Time was when "vacation" meant heat, flies, and dust; when the traveler slept, if at all, in a hot cabin or hotel room bathed in a lather of perspiration. . . . Now there is a gadget that has changed all that. Air conditioning no longer means an open window or a crack in the wall through which the warm breeze wanders at will. . . . If the vacationer travels by train or bus he can feel the cool air of spring while looking out the window at the heat of August. And when night comes, if he is lucky, he will find an air-conditioned cabin or hotel room.

There is a drawback to all this comfort, however. Returning home, the vacationer is no longer content to perspire in the heat. His wife is unhappy, and he finds himself looking around for a button or a switch to turn. He has the feeling that "there'd ought to be something we could do about this." So he begins flirting with a three hundred dollar temptation that has an inevitable end.

There is something to be said for an invention that can give cool and restful sleep to tired people, that can protect a baby from too much heat, and bring comfort to the sick. At least, when one is tantalizing his temptation, it is a potent argument to regard the expenditure as an investment, not a luxury. This is one more way to keep the name on somebody's "dotted line" and a small mortgage on the future.

PROCRASTINATION

Our ship comes in,
But—sad to relate it—
We're much too old
To navigate it.

We wonder how the course of history would have been changed if Lehi and his sons had waited for a ship to come in, rather than building their own.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Paul A. Wellington

IT'S FORTUNATE that Paul Wellington likes to write, for he's a man with ideas and a fine background of experience in the work of the church. He joined the Herald editorial staff in June, 1953, as an assistant editor. His interests are wide, as an editor's should be, and his roots in the church go deep, as a minister's must.

Paul was born in Mapleton, Kansas, on April 15, 1919, and was baptized a member of the church when he was eight years old. He was graduated from high school in 1937 at Fulton, Kansas, and received a B.S. in Commercial Education in 1946 from Kansas State Teachers College at Pittsburg, his college work being interrupted by the war. He later received a B.A. in Sociology at the University of Washington in Seattle. He was valedictorian in high school and a member of Kappa Delta Pi at college. He served three and a half years in the army and taught school one year. In 1946 he was placed under General Church appointment as pastor at Seattle, Washington.

He was ordained a priest in 1938, an elder in 1943, and a high priest in 1950. He has served, among other jobs, as pianist, church school director, young people's leader, Zion's League supervisor, and pastor. He wrote the tract, "Are You Saved?"

His interests are diversified. He feels that the principles of Zion are best instilled in the young, so ministry to children and young people is a favored field. Certain phases of priesthood education relating to doctrine and youth work are among his particular interests also. As a writer he is interested in eliminating the persecution complex from our church literature. "Our message is the greatest affirmation the world has ever known. I'd like to treat it so."

He believes in specialization. He is interested in seeing people survey the total field of church service and, from the wide range of responsibilities, choose the things they enjoy, feel they do well, and are allowed to do. "Let's do away with the Jack-of-all-trades in our branches. We need not only consecration but concentration."

Paul married Fay Young in 1943. He says, "She's a wonderful wife, the kind that any church worker would cherish." They have one daughter, Linda Anne, 9. Their home is in Independence, Missouri, and they attend the South Chrysler Church.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRIESTHOOD EDUCATION MEETINGS HELD

Dr. F. M. McDowell assisted with a series of regional meetings conducted in connection with the stake-wide priesthood education program held in Detroit International Stake on September 26-27 and October 5-7. He was associated in ministry there with Stake President W. Blair McClain at four regional meetings and one mass meeting.

Brother McDowell also spoke in Detroit and Windsor, Ontario.

He attended a leaders retreat at Park of the Pines in Northern Michigan District on October 2-4, and was associated there with District President Harry Doty. This was the second annual retreat in a five-year program for leaders.

HOLDS SERIES IN DES MOINES

Apostle Roscoe Davey has returned from a two weeks' missionary series at Des Moines, Iowa. On Sunday, October 11, he visited Perry, Iowa, for their branch home-coming.

LEADER AT LEAGUE RETREAT

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, conducted a laboratory in prayer and meditation for the Gudgell Park Zion's League October 10-11. The theme for the retreat was "Teach Us to Pray."

VISITS KANSAS CITY STAKE

Arthur Rock, General Church Audio-Visual Director, gave the Communion address at Chelsea in Kansas City Stake, Sunday, October 4, and an illustrated sermon on the Holy Spirit that evening in the Grandview Church. Shawnee mission Zion's League members were guests at the evening service.

IN CHICAGO DISTRICT

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, has returned from Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he visited church member college students at the University of Michigan and attended to other business connected with the committee on ministry to college people. He met with youth groups at First Church, Brainerd, West Suburban, Hammond, and Gary, in the Chicago District, and also with the group at Aurora, Illinois.

Brother Mesle delivered the Communion address at First Church on Sunday, October 4, and preached in the Brainerd Branch.

WOMEN'S COUNCIL MEMBERS VISIT

Mrs. H. I. Velt has returned from meeting with church women in Little Rock and Hot Springs, Arkansas, and Eros, Louisiana. Mrs. Walter Johnson spoke at the district conference in Lawrence, Kansas, on Saturday, October 10.

HOLDS SERIES IN CENTER STAKE

Elder Gene Theys completed a missionary series with the Sugar Creek congregation in Center Stake October 4-11 and began a week-long series October 18 at the Eden Heights Church.

LARGE CHOIR ATTENDANCE

Franklyn Weddle reported that approximately 240 singers attended choir rehearsal for "The Messiah" on Sunday, October 4.

The Jewels of Babylon

"The treasures were laid up in Babylon."

—Ezra 6: 1.

THE CITY lies to the west. When darkness falls its thousands of lights make a pleasant glow against the sky. The brighter, nearer ones are like gleaming jewels in the night. Sometimes we have to remind ourselves—and it hurts a bit to do so—that it is the cheaper places that give the brightest light. These are the jewels of Babylon. At a distance they are very attractive to the eye. Close up, they shine upon nothing very important.

Farther on in the city are the things of greater value. The banks and the big stores are dark now. Some of the window displays are lighted, but in general it is very quiet downtown. The modest little signs on the churches are illuminated, too, advertising the subject of next Sunday's sermon, and inviting people to church school. Then there are the homes, softly lighted, with happy people inside of them. We would distrust them if there were great batteries of glaring lights about these places. They wouldn't seem real.

This brings on the thought that the places which have the most electric lights, paradoxically, may be in the greatest spiritual darkness. And it may be that the people who run these places somehow dimly realize it, and turn on more lights to make themselves forget, or to conceal it from those who pass by.

A man who walks by an inward light doesn't need a ten-thousand-watt electric light to keep him from stumbling and falling.

This is not an argument for darkness. It is a plea for judgment and moderation.

A BEAUTIFUL CAR passed us at high speed. The driver was young and handsome. He must have been on some very important mission to go so fast. However, beside him in the front seat sat a beautiful girl. He passed us at the crest of a hill, narrowly escaping death for himself and several others. By the smallest margin he got back in his own lane just in time, and the other driver roared by, frowning. Then we thought, "People who are on important missions take better care of their lives than that. He can't be so important."

Just over the hill, the fancy car, the fancy driver, and the fancy girl were stopped in front of a liquor store. Why should they hurry so? If liquor is going to get them, it will get them anyway. It is not worth risking immediate death and destruction to do it so soon. That little store was lit up like the great white way—the jewels of Babylon.

OUR COUNTY has a fair. The finest, fattest cattle, stuffed with corn, are shown here. The sleekest and best-trained horses are too. This is the quarter-horse capital of America. Sleek and well-fed people linger about, looking and smelling rather like a very special and expensive kind of horse themselves. Constant association exercises an indubitable influence.

A band, composed of young people from the high school, marched and played for the throng. Then they played in the square and the people lined up around them to listen. Out of the crowd came a fantastic giant of a figure in a clown's costume. He wore a funny little hat, carried a ridiculously small parasol, and his costume flopped about him like a tent. His big red nose could have been used for a stop light. He walked around the band, giving them such encouragement as he could in the circumstances. He had imbibed too freely, and it must have been the strength of his breath that held him up. That nose was surely one of the jewels of Babylon.

There were many good things at the fair: prize cakes and pies, dresses, handcrafts, arts, flowers, manufacturers' displays, things good and beautiful—worth remembering.

ONE OF THE SAD FACTS about the jewels of Babylon is that they deceive so many people, and there are multitudes in the world who care for no other light. One of the prophets has said, "The people that walked in darkness beheld a great light." It would take no prophet to say of many of these people, "These sought ever greater and brighter lights, but walked in deeper darkness."

We people of earth need a sense of values. The light of a single star, seen dimly through the scudding clouds of a storm-lashed sky, may be more important than all the lights man can turn on. For it could be the north star that would show men which way to go, as earthly lights could never do.

We need to know the difference between the Light of Life and the false lights on the shore of the world. Unless we can discern the difference, we are in danger of being led astray.

THE JEWELS OF BABYLON are pretty at a distance, but up close and on careful inspection they are worse than cheap costume jewelry. They aren't nice; they aren't even pretty.

Perhaps our most difficult problem is to know just when the thing we most particularly desire isn't at all what we think it is, when it is a sham and an imitation of something else that would be much harder to get and worth much more if we got it—in other words, we need to know when it is a jewel of Babylon.

How dearly we purchase and how deeply we regret when we learn that what we thought was the pearl of

November Emphasis on Auditorium Funds

Plans are now far advanced for completion of the center front of the Auditorium from the street through the foyer, including the doors to the aisles of the main auditorium. Work is expected to begin in the immediate future. This calls for additional financing which the church has been anticipating and to which, we feel sure, the Saints will give ready support. Everyone is eager for this work to be done.

The design finally decided upon provides for extending the foyer several feet closer to the street and will use glass doors, large expanses of glass between columns of marble, and a pleasing combination of limestone, walnut, and granite to provide a dignified and beautiful entrance to the General Church headquarters.

In view of the known attitude of the church, and our urgent need, members of the Presidency are joining the Presiding Bishopric in a letter to branch presidents and other church officials, setting November aside as a month of special emphasis for the collection of additional Auditorium funds. We trust that many liberal contributions will be received and that this important work can be carried forward without undue slackening of the many other tasks in which our growing church is so busily engaged.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

On a recent visit to Lansing, Michigan, Bishop Elmer C. Evans handed a member of the Presidency the handwritten manuscript of a brief editorial prepared by President Frederick M. Smith about twenty-five years ago. Bishop Evans published this editorial in "Short Talks," a monthly information sheet circulated throughout the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District but not widely known beyond that district. The manuscript has now been filed with Elder John Blackmore, Church Historian, but the editorial deserves to be remembered, and for this reason is printed here:

It has always been a matter of pride with Latter Day Saints that they care for their own poor, and there has at times been an inclination to boast about it.

To care for the poor is not only fine and worthy of commendation, but it lies close to the roots of real gospel work. Jesus testified to John as proof of the coming of the expected one, "the poor have the gospel preached unto them." But "caring for the poor" is, we fear, a much misunderstood matter. To give money or out of hand relief may not only not be "caring for the poor," but may be actually injuring them.

It is quite generally admitted that poverty is the result too largely of social maladjustments. It is even said that every society has the amount of poverty it is willing to carry. This saying springs from the observation that "doles" and "charity" have a strong tendency to break down self-dependency. As self-dependency goes, dependency and indolence come.

The care of the poor is a duty of the church, but how that care shall be exercised may give rise to some interesting thoughts, and to thoughts which are socially greatly important.

The care of the poor is one of the problems of the church, and the general problems of "charity," "doles," "aid" should have careful study at the hands of deacons and bishops, and eventually methods must be evolved which will "care for the poor" in a way which will teach or enable the "poor" to care for themselves. To spend money from church funds, even under the head of "aid," which fosters indolence is not only wasteful of money but is socially deleterious.

May the time soon come when the church will "care" for its poor in a way calculated to eliminate poverty among us. It can be done, it must be done.

In the current "Washington Newsletter" of the American Association of Junior Colleges, President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., of Graceland, is listed as a member of the nationwide "Planning Committee for Religion in Junior Colleges." The same issue contains two other news items of interest to the church.

The first says:

The main feature of the program at St. Louis for the 1954 convention will be a demonstration of good teaching with a group of students from Harris Teachers College in St. Louis and taught in the demonstration by Dr. Ferris of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. The Committee will also hold a discussion group meeting on Wednesday afternoon, March 10, 1954, based on the demonstration. This will be for the purpose of identifying the characteristics of the excellent points of the teacher and techniques he may have employed in the demonstration.

The second is as follows:

Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, was presented with a certificate of award by the American Alumni Council, July 14, 1953, for significant achievement in the alumni fund-raising field. The certificate reads as follows: "The American Alumni Council, for significant achievement in the alumni fund-raising field, this special citation is awarded to Graceland College Alumni Fund for greatest increase in percentage of alumni contributing in the competition sponsored by the American Alumni Council." The alumni fund project at Graceland is being channeled this year for the construction of a new athletic field, track, and play fields.

We feel justly proud of the recognition given Brother Gleazer and the College.

From Elder John W. Banks, Chatham, Ontario:

We had an excellent appointee clinic at Kirtland last week and came away with greater knowledge and increased enthusiasm for our work. The temple was positively beautiful and proved to be a most inspirational setting for our worship experiences. The upper auditorium with the desk top was ideal for our study and discussion. The fellowship was rich and full and made possible (or resulted in) a greater appreciation and understanding of each other. All in all the total experience was a blessed one.

I was sorry to hear of Wilbur Gillen's passing. I knew Wilbur quite well when I was in San Diego during the war. He helped me much in my earlier days in development and preparation for church appointment. He always spoke highly of you and your brother, Fred M. We used to talk for hours. He gave moral support and encouragement to all the young fellows at that time (eleven years ago) and apparently supported the branch leadership up until the last.

I Walked Today

Where Jesus Walked

Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.—Proverbs 28: 6.

Walk in his ways . . . and keep his . . . commandments.—Deuteronomy 26: 17.

See that ye serve him with all your might, mind, and strength.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

By Ward A. Hougas

ONE OF OUR GREATEST challenges is to adjust to life so that we may walk with Jesus.

Most of us desire to do right and have the best intentions. But the old proverb reminds us, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." I believe that very few willingly and deliberately move in paths which lead away from the Master. Yet it is so easy under the pressure of life to give way to those powers and bidings which come from every direction and which lead into byways and detours of life.

Our Need to Grow

It is not too difficult to walk where other people have walked. A few years ago, at Springfield, Illinois, I followed the path of Abraham Lincoln—moved through his birthplace, the other homes where he had lived, his various offices, and finally to the great tomb where he still resides with us in memory. And I thought, One can walk physically where others have walked, but it is very difficult to travel the "journey of accomplishments" which they have made.

On Hill Cumorah I once tried to walk where the young prophet had. I tried to stand where the angel had stood, and I tried to sense something of the Spirit of God and the feeling of responsibility which must have come to that young man as he stood there on that hillside. I realized that though I might travel many thousands of miles in order to tramp up that hill again, still I could not walk where he had walked. For somehow, within me, I had failed to develop the capacity to move with the Master as he had.

Then I thought of Jesus. It is not hard to follow him in a physical sense, because he never went far from home—just up and down those dusty trails of Judea, along the seashore of Galilee, here and there a little off the main path—never more than about one hundred miles from home. Yet again I am overwhelmed with the realization that even though I walk where his feet have actually trod, within me there is an inability to actually move with him, to understand and appreciate him, to sense and feel that which he felt.

When my boy was just a little shaver, he started to follow me through snowy fields. I was taking man-sized strides when I heard him yell. Looking back I saw that he didn't have the capacity to take such steps. He had to take about three steps in between mine.

We, too, in attempting to follow the Master over any of his trails soon find ourselves without the capacity to take his "long strides." We must take intermediate steps, but if we are willing to do so, eventually we do develop the capacity. My boy can now step as far as I can. He had to grow, but eventually he reached that stature necessary for taking manly strides. We, too, must mature if we would follow in the steps of Jesus.

An Aid to Growth

Walking where Jesus walked probably means something a bit different to each of us. To some it means an expression of willingness to associate themselves with the movement of the Master. To some who have taken that initial step, it means continuing the quality, the degree, and the quantity of service which they now offer. To others, it is going to mean much more than just ethical living.

I think sometimes that a satisfaction in "ethical living" is perhaps one of the great weaknesses of religion. By that I mean the willingness to be satisfied with living on planes which have virtue connected therewith, and yet to be so satisfied that we make no definite effort to lift ourselves above those common planes.

I know that one can be good, ethical, moral, and still belong to no church. Yet I am certain that no one can be at his best, no one can fully develop his spiritual possibilities, unless he has the full and complete support of the movement of the kingdom. Good people may exist without the church; they may become much better people in the church. And good people in the church have the opportunity to improve as they align themselves more completely with the movement of the church.

In a Desert Place

Let us take a walk with Jesus. We won't go far in miles, but we will go a long way in achievement if we are able to follow him. For our first walk let's follow him after he received the news of the death of John the Baptist. John was closely related to Jesus, both in a physical and ministerial sense. When the news came to Jesus, he withdrew from the multitude and sought a place which the Scriptures call a desert place. Yet the people followed him. Soon he found himself surrounded by some five thousand men, besides the women and children. And Jesus, out of compassion, stood on the hillside and talked to them, gave them instruction, told them about a better way of life. All day he talked to them. When evening came his disciples came to him and said, "Master, we are out here in the desert with nothing to eat. We would advise you to send these people away so they can go down into the villages and buy food." Then it was that Jesus taught them one of the greatest lessons of his ministry. "Why send them away?" he said. "Feed them." And they replied, "We can't feed them; we have only five loaves and a couple of fishes." Then Jesus blessed that meager meal, and there was enough for all.

I don't think Jesus was too much interested that evening in feeding the people physically; he was trying to teach his disciples that within their ministry was the obligation to feed those who were hungry. Today we need the same counsel. It is easy to say, "Send them away; let them move elsewhere; it is none of our concern. Let them move out in life and feed themselves spiritually, physically, and mentally." But Jesus says that it is our responsibility. As children of his, we must feed the hungry people of the world. Let's keep in mind that they are not all in Europe or Asia or Africa. They are not even all in adjoining states. The hungry people of the world are everywhere. They may not be homeless and without food; more often the hunger is for fellowship.

Hungry for Fellowship

A few years ago in Missouri a young woman came to our church. "Smitty" was a bit peculiar, and she craved a fellowship that no one seemed willing to give her. One day she attempted to take her life, but fortunately her aim was poor. As I talked with her later I learned more about her life. She had been left an orphan at rather an early age and had been buffeted from one home to another. Now she was attempting to make her home with an uncle who lived in a little old shack at the edge of town. But no matter where she lived, she just didn't seem to fit in.

On Christmas Eve we heard the strains of Christmas carols being played on an accordion. Going to our yard we found Smitty, standing in the snow, playing out of the music of her soul. I don't know what became of her. She left town, but in my memory I still see her on that Christmas Eve with her accordion and a soul that, in spite of peculiarities, reached up for something bigger than anything she had ever possessed or understood.

In all our sanctimony we didn't seem to be conscious of her great need. Oh, we gave her something to eat that Christmas Eve, but she wasn't interested in food; Smitty was hungry for the fellowship and love she had never known. What the world has taken from her I do not know. But I do know deep in my soul that some of us pillars of the church will someday have to answer for this soul that reached up and attempted to find God without our help.

We talked in great and glowing terms about the kingdom, about Zion. She wasn't interested in Zion. She was interested in love. She wanted assurance that she had a place in the world.

When we talk about walking with Jesus, let's remember his counsel that day in the desert. Share that which we have; become partners with everyone else in that which we possess; reach out to touch the hungry souls and lift them up to spiritual nourishment.

Discovering Divinity

Our second walk follows Jesus to Caesarea Philippi, about seventy-five miles north of Jerusalem. It was soon after he had fed the multitude. Now, alone with his disciples, he asked, "Whom do men say that I am?" Some said that others thought he was John the Baptist, or Elias, or Jeremias. Then Peter exclaimed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And Jesus looked Peter squarely in the face and said, "Peter, flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." And the disciples began to get a new concept of their close relationship with Jesus. Most of them, even though closely associated with him, had previously failed to grasp the significance of his life and mission.

I believe that we, too, become conscious of the holy relationship between ourselves and God and Christ only as we sense that this is something different from ordinary relationships, something that demands more than the common relationships of earth. With such an understanding, we develop the capacity to appreciate that which God is trying to reveal to us.

In one of Wordsworth's poems, Peter Bell saw

A primrose by the river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more.

Peter Bell just saw a yellow flower at the edge of the water—that's all. He didn't see God. He couldn't see the handiwork of the Creator. He couldn't see the possibilities that God had wrapped up in that flower for its continuation through the years. He couldn't see anything of the purposes of God. Like poor old Peter Bell, many of us look upon the creations of God day in and day out—look upon the purposes of God as they find expression in the hearts and souls of men—yet seldom seem to comprehend that they have anything to do with God. We must understand what it is that God has set in motion for our welfare and for the good that can come to us and also realize the good that we can give in return to the work of the kingdom.

Adjusting Our Lives

To appreciate our relationship to God, we often have to make tremendous adjustments in our lives. When I get discouraged with our efforts, I think of Mary Magdalene, the woman who came to Jesus under very discouraging circumstances and was one of the few who remained at the foot of the cross that day when he hung on Calvary. She made many adjustments in life in order to follow him, and it took courage. It takes a lot of courage to face life the kingdom way. Our intentions are the best, yet under the pressure of life we yield to many things which lead us completely away from the kingdom.

The competitive pressures outside and inside the home are playing havoc with family life. How far are we willing to walk with Jesus in the process of adjusting ourselves to the needs of home life—adjusting ourselves to those situations which make it possible to give to the world boys and girls, young men and young women who are qualified to help with and thoroughly converted to the work of the kingdom? Our past failures to adjust have proved costly. When we review church statistics, we realize that had we been able to conserve our natural increase, our membership would now be close to two million instead of one hundred and fifty thousand. I know now that we have not given many back to the world trained and equipped with a faith in God and a quality of loyalty which would make them worth while in the work of the kingdom.

The past cannot be changed, but the future is ours; and in that future we can make adjustments which will put us in the pathway of the Christ and aid us in following him through life. For many the crucial hours in their homes are still ahead. Parental care, guidance, love, and concern can still be exerted in the lives of their children.

The Life of Ministry

Our last walk is with Jesus when he took Peter, James, and John up into the high mountain and there was transfigured before them. As they looked, they not only saw Jesus' face beaming with a light they had never seen before, but they saw Moses and Elias standing with him. It was a wonderful experience, and when it was over these men said, "It is good for us to be here; let us build three altars here and remain to enjoy the fellowship of each other and the spirit of this particular occasion." I can see Jesus, in my mind's eye, looking at them peculiarly, then turning and starting down the mountainside. I imagine these three got up a bit disconcerted and trailed behind him, wonderingly. They wanted to stay up there where life was easy, where it was enjoyable. As they looked into the valley and realized that there was work to be done with hungry people—people who needed ministry—they found it very difficult, indeed, to move down the mountainside. But Jesus led them down into the valley.

We often try too hard to be religious and yet remain totally unaware of human needs. We, too, would let the Smitties of our times come and go and drift off into oblivion without any assistance from us; we are too busy to be bothered with such people.

We, too, would leave the valley and live on the mountaintops. But the peaks are no place to live. The peaks of our experiences with God are where our spiritual reserves are stored. These are the sources that will provide us the living water we shall need from time to time as the seasons come and go.

As Jesus took his disciples down the mountain, about the first person they met was a man with an afflicted son. The disciples had tried to heal him, but couldn't; so they came to Jesus. Jesus healed the young man. His disciples were perplexed; "Why could not we do this?" And Jesus told them it was because of their unbelief; because they didn't exercise the faith which they possessed; because they weren't willing to go down into the valley; because they held themselves aloof from the needy people of the world.

They had tramped along behind Jesus, but really had not gone where he had gone. While Jesus prayed, they had slept; while he ministered, they had probably sat and criticized and wondered which among them was to be greatest in the kingdom. Many times we, too, tag along as the disciples did, and in the tagging, fail to really follow the Christ.

Have you walked today where Jesus walked? Will you walk tomorrow where Jesus walked? If you do, you will feel his presence there.

The Jewels of Babylon

great price turned out to be instead a jewel of Babylon. But when we discover that, generally, it is too late. Our money is gone, and we can't get it back.

The gospel provides us with a set of standards by which we can judge all things. We are not left to drift by ourselves. The church gives us a sure anchorage. We need not be deceived by the jewels of Babylon. We can be sure and safe in the knowledge of the pearl of great price. L. J. L.

Books

A History of Christianity, by K. S. Latourette, Harper and Brothers. Price, $9.50.

The author's avowed purpose is to give an "account of the spread of Christianity" and in so doing to provide a "well-rounded summary of the entire history of Christianity in all its phases and in its setting in the human scene."

Now, inevitably, when a person attempts to present in a historical review, an attitude presented by another man or group of men, that review is colored by the author's intellectual, cultural, and emotional background. Mr. Latourette is no exception. No man can give an unbiased history of Christianity, if for no other reason than that the facts available are so sparse and so conflicting that any elaboration of even a part of them must be by interpretation. Mr. Latourette, however, does a very credible job as he seeks to give an account of that which happened to Christianity, and an explanation of why it happened.

I recommend the book very highly for anyone who is interested in the comprehensive historical overview of the church reaching out into all areas of human life.

As you read the book, keep this thought in mind: the church, as Mr. Latourette visions it, is never to be identified with an ecclesiastical organization. It is in the churches but it transcends them. Written from this viewpoint, the appearance of this book emphasizes a very fundamental need in our church literature. We need a history of Christianity written from the context of the Restoration. The concept of God at work in history is not a new one (history as His story), but to see God at work in his story working to achieve the Restoration is beyond the ken of most historians. Because of this, much of the richness of history is lost to the average student of history.

Would that there were young people somewhere interested in history and in the salvation of Zion who would be willing to give themselves in devoted study to this task.

CHARLES KORNMAN

"... And Be Baptized," by Kenneth I. Brown, Judson Press. Price, $1.50.

An Oregon pastor, in conducting a baptismal service one Sunday evening, made use of unlighted candles on the edge of the baptistry—one more than the number of candidates—with attendants to light a candle after each immersion. In the center was the extra candle after the last candidate had left the baptistry. When the baptismal service was concluded the pastor stepped forward and, raising the candle, said: "Is there here tonight a man or woman whose life is represented by this unlighted candle? Jesus said, 'I am the light of the world.' There is light for any man who seeks it."

This idea is typical of the practical suggestions for improving the baptismal service found in this book. The author has made wide investigation of baptismal practices throughout the immersionist churches of our country. He determined to use such influence as he might have to make baptism more significant inwardly and more impressive outwardly.

"Let all things be done decently and in order."—I Corinthians 14: 40. Too frequently this admonition is ignored, and baptism becomes a commonplace service, meaningless to the congregation, and an unhappy experience to the candidate.

Suggestions pertaining to the physical and spiritual preparation of the candidate, the details of the service, the robes, the font, rehearsals, the nervous and timid candidates, the children, the private baptism, the river baptisms, and many others are generously presented.

Tactfully the book closes: "Nevertheless, more important than procedure and niceness of detail is reverence and utter sincerity of spirit."

Every Member Evangelism

The Worth of Souls

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my father!"—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3 f.

Nothing is as valuable in the sight of God as the souls of men.

In the early years of my missionary work, a rough-appearing young man and his wife attended one of our preaching series. Both showed signs of deep interest in the church as the series progressed. A colaborer during the series asked me one day, "If this young man asks for baptism, what are you going to do?" To which I replied, "He has a soul worth saving. He may someday serve as a deacon in the church." Long since this man has been ordained an elder. He has served as pastor of the branch organized subsequent to other missionary efforts in that city. He has served as president of a district which has been organized since. Besides, he gave valuable missionary assistance in the development of two or three branches which went into the formation of the new district. He still serves humbly and faithfully. God sometimes sees in men that which we fail to recognize.

The missionary outreach of the church is God's outreach through us into the lives of other people to win them to him. It is God's outreach into the lives of people enabling them to become what by his grace he purposes they should be—what he intends that all men and women shall become by obedience to his laws and by sharing in his love and power to redeem them. Paul said,

By Percy E. Farrow

"It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

What is Evangelism?

Without a careful evaluation of all the factors involved there is the danger of concluding that every member (or personal) evangelism is a separate and distinctive type of evangelism, functioning in an area of its own and perhaps apart from other evangelistic efforts. This, however, is not true. Personal evangelism is a part of the total field of evangelism. Our initial approach to the study of every member evangelism must be to seek to understand the meaning and purpose of evangelism in its totality.

Webster has defined evangelism as "the doctrine and preaching of evangelistic principles," meaning the principles of the gospel. Doctrine implies tenet teaching and instruction. We need to know the principles of evangelism. We need to know how to teach evangelical doctrine which embodies the message of the gospel of Christ. First, however, we must have a definite conviction and knowledge of God, and second we must know the people who are to be evangelized. In fine, the first principle of evangelism is to know and love God, and the second is to know and love people.

Sectarianism has given evangelism its own interpretation and uses the term freely to express its outreach, particularly the outreach of Protestantism for the souls of men, to win them to Christianity. There are denominational colorings of this general interpretation which a detailed study would reveal but which will not serve our purpose here. The general attitude of the message of sectarianism is that we need only to believe in Christ to be saved. Further than this, Christ has done it all for us.

To us the term "evangelism" is the equivalent of missionary work. It is expressed in the outreach of the church in its missionary endeavors. Evangelism, therefore, applies to the total missionary program of the church in its task of building the kingdom of God by winning people to God's way of life. Our viewpoint, as already expressed, is one of being workers together with God, not one of standing still and saying, "He has done it all." We, therefore, use the word "evangelism" to express our special kind of missionary work. True, it involves proclaiming the principles of the gospel, but it also involves the prophetic emphasis upon God's purposes in bringing to pass his will upon the earth. It involves more than an acquiescent belief in Christ. In terms of latter-day revelation, it involves the responsibility of seeking "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." With this meaning, one must first become fully converted to Christ. As he is converted, he becomes consecrated to a definite achievement. He recognizes his stewardship under God. He volunteers to consecrate himself freely in his "reasonable service" to God and to humanity in the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. The establishment of the kingdom is a group endeavor, but to each of us it is also a personal venture and challenge.

The Purpose of Evangelism

Evangelism seeks to relate people to the divine purpose through the missionary program of the church. God has stated: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man." Evangelism begins in the mind and heart of God. Its purpose is to seek after man and to make available to him the power and the means of achieving victory over sin. This victory carries with it the reward of glorification in the kingdom of God, the reward of personal growth as well as group achievement. Evangelism involves all of the process of the new birth and of growing thereafter into the likeness of God. God's divine purpose was included and revealed in the plan for man's creation. God said: "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness." Appreciating this divine purpose John said, "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." The same plan and purpose which brought man into being provides for his redemption.

The Message of Evangelism

I recall that in a class conducted by President F. Henry Edwards a number of years ago in Toronto, he began by asking the question, "What is the most significant thing about God?" After considerable discussion, in his typical manner, he summarized the contributions under the caption, "God Is Good." God is good, and his goodness causes him to be concerned. The message of evangelism involves both the goodness of God and the sinfulness of man. God by his goodness touches the hearts of men and challenges and moves them to exhibit the best that he has invested in them. He moves men to seek transformation from their sinful natures into the likeness of his divine nature by faith and repentance.

Nothing is more emphatically spoken throughout the Scriptures than the love of God. Professor Henry Drummond once preached a remarkable sermon based on the thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians, titled "The Greatest Thing in the World." The love of God manifests itself in his passion for the souls of men. On the cross Jesus said, concerning those who crucified him, "Father, forgive them; for thy know not what they do." God loves us too much to see us destroy ourselves by our own sinfulness and do nothing about it. His love, which is everlasting, is expended in saving men. This love of God, overflowing at its source, continues to flow humanityward to become the foundation of the missionary message of the church.

Man is powerless to save himself. Yet the love of God is so potent, so real, so demonstrative as to bridge the awful and otherwise unsurpassable distance sin has placed between us and God.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." There was no other way in which the effects of man's sinning could become so real to us as when seen in the suffering of Christ who was himself without sin. "He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." It was sin that crucified Christ. It was love that moved him to die for our sins. This is the divine grace by which we are saved.

The Call to Evangelize

From this love of God and Christ for men thus undeniably manifested stems the missionary zeal and passion of man for his fellow man. It challenges us to join with God in his endeavors to save men. It was this challenge which caused Andrew to find and bring Peter. It was this same challenge that caused each disciple to leave his boat and nets when Jesus said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Having confidence that men would be moved in a fashion similar to that in which he was moved to seek men, Jesus gave his chosen disciples the commission to evangelize in the impelling words, "Go ye." To respond to this urge and call is at the zenith of God's and man's co-operative endeavors of working together.

God calls men and women into his service for the purpose of saving them and in the process uses them in the joyous experience of helping to save others. In the introduction to his first epistle to the Corinthians,

Paul reminded them that they had been called to be saints. There is no higher calling than the call of Christ to us to take up our cross and follow him.

Calling means responsibility as well as privilege. In latter-day revelation, the Lord has given us this challenging instruction: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

Does this not mean that every member according to his gifts shall be engaged in winning others to Christ?

Will Christianity Unite?

By Chris B. Hartshorn

ONE OF THE FONDEST DREAMS of the believers in Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world has been that all should be in "the one true fold." That this hope has not been realized has brought sorrow both to heaven and earth. That this illusive ideal is still potent is evidenced by the many who gathered at the Amsterdam (Holland) Conference of 1948 and tried desperately to promote the unity of all participating groups.

This movement has lately popularized, to a modest degree, a new term for the program. It is rather commonly referred to as the "Ecumenical Movement"—a rather fancy word for the simple idea of world wide. Amsterdam adopted the statement of purpose and goal in these words:

"We are divided from one another not only in matters of faith, order, and tradition; but also by pride of nation, class, and race. But Christ has made us his own, and he is not divided."

What is the attitude of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints toward this effort? We were not one of the 147 denominations at Amsterdam, but we are not indifferent to the movement, even though the church cannot identify itself actively with it.

Christian Unity

Herald readers will be interested in two phases of this subject. First let us consider the situation of the several Protestant denominations with a glance in the direction of Roman Catholicism, then consider our own position as a church in the light of present-day thinking. We are interested in all things having to do with contemporaneous Christian movements to the extent that we need to be informed and give aid and encouragement wherever we can. The strength of Christian unity would be a blessing to the world if that strength were used in love and tolerance.

The idea of competing and contending bodies calling themselves after the name of Christ has long been embarrassing to Christian denominations. Jesus prayed for unity near the close of his earthly ministry. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—John 17: 21.

In the early part of this century there was much interest in "community churches" and in "federated churches." The first movement recognized no denominational ancestry while the latter encouraged all Christians to work together while playing down their doctrinal antecedents. These movements continue but have been almost overshadowed by efforts to merge major bodies such as the uniting of the larger segments of Methodism and the Christian-Congregational groups. In the past two decades international conclaves have tried to clear the way for world-wide union in the ecumenical movement.

Unity Comes at a Price

The Roman Catholic Church had no part in the Amsterdam Conference. Catholics are ready for church unity by the simple formula, ". . . by furthering the return to the one true church of Christ of those who are separated from it; for from that one true church they have in the past fallen away."—Encyclical Letter, Pius XI, January 6, 1928.

There is some evidence that among the other authoritarian bodies, such as Lutherans and Anglicans, they would not go far in surrendering their ecclesiastical status for the sake of unity.

It should not be presumed that the only loss which would follow the erasing of denominational lines would be their traditional dignity and group prestige. In fact there is something to be said for the diversity and competition which has made for vigorous evangelizing.

The distressing thing about the movement of church federation was the loss of personal interest which had been cultivated by historic denominationalism. The three or four struggling churches on the corners of a city block would be induced to merge so they could "have one large congregation with an adequate budget." Some observers have pointed out that in the course of two or three years the new grouping would number about the same as the largest of the original groups. This is a terrific price to pay for federation.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam has said, "The people must not be impoverished spiritually in the name of the spiritual advance called reunion. To sacrifice the wealth discovered by others in their search for God is to pay too great a price for union."—On This Rock,* page 19.

There are honest differences in the interpretations of God's word. While it is sinful to quarrel about these differences and to be intolerant of those who hold these divergent views, there is solid virtue in having some deep convictions on the saving doctrines of the gospel.

Stumbling Blocks in the Way

Some seem willing to sweep aside almost everything traditional and scriptural to achieve unity. Dr. Charles C. Morrison, contributing editor of the Christian Century, gives his formula in these terms:

It must rest upon the Lordship of Christ, and upon this alone. His sovereign authority is the only ecumenical principle in Christianity. Everything else—I say it sweepingly—everything else—Bible, creeds, sacraments, tradition, "ancient order of things"—is divisive, sectarian, hopeless, when it is held without being referred to Christ for his judgment upon it.—Can Protestantism Win America? page 178, quoted in Upon This Rock, by G. Bromley Oxnam.

The doctor operates with a new broom. No man who is willing to sweep so thoroughly—the sacraments, even the Bible—could have a very deep conviction on the Lordship of Christ. Where does he get his concept of His sovereignty? Without the Bible and the sacraments of the gospel, what authority can be established for his Lordship? There is no vital Christianity without personal spiritual experience, but another's experience is hardly stable grounds to establish church unity. Of course, Dr. Morrison qualified his sweeping generalization by the clause, "without being referred to Christ for his judgment upon it." Just how would he implement such reference to Christ without getting right in the middle of sectarian bias again and running counter to the traditional and "divisive" doctrines which spell denominationalism? His formula reminds us of the description the people in Montana give to Powder River: "A mile wide and a foot deep." We learned also that there is quicksand in it.

Bishop Oxnam points out some other road blocks for the ecumenical movement. He speaks of the danger of monopoly—the tendency to exalt bigness. Few individuals or groups can stand much prosperity.

Inevitably there will be a tendency toward hierarchy in the united church. We may not use the term "hierarchy," but a secretariat may take on the characteristics of hierarchy unless diversity under democratic decision be maintained. . . . A way becomes the way. What was originally a means becomes sacrosanct, and in fact an end. Deviation becomes disloyalty.—Op. Cit., pages 27, 28.

Dr. Oxnam in summation states the issue and asks some pertinent questions.

Organic union, if that is what we desire, rather than a vague unity that appears worthy but is likely to be ineffective, must deal with the concrete. . . . Is the church to be incorporated? If so . . . how is the government of the church to be described? . . . Who decides what minister shall serve there? Are these ministers employees, to be hired and fired? . . . If there is ordination, who sets up the standards for ordination and who ordains? Where are the ministers trained? Who determines the curriculum? Who owns the schools?

Religious education is, of course, a part of the service of the local church, but who prepares the curricular material and who prints it? When a man joins the church, what vows, if any, does he take? Who decides upon that? If he is baptized, what does baptism mean, and what is the form in which it is to be administered? If he receives Holy Communion, what does that service mean? Who administers it, and what forms shall be used?—Ibid., pages 100, 101.

These questions are pertinent, and their solution is vital to the establishment of a united Christendom. They cannot be swept out of the way by Christian charity nor a burst of good will. Referring them "to Christ for his judgment" upon them is the ideal way, but without the offices of an acknowledged prophet, how can they get it done?

The Restoration's Position

Like all of the larger denominations we have a historic and spiritual heritage which each member cherishes. This is especially true when that heritage is threatened. One of the first costs for us to pay would be the sacrifice of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. These could not possibly be taken in with all the denominational bias against them which has been built up in the past century and a quarter.

Our basic claim of a divinely called priesthood might not be so distasteful to other denominational groups, providing the functional office of prophet to declare "the judgment of Christ" and the Twelve Apostles as missionary supervisors were neutralized and made into honorary positions.

No doubt we would have to idealize our "kingdom of heaven" doctrine. A Zion with its teachings of personal stewardship, tithing, consecration of surplus for the common good, and the Gathering movement would hardly fit into the pattern of the ecumenical church.

Our belief of conducting our business affairs by the principle of "common consent" might be accepted as a democratic ideal by most of American Protestantism, but it would be rather unwieldy in practice. This aspect of carrying on the necessary business of leadership in a united church constitutes a major problem. In discussing it Bishop Oxnham has this to say:

There is but one way known to man to avoid the corruption of power, and that is to keep power under democratic control. Power will corrupt a bishop as well as a businessman, a church as well as a state. It is well to make it abundantly clear to those chosen for high office that the people who put them there may likewise take them from there. The man who is accustomed to sitting in front after a time thinks he sits there because he is a person who differs from other persons, a superior being. It must be made clear to him that he is a servant of the people, not a ruler. This involves democratic control.—Ibid., page 86.

Our type of church government has been well described as a "theocratic democracy." But even the prophet, who represents the theocratic side, can be dispossessed by the refusal of the General Conference to sustain him. His worthiness to occupy as "president of the high priesthood" is subject to examination and judgment by proper quorums and by the Conference. However, just the concept of having one man who is recognized by the United Church as the mouthpiece of Jesus Christ in directing the body would undoubtedly be too great a tax on Christian faith.

For these and other reasons the World Council of Churches is unlikely to hang out the welcome sign for us. For these and other reasons we are likely to want to keep our own rich spiritual heritage while wishing them well in even the smallest advancement toward their goal.

"ALL THINGS WHICH STRENGTHENETH ME"

By John G. Wight

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

—Philippians 4: 13.

THIS TESTIMONY of Paul's is one of the most inspiring statements of any man. If Paul said it on the basis of his experience with God, then each one of us has the opportunity to receive the same assurance.

There is, however, a possibility that his statement might be misconstrued or misapplied because of the use of the term "all things." Such a term, separated from its setting, could well be interpreted to be all-inclusive. Actually, Paul limited its scope with the phrase, "which strengtheneth me."

The world is filled with "things" which men can do, and they can be divided into two groups: (1) things which weaken men, and (2) things which strengthen men. Certainly Paul could not have meant that men should feel they could do "all things" through Christ.

Every day the newspapers have items about automobile accidents, murders, bank robberies, drownings, bombings, wars, beatings, ad infinitum. These are "things," but certainly they are not done "through Christ." They are done under satanic influence. These are the "things" which undermine men's lives, cause them to turn aside for something of nought. Men are not strengthened but rather are weakened by them.

There are "things" which do strengthen men. They are the "things" of the gospel of Jesus Christ. When men repent, they are strengthened. When they are obedient to the commandment to be baptized, they are made stronger. When they receive the laying on of hands for the baptism of the Holy Spirit and continue to heed its direction, they have an ever-present source of strength. Thus is the foundation laid for spiritual growth. Only "through Christ" can men do those "things" which strengthen them.

As man builds his spiritual superstructure, he puts other "things" of the gospel into his life. He attends church regularly. He accepts responsibilities when asked to serve. He pays his tithing and contributes to local funds. He qualifies himself to tell the good news of the gospel to others—and then tells them! Again, only "through Christ" can a man do these "things" which strengthen him.

Christ knew that men would need the "things" of the gospel to enrich their lives, or they would not have been included in the gospel plan. They are there for a purpose. They strengthen men, when men respond to them of their own free will. They are the tools which Christ uses to strengthen men and increase their spiritual stature so that they become like the one who built his house on the rock.

Yes, with Christ's help, "I can do all things which strengtheneth me."

Infidelity in Marriage

By Paul A. Wellington

You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?—Doctrine and Covenants 111:2 b.

THE CONTENTS of the Kinsey report on the Sexual Behavior in the Human Female, which has currently made a splash on the U. S. newsstands, presents a picture of morality which is a far cry from the marriage standard adopted by the church in 1835. Written in scientific, or at least technical, verbiage, portions of the report are lifted and sensationally spiced to appeal to a segment of the reading public.

Although it may not be entirely "sound" scientifically, the report points conclusively enough to an existing condition of immorality that those with religious compunctions against such behavior may be dismayed. The statistics showing 50 per cent of the young women and 85 per cent of the young men having premarital sex experience, and 40 per cent of the women and 50 per cent of the men being sexually unfaithful to some degree after marriage may or may not be correct. But they do show the state of social disorganization in which we are now living.

Kinsey points out that the present looseness in sex behavior emerged from reasonably small beginnings in the 1920's following the first world war. It spread rapidly with the increased transportation and communication facilities of that time. The taste for unlimited freedom surged through the veins of mankind in every sector of the world, and with especial rapidity through the United States. But sexual license was only one of many social relationships strained in that initial drive.

With the release from social pressures that came with the urbanization of America, citizens turned to "experimenting" with the unorthodox ways contrary to ways of their immediate forefathers and were delighted with the freedom that seldom called them into account. Some seemingly received particular pleasure out of "shocking the old folks." With their education and "superior" knowledge, the young people no longer looked to their parents for words of advice. For, so they felt, they had advanced beyond their counsel.

WITH THE RECENT GROWTH in interest being expressed in the field of religion, there are signs now that the pendulum of social relationships will swing from its extreme of unlimited freedom to a more balanced self-control. A new or slightly different family pattern of living may arise, but there are hopes that companionship and fidelity will be its foundation.

The church can be justly proud that it has continued to support its early stand which has survived nearly 120 years of revolution and change. Such a standard of excellence as expressed in the marriage covenant has been growing in the minds of many millions since these words were first placed in print. This covenant contains the basic ideas now taught in all schools concerned with marriage and the family.

MUTUAL COMPANIONSHIP is a goal preached by every marriage counselor. It is not a mutual understanding where husband and wife agree not to interfere with each other's freedom to do as he pleases. It is an agreement to discover mutual interests and appreciations, to share each other's trusts and confidences, to keep faithful in physical and spiritual actions and thoughts.

Of course, as Dr. Kinsey says, there can be problems such as "frigid" or "over-stimulated" sex behavior. There can also be sex habits acquired before marriage which are not controlled and invite disaster into the union. But many of the small issues which eventually lead to infidelity arise from other social experiences not usually associated with sex. Many a man goes fishing, hunting, or golfing—even on business trips or priesthood visits—without concern for his companion's reactions. And many women undoubtedly engage in various forms of business and pleasure without discovering how their husbands feel about such activities. As small and insignificant as these acts may seem, these failures to be concerned with mutual interests are a form of infidelity and have been the beginnings of irritations which eventually lead to divorce.

THERE IS NO HAPPINESS equal to that found in peace of mind. If, in marriage, there is a constant gnawing of distrust—a sense of never being sure that a companion is true to his covenant—peace of mind is absent. In search of peace, the unhappy couple's first thought is often a trip to the divorce court. Such recourse seldom brings the anticipated results. Rather, a plane of mutual understanding must be discovered if complete serenity and happiness is to be had.

Distrust may often be the result of other relationships than sex. The financial irresponsibility of a husband or wife, the unpredictable behavior of a companion at home or in a crowd, the discovered little secrets of no great consequence which indicate other possibilities perhaps more serious, the suspicious mind—all these and many others are important factors leading to the dissolution of homes. The marriage covenant challenges a husband and wife to solve their differences, make allowances for eccentricities, and share each other's trust and confidence.

The life line of marriage is the "line of communication" between a husband and wife. If the line is kept open, and used, the "war between the sexes" has a greater chance of never beginning. Honesty is not only the best policy in business; it is a must in the happy home. Those who talk over their problems frankly and try to see each other's viewpoint are laying firm foundations in the development of Zion's homes.

No matter how plausible and fascinating the explanations which condone infidelity may seem, the rich experiences accumulated by those who remain faithful to their marriage covenant offer preponderant evidence that the age-old Scripture is still the best pattern for a happy life.

The familiar phrase, "Crime does not pay," might be paraphrased to read "Moral laxity does not pay." Relaxing controls or breaking moral laws may seem daring and an act of bravery at the time, but it really is a sign of weakness rather than strength. A good citizen recognizes there is strength in united obedience to laws made in harmony with the majority opinion. A criminal imagines strength in overthrowing laws made for the social welfare.

A criminal life often begins with minor cheating and abrogation of law. Flagrant disregard of the law of sexual fidelity is frequently found to be one of the first steps leading to degradation. Such disregard does not bring happiness. Rather, it breeds distrust and fear within; it brings uncertainty and insecurity.

A clean life, free from hidden cheating, leads to happiness and peace of mind.

Question Time

Question:

In the second chapter of Luke it is stated that Simeon blessed the baby Jesus. If Simeon was not a member of the Melchisedec priesthood, where did he get his authority?

Oklahoma

E. R. C.

Answer:

The question assumes Simeon's act in taking Jesus into his arms to have been the observance of the ordinance of blessing of infants as later established by Jesus under the gospel, or perhaps a custom had among the Jews, such an assumption being somewhat common, but not justified by the text. Nowhere do the Scriptures indicate that Simeon was a priest, nor that he officiated in an official capacity in this case. Neither is it said that he blessed the child, though he did bless the parents, and spoke prophetically of the child's accomplishments in the world which might seem to be somewhat of the nature of a blessing.

In patriarchal times Israelite and Arab nations had a custom of blessing their sons by the father or grandfather, but we recall no word of Scripture incorporating the practice into the Mosaic church as a sacred ordinance for universal observance. The practice seems to have faded out long before Christ's time.

Simeon is presented as a "just and devout" man, "waiting for the consolation of Israel," the Holy Ghost being upon him by which at some previous time it had been revealed to him that he should not see death until he had seen the Christ. On this occasion he was led by the Spirit to go to the temple, and seeing Joseph and Mary with the child, discerned in the infant the promised Messiah. Being overjoyed at the realization of the long-standing promise, he took the child in his arms, evidently quite informally, and gave praise to God for the great blessing which had come to him. The blessing on that occasion was more Simeon's than that of the child's. His long anticipated hope being realized, he said, "Lord, now lettest thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

In all this Simeon was the recipient of divine blessing more than as the administrator of blessing to others. There was not prearrangement on the part of the persons involved, and as for them, the meeting was casual and spontaneous, the Holy Spirit alone having directed the affair.

The one outstanding purpose of the Lord in relation to this incident appears to have been the raising up of a witness to testify of the Christ at the moment the infant was brought into the temple. Here in a public place before the Jews, Simeon became a witness of the Messiahship of Christ. His act was dramatic and no doubt widely observed. His life and age made him a reliable witness, and his integrity could not be questioned. This competent man here proclaimed to the Jewish people the presence of the long-looked-for Messiah. To be such a witness did not require necessarily that he should be a priest.

This view is confirmed by the fact of a second witness appearing. Anna, a prophetess, of great age and deep experience, came in and, observing the event, "gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him, to all those who looked for redemption in Jerusalem." She became a second witness of the newborn Christ. To our mind it was this power of testimony that constituted the important phase of this remarkable event.

Question:

Is there any Scripture for the idea advanced by a nonmember friend that Christ spent his young life, from his twelfth to his thirteenth year, in a seminary or a school, and that he was made a priest during this time?

Michigan

MRS. F. H.

Answer:

The Scriptures are practically silent regarding the life of Jesus from the age of twelve when he talked with the learned doctors of the temple. Luke 2: 52 merely asserts, "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man," which is a very general statement. We find that Jesus is sometimes addressed as "Rabbi" or "Master," which titles were given to the learned teachers by the Jews. This fact would indicate some advanced schooling. However, the Scriptures do not give us any definite information. Your friend may be referring to the traditions and legends which claim that Jesus spent a portion of the eighteen years of his life of which the Scriptures are silent in India, Tibet, and England. The Wise Men of the east brought to the babe, Jesus, gold, frankincense, and myrrh which would have provided means for an advanced education. These same Wise Men could have been the means of future contacts with the Eastern world. One tradition also indicates that Joseph of Arimathea was Jesus' uncle, and a very wealthy mine owner, trading in tin shipped from England. Whether Jesus traveled into India, Tibet, and later into England for study and learning is not factually known. The theories are based upon traditions and legends, interesting to study and upon which to speculate. The fact remains that of Jesus' early life we are left wondering.

Question:

Please clarify Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 and explain the doctrine of our church on this subject. Does it mean that a child is eligible for baptism at the age of eight, or does it mean that he is also required to be baptized at the age of eight?

Tennessee

B. J. H.

Answer:

We have been requested to see that children are not baptized until they reach the full age of eight years; yet they are eligible at that age if willing and desirous to comply with all that baptism implies. The revelation makes it clear that where parents are members, and the church is functioning normally, as in Zion or any of her stakes, if children do not request baptism by the age of eight, there certainly has been a sin of neglect on the part of the parents. Rather than say, then, that children are required to be baptized at the age of eight, we should say, instead, that parents are required to so teach and train their children that they will earnestly desire at that age to be baptized for the remission of their sins and to receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands.

"That Will Be All, David"

By Leona N. Hands

MORE THAN fifty years ago a woman who was destined to be called a veritable cyclone in petticoats walked the streets of Wichita, Kansas, with a hatchet in her hand. Carrie Nation was a crusader known as the Joan of Arc of prohibition, and because of her spectacular methods and speeches, she was credited with starting a movement which, in the short space of seventeen years, resulted in nation-wide prohibition.

Carrie Nation was a bold leader who studied her Bible diligently and felt it a part of her God-given destiny to conquer the liquor evil. In doing so she became famous throughout the nation and accomplished a great work. However, when this outstanding task was completed, she seemingly could not endure being in the background and to the dismay and chagrin of her husband (who was a minister), she insisted on sharing his career by choosing his texts and writing his sermons.

As if that alone were not enough, Carrie sat in the front seat in church, instructing her husband when to raise or lower his voice, where to gesture, and when to speed up a little. Also, when she thought he had said enough, she would rise, step into the aisle, and announce in a loud voice, "That will be all, David." If he did not readily take the hint and stop preaching she would immediately walk up to the pulpit, close the Bible, hand him his hat, and tell him to go home.

David Nation finally resigned from his pastorate (at the request of his congregation) because of the activities of an overly ambitious wife. Eventually he left the ministry altogether, a disillusioned and embittered man. Perhaps he could not have done otherwise with such an aggressive woman as Carrie Nation for wife and companion.*

IT IS FORTUNATE that few women who are ministers' wives have ambitions to share the limelight of their husbands' careers, otherwise the same story might be repeated many times over. Most men of the ministry would no doubt prefer open opposition from their companion rather than having to cope with the zealous, overeager assistance of a wife who could so determinedly and consistently outshine her husband.

In the great majority of cases, wives are content to remain in the background, aiding and assisting their husbands in every way possible to minister in their office and calling. Surely it would be a rare occurrence for a wife to seek entire control of her companion's ministry by daring to suggest in public "That will be all, David," as did Carrie Nation.

As a church we do not believe (and the Bible clearly substantiates this conviction) that women should be preachers. That is, they are never called to a priesthood office. Yet the ministry of women as mothers, wives, and homemakers is clearly recognized and deeply needed. Their responsibilities are great, their aid and assistance invaluable. There is no end to woman's work, for without her valiant support many of man's efforts would be frustrated.

Few if any ministers are able to succeed in even a small measure without the wholehearted support of their wives. This is said to be true in other fields of endeavor also, but it is especially applicable to the ministry. Here, perhaps more than in any other line of work, there must be absolute teamwork.

It is a common occurrence to hear an apostle, seventy, or evangelist pay tribute to the loyal support of a companion who, in many instances, must remain at home rearing the family while he is laboring in the field. They are not unappreciative of the sacrifices made by a helpmeet without whose assistance their ministry would not be possible. Well they know that should a wife of a member of the traveling ministry oppose her husband's giving his entire time to the church she would be literally saying, "That will be all, David."

WE USED TO BE inclined to think that only priesthood members received a clear call from God. These men were expected in their daily living to set a standard in appearance, speech, and conduct for the laity to follow. Little was said about the calling of Saints which would include even the smallest of children in God's church and kingdom. Of late years, the call for each one to set up the warning voice has been more clearly defined as the church has endeavored to stress cottage meetings in homes along with personal evangelism. Men of the priesthood and men of the congregation have worked side by side in this endeavor to win friend and neighbor to the church.

THE WOMEN of the church are playing a most important part in this work by giving their full cooperation in opening their homes for these services. Also there are several cases in our home branch where wives have laid aside secondary matters to accompany their husbands to cottage meetings two and even three times a week. When the love of God and fellow man is uppermost in the hearts of his children, this is not considered a duty or sacrifice but a pleasure.

What is the office and calling of women? The twenty-fourth section of Doctrine and Covenants clearly defines the call to Emma Smith: "Shall be for a comfort unto . . . thy husband, in his afflictions, with consoling words, in the spirit of meekness. . . . Thou shalt lay aside the things of this world, and seek for the things of a better. . . . Beware of pride. Let thy soul delight in thy husband, and the glory which shall come upon him. Keep my commandments continually, and a crown of righteousness thou shalt receive."

"A comfort to her husband" is perhaps one of the highest tributes that could be paid a woman and is almost in itself a calling. Companion, confidant, wife, mother, and home-maker—all are included in this call, for in wedlock the woman becomes one of a team, giving her husband first place in her loyalty and affection.

OF ALL GOOD QUALITIES, loyalty is one of the very finest to be found in a companion. When this most desirable attribute is lacking, the wife literally says to her husband, "That will be all, David." She will undermine every good deed and intention her mate may have. Too, the importance of loyalty cannot be over-estimated. Consider the following incident and its effect upon the eye-witnesses (or hearers).

A certain woman in a group of people was discussing (in very unfavorable terms) her husband and children who were not present. A most uncomfortable silence followed, after which a man standing near us remarked in an undertone, "There is a woman not to be trusted. She is disloyal to those who are nearest and dearest to her, therefore she will not be loyal to anyone. Furthermore," he added as an afterthought, "she is laboring under the wrong spirit, for the spirit of criticism is not from God."

Nor is loyalty confined to family life. It is a cardinal virtue, a fundamental principle of those of good character. Carried over into church relationships it serves to remind us that we are members of God's family where our loyalty to one another might well be considered a mark of discipleship.

AS WOMEN of the church, perhaps one of the greatest single things we can do, individually, to promote unity among the members is to demonstrate our loyalty by sealing our lips against idle gossip. "Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out; so where there is no tale-bearer, the strife ceaseth."—Proverbs 26: 20. What a temptation it is to add a little wood to the fire, especially when we are in possession of a few facts that will cause the flame to blaze even higher than before. Yet people of the world and church alike pay tribute to the person of whom it is said, "She never speaks ill of anyone." Consider how directly a wife of such character aids her husband. She is his trusted confidant—a help and a comfort.

There is no greater calling for woman than that of wife and mother. She needs no other career, for this is a full-time job requiring all the strength, tact, and wisdom at her command. She can make of it a divine call by accepting the challenge left by Emma Smith who could easily have said, "That will be all, David," and hindered the work of the Restoration (and the Reorganization) greatly. Instead she chose to heed the admonition given her and became "an elect lady" and a comfort to her husband.

There are many ways in which a woman can aid and assist her companion, at home and in church. The happiness and welfare of her husband and family should be her greatest aim in life. The decision to work to that end rests with every woman in the church. It is a high and noble calling.

Remembering

By President W. Wallace Smith

THERE ARE some advantages which accrue to one who lives in the same place for a considerable length of time. Chief among them is the memory of family and friends in many and varied experiences. Such is my situation in regard to West Short Street in general and 1214 West Short Street in particular.

My experience goes back to the time when the street was not paved, and sewers, gas, and water were being installed in preparation for such an event. This was shortly after we had moved to Independence from Lamoni.

Father felt it was necessary for us to have a driving horse and a cow. We had been used to this in Lamoni, so why not here? Many of my early childhood memories center around the barn where we kept this livestock and did the chores in connection with their care.

Central to this is the memory of the instructions received from Father and Mother regarding the care of these animals. Many times I was reminded that even dumb animals respond to kindness. This was not always easy to remember, especially when old bossy was at the extreme corner of the pasture and I had an important baseball game to get back to.

Since President Israel has been ill and I have been visiting him more frequently at the old home place, I have found myself visualizing Father in his accustomed place in his easy chair in the living room, his kindness and patience being demonstrated daily as he waited for someone to come to read to him, or to assist him on his daily walk. Sometimes I did this—not as often, I'm afraid, as I should, as it is very easy for a boy of ten or twelve to have or create other interests. As I look back, I remember that Father was always tolerant and considerate, yet firm in requiring us to perform these tasks.

If we could take a page from yesteryear it would be replete with words of counsel and encouragement. It is regrettable in the lives of individuals, and in the annals of history, that our "foresight" so many times falls short of our "hindsight."

Take Your Sainthood Seriously

By Marilyn Streling

AFTER TWO YEARS at Graceland, students often find it difficult to return to home branches and restrain the enthusiasm stemming from the studies and enlightenment they received there. When they settle into a workaday routine, religion becomes vital and necessary.

The phrase from the hymn of admonition, "Unto honor I have called you," frequently runs through my mind, serving as a challenge to my church membership. Suggested in that small phrase is the fact that we are not serving honorably in just attending church on Sundays. "Unto honor." . . . When people receive an honor it is probable that they have done something worthy of recognition.

Mere church attendance is not worthy of honor, so what must we do to earn the honor of being called Saints? First of all, we could pay our tithing. "But," we may say, "we've already done that." Well, let's see. . . . We don't smoke, we don't drink, we don't have any immoral habits that we can think of off-hand. Stop! Now we're beginning to sound like the rich young ruler who came to Christ. What was it Christ replied? "Sell your riches and give to the poor." Ah, there is a fundamental point. We may be keeping the law to the letter, but it is the going above and beyond that makes sainthood honorary. It may be something worthy of honor to take extra training so that we could become able church school teachers with ability to stimulate the minds of our pupils. Or maybe this something isn't as tangible as training, which can be easily obtained. Our honorary calling may be that of ridding our lives of petty prejudices, wagging tongues, or false pride, and replacing these distasteful qualities with a genuine expanding love for humanity.

NOT LONG AGO I talked with a girl who attempted suicide. After a while I found that she had spent most of her life being concerned about herself and unconcerned about others. This had continued for such a long time that she found she was actually incapable of loving or even being interested in anyone other than herself. Life had become so unmeaningful to her that she had attempted to destroy her own.

HERE IS THE WRITER . . .

Marilyn is shown here in "the only photo I have" at work on the 1953 "Acacia." She was graduated last spring from Graceland, where, in addition to her work on the "Acacia," she was a member of the Women's Recreation Association, the N.O.N. Social Club, and the Graceland Players. This summer she was a counselor at three youth camps, two of them sponsored by the church. Now she is working as a travel consultant for the Automobile Association of America in Pontiac, Michigan.

Too many of us are like this girl, although not to the same extent. We've become passive Saints, uninterested in carrying the restored gospel to the world. If we truly loved our neighbors we would do all in our power to share the gospel with them. Just think, if every Latter Day Saint took his Sainthood seriously—as an honor—what an overwhelming missionary zeal would ensue! Our churches would overflow their capacities, and we would be steps nearer our goal of a Zion society.

The first year at Graceland a small group of us found out the damage and heartache resulting from gossip. We decided to develop better relationships and become better Saints by an immediate discontinuance of it. This was, tritely speaking, easier said than done, for cutting remarks crept into our everyday conversation. We decided upon a penalty—a penny was to be dropped into a specified jar for each off-color comment. Those pennies accumulated quickly! Though it wasn't always easy, it started a few of us on the road to thinking before we spoke. And, over a period of time, we found that we not only didn't speak malicious words, but we didn't think them either. So grows our expanding love, and our Sainthood becomes a degree more honorary.

AS WE ELIMINATE wagging tongues and stimulate love, there is yet another thing left to do. We partially covered this in the illustration of the girl who was too concerned about herself. In order to experience true happiness, many of us have found the need to go out and beyond self. There is no greater joy than that of being able to comfort someone in sorrow or share someone's happiness. We owe it to our calling as Saints to cultivate an ability to do these small services, because in serving we will find a deeper happiness. By this I do not mean to advocate individual unworth but rather to elevate the status of the individual to a Zion level.

Love is actually a prerequisite to any significant contribution we can make to the church, and we must make our contributions, because we have been called "unto honor." May we stimulate enthusiasm that it may generate throughout our branches and, as a result, fill those empty seats and even build new churches. Our message is alive and dynamic. Let us share it with love.

GAZETTE

■ The annual assembly of states and countries represented on the Graceland hill was held Thursday, October 1, amid a clamor of state songs and cheers. The first order of business on the agenda for the assembled delegates was a roll call of the assembly. As each state's or country's name was called the delegates gave a cheer for their own section of the country, and the spokesman for that area told a little about their home state. The states were divided into twelve sections for the skits which were presented.

■ The first Communion service of the campus congregation this year was held Sunday, October 4, in the Memorial Student Center. Dr. Roy A. Cheville was in charge of the service, and the theme was "We Covenant to Do These Things Together." The student priests who served the emblems were led by David Blair, Creston, Iowa, and Frank Woodson, Long Beach, California.

■ On Monday evening, October 5, President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., and several faculty members went to Des Moines, Iowa, for a meeting with Architect Dane Morgan and members of the plant and planning committee of the college board of trustees. The purpose of the meeting was to examine preliminary sketches of the proposed science and food service buildings.

■ Each of the sixteen pastoral groups on the Graceland campus has "adopted" members in missions abroad, with whom they will correspond during this school year. Through this correspondence it is hoped that the pastoral groups will grow to understand and appreciate the church and youth work being done outside the United States. The pastoral groups will have as their adoptees: Carl Crum, Japan; Don Lents, England; Kisuke Sekine, Japan; Elvin Vest, Hawaii; Alan Tyree, South Seas; Orlin Crownover, Hawaii; Les Gardner, Canada; Vivian Sorensen, South Seas; Ivan Vallier, Israel; Bob Woods, Australia; Maurice Draper, Australia; Alan Compier, Holland; Victor Witte, Europe; Louis Zonker, Germany; David Kaleikau, Hawaii; and Caldwell O. Hansen, United States.

■ The annual formal convocation of Graceland College was held in the Student Center Thursday morning, September 17. The faculty entered the assembly attired in the gowns and caps of their professions and were seated in the front center section of the auditorium. This processional was a beautiful and impressive part of the program. Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of the college, gave the challenging convocation address using the theme, "The College on the Hill."

■ On Friday evening, October 9, students and faculty attended the "Dustlanders Walk-In" theater at the Student Center. The featured attraction was "Tars and Spars," starring the well-known comic, Sid Caesar. Refreshments were served afterward, and all joined together in singing.

■ The Women's Recreational Association has again been organized this year for the purpose of providing fun and fellowship for the women on the Graceland campus. About thirty freshman and sophomore women have been participating in the field hockey games and early morning hikes. The W.R.A.'s officers are president, Martha Turner, Independence, Missouri; vice-president, Carol Collins, Independence, Missouri; secretary-treasurer, Carley Knisley, Fort Collins, Colorado; official chairman, Bonnie Anderson, Niles, California.

Books

When one moves he finds many things he has not seen or used for a long time. Yet he hesitates to throw them away or leave them behind, because of the long chance that they might be wanted "sometime." Generally they are not, and they simply continue to take up space and collect dust in the new place as they did in the old one. Yet there is an irony of fate by which, if one thing is thrown away today, it will be needed next week.

Another problem is books. How many of them do we read a second time, if ever? Yet we carry them along in heavy bundles and keep them as precious treasures, though they would bring only scrap paper prices on the market. In these rapidly changing days, nothing dates more quickly than a book, especially a novel, or a nonfiction commentary on current events.

Best books to keep, of course, are the reference works, the religious sources and studies, carefully selected poetry, and the literary classics. These will always endure in value. But so much of what we buy, no matter how much it was wanted and needed at the time, has served its purpose and cannot serve again. Histories and biographies are good books to keep. One often needs to refresh his memory on facts or to get the exact wording of a quotation.

Yet it always brings us a pang to throw a book away. And it is pure wickedness to give a book we don't want to a friend and expect him to keep it forever!

IN THE DAYS of Jesus the Jewish religion was divided into numerous sects. Many of these had become so contaminated in ritual and symbolism that the real meaning of their basic belief was obscure.

The scribes and Pharisees were, in the words of Christ, "hypocrites," and he did not hesitate to tell them so. His clashes with them were a result of their own wickedness and hypocrisy. Their objective was not to learn from him but to find fault with him.

Jesus gave men the opportunity to learn the true nature of God. His philosophy was designed to give them a better understanding of each other. Apparently the scribes and Pharisees made no attempt to understand Jesus. The superiority, selfishness, and reluctance to repent prevented them from accepting him as the Son of God.

What they did in the name of religion was largely for show. When fasting, they wore long faces and pious expressions so people would take notice of them. When they prayed, they did so in a loud voice and with many words so people would be impressed. When they made offerings in the temple they made sure as many as possible would see how generously they gave. Religious opportunities were in most cases good excuses to put on an act.

On one occasion Jesus noticed the wealthy men making large contributions in the temple with the usual display of showmanship. He also noticed a poor widow with meekness and humility making her contribution. The small donation she gave seemed insignificant in comparison to the gifts of others. Jesus used this incident as an example in teaching his followers. He said, "Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all; for all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God; but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had."

In building the kingdom it is necessary that we contribute generously. Still more important, however, is the spirit in which our offerings are given. If they are given in the spirit of the scribes and Pharisees, verily we have our reward. If our gift, regardless of its amount, is made through a love of God and fellow men, then our Heavenly Father who seeth in secret shall reward us openly.

A 62-page pamphlet, the purposes of which are to explain the use of Latter Day Saint temples, and more particularly to make clear the position of the Reorganized Church regarding the theory of proxy baptism for the dead. In order to become acquainted with the Scripture on this subject, a careful study of the texts included from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants is necessary.

Why I Am a Latter Day Saint

In answer to Mrs. William White of Corvallis, Oregon, the Spirit of God directed me to be baptized and confirmed. When I had obeyed, a peaceful feeling came over me assuring me that I had found the truth. God has spoken to me through his servants and has shown me things I could not otherwise have known. No matter how deep the hurt, he will comfort those who humbly ask him to, believing that he will. He will heal the sick also; I know, for he has healed me.

Priesthood Members Needed

Two years ago we moved to Algona, Iowa, where my husband obtained good employment. Our first thought was to find the nearest branch, which we discovered was at Mallard, Iowa, thirty-five miles from here. Then we heard that a church member was opening her home for services for the few members who live in this immediate vicinity, and we began attending these. Here ten to twelve adults and five children came on Sundays to worship. The minister and his wife have to drive thirty-two miles to conduct the morning service. There are no evening meetings either on Sunday or Wednesday.

The women have organized a circle and have had several bake sales and other fund-raising activities. They have sent Christmas packages to servicemen, planned and paid for a Bible school (which was well attended by nonmembers), given holiday programs, and gathered clothing for a needy family. Other projects are being planned to raise money so that a place to hold services can be purchased.

The important thing that is needed now is local priesthood to visit in the homes, particularly where only the husband or wife is a member, to organize services, and help the group to grow into a branch instead of dwindling away. I have lived in areas where priesthood members are so plentiful that they haven't too many responsibilities. Here they are really needed.

We hope that young men of the ministry who are trying to decide on an area to locate will consider Algona and other towns like it. We are grateful for the help we have received from our out-of-town priesthood member, but since he lives so far away and cannot come often, we hope we can have someone live here who will be present for all meetings.

An Appeal to Members in Maryland

We shall appreciate hearing from any church members living in or near Cumberland. Recently we moved from Midland, Michigan, where we had the opportunity of being members of a large branch; now we miss not being able to attend church. Our telephone number is 6285 Cumberland.

Note to Anonymous Correspondent

I recently received a letter in response to a letter I wrote which appeared in the Saints' Herald of April 27, 1953. It was a request for prayers but was unsigned. I would like to help this person in other ways, in addition to prayer, if he will write me again giving his name and address. I will keep his name strictly confidential.

A Healing in England

When I was a child in England I was very frail. During a prolonged illness, during which I grew steadily worse, a doctor came daily to see me. At that time I was four years old and my sister was sixteen. She had become a member of the Reorganized Church and asked my mother if she might take me to prayer meeting with her so that I could receive administration. Mother answered, "It probably won't do any harm, and unless she is helped soon she won't be with us much longer."

My sister wrapped a blanket around me and carried me several blocks to where the meeting was being held. When we arrived she asked the elder if he would administer to me. He asked her, "Do you think that your little sister will be healed?" And she declared, "I know that she will be." After the administration he asked, "Would you like to have us administer again?" She answered, "Oh, no, . . . thank you." Then she picked me up and started home. After we had gone a short distance she asked me, "Mary Ann, do you think you can walk?" I said, "I'll try," so she put me down for a while. After I had walked a little way, she carried me again, then told me to walk the rest of the way home by myself. When she reached home Mother asked, "Where is Mary Ann?" and my sister said, "She's coming." Soon I pushed open the heavy door and Mother caught me up in her arms exclaiming, "I can't stay out of a church in which miracles like this are wrought."

The next morning she dressed me and sent me out in the yard to play. When the doctor came he asked where I was, since he did not see me in bed as usual. My mother pointed out the window to where I was playing and said, "She's out there." The doctor was amazed and said, "This is a miracle. I came according to appointment expecting to find her dead!" And he whirled on his heel and was gone.

Charles Derry, who lived at Woodbine, was among the people at prayer meeting the evening I was healed.

Reminiscences

My parents and maternal grandparents were members of the Reorganized Church, and I can remember when, as a very small child, I used to go to church with Mother. When I became sleepy she would have me lie down in the seat beside her. I attended our church and Sunday school regularly; however, as I reached teen-age I began to go with other young people to various churches. Some were very nice, but they did not completely satisfy me. Others were so eager to win members that they would try to force people to come to the front and be saved; this disgusted me. When Elder Warren Peak came to our branch as a missionary, we young folks liked him and began to think about being baptized. Later Elder John Smith did baptize some of us. During my confirmation I was told that mine would be the gift of prayer. I received a good foundation in Bible study through Christiana Salyards' quarterlies. It made me happy to have the opportunity of meeting her several years ago and telling her of the help I had received through her writing. All my life I have kept an open mind on religion, but I have never found anything equal to the restored gospel.

THE LAND OF THE EVERLASTING HILLS

AN ITEM OF INTEREST to those who feel the government of the United States was established by the power of God appeared in the May, 1953, issue of Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

In an article referring to the last presidential inauguration, the author reviews the first inauguration of our first president, George Washington:

On April 30, 1789, General Washington was to be inaugurated in New York City on the balcony of the old Federal Hall. Jacob Morton, marshal of the inaugural parade and also master of St. John's Lodge, noticed that no Bible had been provided on which the president-elect was to take his oath as president. So he hastened to the lodge room, which was in that general neighborhood, and took the Bible from the altar. Due to the need for haste, the Bible, when placed upon the platform-stand, was apparently opened at random. The record shows it was opened at the forty-ninth and fiftieth chapters of Genesis, the passages of Scripture dealing with Jacob's final admonitions to his sons, the conferring of his parental blessing upon them, his death and burial—items of possible interest to students of biblical lore but obviously having no bearing on the occasion for which the Bible was being used.

Saints will recall that some of the more important Scriptures which have been interpreted as pointing to the land of America are found in Genesis 49:

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; . . . who shall help thee; and . . . who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under . . . : The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.—Verses 22-26.

The Bible may have been "opened at random"; but perhaps the Scripture did have "bearing on the occasion for which the Bible was being used." At least it is quite appropriate that such Scripture should be given prominence at such an illustrious occasion in the birth of a nation.

It is comforting to know that the President of the United States "solemnly swears" to preserve, protect, and defend the ideals of this land of "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills."

Ministers Visit

DENNIS PORT, MASSACHUSETTS.—The branch held a St. Patrick's fun night on March 2. The games were in charge of the new junior Zion's League, and decorations and refreshments were planned by the women's department, under the direction of Sister Adelia West, leader, and Sister Pauline Derick, her assistant.

Sister Katheryn Armeson directed the church school in a "Spring Sing" on March 21.

The women's department met at the home of Sister Armeson for an Easter worship program. Sister Derick gave a book review of Costain's The Silver Chalice, and a picture study of Edith Ann Woods' "Last Supper" was held at the candlelight lesson. Refreshments were served.

The junior Zion's League meets each week for a period of worship and handcraft.

Brother Harold Cash of Attleboro was guest speaker on Palm Sunday. His theme was "Putting First Things First."

On Easter Sunday, Pastor George Armeson preached on the subject, "Then Came the Dawn." The primary and junior reading and singing choirs gave the lesson, "He is Risen," around the altar and the cross.

On Mother's Day Elder Sanford Fisher of Somerville was the speaker. At the close of the sermon, bouquets of pansies were presented to all present. This was arranged by Sister Katheryn Armeson and her primary and junior girls.

Children's Day was observed by appropriate exercises by all the church school classes.

Visiting ministers have included Brother Leonard Garlick of Providence, Rhode Island, Elder Edward Joy of the district presidency of St. Louis, Missouri, Brother Frederic Roberts, presiding patriarch, of South New England District near Onset, Massachusetts, Brother Charles L. Kelley of Melton, Massachusetts, and Brother William Leland of Onset, Massachusetts.

The women's department has had two bake sales and two public luncheons during the summer, the proceeds from which were given to the budget.

Sister Marion Nixon plans to open the Thrift Shop soon. The Helping Hand society opened the fall season with a covered dish luncheon at the home of Sister Sarah Berry.

Church school opened October 4.—Reported by SARAH E. BERRY

Women Hold Institute

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—The women of the district held an institute in the church in Fayette City on September 19-20, with Sister Aarona Kohlman of Guelph, Ontario, as guest speaker. She spoke on "The Stewardship of Time" and "The Stewardship of Money" on Saturday afternoon. Saturday evening there was a panel discussion and forum by the women's leaders of the district. Sunday morning, Sister Kohlman spoke on the subject, "Called to Be the Daughters of God." The meetings, which were arranged by Sister Beulah Warner, district women's leader, were interesting and stimulating. Dinner was served Saturday evening and Sunday noon by the men of the district.

The annual fall conference of the Pittsburgh District was held October 3-4 in the North Charleroi Church. There was a priesthood meeting Saturday afternoon, and a business meeting followed by a panel discussion in the evening. A fellowship service on Sunday morning was followed by church school classes and preaching at the eleven o'clock hour by Elder William Guthrie. An ordination service closed the conference. Brother Guthrie continued a preaching series through the following week.—Reported by ELIZABETH E. ROSS

Henry Schaefer, of Independence, was guest speaker at morning and evening services on September 20.—Reported by LETTIE ELDRÉD

Improve Church Building

MARION, MICHIGAN.—The branch is growing, under the leadership of Elder Sidney Vanderwal.

The Zion's League, led by Sister Pearl Overholt, has purchased the United States flag and the church flag, and presented them to the branch at a program.

Sister Norma Crozier is women's department leader. The women serve supper to the Kiwanis Club every other Tuesday night.

The group had a stand at the 4-H livestock fair in the park at Marion, which netted a nice sum to add to the building fund.

Brother Carlton Hubbard is superintendent of the Sunday school. The group has family night once a month, and the men have spent several nights working on the dining room and painting and adding linoleum in the auditorium and hall.—Reported by HERMAN SCHROCK

Annual Election

BURLINGTON, IOWA.—Annual election of officers was held in the early part of August. The following were elected to serve during the coming year: Elder D. J. Williams was sustained as pastor; L. G. Improve Camp Site

NEW WESTMINSTER, B. C.—The branch held its annual business meeting on September 14. There was a good attendance, and the following officers were elected: president, Elder Samuel Clark; counselors, Elders A. Coburn and H. Burton, and Brother F. Woods; church school director, Roy Mourtany; junior church, Ruth Atherton; adult supervisor, P. Waite; Zion's League, Jessie Navy; secretary, M. Clark; recorder, S. Jensen; Laurel Club leaders, M. Burton and M. Baylis; church solicitor, R. Coburn; music director, L. Benham; historian, L. Cross; librarian, C. Waite; book steward, S. Jensen.

The Sunday school held a picnic at White Rock and conducted a one-week vacation church school in August.

The Zion's League had an active summer. Many attended the youth camps, and put on two fine plays, one at Silver Lake Reunion, besides other activities.

The Laurel Club has had hot luncheons once every month, also an Easter tea and a booth on May Day, as well as several branch dinners and sales of its work.

New Westminster was well represented at Silver Lake Reunion. The camp site has been improved each year.—Reported by PHOEBE WAITE

Ordination Service

CRESCENT, IOWA.—At a special meeting called September 9 by District President Charles F. Putnam, the name of Joseph Earl Hoyt was brought before the branch for approval for the office of elder. The recommendation was approved and went before the district conference held in Council Bluffs on September 13. Being approved, it was referred to the local branch for ordination. On September 27, an ordination program was planned and Brother Hoyt was ordained by Elder Charles Putnam, assisted by Elders Francis E. Hansen, Harley Butler, and George D. McKeown. Sisters Velma Richie and Rea Nuzum of Council Bluffs sang "My Task."

The branch business meeting was held September 28. Officers elected were pastor, Joseph Earl Hoyt; secretary, Mary Butler; treasurer, Harold Wilson; solicitor, George McKeown; young people's leader, Harley Butler; music director, Grace Brewer; women's department leader, Mary Hoyt. Some officers will be chosen later by the pastor and his counselors, with the help of district leaders.—Reported by MARY HOYT

New Church Completed

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—Construction work on the new Hamilton Avenue Church (formerly Newall Street) has been completed. The church is a beautiful L-shaped brick, with excellent facilities, including ample classroom facilities. For the worship hour there are quarters for the adult, junior, and primary worship, as well as a room for nursery-age children. Much of the work was done by members. Both men and women were called upon to contribute many hours of hard work. Their response was splendid also in making cash contributions to the building fund. Energies will now be directed toward the building of an East Side Church. Since the sale of the Baltimore Boulevard Church, services have been held in the Kearsley theater, east of Flint. A number of church people live in that area. A beautiful site has been purchased for a new church building of contemporary design.

The missionary series held in March with Elder Al Pelletier as speaker had an average attendance of 175 nightly. These services concluded with ten baptisms.

Flint members were hosts to the Michigan Institute of Religious Education held in Flint May 29-31. Michigan pastors and department leaders and teachers attended. Guest speakers were Apostles Reed Holmes and George Mesley, and Elder Arthur Rock.

A mother and daughter social evening was held on May 8 and was attended by more than 140 mothers and daughters. The Central group with Mrs. Theo Bush as leader, arranged the program, which had as its theme, "The Unfolding of a Rosebud." Reta Russell was toastmaster. Mrs. Jack Smith is women's leader.

The Flint Zion's League enjoyed a good year with Lewis Wilcox as leader and Larry Pool, president. During the summer, Bob Eliason assisted. A second League now meets on the East Side. Roy Money is City Zion's League leader.

Don Everhart, young adult leader, has organized his group for a series of social gatherings for the younger adults, a number of whom have just moved to Flint.

Kathleen Irwin is director of music for a second time. She arranged for two concerts in the church, the A-C Male Chorus in January, and the Chevrolet Male Chorus in May. Each time, a social hour followed, with the choir members as hosts. The Hamilton Avenue choir is being directed by Mrs. Richard Denzeny. Mrs. Carl Vun Cannon directs the East Side choir.—Reported by R. MELVIN RUSSELL

Eleven Baptisms

CLIO, MICHIGAN.—Eleven were baptized and confirmed on June 14. They were Sharon Walker, Jerry Hester, Ernest Ross, Suzanna DuBois, Eric Thomas, Carol Ross, Joseph Saylor, Pattie Cook, Susan Iverson, and Johnie and Willard Slough.

