A few years later, after he joined the church, he was attending a missionary series in the same congregation and felt a warmth come over him. It seemed as though the minister was speaking directly to him, even though he did not know Charles. On this occasion Charles definitely made up his mind to try to give his full attention to the work of kingdom-building.

He was born in Spokane, Washington, and was baptized in 1925 in Kansas City, Kansas. He was graduated from high school there and attended Kansas City Junior College, took work from Kansas University Extension, and had one year at Temple University in Philadelphia. He married the girl who helped draw him into church activity, Ethel Louise Hicklin, in 1937.

He was ordained a priest in 1934, an elder in 1936, and a high priest in 1937. He has been a member of the Kansas City Stake presidency and was acting president for part of a year in 1941-42. He was pastor in four different congregations of that stake. In 1943 he was assigned as appointee pastor of the Philadelphia congregation. In 1946 he was assigned to Independence as pastoral supervisor. When Independence became Center Stake in 1950 he was appointed president.

His principle interest, he affirms, is people—in relation to the kingdom of God. Perhaps the fact that he was in the furniture business from 1929 to 1943 may have something to do with carpentry being one of his hobbies. Landscaping is another. He is a member of the Independence Rotary Club and the Three Trails District of the Boy Scouts. His youthfulness and enthusiastic enjoyment of even the youngest member among the seventeen congregations and two missions of the Center Stake belies the fact that his own children are young ladies. Janet is fifteen and his twin daughters, June and Jane, are thirteen.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

AT CHETEK REUNION

President and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith were present throughout the Chetek Reunion. Brother Smith taught the general class and preached three times, and Sister Smith taught the women's group. Other workers at the reunion were Apostle and Sister Chesworth, Elder and Sister Delbert Smith, and Elder and Sister John Puckett, and Elder and Sister Cecil Robbins. Seven families from Independence were present at the reunion as well as several others from outside of the district.

HOME FROM REUNION

Apostle D. T. Williams was at the Bethesda, Ohio, Reunion, June 27-July 5. This is the second reunion held for this area. General workers were Bishop L. Wayne Updike, Nellie Mottashed of Michigan, Evangelist E. Y. Hunker, Elder and Mrs. Elwood Smith, Elder and Mrs. Calvin French, Seventy and Mrs. James Menzies. The latter three couples had charge of the juniors, young people, and primary children, respectively. Sister Menzies was the book steward at the reunion.

RETURN FROM TEXAS

Elder and Mrs. Arthur Rock and family met with Saints of Marlin, Waco, and Lott, Texas, at Marlin, June 17. Brother Rock visited in the interest of audio-visual work. Then they went to the Texas Reunion at Bandera, June 19 to 28. Following this they visited in San Antonio, Dallas, and Sherman, Texas, returning to Independence, July 2.

BANKS AVAILABLE

A report has been received that 190 cartons of Auditorium banks are at the Auditorium ready for someone to order them. There are 30 banks to a carton. They may be ordered from the Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, free of charge.

CENTER STAKE CAMPS HELD

Ninety-five campers and staff members returned to Independence on July 5, from Lake Doniphan near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. The last camp concluded three one-week camps sponsored by the youth department of the Center Stake. The total number of campers exceeded 350 for the entire period. General Church workers on the staff included Edna Easter, Lee Hart, Herbert Lively, Glaude Smith, and Gene Theys.

PRESENT PROGRAM

The German Saints of Independence presented a fifteen-minute program at the Campus evening service on July 5. Following this program, the service was transferred to the Auditorium because of rain. Elder Charles D. Neff was the evening speaker.

SPONSOR OPERETTA

The Stake-wide Zion's League sponsored the production "Eileen" which was held at the campus July 6, 7, and 9. Don Johnson was production manager; Dorothy Ferguson, dramatics director; and Wallace Fike, director of the musical score. Leading roles were assumed by Nancy Sears, Carol Crum, Hap Pearson, and Eddie Moore. Don Potts was in charge of acoustics. About fifty-five Zion's Leaguers were in the cast.

Being Dead Yet Speaketh

(EDITOR'S NOTE. The following appeared in the True Latter Day Saints Herald for June 15, 1865, an appeal by the editor, President Joseph Smith III.)

Will You Do It?

WITH THIS NUMBER the seventh volume of the Herald closes, and with the next number the eighth volume commences.

We are entering on a new state of national and political existence, under considerably different auspices than marked the era which was inaugurated by the war which now seems to be ended, or at least lulled for a time.

A vital question might be asked by each and every one engaged in this latter-day work, and indeed must be not only asked, but answered, and that is: "What can I do during the coming year to roll on the work of my Father's kingdom?"

We undertake to answer the question partially, and shall do so by soliciting a renewal of your subscription to the Herald, accompanied by that which is needful to keep up the supply of material, and to feed those who are actively engaged in the work of the Herald office.

We have been doing a great deal in the office which has been unproductive of pecuniary support heretofore, and much is needed to be done in the future, hence the necessity of pushing the subscription of the Herald to as high a number as possible that the office may become self-supporting in every sense of the word.

We are printing tracts as fast as we can manage it with our limited facilities, the distribution of which we trust will be productive of much good to our fellow men.

We send bills to all who are in arrears for the Herald. We do not intend any harm or insult to anyone in thus sending what may be styled a dun, but we are aware that many of the Saints are sometimes forgetful of the time at which their subscription expires, and if we were to refrain from sending it to them, it would imply a distrust upon our part of their willingness to pay; we therefore prefer to run the risk of sending their Herald with a notice in it of their indebtedness.

If we were publishing the Herald for the purposes of personal speculation, we would feel somewhat different upon this subject than what we do; but as it is an agency of the church for the spread of the work, we feel it to be the duty of everyone engaged in the work of the last days, to be interested in sustaining the Herald.

EVENTS OF IMPORTANCE daily transpire to make us rejoice that we live in a day of wondrous preparation for some mighty change.

Revolution upon revolution, political and physical, have taken place with such rapidity that the last thirty years have crowded the pages of history with the records of centuries while the blessed dawn of a spiritual peace is drawing nearer, in the approach of our Lord and Savior. And are we preparing for his coming with that fixedness of purpose which ought to characterize us as a marked and peculiar people? If not, is God to blame, or are our heads dusted with the ashes of slothfulness, and our vision lost in the thick fog of doubt, or fear, and are we cradled in the lap of selfishness, willing to serve God with our tongues but refraining from his service with our hands?

We are hopeful that, ere another year shall have marked its resting place in the past, there will be such an increased usefulness in the preachers of this gospel of the kingdom, both traveling and local, that the noise of them shall be heard in places that now know not the sound thereof, and they shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

Blessings be upon them who have labored in the past for the good of the cause, and let us be very thankful that the day of excuses is nearly over, and that the time is near when the cry shall be, "Send me, I am ready."

Hundreds—nay thousands—groan in spirit for truth; let us go and comfort them, and if we can not go, let us send a messenger, even a Herald, to declare the way of life, and we will be made happy when the day of recompense has fully come.

May we also hope that each volume which adds to the age and stability of the Herald will add to its usefulness as an exponent of truth and an advocate of righteousness.

If this is your hope and desire, send in your names so that we can know to whom to continue sending the Herald.

Released From Quorum of Seventy

At recent meetings of the council of Presidents of Seventy the following were released from the Quorum of Seventy for the reasons noted:

R. L. Fulk—release due to age.

A. V. Robinson—release due to requirements of home, impossibility to carry out the duties of a Seventy, and failure to report for three or more years.

W. J. Vaughn—release because of ill health and nonappointment.

THE COUNCIL OF PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY

By Russell F. Ralston, Secretary

Editorial Staff Enlarged

The names of two assistant editors have been added to the Saints' Herald masthead with this issue. Naomi Russell has been working in the editorial department since December, 1945, as reporter and assistant to the managing editor. One year later the young people's department, "New Horizons," was started and has continued under her supervision. Paul A. Wellington joined the staff on June 4, 1953. He has contributed several articles to the Herald and is the author of the tract, "Are You Saved?" He has had several years' experience in branch and district work. Brother Wellington is a high priest and served for six years as appointee pastor at Seattle, Washington.

A copy editor was also added to the staff in June. Audrey Stubbart started to work for Herald House in 1945 as proofreader. Her task is to make the final check and edit each manuscript so that it is ready to set in type.

These helpers will not only aid in refining our products but also in handling the ever-increasing supply of literature flowing from our presses.

Transcriptions of Business Men's Institute Available

THE TRANSCRIPTS covering the lectures and discussions at the Professional and Business Men's Institute, held in February of this year, have finally been edited and printed. A copy has been sent to each person who registered at the Institute. If, by any chance, there may have been any oversight, we suggest that those so overlooked call the matter to our attention, and a copy will be forwarded. We have a complete list of the registrants and the copies have been forwarded to them according to the address given at the time of the institute.

We regret that it has taken so long to get this work completed, but the editing and printing presented real difficulties. It was not possible to include each statement that was made from the floor, but summaries are quite comprehensive, and we feel that practically every idea presented is given with reasonable accuracy.

We concluded that it would be advisable to make this material available to those who were unable to attend the institute but who have deep interest in the problems of Zion and have therefore requested the Herald House to print extra copies. Brother Kenneth L. Graham, Manager of Herald House, advises us that copies are being sent to book stewards and may be obtained through them in branches; they will also be available at reunions. For those who are teaching, there will be found much good supplementary material for classwork.

We express our appreciation to all who have contributed to make this possible, both from the standpoint of participation at the Institute and in the editing and printing.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

By G. L. DeLapp

Death of H. W. Savage

The Presidency has received word through Henry C. Smith, church architect, of the death of his brother-in-law, Hinman W. Savage, July 5, at Berkeley, California. Brother Savage spent over twenty years in the mission field prior to his release in 1931. Twelve of these years were spent in missions abroad: the Society Islands and New Zealand.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

A letter recently received from Elder V. D. Ruch, pastor at Council Bluffs, Iowa, contains the story of his ten years of service there. He was pastor for seven years at Tulsa, Oklahoma, and twelve years in the Scandinavian Mission before that. Brother Ruch says that when he received his letter of appointment in May, 1943, there came to him a feeling of peace and assurance that his work there would be blessed. Attendance increased until it was necessary to hold two services each Sunday morning, and to accommodate the church school a hall was rented near the church to house the junior and intermediate departments.

Then follows an account of his personal ministry and the funding and building of the new church.

In the ten years I have been here I have baptized 430 people, conducted 292 funerals, performed 150 wedding ceremonies, called 33 men to the priesthood, and blessed scores of babies. Of course there have been the many sermons, pastoral visits, administrations to the sick, and the numerous other duties that fall to the lot of a pastor.

During my service here about $210,000 were added to the building fund, about $100,000 sent to the General Church in tithes and offerings, and about $40,000 used for operating expenses, making a total amount of money raised for all purposes about $350,000. To me that is an outstanding accomplishment.

For all that has been accomplished during my pastorate I give the credit to the fine group of Saints here and their outstanding co-operation and sacrificial devotion. All of the departments, as well as the individual members, have co-operated with me in a most marvelous manner.

Sister Ruch has been a wonderful help to me, always supporting me in my work, taking a deep interest in all of the departments of the branch, and as the pastor's wife, trying to mother each individual member as much as it has been possible for her to do so.

Since we have moved into the new church many more nonmember friends are attending than before. We hope this year will be the best one in the history of the branch.

It Can't Be Bought

A sermon given March 22, 1953

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David.—Isaiah 55: 1-3, Inspired Version.

I WOULD LIKE to talk to you about a theme that was brought pretty close home to me recently. I spent last week in the Arkansas Valley, along the New Mexico line, in part of the old dust bowl. Brother Barret's offertory prayer called our attention to the many good things which the Lord has done for us. I thought of the place I had been last week. If you will remember, a few years ago the dust bowl had an average of about eight or nine inches of moisture a year. Yet the area which I just left, where we have about seventy members, had less than six inches of moisture last year, and so far this year has had none except just a little skiff or two of snow to dampen the surface a bit.

I met with about fifty of our people there the other night. Some of them had driven as far as twenty or twenty-five miles. How they go there, I don't know. I looked at some of those automobiles and the tires on them. They wouldn't run for me, but maybe those people have more faith than I have. They patched four or five of the tires before they went home that night, but that didn't seem to worry them too much; they were happy. At first I was depressed, and then I gathered up something of the spirit of those good people. I realized how they faced the situation and I said to myself, "Here is a demonstration of the thing we talk about."

I was talking about our calendar for the church year and I discovered three youngsters there trying to figure out some way they could go to youth camp. If you folks feel inclined to help someone, I don't know where you could place a little money to better advantage than to help those three young people. Down there they have practically no money, for they had no crops last year. One woman told me they were hoping there was enough moisture to sprout the weeds so that the two cows they had left would have some weeds to eat. That isn't a very bright future to face—and this woman has, I think, a husband and five children.

Price Tags

Here is a faith that interests me. Sometimes in the luxury of our lives we forget what the good Lord was talking about. He said, "Come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price." Of course we naturally emphasize this matter of price. I think sometimes the greatest satisfaction we get out of the things we possess is what they cost. Bad as we hate to let go of the money, we wouldn't buy them if they were cheap. We want them to cost a certain amount, or we won't bother to buy them.

I don't want to underrate the importance of money, because money means clothing, food, shelter, and education to us. It means a chance for cultural activities; it means possibilities and opportunities. Yet when the price tag becomes life—when we pin our faith upon the monetary value of things—we are in a ticklish position. I know of some homes that are poor, some that are average, and some that are rich. Out of these classifications I wonder what the future may be—which homes will succeed, which homes will fail? I don't believe we have the answer. It isn't the amount of our possessions but our ability to balance our economic status with our spiritual status that determines the values which we have in life.

Without a Price

What makes a home great? What makes a community, a church, or a nation great? Does it hinge on the ability to attain achievement in certain lines? Does it hinge on temporal assets? Does it hinge on tangible things? Or does it hinge on some of those things which are not for sale at any price? When we talk about the "milk of life," in my thinking we talk about intangibles—the things which aren't for sale; the things which there is no way to provide, except that we live for them.

Quite frequently I meet people who say, "It doesn't make any difference what I believe." It makes all the difference in the world what we actually believe. One of the best examples came out of the last war. It is hard for me to realize that a nation which produced a Bach, a Goethe, a Schilling—men who have given contribution to the world which may never be duplicated—also gave to us the leaders of the concentration camps. It is hard to understand how the nation could produce a lower type of humanity which demonstrated to the world that it had no faith in God, no respect for God, no respect for humanity, no respect for anything which stood in its way of achieving power to dominate the world. But it happened. We say today Germany is another Germany. That is probably true, taken as a whole. Deep inside the souls of all human beings there rests some faith in God, some desire to reach for the intangibles, some desire to come in touch with the things which make life truly worth while.

Immobilized

It was the Psalmist who asked, "How can I repay the Lord for all his benefits to me?" Then he suggested that the right thing was to do something in return, to bring back to God an offering which makes what he has invested in us worth while. It is so easy, however, to break contact with God.

I was driving down the streets of Boulder yesterday afternoon. I stopped for a light and started to go again, but I didn't go. Just one little bolt had fallen out of my automobile down somewhere on the underparts of the clutch assembly. One little bolt, about a half inch long, had fallen out, and there I sat. I was just as good a man after the bolt fell out as I was before. But I was immobile. My source of power had lost contact with the parts that could transmit its energy into profitable use. I could make no contribution to the forward movement that I was trying to negotiate at that particular time. It took about two minutes for a mechanic to put another bolt in, and then I was all right again.

In life we sometimes allow little bolts to drop out along the highway when we are going a pretty good rate. Then we stop, and somehow we never get in motion again. It seems to be more difficult to repair clutches in humans than in automobiles. It takes a little more sometimes to get us in motion. When we separate ourselves from the intangible possibilities of the kingdom and our source of power—it doesn't make much difference whether we go to search for a job or to get away from our mother-in-law—the line is cut, another bolt has dropped out of our jalopy in life, and we are handicapped.

Price Tags vs. Priceless Tags

Someone has said that the things we purchase belong to us. And yet we in turn belong to the things which we can't purchase. Let's be honest about it. Each of us is deeply interested in the things which we can purchase, and the struggle for these purchases becomes the extreme struggle in too many lives. We keep them about us; we gather them in; we invest in them here; we invest in them there; and then along comes the day when we realize that we must move on into another world, shorn of the things we struggled for so diligently here in life. If we are to live abundantly—if the greater life that the Master established for us is to be ours—it will be in direct proportion to our ability to respond to the things which we cannot buy.

I think the greatest tragedy lies in the things undone, the things we know about and yet, because of pressure, fail to do. Some folks never join the church because of some foolish little reason, not realizing that the day will come when opportunity shall have passed and their whole future will be colored by their failure to meet one simple challenge. Then many of us who belong to the church will some day face that same situation and look back and realize that our lives were filled with things undone—with opportunities unaccepted, with challenges which we did not recognize, or often, challenges which we would not admit. Most of us recognize challenges that we don't admit even to ourselves. We know a lot of things that we could do but don't. We don't even allow ourselves to admit that we could and should be doing them.

Another part of that great tragedy is the refusal to accept ideas. The gospel offers us such a tremendous selection of good things. People say, "I would come into the church if I just didn't have to give up this or that." Once someone sees the kingdom he is going to do some trading rather rapidly. He is going to trade lots of mediocre things for things which are better.

In another phase of this tragedy are the opportunities which we meet with our eyes closed—opportunities which might mean a great deal to us, yet which we approach without any understanding or particular concern. People say, "I had a chance to tell the gospel story, but I didn't do much of a job at it." Well, why? They didn't know anything about it, and when the opportunity came there was only a choice of two things to do—either run from it or push into it. They tried to push into it and discovered that they were blind.

There are so many opportunities for which we should make some preparation. There are so many open doors that are really unwelcome to us. We get rather touchy sometimes; we establish some false standards of pride which keep us from entering doors through which we might otherwise go. One of the most serious charges people made against the Master was that he dined with the Pharisees, the publicans, and the sinners. Christ went where sanctimonious souls would never go, and he ministered there. Sometimes we, too, fold our costly robes about our plump forms and walk by on the other side of the road, just as the priest did when the traveler badly needed some ministry. We miss a lot of opportunities where ministry might be given. We walk by on the other side, because certain people are not of our caste or social standing. We just don't want to be seen associating with them. Yet the Master seemed to be at home among them. He didn't go there and stay, but he did go and minister; and having ministered, he came back and went up to the mountain, where, in the light of the stars and the moon, he renewed his spiritual powers. He prepared himself to go back into the gutter to retrieve the human wrecks that needed ministry.

We pass by those opportunities. We don't wish to associate with such people, so we don't go minister to them. In this process, we shut the blessings of Almighty God out of our hearts. Then we lose our desire to go upon the mountain and out under the stars to renew ourselves. We enter into a humdrum spiritual existence in which we recognize that there is such a thing as Deity; we become members of the church, and yet we lose all ambition to actually minister in the name of God to people who need us.

In the Talmud is this statement: "Every man must render an account before God for all the good things that he beheld in living and did not enjoy." That raises a question. Just what do we enjoy? I like to talk to the men who are responsible for baptisms. Some of them don't possess too much of this world's goods, but they are the happiest people I know. They have beheld some of these opportunities I have been talking about. They have seen some of the open doors. They have listened with ears attuned to hear the cravings of the souls of people hungry for the Spirit of God. These souls have responded and are enjoying these good things, too. The Talmud says that it is for such opportunities as these we must some day account.

For Sale or Not for Sale

Life is a continual process of trading the things that we possess for things that we don't possess. Sometimes we trade tangibles for intangibles, but more often it is just the reverse.

The Psalmist wrote, "The sorrows of death compassed me and the pains of hell gat hold upon me." That is where a lot of people put a period and stop. They say that, after all, there isn't very much to life. And yet someone went on and said,

Were the whole realm of nature mine, that were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine, demands my life, my soul, my all.

So I say again, if the abundant life, the eternal life, would become ours, we must belong to these things which we can't buy. The eternal, intangible world must possess us. The man who habitually remembers that in the realm of things that are not for sale is where he wishes to live gradually becomes a man who is not for sale.

We are for sale. Most of us sell out for almost anything—including a mess of pottage. Because I don't like spinach, it looks to me like a mighty poor bargain, and yet I have made some bargains which brought me less than a pot of spinach. You and I are for sale. We might deny the charge, but we are. We sell out every day that we live, to some extent, to the pressures which are about us. Our desires determine the choices we make. We start out in life with a body full of energy and a head full of abilities; sometimes we come back still full—but not with things of value. The men and women who actually contribute to the onward movement of the kingdom are the people who are of this world, yet are not for sale. They have learned that only as eternal things come to possess us now will we have capacity to enjoy those same things in the world beyond. They encompass in their way of life the things which cannot be purchased. Of course we must make purchases, but the process of purchasing must become secondary; the first thing in life must become this matter of attaching ourselves to greater powers. These are the powers which lead men into real service, direct them to meet challenges, touch the souls of others and open their eyes that they may see the possibilities which they have not seen in the past. Having seen those possibilities men move immediately into the process of ministering.

A doctor friend some years ago discovered that there seemed to be a tremendous increase in heart ailments. He realized that he was not skilled enough in that particular branch of therapy to be able to meet the issue, so taking some time off he practiced part time and attended school to train in this area. Are we doing that in the kingdom? Are we facing the needs of the kingdom as citizens and saying to ourselves, "Where am I needed? What is the need in this day and age, in this community, in this congregation, in this home? Am I in a position to meet that need? If not, am I willing to build myself into a stronger minister for God?" I am not talking about ordained ministers; I am talking about anyone who is willing to work for God. "Am I willing to strengthen my position, to enlarge my talents, to develop my skills, so that I may come back and meet those challenges successfully?"

Searching for Eternal Values

I admired those people down in the dust bowl. I talked with one family in particular. I asked, "Just how on earth are you going to make it?"

They said, "We don't know exactly, but the good Lord has never let us down, and we are going to keep trying." That's pretty good philosophy. The Lord is not bound to buoy us up, in terms of our ordinary concept, but I know from experience that when people keep trying intelligently—not just butting their heads against a stone wall—and are willing to make adjustments, the good Lord will support them.

This thing for which we search and pray can't be bought. I don't care how much we possess. We can't walk out and buy it. We can gain in one way only, and that is by the spiritual response our soul makes, which enables us to understand, to appreciate, and eventually to appropriate these things out of the eternal world into our own life. We enjoy eternal life now as a quality of life; we will enjoy it eventually in another world both as a quality and as a quantity. But we have to pay for it in service. We have to reach out intelligently and aggressively. It takes an open heart, one that sees its value, one that really wants it, one that welcomes it, one that is going to make the proper use of it when obtained.

The prophet said, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?"

How much are we spending for that which is not bread? How much of our labor do we spend for that which really doesn't satisfy the soul? How many of the values with which God endowed us in the beginning—the real values of life—do we continue to barter for things which in return are not of eternal value? That is our struggle. The great challenge of life is to make these exchanges that we may become the property of the things which we can't buy. It takes courage to live consecrated to a cause which the world does not accept, even though it is bigger than anything which has to do with our business, profession, or avocation.

There are those who, deep in their souls, want to do something for the kingdom, who pray for the courage, determination, and understanding which will enable them to do something that the kingdom may soon find place in the world. We sing the hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers Living Still." How much of that faith—the faith of Joseph, Hyrum, Sidney Rigdon, Oliver Cowdery, and Young Joseph—continues to live deep in our souls?

Co-operation

THE STORY has been repeated many times. In a small town in France not far from the Spanish border, many men and women refugees were fleeing from the secret German police following the Nazi armies in France.

Among them was a mother and her four-year-old daughter. The refugees' one idea was to get across the frontier into Spain, board a ship, and find safety in America. Unless they could do this, the Gestapo would find them, and they would be murdered or thrown into a concentration camp.

The mother and child were frail. They had walked hundreds of miles. They were in sight of freedom, but the Spanish guards were not letting refugees pass through. There were rumors that the secret police would soon arrive. Unless everyone in the boarding house could prove himself, he became a prisoner.

The mother prayed for deliverance. The next day a guide who led parties of refugees over the mountains in the dark of the moon came to the mother's room and told her that it was a long and difficult trail, but God would help.

That night the mother and child walked to the appointed place up the mountainside. The child soon became tired, and the mother carried her. She, too, was very weary. She found old men and women, the middle-aged and young, waiting to be guided to safety and freedom. The mother and child were welcomed. The leader told them to trust in God.

The young and middle-aged volunteered to carry the child. They toiled higher and higher. Finally the oldest man sank to the ground and said, "Save yourselves. Leave me here to die. I can go no farther."

The leader said, "You're not dead yet. We must all help each other. Carry the child until you die." Three times on that trip, one after another, an old man gave up. Each time the leader insisted that the man carry the child.

When the morning light appeared and they had crossed the mountain and were in Spain, every one of the party was there, alive and well. The three old men who had carried the child had found new strength. BESSIE TARRINGTON

They Carry On

By Charles D. Neff

AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1952 a request was made that a picture of the oldest sons of Joseph, Alexander, and David Smith be secured and printed in the Herald. At long last such a picture has been taken, and we are pleased to reproduce it. This picture was taken in recent days at the Auditorium.

At the left is the Prophet's oldest living descendant, Frederick Alexander Smith, son of Alexander Hale Smith, the third son of the Prophet. Fred was born in Nauvoo, Illinois, on January 19, 1862, and he is therefore well started in the last decade to reach the century mark. He served the church for many years as an elder, Apostle, and Presiding Patriarch. Since the General Conference of 1938 he has held the office of Presiding Patriarch Emeritus.

On the right is Presiding Patriarch Elbert Aoriul Smith, the only child of David Hyrum Smith, youngest son of the Prophet.

Brother Elbert's work is well known to the church, as a missionary, member of the First Presidency, as a writer, and now for fifteen years as President of the Order of Evangelists. He was born on March 8, 1871, in Nauvoo, Illinois.

The middle figure is that of Israel Alexander Smith, son of Joseph Smith III, who since April, 1946, has been serving as President of the church. He was born on February 2, 1876. He had served the church previously as a member of the Presiding Bishopric, the Standing High Council, church secretary, legal counsel, and counselor to Frederick M. Smith.

In the earliest days of the Reorganization there were three of the Prophet's sons who accepted calls to serve in the ministry: Joseph, Alexander, and David. In the 1880's the only remaining brother of the Prophet, William B. Smith, joined the missionary forces of the church.

Another son of the Prophet, Frederick G. W. Smith, who was born in 1836, died in early manhood, leaving but one child, a daughter, who late in life joined the church and died a few years ago at Holden, Missouri.

From the turn of the present century the descendants of the Prophet who have been active in our cause have been Frederick Madison Smith, President from 1915 to 1946, and the three in the above photograph. Today the three families continue to be represented in official circles.

All three of the men shown in this picture renew their loyalty to the cause of the church. They have done and are doing all they can "to plead the cause of injured innocence," just as their grandfather prophesied they would.

The statuette which holds the attention of the men is of Joseph the Martyr at prayer. It was made and presented to F. M. Smith several years ago by Mr. Avard Fairbanks, then a member of the Art Department Staff at the University of Michigan.

Corrections for New Doctrine and Covenants

The following list of corrections will be made in the next printing of the Doctrine and Covenants. Some who have purchased the book may wish to indicate the changes to be made at this time:

Page 11, Section 2: 5a: "... thee—sight and power to translate—thou . . ." should read "... thee sight and power to translate, thou . . ."

Leisure and Security - For What Purpose?

By Harry Whipple

WIST YE NOT that I must be about my Father's business?" Those were the words of a twelve-year-old boy, one who in spite of his youth was keenly aware of the mission he was to perform. He was aware also of the needs of the people of the world and of the scribes and Pharisees to whom he had been expounding the Scriptures in the temple during the Passover celebration. Jesus considered the time well spent when he was about his Father's business.

The thought now comes to us: How well are we spending our spare time? What is the end result of all our hurrying as we try to keep up with the pace of the American way of life? It would appear that we of this day and age are burning incense to two strange gods: one at the Temple of Leisure, and the other at the Shrine of Security.

Leisure

Nearly everyone is seeking more leisure time. Unions demand a shorter work week. Science finds new methods and short cuts to give us more time to ourselves. But for what purpose? More pleasant living? Time to relax and enjoy our homes?

There is nothing wrong in having time for relaxation and rest. In fact it is good. We need time to enjoy the company of our family and to get acquainted with the folks next door. But what progress have we made in learning to use time advantageously? What does the record show? We have a five-day, forty-hour week in place of the sixty- to seventy-two-hour week we once had. How are we using this extra time? Reading good books? Exchanging philosophical pleasantries with the neighbor over the back fence? We have made considerable progress in the creation of leisure time but very little progress in learning how to use it to best advantage.

With too many of us the creation of more leisure time has only added to the accumulations of desires, obligations, and frustrations. We have more time to want more things, and in satisfying those wants we take on more obligations. We have lost the art of self-entertainment, of enjoying leisure well spent. Nearly everything we do costs money; we are constantly buying new gadgets to entertain us, and too often the entertainment we get only adds to our frustration. We are losing the true pleasure of effort, thus missing the joys of leisure.

We might glean a few pointers by taking a look at the habits of our neighbors to the south in Mexico. Perhaps they go to the other extreme—at least in the opinion of the fast-moving Americans—yet they do have an easygoing way of life that seems to cry out to us, "Slow down. Relax. Enjoy nature. See what God has made for man to enjoy: a lovely flower growing by the wayside, a fleecy cloud floating overhead, the thoughts of a friend." Perhaps the fact that they work from leisure while we work toward it is why they have it to begin with while we never quite attain it.

How to spend leisure time might be a problem to those who know not God or have no purpose in life other than to satisfy their material wants. But for those who profess to follow Christ there need never be an uninteresting day. When we have devoted our spare time to good literature or good music, or to whatever our particular needs and desires seem to demand, we should be better equipped to be about our Father's business. There are countless good things we can do—interesting things becoming to followers of Christ. The opportunities for service to others are all around us. No service should be considered beneath our dignity, for Jesus said that whoever gives a cup of cold water to the least of these shall in no wise lose his reward. Then, too, there is always the task of spreading the gospel. In what way could we better spend our leisure time than in bringing someone to a knowledge of the gospel? Certainly we should use a part of our spare time in self-improvement that we might be better prepared to serve.

Security

Security which has become a fetish to some is more elusive than leisure, yet equally sought after. But if one is not secure in his philosophy, how can he be secure in his economy? Some save for years to create an estate for their old age, stinting and saving all their lives until when the time comes to retire and enjoy their savings they find that frugality has become part and parcel of their personality, and there is no longer any pleasure in spending—only in saving. Others seek security through the state or Federal government, not realizing that wars, depressions, or inflation may at any time wipe out the financial security they may have thought they had.

Is there then no way in which we may provide security for the declining years when we are no longer able to work? There certainly is. It is a plan that will provide not only for our old age but at any time a just need may arise. Moreover it will help us to learn frugality, yet will not make us misers at heart or destroy the pleasure of leading a normal life. It is God's plan—the stewardship plan. Shall we demonstrate the better way for social security? Or shall we copy the ways of the world in thinking and planning for the future?

The Book of Mormon Points the Way to Zion

Part I

By Roy Weldon

Temple of Chiapas
Underwrites Restoration Movement

NEAR THE EASTERN BASE of the jungle-covered mountains of Chiapas in southern Mexico lie the vast prehistoric ruins of Palenque. The ruins stretch for twenty-eight miles along the base of almost impenetrable forests. Among these mystic and awe-inspiring ruins of a bygone people there is the Temple of the Cross built on a high mound or pyramid. It has stood for uncounted centuries, a monument and testimony to the Restoration Movement. Hard to believe, you say? Perhaps so, but bear with me while I unfold the facts, then judge for yourself.

Nephi Builds a Temple

The Book of Mormon contains this significant statement:

And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things: . . . But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine.—II Nephi 4: 22, 25.

Perhaps the most significant thing about the "manner of the construction" of the Temple of Solomon was its three courts—a large outer court (for everyone), a smaller inner court (for Jews only), and the Holy of Holies (for high priesthood only).

I was greatly thrilled several years ago when searching Bancroft's Native Races to find a drawing of the floor plan of the Temple of the Cross at Palenque (Volume 4, page 232). The drawing clearly shows three courts or corridors or divisions of the temple, proving that temples were built in ancient America similar in "manner of the construction" to the Temple of Solomon. Many other temples have been found both in Central America and Peru with this threefold division of courts or rooms. Not only were temples of this design built in ancient America, but the custom survived through the ages until the Spaniards arrived.

Kathleen Romoli, noted authority on South America, in a late book (1941) gives the history of Quesada, the Spanish general, and of his capture of the chief of the Chibchas in Colombia. When the Spaniards arrived at the Wooden Palace of the chief, they found it closed and locked. The author says, "When Quesada burst open the heavy door he found him there, sitting quietly on his Golden Throne, waiting. . . . The palace was enormous, with outer, middle, and inner courts."¹

When I first found that the Temple of the Cross and the science of archaeology underwrites Nephi's "temple after the manner of the temple of Solomon," I was deeply impressed. The real meaning of the Temple of the Cross has begun to dawn upon me.

The Temple of the Cross and the Restoration

When Joseph Smith, the boy prophet of the nineteenth century, initiated the Restoration Movement in 1830 the new religion came into sharp contrast with the teachings of the Protestant world. The churches of that day believed, as many still do, that the book of Revelation closes the canon of Scripture; that the Bible is all we need, that God does not speak to men today, and that there are and have been no prophets or apostles since New Testament times.

In addition to prophets and present-day revelation, Reorganized Latter Day Saint views differ from the modern religious world on another major point—life after death. Through the prophet Joseph Smith and present-day revelation there came to the church a marvelous revelation known as Section 76 in the Doctrine and Covenants. This revelation tells of three glories or rewards and the divisions of salvation. They are the celestial (star glory), terrestrial (moon glory), and the celestial or sun glory. This Restoration doctrine stands in sharp contrast to modern churchianity's doctrine of heaven and hell. The religious world's idea of the future world is that of two places only—hell and heaven. The Restoration doctrine provides for three heavens or levels of salvation, while hell is a prison house which must eventually yield up its prisoners (Revelation 20: 13).

I am strongly convinced that the Temple of the Cross with its threefold division of floor plan is symbolical of the three glories or levels of salvation. The fact that the Holy of Holies (celestial glory) contains the cross, combined with the tree of life and also two priests symbolic of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods, as well as the symbol of revelation, makes the Temple of the Cross a monument of significance to the Restoration Movement. Without further adieu let us launch into the cold, hard facts that have to do with the doctrine of one heaven held by the modern religious world.

The Third Heaven

The Book of Mormon states that it will be united with the writings of Judah (Bible) to confound false doctrines.

And that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins [Book of Mormon], and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah [Bible], shall grow together, unto the confounding of false doctrines, and laying down of contentions.—II Nephi 2: 20, 21.

The Bible indeed joins with the Book of Mormon to confound this false doctrine of one heaven. Paul says he knew a man who was caught up to the third heaven (II Corinthians 12:2). Paul also says, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead" (I Corinthians 15:41, 42). It should be a matter of more than passing interest that at Teotihuacan (the Valley of the Pyramids in Mexico) the largest pyramid (twelve acres) is the pyramid of the sun; the second largest, the pyramid of the moon; and a myriad of small pyramids are representative of the stars.

Jesus told his disciples, "In my Father's house are many mansions" (John 14:2). The parables are replete with evidences of the threefold division of salvation. In the parable of the sower (Mark 4:13-20) the good seed brought forth thirtyfold (star glory), sixtyfold (moon glory), and a hundredfold (sun glory). There is the parable of the leaven (gospel) that the woman (church) mixed into three measures of meal. In the parable of the good Samaritan there are three classes of people, each worthy of different rewards. One class (robbers) beat the man, another class (priest and Levite) passed him by, while the third (good Samaritan) helped him.

In the parable of the talents (Matthew 25:14-30) one man was given one talent, another two talents, and another five talents. Other parables, such as those of the sheep and goats, and the ten virgins, also readily break down into three classifications.

James the Third

A college student in a dormitory kept a motto on his desk with these three words: "James the Third." His fellow students through the college year sought again and again for an explanation of the motto, but with no success. Finally the last day of school arrived. A large number of students converged on the young man and demanded to know the meaning of the motto. Was he related to the English king—James the Third? Humbly the young man told them that his mother had given him the motto that he might always remember that God is first, his fellow man is second, and that he (James) is third. The three heavens are based upon the inescapable fact that there are only three ways to live: for self, for fellow man, or for God and fellow man.

Interpretation of Symbolism

In the winter of 1945 I first visited the Temple of the Cross at Palenque. Stimulated by the experience I began searching into the meaning and symbolism of the threefold division of its rooms. I have been thrilled again and again and at times even astonished at the way the facts support the triple basis of human possibilities.

I now offer my own interpretation of the symbolism of the three courts of the Temple of the Cross which is equally applicable to the three courts of the Temple of Solomon.

There are three births: physical birth, birth of water (baptism), and birth of the spirit. Some people spend their entire life in the outer court (worldly). Some receive baptism of water (inner court) but somehow never pass through the gates into the Holy of Holies (born of the water and the spirit—John 3:5). The third birth (of the spirit) is accomplished only by an ordinance of the high or Melchisedec priesthood. This priesthood is depicted in the Holy of Holies of the Temple of the Cross.

In the outer court men live like animals (sex, food, drink, pleasure). In the inner court, men live according to high human standards. In the Holy of Holies, after being born again, men live like God according to the example and help of the Son of God.

Mere belief in Jesus Christ cannot bring man to his highest possibilities. Most of the world today believes in Christ. The greatest holidays are his birthday (Christmas) and his resurrection day (Easter). In my travels in Central America I visited the City of the Savior (El Salvador, capital of the Republic of El Salvador). The people there believe in Jesus Christ, but they do not know him. As I walked down the streets I saw native mothers pour black coffee down the throats of infants. I am informed that in this same republic only one child in six lives to be six years old. The Word of Wisdom alone could save millions of lives in Latin America.

The triple basis of all human activity is readily discernible in poetry and literature. The following verse, "The Three Ways," was written by Bishop John Oxenham:

To every man there openeth
A way and ways and a way;
And the high soul climbs the highway,
And the low soul gropes the low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.

Since life as we know it seems to be designed on a triple basis, it should not be surprising if we should discover that our membership in the church breaks down to one of three levels.

The Legal Level

The legal level is the lowest level on which church membership can function. It is the outer court. It is the valley at the foot of the mountain. These are they who have a form of godliness. Their names are on the books, but nevertheless they fulfill the prophecy of Paul: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" (II Timothy 3:1-4). Legal members of a church have a form of godliness but deny the power thereof.

The legal level is also the lowest level on which priesthood can function. General Conference Resolution number ninety is a good illustration:

Resolved that the legal, official acts of elders, though in transgression, are valid till they are officially silenced by proper authority.

A member of the priesthood who lives in transgression (unclean in appearance, action, thought, or personal habits) possesses only one of the three rights of priesthood—the legal right; regardless of whether he is honest, temperate, or moral he can perform marriages and administer ordinances.

The Moral Level

A member of the church or a member of the priesthood who adds to his legal rights the rights of morality (honesty, virtue, cleanliness) passes from the outer court or lowest level into the inner or second best court. This is the world of the moon glory. "These are they who are the honorable men of the earth" (Doctrine and Covenants 76:6d), nevertheless, "they obtained not the crown over the kingdom of our God" (Ibid., g). The poet calls this mediocre land halfway between the worlds of inferiority and superiority "the misty flats."

The writer of Proverbs saw these misty flats of second bests where the moral and honorable men of the earth lose their bearings and give their lives and resources to causes and movements secondary to the greatest cause of all. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs 14:12.

It took the children of Israel forty years to travel from the valley of Egypt across the deserts of Sinai to the borders of the promised land. The Restoration Movement has already spent 120 years crossing the modern deserts of worldliness, self-satisfaction, and complacency. We have camped too long among the pleasant oases of economic and material satisfaction that dot the deserts of mediocrity stretching between the launching of the Restoration in 1830 and our Promised Land (Zion).

All that I have said so far is background for that which I verily believe is the real meaning and purpose of the Restoration Movement.

The Prophetic Level

The Restoration Movement has unlocked the gates to the Holy of Holies. By the restoration of a priesthood which can administer the Holy Ghost, mankind can now pass from the world of morality, education, patriotism, and every other human virtue into the world of spiritual gifts, prophetic ministry, and acquaintance with God and his Son Jesus Christ.

In the Holy of Holies of the Temple of the Cross was found a large tablet. In the center of the tablet there is a cross. This cross is a live cross out of which come branches of the tree of life (see Nephi's vision—II Nephi 2: 49). Perched on the top of the cross is a bird. (The dove has been a symbol of the Spirit of God in the Scriptures. See John 1: 32.) Book of Mormon prophets (II Nephi 13: 10) taught the ancient inhabitants that the dove was symbolic of the Holy Ghost. The bird perched on the cross at Palenque in my opinion looks more like a dove than it does the quetzal, a beautiful, rare bird which the Mayas later came to revere and attach to the person of their fair god, Kukulcan. Perhaps the most significant objects on the tablet are two priests, one large and the other smaller, representative of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods. The Holy of Holies with its symbols of the cross, the tree of life, the Melchisedec priesthood and prophets underwrite both Book of Mormon Scripture and the Restoration Movement.

I wish now to present clear-cut scriptural evidence that the Restoration Movement is intended to be a prophetic religion. The Doctrine and Covenants defines priesthood and its rights and functions. The authority of the Melchisedec priesthood is stated as follows:

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedec, priesthood, is to hold the keys to all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God, the Father, and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 9.

This revelation clearly puts the authority of Melchisedec ministry in the prophetic world of angels, miracles, revelations, and high spirituality. No mention is made of things belonging to the lower, middle court—secondary world of morality, educational institutions, learning, literature, and all the other highly valued complements of the sectarian world. Indeed, the highest achievement in the history of God's dealings with men (Enoch's Zion) was accomplished by simple people who evidently lived in tents and never heard of Shakespeare nor E. Stanley Jones.

The hazards and dangers of the myriad good things of the world of second bests is that we are in danger of getting lost on the misty flats. We are increasingly fraternizing with the middle-court second-best churches of the world. If affiliation with churches of the world leads us to become like them, forgetting our high calling and contenting ourselves with a preaching and personal ministry on this lower level of morality, ethics, and fine sounding precepts, we will eventually end up in bitter disillusionment at the end of a blind street. The Lord will then choose another people or a remnant of the wreckage (as in 1844) that will follow his leadings to the top of the high mountain of spirituality and divine blessing.

Education, civic and religious fraternity, new houses of worship of architectural and functional perfection, and all the other ecclesiastical niceties are good things in their places, but if we don't watch our step these things of the moon glory will water out our high spiritual calling and we may find ourselves no different than the other churches of the world that are lost on the misty flats of religious mediocrity.

The final and closing words of both Joseph Smith and Moroni literally ring with this call to come out of Babylon and climb the mountain of high spirituality.

And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief.

And wo be unto the children of men if this be the case; for there shall be none that doeth good among you, no not one.

For if there be one that doeth good among you, he shall work by the power and gifts of God.—Moroni 10: 18-20.

The last words of Joseph Smith (Doctrine and Covenants 110: 11) contain this statement:

Now the great and grand secret of the whole matter, and the summom bonum of the whole subject that is lying before us, consists in obtaining the powers of the holy priesthood. For him to whom these keys are given there is no difficulty in obtaining a knowledge of facts in relation to the salvation of the children of men, both as well for the dead as for the living. [Italics mine, author.]

A Mountaintop Experience

One of my most-loved texts is found in the second chapter of Isaiah—

The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

And it shall come to pass in the last days, when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it; and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; and he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2: 1-4.

Some twelve years ago, after a hard summer's labor I took my family up into the King's River Canyon in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in California. I was greatly in need of rest and recuperation. As I reclined on the pine needles beneath the trees I looked longingly at a high peak that towered above the canyon. I determined I was going to climb that mountain. After several days of mountain air and water, my physical zest and vigor returned. One bright day my oldest son and I set out to climb the mountain.

As we left the camping area the ascent sharpened rapidly. In this area there were choice picnic spots easily accessible, and to our disgust empty beer cans, cigarette butts, empty pie plates, and paper littered the face of nature. However, as we advanced up the mountain we noted how rapidly this backwash of Babylon disappeared. After a long and arduous ascent we reached the top. I was immediately struck with the fact that there was no evidence whatsoever that any other man had ever been there. There was not so much as a single cigarette butt. This mountaintop seemed clean and pure as the Creator had made it.

The Mountain of the Lord's House

Isaiah foresaw that the mountain of the Lord's house in the last days would be established in the tops of the mountains, exalted above the hills, and all nations should go to it.

The Restoration Movement is still among the hills awaiting a generation that will possess the spiritual fitness and stamina to push on up into the high mountains of the house of the Lord. There the endowment and Zion wait, as well as other great blessings the like of which "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man." There is plenty of room on the top of the mountain of Zion's achievement which apparently has lain quiet and untrodden since the days of Enoch.

There are estimated to be over 250 so-called Christian sects and churches (hills) in the world. There are countless other hills—fraternal, political, social, economic, and scientific—which are contributing in various ways to human welfare. But in the last days the members of some great crusading movement are going to climb far above all these hills, and all nations shall go to it. Will this little church of Reorganized Latter Day Saints fulfill this wonderful prophecy of some 2,500 years standing? To say "Yes" is an audacious claim, but audacious or not, I believe with all my soul that the fulfillment of this prophecy is our high and holy calling. I have many strong reasons for my convictions, all of which lie outside the limits of this treatise.

I have even given careful consideration to other alternatives including the possibility that some other faction of the Restoration Movement, or an organization outside the Restoration Movement, might fulfill this prophecy. At the present time there is no other movement on the horizon which remotely compares with the Reorganization as far as Zion possibilities go. As for the future I cannot say. How long the Lord will endure our lethargy and willingness to dwell in the lowlands of physical satisfaction and complacency, I do not know. He has warned (Church History, Volume one, pages 275, 276) again and again that if we do not respond to his call to climb higher places, he will raise up another people who will. This might well be a movement among the more highly cultured Lamanites of Latin America, as intimated in the Church History reference given, or it might well stem from a remnant who will pull out of our own midst and leave the rest of us behind. Indeed, any movement among us toward the higher elevations of spiritual mountain-climbing could easily leave a lot of us behind.

Promises Awaiting Fulfillment

Indeed I ask, "Why deceive ourselves any longer?" There are great prophecies and promises the Lord has made to us which have not been fulfilled except in meager degree.

The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, . . . and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, so shall the redemption of Zion be.—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3d, e.

Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8, as well as many other texts in the Bible and Book of Mormon, contains glowing promises not yet fulfilled:

Behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come, when the nations of the earth shall tremble because of her, and shall fear because of her terrible ones.

There can be only two alternatives to the fact that these promises have not been fulfilled. Either we are to blame or the Lord has fallen down on his word. The Lord is not to blame; it is my own overwhelming experience to know that to the extent we have complied with conditions governing these promises, the Lord has done his part. All of this underwrites the proposition that when we do our part, the Lord will do his part, and this Restoration Movement will "come out of obscurity" (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5e) and be "exalted above the hills" and "all nations shall flow unto it."

I sometimes wonder if one thing holding us back is that we are afraid of the power of God. In some areas of the church there seems to be a tendency to shy away from the spiritual gifts and the miraculous. It is true that some of us may get our fingers burned when we start exploring the higher areas of the mountain of the Lord's house. It is true also that the spiritual gifts in times past have been misused. Modern automobiles are also misused, but would that justify our discarding them? Obviously the only logical answer to all this is that we should carefully and prayerfully explore this higher world of spirituality which towers above the hills of morality and the plains of legality. In time we should be able to eliminate the abuses, and profit from the mighty blessings which will flow from the right use of the spiritual powers resident in the gospel and the priesthood.

Becoming Spiritually Fit

During one of the numerous mountain-climbing expeditions of my youth, a group of us arrived at the base of Mt. Diablo in California. There were about ten of us—mostly church boys. We parked our cars and started the long climb. After about two hours some of the boys began to complain. One boy, a heavy smoker, had to be left. Others who were soft and flabby dropped out or trailed behind. Two or three in excellent physical condition proceeded to the top of the mountain, scarcely stopping to rest.

I am deeply convinced that none of us can ever reach the summit of the mountain of the Lord's house or even the lower elevations unless we are spiritually fit. How do we become spiritually fit?

The Book of Mormon tells how in plain language:

And now it came to pass that as Alma was journeying from the land of Gideon, southward, away to the land of Manti, behold, to his astonishment, he met the sons of Mosiah, journeying toward the land of Zarahemla.

Now these sons of Mosiah were with Alma at the time the angel first appeared unto him; therefore Alma did rejoice exceedingly, to see his brethren;

And what added more to his joy, they were still his brethren in the Lord; yea, and they had waxed strong in the knowledge of the truth;

For they were men of a sound understanding, and they had searched the Scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God.

But this is not all: they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority, even as with the power and authority of God.

And they had been teaching the word of God for the space of fourteen years, among the Lamanites, having had much success in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth.—Alma 12: 1-6.

The sons of Mosiah became mighty men of God endowed by the gifts and powers of heaven by Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and consecration during their fourteen years among the Lamanites.

Key to Spirituality

There can be no Zion without spirituality and endowments of divine power. A very recent revelation tells us that Zion is no closer nor further away than the spiritual condition of the people (Doctrine and Covenants 140).

How do we become spiritual? The Book of Mormon has the answer in the story of the sons of Mosiah (Alma 12: 4-6).

There are four ingredients in the formula for spirituality as given above—Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and consecration (fourteen years among the Lamanites).

To become physically fit, an athlete or a mountain climber must observe certain rules which promote physical fitness. The same is true of spiritual fitness. If we ever climb the high mountain of the Lord's house we will have to become a spiritually fit people.

In the future issues of the "Herald" I shall discuss the clear-cut facts based on this text which have to do with developing spiritual fitness, without which we can scarcely hope ever to set foot on the mountain of the Lord's house.

Grandmothers Are the Nicest People

GRANDMOTHERS are the nicest people. I have had two wonderful ones, so I should know. My father's mother, Grandmother James (Mrs. Thomas James), was a kind person, dignified, quiet, and capable. Many visitors who came to Independence to attend Conference or the Stone Church were made welcome by the James family and taken to their home for Sunday dinner. Most of the preparation for the dinner was made on Saturday, for no one remained home or missed church to prepare food. After dinner everyone went to prayer meeting, guests and all, for this was the custom. Then they returned to Grandma's for supper and to continue discussions about the church.

Grandma did everything when it was supposed to be done, and her schedule rarely varied—washing on Monday, ironing on Tuesday, mending on Wednesday, visiting on Thursday, cleaning on Friday, and baking on Saturday—but she was ever ready and willing to help a neighbor in spite of this regular routine. Her sympathetic ministrations to those around her are still remembered.

It was my habit to spend every Saturday in her home, and I learned much about bread and cake making in this way. My task was to cream the butter and sugar for the cake and then to "lick the bowl." What fun I had! Is there anything more pleasant for a child to do than this? Grandma always allowed for enough cake batter to be made into a tiny cake, and she saved out a piece of dough so that I could make a miniature loaf of bread and a small pan of rolls to take home. I shall always remember the beautiful, big, round layer cake which was iced and set on the cake stand on the side board at the close of day and which couldn't be cut until Sunday.

Every Saturday morning promptly at nine o'clock I opened her door. Grandma always welcomed me graciously when I arrived (although I am sure that occasionally she would have liked a free day). Much of the love and respect for older people which has remained with me through the years came from her treatment of me.

MY MOTHER'S MOTHER, Grandma Robinson (Mrs. John A. Robinson), was quite different, although she, too, was hospitable, a good cook and homemaker who met the changing situations which faced her with poise and equilibrium. When possible, she did her work according to the proper time set aside for that particular task, but if something her children wanted her to do seemed more important she could leave the task for another day. She had a white horse named Shafter, and the children loved to go riding—even as far as Kansas City on special occasions and have luncheon at one of the stores downtown.

Once, during her later years, I lived with her one year while I was teaching school. I came home for lunch each day, and if I mentioned something which I liked especially well, there it would be on the table for me to sample in the evening when I returned home. In my opinion no one has ever equalled her lemon pie, meat pie, strawberry shortcake, or the buckwheat pancakes which we had on winter mornings, set from sponge and added to as needed.

She was deeply religious, had great faith, and was a believer in the efficacy of prayer. My most vivid picture of Grandmother Robinson is that of her kneeling beside her davenport, pouring out her soul aloud to God. She thought that she was alone, but I shall never forget hearing her beautiful prayers of praise and thankfulness and her petitions in behalf of those she loved and the church. My two grandmothers and many other fine older women whom I have known have made me admire and respect those of the older generation.

ONE OF THE STALWART MINISTERS of the church, Brother F. G. Pitt, was told early in his ministry by an audible voice from heaven that if he would enjoy his ministry at its close as he had at its beginning, he must be active. All of us are facing increasing years, but we shall continue to be as young as we are in heart today if we keep active in mind, in interests, and in attitudes. Someone has said, "A person grows old with the hardening of the ideas, not the arteries."

Accomplishments aren't limited to the young. Tennyson, the great poet, was over 81 when he wrote the famous hymn, "Crossing the Bar." Tintoretto, the artist, was 74 when he painted his greatest picture. Grandma Moses, of contemporary fame, was over 70 when she discovered that she could paint. Grandma Reynolds started to college at the age of 65 and became a movie star at 80. A professor in Columbia University, New York, recently said, "Mental powers do not decline with age, only speed." If a person has continued active through the years, he can still do the job as well—though not as quickly—as he did formerly. We can't keep from growing old in years, but we can keep our zest for living and root out the senile mannerisms which mark us as aged.

The word "senile" is not one of my favorites, but we cannot ignore the mannerisms which come with age which are associated with this word. If we recognize them and try to minimize them by controlling them, they can be borne more easily. Memory becomes poorer as one advances in age. How many times have you heard an old person tell the same story or experience? No matter how interesting at first telling, if a story has been repeated several times it isn't interesting. We who are older can make an honest attempt to keep from boring our friends, and if the friend reminds us that we have "told that one before," we should stop before finishing and not become offended at the reminder.

ANOTHER CHARACTERISTIC OF AGE is failing beauty in the physical body, even though the spirit is usually more beautiful—or can be. Great care should be taken that the appearance is neat and that the body and clothing are clean. Failing eyesight sometimes keeps one from seeing the soiled spots, and family members can render a valuable service by helping to keep the older ones up to date and clean.

Another way in which a few older people grow less lovely is in taking advantage of their age and demanding special privileges just because they are old. Young people should be taught to be courteous and considerate of their elders, but on the other hand oldsters should be worthy of respect. Last year at the Book of Mormon Institute held in Independence, the original manuscript was to be displayed. The people were instructed to form a line at the rear of the church and pass by the display case in an orderly fashion. In front of me in the line were a mother and daughter who had come some miles to view the book together. They were kept from enjoying this rare privilege together by an elderly woman who had edged her way up the line about six feet and separated them. On this same day, another lady who took advantage of her years refused to follow instructions to form a line at the back of the church; instead, she came into the church from the side, not waiting her turn, and arrived at the display case many minutes before the others. Neither of these ladies was in poor health and had they asked permission of those in front of them to move forward, no one would have minded. But they didn't.

DR. O. S. ENGLISH, a professor of psychiatry of Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, says that people in the forties and fifties, as well as the oldsters, need to avoid going to seed. His observations are very interesting. He states that people want life to make them happy and contented, but they refuse to give thought and study to how they can make life more rewarding and satisfying. He continues, "People should ask themselves what new skills and activities could be learned which would make life more meaningful now as well as later on. They should stop to consider what they can do for other people which would improve the sense of well-being, instead of wishing for something to come along to make them feel better."

Our older people should not become old mentally if they follow these instructions, for in our church to worship God we must serve our brother. Doing good things for others keeps us from thinking of ourselves. The church gives purpose to our lives; even though advancing age robs us of strength and vigor, it doesn't keep us from praying and having an interest in the onward progress of the church and living a faithful life which will be worthy of emulation.

Here are a few things older people can do as they attempt to prove that the end of life can be as sweet as the beginning, as expressed by Robert

Browning, "The last of life is that for which the first is made." They can keep alive the stories of the church and pass them on to their children and friends. They can pass on earlier experiences, living always so that there will be similar experiences of the present to tell.

They can grow old with increasing sweetness. They can keep faithful in prayer for others, for family, and for church. When possible, they should visit and cheer the lonely and the newcomers. They can help their families with the children, even "baby sit" to allow the mother an opportunity to attend meetings occasionally. They can send cards or phone those who are shut-ins. They can keep abreast of the church program, read the church periodicals, and call the good articles to the attention of those who may have failed to see them. They should keep uppermost in their minds that they are loved and wanted and valuable to their families and friends. They should strive to be lovable, for there are many others, too, who think that "grandmothers are the nicest people!"

A Lady Next Door

The woman next door is a lady—and that is meant as a tribute of respect. Her children are grown and have gone away. She and her husband are alone now. Arthritis, or something like it that baffles the doctors, has afflicted her so that she suffers constant pain. But whenever the weather is good she comes out on the front porch with the aid of a walking-frame her husband has made for her. There she sees her friends go by, calls greetings, and often visits with them. She is kind and friendly to new people who come into the neighborhood. It is something that strangers appreciate.

Life may tie your body down and keep you from getting around. But it need not tie your mind and spirit. With them you can still be free and do much good in the world. L. J. L.

Money and Me

By Jean Hursbman

IT WAS A SERIOUS occasion for me when Dad and I sat on the bed in my room and arranged for my initiation into the world of money. I was five years old and extremely thrilled at the prospect of adding another grown-up characteristic to my developing personality. The word "stewardship" was a foreign one to me, and it didn't come up in our conversation. We Methodists just didn't use the term. Nevertheless I was embarked on a project that required management of "material" talents, and I was a steward over them.

The results of the family council meeting were few and simple. I was to get five cents a week. I was to be able to spend it as I pleased, but there would be no advance payments for "the yo-yo in the window at Knox's that everybody else has one like" or "just another nickel for some ice cream, Daddy, just this once." One reassuring statement about the possibility of a future raise was so encouraging that I didn't fully comprehend the remainder of the agreement—the part dealing with the special tasks around home to which I was to give my attention if the money was to continue to be forthcoming. Recollection came soon when I discovered that the motto "no work—no pay" was really in effect and I was docked two cents for ignoring my unmade bed.

With Daddy's kind words of advice about the merits of frugality still en route on the trip in one ear and out the other, I tucked my first nickel in my pocket and headed directly toward the nearest drugstore to purchase an ice-cream cone. My lesson in stewardship began as soon as that ice-cream cone was finished. Spending the rest of the week flat broke with nothing to do but think about how I could have spent the money a penny at a time or, better still, saved a little of it was almost unbearable. My reformation was rewarded with a keen sense of pride when several months later I walked into a bank with Daddy and opened a savings account with a deposit of thirty-five cents.

Here Is the Writer . . .

JEAN HURSHMAN, a graduate of Denison (Iowa) High and Graceland College, is the mother of twins—Linda and Becky—who have the rather rare distinction of having been born in Guatemala. They were born May 21, 1952, in Guatemala City where their father, Lloyd Hursbman, was a teacher at the American School. The Hursbmans now are living in Denison where they manage the Trees Motel and help with the work in Denison Branch (Lloyd is pastor). At Graceland Jean was a Crescent, a Lambda Delta Sigma, a member of the A Cappella Choir, and a faculty assistant. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Amsberry, are teaching in Iran.

YOUNG AS I WAS, I soon learned that the world of money is a cruel one. I was sick when I discovered that "my" bank had to close its doors during the depression and that my swollen fund of $3.95 could never be returned to me. I wished and wished that there had been someplace where I could have invested my money and got it back later.

Finding out that my weekly allowance could be supplemented by mowing lawns, shoveling snow, or picking apples was a big help. Needless to say, however, those occupations were seasonal, so I declared myself old enough to take care of kids. Many mothers hesitated to hire me when I informed them that I was nine years old, or when they saw that I wasn't much bigger than the subjects I was to take care of. I must admit that business was scarce, but I felt that I was progressing well up the ladder toward big money once more.

SOME CHANGES took place in my life when I was about ten. Dad, my sister, and I joined a new church called the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. When we did so, we automatically pledged ourselves to be good stewards.

I didn't claim to be an avid businesswoman, but the whole plan about tithing and account books interested me even though I was beginning to understand that other things like time and talents needed good management, too. It was while I was further investigating this new church that Mom told me some more about its educational institution—Graceland College. Going to college seemed a long way off then, but the plan for saving money to go that she mentioned was a more available item to focus my attention on. I learned that through the Student Savings Plan I could be saving my money as well as giving others the chance to attend Graceland by borrowing it. Whatever I sent in would draw interest just like in a bank. I decided to try it, so I paid tithing on the money I had already saved and sent the rest to Lamoni. I was as proud of the receipt as I had been of my first bankbook.

I had something to work and save for now. I set a goal of saving enough for two years at Graceland before 1950, the year I was to enter as a freshman. Paying my tithing as I saved seemed to be the wisest plan, so each month a sum went to our bishop's agent as well as a money order to Graceland.

I had had enough experience with money by this time to know that if I wanted to make anything I had to work for it. I decided on a steady job.

MY REAL INDOCTRINATION into the world of business was launched the day I signed a contract to deliver papers. Although the cold, dark winter mornings, the muddy roads—which are an inevitable part of springtime in Iowa—and the four-mile daily walk bothered me a great deal at times during my year as a “paper boy,” my Graceland fund began to grow by leaps and bounds.

My family has a reputation for frequent migrations due to Dad's teaching profession. The one made to Lamoni in 1945 put a halt to my paper business, but it provided an opportunity to start another project. Whether it was environmental influences or Dad's desire to have experimental animals that caused the increase in the size of our family, I'll never know. At any rate we soon added Daisy and Dixie, two sleepy-eyed Jersey cows, to our clan. Somehow we unskilled milkers and the bewildered but patient cows all managed to get past the first week or so, and at last we had enough milk to begin selling it to our neighbors. Six a.m. milkings, searching for the cows in a fog-covered, forty-acre pasture, and carrying the heavy milk buckets four blocks from the barn to our house in all kinds of weather made the money left in the bottoms of the milk bottles on neighbors' doorsteps worth an awful lot to us.

With the exception of the times I was a waitress in a restaurant, detasseled corn, and worked in a dime store, most of my other jobs were typing or secretarial ones. I acquired some weird titles, such as “Secretary to the Weed Commissioner of Crawford County”; had the privilege of setting up the files for two new offices; papered the walls of the assessor's office with notices of this, that, and the other thing; and even ventured so far as to become entangled in the famed governmental red tape and five carbon copies in a job dealing with veterans' training.

The jobs paid well and the time grew shorter. Finally I joined the hundreds of others on the trek to Lamoni—the home of Graceland College.

STANDING IN LINE is a part of Graceland. One starts the day he arrives and doesn't stop until he is through the commencement lines. The lines become sort of milestones or road markers for keeping track of the various events. Although the dinner lines, the faculty reception lines, the class lines, and the prayer meeting lines mean a great deal to me, I still feel the best when I remember going through the entrance line. I was the same as everyone else until I came to the end of the line—the business office. I was really proud, humble, self-satisfied, and grateful all at one time when I stepped up to the desk and presented my name card to the collector of the revenue. She looked at my name and then smiled. “So you are the girl who has been sending in so much money,” she said. “I've been wanting to meet you. Do you know that you have more money here than anyone else making use of the Student Savings Fund? Your account shows a balance of over $1,100. No need to stay in this line any longer—your Graceland education is paid for.”

I had learned to be a good steward.

Divine Paradox

By Don Landon

IF I were given a choice as to which of the outstanding events of the Master's life I would desire to see re-enacted, I would choose the day he climbed to the slopes of the Mount of Beatitudes with his disciples to define for them and the surrounding multitude the nature of a blessed life.

Especially would I be interested in seeing the expressions of perplexity on the faces of the Jews as the Master broke the disconcerting news that blessedness was not found in the ambitious, self-assertive life they cherished but rather in meekness, humility, poverty of spirit, compassionate mourning, and mercy. Many of the multitude undoubtedly left quite disturbed at such a paradox.

The secrets of the blessed life Christ revealed on the Mount remain paradoxical to much of the world today. His intent was to encourage people to seek blessedness in place of worldly happiness. Blessedness is above happiness, for happiness is dependent upon external circumstances such as good fortune, prosperity, and prestige. Such happiness is just as unstable as are the elements which create it.

But the condition of blessedness is neither dependent upon or affected by such external circumstances. It is an inner fountain of joy fed by the unending spring of divine grace. It is a treasure of the soul which escapes corruption and theft by the external forces resident within our environment. It ministers to the unhappy. Its achievement is dependent upon meekness of spirit, purity of heart, and willingness of mind.

Mission Raises Money

DUNREATH MISSION, OTLEY, IOWA.—On February 1, Elwyn Ver Dught was ordained to the office of teacher by District President Ralph Wicker and Ernest Kirlin.

The women's department sponsored several social suppers for the community. They gave two chicken suppers and raised one hundred dollars for the mission and the Auditorium fund.

The Zion's League presented a play in April and also had a white-elephant sale. Proceeds were given to the Auditorium fund.

Evangelist Henry Castings was in charge of the Easter service. A Communion service was held and a basket dinner at noon.

June 1-5, Dunreath joined with Knoxville for vacation church school at Knoxville church. About fifty-four attended, twenty representing Dunreath.

Mark Dwight, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Deitrick, was blessed.

A riverside baptism was held on June 28. The pastor, Arthur Nichols, baptized six people.—Reported by MRS. BETTY VER DUGHT

Norwegian Girls Visit

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—On Sunday, June 21, Edith Fossum and Ragnhild Fossum of Oslo, Norway, and Gerd Nilsen of Kragero, Norway, were in attendance at the church service in Council Bluffs. Having arrived in New York on June 12, they continued their journey by bus to Des Moines where they were met by Velma Ruch and Betty Mosier of the Graceland faculty and V. D. Ruch, pastor of the Council Bluffs Branch. They were taken by car to Lamoni where they left their baggage before going on to Council Bluffs. They were guests in the Ruch home for a week.

Wearing their Norwegian costumes they were invited up on the platform where they sang two of our hymns in Norwegian at the Sunday church service. Ragnhild made a brief talk in Norwegian, bringing the greetings of the Norwegian Saints to the Council Bluffs Branch. The talk was interpreted by Brother Ruch who several years ago baptized the parents of the Fossum girls and ordained the father of Gerd Nilsen. Edith read the Twenty-third Psalm from the Norwegian Bible and Gerd repeated the Lord's Prayer in Norwegian.

The girls returned to Lamoni where they will work this summer before entering Graceland College as students in September. These girls will be the first students from Norway ever to attend Graceland.

Thirty-one people were baptized in the Council Bluffs font during June: three of them were from Crescent, Iowa, and the other twenty-eight from Council Bluffs. These twenty-eight new members make a total of forty-nine baptisms for the Council Bluffs Branch during this calendar year.

Evangelist Orman Salisbury of St. Joseph, Missouri, spent the week end of June 14, in Council Bluffs. While here Brother Salisbury gave twenty patriarchal blessings and preached two sermons. He was the pastor of this branch from 1918 to 1923.

Apostle C. George Mesley was the speaker here on Sunday morning, June 28.

The young people served a Chuck-Wagon Dinner to about two hundred people on the evening of June 26. The Fellowship Hall was decorated in Western style and the young people were dressed in cowboy outfits and sang many Western songs during the evening. The proceeds were used to pay the building fund pledge of the Cecelian Singers.—Reported by V. D. RUCH

Officers Elected

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—Louis E. Miller was ordained to the office of elder on April 12, by Frank McDonald, assisted by Wilbert W. Wood, pastor.

The Zion's League entertained the young people from the Tucson Branch and the Prescott mission, May 16 and 17. They enjoyed a wiener roast and games at the home of Brother and Sister Paul Bear Saturday evening. The homes of the Saints were opened to them for lodging and Sunday there was a special prayer service at the church at 8:30 a.m. directed by Elder K. Tsuji. A special church school class was taught by John Wolf. After the eleven o'clock sermon preached by Elder Marion Blakely, the young people were invited to a dinner in charge of the women's department. There were eight Prescott members and sixteen Tucson members present. Brother William R. Newton was in charge of the Prescott group and Brother and Sister Frank Reistad and Brother and Sister K. A. Newcom were in charge of the young people from Tucson.

June 7, Shelly Lynn, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale K. Boxberger, was blessed by Elders Louis E. Miller and Keith M. Rogers.

On June 28, James Ernest Wood, nephew of Brother and Sister W. W. Wood with whom he resides, was blessed by Elders Blakely and Wood.

The branch held its summer vacation Bible school from June 1 to 12, using the theme, "Stepping Stones to Zion." There were 77 enrolled and 23 workers. The school was under the direction of Sister John Wolf, assisted by Sister A. B. Foster. Friday evening, June 12, an achievement program was given for members and friends. Awards were given for perfect attendance, and high lights of the course were given by the different class groups. The children's handcraft was on display. A doll house made and furnished by the junior group, spool toys made by the junior high group, and cloth picture books made by the primary class were presented to Sister Louis Miller, head of the Sunday nursery, for use of that department. Assisting were Harold Osborn, Leonard Speer, and K. Tsuji.

On June 14, Berdie Banks, Sammy Dunaway, Billy Theis, and Linda Jackson were baptized by Herbert Williams during the Children's Day program. During the church school worship service June 21, Doris and Beverly Miller were baptized by Elder Paul Bear. A confirmation service was held at the eleven o'clock service at which Linda Jackson was confirmed by Elders Keith Rogers and K. Tsuji; Berdie Banks by Elders Tsuji and Osborn; Billy Theis by Elders Miller and Tsuji; Doris Miller by Elders Bear and Raymond Greene; Beverly Miller by Elders Greene and Bear. On June 28 Sammy Dunaway was confirmed by Elders Marion Blakely and Wilbert Wood.

June 17, the annual election of officers was held. Elder W. W. Wood was re-elected as pastor. Sister Georgia Speer was re-elected as secretary. John Wolf was elected treasurer and Sister Dorothy Ross was elected women's leader.

July 1, the remainder of the branch officers were elected as follows: church school director, Herbert Williams, with Jack Williams assistant; young people's director, Helen Mifflin; book steward, Ann Fout; publicity agent, Ilah Kunkle; librarian, Christine Boxberger; auditors, Elder Keith Rogers and Ronald Greene; Scout committee chairman, Elder Marion Blakely; Scout committee, John Wolf, R. M. Kunkle, K. Tsuji, and Ronald Greene.—Reported by ILAH KUNKLE

Missionary Series Held

RICHLAND, WASHINGTON.—The Zion's League is growing under the leadership of James Lorenzen. James and Richard Chapman, Richard Hammel, Harold Hight, Jr., and Duane Whiting are in the Armed Forces.

A missionary series was conducted by Seventy George Njeim from January 25 to February 8, resulting in six baptisms.—Reported by MRS. BRUCE WHEELER

Testimony of a Healing

I am constantly made aware of God's goodness to us. When physical pain is almost beyond endurance, we can call upon our Heavenly Father and find he is near.

While vacationing with my family in Pasadena, California, last April I suffered second degree steam burns on my face, neck, chest, and hands. I asked for administration even before the doctor came, and the elder prayed that God would rebuke the pain, if it be his will, and heal my face so that it would not be scarred. I felt the healing influence as he prayed, and the doctor, who took me to the hospital, was amazed that I suffered no pain. I remained in the hospital six days, and when I was dismissed there was no trace of burns on my face.

I am grateful to God for this blessing. I am also grateful to Elders David, Waylett, and Inslee, who administered to me, and to Elizabeth Wilson and Mildred Walker who visited me and brought flowers while I was hospitalized. I am thankful for the kingdom way of life. My desire is to make my daily living a testimony of the rightness of the gospel that those around me may catch a vision of God's plan for mankind. I know, as did Job, that my Redeemer lives and does minister to his people through the church in these latter days.

Wants to Contact Members in Denver

I am from Mayer, Arizona, and would like to contact members in Denver or have some of them call on me.

My testimony is that Jesus lives. He has revealed himself in various ways, and I have experienced spiritual manifestations that have helped me greatly. I pray that we, as Saints, may not grow weary of well-doing but strive always to be profitable help in the building of the kingdom. Surely when we consider what the gospel has meant to us we will want to share it with our neighbors. We cannot afford to become self-centered. We must be on guard against being "hearers of the word" only, when we should be "doers." We must love others, for love is one of the greatest virtues God has given us; without it we cannot serve him effectively; with it we stand firm in the Lord who stretches forth his gracious hand to children all day long.

From a Convert to the Reorganization

The article, "The Seven League Boots of Error," reminded me of when I belonged to the Utah Church. While I attended the Sutter Ward Branch I was often confused in the study classes (which lasted an hour and a half) because I never could understand what was being taught. We were assigned plenty of lesson material, but there never seemed to be time to ask questions. I finally found the Reorganized Church through one of the Herald House publications, and now I am a member of it.

Although I was unhappy about some things in the Mormon Church, I do appreciate the work its women are doing. Each Tuesday we met for work or study or worship, and I enjoyed the activities very much.

My prayer is that God will hasten the day when many who now are Mormons will be converted to the whole truth of the gospel.

Mindful of His Own

It was with a heavy heart that I opened the last copy of Elude. The first number in it was "The Lord Is Mindful of His Own." I had just received word that my contract renewal proposal to operate the Spartan branch post office had been turned down in Washington, D.C. As the days passed I felt bitterness growing inside me, and even prayer seemed futile. Finally I asked, with a contrite heart, for forgiveness and help in overcoming my resentment. After this prayer I was able to sleep well again, and upon reaching the post office the following day I found that, after reconsideration, the authorities had decided to renew my contract after all. Tears of gratitude ran down my cheeks, and my mind turned again to the Elude. The Lord is mindful of his own, and as a result of this experience, I am challenged to become a better steward.

Appreciates Birthday Remembrances

I was born on June 22, 1873. My son, Elder Herbert J. Dutton and his wife Nona, planned a card shower for me on my eightieth birthday. I received 317 cards and some nice letters besides. For these I wish to thank my friends who sent them, also for the gifts of money.

I have labored as a minister for this church in southern and northern Wisconsin, north-eastern and central Illinois, southern Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Louisiana. If I could turn back the clock and start all over again, I would be more than glad to do so, for I have many bright memories of the years I have lived. God blessed my humble efforts so often that the trials were more than compensated for. May he bless all who remembered me. I'll be happy to hear from others any time in the future.

The Divine Influence

Are you, too, wondering how best to shape your lives to the Zion pattern? Are you overwhelmed, as I am, by the qualities of character necessary to make us good stewards and builders of God's kingdom? I am confident that the answer to our problem is in daily prayer to the Master for wisdom and his Spirit to guide us in accomplishing this great task.

In thinking of our mission as Saints of God, I remembered a dream my mother had many years ago. In it she saw the Reorganized Church represented as a huge ocean vessel. It lay close to the shore in a very narrow channel of angry, storm-tossed waters, seemingly headed for destruction. It could move only a short distance, and churned up and down as it tried vainly to reach open sea. On board were distress and confusion as men and women rushed about. Finally two men stepped forward, raised their hands, and commanded silence. One man seemed to give directions, and immediately calm prevailed. Again the great ship moved forward and headed for the ocean. To the west was the harbor, and beyond it a beautiful city. Mother, who seemed to be on the ship, exclaimed in joyful wonder, "Why, I didn't know we were so near home!"

The city, she believed, was Zion. Perhaps we are much nearer the realization of our dream than we think. The confusion on the ship was division among the Saints, but when the two men took command and, blest by the Spirit, gave directions, order was restored and God again directed his people.

In the past I have received blessings. I have little money and no outstanding ability in any line to offer to God, but I shall not refuse to serve because of my humble condition. My Heavenly Father has promised that I shall have the directing influence of his Spirit in times of need and that I shall be enabled to succeed if I continue faithful.

Ways Youth Learn, by Clarice M. Bowman, Harper and Brothers, New York, $2.50.

Here is a book worth reading by all teachers and leaders of teen-age young people. Clarice Bowman is an experienced youth worker, now on the staff of the Youth Department of the Methodist Church, with special responsibility for training youth workers.

Almost every page has thoughts to underline, to remember, or to refer back to when new ideas are needed. From the first chapter, "Teen Years Today," to the last, "Ways the Teacher Grows," every chapter has meaning to the youth worker.

Miss Bowman takes the reader into the ways young people learn through direct and vicarious experience, observation, listening, and worship. Of practical help are lists of activities and methods valuable in achieving particular goals in youth work; these include many suggested service projects usable by church school or Zion's League groups.

This book has been prepared with the type of church youth program in mind which combines the Sunday evening fellowship program with the church school class. For this reason not all its suggestions are practical to the program of this church where the church school and the Zion's League are usually separate in administration.

Like most books of worth Ways Youth Learn requires the thoughtful attention of the reader, but the time given to it should prove worth while.

CARL MESLE

Topics for the Youth Fellowship, Gospel Trumpet Company, Anderson, Indiana; 95 pages compiled by Tom A. Smith, 75c.

The title is a little misleading, for the subject matter is really not applicable to what we usually think of as youth fellowships (or prayer services). However, the programs outlined in the booklet might very well serve as program material for Zion's League meetings or other sessions where young people have study and discussion programs.

This work includes twenty different topics which may be used for discussion, lecture, or teaching guides. Each program topic is subdivided into six parts: 1. purpose, 2. planning procedure, 3. advertising ideas, 4. program presentation, 5. discussion topic ideas, and 6. worship suggestions.

There are programs around the regular seasonal themes, and miscellaneous subjects such as the value of friendships, human emotions, the birth of the King

LATIN-AMERICAN WEDDING

WHEN THE WEDDING of Eva Garza and Arthur Perales was solemnized recently at the First Branch in San Antonio, memories of bygone years were brought to the minds of many. Vividly predominant are those surrounding William Mannering and Thomas J. Jett, Sr., and their work among the Spanish-speaking people.

Years ago Brother Mannering went to San Antonio armed with a Spanish dictionary and a burning zeal to present the gospel to the Latin-American people in that part of the country. His was the opening wedge in a movement destined to be of infinite evangelistic value.

In San Antonio he encountered Elder Jett, a native Texan who spoke Spanish as though it were his mother tongue. Grandpa Jett, as he was affectionately known, and Brother Mannering became a team of zealous workers among the Latin Americans; and, with the help of God, they were able to convert a small group of Spanish-speaking Saints.

As years passed, the members of this group became firmly established in Reorganized Latter Day Saint activities. Their devotion was great. Then Brother Mannering was transferred to another field, and Grandpa Jett died. Active ministry to the Latin Americans ceased, but a few faithful members treasured the truths in their hearts.

One family, especially, kept the faith. This was the Menchaca family—forgotten apparently but not forgetting.

With Apostle Hield's recent assignment to the Spanish-speaking mission, interest in the Latin-American people was revived. Wayne Simmons and Rouss Eastham renewed contact with the Menchacas, and before long began holding cottage meetings in their home. Soon they began attending church, bringing with them Mr. Menchaca's nephew, Arthur Perales, and his fiancée, Eva Garza.

Soon the beauty of the Restoration began to glow inside them. Before long their names were added to the roll of baptized believers. Both became very active in church work. When the young adults have a special task assigned them, Eva cheerfully and willingly assumes any responsibility in which she can be of service. Arthur is Scoutmaster. The size and enthusiasm of the troop have proved his capability in meeting this challenge.

The candle-lighted church on Rockwood Court was bulging at its plastered seams on the night of their wedding. Never more beautiful, the bride walked down the aisle and with a solemnity that touched the heart of every person—Catholic as well as Reorganized Latter Day Saint—gave her hand to Arthur. Apostle Hield pronounced them husband and wife.

One could almost hear the blessings of Grandpa Jett and Brother Mannering: "May God bless you and keep you, Arthur and Eva. And may the Lord make his face to shine upon you both now and forevermore." ROUSS EASTHAM

James Version of the Bible, a dedication service for leaders, and so on.

We recommend this book to all who seek diversified program material for youth. It does have some good techniques for promoting the interest of young people, but its program content does not match that of our own Zion's League manual and our series of five Zion's League Annuals. LEE HART

Worship Services for Life Planning, by Alice A. Bays, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1953, $2.50.

This book is written "that young people may discover the will and purpose of God and find guidance in Christian living." The book is divided into five series, each dealing with the present-day problems of young people. There are thirty-three complete services, each built around a central theme. Leaders of worship and teachers of religious education will find the poems and stories adaptable for teaching such Christian attributes as selecting a vocation with the idea of rendering service, living as brothers with members of other races, and the envisioning of a better world.

Series one deals with "selecting a vocation." Elizabeth Blackwell, who opened up the field of medicine for women, proved that poverty, ridicule, and social ostracism can be overcome when one has determination to serve. Johann Sebastian Bach spent the greater part of his life in the service of the church, composing music that reflects his great faith. Florence Nightingale wrote in her diary, "I am thirty, at the age at which Christ began his mission. Now no more childish things, no more vain things, Lord; let me think only of thy will." Jane Addams in spirit and fact became one of the people she served. In love with life, she gave with both hands. Through each story in this series we are impressed with the thought that we should ask ourselves, "Are we willing for God to guide us in selection of our life's vocation?"

The theme of series two is "Building a Better World." In the life of David Livingstone we see demonstrated bravery, patience, vision, truth, perseverance, and devotion. There is the story of the ship "Ticonda" that sailed in confidence, because she had a course to follow.

"Living as Brothers" is the theme of series three; this section emphasizes the importance of living the law of love and service to others, of getting rid of prejudice, of having a friendly attitude toward people of other races and religions. "The tiny mustard seed of faith in one's brother can become a veritable tree of refuge for all pain-racked humanity."

The eleven services in series four are built around the central theme of "Seek-

The New Wichita (Kansas) Church

THE NEW WICHITA CHURCH is built from the footings to the tops of the gables with reinforced poured concrete and faced with buff brick. The trim stone was cast of white concrete by members of the local congregation. The L-shaped structure measures 115 by 69 feet with full basement and raised rear balcony and classrooms, as well as the main floor and choir space. The sanctuary on the main floor will accommodate about three hundred beside the rostrum and choir loft, with the balcony normally as class space used for overflow.

As many as six hundred can be seated for banquets and served from a modern kitchen. The utility auditorium or gymnasium is very useful. It serves any group that desires a place for recreation. (The branch basketball team for 1952-53 won top spot in one of the city tournaments.)

The baptismal font is at the front and center with plate glass showing the water line and baptismal candidates. The "cry room" or nursery at the rear has a large double plate glass front for view and is equipped with loud speakers, as is the rest of the building.

The building is heated by automatic gas-fired boiler with radiant heat—no cold feet; comfort promotes worship. The main rest rooms are located at basement level and have shower space.

The library and pastor's study is on the main floor, also a small rest room. The building has an arrangement of ramps that enables the chair-ridden to reach any part of it.

The ceilings are original white with an acoustical rough plaster finish. The sidewalls are of Spanish-type texture in light golden buff.

The evaluation has been figured at $200,000, but the total cost to date is less than $75,000, including furniture and fixtures. With the amount on hand applied against the obligation, the balance would be less than $12,000. This has been made possible because approximately 75 per cent of the labor was done by volunteers. Members and friends continue to make contributions toward debt reduction and completion of the work yet to be done.

MYRON F. LAPOINTE

ing Worthy Goals," with subtopics such as realizing our worth; standing firm and bold; testing our lives by God; giving—not seeking; and practicing his presence. The stories are about people who sought the kingdom of God first, lived by his will, and committed their lives to him; they sought no self-glory but only truth, happy in the virtues of a good life lived for others.

"Special Days," the theme of series five, contains services for Christmas, Easter, Mother's Day, decision day, dedication, and two missionary services. The continuing thought throughout is that we become aware of God's presence in our lives and with his help conquer evil and walk in newness of life.

Most of the poems and stories in the book offer wise counsel and dependable guidance to those seeking to build mature Christian personalities.

ELIZABETH SCHALL

Everything Is Sacred

Whatever position a man or woman occupies should be one in which Christ is the Lord of life. A Christian cannot be a mere businessman; he cannot be a mere teacher; he cannot be a mere lawyer; he cannot be a mere doctor; he cannot be a mere carpenter. He must be a Christian businessman; he must be a Christian teacher; he must be a Christian lawyer; he must be a Christian doctor; he must be a Christian carpenter. Whatever his vocation may be, and whatever his sex, color, or location, he must recognize, accept and practice the Lordship of Christ in respect to his calling. He must bring Christ to bear upon his life work. "The secular" does not exist in the life of the Christian. Everything is sacred.—Charles J. Woodbridge and Harold Lindsell in A Handbook of Christian Truth.

DEATHS

NELSON.—Alvin Jacob, son of Peter Christian and Mary Christine Nelson, was born April 16, 1888, near Guilford, Missouri, and died June 1, 1953, in Guilford. On September 8, 1908, he was married to Edna Throckmorton, who survives him. He had been a resident of Guilford his entire life and was a member of the Reorganized Church there.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons: Theodore W. of the home and Willard E. of Bolckow, Missouri; two daughters: Ethel Irene Nielson of Barnard, Missouri, and Norma Jean Landers of Wichita, Kansas; his stepfather, W. E. Balwin of Algiers, Louisiana; and thirteen grandchildren. One son died in infancy. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Frank Hough and Kenneth Nelson. Burial was at Guilford.

WOOD.—Welton, was born April 3, 1876, in Hants County, Nova Scotia, and died June 19, 1953, at a hospital in Westboro, Massachusetts. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on April 29, 1889, was ordained a deacon in December, 1901, and an elder on December 16, 1917. He was married on October 27, 1904, to Hattie Elizabeth Williams, who survives him. For thirty-two years he had lived in Independence and for seventeen years in Massachusetts.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Beatrice Cross of Saxonville, Massachusetts; two sons: Earle Wood of Independence, Missouri, and Cecil Wood of Oak Grove, Missouri; three sisters: Mrs. Margaret Miller of Breckenridge, Missouri; Mrs. Louis Clark of Manchester, New Hampshire; and Mrs. Anetta Congdon of Nova Scotia; seven grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. One daughter, Etta, died in 1914. Burial was at Saxonville.

EVERHART.—Eugene E., son of John and Edith Everhart, was born November 1, 1890, at Akron, Ohio, and died June 15, 1953, at Flint, Michigan, where he had resided for the past forty-three years. He was a graduate of Flint High School, the Chicago Conservatory of Music, and the Belgium School of Music in Detroit. He also attended Michigan State College for two years and for ten years was an instructor at the Baker Conservatory of Music. For the past twenty-seven years he had a studio at his home, where he left a large collection of rare and priceless violins. A member of the Reorganized Church he was a student of the Scriptures and a faithful supporter of his belief. For a number of years he was head of the music department in Flint Branch.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Edith Everhart; a sister, Lelah; and a brother, George, all of Flint. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Melvin Russell. Interment was in the Flint Memorial Park Cemetery.

CORBIN.—Sarah May, died June 27, 1953, at her home in Nevada, Iowa, after seventeen years of illness. She was fifty-four years old. She had been a resident of Nevada since 1912.

Surviving are her husband, Lee Corbin; two sons: Glen of Mapleton, Iowa, and Robert of Nevada; two daughters: Mrs. D. M. Blayney of Davenport, Iowa, and Mrs. Walter Musyl of Chicago, Illinois; her mother, Mary Hollis of St. Clair, Michigan; a brother, John Hollis of St. Clair; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Nevada, Elders Clyde McDonald, Forrest Pratt, and Lloyd Young officiating. Interment was in the Nevada cemetery.

LAWYERS

A recent transfer of property in which the family interests were managed by an attorney who is also a long-time friend brought us some appreciative thoughts about lawyers.

It is a lawyer's profession, primarily, to be a friend and defender to people in trouble or need. Suppose you are a stranger in a city. Problems arise. You need advice and help. You go to a lawyer and he becomes, for the time, your friend. He knows your legal rights, and will do all he can to protect them. He will defend your business and property rights. He helps you with tax problems. He keeps you from making costly mistakes. His services cost money, of course, but it is probable that he will save you more in money and worry than he will cost you.

Many people lose more by trying to get along without legal counsel than if they had paid a good lawyer. L. J. L.

SYNTHETIC FUTURE

Dr. Roger Adams, a leading organic chemist of the University of Illinois, has made some rather startling predictions for our future. Here are a few of them:

1. People happy, healthy, and frisky, at one hundred.
 2. Clothing from coal and oil.
 3. Cure of any human ailment by drugs.
 4. Storage of the sun's energy for man's use.
 5. Fish ranches in fenced off water, rivaling cattle ranches.
 6. Pears, apples, and oranges the size of grapefruit.
 7. Interplanetary football matches, with hot-dog stands anchored along the rocket-ship routes.

MILK VS. BEEFSTEAK

The same principle of growth is at work in the maturation of both the physical and spiritual body. . . . To administer a steady dose of "first principles" to those whose growth is beyond this point is to guarantee arrested development and a case of spiritual rickets. . . . To subject newly baptized members to class discussions where penetrating evaluations are being made of the reasons for our failure "to establish the cause of Zion" is just as fatal as three pounds of beefsteak would be to a baby.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

AS EVIDENCE OF HIS POPULARITY with the students of Graceland College, President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., was invited by the graduating class this June to deliver the Commencement address. This address, under the title, "It Is Your Business," appears on page 5. While directed primarily at the students, the contents of President Gleazer's remarks are worth being read by all Latter Day Saints and indeed by all Christian peoples.

President Gleazer recently appeared at the annual Convocation at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, to receive official recognition to the conferral by the University of his Doctor's degree in Education, which he received last March. He was invited to do research work at Harvard this summer but declined in order to be in Lamoni to carry out his administrative responsibilities on behalf of the college. It is interesting to note that his father, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr., was a special student in the graduate school of Harvard in sociology and economics in the early twenties.

"Young Ed," as he is known in church circles, was reared in Independence, studied at Graceland, took his Bachelor's from UCLA, and his Master's from Temple University. He completed his work last summer for his Doctor's from Harvard after a year's leave of absence from Graceland. His doctor's dissertation, which was a pilot study for the co-operative program for educational administration, a research project of the Kellogg Foundation, was entitled "The Identification of Certain Alignments of Social Power Impinging Upon the Decision Making of School Committee and Superintendent in a New England Community." This unusual study was well received and is to be published by the University.

Since being named President of Graceland College in 1947, he not only has headed the college during the period of its greatest expansion until the enrollment has had to be limited to fit the campus facilities but has attained additional recognition in academic circles. He is at present secretary-treasurer of the North-Central Junior Colleges and chairman of the Administrative Committee of the American Association of Junior Colleges.

In 1940, while under General Church appointment, he was married to Charlene Allen of Kansas City, Missouri. They now reside in Lamoni and have four children: Allen, Sandra, John, and Suzan.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT RECOVERING

President Israel A. Smith entered the Sanitarium a few days ago for a checkup and in the hope of expediting his recovery from a persistent cough. He is making good progress and expects to be released shortly.

SPEAKER AT REUNION

President F. Henry Edwards gave the Sunday morning sermon at the Center Stake Reunion at Lake Doniphan, near Excelsior Springs, Missouri, on July 12.

AT PORT ELGIN REUNION

President W. Wallace Smith attended the Owen Sound-Toronto Reunion at Port Elgin, Ontario, July 11-19. He was accompanied by his wife.

IN THE EAST

Bishop G. L. DeLapp is attending reunions in the East. He is scheduled to be at Onset, Massachusetts; Brooksville, Maine; and Kirtland, Ohio, Reunions.

IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Bishop H. L. Livingston attended the Black Hills Reunion, at Custer, South Dakota, July 12-19.

AT STAKE INSTITUTE

Bishop Walter N. Johnson was in Warrensburg, Missouri, for a three-day institute for the Central Missouri Stake, July 10-12.

SPEAKS AT INSTITUTE

The Central Missouri Stake is having a series of three or four institutes in place of a reunion this summer. Elder Franklyn Weddle attended one of these institutes at Warrensburg, Missouri, on July 10, and spoke on "Worship in Music." On July 19, Brother Weddle spoke to the Zion's Leagues of the Center Stake following the evening Campus service.

SPEAKER AT CAMPUS

Elder Arthur Rock was the evening speaker at the Campus service in the Center Stake on July 12.

AT DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Apostle D. Blair Jensen was at a district conference for the Tulsa District, held at Tulsa, Oklahoma, July 11 and 12.

REPORTS ON BAPTISMS

A report has been received from the First Presidency that Children's Day baptisms are up in each of the stakes (1953 over 1952). There was a total stake increase of 52 per cent. Apostle D. O. Chesworth has reported that the baptism of five at Sparta, Wisconsin, will bring the Wisconsin baptisms for 1953 up to thirty.

DES MOINES REUNION HELD

Elder C. D. Neff has returned to his office from the Des Moines Reunion which was held July 4-12 at Des Moines, Iowa. The following were on the staff at the reunion: Apostle and Mrs. Roscoe Davey, Evangelist William Patterson, Seventy William C. Haden, Elder Herbert Scott, and Elder Ralph Wicker. Brother Davey and Brother Patterson shared responsibility in the preaching services each evening, and Brother Patterson had charge of the prayer services. Brother Neff directed the young people's activities, assisted by Paul Winans, pastor at Boone, Iowa. Brother Haden taught the men's class. Brother Scott is pastor at Des Moines, and Brother Wicker is the district president.

"Being Dead Yet Speaketh"

In consulting our Herald files I often find statements of our predecessors that are most challenging. The following is President Joseph Smith's message when he assumed the burden of editorial management of the Herald.

I. A. S.

SALUTATORY

In taking charge of the editorial department of the Herald, I am acting in accordance with the expressed wish of the Saints, and in so doing am entitled to their faith, their prayers, and their upholding in righteousness, in love and in peace.

I am by no means unaware of my want of ability, of my lack of qualifications, nor yet of the arduousness of the undertaking; but feeling a desire to do that which seems to be for the best, I place myself in the hands of him who hath been good to me in time past, and who has promised to hear even the young ravens when they cry.

Frequently solicited, and as urgently pressed to take the present responsibility, I have as uniformly refused to do so, having my eyes open to the requirements of the position, and to my almost utter destitution of them.

I feel the necessity for an extended, united and strenuous effort being made for the advancement of the work of the last days; and I am assured that the Herald should be made to answer the ends of its establishment for the perpetuation of our unity.

I can make no promises other than this, to study the nature of the wants of the church, and to minister unto them according to the best of my ability. I hope for the cordial support of everyone in the church who can use a pen for the cause of truth, and hereby ask for contributions for the columns of the Herald, upon the various subjects connected with our faith.

We must awaken from our lethargy; we must put on our armor for the good fight; we must march out manfully, letting those who will be sluggards, lag behind; and those who will be mockers, stand upon the wayside, marking our onward progress by the bitterness and activity of their vituperation.

If our range of thought and vision has been too limited for want of culture in the things which make for peace, it is attributable (to a degree at least) to the want of some of the things which ought to be and abound in us, that we may neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Son of God.

With this short salutation, I greet you, one and all in the bonds of peace, committing myself with all the things entrusted to my care, to the protecting providence of that God who receiveth our prayers, and answereth them according to His wisdom, for our good.

Our Miracle

By Paul Wellington

And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Elijah.—I Kings 17: 16.

Fill the waterpots with water. . . . Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. . . . When the governor of the feast had tasted the water which was made wine, [he said] . . . thou hast kept the good wine until now. This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana.—John 2: 7-11.

A few moments later, when the conversation had turned in another direction, Smith rose, and walking across the room, taking Mrs. Johnson by the hand, said in the most solemn and impressive manner: "Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole," and immediately left the room. . . . Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease, . . . and was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain.—Church History, Volume 1, page 91.

It was Daryl's regular check-up visit to the doctor. "Your boy will not develop mentally past the age of three or four." . . . The following Sunday the pastor invited the Saints to unite in fasting and prayer until the Wednesday prayer meeting, at which time the child would be administered to. . . . The prayers for anointing and confirmation were short, intelligent, and unaffected by emotion. . . . With all thanks to God . . . we report our prayers were answered. . . . What joy was ours, as the reports came from four different examinations that he was normal!—Saints' Herald, March 23, 1953, page 19.

IT'S A MIRACLE!" has been the cry through all ages when some spectacular, unexplainable event has taken place.

And varied have been the responses and reactions to each event. Usually those who personally witness the occurrence are converted to a belief in a Higher Power. Their testimony often converts others. Of course there are many who are skeptical. And some express complete disbelief.

In any event, all try to find an explanation for what occurred.

Unbelievers usually say it was an illusion or a "fake" story. Skeptics search for a "reasonable" answer to the miracle: Elijah refilled the meal and oil supply; Jesus put some "powder" in the water; Joseph Smith's audacity shocked Mrs. Johnson. Believers just explain, "It happened through the power of God."

This controversy will continue. And proof that will satisfy everyone as to what actually happened will probably not be forthcoming.

There will be many such "miracles" occurring in the future. And Reorganized Latter Day Saints will be confronted with the uncertainty of what to accept as truth. Miracles of healing and so forth will be reported by people of all religious denominations, and by those who express no religious affiliation.

Certain attitudes must be developed to meet these uncertainties. It will be easy to accept the testimonies of fellow Saints, but prejudice will

Report on President Smith

As we go to press (Monday, July 20) the doctor's report states that President Israel A. Smith is suffering with acute pneumonitis with complications and has been quite sick. He is now making satisfactory progress toward recovery.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Alabama District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Elbert J. Jenkins, 4932 Court H, Birmingham 8, Alabama, as bishop's agent of the Alabama District succeeding Brother Joseph E. Baldwin, who has been caring for the work of bishop's agent in Alabama since his appointment to the Southern Mission. However, Brother Baldwin's appointment as Bishop of Kansas City Stake has necessitated his resignation, and the solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of July and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Jenkins at the above address.

We appreciate the support given by the Saints to Bishop Baldwin during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother Jenkins to them for their favorable consideration and support.

Baptismal Report for May

There were 311 baptisms reported to the Department of Statistics in May. This is 23 more than were reported last May and is the highest total reported in May since 1923, except 1949 when 420 German baptisms accrued in previous years were reported. The total for the first five months of 1953 is 1,179 which is still 95 below the total for the same period last year.

Stakes and districts with the 5 highest baptismal totals reported in May are Center Stake of Zion, 37; Eastern Colorado District, 17; Oregon District, 17; Seattle District, 15; and Kirtland District, 14.

Branches and missions with the 5 highest baptismal totals reported in May are Denver, Colorado, 10; Wenatchee, Washington, mission, 9; New Philadelphia, Ohio, 9; Hill City, Kansas, mission, 7; and the following with 6 each: Coalville, Iowa; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Davidson, Oklahoma; First Portland, Oregon; Skiatook, Oklahoma; and Tabor, Iowa.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Apostle Maurice L. Draper, 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, New South Wales:

Through inadvertence there was omitted from the text, Methods of Evangelism, a statement of recognition which should have appeared. Special attention should be given to Section 5, "Questions Asked and Objections Raised." The material for this section was borrowed from mimeographed publications by Ward A. Hougas and James Daugherty. Appreciation is expressed to these men for their excellent work and for making the use of this material possible.

From Emery Jennings, President of Far West Stake:

We have developed a program of ministry to our people in the St. Joseph hospitals which has proved to be most effective.

We have secured the wholehearted cooperation of the superintendents of the three city hospitals whereby each one furnishes us a daily list of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint people who are admitted. Each evening between five and seven o'clock Charles Powell visits the Methodist and Mercy Hospitals and Charles Haden visits the St. Joseph's Hospital. After the visits are made each of these men sends to our office a card giving us the names of the Saints and friends who have been admitted and whom they have visited.

We have written the pastors of the congregations throughout the stake to instruct our people to give their church affiliation upon admittance to any of these hospitals so that these visiting ministers can receive from the hospitals the names of those who have been admitted each day.

We received a short report from Brother Charles Powell for the month of May which reads: "I made 97 visits to 14 patients, and officiated at 29 administrations. I met several nonmembers, with the prospect that one will come out to church soon. I feel that we have made a wise step in providing for the spiritual comfort of our sick throughout the stake."

This program has given a consistent and daily ministry to the sick and has relieved our missionaries and appointees from spending a great deal of time going to and from the hospitals. It has strengthened our missionary program as well.

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Southeastern Illinois District:

We have twenty-six baptisms to date here, and there is to be another at Marion. Fifty-two persons attended youth camp at Brush Creek, which is twelve more than in 1952. Four from Brush Creek just wired to attend the Nauvoo Youth Camp, making ninety reservations for that camp.

From E. R. Carter, Lansing, Michigan:

I note with interest an item in the June 22 Herald stating that Brother Dowker was the first minister of our church to occupy in the opening of the state senate. I have offered the prayer in the senate and house a good many times and also have served as a member of the house for four years. Brother Fligg, Brother Calhoon, Brother Njeim, and some of the local men here also have opened sessions at the house.

From Harry J. Simons, President of Central Missouri Stake:

The Children's Day baptisms for Central Missouri Stake are as follows: Atherton, 6; Blue Springs, 5; Buckner, 7; Harrisonville, 1; Holden, 7; Marshall, 3; Oak Grove, 2; Odessa, 2; Pleasant Hill, 4; Richmond, 9; Waken-da, 5; Warrensburg, 4. This brings the total of baptisms for 1953, up to the end of June, to 85.

It Is Your Business

Commencement address by Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr.

Graceland College, May 29, 1953

WE HAVE COME TOGETHER this morning in this grove of trees for a few moments of fellowship before we part. You came to this Hill two years ago, most of you, because you said you wished to experience the Graceland spirit. I hope that this morning in the beauty of this hour together there will come to each of us reassurance and renewal from the One in whose service the Graceland spirit is found.

You undoubtedly have some moments of regret that the days have passed by so swiftly that you are not fully prepared for this time of separation. The opportunities of the past cannot be recaptured. Your days here are over. But other opportunities lie ahead. Now, as you look to the future, may your eyes be opened so that you can clearly and honestly see yourself as matched against the demands which life will make of you. To a great extent you have been contributing citizens to our life together. Our reward as your teachers has been in proportion to your responsiveness. To the true teacher there is no greater reward than this, and for this responsiveness no salary schedule can substitute.

Response and Responsibility

It is about that response I would like to talk for a while. Response and responsibility have the same root word. They are of the same family. In some ways we have tried to evaluate your responsiveness. Perhaps you received a good grade in zoology, or played clarinet in the band, or learned to make a cheese soufflé, and for these achievements you have a sense of success. But the all-important question that needs to be asked this morning is "To what extent have you learned to be a responsible person?" For this can be held to be the truest mark of the educated man—an increasing capacity for responsibility.

Responsibility is a word we use a lot. Actually what do we mean by it? Have you ever heard comments like these? "I didn't mean to, Mr. Delano, the dish jumped out of my hand." "I guess I wasn't thinking, Dr. Platz." "Mr. Cole, I haven't done any worse than a lot of other people." "Don't look at me, Mr. Anderson, he's the one who sang the wrong note." "Mr. Burdick, I don't feel I am being paid to do that much work." "I guess I read the wrong lesson, Dr. Chevillie." "Mr. State Trooper, I didn't know this was a speed zone." "Nobody told me that the class schedule had been changed, Miss Morgan. How was I to know?" "It's not my fault." "I want a job with no responsibility." "It's none of my business!"

We are affirming this morning that it may very well be some of your business, and that this is responsibility—to make it some of your business.

To Respond Voluntarily

Responsibility means first of all, simply and essentially, to respond voluntarily. The responsible person is like the car with a self-starter. The battery is charged up and has enough zip to enable the starter to do the job when the button is pushed—when the stimulus is received. The irresponsible person is more like the cars of yesteryear that required a crank—after a sufficient number of twists and appropriate words, the motor might take hold. The mature and responsible person responds. He doesn't need his arm to be twisted. He responds voluntarily. Any teacher knows the joy of a class in which there are a few alert people who will at least look as if they understand—who will occasionally ask a question that has some bearing on what is being discussed.

What does it mean "to respond voluntarily"? A woman enters a room in which some men are seated. It is a social situation in which they stand up—they respond to the situation. Someone drops a milk bottle on the road. A person responds, stops his car, picks up the pieces. The responsible person is not like the deaf old horse that pulls the junkman's cart. He wears blinders and sees only his daily destination of the junkyard. He does only what he is told by the pressure on the reins. The mature and responsible person is one who is sensitive to a situation—whose radar is working. He is one who is not so wound up in himself that he is oblivious to whatever is occurring around him.

And the learning experiences are presumed to make our antennae even more sensitive, to sharpen the powers of observation. What do we see through the telescope or the microscope? In the social relationships of people, what is happening? We need to wake up—look alive—respond to stimuli—react. The Wright brothers saw more than sea gulls at Kitty Hawk—they saw airplanes. They were not content with dozing on the beach. Isaac Newton sat under an apple tree but was concerned with more than the shade—he reacted to the falling apple. He saw it; he perceived it. What did it mean? He was alert and responsive. He saw in it an expression of the law of gravity.

Would that there were some abrasive, some sandpaper that could be used to sensitize the human frame, to clear the eyes, to quicken the hearing that we, like the child, could respond to each flower as if it were an orchid; that we could hear like the person who is blind; that we could answer to each situation with senses keen and mind alert. And, may God forgive us—your teachers—if we have dulled your reception to the signals of your environment, for it has been our intention to make you more alive to the circumstances surrounding you.

This is the first element of responsibility—to respond voluntarily, to answer to the situation, to be alive to the stimuli of our environment.

Appropriate Response

You may answer to a situation in many different ways. In fact, if there is only one way to respond then it makes little difference whether a person is responsible or not; there is no element of choice involved. Some young fellows I knew passed a school building one night. They noticed that a window was open. There was the situation. They were alert to it. They responded. What did they do? They could have closed the window, could have notified the police, could have walked on, or could have entered the building. If they entered the building there were any number of actions possible. These young men succeeded in doing thousands of dollars of damage after they entered the building.

To respond is not enough. Responsible people respond in appropriate ways, which means they are able to decide on a course of action which is in harmony with a moral code. What I shall do is connected with what I believe. The capacity of responsibility is that of being firmly governed by a moral code—against inconsistent impulses, desires, or interests, and in the direction of desires or interests that are consistent with the code. Our common word for one aspect of this capacity is “dependability” by which we mean that, knowing a person’s codes—that is, being aware of his “character”—we can reasonably foresee what he is likely to do or not to do, usually under a variety of circumstances.

What are characteristics of the moral codes of responsible people? How do they act?

I have an automobile. I like it to look nice. I wash it. I sweep it out every now and then. I slow down through mud puddles. I am careful in parking near high curbs. I do not drive at excessive speeds. I know I will have it for a while, and I want it to look good because I think people will size me up to some extent by how my car looks. I also know—and this probably is most important—that if there is any damage I shall pay for it.

What does a person do with a car which does not belong to him—one he has stolen or perhaps even one he has borrowed? What difference does it make? He probably says, “I’ll have it only on this trip. Somebody else can worry about it. Speed it. Drive it over glass. Rip the upholstery. Break the windows. Who cares? It’s not mine, and I’ll not have to pay for it or be identified with it.”

Sometimes we see that happen to rented farms. The tenants say, “Sure, plant corn year after year. When we have worn out this farm, we will move on to another.” We sometimes see this happen to a rented house. It is dirty, and the windows are broken. Who cares? There are the tourists who leave papers and cans on the road, or in the park, or burn the trees; they, too, will move on. Somebody else will pay. Somebody else will clean it up, straighten it out.

Code of a Responsible Person

The code of the responsible person reminds him that he must not move on to let somebody else pay the cost. Responsibility means to respond to the situation as if the property involved or the factors concerned were of real and lasting value to you. It means acting as if it were your business, as if you were to feel the consequences of what you have decided to do. As long as you want to be considered a member of a group, with the privileges of group membership, a community, college, church, nation, club, or member of the human race, you must believe in and care what becomes of the enterprise. You are not a member in fact unless you care about what the group stands for and feel responsible for its activities and its reputation. It is your college, your church, your community. You will act as if it were yours with respect to the same feelings and attitudes in others. You cannot say, “Let someone else worry about it, pay the cost, clean it up, straighten it out.” You are identified with the group if you want to hold membership in it. You share its achievements, its successes; you take its name; you also share the work, the expense, the failures. It is your community, your college, your church, your family, your farm, your nation—for better and for worse, for richer and for poorer, in sickness and in health. If you have the use of it, if you are identified with it, this moral code of responsibility insists that you respond with behavior that goes beyond personal interests and purposes, beyond your immediate goals, and perhaps even beyond your time. The issue is clear—the honest man will either assume such responsibility or surrender his identification with the group. There is no other way.

Consequences of Choosing

And responsibility means the willingness to assume the consequences of our choosing. A wise man once said that in this life or in the next there are no rewards nor punishments, only consequences. The irresponsible person wants cake to eat without having to buy the ingredients, mix them, and clean up the dishes. There are consequences—there is a price to be paid for anything of value. If it didn’t cost somebody something, then it would not be of value. The responsible person is willing to pay that cost himself. The greatest prizes are not won on a quiz show, or in a sweepstakes, or inherited.

You want the privilege of self-determination? Then you must pay the effort required to become acquainted with the alternatives. You must expend the perspiration of decision making and choosing from the alternatives; then you must shoulder up to the weight of the consequences.

You want freedom? You must pay the price of self-discipline and respect for the freedom of others. Freedom presupposes self-control or it dies in the dominance of superior force. Freedom for one can become slavery for many. You may feel free to travel along a narrow highway at twenty miles an hour. Is this freedom for the line of cars following you?

This matter of responsibility seems particularly important to me right now because the very substance of what we call the democratic way of life is based on the faith that people can be responsible; that they can be self-starters; that they will respond; that they will have growing capacity for wise decision making; and that in feeling the consequences of the way they decide they will become wise enough for democracy to work. This is in essence the learning process. And we are concerned that the learning process not be terminated with the conferral of your diploma today. Our college and our church is built upon this basic faith in the capacity of man for responsible behavior. We talk in terms of stewardship and accountability and abundant living.

Surrender of a Precious Right

There are some reasons for fearing that this faith is being threatened not only by forces exterior to us, but that we are showing some signs of voluntarily surrendering this most precious of all human rights. We are saying, “Tell us what we ought to do.” A young fellow asked me the other day, “Do you think she is the girl for me?” A mother wrote, “My son is thinking of enlisting; persuade him to stay in school.” I heard a young man say, "I want a good-paying job but no responsibility." All of these involve removing from a person his right of choice and his right to the consequences of his choosing and therefore his capacity for developing responsibility, maturity, manhood, and womanhood. The responsibility is shifted to others. "You told me to stay in school. I failed. It's your fault." "You said she was the girl. Now look at her. It's your fault."

And sometimes we transfer our responsibility to the Lord. "The Lord didn't intend that I should go to Graceland because the way never opened up." People die of cancer, and we say, "That's not our responsibility; the Lord had willed to take her." A lot of boys die in war. Shall we tackle the roots of war, or is it the Lord's will that they be taken? Do we assume responsibility for fast driving, errors in judgment, reckless behavior? Or do we say it was the Lord's will that they be taken? To transfer our decision making and responsibility for action to Deity is irreligious and un-Christian. Jesus the Christ makes it most clear that the responsibility is upon us because of what he wishes us to be.

The Responsible Person

I am saying that the responsible person wants the freedom to choose. He does it with his eyes open. He honestly, without whining or gloating, accepts the consequences in pain or pleasure, income or expense, success or failure; and in this process is forged the essence of what we call the democratic and the Christian way of life.

Class of 1953: You are called to be responsible men and women. Your churches, your nations, your families need you to be alive to the environment in which you live, to respond voluntarily to the requirements of that environment, to respond out of a code of behavior which has loyalties firmly rooted in your own group and enough strength to go beyond your group, community, nation, and time—loyalties, appreciations, dedications to an expanding area of interest and participation. And your society needs you to say, "To the best of my ability I shall decide what to do, and God being my helper I shall stand straight and strong under the consequences." May you have life enough in you to respond to the exciting and demanding circumstances into which you are moving. Your chosen way of life may mean pain and labor and hardship, but most certainly and gloriously it will mean integrity and honor and satisfactions that endure. This is your business!

We're On the Air

YES, WE ARE ON THE AIR in approximately twenty locations in the United States, and on the Armed Forces network in Europe! The accompanying map shows the location of the stations currently carrying a weekly broadcast of church radio programs, and each week the Herald publishes a listing of the stations, their power, frequency, call letters, and time of our broadcast. Do you have a broadcast in your area? If so, are you listening?

The church is supplying these recorded programs free of cost to any branch or district which will see that they are placed on a local station. Many more than twenty branches and districts should be taking advantage of this opportunity to get our church name and church message before the public in a favorable way. Radio will reach many people whom you could never persuade to attend services; it is a builder of good will. Properly used and followed up, it can lead to cottage meetings, conversions, and baptisms.

Why not put your town on our radio map by arranging for a series of broadcasts on your radio station? The Radio Department will supply the tape recordings; you supply the radio station time. The Radio Department pays postage on the tapes to you or your radio station; you pay the return postage back to Independence. Each quarter-hour program is timed accurately to run fourteen and a half minutes. Musical and technical standards are high. Each program gives credit to the General Church, and on each program there is also space at the close for a brief local announcement to be read over suitable organ background. The format of each program includes opening and closing announcements, call to worship, Scripture reading, suitable hymns by a radio choir, sermon, and prayer.

Two types of sermons are available—doctrinal and nondoctrinal. The doctrinal are designed to be run consecutively in three series of thirteen programs each. The nondoctrinal may be used singly or in series; each program is complete and independent in itself. Programs are recorded on magnetic tape to be played at a speed of seven and one-half inches a second. Each tape contains two quarter-hour programs.

If you would like further information or help in radio problems, write the Radio Department, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The Book of Mormon Points the Way to Zion

Part II—Scripture Study

By Roy Weldon

Know God's Word

I shall start this article about the first ingredient in the formula for developing spiritual fitness with a broadside at our greatest sin—ignoring the word of God (Bible, Doctrine and Covenants, and Book of Mormon). Sin may be defined as that which prevents us from attaining our highest possibilities. We say the use of liquor and tobacco is sin, because they lessen our abilities to do our best work.

The failure of both membership and priesthood to live by the word of God daily constitutes the greatest sin of our church. I am firmly convinced that the most formidable obstruction blocking the highway to Zion is lack of obedience to scriptural law, and I have some strong reasons for my convictions.

Nutrition

To be physically fit we must have food. The same is true of the inner man. "It is written, that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."—Luke 4: 4.

The Scriptures are replete with evidence that the word of God is the food that feeds the soul of man. The first Psalm is a good illustration.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.—Psalm 1: 1, 3.

The man who delights in the law of the Lord and meditates in it day and night shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water. The tallest trees in the world are literally planted by a river. Along the banks of the Eel River in northern California grow the mightiest and oldest living things. One tree is three hundred and sixty-four feet high. Others are close to one hundred feet in circumference. Some of them were there when Moses led the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. What is their secret? They grow in groups, interlocking their mighty roots in fertile soil "by the rivers of water." A man who "delights in the law of the Lord" and meditates in it "day and night" becomes like these trees which draw closer to the gates of eternal or continuous life than any other living thing.

Nephi invites us to "Feast upon the words of Christ" (II Nephi 14: 4, 5, 9).

Mosiah warned his sons that were it not for the Sacred Records, the Nephites would have dwindled in unbelief like the Lamanites (Mosiah 1: 7, 8). "Dwindle" is the right word. If we try going without food, we'll see how quickly our bodies start dwindling. Amos (8: 11-13) prophesies a famine not of bread but of hearing the word of the Lord and because of it the "fair virgins and the young men shall faint."

It is estimated we are losing 75 per cent of our church young people. Are we fulfilling the prophecy of Amos? Do our young people faint (pass out of the church picture) for lack of hearing the word of the Lord at family altars, in preaching ministry, and in the gifts of God?

Peter says that all flesh is as grass and the flower of the field which withers and passes away, but the word of the Lord endures forever (I Peter 1: 24, 25). To the extent that we eat the bread of God's word we become enduring.

What has happened to our reason and logic? We would never think of arising in the morning and continuing until the next day without eating two or three meals, yet some of us go for days or even months and years without a spiritual meal for our soul which is eternal. It almost seems that the law of nutrition alone should be sufficient to convince us, but there are eleven other laws involved in this question of Scripture study.

Self-preservation

In the first twelve verses of the fourth chapter of Luke is the account of Satan's attempt to destroy Christ. For every thrust that Satan made, Jesus put up the shield, "It is written."

And the Devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

And Jesus answered him, saying, it is written, that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.—Luke 4: 3, 4.

If it were wise for the Son of God to be acquainted with the Scriptures in order to defend himself, how can we expect to defend ourselves and survive the attacks of the adversary without scriptural armor?

In the vision of Lehi the only ones who survived and were able to reach the tree of life were those who clung to the rod of iron.

Laman and Lemuel questioned Nephi about the rod of iron:

And they said unto me, What meaneth the rod of iron which our Father saw, that led to the tree?

And I said unto them, that it was the Word of God; and whoso would hearken unto the word of God, and would hold fast unto it, they would never perish; neither could the temptations and the fiery darts of the adversary overpower them unto blindness, to lead them away to destruction.—I Nephi 4: 38-40.

Statistics underwrite self-preservation for those who become acquainted with the Scriptures. Less than 1 per cent of juvenile delinquents have had Sunday school instruction. Proverbs 4: 13 says, "Take fast hold of instruction; let her not go; keep her; for she is thy life."

Jesus (Matthew 24) tells us that in the last days there will be great deceptions. Who shall escape these deceptions? "And whoso treasureth up my words, shall not be deceived."—Matthew 24: 39, Inspired Version.

I close the evidence on self-preservation with a terse statement from modern revelation.

And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7.

Continuity

"How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people!"—Lamentations 1: 1. Isaiah tells us, "in righteousness there is continuance" (Isaiah 64: 5).

Radios, watches, autos, and television will not work unless put together right. Instruction books are provided on how to set up these mechanical objects. The kingdom of God won't work for us either unless we follow the kingdom's instruction book (the Scriptures).

In the well-known parable of the houses we are told that the house built on the sand discontinued, and the one built on the rock or word of God continued (Matthew 7: 34, 35).

Learning

There are two ways to learn. By study or by trial and experience. If we don't profit from the sad experiences of others, then we will have to learn from our own sufferings.

And my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2d.

The closing words of Mormon are significant.

Behold, I speak unto you as though I spake from the dead; for I know that ye shall have my words. Condemn me not because of mine imperfection; neither my father, because of his imperfection; neither them who have written before him, but rather give thanks unto God that he hath made manifest unto you our imperfections, that ye may learn to be more wise than we have been.—Mormon 4: 96, 97.

How can we profit from the imperfections of the Nephites and learn to be more wise than they have been if we don't study the Book of Mormon?

Joseph Smith voices the same sentiments as Mormon. "Why will not man learn wisdom by precept at this late age of the world, when we have such a cloud of witnesses and examples before us, and not be obliged to learn by sad experience everything we know."—Church History, Volume 2, page 368.

Animals cannot read books and profit from the recorded experiences of others. They learn only by their own experience.

Several years ago a friend of mine in Oakland, California, brought his collie dog out to the ranch for me to keep until he and his family returned from a lengthy trip. The next morning after this beautiful, intelligent dog arrived, I started the motor of my car in preparation to go to one of my bee yards in the hills. The dog immediately got into the car. It was very evident that he was used to riding in an automobile.

I proceeded several miles and then stopped my car in the midst of about fifty big hives of bees. I had no way to tell this city-bred dog what was inside those rows of white boxes and that the inhabitants had torpedoes in their tails. I opened the door and wondered what would happen. I did not have long to wait. When the collie heard the hum inside the hives he sniffed curiously at the entrance and pawed with his foot a couple of times in a friendly gesture. This set off the bee emergency alarm. The police bees on the entrance rose to the attack. Then the reserves rushed into the fray. The collie was getting hit by torpedoes from all sides. He started rolling on the ground, bumping into other hives. In a matter of seconds I could scarcely see the dog for dust and the clouds of bees.

Then, probably by instinct, the collie raced out of the bee yard and down the canyon where he leaped into the creek, submerging himself in mud and water until he got rid of his tormentors. A few days later the collie was with me when I parked the car in the midst of another of my bee yards. I opened the car door as before, wondering what would happen this time. He took one look at the rows of white boxes and shot out of the car with what seemed almost to be the speed of lightning. At a safe distance he stood and waited for me. He had learned his lesson—the only way an animal can learn—by his own sad experience.

The collie had only one alternative; we have two. We can learn from the Scriptures God has so marvelously preserved for us, or we can go through life like dumb animals learning from bitter experiences with the swarms of sins which lie in wait for us, every one of which has a sharp sting in its tail. Well does the old proverb say, "Experience keeps a dear teacher, but fools will learn in no other."

Profession

All professions have textbooks. Surgeons, musicians, engineers, astronomers, lawyers, and professors of all kinds must master the texts of their professions before they receive degrees, or diplomas, or authority to function in society. Ministers for Jesus Christ and the professional kingdom builders are no exception to this rule. God has provided three textbooks for us. We can scarcely expect God to authorize (grant the power and spirit and gifts of our calling) and endow us with the Holy Ghost until we have at least to some degree mastered the textbooks he has provided for us.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—II Timothy 2: 15.

Inescapably and irrevocably the kingdom of God must be built on the textbooks of the kingdom rather than the textbooks of sociology, psychology, or other "ologies." At best the textbooks of all other professions can be only secondary and complimentary. The prophets have clearly recognized the inherent tendency of man to substitute the textbooks and wisdom of the world for the textbooks of the kingdom and the wisdom of heaven.

O that cunning plan of the evil one! O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned, they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves; wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness, and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish. But to be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God.—II Nephi 6: 57-61.

We close our consideration of our professions with the Lord's instructions to Joshua:

Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee; turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success.—Joshua 1: 7, 8.

Association

"For the Word of God is quick, and powerful."—Hebrews 4: 12.

The sacred books will do something for us and to us that no other books can do. The words of the Lord possess life. They will quicken us. Also, there is the principle of association which I believe can be best introduced by way of a graphic experience of a progenitor.

Grandfather was in a major battle during the Civil War. The army of the North had been defeated and was in headlong retreat. Many soldiers had even thrown away some of their equipment. Their general was absent, but he had heard the noise of the battle. Grandfather vividly describes his approach. The great general on his white horse covered with lather raced behind the lines of retreating men, calling upon them to turn around and fight, for "we will tent in our old campground tonight." The courage, determination, and spirit of that general electrified the retreating men. They turned around and fought. The opposing soldiers were not expecting such a sudden reversal of attitude. They were taken by surprise and were themselves defeated. The men of the North did camp in their old campground that night. By the law of association the courage and spirit of a great general transformed his army.

In the sacred books are the testimonies and exhortations of the greatest generals of the armies of the Lord. By the principle of association we can read their words and have transferred to us some of the spirit that moved them which will turn our defeats into victories. This power of association is clearly evident in the Scriptures.

Wherefore, we search the prophets; and we have many revelations, and the spirit of prophecy, and having all these witnesses, we obtain a hope, and our faith becometh unshaken, inasmuch that we truly can command in the name of Jesus, and the very trees obey us, or the mountains, or the waves of the sea.—Jacob 3: 7.

Lehi sent his sons back to Jerusalem for the brass plates. After his sons returned safely with the records, Lehi searched them. By association Lehi caught the same spirit that moved the prophets whose words he read, and he himself prophesied:

And after they had given thanks unto the God of Israel, my father Lehi took the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, and he did search them from the beginning. . . . And now when my father saw all these things he was filled with the Spirit, and began to prophesy concerning his seed; that these plates of brass should go forth unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, who were of his seed.—I Nephi 1: 158, 169.

Precedent

All sciences used in the professions are based on precedent or that which has been demonstrated and proved by time and usage.

On the subject of Scripture study, Jesus is our supreme precedent and example. When twelve years old he was so thoroughly versed in the Scriptures he was able to confound the lawyers and wise men at the temple. Scripture study seems always to be first among the four factors for developing "spirituality." The other factors, prayer and fasting and actual ministry, arrive on the scene or at least are not mentioned in connection with the life of Jesus until long after this experience in the temple. The formula given in Alma 12: 4-7 puts Scripture study first, just as faith is put first among the gospel principles.

The Restoration Movement started with Scripture study. Joseph Smith was reading his Bible when he came to James 1: 5, the verse so well known to all Reorganized Latter Day Saints: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally." Joseph Smith acted upon this, thus utilizing prayer—the second element in the Book of Mormon formula for coming into the presence of God.

Let us not deceive ourselves. The Restoration Movement was launched as a result of Scripture study. It shall scarcely arrive at its glorious destination without an abundance of the same.

Initiative

"There is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee."—Isaiah 64: 7.

"Take fast hold of instruction; let her not go."—Proverbs 4: 13.

Agency and freedom are priceless gifts from heaven, but they place the necessity of initiative on man if he is to become acquainted with the kingdom of God.

No one is going to force us to read the Scriptures. Jesus may stand at our door and knock, but he will never break the door in if we refuse to open.

"Draw near unto me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16b-e.

Since this is true, the reverse is true also; if we don't move on our own initiative and seek, we will never find. If we don't ask, we will never receive. If we don't knock, the door will never be opened.

Gravitation

The law of gravitation follows naturally. Time is a stream; like a river it is ever carrying us on. There is the proverbial story of the man in a rowboat floating down the river. He was passing the wharves of a town, but he could not make up his mind whether or not to land. His indecision was his decision. Time and the law of gravitation soon carried him past the town. Those of us who cannot make up our minds to get down to business about Scripture study, or who do not have the initiative to act upon our opportunities, will one day be out of the kingdom picture.

Some years ago my wife engaged a violin teacher to come once a week and give lessons to one of our sons. He was supposed to practice his lesson at least an hour each afternoon. It was necessary for his mother to furnish the initiative and see that he practiced his lesson each day. This continued for several months, and then the boy began to get interested. He developed his own momentum. He practiced more than was required. Instead of his mother furnishing the push to get him going, she had to send him upstairs when he disturbed the peace by sawing on his violin at the evening family circle.

It is sometimes necessary to take ourselves by the nape of the neck and study the Scriptures until we commence to gain an appreciation and love for the textbooks of God.

Consecration

We do not need to multiply words on the principle of consecration. The facts are too clear cut to need any more than a concise statement.

When we entered the waters of baptism, we covenanted with the Lord to keep all of his commandments. Each Communion day we renew this promise to keep all of his commandments. The first and great commandment is that we shall love and serve the Lord our God with all our might and all our mind and all our strength. There are twenty-four hours each day. There are sixty minutes in each hour or fourteen hundred and forty minutes in each day. Some of us say we do not have fifteen minutes to spend each day in Scripture study.

Our gospel covenant is comparable to our marriage covenant. Let us value a minute as being worth a penny, which is less than the minimum wage set by Congress (seventy-five cents an hour). There are fourteen hundred and forty minutes in a day ($14.40 in pennies). What would your wife think if after earning fourteen dollars and forty cents a day, you would say you cannot afford to allow her fifteen cents a day? That is what we do with God who has given us all things. We profess to love him and dedicate our lives to his service; yet we cannot find fifteen minutes a day to study his textbooks that our own souls might be saved, and that we might be prepared to save other people's souls. Someday the principle of compensation will overtake us. If we have taken no time to study about the celestial kingdom in this world, too late we will discover that the celestial kingdom has no time for us in the next world.

I have referred to fifteen minutes a day because of my own experience. I find that in fifteen minutes I can read sufficient Scripture to meditate upon for the rest of the day. Fifteen minutes a day faithfully adhered to will do wonders.

In a matter of months you can go through one of our sacred Books. Time is a problem. I have no hesitation in saying that time is my greatest problem. The pressure of church, business, family, civic, and other responsibilities is such that it seems at times impossible to maintain the pace and do everything one ought to do. I found time to study by carrying my Scriptures with me in my truck or sales car. For years I took my book into the restaurant with me to study while I ate my noon meal. This gave me all afternoon to meditate upon what I had read. Others study in the early morning with excellent results. Regardless of the pressure of other things we had better make room in our daily lives for a few priceless minutes to be spent in getting better acquainted with God and his kingdom. If we must default on something let it be some of our secondary obligations. There is too much at stake to default on God and the textbooks of his kingdom.

Adaptation

As a boy I was greatly impressed by the story of some wild geese which stayed up in the Arctic too late in the fall before returning south. They were caught in the ice of a lake by the sudden dropping of temperatures. Mastodons, dinosaurs, and other prehistoric mammals are extinct because they did not possess the ability to adapt themselves to changes (swamps lifted to higher elevations, and so on). The world's swamps of sin and selfishness are due to be elevated and changed by the coming of Christ.

Democracy vs. Communism

[Editorial Note: This article is reprinted from Are You an American?—Great Americans Speak, by Frederick C. Packard, Jr., Associate Professor of Public Speaking, Harvard University. The book is published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, New York. It is reprinted here by special permission of the copyright owners.]

MANY well-meaning, kindly but ill-informed Americans are of the opinion that Communism is a political theory—the doctrine of a political party, like the Democrats or the Republicans—striving like those parties for recognition in an ethical, democratic manner. Others believe, vaguely, that Communism is an economic theory—a share-the-wealth scheme on a big scale. Yet other decent Americans have never given the matter even a moment's thought, but, transferring their own decent feelings to others, believe that people should not be persecuted for their opinions. Unhappily, none of these attitudes or ideas is correct.

Communism is a perverted religion—a total faith which demands complete obedience on the part of its faithful, and blind belief in the wisdom and good intentions of Communism's high priests, or commissars. A Communist surrenders to his leaders, not only his rights to freedom of thought and possession of property, but his integrity, his honor, his body and his soul. All are at the disposition of the leaders of the Communist Party, and the Communist regards himself only as a tool or instrument whereby the plans of that Party may be furthered.

COMMUNISM IS A RELIGION, and the god it worships is as evil a god as was ever Baal or Moloch. For the Communist rejects what he calls "bourgeois morality" (by which he means the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount), and believes that whatever will work to do him material good is moral and proper. He believes that no man is responsible to any power higher than the State, and that man's responsibility ceases whenever he ceases to breathe. Hence, any act which will improve his own condition during life is justified and may be committed without fear. There is only one limit to his immorality, as we understand it. The Communist is ever and always, sleeping and waking, the creature of the State. Whenever, in the interest of the State, the Communists' own personal desires, ambitions—even his life itself—require to be sacrificed, he must humbly bow down and accept the decisions of his masters, the leaders of the Communist Party.

There is nothing new about Communism as it is practiced in many countries today. It is as old as the pyramids; for the men who hauled great stones to raise the pyramids of ancient Egypt were also the abject slaves of a State and bound in obedience to Pharaoh and his brand of commissars. It is as old as tyranny everywhere. In Russia, from where the Communist version of slavery extends and expands, the pattern of a slave-State was long established. As late as the spring of 1861, millions of Russian serfs were at the absolute disposal of their noble masters. By decree of the Tsar, Alexander II, these peasant slaves were given land and freedom, but the Russian Communists have managed in a few years to restore the old pattern of slavery in an even more horrible form. Communism has provided only a change of masters for the Russian people. And everywhere Communism is preached, you will find its most ardent supporters are twisted souls who feel that they stand to profit personally by any violent overturn.

A Communist does not think or reason; he does what he is told. It is foolish to argue with a Communist-minded person, but he may be affected by showing him in opposition to his own immoral philosophy a better faith in which he can absorb himself. Against his tortuous and murky ideology, set a simple statement of the principles of American democracy. Against the bloody record of what Communism in practice has done to the peoples who have been subjugated by it, set the glorious example of American achievement.

Seventy years before Karl Marx, the father of modern Communism, began his work, American tongues and pens had proclaimed a system which by its very existence refuted all his doctrines. The words of great Americans, spoken and written on [for] great occasions, express this basic American doctrine. The Declaration of Independence; the Constitution of the United States; the burning speech of Patrick Henry in 1775 when our fathers seemed to flinch before the prospect of freedom; the wisdom of Alexander Hamilton, George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, through whose efforts the American dream of freedom was made real; Abraham Lincoln's rededication of the nation to its ideal on the death-winnowed field of Gettysburg; the words of Woodrow Wilson and of the two Roosevelts in moments of national peril—in these you will find a political faith for Americans which honors and upholds the laws of God and abhors the jungle-law which is Communism.

Bargains

By Edgar Pillsbury

"How much am I bid for this shiny new dollar?" shouted the old-time medicine man as he attempted to draw a crowd about him. Slowly the spectators, one by one, filtered over to his stand. "Come! Come! How much am I bid? A nickel? A dime? How much?" The audience, silent and suspicious, stood by. But there came no reply. Then a youthful voice piped, "Five cents." "All right, my boy, the dollar is yours. Just hand up the five pennies." "Oh," returned the lad, "take the nickel out of the dollar and give me ninety-five cents change."

Most people are in search of such bargains. But the greatest things of life are not to be purchased for a small sum. If they were, we wouldn't properly appreciate and value them. Zion, for instance, is the greatest goal which the human race can strive for. But it can't be secured in a bargain basement. In order to obtain it, we must put forth every effort and prove ourselves worthy to receive it.

Money, talent, knowledge, and time must be freely given to the cause. We must heed the admonitions of God which are dispersed throughout the Three Standard Books of the church. And we must zealously attempt to unfold the gospel to our associates. With such efforts we can redeem Zion and enjoy its blessings. Let us doff the garments of inactivity and don the robes of active service, realizing that Zion must be purchased, not for trifles but for the greatest devotion which we possess.

Books

Arranging Church Flowers, by Ina Jones, Banks Upshaw and Company, Dallas, Texas, $2.00. This is a book of one hundred pages of helpful and practical advice on choosing the flower chairman or committee, kinds of flowers, placement of flowers, containers, color and arrangement of flowers for special occasions, and planned church gardens. It is practical enough for use in all churches; the author considers simple arrangements for small churches and the more elaborate arrangements for larger churches.

There are suggestions and rules governing flower arrangements for every occasion. The reader of this book should read carefully, discard, and adapt as needs require. There are enough "do's" and "don't's" to make it very helpful. The chapter on flower placement shows the author has a correct sense of the worshipful spirit of the service and the use of flowers to invite that spirit rather than to divert it with flowers placed and arranged conspicuously and inartistically.

PEARL GARDNER

Special Programs for the Sunday School, Charlotte Arnold, Standard Publishing Company, $2.50.

Programs! "What shall we plan for a program?"

Mrs. Arnold has helped to answer that question in her book which is filled with suggestions for many occasions. She has taken a creative approach to program planning and is aware of the needs of a total congregation. There are ideas for "Shut-in's Day," "New Member Day," "Hymn Sunday," and many more.

Program ideas—even the best ones—are useful only when they are considered as a guide. Each branch is different in its needs from all other groups. A program on hymns becomes more vital when we learn the stories of some of our own Latter Day Saint hymns and use them along with other great hymns of all times. A program for shut-ins comes alive when someone can tell of an actual experience in visiting one of the shut-in's in the branch or neighborhood.

There are group and individual benefits from well-planned programs. Our foremost caution is that a program should never become an end in itself but a means to an end. Teaching and learning go on in a church school program as well as in class. If a child memorizes a poem or reads a Scripture passage he does not understand, the effort is wasted. But if he helps plan a program with his class and teacher, thinks through the purpose of the program, and then looks for materials to best show and tell that purpose, he learns.

How do people become good program planners? They start in the early years of the primary department to help plan a class program. Through the years, they gain a growing experience in program-planning. They begin to collect successful ideas, and maybe a scrapbook appears along the way.

Special Programs for the Sunday School is an inspiration. We can profit much by taking time to read the book carefully and then adapting some of the fine ideas which it presents to our branch needs.

WANA BLACK MCDOLE

Report From Christian Europe, by Stewart Winfield Herman, Friendly Press, $2.50.

Dr. Herman is qualified for his report from Christian Europe by reason of some seventeen years of residence, which includes eight years before Pearl Harbor, chiefly spent in Berlin. At the termination of the war, he immediately headquartered at Geneva, Switzerland, where he initiated the program for relief and restoration which was sponsored by the World Council of Churches. He writes now out of residence spent in France, England, Germany, and Switzerland, as well as from personal contacts made throughout the balance of Europe.

This book affirms that Europe, the cradle of Christian culture, has much more yet to give to Christian thinking. It points out that in spite of some five thousand Continental church buildings badly damaged or destroyed, Christian folk worked with determination to rebuild them, and he sees in this physical rehabilitation a symbol of the upward surge of spiritual rejuvenation.

Religious conviction and fervor are the keys to ultimate peace, and must find their expression in a church which is not static. The call to Europe today is adventure and faith, and to this the European church member is responding.

This book reads well; it is factual and interesting. One should bear in mind that it is written by a Lutheran minister, who evidently is not too happy with the role played by the churches in the lives of the peoples and nations of Europe. He calls for a fanning of lives and convictions into large fires of repentance, otherwise Europe holds no divine guarantee that it will survive this century in its present form.

This book can be commended to those who seek an overview of Christian Europe as it is today. I doubt very much that it would have interest of sufficient value to warrant its purchase by very many of our people.

As a book of ready reference and of the opinion of one who has been on the ground for almost two decades it has value and is worth while.

D. BLAIR JENSEN

Guiding Workers in Christian Education, by Frank M. McKibben, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, Nashville, 1953, 160 pages, $1.75.

Here is a practical, nontechnical guidebook for all Christian leaders and teachers who help to train and develop other church school workers. Dr. McKibben maintains that better-trained leaders and teachers are the key to more effective religious education. His excellent little textbook in supervision reflects desire to give real help in meeting the crying need for leadership training.

In the following quotation we, too, find incentive to qualify in fields of Christian leadership:

The great need of the present moment is for the improvement of the Christian nurture provided for all ages in the church. The church school has been and still is the greatest single recruiting and evangelizing force in the church. Seven out of ten of the new members entering the church come through the church school. Often, however, there is greater zeal to increase the enrollment and attendance than to improve the quality of the nurture provided for those who attend.

Guiding Workers in Christian Education provides tested, concrete ways for undertaking and successfully carrying on a program of supervision in church schools. It shows how public school methods may be adapted for the use of church school education and how the progress of pupils can be measured through objective tests of scriptural knowledge, religious beliefs, and ethical standards. It makes suggestions for brightening classrooms, instilling habits of punctuality and regularity of attendance, using audio-visuals, evaluating lesson materials, holding teacher-training classes, and raising the level of church school instruction.

Chapter headings of this manual are "Christian Education Can Be Improved," "Who Will Guide Improvement," "Conditions Essential to Effective Education," "Developing Common Understandings," "Guidance Through Group Activity," "Guiding Individual Workers," "Developing Competent Creative Workers," and "How Effective Is Christian Education?"

A well-selected bibliography is also included. It is our opinion that pastors, church school directors, and departmental leaders will find the many suggestions helpful both in their own preparation and in carrying forward for others a better program of supervision and improvement in religious education.

JOHN R. DARLING

Question Time

Question:

After reading the number of animals that were in the ark and the measurements of the ark given in the Bible, a man said: "It is impossible to put all those animals in so small a space and carry enough feed for them." How can this be explained?

Montana

MRS. S. W.

Answer:

Your question is not a new one, for it has troubled men for many ages. The problem of it comes from man's desire to explain the workings of God in the limited terms of man's understanding of the nature of the earth. By the same token that man is unable to understand "eternity" and "infinity," for they are out of the realm of man's everyday experience, so it is difficult, sometimes, to understand God's great spiritual laws.

Men have been unable to explain the feeding of the multitude of five thousand people with so few loaves and fishes by mere logic or reasoning.

First, Noah was commanded to take of every kind of animal. That does not break down to each animal within the specie. In this manner, we find the number of animals more limited than at first thought.

Second, the size of the boat is not small when we consider it a boat 450 feet long, 75 feet high, and 45 feet wide. That is a lot of cubic footage.

Third, we must understand that the scourge of the flood was not simply a flooding by rain water. The very cosmos was overturned and its laws were brought into play in a way man had never before or since seen. We can understand this a little when we realize that the Hebrew word used for "firmament" denotes something beaten out, usually of metal. This firmament separated the heavenly waters from the earthly waters—the writer's way of explaining the holding back of the great heavenly powers. Now we understand what the writer in Genesis means when he says, "and the windows of heaven were opened, and the rain came upon the earth forty days and forty nights." This upset cosmos was not what man understands to be "normal" and in this condition "normal" laws did not prevail.

The mystery of the hibernation of the bear, the food storage of the camel, and other characteristics of animals, very easily might have been brought into play for the conservation of both space and food.

Fourth, the longevity of Noah comes under scrutiny here. Noah is supposed to have lived 950 years. In such a span of time, one year upon the waters was a very small part of that great span (assuming that time was computed then as it is now. On the other hand, if Noah's 950 years of life was comparable to our seventy years as computed today, again the time upon the waters becomes rather short.

So, you see, the matter of God's powers, man's understanding, heavenly (spiritual) law, and natural law all comes into play to bring this into the realm of both possibility and probability.

Question:

Since Christ was baptized to fulfill all righteousness, was he also ordained to the priesthood? If so, when is it thought he was ordained, or was he born with it? Oklahoma

G. I. P.

Answer:

We hold it a principle of truth that Christ in coming to earth assumed human nature, accepting the requirements and conditions attaching to mankind. He was truly God, and whatever may have been his powers inherent in his Divine Spirit, we must still remember that on earth he was also man, holding himself bound to live within the limitations of man. The powers of his Divinity were held in abeyance except in so far as they were operable through the flesh. He could have called twelve legions of angels to help him fight his battle in the garden, but he did not. He had the power of which he was taunted when on the cross to come down and save himself, but it was unused. In saying, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's," he not only acknowledged the right of temporal dominion given to Nebuchadnezzar and which was then held in succession by Caesar, but he affirmed his own subserviency to that authority. An enthusiastic if unwise following offered to make him king, but he chose to remain a humble subject of the empire. In being baptized of John he acknowledged the priesthood which had succeeded from Aaron, and put himself subject to it. He came to fulfill the law.

When the law said, "No man taketh this honor [of the high priesthood] unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron," it imposed upon Jesus, who had assumed human manhood, the same need for being subject thereto as other men. Having become submissive to the law of baptism, consistency would require him to be submissive to the law of the priesthood also. The Hebrew letter, though without giving any historical reference to his ordination, most strongly assumes it. Note the references concerning him:

"Called of God, a high priest, after the order of Melchisedec." "Jesus, made an high priest for ever." "After the similitude of Melchisedec there arises another high priest, who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." Christ as man was "made" a high priest, being "consecrated for evermore." In his divine nature he was and is the source of all priesthood authority and power; but as a man on earth he was subject to the law as it applied to man, and that of his own will.

There is no historical statement giving the time, place, or method of Christ's receiving the high priesthood, but in the light of this it can be safely assumed that priesthood was conferred upon him in some specific way. He was "made" a high priest. It may have been bestowed by the Holy Ghost at his baptism, as it was bestowed upon Adam at his baptism (Genesis 6: 68, 69, I.V.). There was no man to ordain him since the high priesthood was not had among the Jews; or it may have come by angel hands as the Aaronic priesthood was given to Joseph Smith by John the Baptist; or by angel authorization and command as with the conferring of the high priesthood upon Joseph Smith by Peter, James, and John (D. and C. 26: 3). It could have been conferred upon him during the forty days he was "with God." Anyway, it was immediately after his baptism and the forty days of communion with God that Jesus entered upon his ministry.

When Prayer Healed

By Jessie Morant

IN THE EARLY DAYS in western Nebraska, tame flowers did not appear overnight. In the spring even wild flowers seemed to keep us waiting, until all at once they nodded their heads from every direction as if they had stolen upon us in the night.

Their dainty blues and yellows satisfied some inward longing, and each different flower seemed to convey a message all its own.

One morning, when galloping over the prairies, I came upon a barrel cactus in bloom. Only those who have seen the cactus as it sets itself defiantly in the waving grasses of the Western plains can appreciate the delicacy of its coloring.

Dismounting to admire the blossom more closely I determined to take it with me. With my bare hands and the edge of the bridle rein I quickly wrested it from its sandy bed.

As I removed it some of the sprines lodged in my finger. Memories of that beautiful morning in the sand hills and the yellow cactus blossom were to remain with me for many years to come.

In a few days my hand was badly swollen and a wound in my finger would not heal. Every possible known remedy was resorted to, each in turn failing to relieve the condition. My blood stream became affected and sores began to appear over my right arm.

PHYSICIANS WERE not called frequently in those days. Even in childbirth the nearest neighbor acted as midwife. In death many times the only ones present were the members of the immediate family and the nearest neighbors. We grew accustomed to coming into life and going out again without much help.

Besides, families had to be frugal. The cost of calling a doctor to homes fifteen miles in the country amounted to nearly as much as was being saved to "prove up" on the family homestead, and doctors did not hanker for trips over the long winding trails through the hills at their own expense.

Driving to town in a lumber wagon—many times the only means of conveyance—took at least four hours. In the summer it meant "keeping the team from the field all day," and at all times facing whatever the elements had in store. Putting in a crop was almost a grievous task (ninety-day field corn came as a much later development).

One of the first accomplishments of the early day plainsman was to own a "light rig" for getting over the prairies. This saved time and horseflesh. New rigs were a family pride as well as a real luxury. They came in fashionable sizes and patterns, according to the purse of the purchaser. Team, harness, and vehicle were cared for in the most exacting manner and were the main topics at all family and neighborhood gatherings.

DURING THE TIME I was having trouble with my arm, Grandmother was living with us. Because of advancing years she was disposing of her effects on her farm in Iowa. Father made arrangements for a carload of her horses and machinery to be brought to Nebraska.

In the car were a road cart and mare. It was a happy event in the family when the car was finally unloaded and we could see Billy and Jim, Old Roudy and Belle coming up the road to our sod house. The problem of our "light rig" was settled.

Grandfather had died shortly following the Civil War, leaving Grandmother the farm. Here she had continued to live and had raised all of the horses herself.

Belle was fleet of foot. With her single harness hitched to the road cart that came with her she would cover the fifteen-mile trip to town in an hour and a half. She also possessed a rare toughness that seemed to prevent her from showing weariness. When we reached town Belle was always unhitched and watered, given good feed, and permitted to rest before starting home. Great pride was taken in keeping a road horse fit; it was never used for any other kind of work.

Father worked at the flour mill part of the time, and it was a great treat to eat with him while letting Belle rest.

Many times in caring for her and in doing other chores, when my hand and arm were almost healed, some slight injury would start the trouble all over again.

THE FAMILY finally became discouraged at the persistence of my trouble and decided to call on a physician. I went often for examinations, and various prescriptions were tried, all failing in turn as had the home remedies. At the end of the year, the trouble was as deep seated as ever with no sign of improvement.

Our physician finally advised that the condition could not be permitted to run any longer. I shall never forget that day in his office. The late afternoon sun was shedding its rays upon us through the low windows, and the doctor was looking very grave. I sat at the end of the long table in the waiting room with the doctor facing me. After a moment's hesitation he said quietly, "There is only one thing I can see to do, and that is to remove the arm," and he indicated with his finger a line just below my shoulder.

His decision came as a real shock. Mother was a woman of courage, resolute and brave, but there was nothing that could be said to adjust my ten-year-old mind to losing my right arm. When Father learned of the doctor's decision he became very angry.

AT THIS TIME there was a series of letters running in our church paper telling of a number of healings under the ministrations of one of the faithful pioneer missionaries of the church. The missionary was a man of great faith and the letters were coming from his mission field in Michigan.

I had been taught from infancy to have faith in God. Those in my mother's family had been with the Reorganized Church since the early days and were familiar with its teachings. I asked Mother for permission to write the missionary. I knew the letters coming from Michigan were true. I knew also there were no funds in our family to send for the missionary to come to us, and that I could not go to him where he was, but I had faith I could hear from him.

I can see my letter now, written on a sheet of rough tablet paper. In a short while I heard from the missionary. He wrote, "When I received your letter my heart was touched, and I went alone to pray. I cannot tell you for sure, but my impression is that you will be healed."

THAT WAS MY experience in the hills. In just one month from the day I heard the physician say my arm should be removed I stood by the window of our farm home while mother combed my hair. Our decision to wait until we could hear from the missionary had been no secret.

Two neighbors, a lady and her brother, had come over to inquire about my condition.

I looked at my arm. Places where the sores had been were dry and clean, and a tender skin had formed over them.

In surprise I exclaimed, "Mother, my hand is healed." Without so much as changing the stroke of the comb she asked quietly, "Well, didn't you believe?"

To this day I bear deep scars on my hand and arm, mute reminders of my love for the wild flowers and of my Heavenly Father's love for me.

Coincidence?

By Louise Scott Wrigley

JUST THIS MORNING my new neighbor, Ruth, strolled into my kitchen with her fifteen-month-old Heidi cuddled in her arms. We chatted a moment, and Heidi's eyes danced as I offered her a cooky, warm from the oven.

"You remind me of my neighbor in Connecticut," Ruth observed thoughtfully.

"A good neighbor, I hope," I joked, pulling aside the yellow curtains to check on the sandpile crowd.

"Oh, yes, a wonderful neighbor," she smiled, setting Heidi down on her unsteady little legs. "Is this your church letterhead?" She picked up a letter I had just received from Carl Mesle.

"Yes, it is," I replied, pleased to have this opportunity of identifying myself with my church.

"That's odd," she mused. "I'm almost certain your church is the same one Mrs. Wheeler belongs to. Does your church publish a weekly paper?"

"The Saints' Herald," I answered, intrigued by this development. Surely this was coincidence. "Here's the latest one." I took it from the magazine basket and laid it on the kitchen table in front of her.

"This is it, I'm sure," she nodded. "And do you have summer camps—reunions I think they're called—where your people can meet and live together?"

"Yes, we do, Ruth."

"Isn't it strange that I would come all the way from Connecticut and one Reorganized Latter Day Saint neighbor to California and another Reorganized Latter Day Saint neighbor?" Ruth laughed. "You certainly must have a wonderful organization. Are you all as friendly and helpful as you two?"

... Coincidence, do you suppose, that two Latter Day Saint women at opposite ends of the country were trying to be good neighbors, trying to witness in their special way? I don't believe so. I believe that it was a proof of the growth of women all over the church, and their desire to enhance, by helpfulness and good spirits, the communities in which they live; to spread by friendliness and interest what they believe to be the most beautiful message the world has ever known.

My Religion - As New as Tomorrow

By Suzi Vaughan

PRETTY, SUZI, pretty." My small brother was intently watching the whirling magic of the pin wheel he held high on a stick. "Go round," he crowed, and a new breeze continued the "go round" of the wheel. I watched the pretty toy with almost as much delight as Tommy. But a few minutes later the breeze died, and the pin wheel was still. Tommy shook it and swished it through the air. The pin wheel turned a few feeble turns and again was peacefully quiet on the end of the stick. With great disgust and utter disappointment Tommy threw it down and walked away muttering, "boke." Religion would be the same without the driving love of God to blow the beauty of it before our eyes. Many of us would walk away muttering, "boke."

One of my friends once said something about paradise. In surprise I asked, "What do you think it will be like?" She was as confused as I, but her answer came from a deep belief, "It will be beautiful. We'll be with Jesus and have nothing to do but enjoy life."

"Is that what you call paradise?" questioned one of the boys. "I wouldn't look forward to an eternity of harp playing and nothing else."

As we talked what she said made me realize the real difference in our beliefs. Hers is a passive "harp playing" religion, in which she thinks all that is necessary is to believe. Mine is a living, moving, whirling pin wheel of activity, as new as tomorrow yet as lasting as God himself.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED, beliefs have progressed just as science has, but God, in all his dignity, has remained the same. Although we thought about religion differently, it was only because we looked at God differently. I saw him as a friend, who, in some small ways, I could help. She had never thought of him as being like this. Her prayers, I imagine, are words of deepest respect. While mine, although as respectful as hers, are more of a "one friend to another" nature.

She listened to what I had to say, then told me she thought I must be very sure of God's existence. I thought of a time a few months ago

Here Is the Writer . . .

Although this is the first article she has ever written for the "Herald," Suzi Vaughan has been writing since she was thirteen. She was graduated from high school in 1951 and has worked for a year and a half as a children's librarian. At present she is assistant dramatic director of the Zion's League operetta. Some day she hopes to complete the operetta she is now writing. So far, she says, only two one-act plays have come of her efforts. Her hobbies are dramatics, writing, and—just plain enjoying life.

when I would have said I was, but I would have felt insecure in saying it. I suppose all who really think about a divine power at times question His existence. I questioned silently, ashamed to voice my opinion aloud—to anyone, that is, except the power I questioned. I prayed I might be shown, never really believing I would be. Others said they felt the Spirit of God; I felt sure I hadn't. I felt sure also that I wasn't so terribly sinful that God should deny what others had. But I also knew my knowledge was far inferior to God's. I decided to do everything in my power to please him. If he did exist, I would do my best to win his favor. Nothing happened.

What did I expect? I don't know. But I learned my greatest lessons in that period of disappointment. God will not be bargained with. God expects more of us than we think he does—but never more than we are capable of. God is of great intelligence and should never be questioned. God answers a prayer of unselfish love. My first prayer asked in unselfishness was answered.

THE LITTLE BOY who lives in the apartment upstairs from ours was in the basement helping his mother wash clothes. Helping, I say, but hindering is the word. He's almost three. Alice, his mother, was filling the washing machine with water through a small hose. The water was boiling hot, and as she turned away the baby pulled the hose out of the tub and the water rushed out scalding him. Alice picked him up and ran to our apartment, half sobbing. Terry was crying and screaming. Burns covered his back, chest, and arms. I ran to the medicine chest and reached for the consecrated oil my mother asked for. I took a small piece of cotton and moistened the burned places with the oil. Terry continued to scream. Mother was calling the doctor, and I hurried to get Terry ready to go. Then I stopped and, with the screams of the baby ringing in my ears, I prayed as I had never prayed before. I prayed for the baby that he might be relieved of the pain. And as I prayed, I was suddenly aware of the silence. I waited for him to cry again, almost hoping he would. I had wanted proof, and when it came I refused to believe it. Terry didn't cry any more. They took him to the doctor and brought him home. A few nights he was fussy but, though the scars are bad even yet, he seems to feel no pain. I had found the living God I knew existed. I could talk myself out of it, but I want to believe it. I do believe it.

Since the days of "sitting straight in a chair all day Sunday or else," religious concepts have undergone a remarkable change. Religion now is a living, daily experience that centers around a God who listens when a baby cries. God's manifestations of love have convinced me that the only thing dead about religion is the people who mourn its death. Only when something is given up and let die does life leave it. All those who find nothing in a church service—or worse yet, nowhere in the church to serve—have let their religion die. How can anyone look at the beauty of the earth, enjoy the love of his fellow man, and still not see God? Yet even as I ask, I know how easily it can be done.

Some would say weakness of spirit makes a person doubt the existence of God. I really think it is strength. It's much more difficult to admit there is a doubt in your mind, when all around you your family and friends seem to find nothing to doubt, than to go on never thinking, never allowing yourself to think of why you believe what you believe. When you have laid your beliefs out and have proved them to be worthy of the devotion you give, a truer love of God will result, and the strength of your love will be seen in all you do, heard in all you say. Then you will be one of the people others look at in pride and think of with happiness. In this relationship that exists between you and your fellow men you will find a part of the reward God has promised right here on earth.

One woman I know, who gives all of the people she comes in contact with her love and understanding, has brought a better picture of God to me. Her great devotion to the church and God is an inspiring, guiding force in my life. Though I sometimes overlook her influence, it comes so quietly, she has brought a greater understanding of love to me. God's love is just as quiet and as easy to overlook, but with her love before me to remind me of his, I don't forget. I won't permit myself. My religion is young because I am young and it is so much a part of me, but I believe that, even when I am older, my religion will be ever new, ever thrilling, ever wonderful.

The Tower View

By Alice Eastwood

Given at the Cap and Gown Assembly
Graceland College, May, 1953

The door was wide. The cool darkness was inviting, but the outside was warm and sunny and we chose to linger for a while. We hesitated to enter the wide-open door. We were afraid of the climb to the tower, so we stayed. Then we decided to climb, through two years of experience, to the Tower View. We entered the open door. The hall was empty and lonely, and we didn't stay long. We moved on to the friendly staircase, worn with the feet of a half century of Gracelanders. We moved upward with the feeling: "I'm here, finally here, and this is it."

Then we reached the landing and the fountain view. "This is it. There can be no more. It is beautiful. We have reached our zenith. This is Graceland. We will rest. We can go no higher." But we were pushed into the narrower staircase. We met our friends, and we were close and companionable. Friendships overwhelmed us with joy, and we were together.

Then we entered the wide, dark stair—doubts and fears pushed in on us. We felt alone, unsure, afraid. . . . And then the landing—the higher fountain view, more light, more beauty, and more space than we had ever guessed could be.

But soon we were thrust into the narrow, dark passageway to the Tower; darkness and humility pressed in on all sides. We were on the growing edge, pushing into the darkness. . . . Then, in a flash of brilliant sunlight, the Tower View! A blue sky and a wide horizon stretched into space—deep, healthy green and the blue, diamond drops of dew sparkling in the sun. "We are here. This is the Tower View."

As we stood, looking at the beauty around us, other Tower Views became clear. The paradox: the more we learn, the more there is to learn. The more we seem to know, the more we discover we don't know. As we climb one rung in the ladder of learning, two more rungs come to view at the top of the long ladder.

The joy—seek that you may know; know that you may understand. We came, searching, to learn, to find out; and now we have learned. We have learned to seek, and we realize that wisdom tempers all learning—understanding tempers all knowing.

Through the wide-open door we came—seeking, groping, and unsure. Slowly we climbed, with the help of many: our teachers, our staff, our roommates, our friends, and our God. Now at the end of our climb, our Tower View is clear—but it will dim with time. It will catch a golden hue, and will remain forever in our memories, inspiring us with its golden threads, as we climb to higher towers.

