun his ministry. Now he was coming back to his home town of Nazareth. He walked with his head high—as Luke wrote, "filled with the Holy Ghost." Now he greeted all who met him. People liked him—that is, most of them did. Among these folks as a boy and young man he had "grown in grace and favor with God and man." But people felt a difference. This young man walked with a purpose. It was in his stride—in the way he carried himself—in the look in his eye.

His mother noticed the change more than others did—a sort of inner illumination. A few of the elders in Israel who met him felt the change too. They had never figured him out; now he seemed more unfathomable to them, and so the more to be feared and watched.

The town folks greeted him gladly, especially the young people. They liked and trusted him. He seemed to understand. They could talk with him, could confide in him, and he would never betray their confidences. Somehow he always challenged them. He seemed to light a candle in the lives of his friends. It was good to have him home again.

On the Sabbath Day

It was the Sabbath and there was a stirring in Nazareth. There always was a stirring in Nazareth on the Sabbath as the people took their way to the synagogue. The synagogue was their church, their school, their social center, the heart of their religious and political life.

The Apostle Luke was a physician, but he had a sort of inspired genius for writing historical narratives. Luke, more than any other writer, gives us glimpses at the life of Jesus as a boy and young man, including his visit to the temple.

In his story of this particular Sabbath in Nazareth Luke inserted an illuminating statement: "Jesus went to the synagogue on the Sabbath Day as was his custom." We would say in our vernacular, "Jesus went to church on the Sabbath, as was his habit."

Some who profess to be followers of Christ say they do not need to go to church. They can live their religion just as well on the golf course or at the ball game. How so when Jesus felt both the need and the responsibility to go to church habitually?

The synagogue was not unlike some of our smaller churches. There was a single rectangular assembly room. At the far end was a raised platform on which stood the chest containing books of the law—not unlike a present-day pulpit. The speaker or preacher stood up to read the law and sat down to expound it. There was an aisle in the center of the church; women sat on one side of it and men on the other. In modern churches that would be embarrassing. A few men scattered among so many women do not seem so few as they would if they were seated by themselves.

For some reason that we may only surmise, on this Sabbath day Jesus was invited to read the law and make comment. Probably the people expected to hear from him. There were rumors. There always are rumors in small towns—and large cities. Perhaps the ruler or rulers of the synagogue thought it diplomatic to invite the Carpenter's Son to occupy the pulpit. Or they may have been just plain curious.

So Jesus stood up and read from Isaiah:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Luke 4: 18, 19.

Having read he sat down and looked at his audience a long moment. Then he said, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." We can scarcely visualize the effect of that declaration on those people. Clearly he was declaring himself a prophet—perhaps they surmised declaring himself the Messiah. In that they were getting at the truth, and it shocked them. The Jews, like modern Christians, revered the prophets—the dead ones. Living ones they persecuted. “Which of the prophets have ye not slain?” Now here was this young man assuming the prophetic role. The thought again ran through most minds, “Is not this the Son of the carpenter? What blasphemy is this we hear?”

Anger began at the top level, among the elders, but it spread. The mob spirit is like fire in dry prairie grass. It grows of its own heat and runs wild. As Jesus continued his discourse, the fire spread, and when he declared, “Verily I say unto you, no prophet is accepted in his own country,” the congregation became a mob.

Probably the younger people would have received him, but they were confused and overborne. Old friends of the Carpenter’s Son were now become his enemies. Religious bigotry can do that in short order. They would even kill him. Such a thing must not be done in a sanctuary, so they dragged him forth to cast him down a steep cliff at the edge of the city. But the heat and confusion and clamor of the mob defeated its own purpose, and in that confusion the Carpenter’s Son slipped away and was gone before they knew it. His time was not yet.

He turned his face toward Capernaum and the blue waters of the Lake of Galilee. He had friends in Capernaum. Already he had been heard there, and they had not rejected him—not yet. But he walked again with his head down in thought. He could say, “These are the wounds I received in the house of my friends. I came unto my own, and my own received me not.” Soon he lifted his head and squared his shoulders and looked up to the hills “from whence cometh our deliverance.”

It is no small thing when the neighbors and friends a man has known from childhood turn sour and begin to hate him, even try to kill him. But in the heart of this man there was no hatred or thought of revenge. He was to preach forgiveness, and he could not do that and refuse to forgive. It was not just a matter of policy. It was a matter of habit both of heart and mind to forgive. He put that into a memorable prayer later—a prayer that men yet repeat more than they do any prayer written by the divines and doctors of the law.

This thing that had happened did not turn him from his ministry or lessen his love for humanity. He had come because God so loved the world. If this man could forgive and go on after that which had happened to him in Nazareth that Sabbath day—shall we ever find ourselves where we can do less?

They Saw a Light and Heard a Voice

By Gomer R. Wells

Nearly two thousand years ago, on the road to Damascus, the Apostle Paul testified he saw a heavenly light and heard a voice. We believe his testimony, because at that time there was an urgent need for it:

At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? . . . And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. But rise, and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee. —Acts 26: 13-16.

In these latter days, nearly two thousand years later, in the state of New York, a young man, Joseph Smith, arose from his Bible reading to pray earnestly at which time he testifies he saw a heavenly light and heard a heavenly voice. He says:

I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun; which descended gradually until it fell upon me. . . . When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said (pointing to the other), “This is my beloved Son, hear him.”—Church History, Volume 1, page 9.

The foregoing spiritual experience, with the message that followed, deserves serious consideration for the following reasons:

The same Jesus who spoke to Saul on the Damascus road, not long after spoke also to his servant John on the lonely isle of Patmos. There, in a symbol, he revealed to John that after his day (“hereafter”) his church (the woman) would be driven into the “wilderness” (a condition of barrenness—Revelation 4: 1; 12: 1-6) for as long as 1,260 prophetic days or years. Only Christ and God could bring his church out of the wilderness by using angelic administration (Revelation 14: 5, 6).

In the last four hundred years, many religious leaders (Protestants), recognizing there was a primitive apostasy, have organized churches. None were identical to the New Testament church in organization, teaching, spiritual gifts or other blessings. Side by side, another church affirms that the primitive church continued down the ages without interruption, and that there was no period of barrenness—no apostasy. If that were true, Jesus gave to his servant John a false revelation! And if that is so, there can be no place now for any Protestant church, no place for any other church.

Some people try to believe this is a dead issue, but it cannot be dead while the Scriptures live. They assure us the revelation to John is true (read Revelation 21: 5). Since the church was really driven into the “wilderness” (symbolical of spiritual barrenness) during the “dark ages,” there certainly is now a need for a divine restoration of the New Testament church—for the Lord to bring his church out of the wilderness. Truly there is a need for this spiritual experience of the man who read his Bible and went out to pray. He saw a heavenly light and heard the voice of instruction. We ought to give it prayerful consideration.

The period between the Old and the New Testament is known as the four hundred silent years. Josephus, the Jewish historian, says that during this period “The Urim and Thummim ceased to shine”—no revelation came from heaven. Following these New Testament times, there was another period in which the church was barren and could not “bring forth sons unto glory”—1,260 silent years.

We bring you now the good news that God has broken the silence. It is a “marvelous work and a wonder” (Isaiah 29: 7-24).

It was shown to John that the bride, the Lamb’s wife (his church) would finally make herself ready (Revelation 19: 6-9), also that a people called out of Babylon (confusion) will constitute the bride (Revelation 18: 1-5). The word “church” means a people called out.

You hear glad tidings of great joy—the gospel of Restoration.

EDITOR’S NOTE: In sending us this article Brother Wells, veteran Auditorium guide, states that this is basically the talk he gives to tourists who visit the Auditorium. When they become interested enough to ask, “How did this church start?” he usually hands them the pamphlet, Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story, and then follows with this talk which should prepare them for reading the tract.

The Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith

By William M. Daniels

SOON THE MOBBERS made their appearance. They advanced in single file along the fence, as they had been instructed. When they had gained about half the distance of the fence, the signal guns were fired. Both parties made a simultaneous rush, and soon the jail was surrounded. They had blacked themselves with wet powder while they were in the woods, and most of them had on blue hunting shirts with a fringe around the edge.

The Carthage Greys advanced within eight rods of the jail, where they halted in plain view of the whole transaction until the deed was executed. They occupied a place in an eastern direction from the jail. When they stopped, their commander, Captain Smith, marched in front of the mob. . . .

Colonel Williams shouted out, "Rush in! There is no danger, boys—all is right!"

A sham encounter ensued between them and the guards. They clinched each other, and the mobbers threw some of them upon the ground. A few guns were fired in the air. In this laughable affair, more was done by grotesque gestures, rough menaces, and loud swearing, than in any other way.

A rush was made in the door at the south part of the building. This let them into a hall, or entry, from which they ascended a flight of stairs, at the head of which, turning to the right, they reached the door that lead into the prisoners' room. . . .

(Four men were in the room: Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, John Taylor, and Willard Richards—members of the twelve.)

HYRUM STOOD near the center of the room, in front of the door. The mob fired two balls through the panel of the door, one of which entered Hyrum Smith's head at the left side of his nose. He fell upon his back, with his head one or two feet from the northeast corner of the room, exclaiming, as he fell, "I am a dead man!" In all, four balls entered his body. One ball (it must have been fired through the window, from the outside) passed through his body with such force—entering his back—that it completely broke to pieces a watch which he wore in his vest pocket.

His death was sudden and apparently without pain.

A shower of balls poured through all parts of the rooms, many of which lodged in the ceiling just above the head of the fallen man.

Elder Taylor took a position beside the door, with Elder Richards a little at his right, and parried off the muskets with a walking stick, as they were firing.

While this scene was transpiring, Joseph Smith reached his pistol through the door, which was pushed a little ajar, and fired three barrels; the rest misfired. He wounded three of them—two mortally. . . .

Previous to leaving Nauvoo, Joseph urged Hyrum to remain, knowing the great support he would be to the church, in the event of his being taken away. To this Hyrum firmly replied: "Joseph, if you die, let me die with you. Let us fall together!"

Elder Taylor continued parrying their guns . . . a ball from within struck him on the left thigh . . . a ball from without struck his watch . . . which threw him back into the room. He was hit by two more balls . . . and rolled under the bed and was struck by one ball which tore the flesh of his left hip . . . throwing large quantities of blood upon the wall and floor. . . .

Elder Richards was contending with the assailants, at the door, when [President] Smith, seeing there was no safety in the room, and probably thinking it might save the lives of the others if he could escape from the room, turned calmly from the door, dropped his pistol upon the floor, saying, "There, defend yourselves as well as you can." He sprang into the window; but just as he was preparing to descend, he saw such an array of bayonets below that he caught by the window casing; where he hung by his hands and feet, with his head to the north, feet to the south, and his body swinging downwards. He hung in that position three or four minutes, during which time he exclaimed two or three times, "O Lord, my God!" and fell to the ground. While he was hanging in that situation, Colonel Williams holloed, "Shoot him! . . ." However, none fired at him. He seemed to fall easy. He struck partly on his right shoulder and back, his neck and head reaching the ground a little before his feet. He rolled instantly on his face. From this position he was taken by a young man. . . . He set President Smith against the south side of the well curb, that was situated a few feet from the jail. . . .

When President Smith had been set against the curb, and began to recover, Colonel Williams ordered four men to shoot him. Accordingly, four men took an eastern direction, about eight feet from the curb, Colonel Williams standing partly at their rear, and made ready to execute the order. While they were making preparations, and the muskets were raised to their faces, President Smith's eyes rested upon them with a calm and quiet resignation. . . .

The fire was simultaneous. A slight cringe of the body was all the indication of pain when the balls struck him. He fell upon his face. One ball then entered the back part of his body. . . .

His death was instant and tranquil. He betrayed no appearance of pain, and there was no distortion of his features.

The ruffian . . . who set him against the well curb now gathered a bowie knife for the purpose of severing his head from his body. He raised the knife and was in the attitude of striking, when a light, sudden and powerful, burst from the heavens. . . . The arm of the ruffian that held the knife fell powerless; the muskets of the four who fired fell to the ground, and they all stood like marble statues, not having the power to move a single limb of their bodies.

By this time most of the men had fled in great disorder. I never saw so frightened a set of men before. . . .

The storm had passed away. The cowardly demons had fled, and I stood a spectator, gazing on the scene. There lay Joseph Smith, the martyred leader of thousands who revered him.—From an eyewitness account by William M. Daniels, published as a pamphlet in Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1845 by John Taylor. Reprinted in Journal of History, October, 1918, pages 398-426.

Power to Give

A Journey With an Idea

PART III

By L. S. Wight

IN THE SPIRIT of Denver's warm welcome and the meeting of so many old friends there, I began to recall past experiences of mine and of others in the total plan of the Restoration Movement.

With the light he received, Joseph Smith was able to infuse the same kind of thinking into many others who in turn were able to do their share in the Zion's Movement. The light which came to the world at that time was expressed in the development of a flood of new inventions which changed the standards of living. But this development came only because some men were willing to use their "power to give" in order that they could find the secrets which were being withheld from a darkened world. They gave, and the world was blessed because of it.

Marietta Walker's Gift

When we refer to those who have developed their "power to give" it is not necessary to think only of a few leaders. In the ranks there are many people who have put this principle into action in their lives to make possible the growth of the church today. For example, as I meet Gracelanders almost wherever I go I think of the time when Graceland was no more than a dream. One of my first memories after coming to this country is that someone took me by the hand and led me to the little gathering on the Hill to see the cornerstone of Graceland laid. Maybe I should say the cornerstone of "the Ad Building," but to me it was the cornerstone of Graceland. If Marietta Walker had not had the courage and determination to utilize her power to give we probably would not have Graceland today. As a schoolteacher she was concerned because the young people in the struggling Reorganization Movement had no place to go above public education where the principles of the gospel and Zion-building would be given full chance for expression. A college graduate herself, she believed that church young people should have college privileges under such an environment.

As she went about her farm work she must have prayed constantly that in some way she could be shown what to do to solve that problem. She had land, but it was "out in the country"—far from the town of Lamoni. There were those who laughed at the idea of building a country schoolhouse for the young people of the church. But she was not to be denied, and the result is that she lived to see Graceland materialize. Under present conditions the Graceland campus is as near to town as it should be, and with modern transportation it is no distance at all. Thousands of church young people have had the chance to develop themselves in the spirit of the Restoration Movement because Marietta Walker utilized her power to give.

Christiana Salyard's Gift

Among the many people I met in Denver were Sister Zaide and Brother Richard Salyards, my friends since childhood. After renewing my acquaintance with them, and while thinking of those things which might fit into a discussion of the power to give, it was only natural that I should think of the woman who stepped in to mother them when they were small, Sister Christiana Salyards. She not only reared the family of Brother Salyards, but her concern went far beyond the bounds of her own home. She felt deeply that there should be something for general use in the church with which to teach growing children, so she started writing quarterlies. They were accepted generally, and she spent her life developing her power to give until her name has become legend in the church for what she gave.

Sister Salyards did not have any modern tools with which to work. Her kitchen table was most often her desk. She did her thinking and her writing while doing her kitchen work. I have been in her home and have seen her at work. More than once in her extreme anxiety to get an idea on paper before she would forget it, she permitted food to scorch or burn. She did the best she could, and as a result laid the groundwork for the present day church school department. It was a pleasure indeed to remind the good folks in Denver of these facts with Zaide and Dick in the audience.

Giving for a Child

While preaching that sermon I noticed a little girl sitting in the front seat. She did not fit into an adult pew. Her feet did not touch the floor, and I was sure she must be uncomfortable. I then told this little story which I have repeated many times. I may have written it previously, too, but it will bear retelling because it illustrates so well the fact that adults too frequently have failed to utilize their power to give the needed ministry to youngsters. I asked this little girl if she was comfortable. I told her that I was afraid her legs might "go to sleep" and if so she should feel perfectly free to make herself comfortable in any way she desired. Suddenly receiving this attention was a little bewildering to her, but she nodded assurance that she was all right.

The incident happened during a sermon in Indianapolis. I noticed a little fellow about three or four years old moving about in the pew, trying hard not to disturb. A girl about twelve, not far from him, was trying to shush him, and some of the near-by adults became tense in their concern for the service. I stopped preaching and spoke to him, assuring him that I was fully in sympathy with him. He sat upright at this attention. I suggested that if I were in his place I probably would not be listening to the preacher either. I told him to feel perfectly free to lie down, to draw pictures, or to do anything he liked that it would not bother me in the least. I also suggested to the adults that they forget him and let him be comfortable. The unexpected result was that he listened intently to the balance of the sermon. He had been given the privilege to do as he chose, so he chose to listen. All I did was to use my power to give to minister to his momentary needs.

The real point to this story did not show up until later. Little Buddy, now a married man, was the grandson of Brother and Sister Arthur Gage. He was staying with them at the time, and as I went with them to their home for dinner that day I had a chance to get better acquainted with him. He was bashful and did not know how to get acquainted with me. The serving of dessert gave him his opportunity. Sister Gage served sliced peaches for dessert that day, and Buddy slipped out to the kitchen to ask her if he could serve Brother Wight. Then he brought my dessert in what to him was the best dish in the house—his little baby dish. He in turn was using his power to give to show his appreciation for what I had done for him. No dessert ever tasted better than those sliced peaches. It takes so little to minister to the needs of growing children. They are appreciative of any little attention they receive. Think of this the next time you see a child trying to be comfortable in an adult service, sitting on a chair or pew with his feet dangling in the air. Try it yourself sometime—that is, sit with your feet off the floor—and I'm sure you will be quite willing to take some action to minister to the needs of children.

Giving in Sacrifice

There is one young woman in the church today who has endeared herself to the entire membership probably far more effectively than she herself realizes. Sadi Moon Nagel has been put to a test that has proved her stature. She has a power to give much greater than most of us possess, and she is using it. Her beautiful expression of thankfulness, published in the Herald just before Thanksgiving of 1950, in which she listed the many things for which she was thankful in spite of the tragic loss of her husband, was one of the most compelling articles I have ever read. From her statements I assume that both she and Harley came from forebears whose quality had been tested, with the result that when they were called on to prove their power to give, they set an example which may well become legend in the Restoration Movement.

It was our privilege to know Sadi Anka's family even before she was born. Her grandmother, Sister Frank Feldhahn, was one of God's noblewomen. I recall her testimony in a prayer service many years ago. In expressing her appreciation of God's goodness to her, she said that whenever she needed administration she would always wait for a day or two before calling the elders. She wanted to make sure that she would be ready for any blessing which she might need. To those of us who knew her she seemed always ready. We could not understand why she would need to make preparation for an administration. But the lesson she taught me in that testimony will never be forgotten.

It is not surprising then that she should impart to her daughter, Elise, Sadi's mother, such a high standard of sainthood. My companion enjoyed the privilege of teaching Elise in school and loved her dearly. She was all that a good woman could be expected to be. The term "good woman" fit her. When Willard Moon won her love while they were yet in school, we all thought him a fortunate young man. We knew she had the power to give him a Zion home, and it was into this home that Sadi Anka came. Such a home background developed in her a power to give for the sake of the church. And when she was asked to give more than anyone would think of asking from another, she was able to do so with a smile. When I saw Willard at the High Priests' meeting in the Kirtland Temple in October, 1950, I asked him about her adjustment. His answer was that she actually thought it was a privilege to be called on to give up a husband if necessary to further the development of the church work. Such ideals come only from a background of deep devotion to a cause.

Late in 1951 I met Willard again at an evening service in the Lamoni Stake Evergreen Branch. It was a pleasure to tell him how much Sadi Anka had increased my power to give by the wonderful example she had set. I also told him of the fine response I had received from audiences from one end of the country to the other when telling my version of her story. Without question that story has helped many people in their efforts to develop their own power to give.

If I had needed an incentive to give myself unreservedly to consideration and discussion of "Power to Give" it was in the answer of Dr. William Henninger of Topeka, Kansas, whose clinic is world famous. I had expressed my appreciation of his paper, which was a masterpiece of understanding on marriage relationship problems. It was his paper I heard read at the San Francisco meeting. I must have said something about a need for more and better understanding of these problems and he agreed with me, saying, "There is so much unhappiness in the world!" To help remove that unhappiness should be the goal of each one of us in trying to emulate the work of Jesus Christ.

God and Man

By Arthur E. Dempsey

Adam fell, that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy.—II Nephi 1: 115.

THE ORIGINAL STATE of the Garden of Eden was purity and innocence. Evil had not yet appeared. Beyond certain chores, God had not assigned to Adam and Eve any program of deportment. It would seem that his every suggestion was carried out, for there was no opposition to his ways. Indeed, there was no reason for such opposition, for "God saw everything that he had made and, behold, it was very good."¹ Perfect physical creation had been accomplished; Satan had not yet appeared on the scene, and all was peaceful and orderly. The two parents of the human race lived without effort. They were innocent as newborn babes since they had no knowledge of good or evil. Death, suffering, grief, anxiety, striving for achievement, galling labor, perplexities of mind—all were unheard of, and physical life flowed on smoothly and without effort.² What an inviting scene to the sufferers of present day life! Many would cry out, "Would that I might be part of such a life!"

Yet something is missing! The great Creator has indeed accomplished a magnificent work that is crowned with the creation of mortal man "made in his image."³ Yes, the "image" is there in perfect form and physical health, together with all that should please and gladden the heart of such a creature. But the Creator himself is more than a personage of certain shape, dimensions, and other attributes incident to mere living. In him is light, understanding, and intelligence; the power to design and to create, to choose and to reject. Surely, this new man creature is to be more than a puppet if he is really created in the image of God. Animals pursue their existence guided by what we call instinct, for their mental powers do not rise to reason, abstract thinking, and logic. But Job says, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."⁴

Yes, man has been given wonderful latent powers, and the physical is not to dominate the whole creature in his case; rather the mind or spirit is to be the "captain of his soul."

THE ALMIGHTY YEARNS for the companionship of this new creature, for he has endowed him with great potential powers—"a little lower than the angels"⁵—and has bid him to become a Son of God.⁶ Can such a high station be reached by an effortless life of ease, with no choices to make, and no problems to solve? Hardly!

Before flesh existed, the Almighty formulated plans for this creation; and by his foreknowledge, which was evidently shared by his associates in the spirit world, it was known that mortal man-to-be would need a special aide in the form of a savior if he were to succeed in bringing the new creature of flesh into subjection to the holy influence of the Creator. Man must have this mediator so that he could eventually live a fuller, more joyful life, combining "spirit and element."⁷ Otherwise, he would fail, and God's great purposes in him would be frustrated. There were no puppets in the spirit world, for the principle of free agency was in force there, and the exercise of it resulted in a conflict wherein one third of the hosts joined a leader in rebellion against God and the forces of righteousness.⁸ These spirit rebels became "Satan and his angels"; they were cast down to earth to continue their warfare against God by striving to lead astray his beloved mortal man. The principle of free agency had its way in the spirit world, so now it was designed to continue on the earth in the fleshly creation,⁹ and the gauge of warfare was to determine who of the human race would join forces with God to combat evil and who would reject the Savior. Thus was the stage set for mortal man's life. It was not the intention of the Creator that man should waste his time on earth by mere effortless existence, but that he make a choice between God and Satan. Man was not to be a puppet with no real purpose in life. He was made in the image of God—not in form only, but in the type of mind that makes decisions and brings action of purposeful nature.

THERE CAME A DAY, therefore, when the entire existence of the Garden of Eden type of life met a crisis through the mere issuing of a command. Man all at once had to make a choice. No whip cracked to enforce that command; rather there was a suggestion that man might freely choose whether or not to obey, with the penalty for disobedience clearly set forth. Man was given only one prohibition regarding all the fruit of the garden—that of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.¹⁰

Here was a crisis indeed! Man, the fledgling, the object of God's special love and care, was now required in his innocence and ignorance to decide between blind and unquestioning obedience on the one hand and the sampling of a forbidden fruit with the penalty of death on the other. Left to himself in his ignorance regarding the value of the forbidden fruit, he quite likely would not have disobeyed his Creator. But Satan was not asleep, by any means. Here was his chance to try to thwart the plans of his archenemy, God! He would see to it that man should not only be "sold" on the value of the gift of the knowledge of good and evil to be attained by eating of the forbidden fruit, but that he should also be blinded by a lie regarding the death penalty.¹¹ Thus was the first high-pressure sale made, whereby man acquired a power formerly possessed only by his Creator and Savior but paid the predicted price as well. The Edenic life was a thing of the past. Man was now able to judge between good and evil.¹² Innocence had fled, and life for him became a scene of conflicts between righteousness and error, flesh and spirit. God provided a limited space of time for man to prove his loyalty to one side or the other of that great warfare begun in the spirit world, and now extended to earthly flesh and blood.¹³ But through the gloom of the suffering involved gleamed the bright promises of the love of God and his Christ in the terms of the gospel. Man may triumph at last if he so wills and thus attain a joy exceeding that of the Edenic world in the flesh or the pre-existent world in the spirit.¹⁴

Man's sufferings are more than matched by that wonderful offering of the Savior of mankind who, as God in the flesh, voluntarily came to this earth, suffering as no man suffered,¹⁵ and showing humanity the way to return to God. He, as the "second Adam," was victorious where the first Adam fell, thus meeting all the demands of justice.¹⁶ Now divine mercy and love can make the story of the Garden of Eden a delight rather than a tragedy.

TODAY MAN does not carry the burden of the responsibility of the Adamic sin. God assumed full responsibility for the fall of man when he said to Adam, "I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the Garden of Eden."¹⁷ The sacrifice of his glorious Son fulfilled the demands of justice so that mercy and love could

Question:

Where or in what part of the country was Joseph Smith when he returned the plates to the angel? Mrs. J. L. B. Washington

Answer:

The translation of the Book of Mormon was completed at the home of Peter Whitmer in Fayette Township, twenty-five miles from Palmyra, New York, probably in July, 1829. The copyright had been secured on June 11 before the translation was finished, and the copy went to the printer in August. It was between these dates, and after the translation was completed, that the plates were given to the angel from whose hands they were received nearly two years before. During these days Joseph was in the vicinity of Fayette and Palmyra, and it was probably at Whitmer's place that the angel received the plates.

Question:

What is the official attitude of the church on playing cards? California Mrs. A. W.

Answer:

This is usually looked upon as a matter for personal conscience as far as participation in individual homes is concerned. My own opinion is that the creative program of the church requires so much time that persons who give wholehearted support to it will not have a great deal of time to give to the relatively unproductive activity of playing cards. This is not to say that card playing is sinful in itself. I feel that on some occasions when indulgence does not result in neglect of more important duties, it is justified. Unless, however, one has reached a point in life where time does not have a particular value, I personally doubt the wisdom of committing oneself to the demands of bridge and canasta clubs.

I do not believe that it would be advisable to permit card playing at any church sponsored activity. There would undoubtedly be a reaction from many against it.

Question:

Who was the architect for Kirtland Temple? It is well known among church members, for history records that the design was given to Joseph Smith in vision, but what provision was made for the work to be carried out by the craftsmen? It surely would be necessary for them to have a blueprint of some kind. Was there any used?

Australia

M. R.

Answer:

In a message accepted by the church by revelation, God instructed the building of the Temple, and the conditions upon which it should be built. A few details of construction are given in this revelation.

... let the house be built, not after the manner of the world, for I give not unto you, that ye shall live after the manner of the world: therefore let it be built after the manner which I shall show unto three of you, whom ye shall appoint and ordain unto this power. And the size thereof shall be fifty and five feet in width, and let it be sixty-five feet in length, in the inner court thereof; and let the lower part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for your sacrament offering, and for your preaching; and your fasting, and your praying, and the offering up of your most holy desires unto me, saith the Lord. And let the higher part of the inner court, be dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles.—Doctrine and Covenants 92: 3.

A building committee had been appointed previously to erect a schoolhouse for the School of the Prophets. The above revelation altered the situation, and plans were changed. The committee—consisting of Hyrum Smith, Jared Carter, and Reynolds Cahoon—was retained as the building committee for the erection of the temple with the divine promise that plans would be revealed to them by inspiration.

We do not know of the existence of drawn plans. However, it is reasonable to believe that some plans would be drawn and sketches made for the instruction of the craftsmen. It is evident that some of the members were highly skilled craftsmen. Joseph Smith writes that he acted as foreman in the stone quarry.

We believe it is safe to say that the general design of the building was given by inspiration through Joseph Smith and the committee. However, architectural details would be the result of the combined skills of the prophet, the committee, and the artisans working together with God in the spirit of consecration. The work, and undoubtedly the detail designing, was a co-operative triumph. We do not know of any blueprint, and mention is not made in written history of any detailed plans so far as we know.

Question:

Who were the saints mentioned in Matthew 27: 52, 53, A. V., who arose after the resurrection of Christ? Florida

H. C. H.

Answer:

They were all the obedient and righteous children of God who had lived and died prior to Christ's resurrection. Abinadi prophesied long before—

And there cometh a resurrection, even a first resurrection; yea, even a resurrection of those that have been, and who are, and who shall be, even until the resurrection of Christ: for so he shall be called. And now, the resurrection of all the prophets, and all those who have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God, shall come forth in the first resurrection.—Mosiah 8: 55, 56.

Alma said:

There is a first resurrection . . . of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead. . . . It meaneth the reuniting of the soul with the body, of those from the days of Adam, down to the resurrection of Christ.—Alma 19: 50, 52.

The earliest of the righteous, like Abel, had been waiting in the spirit world several thousand years for their promised redemption, and others like John the Baptist a lesser time. When Christ had prepared the way there was no occasion for their waiting longer, and they were brought forth with him. He was "the first fruits." All the disobedient are still waiting.

Repentance

A talk given at Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri

By Kleta Finley

There are many principles by which men live. Six of the principles of life are mentioned in Hebrews 6:

Therefore, not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

This tells us that

1. Christ is the author of these principles.
2. They are basic or foundational.
3. Repentance from dead works goes hand in hand with faith toward God.
4. The use of these principles directs our lives toward perfection.
5. They must be used daily in life—"not leaving them."

It has been and always will be God's purpose that man find his way back into fellowship with his Creator so that he may know the joy and peace such fellowship gives. When it also becomes man's purpose to know the joy of that fellowship he begins to seek the way of repentance from dead works—of life that will bring this experience to him.

Repentance is most valuable when used as a tool to gain that which man really desires, but at times knows not how to obtain—fellowship with God.

Jesus and the prophets of each generation have realized this basic desire of man and his great need, and have called him to repentance as the way to achieve such satisfaction.

We recall that Jesus' last recorded message to the saints (as well as his first one) is not the Great Commission, but his call to repentance. Repentance is needed if man desires to be prepared to meet Jesus and to look ahead to his coming with hope.

The story is told of a traveler in Switzerland who engaged a guide and started on a mountain-climbing adventure. Overtaken by night and darkness they stopped at a little hut by the roadside. During the night they were awakened by a terrific crashing and rumbling. Terrorized, the traveler clutched the arm of the guide and asked, "Is the world coming to an end?"

Calmly the guide answered, "No. When the sun starts coming up on the other side of the mountain, it touches the snow at the top of the peak. The warm rays play on the surface of the glacier and cause the ice to crack with loud reports. Snow and ice hurtle down into the valley. No, this is not the end of the world—it is the dawn of a new day."

When we shake ourselves free of destructive forces in life, the new day of constructive enterprise dawns.

Repentance causes us to delete from our lives all of the incidents and attitudes that separate us from God—that alienate his spirit from us—it causes us to draw near to him and become at one with him. To become at one with him requires daily study, thought, and prayer in order to learn his will as expressed in these basic principles and the use of them in order to enjoy the natural results of such knowledge and use.

In the course of our lives we shall make many mistakes. We do not recognize many such errors until after we have made them. The thing we can then do is to determine not to repeat them. Mistakes become sin when we do them purposely, knowing they are wrong, or when we persist in doing them.

In I Nephi, chapter five, we see how the people wandered for eight years in the wilderness. They had the Liahona, but it worked only by faith and prayer. When they repented and humbled themselves enough to have faith and ask direction of God, they ceased milling around and went straight toward their destination.

They had knowledge of that principle of life, but until it was used they could not move ahead.

Aleta Runkle tells the story of a mother who came unexpectedly upon her son as he was eating strawberry jam. She had told him earlier not to eat before lunch. She scolded him and said, "Did you know it was wrong for you to eat the jam when I told you not to?"

"Yes," he answered, "and I prayed to God to forgive me all the time I was eating it."

Praying for forgiveness does not correct the misdeed—only repentance can do that for us.

The mind and will of God must become our mind and will before we can stop "milling around" or just "praying for forgiveness" and really make progress toward perfection.

Repentance means to allow God's mind to be in us. "Let this mind be in you, which was in Christ Jesus."

"Sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18.

Repentance means making the word become flesh in us. It may mean blazing a new trail—not going along with the herd. It means living according to a plan rather than according to a whim. Repentance changes us. When this mind is in us which was in Christ Jesus, we won't need to be encouraged by prizes, picnics, or periodic shots in the arm.

Sometimes it seems that, like Samson, we go to sleep in the lap of Delilah. We may look better to some people with our "hair cut," but we lose our power. We conform rather than become transformed.

We might even spend our lifetime telling of the miracles of days gone by, but never experience the miracle of faith and repentance in our own lives. We might expound the truth for all of our seventy years, but never experience and prove the truth in our own lives. Activity and "busyness" is not what is needed. Separation from sin is not sufficient. That mind which was in Christ Jesus must be in us to lead us to know, to experience, to prove in our own lives the joy and peace that naturally follow the knowledge and use of this basic principle of life repentance.

The Need for Zion

Can we afford to put off building Zion when we consider the needs of our children? Will we send them into the world to find friends and life companions? At a time in their lives when "the gang" is all important, will we say, "Go out with the others, but don't do like they do"? Our greatest loss of membership is among teen-agers. Is it because we have failed to provide for the young people the kind of social life they need? God gave us the answer a hundred years ago. When will we answer his call?

God has blessed me many times when I have been in need. I had high blood pressure and finally suffered a cerebral hemorrhage, but through administration I received much help.

I want to live so that I shall be worthy of these blessings. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be a faithful servant.

From an Isolated Member

I am thankful that I was guided to join this church. I have been a member for about twenty-five years, but much of the time I have been isolated from church privileges of my own faith and have had to attend other denominations. I teach a class in the Methodist Church and hope that I may be an instrument in God's hands and help to bring the gospel here to Farmington. Our high moral standards are always a source of pride with me.

Another thing which has strengthened my faith is the blessing that can come through administration. My mother was never very strong, and several times I have had Elder Ambrose King of Victoria, Illinois, come and administer to her. Each time he came without hesitancy, and each time my mother received a blessing. Both Mother and Father are dead now. Elder Lyle Woodstock officiated at the funeral services, and those who attended commented on the outstanding sermons he gave.

I hope the Saints will pray that the work may be established in Farmington. I hope I may always be worthy of membership in this church and serve to the best of my ability.

Note of Thanks

I want to thank all who so kindly remembered me with cards and letters during my stay in the hospital. I appreciate, too, the visits of those who came to see me. May God's richest blessings be theirs.

I have a heart ailment and am not well yet, but I can be up part of the time. For this I am thankful and trust that God will heal me. I need the prayers of the Saints.

New Mission Headquarters in Hannover, Germany

On January 15 a crew of workmen began to move their tools and equipment on to the corner of Eichstrasse 14a. This was the beginning of a new headquarters building for the German Mission. It will provide a beautiful chapel for the Hannover Saints to worship in with a seating capacity of 125. In the lower auditorium facilities will be provided for junior church. Under the rostrum in the lower auditorium there will be a baptismal font which will help to dignify the sacrament of baptism. The lower auditorium will seat about fifty persons. On the second and third floors there will be two apartments for church missionaries. Central heating will be provided for the whole building.

After the bomb damage was cleared away by workmen, a service was announced for 3:00 p.m. Friday afternoon, January 25. More than fifty members and friends took off work to gather at the building site. Elder Christian Rosch, pastor of Hannover Branch, gave the invocation, and Patriarch Franz Beil delivered a short address telling of the early missionary work in Hannover and the missionary opportunities afforded by this fine building.

Mission President Eugene A. Theys then laid the cornerstone, having first placed a small metal box in the building corner. In this box were several letters, pictures of the Hannover Saints, the last issue of Der Deucher Herald, a number of new German coins, and a copy of the local newspaper published on the day the cornerstone was laid. Herr Wilhelm Rischmuller, the building contractor, then expressed a few words of appreciation for having the opportunity to assist in building, and Elder August Weber offered the benediction.

Since that time the mission house has rapidly neared completion. The building is now constructed, all rooms have been plastered, heating and plumbing installed, and electrical wiring finished. On July 10, Seventy Louis C. Zonker and his wife and two small daughters will move into the new headquarters.

On July 20 President Israel A. Smith, Bishop Henry L. Livingston, and Apostle Arthur A. Oakman will be in Hannover to help dedicate the new mission headquarters. On the previous Sunday, July 13, they will have dedicated the new church in Berlin.

The German Mission is going forward, and there is a deep feeling among the members that they have a great future before them in witnessing for Christ.

On August 14, Seventy E. A. Theys and his family will sail for the United States from Le Havre, France, on the S. S. "United States." This will mark the completion of five years of missionary work for them in Europe.

God and Man

hold full sway and make atonement complete. Once more man became innocent in his infant state¹⁸—the ordinance of baptism applying only to personal sins, which sins are remitted by this act. Logic and reason become close companions with the gospel plan, and the thrilling testimonies of Adam and Eve¹⁹ point the way to a fuller understanding of the loving kindness of the great Creator of all. Let it be remembered that Adam and Eve had actually experienced the Edenic life, yet they testify to the advantages accruing from the fall and show preference for the great possibilities opened to them which formerly did not exist. Well did Nephi of old exclaim, "O, the greatness of the mercy of our God, the Holy One of Israel!"²⁰

True, we do not yet have all the facts in this great drama, nor is it likely that mortals, as such, can ever fully comprehend all that is involved in this great story.²¹ But the promise is that in time, all mysteries shall fade and nothing shall remain hidden.²² In the meantime, who can ignore the Savior's edict, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life"²³

God and man! What a combination! How can we ever comprehend that quality shown in the great God of all, wherein he insists not only in favoring weak man in countless ways, but in drawing him into active partnership with him in all the details of his saving processes, strengthening the blundering hands and minds of those who try, and repeatedly reaching after those who waver? Well did the angel remark to Nephi of old, "Knowest thou the condescension of God?"²⁴

This marvel of the ages which leaves heaven and earth standing in amazed wonderment should claim our chief interest in this life.

Women Adopt German Family

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Seventy James Menzies baptized Jane, Lucille, Myers, and William Campbell on May 25.

The women's group leader, Lenora Nixon, has distributed miniature socks and mittens. The members are to measure their hands and place a penny an inch for gloves and hose or sock size into miniature receptacles each week for a certain length of time. Members also received sealed cartons with slots in which contributions are to be placed for "special" blessings received. This is called the "thanks offering." The women's department has adopted a German family of four. They became acquainted with the family through Brother Roy Hanes who is stationed in Ettlingen, Germany, and who has visited this family very frequently.

The Live Wire class, whose teacher is John Treiber, continues to serve dinner twice a month to the Lion's Club of Wellsburg. Several members of the class donate all the food used, with the exception of meat which is purchased. Ethel Melcher is the president of the class. They have raised nearly $500 since January, and have pledged $500 above their quota toward building the new annex.

The adult class sponsored a class supper, having as their guests Seventy James Menzies, Pastor John Treiber, and Sister Treiber. The pastor's birthday was celebrated at this time, and he was presented with a shirt and tie as a gift.

The Scout troop of the branch is growing. Nearly all the boys are nonmember friends.

Apostle Williams visited the branch for four days.—Reported by LEONA HANES

Group Organized as a Mission

HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.—The Saints meet at 3404 Market Street. It was in the month of May three years ago that the church school was organized under the leadership of Brother Wayne Peters. The group met in Brother Peters' home until December, 1951, when a larger building was needed. Seventy John Puckett of Jefferson City began a series of meetings on January 13. The Saints of Illinois also attended the services. During the series, Brother Puckett and Brother Peters visited in the homes of the Saints.

On March 23, the group met in their new church home. Brother Wayne Peters and Elder Bowman were in charge of the service of dedication. Seventy John Puckett ordained Brother Peters to the office of elder, assisted by Elders Bowman and Brown of Illinois. Brother Puckett stated that the group was now a mission, and officers were elected. Brother Richard Howell sang, "We've a story to tell to the nations." Brother Bowman closed the meeting with prayer.—Reported by PAULINE CASH

INMAN, NEBRASKA.—An institute was held at the Inman Branch May 27-29, with Brother and Sister John Darling of Independence and Brother Harold Reid of Royal, Nebraska, in charge. The institute was for priesthood, young people, and women. Youth classes were held in the church, and the women met at the home of Sister Jacox. All meals with the exception of breakfast were served at Brother and Sister McGraw's home with the help of all the women. Margaret and Verna Pruss arranged the worship center, and the Inman Zion's League was in charge of devotionals on the closing day.