The annual business meeting was held September 11. Officers elected were as follows: pastor, James McBride; counselors, E. S. Horton and Elden McBride; treasurer, Nelson Cheney; financial secretary and church school director, Ervin Cook; secretary, Dorothy Bechtel; music director, Della Ross; women's leader, Lydia Bechtel; radio pastor, historian and auditor, E. S. Horton; adult supervisor, Don DuBois; young people's supervisor, Claude Smith; children's supervisor, Eva DeCaire; book steward, Ronald Ross; publicity agent, Carol Ross; community council representative, Elden McBride; solicitors, Ervin Cook and John Luce; custodian, Donald McBride.—Reported by CAROL ROSS

Branch Organized

HADDONFIELD, NEW JERSEY.—The Haddonfield Branch was organized the evening of September 23, in the IOOF building. John T. Conway, president of the New York-Philadelphia District, represented Apostle D. T. Williams for the General Church. Brother Conway was also pastor of First Church, Philadelphia, in March, 1949, when what is now the Haddonfield Branch was initially started as the South Jersey mission, with twenty-four members from Camden and the surrounding area. Also present were Ralph Bobbitt, present pastor of First Church, and Mrs. Bobbitt.

Elder David M. Wiesen, who was appointed pastor at the start of the mission, was elected pastor of the branch. The following officers were elected at the meeting; Robert Grimmer and Ellis Butterworth, counselors; Florence Donnelly, secretary; Finis Easter, director of finance and junior church pastor; Harry Reynolds and Norman McKim, finance committee; Presley Ellis, treasurer; Jean Troth and Davis Wiesen, Jr., auditors; Ellis Butterworth, solicitor; Ava Segalo, director of religious education, and Zion's League; Lloyd Rahm, director of music; Jean Troth, book steward; Robert Grimmer, recorder; A. Haines Troth, director of publicity and building fund; Eva Ellis, historian; Betty Ewald, statistician; Helen York, women's department leader; Marion McKim, programs; Davis Wiesen, Jr., building committee head, with Norman McKim, Willard Coward, Presley Ellis, Ira Humes, and Robert York, members; Walter Grimmer, missionary visiting; Robert York, in charge of cottage meetings.

A standing vote of thanks and appreciation was given Brother Wiesen for his faithful ministrations to the South Jersey members since the organization of the mission. The women's department served ice cream and cake following the meeting.

The first Sunday service of the branch was under the direction of Helen York and the women's department, while the priesthood members held a retreat Saturday and Sunday, September 26-27, at the Deer Park reunion grounds.—Reported by A. HAINES TROTH

Women Active

HUTCHINSON, KANSAS.—Elder James Daugherty held a series of meetings November 9-23.

On November 21 the branch held a candlelight Thanksgiving service at the church. After the service the group met at the home of Laurence and Mary Ruth Deck for the annual Thanksgiving dinner. There were forty-two present.

The young people held a Christmas cantata at the church December 21. Treats were given to all.

The women's department gave four fruit baskets and one food basket as Christmas gifts. Elder Charles Neff, of Independence, Missouri, spoke at the eleven o'clock hour and evening service on March 15.

The women's department cleared forty dollars on their bake sale April 18.

The women's department of Wichita presented the play, "Solid Rock," on April 26. On May 14, D. Holder, district women's leader, met with the women's department for an all day meeting and covered dish luncheon.

Richard Pomeroy was baptized by Elder R. E. Wilson on May 17, with the confirmation service following by Elders E. C. Eckright and R. E. Wilson.

Alvan Turpen was sponsor of the church basketball team, which won second place in the junior division in April.

Cora Herimonies and Helen Ediger were baptized by Elder Eckright, with confirmation services in charge of Brother Eckright and Elder Harry Eckright, of Moline, Illinois, on August 2.

The women's department had charge of the evening service on August 7. They have also donated $160.00 for the new roof.

The evening adult class presented a Book of Mormon to the public library.—Reported by JENNIE WHITED

Missionary Series Held

SWEET HOME, OREGON.—A series of missionary meetings were held May 17-22, with Elder James Kemp as speaker. At the close of the meetings there were two baptisms, Treva Lee Phelps and Leslie McElhinny. They were confirmed the same day.

On Children's Day Lillian Henderson of Albany was baptized by Elder Cleo Thompson. Diana Dee Chance was blessed by Elder Paul O'Dell on July 12.

Two members of the district presidency. J. L. Verhei and Harold Carpenter, were present for the morning worship and afternoon business meeting August 30. Brother Carpenter spoke in the morning, and Brother Verhei presided at the business meeting.

The following were elected: Cleo Thompson, pastor; Shirley Thompson, secretary-treasurer; Virgie Barr, auditor; Homer Moxley, church school superintendent; Goldie O'Dell, women's leader; Helen Ross, music leader; Nellie Walberg, youth leader; Virginia Phelps, social leader; Irene Richards, librarian; Maud Bowser, publicity; building and finance committee, Arnold Richards, Ray Riggs, and Homer Moxley. Branch President Cleo Thompson appointed Elder Paul O'Dell as associate pastor. A basket dinner was enjoyed by the group at the home of Milford Walberg.—Reported by MAUD BOWSER

Youth Rally Held

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.—The Zion's Leaguers and young adults from the Kentucky-Tennessee District registered for a youth rally at Chickasaw State Park on Saturday morning, September 26. The theme for the rally was "We Seek and Find God"; a total of eighty young persons attended.

Elder Carl Mesle, who was the guest minister, conducted the classwork. Those who shared in ministry were J. H. Yager, missionary for the district; R. T. Cochran, district president; L. D. Sutton, district youth leader; Ralph Shrader, district church school director. Bill F. Sutton had charge of the recreation. The Memphis League had campfire services, with Ronald Yager and Marlene Cochran in charge.

Appetizing meals were prepared by Alma Cochran, district women's leader from Memphis, Mrs. Braden Baily from Jacks Creek, Mrs. C. Fears from Memphis, Mrs. George Green from Paris, and Mrs. Lena McBee, Linda Coltharp and Lorene Fuller from Tri-City, Kentucky.

On Saturday afternoon there was a volleyball tournament, with a trophy going to the winner, and after a hard-fought battle the Paris League was awarded the trophy, defeating Tri-City.

The campfire was highlighted with several skits and some group singing after which the youth joined hands and had a sentence prayer circle with almost 100 per cent participation.

The Sunday morning sermon was delivered by J. H. Yager, who spoke on "The God I Know" and gave several interesting experiences in his travels as a missionary.

The fellowship service was held outside, overlooking Lake Lajoie.

Mrs. Lillian Powell, district youth leader from Arkansas-Louisiana District, and some of her group were present throughout the service.—Reported by ALMA COCHRAN

Branch Election

DEKALB, TEXAS.—The branch held its annual business meeting on the evening of September 23, with District President James Renfro officiating. DEATHS

BEEBE.—George Washington, Jr., son of George W. and Abigail Puckett Beebe, was born February 20, 1875, at Browning, Iowa, and died September 4, 1953, on the way to the Independence Sanitarium.

He spent his boyhood in north-central Kansas, and on September 16, 1893, was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Coal Hill Branch near Eldorado Springs, Missouri. He was ordained a priest on October 6, 1895; an elder on October 21, 1906; and a high priest on October 26, 1919. He served under General Church appointment from 1897 to 1903, when he contracted malaria which resulted in a throat ailment which necessitated his retirement from active missionary work. On October 26, 1919, he became a member of the Holden Stake High Council and served in this capacity for about twenty years. He was active in church work at Holden, Missouri, from 1915 to 1930, after which he served as pastor of the Atherton, Missouri, congregation in 1932 and 1933. He continued to work with the Atherton group and the Spring Branch congregation in Independence as long as he was able. On March 3, 1903, he was married to Jane Bourgeret; seven children were born to them. His wife and a daughter, Alice, preceded him in death.

Surviving are four sons: Joseph and Ammon of Atherton; John of Independence; and Russell of Buckner, Missouri; two daughters: Mrs. Ammon Andes of Lawrence, Kansas, and Mrs. Dwight Davis of Independence; a brother, Edward Beebe of Culbertson, Nebraska; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Atherton Church, Elders Otho Clark and C. F. Scarcliff officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PIERCE.—Ollie B., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Watkins, was born May 18, 1911, in Henry County, Tennessee, and died September 23, 1953, in Paris, Tennessee. She was married on August 18, 1928, to Lones B. Pierce, who survives her. She spent most of her life in Tennessee and had many friends there. Since July 5, 1953, she had been a member of the Reorganized Church.

Besides her husband and parents she leaves a daughter, Mrs. Wilburn Wynn; a brother, James Watkins; and two grandchildren, all of Paris.

HARRIS.—Mary E., was born in 1863 in Alabama and died August 13, 1953, in Galveston, Texas. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1887.

She is survived by one son, Noble Bunyard of Pioneer, Louisiana; one daughter, Mrs. L. V. Aldridge of Sulphur Springs, Arkansas;

Another son, Meade Pearson, died in 1950. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth.

Besides her son she leaves two brothers: Otis Pope of Gas City and Delbert Pope of Stockton, California; seven grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Hepler Methodist Church, Elder Lee Quick officiating. Burial was in the Hepler cemetery.

RALSTON.—August F., was born April 5, 1871, at Lamar, Missouri, and died August 14, 1953, at Salem, Oregon. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1890.

He is survived by four sons: Neil and Clark of Dundee, Michigan; Wallace of Hermiston, Oregon; and Douglas H. of Salem, with whom he was residing at the time of his death; four daughters: Mrs. A. H. Tilton of Fort Collins, Colorado; Mrs. W. O. Goebel of Blue Springs, Missouri; Mrs. J. H. Harp of Salem; and Mrs. J. W. Baird of Grain Valley, Missouri; two sisters; and one brother.

DOBSON.—Jennie Alice, daughter of James T. and Emma Newcom, was born May 24, 1879, at Deloit, Iowa, and died July 6, 1953, at her home in Selby, South Dakota. On February 3, 1904, she was married to Alma C. Dobson, who preceded her in death on August 2, 1941. A son, Ezo C., died in infancy. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood, although isolated from any branch. Funeral services were held in the Selby Methodist Church, the Reverend D. L. Reedy officiating. She was buried beside her husband in the cemetery at Selby.

ROSS.—Catherine, was born October 17, 1867, in Lapeer County, Michigan, and died September 18, 1953, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Stanley Horton, in Clio, Michigan. She moved to Caseville with her husband, James Ross, in 1893, and in 1900 became a member of the Reorganized Church. Before the branch was organized there, services were held in their home. Most of the members of her family belong to the church and ten are serving in the priesthood.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. Anna Horton of Clio; Mrs. Emma Schood of Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. Eliza Nellis of Flint, Michigan; Mrs. Ruth Barker of Cheboygan, Michigan; and Mrs. Bessie Nellis of Owosso, Michigan; seven sons: William, James, Benjamin, and John of Caseville, Michigan; Dorse, Floyd, and Walter of Flint; forty grandchildren; fifty-eight great-grandchildren; one great-great-grandchild; and two sisters: Mrs. Mary Steward of Caseville and Mrs. Effie Willard of Cass City, Michigan. Funeral services were held in the church at Caseville, Elder Archie Harder officiating. She was buried beside her husband, who died in 1918, in the cemetery at Caseville.

McLEAN.—Elizabeth Jane, was born in Proton, Ontario (date of birth not given) and died in a Calgary nursing home (date of death not given). From 1918 until the time of her final illness she lived in Oyen. She was a member of the Reorganized Church. Her husband, Charles, preceded her in death in 1934.

Surviving are seven daughters: Mrs. Gertie Snell of Honeywood, Ontario; Mrs. Stella Shaw of Edmonton; Mrs. Ralph Waters of Edmand; Mrs. John Black of Oyen; Mrs. Cecil Diaper of Calgary; Mrs. Elgin Clark of Leduc; and Mrs. Clarence Olson of Excel; three sons: J. R. Bindloss and Albert of New Brighton, and E. Blake of Saskatchewan; five brothers: William and Robert Dezall of Edmand; Edward, Innisfail, and Alfred of Victoria; three sisters: Mrs. Annie Stephens of Markdale, Ontario; Mrs. David MacGregor of Vancouver; and Mrs. George Christie of Hopeville, Ontario; twenty-nine grandchildren; and twenty-one great-grandchildren.

BADHAM.—Willard Edmond, was born March 10, 1873, in Shenandoah, Iowa, and died September 23, 1953, in Los Angeles, California, where he had resided since 1883. His father, James Badham, was the first pastor of the Reorganized Church in Los Angeles, and in 1894 Willard was baptized. He was instrumental in building the Central Los Angeles Church and will be long remembered for his warm handshake and hearty greeting at the door as he met those who attended services there. In 1900 he was married to Hermina Adam; three children were born to them. Two survive: Willard E., Jr., and Mrs. Leslie Spooner. He also leaves a brother, Myron J.; five grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by Elder Garland E. Tickemyer.

BRONSON.—Ermina Clarissa, daughter of Eli M. and Cynthia Permella Wildermuth, was born June 8, 1870, at Inland, Iowa, and died October 7 at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Clifford Wilcox, in Independence, Missouri.

On October 8, 1882, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Lamoni, and on August 3, 1889, at Plano, Illinois, she was married to Claude L. Bronson, who preceded her in death four years ago. She was a devoted church worker and although for many years she was crippled and in pain, she was ever ready to help others in any way she could.

Surviving are four sons: Lester of Grandview, Missouri; Marion of Independence; Burr of Pittsville, Missouri; and Hiel Jerome of Helena, Montana; two daughters: Mrs. Clifford Wilcox of Independence and Mrs. Hunter Ferguson of Holden, Missouri; one brother, Lester Wildermuth of Plano; two sisters: Florence Andes and Mabelle Higgins of Independence; twenty-six grandchildren; and fifty great-grandchildren. One daughter, Ruby, died in 1922. Funeral services were held at the Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Walter Lloyd and Barnett Berridge officiating. Burial was in Sunset Cemetery, Warrensburg, Missouri.

LAWSON.—William Arthur, was born August 30, 1885, in Oklahoma and died September 9, 1953, at his home in Bakersfield, California. He is survived by his wife, Rosa Lee; five sons: Charles of San Francisco, California; John of San Mateo, California; Edward of Missouri; Thomas of Fresno, California; and Jack of Bakersfield; one daughter, Elva Coleman of Missouri; two sisters: Nellie Davis of New Mexico, and Daisy Johnson of Oklahoma; and thirteen grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Harry E. Hampton. Interment was in the Bakersfield Memorial Park.

Correction

A daughter, Kathleen Miriam, was born on August 30 to Mr. and Mrs. B. Fred Doster of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Doster is the former Rebecca Salonimer of Detroit, Michigan.

...And Finally

CEILINGS

Not all of the best ideas are new. The old-timers had some good thoughts, too. Have you ever noticed how high the ceilings were in the good homes of an earlier time? In hot weather the rooms were fairly cool and comfortable, and when they opened one of the tall windows they didn't have to use a big fan to get fresh air. Twelve and fourteen foot ceilings were not uncommon. There was good air enough for everybody to breathe. It smelled fresh, too.

Now in building homes people economize with ceilings eight feet high or less, and wonder why the rooms are hot and the air stuffy. It's all very modern, efficient—and unsatisfactory. Some day an architect will discover what Grandfather knew, and start selling the idea of air space for homes. He may even happen on the discovery of another old-time piece of knowledge, the use of thermal ducts or outlets for ventilation without fans or noise.

Perhaps "low ceilings" is also one of the spiritual troubles of our time. We don't leave enough room for the head, nor for the mind. Any reader can carry the thought on from that point, deriving from it whatever lesson may be applicable to his own need.

DEEP FREEZE

Emphasis on doctrine and ritual reduces the warmth of the Christian fellowship and produces "frozen souls." As churches grow older and wealthier, their buildings become chancelized, the sermons intellectualized, the music sterilized, and the service ritualized.

EFFECTIVE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

It would surely be well for us to cease our lamentation on the theme that our children cannot receive adequate instruction in religious education in the limited period available to the church school on Sunday morning, and proceed in all sincerity and with due prayer and study to make every look, word, and deed the most effective religious education that can be made available to our children and to all those with whom in the grace of God we may come in contact—direct or indirect.

RECOMPENSE

The voice of Pleasure gayly called,
"Come, leave dull care for play
And follow me to yonder fields;
We'll have a holiday."

'Twas such a happy tune she sang,
I yearned to go along
And learn from her the laughing words
To such a merry song.

But Duty sternly shook her head,
How well I knew her face!
"You cannot leave your care behind
With none to take your place."

I could have wept to know the words
That Pleasure sang that day,
But, oh, the harmony I learned
Where Duty bade me stay.

Delmar Goode

DELMAR GOODE came to Graceland in the fall of 1945 as head of the chemistry department. He is instructor of organic and inorganic chemistry, qualitative and quantitative analysis.

Born on June 29, 1909 in Independence, Missouri, he was graduated from William Chrisman High School there and from a three-year course at Graceland. While at Graceland he was business manager of the A Cappella and a member of the College Players. He was also business manager of the Graceland Record, the first Graceland newspaper. He won the Gold Seal in journalism and the Cousins Cup in engineering. Continuing his education at Kansas University, he majored in chemistry and received his B.A. degree in 1933. In 1948 he received his M.S. degree at the University of Iowa.

Before coming to Graceland, Delmar was employed for ten years by the Colgate-Palmolive-Pect Company of Jeffersonville, Indiana, and Jersey City, New Jersey, as a chemist and production supervisor of the toilet article division. Out of this occupation Delmar developed an interesting hobby. He enjoys making perfumes and other toilet articles. He believes that a person can do anything he sets his mind to do. At present he is building a house in south Lamoni. He expects to do his own landscaping and and to reserve a space for experimenting in gardening, another of his hobbies. The entire Goode family enjoys singing and the Lamoni Branch appreciates the Goode quartette.

Delmar is an active member of the Lamoni Community Life Association and enjoys Red Cross first aid work. Last winter he taught landscaping in the Lamoni Community Adult School.

Delmar became a member of the Reorganized Church when he was eight years old and now serves as a priest. He is married to Anita May who was born in the Tahitian Islands while her father, J. Charles May, was on a mission there. The Goodes have two children, Denny, 13, and Louita, 17.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH IN OHIO

President W. Wallace Smith attended the Southern Ohio District conference October 18-19, and was associated in ministry with Apostle D. T. Williams and District President Calvin French.

On Sunday, October 18, President Smith preached at Dayton, Ohio, and took part in the ordination of Floyd T. Rockwell to the office of evangelist. Apostle Williams assisted in the ordination service.

The afternoon consecration service officially opened the new church at Dayton. Brother Theodore Boeckman is the pastor.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS AT COUNCIL BLUFFS

President F. Henry Edwards preached at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sunday, October 18. Elder V. D. Ruch is the pastor there.

APOSTLE HIELD IN TEXAS

Apostle Charles Hield was in Fort Worth, Texas, October 10-12, where he conducted various meetings. He reports that Fort Worth has a beautiful new church building.

Apostle Hield was in Dallas, October 14-16, and attended the priesthood institute for Central Texas District at Marlin, Texas, October 17-18. Instructors who assisted Brother Hield at the institute included District President C. W. Tischer, Linden Wheeler, pastor at Dallas, Henry Porter, pastor of the Sabine area, and Glen Fordham of Fort Worth.

APOSTLE FARROW IN INDIANA

Apostle Percy Farrow attended district conference at Indianapolis, Indiana, October 10-11. Elder Clark Glenn of Derby, Indiana, was elected district president, with Chester Metcalf and Wayne Smelser as his counselors. Brother Farrow reports that the Saints have done excellent work in completely renovating the church building.

On October 12-13 Brother Farrow preached at New Albany, Centerton, Washington, and Evansville. Centerton has completed a basement church structure, and Evansville also has a new church.

A number of Saints were in Lamoni, Iowa, for Home-coming activities at Graceland College, October 17-18.

Time to Decentralize

"And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." —Mark 1: 35.

SINCE THE BEGINNING of the Industrial Revolution about the middle of the eighteenth century, cities have been growing larger and many more people have been crowded into them. Cities offered employment, opportunity, protection, and a great variety of social, cultural, and educational advantages. People felt safer in them. In time of war they have gathered into cities for mutual protection. Against invaders, the fortified cities held out longest. The country was conquered first.

The atom bomb has changed that. The greatest danger is in the cities, where a carefully placed modern bomb could destroy a vast number of persons at a single flash. So far as future wars are concerned, the great cities are the least safe places in the world. Accordingly, industries are moving to the towns and into the country, smaller ones first, and larger ones looking in that direction. Decentralization is a significant word today.

THERE IS ANOTHER SENSE in which people need to decentralize. Some men give their whole lives to a single business. Then when something happens to it they have nothing else to live for. Some women give all their thoughts to their children. Then when the sons and daughters are grown up and live in their own homes, the mothers are desolate.

Any life based upon any one thing, no matter what it is, faces a peril of desolation. We need a variety of interests, duties and work, pleasures and hobbies, activities and studies. For its own protection a life needs to be decentralized. It should encompass many things.

This is a reminder of a man who decided to go out of a business he was in, not because it was unprofitable, but because he had grown tired of it. Asked if he was not afraid to leave a profitable career, he replied, "I know four other things I can do to make a living. And money isn't the only thing. I can't take it with me. When I die, I want the pleasure of having had a chance to live. Business must be interesting, or I don't want it."

REVERTING TO THE TEXT, one imagines that Jesus left the crowds and went away alone to pray because he wanted to save his soul from the thinking and feeling of the crowd, the mass prejudices. He had to be alone to talk to God, and to listen to what God might have to say to him. He decentralized.

It seems to be a fact that when we are with our friends we tend to be what they want us to be. We like to please them. If we never escape this, we starve our own personalities to build a social front. A man can never truly be himself unless he takes some time to be alone, to examine his mind and spirit in the laboratory of prayer.

NOTHING THAT IS WRITTEN HERE should be interpreted to mean that a person should have no center to his life, nor that he should disperse himself upon a multitude of unrelated interests. The real danger is in imagining himself to be always at the center of importance. This is to lose himself and to end in defeat. There must be a center for a life, but that center had better be God.

Perhaps it can be explained this way. If an explorer stands at the North Pole, all directions are south and mean nothing. But if he leaves the pole, he regains direction and can indicate the way again. So it is for the self-centered man. He must get out of the center and leave it to God.

IT IS SAID that the infant is the complete egotist. He is the center of everything, in his own mind. But as he grows older he is taken farther and farther away from the center, and in his maturity puts many others in a place of first importance.

Some people never mature, never yield first place to any other person, human or divine. They are simply not able to decentralize. They may go to their graves with the error not corrected. But if they do, it may be said that they have never truly lived.

Is a self-centered person ever truly happy? Not likely. Life never gives him enough; somebody has always shortchanged him. Happiness is something too big for him.

On the other hand, a person who is able to place another at the center, to give him the place of first importance when his need is great, and to keep God at the center of life at all times—that person will never have need to worry about his happiness. It will cling to him like a comfortable garment, it will always be there waiting for him, a part of his background, conditioning all his experience. A person decentralized in this way will be too busy, too interested, to think very much of himself at all.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Glenn C. Weidling, 411 Thirteenth Street, South, Fargo, North Dakota, as bishop's agent of the Red River District succeeding Brother C. F. Young.

Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of October and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Glenn C. Weidling at the above address.

We are very appreciative for the years of faithful service which Brother Young has given in this office. This change of appointment is made with his support and recommendation and will allow him to devote his available time to the work of the district presidency.

We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints of the Red River District to Brother Young during his period of service and commend Brother Weidling to them for their continued co-operation and support.

We wish to call attention to several items in the above statement. The copper dome, stonework, and roof of course have been major items in bringing the total investment up to $1,265,745.02.

In setting our goal for the years 1951-1953 we had hoped to raise $500,000—$100,000 in 1951 and $200,000 in each of the ensuing years. It is to be noted from the above statement that the total up to and including eight months of 1953 amounts to $295,863.92, which the next two weeks these will be completed, and it will be possible to give estimates of cost for this particular project. As soon as we have figures which can be safely approximated, we will get the information in the hands of our general, district, and local officers, as well as publish them in these columns. Naturally we would like to have had all this information available at this time, but we are moving as rapidly as possible, in view of the work involved.

Across the Desk THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Apostle D. O. Chesworth, who was once Bishop D. O. Chesworth, apparently retains something of the spirit of his earlier calling. He has passed us a clipping from the Des Moines Register for Saturday, October 3, 1953, which reads as follows:

Corporate Giving Endorsed by Ike—St. Paul, Minn. (AP)—Corporation gifts to worth-while nonprofit organizations received the endorsement of President Eisenhower Friday. Such donations, the president wrote in a letter to Harold R. Harris, president of Northwest Orient airlines, will assist in "the propagation of our American faith." The president added that statistics show corporate giving now is only one fifth of what it might be.

The exchange of letters was made public with White House approval.

The Warning Voice of Revelation

By Russell F. Ralston

A sermon given at the Institute on Evangelism
Englewood Church, Independence, Missouri, April, 1953

Reported by Arlene Blakeman

Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore bear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die; because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.—Ezekiel 3: 17-21.

A CONSIDERABLE CHANGE has taken place in the method of preaching within the religious history of the past century. I can remember, as a small boy, experiencing the last bit of the era of the hell-fire and damnation preacher. From this extreme we have emerged into an era of almost complete invitation, and certainly it has been a pleasing change. We have within the past few decades attempted to hold up before men the glorious promises of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

However, in this new era, we have almost forgotten one of the important messages of the gospel itself. We have almost failed to sound the warning note; and the warning note within the gospel is important today, for men must be told.

I am convinced that there is a place within this gospel message for the friendly warning that comes to the nations of the world. We cannot read the gospel of Jesus Christ without detecting, even in his Sermon on the Mount, something of the warning note. Certainly in his commission to his disciples there is warning. The Lord spoke to the prophet Amos with the promise that nothing should come upon the world except it first be revealed through God's servants, the prophets.

Destruction by Sin

I want to discuss the "warning note" that we might sense not only the message of the invitation of Christ but also the need of going to our neighbors and friends, carrying to them in the spirit of the good Lord the friendly voice of warning. We read in Malachi 4: 1:

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

Here is the warning voice! Interestingly enough it is not the warning of the destructions of God; it is not the warning of a great calamity to come as a result of the wrath of God. Rather, it is the warning of destruction that shall come upon man because of sin. This is the warning voice that we must carry to the nations of the world.

Ministers in these last days have leaned heavily upon the atomic bomb warning. When we think of what can be done with an atomic bomb, or a group of them, we become frightened. I do not know how many of the reports of the hydrogen bomb experiment in the South Pacific were accurate. They were indicative at least. I remember reading in one newspaper a report that on a ship eighteen miles away from the explosion a 180 degree heat wave passed within a few moments after the explosion of the bomb. Imagine the terrific intensity of the heat at the point of explosion!

The people living in Salt Lake City have become concerned about radioactivity. One of the scientists there, after the last atomic explosion on the testing grounds near Las Vegas, Nevada, made his children stay in their house for twenty-four hours because, according to his tests, there was sufficient radiation in the air as the cloud passed over to make it dangerous for people. That atom bomb which was dropped some four hundred miles away was just a mere fraction of the type of bomb that will be used in the future.

After World War II I was serving under appointment as pastor of the First San Francisco Branch. There was considerable concern about the atomic bomb. A metropolitan newspaper published a large map that showed the San Francisco peninsula and explained how atomic bombs could be dropped so that radioactivity might kill everyone in the city without destroying a building. When the radioactivity was gone, other people might then come in and take their homes, automobiles, factories, and stores.

It was about then that the atom bomb was tested at Bikini for the first time. I picked up a newspaper one day and there in big headlines I saw, "ARMY, NAVY, REPORT NO DEFENSE AGAINST ATOM BOMB."

A columnist who wrote for that newspaper made one of the most sensible statements when he penned this thought, "The Army and the Navy have overlooked one very important thing. There is a defense against the atom bomb. All we have to do is to teach people not to use it on each other—to divert that terrific power for production, rather than destruction."

We do not know how far away the third world war may be. One great military leader predicted that another war would not last over sixty days. He said there wouldn't be anyone left at the end of that time if we loosed all the forces of destruction that we have today.

Fifty years ago when we read the warning of Malachi it seemed improbable that it could ever really apply to us. We tried to say that the statement of Malachi was simply an allegory. However, today we must face the fact that, unless the people of the world change their way of living, the time can come when there shall be a literal burning of the earth by the tremendous powers we now have in our hands.

The Protection of Christ

The only thing that can save the world from that day of destruction is a return to Christ—to a righteous way of life resulting from obedience to the laws of life itself. God never warns his people without accompanying that warning with a promise. In the second verse of this prophecy we find:

But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

On a journey through Nebraska I gained an appreciation for this particular phrasing of the prophet. On this trip I noticed beautiful Hereford cattle with very long hair. I had never seen cattle with hair that long. When we reached our destination deep in the sand hills I said, "My, you have nice cattle, but why do they have such long hair?" My host said, "These cattle run the range all winter and do not have the protection of a barn. The only protection they have from the wintry winds and blizzards is to get behind a small hill and mill around in a group. They must have long hair to keep from freezing to death."

I could close my eyes and almost see a little calf out there in the cold, and then remember the calves that we raised when we were living on the farm. My father took them into the barn and cared for them until they were strong enough to go out and stand by themselves. The terminology of the prophet is descriptive, is it not? It is good to know that by the power of Christ, his followers shall have such protection in their time of need.

Once, when speaking of Jerusalem, Christ said, "How often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" I used to be amused as a little fellow when I watched the old mother hen on a warm spring day take the little chicks out to scratch. They would wander from her and the farther they wandered the louder they cheeped. She would listen to the cheeping just so long; then she would lift her wings, cluck a bit, and all the chicks would come back where there was nothing to fear.

These parables are most descriptive. We are "cheeping" today, and—figuratively speaking—we are shaking with fear. I do not know anyone who is absolutely certain of what is going to happen tomorrow. Only Christ offers us sanctuary with nothing to fear.

We need to warn the world of the destruction that is coming, not because of the wrath of God but because of the wickedness of men. We need to point out that there is an answer. Disaster is avoidable; it doesn't have to be. The way of life that the Master offered can bring us eternal peace.

Our Day Foreseen

I think no other man has ever lived, save it be Christ, who could say so much with so few words as the Apostle Paul. I call this Scripture to your attention as an example.

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth.—II Timothy 3: 1-7.

I do not believe anyone could describe the day in which we live more vividly in such a few words. Each of these phrases is a burning description of our time. For this reason it is a perilous time. It is a time when men have become lovers of their own selves. Why the last two great destructive world wars? Why the wave of crime and iniquity that the world has faced? Why the difficulty between capital and labor?

The capitalist, if he loved his laboring employees, could not be satisfied until he gave them all their needs. The laboring man, if he loved his employer, could not be satisfied until he gave that man everything that he could offer in the way of production. Instead, we find both employer and employee trying to give as little as they can (no more than the law requires) and yet get as much as they can. Yes, men are lovers of their own selves.

"... covetous..." I do not imagine that the time payment plan in the United States would be nearly as popular as it is if it were not for the fact that when we see John Jones down the street getting a new car we also want to get one. We are covetous; but since we can't take it away from him, we burden ourselves beyond the limit of our income in order to get a car as good as his.

"... disobedient to parents..." This is always an easy thing for adults to talk about, because we are not disobedient to parents—or are we? There has been a tremendous wave of juvenile delinquency. In Salt Lake City, where I live, young people have done thousands of dollars worth of damage by breaking up the tombstones in the cemeteries; smashing windows, tearing up hymnbooks, turning the seats upside down, and pouring oil on the floor of one church. This is an age of disobedience not only to earthly parents but to our heavenly Parent. These are indications of a time of peril.

"... unthankful..." Has there ever been a time in which we have had more physical abundance than we have now and been more unthankful? We of the United States have never had a higher standard of living. We ought to be turning to God and thanking him from the depths of our souls. However, we have found that outward conditions of blessings just don't change the hearts of people. Our Pilgrim Fathers, with practically nothing for which to be thankful except that they were alive and could worship God, gave thanks. Living on a rock-bound coast, half-starved, half-frozen, with a small crop of corn that gave hope for life through another winter, they set aside a day for thanksgiving.

The Master once healed ten lepers. Nine of them ran away as fast as they could; they had business to care for immediately. Only one of them thought to turn back and thank the Master for his great gifts of life, of freedom, of being a part of society again. It seems that the nine represent most of the world today, for we live in a time when men are indeed unthankful.

“. . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God . . .” Recently, in a place where I was holding a series of services, I had to drive out of town a few miles just prior to the evening service. We were having difficulty in filling the pews of our church, but as I passed a drive-in theater I noticed there were cars lined up on both sides of the entrance of that theater for two blocks, waiting for the gates to be opened! We find that many large churches have had to discontinue their evening services because men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

Our Source of Power and Light

We are living in an age when men are ever learning and never coming to a knowledge of the truth. Never have we learned more and known less. We know everything except how to live. We know scientifically how to build, how to destroy, how to take off weight and how to put it on, how to do almost anything except live together in peace and harmony. Yes, the world needs to be warned that we live in perilous times. Christ said, “Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls” (Matthew 11: 29-30).

Matthew records the parable of the ten virgins in which Christ says: “And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom” (Matthew 25: 1). Did you ever stop to think of why the Lord may have chosen these words? A virgin is one who is pure and undefiled. The parable tells us that is not sufficient. We shall find that just being good is not enough. Here were ten good, pure individuals with their lamps—symbols of light. On one occasion Christ said, “I am the light of the world.” At another time he said, “I give unto you to be the light of the world.” The life of Christ was his lamp through which the light of truth shone forth to the world. The life of each man is his lamp.

In my youth our house was lighted at night by old kerosene lamps. I remember that every morning my mother took the chimneys and cleaned the smoke off them so that the light would shine through. However, in spite of the fact that the chimneys were clean, the lamps did not give light until someone put oil in them, turned the wicks up, and lighted them. Without oil, there was no light.

The lives of these virgins may be likened to lamps. They were pure and clean, but some did not have within them the source of light. The light of Jesus Christ was the “truth” that he brought into the world. He said, “If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.” And, “When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth.” The Spirit of God dwelling in the lives of men becomes the source of life itself, for truth is born thereof.

The Hour Is Late

How many people believe that the bridegroom spoken of is to come within their lifetime? How many think it will be four or five hundred years away? I have been tempted myself to think of Christ’s coming as being so distant that there is not much I can do about it. So it was with the ten virgins. They believed his time of coming was far in the future, so they weren’t awake.

At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go ye rather to them that sell and buy for yourselves.

The wise knew that no one could give to another the Spirit of God. The only way an individual can receive that Spirit is through the preparation of his life and obedience to the laws which make its reception possible.

We need to warn the world and to bear testimony that the time will come when it will be too late, when our opportunity to work and gather to ourselves the life-saving Spirit of God will be past. We are not to predict when that time will be, but we know that it is coming.

The verse we sometimes fail to notice is the closing one. In it was Christ’s warning to his own beloved disciples: “Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.” When we face our Savior we had better have lives purified in righteousness, filled with his Holy Spirit. We need to warn each other of this fact. Modern-day revelation bears this out.

And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10 b, c, d.

All that will permit us to stand before God will be lives empowered—not just occasionally, but daily and hourly—by the presence of the Spirit of God. We must live lives that have been purified, strengthened, challenged, and spent under that power.

Why should we try to rationalize salvation? Why should we say, “Oh, well, we’ll get by with that which is less”? We should be warned, and we should be imbued with the power of the warning voice of revelation to go forth to the nations of the world, not only inviting them to Christ, but warning them of the destruction that comes to those who know him not.

God revealed himself to his servant, Israel A. Smith, in 1950 in a message to the church. The latter portion of this message says: “It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed” (Doctrine and Covenants 142: 5b).

Have you ever stopped to ask why the opportunity for many to assist will have passed? There is one thing which is essential if we work at night, and that is light. The world is entering into an age of darkness. Some say it is already here. It is surely an age of darkness as far as social relationships are concerned. The time will come when the darkness of our day will lead to the destruction of man, save it be that some body of people with the light of truth shall be able to lead the way to safety. We must work while it is yet day. We must prepare so that, when the night comes in full force, there will be a light within our lives to guide the way.

Yes, we need to witness for Christ. We need to invite men to him, to warn them so they might not be deceived by the pleasing voice of sin but realize that which is coming. May God bless each one of us that we may go forth to work for him, to serve him, and to live so that the power of his Spirit may reside in us and our lives shall be a light unto the world.

Guilty?

To think requires exertion, and few people will pay the price which is necessary to secure a well-disciplined mind capable of following through to the basic truths of any proposition. Many a man who believes himself well educated cannot sustain a single thought in an orderly manner, or express himself without showing the ragged provisions of his mental equipment. Such education comes off the assembly line in quantity and is not conditioned by the hard work of understanding and comprehension.

Record Financial Law Compliance

By W. N. Johnson

DURING 1952 the church reached record heights in terms of compliance with the financial law.

The percentage of membership in the United States, Canada, and Hawaii contributing tithes and general offerings was 29.01; the percentage filing up-to-date tithing statements was 13.4, and the per capita contributions to the general fund amounted to $12.18. The previous high achievements were established in 1951 with 27.3 per cent of membership contributing, 13.04 per cent of membership filing tithing statements, and $10.82 contributed per member to the general fund. Figures five years ago (1948) are as follows: percentage contributing, 24.77; percentage filing, 8.7; per capita contributions, $8.92.

Statistics covering all stakes and districts have been mailed to bishops and bishop's agents, stake and district presidents, and Conference appointees. In addition solicitors have been informed of the achievement of the respective districts or stakes in which they serve. Pastors have also been informed of the ranking of their respective districts by means of a letter from the office of the First Presidency. The information concerning the achievement of any stake or district is available, therefore, from the above-named officers.

CENTER STAKE again holds first place in the combined ranking, which is based on the rank achieved in percentage of membership contributing to the general fund, percentage of membership filing up-to-date tithing statements, and the amount contributed per member. Center Stake holds first place in percentage contributing for the third consecutive year with a new high of 49.8 per cent of membership. This stake also holds first place in the amount contributed per member during the year, with an average of $21.89. (This includes only tithes, general offerings, and Christmas offerings, which go into the general working fund of the church.) For the second consecutive year, Far West Stake leads the church with over 30 per cent of membership filing up-to-date tithing statements.

Comparison with figures of recent years shows a steady upward trend which is most encouraging and is additional tangible evidence that the church is moving forward. The church is being strengthened in a material way for the accomplishment of her great task. These figures also reflect spiritual growth and increasing devotion on the part of church members who are exercising a stewardship of material possessions to the end that the gospel shall be carried into all the world. It is heartening to see the progress being made in compliance with the financial law and to realize that the program which brought the church out of debt and stabilized its finances is still serving effectively to bring both spiritual and material blessings to the church and its members.

AT THE SAME TIME these figures call attention to a vast unused potential within the church. Of every hundred members baptized in the past, eighty-seven remain to be won to the basic stewardship practice of making the accounting. In a record year of financial participation, seventy-one members out of every hundred enrolled have been either unable or unwilling to contribute anything to the general fund for carrying on the work of the church in all the world. Out of our abundance we have given an average of $12.18 each to the general fund, and few of us will agree for one moment that this represents one tenth of our increase. A great deal has been accomplished in recent years by a comparatively small working force within the church, but the building of the kingdom and the taking of the gospel into all the world is a task of such magnitude that it cannot be accomplished by the few who are now making the accounting and paying their tithes.

A very realistic goal is 40 per cent of membership contributing to the general fund each year, and 25 per cent of membership filing up-to-date tithing statements. This would result in a general fund income more nearly in proportion to both the rich material blessings which God bestows on us and the financial needs of the church today. This goal is within our reach, for in 1952 four stakes and districts exceeded 40 per cent of membership contributing to the general fund. Two stakes exceeded 25 per cent of membership filing tithing statements. Four stakes and districts exceeded the General Church average per capita contributions by more than 50 per cent. It is apparent, however, that many years must elapse before we achieve these reasonable goals unless the present rate of progress is greatly increased.

IN YOUR DISTRICT or stake, in your branch, perhaps even in your own household are those who have not yet been won to the stewardship way of life in which talents, time, and possessions are dedicated to the greatest cause on earth. The spread of the gospel is delayed and church expansion slowed down without this help, and the great majority of church members are suffering spiritual loss because the promised blessings of God are not available to them due to their failure to comply with the laws of the kingdom.

The invitation to assist in a material way is extended to all. This invitation comes with special urgency to priesthood members; for unless those in authority lead the way, the membership is not challenged and encouraged to develop stewardship ways of living. Parents should see to it that children in their homes are acquiring the good habit

Our Approach to Spiritual Healing

By Evan Shute, M.D.

I ACCEPT the fact of spiritual healing, as have all the Saints for one hundred and twenty years past. This is not just an act of faith on my part. I have seen remarkable events classifiable under this head that I am at a loss to explain in any other way. But there are certain aspects of our belief in such healing that have been productive of differences of opinion in the past and still may be. Perhaps, too, there are even some on which I could throw a little professional light.

There are certain mighty interventions of divine power which neither the skeptic nor believer can deny. But how about those borderline cases where no candid observer can testify with a surety that God has directly interposed his power to avert death or accident, or to alter the course of a malady?

Medical men know how many illnesses resolve by crisis, or by sudden spurts of the body's defenses. Lobar pneumonia has long been a classical example of this, of course. When no one can be sure, if he is honest, that recovery occurred except as it might have happened had Hitler been the victim and not our good selves, or that the prayers of the brethren and the anointing of the elders availed in any way on our behalf, what shall we say? Dare we testify, as I have heard it testified, that God's hand came between us and our assailant, or should we merely thank Him that we were spared, and leave the allocation of credit to the only One who knows where it really belongs? I favor the latter view—and recommend it to my brethren.

WE ARE MEANT to be neither glib or credulous, nor yet unduly incredulous. Let us thank God that relief came without scrutinizing the mode too carefully, particularly in those instances where no amount of reflection can settle the matter. Anything less than such strict honesty does God small honor and our own intelligence little credit. Moreover, to sit, as I have sat, and listen to silly narratives of God's possible but improbable mercies can do much to undermine the faith of scientific persons present. They may well come to believe that all narratives of healing are equally implausible. Not only can unwise accounts of "God's healing" do little good, but they can do great harm. They can unsettle the faith of discriminating Saints.

I have repeatedly urged, and here do so again, that such stories of God's intervention should be sufficiently valid to stand as evidence in court. If not sound enough for that, let them be kept in reserve or merely mentioned on the general note of gratitude suggested above.

When shall we ask God's help? This is not as pressing a problem as it was when my father began to practice medicine in a community of our people. I suppose he was the first physician in the church in Canada. At least he had a good deal of new ground to break.

In those days to call for the doctor before you called for the elders was almost treasonable to God—and more expensive, of course. If the Lord failed to cure your typhoid or your carbuncle in a hurry, it was then discreet to ask the doctor for help, before you lost too much time from work, and on the odd chance that perhaps God was not answering calls on your line just then. This attitude extended over to germs in general. It was agnostic to think that you should avoid using a common Communion cup with tuberculous Sister Jones or pyorrheic Brother Wilson. God would sterilize the wine before it reached your lips or could cough into it in your turn. When my father, in desperation, bought an individual Communion service and presented it to his branch, it was strenuously debated if it should or should not be used. And all that was when I was in high school, remember!

NOWADAYS we are apt to try penicillin before the elders, perhaps assuming that God put the mold there originally and later planted it on Alexander Fleming's agar plate that portentous day in Oxford. For some odd reason we always thought the doctor should set a fracture before we asked God to help heal it. I never knew of anyone to ask God to set the fracture originally. We accept ether or cyclopropane for labor pains nowadays—but then, we always did. I never knew us to ask God to substitute for chloroform in those older days. You see, we were wonderfully inconsistent in those not too distant times. Are we still?

God has always been there to do for us what we could not do for ourselves. He still is. But our resources are greater now and perhaps we need to bother him less about some of our bodily needs—and much more about our spiritual "sleeping sickness" and unbelief. When we cut ourselves we always tried to stanch the flow of blood by the first practical means available—we never sat there helplessly and prayed, "God, close this artery." I'm sure he would never intervene to save so foolish and nonsensical a believer, however great the latter's trust. But that same man who could and did stop his hemorrhage himself but had no antitetanus serum available would be wise and right to ask his Lord to preserve him from tetanus infection. Why not? Only God could do that for him, as his situation then was.

I never felt that God would pardon my nonchalance in ignoring his laws about infection when I was supposed to drink the sacramental wine immediately after my neighbor who had a severe cold. I used to sit there wondering if I should sip or not, should turn the cup or barely

YOU Can Help an Alcoholic

Your own emotional well-being can speed the recovery of one dear to you. Here is your role when happiness hangs in the balance.

By Keith De Folo

THE DOOR SLAMS. A man staggers into the house, reels toward the living room, slumps on the sofa. His wife angrily throws down the book she is reading and shouts: "Drunk again! Bill, I can't stand this any longer!"

Bill grunts and shakes his head. He is lost in an alcoholic fog. He falls back in his drunken stupor, oblivious to everything.

Lois springs to her feet and hurtles across the room. Tears pouring down her cheeks, she pounds on her husband's chest. "Bill! Bill! What are you doing to me? How can you be so selfish?"

Her voice trails off in a sob that is a prayer. "Oh, God! How is it going to end?"

This was the nightly scene in the home of Lois and Bill before Bill became one of the founders of Alcoholics Anonymous. (Only members know his last name.)

For them, the problem has been solved.

But other families across the United States—nearly four million others—are systematically being robbed of happiness by the alcoholism of one or more of their members. Lois has something to say to them that can and does transform their lives.

The technique is neither difficult nor mysterious. Bill was the alcoholic; but he could never have made a comeback without the help of Lois, the nonalcoholic. What she learned about the wife's part in a husband's drinking startled her into setting up the "Ladies Aid" of A.A. It's called simply the "Family Group," and it quietly preaches that nagging, accusations, and the tears of martyrdom are no way to effect the recovery of an alcoholic relative.

THE APPROACH that Lois learned the hard way, and which the Family Group is spreading, you can apply for—and to—yourself, if there is an alcoholic in your household. During the past two years this revolutionary technique has brought a new and sober way of life to families all over America.

It's revolutionary because it turns the spotlight on the "innocent" partner—you. "Has your mate's alcoholism made you difficult to live with?" they ask. "If so, better clear up your own problem. Your recovery will hasten the recovery of your husband or wife.

No one knows better than Lois how an alcoholic husband can drive his wife to the very edge of despair. She learned it firsthand, heard the dismal accounts time after time as she toured the country's A.A. chapters with Bill. While he met with alcoholics, she listened to their husbands and wives. Talking out their troubles with one who had been through the mill helped. In 1951, Lois tied these wives and husbands together into an organization—the Family Group. It was a way to help folks avoid some of the mistakes she and others had made.

BEFORE BILL'S amazing recovery in 1935, Lois supported and ruled the house. Bill was like a child—almost totally dependent upon her. In her multiple role of mother, nurse, and wife, Lois became domineering. For seventeen years Bill drank steadily, and for seventeen years she pushed him into every "cure" she could think of—medicine, books, psychiatry, sanitariums. Bill always found another bottle.

It was a nightmare. She screamed at him. She threw things—pots, lamps, book ends, anything her hysterical hands touched. From a poised, helpful wife, Lois turned into a neurotic, self-pitying creature.

Bill, of course, lost every job. In his late thirties, he was a human derelict, a hopeless drunkard. Lois worked in a New York department store; doctor and hospital bills had to be paid, and often Bill had to be bailed out of jail. Lois often wondered how it all would end.

Then one day it did end—sharply and suddenly. An old school pal of Bill's visited him. Once he, too, had been a hopeless drunkard. Now he stood before Bill glowing and fresh-skinned, freed from the tight grip of alcohol. How had it happened?

"Religion," answered the friend. "God pulled me out of the gutter. I've come to tell you about it."

This was the deepest experience in Bill's life. He was powerless over alcohol, but there was a Higher Power waiting to be tapped.

His newly found faith in God and himself yanked Bill away from the bottle and kept him away. It was the beginning of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Through salvaging other alcoholics as he had been salvaged, Bill found peace and happiness. But Lois was not completely happy. Too long she had dominated Bill. Suddenly, her job was over. She recalls: "I was resentful. My life's job of sobering up Bill with all its responsibilities had been taken from me. I had not discovered anything to fill the void."

Bill found great benefit in attending religious meetings on Sunday nights. To please him, Lois went along. Bill's meetings had nothing to give her, she told herself.

One Sunday Bill said, "Hurry up, Dear! We mustn't be late." Angrily, Lois picked up a shoe and hurled it at her husband. "I don't care about your old meeting!" she cried.

And before the shoe hit the floor, it dawned upon Lois that she was actually jealous of Bill's meetings! She resented the new interest in his life which took up so much of his time. While Bill was trying to get back to normal, Lois was standing still. At that moment, she made a momentous decision: "I climbed on the A. A. bandwagon and began living by the same spiritual steps as Bill."

As Lois applied A. A.'s "twelve steps" to her own life, she wondered about the wives and husbands of other alcoholics. Were they making the same mistakes she had made? Were other wives hindering their husbands' recovery by nagging, themselves twisted by resentment, fear, and self-pity?

OUT of Lois' questioning sprang the "clearing house" for the Family Groups. Two-and-a-half years ago, Lois and six other wives of alcoholics took over the loft of an old stable in lower Manhattan. From here (and their mail address, Box 1475, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.) a mountain of sound advice in letter and booklet form has gone to fearful and frustrated relatives all over the world.

Typical of the letters that pour in weekly is this one from a distraught mother: "Please tell me what I can do to help my boy stop drinking. He is only twenty-eight and has left his wife. He is our only child. Every night I pray for our son."

This mother was immediately put in touch with the nearest Family Group. From the Group, she secured literature which explained alcoholism to her son and herself. Soon, her boy may go to an A. A. meeting which could steer him to a new way of life. The answer to her prayer is on the way.

The "clearing house" helps to organize a new Family Group wherever there is a need. Often Lois "introduces" by mail several nonalcoholics who live in the same town. Out of this arises a Family Group that meets in a school or home or a church basement.

Today, there are nearly 500 Family Groups in the U. S., Canada, and overseas. Many a member has changed from a nonalcoholic but nagging wife or neurotic husband into a normal human being. The result: many alcoholics have stopped drinking months and years sooner.

JOAN, a pretty young housewife, has found serenity in the year she has attended the Group in her town. Her husband, Tom, an airplane mechanic, drank steadily for ten and a half years. About a year ago Tom agreed to accompany a friend to an A. A. meeting. Tom liked the men and women he met there and has kept going. But occasionally he slips off the A. A. program and goes on an all-night spree. Does Joan get frantic with worry?

"Not for a moment," she says. "I've learned to accept whatever happens. I'm so grateful that his drinking is no longer a nightly affair."

Through the Family Group discussions Joan has learned to control her "fear wheels." If Tom doesn't come home at 5:30 from the factory, Joan no longer imagines the worst. Instead, she prays: "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change; the courage to change the things I can; the wisdom to know the difference."

If Tom comes home with a "glow," Joan greets him with a smile and a warm dinner. The old method was tears and a fierce upbraiding. Her new attitude of acceptance shames Tom and takes the "kick" out of his bender. Tom redoubles his efforts to stay sober.

JIM is an advertising executive in New England who often tells an exciting story at his local Group meeting. Once, he was positive his wife was going insane. Nightly, he watched Sarah drink herself into a blind stupor. He tried to reason with her, and she laughed at him. He pleaded with her to see a doctor. "Me, sick?" she cried indignantly. From the Family Group, Jim learned not to antagonize her; building up resentment in the alcoholic against the nonalcoholic prolongs the drinking.

One day, Sarah, in an impulse of despair, phoned A. A., and a woman member came to her house that evening. Sarah learned that she herself was an alcoholic—and a very sick one. For today, most medical authorities say that alcoholism, like diabetes, progresses unless it is

THE TWELVE STEPS OF A. A.

1. We admitted we were powerless over alcohol—that our lives had become unmanageable.

2. Came to believe that a Power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity.

3. Made a decision to turn our will and our lives over to the care of God as we understood Him.

4. Made a searching and fearless moral inventory of ourselves.

5. Admitted to God, to ourselves, and to another human being the exact nature of our wrongs.

6. Were entirely ready to have God remove all these defects of character.

7. Humbly asked Him to remove our shortcomings.

8. Made a list of all persons we had harmed, and became willing to make amends to them all.

9. Made direct amends to such people wherever possible, except when to do so would injure them or others.

10. Continued to take personal inventory and when we were wrong promptly admitted it.

11. Sought through prayer and meditation to improve our conscious contact with God as we understood Him praying only for knowledge of His will for us and the power to carry that out.

12. Having had a spiritual awakening as the result of these steps, we tried to carry this message to others, and to practice these principles in all our affairs.

checked. Unlike diabetes, there is no "insulin" for alcoholism. The only prevention and cure is total abstinence from all liquor.

With the help of A. A., Sarah began her comeback.

Later, Jim and Sarah went to a party. As a trayful of cocktails was passed, Jim whispered: "Careful, Dear! Better not take one!" Sarah didn't, but she glared at him. At home, she rebuked Jim for his lack of faith in her. The Family Group gave him the same rapping of knuckles: distrust of the alcoholic who is trying to recover will often drive him or her backward. Today Jim gives Sarah his confidence—and she's responding.

MARIA'S HUSBAND used to drink every evening. Before she got into her local Family Group, she constantly lashed at Hugh with her sharp tongue. Over the years, her resentment against his drinking mounted. She accused him of drinking deliberately to wreck their marriage because he was in love with another woman.

Her false accusations and lack of understanding of the craving that drove him to drink almost toppled the marriage she so much wanted to preserve. Eventually, Hugh never came home unless he was drunk enough to be insulated against her outbursts of temper.

Since attending the Group meetings, Maria no longer scolds Hugh—and he comes home earlier and is more often sober. He remarks about the happy change in her. Maria tries to show him patience and forgiveness. She now knows that he is desperately "sick"—that only her love for Hugh and their faith in God will lead him to sobriety. Soon her tender guidance may bring Hugh to recovery.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS of drinking has left a deep scar on the home of the Browns, who live in a fashionable suburb of Philadelphia. While in his twenties, Mr. Brown was made sales manager of the Chicago branch of his firm. There was only one thing wrong with the promotion: an unlimited expense account. The loud wailings of his wife did not halt the round of long lavish parties he began giving. Soon he was drinking before breakfast.

His wife nagged, pleaded, fought, left him and returned. But he could not stop drinking. He lost the Chicago job. The next twenty years were a series of binges, short-term employment, illnesses. His wife supported the family by teaching school. When her health broke, his family rescued them.

During those dark years, Mrs. Brown tried to "hide" her husband from their two children. But the little boy and girl knew that tragedy ruled the house. As the boy reached adolescence, he looked for a father and was rebuffed by a drunken sot. The boy retreated within himself, grew insecure, leaned on his mother. The daughter adopted the domineering "mother" role. She repeatedly lectured her drunken father until he stormed out of the house and headed for the nearest bar. (Continued on page 17.)

The Five Wise and the Five Foolish

By Lenora Nixon

I

Rebecca believed the church should be her first love and it was indeed. She never declined to work in any capacity. She helped on many committees. If her head ached, she felt better sitting in church than she did at home. She would never make other plans on meeting nights. She served in positions in community functions, but she always seemed to have time for the church. She spoke well of other churches, and she lived well in her own.

II

Lydia was dependable. The pastor and superintendent of church school didn't hesitate to call on her when they wanted anything done. She took care of her own work and some of the work of her sisters. She seemed to have an abundance of talents, though it was really because she would try to do anything. She was concerned about her neighbors, and wanted them to enjoy the blessings she enjoyed. She was good to the needy. She often felt the nearness of God and the sweetness of his Spirit guided her life. She was stable.

III

Mary was young in years and in the church. As she heard the older members tell of their experiences, she yearned to be of service so that some day these same experiences might be hers. She attended all services and worked in the women's group. Her sincerity in testimony encouraged others to work harder. She appreciated the efforts of the other members and told them so. She was eager to learn and longed for more talents that she might be of greater service.

IV

Naomi had been in the church many years. Her labors had been different than others, because she helped in the early days of establishing the branch. She had worked at many projects. Her talents were varied, and she used all of them. She was growing old, but her presence at the services was like the voice of the Lord to her sisters. She had entertained many missionaries, and her home was always open to the church. As one looked at her, he could almost hear the Master's, "Well done."

V

Anna loved the work of the Lord. She had come into the church in her middle age and always felt she wasn't doing enough for her Master. She was quiet, slow of thought, and slow of speech. She didn't have a singing voice. In the meetings of the church, she always sat still and listened intently. When the women met and it was decided to arrange a gift for the needy, though others forgot, Anna always brought her contribution. She visited the sick. Her hard-earned offerings found their way into the church baskets. When others spoke of Anna, they always called her a good woman.

I

Esther wanted very much to please those around her. She wore a perpetual frown of anxiety, she was so afraid she wouldn't satisfy. She was helpless against the suggestions of others. She couldn't refuse when they invited her to take trips on Sunday, even though it meant missing church services. She considered it rude to leave the friends in her home who came to visit on church night. They were already established in their own churches. They wouldn't be interested in hers.

II

Rachel believed her home came first. Her sole ambition and desire was to please her family. After all, charity began at home! If she and her husband and children stayed out too late on Saturday evening, they all needed their rest on Sunday morning. Rachel liked to have her talented family popular in community affairs, hence they couldn't take on church obligations, for sometimes both fell on the same night.

III

Sally was good-natured and attended church regularly. She was friendly, got along well with people, and always tried to make them feel welcome when they came to church. But Sally never wanted to serve on committees, especially as chairman, for she didn't want people to think she was trying to tell them what to do. She found it was too inconvenient for her to visit or work on projects.

IV

Elizabeth was a career woman. She worked fast and hard during the day and took care of her home in the evening. Of course she didn't feel well most of the time, because she was always so busy. She couldn't accept any church responsibilities, though everyone was fond of her and would have liked to work with her. She was too tired at night to attend church, except for especial services. Reading and studying were out of the question, for she always fell asleep from weariness.

Ruth was slow but thorough in everything she did. Her talent as a cook was well known, but she couldn't stand too much exertion. Her grandchildren were many and visited her often. Of course she couldn't attend church with these obligations, nor could she bear to sit in a hot church—and there wasn't any use going if she couldn't keep her mind on the services because of the heat. She couldn't get around to many of the tasks she was needed for at church, although she had a pleasing personality and could have been very influential.

The pastor, at the close of a service, arose to give a few words of counsel. He commended his sheep for the good work done. He spoke of the visiting program and the contributions of the Saints. But now he wanted to give thanks for the work done by the women of the branch. He spoke of the great part they had in kingdom-building and honestly acknowledged that much of the work done had been by the women. Now he wanted to show his appreciation by sponsoring a dinner to be held at the church; this was to be planned and executed by the men. He earnestly invited the sisters to attend, saying he knew they would receive much pleasure at this function. He set the time two weeks in the future so all would have ample time to prepare to attend.

But alas, after much preparation and the untiring efforts of many of the brothers to make it a never-to-be-forgotten evening, only five sisters attended this dinner of love and appreciation.

taste it. Then I would pray quickly that God would take the act of obedience in lieu of good sense and bacteriological knowledge. But as soon as we had individual cups nothing could have ever induced me to use anything else again. Why should I? Why had God given me information and sense? Only to ignore them?

I FEEL that we should continue to ask for the ministry of the elders even in this day of streptomycin and good surgery. Much that men still cannot do or may not think of doing God can and will perform. We can earnestly ask him before our operations to guide the surgeon's hand and mind—and I make a point to pray for that before I operate. I am sure, on at least one occasion when I could not be sure what to do about a suspicious but indefinite appendicitis, that I was moved for the patient's good, and thus perhaps saved her life.

But let us use God with courtesy, good will, and good sense, as I hope we would have tried to use him had we been so fortunate as to sit with him at meat or follow him down the roads of rugged Galilee. I am not attempting to sneer at or deride faith. I value the innocence and sincerity of the simple folk of our church. But 1953 is not 1432, nor yet the year 32, and we now have fewer reasons to press about him. In 32 he sometimes tried desperately to elude our clutching hands in order to get on with his principal business of preaching and teaching. Physical healings were always secondary in his eyes. Let us keep them in their proper place, too.

WHAT ABOUT GOD'S denying us healing? This is what really tries men's faith. We see the innocent suffer, or the less innocent relieved, and we are mystified and disconcerted by this, if it truly represents his will. I take it that he has his own reasons for granting or withholding help, and that these reasons will ever remain inscrutable to us.

Largely, we are at the mercy of the world's laws. If those laws grant us the odor of an iris or sweet almond, they also wrap us about a telephone pole if our car hits it too hard. If we can enjoy sunsets, we are apt to get typhoid from contaminated water or bone tuberculosis from infected milk. We need exercise no care were God always there ready to turn the tiger's spring aside or soften a fall from Mount Robson. But he does not—or rarely does.

Ordinarily, we live as long and as carefully as we can, beset by the perils of our flesh. Occasionally the world traps us with cancer or apoplexy. Much of this is probably due to our transgression of laws as yet beyond our recognition—but Nature's laws just the same and meant to be heeded or the penalty paid. The good man and the wicked feel the jaws of such a trap closing and may cry to God for the help he alone can give. He may no longer need us here—or he may save a Paul from the viper only to let Nero crucify him. Jesus must have passed many a sick man by who did not call on him for relief. His country was simply crammed with lepers and sick people of all descriptions, but we have records of only a few whom he healed.

Evidently both pain and the shortening of our lives are relatively insignificant moments in the whole tenure and progress of our being from our first creation as spirits to our final place in the glories. Meantime earthquakes whelm the good and wicked, the child and the ripe villain. A burning hotel traps the doctor or Chopin dies of tuberculosis. God may intervene or he may not—but his thought remains inscrutable and "his ways not our ways." "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." He sees defeat and victory and pain and misfortune with other eyes than ours and a larger view, being eternal and interested mainly in ultimates.—Reprinted by permission from the R. L. D. S. University Bulletin 1952-53.

Signifying Nothing?

By Barbara McFarlane Higdon

AS WE DEVELOP spiritually are we commended; as we participate in the vices of the world are we condemned. This was the gist of a revelation given at a reunion this summer. It stimulated for me a new concept of the "in the world but not of the world" idea.

We live in a generation of insecurity and emptiness. The literature of our day expresses a universal attitude of futility, purposelessness, unhappiness. For many people the world ends "not with a bang but a whimper." There is an almost universal recognition of the feeling of insensitivity which results when people lose touch with God. Life "is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." Many forces account for this lack of foundation. Old traditions and beliefs have crumbled under the scrutiny of Darwin, Marx, and Freud, and there is nothing to replace them. Within our lifetimes two great wars have devastated the world, and we face the possibility of a third too horrible to contemplate.

What is the reaction to all this insecurity? In addition to the neuroses, psychoses, and complexes which abound, people of the modern world have created busyness. Everyone is busy; every minute of the day and half the night is filled with activity. The philosophy seems to be that if we keep busy enough we won't have time to get acquainted with ourselves. We won't have time to realize our insecurity. And as the pressure increases our physiological mechanism begins to show that the pace is too fast. We develop ulcers, insomnia, untimely apoplexy and heart conditions. While many people take the easier way of escape with liquor and dope, many more, finding that they do not have the energy to cope with increasing demands upon them seek stimulation from artificial sources. They consume a tremendous number of cigarettes, cups of coffee, and bottles of coke.

SEVERAL MONTHS ago I was a member of a university group which drove to a city some distance from Columbia. The nature of the trip necessitated our leaving Columbia at 5:30 a.m., and the early morning conversation turned to accounts of late bridge parties the night before. I was amazed, assuming that everyone would have gone to bed a little earlier as I had done. Yet my companions were bright and clever and vigorous. I thought perhaps I just couldn't take it, until I realized that we had stopped for coffee before we were out of Columbia, that our car was provided with a thermos of hot coffee, and that we made two other coffee stops during the three-hour drive. There were only two non-smokers in the group, and the rest smoked constantly as we traveled. My companions were getting energy from these sources to compensate for their lack of sleep the night before.

I wonder if Latter Day Saints are not faced with a dilemma. Our beliefs have shielded us somewhat from the shock which the loss of tradition has dealt the world. Yet are we not participating in this busyness which the world has substituted for belief? I know many men—church appointees and lay ministers alike—who are suffocated by the burden of church work which they carry. I know many church women who are going in all directions at once rapidly doing church work. Do we feel that we must compete with the rest of the world in quantity of activity? And is it possible that the pressure of this load will produce in us the same malady from which the world is escaping? In addition to the physical effects, can we lose the spiritual underpinnings we must have to maintain our integrity? We must not allow ourselves or our message to become superficial and hollow.

IT IS THE TIME of contemplation which brings the great insights. Yet often we are afraid of silences, even in our church services. I sometimes feel we are so busy talking that the Lord can't get a word in edgewise. God has spoken many times to those who draw apart. Individuals who sought a personal revelation of him have gone to the wilderness. Often I have heard people say, "I haven't read a whole book for a year." And when they do read, it is the escape of a fatigued mind rather than the stimulation of an alert mind. I read a novel recently which contained a great idea. I would like to find a little time here and there to contemplate that idea for myself. But I, too, am too busy.

We should be concerned that we do not lose the art of contemplation, which includes cultivating something to contemplate. We should be careful to maintain the physical vigor which gives us a zest for living. And we should cherish the sensitivity to beauty and to human feeling which attunes us to God.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote a verse which says it very well:

All the world's on fire
And every bush's aflame with God.
Those who see take off their shoes.
The rest stand round and pick black-berries.

It takes courage to be among these few. It takes wisdom to separate the activities which are worth while from the busywork. God grant his children that wisdom and courage.

Graceland

■ Graceland Home-coming opened with a presentation of the comedy, The Imaginary Invalid, in Zimmermann Hall on Friday evening, October 16. This delightful satire tells the story of Argan, whose doctors are his big concern, and whose pills, his life. The cast included Jo Parkes and Barry Fuller, both from Australia; Jo Fisher, Miami, Florida; Jay Allen, Lamoni, Iowa; Ted Boyd, Muskogee, Oklahoma; Marilyn Crooker, Topeka, Kansas; Frank Hester, Flushing, Michigan; Robert Holloway, North Platte, Nebraska; Claire Patton, Livonia, Michigan; and Dave Specht and Gene Adkins from Independence, Missouri. The play was a hilarious success.

■ The Graceland Yellow Jackets remained undefeated in conference games as they defeated Wentworth Military Academy 46-0 at the Graceland Home-coming game on October 17. The day was beautiful, and the stands were packed with Alums. Color was added to the day by a pregame parade, featuring floats of numerous themes. The Graceland band was in its usual fine form and performed very well at the half-time ceremony in which the Home-coming queen was crowned.

A hepped-up Jacket squad opened the game with a famous kickoff return and ran the ball back for a touchdown. This set fire to the team and at no time the rest of the afternoon was the team in danger. The players continued rolling to a 46-0 victory.

The Yellow Jackets lead the conference and so far are undefeated and unscored upon at their field.

■ Saturday evening, October 17, marked the presentation of the "Graceland Follies," a variety hour packed full of songs, skits, and fun for students and homecomers. Almer Sheehy, president of the alumni association, was master of ceremonies. The program included acts by students and faculty members; Dr. Cheville led the group singing. One of the high lights of the evening was the honoring of the fiftieth anniversary class, the class of 1903. President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., presented a gift to the honored class from the college.

■ This year at Graceland there are 95 ordained men in the student body; 25 priests, 7 teachers, and 63 deacons. These priesthood men are from 20 states, Canada, and a mission abroad. The priesthood ministry on the campus is mainly in the pastoral groups; this is considered on-the-job-training.

■ Rehearsals for the Graceland presentation of Handel's Messiah began Sunday, October 4, with Miss Betty Mosier directing the chorus of 150 voices. This year for the first time in a number of years all the faculty members of the music staff will take part in the performance. Mr. Neal is preparing the orchestra; Mr. Benson is in charge of publicity and soloists; and Mr. Anderson will sing the tenor solos. Other soloists will be Mrs. Josephine Mader of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Donna Weddle of Independence, Missouri. The oratorio is scheduled to be given Sunday evening, December 13.

■ Gary Sampson, Dearborn, Michigan, was appointed solicitor for receiving students' tithes and offerings for the General Church. He is working with James Burdick, bishop of the campus congregation, and conveys funds to Bishop Earl T. Higdon of the Lamoni Stake.

Question Time

Question:

Is some special man or leader yet to arise to lead the Antichrist into this war?
Idaho E. F.

Answer:

The answer to this is quite self-evident in the opening statement of Ezekiel 38 and 39. In the latter the Lord says: "Therefore, thou son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal."

It should be observed that the Gog and Magog mentioned in Ezekiel are not the same as the two of like name mentioned in Revelation 20; and while one makes an appearance before the coming of Christ and is a leader of Magog, his nation, with many other confederates, the Gog and Magog mentioned in the Revelation are two nations, not leaders, as set forth in Revelation 20: 7, 8: "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea."

D. T. WILLIAMS

Question:

Please explain III Nephi 12:9-11: "and the things which they did utter were forbidden that there should not any man write them," and "many of them saw and heard unspeakable things, which are not lawful to be written." What things are not lawful to be written, and who forbade them?
Ohio R. E. M.

Answer:

The occasion was the blessing of the children by Jesus, at which time the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them "and they did speak unto their fathers great and marvelous things, even greater than he had revealed unto the people, and loosed their tongues that they could utter." The following morning these children were still under this Spirit of revelation and they spoke marvelous things which were forbidden to be written.

Evidently the message was for the occasion, and for the particular persons addressed, all of whom had come under the spiritual endowment brought by Christ's ministration. The message would not be suited to other people under other circumstances, who would be without that spiritual endowment. It is probable that it was the utterance of the Spirit itself which forbade these things being written, or it might have been the Lord who forbade it.

Men under sin and darkness are unworthy of many things the Lord has to give, and they would be incapable of receiving and utilizing them; should precious truth be given them under such circumstances it would only be to their condemnation. The Brother of Jared was given a great revelation but was commanded not to give it to the world but to hide it up, and the Lord would bring it to light when the people were prepared to receive it (Ether 1). Doctrine and Covenants 104 speaks of the Book of Enoch which is reserved unknown but which is "to be testified of in due time." There are others including the sealed part of the Book of Mormon.

That which makes such things unlawful to be published is the command of God. The Lord gives to man what and when he wills, according to his wisdom.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is there anything in the Scriptures, or in the Rules and Resolutions of the church, which prohibit such men as the district president, nonresident pastor, or any of the standing ministry from receiving any compensation for expenses or services rendered, such as marriages, funerals, or other ministerial service?
Illinois W. W. C.

Answer:

No, there is nothing in the law or rules which prohibits any minister from receiving offerings as he labors. In fact, it is anticipated that traveling appointees receive sufficient to care for their personal needs. The idea that the "laborer is worthy of his hire" seems to be a practical one. It is hoped, however, that the desire for such financial support does not in any way circumscribe or measure the ministry which a minister offers. Ministry must be given free of charge, but appreciation may be expressed in a financial way by those ministered to.

Question:

What is the difference between the duties of a high priest and a priest of the Aaronic order?
Michigan J. J. R.

Answer:

The office of high priest, being of the Melchisedec order, "administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God" (D. and C. 83: 3). Section 104: 5 says further "High priests . . . have a right to officiate in their own standing . . . in administering spiritual things, and also in the office of an elder, priest, . . . teacher, deacon, and member." The high priest therefore is primarily a presiding officer with power to function in any of the ordinances or sacraments of the church.

The priest of the Aaronic order belongs to the "lesser priesthood" and, according to Section 104: 10, is "to hold the keys of the administering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Section 17: 10 goes on to say: "The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties." The ministry of the Aaronic priests becomes primarily that of the work of the local congregation in its "outward ordinances," assisting the elders and high priests as they may.

Two years ago, Mr. Brown found A. A. While his family is grateful for his new sobriety, it is grateful also for the opportunity of emotional recovery in their own lives. Both mother and daughter attend Family Group meetings in Philadelphia and are trying to overcome their old attitudes. The son, however, may be irreparably damaged; he remains hostile toward his father who disappointed him so many times.

MILDRED, the wife of an insurance salesman, was another drinker who made her whole family neurotic. Pete, her husband, didn't know how to help. He reacted to her drinking with violent denunciations or stony silence. Both tactics infuriated Mildred and she began to drink more heavily.

When Pete heard about A. A., he made another mistake. He tried to push his wife into it. Naturally, she rebelled. He didn't understand that A. A. can work only if the alcoholic wants to stop drinking. Pete's children imitated their father's bad temper.

One evening, Mildred wandered skeptically into an A. A. meeting. What she heard other alcoholics say gave her a strong, lasting jolt. Today Mildred is a shining testimony to A. A.

But her family's problems are not yet over. After fifteen years of steady drinking, Mildred's body feels the lack of alcohol. Often, she is tense and nervous. When she is depressed, she snaps at her children. The Family Group is helping Pete and the youngsters to show love and patience toward Mildred in her moments of stress. Pete's disposition has improved; the children do not "sass" their mother any more.

Many alcoholics, once they stop drinking, suffer acutely from insomnia and wild hallucinations. While these are hard to endure, the family must realize that such ailments are a natural part of the alcoholic's convalescence.

Joan and Maria and Mrs. Brown are only a few of the folks who are finding new attitudes through the Family Group. What they are learning, you, if you have a similar problem, may try out for yourself.

REMEMBER, it is a waste of time to lecture to an alcoholic. Don't hide or throw away his bottle. The alcoholic who wants to drink will get it even if he has to steal.

Refrain from nagging or "bossing." Nor do you have to swing too far the Church Booth at the California State Fair

Over a thousand visitors at the California State Fair held in Sacramento September 3 to 13 stopped by this booth to ask about the church. Of these, 559 stopped to discuss the beliefs of the Reorganized Church, some talking as long as half an hour. General Church appointees Seventy Glen H. Johnson and High Priests Thomas R. Beil and Clinton Saxton, assisted by Bishop Edwin C. Burdick and Pastor Myron R. Schall of Sacramento, were in charge of the booth. They were enthusiastic about the response, and feel that it was a profitable project because of the number of contacts made.

The total cost to the district was approximately five hundred dollars. This includes the cost of the booth, elders' expense, pictures, decorations, tracts, and a directory of California churches.

As usual, the church also sponsored a lunch stand at the fair.

other way, inundating him with affection. Aim for a happy medium—admittedly not easy, but made possible by the knowledge that a home and life may hang in the balance.

Don't push an alcoholic into A. A. He will resent any overt attempt on your part to "cure" him. He must take the first step himself.

Church attendance is an important therapy for both of you. The recovered alcoholic makes a good church member, because he knows he must depend upon a Strength greater than his own.

And so must you. With the proper attitude you can hasten the day of his recovery. Deep love and a daily renewed faith can, by the grace of God, give you that attitude—From August, 1953, issue of Christian Herald, and used with permission.

Understanding

Earnest people often plead for understanding. This is good, except in the cases where the plea amounts to a compromise between good and evil. No amount of understanding can ever bring them together, or bridge the gap between them, or reconcile them without destroying one or the other.

No one can make good compatible with evil. He can go over to the other side, but he can't bring the two sides together.

C. G. E. Downing

Elected President of Agricultural Engineers

PROFESSOR C. G. E. (GLEN) DOWNING, head of the department of agricultural engineering at the Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph, has been elected president of the North Atlantic section of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers. He will preside until the next annual meeting of the organization, scheduled to be held at the University of Vermont in 1954. A graduate of the University of Saskatchewan and Iowa State College, he has been head of the agricultural engineering department at O.A.C. since 1946.

On September 7, 1951, Professor Downing was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church and on June 15, 1952, was ordained to the office of teacher. He serves in Guelph Branch as church school director and chairman of the building and finance committee. In September he took part in the College Students Conference held at Rochester, New York. He is married to the former Audrey Waugh of Saskatoon; they have four children.

Extensive Building Plans

PUYALLUP, WASHINGTON.—The branch has been quite active, holding regular morning and evening worship and midweek prayer services throughout the year.

Visiting speakers have included Evangelist Adolph Lundeen and Elders Charles Powers, Granville Swenson, Alma Johnson, Carl Mesle, Glenn Davis, Pearl Reed, John Cornish, Ray Sowers, Delbert Coleman, and Alfred Smith.

Missionary work which yielded nineteen baptisms since the first of the year resulted from ninety-three cottage meetings by local and visiting missionaries such as George Njeim and Aleah Koury, and Bishop Monte Lasater. Gowns and robes for the candidates have added to the beauty and dignity of the baptismal service.

The church school has conducted classes regularly for all ages, and presented special services on Christmas, Easter, and Children's Day. Average attendance is over seventy.

Calls to the priesthood were Elder Clifton Morris, Priests Clarence Johnson, James Wheeler, and Russell Crask, and Teacher Don G. Porter.

The ReLaDaSa activities included a family night Thanksgiving dinner, a Christmas party at the Clarence Johnson farm, a Do-Nut Sale at the Puyallup Annual Daffodil Parade, a visit by Ruth Selzer, district women's leader, and filmstrips on budgeting of time, money, and talents.

The senior Zion's League indulged in two skating parties, a Halloween party at the Harry Crask farm, a Thanksgiving dinner at the home of their pastor, and early morning prayer service at the lake, and a week-end camping outing at Mt. Ranier. They have studied church history.

The junior Zion's League, under the direction of Sister Eileen Dobson, has increased their membership to twenty-four, and has presented an Easter play on the Resurrection, held a Halloween party and a Valentine party and enjoyed two roller skating parties.

The Puyallup choir presented an Easter cantata, "The Living Redeemer."

The publicity department carried ads in the church columns of the local papers announcing services. They also inserted paid Christmas and Easter ads and mailed a monthly bulletin to all members and interested friends, which included a calendar of events and speakers, and more recently a newsletter summarizing the monthly activities.

The building program included the lowering of the existing building on to a concrete foundation in the same location, and formulation of plans for a 100 per cent expansion in floor space, by the erection of a church school annex.

A sample pew was constructed and the branch approved the construction of nineteen more of them and a matching pulpit.

Other improvements include the construction of a closet for the choir robes and collars, new beige-colored draw drapes, a spotlight over the pulpit to illuminate speakers and worship centers, and the donation of a record player. The branch budget has been met, and there are adequate reserves for the building program.

At the recent branch election the following officers were chosen: Claude Wheeler, pastor; Elmer Cousineau, treasurer; Winona Porter, women's leader; Eva Pentland, church school supervisor; Larry Bartolatz, youth supervisor; Clarence Johnson, librarian; Clifford Morris, auditor. The following appointments by the pastor were sustained by branch vote: Ruth Morris, secretary; Margaret Johnson, book steward; Clarence Johnson, music supervisor; Clara Aves, historian; Lawrence Bartolatz, Harry Crask and Don Porter, building construction; Clifton Morris and Elmer Cousineau, building finance committee.—Reported by ELMER J. Indian Mission Progressing MACY, NEBRASKA.—The cornerstone for the Macy Church was laid the evening of September 17, with seventy-five people participating. The services were in charge of Elders Claude E. Carter, pastor, and D. R. Hughes, of Independence, Missouri, who gave the address. Elder Bern Case, pastor of Decatur Church, gave the invocation, and Elder Amos Lamson of Macy gave the benediction.

Sister Fay McCauley, the first baptized member of the Indian mission, bore her testimony, as did Brother Charley A. Springer, one of the oldest Indian members, and Sister Rose Porter.

A poem written and dedicated by Sister Ethel Butts of Decatur, the church historian for the Northeast Nebraska District, was read by Sister Pauline Tyndal, who bore her testimony of a vision shown her some ten years ago, showing the church building on the spot where it is now being erected.

After the address by Brother Hughes, each one filed past the stone, putting a trowel of cement under it. Brother Alex Esau and Sister Happy Mitchell represented the older members, and the younger generation rolled the stone into place.

Brothers Charley Springer, Alex Esau, and Frank Tyndal had helped in the building of the church in 1924, and were also present for the re-building of the church at its present location.

A feast followed at the parsonage after the service, followed by slides shown by Brother Hughes of his trip to Florida and California.

A number who had helped with contributions could not be present at the service. It was a memorable day in the work among the Omaha Indians.—Reported by ORA CARTER

Reunion Report

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.—The reunion involving Oklahoma City and Western Oklahoma and Tulsa Districts was held in Robbers' Cave State Park August 8-16, with members from eleven states attending, bringing the final registration to over 600. Approximately 900 were in attendance on week ends. There were 106 tents and trailers used to house the members, in addition to the twelve cabins and dormitories. Besides the tabernacle and dining hall, eight large tents were used for classes.

The theme, "Challenges of the Restoration," was brought to the congregation and classes by Apostle D. Blair Jensen, Elders A. F. Gibbs, A. H. Yale, Wallace A. Jackson, Harry Simons, Henry Castings, R. J. Jones, and Roland Scott. Mrs. Ruth Simons also assisted.

The General Church workers were assisted by a corps of district workers, including the following: Mrs. Mary Vickery, Oklahoma City, music director; Mrs. Ramon Carson, Western Oklahoma District, Mrs. Doris Kelley, Tulsa District, and Mrs. Ruth Goodwin, Oklahoma City District, women's leaders; Jessie Mae Howard, Muskogee, children's supervisor; Clifford Gaither, Fanshawe, junior high supervisor; Wallace Jackson, Wilburton, high school supervisor; Louis Bailey, Tulsa, supervisor of recreation; John Gorker, Bartlesville, junior pastor; Orville Dollins, Jr., Hartshorne, morning devotions; Stewart Wight, Oklahoma City, and Floyd Farley, Bartlesville, public address systems; Robert Beck, Tulsa, dining room supervisor; Lorene Couch, Tulsa, registration and camp records; Reba Shipley, Bartlesville, Katie Slick, Oklahoma City, and Wilma Harder, Tulsa, camp nurses; Delpha Fields, Tulsa, reunion book steward. These district workers were under the direction of the reunion committee, and W. Raymond Yeubanks, reunion business manager.

The reunion was officially opened Sunday, August 9, with a welcoming address by Mr. E. T. Dunlap, president of the Eastern Oklahoma A. and M. College at Wilburton, Oklahoma. Two preaching services were held each night, one in the tabernacle for adults, and one in the dining hall for juniors.

On Friday afternoon a tea was held for all the women of the three districts. A trio composed of Mrs. Ruth Farley, Mrs. Reba Shipley and Miss Delpha Fields, began the program. A book review on "The Apostle," by Sholem Asch, was given by A. H. Yale. Refreshments were served.

A baptismal service was held at the lake Thursday. On Sunday morning a confirmation service was held.

The spinet piano used in the tabernacle was loaned by the Clifford Gaither family, while the piano used in the junior tent was loaned by the Lions Club of Wilburton. Chairs were furnished by the Wilburton High School, and mattresses and cots were furnished by the college.—Reported by W. R. YEUBANKS

Annual Institute

BEND, OREGON.—The annual institute was held September 5-7 at the Allen School auditorium. Attendance was between three and four hundred.