Australasian Young People Are Serious in Their Leadership Training Studies

UNDER THE DIRECTION of Elder Alan S. Frater, serving as the Australasian Church School Director, some very excellent study work has been done in that area. In 1950 details were worked out for giving the students credit with the General Department of Religious Education for their directed study efforts.

The 1950 report represented work which had accrued for some time previous to the launching of the extension credit program in Australia. With regularity each year since then, a report has been submitted which bespeaks uninterrupted diligence on the part of these young people. Each Certificate of Progress denotes a greater degree of specialization. This is most commendable. An imposing list of credits and certificates has been issued to them:

- 1950—460 Units of Credit
 - 42 First Certificates of Progress
 - 6 Second Certificates of Progress
 (This represents the work accrued over a period of some time, when the extension of credit was first organized.)
- 1951—212 Units of Credit
 - 20 First Certificates of Progress
 - 1 Second Certificate of Progress
 - 1 Third Certificate of Progress
- 1952—312 Units of Credit
 - 21 First Certificates of Progress
 - 1 Second Certificate of Progress
- 1953—242 Units of Credit
 - 19 First Certificates of Progress
 - 5 Second Certificates of Progress
 - 2 Third Certificates of Progress

I Remember

By Letha H. Chatburn

ATTENDING GRACELAND is one of the goals held up to the young people of the Reorganized Church. I was told from the cradle on that someday I, too, would be a Gracelander. Nothing anyone can say about Graceland compares with the unique environment found there. Graceland is a little college built upon a hill—a beautiful place with a steep path leading up to it. Here there is a bond of friendship, the likeness of which I have never found elsewhere. This includes not only the faculty and students on the campus but also students of former years. Graceland has a very special something which we call the "Graceland Spirit." This, to be fully understood, has to be experienced.

In one sense Graceland is nonsectarian. No religious courses are required. Attendance at church services is voluntary. No religious tests are imposed. Non-Reorganized Latter Day Saints have held places of honor and responsibility. Administrators ask only that they share in furthering the ideals of the school. Faculty members have worked faithfully who do not have Reorganized Latter Day Saint affiliation. Yet, in another sense, it is definitely church-centered. More than 90 per cent of the students are of the church. Administrators today are sensing more than ever that unless Graceland fulfills her mission to the church she has little reason for existence.

Students speak openly of "the church." Yet they try not to draw lines that will shut out nonmembers. The coming of a Hawaiian delegation has broadened the outlook of Gracelanders. Oriental faiths have become better understood because of this. The presence of a member of the Utah church, a Jew, a Christian Scientist, a Roman Catholic, and a scattering of students of Protestant denominations has permitted the Reorganized Latter Day Saints to test their spiritual courtesy.

WHEN I WAS ON THE HILL, one feature of Graceland was the Religion Club. Any interested person could join. It was in one of our Saturday night meetings that I realized there were other branches as unprogressive as some I had attended, and that from many of these came a young people hoping to receive aid at Graceland that would qualify them to be of service in their home congregations.

Each year the college holds "Religious Emphasis Week." During this week General Church officials come to the campus; at various meetings discussions on current problems of the church and on development of skills for church participation are held.

Another distinctive characteristic of Graceland is the interest which faculty members take in the students. Each Gracelander can remember talks with faculty members about things which really mattered. They always seem to have time to help the troubled ones over a rough spot.

Guideposts to Creative Family Worship

SOME OF MY HAPPIEST MEMORIES are of talks in the dorm. It was wonderful to have so many persons around who were working toward the same Zion goal I was seeking. Many nights after the lights were out my roommate and I sat at the window overlooking the campus which had come to mean so much to both of us; at such times we talked very seriously. Here we tried to find solutions for our daily problems and made plans for the future. I have tried since to make these plans reality.

One of the most beautiful campus experiences takes place at Christmas time. Before the holiday vacation carols are played in the Ad Building, and the music floats out over the campus. I remember going back to Walker Hall from the library one night. Snow was falling and everything was serene. Through the air came the clear strains of "Silent Night." This was a Christmas gift I shall treasure always.

OF COURSE, GRACELAND is not a Utopia. As at other colleges you can find about whatever type of associations you seek. If you want to be with those who are disinterested in religion you can find them. However, if you want high caliber friends, you can find many of them at Graceland. Graceland has been jokingly referred to as a matrimonial center. But seriously, why shouldn't it be? Where else can a young person find so many eligible Reorganized Latter Day Saints? However, those who go to Graceland merely for this reason are often disappointed. The joke is told that former President Briggs asked one girl why she had come to Graceland. Her reply was "I came to be went with, but I ain't been."

Wednesday evening is for fellowship. The first fellowship I attended was held outdoors on the north side of the Ad Building. I remember well various students speaking on the theme, "For these things I came." To many of us Graceland marked the turning point in our lives. We knew the time had arrived for us to prepare ourselves for service to the church which had given us so much.

Dr. Roy A. Cheville has done much to make these fellowships successful. Many of us owe much to him for the inspiration we received under his guidance.

THE LAST FELLOWSHIP I attended as a student was held on the southeast side of the Ad Building. I saw the silhouetted tower beckoning upward, and thoughts raced through my mind. My sheltered days within the walls of Graceland were almost over; soon I would have to go out into the world. No longer would I have other Gracelanders to lean on; I would have to live my religion all alone, and I wondered if I could do it. Then I resolved always to be happy and try to serve my church. I know I owe a great debt to Graceland; I hope that I can repay it by living a life that will inspire others to attend.

And in ages hence
I yet shall see a Tower
Beckoning against a cloudless sky,
A group of buildings on a sunkist hill,
An open door.

bias our tolerance for the testimonies of others. Yet, in our hearts, all of us know that the love of God is not limited to a few "chosen people." It reaches far beyond to include all his creations.

Of course, fraudulent practices may be publicized, but it will be difficult, even unnecessary, for us to judge their authenticity. Sainly people should rejoice at every evidence that any of their fellows have received physical and spiritual healing and uplift.

It would be well for us to recall our belief that God is unchangeable. "I am the Lord, I change not." Miracles are not the "whim" of God; they occur in compliance with his laws. Law is not circumvented in order that a miracle may occur; rather, laws with which we are not familiar are obeyed, and God has no choice but to bestow blessings to all who obey. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say." Many people all over the world—purposely or accidentally—are obeying God's laws with miraculous results.

But the achievement of the kingdom of God is no accident. It is a miracle achieved as godly men and women strive to develop high moral and spiritual standards of character in their families and among their neighbors. The building of community life which reflects the will of God demands all this, but it goes beyond. It is indeed miraculous. All lesser miracles—those which are individual and temporary—must be made to minister to this more important and more inclusive one.

Seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 38.

When we truly make the kingdom of God our primary objective, "our miracle"—Zion—shall have occurred!

Vacation Bible School Held

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—The branch is steadily increasing in number, with 123 members, including an active group of young people. On March 1 six men were ordained to the priesthood. They were Winston Inslee, elder; Merle Foster, priest; Percy Smith, priest; Raymond Smith, teacher; Clare Jones, deacon; and John Gilberts, deacon. There are now ten active members of the priesthood in Everett Branch.

Missionary Aleah Koury presented a series of sermons and lectures using colored slides when he visited the branch May 24-June 7. At the end of this series the following were baptized: Irene Knight, Eugene Benner, and Laura Lee Nichols.

Vacation Bible school convened for one week, June 8-June 12, with local teachers leading the classes. Invitations were distributed to two elementary schools. Aleah Koury conducted the story hour and instructed the children in the use of their Bibles. Special emphasis was given to group singing. At the end of the week's school the parents were invited to an achievement program.

In April the branch purchased a home-model Hammond organ. Another improvement is the well-kept new lawn. During the winter months the Women's Club provided tile flooring and more cabinets for the kitchen.

The Liahona Club, an organized group of married people, entertained several times during the winter and spring. Their last party was a treasure hunt.

The Zion's League of Seattle District held their Music and Drama Festival in Everett May 16 and 17. The high light of the festival was the Saturday evening program in which the Leagues from each branch dramatized the story of one of the hymns of the Restoration.

During the winter the choir rehearsed regularly and sang for Christmas and Easter, and also during the Priesthood and Women's Institute in Seattle May 24.

District Reunion Held

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA.—Red River District held a reunion at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, June 7-15.

The speakers were Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Elders Delbert Smith and Cecil Ettinger. Classwork for the women was conducted by Sisters Chesworth and Smith. Activities for children were in charge of Mamie O'Neil. There were eight baptisms.

The district officers elected were C. F. Young, district president; Archie Peterson and C. R. Rotzien, counselors; Irene Rotzien, secretary; Karl Schiebold, treasurer; Glenn Weilding and Earl Rotzien, auditors; Mamie O'Neil, church school director; Druie Black, young people's supervisor; Ina Peterson, music director; and Kate Rotzien, women's department supervisor. C. F. Young was sustained as bishop's agent.

Alta Kimber was recommended by the district president as district historian.

The delegates elected for General Conference were C. F. Young, Ferne Nelson, Mamie O'Neil, and Karl Schiebold.—Reported by IRENE ROTZIEN

Group Takes Tour

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—A week-end journey was sponsored by the class of Brother J. L. Prentice, of Toronto Branch, on May 17 and 18, to visit some of the places of significance in church history. The group left Toronto on Sunday, by chartered bus, and traveled as far as Niagara Falls, New York, where they worshiped with the Saints at their morning service. The night was spent in Rochester, where the class visited the Martin Harris home and then took the winding roadway that leads to the top of Hill Cumorah. The following morning they drove out to visit the home of Joseph Smith and also the Sacred Grove. A final visit was made to Hill Cumorah before the group returned to Toronto.—Reported by J. D. CANTY

Three Babies Blessed

CLOYNE, ONTARIO.—Special services were held Sunday, July 5, in a rented hall at Cloyne, with about fifty members attending from Belleville, Kingston, Northbrooke, Toronto, and Ottawa. Evangelist B. H. Hewitt and Elder Wilbert Canniff presided at the Communion service, and Brother Canniff preached the morning sermon. At the eleven o'clock hour three babies were blessed by Elders Hewitt, McMurray, and Canniff. They were Gloria Dawn Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ellery Thompson, Darlene Fern, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lloyd, and Diane Elaine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Canniff.

After a picnic lunch at noon, the group was divided into men's and women's classes, with Brother Hewitt and Sister McMurray as teachers. Seventy William McMurray, pastor of Ottawa Branch and missionary to unorganized Ontario, preached the concluding sermon of the day.—Reported by MARIE FARROW

Women Meet at Lima

NORTHWEST OHIO DISTRICT.—The women of Northwest Ohio District met June 27, at Lima, Ohio. Eleanor Bryant, of Toledo, spoke on the part women have had in the Restoration Movement, and Marian Willmarth, also of Toledo, talked about the history of the Restoration. June 27 was the anniversary of Joseph Smith's death.

The Lima women served a potluck dinner out under the trees. Afternoon activities included a quiz conducted by the district leader, and musical selections prepared by the district music leader, Hazel Smith, of Bradner. One outstanding number, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," was sung by a chorus composed of eighteen ladies, three from each local. It is hoped that this chorus will become a part of each district meeting. Plans were made for the next meeting to be held in Bradner.—Reported by MRS. HAROLD H. HARMS

Local Pastors Elect Carlisle

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—At a recent meeting of the New Philadelphia Ministerial Association, Elder John D. Carlisle, pastor of the R.L.D.S. church, was elected president, succeeding the Rev. Eugene J. Mansfield of the First Methodist Church. On Tuesday of each week in July Brother Carlisle presented the views of the church on radio station WJER.

Any Saints living near Delaware are urged to meet Brother Carlisle.

New Philadelphia Branch reports twelve baptisms this year.—Reported by J. D. CARLISLE

Evangelist Holds Series

EVERGREEN, ALABAMA.—Evangelist J. Charles May held a series of meetings May 17-31. He began each evening service by showing interesting slides of the South Sea Island natives and their customs. The attendance was excellent throughout the meetings. Brother May visited in the homes of the Saints and also gave patriarchal blessings.

As a result of the rich ministry given by Brother May, thirteen persons were baptized. They included the following: Voncil Booker,

On Children's Day Elder W. H. Drake, from McKenzie, Alabama, baptized Willardine Salter, William Salter, Ronald Brooks, Lois Jean Booker, Tommy Booker, and Betty Ruth Salter. Apostle Percy Farrow visited the branch on May 20.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Estelle Champion, sponsored a box supper which netted $102 to be used for church repairs.—Reported by EARL BROOKS

Zion's League Active

BELDING, MICHIGAN.—District President James C. Phillips held a series of evangelistic services in February. The priesthood, under the direction of Pastor Harvey VanDusen, completed a visiting program in March.

The women's department under the direction of Maxine Hall has held several family suppers and a rummage sale. A mother and daughter tea, at which portraits of the Restoration were presented, and a father and son supper, at which District President James C. Phillips was the guest speaker, marked these special days.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Dan Bauman, sponsored a Valentine box social which raised forty dollars to be used for the purchase of a mimeograph machine for the use of the branch. Since then they have been printing service bulletins and pastoral letters under the direction of the pastor. They held a special graduation and going-away party for Thom Johnson, who enlisted in the U. S. Navy June 3.

The music department under the direction of Wave Condon made an outstanding contribution to the city on June 7 in the form of a spring concert by the combined Belding and Greenville choirs. It was presented in a garden setting, and was climaxed by a children's choir.

Birthday offerings and special contributions have increased the building fund.

The interior of the church building has been redecorated and the decorator, using the church colors, achieved a very pleasing and beautiful effect that is seldom possible with these colors in general decorating.—Reported by JOYCE JOHNSON

Ladies' Night Held

MAITLAND ST. CHURCH, LONDON, ONTARIO.—Ladies' Night was held on June 8 at the Men's Fellowship Club. About one hundred attended to see Apostle Mesley's colored travelogue films, and to take part in the presentation of a cocker spaniel puppy to Pastor J. C. Stuart's family. President Stan Moore was in charge of the evening activities.—Reported by TIM GLOVER

Six Young People Baptized

CARTHAGE, ILLINOIS.—On July 12, six young people, ranging in age from nine to twenty, were baptized, and another six, including an adult, will enter into fellowship next month after the completion of a pre-baptismal and confirmation class.

The mission at Carthage has been organized only six months, but Sunday evening congregations range between twenty and forty persons.

Brother David Stevenson, resident group leader, and Brother John H. Williams, assistant teacher, are largely responsible for the progressive interest of the mission.—Reported by B. A. GALBRAITH

The gospel and the Scriptures are to prepare us or to adapt us to the one great change all of us must someday face—death. In the Book of Mormon Alma very clearly states the case of adaptation or preparation.

And we see that death comes upon mankind, yea, the death which has been spoken of by Amulek, which is the temporal death; nevertheless there was a space granted unto man, in which he might repent; therefore this life became a probationary state; a time to prepare to meet God; a time to prepare for that endless state, which has been spoken of by us, which is after the resurrection of the dead.—Alma 9: 40, 41.

The gospel and the Scriptures help adapt us to live with each other and with God. Failure to adapt and prepare ourselves will bring us to the state of the unwise virgins who failed to be ready and were cast out into outer darkness, with weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth (disillusionment and frustration).

The Scriptures contain remarkable powers to change men. A classic illustration is the story of Lew Wallace, an agnostic who went to Palestine to gather material for a novel ridiculing Christianity. While studying the Bible and gathering the historical facts he was converted and wrote instead Ben Hur.

Compensation

We come now to the final and twelfth law or principle involved in the necessity for daily Scripture study. (There may be others which escape my limited powers of analysis.) Perhaps you think you can get by the other principles advanced. One thing is certain, you can take no detour around the law of compensation. It is inescapable, inexorable, incontrovertible (See Emerson's essay on the "Law of Compensation").

The Scriptures are replete with the law of compensation.

Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you.—James 4: 8.

Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.—III Nephi 5: 104.

Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.—Proverbs 21: 13.

Our attitude toward God's word will one day overtake us, and the long arm of the law of compensation will catch up with us.

These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold them for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgment.—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 3.

In conclusion I ask, can we refuse to find time each day to sit at our table with Isaiah, Jesus, Paul, or Moroni and expect to sit down with them at the great table of the Wedding Supper? Can we fail to become acquainted with the prophets here and expect to be acquainted and live with them hereafter? Can we sow the thistle of neglect and reap of the vine of diligence?

Here is God's answer: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Galatians 6: 7).

In the Reign of Judges it was written, "In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes."

Thousands of years have passed since then, and thousands of laws have been passed, only to be broken many times. But still, as in the ancient times, people are trying vainly to do that which is right in their own eyes, and dying like flies as a result of it.

In Tarshish, people are very willing to make laws for others to obey. But they do not recognize their obligation to obey any law. They walk against red lights and get struck down by the cars, but they refuse to pay any attention to lights. They walk by the law of the pasture: every cow for herself, and every car must carry its own cowcatcher. That is why so many are caught, and hurt. Cars pass cars on blind curves and at the crests of hills, and people are killed by hundreds.

Hot weather engenders a certain kind of heedlessness, an imperviousness to danger, an inability to apprehend peril. People are so tired and warm, sweat gets in their eyes, and they do not always see as well as they should. Summer days bring a lot of mental lassitude and a measure of stupidity. People need to take a little effort to look out for each other and try not to hurt anybody. We suffer not only from blind spots but from blind moments, times of unawareness and low-level consciousness.

MIRACLE OF LIFE

I do not ask for miracles
By which to prove his love
When all about is evidence—
Beneath, around, above!
Moonglow on the hollyhocks,
Fireflies in the grass,
A friendly call from neighbors
On the highway as they pass;
Crickets' calls around me,
A night breeze stirring trees,
Gratefully I thank my God
For miracles like these.

NO WRITA DA ENGLIS!

Most of us talk simply, without the slightest affectation. When conveying an ordinary message to someone verbally we make no attempt to "put on the dog." Why then do we when we write? Why don't we confine ourselves to simple statements, they're so much easier to grasp and understand.—"Let's Write Friendlier Letters"

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Herbert C. Lively

As a boy, Herbert Lively had a deep desire to be of service to God and his church. The testimonies of the Saints had an early effect on him, and he truly wanted to do God's will. Herbert is a fourth-generation member on his father's side. His mother was a convert after marriage. His father has been an active elder for many years, and it is natural that his love for the work of the church should be passed on as it has been to Herbert. The family was always completely active in church work.

One of the major decisions Herbert had to make as a youth was whether to try to serve the church in the field of music or as an appointee minister. He had both fields opened up to him. He enjoyed three years of teaching music at Graceland, but felt a desire to get back into the full-time ministerial work which he had followed previously.

Herbert was born in Detroit, Michigan, on October 12, 1915. His father was captain of a passenger and car ferry for nearly thirty years. Thus the Lively family became acquainted with many church leaders who came through Detroit.

After graduation from Eastern High School, Detroit, in 1933, he attended Graceland College, where he was a member of Lambda Delta Sigma and won a gold seal. He also was graduated from Wayne University with a B.A. He received a Master of Music degree from the Detroit Institute of Musical Art. Besides this he has studied two summers at the University of Michigan.

His first General Church appointment in 1941 was interrupted by the three years he spent at Graceland. Recently he was pastor of Central Church in Kansas City and a member of the Kansas City Stake Presidency. Now he is pastor of Walnut Park Church in Independence, a high priest, and a member of the presidency of the Center Stake of Zion.

In 1943 he married Mary Ellen Skinner. They have three children: Joan Kay, 8; Judith Ann, 6; and Brent Charles, 2½.

His hobbies are "putterin' and fixin'." His greatest thrill, he says, comes from seeing someone take hold of the work of the kingdom and grow. He likes an opportunity to sing occasionally, and has been soloist on our church programs from Kansas City stations many times in recent years.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH AT REUNION

President W. Wallace Smith was at the Port Elgin Reunion July 11-19. Other General Church men on the staff were John Booth, A. M. Pelletier, Jr., Leslie W. Kohlman, Robert Flanders, and a fine staff of men from the Owen Sound and Toronto Districts.

EIGHT BAPTISMS

Bishop Walter N. Johnson preached the final sermon Sunday morning, July 19, at the Center Stake Reunion. About 750 were registered at this reunion. It was estimated that 1,000 persons witnessed the baptisms on Saturday, July 18. Eight were baptized.

REPORTS ON REUNION

Apostle Edmund J. Gleazer reported an outstanding reunion and district conference in Northern California District. He was engaged in visiting branches in that district after the reunion. While in the San Francisco Bay area, Brother Gleazer looked over possible sites for a new church building. The Berkeley church building has been sold, and a new home for that congregation must be found.

OUTDOOR SERVICES

Apostle Reed M. Holmes spoke at the Eastbrook church at one of Kansas City Stake's outdoor services on July 12. On July 19 Brother Holmes was the speaker at the outdoor service at the Shawnee Drive church in Kansas City.

SPEAKS IN KANSAS CITY

Evan Fry, Radio Minister, spoke at the outdoor service at the Shawnee Drive church in Kansas City on July 5, and at the Eastbrook church on July 19.

CHAPLAIN SPEAKS

Almer Sheehy, Chaplain at the Independence Sanitarium, was the speaker at Eastbrook church on July 5, and at the Shawnee Drive church on July 12. Kansas City Stake is having a series of outdoor services from July 5 to August 30, with the exception of July 26. Services begin at 7:15 each Sunday evening.

CAMPUS SPEAKER

Merle Guthrie was the evening speaker at the Campus in the Center Stake of Zion on July 26.

TWO TEACH AT REUNIONS

Mrs. Clarence Skinner, of the General Church Council of Women, is attending the Louisiana-Arkansas Reunion, where she is teaching women's classes. Mrs. Benjamin Moats, also of the Council, has returned from her assignment at Brewton, Alabama, Reunion.

A Good Influence

WE WERE WATCHING two little boys play together when my wife said, "I am glad those two are friends. John is a good influence." I assented casually, but later that simple, everyday statement came back to my mind and I found myself reflecting on it. John (whose name isn't really John) is indeed a good influence. And he exercises his influence so artlessly. He does not preach or pose or strut. He is just a boy of sound, manly character with a gift for friendship, who exerts his good influence in the process of being his own fine self. The boys who play with him are happy in being their best selves when he is in the group.

Johnny is a priceless asset to our neighborhood. Before we moved here, we were told about the construction of the house, and the possibilities of the garden, and the zoning regulations against the too-near approach of business, and other matters of like nature, all of which were considered important. But no one mentioned Johnny. Possibly that was because our children are grown. More possibly, it was because no cash value can be placed on Johnny and what he does. Yet it is people like Johnny—some young, some older—who determine all the significant values in a community. It is not our gadgets which make our modern world a desirable place to live. It is Johnny and his kind—clean-minded, beauty-loving and right-doing friends—in whose presence we find satisfaction in being the best that we can be.

THERE WAS A TIME when Jesus was the best possible influence in his neighborhood. We know very little of his boyhood, but we can well imagine him as a natural leader even then. Luke has opened two windows through which we may catch very revealing glimpses of him as a lad. Through the first we see that he "grew and waxed strong in spirit, being filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him." Through the second we can see that he "increased in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man." It is my personal opinion that Jesus might not have increased in favor with man, despite his wisdom and spiritual strength, had it not been for his graciousness, his unpretentious and sound goodness. He was the kind of friend one could follow without any feeling of inferiority.

When Jesus grew to manhood, his more mature friends found him a good influence in much the same fashion as his younger friends had. It is quite unlikely that he stepped from the quietude of his carpenter shop to the eminence of his public ministry without some intermediate stage of neighborhood influence. The story of the wedding feast at Cana seems to indicate something like this. And here, again, it is not difficult to imagine him as an active element in all sorts of community situations, not hesitating to draw sharp and biting distinctions when the occasion demanded but having unflinching respect for the personality of every man around him. Just by being himself he laid on his friends obligations which he helped them to recognize and to accept as right and necessary.

When the Cross began to loom up against the horizon, the hearts of the men nearest to Jesus refused to credit what might so easily happen. They simply could not face the utter desolation of lost friendship which the death of Jesus seems to entail. It was against such a background that their Friend said to them, "Let not your heart be troubled. . . . I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever."

IT IS UNFORTUNATE in this connection that the meaning of the word "comforter" has changed during the past three hundred years. We now tend to think of a comforter as one who soothes and reassures the downcast or bereaved. This is not quite accurate. There is good reason to believe that the original meaning was rather "one who comforts by making resolute and strong." This is conveyed in the Greek term for the Comforter, paraclete, which means "the one called to stand by." If we may fairly interpret the promise of Jesus in this way, then what he said to his friends was, in effect, that he would pray the Father to send them One who would stand by them forever, to strengthen them and make them resolute to be their best possible selves, as he himself had always done.

Whatever the detailed study of the language may reveal, it is a fact of experience that in times of need, right down the ages, the friends of Jesus have known the Comforter to stand by them and to strengthen them in quiet but unflinching support. This was the later testimony of those to whom the promise was originally given. It is our testimony. The Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Spirit—by whatever name we call the Comforter—is always a "good influence." It is a Spirit which leads "to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously." It is the Spirit that leads us to be our best possible selves, individually and together.

Appointments Canceled

It seems wise to give this notice that all appointments made for President Israel A. Smith's services be canceled to give him time to thoroughly recuperate from his recent illness. Those concerned may consider this as final until further advised.

W. WALLACE SMITH

College Student Conference

The attention of college students and professional people of the church, particularly in the East, is called to the College Student Conference to be held at Rochester, New York, over Labor Day week end, September 5, 6, and 7, this fall.

An excellent program, centered around the theme, "The Professional in the Kingdom," has been developed by Dr. Lawrence Brockway and other members of the church's Committee on Ministry to College People. A substantial attendance, largely from the Eastern States and Canada, is assured. Everything points to a fine experience for those who can attend.

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Henry L. Livingston will represent the General Church. Other conference leaders are being drawn from the ranks of professional and business people and students. All who are interested should, before August 24, register with or write to Carl Mesle, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. F. CARL MESLE sponded very well with their tithes and offerings this Sunday.

In order to free himself for missionary work and mission administrative responsibilities, Brother Sorensen presented my name as pastor at Taronia before a branch business meeting. The members concurred with his recommendation, and I will begin pastoral responsibilities on July 1.

I know you will be happy to hear that we have gained approval from the local authorities to begin the mission duplex. The wheels of progress have already started turning toward building the foundation.

The best wishes and prayers of the Saints of the Society Islands are continually with "Te Peropheta" and his counselors.

New Missions

The following missions have been set up on the Church Statistical Records during April and May:

April:

Belle, Missouri

Bryan, Texas

May:

Brantford, Ontario

Jacksonville, Florida

Lea County, New Mexico

New Orleans, Louisiana

Port Colborne, Ontario

Sabine, Texas

Sheridan, Wyoming

Beckley, West Virginia

Las Vegas, Nevada

Please note also that the Highland, Ohio, Branch name has been changed to the Sinking Spring Branch, and that the Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch of Ohio is now to be known as the West Portsmouth Branch.

New Groups in Nauvoo District

Since the first of the year two groups have been organized in the Nauvoo District. At Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, thirteen have been baptized recently, and at Carthage, Illinois, six have joined the church. There is an average attendance of about fifty at the Sunday morning services held at Mt. Pleasant. The Carthage Saints have been meeting in homes but now have an opportunity to meet Sunday evenings in the old Rock Creek church.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Lee R. Oliver, Pensacola District:

On Children's Day in Pensacola Branch we baptized thirteen—two adults, and eleven children. Our youth choir sang, with thirty children participating in it, and the service was very impressive.

The total of baptisms for Pensacola District for the month of June was twenty-five. We feel that the untiring efforts of many of our people are showing results.

We are encouraged by the fact that there are still so many who need to be taught the fullness of the gospel. Indeed the field is white already to harvest.

The following is an excerpt from a letter received from Alma C. Andrews, dated July 10, 1953:

We have just had five baptisms in the St. Louis Branch. Three were children and two were men whose wives are members of the church. We are holding four to five baptismal classes each week. I conduct three to four and Elders Paul Counts and Edward Goetz hold one to two each week. We have others who will be baptized in the near future. It has been my practice to hold not less than three cottage services each week for the last ten months. We had a number of prospects ready for decision for Brother John Wight when he came into this area, and will have when he comes again. We work as a team, which enlarges the missionary power of each of us. Certainly this is the way to do missionary work. No one attempts to star, but each recognizes and uses the strength of organization in mutual endeavor for Christ.

From Elder Alan Tyree, Tahiti:

We have just had our first "big day" in Taronia Branch since arriving, and we thought you would be interested in hearing some of the news.

The Saints here appreciate special days and do a great deal of work preparing for them. The occasion was Children's Day, which we celebrated on June 28. There were five baptisms and five blessings, with two more children to be baptized later. Brother Sorensen has been doing some fine missionary work; an entire family will be baptized at the mission in Paea. Attendance both Sunday morning and evening was over two hundred, and the church was completely filled.

The organ sent down from the Stone Church radio room was a special attraction. It is of great help in beautifying the services, and it has already drawn a lot of nonmember interest. The people re-

Was Jesus a Married Man?

By Israel A. Smith

WE HAVE HAD OCCASION lately to study some of the arguments advanced by Mormon protagonists in support of polygamy. This matter is a proper subject of inquiry and discussion and will remain such as long as the doctrine of "eternity of the marriage covenant" remains in the books of and thereby is being taught by the Mormon Church. The latest edition of their Doctrine and Covenants, as in former issues for many years, includes the famous and disputed Section 132, the alleged revelation on that subject.

It seems that such polygamous and polygamy-minded exponents as the Hydes and the Pratts did not choose to rest their case on their claims that the prophet-founder of the church was responsible for the doctrine, (though one well-known defender said it was the only good reason), nor on the examples of ancient worthies, such as Abraham and David, as found in the Old Bible; but painfully distorted the New Testament record in an attempt to show that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was a married man, yes, a very much married man—in fact, a polygamist.

We of the Reorganized Church have shared with others who profess to be Christian almost a holy horror of what we believe has been a gross perversion and wresting of the Scriptures by the Mormons from and after 1852 in trying to establish their weird claim that the Savior was a polygamist. We are amazed at the poverty of their argument which depends in part on a misinterpretation of terms and principally on a perfervid and misleading imagination.

It seems to us that only a visionary talking to the unwary, the easily duped or spineless, could have the effrontery to essay so great a task with so little to justify the thesis.

Let us consider how Orson Hyde,* Mormon apostle, for instance, set up this unusual claim in a "lecture" on the subject, on October 6, 1854, at Salt Lake City, as reported in the Mormon publication, the Journal of Discourses, Volume 2. From this notable (and I would almost call it notorious) effort I present a few excerpts: (The italics are mine. I.A.S.)

I tell you that there were but few in olden times who ever did obtain promises from God, that had not more than one wife, if the Bible be true. There was David, and there was Solomon; there was the whole line of the kings of Israel. Says one, "That Old Bible was for the Jews, and has nothing to do with us; that is the Old Testament; and having more wives was according to their law, and according to their custom, but it does not apply to us; the Savior of the world is our great pattern, he is our great law-giver."

And how is it with him? Let us inquire. . . . Did the Savior of this world consider it to be his duty to fulfill all righteousness? You answer, yes. Even the simple ordinance of baptism he would not pass by, for the Lord commanded it, and therefore it was righteousness to obey what the Lord had commanded, and he would fulfill all righteousness. Upon this hypothesis I will go back to the beginning, and notice the commandment that was given to our first parents in the garden of Eden. The Lord said unto them, "Multiply and replenish the earth." . . .

When God said, Go forth and replenish the earth; it was to replenish the inhabitants of the human species and make it as it was before. Our first parents, then, were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth; and if the Savior found it his duty to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness, a commandment of far less importance than that of multiplying his race, (if indeed there was any difference in the commandments of Jehovah, for they are all important, and all essential) would he not find it his duty to join in with the rest of the faithful ones in replenishing the earth?

* Another Mormon apostle, Orson Spencer, in 1853, publicly claimed that Christ had numerous wives.

"Mr. Hyde, do you really wish to imply that the immaculate Savior begat children? It is a blasphemous assertion against the purity of the Savior's life, to say the least of it. The holy aspirations that ever ascended from him to his Father would never allow him to have any such fleshly and carnal connections, never, no never."

This is the general idea; but the Savior never thought it beneath him to obey the mandate of the Father; he never thought this stooping beneath his dignity; he never despised what God had made; for they are bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh; kindred spirits, that once basked in rays of immortality and eternal life.

"Then you really mean to hold to the doctrine that the Savior of the world was married; do you mean to be understood so? And if so, do you mean to be understood that he had more than one wife?"

The Christian world by its prejudices has driven us away from the Old Bible, so we must now appeal to the New Testament, for that seems to suit the prejudices of the people; though to me it is all alike, both the Old and New Testaments. . . .

Now suppose I should set out myself and travel through the cities of the nation as a celebrated reformer, preaching revelations and sentiments as lofty as the skies, and rolling out ideas strange and new to which the multitude were entirely unaccustomed; and wherever I went, suppose I had with me three or four women—one combing my hair, another washing my feet, and another shedding tears upon them, and wiping them with the hair of her head. Suppose I should lean on them, and they upon me, would it now appear monstrous in the eyes of the world? . . . I guess they would give me a coat of tar and feathers, and ride me on a rail; and it is my opinion they would serve the Savior the same, if he went about now as he did eighteen hundred years ago.

There is an old prophecy of Isaiah, which I cannot stop to read, but you will find it in the fifty-third chapter of his prophecies; read the whole of the chapter. This particular prophecy speaks of Christ all the way through. It is there said, "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed." . . . If he has no seed, how could he see them? "When they make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, and prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." By and bye the Prophet goes on to say, "And who shall declare his generation, for his life is taken from the earth." If he had no generation, who could declare it? I told you there was an agent who would bring out every subject in bold relief, which is the Holy Ghost. . . .

How was it with Mary and Martha, and other women that followed him? In olden times, and it is common in this day, the women, even as Sarah, called their husbands Lord. . . . When Mary of old came to the sepulchre on the first day of the week, instead of finding Jesus she saw two angels in white. "And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She said unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord," or husband, "and I know not where they have laid him." . . .

"Well," you say, "that appears rather plausible, but I want a little more evidence, I want to find where it says the Savior was actually married." . . .

When does it say the Savior was married? I believe I will read it for your accommodation, or you might not believe my words were I to say that there is indeed such a Scripture.

We will turn over to the account of the marriage in Cana of Galilee. You will find it in the second chapter of John's Gospel. . . .

Gentleman, that is as plain as the translators, or different councils over this Scripture dare allow it to go to the world, but the thing is there; it is told; Jesus was the bridegroom at the marriage of Cana of Galilee. . . . We say it was Jesus Christ who was married, to be brought into the relation whereby he could see his seed, before he was crucified.

Such were the accepted arguments in favor of polygamy as advanced by one of their ablest advocates and champions.

IT WILL BE OBSERVED that in order to bring the Savior down to the level of the earthly common man, he first shows that the Savior did submit to baptism by John in order "to fulfill all righteousness," thus obeying a direct commandment from God. Therefore, Jesus was amenable to and willing to obey a mandatory injunction given to Adam and Eve to "replenish the earth." After this agile backward somersault, the foundation was laid for the occasion of the first miracle—at Cana. The Savior was thus brought down from an exalted being, by this shoddy invention, to the level of human kind. Christ was "God manifest in the flesh." If now these of the Utah faith can divest him of his mantle of godliness and clothe him in carnality by this specious argument, then an aura of great sanctity would attach to the plural wife idea—if they could make any showing of fact to fit the occasion.

In considering Apostle Hyde's crafty approach we cannot but conclude that this advocate of the free and untrammelled in matters matrimonial, in spite of everything else, hazarded his argument mainly on these words from John 2: 1, 2:

And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; the mother of Jesus was there: And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage.

PERHAPS THE CONNOTATIONS of the word "called" might justify the argument. Yes, a bridegroom could perhaps be called to his own wedding. Hyde then proceeds by hint, insinuation, and innuendo to nail down his view that Jesus was but attending his own marriage, and the women—or some of them—were his wives. How really amazing and incredible and foolish all this amounts to when critically examined! What an argument, what perspicacity to read so much in so small a record—grammatical license raised to the *n*th degree! Looking at this meager account with the jaundiced eye of a practical and subsidized polygamist (who though aged would take eligible women to wife if they were overlooked by other and younger men), he could conjure from John 2: 1, 2 all that was needed by way of fact.

Of course, his argument, which we must assume had the approval of the leaders of the Mormon Church, was and is to us a sacrilegious and impious presumption, one that could never be endorsed by real Christians. But he was the powerful advocate—though his cause was to us falsus ab initio and his argument wholly without merit.

Let us now review John's story, King James Version, with our comments:

And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there. (Verse 1.)

And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage. (Verse 2.)

COMMENT: Jesus' "call" was no different from that of his disciples.

And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine. (Verse 3.)

COMMENT: If Jesus was there as the bridegroom, would it not have been: "We have no wine"?

His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it. (Verse 5.)

COMMENT: Obviously, Jesus was unknown to the servants. If he were the bridegroom they would have known him.

When the ruler of the feast had tasted . . . the governor of the feast called the bridegroom, and saith unto him, Every man . . . (Verses 9, 10.)

COMMENT: The governor of the feast complimented the bridegroom for keeping the "best of the wine for the last of the feast," not knowing that a miracle had taken place, that another than the bridegroom had supplied the wine.

And his disciples believed on him. (Verse 11.)

COMMENT: The disciples knew what had taken place.

After this he went to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples . . . (Verse 12.)

Strange indeed, if a bridegroom, that he should thus immediately desert his wife or wives!

The great English preacher, Frederick W. Robertson, commented on the Cana incident as follows:

It was not a marriage only, but a marriage-feast, to which Christ conducted his disciples. Now we can not get over this plain fact by saying that it was a religious ceremony: that would be mere sophistry. . . . Neither can we explain away the lesson by saying that it is no example to us, for Christ was there to do good, and that what was safe for him might be unsafe for us.

Before consulting another version of the New Testament, I have found the Cana incident treated in a book on New Testament lore. An apocryphal story is quoted—for what it is worth:

Word was brought to Mary from her half-sister Mary-Salome, that her only son, John, was to be married. And she and her husband, Zebedee, urgently invited Mary and Jesus and his brothers and his disciples to the wedding feast in Cana.

When they reached Cana, which was less than two parasangs distance from Nazareth, Zebedee, father of the groom, came to greet them and said unto Jesus: "Rabboni, come and sit at the head of the table, for you are our most honored guest." But Jesus said: "He who exalts himself shall be abased; and he who humbles himself shall be exalted." And he took a seat at the table for those who waited upon the guests.

Joseph Gaer, in his The Lore of the New Testament, makes this comment:

The Wedding Feast at Cana is one of the best known canonical stories of the miracles of Jesus. In the gospels the name of the bridegroom is not given. But in the apocryphal works the bridegroom is often identified as Simon the Canaanite. Some of the earliest apocryphal fragment identify the bridegroom as John, referred to as "St. John the Evangelist."

This story from which I have quoted only a small portion, coincides with the story in John 2 sufficiently to stamp it with a degree of dependability: Jesus and disciples, his mother, and brothers were in attendance, and all of them departed for Capernaum, and so on.

WE NOW DEAL with Hyde's argument based on his quotation from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah:

When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed.

He comments: If he [Christ] has no seed, how could he see them?

The "seed" that belongs to the Lord is plainly identified in I Nephi 2: 7:

And now I would that ye might know, that after my father Lehi had made an end of prophesying concerning his seed, it came to pass that the Lord spake unto him again, saying, that it was not meet for him, Lehi, that he should take his family into the wilderness alone; but that his sons should take daughters to wife, that they might raise up seed unto the Lord in the land of promise.

Again in that notable denunciation of polygamy and concubinage, we find in Jacob 2: 39:

For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me . . .

Again from Malachi 2: 14, 15:

Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one. . . . And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed.

Godly posterity of righteous men everywhere may be the "seed" that the Lord will "see" when he has made "his soul an offering for sin."

But we now turn to another version of the Bible: We take a look at the Revised Standard Version, the new and allegedly superior translation of John 2, and while there is much harmony between it and the King James Version, there is a very vital and violent disagreement, for in this one, we find—

The mother of Jesus was there; Jesus also was invited to the marriage, with his disciples.

So Jesus and his mother and his disciples were invited guests. Whoever heard of a bridegroom being invited to his own wedding! Away goes the Mormon apologist and his fanciful and far-fetched build-up for plural marriage—all at the cost of dragging our great Exemplar into the mire of polygamy.

I am amazed that Utah leaders ever publicized such propaganda as Hyde's sermon, and it is not to be wondered at that old Journals of Discourses are, to say the least, hard to "come by" in Utah.

Programs for the Junior High Fellowship, by Vergie Bowlby and Tom A. Smith, Warner Press, 75c.

The junior age is one of adventure and of the desire to live for a cause. These boys and girls of the church need the opportunity to try out and learn about those things they are unfamiliar with, especially that which concerns their religion. They should have experiences in which they can learn through participation; experiences in challenging worship services, in programs, and in service projects. Program materials for this group, whether for a junior Zion's League, junior church, or for church school worship, must have spiritual qualities that provide opportunities for full expression of their high ideals.

Here is an inexpensive book of worship services and programs which, placed in the hands of a resourceful Reorganized Latter Day Saint leader, will be useful in meeting all of these requirements. It includes sixteen programs, any one of which can be adapted to our own church standards. Each program includes a statement of purpose, helps for the leader, a worship service outline, suggestions for talks, and devotional materials.

Our own church materials can be used to supplement that presented in a number of these programs. The thrilling story of the Inspired Version of the Scriptures can be made the climax to the service on Bible translations. There are many Restoration incidents that may be added to the service, "Scenes From the Living Church." The symbols of Kirtland Temple can add to the service on symbols used by the Christian church. The use of Daily Bread would find a significant place in the service, "Personal Prayer and Bible Study." There is a very challenging service on hymns which will lend itself to additional stories of Restoration hymns. Materials from the Zion's League Annual and from Stories That Live will add distinctive Reorganized Latter Day Saint themes to some of these programs.

While planned for junior highs, most of the programs can be used with equal effectiveness by older young people, the entire church school, or the branch. There are excellent Christmas and Thanksgiving services. The Easter service, "The Last Seven Words," is a masterful presentation of this subject for one session. The installation service for officers is a good one for any branch or church school.

"Disciplines of Discipleship" and "Living for a Cause" can be used by most groups. The purpose of the first is "To help junior high youth understand that certain disciplines are necessary for Christian growth; to see that the life of Jesus was one of discipline; to provide ways for junior highs to measure their lives, motives, and standards by those of Jesus." These could well be the bases for excellent personal dedication services.

The undue emphasis on the Revised Standard Version of the Bible may be objectionable to some; however, it is seldom that a book of this nature can be found with so many programs that are usable and of the excellent quality found here. RAYMOND E. TROYER

With God in Red China, by F. Olin Stockwell, Harper and Brothers, 256 pages, $3.00.

Here is a "tale of what happened in China during the high tide of revolutionary change as one missionary saw it." The author, having spent more than twenty years in mission work of various types in China, writes from a background of close contact with the life of the Chinese people under the former regime. His experiences took him through the days of "liberation" by the Reds and closed with two years in a Communist jail. This closing experience, along with impressions he gained from a thorough reading and study of the New Testament while in prison, contributes the greater portion of the writer's material.

Regarding the former regime, Mr. Stockwell points out, "Chiang struck out on three counts—no political democracy, uncontrolled inflation, and corruption in government." He feels that China might have overlooked the first of these, but the strain of the other two was too great. Since he has already stated, "Communism has never won in any country where there was economic stability and honest government," he apparently believes these three counts to be the basic cause for the "fall of the house of Chiang."

Missionary Stockwell gives a very clear account of his treatment as a prisoner of the Communist government. It was not severe, though it fell far below the level for treatment of prisoners in the United States. His description of the "brainwashing" process and his final admission that his activities had been counterrevolutionary are most interestingly written (it was this which caused him to be accused of "sin" by a minister of another faith, Time magazine, May 18, 1953).

Through the entire writing, nine chapters of which were written on margins of a book of poetry and smuggled from the prison, one notes a keen sense of humor which assists the author in every circumstance. The book is a moving testimony of how the writer wrung victory out of defeat and always found the tremendous sustaining power of his Christian faith.

The Book of Mormon Points the Way to Zion

Part III—Prayer

By Roy Weldon

Preparation for the Endowment

The highway to Zion is a matter of progress in spiritual things as the Lord has clearly indicated in a recent revelation: "Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies" (Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5). Rich promises of greater blessings have long been held out to the Restoration Movement when the church moves on to higher ground. Late revelations have been stressing preparation for endowment.

It will be profitable for my servants of the eldership to meet often for study, under the direction of those having responsibility to teach, at such times and places as may be practicable, in preparation for the greater endowment of spiritual power which has been promised and which awaits the time when they can receive it.—Doctrine and Covenants 142: 4.

The endowment, angelic ministry, Zion, the coming forth of the balance of the Book of Mormon records, the building of the temple in Zion, the personal coming of Christ to the temple (Malachi 3: 1; Romans 11: 25, 26) and rich promises of the rise of great men of God, as well as "one mighty and strong" (Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3; 64: 8; 45: 13), are among the almost staggering array of scriptural guideposts beckoning us along the Restoration highway.

An Example From History

History gives us a very graphic story of Pizarro, the Spanish general, who discovered and conquered Peru. When his expedition anchored off the coast of Panama and all his soldiers had landed on the seashore, he stepped out in front of them and, unsheathing his sword, drew a straight line through the sand. He then stepped across the line facing his men and pointing toward the unknown, undiscovered continent to the south and reminded them of the many Indian stories of a golden city (Cuzco) and the legends of a rich and fabulous monarch (the Inca) who ruled the city. He said that they would have to leave their ship and go forward through disease-ridden jungles and deserts, facing countless hazards and unknown dangers. He pointed to the ship and said to his men, "There lies our ship. If there are any faint-hearted, let him now return to the ship, but he who is ready to turn his back on all that is past and stake everything on our glorious cause, let him now step across this line." Every man stepped across the line.

Perhaps it is time to weigh this fact well. The gospel of Jesus Christ in our dispensation, as in other dispensations, was launched to redeem men from the fall and bring them back into the presence of Divinity. As in times past, we have reached the place where we must decide whether we really want to go farther or not. If you are faint-hearted and content with things as they are, if you would rather our church remain in obscurity and conform to the standards of the churches of the world, then perhaps you had better read no further, for I am now going to give the Book of Mormon formula for developing spirituality and moving on to higher and greater Restoration achievements.

The Sons of Mosiah

For they were men of a sound understanding, and they had searched the Scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God. But this is not all: they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority, even as with the power and authority of God. And they had been teaching the word of God for the space of fourteen years, among the Lamanites, having had much success in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth.—Alma 12: 4-6.

The formula used by the sons of Mosiah consisted of Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and consecration (fourteen years diligent labor among the Lamanites). This formula produced abundant results in Book of Mormon times. It will do the same now. Individuals have tested it and it has been tested in a limited way also by groups with excellent results. In preparation for a recent Central Missouri Stake Reunion at Odessa, Missouri, the stake officers, priesthood members, and all reunion workers were invited to participate in a three-day period of fasting and prayer for divine aid and blessing for the reunion. Despite the probable fact that actual participation in the full three-days fast was far from 100 per cent, the results can be vouched for by all who were present. In my own opinion the spiritual tone of the reunion surpassed any other reunion experience of my lifetime.

Results of experimentation with the formula of the sons of Mosiah are such that I am firmly convinced increased Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and giving ourselves without reservation will do wonders for the church. I have what I consider to be strong reasons for my convictions. In a previous article some of those reasons were presented as they pertain to Scripture. Study is the first ingredient in the sons of Mosiah formula. Analysis of the second ingredient in this formula is now in order.

Communication

Many years ago when I was in my teens I became sick. My illness continued over a protracted time, during which I continued to become worse. One morning I felt that my life forces were slipping away and I instinctively recognized I needed help. I prayed for help and asked my father to go for an elder who lived about eight miles away. The elder had already left his farm and had arrived at another farm a considerable distance away. He was unhitching his horse preparing to go to work in the field when he was instructed by the Spirit to hitch up his horses and return immediately to his home. He arrived home just as my father arrived with his car to ask him to come and administer. I received the needed blessing with the ordinance of administration.

Prayer is a telephone which hangs on the wall of our soul. When it is properly connected and the lines are not down, God is always at the other end and will answer. Thousands can testify of this. Like our earthly telephone, it is not intended to be used only in times of emergency. God wants us to talk with him at other times than when our house is on fire or misfortune overtakes us. The Scriptures clearly indicate that God communicates with men as a result of prayer.

And they began from that time forth to call on his name; therefore God conversed with men, and made known unto them the plan of redemption, which had been prepared from the foundation of the world.—Alma 9: 49.

Desire

"And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."—Jeremiah 29: 13.

Earthly telephone lines may be made of copper or steel wire, but the lines of the spirit are made of desire and sincerity.

And it came to pass, that when Jesus had thus prayed unto the Father, he came unto his disciples, and behold, they did still continue, without ceasing, to pray unto him; and they did not multiply many words, for it was given unto them what they should pray, and they were filled with desire.—III Nephi 9: 24.

Form prayers, pharisaical prayers, and prayers uttered as mere matter of habit are of little or no value. Prayer without sincere desire of the soul is comparable to speaking into a telephone when the lines are down. There is no chance that such prayers can reach central.

Forasmuch as this people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men, therefore I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people; yea, a marvelous work and a wonder.—Isaiah 29: 26. Inspired Version.

Moroni, the last of the Book of Mormon prophets, sums up the case for prayer and the law of desire.

For behold, God hath said, A man being evil, can not do that which is good; for if he offereth a gift, or prayeth unto God, except he shall do it with real intent, it profiteth him nothing.—Moroni 7: 5.

Initiative

I am found of them who seek after me, I give unto all them that ask of me; I am not found of them that sought me not, or inquireth not after me.—Isaiah 65: 1.

Agency and prayer are vitally related. God knows all about us and our needs, but due to the law of agency he is limited in ministering to us until we first take the initiative and ask him. "For your Father knoweth what things we have need of, before ye ask him."—Matthew 6: 8.

Jesus took three of his disciples (Peter, James, and John) up into the mountain of transfiguration where they had a glorious experience. The other nine disciples were left in the valley to await their return. Was Jesus a respecter of persons? Did he have favorites that he should choose out three of his twelve to enjoy special privileges? The answer is "no." The Inspired Version (Mark 9: 1), in contradistinction to the King James Version, gives us the answer. Jesus chose Peter, James, and John because they first chose to ask him many questions. "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, and James, and John, who asked him many questions concerning his saying; and Jesus leadeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves. And he was transfigured before them."—Mark 9: 1.

These disciples took advantage of the principle of initiative. Jesus says that he that seeketh findeth, to him that knocketh it shall be opened, and he that asketh receiveth. The reverse of this is also true. He that won't ask won't receive anything; he that refuses to knock will have no doors opened to him; he that will not seek will not find anything.

A group of high school boys were on their way home from school. They noticed a large sign announcing a series of meetings on the "Origin of the Red Man." They decided to see what it was all about. The missionary preached on Moroni. One high school boy (Roy Cheville) decided to investigate the Moroni story further. The rest of the boys laughingly called it macaroni. They did not ask, seek, or knock.

One of the great laments of the prophets has been that men do not exercise their agency and initiative in seeking God.

And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee; for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us, because of our iniquities.—Isaiah 64: 7. (See II Nephi 14: 9.)

Sublimation

Sublimation naturally follows the principle of initiative. Peter, James, and John asked Jesus many questions about his sayings. As a result Jesus took them up into the mountain, and they heard the voice of the Father saying, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased (II Peter 1: 17).

Peter says, "And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount" (II Peter 1: 18).

Prayer lifts men (sublimation). "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."—Jeremiah 33: 3.

Prayer will not only lift us, it will change us. "And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was changed, and his raiment became white and glittering."—Luke 9: 29.

Some years ago I traversed the Sierra Nevada Mountains from central California to Nevada at various times on business. Near Donner Pass I used to stop my truck and go up to a secluded little mountain valley close to the highway and pray. I repeated this a number of times until it became a sacred spot to me. Then one Saturday I was out in a desert valley of Nevada after picking up a heavy load of honey. One of my newest tires blew out, and I limped into Reno. The tire was guaranteed, but this was Saturday afternoon and the tire company was very busy. It was hot. I was irritated.

As I sometimes do under such circumstances, I ate heavily and unwisely for dinner. Finally after much delay I started on the winding mountain highway that leads from Reno to Donner Pass at the summit of the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

It was now late afternoon, and I would have to drive all night. I was tired. I had indigestion. As I wound around the mountain curves my mind went ahead to the place of prayer, and I said to myself, "Not this time. It is too late. I am too tired. Besides I am not in the mood." I put it out of my mind, but a few miles farther on the same suggestion to stop and pray returned, and I put it out of my mind again. This experience was repeated several times as my truck slowly labored up the winding mountain highway.

Finally I reached the summit and started down the western grade. The place of prayer was very close. I had fully made up my mind. This time I would not stop. I felt more like swearing than praying. Then a strange thing happened; as I came to the sacred spot it seemed that my inner spiritual man took my outer physical man by the nape of the neck. I parked the truck at the usual spot by the highway. By the light of the moon in the middle of the night I went to my usual place of prayer. It seemed more beautiful than ever before. I knelt and prayed, then returned to my truck. I was literally enveloped by the Spirit. My sense of weariness departed, and my entire being was sublimated. It was several hours before the glow and uplift of this experience subsided.

Instruction

The Scriptures abound in the fact that enlightenment and instruction result from prayer. The formula of the sons of Mosiah is very much in evidence in the experience of Joseph Smith. He was studying the Scriptures when he read the now famous verse in James 1: 5, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

Joseph Smith acted upon this instruction. He went to the woods and knelt in prayer. The enlightenment and instruction that resulted from that prayer are historic. The first rays of the dawning light of the Restoration Movement shone on this momentous occasion.

Verily, verily I say unto thee, Blessed art thou for what thou hast done, for thou hast inquired of me, and, behold, as often as thou hast inquired, thou hast received instruction of my Spirit. If it had not been so, thou wouldst not have come to the place where thou art at this time. Behold, thou knowest that thou hast inquired of me, and I did enlighten thy mind; and now I tell thee these things, that thou mayest know that thou hast been enlightened by the spirit of truth; yea, I tell thee, that thou mayest know that there is none else save God, that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart. I tell thee these things as a witness unto thee, that the words or the work which thou hast been writing is true.—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 6, 7.

If thou shalt ask, thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge, that thou mayest know the mysteries, and peaceable things; that which bringeth joy, that which bringeth life eternal.—Ibid., 42: 17.

When I was a youth I attended a two-day young people's convention at Modesto, California. During the Saturday meetings I was challenged by the excellent ministry of the brethren from the headquarters of the church. I began to feel concerned about my relationship to the church and what the Lord would that I should do as my life contribution to his church. The next morning I knelt down in my room alone and asked how I should prepare myself to serve. No one knew what I had asked of the Lord. In fact it was not even in my own conscientious mind when, a couple of hours later in prayer meeting, I was startled to hear my name and these words: "Thus saith the Lord . . ." Then there came from heaven the Lord's answer. He told me that he had heard my prayer, that he had a work for me to do, what my work would be, and how I should prepare for my calling.

Others may be dubious of the gifts of the Spirit and try to rationalize them away, but as for me the pyramiding evidence of their authenticity is too great and conclusive to question. The very writing of this article is an indirect result of the gifts of the Spirit. Early in my experience in the church the Lord spoke to me one Wednesday evening by the gift of prophecy through one of his handmaidens. There were only a few present and the message came quietly and simply. The Lord counseled me to prepare myself to write for the Herald when I felt the urge to do so. This I have done through the years at those intervals when I have felt the urge, and the Lord has blessed me in the effort.

An excerpt from Nephi's experience in receiving light and instruction from prayer would seem to be sufficient on the principle of instruction.

Behold, he hath heard my cry by day, and he hath given me knowledge by visions in the night time. And by day have I waxed bold in mighty prayer before him; yea, my voice have I sent up on high; and angels came down and ministered unto me. And upon the wings of his Spirit hath my body been carried away upon exceeding high mountains. And mine eyes have beheld great things; yea, even too great for man; therefore I was bidden that I should not write them.—II Nephi 3: 38-41.

Faith

An essential element of prayer is faith in God. Paul states the principle of faith very well in Hebrews 11: 6: "But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Faith is an entrusting of one's self into God's hands—a relaxing of one's tensions and troubles and fears in childlike confidence in God's love and watch care.

Prayer with confidence and trust in God that he will do what in his wisdom is best for us sometimes produces astonishing results. There is the story of Peter in the twelfth chapter of Acts. Peter was chained between two prison guards. The next day Herod had him scheduled to be brought forth and killed. The saints apparently were praying all night for Peter. About midnight the angel of the Lord came and awakened him. The chains fell off when he arose, the prison gate opened of its own accord, and he made his way to the house of Mary the mother of Mark.

It was difficult for these good saints to believe the answer to their prayer when the answer arrived and Peter knocked at the door.

And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying. And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda. And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate. And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is his angel. But Peter continued knocking; and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.—Acts 12: 12-16.

Before proceeding further, perhaps I should draw a line between faith and belief. Paul says, "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Hebrews 11: 1). Faith is belief plus assurance and evidence. If we do not have assurance and evidence, we just believe. The world believes in Jesus Christ. There are all kinds of opinions about him, but few there are who have studied the Scriptures, and prayed and fasted until their belief has been lifted up by assurance and evidence (experience with God) to become faith.

Righteousness

"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—James 5: 16.

Radios, television, watches, and other instruments will not produce the desired results unless everything connected with their functioning is right and in its proper place.

He that would approach God by prayer must earnestly and progressively cleanse and sanctify himself and keep the commandments. "He that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4. Prayer and the question of our personal righteousness are vitally related.

Concerning the priesthood Joseph Smith once said, "The rights of priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and the powers of heaven cannot be controlled or handled only upon the principles of righteousness" (Millennial Star, Volume 1, page 194).

Power

In the wake of righteousness, as it pertains to prayer, comes release of divine power. The Scriptures contain almost limitless and awe-inspiring promises of divine power when we reach the place in our development that we can measure up to the requirements and conditions governing the endowment of the powers of heaven.

And if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus, and it shall be done; but know this, it shall be given you what you shall ask.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6e, f.

Joseph Smith (Church History, Volume 3, page 438-439) clearly connects prayer and power.

There is a duty devolving alike upon these two quorums, i.e., the Twelve and Seventy, that it is well to notice here. We mean the duty of being prayerful men, for by this shall come their power . . . it follows that these men must be cared for by the divine Ruler of all, and must exercise the faithful prayer, the earnest desire of the soul, by which they are blessed of God.

I have been personal witness to prayer in administration to the sick being answered by immediate flow of divine power to accomplish results entirely outside the powers of medicine and man. I am awed by the recognition that such manifestations of divine goodness do not so much as scratch the surface. The great depths of divine power and blessing are waiting to burst forth as a mighty tide to sweep the Restoration Movement on to its glorious destination "when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it" (Isaiah 2: 1, 2).

A comparatively recent revelation beckons us on toward the fulfillment of prophetic promises.

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.—Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3.

Environment

"But behold I say unto you, that ye must pray always, and not faint."—II Nephi 14: 12.

There is no life without its native environment. Remove a fish from water and it will soon faint. Remove a bird from the air and plunge it into the habitat of the fish and it will drown. The same principle is true of all forms of life.

When I was a boy I saw a mole working in my mother's garden. He was

Question Time

Question:

Question Time states, "John, a descendant of Aaron through both parents, would properly inherit the right to be a priest according to the law of lineage." Does this law of lineage pass also through the mother?

Ohio

MRS. D. L. C.

Answer:

The particular priesthood bestowed upon Aaron was with a covenant of perpetuity, "that it should remain in him and his sons, an everlasting priesthood throughout all their generations." Daughters did not come under the covenant; neither is there any instance upon record where the priesthood succession was reckoned through a female member of the family. In latter-day revelation it is said of this priesthood, ". . . by virtue of the decree concerning the right of the priesthood descending from father to son" (italics mine). Evidently John's legal right under the covenant came through his father, Zacharias, notwithstanding his mother, Elizabeth, was of the family line.

The law of lineage operates in the church today pertaining to this particular priesthood which relates to the office of bishop in our church. The law says, "No man has a legal right to this office, to hold the keys of this priesthood, except he be a literal descendant and the first-born of Aaron." The Lord remembers his ancient covenant. Some confusion sometimes arises over the fact that the Lord so far has not designated any man of the Aaronic lineage for this office, yet the office is filled. Evidently the time has not come for this line of personnel to be established. In the meantime, since the law provides that men of the Melchisedec high priesthood may officiate in a lower office in case of need, they may temporarily act in this office. It says:

But as a high priest of the Melchisedec priesthood has authority to officiate in all the lesser offices, he may officiate in the office of bishop when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found; provided he is called and set apart and ordained unto this power by the hands of the First Presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood.—D. and C. 104: 8d.

The rule of lineal succession applies also to the office of president over the Melchisedec high priesthood, though it is not based upon the particular covenant made with Aaron and follows in a different line.

The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made.—D. and C. 104: 18.

During the years of apostasy when there was no church, the high office was in suspense and vacant, though the line of legal heirs was available but known only to God. They were "hid" from the world. With the restoration of the church the Lord called out the rightful heir and the office was again filled. As in the Aaronic, so in the Melchisedec priesthood the right of lineal succession in the presidency follows in the chosen line according to the promises made to the fathers. Men of other lineage may be called to officiate as high priests in other offices. The revelation says of the Aaronic priesthood, "It is expedient in me that you ordain priests unto me, of every race who receive the teaching of my law, and become heirs according to the promise."

(Statements relating to the Aaronic priesthood are based upon Exodus 28: 1; 29: 9; 40: 13-15; D. and C. 68: 2; 84: 3; 116: 1.)

Question:

Will the battle of Armageddon take place when Jesus comes at the beginning of the millennial reign when the wicked shall be destroyed (Revelation 16: 16; Joel 3: 9-14), or at the end of the thousand years when God shall send fire from heaven (Revelation 20: 7-9)?

MRS. E. G. F.

Answer:

The Scriptures describe a great battle or battles to be fought in the day of Christ's coming to judgment, which is prior to his final coming in glory and to which the armies of many nations will be gathered. John calls the battle

"Armageddon," which is a symbolic name alluding to Megiddo where two outstanding historic battles were fought by Israel. One was under Deborah (Judges 4) against Jabin, king of Canaan, who sent a mighty army with six hundred chariots which was almost annihilated. Thus Israel was delivered from a most grievous bondage of twenty years' standing. The second was under Gideon, judge of Israel, who gathered an army of 32,000 for defense against the Midianite army of 135,000. The Lord assumed the direction and reduced Gideon's army to 300 men, by whom he brought terrible defeat to the Midianites, leaving only 15,000 of them. The victory was the Lord's. Both battles were fought at Megiddo.

These battles were alluded to by the prophets in describing the great latter-day conflict, the intent being to show that the Lord holds the hand of power in war, to give victory or defeat as he wills. "The Lord, mighty in battle," is not bound by the disparity in numbers and equipment but is able to turn the tide of victory to the answering of his purposes. When the world gathers to the greatest battle ever known, with all the power that human hands can command, divine power will defeat the wicked to the saving of God's people. That is Armageddon.

The battle mentioned in Revelation 20: 7-9 and Doctrine and Covenants 85: 35 comes at the close of the millennium, the last in which Satan and evil are involved. It will free the people of God once and forever from threat of evil.

Question:

What was the language spoken by the family of Noah?
Indiana

Mrs. A. U. M.

Answer:

We do not know. It goes back too far into antiquity. The account of the flood we have in the Bible was written many years later in the contemporary language of the historians.

Blessing Others Today

By Leona Hands

AT THE URGENT REQUEST of friends in Canada whom we were visiting, we attended an evening church service with them. It was quite an experience for both of us.

The church itself had no particular claim to beauty or grandeur, though we were impressed by the spacious grounds surrounding it. Set well back from the street the black concrete building, almost covered with climbing green ivy, wore a look of quiet dignity. Neatly trimmed grass and shrubs showed evidence of care and attention.

On entering the building we noted the same simplicity that marked the exterior. Plainness seemed to be the keynote, but everywhere was order and a spotless cleanliness that was appealing and conducive to worship.

The usher had scarcely seated us when a door at the front of the church opened and two men entered the rostrum. The first was a quiet-mannered, middle-aged man whom we judged to be the pastor. The other appeared much younger, perhaps around thirty-five. This must be the evangelist who had impressed our friends with his sermons that were "different"—the speaker we could not afford to miss hearing.

A rather lengthy invocation was offered by the pastor, accompanied by many low-toned "amen"s and "Yes, Lord"s from members of the congregation. We found this practice to be somewhat distracting, but subsequent events proved it to be an accepted part of the service.

THE PRAYER ENDED and after the pastor was seated, the evangelist stepped forward. He gave the congregation a wide, friendly smile, spoke a few words of greeting, and opened the huge pulpit Bible. Taking his text from I Peter, chapter three, he read the eighth to twelfth verses, giving particular emphasis to the ninth verse, "Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing."

"Now, I want you to take your hymnals and turn to Number 180," he said. "This is my favorite hymn. You may remain seated but, please, everyone sing."

And everyone did. The song was new to us but easy to follow. The words had a special appeal all their own. It was the chorus that we liked best, noting as we sang, along with the others, that the words resembled a prayer:

Make me a blessing, make me a blessing,
Out of my life, may Jesus shine,
Make me a blessing, O Savior, I pray
Make me a blessing to someone today.

"Don't put your hymnals away," the evangelist said, raising his hands in a warning gesture. "I may ask you to sing this song again. I liked the way you sang it—as if you meant every word of it, and I sincerely hope you did, for in a moment I am going to ask a few questions.

"The year 1952 is over," he continued. "Tell me, during those 365 days were you 'a blessing to someone'?"

There followed a veritable shower of "amen"s and "Yes, Lord"s from the congregation. Apparently all church members were responding vocally to the question.

"Let's have a showing of hands," the minister urged further. All around us hands were going up while we searched our own minds, not wanting to appear conspicuous by not taking part. I ventured a glance at my companion whose hand was but slightly raised. What was he thinking? I remembered a particular time when he kept a neighbor's walks free of snow while both husband and wife were recovering from the effects of an auto accident. And I had sent over some baked goods. How much of a blessing was that? I wondered, careful not to hold my hand too high.

APPARENTLY SATISFIED that all had taken part, the evangelist beamed at his audience. "Splendid," he remarked. "That was fine—100 per cent I think. Let's continue. Let's proceed to cut the old year in half. What about the last six months of 1952? Were you a blessing to someone during those twenty-six weeks?"

Again the "amen"s and "Yes, Lord"s resounded freely. Did I imagine it, or was the response not quite so hearty? No, I was right, for when the speaker called for a showing of hands his face registered his disappointment.

"Don't tell me you haven't sung this song for over six months," he chided. "I'm sure you have, for it is one of the favorite hymns of our people wherever I go. I see lots of folks nodding their heads. Of course you've been singing it.

And do you mean to tell me—you who did not raise your hands—that you have been asking God to make you a blessing to someone and he hasn't answered your prayers? For this song is a prayer, you know. I wonder if you are aware that often you are singing and praying at the same time.

"I should like to caution you to follow the words of the hymns you sing a little more closely," he went on, earnestly. "Many of these songs were written under stress or during severe trial and are definite prayers. I want you to do some deep thinking," he continued after a moment's hesitation. "We are about to cut our time again. Aside from Christmas when you have all no doubt been a blessing to others, and have, in turn, been abundantly blessed, how many of you were a blessing to someone during the remaining three months of the old year?"

Now the "amen"s and "Yes, Lord"s were few and faint indeed. I was much too busy with my own thoughts to note the number of hands raised. Could one count a gift of cookies to a shut-in, a hospital visit, or perhaps an ironing done for a sick neighbor? Voice of conscience: That was only a small ironing. It was disquieting to realize that most of my deeds of kindness fell in the same category as the ironing. And what about being a blessing to those one lived with every day? Wouldn't that be equally as important?

The speaker's voice cut into my thoughts. "Nineteen fifty-two is past and gone," he was saying. "We are well into another year. I am not going to ask you to take inventory of these past weeks. Let's come right down to the present. What about today? Is there any one person present who has been a blessing to someone—today?"

A stillness came over the congregation. Not a sound could be heard in the silence that filled the church.

Finally, the evangelist closed the Bible. "May I offer you a challenge for this new year?" he asked as he gazed earnestly at the people. "Why not adopt this hymn as a theme song of service for 1953? Sing it often and mean it. Go out and make it come true. Resolve to be a blessing to someone every day that you live, and you shall find greater avenues of service and a full measure of happiness in the Lord's work."

THE NAME of the evangelist? I do not remember it. He was a non-denominational speaker from the States, our friends told us. I had no difficulty remembering the song. After we returned home, a few days later, I found it in an old hymnbook which had been given to me years ago.

Studying the three verses and the chorus of the hymn, "Make me a blessing," I wondered under what circumstances the author had written the words. Had he a deep conviction that God blesses us so that we might bless others?

"Knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing," Peter admonishes. We are called to be Saints. Inheriting the blessings of God, is it part of our calling to bless the lives of others? It is a sobering thought and a deep obligation. "Bless me, Lord" is the daily petition of the followers of the Master. Coupled with "and make me a blessing" is the way of charity toward others. It is something all of us can work at. Who can tell how far-reaching are the effects of deeds of kindness? And the results in personal happiness cannot be estimated. The field of service is unlimited and wide open.

"When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of your God," good King Benjamin counseled his people in Book of Mormon days.

Love and service go hand in hand. "Loving and serving each other, the Savior looks on us with joy," we have often sung from Zion's Praises. As we pray daily for God's blessings, let us also pray for him to open our eyes to ways that we, in turn, may bless others.

To Enter the Kingdom

After the temptation Jesus received word that his friend and fellow minister, John the Baptist, had been cast into prison.

Jesus left Judea and went north into Galilee and dwelt in the seacoast town called Capernaum. The Bible says, "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matthew 4: 16). That was the message preached by John (Matthew 3: 28).

To repent is to turn away from evil and turn to that which is good. Repentance is not sorrow, but godly sorrow leads to repentance. Jesus came to establish the kingdom of heaven here on earth. He invites all to enter this kingdom. But first they must repent—turn from wickedness and do the works of the kingdom.

The kingdom is not a place for sinners; it is a spiritual organization to save sinners. Jesus invites and urges sinners to repent, to clean up and unite with the kingdom-minded people, to render full obedience to all the just requirements of God.

Meditations on Zion

By Harry Whipple

WHILE MEDITATING one day I began speculating on Zion. What will it look like physically? How large an area will it cover—all of the United States, or perhaps all of North America as some have suggested? Will it be a self-governing state or a government within a government? Will there be factories, stores, farms, warehouses, and all the other things which go to make up our complicated society of today?

All of these questions are very interesting and worthy of answers, but the questions which are most important are about the people. What sort of people will build Zion? Is there a yardstick or a formula for measuring the quality of a Saint to determine his value as a Zion builder?

All Reorganized Latter Day Saints who have taken upon themselves the name of Jesus Christ and agreed to keep his commandments should be potential Zion builders; they, even now, should be engaged in work of a Zion nature. All may serve according to the gifts of God unto them and the talents which they possess. We cannot all be a Moses, an Isaiah, a Peter, or a Joseph Smith. Some of us may be able only to give a cup of cold water to a thirsty traveler or to put a few pennies in the collection. Perhaps our prayers for the sick or our earnest testimonies are our task for today. Whatever the task, we should do it wholeheartedly in a spirit of love and devotion.

Finding an example of the ideal person is quite a job. We are all made of clay and subject to the trials and temptations peculiar to this life. Yet God has placed within each of us the spirit of life and has given us a measure of intelligence that we might be able to make right decisions and avoid evil, that we might be able to exercise the agency given to mankind in the beginning. But time and experience have shown that men have not always made wise decisions, or avoided the results of their mistakes. Yet we have learned that there is within every individual a desire to do that which is right; a desire to appear at his best in the eyes of his associates. The problem is how to build up that desire for good until it becomes the dominating spirit.

IT WOULD SEEM that the place to begin Zion-building is in the lives of our people. A sense of responsibility toward others must be developed in us. We must recognize the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; for our attitude toward God, toward our fellow men, and toward our possessions will determine our fitness for the kingdom.

Jesus is the yardstick by which we may measure our stature, and the gospel contains the formula for our spiritual growth. If we obey it we shall be free from greed, lusts of the flesh, and all worldly habits which hinder our spiritual development. Then will we be in a position to receive the Spirit to aid us in our efforts at kingdom-building.

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8: 36.

SOME MAY have thought of Zion as a city of refuge, a place of rest and relaxation. Yet the chief purpose for it is the establishing of certain conditions which will make possible the full development of her people. Her industries, churches, schools, and trade are not the ends but instruments to aid in the building of people.

It will be a place where co-operative effort will be at its best without the sacrificing of individual initiative or detracting from free agency. Man's inherent yearning for the warmth of the co-operating group is equal to his desire for individual freedom. In Zion both are possible.

We are living in an age when men fear cold, rugged individualism about as much as Communism. Voluntary effort is the secret of our philosophy. A free, unregimented, dignified, and dedicated people will be her citizenry.

When we can show to the world that this is what we stand for, we shall be able to arouse those who now float between the two tides of ruthless collectivism and rugged individualism. Then will the two-fold purpose of a Zion be manifest:

(1) That she may be an ensign to the people from which the gospel shall go out to the nations of the earth.

(2) That the body of Christ (the church) may be perfected before he presents it to God the Father.

To see Zion become a reality, we must begin living it today. Not only people will be the builders of Zion, but Zion will be the builder of people—a righteous, perfect people.

The Fine Art of Receiving

By Marguerite Constance

AMONG A FEW MATERIAL treasures within my home are two finely etched antique vases, carefully handled and preserved not because of their monetary value and beauty but in remembrance of one of the best lessons I have ever learned, a lesson in "the fine art of receiving."

One grows up with the echo of such frequently used phrases as, "What an unselfish person she is" or "She never thinks of herself but gives and gives to others." And a warm, smug feeling envelops the heart of the giver along with the intense joy and happiness that always accompanies the gift when "self" is made a part of it. This, of course, is as it should be, and I had always thought that one of the finest goals a woman could attain was that of true unselfishness as emphasized through the giving of self in service as well as the material gift, until the two vases brought me to the realization that unselfishness is not a one-sided characteristic, but it definitely has two parts.

MRS. ROBERTS was an elderly woman who came every week to give my two small daughters dramatic lessons. I liked her and appreciated her "extras" in time and effort, so I endeavored in various ways to show this appreciation by driving her to the next lesson or arranging with the branch officials for her to use the church for recitals and the other many small favors that a woman has the ability to pass on to one she respects and loves.

One day before the lessons, this dear old lady handed me a carefully wrapped parcel and asked me to open it. I did so, and gazed in amazement at the two etched vases the package contained. She smiled at my astonishment and laughed, "For you, my dear, as a gift from a friend."

"But," I stammered, "these are so beautiful and valuable, too. I don't want you to do this for me. I don't want you to give me something that I know you have treasured for years." And I held them toward her, almost crying in my earnestness. Immediately Mrs. Roberts' face grew stern as she very peremptorily ordered me to be seated in my own living room.

"You must take those vases," she exclaimed, "or I shall never again let you do anything for me. I see you have not learned one of the most valuable lessons in life, and that is that while it is good to give and sometimes creates a real sacrifice to do so, yet it is just as good to receive." I looked at her questioningly and she told me the following story.

MANY YEARS BEFORE when Mrs. Roberts was in her mid-forties and a widow, she lived next door to a young woman who was burdened with several tiny children, near poverty, and hard work. My friend apparently spent much of her spare time in attempting to make life less arduous for the young mother by baby-sitting to give her time for shopping and recreation, helping with the huge ironings, cooking various dainties to relieve the monotony of the necessarily economic meals for the little family next door. She must have gained much pleasure in this giving of herself, as even in the telling Mrs. Roberts face glowed with reflected joy brought by the remembrance of this part of her life.

Then the tables were suddenly turned. Mrs. Roberts became ill, and while she was in bed but a few days she was many weeks regaining strength and health. She accepted the help the young neighbor gave her while she lay in bed, but there came a day when the young woman slipped into Mrs. Roberts' kitchen and then on through the house, gathering together all the soiled linens and clothes she could find. Just as I had remonstrated over the vases, so my friend had exclaimed as she grabbed the bundle of clothes, "My dear, I won't let you do my laundry. You are already too burdened with your young children. Now I am stronger and I'll manage."

The young woman's face turned white as she answered, "You don't want me to do your washing?"

"No," Mrs. Roberts answered kindly, "I don't, and it is too much expense and work on your part to keep bringing me over the little custards and fruit cups you do. I can manage now."

The young woman turned away, went to the door without a word, then suddenly turned. "Mrs. Roberts," she exclaimed, "I always thought of you as being the kindest and most unselfish woman I ever knew. I was wrong. You are extremely selfish. You want all the joy of giving, but you will never let anyone give to you. From now on I cannot accept any more favors from you." And she walked away.

Mrs. Roberts' eyes were sad now as she turned to me sitting on the divan, the two vases on my lap where my fingers were slowly tracing the fine etching. "You know, she meant what she said. Never again did she really let me do anything for her. We both lost much because I had failed to learn the fine art of receiving, as well as that of giving."

I said no more, but I walked over to her and kissed her lightly on her white hair. "Thank you, Mrs. Roberts, for the lovely vases, but more than that, thank you for one of the most valuable lessons I have ever learned."

THIS HAPPENED many years ago, but as I have treasured the lesson of the two vases, I have come to recognize that while sometimes it takes considerable sacrifice to give the gifts of love and respect, sometimes it takes far greater effort and sacrifice of self in the form of pride and patience to accept a gift.

It is not easy to see a small child sacrifice over a period of weeks or maybe months the little luxuries a ten-cent allowance will buy in order to purchase a gift for an anniversary for mother. It is so much simpler to raise the allowance or whisper in friend husband's ear that the little one has "ideas" and an extra fifty-cent piece or dollar would help. The joy in giving is in the sacrifice and then in the truly happy attitude and delight of the person who receives that gift. If a third party enters into this little game of giving and receiving, the depth of real feeling is lost.

WHAT ABOUT the elderly or infirm person who comes for a visit in the home or of necessity suddenly finds himself a part of the home! It is real joy to make life easier for an aging or infirm parent, to cook special meals, to see that the furniture is so placed that it does not interfere with uncertain steps, and in many cases to rearrange personal habits to fit around his needs. This feeling of deep satisfaction and well-being is brought about by the sense of giving of oneself to make life happier and easier for another through genuine sacrifice and real effort. Then the time comes when the older person tries to prepare a "surprise" meal or clean the bathroom. The failing eyes and shaking fingers may with great effort mend a piece of fine linen, put to one side awaiting the right moment for the tedious care of such work. An older man may attempt to cut the lawn or keep the neglected flower beds clean. The first impulse is to tenderly steer the loved one into an easy chair and explain, "You shouldn't. That is too hard on you." True, it is at first difficult to luxuriate with the evening paper while with slow, measured steps a meal is being prepared, or to take needed extra time at other jobs while the lawn is being cut in relays. How much joy and happiness is lost, though, because it is difficult for the most of us to receive the gifts of aged or infirm hands, both to the would-be giver and to the one who will receive.

SUDDENLY THE CHILDREN are grown, and out of the "first fruits" of their labors they bring with happy faces and loving joy gifts that may be beyond their meager means to supply, a few of the luxuries they have seen parents do without through the expensive years of rearing and educating a family. Perhaps the height of the lesson on receiving is evidenced here not alone by the natural delight and happiness of receiving a gift from a son or daughter but untarnished by any remonstrance over the actual sacrifice made by the young person. But even more difficult than accepting the material gift is the gracious and grateful acknowledgment of the effort the son or daughter puts forth in rearranging a familiar home pattern of action or decoration in an attempt to share with parents the knowledge gained away at school or experience in a new business in attempting to make home a better and easier place for mother and father.

Often one hears the expression of "turning the other cheek," but could not a new interpretation be put upon that phrase? Feeling my way carefully, experimenting in a new field of "receiving," I have reaped perhaps the greatest rewards and joy in hunting an opportunity and making it possible for an unfriendly individual or almost "enemy" to do me a favor. To put oneself in debt to one's enemy is, perhaps, the most difficult position to achieve, but it is almost humanly impossible for another to carry hard feelings when he has invested a part of himself in a life by the giving of "self" to another. Returning good for evil, sharing a meal or something precious with another may be necessary to first "cut the ice" that has been formed through misunderstandings or hurt feelings, but it is a poor foundation upon which to build a renewed friendship and respect that is prepared by one-sided giving. Many enmities have been nursed and friendships lost because one of the parties concerned had not learned the "art of receiving."

WHEN ONE first approaches this idea of gracious receiving, the field seems limited and opportunities for gaining experience in this lesson appear few, but the field is a most fertile one. Not only in the home, among friends and relatives, but within the church itself is unmeasured opportunity for expansion of this fine art. The inexperienced can learn best through doing. Even the stranger on the street who gives a cheerful smile or a timid nod presents an opportunity to demonstrate one's ability to respond gratefully to another's gift.

I look at my two vases, and, while visitors to my home admire their beauty and fine workmanship, my heart is filled with gratefulness to another who in her years of understanding and wisdom accepted repeatedly of my gifts to bring to me happiness. Then in turn she gave me one of the most precious gifts I have ever received—and in the receiving have had my life enriched many times—this lesson in the fine art of receiving.

Letter From Tahiti

By Gladys Tyree

IN SEPTEMBER, 1952, my husband and I were asked by the Joint Council if we would accept a four-year assignment to the Society Islands. This did not come as a complete surprise to us, since it had been prophesied to Alan on several occasions that he would serve the church in the islands of the sea. However, we did not expect that this prophecy would be fulfilled so soon.

We were to have a baby in early March and, after inquiring about medical facilities in Tahiti, decided we should wait until after it was born to leave for our mission. The Breckenridges had just returned from Tahiti and were living in Kansas City, so we had the opportunity to spend a great deal of time with them. We studied the language and talked over many of the problems of the mission. (Tahitian is spoken by the natives in their homes and churches, while French is used in the business houses and schools.)

As soon as possible we filed application for passports and visas, received the necessary immunizations, and began to pack our belongings. On February 22 our son, Lawrence Wayne (Larry for short), was born.

There are only a few ways of going from the States to Tahiti. The most satisfactory passage by ship is by way of the French Line which operates between Marseilles and Australia, passing through the Panama Canal and stopping at Tahiti. It is also possible to fly from the west coast. The costs of flying and sailing on the French ship are nearly the same, so we decided to fly. My parents live in California, and we wanted them to see their first grandchild before we left. Had it not been for this, we would have preferred traveling by ship, because there are so many layovers in going by air.

WE LEFT KANSAS CITY by train on Saturday, May 16, arrived in Los Angeles on Monday morning, and left Wednesday morning by way of Pan American for Honolulu. Eleanor Roosevelt was also on this flight; she was beginning a round-the-world trip, heading first for Tokyo. She stopped to admire Larry and to visit awhile with us. The hum of the motors seemed to soothe the baby, and he slept peacefully all the time we were in flight, waking up only to eat every four hours. We also met an Italian couple who were on their honeymoon. They spoke very little English, and we spoke no Italian, but we did manage to carry on an interesting conversation.

We arrived in Honolulu early in the evening. As each person leaves the plane he is given beautiful leis of fresh flowers. Ours were made of Plumiera, fragrant delicate yellow blossoms. Some of the Saints met us at the airport and took us to the Crownover home. Here we had a three-day layover and were able to meet many of the Hawaiian members and see the lovely sights on the island. We enjoyed visiting with the Crownovers and talking about our mutual friends in the States. On Saturday night we boarded a Canadian Pacific plane bound for the Fiji Islands. As we left Honolulu, a group of the Saints saw us off with more leis—including a baby-sized one for Larry, presented by one of the children.

WE ARRIVED in Nandi, Fiji, early the next morning. However, during the night we had gained several hours and crossed the international date line, so we landed on Monday morning. We did not have any Sunday that week. We were to leave from Suva airport on the opposite side of the island, and the only way to get there was by air. Since no plane was scheduled to leave for eight hours, we went through customs and then spent the remainder of our time sight-seeing. Taxis are very cheap, so we hired one to drive us around the city. I remembered having seen pictures of Fijian natives with stiff bushy hair sticking straight out from their heads, but I had no idea they still wore it that way. Many of the men, particularly government workers, were dressed in tight knee-length skirts. With these unique hair-dos, they seemed to have heads twice the normal size.

The Fiji Islands, as well as Samoa and the Cook Islands where we stopped later, are possessions of Great Britain. The natives on Fiji, both in Nandi and in Suva, appeared to be depressed. The majority of them live in extreme poverty and filth. The entire standard of living on the island is low and seems to be reflected in the personalities of the people. Many immigrants have come from India and, being more aggressive than the natives, have taken over most of the jobs. This has made it hard for the Fijians to make a living and has helped to dampen their spirits.

Late Monday afternoon we were able to get on a little two-engine plane and fly from Nandi to Suva. Here we spent two days waiting for the plane to take us the rest of the journey. The electrical current on Fiji is not the usual 110, so I was unable to use my bottle sterilizer in preparing the baby's formula. Instead I had to use a big coffee urn in the kitchen of the hotel where we stayed. Early Wednesday morning we boarded a four-motor amphibious plane operated by the Teal Lines of Australia. Sitting across the aisle from us was a young Mormon couple with a little boy just a week older than Larry. They were on their way to Apia, Samoa, as missionaries for two years. We reached Apia early in the afternoon but had a ten-hour layover; during this time we saw some of the churches—all very old and in a bad state of repair. The natives of Samoa, as those in Fiji, immediately sensed that we were Americans. Several of them told us that they always can distinguish Americans because they are so friendly.

WE LEFT SAMOA late Wednesday night, crossed the international date line again, and arrived in Aitutaki early Wednesday morning. We stayed here just long enough for breakfast and for the plane to be refueled, then we were off for Tahiti. We went through several storms which slowed us down—the only rough weather we had on our entire trip—and arrived in Papeete about an hour later than we were expected.

Tahiti looks very beautiful from the air with its high mountain peaks and vivid coloring. Our plane landed in the lagoon about two o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Again we were presented leis made of tropical flowers; then we were taken to the church for a formal introduction to the Saints. After a hymn and prayer we shook hands with everyone. That night, as is the custom, they had a reception for us. We were given gifts by all the departments, and songs about our arrival were sung—a few of them were in English. The reception was a most pleasant and heart-warming experience. The natives are naturally sociable, and welcome such an opportunity to get together. At the reception Alan gave a speech in Tahitian, which pleased them very much.

Our journey is over, but our work is just beginning. There are problems connected with such an assignment, but there are compensations, too. Seeing how much church membership means to these people has been ample reward for us already. I am more appreciative, too, of what the early missionaries of the church accomplished. We today talk of the sacrifice we make, but ours is small beside the sacrifice of those who have gone before us. And anyway if we were to give everything we have we still would be returning only that which the Lord first gave to us.

TAHITIANS ARE fond of music, and it has a dominating influence on their lives. It can have an influence for good only as they learn to appreciate and produce good music. If their social and moral standards are to be elevated, so also must their musical standards. Alan is especially qualified to minister in this capacity, since he majored in music. He is directing the choir, girls' chorus, and orchestra. He is giving every member of the orchestra a half-hour lesson each week, and already performances are improving.

We are looking forward to the rest of our four years in the Islands and hope that, with God's help, we may be able to minister to these people in whatever way they need. During this time we shall appreciate hearing from our friends; nothing is quite so welcome as news from home. Our address is Box 92, Papeete, Tahiti.

Have You Ever Seen a Passion Play?

Artist Alta Seal and three members of the cast

ARE YOU ONE of those who would like to see the Passion Play at Oberammergau? Or perhaps you have seen Josef Meier and the Black Hills cast at home or on tour. If so, you undoubtedly found it thrilling to live in imagination those emotion-packed days in Jerusalem, to walk beside Jesus with his disciples, to share his pain as he was misunderstood and tormented, to see him before Herod and Pilate with Caiaphas plotting his crucifixion, to hear him speak from the cross and to see him come forth from the tomb. These were moments for memory and reflection.

But something was missing! The added testimony to Christ's resurrection—his ministry in Zarahemla.

Can't you hear the prophecy of Samuel added to the Passion Play? Can't you see him walking into the wicked city of Zarahemla and, with concern in his eyes, prophesying the forthcoming birth and ministry of Christ? Then—at the moment when death seems the victor at the cross—can you hear the storm mounting in fury in America? And the wonder of it—Christ comes to minister to the marveling throng in Zarahemla.

Parables for Today

By Harry Whipple

THE GREATEST TEACHER of all time often used parables to illustrate some truth he wished the people to understand. Or, as we would say in modern-day parlance, he illustrated his point by telling a story.

In poverty-ridden Palestine, hunger, famine, and disease were rampant. The people labored under the yoke of Rome and the emperor's tax collectors. They had wandered so far from God and his teachings that their eyes were blinded to the truth. Superstition, hate, and revenge were part of their everyday life. So Jesus oftentimes could best illustrate the true meaning of his message by comparing it to something familiar to them. When asked, "Is it lawful to pay tribute to Caesar?" he asked to see a coin, then asked, "Whose inscription is this?" When they answered, "Caesar's," he said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's." In other words, use the things of the world to meet your worldly obligations but do not forget to give God that which you owe him—your love, devotion, and a godly life, as well as your tithes and offerings.

WE HAVE COME a long way since Jesus walked the earth in the flesh. In nineteen hundred and fifty years man has learned much. Through education many old superstitions have been disproved. We are learning the folly of hate through the futility of wars. We are beginning to realize the necessity of learning to live together in peace. Gradually the light of the gospel penetrates the darkness, resulting in changes in the world for the better. Yet we are a long way from what we might be, and should be, had we followed more closely the teachings of the Master. People throughout the land are coming to realize the need for social reforms to correct the inequalities which exist. We are gradually overcoming old prejudices, greed, and selfishness; we are learning the meaning of true brotherhood. While we have tried long to attain a more desirable, more equitable way of life, we have not as yet tried God's plan. We show by our deeds that we are not yet ready to walk all the way with him.

IF JESUS were with us in the flesh today, how would he answer our questions and help us solve our problems? I can almost hear someone say, "Lord, I am a man with a family. My time is mostly spent in earning a livelihood for my wife and children, with enough over for taxes. Now I would like to give some time to church work, but my family likes to have me home evenings; and then I like to watch television, and read the paper. To whom should my first and greatest loyalty be?"

I believe Jesus would say, "Give unto your wife and children that which is justly theirs, and the same to your community, but do not forget God and the needs of the church." And he might add: "Any man who provides for the needs of his family and serves his community honestly and well, walking in righteousness, humbly doing good, is a living testimony to the power and goodness of God. And wheresoever you are called to serve, there labor to the best of your ability and you shall have your reward."

AND THEN I HEAR some tired mother say, "Lord, I love the church work and desire to serve more. I would like to visit the sick and teach in the church school, but I have several children and the press of housework with the many chores of caring for my family's needs and comfort seems to take about all my time. How, then, can I serve thee best?"

We might very well hear the Savior say, "To visit the sick or to teach a class in church school is a laudable ambition. And they who do this work well are profitable servants of mine. Yet in serving your family as wife and mother you are also serving me. For to rear your children to love God—teaching them to respect the rights and privileges of others, to be good citizens and devout Christians—is no mean task. And if you do this work well, you will find other avenues of service opening to you. Anyone who does well the tasks at hand will be rewarded. If your Lord were given a more prominent place in the homes of the people, there would be far less sorrow and insecurity in the world today."

Yes, I think Jesus might use a story, perhaps one referring to some everyday occurrence or custom to give us a better understanding of our place in the scheme of things. Then he might add, by way of advice to us all, "Be patient, my friends. Serve wherever the opportunity presents itself." The perfecting of the Saints is a slow, gradual process—not something to be attained in a day. There is no magic formula. The way may seem rugged and the lessons difficult. Yet they who are patient and diligent will be polished, perfected, and made ready for a place in the kingdom of heaven.

Letters

A Letter of Gratitude

Like other members of this church, I have had blessings of many kinds. I have been healed of illnesses, and I have received many gifts from God's people that have made my life easier. Recently my husband received a caretaker's job here at a cemetery. We live in a cottage on the shore of a lake at the back of the cemetery, and each morning I go outside to talk aloud with my Master. In doing this I have found a new "closeness" to him. Large mountains stand in front of my home, and there are fir trees around it. It is everything I want in a home. I have a good husband and son and daughter. I am able to attend church services of my own faith. Could I ask for more?

I believe that if we truly serve God we can experience Zion here and now with blessings abundant.

MRS. WILLIAM G. WHITE
Corvallis, Oregon

Note of Thanks

I want to thank all who sent cards and letters when I asked for prayers. I received them from all over the United States and Canada. They were a great comfort to me, and I am now blessed with better health.

If there are any members living in or near Fredonia, Kansas, I shall appreciate their visiting my brother, John Coddington, who lives about four miles from town. His daughter, Fern Andrews, is telephone operator in Fredonia.

Prayers Requested for Albert Davis

My uncle, Albert T. Davis, has been confined to his hotel room for several weeks with an acute attack of sciatica. He is eighty-eight years old and has been an active worker in the Reorganized Church for fifty years. Administration has brought relief to him, and with the aid of crutches he is able to walk. His greatest need now is for ground-floor quarters in the area near Central Church in Los Angeles for a reasonable amount of rent. I am disabled and live forty-five miles away and have been unsuccessful in my attempts to get him properly located.

Uncle Albert's mind is alert, and he enjoys telling the gospel story. It was through his example and counsel that my wife and seven children were brought into the Reorganized Church. He richly deserves the prayers and messages of comfort of the Saints. His present address is Brighton Hotel, Fourth and Hill, Los Angeles, California.

Note of Appreciation

I am truly grateful for the book, Zion's Problems. I plan to make it available to all in our small group so that they too can read it. I also appreciate the Church School Handbook; I have found it to be most helpful.

Correction

In the Biographical Sketch of Swen Swenson, the names of two towns were misspelled. His birth place was Halsingborg instead of Helsingfors, and his first home in Missouri was at Lebeck, not Lebec.

burrowing through the moist, soft earth pushing up the soil as he went. I scooped up a shovelful of earth—mole and all—and put my captive in a tin can. He was utterly miserable and restless. In fact I discovered before long that my mole was literally grinding his snout off by incessantly pushing at the bottom of the tin can in futile attempts to find his way back to his native habitat.

The fall of Adam removed man from his native habitat—the Garden of Eden. Christ came with the gospel plan for restoring man to his native environment from which he had fallen. Prayer is the open window of the soul through which there comes to our souls from the presence of God the life-giving refreshment of his Spirit. If we close the window of prayer, the air will soon stagnate and we will sicken and die spiritually. Nephi has well said, "Ye must pray always, and not faint" (II Nephi 14:12).

As air and light enter a house through windows, so the light, warmth, and life of the Spirit of God enters our souls through prayer—"And ye receive the Spirit through prayer" (Doctrine and Covenants 63:16).

Let us rip down the dark curtains of unbelief and lethargy and open wide the windows of prayer that the glorious sunlight of God's Spirit may shine into our lives to quicken us and empower us to rise to the great challenge of God's work in the latter days. (To be continued)

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Cleveland of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary by holding open house at their home on Sunday, June 14. They were married on June 16, 1903, in Bungay, Illinois. They have lived in Independence since 1948, after residing forty-five years in or near Kennett, Mo.

The Clevelands have six living children: Floyd C., John A., Lloyd E., Francis W., Mrs. Iva Stone, and Mrs. Frieda Hughes. They also have ten grandchildren.

Mrs. Cleveland has been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty-three years, and Mr. Cleveland, who holds the office of priest, has belonged for thirty-five years, and is now an employee of the Social Service Center. Two of their sons also are in the priesthood: Floyd is a priest, and Lloyd, an elder. Lloyd is serving as president of the Northeastern Illinois District.

Children Baptized

HUMBER BAY, ONTARIO.—The missionary series during April was well attended and climaxed on May 3 by the baptism of two candidates. A. M. Pelletier, Jr., baptized and confirmed Betty Graham, assisted by Herbert S. Brown. Walter L. Thorpe baptized A. Arthur J. Jones and assisted Fred C. LeFeuvre in the confirmation.

On Mother's Day, the pastor presented the eldest mother, Mary Ann Whitworth, and the youngest mother, Bernice Evelyn Hodgson, with floral tributes.

On June 7 two young brothers were ordained to the higher priesthood, in the Aaronic order. They were Gordon Kent, from teacher to priest, with the ordination by Al Pelletier, Jr., and Alexander Rowett from deacon to priest, with the ordination by William G. Brown.

Five girls and four boys were baptized and confirmed on Children's Day. These children were Trudie Wilson, Patricia Smith, Rena May Pycok, Jacqueline McLean, Margaret Hodgson, Edward Thorpe, John Smith, John David Wry (Williams), and Wayne Rowett. Officiating in baptisms were Walter L. Thorpe, Alexander E. Rowett, and Herbert S. Brown. Oswald R. Moore, James Pycok, William G. Brown, and Walter L. Thorpe officiated at the confirmation services.

Rebecca Ann and William Michael Graham, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Graham, were blessed on March 29. On April 25, Jeremy Gordon Kent, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kent, was blessed by his grandfather, James W. Dadson. On June 14, Debra Yvonne Muir, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Muir, was blessed by her grandfather, Carl Muir.—Reported by THORA M. JONES

Semiannual Conference Held

LOGAN, IOWA.—A prayer service at 9 A.M. opened the Northwest Iowa District semi-annual conference, which met June 21 at Logan. District President S. R. Coleman was in charge, assisted by other district officers. At the close of this service Patriarch Elvin Baughman brought words of admonition and encouragement to the Saints.

At the eleven o'clock hour President W. Wallace Smith gave an outline of the work contemplated on the Auditorium. The Dow City choir sang at this service.

At one-thirty there were classes for each department. The men's group was in charge of W. Wallace Smith, with Sister Smith leading the women's group. District leader Herbert Floyd took charge of the young people.

A business session was conducted in the afternoon. This conference was the largest ever held in the district.—Reported by RUBY ADAMS

President Israel A. Smith Visits

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—President Israel A. Smith was in attendance at a seafood-barbecue luncheon served at the noon hour and in the afternoon, July 4. Bazaar material, flower plants, candy, and hot dogs also were sold. The proceeds of this effort—slightly over $600—will be applied to the branch budget to meet commitments to the General Church.

Rhonda Elizabeth Sutton, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Sutton, was blessed by Elders Delbert and Alman Tillman on June 7.

Elder Marshall Mizell was guest speaker at the evening service July 5.

Brother Gabriel Visits

GOODLAND, KANSAS.—Brother Gerald Gabriel of Colorado Springs, Colorado, was in the branch the first part of November and held services at the church on Sundays and Wednesday nights. He held cottage meetings on the other evenings. Several nonmembers were in attendance at the church services. Glenda Richardson and Ruth Alfred were baptized at the close of his series. Apostle D. Blair Jensen held services on November 20.

A Zion's League retreat was held here last fall. Several branches near Goodland were represented. A group of young adults from Goodland attended a retreat in Champion, Nebraska, in November. Four League members and two leaders enjoyed the yuletide retreat in Denver, Colorado, in December.

Several from the group attended District Days in Denver in October.

The senior choir, under the direction of O'ella Marolf, took part in the intercity church choir festival held in the high school auditorium February 22. Soloists at the Easter program this year were Shirley Cowan, Jean Terrill, and Glen Middleton.

The Kenneth Clark, Kenneth Ingram, and Kenneth Carl families have moved to new locations.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Marion Phillips, meets once a month at members' homes. They have served several dinners and banquets to help with the building fund. The new church building is not entirely completed.

At the close of a two weeks' series in May, Brother Herbert Lynn baptized Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Clark and son Hugh, and Mrs. Jean Harding.

About twenty-one children attended the one-week Bible school in June. Mrs. Grace Husman served as principal.

Brother Arthur Gibbs preached one evening at Goodland, and Elder J. R. Graybill and wife have been helping with the church services in Hill City, Kansas.

In June a number of young people attended youth camp at Palmer Lake, Colorado.—Reported by PAULINE ROBERTS

Osceola Mission Growing

OSCEOLA, MISSOURI.—The work at Osceola is going forth under the combined efforts of two priests, Brothers Charles Crabtree and Howard Kile. Mrs. Elmer Kile has been leader of the women's department since the mission was first organized two years ago. Through the promotion of various projects and with the aid of some donations, the women's department has banked over $400 toward the building of a church home. These ladies would like money-raising ideas from other groups.

Brother and Sister Charles Myers are leaders of the young people.

Brother Macrae visited recently, bringing some special singers and his old missionary organ. Ernest Kile recorded the program and has played it back in the homes of those who were unable to attend the preaching service. Brother Kile has been recording sermons and programs, and playing them to shut-ins, interested friends, and others who do not have the privilege of attending regular church services.—Reported by MRS. ELMER KILE

Vacation Church School Held

NELSONVILLE, OHIO.—Eighty-three children attended the vacation church school held from June 8-19 at the Jackson Street church. This school has been conducted for four years, with increasing attendance each year. Only twenty of these children were from Reorganized Latter Day Saint homes. Forty-one of the children who enrolled this year attended all sessions of the school. Brother Calvin French visited during one of the sessions. Sister Helen Norris was supervisor, and local teachers had charge of classwork.

The publisher of the Nelsonville Tribune visited the school and took pictures of the classes. These pictures and a write-up about the activities conducted were featured in the June 25 issue.

Recognition was also given Elder A. B. Kirkendall recently in the local newspaper in which a feature article appeared concerning the religious painting on the rear wall of the church in Creola, where he was pastor from 1887 until 1939.—Reported by EARL WOLFE and MARY CURTIS

Ordination Service

DESELM BRANCH, ILLINOIS.—Apostle Donald Chesworth met with the members of the branch on March 16 at a dinner in his honor in the church hall. Elders Cecil Ettinger and Lloyd Cleveland, of Aurora, were also guests. Brother Chesworth was speaker for the service that followed.

Elder Jacques Pement, of Boston, spoke at the service on Good Friday. On Easter, April 5, a short program was presented by church school classes. Special music was provided by the choir and soloists. Brother Pement gave the Communion message, which was followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In the afternoon a number of members attended the district conference at Aurora, and were happy that the calling of John O. Pement to the office of priest was approved at this meeting.

Brother Cleveland was speaker on April 19. An ordination service followed. Brother John Pement was ordained to the office of priest by Brother Cleveland, assisted by Brothers Earl D. Rogers and Russell D. Rogers. Other guest speakers have been William Pike, Sr., Kenneth Lusha, Victor Eklof, and Stephen Lester.

The newly organized young adult group served a ham and bean supper on February 16 at the American Legion Home in Manteno, Illinois. A good sum was contributed to the building fund from this activity.

The choir, with the assistance of Brother and Sister Richard Keir, has contributed much to the beauty and dignity of the worship services. Weekly practices are held.

The Women's Council sponsors two meetings each month. One is the regular women's meeting; the other is a family night.

Services on the first Sunday of each month are held in the Odd Fellows Hall in Bradley, Illinois, for the convenience of members in the Kankakee area. The building fund goal has been set at $5,000 for this year.

Dr. Harvey Grice, son of Patriarch and Mrs. John R. Grice, has been appointed manager of manufacturing and engineering of the Gains division of General Foods Corporation in Kankakee. Dr. Grice is now in Kankakee, and his wife and four children will join him soon.

Larry Dean Cavitt, infant son of Sgt. and Mrs. B. J. Cavitt of Havlock, North Carolina, was blessed May 31 by Elders Russell and Earl D. Rogers.

A branch picnic was held at Kankakee State Park at Altorf on July 4. The fellowship of the entire William E. Studtman family, of Otsego, Michigan, and the Chicago area, and numerous other friends made the day memorable.

On Sunday, July 12, Forrest Branch members were guests at services and shared a potluck dinner at the park. Brother and Sister Cecil Ettinger and family, Brother and Sister Harvey Grice, and Mary Ann Winegar also were guests.

Brother Ettinger was the speaker for the morning worship at which special music was provided by the choir and groups from both congregations.—Reported by VIDA ROGERS

Annual Election Held

WENATCHEE, WASHINGTON.— Priest Robert Buckingham performed the sacrament of baptism for Theda and John Moates in the Columbia River. Elders Wesley Lovitt and Bryon Buckingham gave the confirmation at the church a week later.

The annual election of officers was held July 12 under the supervision of Pastor Ronald Smith, who was sustained as pastor. Those elected to other offices were Dorothy Mendenhall, secretary; Vernon Pratt, treasurer; Neva Buckingham, women's leader; Fern Lovitt, church school director; Robert Buckingham, music leader and Zion's League supervisor; Bryon Buckingham, building committee, and Albert Gilstrap, auditor.

Wesley Lovitt and Bryon Buckingham were appointed as assistants to the pastor.—Reported by REA M. KEENER

Officers Elected

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—The following officers were elected for the coming year: E. E. Smith, city pastor; C. A. Ferguson, G. T. Glandon, C. H. Hamilton, and D. J. Gabriel, associate pastors; Norma Ann Kirkendall, director of leadership training; Mildred Ferguson, secretary; N. J. Weate, treasurer; Margaret Barker, women's leader; Robert E. Brush, youth leader; Marjorie Cross, music leader; Myron Myers, recreation; Robert J. Miller, publicity; Donald Huffman, book steward; and Florence Graham, Harry Neiman, Donald Downard, Merrill Weate, and D. J. Gabriel, finance committee.

Brother Gard Kirkendall was awarded the "Courage Cake" for the month of June by Courage, Inc., a local organization for the handicapped.

The church-sponsored softball team, entered in the North Senior Church League, has won all their games.

At last Columbus has a fine church parsonage for its General Church appointee, our city pastor. It is well situated in one of the finest areas of the city, 380 East Torrence Road, and will lend prestige to the church here.—Reported by ROBERT J. MILLER

Prayer Meetings Well Attended

MARION, ILLINOIS.—The priesthood meets each Wednesday evening after prayer service to study The Priesthood Manual. Renewed interest has resulted in attendance increasing from about ten to thirty-five or forty at prayer meetings.

The men of the branch have completely redecorated the upper auditorium of the church.

Missionary D. L. Kyser, who with his family is making his home in Marion, conducted a three weeks' series of meetings, concluding with ten baptisms. Five others have been baptized during the year. Five babies have been blessed.

O. P. Allen was elected pastor at the last business meeting, and he chose William Poore, Sr., and Norman Jackson to act as his counselors.

Gordon Lambert was chosen church school director. He was an outstanding graduate of the class of 1953.

Zion's League meets every Sunday evening before church services, with Brother Poore as leader. He and his family have recently moved from Champaign to Carbondale, where he is Director of Personnel at the University.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Pearl Cooce, meet the second and fourth Tuesdays each month for classwork and the first and third Thursdays for workshop.

Hazel Kyser is the teacher of the Tuesday night classes. One day each month has been set aside as finance day. The women have had bake sales, chicken dinners, ice cream and box suppers, penny-a-pound family nights, and other projects, and have contributed their share to the building fund. The women are also responsible for the upkeep of one of the missionary cabins at the Brush Creek reunion grounds.

The children's department has helped with the church worship programs and sponsored a Mother's Day program, an Easter egg hunt, and a Christmas party. Sister Vaughn is leader, and Norman Jackson is junior pastor.

An Easter cantata was directed by Geraldine Koblter.

Other officers of the branch are Myrtle Choate, clerk; Meribah Vaughn, book steward; F. E. Burklow, treasurer, and Glenna Jackson, publicity.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth conducted a series of meetings and baptized two.—Reported by GLENNA JACKSON

Family Circle Completed

CARTHAGE, MISSOURI.—On March 29 the Carthage Branch was host to members of the Carthage College Band. They presented concerts at the local high school auditorium and at the Sunday evening service at the church. Eldred Spain is a member of the band.

The children's department, under the leadership of Mrs. H. O. Plumb, presented the Mother's Day program. On May 11 the women's department sponsored a banquet in honor of the high school graduates, Shirley Masters, Barbara Plumb, David Janney, John Duckett, and Paul Sweet. Guest speaker was W. T. Lawhead, General Secretary of the Carthage YMCA.

Vacation church school was held for two weeks, with Merry Plumb as principal. Average attendance was twenty.

The music department, led by Elsie (Mrs. H. A.) Shank, presented a cantata on Easter Sunday, and the members of the choir and their families spent a social evening later at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Shank.

On Children's Day three young people were baptized in the pool at the YMCA by Elder Shank. They were Joanne York, Tommy Joe Goettel, and Edwin Masters. They were confirmed at the eleven o'clock service, at which time Janice Sue, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Marshall, was blessed by Elders A. M. Hogan and H. Davis.

A picnic in the park followed the Father's Day service, which was in charge of the Zion's League.

Ben Goettel was ordained to the office of deacon at the reunion at Racine on July 5.

Evangelist Ray Whiting held a series of meetings here from June 21-28. During the series, out-of-town specials were given by John Leslie of Joplin, and Bob and Joan Trimble of Pittsburg. Solos and duets were given by members of the local choir. Before the closing service on Sunday a baptismal service was held at the river, at which time a family circle was completed. Ervin Marshall and his son Gary were baptized by Elder Plumb, and confirmed the following Wednesday night by Elders Plumb and Shank.

At the business meeting held in June, the following officers were elected: H. O. Plumb, pastor; Karl Hobbs, church school director; Lorraine Shank, secretary and historian; Bill Shank, treasurer; Ernie Shank, minister of music; Nellie Hogan, women's supervisor; Hilde Shank, adult supervisor; Clayton Turner, young people's supervisor; Merry Plumb, children's supervisor; Carol Dowdy, publicity agent; John Shank, librarian; and Ben Goettel, custodian.

The Zion's League sponsored an ice-cream social on the church lawn June 19.

Visiting speakers the past few months have included Heman Davis of Colorado, Mark Mink, David Lohr, and Stephen Black of Joplin, John Wolf and Jim Jones of Webb City, Bill Miller and George Doubledede of Medoc.

Sunday evening services through the months of July and August will be held at the reunion grounds at Racine, Missouri.—Reported by HILDE SHANK hemla! See Nephi, Jonas, Timothy, and the children responding to his call.

WE HAVE OFTEN SPOKEN of the "second witness for Christ." It seems strange we have not before combined the witness of the Bible and the Book of Mormon in an expanded Passion Play, and yet we who are trying to do it now can well understand why it hasn't been done. It is a tremendous undertaking.

For instance, the job of making the Auditorium ready for the production. It is an ideal stage setting. It is large and has many stage levels, with a choir loft for a hill and openings at the top for the crucifixion and ascension scenes. There is room enough to reserve one side for Jerusalem and the other for Zarahemla; But think of all the settings to be built and painted. Almost impossible unless you have a Bud Henson and an Alta Seal near by.

And music, sound, lighting, costumes for more than one hundred! Bernard Butterworth is arranging music and will play the organ for a musical background. Harold Higgins and Roy Beck have charge of sound, and plan the first Auditorium use of the new development in stereophonics. You will experience the storm! Howard Lade and his crew are arranging the unusual lighting effects. Doris Clements will supervise the transforming of three hundred dollars worth of cloth into authentic costumes.

Virginia Henson has the large job of directing the production with its thirteen scenes to be interpreted wisely and blended together so that the story will live in the hearts of all who will see the drama. Roscoe Faunce, who takes the part of the narrator, Mormon, will also lend valuable counsel and support in direction.

The cast? Players are too numerous to mention in this brief article. Some familiar faces include a stake president, a prominent pastor, and a General Church secretary. Not so well known perhaps but mighty important are twenty-five children.

Two Zion's Leagues are sponsoring the production—Walnut Park and Eden Heights. The Center Stake Men's Club is underwriting the cost. Many people from Center Stake are helping to ready the drama for August 13 and 14.

Would you like to come? You are invited. If you live within driving distance come by car or chartered bus in small or large groups. Bring that friend of the church you have long wished to bring to independence. There will be special tours through the Auditorium and other church centers of interest during the afternoons. The Campus will be available for your picnic suppers and relaxation before curtain time. Then come early to the Auditorium to see OTHER SHEEP I HAVE, a drama of the Resurrection.

SHOW BUSINESS

At last "Call Me Madam" came to town. It's a pretty musical comedy in a beautiful setting of royal palaces, a story with a happy ending in which a poor American boy meets, falls in love with, and marries a lovely princess; a farce in which a crude old maid captures a cultured diplomat; a clever satire on the faults of some Americans.

That is the entertaining side. There is a serious side, too. Like so many of its kind, this film gives the impression that the great American dream is to sacrifice everything for a good time, to avoid a serious thought at all costs, and to convert the whole world to boogie-woogie. Thus we furnish ammunition to the Communists for their war of hatred and contempt against the free enterprise, "capitalistic" societies of the world.

BIG MEN WANTED

Why should men listen to the preacher? How does he know more than others what God requires of us? It is not that men are irreligious, but that the critical spirit has made them uncertain, even doubtful whether the questions so easily discussed by the preacher can be known. Such is the temper of the age in which we must work. It calls for men who shall be heard, who shall make themselves felt by the largeness of their spiritual manhood and by the divineness of their message.—Hoyt, "Work of Preaching."

PRODUCTION-LINE BUILDERS

Man's method is to manufacture. God's method is growth. When we have growth beyond the natural it is malignant and will kill. Yet we want to establish Zion tomorrow!
Cheville

ONE-SECOND SERMON

Too many of us tend to be like the old deacon who wound up a long prayer by saying "Use me, Lord, use me in thy work—specially in an advisory capacity."
Harry Whipple

DOWN THE NOSE

Jesus' classic picture of the religious snob is contained in the words of the Pharisee who said to himself, "I thank Thee that I am not as this poor publican." But we often miss the point as completely as did the dear old lady who commented when the preacher read the parable to the congregation, "I'm glad I'm not like that old Pharisee." (Adapted from "Christian Century.")

GOING SOMEWHERE?

The Spirit guides those who are going somewhere. You will recall that the Lord promised he would send a Comforter to "guide" us into all truth. One doesn't need a guide if he isn't going anywhere. The sense of mission adds greatly to our strength as ministers.
Bishop L. Wayne Updike

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT EDWARDS RETURNS FROM REUNION

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle Percy E. Farrow have returned from the Arkansas-Louisiana Reunion which was held from July 19 to 26. They were associated with District President James Renfro, and Elders Kenneth Byrn and Les Gardner. Attendance was reported to be 35 per cent above last year.

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH IS SPEAKER

President W. Wallace Smith preached the opening sermon at the Lamoni Stake Reunion on Sunday morning, July 26. Also present were Stake President Robert S. Farnham and Stake Bishop Earl T. Higdon. The reunion is being held in the college buildings on the Graceland campus at Lamoni.

PRESIDING EVANGELIST AT REUNION

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith and Ronald Smith visited the Ozarks Reunion on Sunday, July 26.

ATTEND OZARKS REUNION

Charles D. Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, attended the Ozarks Reunion at Racine, Missouri, July 18-26. General Church appointees who attended were Apostle Charles Hield who had charge of prayer services, James C. Daugherty who taught the general classes, District President Stephen A. Black who acted in an administrative capacity, Elder William E. Williams who had charge of the young people, and Charles Neff who taught women's classes. All of these men shared in preaching services. Evangelist Henry Castings, of Des Moines, Iowa, was present and gave forty-four blessings. It was estimated that over 480 people attended the reunion.

SPEAKS AT OUTDOOR SERVICES

Radio Minister Evan A. Fry had charge of the Communion services at Joplin, Missouri, Branch on August 2, and spoke at the evening services which are being held outdoors during the summer months at Racine reunion grounds.

CHEVILLE VISITS

Dr. Roy Cheville has arrived in Zion to work with the Department of Religious Education on curriculum research. He will be with the department during the month of August. Brother Cheville attended a Religious Education Institute at Seattle, Washington, and visited Camp Wasila at Silverlake, Washington, Camp Kimtah at Deception Pass, Washington, and Camp Monyoka at Elliston, Montana, before coming to Independence.

MESLE ATTENDS REUNIONS

Carl Mesle, General Church Director of Youth Activities, has attended the Texas Reunion, Park of the Pines camp in Northwest Ohio District, and Salina, Kansas, Reunion.

EARLY MORNING FELLOWSHIP

Stake Youth Leader Lee Hart was in charge of the early morning fellowship service and breakfast at Adair Park on Sunday, July 26. About 250 young people attended. Monte L. Parker, member of the stake bishopric, was the guest speaker. The service and breakfast were planned by the Enoch Hill Zion's League, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Scott Finken.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Aleah George Koury

ALEAH was reared in the Reorganized Church and baptized when he was nine years old. Although it meant much to him then, it wasn't until he was fourteen and heard an address to the young people by Dr. Floyd McDowell at a youth convention in London, Ontario, that he actually became aware of a responsibility to Christ and his church.

From that time his desire was to serve the church in a missionary capacity. This was verified to him by a spiritual experience when he was seventeen and again in his patriarchal blessing, which he received while on a leave from the Army.

Aleah was born in 1925 at Toronto, Ontario. He was graduated from De La Salle "Oaklands," a private military school, and went on to receive a Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Toronto in 1948. His education was broken by service in the Canadian Army from 1944 to 1946.

In December, 1946, he was ordained a priest in his home congregation. Following his graduation from the university he served as editor of two Canadian magazines at Consolidated Press in Toronto. In September, 1949, he was appointed to full-time missionary work.

His hobbies are photography, hunting, and fishing. His aim is "to serve the Lord." Among other things he has contributed to the church through the medium of art, doing the illustrations for the loose-leaf book, The Restoration Story. Someday he hopes to help carry the gospel to the peoples of the Semitic nations. He was ordained an elder in April, 1950, and a Seventy in 1952.

Mrs. Koury was the former Patricia Lee Reynolds. They were married in 1950. They have two children, Patricia Lynn and Aleah George Wayne. Their home is in Bellingham, Washington.

The Gift of Peace

*"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you."
—John 14: 27.*

IT IS MOST OFTEN the troubled hearts that go out in search of God, and it is those that most often find him. It is in finding our Heavenly Father that we also find peace.

One of the most beautiful of the promises was penned in the Philipian letter (4: 7), "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

How have you found that peace? Here is how some have found it.

IT WAS A NIGHT of pain, sleeplessness, and worry. The spirit was as dark as the night itself. Then, just before dawn, the first faint flush of light dimmed the stars in the east. Gradually the sun's rays, slanting upward from below the horizon, brushed the curtains of departing night with fiery red and incandescent gold.

The first dawn of creation must have been something like this, when the Lord himself looked upon this particular bit of his handiwork and was pleased with it.

There is infinite variety in the dawn, but something fundamental and unchanged since the beginning of time and space. There is something miraculous, something divine in a dawn that changes the fear and danger of darkness into the light and assurance of day.

There is something about the dawn that reflects the peace of God. Nothing else in life is quite like it. It is one of the Father's most precious gifts. And it reminds us of the words of the Son, "Peace I leave with you."

SUNSET. Over the fields a shimmering heat and a haze of dust. All day long men had toiled in the summer heat, sweat pouring from their faces, tired muscles straining to bring the harvest in.

At the end of the day, almost drained of strength, exhausted but satisfied, they went home. They had done all men could do to save their year's investment in the productivity of the soil. So much of the harvest was safe, ready to satisfy the hunger of a needy world.

While the women prepared the evening meal, the men washed off the grime and perspiration of the day, the cool refreshing water feeling good on their hot and irritated skins. As they washed themselves they also cleared their minds and spirits of the tensions and anxieties, the urgency of the day's occupations.

Peace came to their minds. Something universal touched their hearts, and they felt as if some quiet voice were speaking to them, "My peace I give unto you."

A CHILD was dangerously ill. The doctor made his visit and left medicine and instructions. All night long the mother remained at the bedside. During the long hours of her vigil, she lifted her heart in prayer to a greater Physician, seeking something more powerful than human aid.

Toward the end of the watch, the child's fevered tossing subsided and gave way to a more tranquil sleep. The medicines and treatment did their work; the prayers were answered; and the mother knew that all would be well for the little one. Grateful, she felt that there was a Presence standing at her side and giving strength and encouragement. She found the meaning of the precious word "peace."

THE WORLD IS FULL of troubled hearts. Every soul has its own hours of darkness when it must walk by an inner light and survive by a hidden strength. Every person must face problems, carry his burdens, endure fatigue, stand up under discouragement and fear. "Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

There are only two escapes from trouble. One is death. The other comes when a mind finds the circumstances of life intolerable and takes its departure from reality into an imaginary world, haunted by spectral monsters or furnished with illusory delights. There is a name for this.

Some comfort may be found in the realization that all people have some burden of trouble to bear. As long as we live we cannot escape some of it, more or less.

What Jesus said about peace is a promise. It is a promise in which everyone has a share, a part of the heritage. It is only necessary to know the meaning of the promise and claim it.

No matter what the problem may be, no matter what or where one is, or what his condition may be, he can look for inward peace with God's blessing.

This is for you. Though you may be afraid, you can know that you need not be overcome. Though your problem may seem to have no solution, you can know that there is an answer somewhere. It may not come easily, but you can know that if you look for it in faith, it will someday come. This is the substance of the testimony of countless numbers of Saints who have suffered and wept, who have sought and found His peace.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Some months ago Elder Alfred H. Yale sent an invitation to the First Presidency to provide a guest minister for a morning service at the Estes Park Conference of the YMCA. The invitation was passed along to President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., of Graceland College, and he was able to be at the Conference Sunday morning July 20. He reports:

There were about 700 people present in this YMCA Church of the Rockies. The music was of excellent quality, and Dr. Orlo Choguill of the First Presbyterian Church of Topeka, Kansas, was a very competent minister in charge. Dr. Choguill, in presenting me, referred to my work in Philadelphia and Lamoni as a minister for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He also described Graceland as a college with an international student body, and he was careful again to emphasize its church relatedness.

Among those in the congregation were a number of YMCA executives who are attending the summer school at Association Camp. Several eminent ministers were in attendance including, by the way, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Independence.

I found the congregation to be very responsive and had the opportunity to speak to a great many people personally immediately following the service. I should mention, too, that many of the persons attending the service are college and university students from various parts of the country. I understand that there are about 160 of these students employed by the camp.

We are receiving a steadily increasing number of invitations such as this one filled so ably by Brother Gleazer.

From Apostle Charles R. Hield:

I am glad to report that the combined Central and Southwest Texas Reunion was most successful. The prayer meetings, classes, and sermons were on a high order, and we had the largest attendance I think that Texas has ever had, in spite of the drought. We had 450 regular campers on the grounds all the time and about 600 to 650 on week ends. Brother Carl Mesle, with Wayne Simmons and Charles Kornman, did a very nice job with the Zion's League age. Bishop Lewis Landsberg made an excellent contribution to the Bishop's class and had a good quality to his preaching. As junior pastor, Norman Cox made an outstanding contribution to the children's work.

In my opinion there was an especially fine over-all deeper appreciation of the truths of our Master, a fine wholesome degree of the Spirit of God being present each day, particularly in our prayer meetings. I feel that a great deal of good was done, that lives will be changed for the better, not only in the immediate future, but perhaps for years to come.

From Evangelist J. Charles May, July 21:

Emery G. Fletcher of Clitherall, Minnesota, leader of the Cutlerite faction, died this morning, July 21, about three miles from his home at the Battle Lake Rest Home, after being ill only a few hours.

Mr. Fletcher was born in Old Clitherall, July 22, 1868, and would have observed his eighty-fifth birthday anniversary tomorrow. The funeral will be Thursday afternoon, July 23.

Members of the Presidency have been interested in reports of an attractive missionary experiment being carried out under the direction of Apostle Maurice L. Draper at Ryde, a suburb of Sydney, Australia.

A new mission group has been opened at Ryde and is meeting in the Young Citizens Hall, a few steps from the major business center in the community. It is a small room, but on the ground floor; it is clean and accessible by all kinds of transportation.

The group leader is Seventy Floyd Potter. His assignment here is to carry out some experimental work in city evangelism by Seventies, with the idea of building quickly to stability by a prolonged and intensive missionary campaign, which will include street meetings on the corner next to the hall, newspaper advertising, cottage meetings, missionary preaching in the hall, house-to-house canvassing, and other activities which seem to be feasible.

Over forty people attended the first preaching service, where Apostle Maurice L. Draper was the speaker. This number also attended the church school and Communion service. There were a number of non-members, some of whom have been baptized since the opening of the mission.

This is a General Church sponsored mission, with personal responsibility invested in the General Church officers. The membership will be carried on a separate roll, and all group offices will be filled with appointment by the General Church officers. Financially the group will participate in the district budget quotas and in routine administrative matters. In all matters of personnel and programming the Seventy will have full charge.

The goal is a stable branch in 1954, with a good start toward the building fund and possibly with a lot purchased.

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth:

I have a success story which will interest you. In the Nauvoo District we have been expanding considerably, and I feel that this will continue in the future. Some months ago a mission was initiated at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. We baptized seven from there in June, six in July, and a baptismal class is already underway for August baptismal candidates. In addition, from the new mission opened a few months ago at Carthage, Illinois, we baptized six in July. As of now we have thirty-five baptisms for the Nauvoo District which heads the other districts in my area. Southeast Illinois with thirty-four and Wisconsin with thirty are pressing. With a total of 215 baptisms already secured for 1953 we should surpass the record of 307 for 1952 and 352 for 1951.

AUGUST THEME

The Promise of the Kingdom

Enter into Life

By C. B. Hartshorn

From a sermon preached at Liberty Street Church
May 11, 1952, and recorded by Elmer Hart

And behold, one came and said, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is, God; but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness. Honor thy father and mother. And, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matthew 19:16-19.

WHEN MY GOOD FRIEND Dr. Van-Biber asked me a few days ago if I would speak to you tonight, I told him that if the Liberty Street congregation were expecting missionary preachers on Sunday evening I might not qualify. I am what has commonly been known as a pastoral speaker. But he suggested that I come and even suggested something that I might speak on in harmony with the general line of thought which has been used here on recent Sunday evenings: "My place in the kingdom."

I might be like two of my preacher friends. They took their wives and went to visit a distant city in the district. One preached in the morning and the other preached in the evening, and on the way home they were asking their wives about the sermons. One of the ladies frankly said, "All of your sermons are about the same. I think you just use a different title for the same sermon." Now that may be like the pastoral sermon. They all sound about the same, just a little different title, but I'm quite sure that you will observe that there are some things about my approach that is pastoral in its nature; that is, I think of my congregation as those who are part of the kingdom, who are wanting to do a better job of helping build up that kingdom of heaven here upon earth, the organization Jesus came and gave his life to establish.

This statement we have read here, "Keep the commandments," indicates certainly that there is a commander. "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Jesus was that commander, for the prophet Isaiah said, "I will give him for a leader and a commander of the people." We do have One who gives us commandments.

On one occasion, after he had finished his earthly work, he declared, "This is life eternal, . . . [to] know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

THE CONCEPT which we have as Reorganized Latter Day Saints of kingdom-building is not that we join the church, or that we go out to church on Sunday as some people might go just to find pleasure. We're inclined to think of this as the work of God. People in many churches talk about "coming to Christ." They seldom are heard to say, "I love the work of God." It is questionable whether we all realize what we mean when we say, "work," but there is work to do in the kingdom of heaven and it is a call to that work which I make to you tonight.

The building of the kingdom is a privilege, and the call is ominous. It's later than most of us think, and we do want to enter into this life fully and completely that we might have joy therein. One of our hymns has this line:

With joy we remember the dawn of that day,
When led by the Spirit the truth to obey.

Perhaps all of us have something of that enjoyment as we look back to our baptism, because there was an impelling urge that we just must do this thing. It was what it took to make us happy, so we were baptized. The difficulty is that some of us have grown old in the service, and we look back to those good old days and we talk about them as though they were something of the past, and the church somehow or other has gone off on a devious course—"It's not like it used to be." Well, I hope you'll pardon me if I get under your cuticle just a little bit at this point and try to get you to see that the big change likely is in you rather than in the church. I have been a close student of the church for a number of years; and while somebody may disagree with me, perhaps not those here tonight, the changes that the church has made have been for the better. It has made some changes. I remember the time when we apologized if we asked people for money in this church and we rather bragged, "If you come to our church you won't have a collection box put under your nose," as though that was a terrible sin. I remember when I first went to Chicago, we had three congregations, but not a church building. Two of those branches were meeting on busy car-line streets in rented store buildings. The church has made progress, but its belief in the priesthood and in the power of almighty God to move in the hearts of people is just as fundamental as it ever was, and I think it is accomplishing a better work.

SO I WANT to stir up your minds, as Peter says, by way of remembrance of some of those things, of those good old days when we were led by the Spirit of God to obey the truth. Truth never changes, we now may have just a little different way of expressing it than formerly. We have improved from those situations

Now prayer meetings may be a little bit dull at times. Sermons may make you yawn. You may be skeptical of some things given out in the pulpit. And you may doubt the sincerity of some of those who are baptized into the church—they run well for a season. They seem to come in with a great bit of enthusiasm and you say to yourself, "There's somebody who's going to help the branch. They're going to get into this kingdom-building work and move it on as it's never been moved before." Then by and by you see their devotion cooling off. I'm not classing you with that group, but we see those things happening and we wonder why it is that people are that way when the kingdom work is so important.

We have ten thousand Reorganized Latter Day Saints in the Center Place. The Gathering Movement has been on for years, and its rising momentum is carrying us to new endeavors. I need not recount for you the evidences of God's blessing and the advancement of the work here in the Center Place. We haven't gone far enough yet. Each of us needs to take himself in hand and find out what his place in the kingdom is. What can we do to advance the work in the Center Place?

Remember, Jesus said that it was a day of sifting, and he warned us not to take our ease in Zion. Paul, in writing to the Corinthian saints, says:

Every man's works shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he has built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself may be saved; yet so as by fire.—I Corinthians 3: 13-15.

WE ARE IN the Gathering Movement. You and I are a part of the ten thousand Saints in the Center Place, but the assurance that our work will give us a reward depends upon what we do with our opportunities. Some are here to please others. I know of just a number of husbands who came to please their wives. Children are born here. They didn't have much invested in the church. They just inherited the church, so their concern is like that of the young man who sought Jesus and said, "What good thing shall I do that I might have eternal life?" He at least was concerned with eternal life. But if we really want to enter into life, Saints, we must find out why we've changed since we made our baptismal vows. Why is it the sermons do not thrill us as they did at first? We're not so keen on bearing our testimony on Wednesday nights as we used to be.

I recall an incident that Mrs. Zealia Jennings told one night at the Walnut Park prayer meeting about four years ago. She said she was riding on the bus from Kansas City after work, and as they passed the Auditorium a gentleman sitting on the seat ahead of her asked a boy that was sitting with him what that big building was. He said, "That's the Auditorium of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints." And he sneered and said, "They're no more saints than I am." Well, maybe they weren't. I don't know whom he was acquainted with. I know he wasn't acquainted with all ten thousand members here, and it may just be that he got hold of some Reorganized Latter Day Saint who had grown cold and indifferent. He might know several of them. It's not sufficient just to be baptized and acquire the name of Reorganized Latter Day Saint. Sainthood means something more than just acquiring the name. You don't become a Saint as you become Mrs. Jones, for instance, by marrying John Jones. It's just not that easy. We do get the name, but we don't become Saints, and perhaps this man was right.

BROTHER AL BOOS spoke of the devotion of the membership in this way: "The Sunday morning crowd is the test of the popularity of the church. The Sunday evening crowd is the test of the popularity of the preacher, but the Wednesday evening crowd is the test of the popularity of God." Well, I'm not ashamed of this crowd tonight. I think that we have a pretty good representation here, from my point of view; and as Joseph Smith III one time when he went quite a distance to preach to six and they asked, "Well, Brother Joseph, you're not going to preach to just these, are you?" said, "Why, they couldn't get any more good if they were twice as many." He always preached the best kind of sermon that he knew how to preach.

The thing that I want each of you to think about is this: "Do we really want to enter into the life?" What's happened to that zeal that brought us into this church, "when led by the Spirit the truth to obey"? Certainly the truth hasn't changed. Well, let's face some facts. I think that there are reasons why obedience to the gospel brought so much joy and why we have lost some of it. You may not agree with me, but I hope you will think this through, because I can't help by these remarks somebody who is across the street or somebody who stayed home tonight to take care of the baby, to listen to the radio, to watch television, or whatever they are doing. I can only help you. If I help anybody at all, it will be you.

The reason I think that we don't enjoy the prayer meeting today as much as we used to is that we've lost the power to repent. "Oh," you say, "do you think I'm a sinning man?" I'm not speaking in the accusative case tonight but I ask each of you to face certain facts here and think them through. Yes, I rather think that we have some things to repent of, but I would like to explain what I mean by repentance.

EVERY COMMUNION SUNDAY we are asked to renew our covenant. Somewhere along the line we've lost our grip just a little bit upon this business of kingdom-building. We've wandered just a little, so we come to renew our covenant. Some think that they then get a remission of their sins. Well, not by just partaking of the bread and wine. They may if they can repent with it, but that's the only condition upon which forgiveness of sins is promised. Some present the idea that "I'm just as good as So-and-so." And I wouldn't argue on that point. Some try to justify themselves by saying, "Well, if I never do anything worse than that, surely God will overlook my shortcomings." The word "repentance" is made from the Greek phrase, metanoia, meaning to "change one's mind." Somehow or other in the work that needs to go on in our hearts and minds, we need to see things differently. Once we got great joy from the preaching of the gospel message. Now somehow the lights put us to sleep when we come to hear a sermon. We blame it on our eyes. Maybe there is some truth in that. I know it's a lot different when I'm sitting out there than when I'm standing up here. But our big difficulty is that we've lost the power to repent. We don't see some of the things that are wrong with us, our thinking, our acting, our way of living. So we need to change our minds about some of these things.

Repentance means feeling sorry enough for some things to quit doing them. I admit it is a whole lot easier to repent of somebody else's shortcomings. We feel so sorry that somebody else is doing some things that they ought not to do, but to change our own mind week by week and month by month and do things differently is much more difficult.

I remember many years ago on one of my first jobs, I had to write up receiving tickets. I found out that I was making the letter g like a small letter except it had a larger loop at the top. Well, right or wrong, I thought, That's not a good way to make the letter g. I'm going to make it just the way you regularly see it, a small loop at the top and then a big loop around. But the next time I thought of it I found that I had been making several g's just the way I had always made them. I then said, "Something's wrong here. I've got to take myself in hand." I scolded myself that way for a day or so and found that I wasn't getting anywhere. Why wasn't I? Well, for the same reason we don't get over a lot of other things we decide we are going to quit doing. I just didn't repent enough. And then I did this: every time I made the letter g the way I didn't want to make it, I erased it—every time. I didn't let a time pass. It didn't take long until I quit making g's the way I didn't want to. Now there is a principle there. The letter g doesn't amount to anything, but the principle amounts to everything. We need to repent. We need to feel sorry enough for doing a thing to quit it and make restitution, and if we don't do just that we're not going to get anywhere.

NOW WHAT is my place in the kingdom? There are many things that I can do if I can take myself in hand and say, "This is the way that I'm going to assist," and do that; not just promise but actually do it. Some of us, I'm told, no longer feel the personal need for sermons, or for study classes. Why do we get that way? When we first came into the church there seemed to be so many things we wanted to know. I remember when I was just a nine-year-old boy, this work opened up to me in a very wonderful way. I had the privilege of going with my parents to attend a two weeks' series of meetings. Elder F. B. Blair came over to our little town and I got to go to most of those services. The interesting and remembered thing about them was that, as I was wondering how all things in the Bible could be—some seemed so strange, this great universe, so many unexplained questions—that very night something that Brother Blair would say would answer my question and satisfy my soul. Next day as I was rejoicing, some other problem would come up; night after night he would answer those questions for me.

Now I think we get the same kind of preaching today that Brother Blair gave. I've changed. I do not say that I no longer have need for sermons, but there are some sermons that I do find myself picking to pieces, as you may pick mine to pieces. You have the right to—but let's be careful lest in our critical attitude we get no good from it, no questions are answered, we sense no needs that can be supplied. For when we reach that stage the trouble is likely with us and not with the preacher. It may be that there is much good in the sermons which we are missing.

WE DO NEED good sermons. We need study classes. There's just a lot to learn if we're going to take our place in kingdom-building. We need to teach and learn our stewardship program. The church is more than a social institution or an ethical society with life insurance. It is the work of God here upon earth. It is challenging us to come and give the best that's in us to the work that is right here before us. Not something that is off at a distance to be achieved when we die, but something that is right here with us now.

Now, I'm not trying to confess for you. I'm not admitting that you're a bad lot. I think that you're a good group of people. I don't know of a better people, but I think you're too contented, as I know you by and large. I think we are just a little bit too contented with our individual status, perhaps with the things that are going on in the church and in the world about us. We need a divine discontent that will bring us out on a quest. If we would enter into life there are certain things we must do, particularly to find out what our place in the kingdom is.

In the Roman letter Paul called attention to things we need to think of tonight: "For I say unto you through the grace given unto me to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly according as God has dealt to every man the measure of faith." Just how do you think of yourself? If we measure others by ourselves, compare ourselves with ourselves, we're unwise. If we'd enter into life, if we'd be perfect, there's need for us to change our minds and do a lot of things that perhaps we haven't been doing.

MANY, MANY YEARS AGO I heard this little incident and it struck me as having a point in it. In the days of the early Fords, with no tops, the back seat was filled with the wife and children; the front seat had two or three children in there with dad, the driver. He couldn't get out because there was no door on his side. He felt the old car giving a few bumps and he said, "Sal, I wish you'd get out and see what's gone wrong with that left rear tire. I'm afraid it's gone flat." So his wife got out. "No," she assured him, "it's a bit flat on the bottom side but the rest is all right." Now we know that tires like that are not all right. The place where they come in contact with the ground is the important place. We are too satisfied oftentimes, particularly with ourselves and anything that has to do with us, whereas there should be a divine discontent that will help us to go on to be perfect, to enter into life.

I asked a good sister today where her family was; she's the mother of a large family. She had only one son with her. She said her husband had to work and her son and daughter-in-law had gone picnicking. Well, they may not freeze but they won't have a good time today I'm sure, because Sunday is not a picnicking day for Reorganized Latter Day Saints. It's a day of worship. I don't know why people can't get into that spirit. They want to spend all the time in the kitchen getting food on Sunday or eating or hunting or frolicking, when the kingdom-building work is so important. God and the world expect more than respectability out of Reorganized Latter Day Saints. If we are any more Saints than that man on the streetcar, it is because of the things we do, because of the things we think, the way we respond to the call of God in the lives of men.

TODAY MEN DO NOT WANT and will not respond to preachments, but they will respond to love and service. The church is called to do that very task.

I remember reading in the Angel Message tract series in which Brother Elbert tells of a boy who came home from church school one Sunday all filled up. The lesson had been on love and he was full of the subject. When he came into the house, he said, "I love everybody, some I do and some I don't."

Perhaps we Reorganized Latter Day Saints are like that. We're race prejudiced; we're congregational prejudiced. Some we love and some we don't, and yet "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye shall have love one for the other." We don't even love all Reorganized Latter Day Saints. You can't do that. Lots of times you can love a person who is good and kind to you who does not belong to any church better than you can love some of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints who ought to know better than to say and do some of the things they do and say. But if we get full of love and have the spirit of service there is no argument against us. There is no resisting this type of missionary endeavor.

THE CHURCH is in a new era. I don't want to appear sensational, but I do want you to think a few things through tonight. We have entered—we're not just about to enter—we have entered a new era of the work and the development of the work here in the Center Place and throughout the church. It's

God and Christ Two Persons

One in Purpose, Planning, Endeavor, and Execution

By Elbert A. Smith

My Father worketh hitherto and I work.

I HAVE BEEN ASKED to express my opinion on the question, "Are God and Christ two persons, or are they only one person?" My opinion is not of primary importance. Jesus himself appealed to certain standards of evidence when he said, "It is written." The Scriptures present God and Christ to us as two persons, before, during, and after the brief sojourn of Christ on earth in human flesh.

"From the Beginning"

We have the word of God in the beginning of revelation to us in the first chapter of Genesis; from the King James Version of the Bible: "God said, Let us make man" (Genesis 1: 26). To whom was God speaking? Certainly to some person separate from himself in identity and capable of working with him in the creation of man. The matter is cleared up in the Inspired Version of the Bible: "And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man" (Genesis 1: 27).

Here we have the Father speaking to his Only Begotten Son as to another person, and one who had been with him from the beginning, "I, God [one person], said unto mine Only Begotten [another person], Let us make man."

There is no record that at any time afterward the Son became merged into the personality of his Father and lost his own identity. If Christ has done that, then must we, as his followers in all things, do likewise: That leads directly to the old doctrine of Brahmanism: "Those only who have attained a knowledge of God are rewarded by absorption. . . . This union with Deity is the total loss of identity."—Ten Great Religions, page 119.

That is not Christian doctrine. Christ's idea of oneness, unity, is different. It is written of the city of Enoch, "The Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2).

It is true that Christ said, "My Father and I are one." He also prayed earnestly to his father that his followers might become one "even as we are one." God and Christ are one in the same sense that he wished his followers to be one.

We are told in the Book of Mormon that "plain and precious" things had been taken from the Scriptures which were to be restored. We have noted that one of them (as restored in the Inspired Version) is a very plain statement concerning the creation of man. God said to his Son, "Let us make man."

God and Christ in Conference

In the third chapter of Genesis, Inspired Version, we have another of those very plain things restored for us in our Scripture. The ultimate salvation of man was under consideration. Satan appeared before God and said, "Send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, . . . wherefore, give me thine honor." Another person appeared before God, of whom it is written, "But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine for ever" (Genesis 3: 1-4).

Here we have the word of God that his Only Begotten Son talked with him as to another person and volunteered to do the will of the Father, not demanding glory for himself. The Father rejected Satan because Satan planned to "take away man's agency" and become the first great dictator, saving men whether they wished to be saved or not. God, the Father, chose Christ, the Son, to come to earth with a persuasive gospel. "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son."

Thus we find the Father and the Son, two distinct personages, planning together with each other the creation and salvation of man.

The Origin of Some Confusion in This Matter

Some confusion seems to have grown out of the fact that some of the prophetic writers have given to Christ, the Son, certain titles ordinarily reserved for God, the Father (though most of them speak plainly about the Father and the Son). In an introductory note to the Book of Mormon the statement is made that one purpose of the book is to convince Jew and Gentile that "Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God." The title, "the Eternal God," may be modified by the preceding words that "Jesus is the Christ." The title, "Christ," is always reserved for Jesus.

This statement in the preface seems to embody one by Nephi which is much more explicit in its reference to the Christ: "And as I spake concerning the convincing of the Jews, that Jesus is the very Christ, it must needs be that the Gentiles be convinced also, that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God" (Book of Mormon, page 145). Take note that in the very same connection Nephi speaks of the Father and the Son as two persons, as follows: "Until they [the Jews] shall be persuaded to believe in Christ, the Son of God. . . . And when that day shall come, that they believe in Christ, and worship the Father in his name, . . . the Lord will set his hand again the second time to restore his people from their lost estate" (Book of Mormon, page 141). And again: "According to the words of the prophets, and also the word of the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Book of Mormon, page 142). Nephi clearly understood that one was the Father, the other the Son.

Certainly the Book of Mormon has no new and mysterious doctrine on this point different from that in the Bible. For example, in the ninth chapter of Isaiah there is a prophecy concerning the coming of Christ: "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." This statement may be modified by the ensuing verse which says that he shall reign upon the throne of David and be called a prince.

Probably the one passage of Scripture that most lends itself to support of the argument that the Father and the Son are one person is the following from Luke 10: 23 of the Inspired Version: "No man knoweth that the Son is the Father, and the Father is the Son, but him to whom the Son will reveal it."

Even in that passage it is still Father and Son. There is no doubt that though Father and Son were two persons (as represented in the first chapter of Genesis in the Inspired Version), yet in their work they were one to an extent that we cannot comprehend except it be revealed (and this oneness we also are to attain). This passage must be interpreted to harmonize with the overwhelming number of scriptural statements which clearly present Father and Son as two persons; yet one in the sense Christ had in mind in his great prayer for his disciples, "Holy Father, . . . that they may be one, even as we are one" (John 17: 11, 22). Father and Son are one in the same sense that Christ wished his followers to be one—and he certainly did not expect or desire that they should all become one person.

"I Am Come in My Father's Name"

Jesus said, "I am come in my Father's name" (John 5:44). Since he did come in his Father's name and with his message and authority, it is not surprising that some of the prophetic writers gave to him titles commonly reserved for the Father, thus causing some confusion.

Perhaps the following simple and limited illustration may help. The First Presidency is the highest administrative body in the church. For a number of years in the life of President Joseph Smith, his son Frederick Madison Smith was a member of the Presidency, associated with his father as counselor. Whenever the members of the Presidency were "one" in purpose and in will, the son, Frederick Madison Smith, could speak for the Presidency with authority equal to that of his father. When he went into distant fields with a message from the Presidency he was often introduced to the people as "President Smith." Another might introduce him as President Smith, son of the President of the church. A stranger, not acquainted with the facts and never having seen the father, might have been confused; but he would scarcely say, "The father and the son must be one person, because the son is introduced by the very same name and title that is given to the father."

The Title That Christ Preferred

Jesus sometimes spoke of himself as "the Son of Man," sometimes as "the bridegroom." On a memorable occasion he put his stamp of approval on a title which recognized the relationship of Father and Son.

He had said to the apostles, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Jesus with very evident pleasure voiced his approval of that statement, in these words, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 16:16, 17).

The Father in heaven had revealed to Peter that Jesus on earth was his Son. This sonship is so all important that Christ said, "on this rock I will build my church."

In the eighth chapter of Mosiah there is a record of an address by Abinadi containing a remarkable prediction of the coming of Christ. In one part of the discourse Abinadi attempts a theological exegesis of the oneness of the Father and the Son which had troubled some people. With all due reverence we must say that the exegesis is abstruse and involved. It should not be made the basis of any radical conclusions not in harmony with many plain statements in other prophetic utterances. Abinadi's exegesis might be taken to evidence a belief that the Father and the Son always were one person; however, again and again he speaks of them as two—Father and Son—and of the will of the Son and of the will of the Father. There can be no will without personality. Christ had a will of his own, free agency, and he chose to bring his own will into accord with that of his Father. Here, as many times in the Bible, these two wills of two persons are mentioned—one only in their complete agreement.

In Any Language "Father and Son" Means Two Persons

"He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—II John 9.

The Scriptures abound in definite statements indicating the separate personalities of God and Christ. Space will permit the use of only a few of them:

From the Book of Mormon:

What will ye that I [Jesus] should do unto you, when I am gone unto the Father?—Page 676.

And he [Jesus] said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast given the Holy Ghost unto these whom I have chosen.—Page 655.

Hearken, O, ye Gentiles, and hear the words of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God.—Page 681.

Ye must always pray unto the Father in my name.—Page 652.

From the Doctrine and Covenants:

All men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name.—Doctrine and Covenants 17:6.

To this day, when we pray to God and worship him we are to do it in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ.

From the Bible:

Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.—Luke 2:52.

I must be about my Father's business.—Luke 2:49.

If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.—John 10:37.

As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.—John 20:21.

I will pray the Father.—John 14:16.

I send the promise of my Father unto you.—Luke 24:48.

I have finished the work thou gavest me to do.—John 17:4.

And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.—Luke 23:47.

C. B. Hartshorn, managing editor of the Saints' Herald, has computed one hundred and nineteen passages in the New Testament in which "parallel mention of the Father and the Son is made," and in the Book of Mormon two hundred and thirty-four similar passages in which "the Father and the Son are in juxtaposition."

Testimony of Inspired Visions

At the time when the righteous Stephen was killed by a mob he had this vision:

But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.—Acts 7:55, 56.

This was after the resurrection and ascension of our Lord. When he saw God and Christ as two persons, Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost, which would scarcely have given him a false and utterly misleading vision.

The substance of Stephen's vision is confirmed by unimpeachable Scriptures. After Christ had given to his apostles his last commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel, he was received up into heaven and the Scripture records: "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God" (Mark 16:20).

Note also the following passages:

Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.—Romans 8:34.

Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.—Hebrews 1:3.

Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.—I Peter 3:22.

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.—Colossians 3:1.

Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.—Hebrews 12:2.

The following statement is found in the King James translation of the Bible, John 1:18: "No man hath seen God at any time." That singular declaration is in conflict with testimonies found elsewhere in the Bible. Isaiah saw the Lord "sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up" (Isaiah 6:1). Jacob declared, "I have seen God face to face" (Genesis 32:30). Moses, Aaron, and seventy of the elders of Israel "saw the God of Israel" (Exodus 24:9, 10).

The statement, "No man hath seen God," found in the King James Version, is clarified in the Inspired Version as

The Book of Mormon Points the Way to Zion

Part IV—Fasting

By Roy Weldon

THE PRINCIPLES of the gospel as given in Hebrews 6: 1 (faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost) are church entrance requirements. Church entrance is just the beginning of a long journey toward perfection and sainthood.

Nephi says:

For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water: . . . And then are ye in this straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life. . . .

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this straight and narrow path, I would ask, if all is done?

Behold, I say unto you, Nay. . . . Wherefore ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ.—II Nephi 13: 24-30.

The Bible contains in one clear-cut Scripture the gospel formula for entrance in the church (Hebrews 6: 1). The Book of Mormon contains an equally important formula for pressing forward to the realization of God's rich promises:

For they were men of a sound understanding, and they had searched the Scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God.

But this is not all: they had given themselves to much prayer and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority, even as with the power and authority of God.—Alma 12: 4-7.

In previous articles we have given consideration to two of the principles listed in this formula (Scripture study and prayer). Consideration of the third ingredient (fasting) is now in order.

Is fasting necessary to develop spirituality?

All mathematics, from simple arithmetic to trigonometry, depend upon ten little digits (0 to 9). Likewise the world of music is founded on the few notes of the musical scale. Remove one digit or one musical note and the world of mathematics and the world of music would come tumbling down.

We climb to the high places of mathematics from a foundation of ten digits. We climb to the high places of music from the foundation of seven simple notes (a to g). We climb to the high places of the spiritual world from a foundation of four simple factors—Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and consecration as contained in the sons of Mosiah formula. It is my firm belief that all four of these factors are necessary to the development of spirituality, and the total removal or even the dilution of as much as a single one of these factors will either weaken or short out our contact with the Spirit of God.

Is fasting required of us by God? The Three Standard Books of our church give us a firm answer to this question. Not only is fasting required of us, it is also a clear-cut commandment of God:

Nevertheless the children of God were commanded that they should gather themselves together oft, and join in fasting and mighty prayer, in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God.—Alma 4: 6.

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

Baptism is a commandment and requirement of God. We would scarcely think of trying to side-step it. Fasting is also a commandment of God. Why not honor it also? Indeed, if we side-step this principle and commandment, how effective will our baptism be?

Jesus was baptized of John in the Jordan River to fulfill all righteousness. Have we forgotten that he arose from the baptismal rite and fasted and prayed for many days in the wilderness? If his baptism was our example, why not his fasting also?

In Book of Mormon times the people joined in fasting and mighty prayer for the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God. Several years ago I was visiting in a Midwestern city. I was invited to Sunday dinner by a young and very promising minister of our church (pastor and member of the stake high council). We had scarcely sat down to eat when his wife asked me if I would like to hear the story of how her husband (a former Hard-Shell Baptist) had come to join the church.

In response to my affirmation she gave a testimony I shall long remember. She had been trying to convert her stanch Baptist friend to the church. He attended services and read books but to no avail. He was unimpressed. Finally she gave him The Call at Evening which has converted great numbers to our church. He returned it a week later still unmoved.

It was then that this good R. L. D. S. girl decided on a greater effort. She fasted and prayed for an entire week. When she met her Baptist friend the following Sunday she found that something had happened to him. He was ready to join the church.

I wonder what would happen if, in addition to lending our neighbors our church books, we loved them enough to fast and pray a few days for them?

Does fasting involve abstinence from food?

Perhaps the dominant characteristic of our age and civilization is the tendency toward the easy way. Abstaining from food for several meals or for several days is not an easy undertaking. It has little appeal to people of a soft push-button age who revel in the comforts of scientific luxuries and conveniences. As far as my knowledge goes, fasting is practically unknown in the popular Protestant churches. The Catholics and Jews practice some abstinences during Lent and Passover which, in my estimation, are scarcely worthy of the name of fasting.

For those who would like to interpret fasting without abstinence from food there is one verse in the Scriptures which, taken alone, might seem to indicate that fasting does not require abstinence from food.

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or, in other words, that thy joy may be full.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3.

The true meaning of this verse is to be found in the way it dovetails with some fifty other verses in the Scriptures on the same subject. To take this verse at its apparent face value without considering its relationship to other passages is a mistake. Hundreds of Christian sects have chosen from the Bible that text or those texts which fit their fancy and have ignored other related Scriptures. This makes the Bible a fiddle upon which one can play any denominational tune he may wish. Some large denominations select the Scripture, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." No consideration is given to further Scriptures on the subject of salvation. Scripture interpretation is a matter of full consideration of all that is said on any given subject rather than the singling out of certain verses which at face value may seem to offer us an easy way which better fits our preconceived ideas and fancy.

Fasting and prayer are to be continuous

Consideration of further Scripture on fasting reveals that fasting and prayer are to be continuous. "Continue in fasting and praying, and endure to the end; and as the Lord liveth, ye will be saved."—Omni 1: 47.

Of Anna the prophetess, Luke says: "And she lived a widow about fourscore and four years, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers, night and day" (Luke 2: 37).

"Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

These verses and others in the Three Standard Books clearly indicate that both fasting and prayer are to be continuous. If the definition of prayer is to be limited to the act we engage in when we kneel down at home or at church and talk to God, then how could it be continuous? When would we sleep or eat or make a living? The same is true of fasting. If the definition of fasting is to be limited to those acts and periods when we abstain from food, then how could we continue in fasting? To say the least, the best nourished of us would not continue very long.

Fasting and prayer are attitudes

Prayer is an attitude toward God. Kneeling down and talking to God is giving expression to that attitude. The attitude still remains after the expression is completed or the prayer is mockery before God.

Fasting is an attitude toward God also. Abstinence from food (and other things) is the act of giving expression to the attitude of fasting. After the act or period of expression is completed, the attitude should remain or our fast is a farce and empty mockery.

"Let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3.

If our heart is single to the kingdom of God, then the attitude of fasting is continuous. We will eat to live, and not live to eat. We will abstain from the rich foods and drinks the physical man loves, because we are better off physically and spiritually without them. Fasting, among other things, is an attitude of self-denial, abstention, and self-control that is meant to be continuous in our lives and has application to other things than food and drink. In deference to Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3, "that thy fasting may be perfect," how could our fasting be perfect if we make our Sunday dinners sumptuous feasts, and if, after a period of fasting from food, we have a royal gorge and revel ourselves in all the delightful delicacies and fleshpots of modern Egypt?

The Three Standard Books indicate that in addition to an attitude of self-denial, fasting also includes periods of complete abstention from food.

Luke says of Christ's fast in the wilderness—"And after forty days, the devil came unto him, to tempt him. And in those days, he did eat nothing; and when they were ended, he afterwards hungered" (see Luke 4: 1-4).

Moses went without food forty days: "And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water" (Exodus 34: 28).

While his son was sick, David fasted without food (II Samuel 12: 17-21).

Alma fasted without food: "And now Amulek, because thou hast fed me and took me in, thou art blessed; for I was an hungered, for I had fasted many days" (Alma 6: 34).

Paul and his companions fasted fourteen days without food: "And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing" (see Acts 27: 33-36).

"My knees are weak through fasting; and my flesh faileth of fatness."—Psalm 109: 24.

The king proclaimed a fast from food for both man and beast (see Jonah 3: 5-7).

These Scriptures and others indicate there is small comfort from the Scriptures for defining fasting without periods of complete abstinence from food. I believe that a man who develops the ability to fast and deny himself food for a few meals or days is also developing the ability to hold his temper and all other appetites and passions in subjection.

An authority on character development (Starke) says, "Character is the result of an effort of will directed at self" (Character, How to Strengthen It).

There is no character without self-discipline. Great characters have wills; feeble ones have only wishes.

James says, "Blessed is the man that resisteth temptation" (James 1: 12).

Jesus says, "He that shall not be overcome, the same shall be saved" (Matthew 24: 31). Overcome by what—forces outside or inside of us? Someone has said we are our own worst enemies. Without controlling and conquering our lower, carnal selves we can have no salvation.

A careful analysis of fasting (beyond the limitations of this treatise) would reveal the infinite wisdom and value of this commandment of our Heavenly Father.

Fasting and health

For many years Dr. Frank McCoy of Los Angeles, California, maintained offices in several west coast cities and did a thriving business in curing all kinds of diseases by the "fast" method. I possess a copy of his widely circulated book The Fast Way to Health. Other noted health authorities, including the noted physical culturist Bernarr McFadden of New York City, have achieved success in curing diseases and promoting health by use of the fast.

It is well known that when the human body is denied food a cleansing and house-cleaning process commences. The body draws on its reserves and at the same time gets rid of poisons and foreign materials that have accumulated.

It is my own experience that a fast of a few days brings a surge of renewed energy and physical well-being. Tiredness and various aches and pains disappear as the body cleans house. For me a few days of fasting is the most effective tonic I have ever found. If, in addition to the total fast, there is the continuous self-denial of rich foods, wrong foods, and too much food, the "fast" way to health becomes of great importance.

It is well to note here that authorities on fasting say that one who has not fasted before should commence with very short fasts, and those fasting longer periods should do so only when they have been properly instructed in the techniques of maintaining and breaking the fast.

Fasting and healing

In the Saints' Herald for March 23, 1953, there is a detailed account of a miracle resulting from the effort of an entire congregation in fasting from Sunday until Wednesday night, terminating in an administration.