Sanitarium Day Observed in Branch

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—The nursing profession is well represented in the Enfield Branch. Among the members are two state registered nursing sisters, Ida Hart and May Oakman; one Red Cross hospital nurse, May Worth; two probationer nurses, Dora Oakman and Kitty Riley; and two auxiliary nurses, Rose Butler and Mary Judd, of the Red Cross organization and St. John's Ambulance Brigade respectively. Several other members are also hospital workers. They are Thomas Tucker, instrument technician and mechanic; Roy Oakman, pathological laboratory staff; and Carrie Butler, hospital catering staff. An especial interest is maintained, therefore, in Sanitarium Day, which, adapted to local circumstances, has grown to be a source of inspiration in the year's services.

On April 27, the Twenty-third Psalm was chosen for the theme, and four nursing staff members together with a "patient" took part. From the West London Hospital, Hammer-smith, were Sister M. Oakman, who planned the service, and Sister Ida Hart, who spoke. Nurse D. Oakman, also from the above hospital, offered the opening and closing prayers and played a piano solo; Nurse Kitty Riley, of Chase Farm Hospital, Enfield, read the Twenty-third Psalm and sang "He Leadeth Me."

The patient was Brother Bertram Sykes, who through his illness was brought into the church, after a long experience in the hospital. Brother Sykes stated that in spite of the doctor's opinion that he would not work again, he had recovered to the extent that he now has a more responsible position than before his illness.

The day's collections were donated to the Sanitarium.—Reported by LILY E. A. OAKMAN

Correction

In the issue of March 14, in the news brief from Enfield, England, the first paragraph should have read "High Priest J. F. Schofield was sustained as pastor; he appointed High Priest D. A. Oakman and Elder F. W. Judd as counselors." Brother Oakman was erroneously listed as a priest.

Zion's Leaguers Hold Retreat

NEW YORK DISTRICT.—Apostle D. T. Williams and Seventy S. W. Johnson were in charge of the district conference held at Niagara Falls May 24-25. At the business meeting Sunday afternoon the following officers were elected: president, S. W. Johnson; women's department leader, Evelyn Voltmann; music department, Maurine Whitehead; Zion's League, Stanley Leonard; secretary, Louise Morden; treasurer, Vernon Whitehead; religious education, Robert Auther; auditors, Max Voltmann, Clifford Spilsbury. The following ordinations were approved: Fred Knapp to the office of elder and Charles Biggs to the office of deacon.

May 30-June 1, the district Zion's League met at Allegheny State Park for a youth retreat. Over forty Leaguers attended the three-day session which included recreation, campfires, classwork, and an outdoor Communion service on Sunday morning. The staff included Henry Knapp, Fred Knapp, Thelma Pearson, Orveta Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Schick, and Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Johnson. The camp is the site of the Allegheny Park Youth Camp to be held in August. Another retreat is being planned for a week end in October at the same camp. The week of May 26-30, Apostle D. T. Williams and District President S. W. Johnson visited all of the branches of the district. Evening services were held at Syracuse, Binghamton, Rochester, and Greenwood.

I will be returning to Hannover the first part of next week and while there will pick out linoleum, wallpaper, curtains and drapes, as well as looking after a number of other small items. From all indications, the mission house will be finished by the first of July.

We have just received the good news that we have reservations for our family on the S. S. "United States" sailing from Le Havre, France, on August 15. We will arrive in New York on the nineteenth and if all goes well we should be in Independence the afternoon of the twenty-first. Five years seem like a long time when one looks toward the future, but as we look back on our past experiences, it hardly seems that we will soon be here that long.

Another good piece of news is that on our last visit to the mission in Mulheim, we found that Brother Nass, our pastor, has found a fine meeting room which will be fixed into a chapel. This room will be located in downtown Mulheim. The Mulheim group was organized about four years ago, and is one of the many groups we hope to get started in the industrial Ruhr of Germany. We hope that we can have the same success in some of our other groups.

We are looking forward to seeing President Smith, Bishop Livingston, and Apostle Oakman in the German Mission this summer.

Our Challenge — An Increased Spiritual Stature

A lecture given at the opening class for women at General Conference

By Mrs. S. S. Arnson

I WANT TO DISCUSS WITH YOU some of the many challenges which constantly urge us women to increase our spiritual stature. Throughout the Scriptures we are told again and again to grow and to increase in the likeness of our Master. In poetry we find additional instruction—"Build thee more stately mansions," and our own better self urges us to aspire to higher things. The Restoration message offers a great challenge to us. It proclaims to the world and says, in fact, that upon this earth in our time shall be built a community which we call Zion, consisting of the highest type of Christian people banded together for each other's good, acknowledging to God the stewardship of their talents, time, and money. It will be a community where people live in peace and where children are reared in holiness. It declares to us also that this gospel is for all people. In the divine plan the women of the church have a definite part. We have a distinctive obligation which has been stressed often by our leaders. This obligation is the building of Zion, homes which will comprise the Zion community. In reviewing past history we find that when there was a great work to do, men and women were raised up to do it. God has worked through the ages, through men and women of quality and vision, to bring about his work.

John Wycliff of England, called "The Morning Star of the Open Bible," translated the Bible into the common tongue. He could be classed as a man of vision. Christ himself tells us that upon this land he established the constitution, for it is not right that any man should be in bondage. "And I have established the constitution of this land by the hands of wise men whom I have raised up for this very purpose."

Lincoln, the Emancipator, and Joseph Smith were instruments through whom the Lord worked. Joseph in faith followed the instruction of the Lord, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God," and did a great work.

THE WORLD NEEDS PEOPLE of stature today to carry on its work and help it solve its problems. The church needs people of stature for the great work it has to do. Only people of nobility, sincerity, and consecration can do this. Our need, as history tells us and as instructions have come to us from our leaders and through the Scriptures, is for an increased spiritual stature. If we are to do the things which are demanded of us we must "grow up" in the church. In our honest appraisal of the abilities and talents which we possess, in our solemn moments when we reflect that we have not used our time to the best advantage, and in the spirit of repentance can we not say wholeheartedly, "What can we do to assist?" And can we not also resolve that from this moment on that we will try to develop within ourselves those qualities which will characterize us as women of stature?

Greatness is not measured by prominence, although prominent people may be great. Greatness, the quality of a soul, is measured by service to God and to men. In many branches and homes we find women of stature who have devoted their all to the work of kingdom-building. Instead of measuring success by the material standards of the world they have responded to the call for the high spiritual standard of living which can be achieved by Christian people if they are conscientiously working at the job.

THERE ARE MANY CHALLENGES to urge women to higher development. Our generation is challenged by fine, faithful women of the past who met their responsibilities triumphantly regardless of the circumstances. Sariah, the wife of Lehi of Book of Mormon times, was one of these. With her husband and family she was willing to leave the land of her inheritance—the gold and silver and precious things—to go into the wilderness as the Lord had commanded. "And because they were obedient to the word of the Lord, they did as commanded." Sariah would not have been human had she not had some misgivings, but she was unfaltering in fulfilling her mission. What a lesson for us today!

In the beginning of the Restoration Movement women were called upon to leave their homes in the east and pioneer a new way of life with no assurance that the plans in which they believed would work out. Still they were willing to leave their friends and comfortable homes because they had great faith in the new religion which they had espoused.

A closer challenge comes to us from our own parents. Many of them put the gospel above everything in life and courageously went about telling the good news to their friends and neighbors. This generation was composed of Saints of the first water, who had great faith in the message.

The world in its sin-sick condition challenges us to increase our spiritual stature. All about us is evil, degradation, and sorrow. This condition could be changed if a group of consecrated women would demonstrate powerfully in their lives and homes that the teachings of the gospel—the way of righteousness—brings peace, happiness, contentment, and blessing.

To us comes the additional challenge of ideal womanhood. By our very nature we have within us those qualities which can uplift and help the world; our gentleness can accomplish more than force. Our influence on our families is great; we pray that it will be right. Our opinions and attitudes about the world conditions and people are also of great importance. Our abilities, talents, and knowledge can be great assets.

A few months ago in the Herald Leonard Lea told a little story about Emerson which illustrates the point I want to make. Emerson wrote that he tried for an hour one day to get a calf into a barn. The calf resisted with fury every effort he made. A few minutes after Emerson had given up, along came a servant girl. She put her finger into the calf's mouth, and it willingly followed her into the barn. It is more important to know how to do something than to be strong.

TO DEVELOP healthy personalities in children is woman's responsibility and privilege. Many things may handicap proper development. A report from the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth stated that, among other things, inadequate school and health, racial and ethnical discriminations handicap children not only in and of themselves but also because they are contrary to the democratic ideal that every person is of precious worth. Feelings of inferiority, uncertainty, envy, and resentment may produce serious consequences, but the most important handicap is the lack of spiritual values. What an opportunity women have to mold personalities that will help build a society of efficient workers who are strong enough to protect its way of life and flexible enough to co-operate with those whose ways are different. On the entrance court of the Margaret Morrison Carnegie School for Women at Pittsburgh (founded by Andrew Carnegie and named for his mother) are these enduring words: "To make and inspire the home. To lessen suffering and increase happiness. To aid mankind in its upward struggles. To ennoble and adorn life's work. However humble—these are women's high prerogatives."

WE OF THE RESTORED CHURCH are looking forward to the time when a temple will be built in addition to the one we have in Kirtland. The story of David's desire to build the temple in his day and do more than was required of him is inspiring and stimulating. The Lord commanded him to build an altar. Although David was not allowed to erect a temple because of past sin, God commanded him through the prophet, "It was good that it was in thine heart." We have the challenge of preparation.

Latter-day revelation says to us that the glory of God is intelligence," and that it is "light and truth." This should challenge each of us to do what we can for the building of the kingdom by proper preparation. In the words of one of our leading women, it means that "our lives and our homes and our personalities shall speak to those about us in no uncertain tones of the light and love and truth of the gospel. The Restoration message challenges us to a finer ministry in our homes to our husbands and to our children, to a closer and more efficient working together for the advancement of God's church on earth."

The contributions we can make to the church are vital. Our names may not be remembered or written in a book, but we still may be classed as people of vision with a message caught from the Day Star, Jesus Christ, if we obey the call to pioneer a way of life which has been prescribed for us. Although living Christ-centered lives is no easy task, it is a rewarding one; this means we live not for ourselves alone but for others. I like the statement Apostle Hanson has made many times: "A Saint is motivated to do for others what Christ has done for him."

We could profitably follow the advice of a famous Negro woman,

Mary MacLeod Bethune, president emeritus of the Bethune-Cookman College for Negroes. She built this college in spite of great obstacles when she saw the ignorance of Negro children about her. To all young people who came under her charge she said, "Walk proudly in the light. Faith ought not to be a puny thing. If we believe, we should believe like giants."

GOD BLESSED the women of the church last October. He sent his Spirit in abundance to testify to us that he loves us and was mindful of our desires to serve him in every way possible. In that week we grew in understanding of our responsibilities and of each other and were strengthened by the unity that was here. I have no doubt that many here have been urged to come again, even at a sacrifice, that they might partake of the good spiritual food which will be here in abundance at our Conference.

Zion and her ideals are before us; only partially have we achieved them. It is my desire that we may hear the call and rise up with renewed conviction and steadfast faith and begin to change ourselves into a more perfect likeness of Christ, improving the abilities and the personalities we have now that our stature might constantly increase. Let us believe so strongly in the program of the Restoration that we will put all of our efforts into the accomplishment of this work. I have no doubt as to our consecration. The only concern I have is that we shall measure up to the demands and the challenges that are ours from the good people of the past, who gave their full share of devotion to the cause we all cherish.

"Faith ought not to be a puny thing. Since we believe, let us believe like giants."

A Shrine at the Crossroads of America

By Charles Kornman

LAST SUMMER my sister and her family came to visit me in New York—she lives in Texas. They had heard about Nauvoo from some friends and were anxious to see it for themselves. They told us to be sure to stop when we came to see them this summer.” . . . “These are some friends of ours from Georgia. My wife and I live over in Peoria and every time we have visitors in our home we try to bring them down here.” . . . “I’m a member of the legislature here in Illinois. I’ve been in Nauvoo before but never have had a chance to stop.” . . . “I want to see where Joseph Smith kept all of his wives.” . . . “I’m a member of the board of trustees for the Methodist Temple in Chicago. It was our minister who inspired Sallman to paint the picture that you have in your office. The original hangs in our Temple—come and see it when you’re in Chicago.” . . . “I’m glad to hear you talk so much about Jesus Christ. I was out West last summer and all I could hear was Joseph Smith.” . . .

And so they come—rich and poor—large families, people on their honeymoon, couples on dates—dentists, physicians, history teachers, farmers and preachers—from New York and New Mexico, from Oregon and Florida, from California and Kentucky. One sees names like Bolivia, Brazil, Indochina, Iraq on the registration cards. Church affiliations compass every range of theology known to mankind—Methodist, Universalist, Baptist, Catholic, Mormon, Open Bible, Unity, Lutheran, Christian Scientist.

Seeking understanding, curious America stops at this shrine—most of the visitors listen attentively as the guide tells the story of Nauvoo and the people who settled here. Many of them ask questions about these strange people who have “another Bible” and yet who believe in Christ. And most of them leave shaking their heads in wonderment that a city could be born, grow to maturity, and die in such a short time. For a brief half hour they’ve lived in another century and have walked where martyrs were born—they’ve seen Joseph as a modern Moses and have felt something of the integrity of the heart of the elect lady who stood true to the God she loved, come what may. And they leave this city of beauty, many of them with reluctance and with reverence, because they’ve felt something of the spirit that pervades this outpost of the New Jerusalem. Thousands upon thousands of people throng this shrine of America in ever-increasing numbers—indeed, for the ministers of the Mansion House, the world is their parish. Perhaps in this way, Nauvoo is fulfilling her destiny because certainly the majestic and awe-inspiring story of her past causes people to stop and gaze in wonder at her beauty.

“Polished with the refinement which is after the similitude of a palace” is her destiny—God has so decreed. Often God uses apparently meaningless phrases to indicate coming events, but the future manifests that she is in the hand of God as is the past—the Christ described as a “root out of dry ground”; Zion as a “city set upon a hill,” Nauvoo as a “cornerstone of Zion . . . polished with refinement.” Such apt wording is divine in origin. Perhaps in a measure, we are seeing the fulfillment of this prophecy. Nor does this interpretation prohibit greater activity on the part of God as he proceeds with the redemption of Zion and the refinement of this corner of it.

GRADUALLY THE MEMBERS of our church are beginning realize the possibilities manifest in this place, and week-end visits by branches, classes, and Zion’s Leagues are becoming more and more popular. Our prayer and our hope is that they shall be more so.

A nominal charge is made for the use of the Nauvoo House with its sleeping quarters and kitchen facilities as well as the restrooms. Each group, however, furnishes its own sheets, bankets, pillows, and food, thereby making it possible for us to

IN PREPARATION for your visit to Nauvoo we suggest that you begin to get ready at least a month before you come. Use the story of Nauvoo as the basis for sermons, for fellowship services, for classes. Your preparation should be such that just to “be” in Nauvoo will be a worship experience. And it can be!

May God’s Spirit continue to refine this shrine and may America continue to benefit therefrom. And may the Spirit of Him who “doeth all things well” continue to welcome and inspire those of the household of faith as they walk where their fathers walked before them.

The Importance of Time

By Chaplain Floyd Engstrom

Be strictly careful then about the life you lead. Act like sensible men, not like thoughtless. Make the most of your time, for these are evil days.—Ephesians 5: 15, 16, American Version

TIME HAS BEEN CALLED money, and for some people it is just that. But whether it means money or something less tangible to us, it is far too precious to abuse. It is given each of us for achievement, for creative living—not to be wasted. In the classroom if someone comes in half a minute late and there are forty people present, twenty minutes are gone never to be recovered because of the distraction. In a congregation of two hundred people, a half-minute distraction for the group amounts to an hour and forty minutes. No one has the right to do this to his friends. Neither is it fair to God to thus misuse the time that is allotted for worshipping him.

HAVE YOU EVER WONDERED why a doctor charges more for a house call than an office call? It is a matter of time, and his time is usually quite valuable. He could probably see three or four patients in his office while he is making one house call. Also there is the wear and tear of travel on man and machine. Think it over; perhaps you will be able to call at his office for the needed treatment next time. There may be people there who need to see him as much as you do.

Perhaps you still feel you are unable to do much in a minute. Do you know it takes less than ten seconds for a hundred-yard dash? The average car or train can travel more than a mile in a minute. A jet plane will travel ten times that far. A competent stenographer can type as many as seventy-five words a minute. Yes, many things can be accomplished in a minute.

With the opportunities that present themselves, if you are a poor steward, you have headaches, heartaches, an empty pocketbook, and an empty life as your record. The point is you can do better. Have you learned to use even minutes to advantage? Have you developed worth-while spare time activities? By not making use of each moment, it may be that you are retarding your professional advancement. This may mean the difference between a life of satisfaction and a life of discontentment. Just how are you using your time anyway?

PAUL POINTED OUT to the Ephesians that those who delay will find either that the opportunity is no longer present or those left are not worth having. How often have you found this to be true in your life? Think about your time; plan to use it wisely. Always have worth-while things to do if you find yourself forced to wait for a few minutes. Perhaps you have a delay between trains, what of value can you see in the city? Perhaps there is a museum or a historical landmark worth visiting? If you have an evening to yourself, do you spend it wisely, or do you listen to murder mysteries? How do you spend your vacations? Are you a more efficient worker because of them, or do you have to return to your job to recuperate?

How about using some of your time to check on yourself? Add up your strengths and weaknesses, then use some more of that time trying to strengthen the weak spots or eliminating them from your life entirely. Time is important. It is given to you and your neighbor alike, but only you are accountable for the seconds, minutes, hours, days, and years allotted to you. Are you marking time waiting for your death or do you look forward to each new day for the added opportunities it may bring you? The joy of the moment should bring satisfaction through the years.

News and Notes

VISITS ONTARIO

President F. Henry Edwards was at Woodbridge, Ontario, for their anniversary services June 14 and 15. He spent the next day with the Ontario appointees at a meeting in London, and preached in Toronto that evening.

ATTEND CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

President W. Wallace Smith, associated with Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Church Historian John Blackmore, and Elder Cecil Robbins took part in the centennial celebration held at Beloit, Wisconsin, June 14-15. A caravan toured the surrounding country and visited the homes of some of the early Saints, including the home of Jason W. Briggs, on Saturday and attended meetings in the Beloit church throughout the day on Sunday. District President Frank Mussell was there to assist Pastor Clyde N. Funk in the conduct of the services of the day. This celebration commemorates one of the important milestones in the work of the Restoration. Sister W. Wallace Smith accompanied President Smith, and Sister Blackmore was with her husband on this trip.

ENTERS SANITARIUM

Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor of the "Saints' Herald," entered the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital June 9 for diagnosis and treatment. He is recovering and expects to return to the office very soon.

NEW COMMITTEE MEETS

The advisory committee on curriculum research and development which has been appointed since Conference met June 10-12 at the Auditorium for preliminary discussions concerning the educational work of the church. They formulated tentative objectives which are to be submitted to other committees and individuals throughout the church for evaluation. Committees were also selected for study of physical, mental, emotional, and social characteristics of each age group from birth to the late adult years. Those present for the discussions were Roy Cheville, Clifford Cole, Ruby Williamson, Raymond Booker, John Darling, Edna Easter, and Reed Holmes. The other members of the committee could not be present at this meeting, but a fall committee meeting is planned for December 29-30.

AT TEXAS REUNION

John Darling, assistant director of the General Department of Religious Education, left Independence, June 20, for the Texas reunion at Bandera, Texas. Brother Darling was accompanied on the trip by his wife.

YOUNG ADULTS HAVE RETREAT

The young adults of the Far West Stake held a retreat at Stewartville, Missouri, June 22, to plan and discuss young adult problems. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, was one of the discussion leaders. Brother Mesle was also the speaker at a father-son banquet held at Lee's Summit, Missouri, June 19.

BOYS TOUR EUROPE

Roger Yarrington and James Tabor of Lamoni, Iowa, left New York June 6 on the Greek liner, "Neptunia." They will debark at Southampton, England, June 15. The boys will tour England, France, Switzerland, and Italy, and return to the United States, August 28. Roger and James are both Graceland College graduates and both attended the University of Kansas the past year.

A New Church Home for Pasadena, California, Branch

AFTER MANY YEARS of meeting in rented buildings, Pasadena Branch now has a home of its own. Early this year it was purchased from the Unity Church. The main church building is of white stucco. To the side and rear of this is a frame annex. The former consists of the main auditorium, foyer, pastor's study, and library. On the second floor are the nursery, choir loft, and furnace room. The upstairs furnace and choir room are unusual, but both function admirably. The choir loft is above and to the back of the congregation, completely out of view. The acoustics are splendid. The annex contains church school rooms, dining room and kitchen, and a club room where the women's department meets. Junior church is also held here.

The first meeting in the new building was, very appropriately, a Communion service. The building had to be shared for several weeks with the former owners, so it was not until the middle of March that a consecration service was held. On this memorable Sunday morning, following a special service of blessing of children, Priest Lawrence Emerson gave the sermon. In the afternoon Stake President Garland E. Tickemyer delivered the address of consecration of the new church, after which open house was held. A large group of local members, visitors from near-by branches, friends, and neighbors attended.

Pasadena mission was organized on May 22, 1929, under the direction of Elder Glaude Smith, then pastor of the Los Angeles Branch, and Evangelist John Martin. During the succeeding years this small but steadily growing group met first in homes, then halls, and as it grew in numbers and need, in the more commodious Woman's Club House of South Pasadena. Under the capable and inspired leadership of the late Lewis B. Shippy, the mission, on June 24, 1945, was organized into a branch by Apostle John W. Rushton and District President L. J. Ostertag.

From the organization of the mission to the present time, pastors have been Elders Jesse Johnson, John Scott, Lawrence Brockway, Elmer Chase, Fred A. Cool, Lewis B. Shippy, Blaine Bender, Warren K. McElwain, and Harry K. Waylett.

Pasadena Saints have a fine feeling of harmony and co-operation. At open house, a member of the committee from the church which formerly owned the building said she had never worked with finer people. They hope and pray that through this newly acquired house of worship, the gospel may be brought to many whose hearts are seeking for the truth.—BERTHA ANDREWS TAVE.

Be Not Afraid

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

—Romans 8:15

IT MAY NOT HAVE OCCURRED to the fortunate people who live in the free countries of the world that there are millions of persons who have never known, in any waking moment, what it means to be really free from fear. To live in a situation from which you know you have no chance of escape this side of death; to know that any day may bring the loss of savings, food, employment, home, and loved ones; to know that any day, by the mere whim of a powerful bureaucrat, enemies may beset you, and with impunity torture you and maim you, and at last kill you—this must be the very heart of hell.

Today, these things are the gift of a tyranny that proclaims its intention of giving new hope and a better way of life to humanity. And yet, in all their welfare, some people listen to the siren voice of this enemy.

FEAR strikes closer home. Our own land is not free of it. Our own people know its meaning. The common people—the helpless victims of all wars—are afraid of it. To our nightmares there has been added, through the genius of scientists and inventors, a new and more frightful terror, the atomic bomb. Someday, we apprehend, a rocket plane will fly overhead at incredible speed—so fast that when it is detected it will be too late to do anything—and drop a package of doom. Helplessly we shall watch it fall. A flash of searing light, a blast like the explosion of suns, and we will all be turned to cinders, as Lot's wife was changed into a pillar of salt. . . . Such is the fear.

Yet there is a way in which we do not need to be afraid.

HELL has no more terrible weapon with which to torment people than fear. It brings its agony to the mind, the most sensitive part of our whole complicated nature.

Most of us have been afraid of something at some time in our lives: the bully at school, the girl with a sharp and gossiping tongue, a hard examination, possible failure, humiliation and embarrassment, hunger or want, disease or death. There are many phobias—fears of the dark, of high places, of being shut in, of depths, of water, of loneliness, of pain or harm to loved ones. These are things that some people live with night and day through all their lives.

This may not be your problem. But someone you know may suffer anguish from it.

LONG AGO, the Son of God walked the earth in the form and the flesh of man. He knew all the pain, the disappointment, the grief, the fear and the trouble that can come to human beings. He knew these, and some more. Yet in his own stay on earth he faced and overcame fear.

He saw the pain and trouble of humanity. He knew its suffering. And to people everywhere he said, "Be not afraid, it is I," and, "Fear not." Out of his supernal wisdom, out of his deep understanding of life (for, as John assured us, "He knew what is in man") he pointed his human brothers and sisters toward the conquest of the enemy, fear.

ABOUT TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, there was a writer who faced and grappled with this problem of fear. Basil King won a personal victory over this enemy, and wrote a fine book, The Conquest of Fear. It is a classic in its field. In fairly recent times it was available in one of the inexpensive reprints, with text complete, for twenty-five cents. We can recommend to those who need it a patient, careful reading and reading again of the whole book. Of its basic idea, some notion may be had from the following quotation:

I see no fundamental conquest of fear that is not based in God. There may be knacks by which fear can be nipped and expedients by which it can be outwitted, but its extermination can be brought about, it seems to me, only in one way. According to our capacity and our individual needs we must know God; and knowing God is not as difficult as the Caucasian mind is apt to think. It stands to reason that if knowing God, in the senses in which it is possible to know him, is so essential to mankind it could not be difficult.

Once while on a trip I was very tired and became ill. I was in a strange place, and I was afraid. In the bus station there was no place to lie down, no help available. I felt myself blacking out, the strength oozing away from my body. I prayed for help, and a cold perspiration ran down my face. The thought came to me: "I am weak, but God is strong. He has unlimited strength, and I am in the hollow of his hand. He can hold me up if I will believe in him." I held to this as to a life-preserver. I clung and prayed. A change came, and in a little while I felt better and was able to get on my bus. I was not afraid after that.

Baptismal Report for May

There were 288 baptisms reported to the Department of Statistics in May. This is 11 less than for May, 1951, but is comparatively high, being, except for 1951, the best since 1923. This makes a five-month total of 1,274, which is also comparatively high, although 40 less than for the same period last year.

The five highest baptismal totals for districts and stakes for May, 1952, are as follows: Los Angeles Stake, 22; West Virginia District, 16; Eastern Colorado District, 11; New York and Philadelphia District, 11; Center Stake of Zion, 10; Central Oklahoma District, 10; Northeastern Illinois District, 10.

The five highest baptismal totals for branches for May, 1952, are as follows: San Antonio, Texas, 9; Aurora, Illinois, 8; Hutchinson, Kansas, 8; Parkersburg, West Virginia, 8; Buffalo, New York, 7; Orlando, Florida, 7.

Biennial Convention of American Guild of Organists

The American Guild of Organists, with a national membership of more than 12,000 and chapters in every state (nearly 200 in all), will hold its Biennial Convention in San Francisco, June 30 through July 4, 1952. This association of church musicians represents all religious bodies. It was chartered in 1896 by the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, and its purpose is to raise the standards of organ and choral music.

It would be well for any church organists or choir directors who are able to do so to attend this convention for one or more of its sessions.

FRANKLYN S. WEDDLE

New Bishop for Ontario

We are very happy to announce that Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman is moving to 7 Hillcrest Road, Guelph, Ontario, Canada, to assume his responsibilities as Bishop of Ontario. Bishop Kohlman will be direct representative of the Presiding Bishopric in all matters pertaining to the work of the Bishopric in Ontario.

Pursuant to action of the General Conference of 1952, the work of the Bishopric is being incorporated in Canada, and it is hoped that such incorporation will expedite the temporal work and enhance the growth of the church in Canada.

We are very happy to commend Brother Kohlman to the Saints in Canada, and this we can do wholeheartedly, for he has served with efficiency and devotion to the church in the office of the Presiding Bishopric since November, 1948. We will miss him keenly in our office, but feel that the importance of the work in Canada not only justifies but necessitates his assignment to Ontario, as acted upon by the General Conference of 1952.

Respectfully submitted,

The Importance of Moral Fiber

CRUCIAL TIMES require strong men. Moral fiber requires high ideals that have been tested in the crucible of time. As a youth Daniel was a captive in Babylon and subjected to humiliation and despair. His country was in bondage; people were saying his God was a failure, but Daniel refused to believe them or to do things he felt were wrong and would weaken him or violate his faith. He did not desert his ideals or his standards. He was subjected to many tests and was offered many opportunities to commit evil; but he steadfastly refused—he had the right moral fiber.

King Belshazzar and a thousand of his friends were having a feast. As they were desecrating the vessels from the temple by using them for drunken brawls, a handwriting appeared on the wall which neither Belshazzar nor his wise men were able to interpret. Daniel was called and asked to explain the handwriting; Belshazzar had heard he was a prophet and was able to discern many things. Daniel told Belshazzar that the writing meant he had been weighed in the balance and found wanting, that he was arrogant, irresponsible, irreverent, betraying his people and his kingly position. Daniel not only had faith in God, but was alert and possessed the wisdom and courage to make correct evaluations and to tell the king the truth even though it might mean personal discomfort and the possible loss of his life.

How is your moral fiber? Do you dissipate your life in careless living so that you are unable to do your best on your job? Are you immature in your adjustments? How do you get along with your friends and neighbors? Are you a good soldier who can be depended upon regardless of the emergency? Are you giving your best each day to your family, your community, your nation, and your God? These things are important; they deserve your best self. Only your best is acceptable to the Lord, surely you can afford to give no less.

Called to Build the Kingdom of God

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

A sermon given February 17, 1952, at Spokane, Washington; prepared for publication from a tape recording by David W. Gordon

TWO PROCESSES bring to pass the end of the wicked. In one, the wicked slay the wicked, thus eliminating themselves. In the other, God through his power transforms a wicked man into his child. This is the end of wickedness, too. For when men are won to Christ in the true sense of the term, when their natures are transformed under the power of God and in obedience to the gospel, they are no longer sinners. Their sins are destroyed, and they become new creatures in Christ.

Every prophecy I know of indicates there will be people on this earth when Christ comes. We believe as a church in the literal establishment of the kingdom of God, which is in harmony with every prophet, ancient and modern, who ever spoke.

A Prophecy Fulfilled

Latter Day Saints were very unpopular a hundred years ago, when they practically stood alone in proclaiming that the Jews would return to Palestine and be established a nation. God did not say every Jew would return; he said that the nation would be re-established. It seemed for a while even this would be an impossibility. It was remarkable how the land was delivered, and General Allenby together with his staff upon entering that city uncovered his head in a spirit of humility, recognizing that he was bringing to pass the fulfillment of a divine promise. It was remarkable how the Turks withdrew from that land without the city's having to be destroyed. You can see the hand of God moving through history if you look for it.

When very difficult negotiations were to be conducted between Jews and Arabs, a colored man, Dr. Ralph Bunche, was instrumental in bringing peace to the Holy Land. This is another indication that God is no respecter of persons. He can take those we consider weak and unimportant and use them as instruments for good in his hands. "Not by might, not by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

A Humble Instrument

Reorganized Latter Day Saints should not be unfamiliar with the fact that God selected a young man not yet fifteen years old to testify that the Father and the Son are alive, that they are capable of revealing themselves as personalities. This young man was used as an instrument in the hands of God in bringing forth the church which we represent today.

Righteous Relationships

The kingdom of God consists of men and women living together in righteous relationships. There are a great many institutions which call themselves after the name of God that are too much concerned with ceremony and institutionalism, having lost sight of the fact that righteousness is nothing more than right behavior. Before you can have right behavior, something has to happen within men that will transform their nature—you can't legislate men and women into right relationships!

As long as a man is a free agent and has the right to choose and act for himself, he must have a higher power to assist him to behave as a son of God. In his present state it is not natural for him to behave as a child of God. The trouble with many so-called Christian people is that they depend too much on their own strength. They have not understood what the righteousness of God really is, nor the effort necessary to become righteous.

A Difference in Standards

There's a vast difference between the standards of men and the standards of God. That which many people consider righteousness or right relationships is not truly righteous in the sight of God. In what we call the preface to the book of Doctrine and Covenants (the revelations of God to the church in these last days) God clearly reveals through inspiration "seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every one walketh in his own way and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of this world."

The nature of man is such that if he fails to visualize the true and everlasting God he will create a god for himself. People have been in the habit of creating gods who will condone their form of conduct.

God is concerned about our salvation, and the only salvation worthy of the name consists of men and women becoming righteous and putting on the divine nature. This divine nature comes from within and works out.

All Are Called

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Remember: "All are called."

I am glad to be identified with an organization in which every man, woman, and child has an equal opportunity to serve God. Wouldn't it be a terrible situation if only those of us under full-time appointment had that privilege?

I am glad that women do not have to be ordained in order to serve and that they do not have to be dependent upon the ministry of their husbands in order to have celestial glory in the hereafter. God is no respecter of persons. Everyone in his church is called, so this text applies to each and every one. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." Women have gifts by virtue of their nature that men do not possess, and vice versa. I am glad God has made this arrangement.

Our Business—Produce the Kingdom

In Paul's letter to the Corinthian saints he refers to the church as the body of Christ—"We are members in particular." You will discover it is the business of this body to bring forth the kingdom of God, and again, especially in the Inspired Version of the Scriptures, in the twelfth chapter of Revelation the woman referred to represents the church with her crown of twelve stars. She was in pain, travailing to be delivered. In this rendition is the definite statement that she was the church, and that she brought forth the kingdom of God which will make possible the return of Jesus Christ. It is the purpose of the body of Christ on earth to produce the kingdom of God. It is the business of the church with its organization, its ministry, its doctrine, its ordinances, its helps and governments to bring to pass the kingdom. For only as the church functions can a man develop Christly characteristics and the conduct of God be made manifest among men.

Transforming People

It's not easy to transform human nature. It's not easy to reveal the righteousness of saints. It requires everything that God has made available. Paul had this in mind when he admonished the people of his day not to neglect assembling together. Many people who merely become members and then are satisfied think they are safe. But there is no real salvation short of the righteousness of God.

A characteristic ministry in this church is carried on in the home. There is an office—the priest—who is to assist the people in all family duties. We believe that religion is a twenty-four hour proposition. I don't mean that you're not to take time out to sleep. If you have pure religion it is a part of you; it goes to bed with you, and it ought to get up with you; and I'll promise you the kind of sleep that is worth while if your religion is that type.

Wanted—A God Who Is

In a recent article I read that Harvard University is planning to revitalize its school of theology. This is commendable, but we are going to need more than theology to save the world. I am delighted with that article for this reason: the trustees of this great institution and their president recognize the fact that men are going to have to find out more about God.

While Harvard and other institutions are equipped as never before—not only to look into the depths of the earth but also to look further into the heavens than man has ever seen before, to split the atom, to do what universities have never done in the past—they have come face to face with the solemn realization that all of this is not enough.

In this same editorial a quotation from Emerson is pointed out. I could easily have thought he was a Reorganized Latter Day Saint when I read it. Back in 1838 this man Emerson called attention to the fact that what the world needed was not a God who was but a God who is!

I am delighted that these men of learning have at last come to the place where they realize that we must have something more than we now have in these great institutions of learning.

God's Church

How long will we have to wait before the great educators will recognize the fact that the instrument they need is already available? We are dealing now with things that are eternal. We can be good, but we've got to be even better than that. Goodness, as the world interprets it, is not enough. God is calling for an institution that will bring to pass his kingdom. In referring to the church that he—not men—established in 1830, he said it was the only church upon the face of the earth with which he was well pleased. It alone has the teachings and practices of the church he originally established.

Needed—A Demonstration

The nations now await the manifestation of the righteousness of the sons of God. Where can we point today to one community that reveals the righteousness of God in affairs of government, business, and social activities of its people? There must be such a community. We call it Zion. And after all, the definition of Enoch's city should guide us in our approach, for it was said of Enoch and his people that the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness.

If we had one such community—say of two thousand people who were in a position to exercise a righteous influence in controlling the affairs of government, business, and the social activities—we wouldn't have to argue which church is the church of Jesus Christ. It would speak for itself, and the thousands of worth-while men and women in other denominations would beat a track to it. Many people are seeking the kingdom of God as they never sought it before, and the Spirit of God is moving in their midst. God awaits us. We don't have to be concerned about him or his part. He has prophesied that the kingdom shall be a reality. He has said in no uncertain terms that it shall be upon the earth. He has indicated the time—and now is the time that has been indicated.

As you see the Spirit of God turning and overturning the nations, as you see men and women striving for light as they have never striven before, then you should be charged as a member of this church to manifest in correspondence with your brother these righteous qualities.

This is the ensign that is to be established. This was the standard that is to attract nations. There may come a time when we won't have an iron curtain. But whether there is an iron curtain or not, my belief is that if we would put into practice God's precepts, and follow the leadership that has been given to us in latter days, if we would gather together into the places where God has designated and manifest his righteousness, nothing will keep from these nations the knowledge that God is and that he has a people upon the earth.

We should feel fortunate in having an opportunity to be a laborer together with him. Remember these words: "Ye are called to his work"—not only called to be ministers but called as men and women, as boys and girls, to dedicate ourselves anew, recognizing the seriousness of the hour.

Understanding, Tolerance, and Patience

By Magistrate J. L. Prentice, Q.C.

THERE ARE THREE WORDS in our language which, if rightly understood and applied, would change the pattern of human behavior. They are understanding, tolerance, and patience. If we understood each other's problems and motives, we would be more tolerant of each other's actions and more patient with each other's foibles.

We hear and read a great deal about tolerance. We are exhorted to practice tolerance toward other races, colors, and creeds. Most of us are convinced that we are tolerant toward our fellows.

Unfortunately, the facts deny our claims of tolerance, for lamentable exhibitions of intolerance are often given by those who talk most about this virtue. We find intolerance most evident in religious circles. This is the cause of much personal suffering to sensitive souls.

Two people were discussing a third person who had made a complete rightabout turn in her mode of living. The sudden change in the woman's life had aroused the interest and the sarcasm of her friends, one of which exclaimed: "She's off the beam!"

The incident brought to my mind the words recorded in Acts 26: 24: "Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad."

PAUL was a positive character—a man who did everything with all he possessed. Some might say that he had a one-track mind; he concentrated his intellect, his energies, and his affection on one person, and he gave himself to the task without reservation.

Because he was a positive character, he was constantly in trouble with someone. Factions lined up against him. He was no middle-of-the-roader; he was never a fence-sitter. He was either for or against a man or an opinion. He was a religious zealot of the most bigoted type. But he was sincere, though at times misguided.

Breathing out threats against the Christians, this zealous little Pharisee stormed down the Damascus road, ready to bind the followers of Jesus. In his intolerant mission he had the backing and applause of men like Festus.

We can imagine the sadistic group cheering the misguided Paul on with the popular cry: "Atta boy, Paul! Exterminate these foolish Christians!" And Paul was in the mood to carry out their wishes. They were all with him as long as he was going their way.

Suddenly a light shone around him, and the fiery little crusader fell on the road. A voice spoke: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" And he said, "Who art thou?" The Lord said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest" (Acts 9: 4, 5). It was a dramatic moment. The blinded Paul, now humbled and repentant, cried: "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" At that moment Paul knew that he had been off God's beam, and he was ready to follow the divine light. "Go into the city," said the divine voice, "and it shall be told thee what thou shalt do."

It must have taken great courage to go back to the city and face his friends, confessing to them that he was a turncoat, that now he was going over to the camp of fools for Christ's sake. No doubt the furious cheerleaders heaped scorn and contempt on the new convert. The religious leaders of his day might be expected to be understanding and tolerant and patient toward this zealous man, but they were not. They became Paul's most avowed enemies. Their cheers had turned to sneers. Paul was off the beam—their beam.

THE SAME CONDITIONS exist today. Our tolerance, understanding, and patience are so superficial that we cannot be kind to those who differ from us in any respect.

We are often more tolerant of gross sin than we are of people who turn from negative works of religion to positive truths and spiritual experiences. And all too often people who have positive spiritual experience are in turn intolerant of those who have not been so blessed. They cannot wait patiently for God to work his miracle of grace and regeneration in the lives of their fellows. They grieve because they are misunderstood, while they themselves are guilty of misunderstanding. And so it goes.

If we understood the struggle that goes on in the hearts of some people striving for spiritual mastery, we would be more tolerant of them. If we knew the heart hunger, the discontent, and the frustration in the hearts of some of the seemingly calloused people around us, we would judge them less harshly.

We condemn enthusiasm in the realm of religion, while we tolerate and foster enthusiasm in sport, art, and other secular interests. We are intolerant of the men and women who give their lives to prayer and good works in the name of Christ, while we idolize the people who give all their time and energy to the perfection of secondary skills.