District officers and their wives and families met at the home of the pastor and his wife, George and Mary Dyer, for a chicken dinner on Saturday evening. The opening service of the institute was a sermon by Elder Miles Whiting, with Elder Roy Keiser in charge, assisted by Elders Herbert Hawley and Ray Huggett. Brother Shannon sang "Oh, May My Walk Be Close to Thee." Following the sermon, a program under the direction of Lucille Petree was presented.

Sunday morning an early fellowship service was held with Elder J. L. Verhei and the district presidency in charge. At the opening of the service a solo, "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," was given by Elder Sam Morris. The church school was under the supervision of Elder Harold Carpenter. The teachers were Rita Kinart, women; Elder Clinton Dobson, men; Elder Kieth Kinart, Zion's League; Leona Carpenter, juniors; and Effie Verhei, primary and kindergarten. Following the class period a short business meeting was held. The purpose of this meeting was to vote on the acceptance of the calling to the priesthood of the following: Richard Petree to the office of elder; Kenneth Moye to the office of priest, and Lavern Moye to the office of deacon. Bishop Monte E. Lasater was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour. Elder F. E. Chapman was in charge of this service, assisted by Elders Harold Crooker, Thomas Coffman, and George Dyer. A solo was given by Missionary James N. Kemp. Kenneth Wayne Goforth was blessed by Brother Kemp, assisted by Elder Don Williams. A basket lunch was served in the city park at noon.

Brother Verhei held a meeting for the leaders and priesthood in the afternoon. He spoke on "Administrative Responsibilities."

At six thirty, classes for all were taken up, with Brother Carpenter in charge. The teachers for this period were Effie Verhei, women; Harold Carpenter, men; and Kieth Kinart, Zion's League. A Communion service was held preceding the evening sermon. Brother Shannon was in charge of this service, assisted by Brothers Harry Howell, Kieth Kinart, Clinton Dobson, and Robert Taylor. A solo, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," was sung by Sister Ardeth Frye, of the Idaho District. Immediately following this service a sermon was preached by Brother Verhei. Brother Carpenter was in charge, assisted by Brothers Cleo Thompson, Milton Petree, and James Davidson. A solo, "I Shall Not Pass Again This Way," was sung by Sister Della Dobson.

A breakfast was held in Shevlin Park Monday morning, followed by a fellowship service at the riverside.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

Ordination Service

DUNN CENTER, NORTH DAKOTA.—The following officers were elected for the coming year: Lester H. Anderson, pastor; Ralph Stacker, church school director; Elnora Anderson, clerk; Joan Stacker, church school secretary and librarian; C. E. Bentley, branch treasurer; Ruby Stacker, organist, and Alma Mae Anderson, publicity.

An ordination service was held after the business meeting. Donald Stacker was ordained to the office of deacon by Elders Lester H. Anderson and Ralph Stacker.

Most of the members of the branch attended the district business meeting and rally at the north entrance of Roosevelt National Park on September 6.

The young people of the branch attended the youth camp held at Elliston, Montana, in June.—Reported by ALMA MAE ANDERSON

Hold Elections

LA CROSSE, WISCONSIN.—The annual branch business meeting was held September 16, with Elder Cecil Robbins, district missionary, in charge. He spoke briefly regarding the importance of the business session, and each member's responsibility with respect to the work and progress of the branch. After the various annual reports were received, the following officers were elected: pastor, Miles Lenox; counselors, Wesley Davenport and Frank Fitzsimmons; secretary and recorder, Zelpha Anderson; treasurer and solicitor, Orlin Gollnick; branch historian, Sadie Infield; missionary supervisor, Adrian Infield; building committee, Gerald Ellis, Adrian Infield and Ray Scafe; deacon's assistants, Frank Fitzsimmons, Adrian Infield, and Gerald Ellis; book steward, Eva Ellis; women's department leader, Jean Gollnick; Zion's League supervisor, Frank Fitzsimmons, assisted by Beverly Ellis. The auditing committee is to be named by the pastor.

Those elected for church school offices include church school director, Adrian Infield; church school secretary, Gordon Smith; treasurer, Gerald Ellis; teacher of adult class, Wesley Davenport, and assistant teacher, Ray Scafe.—Reported by WESLEY DAVENPORT

Women's Group Organized

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.—At the annual business meeting of the Saskatoon Branch the following officers were elected for the year: branch president, Elder Charles Jenkins; counselors, Elder J. A. Gendron and Brother Alma Piedt; secretary, Mary Baker; treasurer, Ruth Piedt; church school director and solicitor, William Hall; assistant to church school director, W. Postnikoff; church school secretary, Shirley Piedt; women's leader, Grace Beckman; Zion's League supervisor, Doris Jenkins; youth leader, Alma Piedt; Oriole leader and book steward, Mildred Hall; children's leader, Blanche Cassidy; music director, Joy Postnikoff; envelope steward, Blake

McLean; historian, Lottie Diggle; publicity, Amy Powell; friendly visitor, Erma Ward; junior church pastor, Walter Postnickoff; branch host, Noble Harper; librarian, Sandra Baker; auditors, E. Baker and B. McLean.

The retiring book steward, Noble Harper, gave a report for the five years and nine months he has had that office. During that period he took in $3,931.29. This includes only the first reunion the book steward had a stand, and the sales were small that year, as a reunion book stand was a new venture in the area.

A vote of thanks was given the retiring pastor, Elder J. A. Gendron, for his faithful service during the past eleven and one-half years.

Stake Activities Conducted

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.—The weekend retreat held at Lake Doniphan August 15-16 was the second enjoyed by the Zion's League. Stake President F. O. Davies preached the Sunday morning sermon, after which a fellowship service was held. The first offering of the Kenneth Tousley Memorial Fund, to be used as a Graceland College revolving scholarship fund, was taken, and amounted to over forty-one dollars.

Apostle Reed Holmes, assisted by Barbara and Dick Howard, of Independence, Missouri, were in charge of the song fest and campfire service held in the evening. A talent show, sponsored and arranged by Marge Burgess, was a last minute feature.

The women's council met September 14. Brother Davies was the speaker. The local women's leaders are making a survey of their branch membership in an effort to minister to more women.

The first meeting of the Gladstone mission was held at 410 E. Armour, in North Kansas City, Sunday, September 13. Eighty-seven were present. Elder Al Scherer was in charge, and Stake President Fred O. Davies preached the morning sermon. Leo Parrish was confirmed by Brother Davies and Elder J. W. Middleton.

Regular church school and church services with Brother Scherer and Glenn S. Moad in charge were planned at the same address.

Cottage prayer meetings, with an attendance averaging thirty to forty persons, were held six weeks prior to the first Sunday service.

In the Central congregation, fifty-six dollars, to be applied to the church deficit, was netted at the garden party and musical given at the home of Brother and Sister Lyell Currie on August 28.

At Malvern Hill the Zion's League met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Yeamans for a chili supper, followed by games.

In the Bennington congregation, Brother Charles Neff was the speaker the first night meeting of the women's club. A service of music and prayer opened the meeting, followed by a business meeting and refreshments.

At Eastbrook an ice-cream social was held on the church lawn July 17. The congregation had a basket dinner after church on Sunday, August 16.

Howard Leonard Smith, son of Kenneth and Eleda Smith, was blessed by Elders Morris Worden and Floris Hands on July 12.

At Raytown, thirty-eight dollars were added to the building fund from the musical held on the Jack French lawn Friday evening, September 4.

Deborah Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Day, was blessed by Elders E. W. Lloyd and L. H. Maxwell, Sunday, September 6.

Carol Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Waight, was blessed by Elders Clyde Hastings and Frank Westwood, Sunday, September 13.

The men of the Raytown congregation spent Labor Day working on the church building.—From October Kansas City Stake Journal

First Annual Retreat Held

COLUMBUS AND SOUTHERN OHIO DISTRICT.—Fifty-three persons attended the first annual young adult retreat of the Columbus and Southern Ohio Districts on September 19-20. The fellowship service climaxing the event was an indication that maximum participation had been achieved in all services. Elders Calvin French and E. E. Smith were in charge.—Reported by CAROL BRABY

Mission Election

SALINA, KANSAS.—The annual mission election held August 16 was conducted by Elder Clyde Shannon of the district presidency. Officers elected and appointed to serve during the coming year were as follows: Edna Henry, religious education, director of music, historian, and junior class teacher; Marguerite Tyree, secretary, women's leader, and adult class teacher; Evon Kucker, treasurer, solicitor, book steward, and primary class teacher; Edith Munden, Herald reporter and publicity chairman, and Frank Munden, Jr., church school director and acting deacon.

Guest speakers on September 13 were District President Ronald Manuel and Frank Westwood, Jr., from Wichita, Kansas.

Guest speakers on October 11 were Leonard Larson and Marion Schultz, also from Wichita, Kansas.—Reported by MRS. F. A. MUNDEN

Impressive Pageant Presented

MOLINE, ILLINOIS.—The annual business meeting was held August 26, with District President W. J. Breshears and Branch Pastor R. W. Martens in charge. Officers elected were pastor, R. W. Martens; director of religious education, Jess Cady; flower fund, Inez Martens; Herald correspondent, Esther Lenox; publicity agent, R. W. Martens; custodian, Abe Miller; missionary supervisor, John Harrington, and his assistant, Leo Sheppard. The following were elected for approval of the General Church: recorder, George Waddell; historian, Florence Cady; solicitor, George Sheppard, and book steward, Leslie Davis.

The Moline Zion's League were hosts on August 30 to the district Zion's League. The group participated in an early morning fellowship in the park, followed by a class study. A potluck supper was held on the church lawn for Zion's League and branch families. After the supper the League presented an impressive pageant of church history, "When Pioneers Meet," given in commemoration of the centennial of the Reorganization. The script was written by Jack Waddell, with suggestions from Zion's League members. The props were detailed and typical of the period, with clothing and furniture also on the period theme. Clothing was borrowed from the White Masque players in Independence, Missouri. C. Ed. Miller's replica of the Urim and Thummim and Book of Mormon plates was used. Brother J. W. Gilbert played the part of an Indian chief. The cast wore suitable make-up for their parts, and the script was factual throughout. About 200 people attended.

The new front addition to the church was dedicated on September 20. Brother Breshears gave the dedicatory address. Historical high lights of the Moline Branch were narrated by Brother Martens. The choir sang "Bless This House."

Cheryl and Vicki Taylor were baptized by Brother Martens on October 4.—Reported by ESTHER LENOX

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bolingbroke, Sr., of Pocatello, Idaho, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on September 15 by holding open house at their home. A gift of an electric stove was presented to them by their four children before the observance started.

They lived in Malad and Arbon, Idaho, before moving to Pocatello. Mr. Bolingbroke was a farmer and cattle raiser until his retirement in 1945. Mrs. Bolingbroke has been an active member of the Reorganized Church since her youth and has held several offices in the women's department. At present she is friendly visitor. Her husband, although not a member of the church, has always supported her in her church activities.

of filing tithing statements and contributing tithes and offerings. This means that parents must make the accounting and pay tithing and offerings with genuine satisfaction, counting it a privilege to give in proportion to the material blessings bestowed upon them. The amount of church income received from children will be insignificant, but the spiritual and economic values for the church of tomorrow are beyond our power to estimate. On the other hand, failure to win our young church members to financial stewardship today can result only in another generation of church members of which the large majority will not be consistent participants in its program.

We should be grateful for the progress being made in this important aspect of the work; but in view of our potential power and the desperate need of the world for the restored gospel, we cannot be satisfied with our best achievement to date. This is a day for teaching and practicing the basic stewardship of accounting and tithing, a day for self-examination and repentance, that we shall not only do our part individually but be empowered to convert other members to this way of life. Let us be reminded again, "Until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, . . . the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed."

DEATHS

NELSON.—Una Ethel, daughter of Jeremiah C. and Mary Larson Keck, was born March 14, 1892, in Odebolt, Iowa, and died October 8, 1953, in Kansas City, Missouri. With her family she moved to North Dakota in 1901, and on July 15, 1909, was married to David Walker; a daughter and three sons were born to them. The daughter died in infancy, and Una was left alone with her young sons to rear. In 1949 she was married to Mr. Nelson. She was never affiliated with any church, but was a member of the Rebecca Lodge most of her life.

Surviving are her three sons: Clifton and Alvin Walker of Fargo, North Dakota, and Russell Walker of Crary, North Dakota; two brothers: Jay E. Keck of Independence, Missouri, and Oliver A. Keck of Keyport, Washington; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the Wilks Funeral Home in Kansas City. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

DAVIS.—Matthew, was born October 30, 1866, in Hamilton County, Illinois, and died October 6, 1953, in Independence, Missouri. On December 21, 1887, he was married to Hettie Martin; eight children were born to them. They left Illinois in 1905 and moved to Knob Noster, Missouri, where they remained until 1913 when they made their home in Independence. His wife died on March 7, 1937; five children also preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 12, 1894, and remained a devoted member until his death.

Surviving are two daughters: Pearl Marie Upp of the home in Independence and Effie Jane Evans of Kansas City, Missouri; a son, V. I. Davis of Los Angeles, California; five grandchildren; and one great-granddaughter. Funeral services were held at the George Carson Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Ephraim Brown officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

JOHNSON.—Mary, was born September 8, 1870, at Stragway, Victoria, and died September 15, 1953, at New Castle, New South Wales, after an extended illness. Her husband, William, who was president of Lower Bendoc Branch, preceded her in death. Shortly before she died she remarked to Elder A. J. Corbett, who was visiting, "I don't think I have done much for the church." He reminded her that not only had her husband been a presiding elder, but each son was an officer in the church and her daughter was departmental leader of women in her branch. She had been a member since April 4, 1915.

Surviving are her three sons: Walter N. of Independence, Missouri (a member of the Presiding Bishopric); William F. of Sydney, Australia (pastor of Leichhardt Branch); and David H. of Newcastle, Australia (pastor of Hamilton Branch); and a daughter, Mary Imrie of Newcastle. The funeral service was conducted at the Leichhardt Church by Elder A. J. Corbett.

HUGHES.—Joseph, son of James and Edith Hughes, was born September 5, 1914, at Lamar, Colorado, and died October 10, 1953, in New York City. He grew to manhood in Lamar, was graduated from Graceland College in 1933, then attended the University of Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1935. In 1936 he was married to Hannah Jacobs, a graduate of the same class. They moved to Binghamton, New York, where he was assistant actuary of the Security Mutual Life Insurance Company. In 1948 they went to New Orleans, Louisiana, where he was controller for the Pan American Insurance Company. In 1951 he was made vice-president of the company and traveled for it in Central and South America. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since February 4, 1923.

He is survived by his wife; four children: Kathrine, Janet, Mary Elizabeth, and Fred; his mother, Mrs. Edith Hughes of Lamar; and two sisters: Mrs. Louise Hackley of Memphis, Tennessee, and Mrs. Betty McIlhenney of Denver, Colorado. The funeral was held at Wood Chapel in Lamar, President W. Wallace Smith officiating. Interment was in Fairmount Cemetery, Lamar.

SMITH.—Virgil Clair, was born September 21, 1897, and died September 27, 1953. He had been a lifelong resident of Joplin, Missouri. He was married in 1921 to Alma Sill; four children were born to them—three sons: Cecil, William, and Glenn, all of Joplin; and one daughter, Mrs. Allen Breckenridge of Orlando, Florida. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Joplin, Pastor Stephen Black and the Reverend E. W. Love officiating.

BUCK.—Ruby, daughter of Wesley Carter and Geneva Bently Robison, was born July 31, 1888, at Springerton, Illinois, and died October 12, 1953, in Los Angeles, California, after years of invalidism. She was married to Hyram Buck on April 7, 1907; he preceded her in death in 1940, after which she made her home with her daughter. She taught school while living in Illinois and was also an accomplished pianist. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth.

She is survived by her mother of Mill Shoals, Illinois; two sons: Bently Buck of San Diego, California, and Edwin Buck of Phoenix, Arizona; and one daughter, Elizabeth Peterson of Los Angeles. Funeral services were conducted at Forest Lawn Cemetery in Glendale, California, Stake President G. E. Tickemyer officiating.

CONDIT.—Silas D., was born July 10, 1890, at Malta, Idaho, and died October 4, 1953, at his home in Hagerman, Idaho, where he had been a resident since 1895. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 4, 1902, and was a devoted worker the remainder of his life. In October, 1913, he was ordained a priest; in October, 1926, an elder; in August, 1935, a high priest; and in August, 1950, an evangelist. He served for twelve years as pastor at Hagerman and seventeen years as president of Idaho District, retiring in 1949 because of ill health. On March 4, 1916, he was married to Reverie Gilmore, who survives him. For thirty-three years he was a postal employee. He received his honorary discharge on the morning of the day he died.

Besides his wife he leaves a son, Gomer of Boise, Idaho; two daughters: Doris Stokes of Hagerman and Tresa Sharp of Boise; two brothers: Ervin and Wynn, both of Hagerman; two sisters: Nettie Dennis of Hagerman and Sadie Keil of Cosmopolis, Washington; and six grandchildren.

BYRN.—Newton, son of Ransom N. and Ruth Jeffers Byrn, was born September 15, 1860, at Byrneville, Indiana, and died October 4, 1953. He was married in 1885 to Florence Howell who preceded him in death in 1933. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 7, 1926.

Surviving are four children: Mrs. Edith Langford; Dr. H. W. Byrn of New Albany, Indiana; John R. and Ben Byrn of Byrneville; thirteen grandchildren; and twenty-six great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Floyd Gatrost and H. W. Burwell. Interment was in Byrneville cemetery.

A WINDOW TO THE EAST

The little back room is a study now, and it has a window to the east that shows a scene of pastoral beauty; a long grassy slope with some big trees on it, ending at the ravine where there is a spring of cold clear water, and heavy woods on the other side.

Birds of many kinds are here every day and they seem to think of it as their particular sanctuary. Cardinals and thrushes, mockingbirds and hungry robins, larks and bobwhites practice their maneuvers.

It is the kind of view that makes one wish to reach—not for a camera—but for paints and brushes, wanting also the skill to use them. It isn't the kind of scene that people would travel far to see, for there are many greater things. But it is one that some new Corot should be putting on canvas to place a picture of undying summer in somebody's home.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED?

The oldest known bit of writing in the world, the Presse Papyrus, is in the municipal museum at Istanbul. It dates from about six thousand years ago, and the first sentence reads: "Alas, times are not what they used to be. Everyone wants to write a book and children are no longer obedient to their parents."

MAJOR EMPHASIS!

Latter Day Saint ministers need very much to place first emphasis where it belongs. Often our neighbors gather that our first allegiance is to the church. Not so. Our major loyalty ought to be to the spiritual realities back of the church. The church, then, becomes the agency through which we make contact with these spiritual realities. The church does not exist for its own sake. We need to speak out that we are primarily God-minded, employing the church to achieve God's purposes. We must not forget that the church is just our agency and fellowship for religious living.

Mary Beth Evans

MARY BETH EVANS joined the Graceland staff in September, 1952, as instructor of education.

Born in 1917 at Andover, Missouri, she was reared on a farm and began her education at five in a country school near Andover. Each year since then she has either attended or taught school. She was graduated from the Ridgeway, Missouri, High School in 1935 and from Graceland College in 1937. She attended summer sessions at Northwest Missouri State Teachers College in Maryville for six summers, receiving her B.S. degree in 1943. She did graduate work at the University of Minnesota and the University of Iowa, completing the requirements for her Master's degree in August, 1952. She is a member of Pi Lambda Theda, a National Scholastic Honor Society for women in education.

Mary Beth taught four years in a Missouri country school. Then after receiving her B. S. degree she was critic teacher for three years in the Horace Mann Laboratory School at Northwest Missouri State Teachers College. She also taught in the Lamoni grade school seven years and one year in the Cedar Rapids grade school.

As hobbies she enjoys music, story and poetry writing. She also has a collection of dolls of all lands to use in her teaching career.

She is married to Gerald Evans of Des Moines, Iowa. They have two children, Jeffrey, 5½, and Harold, 15, a foster son who has made his home with them for five years. The Evans' share many ideas in their work, for Gerald is Child Welfare Consultant for the State of Iowa. Recently they were invited by Governor Beardsley to attend the Governor's Conference preparatory to the White House Conference for Children and Youth.

In 1925 Mary Beth joined the Reorganized Church and has always enjoyed church school work. For two years she was director of religious education in the Lamoni Stake.

The Days of the Shepherd

"And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord."

—Jeremiah 23: 4.

MOST OF US get our ideas of the true shepherd from the twenty-third Psalm: "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul." The shepherd must be a man of honor, for he is compared with God. It was Jesus who said, "I am the good shepherd."

Through long experience we have come to think of the pastors of the church as shepherds. They are the leaders and protectors of the people. They pray over the sick. They visit and try to reclaim the wayward. They reconcile differences between members. They soothe ruffled and hurt feelings. They iron out misunderstandings. They often take care of the church building as well as the people who worship there. In the long run, they have to be ready to do whatever anybody else on the staff fails to do.

THE PASTOR is often a very tired and worn man. He has too much to do. Often he is a volunteer, and his only pay is the gratitude of the people. Even in thanks, his pay is too often pitifully small, and the people are far behind on their installments. Moreover, he is subject to that deadly cruel thing that people call "criticism," which is sometimes just another name for hardness of heart, lack of appreciation, wrong thinking, and selfishness.

The pastor is a shepherd in many ways. If any of his members have a problem, it is his problem too. He shares their worries. He is hurt by their defeats. He rejoices in their victories. He walks beside them whatever they do. He is a carrier of many burdens that are not his own, but he assumes them because he loves his people.

SO MUCH for the burdens and sorrows of the shepherd of souls. Now turn to his work and responsibilities.

The pastor may be too busy to have much time left for reading. Yet he needs to be an informed man because he must minister to an informed people. Via radio and television his people are receiving education of one kind and another every day. In every one of our congregations there are numbers who take time to read and have studied special subjects in which they are interested. Young people are always going away to colleges and universities, then coming home to take up their work. These informed people in the branch, as well as the poor and the humble, are in need of spiritual ministry. It sometimes happens that the pastor must break the "bread of life" to some who are better educated in some fields than he is. Yet he knows other things that they do not, and he must try to minister to them. He is sometimes put to a severe test. But if he trusts God and humbly does his best, he will have the love and respect of his people and their attention too.

IF THE PASTOR REMEMBERS that it is a difficult world in which his people live, it will be easier for him to understand them. If he realizes that they are burdened beyond their strength, that they are often worried and afraid, he can sympathize with them. And in life's greater complexities, if he can know that they are not always very wise but trying to do the best they can with the intelligence they have, he will understand what they are going through, for he often finds himself in the same situation.

The pastor, like his people, will say one little prayer thousands of times in the course of his life: "O Lord, forgive me for my mistakes, and help me that I may not go on making them over and over again."

Yes, if a man keeps making mistakes—and he will, of course—he could at least try to give his people a little variety by introducing some new ones. A change, even in errors, is something of a relief. But he will try to eliminate them. There is no fear of his running out of them completely. New ones, like dandelions, will keep springing up.

It is not easy to "feed" the people. "Feed my sheep," Jesus said to Peter. This requires constant observation and reflection upon the ways and the life of the people. It involves an unceasing search for inspiring thoughts and ideas. It calls for a frequent reading of the Scriptures for something that will fit particular needs and occasions. It demands an alertness of ears and eyes, and an open mind.

LIFE SHOULD NEVER be dull—is never dull—for the good pastor, the good shepherd. He is constantly challenged by new problems. He is assailed by new ideas, many good ones, some bad. He receives help as well as troubles from his people. There are those who lift as well as those who lean. He finds strength as well as weakness among his people. He has some in his congregation who are aware of his needs and problems. There are those who remember him in prayer. And, because he is doing the work of God, he often finds that the Lord prepares the way before him, arranging for helps where they are needed. His God, who has given him his task, does not leave him alone. L. J. L.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth,
La Moure, North Dakota:

On October 4 we held our Northeastern Illinois District conference at historic Plano Church. It was well attended with 17 per cent of the district enrollment present. Lloyd Cleveland was nominated from the floor for district president. His counselor was also nominated but declined in favor of Lloyd who has been district president for five years. A good spirit prevailed. That night I attended Brainerd-Chicago for the candlelight service for new officers, and the Communion service.

On October 10 and 11 we had a rally day at Fargo, North Dakota, and I presume our attendance was something like Mickey Mantle's longest home run of the 1953 season. We had 29 per cent of our district enrollment present, shattering the record of the week before which I thought was excellent. Classes were held Saturday afternoon, and there was a preaching service at night. Priesthood members met at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. On Sunday, Delbert Smith and I preached, and the district presidency presided over the prayer service.

I am happy to report that district conference attendance all over has been on the upswing. This was true in northern Indiana, and I'm sure it will be next week at the Fort Madison, Iowa, conference. I am preaching seven nights there consecutively. I feel sure that the Chicago conference, which is to be attended by President and Sister W. W. Smith, will also draw a good attendance.

From Fred O. Davies, Kansas City
Stake President:

We held our quarterly conference on October 14 mainly for the purpose of selecting General Conference delegates and approving the stake budget for 1954. There was an attendance of 190, which is the highest yet at our conference gatherings and apparently a great increase over recent years. There was a good spirit present, and questions were asked and dealt with very agreeably.

There is a growing interest in stake-wide activities; our monthly Zion's League fellowship meetings held in the respective congregations in rotation is indicative of this interest. Attendances have ranged from 120 to 170. One was held last night at Raytown in the partly finished basement of the new church at which 171

Leaguers and leaders were present; there was splendid participation on the part of the young people.

From Seventy Russell F. Ralston,
Salt Lake City, Utah:

I write concerning the passing of one of our finest men in this area, Brother Silas D. Condit. He was the son of an early missionary, John H. Condit. Though never under church appointment, Silas gave without reserve of his talents to the church. He was a member of the priesthood for forty years, and during this time served as priest, elder, high priest, and evangelist. Throughout his lifetime his love for people, his kind wisdom, and his undying devotion to God caused those he met to respect him and seek his counsel.

Ministry such as his cannot be measured in terms of the present for, though God has called him home, his testimony will live on in the lives of all who knew him. We who knew him thank God that we have been privileged to come under the influence of his life, for we feel that we have been lifted up and challenged to greater effort in the onward movement of the kingdom.

Brother Condit was able to attend the Communion service on September 6 and ministered to all who were there at that time. He died the next Communion Sunday, October 4.

The monthly report of Elder Lee R. Oliver, president of the Pensacola, Florida, District, contains these news items of general interest:

The week of October 4-11 I held a series in Crestview. We have a group there of approximately thirty-five, with attendance as high as sixty-five. During the series, a gentleman in Crestview allowed us to use a chapel he had built for his employees. It was small but very lovely, with an organ and piano. The building was full every night, and three persons asked for baptism.

Beginning Sunday night, October 11, and continuing through Sunday, October 18, I held a series in Coldwater. The attendance here was overwhelming. The building was full to overflowing every night, and it was necessary to bring in chairs. Nine persons asked for baptism, and seven were baptized Sunday at Brewton. A great deal of advertising and preparation was made by the local men which brought about the success of this series, I'm sure.

Two were baptized here in Pensacola on Sunday, September 27, following our district conference.

We have been having special activities on Sunday nights once a month, such as "Neighbor's Night," "Married Couple's Night," and last Sunday evening was "Men's Night." I mention these because the attendance is always outstanding. The church is always full, with many non-members and friends attending. Refreshments are served after the service, which seems to appeal to the people. There is always a fine degree of God's Spirit to bless these services, and the programs, which include a sermon are interesting.

Together with our priesthood visiting program, we have recently inaugurated an extensive visiting program with the ladies of the branch. Definite plans were laid, certain rules of conduct given, and procedures established. We have a chairman, who also serves as hostess on Sunday morning, and the results are very gratifying. People have come to church who haven't attended in ten years. The ladies are instructed not to discuss any priesthood matter but to turn in the names of those who need priesthood visits to the pastor who, in turn, will see that priesthood members make the necessary follow-up visits. It is working very well, and I am eager to see the outcome in the month ahead. With everyone in the branch visiting inactive members, as well as non-members and friends, I feel we can increase our attendance as well as regain "lost sheep."

Brother Pray in a recent letter quoted Priest C. M. Scott, the pastor of our New Orleans group, as follows:

Brother H. H. Jernigan (of Mobile) and Elder Porter (of Orange, Texas) were with us Sunday, September 6. They blessed my daughter's baby. We had forty-five people at the services. . . . I have a letter from Brother J. Charles May who will be coming to New Orleans on September 27, to hold missionary services until October 11.

I am enjoying some wonderful experiences in my work in the ministry. Remember me in your prayers that God will use me where I am best fitted and that I may use my best talents and ability to the services of God.

Perhaps there are those who will be interested in noting that the group in New Orleans holds meetings every Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and at 11:00 a.m. in the Green Room of the downtown YWCA on Gravier Street, across from Morrison's Cafeteria.

Anyone passing through or living in town is invited to contact the New Orleans Saints and worship with them.

A Revealing God

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr.

An address given at the Evangelism Institute, April 12, 1953

The mighty God, even the Lord, has spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness; for God is judge himself. Selah. Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee; I am God, even thy God.—Psalm 50: 1-7.

MY APPRECIATION of what God is doing has grown through the years. I am not unmindful of the critical situations that exist throughout the world or of the fact that many still prefer to ignore God rather than seek him. But I'm also aware of the fact that thousands are turning to God; and from that which has been written, in addition to the impressions of the Spirit of God, I am convinced that, while thousands are now turning to investigate the word, these thousands will be multiplied in the near future. Too many times our vision of the work of God is constructed as a consequence of the vision we have of sin and that which is identified with sin. But if we open our eyes, we can see how the hand of God is outstretched; and where men and women respond to the divine touch, everything that our Heavenly Father or his Son, Jesus Christ, has promised is having its fulfillment. I'm aware that I stand in the midst of a people who have had such manifestations of the power of God in many lives. It means something to me to know that I stand with such a group of witnesses as I attempt to give some consideration to this revealing God.

The Psalmist declared that God made known his ways unto Moses, and his acts unto the children of Israel. That is the God we worship tonight, the same unchangeable being. I believe that we of all men would be men most miserable tonight were we not aware of the fact that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. That which he has stated still stands. He is unchangeable; he is impartial; he is the same revealing God that the Psalmist wrote of.

The Simple Approach

I want you to notice how this revealing God behaves. There are many people today who claim to believe in the word of God, but if one would suggest the methods that our Heavenly Father uses in making his mind and will available to the human family, some of these same people would have a tendency to ridicule the idea and say that God would not thus manifest himself. In Exodus 3 is a scene that may be re-enacted today; an individual is tending sheep.

Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian; and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to the mountain of God even to Horeb. And again, the presence of the Lord appeared unto him, in a flame of fire in the midst of a bush; and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed. And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not consumed. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see . . .

Those words are significant. The difficulty with most people who claim that God is not capable of revealing himself today is that they will not meet the conditions of revelation. One is to be receptive, to turn aside that they may see, to withdraw themselves, to be responsive to the divine touch.

When the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. And he said, Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. Moreover he said, I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Exodus 3: 1-6.

I'm not going to discuss the purpose of this revelation in detail, except to say that our Heavenly Father decided to send Moses to the land of Egypt in order to deliver the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. It was an important event, but think of the humble circumstances—not in some great cathedral but out in a field where sheep grazed.

Maybe there is some benefit in tending sheep; at least the shepherd has time for meditation. I think the difficulty with most of us today is that we do not have time to wait upon the Lord. We're also counseled by his word, "Wait, I say, wait upon the Lord." So many other things take our time and attention that it's impossible for God to break through. Yet there are periods when he turns us aside to see some strange sight which causes us to forget for the time being the various daily activities that consume us in order that he might make himself or his will known unto us.

Another experience is found in I Kings 18: 36-39 (Inspired Version).

And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, and thou mayest turn their heart back again. Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench. And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces; and they said, the Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God.

Who are we to limit God as to the manner in which he manifests or reveals himself? Why should we attempt individually or collectively to tell him how to reveal himself. In this instance he sent fire from heaven. I'm not concerned about the method he employs to obtain the necessary results; certainly he knows mankind better than any of us and manifests himself according to the conditions or according to the capacity of those whom he would reach. In one instance, Moses was turned aside by the strange sight of a bush that was afire but didn't become consumed. Some modern critics would ask, "Was it necessary to fire that bush? Why didn't God simply appear to Moses and talk to him face to face as a man talks to his friend?" And they become so concerned regarding the method and manner of communication that eventually they lose sight of the fact that God made himself manifest. In fact, because God did not manifest himself in the manner in which they thought he should, some decline to accept the manifestation.

A Purpose of Revelation

What appeals to me is that both of these manifestations from above turned a nation in the direction of God. Both procured the necessary results. The manifestation of the burning bush convinced Moses that it was God's will that he should return to Egypt—the last place in the world he wanted to go—and there become a great leader. In contrast to Moses, Elijah was not the only person attempting to receive a divine manifestation; the priests of Baal and the prophets of the grove were likewise engaged in having some communication from their god.

Remember the great contest that was going on in which Elijah felt that he and only he was the representative of God? In this he was mistaken, because later God said that he had reserved many men who would not bow the knee to the heathen god Baal. But Elijah felt that he was alone, and he had given the priests of Baal and the prophets of the grove their first opportunity. They had built their altars. They had placed their sacrifices upon them. They had called upon their god from early in the morning until the time of the evening sacrifice. They not only had called upon God but had afflicted themselves even to the extent of cutting themselves with knives and lances till the blood gushed from their bodies, but please notice these words:

And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud; for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.—I Kings 18: 27.

I'm not going to attempt to apologize for Elijah. The word "mock" of course has been translated from various other languages and may not be just as it is represented here. I can, however, imagine that after all he passed through and with his life at stake, being human and finding himself so much in the minority (and prophets are human), he felt justified in saying, "Where is your God? Maybe he's talking to somebody else. Maybe he's gone on a journey. Maybe he's asleep."

And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.—Ibid., verse 29.

I think these are sad words: "There was neither voice nor any to answer, nor any that regarded." Can you imagine a condition of a people who are petitioning their deity, but there is neither voice, nor answer, nor any that regard? And then Elijah stepped forth and prayed a remarkable prayer. As a consequence of this petition, a nation turned to God.

Elijah didn't pray for any self-glorification. He prayed a petition that you and I could well afford to repeat from time to time as our prayer. I wonder what would happen if we took upon ourselves the burden of the inhabitants of Independence or the various cities that we represent and petitioned this same God, and were sincere in our petition, that somehow through our behavior it might be made known that he does speak today—that our God is a God who has made the Restoration a reality. It would be dangerous for us to attempt that kind of prayer unless we were prepared to do our part, to be the instruments through which God could manifest that he is God in Israel today.

Only God Revealeth

In the second chapter of Daniel we read of a king who had a dream. He remembered the experience of having a dream, but he could not recall the dream; hence there was no possible chance for an interpretation. I can imagine how he felt. On one occasion I had a dream and I've never been able to recall it. But if I could recall that dream and had the same spirit in preaching the sermon that was revealed to me in that dream, it would be a good sermon. It was one of the finest experiences I ever had in my life, but instead of getting up and making some notes, it was so clear I thought, "Well, I'll remember that." That happened years ago and to this day I've been unable to recall it. Perhaps it was given to me to help me appreciate this man's predicament. This dream troubled him. He couldn't recall it, so he sent for his wise men. After their failure to help him, he called Daniel.

The king answered and said to Daniel, . . . Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof? Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king.—Daniel 2: 26, 27.

Note the individuals with whom this king had surrounded himself. In a sense, they were his cabinet, his counselors and advisers, those upon whom he depended for light and inspiration. Daniel, who was human, too, and yielded to temptation occasionally, went on to say, "The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king?"

Then in a serious mood, Daniel continued, "But there is a God in heaven." Isn't it marvelous in this age, when we're made to realize the helplessness of the human family and to see wherein the wisdom of the wise and the understanding of the prudent are hid, to know that there is a God in heaven? "But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days."

There is a God in heaven. That is my testimony. That's the testimony of all I've been associated with in this work. Not "there was" but "there is a God" who reveals himself. That revelation is available today, providing the condition warrants it and providing we are receptive to the revelation. In other words, there must be purpose, for our God is not only an unchangeable, revealing God but a God of purpose. He is not in the business of manifesting himself to amuse or to satisfy the whims of mankind.

Not for Idle Curiosity

Brother Hanson and I, together with five or six of the Joint Council, went to Kansas City some time ago where over three thousand people were seated in a large tabernacle tent and others were standing around. These people were there to see the Holy Ghost bestowed at will upon four hundred or more people. Talk about putting God on exhibition! It was one of the most ridiculous things I ever witnessed in my life. Seeing what was happening, even to the bodies of the people who were thus assembled, almost broke my heart. Now the God that we are attempting to represent is not in the business of being manipulated by men as if he were a puppet.

I've heard people say in the past, when we've been attempting to interest them in religion, that they could speak in tongues when they desired. They could exercise the gift; they could turn it off and on just as it pleased them. That is contrary to my concept of God. It is contrary to that which is written in the Word. Holy men of old wrote and spoke, not at their will, but as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. God doesn't reveal himself to satisfy idle curiosity. There must be a purpose before he manifests himself, and there are conditions that govern whether or not we are capable of receiving revelation.

Without a Solution

This vision of the king which Daniel interpreted had to do not only with other dispensations of time but it was to have a fulfillment in the latter day. We're seeing this vision in process of its fulfillment even now; a portion of it already has been fulfilled, and there is sufficient evidence to satisfy me that God is continuing to fulfill this marvelous manifestation which is consummated so far as this world is concerned in the establishment of the kingdom of God and the manifestation of his righteousness. Where the kingdoms of this world perish, the kingdom of God shall stand forever.

Many people will not seek the Lord that he may be found; they will absolutely refuse to listen to us if we attempt to tell them the story of the Restoration. These same people will look here and there, seeking after familiar spirits or other types of manifestations, rather than open their ears that they might hear the voice of divinity or direct their eyes that they might be able to see the manifestations of God. Nebuchadnezzar searched elsewhere but found no solution to his problem outside of a divine revelation. Daniel, as an instrument in the hand of God, recalled the dream and gave the king its interpretation.

A Modern Parallel

I'm emphasizing this point because I believe we had a similar situation in the early nineteenth century. I'm not setting a definite date, because the work of preparation was going on many years before 1820 so far as I'm able to observe, but in that period men were baffled so far as religion was concerned. They were lost. With all due respect to the reformers and the good work that they and their associates accomplished, they had no solution. They were not capable of bringing to pass such a change in the lives of men that they would be able to abide the hour that was about to be ushered in. There was no hope except from above.

The young man we refer to as the young prophet illustrated that possibly more than anyone else. He also was baffled. He could find no satisfaction from the clergy with whom he was acquainted, but in reading the Scriptures he came to that passage in James which read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." He testifies that no Scripture ever came to the mind of man with such force as that Scripture came to him.

Haven't you had similar experiences? Haven't there been times when Scripture seems to stand out and take on new meaning? Haven't you been impressed at certain times to turn to certain chapters and verses? Perhaps you have even had Scripture come to your mind to answer some situation that confronted you.

I can believe the words of that young prophet tonight. There was no hope so far as the wise men were concerned of an answer to his problem. They could not satisfy him. A problem sent Joseph Smith to God.

A realization that only God can answer our present-day problems is the one satisfaction I get from them. There's no satisfaction in bloodshed. There's no satisfaction in broken homes that the war has produced. There's no satisfaction in many of the evils of this hour. But I am taking some satisfaction in the thought that today's problems will cause men to turn to God. Believe me, we're going to have some problems, and the benefit of these problems is that we, too, shall go to God.

The Power of God

Joseph Smith had a problem. When he went into a grove to pray for help the Father and Son appeared to him in a vision. Even in that generation no one would believe such a thing could happen, not even a minister to whom he told his story with all the simplicity and honesty that a boy not yet fifteen years old would use. The minister never denied the experience, but he did designate the source. He said, "My boy, it's all of the Devil." Here is something that puzzles me: Why should men who are supposed to be informed in matters that are ecclesiastical attribute power to Satan that they deny to Almighty God?

We can thank our Father in heaven that we've made more progress. Many people now accept the fact of present-day revelation.

Joseph testified that he saw the Father and the Son and received instructions. Basic in the instructions were these words, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." I wonder what would happen to the Saints if we should take that instruction literally. Christ is the source of light. He is the source of truth. He is the greatest teacher that the world has ever known. In him is all power. This is the same power that carries conviction into the souls of men. President Edwards has said, "We don't convert people. It's the power of God that bears testimony of the truth." That's the mission of the Holy Ghost.

The above latter-day revelation was indeed basic. Joseph Smith heard it and followed the divine instructions. As a consequence this church was formed. Revelation didn't cease there. It made provision for such an organization as we now have. Through revelation men continue to be called to the various offices of priesthood responsibility. These are the ones God would have serve him, and many have been called who wouldn't have been called if it had been a matter of nomination or election. Of course, after they succeed—after they manifest some of this priestly power—we all "knew that they were called of God." Certainly some of us get our hindsight all mixed up with foresight. I thank God for the testimonies that I have observed as I have traveled for this church. He has called men who have not been too highly regarded, so far as their capacities were rated by other men, and put them in charge of branches and districts. I have lived long enough to see the validity of that revelation manifest in their ministry. This is the God we worship today, this revealing God.

An Age of Need

We stand in an age with greater possibilities than any other the world has ever known. But while we say, "with greater possibilities," we add that it is one with more risks and dangers also. I don't need to remind you of the efforts being put forth in our own country to preserve us from nations that we seem to have reason to fear. Maybe I'm becoming a fatalist, but I don't think there is anything we can do to defend ourselves. There is no solution to the problems that are confronting the nations of the earth tonight outside of God, and I don't mean to use that in the general sense in which some people use it today. Generalities will not suffice. It is one thing to profess God. It is something else to be a real follower. We're only disciples to the extent that we take upon ourselves the nature of divinity. That's what a real follower is.

I saw a little girl recently that I hadn't met before, but I recognized her resemblance to a cousin I knew. I could identify her family immediately. Wouldn't it be a marvelous experience if we had such characteristics that we'd be recognized as the sons and daughters of Almighty God?

Believe me, this world has a greater problem than the one that confronted Joseph Smith. The wise men, the soothsayers, and the sorcerers are at work. But all of the efforts that are being put forth will not suffice. Were it not for the fact that I know there is a God in heaven, I doubt that life would be worth the effort. But knowing there is a God who reveals himself, who gives power to men, who predicts what shall come to pass in the latter day (and that prediction not only has to do with the overthrow of nations but with the establishment of his kingdom which is to stand forever), I want to give without reservation for the building up of his kingdom and the establishment of his righteousness.

My Convictions

My membership in this church is a consequence of a revelation from God. A hymn we used to sing in the Methodist church took on new meaning the first time I attended a service of the Reorganization in the First Philadelphia Branch. That hymn is "He Leadeth Me." I was only seventeen when I stood to sing that hymn, at the close of "religio." It was under the leadership of John Zimmermann, Jr. At the close of my first service in a Reorganized Church, a voice spoke to me, "These are my people. I lead these people." I had never heard of John Cornish's experience, but later on I learned of it. Mine was almost the same information that was given to him when he was baptizing in London, Canada. "These are my people. I lead this people."

I've had an experience recently as I was visiting the islands of the sea. I thought we had a busy enough itinerary prepared by Brother Crownover and Brother Vest to fill every day of the five weeks we were to spend on the islands, but just before we left I got a letter from Brother Crownover in which he said, "Brother Gleazer, I think you should conclude your work here with a series of meetings." At first I was a little rebellious and didn't answer him immediately. I answered him from California before leaving for the islands and said I would do it. I didn't give it too much thought because of the other things I had to do first. But I awakened on the boat about three o'clock one morning and an entire series of subjects came to my mind. Oh, I know psychologists say that this was because my subconscious mind was working. The subjects were not all new, but those of you who are called upon to preach from time to time realize that the greatest problem is getting a subject. Do I need to tell you how relieved I was? God in heaven knew my need and the need of the people on the islands. I was blessed in that series—abundantly blessed by God.

A Manifestation from God

When we think of the world's condition is there not an occasion that demands a manifestation from God? I believe the Psalmist was inspired when he said, "The mighty God . . . has spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." He went on to say—and this is what every Reorganized Latter Day Saint should know—"Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence." How could he be God and be silent? Time and time again I have wondered how we can successfully carry our message so that it shall accomplish its purpose in the nations of this earth. It has been the burden of my soul ever since I became a missionary for this church to know what can be done to turn people aside that they might give some consideration to the mind of God. But since we worship the one unchangeable God, I am convinced that this God can turn men and nations to him. I have met men within the past few weeks that God turned aside and made it possible for them to come in contact with this work. I believe when we're prepared to be instrumental in the hand of God as a church, he'll lead nations to investigate his ways.

Why soft-pedal this information today? We of all people should go forth revealing both by precept and by example that God is revealing himself. We don't need to apologize for divine revelation. The world needs revelation more than anything else. The church needs it. When I say "the church," I'm not thinking in terms of calling men to the Presidency or to the Twelve or to the various other councils. I'm thinking about the power of God that's going to turn two thirds of our people about who are faced in the wrong direction. I'm challenged by the one third looking Godward—the one third supporting this institution in every sense.

Many of us are going to petition this revealing God that he will communicate himself in such a way that the two thirds may be turned about that they may see God and, seeing him, become instrumental in his hands in manifesting his presence in their everyday living.

Yes, my friends, there is a God in heaven. Individually we have that testimony. We have received of his light and his truth. We've had the testimony of his Spirit pertaining to the divinity of this work. May God bless those of us who have received it to so use it that revelation may be shared by others and that the manifestations of the sons of God may be such that nations will turn to him and find life.

Compensation

One man said, "I give them as good as they send." But I noticed that he concentrated upon the bad, both in receiving and sending. As a consequence, he was often brooding darkly over what someone had done to him and plotting to get even. He never did, of course, for whenever he balanced the scale someone would upset it again with another mean trick. He never quite caught up with the wrongs that were done to him, not even by the day that he died.

There was another man, a very different kind of person, in the neighborhood. He was a friendly soul. "I've been alone for some years," he said, "but the people here have been very kind to me." He was always doing something to help someone else because, he said, they had helped him. Anyway he found happiness and content and the love of his neighbors in doing for them whatever he could, whenever he could. But he never quite caught up with them, even until the day he died, for they were always getting ahead of him again.

Which kind of man would you rather be?

Good Schools Are Your Responsibility

By Nelvada Surbaugh

THE SUCCESS of any school depends upon the support it receives from the community in which it is located. In turn, the support citizens give is largely determined by the amount and quality of information they receive concerning the schools. School administrators as well as classroom teachers are eager for parents to receive accurate information. They are constantly concerned with how to improve school-home and school-community relations. They believe that the most effective means to secure such information is through school visitation. Activities are planned within schools during American Education Week to bring parents to the schools and to take the schools into the homes.

This year more than twelve million people are expected to accept the schools' invitation and observe school work during American Education Week. Other means of communication that will be used to focus attention on the school are radio, television, press, special programs, and other channels especially devised.

THIS YEAR November 8-14 has been designated American Education Week. The organizations that sponsor this special school observance week are the National Education Association, the American Legion, the United States Office of Education, and the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. "Good Schools Are Your Responsibility" is the theme chosen by its sponsors and is directed to the individual citizen. Daily topics are suggested around which activities may be planned. These topics, as planned to tie in with the American Education Week theme are as follows: Sunday—"Moral and Spiritual Foundations," Monday—"Learning the Fundamentals," Tuesday—"Building the National Strength," Wednesday—"Preparing for Loyal Citizenship,"

Thursday—"The School Board in Action," Friday—"Your Child's Teachers," Saturday—"Parent and Teacher Teamwork."

The sponsoring committee says, "American Education Week is inventory time. It is an occasion to review the purposes and accomplishments of the school. It is a time to consider school problems, needs, and plans. It is a time for self-examination. Good schools do not just happen. In each community and state the schools are what we make them."

TRUE it is not enough for parents to visit the school on one occasion when special invitations have been issued. The picture which is presented at that time may not seem typical. Neither may it appear to be a typical one when they casually "drop in" and find the teacher harassed in an effort to perform three or more tasks at once. Such three-ring circuses occur frequently in the average classroom—for example, cafeteria count, taking collections for polio fund, or Junior Red Cross may be in progress while the teacher is preparing a program for P.T.A. and maintaining a normal daily routine! Observing under planned conditions provides an opportunity for the parents to learn more about the instructional program—when the teacher can explain and demonstrate how children are taught. On the other hand, the unexpected visitor may see one reason why the teacher does not have as much time to devote to the individual child as the parent feels is needed.

From visits such as I have mentioned one value is achieved; parent and teacher have an opportunity to become acquainted under favorable conditions. Too often parents meet the teacher only when called in to "discuss a problem" or when they wish to "tell the teacher off." Such a meeting is seldom a pleasant occasion with little understanding on the part of either parent or teacher resulting from the encounter.

Teachers are aware that a more sympathetic attitude is developed when parents know what they are doing and how it is being done. They also realize that a two-way relationship is necessary—that parents, too, deserve understanding and sympathy.

Parents and citizens should concern themselves with the needs of the school within the community. They must be alert to those evil forces that are cunningly and untiringly working to destroy the educational program of this country. "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is that good men do nothing," said by Edmund Burke, a British statesman who lived in the eighteenth century. Peace cannot and will not be brought about by wars. It must exist within the minds of man. Parents and teachers must work together to preserve the peace of which Christ taught.

Does God Need Our Prayers?

By Ruby Griffiths

IN ITS SIMPLEST meaning prayer has to do with conflict. Rightly understood it is the deciding factor in a spiritual conflict. The scene of the conflict is the earth. The purpose of the conflict is to decide the control of the earth and its inhabitants.

The conflict is between the rightful Prince, Jesus—the King's Son—and the pretender—prince, Satan. The pretender is trying by force to hold the realm and to oust the rightful ruler. The rightful Prince is seeking by persuasion to win the world back to its rightful allegiance. Jesus had a fierce set-to with the pretender and, after a series of successes, won the great victory on the Resurrection morning. This victory has not stopped the war. The victor has a deep love—ambition to win, not merely against the enemy but men's hearts by their free consent. So the conflict is left open for man's sake.

God does not use violent, physical force. In sharp contrast, physical force is one of Satan's chief weapons. There are two interesting facts to be noted: first Satan can use it only as he secures man as his ally and uses it through him; second, in using it he has with great cunning sought to shift the sphere of action. He knows that in the realm of the spirit he is at a disadvantage; he is defeated. For there are moral forces on the other side greater than any at his command—the forces of purity and righteousness. He simply cannot withstand Jesus, who is the personification of purity and righteousness. It was on this moral ground, in this spirit sphere, that Jesus won the great victory. He ran the gauntlet of the terrible and fierce tests through those human years and came out the victor, with his purity and righteousness unstained.

Prayer is insisting upon Jesus' victory, and the retreat of the enemy on each particular spot and heart and problem concerned. Prayer must be definite and persistent, because Satan yields only when he must. He is continually renewing his attacks, therefore the ground taken must be held against him in the victor's name.

The victor's best ally in this conflict is man, who remains on the battlefield, who puts his life in full touch with his Savior-victor, and who believingly claims victory in Jesus' name through prayer. He is the one foe Satan cannot withstand.

IF WE COULD SEE the spirit beings and spirit conflicts, we would see the enemy's defeat in numberless instances through the persistent praying of someone allied to Jesus in the spirit of his life. Every such man who freely gives himself over to God, and gives himself up to prayer, is giving God a new spot in the contested territory on which to erect his banner of victory.

Prayer is man giving God a footing on the contested territory of this earth. The man, in full touch of purpose with God, praying, insistently praying, is God's footing on enemy's soil. A man given over wholly to God, established a new headquarters on the battlefield from which to work.

This world is God's prodigal son. He has spent a wealth of thought on a plan for winning the prodigal back home. Angels and men have marveled over the plan, its detail, its strength and wisdom, its tenderness. He needs man for his plan. He will use man. The pathway from God to the human heart is through a human heart.

"Prayer from God's side is communication between himself and his allies in the enemies' country." Prayer is not persuading God. It does not influence his purpose. It is not winning him over to our side. Whatever of heart yearning there may be that causes us to pray is from him.

True prayer moves in a circle. It begins in the heart of God, sweeps down to the human heart upon the earth, intersecting the battlefield, then goes back to its starting point.

God yearns greatly for his poor prodigal world and each person in it. He longs to have the effects of sin removed and the original image restored. He takes the initiative. Yet everything that is done for man must be through man's will and by his consent. There are many stubborn obstacles in the way, but they are not numberless nor insurmountable. The cunning pretender-prince is a past master in the art of handling men. The wills are warped and weakened, conscience blurred, minds dulled beyond ordinary hope of being made keen again. Sin has not only stained life but warped the judgment, sapped the will, and blurred the mental vision. God has a hard time, because every change must be through these warped wills.

His purpose is simple. In Jeremiah 33: 3 we find, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." If a man call he has already turned his face toward God. His will has acted doubly—away from the opposite and toward God, a simple but tremendous step. The calling is a point of contact with God where their purposes become the same. The caller is beset with difficulties and longs for freedom. God who speaks saw the difficulties long ago and wanted to remove them. Now there is an agreement, and through the willing God eagerly works out his purpose.

PRAYER HAS TWO PARTS: first, a God to give, and second, a man to receive. Man's willingness is God's channel to the earth. God never crowds or coerces. Everything he does for and through man, he does with man's consent. He can do nothing for the man with shut hand and shut life. There must be an open hand, heart, and life through which God can give what he longs to give. Our prayer is God's opportunity to get into the world that would shut him out. He needs our prayers. Prayer is a testimony to God and to fellow men that the one who prays can be depended upon to be an instrument to help establish God's purposes.

Does prayer influence God? Yes, and no. It does not influence his purpose, but it does influence his action. Every right thing ever prayed for, God has already purposed to do. But he does nothing without our consent. He has been hindered in his purposes by our lack of willingness. When we learn his purposes and make them our prayers, we are giving him the opportunity to act. Our willingness checkmates Satan's opposition. It opens the path to God and rids it of the obstacles. So the road is cleared for the free action already planned.

"I am found of them who seek after me, I give unto all them that ask of me; I am not found of them that sought me not, or that inquireth not after me."—Isaiah 65: 1, Inspired Version. God will not enter a man's heart without his consent, and Satan cannot. God would reach men through men, and Satan must.

PRAYER CONCERNS THREE: God to whom we pray, we who pray, and the evil one against whom we pray. The purpose of prayer is not to persuade or influence God, but to join forces with him against the enemy.

The winning quality in prayer is persistence. Many who fight well up to this point lose their grip here, and so lose all. The Master tells us today, "Man ought always to pray, and not to faint."

Satan is an active factor in the lives of men. He believes in the potency of prayer. He fears it. Prayer overcomes him. It defeats his plans and himself. He cannot successfully stand before it. Prayer is insistence upon God's will being done. It needs for its practice a man in sympathetic touch with God. Its basis is Jesus' victory. It overcomes the will of the great traitor-leader.

WHAT WOULD you answer if God were to say to you: "I want to give you a special gift—and extra because I love you. What would you like to have?" What would be your answer? S. D. Gordon in his book, Quiet Talks on Prayer, gives us his answer. "Dear God, you choose; I choose what you choose." God could choose something better than we could think of. We might be thinking of a dollar; he would think of double eagles. We might think about the biggest, juiciest blackberries we could imagine; but we do not know what blackberries are beside the sort he knows. Prayer does not and cannot change the purpose of God. Prayer does not change his action. He cannot give against our wills, and our willingness as expressed by our asking gives him the opportunity to do as he has already planned.

The greatest prayer that can be offered is small in size but mighty in power. Four short words—"Thy will be done." God, wise, strong, good, and loving, is kin to us. We belong to him. We are his children by creation and by a new creation in Jesus Christ. He is ours by his own act. That is the "thy"—a God, wise, strong, pure, and loving.

God's will is his desires, his purposes, that which he wishes to occur and that to which he gives his strength that it may occur. The earth is his creation. Men are his children. His plan is the wisest that can be thought of—and more. He is ever working out the best thing possible under every circumstance. He could often do more and do it in much less time if human wills were more pliant to his.

A man's will is the man in action within the limits of his power. God's will for man is himself in action, within the limits of our co-operation. The greatest strength is revealed in intelligent yielding. Here the prayer is expressing the utter willingness of a man that God's will shall be done in and through him.

"Thy will be done"—that is, be accomplished, be brought to pass.

These words stand for action in its perfected state. Thy will be fully accomplished in its whole sweep and in all its items. It speaks not only the earnest desire of the heart praying, but the set purpose that everything in the life is held subject to the doing of this purpose of God. It means surrender of purpose that has utterly changed the lives of the strongest men in order that the purposes of God might be dominant. "Thy will be done" is the great ruling purpose-prayer that has been the pathway of God in all his great doings among men. The whole thought in prayer is to get the will of God done in our lives on this earth.

IT MAY HELP to remember that God has a first and second will for us. He always prefers that his first will be accomplished in us. But where we will not be wooed up to that height, he comes down to the highest level we are willing to attain, and works with us there. God is ever doing the best for human lives that can be done through the human will. There are two things that modify God's first will for us. First of all, the degree of our intelligent willingness that he shall have his full sway; and second, the circumstances of our lives. Each of us is the center of a circle of people, an ever-changing circle. If we are in touch with him, God speaks through each of us to his circle. Our experiences with God and his dealings with us under varying circumstances are part of his message to that circle. God is trying to win men. He needs us to help him. We must be perfectly willing to have his will done—and more, we must trust him to know what is best for us in our circumstances.

God needs our prayers so that his will may be done in us and through us on this earth. He cannot enter into our hearts and lives unless we open them to him through our prayers.

"Being Dead Yet Speaketh"

One of the strong supporters of the Reorganization was Charles Derry, English-born American, who was known to more than one generation of Saints, since he lived for nearly a hundred years and always bore a strong testimony to the Restoration Movement.

Not long after the "Herald" was published, this man—later an elder and a high priest—wrote an article for it. It is found on pages 268 to 274 of Volume 2 (1862). We believe it contains much interesting and valuable information about the Latter Day Movement during its most critical period, for which reason we believe that this man, though dead, "yet speaketh."—
ISRAEL A. SMITH

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH: Having learned from the True Latter Day Saint Herald that there is an agent for the same in Birmingham, England, and having once had a large circle of friends in that vicinity, I desire to answer the oft-repeated question, "Why did you leave Utah?"

In order to be rightly understood, I will first give my reasons for going there. On or about the third of October, 1847, I received the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and with them the "pearl of great price," according to the promise of Him who cannot lie. The evidence of my faith in that gospel was before the world, manifested in six years of hard, laborious toil, in the midst of circumstances the most adverse—poverty, revilings, contempt, and almost every kind of abuse that the world and pretended friends could inflict without resorting to death, and that some desired to effect but were baffled according to their own confession. . . .

I also found that the majority of those who received this gospel were honest in heart and were filled with the love of God in a preeminent degree. This made my soul rejoice, for I had found a people whose interest was one, and who endeavored to imitate their divine head. I wished to live and die with them. I said this people shall be my people, and their God my God.

In the process of time, I was taught that it was my duty to gather my family from the wicked nations and go to the valley of Utah, there to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly, and that I might worship him with a purer worship than I could do, surrounded with the pernicious influences of the old world. I was told that there intelligence flowed from the eternal fountains, unalloyed with the base mixture of error, that there "it was without money or price"; that there my children would be surrounded with a pure moral atmosphere, and could be brought up in fear of the Lord without the thousand enticements that beset them in the old world.

ALL THIS I was taught to expect, yet I by no means expected to find every man and woman perfect, but I did expect to see them as a people trying to perfect themselves by an enlightened obedience to the divine precepts they had received, waging war with the depravity of the human heart and curbing those avaricious and debasing propensities that predominate in the human character and lead to the oppression of the fatherless and widow and the treading down of the poor and the needy. Yes, I expected that a war would be waged against these evils, in the love of truth and God; that the widow's rights would be maintained, the cry of the poor heard, the feeble knee made strong, and honest industry protected, honored, and blest.

But judge of my disappointment, if you can, when I found the opposite of all this in that pretended asylum of the oppressed. When my eyes beheld it, however, I did not for one moment think that such was the settled policy of the church. I attributed it to the weakness of man, and the worst view I allowed myself to take of it was that a few bad men had crept in among us and were acting thus under a cover of sanctity, and that ere long their hypocrisy would be manifested and their deeds discountenanced by the church. But time and experience taught me that there, as in the old world, the biggest rogues rode the fastest horses, and were hailed as the best of men, and such were put into all the responsible positions and sustained there by those whose duty it was to frown down such creatures and their acts. Hence I learned what I was unwilling to acknowledge; the abominations practiced were winked at and consequently sanctioned by the authorities. Yes, I was forced to the conclusion that the settled policy of those men was oppression, ambition, gold, and lust. In fact, to use a favorite but vulgar maxim of Brigham Young, it was "Tickle me, Billy, tickle me, do; you tickle me, and I'll tickle you." The correct rendering of which is, "If you will sustain me in my projects of ambition and lust, I will sustain you in your baseness, and we will make it pay."

WHO DOES NOT KNOW that as the head of a community, state, or nation is, so will be the people to a great extent, although, thank God, there will be honorable exceptions among them, as there are in Utah.

*When the head is sick, the whole heart is faint,
And the spreading disease produces complaint.*

But I am sorry to say that it exerts such a debasing influence that the people seem to lose sight of each other's welfare in their own selfish desires, hence that pure cementing confidence which the gospel brings is gone, and this fact is so universally admitted among them that Brigham tells them "to treat every man as a rogue until they have proved him to be an honest man." A very dangerous precept indeed, for the master says "whatsoever measure you mete unto others, it shall be meted unto you again."

This being the council upon which they act, the natural consequence is that confidence and love take their flight to seek a more congenial clime. I have heard it stated there, by those who felt how hard it was to bear the weight of the iron hand, that it was impossible for an honest man to live in Utah. No wonder, then, that Brigham Young should confess in a sermon, published in the Deseret News, February 19, 1862, "there is not another community, according to our numbers, so infested with thieves as we are." Often have I been asked by honest but disappointed souls, "When will confidence be restored?" My answer invariably has been, "When these people learn to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them." Yet there are no people that make such a boast of their righteousness as the people of Utah do, which reminds me of the words of an old prophet, when speaking of a similar people that departed from the Lord, that they would profess to "lean upon the Lord and say, Is not the Lord among us? Our works are in the dark who seeth and who knoweth us."

I HAVE ALREADY INTIMATED that I found, by experience, that it is a system of oppression, and that far worse than the people endured in their native land. I will not proceed to prove this point. I will commence then with the emigration fund. First comes the ten, thirteen, and fifteen pound companies. Those that could raise these various sums, paid them over to the authorities at Liverpool, expecting that the church would furnish them teams and equipment to carry them to Utah, and that when there, those teams would be divided or sold, and their means divided among those that had paid for the same; but when they arrived there and each individual expected to receive his portion, instead of this being the case, the church brand was put on every animal and the name of the church, (B.Y.) put on the wagons, and even the utensils were claimed by this great personage, the church. Even if some poor man had found a stray ox, cow, or horse on the plains, the captain of his company would claim it on behalf of the church. And be it remembered that the wagons and utensils were worth more when they arrived there than they were in the States, and the cattle, after they had been wintered, would be of double value, and a great many were when they arrived there; but the poor man must be content if he gets there free of debt, without ever thinking of having what, in his simplicity, he supposed was his right. But if they had dealt candidly with him, and told him what to expect, he could have furnished his own team and thereby have secured it to himself at the journey's end; but then, they [the church] would have gained nothing by the affair.

THE NEXT RUSE was to persuade the honest, hard-working man who, during his long and arduous toils had procured himself a home on his native soil, that it was his duty to sell the same and donate the proceeds to the P.E. Fund, with the understanding that it was to be used for his emigration, and then to get him to sign a bond in Liverpool to repay the full amount of his emigration as soon as possible after he arrived there (in Utah), telling the preposterous falsehood that it would be an easy matter for him to do so; hence, if he lived to reach his destination, he had the satisfaction to find himself in a strange land without a home, or any means in his pocket, bare of clothing, and of course destitute of every other comfort of life, with a debt upon his hands that would cost him years of labor to get rid of. But should he be arrested on his journey by the icy hand of death, the burden would fall upon his wife and children, and they would be required to liquidate the same. . . .

Hundreds of souls can bear testimony to this fact. Of course they had to wait before these poor creatures could satisfy their demands; but these demands were exacted if it was ten years later. In some cases the poor woman found another protector for herself and children; in such cases the man had to liquidate the debt, or if he demurred, his property was taken by force, although he was perfectly ignorant of the transaction of the debt until after his marriage, as was the case in some instances. . . .

WE WILL NOW LOOK at the degrading principle of polygamy and see wherein that is oppression. We are told in the pretended revelation on that subject that whoever will not obey it will be damned. This is continually rung in the poor man's ears and if he does not comply with it he is denounced and ridiculed by the "faithful," and finally given to understand that the time is nigh at hand when all who will not comply with the "celestial law," will be cut off. Hence, in his desire to do as he is told and to avoid the odium cast upon all monogamists, many a man rushes into polygamy although the wife he has already is but illy provided for and her little ones are half-naked. Here, then, his mental and physical strength is taxed beyond endurance to support his numerous children to say nothing of the anguish he must feel if his heart be not dead to every principle of love and virtue, in seeing the envious looks, hearing the angry words, and witnessing the daily quarrels that occur in his family, caused in some measure by a want of the means to live. Tell me, you who are versed in the laws of God and the history of his dealings with his people, did he ever institute a system so debasing to the human mind, so oppressive to his creature man as this, which binds him in fetters the most galling and degrades his posterity to the lowest degree?

To his people on the western continent he said, "I will not suffer . . . that the cries of the fair daughters of this people, shall come up unto me against the men of my people. . . . For they shall not lead away the fair daughters of my people because of their tenderness, save I shall visit them with a sore curse" (Jacob 2:41, 42). Is it not oppression of the heaviest kind to compel the people to do so, when God has declared there that it is an abomination in his sight? Is it not false for them to say that they will be looked upon as honorable men, even if they should not comply with it? The pretended revelation says they will be damned, and they do not damn men that they suppose are honorable; but if they damn them, God will not, but will exalt them for their love of truth and virtue.

IT IS NOT ONLY oppressive to the man, but imagine, if you can, how that poor woman feels who has united her destiny to a man for life. They have "lived and loved together" for years, and she has borne him a family and felt the joy and pride of a wife and mother; but now, the heart that has hitherto been all her own is divided; it is no longer hers. The smiles that were given to her are lavished upon another who is young and beautiful as she once was. Is it any wonder that a settled pallor is on her cheek; that melancholy has robbed her eye of its brightness, which is only lighted up at intervals as the memory of the past rushes on the mind and she realizes the dark, dismal, cheerless present? and not then with a gleam of joy as in happier days; but with a demoniac gleam of hatred and indignation at the poor, misled creature that has crawled into her bed and stolen the light, the love, and the heart that was once all her own?

Was it any wonder that God should thunder his anathemas against that people that should thus cause the cries of the fair daughters of his people to arise to heaven against them? Is it any wonder that God should "be a witness against those" that thus deal treacherously with the wife of their youth, seeing they do indeed "cover the altar of the Lord with tears and with weeping" (Malachi 2: 12-14)? . . .

ANOTHER MEANS of oppression is the perverted law of tithing. The real law on this subject is that the surplus property shall be put into the hands of the bishop "and after that those that have been thus tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually." But how is it carried out in Utah? The man who has not sufficient means to provide himself with the absolute necessities of life, much less having a surplus, is tithed one tenth of his time, one tenth of what he raises, and one tenth of what property he has when he arrives there (this last is sometimes exacted in Liverpool before he starts).

Now, I ask every candid mind if this is not the heaviest kind of oppression? Nay, is it not robbery to take the bread from the mouths of those half-naked children, and especially when we understand that this is no voluntary contribution. It is compulsory upon all, and if they will not pay it, their little means will be taken from them under cover of law. But it is not so in the law of God, every duty of the Saint must be voluntary or God does not accept the same, neither will his servants be found compelling them. God says, "I hate robbery." Neither will he take away that agency which he has given unto man. If he were to do so, man would be a mere machine. Virtue would have no place in his soul, in fact in the case of man the word would have no meaning at all, and it would be useless to talk of rewarding every man according to his works.

But then, for what is it expended? We were told in England that it provided for the poor and needy; but I think I am safe in saying that the first widow, the first fatherless child, and the first poor person in any situation has yet to be supplied

New Eyes

Part I

By Ruby Strand

PAMELA CHAPMAN stood on the back porch of her home, her hands in the pockets of her jeans. Leaves fluttered down from the spreading maple. Cicadas sang in the dusk, and now and then the weird hoot of an owl drifted through the autumn air. Pam, however, had ears for none of this.

"Mother and Dad act as if I am a mere infant!" she muttered to herself as she walked dejectedly toward the old rocker under the tree. Leaning back against the chair she stared off into the approaching darkness, her eyes smarting with tears. Her heart pounded. She hugged herself across her chest to keep warm. "I'm absolutely, positively the most miserable girl in all the world," she sobbed. "All the other girls—well, practically all—date at thirteen. I don't see why I can't. Why do my folks have to be so old-fashioned?" As she thought of the wonderful time she would be missing the following night, tears of self-pity came unchecked. "Just because I have old fogies for parents—and I won't let them take me! I'm no baby that has to be pushed around in a perambulator. I'll just stay home!"

INSIDE THE HOUSE, seated in the living room, sat the two "ogres." They looked very average. No one could have dreamed they were the cause of such unhappiness. Mr. Chapman rested in his favorite chair, his feet upon an ottoman for comfort. The evening paper lay on his lap, unopened. His wife was rocking across the room from him. Her knitting needles clicked steadily, the soft blue wool that was to be her daughter's sweater taking shape. The man watched her. Then in exasperation he exclaimed, "How can you sit there so calmly after the—the—storm?"

Mrs. Chapman looked up. "I do it to quiet my nerves, dear. But then, that wasn't so bad. In fact," she chuckled, "it ran pretty true to form. She didn't get her way, so she threw a tantrum. Your daughter has inherited somebody's temper, I fear."

"Humph!" He grinned sheepishly and scratched his head. Mr. Chapman always scratched his head when he was disturbed. "Really, though, Mamie, something is wrong. Why do we have to have these scenes? I feel like Simon Lagrue or Lagree or whatever that fellow's name was, after one of these battles of will. But we can't let down the bars. We've got to cling to our principles."

"I wish—" Mrs. Chapman spoke softly, as though to herself.

But her husband heard. "You wish what? That we had chosen a different vocation? Is parenthood too much for us?"

"Of course not. I hadn't intended saying anything of the kind. I was only wishing we had greater wisdom to cope with the problem."

"Namely, one headstrong, unreasonable young upstart who thinks because she is now big enough to wear her mother's clothes and is in junior high that she is a full-grown woman and can make her own decisions. Why—why—" He opened his paper to the sports page. "Think I'll read about something that will soothe my nerves—like a prize fight. Kids!" He settled down more comfortably in his chair.

"It isn't that bad, George," soothed his wife. But a troubled frown rested upon her face. "We're not handling this right, I know," she said to herself. "Someplace along the way we've made the wrong turn. If only we could have seen the danger signals and had been ready to cope with them, but she just changed overnight! It seems only yesterday that she was still playing with her dolls and had no greater problem than a broken head on one of them. Now she is sure her heart is broken. Dates! I wonder how the folks helped me over these bumps. I try to remember when I was her age." Her thoughts wandered on. "Poor child. She'll be catching cold out there. I'd better call her." Mrs. Chapman could hear the faint squeak of the old rocker, beneath the tree. "She always goes there to feel sorry for herself," she mused. Suddenly the noise stopped.

Just as she rose to go the back screen door slammed and the telephone clanged in the hall.

"I'll get it," yelled the girl. "Oh, hello, Barry. No, I can't go. Yes, and it's no use. Might as well try to move two rocks the size of Gibraltar. The reason? Ask me another foolish question and I'll give you a foolish answer." She laughed mirthlessly. "Well, thanks anyway, Barry. See you tomorrow. So long."

WHEN BARRY NEWTON, the young fellow on the other end of the line, walked away from the telephone he met his mother coming toward him. "I came to use the phone, dear. Didn't know you were in here. I couldn't help hearing a part of your conversation. Are you making it more difficult for Pamela and her parents?" Mrs. Newton was a widow and felt the weight of her responsibility.

"Jeepers, Mom. She's the cutest girl at school. Can I help it because she turns those big blue eyes on me?" Barry liked to tease his mother.

"Such language! You know you are just trying to show off. Pamela is a pretty girl. But seriously, Barry, you know how young she is. She has good, conscientious parents who are trying to help her to be just a girl as long as girlhood will last."

"But she is growing up whether they want her to or not. They can't keep her tied to them always. How's she ever going to learn how to stand on her own feet?"

"There's plenty of time. I don't know why it is that girls are so anxious to grow up. It's a problem. The thing is that she, and you, too, apparently, must realize that thirteen is too young to date. There are many other things that should keep a girl of that age busy and happy. There's plenty of time for dating."

"Okay, Mom. I don't want to be the cause of any family jangles. I'll pick on someone my own age to take to the wiener roast. Only, well—she's so clever and has so much sense, and I like to be with her. You should hear her talk on aeronautics. She knows as much as I do!"

There was a merry twinkle in his mother's eyes. "The ego of some people," she said, giving him a hug.

"Ego, nothing," Barry retorted, and squeezed her until she yelled for mercy. "It's just that so many girls are plain silly," he continued. "Why, Pam is just like a fellow to talk to. She's fun. I've been telling her about Graceland, and she's already saving from her allowance and has a college fund started. I've been telling her about the Book of Mormon, too, and I even gave her a copy—one of those red ones, you know. Her folks just don't appreciate her." He turned and stomped toward the door, pausing to grab a banana, an apple, and an orange from the plate on the table. "Fruit salad," he said slyly, and gave her an impish grin as he walked out the door. She could hear him singing lustily as he left.

BARRY'S MOTHER stood for a moment with a puzzled frown. Then she smiled. "Fruit salad! Oh, me, what a lad."

Almost eagerly she dialed her number. It was not the one she had intended to dial. The committee chairman could wait. She had a more urgent matter to attend to.

"Hello, Mrs. Chapman? This is Sue Newton, Barry's mother. I just had a most enlightening conversation with my son, and it has occurred to me that if you and I could get together for a visit we might be able to work out this problem with our adolescents."

"Anything!" came Mrs. Chapman's voice in reply. "I try to take it in stride—mustn't run up my blood pressure!" and she laughed. "Her father is the one that worries me. He becomes quite agitated and can't sleep. He tosses and tumbles all night long. She's just a baby to him. Do come over. Yes, tomorrow afternoon will be quite all right. I'll have a fire in the living room. These days are a bit cool. And thank you for calling. . . . Good-by."

THAT NIGHT, running true to form, George Chapman did sleep fitfully, dreaming as usual. His dream was so real that he called out in his sleep. "Pam! Pam! My baby."

Pamela, asleep in her room across the hall, was awakened. With a start she jumped and ran with fright into her parents' room. Already her mother was trying to calm her husband. "Wake up, George. What is it, dear? A bad dream?"

The frightened man sat up in bed, rubbing his eyes. When he saw that his daughter was safe he lay back down with a look of relief and utter exhaustion.

"What was the matter, Daddy?" queried Pam. In spite of their stern discipline, as she called it in her own thinking, she did love her parents. She thought of how very much she did care for them as she sat down on the side of the bed and took her father's calloused hand. George Chapman was a mechanic, a good one. Everyone said he was the best in town. As Pam looked at his toil-worn hand there suddenly welled up within her a more intense love for him than she had ever felt before. He works so hard for us, she thought. She patted his hand as though she had never really seen it before.

"Pam, I had a frightful dream," he explained. "I thought you had been to the wiener roast and on the way home your car of young people was pushed off the embankment by a drunken driver. It was so real. They were bringing your beautiful body home—in pieces." He shuddered. "Oh, Pam. I'll never forget it."

Mrs. Chapman tried to quiet him. "George, I told you that Dagwood sandwich was too heavy for you just before going to bed. Bread and milk would have been far more sensible."

"I know. Mother always knows best." Lifting Pam's hand to his lips, he said, "Scoot back to bed, sweetheart. Your old dad will promise not to disturb you again."

"But, Daddy, the dream. What else happened? It sounds terribly exciting."

"Scram." Mr. Chapman was already somewhat ashamed of having disturbed the household.

"He's right, dear," put in her mother. "This is no time to be having bedside chats, especially such eerie tales as your father can dream up."

The girl kissed them good night and returned to bed but not to sleep. And neither did her parents sleep right away, for she could hear them talking in low whispers across the hall. "Oh, I do love them, dear God," she prayed. "Only please help them to see my side of things."

Higher Education and the Principles of the Kingdom

By Dayle Bethel

An address given August 9, 1953, to the University of Iowa Student Group

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself, and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

ALL YEAR we have been singing the praises of higher education. We have patted ourselves on the back and told each other how indispensable we are to the church and its work. We have thought of ourselves as intellectual pioneers blazing the theological trail for the church to follow. We have tended to define the role of the college student primarily as that of critic—implying, I presume, that criticism of the church, its policies, and its leaders would tend to steer the organization in the paths in which we, by virtue of our greater insight and understanding, believe it should go.

This is all very well. Those of you who know me are aware of my enthusiasm for higher education. I would not for a minute minimize the value of the contribution which the highly trained individual can make. Neither would I minimize the value of the increased insight, understanding, and ability to grasp the various facets of complex problems which educational experience can provide.

But it is not of this that I would talk with you this morning. Rather, I should like to look at the "other side of the coin" and point out some of the limitations of higher education as it exists today and some of the dangers of which the church, especially the young people of the church, should be aware. And there are such limitations and dangers. How else can we account for the high casualty rate among college people? Some of you, I know, believe that the church is at fault here, that it has not kept pace with developments in modern educational and scientific fields, that it has not sufficiently challenged the interests and abilities of college people. But this, I sincerely believe, is an inadequate explanation. These losses are not due to inadequacies upon the part of the church. (I still insist that, if anything, the church is so far ahead of us that we have not yet fully grasped its significance.) They are due, rather, to certain characteristics of higher education itself, characteristics which constitute a potential source of danger for every Reorganized Latter Day Saint youth who treads the halls of academic learning.

Such a statement will need clarification and support, the more so because I am speaking in this traditional stronghold of intellectualism. One characteristic to which I refer is the unquestioned prestige enjoyed by education and educators in contemporary American society, especially if the term "scientific" is attached to them. Because of this prestige the undergraduate tends to swallow hook, line, and sinker, as the saying goes, everything which is thrown at him in lectures and textbooks. He is unable to distinguish between fact and theory; between verified hypothesis and unproved assumption or speculation. To make matters worse it is customary to present tentative theoretical positions to the undergraduate as dogmatic truths.

Needless to say, much of this kind of "truth," by virtue of the fact that it is tentative and may prove to be entirely wrong a few years hence, will conflict with some of the basic beliefs and teachings of the church. These beliefs and teachings are, we claim, based upon the solid rock of divine revelation. If this is the case they will be eternal and unchangeable. (Please note that I am not saying that our insight and understanding of them cannot increase. This, in fact, is the very essence of revelation.) In too many cases the undergraduate, when confronted with such conflicting situations, discards the beliefs of his church as old-fashioned and accepts in their place the tentative and often highly questionable results of human theorizing.

I HAVE SUGGESTED that one reason for tendency of religious beliefs to come out second best is the prestige enjoyed by the educator and scientist. A second reason is the ill repute among educational and scientific circles of anything referred to as "religious." This is not difficult to understand. In the first place many of the criticisms leveled at historical Christianity are fully justified. The church did stifle and delay the development of learning and science. The dogmatic authority of the pope was and is incompatible with freedom of thought and inquiry. Education and science as we know them today could not come of age until the hold of the church over men's minds was broken. No people should recognize this better than we who claim the degradation of the original church as the very reason for our existence.

In the second place, the scientist, in so far as he functions in the role of a scientist, deals only with phenomena that he can objectively observe. This follows from the very definition of science and the scientific method. Religious experience, because it professes to involve relationships with a Deity whose behavior cannot be objectively observed, lies outside the realm of scientific concern. This is neither good nor bad. It is just the nature of science. But it does contribute to the inferiority complex of religion in academic circles.

THIS SUGGESTS a third characteristic of higher education which causes difficulty for Reorganized Latter Day Saint college youth. It would not be correct to say that modern higher education is atheistic. American colleges and universities are traditionally based upon a belief in Deity, although in many cases it has become little more than lip service. It would be more nearly correct to say that for all intents and purposes Deity is simply left out of the picture. Emphasis is upon human problems, human accomplishments and achievements. Seldom can you find even a hint that God is concerned with human affairs. If anything, the implication is to the contrary. The idea of a divine plan or purpose for humanity is ridiculed by modern social scientists. The church youth who has not become aware of the nature of higher education absorbs these attitudes and points of view indiscriminately. To repeat again a worn-out phrase, "he swallows everything, hook, line, and sinker."

To the extent that this occurs he becomes incapable of participating in or contributing toward the goals and purposes of the church. And why is this? Simply because many of these attitudes and points of view are directly opposed to everything the church stands for. To begin with, the whole point of the Restoration Movement is that there is a divine purpose and plan for humanity; that God desires, furthermore, to associate intimately with human beings in the carrying out of that plan. As Tommy Vincent has put it, the divine plan involves the establishment of a "God-directed society" in contrast to the many attempts to establish Utopian societies which have been "man-directed." Only as the individual attempts to fit himself for participation in a "God-directed" society can he contribute toward the work of the church. It will take more than academic learning to do that. One is almost tempted to suggest that it will be in spite of academic learning.

BUT ON THE OTHER HAND, I would repeat again that I am not denying the need for or the value of education. Neither am I saying that the Reorganized Latter Day Saint youth should go through college with a closed mind. Rather, I am suggesting that when he is confronted with what appears to be a conflict between the beliefs of his church and current theories of higher education, the wise course will be for him to hold fast to the beliefs of his church and keep the conflicting theory or assumption in temporary abeyance.

I believe this is what Dr. Cheville had in mind when he used to tell us of his row of imaginary pegs. Whenever he comes across a problem to which he cannot find the answer he simply hangs it on one of these pegs and leaves it there until changing situations and growing understanding bring clarification.

There are numerous illustrations of this in my particular field of higher learning. Some of them I have used before. For instance, about fifty years ago Sigmund Freud came up with a concept of the human personality that was completely at variance with that of the church. For years "Freud" was practically a password in educational circles. Today the Freudian concept of personality is almost completely discredited, among sociologists and social psychologists at least, while time has tended to vindicate the position of the church.

About the turn of the century, too, it was popular to estimate the archaeological remains in Central and South America to be at least 40,000 and perhaps 100,000 years old. This clearly could not be reconciled with the message of the Book of Mormon. Today it is generally agreed by anthropologists that the age of these remains was grossly overestimated; a date of from 2000 to 3000 B.C. is now suggested as being more probable. This later estimate is within the range of the Book of Mormon civilizations.