In Matthew 17: 15-21, there is an account of an attempt of the disciples of Jesus to heal an afflicted boy. They were unsuccessful and asked Jesus why they were not able to perform the healing. Jesus answered that such a healing required fasting and prayer.

About fourteen years ago my father took the flu in the fall. He seemed unable to overcome the disease and gradually became worse. After a few months he was in a very serious condition. Several times the Saints at Berkeley, California, had devoted themselves on Wednesday evening to earnest prayer on his behalf. The elders administered on numerous occasions. Usually there was a good spirit present and the administration was followed by temporary uplift. Finally April arrived. It was Easter week. The family doctor had just told my sister, a trained nurse, there was no further need for him to come back. My father was near the end. It was just a matter of a very few days. One of my brothers and I held a conference. We were deeply appreciative of our parents and their godly example to us. Out of that appreciation we decided to make one final effort beyond anything we had done before. We dispatched telegrams to all members of the family calling for a three-day fast to terminate in administration the afternoon of Easter Sunday. That scene will always remain vivid in my memory. It was my first experience in clear-cut, outstanding results from fasting and prayer. My father lay on the bed, too weak to move and laboring for breath. Evangelist W. H. Dawson, father to the Northern California District, assisted by two elders, laid hands on his head and called on the name of the Lord. Then we all quietly filed out of the room. The next morning at seven o'clock I returned. My father was breathing quietly without any labor. The high fever that had plagued him for months had completely departed and never returned. He is still quite well and active despite the passing of his eightieth year.

Since then I have participated in other group efforts in fasting and prayer and marvelous things have happened, things outside the bounds of human intelligence and ability.

An exception

This article would not be complete if I failed to admit that not all my experiences and experiments in group fasting and prayer have ended in success as far as healing is concerned. Most notable of these failures is the case of a girl attending Graceland College who was found to be afflicted with an incurable disease and given one year to live. She chose to spend that year at Graceland. Such was the quality of her trust in God, her cheerfulness, and the inspiration of her personality that when the year had ended, all prayers and administrations had failed and she was forced to take to bed, a final great effort of fasting and prayer was made for her with more people and congregations engaged than any I had ever known. Many people who probably never fasted before did so for this girl. Some of them have told me they were greatly disappointed because this fine girl was not healed. Right here and now I feel there is something that needs to be said, and I believe I have the right to say it because I was the spokesman when the elders knelt by the side of her bed and laid their hands on her head and called on the name of the Lord in her behalf. I testify with great assurance that this effort of fasting and prayer was a success. The purpose of fasting and prayer is spiritual attunement and getting close to God. Fasting is not or should not be a hunger strike to high pressure God (Mahatma Gandhi style) into doing what we want him to do. The purpose of fasting is to humble and attune ourselves to God so his will may be done and his power be made manifest, rather than that we should try to influence God to do what we think ought to be done.

I bear my testimony to the success of the fasting and prayer in behalf of this widely known Graceland girl. It was agreed that we, the elders, would go to the home and that, with the family, we would partake of the Sacrament, following which, at the agreed hour of eleven o'clock and while various congregations were having special prayers in her behalf, we would administer. The Spirit of God was present in very great degree. The house seemed full of his Presence. Some of us were so filled with the consciousness of the Presence of Divinity we could scarcely speak. As we laid our hands upon her head there came to me a sense of spiritual attunement and divine blessing never surpassed in any former experience of this sort. The effort was a success because it achieved the purpose of fasting and prayer, which is spiritual attunement so we may have God's presence with us.

Much to learn

After all is said and done we are still little children as far as knowledge and ability goes in dealing with the "powers of heaven." We have very much to learn. Alma (16:151) asked the people to experiment on that which he was offering. Paul says, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." If through Scripture study, fasting, and prayer we can attune ourselves to God, then we ought to study and experiment with all these instruments for tuning in on God and his blessings. In scientific experiments there are sometimes thousands of failures before an experiment becomes a success. We are in no way justified if after a try or two at fasting we feel that results are not what we had hoped and we have butted our heads against a stone wall and the Lord has let us down. If the starter doesn't work on our car we don't give up and junk the car after one try to fix it. If we bake a cake and it falls flat we don't give up and quit baking cakes. In our secular pursuits we persist in seeking solutions to our problems until we find the answer. Why not adopt the same attitude toward our spiritual problems?

As a matter of information and of seeking for guiding lines, I would be interested in receiving the detailed experiences of others in this area of fasting and prayer.

Fasting and humility

Helaman tells us, "They did fast and pray oft, and did wax stronger and stronger in their humility, and firmer and firmer in the faith of Christ, unto the filling their souls with joy and consolation" (Helaman 2:31).

Humility is a very important factor in kingdom-building. It seems to be very definitely linked with fasting. (See Psalm 69:10; 35:13; Daniel 9:3, 4.)

Walking in darkness at noonday

The Lord says:

There are many who have been ordained among you, whom I have called, but few of them are chosen; they who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin, in that they are walking in darkness at noonday; and for this cause, I gave unto you a commandment, that you should call your solemn assembly; that your fastings and your mourning might come up into the ears of the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 92:1d-f.

It appears from this Scripture that ministering without God's spirit (darkness at noonday) is a grievous sin rectified, among other things, by fasting.

Are prophets born or are they made? King Mosiah's sons and the son of Alma were infidels. They were touring the country and lecturing against the church (Mosiah 11:159-206). The church fasted and prayed for the young men; as a result the angel of God met them on the highway and they all came to see the error of their way. These men most assuredly were not born prophets. They were made prophets and mighty men of God by Scripture study, prayer, fasting, and consecration.

Was Moses born a prophet or was he made one? It should be more than a matter of passing interest that the greatest prophets have fasted long periods (up to forty days at a time).

The Lord says:

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedic, priesthood, is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:9.

Are these marvelous promises limited to the Moseses, the Nephis, and the Joseph Smiths, or is the calling of every elder to pay the price as did the sons of Mosiah to obtain these gifts of heaven?

The churches of the world, short on spirituality and the assurances of Divine Presence, have turned to techniques, materials, methods, and all kinds of helps to fill the gap. As we view the spiritual bankruptcy and impotence of modern churchianity and dream of the establish-

Question Time

Question:

I would like to know the history of our church flag. Why are these colors used?

Michigan

MRS. G. B.

Answer:

A group of Boston, Massachusetts, girls in 1927 through their sponsor, Sister Audrey Traver (now Mrs. Ralph M. Hardy) contacted President F. M. Smith, stating that they desired to make a gift to the church. President Smith responded with the suggestion that they present to the General Church two flags, the United States flag and the church flag. The girls approved the suggestion, authorizing President Smith to purchase the two flags. Evidently President Smith submitted the general design of the church flag upon his own initiative. In color it was to be royal purple and old gold with the Church Seal in the center. Sister Laura Frazier of Independence was delegated by President Smith to make the purchase of the first flag. She traveled to Chicago and contracted with a firm of flagmakers and placed the order.

The General Conference of October, 1928, passed the following motion:

That this Conference endorse the color and design of the flag . . . and proclaim it the official church flag.

For information regarding the adoption of the Church Seal we refer you to the following: Saints' Herald, March 29, 1947; March 24, 1952; December 25, 1950.

Note—I have not been able to find when and how royal purple and gold were adopted as the official church colors.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

We are to be baptized by the water, the Holy Spirit, and fire. What is this fire baptism?

Michigan

MRS. A. E.

Answer:

In Scripture fire is a symbol of the holiness and justice of God, and is used in purifying symbology. Deuteronomy 4: 24 says, "The Lord thy God is a consuming fire." Baptism results in purifying its recipients. Christ sanctifies and cleanses his church with the washing of water, through, or in harmony with, the word (Ephesians 5: 26). John promised that Christ would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire, and those who met in the upper room on Pentecost had such an experience. Apparently "Holy Ghost" and "fire" are synonymous (see Acts 2: 3). The work of the Holy Ghost is to enlighten, purify the soul, and inflame those born of it with love for God, love for fellow members of the household of faith, and for all people. It purges away the darkness of ignorance of the will of God, the impurities of our lives, and hate of our fellow man. The Holy Spirit warms us with a wonderful love toward each other. By this we know that we have passed from death to life because of the love and fellowship we have for each other (I John 3: 14). We know and can thus test our being baptized by fire and the Holy Ghost as we see the hay, wood, and stubble-like defects in our lives being purged away and qualities being produced like refined gold taking their place.

ALMA C. ANDREWS

Question:

An article in a newspaper recently stated that the words "brothers and sisters" in Matthew 13: 56 were the same words which, in the original language, were sometimes translated "cousin" or "near relative," therefore the children mentioned as belonging to the mother of our Lord were only close relatives. Is this a correct statement?

Missouri

MRS. J. S. F.

Answer:

We have consulted several texts to find the basis of this assertion, but it seems to be groundless. Westcott & Hort, The New Testament in Greek, as well as the Emphatic Diaglott, which has the Greek as well as the English version, shows the word used to be "adelphos" with the proper endings for masculine and feminine. The same is true in Mark 6: 3. The glossary to the first mentioned text interprets this word "brothers or sisters." No mention is made of other relatives.

We have also consulted the new Revised Standard Version, which has the latest and perhaps the best editing of any of the modern versions of the Scripture, and Westminster's Dictionary of the Bible, both of which allow only for the interpretation found in King James Version.

It is strange that the Catholics, who promote this idea because they feel that Mary would be less a virgin had she other children later, should not have translated their own Douay Version, which is commonly used by them to read "cousin." However, it uses the words "brothers and sisters" just as do other texts.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

Question:

Genesis 7: 72, 73, Inspired Version, indicates that Zion (the city of Enoch—the heavenly New Jerusalem) will descend to earth at the beginning of the millennium, while Revelation 21: 1-5 makes it appear that its return to earth comes at the close of that period. Which is correct?

Missouri

MRS. E. G. F.

Answer:

The prophecy in Genesis of the return to earth of the Zion of Enoch which was translated, and the prophecy in Revelation 21, wherein John saw the New Jerusalem come down from God out of heaven, both refer to one and the same event.

There is a puzzling fact about nearly all prophecy which tends to confuse and cause erroneous interpretations; this is that the events described are not given in chronological order as we are accustomed to read the facts of history in modern literature; they do not occur in the order in which they are written.

Chapter twenty describes the millennium, the binding of Satan, the little season when he will be loosed, the resurrection, and the final judgment. Chapter twenty-one tells of the coming of the Holy City and describes it in detail, but this chapter jumps back of the previous account and starts with the beginning events of the thousand years; it relates events, including a lengthy description of the city which could not have been included in the previous account without confusing the story given there. Chapter twenty-one gives an enlarged account of the millennium itself.

The Last Closet

By Mrs. Frank Bickle

I GUESS I was only one of thousands of women who thanked God for physical strength with which to accomplish what is commonly known as "spring house cleaning." My task done—I thought—I was sitting relaxed in an easy chair. I felt I could indulge in a little time for myself and I closed my tired eyes and let my thoughts wander.

Why was I going down this hall toward a door which seemed to be drawing me? As the door opened I found myself saying, "Oh, no—not another closet to clean! I was sure I was through." But there it was, with untidy shelves. Thinking I would make short work of this, I took hold of the first object, ready to throw it away. On it was written something which I didn't seem to remember. "This is your patience you lost when you needed it." What a strange thing to find in a closet. Then a still small voice within me said, "Any good leader must never lose her patience. She must cultivate it to the point where it becomes a part of her life and personality." Instantly I remembered the time when talking to one of the ladies about something I had previously asked her to do—and she had failed to do it—I had become impatient and spoken to her unkindly. Where was the reserve patience I was so sure I had stored for such occasions?

Another object seemed to be drawing my attention with these familiar words, "I haven't time." Again the voice said, "Don't you remember talking to a nonmember friend? When she seemed interested and wanted to know about your church, you excused yourself by saying, 'I am in a dreadful hurry right now. I just don't have time to talk to you.'"

Well, I was busy that day; I had an appointment I recalled, excusing myself.

"But might it not have been better to have washed your own hair than to have left that friend in doubt as to your sincerity to your church and women's work?" the voice continued. "That moment is lost forever, but heed well any more that come your way."

BY THIS TIME my curiosity was aroused, but still with a little hesitancy I reached for the third object. This was made up of several smaller ones, bound together with a tight cord. How strange, I thought, but I soon found labels on the different items: "Harsh words," "Slow to forgive," "Faultfinding." Now this must be a mistake, for when or where was I guilty of such as these?

By now I found myself listening for my inner voice to explain to me what I was unwilling to believe. Again I heard, "Remember when your husband walked across your clean floor, leaving tracks? At once you were ready with a few harsh words, which would have been much better unsaid—and which you were sorry for as soon as they were spoken. And the time your husband forgot the flowers you were expecting for your anniversary. It seemed hard for you to forgive him, even though he had had trouble at work which caused him to forget. And the Saturday he planned to go fishing you spent a part of the day feeling sorry for yourself, thinking of all his little faults that you would like to change in order to make him a perfect husband. Could you expect him to be more nearly perfect as a husband than you are a wife? A leader is more than name only wherever she may be, within the church walls or with members of her own family. When she seeks to grasp the Lord's hand in her morning prayer, she asks for guidance in what she says and does during the day, and for those with whom she comes in contact. This includes her husband."

I BOWED MY HEAD in shame, for in spite of loving my husband as I did, I have permitted him to see me at my worst. How his ideas of me must have changed since he first told me I was the only one for him—so sure I would make a perfect wife.

I was becoming weary and heart-sick. There remained still another item to be disposed of if I would have a clean shelf. This one was marked "Gossip." Could it be that, as much as I had always hated gossip and the damage it could do, I, too, was guilty? Why, I can remember walking away when someone tried to tell me a bit of gossip—and the time I excused myself and hung up the telephone when a neighbor called to tell me something she thought I ought to know. I had even tried out the theory that if I had to tell a piece of juicy gossip I should wait until I was alone and then tell it while standing in front of a mirror. Could it be that I, too, was guilty? I was blushing with shame, and tears were trickling down my cheeks as the voice again spoke, "Now that you have come face to face with and have cleaned the undesirable things from your memory closet, shut the door, turn the key, and pray that this part of your cleaning will not have to be done another year."

I RETRACED MY STEPS back down the hall whispering, "O dear Father, I pray that with my reinforced efforts, with strength and guidance coming from you, that those under my leadership will recognize my efforts to live a more Christlike life."

Whatever my friends or my enemies say
In volumes up there on the shelf,
The thing that will count on that Ultimate Day
Is the record I keep of myself.

A Short Essay on Faith

By Elsie Harper

IT HAS BEEN SAID that courage is the keystone in the arch of character. Courage is absolutely necessary in time of crisis and trial, when things come upon us that are out of the ordinary. But it is also important that we have courage for everyday living, if we are to live in the way of the Master. It takes courage to give edge to our conscience; it takes courage to give force to our convictions, and it takes courage to give realization to our ideals. Courage is really a faith. If we are to do the work that is ours, we must have faith in ourselves, in others, in those who have gone before us, and in the purposes for which they lived.

We are told in Hebrews that "faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." We must also have a belief or faith in a purposeful future. We must plan; we must live for a reason.

WE KNOW that the infrared ray has a capacity to penetrate a haze that the eye can't see through. Because of this possibility, what it is able to see is shown on the negative of a camera. Then, after the photograph is printed, we are able to see a picture of what was invisible to us. This is accomplished by the use of a film which is sensitized to such rays and by a filter that lets infrared rays through the lens. We can use this as a parable for Christianity. Faith makes the Christian sensitive to the spiritual. The word of God is a filter, letting through God's revelation. Thus a believer comprehends things unseen by those who don't believe, because earthly things produce a haze so dense that spiritual things cannot be seen.

Faith is indispensable, because it lets us see the will of God. Someone has said that faith is the root of all good works. A root that does not produce is dead. The Scriptures tell us that "faith without works is dead." Some of us claim that we have faith in God and in the plan that he has set for us. We have faith that Zion will be. Yet we fail to do the work that has been pointed out to us by our pastor and by those in charge. We allow other things to interfere.

MANY MODERN STORES have doors without latches. As we look at them, we might wonder how to get in. These doors open when an object breaks the beam of an electric eye. We might stand back and wonder, if we don't know the secret, and never get in to do our shopping. But we know from experience all we need to do is to walk up to these doors. When we get within a certain distance of them, they will automatically open. The same thing is true as far as our Christian living is concerned. When we stand outside the door and wait, nothing happens. It doesn't open. It will never open. We must walk toward it. Our very act of faith opens the door which otherwise would remain forever closed. When we move forward, believing the door will open, it swings wide.

We wonder if Zion is going to be. We sometimes doubt. We wonder if we are going to be able to interest our neighbors. We see and experience to some degree the feelings of the people, and it seems that many have no interest in God and in religion. They are interested only in trying to acquire for themselves the most they can obtain of this world's goods. So we stand and wait for an opportunity when what we need is to move forward toward the door. As we move the door will certainly open to us.

A Woman's Prayer

Father, thou hast made us women—
Given us a work to do.
Help us always to be faithful,
Honest, steadfast, ever true.

Help us to uphold the standard
Of thy church and never shirk
Opportunities for service,
But to glorify thy work.

May we oft with gentle fingers
Nurse the sick, caress the child
Who in faith seeks understanding.
Help us speak in accents mild.

May we deem each task a pleasure
As we strive to serve each day,
And to give thee all the honor
As we humbly kneel to pray.

So Much on the Plus Side

By Naomi Russell

GRIPING is a favorite American pastime. Usually it is done with malice toward none. It is, rather, a conversation piece which requires little thought and is good for a minute or an hour as the occasion demands. Farmers lean on their tractors and complain about low prices while their wives prepare better meals than any other women in the world. Union men are sure they're never getting a fair deal although they're the best paid workers in any country, while industrialists swear the unions are bent on bankrupting them although profits are higher than they've ever been. Youngsters have always felt they were being dominated by adults, and adults have always looked back wistfully on their childhood with its freedom from responsibility. Women feel that it is still a man's world and gripe about discrimination. Men feel that women are trying to usurp their power and gripe about the disintegration of the American home as a result of feminine careerists. Regardless of sex or situation, anybody can find cause to complain.

As long as it remains on the conversational tongue-in-cheek level, griping is probably no greater evil than eating sweets between meals. But, like any indulgence, it can get out of control. What begins as a bit of offhand criticism can lead to a fight. Homes have broken up over the man vs. woman feud. Paralyzing strikes have crippled industry as a result of labor-management disagreements. A great deal of humanity's trouble stems from selfishness—

One of the most unhappy people I know is a woman who finds fault with everything. If she is invited out to dinner and the hostess serves fried chicken, it just happens to be the day she had her mouth set for roast beef. If someone does a favor for her, it is because of an ulterior motive. But if a day passes without favors, people are being unfriendly. If her husband works out in the garden of an evening she complains because there's a show downtown she wants to see. If he offers to take her to the theater, she complains that he is trying to get out of working at home. If she is asked to take some special responsibility at church, she says she is being imposed upon. If she is not asked, she feels she is being slighted.

BLUSHINGLY I STOP to reflect on some of my own complaints. In winter I doubt that anyone suffers so much with the cold—and I often comment on it. In summer I gripe about the horrible heat and humidity and use the weather as an excuse for not doing a lot of things I should do. At home I bemoan the fact that I must spend so much time at stove and sink; the couple of hours I devote daily to the menial task of preparing meals and cleaning up after them find me feeling pretty sorry for myself. Getting up at 5:45 six mornings a week strikes me as dismal regimentation, and I complain about that, too.

When self-pity sets in I sometimes have the presence of mind to come up with an emotional antidote that squelches all could-be bitterness. The trouble is that I don't do it more often. As I shiver in midwinter against a sharp wind I try to think how much worse that same wind would feel if I were clothed in the rags of a Korean peasant. I have a heavy coat and thick-soled shoes, and warmth is never very far away. In many parts of the world there is no adequate shelter from the storm, no relief from cold until spring comes.

When what seems to be the very last of my reserve energy ebbs away on a torrid midwestern afternoon, I move a little closer to the high-speed fan and drink something cold—both impossible luxuries in more places on the globe than I care to think about. I can take a drive in the country after sundown and feel the rush of cool fresh air on my face and smell the faint fragrance of sweet clover as I ride along. I am ashamed to complain when I consider that such conveniences and pleasures are mine.

Much as I dislike cooking, all I have to think of is how empty life would be if I had no one depending on me as a housewife. One of the rosy dreams of my premarried days was—of all things—myself, in apron, serving meals to a husband. Reality is seldom as rosy as daydreams, but the very fact that what I wanted is now real should be a source of deep satisfaction to me.

Dispositions, I'm sure, are at their nastiest when an alarm clock shatters the blissful slumbers of early morning. At the time nothing seems so absurd as planting one's feet on the floor and raising an unwilling body to an upright position. The first few bleary-eyed minutes are torture, but a toothbrush and shower usually bring back the will to go on living. What I should force myself to remember, as I lie there thinking how much I don't want to get up, is how on various occasions I have barely escaped injury on the highway—injury that could have made me a bed-fast invalid for the rest of my life.

I'll probably continue to gripe, along with 150 million other people in these United States, but I'm going to try to make it part of my daily routine to take time out for gratitude

Young People in the News

Silver Cup Winner

CLAIR SHEPHERDSON

In June of last year the young people of the church at New Liskeard, Ontario, attended youth camp. Clair Shepherdson was chosen to serve as sports director and to teach archery and recreational leadership. No one bothered to ask Clair how old he was; it was simply assumed that he was twenty-one. But a couple of days before camp closed, it was discovered that he was just eighteen—"too young" to serve on the senior staff. This was quite a surprise since Clair's efforts during that week ranked with the best. He was quick to sense those inevitable problems which arise and instantly cope with them. His previous experience with sports was shown in the efficient manner in which he conducted his many responsibilities.

Clair, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Shepherdson, was born in June, 1933, on a farm near New Liskeard. At the present time his father and two older brothers are operating a sawmill and a six-hundred-acre farm at New Liskeard. He comes from a family of six brothers and four sisters.

As a member of the Junior Farmer Association, Clair raised and trained calves for showmanship. He was also editor of the Junior Farmer's paper. In 1950 he won the Junior Farmer public speaking contest in the district of Temiskamang. The next competoo. There's so much on the plus side, I should never dwell on what is not as I would have it be. When dissatisfactions well up, I should look beyond my own desires to the needs of others, for as I do I shall surely forget the demands of ego, the frustration of unfulfilled self-promises. When I do I'll be a happier person, a better steward.

tion was in North Bay, where he placed second. A schoolteacher won first place.

Clair was very interested and active in schoolwork. He was on the Student's Council of New Liskeard High School as boys' athletics representative in 1949; in 1950 he was vice-president. In the field of sports, he excelled in almost every activity. The first two years of high school he concentrated mostly on football and basketball, serving as captain of the intramural basketball team for four years, and captain and quarterback of the junior and senior football teams in 1950 and 1951. In August, 1950, he was sent to the Ontario Athletic Training Camp where he took a two-weeks' course in coaching and leadership.

Clair is primarily interested in track, field, and individual sports, especially jumping and vaulting. In 1951, he was awarded a silver cup for the senior championship for track and field of the surrounding four towns. His record at this track meet was high jump, five feet four inches; and pole vault, nine feet eight inches. As a result of this championship, he was entered in a meet with contestants from all of northern Ontario and came in third in pole vaulting.

In 1951 Clair was chosen representative of the Ontario Council of Christian Education for the district of Temiskamang and was sent by the Council to Port Hope, Ontario, for a week of training in Christian Leadership.

He has spent summers and holidays helping his father and brothers on the farm. Since graduation from high school, he has started a course as a student-in-accounts. When he has completed the five years of necessary training, he will get a Chartered Accountant degree.

It might easily be supposed that these activities adequately filled Clair's time. However, he felt there was more he wanted to do, and he became actively engaged in a service possessing the highest calling known to man: ministering to the needs of one's brother. Clair now has the responsibilities of church school superintendent and Zion's League president. Somehow he manages to find time from his studies and other duties to put a great deal of work into planning and preparing for both. Under his able leadership the Zion's League has increased from eight to fifteen active members, and the church school from twenty to thirty. Clair's persistence toward a goal accounts for the accomplishment of whatever he undertakes. In his own words: "We realize the importance of teaching the right way of life." He has an intense interest in people and their needs, and his magnetic personality has become an influence for good in the community.

ment of Zion we will do well, like David, to look to the hills from which our help cometh, and weigh well the formula of the sons of Mosiah lest we, too, lacking in spiritual things, attempt to fill the void with mere techniques, materials, and methods. Slides, books, radio programs, retreats, study courses, organization, ad infinitum, at best are only secondary and complementary to the real thing—spirituality. If these good things take the place of spirituality among us, then however polished we may be or however impressive the round of our activities we shall one day awake to discover that we have been traveling a one-way, dead-end street.

Consecration

In conclusion it seems well that a few comments should be made about the fourth ingredient to the sons of Mosiah formula. Consecration is really the first and great commandment—to love and serve God with all our might, mind, and strength.

If some of my readers have exercised themselves in Scripture study, prayer, and fasting without satisfactory results, may I suggest that they now go out and consecrate themselves according to their talents and gifts to the Lord's work. I suggest they try the Lord and see whether he will not bless them with the sweet, rich blessings of his Spirit.

The Book of Mormon Story

By Alan S. Frater

SOME READERS of the Book of Mormon have difficulty in following the story through, because it is not presented in chronological order and frequently interpolations into the text by later holders of the records add to the difficulty.

The Book of Mormon was translated from plates that had been found in a hill in New York State by Joseph Smith, under an angel's guidance. The plates, which had been buried there by Moroni about the year A.D. 421 contained an abridgment made by Mormon (after whom the Book has been named) from records passed down by succeeding generations and covering, at some length, the history of the inhabitants of America from about 2200 B.C. to early in the fifth century. In this time two races of people inhabited the continent, but it is easier to follow the history of these peoples if their doings are divided into four periods.

The first period covers the history of the Jaredites, their journey from the Tower of Babel at the time of the confounding of languages, their landing in Central America about 2200 B.C., and their life there which continued for about sixteen centuries. Then divisions among the people and disastrous wars led to their extermination about 600 B.C.

The Book of Ether, next to the last of the fifteen books of the Book of Mormon, contains the story of this Jaredite period.

The second period, chronologically, but first on the records, covers the Nephite history from the time of the departure of Lehi and his family from Jerusalem about 600 B.C., their migration across Arabia and the Pacific, and their arrival on the west coast of America, to the time of their unity with the people of Zarahemla about 200 B.C. The story of this second period is found in the books of First and Second Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, and Omni.

The people of Zarahemla, as discovered by the Nephites, were the degraded descendants of the Mulekites who left Jerusalem shortly after the departure of Lehi and his family. Their route of travel was similar to that of the Nephites. They left no records but, when found, were in possession of the record of the Jaredites which was brought to them by Coriantumr, sole survivor of the Jaredite war of extermination.

The Book of Omni, chapter 1, verses 26-39, refers to these incidents.

The third period, covering the unity of Nephi and Zarahemla in the land of Zarahemla, brings us to the time of Christ. During this period, which is recorded in the books of Mosiah, Alma, and Helaman, we read of trouble with the Lamanites, wicked descendants of the rebellious sons of Lehi.

The fourth period dates from the time of the birth of Jesus Christ at Bethlehem. During this period the books of Nephi, sometimes known as III Nephi and Nephi (or IV Nephi), and of Mormon record the wickedness of the people; their partial destruction by storms and earthquakes; the visit of Jesus Christ to America, ushering in the Golden Age; and the gradual decline in the Nephites' morality until their destruction by the Lamanites at the Battle of Cumorah, A.D. 384.

Mormon, a survivor of the battle, arranged the plates and abridged them into the form found by Joseph Smith. Occasionally he added his own comments. The "Words of Mormon," as found between the books of Omni and Mosiah, is an example of such commentary.

Moroni, son of Mormon, was entrusted with the care of the plates at his father's death. He buried them where they were found by Joseph Smith, but before doing so he completed his father's work of editing. His comments will be noted in the Book of Ether. The last book, which bears his name, contains some added facts and the reiteration of some doctrinal teachings which he considered worthy of emphasis.

These four periods are here presented chronologically. In the Book of Mormon, the first or Jaredite period is described after the second, third, and fourth periods.

typified by the good will existing among the quorums of the church.

I counted up one time the statements in the Doctrine and Covenants, "Let contentions cease." We've had our share of them; I think too many for our own good. We're to contend earnestly for the word, but as Brother Elbert has said, "There's no sin in Reorganized Latter Day Saints differing, but it is a sin for them to quarrel about their differences." I see a new era of the church beginning with this spirit of good will, unity, and harmony; the desire to work together more than we have existed for a long time. Particularly did I see it at this Conference. It demonstrated anew that we're on a basis of good will and fellowship. Some new movements are going forward in the way of the storehouse. A call has gone out for surplus, the first in my lifetime. Not much has happened since the call was made. A great deal of education needs to be done. I know that for a number of years people tried to offer surplus who didn't have any surplus, or they didn't understand what they were doing. It's not sufficient just to get a receipt for surplus. There's a spirit behind this, and the call has gone out and the work for which surplus is to be employed is hastening.

Right now in the Center Place the institutions of the church are employing over three hundred people every day, and I'm not including Graceland College or where we have properties being looked after in other places. I'm just thinking about the work in Center Stake. We have many, many times more than when I came here first in 1920. But the quantity is not the significant thing about this movement. The demands have gone ahead so fast that it is impossible to find among the people of the church those who are trained and available to take care of all these positions that the church has open. Among this better than three hundred there are several who are not members of the church. This isn't bad, but it does indicate one thing—there's a call, there's a challenge going out. We need more people prepared for certain things the church has to do, and that demand is going to increase. It is challenging.

These prepared people needed by our institutions are technicians for our laboratory out at the Sanitarium, typists, bookkeepers, printers, agricultural experts, editors, and men of industry who have capital and ability to help develop the work here in the Center Place.

WHERE DO YOU and I fit into the building of the kingdom? "If you would enter into the life." Let's think of this as something that takes every day of the week, not just something that takes in a little while on Sunday morning. I know the church has a great many people who have all these elements—ability, availability, determination, and the right perspective. They envision this work and it is upon them that I am building my hopes of a new era and a better day. First we had to become united. We couldn't let contentions divide us. I do not say that the era of contention is gone. I think that we'll take our differences in a little bit better spirit perhaps in the years to come.

We have learned some things the hard way, and God is calling us to serve him for a new day. Perhaps you may never feel that it is your lot to fill one of these three hundred positions. I'm sure all of us couldn't find employment within the church institutions, but there are ways in which each of us can help.

There may be nothing new in this thought, but let me suggest that while we have stirred your minds a little bit, one of the ways that I am particularly interested in is writing for the church papers, expressing your thoughts so that you may help someone else. You may find that isn't your line. We can't publish everything that's sent in, but at least trying to write does help you to clarify your own thoughts and that's some advantage.

There's a great need for teachers in all our church schools; better qualified teachers, those who are devoted to it, who love all the people all the time and want to serve them. There's a need for League leaders in the congregations. Yes, there's a need for ministers either in the Aaronic order or the Melchisedec order, ministers who love the people and serve them, and it is upon the wings of this type of service that the church is going to enter into this new era and make its power felt for good so that people will have no doubt that there are Saints living among them.

BROTHER ROY CHEVILLE told a rather interesting incident when he came back from Germany. He said that over there in Germany among one or more groups they had the tradition that no one could teach in the church school unless he be ordained a teacher, and they were having a little difficulty finding enough ordained teachers to teach the church school classes.

We may smile at that, but remember that these people do not have the Doctrine and Covenants accessible to them as we do. They have not been traditioned in the church. They lack a great deal in church literature, and they're doing the very best they can. They'll likely go through these periods of contention because of this very thing. The thing that clears their thinking, that helps to prepare their minds to work together, is the written Word and ministers to interpret and make clear these things.

Let me close with this thought. The great need of the church today is for a full-time demonstration of the gospel right where you live, right where I live. We talk about full-time ministers. We're all full-time ministers in some capacity. We can spend our full time at it. Oh, we may have to work to pay the expenses in some industrial way, but we do need, and we need badly—and this I think is your place in the kingdom—a full-time demonstration of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ right where you and I are living.

On June 30 Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Lott of London, Ontario, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary; 160 friends called to congratulate them, and the Ontario government honored them with a certificate of congratulation.

Wesley Lott met his wife, the former Lizzie Judkins, at Sunday school. They are members of London Branch where Sister Lott is active in the women's department, and Brother Lott holds the office of priest. For twenty-five years he was an employee of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and both are ardent travelers. They have four children: Floyd of Chatham, Ontario; Fred, Doris (Mrs. Harry Prowse), and Hilda (Mrs. George Geddes) of London; eleven grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

Far West Stake News

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—The Far West Stake conference was held April 19, with Stake President Emery E. Jennings presiding. The day's services began with songs by the Zion's League. A short business meeting was held. The following recommendations to the priesthood were approved: as elders, Orville J. Binnicker, Robert A. Gould, Conrad F. Johnson, Charles E. Powell, and Vernon J. Ruoff; as priests, Harold Bezona, Eugene H. Denton, Gerald Jeschke, and Donald L. Sturgis; as deacons, Roger Acord and Harry K. Reeves.

Kenneth F. Nelson, Guilford, Missouri, was ordained to the office of high priest and was set apart to serve on the stake high council. The statement of ordination was given by Elder Evan R. Agenstein, and the ordination by President F. Henry Edwards and Elder Orville L. Moffet. President Edwards was the morning speaker.

During the afternoon business session reports of all the departments were received, and the following stake officers were sustained: Stake Presidency, Emery E. Jennings, president, Orville L. Moffet and Evan R. Agenstein; Stake Bishopric, Lewis E. Landsberg, bishop, Kenneth Piepergerdes and Lawrence Keck. The following officers were elected: Council of Religious Education, Charles Powell, director, Virginia Bean, Geneva M. Ross, and Conrad F. Johnson; Council of Zion's League, Garland Snapp, director, Wesley Ballinger, Emerson McCord, John W. Newhart, Alden Dyer, Maynard Newcom, and Eldon McKee; Council of Department of Women, Grace Salisbury, director, May Salisbury, Charity Bowman, Pearl Clark, and Dorothy Siebert; Council of Music, Ruth Haden, director, Pearl Kinnaman, and Stella Hidy; Council of Boy Scouting, Charles Beadnall, director, Robert Agee, Vernon Sooter, and Edwin Swails; Stake Historian, Marie Agenstein; Stake Attorney, John W.

Newhart; and Stake Secretary, Juanita Pettigrew.

Special music was provided by the Celeste Chorus from the Stewartville, Maple Grove, Osborn, and Cameron congregations, and the priesthood chorus consisting of over one hundred voices. Brother Louis R. Riemer of St. Joseph played a violin solo.

A special service for the children was held during the morning, with Leon Steckel in charge. A colored film was shown.

Apostle Roscoe Davey held a series of missionary services in each of the three congregations at St. Joseph, Missouri, from February 15 to March 8. Brother Davey illustrated his sermons with colored slides. Each evening he presented a fifteen-minute travelogue of his travels throughout the world.

Brother Allen Breckenridge was guest of the Adult Activity Group at Penn Street church February 2 and April 6. Colored slides were shown as he told of his missionary experiences with the island people of Tahiti.

Pre-Easter series of services were held in most of the congregations of the stake. On Palm Sunday the First Church choir of St. Joseph, under the direction of Evan Ehlers, presented the Easter Cantata "From Olivet to Calvary."

At a branch night the pastors, past and present, of the Second Church congregation at St. Joseph were honored with a supper and program. The theme was "Down Memory's Lane." The pastors honored were J. L. Bear, Orman Salisbury, Hallard Felch, Ervin L. Acord, and Robert A. Gould.

Sister W. Wallace Smith of Independence was guest speaker at a city-wide women's meeting in St. Joseph. Her subject was "Women of the Early Church." The Social Service shop of Far West celebrated its first anniversary Tuesday, June 30.

Several regional religious education institutes have been held in the stake. A study class on ways of teaching was organized. Vacation church schools were held at Cameron, Missouri, and Fanning, Kansas, and each of the three congregations at St. Joseph, Missouri. On Children's Day there were fifty-seven baptisms in the stake, making a total of ninety-five since the first of the year.

The annual outdoor Sunday evening services for the congregations of the stake began June 7 at the reunion grounds.

During the year the Zion's League of St. Joseph enjoyed visiting with the Leaguers of the other congregations in the stake. A special service was held for the high school graduates of St. Joseph. Stake President Jennings was the speaker. A Book of Mormon was presented to each of the graduates. A stake-wide Zion's League rally was held at Bedison on June 6-7. During the month of July the Leaguers of St. Joseph attended the weekly fellowship services in a body, their theme being "Getting in tune for reunion."—Reported by MARIE AGENSTEIN

PLYMOUTH, MICHIGAN.—Stake President Blair McClain spent two and one-half weeks with the Plymouth congregation of the Detroit International Stake. He preached for the morning and evening services on May 10 and 17, and showed slides and lectured on May 13 and 20. Sunday services are held in the Masonic temple and Wednesday services in the Saints' homes. Because it was not possible to rent a hall for evening preaching services, the group met in homes, where Brother McClain presented nine cottage meeting lectures while showing slides on the life and ministry of Jesus. He visited in the homes of both members and nonmembers during his series.

Conference at Seoul

SEOUL, KOREA.—A Reorganized Latter Day Saint Servicemen's Conference was held in Seoul, Korea, from June 8 to 10. A priesthood meeting was held on June 8 under the leadership of Elder Seth O. Osborn, at which meetings and speakers were scheduled for June 9-10. The invocation was given by Priest Francis Presler, Jr., and the benediction by Priest Alma Blair.

On June 9 the service began with a prayer and testimony meeting, with Elder V. H. Humphrey in charge, and Brother Francis Presler as the speaker. At the preaching service which followed Brother Alma Blair was in charge, with Elder M. F. Caldwell as speaker. At the afternoon service occurred what was probably the first R.L.D.S. ordination in Korea. Brother Caldwell read a letter from Pastor F. Roy Whipple, Shawnee Drive congregation, stating the branch and Kansas City Stake had approved the ordination of John B. Studdard to priest. Brother Studdard was ordained by Elders Carl F. Crum, Millard F. Caldwell, Seth O. Osborn, and Victor H. Humphrey. In the evening, Brother Osborn had charge of a business meeting.

A Communion service was held on June 10, at which speakers were Brothers Humphrey and Osborn. A get-acquainted meeting followed in which each one gave a short personal sketch of his life, highlighting his contact with and spiritual experiences in the church. Pictures of the assembled group were taken, and arrangements were made by Brother Caldwell for a sight-seeing tour of Seoul. The conference closed with a prayer and testimony meeting with Brother John Decker in charge and Brother Osborn as speaker.—Reported by CARLIN TALCOTT

Women Have Project

ANN ARBOR, MICHIGAN.—The women's department had a very interesting project this year. Their leader, Sister Pearl Gittins, supplied each woman a nickel at the beginning of the year and asked each one to make that nickel grow and turn in the results at the end of the year. The group had over ninety-seven dollars to turn in at the close of activities for the year. Some baked bread and cakes and sold them, others knitted articles to sell, and others did typing or mending. The money was turned over to the local building fund.—Reported by TWYLA FITCH

Building Fund Contest

MEDFORD, OREGON.—Members of the Rogue Valley mission went to Grants Pass on June 14 to witness the baptisms of two children, Gail Tucker of Yreka and Carolyn Field of Grants Pass.

A contest to raise money for the building fund closed with the women turning over seventy-one dollars to the building fund and the men serving a dinner to the victorious ladies.

Priest Dale Ward, who is stationed with the Army at Ft. Lewis, Washington, and Miss Guy, of Salem, visited the group on July 12.—Reported by SISTER CORREY

Double Wedding Anniversary Celebration

On February 18 members of the Denver, Colorado, Branch joined in the celebration of the golden wedding anniversary of Leo and Ada Shupe, and the silver wedding anniversary of their son and his wife, Burrell and Doris Shupe. At a candlelight service in the upper auditorium of the church they reaffirmed their vows, after which a reception was held in the lower auditorium.

Church membership in the Shupe family dates back to Peter and Sarah Wright Shupe, who with their eight sons and seven daughters arrived in Nauvoo from Virginia a few days after the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. These stalwart pioneers, Peter and Sarah, were buried in one grave on the plains of eastern Iowa. One of their sons, Isaac (grandfather of Leo) was a member of the original church and later held the office of elder in the Reorganization, serving the church until his death in 1896. His son, E. F. Shupe, also held the office of elder and officiated at the weddings of both Leo and Burrell.

follows: "No man hath seen God at any time, except he hath borne record of the Son; for except it is through him no man can be saved."

That is in accord with the Master's own statement, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14: 6).

The visions of old are confirmed to us in these latter days by the very first vision and the first word of revelation opening up the Restoration Movement. When the young prophet had gone to the forest to pray, his first vision came to him gloriously, and he beheld two personages, one of whom indicated the other and said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." Quoting Joseph directly:

I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun. . . . When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) "This is my beloved Son, hear him."—Church History, Volume 1, page 9.

Thus in the very beginning of the Restoration Movement the prophet in vision saw God and Christ as two persons. Was the prophet seeing double and under a delusion concerning such a vital matter in that, his first great spiritual experience? Was God giving him a deceptive vision? We can never give credence to either of those postulates.

The prophet actually saw two persons. Both spoke to him. The Father said, "Joseph, this is my beloved son, hear him." The experience was so convincing that the prophet wrote that though he were slain he could never deny it. He was slain, and thus with his blood sealed his testimony to the truth of that sublime experience. Let no argumentation shake your faith.

To the many testimonies of inspired visions sent from above, in which God and Christ appear as two persons, may be added this fine testimony:

After the many testimonies which have been given of him [Christ], this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father. —Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

In What Sense Are God and Christ One?

Christ indeed said, "I and my Father are one" (John 10: 30). He also enjoins us, "I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine" (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6). Are we to become one person? Or are we to be many persons of one accord?

Just before he went out from the "last supper" into the garden of Gethsemane, our Lord offered up a wonderful prayer. More than once in that petition he prayed for his disciples and for all those who might believe on their message that they might be "one." He used these very explicit words, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are" (John 17: 11).

Obviously Christ did not pray that those present with him, and the hundreds of thousands who would believe on their testimony, might become one great big man—one person. They were to be one in the sense that he and his Father were one—or, to transpose the thought, God and Christ are one in the same sense in which he wishes his followers to be one.

It is said of Christ that "he loved righteousness and hated iniquity." Since he and his Father desire always to do the right thing, the righteous thing, and since all truth is known to them both, they are eternally one in their choices and in their work. As we "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth" we come nearer the time when his prayer shall be answered and we shall be one—as he and his Father are one.

May "the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen."

STRANGE BUSINESS

There is a peculiar business in our town. The company buys wrecked cars that have been smashed on the highway too badly to be repaired. Many of the parts are still good and can be sold at reduced prices to people who do their own car repairing. Going by recently we looked at some of the wrecks. Smashed radiators seemed like faces with the twisted grin of death upon them. Human blood was on the upholstery and marks of human flesh on windshields, steering wheels, and instrument panels.

It is amazing how nonchalantly people kill themselves and others in a futile effort to save a little time. What good is the time saved, when you suddenly have all eternity?
L. J. L.

BOOK BURNING

The "Deseret News," Salt Lake City, May 16, 1953, carried an item about a Swedish immigrant whose hobby, before leaving his native land, was gathering up in "bookstores throughout Sweden" anti-Mormon books and burning them: "Elder Wiman set himself up as a one-man cleanup committee to destroy as many of these diatribes against the church as possible"—obviously meaning the Mormon Church. We believe the implied approval of such a "hobby" by the "Deseret News" is in marked contrast with the policy of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, during Nauvoo days when attacks against the original church were not only noticed in the columns of the "Times and Seasons" but were often quoted or reproduced in full. Burning books takes us back to Rome, Spain, and Hitlerism. Burning books is a hark-back to bigotry.
Israel A. Smith

REASSURANCE

The weather has been hot recently in the Middle West—high temperatures, searing winds, excessive humidity—with the sun glaring at the suffering earth like a malevolent eye.

At night the thermometer goes down slowly, sometimes hardly at all. If the temperature is under 90 you can sleep. If it is above 90 you lie awake listening to the drone of a fan, perspiring and thinking what it will be like to go to work in the morning with no appreciable rest.

On such a night recently, it was toward dawn when a cool breeze came up from the east. The morning star, brilliant and beautiful, rose above the woods on the horizon. It was like a blessing, a reminder of the divine love. It brought peace and a period of rest, making it possible to get through the next day

When you have to make a major decision take two pieces of paper, write on the one all the things in favor of the proposition, and on the other all those against it. Take your time, sleep on it, and take it to the Lord in prayer, believing that you will receive an answer. He is the only one who can give you the right answer. You may have to pray many times—Christ prayed forty days—but it is worth any effort to know God's will.

When you have reached a decision in this manner, you won't ever have to doubt or look back and wonder if you have done the right thing.
L. J. L.

Zionic Problems

a close-up view

This spiral-bound book contains the many lectures and discussions vital to gaining a clearer understanding of present-day Zionic problems that were presented at the Professional and Business Men's Institute held in Independence last February. While it was not possible to include every remark that was made from the floor, the summaries are quite comprehensive and reasonably accurate. Order today.

PRESIDENT IMPROVING

President Israel A. Smith is improving and it was reported on August 5 that he was scheduled to leave the hospital at the end of that week.

AT GROUNDBREAKING CEREMONY

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. L. DeLapp were in Washington, D. C., on August 2 for the groundbreaking services for the new church to be built there. Elder Jack Conway is the pastor in the capital city of the United States.

PARTICIPATE IN REUNIONS

President and Mrs. Wallace Smith have returned home from the two reunions which they attended in July, one at Chetek, the other at Port Elgin. Brother Smith taught the general class, preached, and took part in the leadership of the prayer meetings. Sister Smith represented the General Church in teaching the women's classes at both of these reunions as well as consulting with local leaders on organization and procedure in women's work in the branches. On August 2, they were in Topeka where Brother Smith gave the Communion talk.

TO ATTEND REUNIONS

Apostle D. Blair Jensen left Independence the week end of August 8 and 9 to attend the Oklahoma Reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma. Following this reunion, Brother Jensen plans to be at the Eastern Colorado Reunion at Palmer Lake which is scheduled for August 15-23.

RETURNED TO OFFICE

John Darling, director of leadership training for the Department of Religious Education, has just returned from reunions at Sanford and Lexington, Michigan. The reunion at Lexington was for the Flint-Port Huron Districts, and the group at Sanford held reunion at the Liahona State Park. Brother Darling reports that both reunions were outstanding and that at the one at Sanford eighty-five people were enrolled in the leadership training class, with many of them completing the course for credit. He also reports that outstanding work in the children's and young people's groups was done.

SPEAKER AT RICHMOND

Elder Franklyn S. Weddle, General Church music and radio department director, was the speaker at Richmond, Missouri, August 9.

AT KENNETT, MISSOURI

Elder C. D. Neff and Seventy James Daugherty attended the Southern Missouri District conference, August 1 and 2, at Kennett, Missouri. The men shared the responsibility of preaching, directing the prayer services, and teaching the classes. Brother Neff conducted the business session on Sunday at which time Elder J. A. Phillips was re-elected district president.

AT FAR WEST REUNION

Elder Evan Fry, General Church radio minister, left Independence August 7 to attend the Far West Stake Reunion at Stewartville, Missouri. Brother Fry will preach the evening sermons, direct a forum, and conduct several classes.

Missions Abroad

THE WORLD MISSION of the church was clearly indicated nearly a year before the church was organized. At that time the word of the Lord came to Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and David Whitmer outlining the work of the Twelve Apostles and authorizing Oliver and David to search out the twelve men who should form the charter members of the apostolic council in this dispensation. Among other things this revelation said, "If they [the Twelve] desire to take upon them my name, with full purpose of heart, they are called to go into all the world to preach my gospel unto every creature" (Doctrine and Covenants 16: 5b).

From the beginning the church was strong in missionary testimony. Nevertheless, it was nearly five years before the first twelve apostles were ready to enter on the distinctive work of their calling. But when this time came they were not alone. Others had been growing with them, and two weeks after the first apostles were ordained the first Seventies were ordained also (February 28, 1835). From that time forward the Twelve and the Seventy have carried world-wide responsibility as "special witnesses of the name of Christ" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11 c, 13 a ff).

The first mission abroad was to England in 1837 and according to the Prophet Joseph was "for the salvation of the church in these last days." This mission was attended by phenomenal success, and England was soon regarded as a base for operations on the Continent and throughout the British Empire. Four years later a majority of the members of the Council of Twelve were in England together, "organizing and setting in order" the work of the mission. During the lifetime of the Martyr, other important missions were undertaken, but this was probably the most productive.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY WORK was renewed quite early in the Reorganization, with the reopening of the British Mission in 1863. The return to the Society Islands Mission and Australia came ten years later. Nearly ten years after this—in 1882—some sound inspirational counsel restricted the elders of the "first quorums" to "the land of America" until the work of the Reorganization "was more fully established, and a greater unity of understanding between them obtained" (Doctrine and Covenants 118: 1 b). But these restrictions were removed by 1887, when the elders were told to "prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may" (D. and C. 119: 8 a).

Early in the new century word was given that "missions abroad other than those in the land of Joseph which were opened officially during the lifetime of the martyrs shall be considered as having been opened unto us" (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 12 a). In the same revelation the church was advised that Alexander H. Smith of the First Presidency should visit Australia and the islands of the sea and there assist the authorities to arrange their missionary labor, and that E. L. Kelley, the other counselor in the First Presidency, should accompany Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths on a similar mission to England.

This same revelation called Elder Peter Andersen, a Danish American, to be an Apostle in the Quorum of Twelve, and went on to say:

It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and others, as the missions may require; these tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the Presidency before being published.

They should be short, clearly stated, and a sufficient number should be printed to furnish the traveling ministry with the quantities desirable for them to distribute.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11.

A year later Cornelius A. Butterworth, an American domiciled in Australia, and John W. Rushton of England were added to the Apostolic Quorum. Since that time this chief missionary quorum of the church has always included Apostles whose church origins go back to missions abroad.

Despite the difficulties occasioned by world wars and world depressions, valiant efforts have been made during this century to maintain and to extend the work of the church in missions abroad. Since the close of World War II this work has been markedly intensified. Two out of every three present members of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric have had personal experience in distant fields, and in addition Apostle Charles R. Hield and his associates are laying sound foundations for work among the Spanish-speaking peoples.

It is the sober conviction of the members of the Presiding Councils of the church that work in the foreign fields already open should be pushed to the point where these fields are self-sustaining in finances and personnel, and where they can become bases for still further work in missions abroad. This latter possibility has already been hinted by the fine work being done in the Society Islands Mission by Elder Vivian Sorensen, mission president, who is a product of the Australian field and who is associated with Elder Alan Tyree who recently went to this field from the United States.

We have reason to be proud of our representatives at present laboring in missions abroad. We have some good teams, men and women. But their numbers and their resources need to be augmented. In the long run, this can be done only as the work of the church as a whole is strengthened and quickened and kept in balance. F. H. E.

Pilgrimage to Palmyra

Over one hundred college students and professional people from the eastern states and Canada have indicated their intention to attend the College Student Conference at Rochester, New York, on September 5, 6, and 7.

We would like to urge pastors and parents of college and university students, particularly in the East, to encourage and help make it possible for their sons and daughters to attend this conference. The program is designed to minister to the particular needs of college people. It is hoped also that the leadership and testimony of the substantial number of professional and business people who are solid in their own religious convictions may contribute to cementing church loyalties during college years.

A further value of the conference will be the experience of visiting scenes of early church history in the Sunday afternoon "Pilgrimage to Palmyra." The conference will visit the Grove, the Joseph Smith home, and Hill Cumorah, where a worship service will be provided.

F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency and Henry L. Livingston of the Presiding Bishopric will represent the General Church. A substantial number of our members will also take part in the program, and adequate provision has been made for individual participation by all in attendance in worship, discussions, and fellowship.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Western Oklahoma District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Clayton Graef, Star Route No. 1, Friona, Texas, as bishop's agent of the Western Oklahoma District succeeding Brother R. W. Bunch, whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of August and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Graef at the above address.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Bunch for the service that he has given in this office.

We have also appreciated the support of the Saints given to Brother Bunch during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother

Graef to them for their favorable consideration and support.

Note of Thanks

Many of the press comments on the arrest of the polygamists living at Short Creek, Arizona, have been notably inaccurate in dealing with the origins of Mormon polygamy. When we have received clippings containing inaccuracies, we have written to the editors concerned in the hope that our letters will be published so as to help correct the misinformation which has gone abroad.

This will express our thanks to the many interested church members who have written us.

A Report from the Sanitarium Chaplain

In discharging the duties of the office of Chaplain at the San there are many challenges and rich spiritual experiences. The opportunities are golden. Ministry to the sick, to their relatives, and to the large number of people involved in the care of the sick is in harmony with and a definite part of the special mission of Jesus as announced by him—"to heal the broken-hearted and to comfort all that mourn."

This special ministry has included:

Conducting or directing daily chapel services, monthly fellowship services, and special services (graduation and capping, etc.)

Holding conferences with student nurses and with employees of the hospital and personnel of the School of Nursing

Making daily pastoral calls (202 beds—the chaplain averages 140 adult calls per day)

Administering to fifteen to twenty patients per day and offering from forty to fifty prayers for the sick every day

Listening to and counseling with those who are extremely worried over sick relatives

Counseling those with problems and difficulties

Conducting an average of two funeral services per week, including thirty-nine funerals in two years for people who have had no church affiliation

Performing eighteen marriages and blessing thirty-nine babies in two years

Being on call twenty-four hours per day

Preparing a bulletin which goes to every patient in the hospital every Sunday

Directing the service of Communion to the Reorganized Latter Day Saint patients the first Sunday of every month

Teaching in the School of Nursing

Making two trips to St. Louis annually to call on the student nurses who are on affiliation with the Robert Koch Hospital for specialized training in tuberculosis and at the State Sanatorium for work in psychiatry

Calling on the student nurses who are on affiliation at Mercy Hospital in Kansas City where the students receive special instruction in pediatrics

Doing missionary work among patients and employees when opportunities present themselves (weekly distributing the Saints' Herald, tracts, Books of Mormon, and Inspired Version)

Assisting in the School of Nursing parties and socials and other activities

Taking spiritual advice and counsel to all committees and functioning groups of the hospital

Trying to set a distinct spiritual tone and atmosphere in the hospital and its environs

Trying to be a good will ambassador representing the hospital and the church in our community

Speaking at civic clubs, school assemblies, PTA meetings, baccalaureates, and other church groups

Taking regular teaching assignments in the Stone Church school

Preaching regularly (missionary and pastoral)

Joining the health-team with the professional people of the hospital to take a healing ministry to all patients who come to the church's own hospital

This is a part of the work of the San Chaplain. We are assured that the present chaplain enjoys his work very much. He feels he has been called to this work and is willing to function for as long as the church officials deem wise. Through the proper authorities of the church, the chaplain answers directly to the First Presidency for supervision. He feels that God has directed the Joint Council to establish an office of chaplain on a full-time basis and that the functions of such an office will continue to be divinely blessed.

"Into All the World"

By Arthur A. Oakman

THE CHURCH reappeared in the early nineteenth century upon the American continent, and it grew in power and outreach under the blessings of a constitution which had been framed by wise men raised up for that very purpose. The time and place of this Restoration attests and reveals divine wisdom, for today the United States is the only nation under heaven which freely gives its material and spiritual support to this church. Economic barriers imposed upon the peoples of other countries by their respective governments prevent the free flow of material substance so essential to financing the work of the church. In some countries—not in all of them—spiritual barriers exist along with the economic ones which prohibit the free flow of ideas and ideals.

Yet it must ever be remembered that this is not an "American church." It existed long before America was carved out of the land mass, when the earth was divided. It will exist still when this world has been forgotten. The church of Jesus Christ is universal. Its message is designed to meet the needs of human beings irrespective of race, creed, color, or sex. Its institutions are designed to conserve its message and its ideals wherever these are preached. The "garden" in which the "tree" is planted is beautiful. The soil will nourish it to full fruition. But the leaves and the fruit of the tree are for the healing of the nations. There is no other purpose to be found either in preparing the garden or in planting the tree. The message of the church which will heal the nations is to all the world, including America.

THE VERY GREAT importance of missions abroad will be remembered if we recall that it was "for the salvation of the church in these last days" that Joseph Smith inaugurated in 1837 the mission to England. Still the salvation of the "church in these last days" depends upon our recognition today, fully and completely, of the divine mission in all the world and upon our actual dedication to this universal mission. Whatever else we do, our missions abroad must be maintained and extended.

In Europe (which includes the British Isles) the opportunities for the extension of the work are limited only by our ability to grasp them. We need young men and women of intelligence and devotion, people who are clean, capable, and consecrated, to work here as ambassadors of Christ. Consider the requirements of this kind of mission! Besides the character and integrity ordinarily associated with latter-day saintism, there must be the disposition to work and sacrifice to break down every barrier which separates these people from their charge. Languages must be learned and histories and cultures and laws appreciated. In fact, of these people is required that kind of preparation which will enable them to be citizens of the "new world" which is waiting to be born. Can anyone please think of any other calling or vocation requiring a greater dedication of the whole man? Can anyone find a better master to serve than this Jesus Christ of whom the prophets testified should come into the world?

Missionary and pastoral work in Europe is the portal to a richer and a fuller life for any family accepted for the task. How fortunate are they who do now, and who have until now, and who shall from henceforth serve in this mission!

Many years ago one who had been "sent" heard a cry from Macedonia, "Come over and help us." How blessed were his ears! How rich his heart! How immortal his outreach! How he blesses us now through the words which he wrote, some of which were written first to these very Macedonians!

Christ's touch has still "its ancient power." Who will yield their lives to him as Paul of old did, and accept the touch that will mold them to the pattern as "seemeth him good"? Who will make themselves available for service "in all the world"?

Truth Will Prevail

By Thomas E. Worth

BY DIVINE DIRECTION England became the first mission abroad of the church restored in these latter days. Everyone who knows anything of the work of the Restoration in the British Isles must acknowledge the sincerity, zeal, and sense of commission which characterized the effectiveness of the seven early American missionaries to this land. Arriving at Liverpool on Thursday, July 20, 1837, they felt impressed to go to the riverside cotton-manufacturing town of Preston, about thirty-one miles away. Here in this town with its forty cotton mills and a population of some seventeen thousand, these Latter Day Saint missionaries began their ministry. At three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, July 23, the Reverend James Fielding courteously offered Brother Heber C. Kimball his pulpit in the Vauxhall Primitive Baptist Church. There was a large congregation for this first sermon of the Restoration preached in England. Throughout the next week the missionaries continued their witnessing in both private conversation and public services in the various homes of their newly won friends. So effective was their ministry that, at the end of their first week, they baptized nine people in the river Ribble, the first of whom was George D. Watt. At this initial opportunity the missionaries spread out; two went north to Cumberland, two went south to Bedford, and three remained in Preston. By the end of the third week, the first branch of the church abroad was organized in Preston with a membership of twenty-eight persons. Thus, briefly, the work of the Restoration began in England.

From those humble beginnings, its growth was very rapid, and within a few years thousands of people were added to the church. It also met with good success in Scotland, and more notably in Wales where in 1847 there were thirty-three branches with almost a thousand members. Within ten years of the first sermon in Preston the church in Great Britain had over ten thousand members, in addition to which many hundreds had emigrated to Zion. By the time of the Brighamite apostasy, there were sixty-two thousand.

THE BRITISH ISLES MISSION suffered badly from the death of the prophet Joseph Smith, and the subsequent uprising of Brigham Young with its terrible aftereffects soon made matters worse. The attitude of the Utah missionaries to this country almost ruined all the good their genuine predecessors had accomplished until at last, in February, 1862, the missionaries of the Reorganization came to the rescue. In this connection the names of Jason W. Briggs and Charles Derry should be mentioned with esteem and gratitude. From here on, the story is entirely different; it is one of constant endeavoring to live down the stigma of Utah Mormonism as opposed to the true church. The work of the Reorganization, however, regained something of what was lost and, slowly but surely, weathered the storm.

For a period Brother Thomas Taylor of Birmingham efficiently supervised the work of the church in the British Isles; during this time many fine people were won to the church and others were reclaimed from the Utah invasion. Among these were my wife's great-great-grandparents on her father's side. Her grandfather, James Baty, reported in April, 1877, that one of the best conferences ever held in the Manchester District had just convened. Space will not permit my mentioning all the names of those who played important parts in the defense and development of the work in this land, but I should like to mention some of them: Thomas Taylor, Joseph Dewsnup, John W. Rushton, Henry Greenwood, N. Weate, W. Armstrong, F. H. Edwards, G. Leggott, Thomas Bryan, T. Mills, W. H. Chandler, and J. Schofield.

From the almost nationwide anti-Mormon campaigns which were launched periodically much abuse came our way, and the stalwarts of our faith were sometimes hard pressed. But in spite of cruel opposition and unfounded prejudice they courageously preached in the open air, held public debate with men of superior scholarship, conducted religious worship on a high plane, and re-established the foundations of our work upon which we are still building today.

IN REVIEWING the work of the British Isles we must remember that, from its very inception, there has been a steady flow of emigrants from this land. The number will never be known, but we are happy to note the spirit of devotion which prompted them to make their contribution in the interests of the church in Joseph's Land.

In spite of the fact that within the short space of thirty years the mission has endured the onslaughts and aftermath of two world wars, it is of lasting credit to the Saints here that there still remain seventeen firmly established branches with a total membership of approximately sixteen hundred. Many of these branches are in principal cities and key centers; all of them have splendid possibilities. The branches comprise two districts: the Northern District with eight branches, and the Midland and Southern District with nine branches, two of which are in Wales. Both districts enjoy particularly good conferences, and the special feature of the year is the mission reunion. Mission and district priesthood institutes also occupy an important distribution on the calendar of our many activities.

At the outbreak of World War II, Apostle Arthur Oakman had charge of the British and European Missions. Continental travel was out of the question because of the war, and he therefore concentrated his attention more specifically in Britain. Largely as a result of his ministry and leadership in those dark days, the Saints were inspired and encouraged, and the foundation for the future of our work in this land was appreciably reinforced. This can be seen clearly in the fact that most of our pastors today are men whom he then inspired with convictions of the Restoration. Throughout the years, the mission has had some remarkable manifestations of divine direction and power, spiritual healings, and gifts of prophecy which have provided unquestioned testimony

The Continental European Mission

By Victor J. Witte

TODAY THE CHURCH moves forward in response to the challenge to "call upon all nations." In the missions abroad there are men, women, boys, and girls whose lives are being enriched by the ministry of the gospel of Jesus Christ. My acquaintance with the Continental European Mission dates back to some rich experiences with our church people in 1937, '38, '39. One of the most outstanding impressions which I received was made by the deep devotion of the people for the church and its mission. Their faith in the ultimate accomplishment of Zion and the spreading of the gospel throughout all the world was a living part of their lives. A spirit of appreciation for the blessings of God through the gospel and church seemed to motivate their desires and sacrificial services.

That same spirit of sacrifice and devotion for the cause of Christ has carried our people through the turbulent years of war and economic upheaval. The struggle, privation, and uncertainty have lodged the gospel more certainly in the hearts and minds of our people. Our numbers have grown, and the gospel has increased the quality of lives. Now, in 1953, the Restoration Movement continues to gather strength in its task of calling upon the nations of the world to accept the healing ministry of the Spirit of Christ.

The complexities of the situation in which the church finds itself in these countries of Continental Europe challenges the very best that is within the lives of consecrated followers of the Master. War has taken its toll in loss of life and property. For many of our people, the necessity of changing home locations has disrupted the normal friendship and neighborhood circles out of which usually come our increases in membership. However, the experiences during these years of struggle have helped many to sense the real values of life, and they have become good witnesses.

MANY of our groups are small and have the ever-present danger of disintegration by the loss of a family or a leader. But these must be recognized as the nuclei from which can be developed the strong branches of the church that can subsequently take the gospel to their respective communities. Then, too, in the small group individuals readily realize that if there is to be growth and development of the group, consecration must find expression in service.

Many members, including those of the priesthood, are first-generation Latter Day Saints who have not been traditioned in the faith and doctrine of the church. In many respects these good people are pioneering in the work of the church in their area. The disadvantage of inexperience is overcome by their devotion, enthusiasm, and vigor as they labor in the spreading of the gospel and enriching the possibilities of Zion. Guided by our more mature ministers of experience and tradition, and the leadership of the church of today, those who are young in membership and priesthood are rapidly growing.

OUR TREMENDOUS NEED for the Three Standard Books, church literature, and study materials in the various languages adds to the complexity of the work of the church in Continental Europe. Our brothers and sisters are in Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Finland, and the Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. In the years ahead, we may well expect to have the church more fully established in these nations, and also reach into other nations of Continental Europe. The problem of language and literature is not insurmountable. Some materials have been published in several of the languages; some have been translated and now wait for publication; some have been translated and mimeographed for limited use; more are in the process of translation.

What a challenge to the people of Christ's church today! In 1832 the Restoration prophet expressed the will of the Savior of the world as he commanded that we become learned in languages, histories, cultures, "things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of the nations" . . . "a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms," that we may be prepared in all things to magnify the calling to which we have been called, and that we may fulfill the mission with which the church has been commissioned.

I am extremely grateful for the rich experiences of the recent months and with appreciation acknowledge the work of our General Church representatives and the standing ministry in this area. With faith and hope I move forward with the church as it continues to gain strength for the fulfillment of its pur-

Greetings from the British Isles Mission

By Donald V. Lents

THE NEED OF THE WORLD today is for the gospel of Jesus Christ to take first place in the lives of men and nations. The Saints of the British Isles Mission recognize this truth and are willing to make the personal application necessary to assist in this great program. To be effective in this endeavor we ourselves must be informed by being diligent and studious in our individual lives and our collective church experiences. In this age all opportunities to learn of God and his law should be eagerly seized that we might be qualified to share in this experience of kingdom-building.

Throughout the history of the Restoration Movement in the British Isles there have been Saints endeavoring to make the teachings of Jesus Christ effective in the lives of others by their own example of Christian living at home, work, play, and church. Now in 1953 we have members who realize that we are not qualified to assist others until our own life habits and standards exemplify the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. All this demands that we live at our best on the level of Christian service. Too often we are satisfied with second-best and second-rate spiritual experiences. In our acceptance of these second-rate experiences we cheat society of a service that is our right to perform, and we, personally, lose out on another of Christ's promises—the more abundant life.

The Saints of the British Isles Mission are devoted and energetic, with ambitious plans for the work in this area. Along with other Saints throughout the world they are hoping and praying that they may fit into the Divine scheme of proclaiming the good news of the gospel. Many branches are small and are struggling against inadequate physical facilities, leadership, and all the attendant problems, but the same spirit of devotion pose of spreading the gospel throughout the nations of the world.

In behalf of the peoples of these nations, I sincerely solicit your support in making the church strong and ask an interest in your prayers that someday the opportunities of service in the church and the blessings of brotherhood in Christ may be freely enjoyed by all who so desire.

and love which is present everywhere among followers of Christ encourages them to continue in greater effort day by day to fulfill their responsibilities.

The British Isles Mission is small in geographical area, but even so there are many Saints located in isolated areas who have little opportunity for formal ministry. Many of these loyal members, through their own study, prayer, and exercise of faith, do a splendid job of missionary work. Several of our branches have come from just such small beginnings and stand as tributes to the consecration, devotion, and faith of members who so easily might have lost faith themselves.

The Saints of this area are staggered by the opportunity and the need of witnessing for Jesus Christ. The British Isles Mission has millions of people yet to hear the Restoration Story. This is brought forcibly to our attention as we think of the sixteen hundred members of the church compared with a population of over fifty million people in this small country. It is urgent and important that, to the best of our ability, we respond to the evangelistic call of the church of Jesus Christ.

We in the British Isles Mission are aware of the many problems we have to overcome. We realize, however, that these problems will cause us to grow spiritually as we attempt to right them. As we meet these experiences we become better qualified to receive and enjoy the blessings from on high.

It is our hope and prayer from the British Isles Mission that we may together determine to enlarge our personal convictions of the restored gospel and appreciate the task of going into all the world.

The Church in Holland By Anton D. Compier

FROM ROTTERDAM the work has spread to several other places. Today we have two branches, Rotterdam and Zwaagwesteinde, and four mission groups, Utrecht, Leeuwarden, Boekelo, and Houtigehage.

We know that there are others in this country waiting for the moment that the gospel will be taken to them. Many of us have the testimony that the Lord is in this work, because he has revealed his power in healings and in many other ways. During the war he has protected us. Because of the testimony we have we feel a responsibility toward God and his church. We still have a long way to go in Holland. A tremendous task lies ahead of us in educating the people of the church and in converting others to the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

IN 1923 THE WORK of the church was introduced into Holland. Early that year the first baptismal service took place. It had been freezing for some time and, though the sun was shining on February 13, it was still cold and the waters were covered with ice. Thus the little group of people that approached the river near Schiedam (close to Rotterdam) had to push the ice aside to enter the water. Five converts were the result of the work of two missionaries who had come from America, W. Postma and F. Veenstra. One of the converts was a fifteen-year-old girl just recovering from pneumonia. The baptism in the ice-cold water did not injure her health.

These people were confirmed the same day. The confirmation service was followed by a prayer and testimony meeting, the first one ever held in Holland. The missionary who baptized had the gift of prophecy on that occasion and said, "Thus saith the Lord, the step that thou hast taken is pleasing in my sight, and this work will never be taken away out of this country."

That same year three more baptismal services were held, and on February 10, 1924, a branch was organized at Rotterdam. Public meetings held regularly brought good results. Since that year the church has slowly but steadily grown in Holland, and at this time we have approximately 380 members in the mission. From time to time there was personal contact with the General Church through apostles visiting the Continent. Since 1947 we have had the privilege of the permanent ministry of missionaries sent from America. Since 1951 Holland also has a native under full-time appointment. At Rotterdam, where the work started, we now have a three-story mission house in which the supervisor of the work of the church on the Continent and the Dutch missionary family live.

As far as the educating and indoctrinating of our people is concerned we are a little handicapped. For example, we do not have any of the Standard Books of our church in our own language. The only material that we possess consists of some tracts in the Dutch language such as The Latter Day Glory and Latter Day Saints and What They Believe, which have been printed. We also have some quarterlies mimeographed in the Dutch language. We are constantly working on the translation of further materials, even though the things that we translate may not be printed right away. The Church Member's Manual and The Priesthood Manual have been translated already. Several copies were typed, and these are being used for classes. Should the decision be made in due time that these materials be printed, then we go over them again, making corrections so that the things which are printed are as nearly perfect as they can be.

We are fortunate enough to have quite a few people here who at least have a reading knowledge of the English language. That is why we are able to use the quarterlies of the church in our classwork at the Rotterdam church school. Some of the teachers translate their lessons before using them, and this material is being kept for future use with other groups. In this way we hope eventually to have a stock of materials in Dutch—a "must" for the future work of our church here.

MOST OF OUR MEMBERS here are ordinary workmen. In Holland one cannot go to a college and work his way through. Consequently none of our members here have college training. Through the teaching of the law of stewardship and a constant counseling of our young people, we are trying to improve this situation. During recent years a few of our young people have been able to attend Graceland College. We trust that someday a way may be opened for these young people to come back for at least a couple of years and help with the work here.

The population is growing and the economic future does not look too good. There is a great desire among the people of Holland to emigrate to more promising countries. We also find this attitude among our church people. Several of our men have gone abroad to find better living conditions, and there are members from Holland now living in the United States, Canada, and Australia. Through the teaching again of the law of stewardship, we hope to enable our young people to get better positions in this country, too, so that they may improve their standard of living and yet be a help for the furtherance of our church work here.

ANOTHER PROBLEM we have to cope with in our work is the housing of our church groups. Rotterdam is meeting in what used to be a garage. In Zwaagwesteinde the branch owns property, but this is also far from being a meeting place worthy of our high ideals as a church. In other places we meet in rented halls. There are building funds of course, but they grow slowly because most of our people are in the low income bracket. Nevertheless the people do all they can to make our meeting places as attractive as possible by bringing flowers, which are plentiful in Holland.

We know that we shall have to work hard to improve this situation. We know that not everything can come from America and that over there the people have their building problems just as we have here. Since the war, General Church income in tithes and offerings has been increased substantially.

Looking back twenty years we can see the progress that has been made and feel confident that in the future we shall go forward. Some of the problems that we now face will be overcome. We know that the Lord will open up the way if we seek to do his will in this part of his vineyard.

We ask for an interest in your thoughts and your prayers. Many of you people have strengthened us by your visits, and as the world becomes smaller and smaller we look forward to more people visiting us. Be assured of our desire to push forward the work of the Lord. With his help we will succeed.

The German Mission

By Louis Zonker

WE ARE HAPPY to share with you some information and experiences relating to the German Mission. Two years have passed rapidly since we sailed from the States to labor with people who were strangers to us but well known to God. These brothers and sisters in the gospel did not remain strangers long. Today we feel the pulse of the good Spirit as it permeates the heart of our movement and motivates activities in the mission.

An excellent structure has been erected in Hannover which offers an adequate sanctuary; it is plain and simple but very conducive to worship. Living quarters are available for two families in this building in addition to church school facilities for the junior church.

It is easy to recognize the concern of God in the work of this mission. After two world wars, which easily could have disrupted a man-made organization, the church moves forward in stability and hope. Today the political situation in Germany is acute. The forces of evil and aggression are endeavoring in every possible manner to envelop and consume. Those forces which deny the power of God have persistently sought to win the common people as converts. Opposing these powers are the love of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. Representing this great army stand the Saints who live in Germany. They are at the front lines, bearing witness of a better way of life. We notice the rich presence of the Master supplementing every honest effort that is being made.

CERTAINLY WE DO NOT KNOW what lies ahead in the way of international disturbances or agreements, but we do know that the Lord has opened up the work in this mission and that his power will see the church move forward to victory.

The Saints here are deeply grateful to those who have assisted them through the adjustment necessitated by war and its toll. These folk have responded excellently and today are entirely self-supporting. They no longer need gifts; they need an opportunity of service. This blessing of being able to serve is extended to each. I believe sincerely that many of our "church family" in this part of the world have been closely drawn to God and have had outstanding experiences for the purpose of bearing testimony of the Restoration Movement.

MY FAMILY and I feel closely bound to these people. We have endeavored to learn the language and bear testimony of God's assistance in this matter. Through the spoken word one is drawn to a better level of sharing. Sometimes now we get an English word mixed up in a German sentence and vice versa. One day at home while saying the blessing at the dinner table in English, the words "in der gazen welt" came out instead of "in the entire world." It is encouraging to know in such times that God understands all languages and responds to each earnest plea.

One day last fall Brother Anton Compier and I called on a church family. The sister said God had informed her we would be there at that time and would bring a special message. This was very helpful as we had felt direction in being led to that particular home. Many such experiences testify that here, as elsewhere in the church, God is directing and bringing to pass his purposes.

We are anxiously awaiting the completion of a new German hymnal which is to be printed this summer. It will fill a deep yearning of members throughout the mission to sing the unique hymns of the church. This will be a step forward in bringing our mission to the consciousness that ours is a world-wide calling.

ON MAY 23, 24, and 25 of this year a number of Saints assembled in Hannover for a Whitsuntide conference. Brethren Oakman, Lents, Witte, Compier, Stüve, and I represented the General Church. As a special means of ministering to the needs of the mission, Patriarch John Worth of England kindly consented to attend. Bishop Trapp of England assisted in the classwork.

At a general assembly Sunday morning the Saints united in prayer in behalf of the Gathering, and the Spirit rested richly on all present. Evangelist John Worth gave Evangelist Franz Beil his patriarchal blessing, speaking in English. Brother Beil, who does not understand English, was permitted by the grace of God to understand the spoken word in his native tongue. It is significant that on this day of Pentecost an experience was had similar to the first one centuries ago. On the following day Brother Worth gave our missionary for West Germany, Oskar Stüve, his blessing, and Brother Beil gave his first and second patriarchal blessings.

The same Spirit which attended these blessings shall continue to direct in this important ministry. The continuation of this ministry will do much to further stabilize the work of the mission. Five persons were baptized by Brother Stüve on Sunday afternoon. Throughout Whitsuntide a deep, rich consciousness of the Spirit's presence was apparent. In classes of study, in the preached word, in prayer and testimony, in excellent fellowship, something deep and meaningful happened to these people. The priesthood participated in a Communion service, and the same spirit of understanding, love, and a desire to serve was present. We voice the sentiments as those of old: "Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way?"

Brother Oakman has contributed richly to the work of the mission this year, and all who have received of his ministry have been helped and stimulated. The mission received happily the news of the appointment of Brother Witte as supervisor in Continental Europe.

THE MISSION LIVES TODAY through the devotion and sacrifice of those whom God has chosen. The work grows through the same means and will be effective in the future in keeping with the response given to the Master's call. Some of the brethren have written testimonies in order to share with others their experiences.

We realize there is a rich missionary possibility in this field and we are also aware of many needs. At times it appears that progress is very slow, but such experiences as Pentecost, 1953, bring us to the realization that God is very near and no problem is too great to be overcome. With this conviction we endeavor as a mission to qualify for adequate service to meet the present needs. We feel confident that the prayers and support of Saints everywhere are joined with ours for our common tasks.

The Church in Norway

By Olaf Fossum

IN THE FALL of 1900 the first missionaries came to Norway from America. They were Elders N. C. Enge and W. P. Hansen.

Shortly after his arrival Brother W. P. Hansen became ill and died at a hospital in Asendal, a city located on the southern coast of Norway. Brother N. C. Enge took up the church work alone, first with six public meetings in Asendal. He also held meetings at Hendrick near Grimstad where the first two persons were baptized on February 9, 1901.

In the autumn of 1901 Brother Enge's family came from America, settling in Grimstad. For some time the meetings were held in the Enge home.

The common opinion was that the church was identical with the Mormon church in Utah. This caused a lot of trouble for Brother Enge. One time a state church preacher said, "We have a Mormon missionary among us." Later, during a conference which Brother Enge had with that preacher, he promised to correct that saying, but this was never done. Because of the strong prejudice and resistance against the work, the number of members did not increase to more than seventeen after several years' work.

In the summer of 1901 Brother Muceus came from America to his birthplace, Porsgrunn, and started the church work there. In August, 1902, Apostle Peter Andersen came from America and held his first meetings at Grimstad and Porsgrunn. Brethren Andersen and Enge also conducted meetings in Egersund and Feristiansand. It was said of Brother Andersen that he was a man of integrity, a Christian gentleman loved by all who came in touch with him.

In 1903 a few services were held in Kristiania, the former name of Oslo, the capital of Norway. Because of the limited number of missionaries and the wide field of work, only a few services were conducted each place. In 1904 Brethren Andersen and Muceus opened the missionary work at Bon, Eidsvold, where some people were converted during the years.

Elder T. O. Strand from Iowa, born in Valdres, Norway, was also one of the church's representatives in Norway. Brother Strand conducted services at Kristiania during 1912-1913. Contemporarily an elder from the United States, H. N. Hansen, visited Porsgrunn, Kristiania, and Bon.

In 1916 Brother Muceus returned to the United States after fifteen years of missionary activities in Norway. In the next six years the church had no appointees to Norway.

The Way of Truth

By Friedrich Steinke

GOD GRANTED ME one of the greatest blessings that man can have: parents who had recognized his will and found his church. The teaching of Christ was presented to me, and I was baptized on May 28, 1933. God was very good to me, a sinner. Through his love I received the knowledge to understand his gospel. Due to circumstances in Germany, I was drafted into the Army. The death of my mother was a great sorrow for me, yet through this trial I received from my Heavenly Father comfort and strength. I know that God hears prayer. When my soul's need is the greatest, then I feel that God is nearest. This knowledge I felt every time I stood in danger.

In the closing days of the war my life was often in serious danger, and I called upon God asking that his will might be done in my life. I prayed that if it were his will to spare my life I would serve him the rest of my days. I want to testify that God is gracious and merciful and that he hears prayer. I was protected, and returned home healthy and sound in 1946. It is one of my greatest experiences in which I received the knowledge that God is true and that his gospel is also true. Since that day I have tried to keep the vow which I made to him and to serve him all I could.

As I sought to do this the blessings of God were abundant. In 1949 I was ordained a teacher. It was necessary for me to move to Berlin due to my employment, and I endeavored to serve God there also. In 1951 I was asked to serve as bishop's agent, and in April of that year was ordained a priest.

Many times I have been tested since my ordination, yet God is good and through his mercy I have remained faithful. Often when I was without work and money in Berlin, my wife and I did not know where we could get food to eat. But always God supplied our needs from his merciful hand. These experiences strengthened us. I know that God lives. Jesus Christ is truly God's son; he has risen from the dead and sits at the right hand of the Father and prays also for me.

I TESTIFY that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is true and is the same church that Christ established. In this church is the power to find God for all who so desire. I love God and if it is his will—and if he gives me the necessary strength—I will serve him faithfully with all my might until the end of my life. I want to be a light to brighten the narrow way for those who journey to eternal life. Daily I pray: "Lord, take my hand in thine and lead me that I may be able to say, not my will but thine be done. According to thy pleasure and mercy may the necessary power and strength come to me so I can share this gospel with others. May all those who see me, and who have a desire to serve God and find the way of truth, find in my life a good example of a true follower of Jesus Christ."

In 1922 Brother Muceus came again with Brother E. Y. Hunker, who settled at Bon where he worked until 1925 when he returned to the United States.

In the fall of 1922 Brother V. D. Ruch came with his family to Porsgrunn. The Ruches worked in Porsgrunn until 1927 when they returned to America. In 1928 Brother and Sister Ruch returned to Norway, settling at Bon and remaining there until 1931, when they moved close to Oslo. Their mission field was Oslo until 1935.

Since 1935 no church appointees have been at work continually in Norway. However, several have visited the country from time to time.

My Testimony

By John Stebel

I AM A NATIVE of Austrian Silesia which now is under the Czechoslovakian government. After having studied in the grammar school and in the teachers' seminary (college), I left my parental home and went to Poland to take a position as a Protestant public school teacher. It was in January, 1921, that I went to Poland and was installed as second teacher at a rural school in the southern district. The next summer I was transferred as first teacher to Mangshutz, a larger village with preponderantly Protestant population. My job was to teach all the subjects: mathematics, history, languages, physics, and Protestant religion.

Teaching lessons about the patriarchs of the Old Testament and about the beautiful stories of Jesus and his disciples, I was several times astonished at the enlightened and wise answers some of the pupils were able to give me. I asked these children where they had received so much biblical knowledge, and they said they had been taught by their parents. I was invited into the Drigalla, Lippa, and Smolny homes (all Reorganized Latter Day Saints), and became a frequent guest of these families. Here we changed the rules. I was the pupil, and these people were my teachers. Here I heard for the first time in my life the marvelous message of the restored gospel and of the church of Jesus Christ in these latter days.

THE DAYS, weeks, and months of study and investigation of this new doctrine were the happiest time of my life. In the day I taught classes at school, and at night I studied The Way of Salvation, A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, the Book of Mormon, and the Bible. By study, prayer, and meditation I discovered new truths daily. After having read only a few pages of the Book of Mormon I received a powerful testimony by the Spirit of God that this book contains the fullness of the gospel; that the marvelous appearance of the plates and the translation of the engravings thereon was by the power of God; and that Joseph Smith, being the chief instrument in the bringing forth of the Restoration of the church in the last dispensation, was one of the greatest prophets who ever lived on earth. The same testimony I have received about the Doctrine and Covenants. To me it is the most inspired sacred book, written in the purest language I have ever read.

I believe, therefore, that the rock upon which Jesus Christ built his church (ac-ording to Matthew 16:19) is the gift of revelation, and that he gives this wisdom "to all men liberally," not only to his prophets but also to every mortal who seeks it humbly and earnestly.

I ATTENDED REGULARLY the preaching services and other meetings at the branch of Mangshutz. On August 28, 1923, I was baptized into the church by Priest Robert Smolny. Because of lack of the Melchisedec priesthood in the branch I had to wait until March 18, 1924, to be confirmed by missionary Elder John Smolny.

Two days later, on Easter Sunday, 1924, I was ordained by the same elder to the Aaronic priesthood. Two other men were also ordained, and one girl was confirmed. In this meeting the presence of the Holy Spirit was manifested in a marked degree. On February 7, 1926, I was ordained an elder by John Smolny. In the office of elder I have worked a number of years for the church, preaching and teaching the gospel in German and Polish languages. I have baptized only a few converts into the church, but always I have endeavored to convince each of the candidates that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that his only true church on earth is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I HAVE NOT BEEN ABLE to escape the abominations of the second world war. I was called into the German army and served as interpreter of languages. Many times I found myself in very dangerous situations. Several times I have seen the open gates of death, but every time I have been delivered in such a wonderful way that it could have been only by the angels of the Lord or the hand of God. I asked God, "Oh, my good Lord, why hast thou spared my life? I am unworthy of thy grace." Once I saw a little church building and as I looked upon this building I heard a gentle voice speaking to me the following words, "You must preach again my gospel."

The end of the war came and I went with other millions of soldiers into Russian captivity. Released from captivity after seven months I came to Poland and found this land under communistic government. A long period of unspeakable tribulations and sorrows came upon me. My hands were bound, and I was entirely hopeless. I could not see the slightest sign which could justify the fulfillment of the promises which had been given to me regarding the preaching again of the gospel. But God heard my cry and saw my many tears and sent help. My hands were loosed and I could preach again the precious gospel to the few members who remained in Poland and to other friends. From then my situation became more endurable though still dangerous.

On February 2, 1951, my family and I together with many other people were expelled from Poland into West Germany. We have settled in Württemberg in southern Germany and are most happy to be in a land of democratic government where we enjoy freedom of speech, religion, and conscience. Here I made acquaintance with the finest and ablest leading men of the General Church. I am very happy to offer my time and talent to God and to be more useful in the work of the church.

WE ARE LIVING in a world of great spiritual confusion. The demand for light was never so pressing as it is now. The nations of the world expect the greatest revelation since the beginning of the world—the revelation of the kingdom of God, Zion. Only the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is divinely qualified to fulfill this mission. This is a prophetic, apostolic, episcopal church. The gift of prophecy is present in it. Apostles, seventies, high priests, evangelists, and elders speak by prophecy. Even in private speech and conversation, the leading men of the mission fields speak the will of the Lord. The great endowment of spiritual power which has been so long awaited is near at hand, if it has not already begun in some parts of the church. My prayer is that we all may be worthy to participate in the glorious victory of the church at the second coming of our Lord.

For with thee is the fountain of life; in thy light shall we see light.—Psalm 36: 9.

THIS SCRIPTURE has been a great testimony for me. There were in my early years many difficult times, especially in the war of 1914-18. Often in the quiet hours of the night, when there was opportunity to meditate, I would seek the unknown God. Beholding the starry skies I was made to know that all of the universe must be regulated by a supreme power. I have had, since that time, more and more experiences with our Heavenly Father.

In 1921 my wife came to the church through the direction of God. Brother Greene, the missionary at that time, preached about baptism in the first service that my wife attended. As she came home, she was convinced that the message she had heard was true. I accompanied her to the next service. As we entered the room, the service was already in progress, and Brother Greene was again preaching. He said that now the man had come who would lead the branch of the church. For days before that time, Brother Greene had prayed in the woods that God would send a man who should lead the branch. On April 6, 1921, we were baptized, and in June of the same year I was ordained an elder and chosen to be pastor of the branch. I was young and inexperienced in the doctrine, but I felt as the Spirit of God worked in me that I could lead the priesthood and the branch. With God is the fountain of life, and in the light of God we see that light. I know we all live through the love of God. In Jesus is that life, and from his abundance we receive new power and a new life.

THEN CAME the second world war. About the difficult and terrible things I will not write, only to say that our meeting place was bombed out and everything was completely burned. Several members were bombed out, including our family, but we were able to save some of the most important furniture. Later the entire area where we held our meetings was leveled to the ground. Nevertheless we were able to maintain our meetings as we gathered in the homes of the Saints.

When the war came to an end, we obtained a meeting room in a schoolhouse with the help of one Captain Clark who had charge of church and school matters. Our joy was beyond description as Brother McConley first came to us and afterward as Brother Theys visited us regularly and held services. We must daily thank our God as the fountain of life. Especially must we remember the General Church and the members in America who so generously shared with us in our hour of need by sending food and clothing in relief packages.

As Brother Edwards came to us the first time he used the words which Mary spoke to the servant at the marriage in Cana, "What he says unto you to do, see that you do it!" These men were obedient and saw the first miracle that Jesus performed. We, too, should do what Jesus tells us to do in every situation of life. With Brethren Jensen, DeLapp, and Chevillie, the Lord especially revealed himself to us; we had glorious hours which I shall never forget. The Spirit of God led us at that time, leads us now, and will continue to do so always. This for me is a great testimony.

FROM THE GENERAL CHURCH we received a mission house which also became the church home, the Hannover Branch. For all of us it was a great experience when President Israel A. Smith held the key in his hand and opened the door. All were invited to follow Brother Smith into the house of peace.

A special experience occurred for me at Whitsuntide, 1953. At that time I received my patriarchal blessing from Brother Worth of England. I felt the blessing of God flowing from the mouth of this brother and resting upon me. As he spoke in English I could understand almost every word, while at other times I can understand very little English. On Monday of Whitsuntide Brother Stüve received his patriarchal blessing, and I felt that this blessing would be a great strength to him in carrying out his work. Elder August Weber and Sister Goedecke received their blessings through me. While giving them I believe that God spoke through his Son to me. These were the first two blessings that I was permitted to give in my patriarchal ministry. Through these I was able to recognize once again that God the Father is the fountain of all life.

Why This Church?

By Dennis S. Aldredge

An address given April 26, 1953, at a Yorkshire Rally, Leeds Branch

NOT MANY MEMBERS of this church, I feel sure, could find any real satisfaction while attending the meetings of another denomination, for some of the marvelous aspects of being a Reorganized Latter Day Saint are the fellowship and brotherly love evident whenever members come into contact with each other. I had a very real example of this love in my own experience a short time ago. While serving in the Royal Air Force some distance from my home, I visited the Birmingham Saints. The welcome I received was very heart-warming, and I spent a most pleasant day worshipping at the Gravelly Hill Branch. I was grateful for such an experience. My friends at camp thought me very fortunate to have homes to visit in the vicinity, but when I began to tell them that I had such friends in many places some were frankly incredulous. Such experiences remind us of the universality of God's church.

When I joined the Royal Air Force, I found the life very different from that to which I had been accustomed, and I wondered why I should be called upon to pass through this difficult period. However, I do not feel at all worried now, for, as I have endeavored to serve God, I have been blessed with courage to do things which I never thought I could.

When I was baptized almost eleven years ago, I felt that I was serving God in so doing. I made a very binding promise to serve him, and, as I endeavor prayerfully to keep that promise, I find that I have an increasing conviction of the truth of this work. God has blessed me abundantly, and I am truly happy as I try to do my part in his great work. Each doubt and worry I may have is cleared up and, though I may have been dejected at times, I see once more the glorious light of God.

Joseph Smith asked which of the various existing denominations was the right one and was told that none of them were. God restored his church to earth through Joseph. The reason, then, why I am a member of this church is that I believe the Restoration Story. This is God's church.

The First Mission Abroad

By Eric S. Rowe

MY BIRTHPLACE is Canada, a country which, as part of the great American continent, has been called prophetically "God's Own Country." From early childhood, however, I have lived in England, and because of this my interest in the respective histories of the Old and New World always has been strong. This interest is especially great when I study the growth of the church in England and the influence each hemisphere has had upon the other in the development of the Restoration Movement.

History records that on June 4, 1837, in Kirtland Temple, the prophet Joseph Smith received inspiration to the effect that a mission be sent to England. As a consequence Apostles Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde led a missionary expedition to the British Isles, arriving at Liverpool on July 20.

In near-by Preston, on July 23, the first sermon of the Restoration was preached in this country, and one week later the first baptismal service was held on the banks of the river Ribble.

Thus was born the first "mission abroad." This description is more in harmony with the universality of the church which has no place in its philosophy for the man-made national prejudice the word "foreign" often implies.

It has ever been significant to me that God chose England to be the first country to hear the gospel after the church was organized in America. For this reason alone, I shall always feel that our Heavenly Father has a peculiar investment in this people. A study of Old Testament prophecy respecting the children of Israel and the blessings of Ephraim and Manasseh, allied to an investigation of the history, legends, origin, and laws of the English people, will give some indication as to why these islands were chosen as the first mission abroad.

DURING HIS VISIT to Europe in 1952, President Israel A. Smith made an interesting observation on the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5: "For, behold, he shall stand upon the Mount of Olivet, and upon the mighty ocean, even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion." President Smith expressed his belief that this had reference to the British Isles, as well as other places.

Despite the waning influence of the British Empire, these islands are still the most important islands in the world. Even in the face of differences of opinion in matters of foreign policy, and prejuices that have been fostered over the years, England and America are destined to stand together in the fulfillment of God's purposes among men in matters affecting the building of his kingdom.

There are those who feel that they see, along with the breakup of the Empire, the breakup of the church in England; and with but eighteen branches comprising a total numerical strength of sixteen hundred in a population of forty million people, this might be pardonable when compared with other missions.

However, this state of affairs, though it can be ascribed to certain definite causes, can only be looked upon as a great challenge to the church to prosecute the missionary work more widely abroad. There are major towns and cities in the United Kingdom where our missionaries have never yet set foot—surely fresh fields for the church to conquer. The early success of the Restoration Movement, particularly in England and Wales, and the concomitant drain upon its strength is reflected in the following amusing quotation from Old Llanelly, a publication of 1871:

Mormonism spread like a wave over South Wales, and Llanelly felt the movement. The colliers of Caeman and Caebad were converted in large numbers, as were those of the "Box." . . . There was a Latter Day Chapel in Island Place, afterwards a woolen factory, the wool gathering having assumed a commercial phase. Later on, not a few Llanelly families emigrated."

Along with the hundreds of converts to the faith in all parts of England prior to the death of Joseph Smith and the consequent Brighamite apostasy, history records a constant process of emigration. Unfortunately, this reached its zenith at a time when confusion existed as to where the seat of authority lay, and the disillusionment of the many who went unsuspectingly to Salt Lake had its effect upon the work in this country. It is possible to go to homes in Llanelly and Preston today where grandparents went out to Salt Lake City, returned disappointed and disgusted, and handed down to their children's children the resentment against the Restoration Movement. One trait of the English character is that it hates to be hoodwinked.

WHEN CHARLES DERRY, the first missionary of the Reorganization to England, arrived in 1863 to pick up the threads again, he had great difficulty. It has been difficult ever since for the many apostles and missionaries who have followed him into England. It is said that the British do not like to change, and it is true that the average Englishman is reserved and bound by tradition; he can never quite see why a thing should be right because it is new. These and other national characteristics have made the growth of the work in England a slow process, but again one must think in terms of the great contribution made in other lands, especially America and Canada, by English people who have emigrated in large numbers since Charles Derry's day. These contributions have culminated in apostolic ministry and in leadership of stakes, districts, branches, and departments. The Gathering has always been uppermost in the hearts and minds of Reorganized Latter Day Saints everywhere, and at certain periods in European church history undue emphasis has been made along this line with the result that a promiscuous emigration rather than the wise gathering indicated in the law has been set in motion. Branches in England, not stable enough numerically or spiritually bear the losses entailed, have broken up completely or struggled on with inadequate leadership.

Thus branches have demanded the constant attention of mission authorities and appointees, and the wider preaching of the gospel has been delayed. Since the last war, at least eight families and approximately a dozen individual members of families have emigrated—a heavy handicap to a country where the largest active branch membership is approximately eighty-five people. When such emigration comprises pastors, priesthood, and young people of whom one could rightly expect years of service, the problem is seen to be serious.

And yet, does not all this prove that God knew what he was doing when he spoke to the prophet concerning a mission in England? Recent personal experiences in family cottage meetings, requests for baptism, and the undoubted presence of the Spirit in priesthood in-

I Doubted the Apostasy

By Oskar Stuve

Translated from German by Elli Rosenthal

IT WAS A DAY like many others in my life. It was late in the fall, a season in which we here in northern Germany used to have rainy, foggy weather. This day began with its usual monotonous routine. I helped my wife in the household and began the dull ride in an overcrowded streetcar to my working place (it took almost an hour to get there). My working place was not a modern or perfect one; it was located in a quarter of ruined areas which always recalled the senseless destruction of the past wartime but which held promise of someday becoming a perfect working place. Those years were lost and useless in a double sense. First, instead of learning a profession, we were "allowed" to go from school to the European battlefields; second, all places where we could have prepared for a profession or education were destroyed through the war. This took away our ideals, faith, and youthful illusions, as we could not prepare for a better education—in fact we had to resign or choose a profession we did not like. It took a great deal of honest endeavor for us to find a place which perhaps someday could lead us to a better situation. It was a temptation to consider the "black market" and many other opportunities, all of which were against the law but not against the feeling and need of the people at that time, for these temptations offered a better living than hard work. We were not in a pleasant or hopeful situation. I could name many other factors that would give a better overview of conditions then, but it would only lead back into the disastrous past.

ON SUCH a very ordinary day my mind dwelt on one thing—to improve my profession that I might eventually be able to take better care of my family. It happened that my mother-in-law told us about the church—which she had joined the year before but which in my opinion never could be a church, because the people gathered together in a schoolroom. Instead of a picture of Christ, children's drawings and correction sheets were on the wall. The preachers came to services in their ordinary street jackets, which sometimes were old fashioned, and no one had a high school education. That these men should preach seemed quite impossible to me. You know how mothers are—if they believe they have something good then they want to share it with their children. Ours was no exception; repeatedly she suggested, "Come only once with me to church." So we decided to do her a favor and go with her. I continued to go during the war and after the war, and of course I had much to criticize. My wife's opinion (and also mine) was not to go there again. But after a long time we pleased Mother again, because she said, "Another preacher is coming today; he speaks better." She had helped us in so many ways, why should we displease her?

AT THIS GATHERING the speaker talked something about "historical evidence of the gathering of the Jews in Palestine." After the service was over I went to the speaker and asked him for proof, but his reply did not satisfy me. Today I am very happy that it did not, as I would never have tried to study. I said to Mother, "I will convince you and your friends that it was not true what the Bible said about European history." So I started to study the history of Europe and the Orient, especially the period after Christ's birth, that I might prove the prophecies were not fulfilled. My first problem was naturally to establish if God's church existed and if so which one it was.

My conviction was that this was only the imagination of the people. They told me of the apostasy of the church, but I could not then understand it; so I began to study.

ONLY THIRTY-TWO YEARS before Italy was freed of the East Goths by the Byzantine generals, Belisarius and Narses, the Vandals erected again their kingdom in Italy in 568. This German duke who saved many of his soldiers' lives acknowledged the Bishop of Rome as Father of all Christians and as Pope. Up to this time they took many new doctrines and laws into the church which none of them could find in the Bible. For example, prayers for the dead, nonmarriage for the priests, baptizing of children, pronouncing Mary as Mother of God, special clothing for the priests, prayers to the Virgin Mary, the law about the infallibility of the Pope, and many more.

All this scared me, as I had thought to find the contrary. I hoped to find a confederation with God and not an apostasy, therefore I thought it would not be necessary to seek in the Holy Scriptures to find proof against it. Maybe it was defiance and I am sure a little bit of hope that drew me to the Bible to find arguments. At first it was a disappointment to me, because I could find nothing of the churches I knew. But later I ascertained that we had scientific and historical proofs. Tourists who visited Palestine said, in describing their travels, that these things written in the Bible are true.

For this reason I looked no further, because I learned in my studies something of God and Jesus Christ. I found proofs in literature, in the dictionary, and even in guidebooks. This knowledge brought me to the point of careful thinking. Here was something which in my opinion was more than coincidental. If I would say "yes" to these things I had learned, then the questions would arise: "Do you believe in Christ?" "If so, what are you going to do about him?" "If you'll accept him and do what he wants you to do, then what church shall you join?" I answered myself: "It would be foolish, having the knowledge about all these things, not to take advantage of what I could have—all that which the people in the Savior's time possessed. There must be the same church here as in Christ's time, but where is it? All I knew before was not much, and if one of these churches is the right one, I would have heard of it before." So a very ordinary day, which in the morning seemed so gray, brought something unusual—the hope for a better life and light for all people.

BUT I HAD TO FIND the church which contained all I had read about. So I continued to study. I learned what I could about the Reformation, particularly about Martin Luther and his works.

I could see no great difference between Roman Catholicism and the Lutheran beliefs. The Bible tells of another church—a church with prophets and apostles—and that is what I was searching for. Luther brought a reformation of the papal church, but he did not restore the church of Jesus Christ. Through prayer I found the church of our Savior as he promised: "Seek and you shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you."

The Things That Remain

By William T. Goullee

OUR LIFE may be largely a matter of existing—something without purpose, a round of filling in time mechanically and artificially. In contrast it may be full of meaning when we adopt a more positive attitude toward the things we do.

Man is an enigmatic and paradoxical creature, bound and limited, yet with intimations of an infinite beyond—noble when we think of him as made in the image of God, yet in many ways an independent creature. As the years pass by, not only the church of which we are members, but the people of our own country look to us, noting our conduct and attitude in living up to our Christian principles.

A DEFINITE CHALLENGE came to many of the Saints in England, and on the Continent of Europe, of their beliefs and hopes of the restored message. Hardships, trials, and suffering were endured during the war years. My wife and I, like other members living in the suburbs of London, were subjected to daily air attacks. We eventually lost our home and practically all of our possessions that remained from a previous bombardment. One afternoon the casualties numbered eleven, in homes all within speaking distance, and before us at the front gate lay half of the great murderous fly bomb. As we thought of the incident later it seemed that two great powers had challenged each other, and we realized that almighty God had stretched forth his hand and another divine miracle had been performed in the preservation of his children. Surely it was a blessing and testimony of deliverance—one of many that will long be remembered. As did the saints of old, we found strength and comfort, even when suffering pressed hard upon us.

From the aftermath of the two world wars, many of our friends are conscious of the worth-while things that remain. The certainty and sovereignty of God is something we are able to offer men of every color and clime.

As in Restoration history, we, too, can share in witnessing to the faith that enables men to become the sons of God. We can testify that the great Jehovah of Israel still speaks to his servants, the holy priesthood, as found in his church today, giving divine instruction and revelation through the gift of his Holy Spirit as time and occasion demand.

As a member of the church I am thankful to our Heavenly Father for the men and women—my brothers and sisters—who have left home and loved ones to work and bring the restored message of salvation to this land, and to witness of the fine and beautiful ideals of Zion and the great possibilities offered when the kingdom is restored once again here on earth. It certainly gives me joy in remembering those who have left the shores of these islands to minister, to bring beauty, illumination, and power in the printed and spoken word—in council and quorum—for the blessings of the church in our time.

Counting My Blessings

By Barrie Fox

*Count your many blessings,
Name them one by one,
And it will surprise you
What the Lord hath done.*

WITH these wonderful words running through my mind I found a place—a secluded spot where I could be alone—and began counting my blessings.

At the early age of three I was stricken with diphtheria. The doctors almost gave up hope for my survival, but prayers were constantly offered on my behalf. After spending eleven weeks in the hospital, I was cured. I had to learn to walk and talk again, but God had saved my life. I believe that my life was spared for a purpose—a purpose that one day I hope to fulfill.

Then there was the time when I was baptized—an experience that will always be with me. I thank God for my parents and others who gave of their time to help me take that step.

What of other spiritual experiences that have been mine? I shall never forget the mission conference at Enfield, the district gatherings at Nuneaton, the time I met Israel A. Smith at Birmingham, or the time I had an article published in the Mission Courier.

I BELIEVE my greatest opportunity to work for the Master started on Thursday, August 21, 1952, when I was elected president of the Clay Cross Zion's League. I felt incapable of fulfilling this duty, but realizing the opportunity it offered I humbly accepted the position, knowing that I would need the prayers and assistance of every Zion's League member in Clay Cross. I have never regretted that decision. We had only sixteen members in the League. Feeling that we would like more people to share in our work and play, we fixed a new age range (12-25 years) and set to work to build a larger and better Zion's League. Invitations were sent to the branch Sunday school scholars and other of our friends who showed interest in the faith. Most of the invitations were accepted, and our League began to grow.

We developed a wide variety of interests with the idea of creating friendship, love, and understanding. Worship services, community singing and services of song, quizzes, community parlor and indoor games, films, request periods, concerts, outings—and refreshments—were all part of our program. We had Zion's League badges made, and the wearing of these has not only caused a feeling of pride for the cause they represent but has brought questions from many of our friends. Some of us wanted to tell others about the League but just didn't know how to introduce the subject. The badges did the trick! Our friends saw them, the questions came, and then we started to tell about our organization. Needless to say, these badges paid handsome dividends. Nine new members joined our ranks.

ALL THESE THINGS have meant a lot in my life, and almost every meeting I am refreshed and blessed, particularly by the actions and testimonies of some of the younger members of our League.

Does what we have to offer appeal to these people? Apparently it does. Some of them are present in the church one to one-and-a-half hours before meetings are scheduled. Last month five girls, thirteen and fourteen years old, were baptized. Others are considering baptism. Fifty-one members are now on the Clay Cross Zion's League roll, and eighteen of these are church members. Could anyone ever ask for a better spiritual experience than to be part of this success story?

"Unto Honor I Have Called You" By Edgar S. Holmes

*Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye, then, a Father's counsel
And by deeds your purpose show.*
—Joseph Luff

A LITTLE over twenty-five years ago, when I was a youth, public opinion of our church and its faith in the town of Sutton-in-Ashfield wasn't very high. Many times the older members had trouble because of their constant affirmation of Joseph Smith's vision and message.

Undaunted, after being turned out of their meeting rooms and being ridiculed by the press, they continued to defend the faith and character of Joseph. That they might be led aright they spent their spare time in the open countryside, praying for guidance and the success of the work and studying the Three Standard Books.

It seemed just as Jesus had said that a prophet is without honor in his own country (John 4: 44). So were these men without honor, yet in their secular dealings and business life they were esteemed as honorable people, but if they talked of the gospel they were immediately in disfavor. The community would not see the purpose behind the deed.

Still faithful to their testimony they were eventually accepted by the public as trustworthy Christians, yet here again the clergy and supposed devout people of other churches looked upon our ministry with suspicion and would not give us our rightful place as a church in the community.

MANY OF THESE STALWARTS died in the faith, having received of the promises but seeing them only afar off, and some of their sons and daughters were not so enthusiastic over the gospel message and its saving power. It was therefore left to the grandchildren to "heed the Father's counsel and by deeds your purpose show."

In 1946, when only three of the older members were left, the young people decided it was time the public began to take notice of and accept our church. A letter was sent to the National Sunday School Union for admission into the society so that we could join in the activities of the town. We duly received a reply which stated we had been unanimously accepted and could send two of our members as delegates to the next meeting. In joining with these people, we were emphatic about the question of our identity. We believed that by our deeds we could maintain our identity as a church.

Still some of the ministers of the town were suspicious of our doctrine and beliefs, especially of the Book of Mormon. But the persistent, humble, and timely expression of our faith, not in word only but in quality living, helped many of these men to realize there is good in this church after all.

THE SAINTS continued to testify of the truth of the gospel; then first one church and another began to seek our services—preaching, talking to men's groups, women's groups, youth clubs, and the different secular organizations in our town and the neighboring towns—until our deeds appeared to be bearing fruit all around us. The choir (male voices) was asked to give worship services and humorous entertainments at churches, hospitals, and other institutions.

For the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II we were invited to organize and conduct a precoronation worship service in the Baptist tabernacle in behalf of the Baptists and the Toc-H. Our views about rendering to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's gave us a great opportunity to express some of our church beliefs on the matter. So successful was this worship service that we have been invited to conduct more.

A few months ago the pastor was asked to take part in the induction service of a Baptist minister at one of the local churches, at which service were different ministers from many parts of the country. These people know our difference in belief and organization, yet now they seek our services. "Unto honor I have called you"—not as pleasers of men but as servants of God.

WHITSUNTIDE in our town is a memorable occasion, for under the auspices of the Sunday School Union the seventeen churches and Sunday schools parade the streets with bands, banners, and flags representing each church and school. This year our church led the procession to the Market Place where hymns were sung. These were conducted by our music director, Elder John A. Holmes, who for the past two years has been selected for this responsibility. It was estimated that about ten thousand people were gathered together. The pastor and church school director took their places on the platform and assisted in the service also.

On the first of July this year, the pastor was asked to submit to the press full details of our organization, with times of meetings, names, and addresses of the pastor and secretary and a statement of our belief and identity for publication in the town's "Who's Who" directory.

Great strides have been made in the past twenty-five years due to the consistent good living of the church members—the deed has brought about the purpose. "But what of the twenty-five years from now?" Many of us desire to "come up to Zion," but we figure at present there are plenty of the type of people who are heeding the Father's counsel and by deeds their purpose showing. If the next two or three decades are to show any advancement in the church, then it will be in places like Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, that our services are most needed. For out of the forty thousand inhabitants of the place only eighty-two are Reorganized Latter Day Saints. What a task! What a purpose! What an honor to bring to them the full gospel of Christ.

Easy to Identify

By Stan Mackenzie

Often we discover those among acquaintances and friends who look forward to another existence after death which will be an entirely new beginning. They have concluded that eternity will start for them in "the next life," without having been determined definitely by the present probation. These people are easy to identify. Examine the qualities that surround their lives. Is there selfishness, jealousy, dishonesty, gossip, hardness of heart, envy, or untruthfulness? It would seem incredible that anyone who had surrounded himself with these things here would want to continue them in eternity—if he had received (accepted) light and truth. So it must be that these people expect to discard their sins upon entering the grave, as they would discard a shabby garment, and then assume robes of white at the pearly gates. They want a new beginning without making an effort to overcome evil here.

But the garments of the soul, worn in this present life, must pass on with us or God would not have warned that our robes must be washed in the blood of the Lamb.

It is apparent then that those who have obtained a measure of light and truth in regard to immortality and eternal life must have realized that the qualities which they will wear in eternity are love, helpfulness, beauty, joy, comradeship—the qualities of the here and now that are sharable through brotherly love. Many even go beyond sharing. Emulating Jesus, they sacrifice themselves that others may attain eternal life. These people also are easy to identify.

Question Time

Question:

Does Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, which refers to the stake high councils at the stakes of Zion, apply to all stakes in the church such as Los Angeles, Detroit, and others, or just the stakes in Zion?

Arizona

C. McD.

Answer:

We know of no authority for differentiating between the status of various stake high councils. The law appears to provide that all stake high councils have relatively the same authority. In each case this authority is limited to the stake concerned.

In discussing the system of balances provided for in the law many church members have come to use the term "concurrent jurisdiction." Actually, this term does not occur anywhere in the revelations. It is used as a convenient expression for the equality "in authority and power" which is enjoyed under certain circumstances between the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and Seventy (D. and C. 104: 11 d, e ff.). This equality does not extend to all the functions of the Quorums concerned; i.e., the Twelve are not "equal in authority and power" in everything referred to the First Presidency; nor are the Seventy "equal in authority and power" in all things referred to the Twelve. But there is an equality within the areas of their special fields. What is included in this equality, and what is excluded from it, has never been minutely determined by the church.

The revelation which has to do with the equality "in authority and power" which exists between the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy also provides that the—

Standing High Councils, at the stakes of Zion form a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the Quorum of the Presidency or to the traveling High Council. The High Council in Zion forms a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the Councils of the Twelve at the stakes of Zion.—D. and C. 104: 14, 15.

It would seem that this "authority and power," in which the high councils at the stakes and the Standing High Council of the Church are equal to the Presidency and to the Quorum of Twelve, is limited by the area of responsibility of the high councils. This is to say that these high councils are not "equal in authority" with the Presidency and the Twelve in matters beyond their stake boundaries. Nor is the Standing High Council "equal in authority" in matters specifically referred to the Presidency or the Twelve or the Seventy and outside the realm of authority of the Standing High Council. But within the field of its stake affairs, any stake high council has equality of authority with the Presidency and Twelve. And within its special field, the Standing High Council has its equality with the Presidency and Twelve.

The thought behind all this seems to be twofold. First there is a definite principle written into the law of the church that authority should not be concentrated in the hands of one man or one quorum, but should be diversified as fully as the circumstances permit. Second, each fully organized area—such as a stake—should have the fullest possible autonomy. A stake presidency and high council should be free to administer the internal affairs of the stake subject only to the general direction which maintains their unity with the whole church. There may be room for some debate as to the details of the application of the law, but the general intent of the law seems to be clear.

Question:

Was the Sacrament of the bread and wine ever observed by people of God before the time recorded in Mark 14? Oregon

I. L.

Answer:

There is no indication of the Lord's supper being administered as such until it was instituted by Christ on the last night he was with his disciples. The incident of Melchisedec blessing bread and wine and giving them to Abraham (Genesis 14: 17) presents a seeming similarity, but it lacks any evidence of being the same as instituted by Jesus.

There are evidences of a customary observance of offering bread and wine among the Israelites, usually administered by the head of the house at special feasts like the Passover, preceded by the pronouncing of a blessing upon them. The custom was known as Quiddush and is mentioned under "Eucharist" in the Encyclopedia Britannica.

The Reverend G. F. Maclear in his book, Evidential Value of the Holy Eucharist, says, Associations, again, the most solemn and august had ever been connected with the act of breaking bread and drinking wine at the Passover eve service, at the Passover, at the Sabbath eve service of the synagogue, and even at ordinary meals. Uniformly it was accompanied by a solemn commemoration of the Supreme Being as the Creator of "the fruit of the ground" and "the fruit of the vine."—page 71.

There is no indication that this custom in any wise pointed to the sacrificial Christ. Luke leaves a suggestion that this custom was followed by Christ at the Passover table, since it was after the first passing of the cup that the sacrament of bread and wine was instituted. (Compare Luke 22: verses 17-18 with verses 19-20.)

Observing that animal sacrifices were instituted by God as "a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father" in the days of Adam (Genesis 4: 5-8 I.V.), which were to cease when the last great sacrifice was made—Christ himself—and that these sacrifices were daily reminders of the true sacrifice to come, the query arises, "Was not the sacrament in effect the Lord's substitute for the ancient sacrifices, both designed for practically the same purpose, the one reminding the people of the coming Christ, and the other reminding them of the Christ who had come?" The first was prophetic, the second historic. On this point of substitution read III Nephi 4: 49.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Why did the Israelites select a calf as the object of their worship?

Answer:

According to Wilkinson, a golden ox was an emblem of the Egyptian god Osiris, which represented life, warmth, and fruitfulness. This doubtless suggested the "golden calf" to the wayward Israelites, who had lived near or in this idolatrous atmosphere.

Baptismal Service Held

MUSCATINE, IOWA.—On June 28 a baptismal service was held. Five children were baptized in a very pretty setting of cattails encircling the picture of Christ's baptism. Other greenery and green carpeting were used to give it a natural look. Those baptized were Albert Reeves Church and Anita Kathleen Zahniser by his father and her uncle, Priest Ray Church; and Juanita Sue Hesford, Marlene Rae Hesford and Michael Lawrence Symmonds by Michael's grandfather, Elder Phillip Wagler. The confirmation service followed in the upper auditorium after a short Children's Day program and the presentation of gifts to all children present from the Sunday school. Elders Wagler and L. L. Allen gave the confirmations.

Barbara Kay Shield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Shield, and Paula Dean Stephenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vern Stephenson, were blessed on April 5 by Elders Wagler and Allen. Brother Wagler is Barbara Kay's grandfather. William Edward Schoenig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Schoenig, was blessed March 23 by Brother Wagler.—Reported by MRS. JUANITA NORDEEN

Annual Reunion at Delta

DELTA, COLORADO.—Nearly 150 members from the Western Slope of Colorado met in annual reunion at Delta, Colorado, July 15-19. This was the largest attendance at any reunion for some time.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Seventies Russell F. Ralston and James A. Everett, Elder Myron Schall, Trudora Harshman, Elsie Wallis, and Ardis Everett assisted with teaching assignments.

For recreation the group visited Black Canyon National Monument on Thursday afternoon and went swimming on Friday. All meals were served in the lower auditorium of the new Delta church.

Kenneth Yeager and Loyd Carpenter were baptized and confirmed during reunion.

Brother Charles Hoschouer was elected district president at the Western Colorado District business meeting.—Reported by JAMES A. EVERETT

Entire Family Baptized

ALBIN, WYOMING.—Vacation church school was held June 15-26, with visiting missionary Les Gardner in charge. An average of 37 attended each day to learn about Jesus through the theme, "Behold, the Light of the World." Staff members were Sylvia Crossan, junior high; Alice Crossan, junior; Erma Peterson and Ina Crossan, primary; Jean Bell, kindergarten; Cordelia Anderson and Louise Sager, nursery; Mary Peterson, pianist; Doris Olsen, handwork, and Cordelia Anderson, secretary and music leader. On the last day of the school a picnic was held at the local school grounds, to which parents and children were invited. The worship service at church school on June 28 was presented by those who had attended vacation church school.

Branch members and friends met Sunday afternoon, June 21, for a home dedication service at the home of Brother Gilbert and Sister Ina Crossan near Albin.

On July 3 the branch and church friends gathered at the church for a farewell to Brother Gardner, who is soon to go to Canada, and to Alice Crossan, who will go to Independence, Missouri, to work at the Herald Publishing House. Gifts from the branch were presented to them.

During his stay in Albin, Brother Gardner visited in a number of member and nonmember homes and was the morning speaker at regular Sunday services.

The women's department met July 7 at the church, under the leadership of Sister Ina Crossan.

An entire family was baptized Sunday, July 12, when Pastor Ed P. Anderson baptized Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Olsen, and Elder Gardner baptized their two children, Christina and Gerald. Thomas Heide, of Torrington, Wyoming, was also baptized by Brother Gardner. Confirmation services were held in the afternoon, with Elder Clarence Heide of Lamoni, Iowa, confirming Tommy Heide, Brother Anderson confirming Clifford and Gerald Olsen, and Brother Gardner confirming Doris and Christina Olsen.—Reported by CORDELIA M. ANDERSON

New Church Planned

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Over twenty-eight hundred attended the opening night of Campus services on June 14. Charles R. Hield of the Council of Twelve spoke on the subject "I Am the Way." These Sunday night services will continue through the summer with various speakers.

The City-wide Zion's League of Independence sponsored an operetta, "Eileen," presented at the Campus on July 6, 7, and 9.

About one hundred people gathered Sunday afternoon, June 14, to watch church officials turn over spadefuls of ground, symbolizing the start of a new church building for the Center Stake of Zion. The construction of the Walnut Park mission church will soon be under way.

Center Stake Reunion was held July 11-19 at Lake Doniphan, Excelsior Springs, Missouri. Roscoe E. Davey of the Council of Twelve preached each week day. Other reunion speakers included President F. Henry Edwards, Bishop Walter N. Johnson, Almer W. Sheehy, and Eugene A. Theys. The children's program was arranged by Velma Jones.

The interstake youth camp at Lake Doniphan was held June 14-21. There were 22 staff members and 113 young campers present. A large number of recreational, worship, and service activities were climaxed by a mammoth water carnival and banquet, a closing campfire, a friendship circle where 82 sentence prayers were offered, and an outdoor Communion and fellowship service Sunday morning.

An additional store for the Social Service Center in the Kansas City area has been established at Ninth and Oak Streets in the Gladstone Hotel building. Sister Eva Merrill is in charge of the new undertaking under the direction of the Kansas City Stake Bishopric.

Approximately 125 young people are taking part in a religious drama of the Resurrection, "Other Sheep I Have," written by Reed Holmes, member of the Council of Twelve, Barbara Peavy Howard, and Naomi Russell. Production manager is A. L. Henson, with Mrs. Virginia Henson as dramatic director, and Bernard Butterworth as music co-ordinator.

The Men's Club had its annual picnic at Slover Park on July 27.—From Centerstake News.

Zion's League Organized

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI.—After holding two socials at the church to get the young people interested in a Zion's League, a regular meeting was held at the church June 23 to organize, and to elect officers.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Brother Goff, after which a talk was given by Brother Wayne Livesey. The elections resulted as follows: George Goff, sponsor; Wayne Livesey, director; Dave Yahmig, president; Kay Goff, secretary; Jane Rogers, vice-president and treasurer.

It was agreed to have recreation every other week with a few minutes for worship. Programs are to be planned for at least three months ahead.—Reported by MRS. D. A. BYRD

The Lost Faith

by Enna Nielsen James

This new book brings fascinating and convincing proof that the American Indians had a well-developed concept of Christianity that had degenerated by the time the white man came to America. The author bases her thesis on the legends and stories in Longfellow's The Song of Hiawatha. Mrs. James, a member of our church, lives in Omaha, Nebraska. Her book is a real contribution to present-day literary and theological fields. Published by Pageant Press.

Two Baptized

FORT WILLIAM, ONTARIO.—District President Wesley Elvin, Elder and Sister Paul Staffeld, and Sister E. Green of Minneapolis spent the week end of May 24 in Fort William. At this time Priest Aubrey Shaw was ordained to the office of elder by Elders Elvin and Walter Hewitt, pastor.

Alvin and Clara Dobson of Port Elgin visited here in June. Brother Dobson was the morning speaker on June 14.

On June 20 Darrell Miller and Lorena Henderson were baptized by Brother Hewitt. Sunday, June 21, Lorena was confirmed by Elders William Allison and Hewitt, and Darrell by Elders Shaw and Hewitt.

Lea Michele Miller, infant daughter of Mina and Allan Miller, was blessed by Elders Anson Miller and Hewitt at this service.

The church school picnic was held at Chipewewa Park Saturday afternoon, July 18.

Sunday morning, July 19, Albert Reid was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Hewitt and Shaw.—Reported by JEAN SHAW

President Smith Visits

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA.—In September, Elder Jack A. Pray of Mobile, Alabama, conducted several meetings at the mission. A fish fry was held in his honor, and the Miami Branch also attended this social event. Seventy-five persons were present.

In November and December, Elder Edward G. Fisher of Miami held a series of meetings and showed slides.

The mission was two years old in February. Brother Lester Tankersley was sustained as pastor of the group.

Apostle Reed Holmes conducted a service on religious education on February 25.

Brother Jack Barnes was ordained to the office of priest in March at the Miami Branch by Elders Edgar A. Chevalier and N. L. Booker.

A baptismal service was held in Miami on March 8 when Brother Tankersley baptized Olie Eastham, Mildred Eastham, and son, Kenneth Eastham.

On March 17 President Israel A. Smith and Apostle Percy E. Farrow visited the mission. Brother Smith spoke on the Book of Mormon. During March and April, Elder Earl McIntosh and family were also visitors and assisted in the work of the mission.

Evangelist Harold I. Velt held a series of meetings during the week of March 17-22. He showed interesting slides of Mexico. On the morning of March 22 Brother Velt was in charge of the confirmation service. The Easthams were confirmed by Brothers Velt and McIntosh. Brother Velt also gave a number of blessings while in the mission.

Apostle Percy E. Farrow was the guest speaker the morning of March 29.

On April 23 a young adult group was organized. Brother Jack Barnes was elected president, to be assisted by Brothers Eastham and Terry Griffin. The group will meet the second and fourth Thursdays of each month in the homes of the members.

On April 30 and May 3 Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin of the Southern District was in charge of the evening services and gave individual instruction on filing of financial statements.—Reported by MRS. LESTER TANKERSLEY

Babies Are Blessed

WEST PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.—On July 12, Steven Clay, son of Sgt. and Mrs. William Coleman, was blessed by his grandfather, Elder O. A. Rexroad. Mrs. Coleman is the former Marcella Rexroad. Sgt. Coleman is serving with the Air Force and is stationed at Armstrong, Ontario, Canada.

Michael Lee, infant son of S/Sgt. and Mrs. Samuel Rexroad, was blessed on June 12 in Portsmouth General Hospital by his grandfather, Elder O. A. Rexroad. S/Sgt. Rexroad is also with the Air Force, and is stationed in Korea.

Several new names have been added to the cradle roll recently.

Zion's League, under the leadership of Patsy Shekels, has shown progress. The regional meeting was held at West Portsmouth in June, with forty attending. Members were present from Trenton, Pleasant Valley, and McDermott.

The church school is progressing under the leadership of William R. Myers and Joseph Culp. On Mother's Day flowers were presented to the youngest and oldest mothers, and on Father's Day gifts were given in honor of the youngest and oldest fathers and the father with the largest number of children present at the service.

Members of the priesthood and the building committee have done some repair work at the church. Steps and a walk have been laid from the front of the building to the basement entrance. Some grading has been done, and grass seed has been planted on the lawn.

Several members have moved to other communities, and twelve have been transferred to other branches. Elder Walter Culp and family have moved to Jasper, Ohio. They attend services at West Portsmouth, driving a distance of about eighteen miles.

Visiting members of the priesthood have been Brothers M. Luther Crabtree and Eddie Krueger from Pleasant Valley Branch. Local speakers have included Elders Walter Culp and O. A. Rexroad, and Priests James Chaffins and Donald Bealar.—Reported by NELLIE G. REXROAD

Reunion at Winnipeg

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The branch held a reunion on July 17, 18, and 19. Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe was in charge of all services. He was accompanied by his wife.

The reunion opened with a short meeting on Friday evening, followed by a fireside chat. The ladies served a lunch. The meeting closed with an old-fashioned singsong.

Saturday's schedule started with a prayer service at eight, classwork at ten, and a preaching service at eleven. In the afternoon, cars were provided for all who wished to go to a picnic at Easy Reach Beach. Evening services were held at eight o'clock.

Four candidates were baptized Sunday morning. Prayer and preaching services followed, with confirmations at 2:00 P.M. and the ordination of Brother Larry Coombes to the office of deacon at the Sunday evening service.

All services were well attended, with a number of nonmembers and visitors from Ontario. Extra seating had to be provided to take care of the overflow.

The branch was disappointed that because of illness President Israel A. Smith was not able to attend as planned. A night letter of sympathy, expressing prayers and hopes for a speedy recovery, was sent to him at the San.

The mission building has recently been painted, and new screens have been added.—Reported by NORA GLOYNS

Hold Branch Meeting

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.—The Evansville Branch held their annual business meeting Sunday, July 26, with District President Chester Metcalf in charge. The following officers were elected: Robert O. Glenn, branch president; Evelyn Harding, branch clerk; Maurice Thompson, treasurer; C. L. Gritton, church school director; Virginia Gritton, women's department leader; and Elmo Enlow, youth leader.—Reported by ODIE ELLEN CAMPBELL

A Comparison

Our stewardship in life is like a great organ. The lower keyboard is a symbol of God's word to us through the Bible and the Book of Mormon. The upper keyboard is God's word to us today—the Doctrine and Covenants.

If we study to show ourselves approved and apply the God-given words to our lives, we will develop a harmonious melody. Thus we develop a stewardship with God and our fellow men.

The pipes of the great organ represent faith, virtue, wisdom, love, temperance, humility, and charity. Although these pipes vary in length, each one helps to produce equally beautiful tones, and all are essential to the finished harmony. We must apply this harmony to our everyday life if we are to be God's stewards in the building of the kingdom.

It will take hard work and study to tread the pedals on this great organ of life and to touch the right keys, but we must make the effort if we would blend God's word and man's talents to produce the beautiful melody of Zion. This is our stewardship.

The Goodness of God

On October 6, 1952, our daughter, Maryruth Ohrn, a senior in Virginia High School, was in an automobile accident and thrown from the car. It is believed the car rolled over her body. She was rushed to the hospital at Jacksonville, Illinois, and we were called. Upon arrival we were told that she had little chance to live through the night. The elders were called; just before they arrived, the doctors stated she was sinking fast. As soon as they came they administered to her, hardly knowing where to place their hands on her head because of her injuries. Later the doctor came and said she was holding her own. On through the night the doctors worked with the nurses. Her veins collapsed and they had to stop giving her transfusions. Around seven in the morning she had another sinking spell. Prayers were constantly on our lips, and again she came through, although the nurse thought she was gone. She was in such deep shock that her coat was not cut from under her until the next day, and her blouse was not cut off until the following Saturday. X rays taken at her bedside disclosed that her nose, collarbone, and hip were broken, plus at least five pelvis fractures and numerous deep cuts on her body. Our real concern, however, was her concussions and internal hemorrhaging. Each night the elders came from Beardstown or Murrayville, giving us hope and comfort while the doctors stated it was impossible for her to live and was just a matter of waiting.

During the first week she showed very little improvement. On Thursday she was better, but Friday she was close to convulsions. On Saturday we thought again she was better but around seven o'clock her nurse noticed a decided change for the worse and was unable to find her pulse. She called the doctor who lives fourteen miles from the hospital, saying she didn't know if she could get him there in time. She came back saying she was unable to reach him and the operator would try to locate him. As she started working with Maryruth the doctor walked in saying that somehow he couldn't rest, so he decided to come. Together they gave her stimulants, and again she began to improve.

I state these facts not to be dramatic, but to show the helplessness of man and to give honor and glory to God. Patriarch John R. Grice came with our pastor; Brother Grice was starting to hold a two weeks' series of meetings in Beardstown. At this time we realized that we should ask God to sustain her life for us only if it was his will. We also asked that, if he spared her life, she would be healthy both physically and mentally.

She remained unconscious for nearly two weeks. Brother Grice made the statement while she was still unconscious that the doctors may be surprised when they would start to set the bones. There were many instances day after day that God manifested his power. Ten days later when she was beginning to awaken the doctors gave her one chance out of fifty to live. She had had six transfusions and was to be given another one the next day, as she was still hemorrhaging internally. Also, up to this time, she could not focus her eyes and gave no sign of being able to see. We knew what it meant if she had to have another transfusion. She was again administered to, and I prayed most of the night. The next day when the report came, her hemoglobin had risen eight points. The nurse thought there must have been a mistake, so she checked again. Also, as I was holding an envelope in front of her, hoping and praying she would give some sign of seeing it, she said very slowly, "Open it up." Thus our prayers were answered.

On the seventeenth day she was moved for the first time from the bed to the X-ray room, and a bone specialist was called. The doctors did not know how she could stand the shock of bone-setting, but they knew that something should be done if at all possible since the bones were beginning to knit. The head doctor had reported from the first X ray that her hip was broken, but when they came back they said no bones were to be set. I asked about her hip and they shook their heads in amazement. They knew the first X ray showed a broken hip, and this time it was not broken. A pin was placed in her ankle to try to pull her pelvis into place. The fractures were knitting by this time and it did not help to any great degree. The X rays showed three skull fractures and a possible neck fracture, so her head was placed in traction.

The third week a brain specialist was called, as her headaches were so severe. This was the sixth doctor. After the examination, he stated that he saw no cause for brain surgery and removed the traction from her head, saying, "Her neck is not broken." All this time she was given three bottles of glucose daily beside her shots, as she was unable to keep anything on her stomach.

The Saints were wonderful! It was felt that a little of the beauty of Zion was in our midst, for truly it seemed they were of one heart and mind. They were remembering Maryruth in their prayers daily, and they also fasted for her. They cleaned our house and did my washings and ironings. They also brought food constantly and did so many thoughtful things that made it easier for us. The superintendent placed a request for prayers for Maryruth on the school bulletin board. The townspeople also were overwhelming in their thoughtfulness. We are farmers and fifty-one neighbors and friends came with pickers and wagons and picked our corn while the ladies served their dinner. Friends who have never been concerned before are now inquiring about our belief.

At the end of the fourth week her headaches began to clear up, and she was able to keep her food down. Day by day she improved, and at the close of the eighth week the doctor gave permission for her to get up. She asked again for administration, for the doctors stated she would most likely have pain when she walked as her sacroiliac had been fractured. He also said it would be two weeks before she would be able to walk and come home. She started walking in two days without a limp or any pain. The following Thursday we brought her home. She is to this day considered the miracle case of the hospital.

We wish to express our gratitude to those members of the priesthood who came so willingly, even sometimes late at night, to minister to Maryruth. District President Harold Walker, Pastor Clyde Youngs, Elders Harold Skiles and E. E. Thomas of Beardstown, Pastor Earl Blakeman of Murrayville, and Seventy R. E. Fulk came not always to administer but because of their concern.

She started back to school the second semester, making up most of her work and graduating with an A average. She was salutatorian of her class, in addition to receiving other honors in her school and community work. Although she was unable to attend, she was chosen Home-coming Queen for 1952.

The hospital bears record of all of this that I have stated. Many other things that happened instilled in our minds the privilege of worshipping our Lord. The only pain that Maryruth remembers is the headache. We together rejoice in realizing in a small way the goodness of God and the love and concern of our brothers and sisters.

From a Serviceman in Germany

I have spent over fourteen months in service and have become accustomed to many of the things that confront men in army life. Those who enlist or are drafted should be prepared to live in a completely different spiritual and moral environment than they were used to at home. It is nothing to fear, however, if they have been taught right from wrong and are grounded in the principles of the gospel. The service can mean misery or opportunity, depending on the individual's point of view. It offers opportunities for further education in many cases, and it also offers opportunities for missionary work. I have distributed a number of copies of the Book of Mormon, and I know others can do the same.

To some there are temptations that are hard to resist. Their goal should be not just to avoid evil but to set a good example, and they can't help the weak ones by condemning them. High standards plus humility are essential for the Latter Day Saint who wants others to respect his religion.

I deeply appreciate my parents and church friends who have helped me gain a knowledge of the gospel—the greatest gift to mankind. It has the power to turn darkness to light, bitterness to joy. I am encouraged as I study the Scriptures. Nearly all of us take a few cents of each day's wages for life insurance. Why not take a few minutes each day to renew our spiritual life insurance? I know it really pays off for the soldier.

As I have said, life in the service offers opportunities, but with those opportunities come responsibilities. These responsibilities rest also upon the shoulders of the people "back home" who are helping mold the lives of tomorrow's servicemen. Now is the time to prepare.

stitutes and conferences prove to me that God will yet add daily to the church in England many who should be saved.

ONE THINKS of William Blake's "Jerusalem": "And did those feet in ancient times, walk upon England's pastures green?" Whether the answer to this question be yes or no, of this I am convinced: Christ's concern for the people of this land is as strong as ever and will culminate in his standing upon this island of the sea in the latter day.

June 4, 1953, was the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the prophet's momentous announcement of the mission to England at Kirtland Temple, and an Englishman was serving the Kirtland congregation as its pastor, probably sitting in the same place where those early missionaries sat and wondered about their forthcoming adventure to a strange land.

God's investment in the English people is still paying dividends and will continue to do so. I humbly dedicate my life to the great privilege of preaching the gospel of salvation to this people as long as my assignment reads to the first "mission abroad."

for the Saints. In this connection we are fortunate in having the ministry of two gifted patriarchs.

I APPRECIATE the privilege of having been born into a Latter Day Saint family and shall ever be grateful for the splendid parental example I so consistently witnessed through the years. My introduction to the church services was in the various meeting places of the London Branch where my father was pastor. I was baptized at fifteen, and while from childhood I was always religiously inclined, my active participation was precluded by the distance we lived from the church until I was twenty years old. By this time we had moved nearer to the Enfield Branch. It was here, under the teaching and encouragement of the late D. A. Oakman, that I gained my first real appreciation of the Restoration. My convictions of the church are a matter of constantly deepening spiritual experiences founded upon the fact of the gospel restored. For fourteen years I have been fully engaged in the work of the church. It is my whole life, and my experiences throughout confirm me in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Looking into what might be the future of the British Isles Mission, I would say that with continuity of administrative policy and improved economic conditions, there would be no limit to what could be accomplished in the way of missionary expansion and branch growth. manifold opportunities and abounding possibilities are with us and before us, more than our present local man power and facilities permit us to handle. Both the present and the future are bright, sparkling with challenge to which, I am sure, the personnel of the mission will address itself. Progress through the years of the Reorganization has been slow, admittedly, but finally "truth will prevail."

He was baptized at the age of seventeen and was ordained a priest in November, 1917; an elder in February, 1922; and a high priest in 1933. In 1930 he received a General Church appointment and since that time had served as president of Spring River District; pastor at Joplin, Missouri; Walnut Park congregation in Independence, Missouri; Council Bluffs, Iowa; and Omaha, Nebraska; supervising pastor of the Chicago area; president of Chicago District; pastor of St. Louis Branch and president of St. Louis District; and at the time of his death was supervising pastor of the Arizona, New Mexico, and Western Texas area. He also served as assistant General Church Secretary for twenty years and Secretary for four years. On January 27, 1917, he was married to Winsome Smith, who survives him. A son, Frank Smith, preceded him in death.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Mary L. Wolf of Yokohama, Japan; a sister, Mrs. Nelle Kavanagh of Keokuk, Iowa; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held first in Phoenix, Arizona, Evangelist Keith Rogers and Elder W. W. Wood officiating, and then at Walnut Park Church in Independence, Elders Charles F. Putnam and Charles D. Neff officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GAVRILKO.—Dennis W., son of William and Dorothy Gavrilko, was born March 22, 1939, at Sacramento, California, and drowned on July 21, 1953, at Auburn, California, while trying to rescue a neighbor boy who had fallen in the water.

He is survived by his parents and a sister, Joyce Gavrilko, all of Auburn. Funeral services were held at the West and Hite Chapel in Auburn, Evangelist William Dawson officiating. Burial was in Auburn cemetery.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Rohde of Ann Arbor, Michigan, were honored by members of the congregation there on June 10, their fiftieth wedding anniversary. A potluck supper and program were features of the occasion. A wedding cake and corsage for the bride were part of the celebration. Mrs. Otto Anders, sister of the groom and maid of honor at the wedding, and Otto Anders, the best man, were in attendance.

The Ann Arbor members are grateful to the Rohdes for the use of their home as a meeting place when the mission was first started there many years ago. Mr. Rohde has always been a resident of Ann Arbor. His wife lived in Denver, Colorado, before their marriage. They have three children and nine grandchildren.

IMPATIENCE

We were driving at the legal speed limit. Yet the man behind us was crowding close, pushing on our taillight, so to speak, and making his motor swear at us with his accelerator. Traffic was heavy and he could not pass. This went on for ten minutes or so.

There was a hill ahead, but the yellow line in our lane forbade passing. The man decided to take a chance and pulled out beside us into the wrong lane. We were nearing the top of the hill when another car came over it. We went out on the shoulder to help the man save himself. By inches, he got back in line. Death had hovered so close to us in those moments that we almost felt the rustle of his wings. Chastened, the man stayed behind until, a mile farther on, we could let him pass. Next time he may not be so lucky. L. J. L.

THE ART OF HATING SIN

Christianity maintains that the disciple must school himself in the art of hating the sin but loving the sinner. In spite of the apparent nature of man not to be able to divorce the deed from the doer, the philosophy of this thesis is essentially sound. Dwight DW Davis

A TEACHER PRAYS

Teach me to use the compulsion of love and of interest; and save me from the weakness of coercion.

Make me one who is a vitalizer of life and not a merchant of facts.

Save me, Lord, from confusing that which is evil with that which is only immature.—The "Standard" (Australia), June 1953.

IS SHE HE?

The "Devil" has found a new way to entice men into crime. "Is the Devil male or female?" was the issue of a violent disagreement which ended in a fatal shooting in Houston, Texas, recently. (Most men have little doubt which sex is the Devil.) This doesn't sound like an "intelligent" subject for debate. We shall regret mentioning it if someone tries to get such an argument started in "Debatable Topics."

a close-up view

This spiral-bound book contains the many lectures and discussions vital to gaining a clearer understanding of present-day Zionic problems that were presented at the Professional and Business Men's Institute held in Independence last February. While it was not possible to include every remark that was made from the floor, the summaries are quite comprehensive and reasonably accurate. Order today.

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

A. Wayne Hough

SAYS BROTHER HOUGH, "The happiest years of my life have been the last five, for in these years I have found the joy of working for the Master and the joy of a good companion who is also an active church worker." The Houghs have really worked as a team since they met at Graceland in 1947. At the recent Joint Council, Wayne was appointed a full-time minister to the Missouri Missionary Development Area, which assignment he took in June of this year.

He was reared in the church and attended services regularly, but he says his real conversion began after returning from the armed forces in 1946. He had seen so much of evil and ugliness that he was determined to improve conditions to the extent of his ability. He became very interested in the church and its philosophy of Zion. He was asked to participate in various activities at church, and in February, 1947, was ordained to the office of priest. It was then that he first began to think of full-time church work. From then on he looked forward to that day. In the summer of 1947 he was asked to make application for appointment. He chose to take college training first. He attended Graceland from 1947 to 1949. He met Jeanne Hunter while working in the dining hall. They were married in June, 1948. After his graduation they went together to Southwest Texas State Teachers College at San Marcos. They took their senior year at Troy State Teachers College in Troy, Alabama, and were graduated in the summer of 1951 each with a Bachelor of Science in Education. Wayne majored in the social sciences.

After he finished school he accepted a government job in Mobile, where he and his wife have lived since graduation and are active in church work. He was ordained an elder in August, 1951. He has served as church school director of the Mobile Branch, youth leader of the former Gulf States District, associate pastor of the Mobile Branch, pastor of the New Orleans group, and counselor to the president of Mobile District. He has held cottage meetings in Mobile and two missionary series in Bay Minette, Alabama.

Wayne was born in 1925 in Mobile and was graduated from high school in 1942. His Army stint was in the field artillery from 1944 to 1946, and he saw service in France and Germany. While at Graceland he was a member of Lambda Delta Sigma. He is a member of Kappa Delta Pi, a national honor society in education. His special interests are choral singing, camping, and telling the gospel story.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT AT HOME

President Israel A. Smith is recovering satisfactorily and is now convalescing at home.

ATTENDS ELDERS' RETREAT

President F. Henry Edwards met with the elders of the Center Stake of Zion in their annual retreat at Lake Doniphan, August 8 and 9.

APOSTLE DAVEY AT REUNION

Apostle Roscoe Davey was at the Rock Island District Reunion held at Milan, Illinois, August 1-9. Sisters Aleta Runkle and The'ona Stevens and Dr. F. M. McDowell were also on the staff.

SPEAKER AT CAMPUS

Elder Almer Sheehy spoke to the Campus congregation of the Center Stake of Zion, August 9. There were 2,611 people present. On the Sunday before 2,677 people heard Elder Eugene Theys speak.

IN SOUTHERN INDIANA

Elder O. Kenneth Byrn, assistant to the Center Stake Bishopric, attended the Southern Indiana Reunion at Mitchell, Indiana, August 16-23.

HOME FROM REUNIONS

Dr. and Mrs. F. M. McDowell attended reunions for the New York-Philadelphia, Southern New England, and Maine Districts. Since returning to Independence, he also has attended the Rock Island District Reunion at Milan, Illinois, August 1-9. Brother McDowell conducted a workshop for priesthood in each of the four reunions. He reports excellent response to the kingdom-building program, as members of the priesthood were provided with a laboratory experience in conducting visits on the reunion grounds.

HOME FROM CANADA

Seventy and Mrs. Z. Z. Renfroe have just returned from reunions in Canada at Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. Brother Renfroe reports fourteen baptisms from the reunions. Working with him on the staffs of the reunions were Seventy and Mrs. Russell Ralston and Elder Howard Fisher. Attendance at the Canadian reunions doubled from last year's attendance, and Brother Renfroe reports a high quality in the services, particularly in the prayer meetings.

DRAMA GIVEN

Over 150 people participated in the presentation of "Other Sheep I Have," a drama of the Resurrection which was given at the Auditorium, August 13 and 14. Sponsored by the Walnut Park and Eden Heights Zion's Leagues, many people throughout the stake assisted in the activity. The drama presented the twofold testimony of Christ presented in the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Mormon. Written by Mrs. Naomi Russell, Reed M. Holmes, and Mrs. Barbara Howard, it was given to audiences of people from the Center Stake and other areas including Nauvoo, Illinois; Lamoni and Des Moines, Iowa; Fairland, Oklahoma; Pittsburg, Kansas; and Nevada and Archie, Missouri. The scenery included a thirty-foot temple in Zarahemla as well as the temple in Jerusalem. Mrs. Alta Seal planned and painted most of the scenery, and Mrs. A. L. Henson was the dramatics director.

MISSION ORGANIZED

During the month of June a mission at Fremont, Nebraska, was organized, according to word received from Merle P. Guthrie, church statistician.

Standards of Righteousness

MANKIND has been busy over the centuries trying to establish, by law or by custom, standards by which relative sizes and capacities might be expressed. The yard is a measure of length; a gallon, a measure of capacity; a square foot, a measure of area; a cubic foot, a measure of volume, and so on.

But he has not been content with limiting his measurements to weight, capacity, distance, temperature, and speed. He has desired to establish standards whereby he might measure his own and his neighbor's behavior. This has proved quite difficult, but he has not been daunted. He has recognized a universe of law and order. So he has determined to order his life and his fellow man's by declaring rules of conduct.

As we look back over the history of man, we discover that his rules and laws have been constantly changing. He has no "absolute" ones. That which is accepted today as law may be changed tomorrow. Less than fifty years ago it was against the law to drive an automobile faster than ten miles an hour. Today the speed limit in some states allows a maximum of sixty-five miles an hour.

Not only do his rules change within a nation; they differ from nation to nation, from race to race. In most European nations, a motorist is required by law to drive on the left side of the highway. In America, he must drive on the right side of the road.

AS WE MAKE further study into history, we become more certain that all of man's "standards" are relative. They are determined by his opinions and attitudes. They are developed in his interest—for his security, convenience, pleasure, and profit.

Many years earlier, certain members of the General Conference of 1884 attempted to force the church to declare a "formulated creed," or doctrinal standard. President Joseph Smith opposed this attempt to bind the church by statements which could become "dogma." Writing of the action of the Conference, he said, "There was no disposition to build the 'iron bedstead' upon which to stretch the devotee." He felt

... that to declare upon this point at the demand of one, involved the precedent to declare on another point at the demand of someone else; and if for these, then at the requirement of any who chose to rise up and demand a declaration of dogma, the church would have to yield, the result of which would be to finally eliminate the liberty of individual inquiry, quench the teaching of the word of God, and practically deny the office work of the Spirit in leading unto truth. Once involved in the intricacies of such formulated declarations there could be no abiding lines of demarcation drawn where belief might safely rest and dogmatism assume the rule.

THIS COUNSEL seems excellent. We are not yet wise enough to definitize the "standards" or "truths" of life. Although we may have advanced far in our search when compared to previous civilizations (and some would doubt that), our insight is still only a child's when compared to God's. The years ahead offer us the opportunity to receive greater portions of the intelligence of God, his wisdom and understanding. Our task is to keep the "channel of communication" with God open!

We limit not the truth of God
To our poor reach of mind
By notions of our day and sect,
Crude, partial, and confined.
No, let a new and better hope
Within our hearts be stirred;
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from his word.

Then we reach the conclusion that the only absolute standards are those developed by our Creator. These are the standards we should be discovering and "proving" as our measuring stick for human behavior.

IN SOUTH AMERICA, members of an Indian tribe practice cannibalism for what they consider virtuous reasons. This custom exists because of their religious beliefs. According to their concepts of the future life, it is impossible for parents to have immortality unless they are devoured by their children. So at death, a special ceremony of cannibalism is held. Most of us shudder at such a thought and wonder at the ignorance of such people. And we are amused at the belief of some Tibetans that flapping a prayer flag or spinning a prayer wheel will bring salvation.

But even we, of a civilized nation and church, are often held in the vice of similar tradition and custom. We have both written and unwritten laws which squeeze us into a mold of prejudice from which we cannot move. We become rigid and set in our "standards of righteousness." We lose the pliability necessary to open our hearts to receive a "higher standard."

It was to avoid a rigid, man-made moral standard in the church that a General Conference two decades ago adopted the statement,

While we appreciate the seriousness of the problems of commercialized recreation, dancing, speculation and exhibitions of greed, Sunday observance, etc., we respectfully suggest that the statements of the Doctrine and Covenants and General Conference resolutions touching these matters be left without specific reaffirmation or repudiation at this time, but . . . we urge the spiritual and educational authorities of the church to present articles, outlines, etc., through the church press which will assist the ministry and parents of the church in a patient explanation of the law and in kindly counsel and godly example through which the members of the church, both young and old, shall be inspired to reach forward to the objectives of the church and earnestly to endeavor a life such as becomes the Saints.

We await the time when the knowledge of God's "standards of righteousness" is ours. P. A. W.

Nauvoo House

THE NAUVOO HOUSE is legally described as "Block 156, Nauvoo, Illinois."

At the death of Joseph Smith the title stood in his name. The Mormons tried to take it from the family but were barred by legal action started by Emma Smith at the suggestion of Judge George Edmonds.

When Major L. C. Bidamon died he was possessed of this property.

In the Nauvoo Independent for June 25, 1953, in the "60 Years Ago" column, an item appeared stating that Charles E. Bidamon purchased the Mansion House property which was sold at auction.

I wrote Mr. Deeg, owner and publisher of the Nauvoo Independent, calling attention that the Bidamons never owned the Mansion House but did own the Nauvoo House. In response he wrote me a very nice letter mentioning that when Major Bidamon operated the property it was commonly known as the "Riverside Mansion."

But it was the Nauvoo House, as known in church lore and as mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 107, that was sold. Here is the statement as it appeared in the Notice of Sale which was published in the June 16, 1893, issue:

Saturday afternoon at one o'clock the Mansion House at the foot of Main Street will be sold at public auction by the executor of the Bidamon estate. This is the brick building which was commenced by the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, and in later years the dwelling on the river front was built on the foundation by Major Bidamon. This is also the site where the prophet boasted he would some day entertain the potentates of the world.

The June 9, 1893, issue gives the legal description as "Block 156 in the original Town of Nauvoo, free and discharged of the estate and dower and homestead of Nancy Bidamon.

Thus it will be seen the property was transferred but twice from the date it was purchased by Joseph Smith from Captain White in 1839 until Charles E. Bidamon deeded it to Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley about 1910. M. H. SIEGFRIED

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

President and Sister W. W. Smith have been in attendance at the Park of the Pines Reunion which closed Sunday, August 16. Brother Smith preached both Sundays and taught the general class. Sister Smith taught the women's class. Ted Beck, Harry Doty, James Phillips, William McMurray, John Booth, and Stanley H. Pfohl composed the appointee staff. Evangelists B. H. Hewitt and J. J. Ledsworth, as well as many others, helped to make this year's reunion a very successful experience in the life of the Saints.

The quick action by Elder Harry Black at the Kirtland Temple minimized the harm that might have otherwise been done by a newspaper in Massillon, Ohio. The newspaper published a brief history of the early church along with a picture and a description of the Kirtland Temple. The author had secured considerable misinformation. As soon as the article was brought to Brother Black's attention, he wrote the editor giving the correct information and requesting a story be published giving that information. This the paper did. The writer of the incorrect article also wrote Brother Black a letter apologizing for the inaccuracies. The many Saints in and around Massillon were concerned about the first article and pleased to see Brother Black's story.

The following letter tells a story with heart appeal.

Last Friday morning my home and business were destroyed by fire. During the first frantic moments, a deacon in your church offered my family lodging for the duration of the emergency. He located my parents and brought them to me. Then he offered us clothing and furniture through the Social Service Center.

It wasn't necessary for us to accept his offer of aid, but it was very gratifying to know that the aid was available.

I am not a member of your faith, but I do want you to know that I am very thankful to your church. There were no questions as to what faith I belonged to—only the open-hearted offer of help. May God bless all of you.

Spiritual Power through Stewardship

By L. Wayne Updike

An address given to the priesthood in Detroit International Stake, January, 1953

IN TALKING to me about this meeting one man said, "I will come, but I don't have to like it, do I?" I want you to know that I accepted this assignment happily—for a great many reasons.

We have one major purpose in mind at this meeting—to help you become better ministers. The subject assigned is "Spiritual Power through Stewardship." In this connection, I would refer you to the book of this same title by Evan Fry. It was written for reunion work of last summer, and every minister would do well to be familiar with its contents.

All of life is our stewardship. A small booklet published some years ago contains an introductory line which says something like this, "A good steward accepts life as his stewardship and considers himself responsible to God for the use he makes of it." Our question for consideration this afternoon is "In the exercise of our stewardship, what patterns and habits bring power?"

We know that proper diet, exercise, cleanliness, and other factors influence our physical well-being and determine to a great extent how strong we shall be. Similar relationships apply in the spiritual sphere. It is our intent to examine some of these habit patterns and to call attention to those which bring spiritual power to the individual minister.

BEFORE PROCEEDING to list some of these sources of spiritual power, however, let us look at the word "power" itself. We think of power as the ability to do work, to accomplish. We measure energy in foot-pounds, horsepower, volts, and so on. One man present told me recently that among electricians it is customary to send the novice for a bucket of volts. We speak of the gospel as having come "not in word only, but in power." We refer to the gospel as "the power of God unto salvation." We use such phrases as "the powerful speaker," "a man of influence," "the power behind the throne," "kitchen cabinets," "the endowment." Actually, the matter we are working on is how to attain the endowment of power. As a church, we have been inclined to think of the endowment as some great, miraculous, collective strengthening of our church, but in the final analysis the endowment becomes a personal matter. When the job of becoming powerful gets specific, it gets harder. How can you as one man, one minister, become a person who is more and more useful to the cause of the kingdom? How can you increase your ability to cause righteousness to be expressed in the lives of others?

Power is a gift we must reach for. It is not measured in foot-pounds or bucketfuls. Like the wind, it cannot be seen, but its results are visible. It is all around us. The source of it all is God, which fact caused one to say, "It is not I, but God that worketh in me."

At the very outset in our search for spiritual power is the requirement that we recognize the great source of power. Some years ago, in the Mount Washington area near Independence, I observed a train wreck. As I approached the scene, I noticed that workmen were in the process of restoring the heavy cars to the track. On the boom of the crane being used were the words "One hundred tons." The way in which the crane operator directed this piece of powerful machinery by turning the proper wheels and by moving the proper levers is suggestive of the way in which we can bring to bear great and powerful forces if we have the ability and intelligence and training to make the proper moves.

IT IS A generally accepted fact that power is needed in our church. We have made progress. But the progress has been much slower than we would like. Many of you from time to time go to the homes of those who are sick, and you come away wishing that your spiritual force were greater. From time to time, you see a good man who deserts the work of the church and turns away seeking lesser goals, and you long for the ability to call him back and re-enlist him in the work of building the kingdom. You sense a need for additional power to hold to the church men of skill. Only a few days ago, I talked with a young man who has thus lost his sense of direction. My attention was caught by his observation that in another church, which he had chosen to attend, every sermon is what he calls "a masterpiece." Each of you has felt that if your sermons gained sufficient power, to some extent at least, it has made up for your lack of literary skill. You have found that frequently the greatest results come from your sermons in which your dominant feeling was the presence of God and the availability of his influence. When you tapped the great source of spiritual power, that power came to bear upon the congregation.

But we must admit that there is something, if not wrong, then at least weak, about us. A good man will leave his own and go to some other church "where every sermon is a masterpiece." The fact that the restoration story is relatively unknown in our world today is adequate testimony that we need additional power. We speak of "preaching for the verdict." We rejoice if the spirit is with us when we preach. We often wish we had additional power so that we could always live at our best. Many of you will remember hearing Brother John Garver tell of his experience in Kirtland Temple when he said, "Under this spirit, I will go anywhere." I remember riding along in a truck with Don Chesworth and listening to him as he sang—

It may be I must carry the blessed words of life

Across the burning desert to those in sinful strife.

But if it be my task to bear my burdens there,
If Jesus goes with me, I'll go anywhere.

It is interesting to note that the quest for power is synonymous with the quest for companionship with the Christ. We can't have one without the other.

IT SEEMS TO ME that a confusion exists about the Holy Spirit. We often say, "There was a good spirit present." We generalize about the good spirit, but Jesus was very specific. He said, "When he, the spirit of truth . . ." It adds to one's spiritual strength to think of the Holy Spirit as being his constant monitor.

I can illustrate this by referring to a man whose duty it is, with his staff, to check carefully every operation in a great distillery. He does this for the government. He does not in any way enter into the processes of the distillery unless it becomes necessary, but for purposes of checking to establish obedience to law and for the collection of taxes, he has a member of his staff in every department so that each and every process of the whole plant is observed and recorded. The presence of his staff is a constant influence upon the workmen.

It is strengthening to the minister to assume that the Holy Spirit is equally faithful in observing the efforts of the minister to do good. Under certain circumstances, the Holy Spirit does more than that. It is our task to so live and so labor that the power of the Holy Spirit will be constantly evident. That man is surrounded by God's directing forces is supported by the story of Job, in which Satan challenged the Almighty to remove from Job the protections with which he had been encompassed. God did so with dire results to Job, but in so doing established for us the fact that in and of himself, man can make choices for good. He established further, however, that we have greater power when we have the Holy Spirit's presence.

THERE ARE VARIOUS AREAS of our stewardship which affect to a considerable degree the amount of spiritual power which we possess. The first of these is our heart—our motives. Our goals and ambitions control us, but more than this, they determine whether or not God is going to gain anything by increasing our ability. Power comes when we want what God wants. He has everything to gain in helping us to be strong in accomplishing his work. He has nothing to gain in making us strong for any other reason. We speak of doing things wholeheartedly. Sometimes we use the phrase, "He put his heart into it." "Out of the abundance of the heart . . ." "Keep thy heart with all diligence . . ." These and other Scriptures indicate the importance of observing our motives. It is my conviction that to the degree the ministry of the church is able to sincerely say, "Thy will be done," just to that degree shall it gain in the ability to accomplish.

A SECOND AREA of our stewardship which needs our attention if we are to become strong is our minds. Our minds require light. Just loving a sick child cannot save it. We must, in addition, know what to do for it to make it well. A poet has said—

Mind is the master power that molds and makes,

And man is mind; and evermore he takes
The tool of thought, and shaping what he wills,

Brings forth a thousand joys, a thousand ills.

He thinks in secret, and it comes to pass,
Environment is but his looking-glass.