We make our young people cheerleaders and allow them to become clowns in the arena, but if a few of them become serious contenders in the spiritual realm we say they're "off the beam."

We need to reconsider our position on understanding, tolerance, and patience. The hospitals are overflowing with people who have been driven off the beam by lack of these virtues. We can do something about it by clearing up our personal misconceptions and intolerances.

A Deed to Palestine

An address delivered at a meeting of the Baptist Men's Club and the Jewish Men's Brotherhood at Hyannia, Massachusetts

By George E. Armeson

THE SUBJECT I am going to speak on is a deed. In my hand you see a legal blank. It is a blank for the conveyance of land and is entitled "Warranty Deed." You may wonder how this is related to Palestine. My object is to make this clear to you. Years ago lawyers were required to write into each deed what you see printed on the reverse side. It is as follows:

A deed in substance following the form entitled "Warranty Deed" shall, when duly executed, have the force and effect of a deed in fee simple to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, to his and their own use, with covenants on the part of the grantor, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and successors, with the grantee, his heirs, successors and assigns, that, at the time of the delivery of such deed (1) he was lawfully seized in fee simple of the granted premises, (2) that the granted premises were free from all encumbrances, (3) that he had good right to sell and convey the same to the grantee and his heirs and assigns, and (4) that he will, and his heirs, executors and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the grantee and his heirs and assigns against the lawful claims and demands of all persons.

The instrument known as a deed—the document for the conveyance of property—has an origin much older than you may suspect. Surely it came down to us from the English law, or perhaps the Roman law. But this came from a much older source. The following is read from a Bible (there are many versions, you know), and this version is "The Holy Scriptures Revised in Accordance with Jewish Tradition and Modern Biblical Scholarship." This version is purposely used; to obtain the approach to the viewpoint of the Jew, we should use the Jewish record.

And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly. And Abram fell on his face; and God talked with him, saying, As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham; for a father of many nations have I made thee. And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee. And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.—Genesis 17: 1-8.

YOU CAN SEE where the first recorded conveyance of land was made. You can see plainly where the language in the "warranty deed" originated. God made an everlasting covenant with your forefathers, but in this deed was a condition. If you deed a parcel of land to me and include in the deed a legal condition, and I violate that condition, the land reverts to you. At least I lose right to possession. God put a condition in the deed to Abraham and his seed, and this condition was "walk before me, and be thou perfect." The history of the Jewish people, sounded by your father David, states that when you did follow the word of the Lord you prospered; when you followed your own ways, you suffered. Israel was in bondage, at one time, for seventy years because it failed to do God's will.

The Reorganized Latter Day Saint is committed to the proposition that the land was left desolate, to be, according to prophecy, a wilderness inhabited by wild men. This prophecy literally came to pass and for nearly 2,000 years your people have wandered the face of the earth, homeless. Much to your credit the dream of the return to Palestine has been kept alive ever since Abraham's day by all of you fathers and your fathers before you. When you were little boys you were told of the covenants God made with Abraham, and you have held precious these promises. This is well. Not until past the middle of the nineteenth century did the return to your homeland begin. Since then the rains have been restored to the land as foretold. God is moving on the face of the land, and your hearts should be glad.

Wherever your people have been, your lot has been difficult. In our own enlightened day, a disciple of violence has decimated your world population by 25 per cent. Four million of the sixteen million Jews in the world were baked in gas chambers and the like. The return to your homeland has been precipitated upon you. All that prevents you is the condition to walk before Him and "be you perfect."

I CAN APPRECIATE something of the burning desire you have to return to your homeland. It has been my privilege to attend Zionist meetings, and in New York my wife and I attended the opening engagement of the play, "A New Flag Is Born." We could not get tickets, and being referred to the theater were told that the house was sold out, but while we stood at the office two tickets were returned for the third row. We were both grateful that we did not miss this performance. The plot was the story of the resurgence of the need for the homeland, the barriers that were in the way, and at the end Star Paul Muni appeared on the forward part of the stage with a tommy gun in one hand, while the staff carried the Star of David flag in the other, and shouted out defiantly the declaration of war upon all who blocked the return to Palestine.

What kept the walls on the building we shall never know. This close was immediately met by a thunderous response of shouts, whistles, and screams from the whole audience. I sat quietly beside my wife, tears running down my face on to my clothing, realizing that, although their hearts were concerned in the right direction, they were in error by attempting to force the hand of God. They might obtain possession of the land, but it can never be theirs until they comply with the condition in the grant. Men must sometime come to the conclusion that they cannot do the work of Almighty God and the Lord Jesus Christ while they are acting like demons. When we can look about us and see rulers of the world arming the Jews to fight for their freedom of the Holy Land by means of planes, guns, and tanks, it is pitiful to contemplate the disappointment in store. These are little men trifling with the affairs of God. Ignorance of what God wants still clogs their minds, and they set themselves up against the Almighty.

Gentlemen, believe me when I say that I would not want to have been born at any other time. Five hundred years ago I could not have witnessed even the beginning of the return to Palestine. No more can I read the Scriptures and wonder if God has defaulted on his promises. The promises he made to your fathers are still good and will be fulfilled. Your way will not be easy; there is much yet to suffer. And for the benefit of any Christian believers here, you also have much to suffer if you would take Christ at his word. If you are children of the promise, your way will be hard. If you take up the cross, persecution will inevitably follow, but then comes the crown—and to the Jew his ageless home.

A Jewish dentist friend of mine in Malden told me a story one day in his office. On his way to work one morning he came to the railroad just as the bars went down to let a freight train pass. As the cars slowly rolled by, on the side of a gondola was painted, not in scrawled work but neat lettering, these words: "Malden must get rid of the G-- D---- Jews." Horrified at the words, he said he felt suddenly alone, saying to himself, "No, not here! This is America, this could not happen after Hitler!" As if for self-assurance he listened to the comments of the people about him, and not one of them showed any indignation. The consensus expressed was "You're right!" He asked me if I thought his people would be driven from America. I could only state that, according to the convictions held by Reorganized Latter Day Saints, he could presume that this condition would some day exist. I assured him that from a real Christian he would suffer no injury, but I had my doubts of how many of them he would encounter.

Our salvation not only is linked up with the salvation of the Jew; it is dependent upon it. All of the promises of Christ to us are, strangely enough, "to the Jew first." No matter what comes, we cannot be deluded into the belief that God will not keep his promises. Every one of them will be kept, and the great dream he built up in the hearts and minds of your fathers, from Abraham down, will truly come to pass. The deed will be made good, for there will be some who will trust the all-powerful hand of God. There is no cause for lasting dismay; rather we should lift up our hearts and rejoice.

The Lion's Den

Man is the only animal of which I am thoroughly and cravenly afraid. I have never thought much of the courage of a lion tamer. Inside the cage he is at least safe from other men. There is not much harm in a lion. He has no ideals, no religion, no politics, no chivalry, no gentility; in short, no reason for destroying anything that he does not want to eat.—Bernard Shaw

Catholic "Missionary" Recommends "The Call at Evening"

By William Patterson

TORTUOUS HIGHWAY 160 is laid in a picturesque part of Colorado. On it one drives west over the mighty Rocky Mountains at scenic Wolf Creek Pass, then winds through verdant valleys and over and around mountains of lesser altitude until he reaches the small town of Bayfield—the setting of this brief sketch.

Mrs. Cecil F. Lewis, a devout Presbyterian, felt an urge to expand her religious horizons. With a Baptist friend she read literature of other denominations and of world religions. Her study led her through divergent fields of religious thought, but she failed to reach the object of her search until one day when returning literature to her Catholic friend. This friend said, "Louise, I have a book which might interest you. It is The Call at Evening." Later Mrs. Lewis was able to say, "This book answered most of the things I wanted to know."

Before she died three years later, the Catholic friend confided, "I know it is the true gospel, but I couldn't leave the Catholic Church."

Learning that her neighbor, Mabel Leonard, was a member of the Reorganized Church, Mrs. Lewis visited her home where she learned more about the principles of the gospel and obtained other literature. Two months later she attended a district conference at Delta; while there she was baptized and had her infant son blessed.

Returning from the conference she was received coolly by her friends who thought she was "out of her mind to join such a church," but soon they were friendly again. "During the war years," she says, "we were without transportation most of the time, but somehow I was able to attend a few meetings in Durango twenty miles away and several district conferences. In 1947 we bought a car; since then we have attended services more regularly."

In 1947 Marvin, the son who had been blessed, was baptized. Three years later her husband and daughter Sharon were baptized at Delta. Mr. Lewis didn't go to the conference to be baptized, but thought he'd take some clothes along—in case. Carol, the third child, has been blessed and is looking forward to her baptism.

Through the proper authorities Brother Lewis and his son Marvin were called to the Aaronic priesthood, and in the service in which their names were presented for approval, Sam Burch, a member of "the council of twelve" of the Ute Indians (but not a member of the church) arose and said: "I have traded with Mr. Lewis for ten years and have found him to be a perfectly honest man. . . . He treats all men as equal. . . . If God called him I know it is right."

The Lewises have conducted a general store in their town for many years, and during that time they have had the good will and respect of the community. Brother Lewis is more than a storekeeper in his community. To some old people he is a private banker and adviser, and when his customers are sick or in trouble he is the first to be called and consulted. Members of the Ute Indian tribe travel far to trade with him because he is one "paleface" in whom they have confidence. He is impartial, trusting, and trustworthy. An imbibing character of the town came into the store once to borrow money, and after the amount requested had been given and he had made his exit, a friend who happened to observe the incident and knew the character of the borrower asked, "You don't expect to get that money back, do you?" Brother Lewis replied, "He has never failed to pay me back yet."

Each Sunday afternoon the Lewises drive to the Ute settlement at Ignacio to conduct services for the Indians. The results of this ministry are evidenced in the lives of these sons of Laman, and some are very interested in the gospel.

Sunday, March 2, 1952, at the district conference in Delta Brother Lewis was ordained a priest and his thirteen-year-old son Marvin was ordained a deacon. While ordaining the former, the Spirit indicated that those in charge place their hands upon the head of Sister Lewis for a special blessing.

Had not a Catholic woman handed The Call at Evening to her Protestant friend, this story could not have been written.

Power to Give

A Journey With an Idea

PART IV

By L. S. Wight

I CLOSED the Denver sermon with a story which I have used many times to illustrate from actual experience what can happen in the lives of people when they make an effort to express their power to give.

Forty Young People Working Together

In the early days of the depression, while we were living in Minneapolis, plans were announced for one of the youth conferences to be held on the Graceland campus. Our group decided that something should be done to send the branch young people to that conference. But how? No one had any money for such things, and there were some who thought that such a trip was beyond our means. Evidently the resourcefulness of youth was not given proper consideration. When those young people who wanted to make that trip realized that the adults wanted if possible to send them, they got busy and made their own plans. It wasn't easy, and it took months of planning to find a basis on which it could be done.

First they got all possible extra jobs to earn money, and they saved it. The young people of the Duluth area knew of a school bus which could be obtained. Their spirit was catching, and the adults seemed to forget their own needs in their intense desire to help the young people make that important trip. The power to give seemed to increase with every effort to give themselves to this accomplishment. There was disappointment of course, but out of the disappointment which developed has come a series of events in service which has opened the way for the expression of increased power to give. One brother who had hoped that his two youngsters would be interested in this trip came to Brother Wesley Elvin a day or two before the scheduled departure to suggest that since his two children would not make the trip, he would like to give the fund an amount of money equal to what he would have paid for his own son and daughter. It was accepted gratefully and almost immediately Brother Elvin received word that two of the girls who had planned to go could not do so because of unexpected circumstances over which they had no control. But since the way had already been provided they went.

The trip was very successful and some forty young people who had traveled from 350 to 500 miles had been given a better picture of what their church could mean to them. The surprising thing about this venture was that these young people returned to their home branches with a balance of about $75.00 in their fund. Then, because of the expression of a power to give by the adults, which had given these young people a memory to cherish and a secure foundation to which to pin their faith, they in turn suggested to the adults that if they would plan the same kind of group trip to General Conference the following spring, they could have the $75.00. At the next General Conference there was a large number of adults from the Minnesota District who had never before had the privilege of attending a General Conference. That is a good picture of what can be done with co-operation and a full expression of the power to give.

Definite spiritual growth has come from that experience. Nearly all of the young people who shared in these experiences have become active church workers. Adults and young people, having found a way to work for each other and to give to each other, have no time for the petty things which retard Zion's development. These good people have proved constantly over a long period of years that it pays spiritual dividends to find their power to give and then to develop that power in service to others. It will produce the same results anywhere.

Shortly after my return from Denver I flew to Philadelphia, leaving on an evening plane just before sunset. When the plane climbed above the clouds, I watched one of God's evidences of his power to give. The brilliant coloring of the sunset seemed to extend over that field of clouds as far as I could see. There is no use in my trying to describe it, I do not have the words, but for a few minutes I enjoyed a glimpse of what I imagine will be the beauty of the "other side" when the veil is lifted in our passing from the earth life. The memory of that picture is still with me and acts as an inspiration as I continue to develop my power to give.

A Mother's Gift

On my arrival at the hotel in Philadelphia I should have been given a note from Brother Jack Conway, but for once I was glad to see the hotel's service standard break down. Jack had asked me to preach the next morning, but as I did not get his message I went to church and listened to him preach one of the finest Mother's Day sermons I have ever heard. As I listened to him I remembered an incident in Minneapolis when his mother, a devoted church worker, came to me with concern because she could not give as much service as some others. I smiled in response as I suggested to her that she reminded me of another woman who had gone to her pastor with the same concern. He had answered her by asking how many children she had. Her answer was "Six." Then he said, "Sister, do you not realize that you have a branch of this church in your keeping? What more do you want than to develop those children to become good

Question Time

Question:

Who is the person in the Book of Mormon, II Nephi 6: 26-50, referred to as the "Holy One of Israel"? Is this calling Christ God?

Oregon

M. F.

Answer:

Nephi says Christ is the "Holy One of Israel," II Nephi 11: 55, with which other inspired writers agree, both in the Book of Mormon and in the Bible.

It is not infrequent that in the Three Standard Books, Christ is referred to as God. Isaiah says he is "The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father" (9: 6). When Christ appeared to the Brother of Jared "this man knew that he was God" (Ether 1: 83). Christ speaking in Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1 calls himself "God."

Christ is revealed as having all the attributes of Divinity and as the God of the world. He has said, "The Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; and I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one."—III Nephi 5: 27.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

In Doctrine and Covenants 99: 13, it is stated that there is no appeal from a decision of the Traveling High Council composed of the twelve apostles. It was always my understanding that the Standing High Council was our church supreme court and that all decisions could be appealed to this council. Would you please clarify this for me.

Ohio

R. E. M.

Answer:

A careful reading of Section 99 will indicate that it is not a revelation but the minutes of a meeting in which the High Council of the church was organized. Three councils are mentioned in this section. First, there is the High Council of the church regularly referred to as the Standing High Council composed of twelve high priests plus the First Presidency who presides. This is a permanent council located at the seat of the Presidency. Second, in paragraph eleven, provision is made for a temporary Council of High Priests, organized after the pattern of the Standing High Council, which may be called, to adjust difficulties abroad. Appeal from the decisions of this temporary council may be appealed to the Standing or Permanent High Council at the seat of the Presidency. These two councils are judicial. The third council mentioned is the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, which is primarily an administrative council. Decisions of this body can be called in question only by the general authorities of the church. The language of this paragraph is ambiguous as the Quorum of Twelve is not primarily a judicial body. The practice of the church in judicial cases is that the decision of the Standing High Council is final. From it there is no appeal unless an error or new evidence is brought to light and the case may again be referred to the Standing High Council by the decision and action of the First Presidency.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Please explain Matthew 8: 12 which says, "But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Texas

D. V.

Answer:

This is the rendering of the Authorized Version, but it has a simpler and clearer rendering in the Inspired Version which reads: "But the children of the wicked one shall be cast out into outer darkness . . ."

The context rather suggests that the application was to the unbelieving Jews who were supposed to be the children of the kingdom, but since they rejected their Messiah and the gospel with its blessings, they would be rejected and cast out into the world where they would wander without receiving the light of God. The point is amplified in Matthew 22: 1-10; 21: 34-48, I. V.; and verse 45 of the latter text reads, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," meaning the gentiles. See also verses 52, 53.

The passage is often interpreted as applying to the next world where the unbelieving and wicked are cast into outer darkness. This interpretation is not incorrect, for often such passages have a double application. If men in this life are not worthy of the favor of God because of sin, neither will they be accepted of him in the future world except they repent.

Question:

What is meant by "And this is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent"?—John 17: 3.

Iowa

J. W. T.

Answer:

Eternal life is a gift of God and comes by the Spirit of God, though it is not given without preparation on the part of the recipient. It is something to be gained by man's initiative in conforming to the requirements which God has set. "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."—Jeremiah 29: 13.

Two main requirements are revealed in the Scriptures as life policies for the man who would come to know God, seeking knowledge of him and attaining his righteousness. This involves entering into covenant relation with him, often spoken of as "obeying the gospel," sometimes as "receiving Christ." It is then that the Holy Spirit is given, which is "the Spirit of life," the "Spirit that quickeneth." It is the implanting of life within the soul, the entering in of Christ. "He that hath the Son hath life."

Eternal life begins in this world and becomes perfect in the world to come. It is by the reception of the spirit of life that the new birth is effected, and men become sons of God. John calls it "the Holy Spirit of promise," and in latter days the Lord has said it "is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life." It is by this Spirit that God is made known to man, and man is able to enter into consonance with God.

First Impressions of the Book of Mormon

By Nettie Frater

WHEN I FIRST HEARD of the Book of Mormon I thought of it as one thinks of a fairy story, not as something to believe seriously. But it caught my interest. I pricked up my ears at any mention of it. I read Paul M. Hanson's books on ancient America; yet I did not actually open the covers of the Book of Mormon. It was nearly eighteen years after my brother had become a Reorganized Latter Day Saint and I first heard of the Restored Gospel, before I settled down to read it.

At first I was disappointed. I missed the grandeur of the Old Testament language; I missed the little personal stories the Bible is so rich in; and I was disappointed that there was so little mention of women. As I read on I found the reasons.

I found that these people had a considerable literature, but when the Nephites were being wiped out by the Lamanites in the fourth century after Christ, Mormon made an abridgment of their history for three very definite purposes, and anything that did not contribute to those purposes was left out. They were 1. That there should be a second witness to Jesus Christ; 2. That Lamanites and Jews in future ages might be converted; 3. That the history of these people should not be lost.

THEN I BEGAN to think it was extraordinary that the book was written at all, and that Mormon managed to get an education himself and pass his knowledge to his only son Moroni. Mormon was just ten when Ammoron picked him out as the future keeper of the records because "I perceive that thou art a sober child and art quick to observe" (Mormon 1: 2). Though his people were continually at war, and in later days always on the move, Mormon went on with his abridgment and saw to it that Moroni, who was to complete it, knew reformed Egyptian and had the skill to make the characters on the gold plates. He himself also read and wrote Hebrew.

I thought to myself—suppose St. Paul had been in a similar position. If he had been told that the Roman civilization of his day was to disappear and that he must make an abridgment of all the Jewish holy books, our Bible would have been very different. Moses, the lawgiver, would certainly have been in it, but would the baby Moses in the ark of bulrushes have been mentioned? Samuel the judge would have been there, but what about Hannah and the little coat she made each year for the son she had given back to the Lord? I think Ruth would have been mentioned because she was David's ancestor, and so Christ's, but I doubt if the love story of Ruth and Boaz would have got in. So I began to see why the things I missed in the Book of Mormon had to be left out.

AS I WENT ON I found that the simplicity of the language had merits. Whereas in the Bible there was much that was difficult to understand and many of the prophecies were written in symbolical language, in the Book of Mormon everything was plain. Evidently the writers meant it that way because the first Nephi said, "For behold, my soul delighteth in plainness unto my people that they may learn" (I Nephi 11: 7). I soon realized that there was beauty in simplicity, too. When I read about the appearance of Christ to the Nephites in the land Bountiful, I thought I had never read anything more lovely (III Nephi 5: 1-12).

Then I found that ideas and beliefs that were left a little vague in the Bible were rounded off and explained by the Book of Mormon—baptism, for instance. The New Testament tells of people who "went down into the water," or "came up out of the water." Long before I was a Reorganized Latter Day Saint that sounded to me mighty like immersion; but I could not find any actual words that said so, nor could I find any mention of sprinkling. The Book of Mormon is quite exact.

"And after Alma had said these words, both Alma and Helam were buried in the water; and they arose and came forth out of the water rejoicing, being filled with the Spirit. And again, Alma took another, and went forth a second time into the water, and baptized him according to the first, only he did not bury himself again in the water."—Mosiah 9: 45, 46.

Then there's polygamy. In the Bible it is quite evident that David and Solomon did not fulfill the promise of their youth. They both started out so brilliantly and were so blessed of God, yet deteriorated rapidly in later years. The Bible leaves us to work out the reason for ourselves, but the Book of Mormon is quite definite about it. "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord" (Jacob 2: 33).

NOTHING PLEASES me more than to find the ruling on the innocence of children. Jesus said in the New Testament that if we could not become as little children we could not enter into the kingdom of heaven. In spite of that the early Roman Catholic Church spread the idea that children who died before they were baptized would be damned. The Book of Mormon speaks with authority on the matter. "For behold, he judgeth, and his judgment is just, and the infant perisheth not that dieth in his infancy" (Mosiah 1: 117).

We hear a lot about the lost Ten Tribes of Israel. In the Bible we read how the tribes were taken captive to Assyria; then they vanish from history. Some people think these lost tribes are the British nations; others think that is all a great joke. I found from the Book of Mormon that the matter is in God's hands. It says quite simply, "For behold, the Lord God has led away from time to time from the house of Israel, according to his will and pleasure" (I Nephi 7: 38).

When I first began to think that the Book of Mormon might be fact and not fancy I was in a quandary. Like most Protestants I had been brought up to believe in the Bible as the basis of my religious beliefs. When then should I have to believe in another book, or rather, two more books? This is what the Book of Mormon has to say about that situation. "Thou fool, that shall say, A Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible. . . . Wherefore murmur ye, because ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God?" (II Nephi 12: 53-59).

IF THE BOOK OF MORMON and the Restored Gospel were true, surely it was not unreasonable, I thought, to ask for a sign. But no sign was given to me. One day when we were talking about the matter, a friend quoted the words Jesus spoke to Thomas: "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed." Another said, "There are plenty of signs in the Bible and in the lives of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints you know." And this is what I found the Book of Mormon had to say about people like me: "Yea, there are many who do say, If thou wilt show unto us a sign from heaven then we shall know of a surety; then we shall believe. Now I ask, Is this faith? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for if a man knoweth a thing, he hath no cause to believe, for he knoweth it" (Alma 16: 139, 140).

On my first reading of the Book of Mormon I thought, "O dear, what a lot of long sermons!" I wished the writers had told us more about the daily lives of the people; what they wore and what the country looked like. There are so many things one would like to know. But after I became a Reorganized Latter Day Saint I went back and read those sermons again. I found they were the most wonderful series of prophecies. From the very beginning the Nephite prophets knew that Christ was to come, and described the event in great detail. They also knew about the discovery of America by Columbus, the translation of the Book of Mormon by Joseph Smith, the return of the Jews to Palestine and many other things. These prophecies were much plainer than anything that was given to the Jews. The Nephites were favored, too, in the direct way that Christ came to them, so that they were able to accept his teaching more easily than the Jews had. I thought how strange it was that these people, separated from the rest of the world, were as Alma said, "favored above every other nation, kindred, tongue or people" (Alma 7: 28).

THE FIRST TIME I read about the Nephite Golden Age, I thought it was just too good to be true. But now that I am a Reorganized Latter Day Saint I know it was true and that it must have been the most wonderful time on this earth, except the days of the city of Enoch. I know, too, it is not just something that happened in the past; it is in the future as well, for Zion will be like that. I never tire of reading about it.

And it came to pass that there was no contention in the land, because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people. And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults, nor whoredoms, nor lyings, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness; And surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God. There were no robbers, nor murderers, neither were there Lamanites, nor any manner of ites; but they were in one, the children of Christ, and heirs to the kingdom of God.—II Nephi 1: 17-20.

The Bible still stands in its ancient place; but the Book of Mormon has opened a whole new world to me, and I enjoy exploring that world.—Reprinted by permission from The Standard (Australia), March, 1952.

Is There a Doctor in the Camp?

By F. Carl Mesle

LAST SUMMER a young camper developed symptoms which the camp nurse felt required the immediate attention of a doctor. In vain the camp director tried to locate a near-by doctor with whom arrangements had been made to handle such situations. Finally, to avoid further delay which might be detrimental to the camper's health, the director called Dr. Grabske, church physician in Independence, who happened to be the camper's family physician. In the course of treating the patient Dr. Grabske made a comment to this effect, "Here is another evidence of the need for doctors in summer church camps."

With from 60 to 150 or more campers and leaders in our youth camps, there would seem to be real value in having a doctor in each camp. While every precaution is taken to safeguard health, the normal activities included in camp programs, such as active games, hiking, outdoor cooking, swimming, riding, and even the use of double-deck bunks for sleeping, involve some hazard. When we have added to those the emotional strain of being away from home, perhaps for the first time, and the various complexes that teen-agers sometimes suffer, the presence of a doctor in camp would give increased peace of mind to parents and staff members alike.

Registered Nurses Required

For years our camp standards have required a registered nurse, and the evidence is that this safeguard has paid excellent dividends. The addition of optional or compulsory insurance in the camp program has helped, also, to give an added feeling of security when it comes to paying occasional medical bills which might tax a family budget. All these are good, but the nurse feels her need to refer anything of a serious nature to a doctor, and insurance does not cover the mental and physical anguish of pain.

One or two of our youth camps have already had doctors signed up as staff members, not in the capacity of camp doctor, but to give leadership in other fields of interest. Thus the doctor would give a week to the camp, enabling him to engage in activities which provide relaxation and recreation while at the same time providing an over-all amount of security to the camp health and safety.

Why haven't we had more doctors in camp? Apparently those who have responsibility for assembling camp staffs either have not been able to find an available doctor in the church or have felt that he was too busy to be asked. Yet those same individuals will ask busy teachers, tradesmen, mothers, and professional people in other lines of work to give a week of their vacations to serve in the nearly three dozen youth, junior high, and girls' camps conducted by districts and stakes throughout the church. Why not more physicians? Perhaps it is because not enough have specifically been asked to help.

An Opportunity for Medical People to Serve

Unless our medical people hold priesthood in the church, their busy schedules may provide them less opportunity to serve in many routine ways than can individuals of other professions and businesses. Participation in our camps would provide an excellent opportunity to serve the church in a way which would bring dividends not only to the camps and the church but very definitely to those medical people who respond.

If youth camps are not to their liking or do not match their vacation schedule, there is still the need for doctors in attendance at reunions. This summer our districts and stakes are contemplating forty-eight different reunions with an attendance at each expected to vary anywhere from 250 to 2,000 persons of all ages and physical conditions, including grandfathers, expectant mothers, and small children. If ever there was a potential need for skilled and sympathetic medical people, it is at our reunions.

Last summer at one of our family camps, we saw just such an instance of service. A doctor, who was unable to attend his home reunion, took his family to a reunion in another area. While they enjoyed a splendid vacation, which provided for both their physical and spiritual health, this doctor was also able to render medical services of an emergency nature; it would have been quite difficult in that area to have found a local doctor. His willingness to answer the calls of the camp nurse was appreciated by everyone there, and his fine spirit of service added to the quality of Christian love which permeated all the activities of that reunion. Are there such doctors elsewhere in the church who will go to reunion this summer?

Blessings Received From Paying Tithing

Although I had given many offerings to the church, until recently I had never paid tithing. We are in the lower income bracket, and I didn't really see how we could afford to. Then I realized that if I was ever to start I could not keep putting it off. I didn't see how it was possible, but God has provided a way. The greatest blessing I have realized is that now I really feel that I am a part of the church. I am actually helping, and the church is mine now more than ever before.

I ask the Saints to remember me and my family in their prayers.

The Burtons in Australia

I was interested in the article, "Fifty Years of Growth in Australia," by W. J. Haworth in the Herald of May 12, 1952. I am the granddaughter of Joseph and Emma Burton. I cannot understand why their names were not mentioned in this historical review.

It was at the 1884 conference at Stewartsville, Missouri, that J. F. Burton was appointed to the South Sea Islands Mission with T. W. Smith. Brother Smith went to the Society Islands, and Brother Burton to Australia.

Joseph and Emma Burton arrived at Sydney in December of that year. They were taken to the home of Brother and Sister Ellis. Brother Burton soon left to look after the work in Wallsend, Newcastle, and Hamilton, and was joined later by Sister Burton. They lived for awhile in one part of Brother and Sister Haworth's house, and spent some time in Forster, Nambucca or Victoria, and Hastings. Branches were established at Queensferry, the "Mills," and Mount Eden.

Sometime later after returning to New South Wales, they went to North Forster (now Tuncurry) and were located at the home of Brother and Sister Wright. While in this place Elder Burton baptized twenty-four candidates at one time before Elder Burton came up out of the water.

From Forster they went to Argenta Hill, near Nambucca, and stayed with the Saints—the Argents, Ballards, and Buckmans. Three months prior to their returning to America they were joined by Brother and Sister T. W. Smith, who came from the Society Islands. They spent three and a half years in Australia, and were replaced by Elders J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth.

This, of course, is a very brief outline of their work in that mission. Many people were blessed by their ministry.

Escape From Death

In 1936, while in nurses' training at Houston, Texas, I became ill. After a while the doctors told my parents I would soon be well again, but Elder Spiller, a retired missionary, was given to know while administering to me one day that I would become much worse and be near death, yet be healed in time. I knew nothing of this and was too ill to care. True to the prophecy I grew weaker and weaker. I became addicted to drugs, developed leakage of the heart, was partially paralyzed, and nearly lost my sight.

The best medical men were called for consultation; none of them held any hope for my recovery. I prayed that I might die and several times felt myself slipping away. At these times I would be conscious of a warm presence saying, "Not yet." Then I would sleep. Although my parents resigned themselves to the fact that I might die any minute, they wrote the Herald for prayers in my behalf. As a last resort they called in a brilliant German physician, Dr. Hoddy. After he had examined me he told them that I was beyond medical aid and that they should go home and pray he would be inspired as to what treatment to use. Dr. Hoddy was not a religionist. He would swear one minute and praise God for his mercy the next. He was a genius in the medical world but gave God the credit for his accomplishments. The following morning he ordered the nurse to put me in a wheel chair outside in the sun. All medicine and drugs were taken away, and the nurses were told to force food and water down me. For ninety-nine days I had been fed intravenously. That was the beginning. He preached sunshine so consistently and emphatically that the nurses nicknamed him, "Sunshine Hoddy."

Elder Winegar of San Antonio came to Houston and, since he knew my parents, was asked to administer to me soon after the sunshine treatments began. During his prayer he said the Spirit made known to him that God was performing a miracle by healing me. This was not for my good alone but for the strengthening of others in the church. His revelation was much the same as Brother Spiller's had been months before, and he told my parents to tell the Saints of my healing.

I began to improve rapidly. A nerve specialist, who had told me I would never walk again, predicted that at best I still would be able to get around only by use of a wheel chair. Then Brother Spiller came to the hospital to tell me that in a dream the night before he had seen me completely recovered and able to run as well as walk. When I could take a few steps, Dr. Hoddy presented me at a medical meeting in Houston where he lectured on my case. The specialist who had predicted I would never walk was the first to applaud.

I left the hospital nine months from the day I had entered as a patient. I needed no crutches; my heart was strong; my eyesight good; and I was completely cured of drug addiction.

I have not seen the good Saints at Houston since I left, but I want to testify to them that it was the prayers of the Saints that restored my health. I was not worthy and faithful enough to deserve such a blessing unassisted. Today I am healthy and happy. During the past four years I have been employed in a hospital at Lebanon—a job that demands a great deal of walking. My doctor here laughed at me when I told him I once was crippled and had leakage of the heart.

I know this gospel is true; I could never deny it and live. The peace that comes to me when I live as I should is indescribable. It is my hope that I shall be worthy of the blessings I have and be able to help others find the way Christ invites all to walk in.

Comment on "The Curse"

I read with interest the editorial, "The Curse," in the issue of June 2.

Would to God there were more of this kind of articles written and interest taken to abolish this accursed thing. We need these not periodically but continuously.

The cursed thing in this article is liquor. Liquor interests are continuously advertising and talking about their product. That is the reason so many people think liquor is all right. Also, a great many people are beginning to wink at it. They see in many magazines and on television the pretended benefits of drinking.

We hear many good sermons urging us to obey the Gospel, but speakers seldom strike at the evils which are the very roots of pre-

The Battle Against Human Weaknesses

I want to say that, in response to the article, "First Things First," I have experienced some real struggles against jealousy, temper, contrariness, selfishness, criticism, envy, impatience, fear, and emotional insecurity. I have not always been successful, but I have learned that I must go to my Heavenly Father for help with such trials. Often his Spirit has stopped a critical word before it was spoken.

My biggest battle is in the home, especially when we are rushed or tired. I have been made to realize I haven't been wise at times in using my strength. This is the reason for many unkind words.

Soon after the Melvin Russells came to Flint our daughter stopped at their home for a few minutes to wait for a ride to play practice. While there she observed the good-natured way their boys shared the chore of doing dishes. She commented to me the following day, "My brother and I would have argued under the same conditions." I know she has thought of this fine example many times and tried to put it into practice in her own life.

Another time my youngster said, upon my impatience about something that didn't go as I had planned, "Do you think I want to be that way?" This remark has caused me to realize how much we need to pray for each other.

These are only a few examples of the battles we have been waging against our human weaknesses. I am sure other people have similar experiences.

Power to Give

church members?" Then I suggested to Violet that since she had five—which would be almost a branch—I would give her the same answer.

After hearing Jack's sermon, I sent a note to Sister Conway reminding her of the incident and suggesting that if she could have been with me to hear the tribute her oldest son had paid to her, as well as to all woman-kind, she would have felt repaid a thousand-fold for the care and direction which she had given to the raising of her family. I visited two branches in the New York-Philadelphia District and found that Jack is much loved and highly respected for the sincerity and effectiveness of his work. Would it be possible for him, or any other young man in church work, to create this kind of respect if a loving mother had not spent her energy in developing her power to give? The answer is obvious.

A Gift From Friends

Jack repeated his request for the following Sunday, and I enjoyed the privilege of preaching in the Philadelphia church. It has always been a very enjoyable experience for me, but this time my mind was full of the possibilities of talking about the power to give, and I took full advantage of the opportunity to again express my appreciation for the wonderful example these good people had set in giving to my wife a few years previously. Following a nervous breakdown, she traveled with me for several months. When we reached Philadelphia, our many friends there went out of their way to give her a chance for relaxation and rest. It proved to be the turning point in her recovery. It can easily be seen that I could preach to these people on this subject with some feeling.

But even the wonderful ministry of friendship given by our friends in Philadelphia would not have accomplished what it did if that ministry had not been preceded by another expression of friendship and full use of the power to give. At various times I had worked in the Buffalo area and while there had always made myself available to Brother Percy L. Weegar. On this trip we had been in Buffalo before going to Philadelphia. As soon as he learned that my wife was suffering, Dr. Weegar took her in charge and for the week we were there he gave of himself to render to her a service which proved to be a major part of her recovery.

Perce Judd

The following week I was in New York so called my good friend and fellow patriarch Le Roy Squires for instructions on how to reach the new meeting place. The Brooklyn Saints, like many other city church groups, had disposed of their church because of local conditions and were meeting in the Highland Park YMCA. When I arrived I found a new pastor, Brother Perce Judd, who had come from Australia as part of the delegation to the United Nations and had transferred to the permanent economic staff. Despite his many duties he is not too busy in that work to use his power to give in serving the church. I was privileged to spend part of the day in his home in the International settlement which was built to house people from all nations. If what little I saw is any indication of how peoples can get along together, it is apparently worth the cost of maintaining the United Nations to develop this practical example of the living together of various races, colors, and creeds.

In their home I found a typical Reorganized Latter Day Saint atmosphere with the usual interest in those things the church is trying to do. Graceland has had and will again have her share of this family. Early in the afternoon it was necessary for Brother Judd to go to his office in the new United Nations Building, to prepare for a trip the next day to Washington. He is constantly meeting and advising with economic groups from all over the world. Air trips to Europe are commonplace, and he always has time to discuss his church with the men he meets. To me this is an outstanding example of the promises of God that many ways will be found for the spreading of the gospel.

The power to give is a subject so inexhaustible that I continued to use it in most of my sermons during the year. It was the subject of my sermon on the last day of 1951 in San Antonio, Texas, where I again had the privilege of meeting Hubert Baker. I was particularly appreciative of the chance to let Hubert hear what I had done with his idea. His comment was "I would not have developed it that way." That is only more evidence of its depth of meaning. He would have followed the pattern of his mind and developed the idea in an entirely different manner than I did. This only proves that it is so basic it makes no difference how we use it. It is applicable to our life problems and will solve those problems if we will only make certain that we develop our potential power to give.

Wherever I go I find many good people expressing their power to give. I believe that Zion will be redeemed. My experiences force me to believe also that the world is full of good people who have an innate power to give, and who will use that power for the building of Zion once they understand the rich rewards which come from doing something for someone else.

Young People Hold Convention

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The ninth annual Zion's League convention for the stake was held in Detroit, Michigan, March 7-9. A banquet opened the convention. This was held in Windsor. The table decorations represented ten countries in which the church has missions or branches. Jack Pement, district president of the Eastern Michigan District, was the guest speaker. His subject "My World, My Mission" was the theme of the convention.

On Saturday morning a group of 112 young people took a tour through Greenfield Village, after which they returned to Central Church and attended classes conducted by Brother Pement and Bishop Wayne Updike.

The northern branch of the YMCA was the scene of the Saturday evening's activities. Norman Myr arranged for the accommodations which provided for ping-pong, volleyball, kick ball, along with other sports, including swimming.

The Sunday morning prayer service was held at Central Church. A letter from a group of young people of the stake was read. This was the testimony of twenty-three Graceland students who could not be present. Jack Pement preached at the morning hour.

A panel discussion was held in the afternoon. Questions vital to the young people were discussed and answered by a panel consisting of Blair McClain, president of the stake, Bishop Wayne Updike, Jack Pement, Bob Flanders, Bob Voltmann, Milton Carswell, Gladys Belrose, and Joyce Richardson. Dick Lancaster directed the discussion. A short class session was held following this.

Meals were served during the convention by Mildred Belrose, leader of the stake-wide serving circle.

Bob Voltmann, stake young people's leader, along with other youth leaders feel that the increase in attendance over last year is largely due if not a direct result of the all-day Zion's League activities which have been held each month in the various congregations in the stake.—Reported by HAZEL CHAMBERS

Missionaries Hold Series

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, CENTRAL BRANCH.—Progress is being made on the new church building, and the Saints are meeting in it. Leadership in the completion of the building is being given by Pastor Paul Wellington, George Clark, Harold Chandler, Don Leland, and many others. The women's department is furnishing the kitchen. Another project has been to improve the prayer meeting attendance and participation, under the guidance of Elder Glen Dale Smith. A third recent project has been the young adults cleaning and repainting the big swimming pool at Happy Valley reunion grounds.

An area religious education institute was held May 24-25, under the leadership of Sister Elizabeth Schall, district religious education director. The women's department furnished the meals.—Reported by EDWARD BUCKLEY

Saints, Sinners, and Psychiatry, by Camilla M. Anderson, M.D. (J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. $2.95.)

THE QUEST for the bluebird—by nations and by individuals—continues.

"Religious people, statesmen, philosophers, politicians, sociologists, and others have long been engaged in presenting their versions of how the good life is to be achieved. Perhaps psychiatrists can contribute a little toward clarification through use of slightly different terms and concepts," says the author, who is a practicing psychiatrist and Assistant Clinical Professor of Psychiatry, University of Utah.

Psychiatrists say, according to Doctor Anderson, that this feeling of happiness which we seek all our lives is, in reality, freedom from anxiety; that the "conscious or unconscious goal of every person in every detail of his life is to maintain himself as free from anxiety as possible." She defines anxiety as a psychological pain so uncomfortable that we do our best to remain free of it, and believes that only through an understanding of anxiety, what it is, what causes it, how it affects us, how to rout or forestall it, can we accomplish anything like a psychologically painless existence.

BUT FROM THIS POINT of agreement with other doctors of the mind Doctor Anderson begins to differ. She writes, "Those who are familiar with psychiatric concepts will be aware that a new formulation of the dynamics of behavior has been presented which has some details in common with other theories (Freud, Adler, Sullivan, Shidler) yet is distinctly different from all of them. The points of view are, on the whole, so familiar to people as a result of their own experiences and the terminology so common that there is a feeling of at-homeness with the entire concept."