NOT ALL OF the problems have thus been solved. One such problem has to do with the origin of the American Indian. The majority of anthropologists are in agreement that the American Indian is of Mongoloid origin and that he entered the New World by way of Bering Strait. This certainly conflicts with some of the basic beliefs of the church. There are, furthermore, numerous perplexing aspects of the problem which at present seem unanswerable. For instance, it has been found that among the Maya, a perfectly respectable Book of Mormon stock, there is a high incidence of the Mongolian spot. This is a bluish mark which appears on the lower part of the back of most Oriental babies. It is a typically Mongoloid feature.

And then there are other considerations such as numerous cultural similarities between Asia and the New World. There must be some explanation for these things, but I do not know what it is. I do know, however, that my faith in the Book of Mormon message will remain. It may have to expand. It may have to include, perhaps, a migration of Mongolians to the New World. I may have to include other factors which bear upon it as they are brought to light through study and research. But of the basic truth of the message itself I am as sure as that I stand here this morning.

And this is the major import of my discussion. I believe it is essential that we help church young people approach their academic experience with such an attitude; i.e., a deep and abiding faith in the principles of the church. A faith, furthermore, that will not be bent by every wind of doctrine or theory. In other words, I am saying that when a principle of the Restoration Movement conflicts with a current theory of higher education, it should be the educational theory and not the Restoration principle which is first questioned.

THE VIEW of higher education here presented carries with it three important implications. First of all, if it be valid, the idea that college students are somehow different from other members of the church, that they need a special spiritual diet, and that they are, by virtue of their superior wisdom, the logical leaders of the church will have to be discarded. College students are not different; they do not need a special diet; and leadership in the church is not a product of academic training. It is and should be selected, rather, on the basis of the total moral, intellectual, and spiritual qualifications of individuals. Academic experience is but one aspect of this total development. When the time comes that we select our leadership upon the basis of academic training, at that time we will become incapable of carrying out the divine commission to build the kingdom.

A second implication of the position is that the view of the college student as a critic, as one of "those great minds who in every age point out the ills of society," is largely a myth. In the first place if you will look around you, you will find some pretty little minds in the academic world. In the second place we do not need critics in the business of building the kingdom. We have too many critics now who do nothing but stand on the sidelines and criticize. We need more people who are willing to roll up their sleeves and get to work. Only then will their criticism have any significance, but then it will no longer be criticism but mutual suggestion.

The third implication can best be stated by referring again to the Scripture, "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom." To put it another way, the kingdom will never be built up if we attempt to do the job to suit ourselves or according to the specification of academic learning. It simply will not work any more than will some of our complicated modern machinery work if we fail to follow the directions for assembling and using it. As university and professional people we need to take seriously this admonition. It will save us from making the kind of mistakes that we came close to making in our discussion last Sunday. According to the divine plan no one can assist in the work of the kingdom except he be a reborn, a new, a changed individual. Yet last week some of us were ready to insist that we must change the plan in order to fit the individual as we find him in contemporary American society. To do this would be to cut the very heart out of the Zionics program. It would change its whole intent and purpose. This illustrates well the fallacy of the belief that academic people have sufficient insight and understanding to direct the course of the church.

IF WE, as university and professional people, really want to make a contribution to the church, we will cease to criticize; we will cease to spend our time and energies debating such technicalities as the proper age for baptism or whether we should have opened or closed Communion. We will cease to sing the praises of higher education in order to inflate our own egos. Instead we will direct our attention to more pressing and vital problems. We will point out and define the pitfalls in higher education so that each Reorganized Latter Day Saint youth that comes along will not have to encounter them alone and perhaps lose his way as a result. We will seek to gain a fuller understanding of the "principles of the law of the kingdom," and relate our various fields to the total plan, rather than say, as we have tended to in the past, "Here is the knowledge of my field. The church will have to conform to it." As we do these things we will become an indispensable part of the church but not until then. As we do these things the business of the kingdom will be furthered as a result.

Does God Need Our Prayers?

of Eden. Christ came with the gospel plan for restoring man to his native environment from which he had fallen. Prayer is the open window of the soul through which there comes from the presence of God the life-giving refreshment of his Spirit. If we close the window of prayer, the air will soon stagnate and we will sicken and die spiritually. "Ye must pray always, and not faint." As air and light enter a house through windows, so the light, warmth, and life of the Spirit of God enter our souls through prayer; "and ye receive the Spirit through prayer" (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 16).

Let us open wide the windows of prayer that the glorious sunlight of God's Spirit may shine into our lives to quicken us and empower us to rise to the great challenge of his work in these latter days.

(The last two paragraphs are from Roy Weldon's article in the Herald, August 3, 1953. The book, Quiet Talks on Prayer, by S. D. Gordon is the source for the other material.)

"Being Dead Yet Speaketh"

from that source, unless it is the widows of the prominent dead among them.

One thing I do know, I never saw anyone who really needed it receive any benefit from it while I was there, which was four years and a half. Even those poor men that work on the public works could obtain but a scanty pittance, and that mostly dry bread. And when the poor, weary, worn, sunburnt laborers applied in 1855 for something more than dry bread, they were told by a pretended prophet, "Damn it, dip it in the creek and wet it, if you cannot eat it dry," and their wives, who were very bare of clothing were told to go home and mend their dresses instead of hanging around the tithing office to see what they could get.

BUT ENOUGH, I have told the truth which thousands, both in and out of Utah, can bear testimony to, and in those truths you will find my reasons for leaving Utah. My every hope was blasted. The peace, love, and righteousness that had been pictured to my mind were not there. Their boasted family government was only a loose, reckless negligence that left the young mind to grow up without restraint or instruction, and I do know that I have never seen a community of the same number that so utterly neglected the culture of the rising generation as do the people in Utah. This state of things is not confined to the mass, but the children of the leaders are accounted the biggest rowdies in the Territory.

I have not made the above statements from a desire to injure or misrepresent those people, but from a sense of duty and a conscientious belief that this letter may be productive of good to those for whom it is intended. I am aware that in publishing these things to the world, I run the risk of incurring the hatred and displeasure of the Utah leaders; but my trust is in that God who gave me life, and who has promised to protect me from evil so long as I do his will or until I have finished my labors on this earth. Thousands who have left Utah, when they see this, will remember a great number of evils practiced there that are not recorded here, but I think enough is written to show that oppression is their modus operadi; and ambition, power, and lust the objects at which they aim. And if I am successful in saving one poor family the misery and degradation which is realized in going there, I shall thank God that my labors have not altogether been in vain.

I subscribe myself the friend of humanity at large, and especially a friend of suffering, bleeding Zion.

Letters

From an Eighty-four-year-old Member

I wish to thank all who have stopped at my place recently. Just a few days ago some members stopped to ask about my signs which bear the letters L. D. S.; I told them I had belonged to the church for seventy-one years and have tried to keep the Word of Wisdom. (I was eighty-four last June, but many people guess my age from fifty-five to sixty.)

Every morning I ask the Father to give me a chance to let my light shine in someone's path so I can lead that person to Him. I watch especially for those of Lamanite descent and show them the Book of Mormon. Some come here in the winter to pick beans. A few have seemed very interested in our church.

I invite anyone coming Highway 441 to stop a moment. It does me much good.

The Lord Is Good

This last year has been of great sorrow for me because of the passing of my mother. She had been my companion for most of the past twelve years, and I miss her very much. But God has been good to me, and even though I have suffered this great loss, the year has been one of spiritual gain. Without his help I don't think I could have stood it.

I feel most unworthy of the blessings I have received, but I know that God wants his children to seek him in humbleness and with a broken heart so that he can help them. I believe we should also pray for one another. If we do, we need have no fear that Zion shall not become a reality.

Change of Heart

When I left the States for Korea I thought it wouldn't be too bad living with people from other countries, but the longer I stayed there the more I disliked the Chinese and Koreans. As months went by I disliked them more and more. I thought that I could kill Koreans just as I could kill the Chinese when I saw what they were doing to our boys. In fact, it seemed foolish that we should bother shooting at each other when an A-bomb could kill them all off. Then I received a letter from my father, and with it a church bulletin containing an article titled "The Greatest of These Is Charity." In this article I read, "If ever in the history of man love was needed, it is now. Not just by word, but by works. The fruit of love is charity. Of ourselves we are insufficient; we need the pure love of God to love the Chinese and Russians and those near by who are not of this faith if we are to teach them, to help them know God. We can never have peace except through the love of God."

I read this, and then I read it again. The more I thought about it the more I knew it was right, so I did some earnest thinking and praying about it. Soon I came to realize that God put all men here on the earth to work out their salvation. Other people have as much right to live as I do, and if they don't know of God's way, then it is my duty as a deacon in His church to tell them about it. The best way to "tell" it is to live the kind of life God wants me to; then they will come to know the church through the example I set. I have no right to say that they are all wrong and should be killed. I must have love in my heart for them before I can help build Zion.

I need the prayers of the Saints that I can make my life a good example of God's cause. I am glad I stopped to think about this matter, because I have a much better outlook on life. I can live with these men and call them "brothers" now.

From a Member in Maine

This is my first letter to the Herald although I have wanted to write for some time. I was baptized into the Reorganized Church fifty-three years ago. I am glad that I was born into a church home, and I have never regretted my religious affiliation, although most of my life I have had to face opposition. The past four years I have been in Ellsworth, Maine, and I am happy that a mission has been started here. At present we are renting a room on the third floor of a building on Main Street; we have Sunday services, Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and women's devotionals. I am housekeeper for the Reverend Father Rice, pastor of the Holy Name Church in Machiac and his father. They are good Catholics and faithful to their church, but since taking this job I have been more grateful than ever for my own religion. It is wonderful to be where I can meet with my brothers and sisters in the faith, and I want to do my duty in whatever way I can. I hope the Saints will pray for me that I may always prove faithful to the church and all that it represents.

ELIZABETH BEAL

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Allen Greene of Santa Cruz, California, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on July 19. A reception was held for them in the dining hall at Happy Valley reunion grounds, where they are caretakers. Patriarch William Dawson was master of ceremonies, and Mrs. Edna Burdick sang several numbers appropriate for the occasion. One of the high points of the program was the reading of a family history of the honorees.

Mr. Greene is a native of Poweshiek County, Iowa, and Mrs. Greene (the former Lena Florence Montgomery) was born in Baker City, Oregon. They were married July 29, 1903, in Boise, Idaho, where they lived until 1917; then they moved to Bremerton, Washington. Four years later they made their home in Durham, California, remaining there until 1951 when they moved to Happy Valley. Both are members of the Reorganized Church.

The Greens have one son, Sidney of Durham; twin daughters: Mrs. Charles Baker of Paradise, California, and Mrs. Arthur Mosher of San Miguel, California; and another daughter, Mrs. Ira Slinger of Durham. All four children and nine of their eleven grandchildren were present for the occasion.

Question Time

Question:

When or what time will Gog and Magog and other nations with them start war in Palestine?

Idaho

E. F.

Answer:

This question may not be pin pointed as to any exact date in history, but in Ezekiel 39: 21-29, there is evidence of the fact that the final gathering of Israel is to come after the defeat of the great leader—Gog. For special reference see verse 25. This would place the rise and defeat of Gog and Magog, as mentioned by Ezekiel the prophet, sometime prior to Christ's second coming to earth.

D. T. WILLIAMS

Question:

1. In the light of this statement in Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2, "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen or sustained by the vote of the branch," how is the practice of stake presidency making nominations of presiding officers (which has come to amount to an appointment) justified?

2. How can the presiding officer be chosen by the vote of the branch when the election is held at a reunion or conference of the whole stake and perhaps six or seven hundred other people vote on the officer for any or all branches?

Missouri

MRS. D. C. C.

Answer:

The statements found in Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2 were made concerning branches and districts. Ideally stakes do not have branches. The stake itself is the unit of organization both legislatively and administratively. The stake president is the presiding officer over the stake and all its parts. For the sake of effective ministry the stake may be divided into congregations. These congregations are not autonomous. This might be compared to the group organization found in some large branches where the smaller groups carry on certain phases of the branch program. Just as the president of a branch is responsible for every group and department of the branch, so is a stake president responsible for every congregation and department within the stake. It will readily be seen, however, that he will need assistants to preside over the various congregations.

Priesthood and other leadership does not usually have equal geographic distribution. In the highly concentrated church population intended in a stake it is often advisable to choose leadership for the congregation from those who live outside the geographic bounds of the congregation. Furthermore many activities such as Zion's League, women's work, priesthood training, etc., may cut across congregational lines and be organized on a stake-wide basis. Decisions, therefore, involving the utilization of man power and the development of policy and program are a concern of the total stake and cannot be made individually by congregations. This includes the selection of the presiding officers of the congregations. These officers who assist the stake president are chosen or sustained in a stake business meeting.

The stake president has the right to nominate those who will assist him as presiding officers of each congregation. This is not an appointment. Any member of the stake may present another nomination. If this nominee should receive the majority vote in the stake business meeting he will be declared elected. It is the democratic right of the people to support the recommendation of their presiding officers or to reject them. If they support recommendations, however, they ought not to feel that they have lost their democratic privileges in doing so.

The official statement of the church given in Rules and Resolutions, page 21, Section VI, paragraph 35, is as follows:

Stakes are the most highly co-ordinated units of church organization. Ideally, a stake is not an association of branches, but a well-integrated organization of related congregations. For this reason it is advisable that all the congregations in the stake shall be under the supervision, direct or indirect, of the stake presidency. The presiding officers of these congregations being assistants to the stake presidency, the selection of these congregational presiding officers should be made at the stake conferences, with the right of nomination resting concurrently with the stake presidency and the people. The value of the high priestly ministry in stake organization cannot be fully enjoyed except when these high priests and their associate ministers operate freely throughout the stake under the direction of the stake presidency.

Question:

Psalms 8: 5 and Hebrews 2: 7 state that man was made a little lower than the angels, and the answer given by Brother Charles Fry in the Herald of September 14 states that angels are the spirits of men.

Would you please clarify this, as it is confusing to a new member.

Missouri

H. C. S.

Answer:

In man's first creation in heaven (Genesis 2: 6, I.V.), God made him good, even "very good," by which we understand that there was no innate evil in him (Genesis 1: 33). Evil was possible as indicated in the fall of Satan and his following, but it was not because of any evil tendencies that God had made inherent in human nature. In creating the physical man—Adam—he also was made good, but by his own will transgressed and brought about a fall whereby evil became inherent in his fleshly nature and which was perpetuated in all his posterity. In this we see a concrete instance wherein man (in the flesh) was made a "little lower" than in his spiritual creation.

In coming to dwell in a carnal body man found himself under rather severe limitations and restrictions which he did not bear in the spirit world. His previous knowledge was withheld; he started this life with an empty mind; his development was dependent upon the physical brain and body. The spirit was able to act and operate only within the bounds made possible by the flesh. This marks another step down to an inferior stage of life as compared with the spirit life which was free from such restraints. This is referred to in Hebrews 2:15 which says they were "all their lifetime subject to bondage."

God permitted or ordained this lower estate not as a permanent condition for man, but that gaining experience under conditions of evil he might come to know its nature and learn to avoid sin. As Lehi plainly shows, this stage of life was necessary to man's development and perfection. He says, "All things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—The annual business meeting was held September 2 and the following were elected: Roger Lundeen, pastor; Leslie Lynch and Frank Parsons, counselors; Edith Holmes, director of religious education; Edith Olson, director of music; Irene Shuster, director of women; Ronald Young, director of young people; Helen Lundeen, branch secretary; Thoralf Oltvedt, Frank Parsons, Irene Shuster, William Shuster and William Spargo, finance committee; Thoralf Oltvedt, auditor and recorder; Howell Champion, building supervisor; Lillian Wolf, historian; Donald Tracey, book steward; Joyce Tracey, Herald correspondent and librarian.

Marguerite Fortman returned to Graceland College as a sophomore.

A total of $295.91 was raised by the women's department for the building fund. They sponsored a smorgasbord and ice cream birthday party.

The annual reunion of the Northwestern District was held at Chetek, Wisconsin, during the week of June 29 through July 5. General Church personnel attending were President and Mrs. Wallace Smith and Apostle D. O. Chesworth.

The young adults attended Camp Tona-doona at Chetek, Wisconsin, during the week of August 9. The camp director was Cecil Ettinger.

The Minnesota District conference was held September 11-13, with Apostle Chesworth as guest speaker. The theme was "Our Day."

Elder John R. Darling directed the church school institute that was held in Minneapolis October 2-4.

Evangelist Ray Whiting held a two weeks series.

Harold Keairnes was ordained a priest, and H. Wayne Lynch was ordained an elder.

The following babies were blessed: Jill Marie Holmes, daughter of Ruth and Mark Holmes, Kenneth Charles Wolfe, son of Valli and Warren Wolfe, and Reed Harrison, son of Marge and Thor Oltvedt.

The following have been baptized: Arthur Bledsoe, Weston Johnson, Shawna Jane Oltvedt, Michael Rounds, Dean Terrance, Deliah Mae Johnson, and Ruth and Sharon Rickard.

The branch had a farewell party for Brother and Sister James W. Thomas, who are now making their home at Lamoni, Iowa.—Reported by JOYCE W. TRACEY

Young Adult Retreat

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—Twenty-two young people from fourteen to eighteen years of age attended the youth camp at Canter's Cave in southern Ohio from August 16-23.

A well-located parcel of ground has been purchased by the church in Worthington for the future home of the Saints in that vicinity. They now meet at the home of Sister Margaret Barker.

The annual church school picnic was held at South Y Park on Labor Day, and was well attended by all four congregations.

A young adult retreat was held at Big Brothers Camp, three miles north of South Bloomingville on September 19-20. It was under the direction of Pastor Elwood Smith and the missionary, Calvin French. This was a new endeavor for Columbus and was very successful.

Sister Norma Anne Kirkendall started a leadership training class October 18 which will continue through November 22.

A preordination class met weekly until October 30 to instruct men recently called to the priesthood. Pastor E. E. Smith was the instructor.

The church-sponsored Boy Scout troop Number 100 is doing well under the supervision of Brother Bill Sanderson and his aides.

The church-sponsored softball team won the North Senior Softball championship for the year. Team members include Jim Overly, Don Oiler, Gene Hummel, Bob Brush, Myron Myers, Don Keller, Harry McBee, Harry Nuzum, Roy Ash, Bill Sanderson, Roger Miller, Kirk Cross, and Don Gabriel.

A number of members, including Brother and Sister Nathan Weate, Tom Myers, Merrill and Grace Weate, Arthur and Emily King, Brother and Sister Tressemer and daughter, Pearl, and Ethel and Norma Anne Kirkendall enjoyed summer vacation trips. The Kirkendalls and and Tom Myers were in Europe.—Reported by ROBERT J. MILLER

Branch Business Meeting

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.—Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Elder Alfred Yale of Tulsa were visitors in recent months.

Phillis Susan Jackson was blessed on May 23 by Elder Bill J. Dollins. She is the daughter of Elder and Mrs. Wallace A. Jackson.

Brother Jackson, missionary for Oklahoma City District, conducted a ten-day series with cottage meetings July 26-August 7.

The Oklahoma Reunion, held at Robbers' Cave State Park, began August 8 and lasted through August 16.

At the August meeting of the general council of church women, Brother Jackson presented a series of slides on the Book of Mormon, the theme for the organization being "The Universal Christ." He was graciously assisted by the Christian minister. Sister June Dollins is president of the council, and Sister M. Montana is vice-president.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 13, with District President and Pastor O. O. Dollins, Sr., in charge. Those elected were Bill J. Dollins, president; Petie Dollins, women's leader; Leonard DeHart, director of religious education; Angie Dollins, treasurer; Effie Wallace, historian, and Mickey Montana, secretary. The president appointed O. O. Dollins, Sr., and Leonard DeHart as his counselors.

The women's department will continue its project of serving the Tuesday evening meal to the Wilburton Lions Club this year.

Youth Camp Held

BREWTON, ALABAMA.—About eighty campers and staff members attended the ninth annual Liahona Youth Camp August 23-30. Camp activities were centered around an Indian theme, and the climax of the week came on Saturday night when the entire camp dressed as braves and maidens for a "powwow."

Individual fires with ten campers to each one were used to cook the food Indian style. Games, songs, and a play depicting the Liahona being used by the Book of Mormon people were enjoyed by all the tribes.

The first camp was headed by Dr. Floyd McDowell and Lucille Garrett in 1945. The camp has grown steadily since then, with numerous classes.

Leaders for the camp included Edna Easter of Independence, Missouri, Jean Hurshman of Denison, Iowa, and Elders Allen Breckenridge and Jack Pray, camp pastor and business manager, respectively.

Class instructors were for the marriage class, Jack Pray; archery, Sonny Odom; recreational leadership, Mary Lou Buntz; dean of boys, Hillary Cook; dean of girls, Annie Cook; counselor, E. D. Dixon; lifeguard, LeMoyné Scott; photography and riflery, Alma Dugan; counselors for girls, Jeanne Grayson and Gladys Seaman; art, Jeanette Johnson; newspaper, Marlene Scott; cooks, Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Booker; camp director, Ed Barlow, and camp nurse, Faye Davis.

The camp enjoyed a trip to Little River State Park. Spiritual experiences included the annual candlelighting service at Burt Corn Creek, and two fellowship services.

Stress was placed upon how the campers might serve God in their local branches, during this ninth annual Liahona Youth Camp.—Reported by ED BARLOW

Cottage Meetings Held

HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.—Brother Dan Conner was ordained into the priesthood as deacon during the eleven o'clock service Sunday, August 30. Elder Wayne Peters, pastor of the Hannibal Branch, officiated.

Evangelist E. Y. Hunker, of Independence, Missouri, visited the branch August 30 through September 2. He preached, and gave patriarchal blessings.

Members and visitors enjoyed a two weeks' series of cottage meetings and special preaching services September 13 through 27. Elders A. Wayne Hough of Mobile, Alabama, and David Kaleikau, Jr., of Honolulu, Hawaii, were in charge of these meetings. Both are graduates of Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, and missionaries to the Central Missouri Delevopment Area. Special songs and musical numbers and the use of colored slides aided in telling of the Restoration Movement.

A baptismal service was held Sunday, September 27, when Russell Warren Howell was baptized by Elder Kaleikau, assisted by Elder Hough.—Reported by PAULINE CASH

BEAUTY

There were beautiful blue flowers along the road, and we wondered what they were. They seemed cheerful and pleasant against a landscape drying out with the drouth. So we stopped to see while the botanical member of the family got out and examined them.

"I'm sorry to disappoint you," she said, "but they are weeds. They can become a nuisance and a pest unless they are kept down. But I must admit the flowers are pretty."

Life has strange mixtures of good and bad, and it is no wonder that judgment sometimes becomes confused. While we must try to eliminate evil, it is wise to appreciate what is beautiful along the way, and to find some redeeming good in what seems bad. Sometimes it is necessary to understand people's lives that way too.

UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES!

The purpose of fasting and prayer is spiritual attunement and getting close to God. Fasting is not or should not be a hunger strike to high pressure God (Mahatma Gandhi style) into doing what we want him to do.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Lee Otis Hart

A MAN WELL TRAINED for his job is Lee Hart, supervisor of youth work in the Center Stake of Zion. Anyone looking over his "credentials" is struck by his consistency of preparation for the work he is now doing.

He was born in 1924 in Coffeyville, Kansas, of Reorganized Latter Day Saint parents. From the beginning of his life he has wanted to serve Christ through His church. He was baptized in Independence, Missouri, in 1932, and was graduated from William Chrisman High School in 1942. Then he spent three years in the Army Air Force—two of them in Africa. He went to Graceland in 1946 and was graduated in 1948. Then he specialized: he attended George Williams College in Chicago from 1948 to 1951 where he received a B.S. in Community Recreation and an M.S. in Group Work Administration. During this time he worked in the YMCA's of Chicago and directed the Campus recreation program in Independence during the summer of 1949.

He was ordained a priest in April, 1951, and in July, 1951, received General Church appointment. Since that time he has served in his present position. To this job he brings consecration, excellent training, a fine mind, and a genuine love for people. He was ordained to the office of elder in 1952. At Graceland he met Margaret Snowden, whom he married in August, 1948. They have a son, Dennis Lee, one year old.

His hobbies are athletics, reading, and outdoor camping. He aspires to become an expert in group work and group dynamics, and his special interest is the evangelistic aspect of youth work in the church.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT AND MRS. W. WALLACE SMITH IN CHICAGO

President and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith were in Chicago the week end of October 30-November 1 to attend a women's institute of the Chicago District. This constituted a banquet Friday evening, and classwork all day Saturday, at which Sister Smith taught the women's classes. A Sunday morning Communion service followed by an afternoon business session closed the institute.

Lyle W. Woodstock is the district president, and John Cooper is pastor of the Brainerd branch where the institute was held.

APOSTLE HANSON TO VISIT

President W. Wallace Smith is to accompany Apostle Paul M. Hanson to the Idaho District fall conference November 21-22. Brother Hanson is to be at the Utah District conference the preceding week end, at the Las Vegas, Nevada, mission November 17-18, and in Boise for the conference.

APOSTLE OAKMAN INJURED

Apostle Arthur Oakman has broken a bone in his foot and will be incapacitated for about six weeks.

APOSTLE DAVEY AT DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Apostle Roscoe Davey attended Rock Island district conference at Clinton, Iowa, October 30-November 1. He reports that this is the first time in many years the conference has been held outside Rock Island. Services were held in the Clinton junior high school.

APOSTLE HANSON VISITS WYOMING

Apostle Paul M. Hanson has returned from visiting Cody, Casper, Sheridan, and Wheatland, Wyoming. He attended a priesthood institute conducted by Luther S. Troyer at Osage, Wyoming, and reports a good attendance from surrounding areas.

EXPERIMENTAL SERVICES SUCCESSFUL

The last in a series of four experimental services conducted by Apostle Reed Holmes, Director of Religious Education, and Clifford Cole, Supervisor of the Children's Division of the Religious Education Department, was held Sunday, November 1, at Liberty Street church in Center Stake of Zion. Elder Fred Fry, pastor, and Velma Jones, children's supervisor, assisted Brothers Holmes and Cole with the project. The theme for October 11 was "What Is the Mission of Our Church in the Community?" accompanied by the film, "The Toymaker." On October 18, the theme was "We Lead People into Experience with God," using the film, "Faith of Our Families." The theme "The Mission of Christian Teaching" and the film "For Every Child" were used October 25.

At the concluding service, based on the theme, "Our Mission of Evangelism at Home and Abroad," participants included Barry Fuller and Donna Davey, who represented Australasia, Ragnhild Fossum and Velma Ruch, who represented Norway, and Kathie Frisby, of Detroit. Participants in the series reported sharing in an outstanding spiritual experience.

PRIESTHOOD SCHOOL AT ODESSA, MISSOURI

Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, and Merle Guthrie, Church Statistician, taught classes at the first session of the priesthood school held at Odessa, Missouri, on November 3. These school sessions are planned to continue for the next six weeks.

This Unfinished World

"Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."—John 4: 34.

WILLIAM FAULKNER, the Nobel Prize winning novelist, recently said to a college graduating class: "What's wrong with this world is it's not finished yet."

After six days of labor in the creation, the Lord rested on the seventh day. He ended his work on that particular task. But he left many things for the people he created to do. Adam was a diligent young man and already had a job before he saw Eve. He was employed as a gardener in Eden. It was an unfinished world in Adam's time.

And after Adam and Eve were ejected from Eden for a violation of the rules, they found another kind of world even more unfinished, with more work than before. The new commandment was a work order: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

The unfinished task of making the world what it ought to be was still not accomplished in the time of Jesus, for he stated, in the words of the text, that it was his purpose to finish his Father's work. And in our time, two thousand years later, man's part of the original task of creation is still unfinished.

GOD PLANNED a division of labor in the task of creation. It is easy to see that he took care of the major part of the work. He provided the earth—the geological foundation, the atmospheric conditions, the soil, the climate, the plants and animals, and finally made man.

To the human race he left such work as man would be able to do: the tilling of the soil, the growth of crops, the harvest, the preservation and distribution of food, the allocation of space on the earth, science and invention, government and industry, education, culture, and social organization.

MAN'S ATTEMPTS to finish God's world have resulted in some modest but meritorious successes, and some terrible and tragic failures. On the success side may be counted the arts, invention, some aspects of education and government, science, and many kinds of social service and civic organizations. On the failure side we find war, injustice, prejudice, religious error, selfishness, poverty and luxury living side by side, famine and plenty in different parts of the world at the same time and—the list could be almost indefinitely lengthened.

The failures represent the unfinished part of the world that William Faulkner mentioned. These are the aspects of life that need further work.

GOD WAS THE ARCHITECT of the universe. He was also the architect of this world. He had a plan, and when he left the world with certain parts to be finished by his people, it was his purpose that the finishing should be done according to his plan.

Unfortunately, that original plan was forgotten, sometimes mislaid, occasionally buried in the archives for sinister purposes, quite frequently misunderstood completely, and occasionally blocked by determined and violent opposition. Men arose who had other purposes and other plans that they wished to substitute for reasons of their own. This point has been explained too many times to need repetition here.

There have been those who have given their lives to the rediscovery of the original plan and to presenting it to the world. The Reformation was the first attempt, but it fell short of its ideal and committed some of the same errors against which it first rebelled. In latter days the Restoration took up the cause and it is presenting that original plan to the world. Its way has not been smooth or easy. It has been attacked from without and within. It has suffered its dark and cloudy days. It has had its traitors and false friends. And some who intended to do right have caused it great harm.

IT IS AN UNFINISHED WORLD. . . .

Millions of people are oppressed and in want in Russia and in little countries that have been dragged down, willingly or unwillingly, behind the Iron Curtain. . . . Thousands of young Americans—sons, brothers, husbands, fathers—have sacrificed their lives to halt aggression in Korea. . . . In this unfinished world, multitudes of suffering people are hungry in East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, and others. . . . The Japanese are trying to rebuild their ruined country, a victim of war and war leaders. . . . The West Germans, too. . . . France is trying to save herself from paralysis imposed by Communist strikers. . . . Here in wealthy America we still have many living on the margins of want, overworked, tired, sick, desperate people who hardly know what to do next.

It is an unfinished world. Someone must show the way out, present a plan that will work, give the people vision and hope. In every country there is work to do, in every city, in every community there is need. The cause is great, the workers are too few. . . . There is a place waiting for you, and a Voice calling your name!

"Messiah" Broadcast December 20

For the fifteenth consecutive year, the church is sponsoring the CBS radio broadcast of Handel's Messiah. The Independence Messiah Choir—there are more than 300 voices in the group—has been hard at work for five weeks under the direction of Franklyn S. Weddle in preparation for the performance.

The broadcast date is Sunday, December 20, and the time is 10:30 to midnight (CST) as in the past. The program will again originate from the TV Playhouse of KMBC in Kansas City.

A list of CBS stations will appear in an early edition of the Saints' Herald. That will be the signal for every member to contact the nearest station with the request that the program be scheduled.

Pastors are urged to follow the suggestions in the 1953-54 "Pastor's Handbook" which call for the appointment of a publicity chairman in each branch for this special project. This information, as well as letters of inquiry, should be sent immediately to Charles D. Neff, Messiah Publicity Director, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Auditorium Plans Near Completion

We were advised by the architect on November 3 that the plans and specifications are approximately 98 per cent complete, and that they should be available for consideration of contractors within the next couple of weeks. We are still hopeful that it will be possible to get started on this project shortly after the plans are completed.

It will undoubtedly be of interest to many of the pastors and solicitors to know that sets of 2" x 2" Kodachrome slides are being prepared so that they will be available from the Audio-Visual Department at the Auditorium on a loan basis, to be used in connection with the Auditorium fund raising. We still have a supply of the small banks which have been very helpful in many places to provide a simple method of receiving Auditorium Fund contributions.

Increased interest is being evidenced throughout the church, and many inquiries are being received as to just when construction will start. We are rapidly nearing that time.

Letters to President Smith

As the numerical strength of the church continues to increase, the volume of correspondence reaching the President's desk grows accordingly. It has therefore become increasingly difficult for him to give detailed attention to all the various communications directed to him.

Consequently, it will be necessary to refer more and more requests for answers to specific problems and other information to departments specializing in that particular field of concern. Letters may continue to be addressed to the attention of the First Presidency, but in many instances, answers may be received from some department head who is qualified to answer the question and take care of the need.

We are sure the membership will appreciate the fact that this decision has been taken in the interest of efficiency. Letters of a confidential nature will continue to be handled personally by the Presidency.

Very sincerely,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Death of B. M. Anderson

Ben M. Anderson, brother-in-law of President Israel A. Smith, died November 4 in Omaha, Nebraska, at the age of eighty-four. Funeral services were held Friday morning at Merchant's Chapel in Omaha and Friday afternoon at the graveside in Lamoni, Iowa.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Community Music Association of Independence sponsors a fall piano festival. A few days ago Mrs. Charles E. Nickson, chairman of the piano festival committee, wrote us in connection with her need for facilities. We were happy to co-operate, since some one hundred or so young people are involved, and the festival is important to our church as well as to the community. But we especially appreciated the opening paragraph of Mrs. Nickson's letter, shared with Brother Weddle of the Department of Music:

I again have a request to make, but before I do so I want to express my personal appreciation to you and your church. For the past ten years I have actively worked with your church and some of its people. I have found always that you are conscious of community needs, possibilities, and limitations. You have at numerous times filled the vacancy when municipal facilities are not available. The Philharmonic concerts for young people were made possible through your co-operation; the Community Music Association has had unlimited assistance. Truly, building character, the education of the people of Independence (whether of your church or not), fine social experiences for both children and adults (again of all churches) you people seem to have clearly in your church plans. Your attitude is the Christian attitude, and you are bound to prosper in every field of Christian endeavor. I have intended to express my appreciation at some previous time, but as so often happens this pleasure was pushed aside for some immediate and pressing need. I am pleased to now have the pleasure of expressing myself although I do have to follow with another request. . . .

From Seventy Elwin R. Vest, Hilo, Hawaii, October 9:

On Sunday we held our first services in the new Waiakea-Kai Church. As we had planned, we were able to move the mission into its new home on the first Sunday

Shine -- as Lights in the World!

By Reed M. Holmes

A sermon preached at the Campus, Independence, Missouri, September 13, 1953

For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings; that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain.
—Philippians 2: 13-16.

IN THE HANDS of Jesus a flower or a fish, a loaf or a mustard seed became clear windows of revelation. Many times he used the familiar things of life to illumine and point up his message.

Remember his parables of the kingdom? One of them begins, "Behold, a sower went forth to sow, and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them. Some fell upon stony places, . . . and some among thorns, . . . but others fell into good ground."

We can see the sower, the seed, the birds, the ground. We can get hold of that and understand that the seed is the word of the kingdom and we are the kinds of soil.

Jesus spoke of bread, of water, the lilies of the field, leaven, new wine in old bottles, and each time new insights of the gospel were born in the minds of men.

These are the parables which Jesus spoke. But there is another kind of parable—the living parable, the parable of the familiar face made radiant, the parable of the commonplace man whose life is transformed by the power of Christ. That person becomes a window of God's revelation.

Earl Marlatt, an author of religious prose, once edited a book in which the stories of saintly people were told. His small child asked about the book and Marlatt replied, "It is about saints. I don't think you know much about them." The child, remembering a stained glass window, replied, "I know about saints—they're the people the light shines through!" A priceless definition from the mouth of an infant: saints—people the light shines through.

WE'LL COME BACK to that, but right now I'd like to take you to a hillside of long ago. The Master had turned from the multitude which had claimed him for a while. He desired to draw apart and to rest with his disciples. They were eager and growing in understanding. There was some crowding to sit closest to the Master, some vying for position; even Judas was listening. Jesus began to teach.

When he said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, who come unto me," they thought of the humble folk of simple garb who had welcomed the ministry of heaven in the person of Jesus. Then they remembered the hope in the eyes of those who came to Jesus with heavy hearts and were comforted. When Jesus said, "Blessed are all the pure in heart, for they shall see God," they looked at him who was purest of all and knew it was so. When at last he said, "Blessed are ye when men shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake," they remembered how Pharisees and ruffians taunted Jesus but were met with kindness. They knew he was humbly describing himself and encouraging them to go and be like him.

Then his tone changed. He looked directly into their eyes and said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt shall lose its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted? The salt shall thenceforth be good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world."

It may seem presumptuous for us to assume this message is written for us, too. Actually, it is right for us to apply this message to ourselves. But we had better remember that the qualifications for being the salt of the earth and the light of the world have already been enumerated. This commission must not be separated from what we call the Beatitudes. It is folly to believe we can truly flavor or illumine the earth unless we have taken seriously the message of the Beatitudes and are beginning to express their meaning in our own lives.

Before we consider our calling to be the light of the world let's look at this other phrase which is descriptive of the true disciple: "I give unto you to be the salt of the earth."

WHAT IS THE SIGNIFICANCE of salt? Remember, Jesus used this phrase in his own time. Salt had a history of being the chief economic product. Caesar's soldiers received part of their pay in common salt. It was called their salarium—salary to you. To this day we use the expression that a man is or is not "worth his salt."

In Palestine, a bag of salt was reckoned as precious as a man's life. "I give unto you to be the salt of the earth" was a significant calling. See how much Jesus esteemed his disciples and indicated the value of their great commission.

In ancient times salt was a sign of friendship and hospitality. Was Jesus describing the mood and spirit of evangelism? Salt, in those days, was also the symbol of purity. The disciples knew that Jesus was encouraging them to be clean inside and out, the example of right living.

Salt gives zest to food. Jesus seems to say we are to add zest to life, give buoyancy, joy, hope, serenity, trust, courage, purpose.

Salt is a preservative. Even today food spoils without it. What of his disciples then? Society becomes corrupt so easily. Lust, indifference, and greed lead to decay. Some folks need to be salt. A few righteous people have been known to cause great cities to be spared.

Sometimes we wonder what so few of us can do. The world is so big. The forces of evil are so well organized and clever, and so intent on making the righteous folks feel uncomfortable and insignificant. What can we do? Have you noticed what a pinch of salt will do? It is effective out of all proportion to its actual amount.

There's nothing spectacular about salt. It comes from the earth and sea. It is inconspicuous, ordinary, and mixed with common things—but what a difference it can make! That is, if it has not lost its savor.

In William Thomson's book, The Land and the Book, a rich merchant of Sidon sought to escape the tax on his wealth. He hid large quantities of salt in a remote house in the mountains. But the floor of the house was earth, and the salt lost its saltiness. It was used to make a hard surface for a road. "If the salt shall lose its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted?" We who follow Christ must either redeem the world, or the world will rob us of our Christianity. Are we flavoring the world, or is the earthiness of our life drawing out of us the very substance which can save the world? Perhaps we should lick our lips a bit to see if the "saltiness of sainthood" is there.

NOW, WHAT ABOUT this other living parable we are to be? "I give unto you to be the light of the world."

Is there anyone here who has not been afraid of the dark? From primitive times, fear of the dark has been more or less typical. I remember I stopped reading one part of Treasure Island until it was broad daylight. And there was one corner a block from home where I never walked alone at night from the time I was four until I was twenty-one!

What about light? What is there about light that applies to us as the "light of the world"?

Once again we are impressed by Jesus' esteem for his disciples and how significant he felt their work to be. Light is life. Without it we would starve to death. Light not only fosters the seed in one generation, but it warms the soil for its sprouting, encourages its growth, and brings forth the harvest. Even when the sun is obscured by the clouds we thrive on its influence.

Have you ever been in total darkness? I have, in Carlsbad Caverns. Several hundred feet underground the lights are turned out! The brilliant colors and fantastic forms of the stalactites are gone. After a few moments my spine began to tingle, and there was a telltale heaviness in my breathing. I thought how terrible it would be to be here alone, without light. There would be only one way out—to feel the pathway made by those who had been here "in the light." Light is guidance. In the night we grope and stumble. We cannot be sure where we are or which way to go. Light is safety and assurance.

LIGHT BRINGS BEAUTY. All color vanishes in the dark. Day brings back the blue of the sky, the green of trees and meadows, the brilliant colors of the garden. What sunlight is to the earth, the Christ light in us is to the souls of men and women—life, guidance, assurance, beauty.

For those of us who would be the light of the world there may be a lesson in the little coal oil lamps we used when I was a child. It was often my job to keep the glass chimneys clean, the wicks trimmed, and oil in the vessel. A bit of carelessness certainly smudged up the chimney; pretty much like a life that is smudged by carelessness, the light doesn't shine through so well any more. An untrimmed wick not only smudged up the chimney but made the atmosphere pretty sickening, too. And a lamp with no oil was—no lamp!

What does it mean to be the light of the world? What did it mean to Jesus? He came to shed light in men's darkness. He came to enlighten, to reveal, that men might see God through him. He sought to bring God's life to others. To Jesus, being the light of the world meant "to preach the gospel to the poor, to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, and to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." I am inclined to think we pay considerably more attention to the last than we do to the others.

WHERE IS THE LIGHT to shine? First of all, let it shine in your home. Then let it shine from your home to the neighborhood. In Ft. Morgan, Colorado, there are no street lights in the residential section. The people light their porches. From each home there comes light to dispel the darkness. This is true to an ancient custom. The watchman at dusk came through the streets crying, "Hang out your lights." This is the same cry as that of Jesus, "Let your light shine."

Where is the light to shine? In the outer reaches of your neighborhood; among your unfortunate neighbors in India, Africa, Europe, and South America. "I give unto you to be the light of the world." That light is to shine upon every creature.

Isn't this our mission? We are to bring within the reach of every human being the transforming power of God as revealed in Christ and revitalized in the Restoration. Hear the word of the Lord in modern revelation: "Go ye and preach my gospel, whether to the north, or to the south; to the east, or to the west."

Our church endeavor is bound to be sterile as long as we ignore or soft-pedal our missionary task. Our Zion-ic program is pointless if divorced from its evangelistic motive. It is possible for us to become so engrossed in self-centered routines that we forget—or never bother to discover—the needs of hundreds of millions. About 60 per cent of the world is hungry tonight. Two thirds of the world's people can neither read nor write. Only 1 in 3,000 carry any conviction whatever about the restored church of Jesus Christ. For the 2,999 there has not yet been a Restoration. Some of these have heard rumors of the Restoration, but they have seen no evidence that the light is shining while we take Restoration sun baths and sing nursery jingles about "This little light of mine, I'm gonna let it shine. . . . Won't let Satan 'poof' it out!"

IS IT UNKIND or untrue to suggest there is complacency in our attitude toward sacrificial outreach? There is rather more than a suggestion of a timid attitude on our part that smacks of lack of faith and betrays our lack of an empowering sense of urgency.

The light can shine if we shall forsake our self-conscious institutionalism which causes us to take pride in the fact of the Restoration, while denying the spirit of the Restoration opportunity to function. We have some shackles that need to be shaken off. We need to lay aside some of our caution and move with greater courage. We need to cast off some outworn methods of yesterday and equip the Restoration message with the new tools of communication.

If we are truly to be a light to the world we must recover our missionary initiative and achieve greater mobility. The gospel of Jesus Christ cannot be kept by squatter's rights.

The great mass of humanity still awaits the healing touch and the vibrant word of the Master of men.

Not only are there nations and continents upon whom the light must shine, there are vast areas of man's experience which need light. Nothing is needed so desperately in the United Nations as light. Beyond all compromises and brilliant political and economic arrangements, there is need for the light of Christ in human affairs. In fields of industry, labor, education, and religion only the light of Christ can cut the Gordian knot.

"I give unto you to be the light of the world." Unto humble men he gave this commandment. Yes, it was to men he spoke. There are still some who feel that the work of the church is not such as to challenge masculine vigor. Jesus was more concerned with peacemaking than quiltmaking, but there may be men here tonight of the opinion that the work of the church is for women and for other men who have more time.

When shall the light shine? All the time! Picture a lighthouse that shines only part of the night, then picture another whose fingers of light probe the darkness to guarantee safety and guidance. Call to mind the Christ, the unfaltering Light of the world. When it was darkest, he was most radiant.

WHAT SHALL WE compare him to? Really, there is no comparison, only contrast. But perhaps there is one type of light that shall illumine our understanding of Christ as the Light of the world.

The arc lights which illumine our dark streets are made up of two carbons approaching each other from above and below. The current passes through these to burst into brilliant light as they converge.

Crude though the illustration may be, something like that happened in the life of Jesus, particularly at the cross. Love at its uttermost met human nature at its worst and at that point of meeting the love of God revealed in Christ burst into a light so radiant that the darkest paths of human experience have been illuminated. Our worst fears have been dispelled, and even the path into the darkness beyond death has been brightened. The light of Christ upon the cross reveals the bigotry of the Pharisees, the fickleness of the mob, the ruthlessness of good intentions, the costly price love always pays for someone's sin. The light of Christ searches out our shallow compromises, and the cheap practical excuses we use to avoid acting for him.

The light of the world, whether in Christ or in his disciples, is to expose our sin as well as to bring life, guidance, assurance, and beauty.

The darker the job the more brilliant the light required. We need to increase our candle power.

I have a light meter which makes it possible for me to measure the amount of light which falls upon an object. I wonder if the Lord has some kind of light meter for measuring the light which falls from those who claim to be the light of the world?

"I give unto you to be the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before this world, that they may see . . ."

Men's eyes are made for light, and so are their souls, so "Shine—as lights in the world!"

Bombs

As if the world were not already sick of bombs, a British scientist says that a cobalt bomb could be made that would wipe out the human race. Maybe somebody should examine the heads of a few such scientists and make the inventors of such bombs the first guinea pigs on whom the bombs are tried. Doesn't the man know that if such a bomb were invented someone would be just mad enough to use it? L. J. L.

Opening of New Warrington Church

Don Lents looks on as Pastor Ronald Chandler shakes hands with Mayor W. P. Taylor at the opening of the new church in Warrington, England. Also in the picture are Mrs. Taylor, Bishop Tom Trapp, and Seventy Eric S. Rowe.

ON SEPTEMBER 5 and 6 special services were held in the new church in Warrington, England. In 1952 the branch, with approval of the General Church, purchased a plot of land on Fitzherbert Street and obtained permission to erect a part brick, part frame auditorium and kitchen. This is the first unit of three which the people hope to complete in 1954. This auditorium will then become the church school section of the building.

On Saturday a banquet was held; eighty members attended. At this function, the mayor and mayoress of Warrington, Councilor and Mrs. W. P. Taylor, formally opened the building. This is the first time that the local group has been given civic recognition. It shows the improvement in public relations over the years in the town. A human touch to the proceedings was the presenting of flowers to the guests of honor by little Pam Lents, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Don V. Lents, and Master Bobby Campbell, son of Brother and Sister Pat Campbell, who are living in Warrington while Sergeant Campbell is serving with the U. S. A. A. F.

ON SUNDAY 6 approximately 150 people attended the services. Northern District President E. S. Rowe preached at the morning service. Elder James Schofield, designer of the new building, spoke in the afternoon; and Elder Don Lents, mission president, gave the evening address. The mayor and mayoress again met with the group, and Councilor Taylor spoke on the theme, "A Sound Family Life."

Local newspapers gave space to the reports of the week-end activities with an informative and accurate resumé of some of the beliefs of the Reorganized Church.

THE CHURCH was established in Warrington in 1898 through the missionary endeavors of the late John Schofield after he moved from Manchester. The branch was organized in 1903-4 by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths in the home of Elder Schofield at 8 Gorsey Lane. Brother Schofield was named as pastor.

Shortly afterward the Saints began holding services in a room over a shop on King Street; they continued to meet until they were able to share a hall on West Street with another denomination. The branch finally purchased this property in 1925.

When Brother Schofield moved to Birmingham, Elder W. H. Chandler was elected pastor; he served the group from approximately 1905 to 1941.

During the war years and since that time pastors have included Elders P. S. Whalley, Eric S. Rowe, Sydney Dawbarn, and Ronald F. Chandler, son of W. H. Chandler. Ronald is serving the group as pastor now in its new property.

Much of the labor of building the church was performed by members of the church. Part of the money for building came from the sale of the old West Street Church. Branch members have given about $1,000 in the past year. Members have been subscribing and working for funds since 1936. There are about fifty active members in the Warrington Branch, and 1,200 members in the British Isles.

The Book of Abraham

EDITOR'S NOTE: Notwithstanding there is an entire absence of any record of any legislation by the church on which to base the claim, there are those who still believe the church did approve the Book of Abraham. We therefore believe it is timely to republish the article on the subject by Samuel A. Burgess (now deceased) which appeared in the "Herald" for January 5, 1921. No contemporary of Brother Burgess was better acquainted with the history of the church, and certainly nobody in the entire priesthood had a finer legal mind.

This book has been in use as a standard book of the Mormon Church for a hundred years; but it was not officially approved by their general conference action until about 1900.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

SHORTLY AFTER the Herald for November 17, last, appeared, with a short editorial on "Joseph Smith, Jr., as a translator," one of our readers, who is not a member of the church, marked this page and returned it to us with the words added: "You are wrong absolutely." This was placed opposite the sixth paragraph. Also, "Why do you insist on misstating facts? I cannot understand your object in deceiving people." A letter was attached to it, which read: "Is it possible you also have joined the Ananias Club?"

Now we well knew we had no desire whatever to deceive anyone. We desire most earnestly the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. We therefore wrote asking for some evidence of our error, if such existed. If wrong, we certainly wished to know it, and promised to make correction. We also asked, what exactly was the objectionable feature, since the sixth paragraph is as follows:

The church in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr did not accept the Book of Abraham as one of the sacred books, or attempt to place it in the same class with the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Nor has the Reorganized Church at any time so considered it. Our position is quite clearly stated in our Church History, volume 2, page 569. The word church, however, includes the whole church from its first organization in 1830 until the present day. (We note in passing the fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has twice been held before the courts of the land to be the successor of the original church, teaching the same doctrines; namely, in Lake County, Ohio, Court of Common Pleas, and in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri.) The extract from the Church History follows:

"The church has never to our knowledge taken any action on this work, either to indorse or condemn; so it cannot be said to be a church publication; nor can the church be held to answer for the correctness of its teachings. Joseph Smith, as the translator, is committed of course to the correctness of the translation, but not necessarily to the indorsement of its historical or doctrinal contents."

This paragraph includes several distinct statements.

IN REPLY we received a letter, only the following portion of which deals with that question:

Your article treated on the subject matter pertaining to the Book of Abraham, giving a reason for printing a letter from Mr. Jensen, of the Utah church. The matter that I had in mind was that you claimed the Reorganized Church never did accept the Book of Abraham as divine. I have before me volume 1, number 3, Latter Day Saints' Herald, dated March, 1860, and refer you to page 63, in which I will quote as follows:

"Now we propose to prove that all the revelations which Joseph gave unto the church, we are bound to 'give heed unto.' If the first edition of that book is divine, all the subsequent revelations which are contained in the Book of Covenants, in the Book of Abraham, etc., and which he gave unto the church are equally divine.

"The foundation of the Reorganization was based upon accepting all these books as divine."

This extract quoted is from an unsigned article, six pages long, in the True Latter Day Saints' Herald for March, 1860. This was prior to the association of our late President Joseph Smith with the church. The article is entirely a review of the resolution taken by some former members of the church, approving the first edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but rejecting the second edition. The words unto the church in both instances are printed in italics. There is no further reference any place to the Book of Abraham. After discussing some of the revelations very briefly, as the so-called plural wife revelation, which the writer states was not given to the church by Joseph Smith, the article discusses the revelation where Joseph Smith was to appoint another in his stead. It then continues to take up different revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but is not concerned with the Book of Abraham.

Now as we examine this it may be noted in the first place that it is what is called in law obiter dicta; that is, a remark which is not pertinent to the main argument. For this is an article by the way of argument in an effort to show that the church should accept the second edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and include other revelations received through Joseph Smith the Seer; that is, those revelations received after 1835, which are included in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

In the second place, it is not a statement setting forth the standard books of authority in the Reorganized Church. It omits both the Bible and Book of Mormon and says nothing about the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures.

In the third place, it is not an action of General Conference. Nor is it even stated that it is historically a belief of the church. It is not even affirmed definitely as a belief of the writer.

WE MIGHT CONTINUE to point out in other respects how far it is from an affirmative statement of truth, but that is not necessary. At the most, all that can be claimed is that the writer considers the Book of Abraham as one of the things given to the church by Joseph Smith. But it is not shown that even he places it on the same level with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. And if the writer was Isaac Sheen, as he was the editor at the time, he was not in a position personally to know the position of the church in the days of Joseph Smith, the Martyr.

There is not a year passes, if there is a week, that someone's article does not appear in the Herald presenting views with which the editors do not agree, and which they do not believe represent the position of the church. As stated, they are presented by way of argument to bring forth a different point of view as a matter of possible interest to our readers, leaving to the reader to judge that which is presented.

But nothing that is written by any writer in the Herald becomes binding upon the church in the sense that a General Conference resolution does. Though certainly, if the President of the church makes a declaration on church teaching, of the position taken by the church, such a statement is entitled to much greater weight than an incidental remark made by some person in the course of an argument, oral or written.

Turning to General Conference Resolutions, we discover at the very first meeting, on the very first page, among the resolutions adopted on June 12, 1852, the following:

No. 6. That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

No. 8. That this conference believe it the duty of the elders of this church, who have been legally ordained, to cry repentance and remission of sins to this generation through obedience to the gospel, as revealed in the record of the Jews, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and not to faint in the discharge of duty.

We find such statements repeated time and again. We have not attempted an exhaustive search.

In September, 1878, the following was adopted:

No. 212. That all baptisms, in order to be legal, must be done by both the administrator and the candidate going down into the water, according to the instructions in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and if there are any now numbered with the church, who have received the ordinance with any less than the above requirements, that they are hereby required to receive the administration of the ordinance in the above form.

On September 13 of the same year, the following:

No. 215. That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this Church of Christ.

On September 29, 1879, this was reaffirmed:

It is our opinion that the free rendering and meaning of the resolution passed at the semiannual session of 1878, and referred to in said resolution from Decatur District, is that:

Whereas, Certain rumors had obtained currency that the church had not at any time so attested the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the later revelations given to the church, by vote and affirmation, that they should form with the Bible and Book of Mormon, a standard of reference in case of controversy and difference of opinion upon questions of doctrine and practice in the church; therefore to remedy this defect, if it existed, the resolution referred to was introduced and passed.—General Conference Resolution No. 222.

We could multiply these instances, but it should be clear to any reader that the Reorganized Church from the very first accepted three works, and three works only as authority: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The foundation of the Reorganization was not based upon accepting the Book of Abraham as divine. It was based upon accepting the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. This has been reaffirmed time and time again in later years.

WE CANNOT ANSWER for every individual's particular opinion. It may be possible that there have been individuals in the Reorganized Church who have valued and considered the Book of Abraham as a divine communication. We do not know that there are such or have ever been. But such opinions, if any have so held, do not commit the church. The creed of the church is "All Truth." There are men within the church holding many strange positions. The church is not thereto committed. It is a school and part of the development of character. The church does not accept their position, nor do we view such opinion with any great degree of allowance, though we have charity for the men and extend a great deal of allowance to individual peculiarities. We believe as a rule men will the quicker come to the truth if allowed the utmost freedom and independence of thought. At the same time, men should not attempt to speak authoritatively or officially for the church in presenting their own personal peculiarities.

There are also certain mooted questions on which the church has not declared a position by Conference action, but there is still a general understanding among the eldership. Again there are questions on which there are individual differences of opinion, and there has been no General Conference resolution so that further free discussion has been permitted. But when the church has spoken by clear-cut resolution, the casual expression of some writer does not affect in the slightest degree the position of the church, let alone the basis of her faith.

It should be clear from the above that this is one of the cases in which the church has spoken from the first. The church has accepted the Bible,

Question Time

Question:

Revelation 14:3 speaks of the new song sung before the throne, and the four beasts and the four and twenty elders, and no one could learn that song except the hundred and forty-four thousand. Can you tell me what the four beasts and the twenty-four elders are?

Indiana

Answer:

The four beasts of Daniel 7 and those of Revelation 13 apparently have no connection with the four six-winged beasts of Revelation 4:6; 5:8, 11, 14; 6:1, 3, 5-7; 7:11 and 14:3. The latter evidently have to do with the celestial life to come. The Twentieth Century New Testament, Moffatt, Weymouth, and the Revised Standard Version all give it "creatures" or "living creatures" instead of "beasts"; and "councillors" takes the place of "elders" in the Twentieth Century New Testament.

Where the Bible itself, especially the Inspired Version, gives no interpretation of its prophetic symbols and types, as in the case under consideration, we can but suggest the possible meaning, with prayer for wisdom and light, awaiting the fulfillment of the promise: "And then shall my revelations which I have caused to be written by my servant John, be unfolded in the eyes of all the people."—Ether 1:113.

It would seem that these "beasts" or "living creatures" should perhaps be interpreted in light of the fact that when the elders saw them worshiping and praising God, they, too, praised him, saying, "For thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." (See Revelation 4:9-11.) Also in light of Revelation 5:13, it is clearly indicated that every creature in heaven, earth, and sea will praise God eternally.

The crowns on the heads of "the four and twenty elders" (Rev. 4:4) and their position around the throne would suggest the highest authority under God and Jesus in the celestial world, and the "hundred and forty and four thousand" perhaps represent leadership selected from former and latter-day Israel for their faithful and complete obedience in performing unselfishly the whole will and purpose of God. (See Rev. 7:4-8 and 14:4.)

and peoples, will also be in the celestial world (Rev. 7:9-17) but apparently will not be capable of producing the profound and glorious harmony of ecstasy and praise produced by those whose lives have been more faultless in sacrifice and devotion to service. This is perhaps what is meant by others being unable to learn the new song. Notice it reads, "As it were a new song."

Question:

Can a person be an active member of a branch but still remain a nonmember of the church? Can such a person vote for officers of that particular branch?

Washington

Mrs. C. C. W.

Answer:

A friend of the church, who is not a member of the church, can share in many of our church activities. But the law and procedure of the church prohibit those who are not members of the church from partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, voting in branch business meeting, and being selected as delegates to district conference or the General Conference.

Question:

What is a prophet and what are his duties?

Ontario

M. G.

Answer:

Generally speaking a prophet is one divinely chosen, authorized, and inspired to speak and act for God. His prophetic call makes him God's mouthpiece and his representative in performing whatsoever work God may require him to do, which work may vary considerably according to circumstances and needs. Moses and Abinadi were both prophets—but in office and work differed greatly, the first having a lifetime task in leading and founding the nation of Israel, giving the law, and revealing God and Christ; the second in calling a wayward people to return to God and to a strict observance of the law as already possessed by them, in which short effort he died as a martyr, though leaving a faithful testimony for future generations.

Since early times the word, "prophet," has changed meaning considerably, and in modern times it has come to mean largely a "foreteller," which is hardly justified by Scripture. The prophet is more a messenger of divine truth, an exponent of divine truth by the will of God.

In the Reorganized Church the word "prophet" specifically applies to the head of the church who is generally referred to as "the prophet," though the name is applied loosely to other ministers. Our Scriptures teach:

It must needs be that one be appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood; and he shall be called President of the high priesthood of the church, or, in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church.

The duty of the President of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:31, 42.

It is customary for the prophetic office in the church to be filled by Divine designation, the Lord choosing the personnel to fill the office subject to the indorsement of the church, thus being approved of both. In addition to his natural or personal endowment, this officer or prophet of the church is given special gifts through the Holy Spirit which remain as a perpetual endowment to qualify him for the high duties of his office which are beyond the ability of man to perform of himself alone. The Lord has made it the prophet's prerogative to commune with Christ when need requires and thereby receive revelation including instruction, warning, counsel, or doctrine, as the Lord wills. He may be given spiritual discernment so that he can understand the needs of the church in its various missions. He is to judge in important legal questions which come up by appeal through the courts of the church to the Standing High Council of which he is the head. He is to preach the truth and safeguard the church against error, sin, and apostasy; in all his work he is to honor and glorify Christ who forever remains the actual head of the church.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

New Eyes

Part II

By Ruby Strand

THE NEXT AFTERNOON Barry's mother rang the door bell of the Chapman home. Soon the two women sat before a cheery fire.

"I'm so glad you came, Mrs. Newton. I feel that if parents would get together more often and talk over their mutual problems, many of them would seem less like mountains. We love our daughter and we admire Barry. We know he's a fine boy, and we are happy to have him for Pamela's friend. It's just that we think she's too young to date. It isn't that we have wanted to allow our child no leeway, no thoughts of her own, circumscribing her friendships. That is not our wish at all—but dating, . . . well, it introduces so many temptations that we feel she is just not mature enough to face. With all the movies, television, modern love stories—so much to contaminate our young people's minds nowadays—surely you understand."

Her guest agreed. "But," she added, "our children are not really thinking along those lines at all. We are apt to put thoughts into their heads that aren't there."

"Why, what do you mean?" asked Mrs. Chapman, rising to rearrange a log on the fire.

Mrs. Newton rehearsed the conversation she had had with her son. "You see, it is really a lack of trust and understanding on our part. Young people, it is true, have many temptations, but they also have many opportunities for learning good things, and it is because Pam can talk intelligently upon the subjects that are interesting to Barry that he likes her so much. He isn't wanting to get away in some dark corner to neck—at least, I guess that is the term used. Our children who have had the advantages of being properly taught have ideals. We just must believe this."

THE OTHER WOMAN was silent. As they sat staring into the fire, watching the dying embers, a new understanding came to her. Finally she said, "I believe you're right, Mrs. Newton. I won't go so far as to say that Pam is not interested in Barry because he is a boy, for I have observed the cleverness of my daughter in her sudden yen for anything pertaining to aeronautics. There are many ways for a woman—even a thirteen-year-old—" she added, "to get one of the opposite sex interested in her."

"I believe you misjudge her, if you'll pardon my being frank. Fundamentally, isn't it because Barry treats Pam as an equal that she strives to live up to his belief in her? Could you be holding Pam back, trying to keep her in pigtails, so to speak? They have to grow up, you know."

"Then you feel we should let her date?" Mrs. Chapman asked the question in a spirit of humility.

"No, too early dating is not the answer."

"Then, what? That is our only bone of contention."

"I do not want to appear presumptuous, but may I ask a question?"

"Why, of course."

"Do you have a family altar—a time when you get together as a unit and talk over without heat and argument your reasons for the laws you have laid down?"

"Laws?" Mamie Chapman bit her lip. "I had never looked upon ourselves as lawgivers—policemen, you might say."

"Now I've offended you. I'm sorry."

"No, . . . for a moment I felt the sting. . . . But perhaps I see this with new eyes now. Maybe there would be greater understanding if we could help her to make her own decisions instead of telling her she can't do this, and she can't do that. I'm eager to tell her father. I'm sure neither of us had seen just what we were doing."

The clock on the mantel chimed four. Mrs. Newton rose to go.

"Please, excuse me," spoke up her hostess. "I intended to fix us something to drink."

"Some other time. I trust we shall become more than casual friends. I must go now."

"Then do come again, and I thank you so very, very much. I shall need your help to get this family altar started. We have never known much about such things. Will you please help me?"

"Indeed, yes," answered Mrs. Newton as the two women bade each other good-by.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, because of his work, came in contact with many men. Some were godless men, and since it was not always possible for him to shut off their vulgar talk he heard much that made him almost sick at times. It was no wonder he feared that something dreadful would happen to his daughter. He could hardly bear to let her out of his sight. As he drove home from work that evening he was thinking of something the fellows had said. "Oh, no, God," he silently prayed.

And yet he had only to pick up the paper after supper to realize that the men were right. There it was in all its sordid detail spread across the front page.

"Now you can see," he exclaimed, pointing to the words. "Thirteen-year-old Girl Brutally Attacked."

Home Column

Pamela said nothing. There was still a look of defiance on her face. Her mother had asked her to come into the living room after they had finished the dishes, but she had not wanted to. "I know I'm not going to the party, so why say any more about it?" Her mother had insisted.

When her husband shook the paper before them Mrs. Chapman said softly, "Now, George, don't rant."

He looked at her. The knitting needles made a rhythmic sound. "And you knit!"

She breathed a silent prayer. "Listen, George. I know it is awful. I am as shocked as you are, but I have something I want to tell both of you, something that may be the answer to it all. Barry's mother was here to see me this afternoon."

Pam came to life. "Whatever for?"

The afternoon visit was unfolded, word by word. The two listened without interruption. "She gave me new eyes," concluded the woman.

"To think that Barry said I was interesting!" beamed Pam.

Her father looked at her several minutes before he spoke. Then he said slowly, "Forgive us, Child. We did need new eyes, as your mother puts it. From now on there will be no scoldings, no punishments. We shall leave the decision up to you, trusting and praying that you will choose wisely and that you will accept our counsel because we are older—and then not rebelliously. We are finished with 'thou shalt not's.' Instead, we shall try to lead you into womanhood."

The girl went over and sat down on her father's lap, snuggling close to him as she had done many times before.

"Daddy, after all," she confided, "I am only thirteen, and that is pretty young to take the world upon my shoulders. Besides, I think it will be more fun to stay a kid for a while. But in the meantime, am I ever going to study up on aeronautics!"

Church Women in the News

Alma Power

Superintendent of Children's Hospital

Keys to the Texas Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children were formally presented to Mrs. Alma Power, now superintendent of the hospital, by three-year-old Kelley Cunningham in Dallas, Texas. James R. Temple, president of the hospital's trustees, announced the promotion.

Mrs. Power has been a member of the hospital staff for ten years. Her selection as superintendent took place during the annual trustees' meeting and election at the hospital.

Alma Fern Rowden was born in Oklahoma, where she was reared by her aunt and uncle. (Her mother died when she was five years old.) She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight, and was graduated from the Independence Sanitarium in May, 1931. She did private duty in Oklahoma for two and one-half years, after which she completed a postgraduate course in surgical nursing at Baylor Hospital in Dallas in 1934. She was head nurse of the surgical division in Baylor Hospital for two and one-half years, and since 1936 she has been doing orthopedic nursing.

On September 6, 1937, she was married to William Reagan Power.

In 1947 Mrs. Power took a short course at Columbia University in New York. She was head nurse of the orthopedic division in the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children for five and one-half years, and head nurse of the orthopedic division of Baylor Hospital for seven years before becoming director of nursing service and assistant superintendent at the Scottish Rite Hospital in March, 1949.

The Texas Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children is a seventy-bed hospital, maintained by donations and bequests, to care for children whose parents cannot pay for treatment. Crippled children of Texas are eligible for treatment from infancy through the age of fifteen. Since the opening of the hospital in 1924, more than ten thousand children have been treated.

Sister Power has been a resident of Dallas since 1934. To her nursing is truly a service profession. She feels that the excellent training she had at the Sanitarium has enabled her to keep before her the real purpose of her work.

NEXT WEEK'S HERALD WILL SAY . . .

"What would we do, what would we be thinking, if we became conscious that we were right now in the presence of Jesus? . . . We usually repent of our sins for the same reason we are willing to undergo an operation—because the pain is so bad that it hurts."
—"Take Heed unto Thyself," by C. B. Hartshorn.

"The fatalist believes that the mysterious necklace of events which he calls "life" is strung together by some superior force; and when the knot is tied—that is the end."
—"Faith or Fatalism?" by Norma Anne Kirkendall.

"If Jesus was, indeed, but the wretch despised by the Jews and pagans, how has he carved on the earth such a pathway?"
—"Tribute to Christ," by Henry Didon.

"To most of your friends you are the church. . . . I was the one to whom the whole class looked when the history teacher brought up the question of Mormonism. I was also one of the few who didn't smoke or repeat dirty jokes, and everybody knew it. . . . While most of the students were dancing, I was getting a lot of satisfaction out of other activities."

You Can Still Be Yourself

Editors, Saints' Herald:

It has often been said, "Be yourself!" Yet we are admonished and counseled to be Christlike, Saints, Zion builders, and personal evangelists. Modern thinking asserts that each man's personality is unique, each having various and certain capacities, abilities, talents, and resources. In this light, could we all develop a faith such as the Brother of Jared, or are we restricted according to our individuality? When Christ commanded us to be perfect as our Father in heaven, did he mean "perfect to the extent of our limitations"?

Are we followers along certain lines and leaders in other fields? Father Keller in You Can Change the World reveals how one person can be an outstanding force for good if he but takes the effort, initiative, and responsibility. Is there any limit to our accomplishments? Can't we be a Moses, an Isaiah, a Peter, or a Joseph Smith? What is to hinder us? Can we correlate the philosophy of "be yourself" with "be perfect as your Father in heaven"?

Kenneth Noland

Dear Kenneth,

We cannot all be a Moses, an Isaiah, a Peter, or a Joseph Smith! In fact, none of us can be. For they lived in a different age, in a different country, and under different environmental conditions: we live in America in the twentieth century. But you can be a Kenneth Noland, and I can be a Paul Wellington—and who knows where these names will rest in history? Each of us is born with certain capacities to "become." Some people are curtailed by deficiencies—but for most of us, "the sky's the limit."

Of course all of our interests are not the same. What a dull world it would be if all of us were editors, soldiers, preachers, or what have you. Variety is the spice of life—not only within each life, but among all forms of God's created lives. Human existence in this modern world requires a variety of specializations. Most certainly we don't want everyone to be a preacher; we need agricultural, industrial, and financial leaders as well. True, we need righteous men in these stations, but we must expect they shall spend most of their time providing leadership in the physical affairs of God's kingdom.

"But," you may comment, "I was referring to qualities of personality. I know we couldn't be the Moses, or Isaiah, or Peter. But can't we develop within us similarities of character? Are we restricted to mediocrity by limits of capacities, abilities, talents, and resources?" Again I say, "With most of us, the sky's the limit!" We may not make the headlines of the daily paper, or the history book of the future, and most certainly it is too late to get into the Bible, but our behavior and personality may have a tremendous effect on many of our present generation.

It is generally conceded that most people never stretch to the peak of their potentialities. Sometimes there is good reason: they are often limited by time and circumstance. Of course, the reverse happens: circumstances and time often "boost" them. Although we do not know what might have been under other circumstances at another time, we see fame and recognition come as a result of what appears to be certain extenuating circumstances. Looking back on history, Abraham Lincoln is often called "the product of his age." Perhaps Moses, Isaiah, Peter, or even Joseph Smith was similarly raised to position of leadership and fame.

Whether the preceding thoughts prove right or wrong, these men came into prominence by providing leadership to a cause which is accepted by people of our nation today as important. Their names are perpetuated. Today there are causes for righteousness which require leadership and guidance. He who recognizes such a cause and rises to meet the challenges of such a movement will find his resources absorbed and developed to the limit. He may not end up with his name emblazoned in gaudy epitaphs, but he doesn't have to have recognition in this world to reach the celestial glory of the next.

Yes, you are called to perfection. But who shall judge when you reach it? Surely not the people about you. You yourself will not be able to make such an evaluation. For who can really know what Christ meant when he spoke of perfection? Does it mean "to be without flaw, always correct in every little detail"? If so, I doubt if you or I will reach it in this life. Perhaps Christ did recognize we would have limitations. I'm sure he will see our desires and will assist us to reach the pinnacle he prescribed.

Admonition to be Christlike, saintly, a Zion builder, or a personal evangelist does not place everyone in the same mold. There are plenty of possibilities within these broad categories to display billions of unique personalities. You can still be yourself!

■ Some 1,500 people attended Graceland's twenty-ninth home-coming on October 16, 17, and 18. At 1:30 Saturday afternoon the first home-coming parade was presented. Floats depicting campus life were exhibited and prizes were given for the most humorous, most colorful, most original, and most representative of campus life.

■ A large home-coming crowd cheered its favorites on to a one-sided victory over the Wentworth Military Academy with a final score of 46-0. On the first kick off, Graceland picked up Wentworth's ball and Stan Corrington of Belleville, Illinois, raced ninety yards for Graceland's first touchdown. Wentworth started the second half by kicking to Graceland. John Walden of Des Moines, Iowa, duplicated Corrington's earlier touchdown by racing eighty-five yards to the goal.

■ Graceland College Day was observed throughout the church on Sunday, October 25. Members of Graceland faculty visited various congregations in the Midwest as guest speakers on Sunday. The money received from the College Day offerings will be used for architectural studies for future buildings on the campus.

■ Station KMA in Shenandoah, Iowa, has begun a series of programs called, "Your Midwest College Spotlights." Graceland has been invited to take part in this series by presenting a thirty-minute program on December 20 representing and depicting the college life on Graceland College campus.

■ Charles R. Hield, junior at the University of Wisconsin, has been selected to play a lead role with the Wisconsin Players in Bell, Book, and Candle. Charles is a 1953 graduate of Graceland where he received his Associate of Arts degree. He also played lead roles at Graceland in Angel Street and The Importance of Being Ernest. His home is in Independence, Missouri.

■ The Alpha Phi Omega Service Fraternity is relocating the sundial which was given to Graceland by the graduating class of 1898. The permanent location for the sundial has not yet been decided upon. A Phi O is in the process of restoring the old sundial with the replacement of the metal gnomon which casts a shadow upon the face of the dial.

■ Park Chunill, Graceland's first student from South Korea, arrived on the campus Thursday, October 22. He was met in San Francisco by Tom Beil, who then started him on his journey by train to Lamoni. Dr. William Gould met Park in Creston and brought him to Lamoni. Park's entire journey took sixteen days. His contact with Graceland is the result of his friendship with Tommy Kemple, who was with the army in Korea.

■ Ball and Chain, the club for Graceland's married students, elected new officers. They are Charles Douglas, Elyria, Ohio, president; and Donna Scafe, Bremerton, Washington; Bob Landrum, Marianna, Florida; and Vern Robertson, Wiaraton, Ontario, Canada, committee members. They have organized a nursery from 10:00 to 12:00 Sunday mornings for the children of married students. The nursery will be supervised by different parents under the direction of Bob Landrum.

■ On Saturday night, October 31, Gracelanders held an all-school Halloween party. The evening was full of fun and frights, complete with a horror chamber. Following the program, donuts and cider were served. A midnight show was held at the Lamoni Coliseum for those wishing to attend.

■ The Graceland Music Department presented a formal recital Sunday, November 1, in the Student Center. Students participating in the recital were Les Belrose, Sarnia, Ontario, Canada, and Mary June Muir, Brown City, Michigan, organists; Delores Tandy, pianist, and Frank Church, celloist, both from Independence, Missouri; Don Breshears, Rock Island, Illinois; Marybeth Edsburn, Corvallis, Oregon; and Mary Pohly, Flint, Michigan, vocalists.

■ Carol Collins, Independence, Missouri, was elected Social Activities Planning Committee chairman. She will serve until the second semester. Each chairman may serve only one term of office and is elected on a quarterly basis.

New Horizons

Korean News

ANOTHER EDITION of Newsletter from Korea has reached the editors' desks. A phrase which leaps from the printed page says, "Last Issue from Korea." Major Millard F. Caldwell, its compiler, hastens to explain, "My replacement has arrived! . . . but I will continue to print NL when I get back home and get settled.

Newsletter has become the communication system keeping R.L.D.S. soldiers in Korea acquainted with each other and the States. Letters from home and from the boys are solicited; news of interest and service addresses are appreciated. Major Caldwell invites correspondence directed to Newsletter to be sent to: 3692 Pioneer Drive, West Riverside, California.

Major Caldwell suggests that parents or soldiers who desire to get in touch with priesthood members in Korea write Cpl. John M. Decker, US55314119, Hq. Btry., 1st FOB, APO 358, San Francisco, California, or Pvt. John B. Studdard, US55258054, Prov. Co. S.E. 457, APO 613, San Francisco, California. Both will be in Korea until next spring. Additional comments on Caldwell's personal war against exposure and starvation among the Koreans give a picture of another phase of human degradation:

"My interest, and the high light of my tour, has been in observing the Korean people. Many books have been written and many hints given to the serviceman to help him in his conduct while in Korea. I have learned that there is an unpublished story. At any rate it hasn't been given enough publicity regarding one's duty as a representative of our country. My story, my interest, and the underpublicized part of Korea is related to the many orphanages and its many poor, starving families. There isn't a single village or city that doesn't have at least one orphanage. The larger the town the greater the number of orphanages—and homeless children roaming the streets, looking, looking, looking! I have served in many foreign countries; I've seen a lot of misery and pain and sorrow in different parts of the world, but nothing to compare with Korea. I will never forget the plight of these people. Each time I think of my family and the gifts that God has given me I am reminded of those who are less fortunate."

A Real Community Asset

An editorial which appeared in the "Independence (Missouri) Examiner" for October 14, 1953

A TWO-YEAR SURVEY of hospital facilities and needs in this area recently completed by Community Studies, Inc., and turned over to the Greater Kansas City Hospital Council should remind this community again of the value of its own hospital.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is a member of the area council made up of institutions in the Greater Kansas City Metropolitan area. The survey just completed at the council's behest is indicative of the benefits that may accrue through the hospitals' acting together in the interest of the area's health needs.

Our own sanitarium and hospital, while not among the largest in the council, ranks well up in the services, equipment, and other facilities needed to take adequate care of the sick, the survey indicated.

It has grown with the community from a 40-bed capacity, when it was established, to a highly modern institution of 166 beds and 36 bassinets. It includes two operating rooms for major surgery, one for minor surgery, one for genitourinary operations and two delivery rooms. It has complete X-ray and laboratory equipment.

One resident physician is on duty but no interns, due to the unavailability of training facilities for young doctors. About 60 doctors have house privileges, including 19 who engage in general practice and 41 who have various other specialties.

The hospital here is approved by all rating groups, except for interns and residents.

The R.L.D.S. Church, parent organization, and the community as a whole have a right to be proud of the hospital. The governing board is composed of three members of the Bishopric, three members of the Presidency, the church physician, the mayor of Independence and the Eastern Judge of the County Court.

Stories of the Restoration

This outstanding collection of stories brings the message of the Restoration in language and with illustrations that every child can understand. Some have been previously published in "Zion's Hope" and "Stepping Stones," others are new. Available in two bindings.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital up to now has provided fine service in taking care of the needs of the community. It probably will have to expand further as the community grows, and in this expansion can be aided by the support of the community and of individuals who can render an invaluable help to the institution through various voluntary services.

In the near future, the hospital here is planning to build an emergency department, a badly needed expansion. Such a department will make it of even greater value to the community. The vast increase in automobile accidents and other emergency cases have created a heavy and unsought load which the hospital has been trying to carry as best it could with limited provisions for this type of service.

Let's not take the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital for granted. Let's recognize it as a community asset and give it a tangible demonstration of appreciation by supporting it in every way possible.

of the new church school year. Following church school we had Communion, of course. All attending evidenced great interest, and there was an excellent degree of the Spirit present. About half of the sixty people at the morning services were members. We have eight prospective baptisms in the Waiakea group, and several teen-age young people want to be baptized but are being held back by their Buddhist parents. Five or six boys in service will be returning from the armed forces soon; most of them in their letters have indicated a desire to help with the work of Waiakea when they come back. Brother Kashimoto is making a good pastor for the mission. It appears now that the mission should be ready for branch organization in three years—possibly much sooner.

Modern revelation supplements the instruction given in earlier days concerning the Lord's day in the following terms:

That thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto thee to rest from thy labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.
—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2 f-h.

The Saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word.
—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7 b-d.

It happens that both of these references have been brought to our attention several times recently, and one of the letters bearing on this matter of Lord's day observance offers some suggestions which merit earnest consideration. We are printing this letter with the consent of the writer:

I am very much concerned about the growing attitude of laxity toward observance of the Lord's day. Maybe it is only local, but I doubt it. I see deliberate attempts to get Sunday work because of the time-and-a-half or double-time pay, and certainly little effort to avoid it. Work on home building and other projects is not uncommon.

If an opinion were published and disseminated to the ministry that inasmuch as Sunday is the Lord's day, a day for going to the house of the Lord to pay our devotions to the Most High, any remuneration Saints receive for services over and above the regular work week belongs to the Lord if performed on Sunday. Take the profit out of Sunday work and conscientious Saints who can avoid it, will. If they cannot avoid Sunday work, which is not a regular workday for them, giving the Sunday pay to the Lord will still bring to them an extra blessing, and the church will be benefited in spite of their absence.

Of course I know that such an opinion could not be made a compulsory policy, but I believe that if it were backed up with good reasons it would appeal to a good many Saints. They could give it in any manner desired—offering, oblation, or building fund—but it should be over and above their regular contributions. Plain instructions for proper attitudes toward Sunday, the Lord's day, would be quite appropriate now.

Invitation to Members in Germany

I read in the Herald every so often the address of someone who has just come overseas. For this reason I would like my address printed with the request that any members coming over this way let me know where they are so that I will be able to help them find other members in their area. I keep in close touch with Louis Zonker in Hannover and with several of the soldiers who are here.

I have been here now for two years, and I will be here one more year before I will be re-assigned in the States, but I have no idea as to which post it will be. I am stationed right at the edge of Stuttgart, and my wife and I have our quarters near the post. All Saints are welcome to visit with us whenever they are in the area. And while they are here I can help them locate German branches close to them. Here in Stuttgart is a small branch which we attend regularly, even though we speak very little German. The fellowship of Saints prevails here as it does in the States. People here do not have the amount of money that is customary in branches there. Members of the Zion's Builders class in Louisville, Kentucky, have sent word that they will purchase new hymnals for the Stuttgart Branch when they are off the press. Little gifts such as that go a long way with these people. We must work close with these people even though there are many who will say that these are the people that killed so many of our fellow Americans. It is natural to feel bitter toward those who have helped to cause so much misery, but then we must all remember that it was not the people here who started the war; it was false ideals that were driven into them and not counteracted by the show of love from the other people. We must let these people know that we as Americans and as Latter Day Saints do care for them, for they are our brothers. As I have read in a tract of another church, we all know the Golden Rule, but there should be even one rule higher which may be called the diamond rule. It is, "Do unto others as Christ would have you do unto them."

I have not been reading the Herald long but I enjoy it and expect to keep on taking it even though I move around quite a bit in the army. I hope that I can settle down at an army post close to one of our branches when I do get back to the States

Testimony of a Sixteen-year-old Camp Counselor

As I am only sixteen, I felt it was a great privilege to be able to be a counselor at the Los Angeles Stake junior high camp held at Idyllwild this past summer. The six girls in my tent were eleven and twelve years old, and I got to like them very much the first day. When night came, and all the cabins were having the evening talk-it-over and prayers, I was a little scared. I had been told beforehand that the girls might be a little hesitant in saying their prayers. But that night after our talk-it-over, every one of the girls prayed.

Thursday night when we were getting ready for bed, two of the girls called me over to their beds. When I sat down I could tell that something was bothering them. They told me that during our closing prayer they became confused, but they didn't quite know what over. As I was talking to them, trying to draw out the trouble, I found that one girl wanted to know if God really existed or if he were just someone else like Santa Claus and the Easter bunny. She wanted God to speak to her so that she would be sure of his reality. I told her God sometimes speaks through people, but other times a feeling of inner warmth helps us to know for certain that he is. That was the way it had been with me, and I knew God was always near me and ready to help. The other girl wondered if God could forgive. She said many times she would ask forgiveness and would be truly sorry, but then she would do the same thing again. I told her God loves us so much that if we are truly sorry he will help us and that we should ask him to help us, for without his help we could never be better.