If we would be spiritually strong, our minds should be thought of in terms like these: "Fill the bushel with wheat and you may defy the devil to fill it with tares. Your mind is like a garden: it may be filled with beautiful things or it may contain only weeds. It depends on how you cultivate it." One of the sins of our day is the sin of closed minds. When we preach repentance effectively, we persuade men to repent from the inclination to say, "The Bible contains everything I need. I don't need any more. Jesus paid it all." We pay a terrific price to protect our prejudices.

It is a part of our stewardship to open our minds to all of truth that can be found, to read everything that appears to be worth while, to examine it, and to "hold fast that which is good." I have here three pictures. The first is a picture of a traffic light. We can see both the red and the green lights because of the particular angle from which the photograph was taken. The caption says, "Which light controls your mind?" Every minister needs to think seriously of this and to form habits of intellectual curiosity if he would increase his personal power to do good. The second picture is a photograph of an executive with a sign on his forehead which says, "No Admission." The caption below reads, "What is the sign on your brain?" If it were possible to label all men's brains accurately, we would find this sign on some of them: "Welcome—come in." On others we would find the sign, "Do not disturb." On still others there would be "Positively no admission." The "no admission" man says, "It won't work. We tried that years ago. What do you know about my business? We don't want to make a change now. We are perfectly satisfied with our present methods."

OTHER MEN wear signs saying, "Do not disturb." This man is not so positive, but he has a way of sleeping at the post just as surely as the man who says, "No Admission." He says, "We'll consider it at some future date. You have a good idea but conditions are not right. There may be something to your plan, but the time is not right for a change. Bring this to my attention after the first of the year; I'm too busy now."

Another type wears a sign, "Welcome!" Give him a new idea and he says, "Well, what are we waiting for? Let's go! Let's give it a try! Let's check up and see if it will work." Spiritual power is directly related to the stewardship of our own minds.

A friend of mine recently handed me an illustrated page on which were written these words, "According to the theory of aerodynamics, and it may be readily demonstrated through experiments, the bumblebee is unable to fly—this is because the size, the weight, and the shape of his body in relation to his wingspread makes flying impossible. But the bumblebee, being ignorant of these scientific truths, goes ahead and flies anyway and makes a little honey every day." It is important that in our theorizing about how things ought to be done or about things that may or may not work, we keep in mind the necessity of doing a little work for Christ every day. One line in hymn No. 213 has always appealed to me: "In work that keeps faith sweet and strong, In trust that triumphs over wrong." The quest for spiritual power will not be successful without habits of industry on the part of those who have a mind to work.

A THIRD AREA of our stewardship which affects our spiritual power is our will. In the final analysis, we make our own choices. The will is the executive officer of the human personality. Roy L. Smith, editor of the Christian Advocate, writes, "By the will, the judgment is enforced and the reason made effective. Anything that breaks down or weakens the will is a sin against the whole personality." Occasionally we hear someone say, "He makes me mad." This isn't true at all. We choose whether or not we shall become angry. Others may do things of which we do not approve, but they do not have the control on our own personality at their disposal. These decisions we make for ourselves.

Personality is an expression of our habit patterns, and we respond according to the type of person we are. Mark Twain said on one occasion, "I have no difficulty with the parts of the Bible I don't understand. It is the parts which are perfectly clear to me with which I have trouble." We all know better than we do. Any minister should be able to preach better than he can live. It is interesting to note that when we are weak in one place, it weakens us in another; and when we are strong in one aspect of our ministry, we tend to become stronger in others. This is the truth which lies behind the line of the hymn, "Each victory will help you some other to win." One of the secrets of the success of the Master is found in the fact that he was able to focus all of life upon one objective. Even in the garden of Gethsemane, looking squarely into the face of death, he was able to maintain this fixedness of purpose to do his Father's will. Paul, in describing his own career as a missionary, said, "This one thing I do."

IN THE LIFE of every great minister is a strong will, a strong, determined execution of the judgment when guided by reason and knowledge. If we have strong wills—and most of us do—then we must look carefully to the things which guide our wills. A will that is guided by a closed mind produces stubbornness. A will that depends on guesswork, on partial facts, will make a fanatic. The man who fully exercises the stewardship of his own will knows the truth and, having made sure that he has all the facts available, acts with positiveness and precision. Everyone who has any aspiration to become spiritually efficient must accept responsibility for actions in his own behalf. To become spiritually strong involves giving some attention to these three areas of our own beings. In addition, there are other areas which need our attention.

In our modern society, we need to understand the means of overcoming certain spiritual maladies. Just as our body has many diseases which weaken us, so does our spirit. One of these diseases is the sense of guilt from which the ordinances of the gospel may cleanse us if properly used. Some men have inner tensions and conflicts. Their power is reduced accordingly until the gospel gives them perspective. Some are afflicted with spiritual insensitivities and develop what they take to be a realistic attitude, which really amounts to a practical atheism. They become concerned about material things instead of being spiritual-minded. Some men develop a suspicion of life and begin to question what its purposes are. The spiritually healthy person, however, proceeds with a consistent faith that life is purposive and, after the pattern which Christ set, continues toward that purpose with all diligence. Some men permit the tyranny of the body to overcome them and allow the physical demands of life to master them. Paul said, "But I keep my body under."

FROM TIME TO TIME we observe in the ministry the spirit of defeat and pessimism. We need to know, however, that this spirit is not from the Lord. Paul said, "For God has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." Sometimes men are afflicted with spiritual starvation. They have no spiritual food nor spiritual exercise. They develop no spiritual reserves. They have no great spiritual convictions stored in philosophy. They have no spiritual graces stored in habit patterns. This paucity must be replaced with plenty if we are to have power. This concept is illustrated in the phrase, "Preaching out of the overflow." To be spiritually strong, we must have spiritual health. We must have reserves upon which we can draw whenever such reserves are needed.

ONE OF THE AREAS of our stewardship to which we need to give considerably more attention is the stewardship of preaching. We have been commissioned to "preach the word" (II Timothy 4: 1, 2). Here is a challenging statement about preaching written by James Moffatt.

It is a strange power, that of the real preacher—not of the popular religious orator—a strange power of revealing to a human soul its own secrets, of stirring some half-forgotten aim, of opening the door of some new hope, of interpreting what the hearer thought was known to himself alone, of arousing faith and courage, of whetting the conscience for duty, of deepening sympathy, of setting the feet of some on a new plane of certainty, of making doubts seem less formidable and trust in God more reasonable. A strange power that requires the sense of pastoral responsibility, deep experience, a sure touch of intelligence and a profound forgetfulness of self. No hot little soul, no argumentative lecturer, no person set on eloquence, can wield it. Those who exercise it are rather men who instruct their people steadily and quietly, persuading them, warning them, but never allowing them to lose sight of the great center of their faith.

There is placed on the priesthood, particularly the Melchisedec priesthood, the responsibility of exercising the stewardship of identifying God and his Holy Spirit. Seeking is of no value unless we know when we find.

A little boy drew a queer-looking picture on a piece of paper. When someone asked him what it was, he said it was a picture of God. Said the observer, "But nobody knows what God looks like." And the little boy responded, "They do now."

We need to know enough of the characteristics of God and his Holy Spirit so that when he is active in our ministry we recognize him. There is a story of an atheist, attempting to prove that there is no God, who weighed a human body just before death occurred, and then weighing it again immediately afterward found the weight to be the same. He therefore concluded that there is no God nor any spirit which departs from the body at death. A minister standing by asked the atheist to stand on the scales and express his views on the subject. When the atheist complied, the minister observed that the weight of the man was the same afterward, so he said, "I conclude, therefore, that there is no weight to your opinion."

THOSE WE HAVE COME to feel are closest to God testify that God is most evident when he is most needed. We grow powerful when we reach our extreme. After we invest ourselves completely in working out the purposes of God, he has no other recourse than to apply some additional power from his own great storehouse. This is not a matter of persuading or coercing God to bring his influence to bear upon any situation; it is simply recognizing that the method he prefers is to work through men and that to work directly is a method which he considers to be of secondary value, though necessary at times. When he does use this method, he hopes to establish in the mind of the minister an additional sense of the co-operation and partnership between God and man.

Another area of our stewardship which makes us spiritually strong when properly used is the matter of getting dividends from difficulties. This is illustrated by an ancient Indian tradition in which it was believed that a warrior always received to himself the powers which had formerly been possessed by his vanquished enemy. In this philosophy, each warrior sought to do battle with the most powerful enemy he could find. His own powers grew in proportion to the number and strength of the enemies which he overcame. Life has difficulties. We become strong in proportion to the number of these difficulties which we overcome. We were designed for life; we were not designed to escape from it.

EVERY DIFFICULT SITUATION is an opportunity. Each irritating person we meet is a challenge to our ability to overcome our irritations. Every weak person we meet is an opportunity to develop Christian helpfulness. Every enemy we meet is an opportunity to demonstrate the Christian truth that love is stronger than hate. Every tragedy is an opportunity to learn to laugh when there is no joke, which in itself is a very satisfying ability. A boy who lost his feet said, "Oh, well, they were always getting cold anyway." It is a part of our stewardship not to be unduly overcome by difficulties but rather to recognize that we were designed for life and that life is not normal if it is always easy. One housewife said, "I can always tell when John has had an unusually hard day at the office; he tells so many funny stories." Another said, "Whenever I feel blue, I start five people smiling." Though the philosophy expressed in this poem may not be easy at first, it has proved helpful to many.

Build for yourself a strong box,
Fashion each part with care;
When it's strong as your hands can make it,
Put all your troubles there.

Hide them from sight so completely
The world will never guess half;
Fasten the strong box securely,
Then sit on the lid and laugh.

To be spiritually strong, we should cultivate the ability to be not unduly concerned about difficulties, for we grow strong only in the face of these difficulties.

Power and purpose are related. One secret of strengthening our power is to develop again the sense of mission which was known in the early church. Every minister should have a personal mission. There is one even in your work. One should find out the point at which his work serves the nation, the public, the customer, or the cause. Then he becomes a partner. I realize that this is difficult in the factory, but a moment's reflection will tell you that even though you are but a small part in a great movement you are part of an industry which will succeed only if it in some way serves the people. A dentist said he felt like a partner with the preacher since he had fixed his teeth and improved the minister's appearance. The janitor said, "The preacher and I work together. I make people comfortable so that he can make them uncomfortable."

THE SPIRIT GUIDES those who are going somewhere. The Lord has promised that he will send a Comforter to "guide" us into all truth. We don't need a guide if we aren't going anywhere. The sense of mission adds greatly to our strength as ministers. I firmly believe that one of the greatest elements in the ability of the Christ was the constancy of his sense of mission. We can find strength in our ministry also by exercising freely the stewardship of our faith. We need to believe that goodness and decency belong on top, that in the end right will triumph.

Truth crushed to earth will rise again.
The eternal realms of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain
And dies among her worshippers.

Just as a rubber life raft or oil will come to the surface of the ocean, so will the ways and purposes of God eventually triumph against all evil. When criticized, we should not resent it. If we represent the truth, the right, we belong on top. Someone has said, "If the postman stopped to fight it out with every dog along his route, he never would get the mail delivered." Woodrow Wilson, when criticized, is reported to have said, "I can stand it if he can." When Jesus refused to join in the condemnation of a sinful woman, he soon found that her accusers disappeared.

The stewardship of faith leads us to live expectantly. This is illustrated by the two groups of people in the congregations which we face. One group says, "Here we are. We just dare you to try to teach us something." The other comes with an expectancy which bespeaks a search for the beautiful. These people seem to say, "We're anxious to hear your sermon. We know we're going to hear something good." If we would be spiritually strong, we must keep in mind the truth that right will win. The purposes of God shall not come to naught. We should expect success. This conviction brings power.

A FINAL AREA of stewardship which makes men strong is one which we often put first. Many believe it to be their chief source of power. I refer to the stewardship of prayer. Proper exercise of this stewardship requires establishing right relationships with God. This is a subject which requires a great deal more time than we can give it today. Every man of great spiritual power has been a man of prayer. Many can testify to this. Does it not then follow that the stewardship of prayer should receive more attention than it has in the past?

I trust the discussion of these areas shall be helpful to you and that as you explore each of them further your strength will increase.

Power to you!

BOOKS

WHOM GOD HATH JOINED, by David R. Mace, Ph.D. Westminster Press, price $1.50

This small book on marriage is written in the form of daily devotions. Casting his material in this form was a wise choice of the writer, because whether it is read straight through at one sitting or studied daily for a month, it is devotional in its approach to the subject. The author speaks straightforwardly about the Christian's attitude concerning physical response, fellowship, and the broader problems of marriage.

Whom God Hath Joined could very profitably be read by the newly married or by couples anticipating marriage. It is not, however, a book of facts about anatomy, sex technique, etc. Persons who need such information should turn to one of the many good books written to explain such facts.

This book goes beyond sex information and deals with the basic objectives, feelings, and attitudes which genuine Christian marriage must cultivate to be bouyant, productive, and satisfying. It doesn't just bring God into the marriage picture; it gives him a central place and paints the picture of successful marriage around him. Whom God Hath Joined can be read with profit by those who have been married many years. To such, it will be a "refresher course," bringing back earlier ideals and opening unthought-of possibilities for deeper and richer married life.

Each daily reading starts with a verse of significant Scripture. Then there follows two or three appealing quotations regarding the day's emphasis. Dr. Mace then presents the information and challenge which married people need. Each day's reading closes with a brief prayer.

Latter Day Saints, believing godly marriage and home life to be essential in the establishment of the kingdom, should read and re-read Whom God Hath Joined as a source of insight, guidance, and inspiration. To a member of the priesthood, called upon to counsel married couples, this book can be a helpful reference for himself and for those he is trying to help. HERBERT C. LIVELY and His Pre-carnate Life as Related to the Present

First Creation Spiritual

All organic forms are made and sustained by processes motivated and directed from within by the spirit of life. Without that power of life no material organism can come into existence, which means that spirit of necessity exists first, the physical organism second.

He who created man has revealed the steps of procedure:

By the power of my Spirit, created I them; yea, all things both spiritual and temporal: firstly spiritual, secondly temporal, which is the beginning of my work; and again, firstly temporal, and secondly spiritual, which is the last of my work.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8.

Relating to man, the beginning of God's work was spiritual; the temporal or physical came second. Man lived in the spirit before he lived in the flesh.

The story of creation revealed in Genesis, chapters one and two [we use the Inspired Version], confirms this basic fact. While the inanimate portion of creation such as the heavens and the earth, sun and planets, seas and lands required no antecedent spirit creation, being made directly of matter, it was necessary in the wisdom of God that man should be made first spiritually. This is the teaching of the Scripture. In that spiritual creation man was the last of the series of living forms made, having been created on the sixth or last day of creation.

And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.—Genesis 1: 29.

This creation was altogether distinct from the physical creation later described as occurring after the seventh-day rest, when Adam and Eve were formed from the dust of the earth, a physical creation. In this first creation the Lord made not just two but the whole human race. He tells us:

And I, the Lord God, had had created all the children of men, and not yet a [physical] man to till the ground, for in heaven created

I them, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth.—Genesis 2: 6.

For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth.—Genesis 2: 5.

Heavens Occupied by Living Spirits

This creation produced the whole human race of individuals, each having form, intelligence, free moral agency, with power for acquiring experience, knowledge, wisdom, faith, and righteousness. The number was great, referred to by the Lord as a "host":

Thus the heaven and the earth were finished, and all the host of them.—Genesis 2: 1.

This great host of individual forms was not imaginary or anticipatory but real, discernible, living, acting beings. It was something beyond the blueprint stage, for God says it was a "work," even a finished work:

I, God, ended my work, . . . and I rested on the seventh day from all my work; and all things which I had made were finished.—Genesis 2: 2.

Enoch, a man several generations from Adam, was greatly endowed by the Spirit of God, and being possessed of "seer" powers he was able to see these created spirits:

And he beheld the spirits that God had created, and he beheld also things which were not visible to the natural eye.—Genesis 6: 38.

The Lord considered them real, for he blessed them and gave them promise of a future life wherein they would multiply themselves, replenish the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over it (Genesis 1: 28-30). They had the prospect of life in the flesh upon the earth, though they were as yet in heaven. About the time of Babel the Lord appeared to the brother of Jared and, among other things, said:

Yea, even all men were created in the beginning, after mine own image.—Ether 1: 80.

If the "days" of creation were indefinite periods of great length rather than days of twenty-four hours, as is generally conceded, then it was a long time between the spirit creation of man on the sixth day, and the physical creation of Adam and Eve after the seventh day, during which time man lived and developed in the spirit in preparation for the later life in the flesh. The Scriptures offer no support to the common notion that man originates at birth in this world. They reveal the "heavens" to be occupied by living spirits created in the beginning, both those who have not yet become carnate and those who having lived in the flesh have died and "returned unto God," to await the time of their redemption and restoration to immortality in the flesh.

Man Is Spirit

In this world man is a dual being, spirit and body. When separate the part that lives is the spirit only; the body becomes dissolved. This life is but a segment of the life of man who enters this world from his former abode in the heavens, stays awhile until the divine purpose here is completed, and departs to meet other developments. All the way through, the spirit lives. It is on this basis that God says, "Man is spirit." He deals with him as such.

The Hebrew letter records that like Christ—

The children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same. . . . Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren.—Hebrews 2: 14, 17.

The evidences are abundant that Christ lived in the spirit prior to his coming in the flesh, and this author declares that man did the same. Man took upon himself flesh and blood by coming into this world, the body being a new inheritance, a habitation, designed of God in the developing and perfecting of man.

The gospel was no afterthought on the part of God, neither did it originate on the earth. Its application is to man throughout his existence from the time his spirit was first created until he is perfected in the kingdom of God. Paul says Christ was the author of the gospel, and John writes that he was in the beginning the Word. Alma taught that the gospel which was given to men at the beginning of the world was the plan "which had been prepared from the foundation of the world" (Alma 9: 49). It was this plan that Lucifer called in question and sought to introduce a substitute of his own devising (Genesis 3: 1-5). Divine law is not restricted to carnate man but applies to man in the spirit world prior to this life, and is still preached "to them who are dead" (I Peter 4: 6). The law is spiritual and appeals to man's spiritual nature:

All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

The gospel with all its commandments and requirements is directed to man as the law of the spirit. That is why it never changes, being designed to be man's rule of action in the pre-carnate state, in the present carnate world, and in the post-carnate life.

Spiritual Creation Limited

To the creation of the spirits of men there was an end. It has become a common view regarding the flow of human life into the world by birth that the process is indefinitely perpetual. Men see no probable end. Yet the Scriptures are quite definite in showing that in the spiritual creation there was an end, and that there is a limit to the number of souls created.

God said that in the six days "the heaven and the earth were finished, and all the host of them." He rested on the seventh day "from all my work; and all things which I had made were finished." It was after the seventh day that he made Adam and Eve, the first physical creation of man. It is clear that the process of spiritual creation did not go beyond the day of rest. That work was done. The number designed of God was complete, innumerable to man, but known, every one, to God.

Corresponding to this teaching is the further word of revelation that this world is not to continue under its present conditions indefinitely. A change is decreed. There will be a new heaven and a new earth as described by John in the Apocalypse. Satan will be checked in his devastating work. The kingdom of God will be established and Christ will come to reign in justice and equity to the ends of the earth. In that day there will be no more death and, by the close of the millennial reign, no more birth, for the earth will have filled the measure of God's creation and will be inhabited by the worthy righteous of all ages who will have been redeemed, resurrected, and crowned with celestial glory.

The poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

The present stage of the world's existence was ordained of God for man's temporary abode in his state of mortality. It is a preparatory stage in which man enters not all at one time but in a successive train by birth, and after a short life passing out in similar order by death. A more stable life awaits.

Marriage was instituted as one of the means for making possible the steady inflow of human life into the world. But Christ informs us that there will be no marriage in the resurrection, which is tantamount to saying there will be no more birth:

Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

For in the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of God in heaven.—Matthew 22: 29.

The creation of man in spirit form before the world was made had a limit referred to by the Lord as the "measure" or number, which points to the inescapable conclusion that when that full number of spirits is exhausted, all having come into the world, the earth will pass by the providences of God into a new stage. Creation, spiritual and temporal, is but the beginning of God's work; the greater task of developing and perfecting man until he attains the likeness of Christ, even as many as will, is yet to be completed.

Life in the Spirit World

The Lord does nothing without purpose, though his purposes are not always revealed to man. Moses wondered why the earth and other things were made, and the Lord told him, "For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me." Had God's purpose been made complete in man's spirit creation, he might have revealed it; or even were it fulfilled in man's physical creation it might have been revealed; but it extends far into the future.

Nevertheless each stage of human existence has its own purpose which contributes to the fulfilling of the ultimate purpose of God. It must be presumed that the pre-carnate life was designed to fulfill some end which was in view of and contributory to God's ultimate design in man. The Lord told Moses,

"This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." It involves the sanctification and perfection of man. This process began in the spirit world.

Detailed information about our former life is not abundant; yet, the Scriptures give enough to enable us to form a fair conception of what it was. Two statements give the essential basis of that life:

I gave unto them their intelligence in the day that I created them.—Genesis 7: 39.

Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also, otherwise there is no existence.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5.

Intelligence was the first essential to life and activity, this being the divine spark from God himself by which man became a living being. Without that spark of intelligence man would never have existed. But further—and it is a sublime thought—God brought man into existence by implanting in his created form a quality of his own divine person, the primary step toward making man in his own likeness. This gift of intelligence was but the beginning of God's bounties to man. It continued to flow as a stream, and light radiated from him as from the sun, carrying truth and knowledge for man's advancement. It was for man to receive, utilize, and apply.

On the other hand, it was possible for man to neglect, misuse, dishonor, and despise God's gifts to him, until his light would go out, and his knowledge fade away, making progress toward the divine goal impossible. This actually occurred to one third of the created host, who by this attitude irretrievably violated the essential conditions of life, cut themselves off from the means of progress, lost their standing in the spirit world, were cast down, and forfeited their right to life in the flesh. They remain forever without hope. Jude (verse 6) says they are "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." They are the Devil and his angels.

Free Agency

It is already apparent that man from the beginning possessed freedom of will, called free agency. Only upon the basis of such freedom could man be commended for receiving, and condemned for rejecting the light of God. The Lord speaking of Satan says, "A third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency" (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10).

These pre-carnate people were pioneering in life. They had no history to make them wise in their choices; no biographies for their examples. They had to make their own choices which sometimes were right and sometimes wrong. A third went so far in sin as to repudiate the gospel and rebelled against God and his rule. But this does not mean that the two thirds were altogether free from errors and transgressions. Man had some knowledge of sin in the spirit world.

We cannot doubt that law was given for the direction and government of the people in the spirit world. God is too wise to have created so many spirits and turned them loose without chart or compass to shift for themselves. As Creator he was responsible for the welfare of his creatures and must have remained as a Father to them. Speaking not merely of this carnate world, but broadly and universally, God says:

Unto every kindom is given a law. . . . All kindoms have a law given.—D. and C. 85: 9.

That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment.—D. and C. 85: 8 a, b.

Security, perfection, sanctification, and progress come by obedience to law, wherever man is. There is no world of free lance except that which leads to the "lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." God's law is always and everywhere the law of right, obedience to which makes for righteousness. That law is the gospel which was "prepared from the foundation of the world."

Predestination

Predestination as a doctrine incorporated into some of the Protestant creeds may be far from correctly representing God's attitude toward man in the spirit world, being based upon an extreme and, we believe, unwarranted interpretation of several passages in the Scriptures. It has never found indorsement in this church. We mention the matter only because it relates to the spirit world with which we are dealing.

The Scriptures do contain the words, "foreknowledge," "predestinate," and "election," and present some teachings regarding them which gives us a little insight into the conditions of the pre-carnate world.

For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to his own image, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren.—Romans 8: 29.

Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit.—I Peter 1: 2.

God is declared to be just and impartial. He does not extend special advantages or blessings to whimsically chosen favorites, but deals in equity with all. But equality demands that opportunity and power be given according to personal qualification and worthiness and probably many other factors.

Moses, a deliverer promised to Israel prior to his birth, was before chosen of God for a special mission. So were John the Baptist and Saul of Tarsus whom the Lord called "a chosen vessel unto me."

Alma, in explaining the principle of priesthood and the calling of men into God's service on earth, says of them:

. . . being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceeding great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such; and thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds.

. . . thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the Only Begotten Son, who was prepared.—Alma 9: 65-68.

From that early day the Lord chose worthy men to be his representatives to assist in doing his work on earth. Many others who may not have been destined for the ministry but who, because of their love of truth and righteousness and their obedience and faith, were already on the road to eternal life, were by their own chosen course destined to salvation. But such predestination does not preclude the continued exercise of their God-given right of free agency. They could still change their course and fail in their salvation. Likewise, those who followed in sin, a course which would inevitably lead to eternal death—for God had so destined, still had their choice, and by changing their course they could find life. God's appointments are not arbitrary; they are always subject to the determination of the individual.

Reward or penalty, other than that we have described, does not carry over from the previous world to this present life, though it may be apparent that whatever character a man formed there is what he brings with him. It is to him as the foundation upon which he continues to build in this life. Whether high or low, good or ill, it is of his own making. Life in the flesh offers a new opportunity for building character; the old may be modified for better or worse, and every man may make of himself what he wills to make.

So it is that in the spirit world there were knowledge, free will, law which also implies government, faith including belief or disbelief, works both good and evil, commendation or condemnation. Character was formed there which tends to inspire man's rising or falling here. The foundation laid by God was good, but every man was free to follow his own will, and what he became was of his own responsibility.

Man without Knowledge of Previous Life

One difficulty many find in grasping the idea of a previous life is that there is no memory of it. But the lack of memory proves nothing in denial of such a life. We cannot remember the years of our infancy but we passed through them. Sometimes mental afflictions or injury produces loss of memory, but the past life is no less real.

Life in this world is restricted to the capacities and capabilities of the flesh. We can think only by means of the physical brain. Memory is altogether dependent upon that brain. Knowledge of the material world is gained only through the physical senses. Likewise expression of our thought and will is possible only through the physical organs. Let the functioning of the brain be checked and we are helpless to act. Let the larynx be paralyzed, and we cannot speak. Our whole life is limited to the capacity of the flesh. Since the brain cannot record nor reproduce what was never impressed upon it, it could not recall nor reproduce anything of knowledge had in the previous life. The former knowledge we have for the time being is lost, perhaps for a wise purpose in the Creator.

Christ an Example

An outstanding example of the reduction and limitation of pre-carnate powers is to be seen in the Christ whose infinite knowledge and power were left behind when he came into the flesh to become a man. Like his fellows his knowledge here was gained by self-effort through the physical senses, his knowledge increasing as he increased in stature (Luke 2: 52). John wrote of him, "He received not of the fulness at the first, but received grace for grace," continuing until he received a fullness. "And thus he was called the Son of God because he received not of the fullness at the first" (D. and C. 90: 2). In the flesh Jesus bore the restrictions and limitations common to all men.*

We note rather closely in this connection the Scriptures concerning Christ:

*We recognize that Christ possessed a superiority over other men because of his divine Spirit, but notwithstanding he lived within the common limitations of the flesh.

The Power of Emotion

By A. Lucille Bacon

"To everything there is a time, a place, a purpose."

NOT TOO LONG AGO TV was in a primitive state. Financially the TV business was a precarious gamble. In order to be a success, it had to win a large following quickly. So what did the TV boys do? They threw in some thriller-dillers. They appealed to the emotions. TV gradually grew up and won over a large portion of the movie producers' following. Something had to be done to win them back, so now we have 3-D movies. The only ones I've seen advertised are thrillers, the "Monster from Outer Space" type. And so it goes, not only in the movie and TV business but in other fields of money-making. Producers are playing upon our emotions to get what they want—our money. What we don't seem to realize is that every time we forfeit a little of our money for these thrills we forfeit a part of ourselves also.

Under the spur of emotion, commonplace persons have been known to accomplish great acts of courage. History bears witness of them. It also records the tragedy of mob violence resulting from whipped-up emotions.

We have parades, flashy uniforms, stirring band music, and gaily illustrated posters depicting scenes in far-off places. The spirit of adventure stirs in a young man's blood and he enlists in military service.

Among church-goers is the surge of emotion felt during a particular sermon that appeals to the heart as well as the reasoning. Sometimes the feeling is deep enough to move people to action, sometimes no farther than to good intention.

WHEN THE 3-D MOVIES first moved into our town a few weeks ago, there was suddenly a rash of juvenile terrorist crimes. Carloads of teenagers would crowd innocent motorists to the curb, drag them from their cars, and beat them mercilessly.

What is the connection? I thought. Then it dawned on me. The connection is the same between any crime and emotion. With any emotion the nervous system is stimulated with an overwhelming urge for action. There is a thrill, and its purpose is to arouse the brain centers to action.

Emotion is to a human what a spur is to a horse, what a self-starter is to a car. You must step on the starter to start the motor, but you don't go around with your foot on the starter once the engine is in motion. And you can't start a motor with an empty supply line. "Where no fuel is, the fire goeth out."

When I was a little child, cars were not quite what they are now. I recall Papa saying, "Motor's cold, I guess. Got to give her more spark." Just as an auto needs "spark," so does a human. But our over-stimulated emotional spark has led to behavior not in harmony with the purposes of God.

IN THESE DAYS of misused emotions there came a demonstration of the powers of nature which made people more concerned for the ways of God. They called it a tornado.

It is now a month since the wind of death swept down from the twilight skies with no warning and in a matter of minutes snuffed out the lives of 115 persons and injured over 900 others. Pieces of clothing, photographs, and papers were carried as far as 200 miles over Lake Huron and dropped. We who saw that long, wide swath of desolation were amazed that so few had died and so many had lived—to remember.

One of the local editors wrote, "Why were tiny babies snatched from mothers' arms; so many little children taken; so many law-abiding citizens hurled into Eternity? Why not the habitués of the vice dens? We can seek comfort only in the fact that for these who died the night of horror is past; and in the words spoken over and over again these past days in churches and funeral chapels, "I am the Resurrection and the Life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Now what has all this to do with emotion? We have been transformed into a city of sky-watchers, and the great surge of emotion inspired by the disaster has turned our thoughts heavenward.

The milkman said, "Thank God, I was on vacation!"—and he said it reverently. A man stopped by to inquire about a piece of work to be done. That particular afternoon a storm warning had been issued. As he turned to go, his gaze swept the skies and he said, "I don't like the look of this." Then with a guilty glance around he whispered, "Y'know, people ain't livin' like they oughta!" We hear it everywhere—talk about God, the hand of God, the wrath of God, not only from the reverent but from persons who have not before mentioned him except to use his name in vain.

Only God knows the answer. But if any good was born of this travail of nature, then it must of necessity be of God, for he is the source of all good.

THE POWER OF EMOTION has long been employed deliberately in the cause of evil. Too seldom have we given thought to its tremendous potentialities for good. Man's reasoning powers tell him that the plain law of cause and effect should be enough to keep him in step. But somehow the nature of man, being invested with all its sensitivities, needs the power of emotion to prod him into action.

Far too often the power of emotion has been dissipated for a thrill. A person reads a book. It stimulates his emotions. He procures another and another of the same type, living and reliving the emotional thrill until it becomes so commonplace as to lose its original effect. The habit has become established, so he seeks for something a little more potent. He attends the same type of thing at the movies again and again until his sensitivities become dulled. What comes next? Action! He has allowed himself to be led from wrong feeling, to wrong interests, to wrong thinking, to wrong doing. Some of the most vicious crimes take root and develop to exaggerated proportions from the seeds of misuse in the power of emotion. Most of us awaken before we get that far, but too many go through life never realizing what is happening.

What has all this to do with law-abiding average citizens—especially church-goers? As long as the thrill of religion lasts, we are zealous; when that wears off, we lose interest. If we have concentrated entirely on the "feeling," we are like the seed that fell upon stony ground.

Have you ever heard anyone declare a church reunion was or was not a success due to the presence or absence of spiritual gifts? God is a God of balance in all his plans and purposes. These spiritual gifts were not intended to be employed for the sole purpose of furnishing an emotional thrill. It is true, we need stimulus to prod us into action, but these gifts also contain the more tangible properties of wisdom, intelligence, instruction, in other words, the fuel with which to move forward.

What is the time, the place, and the purpose of emotion? The time is when we have cooled or our energies have relaxed to the extent that we feel no incentive to move forward. The place? In true proportions to all else, the place is where action is imperative and the spark is vital. The purpose? It is to stimulate physical and mental energies to action in the moment of need.

Question Time

Question:

In the Word of Wisdom in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 86:2 b, "Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air," nothing is said concerning the flesh of fish or other sea food. Would one be within the Word of Wisdom or out of it if he ate fish or sea food in the summertime?

Missouri

Answer:

Paul tells us, "All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds" (I Cor. 15: 39). The flesh of beasts and of fowls (birds) are specifically mentioned in modern revelation as ordained for man to use sparingly and with thanksgiving in times of winter, cold, famine, and excess of hunger.

The flesh of fish is not mentioned in the "Word of Wisdom." There is, however, adequate scriptural evidence that it is a desirable food. Matthew, Mark, and Luke each testify that the Christ fed the multitude from five loaves and two fishes. Luke tells of the resurrected Lord eating a piece of broiled fish and a honeycomb (Luke 24: 40-42). And John records that the Master gave fish and bread that had been prepared in a fire of coals to Peter and the other disciples who "went a-fishing" after the death and resurrection of the Lord.

God knows flesh of fish to be a common food, eaten and served even by his Son. Still he did not prompt his servant, the prophet of the latter day, to advise limited use of fish as he advised limited use of the flesh of beasts and of fowls. It is, therefore, quite evident that no such limitation was necessary either to bring a maximum of good health or to please the Father.

This is quite in accord with modern knowledge of the nutrition needs of the nations with other scriptural pronouncements. Before World War II approximately two-thirds of the world was hungry simply because needed food could not be obtained. In general, those who were hungry then are hungrier now, according to the United Nations World Food and Agriculture Organization reports.

The greatest need of these hungry people is for protein foods. When protein foods are mentioned, many promptly think of meats and poultry. Actually these are the most expensive protein foods obtainable, counting the expense in terms of feed required to produce them, much of which feed could have been used directly as food. If we limited our production of meats, poultry, and animal products to those needed for good nutrition, used the extra grain usually fed to the animals directly as food, and shifted only a small acreage now in grain and cotton to fruits and vegetables, Dr. Henry C. Sherman* estimates that we could feed all the people of the United States better than they are now being fed and still export as much food as we keep for ourselves.

Fish, on the other hand, eat foods that man ordinarily could not use for food. Hence an increased use of fish could help greatly in alleviating the world's hunger instead of increasing it as extensive meat eating does. Milk, too, can be produced economically of primary foods. The FAO, therefore, is urging an increased use of the primary grains, fruits, vegetables, and milk with a large increase in the use of fish as an aid to eventually feeding the world well.

Foods are not evenly distributed throughout the world, and meats are probably the most unevenly distributed of all. While in the United States we normally consumed an average of 154 pounds of meat per person before World War II, the people of the Scandinavian countries had less than half as much (62-76 pounds). In Russia, only 50 pounds were available if each person could obtain his fair portion. That's less than one third as much as we had. In the Orient there was very little available to anyone. During the war, while we were still eating only slightly less than 150 pounds per person, in England the quota was 28 pounds per person.

This uneven distribution of meats, according to Dr. Sherman, is partly for geographic reasons but largely because of disparities of purchasing power. This disparity between the "have's" and the "have not's," Dr. Sherman points out, puts a strain upon good will and should not continue—indeed it will not continue among people who develop a sense of social justice. Actually this disparity cannot continue if there is to be peace among the nations, declares Director General Norris E. Dodd of the United Nations FAO.

While heavy meat eating by those who can afford it is strongly entrenched in tradition, Dr. Sherman says that it "does violence to the sense of social justice," and undoubtedly is a "source of uneasy conscience" among the "have's" as it is a source of discontent among the "have not's." To remedy the situation will not only reduce social tension but will improve the over-all health if other instructions of modern nutrition and the Word of Wisdom are observed. Then needed foods will of necessity replace the excess of meats now being consumed among heavy meat eaters, and needed proteins will become available to those who now have not.

The Lord has said, "The beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, . . . that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin; and woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need" (D. and C. 49: 3). Those of us so fortunate as to have such foods available should be happy to eat with thanksgiving, sparingly, and at stated times that we may recognize our stewards' help and help to fill our brother's need. Only by so doing, the prophet tells us, can we please the Father. Fish may well help provide necessary protein and needed variety to our diets while thus we obey the counsel and will of God.

Come Up Higher

By Doris Woodstock

For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55:9.

WE, THE MEMBERS of the women's department of the church of Jesus Christ, have a great responsibility. This department was created to help us fulfill God's purpose in us and assist in building his kingdom. To do this we need objectives which we can know and understand so well that they become a part of our everyday living. These objectives are—

1. Improving the quality of individual and family life.
2. Raising our standards of housekeeping and homemaking.
3. Encouraging all families to know and keep the laws of the church, including the financial law.

"Whatever your talent, there is a place and a need for you in the work of the church" (From the Women's Handbook).

The Lord in his great wisdom has given us this admonition:

And verily I say unto thee, that thou shalt lay aside the things of this world and seek for things of a better. . . Continue in the spirit of meekness and beware of pride. Let thy soul delight in thy husband, and the glory which shall come upon him. Keep my commandments continually and a crown of righteousness thou shalt receive. And except thou do this, where I am you cannot come. And verily, verily, I say unto you that this is my voice unto all.—Doctrine and Covenants 24:3-4.

Let us shine a searching light into our hearts and souls. Do we find the fundamental characteristics which enable us to accomplish these objectives? What kind of women does God need? How may we help?

1. Come up higher by putting first things first

Where is our treasure? Is it in the material possessions of life? It is so easy to be led a step at a time until most of our energies are spent in acquiring things. A woman I once knew often said, "Things and possessions mean nothing to me." Strange that she added piece after piece of furniture in an already crowded home. Redecorating was a continuous project. We do get tired of the same draperies and slip covers, don't we? It is so easy to talk ourselves into the idea that they are shabby and that we really do need new ones right away!

Another woman I know had been planning to buy a dining room suite for several years. She really needed one, as she had been using an old table and odd chairs. She often had friends or a family at her table, and they always were welcome. After saving enough money to make her purchase she discovered that the church needed some new equipment. Did she let someone else worry about it? No, she gave all the money she had saved for the things needed at church. Her only comment was, "I really don't need the furniture, as I do have a table and chairs." We need be concerned with providing for the material needs of home and family, but such needs should be considered in their rightful place and not assume the greatest importance in our lives.

Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:14 d.

For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Luke 12:37.

2. Come up higher by looking for the good

We live on a higher plane of life when we look for the good in people and do not dwell on things in their lives which are distasteful to us. There is a saying that we are what we think. Constant looking for faults in others and criticizing does something to our personalities that is harmful and unbecoming to women of the Restoration.

We need to be particularly careful in our homes that we do not allow ourselves to say things that would be critical about members of the church. We show our love for the children of God by encouraging, supporting, and upholding our brothers and sisters.

"Hold fast that which is good."—I Thessalonians 5:21.

3. Come up higher through personal example

Our most effective means of witnessing for God is by personal example. The activities we engage in tell more eloquently than words the kind of persons we are. The books we read, the literature we have in our homes, the comics our children read, and the television programs we enjoy tell the world what we are more clearly than what we say. The way we act toward our neighbors and family is an indication of our personalities. The way we behave toward others' children sometimes shows a part of our personalities that is better not seen.

The principles of the gospel put into practice in our lives are the best way to teach our children and to demonstrate the Zion home to the community. Our emotional attitudes and reactions are absorbed by our children. When we as parents grow in integrity, honesty, tolerance, self-control, patience, kindness, and love, so do our children. We need to respect the personality of each member of the family and to be completely honest in our relationship. A promise to a child should be as binding as to an adult.

A woman I knew to be a wonderful worker in the church did not enjoy the confidence of her own daughter. Why? She did not keep the promises she made to her daughter. The daughter herself told me that she would hate to be like her mother. Thoughtlessly we do and say little things that become big things in influencing those around us to lose confidence in us and in the church.

Thelona Stevens has said, "The humble Zionite home builder will be known within the Zionite community for her praiseworthy deeds and joy and peace will be her lot in this life and eternally."

4. Come up higher by having time for home, family, and church

It is sometimes difficult for us to know how much time we should spend outside of our homes and still not neglect them. The tools we have to work with in the home should give more time to "be about our Father's business." There is a need for every woman to plan wisely so that she may share some of the responsibility of the branch or district. Each has a talent and should seek to use it for the good of all in the kingdom-building process.

We need to plan our activities so our homes are not neglected. Our homes should be orderly, clean, and beautiful. The personality of the home is largely dependent on the homemaker. The little touches she can add in the way of pictures, flowers, dishes, and books make deep impressions on the family—impressions which usually last throughout life.

Teaching our children is of utmost importance.

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

Children need to see the joy and happiness that comes as a person gives his all to the Master. They need to know that it isn't always easy, that there is a price to pay for salvation. To see their parents give of themselves, their time, energy, and financial contributions, and sometimes to sacrifice and to do so gladly is an inspiration to children and young people.

We need to have time to give active support to our husbands in their business, their leisure, and especially in their church work. Love of a husband and wife is a beautiful thing if cherished and protected. Respect and understanding for each other is essential. We uphold our husbands when we show appreciation for their care, love, and devotion to the family. We cannot afford to be jealous of the time their church work takes; rather should we encourage them, for God has given us this commandment:

Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.—Matthew 6: 38.

In the Zionite plan, the family as a unit works in the church, each person in his own place, for the Master.

5. Come up higher by having a forgiving spirit

We grow and develop as stewards when we let love and concern for each other work within us until the petty differences of opinion and clashes of personality are swallowed up in the nobler and higher purpose of building the kingdom. Still there is need for us to "come up higher" and walk more closely with Christ by having the forgiving spirit. Sometimes we are hurt by unkind things that happen, by lack of understanding, by a feeling that our work might be unacceptable in one way or another, and yet the vision of the gospel as given to us is of such great importance we cannot allow these hurts to discourage or stand in the way of our progress upward.

Christ gave us the example as he forgave his enemies even while hanging on the cross. His last thoughts were of others as he prayed, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do" (Luke 23: 35). Those who tortured him and took his life were not repentant and still he forgave them. "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."—Colossians 3: 13. He has set the example and has asked us to follow.

In the booklet, Ministry to the Erring, Bishop Wayne Updike writes, "The seed of bitterness growing in a human soul if unremoved will bring spiritual death."

Those who harbor and cultivate an unforgiving spirit within themselves find no encouragement for such in the law of God or the rules of the church. In harmony with the law of love, confession and repentance are the requirements necessary to entitle one to forgiveness; when they are shown, forgiveness should be granted without further requirement.

In Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2 we find the law to us:

Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds.

Honor Students' Roundup

Prepared by Delores Tandy

VALEDICTORIAN—PHI BETA KAPPA—graduated with distinction—most outstanding graduate—these are some of the honors that were accumulated by church young people this spring. Letters have been coming in with list after list of their achievements. No doubt there are others who have accomplished many outstanding things, but they cannot be mentioned here because we do not have the information.

IVAN VALLIER of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was graduated this spring summa cum laude from the University of Utah. He was presented the George Coray Memorial Award which is given each year to the outstanding scholar in the field of sociology, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, honorary scholastic fraternity. Ivan was granted a fellowship from the American Christian Palestine Committee, which entitles him to a year's work and study in Israel. He will attend the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

ANGELA HEIDE, Independence, Missouri, was graduated magna cum laude from Missouri Valley College at Marshall, Missouri, this spring. She received the senior achievement award for women, being selected by the student senate as outstanding in academic work, extracurricular activities, and character habits and traits. She also was chosen to receive the American Association of University Women courtesy membership award for Missouri Valley College. Angela is also a graduate of Graceland.

MARILYN CLAIRE SE-ROY of Independence, Missouri, was graduated cum laude and elected to Phi Beta Kappa at the State University of Iowa. She was one of two undergraduates elected from the School of Sociology to the national honorary sociological fraternity, Alpha Kappa Delta. Marilyn was an honor graduate and Crescent at Graceland, after being graduated as valedictorian of William Chrisman High School in Independence. She served this summer as a leader in the Oriole and Skylark camps at Lake Doniphan before entering training as an airline hostess. She plans to do graduate work in sociology later.

VERN ELEFSON of Butler, Missouri, was one of fifteen students at the University of Missouri to graduate with distinction in a class of 1,463. Vern has made an outstanding contribution in the field of agricultural research by discovering a new strain of bacteria

DONNA STEARNS from Seattle, Washington, received a $200 scholarship from the Sears-Roebuck foundation at the University of Washington for finishing work toward a teaching certificate in the field of home economics. During the past year Donna was elected president of the Omicron Nu chapter, an honorary fraternity for home economics majors. She received her Bachelor of Science degree this spring from the University of Washington after taking her first two years of college work at Graceland. Donna has been active in district youth work, serves as a camp counselor, and was a delegate to the 1952 General Conference.

BEVERLY WILSON, Independence, Missouri, was valedictorian at William Chrisman High School in a class of 325 students. She was coeditor of the school annual, a member of the National Honor Society, president of the Independence chapter of the National Quill and Scroll, a member of the National Art Honor Society, Spanish Club, Art Club, Future Teachers of America, and the As-You-Like-It Dramatic Society. At graduation she was given an award for the outstanding senior in the field of English, and also three first-place prizes in various essay contests. She is a member of the Cantarina Chorus at Stone Church and is active in Zion's League work at West College congregation, previously having served as president of the League. This fall she will begin her two years at Graceland in the field of liberal arts.

From Warrensburg, Missouri, EVELYN HACKER was graduated at the top of her class at College High. She has served as librarian for Warrensburg Branch and will enter Graceland this fall.

In Ridgeway, Illinois, GEORGIA FAYE ELLIS was valedictorian of her class with a 96.08 average. She entered the state music festival in the high soprano vocal division and received a top rating. She is secretary for the Zion's League in the Southeast Illinois District and will enter Graceland this fall.

Colorado University this fall.

RALPH GRAYBILL of Loveland, Colorado, was salutatorian this spring of his graduating class. Ralph was awarded a joint scholarship which includes tuition for four years to any Colorado state school and also a scholarship to the University of Denver. He plans to study chemical engineering at MARJORIE BRADLEY of San Jose, California, was graduated as valedictorian of her high school. She was awarded the Bank of America cup for outstanding work in science and mathematics. A life member and president of the California Scholarship Federation, she is also interested in music and plays in the San Jose Civic Orchestra. Marjorie is active in Zion's League and will begin her college work at Graceland this fall.

partment and Zion's League there.

WATHENA CAROL WHITE of Fontana, Kansas, was valedictorian at Parker Rural High School. She was also given an award for perfect attendance. She attends church at Osawatimie, Kansas, and works in the music department and Zion's League there.

Neosho, Missouri, is proud of GINGER BALCH, who was second in scholastic standing in her class. She was a member of the National Honor Society and has played a number of important roles in dramatic presentations at Neosho high school. During the state drama festival at Missouri University she was given one of six "best actress" awards, and one of two such honors at the Southwest Missouri State College speech tournament. Ginger is pianist for many church services and also contributes her time as a church school teacher.

CHARLES WILLIAMS, Ottumwa, Iowa, was graduated this spring as a member of the National Honor Society and placed on the three-year honor list at Ottumwa high school. He serves as church school superintendent and plans to enter Graceland this fall.

RONALD KIRLIN of Cheyenne, Wyoming, was awarded a scholarship to the University of Wyoming where he will study architectural engineering. He was a member of the National Honor Society and received special recognition in several subjects at graduation this spring. Ronald is a priesthood member, president of his local Zion's League, and church school director.

ANITA ELAINE HOKE of Anamosa, Iowa, was the salutatorian of Anamosa high school for 1953. She was a member of the National Honor Society, the National Thespian Society, and editor of both the school paper and annual. She is secretary and a teacher in her local church school.

An unusual achievement was made by MARY RUTH OHRN of Virginia, Illinois. She was named salutatorian of her class after missing more than a third of her senior year because of injuries received in an automobile accident. By making up the work she missed in school she was able to maintain an "A" average. She reigned as Home-coming Queen last year and as an attendant her other three years. She was also senior class treasurer, business manager of the school annual, member of the student council three years, and vice-president both her junior and senior years, parliamentarian and secretary of the Future Homemakers of America, active in dramatics, on the school paper staff, and winner of a typing award. Her church work has been equally active. She sings solos, belongs to the choir, plays the piano for services, and has been vice-president of the Zion's League. She has also managed to find time to make an outstanding record in 4-H activities.

BERYL FAY OLSON of Bagley, Minnesota, was named honor student of her class for being third highest in scholarship. She is an active church worker in the fields of church school, music, and publicity. Beryl will attend Graceland this fall.

At Lawrence, Kansas, the young lady occupying second place in scholastic standing is MILDRED ANDES. She was chosen from the Liberty Memorial High School as a candidate for the Watkins Scholarship to Kansas University and was also awarded a scholarship to Cottey College. Though her father serves on the faculty of Kansas University, she says Graceland is her choice this fall. Mildred plays the piano for church services and actively supports the young people's work.

Another Kansan, MARILEE JOHNSON of Leavenworth, ranked seventh in over-all scholastic standing at her high school, and first for scholarship in business. She won a first-place award in a two-state competition in business machine operation. Carrying her business training over into church work, she is branch and Zion's League secretary. She is also a substitute teacher in the church school. Marilee will begin her college work at Graceland this fall.

Fifteen-year-old GAIL TWILLIGEAR, Seattle, Washington, has been on the honor list of Franklin High School for two years, is a member of the school's selected choir, the "Nonette"—a group of nine girl singers, and the string ensemble. She teaches a kindergarten class at Ranier Branch, has served as president of the Zion's League, and was an honor camper at Kimtah for two years. Her accomplishments are many despite the fact she has been ill with rheumatic fever.

TED NAVEY of New Westminster, British Columbia, has achieved a noteworthy record upon graduation from junior high school. He was chosen to receive the coveted "Column" trophy as the outstanding boy in scholarship, athletics, and service. He has an "A" average in his studies, has participated in dramatic productions, and has been active in athletics (including football, basketball, track, and volleyball). His church activities include holding the office of secretary of the Zion's League and helping his father keep the church lawn in good condition.

Last Call to Rochester Conference!

A challenging group of personalities and a varied and interesting program awaits the college, professional, and business people who assemble on the University of Rochester campus over Labor Day week end, September 5, 6, and 7.

The keynote speaker of this year's conference is Ed Ford of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who will address the opening session, Saturday evening, on "What Is the Kingdom?" Speaker for the Sunday morning worship service will be Bishop Henry Livingston, while the closing address will be given by President F. Henry Edwards.

Also on the program as panel members, worship leaders, musicians, and in other roles are nearly fifty people including current students, graduates, servicemen, and business and professional leaders. Those from the East occupying key program positions include Keith Harder, Washington, D. C.; Don Ross, Sr., Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Perce Judd and LeRoy Squires of New York City; and Sanford Fisher, Boston, Massachusetts.

Canada will contribute, among others, "Ben" Hewitt, Toronto, Ontario; Dr. Darrell Campbell and Dr. Evan Shute of London, Ontario; and Glen Downing of Guelph, Ontario. From the Midwest will come such persons as Dr. Dwight DW Davis, Independence, Missouri; Harley Morris, Madison, Wisconsin; Pauline Frisby, Detroit, Michigan; Elaine Parkes, Petroskey, Michigan; Dr. L. O. Brockway, Ann Arbor, Michigan; and from farther west, Helen Norwood, Bozeman, Montana.

A high light of the conference will be the "Pilgrimage to Palmyra" on Sunday afternoon, when the group will visit the Grove and the Joseph Smith home and will worship together on Hill Cumorah.

It has been requested that reservations be submitted not later than August 24, but with a good attendance assured late reservations will be received until the conference opens, subject to the committee's ability to take care of them. Reservations or letters of intention should be submitted to Dr. L. O. Brockway or to the College Student Conference, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Program details will be mailed out to all attending as they are received.

Man's Creation and His Pre-carnate Life as Related to the Present

Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren.—Hebrews 2: 17.

He himself also is compassed with infirmity.—Hebrews 5: 2.

... But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant [slave], and was made in the likeness of men.—Philippians 2: 7.

The word "reputation" is from an original meaning, "to make empty"; a number of translations so render it. The Twentieth Century Bible puts it, "impoverished himself." While in the flesh Christ did not exercise his infinite power and knowledge but lived within the capacity of human flesh and functioned within the limitations imposed by the flesh as was common to all men. He became truly man.

As Christ entered upon his carnate life void of the knowledge he possessed prior to his coming, so it was with man. It is in and through the flesh that man's development is made in this world; he brings no knowledge with him. Memory of the past is obliterated, for all life activity is dependent upon the flesh. The attainment of character may carry over from the spirit world sufficiently to influence the life here, but there is no carry-over of guilt or of condemnation. The coming judgment deals only with "the works done in the flesh." Men come into this world "innocent."

The theory of some that a darkened skin or personal defects or deformities coming from birth are curses left upon certain races by some transgression in the spirit world is utterly at variance with Scripture and inconsistent with the character of God. When the disciples brought that issue to Jesus in asking, "Who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" he answered, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents" (John 9: 2).

Life in the flesh is given to man free from all previous taint or prejudice, like a new, clean book in which he is to write his own record. There are no old accounts in it to worry him. He is offered the greatest opportunity that even God can give, and with it is associated the divine pledge of abundant help to every man who strives for true progress, seeking the height which God has made possible.

New Definitions of Pride

I was fortunate in being able to attend the reunion at Racine, Missouri; while there I gained new understanding of the meaning of pride. When the Apostle in charge spoke of our pride and smugness standing between us and the Holy Spirit, at first I thought this could not apply to my life. Then I began to see how I had been proud of the fact that we had family worship and study in our home, when I should have been offering a prayer of thanksgiving for the opportunity to have such experiences. I had been proud that we filed our financial statement—but we had done it the easy way (from our income tax report) instead of basing it on the budget book recommended by the church. Scripture that I had smugly felt I understood before took on greater significance—the words were the same, but at reunion I discovered new application for them. I found that even sacrifices can be unwise. We, like probably many other parents, had always provided ways for our children to get to reunion; now we know that we, too, need to go and gain spiritual strength.

Although I have so often been wrong in my interpretations, God has guided and blessed me despite my blindness. We never missed a meeting while we were at reunion, and we gained so much that we feel every Latter Day Saint family should plan to attend also. We hope that all church families will make an effort to do so.

The Lost 75 Per Cent

I have read with great interest the series of articles by Roy Weldon, "The Book of Mormon Points the Way to Zion." I was appalled when I read his statement, "It is estimated that we are losing 75 per cent of our church young people." Surely something must be done or our Heavenly Father truly will choose another people to bring about Zion and fulfill his work.

Being isolated, I have felt useless as far as church work is concerned, but now I think I understand better just how much I can and should do, for I have four young people of my own. I also have neighbor children around me each day. My prayer is that I will do my part in teaching and telling as I should—that I will be a good example not only to my children but to each child that I meet. I want them to choose God and not be part of the lost 75 per cent.

I have heard young people who were reared in the church say that they had religion forced upon them when they were growing up and so they didn't go very much after they grew up. I think this attitude is definitely the fault of the parents. I want to be able to live my religion in such a way that my children will feel a need for the church in their lives as they grow up.

With other parents I want to rededicate myself to the work of the kingdom, fasting and praying for all young people—especially that 75 per cent.

This is Korea

I know many of you have been to Korea, but those of you who have not seen the "Land of the Morning Calm" have no doubt wondered many times what kind of country it is.

I do not claim to be an expert on Korea, but my job as Civil Affairs Officer gives me a good opportunity to see how the Korean people eat, live, and think. I have taken frequent trips to Seoul, the capital of South Korea, and met many Korean people on business matters. In accordance with the Oriental custom, they usually ask me to visit their homes.

The central part of Korea has been mutilated by the repeated crushing force of armies moving across its terrain in full, bitter battle. Cities that boasted of 36,000 population are now piles of rubble. Trees that once lined the main highways are now charred stumps, battered by tanks and shellfire. Prewar Korea's hillside irrigation systems and well-tended rice paddies now are broken ditches and useless fields. The once proud people have been thrown into poverty. Families have been broken and scattered by death and confusion. Many are forced to resort to desperate methods of obtaining food.

Now Korea is doggedly struggling to regain its balance. Nature itself is making a valiant effort to recover from the shock. The stumps along the highway have refused to die and are sprouting new branches and leaves. The shrubbery has begun to cover the gaping wounds left by trenches, foxholes, and shellfire.

There is still hope and determination left in the people of Korea. As my jeep rolls over the countryside, I can see the farmers—old men and women, boys and girls—working together to repair their hillside farms. I see very few young men. They are all in the army or working as laborers for the U. N. Forces. In the cities and towns, the people are cleaning up the rubble and making living quarters in the shattered buildings.

While attending a party given by a major in the South Korean Army to celebrate my assignment as Civil Affairs Officer, I was talking to a group of Korean officers and their wives and sweethearts. The wife of one of the officers asked me if I was a Christian. When I told her that I was she began talking to the others in Korean. After a few minutes, one of the officers turned to me and spoke for the others as they all stood smiling. He told me that most of them were Christians, and that they were happy that I, who was to be their adviser, was a Christian also. Even in this land of poverty and destruction, a land of Oriental religions, Christianity has taken hold and retained its place in the hearts of many people. My tour here in Korea has proved again to me that no matter how much the children of God are beaten, his love and wisdom give them the courage and faith they need to rise again.

Members Honored

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—Sunday, July 12, was "Old Timers' Day" in Bellview Branch. All members over sixty were honored at a special service. At the eleven o'clock hour, David Donaldson offered the invocation and Malachi Manning preached his first sermon. Brother Donaldson is 102 years old, and Brother Manning is seventy-seven. Tributes were paid to all the "Old Timers" who have kept the faith and brought the gospel down to us. An elder, a priest, a women's leader, a young mother, and several young people presented words of appreciation and thanks to the honored group. Elder James Cooper, who is also seventy-seven, gave the benediction. The entire service was tape recorded.—Reported by ALMA DUNGAN

Inspiring Children's Day Service

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA.—The branch has shown increased activity during the first six months of 1953. Apostle D. T. Williams and District President John T. Conway visited the branch in February, at which time C. A. Gunsolly and Ralph S. Turner were ordained elders, and Paul F. Dillon was ordained a priest. Richard I. Woodward had previously been ordained a deacon.

Danny J. Shirilla was baptized in March by Brother Turner.

Lillian and Paul Dillon became parents of another son on February 26, and he was blessed by his grandfather, Elder John R. Jenkins, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, in April.

Thomas H. Griffin received a B.S. degree at the University of Alabama in June, and has performed a number of solos at church functions.

Children's Day brought the branch several joyous experiences. Mrs. Virginia Marie Carson, whose two children had been baptized two years earlier, and three children, Peggy Hawkins, and Gordon and Celta Sullivan, were baptized. Mrs. Peggy Ann Sullivan was greatly impressed with the ceremony and she was baptized the following Sunday.

The Portsmouth congregation participated in Sanitarium Day.

Sister Ocean Shifflett, of Clayville, Virginia, who had not been privileged to attend church for many years, was a visitor in June, and on June 20 she had the pleasure of seeing her oldest son baptized.

The branch regretted the transfer of Brother and Sister Gunsolly on July 10. Brother Gunsolly is a Marine Warrant Officer, and Sister Gunsolly is a talented pianist and organist.

Brother and Sister Alfred Ford are directors of the children's work, and the Zion's League is under the direction of Brother Turner. The activities of the church school are very encouraging in spite of the fact that a number of those attending are transient. When a vacancy is caused by moving of service personnel, it is soon filled by others.—Reported by WILLIAM J. DAVIES

Priesthood Meetings Held

ODESSA, TEXAS.—Seventy Arthur Gibbs spent July 12-19 in the Odessa mission. His missionary endeavor and untiring efforts were appreciated by the group. The week was climaxed by a baptismal and confirmation service on July 19. The candidates were Morita Courtney and Sharon Grace Hobles of Odessa, Deloris Reeder of Livingston, and Homer D. Spiers of Midland.

Eunice, New Mexico, and Stanton and Andrews, Texas, joined the Odessa group for the services and a potluck dinner.

The priesthood of Odessa, Eunice, and Stanton have been holding monthly priesthood meetings for the past year.—Reported by VIRGINIA SPIERS

Zion's League Active

MIKADO, MICHIGAN.—Eight children were baptized by Pastor Marshall McGuire on June 14. Those baptized were Howard, Jr., Bonnie, and Connie Brown, Edward and Frederick Somers, William Harmon, Darrell McGuire, and George Wissmiller, Jr.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Angus McGuire, sold greeting cards, held bazaars and food sales, and sponsored a box social to raise money for delegate expenses to Camp Michivoix. Eleven of the young people were able to attend.

The women's department sponsored a chicken supper November 14. They also prepared a banquet on Friday evening, June 19, honoring the fathers. Eighty-four people attended. Miss Beth Johnston, of Onaway, acted as toastmistress. Speakers for the evening were Marvin McGuire, Clayton Harmon, and Elders Richard and Elmer Stewart. A short program and singing followed.

John Blackstock, district president, visited the branch and was the evening speaker on June 28.—Reported by MARJORY STEWART

Land O' Lakes Reunion

CHETEK, WISCONSIN.—The Land O' Lakes Reunion, which is sponsored by the Minnesota and Wisconsin Districts, was held June 28 to July 5. There were 298 registrants. The largest service was the prayer service on the last Sunday morning, at which eighty-two testimonies were given.

A large number gathered at Chetek Branch on the first Sunday morning to hear President W. Wallace Smith speak. The reunion opened on Sunday night, with a sermon by Apostle D. O. Chesworth.

Preaching assignments each evening were filled by President W. Wallace Smith, Apostle Chesworth, Seventy John T. Puckett, and Elders Delbert D. Smith and Cecil V. Robbins.

The general class for adults was taught by President Wallace Smith, with an average attendance of eighty-two.

The women's class was taught by Sister Rosamond Smith, using the pamphlet, "Women Accept the Challenge of the Restoration."

An average of forty-seven in the men's class heard Apostle Chesworth lead discussions of the specially prepared reunion pamphlet.

The Senior Zion's League was under the guidance of Brother Puckett, and Elder Delbert Smith and Merle Ferris were in charge of the Junior Zion's League.

Children's activities were directed by Bernice Staffeld. Teachers who assisted were Bea Bledsoe, Nora Hewitt, Donna Robbins, Vivian Shipley, Dorothy Atwood, Merle Samri, Evelyn Burke, Eva Moore, Clarice Lynch, Irene Braun, Alvira Stanford, Blanche Metcalfe, and Rosemary Fishburn. Robert Fishburn was pastor of the junior class, which was held each day in the Chetek church. Cecil Robbins was pastor for the primary class. He also supervised the afternoon recreation for the children and was in charge of the children's campfires, which were held three nights during the week.

Each evening a special missionary class was conducted by Brothers Puckett and Chesworth.

Five young people were baptized at a service on Saturday afternoon.

A patriotic service was held on the morning of July 4.

Other special activities included a talent program, Graceland College program, even-songs and movies, children's achievement program, and a women's program and tea.

Helen Ludeen was in charge of the music for the Sunday and evening services, assisted by Alice Chesworth, Elsie Bennett, and Rosemary Fishburn.

Fred Moore was camp director, assisted by Paul Staffeld. The camp night nurse was Marge Olftvedt, and Mildred Smith had charge of the kitchen activities.

Visitors included six families from Independence, others from Fort Madison, Iowa, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, and Red River District.

A spirit of unity prevailed throughout the entire week.—Reported by EVA MOORE

Vacation Church Schools

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—During this summer, 1,744 children attended vacation church schools in the sixteen congregations. There were 419 instructors, of whom fifty-three were student teachers—Orioles, Boy Scouts, and other school youth—who assisted.

There were six fewer pupils enrolled in the 1953 schools than in 1952, and seventeen fewer teachers. Eight schools showed an increase in enrollment, eight a decrease.

Walnut Park was the largest school, with 170 pupils. Stone Church had 167, and Eden Heights enrolled 160. The smallest school was East Independence, with sixty-three. Guggell Park had seventy-one, Slover Park, seventy-three, and Sugar Creek, seventy-five.

Eden Heights, with its 160 pupils, almost literally burst out the church walls. Some of the children worked out-of-doors without the benefit of shade, yet they did an outstanding piece of work in their group projects. Nearly one-third of the enrollment were nonmember children.

More than half of the schools concentrated on group projects rather than individual handwork, and most of them were enthusiastic over the results.—Reported by VERDA E. BRYANT

Kansas District Reunion

SALINA, KANSAS.—Those who attended the Kansas District Reunion at Camp Webster, near Salina, were awakened each morning at six fifteen by the ringing of a large melodious bell. Of course, there were a few exceptions, for some of those advanced in age and some of the younger generation of anglers were awake; the former preparing for the day's activities and the latter throwing their lines into the nearby stream and making several good catches which they proudly displayed to the delight of all.

Camp Webster is owned and operated by the Evangelical United Brethren Church. A retired minister and his wife, the Reverend and Mrs. E. C. Edgar, the caretakers, proved to be gracious hosts. The meals and dormitory space were furnished at a nominal rate. All the buildings on the grounds were connected by a cement walk. The chapel was located in one end of the large building which housed the dining room and kitchen. With four women in the kitchen and with the assistance of volunteer help, the meals were served quickly, without delay or confusion.

Under the leadership of Apostle D. Blair Jensen, assisted by the District President, Ronald E. Manuel and his counselors, C. S. Gose and J. C. Shannon, the Saints were led into spiritual green pastures and beside the still waters of saintly co-operation. The prayer services were attended by all, including the children and their teachers. Under the wise leadership of Brother Jensen, the Saints entered into the services by readily responding with their earnest, heartfelt prayers and testimonies. From the first service to the last, a high spiritual level was maintained. Never to my knowledge have Saints co-operated to a greater degree than those assembled at Camp Webster during the week of July 19-26. Before the time had arrived to open the last prayer service of the reunion, the Saints had quietly assembled and all were in their places, except a few visiting Saints who arrived late, and all were ready to enter into the service with their prayers and testimonies. This they did without hesitation, and after they had thus spoken to the Lord and praised him, he spoke to them through his servant, Apostle Jensen. At the eleven o'clock hour, Brother Jensen delivered the sermon, and as the congregation stood for the benediction, Sister Dunham sang the "Lord's Prayer," after which William Landers gave the benediction.

The preaching services were shared by Apostle Jensen, Elders Herbert Lynn, Ronald E. Manual, Carl Mesle, Myron F. La Pointe, and Evangelist Arthur E. Stoft. A core of consecrated teachers taught and directed the activities of the children. Brother Mesle was in charge of the young people, conducting classwork and the evensong campfire services. His sermon, together with his prayers and testimonies, contributed much to the reunion. Three "experience meetings" were held during the reunion, attended by those who were not able to enter into the afternoon recreational activities.

Perhaps the outstanding characteristic of the reunion was the whole-hearted co-operation on the part of everyone. There was a feeling of mutual comradeship which caused all to know that they were truly brothers and sisters in the gospel. The Saints experienced a rich fellowship and left for their homes more determined to serve their Lord than ever before.—Reported by ARTHUR E. STOFT

Seven Baptisms

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.—The adult group, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Phelps, have had good attendance at their monthly social meetings. The young adult group, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs.

Murray DeFrain, have had successful meetings with constructive messages by Brother R. P. Dillon, Roy Weldon, and Metta Anderson. Visiting speakers during recent months have been V. Butterworth, Herbert Ridge, W. C. Becker, S. E. Mifflin, Nelson O. Gard, H. J. Simons, Herbert Barto, Merton Loveland, Gene Loveland, Don Carlile, Jean Carlile, and E. M. Stevens.

A program was given on Children's Day, which climaxed a week of vacation church school. There was an enrollment of eighty pupils, with a group of about twenty teachers. There were seven baptisms on Children's Day. The confirmations were on the following Sunday. These two occasions were very beautiful. Children's Day was also the occasion of the blessing of nine children.—By CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE Reporter

Four Baptized

PLEASANT HILL, MISSOURI.—Four were baptized on Children's Day. They were Melba Rogers, wife of Brother Earl T. Rogers, and their daughter, Sharon Dee, Margaret Elizabeth Tucker, and Mary Caroline Carlile.

A vacation church school was held during the first two weeks in June. Attendance and interest were good, with almost half of the enrollment nonmembers. Sister Ocie Feskie was in charge, and all co-operated to make it a success. Achievement service was June 14.

Young men now in the service are Leonard Rogers, Marion Carlile, and James Clark. Donald Coon, son of Sister Bertie Coon of East Lynn, has received an appointment to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.—By CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE Reporter

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—At the Sacrament service on March 1, Gerald Lee, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Don Zion, was blessed by Elders E. W. Chandler and J. W. Petterssen. George Edward, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. George Wamsley, was blessed by Seventy Cecil Ettinger, and Elder Lyle Woodstock.

On March 8, at the close of a very successful three weeks of missionary endeavor, four persons were baptized by Brother Ettinger. They were Dr. Joseph Ligman, Mrs. Anna Goff, and Miss Raelene Yakes of First Chicago, and Donald Zion of Hammond, Indiana. This beautiful service was held at Brainerd church with Brother Ettinger as speaker. During the three weeks of missionary effort, cottage meetings were held nearly every night, and Brother Ettinger preached at First Chicago on Sundays. Considerable visiting was carried on during the afternoons, and the Northside Circle and Ssenippah Guild each benefited by talks.

A mother-daughter reception was held May 8 for West Suburban and First Chicago Branches. A large crowd attended the program. Refreshments were prepared by the First Chicago women. The color scheme of green, white, and pink was carried out in the program folders and table decorations, and pink carnations were given those present.

June 14 was a very significant day for the congregation. Sister Alice Skinner, children's department supervisor, presented fifty-five children in the annual Children's Day services.

At the eleven o'clock hour, three young men were ordained to the priesthood. Robert Brown and Paul Studtman were ordained priests, and Elmer Gelhorn was ordained a deacon. Those who officiated were Brothers E. W. Chandler, L. P. Hancock, H. T. McCraig, Sr., A. O. Skinner, B. A. Lennox, and J. D. Anderson.

Seven children were baptized at a special service at Brainerd church by Brother Chandler as a result of a pre-baptismal class which he taught. The children were Herman Jennings, Kermit Kracke, William Kracke, Sherrie Kline, Nancy Lindsay, Richard Ryan, and Milan Vydaereny. Elders officiating in the confirmation service were Brothers McCraig, Chandler, Goodrich, Petterssen, and Lennox.

A teacher training course is being conducted by the church school director, Louis Hancock, during the church school hour.

On July 12 Sharen Lee Beard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Beard, was blessed by Elders Petterssen and Lennox.

Ten of the Zion's Leaguers with about four visitors from First Chicago Branch attended youth camp recently at Camp Seager, Naperville, Illinois. Officers for the year are president, Harold Schulz, vice-president, Richard Van Alstine, secretary, Delores Jones, and treasurer, Beverly Whitman. Bob Pawley is in charge of a worship committee consisting of Dan Jones, Wayne Chandler, and Delores Jones. Paul Studtman is in charge of service, Carl Schultz, recreation, Harold Schultz, study, and Paul Goodrich, supervision.

Annual election of officers was held July 26, with Brother Chandler presiding. Those elected were Elbert W. Chandler, branch president; H. T. McCraig, Sr., and Louis P. Hancock, counselors; Louis P. Hancock, religious education; Alice Skinner, children's division; Athena Striblen, women's leader; Robert Brown, business administrator; Helene Hancock, music director; Earl Lehmann, young people's supervisor; Ruth Skinner, secretary; Herbert Jones and John Petterssen, auditors; Hulda Edstrom, branch solicitor; Jack Edstrom, Herald correspondent; Paul Goodrich, adult supervisor; and Bob Pawley, book steward. Officers for the Northside Circle and Ssenippi Guild were also elected.

The choir, under the direction of Helene Hancock and Miss Ruth Skinner, has contributed much to the beauty and dignity of the worship services.

The women of First Chicago turned over $1,700.00 this year toward the building fund.

Paul Studtman recently entered the armed forces.

Brief History of the Church in Marion, Illinois

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH in Marion, located at 101 West DeYoung Street was established in 1918. The first meetings ever held in Williamson County by the church were in 1903 in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jake Simmons, who lived near the present site of the Stiritz mine close to Johnston City. Meetings were also held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Choate, who lived in the same vicinity.

The first meetings in the city were held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Webb. By 1921 sufficient members had been baptized to organize a branch, at which time the congregation purchased a church building on East College Street. The church was dedicated and formally organized in February, 1921, by Elder F. C. Kelly, whose brother, Frank, served as the first pastor. There were between fifty and sixty charter members.

After about two years, Elder Frank Kelly moved to Jeff, Illinois, and a new pastor, E. W. Davis, of West Frankfort, was elected and served until November, 1925. At that time O. P. Allen, the present pastor, was elected, and with the exception of a few years, he has served until the present time. Other pastors have been Lindolph Casey, E. W. McKinney, Lawrence Koen, and R. L. Delaney.

The present pastor, O. P. Allen, was converted in 1925 while attending services conducted by J. W. Paxton of Independence, Missouri. He was born and educated in Crab Orchard and graduated in 1924 from Southern Illinois Normal University.

He was ordained twenty-seven years ago and has been pastor of the Marion church for twenty years. He also served as president of the Southeastern District in 1942, and at the present time is an assistant to the district president of the twenty counties in Southern Illinois.

The church in Marion had grown in membership to over 100 in 1925, and the congregation voted to move to a better location and improve the church building. The building was moved to the corner of North Market and East DeYoung Streets, and a basement was provided for recreational and class purposes. New doors and windows and new floors were put in, a gas furnace was installed, and other improvements were made. Recently the entire church was redecorated inside and outside. A baptismal font was installed, a new sixty-inch attic fan was put in, new pulpit furniture was made by Brother Freeman Schroll, a new carpet was placed on the rostrum, and a new Hammond organ was purchased for the church.

The present membership is 215.

ordained an elder on May 19, 1909, a seventy on April 16, 1915; and a high priest on July 26, 1942. He was sent on a mission to Tahiti in 1909, returned in 1914, did missionary work in Michigan for two years, went to New Zealand in 1916, staying until 1922 when he returned to the States and was assigned to California. For two one-year periods he returned to Papeete. In 1932, as a result of the depression, he was released from General Church appointment, but he continued to do volunteer work for the church in the years that followed. He was married on July 10, 1910, to Pell Smith who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves two sons: Victor W. and Oran James; two brothers; three sisters; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Berkeley, High Priest Thomas R. Beil and Seventy Glen Johnson officiating.

SELF.—Carl Thaddeus, son of Walter and Minerva Tucker Self, was born December 9, 1873, near Bennet, Nebraska, and died June 10, 1953, at Immanuel Hospital in Omaha, Nebraska. He attended Commercial College in Omaha and, before studying law at the University of Omaha, worked for the railroad. He was admitted to the bar in 1912 and continued to practice law until his death. He was married on October 4, 1903, to Irene Fremming; they had three children: Fremming Robert, Mrs. Murile Withee, and Mrs. Anne Hartwig. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 17, 1891; was ordained a deacon on January 29, 1905, a priest on February 28, 1915, an elder on February 13, 1916, and a high priest on February 9, 1927. During the years of his ministry he served at various times as pastor of Omaha Branch, president of the Northeastern Nebraska District, historian, recorder, and bishop's agent. He was very faithful in discharging his church duties and never failed to respond to calls for administration or counsel.

WHITSITT.—Robert E., was born May 2, 1881, at Promise City, Iowa, and died July 12, 1953, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was married on March 8, 1905, to Grace Merchant at Woodward, Oklahoma, and on October 8, 1920, moved to Independence. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 4, 1904.

He is survived by his wife, Grace, and one daughter, Lula Mae of the home; two sisters: Mrs. L. I. Girton of Kansas City, Kansas, and Mrs. E. C. Richards of Noxon, Montana; two brothers: Willis of Elantoro, California, and Chandaus of Enid, Oklahoma. The funeral was held at Enoch Hill Reorganized Church in Independence, Elder Joseph Martin officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ODER.—Wayne Joseph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walter Oder, was born October 23, 1909, in Cainsville, Missouri, and died July 22, 1953, at a hospital in Hugoton, Kansas. He was married on November 4, 1930, to Margaret Hamilton; six children were born to them. Three preceded him in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 7, 1953.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Bobby, with the Army in San Francisco, California; two daughters: Mrs. Esther Schroeder of Garden City, Kansas, and Mrs. Mary Kirk of Tallequah, Oklahoma; his father; three brothers: Clayton of Council Bluffs, Iowa; George and Talmot of Cainsville, Missouri; three sisters: Mrs. Ward Putman of Princeton, Missouri; Mrs. Albert Wagner of New Plymouth, Idaho; and Mrs. Bert Glines of Kansas City, Missouri; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Wilburton, Elder C. E. Owen officiating. Burial was in Hugoton cemetery.

HARRIS.—Walter Charles, son of Walter and Beatrice Taylor Harris of Richmond Hill, Long Island, New York, was born March 2, 1929, in Brooklyn, New York, and died instantly on June 23, 1953, when the loaded trailer truck he was driving on the New Jersey Turnpike swerved into a bridge abutment near Linden, where it was wrecked and burned. He was married on June 23, 1951, to Ann Sheehan, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 14, 1942.

Besides his wife, he leaves his father, mother, and grandmother, Bertha Taylor. The funeral service was conducted by Evangelist LeRoy Squire in Richmond Hill. Interment was in Cypress Hills Cemetery, Brooklyn.

VAN VALKENBURG.—Anna Adella Reed, was born February 12, 1870, near Princeton, Iowa, and died June 16, 1953, at her home in California. She was married on November 15, 1888, to John Logan Van Valkenburg, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 20, 1910.

Besides her husband she leaves three daughters: Mrs. J. C. Stuart of Stockton, California; Mrs. Fred L. Marlow of Cashion, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Hugh H. Foreman of Whittier, California; three sons: Ora Flynn, John Logan, and Ralph Leon, all of Los Angeles, California; twenty grandchildren; and twenty-seven great-grandchildren. One daughter, Mrs. V. Earl Downing, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Utter-McKinley Chapel in East Los Angeles, Elder Virgil Lum officiating. Interment was in Rose Hills Memorial Park, Whittier.

BABCOCK.—Rosa J., was born January 24, 1873, in Blackhawk County, Iowa, and died in Goshen County Memorial Hospital after seven weeks of illness (date of death not given). On March 26, 1890, she was married to Frank Babcock who preceded her in death on September 4, 1941.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Ada McElhane of Casper, Wyoming, and Mrs. Frances Doby of Torrington; and three sons: Lee of Scottsbluff, Nebraska; James and John of Torrington. Funeral services were held at Colyer Chapel. Burial was in Valley View Cemetery, Torrington.

BROWN.—Joseph David, son of William J. and Edene Brown, was born April 18, 1941, at Decatur, Nebraska, and died July 29, 1953, of injuries received in a tractor accident near Elliott, Iowa, where he had lived since he was six years old. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 15, 1952.

He is survived by his parents; six brothers: William of Elliott; Howard, Dennis, Donald, Richard, and Charles of the home; four sisters: Georgia Rensch of Rippey; Rosemary, Laurel, and Rhonda of the home. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Asa E. Smith and the Reverend A. Breeling at the Methodist Church in Elliott. Interment was in the Elliott cemetery.

GREEN.—John Harris, son of William and Catherine Turner Green, was born January 24, 1858, and died June 29, 1953, near Mansfield, Tennessee. As a young man he was married to Doretta Ross; after her death he married Zula Arnold, who also predeceased him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for many years.

Surviving are five children: Hettie Henderson, Maude Bishop, and Charles Green of Paris, Tennessee; Arthur Green of Mansfield, and Lena Green of Elkhorn, Tennessee. Funeral services were conducted by Elder C. L. Ross in Paris. Interment was in Point Pleasant Cemetery.

The Lost Faith

by Enna Nielsen James

This new book brings fascinating and convincing proof that the American Indians had a well-developed concept of Christianity that had degenerated by the time the white man came to America. The author bases her thesis on the legends and stories in Longfellow's The Song of Hiawatha. Mrs. James, a member of our church, lives in Omaha, Nebraska. Her book is a real contribution to present-day literary and theological fields. Published by Pageant Press.

COUNTRY

Tiring of a hot town apartment, high rents, noise and dust, we have bought a little place at the edge of the city. The woods are just across the road and there is a tiny lake near by. The water for our little group of homes comes from a cold spring in a ravine, and it is sweet and good. Our lawn is wide, and a breeze from anywhere at all is sure to find its way through some of our windows. Our neighbors are kind, pleasant people. There is something good and restful about being country folk.

For the first time in our lives we needed an R.F.D. box. When we found what we wanted, the salesman said, very pleasantly, "I hope you get lots of nice mail." We hope so, too.

Wasn't that a lovely wish for the man to make?

STRUGGLE

If baptism alone saved mankind to Christ, the ministry of the priesthood would be simple. It seems to be the order of things that, having enlisted in the cause of Christ, the forces of evil strive the harder to win one away from the principles of salvation. Dwight DW Davis

REFLECTIONS OF A COW

Well, here comes another stranger. He probably thinks I ought to stop grazing just to look at him. People are vain about being human and appreciate attention. I'll put out my nose and sniff at this one. Maybe he wants to scratch my back and expects me to be grateful. Just wait till he gets around to the other end, and I'll wrap my tail around his neck. At least he could shoo those flies away for a little while. Whoof! My goodness—they really are biting today. Come, come, sir—why don't you eat grass or move on—the pasture's big and there's plenty for all of us, if we have sense enough to eat. Nice to have met you. Excuse me while I take in this tuft of clover. It's my favorite salad. I'll send you a pound of butter Tuesday. I've noticed people always want something.

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Philip W. Moore

THIS VIGOROUS YOUNG SEVENTY is a typical product of a Reorganized Latter Day Saint home. He cannot remember a time when this wasn't his church as well as the church. His parents and grandparents talked the gospel and lived it. He came up through the church school and Zion's League environment. While serving his groups and attending camps, conferences, and institutes he says that convictions of the divinity of the church came to him in many spiritual experiences.

While still a student in high school he recalls that he took a particular course of study because he felt that this would help him when the time should come to serve in the General Church ministry. During Religious Emphasis Week at Graceland he reached a decision on what his life's work should be, though he made no statement of it at the time. In a few days he received his patriarchal blessing from William Patterson and was told, "The choice you have made is in accordance with the will of God."

In 1941 he was ordained a priest by his father, Priest Ross Moore, and says that he received a strong testimony of the divinity of the call. The next year he was sent out on a two-year mission to the southern states. In 1944 he was ordained an elder and sent to the northwest area where he spent eight years. He was ordained a Seventy in 1946. His appointment was changed at the last General Conference to Central Missouri Stake.

In April, 1945, he was married to Lois Ruth Lambert. They have three children: Bob, 7; Patty, 5; and Bruce, 1. Their home is in Warrensburg, Missouri. Brother Moore says that his hobbies are photography, reading, and modeling railroad cars to scale. His special interests are dramatics and music.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT HOME FROM HOSPITAL

President Israel A. Smith is convalescing at his home, and on August 19 he was reported to be making a satisfactory recovery.

CROWDS AT KIRTLAND REUNION

Apostle D. T. Williams reported a large attendance at the Kirtland Reunion August 1-9. On the first Sunday the temple was completely filled, with extra chairs set up, and about 540 persons in attendance. Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp preached on the last Sunday morning to 537 in the main auditorium, and an overflow crowd of seventy-six listened over the public address system upstairs. There was a fine spirit present in all the prayer services, with emphasis on the matter of testimony. Classwork done by the staff was of high quality.

ATTENDS FIVE REUNIONS

Apostle Roscoe E. Davey is back in Independence after attendance at five reunions—Des Moines, Center Stake, Kansas City Stake, Rock Island, and Woodbine.

MESLE ATTENDS YOUTH CAMPS

Carl Mesle, General Church Director of Youth Activities, has attended Canter's Cave youth camp in southern Ohio, held August 16-23. He will attend Camp Allegany in southern New York, August 24-30, and plans to be at the College Student's Conference, at Rochester, New York, over the Labor Day week end. September 12-13 he will attend the Young Adult Conference at Allegany State Park, returning to Independence on September 15.

ASSISTS AT REUNION

Merle Guthrie assisted with the reunion at Rivervale Park in Mitchell, Indiana, August 16-23.

CAMPUS SPEAKER

Dan Belcher, pastor of the new Englewood mission, spoke at the Campus preaching service in the Center Stake of Zion on August 16. After the service, the stake young people enjoyed a series of slides concerned with Center Stake youth activities during the year. Mt. Washington Zion's League was in charge of the youth service. Bob Akers wrote the script that accompanied the slides.

PLAY WELL ATTENDED

A number of out-of-town visitors attended the play, "Other Sheep I Have," presented in the Auditorium August 13 and 14. It was estimated that more than six thousand were present at the two performances.

AT YOUTH CAMP

Edna Easter is assisting at Liahona youth camp, which is being held at Brewton, Alabama.

SKYLARK CAMP HELD

Skylark camp is being held in Independence on August 24, 26, and 28, with Muriel Sandidge, Gracia Holman, Cora Resch, and Sadi Nagel in charge. Morning activities will be a flag ceremony, worship, and classes in crafts and creative drama, followed by stories, films, and songs after the lunch hour. The theme for the camp is "The Skylark Promise."

The Great Invitation

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matthew 11: 28.

IN VOICING his great invitation, Jesus appeared in his most appealing attitude. It was necessary at times to rebuke the Pharisees and hypocrites, to scourge the money-changers from the temple. Those were unpleasant tasks. The very spirit of his ministry was expressed in the invitation, "Come unto me . . ."

Who may come?

The gospel message is as broad as humanity. "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." And again, "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. . . . And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

Yet in this particular appeal, Jesus addressed himself first of all to those in greatest need: to the weary and heavy laden, to those bowed down under heavy burdens—burdens perhaps that cannot be seen—and cannot be laid down at the setting of the sun.

How may we come unto him?

There is a broad and too liberal doctrine that all one needs to do is to say, "I accept Jesus. His blood cleanses me from all sin." Jesus himself said, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

To Nicodemus, who was ready to profess belief in Christ, he said, "Ye must be born again. . . . Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

On the day of Pentecost, when the apostles were endowed with power from on high, it was made abundantly clear what was meant by being "born of the water and of the Spirit." Peter declared the word of the Lord: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." After this initial baptismal covenant with Christ, we may continue to come to him in prayer and worship, in private and in public in the fellowship of the church. He has assured us that where even two or three are met together in his name, and are agreed, he will be there to bless. In an especial manner we may come to him in the Communion service in which we pledge ourselves anew to remember him and keep his commandments that we may have his Spirit to be with us.

How give us rest?

In these days of world turmoil, of stress and strain and fear, many are weary in body and mind—laborers in the many industries, men and women in business and the professions.

When I was a boy on the farm, I knew every form of hard farm work when there were few labor-saving machines. The hardest work I ever did was to follow the harrow all day long over soft plowed ground. Then when all the evening farm chores were finished—the last cow milked, the last horse bedded down, the last pig fed—I fell simultaneously into bed and sleep. I had never heard of pajamas or of inner spring mattresses, but sleep was deep and restful.

That is nature's way and God's way of giving rest to weary bodies. "He sendeth his beloved sleep." Later in life, when my days were given over to mental toil in the editorial work of the Saints' Herald and Autumn Leaves, to the multitudinous problems coming my way as a member of the Presidency, and my side line of writing books, I found a kind of weariness that would not let me sleep. That was especially so when I foolishly forgot that God was more interested in the welfare of his church than I could be.

When to the burdens of mental toil there is added fear, anxiety, worry, sometimes remorse, rest comes not to weary bodies and minds. Jesus gives us rest by bringing peace of mind—if we will trust him. His parting admonition to his followers, passed on down to us, was "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." And he added, "I will not leave you comfortless." Having done our best, if we will surrender ourselves to him, he will bring peace of mind and serenity. He will give us rest.

He gives us rest by bringing to us a new, over-all vision of life. His gospel puts new meaning into life. Tasks once considered drudgery become pleasant when we feel that we do them for God and humanity, and that we, too, have a stewardship under the principle that "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them."

"His yoke is easy and his burden is light"

After promising rest, Jesus goes on to say, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

My grandfather Hartshorn made himself a neckyoke to fit over his own shoulders comfortably. From its two arms swung small ropes. He used this implement in the sugar camps of Canada. He could hook on two heavy buckets of maple sap and carry them easily to the boiling vats. He brought the yoke down into Iowa, and in my youth I used it myself in various ways. His yoke was easy, and it made my burden light.

Jesus never promised us that we should have no burdens, no problems. He does promise us help to carry our legitimate burdens and to solve our problems and to give peace and rest to our souls.

Institute on the Teaching Mission of the Church

The Institute on the Teaching Mission of the Church announced at the recent General Conference and projected for September 27 to October 2, 1953, has been postponed because of the pressure of other activities. In its place a workshop on the same topic will be held at the Auditorium, November 20 to 22, and attendance will be by invitation. It is expected that the workshop of November 20-22 will be preparatory to a general church institute in this important field sometime in the interconference period of 1954-1956, and announcements concerning this will be made after the program has been determined in light of the November gathering.

European Broadcast Canceled

The Armed Forces Network in Europe has aired our fifteen-minute devotional program weekly during the past year. Also presented on the European network was the one-and-one-half-hour recording of The Messiah. In a letter from the Deputy Chaplain, USAREUR, James B. Murphy, Chaplain (Colonel) U.S.A., an explanation was given for the cancellation of the program. Chaplain Murphy explains that the temporary discontinuance of the program is necessary until approval to air the devotional programs has been obtained from the Chaplain Board in Washington, D. C. The requisite approval has been requested in order that the European division of the chaplaincy may resume broadcasting as soon as possible the daily religious programs for the troops in Europe.

The chaplaincy in Europe expressed appreciation for our generous co-operation over the past months in providing religious programs for the inspiration and guidance of the troops in Germany. This appreciation was voiced with the firm hope that the chaplaincy will be able to avail itself again with this service in the near future.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

We have had a number of reports of an excellent reunion at Enfield, England, and are happy to share the following from Brother Oakman:

We have just now finished our reunion in Enfield and the general consensus is that it was the best ever. The attendance exceeded any previous records, and the people came in good heart, expectantly. One of the factors determining the increased attendance was the excellent pastoral and personal ministry given by Brother Lents over the past six months. He has entered into almost every home for personal ministry, and the result is that he is held in the highest esteem and has persuaded many to attend. Another factor is the increased tempo of missionary outreach manifested since the visit last year of President Smith and Bishop Livingston. This has created a spirit of conviction and some have sacrificed a great deal to be present. The meetings were all blest by an abundance of the Good Spirit and the gifts were manifested in orderly and wise fashion. Our entire European appointee staff was present and each man made a unique contribution. These men are staying one week in Enfield for a special institute, and with them are meeting the pastors and high priests of the mission.

You have heard that Perce Judd is in London, so we prevailed upon him to talk last evening to the reunion and he was outstanding, bringing an enlarged understanding to our people by reason of his United Nations' experience.

The will of the people to right doing is the finest I have ever seen in any group of like size. A social solidarity—purposeful and devoted—was evidenced through this reunion—being strengthened and enlightened with each meeting.

Next Sunday night our family leaves for Berlin. We shall return to England August 21 and sail August 28.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth reports that the Brush Creek Reunion for 1953 was a very outstanding experience, with an average attendance at the evening preaching services of 450 and 700 on week ends. There was no emphasis on offerings but $1,250.00 was raised. There were 13 baptisms. Elder D. L. Kyser has been doing good missionary work in the area, and Southeast Illinois District now reports 55 baptisms so far in 1953.

SEPTEMBER THEME: The Triumphant Kingdom

Heirs of the Kingdom

By Sanford Downs

A sermon given February 22, 1953, at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption; whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.—Romans 8: 14-19.

WE LEARN from our observation of earthly estates that one may be created by John Jones, may be possessed by him, may be enjoyed by him, but it cannot be inherited by him. Only his heirs, those who are bound to him by relationship or by love, may inherit the estate that has been created by John Jones. The same thing is true in the kingdom of God. God himself created the kingdom. We cannot create it; we cannot become co-creators in the case of the the kingdom, neither can we purchase it, for the kingdom of which we speak is a spiritual kingdom. The values of the earthly things with which we deal are in no wise adequate to purchase an inheritance in this kingdom. We become heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ when we are born again. The same Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead enters into us and becomes the guiding light for our souls; then we become sons of God.

I should like to relate some experiences I have had with this matter of adoption. I have been associated with the juvenile courts. I know something about the great efforts expended in the attempt to place a child in a home with parents who will be a good influence, and also to get a child who has a background that would make it possible for him—particularly if he is older—to adapt to the conditions of the home and his foster parents. In the first place there must be foster parents who have a desire to adopt a child. They must have love they wish to give to him. They must wish to share the security of their home and must want someone to love enough that they are willing to make sacrifices for him. When the court has as applicants potential foster parents with a desire to take a child, they are immediately investigated to determine if the living conditions in their home are such that it would be advisable to put a child there. Their standing in the community and their financial status are checked to determine if they can give some degree of security and comfort to the child, and if they can properly educate and train him. Judgment isn't made by the standard of Christ, of course; it is made by the standards of our civilization today.

If all seems favorable the court places the child in the home for a probationary period to determine if the personality of the child and the personalities of the parents will go well together. Frequently it is necessary to take the child back under the care of the courts because of the contrast of backgrounds and personalities. The child may be unable to adapt himself to the conditions he finds in the home; this usually occurs in the case of older children because of the discipline demanded in the home, discipline which has not previously been demanded of him.

As heirs of the kingdom of God and as adopted sons and daughters of God we have to make the same type of adjustments. We cannot conform the kingdom to our own personalities, ambitions, and desires; instead we must conform to the laws of the kingdom. When we begin to do this we begin to become acceptable sons and daughters—adopted children, if you please—of God and therefore heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ.

WE DO HAVE a responsibility to the kingdom, although we can't build it—it has been built for us. In the early days of this church the Spirit of God spoke to the people of the church saying: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Not one of us would dare to feel that we have done very much to help in the growth and development of the kingdom. It is our responsibility, however, to assist the Father.

The term "heir" is too often taken to mean that the beneficiary need do nothing more than sit by until the day when his benefactor dies. The will is read and he receives an inheritance. The gospel of Christ doesn't indicate that the kingdom will be given to those who sit by and wait, but when we see, as did the Apostle Paul, that in order to be heirs we must become the sons of God, then that places upon us the responsibility of living in the household of faith with Christ. It gives us the responsibility to recognize the purposes of God and do our share toward making that home life enjoyable for all.

Let's think about becoming sons and daughters of God. I'm sure I am not yet acceptable as a son of God. I have had some experience in the household of faith, and find there the greatest joy, happiness, and security ever known in my life. I have found that the efforts I have put forth to make the family relationship enjoyable for others has brought great dividends to me, but at no time have I reached a state of perfection where I have felt there was not tremendous ground for improvement, and it is to a state of perfection that God has called us.

There have been periods in my life when I have known, as Paul said, "The Spirit of God has borne witness to our spirit, that we were the sons of God." At other times like a belligerent child, I have walked out of the household of faith and said, "Here are some pleasures and experiences outside of the household that I wish to enjoy today," so I have sacrificed the security and love found in the family of God in order to enjoy pleasures which were denied by the discipline of the home—like the prodigal son who left his father's home, took what he was entitled to, went out in the world on his own to live as he pleased, and came back as is invariably the case empty-handed.

There is unquestionably a tremendous need for building up and strengthening the kingdom of God. I would like for you to consider the statements of some other people regarding this need. Too many people think of the kingdom as something in the remote future, something far away. Many think of it as being "other-worldly"—only in the hereafter, not something that we can enjoy now.

HERE IS A REPORT from the World Council of Churches Conference held in England in 1950 entitled, "The Disorder of Society." It is a summary of their discovery as a result of their discussions throughout the conference:

The world today is experiencing a social crisis of unparalleled proportions. The deepest root of that disorder is the refusal of men to see and admit that their responsibility to God stands over and above their loyalty to any earthly community and their obedience to any worldly power. Our modern society in which religious tradition and family life have been weakened, which is for the most part secular in its outlook, underestimates both the depth of evil in human nature and the full height of freedom and dignity in the children of God.

I'm sure we have been guilty at some time or other of underestimating the full height and dignity of the children of God. The Christian church brings as a balm for the disorder of our society a faith in the lordship of Jesus Christ. In him God has established his kingdom, and the gates stand open for all who will enter. Their lives belong to God with a certainty that no disorder of society can destroy, and on them is laid the duty to seek God's kingdom in his righteousness.

In the light of that kingdom and in our contact with it, our minds are illumined and our senses are much more perceptive of sin. We are able to search out righteousness as a result of our association together.

LET US CONSIDER for a moment the necessity of church activity. We might use an illustration of an incident that supposedly took place many years before the airplane was invented. A number of scholars and unbelievers approached a minister and asked, "Do you think it's possible to get to heaven without belonging to a church?"

"I think it's possible, probably. Now I'd like for you to ask me another question, if you will. I'd like you to ask me if it's possible to get to England without going by ship."

They said, "All right. We'll ask the question. We'd like to know the answer."

He said, "Yes, it's possible. You may swim, if you have the strength and can tie some food on your shoulders and if a shark doesn't get you and you don't freeze to death. Eventually you'll reach England. But I doubt if you'll reach there ahead of the people who went by ship, and I doubt if you'll be any better off having missed the fellowship and good times that they had on the way over."

A lot of people think they can just be good and go to heaven. The Scripture says there are a lot of things we shouldn't do. We can refrain from doing those things and probably keep out of jail, but we can't assist in the work of our Father and be sons and daughters of his, because the Spirit of God immediately, upon our contact with mankind, begins to urge us to do something worth while, something constructive.

In his book Living Prayerfully, Kirby Page says:

Either we must live dangerously in the world today, making an unprecedented adventure toward Jesus, relying wholly on the guidance of his living Spirit as at the beginning, or the church will disintegrate and decay. Our selfish, individualistic commercialism, so ready to use men to make money for private gain and luxurious display instead of using money to make men, is nothing but organized atheism. It is not only un-Christian, it is inhuman. Surely we now know that no society has any secure future but that in which the people altogether learn to co-operate as part of a common life for the common good. The world will never believe in Christ until those who love him love one another well enough to live and toil together in the spirit of his life and in service for those for whom he died. If the church cannot realize the law of love in its fellowship it will be impotent if not insignificant in the days that lie ahead, and the faith of Jesus will fulfill itself in other ways or else be cast aside by a hurrying realistic world as a vision too fair ever to have been true in the past and too frail ever to be true in the future.

Everyone who is a member of the Reorganized Church—as a matter of fact, everyone who is a Christian at all—knows that there is nothing else strong enough to carry us through the trying days that lie ahead. Because of biblical prophecy, if for no other reason, we know we are heading rapidly toward destruction, and the only surety we have lies in the security of God and his Christ.

Here's an excerpt from the apostolic epistle to the General Conference in 1950:

In the conditions facing our poor benighted humanity we must see our opportunity for service, and moving under the impulsion of pity and concern we must call the world to such manifestations of repentance as will turn its face toward the gospel of the Son of God. This is the only hope for human redemption. As the church of Jesus Christ, it is our solemn duty to promulgate his plan of salvation as the means of answering our human problem in all this war-torn earth. This can only be done through the preaching of the gospel.

AS ADMONISHED in latter-day revelation, we should prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8 b.

All are called according to the gifts of God to them. In this household there are children who choose to do their share of work and bring blessing to their brothers and sisters. It seems to me that our hearts naturally turn toward the blessing of those with whom we associate. In this church and kingdom we are concerned with loving our fellow men. The Scripture says specifically, "Ye must love one another," not tolerate one another. There's a vast difference. I've become quite proficient at being tolerant with people, but I have a long way to go to learn to love everyone and be willing to make sacrifices for my brothers and sisters in this church who are in need, and all are in need in one way or another.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE of how all are being called according to the gifts of God to them is this: In the church service you are blessed not by one person but by the choir, the organist, the congregational singing, the feel of an elbow or shoulder against yours and that person singing the hymns of God with you. I have been blessed many times by all these things.

There are people here who have nurtured me from childhood and have guided me spiritually. At times they have seen me slipping away for a quick look at some worldly pleasure and have tapped me on the shoulder and said, "Come back, my son, you are getting on dangerous ground." Sometimes we hesitate to tap people on the shoulder and tell them to come back. Sometimes we are too hesitant in taking hold of their hands and guiding them to a place where they can use their talent in the church. All of this is a part of the responsibility of the household of faith. The gospel is the panacea for the ills of our earth. We who have under heaven been intrusted with its promulgation dwell in the shadow of condemnation if we neglect any opportunity to free and heal the world. The epidemic of sin seems to spread itself like an octopus of evil strangling the lives of men.

There is another quotation from the apostolic epistle to the church:

We invite the church, therefore, in the urgency of this hour to arise and shake off the blanket of lethargy which for so long has smothered many under its lethal folds. Christ and his church bids us arise to a newness of life to walk the earth with him and his Spirit of complete regeneration, carrying with us the powers of his resurrection to a dying humanity.

Ralph Waldo Emerson once failed miserably in an attempt to push a calf into a barn. Then a little Irish girl came along and thrust her fingers into the calf's mouth and led it into the barn. He wrote in his journal, "I like people who can do things." God likes people who can do things, too. If we look around at the families in our community, we'll find that the children who are the least loved and respected are the ones who seem never able to do anything right. Those who are tugging at the bit and wanting to do something constructive—those who want to apply themselves in maintaining the high standards of the family are the ones who are loved most by the family. In this household of faith in which we have membership—if we are going to be sons and daughters of God—we must be tugging at the reins attempting to do something worth while for the family. God loves people who can do things.

Resolutions of piety are worthy, but God demands that his followers translate ideals into action. As Christians we must do much more than lament after the Lord.

Carlile said, "Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly at a distance but to do what lies clearly at hand."

I presume that I'm a normal member of this church. As such I have often sat back and longed to see Zion in its complete stage where all the people are together and have all things common. I've said to myself, "Why can't we accomplish our Zion goals?" I'm inclined sometimes to blame the bishops and feel that they should give us a program that would immediately bring our dreams to fruition. That's trying to see what lies dimly in the future. We need to get down to the tasks that lie so clearly at hand. We need to see that each of us pays his tithing and supports the building of the church in the congregation to which he goes. We need to see that we contribute of our material means to the support of the church. On Thursday night we must go to choir practice instead of watching television. These are the tasks at hand.

I remember a few years ago I wasn't yet high enough in the income bracket to owe any income tax, and I thought it utterly impossible to pay 10 per cent of my increase as tithing. All of a sudden the government lowered the bracket to the point where I had to pay income tax, demanding not 10 per cent but 20 per cent, and not of my increase but of my income. Somehow I manage to pay it every year, but I still have a hard time paying 10 per cent of the increase to God.

THE BLESSINGS from God's household are material as well as spiritual. I ran across a Scripture a few weeks ago in a book of the Bible that is very seldom used—Haggai. In the first chapter he spoke to his people and said something that I think is very applicable today:

Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste? Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord.—Haggai 1: 2-8, Inspired Version.

Every one of us at some time or other has had the experience of putting our wages into these "bags with holes" and not one of us has failed at one time or another to say, "What in the world happened to the money that we've earned? It just gets away. It is gone." But I have had some experience with people who were living close enough to God to receive his blessing and undoubtedly were sons of God in that period of time, and they have said they've never had a want.

ID LIKE TO RELATE one such experience. A few years ago we of the Enoch Hill congregation set out to build a new church. We decided we weren't going to raise all the money first. As the money accumulated, we built. We said, "If you say you want to build a church, we believe you want to do it more than anything else. We believe that you'll support it." So we started. In that spirit of enthusiasm at a prayer service one Wednesday night one devoted brother stood and said, "In my family we have held a caucus and have resolved that we are going to contribute five hundred dollars to the building of the new church." I knew that his income was moderate and there were a lot of things needed in his household.

I thought, Brother, this is one time when your enthusiasm has caused you to overstate your ability. I was rather sorry he had said that, afraid that some members of the congregation would later criticize him for having pledged more than he was able to attain. A few months later when he had passed his goal by several hundred dollars I became concerned about his needs and, taking him aside, I said, "Look, Brother, as your pastor, I appreciate tremendously your efforts to help build this church. I appreciate the sacrifice and devotion that you have given to it, but I'm concerned about the needs of the members of your family. Are you sure you aren't robbing them?"

He said, after placing his arms around my shoulder, "Brother Downs, my family and I have decided that we're going to do this thing. We've never prospered more in all our lives than we have since we started—as you call it—making sacrifices for God. While we've been attempting to take care of him, he's been taking care of us. We have been blessed abundantly for every act we have committed in his behalf."

Before the building was completed that man tripled the amount he had pledged. He gave over fifteen hundred dollars, and he's still giving. He dared to accept the challenge of Christ. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not . . . pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." How many of us are willing to accept the challenge of Christ to become a joint heir with him in the kingdom of our God?

The Pre-existence of Man

MAN SHOULD BECOME acquainted with himself and attempt to ascertain the origin, history, and destiny of the race. The Restoration Movement has many surprisingly clear statements in its sacred Scriptures on this. Paul (I Corinthians 15: 44) states: "There is a natural [earthly] body, and there is a spiritual [heavenly] body." He says "man is the tabernacle of God." In the second letter to the Corinthian saints, Paul declared: "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." This evidently refers to a pre-existent spiritual body, eternal and immortal. These statements clearly point to man's pre-existent origin and constitution.

Jesus Christ tells us (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4), "I was in the beginning with the Father and am the First-born." Following this he tells us (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5), "Man was also in the beginning with God." We ask in what form did man pre-exist in heaven?

It has been stated that man only "existed in substance but not in individual form," and that a spiritual creation is "a mind creation, a thought-out plan." But there is a vast difference between a "mind creation" and an actual spiritual creation. Undoubtedly almighty God carried out a plan and all things were actually created in heaven in similitude of things to be on earth.

LET US EXAMINE the meaning of the Scripture, "I, God, created man in my own image." The dictionary defines "create" as "to cause to come into existence . . . to form out of nothing." God says, "In heaven created I them"; and again, "I, the Lord God, created all things, . . . spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth." If the "dust" man is all there is of the being whom God made "in his own image" (Genesis 1: 26, 27), human desires and aspirations can extend no further than the natural man. But this is not true. We know that all things of this world, including health, wealth, and power, fail to satisfy the earnest longings of the soul. Nothing short of fellowship with God will bring perfect peace and satisfy the demands of the "inner man." This points to immortality in man and a "house [spiritual body] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

The apostle aptly expressed this when he said the saints were "willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord" (II Corinthians 5: 8). In this fleshly tabernacle we groan, being burdened, longing to be back in the presence of the Lord in our pre-existent state.

Man was told by his Creator that he would not live by bread alone for the natural flesh and bone body. The very fact that God has provided eternal and imperishable food for man is excellent evidence that there is something eternal and imperishable in him which needs to be fed. God made the body and has provided suitable food for it. Also "in the beginning" he made the spirit, an individual entity, in his image and provided suitable food for it. Jesus at the Samaritan well referred to this food when he told his disciples, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." The Lord meant the Holy Spirit he was enjoying which fed the "inner man." It is fitting that the "Father of spirits," the "God of the spirits of all flesh," should furnish that which will, if properly received, bring us back into a state of purity, peace, and eternal bliss (Hebrews 12: 9 and Numbers 16: 22).

THE FIRST PROPHET of the Restoration Movement has left us divine light as to man's origin and pre-existence: "I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth; . . . had created all the children of men, and not yet a man [in the flesh] to till the ground" (Genesis 2: 5, 6).

Enoch, the builder of the first Zion, was privileged by the power of God to behold "the spirits that God had created" (Genesis 6: 38, Inspired Version). His natural eyes were permitted to pierce the veil and to behold the living spirits in the spirit world.

Adam, the first man in the flesh, was told by God, "I made the world, and men before they were in the flesh" (Genesis 6: 52). If this creation, as a spiritual entity or personality, is not true, then man is wholly mortal and belongs entirely to this material world, being a creature of time only and not of eternity.

It has been claimed that the spirit of man or "inner man" is merely the "breath of life," which God breathes into the nostrils of each man born; that this and this only is what returns to God at death; that this "breath of life" is common to man and all other animals; and that since there is no immortal spirit or soul in the beast, therefore there is none in man. Man, it is claimed by some, lives no longer than this "breath of life" is within him. They make no distinction between the meaning of "my Spirit is upon you" and the "spirits that God had created."

WE MUST RECOGNIZE that the word "spirit" is used in four senses in the Bible. First, it represents a being. Angels are "ministering spirits"; hence one is properly called a spirit. Demons or fallen spirits are called "unclean spirits." Jesus himself was a spirit before his earthly ministry.

Second, it is used to denote an influence proceeding from a being. Hence we read that the Comforter or Holy Spirit "proceedeth from the Father."

Third, the word "spirit" is used in some cases to represent a state of mind, as a "haughty spirit" or "proud in spirit." Again "let the mind be in you which is also in Christ Jesus."

Fourth, the same word is used to denote the atmosphere we breath and is then properly denominated the "breath of life." From Job 34: 14 we learn that man has both spirit and breath of life: "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath." The spirit of man is intellectual. It knows, thinks, wills, and acts—"there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding" (Job 32: 8).

THE OBJECTION has been raised that God becomes subject to the will and passions of human beings if each new baby born has a spirit sent from heaven. In such case God must stand by and await the pleasure and passion of man; and at a certain time determined by man, he must send a spirit into the baby body. A revelation given March, 1831, states the reason for marriage of man and woman. "Marriage is ordained of God unto man; . . . that the earth might . . . be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made" (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3). The import of this is that there were a certain number of spirits created in heaven; and since the great work of God is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, each pre-existent spirit must finally be clothed in flesh and bones. The statement "measure of man" we understand to mean a predetermined number of men consisting of individual spiritual personalities. Repeatedly the Scriptures state that man existed in heaven in a conscious state and in the image of God.

Procreation or the begetting of children is a necessary part of God's plan and within the agency of man. The Lord explained this to Adam, saying: "Ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so become of dust a living soul" (Genesis 6: 61, Inspired Version). Jesus Christ told his prophet Nephi on the night before his earthly advent, "On the morrow come I into the world" (III Nephi 1: 13). Also the same Lord spoke to his prophet Jeremiah: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jeremiah 1: 5). Before the day of Christ's birth when a spirit took up residence in an earthly tabernacle, he told Jeremiah of his pre-existence.

THE BOOK OF MORMON states that if Adam and Eve had remained in an innocent state they would have had no children and the "plan of salvation would have been frustrated" (II Nephi 1: 113 and Alma 19: 86).

The Book of Mormon records another amazing statement as to man's pre-existence as an actual spiritual personality: "Behold this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit, will I appear unto my people in the flesh" (Ether 1: 81). The Lord here refers to the "measure of man" which he had created in heaven after the image of his spiritual body.

The appearance of Jesus Christ to the brother of Jared about 2250 B.C. as a spirit helps us to understand in what form and manner we pre-existed. When the Lord "stretched forth his hand and touched the stones, one by one, with his finger," the veil was taken from "the eyes of the brother of Jared, and he saw the finger of the Lord; and it was as the finger of a man, like unto flesh and blood" (Ether 1: 69). After the Lord had reassured Jared's brother, "behold the Lord shewed himself unto him." The Lord then asked him this question: "Seest thou that ye are created [flesh] after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning [in heaven], after mine own image."

The prophet Alma (19: 40) inquired diligently of the Lord to know "what becometh of the souls of men" at death. The Lord in answer sent an angel to instruct Alma concerning life after death—between death and resurrection. He was told the living, conscious spirits, when they leave the body at death, "are taken home to that God who gave them life." Note that this Scripture says it was God who gave life to our spirits.

Be Not Deserters

By Edgar Pillsbury

A WISE AND VIRTUOUS KING once traveled about his empire. Coming across a huge tract of land blanketed with twisted, gnarled trees, tufts of grass, and thick clumps of bushes, he stopped and surveyed the scene. Instantly the view faded and was transformed. Now the king beheld a beautiful city which boasted silvery lakes, spacious broad highways, parks, rippling streams, and happy inhabitants who lived in peace and harmony.

So much was this dream city impressed upon the king's mind that he summoned many laborers to him and charged them to go to the place and toil. "Raze the trees, destroy all unpleasant debris, and level the ground," he ordered. "Having done this, build upon the site a city according to these blueprints which I have prepared. It will take time. It will require many workers to accomplish the task. Be diligent. Do not despair. The goal will be realized. That this might be, however, induce as many as possible to join you in this pursuit. When the city is completed, all who have remained faithful will be rewarded for their services and allowed to dwell within it. I have made elaborate plans that there should be no privation there, and happiness will abound for all." So saying, the king departed, promising to return—though he didn't stipulate when—and warning them: "Have the city prepared for my return."

Immediately the laborers set to work with a will. "It won't be long," they said, "before the city will be completed." But, as time wore on, they realized more fully the magnitude of the task. Though they worked long hours daily, their efforts to make the wilderness a thing of beauty were hardly noticeable. "Let us rest," some suggested. Others grew weary and discouraged. Many quit, saying, "Our labor is vain. The task is impossible. It can never be realized." Thus the work which had been begun with such enthusiasm almost stopped. Only a few—the wise ones—remained faithful. They continued to labor hard and although their accomplishments couldn't be measured very well by the day or week, still, after a time, one began to discern what they had wrought.

Months melted into years, and finally the city was completed. The king, without advance announcement, suddenly arrived. "I see the city is completed," he said and smiled, "Good! But—where are the laborers?"

"Only we few remain," came the sad reply. "The others have become discouraged and left."

The king then looked upon them with a sad countenance and said, "At this time I am indeed unhappy, because more people are not eligible to reap the benefits which I had in store for them. Would there were more."

Getting Work Done

By C. Crippen

God's work is done by men and women he has chosen, who are willing to labor for him and obey his laws. It calls for people filled with his spirit and consecrated to his cause. It requires those who wish to take the gospel to all people who are interested in their own salvation that they may have the joy and endless happiness promised by the Heavenly Father. Only those who desire to know Christ and receive of the great blessings he has for his faithful followers can be with him in celestial glory. Adam and Eve, while in the Garden of Eden, were happy there because God was with them.

Satan's work is done by men and women he has chosen who are willing to labor for him and obey his laws. He uses people who perhaps do only part-time work for him but who can bring him many a happy moment through even this partial service. Satan's work is to stir up dissension, criticism, discontent, and discouragement. He wants people to throw down their armor of salvation and quit their job in God's kingdom. His promises bring no blessings now, nor in the hereafter. Ever since he was cast down from heaven and became Satan he has been miserable and wants all mankind to be miserable. He could not bear to see Adam and Eve happy in the Garden of Eden, so he sent his messenger, the snake, to entice Eve to disobey God's command. For their disobedience to God's laws, they were cast out of the garden. There is a lesson in their experience for the people of every age.

Thoughts on Kingdom-building

By Bill Searles

"Everyone Work Till the Work Is Done."

THERE ARE MANY possible operating units in the kingdom-building program: branch, church school, family, and others. However, the smallest complete operating unit is the individual. Regardless of organization, reorganization, or change of organization, God must still work with and through individuals.

Too many for too long have not considered the Lord's work a part of personal responsibility, but as a responsibility belonging to the organization of which they are members. Consider Joseph Smith as God revealed to him the eternal purposes that were in him. He belonged to no organization. No one else met with him to begin the task. It fell to him alone to place his hand in God's and begin the work. It might be well if we were to consider ourselves in Joseph's place, knowing that the work rests upon us and there is no other man to help—no crutch of collective effort.

Collective effort is a wonderful thing. It is even more wonderful if each feels all depends on him and then finds to his delight that his effort can be co-ordinated into a greater over-all program.

Some have the idea that great works are accomplished in meetings. My father used to say, "Everyone work till the work is done." And on our farm there was plenty of work. Many evenings we sat in the living room while mother read to us or we enjoyed some other activity of the family circle. There were times that, as a typical boy, I was slipshod or tried to get out of doing a job, and on these occasions I never got full enjoyment out of the family gathering that evening simply because I had not earned fully my right to be there. Likewise, the Lord's work is not done in the meetings. We meet to receive his love, his assurance, and his instruction. Then in turn we are to express our joy in his service. When we meet we should have performed those services that assure our place in our Heavenly Father's family circle. The work is done before a successful meeting, and the meeting becomes the place of consolidation, co-ordination, and full enjoyment of full and faithful labor.

We ought to search ourselves particularly as we approach prayer services to determine what degree of joy and blessing we can expect to have from a loving Heavenly Parent who rewards those who have consecrated and prepared.

The Kingdom Goal: Perfection

In the early days of our industrial era, men designed and built machinery by "rule of thumb." They discovered that certain general principles applied to their endeavor. By cataloging these general principles in their minds and applying them as occasion arose, they designed the machine. Machines designed this way were very serviceable, but they were often rather crude at some points and very inefficient at others. This method had to give way to the more rigorous methods of mathematics, research, and experimental analysis in order to keep the industrial age on the march toward the gigantic servant of the people it is today.

Christianity has passed through a similar "rule of thumb" period where general principles were applied. They were inefficient and often cumbersome, but they brought the Lord's work among the people.

Many of us have continued on this level of Christian endeavor without seeing a vast potential accrued from refining our methods of missionary approach, of worship, and of personal relations. We must no longer indulge in generalities where the Lord's work is concerned. It can and must be as efficient as the finest business organization. This will occur as the spirit of humility and deep consecration permeates our efforts. God gave commandments. Some are very detailed and specific. "Rule of thumb" service must give way to the finer, purer, stronger, developed service. The only kind of efficiency we can finally be satisfied with is perfection.

Spiritual Stability

All physical things have some degree of dimensional stability. They expand or contract in a predictable manner with temperature change. They deform within limits under stress and return to original shape. Some materials will withstand more stress than others before they are permanently deformed.

Dimensional stability is a very desirable and real quality of a godly spirit. It is a property of the soul that will allow it to withstand much more heat of labor and stress of adversity without twisting or deforming into sin-wrought shape. Enthusiasm improperly channeled is one of the greatest disrupters of spiritual stability. The usual thing is this: we go to conference or reunion and because of the closeness and warmth of the Holy Spirit we have a flash flood of enthusiasm. We go back to our homes and branches to find the channel of our enthusiasm dry and parched. How much better it would be if we would build in our souls reservoirs that would allow us the onrushing flood and keep it in its channel, then slowly open the reservoir to maintain a sustained flow throughout the dry seasons. The Lord's work would reap sustained drive and continuity of effort.

Enlarging Our Testimony

We must accept kingdom-building as part of our personal responsibility. We must properly prepare and labor in order to meet in the Lord's house and partake of his fullness. We must discard the imperfect generalities that Christ criticized in the Pharisees in favor of the more perfect law of love. We must strive for the stability of spirit that will allow us to withstand the temptations of Satan

Praise for Tokyo Army Hospital

By Melva L. Crum

IT IS EVENING visiting hours in this huge institution known as Tokyo Army Hospital. Most of us in this section are off the critical list. There are happy chatter and laughter and cheerful voices. The library lady has made her visit, leaving with each of us our choice of reading material. The fruit juice and malted milk cart has just finished its rounds.

Suddenly we hear the intercom click and then the strained voice of the announcer: "Attention! Attention, litter detail, litter detail. Report to the receiving tent." There is no more laughter. All is still. The nurses stand silently listening as the voice continues: "All night nurse supervisors, night N.C.O., medical O.D., please report to receiving tent immediately!" The voice seems to become more urgent. "Litter detail, all Red Cross personnel, Turkish nurse, Ethiopian nurse, report to receiving tent!"

There is no more talking in the wards. Patients, staff, and visitors alike are listening. From the urgency of this appeal we know it is a shipment of wounded United Nations soldiers from Korea. Some of the boys we have entertained in our home in Tokyo have been weeks and even months in forward outposts and on the front lines. Would any of them be in this group? I become very apprehensive as I realize from the extent of the mobilization that this is a large shipment.

"Attention, all laboratory technicians! Report to your stations. Blood donors are needed. Repeat. Blood donors are needed. All types except O!"

even as did the Son of God. These things, diligently attended to, will enlarge the ever-growing testimony of God's people to the world that God not only wants people but has people who are obedient, righteous, and heirs with Christ in the kingdom.

I hear the shuffle of slippers feet as some soldier rises from his cot and passes my door on his way to the elevator. Then another and another as they rally to stand in line in front of the door to the blood bank. Some of them will be recognized by his doctor or nurse and sent back to his bed with orders to stay there. His own experience as recipient is far too recent for him to be allowed to stay as donor in spite of his desire to help. I remember guiltily the transfusions so recently given me and hope desperately there will be sufficient for this night's heavy demand.

HOURS ARE OVER NOW, and the visitors have all left. The intercom has been silent for some time, and as we lie in our beds we strain our ears to hear as if, by our very intensity, we could surmount the barriers of distance and walls to project ourselves into the area where so much drama is being enacted.

Across the hall I can see the girl in bed there as she lies with her eyes closed, her lips moving silently as she fingers the beads on her Rosary. This lump in my throat is so painful. . . . I tried to fight against tears but lost the battle. That last call was for the chaplain. . . .

The nurse that is left in our section tries to carry on with the routine of pulses and temperatures. Sedations will be given those who require them, and we will try to settle down to wait the night out in restless sleep.

Morning comes at last. At seven thirty I hear my doctor's footsteps approaching the door. This morning he walks heavily. He tries to put on a cheerful act for my benefit, but I'm not fooled for a minute. One quick glance at his face tells me his eyes have not known sleep for many hours. He finishes his examination and his questions. "Did you sleep well? Did you eat your breakfast?

How much of it, and why not more?" Finally I get my question out.

"Did you work all night, Captain Coleman?" He nods his head. I remembered at four thirty yesterday morning I had been awake and heard him giving instructions to the nurse about the patient they were just wheeling out of the operating room. I knew he had worked all day and all night. Also, I knew that he will spend today watching over his patients, being summoned to this station or that as his presence is needed. For this hospital is full of soldiers in all stages of convalescence, and many require careful observation. There are always emergencies. Perhaps before dinner tonight he can get an hour's sleep.

"Captain Coleman, Captain Coleman, please call station 364." That's the floor where some of the badly wounded are, so he is away again.

TODAY'S BUSIEST PEOPLE will be the foreign nurses stationed here. The Army tries to have a native nurse present as each United Nations soldier emerges from the anesthetic. Turkish nurse, Ethiopian nurse, Greek nurse, French nurse, Italian nurse—all will put in a hard day. Each wounded man receives the attention of the best doctors the Army can secure.

My admiration is unbounded for the way this hospital cares for the ill and mobilizes for emergencies. I'm so grateful that when my need was urgent, I was permitted to come here. I had the services of the chief surgeon, Colonel Matuska, and his fine assistant, Captain Coleman. The general's lady herself could have received no better care. I have been told that when wounded soldiers hear they are to be sent to Tokyo Army Hospital the lines of worry leave their faces, and if they are able to do so they smile. They know that everything humanly possible—and sometimes even the seemingly impossible—will be done for them. Could we ask for more?

Books

Training for Parenthood, by Gelolo McHugh, Ph.D., Family Life Publications, Inc., Durham, N. C., 1947, 227 pages, $3.00.

The author asks, "Will you use your first baby to practice on and then wonder why your second child is so much better adjusted to life?" The book has four general aims: to suggest means of securing the most favorable conditions for parenthood, to point out certain desirable qualifications for parenthood, to show how the parents' psychological attitude during pregnancy has an important bearing on the rearing of the child after birth, and, primarily, to help parents overcome difficulties in child care and training from birth through the first five years. He discusses accidental, incidental, and planned parenthood. After suggesting certain physical and economic qualifications for parenthood, he climaxes his chapter with "A child's basic needs are for love and interest from his parents; for stability and security in his home."

In a discussion of desirable personal qualifications for parenthood, he stresses the need for right attitudes toward the child, which will avoid the development of negativism in the child's behavior. He emphasizes the father's important responsibility as a parent. A good proportion of the personal happiness to be achieved in marriage comes from satisfying experiences and achievements in child rearing, attained by husband and wife working together.

"While half the battle is knowing what to do for the baby, the other half is knowing what to expect from him," writes Dr. McHugh. To help the parent realize what to expect, he discusses the usual achievements of the small baby, then follows with very practical chapters on eating habits, sleeping, toilet training, the prevention of thumb-sucking, sex learning, the use and understanding of speech, social and emotional learning, and preparing for the second child.

The chapter on speech is perhaps one of the most unique contributions to the book. A child needs help with learning to understand what is said to him, just as much as in learning to express himself. He warns of the danger of pushing a child into speech before he is ready to talk, and concludes that the quality of speech heard around him plays the most important part in a child's speech development.

In the chapter on social and emotional learning, Dr. McHugh declares, "Your value to your child's growth will be in your knowing how to help him meet life as it comes to him, not in isolating and protecting him from life. You need to love your child for himself, and consistently place his future usefulness above your own personal desires." He describes in a very practical way how to protect his sense of security as a separate person, how to avoid continued shyness and negativism, and how to teach a child to be generous, reasonably cautious, reasonably independent, and free from chronic fears. Dr. McHugh believes that sound emotional habits and attractive social ways are learned. The sooner you supply your child with proper opportunities to learn self-control and social stability, the longer he will retain those traits.

ALICE M. BURGESS

Making Your Marriage Succeed, by Theodore E. Adams, Harper and Brothers, New York, 156 pages, $2.00.

The theme of this book is simple and direct. The author says, "The conviction has grown that making a success of marriage depends largely on how closely a couple follows the truths and principles of the Christian faith. Marriage is a divine institution and it cannot be a success with God left out."

Commenting on this thesis the publisher has this to say, "Everyone wants to succeed in marriage, but not everyone is willing to count the cost. You can make your marriage succeed only if you take God into the Christian family you are establishing. This Christian basis of love and marriage is something that must be worked out."

In twelve readable and stimulating chapters the author develops this theme. He traces the story of growing and unfolding love from the early infatuations of adolescence to the "golden years" of married life.

Throughout, the author combines in a healthy, helpful philosophy the lessons of experience, the voice of scientific research, the word of God. Each has much to say for the various stages of growing and maturing love—much to say to those who would listen and learn.

He stresses the importance of giving love time to grow up and of practicing certain disciplines at each stage of that growth. Indeed it takes time to mount the ladder of love. This comes through making each stage meaningful in itself and yet contributing to the qualities essential to success and happiness on the levels of early friendships, impulsive infatuations, meaningful courtships; the testing days of engagement, the adjustments of early marriage, the joys and the problems that come when "a house has a home inside." There are the headaches and heartaches of marriage, the tragedies of broken hearts and homes, the lonely years. Running throughout the book is this gem of wisdom: "Marriages fail because people fail, and people fail because they live without God."

One of the most practical and helpful features is found in the large number of tests or checklists provided. There are tests of true love, tests of the romantic love of adolescence, tests of the maturing love of courtship days, and a sort of final examination for measuring love at the close of the engagement period.

In my opinion this little volume will be found to be worth its weight in gold for young people contemplating marriage, for those already married, for parents who so much want to help their young people make the right choice, for marriage counselors, and for all who have an affirmative faith in the institution of marriage as ordained of God.

The World and the West, Arnold J. Toynbee, Oxford University Press, 99 pages, $2.

Mr. Toynbee, the British historian, discusses religion in this, his latest book, as the possible solution to present international problems. This religion must have universal appeal, and Toynbee sees the event as a possibility. He relates the history of the impact of Western philosophy and technology on the East, and states that we are deluding ourselves about the treatment the East and the rest of the world have received at Western hands. It is necessary to study the background of the Eastern peoples in order to understand them. Communism has been Russia's most effective anti-Western tool, far more effective than any material weapon could ever be. Claims that it can get rid of the extreme inequality between a rich minority and a poverty-stricken majority in Asian countries has been one of Communism's strongest appeals to the masses of the Eastern world. Toynbee covers some of the influences of religions on the world and concludes with the idea that there is spiritual need in the world. The World and the West is considered by a Kansas City Star reviewer to be "a provocative book, full of challenging ideas, splendidly written, so brief it can be read in an evening and so serious in nature that one finds himself going back to it again and again in thought."

Question Time

Question:

Is there any proof that those who have occupied in the quorums of the church and been faithful, profitable servants here are continuing their work in that place to which they have gone—preaching and teaching the gospel of Christ?
Ohio Mrs. A. A.

Answer:

We are given to understand that priesthood exists eternally in Christ: "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (Heb. 5: 6). Scriptures further indicate that every faithful priest retains his priesthood in eternity. Priesthood is given for the sole purpose of serving and ministering to the needs of others. Hence it would be retained for no other reason.

Moses and Elias appeared to and talked with Christ on the mount of transfiguration. "I am thy fellow-servant" was the statement of the messenger who came to John on the Isle of Patmos as he beheld the heavenly vision.

John the Baptist was sent to restore the Aaronic priesthood in these latter days and later Peter, James, and John came to restore the Melchisedec priesthood (D. and C. 26: 2, 3). III Nephi 13: 12 ff., tells of the "three Nephites" who remained to minister to people on the earth. We conclude from the preceding Scriptures and others that might be mentioned that worthy men of the priesthood continue their work in the life beyond.

FRANK A. FRY

Question:

Since Satan has committed the unpardonable sin, why is it recorded in II Corinthians 11: 14, "Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light"? Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20 says that Michael detected him when he appeared as an angel of light, and II Nephi 6: 23 states that he "transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light." Please explain.

Iowa

L. O. L.

Answer:

Having committed the unpardonable sin Satan was cast out of heaven, not into his final abode but into the earth. He occupies in this world where the light of Christ shines for the benefit of the children of men, and where he is capable of appropriating some portion of that light to himself and reflecting it as his own, somewhat as the dead, nonluminous moon catches the light of the sun and reflects it as if it were its own.

The statement in Corinthians, as the context shows, refers not so much to Satan's person as to his works—his methods and institutions, his policies and principles. It is his inherent nature to imitate and counterfeit the things of God, and so far as possible clothe himself in the garments of light in order to deceive. He draws on the light of Christ to hide his own perversity and inspires his wolves to work in sheep's clothing. He appropriates principles of truth as a front to deceive the unwary of his plan to destroy; he proclaims liberty while undermining for tyranny and bondage; he inspires his agents to shout the loudest for "democracy" and to work for despotism. In religious lines he will mix a liberal proportion of divine truth with his perversions to induce undiscerning minds to accept them all; he habituates his institutions with wealth, art, fine architecture, jewels, gold, and nearly every form of beauty to give them prestige and make them attractive. Christ approached this point when he spoke of tombs—beautiful without—death within.

Satan works in many fields but freely uses beauty and grandeur in decorating his dark schemes; thus he makes himself appear as an angel of light.

Question:

Deuteronomy 23: 19, 20 says that if you lend something to your brother it should be without charge.

Then why does the General Church charge interest on the money it lends people for building or repairing church property which always belongs to the church?

Missouri

E. L. B.

Answer:

The intent and purpose back of an act often determines whether it is right or wrong.

Some years ago, one of our members who owned a quarry became financially embarrassed and borrowed from a loan shark at usury rates. When the loan was due he was unable to pay, so the loan was renewed and the interest rates increased. This continued until the loan shark took over the quarry. This was despicable.

Loans are usually made to help people and not to burden them or take advantage of them. Many times people are able to buy homes by borrowing at low interest rates. Such transactions are usually a blessing.

The question of the church's charging interest might be answered in several ways. We expect our Presiding Bishopric to follow sound business practices. They are by law expected to protect trust funds. In the handling of loans there are expenses involved—clerical help, office space, bookkeeping records, postage, stationery, and possible loss. If these were charged to the fund from which the loans were made and if there were no charge made to reimburse the fund then, over a long period of time, the fund would be dissipated and no longer available to help others.

While this is an exaggerated view it is correct in principle. Suppose we call this a service charge instead of rental of the use of the money.

It must be remembered that these funds held in trust by the Bishopric come from all the branches. Doctrine and Covenants 51: 3 gives specific instructions when one church (branch) borrows from another.

And let that which belongeth to this people not be taken and given to that of another church; wherefore if another church would receive money of this church, let them pay unto this church again, according as they shall agree.

Who, then, should complain if the borrower willingly, freely, and cheerfully agrees to reimburse the General Church for the expense of processing the loan?

Again it is doubtful if the 1 per cent or 3 per cent charged local churches for the processing of the loans would fully cover the expense if the time spent by General Church officers and missionaries who give consideration to such loans were added to their cost.

So Fresh from Heaven

By Mrs. Wayne N. Holmes

It was last October that my husband and I learned we were being granted the privilege of becoming parents—of bringing into this world a human being for the purpose of enriching our lives and the lives of others.

Those brief months of preparation chocked with wonderful, exciting, new experiences have now flown by. The baby's nursery is in complete readiness, including the furniture which was built so carefully and lovingly by his father, and the nurse has just placed tiny Alan in my awkward arms—arms made tense with awe and frightened with responsibility, yet tender and willing by that part of God he represents.

How important I am! As I gaze down at him, helpless and dependent in my arms, I immediately experience a desire to foresee his whole life, to see him through his growing years and to witness in my mind's eye his great accomplishments and few failures, his many joys and slight heartaches. I wish somehow that I could order his every activity so that he might be spared all the unpleasantness of life and reserve for him only joy and happiness and cheer. My impulsive desire is to have superhuman power to mold his life this instant into a beautiful and completed instrument of God.

Then I'm reminded by God's spirit that this type of yearning is selfish. I'm told that the joy and satisfaction of parenthood comes through patient daily development of this child, and that we, as his parents, will receive happiness according to the patience and understanding we develop. Thrills beyond human comprehension will be ours as we take little Alan's hand and figuratively lead him over rocky places into verdant fields of service and love. And I stanchly determine, as I snuggle him affectionately in my arms, that I shall enjoy every second of his growth and that I shall enrich my own life through his presence with patience and love.

I suppose I am no different from any other parent, but it seems to me that no one could experience more happiness than I have experienced in bringing this part of God's kingdom into the world. He is so soft and sweet that I feel as though I am entering heaven when holding him in my arms.

I felt a wave of terror, however, as I feared it would eventuate in a dream ending with the coming of dawn. Then, as though I were protecting us from the possibility of losing Alan through unworthiness, I offered a heartfelt prayer to the Giver and Sustainer of life in our son's behalf.

Our Father, please grant to Wayne and me an unusual amount of wisdom and understanding as we launch upon the task of rearing this little boy. May our patience and love be akin to that love and understanding you showed when you gave your only Son to be subject to ridicule and pain for our welfare. May our lives be supplemented with unselfishness and an understanding of true love through the medium of this baby boy. May he teach us as we endeavor to mold his infant life into something as precious and tender in years to come as he is at this moment. In the name of Jesus Christ we pray. Amen.

Alan wriggled in my arms and my thoughts continued:

To you, Alan, we pledge ourselves to the enjoyable task of ministering to your every need—physical, spiritual, mental. We desire to be good parents, always seeing your childish problems and disturbances as real and applying our adult understanding to them so that they may vanish in favor of your spiritual growth. We sincerely desire that you may grow up to love and associate with God that your character may be irreproachable and your personality pleasing. We give to you the heritage of the church to help you in this achievement. We desire for you a maximum of happy occasions and a minimum of disappointments. But when disappointments come to you, we desire that they may become your steppingstones. We desire that your body may develop into a beautiful, healthy tabernacle of God and pledge that we shall do our best to see that you are properly taught and cared for physically until the time when you shall have attained ability to care for yourself.

We desire that you may be intelligent and we pledge that we shall afford you opportunities to gain knowledge and wisdom from as many sources as possible.

We desire that you should spend your life profitably and humbly, and that you should form the habit of doing good. We cite for you not only the life of Jesus but also the lives of our many friends and relatives with whom you will come in contact and pray that you may cherish, appreciate, and exemplify these worthwhile lives.

We desire for you a life of prayerfulness and pledge that we shall teach you to pray, to the best of our ability, through our family worship.

We desire for you an appreciation for nature and shall afford you opportunities to acquaint yourself with the wonders of the sunrise, the warmth and promise of spring, and the cheerfulness of the song of birds.

We confess, Alan dear, that it was selfishness on our part which inspired your existence. We wanted you for the enjoyment and happiness your little being could give to us; therefore, we expect nothing from you in return. The only thing you owe us for our part in your life is to give your children more of what we desire to give you than you received so that eventually there may be raised up a people on earth who will do the complete will of God and establish his kingdom on earth as it is in heaven. This, dear son, is the great goal your father and I have in life. All other strivings are secondary to it.

Thanks for coming and bringing such happiness to us. By so doing you are affording us a greater opportunity to realize our goal in life. You are giving purpose to our existence. Without you, our lives could never be complete.

My thoughts were reluctantly interrupted as I saw the nurse enter my room. She took Alan into her arms and returned him to the nursery. His blanket was stained with a mother's anxious tears, but he was peaceful and content. I was suddenly aware that this was only the beginning of a new kind of happiness for my husband and me. For a part of God had come to live with us, and his freshness from heaven was appealing and completely satisfying.

For a few minutes I had been close to God, and I realized there were many other occasions in store for Wayne and me when we would need to draw near to God and ask for his wisdom in rearing this little child into useful manhood. I was completely happy. He belongs to us—God, his father, and me!

Solo

I sang a solo last Sunday—but not alone. No, strangely enough, it took many helpers. First there was the lady who cared for my children—not only while I sang but also while I practiced.

A young woman accompanied me on the organ. And who can say how many hands were necessary to build the organ? Many more contributed to purchase the organ.

Someone scrubbed the floors. Another brought beautiful flowers which lifted me up to God, making it easier for Him to help me. Still others prayed for me. Some radiantly receptive faces and eyes said, "That's lovely. That is interesting. Tell us more," and kept up my courage to face the throng.

Surely this is the kingdom: God's people working and worshipping together.—Gladomine Wilcox Ber-ridge

I Want Zion

By Mrs. Melvin Benner

I HAVE RETURNED recently from the Center Stake Reunion at Lake Doniphan. I came home with a firmer conviction than ever before—"I want Zion." We have been admonished that Zion is no closer or further away than the spiritual conditions of her people. If living one week with the Saints can be as wonderful and beautiful as these eight days, I want to be one who is striving to build this permanent condition.

As I walked on the beautiful church-owned reunion grounds just outside of Excelsior Springs, Missouri, the cares and worries of my daily world fell away, and I immediately felt that God had come before me to hallow these sacred grounds. The friendliness and the kindness and concern of the people camping on those grounds touched the heart of each person. Three young people with burning torches lit the first campfire and told us what they expected from this reunion; then as we each searched our own souls we sang softly together, "My God and I Walk Hand in Hand Together." With tears streaming down our faces, we did surely feel our hands clasped in his.

Each day as we climbed the slight incline to the large tent, I was reminded of the familiar anthem, "Oh, Lead Me to That Holy Hill," for this little hill to me was indeed holy. From the youngest to the oldest, these people were consecrated to the task of kingdom-building—from the kindergartners to Brother F. A. Smith, who spent the entire reunion with us. His testimonies made our whole bodies tingle with the desire to be better Latter Day Saints.

From behind my tent I saw three teen-agers go toward a wooded section. What were they carrying? Three quarts of milk! Who could worry about three youngsters going off with three quarts of good milk?

I thank God for the consecrated, devoted leaders of Center Stake. He has surely placed them there. The children's workers are possessed with a zeal and conviction the children cannot miss. The same devotion is carried by the young people's leaders, the women's leaders, and each of the stake officers. During one season of prayer in the big tent, fifty-two children and young people prayed to their Heavenly Father. This testifies to me that our people are endeavoring—yes, and succeeding—in building more Zion homes.

You who live in outlying districts need have no concern about the Center Place. It is being prepared. Our concern is to prepare ourselves to go along with it.

Although I have never written an article for any of the church publications before, I felt impelled this morning to put these words on paper as a testimony to other young mothers. The decision to go to reunion is not always easy to make. There are many things that would hold us back—finances not being the least of these. It isn't easy to leave a husband behind, as is often necessary, but the effort to go to reunion is nothing compared to the benefits received. It could easily be the "saving grace" of your entire family in the days that are coming. Make your decision now to take your children to the nearest reunion next summer.

We are home now. Together we are singing the reunion songs which remain in our hearts. We are sharing our reunion experiences with others around us. As I come back into the reality of this life, I know that I must have a part in this great Zion movement. God has given me a foretaste; I must not be found lacking. I thank God again for the experiences of reunion week.

A Problem in Ethics

By Dave Alkire

(Ohio State University '54)

DR. WATSON and his student friend went into his private library for a talk after one of those chicken dinners that had given Mrs. Watson an enviable reputation among many of the students. Turning to the youth the older man said, "Was there a particular angle to that question we had in class this morning that you wanted to discuss more personally than we could at that time?"

"Yes," said the student. "Have you given much thought to the question of social drinking? If so, how can we say whether it is right or wrong?"

Dr. Watson was interested at once, for he had been doing some recent study on the question and decided to discuss it as fully as he could.

"The words 'social drinking,' as I use them," he said, "apply to alcoholic beverages and their use in very moderate amounts without drunkenness or loss of wit, and in the company of one or more people. We will say that this type of drinking is motivated by the good taste of the beverage, the good fellowship accompanying the drinking, or the desire not to hurt the feelings of your host or not to feel out of place. It is not motivated by a desire to escape from the problems of society or to get a pleasant psychological or physical bang out of the beverage.

"We will think of the social drinker as the person who serves cocktails before dinner, or the man who has a beer with his friend George before he goes home after work. We also might think of him as the 'College Joe' who goes to the local dive with the boys to discuss philosophy, sex, politics, or what have you. Will you agree with this definition?"

"Yes," the student replied. "But will you also define the terms, 'right' and 'wrong'?"

MEN HAVE BEEN GIVING different meanings to the words 'right' and 'wrong' through the ages," said the professor, "but I think we can come to an agreement on a rather broad definition and then narrow it down to a given situation. Let us say that what is good for society is right, and whatever is bad for society is wrong. From there I think you'll agree that anything which helps man to live better with his fellow men, aids his health, adds to his intellectual growth and understanding, and better his relationship with his God is good. This good is the right.

"And to further clarify our understanding of right and wrong, let us say that anything which causes man to hurt his fellow men, which is harmful to his health, or interferes with his intellectual growth and understanding, or causes a conflict between man and his God is bad. And this bad is what we mean by wrong. Will you agree with this?"

"Yes, I never looked at it that way before, but I agree," said the student.

THE PROFESSOR went on. "Heavy drinkers and alcoholics cause a lot of problems in our society. They help to increase our divorce rate; they commit crimes; they often leave their families penniless and their businesses broke. Some of these points might be debatable, and to adequately answer them we would have to solicit the experts. However, all in all I think we'll agree that the heavy drinker and the person who drinks to the point of becoming an alcoholic does cause many sociological problems. Thus we can justly label this type of drinking as bad or wrong.

"Anyone may become a heavy drinker or an alcoholic. It seems to depend on his psychological or physical makeup. If I influence anyone to become one of these I am hurting our society, and this is wrong. If I influence anyone to drink at all, carefully teaching him the wisdom and virtues of moderation, I am still doing something which I can label as wrong. There is no guarantee that those I influence to drink will not become problem drinkers. So the only way that I can drink socially is to do so without influencing others to drink.

"A judge friend of mine from Cleveland told me the other day that about 40 per cent of the traffic accidents which occur are involved with people who have been drinking moderately. The person who had just one or two beers, or maybe a cocktail, is more dangerous than any other person on the highway, mainly because his skill has been weakened and he doesn't realize it. As a matter of fact, he thinks he can drive better. He tends to drive faster and take more chances, thus causing more accidents.

"I feel that this is reason enough to say that social drinking when one has to drive is wrong, since society is often hurt by these combined actions."

THE YOUTH appeared a bit restless. He got up from his comfortable chair before the fire and walked to a large picture window which overlooked the campus. He stood there for a few minutes watching the students as they passed and then returned to his place beside the large open fireplace.

"Professor, you've certainly given me a better understanding of this question of social drinking, but you still haven't definitely said that social drinking is wrong, even though you have pointed out several incidents where it definitely is not right."

"Well," said the professor, "if I drink more than one beer the function of my highest brain center is somewhat interfered with, and for me personally I consider this as wrong."

"My life is so fast moving and so complex that I need a sober mind in order to do justice to my work or my relationship with my fellow man. I also think that a lack of sobriety hurts a man's relationship with his God. Now I can develop this idea further, but I think you see my point, don't you?"

THE STUDENT seemed satisfied with the last statement and he turned to the teacher and said, "Then according to your standards, professor, you can drink socially as long as you don't influence anyone to drink who might become a problem drinker, you never drive after drinking, and you limit yourself to one beer, because more than one beer seems to affect your highest brain centers, and you think that life is sufficiently complicated to require all of your wits."

The man and the boy were silent for several minutes, both seemingly lost in thought. Then the youth turned to the old professor and expressed the conclusion which he now arrived at after their open and frank discourse together.

"It seems to me, Dr. Watson, that you can't drink socially without expecting or inviting those present to drink with you. According to you, anyone who drinks may become a problem drinker, or even an alco-

WHEN I WAS VERY YOUNG I was taken to church each Sunday by my parents. I continually received instruction from them to "behave and sit still." On those occasions when I took their advice, things went pretty well, but on those days when the form seemed rather hard, the heat oppressive, and the sermon not too interesting, I became restless and ignored instructions. After service, however, I had the lesson of obedience taught me in a more forceful manner, and it was surprising how soon such a lesson, administered on the seat of understanding, traveled to the other extreme and became implanted on my mind.

As I grew older I went to school and once again was told to do certain things in certain ways. Sometimes it seemed to me that the teachers didn't always know what was what, and on being told to do this in this way I found it easier to do it that way. Once again, however, I learned that such behavior did not lead to smooth relations, so I decided to leave the teachers in their ignorance and do things the way they wanted them done.

Now I am a man, yet I find my position has changed very little. I run a store for my father. When my boss gives me instructions, I obey. If he says, "Right, George, we'll stop buying now till the end of the month," I stop buying.

So as far as my life is concerned, the purpose of obedience has endured, that purpose being that the will of someone above me might be fulfilled through me.

When we consider the relationship of man and God, we must see that a similar position exists.

From the very beginning of time, as recorded in the Garden of Eden story, the purpose of obedience has been the same—that the will of God may come to pass through man. We recall how disobedience to that will separated Adam and Eve from their Creator, and we know how the continued disobedience of men has continued to estrange them from their Heavenly Father.

We recall with pride the obedience of Joseph Smith to the instruction, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask . . .," and the result of that obedience—the church of Christ restored.

Today it would seem that before we obey the commands of God, we have to know the whys and the wherefores of it all. Typical examples: "Oh, yes, the Doctrine and Covenants says no hot drinks, but of course hot drinks refers to the hot water and rum that they drank in those days. And tobacco—well, that meant chewing, not smoking."

It reminds me of the story of the policeman who, while walking his beat, found a dead horse on Chrysanthemum Street, so he pulled out his book to make his report. He wrote, "Found: One horse—dead—on Cri . . . Chri . . . Cryst . . ." but he couldn't spell Chrysanthemum. So he put his book away, took the horse by the hind legs, and pulled it to Daisy Street where he made out his report with ease.

Do we not, many times, pull the word of God into some different position in order to make our obedience easier?

We are fortunate in that in these last days God has seen fit to entrust to us his word as contained in the Standard Books of the church. Let us obey his commands that his desires may be fulfilled through us.

We have been told many times that the gospel is not meant to be privately interpreted, for in private interpretation our own desires are bound to affect our opinions. Jesus Christ, by his example, showed the need for obedience even in the bitter, yet glorious death he suffered.

What greater incentive do we need than his words, "If ye love me, keep my commandments"?

Port Elgin Reunion Grounds

Report on 1953 Port Elgin Reunion

Toronto and Owen Sound Districts met for their annual reunion at Port Elgin, Ontario, from July 11-19, with a daily attendance of about four hundred, which included members from all parts of Ontario as well as visitors from the United States.

President and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith were present for the entire reunion. President Smith preached three times, conducted the general class, and assisted in an executive capacity. Mrs. Smith taught the morning class for women.

Other full-time appointees on the staff were Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman and Elders John Booth, Al M. Pelletier, and Robert Flanders. Evangelists Ben Hewitt and Benson Belrose were present for patriarchal counseling. District presidents in charge were Elders John Booth and Gordon Farrow.

Others who helped were E. M. Kennedy, morning devotions; L. W. Kohlman, young people's prayer service; Elwood Smythe, children's division; Helen Booth, intermediates; Sally Flanders, young people; Aarona Kohlman, women's classes; Al Pelletier, men's class; Dr. D. A. Campbell, music; Mabel Scott, kitchen; Doris Hewitt and Betty Johnson, dining room; Fred LeFeuvre, snack bar; Gordon Kent, recreation; Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Dobson, billeting; E. M. Kennedy, publicity; and Gladys Pycock and Ruby Taylor, district women's leaders. There were also a number of volunteer workers.

New System for Financing Reunions

The system of Zionics living is portrayed in the history of the Devil's Tower Reunions (the last was in 1941). The Saints in that area now attend the Black Hills Reunion which is held at Bob Marshall Camp near Custer, South Dakota. Here they have beautiful grounds, excellent facilities, and the ministry of General Church officers and appointees. Paul Hanson, E. Y. Hunker, C. Houston Hobart, L. S. Troyer, A. W. Lundeen, and H. L. Livingston are among those who have been present. In addition to blessing those at reunion, the Lord has helped the Saints in the unorganized territory of South Dakota and Wyoming; several new members have been baptized and a mission is being organized at Alva-Hulett, Wyoming.

We who have attended the last three reunions feel that much of the success has been due to the system of financing. We have six missions and one group which each month takes an offering that is deposited in the reunion fund. At reunion offering plates are passed each evening, and offering glasses are available at meals. No set amount is charged, but each is expected to pay as he is able. The entire working staff is composed of volunteers. Through working together we have learned to know and appreciate each other more. Our finances have grown steadily since 1951, when we had $124 left at the close of reunion. In 1952 we had $268, and in 1953, over $400. We hope to accumulate enough that we can finance at least one reunion even if we have a depression or increased inflation.

All members have been willing to make sacrifices for the Lord's work, and have been blessed as a result. Our prayer is that someday other reunions will be based on the free-will offering system and that all members may attend, the poor as well as the rich. It is a new field for Zionics practice.

New Mission in Alabama

We have been living away from church privileges for fourteen years, but we have kept in touch with the church and have attended services as often as possible, even though it was inconvenient to do so. Our prayers are that a branch may be built here in Falco; there are many good people in this locality who need the gospel. Lately we have seen the beginning of our dream materialize. On July 12, G. W. Hall from Milton, pastor to the nonresident Saints, met with us to discuss possibilities of organizing a mission. We enjoyed the meeting, and Brother Hall was pleased with the prospects. Fifty-one persons were present for church school the past two Sundays; of course not all of these are members. We are indeed grateful to Brother and Sister Barnhill for the use of their home as a meeting place until other arrangements can be made; they have also granted a lot on which the church is to be built.

We ask the prayers of Herald readers in our behalf that we may be able to carry on the work in a manner pleasing to God. We will also appreciate helpful suggestions anyone cares to give. If there are members living in this area who haven't heard of our meetings, we suggest they go to Crestview, Florida, and inquire for the Graham place (North Highway 85) where the Barnhills live. We shall be happy to have others worship with us.

On Archaeological Tour

As I write this four of us are en route to Central America to visit remote archaeological sites. We are entering two states none of our Book of Mormon archaeologists have visited before—Quintana Roo and British Honduras. In remote Quintana Roo scientists have discovered a temple (at Tulum) which they have labeled the "Temple of the Descending God," because on its façade is carved a god descending from heaven. In view of the Book of Mormon's greatest claim—that Christ descended from the sky in the presence of twenty-five hundred ancient Americans—this discovery seems very significant.

We expect to return in early September after getting kodachromes and three-dimensional films of the ruins. I have confidence in and appreciate the prayers of the Saints. My son Ward, Joseph Anway, Ronnie Anderson, and I will be grateful for the prayers of those who may wish to remember us.

Memories of Swen Swenson

Reading the biographical sketch of Swen Swenson brought back memories of things that happened more than fifty years ago. I am the Bertha Serrell (misspelled "Cereal" in the article) who asked if the church sanctioned dancing. I well remember asking him this and the answer that he gave. I quit dancing despite the fact that the man with whom I was going—and later married—was a good violinist and often played for dances. He was a Catholic at that time but now is a member of the Reorganized Church and an active worker in the Mount Dora, Florida, mission. It has been a source of great joy to me to see my prayers of many years being answered. One of my boys now holds the priesthood and is serving in our little mission here.

I enjoy reading the biographies and memoirs of the early missionaries. I can well remember some of the things Swen used to say. I always smiled when I heard him in his broken English say, "I tell you vot, brodders and sistors, this latter day vork is youst grand, ain't dat a so?" Once when Brother Garver was in the audience, Swen asked, "Ain't dat a so, Brodder Garver?" and Brother Garver answered with a hearty laugh, "Yes, Brother Swen, that is so!"

I am now seventy-seven years old—the only living charter member of the Minneapolis Branch. I joined the Reorganized Church on my sixteenth birthday sixty-two years ago. My twin sister, Mrs. D. A. Douglass, who joined two years after I did, also lives here in Mount Dora. She also has been a faithful member through the years.

Faith-building Experiences

Several years ago I, with others, had an experience we will not forget. It happened in Lamoni shortly after Brother and Sister Robert Farnham were appointed to work in this stake. The adults met in the Coliseum; the primaries and kindergartners in the stake office downtown. I was helping with the primaries at that time, and usually on Communion Sunday we went to the meeting with the grownups, almost invariably arriving at the Coliseum too late to obtain a seat on the first floor. Children, teachers, and supervisors often sat in the balcony. Among so many little ones, no matter how good they were, there was always a certain amount of noise and confusion making it difficult to hear.

On this particular Sunday I almost decided to go home, but my little girl wanted to attend the service, and not wishing to discourage her, I made my way upstairs and sat down in the midst of the usual whispering, giggling, and shuffling of feet.

After the emblems were served, a hush crept over the entire building. In the balcony the effect was profound. No paper rustled in a child's hands; nobody whispered; no little foot moved. For a few wonderful moments Brother Farnham allowed the silence to continue, then arising he stated that he felt we had all sensed the presence of the Divine. That Presence seemed to linger seconds longer, and the good Spirit was with us to the end of the service. Looking around on the faces of the children, I wondered if some of them had not seen, as well as sensed, the divine Messenger.

Lamoni has just had another fine reunion. It was indeed a privilege to attend classes conducted by men and women who were willing to make the things they have learned through self-discipline, study, and prayer available to us, to help us grow as we solve our daily problems. Sister Alice M. Burgess taught the women's class, and her work was greatly appreciated.

At another Lamoni Reunion not many years ago we had the experience of hearing Brother John R. Grice speak in tongues in a Polynesian dialect which, while we neither understand it perfectly nor speak it fluently, is still quite intelligible to us. My husband and I could easily follow many of the words and phrases, both in the tongue and the interpretation which followed.

Such things build faith and help carry us over the discouraging times which occasionally come to us all.

In a Better World

We were very much interested in the article by D. H. Schmidt in the July 6, 1953, Herald concerning "The Condition of Children in the Millennium." When we had a little son, one week old, taken by death in 1914, my heart was nearly broken. A member of the Seventy spoke in prophecy and told me, in part, that I should be a Mother in Israel and have my babe again. I was also told that he would be a baby still and would grow up without sin unto salvation.

It was a great comfort to me and has caused me to visualize a work during the millennium, not with my baby only but with children who come forth at the first resurrection.

Later my husband listened to a conversation between a high priest and a younger elder. The elder believed a child dying before the age of accountability was received into celestial glory with no effort at all on its part. The high priest said, "If this be true, it would be better if we all died in infancy."

As a family we have four infants awaiting the resurrection. What we believe concerning the hereafter will make no difference, as the laws governing are established, but I would like to believe that our children will work out their salvation, no doubt in a better world than our children here.

From a Recent Convert

I was reared a Mennonite and joined that church when I was seventeen. Several years ago I read some tracts given to me by George Roberson when we moved to Hutchinson. He invited us to attend his church and gave me some books to read. Two weeks ago I was baptized, and as that ordinance was being performed I felt that a great weight had been lifted from my heart.

I ask the Saints to pray that I may always remain faithful to my covenant and for my husband and three children who as yet do not belong to the church. I also solicit prayers for Brother Roberson that he may be blessed in continuing to teach others of the true gospel. I will be glad to hear from members who care to write.

Six Children Baptized

ATHERTON, MISSOURI.—Five young men from Atherton are now in various branches of military service. They are Keith Graybill, who has already returned from Korea as a casualty, and his brother, Dwight; Lawrence and Willis Brosam, and Charles Tweedy.

Children's Day baptisms were William Moore, Ronald Balcom, Lois Ann Allen, June Mitchell, Claude Odell, Jr., and Gerald Odell.

Jeffery Allen Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Jones, was blessed by his great grandfather, Gomer Wells, and his uncle, Wendell Van Tuyl.—By CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE Reporter

Indians Baptized

MACY, NEBRASKA.—Seventeen new members were baptized on July 19. All of these members are Indians. Each was presented with a copy of the Membership Manual.

A baby girl and a five-year-old girl were blessed recently.

Ground was broken for the rebuilding of the church on August 4. The work in Macy, Nebraska, is moving ahead.—Reported by ORA E. CARTER

Family Baptized

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILLINOIS.—At a baptismal service held on the first Sunday in July, Mr. and Mrs. William Ritchey and their two sons, Arthur and Patrick, were united with the church. The service was conducted in the lower auditorium and the four were baptized by the pastor, Charles B. Fletcher. An impressive confirmation service was held in the upper auditorium during the eleven o'clock hour. The whole hour was used for this service. After a solo by Martha Lea Brown, the four new members were confirmed by Elders F. F. O'Bryan, W. A. Havlen, Prosper Carl, and Charles Fletcher. At the end of the service the congregation offered the family the right hand of fellowship and welcomed them into the church.