She says further that we behave as we do, not because we are sinful or virtuous, but because of our need to be free from anxiety. The action patterns we follow individually in our search for tensionless living were built into our characters by pressures during childhood put on us by the significant persons (those who had power over us) in our lives. Like Popeye, the comic strip character, each one of us can say: "I 'yam what I 'yam, and that's all I 'yam."

"We are neither saints nor sinners" is the author's contention, "just human beings struggling with the faculties and shackles we have." We assault each other physically and psychologically that we might reach our goal—freedom from anxiety. Our common denominator is our need for peace of mind, and in our finding of it we bring anxiety to other human beings as desperate as we are.

DOCTOR ANDERSON does not believe that perpetual freedom from anxiety is a desirable goal. To be free from all worry would mean that we must isolate ourselves from all humanity, be free from all human entanglements. It is obvious that this is not the way to happiness for most of us. We need people. But when we mingle with people we immediately run into the problem of getting along with them. They are as set in their ways of behaving as we are. Anxiety thus develops in all of us.

But anxiety, like a physical pain, has a value for us, if we will but try to understand our own behavior and that of others. "I have never known a person," says Doctor Anderson, "who, having experienced anxiety and followed through to an understanding of the factors within himself that determined his behavior, feelings, and assumptions, did not regard the occurrence of his troubles as the most fortunate experience of his life. The new appreciation of oneself and the consequent new appreciation of the other fellow, achieved through such insight, are the foundations for a willingness to work and compromise together. Realistic approaches and realistic attitudes will begin to be worked out and to supplant the old smugness and arrogance, and peace of mind and peace in the world will come closer to being a fact than a dream."

JUST HOW can one work through to this necessary understanding of human behavior without spending more time and money in a psychiatrist's office than the average person can afford, assuming (which is not true) that there are enough psychiatrists to go around?

Doctor Anderson has the answer. Let the individual work out his own salvation, with help from the experts. "Time and again," she writes, "the answers for which science has been looking have been found in the common folklore of the people. The simple, inexperienced people have had the answers already, and it remained only for the experts to clarify the mechanics by which they operated or functioned."

DOCTOR ANDERSON offers her theory of behavior to help these troubled persons to help themselves. She admits that her theory may be rejected by some merely because of its simplicity and familiarity, because many persons think that, to be valid, a theory must be difficult of comprehension by the average person.

However, she does not offer a short course in push-button psychiatry. She does not give specific advice about what to do when there is trouble in one's life. She says, "No directions are given; no formula is set forth. The implication is clear, however, that when a person has an accurate understanding of the mechanism of operation of any device or of human beings in general, he will feel less at sea when he looks at himself and his malfunctioning life."

Looking at all the misery in the world because people do not understand each other, she is not afraid that the situation is hopeless, provided work on it is not left to the experts. Every person must work on it, especially those who deal with children under the age of twelve. "Don't wait for action by some government agency on this problem of peace of mind," she cautions, "nor for some philanthropic leader to finance work on it. Get to work in your own close area. For in the final analysis, movement toward mental health depends on us as individual people and parents."

This is not a book for drowsy summer reading. Since it presents a new theory it requires closer attention than if it were merely a restatement of well-known principles. The author promises that her theory, if acted upon, will bring to the reader a new sureness and calmness in dealing with interpersonal problems which will lead to a new freedom from anxiety, new happiness, and success in his contacts with all other saints and sinners.

Hobbies for Happiness

By Maude D. Anderson

DO YOU HAVE A HOBBY? If not, then you should get one, for in these days of high-pressure living, there is nothing like a good hobby for relaxation. It is said to be one of the surest ways to keep healthy and happy and to keep the mind active. It makes little difference what the hobby is; so long as it is something that appeals to the individual, it will help to keep the face free of worry lines.

While many hobbies are of a constructive nature, those which I have chosen to tell about are usually referred to as collections. The collection of some given article, be it ever so humble, is a hobby indulged by many. It may be anything from buttons and bows to miniature elephants or antique furniture. Stamp collecting has long been one of the most popular as well as profitable of hobbies, but equally interesting is the collecting of postmarks. Some of these are indeed unique, and the hobbyists pride themselves on being able to construct words, phrases, and even sentences by combining the names which appear on the various postmarks. Such achievements surely take some ingenuity.

SOME PEOPLE have collections of old coins; others, salt and pepper shakers or bottles; still others, pitchers. Perhaps these seem like a waste of effort, but at least they give the person something as a stimulus for conversation that is not going to hurt a neighbor's reputation. There are those who complain that collections are nothing but dust catchers, but this criticism may be overcome by the construction of glass cases with shelves for housing the exhibits. A collector gets a real thrill out of being remembered by a friend who takes a trip and sends a small item to add to the collection.

One lady who collects pitchers has a system which could well be adapted to any collection. Since most of the pitchers are gifts from friends, sent to her as souvenirs of some trip, she wanted to remember just where each came from and who the donor was. When she received a pitcher she put a small sticker on the bottom with a number. The number was then entered in a file with the name of the person sending it and the place where it came from. She then collected everything that she possibly could about the place from where it was sent—a bit of history, a scenic post card, a snapshot of the friends on their trip, or some amusing high light. All were entered in her file book. People often marvel at her knowledge of faraway places although her traveling experience has been most limited. Her cheerful outlook on life is an inspiration to all who know her.

A button collection was one of the most surprising I have found. One usually thinks of buttons as prosaic things and of little value save from a viewpoint of utility. However, it seems that such was not always the case; in days gone by their fashioning required great skill, and they were very much a part of the decoration on a costume. The person whose hobby is buttons is always on the lookout for some rare old button which may have been worn by some famous person of history. Imagine what a furor there would be if someone should suddenly discover that he had acquired a button from the cloak of Sir Walter Raleigh! It takes a lot of study to keep up with the button game, for one has to be a real connoisseur of the fine arts in order to detect an original.

Another angle on buttons is to use those which have no value as collector's items for the making of miniature gardens. While I haven't tried it, I can well imagine that the button would have to be rather large and the plant of a small variety for such a garden. However, according to an authority, these wee gardens may depict any kind of scene from the polar regions to the tropical islands, and in a most realistic manner. It all depends upon the ingenuity of the artist and how skillful he may be with a pair of tweezers.

I ONCE HEARD of a lady whose collection was angels—anything from the old-fashioned Christmas tree angel to one on a modern Christmas card. Another woman collects copies of madonna paintings. There are a great many of these to be had, and there would be no limit to the amount of history to be learned in connection with them. Many of them were painted hundreds of years ago, and learning about the artists—where and how they lived, the obstacles they overcame to succeed—would be a constant source of inspiration to one who studied about them.

Old glass and china are other items which are a challenge to the resourcefulness of the collector. Libraries have volumes written on these subjects, and one may study for hours endeavoring to learn if some bit of glass or dainty china is as valuable as he had hoped when he found it in the basement of an old second-hand store.

Antique furniture has long been popular with the hobbyist. One must admit that acquiring furniture is a bit more practical than some of the gadgets that people collect, providing of course that it is of the sturdier variety. However the real value of any hobby is not how practical it may be, but how much it keeps the mind operating in new channels rather than in deepening the old ruts of worry and dissatisfaction, for an active mind is a healthy, happy one. After all what we are all striving for is happiness.

BOOKS

Inspirational Talks for Women's Groups, by Florence Kerigan, is an excellent little paper-bound booklet, published first in 1951. The foreword by the author is in itself a very helpful discussion for the person who faces the task of leading the devotional service of a meeting. The author emphasizes the fact that it is much better to prepare one's own material if at all possible, but as not all are gifted along this line, she has prepared these talks and prayers as aids for those who feel themselves inadequate. She urges that her material, while it may be used as it is, should form the basis for one's own thoughts, and may be adapted to one's own group and its needs.

Eighteen talks are included in the book, together with prayers and hymn selections. The subjects are varied and furnish material for all the special seasons, such as Easter and Christmas, as well as for various other types of services throughout the year.

The thoughts expressed are sincere and uplifting, as well as practical and interesting. Reorganized Latter Day Saint philosophy and teachings can easily be worked into the talks, making them more effective.

This little book has been written particularly for use in women's meetings, and is valuable as such, but it could also be used profitably by anyone who has the responsibility of planning a worship service.

This booklet may be purchased from the Herald Publishing House for 85c.

Words That Count

By Lone Sartwell

HAVE YOU CHECKED your gospel terminology lately?

There is a familiar answer used by students from the grades through college which goes something like this: "I know what it is, but I don't know how to say it," and a still more familiar answer common to teachers: "Then you don't know."

This last blunt assertion is probably a little harsh. Perhaps there is a sort of cubby hole in everyone's mind where thoughts may be stored temporarily without words, but whether this be true or not, it is still an obvious fact that until these thoughts find language they cannot be communicated to anyone else.

When we speak of language we recognize that it is not entirely confined to words. There is communication of thought in art and music, and sometimes kindred minds need few words to make themselves understood to each other. But, as church members with a missionary purpose, we need to be vitally concerned with the language of words, for unless and until our hearers feel in their hearts that which we want them to feel, they have only our words by which to judge our story.

FIRST OF ALL, we need to stop and analyze some of our favorite answers and listen to them as if we were hearing them for the first time. We may find that some of our nicest-sounding words, phrases, and sentences have been lulling us into a sort of mental slumber. What do we mean by the redemption of Zion? Nonmember friends may understand build Zion or establish Zion, for other communities have been built and established, but why do we want to redeem Zion?

It gives us a unique feeling to have the one and only Restored Gospel, but what was it restored from? From the wilderness where it went after Jesus set it up on earth? But what was it doing in the wilderness? "Oh, that's a figurative expression meaning . . ." The test lies in finishing the sentence.

Of course, words and phrases can have their meaning shaved away by too much definition, but much of our gospel language needs to be seen as others see it. "What does it really say?" we might use as our check question. Would I really think so if someone else had not told me? Then how am I telling it to someone else?

WE NEED TO SCREEN our language not only for lack of true meanings, but also for stumbling blocks to deeper understandings. We take pride in saying "we have no catechism," yet perhaps it is only the absence of the printed form which gives us this distinction. Too easily satisfied with stock answers, we block our minds to deeper insight into many of our basic concepts.

"The Book of Mormon is a history of the American Indian," our children often chant glibly. "God told Joseph Smith not to join any of the other churches." "Jesus will come again and reign over us." All of these are correct within themselves, but they need to serve as points of departure to a broader knowledge. Does the child know in what sense the Book of Mormon is a history, we might ask, or does he associate it in his mind with his school textbook? In other words, does he know its special significance to a specific church? How does it happen that God was so exclusive in putting his ban on all other churches? What is his relationship to them today? How will Jesus reign? Must we revert to a kingship to give him that power? Or will we continue to function as a democracy? If so, will that make Jesus a president instead of a king? These are but a few of the questions which beckon us into new fields of thought if we do not stop and close the gate on our stereotyped statements.

THIS FAILURE to seek new concepts through new language may catch us off guard, too. I had always had a pat answer for "Why are you called 'Reorganized'?" right on the tip of my tongue. Then one day when I said, "I belong to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and waited for my cue, I was caught short with "Why do you call yourselves 'Latter Day Saints'? Do you expect the world to come to an end soon?"

Our stock answers may block not only our understanding and insight but our emotional reactions as well. The person who knows faith only as "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" is being denied the calm warmth that dwells within the soul of one who does not draw a circle around his faith with a final "this is it!"

THERE IS AT LEAST one other danger in being language-lazy when we tell it to the nations. That is the danger of being trite—trite in our style, trite in our word usage, trite in the very chronology of our message. We love the realization that we can trace our organization back through the days when Jesus walked here on earth among men to Adam but some persons are more attracted by what this organization is doing now, today, or expects to do tomorrow, than they are in how it all started. They may lose interest if they strike the this-is-where-I-came-in spot too often.

Our story has no more of a beginning than it does an ending. If it is to be forever, by the same token it was forever, and any phase of that long story may serve as a beginning when we tell it, thus enlivening it and giving it new color with each telling. There is no other literature in the world which can "get by" with triteness. A trite novel will never be a best seller; a trite movie will never be a box office attraction; a trite poem is for commercials only. Even a gospel cannot be preserved in triteness without turning stale.

THE GOSPEL speaks for itself? Yes, through us. We are its instruments of expression. We can distort it into falsity, bleach it into dullness, cradle it into slumber, or we can enhance it with new thoughts and new ways of expressing them.

We can give it life and color by speaking with personality, power, and conviction.

The greatest symphony ever written was not great until many people had heard it. The composer had to transform the symbols on the paper and the melody in his mind into a language that was new and true and beautiful before it could appeal.

We Went to Conference Together!

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Nine members of the Colorado Springs Zion's League attended General Conference as a group. None of them had ever been to Independence before, or to Nauvoo, which they visited after Conference. Transportation was provided by Harold Schneebeck, young people's leader, and Irby Mundy.)

EACH COT had been folded up and the last suitcase closed for a journey homeward. Leaving Independence was a bit hard for our Zion's League after spending one week packed full of real living. However, when the big white door of the mansion on the hill closed behind us, a newly found love for God and each other stayed with us. We believe that it, and the memories of that week with all its activities will remain with us throughout our lives.

We remember how big our eyes grew as we saw the immense interior of the Auditorium for the first time and how hard it was to keep track of each other that first Sunday among all the Saints. But if we got separated we had only to turn to the person beside us and find him in the same situation. Then we'd laugh and receive a hardy Reorganized Latter Day Saint handshake.

We remember the first time we discussed coming to Conference and how impossible we knew it was; yet the more we talked about it, the more real it seemed. Our big problem would be skipping school for a week. At first the teachers didn't care for the idea, but then a strange and almost remarkable thing happened. They gave us a release. From then on it was easy. Oh, yes, the subject of money came up, but we gave dinners and sold candy until the piggy bank began to swell. The people of the branch were wonderful about helping, too, and before long we had enough for each person to have half of the expense paid all during Conference and for a trip to Nauvoo, Carthage, and Hahn's Mill, which took three extra days.

Now as we look back we find that many of our problems disappeared as we listened to those who knew God much better than we—those He smiled upon as they ministered to us. It seemed as though we could feel that perfect love God so graciously gives, and then we learned that love was ours if only we would take it and kindle its flame always in our hearts. We want so much for our generation to be worthy of being called God's children. Now our goals are set high for the future, and as we approach each step on the stairway to them, we realize a little more how eternal we can make His fellowship with us, if only we make it our prayerful desire.

Through her he became interested in the Reorganized Church and on August 24, 1924, was baptized. Since May 1, 1927, he had served the church as a deacon. For a while he and his wife made their home in Detroit, Michigan, moving in April, 1930, to Independence where he became an employee of Standard Oil Company. He was ill for many months preceding his death.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons: Nelden, stationed at Olathe Naval Base in Kansas, and Donnel of the home; two daughters: Marna and Namar of the home; his stepfather and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Mose Seward of Astoria; four brothers: Samuel and Robert Seward of Astoria; Marshall Seward, stationed with the army at Camp Atterbury, Indiana; and Earl Seward of Oblong, Illinois; a sister: Mrs. Mildred Derry of Macomb, Illinois; and one grandson. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude Smith, Almer Sheehy, and Arthur Stoft officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HENSON.—Edward L., died May 17, 1952, at Nucla, Colorado, at the age of eighty. He was a high priest and until his retirement in 1920 was a traveling missionary. Since then he had farmed. For the past thirteen years he had made his home with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Buckley.

Surviving are three sons: Frenchie of Cedaredge, Colorado; P. O. of Fentress, Texas; and C. E. of San Antonio, Texas; two daughters: Mrs. Webb Carnes of Boerne, Texas, and Mrs. Buckley; and a brother, Herman Henson, of Clovis, New Mexico. Funeral services were held at Speaks Chapel in Independence, Missouri, Elders John A. Robinson and Arthur Stoft officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GITTINS.—Walter E., was born January 9, 1885, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and died May 7, 1952, at Ann Arbor, Michigan. He was married on September 21, 1910, to Pearl Lacy, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 18, 1914.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons, Bertrand and Belvin; and one daughter, Bernice Gittins.

GOULDSMITH.—Emma E., daughter of Nicholas Peter and Mary Closson Nelson, was born April 25, 1873, at Eastport, Iowa, and died June 1, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of ten and was an active worker throughout her life. On May 1, 1900, she was married to Claude L. Gouldsmith; two children were born to them. The family lived in Nebraska until 1909, then moved to Kansas, and then to Missouri. Sister Gouldsmith was a piano teacher. Since 1950, when she made her home at Resthaven, she had played for services held there. Her husband and son, Nelson, preceded her in death.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Mary Bryan of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and a brother, E. C. Nelson of Wichita, Kansas. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Patriarch H. A. Higgins and Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

He is a graduate of Northeastern University and has practiced law since 1931, specializing in land court and torts. He has been an intelligence officer for the Massachusetts State Guard, and is a member of the Boston Bar Association, the Barnstable County Bar Association, the Massachusetts Bar Association, and the City Solicitors and Town Counsel Association. He has been pastor of the Dennis Port Branch since 1946 and bishop's agent for Southern New England District since 1950. P.S.

* UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

I had a pleasant, happy visit with Bill Higdon, pastor of the group consisting mostly of students at Columbia, location of the University of Missouri. Bill and his good wife Barbara (McFarlane) are both working on degrees at the University, and in between times they try to do what they can in church work. The church owns a large house that provides living quarters for some church students, including Jack Delaney and his family. It also has a neat chapel that accommodates as many as thirty or more people on Sunday. It is at 515 South Fifth. Meetings are on Sunday, with no mid-week meeting at present.

"What we need," says Brother Higdon, with a note of appeal, "is a good resident elder who is not burdened down with study and who will know how to minister to university students. We need an able man to help us." Visiting is needed as well as ministry to the group.

Under the guidance of Apostle Don Chesworth, Brother Higdon is making for increased missionary work and service in this neighborhood and in cities in this general area.

He is also a keen student of soils and agricultural affairs. "I wish something could be said to our young people about the advantages of the University here," he says. "Here we can learn more about the soil of our own state—and that is very important to members of the church—than anywhere else. Our church group here will grow. The prospects are bright. All we need is more help and more people."

* PRAYER

Sometimes in public places, you see people that you want to pray for, because there is nothing else you can do for them. . . . A poor woman on the bus was apparently in pain and distress. She wiped the perspiration from her forehead. She wrung her hands. Her eyes were drawn. She was a picture of anguish. Would the bus never arrive at its destination? Each sway, each bump, hurt. Each moment was torture. What is there to do for any suffering person on a bus but pray, unless you happen to be a doctor? So we prayed, mile after mile, minute after minute, for that poor woman, holding her up to God for help. Then we saw her relax. The hands ceased their writhing motion. Her head fell back and she slept for quite a time. She may not have known that prayers had gone up for her. That wouldn't matter. God knew, and that was enough.

* PUNISHMENT FOR SPEEDERS

A man told this about the marshal in a quiet little town where the people were trying to prevent traffic going through their one main street like a hurricane. This town isn't far from Kaycee. The marshal, on his motorcycle, let speeders go through town. Just at the edge he turned on his siren and halted them. He didn't scold them. He didn't fine them. He just made them turn around and go back, clear to the other side of town. Then he made them follow him, twenty-five-miles-per-hour, in the right way. Then he dismissed them. . . . You couldn't get too mad over a thing like that. But it would make you feel like the foolish thing you were. And you would remember it forever!

THE

Hymnal for Youth

Here in this church youth hymnal are over 100 pages of our own hymns, solutions to chant, response, and instrumental music problems, and suggestions for worship material. It has been prepared by General Church workers to answer to the musical needs of all youth groups.

James B.
Burdick

James B. Burdick returned to Graceland College August 20, 1951, as vice president-treasurer. He originally joined the Graceland staff in 1945 as office manager and accountant and stayed until 1947 when he left to continue his education. As vice president-treasurer, he is primarily concerned with the co-ordination of physical facilities and procedures to best serve faculty and students. He is also concerned with the financial stability of the school, with an eye to growth and expansion of physical and instructional facilities as financial resources permit.

He was reared on a farm near Wilburton, Oklahoma, and completed his junior year of high school in that state before coming to Graceland in 1934. He completed his last year of high school and began his college training at Graceland, graduating in 1936. As a student, he was elected to Lambda Delta Sigma, an honorary scholastic society.

From 1936 to 1945 Mr. Burdick worked as accountant and office manager, as well as manager of a commissary for the Limoneira Ranch Citrus Growers and Packers in Santa Paula, California. This is the largest lemon ranch in the world. He left in 1945 to join the Graceland staff.

After several years at Graceland, he decided to continue his college education, enrolling at the University of Chicago in June of 1947, for one quarter, then transferring to the University of California at Los Angeles, from which he received his Bachelor's degree in Business Administration in September, 1948. He continued his studies at the University of Chicago and received his Master's degree in business administration with a major in the field of hospital administration in July, 1950. In 1949 he won the Bachmeyer Award for an essay on the relationship between the hospital administrators and the board of trustees.

From July, 1949, until July, 1950, he was a resident in hospital administration at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, Oregon. In November, 1950, he became the administrator of the San Pedro Community Hospital, in San Pedro, California. He remained here until he returned to Graceland in 1951.

Mr. Burdick is married to the former Hazel West of Los Angeles. They have two daughters, Juanita, 14, and Susan Frances, born last November. Mr. Burdick was baptized into the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church at the age of twelve and was ordained a bishop at the last General Conference. From 1937 to 1942 he was pastor of the Santa Barbara Branch in California, and in 1943 he organized the Santa Paula mission. This mission is now organized into a branch, and his brother is pastor of it at the present time.

APOSTLE GLEAZER VISITS CALIFORNIA

Apostle E. J. Gleazer has returned to Independence after touring the Northern California District, the Los Angeles Stake, and the Southern California District. With the exception of one there were no district gatherings, enabling Brother Gleazer to make detailed study of opportunities and present personnel. Brother Gleazer reported good interest and attendance, with almost 100 per cent participation in the Southern California District. Consideration is being given to the creation of three congregations in the Los Angeles Stake. Brother Gleazer commended the ministry of Elder Richard Andersen, new appointee to the Los Angeles Stake, Elder Glenn Johnson, missionary to the Northern and Southern California Districts, and of Brothers Patterson and Lynn of California.

Does Time Stand Still?

"A wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment."

—Ecclesiastes 8:5.

AFTER THE NEWSCAST on Sunday morning, the radio announcer changes his tone and adopts a sentimental manner. You hear him saying something like this:

Come with us down into old . . . to a peaceful valley where time stands still—where it has stood still for two hundred years.

Many people derive comfort from that program. It is good, simple, harmless stuff, when you first listen to it. But when you think of it for a while, you realize that it is escapism, pure and simple—escape from a troubled world into an imaginary and artificial past. It is a travesty on both life and religion. Its sweetness and sincerity do not alter the fact.

ISN'T IT QUEER that a religious ideal should be presented to the world as something completely without progress, rather dim-witted and archaic, with all the hardness in the callouses on the hands (and knees) and all the softness in the brain?

The travesty is not in the people—the real citizens—who live in the valley. Undoubtedly they are all right and very genuine. The people of the hills and farms, those who attend the little churches, till the soil, do business and take care of their children, are all real enough. They aren't all sinners, and they aren't all angels. Most of them are fine people that you would like if you could know them. They're just human, like the rest of us.

The travesty is in the attitude of the program mechanics who put this kind of thing on the air. They represent something that is not true. They are putting on a show, and they make actors of the people. Time does not and cannot stand still for the valley. The very presence of the microphone, the producers, the studio—if nothing else—would change the whole atmosphere. And there is plenty else. There was only one Joshua who made the sun stand still. For the rest of the world, particularly in these days of rapid transit and easy communication, time goes marching on.

If you think that things were easy and sweet and ideal for the pioneers of two hundred years ago, you have been reading some bad history. Have you ever known real pioneer life? There are living people who know what it was. If you think that the old-time religion was the kindly doctrine of sweetness and light, somebody has failed to inform you of the hell-fire and brimstone sermons of the old days.

THE UNFORTUNATE THING is that such a picture of community life conveys a wrong idea of religion. It is true there are some churches that have not changed, that dare not change for fear of destroying themselves.

Truth is always up to date. It is forever ahead of us, waiting up there somewhere for us to discover it. God did not sit down in some little community among a backward people and forget to get up again. He is ahead of us, not behind us. It is not the true religion that is behind. It is the world, and the people of the world that are two hundred—yes, a thousand or two thousand—years behind.

DO YOU REMEMBER the Seth Parker program? It was also a religious program of old-fashioned hymns, heart-warming simple prayers, and old-time practical testimonies. It supposedly came from a little town in Maine where everything was way back in grandpa's time. Seth Parker on the radio stage was the soul of benevolence, patience, understanding, and wisdom. A bespectacled spinster played a creaking organ. The little congregation fumbled for their favorite hymns through dog-eared books. Cephas, a fisherman of powerful brawn and slow, simple mind, set the intellectual level of the production. . . . Then they brought the show to Kansas City for a visit, and reporters discovered that Seth Parker in life was Phillips Lord, a nervous and talented young man, rather twitchy, who smoked his cigarettes chain-fashion and barked orders at the cast. From that time the spell was broken. It wasn't real. Phillips Lord went to sea in a Chinese junk, equipped with electric refrigerators and all modern conveniences. It was to be the beginning of a round-the-world voyage. Somewhere in the Pacific something happened. Nobody ever heard of the man, the ship, or the crew again. . . . An epoch had passed, and people returned from their dreams to the same old realities.

ALL OF THE ROUTES that escape from reality go in a circle, and bring us back to the point where we started.

Time doesn't stand still. It goes on forever, and nothing human can stop it. People may cease to progress, development may halt; some religions remain forever in a state of intellectual infancy, but time moves on.

The great religion is always ahead of the times. The great church is news, not just history. It points us to the future, not alone to the past.

If our faith and religion are two hundred years behind the times, they exist in a dream world. If they are two hundred years ahead of the times, they will help humanity forward to new ideals, greater achievements, real progress, and living hope.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Word from Apostle Oakman indicates that President Smith, Bishop Livingston, and the Lents family—who recently arrived in England—were very well received by the Saints at the Northern District Conference June 21 and 22. A banquet was given in honor of the visiting brethren, about two hundred being present. Bishop Livingston preached on Sunday morning, and President Smith in the evening; both services were outstanding. A priesthood meeting was held in Birmingham June 27-29, and shortly thereafter President Smith, Bishop Livingston, and Apostle Oakman left for the Continent. They will be back in England in early August.

* * *

The members of the First Presidency are also presidents of the high priesthood, and so feel a special responsibility regarding the call and ministry of high priests. Because of this we have appreciated the careful approach to the call of high priests in the Center Stake of Zion which has been made by Stake President Charles V. Graham and his associates, Elders Glaude A. Smith and F. O. Davies—an approach covering several months and culminating at the recent conference in Zion in the ordination of Byron Constance, Sanford Downs, Marion Talcott, Ted P. Scott, William LaGrece, and James Van Biber. All of the brethren ordained have impressive records of ministry. I was also interested to note their diverse business experience, for the group included a maintenance executive, a pediatrician, a field training officer of the United States Weather Bureau, a wholesale dealer in plumbing, a welder, and a lawyer. Elders Sanford Downs and Byron Constance will serve on the Stake High Council, while the other brethren will continue in their pastoral ministry. Elder Delbert Sears, already a high priest, who was set apart as a member of the Stake High Council, is a Certified Public Accountant, specializing in the income tax field. I noted in passing that Brother Constance is the son and grandson of high priests who have served on stake high councils.

* * *

A few days ago I found myself deeply moved by a comment made by Frances Ridley Havergal, the hymn writer, after a painful illness. Miss Havergal had been a prodigious worker. Her recovery was slow and taxed her patience, but she met this challenge and wrote: "I am quite satisfied to do a half day's work henceforth, if He pleases. . . . He can make a half hour's work worth a whole day's if he will." She was quite right, of course. The right attitude of heart and mind gives to one's work a spiritual quality which no diligence and care can give by themselves. The time we give to God is not entirely in our hands. The heart we give, is.

* * *

We are now well into the reunion season. Excellent reports are coming from the early gatherings, and there is every reason to expect that before the summer is over many hundreds of reunion goers will have been renewed and strengthened in their spiritual life. The central theme for this year is "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardships." It has been suggested to us that members of the church might well keep this theme in mind and mention it in their prayers throughout this period, so as to form a richer bond of fellowship whose power will be felt in each successive reunion as those present recognize that the whole church is concerned about their gathering.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

As announced at General Conference, there will be a Doctrine and Covenants Institute in Independence this fall, September 28 to October 3. This affair will be of church-wide interest, and all members are invited to attend.

Further information as to program, personnel, registration, and housing will be stated in future issues of the Herald.

BOOKS

Youth Worship Programs at Home and Abroad by Nevada Miller Whitwell, The Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio. This is a very practical book containing fifty carefully worked out and cleverly illustrated worship programs designed particularly for use in youth groups. The programs include selections of suitable hymns and Scripture readings. The theme for each worship program is developed around a story of some world famous place. For example, the story of the "Old Faithful" geyser at Yellowstone National Park provides inspiration for the theme, "Faithfulness." Edward Bok's famous Singing Tower is used to illustrate the theme "Make the World Beautiful." A service on "Freedom for All Men" features the story of the Liberty Bell.

This book would provide excellent devotional material for leaders of reunion and summer camp groups and could be easily adapted for use with primary and junior children.

At the end of the book the author has provided tracing illustrations and suitable verses and slogans for use on postcard contacts to be mailed to absentees and for invitations to newcomers.

G. E. TICKEMYER

Jesus, the Redeemer, Savior, Messiah

By Chris B. Hartshorn

A sermon given November 25, 1951, at South Crysler Church. From a recording by Floy Patience

And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert. And he arose and went; and behold, a man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship, was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him. The place of the Scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth; in his humiliation his judgment was taken away; and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth. And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.—Acts 8: 26-37, I.V.

OUR MONTHLY THEME is "The Christ of the Restoration." I'm wording the theme in just a little different fashion however—"Jesus, the Redeemer, Savior, and Messiah." Jesus is the name that was given to the Master. These others are descriptive terms. We need to think about them and why they are sometimes used in reference to Jesus.

In the story of the birth of our Savior, the angel gave to him this name of Jesus. We find recorded in Matthew 2: 4, I.V., that his mother was told she should call his name Jesus, "for he shall save his people from their sins." We need to ask ourselves a few questions as we discuss the Christ of the Restoration. Do Reorganized Latter Day Saints have any different Christ? Is Jesus different to us than to other people who have taken upon them his name?

As I go back in history to the early part of the nineteenth century I find that the Unitarians had quite a bit of influence. They have diminished a great deal in numerical strength and importance today, though their teaching of humanism is still rather widespread. Not all who believe in the unitarian doctrine are Unitarians. But they had one particular belief at that time which might have been stated thus: "Men are too good for God to destroy; therefore all should be saved." The Unitarian idea is salvation for all.

There was another group with whom you might sometimes confuse them, the Universalists, who had much the same idea, but with a little different emphasis on man's goodness. They said that God was so kind he wouldn't destroy anyone. The Universalists stressed God's goodness, but the outcome according to each was universal salvation.

Now the Congregationalists of this time—and they were strong back in the early 1800's—said that the body of Christ is complete wherever a group of believers unite for worship. In other words, this congregational body of Christ was a complete, all-sufficient organization. There was no universal or worldwide church in their concept. Therefore, they were given the name of Congregationalists, because each congregation was independent of every other congregation.

The Lutherans held that the body of Christ exists in the universal church, and that they alone had the priesthood authority which had been handed down to them by Christ.

These are just a few of the religious ideas popular at the beginning of the nineteenth century. I hope that I've not been unfair in any of these comments and that you have not become prejudiced in any way against the denominations named. The real question is: Do Reorganized Latter Day Saints have a peculiar view of Christ?

This brings me back to the lesson of Philip and the eunuch, and I want to read a few words from the thirtieth and the thirty-first verses: "Understandest thou what thou readest? And he said, How can I except some man should guide me?"

In the welter of theology, Christianity, and "churchianity" we might ask that question again. Some men have turned away from the church because they think that it's too confusing—too many conflicts; they can't fathom all of it. But difficulty is not a good excuse for giving up a thing. Usually it should be all the more reason for studying and trying to solve a problem that is difficult. Things that are so simple may not be worth our trouble in attaining them. The eunuch felt he must have someone to guide him and that guiding should be done by those Christ has commissioned to lead men to all truth. Under the influence of the Holy Spirit, the ministry of teaching and preaching is provided for in the gospel of Christ.

It might be hard for some of us who have been members all our lives to know how difficult it is for others to understand the terms "Zion" and "kingdom of God." Too often we use them, having a certain concept of what they stand for, but failing to realize there might be some people in the group to whom the words are as the "sounding of brass" or "tinkling of cymbals." They may sound good, but they may have no particular significance.

I'm reminded of one of Minnie Kennedy's books which tells the story of a lad who was attending the kindergarten of a church school. She said he came home one day and told his mother very soberly, "I'm not going back to that Sunday school any more."

"Why, what's the matter? Why don't you want to go back to Sunday school?"

"Well," he said, "they talk about Jesus all the time. They talked about Jesus when I wore my green suit, and when I wore my blue suit, and when I wore my white suit. I know all about Jesus, and I'm not going back there any more."

That mother had a problem—and the boy had a problem too. We don't inherit our understanding, our love for, and our loyalty to Jesus just by reading Scriptures or by saying the name Jesus. Even the Christmas story won't do it. There must be some understanding of the meaning behind the term. This boy didn't actually see Jesus; the idea got old to him and he just didn't want to hear any more about Jesus, because he thought he knew all about him.

The problem that confronts many of us is that we don't understand what we read. Often we just take things for granted. But words are only so much black ink on white paper. It's what goes on in our minds when we read them that is significant. Our experience teaches us the significance and the beauty behind the term or else it has little meaning for us.

Let us take up these descriptive terms and see first why people called Jesus the Redeemer. This is an Old Testament word. We don't find it in the New Testament, but we do like the hymn based on Job's statement, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," and we apply it to Jesus. We like to emphasize the word "know." Fortunate is he who can say or sing that with the full depth of meaning that the hymn is intended to convey.

Isaiah 63:16 reads: "Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, thy name is everlasting." The term itself implies two or three things to the average person. One is a debt—perhaps a mortgage that has been written up and signed. Usually it is contingent on a debt we owe, especially if it is a major debt. So we think of both a debt and a mortgage which is given for it. Then the third thing is the ransom that is paid to get that mortgage wiped out and the debt paid. Now this is all implied in the ministry of Jesus Christ. Every time we talk about the Redeemer we're thinking about these things that he did for us. He paid a debt that we were powerless to pay. We sometimes refer to it as the Adamic debt—"as in Adam all die." There is visited upon the race a universal debt, and Christ came to pay the ransom, making it possible for us to again come back into the presence of God because of the sacrifice of his life for us. Every time we hear the name Redeemer, let's think of this aspect of the Christ of the Restoration.

The world—by that I mean the people we meet on the street, at work, and in the stores—may laugh at the idea of sin. Men say that it is a theological bogey—something the theologians have concocted to scare people. Many don't laugh, however; they weep, and they wonder, "How long, O Lord, how long" will this be tolerated?

SIN IS VERY REAL, although not all sin is a crime. It is the violation of the laws of God. Very often the laws of men are based upon the laws of God. It has been alleged that all the laws in the Roman code were based upon the Ten Commandments, and that the laws of the Anglo-Saxons came to us from the Roman laws. Perhaps that's a little farfetched, but it does have basic truth in it.

Sin to some people may be a bogey term, yet it's very real. We've got to face it, individually and collectively. Alexander Pope once wrote this little verse,

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

We may think it's pitiful that other people do certain things. Then we become tolerant of their foibles, their weaknesses, their sins. If we're not very careful with our tolerance, we become infected and embrace the very same things that we first pitied and tolerated.

It is often the way with drinking. The alcohol habit has certain evils that I'm not going to touch on in this reference but the thing I want to point out is the easy steps: "One little glass won't hurt you. Be a good fellow. Have a social drink." But pretty soon it breaks the will. The Lord has said that he requires the heart and a willing mind, and if we have no will, we're of all creatures most miserable. The will to do or not to do is very important, and just a little social drink breaks down the will so that pretty soon we not only endure but embrace.

I have lived many years. I lived through the prohibition era and was very hopeful. For a while people were quite proud of themselves; then organized crime set out to break the prohibition grip—and it did. Now we're reaping a terrible harvest on the highways, in taverns, in drugstores. The sale of liquor has just been scattered and broadcast. It is ten times as easy to get hard liquor as it was in my youth. But the important thing is what it does to us. Sin is very real because it breaks our will to resist evil.

Another moral weakness that we recognize, though we don't often talk about, is sex indulgence. We break our will, failing to see that the effect of certain indulgences soon leaves us a slave to our passions.

We're slaves to certain sins that have corrupted our generation, and the widespread evil of them is only too apparent. Of course, we always assume that the evils we hear about are "away out there"—not in here where we live. We may think that these things don't affect us, our congregation, our children—but they do! We've got to realize that sin by definition is that which breaks the will to resist the further inroads of those habits which would enslave us.

The psalmist wrote, "Cleanse me from secret faults." I think he had in mind some of his own weak nature which time and again tripped him up. He may have endured its power over his better self until he embraced the things that had made him less a man.

LET'S TURN to the word "savior." What is the significance of using this descriptive term for Jesus? First we want to ask ourselves why we need a savior. From what are we to be saved? Unless we see the need of being saved from something, the term has little significance for us, and as a result we're likely to push aside the pleadings of our Savior at the time when we need him most. There is a temptation to say, "We don't need any Savior; we're strong men. We'll not fall victim to vices and evils." Perhaps it is good for us to realize that Jesus was "tempted like as we are, yet without sin." He knew what temptation was, but he didn't yield to it. His will was supreme. He was able to say "no," and mean it. That's the ideal for which we need to strive.

In Psalm 9: 17 we read: "The wicked shall be turned into hell." Back in the days when the Universalists and Congregationalists were dominating the eastern part of the United States that was important; the ministers were telling people, "Either you accept the Savior or down to hell you go, and you'll stay there for ages and ages." A fear psychology became the basis of their salvation. Certainly that's not the Restoration theory for belief in the Savior.

IN MATTHEW 3: 39 we find that Jesus gave the parable of the wheat and the tares. The time for the harvest came. The Lord said that the wheat is put into the garner but the chaff is cast aside and burned eternally, everlastingly. If the chaff, the evil, the tares are to be burned with everlasting fire, that's bad. Again there was a psychology of fear that tried to draw men to Jesus, to the Savior—"Accept salvation or else you'll go down to hell eternally. You'll burn forever and ever." That's not religion on its highest level. When the Restoration came into the world it called men from a message of fear to a message of love. "Accept the Savior because he loves you. You're worth while. He wants to give you power to overcome sin, and you shall be rewarded for every deed that you do, whether it's good or evil. No man shall give even a cup of cold water in the name of Jesus without receiving a reward." That is the Restoration message.

As Peter said, "He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come unto repentance." Now the significance of these terms might be overlooked. He didn't say that he's not willing that none should perish, therefore being too good to destroy anybody, or because man's too good to be destroyed, we'll all have salvation. Peter said that he was not willing that any should perish, but "that all should come unto repentance." And if we repent, he's just and he is willing to save us and strengthen us to overcome. In Acts 2: 37-41 there is a statement that will help us to understand this a little better. On the day of Pentecost this happened:

Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

Let us not lose the importance of this expression: "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." The Restoration message emphasizes it. This Scripture was called to the attention of Joseph Smith at the very beginning of the Restoration Movement, and it behooves us to save ourselves through the help of Christ. He has not promised to do it all, but he has promised to help us if we will put forth the effort, repent of our sins, and call on the name of the Lord. "He is just and able to forgive us, and is not willing that any shall perish who will come to repentance."

I recall reading several years ago about two brothers who went down to the old swimming hole. They had swum there many times, but on this particular day the river was up, and there was a strong current. The boys dared each other to go in, and in they went. The smaller of the boys got cramps. The water was cold and swift, and he began to call for help. The older boy swam out to him and tried to help him, but in a moment of fear and anxiety when the younger boy realized that he was about to drown, he grabbed his brother in such a way that he couldn't swim and carry him out. Finally it was only with great effort that the larger boy broke loose and saved himself.

At the funeral of the little brother the older one condemned himself. Over and over again he was heard to say, "Oh, Johnny, why didn't you let me help you? If you'd only let me, I could have saved you."