While we were sitting there God's spirit came to us, and it seemed the room was flooded with his presence. I had thought the rest of the girls were asleep because it was so quiet, but then I heard someone crying softly, and I found that all of them had been listening to our talk. They, too, felt God's Spirit in the room.

When I went to bed that night, I thanked God for all his blessings. Later one of the girls came running over to me and said that she had had a dream she wanted to tell me about. In it she saw a tree with a baby crib; then it was gone, and in its place was a table at which two men with long hair sat. One man was sitting at the other's feet. She said that when she woke up she felt she had to come to me and ask what it meant. I told her I didn't know, but if she would go back to bed, I would ask someone else about it.

The next day I asked Sister Blakeman, and she told me that I should ask a member of the priesthood. Later I went to Brother Cunningham, and asked him about it.

The next day he told us that he was awakened about two in the morning with an explanation to the dream, and that he would tell us during our morning fellowship. He told us that the tree was the life span from babyhood to adulthood, and the table was God's care. The one person sitting at the other's feet meant that we should always serve others as Jesus did here on earth.

Because of this experience my testimony of God was strengthened, and I want always to be able to serve him. I should like to serve him by working with his children, for I find no greater joy anywhere.

Report on Iowa Conference

I was privileged to attend the district conference held November 1 in Washington Junior High School, Clinton, Iowa. District President J. W. Breshears requested all branches of the district to discontinue regular services in order that their members might have opportunity to attend this conference. A youth rally with the district young peoples' leader in charge was held the evening of October 31 at the Clinton R. L. D. S. church.

Peoria had a representative gathering at both the youth rally and the conference. Elder William H. A. Norris took Pastor R. G. Wrigley and Elder William Shotton in his car. Also his mother, Sister F. B. Norris, Sister Elvin Duke, and myself. As we drove along in the early morning enjoying the autumn landscape and the uncrowded highways, I thought of the statement of William Cullen Bryant

"The groves were God's first temples." We saw many deeply wooded areas that certainly inspired a spirit of worship by their beauty and peacefulness.

God's Spirit marked the prayer service of the conference and the preaching service that followed. The theme of the prayer service was "Our Spiritual Obligations." After the opening hymn, prayers were offered first by four elders of the district, after which members of the congregation offered prayer. Evangelist W. W. Richards of Davenport, Iowa, gave a very inspiring message on the theme of the prayer service, followed again by testimonial responses from four elders of the district. Many testimonies were given by individual members. The thought that I gleaned from the service was a warning that Saints must be ever alert and prayerful lest they fail to live up to their spiritual obligations.

Apostle R. E. Davey was the speaker at the preaching service. With timely illustrations he developed his subject, "Giants and Grasshoppers." His Scripture lesson was the story of the failure of the Israelites to enter the promised land of their inheritance because of their lack of faith in God to help them overcome their enemies and possess the land. Brother Davey said, "Today we, too, often lack faith to move forward and reap the blessings God wishes to give us. We have five great giants in our lives which we must overcome if we expect to achieve eternal life."

The giants named which we must overcome are compromise, lack of dependability, self-satisfaction, self-seeking, and lack of Christian sportsmanship. Apostle Davey's audience drank in every word and I heard many near me say, "That is the most down-to-earth sermon I've ever heard! It is a timely warning to all here, both members and nonmembers."

Once again I have been impressed with the truthfulness of the fact that spiritual strength is increased by meeting together often with those of like faith.

the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants from the first as divine. It has never at any time included the Book of Abraham. The statement in the early Herald does not commit the Reorganization.

It frequently happens that there are incidental statements appearing in an article which do not even represent the position of the author but are worded in such a way as not to present fairly his views. It is quite possible, that if the question were put to the writer of this article, he would have modified and corrected the phraseology, as the statement is quite incidental. We state this only in fairness to the writer, and not as affecting the church.

But giving to his statement the widest possible adverse credit, at the most it means that the writer above placed the Book of Abraham alongside the later revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. But he makes no argument whatever for the acceptance of that book, as his sole argument is founded on the second edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Nor does it commit the church, even if the church had not already spoken.

But in this instance, the church had spoken repeatedly and definitely.

Briefs

Mission Progressing

ALVA, WYOMING.—Elder L. S. Troyer visited the mission at Hulett and Alva in September.

Brothers Merlin O'Haver and W. Aubery Long attended the priesthood institute at Osage, Wyoming, October 3-5.

Elder E. C. Judson visited the mission on November 16.

The group was organized into a mission on December 7. W. Aubery Long was ordained an elder at that time, and Debra Lee Larson was blessed.

Those who helped with the organization were Elders E. C. Judson, Dale Larson, George Mefford, L. S. Troyer, and Brothers Roy Shumate and Merlin O'Haver. Elder Troyer stayed three days after the organization meeting.

The group enjoyed a Christmas party on December 23.

Blizzard conditions during the month of February held church and church school activities down.

Elder Long and Brothers O'Haver and Dan Long attended the priesthood meeting in Torrington, Wyoming, March 15.

Services were held on Easter Sunday at the Alva church. An egg hunt followed the services. A picnic lunch was served at noon and a program followed. About seventy attended.

Lucille Long, Aletha Wood, and Mrs. George O'Haver were baptized by Brother O'Haver at Alva on June 14. They were confirmed by Elder Long.

Patriarch A. W. Lundeen and Brothers Henry Turner and Jim Turner were branch visitors.

Those who attended the reunion at the Bob Marshall Camp near Custer, South Dakota, on July 12 were W. Aubery Long and family, Neil, Darlene, Joan, and Mike Mahoney, Gertrude Mahoney, Merlin and Dorothy O'Haver, Rosanna Vito, Richard Nielsen, and Gertrude Jolley.

A party was held at the Alva church on July 25 for the young people. They played games and toasted marshmallows.

Elder Judson, from Wheatland, Wyoming, was the speaker August 26.

Adam and Bernice Pehringer were baptized by Brother O'Haver and confirmed by Elder Long on September 13. Nadine Carol Gurley was blessed that same day.

Services for the mission are held three times on Sunday. Morning services are at New Haven, afternoon services at Hulett, and evening services at Alva.

Elder Long was the speaker September 27 at Osage, Wyoming.—Reported by GALE JOLLEY

Institute Held

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.—"Challenges of the Restoration" was the theme for the priesthood and women's institute held at Owen Sound September 13 for the district. District President Gordon Farrow was in charge. Fellowship hour commenced in the morning, with Elder Alex Cadwell of Guelph speaking about spiritual testimony.

Classes were conducted at eleven o'clock and one thirty. Sister Ruby Taylor, of Grand Valley, was in charge of the women. She is the district women's leader. Sister Gloria McLean, of Guelph, sang a solo, "Teach Us to Build." She was accompanied by Sister Mabel Farrow of Wiarton. Sister Mortimer, of Elora, read the Scripture about the elect lady. A poem, "My Work," was read by Sister Brady of Wiarton. The president of each women's department of the district gave a report of their activities during the year. The guest speaker was Sister Aarona Kohlman. Her topic was "Making Better Use of the Women's Handbook." She also stressed working in city projects.

Priesthood meetings were conducted by Elders Alex Cadwell and Gordon Farrow.

The preaching service in the afternoon was by Brother Farrow. His subject was "All My Commissions Are Spiritual."

The Owen Sound women's department served a delicious dinner at noon.

The district was well represented.—Reported by MRS. B. BELROSE

Seven Baptisms

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.—The branch had a business meeting August 9 at which the following officers were elected; pastor, Elder Edward Barlow; assistant pastor, Jack Page; Sunday school superintendent, Leonard Clark; women's leader, Mrs. Tommy White; children's leader, Mrs. Jack Page; publicity, Mrs. Edward Barlow; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Horace White; historian, Mrs. Forest Newton; youth leader, Mrs. Gerald Goodson; recorder, Miss Ruth Howell; music leader, Mrs. Mitchell White; book steward, Mrs. Louis White; adult supervisor, Mrs. Marshall White; finance committee, Mitchell White, Marshall White, and Bill Russell; and building committee, Walter White, Grady Dees, and Jessie Baggette.

The branch had seven baptisms. They were Mrs. Floyd White, Hugh White, Grady Dees, Gerald Goodson, Miriam Russell, and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Martin.

The branch has had an increase in attendance, and has done some remodeling on the church building. A new church lot has been purchased.—Reported by MRS. TOMMY WHITE

Missionary Booth at Fair

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—Marliiss Rolene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Childs, was baptized on Children's Day, June 14, by Brother Herschel Damitz, and confirmed by Elders Cecil A. Jacks and Lawrence Hendrickson.

Youth camp at Happy Valley, June 14-21, was attended by a number of young people. Reunion was held the week of July 5-12. The women conducted a fish pond to raise funds for the grounds.

Cynthia Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. LeRoy Burdick, was blessed on August 30 by her grandfather, Bishop E. C. Burdick, assisted by Elder Myron Schall. Eric James, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Clark of Folsom, was blessed by Elder W. H. Dawson, assisted by Elder L. A. MacDonald. Jeri Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Al Bilding, was blessed on September 20 by Elder Jabez Elam, assisted by Elder Robert L. Nephew.

Pastor and Mrs. Schall returned in August from a trip of about six thousand miles, through Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and southern California. He was guest speaker in Seattle, Spokane, Ft. Collins, and Delta, Colorado. They attended the Western Colorado District reunion at Delta, and assisted throughout.

The lunch counter sponsored by the branch and managed by the Idola Club at the State Fair netted more than five thousand dollars. Northern California District maintained a missionary booth at the fair, under the direction of District President L. A. MacDonald, with Elder Glen Johnson in charge. Assisting him were Elders Clinton Saxton, Thomas Beil, Myron Schall, and Bishop Burdick. Sister Elizabeth Schall provided fresh flowers and an appropriate setting each day. Photographs of the four prophets of the church and a number of the church institutions were on display. Well over a thousand people stopped to ask questions about the church.

At the branch business meeting held September 23, the following officers were elected: Myron Schall, branch president; counselors, John E. Gann and Robert L. Nephew; director of religious education, Cecil A. Jacks; youth leader, Earl Horton; women's leader, Cora Bridges; director of music, Edna Burdick; director of drama, Mabelle Nephew; secretary, Eula Damron; recorder, Rose Ida Honeychurch; treasurer and solicitor, Ives J. Honeychurch; auditor, John B. Dawson; historian, Marjorie Damitz; book steward, Hazel Damron; finance committee, E. C. Burdick, Ella Dawson, and Donald Damron. An installation service was held on September 27.

The annual rally day service was held October 11. Special guests were Elder and Mrs. Clinton Saxton and family. Elder Saxton gave the sermon.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Hold Youth Camp

DANVILLE, ILLINOIS.—The Danville mission held a youth camp over the weekend of October 10-11. The theme was "Youth Examines the Restoration." Classes were taught by Elder Pershing Tousley, pastor of the mission, and Elder William D. Poore, of Carbondale, Illinois. James Elledge was camp director and was in charge of recreation.

In addition to classes, the youth enjoyed a weiner roast, movies shown by the pastor, a camp fire, and a hay ride. On Sunday an early morning prayer service was held, with class work following. The camp was dismissed in time to attend the eleven o'clock services at Danville mission. The attendance for the week was twenty-three. Three nonmembers were present.

Youth camp has been held the past three years by the mission. Plans for a camp next year are already being made.—Reported by JAMES ELLEDGE

Young Adults Have Retreat

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.—The young adult group from the Kaw Valley District held a retreat at Forest Park, Topeka, Kansas, on October 10-11, with approximately seventy members and friends participating. The theme was "Stewardship, Our Responsibility," which was timely and challenging. Elder Lyman Edwards was in charge of worship services.

Brother and Sister Glenn Price were in charge of recreation and the amateur hour program; Brother and Sister Dick Howard were in charge of the song fest and fireside program.

Brother and Sister Alfrey, of Topeka, provided meals for the group.

Plans were made to hold annual retreats, the next one being tentatively planned for June, 1954, at Forest Park, in Topeka.—Reported by TED D. FOWLER

Move Manchester Mission to Hartford

MANCHESTER, CONNECTICUT.—The Manchester mission was started under the leadership of Elder Almer Sheehy about three years ago. At that time, Elder S. L. Thompson of Manchester began holding services in his home in an effort to minister to three or four church families living in that area. Later a VFW hall was obtained, and consistent services have been held there ever since. Six or more families have supported the mission. Attendance has been small, since most live in Hartford, ten miles away, or are even farther from Manchester. Over the past year, attendance has averaged from seven to ten.

Elder J. V. Pement visited three days in Manchester arriving September 13. He visited the Saints, preached on Sunday, and called at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, a non-denominational seminary in nearby Hartford endowed by charitable persons. Elder Pement contacted a Mr. Carter there, a former resident of Kansas City familiar with the church, who contacted the school officials about obtaining a meeting place in Hartford. Through the efforts of Mr. Carter and Brother Pement, a chapel building was procured for use as long as it is needed. It is located on the campus, seats about one hundred people, is equipped with an electric organ, grand piano, several class rooms, rest rooms, a cloak room, and janitorial service.

The chapel was made available for the first Sunday in October. Interest has improved, and average attendance for the past three Sundays has been sixteen. These facilities may also be used for evening and special services.

While Brother Pement was with the group, more organization of the mission was completed. A secretary, treasurer, church school director, and a women's leader were chosen. The name of the group was officially changed from Manchester mission to Hartford mission. The new address will be Hartford Seminary Foundation, 55 Elizabeth Street, Hartford, Connecticut. This institution is centrally located in one of the best sections of the city.—Reported by J. V. PEMENT

Organization Takes Place

LAMAR, MISSOURI.—The formal organization of a mission in Lamar took place September 29 at a business meeting held at the home of Elder and Mrs. Norman Cox, 803 Walnut Street.

Elder Stephen Black presided, assisted by Elders Arthur Dixon of Miami, Oklahoma, and George Doubledee, of Medoc, Missouri.

The following officers were elected: Norman Cox, pastor; Dewey Miller, church school director; Bruce Logan, young people's leader; Jean Jeffries, publicity and women's leader; Buena Logan, secretary and music director; and Lester Heath, treasurer.

The group has about forty-five members from Lamar and surrounding areas. Meetings are held in the IOOF building each Sunday. Visiting ministry from other branches in the district have assisted.—Reported by JEAN JEFFRIES

Six Baptized

LONGVIEW, TEXAS.—On August 30, District President C. W. Tischer and Elder A. J. Banta and Mrs. Banta met with the Saints in the Longview area to organize a mission.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: pastor, Elder Harvey Spillar; church school director, Darneel Hanson; secretary, Raeford Hanson; treasurer, Marie Nagel; music director, Eula Lawson; women's leader, Mary Carl; publicity agent, Florence Aaron; historian, Carl Aaron.

Sister Banta, district women's leader, helped the women organize their first women's department. Officers who will assist Mary Carl are assistant leader, Marie Nagel; secretary, Dorothy Blakely; treasurer, Lois Allen; teacher, Zella Hubbard; friendly visitor, Raeford Hanson.

Six persons have been baptized since January. Lois Allen was baptized October 4 by Brother Spellar.—Reported by FLORENCE AARON

Two Ordained

ST. CHARLES, MISSOURI.—Officers for the new church year are as follows: pastor, Elder James W. Myers; church school director and youth leader, Earl Hanaker; women's leader, Maude Sappington; director of music, treasurer, and solicitor, Louie Trask; church and recording secretary, Helen Bloebaum; auditors, Charles Sappington, Kenneth Purghaun, and Charles Swanson; building committee, Charles Sappington, Russell Reider, and Charles Swanson; historian, Cora Hunter; book steward and publicity agent, Florence Hollander; finance committee, Russell Reider, C. Tabor, and E. Hanaker, and missionary supervisor, Charles Sappington.

Elder Myers, assisted by Brother B. East, ordained Brother C. Sappington to the office of elder on Sunday, October 4. Elder Myers, assisted by Brother B. East, and Elder C. Sappington, ordained Brother E. Hanaker to the office of priest.—Reported by FLORENCE HOLLANDER

Pipe Organ Dedicated

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—The branch held its annual business meeting September 9. The following officers were elected: pastor, Rouss Eastham; counselors, Fantly Hall and Floyd Jett; treasurer, Dick Duke; secretary and recorder, Mildred Holder; church school director, Florine Neely; music director, Emma Jackson; women's department supervisor, Emma Sasse; youth director, Charles Eastham; book steward, Carrie Deason, and building custodian, Ernest Hegwood.

Special services were held October 9 to dedicate the new pipe organ in memory of Joseph and Florence Berry. District missionary Charles E. Kornman presented the dedication address. Music by the choir was under the direction of Emma Jackson.—Reported by MILDRED HOLDER

Southern Oregon District Organized

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON.—The organizational conference of the Southern Oregon District convened at Eugene, Oregon, on Saturday, October 10. Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President J. L. Verhei were in charge. There was an average attendance of 300.

Bishop M. E. Lasater conducted a class, followed by a sermon by Elder Don Landon on "Worldly Voices." Elder Thomas Coffman led a song-fest and conducted a study of two of Sallman's paintings, projected on a screen. The Eugene women's department served refreshments at a get-acquainted social. They also prepared the noon meal on Sunday.

District President Verhei presided over the fellowship service on Sunday morning, October 11.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer presided over the business meeting, assisted by Elder Verhei. It was unanimously voted to organize the Southern Oregon District, which will include the branches of Eugene, Roseburg, Myrtle Point, and Bend, and the missions of Klamath Falls, Medford, Grants Pass, Bandon, and Cottage Grove, and all Saints living in that section of Oregon.

The elected officers were: district president, Don Landon; secretary, Joseph Ruchaber; treasurer, Thomas Coffman; bishop, sustained, M. E. Lasater; auditor, James Wood; church school director, Milton Petrie; women's leader, Shirley Landon; music leader, Rena Whittington; youth leader, Noel King. Guelda Barnhart was recommended as church historian.

The following men were recommended and accepted by conference vote and ordained to the priesthood: W. R. Watts of Madras; Earl Petrie of Grants Pass; Richard Petrie of Bend; and Harry Ruchaber of Roseburg to the office of elder; Kenneth Moye of Bend, and Duane Coop of Eugene to the office of priest; Laverne Moye of Bend, Cecil Barnhart of Eugene, and William Buckbee of Eugene, to the office of deacon.

The Oregon district officers led in a beautiful installation service for the newly elected Southern Oregon officers.

The final service on Sunday was a sermon by Missionary James Kemp.—Reported by MRS. THOMAS E. COFFMAN

District Officers Chosen

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—The following officers were elected to serve the West Virginia District for the coming year: president, Samuel M. Zonker; counselor, Clyde S. Rice; counselor and bishop's agent, Otto O. Melcher; church school director, W. A. Schoenian; women's department leader, Mrs. Glenna Lee Phillips; young people's leader, Lawrence H. Phillips; music director, Neil Nixon; secretary and treasurer, historian, and nonresident supervisor, May R. Griffin; and Herald correspondent, Mabel Smith.—Reported by MAY R. GRIFFIN

District Conference Held

DES MOINES, IOWA.—On Sunday, September 27, the Des Moines District Conference convened at Central Church with 550 attending. Apostle R. E. Davey was guest speaker, with District President Ralph Wicker presiding.

Officers elected at the annual business meeting were: Ralph Wicker, re-elected district president; James C. Blair, J. Hugh Braby, Lee O. Mussell, George B. Orr, Marion Pease, Forrest Pratt, Frank C. Price, Herbert M. Scott, and Myron Wood, counselors. This council of nine elders was unanimously approved by the conference. They will direct the affairs of the branches appointed to them by the district president.

Bishop Stephen Robinson and his two counselors, Myron Wood and Aaron Coonce, were sustained. Mrs. Florence Freberg was re-elected director of religious education; Mrs. Thelma Williams, leader of the women's department; Mrs. Helen Harrington, music director; Miss Wanda Bingham, secretary; Jack Ross and Lloyd R. Young, of Ames, youth leaders; Myron Wood, treasurer; and Harold N. Freberg, auditor. Reunion committee members are Herbert M. Scott, A. Paul Winans, and Carl McGuire. These men were elected to serve as ex-officio members. Mrs. Alfreda Smith was sustained as district historian, and Mrs. Josephine Potter was elected district recorder.

The following men were approved for ordination to the office of elder: K. Dale Paterno, Ames branch; Albert J. Gabrielson, Boone branch; Charles Cackler, Coalville branch; Edmund G. Kelley and Fred O. Bishop, Des Moines branch; Lee O. Mussell, Carl McGuire and William C. McKeown, Mason City branch, and John P. Morgan, Perry branch.

The following were approved for the office of priest: Eugene Page and Wayne A. Williams, Des Moines branch; Robert Kolarich and Wayne Wilcox, Mason City branch, and Harold L. McIntire, Toledo branch.

Seven men were approved for ordination to the office of deacon: Richard Gabrielson, Boone branch; Richard N. Dunshee and Chester R. Johnson, Des Moines branch; Darrel Jones, Mason City branch; David E. Houston, Toledo branch, Gary W. Lubbers and Jerry L. Trusty, Webster City branch.—Reported by MYRA PRICE

Bonds Sold for Church Building

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Bishop Joseph Lewis was in the branch and assisted with the ordinations of Glen Fordham to elder, Danny Green and Hal Davenport, Jr., to deacons, and Harold Lewis and W. E. Everett to teachers.

Babies blessed were John and James, sons of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Swafford, Jr., and Deborah Fay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Carpenter.

The following have been baptized and confirmed: J. W. Swafford, Jr., Ronny Weddle, Mrs. Sue Elliott, John O'Brien, Wayne Fordham, Mrs. Hal Davenport, Jr., and Janine Tey.

Elder Norman Cox held two series of cottage meetings. Other church officials who have ministered to the Saints are President W. Wallace Smith, and Apostle Charles Hield.

Special music for services has been rendered by Mrs. Donna Weddle, Frances Bratcher, Edith McCloskey, Elizabeth Bennett, Dorothy Sheffer, Judy Mottashed, Earl Hoestington, and Glen Fordham.

The children's department presented the special program for Children's Day, and the Zion's Leaguers a program for Memorial Day.

Elder Glen Fordham conducted a class in "Ways of Teaching" in which twenty-two were enrolled.

Mrs. J. F. Graham has furnished flowers for the Sunday services.

The branch has purchased a lot 162 by 400 feet for the new church building. Bonds are being sold for this project. This has proved a very satisfactory way of raising money. Ross Sherman is in charge of bond sales.

The women's department have held rummage sales, card sales, and have sponsored several other projects for the building fund.

Elders Green and Fordham attended the evangelistic institute in Independence. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Weddle and children have recently moved to Independence, Missouri.

Prayer meetings are held in the homes, except the first Wednesday of the month, when a meeting is held at the church.

Danny Green is enrolled at Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa.

Charles Graber is now living in Venezuela, where his wife will join him in December.

New branch officers are Elder Linden Wheeler, pastor; C. A. Green and Glen Fordham, counselors; Glen Fordham, church school director; Harold Lewis, young people's leader; Evelyn Logan, women's leader; Thelma Mottashed, secretary; Zelpha Pierson, treasurer; Merle Hollenberger, music director; Mamie Dallas, adult supervisor; Chattie Everett, children's supervisor; Judy Mottashed, librarian and book steward; Frank Tey, solicitor; Hubert Bratcher, auditor; Ross Sherman, custodian.

An installation of church school officers, teachers, and teacher substitutes was held September 27.—Reported by CHATTIE EVERETT

New Church Building Underway

CHILLIWACK, B. C.—The branch business meeting was held October 11, with District President S. G. Clark in charge. New officers elected were: pastor, Elder D. Calder; counselors, Elders R. Day and A. Beer; secretary and treasurer, A. Beer; music director, Sister A. Beer; music assistant, Sister R. Day; women's leader, Sister W. Jackman; auditors, W. Stade and Cecil Christenson; Zion's League supervisor, Howard Taylor; publicity, Joan Beer.

There were two ordinations, two baptisms, one blessing and one wedding in the branch the past year.

The construction of a church is now underway at Chilliwack. The digging of the basement is nearly completed, and cement will soon be poured.—Reported by JOAN BEER

Semiannual Conference Successful

LONDON, ENGLAND.—An innovation introduced in the Midland and Southern District of the British Isles Mission last year was the holding of semiannual pastors' and officers' conferences. District President Tom Worth felt that such an opportunity for interchange of thought and teaching methods would make for more efficient leadership in branches and departments. The third such conference has just closed, making it clear that the benefits derived from such gatherings justify the experiment.

The duration of each conference has been from Saturday evening until Sunday midday, thus enabling pastors to return to their own branches in time for Sunday evening services.

At the last conference held October 10-11, attendance was wholehearted. The theme then under discussion was "Leadership Responsibilities," and three pastors were responsible for presenting various aspects of that subject. The conference concluded with an outstanding service of dedication, in which everyone participated.—Reported by VIOLET WORTH

Two Young Men Ordained

ORANGE, TEXAS.—Brothers C. W. Tischer and Richard Davies of the Houston Branch visited the Sabine area mission August 23. The group meets in the Knights of Pythias Hall, 500 Ninth Avenue, Port Arthur, Texas. Brother Davies gave the devotional at the worship period. At the eleven o'clock hour, Brother Tischer preached on the responsibilities of members and priesthood. Brothers Tischer and Davies ordained Charles W. Plumlee to the office of priest. Elder J. Henry Porter, assisted by Brother Tischer, ordained Ralph V. Sherrell to the office of priest.

Members of the group live in Orange, Port Arthur, and Beaumont. For that reason, services in Beaumont were started September 13. They are held in the YWCA. This service consists of a class and a worship service in the evening. Average attendance for both morning and evening services has been seventeen.

The group enjoyed a picnic September 27, with twenty-two attending.

Brother and Sister William Pitts have recently joined the group. Brother Pitts teaches at Lamar College in Beaumont, Texas.—Reported by J. HENRY PORTER

Children Blessed

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.—The Southern California District Zion's League volleyball play-offs were held during January in Santa Ana at the Memorial Park. Leagues from San Diego, Santa Barbara, Santa Paula, and Escondido attended, with San Diego League winning the trophy.

Glen Holmes presented a religious education program on the use of audio-visual materials on January 18. Following this, a potluck supper was served.

Elder Roy Hewes presented a series of Sunday evening lectures on the Book of Mormon during February.

On February 8 the young adult group gave a valentine party in honor of the Zion's League.

President F. Henry Edwards presented a sermon in Santa Ana on March 4.

Elder Wayne Simmons was in Santa Ana one week in March working with Spanish-speaking members.

A church birthday dinner was sponsored by group two of the women's department on April 10. This group also made possible a visit to the Huntington library and art gallery at San Marion for the children of the branch over nine years old. For the children under nine, an Easter egg hunt was sponsored.

A missionary series was held by Elder Glen Johnson during May.

Karen Andersen's Ways of Teaching was taught by Phyllis Carmichael with seventeen completing the course.

A special Mother's Day service was held during the morning worship hour. Brother and Sister Hobart Jordan presented corsages to the oldest mother, Sister Addie Mills, and the youngest mother, Mrs. Jean Weatherman. The young people gave a recital in honor of the mothers.

Sister Vida O. Engel served a box lunch at her home June 16, the proceeds from which went to the reunion ground fund.

On Children's Day, John Travis Davies, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Davies, was baptized by Elder Rodney Engel. Three babies were also blessed: Jill Lynette, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Roger Engel, was blessed by her uncle, Elder Rodney Engel, assisted by Patriarch L. J. Ostertag; James Edward, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Janacek, was blessed by Elder Roy Hewes assisted by Rodney Engel; and Karen Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Weatherman, was blessed by Bishop D. B. Carmichael, assisted by Elder Wayne Hewes.—Reported by BETTY BLACK

Officers Chosen

BOISE, IDAHO.—Karen Ann Condit, born May 1, was blessed July 5, by Elders Cecil B. Gilmore and Lester Dellenbaugh, at Boise. Karen Ann is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gomer H. Condit.

Officers for the year were elected September 13. Cecil Gilmore was re-elected pastor; Jim Jester, church school superintendent; Virginia Condit, secretary; Rollo Bullock, treasurer; Wanda Carson, choir director; Clare Pierce, Zion's Builders director; Shirley Jester, Zion's League leader; Alice Sivits, women's leader; Ladyce Barr, flower arrangement; Mina Montgomery, reporter and historian; Josephine Briggs, junior church supervisor; Ladyce Barr, Lester Dellenbaugh, Arthur Horner, Gomer Condit, Rollo Bullock, building and finance committee; Arthur Horner and Alvin Pierce, councilors.

The group netted $1,609 from their hamburger stand at the Western Idaho State Fair held in Boise in August.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Elder Luther S. Troyer spoke in Boise September 27 and 28 respectively.—Reported by BOISE BRANCH REPORTER

Guest Speakers

PROTON, ONTARIO.—Elder Fred McLean, of Guelph, Ontario, was guest speaker at the eleven o'clock service on October 11.

The annual quiz, with teams from Guelph, Elora, Grand Valley, and Proton began its series October 9. This year the questions are from the Book of Mormon, and are being held at Proton. The women's department serves supper each night of the quiz.

The business meeting was held October 5, with satisfactory reports from each department.

Missionary Les Gardner, of Guelph, made a visit to the branch and held a service on October 16.

At the business meeting of the women's department held in September, Mrs. William Goheen was re-elected president. After seventeen faithful years of service as secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Nathan Haw resigned in favor of Mrs. Don Goheen. Mrs. Reuben Smith is the teacher. The Proton women members held their October meeting at the home of Mrs. Enoch Snell of Reddickville and enjoyed an afternoon with the ladies of that branch.

Elder Aubrey Mason, of Wiarton, has been guest speaker at a series of Sunday evening meetings which ended October 18.

Brother Ed Batchelor has been guest speaker at Reddickville for a series of Sunday evening services.—Reported by DELL BLACK

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Townes of Wilburton, Oklahoma, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on September 13 by holding open house from 2:00 until 4:00 in the afternoon at their home. They have been members of the Reorganized Church for over fifty years.

DEATHS

STERRETT.—Anthony Blaine, son of Charles Edward and Helena Sorenson Sterrett, was born September 15, 1894, at Pleasant Grove, Utah, and died October 20, 1953, at Fremont, Nebraska, while visiting a friend, Rolland Goold. He moved with his family in 1902, to Independence, Missouri, where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 5, 1902. On May 12, 1917, he was married to Alice Deyo, who preceded him in death on March 17, 1953. By trade he was an automobile mechanic, and he was well known for his kindly consideration of all who sought his services.

Surviving are four sons: Charles H., Edward B., and Richard G. of Independence, and Robert E. of San Mateo, California; a daughter, Mrs. R. F. Kuhnlein of Independence; and fourteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and A. C. Brower officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PATTON.—William Isaac, son of Samuel J. and Clarissa Patton, was born April 13, 1871, at Burdette, Missouri, and died July 10, 1953, at the Memorial Hospital in Stillwater, Oklahoma. He homesteaded in Payne County in 1894 and on March 23, 1900, was married to Maud Ercy Malone, who preceded him in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August, 1906.

Surviving are four sons: W. C., Ray D., Hubert A., and John C., all of Stillwater; three daughters: Mrs. Maudetta Triplett of Stillwater; Mrs. Clara DeMarsh of Dallas, Texas; and Mrs. Florence Sibert of Portland, Oregon; two sisters: Mrs. Thomas N. Berry of Stillwater and Mrs. Clara Wood of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; two brothers: David Patton of Provo, Utah, and Frank Patton of Denver, Colorado; twelve grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. Interment was in Fairlawn Cemetery.

DECK.—Maxwell Arthur, was born December 5, 1904, in Peterborough, Ontario, and died September 27, 1953, at his home in Kansas City, Kansas. He spent his early years in Outlook, Montana, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 13, 1914. On August 27, 1938, he was married to Delores E. Mittelstaet, who survives him. For the past eight years he had been a member of Grandview Branch.

Besides his wife he leaves three daughters: Sandra, Carol, and Robin; two sons: Mark and Brent; his mother, Mrs. Nellie Deck; five sisters: Christine Dooley, Margaret Scheibold, Leone King, Wilhelmine Mills, and Frances O'Neill; and two brothers: Lloyd and Melvin. The funeral was held at Echternacht Chapel in Kansas City, Kansas, Elder Marion Sneed officiating. Burial was at Chapel Hills.

BARKER.—Livie Catherine, daughter of Othniel D. and Christiana Cox Henderson, was born December 31, 1873, near Irvine, Kentucky, and died September 16, 1953, in the Middletown (Ohio) Hospital, after a three months' illness. She was married to Pious Wilmon Barker on August 29, 1893. At the turn of the century she moved with her family to Middletown, Ohio, where she made her home. She and her whole family were baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 27, 1909. Over the years, she served her church faithfully, and her home was always open for traveling missionaries. She had served as a teacher in the church school for many years and was secretary of the women's department and home department.

She is survived by her husband, Pious W.; two sons, Frederick L. and Leonard W., all of Middletown; four brothers: Bejure and O. D. Henderson, Jr., of Hamilton, Ohio; Joe and Hebbert Henderson of Irvine, Kentucky; eighteen grandchildren; and twelve great-grandchildren. A son, Claude D. died May 10, 1950. Funeral services were held at the McCoy-Leffler Chapel in Middletown, Ohio, Elders Floyd Rockwell and Russell Rockwell officiating. Interment was in the Woodside Cemetery.

GREENE.—Emma Johnson, was born February 10, 1868, in Germany, and died July 31, 1953, at St. Joseph, Missouri. She came to America while she was very young, living first in Danville, Iowa, then in Stewartville, and from 1917 until her death in St. Joseph. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1915.

She is survived by a daughter: Mrs. Ruth Bauer of St. Joseph; a son, Raymond of Phoenix, Arizona; two sisters: Mrs. Katie Wilkie of St. Joseph and Mrs. Anna Dyer of Stewartville; four grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. The funeral service was conducted by High Priest Emery E. Jennings.

THE DOCTOR

You'd better learn to like doctors because you will meet them many times during your life. The doctor ushers you into life and, unless you depart violently, he ushers you out. You have to see him to be born, to get married, to take a job, to enter the country, or to leave it for long journeys (the "shots," you know), to take out insurance, and whenever you are seriously ill. Better make the doctor your friend and be a friend to him, too.

THE JOY OF BEING AN EDITOR

Getting out this little paper is no picnic. If we print jokes, people say we are silly; if we don't they say we are too serious.

If we clip things from other magazines, we are too lazy to write them ourselves; if we don't we are too fond of our own stuff.

If we don't print contributions, we don't appreciate true genius.

Now, like as not, someone will say we got this from some other magazine or paper. . . . We did!

SLIGHT DIFFERENCE IN TIMING

TIME TELLS

The noisy friend with loud "hello's"
Is like the fire which brightly glows;
But fires in time die down to embers,
And the friend worth-while is one who remembers.

HALF-TRUTH

To Protestant Christians, the substitution of Mary for Jesus by the Catholics seems a sacrilege. Yet, to many of them, the Bible has become the modern substitute for Jesus. Christ has retired. "He finished his work on the cross of Calvary." "Jesus paid it all." These truths become half-truths when we consider Christ in relation to the coming kingdom of God. Jesus purchased the church, not the kingdom, with his own blood. The kingdom's establishment is dependent on the disciples' obedience to the great moral laws of the gospel of the kingdom—their righteousness.

OUR HERITAGE

It is the rightful heritage of every human being to struggle, perspire, make choices, feel the weight of consequences of those choices, to fail, to rise again, to work, to achieve, and taste the sweets of achievement.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Lewis E. Landsberg

BORN WITHIN A half block of the Auditorium in Independence, Lewis Landsberg has never wandered far from the church and the teachings of a good Reorganized Latter Day Saint home. From childhood he learned about stewardship and today is teaching and living it as nearly as possible to the pattern set in the church by the Master. He's a bishop with an agricultural slant, but he's also a spiritual man, whose heart is warm with love for the people and desirous for their righteousness.

He usually is outstanding in a crowd, not because of his height but because of his black hair and keen black eyes, which generally have a merry twinkle in them. He was born October 15, 1916, in Independence, Missouri, and baptized there in 1924. He grew up on a dairy farm near Bonner Springs in eastern Kansas. He attended Park College, Parkville, Missouri; Kansas City (Kansas) Junior College; and Kansas State College, Manhattan, Kansas, receiving his Bachelor of Science degree in agriculture administration, with minors in mathematics and engineering, in 1939. Immediately after finishing school he went to work with the Farm Home Administration of the Department of Agriculture at Lyons, Kansas. After three and a half years he went under General Church appointment and served as Bishop of Lamoni Stake for seven years. He is now Bishop of Far West Stake and lives in St. Joseph, Missouri.

In 1940 he was married to Irene Shriver of Medicine Lodge, Kansas. They have two sons, Dean Arnold, 7, and Kent Lewis, 2.

Brother Landsberg was ordained a priest in 1937, an elder in 1942, a high priest and bishop in 1943. He served as assistant pastor of the Grandview congregation and was pastor of the Argentine (now Shawnee Drive) congregation when he was called to church appointment.

His many other interests include agricultural research, woodworking, and stamp collecting.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

ATTEND DEDICATION IN MISSISSIPPI

President W. Wallace Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp were in Pascagoula, Mississippi, for a dedication service in connection with the Mobile District conference November 7-8. Brother Smith gave the dedicatory sermon, and Brother DeLapp presented the key. Other conference personnel included Apostle Percy Farrow, Elders J. A. Pray, and J. L. Barlow, and Mrs. A. McQueen. Two state representatives, the mayor, and a member of the county board of supervisors were honored guests.

On Sunday evening, November 8, Brother Smith was the speaker at Escatawpa Branch, and Brother DeLapp preached at Mobile, Alabama.

VISIT OKLAHOMA AND TEXAS

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle D. Blair Jensen left October 30 for a two weeks' tour through Oklahoma and Texas.

"QUEST FOR CHRIST" SERIES HELD

Apostle Reed M. Holmes conducted a missionary series November 8-15 at Stone Church. The series was sponsored by the combined junior and senior Zion's Leagues of Stone Church, and made use of many visual aids, including films.

APOSTLE DAVEY IS SPEAKER

Apostle Roscoe Davey was the speaker Sunday evening, November 8, at Eden Heights Church in Center Stake of Zion.

TEACH PRIESTHOOD SCHOOL CLASSES

Elder Evan Fry, Radio Minister, and Merle Guthrie, Church Statistician, taught classes at the priesthood school at Odessa, Missouri, Tuesday evening, November 10.

CHEVILLE LEADS SINGING

Dr. Roy Cheville, Graceland College faculty member, arrived in Center Stake of Zion Sunday, November 8, to assist during the week with the music program at the "Quest for Christ" missionary series held at Stone Church.

GERMAN SAINTS ARRIVE IN ZION

Elder Eugene Theys reports that Elder and Sister Otto Smolny arrived in Independence, Missouri, from Berlin, Germany, on Friday, November 6. The Smolnys were sponsored by Brother and Sister Harry B. Sprague, residents of Independence.

TEACHERS VISIT HERALD HOUSE

As a part of the B. I. E. Day (Business-Industry-Education) observance of American Education Week, six groups of teachers from the Independence school system toured Herald Publishing House and Herald Bookshop on Wednesday afternoon, November 11.

PRESENTS ILLUSTRATED LECTURES

Elder Eugene Theys began a missionary series Sunday evening, November 15, in the Mt. Washington congregation in Center Stake of Zion. His illustrated lectures were on "The Kingdom of God."

Our One Great Gift

IT'S GREAT to be alive!" were the exhilarating words of a man breathing deep of the crisp wintry air as the first rays of dawn touched his eyes. He was at peace, content with his lot in life, free of anxiety, full of appreciation for surrounding beauty.

As a stranger passing by, I was not aware of the cause of this exuberance. But whatever it was, his enthusiasm was catching. I, too, began to feel good. "Happy Thanksgiving," I called. "It is great to be alive!"

As I passed on down the street, I thought, "How wonderful it is to be able to work with my hands, to walk on my own two feet, to see with my two good eyes, to hear the crunch of snow and the chirps of a stray robin which failed to go south. Even with part of these senses missing, I believe I would be happy."

I smelled the frying bacon as I stepped up on the front porch of our small home and opened the door. Inside, a specimen of humanity with long legs and arms—my nine-year-old—grabbed me round the waist and gave a long, squeezing hug. I sensed love flowing both into me and out of me. I looked through a distant door and saw a familiar figure with traditional apron turning a strip of meat. How much I had to be thankful for!

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." These words flashed into my mind as I viewed this scene. What a wonderful gift! I would like to live forever feeling the way I do now. The boss has been good to me; I have reasonable financial security. The rumblings of war are several thousands of miles away. No hasty, unwise words have marred our home for several days. It has been months since any of us have been sick.

Later today there will be turkey with all the trimmings. Dad and Mom and Grandmother, and others dear will help to eat it. Life will be full of joys today. Will it stay that way long?

There have been times when life wasn't so secure. And probably there will be times again when unwise—and perhaps, unfortunate—events will bring misery, discontent, and insecurity to our home. Perhaps we'll have to learn all over again how to live on twenty-five, or even ten, dollars a week. Our daughter may have to learn to curtail her desires for luxury to one bottle of pop a year, as I recall having to do in depression years. Frugality that seems conservative now may seem wasteful in days ahead. Disease may strike and take its toll. War may invade our land and even our home. Life is uncertain—but now it is reasonably abundant! Or so it seems to average Americans.

BUT THE ABUNDANT LIFE for many is still far away. During this past month we have been made more aware of the many unfortunate—right in our own neighborhoods. The United Funds Campaign booklet showed page after page of twisted legs and arms, homeless children, emaciated grandparents abandoned to charity, diseased bodies, and the desperately handicapped.

"Your ONE GIFT does so much for so many" stares at me out of the pages of that booklet. "When nothing is left but trouble—your one gift helps thousands of distressed families every year to get back on their feet. When fire, floods, tragedies strike, your gift provides emergency shelter, food, warm clothing. It helps save threatened marriages, finds homes for innocent children when others are broken up."

This "ONE GIFT" idea reminds us of the "One Great Gift" given thousands of years ago: "God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." The abundant life was promised by this Son, and his promise was written in words so simple, yet so full of hidden meaning. To some they foretold material abundance; to others they meant spiritual abundance. To Saints they have come to mean both. The joining of body and spirit into a single unit of earthly expression will eventually, with the acceptance and appreciation of the "Great Gift," culminate in "abundance." Celestial life, the highest type of godly creation, is the eternal joining of immortal body and righteous spirit. It is the abundant life, in all its fullness.

The world is very fortunate indeed to have an eternal Father who is concerned with turning that which is temporary into something eternal. We are fortunate that Jesus Christ was willing to assume the flesh of man, to reveal a pattern of life, to experience death that through his resurrection the permanent bands of death might be broken. It makes us mighty thankful for what we have today. It helps us to realize that we cannot be eternally as joyful as we are today if there are others about us lacking this joy and peace.

TO THOSE WHO have prospered, the words of Christ bring a challenge: "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom the Lord has committed much, of him will men ask the more." Our nations have accumulated much material wealth, and during the past years much has been required of us. The Marshall Plan and other similar aid programs by other nations have often seemed a burden, a "necessary evil." But eventually we shall find great satisfaction for such services rendered.

As the holiday season draws near, we express gratification for the blessings that have been ours to enjoy. But we also pledge ourselves to be more concerned that others might experience our thrill of "just being alive!" We are thankful for our "One Great Gift" who has helped make our joys so abundant; we wish to share Him with those who are in need.

Articles on Short Creek

Our attention has been called to two magazine articles appearing this month: Collier's for November 13, "Why I Have Five Wives," and True for November, "I Have Six Wives." We have read these articles and find that so far as our claims are concerned neither contains any very objectionable or erroneous statements. We shall soon present an editorial relative to the subject under consideration in these articles.

Church Directory

The 1954 Directory will go to press on December 1. There are a few officials who have not yet responded to requests for data and will still have time to get it to us if they act at once. This directory will be used by church officials, the traveling ministry, our armed forces, as well as tourists. It is important that it be complete and up to date showing the location of the local church and the pastor.

"Messiah" Soloists

Soloists for the Independence "Messiah" Choir radio broadcast have been announced by Franklyn S. Weddle, choir director. They are soprano, Florence Manning, New York; contralto, Donna Weddle, Independence, Missouri; tenor, Ralph Nielsen, Chicago; bass, Floyd Worthington, New York. The contralto soloist is Mrs. Fred Weddle, and is well known throughout the church as a musician.

On page 22 is a list of C.B.S. stations. You can be of excellent assistance in this great public relations effort by contacting the stations nearest you and asking them to carry the program.

A beautiful personal card is now available for members to send their friends. These will be sent upon request from the pastor or "Messiah" Publicity Chairman in your congregation, or you may request them yourself. Mats for newspaper advertising will be available in the near future.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Under the headline, "Massachusetts Avenue Becoming District's Street of Churches," the Washington (D. C.) Post for Monday, October 19, 1953, gives an account of interest to church members. The article begins:

Massachusetts Avenue, long famed for Embassy Row, is winning a new reputation as the scene of notable churches.

"Let's drive Aunt Maud over to see the mosque, the cathedral, and the Russian church" may become as common among Washingtonians with out-of-town visitors as "Maybe Cousin Camille would like to see the embassies."

From Sheridan circle to Westmoreland circle, where the Westmoreland Congregational Church dominates the avenue at the District Line, sight-seers come upon one unusual church after another.

The author then lists and describes the various buildings being or already erected on the avenue. A paragraph is devoted to the Reorganized Church:

In the next block, at 3526 Massachusetts Avenue, the Washington Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints broke ground in August for a $140,000 church. Distinct from the Utah Mormons, the Reorganized Church claims to be the true successor of the original Mormon church. Its present head is a grandson of Joseph Smith, founder of Mormonism.

The impressive list of churches erected on the avenue includes the Washington Cathedral, the Russian Orthodox Church of St. Nicholas, the Hebrew temple, Swami Premananda's Golden Lotus Temple, the St. Sophia Greek Orthodox Church, the Washington Islamic Center (mosque), and the other more familiar Protestant churches.

From John R. Grice, Tawas City, Michigan:

I have just finished a month's series of meetings at Poplar Creek and Brush Creek, Illinois. Splendid results came of this effort, and ten persons were baptized. We had good attendance and interest during the series. Several others have been baptized since I was in this area a year ago; now with ten more new members the Saints are feeling very optimistic.

I came here to Tawas City on Saturday afternoon and began a two weeks' series on Sunday morning. I have been wonderfully blessed in preaching and feel that with the things I was moved to say there is a need for teaching the law. Attendance has been good at all services so far.

One hundred years ago it took both courage and foresight to establish a university for "colored youth of the male sex" in the United States. We were reminded of this when the centennial announcement of Lincoln University, Chester County, Pennsylvania, was sent to us by the President and Board of Trustees of the university. This announcement says, in part:

We, the President, the Trustees and the Professors of Lincoln University, at the close of the first century of our corporate existence, to all our friends and to all lovers of free institutions everywhere: GREETINGS

In 1854 our institution received a charter from the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to grant degrees in the arts and sciences under the name of Ashmun Institute, to "colored youth of the male sex." At that time the term "free person" stood in contrast to "chattel slave," and human slavery was a legal institution in a neighbor state five miles distant from our seat. This foundation, then as now, challenged every presumption by which men may be enslaved.

It was the first collegiate charter anywhere in the world empowered to award degrees to "colored youth." This special

Take Heed unto Thyself

By Chris B. Hartshorn

A sermon preached at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, on July 12, 1953

These things command and teach. Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.—I Timothy 4: 11-16.

THESE WORDS were written to Timothy by Paul. Paul thought of Timothy as a son. He said in beginning his epistle, "Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father, and Jesus Christ our Lord." Paul was not speaking paternalistically here. He was rather speaking by the spirit and power of God, for he said, "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Then he went on to tell some of the doctrines which would perplex the church and the Saints of that time, finally coming to a few things which he was told "by way of commandment."

The first thing that strikes our attention is the statement of Paul to Timothy that he should let no man despise his youth. I don't know what Timothy could do about that. If people despise youth they are just likely to feel that way about it, but on the other hand, there is a danger when youth itself begins to feel that it is being despised. Perhaps Paul was warning him that there would be those who would say, "Well, he's just a boy. He is not fully accountable over all that he does and says."

I've discovered in my lifetime that there is no right time for people to do the great tasks which God expects of them. Do you remember, as I do, when you were told in just so many words that you were too young to take on important responsibilities, that men of experience must do these things? Then as the time went on—you never knew just when the change took place—you began to be told that you were too old, that you couldn't fully carry the responsibilities of this or that task. Now there's nothing to this. You should not judge yourself by such standards. The right time for you to do the thing that God wants you to do is now, and he'll bless you in it.

I LIKE WHAT Paul wrote to the Philippian saints: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." With that kind of faith Timothy would need have no fear as to whether he was too young or too inexperienced. If he would just have confidence in himself and go ahead and do the best he could, Christ would do the rest.

Paul next called his attention to the fact that he was to be an example to the church. He was to let his conduct, his language, his faith, his purity speak for him. Now it's rather dangerous for one to set himself up as an example. I remember an experience I had a few years ago when I was living in a little town in Iowa. We had to carry water, and it was very difficult for Mrs. Hartshorn to do the washing, so I tried to be helpful, carrying the water and emptying it and otherwise assisting her with the family wash. I met one of the neighbors one day and he said, "You're making it pretty hard for the rest of us men. Our wives are saying, 'Why don't you do like Mr. Hartshorn does?'" Well, I became conscious then that I was an example and was not appreciated too much by some people.

But we must be willing to take a stand and be an example of the right. Men will hear what we do when their ears are deaf to what we say. There is no argument that can be framed to down a good life. Righteousness is its own testimony. Perhaps many of you will remember the sad plea that Alma once made to his son, Corianton. Corianton had been a dissolute boy even though his father had been the high priest of the church. He had broken about all the laws of man and God. So Alma said to him one day, "Because of your conduct they will not believe my words." That's true. Because of our conduct people may not believe our words when we're trying to lead them in the right way. We must be willing to take the risk, even to be an example to other people for the right.

I REMEMBER many years ago Brother Marcus Cook preached a sermon in Des Moines and told an experience he had in going out in some of the rural areas in the state of Washington where he was missionary. He called upon an isolated family whom we shall call "Barbour." This was a large family, and the mother and children were very active in the community Presbyterian Church. Sister Barbour had anticipated this visit, and she wasn't selfish about it—she arranged for a meeting and invited all her friends to come and hear Brother Cook; among those who came was the Presbyterian minister.

At the close of the service, the minister greeted Brother Cook and said, "I'd like to have a talk with you. Won't you come over to my home?" So at the appointed time Brother Cook went over there and they talked about the church, particularly about the Barbour family. The minister said, "You know, I do not have a single member in my congregation who is as loyal and dependable and as good a Christian as Mrs. Barbour. If Latter Day Saintism produces people of this quality I wish more of my members had it."

Under the grace of God, Latter Day Saintism will do that for us. It will help us to see that here is an opportunity to serve either in our own congregation or in others. At all times we must let our light shine and be willing to live the example that Christ set for us.

THE NEXT THING Paul called to Timothy's attention was that he should attend to his reading. Remember, this was given by the Spirit many years ago. I think it's still good counsel. In these days when there are so many opportunities for recreation and leisure, and so many temptations to take up all that leisure, we need to give more heed to our reading. The language of the Scriptures does not have to be twisted to bring into it that we need to read more than one book. Timothy likely had just the Septuagint, the Scriptures of that day. I think that the Greek or Aramaic or Hebrew tongue, whichever the Scripture was written in, would allow the interpretation that we could also give heed to reading of the Saints' Herald and Daily Bread and Guidelines. At least I would say that it would not exclude the reading of them. Some have argued that we should read only the Three Standard Books. Now there is no basis for this, for the Doctrine and Covenants says that we should "seek out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

In the early church a revelation was received concerning the doctrines of Christ. "Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention, concerning the points of my doctrine; and in these things they do err, for they do wrest the Scriptures, and do not understand them." This is easy to do. We have at least 250 denominations, each of them emphasizing a particular thing. Some of them wrest the same Scriptures out of which we preach today, but Satan has a hand in this. He stirs them up to contention. We have heard it said, "It makes little difference what you believe just so you behave all right." There is just enough truth in that to make it a subtle falsehood. It does make a difference what we believe, because out of our thinking comes our action. Jesus said, "In vain do they worship me." Good people try to worship him, but it's in vain because they are teaching for commandments the doctrines of men. We must give attention to our reading that we may discover the truth of God and understand it so that we shall not be led astray.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery [elders]." Some people think that we have gifts given to us fully ripe, and all we have to do is reach up and pluck them. This is not so. We may have certain aptitudes that make it a little easier for us to do certain things than others; but if we ask writers, singers, or musicians who play instruments, we'll find that they weren't just "born that way." We are to take heed of the gifts that God gives us and cultivate them, for it takes a lot of cultivating if we are to serve him acceptably. I think one of the curses of the push-button age in which we live is that we always like to be entertained. We like to sit on the sidelines and be spectators, but we do not grow that way. If we want to become strong physically or mentally or spiritually, we've got to be more than spectators. We must not neglect the gifts which are given to us.

NEXT PAUL SAID, "Meditate upon these things." Meditation employs thinking, and thinking is hard work. Oh, we do some thinking that doesn't amount to much and takes little effort, but real thinking is hard work, and we don't like it. We sometimes try to avoid it. Here Paul under the impress of the spirit, is telling Timothy to do some meditating.

I believe there is a passage in the Psalms that says, "Be still, and know that I am God." Have you ever tried to come into a church and meditate upon spiritual things? There is a denomination that makes a great deal out of what it calls "practicing the presence of Jesus." I think that is a fine idea. I don't know how successful these people are in it, but I do believe that we can train ourselves to meditate. The challenge is this: what would we do, what would we be thinking about if we became conscious that we were right now in the presence of Jesus? It's a beautiful thought. Perhaps we are too sociable at times with certain people. We're a little exclusive with some, but we do love to be sociable and most of the time we need to do more meditating and less talking.

In writing to the Philippians Paul said, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, honest, and pure and of good report, think on these things." When you come into church sometime, pick up a hymnbook. If you can't direct your thoughts to God in any other way, read some of the beautiful poems there. They will help you to meditate upon the things of the Lord.

THEN PAUL SAID, "Take heed"—or watch yourself. That's a big job. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." We're not saved the day we are baptized; though we might be born again of water and the Spirit, there is no time at which we can say, "We're in. There is nothing we need to worry about." "Take heed unto thyself." In the Hebrew letter (2: 1) Paul makes the statement: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip," or as the Revised Standard Version says, "Lest we drift away from them." I think that's what happens more frequently. Things don't slip out of our fingers so much as we have a change of our attitude; because of things we entertain in our thinking, we gradually drift away from the high standards set for us in the gospel.

I remember one time standing on the Van Buren Street bridge in Chicago looking down at the water flowing beneath us. The Chicago River moves rather swiftly there, and as I watched the water I suddenly had the illusion that the bridge I was on was moving, while the water seemed to be standing still. The psychology of this is that large bodies or large masses tend to be fixed in our vision, while the smaller bodies seem to be moving. I definitely felt that the bridge and I were moving down stream. It is like that with our religious life: when we fix our eyes on the mass of this moving world and adopt its ways, we drift from the church almost unconsciously. We must take heed lest we let these things which we have received—which have been given to us by the inspiration of God—slip from us, or we drift away from them.

The last thing Paul cautions us under the impact of this Spirit is "Take heed unto the doctrine," for it is a means of grace; it will save us, and not only us, but those who hear us. There is a great deal in the doctrine of Christ, and it does make a difference what we believe. It is the doctrine of the kingdom that Paul was talking about—not just any doctrine. He said, “Take heed to the doctrine.” He had in mind a very specific doctrine. Jesus said, “My doctrine is not mine.” He came from heaven, but he said the Father gave him a commandment what he should say and what he should teach. “My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.” We have no right to change his doctrine. We should find out what it is and then follow it very definitely.

This spring there was a convention in Denver of the Baptist denominations. According to Christian Century they finally got around to appropriating some eight million dollars for certain projects, but they put a string on them. Only those congregations that kept the fundamental doctrines were to have access to it. We are told that some of them are so liberal they no longer believe in immersion, even though the Baptist sect traditionally was established on this doctrine. That’s where they got their name, and I take it that some of them are going in now for taking care of their sinners by dry cleaning.

Paul wasn’t fooled about the gospel. He said, “There’s no glory to me in the matter of preaching the gospel, because of necessity, I am charged with it.” Necessity was laid upon him. “Woe is me if I preach not the gospel of Jesus Christ.” Paul had been in Galatia and had established a few congregations. Then he went on his journey, but he got a report that things were not going well, so he wrote an epistle. His heart must have been full of sorrow as he penned these words:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel . . . than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1:6-8.

Some say that Paul was quite egotistical. I think not. I think that he was impressing upon those Saints something by the power of the Spirit of God. He knew that this was the gospel—the same in all ages, unchangeable no matter who preached it. If they did preach another gospel, then they were preaching something that would be accursed.

IN LATTER-DAY REVELATION (Section 42—which has been called the basic law of the church) I read this: “And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel.” In the fifteen verses reference is made to the Inspired Version, for it says, “Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until thou hast received them in full.”

This little book I hold here is the Inspired Version of the New Testament. I find great joy in presenting the principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ as they are given in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and of course the latter-day revelations to us.

Perhaps some of you have been guilty of saying, or have heard others say, “We’d like to hear some good old gospel sermons once more.” When I hear people say this I wonder if what they mean is that they’d like to hear somebody preach on just the first principles.

Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, . . . of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

I wonder why they feel that way? Are the elders getting away from preaching these principles? Or do they preach them a little differently than they used to? Let me remind you that the first thing mentioned here is to preach repentance from dead works. Dead works are those which lead us along a path which ends in death. “There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.” It’s not sufficient just to seem right. We must know we’re being led in the ways of righteousness.

I’VE OFTEN THOUGHT our people enjoy hearing a convincing sermon that we ought to be baptized for the remission of sins and come into this church. That gives them a wonderful satisfaction, because they’re in, and there’s nothing more to do. But let’s start where this says to start—with repentance. I’m reminded that in the first eighteen sections of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord said seven times to this infant church, “Teach nothing but repentance.”

Let me read from 18: 2:

And I command you that you preach naught but repentance, and show not these things unto the world until it is wisdom in me; for they cannot bear meat now, but milk they must receive; wherefore, they must not know these things, lest they perish.

We ought to be prepared now for more than milk—that’s for children—but we still need the doctrine of repentance. I imagine that as long as I’m able to stand and declare the word of God I’ll have something to say about repentance, because it’s so basic to our own spiritual welfare.

The word “repent” has an interesting history. It comes from the Greek word metanoia and means, “to change one’s mind.” When we get a person to repent, we get him to see things differently. We change his mind, and if his mind isn’t changed, we haven’t done much for him.

We do need to change our minds on a lot of things if we’re going to be better people. It is hard to change people’s minds, especially in the field of ethics, or to disturb those habits which are un-conducive to spirituality. They are things that we like to do because they give us satisfaction and pleasure but that’s the task—to change our way of thinking on these things—so we need to speak about repentance.

We usually repent of our sins for the same reason we are willing to undergo an operation—because the pain is so bad that it hurts. Not until we begin to realize that we are jeopardizing our health or our social or economic welfare are some of us willing to repent of our sins. There is no other way to have ourselves except by the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and there is no other way to save others except they hear and obey; so Paul was charging his son with “preaching the gospel of the kingdom,” or “the fullness of the gospel.”

This term creeps into latter-day revelations in several places.

What is the difference between the gospel and the fullness of the gospel? That which is “the fullness of the gospel” goes back to the very beginning. Adam had it when he sinned and went away from God. And the gospel went on down through the ages: “God . . . preached before the gospel unto Abraham” (Galatians 3: 8), which is not another gospel, Paul said. This same gospel was preached by Melchisedec to Abraham, and in this gospel were taught the principles of the kingdom, or Zion. In the fullness of the gospel we are taught about the return of the Jews and about the New Jerusalem. We’re taught that we shall have eternal life based upon merit rather than upon election. God does not elect a certain group to be saved and another to be damned. It’s up to us to choose, and today the emphasis is generally, if anything is said about election, that we’re the ones to elect, not God. This gospel of the kingdom teaches that there is salvation through the priesthood, and there is danger in priestcraft. Joseph Smith, when asked to prepare an article for the Chicago Democrat in 1842, added to his story of the rise of the church and its progress what we know as the “epitome of faith,” and when he wanted to tell the world what he believed the first thing he did was to give a unique concept of the Godhead. He said, "We believe in God the eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." In the fifth Lecture on Faith, he said that these are two persons, and that the power by which they work, or the mind of God, is the Holy Spirit.

THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS tells us that we cannot establish Zion except by the law of the celestial kingdom. We must know that law and practice it. By doing that, this God who was so considerate as to send his only Son to teach what he had commanded him to teach and nothing else will show us that he loves us, that he wants to bring us again into his presence and abide with us throughout eternity. A time is coming, according to the fullness of the gospel, when this earth shall be cleansed and we shall dwell here with God and Christ a thousand years, and then throughout eternity. Isn't that wonderful?

Your pastor tells of the early experience of William H. Kelley who was sent by the Reorganization to preach in the British Isles. One of his first efforts was on the streets of a town in Ireland. In the very first sermon he was heckled continually by a young man who seemed bent on destroying the effectiveness of his work, but Elder Kelley determined that he would not lose his opportunity to present the Restoration message to that group of people who gathered around. The second night he preached, the same young man was there doing the same kind of work, but Brother Kelley said, "God being my helper, I'm going to preach this sermon. The people need it." The third night the same things happened, except that at the close of that sermon this young man came up and asked for baptism. There is a lesson in that. Let's not give up too easily. It may be that when we take heed, watch ourselves, and work, not despising our youth, not despising our age, but believing that there is sufficient in Christ for every responsibility, we, too, can accomplish the redemption of at least one soul.

Together

By L. E. Christy

AS WE BECOME balanced personalities, that is, assured of our place and importance in society, we begin our part in the building of God's kingdom here on earth. Building that kingdom involves the bringing together of strong, intelligent, enlightened people in a fellowship that the Holy Spirit can use to reveal the pure will of God. Teaching requires closeness. No one can be taught "at a distance." Joseph Smith was told to gather the people together for strength. Their need was great, for they were threatened with personal destruction and there had not been time for the effects of conversion to be as complete as was needed to meet the skepticism of that time; therefore, they had to live together geographically.

But "together" is not necessarily always geographical; it can describe an ideological closeness. It is no new doctrine to teach that the growth of the group depends on the development of the individual kingdom-wise. I want to stress the fundamental idea that each of us must take upon ourselves the task of becoming pure morally, enlightened in the important basic truths of the world and the will of the Lord, and guided by the Holy Spirit. In this process we must bear constantly in mind that individual development differs. Some will go faster, and some more slowly. The bond that ties us together will have to be our dedication to the cause of righteousness.

Just as surely as our social relations become diverted from a concern for each other in the manner of Christ and become critical and complaining, we shall separate ourselves from God and from each other. We must learn to know each other as we are. There is no one without fault, and sometimes the fault we find in another is really our own faulty reasoning or misunderstanding of a situation. We do not condemn our brothers for their sins as often as we do for personal characteristics that offend us personally. We think one talks too loudly, another too much, others do not dress to please us, the young are too wicked, and the old too intolerant. There is something wrong with everyone in this world to some person. No one is free from the complaints of others. There never lived a man who was completely accepted, even Jesus Christ offended some. Therefore, we must learn to understand that man is as he is and will grow either better or worse as time goes on. What his end will be depends on his goal, or perhaps whether or not he has an ideal toward which to grow.

Realistically, there will be only a few who will accept the way of Christ as their way. These need the companionship of one another to be able to hold fast to their ideals and to see them more clearly as time goes on through the continuing testimony of one to another in the presence and light of the Spirit of God. We need each other for strength and encouragement, not for careless faultfinding or harping criticism. Only as we talk to God freely about ourselves and live openly in his cause can we know ourselves and each other well enough to make his love so manifest that others will want to join us.

NEXT WEEK'S HERALD WILL SAY . . .

"Nothing is perfectly safe in this life. We are in constant peril. The perils are created by ourselves and by others. Perils are brought on by assumptions not based on fact. They are brought on by inattention, fatigue, complacency, and other things. And there can be danger in almost anything. . . . There are many examples of how people go knocking on the door to eternity, and then are surprised when it opens and they fall in."—"The Law of Constant Peril," by L. J. Lea.

"Thus we see that Christ was a great contractor under God the Father with power, knowledge, and skills that man as yet has not been fully able to fathom."—"Jesus Christ, the Son of God," by Charles R. Hield.

"To some degree Christian perfection is similar to that of music; certain basic statutes must be obeyed—each in its own time, each at the right moment."—"The Call to Perfection," by Harry Black.

"In the Victorian age the average head of a family bought only what he could afford. . . . It was the exception to know of anyone who saw, coveted, and acquired, regardless of the reckoning day."—"Set in Order Your Own House," by Lottie Clark Diggle.

"At first glance it appears that the oblation has been violated and its function altered, since it has become an offering of money for the poor while it was originally the presentation of bread and wine for the Communion supper."—"A Communion Message," by William McMurray.

"My father said, 'We go to church unless we are sick. If you don't go, then stay in the house. Don't go anywhere else.' I stayed in the house. What a miserable morning!"—"Remembering," by M. L. Draper.

Thanksgiving

DURING THIS SEASON of the year when we are recalling, in our homes and schools and churches, the story of the First Thanksgiving day in America and the incidents preceding that day, we appreciate anew the strong conviction that moved the Pilgrim families to seek a land where they might worship the living God.

* * * *

Man is by nature religious. God has set a bit of himself within each of us. It has been said that "a child takes to God as a bird to the air." Children respond readily to the belief and teaching that God is our Heavenly Father and is interested in each of his children—loving all and supplying their daily needs.

The story is told of an agnostic who was endeavoring to teach a small boy to disregard the idea that God is everywhere. Trying to create a lasting impression upon the child's mind, he had the boy spell out the words "God is no where." But the boy, slowly spelling out the sentence, brought out an entirely different meaning—"God is now here!"

* * * *

Our need for God, though it cannot be seen or touched, is a basic need that should make us all as interested in each other as in a brother. It cannot be explained away by mere words. It continues to make itself known; and unless this need is supplied, we are restless, not finding the happiness, well-being, and contentment we desire in daily living. In the words of St. Augustine, "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

* * * *

We need to be conscious of our relationship with God. We need to know him as our Creator, our Counselor, our Strength.

We need to give thanks to him.

* * * *

This thought-provoking statement is found in Philippians 4: 6: "But in every thing, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God."

We recall the story of the two angels whose duties were to bear the prayers of the people to the heavenly throne. One angel carried the "thank-you" prayers, the other carried the "give-me" prayers. It is said that at times God's face was sad, because the angel bearing the "thank-you" prayers came back almost empty-handed, while the other poor angel was so overburdened he could scarcely carry his load.

When we pause to do a bit of reflective thinking, we begin to appreciate how much a heartfelt "Thank you, God" must mean to our Creator and Counselor who desires nothing more than that his children discover the joy of understanding and the gratitude that is reflected in a "thankful heart."

By Kleta H. Finley

During each day, not alone on Thanksgiving day, as we are busy with our various activities, we can thank him in our hearts for the blessings he showers on us so abundantly, directly and through those who act in his spirit. We can be and need to be a thankful and thanks-giving people in our daily experiences.

For every opportunity and for every impulse to be kind, to do good, to consider others, to have faith, hope, and love—we give thanks—for in responding to these impulses we find the joy for which we were created.

* * * *

Whitney Montgomery expresses his thanks in these few lines:

Dear God, I'm thankful for this day
That gave me both of work and play—
A sun-drenched sky, a scented breeze,
A healthy mind, a heart at ease.

* * * *

The vibrant handclasp of a friend
Gave life a holier, happier blend.

* * * *

Dear God, believe me when I say
That I am thankful for this day.

design was foremost at dedicatory exercises in 1856 when "the God of Ethiopia" was invoked, the hope and prophecy voiced that through this institution "God be glorified in Africa."

After the death of the Great Emancipator, the name Lincoln gave a light to guide us and an example to inspire us. His name and his memory laid an obligation upon our founders to work for free persons in a free world, at home as in the ancestral continent.

To that obligation they were true. But they saw clearly that the goal was to be reached only through the spread of learning and the inculcation and practice of high religion, that is, through education and brotherhood. Lincoln men in all continents of earth bear witness through their achievements that our fathers were very right, and they rise up and call them blessed. . . .

We welcome you to celebrate with us the centennial of our founding and urge you to strive with us for a wider application of the principle: FREE PERSONS IN A FREE WORLD THROUGH EDUCATION AND BROTHERHOOD, in the same light which led our Founders and under the same beneficent care of Almighty God.

Our very hearty congratulations to Lincoln University.

Fan Letter

I HAD A VISITOR today. I lay in a narrow white hospital bed far from home. The illness was passing, the loneliness beginning.

My favorite redhead, alias my husband of long standing, breezed in, bringing a solid healthiness with him. "Here is your loot," he grinned, tossing the day's mail across the tightly tucked-in sheet. There were letters, some advertisements, and a neat trim publication I look forward to every single week.

Yes, loot it was indeed, for after John had gone and the ward had settled down, after the mail was read and appreciated, I plumped up my pillow, settled myself comfortably, and thoroughly enjoyed my new Saints' Herald. I read it hungrily from cover to cover. The sunlight had turned from gold to amber before I came back to the world of thermometers and starched nurses. I had found familiar names which brought to mind faces I loved. I had read much I needed and wanted to know. I had been lifted out of the realm of my miserable stomach into the realm of my searching soul, and had been satisfied in my seeking. These people who had prepared this feast for me couldn't know that they had done as much good as if they had stopped by to say "hello."

For those of you who get the Herald every week only to lay it down, really meaning to read it later, don't keep putting it off. You will be cheating yourself of the encouragement, the information, and the surge of conviction that comes with every copy.

Faith or Fatalism

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

THESE WORDS are written while our airship is over 18,000 feet skyward, somewhere above the ocean between Iceland and Greenland. The wind currents are adverse and our plane is being tossed about in very stomach-threatening proportions. Each ascent and sudden drop reminds us that no matter how efficient the men or the instruments, there are still powers greater than man's knowledge or ingenuity. And the booklet which is "must" reading for every passenger, How to Ditch Without a Hitch, is cleverly written yet grim evidence that man's powers can be and are often bested by nature itself.

Recently in our town a line of traffic was proceeding along a busy highway. One man was on his way to work in his daily fashion. A large truck sped past him and just as it cleared his vehicle a thin skim of slippery pavement caused it to sway and a huge block of iron bounced from the truckbed and landed directly upon the top of the innocent driver's head resulting in his instant death.

Several summers ago a Great Lakes steamer blew up—with great loss of property and life. One of our Reorganized Latter Day Saint couples enjoys boat travel and had booked for the complete voyage, but for no particularly good reason decided to disembark before the end of the trip. Their unoccupied cabin was completely destroyed in the tragedy.

As I made plans for this European trip, newspapers announced that a local couple had been killed (one of the bodies even lost at sea) in a plane accident, and the identical question came from many friends: "Oh, aren't you afraid to fly clear across the ocean?" And then so often it was followed by, "Well, I guess if it's your time to go it doesn't make any difference where you are."

And there is the question brought down to fundamentals—faith or fatalism?

FUNDAMENTALLY the fatalist believes that the mysterious necklace of events which he calls "life" is strung together by some superior force and when the knot is tied—that is the end. Such believers in a form of fatalism call themselves by various names, and fortunes are made by those who claim to acquaint gullible people with what will happen to them tomorrow, and what tall, dark, and handsome stranger will enter their lives. And there are those whose same fatalistic beliefs lead them to consult stars, palms, and numbers in an effort to avoid the evil or comply with the good in their already charted future.

It would have been wonderful to be able to open a book or consult an expert who could say, "Go ahead and fly in that plane, for nothing can hurt you—it is not your time." And my facetious thoughts always ask, "It's all right if it isn't my time, but what if I get mixed up with the lives of others whose time it might be? I might not come out so good myself."

Faith has no complete definition; rather, it is a combination of hope for the future, trust in God and fellow men, and above all a knowledge of human and spiritual laws. So I'm riding along on a rough air flight with only two possible endings: that it not be completed, or that the arrival be accomplished in safety. As a fatalist I either have a false sense of security based on an "I've been baptized and so I'm saved" attitude, or I am secretly in constant terror as to the prospects of my number being the next one drawn for elimination from the earthly scene. Or as one with faith, I have hope and plans for what I will do when I step from the plane, trust in the mechanics who serviced the ship and the pilots who watch and control the instruments, and above all an understanding that it is by law that we live and have our existence, and if this be the end then it is because a law of aeronautics or mechanics has been ignored or broken. Yet if the arrival be safe, it is because we have together knowingly or unknowingly complied with the immutable laws of the universe.

THE FATALIST never knows rest, for indecision is his lot. True faith is true peace and is known only by those who approach the law from God's viewpoint. Generations have been calmed and beckoned to worship by "The Angelus" as painted by the great artist, Millet. Last week as I looked across the quiet fields at the edge of the small village of Barbizon, France, and saw the same church steeple above the pastoral scene, I knew that faith and peace are synonymous, and that there are many humble folks who have found the key.

Not many miles away is the gigantic and luxurious palace of Fontainebleau. Napoleon reigned here in power for a time, controlling men and nations under his own laws. Yet that same spot saw his disgrace and abdication when his man-made laws could no longer control. That great man, whose fatalistic star rose high for a time in the temporal heavens of war and politics, learned that peace comes through obedience and compliance rather than through force and oratory.

Faith or fatalism? It's a personal choice based on your desires, your understanding, and your love for God.

Thankful for What?

By Mrs. Hale Miller

RECENTLY WHEN I was watching television, I witnessed a wedding ceremony performed in a chapel by a Protestant minister. The ceremony itself was much like any wedding we might see in one of our churches, but the thing that made this one different was the fact that the boy and girl who were being united in marriage were blind and were accompanied by their seeing-eye dogs. I was impressed as I saw this couple exchange vows; both looked radiantly happy. As I heard their expressions of faith and courage I recognized that here were two people who evidenced a thankfulness for life and a chance to live it. Then this question came to my mind: Why don't we who have so much to be thankful for show more gratitude for our many blessings? Why do we take a healthy body and fit mind for granted, as we so often do, instead of using them as we should to express our thanks to our Heavenly Father for these and all the other blessings with which we are so richly endowed?

At this season of each year our minds turn to Thanksgiving. What does it mean to us? Pumpkin pie and turkey dressing, or a time to offer up a special prayer of thanks? If we are aware that we should express our thanks, for what should we be most thankful?

Can we not learn a lesson from the blind couple and somehow be filled with the radiancy of thankfulness for the chance to live? If we could develop this attitude, surely we would more fully appreciate the "extra" blessings, and, as we enumerate each one, we could say sincerely, "For this I am thankful."

The greatest obstacle between us and true thanksgiving is the fact that we demand so much and come to regard the good things we possess as necessities rather than blessings. We complain because we do not have more, or because we see others who have more, rather than being grateful because we have as much as we do. We spend too much time looking around to see someone more fortunate.

There is a saying which most of us have heard: "I complained because I had no shoes until I met a man who had no feet." Let us learn to be more thankful for fewer blessings, rather than seeking more for which to be thankful.

Compensation

Whatever may happen to you, remember the good people and be kind to them. Your hurts and troubles come from a very few. Your blessings and helps come from many. Do not bother to remember who hurt you. Try to remember who helped you.

Are you counting your blessings, or are you counting your wounds? A great mistake could be made in trying to list all of the wrong things.

There are people who, no matter what happens, manage somehow to keep sweet and patient with the world. They may defend themselves against a single aggressor or nuisance, but they remain kind and friendly to all people.

The Broken Date

A FEW YEARS AGO I broke a date with an old school friend. I thought at the time that I had a very good reason to break it. I would have had to walk about four miles to keep it. I worked in a war plant, and this was my only day off. I was tired. Besides, I was sure what she wanted to talk to me about, and I thought it was hopeless. I thought she had reached the point in life where she was beginning to look over on the other side and was getting a bit frightened, as I thought she well might.

I had been brought up in a strict, religious home; while she had spent her youth on pleasure. Yet we were pals in school. After we had spent years apart we met again and it looked to me that her pleasure-seeking had degraded pretty low. So my mission to her would be pretty much of a failure. And I was tired.

I have thought often of this broken date because my friend is a very sensitive person and entirely unforgiving. I have not been able to get in touch with her since then. I have thought of it often, but I never mentioned it until recently.

Talking of it made it fresh in mind, and when I was alone again a verse of Scripture came forcibly to me. Jesus said, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

If I had gone that day I would have been rested long ago. Now these questions weigh upon my heart, "Could I have helped her to repent? Was God ready to receive her? Am I the greater sinner?"

Tribute to Christ

Henry Didon, celebrated French thinker of the nineteenth century, wrote about Christ. We believe what he wrote is worthy of being read, and it is placed in the "Herald" as an interesting discussion with no idea of endorsing any of the speculative ideas or doctrines. Didon affects realism. We, as a people, have an advantage—we have additional testimony in the Book of Mormon, our "new witness for Christ."

ISRAEL A. SMITH

JESUS CHRIST is the greatest name, the greatest personality in history. There are others for whom men have died, but his is the only one worshiped among all peoples of all races in all ages which followed him.

His name is known of all the earth. Among savages of the most degenerate tribes of the human species, missionaries go incessantly to announce his death on the cross and the sacrifice he made for the human race which is saved by love and obedience to him. The most indifferent in the modern world have been obliged to admit that nothing has ever helped the weak and the suffering and the erring more than a belief in his name.

The most glorious geniuses of the past will be obscured. Whether in monuments, palaces, obelisks, or tombs; whether in written encomiums, papyrus or parchment, bricks, building stones, or medallions—only reminiscences of them have been preserved for us. Jesus will live forever in the conscience of his faithful people. Here in this great manifestation of his power is his indestructible monument.

The church founded by him fills with his name all time and all places. The church knows him, loves him, adores him! As he lives in it, so it lives in him. In a few simple words the church teaches that the greatest event which ever occurred to humanity was the arrival of Christ, and that God loves man, since God saves him from harm by giving him aid; that charity is the supreme duty, since by his charity and goodness the Savior was brought to the cross; that the Christian must be vigilant in the good because his Master will be the judge; that he need not fear death because his Master conquered it and because he himself is destined to eternal life.

THE MAN who accepts these instructions and believes in Christ can walk uprightly in life. He is armed for defense and for growth. Nothing can arrest his progress. The disciple of Jesus Christ has become the conqueror of the world—not from the standpoint of materialism and brutality—for violence is not in the spirit of the crucified Master—but in the sense of goodness, of abnegation, of sacrifice, and of moral dignity. In sowing these virtues as seeds of life, he prepares and enriches the human soil until it is capable of all culture and of all harvests.

But since believers in their intelligence seek to find reasons for elementary dogmas, it is necessary that we explain to them, in the measure of our imperfect and always limited knowledge, the facts and details of the human and divine life of Jesus, the words he spoke, the laws he formulated, his manner of teaching, evangelizing, combating, suffering, and dying. The history of Jesus is the foundation of faith. Evangelical doctrine, moral Christianity, culture, hierarchy, church dignities, all rest on him. Thanks to the work of the educated teachers, the doctrine of Jesus, his moralities, his faith, and his church have become little by little the object of distinct science, perfected, organized, responding to the legitimate aspirations of believers who would be men of faith and men of science; equally, the life of Jesus Christ must in its detail meet the exigencies of history.

The partisans of those called the critical school will say: The Christ of dogma and of tradition, the Christ of the apostles and the evangelists, interpreted according to the doctrines of the church, is not and cannot be the Christ of history. This ideal Christ, God in man, Spirit incarnate, conceived by an unknown miracle, calling himself the Son of God, in the absolute and metaphysical sense, multiplying miracles, speaking as the Fourth Evangelist makes him speak, rising again three days after death, ascending to the heavens in the face of his disciples, after forty days—such a man is not real! He exists only in the pious fancy of his believers who have created him piecemeal. The true Jesus, the Jesus of history, was born as are all other men; he lived like them; he did no more miracles than they! He taught a purer morality and founded a religion less perfect than others. Like all reformers, as a rule, he succumbed to the jealousies of his contemporaries. Becoming the victim of Jewish hatred and dying as we die, he has neither ascended to heaven nor is he living with God!

I REVOLTED (pardon the phrase), not only in my Christian faith but in my impartiality as a man, at this contradiction. Convinced that Jesus was the invisible God in human form resembling our own, I, as a historian, regard him as still living, such as he was in this double nature.

The question of his divinity has divided the greatest minds since the advent of Christ, and it will create division to the end. It is already a strange phenomenon that Jesus alone disposed of a problem that never sleeps in the consciousness of humanity—a problem that always excites the emotions. I shall permit myself here to make a simple historical reflection addressed to unprejudiced men, to true critics with open minds.

The violent contradiction and contention of which Jesus is the object was prophesied. It shall last as long as the world; it afflicts the Christian, but it does not astonish or trouble him; he sees the sign of his master. It is the product of living the life of Christ.

While his disciples in reply to the question said: "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God" the Jews said: "He is but a prophet"; others, blinder, called him a blasphemer and a conspirator.

After he had left the earth and while his apostles preached in the Jewish synagogues, the Messiah, God and man, filled with the wisdom and goodness of God, the first sectaries, the Nazarenes and Ebionites, would see in him nothing but a man.

THE CONTENTION on this point continued for centuries. A pagan philosopher, Celsus, without denying the miracles of Christ, ridiculed his doctrines, calling them absurd; and his cross he called infamous. Origen refuted him [Celsus] and proclaimed with his mighty voice the divinity of his master. Since then the ages have advanced. The Crucified One has grown, destroying paganism, absorbing philosophy, dethroning empires, conquering the earth, civilizing the barbarian, creating a new world!

With what reason, then, did the Jews anathematize Jesus and kill him! Pagans, like Tacitus, Suetonius, and the honest proconsul of Bithynia, Pliny the younger, disdained him and looked upon his disciples as a detestable sect. Philosophers like Celsus bore him down with their wisdom, while the apostles adored him as the Son of God.

If Jesus was, indeed, but the wretch despised by the Jews and pagans, how has he carved on the earth such a pathway? How has he founded a religion that

Question Time

Question:

I have heard two theories of how Joseph Smith came to read James 1: 5 on the occasion of his visit to the woods to pray, and I would like to know which is the accepted version. Was he studying the Scriptures and came across the passage, or had he heard a sermon at the revival meetings?

Kansas

Mrs. O. W.

Answer:

The general view of the church membership is that Joseph Smith was led by the Spirit of God to read this particular text to prepare him for later experiences. This viewpoint has been based upon Joseph's account of the incident published in the Times and Seasons, March 15, 1842, as follows:

In the midst of this war of words and tumult of opinions, I often said to myself, what is to be done? Who of all these parties are right? Or are they all wrong together? If any one of them be right, which is it and how shall I know it?