On February 25, Ronald Solomon was ordained to the office of deacon. Brother Solomon is assistant church school director and assistant young people's leader. He is a student at Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri.

On July 28, Robert Allison was graduated from Park's Air College at Maplewood, Illinois, and on August 2 he reported to Scott Air Base. Robert was recently baptized at East St. Louis.

Jack Sherman, who is employed by the Hudson Motor Company, has been transferred to Dallas, Texas. His wife and two sons will follow him there. Brother Sherman was baptized last December following a series of meetings by Missionary John Wight.

There have been twelve baptisms so far this year, and nineteen in the past twelve months. Thirteen of these were adults; this resulted in the completion of four families.—Reported by MARIE ANDERSON

Newly Organized Branch

JACKS CREEK, TENNESSEE.—The newly organized branch at Jacks Creek just completed a successful two weeks' series of services. Four adults and one young man were baptized. They were Mr. Milton Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Jordan, Mr. George Pollock, and George Pollock, Jr. Brother Bailey, now seventy-nine years old, will be remembered by many of the missionaries who have labored in the Lexington, Tennessee, area. He first heard the gospel preached by Missionary Snow sixty-two years ago.

Jacks Creek Church is on the fine Highway 100 running east through southern Tennessee to Nashville, about three miles east of Jacks Creek village and about eighteen miles south of Lexington, Tennessee.—Reported by J. H. YAGER

Mission Is Growing

ROLLA, MISSOURI.—The mission at Rolla has been in operation a little more than two years. It met first in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Whittaker, and later in the VFW upstairs hall. Brother Clarence Reese of Waynesville was selected leader and still holds that position. Dr. Robert Russell, instructor in bio-chemistry at the Missouri School of Mines and Metallurgy in Rolla, has been the supervisor of the church school. In May, 1952, Brother Russell was ordained a priest. In April Brother Amos N. Davis, of Salem, Missouri, was ordained a teacher.

Rolla is near Fort Leonard Wood, and a number of Army men and their wives have attended services. In June, Shirley Mae Davis was baptized at Linn, Missouri, completing a family circle, and enlarging the congregation.

On August 9 the group enjoyed an all-day service, with Area Supervisor Elder John Puckett and Elder Ross Mortimer, of Jefferson City, and their families as guests. Brother Puckett baptized Cozette and Rowla Ruth, daughters of Brother and Sister Whittaker, and Mrs. Geneva Lunsford. He was assisted in the confirmations by Brother Mortimer. Brother Puckett also blessed the newest Whittaker, Hannah Elizabeth, and delivered the morning message.

Sister Marilyn Whittaker is pianist, and C. R. Remington, Sr., is song leader.

Among visiting ministry have been Apostle D. O. Chesworth, and Brothers John Puckett, Ross Mortimer, Joseph Brown, Norman Cox, John Guinea, Sam Tremain, W. J. Winn, Ralph N. Remington, and Brother Pohl.—Reported by C. R. REMINGTON, SR.

Youth Camp Held

POCATELLO, IDAHO.—Youth camp was held at Tendoy Camp near Pocatello for a week, beginning July 5. The seventy-five young campers came from all sections of Idaho and Utah, in addition to three from Nevada, three from Montana, and one from Kansas. This is the first time the camp has been conveniently located for both the Idaho and Utah Districts.

The camp staff included Russell F. Ralston, Lysle Gilmore, Cecil Gilmore, Mickey Dennis, Connie Kyle, Beth Fife, Melba Rae Barnett, James A. Everett, Wayne Smith, Beatrice Gilmore, Opal Sutherland, Irma Ultican, Gene Chaney, Tom Ultican, and Jim Sutherland.

The church is on the air at Ontario, Oregon, over KSRV, and at Twin Falls over KLIX.

The Idaho-Utah Reunion was held at Hagerman, Idaho, August 9-16. This year the committee sponsored a teacher-training class.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Seventy Russell F. Ralston had charge of prayer service and taught the men's class, and Apostle Hanson also taught the general class. The bishop's class was taught by Bishop Willard C. Becker. Youth supervisor was Seventy James Everett, with Seventy G. Wayne Smith in charge of youth classes. Florence Ralston and Doris Becker taught the women's class. Patriarch J. F. Curtis led the missionary experience class, and Brother Everett taught the leadership training classes. Mrs. Josephine Ultican was children's supervisor. Patriarch Silas Condit was in charge of administrations and patriarchal blessings. Preaching duties were shared by Brothers Hanson, Becker, and Ralston.—Reported by RUBY Y. BROWN

Held Ground-breaking Ceremony

TURLOCK, CALIFORNIA.—Ground was broken July 13 for the new church to be erected at Fifth and Linwood Streets. The initial construction will be one room with the auditorium to come later. All work and materials will be donated. Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr., was present for the service. Others participating in the ground-breaking ceremony were Patricia Thomas, Ruby Powell, Mrs. John R. Davis, Billy Durbin, and Elders Bill Hays, Clinton Saxton, and L. A. MacDonald. Brother Hays is the local pastor, Brother Saxton the area pastor, and Brother MacDonald the district president.

Outdoor Summer Series

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.—The first men's fellowship meeting, planned with the intention of making possible a rich fellowship for the men of the church and their friends, was held June 25 at Central Church. Approximately one hundred attended. Stake-wide meetings and projects are contemplated by groups of men in each congregation.

An average of 250 persons have been attending the summer outdoor services which have been held weekly at both Eastbrook and Shawnee Drive.

A School of Information was held at Central Church on July 6 by the Kansas City Stake women's council. Classes were offered in leadership, study and programs, and devotionals and music.

A fellowship service, directed by Seventy Albert Scherer and assisted by Evangelist H. I. Velt, was held in the morning. Eighty women, representing the thirteen locals, attended.

In the afternoon, Stake President Fred O. Davies addressed the school, emphasizing the areas of women's work and the value of stake organization and participation. A program for the reunion was also outlined.

IN THE RAYTOWN CONGREGATION, Byron Zaun was ordained to the office of teacher and Frank Westwood to the office of elder at the July Communion service. Elders Lauzon Maxwell and Clyde F. Hastings ordained Brother Zaun, and Elders Maxwell and Ira Whipple ordained Brother Westwood.

The women's study groups were discontinued during the summer, but the women's department continued to serve meals to the men working on the church building project.

Recent speakers at Raytown were Stake Bishop Joseph Baldwin and Elders William Ely and Lyle Money-maker of Central.

IN THE CHELSEA CONGREGATION, Elder David S. White was installed as pastor July 5 to replace James Post who has resigned.

On Children's Day John Hill, Charley Hill, Cheryl Decker, and Duane Smith were baptized.

Adaline Taylor recently showed a movie of her tour of Europe as the high light of an evening of entertainment for the purpose of raising money for the building fund.

A reception in honor of Bishop Howard Miller, who is resigning, and the incoming Bishop Joseph Earl Baldwin was held June 21 in Central Church.

Ivor Wayne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne M. Sword, was blessed by Elders Fred O. Davies and Harold Keairnes on June 7.

Patricia, Janet, and John Parish, Ronald James Lane, Barbara Triff, Patrick Windes, Richard Vorce, David Brandt, and Roger Hands were confirmed on Children's Day, June 14.

IN THE GRANDVIEW, KANSAS, CONGREGATION, Chayrel Marie Eaton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Eaton, was blessed April 5 by Elders D. S. White and M. H. Sneed.

Thomas Kevin, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Russell, was blessed on Mother's Day by Elders M. H. Sneed and E. A. Ledsworth.

A dinner was served to raise money for the local branch budget May 7. Approximately one hundred dollars was cleared.

Elder Charles Graham was the speaker at the home-coming services June 28. A basket dinner followed by a testimony and experience meeting was held at the Coakley farm afterward.

AT EASTBROOK, Beth Galey and Nancy German were baptized on Children's Day by Priest Marvin Jeschke.

Forty children attended vacation Bible school June 22-28. Sister Cordie Jeschke was principal.

Don and Edna Summers have been appointed new Zion's League sponsors.

The builders' class met at the home of Sister Viola Zinser for a barbecue rib supper June 8. Brother Hugh McNeese presented slides on South American archaeology.

Ernest Paul, son of Dorothy and Martin Davis, was blessed June 7, by Elders Morris Worden and Floris Hands.

Thomas Michael, son of Thomas and Margaret Hughes, was blessed by Elders E. W. Lloyd and Morris Worden on June 28.

The young adults from Nashua congregation sponsored a church history tour with Brother Graybill as guide on June 28. Twenty-four people took the tour.—From August Journal of the Kansas City Stake.

District Conference Held

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—District conference was held from July 5 to 12 at the Happy Valley reunion grounds in Santa Cruz, California. District President Lawrence MacDonald was in charge of arrangements. The staff included Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Seventy Glen H. Johnson, and Elders Thomas R. Beil and Clinton K. Saxton.

Brother Saxton was camp director; Mrs. Virginia Winsor of Sacramento had charge of housing and registration; dining room and kitchen directors were Mrs. Hazel Damron of Sacramento, and Harold Cline of San Jose. They were assisted by Mrs. Geraldine Elam. Evangelist William H. Dawson gave patriarchal blessings, and Elder James Damron was in charge of administrations.

Camp activities began at seven each morning with recorded music drifting through the redwood grove. Mornings were devoted to family prayer and group classes. Brother Beil taught Restoration Challenges to Youth and Brother Gleazer taught Challenges of the Restoration. Mrs. Mary Stark of Modesto, who is district director of religious education, taught a special class on ways of teaching. Rod Schall had charge of crafts and junior high activity. Mrs. Agnes Elam, assisted by Jean Powell and others, conducted children's worship. Mrs. Lena Gilbert directed the choir. Brother and Sister Van Fleet showed colored film of Hawaii.

Many points of interest were visited during the afternoon recreation periods.

The business session was held July 11 with Brother Gleazer and the district presidency in charge.

Three baptisms took place in the swimming pool. Carol Davis and Barbara Hill were baptized by Lawrence MacDonald, and Karen Sue Lind was baptized by Vance Link.

There were a number of special solos during the week.

A Problem in Ethics

holic. Therefore you can never be assured that you're not influencing those present to become problem drinkers.

"Now, I don't know whether you could always plan so that you would not have to drive after drinking. It seems improbable, but even if you could, I don't see how you could always arrange for a completely sober person to drive. Also I don't see how you can limit yourself to host, your friends, or yourself. At a party one who is accepted as a social drinker is continually offered drinks; it seems rather odd if he doesn't take one when his glass is empty. And the one drink would have no value if you had to drink it so slowly that it would last all evening. Therefore I don't think that a social drinker can limit himself to one drink.

"The only conclusion that I can come to, Professor, is that it's impossible for you to be a social drinker. And according to your standards social drinking is wrong."

The man of learning turned to the youth and said, "That's right, son, and for that reason I don't drink. Some people seem to get quite a bit of pleasure out of drinking, though, so I guess it must have its pleasures, but what was it that Socrates said?—'Pleasure without wisdom is evil!'"—Reprinted from the International Student, February, 1953, by permission of the publisher.

The Fishing Cat

by Grace Silverton Myers

pictures by Paul Galdone

Old John and his big cat Skipper were fishing partners. And when Old John hurt his arm, Skipper carried on in a most surprising way. Small children will delight in this unusual story so simply and pleasantly told and so eloquently pictured. So will cat lovers, fishermen, and all others who enjoy a good story well told. For the young child. An Abingdon-Cokesbury book.

NEIGHBORS

Moving into a new neighborhood always involves a wondering question as to whether the old residents are going to like you. Human neighbors soon set your mind at rest and welcome you. With the birds and animals it takes a little longer. After all, they think the place belongs to them and that humans are trespassers. It would be hard to decide whether robins are friendly, or just curious and fearless. Their beady eyes seem to contain a question whether a person isn't just an oversized worm, who should be handled in the usual way. Gradually we are being accepted. This morning a young redcap woodpecker sorted all his feathers out in a tree by our window. Bluebirds play all over the place. There is a cottontail rabbit who visits a patch of green grass in our back yard every day. He doesn't even bother to run now. Really, it's his grass. He lets us use it for a carpet on the condition that we let him use it for lunch. The real natives of the place seem to like us. Bitsy, the baby Shetland colt across the way who was so shy and afraid at first, lets us love her now. We feel that we have been accepted.

STRATEGY

A sharp idea was recently attributed by a magazine writer to Walter Reuther, leader of the C.I.O.:

"It's a good idea to win friends before you try to influence people." That's putting a really fine polish on a Dale Carnegie aphorism.

And incidentally, have you ever known anybody who could teach the world more on that subject than a small lost pup, getting a little hungry and wanting human companionship? The dog is wise enough to know that no other dog can help him. Somehow he manages to convey the impression that he thinks that people are the most wonderful things in the world. It's a propagandist line that has never been surpassed.

L. J. L.

HOME

It isn't really your home until you begin to revise it, and make it over to suit your needs. There is a corner that was just meant for shelves. And the thingamabob in the whatchamacallit shouldn't go this way, but that way. Some things must be planted, some dug up and moved, some thrown away. Then there are the grand ideas—all things are possible for women—that might be executed "someday" if a mere man could only figure out a way to do it. It begins to be really your home when you can look at it and see a number of things that you have fixed or made with your own hands and a few tools.

You to Know . . .

John T. Puckett

IT WAS THROUGH the exemplary conduct of his wife that John Puckett was "drawn into the gospel net." Today he is the missionary supervisor of the Missouri Development Area, which includes eleven missions and groups in what was until very recently unorganized territory.

Brother Puckett says that for three years he watched the young woman who is now his wife, and her mother. He wondered what their church offered that caused people to look upon life as they did. He set about to find out. On many occasions he read literature of the church as conveniently placed by his wife. Though his reading was unknown to Mrs. Puckett, it was through this study, combined with many prayers, that he began to realize that much truth and light was to be found in the Reorganized Church. The work and prayers of his wife and many others consummated in John's baptism in July, 1942, a year after he and Marcine Marlow were married. Elder Joseph Baldwin performed the ceremony.

John was born May 23, 1920, in Mansfield, Tennessee. He was graduated from McKenzie High School, McKenzie, Tennessee, in 1938 and spent one year at Andrew Jackson University in Nashville. He was in the service from 1943 to 1945 with the U. S. Fifth Army in Italy and received the Purple Heart for being wounded in action. He was bookkeeper for a motor sales company in Nashville and was with the J. C. Penny Company in Paris, Tennessee, and in Independence, Missouri, where he was employed when he was appointed to full-time church work in 1948.

He was ordained a deacon in 1946, a priest in 1947, and an elder in 1948. At the General Conference of 1950 he was ordained to the office of Seventy under the hands of Apostle C. George Mesley and Seventy H. I. Velt. The Pucketts have one daughter, Janifia Carol. They make their home in Jefferson City, Missouri.

John's hobbies are sports, especially golf and football, and telling the gospel story. His special interest is people. He is a member of the Jefferson City Ministerial Alliance and the East P.T.A., where his daughter attends school.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT IS IMPROVING

President Israel A. Smith's health continues to improve and he is at home recuperating from his recent illness. A personal note of thanks from President Smith appears in this issue.

RAYTOWN FORMAL OPENING

President W. Wallace Smith attended the placing of a plaque at the Raytown church building on August 23. Other guests included Stake President Fred O. Davies and Mr. Carnegie, who represented Raytown's Mayor Leroy Cox. Placement of the plaque was by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp.

CAMPUS SERVICES

President W. Wallace Smith presided at the Campus outdoor services and Seventy Z. Z. Renfro was the speaker on Sunday evening, August 23. James Houghton was the featured soloist. At the later young people's service, Dr. Floyd McDowell spoke on "R. L. D. S. Standards of Boy-Girl Relationships." A panel of six young people made comments and asked questions after his presentation.

FARROW ATTENDS REUNION

Apostle Percy Farrow has returned from the Southern Indiana Reunion and reports that it was successful throughout, with the largest attendance ever recorded there, and approximately 300 attending over the last week end. Those assisting Brother Farrow in ministry were District President Chester Metcalf, District Missionary J. H. Yager, and Elders Kenneth Byrn and Merle Guthrie, with Sister Guthrie in charge of women's classes. On the last Sunday morning, Elder James B. Welch, pastor of the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch, was ordained to the office of high priest by Brother Farrow and Evangelist H. W. Burwell. Brother Farrow reports progress in the entire Southern Indiana District. The church at Indianapolis is approaching completion, with the interior remodeled, and Bedford limestone placed on the exterior. The grounds are being landscaped.

VISITS REUNION

Apostle Roscoe Davey left August 27 to attend the Northeastern Illinois District Reunion as a visitor.

ATTENDS REUNIONS

Apostle Charles Hield has attended the Texas, Lamon Stake, and Ozark Reunions, and has just returned from reunion in the Arizona-New Mexico District. He reported an outstanding spirit in all these reunions.

PROGRESS REPORTED

Apostle Percy Farrow reported forty-four baptisms to date in the Mobile, Alabama, District, according to word received from Mobile District President Jack Pray. Elder Lee Oliver, president of the Pensacola, Florida, District, also reported an opening at Crestview, with thirty-five members. Allen Breckenridge is now at Orlando, Florida, and has under way his assignment to Alabama District and unorganized Florida.

ARANDA FAMILY TO ARRIVE

Apostle Charles Hield reports that the Jose Aranda family will arrive in the United States the first week in September, and Sister Aranda, who is a physician, will be employed at the Sanitarium. The Arandes are from Guatemala.

For Economic Justice

"The workman deserves his pay."—Luke 10:7

THIS TYPICAL experience occurred several years ago, but the memory still hurts because it happened to friends.

Like many other church people they wanted to be a part of the "Gathering" and to help with the building of Zion. They selected a location for their business and invested heavily of their savings in modern equipment. They provided good commodities and excellent service at fair prices. It was a business that the city needed, and it was thought that surely they would succeed. It was hoped that they would succeed, for they brought to the church talents and services that were also valued and needed. They were fine people and soon won many friends.

Yet the business did not pay, and they were unable to continue to operate, although they had previously enjoyed success in other places. They had not come to Zion as failures seeking a soft spot. They had come as successful business people seeking to make a contribution to the great cause that engaged their hope and faith. Yet the unfortunate turn of events was such that they had to go away again, much poorer than they came, to rebuild their finances in the place where they had formerly lived. Their trouble and their going was a loss to the church as well as to themselves.

What caused that result? What changes could have made it different? Those people would like to know the answer, and so would their friends.

UNDER THE FREE enterprise system, the opportunity to succeed seems to be inseparable from the danger of disaster. If you take a free man and guarantee his income you make him a parasite. If you relieve him of danger you also, in the long run, rob him of freedom and hope. If anybody has another answer to that problem, he should make it known.

It would be a valuable bit of information for all who are interested in social planning.

THE PUBLIC at large accepts the many excellent and valuable services of business people with no particular gratitude. The only way people can learn the value and importance of our fine modern stores is to try to live in a place that does not have them and from which one cannot reach them.

The public, likewise, is unaware of the risk, in terms of finance, that everyone takes who goes into business.

Under what we call the free enterprise system, a high percentage of those who go into business are doomed to failure. They invest savings with honest intentions. But so many of them lose everything, then have to get jobs and start all over again with nothing. It hardly seems fair, but no one seems to know what to do about it.

MANY STUDIES of business and business conditions have been made. Some of them have concerned the reasons for business success and failure. And yet it appears that information is still not available, in easily understood form, for the small businessman who needs to know a few things to conserve his capital, and know before he makes his investment whether it will be profitable.

Such a study and report should be of great value to church members. It would help to prevent losses and save money, while giving the outlines of a plan whereby they could be more reasonably sure of a chance of success.

This is not in the interest of selfish individualism. It is written with the idea that a good society must have, among other things, strong economic foundations. If people are to give to the building of the kingdom of God they must have resources upon which they can draw.

THERE ARE two very different kinds of agricultural areas not far from where this is being written. In one the soil is thin and rocky, much of the land is covered with brush and scrub timber, and even grazers cannot derive much from the land. With little money, the people are not able to maintain very good homes, the schools and churches are shabby, and life in many aspects seems rather miserable. It is not the fault of the people, unless they could be blamed for not going elsewhere. They are victims of conditions they cannot control.

The second area has much better soil. Crops are good, livestock are fat, fences are strong, and there are fine modern homes in the country as well as in town. Perhaps the people are simply fortunate, but their energy and enterprise have shown good results. They have made a superior way of life. Churches are well built, well kept. There are good schools.

IN 1830 the new church was founded with a set of practical ideals for a better society based upon thrift, industry, education, morality, honesty, and justice. Joseph Smith had seen the consequences of low standards and poor ways of life in the communities he had known. Wherever the church people went, when they were free of persecution, they worked hard and prospered. They built well. The evidences of their craftsmanship still stand at Kirtland and Nauvoo. With half a chance they made a better living than their neighbors did.

Economic justice is still one of the primary concerns of the church, one of the great interests of the people. That ideal is integrated into the thinking and the philosophy of the faith. In this age we are confronted with new problems and new difficulties. With a clear understanding of our basic principles, we must dedicate ourselves to new studies and inquiries to help our people toward the good life intended for them. L. J. L.

A Message from President

I. A. Smith

I take this method of acknowledging the expressions of good will and hopes and prayers for my recovery which came to me from so many during the recent illness from which, by the grace of God, I am now emerging. The task of making personal acknowledgment is too great for me to undertake, but my gratitude and thanks are heartfelt and include all the Saints for their spiritual support.

Pascagoula, Mississippi, Is Debt Free

Bishop W. N. Johnson has just called to our attention the fact that the Pascagoula, Mississippi, Branch has just completed paying a Houses of Worship Revolving Fund loan in less than five years. This branch borrowed $3,000 January 1, 1949, agreeing to repay the loan $25 a month, plus interest at 1% on the unpaid balance. It was, therefore, with deep appreciation that we received the letter from the pastor, J. L. Barlow, expressing his happiness in mailing us a final payment check of $1,139.57, in which he expressed the hope that through the efforts they had put forth in making these funds available before they were due, it would be possible for the church to pass the benefit on to other congregations.

Bishop Livingston and the undersigned are most happy to join with Bishop Johnson in congratulating the Pascagoula Saints not only for their achievement but for the splendid spirit in which they co-operated.

The intent and purpose of the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund is just what its name signifies. The faster these funds are repaid, the greater the benefits to an ever-increasing number of congregations throughout the church. We appreciate the splendid co-operation given not only by Pascagoula but by others throughout the church who are treating their obligation to this fund with enthusiasm and with integrity of purpose.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Kansas City Stake Reunion

Stake President Fred O. Davies reports good attendance and fine experiences at their second reunion at Lake Doniphan, near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. Registrations reached 569, with 367 full-time campers. In his report, Brother Davies evaluates the reunion experience:

How can we determine the spiritual heights achieved? Only by statements and testimonies and the assurance that such a friendship and unity prevailed that, toward the end of the week, nine, ten, and even six-year-old youngsters wanted to scrape and wash dishes. The Zion's Leaguers felt so impressed, blessed, and serious that they decided to forego their campfire with its fun and frolics and make it even more helpful and in keeping with their testimonies.

As many as thirty to forty stood and waited patiently for their turn at the microphone in the testimony meetings. These meetings ran quietly and smoothly, with God guiding and directing. Young nonmembers bore their testimonies; many who had never prayed or testified before did so at reunion. Young and older people found a common ground and place of meeting, all were touched by the Good Spirit. Parents saw their children express their willingness to serve the church, and the joy that was theirs could not be expressed.

It was impossible to record in one's mind all that happened, but we do know that lives were changed, souls were touched, God was present, and his Spirit richly blessed us. Very few spoke of bodily healings, but scores testified of wanting to live better and be clean. A greater understanding of the kingdom, a keener appreciation of the church, and its function and purpose was sensed, and congregations should reap the benefits of this week of great spiritual blessing.

Brother Davies also told of a swimming tragedy which occurred on the opening day of reunion. This unfortunate happening should be a solemn reminder to all of us of the always potential danger to be found at our reunions and camps. Extra vigilance should be exercised at next year's camps to avoid accidents.

International Churchmans Exposition

The second annual International Churchmans Exposition is meeting in the Chicago Coliseum, October 6-9. It is open without cost to ministers and interested churchmen of all denominations. Several of our members may want to avail themselves of the opportunity to see and hear the many features presented.

The exhibits at the Exposition will include over one hundred panels showing floor plans and designs of America's newest churches. Models of churches will be displayed, supplementing the panels. Food service designs for church buildings will also be shown.

In addition to the exhibits, a "Church Building Forum" and a "Church Music Seminar" will be held. At the Forum, the following interesting subjects will be discussed: "How to Raise Funds for Church Building"; "Planning Food Service Facilities"; "Building Site Planning"; "Trends in Church Architecture"; "The Latest in Church School Buildings and Facilities"; "Church Interiors"; and "Contemporary vs. Traditional in Church Architecture."

The "Music Seminar" will include "Music's Place in Worship"; "The Use of the Tape Recorder in Rehearsals"; "Easy Ways toward Sight-singing"; "Problems in Conducting"; "The Church Organist"; "Liturgical Music"; "The Model Choir Rehearsal"; "Maintaining an Interest in the Church Choir"; "The High School Student and the Church Choir"; "The Administration of the Choir"; and "Significance of the A Capella Choir in the Modern Church Program."

Requests for additional information can be secured by writing the International Churchmans Exposition, 19 South LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois.

The Sign of Regeneration

By Charles D. Neff

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT contains lessons of truth spoken by Christ with the intention that they should reach the multitudes who were in the throes of darkened understanding. This great teaching mission was performed chiefly for the benefit of the apostles, but we are led to believe that also within the area where his voice was heard were numerous other disciples who, seeking the words of eternal life, had also followed Christ to the mountainside.

Bible commentaries tell us that the activities began early in the morning and that, in addition to the usual crowds from the Galilean towns, there were people from Judea, Perea, the Phoenician cities on the shores of the Mediterranean, Decapolis and Idumea, and even Jerusalem. They were attentive listeners, we believe, eager to understand the truths they were to make known to all lands and all ages. They were particularly anxious to hear him this day and were therefore doubly attentive. They believed that the kingdom was soon to be established. They felt sure that some announcement concerning it was about to be made. The hearts of the listeners were filled with thoughts of future successes, happiness, and glory. Among them were scribes and Pharisees who looked with anticipation to the day when they would have domination over the hated Romans and acquire riches and splendor. Among them were the poor, hoping to hear the assurance that their peasantry and lives of toil and fear of want would be exchanged for ease and plenty. Everyone thrilled with the hope that Israel would be the honored nation, chosen of the Lord.

If these things were all that the multitude expected, many must have gone away disappointed. There was nothing in Christ's message of that day to raise their hopes for worldly greatness. In the Sermon on the Mount, Christ attempted to give his hearers a proper conception and understanding of his character and of his kingdom. Christ knew that false education had prompted the hope for worldly greatness, and he sought to undo it. He did not directly chastise his followers for their errors. His divine discernment made him aware of their misery, and he sought to teach them about that which would heal the wounds of their minds and souls. He sought to teach them something better than they had ever known. He did not denounce their ideas about the kingdom of God, but he gave affirmative expression to the conditions for entrance into it and left them to draw their own conclusions as to its nature.

IN THIS AFFIRMATIVE presentation he stated the following words of blessing: "Blessed are they who shall believe on your words, and come down into the depths of humility, and be baptized in my name; for they shall be visited with fire and the Holy Ghost and shall receive a remission of their sins."

As we give meditative consideration to this statement—in light of the spiritual condition of the people of that day and the present generation—we cannot escape the impression that surely its message is prophetic of the spiritual degradation of men of all ages.

Emphasis upon self—selfishness—has always been the chief opponent of man's eternal happiness. As was stated regarding man in almost the dawn of his existence, "The attitude of man's heart is evil from his youth." Another inspired writer said, "Natural man is an enemy of God." Love of God is the essence of all virtue. The opposite of this—the choice of self as the supreme end—must be the essence of sin, thus separation from God and the happiness, peace, and security afforded by his presence.

Jesus was saying, simply and frankly, that man must hear the words of eternal life, seek and find the presence of the Spirit of the Author of Life and, as a response to the inevitable spiritual experience, be baptized in his name.

BAPTISM MEANS that a man is willing to bear public testimony that he has had a spiritual experience and joined hands with others who have had such experience. Baptism is logical only after a man has been awed by the realization of the majesty of God and is consequently aware of his own nothingness. Baptism means that, having come face to face with the fact of his utter dependence upon a supreme being, man eagerly arranges his life to fit the plan of the Supreme Being. The act of baptism is public testimony that a man's life has been surrendered to and ascribed to God for use in the accomplishment of that which is greater than the individual—the kingdom.

The kingdom is more than an individual person. It is more than one individual and God. It is a society in which the mind and will of God is interpreted for the benefit of all, and the expressions of men's abilities are the result of and in harmony with the revealed will of God.

To become a reality, this society will require the diligent, united efforts of many. Its builders will need to be peculiar in that they have fulfilled Christ's beatitude requirement and promise: "Blessed are they who shall . . . come down into the depths of humility," "and be baptized in my name," "for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost." The kingdom is a project of Divinity, so a touch of the divine is required in each worker.

It has been declared by many that our day provides the best opportunity for a tangible expression of the physical aspects of the kingdom. Perhaps it is true, but let us not overlook the fact that the kingdom involves people who are more than ordinary citizens in that they have felt the impact of the divine touch and have responded to it. Jesus labeled the process, "being born anew," and Paul echoed, "becoming a new creature in Christ Jesus."

Again, the kingdom involves interpretation of the mind and will of God, and a willingness to adhere to his counsel. Both are beyond the capacity of natural man. An endowment of the divine is required if the greater tasks of life—and, incidentally, the ones offering genuine happiness—are to be accomplished.

IN LIGHT of the spiritual demands of the kingdom, how do we stand?

Perhaps this is again a time for personal inventory. Let me present a statement to challenge us a bit. It was spoken by a man charged with the responsibility of helping build a war machine to render death and destruction to nations threatening our security. It is impressive because of his peculiar position, and because it brings into sharp focus the oft-tested fact that man's own genius, directed by man and toward man, will destroy him.

General Bradley must have been prophetically alert to the terrible destiny of a selfish, lustful nation when he said:

We have too many men of science, too few men of God. We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount. Man is stumbling blindly through spiritual darkness while toying with the precarious secret of life and death. The world has achieved brilliance without wisdom, power without conscience. Ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. We know more about war than we know about peace, more about killing than we know about living.

If such leading men of the military recognize the futility of attempting to find happiness through selfish force, it is for us who claim to understand something of the will of God—builders of the kingdom—to cultivate a Christlike spiritual genius and demonstrate to the world that we have "come down into the depths of humility and been baptized in his name."

When we come to such sober realizations as have been portrayed by the army general we begin to qualify for participation in an organization authorized and empowered to set up a society where emphasis upon self is minimized, and happiness is achieved through the devotion of members of the society to that which God has in mind for his people. Man must come to understand himself in his true relationship with the divine before he can participate, ". . . and come down into the depths of humility, and be baptized in my name."

THE ORDINANCE of baptism is not to be considered, by itself, a cure-all, or remedial to any extent. Unfortunately, religious bodies in general tend to place such emphasis upon the sacraments and ordinances that the scriptural law has become obscured to the point that many people profess to be Christians who have never gone through the stages of regeneration. The expression "Latter Day Saintism" connotes a way of life rather than mere church organization. And this way of life is, at best, far removed from normal society as we view it today. It requires a changed individual. Baptism is not a hocus-pocus medium. It follows belief and sincere repentance: ". . . and come down into the depths of humility, and be baptized in my name."

There are no exceptions to requirements for residence in the kingdom. Nicodemus, who came to Jesus by night—perhaps as a means of maintaining his selfish pride—was a man of some stature in his community. He was a ruler of the Jews. He had not only heard Jesus, but he had observed the imprint of the message upon the lives of his subjects. Nicodemus noted what happened when lives were converted to Christ. He sought out Christ and asked the pertinent question, "What must I do to be saved?" Jesus answered pointedly, "Except a man be born anew, he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." I think he implied that it made little difference to him who Nicodemus might be. Social standing and political power, as well as material worth, have little to do with the quality of a man's spirit. Jesus was saying, "The attitude of a man's heart is evil from his youth and must be purified before he can acquire kinship with me," which is in effect the kingdom.

I believe he looked Nicodemus squarely in the eye and quoted Old Testament Scripture:

Teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, . . . even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit.—Genesis 6: 61, 62, I.V.

IT IS A GOOD thing to save men from frequenting dangerous resorts by furnishing safe places of recreation and entertainment, but it is far better to implant within the man such a love of all that is pure and good that he will instinctively shun the impure and evil. The purpose of the church is to help purify the springs of action—the soul and heart of man.

Plutarch has a parable about a man who tried to make a dead body stand upright, but who finished his labors saying, "There is something lacking inside." There must be something inside that is holy if there is to be real life.

We cannot cure a barren tree by giving it new bark or new branches; the life-giving substance must flow within it if it is to fulfill its purpose. Frost cannot be removed from a window pane simply by scratching it away; the temperature inside the room must be raised. Reformation is not enough. It is impossible to get regeneration out of reformation. In other words, reforming the old does not make something new; just as it is impossible to get a harvest out of a field merely by plowing it. Tares are not degenerate wheat which by cultivation will become good wheat. We must be born from above just as truly as we have been begotten by our earthly father or we cannot see the kingdom of God.

And holiness cannot be attained by natural growth or development since man's natural tendencies are wholly in the direction of selfishness. "Natural man is an enemy of God." There must be a reversal of his inmost dispositions and principles of action if he is to see the kingdom.

ALL OF THIS may seem to be ethereal, in the abstract and idealistic to the point of impossibility. But there is much to testify that God has not turned the searching heart away void nor given man an impossible task. Emerson proclaims: "The gate of gifts closes at birth. After a man emerges from his mother's womb he can have no new increments of strength and wisdom. There is no grace except the grace of creation." This idea is un-Christian. What Emerson was saying is possibly true of natural gifts, but not of spiritual gifts. He did not know—or at least did not take into consideration—the experience at Pentecost when the church enjoyed an outpouring of the Spirit of God which granted transforming power.

Emerson forgot—or did not know about—the experience of Joseph Smith. This normal young lad was endowed with new increments of strength and wisdom sufficient to make him a religious genius. He did not understand divine personality and love. The longing which men have to turn over a new leaf in life's book, to break with the past, to give expression to their better selves is a preliminary impulse of God's Spirit and has nothing to do with heritage.

As a man responds to this preliminary impulse and is baptized, the power of God—the gift of the Holy Spirit—continues its work of enlightenment, endowment, and regeneration. It becomes a practical, usable, workable power for good in his life.

IN MY NAVAL experience there were many occasions when I saw great warships become helpless by becoming lodged on sand bars. Tugs, especially designed and equipped to pull such vessels out of distress of that nature, failed in their efforts to pull the ship off the sand bar. Then I have seen the tide come in—an action over which man has no power—and the great ship float free of that which obsessed it. God makes it possible for there to be an influx of spiritual influence which will make easy what before is difficult or impossible.

The necessity of regeneration implies its possibility. Jesus' statement, "Ye must be born anew," means we may be born anew. The text is not merely a warning and a commandment, it is also a promise. Every sinner has the chance of making a new start. The sand of the Sahara would not bring forth flowers and fruit even if we turned into it a hundred rivers like the Nile. Man may hear sermons for a lifetime and still be barren of all spiritual growth. The soil of the heart needs to be changed, and the good seed of the kingdom needs to be planted there.

The act of baptism alone will not save us. It is a marvelous ordinance. It is supported by all that makes the ordinance desirable; it is logical, historic, social, impressive, authoritative, and it fulfills the need for an eradicating force to dispel sin from the physical as well as the spiritual. In view of its lofty station in God's plan, it is unfortunate—even disastrous—when men go through it and are still void of its real benefits. Baptism is the sign of regeneration. External baptism plus the conscientious turning of the soul to God which baptism symbolizes, saves us. Man has the faculty of love, but that love is set supremely on himself. Jesus chose to call blessed those who believe on his words and the words of his disciples and who come down into the depths of humility, and are baptized in his name. He promised that those who do so shall be "visited with fire and the Holy Ghost," and receive a remission of their sins.

Spiritual Achievement

By Ruby Strand

Many times we hear people exclaim, "Oh, why did this have to happen to us?"

The Heavenly Parent does not promise immunity from trials just because we feel we are trying to live righteously. If this were the case, many of Jesus' trials would not have taken place. Surely he would never have been crucified. Think of the many good people of the past whose lives seem to have been beset with disaster; yet the contribution they were able to give to the work of God has been outstanding. Often the unpleasant and trying experiences of life serve as steppingstones to higher spiritual growth.

The present offers many fine examples of this truth also. For instance, there is the young mother who has been bedridden for more than a year. Her husband is a devout man—an elder giving an excellent ministry. This woman's disease is such that there seems only one avenue for healing, and that is through prayer. Many have petitioned in her behalf, yet she lies upon her bed, ill and discouraged. Still the husband wrote these words to a friend: "I am committed to the belief that God has tried to turn this misfortune into a very great blessing." This is spiritual achievement and, whatever the outcome, progress is being made in the righteous development of lives.

Being a Neighbor

By Nell Miller Lutz

AS LAY MEMBERS of the Reorganized Church, we are admonished by church officials and representatives to tell our neighbors about our church whenever opportunity presents itself. In the past, however, many of us have foregone opportune moments in carrying through in this regard simply because we did not know where to begin or where to end once we had begun. It is true, too, that some who make attempts do it by the trial and error method and frequently unwittingly do more harm than good.

With the advent of the tract titled "What and How Shall I Tell My Neighbor?" by Brother Evan Fry, these unfortunate experiences should be eliminated. Brother Fry has given us something tangible to work with in outlining the basic steps in this unique adventure. With the publishing of this new tract, it seems that a new challenge has been presented to all who wish to have a part in fulfilling God's work. It is up to each to accept that challenge.

The question may arise, "Who is my Neighbor?" There was a time not far distant when the noun "neighbor" was confined to the person or persons next door, or to country folk within the radius of a few miles. Modern transportation has eliminated geographical boundaries as far as this is concerned, and the connotation of the word has been expanded to include not only those next door but those in neighboring states and even neighboring countries. In fact in this electronic age, it would seem that almost anyone with whom we come in contact could be considered a potential neighbor.

One of the fundamentals of our belief is the principle of teaching by example; therefore, each of us should live a life that will reflect our religious teachings and beliefs. I think the following story which recently came to my attention illustrates this very well.

A GOOD EXAMPLE

By Chaplain (Major) Alfred E. McWilliams

John and Harry moved into a brand new GI housing area. They had each bought homes there and without having seen one another before were suddenly neighbors. After a few days of cordial greeting as they saw each other going to work in the morning and returning from work in the evening, or small comments as each planted grass or painted the fence, John and Harry together with their wives and small children became good friends and neighbors.

The families visited with each other in the everyday way of things, each going to the other's house, and there were many calls made by the wives on one another and over the side fence. John and Harry each were up early on Sunday morning but for different reasons. John would be up cutting the grass or doing many other around-the-house duties that one seems to do only on week ends. Harry, his wife, and small daughter would come out of their front door every Sunday morning about nine o'clock all dressed up, go to the garage, calling some word of greeting to John, get in their car and drive to church. When they returned, John would be still in the garage, in the house, or about to go for a drive with the family somewhere.

Each having moved in about the beginning of summer, this Sunday routine continued until early fall. Then one Saturday afternoon while Harry and John were raking up leaves in their yards, John asked Harry what church he went to every Sunday. Harry told him. Then John confessed that he had been watching him every Sunday and had been thinking about going back to church and taking his wife and son with him. He did not dislike the church; he just had too many other things to do and let churchgoing slip by. He admitted that his wife had spoken to him about it on several occasions, but he had not given it too much thought. Lately he had, and asked Harry would he mind if they went along with him and his family on Sunday. Now the two families go to church together regularly on Sundays.

Harry's example had influenced John and his family to start a new and important experience, and Harry had not said a word to them about this matter. This shows what can come from a good example. It also shows that all of us have influence. By Harry's attending worship service on Sunday he set an example, and John did not overlook this fact. Harry's example said in eloquent tones that John understood: "Religion is not a secondary matter with me; it is of summary importance." Furthermore, Harry was witnessing for God in one of the simplest yet most profound ways that any religious man may witness. There is no other real proof of a man's religion than that of regular attendance at public worship.

Every man is responsible to some other man. The fact that we love freedom means that we likewise love responsibility that goes along with real freedom. How much we influence the lives of others by the silent and steadfast observance of our religious vows we may never know. Nevertheless, it is true that we all have influence and that others are affected by what we do. Regular attendance by a church member shows loyalty to the vows solemnly taken at the altar of the church and helps to keep the conscience clean. But it does more! It encourages others in their purposes and hopes to see their comrades and neighbors assemble and to join them in the worship of Almighty God. (Taken from Lourey Airmen—27 March, 1953.)

Warm Personal Ministry

By Harry Whipple

THE VALUE of a warm personal ministry cannot be overemphasized. To discover the need for such a ministry we need only to read the headlines of the daily papers. Misunderstandings, complexes, shattered hopes, suicides—all these and many more are commonplace. Society labels those so afflicted as neurotics; yet why do they become thus? Too often the misfit is suffering from nothing more than a lack of sympathetic understanding from associates. Moreover, the so-called maladjusted ones are not the only people who need close friends. Some may appear, on the surface, to be inwardly serene and to have normal, well-adjusted existences, while in reality they are carrying very heavy burdens. They may be yearning for someone in whom to confide—someone of a kind, sympathetic nature who would invite their confidence.

Unless we manifest a little love and are interested in the problems of others we cannot hope to know of the trials, the temptations, and in some cases the deep despair that is theirs to endure.

True there are some problems which each individual must solve for himself. In such cases we can do little to help except pray. Yet we must be alert lest we turn a deaf ear to the person who yearns for our sympathy and understanding.

SOME OF THOSE we attempt to serve may feel it is their duty to endure their misfortunes in silence and rebuff our advances. While we do not wish to become a wailing wall where self-pitiers may bemoan their fate (for such does more harm than good), yet some whose pent-up feelings have reached proportions too great to be borne alone need to unburden themselves. And the Christian worker must be able to show such a person that God is big enough to meet all his needs if he but has the faith of a grain of mustard seed.

It is sometimes hard to break through reticence and gain confidence. But confidence begets confidence, and some will only unburden themselves to those who have first confided in them or sought their help in solving some problem.

We can do our best work in evangelizing when our efforts are closely co-ordinated with the church program. As an organization the church can accomplish things the individual cannot, and the more efficiently the work of the church is carried on the greater its potential for good. Yet as an organization we should not become cold or impersonal, nor should we ever forget that people are, after all, human beings, and that they prize the little formalities that confirm their sense of dignity and self-esteem.

WHILE WE STRIVE for the more efficient, the more perfect way to reach our goal we must also cultivate that spirit of brotherly love and devotion which will bring us in close harmony with Divinity. We must make our ministry a personal one; then the church which we represent will be a warm living thing, dynamic in purpose, and magnetic in effect. For she can be only as strong as the strength brought to her by her members. She will be as spiritual and as influential in the community as those who bear her name, and no more. For the church is you and me and all the others who bear His name.

People of the world in their turmoil and uncertainty cast about for a solution to their problems. In desperation their eyes rest upon the church. We are being tested, compared, evaluated. They are beginning to wonder if the answer lies in a return to God. We have the solution to many of these problems, but do we demonstrate that fact? The opportunities are manifold and the time is ripe. Shall we move forward now, taking full advantage of the existing conditions in the world today?

The proponents of the totalitarian systems are seeking to destroy Christianity while belittling the dignity of man by taking away his right of free choice and subjecting him to regimentation and slavery. But their works and theories are the result of darkened minds separated from the intelligence of God; they will not be able to stand when exposed to the blazing light of the gospel.

Yes, for an effective ministry we need the organization of the church with her departments—the preaching, the church school, the prayer services, and all the other activities. We need the services of members of the priesthood in their various offices. But to complement these and round out an effective program of service to the community we need to give a warm personal ministry. We need to promote the close contact which comes of individual effort in evangelism. And while so doing we need a close walk with the Savior, for those we teach will use our lives, our everyday conduct, as a yardstick to measure the value of what we teach.

Serving the Communion

Between Baptism and Confirmation

By Leonard S. Rhodes

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article are those of the writer, and neither the Herald editors nor the church are in any way committed thereby. If it relates to or impinges upon church doctrine, the reader will exercise his own judgment as to whether or not the writer is in harmony with the church. Should this article provoke others to write on the subject, their efforts should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—EDITORS

RECENTLY I TOOK part in a Communion service at which several attended who had been baptized a few days previously, and who for personal reasons had asked that their confirmations take place at a later date. They had come evidently expecting to receive the Communion. Consequently I was somewhat disturbed when the elder in charge instructed them to refrain from partaking until after they were confirmed, asserting that they were not yet qualified members of the church.

In the branches where I have served as pastor I have made it a practice, in so far as practicable, to have confirmations take place at the first Communion service following baptism. Sometimes the candidates would be served the Communion before they were confirmed; I found that this procedure built up an excellent spiritual atmosphere for the confirmations to follow.

But the objection is made that baptized persons are not members until after they are confirmed, and therefore are not eligible to receive the Communion. One view is that confirmation brings the baptized person into "full church membership." A more extreme view is that "the sacrament of baptism is not completed until the confirmation has been completed, for this is the second part of the ordinance."

However, to avoid a mistaken conclusion we must understand this: to establish as fact either that confirmation is essential to full church membership, or that it is the second part of the ordinance of baptism, would not sustain the presumption that a baptized person may not be served the Communion until after confirmation. This matter is determined by the teaching of Scripture, historical precedent, and the significance of our doctrine of close Communion. A good place to start is with the teaching of our Lord Jesus.

And when the multitude had eaten and were filled, he said unto his disciples, Behold, there shall one be ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name.—III Nephi 8: 32.

BELIEVE AND BE baptized" are the minimum requirements set by Jesus for those who would receive the Communion. Doctrine and Covenants 17 was given to guide the church in the conduct of its affairs. Paragraph 18 reads: "the duty of the members after they are received by baptism." Please observe this text. It makes those who would unite with the church "members after they are received by baptism." And Section 20: 1 agree with it, commanding them, "Enter ye in at the gate" of baptism. Commenting on this section, President F. Henry Edwards calls baptism "the door" to church membership.* During my entire forty-five years of membership in this church the missionaries have never departed from their teaching that baptism is the door of admission to the church. Continuing the quotation from 17: 18.

The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to their understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders; so that all things may be done in order.

This gives us the following order: first, baptism; second, "partaking of the sacrament"; and third, "being confirmed." It cannot be argued that the foregoing order has no significance, because the text clinches it in the final words, "so that all things may be done in order." Has it now become heresy to observe that order?

IN ACTUAL PRACTICE has the Communion ever been served to persons who were baptized but not confirmed? We turn first to the greatest historical event of the church, its organization on April 6, 1830. After giving Joseph Smith's account of events leading up to the organization of the church, and of the revelation instructing them exactly how to proceed, The Story of the Church, Chapter IX, continues:

Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our Heavenly Father we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers, in the things of the kingdom of God and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by unanimous vote.

I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," after which he ordained me also to the office of an elder of said church.

We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them, also wine, blessed it and drank it with them.

We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; and be confirmed members of the Church of Christ. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a very great degree.

HERE IS HISTORICAL precedent at top level. Here the procedure followed complies with divine instruction previously given, making the precedent fully authoritative. And here again (after baptism first) the Communion comes second and confirmation comes third in order, as provided in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18. A statement by President Frederick M. Smith throws a flood of light upon this discussion. He says:

In my opinion it may rightfully be held that the ordinance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is second in importance and significance only to the rite of baptism. In fact it is closely connected with the first; for while in the initiatory rite we make and assume the covenant of membership, here we renew that covenant.—Priesthood Journal, July, 1935, Volume 2, No. 1, page 3.

Here again we find the Communion in second place. Baptism is defined as "the covenant of membership," and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as the renewal of that covenant. Thus indeed are they closely connected.

In the light of the foregoing it would have been illogical to confirm the members first and serve them the Communion afterward. The six men who organized the church had been baptized at least nine months before its organization. Orderly procedure made it logical for each one first to renew his covenant of membership, thus to qualify himself spiritually for the confirmation to follow. We who feel the need of renewing our covenants at the monthly Communion service will readily understand this.

President Smith's statement throws a clear light on the meaning and significance of our close Communion doctrine. By baptism we enter the door of the church. By it we become members of the church. Thus we make and assume the covenant of membership. From time to time we renew our covenant of membership as we share in the Communion. But obviously one cannot renew a covenant which he has not made. For this reason the church withholds the Communion from those who have not been baptized. We believe the Communion should be served to those only who have assumed the covenant of membership and are willing to renew it. This summarizes our doctrine of close Communion.

IT IS REASONABLE to presume that a baptized person, not yet confirmed, is as competent to renew his covenant by sharing the Communion as he was originally to make it by baptism. If after sharing the Communion he is confirmed, his confirmation just as truly confirms the renewal of his covenant as it would the original covenant made at baptism. This is what took place on April 6, 1830, when confirmations followed the Communion, and the Holy Ghost was poured out upon them "to a very great degree."

Lest some suppose that organizing the church in some way made it necessary to reverse the procedure, I give another instance where the Communion was served to members not yet confirmed. It was the occasion when Newel Knight and his wife, neither of whom had yet been confirmed, became the guests of Joseph and Emma Smith, with John Whitmer, at Harmony, Pennsylvania. Upon deciding to confirm the Knights and partake of the Communion together, Joseph Smith set out to buy some wine, only to be turned back with the command to use new wine of their own make. Joseph wrote:

In obedience to the above commandment we prepared some wine of our own make, and held our meeting, consisting of only five. . . . We partook together of the sacrament, after which we confirmed these two [persons] into the church, and spent the evening in a glorious manner.—Church History, Volume 1, pages 115, 116.

NOW TO SUMMARIZE. I have set forth five instances in which the order of procedure was

First, baptism

Second, partaking of the Communion

Third, confirmation

The first instance was in a revelation giving in order the steps to be taken in organizing the church; the second was an account of the steps taken when the church was organized on April 6, 1830. Thus revelation and history complement each other to validate a procedure and establish a precedent of unimpeachable authority. The third instance was in a revelation of the law to the church setting forth the order of procedure to follow baptism; and the fourth instance was a Communion-confirmation service conducted by Joseph Smith, president of the church. Thus again revelation and history unite to give us the law and an exemplification of its meaning, thereby setting an added precedent of what is orderly procedure for these important rites.

The fifth instance was by inference from the fact that President Frederick M. Smith interpreted the Communion as being (a) second only to baptism in importance and significance, and (b) closely connected with baptism, in that baptism is the covenant of membership, and partaking of the Communion a renewal of this covenant. If it is logical for a covenant to precede its confirmation, is it not equally logical for renewal of a covenant to precede confirmation?

If as the courts declare and our ministers teach, our church is the "true and lawful continuation of" the church organized in 1830, and if it "was organized pursuant to the constitution, laws and usages of said original church," then the foregoing is a law and usage of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Moreover I have searched diligently, and I find no revelation or enactment by our General Conference that in any way invalidates or disqualifies the foregoing law and usage. It therefore remains valid procedure to serve the Communion to persons who have been baptized but not yet confirmed.

NOTHING IN THIS ARTICLE should be construed to mean that we should henceforth serve the Communion to baptized persons before confirming them. Where baptism is followed by confirmation the same day or some days later certainly there is no urgency for serving the Communion before the next regular Communion service.

This may well suggest the question, If it is proper to confirm immediately following baptism, what reasons exist in a well-organized branch for delaying confirmation beyond the next Communion service? In reply I quote President F. Henry Edwards' commentary on Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18:

"Sufficient time to expound all things . . . previous to their partaking of the sacrament and being confirmed . . ." In actual practice we instruct prospective church members in the duties of church membership prior to their baptism, so that it has been quite legitimate for their confirmation to follow almost immediately. Those who join the church from the church school, might well be baptized when they are ready to affirm their allegiance to God and the church, and then continue their study until they are prepared for full membership. The advantage of delaying confirmation until prospective members understand "all things concerning the Church of Christ" is that they thus gain an advantage of obedience to the ordinance of baptism in their preparation for the full church membership.—Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, page 80.

President Edwards here touches a problem of growing importance to many local church workers. As it becomes more and more the established practice for parents and pastors to lead their children to baptism at eight years, the more evident it becomes that too many of these children grow up knowing too little about the great doctrines and objectives of the church. If these child members were required to study a course of instruction preparing them for full church membership, culminating in their confirmation, I believe this would largely solve this problem, promote their spiritual development, and add meaning and endowment to their confirmation. God in his infinite wisdom and foresight must surely have placed the "sufficient time" clause in the church law to meet this need.

Then there are the parents who say, "I want my child to wait till he understands what he is doing before he joins the church." I believe the "sufficient time" clause would help to overcome their objections.

Nearly every experienced pastor has been asked to baptize persons who knew all too little about the church and its teachings. Either he has put them off with the advice to learn more about the church first, or he has weakly admitted them to baptism—and brought forth spiritual dwarfs. The "sufficient time" clause would have solved this problem with much better results.

THIS IS A TEACHING CHURCH. Our appeal is to the intellect as well as to the emotions. A knowledge of the great doctrines of the church carries promises of greater spiritual stability, growth, and achievement. For those who have not learned these truths previously, the time to teach them—according to our inspired word—is shortly following baptism. Thereby they approach confirmation assured of a greater spiritual endowment. And thus the "sufficient time" clause opens the door to a more fruitful church life.

We come now to the meaning of the rite of confirmation. Some appear to have read meanings into this beautiful rite that are not there. Our Scriptures teach that confirmation is by the laying on of the elders' hands, conveying the promise of God, "I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them" (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18; 32: 3). Further light is shed upon this rite by defining the word "confirm." I quote from the dictionary:

Confirm: 1. To make firm or firmer; establish; strengthen, as in a habit. . . . 4. To give new assurance of the truth of; verify; corroborate.—Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, Fifth Edition.

Confirm: 1. To assure by added proof; corroborate; verify; make certain. 2. To add firmness to; strengthen. . . . Syn. . . . Both confirm and corroborate presuppose something already existing to which the confirmation or corroboration is added.—Funk and Wagnall's Desk Standard Dictionary.

These definitions must surely reflect the meaning of the rite of confirmation. It is not a rite of admission; instead it confirms the admission as an established fact and seeks to make the one admitted firm or firmer in the faith. It is a ritual petitioning God to confirm his acceptance of the new member's faith, repentance, and baptism by giving him the Holy Ghost to establish him in the faith. The individual comes to the church; the church baptizes; and God confirms.

To me the rite of confirmation is the symbol of hands outstretched to help, hands of love and blessing, hands of spiritual power and uplift, hands and hearts that God will use to make the new member firm in the faith.

Preparing this article for publication has strengthened my faith that God, who knows the end from the beginning, did well for us when he made baptism the door of admission to the church and the covenant of membership, and close Communion the means whereby all baptized members—including any not yet confirmed—may renew this covenant periodically. I am further confirmed in the faith that divine wisdom is resident in the law that provides a sufficient time for those who need further instruction to receive it in preparation for the great confirmation of God by the gift of the Holy Ghost. Let us ask for the old paths and the good way that we may walk therein.

Paul, by Martin Dibelius and Werner G. Kummel, Westminster Press. Price $2.50.

This book is as interesting as it is scholarly. As imminent professors of New Testament, Professors Dibelius and Kummel answer many of the questions concerning the controversial apostle of the first century. They report as scientific students, using only the established facts to draw the best-founded conclusions. Adding religious convictions given by revelation in the latter days, those of the Restoration should find this book a complement to their educational reading.

Martin Dibelius planned the book and completed about two thirds of it before his death in 1947. Werner G. Kummel, professor of New Testament at Marburg University and distinguished student of Dr. Dibelius, edited and completed the work. The uninterrupted flow of thought is testimony of how well he accomplished his task.

The authors strive to give the reader a scholarly approach to understanding the apostle to the Gentiles in the light of established facts from history of his own day. They discuss the authenticity of his letters as contained in the canon of Scripture and the reliability of the Acts as a source of facts concerning his life. They look particularly to the effect of the Jewish and Greek traditions upon his life. They record his intense struggle to keep the Christian faith from Jewish confinement of law and custom and from pagan corruption.

The concluding thought of the book is the following statement of the purpose of Paul's work: "It has been Paul's historical work across the centuries to turn men back to the Lord into whose service he had unreservedly committed himself. And today, too, Paul still fulfills this task for everyone who is ready to listen to his message, whether we meet him with theological questions or simply with seeking hearts: 'For I decided to know nothing among you except Jesus Christ and him crucified' (I Corinthians 2: 2)."

If I were to criticize the book in any way, it would be that there is a slight tendency toward modernism in rationalizing religious experience. However, the authors quickly return to the basic process of learning by fact and by divine direction. After reading the book, I feel that I know Paul more intimately.

The Resurrection and the Life, by Leslie D. Weatherhead, Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1953. Price, $1.

Leslie Weatherhead has rendered a ministry to the Protestant world by this stirring testimony of his conviction of the resurrection of Christ. The writings of some Protestant churchmen leave much to be desired in their treatment of this vital Christian doctrine.

The reading of this little book breathes the assurance of what we celebrate at Easter, yet sometimes fail to know—Jesus is alive today! He is available for fellowship that will transform our lives. Mr. Weatherhead puts it this way:

You see, when he lived in the flesh among men, it was not what he said and did which changed men's lives, wonderful and beautiful though his words and deeds were. It was the very fact of his friendship. If you could live with him for a week, or even a day, I am certain that all that is good and noble in you would be strengthened, and all that is bad would wither and die. Now that is what happened in Galilee. Men and women were changed. Simple peasants and fishermen and housewives became saints. The only explanation that the world could find to account for the change is very simply stated in the New Testament: "They have been with Jesus." . . . Nowadays Christ does not often "appear" to people, but he visits their thoughts; and then their thinking about other people is broad and noble and true. He visits their feelings; and then they feel they can get on better with difficult folk. They are more tolerant of people with a different outlook. . . . He visits their will; and they are not concerned with just their own private and selfish ambitions. They hate the evils in the world that make men miserable, . . . and they determine in his name to build a new world where God's good gifts can be shared among men of all nations and his will be done on earth. . . . He is changing men's lives, altering their reactions to life.

One day God ministered to me some understanding of how much he is at work in the lives of men and women about us every day. Books like this one help us understand the nature of fellowship others share with him. As I read this book I sensed the spirit of the living Christ. Leslie Weatherhead knows something of communion with Jesus.

Here are some of the chapter headings:

Christ Is Risen

Jesus Christ is alive. He is as near to you as he was to Peter when they were fishing on the Sea of Galilee. And he offers the same transforming friendship which is the very heart of the gospel. He is still alive! Still an available friend!

Christ Offers Life Now

Being saved is finding the path home. A man isn't lost because he hasn't arrived home. No one is lost who knows the way home.

Christ Offers Life Hereafter

My opinion is that everybody survives death, but Christianity offers something more than mere survival. It offers something worth calling life.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints can find in this book illustrations and ideas which are thought provoking. If they read it they will better understand the relation-

Question Time

Question:

Please explain I Timothy 5: 24: "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; others follow after."
Ontario B. J. M.

Answer:

Weymouth's translation is as follows: "The sins of some are evident to the world, leading the way to your estimate of their characters, but the sins of others lag behind." Moffatt translates it thus: "Some people's sins are notorious and call for judgment, but in some cases sin only comes out afterwards."

The verse has been somewhat obscured in the Authorized or King James Version and some others through being separated from its context by verse 23, which apparently is quite aside from the subject. This verse (23) reads: "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine oft infirmities."

It should be noted that Weymouth places this verse in parenthesis, while Moffatt leaves it out entirely with an explanatory footnote that the words are "either marginal gloss or misplaced." It is of further significance that the Inspired Version moves its position, making it verse 25 instead of 23. This helps to make it clear that the verse in question (I Tim. 5:24) was intended as an elaboration of verse 22. In other words, it was Paul's way of exhorting Timothy to be cautious in consideration of consecrating and setting men apart to solemn priesthood responsibility by the laying on of hands. Sincerity, contrition, and dedication of heart must always be required for the performance of any sacred ordinance. Some men's sins (self-centered motivation or unworthiness) are not easy to detect, but they show up later to the injury of the work. Superficial judgment in this, by Timothy or any other responsible minister, would not suffice.

HAROLD I. VELT

Question:

I have heard a prophecy and have also read patriarchal blessings which said that some "had heard and obeyed the gospel in the spirit land before coming into this world." Does this conflict with the law of agency in accepting the gospel here?
Ontario Mrs. H. F.

Answer:

Not necessarily. Yet it would be erroneous to suppose that the gospel of regeneration, such as is required in this life, could have been obeyed previously. It is because of the fallen state of man in this life, that such is required. "Teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made . . . even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water and of the Spirit."—Genesis 6: 61, 62, I.V.

Logically this would not apply in the pre-existent spirit world. The law of agency, as far as human beings are concerned, should not be affected by hope of the rewards of a previous state, regarding which the Lord has seen fit to reveal so little. Our future judgment will be according to deeds done in the body. (See II Cor. 5: 10.)

HAROLD I. VELT

Question:

Latter Day Saints quite often speak of members being "lost" to the church. What exactly constitutes such a state of being? Can one properly be called "lost" before he has been formally removed from the church membership records, either by his request or because of expulsion? Isn't there some term that could be used to denote inactivity in church affairs? What is the minimum requirement for not being "lost" to the church?

Missouri

Mrs. G. T.

Answer:

The terminology referred to is strictly unofficial but frequently used. It is generally used in reference to members who are inactive with the connotation that they shall never be active. In other words, church members use this phrase to refer to other members whose support they believe to be lost to the church.

This phrase must always remain unofficial, for who can say that anyone is "lost to the church"? Many of our most active members could at one time have appeared beyond reach of the ministry of the church. Even those withdrawn or expelled cannot be placed in this "lost" category. Scarcely a month passes but one or more persons who have withdrawn or been expelled are restored to full fellowship in the church.

The only accurate term to designate one sometimes referred to as "lost to the church" is "inactive." Although I know of no official definition of this term when used in connection with a church member, certainly one who does not attend and does not support the church in any way is inactive.

Actually I believe no one can properly be referred to as "lost to the church" as long as he lives. Many appear to be lost. But who can say what the future may hold for any given person?

MERLE GUTHRIE

Question:

Are the Hebrew and Aramaic languages closely related?
Indiana Mrs. A. U. M.

Answer:

Yes, Hebrew and Aramaic are related languages. They are derived from an original Semitic tongue and were allied dialects. It is evident that Abraham was related to the early Aramaean strain which as stated above was of Semitic origin.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Were not the early people of Babylonia and Assyria the Aramaeans?
Indiana Mrs. A. U. M.

Answer:

The Aramaeans, a nomadic people, came westward into the Palestinian area about 1500 B.C., perhaps from ancient Syria. They are related to the Semitic groups of Babylonia and Assyria. However, to classify all the people of Babylonia and Assyria as Aramaeans would be incorrect, for these areas were already populated before they arrived.

The Power of Love

By Pamela Price

KATE LANE hurriedly left her ironing for the fourth time that morning and rushed to the front yard when she heard Robin, her two-year-old, screaming.

"What in the world is wrong this time, Rita?" she asked her six-year-old daughter.

"Well, we were playing with the trike when Sammy and Christy came over," Rita explained. "They told me that they wanted to ride, and I said, 'Wait til Robin's turn is over.' And they just dumped him over on the sidewalk."

As Kate led her two-year-old son into the house a feeling of utter despair came over her. She and her family had lived in the new neighborhood for a month, and not one day had passed yet without trouble between the neighborhood children and her own.

"Rita," Kate said, when Robin had quit crying, "I want you and Robin to go upstairs and play your records and look at books until lunch time. I must finish this ironing if I can."

It was when she started to iron Rita's new dress that Kate noticed the large tear in it. She remembered how her daughter had worn it for the first time to church school last Sunday. Kate had been preparing lunch after she and her family had arrived home when Rita had come into the house crying.

"What's the matter, Rita?" Daddy had asked.

"Beverly Jones came out where I was and asked me to play in the sand pile. I told her that I would have to go change my dress first, and she just ran right up and jerked on the ruffle as hard as she could."

As Kate held the torn dress, she could not keep back the tears. Suddenly her problems overwhelmed her. The missing belts which the children said were jerked off by their playmates and carried home, the broken front window which a rock had come flying through, and her own children's unhappiness in the neighborhood made Kate unhappy.

"What can I do?" she asked herself as she looked at the torn dress. "I wish that we'd never seen this place. I wish that we didn't live here. In fact, I wish it so much that I will ask David if we cannot move."

THAT NIGHT, when the children were sound asleep, Kate went into the living room where David sat reading the mail. She stood by silently until he had finished.

"Come on, Kate, tell me your latest problem," David teased. "I can always tell when you have something serious to say. When you have good news or when you are happy, my mail doesn't keep you quiet."

He glanced up laughingly but stopped short when he saw the tears in his wife's eyes.

"David, I can't stand this neighborhood any longer," she cried. "I hate it! The people here are terrible. They are ruining our children's lives as well as mine. Let's sell and move!"

"Why, what's wrong?" David inquired. "I had no idea that you were unhappy here. It's the kind of house we've always dreamed of owning. I thought you liked it here and was happy. We both felt it was an answer to prayer. What happened?"

WHEN she had finished telling him of the trying experiences of the past month, David asked, "Do you think that Robin and Rita are causing some of the trouble?"

"Robin and Rita are not above fighting and quarreling," the worried mother answered. "But this destructiveness, such as throwing rocks and tearing clothes and deliberately knocking someone to the sidewalk is more than I can stand. When I saw Robin throw a rock at Beverly, I made him come in and sit down for a while. When Rita picked one of Mrs. Brady's prize roses, I made her go apologize. But when Sam Brady came over here and carried the stones from my flower bed away to make a fish pool in his own back yard, his mother did not say a word.

"Our children can't sleep in the afternoon because Sam stands and yells as loud as he can until they get up and go play with him. There's not one quiet hour a week in which I can prepare my church school material. The children all around us are out playing until nearly midnight every night. Now Rita and Robin are rebellious about going to bed right after supper. These parents have no system whatsoever in their homes."

"I see," her husband said kindly. "But, Kate, we mustn't let our problems rob us of the opportunity to help these people. Moving right now might create an even greater problem for our family. Let's try praying about it. If we moved now, we'd be running away from this neighborhood before we really gave it a try. Let's ask God to help us."

TOGETHER they knelt as they had done so often since their marriage nine years ago. A feeling of assurance and trust swept over Kate when she felt David's strong hand clasp her own.

David prayed first. He knew that the problem was real and that, unless a solution was found, their family might face an even larger problem if they decided to move to another new neighborhood.

When it was Kate's turn, she prayed just as earnestly as her husband had. "Our Father," she said, "help us to find an answer to our problems, and if there is anything which I can do, give me the strength to do it."

"You know, David," she said later in the evening, "there's a new thought in my mind. I've been blaming the other children, when all the time they aren't to blame. Our standards are higher. You and I expect more from our children. Maybe these children and their parents do not know about Jesus or brotherly kindness. Perhaps we can help them by loving them as Christ taught us."

"I had the same thought while we were praying," her husband asserted. "I remembered how Beverly tore Rita's dress Sunday, probably not because Rita wasn't ready to play with her, but because Rita was dressed nicely and had gone to church and she didn't get to go. I think we should try to make friends with our neighbors and invite them to church."

THE NEXT MORNING Kate placed a big plate of cookies on the table before she started her mending. It was not long before she laid her sewing down though, for angry shouts and Robin's wail sent her to the door.

"Now what?" Kate called to the children, who stood around Robin.

"Mrs. Lane," Christy told her, "your little boy was making a road in the sand pile when Sammy came up and turned that big bucket of water over his head."

Kate's first thoughts were thoughts of anger. "I'll tell Sammy to pick on someone his own size," she told herself. "I'll also tell his mother to keep him in his own yard."

As she led the dripping boy through the house, Kate's eyes rested on the plate of cookies on the table. Suddenly she was ashamed of her angry thoughts—ashamed that she had forgotten Christ so quickly and that she was going to try to love her neighbors as herself.

As soon as Robin had been changed to dry clothes, Kate came out on the porch with the plate of cookies. Sammy, who had run home as fast as his little bare feet would carry him, now stood peeping from behind a big tree in his yard.

"Sammy, Sammy," Kate called. "Would you like to have some cookies?"

He eyed her suspiciously from behind the tree.

"Come on, Sammy, I have some cookies for you and all of the other children."

Very slowly he walked through the gate and up to the porch.

"Beverly, Christy, come and join us," Kate said.

"Would you like some milk, too?" she asked the little ones.

When they were all seated on the porch with their milk and cookies, Kate said to them, "Now when someone does something good for us, what do we say?"

"Thank you," they all answered together.

"Well, Jesus and God made this beautiful earth where we live. They give us our food, and all of the nice things which we have to eat and drink. Would you like to say 'thank you' to Jesus?"

"Yes," they all answered loudly.

After they had said a thank-you prayer and had eaten the food, Kate said, "I'll bet that all of you like stories, don't you?"

"Yes, but my mamma won't read to me," Sammy told her. "She's too busy. She doesn't have time."

"We usually have a story before nap time," Kate told them. "Ask your mothers if you may come and listen to our story right after noon."

THE CHILDREN played happily that morning. It was nap time before Kate realized it and the group sat eagerly around her while she read. Then Rita and Robin went to bed, and their friends went home.

Kate sat down to prepare her lesson material for next Sunday's church school class. Everything was unbelievably quiet. "I have tried hard today," she thought, "and only time will tell what I have accomplished."

Suddenly, there was a thundering noise in the direction of Sammy's house. When Kate looked out of the window, her heart sank within her, for she saw Sammy with a giant drum swinging from his neck come bounding through the gate. With every step he hit the drum and it responded with a mighty boom. Kate knew that after her two children awakened her study and meditation would have to come to an end. Rita would be cross from lack of rest, and Robin would be crying.

"Well, there goes my lesson!" she whispered to herself.

But Sammy's march was short-lived. "Sam-u-el, Sam-u-el," called his mother. "Rita and Robin are asleep. Wait until they wake up to let them play with your drum."

Sammy stood on Kate's side of the fence as if he were deciding whether or not to obey.

"Come on home now, Samuel," his mother coaxed. "Mrs. Lane was good to you and read you a story. Now let's be nice to her and let her rest."

"Will you read me a story, please?" begged the little boy.

"Yes, you come on in. I'll try to read to you for a while each day while they sleep," Kate heard his mother answer.

Tears came to Kate's eyes as she watched the little boy run eagerly to his mother. A feeling of deep joy filled her heart, not because she would have an hour of peace and quiet every day, but because a little boy needed his mother, and that mother had found time for her young son. Her heart swelled with the realization that never before had Sammy wanted to share any of his toys with her children. Suddenly she knew that one family can change the course of affairs in an entire neighborhood. Her thoughts broadened, and in her mind's eye she saw whole cities, states, and nations changed by the power of love.

With this thought came the words of the Master Teacher of all times, "Therefore, let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

As in Days of Old

By Betty Sanford Tripp

*The holy spirit is sent down
As in the days of old,
To bring to mind things that are past
And things to come unfold.*

NAUVOO REUNION is a magic name that catapults me back into year after year of warm memories like a faint perfume. These memories have endured because they are of days spent in the presence of God. Classes, preaching, recreation, fellowship, talking with old and new friends are among the high lights of these utopian weeks.

There was the year I was a sophomore in high school, asking myself if there really was a God. And if there was, did he care about what happened to me? There were the prayers and seeking and searching, plus the heartbreaking tears of futility which seem to come so easily, until that week on the banks of the Mississippi at reunion. The answer began when I heard his servant stand before our young people's class and ask, "How do you know there is a God?" Then there followed a week of breathless discovery as I listened to my questions being answered one by one, and felt the doubt and uncertainty melting away before the authoritative assurance of this man who had been ordained and set apart, as were the disciples of old, to bring comfort and healing to the souls of men and women. Step by step he led me through the tangle of my confused mind to the feet of the Master, and on the last morning of the reunion as we sat in the service of prayer, for the first time in my life I felt the Spirit of God move into my life. I felt the stirrings of it in my heart, and I arose to my feet. Under the rich influence of that same Spirit which must have rested upon Peter I could say, "I know that He is. I know that my Redeemer lives, for the Spirit has borne witness to me."

THE TESTIMONY I received that morning and the teachings of that week have never left me. Nor has the testimony of God's love and goodness through the years which followed. Sometimes we lose contact with our mountaintop experiences, but always they are there when memory returns to them. And when I am discouraged or troubled there comes to me an experience that I enjoyed at another reunion.

"David's Chamber" is a beautiful grove near Nauvoo where David Smith often went to meditate and commune with his Heavenly Father. It was there that many of our hymns were written. Almost every group of young people who attend the Nauvoo Reunion are privileged to meet for at least one fellowship service in this historic place.

I shall never forget the warm summer evening when, two by two, we walked down a little path where David might have walked, and formed a friendship circle on the flat rocks at the base of a tiny waterfall. The rocks were slightly damp, but we spread our blankets and sat down. The quiet of the night was broken only by the gentle dripping of the water and the quiet voice of God's servant as he called us to come up higher. For many, it was the first time they had ever offered a vocal prayer or testimony, but one by one they stood in their places and consecrated their lives to the work of the Master. The Spirit of God, as in the days of old, surrounded us and filled us with strength and conviction that remained with us as we ascended the hill. Still with me is the sound of our young voices as we walked through that reverent place, singing, "In this old, old path, made strangely sweet by the touch divine of his blessed feet."

The year 1948 brought blessing in an entirely different realm. It was at this reunion that I met the man I was later to marry. I had always felt that the same God who had heard my every prayer and had blessed me so abundantly would surely be as concerned as I that the life's companion I chose might be one who would help me in the establishment of a Zion home—one who would encourage the dedication of that home to the work of the Lord. So again, it was at a reunion that the Master saw fit to supply this need in my young life, and I was given the opportunity to embark on a new life of service to God.

THE MEMORIES have been rich and full, and the Holy Spirit indeed testifies of the things in the past, but my real purpose for sharing these experiences has been to share with others the most important of them all—the reunion of 1953.

As I walked the familiar grounds this year, as I visited with loved ones and friends, as I listened to the yearnings of the young, and the firm, unshakable testimonies of those who have given many years in service to their Lord, a ministry came to me such as I never would have dreamed possible.

Here I saw a young man's life changed! I saw a young girl's heart break and mend itself together again. I heard a testimony that shook me out of my lethargy and challenged me to be something better than I am. I heard an apostle of the Lord pouring out his heart to God's people. I heard him, in a tone of conviction and assurance, prophesy as did Peter, James, and John and promise rich blessings of peace and comfort, strength, and power to the children of the Master if they would but open their hearts. I experienced such a reformation in my heart that I have been able to see myself in all my pettiness, all my sins of omission. I have seen my broken covenants and have been humbled to my knees before God. I have at last realized what God has been trying to tell me for twenty-three years—that no one can assist in this work unless he has love and charity and virtue and an eye single to the glory of God.

"If you love him, why not serve him?" Not only by singing in the choir, teaching a class, and going to church, but by ridding your life of jealousy and selfishness, envy and pride—by actually living for Jesus!

The Nauvoo District Reunion of 1953 has given me the greatest gift I have ever received—the courage to look at myself as I really am, and the conviction that with God's help I can be what he wants me to be.

The Mightiest — By Edgar Pillsbury

THERE WAS ONCE a wealthy merchant, a citizen of a distant land, who had become very successful in trading. One day one of his servants came to him and said: "O Master, I bring thee bitter news indeed. One of thy servants hath stolen a silver goblet from thee. What shall I do?"

"What?" raged the merchant, becoming instantly infuriated. "How dare this man steal from one who is so rich, powerful, and great as I!" And he gave orders that his unfaithful servant should be imprisoned, saying: "It is too much for a person of my position to be treated so by an ungrateful servant."

NOW IT SO HAPPENED that this merchant was a close friend of the governor of his province, and on hearing that the governor was ill went to visit him.

On entering the governor's chamber the merchant exclaimed, "O, Excellency, what ails thee?" And the governor replied, "I have had the misfortune of being deceived by a wicked servant. Thinking the man honest, I entrusted a great sum of money—almost my entire fortune—into his care. And how did he repay this trust? By stealing the money from me. Upon hearing of this theft, I began to worry and subsequently became ill, because if my money should never have been recovered I would have become a very poor man. Fortunately the officials apprehended him, and he was brought before a magistrate who pronounced a hard sentence upon him." The governor shook his head, wrinkled his face into a scornful grimace, and continued, "It's unbelievable, but since then he has several times implored my forgiveness and requested my intervention on his behalf. But I would not, for why should one so great as I assist such a rogue?"

"Why, indeed!" exclaimed the merchant, who went on to explain matters pertaining to his own unfortunate affairs with his servant.

And both men agreed that in such cases the only solution was to deal hard with the culprits and show no mercy.

AS THEY THUS conversed, a servant interrupted by announcing to the governor that the king had come to visit him. The king entered, seated himself, and listened with interest as the two men told him about their untrustworthy servants and what had befallen them because of their servants' deceitful doings.

At last the king broke in and said, "Ah! I myself had a similar experience—." And he went on to tell how his treasurer had been caught misappropriating funds. "And how didst thou punish him?" interrupted the merchant.

"Punish him? I never punished him," answered the king. "I forgave him."

"Forgave him?" his friends echoed.

"But," said one excitedly, "thou art the king—the mightiest one in all the land! And this man hath stolen from thee. Why didst thou not seek revenge?"

The king's eyes twinkled. "Was not Christ more mighty than I? And did he not forgive Peter, even though that disciple denied him thrice? And on the cross at Calvary did he not find it within his heart to pray for those who were responsible for his crucifixion, saying, 'Father, forgive them for they know not what they do'? If Christ, the king of kings, the Son of the one infinite God, could find it within his heart to forgive others for their misdemeanors, who am I to punish my brethren and seek revenge? No! I forgave my treasurer, released him, and today he serves me well."

The king smiled, raised one eyebrow, gave the pair a knowing look, and concluded: "True greatness isn't measured by the position we hold but by the mercy we extend to others."

The British Isles Mission Reunion

The 1953 reunion of the British Isles Mission held at Enfield will long be remembered by those who attended, and for many reasons, but uppermost in our minds is the powerful and inspiring apostolic ministry rendered by Arthur Oakman. It was indeed a blessed privilege to have both him and his wife Elva with us; we shall ever be grateful for the light and help which they made available to us.

The reunion reached spiritual heights in which we truly felt the windows of heaven opened to us. We pray that the new vistas gained will be productive of still further growth in the year ahead.

After the official opening on Friday evening, Elder T. E. Worth in his address reminded us of the sacrifice made by the early missionaries of the Restoration to bring the gospel of the kingdom to England and said that because of their efforts we today were able to meet.

On Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday we met each morning from 9:00 to 10:00 for a general prayer service under the leadership of Apostle Oakman, while at the same hour two classes were provided for the children. At 11:00 the group divided into three classes—the women being taught by Sister Oakman, the men and young people by various appointees. Recreational activities were planned for each afternoon, and in the evenings we reassembled for a class period from 6:00 to 7:00 and for preaching from 7:30 to 8:30. Evensong, led by Brother Don Lents, concluded each day.

On Sunday the program was somewhat different. Activities commenced with a priesthood prayer service at 8:00 a.m. followed by a general Communion service at 10:00. Over two hundred were served the emblems, and the period of testimony, though necessarily brief, was most encouraging. At 3:00 p.m. Brother Victor Witte addressed the adults, while the children met in their various age groups. At 6:30 the church was again full to overflowing, and we enjoyed a rich fellowship as we joined in singing the songs of Zion, led by Gertrude Allen. Apostle Oakman was the speaker at the evening service, and in a very powerful sermon he presented the message of the Savior, challenging us to cultivate a knowledge of him so that we might find him within ourselves.

After the morning activities on Tuesday we met at 2:00 p.m. for the final dedicatory service of the reunion. It was an experience which challenged each who sincerely participated. The Scripture, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son . . ." was read in English, German, Norwegian, and Dutch; then Brother Oakman gave a short address, and Brother Lents reminded us of the necessity of each accepting the task which, as a result of the reunion, had been placed upon us.

The reunion period was from Friday evening, July 31, to Tuesday afternoon, August 4. During those four days we shared a fellowship and ministry which was truly outstanding. In addition to Apostle and Sister Oakman and their son, Channing, we were most happy to welcome again our own mission president, Don Lents, and his family; Seventies Tom Worth and Eric Rowe; and General Church appointees from the Continent: Victor Witte, supervisor of Continental Europe; Lou Zonker, minister in charge of Germany; Anton Compier, missionary in Holland; and Oskar Stüve, missionary in Germany. Also with us were Keith Bailey of Adelaide, Australia; Perce Judd, formerly of Australia and now pastor at Brooklyn, New York; and several American servicemen. Such an assembly, of course, gave the reunion theme, "Into All the World," great significance. The reunion was very well attended, and a remarkable spirit prevailed throughout.

A priesthood institute was held during the remainder of the week. At 9:00 a.m. each day the men met for prayer and at 11:00 a.m. and 7:45 p.m. for classwork. Sister Freda Schofield and her helpers provided lunches each day for those attending; this service was deeply appreciated.

It was with reluctance that we bid farewell to our brothers and sisters from all parts of the British Isles and Europe, but as we did so we felt that the ties of our fellowship had been immeasurably strengthened and the goals before us were within our grasp.

Note of Thanks

I want to thank all the Saints for their many kindnesses to me and to my daughter, Grace Holladay Loye, while I was so ill in the Sanitarium. I sincerely appreciate the cards, letters, plants, and especially the prayers of my friends. I want to thank the doctors and nurses for their services and also those who gave blood. My daughter said, "Mother, I never knew there were so many wonderful people in the world. I don't blame you for wanting to live here." A sister in the church took me to her home from the hospital and cared for me, and then other Saints who were going on vacation invited a friend from Washington, D. C., and me to stay in their home while they were away. My health is improving, and I am truly grateful. God has been good to me, and I pray he will bless each of you.

The Loss of a Ring

As one of Iowa's quick snow storms broke I found myself very much concerned. My husband had left our small town that morning in his car with part of his basketball squad while others had gone in other cars. They were on their way to attend a state tournament some hundred miles away, and they were due back home around midnight. At noon the blizzard began and lasted for several hours.

When midnight arrived I began listening for the familiar sound of the automobile and my husband's footsteps. At 3:00 a.m. he still hadn't arrived, and I became very concerned. My eyes held no sleep. Each minute seemed an hour. I tried to keep my hands and mind busy by sewing for our expected child, but soon I could sew no longer.

All this time I had been inwardly praying for the safe arrival of all concerned in the party. By four o'clock I was on my knees praying aloud, "Please, God, bring them home safely."

Mothers of the boys began calling to inquire if I had heard from them. I hadn't. I knew they had started home and possibly were unable to reach phones.

Around eleven o'clock the next morning I heard the familiar sound of the automobile driving up in front of our home after what seemed to be days of time had gone by. I watched my husband come up the walk—unshaved, dark circles under his eyes, clothes disheveled and wet! He came in, sank in an easy chair, and began telling me his experiences. It happened that the car became stranded, and he and the boys spent the early hours in the automobile. Finally at daybreak they were able to get help. Also during the night he helped another man change a tire and during this change his hands became very cold, causing his fingers to shrink in size. At some time while changing tires his wedding ring slipped from his finger and was lost. He and the boys searched, but the ring was lost. I glanced at my husband's left hand, and all that was left was the wide skin mark where the ring had been. Then I began to cry over his loss.

So quickly I had forgotten God's wonderful blessing to us. He had answered my prayers to bring my husband and the boys safely home, and up to this moment I hadn't even given "thanks." Instead I was sad over a small material loss.

At this moment I was able to see how selfish I had been—asking of God and then forgetting to thank him.

God works in many ways. I feel I was taught a lesson so effectively that I shall never forget this particular blessing and the loss of a ring.

The Gift of Peace

My Graceland College years are pleasant memories to me now. Perhaps the richest of my experiences there happened one evening when I was a freshman. That evening, as I had done many times before, I walked alone to the foot of the hill to gaze at the wide expanse of star-studded Iowa sky and listen to the sounds of the night. I felt a strong pang of nostalgia as I heard the barking of a distant dog mingled with the far-off roar of a motor and the solemn call of a cow. I loved to stand there and meditate, and as I did so another sound broke into the evening medley—a choir on the hill was singing "Alleluia" and "Glory to God." Tears came to my eyes as I thanked God for the gift of peace he was sending to me, a lonely girl.

It is often easy to forget to stop and listen for the peaceful sounds in the midst of a harried life, but if we do take time to meditate, we will hear God's "still small voice" speaking to us in our hours of need.

In Appreciation of Reunion

Those of us who attended the Center Stake Reunion know what a wonderful experience it was. I went to reunion this year seeking light and understanding, and never have things been made so clear to me. The sermons seemed as if they were being given by Christ himself, the forum discussions were very enlightening, and the classes were most helpful. I read from the Book of Mormon while I was there, and it seemed as if those people of ancient America were my friends of today. Because of this I now have a new appreciation for the book.

My greatest desire is to serve God by serving others. I do not believe we have time to wait but must get busy now and build the kingdom, or the day will surely come when this privilege will be taken from us. My prayer is that God will bless us as a church for the task that lies ahead.

A Written Testimony

I was baptized in 1948, but I cannot say that I was a true member of the church then. I found many worldly things more interesting—or so I thought at the time—but now I have found peace of mind, strength, and happiness such as I never knew before. I have greatly enjoyed being with the people here in the Northwest. They are the most gracious I have ever known. I have just returned from the Oregon District Reunion, and while I did not have the courage to stand on my feet and give a testimony, still I want to say how much this has meant to me. I do want to serve God in many ways. First, I want to be a better wife and mother. At church there is much I can do, and I pray that I will serve there in the way Christ would have me serve. I want to develop wisdom and kindness in teaching my class of primary children. When I step before a group, I want to have the courage to speak without forgetting what I intend to say. I want to serve until the end of time on earth and then I pray I shall be allowed to work for my Heavenly Father in eternity.

Linden E. Wheeler
Youngest Officer for Company

A HIGH TYPE Christian gentleman with an executive leadership equaled by no one in this line of work" is the description a fellow employer of Sears Roebuck and Company gave Elder Linden E. Wheeler of Dallas, Texas. Brother Wheeler has just recently been appointed one of the five assistant treasurers of Sears. He is their youngest general officer.

At a recent meeting of the company officials in Chicago, Brother Wheeler was given an opportunity to speak to the group. For years he had attended the meetings twice a year and taken only a nominal part in the discussions. At the fall meeting an unusual discussion on Christian ethics in business arose. When the discussion ended a banquet was held and Brother Wheeler, much to his surprise, was asked to give the invocation. This was the first time he had seen this done.

Then again completely unexpected, he was asked at the close of the banquet by the master of ceremonies to speak to the group on the topic of the discussion meeting, "Christian Ethics in Business." Brother Wheeler relates that this was an outstanding experience of being blessed by the Spirit with freedom of expression and clarity of thought. He paralleled the stewardships the men held with the company with those they hold with society. This was a wonderful opportunity to express some of the concepts of Zion's behavior.

Brother Wheeler began work for Sears as a tire salesman in the basement of the store at San Antonio. He has literally worked up to his present position for the company.

Serving in various capacities of leadership in the church in Texas, he was ordained a priest in 1938 and an elder in 1946. He has been a Zion's League leader, a counselor for the district president as well as serving in other district offices, and pastor of Dallas Branch, which position he now holds.

He is married to the former Stella M. Duker of Medina, Texas. They have two sons: Troyce, 12, and Larry, 6. Brother Wheeler credits his wife and children for the constant source of strength aiding his church work.

He also gives full credit for any success in business which might be his to the power of the gospel in his life. He has discovered that in living the principles of the church, he is recognized as a minister for Christ by men with whom he works. His testimony is: the "law of the Lord is perfect" in every phase of life.

Eight Men Ordained

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.—During March, the following were ordained to the office of priest: Ernie Sprecher, Henry Kinney, and Alden Chamberlin. Those ordained to the office of deacon were Tex Bullock, William Collins, Jr., DeWayne Allen, Lorne Worthington, and Richard Curtis.

A Zion's League institute was held March 27-29. Elder Carl Mesle, director of youth activities for the General Church, was in charge. Forty young people were registered.

District Zion's League retreat was held June 12-14 at Zephyr Lodge on Liberty Lake. Thirty Spokane Leaguers attended this retreat.

Elder A. F. Coleman, who was elected Zion's League leader, formed four commissions with adult supervisors and youth chairmen.

Pastor R. V. Webb and several other church officers were interviewed as part of the League Sunday evening study. Special services for Mother's Day and Father's Day were prepared by the League.

Eunice Farber conducted an Easter cantata by the combined church and mission choirs.

Jamie Lee, daughter of James and Wilma Mikesell, and Sharon and Elaine, daughters of Marion Seibert, were blessed by Elders Coleman and Webb on April 5.

On April 19 Jean Winship, Edith Barclay, Evelyn Weidman, John Weidman, Tim Lewis, Ted Morrisson, and JoAnn Morrisson were baptized. On Children's Day, June 14, there was a special baptismal service for Sharon Hill and Ronald and Donald Vick, who are cousins.

President of Seventies George Njeim and Missionary Don Landon presided over the district priesthood and women's institute May 8-10. Brother Njeim also held an evening series May 11-13.

Charles Emslie, elder in charge of the Moses Lake mission, gave a recital in the Spokane Branch May 17. His accompanist was Mrs. R. E. Edwards. There were 120 in attendance, and the proceeds went to the mission church building fund. Two talented nonmembers played several piano selections. A reception followed in the lower auditorium, honoring Brother and Sister A. C. Briggs on their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

With the branch and mission working together, the building fund for the North Hill mission has reached $8,500.00.

Among recent social events were a comedy play from which $440.00 was realized, women's department activities, organization of a men's club, and young adult activities.

The priesthood meets on alternate Thursday nights to share experiences and receive special training. There are three weekly cottage meetings in process under direction of Elder Vern Webb.

Among visiting ministers have been Dr. Roy Cheville of Graceland College, Elder Ruben Porter of San Jose, Elder Myron Schall of Sacramento, and Elder Pearl Reed, of Independence, Missouri.—Reported by FLORENCE WEIR

Men's Club Organized

ONTARIO, CALIFORNIA.—Present officers of the Ontario Branch are Elder William H. Kemple, pastor; Elders Frank Lacey and Clyde Roberts, counselors; Bonnie Richie, secretary; Louis Ferguson, church school director and minister of music; Vada Austin, women's leader; Charles Swain, treasurer and bishop's agent; Clyde Roberts, book steward; George Swain, young people's supervisor; Carol Roberts, librarian; Clyde Roberts and Richard Peterson, auditing committee; and Kenneth Duffy, branch historian and publicity agent.

Baptisms during the year include Lucille Katherine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Sershen, Anthony Greco and his grandson, James Hilton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Ferguson, Bruce Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Graham, and Robert Ogle and Patricia Ann, children of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Tucker, of Long Beach.

Seventy Glen Johnson conducted a series from May 10 to 22 at the church.

A men's club has been formed with an open membership. The purpose of the club is to assist in the program of the church and to promote a Christian fellowship inside and outside the church. Along with other activities, each member is contributing one book to the branch library.

The following children have recently been blessed: Russel Raymond, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Burke; Dianna, Debra, and Danny, children of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Thomas; Gary Michael, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bowman; Debra, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Lacey; Charles Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Jolicoeur, and Richard Trammell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reinhardt.

George C. Swain, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Swain, was ordained to the office of priest on March 15. Officiating in the ordination were Elders Rodney Engle and William Kemper. On March 8 Brother Kemper had the honor of ordaining his son, Samuel, to the office of elder. The service was held at Central Church in Los Angeles.

Those transferring into the branch during the year were Sister Eva B. Duffy from Bellaire, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Graham and sons Bruce Lee, Clyde Ellis, and Lynn Curtis; Mr. and Mrs. Lyle from San Diego; and Sister Vera DeKett, from Michigan.—Reported by KENNETH O. DUFFY

Children Baptized

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—A prebaptismal class was held at San Leandro church school, with Brother Robert Brown as the instructor. On completion of the course of study, six children, out of a class of nine, were baptized on May 10. They were Barbara Nelson, Joyce Willford, Donna Melton, Carol Jean Whiteman, Bonnie Lee Brown, and Ronald Caldwell. On June 14, James and Ann Barstad were baptized.—Reported by NELLIE D. MACDOUGALL

Plan to Purchase Additional Grounds

OREGON DISTRICT.—The first complete reunion since 1928 was held at the Lewis River camp grounds, July 18-26. From 1933 to 1950 the district met at Silver Lake with the Saints from the entire Northwest.

The reunion had an attendance of 433.

The General Church appointees for the reunion included the following: Bishop Willard Becker, Bishop Monte Lasater, Seventy George Njeim, Elders James Kemp and Don Landon.

On July 25, the annual district reunion business meeting was held and presided over by the district president, J. L. Verhei, assisted by Brother Lasater.

The following were elected to serve on the reunion committee: Brother Verhei and Elder F. E. Chapman were elected to six-year terms, Elders Miles Whiting and Harold Carpenter to four-year terms, Elders Clinton Dobson and Lloyd Shannon to two-year terms. The groups at reunion voted unanimously to purchase the property adjoining the grounds to the west. The amount of over thirty-five hundred dollars was raised during the reunion for a down payment.

After the business meeting the following were baptized: Pamela and Sharon Hartly by Brother Njeim; Norma Becker by Brother Willard Becker; Billy Watkins and Judy Lawler by Miles Whiting; and Ann Hudleson by Don Landon.

"The Holy City" was presented by the reunion choir under the direction of Elder Kemp.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

Seven Baptisms

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN.—On Children's Day, June 14, about one hundred members and nonmembers gathered by a lakeside as in the days of Mormon to witness the baptism of a family by Elder Myron Cornish. Those baptized were W. K. Wilkinson and his wife, Jessie, and their children, Herbert and James.

Brother Cornish also baptized Lloyd Laverty, eight years old. Two other eight-year-old boys were baptized by Priest Vandy Davies. They were Lyle Davies and Garry Laverty.

Elder George Miller assisted in the confirmations in the evening.—Reported by LEOLA CORNISH

Business Meeting Held

BISBEE, ARIZONA.—At the annual business meeting on October 25, the Bisbee Branch elected Priest Calvin Puckett pastor.

The Bisbee Branch has a membership of forty-six, with an average attendance of from sixteen to twenty-two.

The branch has met with Douglas Branch at several joint meetings. At the January meeting Brother Hollis Harris was baptized.

Just before Christmas, when Evangelist William Patterson was visiting, he and Elder Raymond Ratterree, pastor of the Douglas Branch, blessed the three children of Hollis and Mabel Harris. These children are the grandchildren of Brother Ratterree.

Two families have moved into the district: Brother and Sister T. B. Sharp and two sons, and Brother and Sister Alton R. Wright.

In November Roy Saltz and his wife, Fern, moved to St. David and have taken an active part in branch services. Brother Saltz is a teacher in the church school, and his wife is church school director. Charles Stewart and his wife, Mabel, from Tombstone have also joined in services.

The Bisbee Branch has taken an active part in the interchurch group. On July 12 the first meeting was held in the Lowell Women's Club. Previous meetings were held at the YWCA.

On August 2 an all-church picnic was held at the home of Brother and Sister Saltz, with friends from Douglas, Tucson, and Phoenix joining the fellowship and worship.

A number from the group attended the Mt. Lemmon Reunion, held August 9-16.—Reported by EULALIA BIRD.

Community Building Used for Services

HARDY, ARKANSAS.—The Hardy Branch holds services in the Cabin Creek community building located three and one-half miles east of Hardy, or one mile north of the Cabin Creek motel cabins. The building has two classrooms, a stage and pulpit, and there is electric lighting. Brother Floyd Swetnam is the pastor.

Brother Dean Myers is the church school director. The adult class uses for their study the book Fundamentals.

Brother Sharp held meetings in October and April, and two were baptized. Elder J. Charles May, conducted meetings here in the spring for five nights, showing pictures part of the time.

Brother Zeigenhorn holds services monthly in the Hardy Branch. He and Mrs. Zeigenhorn live at Fisher, Arkansas. Brother Nuckles has charge of services the fourth Sunday of each month. He and his family live in Caraway, Arkansas. The group meets every Sunday night, and have just finished An Introductory Study of the Book of Mormon.

The young people were in charge of the Easter program, "A Shadow Scene," directed by their leader, Mrs. Thelma Swetnam.

The women's department is under the leadership of Lucy Groves. They sponsored a Mother's Day tea for mothers and daughters, and during the winter and spring they made earrings to sell. For Memorial Day they made and sold sprays and wreaths, and they have also sent needlework to reunion. Their project for the year was to help finance the young people's way to reunion. In their classwork they studied the "Course of Appreciations," and "God in Everyday Living."—Reported by LUCY GROVES

Series of Meetings Held

DE KALB, TEXAS.—Elder James E. Renfro conducted a series of meetings August 5-16 in the De Kalb Branch. There was an average attendance of ninety-two each night, of which about twenty-three were nonmembers. The series closed with four baptisms on Sunday, August 16. A lunch was enjoyed in the park, and a confirmation service was held in the evening.—Reported by WILMA FRANCIS NICKS

Improvements Made in Church Building

SAINT CHARLES, MISSOURI.—Several improvements have been made by the St. Charles Branch. A new bulletin board has been purchased and placed in front of the church, and a new window has been put in the auditorium. A dehumidifier has also been installed in the basement.

Members and friends of the branch enjoyed a church picnic at Blanchette Park Saturday, July 25. Swimming and baseball were the high lights of the day, and in the evening a basket dinner was served in the memorial hall. Brother Marlin O. Nienhueser arrived on furlough from Fort Sill, Oklahoma, in time for the evening meal.

The group is happy to have Brother and Sister Brooks East back with them. The women's circle gave a reception in their honor to welcome them home.—Reported by FLORENCE HOLLANDER

Trip to Palmyra

TORONTO, CANADA.—Early Sunday morning, May 17, a group of Saints left Toronto intent on visiting Palmyra, New York, and all its historic sites. Elder J. L. Prentice organized the excursion and arranged for transportation and hotel accommodations in Rochester. Two bus loads of Saints included Brother Prentice's Bible class and a number from Woodhedge, Humber, and Toronto Branches.

The group arrived in Niagara Falls, U. S. A., in time for the morning church service, and were heartily welcomed.

On Sunday evening, in spite of rain, the group drove to the Martin Harris home. They were amazed at the amount of time and labor that must have been spent in building it, and at its stability today.

That evening the group also visited the Hill Cumorah. Even though the attendant turned on the floodlights, darkness and rain made it impossible to see much. It was agreed to make a return visit later.

The next morning the Saints went to the Sacred Grove, situated about one thousand feet up a side road, almost directly opposite the Smith home. They saw the tree at which Joseph Smith knelt to pray.

From the grove, the Saints went to the home of Joseph Smith, where they gathered in the living room, which has been refurnished with period furniture. In small groups they were conducted by a receptionist (placed there by the Mormon church) to the upstairs, including the martyr's bedroom, also refurnished in furniture of his period. The receptionist was courteous and well informed.

From here the group returned to Hill Cumorah. Here, in the daylight, they inspected the imposing monument to the angel Moroni, and the side of the hill where the golden plates were hidden.

The group returned through Rochester, thankful to Brother Prentice for arranging the trip, and anxious to take it again.—Reported by PHYLLIS L. MCLEAN

District Conference Held

CARLYLE, SASKATCHEWAN.—District conference was held at Saskatoon from July 26 to August 2. Officers elected were Peter Harder, district president; E. L. Bowerman and A. Bergeson, councilors; Ted R. Bowerman, secretary; Charles Nelson, church school director; Dora Carter, women's department leader; Orville Fisher, young people's leader; Joyce Fisher, music director; Rodrick Thompson, publicity agent; A. Powell, corresponding secretary; A. Bergeson and E. Baker, auditors; Charles Jenkins, treasurer and assigning officer, and William Cornish, nonresident pastor.

Charles Jenkins and Kenneth Fisher, both of Saskatoon, were ordained to the office of elder. Charles Nelson of Macklin, Saskatchewan District, William Earl Beckman of Paddockwood, Saskatchewan District, and J. H. Loucks of Saskatoon were ordained to the office of priest, and J. D. Williams of Weyburn was ordained a teacher. C. D. Williams of Weyburn and Walter P. Posnickoff of Saskatoon were recommended for ordination to the office of priest.

Purchase of a reunion ground and establishment of a young people's camp have been considered by the conference. There was a good attendance.—Reported by G. R. BOWERMAN

Texas Reunion

BANDERA, TEXAS.—The Texas Reunion was held June 20-28 at Bandera, observing the theme "The Challenge of the Restoration." The following roster of General Church appointees co-operated with local people to make the reunion a success: Apostle Charles R. Hield, Bishop Lewis E. Landsberg, and Elders Wayne Simmons, Carl Mesle, Arthur Rock, Charles Kornman, and Norman Cox. Apostle Hield was minister in charge, assisted by Southwest Texas District President J. E. Wilder and Central Texas District President C. W. Tischer.

The local women's departments, under direction of the two district leaders, Jessie Banta and Frances McCormick, sponsored a bazaar, proceeds from which were delegated to the reunion treasury. On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Dagmar Root reviewed The Silver Chalice by Thomas B. Costain; this was followed by a tea and reception for all women on the grounds. Daily classes were taught by designated speakers.

Young people were directed by Brothers Mesle and Simmons. Classes, two early morning prayer services, afternoon sports including swimming, and a moonlight hay ride were included in their activities.

Children's classes were directed by Mary Hall and a staff of teachers. Average attendance in the four- to twelve-year-old bracket was ninety. Four newly laid cement slabs, fourteen by eighteen feet, with tent roofs, served as outdoor classrooms. On Friday evening the children displayed their handcraft and told their studies in a special program. Norman Cox served as junior pastor. A daily nursery for babies through four years was in charge of the Pearsall women's group.

The dining hall, with its new wing addition making it T-shaped, was supervised by Roy Vandel and Ed Everett. Emma Jackson served as music director, assisted by Fred Weddle. Camp nurses were Doris Jackel and Loraine Cox. Ground supervisor and policeman were Bob Wakeman and Ralph Bobbitt, respectively.

Herald House was represented by Arthur Rock, who also gave several audio-visual demonstrations.

Those baptized during reunion were Rafe Curtis Heinlen, Pat Silvers, Miriam Parish, Dick Vorhees, Dick Duke, and Erwinna Lee Hodges.—Reported by LILLIAN MORSE.

Ordination Service

BRUSH CREEK, ILLINOIS.—Southeastern Illinois District held a special business meeting at Brush Creek August 9, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth presiding.

The following recommendations for the priesthood were approved: Russell Ellis of Ridgeway, Illinois, to the office of elder; Dean Shelton of Centralia, Illinois, to the office of teacher, Bennett Scarborough of Centralia, Illinois, to the office of deacon.

Russell Ellis was ordained by Apostle Chesworth, assisted by Elders James C. Daugherty and O. P. Allen. The statement of ordination was given by Elder Alma Andrews.

Special music was a duet by Sister Andrews and Sister Chesworth, accompanied by Sister Daphne Wolf at the piano.

Annual district conference was held at Marion, Illinois, September 5-6.—Reported by RUBY ELLIS

New Chapel Dedicated

AVA, MISSOURI.—The new church home at Ava was opened for worship on July 19, and two groups, one northeast of Ava and one west, now are joined with other Saints. It was originally a dwelling house, and is located on Locust and Madison Streets, just one block east of Highway 5. Many weeks of work, under the leadership of Elders L. L. Christensen and J. W. Davis, have converted it into a very neat chapel, with a main auditorium and two classrooms. The church is modern except for heating. All work was donated except the plastering. A beautiful pulpit was made by a brother of Elder George Doubledee. Brothers Christensen and Doubledee donated the material for the pulpit. Brother and Sister Bob Mercer traded their piano for the old one in the country church, and other members helped in various ways.

The July 19 service was opened with church school, followed by preaching by Elder Doubledee, with Pastor P. A. Foo in charge. Brother Davis sang a solo, and Carl, Rozema, and Mrs. Eldon Morris sang a trio. A basket dinner was shared at the noon hour.

At two o'clock Brother James Davis brought another fine message, and the choir sang two numbers. The chapel was well filled, some coming more than fifty miles to attend.—Reported by MRS. C. B. FREEMAN

...And Finally

HOW TO WRITE AN EDITORIAL

One works at many jobs around a university and meets many people in different capacities. A fellow worker was amazed to learn that I write editorials. "How do you write an editorial?" he asked. "Where do you get the ideas?"

For twenty-three years I have written editorials every week. Now I have to write them every day for a newspaper. Yet, confronted by the man's questions, I couldn't tell him. I didn't know. I waved my hands in a futile gesture. For once words didn't come. He must have thought I was silly, just standing there, saying nothing, with a funny expression on my face. I suppose he thinks I don't write them at all; or that somebody else writes them for me, like some of you do; or that I get them out of a book; which isn't true—though a sister once told me that I talked like a book, a sharp reproof indeed.

Then I thought of Mother Hubbard's cupboard (in the nursery rhyme) which she found bare when she went to it looking for a bone for the dog—probably to convince the dog, since she must have known. Writing an editorial is something like that. You sit down with a pencil or typewriter and wait hopefully. For a long time nothing happens. Nothing comes. Nothing at all.

After that I remembered Elijah and the widow who had a very little oil in the cruse, a handful of meal in a barrel, and two sticks. She began with so little, and she obtained so much from it. Writing an editorial is something like that.

Editorials are something that happen to you. You don't really write them at all. You wait for them, and they come along. One minute you are sitting there, your mind as vacant as a church on Sunday night. Next minute there is a little idea floating into the periphery of attention, and you begin picking at it with a few words to see what will happen. . . . From there on you follow the laws of grammar and the rules of composition, and the editorial gradually takes form and shape.

"Creative waiting" has something to do with it. You seem passive, doing nothing visible. But when an idea bussees in, you snatch it quickly and begin putting it down before it gets away. If there is an inspiration, the editorial comes. Without it, nothing.

But really, I don't know how editorials are written. They aren't written, as a letter is. They just happen to you. L. J. L.

MONSTERS

It isn't so long—a mere hundred and fifty years—since people saw dragons flying in the air at night, or so they believed. Do not despise those good folk for their credulity. They may have had reasons. If you want proof, turn on an electric light in your back yard any evening, then see the variety, the size, the awesomeness and ferocity of some of the bugs and varmints that come swarming around it. Chances are you'll see dragons, too, before the evening is over, and especially if one of them takes a dive under the collar of your sport shirt. L. J. L.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Frank Carl Mesle, Jr.

CARL ARRIVED in the field of ministry as the result of experiences and observations that convinced him nothing was more influential in solving the world's problems than getting Christian practices and standards into the lives of people.

He feels fortunate, he says, because his desire to serve arose out of the normal experiences of a young person who lived in a good church home in a small branch of the right church. His experiences in school, in Scouting, in industry, and finally in the Army, all helped convince him that the teachings of the church offer the only solution to the establishment of peace and the elimination of war, crime, poverty, disease, and ignorance. Somewhat hesitantly, but with deep convictions regarding the need, he finally accepted church appointment. He has never once regretted it.

Carl was born October 14, 1914, in Oneida, New York. He was graduated from high school in Sherrill, New York, in 1932, from Graceland College in 1936, and from the University of Iowa in 1937 with a B.A. He finished his formal training at the National Training School of the Boy Scouts of America at Mendham, New Jersey, in 1947.

He has had considerable Scout experience. He was an Eagle Scout, attending the International Jamboree in England in 1929. Professionally he worked in New Jersey as an assistant Scout Executive and as Field Executive in Independence, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas. He was in the Army from 1941 to 1946, moving from a private in a medical detachment to the responsibility for a branch of the Public Relations Division in the office of Chief of Engineers in Washington, D. C. He was discharged with the rank of major. During the war he served as associate pastor and youth leader in the Washington Branch.

Carl was ordained a priest in 1935, an elder in 1940, and a high priest in 1950. He accepted General Church appointment in September, 1947, and was assigned as youth leader in Independence. In 1950 and 1951 he tried to do that job, as well as to serve as General Church youth leader. In November, 1951, he was officially released from the first job and started devoting full time to the second. He now travels about the country visiting and ministering to youth groups and their leaders. When he isn't traveling he writes and edits materials for young people and their leaders, answers voluminous correspondence, and tries to devise better ways of making the church effective in the lives of young people.

In December, 1950, he, with Dr. Floyd McDowell, represented the church at the White House Conference on Children and Youth in Washington, D.C.

In 1941 he married Kay Sprague. They have three children, Sharon Kay, 9; Catharine Ann, 7; and Charles Robert, 3.

Carl is a man who enjoys life and shares his enthusiasm with the young people of the church. "In my experience," he says, "I have become convinced of one thing—it's more fun to be a Latter Day Saint."

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IS SPEAKER

President F. Henry Edwards preached last week at Taylorville, Illinois, and on Sunday, August 30, he was the speaker at the two morning services at Stone Church. In the evening President Edwards had charge of the Campus services, at which E. J. Gleazer, Jr., was the speaker.

ATTENDS DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Apostle Percy Farrow attended the Kentucky-Tennessee District conference at Memphis, Tennessee, August 28-30. Elders Wesley Burwell and J. H. Yager also participated. Elder R. T. Cochran was re-elected district president. Elder J. C. Fitch of Nashville was ordained to the office of high priest by Apostle Farrow and Evangelist Burwell.

Arrangements are being made to procure ground in Shelby Forest, near Memphis, for the 1954 reunion.

AT AUDIO-VISUAL WORKSHOP

Apostle Reed M. Holmes, Clifford Cole of the Department of Religious Education, and Arthur Rock and Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ravell of the Radio Department left August 30 to attend an audio-visual workshop at Green Lake, Wisconsin. K. L. Graham, Herald House manager, is also at the workshop. Apostle Holmes will also attend a curriculum conference in Chicago on September 7 before returning to Independence.

DIRECTS SYMPHONY

Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of the Music and Radio Department, spoke at Provo, Utah, on Sunday, August 23, and directed the Independence Symphony Orchestra in the first rehearsal of the season on September 1, in the Auditorium.

AT ZION'S LEAGUE CAMP

Elder Gene Theys spoke to the Far West Zion's Leaguers at Lake Doniphan on Saturday evening, August 29. Other staff members were Elders Garland Snapp, Don Harvey, Barney Berridge, and Robert Turner. Brother Theys also spoke at Mt. Washington, in Center Stake, on August 30.

VISIT COUNCIL OF WOMEN

Pauline Arnson, chairman of the General Church Council of Women, reported that Mrs. Nellie Arrowsmith, former supervisor of women's work in the British Isles Mission, has been a recent women's department visitor. Mrs. Arrowsmith, who now lives in Chatham, Ontario, is a sister of President F. Henry Edwards and Mrs. George Mesley. When the three met unexpectedly in Flora, Illinois, recently, it was the first time they had been together in thirty-two years.

Mrs. Leslie W. Kohlman, of Guelph, Ontario, was also a visitor of Mrs. Arnson this week.

FAR WEST STAKE VISITORS

Seventy-five young people from Far West Stake visited Independence on August 22 and participated in the All-Star volleyball and softball games. They were housed by Center Stake young people, and attended the early morning prayer service directed by Lee Hart on Sunday morning. Charles Neff spoke at this service. Breakfast was served by West College Zion's League. The Far West young people visited in the Independence congregations and toured the Auditorium before returning to their homes.

And His Name Shall Be Called Counselor

A FRIENDLY, middle-aged neighbor of mine stopped by the yard the other day to watch me prepare our flower bed for planting. He scrutinized my methods for a few moments and said, "You're not doing that right. You should . . ." And he proceeded to give me a lengthy lecture on the art of gardening.

Perhaps I'm stubborn, but I felt a resentment which urged me to do things my way. For some reason, his words and actions rather irritated me. Of course, he was a friend—so I pretended to accept his advice with good grace. I knew he meant well and wanted to be helpful, and I knew he was right. But still, I wish he had approached me in a different way.

I have another friendly, middle-aged neighbor who is more sensitive and tactful. In a similar situation, he has commented first on some phase of my activity which he approved. Then he has mentioned some recent suggestions he has read about gardening which is of general interest to both of us. And in the course of the conversation I find myself admitting my ignorance of many phases of gardening. A few questions and a few suggestions later I have the feeling that "all by myself" I have discovered a new and better way to prepare a flower bed. And—my neighbor lets me keep on thinking I did!

TO ME, "advice" is a terrible word. Probably it has caused more rebellious children and broken marriages than any other word in any language. It has separated friends, ruined neighborliness, and driven whole families away from church.

Advice (according to my definition) is the unsolicited "volunteering" of words which recommend what another should say, or do, or think. And, as such, it is not appreciated. It is often a substitute we adults use when our children have grown too mature to accept a command. (The command had become a habit we formed when our children were too young in experience to recognize danger or to make decisions.) Or it is the example set by generations before us that has been accepted as our pattern of behavior. Giving advice, at the moment, seems the easy way to recommend; but in the long run, it proves to be the "hard" way.

THERE is a better way to recommend. The person who has mastered this "better way" is called a "counselor." He has learned the art of recommending unobtrusively. Isaiah listed counselor on a par with "Wonderful, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace," as he described the attributes of Jesus Christ. Evidently the art of counseling is one of the characteristics of a truly great man. It has been described as "the art of helping Johnny see through himself, so that Johnny can see himself through." It is the process of helping "Johnny" see the possible answers to a problem but letting him make the decision of which answer he shall accept.

Christ knew that the acts of men must come from the "heart" as a result of decisions made freely through agency. He recognized the importance of love and tact in all relationships between men. He knew this philosophy was especially needed in all relationships in the home. For there the pattern of future behavior is usually determined.

AN OPPORTUNITY to practice the art of counseling is before us constantly. Our family may choose a definite time each week for discussing problems of mutual interest. Or we may have a profitable experience at the dinner table as we search for the solution to that day's dilemma. But the opportunity comes much more frequently as our child asks, "Mother—Dad—may I . . . ?"

A counselor is not a "boss" or superior person. If we would counsel, we must reach a level of rapport where free and easy conversation can flow. Many of us have discovered our children going out of the home to receive help with their problems. And we have been concerned because they have not entrusted their confidences with us. We soon must learn that if we would have others trust us, we must trust them.

It is difficult to know the proper time to release parental controls and place trust in a child's decision. It is even difficult for us to know when to place confidence in other adults. Our first president, George Washington, doubted that the "common citizen" could ever be trusted to control his own governmental destiny. But his belief has proved unsound. The Book of Mormon gives good counsel in the words, "It is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right. . . . Do your business by the voice of the people." This expression of trust is applicable to any organized segment of society: the home, the church, and local, state, or national government.

If our home, or church, or political government depends upon dictatorial powers for control, it will soon fall through rebellion. Or if it is an aristocracy where only a very few are allowed to assume the task of making and executing law, it will disintegrate through default. Only when it is a democracy which trusts its members to actively participate in its government can it be expected to survive and expand.

To be a great leader, we must elicit the full participation of our group in some phase of its governing functions. We must expect that all shall "have their say." The members of our group must feel "wanted," must feel the importance of "belonging," must feel a confidence in, and love for, the leader.

When we have reached this feeling of oneness, then we shall be called counselor, indeed!

Honorable Release of Evangelist Walter Dyke

Church records reveal that Walter Dyke was born in 1870 in London, England. On April 25, 1953, he passed his eighty-third birthday anniversary. He was baptized in 1905 by Elder J. H. N. Jones in Adelaide, South Australia. Two years later he was ordained to the office of elder, and has served in the priesthood since, a period of over 45 years. In 1941 he was ordained to the office of high priest and under the hands of Apostle C. G. Mesley in the same service to the office of evangelist.

Due to the circumstances attending advancing age, Brother Dyke is hereby honorably released from duties of the patriarchal office. His status hereafter will be that of high priest, according to the provisions of General Conference Resolution 884, and Doctrine and Covenants 129: 7a in which the office of evangelist is declared to be an order in the priesthood, to be enrolled with other high priests.

We express the appreciation of the church for the long years of service and the devotion thus manifested by Brother Dyke.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

We are pleased with the following report from Apostle D. O. Chesworth and are happy to share it with the membership of the church:

"The 1953 reunion season for the domestic field closed officially on August 30 at Naperville, Illinois. We were happy to have Apostle R. E. Davey vacationing there from Friday through Sunday, and his counsel was appreciated. This was our largest of the four years since reunion has been resumed here. At my Sunday morning sermon we had 425 present with 105 children in worship elsewhere on the grounds. I was happy to have my wife as vocal soloist on that program; she had been invited to sing by the director of music. I bore witness to the truth of the Restoration and was happy to have the attendance of the Holy Spirit. Our teaching staff, including Lyle Woodstock, Sister Woodstock, Jack Wight, Cecil Ettinger and me, plus the ministry of Evangelist L. S. Wight and District President Lloyd Cleveland, were abundantly blessed. Sister Jack Wight was camp nurse, Sister Ettinger taught in the children's department, and my wife assisted in the department of music.

We now have 49 baptisms in these two districts (Northeast Illinois and Chicago) as compared to 61 in all of last year and 60 for 1951, and we feel we will reach beyond 61 this year.

In four of the five reunions, we baptized 30 this year. Nauvoo had cared for theirs previously.

We have secured an August week again in 1954 at Camp Seager."

Korean News

A commendable mimeographed publication has recently reached the editors' desks. It traveled all the way from Korea. Major M. F. Caldwell, an elder in the church, and with the UNCMAC Support Group, sent us a copy of his "ninth printing" of a "News Letter from Korea." Major Caldwell states:

News Letter was conceived in August of last year as a means of communication between R. L. D. S. members in this theatre. It seems to catch on and has been given fairly wide distribution in its short period of existence. There are several on the mailing list who have gone home, some of them have left forwarding addresses. There are also some few relatives back home, mothers, aunts, and cousins who have been receiving it.

Anyone is entitled to contribute to News Letter. If you know of any church member in the theatre who, you think, might not be on the mailing list, please send his name and address. Anyone who has a meditation thought, a short sermonette, anything brief, send it in. There may be two more printings, perhaps in September and October.

Attached to the "News Letter" was a story about "Clothes for Korea." Major Caldwell recently received packages from a church in the United States and personally distributed their contents among the Koreans. He tells of his experience:

It was quite evident that our meager supply of clothing would not go around to all, and the line-up became a confused, loud and disorganized group of people trying to get a share of that clothing. Try to imagine, if you will, small children, grown men, and particularly grown women carrying small babies, all scrambling madly with each other for a few discarded items of clothing. No, I can't describe how this made me feel. Neither can I describe to you the way I think these poor people felt about having to put aside their pride. The law of self-preservation overcame their sense of pride. I wished then and there for a sufficient supply of clothing to properly clothe them all. This scene took place in a small village many miles from a town or city. There was only one reason for this incident. All were so eager to get anything usable. These people simply don't have these things, and see very little hope in the near future of getting these necessities.

The Pied Piper

By Ward A. Hougas

A sermon given March 15, 1953

Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian; and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed. And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. And he said, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. Moreover he said, I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Exodus 3: 1-6.

FOR A THEME I reach back into my early days in country school to the old Baldwin Reader. In it was a story about the Pied Piper. The little town of Hamelin, Germany, so the legend says, was completely overrun with rats. There were all kinds of rats. When the city fathers met to try to figure out some way to get rid of the rats, they didn't have any success whatsoever. Finally one day, when they were meeting, a quaint character walked into their council room—a man arrayed in a robe such as they had never seen before. He assured them that he had magic in his pipe, and that with the music he played he could attract any type of animal or human being. The people were interested. He made a bargain with them that for a thousand guilders he would rid the town of rats. Then he walked out into the village streets and began to pipe a weird, shrieky sound, and he advised the people to move into their homes and stay there.

As they looked out their windows, they saw tens of thousands of rats following this peculiar piper. He made his way down the long street to the river, and down there, at his command, the rats hopped off into the river. Then he went back to collect his money and the town councilors laughed at him. They said, "The rats are gone; why should we pay?"

The piper didn't quarrel with them; he simply disappeared. A few days later, as the village folk were out in the fields working, he came back again. This time he piped another tune which attracted the children, and soon he was marching down the same street, followed by all the children of the village. He moved to the river, turned and walked toward a great hill which was off to the side of town, and there a great door opened in the side of the hill. The children all went in—all, that is, except one little lame fellow who wasn't able to keep up. Just as he arrived the great door swung shut, with the piper and all the others inside. The young lad was very disappointed because he wasn't able to go with the rest of the children into that land which had been promised to them as being such a magic land. He went back to the village and told his sad story, and then the villagers realized what a foolish bargain they had made.

THIS IS my whole sermon, yet there are a few things I might say in connection with it. We call a story like that foolish. Yes, it is foolish; and yet most of our difficulties—our inability to face life on a successful basis—are born of foolishness.

Adelaide Proctor brought us the poem, "A Lost Chord." In it she tried to tell us that life is filled with discords, but even these discords, under the proper tutelage, can be bound together eventually into an eternal harmony which means abundant life. It is easy to produce discords; yet under the hands of the Master they can become harmony which has eternal qualities. Only as Divinity enters the picture do our lives begin to take on the eternal qualities of abundant living.

When God spoke to Moses out of the burning bush he said, "Moses, put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." He was bringing to Moses a revelation that was difficult for him to understand. Moses had failed to understand that his life, in spite of his greatness in many ways, still was full of discords. His early life was a series of peculiar conditions: his babyhood in the bulrushes, his youth in the courts of Pharaoh, his years as a shepherd on the Midian desert. It was out of these experiences that he came this day to stand before the bush. As he stood there he understood something he had never understood before. It is difficult for us sometimes, as we pray for guidance and revelation, to understand that the great revelations of God often come in everyday life. Moving along through daily experiences, those with eyes to see and ears to hear find God in the burning bushes of their own age. The revelations of God come to us often, yet beneath the everyday music of life the modern piper pipes as he has never piped before.

THE WORLD comes to us today with promises it has never made before. Our appetites are guided and our patterns of life are set to reach out for the things which do not really carry much of eternal value. Society causes us to feel that unless we move into the higher plateau of socioeconomic living today, we are utter failures.

We think of the foolish children who followed the piper down the street. Yet, we, too, listen to the piper sometimes. Let's think back over the past week. How many decisions did we actually make for ourselves? How many decisions were not affected by the social pressure of those about us, by the pressure of economic status of other people? How many decisions have we made which have not been colored by the moral standards of someone else? Do we not listen to the music of the Pied Piper who says, "Come this way. I promise you anything you desire if you follow me"? Then we see our friends, our loved ones, and sometimes ourselves become victims. We find ourselves disappearing into the motley throng which we call the world, no longer to be identified as different from the world, no longer identified with the eternal movements.

IT WAS a strange revelation to Moses that the ground upon which he stood was holy ground. He perhaps had passed that way scores of times with his flocks, moving back and forth across the desert as they reached for little wisps of grass. Yet he discovered that the same area where he had many times been this day became holy. The difference was in the attitude, the understanding, and the appreciation down deep in the soul of Moses. As his soul became enriched with the power of God, he began to understand that these things which had been so common to him in the past, today took on a new sign, and he saw opportunities that he had never seen before. He might have remained on Midian; he might have lived and died there as a shepherd of the flocks, but that day something happened. He saw the flame in the bush. He heard the voice of God and could never be the same again. That is fundamental. Any individual who has in the heat of life stopped sufficiently long to listen to the voice of God—that is, has incorporated within his life the things the voice has brought to him—that person can never be the same again.

Think back in your own life. Some of you can realize that there came a time in your experience when you heard the voice of God, when there came into your heart and your soul an understanding such as you had never had before. As a result of that experience, you have never been the same since. I think that is what some of our friends in the Christian world mean when they talk about being saved. I think they have had an experience with God. I think they have seen something they hadn't seen before and, realizing something of the power of God in their lives, they say they are "saved." I don't quite understand their terminology, but I do feel that something has happened. Something has happened in many of our lives, too. We don't say we are saved, but we do say that we have changed. We are different and, though we may backslide to a degree, still within our souls are certain experiences which keep us from ever becoming again just what we were before.

We have some peculiar failings sometimes. We dream great dreams and have high ideals, ambitions, and hopes; we look forward with faith to the accomplishment of certain things which will affect not only us but the entire world. We look for a new type of social life, for new standards of living. We look for these things, and then sometimes go right on living just as though we never expected such a thing to happen. We fail to realize that these things happen only after something has happened in the souls of a sufficient number of people to make them possible.

Moses might have stayed in the Midian desert. We sometimes become content on our Midian of high wages, our lax standards, our striving for elusive economic security. We struggle for many things and, in failing to balance these struggles with the needs of the kingdom, we push ourselves eternally back into the desert, away from the fountains of abundant life.

I WAS OUT the other day through some of the irrigated country. I noticed that farmers were flooding some of the fields. Why? Because they know that only after they open the gates and allow the water to flow on these fields will there be a harvest. Sometimes we deliberately shut the gates of our souls so that the floodwaters of the Spirit of God have no chance with us whatsoever. We shut the gates and still expect a harvest, when all we do is to push ourselves back into the modern Midian. We live without the Spirit and power of God. We fail to see the flame which is consuming the world today. We fail to hear the voice of God as he tries eternally to talk to us. We fail to listen, even when we know that God is talking.

THE MUSIC of this Pied Piper in 1953 is luring a lot of us away from our spiritual homes; we are becoming so busy and tied up with things of this world that we forget the kingdom. Sometimes we sort of kid ourselves. We become involved in things which are not particularly Zionistic but are basically good—at least not bad. There are many of these activities in the world today. I have had to turn my back on a number of them that have appeared. I discovered a long time ago that I can't tie myself up with a lot of outside activities. I am not suggesting that we have no responsibility to our communities. But it is impossible to belong to all types of organizations and not at least partially close the gates to the inflow of the waters of heaven which cause the germination of the spiritual seeds within our souls. Whether we do it consciously or unconsciously, willingly or unwillingly, we still close the gates. People sometimes say, "I am just too busy to help." Some of them really feel they are. They are working at this or that good organization. Yet they have not understood that by whatever process they close the gate, the gate is closed.

The seeds of spirituality are failing to germinate in many homes today because the homes are closing the gates, and the flow of life-giving water from Almighty God which causes the germination of spiritual seeds in the home is stopped. Children grow up and know little or nothing about the kingdom. They feel nothing of the power of heaven when it comes to them as potential sons and daughters of God. In fact I might even say that under the tug of the music of the Pied Piper, many married couples have no children—not because they didn't originally plan to have children, but simply because they got too busy to bother with them. There is too much demand. They just don't pay the price of opening the gates that life abundant might be theirs.

Were those children foolish that day as they followed the Pied Piper down the road? Yes, of course they were. I am wondering today how many of our larger children are following the piper down the road to isolation from the kingdom of God, and will soon find their interests and desires gone, and the doors of the kingdom closed to them forever.

THERE WAS ANOTHER important incident in the piper's story. The people refused to pay the piper. I wonder if we stop to figure just what God has done for us. Do we stop to find out for ourselves that the blessings we receive and enjoy—the opportunities which are open to us continuously—all come from God? In our humble moments we do. We believe in stewardship. We recognize that God is the possessor, the creator, the owner of all things. The Scriptures tell us that things are created for our use and benefit. God lends things to us and we use them. He asks back a tenth of that which we gain by the process. Most partners want at least 50 per cent back. God wants only a tenth, yet too often we fail to pay him. In the withholding of that which we should give we are hurting ourselves. It doesn't make any difference to God whether we give him back five cents or five thousand dollars next year, but it makes a lot of difference as far as our welfare is concerned.

I wonder if we don't draw some rather hard bargains with God, thinking that we get by without paying? All too often life is pretty well spent before we begin to awaken to the fact that we failed in that hard bargain. For, after all, we do pay and we continue to pay. We pay with the lives of our children; we pay with our own souls' salvation; we pay with everything which has eternal value. It is just like the irrigation gate; it doesn't make any difference whether you go out there and shut it deliberately or whether the wind blows it shut, when the door is closed the water ceases to flow in. By whatever process we estrange ourselves from God, we are estranged. We follow the piper, listening to his melodies which promise this and that.

IT IS EASY to call attention to what God has said in the past. As a church we like to quote Jesus' statement: "I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Yet I feel that sometimes those forces do prevail against us when we listen to the music of the world today. The same forces do prevail over us, even though the church may move on and on.

Most church members like this statement of John the Revelator: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Yet I wonder just what this message of the angel actually has brought us. "Oh," we say "it brought back the everlasting gospel." Yes, it returned the everlasting gospel to the world, but did it return to us? How much has it actually meant to us?

I am staggered at the number of people we have in our church who apparently never study to enlarge their understanding of the work of the kingdom, except through casual contacts. No one ever learns very much about the kingdom by just coming to listen to the preacher. People can get a general understanding of the message of the Restoration, but nobody understands the Restoration who does not apply himself to the real task.

To a lot of us it really hasn't made much difference whether the angel brought the message back or not, because we haven't availed ourselves of it. For hundreds of years the world has had a portion of the message of the Christ. Yet it was not until early in the past century that this message was revealed again in its entirety. It would seem that everyone who has any knowledge whatsoever of this message would be anxious to receive everything possible that was brought back by these heavenly forces. Yet we often reach out and take not even as much as already had been with the world for centuries, and we are satisfied with it.

WHEN I WANT to hear a radio program, I go where the radio is. That's not a very difficult assumption to make, is it? When we want to advance in the work of the kingdom, where do we go? When we wish to commune with God, where do we go? Apostle Blair Jensen told the story about the not-too-bright lad who went to find the horse. When he was asked how he found the horse he said, "I just thunk and thunk and thunk where I would go if I was a horse and that's where I went." We might ask ourselves now, where we can find the movement of the kingdom. Where are we apt to find the greatest opportunity of direction? Where are we apt to find that greatest power to give strength, understanding, and insight? Whom do we follow this day?

I like the story of Nicodemus. He was a good man, but he hadn't done much about it. The rich young man who came to the Master had qualified in just about everything, so far as accepting and believing goes, but the thing that was wrong with his life—and with the life of Nicodemus—was that he just hadn't done much about it. The same is true of many of us today. We believe, but we haven't developed sufficient faith to motivate us to actually do something. This morning as we came to worship did we renew our contract with God, or did we just come? Can we think of some better way to represent that message which has come to us than we have been able to express in the past? Or are we going home from this service perfectly content to be just what we have been, to live just as we have lived, to say just what we have said, to make no further effort to expand our circle of activity? Do we seek the real harmonies in life, or do we prefer to listen to the tunes of the piper? Because they satisfy us for the present time are we willing to accept them as our measure in life? Or like Moses do we see the flame of this Restoration Movement? Has it become a part of us, or are we interested in life only from a selfish viewpoint?

I HAVE BEEN THINKING of Brother Jensen who left us last Wednesday morning. He had been gone from home about two weeks on his trip here. I happened to know that he would get home about eleven o'clock Wednesday night. On Friday morning he was pulling out again for another three weeks, and then he would be in one week for the Evangelistic Institute. Then he will be gone again for another three weeks; then he has, I think, two days, and then he is gone again for several more weeks. I said to myself, "Now listen, you are not giving much to the kingdom. You are home every night of the week, with a few exceptions. You have the beauty of your home; you have the joy of your local contacts." A man who travels gets terribly hungry for local contacts. We look upon an apostle when he comes and say, "My, that's a grand life." I have even known people who had ambitions to be apostles—they just didn't know what being an apostle means. These men move for months with only a few days or a few weeks at the most at home during the course of a year, and they become hungry for contacts with people in whom they can confide.

DO WE ACTUALLY hear the voice of God as he tries to speak to us? He works with us continuously. When we are of a mind to listen, God reaches out to bless us, guide us, and direct us—but too many times we don't listen. In this "eleventh hour" there are multitudes of opportunities for helping establish the kingdom. In the midst of a world messed up in many ways, the piper pipes to us continuously, and his music suggests things which seem to have a silver lining; yet none of these take us toward the realm of eternal values. Like foolish children, we often follow him from the safety, security, and protection of our spiritual homes simply because the music sounds good. We like it; we are gullible enough to live on its promises. Then, as the poet said, at the close of life's weary day, we hope the Master can take these discords—our lives—and blend them into perfect music.

Minute Men of Muck

There are wrongs of staggering dimensions. And not the least of these is the sin of the savored retelling of unsavory tidings. Sinners of this stripe are "respectable" people. They would no sooner lend themselves to an overt evil act than they would cut off their right arms. Yet they take secret delight in tilting eyebrows at sordid rumors and passing on the stories. They are the Minute Men (and women) of Muck. Their scandal-mongering—in the sheep's clothing of outraged Christian morality—smears whole groups of Americans.—U. G. Murphy in Christian Herald, July, 1953.

The Divine Authority of Joseph Smith the Martyr

EDITOR'S NOTE: We reprint from the Herald of June 15, 1865, a portion of an affirmative defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon which was written by Isaac Sheen, the first editor of the Herald. In this you will note the statement that the Prophet Joseph Smith was not familiar with Isaiah 29 when he sent Martin Harris to New York City.—I. A. S.

THE PERFECT AGREEMENT between the prediction of Isaiah (chapter 29) and Mr. Smith's account of the finding and translation of the Book of Mormon, is another collateral proof that he was divinely commissioned. Mr. Smith testifies that the plates from which that book was taken out of the ground, from where they were originally deposited by the prophet Moroni; that the box containing them was composed of stone, so constructed as to exclude, in a great degree, the moisture of the soil; that with the plates he discovered a Urim and Thummim, through the aid of which he afterwards was enabled to translate the book into the English language. Soon after obtaining the plates, a quantity of the characters were correctly transcribed, and sent to some of the most learned individuals in the United States to see if they could translate them. Among the rest they were presented to Professor Anthon of New York City. But no man was found able to read them by his own learning or wisdom. Mr. Smith, though an unlearned man, testifies that he was commanded to translate them through the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, by the aid of the Urim and Thummim, and that the Book of Mormon is that translation. Now Isaiah says to Israel:

Thou shalt be brought down and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.—Isaiah 29: 4.

WHO CANNOT PERCEIVE the perfect harmony between Isaiah's prediction and Mr. Smith's testimony? Isaiah, as if to impress it upon the minds of those who should live in future generations, gives no less than four repetitions of the same prediction in the same passage, informing us, in the most definite language that, after Israel should be brought down, they should speak in a very familiar manner "out of the ground," and "whisper low out of the dust." Mr. Smith has been an instrument in the hands of God of fulfilling this prediction to the very letter. He has taken "out of the ground" the ancient history of one half of our globe—the sacred records of a great nation of Israel—the writings of a remnant of the tribe of Joseph, who once flourished as a powerful and great nation on the Western Hemisphere. The moldering ruins of their ancient forts, towers, and cities proclaim their former greatness in mournful contrast with their present sad condition.

They have been brought down like all the other branches of Israel, but the words of their ancient prophets "speak out of the ground," and their speech whispers out of the dust, to this generation, revealing in a very "familiar" manner the history of ancient America, which before was entirely unknown to the nations. Isaiah said that Israel should speak out of the ground and whisper out of the dust. Mr. Smith said that he obtained the writings of Joseph "out of the ground." Now if Mr. Smith had professed that he got this book as Swedenborg and the Shakers said that they obtained theirs—that is, if he had professed to have obtained this book to usher in the last dispensation, in any other way but "out of the ground"—we should have had a right to suppose that he was either a deceiver or deceived, like Swedenborg and thousands of others. If Mr. Smith had said that some Gentile nation did thus speak out of the ground, and the record which he did thus obtain was the record of an ancient Gentile nation, this discovery would not have fulfilled this prophecy of Isaiah, because he said that Israel shall speak out of the ground.

IN THE SAME CHAPTER Isaiah said:

The vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isaiah 29: 11-14.

We are informed that this prophecy concerning the learned man and the unlearned man was fulfilled before Mr. Smith had learned that it had been so clearly foretold by Isaiah. He sent the "words of a book" which he found, as before stated, to Professor Anthon. But it was a sealed writing to the learned professor—the aboriginal language of ancient America could not be deciphered by him. He was as much puzzled as the wise men of Babylon were when they tried to interpret the handwriting upon the wall. Human wisdom in both cases was insufficient. It required another Daniel to interpret this record of an ancient line of prophets, and Mr. Smith was the man whom the Lord qualified for that work. Thus the Lord, by him, proceeded to do a marvelous work and a wonder, and the wisdom of the wise men perished, and the understanding of the prudent men was hid. If this prophecy of Isaiah was not thus fulfilled, when was it fulfilled, or when and how will it be fulfilled? Can it be fulfilled in any other way? Could it be fulfilled without "the words of a book" being delivered to one that is learned, and without a request being made of him to read it? Could it be fulfilled without the learned man saying that he cannot read it, for it is sealed? Could it be fulfilled if the book should not be delivered to him that is not learned, saying, "Read this, I pray thee," and if he should not say, "I am not learned"? Could it be fulfilled without these events transpiring, and without the Lord proceeding to do a marvelous work and a wonder, and making the wisdom of the wise to perish and the understanding of the prudent to be hid? If Mr. Smith is not the unlearned man who is spoken of in this prophecy, where shall we find him? If the marvelous work which Isaiah said that the Lord would proceed to do after the events spoken of, concerning the learned and unlearned man should transpire, is not the work which did follow the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, when and where was that work performed, or if the work is not yet performed, how and when will it be performed? Professor Anthon continued to be an unbeliever in the Book of Mormon, but he has publicly confirmed the facts over his own signature that some characters which were represented as the words of a book were brought to him, and that he could not read them. Thus this learned man unintentionally confirmed the fact that the prophecy of Isaiah concerning him was fulfilled.

IF THE BOOK OF MORMON is what it is represented to be (a sacred record) then it must be the book which Isaiah prophesied of; for the prophet Nephi, one of the writers of the Book of Mormon, who lived more than two thousand four hundred years ago, foretold that their writings should be brought to light in the last days in fulfillment of Isaiah's prediction. He also delivered a prediction in relation to the same book and foretold many events in connection therewith, which are not mentioned by Isaiah.

The characteristics of the book which Isaiah prophesied of are the characteristics of the Book of Mormon. Did Isaiah predict that the deaf should hear the words of the Book? It has been fulfilled by the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Did Isaiah say that in the day that his predicted book should speak out of the ground, Lebanon should become a fruitful field? It has commenced to be a fruitful field. Did Isaiah say that when this book should whisper out of the dust, those who "erred in spirit should come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine"? It has been fulfilled in the experience of many thousands. Many points of doctrine which had been subjects of controversy for many ages are made perfectly plain in the Book of Mormon; hence those who have murmured because of the darkness and obscurity thrown over the Scriptures by human wisdom and learning have "learned doctrine." Did Isaiah prophesy that the predicted book should come forth in that day when the house of Jacob should no longer be ashamed and when his face should no more wax pale? The Book of Mormon declares that the time is at hand when these events shall transpire; after this book came forth the seed of Jacob began to rejoice, because the Gentile yoke began to be made lighter, and Israel began to enjoy more freedom in many of the nations of the earth, and in consequence of the liberty which was granted unto the Jews in Palestine, many thousands have returned to the land of their fathers. Did Isaiah declare that in the day of the revelation of a certain book, the terrible one should be brought to nought, the scorner be consumed, and all that watch for iniquity be cut off? The Book of Mormon testifies that the hour of these judgments is at hand, and since it came forth many scornors of the Latter Day Saints have been cut off, and many who watched for their iniquity have been cut off by the rebellion of the Southern States. The scornors and watchers for their iniquity have been nearly all cut off from those counties in Missouri where the Saints were located, and from whence they were driven.

THERE IS NO CIRCUMSTANCE mentioned by Isaiah connected with the revelation and translation of the book which he prophesied of which is not connected with the Book of Mormon. If Joseph Smith was an imposter, and imposed upon the world by representing that he was the prophet who was foreordained to usher in the preparatory dispensation for the coming of the Lord, how came he to discover all these minute particulars which are contained in Isaiah's prophecy, so as to exactly incorporate in his great system? If this illiterate youth was a deceiver, he has far outstretched all the learned divines and reformers of the last eighteen hundred years. He has made his great and extended scheme to harmonize in every particular, not only with the ancient gospel, but with the ancient prophets—and this so perfectly that no person, not even the learned divines, can detect and show that there is any delusion in it.

If this is a counterfeit scheme, where shall we find a genuine scheme which fills the prophetic pattern? If this scheme is not credible, where shall we find one in the whole world that is? Can you find a scheme which is more perfect than that which Mr. Smith has introduced? Can you find one which contains the one twentieth part of scriptural doctrine which his system contains? If, then, you believe that Mr. Smith has established his system without any authority from God, how can you believe that any of the founders and teachers of other religious systems have acted with such authority? If Mr. Smith's perfect scheme should be rejected, surely all the other schemes or doctrines which can be shown to be exceedingly imperfect should also be rejected. If any system should be believed in, surely that system should be believed in which seems to contain all the elements of a true doc-

Success

By Edith G. Beggs

WHAT IS SUCCESS? Is it measured by the dollar yardstick? Can it be determined by a popularity vote? Too often we value success in dollars and cents or social prestige. With the term "success," we usually associate wealth or power.

Because men have discovered gold or oil, towns have sprung up almost overnight. These men, in their lust for wealth, have selfishly jostled and cheated one another in their wild stampede for this thing called success. But what becomes of them when they cast their lot with this fluctuating thing which to them spells security and happiness? Frequently it proves to be only a temporal mirage beckoning them on to poverty and despair.

During the Caribou gold rush of 1861-62, gold miners acquired the fabulous sum of sixty to one hundred dollars a day. Like wild fire, the news of the Caribou gold harvest spread to distant places.

The whole world took fire. Caribou was on every man's lips. The New England States, Canada, the Maritime Provinces, the British Isles—all were set agog by the reports of the new gold camps where it was only necessary to dig to find nuggets. By way of Panama, by way of San Francisco, Spokane, Victoria, Winnipeg, and Edmonton came the gold seekers, indifferent to perils of sea and mountain. By the opening of '62, six thousand miners were in Caribou, and Barkerville had become the central camp. How these people ever gained access to the center of the wilderness before the famous Caribou road had been built is a mystery. Some arrived by pack-train, some by canoe, but most of them afoot. Flour was three hundred dollars a barrel, dried apples brought two dollars and fifty cents a pound. From lack of fruit many miners died of scurvy. Where gold-seekers tramped six hundred miles over a rocky trail, it is not surprising that boots commanded fifty dollars a pair. Of the disappointed, countless numbers filled unknown graves, and thousands tramped their way out, starving and begging a meal from the procession of incomers. —From The Caribou Gold Rush, by Agnes C. Laut, used by permission of Thomas Nelson and Sons (Canada) Limited, Publishers, Toronto.

And the lucky ones? What became of them? Most of these successful gold-diggers died quite poor. Get rich quick! Easy money! From the wisdom of Uncle Eph, "When yo' is cahful to 'scriminate the diff'rence between de time when it's bes' to jump ovah de ditch, an' when it's bes' to go roun', den yo' has done become wise an' you'll get no mud on de trousahs of you' success." The mud which Uncle Eph refers to sticks pretty fast sometimes. The Bible says, "What profit it a man, if he gain the world and lose his soul?" Yet men—and women, too—go on selling their souls for that which they call success.

SO MUCH for the misuse of success. Wealth and power, if obtained honestly and put to good use, can be tools of success of value to all mankind. The success of such men as Thomas Edison is measured by its benefit to all mankind. I would not say he has succeeded who gets, but rather he who gives.

He should succeed who cheerfully makes the best of what is available, using it as a nucleus or a means of obtaining that which he desires.

Financial security is a measure of temporal success, as are also health and happiness.

Capacity for success may be hereditary, but usually we must acquire it ourselves. It is the reward of the worker—the fulfillment of the dreamer who makes his dreams come true.

The pessimist succeeds in convincing himself that life is one failure after another. Let us take an optimistic viewpoint, proving that life can be very good if we but strive to make it so.

Life is made up of little successes as well as big ones, and small tasks undertaken and well done play an important part in the art of successful living. The greatest degree that we could have given us might well be that of "M. T."—or Master of Thyself. Let us do our best, and the best will come to us.

From Edgar A. Guest we get this gem of advice on success.

You think that the failures are many,
You think the successes are few,
But you judge by the rule of the penny,
And not by the good that men do.
You judge men by standards of treasure
That merely obtain upon earth,
When the brother you're snubbing may measure
Full-length to God's standard of worth.

An Old Text, Still Up to Date

By John F. Sheehy

I have never forgotten my first sermon; neither have the people who heard it. I chose the text, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Surely an eighteen-year-old motherless boy knew all the answers. At least I thought I did. Since then I learned that I did not know a third of the answers, if any.

It is still a good text. It is more than a text—it is good advice; it is a statement of truth. Even though written hundreds of years ago, it is still true. It is always a wonderful experience to "train up a child," teaching him "the way." But it is not enough just to show him the way he should go; you must walk with him. Where he will go and what he will do in the years between childhood and manhood or until he is old, you may not know, but you can be assured that if you walk with him during the days of training, he will not get far from "the way."

Before he is very old he will want to walk along with you, and it will be a very enjoyable walk. He will need to have the experience early in life. Training up a child includes walking and talking as you walk "the way" together. I recommend this old Proverb as a grand experience in child training in righteousness.

The Second Mile

A Testimony of Service

By Gertrude Bogue

SEVERAL years ago, when I was looking for a place to live, I felt my prayer was answered when I found a quiet, upstairs apartment where I could meditate and study in my free time. It was close to church, so I was able to attend classes and learn new truths. But neither personal devotions nor group study make a kingdom builder unless they add sparks to kindle the fire of activity. Deeds, not words, will produce Zion.

In the fall of 1950 I joined with others in fasting and praying for the priesthood conference being held at Kirtland. I prayed also for greater ability to serve and the willingness to do what God would have me do. Two tasks came to my mind: one I accepted without question; the other left me murmuring, "O Lord, not that!"

On the morning of October 7—the day God spoke through the patriarch at Kirtland—I thought of Moses when he went to the mount to receive instruction for the children of Israel. We were like the Israelites—waiting in our home congregations for instruction from Deity through our leaders. Would we, I wondered, be prepared to receive and accept the greater ministry when they returned, or would we be found worshipping idols at the foot of the mountain? As I thought about it I humbly dedicated myself to the second task—I would be the kind of neighbor God would have me be.

For three years I had walked past the home of an elderly woman who was almost totally blind and could get around the house only with the aid of a walker. She had no husband or family to care for her. She had left her friends and relatives and native land to "come to Zion." I knew her need, but—like the priest and Levite—I had passed on the other side of the road. All I had to do to appreciate her plight was to sit with closed eyes, pretending that I could neither see nor walk. As I did so I realized the problem of bodily functions, personal cleanliness, meals, housework, and laundry. I realized, too, that the service she needed so desperately required no special academic or professional training. The big factor was that I had to love her—my neighbor—as myself and do for her what I would have others do for me if I were similarly afflicted. I had borne verbal testimony of my devotion. I had said, "There are no tasks too trivial, no sacrifices too great for Zion." My neighbor offered me the opportunity to prove this devotion.

I offered my services to the stake bishop to aid this needy sister. She was not poor in earthly possessions, but she was in need of mercy. For over ten years I had been employed by the State Division of Welfare, and in my work I had often sensed the spiritual malnutrition as well as physical hunger of those I visited. I wanted to tell them how, through good stewardship and the ordinances of the church, their lives could be changed, but my testimony could not be verbal—only an example. But this poor neighbor of mine offered a new kind of opportunity.

First I arranged to help prepare meals, clean the house, take care of the laundry, tend to personal needs, and give her insulin. In doing even these menial tasks I felt God's Spirit present. Then I made special preparation for her to receive the emblems on Communion Sunday when the priests came. From that time on a different spirit seemed to enter her home. In the evening I read to her from the church books and periodicals. It was her spiritual feast. This study hour gave her something to think about during the following day, and she testified to others of the wonders of the Book of Mormon, encouraging them to read it. Often, at the end of a particularly fatiguing day, I would hardly feel able to maintain the schedule I had set for myself, but after praying for strength I always was richly blessed and the tasks seemed to get done in an almost miraculous way.

Because of this experience I have witnessed the power of the gospel to transform a life. Criticism, ill feelings, and unhappiness cannot exist where earnest prayers are offered and God's word is put into practice. As she listened to passages of Scripture, this sister was reminded of times past when missionaries had stayed in her home, and the joy of those occasions cheered her again in her hours of loneliness. A thoughtful person sent recordings of sermons and hymns to her home to comfort her. Unable to attend church in five years, she found food for her spiritual hunger through these recorded services.

Now I live blocks away, but this woman is still my neighbor and needs my care. Perhaps I can never compensate for the years I refrained from offering my services. I humbly ask forgiveness for my unconcern and pray that I may receive strength to continue my service to her and any others who may need such "ministry" as I can give. I desire this not for my own glory but for the glorification of the One who has truly helped me to go the "second mile"—across the street.

We Support the Priesthood

By Bertha Garver Johnson

OUR CHURCH is unique in the calling and ordination of many men to the priesthood. These men, from every walk of life, serve as ministers of the church in varying responsibilities and capacities. The church depends on a few full-time ministers and a great many local ministers to carry on its work. This means that in almost every branch there are a number of women whose husbands are priesthood members. What shall be the attitude of a wife toward her husband's ministry and the responsibilities which the church imposes on him?

A woman needs to recognize the importance of her husband's ministry. She should feel that he is called of God and that he has a ministry to perform for God and for his fellow men. She should believe in him and support him wholeheartedly. This should be the foundation on which her attitudes are based. In the church the work of every priesthood member, deacon, teacher, priest, and elder, is important if the church is to function as it should. It is difficult to say which one is the more important, because every time one officer fails, the work of the others also suffers. It is a good thing for a woman to recognize that her own husband has an important part to play in the work of the church, and that God has called him to that work.

It is the wife's privilege and duty to support her husband in these tasks. If she feels that his work is important, then she can take his absences from home and the time given to the church in good spirit.

I know one wife of a priesthood member who is forever complaining about the time her husband gives to church work. She resents each evening he is gone and constantly nags at him before their children. Her unhappiness has been communicated to the children, and they are unhappy and resent the time he gives to the church also. Somehow she has never realized that one of the best ways to teach children to love the church is to show them how much their parents love the church by cheerfully working toward the fulfillment of its goals. It isn't hard to imagine the heavy heart this man must take with him at times. It is difficult for any priesthood member to serve under these conditions.

IN MY OWN EXPERIENCE my father was gone not only evenings and an occasional week end but for weeks and even months at a time. Mother was so happy in his ministry that she never let us know how lonely she must have been many times. She would never consider calling him home when we were ill, or on other occasions when she could have been readily excused for wanting him to be with her. While he was on a mission to Australia she fractured her hip; yet her primary concern was that he should not feel it was necessary to shorten his assignment there by so much as a single day because of her condition.

My sisters and I loved our dad as much as other children and did not like to see him leave, but I cannot remember ever blaming the church for his absence, or feeling that he loved the church more than he loved us. As I look back I realize that we were not unusual children. I am sure we only caught Mother's attitude and in turn sent Dad off knowing his family gave full support to his work in the church. I am sure that over the years our parents' devotion had a great influence in the way we feel toward the church today.

The wife's attitude toward her husband's ministry very largely determines the way the children feel toward the church. If she complains about his work and responsibilities, the children may grow up to feel that priesthood responsibilities are of little importance, the source of quarrels and hard feelings, and something to be avoided. Children are not easily fooled. Often they can see through sham and pretense more quickly than adults. They can sense their parents' attitudes almost before the parents are aware of them. They know that if the work of the church is important enough for Dad to give his life to it and for Mother to wholeheartedly support him in his work, there must be something to it. If a woman willingly supports her husband in his ministry, their home will be blessed in many ways.

One of the most important phases of our support is to have a confidential attitude about the things our husbands tell us. All of us feel that they fail to tell us many things that we should know and at the same time they may tell us many things we would feel better if we did not know. It is unforgivable for us to ever break this confidence. We could completely ruin their ministry by making some unfortunate person's trouble an object of gossip. Some of the tragedies of broken branches and members estranged from the church have been caused by broken confidences.

Home Column

I know a very wise wife of a priesthood member who has a pet answer to anyone who tries to tell her some choice bit of branch news, which she may have known for weeks or even months. She smiles and says, "Well, well! Is that so?" or "Isn't that nice?" or "Are you sure?"

It is sometimes tempting to say, "Yes, and that isn't all. Wait till you hear what I know!" or "Yes, I have known that since Christmas. I have been wondering when the news would get out."

Once the wife of a priesthood member was approached by a good friend of hers who hinted in every way possible to find out something about a church appointment which would very greatly affect the work. Later this friend remarked to a mutual friend, "I know Sister — could tell us exactly who is going to be appointed here, but it is impossible to find out anything from her." This was a wonderful tribute to a wife of a priesthood member who was faithful to the trust placed in her by her husband. When we are tempted to add something to what has been told us or to admit prior knowledge, it is a good thing to be able to look the other person in the eye and say, "Well! Well! Is that so?"

I remember once being with my father when a man repeatedly tried to get some information from him. What he wanted so much to know did not seem to me to be of much importance and I later asked Dad why he didn't tell him. He answered, "Why should I tell him? Then he would know as much as I do." At first I chuckled about his answer, but as I remember the story, I have come to feel that there was quite a bit of wisdom in what he said. It is a good habit to learn to keep information to oneself when no good purpose can be served by passing it on to others.

WE SUPPORT our husbands' ministry by being active in the work of the church. We should serve the church according to our talents and of our own free will just as any other member should do. Usually—because we see the need—we give more time than the average, but we should never force ourselves to do things for the sake of what people might say if we don't. If we attempt to do too many things, others may not be given the opportunity to develop qualities of leadership. We need to know how to say "no" sometimes. Church activities should never take so much time that our homes are neglected, for the church is founded on good Zionite homes.

I am reminded of a large meeting we once attended where there were probably twenty priesthood members present. One good brother, perhaps more overzealous than wise, led the song service. When the time came to open the meeting he announced and led the opening hymn. He gave the invocation, sang a solo, read the Scripture, preached the sermon, announced and led the closing hymn.

For some strange reason, he called on someone else to give the benediction. He was unaware that others needed opportunities to serve in the work of the church. This is no more ridiculous than the woman who tries to do everything there is to be done in the branch by women. It is best for us to concentrate in the field of our greatest interest and ability and in that way support our husbands' ministry.

I feel that being the wife of a priesthood member is a privilege and an honor. I am also well aware that it is a challenge that calls for the very best I have to offer. I grew up in the home of a minister and I know that richer blessings came to our home because my mother and father were devoted to the work of the church. I am happy that I am married to a member of the priesthood, for I know that as we serve the church, it in turn enriches our lives and the lives of our children.

In Our Accustomed Places

By Marcella Schenck

I SAW BERNICE at church today. The face above her pretty dress and beneath her white hat was very sweet. I was glad she was there. I would have been disappointed if she had not made her Sabbath day's journey to church. I get much inspiration from the sermons, the music, and the prayers, but I also get a spiritual uplift from seeing Saints, good familiar Saints, in their accustomed places. I may never have opportunity to speak to them that day, but I know they are near, thinking about God and making renewed vows to live the best life possible.

Once upon a time some tourists were passing hurriedly through our little village. One of them wanted very much to get a glimpse of a lady who lived in our town. It was Sunday. "The church is close beside the highway," said one. "This person we wish to see will be at church. The ushers can easily find her. She can come into the hall for a while. We can shake hands and ask how she is. It will delay our journey but little, and she will lose only a small portion of her worship."

Now wasn't the lady glad to be right where she was supposed to be that day! She had opportunity to greet her friends and did not disappoint their trust in her faithful attendance at church.

Where does the Sunday service find you? Catching up on everyday chores? Taking the extra nap? Wearying yourself with much serving? Trying to earn the extra dollar you can't take with you?

I love those friends of mine who each Sunday go up to the house of the Lord for thanksgiving and prayer.

Thou Shalt Not Steal

This story is based on my own experience. I have used fictitious names so that no one involved will be embarrassed. Perhaps it will keep somebody in the armed forces who is faced with the same temptation from making a similar mistake. My only desire is to help others. "Jim"

JIM COLLINS was a good man. In his childhood, he had been brought up by the Ten Commandments, with such other religious training as the church he belonged to offered him. After being honorably discharged from the U. S. Army in Paris, Jim had taken one of the lucrative civil service jobs at the surplus depot in Vincennes, France. He was amiable and intelligent, and his friends considered him trustworthy. Jim Collins had never been known to steal. Now, at the end of a typically gray spring day, he approached the gate with an o. d. army blanket concealed in his satchel.

As he turned to go through the gate, he spied the wiry major of the M. P.'s. Jim worked as an American citizen for the U. S. Army at the depot, and the military police had not been checking American civilians until the end of World War II. But now they were making spot checks in an attempt to crack down on those who were taking U. S. Army goods and selling them on the French black market at exorbitant prices.

Quick-thinking Jim casually changed his course, walked by the major at the gate, and moved on toward a little building about a quarter of a mile away. It was his intention to remain inside the building for a few minutes in order to avoid meeting the sentry. But the major was pacing up and down at his post, and it appeared that he was not likely to be distracted. Jim carefully removed the blanket and hid it behind some old packing boxes. It was evident that there was too much risk involved, and he would have to try again another day. Whistling, he came back to the gate without the blanket and made his way to the home of his fiancée, a French girl named Odette.