As I thought about this instance I was more taken than ever with this plea that this Jesus makes to us. We need help, and yet we've got to accept that help in the right way. We can't determine the method with which we shall be saved. If we're willing to let him help us, he's willing to assist us in working out our salvation. Some day we may hear those sad words the older boy in his broken-hearted sorrow said, "Why didn't you let me help you? I wanted to save you, but you wouldn't let me."

NOW LET'S THINK of the term "Messiah." The word is of Hebrew origin and means "the anointed." The Greek term for the same idea is "Christ." What does it mean? Going back into the history of the Hebrew race we notice that Saul was anointed by the prophet Samuel to be king over Israel. Before David came to the throne his head was also anointed from the "horn of oil" by Samuel (I Samuel 16: 13). Over a thousand years later a son was born into a Hebrew home of whom it was prophesied, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1: 32). He, too, was to be anointed king over Israel, hence a messiah. But Jesus was more than a king of the Jews. After his earthly mission was completed, he declared, "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations. . . ."—Matthew 28: 17, 18.

In the presence of this royal son of David all men shall feel inferior. Paul declared of him, "God also hath . . . given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow . . . every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—Philippians 2: 9-11. Sinful men will not feel "at home" with his searching eyes upon them, for they know in their own souls that they are so unworthy that they can't live in his presence. It's death to those who are sinful to come into the presence of God.

II Nephi 11: 34-36 says in part, "There is one Messiah who is to come into the world six hundred years after my father left Jerusalem and be rejected of the Jews." Could anything be more plain, more certain? When Lehi left Jerusalem in the days of Jeremiah and King Zedekiah, he came to this land. The spirit moving upon one of their prophets said, "It has been revealed to me that there is one to come who is the Messiah, the anointed of the Lord to be king over the world and this king is the Savior." Just before the time that Jesus will return to earth again when every knee shall bow and tongue confess that he is the Lord of lords and King of kings a sign is to be given.

If you'll read the fourth verse of the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew you will learn how the disciples were puzzled about this and said, "What is the sign of thy coming?" Then the answer is given, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." It wouldn't be a witness if it had been preached right on down from the time of Christ to the present, would it? It would be no sign. But the fact that something is to happen down near the end in the latter days which would be a sign to them was this gospel of the kingdom. The term "kingdom" means an organization set up with a king, Christ—a spiritual organization, not a Roman government, not a Jerusalem government, but a kingdom of spiritual power. "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." When this happens, when this gospel of the kingdom is preached into all the world, then shall the end come.

May we treasure in our hearts today the beautiful message of Jesus, the Redeemer, Savior, and the Messiah.

"The Heavens They Are Many"

By A. J. Corbett

THERE IS AN OLD ADAGE which says that "variety is the spice of life." When we consider the earth and its wonderful creation we are aware of an amazing variety.

All things that come from the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart: yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul.

So abundant are the varieties of things that some seem direct contradictions of others. There are trees that grow on land and those that grow in the water. Some thrive in salt water, others in fresh. Some shed their leaves; others do not. There are animals that live and breathe under water, and others that would die in such a situation. Some birds fly, and others cannot. There are fruits and flowers, birds and animals, fish and insects, and even races of men in seeming endless varieties. Variety also reaches up into the heavens above, for "the heavens they are many."

It is universally agreed that heaven is the place where God himself dwells. Jesus told his disciples to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven." The term "heaven," like the word "Zion," can have more than one meaning or interpretation. Zion is a city; it is a people; it is a location. We believe heaven to be a place where God and all the hosts that surround him dwell, but we do not know the exact location. Heaven is also the great star-filled space that surrounds the earth. The Creator said:

Let there be lights in the firmament of the heavens, to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs and seasons and for days and for years and let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, and it was so. And I, God, made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day and lesser light to rule the night, and the greater light was the sun and the lesser light was the moon. And the stars also were made even according to my word, and I, God, set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth.—Genesis 1: 18-20.

Here the starry firmament is called heaven. We gaze up into it with its sun, moon, stars, and planets and regard it as the heaven above us.

The Lord God spake unto Moses saying, The heavens, they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine, and as one earth shall pass away and the heaven thereof, even so shall another come; for there is no end to my works.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

We dwell on one of the "earths" that has not yet passed away. But that it will pass away with its heaven was stated by Jesus. He said: "Although the days will come that heaven and earth shall pass away, yet my word shall not pass away.—Matthew 24: 36.

FROM THIS EARTH we have studied one of the many heavens—the one above us. We see the Milky Way, the Zodiac with its familiar signs, the great constellations of Orion, of Canis Major, and Canis Minor, the Southern Cross, the Pole Star, and the many other stars and groups of stars that are part of our heaven. But if we lived upon some other globe the heaven around us would be totally different. That is what the statement, "The heavens they are many," means. They are numberless, because we cannot count the many worlds which they surround. If it were possible to visit the moon, we would find the sky from there would have a different appearance. The moon always presents the same familiar face to the earth. If we lived on the back of the moon we would never see the earth at all, but standing on the side we see, the great earth, which is fifty times larger than the moon, would be continually above us in the sky. What a majestic sight it would be! The sky as seen from the moon is black, astronomers say, for the moon has no atmosphere and the stars shine out brilliantly and without twinkling in the darkness. How grand a moonlight night is! But it has no comparison with the radiant light that the earth reflects to the moon. The earth-light can be seen when the moon is a crescent in the western sky; that bright gray light in the crescent's "arms" is the reflected light from the earth.

LET US GO for a brief journey into the sun's planetary gardens and see a few of the wonders there. Mars, our neighboring planet, is about 140 million miles farther away from the sun than we are. It has two moons circling around it. Demos, the one farthest from the planet, is only about 14,000 miles away. It speeds around Mars in thirty and a quarter hours. Our moon is a quarter of a million miles away and needs twenty-eight days to journey around the earth.

But Phobos, the other Martian moon, is only about 5,000 miles away and travels around Mars in seven and a half hours—three times the speed of the rotation of the planet itself. While the planet turns once in twenty-four hours, Phobos goes around it more than three times. That makes the moon appear to rise in the west and set in the east—a remarkable phenomenon of the Martian heaven. The earth would be seen from Mars as a double planet, for astronomers say our moon is out of all proportion to the earth as moons go. We are really a binary planetary system, and from Mars would be seen as two stars, a bright one and a smaller one circling around it every twenty-eight days.

Mars also has the advantage of being a million and a half miles nearer Jupiter, the giant planet with twelve moons circling around it. This would make another splendid heavenly display in the Martian sky. Truly, the heavens they are many. They are also varied. Think what the appearance of the heavens would be from Jupiter, a great world that dimensionally is 1,200 times larger than our earth and with a dozen satellites at varying distances from its surface. Eclipses and starry occultations would be frequent. Still farther out in space is the great world, Saturn, with three rings of light (shattered moons) ever circling around it in the sky. In conjunction with these rings are nine other moons completing the planet's satellite family. Our earth and moon would not be seen too easily from Saturn, but the great planets Uranus and Neptune, which we cannot see without a telescope, would be plainly visible in the sky of Saturn. What a peculiar world Uranus is. It almost lies on its side in its journey around the sun, and points its pole to him.

And worlds without number have I created, and I also created them for mine own purpose, and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten, and the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many. But only an account of this earth and the inhabitants thereof give I unto you; for behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power, and there are many also which now stand, and numberless are they unto man, but all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them . . . and as one earth shall pass away and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21, 23.

JUST HOW NUMBERLESS these worlds are can best be told by modern astronomers. Our sun, with its family of nine worlds circling around and these worlds with thirty moons circling around them, is but one of the billions of stars that make the universe. Ours is only an isolated system of worlds in the great Milky Way Galaxy. A general estimate is that there are over 100,000 million such suns in our galactic system. The giant telescope of Palomar reveals millions of such galaxies. The heavens are many, and the stellar structures are as varied as the millions of physical things on our earth.

Let's have a look at our next star neighbor in the heavens. It is the bright sun (star) Alpha Centuri. To journey to it we would have to travel twenty-five million, million miles. With the speed of light it would take four and a half years to make the journey. And what would we see? A mighty double sun, a binary, both of them larger than the sun we see every day. Alpha Centuri's double revolve around each other in seventy-four of our years. What a system that must be with two suns shining on it. But that is not the whole story, for beneath the two is another blood-red star revolving around them; it is called Proxima Centuri—Proxima because it is the nearest celestial object to our solar system. What a heaven would be seen from the Centuri worlds, if there are any. But the wonders of such a firmament is far exceeded by the starry system of the bright star Castor. Castor is the alpha star of Gemini, the Heavenly Twins, one of the Zodiacal signs. When viewed through a telescope it is really six great suns shining out as a single first magnitude star. One pair of the six revolve around each other in three of our days, another pair revolve around each other in nine days, and the two pairs circle around each other in over 300 years. Then farther out in the same bright starry system is another pair revolving around themselves. What a remarkable creation Castor is. What a firmament it must reveal, yet to the unaided eye it is just another twinkling star in the heavens.

The earth rolls upon her wings, and the sun giveth light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night, and the stars also giveth their light as they roll upon their wings in their glory in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms that ye may understand? Behold all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these hath seen God moving in his majesty and power.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Then the parable of the twelve fields is told. Each field (kingdom) is visited in its turn; the Lord of the field visits them that they might see the light of his countenance and be glorified in him. "Therefore unto this parable will I liken all these kingdoms and the inhabitants thereof, every kingdom in its hour and in its time, and in its season even according to the decree which God has made."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 15. Our earth rolling upon its wings is just one of these many kingdoms, and we know surely how the "lord of the field" has visited us and shown the light of his countenance to the inhabitants of this sphere.

And Enoch said unto the Lord, How is it that you can weep, seeing you are holy, and from all eternity to all eternity? And were it possible that men could number the particles of the earth and millions of earths like this, it would not be a beginning to the number of your creations, and your curtains are stretched out still, and yet you are there and your bosom is there.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 6.

And that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created and the inhabitants thereof are the begotten sons and daughters of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

THE HEAVENS are many because each world has its own firmament; they are beyond the computations of men. But they all pass away in time. This earth of ours could not always sustain life as we know it, for it slowly arrived at its geologic period that made the opening chapters of Genesis possible. Considering its age-long physical and geologic history, there are but a few years when life as we know it could be present on its surface. Without divine intervention the earth will die and become lifeless. Isaiah said:

Lift up your eyes to the heavens and look upon the earth beneath; for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner.—Isaiah 51: 6.

But Isaiah is not the only prophet who speaks of the ending of the earth.

The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

From these two statements the death penalty has been passed upon the earth itself, but the statement of Peter shows how it will be.

The day of the Lord will come like a thief. The heavens will pass away on that day with a crash and the elements will be burned up and dissolved, and the earth and all that is in it will be disclosed. Now as all these things are in the process of dissolution think what kind of men you should be, what holy and righteous lives you should lead, while you are waiting for and helping forward the coming of the day of God. At its coming the heavens will be dissolved in fire and the elements melted by heat, but we look for a new heaven and a new earth where righteousness will have its home.—II Peter 3: 10-13. Twentieth Century Translation.

THE APOSTLE PETER never claimed to be a scientist, yet his prophecy agrees altogether with the modern Nova Theory of stellar life. This theory is that at some time in the life history of all stars (and our sun is a star) there is some kind of an explosive energy that makes the star shine out with thousands of times its normal light and heat. The theory is that atomic changes beneath these blazing orbs continue until the star's surface yields to the pressure and an explosion occurs. (Our discovery of atomic energy used in bombs is an example.) When this occurs in a star, all the surrounding system of each is burned up and renewed. Nova (new) stars are being observed frequently in different parts of the sky.

Some years ago when I was in Wall-send, N.S.W., staying with the late Bishop Lewis, he hurried into the house one day with the newspaper in his hand and said to me, "Look, there is a new star in the sky. It is called Nova Aquile." I told him I knew where Aquile (the Eagle) was, and that it only had three bright stars in it—the center one called Altair and the two side ones Trayazed and Alschain. If a fourth one of first magnitude were there, it could easily be seen. Sure enough in the night when the stars shone there was the new bright star, Nova Aquile. We watched it for a few months when it declined, and now after thirty years it can be found only with a telescope. What happened on Nova Aquile? It is so far away that its light alone takes hundreds of years to reach the earth. Occasionally a star near our earth passes through the nova experience, and we see it. The new star over Bethlehem could easily have been one.

It is thought that our star, the sun, will some day reach the nova stage; if so it could easily do what Peter prophesied. The heavens will be dissolved in fire and the elements melted by heat and a new heaven and earth thus produced. That Peter's prophecy meant literal fire is sure, for he spoke of the world in its former destruction by "water"—that was when it was cleansed by the flood, but its next cleansing will be by the melting heat that will dissolve its elements and thus produce a new earth with a new heaven. The King James Version reads:

And the earth shall tremble, and the mountains shall melt and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat, the earth also shall be filled, and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up.

David said:

Of old thou hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure, yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed.—Psalm 102: 25, 26.

Isaiah also wrote of this same destruction:

The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly, the earth shall reel and fro like a drunkard and shall be removed like a cottage, and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it and it shall fall, and not rise again.—Isaiah 24: 19, 20.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART I

INTRODUCTION

This is, primarily, the life story of Christiana Stedman Salyards, who holds a place as one of the distinguished writers and teachers of the Reorganization.

The study curriculum of the church had its beginning in the suggestions and promotion of Marietta Walker and a small group of her associates, with the encouragement of President Joseph Smith. But the curriculum came into existence only as a result of the study, self-sacrifice, long hours of patient labor, and the writing ability of Christiana Salyards.

In this narrative we learn something of her remarkable family background, of how much she owed her missionary grandfather, John Landers, and of the inspiration that flooded her early years with light.

Her contacts with the church and its people grew slowly and steadily, and after some years as a teacher she was called to Lamoni in the summer of 1892 to take up what was to be her great life work. From that time she was for many years the only (later the main) writer and editor of the quarterlies which were then the basic material of Sunday school classwork. Through them she exercised a great influence on the thinking and faith of church people. For a number of years her Bible course at Graceland College was the formal religious education of that institution.

Her written contribution to the church has been brought together and prepared in three books: Jesus and His Message, Men Nearest the Master, and The Enduring Word. Many people cherish these books today and turn to them for help in their study and teaching for the church.—THE EDITORS.

My Family and I

I was not reared in the church. I was twenty-three years old when I was converted to the gospel and was led from the darkness of this world into the kingdom of God's dear Son.

My ancestry was largely British. My grandmothers were both born in Scotland; one grandfather was English, and the other was born in Canada of American parentage. My father was born in England and my mother in Canada. I count myself fortunate to be an American, though I appreciate the sturdy qualities of the nationalities from which I came.

My father's mother, Charlotte Watson, was born in Edinburgh in 1800. When she was fourteen she went south into England and entered service in the household of an English earl, where her aunt held the position of housekeeper. She remained there until she was married to Barnard Stedman.

Grandfather Stedman was very companionable and appreciative of the simple pleasures of life. Waving his hand one day toward the roses that climbed up the side of a neighbor's house, he said to me, "Now I enjoy those roses more than they do, for I can sit here and see them, and they can't unless they come outside to look at them."

He had a fine bass voice and had received some musical training. I remember that when young people gathered at our home to sing together, he would join us at the first sound of the organ. My sister would say with a smile, "Here comes Grandfather," and we would all welcome him as he came in. Whoever was in his favorite chair at the end of the organ would yield it to him, and he would rumble along with his bass voice, joining in the singing wherever he could.

Grandmother did not sing with us, but as she sat in the corner of the big kitchen knitting or sewing, she often would sing of the "Banks and braes of bonnie Doon," or "Robin Adair."

One of the pleasant pictures that lingers in my mind from the days of youth is of Friday afternoons when Grandfather came to take me home from the rural school I was teaching. After school had been dismissed a fine black horse would appear around a curve in the road, stepping majestically along, his polished coat shining like satin. In the little open buggy would be Grandfather in a white linen coat, a touch of red neckerchief showing at his throat, and a tiny black mustache completing his ensemble. In one hand he held a long, black whip, with which he no more than flicked Joe's glossy back. What a sight to cheer the heart of a homesick girl only seventeen years old! How glad I was to sit beside him and ride home the eight miles we had to go, with beautiful Joe stretching out his long legs to carry us so easily on our way!

My mother's mother was born in Glasgow in January of 1806, the daughter of Alexander Cairns, a linen weaver. In 1819 three children came with their parents to the New World. Christiana was in her thirteenth year.

Doubtless life in the new country was strenuous. Christiana became a deft tailoress, and often sewed or read by the light of pitch-pine knots, a practice that contributed to impaired sight in her old age. When twenty-four years old she became the wife of John Landers.

Grandfather Landers

After the close of the war the Landers went into Canada, availing themselves of inviting offers of free land made by the British Crown. They seem simply to have crossed the St. Lawrence River and to have settled in the vicinity of Brockville. There, in the beginning of the second term of George Washington as president of the United States, John Landers was born, the second son of the family.

The late president of the church, Frederick M. Smith, upon a return from a trip to the eastern states, said to me, "Whoever visits up and down the coast of Maine hears much of Father Landers," and he asked me to write what I knew of my grandfather's life. This is one of my reasons for writing in detail of Grandfather's experiences.

When he was sixteen the War of 1812 was brewing between Great Britain and the United States. To avoid taking up arms he crossed to the American side of the St. Lawrence. He went to the home of an aunt and found her in deep distress. Her husband had had occasion to cross to the Canadian side of the river and had been killed by British soldiers. Upon her request John and another young man went to find his body and bury it. They had accomplished the errand and were recrossing the river when they were discovered and fired upon. John was shot in the shoulder and his companion was killed.

John was thrown into prison and lay there for some time. Then a recruiting officer visited him and offered him his choice between entering the British army and being banished to the convict colony on a distant island then called Van Dieman's Land, now known as Tasmania. He was in a difficult situation for one of his age, but he finally reached a decision. He said, "I will stand up with your men and will let the Americans shoot at me, but I never will fire on the American flag or on any man who stands under it." I am very proud of him as I write that statement. The officer smiled and said, "Young man, we will take care of that," so John was sent to Halifax, Nova Scotia; but the war ended soon afterward and he saw no service.

Grandfather Lander's Spiritual Awakening

I do not know at what age spiritual awakening came to him, but I think it was while he was still young. His father, a Baptist minister, had taught him according to that faith, but he seems not to have taken the parental teaching seriously. Something was needed to awaken him to spiritual realities, and it came in a startling way. He told me of it, describing in detail the place to which he had led the cattle one morning in winter, when the snow lay deep in the fields and the ice was thick where the cattle had to drink.

He was chopping vigorously to make a hole for them when a voice that seemed to be directly overhead said to him, "You have broken the commands of God and of a good father and are just ready to go to hell."

Amazed at the words, he straightened up and looked about him, but he was alone except for the cattle. The warning had come to him from heaven.

This experience had the desired effect. He abandoned whatever wrongs ways he had been falling into and began a careful study of the Bible. He and a friend made it a custom to retire to a secluded spot where they could study and pray undisturbed, and the time came when his knowledge of the Scriptures and his clean life led to his being suggested for the ministry of the Baptist church.

But he had learned in his study that no man may take to himself the responsibility of preaching the word of God and officiating in the ordinances of the church without a divine call, and he refused to be ordained without evidence that he had been called of God to the ministry.

While he was working away from home, he went one Sabbath evening to a spring to fill two large wooden buckets with water for use in the kitchen the following day. Impressed to pray in that secluded spot, he knelt beside a low stone wall that partly enclosed the spring. Here he had a vision.

A Call to Service

In the vision he saw a man coming down the path that led to the spring. He recognized the Savior and in his joy would have run to meet him, but he had not power to move until but one step remained between them. He took that step and stood beside the Master, who was a head taller than John, who was a tall young man. Jesus laid his hands on John's head, saying, "My son John, you are called to preach repentance to men all the days of your life."

The vision faded away and John found himself kneeling beside the stone wall with his head resting on his folded arms, but he knew now that he was called to devote his life to the preaching of repentance to men. In time he became an ordained minister of the Baptist church and rode a circuit for fifteen years, preaching faith, repentance, and baptism to the people.

Shall We Change the Scriptures?

By Roy A. Thrutchley

WHEN I WAS four years old I went to live with my aunt and uncle on a farm in Macon County, Missouri. They had no children of their own, but for miles around they were known as "Uncle Bob and Aunt Em."

Uncle Bob was a priest and the president of Salt River Branch. When I first went to live there we held our services in the Oak Ridge schoolhouse. A couple of years later the church people and the school patrons tore the old school down and built a larger one.

Down the road from this school, about a quarter of a mile, was a Negro school with an enrollment of fifteen pupils. The white school had thirty-five.

There were eight families of Negroes in the neighborhood. The ground on which both schools stood had been donated by "Uncle Peter and Aunt Molly Jackson," Negroes who had been slaves and had settled there after the war.

There was no family in the community more respected and liked than the Jacksons. They had two boys: George, a blacksmith, and Elmo, who helped on the farm and was a good musician.

Joining my uncle's farm on the west was a forty-acre farm owned by Poke Grant, a Negro and the son of a slave. There were several children in the Grant family. The oldest one, Minnie, was the teacher of the Negro school.

They were all fine people—poor, but so were we. They were very clean about their home and person. Mrs. Grant, called "Aunt Sophie" by most everyone, was much in demand as a cook at harvest time. I remember that she was a very good one.

It was just across a forty from our house to the Grant's and much of the time I was over there, or some of their children were at our house. I preferred to play with these children rather than with a white boy who lived just about the same distance in another direction. He was spoiled and selfish.

The Grants had a cider and sorghum molasses mill. The neighbors from miles around came there with their sugar cane to have their year's supply of molasses made. Mr. Grant's molasses was the best in the entire community, and Aunt Sophie's corn bread couldn't be beat. I know, for many times I sat at the Grant table and had all I could eat.

THE SCHOOLHOUSE was two and one-half miles from our house. When I was old enough to start to school, the Grant children came by to take me, as there were no white children close by of school age. I was small for my age and many times Ed, one of the larger boys, would swing me up to his shoulders and carry me over a puddle or a snowdrift. I remember that once, when a storm was coming up, Ed carried me almost all the way home because I could not run as fast as the others.

During my second year at school a new boy from the city moved into the neighborhood and started to school. He was older than most of us, and somewhat of a leader and bully.

One day as school was letting out and the Negro boys and girls were passing on their way home the bully picked up a rock and said, "Come on, fellows, let's throw rocks at the niggers." Several of the white boys picked up rocks and threw them. Of course the Negro children ran for home.

I didn't know what to do. Lonnie, Oscar, Ed, Pearl, and Elmer were my friends and neighbors. I felt very bad, and when I got home told my aunt about it.

She asked me who started it, and I told her the new boy. Then she asked me what the Negro children did. I told her they called us "poor white trash." Aunt Em said, "Well, all those who threw rocks were white trash, because good people, whether white or black, wouldn't throw rocks."

The next morning none of the Grant children came by to go to school with me, and it was a long two miles and a half to go by myself.

That evening my aunt told me to go over and see what was the matter. Elmer Grant, the boy nearest my age, said, "You boys called us niggers and threw rocks at us." I told Elmer that I didn't throw any rocks and didn't call him names. So we were friends again.

The news soon got around and the white parents told their children they wanted no more of that.

The city boy soon moved away and there were no other such incidents as long as I lived in the neighborhood.

MY UNCLE'S HEALTH began to fail, and we hired one of the Negro boys to work for us. He had worked for some of the other white families in the neighborhood. They had a separate little house where he slept but he ate in the kitchen. My aunt said, "Lonnie, our house is small, and we don't have any other place for you to stay. But there is a good bed in the spare room. You sleep there. I don't want to set an extra table, so you will eat with us." Lonnie stayed with us for over a year, and no one could have been nicer, more polite, nor cleaner about his habits. We were criticized by a few about it, but some of the other families did the same from then on.

I MOVED BACK to Kansas City with my father, brothers, and sister. One day some of the boys in the neighborhood said, "Let's go swimming down on the Paseo." About six of us got our trunks and towels and went for a swim. On our way home we took a short cut through the park, and all of a sudden one of the boys said, "Jigger, here come the niggers," and started to run. I didn't know what to do, and before I could make up my mind, I was surrounded and being hit from all sides. Finally I found an opening, and while I wouldn't exactly say I ran, I passed several of the boys who were running.

After we were "on the other side of the tracks," one of the boys explained that about a month before one of the Negro boys had been delivering a washing his mother had done for one of our neighbors and some of the boys in our block had beaten him up.

Since then, many times I have seen and heard of incidents similar to those I have just related. Why can't people live together as the Grants, the Jacksons, the Goodins, and the Thrutchleys did back in Macon County?

ABOUT FOUR YEARS AGO my supervisor sent a Negro man to help me. He was a good worker and a good man—very religious, quiet, and altogether likable. One day we started talking about the Bible. In the course of the conversation he mentioned a "Dr. Fry" featured on KMBC each morning. He said, "You know, I have been looking up the things he talks about in my Bible, and he's always right."

When I told him I knew "Dr. Fry" personally and that we were members of the same church he asked me many questions about our beliefs. These I answered as best I could.

One morning while "Tate" was opening mail for me, he said, "Mr. Roy, my pastor and I had quite an argument after church yesterday." I asked what caused it and he said, "Well, the Reverend had preached on tithing, and he said we owed one tenth of all we made each month to the Lord. When church was out I told him he was all wrong. I told him I had listened to Dr. Fry on the radio and he says we only owe one tenth of our increase as tithing."

I asked, "Tate, what do you think about it?"

He said, "Well, Mr. Roy, I have been studying it ever since I heard Dr. Fry

Question Time

Question:

Please explain how we may be "equal in earthly things" as required to be "equal in obtaining heavenly things."
Iowa Mrs. D. H.

Answer:

God makes no distinction between spiritual and temporal things, and says, "Unto me all things are spiritual." A spiritual purpose runs through all nature and through human temporalities. Inequality in temporal things inevitably creates division between man and man, dividing them into opposing groups under conditions of envy, hatred, malice, and strife, leading to wars and destructions. Under such conditions God cannot bestow spiritual blessings equally upon all.

Extremes in temporal possessions constitute a state of sin in which the blessings which belong to righteousness cannot be bestowed, or if they were given they would only be used unequally and disparagingly to create further division. Man must make his righteousness include all of his attitudes and works, temporal and spiritual, if he would have God bless him and the whole community. A man can't obey the spiritual law while disregarding the law relating to temporal things, nor vice versa; he must show his obedience in all things and live the whole law of life. Equality is defined as equality of opportunity. It does not mean that all men must have like amounts of earthly things. Necessity, ability, and talents must be considered.

Question:

Did the ancient Hebrew peoples practice baptism, and are there any scriptural references proving this? Since it is recorded in Genesis (Inspired Version) that Adam was baptized, it seems that the ordinance was carried on down through succeeding generations, but I was unable to find any detailed proof.
Oregon Mrs. W. R.

Answer:

Undoubtedly the practice of baptism remained with the Hebrew peoples wherever they remained true to the gospel. It was a fundamental principle of the gospel for all who would be saved.

Adam was commanded: "Teach these things freely unto your children" (Genesis 6: 61, Inspired Version).

The Book of Mormon reveals the practice of baptism among descendants of Joseph in America between the time of Moses and the coming of Jesus Christ. It was for all who would be saved. (See II Nephi 6: 48, page 108, also pages 259, 281-285, 310, 324-327, 358, 376, 557, 602 and 623.) The first Spanish missionaries to America were surprised to find a form of baptism still being practiced among the Aztecs and the Mayas and were startled to find the practice associated with being born again. Forms of baptism were likewise found elsewhere in the world prior to modern Christianization.

Latter-day revelation, indicating that the Melchisedec priesthood was lost from the earth for a time after Moses, tells that the "lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of . . . the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4). This would explain the baptism of John the Baptist, who, according to the same reference, was "baptized while yet in his childhood." The Pharisees baptized too (Matthew 9: 18-20, Inspired Version). (See also Hebrews 4: 2, Galations 3: 8, and I Corinthians 10: 1-4.)

Question:

What is meant by the storehouse? Is it to be an accumulation of funds, goods, or what, for the poor? What moneys will be used for the storehouse?
Iowa Mrs. D. H.

Answer:

The "storehouse," as referred to in the revelations of God, is an institution dealing with the temporal interests of the people of God, receiving the consecrated surpluses of its individual members, holding and using them for their security in managing their stewardships, for the needy, and for the public benefit of the church, subject to the regulations provided in the law of God.

This storehouse has officers with a bishop at the head who are responsible to the organization and to the church for the wisdom and integrity of their management; they also are subject to the decisions of the order. It has offices for the transaction of business; depositories with equipment for preserving, handling, and disbursing funds which come into hand, land titles and contracts, etc., and storage for various commodities. Consecrations may be either in money or in goods.

This organization is also referred to as an order, sometimes called "The Order of Enoch," for according to the revelations it was the order established by Enoch within the ancient church, by which, the people became righteous and were able to establish Zion, which made possible their ultimate translation to heaven. It is built upon the principle of divine ownership and human stewardship and operates strictly according to divine laws within the church and under the auspices of the church. This order does not control the current funds of the church which are under the administration of the bishopric.

The efforts of the early church of latter days to bring this system into operation was frustrated by persecution and other causes, and it is yet to be developed as the Lord may open the way.

Texts for study are Doctrine and Covenants 77; Genesis 14: 36-39, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10, 14; 51: 4; 58: 6; 70: 2, 3; 81: 4; 82: 2.

Question:

Do Latter Day Saints believe that when Jesus comes again he will come to the Auditorium in Independence, Missouri?

Missouri

A. A. S.

Answer:

We know of no official word or action of the General Conference, or of the church officials, expressing such a belief. The revelations speak of Christ coming to his temple, but there is no such promise concerning the Auditorium.

Study to Show Thyself Approved

By Shirley Sanford Howard

HAVE YOU EVER HAD one of your friends return from a trip, paint his experiences in glowing colors, and say, "You certainly must go there sometime"? Suppose you decided to accept his advice, but he merely told you the general direction and you left without any specific instructions or road map to guide you. No doubt it would take you a long time to arrive at your destination, not to mention the detours and wasted hours.

Studying is like this. I have long recognized its value and the enriching experience involved in its pursuit, but I have lacked the road map. All I was ever given was the general instruction, "Study the Three Standard Books." That covers a lot of uncharted territory. I discovered it was quite easy to get bogged down in dull, uninteresting detours, and waste valuable time without accomplishing much toward vital, worthwhile study. I was getting rather discouraged when I finally discovered a "map" giving complete instructions.

Two years ago I was called upon to teach a women's group. I vaguely remembered hearing of the "Leadership Training Curriculum" and decided if I were to teach, I might as well receive credit for it. I sent for the desired information and was soon busily engaged, not only in preparing a lesson for each meeting, but in writing up my answers and submitting them for credit at the completion of the course. What a thrill to receive my first course card! But greater yet, what a thrill I received from directed, profitable study. A completely new world opened up for me. I had found the key of studying to show myself approved.

I was too eager and impatient to wait for regular, scheduled classwork so I started additional studies at home, suiting my own particular need and interest, and sending in my material to be graded through correspondence arrangements. Each completed work is like another signpost along the way, reading "So many miles behind you, so many still ahead." My credit cards are steppingstones, each one bringing me to a closer understanding and appreciation of God and his eternal plan for mankind, adding purpose and interest to the broadening of my spiritual horizons.

I FEEL that many people assume the leadership training curriculum is just for those preparing for teaching and, therefore, never investigate or participate in this program. They are missing a wonderful opportunity, and are overlooking the fact that this study program is planned for all who will study under the Christian Education and Leadership Training Curriculum. Even in the name of the program there is an invitation to all, whether they wish to become teachers and leaders or just better informed members. It is the responsibility of each and every one of us to study diligently, and having a course of study to direct our thinking and pick out the meat for us can prevent many wasted hours and wrong interpretations. Also, after having my work graded by an authorized person, I feel more confident in passing some of my convictions and beliefs on to others, knowing they are in accord with the thinking of church leaders.

I believe the majority of people retain knowledge longer if they write it down. It is quite simple to look at a question in a quarterly, accept the first quick answer which flashes into the mind, and consider it studied. It is quite another matter to place that answer on paper. It requires more thought, a mastery of the material involved, and a wider concept of the situation. It causes me to exercise my brain and thus my understanding grows.

I'll admit it isn't always easy with household duties and the distracting influence of a one-year-old wanting to help read the book, write on the paper, or play with the typewriter. I often have to put it aside until later—early morning, nap time, or late evening when a little more peace and quiet prevails. But if I utilize the little opportunities that present themselves each day, they add up to study. I can usually read through a lesson once while pin-curling my hair at night. I can read it through again while eating lunch on the days when my husband doesn't come home. Often I study while waiting for guests to arrive, for Lew to come home for supper which is all prepared, or for cookies to bake; all these little moments, if used, become important. Each reading impresses the material more firmly upon my mind.

I HAVE DISCOVERED another technique of great help. Often the questions are fairly simple to answer with most of the content to be found in the text itself. However, there are usually a few thought questions which encompass what I myself believe about a certain thing. These are the ones which take time, thought, and concentration so difficult to weave into a full schedule. When I find these I try to become thoroughly familiar with my text material, establish the thought questions in my mind, and then let them mature and develop over a period of time while I do other things. Dishwashing leaves my mind free to contemplate; ironing requires no concentration; rocking a baby provides time for thought, too—these are the hours when my mind can grope, reject, grope again, and finally arrive at a sound, honest conclusion as to my personal convictions and thoughts upon the questions involved. Once I have them all answered in my mind, it doesn't take long to write them out on paper during my next free moment.

I am very grateful for the hours of study, prayer, and hard work which have gone into the provision of this wealth of study material. I only regret that more individuals can't receive full benefit from them. I think most teachers will agree with me that they learn much more from teaching a class than those participating as pupils. Why? Because they take the time to study and think through their lessons instead of skimming the surface. As pupils we usually read through the lesson once and consider it studied. This is a tragic situation. We aren't accomplishing the most from our church school program. There should be twenty progressing instead of one.

In the study I am engaged in at present the following Scripture has impressed itself upon my mind:

Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning: Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.—Mark 13: 33-37.

This has given me new criteria upon which to judge my actions. Would I be ashamed to have Christ return at this moment and find me thus engaged? Am I making the best use of my time? Am I assisting in every way I can to further his work here upon earth?

I can think of no greater work in which to be engaged at the time of his coming than in study (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36). I want to be "... approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Blessings Through the Use of Consecrated Oil -

By Emma V. Freeman

EDITOR'S NOTE: In this article Sister Freeman stresses the use of consecrated olive oil under conditions where the regular pattern of administration did not seem to be practical. Faith and prayer work in many ways. It is always best to follow the scriptural pattern as set forth in James 5:14, 15 whenever possible, but the personal use of the consecrated oil and prayer has helped thousands. It does seem to aid the exercise of faith, and the promise is "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord will raise them up."

IT MIGHT BE interesting to many Herald readers to learn of the blessings given through prayer and the ordinances of the gospel to those who have chosen to follow Christ. His mercies and blessings are many—"the half has never yet been told"—and as we try to tell of those with which we have been blessed, we often think of these words from Psalm 136: 1: "Oh give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

We have received blessings by the use of the consecrated olive oil in the home that we feel are outstanding. When we were first married, we drove in a covered wagon from my husband's home in Dazey, North Dakota, to our homestead in eastern Montana. We had four horses with harness, wagon, and buggy, some household furniture, machinery, and personal belongings to take. We thought it would be enjoyable, as well as practical and educational, to cross the state this way.

It was the last of June, and we found the trip a pleasure, but before reaching our home, at a point somewhere between Minot and Williston, North Dakota, I accidentally broke my glasses. I had worn them constantly for some years, and had been told by an optician that mine was a very bad case of astigmatism. When without them I suffered severe headaches. When this happened, I knew not where to go, as I felt I should have an efficient optician to prescribe for my eyes. We had established our family altar at the time of marriage, so we took this trouble to the Lord in prayer. Then the use of consecrated oil came to mind. My husband did not hold the priesthood then, but he put a drop of oil each night and morning in my eyes, and I had no discomfort. Upon reaching our home in Montana, I asked for administration, and I did not have to wear glasses for thirty years after that.

OUR CHILDREN would ask for the oil for bee stings, bruises, and cuts, even before they were old enough to talk, by pointing to it. Once, when our eldest daughter was five years old, she was helping run the hand washing machine. It had an "A" lever that opened and shut, powered by a weight beneath the machine. Not realizing the danger, she let her hand drop in this "A." By the time the machine was stopped, her hand was black and badly swollen. She was screaming with pain and asking for her father to pray for her and anoint her hand with oil. This he did. Instantly the pain stopped, and when he finished praying, she clapped her hands together joyfully saying, "It's well! See, it's well!" We lived miles from a doctor, and he was so busy, it was wonderful to us to have the Great Physician in our home.

At another time, we were informed by the school nurse that our youngest daughter had trachoma and should have medical attention at once. This was in 1931, and our finances were so low that, while we were near doctors, medical attention seemed impossible. We put the consecrated oil in her eyes night and morning, breathing a prayer, and soon her eyes were perfectly well. She has never had any trouble since.

About this time, our second daughter was walking quite a distance to meet the bus to go to high school. One day she sprained her ankle badly and had to be brought home by friends, as she could not bear her weight on it. We placed the foot in very warm water, then bathed it with the consecrated oil. Immediately she bore her weight on that foot and had no more trouble with her ankle.

RECENTLY our little granddaughter had the mumps. When the swelling was painful she came to me and said, touching her jaw, "Grandma, bathe here with the oil, so it will take the hurt away." I did, and she went happily back to her play. She brought a little friend to us who had burned her leg on a hot stove lid. When we applied the oil, the pain ceased instantly.

I will close with the testimony of a brother, an active church worker, who bore his testimony soon after baptism. I checked with him recently concerning this incident. He and his wife and four children took the streetcar to church, but when finances did not permit riding, they would walk home. We noticed each one always brought an offering for the church school collection. This day the weather was hot, and when they arrived home, all the children were sick with upset stomachs. They went for the consecrated oil, but found only about a teaspoonful in the bottle. It would take much time to purchase oil and have it consecrated, so the father poured out a teaspoonful and gave it to one child. There was still oil, and he gave each one a teaspoonful. The children were all relieved promptly, and the faith of the parents was increased.

The ways of God cannot be explained, but we who have prayed and had our prayers answered "while we are yet speaking," can exclaim, "His mercy endureth forever." To him be all the praise for his thoughtfulness of his people in time of pain, if they but turn to him.

"The Heavens They Are Many"

WORDS LIKE "a thief in the night," "with a great noise," and "crash" in the Twentieth Century Translation suggest an unusual happening of destruction. A nova experience could well provide it. It surely would "remove the earth exceedingly" and make it reel to and fro.

All heavens we have been considering are the starry firmaments surrounding the many worlds throughout space. But there is also a heaven where God and the angelic hosts are located. Cruden said that the Hebrews acknowledged three heavens: (1) The heaven where the birds fly and the winds blow. This is the aerial heaven. (2) The starry heaven of firmament above the earth. And (3) the heavens of heavens, where God and all the angels have their dwelling place. This last one is perhaps the heaven that Paul referred to when he said he knew a man caught up to the third heaven, into Paradise. The spirits of the righteous go there, and it is a location somewhere above us. Someday we will know where these places are, for if we are worthy we will be caught up into them. The heavens are many, unknown and unnumbered to man, but to God who created them they are all known and a new one will be prepared for those who are worthy. Jesus said: "I go to prepare a place for you."

Priesthood Holds Retreat

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood retreat for the Southern California District was held in the San Jacinto mountain meadows, May 24 and 25. Under the direction of J. P. Davis, district president, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer, a full program was planned and carried out. Approximately seventy-five men were there representing both priesthoods.

Classes, discussions, meditations, sermons, and a Sacrament service were all included in the two-day activities. Prior to departure, a service of dedication was held in which the priesthood participated.—Reported by HUGH KENSLER

It Might Have Happened to Us

By Naomi Russell

THIS IS A STORY with a happy ending. It could just as easily have been a request for prayers or a couple of obituaries back on page 23. It could even have been half a dozen obituaries.

So far neither my husband nor I have been in an automobile accident. I haven't even seen one, and that's a rare statement for anyone who's been riding up and down the highways as long as I have. We have listened to the vital statistics on the morning news and, looking pretty smug at each other across the breakfast table, have commented on the evils of careless driving. Only last week we read in a bulletin put out by Travelers Insurance that 37,000 people were killed in car accidents during 1951. Again we looked smug and made a mental note to warn our children, who are just learning to drive, that "the lives they save may be their own." After last night, we aren't smug any more. We know safety slogans are meant for us too.