While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties, caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Never did any passage of Scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. I reflected on it again and again, knowing that if any person needed wisdom from God I did, for how to act I did not know, and unless I could get more wisdom than I then had would never know; for the teachers of religion of the different sects understood the same passage so differently as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible. At length I came to the conclusion that I must remain in darkness and confusion or else I must do as James directs, that is, ask of God.

Joseph does not state that he was directed by the Spirit to read this particular verse of Scripture, but the inference is that this is the first time he had read the passage. Joseph was in his fifteenth year at the time (1820) of this experience.

Another viewpoint is contained in the published interview of William B. Smith (Joseph's brother) by E. C. Briggs as reported in the Zion's Ensign, January 13, 1894, by J. W. Peterson. It contains the following:

"What caused Joseph to ask for guidance as to which church he ought to join?" asked Brother

Briggs. W. B. Smith answered, "Why, there was a joint revival in the neighborhood between the Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, and they had succeeded in stirring up quite a feeling, and after the meeting the question arose which church should have the converts. Reverend Stockton was the president of the meeting and suggested that it was their meeting and under their care, and they had a church there, and they ought to join the Presbyterians, but as father did not like Reverend Stockton very well, our folks hesitated. The next evening a Reverend Mr. Lane of the Methodists preached a sermon on 'What Church Shall I Join?' The burden of his discourse was to ask God, using as a text, 'If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally.' And of course when Joseph went home and was looking over the text he was impressed to do just what the preacher had said, and going out into the woods with childlike simple faith believing that God meant just what he said, he kneeled down and prayed . . ."

Facts to remember when evaluating the two accounts:

1. Joseph published his account in 1842, which was twenty-two years after the event.

2. He was the one who had the experience and would know all the details and was writing his history.

3. William B. Smith made his statement above November 1, 1893, seventy-three years after the incident. He was an old man of eighty-two years.

4. Joseph Smith was fifteen years old at the time of the revival. William Smith was a boy of nine years.

5. Joseph Smith wrote his account. William B. Smith's account is a reported interview.

Both accounts may in general outline be correct, each emphasizing different aspects of the same incident. Brother Evan Fry ably discusses this question in the Saints' Herald of April 27, 1953. However, because of the time element, there is no final answer.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Should the children of Saints engage in public dancing to entertain others?

Answer:

The church has spoken on the subject of "the practice of dancing," and has expressed its disapproval in the following words:

"RESOLVED, That the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel."—Conference Resolution 317.

Question:

There seems to be a disagreement between the Bible and the Book of Mormon in Genesis 1: 30, I.V. Before Adam's fall he was told to be fruitful and multiply, but in II Nephi 1: 111-115 it is stated that Adam fell that men might be. Please explain this seeming contradiction. New Jersey Mrs. E. B.

Answer:

A careful reading of the text in Genesis 1 shows that the command to multiply was not given to Adam but to the whole human race as then existing in the spirit world. It was before man was made upon the earth. The command was prophetic and applied to man when he should receive inheritance upon the earth.

Nephi records the teaching of his father Lehi who spoke of conditions in this world, in the flesh, and pointing out that the fulfilling of God's purposes in man necessitated the setting up of the very conditions of opposition resulting from the fall. It was not God's intent that the command to multiply should come into operation while men were still in the spirit world, but only after human life had been placed on the earth and when suitable conditions had been established for that life.

Lehi said that if there had been no fall Adam would have remained in the garden, innocent, without progression, having neither righteousness nor sin, knowing neither good nor evil, insomuch that the whole purpose of God in creating him would have been for nought. The command to multiply and replenish the earth was dependent upon the flesh and upon the conditions of free choice between good and evil which were brought about by the fall. Summarizing these things Lehi said, "Behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things."

With Thankful Hearts

By Geraldine Wyatt

A YOUNG LADY I know underwent an operation in which her jawbone had to be chipped. On the way home afterward, still under the effect of the anesthetic, she marveled over the speedy effect of the drug. As the doctor started to administer it, she said, she started to pray silently, asking God to be with her. The next thing she knew she was in a strange room and, just barely conscious, she could not tell whether the operation was over or not. So in order not to be remiss, she prayed again silently that if the operation were over, she was thankful that she had gone through it safely.

In explanation she said, "I think God likes to be thanked. After all, if we ask him for something and that prayer is granted, we should show our appreciation enough to at least say, 'Thank you, God, for this blessing.'" So much a part of her being had appreciation to God become that her subconscious mind ruled in her giving thanks.

Giving thanks, or thanksgiving, is associated with prayer time and time again in the Scriptures. And we are commanded to render to God thanks for all things:

And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which come of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which come of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul.

And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion: and in nothing doth man offend God or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 59:4, 5.

THE HUMAN MIND is a continual source of amazement to me. How marvelous it is that our thinking can change our attitude, our mood, and what we do. "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he," and so is the product of his labors.

If we think destructively, we will feel destructive and quite often we will act destructively. War is the product of mass destructive thinking. Some people have the urge to smash things—and do. When angry, my stepmother used to slam dish after dish against any available object. We learned to be expert dodgers so as not to reap the results of her destructive impulses.

If we think creatively, our minds immediately turn toward building. We have the literary, musical, and art masterpieces of the ages—all monuments of their creator's devotion to construction. The marvelous mechanical ease of our modern living also reflects creative genius, as do the scientific and philosophical advances of our age.

Though I've always felt that the words were not nearly dynamic enough, the philosophy expressed in the hymn—"Are you ever burdened with a load of care? Does the cross seem heavy you are called to bear? . . . Count your many blessings, name them one by one, and it will surprise you what the Lord hath done"—can certainly be helpful if applied to our everyday thinking.

If we pause to give thanks to God sincerely, we can hardly contemplate any material or scriptural blessing without aligning ourselves with the tremendous creative force of our Heavenly Father. Our thoughts automatically turn toward building.

THERE IS DISAPPOINTMENT in Christ's words after he had healed the ten lepers and only one returned to praise God. It was not that he wanted personal recognition or aggrandizement; he had shunned that repeatedly in his ministry, had refused worldly power and so-called worldly honor when tempted by the Devil. Concerned as he was with building the kingdom of God—causing that unusual transformation to occur in ten persons which would change them from outcasts of society with no possibility of serving their fellow man (even if they so desired) to potential kingdom builders—it is no wonder Christ said: "Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger." One man's life had been deeply touched, but nine accepted the change in their status unresponsively—just as a matter of course.

WHEN WE THINK of Thanksgiving Day, we naturally think of the Pilgrims, the founders of our traditional feast day. What did they really have? They had endured so much that was discouraging or heartbreaking. They could have thought about their disasters, the afflictions which had beset them since coming to this new land, the meager and inadequate rations of the past, the hunger and starvation, the dead secretly buried so the Indians would not guess at their diminished force. They could have returned to the physical security of their former homes and relinquished their religious ideals. Instead they took stock of their assets. They prepared a feast of the foods of this new land—both the cultivated ones and the natural ones. They set aside a special day and with glad hearts and cheerful countenances rendered a genuine thanksgiving to God.

What did they have? We look back from our very comfortable homes—insulated, automatically heated, carefully built, and what to them would appear luxuriously and even amazingly furnished. We gauge their hand-to-mouth existence by our insured health, secured livelihood, guaranteed savings, and—where calamity falls and insurance doesn't protect—tax-supported or community-supported relief.

We shudder with apprehension as we put ourselves in the places of these Pilgrims. This was a strange land. For all its abundant yield of natural foodstuffs and Indian maize—seed brought from their homeland failed—it was still an awesome first harvest. It was unpredictable. Beyond their insignificant clearings lay the unknown wilderness. They knew no real safety from the natives, or at what moment they would swoop over this courageous group and completely annihilate it. Really the threat of the atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb does not seem very frightening or calamitous in comparison.

BECAUSE THIS LITTLE GROUP of people had the great faith and determination to align themselves with God in this reciprocal act of thanksgiving, the few merged with others to become a baby nation which grew and spread until the frontiers of our great country have changed from physical to spiritual. Rather than the predominate occupation of wresting a livelihood from untried soil, our main concern is our relationship with our fellow men; for the youth and the wealth of our nation are expected in trying to force international peace when the thinking people know the only hope for peace lies in following the teachings of the Nazarene.

Because of our more complex way of living and the bewilderment and the fear existent, we really have a much greater need of a sincere thanksgiving and appreciation now than did these people of the past. Instead of interests reaching within the call of the natural voices of this tiny settlement, ours reach as far as the international telephones, the broadcasts of our radio and television sets. We are on the brink of world brotherhood—or world destruction.

THE MOST VIVID recollection I have of any Thanksgiving ceremony comes from my childhood. It was the tradition of our family, as we sat around the festive table, to each one voice that which he was most thankful for at that particular time. It was a set custom; we expected it and discussed it beforehand. The expressions were quite possibly childish and inconsequential when weighed against more mature thinking, but they were gravely accepted, and most certainly they formed the foundations for genuine thanksgiving and appreciation.

A few years ago a large St. Louis department store invited me to be its guest and to be featured at an autographing party during Children's Book Week. I dreaded going, feeling rather like a curious animal on exhibit, until our church physician suggested: "Think of the good you can do." My prayers became constructive. There were possibilities of service. Being ill, upon arrival I went immediately to the hotel where the store had reserved a room. It was a busy downtown establishment, and the hotel was always crowded. In an attempt to be helpful, the manager got things crossed up and took me to the room before it was cleaned.

It was a mess with its liquor bottles, upset glasses, disorder, and stale smell. The bellboy was extremely embarrassed, but because of the circumstances (which would otherwise have annoyed me past acceptance) I was thankful. As soon as the bellboy left, I locked the door and prayed, thanking God for those conditions throughout my life which stimulated wholesome living and the opportunity of service to my fellow men. I was thankful for our church with its perfect law of living, with its ordinances calculated by our Heavenly Father to meet our every need. I do not believe I have ever been so joyously thankful in all my life.

WE HAVE another feast day relegated to joyfully giving thanks to our Creator. We have the choice of using the time in bemoaning the failures of the past, of mulling them over, making them tremendously important, letting them regulate our lives, becoming pawns of fear as we contemplate the future; or, like the Pilgrims, we can forget all things pertaining to destruction and turn our hearts to the constructive things, taking stock of what we have to do with and of our potential service.

If it were possible to once again sit around the festive table of the traditional Thanksgiving of my childhood, my choice of expression would be that I am most thankful that our physical frontiers have changed to spiritual frontiers. Because in our keeping God has placed his perfected law for living. Guided by its principles, upheld by its ordinances and the promise of his directing Spirit, we can courageously forge ahead into the future.

Miracle of Pine Tree Valley

By Emma M. Phillips

THE KNOWLEDGE of the church came to Jean Bell one cold November day on a farm in Michigan. She was a young housewife then—back in 1875—beautiful of face but frail of body. When she had lived in Detroit, there had been the doctor's visits and friends dropping in to see her every so often during the bleak winter when she was confined to the house. There was gaiety and laughter in Detroit.

Then came the doctor's verdict that had turned her life into a series of monotonous days—one no different from the other. The doctor convinced her husband that the fresh air of open fields was the best remedy for her. It was for that reason that Tom and Jean Bell sold their belongings in Detroit and bought a farm north of there near the little fishing village of Forester.

During the summer months of that first year on the farm, Jean would have enjoyed the fresh air of the green fields if she had had time to get out in them. She learned to bake bread, to garden, and to care for chickens; she even became the foster mother of a black lamb that the ewe had disowned. Often she would look at Tom as he worked about the barn or in the fields and wish that he had sons to follow him about. He had given up the pleasures of Detroit for her sake. Why couldn't she give him a son to help him with the farm work?

The first snowfall of winter brought to Jean a forewarning of the lonely days that were ahead of her. She made quilts and towels and pillowcases until she felt it was stupid to sew any more, for a family of two uses only a limited number of linens. When she would try to help Tom with his winter work in the barn, he would shoo her out with "This is man's work, my dear, and I'll not have you wasting your strength on it."

AS THE SNOW DEEPENED, the contact with people of the other farms about theirs became less and less. From her kitchen window, Jean could see the roof of the Clark's farmhouse in Pine Tree Valley. Only on a very rare occasion did she happen to see Mr. and Mrs. Clark or one of their four children in the yard, but it was a comforting thought to know that people were within "seeing" distance.

On the day that Mrs. Clark and the three younger children left for Desmond, Tom and Jean drove the sleigh down to Pine Tree Valley to say good-by and to take a ginger cake to Mr. Clark and the boy who was staying home with him. "I think we picked a good time to have our fifth," Mrs. Clark laughed. "If this had happened in the summer I wouldn't have been able to take time to go to my sister's place." Jean smiled back, but her heart was aching.

On the way home they had to face the bitterness of a cold north wind. Even though Tom put a heated stone at her feet and an extra blanket around her shoulders, the wind got into her lungs and made her whole body ache with the burden of it.

She coughed constantly—a dry, harsh cough that brought tears to her eyes.

When they reached home, Tom built a roaring fire in the fireplace, and put some coffee on to boil. As they sat before the fireplace, talking and visiting, she tried to conceal from her husband the loneliness of her heart. It was not until her body was warmed through that she could even talk in a whisper without coughing.

Tom drained his cup and set it on the hearth. "Jean, my dear, I think that doctor in Detroit made a mistake in saying you needed the fresh air of the open fields. You can't get a lung full of winter air without coughing. Don't you stir out of this house all winter, and as soon as we can in the spring, we will move back to Detroit."

"But, Tom, we like it here. Next summer my health will improve. I just know it will."

Tom gave her a disapproving look. "There is no need of our worrying now over something that won't happen until next spring."

"Maybe," ventured Jean, "in the spring you can go to Desmond or Detroit and see about adopting a couple of boys to help you on the farm."

Tom poured a little coffee into his cup and gulped it down. "Got to take care of some stuff in the barn, dear. Keep yourself warm." And he was off by himself.

ONE WEEK, two weeks wore by and the Thanksgiving season approached. Many times during those weeks Jean stood at the kitchen window and watched the drab blankness of what should have been a winter wonderland. Rabbits embroidered the sheet of snow over her garden patch with a crisscross pattern of tracks. Crows and starlings ventured from the shelter of the woods to feast on the crumbs she threw to them. A squirrel fought with a cardinal who had disturbed his winter slumbers in an ancient oak tree. And a couple of sparrows succeeded in raising a nestful of young under the eaves near the window.

Mr. Clark came one day bringing a pail wrapped in a blanket to ward off the Michigan winter. In the bottom of the pail was a wiggling ball of warm fur—a black kitten. "That silly old cat of ours up and had herself a batch of snow kittens. They all died except this one, and she refuses to take care of it. My wife will be home soon I expect, but with five kids to look after she ain't gonna have time to fool with a stray kitten. I figured you had time. Do you want it?" Yes, she had time, but being reminded of it was wormwood to her spirit.

While Tom visited with Mr. Clark, she took the pail into the kitchen where she could make a new bed for the kitten. From force of habit she looked out of the window at the house in Pine Tree Valley. What she saw through the bare tree limbs made her cry out in fright.

Tom and Mr. Clark, startled by her scream, rushed to her side. "Look," she cried as she pointed to the Clark house. "Those two men are stealing things from your house. One of them struck your boy and made him fall to the ground."

The horses were unhitched from the sleigh, and Tom and Mr. Clark rode bareback across the fields down into Pine Tree Valley. Jean cuddled the black kitten to her neck as she watched the horses and gave a sigh of relief when she saw the Clark boy stand up and walk by himself.

She took a long time feeding the kitten warm milk from a spoon, giving it special attention so it would not be frightened in its new surroundings. As darkness began to creep over the land and lamp-lighting time came, she went often to the window to look for her husband. After several such trips, she saw a sleigh, loaded with people, pull up before the Clark house. Out got Mrs. Clark, carrying her precious bundle. Three children leaped from the sleigh behind her. Then she saw Tom come out of the house, get into the sleigh, and show the driver where to put the horses.

BY THE TIME Tom got home, it was really late. He brought the sad report that the two men had stolen most of the winter food supply of the Clark family. "And to make matters worse," Tom added, "there's another mouth to feed."

"The baby won't eat much."

"I don't mean the baby. Mrs. Clark brought back a missionary who wants to hold preaching services around here. Young fellow by the name of Worth. Says he a Reorganized Latter Day Saint. . . ."

Jean had never heard of the church, but she didn't think about it. She was thinking about five children and no food to eat. "We must do something about it," she said softly.

"What can you do, Jean, about getting more food in the middle of the winter?"

As she got supper she pondered the question over and over. By the time they were ready to sit down to eat, she had the solution. "We will have a pantry party. There isn't a neighbor family around here who hasn't laid away more food than is actually needed for the winter. We will visit all the families and invite them to the Clark home next Sunday evening. They can bring any food that the Clarks might use during the winter to feed those children. And that young missionary can hold a preaching service at the same time. We will start early in the morning. First we will go to Clarks and tell them that we are going to invite the neighbors to the preaching service. We won't tell them about the pantry party. That will be a surprise."

"Jean, that's a marvelous idea, except for one thing. You aren't going out with me into the winter air."

"If I promise not to cough, may I go?" Jean teased.

"You can't promise that, and you know it."

THE NEXT DAY was warmed by a bright sun that put a glare on the snow. Jean, wrapped in blankets to the point of being uncomfortable, made the rounds to the neighbors' houses with her husband. Every family was willing to help, even the old bachelor—who always made himself eat warmed-up oatmeal before he would cook some fresh—promised fruit and potatoes that he knew he would not need.

On Sunday evening Tom and Jean went early to the Clark home, for they wanted to be there before the neighbors began to arrive. Tom got the young missionary off to one side and explained to him about the party. Jean heard the young man say to her husband, "If I do preach tonight, I am going to change my subject. I will preach on how a man and his wife can be of service to God."

Then the neighbors began to arrive, and the house was filled with joyful expressions and tears of happiness. Every neighbor brought abundantly. There was no preaching service, but there was a long discussion on religion. Elder Worth told of the church Christ had when he was on earth, then of the Restoration, and finally of the Reorganization. People were skeptical, but there was no ridicule. Entranced, Jean listened while the young man told about the marvelous things he had seen happen to people through the power of Christ working in the church.

"Elder Worth," she asked so suddenly that she startled herself, "Christ and his apostles healed people who were sick. Can you put your hands on me and heal me?"

"I can't promise a thing like that," answered the man. "Healing depends on my faith and your faith, and whether or not God wants you healed now."

Jean looked at her husband and then back at the young missionary. "Please administer to me!" Tom took her hand in his big firm one. He said nothing but his eyes gave his consent. After everyone had bowed in prayer, Elder Worth administered to her. Jean put her hands over her face and prayed earnestly to herself. There was no unusual sensation. Nothing had happened to her.

IT WAS SOME TIME LATER that the wind began to whirl the snow into a blinding blizzard. The neighbors, fearing that the snow might drift and keep them away from their homes, hurried into their sleighs and away. Jean, bundled securely against the chill of the night air, talked continually as she rode home with her husband. It was not until they had a fire going in their own fireplace that she realized she was talking with ease.

"Tom," she almost shouted, "I'm talking."

"Nothing new about that," he drawled good-naturedly. "Women are supposed to talk all the time."

"I'm talking," she repeated. "I rode all the way home in a cold blizzard, and I talked all the way! I didn't cough once."

Tom stuffed a stick of wood into the fire. "How does your chest feel?" he asked dubiously.

Jean took a deep breath and let it out slowly. There was no pain, no tightness. "I feel as if I had never left the fireside."

The sudden realization that she had been miraculously healed dawned on her and she ran to her husband crying tears of joy against his shoulder. As the winter days passed Jean and Tom became more sure that she had been healed, for strength returned to her tired body and she was able to do things that she had not done for years. Neighbors listened to her story and then went to hear the young missionary.

Life took on a new glow of interest for Jean Bell. The drab snow was transformed to a winter wonderland through which she could walk with ease. She followed Tom to the barn and helped with the animals. And in the quiet evening the two of them studied the books that Elder Worth loaned them. They knew that other neighbors were also studying books in the evening, and that the time would come when many of those neighbors would ask for baptism.

One morning as Jean spread crumbs for the birds outside her kitchen window, she noticed a robin. "Spring is here," she called to Tom in the next room. "A redbreast is feeding with the birds."

"Remember, dear," said her husband as he came to the kitchen door, "how we talked about moving back to Detroit in the spring? We don't have to leave our farm now, do we?"

Jean put her arms around her husband's neck. "And remember, Tom, how I suggested that you might adopt a couple of boys when you went to Detroit. Well, you don't have to do that now either."

"Jean, mine," he answered as he wrapped his long arms about her.

She laughingly pushed him away, "Of course, I can't guarantee that it will be a boy."

BUT IS WAS A BOY. And so were the next three children. Now when Jean looked from the kitchen window and saw Tom going to the barn, she saw four little duplicates tagging along behind him. And on those long winter evenings the dull emptiness of the house became enchanted with the constant chatter of childish voices.

Jean was thankful that the new church was built near the Clark house where she could see it from her kitchen window. Many times during the years that followed, when her children and her grandchildren sat in the kitchen with her and talked about the church, she looked down into Pine Tree Valley and whispered, "Thank you, God, for such a countless number of good things."

dominates the earth? Were he merely human, the achievements would be inexplicable, and it is the popular proof that Jesus is what the church affirms him to be.

WE MUST NOT CONFOUND criticism with history. Though inseparable from each other, they must remain distinct. In its general sense, criticism is the exercise of the judgment, a faculty essential in all reasonable beings. To criticize and to judge are synonymous terms. For judgment as criticism first tries to discern the true from the false. This is the first right and the most necessary duty of the mind. Whatever the domain it explores—religion, philosophy, science, literature, aesthetics, even in mathematics—reason must be attentive to discern the real from the apparent; the true, sometimes unapparent, from the false which is frequently most plausible.

Criticism, therefore, cannot be a special science. It is rather a condition of all science. It enters into the logical rules which determine how men shall think fairly and judge justly. These simple considerations demonstrate the vanity of those who would arrogate a monopoly of criticism. The school of criticism is the school of the world. Each has a right to claim and to exercise it. The most ordinary temptation of the cultivated mind is to desire to criticize too much, to overjudge, to criticize even that of which it knows nothing. The sage moderates this intemperance. He learns to judge only what he knows, never forgetting that his knowledge is limited and his ignorance immeasurable.

One may be a good critic in philosophy and a very poor judge of religion or history. Certain human sciences demand not only the speculative mind but a long experience.

Moral doctrines are much better criticized even by the ignorant who have experimented with virtue than by a skeptic who doubts the austere joys of sacrifice.

The saints who lived on the word of Jesus will always understand him better than the exacting Pharisees who repelled him and knew not the Savior. A delicate taste distinguishes shadings which escape the chemist.

AS APPLIED to history, the critic has a well-defined duty. The object of history is to state facts. That is, the facts of the past being known to us but by documents, and the documents being the records of witnesses, more or less immediate, to the facts themselves, the critic should examine the documents, facts, and witnesses together.

Some facts are absurd; the critic discards them. Some documents are altered or suspected; the critic notices and amends. If some witnesses are unworthy of belief, he un.masks and confounds them.

In all that concerns the life of Christ, the critic has the right and the duty to inspect the documents and the witnesses we adduce. To judge the life, the antiquity, and the authenticity of one, the value as testimony of the other, they should examine the nature of the facts in the documents as reported by the witnesses.

Letters

Letter from England

In a few weeks I shall be in my ninetieth year. As I have been reading the testimonies of the missionaries in the European Mission I have been inspired to add mine. The first mission abroad was in 1837 to England. My deceased husband, William R. Armstrong, was one of the early pioneers of the church in this country. His parents were among the first converts before the apostasy took place. At one time they thought of going to Utah but were shown by vision that it would be death for them to do so.

William's mother was a courageous woman. When she was approached by John Taylor, an elder of the Brighamite Church who wanted her to go to Salt Lake City, she refused, telling him she did not intend to ruin herself body and soul. She said that polygamy was never at any time a doctrine of the church, nor was it introduced by Joseph Smith the martyr or any of his descendants.

When Charles Derry and Jason Briggs came over in 1862 with the gospel of the Reorganization, the Armstrongs were among the first to be baptized in the Manchester district. There had been many converts to the faith before the death of the prophet in 1844, but the introduction of polygamy by Brigham Young reduced its numbers very considerably. People would not believe there was any difference between the Utah Mormon Church and the Reorganized Church. Even up to the time I accepted the gospel in December, 1909, the name of the church was held in disrepute.

I did not tell my relatives and friends what I intended to do. I knew they would be horrified. Of my own free will I accepted the church, and it has been my greatest comfort. I know it is of divine origin, and I am satisfied that its ministers are called of God and ordained to preach all the truth—not part of it.

I find a vast difference between the Church of England, in which I had been christened, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, in which I was baptized by immersion.

After my baptism I met with much criticism. One person said I was mad, another told me I was going to hell. The minister of the Church of England sent me a bundle of anti-Mormon literature, as much as to tell me I had made the greatest mistake of my life. I have made many mistakes, I know, but this was not one of them.

Now we have seventeen branches of the church in the British Isles with a membership of 1600. There is a fine church building now at Meresford Road, Manchester, where I attend. Another is located at James Street, and there are others both in northern and southern England, as well as in Wales.

We are very grateful for the missionaries who came to England. Many have been brought into the church by their preaching and untiring efforts. I am thankful also for those who must earn their living yet find time to serve the Lord. Each minister I have known in this church has spoken with conviction and authority.

I was sorry to learn of President Israel A. Smith's illness. We look to him as the one God has chosen to guide this church in these latter days.

I try to use my faculties in the work of the Lord, although I'm far from being perfect. I try to remember the words of Paul, "Neglect not the gift that is within you, which was given through prophecy by the laying on of hands." If we have one gift, we should use it for the honor and glory of God. It may be the voice to be raised in song. It may be the pen, or the ability to tell the story of Jesus and his love. No effort is lost, for God works with us. We sow the seed; God gives the increase. We shall be rewarded for our works. If we have nothing to offer after the great sacrifice made by the Savior, we shall regret having allowed our opportunities for service to slip by one by one. We shall lose our reward and feel condemned and humiliated because of our carelessness and unconcern for the souls of others.

I remember Sister F. G. Pitt who was in England in 1910. I feel she has done a marvelous work in her life. She and Brother Pitt often raised their voices in song together. He has gone to his reward, but she still remains to tell the glad story of Jesus and his love. I hope one day to be among those who surround the throne of God and sing the praises of the One who died that we might live.

Invitation to Visit Mission

I have read the Herald for many years and always have found it helpful. We have a little mission here and just recently three new members were added to it by baptism. This makes us very happy. We have been holding meetings at my house until we could get another place. At present we have one, but we don't know how long we can use it, as it may get too cold for services in the winter. We invite anyone driving through to stop at the R. L. D. S. mission sign by the side of the road. Elders Orville Cottrill and Clyde S. Rice are our pastors from Parkersburg.

Answer to a Youth's Question

Editor's Note: The question of dancing is a perennial problem. The following is an actual letter written in response to a query from a youth who is confronted with making a decision which is of great social significance in his life. Parents and young people should give its contents serious consideration.

DEAR JERRY:

President Smith has asked me to try to answer the questions you raised in your recent letter. Perhaps he asked me because I am a little closer to your problem in my experience and in my association with young people. You have a real problem—one that our young people all over the country are running into, and one I hope I can help you solve.

Several articles have been written in the Herald on this subject. In fact I wrote one which appeared in its columns last year: "Why the Church Discourages Dancing." But even when you see the church's side, that does not always provide the answers on how to get along in school with your friends and how to retain some measure of popularity without engaging in dancing.

Perhaps something of my own personal experience, which seems to have been much like yours, may help. I was reared in a small branch in upstate New York, the only one of my class who was a member of our church. I was the one to whom the whole class looked when the history teacher brought up the question of Mormonism. I was also one of the few who didn't smoke or repeat dirty jokes, and everybody knew it. These were, in a way, problems; but I always considered myself fairly popular, too. I lettered in football and track, was an Eagle Scout, student body president, and seemed to have my share of honors.

Our basketball team won the state cup that year; and although I wasn't good enough to make the team, I attended every game and was an enthusiastic supporter. After every important home game, there was a dance, and I was often there helping out in some way—with the decorations, music, and what have you. If I wasn't helping, I was sitting on the sidelines, talking with friends. Occasionally I might even be pulled out on the floor; but after one whirl, the girl would give me up because I refused to learn to dance and was therefore no "prince of the ball." When the party got dull or it got late enough, I simply walked on home, usually with another fellow or even alone, since I didn't date for dances.

I had my problems and my fears too. But I soon noticed a lot of things that bolstered me. In the first place, there were a lot of fellows who didn't like to dance, so I had company. I associated myself with the best and cleanest fellows and girls in the school. Almost all of them were active in their own churches. Sometimes I went to their youth fellowships, and sometimes they came to my church. By participating with them in religious groups, by continuing to be active in Boy Scouts, by playing in the local little symphony orchestra, and by participating in my own church services and activities, I found I was simply tied up in too many other interesting things to have time to be at many of the school dances. While most of the students were dancing, I was getting a lot of satisfaction out of other activities and achieving recognition in the things I enjoyed doing and thought were worth supporting.

I soon learned that, while I lost some popularity with the "faster" girls who preferred "faster" boys, I gained a better understanding and companionship with the nice girls who were more sympathetic with the type of activities that meant a lot to me, and who, on a date, were willing to talk about the things that were important in life, rather than about the last dance or the next dance or some other fellow or girl.

Before I completed high school I was dragged to a dance or two, but I refused to engage in the "practice of dancing." Even in the little I saw of it then, I began to appreciate some of the dynamite with which the perpetual dancers were playing.

Later, when I went to my first Graceland party, I had a better time than I'd ever had at all dances I'd ever seen or attended. There were some Gracelanders who danced, it is true, but they did it "on the side" as one might take a puff of a cigarette when he is not proud to be seen. Graceland reassured me of the things I'd been taught at home and in my branch. At the university and later these convictions were confirmed by my observations and experience.

At a Graceland banquet I met a girl whom several years later I married. We have been very happy, and when I compare her with most of the girls I might have married had I engaged with them in dancing rather than in responding to the influence to throw my time and energies into something better, I thank God for his guidance.

I hope this helps. You have a real contribution to make in your church and in your community. To most of your friends you are the church. You have the responsibility and opportunity of qualifying yourself for priesthood and leadership. If you continue to consider this problem carefully and prayerfully, you will be given the help you need to make the right decision.

Sincerely yours,
CARL MESLE
Director of Youth Activities

Let's Keep Christmas

A Sermon by Peter Marshall

One of the author's most inspiring and memorable sermons—a moving expression of gratitude that the Christ child came into the world, and a plea that we keep Christmas "in all the loveliness of its ancient tradition." The perfect gift—a book the whole family will enjoy and treasure. McGraw-Hill.

Red River District Rally

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA.—The annual business meeting was held in September at the Bungalow church. The following officers were elected: Elder C. R. Rotzien, branch president; Irene Rotzien, secretary and publicity; Leonard Loberg, clerk; Karl Schiebold, treasurer; C. R. Rotzien, C. F. Young, Ferne Nelson, Willis Freeman, and Ila Black, nominating committee; Leonard Loberg, Glenn Weidling, and Obert Nelson, auditing committee; Ina Peterson, music director; Virginia Freeman, organist; Kenneth Shackow, Earl Rotzien, Karl Schiebold, Otis Phelps, and Ed and Clark Christianson, building and finance committee; Glenn Weidling, church school director; Beverly Schiebold, church school secretary; Willis Freeman, adult supervisor; Drue Black, young people's supervisor; Margaret Schiebold, children's supervisor; Gladys Young, women's department president; Irene Rotzien, historian, and Vernon Phelps, book steward.

The pastor called a council meeting of the priesthood and department leaders to plan programs and projects for the year. The priesthood workshop is held regularly, and the whole branch participates in family night once a month. The Wednesday evening prayer service is growing in spirituality and interest.

Promotion day exercises were in charge of the church school director October 4. The children promoted were Judy Young, Ilene Christianson, Bruce and Terry Hagen, Wayne Christianson, Gibby Freman, Mark Hennemann, and Roger Phelps.

Soft drapes have been added to the worship center in the children's division. A new picture, "Follow Me," has been added. It was donated by Brother and Sister Fred Mollison of Independence, Missouri, formerly of Fargo.

The Zion's League has visited many of the branches of the district, and a retreat was held at Detroit Lakes in August. Missionary D. D. Smith was present for the retreat.

Visiting ministers this summer have included Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Elder Smith, Elder Cecil Ettinger of Aurora, Elder John Walker of Winnipeg, and Evangelist J. Charles May. Elder C. F. Young preached in Winnipeg recently.

The themes of recent radio talks over station WDAY by the pastor were "Miracles" and "Priesthood Authority."

Thomas Peterson, Mavis Kohler, and Sally Omans are attending Graceland College.

Ilene Christianson was baptized rally day by Elder Smith. The confirmation took place November 1.

Babies blessed by the pastor were Julie Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Weidling, and Susan Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Hulebak. Patricia Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Perpich, and Wade Luther, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Luther were blessed by Elders Rotzien and Smith.

Arthur F. Rasch was baptized by Elder Cecil Ettinger, and confirmed by Elders Rotzien and Ray Shackow.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Missionary D. D. Smith were in charge of a two-day rally of the Red River District at Fargo on October 10-11. A priesthood class was held Saturday morning, with general classes in the afternoon, and a sermon in the evening by Apostle Chesworth. Sunday morning classes began at nine o'clock. The prayer service was in charge of the district presidency, C. F. Young, C. R. Rotzien, and Archie Peterson. Preaching by Apostle Chesworth followed. Dinner was served by the women's department, after which Elder Smith gave a sermon and a baptismal service was held. Frank Willey of Grafton, and Ilene Christianson of Fargo were the candidates.

Many Saints from the district attended, with nearly 150 present.—Reported by IRENE ROTZIEH

Elections Held

OREGON CITY, OREGON.—The annual business meeting for the election of officers was held September 23, with district representative, Harold Carpenter, in charge. Officers elected were as follows: Elder Clark Livingston, pastor; Elder DeWayne Miller, assistant pastor and auditor; Gladys Goddard, secretary; Hugo Bauer, treasurer; Lillian Livingston, church school director; Velva Weeks, music director and women's leader; Catherine Steele, youth leader; Leah Miller, publicity and librarian; Robert Good, solicitor; Jean Wood, social leader; Leota Good, book steward; Fred Gill, historian; Clark Livingston, DeWayne Miller, Hugo Bauer, Kenneth Goddard, and Robert Good, finance committee.

An all-day meeting, with a picnic dinner, was held recently at the country home of Clark Livingston. Three young people were baptized and confirmed, bringing the total number of baptisms for the church year to six.

Dixie Wood was in charge of a rummage sale which netted $150 for the building fund.

Sister Catherine Steele moved to the branch recently from Louisiana. She lives in West Lynn, Oregon.—Reported by LEAH MILLER

Mission Holds Business Meeting

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS.—The Wichita Falls mission held its business meeting September 27, under the leadership of District President Ramon Carson, with W. P. Creveston assisting. Officers elected for the coming year are the following: pastor, Elder W. P. Creveston; secretary and treasurer, Dean Lamb; church school director, Floyd Goff; assistant church school director, Ronald Robey; adult teacher, C. W. Lamb; junior teacher, Ruth Johnson; women's leader, Dorothy Goff; music director, Warren Goss; publicity agent, Clyde Johnson, Jr.; historian, Mae Carrow; solicitor, Ruth Johnson.—Reported by CLYDE JOHNSON, JR.

Fall and Winter Missionary Series Scheduled

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Each congregation in the stake has concluded a missionary series continuing over six Sundays this year. A fall and winter missionary series is now being conducted in the various congregations. Elder Eugene Theys has been the speaker at Slover Park, Spring Branch, Sugar Creek, and Eden Heights. Elder Almer Sheehy was the speaker at Blue Ridge, and Elder Howard C. Timm spoke at West College.

Elder Theys, in co-operation with Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, has scheduled Elder Arthur F. Gibbs to help with missionary work in Center Stake from November until the first of the year.

Forty cottage meetings a week are being conducted in Center Stake. It is planned to increase the number of cottage meetings to at least one hundred a week.

The number of baptisms reported so far this year is 260, just four fewer than the total number for the year 1952. Brother Theys and the stake officers have set a goal of 375 baptisms for the year.—Reported by C. V. GRAHAM

Series of Meetings

SALEM, MISSOURI.—On June 14, Children's Day, the Logan Creek congregation witnessed the baptism of little Joyce Young, daughter of Brother Elmo and Sister Lena Young, and granddaughter of the pastor, Brother W. A. Kuntz. Branches of trees were laid across the gravel bar to form a path to the water's edge. While Brother Kuntz led Joyce down the pathway the congregation sang "A Ruler Once Came to Jesus by Night." At the water's edge they also sang "Jesus Mighty King in Zion." Joyce's grandfather and grandmother, Brother and Sister Young, were present for the baptism. She was confirmed under the hands of her grandfather, Elder Kuntz.

On August 31, Logan Creek Branch welcomed Brother William Williams who held a series of meetings. There was good attendance and interest, with a maximum attendance of sixty-two. The Saints held a special prayer service on Wednesday before the series began. Brother Williams showed slides, which told the message of the Restoration, on September 7 and 8.

On Sunday, September 13, the congregation again gathered at Logan Creek for the baptisms of Mrs. Quince (Margie) Kuntz, and Alfred and Lucy Randolph, by Brother Kuntz. They were confirmed by Brothers Williams and Kuntz.

Meetings were also held at Reynolds, where Brother Williams again presented the gospel message.

The annual business meeting was held October 11, and the following officers were appointed and elected: pastor and solicitor, W. A. Kuntz; counselors, F. O. Greenshields and Wilburn Counts; deacon, John Britt; church school director, Elmo Young; assistant, John Britt; chorister, Vida Schultz; assistant, Evelyn Greenshields; pianist, Ethel Greenshields and assistant, Wanda Britt; secretary and treasurer, Delphia Kuntz; adult teachers, F. O. Greenshields and Harry Schultz; junior class, Evelyn Greenshields and Wilburn Counts; primary class, Margie Kuntz and Wanda Britt; historian and reporter, Ethel Greenshields; women's leader, Vida Schultz; and Zion's League leaders, F. O. Greenshields and Wilburn Counts.—Reported by ETHEL GREENSHIELDS

Families Move to Kansas

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.—Herbert Lynn, the Kaw Valley district president, spent two weeks holding meetings and becoming acquainted with the members who recently moved to Leavenworth from Odessa, Texas, in September. These families have found homes and work, and are a real asset to the small branch. The following families have come from Odessa: the Lawrence Hickmans, the Ralph Sadlers, the Max Smiths, the Elzy Griffis, the James Hobbses, the Iral Parkers, the Norman Pimses, the Leo Moleses, the Vernon Flennikens, the Otis Parkers, the M. D. Smiths, and the Henry Moleses.

The branch business meeting was held on October 1, with Herbert Lynn in charge. The following were elected: pastor, Clyde Johnson; church school director, Lawrence Hickman; women's leader, Alma Hobbs; music, Louise Zuber; secretary, Jean Williams; treasurer, Linly Dorsey; historian, Perry Tomlinson; Zion's League leader, James Hobbs; auditors, Leo Moles and John Rea; publicity, Mildred Dorsey.

Since the first of January, the following have come into the church: William Hill, Robert Feris, Sharon Lea Hill, Robert Alan Cummings, Jack M. Jolliffe, Cecil, George, and Irvin Robertson, Elzy Griffis, Ethel Flenniken, Vernon Flenniken, and Herbert Zuber.

The Zion's League raised a large garden at the Frank Robertson farm and put the proceeds from this into the building fund. Other projects to help with this fund have been a rummage sale, a chili supper, a watermelon feed, and an ice-cream social.—Reported by MILDRED DORSEY

Conference Convenes

LOMITA, CALIFORNIA.—The last of the semiannual Southern California District conferences was held September 26-27 at San Diego Branch. The Southern California District includes the counties of San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Kern, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, San Diego, and Imperial. Los Angeles County is now a stake.

Officers elected were John Davis of Lomita, district president; Mrs. Louis J. Ostertag of Santa Ana, district secretary-recorder; David B. Carmichael of Orange, treasurer; Mildred A. Calkins of Santa Ana, director of religious education; Hugh A. Kensler of Santa Paula, youth leader; Mrs. Nelson M. Van Fleet of Upland, women's leader. Other officers appointed were Betty Black of Santa Ana, historian; David B. Carmichael of Orange, district bishop; Louis J. Ostertag of Santa Ana, district evangelist; M. Warren Tait, director of music; Glen Johnson, district missionary; and Lee Casey, district auditor.

This district conference saw the creation of a new appointive office on the district president's staff. The office of district pastor at large was created to minister to the spiritual needs of the many Saints in the Southern California District who reside in communities where branches have not yet been established.

Nelson M. Van Fleet was called and ordained to the office of elder on Sunday, September 27, and was immediately appointed to this newly created office of pastor at large by District President John Davis.—Reported by HOWELL P. HUGHES

CHARITON, IOWA.—The annual business meeting of the Chariton Branch was held September 29, with Stake President Robert S. Farnham present.

Raymond Stiles was elected pastor, and he selected J. C. Cackler, Griff Thomas, and Frank Munch as his counselors.

Other officers elected were secretary and recorder, Mildred Reese; church school director, Mildred Donald; assistants, Mildred Reese and Mrs. Willie Adams; women's department leader, Elizabeth Johnson; assistant, Zona Foderburg; music director, Dwight Verdenburg; treasurer, Dick Monroe; publicity, Frank Munch; solicitor, Andrew Gwinn; Cub Scout leader, Dave Taylor; historian, Beverly Kent; book steward, Wayne Watkins; youth leader, Ellsworth Johnson; and auditor, Ruth Vredenburg.

In the past year two young men were ordained to the priesthood. Alvin Gwinn was ordained to the office of deacon, and Joe David Donald was ordained to the office of priest.

The women's department, through its various activities, was able to raise $1,122.82 this year. This money was used to buy carpeting for the floor of the upper auditorium, and to carpet the center aisle and the rostrum.

A dedication for the new addition has been planned.—Reported by FRANK MUNCH

Several Baptized

BLACKGUM, OKLAHOMA.—The annual business meeting was held September 27 at the eleven o'clock hour, with Brother O. O. Dollins, the district president, in charge.

Brother Frank Schlup was sustained by the group as pastor. The following officers were elected: church school directors, Elton and Opal Abbott; church secretary and women's leader, Vera Johnson; historian, Pearl Simmons; music director, book steward, and young people's leader, Lois Johnson; reporter and treasurer, Cleo Pack; auditors, Daisy Pack, Elton Abbott, and Vera Johnson; and solicitor, Frank Schlup.

After the business meeting, Brother Dollins addressed the group.

The church is located within sight of the recently constructed Tenkiller Lake. As a result, a number of out-of-state visitors have stopped for church on Sundays.

Elder Wallace Jackson and Elder James C. Daugherty held the first series in the new church in December, 1952. Five adults were baptized. Two children were baptized in March, one in July, two in August, and one in October.

Several from the group attended the Oklahoma City District conference October 11.

District women's leader, Ruth Goodwin, of Shawnee, met with the newly elected officers of the women's group on October 17, to help them plan their work.

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle D. Blair Jensen, were guest speakers November 4.—Reported by CLEO PACK

Purchase of Lot Approved

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—The branch held the annual business meeting September 20. The meeting was called to order by Elder Milton Petri, of Grants Pass, assisted by Elder James Davidson, of Medford.

The following officers were unanimously elected: Elder John Rodley, pastor; Brother Earl Yates, church school director and auditor; Sister Ana Laird, secretary and treasurer; Sister Barbara Rodley, music director; Sister Viola Yates, women's leader; Brother Ernie Jorgenson, youth leader and publicity; Sister Ardyth Hough, social leader; Sister Helen Goins, historian; and Elder J. F. Ruchaber, bishop's solicitor.

The group voted to purchase the lot approved by the building committee located in West Roseburg. It has also been approved by the General Church.—Reported by ERNIE JORGENSEN

Youth Camp Held

SANTA PAULA, CALIFORNIA.—The Los Angeles Stake-Southern California District youth camp was held at Camp Roosevelt near Idyllwild, California, August 30 to September 6. Under the general theme of "Qualities of a Distinctive People," a staff of seventeen carried on the week's program. Hugh Kensler, camp director, Jack Van Eaton, business manager, and Dick Anderson, program director, headed the staff with the following counselors acting in dual capacity to round out the staff: Normand and Betty Slick, Roy Phelps, Aubrey and Billie Merrill, Royce Foster, Lyle Graham, Kenny Kobes, Rene Penn, Velma Engle, Joyce Kensler, Bobby Williams, Sarah Bender, and the camp nurse, Mildred Alley. Cooks were Walt and Myra Haffencamp and Lacygne Van Eaton.

A total of ninety-nine young people attended, an all-time high.

Campers had their choice of two classes. Crafts, sports events, movies, camp paper, campfire services, candlelight services, and a final fellowship rounded out the activities.—Reported by LYLE GRAHAM

Installation Service Held for Women

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.—The branch held its annual business meeting and elected the following officers: pastor, Elder Arnold Ware; assistant pastor, Elder Martin Ware; secretary and book steward, Jeanne Stead; treasurer and chorister, Mona Cochrane; organist, Betty Stoner; Sunday school supervisor, Bill Hartford; women's leader, Sadie Hart; Zion's League leader, Gomer Farrow; Skylark leader, Margaret Conham; reporter, Audrey Ware; historian, George Towers; auditors, Arnold Ware, George Towers and Clarence Templeton; solicitor, Bill Stoner; building committee, Arnold

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Ray A. Frisbie of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on October 25 by holding open house at their home. Over two hundred friends and relatives called on them during the afternoon. They were married October 28, 1903, in Applegate, Michigan.

An elder since 1930, Brother Frisbie has served as pastor at Jackson and Ionia, Michigan, and Lee's Summit, Missouri. He was also bishop's solicitor over eight groups in Detroit, and for a while was assistant pastor at Flint. His first ministry was in New York City. In Independence, where he and his wife have lived since 1943, he served three years as elder of South Group at Spring Branch. By trade, he was a mechanical engineer for General Motors for over thirty years.

Sister Frisbie, the former Effie Cudney of Applegate, was supervisor of friendly visiting in Flint Branch; she also served as a church school teacher and women's leader in Michigan. She is still active in church work in Independence.

The Frisbies have one daughter, Olive Hicks of Detroit, Michigan, who with her husband, Carl, and son, Carl, Jr., were present for the occasion. A sister of Mrs. Frisbie, Mrs. Ada Drager of Oxford, Michigan, also attended.

Ware, Bill Hartford, Martin Ware, Gordon Garrett, and Lewis Stoner.

Bruce Harlan, Junior, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Tomlinson, was blessed September 27 by his grandfather, Elder Charles Tomlinson, assisted by Elder Arnold Ware.

Brother and Sister W. J. Brown, of Port Credit, Ontario, have visited each Sunday evening in October under a special missionary plan that requires five evenings on the subject "Restoration Concepts of the Kingdom."

The executive members of the women's department met on October 13 to make plans for yearbooks.

The first meeting of the season was held at the home of the president, Sister Sadie Hart. The meeting took the form of an installation service, with lighted candles and a pledge, which was accepted by each one present.

On September 17 the women's department held their penny-a-meal party at the home of Sister Audrey Ware. Over eighty dollars was collected. Sister Alice Fligg and Sister Ware were the sponsors. The jars were used during the summer months of July and August.—Reported by AUDREY V. WARE chanan, Michigan. Dorothy is a 1953 graduate of Graceland College. Gordon will graduate in the spring of 1954, and the wedding will take place next summer.

Sader-Morford

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth A. Morford of Independence, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Virginia LaRena, to Ralph Sader, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph E. Sader of Midland, Texas. Both Virginia and Ralph attended Graceland College last year. The wedding date has not been set.

WEDDINGS

Lucas-Ballew

Mrs. Bertha Ballew of Van Nuys, California, and G. Nelson Lucas of Reseda, California, were married October 31 at the Sherman Oaks Reorganized Church, Elder Clarence Smith officiating. They are making their home in Van Nuys.

BIRTHS

Lt. and Mrs. Kent W. Bennetts of Fort Sam Houston, Texas, announce the birth of a son, Paul Stephen, born October 27 at Brooke Army Hospital. Mrs. Bennetts, the former Mary Lundgren, is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing. Lt. Bennetts attended Graceland College 1949-51.

Twins, Cheryl Denise and Darryl Irwin, were born on August 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Willis Campbell of Grand Valley, Ontario. They were blessed on October 25—Cheryl by Elder R. J. Farthing and Darryl by Elder Arthur Dunn.

A son, Kenneth Joseph, was born on October 23 to Mr. and Mrs. George Goff of Ocean Springs, Mississippi, at the Biloxi Hospital, Biloxi, Mississippi.

Correction

The Sloan-Pederson wedding will take place on December 19 at Stone Church rather than on December 10 as announced in the November 16 Herald.

Joy to the World

A worship program with full-color filmstrip

Christmas is a time of joy; a joy that goes back to that first Christmas in Bethlehem as recorded in Luke 2 and Matthew 2. This Christmas joy is one that should be shared with others, and this is effectively done with the filmstrip, JOY TO THE WORLD, which features new art work and well-known "hymns-on-screen" especially created for this complete worship service. MAN AND THE MACHINE

Our car mechanic has only a little shop and not so very many tools. If you were to judge his work by his shop, you would pass on and leave your car at a bigger place. But after a few experiences you learn that the man is more important than the tools. To an untrained person, the best set of auto tools in the world would be useless, and you couldn't trust him to clean a carburetor. We have learned to trust our man, and we have never been disappointed in him.

Here is a lesson it seems the Lord is always trying to teach us. The human being is always more important than material things. Jesus appealed to his followers: "Isn't life more than food; isn't the body more than a clothes rack?"

Tools are wonderful things to have and use. And yet when the man lays his tools down finally to answer the call of eternity, there is only one thing the tools can do by themselves: rust.

RETURN

When you have been away
Return is sweet to well-known things,
The sameness of remembered times.
With happiness the home-heart swings
To greet you where the green vine climbs,
When you have been away.

From God—the simple truths still stand,
Their beauty never dimmed—and still
God waits to show you by his hand
Some need that you alone can fill
When you come home to stay.

The Ministry of the Elder manual for priesthood study and references

Recently off the press is this reference and textbook which will be of value through thorough study to individual members of the priesthood and organized classes.

Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, states: "This study text is undoubtedly the most thorough and complete of any material yet prepared in this field. Its table of contents and physical makeup in general assures its use as a ready reference, indeed a 'must' on the bookshelf of any elder of the church and any others who would understand or direct the work of the ministry."

G. Everett Berndt

G. EVERETT BERNDT received his first General Church appointment in 1950 to Midland, Michigan, and South Central Michigan District as pastor and district president. Since September, 1953, his appointment has been to Kansas City Stake as missionary.

He was born June 9, 1918, and was baptized in Pontiac, Michigan, on his eighth birthday. He was graduated from Pontiac High School in June, 1936, and from Graceland in 1938. He received a B. S. degree from Michigan State College in 1941 and then completed one year of graduate work.

After five years in the armed forces, he served as an instructor at Michigan State College in industrial engineering. He also has worked as a mechanical engineer, draftsman, and mechanic.

Music, public speaking, the German language, and accounting are among his special interests.

He was ordained a priest in 1938 and an elder in 1947. His work in church activities before appointment included being young people's director, district young people's director, and counselor to the district president.

Margaret Thompson Roark became Mrs. Berndt in 1941. They have one daughter, Cynthia Jane, four. Until recently they lived in Midland, but with the new appointment they are making their home in Kansas City.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

YOUNG PEOPLE BEGIN MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN

The "Quest for Christ" series, sponsored by the junior and senior Zion's Leagues and conducted by Apostle Reed Holmes at Stone Church November 8-15 had an average attendance of more than eight hundred, with about forty-five nonmembers present each evening. A baptismal service was witnessed by an overflow crowd on Sunday afternoon, November 15.

Dr. Roy Cheville, Graceland College faculty member, had charge of the singing, and wrote the hymn, "The Christ of Every Age," especially for the series. Irene Wolfe was at the organ throughout the week.

The purpose of the series, which was requested by the young people, was to open an evangelistic campaign in the Stone Church congregation to be carried on by means of cottage meetings and personal calls and letters, under the direction of missionary co-ordinators Eugene Theys, William F. Bolinger, and Pastor Claude A. Smith.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS AND APOSTLE JENSEN IN OKLAHOMA

President F. Henry Edwards has reported from the halfway mark of an encouraging trip with Apostle D. Blair Jensen. The week end of November 1 they were associated with Elder Alfred Yale and Oklahoma religious education workers in a well-attended institute held at Tulsa. During the week they were at Stillwater, Wilburton, Blackgum, Fanshawe, and Seminole, Oklahoma. On Saturday and Sunday, November 7-8, they were associated with Elder Alfred Yale, president of the Tulsa District, Elder O. O. Dollins, president of the Oklahoma City District, and Elder Raymon Carson, president of the Western Oklahoma and Texas Panhandle District, and Elders A. F. Gibbs and Wallace Jackson of the missionary force in a fine institute which drew a good representation of priesthood from the three districts. Elders Stewart Wight and George Fahrabel did excellent work in preparing for the institute.

APOSTLE GLEAZER IN THE NORTHWEST

Apostle E. J. Gleazer has returned from "one of the most successful trips" he has ever made in the Northwest. During his stay he organized the Southern Oregon District and attended conferences in the other four districts. He held several meetings between conference dates. Apostle Gleazer reports an excellent interest on the part of both priesthood and membership, and he is pleased with the missionary results being achieved in that part of his mission.

AT CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, and Dr. Lawrence Brockway were in Toronto Saturday and Sunday, November 14-15, attending a conference of college and professional people arranged by a local committee under the leadership of Bill Hewitt. About forty attended the meetings, which were held at the Bathurst Street Church. "Spiritual Obligation through Study" was the general theme.

The Temple of Kukulcán, or, as it is often called, "El Castillo," is located at Chichén Itzá about seventy-five miles slightly southeast of Mérida, the capital of the state of Yucatán in Mexico. This temple is sacred to the Mayas, as Kukulcán is the bearded white God to whom the temple was dedicated. The base of the temple is square in form, measuring 181 feet on each side. The platform around the temple proper is reached by any one of the four stairways, there being one on each side. Ninety-one steps are found in each stairway. There is some speculation as to the significance of the number of steps, since 4×91 equals 364, which plus the one step which surrounds the whole upper platform makes 365, possibly to indicate the number of days in a year. The platform itself is about 79 feet high, which, plus the height of the temple, reaches an overall height of 98 feet. The main stairway faces the north, and the solid stone balustrade starts with large stone serpent heads. The entrance to the two main rooms of the temple is by triple doorways, formed by two serpent columns. On one side of this entrance is a portrait bas-relief of Kukulcán, carved in stone. The other three stairways lead to doors which give entrance to a U-shaped gallery. The pyramid is constructed with nine terraces.

This exterior temple is built over and upon an earlier pyramid and temple. The earlier structure can be seen by entering a tunnel dug under the north stairway. This smaller interior pyramid also has nine terraces but only one stairway which also faces the north. Each side of the buried pyramid measures 108 feet, and its platform is only 56 feet high. The interior temple, on the platform, is decorated with entwined serpents, tigers, shields, and flower rosettes. Inside the earlier, two-roomed temple was found a Chac-mool, and a red tiger-shaped altar. On the altar was found an offering in the form of a turquoise and shell disk, and a small carved head made of jade. A round stone box, with lid, was discovered while the tunnel was being dug. This box contained two very rich disks of turquoise, coral, and shell.

The Law of Constant Peril

"Let him that thinketh he standeth beware lest he fall."

—I Corinthians 10: 12.

THE MAN who was both editor and professor was talking to a class of students in journalism. He had been speaking of mistakes that occur in publication and how to avoid them.

"A newspaper is published under the law of constant peril," he said. "You are always in danger. You are in danger of making any one of a thousand mistakes. You are in danger of offending someone who can hurt you. You are in danger of inaccuracies in attempting to state the facts. You are in danger of falling short in your obligation to present to the public a full, true, clear, and intelligible record of the events of the day. And you are in danger, even if you tell the truth, of being sued for libel."

THE LAW OF CONSTANT PERIL applies in many other departments of life too. It applies to one who is attempting to live up to the standards of church membership. One is always in danger of failing in some way, of being less than he ought to be, of being less than he wishes to be. Attaining the good life is like climbing a mountain. It takes constant care and vigilance to keep going up, and one can fall at any moment, or go down in a thousand ways, or for a thousand reasons.

IN A TALK ON SAFETY in highway driving, a traffic engineer had this to say: "The moment when you think you are perfectly safe is the moment of your greatest danger."

Certainly that is true. The driver relaxes, drives with one hand on the wheel, forgets to watch the rear vision mirror to see who is coming up from behind, lets his glance wander to the side of the road while the car is on a straight stretch. And then, a car traveling at modern highway speeds can be wrecked in ten seconds.

We were traveling into the city. Coming along the highway that early morning in the opposite direction was a young man driving alone. Momentarily, he fell asleep at the wheel. We were horrified to see his car cross the center line, aimed directly in our path. We honked the horn, put on the brake, and pulled out on the shoulder. Not a second too soon he awakened with a start, swung the car back into its own lane, and went on, with no evidence of regret at the wrong he was committing. Another five seconds and he could have wrecked us and sent us to the hospital. He thought he was safe. He thought he could keep driving when he needed sleep and rest so badly. As a result of such experiences one feels like deciding to stay home and let the rest of the world go by on its way to destruction.

The time of confidence and self-assurance is the time of danger.

FAMOUS LAST WORDS of those who live in constant peril:

"I think I can pass this fellow before he reaches the top of the hill. Anyway, I'm going to try."

"Just one drink couldn't do much harm."

"Lend me a match. I think the gas tank is empty."

"Well, it's a gamble. But nothing ventured, nothing won."

"Of course this is only gossip, but I think I'll tell it anyway. It could be true."

"I know the gun isn't loaded. See?" And pointing the gun at his friend in play, he pulled the trigger.

"It says rat poison, but I'm sure it's only cornstarch. It's okay."

"Just because you do it once doesn't mean that you have to do it again. There's a first time for everything. Go ahead. Don't be a square."

These are just samples of how people go knocking on the door to eternity, and then are surprised when it opens and they fall in.

Every one of these statements has been made many times by people who thought they were "perfectly safe."

NOTHING IS PERFECTLY SAFE in this life. We are in constant peril. The perils are created by ourselves and by others. Perils are brought on by assumptions not based on fact. They are brought on by inattention, fatigue, complacency, and other things. And there can be danger in almost anything. Every home and office harbors a number of things that could cause death, if improperly used or handled.

So the warning of St. Paul is especially wise: "Let him that thinketh he standeth beware lest he fall."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following excerpts are from an article which appeared in the San Rafael (California) Independent Journal for November 7. Dr. Herbert S. Salisbury, about whom the article was written, is a nephew of Joseph Smith and a cousin of President Israel A. Smith.

Dr. Herbert S. Salisbury of San Rafael has reconstructed a part of Indian life here in Marin through remains of the giant shell mounds built over thousands of years. He expresses regret that more mounds and skeletons have not been preserved for scientific study.

Dr. Salisbury was born in Illinois in 1870, just five years after Lincoln was assassinated. He was graduated from Carthage College and received his doctor of science degree from the University of Illinois. As president of Graceland College in Iowa he gave out diplomas, one of which he still remembers distinctly. He signed Leona Scott's diploma and then got her to sign a marriage certificate with him.

After serving as professor at Texas A. and M., surveyor for counties and cities in Illinois, historical work in Kansas City, and several years at the University of Iowa, he went into semiretirement. That was in 1930 when he came to live in Marin. Teaching language and science at Marin high schools and Marin College part time, he roamed the county and the state, digging into Indian mounds and lost gold mines of California.

Dr. Salisbury's father, Don Carlos Salisbury, enlisted with the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry in 1860 and fought with the Northern army for three years. Then he came west . . . where he took charge of two stage stations in Nevada and lived to be seventy-seven.

Dr. and Mrs. Salisbury have two sons. Scott Salisbury is with the gas department of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company in San Rafael, and Dr. W. W. Salisbury is building cyclotron and electronic equipment for universities and firms throughout the United States. One daughter, Mrs. George Wehrheim lives in Woodacre.

Three generations of Salisburys span a century of progress from the Civil War and stage coach era to the atomic age. But to Dr. Salisbury, still active at eighty-three, that century is but a speck in a world of stone and fossil dating back thousands and even millions of years.

Now's the time for you to help finish the job.

A Crusade Against Liquor Advertising

A "crusade against liquor advertising" has been in full swing for over a year now. Sponsored by the National Temperance and Prohibition Council, the crusade has begun to have enough effect so that the liquor interests are giving some attention to methods which might suppress it.

In a recent battle of words between the Council and liquor advertisers the question was raised, "What right have you to bring the pressure of public opinion to bear upon the editors, publishers, managers or owners of newspapers, magazines, radio, television, or other media that accept liquor advertisements or on legislators, to enact legislation, to stop this advertising? The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is a legal business; therefore, its advertising is legal, and no one has any right to interfere with it."

The Temperance and Prohibition Council replied:

The answer is that there is no right—no natural, inherent, or, as we say in the Declaration of Independence, "inalienable" right to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling intoxicating liquors, and, therefore, no right—natural, inherent, inalienable right—in advertising them for the purpose of aiding in their sale.

To engage in the business of an ordinary calling, such as agriculture, mining, manufacture of goods—of any business which is not injurious to the public welfare—is a natural, inherent right in which anyone has a right to engage.

The traffic in intoxicating liquor does not belong to this class of business. It is a "special privilege" business which has no right to exist apart from a special permit by government, and in the conduct of which the government can hedge it about with all manner of restrictions, can even prohibit it altogether.

The reason for this is the inevitably dangerous and evil character of the business. Thus our courts, from the lowest to the highest, have declared for a hundred years.

Since the liquor business is special privilege business, which exists by sufferance and has no inherent right to exist, it follows that the business of advertising it is also a special privilege, and not an inherent right, business. It follows, therefore, that the advertising of alcoholic liquors can be regulated, restricted, and also prohibited without infringing upon any right of the advertisers.

The National Temperance and Prohibition Council is clearly within its rights in launching a crusade against liquor advertising. Furthermore, the Council believes it to be its imperative duty to arouse the American people to protest to those who are annually receiving from the liquor industry the huge sum of $250,000,000 for the use of their facilities for advertising the industry's products to increase their sale and consumption.

Those who are interested in participating to some degree in this crusade may write for further information to Dr. R. H. Martin, Committee Against Liquor Advertising, 209 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh 22, Pennsylvania.

From Robert W. Gunlock, pastor at Grand Island, Nebraska:

I was pleasantly surprised this evening to read the excerpt from Section 59 of the Doctrine and Covenants on page 17 of the Herald for November 16, your comments in regard to it, and the fact that other persons have recently given attention to the revelation.

While planning for the Communion service on November 1, I was attracted to this section and used it as the basis for the service. Its contents impressed some of those present, and I felt it merited further attention. As a result, I used various parts of it for my sermon on November 8. This is the first time in my experience I have done so that I can recall.

I am wondering if all of this is coincidence, or if the Lord is directing attention of the people to certain fundamentals often ignored.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God

Part I

By Charles R. Hield

A Remarkable Affirmation

ONE OF THE MOST marvelous and remarkable things about the Restoration message of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is its affirmation of the divinity of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. In the Three Standard Books of the church—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants—we have an account of the life and accomplishments of Jesus Christ. We believe we have a more complete account of his existence from the beginning until the end of time than other churches, and it is an inspirational challenge to follow his example in godly living.

The Bible speaks clearly of the relationship between the Father and the Son:

God . . . hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and . . . purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him, . . . of the angels he saith, Angels are ministering spirits. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou has loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.—Hebrews 1: 1-9, Inspired Version.

The biography of Jesus Christ is one of the most fascinating accounts imaginable. The passage quoted above indicates some of his early life. He was an “appointed heir”; by him the worlds were made; he is in the express image of his Father; he will sit on the right hand of his Father; he is made “better than the angels”; by “inheritance” he has a more excellent name than the angels; he is the first-begotten; he is called a “God” by his Father; he loved righteousness and hated iniquity; he has been anointed above his fellows.

In the Beginning

John (I John 1: 1-3) speaks of the “Word of life” which was from the “beginning.” Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4 repeats this same truth: (Christ speaking) “I was in the beginning with the Father, and am the Firstborn.” Most interestingly, Christ says that our intelligences also were with God: “Ye were also in the beginning with the Father” (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4). Some have thought because Christ was in the beginning with the Father, that he is in fact God the Father. It would be just as logical to say that we, too, would be the same as God the Father. Satan also would be God, for in the Inspired Version, Genesis 3: 1, we read: “And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning.”

One of the outstanding characteristics of the Son, Jesus Christ, is his humility, his teachableness, and the fact that he always recognizes his Father as the source of all power and the presiding authority in the Godhead. In the Bible Christ says:

I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.—John 8: 28.

Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth: and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.—John 5: 19-20.

I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.—John 14: 28.

Even after the Christ has completed his worldly task here with mankind, he still will recognize the authority of his Father:

Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. . . . And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.—I Corinthians 15: 24, 28.

Well may man seek to follow the wonderful example of the Christ!

Such was the life of Jesus Christ that he was worthy of great things. John the Revelator writes:

And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels, . . . saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.—Revelation 5: 11, 12.

Christ always gives credit to the Father as the source of all power and truth:

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28: 18.

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

This is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 5: 32, page 634.

Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 16-17.

The Creator

God the Father delegated to Jesus Christ, the Son, the task of creating the physical universe and physical man. No other person has before or since been given such power, such responsibility and authority. The Bible mentions his creative power:

The firstborn of every creature: . . . by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, . . . all things were created by him, and for him.—Colossians 1: 15, 16. (See also Hebrews 1: 1, 2; John 1: 3, 10.)

The Book of Mormon testifies, of course, to this same fact:

Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of the heavens and of the earth, and all things that in them are.—Ether 1: 101, page 724.

(When Christ appeared personally in America)—Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning.—III Nephi 4: 44, 45, page 628.

Modern revelation naturally bears the same testimony:

And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1; 22: 21.)

Thus we see that Christ was a great contractor under God the Father (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21), with power, knowledge, and skills that man as yet has not been fully able to fathom.

Next in this fascinating biography of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, we learn that he was involved in a war in heaven with Lucifer (Satan). The Bible speaks of this:

And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, . . . his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: . . . And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, . . . and the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.—Revelation 12: 3-9.

Christ also mentions this event in modern revelation:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM, . . . the Devil . . . rebelled against me, saying, Give me thine honor, which is my power, and also a third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency; and they were thrust down and thus became the Devil and his angels.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1, 10.

An angel of God, who was in authority in the presence of God, who rebelled against the only begotten Son; whom the Father loved, and who was in the bosom of the Father; and was thrust down from the presence of God and the Son, and was called Perdition; for the heavens wept over him; he was Lucifer, a son of the morning.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3. (See also II Peter 2: 4.)

Head of His Church

The Son, Jesus the Christ, from the beginning of time has served under the authority of the Father, not only as the Creator of the heavens and the earth, but at the head of his church. He it is who has the responsibility (under the Father) for the building of the kingdom of God and the saving of man. The Bible is very clear on this:

And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church.—Colossians 1: 17-18. Christ is the head of the church.—Ephesians 5: 23.

Rightly then do we use the name of Jesus Christ in the name of the church—The Church of Jesus Christ. With clear understanding we can sing the song: "The church's one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord."

What is known about Christ and his activities from the time of the battle in heaven until he was born as a babe in Palestine? Most churches know very little about him. What a marvelous thing it is that we of the Restoration have a record of many of the things he did. They are contained in the word of God as given to the world in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants (God's word to mankind today).

Christ, under the direction of the Father, evidently had something to do with the creation of physical man. When Christ appeared to the Brother of Jared he said:

Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. . . . And never have I shewed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast.—Ether 1: 77, 79, page 721.

In modern revelation he says:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM. . . . All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your Father, whom I created.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1, 9.

Once, God the Father by his Spirit showed Moses many lands and "the inhabitants thereof" were "as numberless as the sand upon the seashore."

And the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. . . . And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created, and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. And the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21.

The Book of Mormon tells of one group of people who left the tower of Babel and were led by God to America. A righteous man called the Brother of Jared was their spiritual leader. Under divine direction, this group built boats in which to travel. This was about 2,200 years B.C. In the process of constructing and lighting the boats, the Brother of Jared went often to the Lord for direction. So great was the faith of this good man that Jesus Christ personally, in his spiritual body, appeared to the Brother of Jared:

Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. . . .

And never have I shewed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast.

Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning, after mine own image?

Behold this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit, will I appear unto my people in the flesh.—Book of Mormon, Ether 1: 77, 79-81, pages 721-722.

Here we have a record of Jesus Christ (note full title) appearing to mankind about 2200 B.C. He appears in his spiritual body, since he had not yet taken a physical form. He said it was the first time that he had appeared to man personally, though his Father had appeared about a thousand years before to Enoch and others. Enoch, (3382-3017 B.C., the seventh from Adam, Jude 1: 14) relates in his prophecy: "I saw the Lord; he stood before my face, and he talked with me, even as a man talks one with another face to face" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 1). Most Christians are puzzled about the activities of the Christ during the many years of the Old Testament. In our Scripture we have the truth of his ministry. Christ is the head of the church, and as such, we may be sure that he is always on the job. The Book of Mormon tells us his activity; he is the "God of the land," the "God of Israel, the God of Abraham, of Isaac and Jacob."

Nephi, an early prophet of the Book of Mormon, spoke to the people of his day:

Yea, even the very God of Israel, do men trample under their feet; . . . because of their iniquity, shall judge him to be a thing of nought; wherefore, they scourge him, . . . they smite him, . . . they spit upon him. . . .

Yea, the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, yieldeth himself according to the words of the angel, as a man, into the hands of wicked men, to be lifted up, . . . to be crucified, . . . and to be buried in a sepulcher.—Book of Mormon, I Nephi 5: 233, 237, 240-242, page 65.

Jesus Christ, when he appeared personally in America, showed the people assembled the prints of the nails in his hands and feet and the wound in his side:

That ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 5: 5: 14, page 632.

Speaking of America, the prophet Ether wrote:

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.—Book of Mormon, Ether 1: 35, page 717.

We read that Enoch (3382-3017 B.C.) was translated because of his great faith (Hebrews 11: 5). More about Enoch and his righteous city is given in Doctrine and Covenants, Section 36 (see also Inspired Version of the Bible, Genesis 7). The Lord called the people of Enoch "Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them; . . . and lo! Zion, in process of time, was taken up into heaven" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2, 3). In a later section of the Doctrine and Covenants, Christ identifies himself as the one who dealt with this godly city:

Thus saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, the great I AM, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. . . . I am the same which spake and the world was made, and all things came by me: I am the same which have taken the Zion of Enoch into mine own bosom.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1.

In All Ages

Thus we learn that Jesus Christ was in continual contact with mankind in the Old Testament world. He it is that calls himself the God of Israel, of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob. He it is who took the Zion of Enoch up into heaven. Not only does Christ have the task of helping the righteous, but he also has power over the wicked:

I am Christ, . . . the residue of the wicked [after Enoch's Zion was taken up] have I kept in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day, which shall come at the end of the earth; and even so will I cause the wicked to be kept, that will not hear my voice but harden their hearts, and woe, woe, woe is their doom.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1.

It is not new teaching that Christ has control of hell; it is his prison house, his pit, his place of punishment for sins. The Bible states:

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Revelation 1: 18.

Many may have wondered who gave the law of Moses. The Inspired Version of the Bible makes this quite clear:

Then said the Pharisees unto him, Why will ye not receive us with our baptism, seeing we keep the whole law?

But Jesus said unto them, Ye keep not the law. If ye had kept the law, ye would have received me, for I am he who gave the law.—Matthew 9: 18, 19, Inspired Version.

This is made even clearer in the Book of Mormon (Christ himself speaking):

And he said unto them, Marvel not that I said unto you, that old things had passed away, and that all things had become new.

Behold I say unto you, that the law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses.

Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfill the law; therefore, it hath an end.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 7: 4-6, page 643.

Not only in the time of the Brother of Jared, of Enoch, of Abraham, and of Isaac, was Christ in contact with the world. It is not unexpected, therefore, when we learn that it was Christ who was concerned with Moses and the exodus of the children of Israel from the domination of the pharaoh in Egypt. In modern revelation, he makes a comparison between the persecutions in Missouri and those in Egypt, saying:

I will soften the hearts of the people [in Missouri], as I did the heart of Pharaoh, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.

What is more natural than that Jesus Christ, the Son of God—he who created the heavens and the earth, he who is the “God of the land,” the “God of Israel”—should be the giver of laws which he passes on to us from his Father? Again the Book of Mormon sheds additional clarity on this subject, for Christ himself when in America said:

And behold I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me. . . .

For verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 5: 66, 68, pages 636-637. (See also II Nephi 11: 58-59, page 144.)

That Christ is our lawgiver is also plainly set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants:

Thus saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, . . . hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws, when I come, for I am your lawgiver, and what can stay my hand?—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1, 5.

His Life on Earth

Most Christians know of the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the coming of the Messiah to the earth and the story of his birth as a babe in Bethlehem. We know the story of the shepherds, of the new star, the angels singing, the birth in the manger, and the coming of the Wise Men. In America the prophets had taught the people about the coming of Christ also; and the Book of Mormon says:

We talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins.—Book of Mormon, II Nephi 11: 48, page 143.

One of these prophets, Samuel, was a convert from the wicked Lamanites. He prophesied that after five years Christ would be born into the world, and that a sign should be given, for “the night before he cometh, there shall be no darkness” (Helaman 5: 56, page 591). Time passed, and the wicked began to threaten the righteous with death should the sign not be given by a certain day. Nephi, the son of Nephi (the grandson of Helaman), prayed mightily unto the Lord, and—

The voice of the Lord came unto him, saying, Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to shew unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 1: 12, 13, page 601.

There are several significant statements in this Scripture. Christ all along has been in contact with the world. He talked with the Brother of Jared. As a lawgiver, he gave the law of Moses. He watched over the Zion of Enoch. He confines the wicked to hell. He is listening to the prayers of his people. To Nephi he said: “On the morrow come I into the world.” Not only this, but he stated that it is he who placed the words in the mouths of his prophets. Obviously among them is the prophecy of Samuel, as well as others of the Old Testament. Note his words again: “to shew unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.” So there were signs not only in Palestine but in America at the time of his birth.

Most Christians are familiar with the story of the birth of Christ and his life for about thirty-two years in Palestine. We know how, as a lad twelve he went up to the temple to talk with the learned men. We know that he set up his own church organization with twelve apostles, prophets, seventy, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, etc. (see Mark 3: 14, I Corinthians 12: 28, Ephesians 4: 11) “till we all come to the unity of the faith” (Ephesians 4: 13).

All Christians are more or less familiar with his marvelous ministry in Palestine—healing of the sick, controlling the elements of the world that he had created, walking on the water, healing the lepers; cursing the fig tree that gave no fruit; feeding the multitude with the loaves and fishes; raising the dead; turning the water into wine; putting back the ear that Peter had cut off.

We know that Christ himself baptized (John 3:22, 26; 4:1), and that he ordained his priesthood (John 15: 16; Mark 3: 14). We know the story of his betrayal, his trial, his crucifixion, and how his body was placed in the tomb.

At his death also there were certain signs given in Palestine. The Bible says:

And, behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; and the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose.—Matthew 27: 51, 52.

Christ loves people of every race, color, and nation, whether they are sinners or righteous. He may be more pleased with the righteous and may grieve over the sinful, but he loves them all. It is quite in line with this divine trait that he go to labor among those who have lost the way and have been confined to the prison house or hell. The Bible states:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah.—I Peter 3: 18, 19. (See also I Peter 4: 6, Isaiah 24: 22, John 5: 25, Ephesians 4: 8-10.)

In America also there were signs accompanying the death of Christ. There was darkness for the space of

A Communion Message

By William McMurray

Besides being put to death they were made to serve as objects of amusement; they were clad in the hides of beasts and torn to death by dogs; others were crucified, others set on fire to illuminate the night when daylight failed. Nero had thrown open his grounds for the display, and was putting on a show in the circus, where he mingled with the people in the dress of a charioteer or drove about in his chariot. —“The Neronian Persecution, Tacitus.”

DURING THE FIRST CENTURIES after Christ the faith of the Christians was constantly required to measure up to the heavy demands which threat of persecution made upon them. Their faith was required to endure a nagging mistrust of friends and the awful fear of betrayal. In the event of its survival, their faith developed in closest intimacy with sorrow and despair, agony and death. The faithful Christian acknowledged the impending possibility of horrible suffering, not only for himself but also for those he loved. Nevertheless, as the appointed hour approached, a force stronger than their fear impelled many people toward the secret meeting place where their brethren would assemble in worship. As they moved through the streets in the semidarkness of an early morning hour, they would glance apprehensively over their shoulders, fearful lest through carelessness they might betray their friends. An alert observer might have been attracted to the fact that each one seemed to be carrying a bundle under his cloak, but close examination would have revealed nothing out of the ordinary. Bread and wine were common fare on every table.

Arriving at the home where the meeting was to take place, the Christians would find the chairs arranged so that the elders and priests sat facing the congregation. The first service was one of instruction, similar to our preaching service or church school. Inquirers were welcome here, for it was designed to acquaint them with the gospel of Christ. When the first service was concluded, however, final preparation was made for that which followed, and a loud declaration was heard, “Let the inquirers depart.” For now the church would participate in an activity which was essentially a family experience—the Lord’s Supper.

WHEN ONLY BAPTIZED BELIEVERS remained, the worship continued with another declaration from the elder in charge: “Peace be unto you.” At this point the assembled Christians exchanged the “kiss of peace” to which Paul and other writers have referred. The Lord’s Prayer was recited; then the oblation was presented. The latter was received in two parts. First, the deacons went among the members with baskets into which each person dropped a loaf of bread. Secondly, they held before each individual a wine cask, into which was poured the contents of the bottle of wine which, with the bread, had made up the parcel each one carried to the service. Should there be some too poor to purchase wine they were permitted to add a little water that it might represent their willingness to give. The bread and wine were then placed before the priesthood, who broke sufficient of the loaves for the service, blessed it, and distributed it to the assembly. In turn, the wine was blessed and served. When a hymn had been sung and a benediction pronounced, the service was closed and the Christians separated, a few at a time so that their meeting place might not be betrayed.

THE CIRCUMSTANCES under which we meet today, of course, are considerably altered from that day of persecution. Many changes also can be seen in the mechanics of our worship, but it is extremely significant that the church of the Restoration has retained intact each principle found in the Communion service of the first century.

For example, in the dismissal of the inquirers prior to the Communion is reflected the feeling of superiority the Jews experienced in their relations with all other nationalities. In accordance with their tradition, they did not break bread with foreigners. With the acceptance of the uncircumcized into the church, however, these ancient laws became obsolete. When, by a gradual process, Christianity was weaned away from the narrow bigotry of Hebrew tradition, the undergirding principles were revealed and retained. Thus, in our day, we welcome our friends to the Communion service, but the essential cord which binds us to our former-day brethren is maintained in the practice of close communion. In its very nature the breaking of bread is still a family experience.

The “kiss of peace” was a common practice among the Jews, particularly at the commencement of a formal feast. In all probability it actually was exchanged by the disciples at the Last Supper. It was not a custom among the Gentiles, however, nor was it a vital Christian experience. Accordingly, it has disappeared from our service. Nevertheless it must be observed that once again the substance is unprofaned since the “kiss” was to symbolize that each was at peace with his brethren. To this day the church still admonishes that each communicant should examine himself and, if he holds aught against his brother, he should first be reconciled, then partake of the Lord’s Supper.

AT FIRST GLANCE it appears that the oblation has been violated and its function altered, since it has become an offering of money for the poor while it was originally the presentation of bread and wine for the Communion supper. An interesting sidelight, however, clarifies the picture: the bread and wine which remained after the Communion had been served was distributed later to the poor. Such a method of dealing with the needy would be totally unsatisfactory in our time, but the recognition of the needs of others which is inherent in a real Communion experience is apparent in our service in the Restoration.

As Christ met with his disciples in the upper room, he said, “This is my blood, which is shed for you.” On that occasion they could not understand what he meant, but they must have meditated often on these things after the experience of the cross. No doubt they then understood more fully what was in his mind as he broke bread to symbolize the body which was to be broken for them. But they probably did not fully apprehend his meaning until, in accordance with his request, they met together to “do this” again in remembrance of him. I venture to say, however, that the deep significance of his act was not lost to them when they themselves held bread and wine in their hands, as he had done before them, and faced the amphitheatres of Rome as he had faced the cross. Doubts and misgivings crowded in upon them. Fear began to overcome human frailty. Suddenly, Jesus’ response to fear and suffering rang down through the halls of their memories, challenging them to equal his sacrifice. Unquestionably they echoed his dedication as they dropped their bread into the basket. “This is my body,” and loaves symbolized lives and were presented to the altar, consecrated, in life or in death, to the purposes for which Christ had died.

MAY THIS MOST significant principle be not forgotten in our Communion experience. We are not called upon to endure Calvary. We attend our worship without fear of the arena’s death. In our

Review of Church History in a Canadian Paper

Editor's Note: The following article by Victor Lauriston appeared in the Chatham "Daily News" (Chatham, Ontario) and is used by permission. It was sent to the "Herald" by Patriarch R. J. Jones of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, who received it from his mother. He says: "Having come up through the persecution of the Saints in Chatham, I know something of the tremendous change in the thinking of this community as evidenced by this clipping. On many nights I have shown up at the dinner table with a black eye received while defending my mother's honor. Attitudes have changed since then, and such defense is no longer necessary."

The author is a veteran newspaperman who, four years ago, was honored by fellow craftsmen at a banquet marking his fifty years in journalism. He is a columnist and editorial writer for the "News," the author of several books, and an authority on local history. Recently he published a book, "Romantic Kent," on the history of his county and city, having been commissioned by the county and city councils to do so.

Joseph Smith Never Preached Polygamy

By Victor Lauriston

SHORT CREEK recently got into the headlines and has now crept into the editorial columns, and into the "Letters to the Editor."

Short Creek is an obscure community in a remote and isolated section of Arizona. The other day a police force descended on this counterpart of Dogpatch and took into custody thirty-six men and eighty-six women.

The thirty-six were, it seems, the husbands of the eighty-six. Scattered about the landscape were herds, flocks, packs, beves, or what have you of children. The children were temporarily entrusted to welfare organizations; the women were released; and the men were charged with bigamy, trigamy, polygamy—anything in fact, except monogamy, which is contrary to their religious beliefs.

According to the news stories the defendants claimed they were "true Joseph Smith Mormons." So, not content with polygamy, they qualified as liars.

Joseph Smith was the founder of the Mormon Church. When he lived near Fayetteville, New York, in 1823, the age of miracles had not yet ended. That year an angel appeared to him in a dream and revealed that under a near-by hill, Cumorah, were buried certain golden plates.