ALTHOUGH he continued to whistle Jim's eyes were troubled, and for the first time he felt a bit apprehensive. He had taken things from the depot before, but he had never actually considered it stealing. After all, wouldn't those o. d. blankets rot in these spring drizzles? Many of them, he knew, could never be used if they lay in outside storage much longer. What harm could there be, he reasoned, in taking several blankets, since Odette's family needed them so badly, and they were only going to be ruined anyway? They would never be missed. He was careful to take only one at a time. He had seen many GI's sell not just one blanket but entire bundles of blankets, and he had heard of whole truckloads of gasoline being sold on the black market. It was common news from Germany that the occupation forces there had sent home four million dollars in one month, when their payroll had only been a million dollars. Jim knew that they were selling American-made cigarettes for fantastic prices. The American soldiers had plenty of food and clothing; GI property became almost common property. As long as a soldier did not take too much, it was overlooked. Of course, Jim admitted to himself, selling guns on the black market was going too far. But what was wrong with taking just one blanket or a sheet? He was not selling the things he took; he was providing them for Odette's people, who were in great need. Surely no one could blame him for that.

As Jim tried to justify his petty thievery by recalling the acts of others, however, he felt guilt and remorse for what he had done. He must quit; after he had supplied a few more things that were essential, he would take no more. He could not face that alert major at the gate; he was afraid his own feelings of guilt would give him away. Although it was not actually wrong to take a little from the U. S. Army, that had so much, to supply the necessities for one poor French family, Jim realized with a cold feeling in the pit of his stomach that he would not wish to explain this point of view to the major.

"I'll get that blanket out," he said to himself, "and that will be it. Just to be safe, I'd better quit before somebody finds out."

BUT JIM WAS tempted by one thing more. About two weeks later, his superior officer, Captain Jenkins, opened a crate containing a dozen five-pound cans of salad oil. He gave several of these cans to the cooks in the officers' mess, and the box with the remaining cans was left open. Jim thought of Odette and her family, and how much they would enjoy a can of this oil. He knew that the French used oil in their cooking, and during and after the war it had been very scarce. As he picked up one of the cans and put it in his satchel, he had a feeling of foreboding inside. As an added precaution, he took time to scratch off the label.

"Just in case," he thought, but he dared not think further because of the fear in his heart. Surely this time, if he got through the gate with the oil, he would take nothing more. Dread of meeting the major was making him sick with worry.

That evening as Jim approached the sentry gate, he did not see the major of the M. P's.

"So far, so good," he muttered to himself with relief. Now he had only a few feet farther to go to safety. He clutched the satchel tightly.

From behind the sentry shed the major suddenly appeared as Jim passed by. A chill of fear shook Jim's heart as he tried to lengthen his steps without actually breaking into a run.

"Search that man," barked the major to the sergeant on duty. A numbness crept over Jim as his worst fears were realized in these words. Yet he was amazed at his calm. He turned slowly, walked back through the gateway, and placed his satchel up on the shelf for inspection.

The sergeant looked at Jim apologetically. It was clear that he expected nothing out of order. "I would like to let you go," he explained, "but the major is watching."

A moment later the major came over and fished the can of oil from Jim's satchel. Although he still remained calm outwardly, Jim felt sick inside.

"What's this?" demanded the major.

"Salad oil, Sir," said Jim.

"Why are you taking it out?"

"Captain Jenkins opened a crate of salad oil and gave me one, Sir," Jim lied.

"I'll check with the captain, and if your story isn't true it will be the worse for you," the major threatened.

At these words, all the desire Jim had felt for the salad oil left him.

"Here, you can have it," he offered desperately.

"I don't want it," growled the major. "Get out of here."

JIM WALKED AWAY stiffly, hardly able to believe what had happened to him. Realization that he had lied to the major hit him again and again. He turned back once more and sought out the major.

"Look, Major," he confessed, "Captain Jenkins didn't tell me that I could have that oil. I took it."

The major seemed to disregard Jim's anguished words. "I'll see Captain Jenkins. Now get going."

Jim departed.

That evening he confessed to Odette what had happened, since she knew at once that something was wrong. He understood now how wrong it was to steal, no matter how right it seemed. But it was too late for good resolutions. He made up his mind to take what punishment would be coming to him.

"Odette," he said sadly, "I might even have to go to prison." It was best that she should know the worst that could happen.

That night he suffered over the uncertainty of his position. At daybreak his mind was still in turmoil.

IN THE MORNING he resolved to make a clean breast of it and to take his punishment. As he approached the depot he expected to be taken and held for further questioning. He could not imagine what Captain Jenkins had told the major. If only he had not lied!

Jim entered the gate. No one stopped him. But he realized that now he would have to face Captain Jenkins.

As he entered, Jim could hardly say hello to anybody, although he saw that the captain was busy with another man for the moment. When the man went out, Captain Jenkins turned to him and glared at him accusingly.

"Yes, Collins, I know all about it," he said. His look showed plainly that he had lost faith in Jim.

Jim swallowed and began the hardest speech he would ever make. "Look, Captain, I did wrong. I shouldn't have taken that oil. I want to marry a girl, and I want to be a good husband to her. I want you to know that I'm awfully sorry for what I did, and for the trouble I've caused you. Sir, you can count on me to be honest after this."

The captain softened visibly. "That's all right, Jim. I went along with you. I told the major that I gave you that oil."

Gratitude and relief welled up in Jim as he thanked the captain for his consideration. He left the office hardly believing that he had been given another chance.

Jim had never been a praying man, but as he walked away toward his place of work, tears streamed down his face.

"Thank you, God," he whispered.

He wept without shame as, for the first time, the full import of the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," entered his heart. This time he made a resolution that he intended to keep—he would never steal anything again. It was a hard lesson, but in learning it Jim had made one step toward a better life.

New Horizons

Teacher Extraordinary

By Gladys L. Hegwood

THEODOSIA was left an orphan at the age of eight. Adding to the misfortune of losing her family, she contracted tuberculosis of the bone in one leg which made her a cripple. First she was taken to a hospital in St. Louis for a series of operations. She had undergone surgery so many times that she screamed with fright whenever a doctor came near her, so she was released from the hospital and sent to an orphans' home in Chicago. Crippled and never entirely free from pain, she was "just another child," receiving no special attention, no love.

It was here that Mr. and Mrs. Lambert, members of the Reorganized Church, found her. They were wealthy farmers with a beautiful home and one son. Since he was a teacher and spent much time away from home, the Lamberts decided to take an orphan child for the summer who needed love and care. Something in Theodosia's pleading eyes pulled at Mrs. Lambert's heart, and she was invited to spend the summer in the spacious country home.

Theo had never experienced such tender love and care. Mr. Lambert took her to a foot doctor who said that she should have a special shoe so that she could walk with a cane instead of crutches. With this new aid, good food, and daily massages, she steadily gained weight and much of the pain was relieved. Then autumn came, and it was time for her to return to the orphanage.

Again the look of pleading in her eyes helped the Lamberts to make a decision, and Theo was asked to remain with them. She was given every educational advantage and the security she needed to develop confidence in herself. As time passed, the Lamberts decided to officially adopt her as their daughter, giving her their name and equal place in their lives with their own child.

"Finding a home and friends and opportunity to make my own way in life proves to me the goodness of God," she says. "Now that I am a kindergarten teacher I find much satisfaction in teaching little children and seeing their minds develop. I like to do things for them that give them pleasure, because I haven't forgotten how much such little kindnesses meant to me."

Despite her lameness, Theo Lambert has become such an outstanding teacher that her work has been commended by prominent educators in the state. Several articles she has written describing her methods of teaching have appeared in educational magazines. Summing up her experiences she philosophizes, "It's like that hymn, 'He leads us on by paths we do not know; upward he leads us though our steps be slow.' I'm sure God is leading me, so why should I complain?"

Divine Authority of Joseph Smith the Martyr

trine, and in which there can not be detected the least evidence of imposture. The introduction and establishment of a system which is in every point suited to the last dispensation, or preparatory work for the second advent of our Lord, and a scheme which agrees in every minute particular with the multitude of circumstances and events which were predicted by the ancient prophets, bespeaks a wisdom which is far superior to any man's wisdom. It bespeaks the wisdom of God.

This multifarious train of circumstances—all harmonizing, all concentrating as it were into one focus—carries with it such irresistible evidence of truth that it is almost impossible for a careful investigator to honestly reject the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. The wisdom and beautiful arrangement of God is stamped upon every part thereof, as it is stamped upon the works of nature.

A Prayer for the President

By Sydney J. Harris

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following "Prayer for the President" was originally published in Mr. Harris' column of the Chicago "Daily News" on November 4, 1952, before election results were known. The editors feel that there is much in this prayer which should cause people to reflect on the responsibilities of the leader of this great nation, and of ways in which divine help is needed. It is reprinted here by permission of the publisher.

O LORD, whichever one it may be, give him a star to steer by.

Drain away the passion and the hate flowing on all sides of him.

Make cool the fevers of dissension; make charitable the followers of his foe.

Unite us, not for war or victory but for righteousness; and we cannot fail.

Give him the courage to do the right as he sees it, not seeking the favor of men or the applause of nations.

O Lord, whichever one it may be, make him walk straight in the darkness of these days, with only a star to guide him; ignoring the voices that are not your voice; casting off the hands that are not your hands.

For there are many, O Lord, who take your name in vain, even as in the past; who make of you a God of war and violence and hatred and bigotry; and all these things in your name.

We are troubled; we are torn; we have lost the way.

The world has become a terror unto us; we are strong, and never before so weak; we are rich, and never before so poor; we are wise, and never before so ignorant.

We have the conceit of strength, the arrogance of money, the vanity of human wisdom; but none of these shall save us, as they saved not the mighty empires of the past.

Only a man shall save us, even as we have been saved before.

O Lord, make this the man; give him the light, the upward look, the dream you dreamed when you made us in your image.

Let him see a sign; let him know your children are everywhere under the sun; as troubled, as torn, as lost as we are.

Let him know that the enemy is not outside us but inside us; not in the world but in the heart, in the mind, in the passions; and purify him so that his tongue will tell us the way of truth.

And give him the courage, not of his convictions but of your commandments; and the hardest of all: to love our enemies.

In your will, our peace.

Question:

Did Jared and his brother and followers take the language of Noah to North America?

Indiana

MRS. A. U. M.

Answer:

The language of any people is always in the process of evolution. New expressions are constantly invented to explain new experiences. As the knowledge and experiences of a people expand, their language (sign or vocal) must also expand. The vocabulary of our language today is constantly expanding as knowledge in science and other fields of learning expands. This would be true in the days of Noah. How much change in the language of a people occurred during the time from Noah to the Tower of Babel episode is not known. We do not know the exact language in which Ether wrote the record of the Jaredite nation. The account on the plates which Joseph Smith translated by the Urim and Thummim had previously been translated and abridged by Moroni.

Question:

Please explain the statement in James 5: 20 that those who bring a soul to Christ "shall hide a multitude of sins."

Missouri

H. C. K.

Answer:

The full text (James 5: 20, 21) in both the A.V. and the I.V. reads the same:

Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.

Peter (I Peter 4: 8, I.V.) gives a parallel statement: "Have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity preventeth a multitude of sins."

In neither passage is the conversion of a nonmember to the gospel referred to, but the recovery of a member whose act of error or wrong has created a situation of grievance and estrangement which make it impossible for two or more brethren to get along together, thus insuring a train of succeeding evils and sins unless the first wrong is properly adjusted—sins involving both parties.

The offended one, or the church officer as may be, should deal with the offending one in all charity and gentleness, seeking his recovery from the wrong and restoration to the confidence of the injured; otherwise the evil begun may destroy not only the faith of the persons directly involved, but destroy the spiritual life of the church to its disruption. Hence the fine counsel of both these church leaders advising charity and a proper removal of the evil. Following such counsel both parties and also others who have become involved are saved "from a multitude of sins," and all are blessed.

Though the whole intent of the law of Christ points to charitable and kindly dealing toward erring members, the law does not require compromise with sin, nor failing to fulfill the law in full. (See Matthew 18: 15-17; Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2).

Question:

Was Joseph Smith the choice seer spoken of in the second chapter of II Nephi? In verses 44 to 48 it refers to this seer as being of the seed of Joseph, son of Lehi who was of the tribe of Manasseh. Was Joseph Smith of this seed?

Illinois

F. R.

Answer:

Chapter 2 of II Nephi contains the blessing of Lehi upon his youngest son, Joseph. In the blessing Lehi reviews the divine promises made to their great ancestor, Joseph of Egypt. The chapter contains a reference to three Josephs. Joseph, the son of Lehi; Joseph of Egypt; and a future "choice seer" by the name of Joseph. Verse 10 speaks of this future "choice seer" who shall do a work and ministry among the descendants of Joseph of Egypt. Verse 17 again refers to this "seer" whose work is explained in the following verses (17-44). In verse 44 Lehi again addresses his son Joseph and assures him that his seed would not be destroyed but would be ministered to by the future "seer" whose name was to be Joseph.

We believe that Joseph Smith was that "choice seer" mentioned in this chapter. It is the logical interpretation. There can be no other.

Question:

When Satan drew a third of the hosts of heaven with him and they became his angels, were they angels prior to this, or were they spirits of men?

Oklahoma

G. I. P.

Answer:

They were angels, and they were the spirits of men. The idea popularized by both Catholics and Protestants that there was an order of beings in heaven called "angels," other than the spirits of men which had been created, is without foundation in Scripture.

After the six days of creation ending with the spiritual creation of all mankind, male and female, it is said in Genesis 2: 1, "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them"—the host referring to mankind. No other beings or angels are mentioned in the creation, neither do the Scriptures specify any order of angels previously existing. Satan and those who followed him in his rebellion were but a part of the human race, dwelling in light. He was called "Lucifer," or shining one, but in his transgression he led one third of humanity to perdition.

Angels sent to Abraham were said to be "holy men." Moses and Elias appeared to Christ on the mount of transfiguration. Michael, said to be Adam, came to strengthen Daniel. Angels appearing to John, each of two, said, "I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren." All the angels participating in the latter-day restoration were prophets of past dispensations.

The earth was made for man, and God has pledged that the righteous shall inherit it—they who are of the earth and have been redeemed—whom he will bring with him when he comes to reign here. There is no mention of any others having permanent inheritance on the earth. (See Psalm 115: 16; D. and C. 49: 3; 85: 4.)

Sixty-eighth Annual Reunion Held

ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS.—The sixty-eighth annual Southern New England District Reunion was held July 11-19. The theme, "The Challenge of the Restoration," was carried out in the morning prayer services, class-work, and preaching services. Prayer services were in charge of Dr. F. M. McDowell, who also had the responsibility of the men's class, where he stressed the new kingdom-building reports and program. He was also the speaker at the first Sunday morning service and at two evening services.

Youth fellowship was directed by Elder William T. Guthrie, who also had a youth class, recreation, and preaching assignments.

Brother G. Leslie DeLapp of the Presiding Bishopric was the speaker the first Sunday afternoon and the last Sunday morning of the reunion, as well as during the week. His class, "Progress in Temporalities," was attended by both men and women, and had fine interest and attendance.

Brother McDowell and the men met at the Welcome House; the women, under the direction of Sister Nellie Mottashed, met in the tabernacle to study "Women Accept the Challenge of the Restoration." Florence Sinclair, district women's leader, was in charge. Brief worship services were conducted by various women.

Children's activities were under the supervision of Mildred Carter, director of religious education for the district. She had a staff of helpers, including Imogene Pement who was in charge of the juniors, Joan Cash in charge of the primaries assisted by Beatrice Wright, Muriel Doliver and Grace Calverese who had charge of kindergarten, and Joyce Cook, who took care of the nursery.

Music for all services was in charge of Marion Rogerson Tift, assisted by Kay Fisher and Bea York. The first Sunday evening there was a lovely vesper service by the combined choirs of the district, which also sang the last Sunday evening. At other services there were solos, duets, trios, and a women's chorus.

Myron Fisher, Jr., had charge of the commissary, and he and his staff provided a varied and satisfying week's menu at a reasonable fee.

Children's classes were held in the new youth center building. In the evening the children all met there for recreation and educational movies. The last Friday evening the younger children had an early evening boat ride, and the older young people and adults had a boat trip in the moonlight after the evening service.

Afternoon activities included recreation, several experience meetings, and a demonstration worship service by Sister McDowell.

The evensong program was in charge of Elder J. V. Pement.

Probably the most impressive service of the entire week was that held on Saturday evening by Elders Pement, Guthrie, and Stanley Johnson. Its missionary theme was carried out in the platform decorations—a map of the world, outlined by flags of many nations, a lighted cross at the front of the stage, and missionary hymns sung by the choir. The young missionaries told their experiences with people of other races, and a new tract by Evan Fry, "What and How Shall I Tell My Neighbor," was distributed to the whole audience.

Mrs. Florrie Parker of Independence, Missouri, represented the Herald House at the reunion.

Leonard Chesworth had charge of the snack bar, Harold Cash, Jr., was reunion treasurer, Thornton Porter was presiding deacon, Marion Tift had charge of floral arrangements for the tabernacle, and Audrey Hardy was in charge of housing. Sister Thornton, of Maitland, Florida, made a unique contribution in that she used her talents as a photographer to take pictures of the many and varied reunion activities and made them up in folio form.

A baptismal service preceded by a service of consecration climaxed the week's activities. Over 300 were present for the week ends, and about 150 were present during the week.—Reported by DOROTHY FISHER

New Officers Elected

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—The branch business meeting was held on August 19, with District President Frank Mussell and Pastor Fred Moore in charge. Officers elected were as follows: pastor, Fred Moore; counselor, Robert H. Brigham; secretary, Margaret Bender; church school director, Herbert Brigham; children's supervisor and branch solicitor, Clara Sweeney; women's leader and adult supervisor, Eva Moore; assistant leader and recorder, Esther Bringham; music director, Isabel Beck; treasurer, Robert Brigham; book steward, librarian and publicity agent, Leda Colbert; auditing committee, Robert Jerome and Zella Allen; building committee, Fred Moore, Robert Brigham, Arthur Jeffcott, Bernie Taylor, and Margaret Bender.

A custodian is to be elected from the building committee. The building committee was authorized to look for a building location for a new church.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT

District Conference

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—At the annual Pittsburgh District conference, which was held May 30-31 with Apostle D. T. Williams presiding, the following officers were elected for the coming year: Donald R. Ross, district president; Mrs. Agnes Kean, secretary; Mack E. Miller, treasurer; Clarence I. Winship, nonresident pastor; Arthur Warner and Clarence Winship, counselors; Mrs. Beulah Warner, director of women; William Horn, director of young people; Mrs. Margaret Raisbeck, director of music; George A. Tenos, director of young adults; Thomas Morgan, church school director; Mrs. Elizabeth E. Ross, reporter, and Mrs. Harriet Warner, historian.—Reported by D. R. Ross

Idaho-Utah Reunion

HAGERMAN, IDAHO.—The annual reunion of the Idaho and Utah Districts was held August 9-16. This was one of the best reunions in the history of the two districts, and also the largest held in recent years, reflecting the growth of the two districts. To say that one activity was more outstanding than another would be difficult, for there was a fine spirit of unity and co-operation felt throughout the entire week, especially demonstrated in the business meeting. As a result of the growth of the reunion, more ground adjoining the present property was purchased.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was in charge of the reunion. Evangelist J. F. Curtis ministered in many ways and particularly in his afternoon class dealing with missionary experiences. Bishop Willard Becker gave a challenging ministry in his teaching and preaching regarding the principle of stewardship and the financial program of the church. Elder James A. Everett was in charge of youth activities, and was assisted by Elder G. Wayne Smith, who taught the young people's class. The young people at reunion were responsive. In the closing prayer service there were a number of prayers and testimonies from children and young people. Brother Everett also taught a teacher's training class, and Brother Smith served as book steward.

Brother and Sister Russell F. Ralston and family, who had been doing reunion work in Canada, arrived on Tuesday. Sister Ralston then taught the women's class, which had been taught by Sister Doras Becker in the early part of the week. Brother Ralston shared with Apostle Hanson in leading the prayer services. He also taught the men's class and shared in the preaching ministry. Sister Ardis Everett, with volunteer help, did a good work with the nursery.

Among local workers who assisted with reunion activities were Sister Josephine Ultican of Tuttle, Idaho, who directed the children's work with the help of a number of capable assistants; Sister Goldie Egan of Salt Lake City, Utah, who had charge of women's activities; Brother Silas Egan, who took charge of kitchen crews; Brother Tom Ultican of Rupert, Idaho, who was in charge of music; and Brothers Elwin Dennis and James Everett, who had charge of the recreation program. The reunion committee consisted of some of the General Church appointees already named, and Brother Harry S. Fry, district president of the Idaho District, Brother Cecil Gilmore, president of Boise Branch, and Brother Lysle Gilmore, president of the Hagerman Branch, were on hand to take care of necessary details.—Reported by branch reporter

Raytown Lays Cornerstone

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.—Formal opening of the first unit and the placing of the cornerstone of the new church at Raytown took place August 23.

In the Shawnee Drive congregation, Chester and Robert, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Mazza, were baptized by Elder Roy Whipple on June 14.

Women's department officers for the coming year are president, Opal Howell; vice-president, Mildred Hansen; secretary, Retha Matney; and treasurer, Genevieve Lane.

Airman James Smith left for the Panama Canal Zone July 1, to be stationed at Airbrook Airforce Base.

Cynthia Morienc, daughter of Airman and Mrs. James Smith, was blessed by Elders Roy E. Browne and Roy Whipple on June 28.

In the Nashua congregation, the young adults held a picnic at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Ruth in July.

Alberta Hooper was baptized by Ivan Bird at the recent reunion.

In the Central congregation, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Short celebrated their thirtieth wedding anniversary with a family picnic at their home on July 8.

Leonard Adkins, son of Mrs. William Grahn, was inducted into the Army June 29.

In the Van Brunt congregation, Allan Carswell, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Carswell, left for the service July 27. He is taking his basic training at Ft. Leonard Wood.—From September Journal of the Kansas City Stake.

Children Blessed

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN.—On Sunday, August 30, the sacrament of the blessing of children was observed during the eleven o'clock service at the church. Lori Ann, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Herbert Reese, was blessed by Pastor Doty Price, and Max Alexander, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Wellman, received a blessing under the hands of his uncle, Brother Reese.

A successful daily vacation Bible school was held at the church in June. It was climaxed by a potluck supper and program, to which the parents and friends were invited.

Generously contributing time and effort, the various members of the branch have redecored the entire interior of the church. The women's department has earned $122.00 during our local cherry picking season by conducting rummage, popcorn, and candy sales for the pickers.—Reported by LORRAINE G. SMITH

District Business Meeting

BANDERA, TEXAS.—Central Texas District conducted a business meeting on June 20 at the Texas Reunion near Bandera. Apostle Charles R. Hield presided, in conjunction with District President C. W. Tischer. Election of officers was conducted, and results were as follows: sustained as district president, C. W. Tischer of Houston; church school director, R. B. Davies of Houston; leader of young people, Wayne Banta of Fort Worth; women's leader, Jessie Banta of Houston; treasurer, B. B. Root of Houston; secretary, Dorothy Romig of Houston; nonresident pastor, A. J. Banta of Houston; publicity director, M. R. Bishop of Houston; and music director, Grace Moore of San Antonio.

Appointments sustained included Hal Davenport of Dallas as bishop's agent, and Chattie Everett of Dallas as historian.

H. R. Vandel and A. J. Banta were elected to the reunion committee.

Other business included the presentation and approval for ordination of the names of these men: to office of elder, R. B. Davies, M. R. Bishop and F. A. Olson, all of Houston, and W. Banta of Fort Worth; to the office of priest, Carl Gill of Fort Worth, and R. Sherrell and C. W. Plumlee of the Sabine area mission; to the office of deacon, Walter Marsh of Houston, and Clarence Clarke of Fort Worth.

District President Tischer selected as his counselors, L. E. Wheeler and F. A. Olson.—Reported by M. R. BISHOP

Three Baptismal Services Held

XENIA, ILLINOIS.—The fifty-ninth annual Brush Creek Reunion was held on the grounds belonging to the church near Xenia. The theme, "Challenge of the Restoration," was carried out each day, from the general prayer service in the morning throughout the class periods and the evening sermons. Preaching duties were shared by the different men on the staff. Apostle Donald O. Chesworth was the minister in charge, assisted by Elders Alma Andrews, J. C. Daugherty, and Donald Kyser. The leader for the women's department was Sister Hazel Kyser. Those in charge of the children's work were Sisters Meriba Vaughn and Andrews. Sister Alice Chesworth had charge of the music. Sister Kelly was book steward for the reunion.

Sister Kyser taught the class for women, Apostle Chesworth taught the priesthood class, and the young people's class was taught by Elder J. C. Daugherty. A general class was taught by Elder Alma Andrews, and in the evening a class on progress in temporalities was taught by Elder Donald Kyser.

A tea was given by the ladies of the Central Illinois District, with District Leader Fern Izatt in charge. Ladies from Southeast and St. Louis Districts were guests. Sister Daugherty was introduced, and made an inspiring talk.

The afternoons were given over to recreation for the young people. Each evening a campfire was held, and the evensong was supervised by Brother Kyser. Three early morning prayer services were held for the young people.

A special baptismal service was held Wednesday afternoon. On Saturday afternoon nine were baptized, with this service taking place in the new church at Flora, with a large crowd attending. Apostle Chesworth had charge of the confirmation services in the auditorium on the reunion grounds. After the confirmation services, Brother J. C. Daugherty spoke on the ordinances. On Sunday afternoon, another baptismal service was held, with three more being baptized.

There were 307 camped on the grounds for the entire reunion. The evening services had an average attendance of 450, and on the week ends over 700 attended.—Reported by RUBY and JAMES ELLEDGE

Understanding My Congregation, by Albert P. Stauderman, Muhlenberg Press, 1228 Spruce, Philadelphia, Pa. Price, 90c

The author devotes primary attention to the organization and functioning of the local congregation. A brief history giving the background and growth of the Christian church, the position of the early Christians and how congregations began is included. Mr. Stauderman, a Lutheran, refers to his church and beliefs on several occasions, but the content of the text and his approach to the subject would be very helpful to any church leader or worker. In simple language he evaluates the congregation and its functional parts. He states that the early Christians possessed strength of faith and conviction that built up congregations and made possible the missionary expansion of the church. We need such strength in our congregational life today that can come only from an informed and consecrated membership. Mr. Stauderman answers quite completely the question, "What is a congregation?" and furnishes an outline that produces a brief history of a congregation that he implies is basic to understanding and ministry.

Leaders should understand the entire program of the congregation. Emphasis is placed on the importance of congregations' working together for Christ. The faith, aims, methods, and objectives of the group should be understood by all.

Worship is the heart of the congregation, and great effort should be spent in planning the services and influencing the members to active participation in rich worship experiences. Various methods of private and corporate worship are discussed.

Second in importance to the congregation's program of worship is its system of Christian education which includes the staff, equipment, courses of instruction, classroom facilities, and an evangelical spirit. Working arms of the congregation are the departments and organizations. There should be functioning to give life to the total body through fellowship, culture, and participation in mutual interests that unite the people in a common cause. A balanced program is essential. Unity of the congregation is a must; this is achieved through comprehensive planning of a program that will enlist the strength and teamwork of all members. Ways and means of achieving this are discussed; it may be accomplished by using any one or a combination of five types of congregational organizations. At all times the congregation should be kept well informed if unity is to exist.

Mr. Stauderman points out the changes in home life and trends in modern society that weaken the home. Homes are basic to society and Christian living. To combat the effects of these changes he suggests the importance of the church and the home working together in partnership. Methods by which the church must inform and guide the home and how it can encourage and help the family in effective worship are discussed.

A congregation has numerous resources—financial, spiritual, and material—that should be discovered and used. These resources are carefully and thoroughly explained. The congregation is part of the community and its life. To live it must work with its neighbors. The community is affected by the kind of life that exists among the members of the congregation.

Ways by which the church must and can reach outward and upward are presented. Ours is an eternal mission in sharing the Christ of the ages. We have inherited culture, literature, music, art, and the Christian way from our forefathers. We owe a debt to the future, for to us is intrusted the work of keeping the lamp polished and its light shining brightly.

I heartily recommend this text to pastors, department leaders, and all workers for Christ. (For sale at Herald House.)

CHARLES V. GRAHAM

Projects That Pay, by Jane Kirk, Harper Brothers. Price, $2.75.

The author, who conducts a column in the Christian Herald, has written this book from her background of experience in church work to answer the query raised by many groups, "What are some of the ways in which we may serve our organization by raising funds?"

Projects That Pay, Miss Kirk's answer to this question, is divided into two sections. The first section is designed for the better established large church with greater resources and man power; in it are set forth some ambitious undertakings. In the second section there are similarly developed twenty-five chapters suggesting ways and means for the less well-equipped and staffed small church. The ideas center around service projects, the selling of items specially prepared, bazaars, dinners, catering, shows, demonstrations, rental departments of various types, and novel ideas for soliciting gifts.

In the service projects are listed the community suppers or other meals on special occasions when the restaurants may have difficulty in meeting the needs of the crowds. Suggestions are made for the organization of the cooks, waitresses, and dishwashers. Ideas are offered whereby the dinners or activities may take on added significance by special local dishes or specially prepared side dishes for which the group may become well known.

Other ideas are offered whereby projects may be sponsored which will give those of special talents opportunity to prepare items for bazaars or other types of sales; ways and means are suggested for the advertising and promotion of these. Seven chapters are devoted to the development of these ideas.

More ambitious programs, such as operating a church-sponsored short-order stand for the summer months, or church-staffed preschool nursery classes, are also discussed.

Other chapters are devoted to such projects as lawn socials, thrift and hobby shows, and preparing and selling favorite recipes in a cookbook. One chapter gives ways in which special events in the church calendar may be taken advantage of and used for celebrations. Suggestions are given for church groups that want to take advantage of the demands of special seasons. For example, at Christmas homemade candy may be professionally packaged and sold, special services may be offered by baby sitters during the rushes, or child care services may be supplied for afternoons. At Easter and Christmas supplies and decorations for the season can be prepared and sold by church groups.

This book merits a place of usefulness with district and branch women's departments. There are a few of the ideas and methods I might not recommend, but the majority of the projects suggested, with slight modifications, can be used as means of bringing members together in mutual undertaking, in building good will through service in our communities, and by supplementing the tithing and offerings suggested in the law. This book is stimulating; its suggestions can enhance many regularly conducted activities and extend the range of the services which we as a church offer to our communities.

JAMES S. MENZIES

In Favor with God and Man, by Katherine Blackburn Peck, the Warner Press. Price, $1.00.

This book was written for Christian parents of children nine, ten, and eleven years old. The author believes that religion is caught, not taught, and that what we as parents think, feel, and do is more important than words. She feels that, since the harvest of volunteer wheat is far too uncertain, the spiritual care of the family must be well planned. There must be family "at home" nights, daily worship, and observance of Sunday as a special day of religious activity of a quiet, restful atmosphere.

The chapters of this little book are "Family Worship," "Christian Uses of Daily Experiences," "Guidance in Life's Problems," "Counseling Together with the Family," "Good Reading and Conversation," "Learning to Live Together," and "Uses of Holidays." These are designed to help teach children the art of demonstrating kindness. There is a keynote of sharing, helpfulness, and love for others in every page. The book is full of things to do in the home to stimulate worth-while interests, and it gives the reader a keener sense of his opportunities and responsibilities in helping his family reach toward God, in co-operation with the church.

It is the prayer of the author "that these pages may help parents to discover better ways of leading their children into Christian life and to walk those ways together as they grow in favor with God and man." As one reads he is made a bit more conscious that home is truly a stewardship—a workshop in Zionism living; and that, even though Mrs. Peck is not of our faith, her ideas may be used to emphasize Zionism ideals and stewardship laws in molding kingdom-building materials in our homes.

CAMILLA COLLINS

The Unfolding Drama of the Bible, by Bernhard W. Anderson, Association Press. Price, 75c.

It is natural for a Latter Day Saint to approach the writings of Protestants or Catholics with a critical attitude, for he realizes from experience that their views, though sometimes scholastic, too often lack the latter-day enlightenment or spiritual discernment needed for full truth. Professor Bernhard W. Anderson in this work shows a more sympathetic approach to the Bible than many modern writers.

We may not like his referral to the Genesis story of the creation as "naïve," neither his limited scope of "Zion," nor his leading questions at the end of each chapter.

On the other hand, the eight studies will require some extensive Scripture reading and carry some valuable historical comment which is substantiated by the best we know.

His statements at times reflect our distinctive message:

"Sin is man's declaration of independence from God."

"Men are free to choose their actions, but not free to escape the consequences of those decisions."

"The Church, by virtue of the commission from her Lord [to bear witness to God's kingdom—a light to the Gentiles], must be socially responsible, missionary minded, and world redeeming."

"Thus the Bible begins with a vision of Paradise Lost and concludes with a vision of the coming of God's kingdom. In between this prologue and epilogue unfolds the drama of God's entrance into the human struggle to win back his lost creation and to restore man to the peace, unity, and blessedness which he intends for mankind. God's strategy includes the choice and discipline of a people, and finally the way of the Cross; but the end of his redemptive activity is the final conquest of sin, death, and all powers which corrupt and threaten history. The Church lives by this hope, and prays and strives for the coming of God's kingdom."—Page 51.

ALFRED H. YALE

Handbook of Skits and Stunts, by Helen and Larry Eisenberg, Association Press. Price, $2.95.

Into one book, the Eisenbergs have succeeded in drawing together most of the favorite campfire stunts of the last decade. For one who wants to brush up an old stunt, be it the "Ford Car" or the "Lion Hunt," this book will quite likely have somewhere within it what he wants.

To even the most experienced campfire director, however, there are bound to be some "new" or at least previously unobserved stunts among the four hundred described herein. There are, however, few serious or inspirational skits. It is largely what campers would term "corn," though generally a very likeable brand.

One of the best sections is "How to make up your own skits," which gives encouragement and assistance to those who have some originality and want something different. In general, the Eisenbergs have done a good job, and for those concerned regularly with campfires or recreational activities, this would be a worth-while handbook of novel, useful ideas.

Study Diligently to Understand

I have had a sincere desire to dig deep into the Three Standard Books to find the truth of God for myself. Not only did I want to find out for my own personal benefit but that I might have the ability to tell the gospel story to others.

For a long time I studied very hard, but I wasn't satisfied; I felt I wasn't understanding it. I felt I was skipping right over the important parts. I was becoming very discouraged when Brother Thompson from Independence, Missouri, preached in our church. Listening intently, I heard something that made me sit up straight and open my ears and eyes. Brother Thompson was relating an experience he and his family had had. They had to read the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants two or three times before clearly understanding them. Those few words encouraged and gave me a new hope.

That night I had a dream concerning the Three Standard Books. They were on a table which was rotating. The first time they went around it was very dark. The second time, it was just a little bit lighter. The third time it was much lighter; and the fourth time, the most brilliant light shone from the Three Books. At the end were these words: "Do not be discouraged; be patient, for those who diligently seek to understand will understand."

I'm sixteen years old. In my patriarchal blessing, I was told to study a little each day and not become impatient. So now I'm walking the road of life with a light and happy heart, because I am finding out for myself what is between the covers of the Book of Mormon, Bible, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

On Paying Tithing

I recently related to a friend my experience in paying tithing, and she suggested that I share it with others.

From the time of my baptism I felt a desire to keep the financial law. This was during the depression, and I was deeply in debt. I was told that I should first pay off my indebtedness, then start paying tithing. I worked and saved, and eventually the time came when I was able to file an inventory and pay tithing. Up to this time I was rather irritated when there was a call for funds during a church service. But now that I myself am keeping the law, I am no longer bothered. I feel that I have been blessed in many ways because of the effort I have made.

The Saints' Herald is a welcome visitor in my home each week; I always feel richer after reading it. Many of the articles are indeed helpful.

Tribute to a Grandmother

My husband's grandmother, Mrs. Hattie Traxson, who lives near Coffeyville, Kansas, listens to the church radio program on KMBC every Sunday even though she is not a member of the church. She once told me that the thing she wants most to do in life is to live so that when she is gone she will be remembered for the helpful deeds she tries to do as keepsakes for those about her. I think this is an idea worth passing on. Instead of being a burden to others as I grow older, I, too, want to do deeds that will be memorials to a life well-lived.

THE GOSPELS

By J. B. Phillips

author of "Letters to Young Churches"

Even broader than the author's first book in the appeal of its subject matter, this presentation of the Gospels in modern English—in the idiomatic language of today—restores the original strength and impact of their great message. Here is a superbly readable version of the passages that are the very essence of Christianity—a version unequalled in its power to reveal new spiritual meaning. The MacMillan Company.

DEATHS

SALISBURY.—Emery Howard, son of George and Sarah Mosher Salisbury, was born in Carroll County, Iowa, April 22, 1886, and died at Jefferson, Iowa, August 3, 1953. In 1907 he was married to Medora Lawrence. To this union, eight children were born: Daryl, Dale, and Mrs. Martin Miller of Jefferson; Mrs. Vonnie Johnson, Lohrville, Iowa; Mrs. Elmer Willoughby, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Mrs. Jack Zimmerle, Herndon, Iowa; Arthur, Churdan, Iowa; and Kenneth, United States Navy. Mr. Salisbury spent most of his life in Carroll and Greene Counties, Iowa. He became a member of the Reorganized Church, November 10, 1918.

He is survived by his wife; his eight children; one sister, Mrs. Herbert Staples of Brownsdale, Minnesota; one brother, Earle, of Lamar, Colorado; twenty grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Services were held at the Lanesboro Methodist Church, Elder Orman Salisbury, officiating. Burial was in Lanesboro, Iowa, cemetery.

COCHRAN.—Sarah Jane, daughter of John J. and Jane Watkins, was born April 18, 1875, at Nortonville, California, and died August 24, 1953, at Research Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri. In 1893 she married John X. Cochran. He preceded her in death. One son, Arthur John, died in 1944, and a daughter, Olive, died in infancy. In 1938, Mrs. Cochran moved to Pittsburg, Kansas, where she established her home and lived until her death. She was baptized at the age of eight in Lucas, Iowa.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Jennie Mae Slayton, and Mrs. Mary E. Marshall, Independence, Missouri; and Kathryn L. Cochran of Pittsburg, Kansas. Also surviving are one sister, four brothers, five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Carson Funeral Home, Independence, Elders T. W. Bath and A. E. Stoff, officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HALSTED.—Ida Eloise, daughter of Alfred and Angie Cooper, was born July 12, 1869, and died at the Independence Sanitarium, August 21, 1953. She was united in marriage to Zebedee Michael Halsted May 11, 1893. To this union four children were born. Her husband and one child preceded her in death. She became a member of the Reorganized Church July 25, 1920.

She is survived by two daughters and one son: Mrs. Nellie Dehn (Dane), Sugar Creek, Missouri; Mrs. Pearl Chappelow, Kansas City, Kansas; and Burton Halsted, Sugar Creek, Missouri. One sister, Mrs. Lina Debo, lives in Stillwater, Oklahoma. She had six grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Services were held at Carson Funeral Chapel, Elder Ephraim Brown and Evangelist W. F. Bolinger officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PETRE.—Clarence Lester, son of Fred and Emma Wells Petre, was born February 15, 1904, at Swink, Colorado, and died August 21 at his home near Holden, Missouri. He spent his youth in Knobnoster, Missouri, and moved to Independence in 1926. He married Modena Harris October 18, 1928. They were the parents of three children. Mr. Petre operated a barber shop in Kansas City, Missouri, for 15 years before moving to Holden in 1946. He operated a barber shop in Holden and managed his farm until his recent illness. Clarence was an elder in the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are his wife and two daughters, Donna and Pamela, of the home. One son, Richard, is in the Army. He also leaves six brothers and one sister: Heman and Elbert, Independence, Missouri; Oral, Kansas City, Missouri; William D., Oklahoma City; Glen and Delbert, Ellensburg, Washington; and Mrs. Opal Bozarth, Warrensburg, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted at the Holden Reorganized Church August 23, Stake President Harry Simons and Pastor Charles Robinson officiating.

BARNARD.—Minnie A., was born June 14, 1877, at Lancaster, Michigan, and moved with her parents to Suttons Bay while still a child. Here she married Herbert Barnard, May 31, 1896, and they moved to Traverse City, Michigan. Her husband preceded her in death on November 25, 1919.

Surviving are a sister, Mrs. William Challenger of Traverse City; a brother, Walter Emerson of Seattle, Washington; several nieces and nephews. Funeral services were held at Martinson Funeral Home, Pastor Doty Price officiating. Interment was in Oakwood cemetery.

MANDATE TO HUMANITY

by
Edwin McNeill Poterat

In this book, the Ten Commandments speak with compelling urgency to Western man—to men caught between the pressure of materialism within and communism without—bringing renewed moral basis of Western culture. It challenges everyone who would achieve the fullness of God's intention for himself and society to "overcome . . . with good" the evils and excesses that would destroy it. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press.

BE FAITHFUL

Never mind where your work is. Never mind whether it be visible or not. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toil. You are working for eternity. If you cannot see results here, remember that God does see; and if you are faithful now, your works will follow you. So do your duty, and trust in God.—Alexander Maclaren.

MY GIFT

What can I give Him,
Poor as I am?
If I were a shepherd,

If I were a wise man,
I would do my part.
But what can I give Him?
I will give him my heart.

DEFINITION OF WORRY

Worry is a circle of inefficient thought revolving around a circle of fear.

RIGOR MORTIS

Christophe Morley once warned against stagnation: "Take your mind out and dance on it. It's getting all caked up." Perhaps the suggestion to "go soak your head in a bucket of water" is saying the same thing. At least we all need to use some method to dissolve the "rigor mortis" tendencies that develop occasionally in the brain. P. A. W.

BIBLE STORIES

By Mary Alice Jones

Here is the perfect introduction to the Bible for boys and girls written as only America's leading authority on religious education for children could write it. Just as Miss Jones has done in her previous books, she here again has made religion a very real and personal thing to all children. With its unsurpassed text and pictures, BIBLE STORIES will be a treasured addition to every home, library, and church school (age 8-14). Rand, McNally, & Co.

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Donald Lee Kyser

SINCE HE WAS A CHILD, Don Kyser has wanted to serve the church in any capacity that he could. When he was approached to become a full-time appointee he naturally said, "If it be God's will, it is mine." His only hobby, he says, is visiting in the homes of the Saints and their friends and talking with them about the gospel. He first went under General Church appointment in May, 1948, being assigned to the Rich Hill (Missouri) District. In 1952 he was appointed to the Southeastern Illinois District.

He was born in Pittsburg, Kansas, April 13, 1917, of Reorganized Latter Day Saint parents, and was baptized at Miami, Oklahoma, in 1926. He was graduated from Miami High School in 1935 and spent the following year at Graceland. For a number of years he was associated with his father in the grocery business. From 1941 to 1948 he served as manager of a grocery business in Picher, Oklahoma.

He was ordained a priest in 1943, an elder in 1944, and a seventy in 1950. He served as pastor of the Cardin, Oklahoma, Branch from 1943 to 1946 and as pastor of the Fairland, Oklahoma, Branch in 1946.

He was married to Hazel Marie Guinee in December, 1936. They have two children: Donna Lee, 15, and Robert Riley, 7. Their home is in Marion, Illinois.

COVER PICTURE

The Temple of Quetzalcoatl has in recent years been uncovered, having been covered up and used as a base for a later Aztec structure. It originally is supposed to have been six terraces high, and had a temple hall of two rooms on its summit. The serpent head with the flower-like collar representing large and small quetzal feathers is the symbol of Quetzalcoatl, the bearded white God. The other figures are thought by some to be connected with Tlaloc, God of the Rain.

However, Alfonso Caso, eminent Mexican archaeologist, says that they are conventionalized representations of serpents, with large extending jaws and tusks. There were originally 366 of these figureheads on all four sides of the pyramid, the stairway being on the west side. Carbon-14-dating has produced a date of about 1473 B.C. for this temple, though this method of dating is still in the experimental stage.

Note the undulating body of the serpents, the use of waves, sea shells, and snake rattlers. Originally all were painted: background, red; border, green; water, blue; feathers, green; open mouth of the serpents, red; teeth, white; eyes, black obsidian; shells, red and yellow. These ruins are about 52 kilometers (31 miles) northeast of Mexico City on a paved highway.

PRESIDENT'S HEALTH IMPROVING

President Israel A. Smith is still at his home, where his health continues to improve.

YOUNG ADULT RETREAT

President W. Wallace Smith attended the Center Stake of Zion Young Adult Retreat at the YMCA Camp Santosage on Sunday, September 6. He was associated in ministry with Bishop H. W. Cackler and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Jacobsen, young adult leaders.

CONFERENCE IN ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

President F. Henry Edwards returned September 10 from the College Student Conference at Rochester, New York, which was held over the Labor Day week end.

SPEAKS AT CAMPUS

Apostle Roscoe E. Davey spoke at the Campus outdoor services Sunday evening, September 6. He also gave the pastoral address at both Communion services at Stone Church on Sunday morning.

VISITS MIAMI, OKLAHOMA

Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, assisted with the Communion service and spoke at the evening meeting in Miami, Oklahoma, on Sunday, September 6.

ARANDA FAMILY DELAYED

Apostle Charles Hield reports that the Aranda family from Guatemala received their American visas on August 27, but will not arrive in the United States until about October 1. Brother Aranda is remaining at the request of the Commercial Chancellor in order to complete a commercial research project.

YOUNG ADULT RALLY

Charles Neff, Assistant to the First Presidency, visited Spring River District on August 30, and spoke at the morning services in the Joplin, Missouri, congregation. That evening Brother Neff spoke at a Young Adult Rally, held at the reunion grounds, and helped to organize the Young Adult group for that district. Eighty young people attended the rally.

ZION'S LEAGUE RETREAT

Two hundred and fifty-six young people attended the Center Stake Zion's League Retreat at Lake Doniphan over the Labor Day week end. Lee Hart was in charge, and those associated with him in ministry were Apostle C. George Mesley, Stake President Charles Graham, and Elder Eugene Theys. The high spot of the retreat was a three-hour fellowship on Monday morning. At that time, a spontaneous offering of $125 was given to help finance a Youth Mission in Center Stake of Zion.

RETURNS FROM YOUTH CAMPS

Edna Easter has returned from teaching duties at two youth camps at Brewton, Alabama. Edward Barlow was director of both camps. Allen Breckenridge had charge of religious classes, Jack Pray was business manager and taught classes, and Mrs. Lloyd Hurshman taught handicrafts.

The Honor of Good Works

"Glory, honor, and peace, to every man that worketh good."

—Romans 2: 10

IF ONE IS WATCHING for it, he will be impressed and surprised by the number of people in the world who do good simply because they like others and enjoy helping them. Many of them perform endless acts of kindness and mercy without hope of praise or compensation.

Much is said of the extent of sin and wickedness in the world, and it is fairly probable that the charges are true; but that is only half the story. No books would be big enough to contain the record of good works, even if there were scribes enough with time enough to write them.

It has often seemed that any town in our country could be taken as an example, and that if the free voluntary acts of service and good will were stopped for a week or two, the entire community life would go to pieces and everybody would be in trouble.

PEOPLE THINK they pay for their community in taxes and in profits on goods they purchase. They don't realize their payments are insignificant in comparison with the values they receive.

In our town there is a city park where children play and families gather for picnics. It wasn't bought from taxes. An organization gave the land, had it improved, erected shelters, laid out the roads, and then invited the public in. Of course members of the organization are citizens of the community and they themselves receive benefit from that piece of good work. They had just grown tired of waiting for somebody else, or the city government, to do something and decided to do it themselves. A great educational institution is located here because years ago private citizens and individuals raised money to bring it here. So it is with many other things that make life better and happier for the people here.

THERE IS HARDLY ANY PROBLEM that can arise in our city without some local organization taking an interest in it, talking about it, and trying to do something to solve it. Success may not come easily; the obstacles and difficulties may be very great, but eventually some brave souls gather the strength and resources to pit against it. Without the help of the good and dedicated volunteers, the city would lose some of its most important services, and deteriorate in its quality as a community.

The world may not be perfect, but it is not lost. And one reason that there is still something worth saving in it is the fact that there are so many people still trying to do good. They are not eloquent in speech and testimony, but their good works speak for them in tones like the thunder of heaven.

SOME PULPITS have become famous as places for deploring things and conditions. They bear up under heavy burdens of reproof and regret. They weather many a storm of criticism and reproach. Perhaps that is why they are built so sturdy, but look so worn in a few years. There is no official wailing wall in America as there is in Jerusalem, but pulpits have substituted in a valiant way. This would not be important except that it affects the thinking of the people, and it is not surprising that they sometimes leave religious services with some lugubrious ideas.

As religious people, we have a responsibility to keep our minds in a wholesome condition. It is as easy to think of the good that people do as of the bad, and it is much better for us. For if we concentrate on evil, eventually we become discouraged and give up, which is exactly what the Adversary wants. But if we concentrate on good, we get up and go to work at it.

SINCE THE ADVENT of television, radio has attempted to strengthen itself by devoting a good part of Sunday morning to religious services. Some of the sermons are enough to frighten the righteous, and there is no way of telling what they do to sinners. All varieties of ideas and prejudice are represented. It is interesting to observe what strenuous efforts are made to substitute something easy and magic for practical good works.

It was therefore a pleasure to hear from the radio station of a neighboring city one of our church programs, with the speaker's practical, wholesome philosophy of common sense and good works.

The restoration of the gospel was a revolt against religions of words, and it brought the issue back to the original starting point of Christianity—a program of practical work in the building of the kingdom of God.

There is a radiance of spiritual glory about the lives of men and women who do good works. They live in a glow of light that others cannot see. They work with a strength that others do not know. They have an honor whose source is God, and they have a place of peace in their hearts into which the world cannot venture.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Kirtland District

Arrangements have been completed with Bishop J. F. Wildermuth and Brother Joseph Kochis by which Brother Kochis will again serve as bishop's agent for the Kirtland District. Solicitors of this district are requested to send their reports for September, 1953, and subsequent months to Mr. Joseph Kochis, 359 High Street, Elyria, Ohio.

We are grateful to Bishop Wildermuth for his services in carrying on this work in addition to his many responsibilities with the Kirtland properties. We are happy to have Brother Kochis again serving as bishop's agent for the Kirtland District, and are assured he will receive the full co-operation and support of the Saints of this district.

Nauvoo Pageant

A notable example of changed public relations between the church and the community as compared to one hundred years ago was observed at the recent Nauvoo Grape Festival held September 4-6.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints were given a place of real responsibility in this community event. Each year a pageant depicting the history of Nauvoo is presented as a nightly feature of the festival. This year Elder Stephen Black, appointee and Spring River District president, was invited to direct the pageant. He was assisted by Sister Black. That portion of the pageant dealing with the Latter Day Saint period of historic Nauvoo was presented in a sympathetic and pleasing manner. The script had been written by the Sisters of the Benedictine Order, and its historicity was in complete agreement with our beliefs. Elder and Sister Fred Banta portrayed Joseph and Emma Smith, and all other Latter Day Saint roles in the pageant were taken by members of the Reorganized Church. Stone Church recordings were used when distinctively R. L. D. S. hymns were needed.

The church-owned Joseph Smith properties were toured by many visitors during the festival. Brother Banta, appointee and official guide, reports over seven hundred were conducted through the grounds on Sunday alone. Several local young men assisted in the guide service.

We are pleased to note this joint community project. We are certain that if our members throughout the world remain humble and co-operative, many more opportunities will be given to tell our story and demonstrate our ideals and qualities.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Presidency has received the following publicity from Arthur Rock, Director of Audio-Visual materials. We are glad to share this with our readers.

The film, Martin Luther, has recently been released and is being distributed by independent show houses over the country. This film has been reviewed by a committee of the Audio-Visual Department and is warmly recommended to all Reorganized Latter Day Saints interested in understanding the great movements in history that eventually led to the Restoration Movement. The script appears historically accurate. The setting was filmed in western Germany.

"Fear of sin and God's judgment struck terror in Martin Luther's heart. So, like many others in the sixteenth century, the young law student in Erfurt, Germany, sought shelter in a monastery.

"This is the dramatic opening of Martin Luther, the half-million-dollar feature film produced on location in western Germany by Louis de Rochemont Associates for the Lutheran Church Productions, Inc.

"Based on the life of the sixteenth century monk who defied excommunication and the stake in his demand for religious reform, Martin Luther provides the first motion picture portrayal of the incendiary beginnings of the Protestant Reformation.

"As an Augustinian monk, Luther tried to find peace of mind and soul through study, work, worship, and confession. But he soon came to the conclusion that, no matter what he did, he was not able to escape the fear of evil and punishment.

"One day in his tower room in Wittenberg University, he found his answer . . . and he says, 'It was like the gates of heaven opened to me.' Reading St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans 1: 17, he came to this conclusion: 'A man can't earn salvation by what he himself does. Man gains salvation through faith in Christ, through what God has done for man through this Savior.'

"So Luther fought against the sale of indulgences—letters of pardon from punishment of sin—which the Medici Pope, Leo X, had authorized. He demanded that the church of his day be cleansed of secular abuses and that the authority for doctrine and practice be Scripture rather than Popes or Councils. To bring up the abuse of indulgences for debate, he nailed ninety-five theses—points of argument—on the castle church door. But what was intended as a university discussion became an argument that split the Roman Catholic and the Holy Roman Empire.

"Labeled a heretic, Luther was excommunicated by the Pope and banished and condemned by Emperor Charles V. He was spirited away to safety by Duke Frederick of Saxony and spent his years of banishment teaching and preaching, writing a catechism for use by family and pastor, and by translating the Bible into the language of the people. Luther did not die at the stake like his forerunners John Huss and Savonarola. Instead he lived on to see the Protestant nobles and theologians reject Charles V's demand to abandon their 'heresies' and reunite with church and empire. Luther's beliefs found expression in their Augsburg Confession of Faith. And his demand for reform, rejected by the worldly Pope Leo X, gave birth to an evangelical movement that quickly spread throughout Europe and the world."

With the apostasy of the Roman Church, the rise of free thinking people, the printing press, and independent research in the arts and sciences, Martin Luther began the movement that inevitably led to the Restoration Movement in 1830. Luther was not interested in building a new church but rather reforming the Catholic Church. In failing to do this he looked to the Restoration of Christ's Church upon earth.

We recommend this film to you when it reaches your area and invite you to view it for its historical background and authentic portrayal of one of the great movements in history.

The Consequences of False Doctrine

By Apostle Reed M. Holmes

Scripture: Colossians 2: 6-9; 1 Thessalonians 5: 21.

THERE ARE 201,568,213 cattle in India, plus or minus a few. The tragedy is that more than 50 per cent of these are not milk producers or beef for the table. They are Brahmany cows—sacred cows. They are adored, respected, worshiped. They have the run of city and countryside, and according to religious belief they are to be unmolested regardless of their action. Suppose you have the use of one small field for millet. You must borrow money for seeds at 50 per cent—300 per cent interest. You owe the moneylender and your landholder about two thirds of your crop. Then suppose a Brahmany bull tramples half your little field and eats the tender shoots. What do you do then? You express thanks that the goddess came in the form of the giver of strength, the sacred cow.

But suppose you are desperate and in your anger kill the bull with some potion, devised by a magic maker and sprinkled around the field. Then you are a cow killer! There are other epithets, but they are tame in comparison with cow killer. You are judged unclean. Clad in a loin cloth you take a begging bowl, tie a cowbell around your neck, and go begging from house to house, making a lowing sound like a cow. At the end of two weeks of begging for your own food you must have enough left over to provide a feast for fifty men of the Brahman cast.

I could tell you more about the strange practices of those who believe the cow is sacred, but I must refrain because I know it would be very offensive. Suffice it to say that disease is the fruitage of these other practices and that starvation of people abounds while the sacred cows devour the last morsels of food and then die themselves when their flesh could save the life of thousands. These are the consequences of false doctrine.

WHAT IS FALSE DOCTRINE? Webster defines doctrine as a principle or body of principles in any branch of knowledge. The word "false" is defined as being not true, not genuine, not well founded, not trustworthy. False doctrine is a principle that is not genuine, not well founded, and not trustworthy. This may be in any branch of knowledge or experience, religious or otherwise. For instance, in Babylon the heart was considered to be truly the seat of understanding. The liver was thought to be the factory and storehouse of blood, whether red day blood or dark night blood. In those days a toothache was caused by the gnawing of a worm. Do you believe these? You say they are false. Just remember that these were defended valiantly by the medical profession of that day, and many people suffered because of these false doctrines of medicine.

You have heard of Hippocrates, the father of modern medicine. He was truly a great man and took the first major steps away from what we might call medicine-man magic. Every medical doctor to this day takes the Hippocratic oath. Of course, Hippocrates believed some mighty peculiar things. For instance, health depends on the proper mixture of the humors, that is, blood, phlegm, black bile, and yellow bile. Phlegm, for your information, was a product of the brain. When all these were in proper balance you felt fine, but hot flashes were a sure sign that the mixture was wrong.

Or perhaps you would like to come closer to our own day. How do you like this one: "Infection is necessary for the healing of wounds"? That was a doctrine which many physicians propounded as true, but which we now know is false. Those were the good old days of blood-letting, instead of blood banking. Here is a poem attributed to a doctor whose name was actually I. Lettsom:

When any sick to me apply,
I physicks, bleeds, and sweats 'em.
If after that they choose to die,
What's that to me? I Lettsom.

WHEN IT COMES to medicine we want the doctor to be as close to the truth as possible. We do not wish some quack to practice his false doctrines upon us, because we know who shall suffer the consequences. Isn't it strange that we who are so finicky about the care of the body are so careless with the care of the soul? The body is of short duration and will soon be laid to rest, but the soul is immortal. How much greater our concern must be that the soul should not be subject to false doctrine.

Sometimes governments are based on false doctrine, and our illustrations can be quite up to date. Remember the "master race" doctrine of Hitler? Or perhaps you have heard about the doctrine of materialism which Stalin and his cronies have palmed off on so many. I rather imagine a man named Beria wishes now he had never heard about Joseph Stalin.

You may have heard of the popular idea in many of the secular circles of our day that there is no God and that Christ did not rise from the tomb. It shouldn't be necessary to catalogue the consequences of such false doctrines.

HOW DO WE GET false doctrine? Sometimes an "authority" gets a harebrained notion and preaches it for the truth, like "Extract of goat glands will make a new man of you." There were thousands who were taken in by that plea.

Sometimes an evil man will take a belief like, "Every man is of worth" and turn the phrasing slightly and the meaning mightily to his own advantage like this, "Every man has his price." According to this doctrine man's only value is his present utility, and men differ only by the price they will sell out for.

Sometimes false doctrine seems mighty reasonable and quite scientifically sound, like the results of the scientific study of intoxication. Mr. X was drunk on Monday on whisky and soda water; he was drunk Tuesday on brandy and soda water. Mr. X was drunk Wednesday on gin and soda water. What, then, caused his drunkenness? Why, the common factor, of course—soda water! Some beliefs we defend as the truth have no more basis in fact than that. For instance, the doctrine that man is only an animal.

If man is just animal, even though a very high type one, then the platitude of Socrates, "Know thyself," is fulfilled in studying the body. To know yourself simply analyze your hunger, your bodily functions, and instincts. When you have completely analyzed them you will know yourself. The full life, according to this doctrine, is to satisfy the body. Comfort is the goal, and drunkenness, being simply a state of the body, is a disease and not a moral problem. The way of life is "doing what comes naturally." The slogan for this kind of life is "Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." And the perfect corollary to that is "When you are dead you are dead all over." All these are the natural consequences in life of the false doctrine that man is, after all just an animal. Other consequences of this doctrine are pain, unhappiness, and a very unbodily remorse.

LET'S LOOK more closely at the consequences of false doctrine as recorded in the Scriptures, and may we constantly recognize that it does make a difference what we believe, contrary to popular opinion. It is recognized that the history of Israel is marked by ups and downs. The up periods among the Hebrews came as prophets were inspired of God to bring true doctrine and as the people responded. The extent of their up period was measured by the degree of their response to the teachings of the prophets. Their down periods were always the result of ignoring the true doctrine preached by the prophets. The ups and downs were not always far apart. One of the ups was threatened even as Moses was on the mountaintop. In the valley below, Aaron and Miriam, the brother and the sister of Moses, were preparing the golden calf. Now bull worship is quite different from the worship of God. Its concentration is upon the physical, the material. The Israelites could have hastily lost their identity as the chosen people of God had they followed the easy and false doctrine of Aaron in that weak moment.

Elijah is a superb example of conflict with false doctrine, and his opponents—Ahab, and Jezebel, and the prophets of Baal—are excellent illustrations of the proponents of false doctrine. We have but to study the conflict of Jesus with the Pharisees to see how true doctrine can be distorted ridiculously. We have but to see the persistence of Caiaphas to see how a people will hold to falsehood in preference to truth. Jesus was nailed to the cross because of false doctrine. He died there as a symbol of the effects of false doctrine on all of us.

IT IS IMPORTANT to get as near the truth as possible. Truth is the only guarantee of life. It is life; and yet we are so easily duped by the false, for it seems so attractive and so much fun. False doctrine, like its father, Lucifer, is not easily recognized—it is so often garbed in the likeness of truth. It is not easily conquered, as each one of us can testify. False doctrine has never saved one soul and must be overcome with the truth.

We need to know that Jesus is the truth. His Word is the truth about life; his doctrine is the true way to live.

It is imperative to keep his truth without distortion. Variance from the truth of Christ is apostasy; a characteristic of apostasy is false doctrine and, as we have seen, false doctrine always has its harmful consequences. For instance, take the true doctrine of repentance preached by Jesus and his predecessor, John the Baptist. To them repentance was required for baptism. It was sorrow for wrong; it was desire to do right; it was adjustment to the will of God. It was "ceasing to do evil and learning to do well." Years later a man named Jerome translated the Scriptures, and when he came to the word "repentance" he translated it "penance." Penance has a remote connection to repentance, but its usual expression is entirely different. Penance is the recognition of wrong done and the payment of a price to atone for that wrong. Repentance causes one to recognize the wrong done, manifest sorrow, make restitution, and proceed to live a better life. Luther, Melancthon, and many others knew something was wrong—penance just didn't measure up to repentance. The outgrowth of the belief in penance in Luther's day was the sale of indulgences—the payment of a price in exchange for credit against punishment for sin.

CONSIDER the gentle persuasiveness of Jesus. His method was to rescue people from evil by persuading them of their wrong and winning them to truth. The symbol of the Christ was the staff of the shepherd. Now quite in contrast, suppose you distort this concern of rescuing people from evil and say they should be rescued from wickedness at all cost for their soul's salvation, and that it is better for a man to die a physical death than to suffer the pains of the fires of hell through eternity. Then you can easily justify the use of force—inquisitions or blood atonement may seem to be quite reasonable to the proponents of this false doctrine. The consequences? Ask any one of those whose right to free agency was denied and who suffered burning. Ask John Wycliffe, the morning star of the Reformation. The Church finally ordered his body removed from its grave to be burned. Whenever the Church takes up the cudgel and denies the free and voluntary exercise of agency it is following false doctrine.

Let's look at the doctrine of original sin. It is a true doctrine. Its essence as illustrated by Adam and Eve in the Garden is choice without moral control. They partook of the fruit of the tree of knowledge in defiance of God. To some extent all of us are subject to this sin; it is written into our environment, but to say that each infant babe is responsible for Adamic sin and must be baptized is sheer nonsense and mockery of the rite of baptism. Baptism results from the exercise of voluntary choice with moral control. It follows repentance. This is denied in infant baptism. The true doctrine of Christ has been superseded as churches "teach for doctrine the commandments of men."

MANY HAVE SOUGHT to refashion error, but it has been like building anew on a crumbling foundation. There is one, however, who holds control of the truth—God himself. He it is who has kept vigil over his wayward children, calling prophets to speak for him, re-establishing his way, restoring true doctrine where falsehood has held its hurtful sway. He it was and is who, during the past century and this one, is moving to restore and to re-establish the true doctrine of Christ.

When that truth has been re-established it has not always been immediately accepted. In fact, it is the custom of men to justify their beliefs and to stone the prophets who remind them of their errors. Ahab and Jezebel refused to listen to Elijah and turned upon him. Their protestations did not alter the truth Elijah spoke. They simply suffered the consequences of their own false doctrine and caused others to suffer with them. Ahab and Jezebel were quite like the savage and his overripe bananas. He liked overripe bananas. The scientist who came to his village saw the savage eating the overripe bananas and saw what the savage did not see. He tried to persuade the primitive man that the crawling, decaying banana was not fit to eat, but the savage could not see what the scientist described. So the scientist brought his binocular microscope and focused it upon the banana. He pressed the head of the savage to the eyepieces. The savage recoiled at what he saw. Did the savage stop eating overripe bananas? No. He broke the microscope.

TRUTH is not always popular, but it is better to be right than to be popular. It is far better to believe the true doctrine of Christ with ten than to follow the will-o'-the-wisps of false doctrine with thousands.

The purpose of the church today is to establish the true doctrine of Christ in the lives of men. To deny the true doctrine of Christ is to die. To withhold it is to deny life to others. To compromise true doctrine is cowardice. To live it and preach it is our only hope.

Medicine was not content with the animal teeth and snake vertebra of the medicine man. The doctors went on to pasteurization, anesthesia, and penicillin. These have brought consequences which save and enrich life. It is so with the doctrine of Christ. The true doctrine of Jesus Christ is the force and sustaining power of eternal life. Receive it. Live by it. Hold it fast.

Vacation

Summer attendance at church is sometimes very light. Members have gone to the beach or the mountains, or wherever it is members disappear during the hot months. Sometimes the preacher becomes discouraged, locks the door and goes some place where he can get a little rest from budgets, complaints, sickness, blues, and ordinary cases of backsliding.

The devil may take an occasional holiday when nothing at all happens, but he never has a real vacation. He keeps his taverns, pool halls, gambling dens, and common joints open every hour that the law allows. It isn't often that a weakling, looking for a place to get into trouble, goes very long without finding it.

And how about the Lord? He started the custom of taking Saturday—the seventh day—off for a little rest. Well, if God doesn't open up for business on Saturday, it isn't much use to hold church service on that day, and most people don't. That's why Christian churches generally meet on Sunday, the day that God began his work. It seems odd the Sabbatarians never thought of that.

But does God really suspend business to take a vacation? Not likely. Think of the number of times in a day that you send up a little prayer about something—for help, for inspiration, for strength, for many things. The switchboard is always open. Someone is always on duty there. No matter what you have to say, you know it is heard. L.J.L.

"No, dear," replied the mother. And the child smiled.

Over in Korea a truce was signed. Peace had come at last. Both sides had laid down their arms; the sick and wounded were returning home. It should have been a time for rejoicing. But in the Korean hills, shivering peasants stripped the land for bush. Children went about hungry, their bodies lean, their eyes filled with a hunger that even food could not satisfy. The statistics read: "100,000 homeless orphans; 600,000 fatherless children." Dead bodies littered the Korean earth, their stench filling the air. There was no rejoicing over a scrap of paper signed with the blood and loss of freedom of millions. The voice from Calvary repeats: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

A GI was waiting in his foxhole an hour before the truce was signed. He felt pretty lucky. He was going to come through this all right. He smiled to himself as he thought how glad he'd be to see his wife and children. The year he'd been away had seemed endlessly long, but everything would be all right now. The war would soon be over. He'd be going home. And then it came, zooming out of the air, and with a loud explosion ripped into the earth. The GI lay face down, most of it blown away. He whispered to the medic, "Am I going to make it, Sarg?" "Sure," replied the heartsick medic. But at the station hospital, a white blanket was pulled over his face. The war was over for him. From another lonely hill came the words: "Into thy hands I commend my spirit."

HERE IN AMERICA are truth and freedom. The light of the world has been shed abroad for the last time. God's church has been restored to the earth, with all the officers, doctrine, and gifts as of old. The power and love which God offers to all men has been poured out on a fortunate and privileged people. We have been commanded to keep the law; to observe the practice of stewardships; to "seek . . . first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness"; to go into all the world and promote this gospel of love which shall bring salvation to men when they accept it in its fullness.

Yet, in spite of this "marvelous work and a wonder," the kingdom grows slowly. Selfishness and indifference bog us down. We want the kingdom here; we want wars to cease and economic security to come; we realize that the kingdom is the hope of all men; yet as the poem says, "We want to laugh; we want to sing, and every day to be like spring; yet keep our special kind of sin." We still have idols on His throne. And from the cross, a crucified figure cries out, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

As we read of millions in India starving to death and China's thousands milling about in filth and poverty, as we visualize the war's destruction on Korean hills and see the empty eyes of the returned GI prisoners, do not our hearts burn within us? Are we not made to know that God waits for us to bring his hope to men, this kingdom of God on earth? Christ is crucified over and over again as long as men are hungry; as long as there is poverty and disease. As long as wars and crime, fear and prejudice abound on the earth, the cross will speak.

As we pray, "Thy kingdom come," it is with new meaning. For we have an enlarged vision of what this kingdom means. Our eyes have beheld the Christ, crucified. With a broken heart and contrite spirit, we rededicate our lives anew to the building up of this kingdom that the long-sought-for brotherhood of man, under the fatherhood of God, may become a reality. With an "eye single to his glory" we shall strive in humility and love to labor while the day lasts.

The kingdom of God has to take form, and become concrete and it is in the earth that we have to express it, and so make it real. To refuse to build it here is to be content with our dreams, . . . to shirk the cross, to be disobedient to the heavenly vision, and so be damned.—From The Wicket Gate, by G. A. Studdert-Kennedy.

Prayer

Years ago, when Captain Alexander Livingston was serving as mate on the good ship "Turretbell," his vessel went aground on a hard reef off Prince Edward Island during a storm. The gale was so bad that the crew was unable even to launch a lifeboat, and, in the very sight of farm folks standing helpless on a high cliff above them, the ship began to break up.

In desperation, the crew rigged up a handkerchief-parachute, tied a string to it, and flung it high into the air. The wind carried it straight toward the cliff but repeatedly a downdraft of air plunged it into the sea. Again they made a kite, with an old tin can for a tail, which, after much whipping around, finally landed on the cliff. To the twine they attached a line, and to the line a hawser. Then with a bo's'n's chair they managed to get every man safely ashore.

Prayer is something like that. Our petitions are like kites lifted up into the realms of heaven, where God waits to receive them. Through them we make ever more powerful contacts with him, and by them we ourselves are finally drawn close and safe into his presence.

God's Plan for Living

By Nettie C. Lake

MY RELIGION means a lot to me because it embraces the all-powerful love and personality of God. According to Ephesians, "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and . . . in you all."

God has a plan for each of us. When our plans are good—according to his specifications—then the result will be good if each day's work is well done.

Anyone who works with plans knows the importance of having good ones. Religion is our plan for living. Stated more accurately, it is God's plan which we accept.

Mine is a healthful religion. It has taught me to take a sane and wholesome attitude toward life and its perplexities. It has taught me to accept with gratitude all that life brings to me, believing that all experiences tend to promote growth and are for my good, providing I use them as steppingstones instead of stumbling blocks.

I'm glad that a perfect plan is available to all—glad that our Lord has demonstrated and explained it clearly by a personal visit to our sin-sick planet. Specifications are written in his Book and cover every detail. Complicated? Yes, but life is a complicated venture and requires thought, study, and frequent reference to specifications. They call for love, which reveals itself in service and frequently in sacrifice. They call for faith which finds expression in courageous—sometimes daring—action. They call for hope, joy, and peace which unite to form a structure of beauty and harmony.

The Bible assures me that day and night, summer and winter, seedtime and harvest shall not cease. In the spring I expect the leaves to appear again on the bare trees and I look forward to the resurrection of life as part of his plan. When we are in partnership with God nothing is impossible that conforms to his will. My only fear is for myself. At times I attempt to depart from God's plan. I have tried running ahead, making my own plans for tomorrow or next year, but I find it is better to live in day-tight compartments and let him lead the way.

Alternate plans are available which call for less effort, less sacrifice, more compromise, and more immediate gain for self. They appear to be attractive, but they can be misleading. One plan today is man-made—Communism, a pitiful comparison to God's own wonderful plan. He recognizes the worth of every individual. This should create in us the desire to be charitable to others.

My religion affords me an abiding faith in God and a willingness to serve him and his people. His perfect plan for living also gives me a sense of security in the knowledge that it creates in me the desire to live aright each day, morally and spiritually, and to continue to do so all the way through life.

LET ME REMEMBER

By Marcella Schenck

Let me remember gentle rain that ended drought.
I had imagined such heat and dryness could be broken only by storm's own fury,
But God had other plans.

By tender persuasion he massed the clouds, heavy, soft, and gray;
Then, in answer to pleading prayers, he sifted the rain as from his fingers,
And the parched earth took new hope.

Let me remember that while those raindrops fell
A child sang in the kitchen, creating a song of gratitude about the rain.

Let me remember many things—
A warm Chinook wind, easing a wintry blast;
How the papers put the news in headlines, bold and big,
Saying that upon no weather chart had that wind been found the day before.
They could not know the wind had wandered down from God in answer to a prayer of need.

Let me remember a grosbeak, posed for the admiration of Boy Scouts on a bird hike.

Let me remember, too, the boys themselves
Gazing in rapture at the bird's bright necktie.
Let me remember Girl Scouts on an all-night hike,
Naming the constellations that glorified the heavens.

Let me remember golden, tossing curls
Of Gracia as she ran to meet me;
How she slipped her little hand in mine and sang,
"Yes, Jesus loves me."
Let me remember a little body snuggled against my own
As David laid a book upon my knee.
"Read to me," said he, "of little Timothy and his Bible."

Let me remember faithful friends
Who hold me in their hearts and prayers;
Voices of testimony, songs of praise, prayers of earnestness;
Moments so close to God, we knew his presence, felt his power.

Finally, let me remember
The present is here, the future lies ahead.
With open eyes and receptive heart
May I enrich my store with those things I would not forget.

BIRTH AND DEATH—the two most dynamic forces in the universe! When these two meet and clash, cataclysmic confusion and tragedy must result. And that is what we see in the world today. Death of the “right of a few to oppress the many” at grips with birth of “equal rights for all.” The struggle is not pleasant. Neither is it new. All through history, both secular and sacred, we see examples of the dignity of man rebelling against tyranny. Again and again we see the attempt end in failure only to have the next spearhead for freedom strike harder and deeper than before.

The United States of America is the latest and most spectacular attempt of all times to foster freedom of the individual and has struck deep into the heart of despotism—so deep, in fact, that it has dared include in its scope the oppressed peoples of the entire world. And it seemed world liberation was in the bag, back in 1945, when forty-six nations met in San Francisco and signed the charter for a United Nations. But time has proved that victory was not yet. Tyranny was not yet willing to so readily turn over the helm to free agency. Today the whole world holds its breath, wondering if it ever will come—if free men have what it takes to bring it to pass. To those inclined to look for answers and comfort in their Bibles, the following is presented for consideration.

YOU RECALL the familiar story of the great image seen by King Nebuchadnezzar in a dream centuries ago when Babylon was the ruling power. Also Daniel, the captive Jewish boy whose interpretation was that Babylon, represented by the head of gold, would fall, to be followed by three other nations successively holding world dominion for a time, with the last to finally break up into a number of smaller parts. At some time after these kingdoms had served their season and fallen, a new and different kind of kingdom was to make its appearance. This new kingdom was never to fall. Rather, it was to grow and expand from within until eventually it would fill the whole earth.

The fulfillment of this graphic prophecy divides itself naturally into three parts: the erection of the image, the appearance of the stone, and the result of the meeting of these two.

“Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image’s head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.”—Daniel 2: 31-36.

Under the rule of Belshazzar, son of Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon became a synonym for debauchery and corruption. Soggy with power and bloated with ego, he carried the head of gold swiftly to its downfall. In agreement with the mysterious handwriting on the wall, the kingdom fell to the Medes and Persians through the conquest of Cyrus in 539 B.C. This silver arms and breast kingdom was in turn vanquished by the belly and thighs of brass when Media-Persia fell to the Greco-Macedonian general, Alexander, in 334 B.C. Rome, represented by the legs and feet, then ruled the world for a season with an iron hand. But as evidenced in the image, as time went on the iron became mixed with miry potter’s clay, so that the kingdom, weakened within, began to crumble and break to pieces. Even so history tells us that seven forms of government held sway in rapid succession, and finally with the Lombard invasion in 570 A.D. the great Roman Empire disintegrated and broke up into the toe kingdoms, the most important of which are England, France, Netherlands, Spain, and Portugal, or generally speaking, the countries of Europe. So far, Daniel’s forecast of world events has become established facts in history. We now come to the second part of the dream—the appearance of the stone kingdom.

“Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands . . .” The words “till” and “cut out without hands” are brimful of meaning. “Thou sawest till . . .” The “till” clearly indicates that a period of time was to elapse between the completion of the toes of the image and the appearance of the stone kingdom. As the span of time covered by the image itself commenced with 604 B.C., when Babylon was at its height, and ended with the fall of Rome in A.D. 570—a stretch of 1,174 years—it is presumable that the period indicated by the word “till” might also be of considerable duration.

WE ALREADY KNOW this period began in the year 570 when the Roman Empire broke up into the toe kingdoms. It was to last until the indefinite time when the stone kingdom should put in its appearance in the “days of these kings”—presumably all the kings represented in the image. But inasmuch as each of these kingdoms was swallowed up by the one succeeding, how could such a thing be possible? Unless, at some time after the breaking up of the Roman Empire, the several parts of the image were to reappear intact and be in their places as independent units simultaneously. Was there such a time? The answer naturally must be found in history.

In 539 B.C. Babylon was taken by the Medes and Persians. She then passed into the hands of Greece, then of Syria, then back to Persia, regaining her sovereignty on becoming the seat of the Mohammedan caliphs in A.D. 650. In 1638 migrating Turks took possession and maintained Babylon’s independence until 1920 when England was given mandate over her by the League of Nations. Thus Babylon was independent between 1638 and 1920.

Upon the fall of Babylon in 539 B.C. Media-Persia took world control until conquered by the Greeks in 334 B.C. From then on Persia passed through various fortunes, finally emerging an independent nation in 1730 and remains so under the name of Iran.

Beginning with 334 B.C. Greece held sway until she became a Roman province. In 1456 the Turks conquered a part of Greece, continuing to make inroads until 1829 when they acknowledged her independence.

From 168 B.C. Rome dominated the world until the breaking up of the Empire. From then on divers fates befell her till in 1814, at which time she was restored to the rule of the pope until 1848. Thus Rome was independent between 1814 and 1848.

BETWEEN 1638 AND 1829 the kingdoms of gold, silver, brass, and iron were reappearing as independent entities and taking their places along with the nations that sprang from the dismembered Roman Empire, the toe kingdoms or Europe. By 1829 then, the great image had been assembled, with each part resurrected and intact simultaneously for the first time. Now, and only now, does the image stand erect upon its feet as King Nebuchadnezzar saw it in his dream. The words "in the days of these kings" now make sense and, according to Daniel's interpretation, we may expect the stone kingdom to be ready to take its place in the scheme of world events.

What country was born and became an international entity between 1638 and 1829? The answer is self-evident. There was but one—the United States of America. But again history must substantiate.

Among innumerable convincing facts these few will serve as examples.

Although the United States was discovered as early as 1492 actual settlement did not commence until the founding of Jamestown in 1607.

The Pilgrims set sail for the promised land in 1620.

The First Continental Congress convened in 1774.

The Declaration of Independence was passed in 1776.

The Constitution went into effect in 1789.

The post office and treasury departments were established the same year, with the mint following in 1792.

An act to found a navy was passed in 1794.

Britain withdrew her army in 1783 and in 1814 conceded the rights of the open sea to the new republic.

The National Emblem in its permanent form was adopted in 1818.

The Monroe Doctrine, proclaiming to the world that the United States of America was now a power to be reckoned with, was promulgated in 1823.

THUS WE SEE that the machinery necessary for the establishment of the United States as a small but complete unit was being assembled and installed at substantially the same time that the ancient "metal" kingdoms were reappearing as independent nations. By 1829, when the last of these kingdoms had regained its position as an independent nation placing the image upon its feet for the first time, the United States was launching on its career as a world power. So we find that the establishment of the United States is in accord with the time element for the stone kingdom to make its appearance.

There were, however, to be certain fundamental differences between the "metal" kingdoms and this new kingdom of stone. Let us see if they also point to the same conclusion.

First, the nations representing the image were dependent in turn on the conquest of the one preceding it. As the conquered fell, the victor stepped into place. Thus the different kingdoms of the image were successive parts of a whole. The stone kingdom, on the other hand, was to make its appearance in an entirely different manner—namely as a complete though small whole. It was to be successor to no part of the image nor would it be created by the conquest of any nation. It was to be "cut out without hands," appearing out of the nowhere with no material source of gestation or nourishment. Can any argument be advanced against the statement that this description fits the founding of the United States?

Second, the great image had no centralized core of life. It was made up of separate, integral parts, each wholly different from the others and having distinct dividing lines. Each part had gained its strength from a transfusion of the lifeblood of a vanquished power; each had fallen for want of an inherent source of growth. They were entirely man-made. This new kingdom, on the other hand, was to have within its own structure a divine spark of life that would enable it to grow and expand from within. It was to be founded upon inspiration from God.

The soul of the Constitution of the United States is the principle, inflexible as stone, "that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." This was the leaven which caused the new nation to grow and prosper as no nation on earth had ever done before. Who will dare say this spark of life, this leaven, was not injected by inspiration from a divine source? So, in source of growth potentialities as well as in time and manner of appearance, we find that the United States is in accord with the prophetic stone kingdom.

WHAT ABOUT the third part of the prophecy—"and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth"? And Daniel's interpretation that the new kingdom was to break in pieces and consume the metal kingdoms? Will the free agency of man as inherent in the United States overcome the world "isms" and become the prevailing ideology of all nations? A check into history-in-the-making might throw some light on whether evidence of such a tendency is visible today.

Nebuchadnezzar saw the stone strike first of all at the toes of the image. So, too, did the demand of man for a recognition of his rights strike first in the countries of Europe—the countries evolving from the dismembered Roman Empire. Today, with America riding the crest, the urge for freedom is sweeping the world like a tidal wave. Education gives desire, while leisure time and wealth make it possible for Americans to travel abroad, often in mass visitation, by civic, industrial, or religious-sponsored touring groups. And wherever they go the visitors carry with them evidence of the fruits of freedom. Lips, hearts, and pocketbooks give testimony of the individual's ability to raise his own standard of life, to chart his own course, to bring about his own security and happiness if given the chance. And those observing are not blind.

Leaders and teachers from across the seas come to the United States to learn its ways, while American scientists and mechanics and industrialists carry their knowledge into the far quarters of the globe. Exchange students come here to see and learn, while those from here carry their message abroad. The United States is sharing with the whole world—almost with self-impoverishing danger—the bounties which have resulted from the great moral and spiritual law upon which it was founded. American lives are sacrificed over and over on foreign soil in the name of freedom and the dignity of mankind. Through them, too, the seed is being sown. Of no small influence, too, is the government-maintained system of libraries in foreign countries with their extensive bookmobiles supplying to millions of people information of democratic living and thinking.

A group of Associated Press specialists representing all phases of American life—economic, social, educational, and political, have added the weight of their consensus. In a symposium titled, "How Experts Think," appearing in the Sun-

Expository Preaching for Today, by Andrew W. Blackwood, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press. Price, $3.00.

Any book which presents and describes a technique is difficult to write without becoming excessively subjective. Dr. Blackwood, however, has done a commendable job in this, his latest book dealing with effective preaching ministry. He has tapped one of the secrets of successful pulpit ministry when he quotes from Raymon Calkins, "A true sermon always has humanity within it, and divinity behind it."

Beginning with very short case histories of famous preachers who followed the expository trend, the book immediately turns to the practical and very usable methods of becoming more effective from the pulpit. Chapter headings offer a clue: "The Goals in Expository Preaching," "Gathering of Sermon Materials," "Varieties of Sermon Structure," and "The Call for a Pleasing Delivery." Dr. Blackwood has wasted little time with ethereal and intangible generalities. He says that intelligent preaching should help the people rediscover the Bible and its undying truths. He also spends some time with the individual minister and his need for growth in the understanding of the Word of God. Latter Day Saints especially will appreciate his illustration likening the Spirit of God to a power line stretching over hundreds of unimproved farm lands. The need is for transformers who are willing to tap the power which has always been there so that men might improve their whole existence, according to his theory.

Although the text of the book is confined to the Bible, the principles involved might be easily and effectively applied to the other Standard Books of the Restoration. The many moving experiences of such men as Alma and Nephi seem to be particularly adaptive to this type of preaching.

Dr. Blackwood sounds his own warning, however, in calling to the attention of the student that this type of preaching should not become an obsession but rather should serve as one more means to improve the quality of individual personal ministry. I believe that members of the priesthood who are earnest about becoming more effective in their speaking ministry might profit from a careful study of this book. The style is such that it offers a challenge rather than suggesting a crutch.

S. W. JOHNSON

The Bible and You, by Edward P. Blair, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, New York and Nashville. Price $2.00.

This book is just what its title implies. It is an excellent guide to help you in firsthand experimentation in the Bible. It is a laboratory manual for both teachers and students. Every reader will find it helpful. Through this book the "normally intelligent" person can acquire greater skill in reading and understanding the Bible. However, you will have to supply the effort.

You will remember from your study of geometry that axioms are self-evident truths, principles that are universally accepted. The author lists and explains six axioms in the first chapter entitled "The Basic Nature of the Bible." These are of considerable help in interpreting the Bible.

Discovering the true meaning of the words of the Bible is not a task just for scholars. Everyone who reads the Bible is faced with this responsibility. The average man naturally wants to know whether there are any rules he can follow. Fortunately there are such rules. In the chapter, "How to Understand the Bible," there are seven rules with illustrative applications. Here are the first and seventh: Come to the Bible with an alert, open mind, and be ready to accept and obey whatever message the Spirit of God may impart (isn't this distinctly a part of the Restoration philosophy?). View each part of the Bible in the light of the whole Bible. I feelingly recommend the use of rules of Bible study because I believe the beginner especially must of necessity content himself, in the first few years of study, with something less than an "inspired" interpretation.

There is far more than theory in the sixth chapter entitled, "Applying the Methods of Reading." This is a most practical chapter. You know what the author means. Guesswork is completely removed. The language is clear. The applications are sound. You will want to keep this guidebook handy. Perhaps you will mark it freely and widely. Its helpfulness should never wear out. It will be to me like a good friend, wearing long and well.

As surely as you need to study the Bible in the spirit of prayer, you need to study with a written guide that can be clearly and easily understood. The Bible and You is such a guide. I recommend its purchase and use. This is from one who is earnestly trying to teach the message of the Bible so that students may master it.

ALMER W. SHEEHY

Heralds of the Gospel, by H. T. Lehmann, Muhlenberg Press. Price, $1.25.

This book brings a welcome message to the struggling preacher. It arouses his preaching instinct by setting forth the importance of "presenting God's claim to men"—the promise of a new life and the fulfillment of that promise through the resurrected Christ.

The preacher is described as a herald who publicly proclaims "the victorious reign of God in Jesus Christ," and the establishment of his kingdom here on earth. He is not a reporter of history, but an ambassador empowered with authority to represent Christ. He is not to talk about Christ but to cause him to live as our contemporary.

For those who believe that preaching is becoming passé, this book presents it as being the only means of keeping the historic mission of Jesus alive and up to date. The written word becomes flesh and lives among us. Luther is quoted as saying, "Christ himself did not write anything, but only spoke; and his doctrine should not be called 'scriptures' but gospel; i.e., good news or proclamation, which is not carried forward with the pen but by word of mouth. God does not send books, he sends ambassadors."

After being exalted by the thought of being a living spokesman for God, one is promptly humbled by such phrases as "the treasure comes in earthen vessels," or "the words of man become channels of the divine message through the activity of God." Man is made to realize his great potential with God, and at the same time his human weaknesses. To illustrate the latter, the words of James are used, "the tongue no man can tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison."

One fine chapter devoted to content and form says the three elements that characterize a distinctive sermon are liturgy, exposition, and prophecy, suggesting worship, scriptural instruction, and sufficient insight to properly identify the present in history. Many possible forms of preaching are discussed with the statement that there is a definite relationship between what is said and how it is said.

This author goes directly to the Scripture to bring the reader many helpful suggestions in preaching. He is not a fundamentalist in that he would overlook human effort. Neither is he a materialist who would deny revelation. He has the mind of God meeting the mind of man making possible Heralds of the Gospel.

WILLIAM T. GUTHRIE

Question Time

Question:

What does Isaiah 45:7 mean? Does God create evil?

Oregon

MRS. V. B.

Answer:

Many think of evil as being synonymous with sin; this is incorrect. The word as used in the text is translated from the Hebrew word ra which has varied meanings such as adversity, affliction, distress, and calamity. One of the dictionary definitions of the word "evil" is "something which harms or hurts; affliction."

The text reads: "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil." Of necessity many things have their opposites, and the creation of one makes inevitable the other. If there is an "up," there must be a "down"; if there is truth, there must be error or falsehood; if there be a right way, there will also be a wrong. When God caused his light to shine, in places where that light was withheld there was darkness. The Scripture shows that when God withdraws the light of his Spirit, spiritual darkness ensues. When man follows the right he enjoys the good things which belong with the right, but when he chooses the wrong he must endure the evil conditions belonging to the wrong, for God has ordained both. Men may attain eternal life or eternal death, peace or misery. God never leads men or forces them into sin but invites all to righteousness.

Question:

Did not Christ at one time speak in the Aramaic language?

Indiana

MRS. A. U. M.

Answer:

There were a number of dialects in the Aramaic developed in various countries where the people were of Semitic origin. It was a branch of the original Semitic language. It was spoken in the countries surrounding Palestine. It is not a single tongue but a name given to a group of related dialects. Evidently Christ spoke in the Galilean Aramaic preserved in the Palestinian Talmud.

Question:

Please explain the following regarding "weakness": "When I am weak, then am I strong" (II Corinthians 12:10); and "Let the weak say I am strong" (Joel 3:10).

Kansas

MRS. F. W. R.

Answer:

Paul here expresses in simple terms a deep principle relating to relations between God and man; viz., man's dependence upon God for the wisdom, knowledge, power, and skill to perform God's work, together with the fact that God supplies such qualifications only to the man who recognizes his weakness and dependence, and calls upon God for the necessary power of accomplishment. Any man lifted up in his own estimation of his abilities, inasmuch that he does not sense the need of divine help, cannot perform God's service. Paul had learned this lesson and knew that when he felt weak and incompetent in his own strength, and sought the Lord for needful help, then the strength of God was given him, making him strong. God said to the Brother of Jared, "Because thou hast seen thy weakness, thou shalt be made strong." Even Christ dared not depend upon his human abilities but continually sought the Father's counsel and help. In our own strength we are weak; in Christ we are made strong.

"Weak" as used by Joel has an entirely different setting. When in a future day the world approaches the great climax of universal war, leading to Armageddon, the dominant power of evil will require the satellite nations to unite in the conflict, if necessary by compulsion. Nations which count themselves too small or weak to contribute will not be excused. They must fight. The prophet expresses this situation in the words, "Let the weak say, I am strong." They will be compelled to exert themselves to the utmost.

Question:

Is Zion to be a place of physical safety? If not, will you explain Doctrine and Covenants 45:12, 13. Does 95:5 apply now?

If physical destruction is possible, where would Christ make his appearance? Section 98:4 g says, "Zion shall not be moved out of her place."

Kansas

E. J.

Answer:

The important point to be considered regarding Zion as to its security or insecurity is the status of its inhabitants. God's protecting hand can go no farther than the worthiness of the people will justify. Zion is defined as "a holy city," a "city of righteousness"; and the people are "the willing and obedient," "the pure in heart." Every promise of blessing to Zion is based upon these conditions being met, the law having been given to Zion of Enoch that "when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." This is the word of the Lord to us:

Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire.—Doctrine and Covenants 94:5 f.

Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2 c, d.

We may do well to remember that Zion will be a progressive development, not an assemblage of perfected beings at the beginning. Its beginning will likely be small; its ultimate great. Its location will not be changed. God has purposed to prepare that city for his coming and has decreed that it shall be done. "Zion shall be redeemed"; "I will raise up unto myself a pure people." Zion's "builder and maker is God," and he will not fail.

I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place.—Doctrine and Covenants 87:8 d.

The Priesthood Member and His Family Part 1

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is adapted from a talk to priesthood members and wives at the Priesthood Banquet, June 8, 1953, at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, at which Mr. and Mrs. Walter N. Johnston were the principal speakers. Mrs. Johnson's talk appeared in a previous issue of the "Herald."

By Walter N. Johnson

WHEN A LADY has talked on any topic to her heart's content there appears to be little need, and usually little opportunity, for further discussion. In a situation such as this any chivalrous male is placed at a grave disadvantage if he speaks first, but when the lady has first spoken on another phase of the same topic, he still labors under the handicap of appearing to have "the last word." The ladies can be assured that if anything I say calls for rebuttal, the former speaker will represent them ably in a private conference in the very near future.

The topic assigned is a very significant one, and perhaps we should begin by agreeing that a good wife, who is interested in the church and supports her husband's ministry, is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, assets which any man can have in his call to minister for God. We should agree further that a man's responsibility to his family is not lessened but rather is increased greatly by the fact of his ordination. The ordained man is called to minister, and some of his time must now be spent in specific tasks of ministry outside the home; nevertheless we believe the family must remain his first and major responsibility socially, economically, and spiritually. Paul said, "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

We do not want to overlook the younger unmarried members of the priesthood, some of whom are showing an interest in these family matters. We have a simple solution for them—they should find and marry the perfect girl! She will be charming, talented, intelligent, and beautiful, possessing all the great virtues, and, best of all, she will be the perfect counterpart for you. She knows when to encourage you, and also when and how to deflate your ego. She will be a good manager and competent to handle any domestic problem which might arise. She can fill any place needed in the branch, doing the job modestly and well, and at home or abroad is always serene and gracious. When the children are growing up, they should be perfect also, or nearly so. They will never embarrass you by becoming involved in a neighborhood brawl, or other mischief. You will never worry about their school grade, or their adjustments to new situations, or their ability to distinguish between fact and fancy. In brief, they will bring honor to you in school, community, and church.

Even the most idealistic unmarried priesthood member present does not expect his future wife and family to be as I have described them, but if he is at all serious about his call to priesthood, and realizes even dimly its tremendous potentiality for making life rich and good, he must sense the significance of marriage. If his life partner is a young woman of character and spiritual sensitivity, his life will be entirely different, and we believe infinitely richer than if he marries a young woman who is not interested in the church and its program. An old proverb tells us that love goes where it wills, but if the young priesthood member associates with girls of his own faith, he is much more likely to fall in love with some young woman who is devoted to the church and therefore interested in supporting her husband in his work as a minister. In the very nature of things, many a young priesthood man will fall in love with some lovely and talented girl of another faith. Some of our finest church members today were converted by their priesthood husbands. We want to emphasize that, if you are serious about the call of God to you to be a minister, you must of necessity treat the choosing of a life companion with all the prayerful consideration demanded by its significance in your life.

The happily married man probably found his perfect bride to be just slightly less than perfect; and this was very fortunate, because we men are willing to admit in our more modest moments that we ourselves have a few trifling shortcomings! A man learns a great deal in the process of making a home and raising a family, and is always a better man for the experience (if he lives through it). He comes to understand human nature better than ever before; he has the experience of being more deeply concerned about others than at any other time in his life; he meets new problems, and if he struggles with them manfully and solves them even inadequately, something of lasting good has happened to him. His interests are broadened, his sympathies deepened; his home life makes for wiser, more kindly, and more adequate ministry.

We have said that a man's responsibility to his family is increased by his ordination. At the same time, we must admit that if ordination is meaningful a considerable amount of time is going to be devoted to what we describe as "church work." If he is a General Conference appointee, this means in most cases being absent from home a few days to a few months. This calls for special effort on the part of the priesthood member and his wife to see that family life is not affected adversely thereby. They have the difficult task of turning what is manifestly a potential handicap into an advantage so that it becomes a powerful factor in developing a feeling of family teamwork and joint responsibility in carrying on the work of the church, and thereby becomes character-building. Let us admit that such a task is not an easy one, but that it has been done in the past and is being done today is a fact that cannot be denied.

Because the standing ministry of the church outnumber the full-time ministers by fifty or more to one, the time which the standing ministry spends in church work is much greater than that spent by Conference appointees, and this will probably always be true in our church. Most priesthood men are not called upon to leave home for days or weeks at a time, but week after week, year after year, they are called upon to spend a certain amount of time in the many and varied activities of the church. There is the visiting program, pastoral work, counseling, departmental work of all types, local and General Church financing, stake and district activities such as reunions, institutes, young people's camps, Scouting, caring for the church property, administering to the sick, attending church, and many other activities all of which are avenues for ministry to individuals and all of which take some of your valuable time.

Some of this time is going to be taken from the normal family or personal program of activities, and there is always a challenge before the family to keep to a maximum the time that the priesthood member spends with his family in church work. It is true that the whole family cannot go visiting with the priesthood member on branch visiting night, or attend special committee meetings or priesthood lectures, or accompany the elder when he is called to administer to the sick. Nevertheless, many church activities can be made family activities. Whenever possible, the whole family should participate in church school, prayer meetings, and preaching services.

A priesthood member's family should never be heard talking about father spending all his spare time away from the family in church work unless they have joined him in the many church activities which they are privileged to share with him. Every priesthood member who has his family with him in much of his church activity is truly blessed. His ministry and the life of his family is enriched by the family association together in these worth-while activities.

In all his church activities the priesthood member must try to be fair to his family, and give them the time and attention which is rightfully due them. Under the press of ministry that needs to be given, and things that should be done for the church, some ministers tend to neglect their families, to spend too little time with them, or more often, to spend the time to small advantage to the family. This problem is due in part to priesthood who do not carry their share of branch work, but allow those who are willing to attempt impossible ministerial loads. Some evenings ought to be spent at home, and some picnics, fishing trips, or other forms of recreation and entertainment should be made a part of the family way of life.

A little boy, the son of a very busy and popular minister, is reported to have said, "Mother, who is that man who comes in every Saturday night and spans me, and puts me to bed?" That must have been an extreme case of a minister's neglecting his family; but if a priesthood member is to be a good husband and father and if his ministry is to be enriched by his family as it should be, he has to spend some time with them, fellowship with them, know their needs and problems, and attempt to protect, help, and minister to them in ways beyond being just the breadwinner of the family. If a priesthood member's family is to enrich his ministry, it follows that the minister must first minister to his family.

A great deal has been said and written about ministers' children, and each priesthood member ought to realize that his children are "minister's children." On the whole, ministers' children give a good account of themselves; certainly a long and imposing list of illustrious men and women are the children of ministers of the many varied faiths of Christendom. Of course, we have no statistics on ministers' children who have made dismal messes of their lives to the dimming of ministerial halos on an occasion such as this.

It is worth-while to consider the questions, however, "What effect does your priesthood ordination have on your children?" If your children are grown, "What difference did it make to them that they grew up in a priesthood home?" All of us who have families hope that something good has happened to our children because of our priesthood. We would be in agreement that there is an opportunity for priesthood membership in the home to do something of lasting value for our children. In many places where our concept of priesthood is not understood or appreciated, some social disadvantage attaches to being the youngster of a priesthood member.

I remember that this was true in my own life to some extent, as our friends and acquaintances regarded us with puzzlement and sometimes with considerable prejudice. Today my children are not at any grave social disadvantage because their father is a Reorganized Latter Day Saint minister. My next door neighbor is a member of the priesthood, and there are at least a half-dozen ordained ministers of this church in the radius of a very few blocks from my home. Perhaps we are not always sufficiently grateful for this privilege, or completely aware of what this may mean in a wholesome development of our children.

William A. Fetter

Designs Outstanding Dental Text

Current Advances in Dentistry, 1952-53, published by the University of Illinois, has been selected by the American Institute of Graphic Arts among the nation's thirty-one outstanding textbooks of 1953. This manual was designed by a young church man, William A. Fetter of Independence, Missouri. He worked under the direction of Ralph Eckerstrom and Herschel Wartik of the art division at the University.

The book was also included in the AIGA 1953 "Printing for Commerce" exhibit earlier this year and is included in the annual textbook show which will tour the country.

This was the fourth major honor to come to Brother Fetter, who joined the University Press while still a student of advertising in the College of Fine and Applied Arts at the University.

This manual included summaries of the most recent research on five different phases of dentistry written by some of the leading dentists, doctors, and dental educators in the United States. Brother Fetter used a combination of colored line drawings, graphs, and photographs as illustrations.

Two bulletins he designed—"If You Want to Be a Teacher" and a bulletin for the institute of labor and industrial relations—were selected for recognition by the art directors club of Chicago.

Brother Fetter has served in the Air Force. He attended Kansas City Junior College, Kansas City University, and the University of Illinois, receiving his bachelor of fine arts from Illinois in 1952.

Among the staunchest supporters of the local church group at Champaign, Bill and his wife Darlene are serious and devoted students of the church and its message.

Modern Parable of the Talents

By Lyle McFarlane

IF THE PARABLE of the talents (Matthew 25: 14-31) had been written in this generation it might have read something like this:

The Heavenly Father, sensing the need of his children, called three of them before him to give to them talents which they would use throughout their lives. These three were John Randall, Betty Jones, and Bob Anderson.

To John Randall he gave five talents: (1) the ability to make friends, (2) a happy disposition, (3) wisdom, (4) the gift of making money, and (5) musical talent. To Betty Jones he gave two talents, (1) artistic ability, and (2) the talent of teaching others. To Bob Anderson he gave the one talent of brotherly kindness.

After he had distributed these talents he said to John, Betty, and Bob: "These are your stewardships. They are given to you that you might enjoy and develop them and bring happiness to others through their use. With each of these talents I am giving you a greater gift, the gift of agency. It is for you to choose how well you develop each of these abilities." And then he was gone.

John Randall got busy immediately. He acquired a large circle of friends. He was cheerful, and as his love for his many friends increased his disposition became even happier. His intelligence increased with the use of the wisdom he had been given. People came to him often for advice, and he was able to help them. With his wisdom and intelligence he used wisely the money which came into his hands. He paid his tithing and aided people in distress. He learned to play the piano, and through this acquaintance with music he was soon able to sing well. By the time he reached maturity he was inspiring many with his music. John was a person who had the ability to help others and found deep satisfaction in doing so.

Betty Jones developed her artistic talent. She learned to tell stories and to draw pictures to illustrate them. She did this so well that she was soon able to teach others. Betty's was a good service, and her many friends recognized her value to the church and community.

Bob Anderson had been given the gift of brotherly kindness. As he thought about this gift it frightened him. He often said to himself, "How do I go about being kind to others?" He drew apart from his friends. He developed an inferiority complex. The talent which had been given him lay dormant and was completely hidden by the time he had reached maturity.

Then the Master called his three children back into his presence. To John Randall and Betty Jones he said, "You have recognized your stewardships and used them as I intended. They are yours to develop even more the rest of your lives and in eternity. Well done, thou good and faithful servants."

Looking at Bob Anderson he said, sorrowfully, "You have failed to recognize your stewardship and have not developed it as you should. Those to whom you should have been kind have not had your kindness. I therefore take your talent away and give it to John, knowing that he will use it as I intended. For to everyone who has, more will be given; but from him who has not, even what he has will be taken away."

Home Again

Some people never get an answer to their problems because they don't trust them with the Lord. They feel they must have their troubles in hand at all time to properly supervise their growth. Such are the folks who take their troubles to the feet of Jesus all right, but at the end of their prayer, they drag them back home again.—Anonymous.

The Kingdom of God

By June Roth

THE BUILDING of the kingdom is not the ultimate aim of the church; it is not an end in itself but simply a means to an end. I wonder to how many of us this truth has really struck home?

Last night I was thinking of the work of the church in general and of the building of the kingdom of God in particular. I thought of ideas I had heard expressed by others, of articles I had read, and passages from the Three Standard Books. Then I tried to analyze my own thoughts and ideas.

I have heard the opinion given that gathering to Zion is all very well but that the building of Zion is a long way in the future, and the thing to do now is to live the best life we can just where we are. Others have said that if we all gathered in there would be none left to convert those in the far corners of the earth. Again, others have said that there is no use in moving to Zion because we are tired of conditions where we are—if we are that type we will soon be tired of conditions in Zion also. One thing I do know: I would not consider gathering to Zion unless I received the assurance from God that he wanted me to do so, and then I want to do it through the proper channels and apply to the bishop.

Reverting to those who feel that the most important thing to do is to endeavor to live a Zion life just where they are—I wonder if they realize the main purpose of Zion. Do they think of it only as a place of refuge in time of trouble? Do they think of it as a place where they will be treated fairly and have a better chance to obtain the necessities of life? Or do they think as I do? I feel most strongly that Zion is the place which the nations will view with wonder—the place which will finally show them the perfect form of government they have been looking for all these centuries. The people in Zion aren't the important ones; they will be but a handful at first, and God's concern is for all mankind. Those in Zion must go there with the intention of witnessing to the whole world of the will of God.

I HAVE STUDIED law to some extent and am inclined to be technical, preferring to see things done correctly but still endeavoring to keep tolerant of others' actions. Last night I realized afresh why I had always had that underlying feeling of trying to fight the tendency to have things "just so." In the past I wondered if I lacked the courage of my convictions, but now I am sure God's Spirit has been working within me and helping me. Now, more strongly than ever before, I know that the main consideration in any phase of the work of the church is the individual soul. I have held the position of branch treasurer for several years and in that work accuracy is important; but even there, if there are any decisions to make, the important thing to consider is the effect it could have on the spiritual lives of the individuals concerned.

From that I come back again to the building of the kingdom of God and the statement at the beginning of this article: "The building of the kingdom is not the ultimate aim of the church; it is not an end in itself but simply a means to an end." This is something I have felt for a long time but never before did the truth of it come home to me so strongly. The concern of God is for mankind as a whole and, although the individual souls must be changed in order to build Zion, its real purpose is to change the lives of men and women.

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths.—Micah 4: 1, 2.

CHURCH WOMEN IN THE NEWS

Ruth Briggs

Appointed to McBride Project

Brother and Sister Dale Briggs are homesteaders in the Eagle River area on the Palmer Highway in Anchorage, Alaska. She is music director of the mission at Anchorage and teaches a primary church school class. Brother Briggs is building chairman and adult class teacher. Their four children—Lynne, 17; Glenn, 15; Michael, 12; and Mark, 10—participate with them in church activities.

Mother, housewife, and church enthusiast, Sister Briggs is known professionally as Ruth Briggs at Radio Station KENI in Anchorage. Her work on the various programs has made her a favorite with listeners. She has conducted KENI's "Woman to Woman" program since September, 1948. This program, which is broadcast six days each week, features interviews with local and visiting notables, recipes, household hints, stories of women in the news, and other items of local interest. She also conducts the Stork Club program five days a week with announcements of births in Anchorage, poetry, and music, as well as a special public service series called "Living with Your Emotions" prepared in co-operation with the Mental Health Section of the Alaska Department of Health.

Because of her outstanding work in the community and on her radio program, Sister Briggs was nominated in the Mary Margaret McBride project to name the outstanding example of what Alaskan women are achieving.

Sister Briggs finds time to witness for the church through participation in community projects. She is a past president of the Anchorage Junior High and Senior High Schools P.T.A., a member of the Anchorage AAA, Woman's Club, Community Chorus, and Civil Defense organization.

Reunion at Hawaii

HONOLULU, HAWAII.—The fifth annual reunion of the Hawaii District was held at Mokuleia, Oahu, August 2-9. In the latter part of the week the attendance built up to 160 and was over 200 on the closing Sunday.

The services were generally on a high plane and the prayer services built to a climax on the last Sunday, when the good Spirit was present to admonish and encourage. One of the outstanding services was a missionary evening during which representatives from the Hawaiian, Filipino, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, and Caucasian peoples told how the gospel came to them. Some of the other evenings were given to a study of the church institutions, a cantata, and a children's achievement service in which an inspirational challenge to take the gospel to all nations was presented.

Reunion guests who shared in work and ministry were Evangelist and Mrs. Lynn E. Smith and boys, of Los Angeles.

The district officers for the coming year were elected. They were A. Orlin Crowover, president; Elwin R. Vest and Henry Mahi, counselors; Yoshimi Nii, secretary; Elias Kaawakauo, treasurer; Inez Vest, women's supervisor; Eugene Law, young people's supervisor; Viola Pagat, church school director; Emma Kaawakauo, Sr., music director; Emma Ruth Bromann, statistician; Leila Miyamoto, director of drama; and Tsunao Miyamoto, auditor. Priscilla Kramer was sustained as historian, and Tsunao Miyamoto as bishop's agent.

Recently elected to serve as pastors of the Honolulu congregations are Henry Mahi of Makiki, Akira Sakima of Kalihi, and Tsunao Miyamoto of Kapalama. The counselors in the respective congregations are Elias Kaawakauo, Yoshio Sakata, and Peter Ahuna. Avon Yap was appointed pastor of the Wahiawa mission.

Men approved by the district conference for ordination were Miguel Mahi to the office of priest, and Eugene Law, teacher.

David Kaleikau left August 22 for Independence, Missouri, to be assigned as a General Church appointee to the Central Development Area. He is the fourth appointee in the history of the mission, the others having been the late James Puuohau, Prescott Foo, and Avon Yap.

Recent gains through baptism at Kalihi were Walter Ishikawa and Clarence Awaya. Makiki's additions were Myron Harbottle, April and Puanani Kuhia, and Gloria Woodworth.—Reported by A. ORLIN CROWOVER

Mission Elects Officers

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—Mrs. Alan D. Kelley, district women's leader from Tulsa, Oklahoma, was speaker for the May meeting. Her topic was "How to Tell a True Christian." Other Tulsa visitors were Mrs. Robert Beck, Lorene Couch, Cora Hardey, and Maude Henrick.

Toni Cavanaugh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Cavanaugh, was baptized by her father on June 14, and confirmed by Elders Glenn C. Limb and O. E. Pender on June 21. On August 2 Elder W. F. Page of Andrews, Texas, baptized two granddaughters, Marilyn and Lois, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Atwood Jones, of Tonkawa, Oklahoma. The two children were confirmed that evening in the home of Mrs. John Hutchinson, by Elders Pender and Page.

District President Alfred H. Yale conducted a business meeting for the mission July 15. Brother Limb was reappointed mission president. Other officers elected to serve during the coming year were Mrs. Cecil Jackson, secretary and women's leader; Graham S. Hart, director of religious education and auditor; J. B. Sack, young people's supervisor; Mrs. Glenn Limb, children's supervisor; W. T. Bozarth, music director and treasurer; Paul Storm, auditor, and Robert J. Cavanaugh, reporter. Those sustained in office were Robert J. Cavanaugh, book steward; M. A. Etzenhouser, recorder; Paul Storm, historian; Mrs. Graham Hart, solicitor; and W. T. Bozarth, Paul Storm, Mrs. Edith Padget, Robert J. Cavanaugh, and J. B. Sack, finance and building committee.

Those attending the Oklahoma Reunion on August 8-15 were Elder and Mrs. Limb, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Jackson and son Norman, Mrs. Lula Lackson, Mrs. Noah Padget, Mrs. John Hutchinson, and Loreta Hutchinson who was baptized at reunion.

Mrs. Cecil Jackson is women's leader. Other officers are Sister Limb, assistant leader; Sister Cavanaugh, secretary; and Sister Hart, treasurer.

Mr. and Mrs. John Page have recently moved to Fairfax, Oklahoma, where Mr. Page manages the Osage County packing plant, and is co-owner of the concern. Special social parties were held for them, and also for Mr. and Mrs. DeWayne Steers, who were home on a brief furlough over July 4.

Elder Jess Davis was guest speaker on July 19.—Reported by MRS. GRAHAM S. HART

Successful Church School

RUNNELLS, IOWA.—This year, Runnells held its first vacation church school. Only two members of the staff were familiar with the type of work, but all were willing to learn. The director acted as principal, supervisor, and general helper. Each teacher also acted as group leader and handcraft supervisor. The pianist, music department head, and storyteller all helped wherever they were needed. Those on the teaching staff were Grace Tingle, Isobel

Lane, Mamie Meador, Helen White, Ruth Adams, Ruth Harmison, Mary Alice Conklin, and Blanche Baker. Sisters Florence Freberg and Myra Price, of Des Moines, gave valuable help and material. Sister Freberg showed movies to the children. The junior high group acted as hall monitors and directed traffic.

Pastor Frank Price visited the school on Wednesday, and Sisters Myra Price and Anna Wicker were also visitors. On Thursday the children had charge of the worship service. Their theme was "Love One Another." The achievement program was presented on Friday evening. Certificates were awarded on a following Sunday morning.

Average attendance at the church school was thirty-four. On June 14, three children from the school were baptized. They were Eva May, Jerry, and Sylvia Meador.—Reported by BLANCHE BAKER

Sunday Radio Sermons

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.—Joplin Branch dismissed all services from July 18-25 in favor of the reunion at Racine, Missouri. A number of the Saints tented at the reunion grounds, and several others drove back and forth. Those driving assisted with the transportation of other members.

The branch had three guest speakers in August. On the sixteenth, President F. Henry Edwards was the speaker, and on the twenty-third, Elder W. E. Timms, recently from England, was the speaker. On August 30, Elder Charles Neff, Assistant to the First Presidency, spoke on "Seek First the Kingdom."

Church school is dismissed at ten thirty on Sunday mornings in order to hear pastor Stephen Black's radio sermon.

First Separate Reunion

HIGHLAND PARK, MICHIGAN.—Detroit International Stake held its first reunion separate from the combined reunions of other years, at the Blue Water reunion grounds near Lexington, Michigan, August 8-16. Registered attendance during the week was 450, with many visitors each week end.

Apostle C. George Mesley and Sister Mesley were in attendance throughout the entire reunion, with Brother Mesley taking charge of morning prayer services and Sister Mesley teaching the women's class each morning. Bishop W. N. Johnson and his family were in attendance during the first week end of the reunion, and he preached at the afternoon service on August 9.

Al Pelletier, missionary to Ontario, and his family attended for the week. He had evening preaching assignments and spoke at the last Sunday morning service.

Les Gardner had charge of the morning devotions and the twilight class. Warren Chelline taught the men's class. F. E. Butterworth, Robert Flanders, and W. B. McClain had charge of the young people's activities. The new classroom buildings were a decided asset to the work of the children's division.

Bishop L. Wayne Updike was reunion bishop, and also taught the general class. Evangelist George Booth, one of the Stake patriarchs, gave blessings during the reunion.

Others who assisted were Richard Gault, music; Ida Trimble, Athol Packer, Bob Burger, and Mrs. Frances Pike, junior high; Mrs. Rachel Ecker, kitchen; Mrs. Pearl Rife, dining room; Mr. and Mrs. Gene Swanson, registration; Carl Hicks and Noble Gault, administrative assistants to Stake President W. B. McClain; J. M. L. Belrose, administration to the sick; Mr. and Mrs. Rigby Leighton, children's hour and campfire; Mrs. Russell Knight, church school; Elizabeth Miller, nursery; Hazel Harrison, preschool; Gwendolyn McClain, primary; and Mary McIntosh, junior. Randall Hulse was in charge of recreation. There were many volunteer helpers in each department.—Reported by STAKE REPORTER

Far West Stake News

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—The sixty-first Far West Stake Reunion was held August 7-16 at Stewartsville, Missouri, with a record attendance. There were 237 rental tents, also trailers, and individual tents.

The prayer services each day were in charge of Stake President Emery E. Jennings. Brother Evan Fry, General Church radio minister, was the evening speaker. For the Sunday services, the speakers were Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, Stake Bishop Lewis E. Landsberg, Evangelist William Patterson, and Brother Jennings. A panel discussion was held each morning for the adults, and classes were held for the women's department and priesthood.

The high light of the Zion's League was their annual sunrise prayer service held at the Stewartsville church on Saturday morning, with 300 in attendance. Each day classes and worship and recreational activities were provided for three age groups, the regular, senior, and junior Leagues.

Dormitories were provided for young people whose parents could not attend.

The children's department was under the supervision of Sister Virginia Bean. There was an enrollment of over 350 children, with classes provided for each age group. A nursery was provided for children between the ages of six months and three years.

Registered nurses were on duty at all hours, assisting doctors in the camp.

Music for the reunion was furnished by the stake choir, the Celeste Chorus, choirs from various congregations, and the Zion's League chorus.

The dining hall served all the meals for the campers and was operated on the stewardship plan, each one contributing according to his ability. A total of five thousand dollars was paid for all the meals.

Saturday afternoon a baptismal service was held at Cameron, Missouri. Two persons were baptized. Since January there have been 115 baptisms in the stake.

The reunion budget of $3,300 and goal of $7,500 were adequately met when $8,000 was given in offerings. Plans for additional facilities may now be started with the surplus.

A mission was opened June 21, at Gallatin, Missouri, with a membership of over thirty-five. Several baptisms have been reported.—Reported by MARIE AGENSTEIN

Children Blessed

MT. VERNON, ILLINOIS.—On May 24 Cara Sunshine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Racine, was blessed by Elders W. W. Colvin and R. W. Rockett. Mrs. Racine is the former Virginia Jackson, of Marion, Illinois. Elder Rockett is the child's uncle.

John Russell, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cramer, was blessed on July 19 by his uncle, Brother Rockett, and Brother Colvin. Mrs. Cramer is the former Mayona Rockett.

At the evening service on July 19, Cynthia Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ezell, was blessed by Elders John Puckett and Rockett. Mrs. Ezell is the former Carmen Bravard.

Brother Puckett was the speaker at the evening service on July 19.

Annual election of officers was held July 19, with Pastor W. W. Colvin presiding. Those elected to office were W. W. Colvin, branch president; Guy Wilcox, church school director; Avva Rockett, women's supervisor; Norma Lee Rockett, music director; Eber Jones, Zion's League supervisor; JoAnn DeSelms, secretary; Pauline Jones, publicity agent; and Ralph Rockett, sustained as treasurer. The auditing committee consists of Verl Moore, Tom Racine, and Guy Wilcox. Harold Hertenstein, Guy Wilcox, and Tom Racine were sustained as members of the building committee.

LaVeta Marie GaVette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orian GaVette, was blessed on August 2 by Brothers Colvin and Rockett. Mrs. GaVette is the former Suzanne Edgington.

On August 23 Shirley Nadeen Cummings was baptized by Brother Tom Racine, and confirmed by Brothers Rockett and Colvin.

Recent speakers have been Stanley Greathouse, Lowell Wilson, and Charles Wesner.—Reported by RUBY ELLIS

League Retreat

PLEASANT HILL, MISSOURI.—Zion's Leaguers from Central Missouri Stake registered for a retreat at Knob Noster State Park on Saturday afternoon, August 22. The theme was "The Challenge of the Restoration," and 160 Leaguers attended.

Appetizing meals were prepared by Nadine Williams of Kingsville, Pat Updike from Odessa, Frances Benner from Harrisonville, and Louise Loveland, Betty Kleckler, and Vernie Carlile from Pleasant Hill.

Those who shared in ministry were Eugene Theys, guest minister; Harry Simons, stake president; W. C. Becker, stake bishop; and Merton Loveland, stake youth leader. Stephen Robinson shared his experiences in Guatemala with the group, and Louise Loveland planned the campfire service.

On Saturday evening, Brother Theys showed pictures of his missionary work in Germany and spoke at the campfire service. Brother Simons taught the senior Zion's League class and Brother Theys the junior Zion's League. Merton Loveland was in charge of the fellowship service, at which nineteen prayers and testimonies were given. Brother Theys was the final speaker at the retreat.—Reported by JEAN CARLILE

Extraordinary Visit

About two weeks ago my companion and I made a trip to Kansas City to visit a very dear friend. When we got there the friend wasn't at home so we took care of some business at Independence. We stopped in the City Hall to see the mayor, and he was out of town, so my companion suggested we visit some friends there, but for some reason we didn't. On our way back to Kansas City we were strongly impressed to visit a friend on Truman Road. The lady we visited had just returned home from the Sanitarium and could not talk above a whisper. When we rang the bell she came to the door looking as if she would fall to the floor, she was so weak. When she saw us she exclaimed, "God sent you here!" After we visited awhile she asked for administration and was healed. She said her husband and daughter would be extremely happy when they returned home and found her well. Her doctor informed her that she had been at death's door a short time before. This good woman had been healed many times before when I was called to administer to her with another elder. One of the six children she and her husband had adopted was healed through administration after the doctor said he wouldn't live till morning. That boy is still living and has three children of his own.

Our Special Reason for Membership

I wonder how many of us have ever stopped to think why we are members of the Reorganized Church. Was it because we were born in the church? Did we just hit upon it and like it pretty well? Were the people particularly nice? Or did we find in it all the answers to our religious questions?

I believe that each of us as Saints should try to express in writing our personal reason for being a member of the church. It would be interesting to compare a large number of these reasons and try to draw from them ideas for helping explain the gospel to our friends.

My idea may seem simple to me and my reason unimportant, but in reality it may be helpful for another to know and enable him properly to tell the story.

We know the time is growing shorter and we have much to do. Each of us needs to get busy and do his job. The priesthood cannot do the job alone. A large proportion of our families do not attend church regularly. Could part of the fault be ours? I believe so. We should bear stronger witness in our words and actions so that our weaker brothers and sisters will be strengthened. We can tell them, as well as our nonmember friends, why we are Reorganized Latter Day Saints. Perhaps this will open up the best way to help them.

Concerning the Use of Meat

I wish to express my appreciation for the answer by Mildred Nelson Smith in "Question Time" of August 24. To me this is very enlightening. It seems that we do eat too much meat despite the fact that we have the Word of Wisdom, given by the prophet as information and instruction to us in choosing our foods.

Many people think in terms of meat only when protein is mentioned; very few think of amino acids. These are the building blocks that make up proteins. There are about sixteen of the numerous amino acids that are indispensable. Milk seems to contain all of these. Soybeans contain most or all of them. These two foods are better protein sources than meat. If fish and sea foods are not considered as meat, we can use more of them. Milk and soybeans also are rich in essential vitamins and minerals.

I have regained perfect health through the study of nutrition and proper eating. Anyone who has the desire to be well and the faith that God answers prayers can have good health, I believe. We should eat our foods, when possible, as nature provides them. We need whole wheat, vegetables, and fruits each day. If we think pleasant thoughts, take plenty of rest, and spend time each day in communion with our Heavenly Father, our health should be good.

A Testimony of Conversion

I left home at the age of sixteen to meet life on my own and, for the first time, to think and act for myself. I lived in a boardinghouse and worked in a shipyard. I was interested in religion and attended many different churches, hoping to find the right one. While serving with the armed forces in Korea I saw just how far man can fall away from God and how futile he is in his own strength to rise again. I watched fellows who were respectable citizens in the States become drunken philanderers. They would tell me I was foolish not to join them, but I knew it would only lead to the ultimate in wickedness and misery. Then I met a young man who refused to smoke or drink. One day he showed me the picture of his wife and said that the people of his church believed marriage to be pure and holy and that he would not think of doing as these other men. He said his church was the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, then he asked me about my faith. I told him that I belonged to no church, that I had been to many but had found none that met my expectations. I also told him I believed it was necessary for God to appear in person to direct men back to his church. He said that God and Christ both had appeared to Joseph Smith, when he prayed for direction as to which church he should join, and commissioned him to reestablish the church in these latter days. When I was sent back to the States on rotation, I decided I would find this church my friend had told me about. In Denver I met Gerald Gabriel who told me all about it. I knew as I listened to him that this was what I had been seeking for, and within a week I was baptized. The day I became a member was the day life really began for me.

For Some the War Is Over

I remember the day the war in Korea started. June 24, 1950, was a bright, sunny day in Hawaii—until the paper came. But even the news did not seem to touch our lives just then. It was not long, however, until my husband came home and said that his regiment had been ordered to Korea. There was the usual scurry and bustle that accompanies an army on the move, and the same preparation to leave on the part of families getting ready to go to the mainland. The morning Fritz sailed was appropriately gray, and the mist mingled with my tears as I told him good-by. Then—after a long wait—the war was over for us. Fritz was rotated home, and the long days of watching for letters that didn't come were ended.

We were fortunate, but what of the others? Can time erase the memories of horror, the sights and sounds and smell of war? For some the war ended with the pain of torn flesh and crushed bones. Or does it ever end for those who must face life with only one arm or one leg or other physical disfigurement? What about the men who were taken prisoners? For some death was a merciful release; others had to live to remember the torture they received or watched their friends endure. Even though the truce has been signed, who can forget Heartbreak Hill or Sniper Ridge?

For some the war is over—permanently over. But for those who remain there is a greater war to be fought—the unceasing war of right against wrong. We who have the restored gospel know that only through the light of truth and the love of God can the world find peace. We must work diligently until He comes—for only then will the battle of the ages cease.

Do It Now

When I first came to Lamoni to serve as stake secretary, I found tacked up over my desk a typed copy of the poem, "Do It Now." Not long after I started work there, a group of girls from a Sunday school class came to the office for instructions on a project they had accepted to solicit funds for the Sanitarium.

The first one who came in stepped over to my desk and read the poem as she waited for her friends. She smiled and said, "That's good!" Soon the rest came, and they went into the private office to get their assignments of territory and quota. In a surprisingly short while—only a few days—this same girl returned, her face wreathed in smiles, and with her full quota. She said to me as she went through the main office, "After reading that poem, I thought since this was my job, I'd better do it now."

Some weeks later our stake reunion opened. Brother Wilber Prall, a full-time counselor in the stake presidency, had charge of the young people's early prayer services. One of the first mornings there was a pause, as sometimes occurs at the opening of the service. I stood and told of the incident and expressed my desire to be ready to serve now in the prayer services as elsewhere. Brother Prall followed instantly by telling what I had not known; this girl was not only the first to return, but the only one to bring her full quota. He asked those attending the service which they would rather be like—the one who returned so promptly with her full amount, or those who straggled in later with only a portion of their quota. It set the keynote of the service, and we had one of the most delightful young people's meetings I ever attended.

Some Oriole girls under supervision of Sister A. E. Bullard took it as their slogan and at their little prayer group immediately preceding these morning services, they pledged themselves to share actively in the service now. They kept their pledge and gave life to all the ensuing services. All this happened because someone had tacked up that poem, and because Brother Prall issued the challenge.

The Scripture tells us: "Now is the acceptable time of the Lord," and over a hundred years ago the Lord said to the church: "Even now there is enough to redeem Zion." What could we not do in the strength of the Lord if we would but respond to his call now and give ourselves wholeheartedly to his work. With all my heart I believe in such close communion with the Lord that when the Spirit says, "Now is the time to serve; now is the time to bear witness," we may be able to recognize the call and respond with our whole being.

The World's Most Impolite Habit

By Thurman Sensing

(Reprinted with permission from the Kiwanis Magazine)

If I were selecting the world's most impolite habit I would name without the slightest hesitation—smoking. Not the worst habit—but the most impolite.

The fact that I don't smoke myself has nothing to do with my attitude; at least I don't believe it does. One should be able to discuss a habit where manners are involved without letting the personal equation enter into it.

I can think of no better example of what influences me than the large number of people who smoke in crowded elevators or taxicabs or close committee rooms or similar places where the unwilling victim has no chance to escape.

Can anything be more contradictory than for a gentleman to get into an elevator and remove his hat out of respect to a lady and at the same time hold an odoriferous cigar or smoldering cigarette a few inches from her face? Those on the elevator to whom smoking is obnoxious—and don't think it isn't obnoxious to a great many people—are entirely at the mercy of the smoker. They are crowded together, they cannot move, and they have no defense.

That is why I say smoking under such conditions is the height of impoliteness.

That this violation of good manners has become so common perhaps accounts for the fact that it is largely ignored. It is so common that it is accepted, even by those who dislike it, as a necessary nuisance, where, on the other hand, something unusual would draw immediate attention. To use a "polite" example that would not compare in obnoxiousness with smoking, for instance, suppose a person got on an elevator with a perfume atomizer—not a stink bomb—in his hand and every few seconds let loose a blast of perfume. I have a feeling there would be considerable stirring among those present and perhaps a certain amount of remonstrance. If this individual used something worse than perfume, it is entirely likely that the weight of "public opinion," if not something a little heavier, would put an end to it.

Why doesn't the weight of public opinion have some influence on the impoliteness of smoking? Perhaps it would if the politeness of nonsmokers did not get the better of their honesty, because nonsmokers are unquestionably more polite than smokers. They not only do not raise objections, but in the rare cases where the smoker will inquire if his smoking will bother, the nonsmoker invariably replies,

"No, of course not." Some of them will even stretch politeness a little and say, "Although I don't smoke myself, I like the smell of tobacco."

Perhaps the situation would be remedied if the young lady whose escort asks that question would say, "Yes, I would prefer you don't smoke—it permeates my hair and my clothes, and I don't like the odor"; or the host or hostess would say, "If you don't mind, the smoke is very irritating to my eyes and throat"; or the committee member would say, "Would you gentlemen please not smoke; it gives me a headache."

A really polite smoker would simply say, "Do you smoke?" If the answer were no, he would not either, until he was away somewhere by himself.

Is the smoker's lack of consideration another illustration of the moral and ethical laxity that seems to be growing these days? Or is it a problem by itself? I don't know. But I really would like some conscientious smoker to answer my complaint honestly and forthrightly—if he can do so.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Sinclair of Onset, Massachusetts, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on May 30 by holding open house at their home. They were married on June 2, 1903, in Fall River, Massachusetts. A sister of Mrs. Sinclair, Mrs. Addie Clough of Kirtland, Ohio, and Mrs. Ethel Madsen of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, who were flower girls at the wedding, attended the celebration.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have been active members of the Reorganized Church since their youth. They worked over thirty-five years in Boston Branch, and for the past three years he has served as pastor of the Onset group. They have three children: Milton, Earl, and Mrs. Geneveive Chesworth; six grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

My Religion

By Mrs. Theodore Berry

EDITOR'S NOTE: The value of this testimony will be enhanced for our readers by knowing that the writer is not a member of the white race. She appreciates the tolerant attitude of those who recognize no racial barriers in the gospel. If she has ever been hurt by the thoughtlessness or prejudice of the few which fail to measure up to these Christian standards, she does not dwell upon it, but rejoices in the all-embracing love of God.

I WAS TAUGHT to read the Bible regularly, have faith in God, and know that he was the solution to all problems, and that I could overcome any obstacle by a simple faith in God. My attitude toward religion can be summed up best by Gibran's quotation, "Your daily life is your religion and your temple." My religion is a vibrant, challenging guide giving me courage and a sense of direction and conviction for my everyday living.

As I seek to live my religion daily, it gives me an abiding faith in God making me aware that he is ever present and watching over me.

My religion creates within me a concern for the well-being of my fellow men; I am concerned that each person may live respectably, comfortably, and have the right to enjoy full first-class citizenship with equality of opportunity.

My religion recognizes the worth of every individual and creates in me a desire to understand human frailties and know why people behave as they do—the desire to be charitable and understanding of others.

My religion recognizes no barrier of race, color, or creed. I firmly believe that we are all children of one Father and that a person of real religion strives to implement these beliefs in his daily actions so that brotherhood is something which is practiced 365 days a year—not one month, one week, or one Sunday in the year. I know that one must live with one's conscience, aware of what is morally and spiritually right in the sight of God.

My religion affords me a sense of humility. I revere God, praise him, and put him first in my life knowing that he is love, and he that dwells in love.

The other son, Earnest, died two months ago. Funeral services were held in the Sandusky Reorganized Church, Evangelist H. E. C. Muir and Elder Elroy Hanton officiating. Burial was in Washington Cemetery, Carsonville, Michigan.

JONES.—Jane Margaret, daughter of John A. and Elizabeth Lawless Nix, was born January 21, 1885, in Kickapoo, Illinois, and died June 25, 1953, at Kewanee, Illinois, Public Hospital. On August 16, 1905, she was married to Edward Jones who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1915.

Besides her husband she leaves two daughters: Mrs. Elizabeth L. Hutton of Kewanee, and Mrs. Elva M. Taylor of Brimfield, Illinois; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Seifert and Smith Chapel in Kewanee, Elder Raymond Wrigley officiating. Interment was in the cemetery at Brimfield, Illinois.

PUCKET.—Evelyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Graves of Joplin, Missouri, was born February 21, 1916, and died August 15, 1953, at a hospital in Joplin after a long illness. She was married on October 27, 1934, to Allen J. Pucket, who survives her.

Besides her husband she leaves three sons: Bill, Fred, and Jim; her parents; four brothers; and five sisters. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Joplin, Elders Stephen Black and Herman Plumb officiating. Burial was in the Ozark Memorial Cemetery.

SNOW.—Ida L., was born July 6, 1874, at Cula, Illinois, and died September 3, 1953, at the Independence Sanitarium. On November 18, 1905, she was married to Leon Snow, who preceded her in death on November 30, 1934. Following his death she lived on South Osage Street in Independence, Missouri, until November 3, 1948, when she entered Resthaven, the church home for aged women. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1905. She leaves no immediate family.

Funeral services were conducted by Patriarchs W. F. Bolinger and Arthur Stoff at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Combined Testimonies of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John day magazine of the Omaha World Herald for December 31, 1950, it is stated in part that by the year 2,000 ". . . a new world-unifying power—the United States—will have taken its place in the center of international affairs; forging a new 'Empire,' different from Britain's, different from Rome's, indeed not an empire at all in the old sense, but nevertheless a new core, a new catalytic force." These are strong sentiments indeed in verification of American-type freedom filling the mission of the prophetic stone kingdom. And these sentiments are strengthened by the continually mounting conviction among thinking peoples the world over that it must be one free world or no world at all.

It is apparent, then, that present-day events and tendencies do indicate that the spirit of mass freedom for mankind, with the United States leading the way, is working throughout the world to substitute freedom for slavery, the rights of the many for privileges to the few. In the words of the prophecy, the stone is in the act of becoming a great mountain to fill the whole earth.

RAIN

This incident occurred when there was a drouth. A picnic had been planned, and on that very day it began to rain. Some were disappointed.

But one woman took another view. "As I see it, the sky is raining flowers that we would not otherwise have. It is raining wheat to make bread for the hungry. It is raining cotton to clothe the needy. It is raining grass for the cattle. It is raining prosperity. In these good drops of rain, God's blessings are falling from heaven to earth."

That gave everybody a different idea of the whole thing. Try it on your troubles sometime; it may help you.

Someone has said it isn't so important what happens to you, as how you take it. L. J. L.

ASSIMILATION

The mind is like the stomach. It is not how much you put into it that counts, but how much it digests.—Albert Jay Nock.

DROUTH

It is weeks since there has been any rain, and the blazing sun soaks up some of the scant moisture that is left, robbing the plants. Some of the garden could be watered enough to save it, but not all. The lawn is parched and brown. Even the weeds are stunted and sick, and there is a coating of dust over everything. The roses, the princesses of the garden, are protected by a mulch, so their water goes a long way and they keep blooming. Is there anything that grows that can look thirstier than zinnias? Their leaves hang down like despairing hands and they can almost shout for a drink. Water them, and they freshen up in twenty minutes. The trees in the woods across the way are suffering and some dying. The horses chew at the stubs of the grass, sniffing the dust away. A drouth is a cruel thing, and it makes nature's children suffer keenly.

TIME

The most precious of all possessions is time;
Every day you have less;
Every second wasted can never be replaced.
Time is the most democratic of all properties.
Every human being is a millionaire at birth;
Everyone ends as a pauper in time.
What you buy with it depends on you.
Time can be exchanged for failure or success,
whichever you prefer.
How much interest are you drawing on the only real capital you have—time?

DEFECTS

All great literature contains the elements we call obscene. Certain elements of the Bible have been so termed, and such words intrude even into dictionaries. When a lady objected to such words in his dictionary, Samuel Johnson is reported to have said: "Madam, you must have been looking for them." Why condemn a barrel because of one specked apple among its contents?

PASTOR'S HANDBOOK

Theme: Our Spiritual Obligation

This handbook is designed to be a helpful tool in the hands of the busy pastor who will use it, and offers an overall theme for each month, with suggested prayer meeting themes, hymns, Scripture references, and Communion and oblation themes. All Bible references are to the Inspired Version unless otherwise indicated. Pastors can use the book in setting their goals and planning to meet them, keeping in mind the goals of the General Church and the needs and capacities of their local groups.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

IMPROVEMENT CONTINUES

President Israel A. Smith continues to regain the strength which he lost during his recent illness. He was at his desk for short periods last week. No regular statements concerning his condition will be issued so long as this favorable trend is maintained.

GRACELAND SPEAKER

President F. Henry Edwards was the speaker at the opening of the school year at Graceland College on Sunday, September 13. In the afternoon, President Edwards met with priesthood members among the faculty and student body. Ninety-two student members of the priesthood were present.

RETURNS FROM CALIFORNIA

Apostle Edmund J. Gleazer has returned to his office and reports that interest is mounting in Northern California District, where several successful camps and an inspiring reunion were held. Brother Garland Tickemyer had charge of the children's camps. Excellent interest is also apparent in several of the congregations in Southern California District. Brother Gleazer reports that Los Angeles Stake and Southern California District together recently purchased a reunion grounds.

ATTEND REUNIONS

Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley have returned from reunions at Sanford, Michigan, Blue Water, Michigan, and Erie Beach, Ontario. At Blue Water the attendance had increased so much that it was necessary to have two separate reunions.

CAMPUS SERIES CLOSES

Apostle Reed M. Holmes spoke at the final Campus outdoor service Sunday evening, September 13. Elder Herbert C. Lively was in charge, and music was provided by the Enoch Hill choir. During the week, Brother Holmes met with approximately one hundred church school directors and teachers of Central Missouri Stake, at Odessa, Missouri.

SPEAKS AT LAMONI

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell preached in the Lamoni, Iowa, church to a combined audience of college students and townspeople on Sunday evening, September 13. A reception for the college students was held after the service in the lower auditorium.

VISITS TABOR, IOWA

Radio Minister Evan Fry visited his father, Elder Charles Fry, and was the speaker Sunday, September 6, at Tabor, Iowa. Brother Evan Fry also spoke in Kansas City Central Church Sunday, September 13.

RETURNS FROM CAMPS

Carl Mesle, General Church Director of Youth Activities, has returned from Southern Ohio and Columbus youth camps at Canter's Cave, in southern Ohio, New York District Youth Camp and New York District Young Adult Retreat at Allegany State Park, and the College Student Conference in Rochester, New York. One hundred forty-four were registered at the conference, with Dr. Lawrence Brockway in charge, and President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Henry Livingston representing the General Church.

STRI-I-KE," and Brother Rose recorded it with his trusty camera. The photograph won him second place in a recent Air Research and Development Command contest. Sergeant Rose received a $15 award and personal congratulations from General E. E. Partridge, ARDC commanding general in Albuquerque, where Brother Rose is stationed.

Herald readers who watch the credit lines on the front page pictures will have noticed that Brother Rose is practically a "staff" photographer. He has sent numbers of fine photographs, especially of the scenery of the mountains near his home in western Colorado.

Gerald Rose was born May 8, 1921, at Montrose, Colorado, and was baptized in 1929 at Delta, Colorado. His graduation from Delta High School was in 1940. He has spent twelve years in the armed forces. From 1937 to 1940 he was in the Colorado National Guard. The following year he was in the Army, stationed in Oklahoma and Texas. From 1941 to 1947 he was in the Navy, spending time on both coasts of the United States and in the Southwest Pacific. Since April, 1951, he has been with the United States Air Force, stationed at Albuquerque, New Mexico.

He says photography is a hobby as well as a vocation. He ran a photo studio at Cedaredge, Colorado, for a year in 1950. Now he is Wing public information photographer at the Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque and is becoming a well-known photographer in the city.

He was married to Georgia DeLong in 1942. They have four children, Geraldine, 9; Samuel Dee, 6; Gwendolyn Fae, 4; and Gloria Ann, 2. His family is with him in Albuquerque.

In 1940 he was ordained to the office of teacher. He is now church school director in the Albuquerque mission. His other interests—besides photography, his family, and the church—are woodworking, reading, and writing.

The Necessity of Priesthood

THE NEW TESTAMENT pictures the early church as a worshiping and serving fellowship in vital communion with her Lord and presided over by men called of God to his ministry. The functions of the various orders of the priesthood are not fully defined in the New Testament, but the fact of authoritative priestly leadership is evident.

Careful examination of the available records shows that the primary task of the Christian ministry is to bring men to God. Intellectual ministry is a secondary aspect of this task. This is because it is quite possible to teach men proper ideas about God, our Savior, and the doctrines of the church, without actually bringing these men into a saving relation with Divinity; just as it is possible to bring men into a saving relation with Divinity even though their ideas about God and his purposes may be limited or even inaccurate. Sound understanding tends to be generated in spiritual experience, not to precede it.

Men of the priesthood are called to preach, to teach, to govern, and to serve. In all these priestly activities they should represent God with power and authority. This calls for humility on the part of the minister, but not for uncertainty. His humility derives from the fact that the power which he exercises is not his own; it is the power of God. His certainty derives from his knowledge that God has called him and now acknowledges him.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints affirms that our Lord clearly committed representative authority to the apostles, and to the seventy, and to other ministers named in the New Testament. We affirm, further, that provision was made for perpetuating this representative authority among men, and that it was actually perpetuated beyond the period of apostolic ministry. We affirm, furthermore, that this representative authority was gradually forfeited as men called to the priesthood failed to keep in close touch with the source of their authority. But the church also affirms that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and their ministerial successors in this dispensation have again been commissioned as representatives of Divinity, and that it is the divine intention that the blessings of the gospel shall be shared abroad in this age through such men.

Our Heavenly Father blesses us in ways of his own choosing. Sometimes he blesses us directly, and with no other person involved. At other times he blesses us through our fellows, but with no ministerial intermediary involved. But at still other times he blesses us through those he has called for this very purpose. In either event, the important consideration is that our Heavenly Father does actually bless us, and that his power is clearly evident. It is our testimony that this power is manifest through the ordinances of the gospel when these are rightly administered by men who are commissioned of God.

PRIESTHOOD IS NECESSARY because in the great crises of life men need to know that God is actually represented among them in the preaching of the gospel and the administration of the ordinances of the kingdom. We do not prove that this actually takes place by any argument, but by experience. We know that Paul was an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ because of the redemptive power manifest in his words and work. And in all humility we affirm that the priesthood has again been committed to men because we have known the power of God in our own lives and, particularly, in the ordinances through which we have made covenant with him. We are deeply grateful that our Heavenly Father has so blessed us, and those of us who share priesthood responsibility are made movingly aware that we can fulfill our calling only as we maintain close relations with the source of our authority and power.

Potter Article in "Pix"

A RECENT ISSUE of Pix magazine (June 27, 1953) carried a three-page spread titled "What is a Latter Day Saint?" This magazine, a publication of national prominence in Australia, faithfully reproduced an illustrated article written by Seventy Floyd Potter. More than 1,250,000 subscribers were able to obtain an R. L. D. S. account of the beginnings and beliefs of the church.

A half-page picture of Joseph the Martyr and another half-page photograph of a General Conference Communion service are outstanding points of interest in the article. Also pictured are President Israel A. Smith, Joseph Smith III, Kirtland Temple, and the Green Cathedral at Tiona reunion grounds.

Brother Potter used the catechetical method in presenting his article. Through the use of eye-catching questions, he appears to have attracted considerable attention that should prove to be a great advertising service for the church. Brother Floyd is to be commended.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The editors have been interested to note a project which was started by a group of sisters in Sherman Oaks, California. They call it "Morale Builders." The correspondence which follows will explain this very fine service to men in the Armed Forces:

MORALE BUILDERS

Several years ago two women whose sons were missing in action in Korea felt that they must do something for the other boys. Many of the boys in their letters spoke of being depressed. In reply to these letters these two women started "Morale Builders," under the chairmanship of Alberta Woodring in November, 1952, and since then have sent eighty-one packages to boys in Korea.

Names of boys in Korea to be recipients of the packages were selected from the Saints' Herald. Included in the packages were candles, washcloths, pencils, stationery, popular magazines, church pamphlets, and a one-pound coffee can of homemade cookies and candy.

The "thank-you" letters the women have received from the boys have more than repaid them for their efforts.

In February of this year the chapter felt that President Eisenhower would be interested in their work and sent him a package just like the ones the boys received. The following is a copy of the "thank-you" letter received from the Director of Defense at the request of the President:

Dear Mrs. Minghini:

The President has asked us to reply to your letter of February 6, which was also signed by Mrs. Woodring and, also, to acknowledge receipt of the package that arrived with the letter.

The work that you and your group are doing for the men in Korea deserves the highest praise and the sincere thanks of the entire country. To let the men there know that they are not forgotten by the folks at home does more to raise morale than any other thing.

The thoughts expressed in your letter are most appreciated and may I, again, express the thanks of the Department of Defense for the work your organization is doing.

Sincerely yours,
ANDREW H. BERDING

"The District Leader," a neat and extensive mimeographed publication of the Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba Districts of Canada, came to the editors' attention recently. In addition to an extensive news coverage, the "Leader" includes numerous articles and features. The districts are to be commended for presenting such a worthy piece of work to contact their members, many of whom are isolated.

The Children's Day baptisms in the stakes showed a big increase this year over last. We are happy to be able to share this report.

Graceland Home-coming

Home-coming dates this year are October 16 to 18. Housing accommodations may be obtained through Jerry Runkle, Lamoni, Iowa.

William S. Gould
Chairman

The editorial page of a recent edition of the Rochester, New York Democrat and Chronicle contains an item of interest which has been forwarded to the Presidency.

Commenting on the Mormon pageant held yearly near Rochester, the editors of this New York newspaper point to the growth of tolerance and religious freedom since the early days of the Restoration Movement.

Nearly a century and a half ago, Joseph Smith, a young farmer near Palmyra, startled his neighbors with the announcement that an angel had directed him to dig up golden plates on the side of a near-by hill. From these plates he reported that, with divine guidance, he had transcribed the Book of Mormon.

Many scoffed at Smith, but others believed him. Their faith was to be tested by persecution, and Joseph and his brother, Hyrum, were to die at the hands of a mob. . . .

Probably most of the pageant visitors are non-Mormons. One cannot see these orderly, respectful crowds without dwelling on the growth of tolerance, the freedom in this country to believe and do as one wills, as long as it conforms with the moral code. In the articles of faith which Joseph Smith wrote for his church he said: "Let all men worship as they wish." Today that is a fundamental right wherever there is justice and liberty.

From Anton Compier, Rotterdam, Holland:

We have had several business meetings here in Holland, and it looks to me as if we are getting some good men in the various offices for this year. Some of the younger men are coming along very well, and though we would like to see good results right away, I am sure we are gradually growing and laying the foundation for future growth of the Holland Mission. I enjoy working with Brother Witte and believe that the church could not have made a better choice of one to send over here. The people love him, and he is giving excellent leadership. He has visited the various groups here several times and has attended business meetings to help out.

Personally I am enjoying my work, and I am sure I shall continue to do so. I was glad that I could attend the Enfield Reunion; it has done quite some good for me. Receive my best wishes for the welfare of the work, and may the Lord guide you.

From Vern Webb, Spokane, Washington:

We have been very happily busy here in Spokane recently. We all felt exceptionally good about the reunion, and then we came home and built up a booth for the fair here and cleared more than $1,000 from it for the building fund. We were dubious about breaking even the first year, but we were pleasantly surprised. We had the largest food booth there and served a plate lunch in addition to hamburgers, pie, and other short orders. We enjoyed doing it so much that there were many comments among the fair-goers about the friendly atmosphere of our booth. We felt that if we made no money on the project it would have been well worth the effort for the experience in co-operation. It went so smoothly that it has been one of our most outstanding experiences.

Joint Heirs With Christ

By Chris B. Hartshorn

A sermon preached at Second Church Independence, Missouri, March 22, 1953

For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption; whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.—Romans 8: 14-17.

A New Era

After John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee and proclaimed the gospel of the kingdom of God, saying, "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand. Repent ye and believe the gospel" (Mark 1: 12, 13).

As we understand the background of this announcement, it is that "the law and the prophets were till John." "Since then the kingdom of heaven is preached"—something different. The gospel of the kingdom was not preached immediately before John. It is something that has to do with the higher priesthood functioning. It was lost in the time of Moses because of the people's hardness of heart and disobedience.

So a new era began with Christ. We have grown up in a Christian civilization. Most of us have heard about the gospel of Christ so much that we think everybody else also knows about it. Perhaps we no longer think there is anything so wonderful about the story.

At the West College Church in Independence where I regularly attend, there are several Saints who recently came from Europe. A few of them speak little English, but they come to church anyway. They get something there—they feel the Spirit in the service. Let those people tell you their experiences. They wonder that a week or more goes by without somebody asking them to see certain legal papers, without somebody asking them to tell all about their business. It happened to them constantly in Europe. We don't appreciate what it is to live in a free country like this until we've been deprived of some of those privileges. So it is with the gospel of Jesus Christ. We've always had it. We don't get excited about it. But it was a new era when Christ came.

The gospel is not just for the purpose of keeping us from hell or destruction. The purpose of it is that we might save men from sinning. Forgiveness is secondary. It is important to feel free in our hearts again after we have become conscious of our sinning; but that's secondary. Our purpose in the gospel is to lead men to go on from this state of sin and repentance to a perfect life.

"Therefore, not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection."—Hebrews 6: 1.

The Law of Inheritance

Are we heirs of the kingdom? To be heirs of anything, certain conditions must prevail.

Let's think of one who inherits a fortune from a parent. Five things must exist before he can be an heir. First, there must be an estate. Unless this estate is in existence there is nothing to talk about. Suppose I had a lot of money and that I was able, out of my own generosity, to give every person here this morning a thousand dollars. I'm sure you'd give me very rapt attention. I wouldn't have to beg for it at all. You'd wonder what I would say next, what the terms of this gift would be.

I recall the first article that I ever had published. The title of it was "Thousand Dollar Diligence." I sent it to the Herald and Brother Elbert Smith wrote accepting it; he also encouraged me to keep writing. The article stressed that we are willing to work for money but soon become tired and discouraged when serving the Lord. May I assure you that a thousand dollars isn't the most important concern you have this morning. It is important. I'm not playing down the good that a thousand dollars could do, but some things are still more important.

Is there an existent state? The kingdom of heaven, or the kingdom of God, is already in existence. We are not commanded to get busy and build the kingdom. It has been built, and I'm thankful for that. In our own wisdom we would not be able to build it, but we are commanded to establish it. Let's build on the foundation. "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Now the second thing is very simple. You do not have an inheritance unless there is a death. Third, you do not have an inheritance unless there is a valid will. Fourth, there must be a decree of the judge or the court executing that will in order for you to get an inheritance. Finally, there must be a qualified recipient. You must prove that you have some claim to this estate; that there is a relationship to the one mentioned in the will.

Sharing an Estate

It's wonderful how many people get interested when it becomes known that somebody has left undivided a large amount of money. People will come from all over the United States and Europe to try to show that they are some relative of this deceased person and because of this physical relationship are entitled to a part of the money. You've noticed that, haven't you? If not, just go to the courthouse when such a case is on the docket and see how many people flock in to prove that they are perhaps a third cousin or some other relative of the deceased person.

That happens in religion, too. There are a great number of organizations trying to prove that they bear some sort of a relationship to Jesus Christ, which places them in line for this inheritance. In America alone we have something like 252 denominations trying to lay claim to the divine inheritance of which we speak. As a result, congregations are in confusion. I'm sure that these people are well intentioned. They think they have a legitimate claim. Maybe they have. It is not my purpose here to judge. If I were to judge, it would have to be upon the basis of what fruit they are bearing.

By Their Fruits

Several years ago I was called upon to perform a marriage ceremony in Roanoke, Illinois. It was in June. Before the noon meal was served, several of us men gathered out under the trees on the lawn. We got to discussing what kind of fruit tree was standing near us. Some thought that because of the bark and leaf it was a pear tree. Others thought it was an apple tree for the same reason. About that time the hostess came around the corner of the building and we settled our dispute, we thought, by asking her. She hadn't lived there very long and said she didn't know what kind of tree it was. But the neighbors told her that last year it bore pears. We thought that settled our argument, but somebody who had his eyes on one of the uppermost branches saw an apple up there. The best of evidence was there; it was an apple tree.

So it is in knowing whether we are heirs of the kingdom, whether our church has claim to a divine relationship. It depends upon the kind of fruit we bear.

There is an estate that is available to the church of Jesus Christ. That estate is eternal life. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life with Jesus Christ our Lord" and that estate is in existence. The gospel itself goes back to Adam. From the morn of creation when sin entered the world, God gave the gospel. It continued on down until men rejected it, and something else came in. Paul refers to it as the Law of Moses, as the schoolmaster, carnal commandments, offerings and sacrifices, a means to an end. Concerning that, we have this statement in the Hebrew letter:

How much more shall the blood of Christ [than these sacrificial offerings unto the Lord] who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the mediator of the new covenant; that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where a covenant is, there must also of necessity be the death of the victim. For a covenant is of force after the victim is dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the victim liveth.—Hebrews 9: 14-17.

So you see we have an estate and we have a death.

His Commandment for Life

What are the terms, then, of the will? They are set down in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The will of God is revealed to us in the fullness of the gospel which is contained in the Bible and the Book of Mormon. It is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Jesus was very explicit that this word was not his. The terms of the will were not his alone, rather they came to us from Almighty God.

Jesus said, "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting; whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12: 49, 50.

I think we have established that the terms of the will are very clear and explicit and that they are given by God who has this legacy to bestow upon us.

Who are the qualified recipients? If we are heirs of the kingdom we must identify ourselves as being of the quality of relationship that comes under the terms of the will. Let me read a verse from the first chapter of the gospel according to John, "In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God."

How do we become the recipients? "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."—John 1: 12. It isn't a closed relationship, not just "me and my son John, his wife, us four, no more." To "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God," "only to them that believe on his name." So we must believe, and we must receive him.

"He was born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

We have established these evidences of our qualifications.

A Legacy from Antiquity

We turn now to the Book of Mormon and read a verse from the sixth chapter of II Nephi:

But, behold, the righteous, the saints of the Holy One of Israel, they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel; they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it; they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world: and their joy shall be full for ever.—Verse 42.

I told you a while ago that we didn't have to build the kingdom. The legacy of the kingdom of God of which we are heirs was established at the foundation of the world. Notice these words: "the righteous" and "they who have believed," and those that "endured the crosses." Doubtless we've all been baptized into Christ's death and burial. If not, the time is ripe, let's not delay it longer, because that is the beginning stage. But does that prove we are heirs of the kingdom? Are we bearing apples, pears, or something else? Let's be sure that we didn't just get inside and think that all we have to do is wait for eternal life. That has been preached, I know, but not by Reorganized Latter Day Saints. It has been preached, "Only believe, give your hand to the minister, and your heart to God, and eternal life is your reward." We preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it doesn't say that. It says we have some crosses to endure. We have some testimonies to bear. We have work to do spreading the gospel, if we're going to inherit anything.

Undiscovered Legacy

I read a story in a book by Will H. Brown that I think has a point for us here. He tells about an old man who was tired of living alone. So, after fighting the battle which every old person who is left alone has to fight, he decided that he would accept his son's invitation and go live with him. Then came the decision of what things he was going to get rid of—the things that had been dear to him, his wife, and his family. He couldn't take them all. He came to an old family Bible that had been willed to him by an aunt in 1874. He had never thought too much of this, but the will read, "To my beloved nephew I bequeath the family Bible and all there is therein, together with all my other property, real and personal, after my debts for my last sickness and burial have been paid." There were just a few dollars left. Thirty-five years had passed and he hadn't opened the Bible. Now he was faced with the question, "Shall I take it along?" He sat there thumbing through the pages; to his great surprise he found in those pages nearly five thousand dollars in bank notes—and he had thought he was in poverty! He hadn't read the word of God enough to find this legacy.

Now maybe some of us just got inside. We're just waiting for something to be dropped into our laps, when a little searching might bring to us some of the values of the kingdom that are all about us.

The Spirit of Adoption

Note again our Scripture lesson, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." How many? It's up to us. If you know you are led by the Spirit of God, you don't doubt it for a moment. There's a feeling of warmth, a happiness, a glow, a satisfaction that nothing else can bring to man. We like the praise of our wife, our children, and our co-workers. It does something for us, makes us feel as if we have a sense of dignity and companionship. When we feel the Spirit of God in our hearts, giving us evidence of his love, we feel dignified and worth while in a new sense.

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption." The Israelites knew a great deal about this bondage from their experience with the Egyptians, the Assyrians, the Medes, and the Persians. They knew what it was to be slaves, but that had passed away in the gospel. We are not in bondage. We have been adopted as children of God, heirs of Christ. The Spirit bears witness with our spirit, we are told. How do we know that we are enjoying this evidence of divine favor? We know it because of the love which comes to us in the gospel of Jesus Christ, because of the fruit we bear.

Let's read what the fruits of the spirit are.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts."—Galatians 5: 22-24.

I said there is something to do after we get in. We must be righteous. We must believe. We must receive of the Spirit of Christ if we are to identify ourselves as valid heirs of the kingdom.

Chaining the Tiger

Brother Elbert Smith tells a story in one of his books that applies to this theme. The captain of a ship heard faintly the tolling of a bell away out in the ocean. It became more distinct as he made his way to find out what it was. Soon he could identify a ship that seemed to be at the mercy of the waves. The bell tolled as the ship rocked back and forth. By means of a telescope the captain saw there was no life on board. When they neared the derelict they could hear the roar of a beast. Members of the crew boarded the ship to see what the situation was. They found a tiger in an inner chamber. They opened the door, saw him roaming around loose, and destroyed him. Then they found the only evidence of men there was—the skeleton of one man. There was a diary lying close. They read the diary and found that the man whose skeleton was there had been a ship's captain. The derelict was a pirate ship. Pirates had taken the captain's ship and left him in this pirate ship. Before leaving, these "devils" concocted this scheme of destroying their evidence. They had a tiger on board and they attached to him a rather flimsy chain, opened his cage, locked the man in the same room as the tiger and got off the ship. As the tiger became more hungry hour by hour the man wrote furiously in his diary what was happening. Finally the tiger broke the chain and killed the man.

We all believe we are good people. But do we know that within each of us there is a tiger? We have the potentiality within us to destroy and be devils and beasts. And this power might be used if it were not for the power of the gospel that chains this beast within us. We don't know whether or not we're going to be faithful to the end. We can feed this beast day by day until he becomes so strong that he will overpower us. It's possible. Most of us may feel that we are safe. We gain control as we grow older and more mature, but we can't be too sure. The power of the gospel gives us strength to keep this beast chained; we must see that we do not weaken this chain.