I'm writing this testimony for the benefit of other people who, like the Russells, keep the law 99 per cent of the time. They don't drink and drive. They don't pass cars on hills and curves. They don't play "chicken" or vent their anger by driving furiously until the mad wears off. They always signal to let the man back of them know when they plan to stop or turn. They keep their cars in good working condition and are careful to buy the best tires so that they won't have blowouts. And yet one slip can make a farce of all these precautions.

NO, WE HADN'T been drinking. Our minds were clear and our senses sharp. We weren't upset emotionally; in fact, we'd never felt better. The world was beautiful, and we were happy—but we were also in a hurry. We had half an hour to drive thirty miles, and we didn't want to be late. The only law we broke was the speed limit, but the highway—as far as we could see—was clear, so we figured a little more gas wouldn't hurt. Well centered on our yellow line we took the hill at seventy. Just over the top we saw two cars in our lane; the first had stopped for a left turn, and the second was slowing down behind it. In the opposite lane a car came toward us. We put on the brakes and, after the usual squeal of rubber-on-concrete, found ourselves still much too close to the car in front to keep from hitting it. We couldn't pass to the left because of cross traffic, so we took the shoulder. Fortunately it was wide enough for us to pass without even brushing the paint on the other cars. Fortunately the ground was dry and firm enough to keep us from turning over; two days ago it wouldn't have been. Fortunately there were no side drains at that particular place to throw us off. Two seconds later we were back on the highway, entirely unharmed and still traveling at a fair speed.

Thawing my frozen muscles, I reached over and patted my husband on the knee. "Pretty close, wasn't it?" I asked, being a little surprised that I still had a voice. "It certainly can happen fast," he answered. We drove on a ways in silence, and I offered up my most fervent prayer of gratitude in thirty years.

AFTER THE SHOCK wore off and we could look at our narrow escape objectively, we speculated on what might have happened. We carry the maximum in insurance as all cautious car owners do. Everything would have been taken care of financially, but that wouldn't have eased the pain of broken bones and mangled flesh. It wouldn't have done much to ease the pangs of conscience either, had the people in the car ahead of us been injured. All the wonderful plans we've made could easily have been canceled in that fraction of a minute. I couldn't help wondering, several miles later, how it would feel to be blind. At noon I had dropped a quarter in the cup of a blind accordion player and thought how brave he was to make his way with only a seeing-eye dog and this one talent. I doubt that I could ever adjust to misfortune that well. I wondered, too, how it would be to look in the mirror at a face drawn grotesquely out of shape by scar tissue and know that it wouldn't have had to happen.

Maybe—since it ended happily—I'm glad we've had this experience. First of all, we'll be more careful in the future. Perhaps this will serve as inoculation against a really serious accident. Second, our appreciation for what we have has been sharpened. The world has never looked so lovely to me; home has taken on new significance; a sound body—which I had always accepted as my just due—is suddenly a very remarkable blessing. Third, I feel I owe more than a prayer of thanks for this good fortune. Like the person who is saved from drowning, I have a debt of gratitude to pay.

What happened to 37,000 other people in the last year might have happened to us. It might have been suicide; it might have been murder. The line between the sadist with a hatchet and the "good" driver who cheats only once is very fine. We are humbled when we think how close we came to crossing it.

News From Korea

During the General Women's Institute which was held in Independence, Missouri, last October, several addresses of general interest were presented and later printed in the Home Column. One of these, "A Personal Knowledge of the Restoration," by Sister W. Wallace Smith, reached Fred Weddle, a member in the armed forces, who makes some interesting comments in a letter to Sister Smith. She has consented to share it with Home Column readers.

Korea
April 16, 1952

Dear Sister Smith:

I just received several Heralds from my wife and noticed your article entitled "A Personal Knowledge of the Restoration Movement" in the March 3 issue.

The title at once took my eye, and I was very interested in what you had to say. I live in a tent with five other men and many times have led discussions around to the subject of religion. Lately many times the fellows have said: "We would like to believe such a story [the Restoration of God's church] but have no proof. It sounds like a fairy tale. There are no prophets now. How can you prove all of this Joseph Smith and his angel stuff?" Well, I've given them the testimonies of the witnesses—the three and the eight—but that hasn't satisfied them. I said perhaps the strongest proof that I could ever give them would be the many testimonies of individuals who themselves have a personal knowledge of the truth of the work by actual spiritual experiences that sustain their knowledge about it.

Your article came at a time when I really needed it. We got into a discussion an hour or so ago, and one of the boys asked me, "Can you produce in writing one of these personal testimonies of someone who says he knows it is true?" That is when your article came to my rescue. I gave it to them to read. I'm sure it made an impression because they looked as if they were seriously thinking about it—at least for a while. I also pointed out the testimony of Paul Kaiser in the same issue which had a terrific impact on them, because all of them smoke and drink. I don't know how much lasting good it will do (they are all at the Officers' Club right now). They have so many good points, and my soul yearns for them—but they just can't seem to be bothered about their salvation.

Well, I wanted to express my thanks and appreciation for what you had to say. It came at such an opportune time and certainly strengthened my argument.

Sincerely,

Fred Weddle

P.S. Give my regards to Brother Wallace.

In a Few Years

By Louise Scott Wrigley

MARTHA WAS YOUNG and pretty. She lacked self-confidence though, and as she saw the service rendered by other young people in the church, she said to herself, "I can't do anything now, but after I have a little more education I can. In a few years I can help out."

In a few years Martha had interrupted her formal education to marry. The babies came along—Mike and Tommy and Elaine. There seemed an eternal round of things to do which kept her busier than she had ever been before. When she was asked to participate in the young women's group at church, she said warmly, "I'd love to, but the babies are so small. In a few years I'll be free when they are in school; then you can count on me!"

In a few years the babies were all in school, but Martha had moved to a larger house and there seemed more than ever to do. The washing had grown to include shirts and pants and little girl's dresses with lots of ruffles. Life had grown to include helping with lessons and seeing the boys play on the baseball team. Martha looked wistfully at the notices of church activities she would like to attend. "In a few years . . ." she promised herself.

In a few years the children were married and gone from the house. Martha busied herself rearranging furniture and took a trip that she and her husband had put off for so long. She sewed new drapes for the house. She sorted out toys. She cleaned the attic. She was beginning to relax. The participation in church activities seemed in sight at last.

Then the grandchildren began arriving. Grandmother was a wonderful baby-sitter—and for free, too. Grandmother knew what to do for the baby's cough. She could sew for the little granddaughters. There were so many things for Grandmother to do. The need of the women's department was all but forgotten. "I am needed here," reasoned Martha. "They can get someone else to help. In a few years . . ."

In a few years Martha died. And she never quite got around to the contribution she intended to give . . . in a few years.

It Happens at Youth Camp

By Robert Flanders

MANY PEOPLE in our church are familiar with problems of promotion because we're among the world's greatest promoters. We promote this crusade and that drive, this attendance campaign and that building fund. Usually we do it with great zest, for we feel we are striving for goals that are uniquely significant.

I'm a promoter of the gospel and many of its associated activities. I'm constantly encouraging members or friends of the church in various beliefs, attitudes, or activities, all more or less important to kingdom-building.

Now some things are easy to promote, and some are difficult; some crusades are more fun to thump and drum about, and some are less so. Right now it happens that I'm stumping for a project that's really easy to give and easy to take, like peppermint ice cream on the Fourth of July. This project about which I'm so effervescently enthusiastic is Youth Camp—a relative newcomer to the list of means to kingdom ends. I didn't attend my first one until I was twenty-two, and then, of course, as a staff member. I only wish it had been seven years earlier. (One staffer jokingly commented that we really should have youth camp for adults as it was too good for young people to appreciate.) Now that I have tasted of this peculiarly rich experience and have gained some understanding of the opportunities it holds in store for church young people, I am planning and promoting with more than enthusiasm. I think it is very important, even urgent.

CAMPING to most of us is quite a new thing. There has been a General Church sponsored youth camp at Nauvoo for quite some time, and a few others here and there that date back several years, he likes Russian novels, German music, French poetry, Italian food, American history, and playing a Hawaiian ukulele. He also enjoys cooking, camping, and canoeing—whenever he gets the chance.

Here Is the Writer . . .

but it was in the summer of 1951 that camping got real church-wide impetus. Many districts had their own camps for the first time, and nearly a thousand teen-agers attended. Here in southeastern Michigan we started a new camp, small but good, and named it "Michuron." This summer we are aiming at three times as many campers and a much-expanded program. As we go sailing along toward this end, many teen-agers draw back a cautious half step and ask, with a semi-suspicious reticence, "Youth camp? What's that like?" Though my experience is limited, I would like to share my camp memories as well as I can.

I remember, for example, a cool, gray-green morning when, with the sun still thirty minutes below the eastern hills, we shoved our boats out into misty Gardner Lake, rowed across to the "point," and disembarked over a hundred campers and counselors on that little parklike promontory for a fellowship service. I remember well the spirit of peace and unity, and some of the testimonies of dedication that came so freely from young people who had found an understanding fellowship with their Creator. I remember watching the gray of the woods turn to delicate, then vivid, green as the first rays of the sun dropped slowly to part the mist and strike fire to the million little ripples on the water. Then came the ecstatic odor of potatoes frying and bacon broiling over an open fire on the hillside across the lake, where the cooks had been at work for some time at their job.

THERE HAVE BEEN other memorable mornings in other places, too—like the ones on the shore of Lake Huron, where nature ushers in the day even more impressively. With a "handful" of campers who were brave enough to get up before sunrise, I sat on the sand, fortified with blanket and sweater against the chill of the Michigan morning. When a person gets up in the teeth-chattering cold just to watch the sunrise, he deserves a real pay-off. It came as we watched that wide expanse of ink-blue water suddenly change to a deep black, split by a highway of fiery golden light running straight as an arrow from the rising sun to us. Then it was day, with the lake, the blue sky, the brilliant sun, green trees, and yellow sand, belittling the drama of a few minutes before. We walked to our early devotions a bit more thoughtfully than usual that morning.

I can remember, too, the work and play—washing dishes to the vigorous if discordant strains of "Sippin' Cider" and "Pee-oor Old Slee-ave"; scrubbing down the boats with much reckless flinging of water; straining at a gnat to see just how neat a neat cabin can be; playing softball and volleyball; paddling my own canoe; hunting for arrows I shot over the target; and, of course, swimming every day. More outstanding still were the classes and their activities—the religion classes, taught by teachers who were really interesting, the choral group, the ink-stained camp log staff, the campfire preparation class, and so an ad infinitum. I remember mealtime with lots of good food, topped off afterward with stunts and the singing of such improbable songs as Ich bin ein Musikanter.

BUT THE MOST vivid memories of camp for most of us who have been there are the evenings. They are quiet and beautiful, and the activities of those closing hours seem to crown the day like the sunset that frames them. First the “lakeside chat”—a directed discussion of many things of pertinent interest to young people, from dating to Divinity; then campfire, youth camp’s most characteristic experience. At these we gather around a big stack of wood, spread blankets down to sit on, and watch as the fire is lighted. When the dancing yellow firelight is brightest, we sing fun songs and do skits and stunts. As the fire burns low perhaps we sing spirituals, and as it dies into quiet, glowing embers we think and worship. Only then does the fellowship experience of living, working, playing, studying, and praying together sink deepest. After good nights are said and the camp quiets down it remains only to draw together the threads of an idyllic day in intimate cabin devotions. We gather the cabin mates together to find out what’s on their mind at the day’s end, and it may be anything from “Bob, we were wondering why our church is so much smaller than other churches. Why is it?” to “Bob, Ann and Donna have both been real nice to me and I want to ask one of them for a date, but which one should I ask?” Then perhaps a verse or two of “Redeemer of Israel,” a lesson from Daily Bread, three or four volunteers for closing prayer, and the day is done.

THE MEMORIES of the things that happen at camp are fine, but in the end they are not as rich as the memories of what happens to the people that make a camp out of a spot of lake, field, and woods. From any real fellowship where Saints meet together for common purposes, the rich, dynamic expression of love and understanding may spring to minister to the souls of those who participate in it. This is true of camp—but there is more, too. In addition there is the unique quality of a “gathering” of a large group of people of the same age—an experience that many young members in the church have not had to this degree—under wise, devoted, purposive leadership. Here they are welded into a fellowship group with such strong bonds that each person sees his selfish individuality fade, at his own choice, and in its place he truly feels a part of everyone else. Here he catches a glimpse of what the Master really meant when he said, “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples; that ye have love, one for another.”

What happens at Youth Camp? Many, many worth-while things. But most important, teen-agers whose heritage is a sin-shocked and despairing world may catch for the first time a real vision of the foundations upon which we raise the walls of Zion.

Shall We Change the Scriptures?

talk about it. I looked it up in my Bible and I think Dr. Fry is right.”

We worked together for some time after that, and I gave him The Call at Evening to read. One morning Tate brought the book back. I asked him what he thought of it and he said, “I think it’s fine. There wasn’t a thing in it I disbelieve, but there are some things I want to study some more.”

Then, after a few minutes, Tate asked, “Mr. Roy, how does a man of my color go about joining your church?”

Paul, on the road to Damascus, was struck no harder than I was. Here was a man as good or maybe better than some I had baptized, asking me a question I could not really answer. Of course, I could have said, “I can baptize you, and you will be a member,” but I didn’t. Somehow that didn’t seem to be the answer then, and never has been. I had seen a family of Negroes come to our old Central Church in Kansas City. I had watched them sit in the balcony (a corner where no one else ever sat) and as soon as church was over, leave without being spoken to.

I am ashamed of the answer I gave him. It was flat, hollow, meaningless, un-Christian, and one I am sure did not meet with the approval of Jesus.

Then he really let me have it. He said, “You claim to be the restored church of Jesus Christ. Tell me, can only white people enter celestial glory?”

Shortly after asking me this question, Tate was transferred to another station. I am sure he went without a satisfactory answer. What is the answer to these questions? I have thought about them many times, and the only answer I come up with is more questions.

WHY, while within our gates thousands are hungering for the gospel, do we send missionaries to the islands of the sea and not minister to our black neighbors here at home?

Is the soul of the Indian, Australian, German, Hawaiian, South Sea Islander, or Scandinavian more precious than the soul of the Negro within our gates?

I know it’s more glamorous for a missionary and his family to be sent abroad for a few years but is it cheaper than to minister to the “stranger within our gates”?

Shall we change the Scriptures to read, “Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every tongue and people EXCEPT the Negro”?

Maybe you have the answer.

P.S.

* THE SINGLE STANDARD

Living "the simple life" in a highly complex civilization can be rather easy. You don't have to retreat to the wilderness and live a hermit existence. You will not have to worry too much about the writings of Emily Post or Margery Wilson. The problems of protocol will never bother you. All you need is "the single standard."

With the single standard, you need only one kind of respect for people—the best. You treat everybody alike—with the same kindness and consideration. You regard all the people of the world as your equals—all races, all colors, classes, ages, men, women, children, servants, employers, clerks, managers, rich, and poor.

You will never have to wonder if anybody is above or beneath you. You will not have to bow to anybody's money or power, nor will you disdain anybody for being in want. You will not care about rank. If anybody insists that he is better than you, leave him and ignore him, for you can live without him. But be very careful never to think you are better than others.

Meanness, cruelty, selfishness, and sin, of course, you will reject and oppose. But judge yourself in these things before you judge others.

You can be completely free of pretense. You will have one standard of truth for all occasions and persons. You will not have to wonder which story to tell to this one or that one; you will not have to remember what you told last time.

You can always do your best. You will never give any second-rate service.

You want to know whether these things will really work? A good question . . . a very good question. . . . Does anybody know the answer to it?

We have been trying for some time to make ourselves live up to the single standard. . . . Yes, we must confess, with the usual results. It works well so far as we have worked at it.

It is a basic part of the gospel: the law of love, the brotherhood of man.

This is easy to try. Failures will be frequent, but improvement will be noted. We may never be perfect, but we can always do better.

* THE MIND

The most difficult part of changing our way of life is changing our mind. If we can control our mind, we can improve everything else in our life. Science has taught us how to do everything but control our minds. The only safe control is to bring it to God, tell him we don't know what to do with it, and ask for his help.

* DEPTH

If you want to see how deep a well is, drop a pebble and watch the ripples in the water. If you want to know how deep a person's life is, watch it when the storms of trouble come.

* WHEN YOU FEEL LOW

Sometime when you feel really low and need a Scripture appropriate for the occasion, try this one: "I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls."—Job 30:30. That will settle you for a while.

News and Notes

NEW GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, CHURCH

The members of Grand Rapids, Michigan, are enjoying the experience of worshiping in their new church home located in a beautiful residential area of the city.

Organ music from the new Connsonata organ calls Saints and friends to worship as they enter each Sunday and quietly follow the ushers down the two outside aisles or the wide center aisle to their pews. One's attention is drawn to the three laminated beams forming an arch and extending from the floor on each side to the top of the building. The soft gray tint over the cinder block walls blends into the varicolored acoustic tile ceiling and tile floor. The comfortable pews are of light oak and match the wood trim throughout the church.

Wide steps lead from the center aisle into the chancel, with the pulpit to the left leaving a clear view of the Communion table backed against the choir rail, where rests the Three Standard Books. Two rows of pews extend across the full width of the chancel for the choir.

The lower auditorium is the meeting place for the junior church, church school classes, and nursery. The kitchen is equipped with built-in cupboards, sink, and stove.

The building is of cinder block and brick and has a seating capacity in the main auditorium (including the balcony) of 275. The cost of construction was $64,000.

The official church opening was on Sunday, April 20. Present for the occasion were Apostle C. G. Mesley, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Bishop T. A. Beck, Elder Stanley Pfohl, and District President James C. Phillips.

During the church school hour the adults and young people were taught by Apostle C. G. Mesley, who also spoke to the junior church at 11:00 a.m. Bishop G. L. DeLapp gave an inspiring message at the 11:00 o'clock worship service calling attention to God's great purpose in looking forward to the building of Zion

The Great Soul

*Who thinks that he is great is truly small;
The greater soul thinks not of self at all.*

—A Shepherd's Book

WE WERE IN CHURCH, listening to the sermon. The speaker had appeared tired and discouraged that day as he mounted the steps to the pulpit. As he waited through the preliminaries of the service he seemed to sink beneath his load of care. His face was gray.

Probably not one in the congregation failed to realize, to some extent, the nature of his burden. Our weaknesses, our failures to understand, our lack of love, were at the bottom of his grief. Our sins had fastened him to an invisible cross, and in a degree he was experiencing a kind of death for our sake.

Sorrow and regret sat beside us then, and we bowed our heads. We knew we had been wrong. At that moment we would have given anything to be able to cleanse ourselves, to make the record fresh and new, to begin again. We wanted to lift the heavy load we had put upon his shoulders.

Then we realized that what we had done was done, and nothing in us could undo it. We were powerless to change the piece of history we had written.

BUT AFTER he had been speaking for a few minutes, we could see that something was happening to him. What we could not do for him was being done by a greater power. His voice became stronger and lost its note of fatigue. He stood up straighter. He spoke with earnestness and conviction, yet there was gentleness and love in his manner. He was experiencing a kind of exaltation, a transformation of spirit. We knew that he had found a source of strength in the Power that had never failed him.

Then, as he continued his sermon, giving to each of us what we most needed for our spirits, this thought came to us: "He is one of the great souls." It would never occur to him to think so. He would reject the thought without qualification. He was very humble. But still we knew that he was one of the great souls.

WHAT IS GREATNESS OF SOUL? One could talk or write about it endlessly, and still fail to express all of its meaning. It is not something that can be put into a pattern of words. Yet this man was showing it to us as a way of life. We learned something about greatness of soul.

First, it is a dimensional thing. He was too big, too generous, to be upset by the many little things that worried and excited us, things that caused us to quarrel and make trouble. He was big enough to understand the greater issues of life, which we were too small to see, even when they were pointed out to us. The great soul is large enough to make room for the big dimension timber that God uses in the building of his kingdom.

Second, it is a qualitative thing. We admit so much trash into our lives, so many inferior things into our minds—cheap literature, sensational entertainment, poor music, tawdry ideas. The great soul would reject them. We carry little cameras and make tiny pictures of life, so that everything we represent comes out in miniature. . . . Have you ever seen a reducing glass? It is a convex lens. Seen through it, people and things—the whole world—is reduced to minuscule proportions. Some of us never see life in any other way. . . . But the great mind and spirit know how to appreciate and to see in true proportion what is good.

THE GREAT SOUL has something of the divine about it. It is like a window in a dark wall that opens to let the light of heaven into our world.

The great man does not retire to an "ivory tower." He knows all life in intimate detail and understands every bit of it. He knows the fatigue of labor, the spur of ambition, the joy of achievement, the exultation of victory, the sharp sting of disappointment, the bitterness of defeat, and the shame of wrong.

The great man is not too good for life. He accepts gratefully the food that God has given for human use, the comfort of clothing, the security of shelter, the usefulness of all common things. He is grateful for them.

The great soul is not too profound for love. It cares for sincere, humble, good, ordinary people. It has no snobbery, least of all of the intellect. It is too wise for pride, knowing that intelligence is the gift of God, and not of human origin.

WHEN THE PREACHER had finished, we had learned much about ourselves, and in a penitent mood we resolved to be better. He had helped us to see ourselves more clearly as we truly were, and not according to our illusions. We have been thinking of this for days.

Greatness of soul, in a degree, is possible for all. The capacity is in us. In this man, and in others like him, we have seen a vision of it. Are there not times when you are filled with longing and desire for this nobility, this greatness of soul?

The Beloit Centennial

ON JUNE 14 AND 15 a religious celebration was held in Beloit, Wisconsin, commemorating the centennial anniversary of the conference of 1852. The Saints of Beloit, cooperating with the district and General Church officers, arranged an appropriate program.

A Historic Event

On June 12, 1852, a historic event occurred which is a milestone in the history of the church. Under the spiritual stimulus of a revelation received by Jason Briggs on November 18, 1851, a number of the scattered and shaken branches of the early church met in conference in the home of Polly and Hugh Briggs at Beloit and commenced the movement which was to culminate in the re-establishment of the restored church. After the assassination of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, Jr., groups of the Saints were led to paths unknown in the pure gospel principles of the restoration, namely polygamy, celestial marriages, secret rites and oaths in temples, and various heretical teachings under Brigham Young, James J. Strang, C. B. Thompson, and other ambitious false leaders.

The Original Church Resuscitated

After a few years of suffering, during which this movement was distilled of its elements of apostasy, the church was resuscitated and reorganized in all of its original purity and spiritual power. Commencing with the conference in Beloit, the movement of reorganization gained momentum until in 1860 at the conference held in Amboy, Illinois, Joseph Smith III, under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, accepted the office of prophet and seer to the church.

Spiritual Legatees Meet

On Saturday afternoon, June 14, 1952, another group of Saints met at the church in Beloit. Many of these were proud to be the spiritual legatees of the pioneer group that met here one hundred years before. On this occasion the Saints held a preliminary service at the church at two o'clock. They then entered their cars for a trek to visit places of historic interest. It was a long procession of twenty-five cars.

The Trek

The first stop was at the property owned by Jason Briggs in 1851, however it is not known for sure that he lived there at the time he received the revelation. On part of the property is a spring at which the Saints in that early day met and sang their songs of Zion. The second stop of the caravan of cars was at the old home place of the parents of Jason (Hugh and Polly Briggs), which was purchased from the government in 1843.

The third stop was at the property owned by Mary (Briggs) Stiles and her husband. This property was sold in 1851 to John Harrington who acted as clerk of the conference of 1852. The fourth stop was at the home of Sarah and Henry Pease, which was also the home of Brother Henry Stebbins for a few years.

The fifth stop was at an old school building where the children of Apostle and Sister Powers attended school. Other stops were made at interesting points, including the original home of Apostle and Sister Samuel Powers, and the site of the old Baptist church where Elder Noah Dutton conducted the funeral services for Apostle Powers in 1873. Elder Jasper O. Dutton, a grandson of Noah Dutton, known to many of the church today, spoke over the loud speaker a message of testimony and exhortation.

Important Research Well Done

Sister Alma Brookover of Beloit has done much research and is an authority on this particular area of church history. She arranged the tour of historic places and wrote the detailed historical sketch which was read by Brother Cecil Robbins over a loud speaker mounted on a car in the middle of the caravan. "The Rise of the Reorganization," a play written by Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, was the principle feature of the evening service.

General Officer's Contribution

The activities for the next day, Sunday, June 15, opened with a prayer service with Apostle D. O. Chesworth in charge. This was followed by a class period led by the General Church Historian, who reviewed the social aspects of the history of the church since its original organization on April 6, 1830. At the eleven o'clock service President W. Wallace Smith spoke on the general theme of the contribution of his father, Joseph Smith III. After lunch and a period of fellowship, Apostle Chesworth spoke on prayer, exhorting the church to imitate the spirit of the early people of the Reorganization in sacrifice and in prayer.

Congratulations

The congregation and the priesthood of Beloit, as well as the district officials, should be congratulated on the arrangements for the centennial of this first conference of the Saints who sought the resuscitation of the early church. Elder Clyde N. Funk welcomed the visiting members from various branches of the Wisconsin area and other states of the Union. District President Frank Mussell introduced the General Church officers and guest speakers. The church now looks forward to the centennial of 1860, the Amboy Conference, when the re-establishment of the original church was completed in the Reorganization and Joseph Smith accepted the position of leader for which he had been properly set apart by his father, Joseph Smith, Jr., before his martyrdom.

JOHN BLACKMORE

The Purpose and Function of Priesthood

By Jerry C. Runkle

Preordination sermon given on March 23, 1952, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Charlotte Gould size, and the significance of his work is majestic indeed. It is a tremendous work. And once again, there seems to be wisdom in the way priesthood was established in this church—not one minister for a congregation, not one individual charged with all of the responsibilities of priesthood; instead, those responsibilities are shared by many.

SO, WHILE PRIESTHOOD should be thought of as human, yet each man in the priesthood has a distinct and individual responsibility. This has been explained in many ways. The one I like best was given by Brother Charles Hield a few years ago in a meeting in which he expressed his opinions on priesthood. He said it should be thought of as something like a yardstick, made up of thirty-six equal units, all inseparably connected. The yardstick should be held parallel, not vertical, in indicating how that priesthood was to function. I appreciate the way in which these pulpits [in the new Lamoni church—one designated “Melchisedec” and one “Aaronic”] have been used in this respect. They are on the same level, each with its own function and responsibilities, each a vital part of the priesthood. We could not have a yardstick if the twenty-third inch were missing. We could not have a yardstick if any one of the inches were missing. We have a yardstick only if all are there. So with the priesthood within this church where there are many different offices and each office is charged with peculiar and different responsibilities. Each man in the priesthood is a part of a unit, with a particular responsibility given to him in his office; and each responsibility is as important as another to the work as a whole. This morning

I think we have occasion to be grateful once more that when Christ established his church he used wisdom in the way he set up the priesthood, as well as in the other aspects of the work of his church.

I WANT TO EMPHASIZE one or two ideas, related to priesthood, on this occasion. As members of a congregation, we need once more to remind ourselves of our responsibility and of the attitude we should have toward the work of the priesthood and the members of the priesthood. One point I would like to stress emphatically is this: When a person receives the ministry of priesthood, he receives the ministry of Christ—not the ministry of Jerry Runkle or Robert Farnham or someone else who may be in the priesthood. He does not receive their human ministry as members of the priesthood! He receives the ministry of Jesus Christ.

When priesthood is conferred by our Heavenly Father upon a man, that man is called and given the authority to represent Christ in administering certain ordinances and functions of the work of his church, and that is the medium, the method which he has chosen to minister to the members of the church. Now it is true that we can't separate this ministry from the individual. We know the individual is John Jones, so when we receive the ministry of his office as a member of the priesthood, we can't help thinking of him as John Jones, but we must remind ourselves that that man can't minister to us unless he has the authority of Jesus Christ, and he has been called by Jesus Christ to represent him. Only then can he minister to us. If he has that authority, and if

IT IS A SERIOUS and a solemn thing which we do here. I have been thinking a great deal about the subject of priesthood in recent days. Each time I consider the purpose and function of priesthood, I am aware once more of the love, the wisdom, and the concern of our Heavenly Father in the provision that he has made for priesthood in his church. I imagine that he could have accomplished his work without priesthood, as we know it. He could have made contact with his children, more or less directly, by his Spirit. He could have used people who had lived, or those who are with him. I rather imagine it could have been done in many ways. But he did not choose to do it otherwise. He chose to do it in such a way as to use people who live among us, who are human as we are, who have their successes, their difficulties, and their sorrows the same as we. He chose that those who represent him in his church, and who are recognized as having the authority to represent him, should be human.

Once again, as often happens in our thinking concerning such things, we must say that this method in many respects does not seem to be the easy way. It requires a great deal of Christian living on our part to get the benefits that are intended from priesthood because of the fact that he did choose, from among us, humans to administer his work. All of us are different. We have our own possibilities and peculiarities. We have discovered that God can reach each one of us. The scope, the he has had that call, he can minister to us because he represents Jesus Christ, and there is wisdom. If humans are to minister in the work of Jesus Christ, it is very important to know when they have the authority to represent him. But when we know that they have that authority, it is not the ministry of the individual; it is the ministry of Jesus Christ.

ASSOCIATED WITH THIS is another thought I should like to emphasize. When a man is ordained a member of the priesthood, he remains human. I am sure we all know that, but we don't act as though we know it sometimes. When a man is ordained to the priesthood, God doesn't take away from him his agency. That man can still commit wrong; he is still human. If we can just associate these two thoughts correctly together, it will be well. We must remember that when a man is ordained a member of the priesthood, the authority of the priesthood is from Christ, and he can represent Christ. We are entitled to the ministry of Jesus Christ, regardless of the fact that the man is human.

Ideally, we would hope that the man would learn to live a Christlike life and would exemplify the teachings of Christ day by day. It is intended that we who receive the ministry of the priesthood will learn more and more to look to the ministry of Christ through this man. We are all human. We must learn to work in the direction of the ideal. When a man is called to the priesthood, he has the call and the authority to represent Jesus Christ. Therefore, when we receive the ministry of the men in our congregation, let us remember they are called of God; and if we have faith and recognize their priesthood, Christ will hear our prayers, he will honor and respect his representatives and will grant us what we need in harmony with his wisdom.

WE SHOULD STUDY the eighty-third section of the Doctrine and Covenants—the section on priesthood. The sixth paragraph says, in effect, “When you receive my priesthood, you receive me.” We should consider, too, the implication that “when you do not receive my priesthood, you do not receive me.” It is very important that as members of a congregation, having need for the ministry of Christ, we respect the priesthood and realize that we are looking to Christ, not to the man.

If we say, “Who is going to preach?” in making our decision as to whether we are going to church or not, why do we say it? If we say, when our child is blessed, “I want so and so to do it,” or when we have need for administration, if we say, “I want so and so to come,” let us be sure that we do it with the right attitude. If we say, “Mr. A is an elder, and Mr. B is an elder. I don't think I will get any help if Mr. B comes, so I will call Mr. A,” I seriously question whether we are asking for help from Christ or whether we are asking for help from Mr. A. If we come to the church service and say, “I am wasting my time because Mr. So-and-So is preaching,” we will waste our time. But if we come with the attitude that he is representing Christ, if we will go in faith and prayer and proper preparation, He will meet our need; we will receive his ministry. Let us remember that when God calls men to the priesthood and gives them the authority to represent him, he also gives them the strength and the ability to minister to the needs of the people.

I think many a member of the priesthood could tell of experiences where his own feeling of adequacy and preparation is not the basis on which to decide when he ministers. A member of the priesthood may not always be aware of the needs of the people and how they are to be met.

Not long ago I helped a brother in administration. As far as I could tell, it was pretty much the same as any other administration that might have been performed in recent months. But there was a need there. God met that need, and I was aware of it. There was nothing I did particularly, other than to follow out the instructions. The power of God was so strong that for a moment I thought I could not contain it. No particular preparation could have brought that. It was the need of the member of the church that was paramount, and the fact that elders were doing as they were instructed to do. The Spirit of Christ met the need of the member in such a way that we were aware of God's presence. If members will respect priesthood, God will respect priesthood.

NOW I WANT TO TELL the other side of this. I think sometimes when we say, “I want so and so to bless my child,” if we have the attitude that God would recognize any elder in this ordinance, but because this man has lived close to us, has shared our joys and our sorrows, and is an intimate friend, we are justified in our reasoning. The other, where we say we don't have confidence in a man even though he is a member of the priesthood, seems questionable. So, when we add to our numbers this morning three of our brethren as members of the priesthood, let us remember that they are called of God, and that they will have the authority to represent Jesus Christ and to minister to our needs as we respect them. Men may make mistakes; they may not live quite as we think they should live. That is not the ideal, but God will grant the blessing if we go in faith believing and with the proper preparation. He will bless us in spite of the weaknesses of the priesthood.

HERE ARE A FEW WORDS to the men who are to be ordained. It is a solemn and serious thing that you do when you accept the responsibility of priesthood, for, in a sense, from now on you can't afford to make mistakes. While what I have just said is true—that the members of the congregation should respect the priesthood—yet it is intended that priesthood members should lead, that they should be in front of the members in living a Christlike life, that they should attract members and nonmembers to the cause of Christ because of the lives they live. They should have one hand in Christ's and one in the members'. If that is to be so, you must lead. The people won't have confidence in you unless you live a life that justifies that confidence.

It is sobering to think that to use ten minutes in a wrong way might jeopardize your possibilities for ministry. You put on an armor this morning that you can't lay down. There may be times when you wish you could; there may be times when you will say you wish you could have known this morning what you will know then, because of the great responsibilities you have. You desire to be excused for making rather common mistakes, but you won't be. Regardless of where you may be in this world, regardless of when, you are a representative of Jesus Christ and of his church. It is an armor that can't be taken off, and it is a serious responsibility.

YOU WILL LEARN to love people as you minister to their needs, and you will learn to love Christ. You will share the joys of the people when you minister to them, and you will also share their sorrows. In your attempts to do your work, there will come heartaches; there will come times when the people you love and would like to minister to will not receive your ministry, and it will feel as if your heart is being torn out. On these occasions, you will learn to love with the infinite love of Christ and feel the way he felt when he was on the cross. The way will not always be easy. Christ will not always lead you the shortest way. You will have your trials. But as you move forward and accept your responsibilities, you will realize as Nephi of old that God will not ask you to do anything without providing the means whereby you can accomplish it.

So at first you will accept responsibilities that seem to be greater than you can handle, but if you will move out in faith, believing that God has called you and that he will recognize your priesthood and supplement your human efforts with his Spirit, you will find that you will be able to accomplish things you never dreamed you could do. All he asks from you is that you give a reasonable service—that you do the best you can. Be sure you are doing those things in which you can take Christ with you. Meet often with the Saints, study, seek God often in prayer, and before long you will be made to realize that while you have accepted a difficult task, while there are obstacles, while there are times when you think you can't continue, yet when you look around for alternatives, you will realize the world has nothing to offer you that can equal the joy of ministry. On these occasions, your soul will be lifted up, and you will be made to exclaim that you can't make a sacrifice, for God blesses you far beyond the effort which you make.

You do not work alone. Members of the congregation will have confidence in you. There will be many who pray for you when you attempt to do your work. You won't be aware of it, except that you gain strength. You may not know who individually is concerned about you, but other prayers will be offered that will support you. You don't have to do the work alone. There are other men of the priesthood who will work with you and will join with you in your sorrows and in your joys. If you will give yourself wholeheartedly to this cause and diligently seek to follow Christ, you will find joy which you have never known before.

Yes, it is a serious thing that you do this day, but it brings joy and appreciation to all of us as we see the work of the church moving forward.

Willing Spirits

BY LENORA NIXON

Our pastor recently started a discourse by stating, "I am not going to preach to those who are present tonight, but to the willing spirits that are here, occupying these empty seats, sent by the bodies that were too weak to come." How often we've heard, and perhaps said it ourselves: "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak"!

This can easily work the other way, too. Many times we send our bodies, but leave our spirits home. We are only half alive in this condition, for such is what happens at our passing when the spirit leaves the body.

We heard an amusing story of the psychology used by a pastor who could not discourage members of his congregation from talking during the prelude and other parts of the service. He arranged with the choir director to have the singers stop suddenly after an ff crescendo. In the acute silence, a sister was heard to remark loudly, "I fry mine in lard."

In a reverent and humble fellowship service, where many are voicing their desires—some with emotion, some with the spirit of reconstruction—there will be others chatting, writing, or reading. What influence do these people have on the visitor, the new member, the young? No one is in complete control of the thoughts that come into his mind during church services. Many have problems for which they cannot seem to find answers and some are brought to church hoping they can be worked out. Many things enter in to mar these brief weekly visits with God. It might be a good idea for pastors to place a box, labeled "Problems," in the vestibule, then invite the worshipers to drop their questions in the box, so they could feel free to commune with God.

We need to keep our bodies and spirits together, and not have them separated until the final call comes.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART II

WHEN twenty-five years old, my grandfather, John Landers, was married to Mary Ann Griffin in St. John's, New Brunswick; but his happy wedded life lasted only about four years. When his wife died and left him with two little children, he was obliged to give them into the care of their grandparents. He talked with me once of the heartbreaking experience of losing his beloved companion and the breaking up of his home. He remained single for seven years, then met a young Scotch girl, Christiana Cairns, and they were married in Brockville, Ontario.

Their long married life covered sixty-two years, the greater part of which they were inseparable companions. She became so accustomed to being associated with him in his activities that once in conversation concerning a certain couple she inadvertently asked, "Was that the couple Father and I married?" She never heard the last of that slip.

The serenity of their home life was somewhat disturbed in the early years when their first children were born. This was due to the difference in their religious views. Christiana was a Methodist and believed the children should be sprinkled at an early age, and John, being a Baptist, believed they should not be baptized until they were older.

Often he prayed in the time of their family devotions, asking that they might come to see alike in matters of religion, which called forth from his wife the stout assertion, "Well, then, you will have to be a Methodist, for I never will be a Baptist." She noticed after a time that he no longer offered the petition in his prayers, and asked him why he omitted it. He told her the Lord had answered him and that the time would come when they should see alike. That time came, and when it did they were neither Methodist nor Baptist.

A Marvelous Work

The prayer was answered in a manner neither of them could have anticipated. They did not know that a great light was even then beginning to shine in which they would rejoice together. A few years before a lad in the adjoining state of New York was earnestly debating the same question that troubled them: Which of all the churches was right? In his perplexity the boy was moved to ask the Lord in prayer which of the churches he should join, and he was directed to join none of them, for all were wrong.

This did not imply that there was nothing of good in the various sects of the Christian church, for there is much of good in them, and they exercise a great influence in the world to the betterment of civilization. But with the lapse of the centuries since Christ taught his gospel in Palestine, and since his apostles developed the organization of his church, innovations had crept in through errors in human judgment and practice and changes had been made gradually in the organic structure of the church and in its doctrines and ordinances, until it had become divided and subdivided into many sects that held conflicting creeds and differed in what they held essential to the salvation of the soul.

Gradually, too, the churches had lost sight of outstanding declarations of the Hebrew prophets, of Christ and his apostles, and the world was unaware that the time had come for a great work of restoration to begin in preparation for the second coming of Christ to the world.

The troubled lad who sought the Lord in the quiet of a woodland retreat, and there was told to hold himself aloof from the churches of his community, was destined to have a leading part in "the marvelous work" soon to come forth. The light that came to the world through him as an instrument in the hands of the Lord was that into which John Landers and his companion were led through the preaching of the Scriptures they had held sacred for years.

In the summer of 1836 it was announced that a Latter Day Saint missionary would preach in the community in which John and Christiana lived, and when the day arrived they set out to hear him. As they went John said to his wife, "Christie, I intend to rise and oppose that man today." She stopped short in the path, threatening to go home if he persisted in carrying out his intention, but they finally compromised when he promised to be quiet unless constrained to refute error.

They went on to the meeting and heard the missionary's sermon, and John made no move to rise. When they reached home his wife said, "John, why did you not rise and oppose the man?" He answered, "There was nothing to oppose. What he preached is true. It all agrees with the Bible."

The missionary who preached that day was John E. Page. In his journal he mentioned spending a night in the home of a Baptist elder, Mr. Landers, of whom he said, "I think he eventually will believe the gospel."

He said further: "I went in company of John Landers to a place called Plum Hollow, preached in a large schoolhouse, crowded full. . . . The people gave good attention. John Landers arose and said he had heard the truth. He promises he will be baptized soon. He says, 'What have I been about all my days with the Bible in my hands!' I preached again at the Stone schoolhouse, full of attentive people. I taught them the gathering of Israel. John Landers arose and witnessed he had heard the truth. I went home with him that night. Monday I went to Ebenezer Landers,' held meeting, and baptized ten, one Baptist elder, John Landers; one botanic doctor, named Lyman Stoddard; and eight others."