Not till 1827 was Smith allowed to dig up the plates. They were covered with strange characters which Smith termed "reformed Egyptian." He was unable to read them without . . . a mysterious instrument, the Urim and Thummim.

With this Smith read and translated into English the Book of Mormon, which told of the early settlement of America by refugees from Palestine. The refugees were the family of the godly Lehi. Of his descendants, one portion—the Lamanites—went into the wilderness and became the ancestors of the red Indians; the other portion, the Nephites, behaved themselves.

Eventually, about the year 400, the Lamanites destroyed the Nephites. Two Nephites, Mormon and his son Moroni, before they perished, buried the plates which told the story.

ON THE BASIS of this Book of Mormon, together with the Old and New Testaments, was organized on April 6, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with Joseph Smith as its president. The disciples of the new religion, though few in numbers, were exemplary in their conduct—sober, industrious, and well behaved.

But in a community where sober industry was not too common, these qualities, plus their peculiar beliefs, aroused hostility. Seeking a peaceful Zion, they moved to Kirtland, Ohio, and then to Missouri. Eventually, in 1840 they founded Nauvoo in Illinois, a model city, whose population grew rapidly as missionaries acquired new converts.

Enmity followed the Mormons. The leaders, arrested on trumped-up charges, were thrown into jail at Carthage. On the night of June 27, 1844, a mob stormed the jail, murdered Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, and wounded several of their companions.

FROM THE WELTER of confusion following the loss of their prophet emerged the strong figure of Brigham Young, a Vermont glazier. Young took over the leadership and determined to seek a new Zion beyond the boundaries of the United States.

In the spring of 1847 Young set out for the West with an advance guard of 143 Mormons, and on July 27 reached Salt Lake City. The area was dry and forbidding: but here, encouraged by a revelation, Young set up the State of Deseret and founded Salt Lake City.

Deseret, later to become Utah, was then Mexican territory. Thanks to the irrigation projects of the industrious and well-disciplined Mormons, in no great time the desert blossomed like a rose and Salt Lake City, with its Tabernacle and Temple, became a well-ordered and prosperous community.

Contrary to the recent news stories, Joseph Smith never sanctioned or practiced polygamy. It was first practiced under Brigham Young's regime about 1852. The Book of Mormon is specific on the point. It says:

"Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall be not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none."

In that same year, 1852, adherents of the faith, meeting at Beloit, Wisconsin, repudiated Young's doctrine and formed the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, according to their story the true church of Joseph Smith. Jason Briggs was named president; but in 1860 the presidency passed to Joseph Smith, eldest son of the Prophet. Later, the Reorganized Church established its headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and thence carried on widespread missionary work.

AFTER THE MEXICAN WAR, Utah became United States territory, and the government at Washington named Brigham Young governor. His rule was efficient, patriarchal, and theocratic. But the American public, though increasingly tolerant of promiscuity, didn't like polygamy. In 1857 Young was deposed, and Alfred Cummings was named governor.

Young died in 1877, leaving nineteen widows and fifty-seven children. Polygamy continued to be practiced till 1890 when Wilford Woodruff, then head of the church, issued an edict forbidding plural marriage.

Young's colony of Utah had some singular features. It was, beyond question, the most successful and orderly settlement on the westward-moving American frontier. The Mormons were the only pioneer frontiersmen to establish and maintain amicable relations with the Indians.

Among the plural wives jealousy was almost unknown, and the women were, with few exceptions, the strongest supporters of "the institution."

Singular also is the fact that since the Short Creek raid, the Vancouver News-Herald and other western papers have been deluged with letters telling "the other side of the story"—that is, the Mormon side.

Mormon settlers a half century or more ago flocked into southern Alberta, settling about Cardston, and bringing with them the sugar beet industry. Many of their descendants are prominent in the Social Credit movement and helped to give it a distinctly religious tinge.

The Mormon faith has links with this part of Canada. Its missionaries a century ago and earlier made many converts in Kent and Lambton. The Nauvoo road, running south from Alvinston, still commemorates the route on which they set out for their expected Zion. Archibald Gardner, the pioneer Alvinston miller, followed the trek to Utah and became prominent in the church there.

The Latter Day Saints now in Kent belong mostly to the Reorganized Church. Industry, sobriety, and mutual helpfulness have marked both branches of the church.

Differences

We live in two worlds—a world of words, and a world of facts. It is not always possible to tell from what people say what they will do. Truth and propaganda talk about the same things, but they convey different messages. Historians of the future will read the records we have written in words. But what will they know of the ways we lived and behaved?

Before we take offense at the words people use, it would be well for us to try to learn what they intended. The word may offend; the intent may bless.

NEXT WEEK'S HERALD WILL SAY . . .

"The danger which we face today is more subtle than that of active resistance. Such resistance tends to unify a group, to vitalize a movement. The danger is in toleration. Nothing will kill a cause so quickly as toleration."—"A Day for Boldness," by E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

"Jesus gave us a key [in the parable of the sower] to the understanding of the presence of evil: an enemy has been at work."—"The Works of the Enemy," by L. J. Lea.

"What a busy Godhead we have—God the Father, and Jesus Christ, the Son! . . . Most Christians have little idea how the righteous will spend their time during such a number of years [millennium]—in peace, no wars, no disease, they generally believe."—"Jesus Christ, the Son of God," Part II, by Charles R. Hield.

"There was something about him that caused me to wish that my whole life's pattern had been cast among the Indians."—"We Do Not Walk Alone in Latin America," by Albert L. Loving.

"There is one thing we can say for problems—our own or someone else's—they start us thinking, and when we start thinking we have a better chance to grow in the right direction rather than just drifting along, taking things for granted. Sooner or later, most of us meet with the necessity of knowing for ourselves what God is like. If we do not possess a reasonable portion of that knowledge, we feel no actual security in the powers attributed to him."—"My God and I," by Lucille Bacon.

"Different groups like to identify themselves and their cause by use of uniforms, badges, emblems, buttons, and other symbols. It is sometimes very popular for the members of our church to wear a small lapel pin bearing the replica of the church seal. This says the wearer is a member of our church—but not what kind of a member."—"Identification," by Marcella Schenck.

Question Time

Question:

How can we explain the phenomenal increase in numbers referred to in the first years of Nephite history wherein the book makes reference to great and terrible wars and sizable armies?

Florida

E. G. F.

Answer:

Bible prophecy indicates a prodigious increase in the posterity of Joseph under highly favorable conditions amidst fruit and vegetation in what is termed "his" land (see Deut. 33: 13-17). He is referred to as a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, the women of whose posterity would be blessed in bearing and nourishing their children. (See Gen. 49: 22, 25; especially note the last two lines.)

Nephi attests the vigor and strength of the women of Lehi's colony (the ancestors of the Nephites and the Lamanites) in the same regard, adding, "our women . . . were strong, yea, even like unto the men" (see I Nephi 5: 57).

Before reaching America, there were already 7 families of small children besides Jacob and Joseph. Allowing an average of 8 living children to every family there would have been 64 people or 32 young couples of marriageable age within a short time of their arrival in America. At the same rate of increase, and allowing 30 years between generations, a little calculation shows that even allowing for casualties, within 268 years there could have been millions under 60 years of age.

It will be noticed that the Book of Mormon does not even mention armies during the first few hundred years. There were "wars and contentions" before 40 years had passed (II Nephi 4: 51) and again before 179 years had passed (Enos 1: 41, 42). Before the end of 238 years there were wars and contentions "much of the time." (Jarom 1: 29). After 276 years "many seasons of serious war and bloodshed" had occurred (Omni 1: 4). In 320 years the "more wicked part of the Nephites had been destroyed" (Omni 1: 7). It was over 100 years more, after a long time of peace, before armies were developed on a national scale.

Question:

If a member becomes discouraged because of conditions beyond his control and should leave the church and join another, though never leaving his faith in God the Father and Jesus Christ his Son and the gospel, even living closer to them than ever before, would he lose his soul? Michigan Mrs. M. D. J.

Answer:

The church is the church of the living God, and man is drawn into its fellowship by the Holy Spirit; "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved" (Acts 2: 47). Man does not bring man into the church. The idea is a fallacy. Man is required to help his fellow men by telling them of the gospel of Christ, but he can't bring them into the church. Some sow the seed, others water, but "God giveth the increase" by allowing his Holy Spirit to work with the individual seeker. Following the leadings of this Spirit, man goes to the waters of regeneration and becomes a member of the body of Christ, the church. Once he leaves the church he denies his testimony and grieves the spirit that lead him. He commits a sin, but he does not lose his soul.

The church has always taught that those who live close to Christ will be blessed even though they belong to no church or any church. However, the extent of blessing is relative to the degree of obedience, righteousness, and service they give. One's soul will be saved or lost as determined by the judgment of God. Someday each of us will be judged and rewarded (or punished) according to the works done in the flesh (Revelation 20: 12).

There is no place in the New Testament where we read of the churches of Christ. We always read of the church of Christ. Jesus frowned on divisions (Luke 11: 17), and prayed for his followers to be one (John 17: 11, 20-22). Paul manifested the same disposition toward oneness (I Corinthians 12: 12-27; Ephesians 5: 21-32), and placed himself on the side of the Lord. His remarks in Ephesians 4: 3-6 should be memorized. The brother in question evidently left the church which the Lord said "is the only true and living church upon the face of the earth" (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5) and joined another. His act is a sin that needs to be repented of, but he will not lose his soul.

The question states that the man left the church because of "conditions beyond his control." There is no such thing to the true follower of Christ. If the man was tempted, he allowed himself to be so led (I Corinthians 10: 13; James 1: 13-15). His action, unless repented of, places him among those who are "not valiant in their testimony;" and instead of having the celestial reward he will have the terrestrial (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6).

Question:

How can we justify the serving of suppers in our churches to raise funds in the light of Mark 11: 17, 18 which has to do with Christ casting out those who sold animals and birds for offerings and exchanged money in the temple? Michigan Mrs. J. K.

Answer:

The answer hinges entirely upon the motive back of such activities. Christ seemed to be dealing with a group of people who had commercialized the temple primarily for their own sakes and were selling and exchanging—not for the benefit of the kingdom but for the personal profits which accrued to them individually.

Suppers, bazaars, and such money-raising activities generally are merely a part of a total program designed by prayerful people to forward the work of the kingdom. We believe that the Master would have recognized such motives and probably would have participated just as he did on many occasions where it was a matter of saving the souls of men. It is quite possible that such activities at times do become too commercialized; if such occurs, it is most unfortunate. It does seem, however, that the dignified serving of meals and the offering of wares for sale in the proper manner and in the proper spirit of devotion and service is not in any way out of line with the Scripture quoted.

three days; there were terrible tempests and earthquakes; the city of Zarahemla caught fire; the city of Moroni sank into the sea; the city of Moroni-hah was covered with earth; highways were broken up; and the whole face of the land was changed. (Read III Nephi, chapter 4.) The wicked were destroyed.

A voice spoke out of heaven:

And it said unto them, Behold, my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him. . . .

And behold, they saw a man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them. . . .

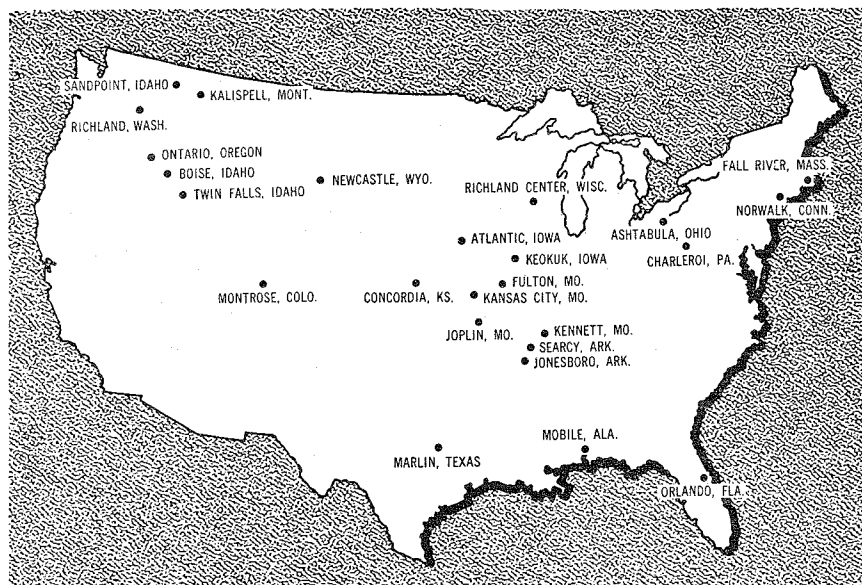

And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand and spake unto the people, saying, Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 5: 8-11, page 632.

We learn in the American record that Christ preached among the people on this continent. He selected twelve disciples here also to lead the spiritual ministry of the church, and he remained for several days ministering to the needs of the people. (It is most interesting and confirming to learn that the ancient history and legends from Central and South America confirm this coming of a bearded white God. Read Paul M. Hanson's book, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, and H. I. Velt's America's Lost Civilizations, page 140 ff., published by the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.)

Wherever men live, God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son are interested in their welfare. It is in line with this love and concern for life everywhere that we find, not unexpectedly, Christ saying as he leaves America:

But now I go unto the Father, and also to shew myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 8: 4, page 648.

Radio Stations Carrying Church Programs

Is your branch or district represented on this map?

Perhaps it should be—and could be. The Radio Department is prepared to supply without cost (except for return postage) complete radio programs recorded on tape, which the local branch or district may place on radio stations as a means of publicizing the church, building good will, and producing prospects for missionary work and cottage meetings. Space is provided on each program for local credits and announcements. Each program includes a call to worship, Scripture, sermon, prayer, and three hymns with organ accompaniment.

Nondoctrinal sermons, with each service forming a complete unit, are available; but doctrinal sermons which continue as a series for thirteen to fifty-two weeks also are available.

If free time is offered to religious broadcasters on your community's radio station, or if your branch or district can afford to purchase some broadcast time for this purpose, we suggest that you write the Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for full information or for helpful advice on any questions which you may have about how to place and use these programs locally.

day the call is not for people to die but to live, and many who would gladly die for Christ find it virtually impossible to live for him. To die is the decision of a moment, but before Jesus died for us he first lived for us and resisted the temptations which threaten to destroy us today. It was his life which made his death meaningful. We now contemplate the amphitheater of our life with its crosses and fires, its dangers and temptations. As we regard our own weaknesses, fear assails us. But memory again reflects the example of Jesus, who participated in life with the same dedication which carried him through agony and death, and we are constrained to believe that with his help we can conquer. As we have received his gift, may we equal it within the measure of our resources. This is my body. This is my blood. This is my life—which I now give to him.

Wait for Understanding

This has happened many times. Somebody said or did something that hurt and caused anger. The first tendency was to lash out in angry reply and reprisal. Some fortunate slowness and dullness prevented that at the time, and the only thing to do was wait.

A little later, some new facts, some different way of thinking cast a very different light on the whole episode, revealing that there was no ill will, no intent to hurt, and nothing but friendship involved.

Then what a vast relief, what a gratitude there was that nothing foolish had been said or done. A great danger had passed by, due to divine mercy and certainly not to any human credit. The best advice, when something hurts you, is this: wait until you know all the facts, and you will understand.

Set in Order Your Own House

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

CONDUCT AND ACCOMPLISHMENT are largely dependent on early training. Why does one man become a good neighbor and a desirable citizen while another grows up lacking proper community spirit although he has apparently enjoyed equal home privileges?

Last Christmas Eve a group of teen-age vandals destroyed a superbly lighted Christmas display arranged by a well-to-do citizen. I was spending Christmas Day in a beautiful home when a father, accompanied by his seven-year-old son, dropped in to extend good wishes. The wanton destruction of the previous night came under discussion.

"I can't understand," declared the young father, "why any human being could so viciously destroy anything so beautiful."

As the conversation continued the absorbed father failed to notice young Jack who proceeded to break the doll's bath belonging to the host's little daughter, violently struck a mechanical puppy repeatedly and finally knocked over a beautiful table lamp. All this brought no rebuke from the lad's father. He who condemned the crime of others neglected to teach his own child the sacredness of human rights and properties and consideration for others.

MOST MODERN CHILDREN spend more money daily on unnecessary and unhealthy confections than their grandparents were allowed in a month. Teen-agers coax or bully their parents into giving them money for smokes, for drugs, for gasoline, taxis, and liquor.

An American professor of education says that elementary school pupils in the United States now average twenty-two hours a week watching television. Without doubt television watching in moderation and under parental supervision can be both entertaining and educational, but unfortunately in many homes too great a portion of time is being spent in this way. Children also need physical activity, study, and diversified recreation; responsible parents will encourage them to participate in a better division of their time.

MANY PARENTS have an attitude of indulgence toward their children. They consider it cruel or not worth the effort to deny any of their desires. Parents themselves are unwilling to set the example by refusing the pleasures and extravagances that their income will afford. In the Victorian age the average head of a family bought only what he could afford, denying luxuries to wife and children rather than go into debt. It was the exception to know of anyone who saw, coveted, and acquired, regardless of the reckoning day.

Following the first world war in the wild twenties the installment plan developed. It suffered relapse in the depression thirties, but since the last war it has become popular once more. The present-day attitude is to get what one wants and get it now, regardless of whether or not the budget will stretch to meet the payments. Many young couples fail to add the sum total of their installment payments and, as a result, although the family is undernourished and tithing goes unpaid, there is a fine car in the garage, a television set, and a deep freeze.

HOW IS THE CHURCH to combat this evil? Surely the answer is to be found in home training, example, and consecration of parents, if these deplorable attitudes are to be changed. Members of the church must be willing to curb their unnecessary wants, doubtful pleasures, and extravagances if the children are to be builders in the kingdom.

When the Spirit of God enters into the heart of man and is allowed to dwell there it can change his attitudes and purposes completely. He is transformed from a drone to a worker, from a dogmatic radical to a man of broad vision, from a selfish individualist to one whose love radiates to all humanity. A young man, who through heredity and environment had developed the aggravating and inconsiderate habit of always being late, became pastor of a thriving branch. Under the power of God's Spirit he overcame this habit and thereafter arrived at the house of worship well ahead of the hour for service.

A Swedish sister, who regarded her many daily cups of coffee as necessary to her comfort and well-being, because of a spiritual admonition made a covenant never to taste coffee again. The result was renewed health and strength.

A Saint who budgeted time and money and who was keen of intellect and capable in performance learned to lean on the Lord in all-important decisions. She found peace in submission and a new joy in sharing that transformed her former stereotyped life.

THE ATTITUDE of Jesus of Nazareth became manifest very early in his earthly career when he declared his purpose at the age of twelve. He assuredly must have consecrated himself to serious study and communion with God to be able to confound the learned men in the temple. From his purpose to build the kingdom—to establish his church and to save all men—he never deviated. For this he fasted often and for long periods, sacrificed the natural craving of a man for a home and friends, renounced popularity, fame, and power; and although he was the Son of God and joint creator of the universe, he not only consulted his Father in all things but submitted his will to God's, even to the endurance of the shame and cruelty of the cross. Jesus Christ fulfilled his mission because never once during his thirty-three years of living in a man's world with the manifold temptations common to all men did he deviate from his purpose.

Alexander the Great died at the age of thirty-three. He conquered the then known world but was still unsatisfied, deploring the fact that there were no more worlds to conquer. Christ also died at thirty-three, having finished the work that his Father had given him to do, the redemption of mankind. Both men had purposes in life, but how different! Christ's purpose was to save; Alexander's to destroy. Christ offered freedom to mankind; Alexander enslaved his captives. Christ refused an earthly kingdom; Alexander exulted in the plaudits of men.

People talk glibly of conversion as applied to kneelers at the penitent bench. It is really a complete turn-over from worldliness to Christianity. It is a change from self-seeking to one of doing only those things that are pleasing to God. A genuine convert to the gospel will find a new purpose. He will be about his Father's business as was Paul after his conversion on the way to Damascus and as Peter who changed his attitude toward the Gentiles after his vision of Joppa. If any Saints of the latter days be lukewarm, may they decide to turn from the things of the world to a higher purpose and declare as David of old, "I thought on my ways and turned my feet unto thy testimonies."

Remembering

By Maurice L. Draper

I REMEMBER that the church and its purposes were assumed to be the foundation of life in our family. Because of this, numerous adjustments were made to permit the family to share in church life—sometimes at great cost of effort and money to my parents.

I remember that when we were looking for a climate which was suitable for my father's health, we moved from isolation in Gallup, New Mexico, to California. One reason was to save the children from the effects of that spiritual isolation.

I remember that church attendance was so habitual we were conscience-stricken when we didn't go. One Sunday morning when I rebelled my father said, "We go to church unless we are sick. If you don't go, then stay in the house. Don't go anywhere else." I stayed in the house. What a miserable morning!

After my father died, we had a flare of tempers one day just before mealtime. In such an atmosphere prayers of thanksgiving seemed sacrilegious. I remember that Chrystal refused to eat because we hadn't offered the thanksgiving prayer. The rest of us joined her in that feeling, reconciled our differences, offered prayer, and ate a meal which did more than nourish our bodies.

Sometimes we hear people complaining about the inconvenience of caring for children in church services. But it was the practice that every child in our family went to church as soon after birth as he or she could be taken out of the house. And if anyone thinks it's too much trouble to take a family to reunion, let them take note that my widowed mother took five children, aged seventeen years down to eight years, three months after our father's death, to the Southern California Reunion, and hasn't missed a reunion any year since.

I remember the spiritual gifts, the rich fellowship, the training of mind and habits of conduct which all these experiences contributed to our lives.

I remember the gentle firmness of our father, and the faithful devotion of our mother.

In these memories, I can understand why my parents' children and their companions are all active members of the church, also rearing families whose foundations of life are in the church and its purposes.

The Call to Perfection

By Harry Black

WHAT IS PERFECTION?

The Communist sees perfection in the proletariat overcoming the capitalists—those who have not overcoming those who have—a revolutionary process which is supposed to bring equality to all, regardless of bloodshed, deceit, or greed.

The dictator looks at perfection as material power and a subservient following—one strong and mighty trusting in the arm of flesh to crush all opposition and bring riches and power to the solitary few. Blood and massacre are cheap; one soul is counted as nothing; a thousand souls are but dust.

The Christian observes perfection in attaining the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ (Ephesians 4: 13)—a perfection which unifies, strengthens, and cares for all people. Each soul is precious and merits equal liberty and nourishment.

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, editor of Guideposts, made the following observations pertaining to Christ and Marx, respective leaders of Christianity and Communism:

Christ's message: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself, . . . the individual is sacred, . . . truth is all powerful, . . . man is immortal."

Marx's message: "Conquest through hate and violence, . . . the individual is of no account, . . . religion is for fools, . . . man comes from nowhere and death is the end."

ALONG WITH THESE observations the late Dr. Henry C. Link writes in The Way to Security that the story of Marx's life is one of complete and sordid failure with people. He did not get along with the members of his family. He failed in the good schools in which his father supported him. He made no friends among his classmates. He failed with his employers and associates in business. He failed miserably in supporting his wife and family. Two of his three daughters committed suicide along with his son-in-law. Dr. Link then goes on to say that Marx's teachings are a perfect reflection of his failure with people.

In contrast to Marx's doctrine are the teachings of Jesus. Dr. Link adds: "Though the multitudes followed and he fed them, he dealt with people above all as individuals. He cultivated personal friendship and loyalties. He associated with persons high and low, educated and ignorant, rich and poor, Pharisee and Sadducee, landlord and laborer, pious and sinner. For Jesus there were no classes, no proletariat or capitalists; there were only individuals with mortal souls."

Here we have two ideas of perfection, two forces governed by two lives—and what a difference!

TO ACHIEVE ANY DEGREE of excellence the musician must study basic principles and techniques; all laws have to be strictly adhered to if harmony is expected. Rules of timing cannot be disregarded, for the "when and where" of action is important to the unified whole.

To some degree Christian perfection is similar to that of music; certain basic statutes must be obeyed: repentance, faith, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment—each in its own time, each at the right moment.

As with music the individual must practice constantly to achieve indefectability. God's word in present-day revelation strongly emphasizes this:

See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

Applying the musical analogy still further, timing is also necessary for divine perfection. This is best illustrated in a revelation given to Joseph Smith at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1832:

Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet, for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also, the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 21.

Each in its own time, each at the right moment.

A STORY is told of an old man who became interested in a nest of baby eagles and continually watched their growth, hoping to see them in full flight. He saw them flit with the sparrows, swoop with the swallows, and dive with the buzzards. He eagerly anticipated the time when they would answer the call of their creation and soar as eagles.

The day came for the time of their maturity and hopefully he looked toward the mountaintops. His heart sank when he finally observed the eagles flying far below the peaks, still with the buzzards. "They have failed," he whispered sadly. "The food of the carrion birds has satisfied their desires; now they will never know the state of perfection for which they were created."

"Not leaving behind the six principles of the gospel, let us go on unto perfection." These words of the Apostle Paul ring out today like a clarion call. Many people obey certain principles and then, for fear of losing that which they have, cease to strive for greater things. When one reaches for the mountaintops of divinity, he never levels off until he reaches the state of his calling, and with man this is becoming a son of God.

To repent is not enough; to have faith is not enough; to be baptized is not enough; to receive the Holy Ghost is not enough, unless the individual seeks to go on to perfection—a perfection which necessitates obeying all the laws of God's kingdom—paying tithes, being honest with God and with one's neighbor, being found trustworthy and diligent to membership duties and priesthood offices, offering a home for cottage meetings, putting aside a television show that a soul might receive ministry.

WE LIVE in an age of speed and power. Explosives are being boosted to destroy greater areas; automobiles are continually undergoing changes to increase their speed, but man is lagging behind in the process of perfecting his individual self.

It is time to move on to perfection. It is time to listen to the whisper of God which strives to ring interminable changes in the hearts of all who listen. May those who profess Christianity hear the call and, like Kipling's explorer, move out to perfect a new land, even Zion.

New Horizons

Graceland GAZETTE

■ New furniture for Patroness Hall lounge, a gift of Mrs. Aaron Engle of Santa Ana, California, was given in memory of Mrs. C. F. Smith. Mrs. Smith, known to Graceland alums as "Mother" Smith, was the originator of the town mother program for freshman girls on the campus. The lounge at Patroness Hall is being established in recognition of Mother Smith's long-time interest and service to Graceland. Mother Smith now resides at the Saints' Home west of Lamoni and is a charter member of the Patroness Society.

■ On Friday, November 20, the Concert Choir and Orchestra presented their first "Pop Concert." The Food Service Department served refreshments during the program of familiar songs. The concert was a dress affair, and the students and faculty came looking their best.

■ On Wednesday, November 11, Graceland College was host to approximately fifty high school students attending the prospective teachers meeting on the campus. The students were from Leon, Garden Grove, and Lamoni, Iowa. They gathered in the Student Center with the Graceland student body to hear Mr. Lea Hoegh, attorney-general of the state of Iowa, speak to the assembly.

■ The pastoral groups have been meeting on Wednesday evenings for discussions on the topic, "Campus Ethics." On Wednesday, November 18, the various discussion groups talked over the problem, "Co-educational Relations on the Graceland Campus."

■ President Gleazer appointed a committee of faculty members and students to evaluate the current policy of the college in regard to student operation of automobiles. Those on the committee include Dr. Harold Condit, chairman; Roy Benson; Ward Weldon from Warrensburg, Missouri; Marjorie Bradley, San Jose, California; and Bob Anderson, Van Nuys, California. Cars driven by students must be certified as in safe mechanical condition by Iowa state police examination. All drivers are required to have an Iowa state driver's license and demonstrate financial responsibility or carry public liability insurance. Students operating automobiles are not eligible for work assignments or student loans.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Sheppard of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on November 1. They were married November 1, 1903, at Tolar, Texas.

Brother Sheppard, oldest son of T. J. Sheppard, an early missionary for the church, was ordained a teacher in 1904 and an elder in 1907. He has served as pastor at Holdenville, Fairland, and Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Joplin, Missouri. Sister Sheppard has been a member since 1905. Both are still active in church work.

Seven of the Sheppard's nine children are living. They are Mrs. W. A. Peck of Independence; Mrs. James Daugherty of Taylorville, Illinois; Mrs. Jack Benton of Joplin; Sherman Sheppard of Tulsa; David Sheppard of Cherryvale, Kansas; Dr. Glenn Sheppard of Smith Center, Kansas; and Mrs. I. N. Bowman of Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Chief Rickard Leads Parade

AMERICAN INDIAN DAY was celebrated in New York City on September 26 with a parade of Iroquois Indians led by Chief Clinton Rickard of the Tuscarora Reservation at Sandborn, New York.

Chief Rickard is a member in good standing of the Niagara Falls, New York, Branch. A Chicago Tribune Press Service release reporting the American Indian Day parade was recently forwarded to the editors by Elder Stanley W. Johnson.

The Indians came from upper New York State and Canada in their second annual pilgrimage to Manhattan Island to publicize the plight of the American Indians. Following the parade and a private luncheon, they gathered in the sheep meadow of Central Park to powwow.

Dressed in full regalia, including feathered headdress, moccasins, and costumes of deer-skin and moose hide, the group was led by two Indians carrying an American flag. . . .

The Iroquois Confederation is made up of the Mohawks, Cayugas, Oneidas, Senecas, Onondagas, and Tuscaroras, making up the six nations. About fifteen thousand of them are left, and they live in four reservations in the eastern United States and one in Canada.

This account calls to mind the tremendous problem facing the native American in making adjustments to the present mode of living in an industrialized America. As long as the Indian is made to feel that he is different from other present-day Americans, there will be continued conflict. Reorganized Latter Day Saints should be concerned with taking the leadership in continuing the training which has been started to place the Indian in a position to compete with his white brothers in providing his living. Happy, industrious Indians are necessary for a united, prosperous America. P. A. W.

Utah-Western Colorado Youth Retreat

THE FIRST annual fall youth retreat for the young people of Utah and western Colorado was held September 25, 26, and 27. Branches represented were Durango, Delta-Montrose, and Grand Junction of Colorado; Provo, Salt Lake City, and Ogden of Utah; and Malad, Idaho (of the Utah District).

The young people of Delta-Montrose met with those of Grand Junction early Friday morning. We loaded our gear and party of thirty into a truck and three cars. District President Charles Hoschouer brought his car; Fern Hoschouer drove the district auto; Florence Ford brought her car; and I drove the truck.

We took Highway 6-50 to Cisco, Utah, on the southern Utah desert and then turned left on a dirt road for the famed Dewey Suspension Bridge over the Colorado River. This road is far from ideal, and several times we had to gear down to get through and out of dry washes. The Dewey Bridge was all we had been led to believe, with barely enough room for the truck to squeeze through. We turned right on the opposite side of the river and followed the narrow dirt road, part of which is cut through the sheer cliffs along the banks of the muddy Colorado to the bridge at Moab, Utah. We drove practically the entire distance with towering walls on both sides of us and the river placidly flowing below us or beside us, seemingly incapable of eroding such a huge channel and canyon. It continues in the intensity of its etchings to eventually form the Grand Canyon of Arizona. We were constantly amazed at the cliffs and the unique columns and statues dotting the horizon as we would break into narrow valleys stretching off in the sand. At places near the lower end of our river jaunt we found great white sand bars, distinctly out of place in the predominant buff color of the valley walls and water. Many of these were mute testimony of the height of the river in bygone seasons. On one of these sand bars we stopped and ate our sack lunches; a few of us waded along the river bank. It was sort of a game as we rode along the bank to watch the fish; we could see quite clearly large channel catfish, trout, and carp.

Several movie sets are permanently located along this route, and we visited old adobe homes and a huge fort built for protection against Indian attacks. On its enormous logs, hewn with a broad-ax, we could see chipping marks. On closer inspection, we found the adobe to be painted celotex and the fort made from inch lumber. The ax marks were daubs of paint, the rooms were hollow, bare, or nonexistent with black cloth hung back of the windows to give the illusion of depth. The movie, "Son of Cochise," had just been filmed here, we were informed. It followed a long line of preceding western movies.

AT THE MOAB BRIDGE we turned right thirteen miles out of the city and then eight miles out across the sand desert in sagebrush and juniper to the start of the three main roads and trails of Arches National Monument. Here we met the party from Utah with Seventy and Mrs. Russell F. Ralston and their car, the Hilton Williamses and their car, Beth Maitland and her car, and Silas Egan with his panel truck. This brought our total up to fifty-one campers. We drove through Devil's Kitchen to the Fins and started one part of camp hiking to see Pine Tree Arch, Skyline Arch, and others, ending our trip within sight of the beautiful Landscape Arch. This one spans almost a city block with a delicate ribbon of sandstone. In order to wear a little excess exuberance off some of the boys we took an unscheduled hike up through one arch and over the large fin down through the other side of Landscape Arch. When we met under its span we were informed by a camper from Delta that he had found a rattlesnake. Frankly thinking him joking, I passed it off as just that. He found a sympathizer in the group and, unbeknown to me, they left the main party for a few minutes, coming back with a four-button rattler impaled on a pocketknife and telling a story of a large one back in the rocks coiled to strike. Needless to say, we believed their story this time and held a hurried council, deciding we would watch where we were hiking a little better than we had thus far. In the meantime another hiker had walked from the camping ground to see Cove Arch, Double Arch, Turret Arch, and North Window and South Window Arches. The next morning a truck and car load of us drove to the starting place for a hard two-mile hike to Delicate Arch, which adorned a recent Life magazine cover. The time we had didn't allow us to complete the trip, so we viewed it from about a mile away and returned to break camp.

The Friday evening meal was a concoction made from contributions of both districts, but certainly it was filling. Water was at a premium on the desert as it had to be hauled in by truck, and drinking was discouraged as much as possible. Each camper was responsible for his own eating utensils and was allowed only a few squirts of cold water to clean them, with a promise that on the morrow more would be available. Evening campfire was my responsibility. Following our singing and thought for the day, we pulled our caravan into an old-fashioned circle and bedded down on the parking area. Thus with a full moon, weasels, inquisitive chipmunks, and kangaroo rats we spent the night.

WE WERE UP by six and following breakfast and our aborted trip to Delicate Arch we set off for Mesa Verde National Park and the cliff dwellings via Moab, Monticello, and Cortez. There at the park entrance we met seventeen young people from Durango who came in John Welch's truck. This brought our grand total to sixty-four campers, seven cars, and two trucks which ascended the winding road to the Mesa top and the ruins beyond. We spent the afternoon touring the ruins, following the somewhat chronologically excavated ruins of these Pueblo people and seeing the cliff dwellings from the canyon rims. Upon return to camp we had supper, marched to the park campfire area in the little amphitheater, and entertained ourselves and other park visitors with camp songs. Then we listened to a lecture on the religion of the Mesa Verde Indians. Following this we spent a half hour or so in the park museum which had been specially opened for our benefit. We returned to the camping area for our evening campfire led by Brother Ralston. We again bedded down under the stars and the bright moon.

SUNDAY BEGAN in a hurry with almost everyone up by five forty-five. Then all were off to the camp amphitheater, which was reserved for our early morning worship. After breakfast we took a special two-hour tour of ruins at Cliff Palace and Balcony House. Cliff Palace is the largest of the ruins, and Balcony House the most picturesque and unique in its fortifications.

The Utah District young people left for home, and our group took another short tour of the museum, then drove to Durango, Colorado, for a late dinner. We took the famed Million Dollar Highway to complete our circle home. This area has been aptly named the Switzerland of North America. Two of the passes are over 10,000 feet high, and one is 11,018 feet. Most of the road is still dirt and even the paved spots belie the mental imagery conjured by the title "Million Dollar," for while a marvelous improvement over the dirt it is extremely narrow, winding, and dangerous.

We paused to look at Red Mountain, Mt. Abrams, the 225-foot Bear Creek Falls, and then took the short side trip to the Box Canyon of the Gunnison at Ouray, Colorado, where we climbed back into the channel or tunnel created by the river. At the end of the canyon is a freak waterfall running down through a natural pipe in the rock to emerge at the bottom with the roar of a thousand freight trains.

We unloaded people and cargo at Montrose and Delta, and finally parked the truck in Grand Junction at ten thirty after a wonderful three-day trip of over 625 miles of the most scenic area in the world. Our tentative plans call for next year's retreat to be spent in Bryce Canyon and Zion National Park in Utah.

Both at Arches National Monument and Mesa Verde National Park we received generous compliments on the activity, response, and general behavior of our young people, with numerous questions from strangers as to what organization we represented.

Exhibit at Community Folk Festival

Members of the Johnson City, New York, Branch have an unusual and potentially profitable opportunity for spreading the Reorganized Latter Day Saint philosophy. Each year the Shriner's Temple is commandeered for the purpose of furthering better religious and international understanding. The project is conducted on a nonprofit basis and is known as the Community Folk Festival. Any authentic religious or national group can be represented. Only minimum restrictions are imposed. This year, the exhibits were viewed by thousands of people on Saturday and Sunday, October 10 and 11. The large stage was utilized several times each day for folk dancing and for religious choral numbers.

An opportunity such as this has a number of very fine advantages for a Reorganized Latter Day Saint branch. It places the small membership on an equal basis with the largest of the religious denominations. A bit of ingenuity and willing hands will usually result in an excellent exhibit. The intended message can be effective and varied from year to year. To make a display requires the co-ordinated efforts of many persons; with such effort a spirit of unity is sure to result. Consistent and effective presentation in a public showing familiarizes the community with the church and its leaders.

This year the Johnson City Branch very effectively displayed a fundamental belief of the church: Christ in America. On a backdrop below this prominently displayed title was a set of archaeological prints surrounding Sallman's "Head of Christ." Below this was a table draped in a Peruvian fur rug on which were displayed the Three Standard Books and carefully chosen tracts. The backdrop was floodlighted. This display was flanked by those of the Protestant Council of Churches and the Roman Catholic Church.

The Johnson City Branch pastor, Stanley Hayes, has been a member of the committee each year for the last four years. This year he was also master of ceremonies. He says that the idea is catching on in other cities; they, too, are enthusiastic at the chance for such publicity. Perhaps your city would benefit by a Community Folk Festival, and you could be a ringleader in its inception.

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your reports brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your report, we hope you will understand.

Building Fund Grows

SIoux FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA.—A turkey dinner was served at the home of Sister Lillian Murray on October 25, the proceeds to be used to help enlarge the church building fund.

Contributions amounted to thirty-four dollars. Out-of-town guests included Saints from Sioux City, Iowa, and Yankton and Parker, South Dakota.

Several nonmember friends were present.—Reported by SISTER CORA EMERSON

New Officers for Branch

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA.—The annual business meeting was held September 9, with Brother Sylvester Coleman in charge. The following officers were elected: pastor, Elder George I. Hansen; associate pastors, Elders Lawrence Mead and Milton Thorpe; church school director, Joseph Marshall, Jr.; women's director, Minnie Squires; branch recorder, Charlotte Hansen; branch solicitor, Don McCurley; branch treasurer, Chester Davis; branch secretary and historian, Bernice Varns; book steward, Ruth Hansen; Zion's League leader, Thresa O'Daniels; assistant, Milton Thorpe; music director, Bonnie Mickey; assistant, Neva McCurley; pianist, Marjorie Jensen; Sunday school secretary, Grace Marshall; junior department supervisor, Edna Hunt; assistant, Neva McCurley; junior department pianist, Evelyn Marshall, and assistant, Patricia Sprague.

Two young men were ordained during the year. Milton Thorpe was ordained an elder, and Joseph Marshall, Jr., was ordained a priest.

Women's department officers for the coming year are Minnie Squires, president; Bessie Long, vice-president; Alice Jensen, secretary and cradle roll; Minnie Riley, treasurer; Charlotte Hansen, teacher and visiting supervisor; Ruth Hansen, pianist and soliciting supervisor; Sarah Adams, friendly visitor and correspondent; Katie Walls, kitchen supervisor; Thresa O'Daniels, dining room supervisor; Bernice Varns, Minnie Squires, and Bessie Long, compiling yearbooks.

The women's department held twenty-five meetings during the year, at which average attendance was thirteen members. The women made 314 visits to sick persons and shut-ins; eighteen baskets were distributed to sick and needy persons at Christmas; seventy cards were sent, and six bouquets and several potted plants were taken to shut-ins.

The first yearbooks were compiled by Minnie Squires, Hattie Gibbs, and Bessie Long.

The women's project for the year was sanding floors, installing new rostrum fixtures, and providing aisle carpets and stair treads.

A Skylark band has been organized, with nineteen members. It is called the Zibi band, meaning Zion Builders. Neva McCurley is leader, with Hattie Gibbs, Bulah Marshall and Emma Jane Loughery as assistants.

An Oriole circle was organized during the year, with five members. It is called Towasi Circle, which means friendly. Paula Swift and Wanda Thorpe are the leaders.

Sister Mariam Coffman has moved to Magnolia, and Mr. and Mrs. James Loughrey and family have moved to St. Paul, Nebraska.—Reported by BERNICE VARNs

Mortgage Burned

MONTEBELLO, CALIFORNIA.—East Los Angeles Saints spent Sunday, August 9, in a dedication service. The church debt was paid off under the leadership of Pastor Virgil L. Sheppard and the finance committee, composed of Sister Ann Jasper and Brothers Jess Marks and A. G. Johnson. $3,000 has been raised since September.

Stake President Garland Tickemyer offered the invocation at the dedication service. Bishop J. S. Kelley presented the mortgage to Pastor Sheppard, who in turn gave it to Sister Ann Jasper, who had been selected to burn the mortgage. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the speaker.

After the service, the group gathered around tables on the lawn for a buffet style fried chicken dinner.

Four of the women's clubs, under the leadership of Laceyne Van Eaton, sold cards, served dinners, and held bazaars to raise money. The men's club, with Jack Bedford as president, painted the church inside and out. Two carpenters, William Gray and Elder V. L. Lum, added a spiral to the top of the building.

A Wurlitzer electronic organ was purchased by Brother and Sister Boyd Engle to be used this year while the congregation raises money to pay for it. It is well under way to being paid for.

A new congregation has been organized at Whittier, with officers from the local congregation in charge.—Reported by CECIL L. JOHNSON

Business Meeting Held

ELNORA, ONTARIO.—The annual business meeting was held on September 23, and the following officers were elected: presiding elder, Arthur Dunn; secretary, Luette Heselstine; treasurer, G. H. Towers; church school director, Leonard Clark; director of music, Myrtle Rachar; children's supervisor, Evelyn Couling; women's leader, Martha Mortimer; auditors, Leonard Clark and James Tarzwell; and publicity agent and librarian, Marjorie Towers.—Reported by MARJORIE TOWERS

Share Church with Neighbors

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—The annual conference of the Southwest Iowa District was held in Council Bluffs on Sunday, September 13, with Apostle R. E. Davey as guest speaker. Ten Council Bluffs men were approved for ordination to the priesthood. They were C. R. Harding, elder; Donald J. Graybill, priest; and the following eight brethren to the office of deacon: Ray Krough, Charles Rogers, Ivan Olsen, Don Hendrix, Brooks Richie, Ray Hoss, Loren Spence, and Leonard Ranney. A special ordination service was held on Sunday night, September 20, when these men were ordained.

Since moving into the new church on January 18, the branch has enjoyed one of its best years in history. On October 28, ten more people were baptized, making a total of sixty-eight baptisms this calendar year, which is the largest number of baptisms for one year for a long time.

The new church has attracted many people to attend services. The old building, in which the congregation had worshiped for nearly eighty-four years, was sold recently to a Council Bluffs businessman. At present it has not been put to use.

The group is putting forth an effort to share the new church with as many as possible. Printed invitations including a copy of the Epitome of Faith were distributed to every home within a radius of several blocks of the church, inviting people to attend services and make the new building their church home. Ten road signs were erected on highways leading into the city, giving the name and location of the church. The ladies of the congregation are constantly called upon to serve dinners and banquets for outside organizations in the spacious fellowship hall.

During October and November effort was concentrated upon raising the branch quota for the Auditorium fund, or surpassing it.

On Graceland College day the guest speaker was Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College. A special offering was taken for Graceland. On Sunday, October 18, President and Mrs. F. Henry Edwards were guests, and Brother Edwards brought an inspiring message at the eleven o'clock service.

The annual business meeting was held September 16. The following officers were elected to serve: pastor, V. D. Ruch; secretary and recorder, Ada S. Putnam; treasurer, Charles Rogers; church school director, A. E. Dempsey, Jr.; young people's supervisors, James and Merl Dempsey; women's supervisor, Celia Stageman; supervisor of music, C. Francis Putnam; supervisor of dramatics, Lenna Schropp; branch historian and librarian, Ardis Hansen; supervisor of flower arrangements, Lela Ranney; auditor, J. J. Hartnett; finance board, V. D. Ruch, Charles L. Thomas, Lee E. Landon, L. M. Spence, C. R. Harding, and Charles Rogers; supervisor of missionary work, O. A. Currie; book steward, Emma Spanswick; trustees, C. F. Putnam, L. M. Spence, and C. R. Harding; bishop's agent, L. M. Spence; chief usher, Ivan Olsen; chief hostess, Zella Ruch; members of prayer circle, Sadye Benson, Lucinda E. Beaty, Elizabeth Lapworth, Grace Kellogg, Lucille Landon, Ada S. Putnam, Zella Ruch, Emma Spanswick, Vesta Stageman, and Margaret Harrington.

The thirteen groups of the women's department have been busy with their election of officers and setting up their program for the year. The church school director and his associates have reorganized some of the departments. The five choirs in the music department are functioning well.

The branch was represented in the sixteen-team church softball league last summer and finished in the first division. The team just missed winning the pennant. The banquet for all of the league players was held at the Council Bluffs church.—Reported by V. D. RUCH

Skylarks and Orioles Have Achievement Day

NORTHWESTERN IOWA DISTRICT.—The district conference convened October 11, using the theme "Make Disciples for Christ." District officers presided over the opening session at nine fifteen, which was a prayer and testimony service. Every seat was occupied at this service. Admonition and counsel came to the Saints through Evangelist Elvin Baughman and District President Sylvester Coleman.

Elder Charles Putnam was the eleven o'clock speaker, his theme being "What Is the Purpose of This Church?"

At the noon hour a group of Saints enjoyed a basket dinner in the lower auditorium.

The Skylark and Oriole achievement day program was held in the afternoon, at which time Edna Easter, director of girls' work of the General Church, was present. She paid a high tribute to the girls in their work. Denison, Little Sioux, Logan, Magnolia, Missouri Valley, Moorhead, Pisgah, and Sioux City have a total enrollment of seventy-three Skylarks. Little Sioux, Logan, Missouri Valley, Moorhead, and Pisgah have thirty-two Oriole circles. Little Sioux and Missouri Valley have nine of their Orioles working on the Light of Life award.

Last year Northwestern Iowa District had fifty girls organized; this year there are 105. Sister Gladys Honz of Logan is district director of the work. One hundred girls and leaders were present for the program.

At three o'clock the conference conducted a business session, presided over by the district president. Recommendations of two men to the priesthood were presented for ratification. They were Alfred L. Ballantyne of Cherokee to the office of elder, and Blair Baughman of Dow City to the office of priest.

The following district officers were elected: Sylvester Coleman, district president; W. R. Adams, bishop and treasurer; Ruby Adams, secretary; Raymond Butterworth, religious education director; Herbert Floyd, young people's director; Rhea Young, director of women; Catherine Baughman, music director; Donna June Weiss, church historian. District President Coleman selected Guy R. Johnson as one counselor, deferring selection of the other until a later date. E. L. Edwards and Cecil Burnett were selected as counselors to Bishop Adams.

Twenty-three delegates were selected to represent the district at the next General Conference.—Reported by RUBY ADAMS

Annual Stake Conference

SHERMAN OAKS, CALIFORNIA.—Elder Jack D. Winegar was elected pastor at the annual stake conference held recently. Clarence E. Smith and J. C. Ruchaber will serve as his counselors.

The following officers were sustained or elected at the recent branch business meeting: J. Clay Bender, religious education, book steward, and visiting supervisor; Mrs. David Harris, women's leader; Mrs. Floyd Kuhn, music supervisor; Mrs. Donovan R. Pitts, publicity agent; Mrs. John Woodring, recorder-secretary and historian; Mr. and Mrs. Jess Cass, custodians; Robert Shedd, auditor; J. C. Ruchaber, missionary supervisor; Martin Ahlstrom, bishop's agent; and Hilmer Severlin, Martin Ahlstrom, and Jack Davis, building committee. Reported by MRS. DONOVAN R. PITTS

New Church Dedicated

DAYTON, OHIO.—The Southern Ohio District conference was held in connection with the formal opening of the new church in Dayton October 17-18. The conference opened with a business meeting Saturday afternoon. The following district officers were elected: district president, Calvin French; secretary, Lois Rockwell; treasurer, Theo Boeckman; church school director, Ralph Brown; women's leader, Leora Brown; young people's leader, Joseph Williams, Jr.; music director, LaVon French; auditor, Marvin Reed; historian, Myrtle Weese; and bishop's agent, Franklin Rieske.

Apostle D. T. Williams was guest speaker in the evening.

Sunday services were opened with a prayer and testimony meeting, followed by an ordination service in which Floyd T. Rockwell was ordained to the office of evangelist by President W. Wallace Smith and Apostle D. T. Williams. President W. Wallace Smith was guest speaker at the eleven o'clock service.

At two o'clock, Pastor Theo Boeckman was in charge of the formal opening service of the new church building. Elder Rieske, bishop's agent, told of the efforts of the branch toward securing a permanent church home, and Robert Frost gave a summary of the work of the building committee. Apostle Williams offered a special prayer and made remarks concerning the work of the branch. President W. Wallace Smith gave the address that formally opened the new church home. The service closed with the anthem, "Lead On, O King Eternal," under the direction of Priscilla Boeckman.

Music for the special services was under the direction of Lois Rockwell, and special numbers were given by Neil Nixon and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Coven, assisted by the district choir.

Following the special services, Missionary William Guthrie continued his series, resulting in two baptisms.—Reported by LOIS ROCKWELL

Combined Retreat Held

OAK HARBOR, OHIO.—The Northwestern Ohio and Northern Indiana Districts united for a week-end retreat at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 10-11. There were 108 young people registered, besides a staff of workers.

Norman Nichols had charge of registering and housing assignments, and David Willmorth of Toledo was in charge of campfire singing.

This retreat was a follow-up of the combined youth camp this summer. Most of Saturday was devoted to sports and games, so that the young people could meet new friends.

Clair Weldon was not able to be present to assist with Sunday services or to hold the Book of Mormon class. Dale Wismer and Eddie Robertson substituted in his place, carrying out the theme, "Serve God Today."—Reported by EDDIE ROBERTSON

Junior League Camp

MARLETTE, MICHIGAN.—The junior Zion's League held a camp this year at the Cash reunion. Tents were set up for the campers. Meals were all eaten outside.

The Leaguers made figurines during their work period. They made nativity sets and Indian campfire sets.

Afternoons were spent in playing softball or volleyball or working on the figurines. One afternoon the group took a truck ride to the beach across from the Blue Water Reunion. Evenings were spent in singing songs, roasting wieners and enjoying the campfires.

Parents and friends visited the camp. Among the guests were Apostle and Sister Mesley, District President and Sister Blackstock, Elder and Sister Muira, and Elder and Sister Hanton and their two sons.

Camp helpers included Merrill Foster, John Beltz, Curt Lambert, Floyd Lambert, Carl Volz, Raymond Lambert, and Sister Almira Smith.—Reported by ESTHER LAMBERT

Elections Held

CASTLEFORD, IDAHO.—The annual business meeting was held November 1, with pastor Lysle Gilmore in charge, assisted by Elder Charles Vreeland of Hagerman.

Officers elected were Fred Rock, church school director; Joan Nipper, secretary; Clarice Webb, women's leader; Lorene Easterday, Zion's League director; Norma Rock, junior supervisor; Bob Cooke, mission clerk; Harmon Easterday, treasurer; Wayne Easterday, auditor; LaVaun Cooke, music director; Vera Easterday, publicity agent; and Ivan Nipper, Fred Koch, and LaVern Easterday, building committee.

The women's department meets twice a month. They have raised $150 for the building fund during the past year.

At the special meeting held November 5, the following officers were installed: Clarice Webb, president; Mary Parks, vice-president; Opal Easterday, secretary; Grace Zagata, corresponding secretary; Juanita Nipper, teacher.

On Sunday, November 8, Laura Gelene Cooke was blessed by Elder Lysle Gilmore. Laura is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Cooke.

Castleford group meets in the Grange hall, but plans are being made for a church building.

Visiting ministers have included Apostle Hanson, G. Wayne Smith, and Luther Troyer.—Reported by VERA EASTERDAY

Apostle Mesley Visits

HOUGHTON LAKE, MICHIGAN.—The Central Michigan District conference was held in the new church building at Houghton Lake October 11. About three hundred attended at both the morning prayer service and the eleven o'clock preaching service. District President John W. Blackstock was in charge and was the morning speaker.

Sixty-eight children attended junior church. Elder Elroy Hanton was the speaker. Elder and Mrs. Robert Ball had charge of the worship service for junior church.

Officers elected were as follows: John W. Blackstock, district president; Alfred Cambridge, treasurer; Robert Ball, secretary; Herbert Rees, Leona Blackstock, Fern Asch, and Lenora Gussman, religious education council; Jay Doty, music director; Leona Blackstock, district women's leader; Robert Ball, Leo Higgins and Harold Keeley, youth council. The district president chose Elders Jay Doty and Burt Benjamin as counselors.

Apostle Mesley was in the district on Monday and Tuesday, October 12-13, and spoke to the priesthood and their wives at the Tawas City and Beaverton churches.—Reported by ROBERT BALL

Deaths

GLICK.—Zora Alta, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lowe, was born June 6, 1884, near El Dorado Springs, Missouri, and died October 25, 1953, at the home of her sister, Mildred Edsall, in Spava, Illinois. She was married on March 3, 1918 to Dennis Sylvester Glick, who preceded her in death on October 16, 1923. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood and served as secretary for Rich Hill District many years.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. M. E. Edsall of Space, Illinois. Funeral services were held at Nafus Chapel in El Dorado Springs, Elders John Noyes and Hollis Andes officiating. Burial was in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery.

KERSEY.—Amos O., was born June 21, 1881, in Kewanna, Indiana, and died July 14, 1953, at his home in Hibbard, Indiana, where he had resided the past forty-five years. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in November, 1930, and was ordained a deacon in January, 1934. For many years he served as branch treasurer and solicitor.

He is survived by his wife, Margaret; four sons: Noah of Hibbard; Foshen of Culver, Indiana; Dale of Plymouth, Indiana; and Clair of Burr Oak, Indiana; two daughters: Mrs. Earl Myers of South Bend, Indiana, and Mrs. Louis Roberts of Mishawaka, Indiana; a brother, Ira Kersey of Winamac, Indiana; and six grandchildren. The funeral service was held at the Reorganized Church in Hibbard, Elders Forest Myers and Glenn Cease officiating. Burial was at the Eaton IOOF Cemetery in Kewanna.

BOTHWELL.—Lola, was born April 21, 1874, at Holden, Missouri, and died April 1, 1953, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bonita Pearson. She had been a resident of Pittsburg, Kansas, for fifty years. On November 19, 1902, she was married to F. K. Bothwell, who preceded her in death in 1944. She was an active member of the Reorganized Church.

In addition to her daughter she leaves three brothers: Charles A. and Will V. Walker of Independence, Missouri, and Harold M. Walker of Knoxville, Tennessee; two sisters: Mrs. Edna Colby and Miss Emma S. Walker of Independence; and one grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Seventy James C. Daugherty and Pastor T. W. Bath at the Smith Chapel.

FELS.—Fred Newton, was born September 8, 1873, in Missouri, and died October 15, 1953, at Tri-State Memorial Hospital in Clarkston, Washington. With his parents he moved to Idaho at the age of ten, living in this area until his marriage on May 18, 1895, to Sophronia Butler, who survives him. They homesteaded at Rosetta and continued to farm there for many years. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since February 28, 1917.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Lillian Boyd of Portland, Oregon; two sons: Fay of Alberta, Canada, and Harold of Port Orchard, Washington; thirteen grandchildren; and seven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Merchant's Chapel in Clarkston, Elder Lloyd Whiting officiating. Interment was in Vineland Cemetery, Clarkston.

REED.—Grester D., son of Ralph and Clara Stevning Reed, was born April 24, 1904, at Petersburg, Indiana, and died November 4, 1953, at Wabash General Hospital, Wabash, Indiana. He was superintendent of the Allendale Oil Company and had been a member of the Reorganized Church since last June.

He is survived by his wife, the former Pauline Shoaff; his father; a half brother, Ralph Reed, Jr.; and three half sisters: Mrs. Chester Yarbrough, Mrs. Doris Bauer, and Mrs. Raymond Bauer, all of Chicago, Illinois. Funeral services were held at Cunningham's Chapel in Mt. Carmel, Illinois, Elders Chester Metcalf and Phillip Miller officiating. Burial was in Walnut Hill Cemetery, Petersburg, Indiana.

JONES.—John Thomas, was born February 3, 1885, at Belleville, Illinois, and died October 11, 1953, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was married in 1913 to Mae C. Davies, who survives him. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in his youth and was ordained to the office of priest. In 1922 he and his family moved to Independence, Missouri, where he was active in the Enoch Hill congregation.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Myrtle H. of the home; two sons: Everett E. and Norman R. of Independence; three sisters: Jeannette and Alice Jones of Belleville, and Irene Hambleton of Roxana, Illinois; and three grandchildren. The funeral was held at Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Almer Sheehy and Howard Martin officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

NELSON.—Esther C., was born November 25, 1882, in Nebraska City, Nebraska, and died September 26, 1953, at her home in Wichita, Kansas, where she had resided for forty years. She had been an active member of the Reorganized Church since 1894.

She is survived by her husband, Ed C. Nelson, to whom she was married in 1902; a son, Paul E. of Kansas City, Missouri; a brother, Lloyd Armstrong of Baldwin, Kansas; and a sister, Bertha Warnick of Kansas City, Missouri. Funeral services were held in Wichita, Elder Ronald E. Manuel officiating.

WHEELER.—Mary Emma, daughter of George R. and Lillie Wheeler, was born June 28, 1911, at Scammon, Kansas, and died November 6, 1953, at Rock Creek School in Independence, Missouri. She was graduated from the Bexley, Ohio, High School, after which she attended Capital University and Ohio State University at Columbus, the University of Kansas City, and Central Missouri State Teachers College, completing work for two degrees. Her first teaching position was in Marion Township near Columbus. She also taught at Eureka School in Jackson County, Missouri, and then at Rock Creek where she was a special education instructor. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1919 and was an active worker in the church school. She also sang in the Stone Church Choir and the Independence "Messiah" Choir.

She is survived by her mother; four sisters: Mrs. Ruth Perkins, Mrs. Georgia Warnock, and Mrs. Alice West, all of Independence, and Miss Claramay Wheeler of the home; and a half brother, A. J. Cooper of Houston, Texas. Funeral services were conducted at Stone Church, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Charles V. Graham officiating. Interment was in the cemetery at Belton, Missouri.

THE CITY

The city is all things to all men. To the timid it is frightening, to the bold it is harmless. For sinners it is a place where evil pleasures may be bought and sold. For others it is a place of culture, providing opportunities in the arts—music, painting, sculpture, architecture; it has education, schools, and libraries. For some it is a place of commerce, bringing together merchandise from all the world, with buyers and sellers meeting. For some it holds ugliness and dirt, for others beauty and happiness. The city is one thing for the poor, another for the rich. For the worker it is toil, for the wealthy it is leisure.

All roads lead to the city, and all roads lead away. Traffic is two ways all the time. Processions of people, like rivers, flow past each other. The young come with shining eyes and golden dreams, with strong but empty hands, and hope. The old and tired go away empty, often to the country from which they came, escaping from it with relief to the quiet of the land, the refuge of the hills, the peace of the woods. Some who fail are trapped; they have nowhere else to go and remain behind, awaiting their end in its slums.

The city is all things to all men, and in some way it holds for each one what he has in mind. Let a man be warned, for it is what he has in the currency of his spirit that determines what the city will hold for him.

SPIRITUAL KIN

Friendship means related in spirit. That in itself is a tie. Mary and Martha of the Palestine hills were sisters though they were scarcely kindred. Their ties, however, were bonded of the flesh. But the busy exacting Martha whose pride made hers the first washing on the line, and Mary, who saw beyond the cattle upon the thousand hills to the Messiah who created them, were not kinfolk of the spirit.

SPIRITUAL WIRE

Earthly telephone lines may be made of copper or steel, but the lines of the spirit are made of desire and sincerity.

HAPPINESS RATING

Research reveals that couples who have been regular in their church attendance have higher happiness ratings than those who attend church occasionally or never. It is not church membership, but church participation that makes the difference.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Wayne Emerson Simmons

WAYNE was born into an active church family at Far West in 1915. His father was pastor of the Far West Branch at the time. He spent his babyhood being transferred to his father's arms while his mother played the piano, and back to hers while his father preached. He was baptized at eight, five days after his birthday, in February; he couldn't wait until Children's Day. At seventeen he was ordained a priest. He was graduated from Cameron High School in 1932, took two years of junior college at Cameron; and then spent twenty-two months in a CCC camp as Educational Assistant, teaching illiterates. He took summer school courses at Maryville (Missouri) State Teachers College and at William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri, after which he taught rural school for a while. In October, 1941, he laid teaching aside briefly to take a job with Standard Oil of New Jersey in Aruba, Netherlands West Indies. He was married to Verneil Newcom in 1938. She with their son, Neil, traveled via an old freighter through submarine dangers to Trinidad and then to Aruba by plane to join him. Three days after their arrival, the island was attacked by subs. The Simmons family dug in for the duration of the war and emerged to add a couple more years to Wayne's education at Kansas City University, 1945-1947. He was graduated cum laude and became principal of Lincoln School in San Jose, Costa Rica.

President Israel Smith sent a telegram to New Orleans where they were awaiting plane flight to San Jose to inform Wayne that he should be ordained an elder before departure. They drove to Mobile, Alabama, to meet Apostle Draper and Joseph Breshears, who performed the ordination. Excitement again followed the Simmons, for a week after arrival in San Jose a national revolution broke out. Since they were not the target of the warfare they settled down to an enjoyable stay.

In 1949 Wayne was offered a post as director of a cultural institute at Caracas, Venezuela, part of the State Department's Information Library service. In late 1950 they came back to the United States for Wayne to accept a General Conference appointment which read, "Mexico and Spanish-speaking People." In 1952 he was ordained a seventy.

Gareth, now ten, was born in Aruba and the youngest, Dana, 3, in Cameron, Missouri. Neil, 13, and Gareth both attended school in Venezuela.

Wayne was thirty when he started to learn Spanish, which should give heart to others of like ambition. He took eighteen hours of Spanish at Kansas City University. He preaches in Spanish on alternate Sunday evenings at Rio Grande Valley Branch, Alamo, Texas, and holds series of missionary meetings in Spanish.

His special interest is recruiting leaders, either Anglo or Mexican, to build a program for entry into Mexico. His hobbies are photography, tennis, and piano tuning. The family ambition is to enter Mexico to live and to minister. This awaits Mexican-born priesthood members who can go along to baptize and confirm, as required by a national law of Mexico.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

CHURCH DEDICATION IN TEXAS

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle D. Blair Jensen have returned from their field trip in Oklahoma and Texas. After the close of the Oklahoma City institute, they spent the week of November 9-13 touring the Western Oklahoma and Texas Panhandle District under the guidance of District President Raymon Carson. They visited Olton, Texas; Artesia and Clovis, New Mexico; and Phillips-Borger, Texas. The notable gathering of the week was the dedication of the Olton church on November 9. November 14-15 were spent in district conference at Davidson, Oklahoma. This district is growing soundly and quickly under the direction of Brother Carson.

ATTEND DISTRICT CONFERENCES

President W. Wallace Smith and Apostle Percy Farrow attended the Alabama District conference November 14-15, at which Elder Marvin Salter was re-elected district president. Apostle Farrow also visited missions at Ocean Springs, New Orleans, and Baton Rouge, and reports good progress in each. On November 22 Brother Farrow was associated with Seventy James Renfroe at the Arkansas-Louisiana District conference, where Brother Renfroe was elected district president.

ATTEND DEDICATION OF NEW CHURCH

President F. Henry Edwards was associated with Bishop Henry L. Livingston, Stake President Harry J. Simons, and Stake Bishop W. C. Becker in the dedication of the new church building at Harrisonville, Missouri, on November 22.

ATTEND DISTRICT CONFERENCE IN IDAHO

President W. Wallace Smith and Apostle Paul M. Hanson have returned from Idaho District conference, where they were associated with President of Seventy Russell Ralston, Seventy Luther S. Troyer, and Elder G. Wayne Smith in joint youth camp and reunion committee meetings.

BISHOP DeLAPP IN TEXAS

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp spoke at the Alamo Branch in the Rio Grande Valley on Sunday, November 15. He also looked over some prospective building sites with Pastor Wayne Jackel, and visited his son, George, who is an air cadet at Harlingen Field, Texas.

RETURNS FROM GREAT LAKES MISSION

Apostle C. George Mesley has returned from eight weeks in the Great Lakes Mission. He was accompanied two weeks by President F. Henry Edwards, who reviewed a series of surveys among the districts of the mission. Apostle Mesley spent a week at Detroit International Stake, sharing in the clinic in evangelism.

COUNCIL OF TWELVE MEETS

Sessions of the Council of Twelve began November 24, under the direction of President Paul M. Hanson. All members are present with the exception of Apostle Maurice L. Draper, who is in Australia.

THANKSGIVING SERVICE REQUESTED

A Thanksgiving service which was requested by the young people of Stone Church for the "Quest for Christ" series was held at Stone Church on Sunday evening, November 22. Apostle Reed Holmes was the speaker. The pastor, Glaude Smith, and his counselors were assisted by Ted Scott, young people's leader, Dorrance Carlile, junior League leader, and Robert W. Baker, senior League leader. Members of the Cantanina Choir sang and participated in the service.

The Works of the Enemy

"But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. . . . He said unto them, An enemy hath done this."—Matthew 13: 26, 28.

WHEN MISFORTUNE, suffering and death come to good and righteous people in spite of their prayers and in spite of the prayers of other good and faithful people, church members wonder, "Where was God when this happened? If he answers prayers, why didn't he prevent it?"

There are many answers for these questions, but none very satisfactory. The facts of life seem to be at variance with the teachings of Scripture and the principles of faith.

It seems, however, that Jesus prepared an answer for all such questions in the parable of the sower. The husbandman tilled the soil and planted his field. Then, while he slept his enemy came and sowed tares, the seeds of poisonous plants. When harvest came the tares were there growing with the good wheat. They must be allowed to grow and be separated later in the process of harvesting.

Jesus gave us a key to the understanding of the presence of evil: an enemy has been at work.

A MEMBER of the congregation, a woman who has lived righteously and done good all her life, goes to the doctor and learns that she is to die in a little while of cancer. Medicine can give her comfort but cannot save her life. Church people pray for her, but that, too, seems in vain, and though she has many blessings nothing stays the progress of the dread disease.

What is to be thought of a situation like this? Is God powerless to save his children from such things? Where is the justice in it?

First, as to the cause. An enemy—in this case, cancer—has done this. It has invaded the body of the woman, in what way we do not know, but with what perilous effects our doctors can inform us.

We are not reconciled to the fact that the good and the innocent must die in torment. Yet God's Son died unfairly, in a torment he did not deserve. If it could happen to him, it could happen to any of us. The enemy takes no thought of sorrow or suffering.

This enemy cannot be conquered until men advance the knowledge of the disease farther than it is now and perfect new techniques for detecting it earlier and controlling it more effectively. Many may perish until that knowledge comes. We think that someday this enemy will be defeated as other disease enemies have been vanquished. But let us remember that the cancer is the work of an enemy of man.

ANOTHER CASE: a man has worked hard all his life, has saved his money and invested it wisely. In his later years, business failures wipe out his investments. Then worry sets in, his health fails, he loses his job, and things are very bad for him.

Why does this happen to him? Why doesn't God protect him from it? He and his friends ask these questions many times, but in vain, for no answer seems to come to such direct questions. However, there is an answer, and it is found in the parable.

"An enemy hath done this." The enemy in this case is the risk that exists in all economic operations today. Someday, righteous social organization and insurance will distribute responsibility for the situation, and many shoulders will share lightly the burden that would rest so heavily on one. This is an enemy to human security and welfare.

A GOOD YOUNG MAN is taken into the armed forces to fight. He has nothing to say about his going. He does not believe in war, except for defensive purposes. Unfortunately, there is an enemy that believes in war for conquest, and does not care how many families suffer sorrow, and how many young men die in their prime to achieve his purposes. This young man prays for protection, and his people pray with him. Yet he is wounded, perhaps killed, and again people ask about God, as if he did it.

The first truth to be understood is that God did not do it. "An enemy hath done this." The enemy is war. Many efforts have been made to curb and control this enemy of human life and happiness. Someday, we trust, war will be controlled and eliminated as an instrument of diplomacy in the conduct of business between nations. Until that time comes, it is a dangerous enemy, and many victims will fall before it.

WE CANNOT understand the suffering, the tragedy, the losses, the uncertainties and difficulties of human life unless we recognize the existence of enemies. There are many sinister ones. We must be aware at all times of the dangers they create, and we must seek ways of overcoming them.

Jesus did not try to deceive his disciples with any false theory of a benevolent world, or of mercy and gentleness in life. He wasn't soft in his attitude. He was frankly realistic. He warned his disciples against an enemy, and indicated the Christian attitude and responsibility toward all enemies.

The way of overcoming each enemy is different. Someday, somehow, ways will be found and victory achieved. In the end Christ will "put all enemies under his feet." Death and hell will be conquered. The enemy will be eliminated.

The Auditorium - a Place of Fulfillment

A great copper dome above a mass of limestone, concrete, brick—striking in appearance, arousing wonder in strangers—yet an unfinished structure. Is that all? To some, yes. And to some, Church Headquarters. But to others, more—a fulfillment. In their minds run promises such as this:

And many people shall . . . say, Come ye, and let us go up to . . . the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.—Isaiah 2: 3.

We await in part the fulfillment of this prophecy, but also in part we watch its fulfillment being worked out beneath this copper dome.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2.

The law which goes out from Zion is received, interpreted, and administered by divine aid at the headquarters of the church which is the home of the presiding quorums of the church and, in particular, of the President of the high priesthood, Israel A. Smith, and his counselors, F. Henry Edwards and W. Wallace Smith, appointed by revelation and acknowledged by the voice of the church. It is their mission "to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of the church and kingdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5a).

Here on the third level of the northeast corner of the Auditorium members of the First Presidency bear the burden of the care of the church in close touch with other quorums and departments, for a major aspect of their work is one of co-ordination that the responsibility for kingdom growth shall be shared by quorums, departments, and ministry in harmony with their particular callings.

It is here in the newly prepared Council Chamber that the Presidency meets in Joint Council with the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric to determine church policies. And here the Presidency sits in consultation with the Standing High Council, which is the highest judiciary body of the church and also an advisory council in matters of importance.

Members of the Presidency serve as editors in chief of church publications; they are concerned with the spiritual aspects of each church institution—Graceland College, the Sanitarium, and the Publishing House, and with the planning of General Conferences, priesthood education, and the instruction of leaders and of young people in special institutes. And to this office regularly come reports from stakes, districts, and branches on progress made and needs yet to be met.

In the many details of office work the Presidency is assisted by General Church Secretary Charles D. Neff, and a staff of four.

One of the solemn experiences of this church comes as the people in Conference assembled face a need for

Other articles like this one will appear in subsequent issues of the Herald. They are designed to better acquaint the members and friends of the church with the important function of the Auditorium, as well as the departments housed therein, with a view toward more widespread support of the Auditorium completion campaign.

Sister Gladys Gould, secretary in the office of the First Presidency, has prepared this series under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. She very willingly lends her experience and talent to this cause. Accordingly, the initials "G.G." will appear frequently to indicate authorship of articles in the series.

A Day for Boldness

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

A sermon preached August 30, 1953, at the Campus, Independence, Missouri

TONIGHT WE HAVE COME together as a mighty army of believers to worship Jesus Christ. Perhaps there are some who have come out of curiosity, some to see a congregation of this size, some to hear the preacher; but as we examine our deepest motivations, we have come to worship Him in the company of our fellows.

Our forefathers in this church were led to this place through similar impulses. Perhaps our coming tonight was somewhat easier than a perilous journey in January, 1831. However, Parley P. Pratt thought so little of the discomforts that he wrote only one paragraph about that portion of the trip from St. Louis to Independence.

In the beginning of 1831 we renewed our journey; and passing through St. Louis and St. Charles, we traveled on foot for three hundred miles through vast prairies and through trackless wilds of snow—no beaten road; houses few and far between; and the bleak north-west wind blowing in our faces with a keenness which would almost take the skin off the face. We traveled for whole days, from morning till night, without a house or fire, wading in snow to the knees at every step, and the cold so intense that the snow did not melt on the south side of the houses, even in the midday sun, for nearly six weeks. We carried on our backs our changes of clothing, several books, and corn bread, and pork. We often ate our frozen bread and pork by the way, when the bread would be so frozen that we could not bite or penetrate any part of it but the outside crust. After much fatigue and some suffering we all arrived in Independence; in the county of Jackson, on the extreme western frontiers of Missouri, and of the United States.

Here is another descriptive paragraph. The locale is at Far West, only a hundred miles or so from here. The year is 1838. Mrs. Amanda Smith, whose husband and ten-year-old son have just been killed by a mob tells the story. She has another boy, seven, who was badly wounded.

It was sunset, nothing but horror and distress, the dogs filled with rage, howling over their dead masters; the cattle caught the scent of blood and bellowed; a dozen helpless widows, thirty or forty fatherless children screaming and groaning for the loss of husbands and fathers; the groans of the wounded and dying.

These stories of hardship, bloodshed, suffering, and sacrifice can be multiplied by the thousands as we look back over the course of time at those people who have taken the name of Christ upon them—who have been his disciples and witnesses.

Stephen was stoned to death. Jesus was crucified after being subject to torture and ridicule and perhaps the cruelest disappointment of all in having followers desert him. Peter was crucified. Philip died a martyr. Thomas was run through with a lance. Apostle Matthew died a martyr in Ethiopia. Andrew was crucified. Paul was beaten many times, stoned, hunted, robbed, imprisoned, and beheaded, finally, by the soldiers of Nero outside of Rome.

The Price of Overturning Tradition

This is not a pleasant story. Surely our thoughts should be less morbid and depressing. But the story, though unpleasant, is true. Jesus made no attempt to deceive his followers. He spoke of the price that would be paid by those who followed him:

If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also.—John 15: 18-20.

Yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.—John 16: 2.

I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves.—Matthew 10: 14.

Jesus was explaining to his followers that the way of the disciplined, purposive life, dedication to those values not commonly accepted, the overturning of that which was wrong in the present order would meet with stubborn and sometimes violent resistance. The hard crust of habit and custom and convention, that which is, does not yield easily to change, to that which is to be, and especially to that which ought to be. There are many examples of this as we trace back through the pages of history.

The man who first opened an umbrella in Philadelphia was arrested. An iron plowshare poisoned the earth and insulted God. The man who first drove a sawmill by water power in England was mobbed; and the inventors of stoves, railroads, and the telegraph were called crazy. George III said the lightning rod was impious. Jenner who invented vaccination was scored by the medical profession; and Harvey for discovering and demonstrating the circulation of blood was called crack-brained and the doctrine branded as newfangled and dangerous.

I hesitate to say this about Boston, having just returned from there, but up to 1845 a Boston municipal ordinance made bathtubs unlawful except on medical advice; and the doctors themselves said that bathing was dangerous to health. The introduction of anesthesia in childbirth prompted a clergyman to speak of chloroform as a decoy of Satan, apparently offering itself to bless woman. But he prophesied, "In the end it will harden society and rob God of the deep, earnest cries which arise in time of trouble for help." "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," God had said. Painless childbirth was contrary to religion and express command of the Scriptures.

If all these inventions, and thousands more, were resisted, then we can be sure of the tremendous pressures that have opposed and will continue to fight such a dangerous concept as the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God gives life a completely different orientation.

The Thrill of Transcending Danger

There are here no simple changes in the façade of society but rather the construction of a new order built upon piers and a foundation sunk deep in the creative association of man and God. So it is no surprise that after Pilate said to the chief priests and people, "I find no fault in this man," that they brought the most serious charge of all to the Roman governor, "He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee, to this place" (Luke 23: 5).

Those who hear his call, seek to follow him, preach the cause of Zion, and attempt to bring people to the knowledge of the truth can expect to experience the resisting, punishing, stubborn forces of the status quo. New ideas are seldom welcomed, except by the one giving them birth. Pioneers, frontiersmen, prophets, saints, and inventors have had a life expectancy somewhat less than average. There is security in mediocrity; there is safety in anonymity; there is comfort in commonness.

But the great souls of this world, those who have contributed whatever good there is, have been interested in neither security, safety, or comfort. They have heard the call—they have felt the urge to seek, explore, inquire, build, heal, create, and go beyond that which has been. They have lived on the frontiers, probed the earth for its secrets, and pushed out the boundaries of the universe, and they have known the illuminating power of the God who invites men to the quest. In these pursuits they have paid whatever price has been necessary for the experience. It is true that they were many times misunderstood, that they felt the harsh impact of those who wished no change. It is true that they died—many of them—for their convictions, but how gloriously they lived and how nobly they died!

Religious Pioneers

Parley Pratt felt the cold of the winter winds and the snow; he was hungry and tired. But Parley Pratt knew a joy, a fulfillment and satisfaction far beyond the comprehension of most of us who sit here tonight with our stomachs filled and our muscles soft.

Stephen was stoned to death, but Stephen's face was radiant as he, "being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God."

Peter and John were described as men of boldness; "they had been with Jesus." That same John quoted the Master as saying, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John 16: 33).

And Paul, the one who had seen Stephen die, the one who had seen Jesus as "born out of due time, asked,

If God be for us, who can prevail against us? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Romans 8: 31, 35, 37-39, Inspired Version.

Surely in the experience of these through the centuries is the validation of the promise made by Jesus, "Blessed are all they that are persecuted for my name's sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5: 12, Inspired Version).

But we begin to see a new truth here. Blessed are they, but not because they are persecuted. Even the greatest of them has not found persecution, pain, meanness to be sought after, welcomed, or enjoyed. But blessed are they—happy are they—because they give allegiance to a way of life that is so full, so exciting, so absorbing that the forces of persecution are transcended.

Timid Souls Pay a Price

The substitute sitting out the football game on the sidelines feels the cold winds or the rain. He nervously anticipates pain or the reaction of the crowd. But the man in the game, the player giving his all, knows only the joy of the contest. He feels an exhilaration, a power beyond the comprehension of the spectator. He is hit and hurt but knows nothing of it until the game is over. He meets resistance, but understands it as a part of the scheme of things. He matches his strength, that of his team, with the opposition. He searches for the way to the goal. How much greater is his experience, with all its discipline and training, bruises, and perhaps the jeers as well as cheers of the crowd, than the man who sits on the sidelines. Blessed are they—happy are they—who, being intent upon great goals, the kingdom of God, can overcome opposing forces.

The Master has had little respect for those of timid disposition—those who, having heard his call, have been uncertain and wavering. "He who taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He who seeketh to save his life shall lose it; and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it."—Matthew 10: 33-34.

Prerequisites

In words of unmistakable meaning he declared, "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke 9: 62).

We cannot be eternally hesitating or quibbling about the price. If the way of life we choose seems to be worth it, then the price must be paid. The price is singleness of purpose, disciplined effort. The words "discipline" and "disciple" have the same root. How unfortunate it is that those who are known as religionists have so often been thought of as weak, effeminate, and uninteresting. The truth of the matter is that the Christian way of life, rather than being interpreted in terms of what not to do, ought actually to be expressed as a courageous, daring, dynamic and constructive movement.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints have had affection for the statement from James, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." The promise is that his initiative and need will be rewarded. And this has brought great hope and satisfaction to the members of the church. But there is a sentence following that statement that modifies it and cannot be overlooked. "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord." All of you know the expressed attitude of John toward those who were neither hot nor cold. In order that the people would understand without question, he spoke in the forthright vernacular of the day: "They would be spewed out of the mouth."

Daniel caught the spirit of the people who would follow the Lord. For him they were not those who would postpone grappling with the problems of the day to some kind of a future life. He proclaimed, "The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits" (Daniel 11: 32).

And the Psalmist has words of meaning for those who would reserve their religious expressions for the meetings in the church: "in the name of our God we will set up our banners" (Psalm 20: 5).

A Dangerous Campaign Ahead

Have we hid the piercing commands of the Christ behind a smoke screen of sacramental adoration? Have we built beautiful churches where our minds are not to be distracted by His realistic social ideals? Is the doctrine of the kingdom fading away into a vague mysticism? Where is the joy and ardor of the Christian? Are we afraid, or is it that we do not care? If it is fear, then hear the words of such men as Socrates. Surely the Master would feel akin to the spirit of this Greek philosopher expressed in the words spoken by him at his trial some three to four centuries before the advent of the Christ child:

Perhaps someone will say: "Are you not ashamed, Socrates, of following pursuits which are very likely now to cause your death?" I should answer him with justice, and say, "My friend, if you think that a man of any worth at all ought to reckon the hours of life and death when he acts, or that he ought to think of anything but whether he is acting rightly or wrongly, and as a good or a bad man would act, you are grievously mistaken." For this, Athenians, I believe to be the truth: Wherever a man's post is, whether he has chosen it of his own will or whether he has been placed at it by his commander, there it is his duty to remain and face the danger, without thinking of death, or of any other thing except dishonor.

We are all laying down our lives daily. The sands of time are running out for each of us. This day can never be lived again. What are you dying for? In latter-day revelation it was declared, "Let no man be afraid to lay down his life for my sake; for whoso layeth down his life for my sake, shall find it again." A life dedicated to the purposes of our Creator has wellsprings, resources; it is renewed and restored. It is not consumed even though it is given away. It becomes rich for now and for eternity.

And such dedication gives a new glow to life. Life is not humdrum, ordinary, insignificant, merely to be endured, to be lived out. If there is an over-all purpose to this existence and if that purpose is revealed in human plan and pattern, as we believe it to be, then there is purpose for me. Life becomes significant, rich with meaning, exciting, and rewarding. We would then accept his invitation as did the patriots who followed the Italian Garibaldi: "I promise you forced marches, short rations, bloody battles, wounds, imprisonment, and death. Let him who loves home and fatherland follow me."

Christ's Call

Christ calls to a dangerous campaign, to build a new society. He gives us work equal to the quality he sees in us, goals worthy of our relationship with him. He knows that it is precisely when the circumstances are easiest that we give the poorest account of ourselves, and that we are at our best when fighting against odds. Fame, fortune, rank, title, office, possessions—these have little lasting satisfaction. Their value disappears as they are won, but it is in the pushing toward the goal that men achieve heroic stature.

If a man rests when goals are won, then life has no center; it disintegrates. You may ask with so many others in these days, What is the use in striving? Is there a tomorrow? What difference does it make whether there is a tomorrow? We who are akin to divinity, who have within us the nature of the Creator, are called and commissioned to strive, to venture, to build, to give, and in that daring to find ourselves. If tomorrow never came, then today would be rich and thrilling.