The Cross or the Crown

"Now the Spirit beareth witness with our spirits." And we find that evidence, but only if we are doing something. We can't steer a boat nor a bicycle that isn't in motion. We have to be moving. Then the Spirit of God will come, bearing witness with our spirits that we are his children; and if we are children then we are joint heirs with Christ, if it so be that we suffer with him.

On one occasion Jesus said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." Not long ago I got a letter from somebody who said that the trouble with the church is it isn't suffering enough persecution. We're having things too easy. It is true that in times of persecutions we did receive some great blessings, but here's the fallacy of that type of reasoning. "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." All men. We want good men to speak well of us, but if we are so versatile and so changeable that all men speak well of us, we're in danger; but we should value the esteem of good people. We don't convert our enemies, we convert our friends. We have to make friends of them first. If they are out talking mean about us, we aren't going to help them very much. That's the fallacy of this idea. If we create persecution, if we say unkind things about other people, we get persecuted; but we also destroy our influence for good. Yes, we must endure crosses, but let's be sure we do it for righteousness' sake, not for foolishness' sake.

We are heirs of the kingdom. We do have the power to chain the beast within us, and we can meet every condition. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

True Charity

I gave a beggar from my little store
Of well earned gold,
He spent the shining ore,
And came again and yet again
Still cold and hungry as before.

I gave a thought, and through that thought of mine
He found himself, the man, supreme, divine.
Fed, clothed, and crowned with blessings manifold,
And now he begs no more.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Don't overlook the power of the gospel to bless mankind. That inspired word of yours may be worth more than a thousand dollars. You have the greatest thing on earth—the thing that brings the most happiness, eternal happiness, right in the legacy of the kingdom of God.

A Redcap Who Cares

By Bessie Tarrington

RALSTON YOUNG, Redcap Number 42, was sorry for a little silver-haired lady who sat in her wheel chair. She was in pain and crying. As they reached Grand Central, Number 42 took off his red cap and whispered to his customer, "Lady, that's a sure-enough pretty hat you're wearing this morning."

In astonishment she looked into the Negro face.

"And your dress, too. It's the prettiest one I've seen today."

A faint smile appeared on the suffering woman's face. "What ever made you say that to me?"

"The good Lord. I asked him how to help you, and the answer came to take a look at your hat. The dress was my own idea."

She smiled as he pushed her chair to the Pullman. "I am ashamed of crying. But I am in pain always. Can you imagine what that is like?"

"Yes, ma'am. I lost an eye. For years it hurt like a hot iron."

"How were you able to endure it?"

"By praying."

"Did praying take the pain away?"

"No, ma'am, but it gave me strength to stand the pain."

A year later, a voice was paging Number 42. The little old lady's daughter said, "Mother has gone to her last rest, but she asked me to find you and tell you that what you said to her last summer made all the difference in the world to her."

Off came the red cap, and he looked into the resentful face of the daughter.

"Don't be bitter, Miss, and don't be ashamed to cry. Jesus wept. Why can't we? Why don't you say a little prayer of thankfulness to the Lord?"

"Why should I be thankful?"

"Because your mother lived to be an old lady, and you had her a long time. There are lots of orphans left when they are young. Besides, your mother's pain is gone now.—That's good, Miss, cry real hard."

Redcap Number 42 is an eager servant of God. His faith in God and his common sense bring comfort to many as he carries their luggage and assists bewildered people in finding their way at Grand Central Station.

What Are Your Intentions?

A personal testimony

By Bishop W. T. Wellman

IN MARCH, 1921, I received a telegram from Mother stating that Father was very ill and that I should come home at once as he was asking for me. My wife and I hurried to his bedside, arriving the following evening. He was so happy to see us that he insisted upon getting up and sitting at the dinner table with us.

Next morning, after a good visit with the family, I remarked to my father that since he was feeling so much better I thought we should return home. I had recently accepted a new job with the Union Pacific Railroad, and I didn't want the company to find out it could run without me. My father replied that he didn't want me to lose my job, and it would be all right if we wished to leave but added that this would be the last time we would ever see him alive. I said, "Dad, don't talk that way. You are feeling and looking much better and are good for another twenty years." "No," he said, "this will be the last time, and I want you to stand beside me that I might offer a prayer in your behalf."

This I reluctantly did as I was not church-minded at the time. I had studied many religions and attended several different churches quite regularly, but as I compared them with the church Christ established, I found them wanting. Questions I asked the dignitaries as to why their churches had no prophets, apostles, and priesthood were brushed off with the remark: "We are now living in the twentieth century and such functions have been done away with." This did not improve my state of mind toward religion.

AS I STOOD beside Father he placed his right hand upon my head and, lifting his left hand he began to pray: "Our Father in Heaven, thou knowest that all my life I have wanted to leave a father's dying blessing upon the heads of my children, even as Jacob of old. Now I present unto thee my eldest son for a blessing." He then exclaimed: "Behold, the Spirit of the Lord is upon me and what I say shall surely come to pass. My son, I am acquainted with your life, your trials and tribulations and those conditions surrounding it which you have been unable to understand; but I am with you and have delivered you in times past and will continue to do so, if you will put your trust in me. Son, you shall become acquainted with the gospel of my church, and if you accept it and study to show yourself approved you shall be called to the priesthood, for you are of the lineage of my Holy Order. I have a work for you to do, therefore you are admonished to be humble and prayerful and to do whatever may be required at your hands with an eye single to my glory. Continue faithful before me, and I will bless you with a multiplicity of blessings and your reward shall be sure."

Father then turned to my wife, still retaining his hand upon my head and continued:

"May, I perceive by the Holy Spirit that you shall become a member of the church of Jesus Christ and you, too, are admonished to be studious, humble, and prayerful and you shall also be of much help and assistance to your husband in his work. Pray always for strength and guidance and remain faithful, and I shall bless you exceedingly in this life and crown you with immortality in the life to come. This is the blessing from the Lord given by your dying father, in Jesus name, Amen."

THIS PRONOUNCEMENT fell like a thunderbolt in our household and we were all greatly surprised. While I was meditating on his statements, my brother-in-law assisted Father to his couch. After lying down a few seconds he addressed me again. "Bill, I want you to be very careful of which church you become a member. Your mother and I have always thought our church was about all right. I have been a trustee in it for more than fifty years. Your mother and I attended it before we were married and heard your grandfather preach, and you were christened in it when only a few weeks old."

After a short pause Father addressed me a second time, saying: "Bill, the Spirit of the Lord is upon me again and these are his words to you. My son, the church of which you shall become a member is mine. I have placed my name upon it, and some day it shall become beautiful and glorious in my sight." Those were the last words my father ever spoke to me in this life. A few moments later we left for Omaha, and a few days later he passed to the life beyond.

Three years went by before I began to read the Book of Mormon. My wife's mother was a life-long member of the Reorganized Church, Does It Make Any Difference Which Church I Attend?

By Harry Whipple

A GREAT MANY PEOPLE hold the opinion that it makes little if any difference which church they are affiliated with as long as they are sincere and attend some services somewhere. Such an opinion is quite misleading; for while most orthodox churches do much good, yet to be truly representative of Christ the church must conform to certain standards. It must be as Christ said it should be, and it must teach the same gospel he taught. It must have certain distinguishing features which set it apart as being of divine origin.

Those features are given in the New Testament, and it is just as essential that they appear in the church of today as it was for them to be in the early church established nineteen hundred years ago. A great many believe in part. Some accept the need for faith, repentance, and baptism. But that is not enough. The first thing a church needs is a foundation.

Jesus, speaking to Peter, said, "Whom say ye that I am?" And Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Then Jesus said to Peter, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church" (Matthew 16: 16-19). The idea as held by some that Peter, the man, was to be the foundation for the church is untenable. For no man, no matter how righteous, could be the foundation of Christ's church. The idea that continuing revelation is essential to the life of the church is most reasonable and in accord with the Scriptures.

The rock of revelation is the foundation, and Jesus Christ is the chief cornerstone. So the first thing we should look for in church organization is a sound foundation. Is it still connected to the true vine, Jesus Christ, through continued revelation? Is Christ speaking to the church and directing it from time to time as he did in days of old?

Another distinguishing feature of a truly representative church is the type of organization. Does it have apostles, prophets, teachers, evangelists, bishops, and other officers mentioned in Ephesians 4: 11-14? Paul said these were placed in the church "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." He also said they were to remain in the church "until we in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the son of God, unto a perfect man. Unto a measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Will any dare affirm that the church is in perfect unity, or that we have reached the stature of Christ? If not, then we still need this same type of organization, as Apostle Paul said we would.

Finally, and perhaps the most convincing evidence that any church is a true representative of Christ will be the gifts of the Spirit manifest in it. These gifts include wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues (I Corinthians 12: 7-20). All these things go to make up the church, which is the body of Christ, and if any part is lacking the body cannot function properly.

The Shattered Remnants

By Marcella Schenck

SOMETIMES we reach the time when we must build upon what seems to us to be shattered remnants of life.

Last year a storm tore down my beautiful elm. Tall and stanch it had stood, a monarch above the neighboring trees, and I had been proud of it. Besides giving me shade and happiness, each year it had sheltered the robins' nest. I liked to think they were the same robins returned to the same home tree. Yet could this be? The tree was tall and beautiful when I moved here a quarter of a century ago and it housed a robin nest then.

I wondered what the robins would do when they returned to their tree. What did they do? Halfway up the ruins of the remaining tree trunk they found a little ledge and there rebuilt a home. Unsheltered from the sun, buffeted by winds, rain, and hail, the birds hatched their young and made the most of what was left.

It is necessary sometimes for us to make the best of life as circumstances leave it. We lay away our loved ones and go on living cheerfully for the sake of others. Sickness mows us down, and God gives us courage to fight back. If we are left handicapped, holding tightly to the hand of our Heavenly Father it is possible to learn that "A handicap is only a handicap when we think of it as such." Misfortunes take material things and we learn to say pleasantly, "Poor folk have poor ways, but thank God they have lots of them." We read the chapters of Job and marvel at his trust; yet we find a bit of courage for ourselves. Having built upon our ruins, we then find that, like Job, we have twice as much as before. Twice as much? At least spiritually we can have twice as much for which to praise and thank our God.

“This Do in Remembrance . . .”

By Stele A. Bryant

WHEN WE READ the Old Testament we might regard many of the rules and regulations found there peculiar compared to our modern day procedures. We must remember that the Law of Moses was given as a code of ethics to an ignorant and backward people.

The Israelites were fresh out of a four hundred year stretch of slavery in the land of Egypt. In all their experience they had known nothing different than to do exactly what they were told. The people Moses led out of Egypt were difficult to control. A great many of them wanted to go back into slavery rather than face an uncertain future.

The Lord compelled them to wander forty years in the wilderness. It was necessary for those who had experienced slavery in Egypt to pass away. A new generation more susceptible to the will of God and divine leadership was necessary to take full advantage of the new freedom.

The history of the nation is one of war, victory, defeat, captivity, liberation, and cultural achievement. The spiritual growth of the nation ebbed and flowed with the physical fortunes and misfortunes of the people.

Under the leadership of the prophets, the Israelites had the opportunity to rise to spiritual greatness. From the time of the exodus from Egypt till the days of Christ the nation certainly had time to prepare for the coming of Jesus.

The Old Testament is filled with prophetic references to Christ. The Jews were well versed in biblical history, but because of their spiritual blindness they did not recognize him for what he was.

There are some who might excuse the Jews for not accepting Jesus as the Son of God by saying he came and established a philosophy contrary to the Jewish religion. Such was not the case. His purpose was to make the word flesh and to show by example how to tie in true religion with everyday life.

Nowhere in the Scriptures do we find Jesus in conflict with the legitimate teachings of the Jews based on the Law of Moses. It is apparent that he observed all the rules that governed the Jews in their religion. Throughout his life, Jesus participated in the everyday religious activities. When the time arrived for the feast of the Passover he and his disciples made preparation for the observance of this ancient Jewish celebration. In the meantime Judas Iscariot had secretly plotted with the chief priests to betray Jesus. It was while Jesus and his apostles were observing the Passover that he predicted his betrayal and death. In order to teach them a lesson in humility he washed their feet. He told Peter that he would deny Jesus three times before the cock would crow. The most important thing to us that Jesus did on this occasion was to institute the Lord's Supper.

He said, "This do in remembrance of me." Jesus referred to the bread as symbolizing his broken body, and the wine as being symbolical of his spilled blood.

The Lord's Supper is deep in religious meaning. It warrants our noblest thoughts and spiritual preparation. It is our reminder of the sacrifice of Jesus, our opportunity to obtain forgiveness and a time to renew our covenant with God.

The next time we have the privilege of partaking of the Lord's Supper let us do so in a true spirit of prayer and gratitude for the sacrifice of Jesus.

The Play of Life - By Robert Miller

SHAKESPEARE WROTE: "All the world's a stage; and all the men and women merely players; they have their exits and their entrances; and man in his time plays many parts, his acts being seven ages." This is, in essence, a true statement.

Unknowingly perhaps, each of us is an actor or actress upon this stage of life. And in the course of our existence, many people witness the part we play.

We might name this drama, "The Panorama of Life," and advertise it as the greatest show ever produced—lasting from the Creation down through eternity with no recess between acts. We could publicize it further by saying it is the most beautiful, inspiring, colorful, dramatic, and also the most sordid and tragic, for it runs the whole gamut of human passions and emotions, with every motivating force which vies for possession of the soul of man. Upon this stage may be witnessed the cause and effect of love, mercy, justice, loyalty, faith, vanity, pride, envy, jealousy, selfishness, lies, greed, ambition, hate, fear, and earthly lusts. It is a continuous show, portraying life at its best exemplified in the Christ down through a million variations of behavior to the most evil personage known—Satan, a former Son of the Morning.

How many of us have thought about this statement by Shakespeare and realized that we are a part of the greatest show on earth? How many of us have realized with Lord Tennyson that "we are a part of all that we have met"? How many of us have paused to consider that each life is a monument to good or evil? And how many of us have wondered how many generations will be affected by the lives we live?

Our day of existence here is our stewardship to God—or Satan; it is also the day of decision for us. We can use it to help build the kingdom—or destroy what others have done.

We write our own part and act it, in this, the greatest show on earth.

Question:

Was the name Japheth (Noah's son) supposed to be of the Aramaic language? Indiana
Mrs. A. U. M.

Answer:

There is no record by which the language used in Noah's day could be compared with the Aramaic of Jesus' day. The account of the flood was written by later historians in their own language, which in most cases was of Semitic origin.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

1. Did Jesus assume his divinity when he "came forth from the tomb" after having made the sacrifice for the sins of men?

2. Do we assume that Jesus, having shed his blood, was, after the resurrection, without blood?

Massachusetts

M. K. R.

Answer:

1. If we take the word "divinity" here to mean his power and glory, we would answer, "Yes"; notwithstanding his glory was veiled to his disciples on the occasion of his several appearances after his resurrection.

Christ never surrendered his divinity. To do so would mean surrendering his personality, his identity, which is impossible. In coming into the world he took on him human flesh and to that extent became a man, assuming the limitations which the flesh imposed. His divinity was largely hidden to men, but his Spirit was still divine, being God and man united in one; this was the significance of the name Emanuel as applied to him, meaning "God with us" (Matthew 1: 23, A.V.; 2: 6, I.V.).

During his life he held his physical nature, which was more or less in conflict with the divine, in subjection, conforming it to the nature of his divine spirit within. In his resurrection he took up his body with its old nature eliminated, redeemed, sanctified, and glorified. In coming to earth he took on man's nature, but in his resurrection his body took on the divine nature, coming to be in the likeness of his Spirit. That was the first fruits of the atonement.

2. People have theorized for centuries on this point without finding any certain conclusion. We recall no Scripture making any positive affirmation on it. One thing is certain—immortality will bring to man an entirely different status from that of mortality, but all the particular changes have not been revealed. They do not matter to us now.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is there any scriptural proof that the gospel is being preached to the souls who are in the prison house at this time—those who did not hear or accept it here upon earth?

Ohio

Mrs. A. A.

Answer:

We know of no categorical statement to that effect, but there are indirect evidences which point quite strongly in that direction. The most recent is Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6, recording a vision seen by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in 1832. In it they saw the people of the terrestrial world, including some spirits kept in prison, "whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them." The implication here is that the gospel is preached to all the people of this realm since Christ opened the way after his resurrection. This appears more certain when we note that these are to have "part in the first resurrection" (D. and C. 85: 28; 45: 10). This first reference speaks of their receiving the gospel there, so it must be preached to them. Without acceptance of the gospel they could not be saved.

Since Christ visited that realm—and it was only a visit—we can only assume that he ushered in a gospel dispensation for that realm, providing for others to become ministrants in perpetuating the gospel ministry there, as it is said that they are ministered unto by those of the celestial realm. In the light of these things we can hardly believe otherwise than that the preaching of the gospel has continued since Christ's visitation, and will continue until he comes to receive these people as his own. God is not partial that he should give opportunity to some and not to all. With a vast stream of earth's inhabitants continually pouring into that realm without any knowledge of the gospel, the work must be perpetuated there to answer the demands of divine justice. Peter said the gospel is preached there, indicating perpetuity.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Please define the word "soul," and its relationship or nonrelationship to the spirit, mind, and body.

Kansas

Mrs. H. E. H.

Answer:

Scripture as well as common usage applies the word "soul" rather loosely, sometimes relating to the spirit of man as something apart from the body, and sometimes to the spirit and body united. When Peter spoke of "the spirits in prison," he was referring to the spirits separated from their bodies; but when Jesus—speaking of his disciples—said, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," he was referring to their spirits indwelling within human bodies. The words in Genesis as to the creation, that "man became a living soul," associates the word with spirit and body united. But in the parable of the foolish rich man the language is "This night thy soul shall be required of thee"; here the word applies to the spirit alone.

The real man is the spirit. The Lord has said, "Man is spirit." In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4 the Lord says, "The spirit and the body is the soul of man," but men do not often observe this distinction, using soul and spirit more or less interchangeably. "Mind" is used more with reference to that phase of the spirit's activity in the body involving thought and reason, and it points to the most intimate relation between spirit and body. The body is said to be the tabernacle of the spirit.

Books

They Stand Tall, by Kenneth Hall. Warner Press, Anderson, Indiana, 1953. 150 pages. Price, $2.

They Stand Tall contains brief but vivid life sketches of fifteen men and women who have helped make history at some time between 1499 and 1949. They were from all conditions of life, poor and rich, black and white, ailing and well. But each had a clear faith, a regard for the dignity of hard work, and a selfless devotion to a chosen cause.

In this group was the laborer who wearied but would not quit; the teacher who valued each personality and so taught each with a sacrificial love; the journalist with the know-how and the fearlessness to expose injustice and dishonesty; the scientist who saw God in science and slaved to make his own discoveries serve mankind effectively. Here, too, is the explorer who risked death for the national welfare; the greathearted social worker whose sympathy still throbs in the hearts of Chicagoans and of many people all over the country; the nurse who did the impossible; the widowed mother who fashioned successful family life out of the materials for failure—and even the President whose constructive laws and far-flung works make a list in the silent records in the government archives that obscures the news headlines about him.

This book is easy to read, all at once or a story at a time. Each life bears its own message, full and inspiring. There is no preaching, only life incidents in bold relief against the ordinary affairs of men, and the author's occasional interpretation.

Yes, these men and women stand tall because they accepted life and its conditions, translated problems into opportunities, and without show or fanfare gave themselves to causes greater than themselves—Christian causes that persist today, crystallizing gains for future generations and stimulating those who follow to go do likewise.

It is significant that nothing is said about the author in a preface or by way of presentation. His own words in the brief introduction, his selection of characters, and the keen insight with which he has selected incidents from book-length biographies all help to indicate his fine appreciation of what constitutes true greatness.

There are words early in the stories to whet the reader's appetite. Note the appeal in a couple of quotes:

"Say, you've given me an idea," the young man replied, "I used to be a Bible missionary down in Virginia, but now I believe I'll be an apple missionary." (Page 1)

What teacher or parent could put this story aside before the end?

Jane saw tumble-down houses overflowing with babies and ragged children playing in muddy yards. "These houses aren't like ours. . . . There's nowhere to play. Why do people live here, Papa?"

"Because they have no money to live in a better place," he replied.

Six-year-old Jane thought this over carefully. "When I'm a grown-up lady, I'm going to live in a great big house, but I don't want it to be near other nice ones. I want to live right next door to poor people, and the children can play in my yard." (Pages 11 and 12)

The readings may serve as personal devotions and meditations. They are especially suited to junior high and high school age boys and girls who are eager to discover what makes people great and are exploring fields open for service in planning their preparation for life work. Adults, already in the midst of their life work and problems, will find encouragement in reviewing these stories.

Stories to Grow By, selected by J. Edward Lantz, Association Press, New York. Price, $2.95.

This volume, a sequel to Best Religious Stories, and Stories of Christian Living, contains thirteen selections. They have been chosen from such varied sources as the American Magazine, the Saturday Evening Post, the Woman's Home Companion, Light and Life Evangel, and the Sunday Digest, and represent the work of many authors.

Geographically their range is far-flung—from towns in the Middle West to Boston, to California, to Canada, and to India.

Each story presents a problem to be solved or a difficult situation to be faced. No two stories are alike, nor are they limited to any one age group or social class. For instance, in one the problem presented is the complex struggle between a high school boy's eagerness to be one of the gang and his genuine love for his mother, as against the fact that this same devoted mother is so different from the other fellows' mothers. The next story deals with the fear of a grown man lest he jeopardize the security of his family by consistently doing what he knows he should do, when he could so easily lower his standards. "Stoner's Gap" shows that the message of Easter can bring resurrection to the heart and life of a young woman whose spirit has been crushed by the death of a loved one in Korea. One of the sweetest in the group is "The Pink Angel"—an account of a family at Christmas time. The hurry and flurry of shopping, the coaching of parts in the various programs, the making of costumes, and "being all things to all men" almost submerges the real spirit of

We're on the Air in Marlin, Texas

Doctrinal programs are being aired over station KMLW at Marlin, Texas. This is a 250-watt station that covers central Texas. The inner circle of the map shows the better listening area, while the outer circle indicates the fringe area. This Restoration message of the church is found at 1010 on the dial from 8:00 to 8:15 every Sunday morning.

The people of the Marlin area support a radio program in addition to paying for a church school and recreational building and new furnishings for the interior of the church. Two missions are sponsored by the priesthood of the Marlin Branch.

This central Texas branch, with a humble beginning in the "brush arbors" of a rural community over fifty years ago, has grown under the leadership of J. R. Allen, who for over thirty years was the pastor. The present branch president is Earl Allen.

Christmas. But unexpectedly yet most assuredly the glory comes, setting bells ringing in the heart, and reminding everyone that the most perfect gift he can give is the priceless gift of a worthy self.

The price of ignorance, the call to serve, the old conflict between a mess of pottage and one's birthright—these and other centuries-old situations are found in modern guise. Each is treated with sympathetic insight, with directness of manner, and with charm so that, as the stories unfold, understanding is deepened and sympathies are broadened. These are "stories to grow by" and should have a place in the extensive field of religious education.

The Priesthood Member and His Family

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is adapted from a talk to priesthood members and wives at the Priesthood Banquet, June 8, 1953, at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, at which Mr. and Mrs. Walter N. Johnston were the principal speakers. Mrs. Johnston's talk appeared in a previous issue of the "Herald."

By Walter N. Johnson

THE PRIESTHOOD FAMILY should be offering some genuine and visible advantages to the children within its circle. If we were asked what we would most like to leave our children, few of us would hesitate very long in answering. We would like to leave them the priceless heritage of character supported by a deep devotion and a growing appreciation of the church. We would like above all else to see our children truly converted to Christ and his good way of life, and we feel that such an inheritance is vastly more significant than worldly wealth and fame. The member of the priesthood and his wife ought to feel that they have a golden opportunity to make religion natural and meaningful to the children in their home. Surely, in the priesthood member's home, religion should have a wholesome and uplifting effect. At the same time, we realize there is no simple way of actually winning our children to the church. Their natures and their needs may be so different from ours that it is always possible we may miss the mark entirely. In our homes, however, there is some appreciation of the church, some knowledge of its purposes and goals, and some shared church experiences which will have a lasting effect for good.

Many of us can testify that our lives were enriched because father or brother was a priesthood member. Let us be concerned about what is happening to our children who are growing up in homes of priesthood members today. I am sure that none of us know all the answers to the problems raised, but I feel reasonably sure that some of the secret of success in this task of really converting our children lies in the art of making religion natural and wholesome. Our own religion, despite all our shortcomings, must be genuine and sincere, so that its effect in our lives will eventually commend itself to those who are nearest to us in the home. I am calling your attention to a tribute paid to her father by the columnist Dorothy Thompson.

I think very often, these days, of my own childhood in an upstate New York Methodist parsonage. According to the standards of today, it was a childhood extremely limited, and even impoverished. I am sure, for instance, that the food that we had to eat was deficient in the properties which are recognized today as essential for a "minimum standard" of nourishment for relief cases. A green vegetable in winter was unknown, and an orange was a Christmas treat. We shuddered through the winters with continual drippy colds, sheltered in stove-heated houses, or houses warmed by hot-air furnaces that concentrated the warmth in the lower floors and left the bedrooms icy. And the preacher's children suffered many a school humiliation from having to wear unbecoming clothes, cut down from their elders, or handed down by a distant cousin.

Yet my own childhood was bathed in warmth and light, which was nothing but the irradiation of a beautiful personality, a man whose whole being was warmth and light: my father. His intimate belief in the goodness and justice of God, his unconquerable faith in the inherent decency of men, made him a creature radiating cheerfulness, even gaiety, turning every misfortune into a challenge or an only half-rueful joke; or, if it were a real misfortune, like the death of my mother, accepting it with a sweetness that was eternally impressive. And when he died, hundreds of people came to his funeral, not because he was "successful" and a celebrity—he never was—but because they loved him. His was the liberal spirit. Liberal, in the sense that we use the word when we speak of "liberal arts." Humane, rooted in humanity, caring for human beings, not as producers, or consumers, or workers, or employers—but as human souls.—Ladies Home Journal, March, 1938.

If some youngster of yours in years to come were to pay you such a wonderful tribute, would you not feel that life had been very worthwhile? Such a tribute might well be within the reach of most of us if we are willing to live up to our best capacity in the priesthood office to which we have been called.

I MUST CONFESS I do not know how best to make religion natural and wholesome in the home. That which is a natural expression of religion for one generation becomes stilted or meaningless for the next, and genuine religion is such an inward experience that it is never easy to convey its real feeling to the next generation. The outward forms can be learned, and perhaps used over long periods from force of habit, but somewhere along the line there must come those heart-warming experiences and moments of insight which write an authoritative scripture in our own hearts and lives and make our faith truly our own original and individual possession. Such spiritual qualities as honesty, sincerity, and kindness must be found in the life of the priesthood member. The absence of such spiritual qualities cannot be hidden from the family, and it is poor recompense to be regarded as a good minister by those who do not really know you, and fail to hold the love and respect of the family. This has happened in some priesthood families, and it is always a tragic situation.

Some high standards must be set for the home of the priesthood member, and all of us will have our difficulties at this point. Such standards ought to be based on sane moral considerations, and not primarily on the basis of what others do or do not do. Standards which are set for the sake of effect, or in an effort to appear religious or pious are not worthy of our church, and we can be sure that children and adolescents are always going to react against restrictions placed upon them for effect. Most normal youngsters will resent being told they cannot do this or that because the other branch members will not like it.

They will usually resent being told that they "should set an example," because they belong to the church or because father is a priesthood member. This business of "setting an example" never appealed to me when I was growing up; in fact, I revolted against it. How many of you folks will confess that you enjoyed "setting an example" to your friends and playmates as you were growing up? My complaint against such an approach is that it serves to protect father's dignity and ego (and it certainly needs protection at times!) and leaves out of the equation the fundamental issue of the best interests of our children.

OUR CHILDREN are little individuals. They ought to stand on their own feet and be protected in so far as possible in their personal likes and dislikes. If we want our children to love the church, we will hesitate to put them in the unnatural position of "setting an example." We shall need to be careful about overemphasizing the things that should not be done because we are members of the church or father is a minister. I feel sure there is some way in which the joys and blessings and opportunities of the church can be made tremendously more important than any restrictions which the church suggests, and these blessings and opportunities rightly and gratefully used can help our families to love and appreciate the church.

It should be clearly understood that I have nothing against any of us or our children being an example to the world around us. I am only warning you against this well-worn practice of admonishing your children to "set an example" for others to follow. At its worst, it is downright dishonest; and at its best, such procedure ignores the fact that we demonstrate lives worthy of emulation when the motivation comes from within and not when we are "pious" or "good" for the effect we are trying to make on others. I am making a plea for all of us to search deep within our own lives for those experiences which have held us to the church, and with constantly increasing understanding of what constitutes good religious experiences at every age to strive to make our faith attractive to our young people. We need to provide opportunities for their development in things spiritual until they are grounded strongly in the faith of their fathers.

THE PRIESTHOOD MEMBER, because of his responsibility in the branch, is sometimes faced with the delicate question of how much pressure should be placed on family members to attend church or participate in branch activities. This is a simple matter when children are small, and these are the days when regular church attendance should become habitual. Most children love to go to church when their parents attend regularly and with genuine enjoyment. I am grateful that my parents attended church faithfully when I was young. They had no qualms about imposing their will on me when occasionally I staged a minor rebellion on this matter of church attendance. They did this kindly but firmly and to such good effect that when I grew up, I was always uncomfortable unless I attended church on Sunday. As a child I did not resent being overruled; it was taken for granted that my parents took me to church for my spiritual welfare with the same loving concern for me with which they prescribed castor oil for my physical health. If necessary, I shall follow their example and impose my will in this matter on my children for several more years. Meanwhile, I am forever grateful to church school and vacation church school workers who have made the church so interesting to our children that it is seldom necessary to persuade them to attend church.

The problem becomes greater as children grow into adolescence. We must expect our children at certain stages of development to challenge a great many things we usually take for granted in the church. We should want them to raise questions, to sift and explore the church beliefs as they are growing up. I think priesthood members can be very helpful during these periods if they do not become dogmatic, but do their best to answer all questions as honestly and helpfully as possible, attempting to understand the youthful viewpoint. It is during these formative questioning years that our good testimony can be helpful and faith-inspiring. During these periods we must do our best to encourage church attendance and participation, because God can more readily speak to the hearts of those who attend church and associate with church members. We realize there are no simple or easy ways by which to bring our young people to complete allegiance to the cause of the kingdom, but certainly children of priesthood members are entitled to a background of good church experiences over their early years, and this combined with a wholesome family life will help in periods of crisis in their lives.

AS I LOOK BACK on my boyhood in an attempt to evaluate my earliest experiences with the church and its priesthood, I realize that the normal pattern of our family life was changed profoundly for the better by the coming of missionary priesthood into our community. As a youngster I saw lives changed in a rather dramatic way through the power of the restored gospel. My father was ordained to the priesthood, and as I grew up I argued with

Are Alcoholics Sick People?

By Edward J. McGoldrick, Jr.

Department of Welfare, New York City

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of words have been written about the alcoholic as an individual and about the destructiveness of his habit. Books, treatises, magazine and newspaper articles have explored the extent of drunkenness, its causes, its effects, its remedies. Their one achievement has been to give us an awareness of alcoholism as one of our most pressing social problems, one which urgently needs solution. But most of the literature on the subject is so involved and so self-contradictory, so bereft of established fact and positive program, as to leave the reader who has plowed through it feeling, "So what?" Still the deluge of words continues, leading those interested in the problem to rush in out of the storm and remain content with their preconceived notions rather than buffet the tidal waves of meaningless phrases, suspended judgments, and misinformation so glibly offered.

And, as though this were not enough, the public has now been asked to swallow, on an already overstuffed stomach, the idea that the alcoholic suffers from a disease—that he is a sick person. This is the theme pounded at us in advertisements in press, radio, and magazines. This is the most pernicious of all dogma on alcoholism. For now the alcoholic need no longer rely on the obviously silly and childish reasons he usually offers to justify his drinking. He can say, with prominent persons backing him, "I can't help it. I'm sick." The result is more drinking, more alcoholics.

Much of this dangerous approach, though misguided, is sincere. But let us leave it for a moment and see if we cannot find another approach, one which will enable us effectively to help the alcoholic by focusing the problem on its real center—the alcoholic himself. For—and make no mistake about this—unless the drinker is revealed to himself and is given a definite, positive procedure with which he can help himself, there is no cure!

LET'S START with the fact which was long obvious and which has only lately been obscured by the "experts." The alcoholic is not a sick person. To think that he suffers a disease of some sort is actually to place a great stumbling block in the path of his recovery. In dealing with thousands of alcoholics and their families, I have found that those who could help the problem drinker are left needlessly bewildered, confused, and hopeless before the statement, "Don't blame me; I'm suffering from a disease."

In truth, they know he is not sick, and they know that he does not really believe he is sick. Furthermore, they soon learn that the alcoholic who once finds this excuse successful will wear it as a badge and will flaunt it as a special pass which permits him to crash through ordinary social responsibilities and which gives him complete freedom to plunge into a spree.

THOSE WHO SPEAK of alcoholism as a disease are aware that they do not use the word in its ordinary medical sense. They know that when the alcoholic is not drinking, in his sober intervals, no one would ever take him for a mentally unbalanced or "off-base" person. He is, when sober, usually an industrious, conscientious person and an able worker. His conversation is normal, often bright, always coherent, and he has mastered not merely his own routine and duties but is fully aware of what goes on around him. He dresses well; he is congenial, and he is usually a personable and well-liked fellow.

No one would suggest when he is sober that he needs a doctor, a pill, or a hospital.

He has no fever. He eats well and sleeps well. Examine his blood, urine, sputum, under a microscope, and you will find no disease germs, no indication of a virus. But suddenly he drinks. And, according to the new "experts," he thereby becomes a "sick" person. It is true that prolonged drinking will make him really sick; he will not eat normally and will suffer from any of a number of dietary deficiency diseases. But these can be cured by supplementing his diet—the alcoholism cannot. The fact is that overindulgence in any food or drink will make one "sick." Eat a crate of bananas, and your stomach will not behave normally.

IT IS NOT RIDICULOUS or an exaggeration to say that it won't be long before it is suggested that clinics be established for adulterers, gamblers, thieves, and for those who habitually throw their clothes on the floor before retiring. The next thing you know, it will be suggested that alcoholism be a reportable disease! If the doctors have trouble now with this will-o'-the-wisp called the alcoholic, one can imagine their dilemma when such a law is on the books. What a strange sickness! What a peculiar disease that is remedied and cured in so great a proportion by laymen, and in so small a proportion by the medical profession!

Those who call the alcoholic sick are guilty of character isolationism—setting apart such a drinker from the rest of mankind, considering him a particular species unrelated to the habits manifested by others. Alcoholics, it is true, seek to escape from reality when life for them becomes a bit too difficult. So do millions of other people. These other people can develop bad tempers, ulcers, high blood pressure, and become neurotics or just plain unpleasant people. These latter reactions to the tyranny of thoughts are less notorious in their incidence than the drinking of the alcoholic—perhaps considered more respectable, but hardly less destructive.

THERE IS REALLY no such human being as the alcoholic who is compelled to drink. As Dr. Brian Bird, a psychiatrist, so aptly states, "You and I react to life's difficulties in our own peculiar ways; the alcoholic reacts in his way, and it is not at all certain that the way of the alcoholic is worse or more destructive than many of the ways the rest of us are forced to use."

The premise that the alcoholic is sick not only operates to his detriment, but contains within itself a profound fallacy, more far-reaching in its scope than its mere application to the alcoholic. It represents a basic materialism of thought which actually deprives one of all responsibility for one's life and conduct, and of the very basis for self-respect. It is a philosophy of life, unfortunately all too prevalent today, which appears innocuous enough to the unthinking; but because of this very fact it is dangerously subversive, intellectually, emotionally, and spiritually.

Why? Consider this. Those who claim sickness is the cause of alcoholism are constrained to accept the corollary that the drinking of the alcoholic is beyond his personal control, that it is not a question of morality in any degree, and that will power has nothing at all to do with overindulgence in alcohol. It is time, I think, for all of us in this field, and in every field, to be alert against such doctrines and to debunk such ideological claptrap.

Whenever possible we must protect ourselves and our fellow men from the character negations of materialism and specifically avoid the continuous waste of taxpayers' money on ill-advised schemes to house, hospitalize, and "clinicize" the alcoholic in the pursuit of doctrines that only make the drinker's confusion worse confounded.

DRINKING DEFINITELY involves moral issues and an exercise of will power. And will power must be applied in an enlightened fashion. Man is a walking trinity of spirit, mind, and body. To disregard moral questions is necessarily to preclude a consideration of man's spiritual source, make-up, and ultimate accountability. It is like attempting to operate a three-cylinder engine on two cylinders. The purpose and function of the machine are fully realized only when all three cylinders are used. Though the engine could operate on two, eventually it would break down. So, too, with man. He can operate while employing only his mental and physical capacities, but inevitably, because it is contrary to his inherent nature, he must fail when he ignores the spiritual within him.

The alcoholic drinks as he does because he thinks as he does. Change his thinking and you eliminate his drinking. Change of environment, clinics, hospitals, sanatoria, jails, jobs, money, love of loved ones, will not cure his drinking any more than a pill, medication, or "shotgun" therapy.

WHAT THE ALCOHOLIC needs is, first of all, a sincerity of purpose. When he then really desires to change what he recognizes as an improper course of conduct, he can only be helped by a technique which gives him specific mental and emotional tools which he can use in a prescribed step-by-step fashion.

There must be a daily sequence prescribed for him which is definitely aimed at explaining to him the power of thought, its function, its purpose, and how he can practically apply his knowledge to alter his mental attitude.

All of this must have for its goal the recognition by the drinker that he is not a sick person or suffering from a disease, but that he is a victim of a habit, self-inflicted, as a result of a wrong way of thinking. He must understand also that this therapeutic technique, though initially applied to breaking the habit of drinking, is not the goal itself, but merely a means to an end. He must be taught that the technique he employs to establish himself on the road to permanent sobriety is the same technique he is to employ in every aspect of his life, for his joys, and for his sorrows. This is the basic aim of the Mc-Goldrick Method. It is the reason for the success of Bridge House.

Unless a clinic, hospital, shelter, or any other facility has its own similarly developed technique, it is not worthy of the name.

Facilities offering only physical therapy, custodial care, and a referral service, do not justify spending public funds to support them.

Let's stop the gobbledegook of these politically minded social welfare schemes and white-elephant plans of local interest which grab newspaper headlines but don't "get to" the alcoholic. Let's realize that no man can ride into the kingdom of heaven as a result of an injection, a pill, shelters, health farms, spending of millions, or crying to the heavens to open the gate in mercy because he is sick. Life is not that way. Man carries his own heaven or hell with him. Alcoholics can be helped. They need information, not merely reformation.

A Message from Track Champions

"Modern youth will never become great if they dissipate their energies by drinking or smoking. Regular hours, too, is the key to success in healthful living."

DON LAZ, Pole Vaulter

An all-round athlete, Don Laz early distinguished himself in football, basketball, and track. But seventeen years in pole vaulting have made him a champion in this sport many times over. While in college he set forty records, and holds the National Collegiate record, the world Indoor Collegiate Record (15 feet 1 inch), the Big Ten Conference records both indoor and outdoor, the world's indoor dirt-track record (14 feet 10 inches), and the NCAA record (14 feet 9¾ inches). Don's performances are threatening the crown now worn by Olympic Champion Bob Richards.

"It is my personal feeling that drinking and smoking have no place whatsoever in athletics.

"I could never have achieved my performance in the 100- and 220-yard dashes if I had indulged in these harmful practices.

"I suggest that modern youth use their spare time wisely by competing in athletics, or by participating in some good hobby such as music."

DAVE MATTHEWS, Sprinter

Making a specialty of the 100- and 220-yard dashes, Dave Matthews was never defeated in high school competition. He is now carrying his winning ways into meets in various parts of the nation. Last year he ran and won the 880-yard championship relay of America.

"I sincerely believe that total abstinence from alcohol and tobacco is essential to make a good showing in the field of athletics."

ART BRAGG, Runner

Hailing from Morgan State College, Art Bragg was a winning member of the American Olympic team at Helsinki in 1952. In January, 1953, he won the 70-, 80-, and 100-yard dashes at the internationally known "Evening Star" Games in Washington, D.C. "He simply outran all others in his field, and swept away all competitors."

him, as most boys do at times, challenging his scriptural interpretations, but one thing could not be disputed—the gospel had changed his life for good in a marvelous way. His teaching and preaching I have largely forgotten, but the influence of his changed life is still with me. I have forgotten his sermons on tithing, but I remember vividly that he gave generously of his meager means to the church and did it with gratitude that he had something to give.

Perhaps there is something here of value for all of us. Is it not likely that the actual testimony of what the gospel really means to us as reflected in daily living in our homes will be the most significant impression concerning the church which we shall leave with our children? If our lives show forth the real values of the gospel, surely we shall be doing our part in winning and holding our families to the cause of the kingdom of God. With all our many responsibilities, let us not forget to minister to our own families. In doing this, we shall in turn be strengthened by their support in our ministry to others, and shall find increased capacity to help others along the way. If perchance we fail to win and hold our own, if their full commitment to Christ and his way of life is long delayed, let us still go forward, assured that God can use even those experiences we count as failures to bring about his purposes.

In closing, we pay tribute to our good wives who have upheld our hands in this priesthood work. Such achievements as have been made in priesthood ministry here and elsewhere would not have been possible without the devoted women who have given support, counsel, and encouragement along the way. May the blessings of God be upon every priesthood family partnership in which the divine call to minister has been accepted and is being magnified.

Ozark Reunion

RACINE, MISSOURI.—Ten new members were baptized on the campgrounds at the reunion of the Ozarks on July 25. A family from Columbus, Kansas, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beauchamp, and twin daughters, Becky Mae and Eva Kay, were baptized by Elder J. H. E. Summers. Brother Howard Hays baptized Raymond Caswell and David Warnburg from Miami, Oklahoma. Elder James C. Daugherty baptized William Winn from Blanket, Texas, and Jack Little, from Springfield, Missouri. Brother Albert Troyer, of Independence, Missouri, baptized his two sons, David Irwin and Ronald Eugene.

The reunion was held at the church campgrounds near Racine, Missouri, July 18-26. More than 480 campers from Spring River and Rich Hill Districts and guests from other districts were on the grounds during the week. About 600 attended the evening services. There were about 120 tents on the grounds, and six trailers.

Guest ministers were Apostle Charles R. Hield, and Elders Henry Castings, Charles D. Neff, James Daugherty, and W. E. Williams. Elder Stephen A. Black, president of Spring River District, was assisted by Elder Arthur Dennis, president of Rich Hill District. Elder Don Guinee and Mrs. Charles Neff were in charge of music. Elder B. F. Kyser was teacher of the stewardship class. Elders Francis Bishop and Arthur Dennis had charge of administrations to the sick. Elder Williams was in charge of the campfire each evening after services, and also the morning devotionals at seven. Mrs. C. C. Martin was camp nurse. Mr. and Mrs. Mark Mink had charge of the tents. F. A. Stafford was official bell ringer. Curtis Pearson and his sister, Nelletha Pulley, arranged the decoration of the pavilion. Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Kyser, Jr., were reunion book stewards. Harold VanSickle had charge of the reunion bulletins.

Lela Parkhurst was in charge of the Junior League. She was assisted by Warren Eldred and Lea Black. Barbara Bayless directed the music. The pianist was Hazel Rook. The average attendance was 57, and the highest attendance was 61.

Story hour was held each evening. Supervisors were Doddie Williams, junior; Jappie Roberson, primary; and Dorothy Shepherd, kindergarten.

Melba Morehead was children's supervisor. Classes for the 167 children enrolled were held each morning from 9 to 12. Those who had charge of the juniors were Maxine and Leroy Beckham, Ruby Wellington, Maggie DeWitt, Kaye Shakespeare, Helen Bruns, Irma Clayton, Kathryn Elefson, and Louise Knittle. Primaries were taught by Mary Guinee, Junior Murphy, Marjorie Gilbert, Anna Plumb, Marie Gamet, Wilma Foraker, Mary Holstine, Vera Karlstrom, Marian Bishop, Mabel Parker, Rowena Cook, and Michelle Black. The kindergarten was in charge of Lois Shipley, Myron Cadwell, Dorothy Shepherd, Bertha Rogers, Helen Yager, Helen Adams, Charlie Yeoman, Mary Frances Troyer, Beryl Morehead, Ireta Knittle, and Betty Roberson. Glenda Kirk, Shirley Adams, Jerry Blizzard and Donna Faye Caswell had charge of the playground. The nursery was in charge of Dorothy Troyer, Dean Edwards, Laura Willard, Karen Sue Williams, and Elna Spencer. About thirty children were cared for in the nursery, averaging about sixteen each day.

Bill Bayless had charge of recreation each afternoon. Several softball teams were organized. Badminton courts, volleyball, horseshoes, and croquet were also available. There was swimming at Redding's Mill.

Meals were prepared and served at the lodge by the women's department, headed by Mrs. T. W. Bath, assisted by Mrs. Melvin Ingram. Cooks were Mrs. Goldie Davidson and Mrs. Opal Dibble.

Two special meetings for women were held. The Carthage and Joplin women presented "Portraits of the Restoration," with Betty Goet-

UNTO ALL MEN

25 Striking New Sermons

BY EVAN FRY

A minister's responsibility to his Master and to his fellow men is to preach the Word, for "the voice of the Lord is unto all men." It would be too much to expect this little volume would present all of the gospel message to this age, but that part which these pages contain are full of gospel truth. This book deals with vital subjects in a clear and convincing manner.

New Officers Elected

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting which was held August 31: branch president, Morris Taunton; counselors, Alma Dungan, J. C. Dungan, and Arthur Sullivan; church school director, J. C. Dungan; secretary, Marie Taunton; director of women's department, Ellen Dungan; Zion's League leader, W. D. McLellan. The following were appointed: recorder, Ellen Dungan; music director, Flora (Billie) Mead; and book steward, Clarice Dungan.

There have been twenty baptisms in the past year and another baptismal service has been planned for September 20.

A teachers training class was directed by Alma Dungan, using the text, Ways of Teaching by Karen Andersen. There was a good response.

The choir, directed by Sister Mead, has assisted in making the services more worshipful.—Reported by MORRIS TAUNTON

Election Held

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting was held September 3, with District President James Phillips in charge, assisted by Missionary S. Lee Pfohl and Pastor John R. Cox.

Officers elected to serve during the coming year are as follows: Elder Sidney Price, pastor; Brothers Cox and Ellis Monroe, counselors; Sister Coral Cox, secretary and women's leader; Brothers Monroe, Edward Reel, and Hugh Smith, building committee; Brother Cox, book steward; Brothers Price, Smith, and Cox, auditors; Edward Cotton, bishop's agent; Ira Blosser, custodian; Sister Barbara Smith, music director; Nancy Turner, reporter; Dorothy Leverette, librarian; and Hugh Smith, church school director.

The women's department meets twice each month for study and a social. They sponsor a potluck supper the last Thursday of each month. They have donated $364.56 to the building fund this year.

Hugh David, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Smith, was blessed on August 30 by Elder Pfohl, assisted by Elders Price and Cox.

Elder Pfohl preached at the church on August 30 and September 6. He has been visiting the Saints in their homes, and showing slides to nonmembers in the homes of Saints.—Reported by NANCY TURNER

Baptisms in Zion

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—There are sixteen congregations and two missions in Center Stake, and all of them are engaged in one way or another in a building program. Five of them now have construction projects under way, seven are gathering funds and perfecting plans to start building, and the other six are paying off debts contracted for present structures. Three of the latter six still have considerable building to do after their present debts have been paid. Estimated costs for these presently planned projects total over a million dollars.

A school of instruction for women's work was held on September 3 at Stone Church. Those in charge included Mrs. W. Wallace Smith, stake leader, C. V. Graham, stake president, and Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Elder Eugene Theys.

The annual Labor Day week-end retreat was held at Lake Doniphan September 5-7. Over 300 young people between the ages of fourteen and twenty-five attended.

During the month of July, seventy-four additional tithing statement filers were added to the list of stewards in Center Stake.

Approximately 200 Skylark girls attended the annual Skylark Day Camp held August 24, 26, and 28 at the Campus.

The Young Adults held a one-day rally at Camp Santosage, near Atherton, Missouri, on September 6.

As of July 31, the stake membership has contributed $1,700 toward the sanitation project at Lake Doniphan.

IN THE BLUE RIDGE CONGREGATION eight persons were baptized at the West College Church on July 26. They were John Frederick and Paula Geraldine Green, Arthur C. Ranes, Robert L. and Dorothy Helen Prewitt, Paul E. Vaughn, and Val LeClair and Joyce L. Wilson. Those who officiated at the baptisms were Robert M. Seeley, William Webb, R. E. Resch, and Eugene Theys.

IN THE EDEN HEIGHTS CONGREGATION, the branch held a business meeting on July 26, at which plans were approved for an extensive addition to the present church.

Deloris Jean Harding was baptized July 26 by Elder David Hurshman, and confirmed by Brother Hurshman and Pastor Donald Pypier.

Babies blessed recently include Teresa Lee Powell, Glenda Joy Heater, Steven Albert Heater, Lawrence Ray Heater, and Lenora Sue Keehler. Elders officiating were Donald Pypier, Elmer Morgan, J. H. Robinson, Sam Chapman, Elmer Sloan, and Ammon Badder.

AT SECOND CHURCH a rally to raise funds for the building program was held on July 20. A total of $2,505 in cash was raised, with $1,150 pledged. Within twenty days after this, another $2,500 was donated.

Carla Jeanne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Delmont of Chicago, received her blessing under the hands of Elders Arthur Collins and Archie Davis on Sunday, August 16. Mrs. Delmont was formerly Berniece Wisemore of Independence.

The young adults met Sunday, July 26, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Shakespeare, to discuss their course of study for the coming year. They chose to study "The Church and the Home."

IN THE SLOVER PARK AREA, the following have become members of the church since June 1: Nora Allene Ingalls, Pat Benedict, Janice Lee and Lawrence Harrington, Jr., Jerry Lee Howard, Karen Rae Gaither, William George Goddard, Mrs. Lena Standard, Milo Paul, Mrs. Dolores Beebe, Rebecca Lynn Rickel, and William Willard.

Aurilee, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Roberts, was blessed August 16 by Pastor Marion Talcott and Elder Griffith Goddard.

AT SOUTH CRYSLER, the Cub Scouts sponsored an ice-cream social on the church lawn July 24. They cleared about eighty dollars.

On July 22 the young adults held their election of officers. Richard and Ione Campbell are the leaders for the coming year.—From the September Centerstake News.

Group Organized

WINTERSET, IOWA.—On the evening of September 3, at eight o'clock, a business meeting was called in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church located on East Buchanan Street in Winterset, for the purpose of organizing a group of people in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

This church had been leased to the group for meetings, but several new families have moved to Winterset and it seemed feasible to effect a new opening. District President Ralph Wicker, accompanied by Bishop Stephen Robinson, and Elder Herbert M. Scott, pastor of the Des Moines Branch, attended the business meeting. Brother Wicker presided over the meeting, which opened with a hymn and a prayer offered by Brother Walter Hughes.

Elder Asa E. Smith of Winterset was appointed pastor by the district president. Brother David Weems and Brother Keith Bell were selected to be counselors to the new pastor. Brother Smith has served as pastor in the Perry, Iowa, Branch the past several years, driving several miles each Sunday to minister to

The junior church school presented a short Easter program at the preworship service of the church school on Easter Sunday, April 5.

The annual church school birthday party for everyone was held Friday evening, April 10, in the annex auditorium. The play, "Remember Cumorah," was presented under the direction of Wilda Grace, drama director.

Sunday, April 19, was observed as Independence Sanitarium and Hospital Day. Elder R. L. Booker presented the sermon. A special offering was received.

During the month of May a Sunday night series of informative forum discussions entitled "This We Believe" was held to instruct concerning the doctrinal beliefs of the church.

The regular meeting of the women's department was a mother-daughter banquet on Thursday evening, May 7. Approximately 100 were in attendance.

Anna McCall was appointed to complete the term of office of Jeanne Hough, music director. Jeanne moved to Missouri in June, accompanying her husband, Elder A. Wayne Hough, who was recently placed under General Church appointment.

The Sunday evening service, May 24, was a special Scout service under the direction of the Scout committee. The presentation of Troop Number Twelve charter was made. Auditorium Fund Day was observed at the eleven o'clock service, with Elder Brewton Greene, district bishop's agent, speaker.

Gomer Miller was ordained to the office of priest at the Sunday evening service, May 31, under the hands of Elders Pray and Hough.

Vacation church school was held June 8-15 under the leadership of Julia Wilson, director of the children's division. The closing exercises were held Monday evening, June 15, at which time certificates were presented to those attending the school.

On Children's Day, June 14, the children's division presented a pageant. A service of baptism was held at the eleven o'clock service, at which time Mary Jane Mader, Charles Peavy, Robert Thistlewaite, and Charles Young were baptized by Brother A. V. Peavy. The confirmation service was held that evening, with Elders Pray, Booker, Hough, and Greene officiating.

The annual Gulf States Reunion was held at Brewton, Alabama, June 20-28. General Church personnel attending were President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Percy Farrow, and Elders J. H. Yager, Allen Breckenridge, Lee Oliver, and J. A. Pray. Mrs. Helen Skinner was guest women's leader. Evangelist A. D. McCall represented the patriarchal office of the church.

Elder Edward Barlow, pastor of Bay Minette Branch, was guest minister on July 26.

A church school officer's and teacher's meeting was held on July 28, under the direction of Jarvis Grace. Plans were made for the leadership training course to be given in September.

The Men's Club sponsored and prepared a fish supper on the church lawn Saturday evening, August 8.

The branch business meeting for the annual election of officers was held at the evening service August 9. The following officers were elected: J. A. Pray, pastor; R. L. Booker, counselor to pastor; Edna Miller, church school director; Julia Wilson, assistant director and book steward; Alma Peavy, adult supervisor; LeMoyne Scott, young people's leader; Sue Mader, children's supervisor; Bertha Barlow, women's leader; Louis Starr, treasurer; Laura Vickrey, secretary; Clifford Decker, junior church pastor; Jean Peavy, director of music; Delma Wilson, custodian deacon; Ardieth Vickrey, Herald reporter and historian; Jack Vickrey, recorder; Brewton Greene, bishop's agent; R. L. Booker, Brewton Greene, Louis Starr, Edna Miller, and J. C. Barlow, Sr., finance committee; R. L. Booker, Louis Starr and J. A. Pray, solicitors; Stella Tillman and Rogene Locke, decorating committee; T. C. Salter and Richard Miller, auditors; and Brewton Greene, Jr., Paul Mader, Willie Day, Ed Stanton, and T. C. Salter, building and maintenance committee.

Guest ministers for the month of August have been Bishop J. E. Baldwin of Kansas City Stake, and Elders F. E. Steiner of Rome, Georgia, and A. N. Barnes of Escatawpa, Mississippi.—Reported by ARDIETH VICKREY

Two Ordained

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS.—Elder James Renfroe, president and missionary of the Arkansas-Louisiana District, recently finished a two weeks' series of meetings. Great interest was shown among both members and nonmembers.

A baptismal service was conducted on September 6. Mrs. Hilton Johnson and her two daughters, Ann and June, were baptized. A confirmation service followed at the ten o'clock hour.

Gillen Emde, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Emde, and Jack Willis, son of Mrs. Laura Willis, have been ordained to the office of priest.

At the branch business meeting, the following officers were elected for the coming year: Dale Edwards, pastor; Mrs. Laura Willis, secretary and recorder; Curtis Edwards, treasurer; Gillen Emde, church school director; Mildred Simerley, assistant director; Mrs. Tina Edwards, young people's director, and Mrs. Lucille Boss, women's director.—Reported by NORMA EDWARDS

News of Youth Camps

LEXINGTON, MICHIGAN.—The youth camps of the Detroit International Stake and the Flint-Port Huron District were successful and well attended. Camp Michuron was held July 5-12, and was for boys and girls from fifteen to eighteen years. This was the camp's third year. There was a registration of seventy-three campers, and a staff of twenty. This was the maximum number the camp could handle. Robert Flanders was the director.

It was the first season for Camp Manitou, a camp for boys from twelve to fourteen years. It was held July 12-19, and had a registration of forty-one campers and a staff of thirteen members.

Camp Ne-Naw-Bo-Zhoo was also a first season camp. It was held August 23-30, and was for girls between the ages of twelve and fourteen. There were twenty-six girls registered, with a staff of sixteen workers.

The junior high camps were both directed by John Rogers of Port Hope, Michigan. The camps were given Indian names which were associated with the area in the past.

The Zion's League retreat for the Detroit International Stake and the Flint-Port Huron District was held at the Blue Water reunion grounds from September 4 to 7. About 300 young people attended.—Reported by W. BLAIR MCCLAIN

Chooses Conference Delegates

BILLINGS, MONTANA.—The annual spring district conference was held at Deer Lodge February 14-15. On Saturday evening, Elder Houston Hobart was master of ceremonies at a dinner for the priesthood and their wives. There were twenty-five in attendance. Elder Harvey Eliason, district president, wired best wishes from Independence, where he was attending the Professional and Businessmen's Institute.

A good representation from each branch attended classes on Sunday morning. Elder Luther Troyer spoke at the eleven o'clock service. A basket dinner was enjoyed in the new recreation building that the Deer Lodge Saints have just completed.

A prayer and testimony meeting adjourned the conference in the afternoon.

On March 22 a regional meeting was held at Bozeman for the Saints in the eastern part of the district. Elder Troyer conducted the meetings for this one-day get-together. Many isolated Saints attended. There were classes and preaching in the morning, and a basket dinner at noon. A dedication service a 2 P.M. concluded this meeting.

The young people gathered for their annual week together at Camp Monyoka near Elliston on June 14-21. Ruth Beck, young people's leader, and Elders Hobart and Eliason made the plans and preparations for this week of camp. About sixty attended. Dr. Roy Cheville taught the religious class and presided at the evening campfires. Brother Delmar Jones and wife, Marguerite, of Illinois, were camp counselors.

On June 28 another regional meeting was held for the Saints of the western part of the district, at Polson. This was a one-day meeting with Elders Hobart and Eliason presiding. After a picnic lunch on the shore of Flathead Lake, the group returned to the church for a dedication service.

The annual reunion convened at Race Track, near Deer Lodge, on August 9-16. Elder Glaude Smith of Independence, Missouri, taught the general class each day. Elder Troyer taught the men's class, and was in charge of the daily prayer service. Elder Hobart taught the women's class, and Elder Glen Johnson the young people's class, and presided at their prayer meetings.

On Saturday, the business meeting and election of officers was held and the following were elected: Harvey Eliason, of Deer Lodge, district president; Connie Kyle of Butte, religious education director; J. B. Fell of Billings, corresponding secretary; Glenn Beck of Billings, secretary; Veda Jacobs of Great Falls, music director; Virginia Gardner of Missoula, women's leader; Ruth Beck of Billings, young people's leader; John Crawford of Billings, auditing committee member; Lloyd Peterson of Butte, treasurer; and Joe Beck, bishop's agent.

The following were elected to go to General Conference as delegates from western Montana: Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Eliason, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Threet, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Minthron, and Mrs. Ruby Troyer.—Reported by VIRGINIA GARDNER

Four Baptized

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—Vermont congregation is one of the smallest in the Los Angeles Stake. The group has been meeting in the Roofer's Union Hall. In December, 1952, a lot was purchased for $5,100 cash. This left no reserve funds. The members started a pledge system, and the present treasury balance is about $4,200.

Those who have ministered in the music department include Sister Covalt and her daughter, Arleta, violinist, Brother Walden, Sister Briggs, Sister Knowlton, Sister Newton, and Brother Brake.

Four were baptized in August. They were Brother Knox, who had been seriously ill, and his grandson, Billy Loar, and Sister Hacker and Sister Lillian Sexton.

Elder Evans was in charge of the Communion service and prayer meeting on August 2.—Reported by HAROLD BULLARD

First Meeting Held

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—The first services in Westwood, California, were held at the Masonic Hall on August 7. The special Communion service was presided over by Elders H. D. Hintz of Chico, California, and Walter Radcliff, of Lamoni, Iowa. Music for the occasion was by Mrs. Fern Sliger, Cora June Hintz, and Eldon Radcliff, students at Grace-land College.

At noon a basket lunch was served. Those in charge of afternoon services were George W. Howell of Yuba City, and Brother Radcliff. The sermon was given by Brother Hintz. Some drove as far as 110 miles to attend, as the group is scattered. The Communion was served to twenty-six people.

The following Wednesday evening prayer meeting was held at the home of Mrs. F. R. Duncan, with Brother Radcliff in charge.—Reported by Mrs. A. C. COOPER

Business Meeting

CLEAR LAKE, INDIANA.—At the annual business meeting, the following officers were elected: branch president, Elder Arthur Middleton; treasurer, Rolland Dirriom; secretary, Eugenia Nickols; recorder, women's leader, and book steward, Gertrude Binkley; church school director and solicitor, Claude Smith; youth leader and auditor, Wilford McMurray; music director, Pearl McMurray; reporter, Madelyn Dirriom; finance committee members, Dr. Charles Jacobs, Sr., and Clair Binkley; and publicity agent, Wilma Wall.

The branch held rally day August 30 at the church, with an all-day meeting. Dinner was served in the lower auditorium at the noon hour. A baptismal service was held in the afternoon for two boys, Terry Middleton, son of Elder and Mrs. Arthur Middleton, and Milton Smith, son of Elder and Mrs. Claude Smith.

The branch celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary on December 12, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth as guest speaker. Eight honored members were present.

The branch is sponsoring a tent at the Hillsdale Fairgrounds in charge of Elder Clair Weldon, district president of the branch.

Four boys from the branch are in the armed services, two of whom are serving overseas.—Reported by WILMA WALL

Guest Speakers

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA.—On June 21 Brother Bill Bruch of Lawton, Oklahoma, visited with the Saints, and was the eleven o'clock speaker.

The study class entertained the branch with an ice-cream social June 24 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Ridings.

On July 22 Elder Arthur F. Gibbs visited the branch and was the guest speaker.

On the first Sunday of each month, Brother and Sister Ray Carran of Fort Worth, Texas, visit the branch and help with Communion services.

On August 28 Brother Z. Z. Renfroe of Independence, Missouri, visited the branch and was the evening speaker.

The annual business meeting was held September 7. Present officers are Elder Ray Renfroe, pastor; Elder Ray Carran, assistant pastor; Hallie Spraggins, secretary-treasurer and church school supervisor; Helen Ridings, director of music; Glenna Muse, pianist; Mrs. H. G. Hood, book steward; Ruth Renfroe, bishop's agent; Maxene Burks, assistant supervisor; Homer Qualls, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Homer Qualls, women's leader.—Reported by Mrs. H. G. HOOD

What Are Your Intentions?

but up to this time I was not interested. I read and reread the Book of Mormon, King James Bible, Inspired Version, and the Three Bibles Compared. I read the Doctrine and Covenants and Church History, and then I was thoroughly convinced the Reorganized Church was all it claimed to be—the restoration of Christ's original church.

WHILE I SAT meditating upon this subject one evening I was thinking how wonderful it would be to have been born into this church and to have grown up under its influence. As I thought this the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me in great power. Never in all my forty-two years had I experienced such a blessing. Presently a voice said, "My son, I have made you acquainted with the gospel of my church. I have revealed unto you many mysteries concerning my work, the gathering of my Saints, and the establishment of Zion. What are your intentions?"

I replied: "Lord, I am not worthy to become a member of thy church; I have lived a worldly life."

The voice continued: "He that cometh to me with a broken heart and contrite spirit I shall in no wise cast out. It is my will that you become a member of my church."

A few days later my wife and I were baptized and confirmed members of the church in the Omaha Branch.

That was nearly thirty years ago. Since then I have been through many trials and tribulations, I have passed through my Gethsemane, but at no time did I ever doubt the divinity of the Restoration, or the words of the Lord when he said to me, "This is my church, I have placed my name upon it, and some day it shall become beautiful and glorious in my sight."

This is the challenge we have today—to make our church beautiful and glorious. It is an especial challenge to young people in the church. They should help to make it a great light set upon Mount Zion so that the warring, starving, dying nations of the world may see and exclaim, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord, for his glory is there and there is liberty, and happiness for all." The church must be so beautiful and glorious that the different religious organizations which deny the divinity of Christ, his atoning blood, and his resurrection may know that such teaching is nothing but atheism wrapped up in clerical robe and labeled modern religious theology.

Our task today is to let the peoples of the world know that the church of Jesus Christ has been restored to earth and that our Lord is standing in the doorway with outstretched arms, saying over and over again, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Center-Stake Study Hall. The bride is a graduate of Graceland College, and the groom is a graduate of the University of California. They are making their home in Independence.

Mathewson-Chong

Lorna Mae Noni Chong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cong Wing Chong of Honolulu, Oahu, and Doyle Edwin Mathewson of Portland, Oregon, were married June 12 at the Reorganized Church in Kansas City, Kansas. Cyril Directo performed the double-ring ceremony. The groom is in the army serving overseas, and the bride is residing in Honolulu.

Shupe-Gunderson

Margaret Gunderson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Gunderson of Longmont, Colorado, and Davie E. Shupe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Burrell R. Shupe of Lakewood, Colorado, were married August 14 in Denver, High Priest Ward A. Hougas officiating. Both are graduates of Graceland and are now residing in Boulder, Colorado, where the groom is completing his work for a civil engineering degree.

BIRTHS

A son, Phillip Russell, was born on June 16 to Dr. and Mrs. George K. Shoemaker of Kansas City, Kansas. Mrs. Shoemaker is the former Marjorie Robinson. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith J. McCormick of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Jacalyn Lee, born September 8. Mrs. McCormick is the former Eullaine Graybill of Kansas City, Missouri.

Twin daughters, Jean Marie and Judy Ann, were born on September 7 to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bobbett of Grass Lake, Michigan.

A son, Craig Wayne, was born on April 14 at the Independence Sanitarium to Mr. and Mrs. Clifton W. Wolf, Jr., of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Wolf is the former M. Jacqueline Mitchell of Detroit, Michigan. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

A son, Daniel Raymond, was born on August 3 to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dixon of Jonesboro, Arkansas. He was blessed on September 13 by Elders G. H. Turner and H. E. Larche.

DEATHS

FENN.—Bertha, was born July 7, 1897, in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died August 30, 1953, in the Jennie Edmundson Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Since 1927 she had been a member of the Reorganized Church and served faithfully in the branch at Carson, Iowa, as a teacher and in administrative offices.

She is survived by her husband, Weaver C. Fenn; three daughters: Mrs. William H. Robinson of Marion, Iowa; Mrs. J. Kenneth Ward of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Lloyd Slaght of Tacoma, Washington; two sons: Darrel Fenn of Carson and Carl Fenn, stationed at Great Lakes, Illinois, with the Navy; a sister, Mrs. Herman Trede of Carson; a brother, Max Bebensee of Council Bluffs; and five grandchildren. A son, Charles Frederick, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the church in Carson, Elders Charles Putnam and V. D. Ruch officiating.

FISHER.—Hannah, daughter of William and Mary Clark, was born May 2, 1880, in Smokeshire, England, and died May 30, 1953, in Miami, Florida, after a long illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on January 25, 1915, and was a charter member of the Miami Branch. On August 4, 1909, she was married to John Andrew Fisher who preceded her in death on March 25, 1952. Together they helped tell the gospel story on the Isle of Pines and in Cayman mission. In 1924 they began holding services in Miami, and Miami Branch was organized in their home in 1927. Surviving are two sons: Edward G. and Milton Woodrow of Miami; a daughter, Mrs. Arietta Bancom; and nine grandchildren. One son, Henry, died in childhood. Funeral services were held at the Glass Chapel in Miami, Elder Edgar Chevalier officiating. Interment was in Flagler Memorial Cemetery.

LEWIS.—Huldah Frances, was born March 29, 1897, at Sweet Home, Oregon, and died July 14, 1953, at Providence Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas. She lived in Portland, Oregon, and attended First Church there until her marriage to Leo G. Lewis in 1919 when they moved to Kansas City. Here they attended the Grandview Church. She had been a member since 1913.

Besides her husband she leaves two sons: Eldon of Gardena, California, and Harold of Kansas City; a daughter, Mrs. Florence Neeley of Kansas City; three brothers: Robert Moore of Chico, California; Alfred of Medford, Oregon; and Forest of Portland; two sisters: Mrs. C. F. Harwood of Lebanon, Oregon, and Mrs. W. R. Davis of Centralia, Washington; and four grandsons.

RUSSELL.—Alvin A., was born October 17, 1874, in Brussels, Illinois, and died September 2, 1953, at the hospital in Litchfield, Illinois. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 18, 1894, and through his efforts the branch in Sawyerville, Illinois, was established in 1929. There were six charter members; at the time of his death the membership totaled seventy. Since May 29, 1921, he had served the church as an elder.

He is survived by his wife, Grace, and two daughters: Mrs. Ethel Salters and Mrs. Edna Sexton. Patriarch Clarence L. Archibald conducted the funeral service. Burial was in Memorial Cemetery, Staunton, Illinois.

McKIERNAN.—Alzada Adline, daughter of Sarah and Charles Gunn, was born April 18, 1885, at Montrose, Iowa, and died March 24, 1953, at Ft. Madison, Iowa, after a long illness. She was married on December 11, 1906, to John McKiernan, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eight years old.

Besides her husband she leaves three sons: Edward and Herbert McKiernan and George Breeze, all of Ft. Madison; a daughter, Mrs. Frederick Moore of Independence, Missouri; three brothers: W. H. and Ray Gunn of Ft.

Madison and Clarence Gunn of Osawatomie, Kansas; three sisters: Mrs. Clara Barr of Ft. Madison; Mrs. Ethel Pittman of Los Angeles, California; and Mrs. Helen Knight of Osawatomie; eight grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Ft. Madison, Elder Arnold Ourth officiating. Burial was in the Elmwood Cemetery.

SCOTT.—Raymond C., son of Columbus and Flora L. Scott, was born August 21, 1891, at Galien, Michigan, and died August 1, 1953, in Kansas City, Missouri. With his parents he moved to Lamoni, Iowa, when he was two years old. In 1917 he enlisted in the army, served until the close of the war, and was mustered out as a major. After the armistice he worked as secretary and clerk with the Peace Commission. When he had finished this assignment he made his home in Tulsa, Oklahoma, then in 1924 moved to Kansas City where he took a position with the Nashville-Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad, continuing there until 1932 when he became a court reporter. He remained with this work until his death and was known as one of the most capable law reporters in Kansas City. He was a member of the Reorganized Church.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Robert E. Anderson of Seminole, Oklahoma, and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the D. W. Newcomer Chapel in Kansas City, Evangelist H. A. Higgins officiating. Interment was in Forest Hill Cemetery.

BOWMAN.—Laurence Alfred, son of Pfc. Homer B. Bowman of Camp San Luis Obispo, California, and Betty Reeves Bowman of Nampa, Idaho, was born August 16, 1948, at Ogden, Utah, and died (date of death not given) of injuries received when he was hit by a car while crossing the street. Besides his parents he leaves a brother, Dennis, and his grandparents; Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Reeves of Nampa and Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Bowman of Clearfield, Utah. Elders Harry S. Fry and J. C. Ford conducted the funeral service.

Introducing

WILLIAM THOMAS WELLMAN, Omaha, Nebraska (page 9), is a retired employee of the Union Pacific Railroad, for which he worked as draftsman, architect, and consulting architect. One of his claims to distinction in the architectural world is that he designed the Union Pacific vacation resort at Sun Valley, Idaho. His achievements won him a place in the 1940 edition of National Cyclopaedia of American Biography and the 1949 edition of Who's Who in Railroading. He serves the church as a bishop.

Teaching Children in Your Church

By Arlene S. Hall

This book concerns itself primarily with the teaching of the gospel, and more particularly with the teaching of children. The emphasis, then, is twofold: the person to be taught and the content of that teaching. The author writes out of experience as a leader and a teacher. The Warner Press.

HOME

The escape from the hot apartment was managed just in time, or somebody would have been sick. She could stand about so much heat, and no more.

That worry is over now. The pretty cottage has a half acre of lawn, more or less, that has been kept under fair control with considerable resolute hacking. A patch of woodland lies just across the road, and a tiny lake is visible from the kitchen window.

Some of the neighbors have horses in a paddock by the woods, always hanging their noses over the fence to see who is going by. A Shetland mare recently added a lovely gray colt to the family, as dainty a midget as one ever saw.

It's easy to sleep now. A cool breeze comes out of the east woods at night, and a blanket feels good toward morning. There is spring water, and the smell of the city is far away.

This morning there were veils of mist floating above the lake, and it looked like a scene out of a fairy book.

A mockingbird in a neighbor's tree sang all through the night recently, and after a brilliant morning star appeared in the east, the bob-whites took over the musical arrangements.

Home is a dear word, and it becomes more precious with experience. Whether it is modern or period architecture doesn't matter. If it provides a setting of ever so modest beauty for a treasure of love, and a way of living in happiness and peace, it is home to those who live there.

Sam Walter Foss wrote, "Let me live in a house by the side of the road where the race of men go by." If Sam thought it was a race in his horse-and-buggy days, he should see the road now. It has four lanes of concrete, and the race has become a torrent of traffic pouring east and west, a madhouse of speed. The little cottage is far enough away that neither the highway's sound nor fury disturbs its peace. From the shade of the trees and the tranquillity of the garden it is comforting to see the streams of humanity going by. It is good to have a retreat from the world where one can still take a peek at what is going on.

At night when the stars are out—a collection of jewels no crown can match—and the Little Dipper is ladling out happiness enough to make the spirit overflow with wonder, home seems like the finest of all heaven's gifts.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Audrey Faye (Morford) Stubbart

HER SCHOOL DESK was an orange crate and her teacher was her mother for much of her grade school life, in western Nebraska, until the family moved to Lamoni in 1907; but to Audrey Stubbart it was just part of a full, satisfying life. Now she is copy editor at Herald House and gives manuscripts the final check before they go to the shop for linotyping. For seven years previously she worked in the proofroom.

Audrey Faye Morford was born at Newman's Grove, Nebraska. She started school at the age of four in Tabor, Iowa, where her mother was converted to the Reorganized Church through the ministry of J. F. Mintun and Charles Fry. Audrey was baptized when she was twelve at Lamoni, Iowa. She attended high school in Seymour, Missouri, and finished by extension from the American School in Chicago. She matriculated at the University of Wyoming in 1922 in the field of education, and taught for seven years in the schools of Wyoming.

In 1911 she married John Perry Stubbart. They homesteaded in Wyoming in 1916 where they spent twenty-eight years on the homestead and developed a 2,100-acre sheep and cattle ranch.

She played violin in the Lamoni High School orchestra, has sung in various choirs, taught a church school class since she was seventeen, and was music director, and for sixteen years secretary and recorder of the Oshoto, Wyoming, Branch.

Her hobbies are writing, gardening, and painting. Her special interests are church school teaching, grammatics, and grandchildren. "I don't know whether I took time out to rear five children or vice versa," she says. Her children are Enid (Mrs. Joe DeBarthe), Lamoni, Iowa; Veryl, Archie, Missouri; Donald, Anchorage, Alaska; Carol (Mrs. T. J. Hollaman), Independence, Missouri; and Kenneth, Osawatimie, Kansas.

Audrey lives in Independence with her husband where they attend Walnut Park Church. She is received wherever she goes as one with an understanding heart, a well-read mind, a consecrated spirit, and a happy smile.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

VISITS TWO CONGREGATIONS

President W. Wallace Smith attended the eightieth anniversary home-coming of the Holden, Missouri, Branch on Sunday, September 20. He was associated with the former pastors, the present pastor, Brother Charles T. Robinson, and the district president, Brother Harry J. Simons.

In the afternoon he attended the groundbreaking ceremony for the Gudgell Park congregation, and was associated with Stake President Charles Graham, Stake Bishop H. W. Cackler, Pastor Myron Zerr, and others, including Brother Phil Weeks, who is the supervising builder.

AT DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp and Apostle D. T. Williams were in Akron, Ohio, September 17-18, to meet with the building committee and stimulate interest in a new church edifice there. They attended Northwest Ohio District conference at Toledo September 19-20, and at the conclusion of the conference took part in the ceremony of placing the capstone for the new Toledo church.

IN ST. LOUIS FOR CONFERENCE

Apostle Arthur Oakman and Bishop Henry L. Livingston returned September 17 from district conference in St. Louis, Missouri.

AARONIC PRIESTHOOD RETREAT

The annual Aaronic Priesthood Retreat for Center Stake was held at Lake Doniphan September 19-20. About 150 priesthood members attended, a large number of whom were young men. Emphasis was put upon personal soul-searching on the part of each man in his relation to God and mankind. Staff members included Elders Evan Fry, F. M. McDowell, Charles Graham, H. W. Cackler, Monte Parker, and O. Kenneth Byrn.

SPEAKS AT HARRISONVILLE

Arthur Rock, Director of the Radio and Audio-Visual Department, spoke to the Blue Ridge congregation in Zion on Sunday morning, September 23, and presented a sound film, "The Promise," and the evening sermon at Harrisonville, Missouri, on Sunday evening. The theme of his sermon was "The Holy Spirit."

ATTENDS MUSIC INSTITUTE

Franklyn Weddle, Director of the Music and Radio Department, attended the Northwestern Iowa District music institute held at Woodbine, Iowa, September 19-20.

LAMONI VISITORS

Carl Mesle, General Church Director of Youth Activities, was in Lamoni, Iowa, Saturday, September 19, where he attended the Alumni council meeting and visited the Graceland College campus. Elder Almer Sheehy and Sadi Nagel were other Center Stake visitors in Lamoni.

CENTER STAKE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

A number of Center Stake young people and their friends attended a fellowship service and mixer at the Blue Ridge R.L.D.S. church on Wednesday evening, September 23. Apostle Reed M. Holmes was guest speaker. Miss Bernice Anderson gave the Kipling poem, "The Explorer," upon which the theme was based. The Blue Ridge Zion's League were hosts at the mixer. Stake Youth Director Lee Hart was in charge of the service.

The Merciful God

"The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."—Exodus 34: 6

WHEN THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL crossed the Jordan, they came into a land where the people worshiped strange and terrible gods. They were false gods, of course, but those poor people didn't know it. Such was their stubborn determination that nothing, probably, could really change their convictions. The greatest danger that the Israelites faced, the greatest problem that concerned their prophets, was not that Hebrews might be slain by the swords of the Canaanites, but that they might be corrupted by their horrible religions and bow down to their wicked gods. It seemed at times to the leaders and prophets that the only way to protect the monotheism of the Hebrews would be to drive out or exterminate the Canaanites. The orders were given several times, but somehow they were never fully obeyed. Hebrews had to learn to resist the false gods or die with them.

SO MANY OF THE FALSE gods had one thing in common—they were cruel. Canaanite religions called for human sacrifice. In some sections the people practiced infanticide and buried the bodies of the slain children in special urns. And there were other evil practices—wickedness too gross to mention here. Knowing these things, it is easier to understand why the prophets of the true God carried on implacable warfare against these false gods for many centuries.

Through all the language of the prophets, in spite of all the sins, rebellions, waywardness and folly of the Israelite people, shedding a clear light in the darkness of threats and condemnation was one persistent theme—the God of love and mercy. He would punish sin to the limit, but he loved his people; and if they turned to him he would forgive them. His was a father's love.

IT IS THIS FATHER'S GREAT LOVE that still calls us today. As in the time of the Exodus, he is yet "merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."

There are many thousands of living persons who can and will testify, not alone from what they have read in the books but even more from their own experience, that he is a merciful and gracious God. He has healed us in times of desperate illness. He has lifted us up when we were discouraged. He has strengthened us when we were weak and afraid. When we were in want, he has turned the trend of events and opened ways that gave us the means to live. In times of darkness he has shed a light on our paths. Though there were times when we thought he did not hear our anxious prayers—perhaps was not concerned about them—we learned later that he was silently preparing the way for us.

THERE IS this somewhat recent religion of Communism, and it is a religion of Antichrist. Its gods are cruel and they bear the names of men. For when people try to destroy gods they usually set men up in their places. Marx and Lenin are the gods of Communism. Stalin thought he was one of them, but people began forgetting him before he was cold in his grave.

At Stalin's death there were four strong leaders to take his place. The rest of the world wondered when they would begin cutting each other's throats. Now it has begun, and Beria the butcher has gone down. Malenkov, Molotov, and others are still standing. Who will go next, and who will remain?

The trouble with Communism as a religion, as a faith, as a way of life, is that Communists never know whom they will be required to worship tomorrow. They have nothing to say about it. They can only choose to obey or die. And even if they obey, they may die anyway. Such are the ways of false religions.

With the passing of time, the false gods tend to become hard and cruel, and because the men who are using them to their own ends want power they use the false gods to intimidate and enslave the people. It is something that has happened many times. These gods demand great sacrifices, give little in return. They are exalted, and they debase the people.

Therefore something like rebellion has been necessary in the course of history to restore the truth. Jesus came into history at a time when many false things were said about God in Jerusalem. Men said he was cruel and demanding. He wanted money and service. If men spoke truly, he had little regard for the people. But Jesus reached back into the ancient literature to proclaim the old truth about God—that he was a God of love, that he was kind and merciful. In the Dark Ages men again were preaching about a cruel God, and the Reformation came to oppose it. Reformers developed their own brands of cruelty, and in the nineteenth century a young American, Joseph Smith, made a fresh appeal, a new presentation of the doctrine of God's love.

It is the message of God's love that the church bears today to the world, proclaiming again the message of hope in the Restoration of the gospel. One of our valiant veteran missionaries sang a song before many congregations in many lands: "God is so good to me." That is the heart of the message of the church.

Letters to President Smith

Formerly it was possible for the President of the church to give personal attention to all communications directed to him regarding various and sundry subjects. Since the numerical strength of the church continues to increase and the volume of correspondence grows accordingly, it becomes more and more difficult to give this detailed attention to all correspondence directed to the church in the way of requests for answers to specific problems and other information.

It has been our growing practice to refer some of these matters to other departments, and we are advising you in this official notice that this practice will be continued and in all probabilities expanded. Consequently, while these communications may continue to be addressed to the attention of the First Presidency, in many instances you may receive your answer from some department head who is qualified to answer your question and take care of your needs.

We assure you that this is not an attempt to side-step responsibility but is taken in the interest of efficiency.

Very sincerely,

Baptismal Report for August

In August, 1953, there were 601 baptisms reported to the Department of Statistics. This is the highest number for August since 1929 when 610 were reported. The total for the 8 months is 3,163—which ranks behind only 1921 and 1951. It is 325 more than for the same period last year and only 126 behind 1951.

Stakes and districts with the 5 highest totals for August are Kansas City Stake, 49; Southern Michigan District, 35; Far West Stake, 29; South-eastern Illinois District, 20; and Northern California District, 19.

Auditorium Emphasis in November

We are hopeful that by November 1 it will be possible to have work started on the Auditorium. The present project will include the front center and foyer.

At a recent meeting with the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the architects, Mr. D. Kent Frohwerk of Bloomgarten and Frohwerk in Kansas City, Missouri, and Mr. Joseph D. Murphy of St. Louis, Missouri, final decisions were made concerning this particular project. At the present time plans and specifications are being completed.

In order to continue the work on the Auditorium it will be necessary to maintain a high level of income for construction. We are therefore designating the month of November as a period of emphasis for raising funds, with a special offering to be taken up throughout the entire church during Thanksgiving week.

Further details of the plans for this effort will be sent to district officers.

Blessed Are They That Mourn

for they shall be comforted

A sermon preached July 19, 1953, at the Campus Independence, Missouri

By F. O. Davies

And in that day, all who are found upon the watchtower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved. And they that have been scattered shall be gathered; and all they who have mourned shall be comforted; and all they who have given their lives for my name shall be crowned. Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God.— Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4 d-f.

MANY TIMES we have used this promise of the Lord Jesus at funeral services in the hope of bringing comfort to the bereaved. Possibly because we limited the cause of mourning to the loss of some loved one, we restricted the power, strength, and expansiveness of the comfort that is promised and available.

We say "the loss of a loved one," when actually it would be more appropriate to say "separated for a while." Our Christian beliefs, which are based on the unchangeability of God and his eternal purposes, will not allow us to think in terms of final and utter loss—a sentiment which is expressed in that well-known song, "My Darling Clementine" with the line, "Thou art lost and gone forever." In marked contrast to this thought of finality and despair, we remind ourselves of Christ and his statements to the relatives of Lazarus, as recorded in John 11: 21-27, especially this pronouncement: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Causes of Mourning

However, tonight it is not a funeral service that we are participating in, unless of course we have come to lay aside and bury deep forever our fears, doubts, disappointments, discouragements, jealousies, hatreds—in other words, our sins. As Paul reminds us of our baptism into Christ, we bury the old man in the water—symbolic of the grave—and arise to walk in a newness of life, cleansed of all the sins that so easily beset us.

Maybe it is a time of mourning—mourning over wasted time and lost opportunities, mourning because of failure to obey. That is one kind of funeral it would be a pleasure to attend, providing we came away with the realization that we had the privilege and opportunity to walk in a new life, a new way. For like all Christian burials there is the hope of the Resurrection; thus we say, "Arise in the strength of the Lord," for "Blessed are they that mourn; . . . they shall be comforted." Comforted by what? By the assurance that the purpose of God is one eternal round, from which there is no shadow of turning. Comforted because it is decreed that "out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

This reminds us that Jesus was not attending a funeral when he said, "Blessed are they that mourn." He was sitting on the side of the hill or mount; he had just come, perhaps, from a long hard day of teaching, healing, and persuading men to do right. He was surrounded by his disciples so anxious to learn; before him lay the countryside. He looked out over the fields, the homes, the markets, and synagogues—all of which represented the daily activities and toil of men. Then he said among many things, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." What gave rise to such an observation and promise on the part of Christ?

Aware of Our Sins

Let us consider some basic reasons that would call forth and justify our mourning. Could it be that we as individuals have become aware of our sins, as the light of the gospel of Christ reveals to us and others our shortcomings, and thus we are saddened? The wonderful thing about that gospel is that it reveals to us our possibilities, and we can rejoice. For Christ came not to condemn but to save, thus we can do something about our mourning; our sadness is turned to joy, our fear into faith; we look unto the hills from whence cometh our help; we arise as new creatures in Christ!

That certainly is wonderful. It is good to know our personal sins and be concerned enough to do something about them. It is good to sing and mean the truth expressed in our hymns. If we could sing, "I hate the sins that made thee mourn and drove thee from my breast," with the same zeal and enthusiasm that we sing "Onward to Zion" or "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," then we would be well along the way to the kingdom's redemption, and "Onward to Zion" would be more than a song.

Unconcern for Others

But as wonderful as all that is—and I would not detract from its importance, for an acknowledgment of our own personal need of Christ is basic to another cause for possible mourning, that of mourning for the sins of others—no man can know salvation by himself. He must be concerned about others; and only a righteous man can be concerned enough about a sinner to want to do something for him. It takes a righteous man to love a sinner; no sinner ever loved another sinner enough to help him. It takes a righteous man to see the effects of sin upon another; and when he does, he mourns. His mourning is not because of utter hopelessness and despair, but because of a deep, loving concern—and he proceeds to do something about it.

That undoubtedly brings us to the real meaning and purpose of the statement of Christ on the mount. I would like to spend the rest of the time available sharing with you what I would deem to be justification for the fulfillment of this prophetic promise, ". . . they that mourn . . . shall be comforted."

God's Concern

It is godlike to be concerned about others. No matter what we possess, no matter how great our triumphs or acceptance by others as successful or righteous people, we are not satisfied until this concern for others is the most dominant thing in our lives.

Genesis 7: 31-36, I. V., tells us that God wept, so much so that Enoch marveled and wondered why. Then the answer came: God wept because of sin. He could not be happy so long as men—the crowning glory of his creation—behaved as they did. Sin separated them from him, and he was concerned enough and loved them enough to weep.

But God did not just weep, for his love was an intelligent, purposeful love which caused him to do something. He sent his Son—the best he had—that you and I might not be separated from him.

Christ's Concern

The Son, like the Father, was concerned enough that he came willingly, and he also wept—wept over Jerusalem, "How often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens, . . . and ye would not." Again like the Father he did something about these sins that caused him to mourn; he continued to minister, to heal, to teach. Up to, including, and beyond Calvary, he never ceased to be concerned. His statement to Peter, "Lovest thou me? . . . Feed my sheep," helps us to realize the fact that he wanted his disciples to be concerned to the same extent. Would he have us do anything less than Peter? Would we want to do anything less than the best? Certainly not if our mourning is genuine and we would see ways and means of eliminating sin, of alleviating its far-reaching effects. The world is full of individuals who need Jesus Christ and his gospel. Many wait for those who already know Christ and his love to share it with them. This world needs Zion, the kingdom of our God and his Christ. Our mourning should be for all mankind. It should prompt us to express in daily life the results of our being reconciled to God through Christ.

Incentives to Righteousness

Many times we seek for guidance, strength, and help in the great struggle against sin. Many times there are incentives to righteousness all around us, yet we miss them because we are too much concerned about ourselves or feel we need a more direct and personal revelation from God. My ideas may not coincide with yours; however, I am going to tell you how I find the hope and realization of the comfort promised.

It may be in a book such as one I borrowed from the basement apartment of a friend of mine. The book was the Story of Philosophy, and as I turned the pages I read of Francis Bacon's work, The New Atlantis. It is too lengthy to quote, but it states that the councils of the state are based on the principle of a government of the people, for the people, by the selected best of the people—a government by technicians, architects, astronomers, geologists, biologists, physicians, chemists, economists, sociologists, and philosophers. It is complicated enough, but think of a government without politicians!

After describing the wonderful system of society which aims solely for man's development and happiness, Bacon calls it the philosopher's Utopia where people are guided in peace and modest plenty by their wisest men.

I mentioned this to illustrate that down through the years men have sought for, hoped for, and written about that kind of society which is the need of this greatly troubled world of ours. Could it be realized, then truly those that mourn would be comforted! The fact that men think of it, believe in it, and try for it is a great incentive, and Francis Bacon is only one of many who by writing tried to offer men a better way of life. Just a dream? Maybe not.

Another incentive for me is to see how regularly and consistently good men and women of the earth manifest this love of God in concern for others. Human hearts and love are like unto God's, for many fathers and mothers have borne the burden of the sins of their children. I believe that as long as we have men who can see in vision the perfect society and record the same, and have humble people the world over who can love until it hurts, there is hope for those that mourn. Maybe it is because of this that God continues to work with us.

Have you ever considered the advance of the Negroes in this country? From slavery, manacles, beatings, hard work, and poverty they have taken their places in society and are making a contribution. Descendants of the slaves are now doctors, lawyers, scientists, musicians, and athletes. To me it is a miracle, a revolution, and a revelation.

Still in progress and demanding adjustments and compromise, it is all made possible or easier by the type of government in this country, with the constitution proclaiming the great fundamental belief of equality before the law.

This suggested incentive came to me with greater force and meaning when I rode in Kansas City recently with Albert Scherer. We rounded a slight bend in the road and there stood, completed and occupied, two or three beautiful homes. I had watched them being built and wondered who might be the fortunate owners. Outside one house was an almost new automobile. The garden was small but well cared for, and bending down tending the flowers was a Negro, just home from work, and beside him his little son, both deeply interested in the green lawn and the flowers. It was a cheerful picture and caused both of us to comment with satisfaction. From that we launched into an appreciation of the fact that not too many years ago this colored man's forefathers were probably slaves in the cotton fields of the South. The emancipation of such peoples is a fulfilling of the theme, "They that mourn shall be comforted."

Modern Bondage

God once brought a horde of slaves out of bondage into the "promised land." Inspired and God-directed leadership allowed Moses to accomplish that task. Is it not symbolic of our day and age? We are in bondage, in trespasses and sin because of our lack of faith and our failure to be obedient to laws of the celestial kingdom. But we need something or someone to bring us out of bondage. Until the priesthood members of the church become deeply concerned about the sins of others, until they mourn for them and with them and endeavor to feed the sheep and bring comfort by salvation through the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, mourning will be part of our life.

We know that Jesus was not attending a funeral when he said "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Rather he was considering mankind as represented in that land of Palestine, the promised land, then under the domination of Rome, with various sects of scribes, Pharisees, and Sadducees, with riches and poverty, with great intellectuals like Nicodemus, with sinners like Mary Magdalene, all caught up in the traditions of the Mosaic law but failing to understand that it pointed them to the Messiah, their salvation.

I could never call this message complete unless I reminded you of a somewhat similar situation when God gave a promise that amounts to the same thing that Jesus gave on the mountainside. The words might be different, but the idea is the same, the promise is just as sure. It is the story that we should tell and retell to our children and grandchildren, not with the idea of boasting or being considered a specially chosen people. We are God's chosen people only when we choose to do the things that God wants us to do. The story is that of the coming of the Saints to Zion. They came in hope and great expectation; they made mistakes, but at least they tried. There was opposition, persecution, beatings—and finally they were driven out. In the midst of this hard and difficult situation, when things were about at their worst, the prophet came back and prayed for Zion. Our Doctrine and Covenants informs us that God spoke strongly yet kindly to his people. He said:

They that have been scattered shall be gathered; and all they who have mourned shall be comforted; and all they who have given their lives for my name shall be crowned. Therefore let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4 e-g.

All of this section is worth reading; and to arouse your interest, I quote a few lines from paragraph 5:

All things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts; yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face.

What a wonderful thing to contemplate; what a wonderful thing to work for in co-operation with God. Our comfort comes not by contemplation alone of "the new heaven and new earth" as seen by John (Revelation 21: 1, 2), but in endeavoring to be worthy to dwell with him.

"Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." This text affords me a greater appreciation of that great masterpiece, The Messiah, for in it the words of the prophet Isaiah, set to inspiring music, express the love and concern of God.

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.

Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned. . . . The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord.

One Fundamental

Take this as a testimony. Take it as a piece of philosophy born of trial and trouble. Take it as one little bit of the wisdom of common people winnowed out of struggle and sorrow. Take it as the inspired words of a prophet who originally uttered it: "Trust in the Lord."

Men may fail you; God will not. He may listen to your prayers for a time to be sure you are sincere. He may wait for you to develop and mature, to drop the foolish, mistaken, inconsistent prayers and concentrate upon the basic ones. He may watch you grow as you pray, until you no longer want what you first asked for. And when you are ready for it, he will send what is best for you. There are two things to do: never cease praying, and always try to make a better, truer prayer. Trust in the Lord.

Walk in the Light

By Louis Whitehead

And God said, Let there be light, and there was light.

THIS HAD BEEN true since the creation—light and God seemingly being synonymous—and well it has been so because present-day revelation tells us, “The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words truth and light.” Truth and light have thus become meaningful to active, forceful members of the Restoration Movement. God sent his Son into the world as a continuing source of this light that we, taking upon us his name and becoming disciples, might in a measure take light from this great source of eternal light. As we walk our way among the children of men, our light of truth and conviction and knowledge kindled from the main source may shine forth as a great brightness in the midst of darkness around us.

Others seeing this light find strength and courage to walk also in the light, and help by adding the light of their lives to that of others and by so doing cause the glory of God as taught and manifest in the Restoration Movement to shine a bit brighter. This increase in light will be a beacon to those who walk the pathway of life with us.

The flame from a single match is insignificant when struck in total darkness, but when many matches are struck simultaneously the light is great. So, too, the light of a single godly life seems often to be of little avail in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation; however, when the light of many godly lives burns high through contact with the eternal source of light, the spiritual light thus generated is a great blaze, helping to dispel the darkness of evil around us. God has indeed in these latter days entrusted to us the keeping of the “lights along the shore.”

WE ARE REMINDED in Scripture not to hide our light under a bushel, but to let it shine forth so that all may see. In Philippians 2: 14, 15, we find these important words: “Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world.”

Further let us consider I Corinthians 9: 14, “Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.” What powerful and implicating language! But some may ask, “How does all this effect us?” The answer is found in the happenings of everyday living. May I relate these experiences to bring out the true meaning.

The Kansas City, Missouri, school system places great emphasis on safety. One of the safety measures involves crossing at the intersection of streets where stop signs are placed, and where schoolboy patrols aid the children and teachers in crossing. Upon arriving at school one morning, a kindergarten boy ran up to me and asked, “You crossed at the corner, didn’t you?” Not overly concerned I replied, “Yes, but why do you ask?” “Teacher tells us to, then she doesn’t—but you do!” Here was a light shining to a boy many people would think too small to notice or care.

At another time a boy walked into my classroom and addressed me squarely, “You don’t smoke or drink, do you?” I was surprised but answered that those things were not acceptable according to my standards. Then again I asked why and how he knew. “One day you mentioned smoking and drinking as not being right, and I’ve been watching you.”

On another occasion a youngster said, “You really like us boys, don’t you?” I said, “Yes, Jimmy. Why do you ask?” Without hesitation he answered, “Some of my teachers say they like us but don’t act like it. You do, ‘cause I can tell.”

WHAT CAN WE GAIN from such experiences? What is the lesson for us as members of Christ’s church of the Restoration? Simply phrased it is this: The value of a living testimony is worth more than mere words, and words without the testimony of a life of action and deed are hollow and meaningless. We must tie our actions into the everyday business of building the kingdom and bearing a more effective testimony of the deeds of our life that God is the motive force in our lives, the source of our light and knowledge, and that we will do something instead of being heard for our much speaking.

I have been a member of the restored church for twenty-four years; my people have belonged to the church for generations back on both my mother’s and father’s sides. All of my years in the church I have heard words multiplied many times as to the task of the church and how it should be accomplished. In talking to my progenitors, I find that as far back as they can remember and from what they have been told, we have always preached the gospel, but at times we have been caught short in living it. After 123 years of talk, we had better get into action and “deliver the goods.” It is time for us to “put up or shut up.” I, for one, want to “put up”—to put up before the world such an example of godly living in peace, love, and contentment among my fellow men that the light of my life may shine forth. I am sure this is the desire of every truly converted disciple of the Restoration Movement in these the latter days. Action is the keynote of the whole program.

The hardest thing for the master of a sailing vessel to do is to steer a ship that is caught in the calms. The hardest thing for us to do is to guide our lives and the lives of those about us when we are caught in the calms of inactivity. We must be moving in order to be steered. God’s will concerning us as members of the Restoration is that we be doing something. Christ set the pattern when he was in the Temple talking to the wise men. He said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" We must be about our Father's business, not only in word but in the example of godly lives lived purposefully in the great task of building the kingdom.

If we are to accomplish our avowed purpose we must shine as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation; and as we preach the gospel, with the help of God our Father and his son Jesus, the source of our strength and our light, we must live of the gospel.

Australasian Report

65 Nelson St.
Rozelle, New South Wales

Dear Saints of the World,

I recently returned from New Zealand. My experiences there challenged me to increased zeal in behalf of our "world evangelism" goal.

One of the conditions which we almost take for granted, but which is astounding to our friends, is the way in which international boundaries and barriers are removed through the gospel. When we landed in Sydney ten months ago, about 200 people were at the airport to greet us.

On the same Pan-American Clipper were Norman Von Nida, the Australian golfing star; Dr. Eugene Goossens, the American director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra; and a movie actress whose name I do not remember. Mr. Von Nida was overheard to say, "Who are these people (referring to our family) that they should rate such a crowd to greet them?" By way of contrast there was no public acclaim or welcome to any of the other three. I refer to this humbly in recognition of the fact that the principal motivation for this warm response to our arrival is the spirit of fellowship which belongs to the gospel and church of Jesus Christ. Thus an otherwise obscure family arrived in a strange land with a welcome which amazed those who were in the public eye and accustomed to acclamation.

I related this experience as a testimony to some of the Saints in New Zealand. In the group was a nonmember lady whose interest showed in her face. Though she did not doubt my words, she could hardly believe her ears, and asked afterward how it could be true. Brother Imrie, the New Zealand missionary, and I had several meetings in her home, and she has attended a number of services. Now she knows what we were talking about when we spoke of the world-wide fellowship which erases national boundaries and destroys national prejudices.

Our associations here reveal that there are hundreds of people not yet reached by the gospel who would react as did this lady. Our great need is for more and better equipment, new church buildings, cars for the missionaries, a larger variety of visual and audio materials, and publicity by publication and radio. We are making progress in meeting these needs.

Here are some specific achievements of recent date:

1. The organization of a new mission in Sydney (suburb of Ryde), the first in thirty years. It now has an attendance of about 50.
2. The opening of a new church for the Guilford Branch in Sydney. Its church school has increased from 40 to 140 in the last six weeks. Preaching attendance average has climbed from 35 to 80.
3. The freeing of the New Zealand appointee from administrative responsibility in the Auckland Branch so he can give attention to missionary work on a wider scale than before.

These are accompanied by reports from other places telling of movement toward new openings and increasing baptismal rates, as well as improvement of the quality of our public and personal ministry.

We solicit the prayerful support of all the Saints who read these words, that the Restoration message in Australasia will be happily received by many more good people.

MAURICE L. DRAPER

The First President of the Church

THE QUESTION of who actually took the prime responsibility or presidency of the church after the completion of Christ's personal earthly ministry has been unanswered through the years, and there seems to be no conclusive evidence in biblical writings which could be regarded as final on this point.

Logical candidates, of course, were the three who have been regarded as "nearest the Master"—Peter, James, and John. After brief study of the Scriptures alone we soon find ourselves with the choice between Peter and James. While John was held in high esteem by Jesus for his tenderness and compassion, there seems to be little in New Testament writings to suggest that John was officially recognized in Jerusalem as a voice of final authority when situations calling for such recognition existed.

This is not true, however, of the other two. Peter, always the outspoken individual, has been regarded by many as the head of the church. It is true on many occasions that Peter did stand out as the official spokesman, but this was not necessarily an indication of his presidency. In the days of Moses, Aaron was unquestionably the spokesman, but it was Moses whom both God and the people regarded as the head.

A CAREFUL STUDY of the histories of biblical times is very rewarding, and it might be well to consider the following quotations for the light they shed on this point.

From Eusebius' The Ecclesiastical History, Volume 1, page 35, in the chapter, "The Beginnings of the Church," we find:

Then indeed, James also, the brother of the Lord as he was called (for he, too, was styled the son of Joseph, and Joseph the father of Christ; to which Joseph the Virgin had been betrothed, and before they came together was found to be with child of the Holy Ghost, as the sacred books of the Gospel tell us)—this same James, then, whom the men of old sur-named the Just on account of his excellent virtue, was the first, it is related, to be entrusted with the throne of the episcopate of the church of Jerusalem.

Clement establishes (this fact) in the sixth of the Hypotyposes, writing thus: for he says that Peter, James, and John after the ascension of the Savior did not lay claim to the glory, as men who had been preferred in honor by him; but selected James the Just as Bishop of Jerusalem.

In further quotations from the writings of Eusebius on pages 56 and 57, we find:

When Paul appealed unto Caesar and was sent on his way to the city of the Romans by Festus, the Jews were disappointed of the hope which led them to devise the plot against him, and so turned to James, the Lord's brother, to whom the apostles had entrusted the throne of the episcopate at Jerusalem.

Nevertheless Hegesippus, who belonged to the first succession from the apostles, gives the most accurate record concerning him, in his Fifth Memoir. He says, "Together with the apostles James the Lord's brother succeeded to (the government of) the church."

AS WE PERUSE the record of Eusebius we find many other references to James as the first leader of the church after the ascension of Christ. As concluded by Eusebius on page 74, we, too, can be grateful for the "loving-kindness of that all-gracious providence, which for forty whole years after their crime against the Christ postponed their destruction. During all these years the greater number of apostles and disciples and James himself, the first bishop there, who was called the Lord's brother, were still alive and made their abode in the city of Jerusalem itself, thus remaining, as it were, that place's most sure bulwark."

The references in the foregoing quotations to the "Bishop," of course, must be read by Latter Day Saints with recognition of the fact that the designation "bishop" used was not in the sense that we understand the function of the bishop in the church. It is evident from the context of the quotations that the designation referred to the head or president of the church.

In listing the names of the men of the "circumcision" who succeeded to the church leadership, Eusebius begins with James as the first and ends with Judas as the fifteenth. Peter's name does not appear in the list of succession at all.

THE IMPORTANT PRINCIPLE of "common consent" is alluded to in the selection of James as the first president of the church. From Eusebius, Volume 1, page 231, we quote: "Now the throne of James, who was the first to receive from the Savior and the apostles the episcopate of the church at Jerusalem, who also, as the divine books show, was called a brother of Christ, has been preserved to this day." We, as Latter Day Saints, would hardly subscribe to the prevalent theory of Peter's appointment to this office by Jesus. We find in latter-day experience that God permits the assumption of such leadership only with the consent of the church. It is not an appointive office, even though God participates in the selection with the consent of the people.

Taking this view, we see how difficult it should be to misunderstand Matthew 16: 17, 18:

Then Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: For flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

We, of course, believe that the "rock" was the "divine revelation of Christ's sonship," not Peter. Also the authority of binding and loosing referred to was the authority of priesthood and was shared by all the apostles.

From Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, page 23, paragraph 1, we find the same forthright recognition of James's church leadership in the listing of early Christian martyrs. Some of those shown are "Stephen, James the son of Zebedee, and James the Just, who presided over the church of Jerusalem."

Again: "James was president of the church at Jerusalem" (Biblical Cyclopaedia, Volume II, page 68).

From Foxe's Book of Martyrs:

James the Less is supposed by some to have been the brother of our Lord; by a former wife of Joseph. This is very doubtful and accords too much with Catholic superstition, that Mary never had any other children except our Savior. He was elected to the oversight of the church at Jerusalem.

Miller's Church History, page 145: "Toward the end of the first century, all the churches followed the model of the mother church at Jerusalem."

JUST WHAT James the Just's relationship to Christ was is not conclusively known, though he was often referred to as the Lord's brother. Some historians conclude he was the same James who was a first cousin to Jesus, which reportedly in biblical times was referred to as "brotherly tie or kinship." This James to whom we refer was called "the less" because he was younger and smaller in stature than James, the son of Zebedee.

We find further in Smith's Dictionary that he was regarded by some as "the son of Alphaeus or Clopas, and brother of our Lord, was called to the Apostolate, together with his younger brother Jude, in the spring of the year 28." At some time, in the forty days that intervened between the Resurrection and the Ascension, the Lord appeared to him (I Corinthians 15: 7) first, then to all the apostles.

Smith continues that ten years after "we find James on a level with Peter, and with him deciding on the admission of St. Paul into fellowship with the Church at Jerusalem; and from henceforth we always find him equal, or in his own department superior to the very chiefest of the apostles, Peter, John, and Paul." (See Acts 9: 27 and Galatians 1: 18, 19.)

This pre-eminence is evident throughout the after history of the apostles, whether we read in the Acts, in the epistles, or in ecclesiastical writers (Acts 12: 17; 15: 13, 19, 21: 18; Galatians 2: 9).

According to tradition, James was thrown from the Temple by the scribes and Pharisees; he was stoned, and his brains were dashed out with a fuller's club.

FROM THE TIME of Christ's special appearance to James before His ascension on through to the time of the special council of the church to determine once and for all the significance of circumcision (on which occasion, Acts 15: 13-19 James's words, "Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God," seemed final and conclusive), we are led to know the significant mantle of leadership that was his. We, too, can see in him "James, the Just, because of his excellent virtue."

This recognition of James as the first leader of the church in no way diminishes or reduces our love and esteem for Peter and John or for the other apostles who gave their lives first in service and then in martyrdom for the cause of Christ. Quite to the contrary it causes us to know that the work of all is precious in God's sight and productive in kingdom fruits whether it be the persistence of a "Peter," the power of a "Paul," or the love of a "John." God's part, added to the work of any servant, makes that way of service the greatest ambition of life.

Truth

By William H. Clark

Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

WHILE ON TRIAL for his life before Pilate, Jesus made this statement: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth" (John 18: 37).

It is plain from the foregoing statements that Jesus came into the world that man might know of things as they are and as they were and as they are to come.

Then he spoke these words, "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice" (John 18: 37). This statement applies today as it did the day it was spoken.

How little Pilate knew about the truth when he asked the question, "What is truth?" And without waiting for an answer from our Lord, he went out and spoke to the Jews.

The definition which begins this article is a revelation to the church, given in 1833; it applied in the days Jesus was on earth as it does today. Jesus made this statement, "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." This also reaches to our day. And again he says, "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17: 19). He continues in that same prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." He also said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12: 32).

This signified what death he should die. He says, "I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away" (John 16: 7).

A Lesson from the Vine

By Addie Spaulding Stowell

ONE MORNING I was brought to an abrupt mental halt when I noticed how my philodendron, trailing around the room, had overcome its obstacle. In my mind I could discern a power within that plant that could only have been placed there by a great creator.

I have a wide shelf under my south bedroom window for plants. I had set the pot containing the vine at one end of that shelf so it would run over the window. It grew, spreading its vine over the window, around the corner, and across the top of the door; then it met an obstacle. Before I had noticed how close it was to the open doorway and fastened it up higher out of danger, someone closed the door and pinched off the end. I felt bad because I thought it would never grow any more. Then, to my surprise, I saw that it was putting out another shoot near the bruised spot, and back at the first leaf joint from the bruise it was putting out still another shoot.

There was an intangible something within that plant—not anything put there by chance—that caused the plant to double its efforts to meet obstacles and go on. But its trouble did not end there. The two shoots had grown about six inches and were quite a distance from the doorway when a strong wind came up, blew one of the shoots into the doorway, and the door slammed shut on it. Again the plant was not discouraged. It courageously put out another shoot.

WE CANNOT ATTRIBUTE intelligence to the philodendron, but there is something within all plant life that reaches out to the end of its creation, just as there is something in animals that we call instinct. There is a power in life that no one has been able to explain who does not accept the story of the creation.

There is a God who not only created tangible forms when he made the animals and plants, but also placed in them something capable of putting forth energies to fulfill the measure of their creation. Man is the highest of God's creations of which we have any knowledge. God has bestowed upon him an intelligence which gives him a concept of a life beyond the grave and an opportunity to return to the presence of the Father and the Son.

Will man fail in the face of obstacles; or will he, like the vine, in the spirit of determination to reach his goal, double his efforts when he meets discouragements?

AS A BODY of people and members of the great Restoration Movement, we have a goal. The church was small in its beginning like the vine in the pot by the window. Little by little, they were given the task of building the kingdom of God on the earth. The first great admonition was to "cry repentance." They knew of God and Jesus Christ, his Son, because they had received the Holy Ghost testifying to them that these two creators were real, were loving and just, and were to be obeyed. So the cry went out. It is not so hard to cry repentance if one has faith in a living God as a means of salvation, and it is easier for one in need of repentance to accept that cry if he can vision something tangible to substantiate his faith.

If the early pioneers in the Restoration had languished at obstacles, the "cry" would have been a failure; but that spirit within them faced persecutions, mobbing, and even death to establish the principles of God's kingdom. Then, as in the days of Abraham and on down through the stream of time, the building of the city of God has been the objective. Now, as children of the early pioneers we have the task of establishing Zion by the stewardship plan. The goal is still before us—and so are the obstacles. We must guard the open door that will slam shut in our faces if we do not keep the commandments of God laid down in the Scriptures for us to follow.

THE OBSTACLES today are not persecutions and mobbing that damage the physical body; they are the psychological and philosophical obstacles that attack the spirit and eventually destroy the soul. The open door that leads to disaster is often in little things that grow until they hinder our spiritual progress. Our time is taken up with materialism. The secular is crowding out the spiritual. We sit in easy chairs and are entertained by TV while our children re-act with toy pistols the programs they see.

"But how can we escape these things of the world?" some may ask. If we try to alter or make any changes from the usual way of life we are called a "peculiar people." But why try to escape the issue? It is not all bad; most of it is good. We must be able to differentiate. "Abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good."—Romans 12: 9.

Satan is very subtle. He knows our weakest points. In order to combat the forces of evil we must be fortified with the spiritual power which is gained by study, meditation, and prayer. "Pray always" is a command of God. We cannot always be lifting our voices in prayer, but Jesus gave an example of what to do. When he was talking to the Nephites, after they had been baptized with water and the Holy Ghost, he commanded them to kneel down and pray. After they had poured out their hearts to him in prayer, he commanded them to arise and cease to pray vocally, but to pray continually in their hearts. Our spiritual power is enhanced by the time we spend communing with God.

THE ENSIGN is set on the top of the mountain. Let us climb that mountain. Let us take for our staff God's word of truth, and irradiate from our hearts anything that will hinder his Spirit from dwelling there. Let us give God a portion of our time that the quiet influence of his Spirit may enter into our life to the extent that our climb will be a journey of rejoicing. May we not drift back and forth and be lost in the mists of the valley because we think the effort is too great to meet all the spiritual requirements.

Let us move on with faith that God will fulfill his promises if we do our part to prove worthy of the great blessings he has in store for us. He is waiting patiently for us to find ourselves and emerge from the valley of indecision. Each time we overcome a hurdle, the next one will be easier. At last we shall accomplish the work that has been assigned to us in this dispensation of time.

The vine is a challenge to me to press onward in the face of discouragements. As the philodendron, when seemingly nipped of life itself, doubled its efforts and put out two shoots instead of one, I should double my effort to rise above obstacles.

O God, give strength to all thy saints,
And courage give them too!
And oh, lend them thy mighty hand,
To conquer every foe.

Question Time

Question:

1. What should be the relation between the Latin-American Indians and the Reorganized Latter Day Saint in Latin America now? Should we attempt to tell them the gospel message through personal evangelism if we are working or traveling among them?

2. What countries other than Mexico have laws prohibiting our ministers from preaching unless they are native-born citizens?

Georgia

G. L. S.

Answer:

1. By all means members of the Reorganization should tell the gospel message to Latin-American Indians, Latin Americans of mixed blood, and Spanish-speaking peoples. A big need of these people is literature. Without such materials they are often left confused, and the local priests and relatives are frequently able to present them with questions which they are unable to answer. Tracts in Spanish and a Spanish translation of the Book of Mormon are being prepared to meet this problem. The best method is personal evangelism at present.

2. As far as we know Mexico is the only nation in North or South America that requires by law that pulpit preaching be under the supervision of a native-born citizen. Mexicans may preach, and they may invite a foreigner to preach, but the foreigner may not preach officially from a pulpit unless so invited. All tourists may engage in personal conversation on religious matters, however.

Question:

According to our church, tithing that is paid through the course of a year must be tithed again at the end of the year. In other words we tithe on our tithing. Can you explain why? This is very confusing to me.

Missouri

S. B.

Answer:

Your confusion comes from an "optical or mental illusion" many of us have experienced. You never tithe your tithing; rather, you tithe your increase. You pay one tenth of the increase, not one tenth of the tithe. The tithing procedure is as follows: From your yearly income, you deduct your necessary living expenses (tithing and offerings to the church are not considered in this category). The balance after this deduction is your increase. One tenth of this amount is tithe. This may be paid in one lump sum at the end of the year, or it may be paid in smaller sums during the year (the last method is preferable). Remember, payments made during the year are deducted from the total tithing due before the final payment is made.

Many Saints say they "tithe their investments, amusements, etc." From this viewpoint they might also say they "tithe their tithing." But neither statement is correct. Actually they are tithing their "increase"—from which they make investments and buy luxuries.

A review of the "Annual Summary," page 30, of your Youth or Family Income and Expense Record will help clarify your confusion.

Question:

Is there any reason other than custom why the bread and wine cannot be blessed at the same kneeling and served so that those in one part of the church get the bread first and the rest get the wine? Then the order could be reversed until all are served.

California

C. W.

Answer:

Precedent as set by Jesus Christ is "That the Lord Jesus the same hour in which he was betrayed took bread: And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: do this in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me" (I Cor. 11: 23-27). In this reference the order of first the bread, then the wine, is given four times.

It is again repeated in this order in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, 23. It is evident that the Lord gave the order of blessing and serving the bread and the wine as it pleased him. Christ's body was first offered, then came the blood from the wound made in his side by the spear used by the soldier (John 19: 34).

It might be a means of saving a little time to bless both the bread and wine and serve them as suggested in the question, but one should be true to the order of events as well as kind. True worship and proper "remembrance" as well as a sacramental renewal of divine covenant between the member of the church and God, through the authorized offices of the church, should be carefully observed.

The proper order and sequence should be preserved as given to us by God. One departure may lead to another and another. Moroni sets forth the order for the bread and wine. "And they administered it according to the commandment of Christ; wherefore we know the manner to be true; and the elder or priest did minister it."—Moroni 4: 2.

Question:

Does the church at the present time approve of members becoming Masons since Joseph Smith was a Mason? Missouri

K. J. M.

Answer:

The most recent official action of the church which may answer the question is General Conference Resolution 593, adopted April 16, 1907: "That we discourage members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from holding membership in any society or order which requires the taking of oaths or the entering into covenant or obligation to guard the secrets, purposes, or doings of its organization."

Zion-building across the Sea

By Elva T. Oakman

HOW OFTEN have you heard the words, "It just can't be done"? They are applied to nearly every Zion-building activity. In part that is true. We cannot build in our own way, or in our own strength; but if we would so build that all things testify of the Master, and if we would discover his way, nothing can be withheld. Here is what some church women are doing.

Berlin, Germany

It was with expectancy that we entered the church in Berlin—a church that has come up through the crucible of suffering. The building is one that any group would be proud to claim. It was largely built by the Saints themselves out of rubble. The elder who did most to make it possible was later imprisoned by the Russians and stripped of his possessions, but he was finally freed through the power of God.

This Sunday was a very special one. All of the missionaries and Brother Beil, the patriarch, were to be there. Everyone came who possibly could. Many traveled long distances through country that was dangerous. Some were turned back by the Russian police and had to find other ways of attaining their goal. The building was filled to overflowing with a happy people.

Food is not plentiful in Berlin, and over half of the Saints that day had come from the East Zone where it is so scarce that other nations have been trying to help. To feed so many under such conditions might seem an insurmountable task to women of less vision.

Not a woman was compelled to miss the services that day. A few left just before twelve to be sure that all was ready. The food consisted of a bowl of soup and a bun. Nothing could have been more delicious or more satisfying. There were no complaints, just thankful hearts.

When the women's meeting began at two thirty every woman was there. At the close the leader made only one request of me, "Please ask the sisters everywhere to pray for us." It is a simple request, isn't it? Can we, with our abundance, remember them and their need? We are free to worship with our brothers and sisters as we choose; we are free to go when and where we will. Perhaps we should have asked them to pray for us.

Enfield, England

Behind a green cloth curtain ten nursery children on ten little chairs faced ten other children on ten little chairs. At one end an altar had been formed. It consisted of a large framed picture, "Jesus and the Children," and sat almost on the floor. At the other end of the two rows of children was a row of perambulators. In every pram there was a child, just as he'd come to church.

The conditions for a nursery were not ideal. There was only a thin wooden partition between the children and the church proper. In it were open windows for ventilation. Not far behind the pram section, late-comers entered the door to go into the church. There was no curtain there.

The children gathered early and quietly. On this day conference was in session and there were visitors; but they, too, partook of the spirit of this nursery.

The children were too close to the adults to sing so they just opened with prayer. All of the children not in prams quietly gathered around the picture of Jesus and knelt while teacher prayed. Then they took their seats and in a service of giving, the offering was taken and placed beside the picture with prayer.

Now the first picture was taken away and a story picture put in its place; then the story was told. Sometimes a child interrupted with a question, sometimes the teacher gave the class an opportunity to talk, but all was done in quietness.

Following the story came the hand-work period. This day pencils and paper were used. If the child in the pram was old enough to sit up and watch, he, too, was given paper and a pencil. Some only waved them back and forth, but there was no noise.

These were average children from average homes. Outside of church, some had more than average vim and vigor. The teacher? No, she was not average. She had disciplined her own self and come into contact with the Master. We can do that, too, if we will pay the price. Jesus is eager that little children shall be brought to him. No physical handicaps can mar that coming if the light of his Spirit be within. A nursery should be a must for every church.

Hannover, Germany

It was Sunday morning and time for church school. The children entered the lower room quietly. One ten-year-old boy hovered around the door until teacher came, then he poured his tale of woe into her understanding ears. He hadn't done his memory work as well as he could. All of the school examinations had been taken this week, and he'd had to study much to pass, so he'd let his church school work slide.

There were two classes, and each began in its own way. This day I watched the juniors. First, each child in turn repeated his memory work. It was a very long passage and each did well and was praised. Even the boy whose schoolwork had taken so much of his time needed only a little prompting.

Next, the children formed a circle and stood with bowed heads while the teacher prayed. It was a humble prayer. Although I could not understand the words, I could not mistake the thrill of the Spirit which literally filled the room. The children stood motionless. Then I joined hands with them as they sang in German, and from memory, "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

When all were seated the class period began. First the old Bible stories were reviewed; then a new one was told and discussed.

These boys and girls literally relived the experiences of those men of old. The kindergarten teacher unthinkingly chose a place directly in front of this class, and not three feet away, in which to have her class sing and play. Not a junior so much as glanced at the younger children. All eyes were fixed on the face of the teacher.

"Well, she was different," you say. No, she wasn't. Later I was privileged to talk to this sister. I told her I had sensed the Spirit in her prayer and in her teaching. Her answer was humbly spoken, "I pray much." She didn't mention it, but she studies the Scripture much also, or she could not make it so live for her class. She loves those children with all her heart. Truly she sits with them at the feet of the Master. They are never out of her thoughts, nor is he.

Everywhere

I understand there is another teacher like this in Rotterdam, Holland. There are some in the United States, and indeed, doubtlessly in all the places where the church is found.

Yes, it can be done. A large number of people can be fed with a minimum amount of labor and with singleness of heart on the Sabbath day.

If I Had Time to Read

IN THE BISHOP MUSEUM there is a collection of white plaster heads which, though the material is inappropriate to realism, represents in eerie vitality the combinations of racial types to be found in Polynesia. All museums are haunted—how could it be otherwise?—and this particular display has a ghostlike fascination. Each of the faces, as Emerson observed, finds room in it for all its ancestors, and each looks with a touch of mockery at the flesh-and-blood visitor, recognizing him too as an exhibit of amalgamation.

The anthropologist, Thor Heyerdahl, just published American Indians in the Pacific (Rand McNally) in which he explains his theory of how these types came to be and how the islands in this part of the world were populated. In his introduction, Mr. Heyerdahl sets forth the opinions of other commentators about these origins, and in the opening chapter gives not only the supporting evidence for his idea but the basis upon which an anthropologist works. The validity of his thesis is, for the layman, impossible to judge, but the book will be of great interest to the Reorganized Latter Day Saint who has made a serious study of Indian ethnology. In spite of its 800-page length the work is admirably succinct; and the skillful way that many areas of scientific knowledge are drawn upon is wonderfully instructive, creating as one goes along the same kind of stay-awake-all-night-and-read excitement that one felt in his earlier volume, Kon-Tiki. The pictures, especially those in the chapter "Stone Human Statues and Megalithic Cult-sites," are splendid, and his explanation of the great stone faces on Easter Island is plausible and satisfying.

Wee children can be cared for in an orderly way during the church service, even when no soundproof room is available. No matter how small they are, they can be taught of the Master, and his Spirit will be there to bless. Children of every age can be so intrigued by the gospel message that no distraction of any kind can turn them aside.

Such workers shine out as bright stars in a world of darkness. And the miracle of it is that wherever they shine, other little lights begin to shed their glow also. Were there enough of them a whole city could be lighted. In that light a man could be held up for all the world to see even—Jesus Christ, the Light of the World.

The chapter most likely to interest the Latter Day Saint reader is the last one, "Myths and Memories" because, when thought about in connection with the Jaredite story, it is provocative. The price of the book unfortunately is rather alarming—$15.00. But this consideration will not dismay a determined reader, and if all else fails, this is one of those items for which one might utilize the methods of polite extortion which make Christmas so rewarding a holiday. “And When Thou Prayest”

By Heber F. Colvin

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men; for, verily, I say unto you, they have their reward.—Matthew 6: 5.

AS THE CHRIST so clearly taught, the benefits to be gained from prayer are to be found in the reach of the heart toward God. The sham inherent in pretense has only the substance of make believe, the poorest of substitutes for the fulfillment to be found in the world of reality.

We do not see God as we see one another, yet he is the source of all being. We may first approach acquaintanceship with him in childhood because Mother and Father think there is some virtue in prayer, or we may pray once or twice in a lifetime in some hour of great need. Prayer may indeed be accidental in its birth into our lives, but there is nothing of a chance nature about God. Those who find him late in life might, perhaps, need to make believe at first. Life is made up of experiments along the way. If reaching out into the darkness seems to be groping for the possible existence of something unknown, we often do that in other fields of knowledge.

We learn the alphabet on faith. Learning to count is a senseless task at first until the light of understanding begins to dawn upon us. So it is also in our quest for God. What may seem unfamiliar and senseless at first becomes significant with our grasp of the subject as the understanding of God begins to dawn upon us. As in romance, some have sought after acquaintanceship with God somewhat doubtingly but have stayed for the sake of love. More wonderful than any fancy is the discovery that, as we draw nearer, what appeared to be shadows vanish, for God is there and the better we come to know him, the better we learn to banish the shadows, for “in him there is no darkness at all.” We can have confidence in true friends. With them we can share intimate joys and sorrows.

WHAT IS PRAYER but a talk with God? Of all the friends we can have, the most loving, the most understanding, the only infinite one is God. We can make him our best friend if we will but try. Good friends have many areas of interest. Even the reticent are sometimes more articulate than usual in the presence of a loved and trusted friend. Topics which may be of little importance to the uninformed assume an aura of warmth and interest to those who share a bond of affection; a beautiful earth grows more lovely; appreciation deepens because such harmony promotes the joy of living.

No one likes to have his intentions questioned, yet intellectual honesty is one of the most difficult of all things to acquire. Those of sound character consider sincerity to be one of the necessary virtues they bring to a friendship, yet, taken for granted as this thought is, how does the world’s practice measure up to the standard Christ set? Intellectual honesty is not something we can afford to take for granted in ourselves or others; those who approach the All-knowing One cannot practice any degree of deceit in their relationship with him. God cannot be deceived. He is the one who knows things as they are.

A man will not long continue to do wrong willfully and still pray. It is the influence of the Spirit of God which invites us to pray, and His Spirit does not dwell in unclean temples. When we become criminal, we become enemies of society. So, also, we become unfit to enjoy the society of God if we are not careful—unless we repent of our wrongdoing.

IN LIFE we learn to talk by talking, and we can learn to pray only by praying. We discover the elements of prayer by meditating and permitting the teachings of the Master to live in our minds that they may have place in our lives. It is vitally necessary to consider what God’s purposes are among men that we may do our share intelligently in building his kingdom. When we talk to him, let us speak as though he were present. He is actually. Let respect and affection be mingled with our general conduct as befits our relationship to our Heavenly Father. “And ye shall seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord.”—Jeremiah 29:13, 14, Inspired Version. “And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee; for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.”—Psalm 9: 10.

It is not our place to judge others who pray, for God alone has all the facts about anything at his disposal;

Top Honors to

George and Sequoyah England

George

Sequoyah

GEORGE ENGLAND was valedictorian, and his cousin, Sequoyah England, was salutatorian of the senior class of '53 at Chilocco Indian Agricultural School. George's grade-point average during his four years attendance was 2.727; Sequoyah's was 2.636. Both boys are members of the Cherokee Tribe and live in Chilocco, Oklahoma.

George and Sequoyah are proof that it can be done. It doesn't take a miracle, but it does take plenty of hard work to accept the challenge.

The Indian School Journal has this to say about them: "Sequoyah's honors throughout his years here are annual king, art editor of the Annual, honor society, president of his freshman class, and historian of the band; he participated in football and belongs to the Lettermen's, Journalism, and Type Tusslers clubs."

Each boy is to receive vocational certificates in printing, and each has participated in Chilocco's Scouting program, receiving the Eagle Scout awards in his freshman year.

Other honors George has received are honor society, president of the Type Tusslers Club, student editor in chief of the Journal, reporter for the band, and a member of the Journalism Club. He participated in baseball, lettered in both baseball and basketball, and was chosen for the second team on the all-conference basketball roster. He is also a member of the band.

George and Sequoyah have worked together to develop themselves mentally, physically, and spiritually, and they have become a strong and integrated part of the team fighting valiantly to hold up the light for the whole world to see and know the truth.

Both hold the office of deacon. George has held the offices of president and vice-president of the League, and is now church school secretary. Both are adept speakers and take turns filling the pulpit for preaching services.

George is the son of Virgil G., and Iva M. England.

Sequoyah has held all the offices in the League except that of treasurer, and is now serving as assistant church school supervisor. He is the son of William and Bamma England (deceased). He has been making his home with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Virgil England, for the past eight years.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. I. G. Wilson of Pittsburg, Kansas, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with open house at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Roy Heller; their other daughter, Mrs. Ray Heady, was also present for the occasion, as well as their sons-in-law, grandchildren, neighbors, and friends.

Mr. Wilson was born near Logan, Iowa, on August 4, 1876, attended schools in Iowa and Nebraska, and obtained his Master's degree from the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. He taught in several schools before coming to Pittsburg in 1921 as head of the college English Department.

Mrs. Wilson, the former Kate Hansen, was born near Galland's Grove, Iowa, on September 3, 1877. After attending schools in Iowa and Nebraska she also taught. She received her Bachelor's degree from Pittsburg College in 1928 with her daughter, Eleanor, and her Master's degree in 1930 with the first post-graduate class at the college. She recently received her Fourth Certificate of Progress from the church. She has been active in church work since her youth and has taught classes of all ages, including the women's department.

Fear Not

Years have passed since I last wrote to the Herald. I am writing now so that my friends will know I am still trying to be faithful to the Cause. I've had many evidences of the truthfulness of this work, and I've been blessed in various ways. I am particularly grateful for the peace of mind which God has given me. Recently I was much disturbed, but through prayer and meditation the "still small voice" seemed to speak these beautiful words to me: "Fear not. I am God, and I change not. Neither do I look upon the outward form . . . but into the heart."

I shall strive to be faithful so that the purpose for which I was created may be realized in my life.

We Have Returned

Toward the latter part of reunion we often hear this familiar commitment: "When I go back to my home branch I'll . . ." This is said year after year and, if we would conduct an investigation, I imagine we would find the same neglect, the same unfinished work as before. What we lack is the desire to spend ourselves on something bigger than we are. When we stand before the judgment bar of the Almighty it will not matter how often we sang in the choir, or how modern our branch was, or the number of times we supported building-fund suppers, or even how often we attended church.

The theme at reunion was "The Challenge of the Restoration"—which is to build Zion. But that's a little vague. This is one way it will be built: by going out into the world and making truth and righteousness popular. The Communists' motto is "Win the World"—to eventual darkness. If we want to win the world to the light of Zion living, then we need to be active in those fields where we influence the most people—in education, government, labor-management, publications. (Read You Can Change the World by James Keller.)

It has been said that Zion will never be built by just a righteous people, for they must do good as well as be good. Christ went among the people restoring sight, feeding the hungry, raising the dead, driving out the money-changers. We also must go into the world, taking the gospel of truth and putting into action the things we preach. Now that reunion is over and we have returned to our homes, we have the opportunity to show that it did make a difference in our lives.

A Testimony of God's Love

I have been urged many times to put into writing the most outstanding experience of my life. I hope it will strengthen the faith of others, and be a witness to any who are in doubt as to God's love for his people or his ability to heal them.

I was reared in a Christian home and my parents taught me early in life about the goodness of God, as well as the laws He has given us to abide by, if we are to be deserving of his blessings. I developed a profound faith, and placed it in a servant of God I knew, Elder Mart Ralston, father of Seventy Russell Ralston.

When I was about eleven years old I developed typhoid fever. I asked my parents to send for Brother Mart. He came and administered to me, but I was no better. As I got steadily worse I asked again for Brother Mart. He drove the thirty-five miles as before to administer to me, but still I was not healed.

The fever continued, and finally the doctor said that he could do no more for me, that it was just a matter of hours until the end. My parents continued to pray and searched the Scriptures for more light and inspiration that they might know God's will and if they should send for the elder again. By this time I was unconscious, and my circulation was very poor. They called Brother Ralston and as he entered the room he realized that I was about gone. When he finished praying I opened my eyes, smiled at him, and muttered something. I had not talked for hours and my swollen tongue filled my mouth. Later I lost my hair and nails; this was proof that I had been very ill. About twenty minutes after I received administration my fever left; I slept peacefully and Brother Mart went on his way, ministering to others.

Surely the signs do follow them that believe.

Through Another Door

This year of our Lord, 1953, is the year that may be remembered as the one in which many folks allowed their gypsy blood full sway. Barriers of national borders have been erased, speed records have been crashed, and time and space mean little. Joining this international trend many church members have been buying plane and boat tickets. I have followed suit and armed with passport, a suitcase full of nylon clothing, and an enthusiastic outlook, I climbed aboard a TWA plane out of New York International Airport to soar across a vast expanse of water and time, landing short hours later at London Airport where I expected to find a new and strange land.

When you travel there are several preparations necessary, and one of the things you accumulate is advice from friends who have made similar trips and who have a second cousin whose great-uncle once made the same trip. So, in spite of what I termed a "tolerant attitude," I came to England expecting a constant cold shoulder, a jumble of unintelligible conversation, a life of inconvenience, sparse meals, and utter lack of humor. To top this off I was to be met by "strangers" whom I had never met.

How pleasantly disappointed I have been! A warm welcome awaited, and I've never had such a pleasant time in my life. These people seem like very old friends and members of my family. There are little speech differences, and I don't use my knife and fork correctly when I eat (according to British usage), but we laugh and agree on 99 per cent of our views and ideals. When a hymn is sung, they, in all probability, will sing it to a different tune than is in our hymnbook, but when I stood up to talk to the Sunday school in Enfield, expectant faces looked up to mine and we decided together that whoever "serves my Father as a Son, is surely kin to me."

Miles and days are passing by, and like the typical tourist I'm viewing the buildings, the scenery, the bombed areas, the ancient churchyards, and the beautiful shop windows. From here I head to the Continent—to France, Germany, and onward before returning to commonplace home life again. Already I've learned a great lesson. The tourist who travels on a U. S. passport may often be disappointed in sights and reception by the peoples of other lands, but the church member who travels on a Latter Day Saint passport enters through another door. I've even decided now that the church here in England is the same as home, and in actuality Ohio is a foreign mission.

Little Things

Little things make up much of life, particularly for those of us who are humble folks and seldom reach the heights of fame. Yet our lives may be an inspiration to our families, our friends, and the church. John Milton said, "They also serve who only stand and wait." Our test of success or failure is our attitude toward life and our fellow men. We attain happiness and peace of mind through our own actions.

Not long ago I arose one morning feeling very depressed. However, my day was so filled with requests to do errands for others or to help them in some way that I forgot my own discouragement. As I reviewed my activities that evening a satisfied feeling of achievement filled my heart; the day had been worth while because God had given me an opportunity to make it so. If we faithfully use our ability in the work of the church, the Master will increase that talent as he sees will be best for us. But we must gladly respond to his call.

Church membership is a test of our faith also. The lay member is needed in the branch as much as those chosen to hold office. While it is an honor to be elected to office, it is also a great responsibility. One's stewardship is greater, and more is expected of him. However, the lay member who seems to have little talent soon becomes discouraged. He is apt to say, "I'm not needed; the Saints will never miss me if I drop out!" Such people do not realize that they need the church even more than the church needs them. They need to grow in the principles of the gospel in order that they may become worthy of God's blessing and eternal life.

God has said that opportunities for doing small things will be ample. They will consist largely in speaking kind words and doing little courtesies, yet a multitude of these small acts of kindness will make a grand total of good works in harmony with our profession which shall lead others to glorify the Father in heaven and bring to us his favor and blessing. May we, as Saints of God, have the courage and the faith to live our lives as he directs, be they humble or great. The only thing that counts is the use we make of our talents and the life we live.

In Need of Friendship

Mrs. Vida Gade and her six children who live at 819 East Huron, Missouri Valley, Iowa, would like to be visited by members of the Reorganized Church living in that area. They have been deserted by their husband and father and are being supported by public welfare. Some of the citizens have helped a great deal, but the family needs the encouragement of the Saints and an invitation to attend services. Whatever can be done for them will be much appreciated.

MORONI AND ROBERT HOYT

Independence, Missouri

Fifty-sixth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lukenbill of Taberville, Missouri, observed their fifty-sixth wedding anniversary on August 8. They have lived on the same farm for fifty years and during that time have been active workers in the Taberville Branch. Mrs. Lukenbill is the former Edna Weir.

They have four living children: Mrs. Marjorie Carroll of Jerome, Idaho, Mrs. Grace Payne and Ray Lukenville of Appleton City, Missouri, and Mrs. Edna Davis of Butler, Missouri; and eleven grandchildren. One son, Ernest, is dead.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Reimer, 3005 S. Sterling, Independence, Missouri, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, Sunday, August 9.

Many friends and relatives met at the Reimer home that afternoon, brought gifts and refreshments, and wished them many more happy years. A program of music was presented, followed by a talk and prayer of blessing given by Elder Almer Sheehy.

Brother and Sister Reimer have spent the greater portion of their lives as members of the Reorganized Church.

Briefs

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your report brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your report, we hope you will understand.

Seventeen Baptisms

RIBSTONE, ALBERTA, CANADA.—A successful missionary series was held at Ribstone from August 16 to 25 by Elder Aleah Koury of Bellingham, Washington, and Elder Howard Fisher of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. They devoted alternate evenings to preaching services and slide lectures. They also visited in homes. The last Sunday, fifteen were baptized, and later two others were baptized. The new members are Anita Bates, Evelyn Furnace, and John Perkins and wife Lillian, all of Edgerton; Mrs. Marion Dallyn and daughter, Marilyn, Mrs. Laura Dallyn, Mrs. Edwin Dallyn, and Mrs. Pauline Hilker, all of Ribstone; Gloria Curtis, Hazel Curtis, Enid Shippy, Mrs. George Skinner, Jr., Mrs. Arvid Skinner, John Skinner, Stewart Skinner, and Donald Skinner, all of Chauvin.

On the last Sunday, the Senlac Branch was visited, and a basket dinner and supper were served in the church parlors. Both elders had their families with them.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 13. Elder Albert White was elected pastor, with Elder George Millar and Brother Vandy Davies to assist him.

Recent visitors to the branch have included Sister Susan Dallyn of Vancouver, Sister Ellen Dallyn of Edmonton, Sister Minnie Burton of New Westminster, Brother Billie Smith of Terrance, British Columbia, and Kenneth Hale and family of Kitsalina Branch.—Reported by MRS. CLIFFORD DALLYN

District Organized

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—The Oklahoma City District was organized February 8, at Oklahoma City, with Apostle Blair Jensen the minister in charge. The newly organized district includes the branches of Oklahoma City, El Reno, Calumet, Wilburton, Haileyville, and Fanshaw, also the missions at Blackgum, Seminole, and Shawnee.

The officers elected were district president, O. O. Dollins, Sr., Wilburton, Oklahoma; counselors approved, R. J. Jones and G. Stewart Wight, Oklahoma City; district secretary, Doris Butler, Oklahoma City; treasurer, Leonard DeHart, Wilburton; women's leader, Mrs. Ruth Goodwin, Shawnee; religious education, A. J. Four Children Baptized

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI.—A number of Saints went to Carthage, Missouri, on Sunday afternoon, March 29, and enjoyed the concert of the Graceland College Band, under the leadership of William Graves, conductor.

On Easter Sunday, Elder C. Houston Hobart, missionary to Montana and a former Webb City resident, assisted with the Communion service and preached at the evening meeting. A Hobart family reunion was also held on Easter Sunday, at Sister Susie Hobart's home. All her children, and most of her grandchildren were together for the first time in eight years.

Other visiting speakers have been Harold Graves of Carthage, William Miller and Warren Eldred of Medoc, Ted Linder, David Lohr, and Stephen A. Black of Joplin, and B. F. Kyser of Miami.

Several women attended the women's retreat at the district reunion at Racine, Missouri, April 9.

Vacation church school was held at the church May 25-June 5 under the direction of Elna Spencer and eight assistants. An achievement program on Friday night climaxed the school.

On Children's Day, June 14, four children were baptized. They were Barbara McCall, Richard Pratt, Joyce Wilson, and Delores Wilson. They were confirmed by Elders Roy Oehring and John Wolf, Sr.

The women's department had a rummage sale May 2, from which they cleared $30. The women have purchased a projector for showing slides, and have assisted in the district women's project. The adult class is purchasing the first set of slides for the projector.

Sunday night services were dismissed during July and August to enable the Saints to attend the services at the reunion grounds.

Annual election of officers was held July 7. Those elected were pastor, James M. Jones, Sr.; assistant pastors, Roy Oehring and John Wolf, Sr.; church school director, LeRoy Worley; adult director, Ethel Harlowe; women's leader, Nelvita Jones; young people's leader and treasurer, John Wolf, Sr.; children's leader, Elna Spencer; secretary, Mildred Fletcher; music director, Thelma Ricke; publicity agent and book steward, Jayne Deaver; solicitor, Irving Ricke; historian, Le Nore Beautte, and librarian, Tommy Trimble.

Business Meeting

EUGENE, OREGON.—Eugene branch held their business meeting August 30, under the leadership of District President J. L. Verhei, with H. M. Carpenter assisting. Officers elected for the coming year were pastor, Elder W. N. Barnhart; secretary and treasurer, Guilda Barnhart; auditor, James F. Wood; church school leader, Lowell Shultz; women's leader and music director, Rena Whittington; young people's leader, Roy Freeman; social leader, Cora Belle Buckbee; publicity and librarian, Myrtle Jacoby; historian, Geraldine Marquis; solicitor and dramatics leader, Carolyn Shultz; building committee, W. N. Barnhart, James Wood, E. N. Barnhart, William Buckbee, and Guilda Barnhart.—Reported by GUILDA BARNHART

Special Speakers

CORINTH, ONTARIO.—Brother and Sister Joe Dickson and son, Gary, were baptized at Delhi on Sunday, April 26, by Elder Archie Barham. On Sunday, November 9, Wendy Marie Jenny was blessed by Elder Beemer, and Nona Phillian was blessed by Brother Barham. Paul Hill was blessed on August 23. Brother A. W. Kennedy was ordained to the office of elder on May 17, by Elders J. C. Stuart and E. M. Kennedy.

The annual branch picnic was held at Upper Park, Port Burwell, on Saturday, July 25.

A presentation was made to Sister Penny McCundy, who is going into training in the nursing school at St. Thomas General Hospital, Sunday, August 30.

Among guest speakers have been Brother Bruce McGregor and Brother J. C. Stuart, London, Brother C. Weeks, Delhi, and Brother E. Hill, Windsor.

On Monday, September 7, Brother Archie Hill left for Lamoni, where he will attend Graceland College.—Reported by A. W. KENNEDY

Three Children Baptized

LINN, MISSOURI.—In April Elder Elroy E. Hanton from Sandusky, Michigan, visited the branch for a week. He visited homes and held preaching services two evenings. Three children were baptized.

The branch enjoyed a fish fry in July, and the annual picnic on July 18. The women's department sponsored a bazaar at that time.

Members of the church attended an ice-cream social in August.

The annual business meeting was held September 2. Paul Litton was elected pastor, and Dorothy Jean Heidibrink was chosen to be church school director.—Reported by MRS. O. LYTTON

Women's Conference Held

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA.—Modesto was privileged to be hostess to approximately eighty guests of the Women's Northern California District spring conference, May 23-24. The theme was "Developing Personalities to Build the Kingdom."

A devotional period, business meeting, and question time were featured on Saturday. Those in charge of the program on Saturday and Sunday were Pauline White of El Cerrito, Opal Page of Los Angeles, Jane Vincent of Berkeley, Dorothy Moorehead of Stockton, Mabel Korrell of San Leandro, Joyce Stiles of Berkeley, Evelyn Wright of Stockton, Virginia Cooper of Napa, Daisy Jennings of Modesto, and Mark Stark of Modesto. Elder Clinton Saxton spoke at the Sunday service on "The Value of Charm in Missionary Work" preceded by the choir's special number, "Beside Still Waters."

On February 15, Sylvia Diane Snider, Lynda Rebecca Snider, and Jeffrey C. Keller were baptized by Elder C. K. Saxton. They were confirmed by Elders Eugene Bivens and Homer Gatchett.

The interior of the upper auditorium was gleaming for Easter as the result of a new paint and texture job, the labor being donated by one of the local members; new overhead indirect lighting was also donated and installed by a member who has now transferred to another locality.

Easter service was made spiritual by the choir under the direction of Irene Gatchett at the morning service, and by a drama, "Symbol of a Cross," at the evening service, with Joyce Colville directing. A pageant was given at the night service on Mother's Day, "Mothers of Sons," preceded by a candle service by the Zion's Leaguers and followed by a reception.

Some of the guest speakers during the past months have been Elder W. H. Dawson of Sacramento, Elder C. K. Saxton of Fresno area, L. J. Richards, pastor of Enoch Hill, Independence, Missouri, and Elder Myron Schall of Sacramento.

Several fund-raising projects for this period have been held.—Reported by ILAH G. ROSE

Youth Camps Unite

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The Chicago and Northeastern Illinois Districts united this year for their first full week of youth camp at Naperville, Illinois. Camp continued from June 28 to July 5, under the leadership of Elder Lyle W. Woodstock. There were forty-four campers.

There was a unanimous vote from the youth to call the camp "Camp Woodstock" in honor of Brother Charles B. and Sister Lenoir Woodstock, pioneers in youth work in the church.

A religion class was conducted by Brother Lyle Woodstock, a class entitled "In the Stream or on the Bank" was led by Sister Lydia Wight, and a "Know Yourself" class which included personality and intelligence testing was conducted by Elder Raymond Troyer. Vernon and Ann Petit were in charge of handcraft and were assisted by Ward Serig. Doris Woodstock was assistant camp director, and was in charge of campfires. Patriarch L. S. Wight conducted an evening discussion which dealt with teen relationships.

Elder Louis Hancock was business manager. Mrs. Margaret Reedy was in charge of meals and was assisted by Mrs. Hancock and Mrs. Jane Johnson. Bob Kent was in charge of the flag service, and Terry Smith led the morning devotions.—Reported by RAYMOND TROYER

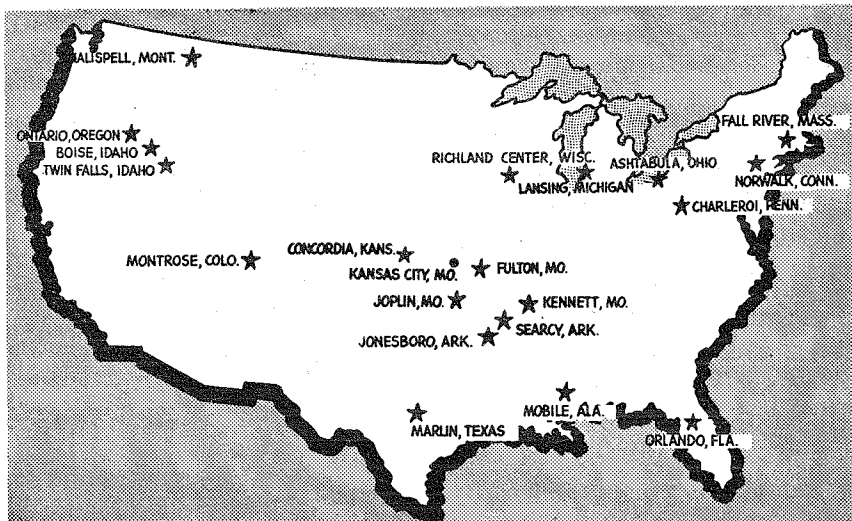

One Baptized

ALAMO, TEXAS.—A baptismal service was held August 13 in the Rio Grande Valley Branch for Juan Lara.

Election of branch officers was held on September 9. Elder Wayne Jackel was elected pastor. He appointed Elder Wayne Simmons as his associate pastor and Elder C. E. Bowden as counselor. Brother Bowden was also elected book steward. Mrs. Ruth Wessling was elected women's leader.—Reported by BLANCHE SOLOMON

Retreat Held

BUTLER, MISSOURI.—A Zion's League retreat for the young people of the Rich Hill District was held August 29-30, with forty-five in attendance. Volleyball and shuffleboard were enjoyed by those arriving Saturday afternoon, with a banquet in the evening, at which District Leader C. A. Berg was master of ceremonies. The address was given by E. E. Gamet, president of Butler Branch. A camp-

We're on the Air . . .

Each month the Radio Department prepares a map showing the location of the stations currently carrying a weekly broadcast in the United States. The Saints' Herald carries a current listing of the stations with call letters, time of broadcast, and where the program can be found on the dial. This appears in the "Bulletin Board" section.

Because radio reaches many more people than we could ever persuade to attend our church, we feel that the entire United States at least should be covered by air waves carrying the "Restoration Message." Radio offers an excellent conversation medium that often leads to cottage meetings and baptisms.

The above coverage map has some vacant spots. Through the local congregations, either separately or jointly in districts and areas, programs can be placed in an advantageous spot to benefit many. By writing the Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, you can secure a sample tape for presentation to your local station. Both doctrinal and nondoctrinal fifteen-minute programs are available on magnetic tapes at a speed of seven and one-half inches per second. Each tape contains two quarter-hour programs, complete with radio choir and organ music, short message, prayer, Scripture reading, opening and closing announcements giving credit to the General Church, and about a twenty-second space of organ music to be played under the local announcement. Radio stations have written the Radio Department in Independence, Missouri, commenting on the excellence of programming, music, and sermon presentation. Your public relation effort can be helped with these recorded programs.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Hursh of Warrensburg, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Maxalene Elane, to A/1C Alan Richard Stagg of Denver, Colorado. The wedding will take place December 6 in Warrensburg.

Beamgard-Balcom

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Balcom of Atherton, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Lenora Kendall, to Thomas Wayne Beamgard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Beamgard of Sugar Creek, Missouri. The wedding will take place October 4 at the Reorganized Church in Atherton.

WEDDINGS

Smith-Parsons

Ardeith Carol Parsons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Parsons of Garden Grove, California, and Raymon C. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Smith of Walland, Tennessee, were married June 7 at the Reorganized Church in Santa Ana, California. Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag conducted the wedding ceremony.

Smith-Smith

Hortense Smith and Dr. R. G. Smith were married August 5 at Horse Cave, Kentucky. The bride was formerly assistant professor in the department of commerce and business administration at Pittsburg State College, and the groom is head of the mathematics department there.

Campbell-Collins

Vivian Collins, daughter of Mrs. Camilla Collins of Lamoni, Iowa, and Glen Campbell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Campbell, also of Lamoni, were married at the Reorganized Church in Lamoni on July 26, Evangelist Roy Chevillie officiating. Both are sophomores at Graceland College.

Froyd-Sherry

Shirley Froyd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Froyd of Maryville, Missouri, and Cleo W. Sherry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sherry of Guilford, Missouri, were married August 24 at the Bedison Reorganized Church, Pastor Orville Fannon officiating. They are making their home in Kansas City, Missouri.

BIRTHS

A son, Kenneth Lincoln, was born on July 7 to CT 1 and Mrs. Edward L. Garfield, currently of Winter Harbor, Maine. Mrs. Garfield is the former Norma Pimentel of Honolulu, Hawaii.

A daughter, Jennifer Anne, was born on June 1 to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Benham of Hopeville, Ontario. Mrs. Benham is the former Leona Paxman.

A son, John Richard, was born on June 11 to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Haw of Dundalk, Ontario.

A son, Allen Glen, was born on September 13 at the Independence Sanitarium to Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Owings of Atherton, Missouri.

Introducing

LOUIS N. WHITEHEAD, Independence, Missouri (page 8), is an instructor in the Kansas City, Missouri, public schools. He was born in Logan, Iowa, August 23, 1921, and baptized there in 1930. After graduating from Logan High School in 1939, he went to Graceland College, was graduated in 1941, then attended Iowa University 1943-44. He received his B.S. in Education from Central Missouri State College in 1948, and his M.A. degree from Colorado State College in 1953.

Brother Whitehead's hobby is woodworking. He is also interested in drama and sports. He received the College Dramatic Award in 1947 and the Distinguished Service Award in 1948 from Central Missouri State College. He is a member of the Kappa Delta Pi, the Phi Sigma Pi (national honor societies in education) and Theta Alpha Phi (national dramatic society).

He married Elma D. Merchant in 1946. They have one child, Vicky, 5.

A member of the Enoch Hill congregation, he was ordained a priest in July, 1946, and is president of the fifth quorum of priests in the Center Stake of Zion.

ALPHA R. WHEELER, Medina, Texas (page 10), is a member of the Bandera, Texas, Branch. He was born in 1880 and suffered from a mild stroke in infancy which left him somewhat handicapped. His great love for the gospel has been an inspiration to those about him. He succeeded in memorizing the greater part of the King James Version of the Bible, and even today can recite most of the New Testament.

Brother Wheeler never married. He was baptized in 1899 and ordained a few months later to the office of priest.

RAIN

There is no substitute for rain. You can irrigate if you wish, and it helps. But the dry air soon takes the moisture out of the soil, and you must irrigate again and again. When the rains come there is moisture in the air, and all the plants in the garden seem to thrive and rejoice. Roses like sunshine, but they grow loveliest when it is filtered down to them through mist and rain.

For many weeks our Midwest has been drying out, with only a hatful of a shower here and there, now and then, helping locally but inadequate to improve the general situation. Yesterday the clouds came over, leaking like sieves. With their faces freshly washed and their thirst quenched, all the plants in the garden looked and felt better. A drink from the sky is worth two from the hose.

CONSCIENCE AND HEALTH

Look to your health; and if you have it, praise God, and value it next to a good conscience; for health is the second blessing that we mortals are capable of, a blessing that money cannot buy.—Izaak Walton.

LIGHTS

On these warm summer evenings we like to look at the sky and see the stars or the moon—whatever jewels the Lord has on display at the moment. Then we look "away down yonder" at the highway where long lines of cars go rushing by, each one following another fast and furiously, as if a kind of madness had seized them. As they round the curve, each pair of lights cuts the darkness like the blade of a broad knife. A moment of intense illumination, then darkness again—over and over many times. They seem never to weary of their dangerous haste. They try to pass each other, and sometimes the cars are smashed and people are killed. So often people are killed merely for trying to get ahead of others.

Back to the stars. They remind us of God's unhurried way of doing things. Men's lights burn brightly, flicker, and go out. God's lights endure with eternity.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

MISSION OPENED

President W. Wallace Smith spoke Sunday, September 27, at the opening of Englewood mission. He was associated in ministry with Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, stake officers C. V. Graham and H. W. Cackler, Dan Belcher, pastor of the Englewood mission, and William La-Grece, pastor of the Englewood congregation. Bishop DeLapp was the evening speaker.

VISITS DENVER

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith left September 17 for Denver, Colorado, where he plans to spend two Sundays.

SPEAKER AT NASHUA

Radio Minister Evan Fry was the speaker at services held Sunday, September 27, at Nashua, Missouri. Brother Fry preached the first sermon given in that church five years ago, when the church was purchased.

AT YOUTH RETREAT

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, attended the Kentucky-Tennessee District young people's retreat at Chickasaw State Park at Beautiful Camp September 26-27. District President Terrell Cochran and other district and local officers were also present. This was the first youth retreat ever held in the district and was under the leadership of L. Don Sutton, district youth leader. About seventy persons attended, including a delegation from Louisiana.

CONTACTS CHURCH WOMEN

Mrs. H. I. Velt, member of the General Church Women's Council, is spending a month in the Arkansas-Louisiana District contacting church women. She is in the company of her husband, Elder Velt, who is holding meetings in that area.

REHEARSALS STARTED

Auditions and rehearsals for the annual radio presentation of "The Messiah," directed by Franklyn S. Weddle, were started Sunday, October 4.

CAMPUS PROGRAM CLOSES

A favorite recreation area in Independence, the R. L. D. S. Campus, closed operations officially on September 26. A committee of volunteers had conducted the summer program, under the supervision of Elders William Ruoff and Lee Hart. An estimated 12,000 persons participated in the night-lighted activities this summer.

BOY SCOUT RETREAT

A retreat for Boy Scouts and adult leaders of sixteen R. L. D. S. sponsored troops was held September 26-27 at Lake Doniphan, with 380 attending. Lee Hart, Stake Director of Youth Activities, was in charge, with Claude Smith representing the stake presidency.

CORRECTION

Brother Garland Tickemyer had charge of children's camps carried on by the Los Angeles Stake, and was not associated with the activities in the Northern California District as reported in the "Herald" for September 28.

Alice Crossan

OFFICE TWO at the Herald House has a new occupant. The new Stepping Stones editor, Alice Crossan, feels she was led to this field of work, and she's satisfied that she's right where God wants her to be. Alice is a brown-eyed blonde from Wyoming, fresh from several years of teaching school. Her understanding of children enriches her work as editor of the junior story paper for the church.

On the side she is an artist, and she does illustrations for both Guidelines and Stepping Stones. She has many interests: writing, drawing, painting, handcraft, and travel. She likes to read, especially the literature of the moderns. One of her prized possessions is an autographed copy of a William Saroyan book.

A native of Wyoming, she was baptized in Albin, Wyoming, and was graduated from Albin High School in 1939, after which she attended Burns Normal School and the University of Wyoming. She has taught school in Little Bear, Meriden, Carpenter, and most recently in Cheyenne, Wyoming. Besides this she has worked in an abstract office, the post office, and with the Department of Internal Revenue. She won first place honors in two high school essay contests and a scholarship award in college.

Alice has some interesting plans for Stepping Stones, including a series of picture stories from the lives of missionaries. She is planning also some "How to Make It" features of particular interest to boys. She wants to find new artists and writers among the church members. Particularly welcome will be boy-slanted action stories, either moral or church-centered.

Consecration, interest in people, and a sense of humor all unite in making her a very welcome member of the editorial staff of church publications.

If Words Could Kill . . .

"Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath."

—James 1: 19.