This baptizing by John E. Page took place on October 2, 1836, and on December 3, Christiana was baptized by James A. Blakeslee. The promise was fulfilled that she and her husband should see alike in matters of religion.

The missionary, John E. Page, was highly successful in his presentation of the gospel message in Canada. In two years of labor there he baptized over six hundred people. He and John Landers became close friends, and when finally he passed away in 1867 Elder Landers preached his funeral sermon.

How John Landers Became a Cripple

Having been baptized into the church and ordained to its ministry, Grandfather Landers traveled the same circuit he had previously covered as a Baptist preacher, but now he taught the wonderful story of the restoration of the everlasting gospel and delivered the warning message of the latter days.

His work was cut short by a serious accident that befell him as he and his wife's brother were chopping down a tree in the forest. Since the diary of John E. Page makes no mention of his being a crippled man, I think this injury must have occurred after his entrance into the church.

When the tree began to topple, John Cairns shouted to him, "Run, John!" and he ran, but something unforeseen happened that caused the tree to fall in a direction not anticipated, and he was caught by it and crushed terribly. I know only the bare outline of what happened, but he who before had been strong and active walked from that time to the end of an unusually long life with a limp. My mother, a small child when the accident occurred, said she had a faint recollection of trailing in the dust of the road a little line of the blood that trickled from her father's wounds as men bore him home in a quilt.

No attempt need be made to surmise what must have followed the injury that laid low the head of the little family that now numbered five, for three children had been born to John and Christiana in the six years of their married life. To his physical suffering must have been added commiseration for his brave wife, who was facing approaching motherhood under these untoward conditions.

As soon as he was able, he went to work making barrel staves. In January of 1838 twin babies were born, but they lived only a few days. Later in that year the family removed from Brockville to Quincy, Illinois. John E. Page led a colony at that time to Missouri, and I think it altogether probable the Landers family was included in it, though I do not know that to have been the case.

Flight From Persecution

Many were fleeing to the West at that time from persecution at Kirtland, and the Saints of Missouri were suffering extreme intolerance at the hands of those who drove them from the state. From twelve to fifteen thousand men, women, and children fled in the inclement months of autumn and winter, crossing the Mississippi River into Illinois, where for a few years they had a respite from bitter persecution. John Landers made two trips from Quincy into Missouri to aid in transporting refugees to their new home.

In March of 1839 action was taken to select land for settlement and a place for the gathering of the church. A purchase was finally made in Hancock County, Illinois, about fifty miles above Quincy. Joseph Smith and his family arrived in Commerce in May, and there within a few years the beautiful city of Nauvoo arose and soon bade fair to become a great city, toward which many looked with expectation.

A Visit by Joseph Smith

John Landers and his family were not among those who settled in Nauvoo. Instead, they located in Henderson County, which joined Hancock County on the north. My mother used to enjoy telling of a time while living there when she came in from school one day and found a pleasant young stranger visiting with her father. When she crossed the room and seated herself on her father's knee the visitor smiled, and she saw that his eyes were very blue and that the smile was in his eyes as well as on his lips.

The young man was Joseph Smith. Mother used to describe the new gray suit he wore and his broad-brimmed hat, and the strong, easy grace with which he walked when he left the house. Having known a number of men descended from him, I think I can visualize him as she described him—tall, strong-limbed, and athletic.

Nauvoo

A young boy who grew up in Nauvoo at that time and was intimate with the boys of the Smith family later became a missionary of the church and wrote some of his recollections of those years. He mentioned Joseph's fondness for children and of his entering at times into the sports of his boys and their young companions. He wrote: "I can see him dodging and jumping about to evade our balls or wooden spears, and I can hear his hearty laugh as there came lulls in the game."

Nauvoo at that time was the leading city of Illinois. It was of marked superiority over its environment, with well constructed houses, well-arranged farms, a university of learning, and a beautiful temple in the process of being built. In this many found great satisfaction, but Governor Ford, in his History of Illinois, showed that in this material prosperity there lurked a danger. He said that political parties vied in their efforts to gain the Mormon vote, and that the Whig party, disappointed in not receiving that support in 1844, determined to drive the Mormons from the state.

Even deadlier than this outside opposition was dissension that developed within the church, of which it is recorded in Church History: "This agitation within the church, connected with the religious and political influence used against the church from without, produced troublesome times in and around Nauvoo, and public feeling ran so high that the lives of the Prophet and others of the leading men were in constant danger."

Years of Wandering

In all their vicissitudes John and Christiana Landers did not waver in their allegiance to what they had received as the gospel of Jesus Christ, but clung to it in the purity in which they had accepted it. From some cause I am not able to trace, they suffered financial reverses and moved about from place to place as they found opportunity to maintain their family of six children.

They had moved one time to a new home in the wooded valley of the Illinois River opposite the town of Peru, and the prospect before them seemed to have been anything but inviting. It must have been gloomy, indeed, on the day when Christiana climbed the crude stairs to the loft of the log house in which they lived and sat weeping in the seclusion she had sought. Her little boy, Henry, came looking for her and found her there.

Charles Stedman

He was followed by a young man whose head and shoulders appeared in the opening of the stairway. Asking pardon for intruding on her privacy he stated his errand. He was at work chopping wood in the forest and his boarding place was at a considerable distance. The boy, Henry, had found him at his work and had told him his home was near. The young stranger said, "I thought, ma'am, I might find board with you." At this Christiana's sense of humor arose above her depression and she answered, "Young man, if you can find a board about this place, you will do better than I can." But she took the young man into her family, dried her tears, and descended to the kitchen to make what frugal preparation she could for the evening meal.

The stranger was Charles Stedman, a young man from Prince Edward Island, who had made his way to this forest on the banks of the Illinois River. Later he and the eldest daughter of John and Christiana were married, William B. Smith officiating. They made their home in Peru, where Charles found permanent employment with a company engaged in cutting and storing natural ice in the winter and selling it in the summer in the southern cities. It was a lucrative business in that time when modern methods of refrigeration had not yet been devised. I remember that when I was a little girl father sometimes went as far south as New Orleans with ice that had been cut on the Illinois River.

Leaving Peru and its vicinity the Landers' family made a home for a time in Mendota, and John did teaming, hauling merchandise between Mendota and Chicago, a distance of eighty miles. Chicago was then growing rapidly; lake steamers connected it with the east, but railroads had not yet developed toward the West.

The family of John and Christiana began to disintegrate after the age-old manner and give place to new ones. From this time on I shall refer to them as my grandfather and grandmother.

The Adjacency of the Kingdom of God

By Bessie Taylor

WHAT IS THE KINGDOM OF GOD?

Let us first look at the two great kingdoms of nature—the organic and the inorganic. Doctrine and Covenants 85:9 tells us that to every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds and conditions.

There is one great law which guards the threshold of kingdoms—that entrance from the lower sphere can be secured only by a direct regenerating act, which emanates from the kingdom next in order above it. The passage from the mineral world to the plant world is absolutely sealed on the mineral side. It is only by the bending down of some root into this inorganic world that minerals can be gifted with vitality. No stone within itself has the power to grow into the organic world. No modification of environment, no chemistry, energy, electricity, or evolution can endow a mineral with the attributes of the organic world. Except a mineral be born "from above" it cannot enter the kingdom above it. Just as the plant assimilates the mineral, so does the animal incorporate the plant. It is a very mysterious law which guards the portals of kingdoms.

Likewise the natural world is sealed from the spiritual world on the natural side. Man is as helpless as the stone to advance into a superior kingdom. No mental energy, moral effort, or evolution of character could endow a person with the attributes of spiritual life. His admission is a scientific impossibility. There is a remarkable harmony that exists between the organic world as arranged by science and the spiritual world as arranged by the Scriptures.

There is no spontaneous generation in religion any more than in nature. New Testament writers are agreed that the natural man is regarded as dead by the spiritual world. The barrier which separates kingdoms restricts mind as well as matter. It is this great law of biogenesis that distinguishes Christianity from all other religions. No one can say that he who has Buddha, or Confucius, or Mohammad has life. Christianity professes to develop eternal life. It defines the highest conceivable future for mankind.

THE PRIME PURPOSE of Christ's mission was to give men life—to plant the seeds of the spiritual world in the souls of men. By the process of conversion and baptism these spiritual seeds are conceived and spiritual growth begins. It is difficult to distinguish between a Christian and a non-Christian man because the unformed spiritual embryos lie deeply hidden in their earthly chrysalises. All life begins at the primary cell stage. David Seabury says, "Life is a womb in which our spiritual natures are developing until, freed by death, we are born at last."

The choice of conversion is a personal matter. It is an opportunity for soul advancement. Paul knew its worth and price. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"—Hebrews 2:3, Inspired Version. Neglect means loss and degeneration. Man is no exception to the law of retrogression. Nature knows man only as an animal. If he neglects himself he will deteriorate into a worse animal. Two possibilities of life are ever before him—advancement or degeneration. The struggle for advancement is very difficult, for growth is slow; and one is always on the verge of some temptation. The soul that neglects and is uncultivated must fall away to death, not because God said so, but because it cannot help dying. It has neglected the functions which resist death. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" is a positive law and deals with the sins of commission. The negative side of this problem deals with the sins of omission—"If we neglect, how shall we escape?" The answer is, We cannot. We cannot escape any more than a man who falls into the sea and has neglected to learn to swim.

Neglect does more to the soul than make it miss salvation. It deprives it of its capacity for salvation. The spiritual eye must die and lose its power by purely natural law. "From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath" as the "wicked and slothful servant."

ETERNAL LIFE seems impossible to the finite mind, but we must know that to go outside of what we call nature is not to go outside of environment. Nature is only a part of environment. This material universe we see is only a fragment of the universe we do not see. The mental or moral world is unknown to the plant, but it is real. If known to the plant, that world would be supernatural to it. Things are natural or supernatural simply according to where one stands. When a mineral is seized upon by a living plant and elevated to the organic kingdom, no trespass against nature is committed. It merely enters a larger environment, which before was supernatural to it, but which now is entirely natural. When the heart of man is seized upon and quickened by the Spirit of God, no violence is done to natural law. The plant is made of materials which once were inorganic. An organizing principle not belonging to the minerals lays hold of them, and they come into the kingdom to which the organized principle belonged.

In the spiritual world there is an organizing principle at work among the materials of the organic kingdom performing a further miracle, but not a different one. This process Christ verified in his triumph of the Resurrection. The spiritual kingdom offers man that which is already within his reach.

The minerals supply material for the vegetable kingdom; the vegetable supplies material for the mental; and the mental supplies material for the spiritual. Each member of the series is complete only when the steps below it are complete. The highest demands all.

The mineral at the bottom is dead to the sphere above it, but it furnishes the physical basis of life for the kingdom next in order. It is absolutely essential to the kingdom above it. The inorganic kingdom is the preparation for the organic. The organic sphere is dead to the spiritual, so the Scriptures say, yet in turn it supplies the basis of life to the kingdom next in order. The organic kingdom is the preparation for the spiritual.

When the dead atoms of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, etc., are seized upon by life, the organism at first is very lowly. It possesses few functions and little beauty. At the bottom of the biological scale we find organisms which have only the most limited correspondence. A tree corresponds with the soil and rocks about it and the elements above it. It is not aware of the animal activity about it, nor the utility it renders. The bird, which is higher in the scale of life, corresponds with a wider environment. We say a bird is more alive than a tree. It has a correspondence with a larger area of environment.

Man, who is yet higher in the scale, has a much wider sphere. He is the most living of all creatures, but is he yet in correspondence with the whole environment?

All organisms are seen to be partly living and partly dead. The tree is alive to its narrow environment but dead to everything beyond it. Likewise, the bird responds to its environment but is dead to the civilization of man. Last, there is man. Is his conscious environment the whole environment? Radio, television, and atomic power tell us no. The Christian life is the only one that will ever be complete. In the sight of eternity all human ideals fall short, and all human hopes dissolve before the open grave. Jesus Christ is the ideal and goal of orderly growth. The barrier recognized by science between the organic and the inorganic is similar to the barrier pointed out by theology between the organic and the spiritual. The catastrophe of death wrought the change. Science has used every effort to abolish this barrier, but it continues to challenge, and no consistent evolutionist can fail to reckon with it.

THese two great barriers, life and death, do not destroy the pattern of life, but they make necessary the framing of a larger doctrine. We see the kingdoms themselves evolving and the supreme law—which has guarded the development from the simple to the complex in matter, in individuals, in subkingdom, and in kingdom, until only two or three great kingdoms remain—now begins at the beginning again on the spiritual level as if these souls were simple cells or organisms.

This is the secret of creation and the prophecy of Christianity. Science simply calls it evolution. Christianity, discerning the ends through the means, calls it redemption.

Scriptures proclaim life after death for all, but only those who have celetialized their lives can hope to enter the superior kingdom. Christ asserts the terms in a most literal way: "Except a man be born of the water, and of the Spirit, he can not see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

The doctrine of eternal life is the most vital point in the Scriptures. The conditions necessary for an eternal life do not exist in our natural world. Christ made no attempt to project the natural world into the spiritual kingdom. Instead of attaching immortality to the natural organism, he introduced a new and original factor—"He that hath the Son of God hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." This is the correspondence that will bridge the grave. This correspondence comes not by generation but by regeneration, and it survives death. Regeneration is the adding of more life. God delights himself with life. He can add life as well as give life.

WE KNOW the spiritual world belongs to neither the organic nor the inorganic because it is endowed with a life infinitely removed from either the mineral, vegetal, or animal. Its characteristics are not yet clearly known to us. That the spiritual, in turn, may be the preparation for something still higher is not impossible. At least we know, according to Doctrine and Covenants, Section 76, that awards will be made according to valor, and that the celestial, terrestrial, and teletial are glories of degree.

The conception of this fourth kingdom transcends us. Christianity opens a way to further development. It offers an ever-widening environment. It is simply the outer segment of our natural world. We separate the spiritual from the natural as we do the plant from the animal, but in reality they are the same. The temporal and spiritual are different parts of one environment. God is not confined to this outer segment, but he lives and moves in the whole.

The inorganic world, to begin with, is rigid. The plant next, though plastic in its elements, is comparatively insusceptible to change. The animals are mobile, sensitive, and free. Man is the most mobile, the most at leisure from routine, and open for change. The mind and the soul have the highest mobility of all. Their capacity to change makes conversion possible. The new element, the conscious power of choice, demands an adequate knowledge of what it is to choose. To meet this power of choice the perfect type of our Lord and Savior was revealed.

It is a law in all departments of nature that every organism must live for its kingdom. Every kingdom levies upon its subjects the tax of an exclusive obedience, and punishes disloyalty with death. The surrender Christ demanded was absolute. Every aspirant must seek first the kingdom of God. Until men acknowledge to the full extent Christ's mission to be nothing less than a new kingdom, they will continue to live hopelessly for two kingdoms at once.

Yes, the kingdom of God is "just around the corner." It is so near to us that its rays are brightening our horizon. We see the coming of a new day, a day when Zion shall come into her own and the kingdom of God will become a reality to this sin-sick world.

THE INSPIRED VERSION (Genesis 2: 5) positively states that God created all things spiritually before they were created physically. This does not contradict evolution, for what is the first chapter of Genesis but a description of the spiritual evolution of creation.

The subversive order that took place and set up a barrier was life when it was physically created. The Inspired Version (Genesis 2: 8) positively says man was the first flesh upon the earth. This may not agree with scientific journals, but an alternative theory cannot be proved nor does it explain the advent of life or what followed in the wake of physical creation. Death became a fixed finale for all life. Verse eleven of the same chapter says that even trees were first made spiritually and have a living soul. Who could deny this Scripture? Are they not propagated by a life germ, which under a microscope is similar to any animal germ? They have a life span subject to death at any instant, the same as an animal.

What will be the end of our physical creation as we know it now has been repeatedly prophesied in the Scripture. Scientists agree that this universe cannot always go on as it is now. Just as preparation was made for the physical creation, so now is preparation being made for a full spiritual ovation. Christ will come personally to make the final preparations. During this millennium great progress will be made.

The next big subversive order that will set up an insurmountable barrier is, according to Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7, the passing away of the earth. Again there will be another great order accompanying this to balance the event. This order will be the resurrection. These last two great orders will harmonize life after the resurrection. When the great final day of judgment is over life will go on.

A Cure for Resentment

By June Sherman

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice.—Ephesians 4:31.

WHEN I WAS BAPTIZED I put off the old way of life and put on the new. It was not easy, but I quit smoking, using profane language, and participating in occasional week-end over-indulgences. People who observed this change said, "Look what the gospel has done for her." I laid down the sins that showed, and that was a wonderful testimony for my friends, but for me it was not enough. What of the resentment festering and eating at my heart since childhood? How about the anger that spilled over and caused pain of body and spirit? How did I react when intentionally or unintentionally someone hurt me? Deadly and poisonous resentments, fear, anger, malice, hatred, cruelty, worry, and anxiety are sins which do not always show as plainly to others but are far more dangerous to our spiritual development than some of the lesser evils in our lives which are more obvious.

I resented my mother from the time I could remember because she left me in the care of an aunt and grandmother while she sought freedom from her alcoholic husband. A series of misfortunes befell her so that she was unable to care for me, but I did not think of the anguish she suffered. I worried only about myself and believed Mother was my enemy because she could not take care of me. I took this attitude all through my unhappy childhood of numerous illnesses and heart ailments both real and imaginary.

Then came my wonderful husband and the gospel. This should read: "And they lived happily ever after." I escaped (I thought) my mother and my mother's people and would have little to do with them, since I allowed my feelings toward them to make me ill. I struggled and fought and cried and muddled through four children and ten years of married life with the help of numerous doctors, for I was still sick with resentments and anger.

THEN A WAY of escape came again, for I moved to a distant city where I heard from mother very seldom. This running away brought temporary peace, and I was happy and efficient. But just as suddenly my world was turned upside down because it was necessary, for economic reasons, to return to the former city. The same old ailments returned also. Many people thought the climate didn't agree with me. I still would have little to do with my mother, even though she came often, bringing lovely clothes and numerous gifts for the children. I had never stopped to consider that my mother loved me and my children and would enjoy a visit from us.

I always assumed that the terrible feeling about my mother would eventually go away if I just asked God and waited. So I prayed year after year, but no miracle happened.

Then, having stood all the anguish I thought I could bear, I cried in despair, "My Father, I feel forsaken, but I know I'm ill because of the resentment I feel for my mother. I know not the cause—it must have happened when I was too small to remember. Thou art the author of my being, and thou knowest the thoughts that even I am unable to find. Please show me how to get rid of my unhappy, unwholesome feelings." I read I John 2:9—"He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now."

DARKNESS? That was where I was, even though I had the light of the gospel. I hadn't seen sunshine on the subject of mother ever. I had never sent my mother so much as a card on Mother's Day. I had never sent her a birthday gift. Sometimes I remembered her at Christmas. But Mother almost never failed to remember me on all important occasions. I always tried to find an excuse when I was asked to participate in Mother's Day services. If I had to, I did so in bitterness and usually spent the rest of the day in tears and illness.

"Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil."—Psalm 37:8. "Put off all these; anger, wrath, malice . . . seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him; where there is neither Greek nor Jew . . . bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all."—Colossians 3:8-12.

Christ in my mother? I had not seen that until now. I had thought all this time it was my mother who was guilty of wrong actions. Perhaps she was, but, if so, I was ten times as guilty of wrong reactions. I was trying to apply an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" doctrine. Jesus said: "If the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you."—Matthew 10:13. Peace cannot abide where resentment rules.

THROUGH THIS EXPERIENCE I believe I am surmounting one of my greatest stumbling blocks and that finally I shall write success at the end of this chapter of my life and say "Thank you, God, for this terrible and moving episode." The experience has been unhappy and frightening, but the result is peace within and peace without everywhere I go.

Cease, forsake, put away, fret not, put off—these words spell action, not just waiting. So I shall fret not over my mother, as to whether she was in the past just or unjust to me. That is for God to say. I will honor my mother not for what she was, but for what she may become. My very attitudes are contagious.

I will put away forever the resentments of the past. They only do me harm. I will put off anger and malice because they make me ill, inefficient, unloving, and unlovely. I will put on the "new man," which is renewed in knowledge after the image of God. I will react with love, for "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him" (I John 2:10). I will feel as God wants me to feel, because the light of the gospel is brilliant on and in every corner of my being. I cannot hide even the smallest grain of resentment, anger, or hate, for no matter how deep I try to bury it in my mind, it will show. I will take it out and find that the older it is the more hideous it will look. I want no part of it in me. I will put it off along with the rest of the cumbersome burdens of worry, anxiety, hatred, and fear, and "put on the new man, a new creature in Christ."

As one good pastor has said, "Something is required of us. God is demanding of us a practical demonstration of his word and his Spirit in our lives."

Question Time

Question:

I understand that "rabbi" means teacher. What connection does our office of "teacher" have with the Jewish rabbi? Was there a division in the Aaronic priesthood from the time of Aaron until the time of Christ in the Jewish faith? How does the office of priest and deacon fit in with the Jewish faith at the time of Christ?

Missouri

P. E. E.

Answer:

Rabbi was not the name of an office in the ancient Jewish church but a title of respect used of prominent doctors and teachers. There is no direct relation with our office of teacher in the church.

There was no division in the Aaronic priesthood, except that of office. Levites, priests, and high priests are mentioned. The office of teacher or deacon is not mentioned, though they may have existed. There is some likelihood that the term "Levites" may have covered these offices.

In establishing his work and building his church, Jesus made a clean break with the old Jewish institution, repudiating its baptism and organization, thus indicating its nonacceptability. He established his church after the divine pattern without regard to the perverse organization among the Jews. The latter-day church is built by the revelation of Jesus Christ after the same pattern, having both the priesthoods of Aaron and Melchisedec and the necessary offices pertaining thereto.

Question:

According to the Priesthood Manual deacons are to be the financial board or treasurers. If this is true, is it according to church regulations to have a lay member occupy when deacons in good standing are available? It seems we should recognize them in their office.

Michigan

Mrs. A. R.

Answer:

The question is one of administration and properly belongs to the administrative officers of the church of whom counsel may be sought; namely, branch president, district president, or if need be, the apostle in charge.

Caring for the finances of the church is but one of several functions and responsibilities attaching to the office of deacon, and since men are called and ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, not every man is adapted for every work. Not every deacon is necessarily a good financier and need not be. If he is more capable in some other line of work belonging to the deacon's office, there is where he will find his greatest success, and there the branch will receive its greatest good from his ministrations.

Accedence should be made to the decision of the branch expressed by its vote, though if at any time it is thought there has been a serious departing from the law it may be brought before the officers as mentioned. In no event should controversy be permitted to disturb the peace and harmony of the branch.

Question:

Many churches of today take the stand that because Christ made wine for the wedding feast it must be all right to drink. What reply can I offer in return? I know there are other parts in the Bible that say, "Woe to them that drink strong drink," but how can I explain the other?

Michigan

Mrs. A. V. S.

Answer:

1. The Greek word oinos translated "wine" was used to apply to both fermented and unfermented grape juice. Dr. Young in his concordance says oinos meant either wine or grape juice. It is susceptible of being interpreted in either way.

2. The modern use of the word "wine" is also susceptible to both meanings, the word being frequently used as applying to the unfermented juice. The Standard Dictionary defines it as "the fermented juice of the grape; in loose usage the juice of the grape whether fermented or not," and mentions further that "unfermented wine: sometimes preferred in the celebration of the Eucharist."

3. Where the prophets and apostles have spoken the mind of the Lord by inspiration in the Bible the general import is against the use of (fermented) wine and strong drink, though frequently, where custom is mentioned, it is not condemnatory. One divine utterance disapproving reveals His will, but there are more than one, and in the light of this it would be extremely inconsistent for Christ, the Son of God, to himself create intoxicating liquor for social pleasure. It would likewise be inconsistent for us to believe that he did so.

4. In this latter day when intoxicants were becoming the curse of the world, the Lord spoke again very directly to the church saying:

Inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves, to offer up your sacraments before him. And behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

If the Lord is now against the practice of using intoxicants, he must have held that view when upon the earth, for "he changes not." The church of today has universally interpreted this teaching as requiring the use of unfermented wine for the Communion.

Question:

Is there any passage of Scripture in the Bible that states a child does not reach the age of accountability until eight years?

Iowa

Answer:

Yes. Genesis 17: 11, Inspired Version:

That thou mayest know for ever that children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old.

The Name of the Brother of Jared

By Charles Fry

As I See It

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Limited space will not permit many articles on the same subject to be printed.—EDITORS

OUR ANSWER on this point in Question Time in the Herald for May 5 has brought comments and questions, both to the editor and to the writer, eliciting further information and suggesting that the name of the Brother of Jared is given as "Gazelem" in Alma 17: 52-64.

The theory that the Brother of Jared's name was Gazelem is not new. Looking into the matter many years ago we became convinced of its incorrectness, and more recent researches have confirmed this conclusion. The question broadens considerably by study, but we shall try to keep our comments as brief as possible.

The withholding of the name of so great and prominent a man as was the Brother of Jared, necessitating the frequent use of the non-phonious expression "Brother of Jared" in its place, could hardly have been without some substantial reason. But if his name had already been given by Alma then that reason was already defeated and the withholding by Moroni needless.

Alma used the name "Gazelem" while charging his son and successor, Helaman, with the custody of the sacred records and the "stone," or two stones as elsewhere mentioned, otherwise variously termed "interpreters," "directors," or in Bible parlance the Urim and Thummim. He urged faithful oversight and preservation of them, for the Lord had a purpose in them as pertaining to future generations. He alluded to the historical account recorded on the twenty-four plates of Ether which were included in the transfer and mentioned the deep sins of the Jaredite people, wherein they supported secret organizations for the purpose of gaining power and wealth by treachery, deceit, and violence which led to their downfall and extinction. He assured Helaman that the Lord had a purpose in preserving these records and bringing them to the knowledge of future generations.

The Nephite nation had been given a knowledge of these devastating evils, yet Alma points out that they would be revealed to "future generations." Ether 1:30-35 and 3: 92-102 extend that time down to the last days. A knowledge of these things came to the Nephites by the Urim and Thummim, or "stone," and that which has come to the modern world came through the same means via Joseph Smith. A greater revelation is yet to be made when the sealed part of the Book of Mormon is translated; but that is still in the future. All this goes to show that the Brother of Jared, who had been dead more than two millenniums, was in no wise under consideration in Alma's charge. He probably wrote a prophetic warning, but it remained for another to bring to light the sealed revelation by the stone which should "shine forth in darkness unto light," in the hands of the Lord's servant whom he called Gazelem, which name is evidently descriptive rather than specific, though its original meaning is unknown. It probably is descriptive of the seer's office.

THE SUBJECT, superficially unimportant, does open up a wide range of highly important thought, particularly relating to the work of what the Book of Mormon calls "secret combinations" in the last days. These are inspired of Satan, whose purpose is the destruction of all government, all religion, all freedom, and the common rights of man, as well as bringing people down to abject servitude and ultimate destruction. By them the Jaredite nation was destroyed, and subsequently the Nephite nation. But the greater warning points to the latter days, and it is in our own times that we must look for the fulfilling of these prophetic warnings as given by Alma, Moroni, and others.

Moroni points out (Mormon 4: 36, 56) that the latter-day restoration will come "in a day when the blood of the saints shall cry unto the Lord, because of secret combinations and the works of darkness," and warns that "the sword of vengeance hangeth over you." This warning is amplified in Ether 3: 92-102, where he says these combinations "are had among all people." He particularly warns the Gentiles upon the American continent. If they permit these evil forces to get power over them, it means overthrow and destruction.

Whosoever buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries; and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil. . . . Wherefore, I, Moroni, am commanded to write these things.

For the first time in the history of the world these factional forces are combining into one united and universal organization under Communism, having a world-wide purpose, namely the subjugation or destruction of all people and all human rights. It is Satan's culminating move to captivate and rule the world, an end which he has sought from the beginning, but in which he has been restrained until now.

AT THE TIME of the Restoration the Lord said, "The devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst." Satan is yet to gain world-wide dominion, with one exception—the kingdom of God. The world will be divided into two camps—the kingdom of the devil, and the kingdom of God. Between these camps will be the last great battle with victory coming to the people of God only through the intervention of Christ in person. He has said, "I will fight your battles."

Somewhere along the line of these developments, the prophecies of Alma and others (concerning the great revelation when the Lord will unfold the secret things of evil by the Urim and Thummim in the hands of his seer pseudonymously named Gazelem) will be fulfilled. Light will shine out of darkness, and the people of God will be informed of the enemy's secret designs. This is the deep import we see in Alma's prophetic charge, with which other prophecies agree.

"This Is the Day the Lord Hath Made"

A talk given by Bishop Elmer C. Evans at the official opening of the Grand Rapids church, April 20, 1952.

TODAY AS WE MEET HERE I am reminded of a statement made by David, the shepherd king: "This is the day the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." The Israelites were then about to erect a temple in compliance with the will of the Lord, which later was known as Solomon's Temple. David had cause to rejoice, for all the people, high and low, brought of their substance and made offerings in great abundance.

I think that we, too, can rejoice today, for it is the offerings and the sacrifices of the people of this branch that make possible our meeting in this new building. We cannot help reviewing the background of God's relationships with men, both in nature and in the giving of his Son, Jesus Christ, in sacrifice to bring about the salvation of the human family. Sacrifice is essential to progress.

Those who have had the privilege of visiting—or even reading about—the Great Northwest know of the salmon industry. Annually in the spring the salmon come from the larger bodies of water and swim up the streams to spawn. They swim against swift currents, sometimes leaping over large rocks or boulders and even over dams several feet high. Not all are successful; some are dashed against the rocks and die; while the others continue to swim upstream to quiet waters to lay their eggs.

All of this is wonderful, mysterious, sacred. After spawning, the fish become lifeless and finally die; the flesh decays, thus creating food for their young. They also provide food for man.

This is the way the Great Creator has ordained it; he creates the fish and places within it the instinct of sacrifice to perpetuate its existence. While this is not an exact parallel, there is a similarity in human life. Man thinks and reasons; he has knowledge and understanding; but he has his own agency and by choice decides to do good or evil. This has been true down through the ages, and each generation has contributed much to the oncoming generations.

WE CANNOT HELP wondering what our world would be like had it not been for the supreme sacrifice of Christ. He taught the principles of eternal life and lived in harmony with those principles; in that living he brought to all mankind the words of life, creating a faith in man that there is a God, a Creator of all things. It was he who said, "I am come that ye might have life, even a more abundant life." We think also of the prophets of the Old Testament—of their lives and of their writings which give to us an understanding of God's dealings with the children of Israel. Through this Scripture we can profit from the experiences of the Israelites.

Many of the good things of life come as the result of sacrifice. It was true of the leaders of the Reformation who made possible that great religious movement; through their sacrifices we have freedom of religion and the right to worship as we please. As it was true of them, so was it also true of Joseph Smith whom the Lord used to bring to pass the Restoration; through him there was restored the gospel of Christ in its original form. He gave of his ability and his talents, and sacrificed his life that we might have a religion in its purity. Many writings are handed down from his pen as principles and commandments; these are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. Here we find some of the very best literature in the world. It was given through inspiration; it contains words of understanding and wisdom, words of life; and it embraces all the principles and teachings of both the Old and the New Testament. Succeeding the Martyr was Joseph Smith III, and Frederick M. Smith, both of whom made outstanding contributions to the progress of the church. Today at the head of our church we have another son of Joseph Smith, through whom the will of God continues to be revealed.

YES, THIS DAY we can rejoice and be glad for our spiritual background. "This is the day the Lord hath made, and we will rejoice and be glad in it." We should be grateful not only for the privilege of being here and knowing that we have a beautiful edifice in which to worship, but for those who have assisted in one way or another to make this day possible. I would like to pay tribute to a few who have given time, effort, ability, influence, and sacrifice since the Grand Rapids Branch was first organized. I think of E. W. Heth, now deceased; my father, the late E. K. Evans, who served as pastor for twenty-seven years; Sister Fern DeTray and Sister Bernice Griffiths, now residing in Independence, Missouri; Clyde F. Ellis, deceased, who in the early years of his ministry labored in Grand Rapids.

Today we should "rejoice and be glad" for we have with us Sister Hattie Cavanaugh. God has blessed her with health and strength and has preserved her these many years. I believe she is the only living charter member of our branch.

Of the building committee there are two absent today—Sister Stella Burch is sick in one of our sanitariums, and Brother E. B. Blett has recently passed on to his reward.

I like to think that each generation is building upon the work of the previous generation. To these I have mentioned, as well as many others, we should be grateful. Because of their faithfulness to the church we are privileged to meet here today under such favorable conditions.

I would also like to thank the contractor, Mr. Jacob Top, and the architect, Mr. James Haverman. As is usual in such projects there have been many opinions—some wanted this, and others wanted that; from these ideas Mr. Haverman drew up blueprints that the contractor could build from. I have known Mr. Top personally and my association with him has always been favorable. He has even gone beyond the line of duty and has added beauty to the building which even the blueprints did not call for. Mr. Top has done a good job and it is fully appreciated.

I hope that this building will serve as a memorial not only for the living here, but for generations to come, that we and they may know God, and that, knowing God and keeping his commandments, we shall have peace now and eternally. For this is eternal life—to know God, ever keeping in mind one of his great commandments: "Go ye into all nations, preach the gospel, and teach whatsoever things I have commanded you." If we do this, then we shall not have built this church in vain. Truly we can say, as did David, the shepherd king, "This is the day the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it."

Seek and Ye Shall Find

By Mabel Williams Crayne

The story of how Sidney Rigdon and his wife, Phoebe, received the Gospel

IT WAS AUTUMN in Mentor, when Parley P. Pratt sat in the modest living room of the Rigdon home, earnestly explaining to Sidney and his wife Phoebe why he had left the church organization where he and Sidney had been co-workers. "You and I have been together long enough to have many things in common," he said, "and for me to know that, like myself, you are a seeker of truth. I believe I have found that truth, and I hope that many of my old friends will be glad to share the happiness it has brought to me—not happiness as the world knows it but a spiritual ecstasy no man can describe."

"I understand something of your position," said Sidney, "but this book—this Book of Mormon—why should I spend time reading it? I know we are commanded to 'prove all things and hold fast to the good,' but there are so many things claiming attention these days. They must present some evidence that they are worthy of our attention before we feel duty bound to take them up. Now what have you to offer to indicate that this book is what it claims to be? Or is it merely the unsupported word of Joseph Smith?"

Parley Pratt smiled as he said, "I'm grateful you don't say 'Old Joe Smith.'"

"I wouldn't speak of him in that way," said Sidney, "any more than I would say 'Old Jack Wesley' or 'Old Alex Campbell.' I believe in extending courtesy to all men. As a Christian I can do no less. By the way, how old is the man?"

"He is now twenty-five years old," replied Parley, "but he was not quite fifteen when he heard the voice in the woods, telling him not to join any of the contending factions holding the revival in his home town."

"It is remarkable," said Sidney, "if all you have told me is true. He is twelve years younger than I am, and you insist that, although he was unlearned he translated characters that no one else could read and made this book."

I HAVE TALKED to Joseph Smith, and others of the Church of Latter Day Saints," replied Parley, "and after listening to their testimonies and reading the book I am convinced that it is from God, and the principles they teach are true. As I read the book the Spirit of God assured me that it was a history of a people who lived in the Americas prior to the days of the Pilgrims, and the plates from which it was translated were buried before their civilization became extinct. By direction from God, Joseph Smith found the plates and translated the writings on them. We are not left with his statement alone. There are three special witnesses who have seen the plates, and their testimony is found following the title page and preface of every copy of the Book of Mormon. Joseph Smith was a poor, obscure fellow, but these witnesses are well known in the community; their testimony is in the nature of legal evidence and ought to enlist your attention. The plates could not be sent to all the world any more than the cross on which Christ was crucified, but 'in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established.'"

"Hold on, my friend," interrupted Sidney. "You don't need to argue the question further at this time. I'll read the book, with an unprejudiced mind and pray for light from God."

"Good!" said Parley. "That is all I would ask of any man."

"I like to weigh everything on its merits," said Sidney, "and I've been trying to teach my congregation to do the same thing, comparing every religious claim with the teachings of the Bible."

"I would like nothing better than to explain the story of the Restoration to members of your congregation and ask them to compare it with the Bible," said Parley, "but that might make trouble for you. Ours is not a popular church although it is patterned after the one Christ set up."

"Why, surely no one could object to that," answered Sidney. "If you have found the truth, my people ought to know about it. If you represent an imposter they will be better informed and know how to meet you in the future."

"That's fair enough," said Parley, "and I'll be most happy to tell your people of the angel's message. I do appreciate your kindness and wish that all other ministers were as willing to listen as you have been. I must go now." He held out his hand as he said, "Good-by, Mrs. Rigdon. Good-by, my brother." He felt an exciting warmth in his heart as their cordial handshakes expressed real friendship.

AS SIDNEY RIGDON stood in the open doorway for a moment, watching his visitor walk down the street, his heart was stirred as it had never been before. Could it be that after all the years he had searched for truth in the Scriptures it had come to him at last? Was it a fulfillment of Revelation 14:6? He turned to his wife and said, "What do you make of it, Phoebe? He called this new faith 'The Angel's Message.'"

"It is too soon to pass judgment in any way. We must read the book first," she replied. "But tell me, if you are convinced that it is true, what then? It may mean more unrest and unhappiness for you. Perhaps another experience such as we had at Pittsburgh."

With his arm about his wife, Sidney Rigdon turned back into the living room and sat down beside her. There was deep concern in his voice as he asked, "Do you regret that experience, my dear?"

"No, no!" exclaimed his wife, "please don't misunderstand me. It's just that I dread seeing you so torn between your feeling of responsibility toward your family and your strong desire to move on to greater spiritual understanding. I know you'll never be happy until you have found a faith that fully satisfies your soul. I've never regretted leaving the comfortable living and possible riches we had in Pittsburgh. Surely you know that I'm willing to go with you wherever you think you will find peace."

"My brave little Phoebe," said Sidney tenderly. "Not many women would cheerfully see their husbands give up a position that meant wealth, popularity, good schooling for the children, and all the things that stand for success in this world to take up the work of a humble tanner with a wage that barely keeps soul and body together. But you did all that for me."

"The committee met last night," said Phoebe, "to finish the plans for our new home. They have purchased some fine farm land and will soon start on the buildings. Mr. Barnett was at the meeting and told his wife about it this morning. Of course she came right over and told me."

Sidney sighed as he said, "They have been good to us here, and I have had more freedom of speech and doctrine than I had hoped for when I first came. It will be hard to part with them."

"I'll leave you to read your book," said Phoebe. "Perhaps you'll not find it necessary to part with them."

IT WOULD BE HARD to find a more delightful spot in Ohio than the town and vicinity of Mentor. A few miles from Lake Erie, it was settled by wealthy and enterprising men who, by industry, good management, and the co-operation of nature, had made it an agricultural area that could scarcely be surpassed. Its splendid farms, fertile fields, and stately mansions made it most attractive to the traveler and gave a sense of well-being to its inhabitants.

In this beautiful location Sidney Rigdon found a home for his family. He was a minister blessed with the gift of oratory, an analytical mind, a pleasing personality, and a determination to be a free soul in his quest for spiritual truths. He left a church in Pittsburgh where he had every comfort for himself and family because he could no longer uphold the doctrine taught and maintained by it. When he first came to Mentor his advanced ideas on the Scriptures were resented, but he soon won a place in the hearts of the thinking people and led them step by step to compare and analyze all religious matter and face truth. No longer did he follow the old beaten track traveled for ages by religious leaders but dared to preach repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, as did Peter on the day of Pentecost. His one great objective was like a beacon light leading him on, and he was continually seeking a higher spiritual plane, a closer contact with God, firmly believing in the words of Christ: "Seek and ye shall find."

THERE WAS A LARGE CONGREGATION at the church when Parley Pratt and Oliver Cowdery came to tell the story of the Restoration. To some who listened Joseph Smith and his golden plates was a new and thrilling fairy tale; but others sat lost in the wonder of it all, seeing the wide and glorious field of truth which the Scriptures held out to them. They saw a church set up as it was in Christ's day with its priesthood ordained of God.

At the close of the meeting, Sidney told his people that the information they had received was of an extraordinary character and certainly worthy of their most serious consideration. Both he and Phoebe took up the study of the Book of Mormon at home, praying that they be given light from God as to its truthfulness. Two weeks from the time the book was placed in Sidney's hands, he was convinced of its authenticity by divine revelation. This came to him in so remarkable a manner that he exclaimed, "It is true, Phoebe. It is true, and flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto me, but my Father which is in heaven!"