RECENTLY A FRIEND and I visited the home of an avowed pacifist. We hadn't intended to specifically discuss the virtues of peace, but we were quickly surrounded with the arguments in favor of complete isolationism for America, and especially for all good Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

We listened, and occasionally added our thoughts on the subject—both pro and con. We soon discovered that with this young man, there was no "con." For he violently resisted any suggestion of forceful self-preservation.

As we left the house, my friend remarked, "If words could kill, we'd be dead!"

All of us can recall giving or receiving a small "barb" occasionally. And in the name of righteous indignation and holy piety, some of us have sometimes "beat our plowshares into swords" and driven our "point" into someone's heart with excruciating results. In the cause of peace, we have fought a battle of words, and felt joyously exhilarated when our vanquished opponent lay in a heap at our feet.

No, most of us wouldn't think of picking up a weapon of war and "shooting dead" a friend, a neighbor, a prospect for church membership, or even a rival in business and labor. But, in a moment of dignity when our beliefs and ideals are challenged, we loose a barrage of words which literally slays.

A little Quaker girl once expressed herself as we often feel, "I hate war so much that sometimes I want to fight those who advocate it!"

MANY PEOPLE have jumped from a high bridge to their death as a result of the brutal spoken word; others have become drunkards or prostitutes, and now roam Skid Row. Some have become the Hitlers and Mussolinis of business and government. But most of the millions who have been "stabbed" are making a comeback from the feelings of hurt, shock, distrust, and surprise they experienced at our outburst.

Of course all the crippling words have not been given by those who "speak their mind uninhibitedly." The gentle, meek little man or woman in the next block (or do they live in the same house where I live?) sometimes whispers a bit of gossip, perhaps unintentionally malicious but just as deadly. "John Brown was rather unsteady on his feet last night," or "Bill Smith wasn't home last night. I wonder if Bill and his wife aren't getting along too well?"

And the spoken word flits from ear to ear, and grows and changes until John Brown and Bill Smith discover stony stares and pitying glances penetrating them from all sides. Unless a misconception is corrected or his neighbors are tolerant, John and Bill will soon find themselves ostracized from their immediate community.

THE DISPASSIONATE and emotionally controlled expressions of opinions are sometimes hard to find. But more and more Christians are leading the way in setting the proper example in this phase of human behavior. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers" (Ephesians 4: 29) is counsel being heeded in increasing numbers. Reorganized Latter Day Saints are discovering the danger, as well as futility, in debate, argument, and gossip.

One hundred years ago strong words and strong actions were in good taste. Open "warfare" often broke out in frontier towns. But as the elements of Christian believers moved in, the elements of lawlessness, indecency, and human exploitation moved out. Throughout the world where the message of Christ touches and takes root, the crude human relations change for the better.

This evolution in attitude will continue to bear good fruit. If the faithful Saint will accept his responsibility of "bridling the tongue," and will diligently teach by precept and example those who are in his household, he will have made one of the greatest contributions to Zion's living. He will have discovered one way of being the "salt of the earth," for his behavior will indeed "season" the world. He will be the "leaven in the bread," and through his efforts the world will "rise" to a new height in righteousness.

In one of our homes or in our next-door neighbor's home, there may be developing today a future Joe Stalin or an Abraham Lincoln. Our use of "the tongue" may make the difference. A reasonable, positive approach to every situation will prove most profitable to both the affairs of men and the affairs of God.

"Words that kill" must be replaced by words that give "abundant life."

The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10: 10.

Official

Graceland College Day

Sunday, October 25, has been officially designated as Graceland College Day. It is expected that friends of Graceland throughout the church will participate in this observance.

Graceland College Day is significant for a number of reasons. Of prime importance is the development of appreciation for the purpose of the college in the total program of the church. Ministers who will occupy the pulpits on College Day are urged to give special attention to the fact that Graceland is a tool in the kingdom-building program.

Because of the divine task of the church, and the fact that Graceland plays an important part, our appeal to high-quality students should be strengthened. Glamorous offers—scholarships, etc.—of other colleges take too great a toll of our potentially outstanding students. Accordingly, despite the fact that the physical facilities of the college are taxed by an overflow of students, the pastoral appeal for high-quality students should not diminish.

College Day will also involve an offering. Many splendid projects have been accomplished in this special way. Last year four pressing needs were outlined in the Herald. Three of those have been completed. The Board of Trustees, in conjunction with General Church officers, will determine the important needs for the 1953 College Day proceeds and will authorize their expenditure.

We urge widespread and generous support of Graceland College Day on October 25.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
by W. Wallace Smith

New Members to College Committee

This is to advise those concerned that Dr. Dwight Davis, 1540 East Mechanic Street, Independence, Missouri, has been appointed to serve as a member of the General Church Committee on Ministry to College People. Dr. Davis will serve as chairman of the subcommittee on Ministry to Students, giving special attention to our university student groups.

Other members of the general committee include Dr. Lawrence Brockway, Ann Arbor, Michigan, general chairman; Dr. Evan Shute, London, Ontario, chairman of the subcommittee on Ministry to Professional People; Harley Morris, Madison, Wisconsin, editor of the University Bulletin, and Carl Mesle, secretary.

A number of other professional and business men and appointees also will be serving as members of subcommittees and as regional representatives in this task of taking the church to our college people.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

We have a letter from Garland Tickemyer telling us of the death of Will Badham. At the same time he informs us that he came into the possession of an old diary of James R. Badham, the first pastor of the Los Angeles Branch. In this diary is contained the following statement:

James R. Badham Report on Visit to David Whitmer

Copied from the James R. Badham Diary by G. E. Tickemyer 9-29-53
March 20, 1881, in Richmond, Ray County, Missouri

Visited David Whitmer, the remaining living witness to the book of Mormon. He bore a strong testimony that an angel showed him the book and the characters thereon, and that the voice of God declared from the heavens that it was translated by the gift and power of God. That this ministration was not the only one by any means, that a messenger had come to him in the fields, and he was prepared for the coming testimony.

He, Whitmer, has in his possession the original Book of Mormon manuscript and the original characters presented to Professor Anthony of New York by Martin Harris, both of which I saw and handled. Also heard a blessing read, pronounced for him by Joseph the Prophet, which he holds very sacred. . . . J. R. BADHAM

It is interesting how additional information keeps coming to our desk from time to time which gives us corroboration of the authenticity of the witness to the Book of Mormon manuscript. We are happy to be able to pass this information on to Herald readers.

Ottawa, Canada, Pastor Honored

Recent editions of the Ottawa Journal and Ottawa Citizen (September 23) carried accounts of a banquet held in the Ottawa Church to pay tribute to Elder and Sr. A. E. Caldwell for their more than thirty-five years of devoted service to the branch.

At a testimonial banquet last evening the Ottawa Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints paid tribute to Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Caldwell, 317 Hinchey Avenue, for their more than thirty-five years of devoted service.

During these years Mr. Caldwell served as pastor of the group without any financial remuneration. The recent appointment of William McMurray to the Ottawa pastorate brings to a close this chapter of loyal and selfless ministry.

Speakers at the banquet were F. Henry Edwards, . . . and Apostle C. George Mesley . . . currently in charge of the Ontario mission.

Dr. Wallace B. Shute, as master of ceremonies, read congratulatory messages received from other leading ministers of the Reorganized Church. One of particular interest from Israel A. Smith, president of the church and grandson of its founder, Joseph Smith, read:

"The work of our church is built around the contributions made by men and women who feel that the love of God imposes on all of us obligations of similar love and service. The church could not continue without the ministry of good men and women motivated in this fashion. . . . It is a genuine pleasure to congratulate you on your joint ministry and to thank you most sincerely for the contribution which you have made together."

A radio was presented to the couple, and it was announced that a memorial to be known as the "Caldwell Library" was to be placed in the new church at Westboro—soon to be under construction.

Proclaim These Things

By Paul M. Hanson

A sermon preached April 12, 1953, at the Institute of Evangelism

My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God—Proverbs 2: 1-5.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which we have the honor to represent has three books it looks upon as inspired of God: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. From the preface of the Doctrine and Covenants (Section 1, verses 3, 4) given by the Lord in 1831, we read:

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall. Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world.

Here is a divinely given portrait of the age in which we live. The causes of the calamity forecasted are set forth: a straying from God's ordinances, men walking in their own way.

The prophecy of the wicked being "cut off from among the people" is almost identical with what was quoted by the Apostle Peter from a prophecy by Moses. To my mind it is one of the most startling prophecies in the Bible. Peter, in setting forth that the covenants of God will be fulfilled, declares:

For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.—Acts 3: 22-24.

High Lights and Shadows

Joseph Smith, after an angel from heaven appeared to him, quoting a number of prophecies including this, said that the "prophet" referred to in the Scripture was Christ, and that the prophecy had not been fulfilled but soon would be. Here the reason for the world's ills is ascribed to a very basic cause. God is left out of consideration, or has been exiled from human hearts. No one can make a success in life with God left out of consideration. Mussolini couldn't do it. Hitler couldn't do it. Nobody else could do it. Without God one has no beginning from which to start and no end toward which to move.

It's not a good thing to look only at the shadows of a portrait. I heard a story of a man who was about to jump off the Brooklyn Bridge. Another man went to him and told him he ought not to do that. "Oh," he cried, "things are awful." "Yes, they are bad." "Oh," he said, "they're terrible." "They could be better. Now you come with me and we'll talk this thing over." They left the bridge, and in a little while they came back, and both jumped off together.

We must look to the high lights as well as the shadows. A black sheet of paper does not present a portrait. Neither does a white sheet. But with the high lights and the shadows of the prophecies blended, we can see and have an interpretation of the age into which we've been projected. What is one of the high lights of this age?

The Unchangeability of God

From the preface of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 6, we read:

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I, the Lord, am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh—the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand—when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion.

Now if we would stop there and look at only that, things would appear pretty gloomy. But we read on:

And also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

I feel that one of the leading contributions our church has made to the world, especially in the field of religion, is its promulgation of the doctrine of the unchangeability of God. The very introduction of the Lord's work in these last days is filled with experiences that confirm this doctrine.

Joseph Smith in his youth was troubled with the question now occupying the minds of some of the ablest ecclesiastics in Christendom attempting to bring about the union of churches. The young man wanted to know which church to join. In harmony with the words of James, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him," in prayer he sought divine light. The young man returned from his communion with God and announced that God had revealed himself to him. Here was something in the nature of an explosion of a spiritual atom bomb. The heavens opened and God revealed himself, giving an interpretation of the present age. Here was the starting of a movement that was to expound and carry forward the doctrine of the unchangeability of God.

There are so many texts that ought to make this plain without a prophet having to arise and announce it to the world. We read in the Scriptures, "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me."

A Personal God

In my youth I thought much on the great question, "Is there a God?" I concluded there was. But when there came to me from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints an unfolding of God's character, then I had something to think about besides merely that God lives. When I first heard that term, "unchangeability," there came to me the wondrous thought that then he was my God as much as he was the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Isaiah, and Malachi, or the God of angels and archangels—what a thought!

We read what is being seen through the great telescope at Palomar in California. In Life magazine (October 9, 1950) there appeared a photograph of the heavens. In one little circle up to the right was a small, dim star that the article said was one billion light-years away. Think of it! Think of what just an hour's light distance means, a hundred years, a thousand years, a million years, and a billion years. And what's beyond the billion years? What a God we worship! And he is unchangeable in love, power, intelligence, and holiness!

If this doctrine had been properly understood, there would have been no trekking to Utah by Brigham Young and many followers. Being unchangeable, God is impartial and accessible to mankind. I have gazed upon the Rocky Mountains, the Alps of Switzerland, and the towering Andes. Some of the glory of God from the heavens has been reflected to me and I have stood on the shore of an ocean and thought of the waters reaching out to a distant shore, and from the Arctic to the Antarctic. But nothing fills my mind and heart with awe like the unchangeability of God.

One of the declarations received from God by the church is "The Lord is nigh." Do we preach that enough? Another is "Peace shall be taken from the earth." Is not that the situation now? And "The wicked are to be destroyed." In reading further, we discover that the fullness of the gospel is to be preached to the whole world and before kings and rulers.

Dull Religion

Religion was very dull in 1830 when our church was organized. It was generally believed in Christendom that the Bible contained the complete and final revelation of God to man. That was another way of saying that the heavens are brass. No matter how great one's faith, there could be only the resoundings of brass in return. "You can't hear from God today." We don't hear that word "can't" as we did in my boyhood days. "You can't be healed by the power of God now. You can't experience angelic ministrations, or receive revelation from God."

In Boston some of you have seen the cemetery adjoining the King's Chapel on Tremont Street. I had heard that in a part of the cemetery was a place reserved for the burial of infants or children who had not been baptized. One day, going along the sidewalk, the gate was open and I saw the caretaker just inside. I walked in. "Oh," he said before I had finished my question, "you would like to see where the babies were buried who were not baptized." He took me down to a corner of the cemetery. There were no headstones of any kind. "There," he said, "is where they were buried."

Think of it! This was done in the name of the Christ, who said, "Let little children come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven." A theological dogma got such a hold of the people that they thought infants who had not been baptized (christened) were not fit to receive a burial near their forebears—because they could not produce a baptismal certificate.

Unpopular Religions

It is not strange that the work of God through the young prophet, Joseph Smith, did not get a unified reception in Christendom. Think of the refusal of the Jews to accept the teachings of the Savior. They held their religious leaders in great esteem and would not believe that they could be wrong. They liked to refer to their geneology; they passed encomiums upon their leaders, for through their ancestors had come revelations from God; they possessed priesthood; they had a temple, yet they did not really know what it was all about. When Jesus came, their religious leaders cried, "Away with him; give unto us Barabbas."

It is to the glory of Christianity that God is portrayed not only as a God who created the world but as one working within the framework of his universe. So we have such expressions as "our Father," and the profound saying of Paul, "In God we live and move and have our being." He quoted with his endorsement from one of the Greek poets, "We are the offspring of God."

Here are the words of Jesus to his disciples: "I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends." Also, not a sparrow falls to the ground without the Father's notice. "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." Even to the apostate church at Laodicea, he announced, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Christ was standing at the door of one of his churches, trying to get in!

The Fullness of the Gospel

To build the kingdom of God it is necessary to have the fullness of the gospel—not 80 per cent of it, not 95 per cent of it, but the fullness of the gospel. The Lord says the fullness of the gospel shall be "proclaimed unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers." The term "fullness" suggests to me that other religious bodies of Christendom have, or may have, the gospel in fragmentary form. It carries with it the idea that God has moved his work forward in the last days, and very properly—that those who already believed in Christ might have additional concepts to make their belief more fruitful in the development of the kingdom of God among men.

So the church of Jesus Christ comes not to take from anyone any religious truth. If one believes in Christ, we say, "Hold to that precious truth. Let no one rob you of it. If you look upon the Bible as containing God's revealed will to man, then let not that truth slip from you. Hold to what you have and be ready for additional light of God to flow freely into the soul." The work of God is to build up—to add to truth and not to destroy truth.

Influences

In the Doctrine and Covenants we learn that wise men were raised up by the Lord to draft that immortal document that lies at the base of our liberties, the Constitution of our nation. In its creation the floodgates of civil liberty were opened wide. This shows that God works outside his church to bring to pass his purposes.

Luther proclaimed against a bull issued by Leo X, granting an indulgence to all who would contribute to the rebuilding of Saint Peter's church in Rome. Luther declared that indulgences were nets with which to catch money. He taught the forgiveness of sins through faith in Jesus Christ, a doctrine which he said brought new light into his soul. He maintained that the pope could not declare a sin to be forgiven by God. When summoned before the Diet of Worms to appear before the emperor, prelates, princes, and ambassadors, he stood firm and refused to yield or recant. Here the floodgates of religious liberty began to open.

Apostle J. F. Curtis and I visited Wartburg, Germany. There in a castle surrounded by a stone wall we saw where Luther enjoyed protection while translating the New Testament. He gave the Bible to the German people. It now holds the same place in the religious life and literature of Germany as the King James Version does in England and the United States. We sat in the chair at the table where Luther's translation was made. One cannot keep from appreciating some of the work done by the great reformer, and tribute may well be given to other reformers. God was moving to bring to pass what he had in mind.

More Than a Fragment

There is much that suggests one should have the fullness of the gospel. Here is instruction about prayer from Apostle Paul:

Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God.—Romans 8: 26, 27.

Jesus taught, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." It is preposterous to think that one can just ask God for anything that he wants and receive it. Note the factor that leads to answered prayers. The Spirit helps one to pray as he ought to pray.

It is not boasting to say that in our church has been placed the custody of the fullness of the gospel.

One might ask a member of the Reorganized Church, "Do you believe in God?" "Most assuredly." "In Christ, the only begotten Son of God?" "Yes." "The Holy Spirit?" "Yes." "Do you believe Jesus was born of a virgin?" "Yes." "Do you believe in the Lord's Supper?" "Yes." "Baptism?" "Yes, by immersion." "Do you believe in having bishops in your church?" "Yes." "Elders and evangelists?" "Yes, and all of the other officers of which we read in the New Testament church." "Do you believe in divine healing?" "Yes." "Do you believe that Christ will come in glory to earth the second time?" "Yes." One does not have to leave the church to find those who believe in the second advent of Christ. He doesn't have to search for an institution that believes in baptism, or in divine healing, because Latter Day Saints have such truth. I say it's not boasting; it's simply stating a fact.

Joseph Smith and his associates did not seize a fragment of Christianity, imagining they had the whole. They prayed in humility for divine light—in the restoration of God's work there came the fullness of the gospel.

The Miracle of Faith

We need to be more like the woman who edged her way to Jesus in the midst of the throng. She had suffered for twelve years with a malady and had suffered many things from the physicians. In the midst of the throng, Jesus asked his disciples, "Who touched my clothes?" The disciples said, "Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?" Finally a woman came. What thoughts must have rushed through her mind! It does not say so in the text, but I believe it will do no violence to inject what might have happened. When Jesus asked who it was that touched him, I wonder if she did not at first just touch him and then, lost in wonder, having seen radiance in his countenance and perceived his greatness, seize his garment and hold it. When Jesus turned perhaps she pulled his coat. Then the woman, fearing and trembling, "came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth." No doubt she wondered if she had done something she should not have done. Jesus said to her, "Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole: go in peace, and be whole of thy plague."

We need more people reaching out to the hem of the robe of the Master. I received a letter some time ago from a member of the church stating that she had visited a young woman who was having a rather hard battle in life with her home cares after having undergone an operation. This member in writing said she tried to comfort the young woman, telling her of the loving God. The young woman answered, "Oh, if I only knew how to find him." Of immeasurable worth is the church to all.

When Brother Hield and I were down in Guatemala City we visited Sister Lucy Aranda, the wife of Jose Aranda, an interpreter in the French legation in Guatemala City. When I learned she was of Jewish descent, I inquired into her background, and as she proceeded telling me I feared that perhaps I was intruding where I should not. But I wanted to learn of her background in Poland and her experiences. She told that her father and mother were Jewish, that her father, mother, and brother-in-law were taken out and executed. Her sister was taken to Russia and never heard from again. Then she told me she found a New Testament and there read of Jesus. After a little pause, her expressive eyes telling much, she said, "I love him." I wish I could say that as I heard it from her lips. I shall never forget it. "I love him." Who can fail to be missionary minded when he is aware of the needs of our world?

That Your Joy Might be Full

Faith in God and Christ in an abstract sense is wonderful as far as it goes, but the fullness of the gospel brings one into conscious, intimate relationship with God. How can a fragmentary part of the gospel bring what Christ intended his work to convey? Jesus said, "These things have I spoken unto you, that your joy might be full." If the Psalmist David could express such sentiment as, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" how much more should a believer in Jesus Christ with all that he has an opportunity to learn about now be able to express. If all of us believed the statement of the Psalmist, would we not see numberless mental breakdowns diminishing? Would we not see the terrible sense of insecurity that seizes so many disappearing? The Apostle Paul said, "God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and of love, and of a sound mind." The prophet Isaiah said, "He whose mind is stayed on God shall have perfect peace."

I feel the church has received marvelous treasures from God to share with the world, two of which are the belief in his unchangeability, and the fullness of the gospel.

The privilege of the church is to carry the work of God forward victoriously.

Report from Iran

By Rolla L. Amsberry

Brother and Sister Amsberry are in Iran, where he is director of the Point IV program in the field of education. Through their official capacity, both are able to make contacts with leading Iranians and with the "common man" in the typical village. They assist in many civic projects, and of course are responsible for assisting the Iranian government in development of its school system. They represent the United States government in determining the apportionment of Point IV funds for educational facilities.

In the field of religion, Brother Amsberry writes, "Although we do not appear to be interested in talking about our religion, you can be sure that we miss no opportunity to answer questions asked about our church and its beliefs, nor are we hesitant to compare our church and beliefs with those of others whenever the opportunity arises. I was pleased at a chance statement of one of the men who works with me, 'It is good to get acquainted with you Americans and to find that you are really likeable people and not the hated infidels we had been told you were.'" Brother Amsberry hopes that when the time comes for the gospel to be spread in Iran that the mentioning of their names will open doors to the missionaries. He concludes by saying, "We believe the Restoration's answer to Iran's problems will be accepted when the opportunity comes to tell that story. We do not believe the time is ready yet, but we hope it is not too far distant."—EDITOR

RECENTLY we visited one of the larger independent cities of the Ostan (state). We went into many of the surrounding villages to arrange to remodel, repair, or build new schools.

During this tour I had the unfortunate experience of becoming ill. The symptoms were almost like those of ptomaine poisoning. It was a form of dysentery, known here as "Teheran Tummy of TT's." I suspect I ignored a "hunch" not to drink a glass of iced fruit juice which we were handed in one village. Even part of the Iranians with us became ill. Since the juice was brought to us from a building, I thought it might be clean, but afterward I noticed that the glasses were washed in the jube and that jube water had also been used to make the juice.

Perhaps I'd better explain the jube. It is the water system of Iran—an open ditch. It may bring water from the countryside to the villages and cities, or it may be the ditch where the ghanat system comes to the surface. The ghanat system is an ingenious device for bringing the mountain water to the villages and cities under the desert instead of above ground where the water will be lost. The underground channel is dug by men who are specialists. It is about 30 inches high and probably 20 inches wide. About every 30 yards a "well" is dug. These "wells" are only about 18 inches in diameter, but are from 70 to 100 feet deep. The channel connects these wells.

THE VILLAGES and cities are located where the water system comes to the surface of the earth. In one village I visited, the boys were using the place where the ghanat opened into the jube as a swimming pool. In another, the women gathered to do their washings at the opening. I passed this opening several times in one day and each time some women were washing there. This public "laundry" is the beginning of the drinking water system of the village. The jube is the source of the incoming water system as well as the means of carrying the sewage and waste matter from the village. Children play in it; men wash their buggies and horses in it; all bathe in it. The water is nearly always muddy, and at times it is a gray-blue color like the dirty water the American housewife drains from the washing machine after a big washing of farm clothes.

In one village, the jube runs through the schoolyard. The water there appeared clear and clean, and I planned to comment about it. However, as I walked down to the jube near the place where it entered into the schoolyard under the wall, I noticed the strong odor of a toilet coming from the water. With such conditions as this, the question that constantly runs through my mind is not "Why is it so many Iranian children die?" (50 per cent of the live babies die before they are one year old) but "How are so many of the people able to live?"

We, like the other people here, must use jube water. We have a large cistern or umbar into which the water comes about every 14 to 21 days. The water settles and is used for bathing and toilet facilities. For drinking and other cleansing needs, we carry water from the home of the Regional Director, who has a deep well. We boil all the water before using it.

IRAN is still a very backward country. In addition to the problem of sanitation, it has many other medieval practices. Gorg-Tapeh is a typical Iranian village, one of 2,400 included in the Crown estates of the nation. A brief description of it will reveal much about this nation that lacks much and needs tremendous assistance from neighbors who are advanced in knowledge and wealth.

Gorg-Tapeh has a population of 496. Two hundred of these are under sixteen years old. There are only 125 adult men in the village; the rest are women. There are generally two classes of people according to economic classification: the govband—the mayor and the farmers who own oxen, and the kboshnesbin—the farmers without oxen, the day laborers, goods and service personnel, and itinerant labor.

This village has approximately one thousand acres available for cultivation, but due to the lack of fertilizer, farm equipment, and water, not more than half of this land is cultivated each year. Oxen and men are important factors in Gorg-Tapeh cultivation. The labor of men and oxen is divided into units called bonehs. Each boneh is composed of four farmers and four oxen, and they are assigned approximately 30 acres to cultivate. It is difficult to do much farming for there are very few oxen. Only 52 men own them, and only one of these has enough to operate five boneh. Four others have two oxen apiece, and the remaining 47 farmers own only one ox each. In summary, the basic unit of labor and land use, the boneh, is comprised of four oxen, four farmers, 30 acres of land, and sufficient water to irrigate it. Thus it is seen that the per capita unit of land for economic support is derived from the produce of about 7½ acres of land.

TWO TYPES of crops are traditional in Gorg-Tapeh: the subsistence crops, and the cash crops. Wheat and barley are the subsistence crops. The cash spring crops are cucumbers, eggplant, squash, peas, beans, and green onions which are planted about the first of March and mature through May; summer crops are cotton and melons. Melons of different types are sold from May through November. Cotton is harvested in late summer.

The subsistence crop of grain is divided into two equal parts. One part goes to the government's land management agency, the other half to the govband. Cotton is handled the same way. The other cash crops are divided into five equal parts, with two fifths going to the government and three fifths going to the govband, who in turn divide this amount according to man and oxen labor.

The peasant's usual share of the production is the equivalent of $162 for one year. This seems small, but even this figure is three times the amount received by the rural farmer of Iran. Gorg-Tapeh is a relatively rich center.

A FEW PEOPLE provide services to the village. A doctor is sent by the government to visit the area six hours a day twice a week. A combination blacksmith and carpenter lives in the village. A barber comes twice a week. Children up to the age of adolescence get free service, but each adult man pays 15 kilos of wheat and 15 kilos of barley a year. The ghanat cleaner cleans one water opening a day to maintain a proper flow throughout the season. There is also a mason in the village who repairs and builds. Three shops operate in the village; two of them extend credit to the villagers. A transient shoe repair man takes care of the shoe needs.

The staff of life, as in all of Iran, is bread. Sugar and tea are commonly used also. One fifth of the families in the higher income brackets have meat and rice at least once a week. The other 80 per cent have milk products (cheese and mast, or yogurt) and eggs once a week and meat every two or three months. Meat is provided from time to time when the farmers are doing their hardest work by one villager slaughtering a sheep or cow and selling it to his neighbors. There is no regular butcher shop.

Health conditions in Gorg-Tapeh are deplorable. In addition to the water condition, diseases are rampant. Scalp ringworm is rife among the children; approximately 30 per cent of the people suffer with malaria, trachoma, and rheumatism. Respiratory diseases are to be found in 20 per cent of the population; 5 per cent of the men smoke opium, and it is given to children as a sedative.

Only ten children of the village go to school in a near-by town. There is no school in Gorg-Tapeh. One third of the adult males have some knowledge of reading and writing, but there are no literate women.

WE ARE in the midst of the unusual experience of trying to assist this nation to help itself. Recently we signed an agreement with the Chief of Education to remodel and repair the Boys Normal School in Meshed. We will use the school to house two sessions of 125 teachers each in summer school classes. We have Iranian teachers in Teheran now, securing training in modern methods and techniques of teaching. This group will have charge of the Meshed summer school under our supervision. We are also planning and establishing what is virtually the beginning of a state agricultural college and experimental station. Five hundred acres of land have been selected about a mile from the city of Meshed on the Meshed-Teheran highway. We soon will let bids for a large agricultural and administration building, dormitories, residences, livestock barns, etc. We expect the first classes to be held next fall. It makes us feel pretty humble when we think of the immensity of the undertaking ahead of us in the educational and agricultural fields.

The work of the missionary and any others who would help better the conditions of these natives will not be glamorous, but the appreciative responses will make their endeavors worth while.

Reactions or Convictions?

American Christianity looks very much divided. Such divisions appear to be determined more by sentiment than motivated by sound theological reasoning. One is sometimes inclined to feel that the gulf between fundamentalists and liberals in America springs more from emotional reactions than from strong conviction about the nature of the biblical revelation and an uncompromising search for truth, so there arises a kind of fanaticism on both sides. In short, Americans seem to be more governed by their feelings than by their reasoning and so sometimes give us the impression of being unreasonable.

Books

Practical Church Publicity, by Richmond O. Brown, Broadman Press, Nashville, Tennessee. Price, $2.25.

The purpose of church publicity is to increase the growth of God's work on earth. Your church can use publicity effectively if the workers will accept this fascinating field of activity as their responsibility. News is the largest item of church publicity. It will reach more people than any other form. Besides the newspaper there are posters, the church bulletin and paper (in larger congregations), radio, post cards, handbills, signs, loudspeakers, and a multitude of other means of communication which will carry more influence than most people dream of.

Regardless of the size of the congregation, a variety of publicity is vital to any advancing church. The methods will be about the same in any size group. The application and use of the different media will have to be adjusted to the community and the differing opportunities that appear to be most fruitful.

The publicity agent, who probably has helpers in sizable congregations, has the job of getting all the wholesome advertising possible for your church. Advertising has proved to increase business and enlarge attendance at ball games; it will net similar results in church attendance if used as intelligently.

A word of caution is dropped in regard to church advertising. Advertisers in the commercial field are prone to exaggerate quite liberally at times in the promotion of sales. In the church advertising field this same type of exaggeration will generally boomerang. Church advertising must, above all else, be absolutely honest. This is especially true in the field of news stories where comparisons as to size of crowds, etc., are rather automatically made by the readers.

Perhaps the gem of the entire book—which is small and very easy to read—lies in one paragraph: "Regardless of how much publicity your church gets, souls are still saved by men and women putting their faith in God."

About 175 pages are then used to bring to the reader some very practical points in the matter of news writing—choosing subjects, forming the story, etc. Then, one by one, the many other phases of advertising are briefly discussed and some practical suggestions made for the publicity agent.

The book is written primarily for the beginner with little or no knowledge of such work, although it has much of real worth for the person with some formal training in the publicity field. It is practical, easy to read and understand. It should be of considerable value to publicity agents in any congregation, large or small.

WARD A. HOUGAS

The Recreation Leader, E. O. Harbin. Published by Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, available at Herald House. Price, $1.50.

Anyone interested in becoming efficient as a recreation leader will find this book helpful. The idea that recreation leaders are not born, they are made, is the purpose for publishing the book. Those who desire to become skilled in this field can learn the philosophy and the guiding principles necessary to good leadership.

Recreation leaders are necessary not only in community life but in the church. In every department of the church people are needed who can lead the group to creative and enjoyable leisure time activity. The author points out possibilities in each age group. Even people who are past sixty need and want enjoyable times together.

The real value of this book lies not only in the philosophy of recreation and list of helps to develop leaders that it gives, but in the many concrete suggestions and ideas that are given. Also it contains the sources of supply where certain types of equipment are available. For those who need more detailed information on certain types of activity, the author tells where some of these can be found.

As in all books of this type, much is given that does not fit each person's need, but it does give much helpful information. From personal experience I would suggest that those who want to become recreational leaders start by getting good books that teach them how, such as The Recreation Leader, then constantly add to their library other material and books for the various kinds of activities they will be having with their group. Those who really want to can become recreation leaders, and this book will help them to get started.

GARLAND SNAPP

Our Church Plans for Children, by Lois Blankenship, The Judson Press. 94 pages, price, 75 cents.

This is a manual on religious education for children. It was prepared for use in Baptist churches, and as such contains some suggestions which are not applicable to our church school program. This is particularly true of the sections having to do specifically with organization of the children's department.

The bulk of the manual, however, has such universal value as a guide to effective ministry among children and will be of such help to our children's workers that I feel justified in recommending it to our readers. Some of the outstanding chapters are "Children in the Church Fellowship," "Utilization of Space and Equipment in the Church," "Selecting and Training Leaders," and "The Church's Partnership with the Homes."

Here is one of the many gems found within its covers:

Someone has said, "Teachers must realize that children are not born anew every Sunday morning on the doorstep of the church school." That is another way of saying that everything that happens to the child is a part of him and influences his attitudes and actions. Each child is a unique individual with his own unique personality. To a large extent, his family has shaped his personality. Only the teacher who has genuine respect for his individuality and a friendly interest in his home is admitted into his inner life.

CLIFFORD A. COLE

Stewardship in the Bible, by Orval D. Peterson, Bethany Press. Price, 50c.

This is a small book which might well be given a place in the library of every person who has a sense of gratitude to God for the many material blessings provided. It should prove useful especially to those who share in the task of teaching the gospel story.

The Reorganized Latter Day Saint has additional scriptural references concerning stewardship since he considers Scripture as being broader than the Bible alone, but for a ready reference to the many occasions in which stewardship themes are touched upon in the Bible, this small work seems quite complete. It is replete with illustrations which should prove helpful in brightening up a sermon or class on church finances. The style of writing is simple and direct; its interpretations seem to be the standard ones found among most churches of the day. Read in the light shed upon the field of stewardship by the Restoration, it should be much appreciated by those who are inclined to accept the helps provided.

Major subjects treated are "The Relation of Man to Property," "Stewardship in the Old Testament," and "Stewardship Teachings of Jesus and the Apostles."

The Beginning of Man

By D. H. Schmidt

As I See It

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Limited space will not permit many articles on the same subject to be printed.

—EDITORS

I WOULD NOT ASSUME to solve finally the great mystery of man's beginning and final destiny, nor do I want to discuss what was before the beginning and what will be after the end. But I am concerned with discovering when the beginning began.

In Scripture we are told that God created spiritually all things—plants, animals, and man—before they appeared upon the earth. I assume all things could not have existed, each one as a separate individual or entity, coexistent with God. If they did, that would eliminate God as being our Father, for a father must be older than his children, and only those begotten of him are his sons. God is the father of our spirits.

Where man is spoken of in Scripture, it is life (the spirit)—not the body or house—that is referred to. The law of lineage or descent has to do with man's life. The spirit or life—not bodies—is transmitted from father to son. Bodies build upon the germ of life between conception and birth from the elements supplied by the mother, by the same rule that applies in the animal creation; and there is no limit to the number born as long as the conditions favorable to reproduction, growth, and sustenance continue.

The Measure of Plants and Animals

True science and true religion must agree. When conditions are right, a grain of wheat planted in the ground will produce a wheat head. Plant the grain from this head, and you will reap a peck. Plant that, and reap a load. Continue the process and you soon have the earth full of wheat. You will not run out because of a shortage of "wheat spirits" in heaven.

You breed one specie of animal and continually rebreed its offspring, and you soon fill the earth with those animals. They do not stop because the spirits run short. Mating will never fail of results when the conditions are right, nor will the impulse for mating cease in mortality. As I see it, the same is true of mankind.

Procreation and Man's Measure

Hereditary characteristics are in the life (spirit) which is transmitted, not in the body that is not transmitted. The law of lineage could have no meaning if it were of the body only. If the spirit were not transmitted there would be no life in the germ. If the life germ in a grain of wheat ceased to live, procreation would end there; this applies to every living thing, including man.

God governs the conditions which determine the measure or number here the same as the farmer limits the measure of wheat by the acreage he devotes to wheat—not by the amount of "wheat spirit" available. God fixed the bounds of man's habitation by confining him to this globe; man now has aspirations to get to the moon or some other planet, but he has not yet succeeded.

As I see it, we were in Adam in Christ, and Christ in God, and "as in Adam all die, in Christ are all made alive."

We were all potentially with Adam in Eden and went out with him. If we are of Ephraim it is because we came through him and of him.

The Beginning of Individuality

As I see it, our distinctive individuality began at conception. There were no separate sexes or family relations before Adam in the garden. God created man, both male and female, in one person, then afterward separated them. The first anesthetic sleep and operation took place in the garden, and Adam said that Eve was "flesh of my flesh and bone of my bone." If both sexes existed in heaven, there should have been at least one woman who might have been transferred into the garden without God's operating on Adam. Truly there is a great affinity between men and women.

In Genesis 2: 11, even the plants are called "living souls," and the statement is made, "remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created them."

The implication seems to be that the hosts and the angels of heaven spoken of in Scripture were not men who would come and abide on earth. God made man "a little lower than the angels," and evidently Satan, who was of the heavenly hosts, was before Adam.

The passage of Scripture which says, "Look unto the rock from whence ye were hewn, and to the hole of the pit from whence ye are digged" (Isaiah 51: 1), indicates from whence we came; and the passage which says, "the Lord, which . . . formeth the spirit of man within him" (Zechariah 12: 1), indicates the place of our creation. The passage which says "And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit" (Malachi 2: 15) denotes something of the number made. This says spirit, not spirits, agreeing with the statement, "Ye were also in the beginning with God, that which is spirit" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 46)—not spirits. It is true that all the baker's biscuits were in the beginning in the dough with the baker, but no individual biscuit existed previous to the time the baker's cutter passed through the dough.

Knowledge and Agency

I believe that man's spiritual creation immediately preceded his physical creation; therefore it is written, "I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day that I created them; and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7).

The claim that man already had knowledge and agency and exercised it in heaven when there was a rebellion there would contradict this and would commit us to the doctrine of predestination. The result of such choice is inescapable, and our choices and actions here would be influenced by our choice and conduct over there. Then the evil man here could say, "I can't help it; I was born that way." The Book of Mormon says this is the time and place of man's probation.

I do not think that any child is born to either good or evil because of choices he made in heaven; rather his condition here is as expressed by one poet—

They were born by the law that compels man to be;
Born to conditions they could not foresee;

The End of Multiplying

The Lord gave specific commandment to our first parents to "multiply" in order to meet specific conditions when the earth was barren of people. The dire consequence of overpopulation is the result of

Question:

After our baptism of the Spirit following our baptism of water do we continue to benefit by virtue of this initial visitation? Are there lifetime advantages available to church members due to this baptism of the Spirit which are not available to nonmembers? I am speaking of the church members as individuals.

Answer:

The baptism of the Spirit given in confirmation of the baptism of water is the entering in at the "gate" into the narrow way that leads to eternal life; the establishing of a new status of life, the benefits and blessings of which follow as a flowing stream throughout one's years. Like the marriage ceremony, or matriculation into a school or society, the baptism of the Spirit opens the door of opportunity for progress, development, and service. It is spoken of as a "new birth," and its benefits can be experienced only in the successive blessings which follow through life, culminating in eternal salvation in the kingdom of God. The extent and value of these benefits may be seen in the following:

The Spirit given at this baptism is an "abiding" Spirit, which remains through life, on condition of worthiness, to minister such helps as will lead to eternal life. Paul speaks of this abiding Spirit as "Christ in you" (Col. 1: 27).

Possession of this Spirit is the seal of adoption, making one a son of God, bringing the rights and privileges belonging to sonship (Rom. 8: 14-17; D. and C. 85: 1, 2).

The Holy Ghost (same as the Holy Spirit) witnesses or testifies of God and Christ; that is, it reveals God and Christ sin—because mankind sinned "I will greatly multiply thy . . . conception" (Genesis 3: 16). This evil of overpopulation, of bringing millions of people into the world with no adequate means of support or proper rearing, was arrested temporarily by the flood and will again be arrested by the prevailing untoward conditions in these last days—not by the lack of spirits available.

in a continuing work of instruction and guidance, giving knowledge more precious than all the world can give otherwise (II Nephi 13: 26; D. and C. 83: 7; John 15: 26; 16: 14).

Reception of the Holy Spirit is the evidence of forgiveness. The Spirit will not come nor remain as an "abiding Comforter" in an unrepentant and unforgiven person (Matt. 5: 4, I.V., D. and C. 17: 7; 18: 4).

The baptism of the Spirit establishes and confirms a covenant relation with God and Christ and with his church and kingdom. It brings the recipient into fellowship with the Saints of like experience within the church, as well as with God and Christ, whereby they find guidance, strength, encouragement, instruction, and every needful help (I Cor. 1: 9; Acts 2: 42; I John 1: 3).

One function of the Spirit is to reveal the nature of sin and administer reproof in love when the children of God become affected by it. Sin is too common and familiar for even a child of the kingdom of his own wisdom to clearly discern its full nature and effects. It often appears innocent of evil and puts on the adornments of righteousness for reasons of deception. But under the light of the Spirit of God, evil will appear in its real nature, and the Saint will readily discern it (John 16: 8; Eph. 5: 11-17).

Likewise the righteousness of God is often obscured by conditions of evil and sin, and its glory dimmed. But the Spirit reveals righteousness, making it plain to the willing child of God. It makes possible right choices and safe results. It lightens the way through the world and leads to God (D. and C. 83: 7).

The Holy Spirit is intermediary, acting for God and Christ in the souls of men, being "given to abide in you, the record of heaven, the Comforter, the peaceable things of immortal glory, the truth of all things, that which quickeneth all things, which maketh alive all things, that which knoweth all things, and hath all power according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice, and judgment" (Gen. 6: 64, I.V.). It cleanses and sanctifies and gives power for every needful requirement for salvation.

What a rich treasure to be cherished and utilized by the children of God!

Question:

Could we correctly say that God's kingdom has come to earth in 1830 and is now in the process of being built? Missouri C. Mc.

Answer:

In Doctrine and Covenants 102:9, Zion and the kingdom of God are identified as one and the same thing. The church has not yet attained the status of Zion (which is the perfected and sanctified church), and for that reason has not yet attained the status of the kingdom. It is said that Zion is the pure in heart, and it is to be understood that all who are worthy of Zion will be of that character, but the church has not yet reached that status, though undoubtedly it contains many members who have. Thus the church contains the basic elements by which the kingdom will be built. They are not as yet organized into the kingdom.

It is the privilege and responsibility of the church to bring forth Zion, the kingdom of God, which in time will be organized into a greater and more advanced organization. In so far as the kingdom now exists within the church it is potential rather than actual and awaits the time for its bringing forth. The Lord gave "the keys of the kingdom" to the church at the beginning; in fact, they belong always with the church, but as a kingdom it remains unorganized and hidden within the church. A parallel is found in Revelation 12: 7, I.V.: "The woman which was the church of God, . . . brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ," which the text above noted says is Zion.

So we may say that the kingdom is in preparation but not yet independently formed. It is hidden within the church but in due time will be developed as a separate and superior organization to that of the church, Zion the kingdom of God on earth.

Serve the Lord with Gladness

By Floy L. Bennett

A talk given to the women at the Kansas City Stake Reunion

And it shall be, when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly cities, which thou buildedst not, and houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, and wells digged, which thou diggedst not, vineyards and olive trees, which thou plantedst not; when thou shalt have eaten and be full; then beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name.—Deuteronomy 6: 10-13.

I WAS HAPPY when I learned that the theme for reunions all over the world this year would be "The Challenge of the Restoration." The circumstances which brought about the establishment of God's church in these latter days are most spectacular, dramatic, and inspiring. God does not always work in such a way, of course, but to bring about the needed revolution against the existing order, it was necessary for him to manifest himself in a way which was both dramatic and spectacular. It is difficult to challenge successfully the established order. Anyone who understands how this church was brought about, cannot help being impressed by the greatness of God's plan and the method he used. Occasionally it is good for us to look back and remember our beginnings. Such a work could not have been done by mere man. We have a past which we must stretch to live up to. We cannot achieve in like measure unless we work, study, and pray in faith in like measure—unless we, to a comparable degree, are consecrated to the task.

Every generation, then, has its responsibility to carry the torch, the responsibility to serve the Lord with gladness. It is dangerous to forget that responsibility. Our heritage has been bought for us at a great price and given to us just as the land promised to the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob was given to the children of Israel, without cost to them. God's warning through Moses to the children of Israel was "Beware lest thou forget the Lord." "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God and serve him." We do not forget the things we are working for and contrawise, we do tend to forget those things for which we do not work. What, then, are we working for?

THIS IS THE SIXTH lesson we have had as a group at this reunion. We have expressed ourselves vigorously and with conviction concerning our ideas and ideals, but I am wondering about these vigorous expressions. Have these class discussions brought us anything new? Have we learned anything? Have we grown a little? Or are we going back to our home groups with the same ideas and convictions we had when we came?

Growth is characterized by change. There is no growth without change. Has our understanding deepened; has our vision been extended; has our place in the kingdom become more sharply defined for us? What have we learned which will modify our behavior? Remember, growth is change. If we have merely let our convictions out for an airing and now return to our homes without an increased vision, a new idea, or a deeper desire to serve as God wants us to serve then we cannot say we have grown. By virtue of having attended this reunion let us hope we shall return to our congregations with a new, broader, and deeper understanding and determination to obey the command expressed in today's theme, "Serve the Lord with Gladness."

FROM MY POINT of view there are three important words in the title of our lesson today—serve, Lord, gladness. What does the word "serve" mean? We are great imitators in this present age. "I want to serve" and "I want to be of service" have come to be very popular but hackneyed statements. What do we mean when we say, "I want to be of service"? According to the dictionary the word "serve" has many meanings. Among the definitions given are these:

"To discharge the requirements of an office or public duty." This was not new. It is a meaning we often attach to the word.

"To answer a purpose." What is God's purpose for us? Are we answering it? Are we serving in that way?

"To be usable as a substitute." That was a surprise to me. I did not expect to find that in a dictionary, but I do think it is a very wonderful way to serve.

"To exert oneself continuously in a religious sense, to obey and worship." This is another excellent test of our activities.

"To answer the needs of." If we define serve as "to answer the need of" and then fail to meet the need when it arises, are we serving? Lots of people are busy, but does their activity answer a real need? Or are they just engaged in "busywork"?

If we actually want to serve, then we must prepare to serve acceptably. Preparation to serve may mean a lot of things. It implies:

A particular state of mind. We must want to serve. There must be a real desire in our hearts to meet real needs.

A co-operative spirit. No one can serve who is not willing to work with others. One must learn to make concessions for the benefit of the group.

A recognition of all levels of authority. If we would work effectively in a group, we must respect and honor officers and leaders who have been assigned supervisory or administrative responsibilities. If we cannot accept counsel or supervision from anyone but the pastor, we are ill-prepared to serve the Lord.

Academic training. This may be either in school or out of school or both, according to our opportunities and specialized needs. Lack of opportunity to go to school is no excuse for ignorance these days. Available sources for learning are too numerous.

Institutes and training classes. We should take advantage of these when we have the opportunity, and attend staff meetings and study groups.

The cultivation of the qualities of humility and love. We should not be "choosy" about kind or grade of service, but accept cheerfully the job that needs to be done even though we are sure in our own minds that we could do something else better. We must be "usable as a substitute." We must be fair with other servants of the kingdom and let them know what we feel are our special talents but give them credit, too, for discernment and direction from the Lord in deciding to ask us to do a certain job. If they did not feel we could do the job they would not ask us to do it. Maybe they see some talent in us which we do not know we possess.

Dependability. Can the Lord depend on us to do what we say we will do, punctually and to the best of our ability? If our pastor, women's leader, or church school director cannot depend on us, then we can be very sure that the Lord can't. Dependability is more important than talent. Dependability is a talent, and it is a talent all can have. It makes no difference how much ability we possess if we are not responsible and dependable in our service.

Preparing to serve includes (1) a desire to serve in the spirit of co-operation, humility, and love, (2) respectful recognition of all levels of authority, (3) study and training, and (4) the quality of dependability. Put these all together and season them with earnest prayer. With such preparation we should be able to render acceptable service.

ALTHOUGH IT IS TRUE that we must prepare, service cannot wait on preparation, nor is preparation ever completed. Once there was a man who made a career of going to school. He received an inheritance which was to be paid in annual installments until he had completed his education. In order to keep the money coming in, he continued in school although he was on the far side of middle age. He never did anything. He never tried to get a job. He never gave anything to society. He never served.

I know of a woman who has been asked several times to teach a church school class. She has had professional training as a teacher and is successful in her practice. However, when asked to do a job at church, she always says, "Oh, I'd like to, but I'm just getting so much out of the church school class I'm in, I don't like to give it up." She has been sitting in that class for several years. I wonder if there isn't real cause to question just what she is getting out of it. Is it a drug to make her feel good? She has not been stimulated to action.

If we waited until we were fully prepared, we'd never do anything, and if we stop preparation as soon as we are established on a job, then we are not sufficiently prepared for the job in the first place. In the latter case, the right state of mind, humility, and love are absent. Do I sound contradictory? This is my point. Seize every opportunity to prepare now—accept opportunities for service whenever they present themselves, even if it is now, and continue to prepare. All of us are apprentices in this matter of serving the Lord; we learn to do by doing. A wise steward always grows on the job. During the last year of a public school teacher's training, she is placed in a schoolroom and required to teach under the supervision of a well-qualified, certified teacher. She continues to go to her college classes, however. She is an apprentice teacher; as such, she is doing a service and learning more about her job as she serves.

WE HAVE LEARNED that service is real service only when it supplies a need. How do we serve the Lord? God's plan is so set up that we cannot serve him directly. We have to route our service through his creation and through the various institutions set up to facilitate that service to him through his creation. It is a wise plan which makes a selfish, arrogant, or egotistical person unable to serve God. He must love his fellow men enough to desire their good before his service is acceptable to God. The things to which we give ourselves become more dear to us. When we have given of ourselves, whether it be in making a garden or working in the church, we have made an investment of part of ourselves, and the thing in which we have invested becomes more dear to us because of it.

There are various mediums for service to God. Our first obligation and our greatest medium for service is in the home. Home responsibilities cannot be shifted or evaded. There is no service outside the home which is important enough for a mother to neglect her husband and children to their hurt. We had a neighbor once who never went to church. He said he had been brought up in the back of a church and a lodge hall. His mother was so busy doing good away from home that he had no home life. He was fed up with that kind of life, so he stayed at home on Sundays. He died of cancer at the age of thirty-six. Who is to take the blame if he failed to fulfill the purpose for which God created him?

ALTHOUGH A WOMAN'S first duty is to her home and family, she does a better job of her service at home if she does not spend all her time there. Her service to other institutions broadens her vision and enriches her gift as wife and mother. Besides there are things that must be done, and some of these things can best be done by women.

A woman's second medium for service is the church. Church and home should be so closely related that separation even for discussion seems hardly feasible. Family life can be enriched beyond measure by engaging in church activity as individual members and as a family group. A part of emotional maturation is learning to share each other. Children who are permitted to think that mother's time belongs 100 per cent to them, or a husband who never wants to sacrifice a single comfort in order that his wife may carry her share of the load at church, are emotionally immature and selfish. Women are needed to serve in church activities, and that service is required of them which may be done without neglect of their jobs at home.

A third medium for service is the community. I have placed church before community because I think it belongs first. The needs of the community organizations are important, but when absorption in these leaves us no time for church duties, it is my conviction we have accepted too much community responsibility. Actually the greatest single factor for good in any community is the church, and the best medium for service to the community is the church.

THERE ARE VARIOUS community interests that are worthy of our support. One of the very important community interests is the public school. Schools require and deserve our support, our co-operation, and our service. I am both a parent and a teacher, and I know the value of parent-teacher understanding and co-operation. I believe, however, that humanity's first need is the security which comes of knowing God. Pioneer peoples always feel their first community need is a place to worship. The soul longs for that. Then the desire to serve God acceptably awakens them to the need to train and prepare to serve him well, so the second recognized need is school. It is important that we do not become too involved doing good things that we do not have time to do the better things. It is a wise wife and mother indeed who can look at her problems with a clear eye and know what is most important for her, her family, and her world.

We recite glibly that God is the most important thing in our lives, but our actions often belie our words, because we do not always give our time to what we say is most important. In actions we put other things first. I am thankful for a conversation I had with a friend two or three years ago. She was active in both church and community affairs. She had a husband and two children. She was asked to take an important job with P.T.A., one requiring about all the time she had to give outside her home. She had an important job at church. In discussing her situation with me, she said, "I can't do both jobs, and I feel that in making my choice I'll be telling my children which I consider more important. I want the church to be first in their lives as it is in mine, so I've agreed to take a smaller job with P.T.A. so I can keep my church job and serve my God through his established institution."

Contrast this with another friend who is so busy with community affairs that she refuses every request to help in her church. She is always too busy to do

A Dream Come True

By Carlee Wilson

AS A GRACELANDER who completed two eventful years of life on the "hill" last spring, I can glance back over the time spent there and evaluate somewhat objectively, I hope, the experiences I had during that time.

Arriving on the campus as a freshman in the fall of 1951, I had a lot to learn—scholastically, socially, religiously. A dream was actually coming true, and at intervals I had to pinch myself and say, "This is it! You're really at Graceland just as you had hoped you would be someday."

With the passing of fall came the wintry blasts of wind which I had never felt before. Snowflakes were a new phase of Mother Nature's beauty which I enjoyed very much. The rain which followed during the next six months was in a greater quantity than I had imagined could pour down upon the little town of Lamoni. Naturally, with the downpours, came puddles and mudholes to be walked through, leaped over, or fallen into, much to the glee of bystanders.

Along with spurts of laughter came tearful moments—a problem in dorm life, a misunderstanding with a friend, the long-awaited home-coming week end being over too soon, and the sad good-bys which inevitably come with the graduation of classmates in the spring.

EVENTUALLY, the idea began to take hold that half of my Graceland "life" had hurried by already, and with this realization I resolved to take advantage of every moment during the coming two semesters at the college on the hilltop.

As the summer months rushed past, anticipations of a second year on the "hill" began to mount. In early September I packed my clothes and returned to Lamoni.

My second arrival on the campus was quite different. This time there were many familiar faces—some new ones, too, for the freshman class had come in full force from various parts of the world. These students would be facing the changes and adjustments to college life just as I had the previous year.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Carlee was born in McAllen, Texas, near the Mexican border, and lived there for seventeen years. She attended the R. L. D. S. Rio Grande Valley Branch in Alamo and was graduated from McAllen High School in 1951, where she was president of the senior class and National Honor Society. She attended Graceland College the following two years, and as a sophomore served as "Tower" editor and secretary of the Crescent Club. She is now living in Independence where she is employed as advertising assistant at Herald House. Her special likes are music, writing—and people.

It wasn't long until these new names and faces were among those I counted as my friends, and the year's activities got underway.

There were pastoral groups to participate in, Student Council members to elect, all-school functions for us to exert our originality on, skates on week ends, social clubs to join, initiations to go through, fellowship services to attend and to be inspired and challenged by, and innumerable ideas presented by the instructors in the classrooms to constantly stimulate and broaden concepts.

LITTLE BY LITTLE lives were being influenced; prejudices were being removed; minor intolerances were decreasing; appreciation for various cultures were developing; and a greater depth of spiritual understanding was being grasped. These changes were gradual and not always obvious, but now the words of the hymn, "In Christ there is no East nor West, in him no South nor North," were becoming more than mere syllables. The circle of this Graceland family included all—disregarding religious, national, racial, or political differences.

The light enjoyed at Graceland is not only that of added spiritual insight and the attainment of educational objectives, but also the association and rich fellowship with persons who are seeking to develop to the fullest their potentialities.

To place a monetary value on the experiences of these past two years would be impossible. I can only say that this period of time has no doubt influenced my philosophy more than any other period in my life. For this I am grateful, for I have needed—as do other young people—the firm foundation to build on which the opportunities and experiences at Graceland offers her students. I am looking forward to the future, and whatever it holds, feeling assured that the eighteen months I spent at Graceland have opened new avenues and sources of educational, spiritual, and social knowledge.

Let Me Have Light

I never thought my soul should lie
So deep in shallowness that I
Could not discern it 'neath the murk.
Lend me thy staff, dear God, this day
That I may plumb the night, and stay
The silent sinking of my all;
For what of me can brave the fight
If I be left without a light?

J. Frank Daugherty

A Track Star at Eighteen

J FRANK Daugherty, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Daugherty, Olton, Texas, is a modest but outstanding athlete. He is eighteen, and in just one year has whittled his time in the 100-yard dash from 10.3 to sensational clockings of 9.6 and 9.5 seconds, which few college trackmen achieve. According to the Star-Telegram, a Texas newspaper, he is "making his name as well known as that of his namesake, J. Frank Norfleet, the famous range detective."

A grid injury to Frank's knee in 1952 prevented his running in any meets except the district, regional, and state; still he placed sixth in the state Class B 100 in the 1952 season. Doctors had warned him last summer that he should not play football again due to a torn knee muscle. However, they did recommend that he continue to run, explaining that the exercise would build up his knee.

Again quoting from the Star-Telegram:

Because of their advice, Texas has another great schoolboy runner who, in all possibility, will overshadow the exploits of Charles Parker, Dean Smith, and Charles Thomas in college.

J. Frank would be the first to laugh this off. The modest youngster who hasn't been beaten this season and who broke the Class B record in the 100 with a 9.7, then shattered Parker's state 220 standard with a 20.5, was worried about the finals Saturday afternoon.

"There are a lot of good boys in my class," he said. "Anything can happen in a track meet, you know."

But all the doubting Thomases, who joined the "we believe" club after watching Daugherty's tremendous performances

Friday, had no doubts about his winning.

"When he [Daugherty] took off in that 220, Friday, I just stood up and whooped," said Smiley Davis, coach at Corpus Christi Ray. "I didn't need any watch to know he had broken Parker's record."

Another Texas paper carried this tribute:

He has one of the longest strides of any sprinter, and he reminds track followers of the great Mel Patton, who holds the world's record for the 100- (9.3) and 220-yard (20.2) dashes.

Coach Clyde Littlefield of Texas, who hopes to have Daugherty with him soon, said the black-haired, handsome young man from the Plains country reminded him very much of Patton—tall and rangy (6 feet 1 inch, 170 pounds) and with a style like the mighty California sprinter.

Daugherty ran 220 yards in 20.5 seconds, two tenths of a second under the national record Jesse Owens hung up twenty years ago. And he ran 100 yards in 9.6 seconds to set a new mark in the Class B division of the Interscholastic League meet.

J FRANK has made his name famous not only for the records he breaks but for his splendid sportsmanship. He has a pleasant personality and a big smile for everyone. Fans and athletes like him—even the ones he outruns.

Recently he became a member of the Reorganized Church. He attends church regularly, participates in the various activities of his branch, and says he wants sincerely to "do his part."

During the summer Frank rides the range of his father's 3,000-acre ranch in western Texas watching over 300 head of cattle. His father is best known as Curly, and at one time was in the rodeo business. In 1941 he made the statement that it wasn't a "good life for his family," so he sold his rodeo stock and invested the money in grassland and Hereford cattle. As a result of his decision, he has been able to build a home that is based on a Zionite foundation.

Good sportsmanship, according to Frank, is nothing more than recognizing that we all are created by God, and then acting that way. This conviction, plus the desire to do the right thing, has played an important part in his life.

Mission Growing

PASCO, WASHINGTON.—The mission was organized June 18, 1953, by the members of Pasco and Kennewick. These members had previously attended the Richland Branch. It was felt that because of the distance many members did not attend the Richland Branch who would attend meetings held in Pasco.

The first service was held July 5, with forty members in attendance. Attendance has continued to be good, and some have come who did not meet with the Saints in Richland.

There have been eight children blessed. On July 5, Ernest Ralph Walden and Danny Bruce Walden were blessed. On July 26, Ronald Wayne Doer was blessed, and on August 16 Jerry Robert Moe, Gary Ronald Moe, Vicky Lynn Moe, Dennis Michael Moe, and Kristi Joy Moe were blessed.

At present the group meets in the basement of the Lewis hotel. While there is ample space for present needs, the group is planning for a church building of their own.—Reported by WINNOGENE EIDEM

Six Ordained

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.—Saskatchewan conference was held in Saskatoon from July 26 to August 2, with a registered attendance of over 200.

Missionaries assisting were Elder R. F. Ralston and Sister Ralston, of Salt Lake City, Utah, Elder Z. Z. Renfroe and Sister Renfroe, of Independence, Missouri, and Elder Howard Fisher and Sister Fisher of Saskatoon.

Music for the sessions was under the direction of Sister C. E. Diggle, with Sister Ina Steeves acting as official pianist.

Meals were served in the basement of the church, with Sister Evelyn Hodgins in charge of cooking, and Sister Dora Carter in charge of purchases.

Sister Zola Skinner operated the canteen, and Sister Lois Loucks the bookstand.

Orval Fisher was in charge of recreation, while Charles Nelson and Beryl Chase were responsible for children's classes.

Two were baptized—Brother Roach of Pad-dockwood, and Brother David Vauter of Senlac.

Six men were called and ordained to the priesthood during the conference. They were Charles Jenkins, Kenneth Fisher, Gordon Loucks, Charles Nelson, Earl Beckman, and J. D. Williams. Two other men will be ordained later. They are Claud Williams and Walter Postnikoff.

During the conference recognition was given for the work of two members—Mrs. C. E. Diggle, and Elder Will Cornish. They were both presented with gifts.

Officers elected for the coming year were district presidency, Elders Peter Harder, Saskatoon, Roy Bowerman, Shellbrook, and Art Berguson, Regina; secretary, Ted Bowerman, Shellbrook; treasurer, Charles Jenkins, Saskatoon; nonresident pastor, Will Cornish, Saskatoon; church school director, Charles Nelson, Kelstern; women's leader, Dora Carter, Saskatoon; publicity agent, Roderick Thomson; corresponding secretary, Amy Powell, Saskatoon; auditors, A. Berguson and E. Baker; and bishop's agent, E. W. B. Baker.—Reported by D. E. NELSON church work. Yet this woman has been heard to say, "I can't understand why my children don't like church." Much of her time is given to good causes, but she has no time for the greater service.

Let us serve the Lord through the home first, the church second, and the community third.

THERE IS ANOTHER PART of this subject of major importance. Serve the Lord with gladness. Our service is not our best service unless we serve gladly. In our homes we may get up every morning and prepare our husband's breakfasts, but if we grumble about it or feel self-righteous about it, resent it, name some other women who are privileged to lie in bed while her husband prepares his own breakfast—that is service of a kind, but unless we give ourselves in joyous service, we are not serving the Lord through our home duties.

There should be joy in a well-kept house, in a well-fed family, in a well-managed budget. There should also be great joy in serving others through the church. If we have a job to do, we should accept it joyfully and perform it with gladness. I remember gratefully an unusual answer from a woman in our congregation at one time when she was asked to do a certain service at church. She said, "Yes, I'll be glad to. Thank you for asking me." Our acceptances are too often given grudgingly. I remember another woman who was doing a church job. It was during conference time, and she was helping in the dining room. It is conceded that this work is arduous and exhausting. She was fully conscious of the weight of her job and fussed and quarreled as she worked. Someone passing through the line at lunch one day said, "Be of good cheer, Sister. You'll be rewarded for your hard work." She replied angrily, "No, I won't! I'm too rebellious."

We must serve the Lord, but it is most important to give service with a glad heart. We have the testimony of many who say that until they learned to give of themselves joyfully the road of life was pretty rough. A grudging gift or a gift from sense of duty alone is dissatisfying both to the giver and to the receiver. "Serve the Lord your God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, by reason of the abundance of things." The gospel of Jesus Christ, bought for us at such great price, may be our abundance when we have God's Spirit as promised by him and if we make him first in our lives and serve him with joy and gladness.

This year, for the first time, a large group of young people came from Canada to attend camp. A special campfire program on Tuesday night and recognition of Dominion Day when the Union Jack was presented at flag raising were two events honoring the Canadians.

Don Landon conducted the morning worship services. Roy Cheville had charge of the morning class and the evening fireside chats. A variety of crafts were offered to the campers.

Two trips out of camp were taken, the first to the top of Mt. Bromac, and the second to North Beach.

Recreation was lively and competition keen in volleyball and badminton. A picnic was held at West Beach on Thursday.

Honor campers were Bob Logan, Norma McGinnis, Ralyn Baird, Jim Heverling, Roger Wickstrom, Anne Berryhill, Sharon Richmond, Shirley Richmond, and Dona Roll.—Reported by RAY SOWERS

Election Held

GRAYLING, MICHIGAN.—A meeting for the election of officers for the branch was held August 3, with District President Harry L. Doty in charge. Officers elected were Elder Roy Newberry, pastor; Grace Newberry, secretary; Dan Babbitt, treasurer; Leta Babbitt, church school director; Lillian Turner, women's leader; Flora Vandenberg, director of music; Kenneth Newberry, director of youth; Tressa Stephen, publicity; Merle Howard, Norval Stephen, and Earl Mathewson, building committee.

Brother Doty held a series of missionary meetings during the month of March.

The Easter story was presented by the senior choir, church school children, and flannel-graph.

George III, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. George Granger, Jr., was blessed at the Easter service, and Blair E., son of Elder and Mrs. Merle Howard, was blessed during the Children's Day program, both blessings being given by Elder Roy Newberry.

Louis Jensen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Jensen, was baptized by Elder Allen Schreuer on August 16. He was confirmed on September 6 by Elders Doty and Newberry.

Women's department officers for the year who will assist Flora Vandenberg are secretary, Tressa Stephen; treasurer, Helene Mathewson; musical director, Grace Newberry; teacher, Molly Olson; chairman of friendly visiting, Helen Jensen; chairman of ways and means, Cynthia Knecht; and chairman of social activities, Betty Howard.—Reported by MRS. New Officers Selected

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Elder T. W. Bath was re-elected branch president at the annual election of officers July 8. Other officers elected were secretary and recorder, Velma Evans; treasurer, Bert Evans; superintendent of music, Irma Landrum; church school director and Herald correspondent, Esther Heller; women's department leader, Olive Jones; young people's leaders, Mae and Warren Jackson; publicity agent, Marie Gates; custodian chairman, Irene Wiley; trustee, Al Comstock; children's supervisor, Mrs. T. W. Bath.

Robert and Joan Trimble have moved to Clarinda, Iowa, where he is teaching. Their daughter JoLynne was blessed June 14 by Elders Curtis Pearson and T. W. Bath.

Pastor Bath baptized Carol May Burns, Judith Ruth Penrod, Vicki Sue Wilcox, Earl Robert Burns, Jr., and Al Comstock on June 14.

Officers elected in the Pittsburg women's department in addition to the leader, Mrs. J. W.

Jones, are Mrs. Bonita Pearson, assistant leader; Mrs. Opal Gates, secretary; Mrs. Cleo Margrave, treasurer; Mrs. Fern Boone, prayer secretary, and Mrs. Shirley Colyer, music leader.

Mrs. I. G. Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Heller attended the Hansen family reunion at Missouri Valley, Iowa, August 23. They are descendants of Ingvert and Karen Hansen, who came from Denmark in 1860.

The Zion's League held a roller-skating party September 14, which concluded with a campfire and program at the church.—Reported by ESTHER HELLER

District Conference

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.—The Kentucky-Tennessee District conference was held in Memphis August 29. District President R. T. Cochran was in charge. Visiting ministers included Apostle Percy Farrow, Evangelist Wesley Burwell, and Elder J. H. Yager.

The services began Saturday morning with the general prayer service, followed by class discussion by Brother Burwell. Sister Withee conducted a class on music services. The business session convened at 2 o'clock with Brother Farrow in charge. The following officers were elected: district president, Elder T. Cochran; secretary, Berna Lou Horton; treasurer, Wayne Mink; director of religious education, Ralph Schroder; young people's leader, L. D. Sutton; women's leader, Alma Cochran; music director, Hazelle Withee; nonresident pastor, Billie Gravenmire; auditors, Bill Horton and Lila Gough; recorder, Lisby Gravenmire; reunion trustees, C. W. Rears, Curtis Ross, and C. B. Bailey; reunion committee, B. D. Gravenmire, Glen Caltharp, and Newsome Jones; district historian, Freda Caltharp; bishop's agent, C. L. Ross, and district publicity agent, Alma Cochran.

The following were recommended and approved for ordination to the priesthood: Jack Adair, deacon; Ed Caltharp, Ivor Johnson, and E. L. Kindell, teachers; Billie Sutton, Larry D. Sutton, Jimmy Gately, Dale Booth, Fred Galimore, Darren Galimore, Fred Caltharp, and Lester Fuller, priests; and Don E. Gram, Robert Graves, Loyd Stephens, and Samuel O'Colliers, elders.

Brother Farrow was the eleven o'clock speaker.

A picnic lunch was served in the park near by.

The branch business session was held September 9, with Brother J. A. Withee in charge.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: pastor, Elder Tom Gough; secretary, Lisby Gravenmire; bishop's agent, Harry Miller; church school director and Zion's League leader, Bill Horton; music director, Hazelle Withee; librarian, Berna Lou Horton; historian, Dorothy Smith; women's department leader, Louise Creach; publicity agent, Jim Key; finance committee, Ina Cramer, C. W. Fears, and H. F. Van; auditors, Ivor Johnson and B. D. Gravenmire; custodian, Virgil Creach; branch statistician, E. L. Kindell; building committee, Tom Gough, Harry Miller, Wayne Mink, H. F. Van, and C. W. Fears.—Reported by MRS. ALMA COCHRAN

Fourteen Baptized

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—Elder Wallace A. Jackson conducted a series of sermons and cottage meetings January 11-25 and April 26-May 10. Apostle D. Blair Jensen was in Oklahoma City March 14-15, accompanied by Bishop Leslie DeLapp. Apostle Jensen, accompanied by District President O. O. Dollins, Sr., led the priesthood conference discussion on June 13, and preached at the eleven o'clock hour on Sunday, June 14. Missionary work has also been done by local priesthood members Kenneth Sinclair and G. Stewart Wight.

Three groups meet for prayer meetings: one in Central Church, one at Capitol Hill, and one in Midwest City, three Wednesday evenings each month. The fourth Wednesday is used for union meetings.

Activities sponsored by the women's department include a May Day dinner, basket dinners at the church, breakfasts, caring for the sick, and assisting wherever possible. The three circles, Friendly Circle, Wodeas, and Lazibas, met in joint conference with the district leader, Mrs. A. J. Goodwin, in July. May 24, the Wodeas gave a play directed by Velma Nunn, as a money-raising project. A circle of Oriole girls has been organized with Mrs. Lee Scott as leader.

The music department has been active in the Central Church and also the Capitol Hill mission.

The young people attended the District Youth Organization meeting at Shawnee April 26, and the combined Oklahoma District Youth Camp at "Camp Yokoma" in Pawhuska, May 31-June 7.

On March 22, a teacher training class was started with G. Stewart Wight as teacher. The class attendance was good, and most of the members worked for credit. Brother Wight also was instructor of a large group at reunion. Many attended the reunion at Robber's Cave State Park near Wilburton August 8-16, and several were staff workers. Patriarch R. J. Jones gave several blessings, Mary Vickrey had charge of music, Nurse Katherine Slick cared for the sick, and others also helped.

Since January, eight infants have been blessed, and fourteen persons baptized. June Palmer, the last member to join the church, was baptized at the stake reunion.

A business meeting was held on June 26. Those elected were pastor, George W. Fahrubel; secretary, Sister Roy Butler; treasurer, Leroy Hatfield; women's leader, Sister Lee Scott; church school director, Hank Compier; adult supervisor, Sister Velma Nunn; young people's supervisors, Harold Ammerman and wife; children's supervisor, Sister Minerva Yerrington; music director, Sister Loren Vickrey; book steward, Mrs. Warren Slick; librarian and historian, Mrs. Ed Dillon; and auditors, Virgil Downing and Paul Vickrey.

The pastor and his counselors appointed Mrs. E. Lee Scott to have charge of the church food stand at the State Fair.—Reported by MRS. ED DILLON

Three Baptisms

PROTON, ONTARIO.—All-day services were held at Proton on June 7, with a good attendance at all meetings. District President Gordon Farrow conducted the prayer meeting, Elder William McMurray spoke at the eleven o'clock service, and Patriarch Benson Belrose of Owen Sound spoke at 2:30 that afternoon. The Junior Choir was present at the 11 o'clock service, and the Senior Choir attended the 2:30 service. New choir robes were used for the first time that day.

On August 9 Elder Robert Black baptized Colleen McLean, Bob McLean, and George Spence. Brother Gordon Farrow was present for the confirmations.

Vacation church school was held at the church early in July, with an attendance of over ninety children.

Bishop Leslie Kohlman visited the branch for a short series in May. Sister Kohlman gave an inspiring address to the women's department in June. The meeting was held in the evening at the church, with the men present also.

The women's department sponsored a booth at the local fair and cleared about fifty dollars.—Reported by DELL BLACK

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Lambert of Niagara Falls, New York, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on August 12. They were married in Niagara Falls in 1903 and have resided there since that time. The maid of honor, the best man, the organist, and several guests who attended the wedding were present for the open house held in their honor.

The Lamberts have four daughters: Mrs. Bernard Devins of Wilmington, Delaware; Mrs. Franklyn Brehse of Hamlin, New York; Mrs. James Smith of Oaklawn, Illinois; and Mrs. Philip Moore of Warrensburg, Missouri. They also have six grandchildren. Their four daughters and their husbands and the grandchildren were all present for the first time in thirteen years.

Brother and Sister Lambert are both charter members of the branch at Niagara Falls. They attended services in Niagara Falls, Ontario, before the branch was organized on the American side.

Letters

Our Son Is in the Army

A few months ago our son received a request from Uncle Sam to make an appearance at his local draft board to begin a two-year sojourn in the Armed Forces.

Now we had joined the thousands of American parents who have seen their sons march off with a police-action army—to defend freedom we were told, although we had to admit we were not exactly sure just whose freedom they were to defend, or why it should be defended.

As loyal Americans we have always had a lot of faith in our democratic form of government, and having been taught from our youth up to "pledge allegiance to the flag" and to defend "liberty" with our lives, or the lives of our loved ones—should the occasion arise—we reluctantly gave up our son and tried to keep smiling as we consoled ourselves with the fact that he would have eight weeks of basic training in the States, and if he was lucky he might receive some specialized training which would keep him with us for a while longer. Secretly we kept hoping our son would develop some indispensable talent that might make it necessary for him to stay stateside.

We soon found that the army is no respecter of parents' wishes when we received word our son would be home for a very few days, and thereafter he was to report for duty in the Far Eastern Sector.

No longer was the Korean situation just a dark cloud on the horizon of our lives. It had become a cold, stark, brutal reality that came screaming into our living room through the radio, the newspaper, and conversations with relatives and friends. It bobbed up at meal time, but worst of all it sneaked into our bedroom in the still dark hours of the night and tortured us into drawing memory pictures of our son from a small lad to the time we had so recently seen him pick up his duffel bag and walk out the door to a waiting motor vehicle that whisked him down the driveway on the first lap of a journey that was destined to take him thousands of miles to an entirely new part of the world—and a new way of life. Helplessly we would roll and toss on our beds until the anguish was replaced with a dull, restless feeling of uncertainty, and then we would drift back to the usual routine of waiting, hoping, and praying.

Then came the news of the Korean truce with its cease-fire order. How wonderful to relax from former fear and worry! But an end soon came to this paradise when we received letters from our son, in which he complained of the monotony of too much idleness.

Long week-end passes were filled by visiting surrounding cities, villages, and lake-shore resorts. As always, he found the good and evil practices existing side by side, and in most cases the evil seemed to be the more alluring; choices had to be made. Our son's chief concern was how far he could go into worldly pleasures without becoming too much a part of them. He explained how miserable and lonesome a soldier was unless he was accepted as one of the outfit. Firmly he defended his buddies as "Good Joes," though some of them might be somewhat trifling.

We were sadly distressed when we realized how easy it would be for our son to fall into conditions which might cause him to lose sight of all the light he had once received. God's protecting care could not rest upon him if his heart and mind were far from Him. Only his early home and church training, his love for family and others would steady his life and guide him safely through the probable thirteen months of service life ahead.

So, with a prayer in our hearts, we redoubled our efforts to keep him happy by writing cheerful, friendly, inspirational letters of our home, church, and community life. Continually we encouraged relatives and friends to write to him. We knew how eagerly he looked forward to mail call.

To almost everyone our son is just an average American boy, and that would be a perfectly accurate observation—yet to the other children in our family, he is a much missed brother. They might even find it easy to worship him as a sort of special hero. But to us, his parents, he will always be just a little boy who very greatly needs all the help we and his Heavenly Father can give.

Prove Him

It has been suggested that my own experience in complying with the financial law of the church might help another to make an adjustment and share the attendant blessing the Lord has promised to the obedient. While I shrink from publicizing portions of the experience, I do believe the Lord expects us to share a blessing, and in a general sense, as we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, what he says to one he says to all.

I grew up with the understanding that tithing is a debt and offerings are a privilege. It was, therefore, only natural and not particularly to my credit that I began tithing with my first employment.

For some years I did stenographic and secretarial work. Then cataract developed on my eyes and I had to give up my work. During the ensuing period we were in really straitened circumstances. My father, who was blind from an injury in childhood, taught music and did some canvassing. Mother did dressmaking, and I received a nominal pension. During that time our district bishop came to Burlington Branch and urged the filing of family statements.

At my mother's invitation he came to our home and went over the whole situation with us. He was deeply moved, whether in sympathy or under the influence of the Spirit I did not realize at the time, but when he regained control of his emotions, he said, "There is no more tithing due here, but this I must tell you; you shall not want."

The conviction grew on me as time passed that this promise was prompted by the Spirit. It was fulfilled to the letter, for while there were denials we did not lack the essentials of life.

After the cataract was removed by surgery, I resumed office work at Burlington for perhaps two more years. Then word came of an opening in the stake office at Lamoni. I corresponded with the stake officials and made the matter a subject of fasting and prayer. Word came through our pastor in a prayer service: "Enter in and occupy, and the Lord will bless the undertaking." I came to Lamoni, uplifted with the thought of church employment at the Lord's direction. All too soon neuritis in my right arm forced me to give up my work. I was very depressed, for my parents had moved here dependent in large measure on my earnings.

It didn't seem that God was "blessing the undertaking" when I had to give up the work so soon, and one day in deep despondency, I thought, Lord, I just can't see our way through. At once a line of the hymn, "How firm a foundation," came to my mind. It was "What more can he say than to you he hath said?" Simultaneously I recalled Bishop Lambert's words: "You shall not want," and the burden lifted. Again the promise was verified. Help came from an unexpected source which tided us over a period of years.

Then trouble came again when in 1944 I sustained an eye injury. Not long after I was granted a pension and I was still able to do my humble share in complying with the temporal law, as through the years.

Within the past two years the promise, "You shall not want," was renewed only a few months prior to another testing of faith which threatened again to cut me off from doing even a small share. This, too, passed, and I felt that for a third time the promise was verified.

Whether our share be great or small, it is my prayer that we may strive to find joy in cheerful compliance, which brings peace and security in the knowledge that we have placed ourselves in line for the Lord's blessing. Our sole motive should not be expectation of material gain. The Lord says in Malachi 3:10: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing." Experience tells me that word is sure.

From a Ninety-five-year-old Member

After reading Sister White's letter I thought some readers might like to know why I am a member of the Reorganized Church. At the age of sixteen I was baptized into the Disciple (now Christian) Church in Canada. Then I came to Iowa and heard my first sermon by a minister of the Reorganized Church. He visited in our home later, and I explained to him that I had been sincere in my beliefs when I was baptized a Disciple. Then he asked me how many sincere errors it took to make one sincere truth. I continued to listen to his sermons and became satisfied that here was one having authority to speak for and baptize in the name of the Father.

I am now ninety-five years old and have been a member for sixty-four years. I can testify that I know this is the church of Christ; I am completely satisfied with the restored gospel.

Church Men in the News

Dr. William E. Phillips Honored

AFFECTION and high esteem for Dr. William Edgar Phillips, who has practiced medicine in Wayne County, Illinois, for thirty-nine years, resulted in a county-wide tribute to him at Cisne, Illinois, on August 27. Approximately 863 of an estimated 3,000 babies delivered by the doctor registered at a special booth and put on tags reading "I'm a Doc Phillips baby."

Den T. Bunting of Fairfield acted as master of ceremonies for the afternoon tribute, and Dr. Andy Hall, honored in 1949 by the American Medical Association as "General Practitioner of the Year," was one of the speakers. Featured speaker was President F. Henry Edwards. The Phillipses are members of the Reorganized Church.

The afternoon program got under way with a parade, which started at the high school. The doctor rode alone at the head of the parade in an open buggy pulled by one horse. When he started practicing in 1914, that was the means of transportation he used. Behind him came wagons and trucks carrying babies he had delivered.

Seated with Brother Phillips on the stand were his wife, Mabel, and their two daughters, Mrs. Mildred Fehrenbacher and Mrs. Marie Henson, both of Flora, Illinois.

A number of gifts were presented to the doctor, and he also was given a plaque by the citizens of Cisne and community in recognition of his many years of faithful service as a practicing physician.

Some idea of the kind of service given the community by the doctor came from comments made by area residents during the afternoon. They told of low fees charged those unable to pay, of calls made at any hour, of consistent competence, consideration, and courage.

Dr. Phillips now has his office in his home, where he also prepares his own prescriptions.

He was born January 13, 1888, on a farm near Xenia, Illinois. He and his wife grew up in the same area and were childhood sweethearts. They were married on April 12, 1908. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in November, 1909, near the present Brush Creek reunion grounds by Elder J. F. Curtis. He was ordained a teacher in 1918, an elder in 1948, and has served as treasurer of the reunion for a number of years.

Doctor Phillips did not graduate from high school but entered medical school on a teacher's certificate. In 1910 he went to Barnes University, changing to Loyola University in Chicago the following year. He was graduated from the school of medicine in 1914.

He is also a member of IOOF and Rotary. Besides his interest in competitive sports, Dr. Phillips says, "I have been far too busy for years to have any outside interests except the practice of medicine, unless it is helping to develop the Brush Creek Reunion."

Thoughts and prayers for children

By Helen Link

This is a devotional book for the family. It is written in such simple words and in such an interesting style that any child who can read will find it meaningful, but it will be used most effectively in homes where parents and children think and pray together. At Home . . . The House of God . . . Friends and Neighbors . . . Our Father's World . . . Great Days of the Year—these are the suggestive headings under which the author seeks to bring God near to boys and girls. The Christian Education Press.

A daughter, Marilyn Kay, was born on March 14 to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel N. Binns of Lenexa, Kansas. She was blessed on September 13 by High Priest F. R. Whipple. Mrs. Binns is the former Gwendolyn Harp.

A son, Richard Gordon, was born on June 14 to Mr. and Mrs. Roland Best of Santa Ana, California. Both parents attended Graceland College.

A daughter, Mary Ellen, was born on September 19 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wolf of Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEATHS

BENNINGTON.—Dorothea Mae, daughter of Charles and Ethel Mottet, was born September 8, 1911, at Duenweg, Missouri, and died September 6, 1953, at Mt. Carmel Hospital in Pittsburg, Kansas. She spent her youth in Webb City, Missouri, where she was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight. On July 20, 1935, she was married to Lewis Bennington and moved to Pittsburg.

Surviving are her husband; two daughters: Betty Dee and Suzanne LaVonne of the home; her mother, Mrs. Ethel Mottet of Webb City; a sister, Mrs. Sam Landrum of Pittsburg; and four brothers: Cecil O. and Charles F. Mottet of Bayside, California; Sfc. M. P. Mottet of the armed forces in Munich, Germany; and T/Sgt. Mark O. Mottet of the armed forces in Denver, Colorado. Funeral services were conducted at the Smith Chapel in Pittsburg, Pastor T. W. Bath officiating. Interment was in Mt. Olive Cemetery.

TAYLOR.—John Hyrum, son of John and Sarah Nelson Taylor, was born November 24, 1866, in Garafraxa Township, Ontario, and died at his home in Grand Valley, Ontario, September 10, 1953. His wife, the former Mary Elizabeth Hillis, preceded him in death on December 14, 1952. He was a charter member of the Garafraxa (now Grand Valley) Branch and his ministry as priest and elder extended over sixty-five years. For fifty-five years he served as pastor.

Surviving are five daughters: Gertrude Irvine, Sarah Watson, Josie Clifton, Mildred Ferns, and Madeline Acheson; a son, John James Taylor; eight grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Grand Valley Church, Pastor R. J. Farthing officiating. Burial was in Grand Valley Union Cemetery.

KISER.—Raymond Gilbert, son of Beulah and the late Edward Kiser, was born May 30, 1926, and died September 3, 1953, at Torrance, California, of injuries received in an automobile accident. He was married in October, 1952, to Thalia Higgins, who was seriously injured in the accident also. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 15, 1934.

Besides his wife and mother he leaves two sisters: Mrs. C. C. Jones and Mrs. A. L. Hagmeier of Keokuk, Iowa; and two brothers: Harold J. of Seattle, Washington, and Donald Lee of Biloxi, Mississippi. Funeral services were held at the Stone and Myer Chapel, the Reverend John L. Taylor of the Torrence Methodist Church officiating. Interment was in Pacific Crest Cemetery.

WHEELER.—Myrtle Catherine Hough, was born September 26, 1890, at Crescent, Iowa, and died July 30, 1953, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She had resided in Council Bluffs the past twenty-nine years and had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May, 1943.

She is survived by her husband, Florez; her mother, Mrs. Alice E. Hough of Grand Island, Nebraska; two sisters: Mrs. Maude M. Reynolds of Denver, Colorado; and Mrs. Mayme Lang of Grand Island. Elder V. D. Ruch conducted the funeral service at Rusch Chapel in Council Bluffs. Interment was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

RODGER.—Mary Margaret Jackson, was born January 2, 1869, in Wellington County, Ontario, and died August 4, 1953, at her home in Proton Township, Ontario. She was married to Andrew Rodger, who preceded her in death in 1933. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1886.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. W. McKinney of Hopeville, Mrs. H. Culp of Arthur, and Mrs. M. Campbell of Toronto; and one son, Elliott, of the homestead. The funeral was held at the Reorganized Church in Proton, Patriarch Benson Belrose and Elder Robert Black officiating. Interment was in the adjoining cemetery.

TOURISM

A Sunday afternoon drive can be one of the happiest—and one of the most dangerous—of recreations, since Sunday drivers are very nearly the world's worst. You must be ready to go off on the shoulder of the highway at any moment (if there is a shoulder, and not a ditch) to save the life of some foolish or reckless driver. Even so, one takes the risk.

East of Columbia, Missouri, twenty miles is Kingdom City where U. S. 40 is crossed by U. S. 54. The latter is narrow, winding, and a bit old, but still one of the prettiest scenic ways of the Middle West. It leads through Ozark hills, covered with trees as green as Old Erin. Fulton to the south has pretty old homes and churches, William Woods College (for girls) with its golf links and pond, and Westminster College (for men, most conveniently) with its sturdy hill and its old columns where Winston Churchill once spoke. Then 54 follows a scenic ridge most of the way to Jefferson City, where the stately dome of the capitol looms up across the Missouri River, a most imposing sight.

We Middle Westerners are proud of our land. It's true that we have no really great mountains, but our hills have trees growing right up to the top. Instead of deserts, we have seas of green grass. Nothing will need to die either of hunger or thirst on these rich expanses of prairie. It is a land of milk and honey, literally, for there are many dairies, and bees thrive in the orchards. Every inch of soil makes it possible for something or someone to live. There is life, not death, in the lush beauty of this land. When one has seen hundreds of miles of barren mountain and blistering desert, the Midwestern prairies look beautiful indeed. L. J. L.

NOCTURNE

The beauty of the night is best seen in the country, far from city smoke, dust, and lights. Simply to look at the sky is to feel nearer to God in being close to his creations.

Last night the moon was nearly full, and we stood looking at it through the front screen door. There was a peculiar effect—the screen caught the moon's radiance and reflected it in the form of a cross... Probably physics created the illusion. Anyway, isn't it a lovely thought that the sign of the Cross is in the light of the moon, if we can only see it there?

Daytime is for thoughts, but the night is for moods. In the lengthening shadows of twilight and the somber dusk, something racially older than intelligence communicates with the mind, and something in the soul reaches out farther than the eye can see, and something deep within our nature listens for more than the ear can hear. At night the universe touches the heart. L. J. L.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT EDWARDS RETURNS

President F. Henry Edwards returned this week from two weeks spent at Great Lakes Mission with Apostle C. George Mesley. He attended a conference on administrative matters with the officers of the various districts of the mission, and was associated with Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder Floyd McDowell and twenty-eight appointees in a ministerial clinic at Kirtland Temple.

AT BREWTON, ALABAMA

Apostle Percy Farrow met with the Gulf States reunion committee on October 3, and was the Sunday morning and evening speaker at Brewton, Alabama, on October 4. Elder Ben Jernigan is pastor there.

APOSTLE HANSON RETURNS

Apostle Paul M. Hanson has returned from an extensive visit among the branches and missions of the Western Montana and Idaho Districts. The church at Missoula, Montana, was dedicated on August 30.

CONTACTS SCATTERED SAINTS

Apostle Percy Farrow has returned from Pensacola District conference, held September 26-27, at which Elder Lee Oliver was re-elected district president. Apostle Farrow also met with the Crestview mission in Florida, a new group sponsored by the district president of Pensacola District, where attendance has reached as high as fifty-five.

Brother Oliver accompanied Brother Farrow to Atlanta, and to North Augusta, Georgia, and Williston, South Carolina. In that area they contacted twenty-five members, among them an elder and a priest. All had thought themselves isolated. They were located through a notice placed in the "Herald" bulletin board by Paul Wellington, assistant editor. Services were held October 1 at the home of Brother and Sister G. H. Sarratt, and arrangements were made for continued Sunday services.

CONDUCTS MISSIONARY SERIES

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, began a week-long missionary series, "Christ in the Center Place," at Walnut Park church in Zion on Sunday, October 4.

CHURCH SCHOOL INSTITUTE HELD

John R. Darling, Director of Leadership Training in the Department of Religious Education, returned October 6 from a church school institute held at Minneapolis, Minnesota. He reported an excellent, well-supported meeting. The work was directed by District President Wesley Elvin, assisted by Mrs. Paul Staffeld, district church school director. Lesson demonstrations were presented by Mrs. Helen Lundeen, Mrs. Vivian Shipley, and Vernon Lundeen. On the return trip, Brother Darling stopped at his former home in La Crosse, Wisconsin, to visit with Saints there.

ATTENDS CONFERENCE

Lee Hart, Stake Director of Youth Activities, represented the church at the National Boy Scout-Church Relationships Conference on Schiff Reservation at Mendham, New Jersey, September 28-October 2. About thirty-five national organizations, including major Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, and civic groups that sponsor scouting as their activity for boys were present for the conference.

Betty Mosier

BETTY MOSIER returned to Graceland College in 1951 as instructor of piano and theory. She also taught from 1947 to 1949.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. L. Mosier of Independence, Missouri, she was born in Independence in 1922, attended grade school there, and was graduated from William Chrisman High. In 1945 she received her Bachelor of Music degree at the Conservatory of Music in Kansas City, Missouri. During her last two years of study she taught in the junior school conservatory. She did graduate work at the University of Illinois and received a Master of Music degree with a major in composition and theory and a minor in musicology. She is a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, an international fraternity for professional women in the music field.

Before coming to Graceland, Betty had a private studio in Independence, Missouri, for two years. At present she spends much time in music composition. She has written several anthems, one of which was sung by the Walnut Park Choir. At least two of her compositions have been performed at General Conference and one on the Graceland program in 1951. At the University of Illinois, a voice teacher used one of Betty's songs at her recital.

Betty joined the Reorganized Church when she was eight years old. During her college days she conducted the girl's chorus and the adult choir at the Walnut Park Church in Independence. At present she conducts the chapel choir, a selected ensemble which sings sacred choral music of all types for the campus congregation.

As hobbies Betty enjoys sketching, oil painting, and mountain climbing.

In Partnership with Graceland

THE INFLUENCE of Graceland College saturates the October atmosphere of many Reorganized Latter Day Saint homes. For many of our young people, the Tower will symbolize a way of life for the next several months. The parents and others of us will eagerly watch the affairs of the college and will try to anticipate its effect in their lives. We're interested in the results.

The products of Graceland are usually scrutinized carefully—even critically. Often the "bad apple in the barrel" is remembered longer than the many "healthy" graduates. But the unprejudiced observer recalls how many fine specimens of adulthood walk out her doors into positions of responsibility.

Although Graceland life may effect tremendous changes in many students, it cannot be held fully accountable for the finished product. For Graceland receives young people already "indoctrinated" with seventeen or eighteen years of habits and attitudes of the home, previous schools, the local church, and other associations. Two years is a short length of time to either "make" or "break" a normal student. Graceland accelerates his growth to adulthood, places on him the responsibilities of self-discipline, tries to help him discover useful and mature attitudes and habits and, if he responds, "makes" him into the man we desire to see. But if he doesn't turn out just right, you may be sure that Graceland tried. She may not have found the proper approach to his needs, but probably back of the student's failure lay deep-seated practices that were difficult to adjust—practices accumulated in our homes and local surroundings.

Scrutiny can work two ways. Not only do we have the prerogative to "eye" Graceland; she has cause many times to critically question our care and preparation of her future students. From experience, she knows it is extremely hard to put a "good finish" on a "rough interior."

So, as we become increasingly aware of our role in the lives of Gracelanders, we see the need of a partnership attitude. We, too, are responsible for the outcome of this year's "crop" of graduates.

GRACELAND'S SUCCESS is traditionally measured by the degree of church support exhibited by her students. We especially notice those who fail to respond (or cease to respond) to that which we cherish and feel important. Especially are we saddened by the loss of association with those who grew up with us and shared our religious experiences. What causes this estrangement? Or, stated more positively, what is it that ties people to the church for life?

My few years of observation indicate there are many factors (singly or in combination) which cause people to adhere to the church. These are of concern not only at Graceland but especially in the local branch. They are needs we must fill if our church is to continue to grow.

Members must feel that the church has a meaningful purpose for existing. To remain true to the church, most people eventually ask themselves, "Why does it exist?" And if the summary of answers seems important, the church's purposeful existence is established in their attitudes. Most of today's young people are not satisfied with some ethereal past or hereafter. They search for a present-day practical meaning in its existence. They are somewhat like the nine-year-old girl who visited the fortune-teller. When told what a handsome husband she would have when she grew up, she replied, "I'm not interested in a husband! I want to know the answers to tomorrow's test!"

Members must have convictions. These may come as the result of personal experience, or they may be absorbed from the testimony of others. In either case, the testimony or the experience must be accepted by them as proof that the church is a divinely restored institution.

Members must keep their perspective of religion in balance with all phases of living. Inspiration must not be replaced by education, but neither must education be restricted as unnecessary to inspiration. The power of healing should be accepted as real, but the use of man's discoveries in the field of medicine should not be considered ungodly. Time should be devoted to the furtherance of God's kingdom on earth, but wisdom must be exercised in determining how much time shall be devoted to business, to church activities, to the home. "Pure religion, undefiled" is more than mystical theology; it is an attitude toward everyday living. Members who lean either too far "out of this world" or too far "into the world" move out of the realm of church fellowship.

Members must be stimulated. Some, it is true, seem to enjoy coming to church if they are not stimulated into action. But most members, especially young people with their vim and vitality, want and need challenging words and tasks. Interest lags for many if they have no part to play in the movement of the church. For those who are already stimulated to act, the opportunity to act needs to be afforded and direction given.

Members must have friendships within the church. No comments are necessary. All who read these words can recall experiences pointing out this need.

THE LOCAL BRANCH that is most able to give purpose to the church, provide opportunities to obtain convictions, point out a balanced life, and offer stimulation and friendship will more nearly produce potential Gracelanders of merit and distinction. Not only will this congregation have high regards for Graceland; Graceland in turn will express mutual admiration for her co-producer—her responsible partner in building quality lives!

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Harry Simons, President of the Central Missouri Stake:

Our conference Sunday was one which will long be remembered by many people in our stake. It was probably a record attendance; 756 were present for the morning preaching service, at which time Bishop H. L. Livingston was the speaker. The Warrensburg choir of thirty-five voices, made up largely of students here at the college, brought a splendid ministry of music. A fine spirit prevailed throughout the day. Practically everyone remained for the business session which was held in the afternoon. Stake officers and congregational pastors were elected, and seventeen men were approved for ordination.

One matter of business which consumed a considerable amount of time and which will affect many people of the stake in years to come was that which resulted in a decision to purchase a fifty-two acre piece of ground for a reunion site. It is located two and one-half miles north of Odessa, has an eleven room house, with other buildings. Fully realizing that considerable funds were necessary to start with, our people responded to the call for money and in cash and pledges we raised $11,000, all of which is promised by December 1, 1953. Our people are very enthusiastic about this purchase, and we are hopeful that it will be one of the most picturesque reunion grounds in this area when it is fully developed.

From Louis Zonker, Frankfurt/Main, Germany:

The past six weeks have been eventful ones for us over here. It was my privilege—together with Victor Witte, our Holland missionary, Anton Compier, and our German missionary, Oskar Stüve—to travel to England for the annual reunion. This proved to be a rich experience for all.

On the following week end we were in Berlin. On this occasion our two German patriarchs rendered an excellent ministry in giving blessings to three Saints. Apostle and Sister Oakman contributed richly to this week end, and all were appreciative of their fine ministry. It was at Berlin that we bade farewell to the Oakmans. Since then I have been reflecting over the past eight months in which Brother Oakman brought unselfishly an outstanding ministry of love and spirit to these Saints. His presence has meant much to these folk, and the responsibilities of membership have been more clearly accepted as a result of this fellowship.

It was my special privilege to visit many of the branches and groups here with Brother Oakman and Brother Witte. I want you to know that the Saints here have been ministered to throughout the past months. This ministry has not been a momentary thing. It is living now in our groups and shall continue to do so. I can see wisdom and God's direction in the appointments you have made relative to this mission.

I feel that something has happened this year in Germany that was deeply needed. Our experience in Hannover at Whitsuntide seemed to fulfill every need of that time. In each group a rich outpouring of God's spirit was felt. I can only say that I know the work of the mission here will continue to progress.

Attention: College Students

The Subcommittee on Ministry to College Students needs the names of all R. L. D. S. young people attending institutions of higher education in order to place their names on the free mailing list for the University Bulletin—a church-sponsored news bulletin to college people.

The Committee is particularly anxious to maintain active contact with church youth on campuses where only a small number of our young people are in attendance. Parents and pastors are urged to send this information to Dr. Dwight DW Davis, 1540 East Mechanic Street, Independence, Missouri.

Protestant Press Month

DURING THE MONTH of October the Protestant churches are making a concerted effort to promote the reading of church periodicals. We wish them success and join in on the chorus. Of all the special days, weeks, and months set aside for emphasis this year, it is hard to think of one which will have a higher potential of lasting good.

A sister from Oklahoma wrote us recently:

"I wish to tell you about another way to appreciate the Herald, but, I must admit, not a very satisfactory way.

Just do without it a while. It's so nice to be receiving it again, and I enjoy it more than ever. I missed it so much."

The editors don't recommend this absence treatment. People differ in their reactions to similar circumstances. It may be true that with some "absence makes the heart grow fonder," but with most of us "out of sight is out of mind."

All denominations have their official church organ, leaders' magazines, and devotional periodicals. It is observable that those denominations grow which give most enthusiastic support to such periodicals. Denominations which do not subscribe for and read their own literature do not increase in numbers. There are a few instances where the entire early existence and development of the group can be traced to their publications.

WE HAVE a distinctive message, and this is reflected in all our literature. Our goal is to present this message in definite and attractive ways. We should expect the church school papers, lesson materials, or other periodicals to make us better Reorganized Latter Day Saints. Our minds grow by what they feed on.

October is a good month to determine that you will get and read Reorganized Church periodicals. Watch your mailing wrappers for the expiration dates. The month and year may appear there as 10-53. This means that the subscription will expire with the October (last) issue. Expiration notices are always sent before or with this last issue, but we learn that sometimes these are overlooked by the subscriber. We at Herald House are anxious that you do not miss a single issue.

Just a few words about the price. The cost of publishing, which is influenced largely by the number of copies printed (subscribers), determines the price. Whether the value is there or not, only you can determine. It seems fair to assume that everything is too high based on old standards, but we can't go back to those standards of value. Let's compare the $3.50 Herald subscription which brings to your door fifty-two times a year twenty-four pages of Reorganized Church editorials, sermons, articles, news, et cetera, with what you can get for the same amount of money when you pull into the filling station or garage. How far will $3.50 go when you take the wife out for Sunday dinner or at the grocery store for the week's supply? Values are, of course, relative. You spend your money for that which you feel will give you the most satisfaction. A real test of your love for the church and your desire to keep pace with kingdom development may be found in your desire to have the church literature and to read it. C. B. H.

A College on a Hill

Convocation Address
Graceland, September 17, 1953

By President E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

IT WILL BE twenty years ago next September that a carload of youthful and almost penniless migrants reached Lamoni after a trip of two thousand miles from the great state of Washington. The automobile was of ancient vintage, having cost the grand sum of $62 some years before the date of what was almost its last trip. As Council Bluffs was reached, the rarified air of Iowa seemed to be more than the old motor could stand and it choked and sputtered and almost gave up. With some skillful coaxing by the operator, the result of much experience, the engine continued to operate at about half capacity.

About fifty miles from Lamoni all of the car's passengers were fully awake. The suspense of the approaching end of the journey and the certainty of the impending end of the engine's operations alerted the group. At the crest of each one of southern Iowa's roller coaster hills someone would say, "I think I see the college." And then it was just at sunset and coming in from Leon that we saw the tower. It was a sight never to be forgotten. The old car rolled into town, labored up the college hill, gasped for breath, and gave up the ghost. It had served its purpose. We were at Graceland.

I suppose that even in these days of more luxurious travel there is a thrill experienced by most students who see the Ad building tower up on the Graceland hill. And I want to assure you that for those of us who have been climbing this college hill for one year, ten years, or thirty-five years, there are still thoughts and feelings to stir the heart in the fresh stillness of early morning, in the unbelievable gold and azure sunset of an autumn afternoon, or the black and brilliance of a starlit night. At those times our hearts have been one with the Psalmist as he said, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth" (Psalm 121). And it is about some of those thoughts gleaned while climbing the college hill that I would like to talk this morning.

President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., greets Charles Thorburn Williams, 201 Albany, Ottumwa, Iowa, at the president's reception at Graceland College, September 11. Charles is a fourth generation Graceland student. His mother, Alice Fleming Williams was graduated in 1929; his grandmother, Jessie Fleming Lane of East Moline, Illinois, was graduated in 1899; and his great-grandparents, George and Allie Thorburn attended Graceland in 1900 and 1902, three years after their daughter was graduated. The girl standing beside President Gleazer is Barbara Woods of Inglewood, California.

Graceland's doors were first opened in 1895 to thirty-four students. This year enrollment was limited to 585 students.

Many of you have lifted up your eyes to the Graceland hill. You have come out of sense of need. You have come for help. And the Graceland spirit and mission are rooted in the conviction that such help comes from the Lord, and that he made heaven and earth. It is in regard to three related truths—cogitations while climbing—that I speak; the immediate goal before us, effort required to reach that goal, and the grand expanse of unexplored terrain that unfolds before us as we complete our Graceland work.

An Immediate Goal

I like to walk. Sometimes I go for a walk simply for enjoyment, and it isn't important to me where I go. There are other times that I have a definite destination in mind. This morning I stood at the foot of the college hill and looked up. Before me was the Ad building. There was work waiting for me in my office. I started up the hill.

There is a good feeling of assurance and purpose that comes when you know the nature of the work to be done and you can actually come to grips with it. It is frustrating and confusing and tiring to be uncertain about what to do and how to do it.

One of the challenging problems of our generation is a youth's uncertainty as to his future course and his suspicion that he might not be the master of his own destiny. There are questions of military service, when and what; of vocational choice, what and how; of marriage, who and when and how; of what to believe; of where to live. You carry a heavy load of critical decisions—choices to be made in a space of just a few years. It is no wonder that in the past some have turned to a leader, a chief, a Hitler, or a teacher, or even parents to solve their problems for them, to tell them what to do, and how to do it, and when.

You on the Graceland hill this morning have the advantage of an immediate goal—something to be done now, here. This is Graceland. Here are met people from many lands, many cultures, different economic levels. This is a social microcosm. And now and here you can live as a person, in a community, meeting firsthand the problems of such relationships. Here you can learn to make yourself understood and able to understand. Here and now you can conserve your money, care for property, manage your time, make your beds, shine your shoes. Here and now you can take care of yourself physically. You can learn to concentrate, to be single-minded, to prepare tomorrow's lesson, to be able to say yes or no and mean it. Here, for perhaps the only time in your life, you will have ample opportunity and time for association with the great personalities of history whose thoughts are recorded on the pages of twenty thousand books in the library. Here are immediate objectives, goals to be reached in two years, objectives within stretching range, accomplishments that will bring a sense of fulfillment and achievement.

It is well to be concerned about distant goals but only from the standpoint of direction. The top of the ladder is reached by climbing rung by rung, and the first rung is as important as the last one. Some people have found, much to their disappointment and sorrow, that in concentrating on the top rungs, they have tripped and fallen long before reaching the top. Sometimes we hear the statement that a person is so blind he cannot see the nose on his face. We are not referring to physical incapacity when we say that, but to a lack of sensitivity to the immediate environment. I am suggesting this morning as forthrightly as I can that each needs to see the nose on his face. Each needs to see the opportunities at hand, the goals immediately before him.

It Takes Effort

And now I am about to consign myself to a pedestrian fate. I want to say a few words about people who offer us a ride up the hill. It is not enough to have an immediate goal. As I stand down at the bridge and look up I see my destination. But I can stand there all day and look and not get to my office. I need to set myself in motion, to climb the hill, and that takes effort and energy. Many times, just as I get nicely underway, people will come along in their high-powered automobiles and will say out of the generosity of their hearts, "Do you want to ride up the hill?" And I am never quite sure how to say, "No," because I do appreciate their kindness and courtesy; but I wonder if they know what they are really doing to me. They may be killing me through their kindness, because the most important thing is not whether I actually reach the office or not, but what I am—the condition I am in—when I reach the destination. People feel that they are doing me a favor, saving me exertion and time. They see the immediate problem—that of climbing the hill. If I reach the top but over the course of years have been saved effort so many times that I lack muscular tone and alertness to do my work well—then who has been done a favor?

So many people try to help us as we work toward our objectives. I have heard people say, "I don't want my children to have the same struggles that I did." And there are denied to those children the very struggles that gave to those parents the qualities that make their children love them. What actually is your objective here? If it is a degree, then that is easy enough. I would guess that it will not take a great deal of effort to remain in Graceland nominally for two years and achieve the minimum grade point average required for graduation. You will probably get a diploma and have Associate in Arts stamped on you. But you are making the same mistake as those people who put a V on their cars these days and seem to have the idea that the insignia which usually indicates a V8 motor in a Cadillac with its 200 horsepower will make a powerful car out of a jalopy. No matter how many insignias you put on the outside, the power will not be there unless it is built in.

Are you and your parents interested in your reaching manhood and womanhood, or are you and they interested in your being men and women when you reach the age of your majority. There are three men sitting among the faculty this morning who completed requirements for the Doctor of Philosophy degree some years ago. I refer to Doctors Cheville, Platz, and Mortimore. I know something of the effort expended by them and their families to reach that goal. Not only do they have the diplomas; they have developed in them—mind and muscle—the qualities of competency to which the diploma is supposed to attest. I am maintaining that it is the rightful heritage of every human being to struggle, perspire, make choices, feel the weight of consequences of those choices, to fail, to rise again, to work, to achieve and taste the sweets of achievement. You can probably get a ride up the college hill. You can save a lot of work and a lot of time. Whether you ride or walk depends upon what you want to be when you reach the top.

Unexplored Terrain

And now we stand on Graceland's hill. We have given ourselves to the job at hand. We have done the best we know. Now, believe me, this is not the highest hill. This is but the beginning, for ranging from this base of increasing understanding as far as we can see and beyond, there stand the mysterious, challenging, dangerous, and inviting peaks yet to be explored. And the most threatening temptation to beset us is that we shall turn our backs upon that inspiring panorama and look back down the hill and say, "This is all truth; we have found the answers; our problems are solved." Hear the words of one who caught the greater vision.

I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the seashore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.—Sir Isaac Newton.

Modern scientists still feel as Newton did about the great ocean of undiscovered truth. In Scientific American, some authorities describe the challenging mysteries that keep today's scientists baffled.

Matter is common stuff, but the scientists do not know what matter is. The more they dig into the problem, the more confused they become. A Nobel prize winner in physics admits that neither he nor anyone else can answer the question, "What is matter?"

The head theoretical physicist in the wartime atom-bomb project is baffled by the force that makes matter hold together. According to all known laws, the particles (or waves) that form atomic nuclei should repel one another; instead, they cling tightly to one another with a force that is ten trillion trillion trillion times as strong as the force of gravitation.

Scientists know that cosmic rays are protons or larger atomic nuclei striking the earth from space with energies up to one hundred million electron volts. But they do not agree about where cosmic rays come from or how they get so powerful.

Another great mystery of space is why the galaxies often look like spinning pinwheels. Astronomers believe that the explanation of the mysterious spirals will tell them much about the history of the universe.

Unsolved Mysteries

Life has mysteries that are just as baffling as those of inanimate nature. All living objects are largely made up of proteins. Living cells, even simple bacteria, make proteins by the dozens, but human chemists so far have not synthesized any. Progress thus far is not impressive, and until chemists have mastered the protein's secrets, they cannot understand how life's chemistry works.

A mystery that has fascinated philosophers for thousands of years is how a complete organism develops out of a single fertilized cell. It is a mystery still. The biologists can bother fertilized ova in all sorts of ways, but they cannot explain how the apparently simple cell can, all by itself, construct something as complicated as a whale—or a man.

Some of the biggest mysteries lie in man's own brain. What is memory? No one knows how the brain stores its information. It contains about ten billion neurons (brain cells), but if they worked like the vacuum tubes of electronic computers, there would not be nearly enough of them to store the information in the average, well-furnished brain.

And then what of the peaks yet to climb in man's social relationships? What of the distribution of food? We (the farmers) have voted to place restrictions on the production of wheat next year because there is a "surplus," but what happens to this surplus in terms of the five hundred million people in India and China who live on the verge of starvation and the at least two hundred million who are born and die without ever having had enough to eat one day of their lives? And what about the 500,000 acres of topsoil being lost by erosion in the United States each year?

What of the material culture we have devised, the machines, the factories, the cities, that have little relation to human values? How can we put these in proper relation?

And for you of the church that sponsors this college: How can diversity of viewpoint be utilized for the health of the institution? How can the spirit of inquiry, of criticism, of honest evaluation be conserved? What is the mission of the church to the world of 1953? What emphases ought its message have in terms of the world's needs? How can its ministry be expressed most effectively?

We here in these two years shall light the candle of understanding, knowing that its glow is not to be compared to the brilliance of the sun. Yet it is light enough to illumine our way, and the promise of greater light is before us as we venture on, but the candle must never be mistaken for the sun.

A College on a Hill

And now this golden year lies before us and we are here on Graceland's hill. This is as it should be, for—

A college ought to be built on a hill
So youth can look up.
This is the posture of the inquiring mind.
Some effort should be required to reach the goal—
Not a killing, nervous, exhausting effort
But output of mind and muscle
Which gives the body tone and the mind
A fine edge of sensitivity and alertness.
A college ought to be built on a hill
So that youth who aspire and persevere
Can see from the vantage point gained
New vistas, broader horizons, great goals
That beckon on—new hills.

The Graceland Idea

Director of Public Relations, Graceland College

By W. S. Gould

COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITIES in America represent one of our greatest businesses. Any group which sponsors a college and contributes substantially to its financial support is sure to want to know, "What's the big idea?"

The big idea behind education may be standardized, but the big idea behind a certain college may be different from that behind any other college. Graceland College Day is an appropriate time for all of us to examine our own college and answer the question, "What's the big idea?"

The Graceland idea was probably born in the mind of Joseph Smith the Beloved. It was brought into reality by the generosity of Marietta Walker and the dedicated service of Graceland pioneers such as E. L. Kelly and J. A. Gunsolly. The idea changed and matured under the consistent leadership of George N. Briggs, who was president of Graceland for twenty-nine years. The Graceland idea continues to expand—to grow. We no longer associate it with just one or two persons. It is the composite contribution of the best thought of the entire Graceland faculty, the board of trustees, and many interested friends from the General Church. Basically, the Graceland idea is the same at heart as that conceived by Joseph Smith, but it now embraces the entire world. The Graceland slogan, "Where Maine Meets California," is dead. The sign which welcomes visitors to Lamoni today reads, "Graceland College, an international college."

What Does College Offer

In today's intricate and changing society the value of a college education is widely accepted. More young people crowd into college classrooms now than ever before. It is estimated that in fifteen years our college population will double. What is it that we look for when we go to college?

A college education represents the easiest, the quickest, and the most economical way to achieve certain vital concepts, attitudes, and skills which are required of a mature person. It is by no means the only way of achieving these things. It is simply the easiest, the quickest, and the least expensive. Some of these concepts may be learned in any college. The Graceland idea includes concepts and attitudes which are commonly excluded by most colleges. What are some of these treasures we search for at college?

A good starting place might be what we call "the scientific method." In today's society the scientific method is the accepted approach to almost any problem, whether that problem is related to scientific research, social unrest, marriage difficulties, or the effectiveness of prayer. There was a time when "religious people" considered scientists their enemies. Today some of the strongest testimonies of the certainty of God, the nature of God, and the methods of God come from our greatest scientists, beginning with Albert Einstein himself. The ability to analyze a problem objectively, to observe and collect data, to draw conclusions, test them, and evaluate the entire process is indispensable in our world today. College students who are leaving their adolescence behind them and entering into mental and emotional maturity are ready to learn this process. They are ready to reason without placing themselves at the center of each concern. The scientific method applied to branch administration and missionary endeavor opens the door to limitless opportunity.

A second treasure sought in college halls is that elusive thing called knowledge or information. It is not to be confused with wisdom. It is one part of an education. Our attitudes toward knowledge are often extreme. We either reverence it far beyond its merits or we refuse to concede that it has any real value. When we reason at our best, we recognize the tremendous power which applied knowledge can achieve. It is a tragic misfortune that so many people do not apply their knowledge to any worth-while project. College courses in such subjects as communication, psychology, science, or sociology constitute a most valuable training for personal living and for priesthood ministry. When we learn how to share our best thoughts and feelings with another, when we learn why we feel and think and act as we do, when we learn the laws that govern the process of life itself, when we learn the equally binding laws which govern the behavior of groups in families, churches, communities, and nations, then we have the information and the knowledge which permits us to become useful, high-quality persons.

Old ideas take on new luster as times change. A particularly vital concept which influences many college courses is the universality of mankind. Paul had a vision of this concept when he went to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. After a stirring spiritual experience, Peter expressed this in these unforgettable words, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons."

During the last few years this concept of the universality of man has been dramatized daily at Graceland. For several years about 10 per cent of the Graceland student body has come from outside the continental United States. Each year students have come from such faraway places as Australia, England, Holland, and Japan. Many have come from Canada and Hawaii. During the next few months two young men are expected from Korea. Three girls from Norway entered Graceland this fall. The brotherhood of man has taken on personal meaning to Graceland students.

Graceland Exclusives

The courses, classrooms, laboratories, and activities of a college are easy to catalogue. More elusive and more important is the spiritual, emotional, and intellectual climate of a campus. The Graceland climate has never been duplicated. This climate has nothing to do with drouth or mud, heat or cold. It has never been measured. But it is probably the most important of the exclusive values offered by Graceland College. This implies, and rightly so, that Graceland's greatest asset is her student body. When nearly six hundred highly selected Reorganized Latter Day Saint young people live and work and study and play together for two years under the best leadership the church can offer, good things just naturally happen.

It is the common belief that the ordinary college or university climate is one of intellectual independence, spiritual vacuum, and moral irresponsibility. It is most unfortunate that this concept is frequently true, especially in large schools. At Graceland, extra class activities such as church services, social events, and dormitory life are considered so important that they are represented on the executive council and are recognized as the extra class division, comparable to the division of social studies, division of science, etc. The only way one can get a Graceland education is with Graceland students.

A second Graceland exclusive is found in the strength of group support. Many Graceland students have spent their entire school life as an almost unnoticed and hopeless minority. At Graceland they find fellowship with other young people of their age and faith, often for the first time in their lives. Countless experiments in the field of social psychology prove beyond a doubt that individuals act according to their best knowledge and convictions only when they are supported by others who share those convictions. It is a consoling feeling to know you are not alone—that not only two or three but hundreds of other young people believe as you do and will support your stand in opposition to popular low standards. This feeling is nourished by the warmth of close friendships and the stimulation of inspiring shared worship experiences.

A third Graceland exclusive is the frequent ministry of General Church officials. The carefully planned program of religious life at Graceland, coupled with academic courses in religion and a Christ-centered motivation in other courses, builds a sense of loyalty and love for the church and its program.

Of course these three Graceland exclusives can be found in some degree at other places, such as reunions, youth camps, and General Conferences—but only for a week.

A fourth Graceland exclusive is the Graceland faculty. The church can be proud of the training and devotion of Graceland faculty members. No university in the world will ever match it for freshman and sophomore students. Seven members, constituting 20 per cent of the Graceland faculty, have earned the Doctor's degree. All but two of the entire group hold a Master's degree or its equivalent. All regular faculty members are Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

A fifth Graceland exclusive has sometime been considered an adverse criticism of Graceland. The College has been called a marriage bureau. It is true that quite a few Graceland students fall in love and are married. However, comparison with other colleges reveals that romance and marriage at Graceland is no more popular than in other colleges. Students of college age will fall in love and marry whether they attend college or not. Very few Graceland students think of marriage as an aim for attending college. When conferring with their advisers, very few Graceland students are planning for marriage in the near future. Quite a few of them take courses which prepare them for marriage. Many Graceland students have had little opportunity to meet other young people of their church. Those who do fall in love and marry someone they met at Graceland have established a wonderful record of family stability and happiness. While Graceland marriages are fairly common, a Graceland divorce is practically unheard of. Current social re-

From the King James Translation

To the Inspired Version

By George H. Wixom

IT IS INTERESTING to view the hand of God working among the peoples of the world in a marvelous way to bring to pass his will and purposes among the nations in this “the eleventh hour,” “the evening time,” of the world’s history.

Jesus came to his people in Palestine and there set up his church and proclaimed his gospel message. This church and its message was bitterly opposed by the religious leaders of that day, and finally they crucified their Lord. The Apostle John saw this church in a heavenly vision driven into the wilderness, where it remained for 1,260 years.

This beautiful church of Jesus Christ was restored to the world while the nineteenth century was still young. It appeared under divine Providence in a well-born and favored nation, yet in its infancy; but it did not come without adequate preparation.

God inspired men to translate the Bible into many languages. The question may be asked, how was the translation of the Bible into various tongues to be an open channel for the spreading of God’s word brought about? The story of the production of the English Bible was brought into being by three persons: John Wyclif, William Tyndale, and James, king of England.

JOHN WYCLIF did his work while England was still under the influence of the Dark Ages, and one hundred years before Columbus discovered America. John was what people of today would call a “go-getter.” He bristled with ideas, and was the rare combination of a scholar and a man with initiative. The older he grew, the more of a reformer he became. He was determined that something must be done for the religious life of the people of England. So he did two things. First he gathered around him other scholars, and they translated the whole Bible in the language of the people.

Printing with movable type had not yet been introduced, so every copy of Wyclif’s Bible had to be written by hand. England thus became the first of the modern nations of Europe to have the whole Bible in the language of the people.

Many copies must have been made, for there are more than one hundred and seventy copies scattered about in various libraries today.

The other thing that John Wyclif did was to gather about him a band of poor priests who were called Lollards. These he sent out to preach the word to the people who now had access to the Scriptures in their own tongue. This evangelistic movement was most successful. The followers of the Lollards, who were called by the same name, became so numerous that shortly after Wyclif’s death a bitter enemy of the movement said that if you met two men, one of them was sure to be a Lollard. All of this began more than one hundred years before Luther. It is little wonder that Wyclif has been called the “Morning Star of the Reformation.”

WILLIAM TYNDALE was born about the time Columbus discovered America, and was one of the leading scholars of that day. After ten years at Oxford and Cambridge he became “very skilled,” says one of his biographers. Born in 1492 in Gloucestershire on the Welch border, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1521 and translated the New Testament into common English. He was bitterly opposed by the backward clergy of that day. He published the New Testament in Hamburg, Germany, in 1526 and smuggled copies into England. He was tried for spreading sedition and was condemned. Tyndale was one of the greatest forces of the English Reformation and helped to form the Puritan Party in England. He translated the Old Testament from the Book of Joshua to the Chronicles while in prison.

JAMES, the king of England, authorized the translation of the Bible into English, known today as the King James Version.

God was thus preparing the way for the restoration of the gospel and of his church. He worked through such men as Wyclif, Tyndale, Huss, Luther, Columbus, and many others, to break down tyranny and to prepare the way for the introduction of the restoration of the gospel, and to establish his church as in former years.

Yes, he guided the ships of Columbus, led and inspired the Pilgrim Fathers, sustained them in poverty and want, and endowed the founding fathers with wisdom beyond their own. When the time had arrived for the Restoration, which was lost in the Dark Ages, he led a boy into the woods of New England to inform him that he would be an instrument in God’s hands to restore to the world “the marvelous work and a wonder,” the beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ.

This day was foreshadowed by the ancient prophets, both in the Old and New Testaments which stood to vindicate the message of this young prophet. God, knowing the calamity which must come upon the earth, took the initiative for our preservation and salvation.

From New England the church moved steadily with a number of missionaries—most of them very young men—taking the good news to others. Four young missionaries went westward to Ohio and from there to Jackson County, Missouri, carrying with them a copy of a history of the ancient Americans Christ visited after his resurrection. This book was known as the Book of Mormon, compiled by Mormon, one of the ancient prophets of this American continent.

AFTER THE CHURCH was organized, in order to correct some of the mistakes that had crept into the Bible as it was copied and recopied so often by longhand, the Lord provided a means to remove these errors, as some who did not believe in the Bible used them to show that it was not the book Christians claimed it to be.

The young prophet was commanded of the Lord to publish what is known as the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures, which would correct these errors and give the Holy Scriptures greater power and influence in the preaching of the gospel.

Here are several errors found in the King James Version of the Bible which show the need for such corrections:

Deuteronomy 14: 21: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger, . . . for thou art an holy people." The Inspired Version says, "not give it unto the stranger."

II Kings 19: 35 tells how the angel of the Lord slew 185,000 Assyrians, and when they arose "they were dead corpses." The Inspired Version reads that when "they that were left arose they were all dead corpses."

Matthew 8: 12 says that the children of the kingdom are all to be cast out. The Inspired Version reads: "the children of the wicked one shall be cast out."

Hebrews 7: 1-3 says that Melchisedec was without father or mother, but the Inspired Version says that the priesthood was without father or mother. Luke 8: 23 says the disciples were all filled with water. The Inspired Version reads, "they were filled with fear."

A copy of Three Bibles Compared will show where many mistranslations have been corrected in the Inspired Version.

When the Lord restored the gospel, he saw the need of giving us a corrected Bible, free from contradictions, errors, and inconsistencies. We should be thankful that he provided the Inspired Version to help us better understand his word.

Books

The Minister's Personal Guide, by Walter E. Schuette, Harper and Brothers, 1953. Price, $2.95.

"An Emily Post for pastors" is what Time magazine calls Walter E. Schuette's book The Minister's Personal Guide. It is just that. Members of the clergy, regardless of sect, have common problems, and Reorganized Latter Day Saint ministers will find the advice of this eighty-five-year-old Lutheran minister helpful in many of the pastoral problems of their own profession.

Skipping over The Call, which has particular reference to the selection of pastors for parishes in sectarian churches, I find Reverend Schuette's advice on how to conduct one's self in a new pastoral assignment is most excellent. Every pastor would do well to read it.

Pulpit Mannerisms are properly castigated. He suggests a simple solution to the habit of putting hands in pockets. "Have your wife take safety pins and make the pockets inaccessible on Sundays."

Praise: He warns ministers neither to seek nor to be too much affected by praise when they receive it. He doesn't value wives' criticisms very highly, for he says: "I have taken note of an adoration so prevalent among ministers' wives that I take little stock in their criticisms of their husbands."

Announcements: These have no place in the divine service. Still "we have the minister who spins out announcements almost endlessly. Why can he not, if he is incurably addicted to the announcement habit, at least make his notices plain and terse?" Why read announcements that are already printed in the bulletin, word for word, as some ministers do?

Music: When a gesticulating director enters the scene, usually as the most prominent feature, the anthem becomes a performance. A choir's part in the holy service is immeasurably depreciated by the visible presence of a director.

Pastor's Children: "The parsonage has no reason to blush on account of the children it has produced. Its black sheep have been surprisingly few." Nevertheless the minister will do well to insist that his children be permitted to lead a normal life.

On Leaving a Church: "Leaving a parish should mean leaving it—and letting it alone. Few ministers have the tact and good sense needed to remain guiltless of reprehensible blunders in their conduct toward the members of a parish which they have left."

Finding Fault: Some ministers feel that "finding flaws in others is proof of their own superiority. . . . Disproving is not fun unless one can parade it; and far too many ministers keep theirs on constant display." "Almost equally offensive is the habit of some ministers of finding fault with their wives when they are out in company together" and vice versa.

Growing Old: "The minister who lives in the past, and does so in a way which indicates that he wants his people to live there with him, makes himself a nuisance."

When the Minister Loses Patience: "He NEVER should—Period."

Thankless Majority

Perhaps the nine healed lepers never knew it—perhaps they would have been frightened or humbled if they had known—but in a solemn, spiritual sense, they went away to form the charter membership of one of the most Christ-wounding societies on the face of this earth: "The Ancient Society of the Thankless Nine."

Good Sportsmanship

By Lenora Nixon

A VERY INTERESTING LIST of rules for sport enthusiasts appeared recently in a magazine. Among them was one which read, "Honor the game thou playest, for he who plays the game straight and hard, wins even when he loses!" Some of the world's greatest winners have been its losers—those who persevered, kept on, played square, and went down to defeat in glory.

Many people spend years faithfully working on a project, yet in a matter of seconds lose the trophy so diligently sought. During a track meet, one young man decided to run the mile. He had never trained for it; his concentration was on pole vaulting. Yet on that impulse he ran and came in first, a winner! Yet in another tournament a trained participant was found under the bleachers, grieving because he had lost.

PEOPLE ARE FICKLE, and if a team is winning, everyone is back of that team, but once it suffers a losing streak, loud complaints are directed at the coach and players, and many suggestions come from the bleachers as to what they should have done.

We have a lot of "bleacher sitters" in our church work who give advice from the side lines but don't want in the game.

The coach (pastor) is liked and respected when the team (branch) plays smoothly. But when a player (member) fumbles and sometimes even drops the ball (gospel), the coach is told he is not doing a good job and should be replaced. The players have been working hard, and they've been in there for a long time, carrying the ball. What matters if they need assistance. They volunteered (accepted gospel) to be on the team, didn't they?

The pastor mentions a home wherein ministry is needed. But the "bleacher sitters" don't want to lose that good seat at the game.

If a teacher is absent and a substitute needed, they don't feel "trained" enough to meet the challenge.

IN A BASKETBALL GAME, the fellow making the points is lauded and cheered. Little notice is given the guard who protected and made the openings.

The choir functions faithfully to help beautify the services through the ministry of music. They sing beautifully for several Sundays. Then suddenly at one of their presentations, someone sings flat, and everyone wants to know what's wrong with the choir. But there is not one word about the successful renditions.

In the game of "tug of war," you don't always see the team with the largest group on its side win. It's usually the "strongest" group that wins. Yet many times we lament the "faithful few," and desire a larger representation.

We see many "winners" around us in the church work. They never have much to say, yet quietly, unobtrusively, they are playing the game with honor.

The game is a marathon. It goes on and on. Let us play with good sportsmanship, even though we cannot always be winners.

That Misused Word

By Harry Whipple

Above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.—Colossians 3: 14.

THE WORD "CHARITY" is misused by people who think of it as a gift or dole. Webster says it means "giving to the poor," but also, "a willingness to overlook faults in others; brotherly kindness, love."

To me charity means a condition of the heart. It is the spirit of love within us that compels us to act like Christians. It is that virtue which causes us to see the good in others and to overlook or minimize their faults. Charity is love; if we have it, we will love all people, even those who have done or said unpleasant things to us. It makes us want to lift others to higher planes of thought and endeavor. Paul says, "Charity is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." He then names several virtues which are good but says, "the greatest of these is charity."

All people are alike in many ways, yet each person differs in some ways from the others. I had the privilege of working with one group of men for eleven years or more and got to know them quite well during that time. Often I would wonder what made some of them do and say the things they did.

One's personality and character are made up of the sum total of his past life—his home training, experiences, observations, the amount and kind of education received, and the things he has read. Each experience is a building block in one's personality. If we recognize this important fact, we will understand why a brother or sister may have opinions or do things which seem strange or even silly to us.

Having a better understanding of the reasons for an individual's behavior should help us to develop a spirit of love and a charitable attitude toward him. Those who lack the spirit of love or charity are usually unhappy faultfinders, often neglecting their duties and not doing the Lord's work because of some fancied injustice which they feel has been done to them. Sometimes men of outstanding ability, who are capable of rendering extraordinary service to the church, suddenly quit serving. Yet if they had the spirit of charity, the reasons for quitting the Lord's work would no longer seem important.

We are all called to serve God to the best of our ability. We should never let the lack of charity hinder us from doing what God would have us do.

The best example of charity is found in the words of Jesus as he hung upon the cross: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." In all fairness to our fellow men, to the memory of him whose example we seek to emulate, and for our own peace of mind, let us strive to do likewise.

Spared for a Purpose

IT WAS A MOMENT of high hopes realized when José and Ludka Aranda with their two children—Flory, 6, and Ruy, 3—landed at the airport in Kansas City on October 2 and were greeted by Charles R. Hield, apostle in charge of the Spanish-speaking mission. Since 1949 they had made their home in Guatemala City where José was commercial chancellor of the French Legation and Ludka was supervisor of the pediatrics ward in the General Hospital. It was in Guatemala, also, that they heard the message of the Restoration and were baptized by Elder George Young, a teacher at the American School in Guatemala City. (Elder Young is now director of the American School in Cali, Colombia.)

This was not the first international migration for the Arandas. José, a native of Valencia, Spain, left his home country for France before the political revolution there in 1935. Ludka, who was born in Tarnow, Poland, went to France in 1934 to study medicine at the University of Bordeaux. She transferred during World War II to the University of Toulouse, where she met José, a student of languages. She was graduated in 1945 from the University of Bordeaux, and a year later she and José were married.

THE WAR YEARS are not a pleasant memory for the couple. Ludka was on the "wanted list" of the Gestapo and the Vichy pro-German government. Her father and brother were killed by the police to avenge the death of a German. A sister disappeared and has not been heard from since. While a student at Bordeaux, Ludka was told by the Gestapo one day that she must report at the railroad station immediately after classes. Knowing too well what the result would be if she obeyed orders, she left with only such belongings as she had with her to go to unoccupied France. Through the kindness of the French people she was able to avoid the police. Hiding her in their homes, providing guides for her between towns, feeding her when she had no money to buy food for herself, they won a warm place in her heart. The most difficult moment of all came when she and her guide neared the border, which was closely guarded by soldiers and police dogs. Realizing that two of the dogs had scented them and were following close behind as they walked through a field, the guide turned and ran for safety. Ludka hid in a granary where, tortured with fear, she watched the animals walk toward her. After several endless minutes she resigned herself to the fact that she would be killed and sat down to wait for her captors to come for her. "I felt that death itself could be no worse than the fear of it," she recalls. Then the dogs stopped, sniffed the air undecidedly, and walked back toward the border. After dark she crossed into free France undetected.

Life was not easy even then. She began her studies again, working as a tutor and factory nurse to pay her tuition, but there was little left for food and clothing. "Sometimes I would go several days with nothing to eat but bread," she says, "and at night I slept with my coat on because I had no heat in my room." Added to these physical discomforts was the grief of having lost her family.

José's war experiences were less dramatic, but he, too, often went without adequate food. His sympathy for persons wanted by the Vichy collaborators led him to keep escapees in his home, so he also was in danger of being apprehended and taken by the police.

AFTER THE WAR the couple decided to come to the Western Hemisphere, a dream José had cherished for many years. At that time Guatemala was the only country whose immigration quota would allow them to enter, so they bought boat tickets for San Jose on the Pacific coast, then took a train to Guatemala City. It was an unfortunate time for them to arrive since employment was not easy to find. Taking a room in one of the least expensive pensions, they managed to exist until José could find a permanent job. Ludka and two-year-old Flory remained at home exerting themselves as little as possible so that they would need only a scant amount of food. Five months after their arrival in Guatemala, Ruy was born, and a few days later José obtained his job with the French Legation. As soon as she had regained her strength, Ludka —eager to put her medical training to use—volunteered to serve at the General Hospital in whatever way she could be used. Beginning as an auxiliary doctor in the children's ward, she proved herself so valuable that within a few months she was placed in charge of the entire childrens' tuberculosis department.

They are at home now in an apartment near the Independence Sanitarium where Mrs. Aranda is employed. She cannot practice in the States as a physician until she has taken the American Medical Examination; this she is planning to do as soon as requirements can be met. "I feel my life has been spared for a purpose," she says. "I believe that purpose is to serve humanity as a doctor."

José, who speaks Spanish, French, Italian, and Portuguese, as well as English, will devote his full time for the next several months to translating the Book of Mormon into Spanish.

Flory, who has just finished one year of school work in Guatemala, will begin attending classes "as soon as she has had a little vacation," her mother says. Ruy, who wears a shoulder-length Guatemalan-style haircut in the picture, has an American haircut now and is enjoying getting acquainted with such delightful items as water guns and wind-up cars. Although they spoke only Spanish before their arrival in the States, both children are rapidly acquiring English vocabularies.

Few people have "gathered to Zion" with so much to offer, and few perhaps have felt that they have been offered so much. For the Arandas the gospel message has brought not only a new theology but long-looked-to opportunities for helping to establish the kind of earthly kingdom where war, and want, and persecution cannot exist. Sheba Leads the Way

By Emma M. Phillips

MRS. TENNYSON brought the car to a slow stop near the curb where Jimmy Stone was standing. The three primary girls in the back seat called out gleefully, "Whoa, Sheba. Whoa, Sheba. Stop for Jimmy."

The small boy struggled to reach the door handle, flung the door open, and hoisted himself into the car. He slammed the door with a bang and slid over close to Mrs. Tennyson. Room had to be left on the seat for a junior age boy who would be picked up next.

The chorus of girls' voices in the back seat began again. "Getty up, Sheba. Take us to vacation school. Getty up, Sheba."

Jimmy's dark eyes sparkled as he cried out, "Getty up, Sheba, or we won't park you in the shade." He turned suddenly to Mrs. Tennyson and asked, "Why do you call your car Sheba?"

Mrs. Tennyson's mind was on the ironing she had not had time to do before leaving to spend the forenoon teaching in vacation church school, and on her baby daughter she had left with a neighbor. She mustered a brave smile and answered, "Oh, I guess I call her that because she thinks she is so important." Mrs. Tennyson didn't want to go into a long explanation about the Queen of Sheba or her name; she needed to think about the lesson she was to teach soon. She felt sure that seven-year-old-Jimmy did not know the stories of the Queen of Sheba, or of David and Goliath, or of Gideon, or even the stories of Jesus. His parents found no time to teach him, and little time even to listen to him. Every Sunday they took off on a fishing trip, and the boy was dragged along. The only reason he was permitted to attend vacation church school was because it didn't interfere with the fishing trips.

WHILE SHE WAS TEACHING her class of primary boys and girls, Jimmy—who was one of them—sat so close to her that he kept stepping on her toes. After Mrs. Tennyson had told them a story, she suggested that they dramatize it. This was something the children thoroughly enjoyed. They moved their chairs about and imagined them to be barns and bridges, or whatever was needed for the dramatization. After the impromptu playlet, the chairs were placed in class formation again, and Jimmy was crowded out of his place in the front row.

His voice rose in protest, "This is my chair and you get out of it." The harder he shook the chair, the harder its chubby red-headed girl occupant clung to it.

"Jimmy," said Mrs. Tennyson, "it's not important what chair you sit on. All the chairs are alike, and it's silly to want a certain one."

The boy swung on her suddenly. "I don't want anyone else using what belongs to me." The words came so rapidly they seemed to be memorized. She could see his temper rising, and she looked about the room, trying to find a means of diverting his attention.

"Take your old chair," shouted the red-headed girl as she jumped from the chair and flung herself into another.

Mrs. Tennyson thanked her and explained to the class the meaning of the word "co-operation." The girl beamed with the compliments, but Jimmy looked unhappy. His victory had become sour.

Although Jimmy Stone got along fairly well with the children, he never lingered about the door or playground after church school was out but raced to the car where he would sit on the running board and wait for the others. Mrs. Tennyson took advantage of this to get Jimmy alone. When she found him he was making faces at his reflection in the side of the car. "Jimmy," she said, "what would you think if I told you that Sheba belongs to me and I don't want anyone else using it?"

The child studied her a moment then, cocking his head to one side, answered, "I'd think that I could not come to vacation church school any more. I'd think you were being what Jesus doesn't want you to be."

"This morning you didn't want to share your chair. What do you think Jesus thinks about you?"

The boy made a face at his reflection. "Jesus doesn't like you to be mean, Jimmy," he said to himself. "Will you promise to be good tomorrow so you can ride in Sheba?" After a pause he smiled up at Mrs. Tennyson. "Jimmy says he will be good tomorrow."

And that's the way it always was, for Jimmy was constantly promising that he would be "good tomorrow," then when tomorrow's problems glared up and Jimmy tried to solve them, it was generally the wrong solution. It wasn't that Jimmy meant to do things wrong; it was just that he had been taught to seek the wrong solutions.

MRS. TENNYSON FOUND that teaching in vacation church school was tiresome and time consuming, but that it had its advantages. Having Jimmy ask, "Was this Jesus ever a boy like me or was he always a man?" was one of the advantages. For the two weeks of the school she tried to crowd into the heart and head of the child every minute of religious training that she could.

On the last day of school she asked Jimmy, "Will your parents be coming to the achievement program tonight?"

And the prompt reply was, "Naa, I don't think so. They ain't much for church-going, like I am."

"I'll call them up and tell them about it," she suggested.

"You can if you want to, but it won't do no good." And the child was right; it didn't do any good.

During the next few weeks Mrs. Tennyson thought often of Jimmy Stone and wondered if the life he was forced to live would erase from his memory the things he had learned during the two weeks she had had him at vacation school. She thought of things that she might have said during the class period, or things that she might have done during the handcraft period that might have been impressive to him. She wished she had bought him a book of Bible pictures that might help him retain some of the things he had learned. She even called his mother up and suggested that she would be glad to take Jimmy to church school every Sunday. "No," was the reply, "if I ever do start sending Jimmy to church, it will be the one his father's parents attend—the big brick one over on Feather Street."

IT WAS A BRIGHT fall day when Mrs. Tennyson was hanging her washing on the line in the back yard that she heard a childish voice yell, "Sheba." Shocked she looked at her child in her playpen beside her and thought, "I must be daffy. She's not old enough to say it, yet I'm sure she yelled Sheba at me."

As she went on hanging out her wash, she kept an inquisitive eye on the child lest she should speak again. She even leaned over the edge of the playpen and whispered, "Sheba," in a suggestive tone, and the child plunked her across the nose with a rubber elephant.

She sat on the grass by the playpen, rubbing her nose and looking at her young daughter. Then came the tender voice of a child singing:

Jesus loves the little children of the world;
Red and yellow, black and white,
He loves 'em all, he does.

Both the tune and the words of the last line were sung in a faltering tone, as though the singer were not sure of himself.

Mrs. Tennyson turned herself around slowly, trying to discover where the song was coming from. She listened cautiously until it came again in a singsong voice: "Jesus loves Sheba. Jesus loves Sheba."

It was Jimmy Stone. She jumped up and ran to the driveway where the car was parked. There was Jimmy on his knees beside the car, his elbows on the running board, and his forehead pressed against the dirty side of the car. "Jesus loves Sheba. Jesus loves Sheba," he was singing over and over.

"Jimmy," she called and hurried to him. He sprang up, raced to her, and threw his arms about her neck. "I found you. I found you!" he yelled in her ear.

She held the child from her and smiled at him. "It's so good to see you again, Jimmy. How did you find me?"

"I saw Sheba," he answered, "and I knew you must be around because you are good to her like Jesus said you should be. Mama's in our car out there. It doesn't have a name."

Mrs. Tennyson looked up and saw that a car was parked in front of their house and that Mrs. Stone was in it. "I'll be out to see you as soon as I get my baby," she called to the woman.

JIMMY FOLLOWED close at her heels as she picked her baby up from the playpen and went back down the driveway to visit with his mother. "Jimmy has been wanting to see you and Sheba again," explained the mother, "but I lost your phone number and name, and I have been so busy. We were driving by and when he saw your car he wanted me to stop so he could sit on the running board for a while. I'm sorry we disturbed you."

"This isn't a disturbance," beamed Mrs. Tennyson. "This is a pleasure. Jimmy and I had such good times together in vacation church school. I've missed seeing him."

"And I miss Sheba," called Jimmy as he spun around and ran back to his former position on his knees by the car.

"He's fascinated by the fact that your car has a name," Mrs. Stone explained, "and he's given our car a dozen different names, but none of them last long."

"Isn't it odd how a thing like that can appeal to a child?"

"Your church school appealed to him, too," continued the mother. "You once said you would like to take Jimmy to church with you. His father and I have talked it over and have decided that if you still want him to go, you may take him every Sunday this winter."

"I still want him. I'm more than glad to have him go."

When Mrs. Stone called him, Jimmy came obediently and got into the car. But when he heard about the winter's plans he wiggled all over with excitement and wanted to know how many days it was before he could go to church in Sheba and how many church days there would be during the winter.

After Mrs. Tennyson had said good-by to the mother and son, she walked back up the driveway carrying her baby. She stopped at the car and ran a fingertip across the dirty hood of it. "You old missionary, you," she said. "I spend two solid weeks wracking my brain at church and at home trying to think of ways to reach that boy, and then you do it. But that's the way with life. Our unguarded moments sometimes do more harm or more good for others than our guarded moments."

She pulled her baby's thumb from its mouth and chucked her finger under its plump chin. "Don't you ever forget that, Precious. If you want to be an honest-to-goodness steward of the Lord, you have to guard every moment that you live—even the moments you take to park an old car like Sheba in the shade of a tree by the church."

We Make Things Come True

By Dr. Roy Cheville

YOUNG PEOPLE are called dreamers. When the zest for dreaming goes, we lose the spirit of youth. I am presuming tonight that all five hundred of you are still dreamers. Let us then look to the quality of our dreaming.

We distinguish between two types of dreams. The first tries to escape from reality. The second tries to re-order reality that it may accord with the dream. In the first of these we sit idly by and conjure dreams of castles in Spain. There is no connection between the present and the tomorrow of the dream.

I think of the good elder of our faith who was a janitor in a public building. He left cobwebs and dust as he contemplated the beauties of Zion. It is reported that once he swept around an eraser on the floor rather than pick it up. Some persons go so far as to take narcotics to induce this dreaming that has no connection with the work-a-day world. Even dreamers of religion can contemplate the glories of Zion, or heaven, without concern for changing today's social order. Such dreams are only avenues of escape.

On the evening of September 10 the campus congregation of Graceland College held the first fellowship meeting of the year. Roy Cheville presided with G. A. Platz, dean of faculty, and two students, Tom Cochran of Joplin, Missouri, and Frank Woodson of Long Beach, California, as associates. This foundational talk preceded the testimonies.

On the other hand great souls see visions of a better order of things. Step by step they work forward to make these dreams come true. These are the indispensable seers and prophets who change things.

Once the brothers of Joseph sneered at him and taunted him with "Behold, the dreamer cometh!" Yet it was this dreamer who turned his expectations into realities, and by building graneries saved Egypt from famine. Our world cannot endure without such dreams as these.

ONCE WILLIAM JAMES wrote of "the will to believe." He suggested the right to believe that which would work out for the total good. Tonight we make an affirmation that it is necessary to believe we can make some things come true. If we do not believe, they will not happen. You and I are morally responsible for our dreams and for making them come true.

Tonight I ask you two basic questions. (1) What do you vision that you want to make come true this college year? (2) How strongly do you "will" to make these dreams come true? Significant achievements call for clear response to these two questions.

Phyllis Moir wrote a book, I Was Winston Churchill's Secretary. She tells of his being born with a palate defect that caused him to stutter. When he went to the House of Commons he pictured the kind of speaker he wanted to become. He wrote out speeches and memorized them. Sometimes he wrote several, in order to be ready for different kinds of situations. He made his dream come true.

You and I will have the kind of college and the kind of church we construct in our mind, if we work to make them come true. In us lies the dream of the kingdom of God.

In our reflections tonight we shall include the Great Dreamer. Through the centuries setbacks and delays come in the realization of God's dreams for his universe. Yet he never gives up. The dream never dies in his heart. We need some of this divine spirit this year. Let God's dreams be our dreams! Let these dreams pull us upward.

ONCE RIGHT WHERE we are tonight a woman walked over the prairie grass and dreamed of a college. It was in a day when the church was not thinking about higher education. Cleo Hanthorne Moon has written of that day in the life of Marietta Walker.

She loved the breeze that swept the hill,
Yet saw a vision of the place
With buildings broad upon its face,
Blocking the wind's unbroken path,
To house the kind of man who plan
The partnership of God with man.

This year we are wanting to make this dream come true.

■ The annual Women's Social Club Reception was held Saturday, September 26, in the Student Center. Each year freshman and sophomore women are invited to this reception in order to become acquainted with each other and meet the members of various social clubs and club sponsors. A program was presented under the direction of Gwen Grigg, Independence, Missouri; Kathy Hanawalt, Seattle, Washington; Doris Knopf, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Lorraine Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio. Mrs. Evans, the Supervisor of Women's Social Clubs, introduced the members of social clubs to the nonmembers. While refreshments were being served, they mingled together to become better informed about the clubs.

■ Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., greeted returning and new students at the annual formal president's reception Friday evening, September 10, in the Student Center. Joining Dr. Gleazer in extending a welcome to the students were his wife, Mrs. Gleazer; Jim Clark, President of the Student Body; and Barbara Woods, President of the Crescents. An enjoyable and entertaining program was presented by members of the faculty. Refreshments during the evening were served by members of the Patroness Society of Lamoni.

■ Graceland's nonclub men were entertained September 26 at a reception given by the men's social clubs in the lower auditorium of the Lamoni R. L. D. S. Church. The purpose of the reception was to give all the men on campus a chance to mingle together and get acquainted with each other, with emphasis on social clubs. The evening's activities were under the direction of Gary Sampson, Dearborn, Michigan, president of the Joint Council of Men's Social Clubs. The program, organized by Jim Carl, St. Louis, Illinois, and Jim Nelson, Wataga, Illinois, met with spontaneous approval. Dave Freeman, Independence, Missouri, and Ron Bruch, Cameron, Missouri, "M. C.'d" the program. The evening was climaxed by the presentation of each club and its members. The grand finale was a period of mixing and meeting while punch and cookies were served.

■ Graceland's expansion program for the campus is moving forward with the building of the new road leading from town out to the college. Upon completion, the road now leading past Gunsolley Hall will be closed thereby diverting the automobile traffic around the campus area. Also, plans for a new science building and a new food service building are being drawn up. Work has begun on Graceland's Alumni Association's project—the construction of a new athletic field track.

■ Friday, September 18, the 1953-54 Yellow Jacket football team journeyed to Carthage, Illinois, to play the first game of this year's schedule. An injury on the kickoff play and a down-pouring rain got the team off on a bad start, from which it couldn't seem to recover. Carthage went ahead to win the game 25-0.

■ A hilariously entertaining mixer on Wednesday, September 9, marked the climax of the orientation program of the freshman class. Divided into three groups, the freshmen, with a keen air of competitive spirit, showed that they have some outstanding talent. The groups worked on their programs, and on Wednesday evening presented their endeavors out on the football field. Enthusiasm ran high as groups of cheering freshmen and sophomores presented their shows.

■ Graceland's student radio station KGRA went on the air at 7:00 p.m., Monday, September 28, with an audience participation show broadcast from the Chapel. The staff of the radio station numbers about one hundred this year. KGRA's executive staff includes the station manager, Fred Heaviland, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; assistant manager, Buddy Archer, Jet, Oklahoma; program director, Don Breshears, Rock Island, Illinois; chief engineer, Richard Blandin, Chicago, Illinois; business manager, Max Noe, Lamoni, Iowa; and advertising manager Bob Laur, Gaylord, Michigan.

NEXT WEEK'S HERALD WILL SAY . . .

"But the peaks are no place to live. The peaks of our experiences with God are where our spiritual reserves are stored."—"I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," by Ward A. Hougas.

"The message of evangelism involves both the goodness of God and the sinfulness of man."—"Every Member Evangelism," by Percy E. Farrow.

"The life line of marriage is the 'line of communication' between husband and wife."—"Infidelity in Marriage," by P. A. Wellington.

"Loyalty is one of the finest qualities to be found in a companion. The spirit of criticism is not from God."—"That Will Be All, David," by Leona N. Hands.

"There are honest differences in the interpretation of God's word. While it is sinful to quarrel about these differences . . . there is solid virtue in having some deep convictions on the saving doctrines of the gospel."—"Will Christianity Unite?" by Chris B. Hartshorn.

"We people of earth need a sense of values. The light of a single star may be more important than all the lights man can turn on."—"Jewels of Babylon," by L. J. Lea.

Briefs

Youth Retreat

HARTSHORNE, OKLAHOMA.—The Oklahoma City District youth retreat was held at Robbers' Cave State Park, Wilburton, Oklahoma, September 19-20. Registration was Saturday afternoon. After a supper of spaghetti and meat balls the thirty-six young people and sixteen adult counselors and workers enjoyed a mixer with Dick Davis of Oklahoma City in charge. The campfire following the mixer was in charge of Mildred Norris of Oklahoma City.

Sunday morning the early worship service was conducted by District Missionary Wallace Jackson and Bill Dollins, of Wilburton. Paul Norris taught the junior class, and Clifford Gaither, of Poteau taught the seniors.

District President O. O. Dollins was in charge at the eleven o'clock hour. Wallace Jackson preached on the general theme, "Our Wills Are Ours to Make Them Thine." Following lunch a thirty-minute farewell gathering closed the activities.

Cooks were Mr. and Mrs. Guy Clesson. Etoile Scott and Lavina Dollins were dining room supervisors. Katy Slick was camp nurse, and Florence Davis was cabin counselor.—Reported by O. O. DOLLINS

Mission Growing

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA.—Since the mission was organized in January, twenty-five members have been added to the group by transfer from other cities.

At the recent business meeting, new officers were elected, and building committee members were added. A building fund is planned.

A larger place to hold services will soon be needed.

A Zion's League has been organized, and the group holds Communion services and midweek prayer services.—Reported by GENEVIEVE DEXTER

Four Baptized

DOW CITY IOWA.—The branch dismissed services from August 9-16 in favor of the Missouri Valley Reunion held at Woodbine, Iowa. June Griffin and Coral Weiss managed the Herald House tent. Several families made the daily trip to reunion by car.

Paul Argotsinger has been chosen again as pastor, with E. R. Butterworth and Emmet Thompson as counselors. Other officers are Catharine Baughman, church school director; Hazel Butterworth, adult supervisor; June Griffin, music director; Jessie Quick, women's leader; Vincent Argotsinger, young people's leader; Nettie Argotsinger, children's supervisor; Coral Weiss, secretary; Beverly Custer, branch clerk; Bryce Argotsinger, junior church pastor.

The branch has a priesthood of nine members.

Evelyn Martin is presenting a sewing course to members of the ladies' group. This group sponsored an ice-cream social in July, the proceeds of which were given to the building fund.

A farm project has been the work of the men's group this year. The sale of the corn will be applied to the building fund.

A baptismal and confirmation service was held on Sunday, August 30, when four adults came into the church. They were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mueller, Robert Custer, and Susie Anderson.

Monthly birthday parties are sponsored as a social function of the branch. There are always nonmembers in attendance.—Reported by BESSIE PEARSALL

To Purchase Church Building

VINITA, OKLAHOMA.—At the annual business meeting held September 10, the following officers were elected: branch president, Bert Parkhurst; church school director and recorder, Roy Rafferty; secretary, Nadine Sunderman; Zion's League leader and historian, Lela Parkhurst; director of women's department, Ireta Knittle; treasurer, Velma Rafferty; director of public relations, Don Sunderman; solicitor, Avo Davis; music director, Margaret Lightfoot; auditor, Orville Lightfoot; building committee, Vernie Ellison, Orville Lightfoot, and Jim Knittle.

The branch voted to purchase the old Presbyterian church building, which has been approved by the bishopric.

Young people away at school include George Knotts, Kansas University, Wilma Jones, A & M. College, Miami, Oklahoma, Lowell Rafferty, Graceland and Anieta Ellison, Independence Sanitarium.—Reported by LELA PARKHURST

Building Fund Growing

CRESTON, IOWA.—The annual election of officers for the Creston, Iowa, Branch was held the evening of September 16, with Lamoni Stake President Robert Farnham assisting.

Elder Harry Propst was sustained as pastor, and he chose as his counselors Elders Maynard Newcom and A. D. Blair. R. Jack Mercer was chosen church school director, to be assisted by Merle B. Grover and Mrs. Harry Propst. Mr. and Mrs. Dean Myers will serve as Zion's League leaders, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Brown will be junior League leaders. Secretary and recorder will be Mr. Wilbur Brown, and Sherman Phipps will continue as treasurer. Auditors chosen are Cecil Noftsgar and William Bendorf. Lee Propst and Dick Outhouse, Jr., will act as junior ushers. Henry Strand will succeed himself as bishop's solicitor. Minister of music will be Mrs. A. D. Blair, and women's leader, Mrs. Sherman Phipps. Cecil Noftsgar will be in charge of ordering books, with Mrs. Noftsgar as librarian. Anne Fine will be her assistant. Mrs. Lewis Stone will serve as church hostess. Mrs. Earl Fine was appointed as director of dramatics. Mrs. Rhoda Savage will continue as church historian, with Mrs. Henry Strand as publicity chairman.

On the morning of September 13 Jerry Runkle of the stake presidency and Graceland College faculty was guest speaker. He also assisted in the ordination service in which Wilbur Brown was ordained to the office of teacher and William Bendorf to the office of deacon.

Work has continued toward completion of the new church building, which includes the installation of a lovely window in the tower room with the church seal on it. The women held their annual covered dish luncheon in September at the home of Mrs. Will Butterfield, at which they made plans for the coming year. An offering of about $1520.00 has been turned in to the building fund by the women the past year. This money was realized by offerings, bake sales, and the annual bazaar.

Several new families have become part of the congregation, including Mr. Maynard Newcom and family, Mr. Dean Myers and family, and Mr. Donald Jones and family.

A new class in teacher training has recently been organized under the leadership of R. Jack Mercer, church school director.

Alma Blair, who has recently returned from Korea, has visited his folks and given a talk about his experiences in that country to the congregation. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Blair. He will move with his wife and child to Iowa City, Iowa, where he will work for his Master's degree.—Reported by RUBY STRAND

Business Meeting

DE KALB, TEXAS.—A business meeting was called for Shawnee Branch September 22. District President James Renfro presided. The following officers were elected: B. F. Pollard, pastor and church historian; Lela Raleigh, church recorder and music director; Bonnie

PASTOR'S HANDBOOK

Theme: Our Spiritual Obligation

This handbook is designed to be a helpful tool in the hands of the busy pastor who will use it, and offers an overall theme for each month, with suggested prayer meeting themes, hymns, Scripture references, and Communion and oblation themes. All Bible references are to the Inspired Version unless otherwise indicated. Pastors can use the book in setting their goals and planning to meet them, keeping in mind the goals of the General Church and the needs and capacities of their local groups.

The Graceland Idea

search indicates that establishment of a home and family is the most important achievement in the American culture today. The quality of homes of Graceland students is a golden example in these times.

The sixth Graceland exclusive consists of an intangible unity or wholeness of life and religion. Religion at Graceland is never compartmentalized and confined to Wednesday evenings or Sundays. Wednesday evening testimonies, which frequently are the most moving, tell of a rich variety of worship experiences related to everyday activities. Members of the choir returning from their spring tour testify of the warmth of the spirit of Christ as they have sung to audiences throughout the church. Students testify of rich worship experiences in the dormitory and social clubs. A student lingered after my class one day in English literature and told me, "The class today was like a revelation to me. I have never felt the Spirit of God any stronger in my life than I did in class today." Athletes returning from football trips or basketball tournaments tell of special worship services they have conducted for themselves. Seventeen members of this year's football squad are members of the priesthood. Each year unsolicited letters come to college officials, from restaurant owners, hotel operators, and even players on opposing teams, commenting on the rare quality of sportsmanship and Christian conduct displayed by Graceland students.

When Jesus was asked to name the first commandment he replied, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." At a college, and especially at Graceland College, we should expect to learn to love God with our minds. As Brother Elbert A. Smith has said so refreshingly, "We can plunge into religion head first." But the Graceland idea embraces the whole of the great commandment. We may plunge in head first as we strive for intellectual maturity, but the Graceland spirit, the Graceland climate, the Graceland idea touches the heart and the muscle as well as the mind. The spirit of Graceland is simply the Spirit of Christ at Graceland.

They Built For Eternity

Roland Bainton

What happened to those once proud cultures—and the men who "built for eternity"? What caused their destruction or decay? What about our own efforts and accomplishments—does anything endure? Through Dr. Bainton's skillful and sensitive 175-page translation of the author's interpretive descriptions, we explore these questions and answers. The vivid text and superb photographs bring us a new sense of historical perspective—and a sharpened awareness of God, time, and eternity. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press.

The Church and Social Responsibility

Edited by J. Richard Spann

Fifteen writers, each one an authority in his field, seek to formulate from the teachings of Jesus a philosophy by which the church may deal with the problems in our present world's social order. Here is an honest and constructive search for truth in many critical areas—and a forthright presentation of the responsibility of the church in social improvement. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press.

OCTOBER

Standing in the mystic presence
While the unseen artist paints
In gorgeous colors on the canvas
Nature's altars to the saints,

He who looks sees inward beauty,
Visions law in life's decay—
Sacred, reverent, silent beauty,
Design enshrined—the perfect way.

In the glory of October
Now arrayed in regal scroll,
Every heart is filled with rapture,
And God's love inspires the soul.