MANY WERE THE TEARS that were shed, and many were the arguments that followed Sidney's announcement that he was leaving the church in Mentor to unite with the people of the new faith. He was aware that his character and reputation must suffer in the community and that he and Phoebe must leave all their hopes and plans for a comfortable and gracious life. His greatest trial was asking her and his six children to go with him into a most uncertain future.

One evening as they sat alone in their living room, Sidney told his wife that he must answer the call of his Heavenly Father. "I don't feel that I have a right to deprive you and the children of the security that you would have if we stay here, for God only knows what the future will bring, but I may be called to travel about as Parley does and preach the gospel. In all our experiences you and I have been together. Once before you gave up everything to share a life of poverty with me. My dearest Phoebe, are you willing to do it again?"

Phoebe Rigdon looked bravely into the questioning eyes of her husband and gave him the same old loving smile as she answered, "I have weighed the matter and contemplated the circumstances in which we may be placed. I have counted the cost, and I am perfectly

My Graceland Stewardship

By Viola Velt

WHEN I ENTERED Graceland my concept of stewardship was as compact as a neat little package with a ribbon tied around it. Since then I have found that stewardship encompasses every phase of living—tennis as well as tithing.

In his class, "Introduction to Christianity," Doctor Roy Chevillé explained personality as a growing circle, in need of constant development on all edges. If it does not expand, the personality becomes dwarfed and twisted. At first I felt I should study not only during the week but on Saturdays and Sundays also. When I did this I became so weary I could not concentrate. Then I found that a balance of activities—some sports mixed in with study—enabled me to do more in less time. The need for study is obvious. No one wants to be a blockhead who merely "gets by." My ego would kick up a fuss when I was asked a question and was unprepared to answer!

One day I suddenly realized I'd been neglecting the main thing I'd come to Graceland for. Without God all my efforts were useless. I had missed the whole purpose of life, the meat of stewardship! I started on the thrilling venture of seeking God and found some of Graceland's greatest experiences. And I was not alone; the path was crowded.

I remember walking over grassy hills in fresh morning air and talking with a good friend. We searched our inner selves, strove to love others, explored Scriptures, and prayed where none could see. Experiencing this new ecstasy, we felt almost as if we were cheating by having a better start for the day than many others had. Our whole day was joyful when we sought God together in the morning.

I remember talking with another friend who, when I first met him, seemed very sure of himself. Then I discovered that he, too, felt a restless urge for a better way of life—a thirst for a living God. He became extremely humble as he realized that his very keenness of mind had made him too critical, had blocked his better thoughts. It was a thrill to watch him strive, knowing that someday he and God would accomplish great things together.

Here Is the Writer . . .

VIOLA VELT has just completed her first year at Graceland, where she is taking a liberal arts course. Her activities for the past year have included writing for the "Tower," "Acacia," and being a member of Graceland Players, Student Council, and Concert Choir. Next year she will be active as feature editor of the "Tower" and president of the Crescents. She plans to specialize in English and creative writing. She likes to travel, study people, and work with children or young people in the church. She enjoys tennis, riding, singing, writing, and reading good literature.

There I saw the real challenge the church holds for me—a change in lives.

At first I wasn't greatly attracted to one couple on the campus. Their whole world seemed to revolve around just the two of them. Then something happened; they began to include God and other people in their lives. I remember their rising in fellowship to give their first testimonies. As they recognized God, their love for each other was enriched. I remember their joy when they told of their first missionary effort. In their former self-centeredness they were poor; in their sharing they are rich.

Without the fun Graceland could never have been complete. I can see yet the "men's skates" when, at the whistle for reverse, arms and legs would fly in all directions. I also remember being in the middle of washing my hair when, upon receiving an emergency message about a friend, I dashed hurriedly out only to get snatched by six husky fellows who threw me in the fountain. My hair was rinsed. I remember the times when we three roommates laughed so hard we couldn't sit up.

I learned, too, that shirking my job of sweeping the floor my week didn't make for happy relations. Keeping the room clean was important too. And I learned the difference between half trying and doing my best—the difference between the stupor of mere existence and life! The secret of living is activity. A wishy-washy "I wonder if I can?" effort just didn't result in a good back flip in gym class. It took extra bounce to get results and satisfaction. Singing practice was unbearable when I approached it with "another day of this" attitude. But when I used imagination and determined to make it my best, I really enjoyed it.

I'll never forget biology classes under Dr. Platz when I only half tried. I sat there letting fear rule, keeping quiet lest I make a fool of myself—so I just sat. But it didn't work. The longer I sat, the worse I felt. So I decided to try, no matter what happened. I made mistakes, but I asked questions, and for me the classroom came alive with new meaning. For the first time in my life I discovered the great adventure of learning. Suddenly I saw, and I wondered how I could have been so blind before. The word "light" took on new and wonderful meaning for me. If Graceland had given me nothing else, the passion for learning it kindled within me would make it worth while.

I learned at Graceland that the only real way to be a steward was to "seek first the kingdom of God." When I sought my own way, I was most miserable. But when I endeavored to forget myself and think first of others—when I put God in the center of everything—I found joy. A life of stewardship "with an eye single to the glory of God" brings a full, satisfying life, and God is very close.

Taken for Granted

By Addie Spaulding Stowell

ABOUT THE FIRST CENTURY after Christ there was a farmer (his name is insignificant as many farmers and other people might come in the same category) who had two sons. The farmer had plenty of work on the farm for the boys to do, as his holdings were large and he hired many servants. But the younger son was dissatisfied with the humdrum farm life—he wanted to get out and see the world. He wanted his father to give him his inheritance so he would have money to take him to faraway places.

The father loved both of his sons dearly. He possessed the same feelings as might be manifested in any father; he disliked to see his son leave. But he tried to be reconciled, for he had his other son—his first born—still with him and he was a good boy. He did his work from day to day never asking any favors of his father. It was always the same; no parties, no feast with a kid from his father's flocks to which he could invite his friends, no—just work.

The elder son never murmured, and because he was such a good, quiet boy, his father never gave it a second thought as to whether he might want things to be different.

THEN THE YOUNGER SON came home. He was ragged. He had spent all his money; and because there was a famine in the land where he had gone, he was practically starved. He was certain his father would take him in again, but he was not prepared for the grand reception his father gave him. The fatted calf was killed and all his friends were called in. He was given good clothes, and a ring was put on his finger. There was great rejoicing because the prodigal son had returned to his father's house.

It never occurred to the father that his older son might be displeased. He had been provided for abundantly, while his younger brother must have suffered misfortune. He would be glad to welcome his brother who had been gone so long and had endured such hardships.

But there is more in life than food and raiment. Within the heart of everyone there is a desire that must be fed and nourished. The elder son had been given food to sustain his physical body, but nothing to feed his ego. When he heard the music and dancing a new hunger began to haunt him. The longer he listened, the more restless he became. He called one of the servants who had come from the scene of rejoicing and asked him, "Why all this merry-making?"

"Do you not know that thy brother has returned, and this is the celebration?"

The older son became angry. He was so angry he would not go in the house, so his father came to him. He upbraided his father because of the injustice he felt had been meted out to him. This was the first time he had ever told his father how he felt. The father had thought that because his son was with him all the time and was well cared for that nothing else mattered.

WHAT HAD all the hard work on the farm done for the son who had been denied many of the pleasures of life? Evidently it had not trained him in unselfishness, or he would not have been so angry because there was rejoicing over his brother's return. All his father possessed was his—yet he lacked something. He had labored for the things which sustain the physical body, but he had not received the aesthetic things which give it life. If those qualities had been planted in the heart of the elder son, and then allowed to grow by proper nourishment—if he had been given some of the joy which enhances the spirit, and if the father had engendered within his son's soul a love for sharing—his attitude might have been entirely different toward the brother "who was lost and is found."

When his pent-up emotions could no longer be suppressed, he told his father just how he felt. Suddenly his father's eyes were opened to the cause of his elder son's behavior. A feeling of remorse swept over him like a flood. He realized that through all those years, because his son had been so faithful, he had taken him for granted.

In contriteness of spirit he said, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine."

His father's voice carried a new message of love and appreciation. It would have been impossible for the elder son still to hold enmity in his heart when his father said this.

MANY PEOPLE in different avenues of life are taken for granted—companions, children, relatives, friends, neighbors, social workers, pastors, and missionaries. Perhaps we should evaluate their contributions and bestow a word of appreciation—a bit of enjoyment to lighten their labors. It would help keep alive that inner spirit which so often clamors for the emotional food necessary to spur an individual on to greater achievements.

We should never think that because someone has apparently reached the top in his climb for success he no longer needs a helping hand. Even the greatest have their hours of despair.

Shall we look about and ask ourselves, "Whom am I taking for granted?"

Helps Neighborhood Children

I am not an educated woman and I do not have wealth, but I have always loved people and wanted to help them. Not long ago I found a two-room cottage in a neighborhood where families of various races live. The day I moved in a dirty, ragged little boy came to my door and asked if there was anything he could do to help me. I said that if he would go to the store for me I would be very grateful. When he returned with my groceries several other children were with him. I asked them if they would like to come to my house once a week and hear about the Bible. They said they would. The group is growing now, and I am thankful to be able to minister to these underprivileged children. Through the eyes of love I am able to see them as bright, intelligent boys and girls, and with God's help I hope to be able to teach them the right way of life.

The Importance of Prayer

We all have the promise that our prayers are much availing if we live as we should. We can receive strength for our daily tasks by praying. We can understand our purpose better and feel God's presence in our lives through prayer. We are saddened when we look upon the evils about us, yet we know that prayer could cure the world's ills. We must pray for all nationalities and races—for those we know and those we don't know. We must pray for the church and its mission. Prayer can bring a change of heart that will make all men brothers.

I shall be glad to hear from other members.

Conference Reflections

This spring was the first time I attended General Conference. I can still remember the thrill I felt when, on the way down, I entered Lamon. Then when I got my first view of the Auditorium and realized that I was in Zion I felt an even greater joy. Everyone was so friendly I knew the spirit of the Lord was present. I hope that others who attended enjoyed it as much as I did, and I pray that I will be able to attend again.

On the Use of Consecrated Oil

I wish to give a personal experience on anointing with consecrated oil. For several months last winter my husband was afflicted with an ailment that the specialists at Bell Memorial Hospital could not diagnose. They made numerous tests, hoping to find the cause. The ailment wasn't continuous but came in sudden attacks—somewhat like acute indigestion or gall bladder attacks, although the doctors said it wasn't either of them. When these attacks came I would do all I could to bring him relief, but he would grow worse until death threatened. His only relief came through administration. These attacks usually came at night, and I would have to call the elders (who fortunately lived near) from their beds to administer to him, but he would always get relief. After this had happened a number of times I began to feel sensitive about calling the elders in the night, although they came willingly and urged me to call them whenever they were needed. One night my husband wakened me in the middle of the night and said he could not stand the pain much longer, but had hesitated to wake me. He asked me to give him some camphor on sugar in hot water. I prepared it as he asked, but I knew from past experience that it would do no good, that only the Lord could help him. So I began to pray: "O Lord, you know our needs at this time. I know you have power to help us if we have sufficient faith. I pray you will increase my faith, Lord. I do not want to call the elders at this time of night; I have called them so often. Please, Lord, help Wesley." While I was praying mentally, I got the bottle of consecrated oil and gave it to him, saying, "Pour some in your hand and rub it all over the spot where the pain is." While he was doing that I poured some in a teaspoon and gave it to him. Then I said, "Now come and lie down on the couch [he hadn't been able to lie down before] and be as quiet as you can." I sat at his head and kept on praying as earnestly as I could for faith and help. I soon saw he was resting easier, and as soon as I realized the blessing had come I began thanking the Lord just as earnestly as I had prayed for help. I sat by his side until 2 a.m., and he was sleeping like a child. Then I went to bed and slept the remainder of the night undisturbed. In a couple of days he went back to the hospital for another examination. After giving him a thorough examination, the doctors said: "We had expected to find a tumor, but there isn't any there now." From that night to this he has never had one of those attacks, and I believe he was healed that night.

I only hope this testimony will help others to believe there is power in consecrated oil when it is used in faith.

The Story of a Mission

This is an account of what can happen when the desire to meet together by isolated Saints is great enough to cause them to combine their efforts with modern travel.

Within a radius of twenty miles from the village of Harbor Beach, Michigan, there were two branches of the church which had ceased to function as full-time branches because most of the members had moved or passed away. Left to carry on the work of the church were a few scattered Saints—not sufficient in number near either church to make up a congregation.

In and near Harbor Beach a number of us decided to meet and did so from time to time in homes, but not consistently. During 1950, through the efforts of the district president, we began holding services in this village, which is centrally located between the two branches.

After much looking we were able to secure the use of a large room in the Harbor Beach Community Building for a regular meeting place. This room is clean, well heated, with janitor service and additional rooms available for classwork. When we have family night (which we try to have every month with a potluck supper and program) we use the well-equipped kitchen, including dishes, tables, and silver.

Our first meeting, held January 7, 1951, was presided over by District President J. V. Pement and Elder John Rogers. Forty attended this first service, and it was then decided a mission should be established with the necessary officers being appointed and approved. We have met every week since, except during reunions or other district meetings. John Rogers was appointed elder in charge and has served faithfully in that office.

We decided to establish a building fund after it became apparent that we would become a stable mission and eventually a branch. This project began with a building fund banquet to which we invited all the Saints from surrounding branches. That meeting was attended by Apostles Paul Hanson and George Mesley. Apostle Mesley presided at the meeting, and when it closed a goodly sum was in the hands of the treasurer. That fund has grown continuously until we are now looking for an appropriate building site.

We have endeavored to have as many social gatherings as possible, and it is surprising how many people are able to come. Sunday nights have been devoted to alternate prayer services and study. These are held in the homes of the different members living in Harbor Beach. Because of the distances necessary to travel, not as many attend the evening service.

We have not undertaken any projects that require a lot of time, but the women's department has held rummage sales and socials. It might be stated here that the women who are attending church in our mission met as a group for quite some time before there was any work done in establishing a mission. They met at homes throughout the area and invited in all women interested in the work of the church. If credit is due any particular group for establishing a mission here, I believe that it goes to the women. They were already organized and functioning. It is said, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." Such is often the case in church work, too.

We undertook holding the district conference here, and we believe it was successful. We were able to use the gymnasium of the community building for an Auditorium and our regular meeting place to set up tables and for the noon lunch.

The women of the mission held a very successful institute with Sister Blanche Mesley as speaker. About 125 women attended. The theater was used as an auditorium for the lectures, and dinner was served from a dining room in the same building.

We have been granted permission to become a branch, and we expect that will be our next move forward. Attendance varies from thirty to seventy-five each week, and many good speakers both in and outside the area have given their ministry.

We are most appreciative of all the help and encouragement that has been given us by others interested in our progress. An invitation to attend services is hereby extended to all to visit in this little lake shore town at the tip of the thumb of Michigan. We meet in the large brick building in the center of the business district.

We hope this article will encourage other isolated members to combine their efforts toward establishing another mission for the furtherance of God's work.

Wants to Contact Members in New Jersey

I should like to contact members of friends of the church (civilian or military) who live in or near Ft. Monmouth. I was pleased to find a church boy from Independence (Floyd Watkins) in my company. I heard some very good comments about him from some of his superiors. Even in the Army men can be a shining example of their religion.

and the kingdom. A service of appreciation was held at 3:00 p.m. The pastor, Elder James C. Phillips, introduced Elder A. F. Shotwell, former pastor for many years; Bishop E. C. Evans of Southern Michigan District, Mr. J. B. Topp, general contractor, and Mr. James K. Haveman, architect, who all spoke words of appreciation. Apostle C. G. Mesley addressed the congregation and spoke highly of the good work done by all to make possible such a beautiful building. This was followed by a special prayer by Bishop G. L. DeLapp. In the evening Apostle C. G. Mesley again spoke and challenged the people to greater service. Throughout the whole day the spirit of worship was enhanced by the fine music of the junior and senior choirs directed by Mrs. T. Carlson and Mr. William Webber. Miss Ruby Cavanagh was at the organ. The Saints of Grand Rapids look forward with renewed hope to doing a greater work in spreading the gospel of Christ in their area.

satisfied to go with you. It is my desire to do the will of God, come life or death."

With a deep sigh of relief Sidney took his faithful Phoebe in his arms and said, "I feel as though the words of Christ, so oft repeated, have been fulfilled in me, 'Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you.' As you have said, my dearest, we shall stand together in the cause of Christ, come life or come death."

Not long after, they were both baptized into the church of Christ, and in due time a branch was organized in that locality.

P.S.

* MUTTERINGS

The young and foolish are so often encouraged in their ways by the bad examples of the old and foolish.

Has it ever occurred to you that ours is becoming more and more a Roman type of civilization? As we increase our influence abroad, we lose our grip at home. The mobs are kept content by food, gifts, and circuses (How else could you describe Washington?) paid for by bleeding the provinces. Our people are becoming more materialistic—some of them carnal. Government is increasingly centralized, paternalistic, and dictatorial. Bureaucrats no longer ask how they can help. They tell you what you are going to do, and you do it or else. There is graft, corruption, and venality in high places. The old human tendency toward arbitrary use of power, with little consideration of the individual, asserts itself. Money is debased, and some say it is debauched. . . . There are some Americans who believe that we are going to tell the world how to live. Do you think we are fit for the task? . . . Rome wasn't. Napoleon wasn't. The Kaiser wasn't. Hitler wasn't. Are we? We must go up the ladder, or we will fall to the bottom of it.

* BEYOND BOTHER

You can learn something anywhere, even at a soda fountain. The second seat to the left was occupied by a laboring man. He was somewhat weather-beaten, and his clothing showed the strains and stains of toil.

I don't know how it started, but the waitress asked him something I didn't hear. I adjusted my directional antennae just in time to hear him say, "Lady, there ain't nothin' ever bothers me!" He gave her a big friendly grin, and went on happily absorbing his ice cream.

I may never see him again, but I hope I never forget his words: "Nothing ever bothers me." He was beyond bother. He had put himself where nothing could upset him.

I had a friend who used to say, "You can't hurt a Christian." A Christian has the gospel armor, and is very well defended—if he is a complete Christian. My friend was a wonderful person, good and kind. Life was hard on him, and eventually he was very badly hurt. He deserved a happy existence, but things went wrong. His end was tragic. I still believe he was right—you can't hurt a Christian. But somewhere in the complexities of life he lost some of the armor that had protected him.

Children used to bother me, and I saw that it was wrong and foolish. So I changed my mind, and they do not disturb me any more. People used to disturb me. I am overcoming that, too.

If you can't change others, you can change yourself so that you can have a lot of peace and comfort in a troubled world. You can place yourself beyond bother. Well, most of the time!

Charles D.
Neff

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, was born at Hardin, Missouri, but spent most of his life, until entering the Navy, in Kansas. While there he attended Ottawa University for three years; he completed his work at Central Missouri State College in Warrensburg as a major in economics and journalism. In 1945 he was married to Frances Dillon; they have three children: Robert, 5; Nancy, 3; and Susan, 1.

Through his wife he became converted to the Reorganized Church and was baptized in 1946 at St. Louis. Two years later he accepted General Church appointment and was sent to Omaha, Nebraska, as pastor. In 1951 he was ordained to the office of high priest, and following the 1952 General Conference was assigned to his present work with the First Presidency.

During his three years of Naval service as lieutenant, junior grade, he participated in four invasions in the Pacific area. "My only battle scar," he says, "was a broken little finger. This happened while I was catcher on a Navy ball team in a game against an Army unit." His current hobby—when he has time for it—is fishing.

Before he became an appointee he worked for the Ralston Purina Company in St. Louis in the promotion and publication department. He also worked on a newspaper during his college days.

Henry Porter, 608B Tenth Street, Orange, Texas, was appointed as mission president, and the group will meet for the present in the Knights of Pythias Hall, 900 Ninth Avenue, Port Arthur, Texas.

REPORT ON THE EUROPEAN BROADCAST

News has been received from Bremerhaven, Germany, from Private J. Dirk (John) Tousley, son of Mrs. George Tousley, 112 South Fuller, Independence, Missouri. His letter contained the following information:

"Imagine my surprise, when last night while I was lying on my bunk reading, to hear on the radio, 'And now to the R. L. D. S. Auditorium, Independence, Missouri,' and then Evan Fry's voice boomed in the room. It was a recording for the Armed Forces Network. We have a station here in Bremerhaven. The program was organ music and his sermon. Small world."

This is the first report the church has received on this Tuesday evening weekly vesper service broadcast 6:45-7:00. The broadcast covers Europe.

WINS NATIONAL AWARD

Celia Fry, daughter of Evan Fry who is General Church Radio Director, was awarded second place in the National Forensic League which was held in Boston, Massachusetts, June 23-27. Delores Tandy and David Freeman, also young people of the church, participated in the debates held in Boston. On the return trip, the group stopped over in Kirtland, Ohio, where they visited with Brother and Sister Harry Black.

WAYNE SIMMONS ON SURVEY

Seventy Wayne Simmons returned to Independence after having conducted a survey of the Spanish-speaking people in the southwestern states. Besides holding meetings and doing missionary work with the Spanish-speaking people he visited many established branches, presenting the need and mission of working with Spanish-speaking friends. Since May 5 Seventy Simmons visited Albuquerque, New Mexico; Phoenix, Arizona; the Los Angeles Stake, Santa Ana, San Bernardino, Redlands, and Riverside, California; Tucson, Arizona; and El Paso, Texas. At San Bernardino, Santa Ana, and East Los Angeles, where Brother Simmons held missionary work, he reports especially good possibilities for church work.

The Danger of Being Too Good

"God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are."

—The Pharisee

GREATER THINGS are started by people who ask questions than by those who give replies. Anybody can give a reply, good or bad. But it takes a mind to make a good question.

There is a popular idea that anybody can ask questions. Certainly, but are they worth anything? A really good question—a great question—can be provocative of more thought than the longest speech you or I have ever heard. You have heard, of course, of "Socratic questioning."

The lady paused at the door and said, "I have a question." Experience has taught us that a warning should accompany all of her queries: "Proceed cautiously. A new thought-way is under construction."

"Tell me," she said, "is it possible to be too good?"

"I have never seen anybody working too hard at it," was my reply.

"That isn't what I mean," she continued. Somebody says, 'I ought to be good.' Later he says, 'I am trying to be good.' Still later, 'I have obeyed all the rules. I am good!'"

"Ah! The problem of the Pharisee!"

How does one answer such a question? Of course there is danger in trying to be good. Someone else may not agree with what you think is good. He may try to liquidate you for your efforts to get other people to agree with you. You can get into endless work and trouble simply by trying to be good.

But the lady's question was not concerned with this. She wanted to know about the fellow who thinks he is good.

LET US BEGIN with the parable in which Jesus dealt with that problem, the story of the Pharisee and the publican, as told in Luke 18: 9-14. Jesus was giving the disciples a means of analyzing human character. They were to meet in their ministry many people who were genuine—sincerely good. They would meet others who were clearly bad. And they would meet some pious hypocrites who wished to enjoy the reputation of goodness while giving up none of their hidden evils.

Jesus had found a certain type of man who was "too good." He excelled in a certain kind of formal goodness—legal, meticulous, rule-obeying goodness; self-satisfied goodness; the goodness that is always making comparisons to the disadvantage of other people. It was the goodness that said, "I am better than he is."

The main part of that parable is contained in these words:

"Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are."

"He prayed with himself." There is a slight suggestion that he may have been praying to himself. Obviously, there was self-worship in his attitude. He had given to himself the praise that belongs only to God. We have a popular saying about "the self-made man who worships his own creator."

IN ANY CASE, you know what Jesus thought of him. It would be a trial of the spirit to live around such a man. Before long you would find yourself suffering from an irresistible desire to expose the hypocrite in all his true colors. There is the case of "Detestable Jones," who never did a wrong thing, or much else either, in all his life. And people hated him for it.

One of our friends, a practical farmer, heard the mention of a certain "good" young man. "Yes," he said. "He's good, all right. But good for what?"

We have a greater obligation than simply to be good—that is, negatively good. We should be good for something. We should be good for someone else. We should be good for our families, our community, our church, and our country. We should be good for our fellow-workers, for those who have to put up with us every day.

ON A VISIT some time ago, we were surprised when the family teasing took a serious turn. The husband said a number of critical things about his wife, who was a lovely, kind, patient person. She didn't often reply to his remarks, but this time she observed, "The trouble with Marmaduke [that wasn't his name] is that he thinks he is so good!"

How would you like to eat breakfast with a person like that all the rest of your life? How long will it take that man to convert his wife to the church?

In this sense, there seems to be a danger of being too good. Some righteous people can make their families miserable with criticisms. They stir up trouble at church. They find faults in everybody. All the while, they wear sanctimonious faces. They make no mistakes. They do nothing morally wrong. But they manage somehow, while pretending to be busy with the works of heaven, to accomplish the designs of hell.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

President Israel Smith writes from Birmingham that the institute held there was a success. There was a large attendance of Saints, and he and Bishop Livingston spoke. We are happy to say that it was necessary to acquire the Masonic Hall in order to accommodate the crowd which wanted to hear the brethren on their recent visit there.

It will be rather difficult to keep up with the rapid progress of the brethren from one place to another, but on Wednesday, July 2, President Smith and Bishop Livingston left Nuneaton for Newcastle where they embarked on the good ship Venus for Oslo. After spending a few days there they will be making other contacts on the continent.

From the tone of the letters received from President Smith the Saints are enjoying meeting him and we are sure they are deriving much benefit from his visits.

President Smith in Norway

In company with Apostle Arthur A. Oakman and Bishop Henry L. Livingston, President Israel A. Smith left England for Norway July 2. The company crossed the North Sea in the "Venus," a ship of 7,000 tons; and in lovely weather sailed up the ford to Bergen. The scenery was delightful.

They entrained at Bergen for Oslo. After riding eight hours across the mountains, they arrived at 11:20 p.m. while it was yet twilight.

Elder Olaf Fossum and Brother Christianson met them there and exchanged warm greetings. Fourth of July was spent in and around Oslo, and Brothers Oakman and Livingston drove to Bøn to view the church property there in company with Brother Fossum, who is one of King Haakon's personal chauffeurs.

In the evening after returning to Oslo, the brethren were met by Sister Velma Ruch at the home of Brother Fossum. Sister Ruch is taking a university summer course in Norway. A pleasant evening was spent in conversation with the church members.

Saturday, July 5, saw the brethren entrain for Porsgrunn. It was a long, tiresome journey, but at the end of it ample reward came in the form of a wonderful outpouring of the Divine Spirit as President Smith listened to the testimonies of Brothers Carl Carlsen, Neilson, Fossum, and Olson. Sister Ruch did an excellent job of interpreting. President Smith talked to these good people quietly, and in a very short time all were blessed by the Divine Presence. Brothers Oakman and Livingston also spoke briefly and effectively. The Saints, who numbered twenty or more, were strengthened.

President Smith then blessed the infant son of Brother and Sister Ivar Carlsen. Apostle Oakman recorded the blessing in shorthand. This meeting was quite informal, and although the brethren just sat around and talked, an atmosphere of worship prevailed.

The three brethren were to go to Copenhagen, Denmark, on July 7, and later will be in Germany for ten days.

Received from Arthur A. Schuck, Chief Scout Executive, Boy Scouts of America:

At the Forty-second Annual Meeting of the National Council of Boy Scouts of America a resolution was adopted unanimously expressing appreciation to the many agencies and organizations that have helped to extend the influence of Scouting to the boys of the nation.

Many Cub Packs, Scout Troops, and Explorer Units are chartered to congregations of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We are grateful for all the resources you have made available for Scouting as an integral part of your youth program.

Accept our sincere thanks for your co-operation. We solicit your continued support of Scouting as a medium for conserving and developing boyhood in the church and community.

Go Ye Into Galilee

Adapted from a sermon preached October 14, 1951, in Denver, Colorado

By Ward A. Hougas

Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.
Matthew 28: 10

Sinners

When I suggested in a sermon one day that we are all sinners, several people began to lose their love for me. They assured me that they were not sinners. They thought this because they had not broken the Ten Commandments nor violated any of the moral code. They had never been in jail and the FBI wasn't looking for them. So they thought that their lives must be without sin.

However, I am still firm in my conviction that most of us have wandered a bit; some of us have strayed away from the true paths and purposes of the gospel. We have gone out of the fold and forgot to come back.

Jobs

One of our major sins is our indifference to other people who need something to do. Because we can, we tend to gather up the tasks that carry authority and responsibility relating to the building of the kingdom of God. We let other people sit outside the circle with little or nothing to engage their interest. We are lost when we refuse to share responsibility with others, or to give them opportunities for service and the happiness of achievement that goes with it.

Fishing

When the resurrected Christ returned to visit his apostles, according to the narrative of the Scriptures, he found that they were straying from their tasks and returning to the world. Peter, you know, had gone fishing—and that's a good place to go sometimes, if you don't stay too long.

Some of those men were out of circulation; they had ceased their activities in behalf of the kingdom. They were out of sympathy. He was losing them, and they were losing their vision of the kingdom of God and its responsibilities.

In the beginning he had told them, "I will make you fishers of men." They forgot that. Now he charged Peter—repeating the demand three times—"Feed my sheep!" He was calling them back to their mission.

Jerusalem to Galilee

With the disciples beginning to scatter, it seemed that the cause would be lost. A rallying place must be selected. And after the shock of the crucifixion, new instructions and fresh inspiration were needed. The Lord sent out the call through the few disciples who saw him:

Tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

The new church and the gospel of the kingdom of God would have to be committed into the hands of the disciples. Jerusalem, overshadowed by hate, sin, and fear, was not the place for it. Only Galilee would provide the spiritual atmosphere and background that were needed. The geographical distance—a mere sixty miles or so—was not important. The spiritual difference was very great.

Some of us need that admonition now. We need to leave the place where we are. The kingdom of God cannot be built under such conditions, and as long as we remain where we are, we cannot be a part of that kingdom. As the Lord said to Abram, "Get thee out of thy country . . . unto a land that I will shew thee."

We need to push beyond the old borderlines of our thinking, beyond the place where we have always stopped. No matter how familiar they are, and no matter how much we have loved them, we must put Sodom and Gomorrah behind us. We must move into a new region—morally, intellectually, and spiritually—where we can begin again.

Are You Honest?

I have been wondering: How honest are we? Are we willing to face the truth concerning ourselves?

Living just as you are now, doing what you do and thinking what you think, going at the rate you are going now, where are you likely to be five years from now—not only in relation to earthly things but in relation to eternity? Will you be closer to heaven or to hell, and how much?

Five years is not a very long time, especially as you grow older. Life lulls you to sleep as time rushes by. Your future is consumed with astonishing rapidity, and before you know it you have so little left. Your time runs out, and it is too late to change your course. You may be on the edge of the abyss and unable to turn back.

Deep in the heart and soul of every man, woman, and child who knows anything about the gospel is a desire to achieve and to lift the standard of living to a high plane. But somehow we always talk about that for the great tomorrow, never for today. Yet what we do today determines what that tomorrow will be.

Some years ago the public was seeing a play of the deep South—Tobacco Road. It was rough at points, but it contained a truth. . . . If you saw it, you will remember Jettters. Jettters was going to plant cotton—forty on this side, eighty on the other side, and fifty over yonder. Then his poor wife said, "Now, Jettters, when you gonna do all that?" Jettters sat down and began to whittle a stick, and drawled, "Oh, I don't know, Ma. Maybe tomorrow."

"Maybe tomorrow!" Some of us postpone salvation in the same way. We endlessly defer study, preparation, and service. We aim to be good; we want to work for the kingdom, but "Not now, O Lord; not now!"

This is the tragedy of the death of souls. Our death is not something that will take place in the future. We are committing spiritual suicide now!

If we are going to Galilee, we must go today. Tomorrow may be too late, for we may die and be buried by the side of the road, in Jerusalem or Samaria.

Ideals

There is absolutely no substitute for spirituality in the life and souls of men and women.

No matter how high your ideals and ambitions are, nothing will come of them unless the determination comes to you to begin to act. You must leave your idolatrous Haran with Abram. You must hear and obey the Master's call, instantly, and go into Galilee. The place is there. The time is now.

Life doesn't stand still. Something irresistible inside of us pushes us in some direction. If we don't climb up the mountain to heaven, we slide down it into hell. If we don't start for Galilee, we rot in Jerusalem.

Jesus said, "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat . . . strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Many people miss the way of life—the abundant life. The poet John Oxenham wrote:

To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
The high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.

Many of us are just drifting around. Where are you?

George Eliot wrote: "Our deeds still travel with us from afar, and what we have been makes us what we are."

Rights

I don't believe we were made to be failures. Every one of us was endowed in the beginning with certain rights—the Constitution says "certain inalienable rights"—that can't be taken from us, and because of those rights there are certain possibilities wrapped up within each one of us to become something worth while.

We have within us something that will make us fit to meet the Master. The way to life is still open. Abundant living can still be attained. Not many people are finding it. Too many are sleeping on their rights. A right does not do the work for you. Like a tool, it will do nothing unless you pick it up and go to work. But if you do go to work with it, wonderful things can be accomplished.

You have a right to return to God. You have a right to start for heaven. Will you do it?

Decision

A time comes when you must make a decision and do something about it. Conversion, after all, is a matter of decision. Conversion doesn't mean that your life is changed, but it means that you have made a decision to change your life. You are going to do something about it. Not like Jettters, "maybe tomorrow," or sometime—but now!

In the matter of decisions, we often let the wrong agencies make them for us. Twenty million dollars bought enough time on the radio and space in the papers to change the minds of the American people on prohibition. Liquor men said, "Licensed liquor sales will reduce your taxes." It was a lie, but people fell for it.

Which Way Do You Go?

Are you willing to face one plain fact? Check up on yourself. What are you doing? Are you going some place—round and round the mulberry bush, in some small insignificant circle, or out upon the highways of God? Some have been moving in a circle for twenty-five years, and have never gone anywhere.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox wrote:

One ship drives east and another west,
While the selfsame breezes blow;
'Tis the set of the sail and not the gale
That bids them where to go.

Like the winds of the air are the ways of fate,
As we journey along through life;
'Tis the set of the soul that decides the goal,
And not the storm or the strife.

Comfort From the Scriptures

By Helen Zelk

A LITTLE OVER nine years ago my oldest brother donned a uniform and left his family to take up his post of duty in military service. Among the loved ones watching his departure was my twelve-year-old brother, his wide eyes dark with pride and wonder. Today that little brother fights on the battlefield of Korea, and writes home how very much he misses my little sons.

The day my youngest brother left this country, fear came into my heart, not only for my brother, but for the fact that in nine more years my oldest son would be of draft age.

For many days I realized how easy it would be for men's hearts to fail them for fear of things to come upon the earth. I spent much time in prayer and meditation, and God's spirit helped me to smooth out the confusion of my mind. I began to see comfort and beauty in the Book of Mormon story about the two thousand striplings: "Now they never had fought, yet they did not fear death; and they did think more upon the liberty of their fathers, than upon their lives; yea they had been taught by their mothers, that if they did not doubt, that God would deliver them."—Alma 26: 56. I also began to feel a greater responsibility than I had ever felt before.

World conditions being what they are, we must prepare our sons for the times ahead that they might have peace in their souls when all about them is war, so that their vision might be clear and their understanding quick in the midst of confusion.

I feel responsible not only for my own sons, but also for the children of others who have not had the wonderful privilege of knowing God's great plan of salvation.

I sincerely feel we should face the facts of our times with a clear mind and seek our Heavenly Father in prayer and fasting that we might be given the wisdom to teach and prepare our children so they too will know "that if they do not doubt, God will deliver them."

By Faith or by Medicine

By Omar L. Nunn

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.—Genesis 1: 28.

A SHORT TIME AGO several men were forcibly restrained by law enforcement officers in Texas so that a young girl might receive medical attention needed to save her life. These men objected to her being treated by doctors on grounds of their religious belief.

With the rise in recent years of a number of sects advocating "faith healing" there has come a number of questions which are pressing for answers. Shall any religious body, or member thereof, have the right to prevent the administering of medical treatment to any person even though death may be imminent? Do law enforcement agencies have the authority to interfere with a man's faith to the extent of assuring medical treatment to members of his family? These and other questions involving the relationship between church and state will have to be answered by our courts and legislators.

There is one question which I believe we can answer, however; and in view of our unique concept of healing by the power of the Holy Spirit, I feel that doing so will help many to gain a better understanding of our faith and belief.

IS THE DOCTRINE of "faith healing" as it is taught by many churches today consistent with the teachings of the Bible and of Christ?

It has been argued that the prayer of faith shall heal the sick (James 5: 15) and that if it does not, then it is the will of God that the afflicted one be not healed.

I have on several occasions heard similar views expressed by members of our church, some of whom feared that our church and its people are falling into transgression by supporting the Sanitarium, the School of Nursing, and encouraging members of the medical profession.

This attitude among our members and other religious bodies arises from a misunderstanding of the purposes of God and the way he works with man. It is an unfortunate attitude and has undoubtedly resulted in unnecessary suffering and death in the past. It will surely cause more tragedy in the future.

It is true that James taught: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick."—James 5: 14, 15.

Jesus said man lives by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matthew 4: 4). The words of James do not encompass every word of God. I firmly believe in the principle of the laying on of hands and healing by the prayer of faith. Indeed, I have witnessed the blessings of this promise on more than one occasion. However, I find that my Scriptures have more to say on the subject. They speak of responsibility that is mine more than just prayer alone, for "faith without works is dead."

IN THE FIRST CHAPTER of Genesis the Lord commands man to "subdue" the earth and bring it under his dominion. Man has not yet completely succeeded in subduing the earth, nor in gaining dominion over it. Perhaps his failure is due in part to his incessant effort to subdue his fellows and his unwillingness to gain dominion over himself.

Certainly this command would indicate that God expects man to use his own initiative and industry to gain and maintain control over earthly things. He wants man to learn to control the forces of physical decay and destruction as well as the sheep and cows which feed and clothe him. God has promised time after time that if man seeks diligently and faithfully and prayerfully, he shall be blessed with the guidance and help of the Holy Spirit.

When God gave life to man he gave also agency, authority to use that agency, responsibility to use it justly, and the material things necessary to meet his needs. He has made available a multitude of herbs, plants, and minerals, many of which are poisonous to man; but when properly used will help him to subdue his world and bring it under dominion.

EVERY DOCTOR knows that he cannot heal anyone of any disease. He can only establish certain favorable conditions under which the healing powers can be more effective. Man can learn to destroy the organisms that cause disease, but he cannot heal the malformation. The actual healing of damaged tissues or malfunctioning organs comes from forces either inherent within the body or acting upon it from a source that cannot be tapped by the use of medicines or surgery. The source of these forces is God, who can be reached by the prayer of faith.

Just as the doctor seeks to establish physical conditions favorable to healing, so the prayer of faith seeks to create a closer spiritual unity with God, the source of healing power. We surely should not use one without using also the other. We cannot sit idly by praying and expect God to do all the work of healing any more than we can pray and expect him to hoe the corn or harvest the grain.

Our elders have work to do; our doctors have work to do. As they continue to labor together, each recognizing the work of the other, the blessings and power of God shall accompany their efforts.

Invitation to Nursing

By Nelle Morgan

she most interested? What does she like to do? Does she like to work with her hands? Does she like just "brain" work? Her interests should be a major factor in choosing a career.

Next, she should consider what she is capable of giving to a career. Can she learn complicated information? Is she adept at passing information on to others? Does she have good health? What does her personal inventory show? Her abilities must meet the demands of the career she chooses, or she will not be successful.

Today, most young women want to know if they can marry and continue in the career which they are considering. This is a pertinent and justifiable criterion. If the young bride can continue in her job, the budding family will become financially secure more rapidly than if it has to depend only upon the husband's salary. The deep freeze, and the automatic washer, and the ironer can be purchased much sooner if the bride contributes to the family income.

The modern young woman should know several things about the career she chooses. What are the working conditions? What are the working hours? Is the salary commensurate with the demands of the job? Will she derive personal satisfaction from her work? There are many jobs which offer satisfactory working conditions and pay good salaries, but do they have that personal element—that feeling of satisfaction—which comes from doing something for someone? Those who find this personal satisfaction in their work are able to say, as Henry Van Dyke did in his poem, "Work":

This is my work; my blessing, not my doom:
Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way.

CAN THE YOUNG WOMAN of today find a career which meets these requirements?

Yes. The nursing profession will fill all of these requirements for the girl who has an earnest desire to serve mankind. Nursing is a service profession which offers security and satisfaction to those who choose it as a career.

Working conditions for the registered, professional nurse have been steadily improving during the last twenty years. The average work week for nurses is from forty to forty-four hours. The salaries