In the words of Peter and John, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (Acts 4: 20).

We are called to a way of life. That way of life, living and moving in Him, will be met by resistance. It is the testimony of history that such resistance can be overcome and that man will be blessed as he moves with singleness of purpose to seek the kingdom. The danger which we face today is more subtle than that of active resistance. Such resistance tends to unify a group, to vitalize a movement. The danger is in toleration. Nothing will kill a cause so quickly as toleration. This does not mean that we are to be eccentric, odd, difficult to get along with, a nuisance in our communities.

It ought to mean that in the way we do business, conduct an election, run a school system, manage our families, spend our money, farm the soil, and worship in our congregations, we shall stand clearly and squarely for the way of life that has been described during these summer meetings.

A Time for Boldness

This is a time for boldness, and this, the church of Jesus Christ of the latter days, ought to be proclaiming affirmations with boldness to this world, to vitalize this movement, to give it true meaning and a new courage.

Isn't it true that sometimes we become so concerned about the mechanics of our organization—just merely trying to carry on the work of the church—that we overlook our real calling? The major call we have is not to have meetings, not even to build churches. We are to seek first to build his kingdom.

We are told, "Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church." If we invite people these days to share with us in our work, what is our work? What is the distinctive ministry that we are supposed to take to the two billion people on the face of this earth today? To what can we point?

It is true that individual lives have been enriched and blessed. But when this church was restored a hundred years ago, it was a revolutionary movement. Has the world so changed that there is no need for this mission today? What is there to be bold about—in Independence? in Lamoni? wherever there is a preponderance of church membership? What is there to stimulate and challenge us in our daily work? Do we talk about the restored gospel in the past tense of a hundred and twenty years ago, or is the gospel working in us today with its restoring influence? What has happened in this movement to the frontiersmen and the pioneers? Where are the men of boldness?

A Significant Task

The greatest missionary invitation we could issue would be this: "We are engaged in a significant task. It means the world to us. We find this work to be exciting, exhilarating, thrilling, self-fulfilling. Come join with us. We don't have all of the answers. We can't even find them in the books, because we believe in an open canon of Scripture. We don't believe that God has ceased to speak to people. But what we do believe is this: As we move out onto the frontiers, as we work the best we know how to work, God will endow us with his power and give the increase. We invite you to share with us in this significant, exciting work." Can't you see then, as the people of the world share with us in that work there will come to them a conviction of the presence of Christ and the worthwhileness of our fellowship.

Brother Edwards once said something that has always thrilled me: "If a man wants to find the Christ, let him give himself to a cause which ought to be Christlike, and he shall find the Christ as a working companion."

We are called upon now to reaffirm our allegiances, to declare the values for which we stand, to set up our banners in the name of God, to take his name upon us, and to live lives that will transcend ridicule, pain, and even death. For who, blazing new trails or thinking new ideas, has not known these? Moving out into such ministry as we can give, we shall find God pointing the way. The promise is that life will be full and thrilling and that our limited powers will be given expression beyond our knowledge of their human capacity, and that the ones who do so will know the peace of mind and richness of fellowship found only by those who move forward in God's cause.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God

Part II

By Charles R. Hield

A Busy Godhead Today

What a busy Godhead we have—God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son! In the Bible, Christ tells of some of their activities:

But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.—John 5: 17.

In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.—John 14: 2.

The words of God the Father to Moses are given to us in modern revelation:

And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying, The heavens, they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

God is unchangeable. Of the Son, the Bible states:

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.—Hebrews 13: 8.

What a busy individual is the Christ! He appeared and spoke to the Brother of Jared in 2200 B.C.; he is our law-giver, and gave the law of Moses; he took the righteous of the Zion of Enoch to heaven; he it is who confines the wicked in the prison house of hell; he softened the heart of Pharaoh; he spoke to Nephi, the grandson of Helaman; he went personally to the prison house to preach; he visited America and ministered to the people here. It is this Savior who has spoken by the mouths of his holy prophets through all ages. Who now dares say that he no longer speaks to his people today, and no longer uses prophets, as in other times, to declare his word?

How rational it is, and how in agreement with the past record of Christ, to believe and know that he still speaks today, contacting his prophets and followers as in former times! Both the Father and the Son appeared personally to Joseph Smith, the first prophet of our church. Joseph Smith writes of this experience:

I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said (pointing to the other), "This is my beloved Son, hear him."—Tract, "Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story," page 8.

Christ also talked with Joseph Smith on this occasion. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were visited by Christ in vision in Kirtland Temple on Sunday, April 3, 1836. Of this Joseph wrote:

The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit before us, and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold in color like amber. His eyes were as a flame of fire, the hair of his head was white like the pure snow, his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun, and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying:

"I am the first and the last;
I am he who liveth;
I am he who was slain;
I am your advocate with the Father."

—Church History

Volume 2, pages 46-47.

At the head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Christ has placed a prophet, seer, and revelator. Through this prophet the Lord guides his people today as he has always done in times past. After prayer (and often fasting) both by the people of the church and its leader, Christ speaks through his prophet to the church. He often identifies himself as the Christ or the Spirit speaking through his servant. It is a wonderful thing to know that Christ still loves and speaks to his people. The following are a few examples of how he identifies himself in these revelations:

Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of the living God, who created the heavens and the earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 12: 5.

Listen to the words of Jesus Christ, your Lord and your Redeemer.—Doctrine and Covenants 13: 1.

Behold, I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your God, and your Redeemer, by the power of my Spirit, have spoken it.—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 7.

Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, even Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, whose course is one eternal round, the same today as yesterday and forever. I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was crucified for the sins of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 1.

Who is to say that Christ may not by the power of his Spirit speak today? What a thrill, and yet what a humbling experience came to the high priests of the church gathered in worship to their God (October 5-8, 1950) in Kirtland Temple, Ohio! Christ spoke to them on the last day through his servant, Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith:

It is your Lord and Master who speaks through his servant. . . . I am he who was born of the Virgin Mary. . . . I am no stranger in this building. . . . Behold I have stood in your midst, not perceived of you, as I did in years gone by, when the prophet Joseph came up these aisles and spoke to the people from this pulpit. . . . Be not too greatly cast down because of your human limitations. Do not be discouraged. . . . I require only a reasonable service. Do your best, and you will be blessed.

Our Mediator and Advocate

The Bible speaks often of the Christ as our Mediator and our Advocate with the Father:

There is . . . one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus—I Timothy 2: 5.

. . . Jesus the mediator of the new covenant . . . —Hebrews 12: 24.

We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.—I John 2: 1.

Christ himself repeats this truth in modern revelation:

I am in your midst, and am your advocate with the Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.

Listen to him who is the Advocate with the Father, who is pleading your cause before him.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1.

I am Christ, and in mine own name, by virtue of the blood which I have spilt, have I plead before the Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1.

It is comforting to know that the "one Mediator" between God and man is pleading our cause. There can be no more direct contact, for all must come to God through Christ. The Apostle Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said to the rulers:

Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 10, 12.

The testimony of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is that Christ lives! He has had charge, under the Father, of the world and the salvation of its people from the beginning. He has spoken to the people in the past and speaks today. Often he has stood in our midst unperceived (yet sometimes perceived), and has spoken, sometimes reproving, sometimes encouraging his followers to great accomplishments in building the kingdom of God on earth.

Christ has directed the building of modern Zion, the New Jerusalem, in the land of Missouri. This is a great challenge for the righteous. Zion shall be. Also a holy temple will be built someday in Zion, to which Christ will come. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10; 108: 1.) Enoch and his city shall return to meet the righteous in Zion, the New Jerusalem. (See Doctrine and Covenants 36: 13.)

However, neither Christ's responsibility nor his activity ceases with this world. This is one of the outstanding truths of Christianity, that some other religions (Buddhism, etc.) do not have.

Lord of the Millennium

Concerning the end of the world and the coming of Christ, the Apostle Peter wrote:

But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.—II Peter 3: 10, King James Version. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.)

The prophet Isaiah also foretold the changes to take place at the coming of Christ and the beginning of the millennium:

For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat: . . .

They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.—Isaiah 65: 17, 21-23, 25. (See also Isaiah 35: 1-10; 11: 1-9; Micah 4: 3-7.)

Much the same information is given to the church in modern revelation. Read Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5, 6.

At the end of the world Christ shall appear in the heavens, and the righteous saints who are living and the righteous dead shall be caught up to meet him. (See I Thessalonians 4: 15-17; read also Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27.) The Lamb shall stand on Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty-four thousand, having his Father's name written on their foreheads. (See Revelation 14: 1; also Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5.)

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. . . . And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 6.

"And the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh" (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5) for a thousand years. The righteous shall reign with Christ in the millennium (Revelation 20: 4-6). During this period Christ shall continue his educational process to perfect people after the pattern of his Father. In modern revelation Christ says:

In that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious, things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.

One of the great truths of the gospel of Christ is that he will not confine to endless hell the heathen who never had an opportunity to hear one of his authorized ministers or those who have died without knowing his laws. This is only reasonable and just, as would be expected of God and Christ. It has been estimated that only one billion out of about 145 billion of the total inhabitants of the earth have ever been privileged to know and accept the teachings of Christ. Who, then, is Lord of Lords? Who is the Savior, if Satan is to win 144 out of every 145? At the end of the world not only the righteous shall have part in the first resurrection and receive back their physical bodies. The book of Mormon says:

His blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned.—Mosiah 1: 107, page 217.

Christ in modern times informs us:

And then shall the heathen nations be re-deemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

After the righteous living and the righteous dead shall meet Christ and descend with him to the new earth (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27), the Scriptures say:

And after this, another angel shall sound, which is the second trumpet; and then cometh the redemption of those who are Christ's at his coming; who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 28.

The Book of Mormon also confirms this truth (speaking of one phase of the resurrection):

And these are those who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them.—Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8: 58, page 253.

Satan shall be bound during this thousand years, "that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season" (Revelations 20: 1-4). (See also Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7; 85: 35.)

The wicked shall not come forth at the first resurrection but shall be retained in the prison house, or hell, all during the time of the millennium—a thousand years (perhaps, for some, a second thousand years).

But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 5, 6. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 83: 24.)

This reign of Christ with his righteous saints for a thousand years will be a most interesting period. Most Christians have little idea how the righteous will spend their time during such a number of years—in peace, no wars, no disease, they generally believe. The Utah Mormons believe that much of their time during the millennium will be spent in finding the names of their dead relatives and being baptized in hundreds of temples by proxy for them. The members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, however, look forward to this thousand years as a time of continued growth, and an opportunity to work with the Christ in the conversion of these nations with their billions of people who have not had the opportunity to hear of Christ and his laws. That these nations will be round and about Zion is made clear in the Scriptures:

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Micah 4: 2, 3.

And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee.—Zechariah 2: 11.

Some have wondered how all of these different peoples and nations can talk to each other. Evidently the Lord will give or teach the people a universal language:

For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent.—Zephaniah 3: 9.

Financing Our Stake Building Program

By H. W. Cackler

The Center Stake building program has been developed over a period of years. It stresses the primary responsibility of the individual congregation for the raising of funds for their building, but at the same time each congregation of the stake gives some assistance (according to its ability) to the others through co-operative endeavor as represented by the stake building fund. This mutual endeavor is, of course, broadened to include all branches of the church through the use of the General Church Houses of Worship Revolving Fund. Thus there is put to use one of the basic principles of Restoration social philosophy; that is, individual initiative and responsibility, plus co-operative effort in the interests of the group as a whole.

Financing Construction

We have sixteen congregations and two missions in the Center Stake, and all of them are engaged in one way or another in a building program. Five of them now have construction projects under way, seven are gathering funds and perfecting plans to start building, and the other six are paying off debts contracted for present structures. Three of the latter six still have considerable building to do after their present debt has been paid. Estimated costs for these presently planned projects total over a million dollars.

Of the total amount needed for a project 70 per cent should be on hand before construction begins. Funds for financing the construction of the buildings come from three sources: (1) funds contributed by the congregation direct to their building fund; (2) the stake building fund; (3) loans from the General Church Houses of Worship Revolving Fund.

Congregational Building Funds

This is our most important source of funds for our building program. Each congregation has its own building fund, and its members contribute regularly to it, usually through the weekly offering envelope. All income for building purposes is credited to this fund, and all building expense is charged to it. Monthly reports are issued to each congregation from the stake bishop's office, giving the exact status of the building fund from month to month as well as the status of the operating fund. The congregational building fund must be built up to a qualifying level before additional funds can be borrowed or before construction can begin.

The Stake Building Fund

This is a stake fund to which all congregations contribute each year on a percentage basis determined by membership. When any one congregation is in position to begin construction on a new building, the stake presidency and bishopric recommend to the stake conference that one tenth of the total estimated building cost be given the congregation as an outright grant. This is a real boost to each congregation's building program and is a demonstration of each congregation's helping the other in our vital building program. The money appropriated from this fund does not have to be paid back—it is an outright grant.

General Church Houses of Worship Revolving Fund

This is a revolving fund created by General Conference a number of years ago to assist congregations and branches to build church edifices. It is a co-operative movement on the part of all the branches and congregations of the church to assist each other in their building programs.

The General Conference has set up $850,000 in this fund over the past several years, and this money is loaned out to qualifying congregations at a one per cent interest rate, on a revolving basis; that is, each loan must be paid back within ten years so that other congregations may have opportunity to use it. In order for a congregation to qualify for a loan from this fund, it must have at least an amount equal to the amount to be borrowed in the local building fund and must have the ability to repay the amount borrowed within a ten-year period.

The congregations of the Center Stake have borrowed over $280,000 from this fund over the past six years. We are proud to say that each congregation involved is on schedule, or ahead, in returning the money so that it will be available for other congregations and branches.

Our Center Stake building program is a most challenging responsibility. There is only one basic reason for it—the spiritual welfare of the people. In adequate church edifices, the gospel is promulgated. In adequate sanctuaries, moving worship experiences are to be had. In adequate classrooms, boys and girls, men and women receive, through the ministry of teaching, foundation stones for living.

Identification

DIFFERENT GROUPS like to identify themselves and their causes by use of uniforms, badges, emblems, buttons, and other outward symbols. It is sometimes very popular for the members of our church to wear a small lapel pin bearing the replica of the church seal. This says the wearer is a member of our church—but not what kind of a member.

There are other ways to identify oneself with a group. Not long ago I visited a church in which I could not follow the ritual. It was easy for those about me to see that I was not a member. I had the printed service in my hand, but I did not know when to kneel nor how to cross myself.

On the other hand, a few weeks later I visited a branch of our own faith in another city. As I left the church the hostess remarked, "There is no need asking if you are a member. No one could stand and sing those songs without looking at his book unless he was long familiar with them." I was wearing a badge I had never thought about—familiarity with the church hymns. Like the lapel pin, it identified me as a member—but not what kind of member.

Paul said to put on the whole armor of Christ. The word "armor" has a warlike sound, but the description of that Christian uniform is just the opposite. In modern language its cloth is made of truth, embroidered with an insignia of righteousness; the sandals are of matching peace. Wearing this and shielded by a faith from within, we are enabled to quench the fiery distrust the headline writers and the news commentators would have us feel. Then, with the hope of salvation lighting our countenance and with a prayer and God's Spirit assisting, we put on a uniform which identifies us as ambassadors of peace.

We Do Not Walk Alone in Latin America

By Albert L. Loving

ONLY a blind man would say we do not face great difficulties in our initial missionary efforts in the land of the nopal (cactus). However, these obstacles are not too great nor too difficult to overcome if we have sufficient faith and use intelligent methods. Certainly those used in the English language areas are not as yet practical here. In fact, in many cases our methods in the States need revising or adjusting to meet ever-changing local situations.

I will be bold enough to assert that the difficulties facing us here are not by any means as severe as those faced by the early missionaries in the South Sea Islands or those encountered even in New Zealand thirty years ago. The difficulties here are real, but many supposed obstacles are imaginary. In the fall of 1949 my wife and I, accompanied by our youngest daughter, Blanche, drove from Omaha to Mexico City over the then unfinished Pan-American Highway running from El Paso, Texas, to the border of Guatemala.

In New Mexico we were asked by friends which road we intended to take south, and on telling them we intended to take the new road out of Juarez, Mexico, we were solemnly advised not to do such a foolish and dangerous thing. Why? We were told it was not safe down through those deserts. The bridges on the road were not built yet; there were dangerous detours through the mountains and the people were very unfriendly. The bridges weren't constructed, and we did have to take long rough river valley detours—but we enjoyed every bit of the wild scenery, and the natives could not have been more courteous and kind. We were safer among the Indians of the mountains than we would have been on some of Kansas City's streets.

We found that "kindness begets kindness," "faith in humanity begets faith in one's fellow men." At times we pulled off the highway to build a fire and boil the billy, fry some eggs, or make an Irish stew. Invariably we would no sooner start a smoke than we would see some little eyes and brown faces peering from behind the cactus. We carried no firearms, blackjacks, or clubs. And when some child or traveling workingman approached our camp at mealtime or otherwise, we were ready to exchange friendly greetings or share our bread or bowl of honey with them. At times we were rewarded with information of archaeological locations or a native find that had been kept in their casita for years.

Several years ago I listened to a noted Mexican educator speak in the International Religious Education Institute at Columbus, Ohio; he pleaded earnestly for Christian literature in Latin America. Mexicans are hungry for ideas as expressed in business, industry, and education. The field is wide open for what we have to offer. Our methods must be arranged to meet the present need. A few Sundays ago I went to a missionary church near by. The guest speaker and I were the first two to enter the church. He was a young chemical engineering student from a town fifty miles away. We had no sooner introduced ourselves to each other than he invited me to speak at the noon service. I was obliged because of my limited use of the language to thank him and decline. In the church school class I was invited and pressed to take part in the discussion. I tried to and enjoyed the experience.

The pastor, the guest speaker, and I were the only men of about forty who wore neckties. The people were spotlessly clean and dressed in their work clothes. The pastor's coat was patched, the church school director's pants were patched, and his shoes were so worn that his toes inside the socks protruded through the breaks in the leather; but he was a clean, handsome young married man of about thirty. The church building was eighteen feet wide and seventy feet long. The floors were covered with blue tile; the walls were white and clean; the pulpit was a simple homemade stand covered with blue muslin. Not a single picture of the Savior, saints, or politicians was visible anywhere in the building. Meetings began at ten thirty and carried straight through until two in the afternoon. The evening service began at five and ended at eight. There was not a dull moment in the six and a half hours of religious activity during the day, and that was not a special occasion either.

The speaker's eloquence and fervor were never surpassed by any of our best preachers in the States or elsewhere. As I listened to this young engineer (an Indian) speak at both the noon and evening preaching services, I prayed to God to hasten the day when we will open the doors of the kingdom of these people.

In the next three years I lost track of Benjamin; many times I wondered what he was doing and where he was. Then, without any prearrangement, he turned up at our favorite rendezvous, smiling as usual, and as composed as a starling at night.

Greetings terminated, and he said in a quiet undertone, "I have something to tell you." There was something about him that caused me to wish that my whole life's pattern had been cast among the Indians. Without displaying any unusual emotion I said, "As you wish, and when it suits you I shall be glad to listen."

Together we started to walk slowly. He put his arm in mine and said, "I had a visitor since I last saw you." I said, "That's not unusual. We have visitors of all kinds—some we like and others we wish would not bother us." "No," he said, "this one was different; he came from the stars [heaven]." "Well," I said, "that's not strange to people who believe in the Restoration Movement, because it was Moroni who came from heaven in 1823 and again in 1827 and revealed the records of the Book of Mormon to Joseph Smith. And it was John the Baptist who came on the fifteenth of May, 1829, and conferred the Aaronic priesthood on Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery."

Continuing the conversation I asked him, "What did your visitor from heaven say to you? Do you know his name?" "Yes," he said, "I know his name and what he said to me; but he strictly impressed me not to commit to any man as yet the things he told me about a certain part of this land."

"Very well," I answered, "I shall not press you to reveal the nature of the message, but I would advise you to keep this matter strictly to yourself as you were commanded. But could you tell me his name? That is, if you are at liberty to do so." "Yes," replied Benjamin, "I can tell you his name; it is". Here he pronounced very slowly an Indian name. "Why," I said, "that's one of the twelve disciples that Jesus ordained when he was here among your people right after his resurrection in Jerusalem. At that time he organized his church, and the name you tell me now is the name of one of the twelve."

"Furthermore," I said, "three of those twelve men received a commission from Jesus to remain on earth until his second coming in order that they might preach the gospel to as many people as would listen to them. Evidently your visitor from heaven was one of them."

"How strange," said Benjamin. "But my fathers had many gifts of spiritual enlightenment, and I know Dios is able to give direction to those who wish to hear and understand."

My God and I

By Lucille Bacon

(See page 23)

In youth we are mad for persons. Childhood and youth see all the world in them. But the larger experience of man discovers the identical nature appearing through them all.

R. W. E.

LITTLE JONATHAN climbed up the side rail of the baby's crib. Peering straight down into her eyes, he crooned, "Little baby—whats do God look like? Little baby—when you wass in hebbin, whats did God look like?"

She smiled into his unblinking, wondering eyes and made a soft cooing sound. And I, looking down at my baby, saw a little bit of God's likeness in her physical beauty, her purity of spirit, and the godlike prophecy of her growth and development. When she gives me that look of utmost trust in my ability and willingness to provide her present needs, I am cognizant of that initial gesture in the progression of a soul toward its proper destiny and conscious affinity for its God.

Earlier in the morning, Jonathan was trying to stand on his head in the corner of the kitchen. Collapsing suddenly into a jumble of arms and legs he called, "Mama, who is I?"

"Do you mean to tell me you have forgotten your name?" I chided.

And he said, "Before I wass born, I wass Jonathan?"

"Well—no—"

"Then who is I?"

With no forethought, I answered, "You are one of God's little images."

Then in a frightened but hopeful small voice he continued, "Is that good?" And sister, scooting into the room just then on one roller skate, laughed and said, "Gooder than good!"

Jonathan, feeling that gift of God, that native hunger for knowing stirring within, was taking his first faltering step toward finding out for himself. And I, quite suddenly aware of questions ahead, began to wonder also.

LATER, during the children's nap time, a friend dropped by with a problem.

"If you loved a man so much you could not live without him and he insisted that you exchange your religion for his before marriage, would you do it?"

And I said, "Once the answer might have been a simple yes or no, but today it would take quite some telling. In the long run, you can find the answer for yourself." She shook her head, but I continued. "You just haven't discovered yourself for what you really are. If you had, you would know that because you were here before he came, you shall be here after he leaves. 'Twas God gave you the power to make it so."

"That's easily said—"

"It wasn't easily learned!"

Bringing out my little dictionary I asked her to read the definition of religion.

"Religion is the recognition of man's relation to a divine or super-human power to whom obedience and reverence are due and the outward act or practices of life by which men indicate their recognition of such relation; synonyms: devotion, faith, belief, piety, and worship."

"Now then," I proceeded, "do you consider your religious beliefs compatible with his?"

"Far from it."

"Do you truly feel that any person or group has the right to expect you to forfeit one belief for another unless that exchange is the natural result of your own personal convictions?"

She shook her head. When I asked why, she thought for a moment and then replied, "Well, to begin with, the things I really believe in are the things I have thought out for myself. They give me a feeling of rightness."

"Would you feel right in vowing allegiance to acts or practices of life contradicting your own convictions?"

"Well—no—"

"Why do you think God gave us the power to reason?"

After a long silence she said, ever so carefully, "It could be sort of a defense against deception—to help us make right choices—"

When I asked her what determined a right choice, she laughed and said, "Our cleaning woman would say, 'The thing that is rightest the mostest and the longest.'"

I said, "You don't really need anyone else to answer your question now." And she smiled.

Feeling a sudden glow of happiness I said, "Wasn't He good to give us the power to make right choices?"

And thinking, no doubt, of less fortunate ones of earth, she replied with sadness, "What an evil to rob us of it!"

THERE IS ONE THING we can say for problems—our own or someone else's—they start us thinking, and when we start thinking we have a better chance to grow in the right direction rather than just drifting along, taking things for granted.

Sooner or later, most of us meet with the necessity of knowing for ourselves what God is like. If we do not possess a reasonable portion of that knowledge, we feel no actual security in the powers attributed to him. So, one evening, after the sound of the day's activity finally retreated from the house, I brought the Bible to the kitchen intending to study a little. Surely we can learn what God is like from the Holy Scriptures. Where else? Thinking to read passages relating to God, I opened the Book. As I started to turn back to the concordance, one passage caught my attention.

"All power is given unto me; in heaven and in earth."

For a long time I sat there, thinking. Then I closed the Book—and thought some more.

It is not difficult to believe that we are made in the image of God, for our Creator has surely possessed that which he has given us. It cannot be otherwise. Then to discover what he is like is to first discover what we are like.

The human body is the most intricate, complete mechanism in existence, but of itself without the spirit it is an inanimate, impotent, and useless symbol of the individual it was to become. So, I conclude, the Creator is more than a symbol.

ONE DAY my little girl asked, "What makes my arms and legs to move?"

Making a wild guess I said, "Your brain."

"Doesn't dead peoples has bwains?"

With the sensation of stepping off into space I replied, "Even the brain can't work unless life is there." Well, she didn't stop there—but that is another story.

God must then be a living personage.

However perfect the mechanism and miraculous the life forces setting us in motion, they are not enough. Man is a social being, interested in other men. God, likewise a social being, is interested in us out of the pure love of his heart, for the Source of all power is nowise dependent upon his dependents. If I am able to love my children, envisioning the best possible future for each, and voluntarily exert all my powers assisting them to understand how to make it so, then surely it is not too farfetched to sense the reason he endowed mankind with the potentialities to become independently godlike.

With us, the deed cannot be truly separated from the spirit of the deed—so we are, and God is, spiritual beings also. Thus we recognize the importance of the primary commandments: "Love the Lord thy God," and "Love thy neighbor as thyself. . . ." The harmony of man's interdependence is qualified by obedience or disobedience to this basic spiritual law. "Speak to his heart and the man becomes suddenly virtuous."

And now, the likeness of our Creator taking form in the mind as we recognize somewhat of our endowment in physical and spiritual properties, we focus the light of the mind upon that power from which emanates that light; which sets us apart, above and beyond all other life—the power of the intellect.

The fruits of the intellect, where exercised to high degrees, have been manifold. The various fields of the arts, science, and literature have yielded a rich harvest of knowledge and achievement. Certain things, now concrete realities, are miraculous in comparison to the achievements of yesteryear. And yet there has been from beginning of time the wherewithal for these identical accomplishments. Even now there is no proper right to declare that man has reached the finale' of his resourcefulness.

PONDERING UPON these accomplishments which exist despite the perversions of the gifts of God by way of disobedience to nature's beneficial laws, we envision tremendous possibilities with the same exercise of power in conjunction with obedience. It is near and yet so far. We waste a lifetime trying to find a short cut to the rewards which can be obtained only according to the rules.

Increasingly aware of the potentials invested in us, we commence to realize something of the majestic power embodied in the Being we know as God the Father, who breaks not the law, for he is author and finisher of law and order.

Through the prophet Joseph, this same God admonished us, "Be not weary in your well-doing, for out of that which is small proceedeth that which is great."

The nucleus of the cell, or atom, is infinitesimal in comparison to the gigantic proportions of the organic or inorganic substance developing from it as the forces of creation are brought into play. Here again we recognize a basic principle applying equally so to the physical, mental, and spiritual life of man.

Without that first impulse of discernment and reception in the infant mind, there can be no maturation of the intellectual powers. Without that small, initial victory over self, there can be no deed of heroism, no great social reform, no ultimate victory over the forces of evil, no enlargement of soul nurturing the powers of projection, releasing to us the ability to grow beyond the narrow confines of self, and no real affinity to all that is good.

All this we affirm to be representative of the principle that small things proceed into that which is great, but it is also the method by which great evil increases from that first tiny break in the armor of righteousness to over-all destruction.

YESTERDAY little Jonathan coming in from the garden slumped dejectedly into a chair and muttered, "Everysing topped growing, jus' everysing!"

Hastily looking out the window, wondering if a plague had struck, I was relieved to see everything as usual. "You're wrong, honey; there's something growing all the time, all over the world, else we wouldn't be here."

Then he continued, "Them big trees topped growing; they is still jus' big trees; my flowers isn't gettin' no biggah—."

I've always said I had no talent for teaching, but children have a way of converting parents into teachers whether they will it or no. Awkwardly I set about explaining that if there were no stopping point, no control of growth, everything would grow until there would be no

Rochester College Student Conference

THE BEAUTIFUL RIVER CAMPUS of the University of Rochester at Rochester, New York, provided the home for the sixth annual fall conference of college students sponsored by the General Church under the auspices of the Committee on Ministry to College People.

An unexpectedly large number of college students, graduates, business and professional people assembled over Labor Day week end—September 5, 6, and 7—to share in worship, discussion, and dedication to the common goals of the Restoration Movement. Fifty-eight students from twenty-two colleges, universities, and technical schools representing eastern states and Canada as well as the Midwest were in attendance. Eighty-six professional and business people and their companions also were present to provide a fine blending of mature experience with youthful enthusiasm.

Representing the general councils of the church were President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Henry L. Livingston. Representing the General Church committee on Ministry to College People were Dr. Lawrence Brockway, chairman; Dr. Evan Shute; Dr. Dwight Davis, and Carl Mesle. Harley Morris, absent.

The Conference Theme

The well-considered theme of the conference, "The Professional in the Kingdom" struck an immediate responsive cord as W. Ed Ford opened the conference at the Saturday evening dinner with the keynote address on "What Is the Kingdom?" (The content of his address will appear in the Herald shortly.) Following the dinner and a short mixer, President Edwards delivered an informal historical address on the "Beginning in New York" to set the stage for the pilgrimage to Palmyra on Sunday.

On Sunday the question, "Who Builds the Kingdom?" became the focal point of attention. Following a brief worship service there was a general discussion with Keith Har-der presiding. The discussion was set up by an opening statement by Don Ross, Sr., and a "reaction" from Miss Elaine Parkes. At ten o'clock, a panel session was conducted by Dr. Evan Shute with students and graduates participating. A summary of the morning session was given by Perce Judd, Sr.; Bishop Livingston was the speaker at the morning worship service.

Pilgrimage to Palmyra

In three busses the conference guests traveled to Palmyra and the scenes of the origin of the church. Splitting up into three groups and rotating, they visited and individually worshiped in the sacred grove, heard the story of the Joseph Smith home, and climbed Hill Cumorah. To climax the afternoon, they joined together at the foot of the hill for a worship service conducted by Patriarch Ben Hewitt.

In the evening the conference was treated to a series of campus reports moderated by Dr. Dwight Davis. College groups reporting included the University of Iowa, Central Missouri State College, University of Kansas, University of Michigan, University of Missouri, Michigan State, Ohio State, and Iowa State. The accounts of the activities of church college students in their campus groups were sufficient to warm the hearts of the old-timers and to demonstrate the devotion and growing skill of the students. This was followed by a session in which the "Old Hands and New Hands" swapped viewpoints under the leadership of Dr. Margaret Barker. Snacks in the cafeteria, small group discussions, and room devotions in the dormitory concluded the day.

Do I Build?

A light breakfast in the cafeteria of Todd Union on the university campus was followed by a brief worship service in the auditorium of the Union. Dr. Brockway presided over the next general session, which opened with a statement by Sanford Fisher and "reaction" by Glen Downing to the question, "Do I Build?" A general discussion followed. At nine thirty, W. Ed Ford conducted a panel session and forum on the same subject but with emphasis on the personal aspects of the question to all those who participated on the panel.

A further high light to the conference was added in the Communion and fellowship service conducted at ten thirty by LeRoy Squire. The spirit was ever richer as the concluding hour approached.

Thy Kingdom Come

Immediately following another excellent luncheon in the cafeteria, the conference members moved their chairs close to the head table where Dr. Brockway, as master of ceremonies, drew the thinking of the group to an appropriate setting for the closing address by President F. Henry Edwards. With little time to prepare, and drawing upon the experiences of the week end, President Edwards stirred and challenged his listeners to continue seeking for the kingdom and to progress in qualifying as representative kingdom builders. (A condensation of his speech will be in the Herald soon also.) Following this address the conference was officially closed with a musical benediction, "The Lord's Prayer" sung by Mrs. Pauline Frisby.

The warm response received in all quarters by those in attendance at the conference was a tribute to its value to many church college students who wrestle daily in their academic studies with the place of religion in life; to them, it seemed to be encouraging and inspiring. Certainly this has been reflected in the spur given to the enthusiasm of our campus groups since the conference.

It is felt that there was also rich value in the conference for many isolated church members of the professional and business rank whose opportunities for church fellowship and worship are often limited. To the many in attendance who give leadership or participate regularly and actively in church work, it was also a rich spiritual experience. The sharing of the testimonies, convictions, and experiences of those older coupled with the enthusiastic, searching minds of the college students produced a spirit of rich accord and approximated the Zionic phrase "of one heart and one mind."

One of the less publicized but practical values of the conference was an offering of $57.68 to be added to the $61.04 contributed by the 1952 conference toward an art fund. This fund is regarded as the beginning of a movement toward the expression of beauty in art in some of our principal church structures.

Acknowledgments

It would be impossible to name all who contributed time and thought in preparing for this conference, but the committee wishes especially to acknowledge the works of the Rochester Saints. Pastor William Shea assisted from the beginning, and Brother Vivian Bryant served as liaison man for the committee and the Rochester Convention and Publicity Bureau as well as the University of Rochester. His efforts to work out all the details necessary to successfully arrange for the material needs of those attending the conference are greatly appreciated.

The University of Rochester displayed a keen interest in the public welfare and the progress of religious teachings in its most generous co-operation. From such co-operative effort and willing spirit will truly come the kingdom of God.

YOUNG PEOPLE IN THE NEWS—The Davis Sisters

Three unusual and likable sisters received honors this past year in three different schools and in three different areas of accomplishment. The sisters—Marion, Lila, and Sara Davis of Kansas City, each with a long record of participation and leadership in church activities—achieved their recognition respectively in dramatics, physical education, and art.

It has been said that excellence in any field stems from deep-rooted convictions in the possibility of being able to contribute to the betterment or improvement of society. These girls well illustrate that principle. Lila, for example, now women's physical education instructor at Graceland, believes that the objectives of physical education include individual enjoyment and emotional outlet, that it teaches social values, and, if presented properly, will co-ordinate the mind and body to produce sound health.

All three girls were graduated from Northeast High School in Kansas City. Marion and Lila are also graduates of Graceland, and Sara is now a student there.

Last spring, Marion was voted the best student director at Louisiana State University, where she is now completing work for her Master's degree in speech, after which she plans to teach. She was graduated from Central Missouri State College in 1952. While at Graceland, she received one of the three gold seals awarded annually for scholarship. She was active in Graceland Players and planned general all-school activities. She has been an active Zion's Leaguer in Independence and was director of dramatics for the operetta, H.M.S. Pinafore, produced by the Center Stake Zion's Leagues in the summer of 1952.

Lila was graduated from Central Missouri State College in May 1953, with the highest scholastic record in her class. Shortly after graduation she was signed to teach at Graceland. While a student at Graceland, she was a member of the Crescents, "K" Club, Lambda Delta Sigma, and WAA. She has had a wide experience in church and private camping.

Sara is an art student and has won the highest awards in regional exhibits for three years. Last spring she won the Strathmore Award for the western Missouri district. The picture was a transparent water color. As a result of an exhibition of works at Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, she won a scholarship to the Student Art Center at Los Angeles, which she turned down to enter Graceland this fall. She was also on the national scholastic honor role.

In the operetta Eileen, given in the summer of '53 by the Stake-wide Zion's League, Sara played the part of the French maid, as well as assisting with the art work on the background scenery. Like her sister, Lila, she has participated in several youth camps.

Marion, Lila, and Sara, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Davis, Kansas City, Missouri, have found that choosing to do only those things which have a definite relationship to "kingdom-building" is richly rewarding and makes for a happy life.

Question Time

Question:

Have there been any of the names familiar in Book of Mormon that have been traced in the Lamanite civilizations found on this continent in recent years?
Florida E. G. F.

Answer:

Yes; though certain factors make it almost impossible, after the lapse of many centuries, to identify many with certainty. One is language change, and another is deliberate change.

1. Language change. Even in the time of Mosiah the Lamanites had developed a different language from that of the Nephites. (See Mosiah 11: 49.)

Many languages were spoken by the Indians at the time of the Conquest. The famed "Quetzalcoatl" of Mexican tradition, in Yucatan was called "Kulkulcan," and in Peru, "Wiracocha" or "Uiracocha." In Hawaii he was called "Lono" and in the Society Islands "Rogo" or "Rongo." Even names do not long persist except under especially favorable circumstances. Compare ancient names with modern names in any good Bible atlas and note the many changes.

2. Deliberate changes. The Book of Mormon informs us that it was the custom to name places after those who first possessed them (page 327). This custom is somewhat general still. Then changes are made later in favor of honored men. "Gardner's Lake" in Missouri has recently been officially named "Lake Doniphan." "Van Horn Road" in Independence has become "Truman Road."

We are informed that the wild Chichimec Indians, when they conquered the Toltecs, tried to erase everything pertaining to the memory of those more civilized people. The Spaniards took great pains to do likewise, even to the destruction of thousands of books sacred to the Indians. The Nahuas of Indian legend seem indeed to be the Nephites of Book of Mormon history, and in language change we know that "Nephi" could soon become "Nahua." Yet we have no proof that this was so except as identified by the legends. The word "Laman" persists, and was definitely here before the Spaniards arrived. So does "Muloc" or "Muluk" which strangely enough means "reunion." "Sami" (Sam is of Egyptian origin) is the name in the Tenya clan of Indians, and also the Antelope Society at Walpi, Arizona. There is the River "Marona" in Ecuador, and the hill "Manta" which, while it has a Spanish meaning, is also of Indian origin, having a meaning connected with the sea. Elder Roy Weldon, during a recent trip to South America, ascertained this from residents there, including the exgovernor of Manabi.

There are undoubtedly many more such names, and though the question does not ask for it, I feel we should say also that there were Book of Mormon names found in Hawaii. Elder Poepoe, a Hawaiian attorney who died in 1913, an authority on Hawaiian language and customs and a member of the legislature, furnished twenty-five names in the Hawaiian Islands which he said were derived from Book of Mormon names. We mention this because of the positive relationship known to exist between Polynesian language and some of the Indian dialects.

Question:

Does the church take a definite stand against hunting on Sunday? The deer season in our state opens on Sunday this year. When I speak of hunting on Sunday, I mean in the afternoon, same as a lot of people enjoy a Sunday afternoon drive.

R. S.

Answer:

No. To the best of my knowledge the church has never taken a definite stand against hunting on Sunday or, for that matter, on any other specific activity. It has rather sought to encourage those activities which tend to strengthen the influence of Sunday as a day set apart for worship, study, and other activities which contribute to one's spiritual growth, coupled with rest or relaxation from the routine of the week's work. The basic answer to your question, I believe, lies in whether or not any activity which we choose to pursue on Sunday will contribute to our spiritual growth and the growth of those whom our actions may influence. Because of our everyday associations, we are inclined to become fairly well contaminated with un-Christian thoughts and attitudes in the six days of the week. Can we in two or three church services expect to become completely cleansed and even cleaner than the Sunday before? Are we content to stand still, or is it worth while making the regular effort to grow spiritually?

Coupled with the opportunity for spiritual growth on Sunday is the question of what constitutes rest and relaxation. If an individual were tied by economic necessity to a job involving long hours, six days a week, he might require a share of his time on Sunday to be given to physical exercise, rest, or change. Most of us today, however, can arrange or can qualify to arrange our work schedules so as to include a reasonable share of time for physical exercise and relaxation on other days.

It would seem a part of our stewardship to make the effort to so arrange our work and adjust our lives to harmonize with what we believe to be the divine plan rather than to expect God to adjust his plans to our convenience. In your particular case, there may be sufficient reason for and value in a short hunt on Sunday afternoon. Such an outing might even provide a rich spiritual experience. But if we were to make a canvas of our church membership, including many enthusiastic hunters, we would find, I believe, a general opinion that that deer will wait until some other day.

For a final thought, Sunday is also encouraged as a family day. Activities which regularly take away family members reduce the opportunities for this important fellowship of the family. There are some activities which all members of the family can do together with profit to their total association and spiritual growth on Sunday. There are others which do not. All these things must be considered as we weigh our choices of Sunday activities.

For further help in making your own decision at your next opportunity, study Section 59 in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Marcella Schenck Dies

The church at large will be saddened to know that "Miss Marcella" succumbed to a heart attack Sunday evening, November 22. Her human interest articles in the Herald and Daily Bread have made delightful reading. She was born in Henderson, Iowa, in 1887 and went to Lamoni in 1912. She taught school and assisted in the editorial work of the Herald Publishing House until it moved to Independence in 1921. Then she gave up teaching and worked three and a half years in the editorial department on Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Stepping Stones until her return to Lamoni schools in 1925. She once said, "I began writing for church publications at the age of sixteen under the encouragement of Marietta Walker and Estella Wight, mostly for the children."

Marcella Schenck had many virtues and talents. For us she exemplified the qualities of humility, kindness, and nobleness. A lovely woman with a great soul has passed on to eternal peace. C.B.H.

Herbert Scott III

Elder Herbert M. Scott, appointee pastor at Des Moines, Iowa, has been incapacitated by a severe heart condition. In this emergency, Elder Marion M. Pease has taken over the branch administration, and District President Ralph Wicker has assumed responsibility for administration of the missions in Des Moines. Brother Scott is not now suffering a great deal of pain, but it is imperative that he rest. He will appreciate an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Appreciation for Service

W. R. Hillman of Fairview, Montana, has served the church in the work of the bishopric over a period of some twenty-five years. After this long period of service he has tendered his resignation, effective as of December 1, 1953.

We are glad to make this official record of our appreciation for the fine service he has rendered the church.

room to live, and life would smother itself out. Just about the time I was groping around for proper illustrations to meet his age level he jumped up and yelled—

"Where's that dime Uncle Don gave me for ice cream?" And I smiled to myself, thinking of how God had thought of everything—even a control for a little boy's curiosity carrying him beyond his depth.

And God did think of everything—much more than one lone mortal could express in a lifetime of writing or talking. Gradually we increase in wisdom and understanding and in time see ourselves as a part of the exquisitely balanced relativity shown throughout all nature—and through the very godlike qualities with which we have been endowed we are in time able to associate the nature of our creation with the purpose in His placing us here among adverse conditions brought about not only by ourselves but all those who came before us.

This conglomeration of influences for good and for evil is the conditioning ground for the strengthening of the soul to dwell in harmony with its God as an independent godlike being. One of nature's oldest laws is that strength increases through exercise. A perfect set of muscles shrivels in uselessness unless put to work; strength of character grows by resisting temptation and by affirmative employment of all the powers within us in ways that nurture the growth of the soul. The Son of God himself did not violate the condition by which strength comes into being but rather exposed himself to these same conditions.

We don't come to know our God in a day; but day by day, we grow toward him. The poet declared:

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

Just now Jonathan, the family question-box, sauntered out in his sleepers, grinning happily.

"Mama," his voice squeaked in delight, "did you know that God is a little boy?"

Our God grows up with us, and the day eventually comes when we realize he has been there all the time, but the smallness of our minds and our limited experiences have made it impossible for us to recognize him if we saw him. Although we have the capacities to know God as he really is, we may never find out, because we don't exercise those powers increasing the strength to come near him.

Zion's League Takes Tour

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA.—A farewell party was given during the first week of August, honoring the former branch president, Elder Herald G. Wixom and family, who recently moved to Sacramento. Brother Wixom was presented a portfolio as a token of appreciation from the branch for his five years of service to them.

San Bernardino was host to the Southern California District annual Zion's League play tournament. Santa Paula placed first. Jean Nichol of San Bernardino won the award for the outstanding performance.

Apostle Edmund Gleazer visited the branch on August 23, and delivered the evening sermon.

The women's department sponsored a fish fry at Lytle Creek Park, and the proceeds were given to the reunion ground fund.

San Bernardino was well represented at both the children's and youth camps the latter part of August.

The Zion's League held their election September 13. The following officers were elected: president, Lindy Nichol; vice-president, Elbert Green; secretary and treasurer, Margaret Holding; worship chairman, Walter Davis; study chairman, Marshall Savage; service chairman, Juanita Niggel; recreation chairman, Douglas McCauley. The League made a caravan trip to Hollywood to see the movie, "The Robe." After seeing the movie, they went to Forest Lawn Memorial Park, in Glendale, and viewed the painting, "The Crucifixion." This picture was painted by Jan Styka, and measures 190 x 45 feet. From there the group visited Chinatown, enjoyed a Chinese dinner, and toured the shops in Chinatown.

The branch business meeting was held September 23. The following were elected: branch president, James F. Cooper; counselors, Frederick M. Savage and G. Gregory Dexter; clerk, recorder, and historian, Mary E. Cooper; treasurer and book steward, May Carter; director of religious education, Lawrence McCauley; supervisor of young people and Zion's League leader, Robert Nichol, Sr.; director of music, Wilma McCauley; director of drama, Helen Nichol; leader of women's department, Mary Brinkerhoff; publicity agent and Herald correspondent, Mary Lynn Nichol; bishop's solicitor, Wilson Ritchie.

Seven men from the branch and two of its missions were ordained to the priesthood: from San Bernardino Branch, Robert H. Nichol, Sr., priest; Elmer Pataky, priest; Marshall Savage, deacon; Walter Davis, deacon; from West Riverside mission, Clifford Peters, elder; James Baker, deacon; and from Barstow mission, Robert Beck, priest, and William Bush, priest.—Reported by LINDY NICHOL

New Officers Chosen

LANCASTER, OHIO.—Elder George Howdyshell was elected to serve as pastor again during the coming year. Other officers elected were Howard Koontz, church school director; Betty Griffin, women's leader; Edna Smith, book steward; Ruth Howdyshell, music department.

Barry Fuller was the speaker on August 9. A number of young people attended youth camp held at Canter's Cave August 16-23. Elder Howdyshell and family attended youth camp, then visited other historic church sites in the East.

Robert Brush was the speaker August 16. Several from the branch attended Fall River District conference held at North Church in Columbus.

Recent speakers have included Elders E. H. Caldwell, H. A. Griffin, Edward L. Smith, Howard Koontz, and Kyle Reed.

Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker October 13. On October 20, President W. Wallace Smith was guest speaker.—Reported by CORA STONEBURNER

Entire Family Baptized

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—A series of missionary services were conducted at the Greenwood mission during the week of September 13-18 by District Counselor Clyde S. Rice. The mission is under the supervision of the Parkersburg Branch, of which Elder Rice is the pastor.

Elder Rice was the speaker for all the services, and the topics for the sermons were "The Mission of Christ," illustrated, "The Tragedy of the Dark Ages," illustrated, "Reformation and Restoration," "The Buried Book of the Bible," illustrated, "From Heaven or of Men," and "Our Stewardship."

Brother and Sister Ernest Cottrill and daughter, Betty, of Central Station, West Virginia, were baptized at the close of the services, Sunday, September 27. The baptisms were performed by Elder Orval Cottrill, pastor of the Greenwood mission, and confirmation followed in the hall where the Saints at Greenwood meet for their services. Those assisting in the confirmation service were Elders Clyde S. Rice, Orval Cottrill, and Harry B. Smith. The Ernest Cottrills' son, Larry, was blessed by Elder Rice.

Services were held for many years in the home of Sister Florence Williams. Brother Emerson Cottrill was called and ordained a deacon recently.—Reported by MABEL L. SMITH

Five Baptized

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—The following were baptized on October 18: Beuron Boyd, Bruce Boyd, Laird Baker, Agnes Mason, and Linda Williams.

Sue Ann Payne, Sylvia Funk, and Shirley Arnold are attending Graceland this year. A Graceland graduate of last year, James Wright, is attending the University of Texas at Austin, Texas.

Millard Payne has reported for duty in the armed forces at Fort Bliss, El Paso, Texas.

Houston appreciated the recent visit of Brother Wayne Simmons.—Reported by LUCILE CROOKER

Annual Election Held

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.—Annual election was held in September, with the following officers elected: pastor, James C. Phillips; counselors, Alma Dieterman and A. F. Shotwell; Galewood mission pastor, Robert Harvey; treasurer, Erwin Albrecht; branch clerk, Leah Smith; junior church pastor, Delbert Dodds; recorder, William Sherwood; church school director, William Griffin; church school assistants, John Thumm, and Almer Lee Dieterman; church school secretary, Grace Fitch; youth supervisor, Keith Harvey; young adult supervisor, Jack Hodge; children's supervisor and music director, Francis Carlson; women's leader, Francis Osborne; men's club leader, John Thumm; book steward and librarian, Grace Fitch; auditor, Clifford Mottashed; finance committee, Jim Grutter, William Sherwood, Jack Hodge, and Clifford Mottashed; church reporter, Joyce Thumm; custodians, Jesse Krause and Fred Curtiss; and solicitor, Garnett Smith.

The baptism of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Ward took place October 28, with Brother Dirk Venema officiating.

Elder John Blackstock conducted a missionary series November 8-15 on "Latter Day Saint Distinctives."

For a period of five consecutive Monday evenings a district leadership training class was held.

Four young men from the branch have been active in missionary work, led by their pastor, Brother Phillips. They held a series of services in the Belding-Greenville area October 18-November 8. They are Brothers Dirk Venema, John Thumm, Keith Harvey, and Ugene Jefferies.—Reported by JOYCE THUMM

Women's Department Active

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—

Church attendance through the busy season was better than any previous year in the history of the mission. Prayer meeting attendance held up well. Students from Graceland College who were working in the canneries at Milton, Oregon, gave the mission their support during the summer.

Easter and Children's Day programs were observed with appropriate programs. Sandra Lee, daughter of Tom and Mildred Faircloth, was blessed August 2 by Elder Orva Croft.

Family nights were discontinued during the summer, but several picnics in the park and basket dinners at the church were enjoyed.

Speakers during the past six months have included Earl Wilcox, Orva Croft, Floyd Winegar, T. A. Beck, Carlos Crownover, Matt Crownover, Guy Allen, Charles Miller, Elder Ferguson of LaGrande, Oregon, Percy Howard of Lamoni, Iowa, and Evangelist Frank Curtis.

Gifts to the church have included landscaping around the church with stock, donated by Milton Nurseries, some brass vases for flowers, and velvet draperies and table cover for the worship center.

Officers elected July 26 included John Fletcher, pastor; Lauree Miller, women's leader; Earl Henley, church school director; Vida M. Fletcher, music director; Crystal Henley, secretary and treasurer; Richard Sargent, church custodian; Joan Sargent, social leader; Emma Lou Weis, young adult leader; Pheba Miller, publicity. When it was certain that there would be an elder available, John Fletcher asked to be released, and Orva Croft was appointed pastor.

Elder Floyd Winegar and family, of Pullman, Washington, are a welcome addition to the group.

The women's department, with fifteen active members, had an enjoyable year, becoming better acquainted with tradition, laws, and institutions of the church through lessons prepared and taught by church members. Other challenging and interesting topics were presented by professional people, most of whom were not members.

The group presented flowers to all members of the church and close friends of the church who were hospitalized during the year, held three baby showers, a kitchen shower, joined forces for a cleaning day at church, sponsored two basket dinners and the mission Christmas party, arranged for a meal to be taken to a bereaved member, rented a radio for a polio patient, presented a wedding gift, and sponsored a church nursery. The sum of $138 was turned in from luncheons, a rummage sale, and a bake sale.—Reported by LEOTA HILL

New Buildings Planned

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The Melchisedec priesthood school began October 26 in Center Stake. The schedule of classes and instructors includes "The Work of the Elder," taught by Dwight Davis; "Worship Leadership," Glaude A. Smith; "Methods of Evangelism," Merle Guthrie; "Administration of the Kingdom-building Program," Charles Graham and William Fetter; "Public Speaking," Arthur Rock and Evan Fry.

IN THE BLUE RIDGE CONGREGATION, Elder Almer Sheehy conducted a missionary series November 1-8.

Apostle Reed Holmes was guest speaker September 25 at the Center Stake League fellowship service on the church lawn. Elder Lee Hart was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Ernest Rauh.

Apostle Reed Holmes and Charles Hield delivered the sermons on September 27.

Christmas candles were made October 13 by the women's department. They will be sold for the benefit of the building fund. The goal for 1953 is the liquidation of the present indebtedness of $2,500.

AT ENGLEWOOD, the women's department elected officers for the coming year. Mrs. Virginia Henry is the leader. Assistants are Mrs. Katy Harder and Mrs. Thelma Cox. Mrs. Kathleen Jennings is secretary, Mrs. Belle Liles is treasurer, and Mrs. Fern Stribling is cradle roll supervisor. Friendly visiting supervisor is Mrs. Zella Elliott. At a recent meeting Mrs. Othelia Mengel was elected leader of the Daughters of Zion. Approximately one hundred dollars was cleared at an ice-cream social August 27.

Babies who received their blessings recently were Grace Yvonne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David E. Farrell, and David Aaron, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Williams. Elders Kenneth Henry, Marion Bronson, and William LaGrece officiated.

The Zion's League sponsored a bake sale September 26, from which thirty dollars was realized.

The ordination of William H. Fetter to the office of elder took place October 11. Pastor William LaGrece officiated, with Elder A. E. Walters, Jr., assisting.

AT GUDGELL PARK, the Zion's League, under the leadership of Joy Harris, held their installation of officers at Adair Park.

Sunday morning, September 27, a promotion day service was held, with Mrs. Elywin Powell, children's supervisor, in charge.

Boy Scout Troop 173 was represented at the Three Trails Camporee, October 10-11, by twenty-two Scouts and seven leaders.

Mrs. Thomas Steele replaces Mrs. Robert Frazer as leader of Daughters of Zion.

The excavation work for the new church has begun. The building fund goal for the next twelve months is $25,000.

AT STONE CHURCH, a drive began July 1 to break ground for the new religious education building. Pastor Glaude Smith reported that $14,563 had been raised, and it is hoped that the entire amount may be on hand by next General Conference.

AT SOUTH CRYSLER, three babies received blessings on September 27. They were Vicki, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Peterson, blessed by her uncle, Elder Joe Baldwin, and her grandfather, Elder Elvin Seaton; Kevin Jay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benton Paxton, blessed by Elders Orville Hiles and James Van Biber; and Cynthia Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Watts, blessed by Elders James Van Biber and Orville Hiles.

A priesthood class has been organized during the church school hour. Elder Norman Cox is the teacher.

A girl's junior chorus has been organized under the direction of Mrs. Lucille Peek. They sang at church school hour October 11. With the increase in number of children coming into the chorus at the age of seven, Mrs. Peek saw a need for two groups—there are about forty children in the two groups.

IN THE SECOND CHURCH CONGREGATION, about fifty persons of all ages took a bus tour October 11. The tour was sponsored by the young adult group, whose leaders are Arthur and Myrtle Collins. Points of interest along the way were explained by Elder Bren Sarratt, who had made an extensive study of famous church landmarks. Brother C. Ed. Miller, who accompanied the group, was also able to give interesting side lights. Richmond, Missouri, was the first stop, where the graves of David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery were visited. The group had lunch at Gallatin, Missouri, the county seat of Caldwell County, where the Saints once had a thriving community. They saw the remains of the Nephite altar, and the few logs that still stand at Lyman Wight's home. They stood on the rock from which Joseph Smith delivered his first sermon to the people of Caldwell County. Last, they visited the old jail at Liberty, Missouri.

The new addition to Second Church is progressing steadily with volunteer labor.

On Sunday, September 27, an ordination service was held at the eleven o'clock hour. At this time Lane Bolt was ordained to the office of elder, Eldon Shakespeare to the office of teacher, Warren West to the office of priest, and Darrell Bolt to the office of deacon. Elders officiating in this ordinance were Bren Sarratt, Herman Chelline, Leroy Hunt, Everett West, Arthur Collins, and Lane Bolt.—From November Centerstake News

Annual Election

PLEASANTON, KANSAS.—The annual mission election was held October 28, with District President W. E. Williams in charge. The following officers were elected: Ralph Murdock, pastor; Orion Dennis, church school director; Anna McAlister, secretary; Alma Springer, treasurer and primary teacher; Verna Nicholson, music director; Ross DeMott, auditor; Ed Nicholson, publicity agent and adult teacher; Elmer McAlister, solicitor; Ella Richardson, intermediate class teacher; and Ed Nicholson, Orion Dennis, and Alma Springer, building project committee members.

Brother W. E. Williams conducted a ten-day series of meetings in October, with a large crowd each night.—Reported by ED NICHOLSON

Repairs Made on Joseph Smith Home

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—New officers for the year are Arnold J. Ourth, pastor; Mrs. Roberta Garrett, church school director; R. H. Atkinson, adult supervisor; Mrs. Madelyn Hartman, children's supervisor; Ruth Knipe, branch secretary; Ralph Tripp, branch recorder and solicitor; Harold Smith, treasurer; Vera Garrett, church school secretary; Blanche Klingelmueller, women's leader; Betty Tripp, branch historian; Mildred Smith, music supervisor; J. W. Klingelmueller, book steward; Florence Ourth, publicity; R. H. Atkinson, J. W. Klingelmueller, and Elmer Garrett, finance committee; Ralph Tripp, R. H. Atkinson, and Albert Tripp, building committee.

Extensive repairs are being made on the historic Joseph Smith homestead. The old log timbers have been replaced by new timbers. The log portion of the homestead was built in 1803. In 1839 it was sold to Joseph Smith by James White, a river captain, for $5,000.

The Mansion House, built to accommodate travelers who came to the city, and the homestead in which the Smith family lived, are open to the public with free guide service. Fred Banta is in charge of this service. He was assisted during the summer months by Blair Bryant of Independence and Lloyd Tripp of Nauvoo. Others who assisted included Darwin Sweezer and Ralph Gunn of Fort Madison, and Hal Smith and Lee Ourth of Nauvoo.

In October there were 1,500 visitors registered; in September, more than 3,000 visited the historic buildings.

During the winter months, Brother Banta will be working among the churches in the southeast Iowa area, and the guide work will be carried on by John Williams, caretaker.—Reported by FLORENCE OURTH

Sermons Recorded

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA.—The Red River District held a well-attended reunion the first part of June, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth present. Others who assisted in ministry were Elder Cecil Ettinger and Sister Ettinger, and Elder and Mrs. Deibert Smith. Sister Smith taught the women's class, on the "Challenge of the Restoration," featuring food and health primarily.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Huey Black of Fargo, is active and has held two retreats during the year.

Fall conference was held in Fargo and a two-day rally October 10-11 was well attended.

Women's institute was held October 25 at Audubon, with Dr. C. F. Young of Fargo as speaker. A round-table discussion followed, directed by Mrs. Kate Rotzien, district women's leader.

During the past year the branches of the district have enjoyed the ministry of Apostle Chesworth, Seventies Ettinger and Smith, Patriarchs A. K. Dilly and J. Charles May, and in the Clitherall Branch, Elder Mann and family of Decatur, Nebraska, and Kenneth Sherman and others of the Center Place, including the Howard Anderson family, who spent part of their time at their cottage at Clitherall.

The branch has been privileged to listen to some of the sermons delivered at the reunion, which were tape recorded by the pastor, Julius Stabnow.—Reported by ALTA KIMBER

Washington, D. C., Church

ON OCTOBER 26, the Washington, D.C., Branch began to see the realization of a dream of decades when a contractor moved onto the site to commence construction of the first Reorganized Latter Day Saints church to be built in the nation's capital. Formal ground-breaking for the edifice took place on August 2, 1953, with President F. Henry Edwards and Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp representing the General Church. Other ground breakers included a venerable charter member of the Washington Branch, Elder Adolphus Edwards, Sr., and Sister Rebecca Froyd, often called "the mother of the Washington Branch."

As chairman of the current building committee, Elder Richard Wahl represented all the membership of the committee, past and present. Others who participated included Sister Myra Harder for the women's department, Priest Joseph Piedimonte for the Zion's League, Elder R. A. Bobbitt for the New York-Philadelphia District, and the Washington Branch pastor, High Priest John T. Conway.

Situated at 3526 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., the new structure will be centrally located for the Washington congregation and will be on a section of the avenue recently called the "Street of Churches" by the Washington Post. Many beautiful churches, embassies, and fine residences stand along both sides of this portion of Massachusetts Avenue, and the church will have reason to be proud of the brick-faced building now going up at an estimated cost for building and furnishings of over $150,000. The project is being jointly financed by the Washington Branch and the General Church.

DEATHS

ANDERSON.—Benjamin M., son of Andrew K. and Enger Ormsdatter Anderson, was born on October 17, 1869, near Mission, Illinois, and died November 4, 1953, in Omaha, Nebraska. In 1872 the family settled near Lamoni. Benjamin became a member of the Reorganized Church in early youth and from 1902 served in various priesthood offices, including priest, elder, high priest, bishop's agent, and presiding elder of both Omaha and Lincoln Branches. On February 24, 1891, he was married to Mary Audentia Smith, granddaughter of Joseph Smith II and daughter of Joseph Smith III and Bertha Madison Smith. Four of the seven children born to them survive him. After high school, Brother Anderson became an employee of the Herald Publishing House and eventually was made superintendent of the printing department. In 1902 he was employed as a salesman by the Carpenter Paper Company of Omaha; after fourteen years he became sales manager and buyer. In 1930 he took charge of the branch in Lincoln for the company, retiring four years later and returning to Omaha. He had been a member of the Omaha Rotary Club since 1919, and during World War II he served as chairman of Omaha's Draft Board No. 1.

Besides his wife he leaves three daughters: Bertha A. Hulmes of Denver, Colorado; Doris Fredrick of Orlando, Florida; and Rogene Prucha of Lincoln, Nebraska; a son, Duane S. Anderson of Springfield, Ohio; a brother, David Anderson of Phoenix, Arizona; a sister, Miss Nellie Anderson of Lamoni; ten grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren.

McMICKEN.—Elizabeth Ann, was born October 10, 1858, in Ontario, Canada, and died October 28, 1953, in Los Angeles, California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 10, 1887, and was the oldest member of the Central Los Angeles congregation. She had attended services there the past thirty years.

Surviving are five daughters: Bertha J. Meyers, Betty G. Cusick, Ethel Hart, Ollie Callahan, and Maude Wells; and two sons: Wes and Hunter McMicken. Funeral services were conducted by Elders G. E. Tickemyer and Walter Lane at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

CARNEY.—Nancy Louanna, daughter of Jarvis A. and Mary Delilah Jones, was born November 29, 1883, in Avilla, Missouri, and died August 25, 1953, in Tucson, Arizona, after a lengthy illness. On August 7, 1904, she was married to Albert Jackson Carney, who survives her. They lived at Fairland, Oklahoma; Blue Rapids, and Topeka, Kansas; Trinidad, Colorado; and Tucson, where she was active in church work. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was sixteen.

Besides her husband she leaves four daughters: Nettie Bramer of Denver, Colorado; Mabelle Galardi of Montebello, California; Ruth Robino of LaVeta, Colorado; and Grace DeBella of Trinidad; a son, Floyd Carney of Monterey Park, California; five brothers: Charles Jones of Del Paso Heights, California; J. Albert and Joseph G. Jones of Fairland; Ott S. Jones of Albuquerque, New Mexico; and William A. Jones of Little Rock, Arkansas; a sister, Mrs. Cordelia Thompson of Minier, Illinois; and thirteen grandchildren. A son, Ammon, preceded her in death. Funeral services were conducted in Tucson on August 29. Elders A. E. Hartman and I. E. Turner officiating, after which the body was flown to Trinidad where services were conducted by Elder J. D. Curtis at the Campbell-Lewis Mortuary. Interment was in the Masonic Cemetery in Trinidad.

DILLON.—F. Ed., was born near Palmyra, Tennessee, on July 28, 1886, and died at his home in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, on October 22, 1953. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1909, ordained an elder in 1910, a high priest in 1923, and a patriarch in 1934. For many years he served Central Oklahoma District as bishop's agent, and from 1920 until 1934 was district president. He was in the grocery business until he retired so that he could give full time to his church work; he was especially interested in ministering to the Indians. He continued to serve the church until his health failed. In 1893 he was married to Rodilla Vickrey. After her death he married Ethel B. Brooner, a teacher in the Oklahoma City public schools. Besides his wife, Ethel, he leaves a brother, S. A. Dillon of Oklahoma City, and a sister, Mrs. G. H. Nolon of Palmyra. Interment was in Memorial Park Cemetery, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GROVES.—Orville Lawrence, son of John K. and Julia Ann Groves, was born October 11, 1867, near Rome, Indiana, and died November 6, 1963, after being bedfast for nearly three years (place of death not given). As a young man he taught school in Indiana, Tennessee, and Arkansas, then worked as a carpenter on the Southern Railroad and in Mt. Vernon, Illinois. On September 11, 1895, he was married to Effie Cummings; two children were born to them. A son, Damon, preceded him in death in 1928. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 25, 1911, and ordained a teacher on April 5, 1931, in which office he served as long as his health permitted.

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Zelma Henson of Xenia, Illinois; three grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the church, Elders Harry Henson and Brad Henson officiating. Burial was in the Henson Cemetery.

JAMES.—Albert George, was born November 19, 1882, and died October 10, 1953, at Gloucester Royal Infirmary in England. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for eleven years and was enrolled at Gloucester Branch. As a furniture dealer he will be remembered for his pleasing personality and warmheartedness. Many of his business associates attended his funeral, which was conducted by Bishop A. T. Trapp at the church, Number 4 Wellington Street. Interment was at Coney Hill Cemetery.

JUDD.—John Arthur, was born November 25, 1882, at Enfield, England, and died November 2, 1953, at his home in Enfield. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1901. After his ordination as a priest he was elected in 1904 to serve as pastor of Enfield Branch, which position he held until 1940. In April, 1906, he was married to Elizabeth Tadgell; five sons were born to them. His wife, Elizabeth, died in 1941; later he was married to Gladys Maloney. One son, David, died in 1931. With four of his sons he founded a builders business; they assisted in the construction of the church building in Enfield. Not having any daughters, he and his wife adopted Mollie Maloney, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. Maloney.

He is survived by his wife, Gladys; four sons: Dover, John, and Frank of Enfield, and William of Taree, Australia; and his adopted daughter, Mrs. Edwin Spargo of Vancouver, British Columbia. The funeral was held in the church at Enfield, Pastor J. F. Schofield and Patriarch J. W. Worth officiating. A memorial service was held on Sunday, November 8, with Patriarch Worth giving the address. Interment was in Lavender Hill Cemetery.

LANDRUM.—Ruth White, daughter of J. J. and Vinnie Buckley White, was born September 5, 1902, at Jackson, Ohio, and died October 3, 1953, at her home near Pleasant Valley, Ohio. On June 12, 1922, she was married to Sylva E. Landrum, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 19, 1950.

Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, Mrs. Ammon Beatty of Dayton, Ohio; her mother; a sister; two brothers; and one grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Sperry Chapel in Jackson, Elder Floyd T. Rockwell and Roy Beatty officiating. Interment was in Greenlawn Cemetery, Jackson.

SMITH.—Carrie, daughter of John A. and Mary Evans, was born July 2, 1870, near Blairstown, Iowa, and died November 9, 1953, in Hinsdale, Illinois, where she was making her home with a daughter. On October 30, 1892, she was married to Walter C. Smith, who preceded her in death on June 23, 1942. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March, 1919.

Surviving are three sons: Floyd E. of Miami, Florida; Clyde N. of Topeka, Kansas; and Roy E. of Fullerton, California; twin daughters: Etta Jones of Omaha, Nebraska, and Edna Schonlan of Hinsdale, Illinois; eleven grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Pfeifer Chapel in Hinsdale, Elder Marion Cooper officiating. Interment was in Greenfield, Iowa.

WOLFE.—Frances Esther, was born July 3, 1899, at Prosperity, Missouri, and died November 9, 1953, at St. Joseph Hospital in Wichita, Kansas. On July 17, 1917, she was married to James R. Wolfe, who survives her. In 1920 they moved to Wichita, Kansas, and there joined the Reorganized Church on May 23, 1922.

Besides her husband she leaves a son, Charles Richard of Monrovia, California; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Broadway Mortuary in Wichita. Elders Ronald E. Manuel and Francis H. Vickery officiating. Interment was in Wichita Park Cemetery.

Introducing

LUCILLE (BARKER) BACON, Flint, Michigan (page 12), is a housewife who loves to express herself in writing. In her early life she chose the medium of music as her form of expression, but now she says, "To my surprise writing brings a more total sense of satisfaction."

Sister Bacon explains that she was baptized as a child but that her conversion came about as an adult through investigation and meditation. Step by step she came to a conviction of faith and religion.

She was married to Paul J. Bacon in July, 1942. They have four children: Roseanne Gretchen, 6; Paul Jonathan, 5; Jan Garver, 3½; and Jeannine Lucille, 1.

Sister Bacon has attended many college lectures and short courses. She is the thoughtful type and enjoys expressing the "deep down" feelings in her writings.

MOVING ON

The other day our neighbor moved his horses out of the old pasture where they had eaten the grass down to the roots. He had another fenced field where the grass was tall, lush, and green. The horses resisted being caught in the old pasture. They were excited as they were led away. But in the new field they were glad.

We cannot stay in one place forever without growing stale. We exhaust our ideas and people's patience. We begin to repeat ourselves and bore others. We have gleaned every last bit of our harvest in that field. It will take a new person to plant and reap new things there. It is good if we are wise enough to recognize when it is time to move on, to let the normal changes of life refresh us and others. God made all of us with a certain nomadic trait, a migratory instinct. When fall comes, the wild geese soar on their powerful wings and go south. People also sometimes need to migrate.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Stanley W. Johnson

THE "W." stands for White, a reminder that Stan is the grandson of Apostle I. N. White. Stan almost became a newspaper man—and he may have been a professional baseball player. And thereon hangs the story of the choice he made to accept General Church appointment.

While at home in Spokane going to high school and in college he did advertising, then joined the editorial and reporting staff for a large city newspaper. At the end of his four years of college, he had gained some seniority in his department and was almost tempted to stay.

Also during high school and college he became active in sports. He played and refereed, and finally turned down a proposal that probably would have led to professional baseball. It was a blow to his feeling for glamour at the time, but often since then he has been glad of his decision. He says, however, that it is still difficult to go past a baseball park without feeling the urge to go in and "put on the spikes."

Stan feels that he owes much of his development in the church to his parents. They aided him in his search for truth without being restrictive. Under the subtle direction of Elder Philip Moore, who was then pastor in Spokane, he became vitally interested in full-time church work. He was ordained a priest in 1947 and an elder in 1950, just following the Conference when he received his first appointment to New York District. In 1952 he was reappointed there, and just recently his appointment has been extended to include the newly organized Scranton District. He was ordained a Seventy in 1952.

Stan was born May 17, 1928, in Spokane, Washington, and baptized there in 1937. He was graduated from North Central High School in 1946 and from Graceland in 1948. He received his B. A. degree in Bible and Christian Education from Whitworth College in Spokane in 1950 immediately following his appointment. He worked on school publications all the way through college and received several honors in this field, including the silver seal for journalism at Graceland.

In 1951 he married Jane Cook of Providence, Rhode Island. They met while serving on the staff of a church youth camp in Pennsylvania, had their first date in New Jersey, became engaged in Iowa, and were married in Massachusetts. They live in Buffalo, New York, where Stan is district missionary and president, and for the past eighteen months he has served also as pastor of the Buffalo Branch.

Stan's hobbies are sports, photography, and books. His special interest in the church is youth work.

The Tests of Religion

"The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by his actions are weighed."—I Samuel 2: 3.

RELIGION is many things to many people, according to their ideas and requirements. It is good or bad for them according to its truth or error. And religion has its differences, even among the members of the church.

Sometimes religion is the voice of conscience, accusing us of doing something unworthy of our principles, not up to the standards that we ought to set for ourselves.

Sometimes religion is a star of hope on a dark night, and it shows the way through danger, temptation, and fear.

Again, religion gives encouragement when we doubt our powers, our strength, our capacities. It helps us to endure hard conditions, and not to give in to the whining voice of failure.

THE MOST OBVIOUS COMMENT on the text is the fact that no recognition is given to those for whom religion is merely a collection of talking points. No credit is allowed for those who think religion is something to be practiced exclusively at church. God weighs actions wherever they take place—with the priests and the Levite, and the good Samaritan on the road to Jericho, in shops and streets of Kansas City and St. Louis, in the Loop of Chicago, Times Square of New York City, and San Francisco's Market Street, at the little filling station on the highway across the desert, or in the all-night lunch place where truckers and workmen stop for refreshment.

Wherever you are, whatever you do, this includes you. What we need most is this realization, "God is watching me now, and I must do my best."

UNIVERSITY students have to take many tests. They study for a while, then take an examination to prove what they have learned. At the end of the course they take a final test and learn whether they have succeeded or failed. Without tests there could be no achievement, no honors, no degrees, no public recognition of professional merit and proficiency. The authority and value of the diploma rest upon a foundation of many examinations.

The special student may audit the courses and read the references. But there is something that he does not and cannot share with the regular students. There is the pressure, the study late at night, the hard cramming for examinations, the sharp lash of the whip of incentive, and the dark fear of failure. The regular student faces a stern "must." This is also true in life and religion.

A FRIEND at the university recently was awarded his Doctor's degree. This represented the culmination of some years of study and research, and the passing of very difficult examinations. At the close of the oral examination, the dean of his school said to him with a smile, "Now you will never have to take another examination!"

When the story was related to another graduate student he commented: "Yes, but he will still have to take examinations. He must examine himself every day to see whether he is doing what is right by his students, whether he is measuring up to his highest standards." There is something to think about in a great many departments of life. In our religion, too, we need to examine ourselves.

What a religion means to a person may depend far more on what he has done for God than on what God has done for him. Those who receive the showers of blessings from the open windows of heaven, those who drink the transformed wine at the wedding feast are not always themselves greatly changed. But those who go to work for God are changed in heart and spirit by miracles more marvelous than those that draw the crowds of wondering, curious, hungry people.

THIS TESTING BUSINESS works two ways, but many people do not know it. A man tests his religion, but ultimately something greater happens: the religion tests the man.

If it is a good religion—if it is a true one—it always passes the test with its people. It is in the counter-testing that many a man fails.

Religion has many tests. Among them are the test of truth, the test of service, and the test of love. Other tests are very important. But in any list of the great ones, these three are sure to be included, if the list is what it ought to be. Not whether it is exclusive, but whether it is true; not whether it is costly or wonderful, but whether it serves; not whether it is devoted to ostentatious good works, but whether it is motivated by love—these are the important things.

Gibson's Broadcast on WBBM

Some weeks ago Radio Station WBBM, Chicago, carried a program entitled the "Paul Gibson Show" in which Mr. Gibson gave a biographical broadcast on Joseph Smith. From reports reaching us, Mr. Gibson misrepresented the facts, indicating he was not advised as to the merits of the controversy about the founder of the church. We have tried unavailingly to get a copy of Mr. Gibson's script, and by latest letter from Station WBBM we learn that Mr. Gibson uses no scripts whatsoever on any of his daily programs.

We submit that Mr. Gibson's method is hardly fair to those with whom he deals, since they have no advance notice or opportunity to secure a recording of what he says. We have no doubt the station itself made and has such a record, but obviously it is not inclined to be helpful to us.

A Question of Ethics

There are, of course, sharp differences of doctrine between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Mormon Church as well as some differences as to facts; but recently one of our appointees called our attention to a matter, asking if we could not compel the Mormons to "cease and desist."

Here is the situation: The Great Lakes Mission (Mormon) in a "fund-raising venture," as their advertising puts it, is sending out circulars advertising souvenir "underglazed dinner plates." A picture of this plate shows, as stated thereon, the "temples of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Occupying a prominent place among pictures of some thirteen temples is the Kirtland Temple. Thus it is more than implicated—indeed it is explicit—that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints owns the Temple at Kirtland. What can be gained by such methods is questionable, of course; but the whole matter lies without the realm of civil law. It does raise the question, however, is such procedure honest? I. A. S.

Council of Twelve

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.
—Matthew 28: 18.

In line with this command to his first apostles, the Master continues to designate twelve special witnesses to go out from our General Conferences to teach the nations. They are assisted by the Seventies, the standing ministry, and other appointees, plus every loyal Saint who heeds the counsel that he who is warned shall warn his neighbor.

Called by revelation, these Twelve are "to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof," to act as supervisors and administrators under the direction of the First Presidency, each in the field of his appointment. They take the lead in providing missionary material and literature, the missionary kits, and missionary edition of the Book of Mormon which the Saints have helped to distribute and which have been followed up by letters and missionary visits.

The Council of Twelve occupies two suites of offices just east of the foyer, which include a council room in which its members meet to plan their missionary endeavors under the leadership of Apostle Paul M. Hanson. In this council young men are selected for appointment and others are called to function in the evangelistic office. Surveys of stakes, districts, and developmental areas are discussed. This council, in conjunction with the Presidency and Bishopric and departments concerned, has been alert to new methods of evangelizing and meeting the spiritual indifference of our modern world, with the result of cottage meeting methods and extended use of visual materials and radio.

As the first apostles were chosen from different walks of life, varied interests and experiences, so it has been in the Restoration of God's work in the latter days, and today Denmark, Australia, England, Ireland, Canada, and our Eastern, Western, and Central States are represented in the choosing of our Apostles.

Across the Desk

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth:

On Sunday, November 22, we had another Missouri Development Area Day at Huntsville Branch. The attendance was by far the best we have had, being 33 per cent of the enrollment in the area. These 160 people were very enthusiastic, and the day spent with them certainly was a reward for what the church is doing in this development assignment.

Because of distance no one was there from Rolla, Trenton, nor Belle, and very few from Jefferson City and Linn. However, Linn was better represented than ever before.

Our day's activity consisted of an 8:45 class which I conducted, Communion service in charge of Brother Puckett, I preached at 11:00 and Brother Puckett presided at a testimony meeting at 1:30. We try to vary the program each time we call the members together.

Retaining Remission of Our Sins

By Floyd Potter

And as Enoch spake forth the words of God, the people trembled and could not stand in his presence. And he said unto them, Because that Adam fell, we are; and by his fall came death, and we are made partakers of misery and woe. Behold Satan hath come among the children of men, and tempteth them to worship him; and men have become carnal, sensual and devilish, and are shut out from the presence of God. But God hath made known unto our fathers, that all men must repent. And he called upon our father Adam, by his own voice, saying, I am God; I made the world, and men before they were in the flesh. . . . If thou wilt, turn unto me and hearken unto my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized, even in water, in the name of mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, asking all things in his name, and whatsoever ye shall ask it shall be given you. . . . By reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so become of dust a living soul; even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye may be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified.—Genesis 6: 48-53, 61-63, Inspired Version.

ABOUT SEVENTEEN YEARS AGO I first read the Book of Mormon. I devoured it from cover to cover. A friend had advised me to approach its study by a preliminary quick reading, then to start again, reading carefully and studiously. It was not until several years later that I was able to make the second and more thorough coverage. At that time a phrase used by two of the prophetic writers stood out clearly from the text, making a certain phase of the gospel more meaningful to me.

"Retaining a remission of your sins" is a phrase entirely unique to the Book of Mormon. No other of the Standard Books use it, although the concept involved is inherent in their message. Even in the Book of Mormon it occurs only three times—twice by one writer, King Benjamin, and once by the prophet Alma.

Original Sin

Exactly what is meant by this unique phrase? First, the reality of sin is clearly implied and accepted in it. Human sin had its origin in our first parents, Adam and Eve. They sinned not only as individuals, but as forerunners of the race. Hence, the disposition to sin was transmitted to their children. Every child born into this world carries this natural "taint" of original sin. Though the idea is repugnant to many, and overlooked by some Reorganized Latter Day Saints, we have the principle clearly stated in Genesis 6: 57, Inspired Version:

And the Lord spake unto Adam, saying, Inasmuch as thy children are conceived in sin, even so, when they begin to grow up sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter, that they may know how to prize the good.

Responsibility for such original guilt rests, of course, only on Adam and Eve. "We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression," states the Epitome of Faith, and once again this concept is soundly based in the Scriptures:

Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world.—Genesis 6: 56, Inspired Version.

Personal Sin

Millions of persons today deny any personal responsibility for their own sins, and even try to discount the reality of sin. They are influenced much of the time by suggestions that man, as we know him today, originally emerged from a jungle existence, having developed from subhuman types of life, billions of years in the process. Sin, from this viewpoint, is often seen as "the relic of our rise." The jungle disposition is gradually being refined out of our corporate existence by the very process of long-continued growth.

But the testimony of the Spirit and of the prophets is in striking contrast with such a view. Someone has characterized the Book of Mormon message as resting upon the "two poles of sin and atonement." That definition applies with equal emphasis to the other sacred texts, and the promulgation of the gospel message generally. Sin and individual accountability for it are clearly taught by Paul: "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Romans 3: 23); and later on in the same letter he gives a very inclusive definition of sin: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (14: 23). The Savior, in delineating the work of the Holy Spirit, tells us: "He will convict the world, convincing men of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment" (John 16: 8), Moffatt's Translation.

How Is Sin Remitted?

Sin is real. Man is held liable before God for his own sins. He can only finally discharge the guilt of such sins by following the way prescribed by Jesus Christ, and that way can be summarized in the one word "repentance." It was not without sufficient cause that the Lord indicated the work of his church and ministry in such a phrase when he commanded the first elders of this dispensation: "Say nothing but repentance unto this generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 4b; 10: 4b).

This message is clearly in harmony with the commandments to the ministry of former generations: "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained" (John 20: 23).

The manner in which the apostles remitted sins is demonstrated in their activities on the day of Pentecost. At that time, Peter said to the sin-convicted multitude: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38).

Remission was offered to them on condition of sincere repentance which would issue in the committal of the life to Christ in baptism. It is of interest to note that the retaining of sins is through the retaining or withholding of the ordinances, by the ministry, in the case of those persons whom they recognize as being not fully prepared for baptism.

Can We Lose a Remission of Sins?

Having been forgiven through repentance and baptism, how do we stay forgiven? In other words, how do we retain a remission of our sins? The very words suggest that we can possibly lose God's forgiveness. How can we lose forgiveness once received? For a moment it may be as well to pause here and clarify this matter. We may find some help in Doctrine and Covenants 81: 2:

And now, verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, will not lay any sin to your charge; go your ways and sin no more; but unto that soul who sinneth shall the former sins return, saith the Lord your God.

In his commentary on this particular passage, President Edwards says:

By failing to repent, or by returning to their sins after a brief period of repentance, the Saints not only became liable for their new disobedience to the law but also fell into the way of destruction because of the renewed strength of their earlier sins.—Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, page 257, 1946 Edition.

So, although we may never lose forgiveness of sins once repented of, it is possible for us to lose the effects of that forgiveness. Thus, when the prophets speak of "retaining a remission of our sins," they are saying that we can conserve the effects of forgiveness or originally secured in repentance and baptism. They are saying also that we can live always in the continuing favor of God's forgiveness of all subsequent sins.

Just as remission is obtained through repentance and the works of repentance, so remission is retained through repentance—day-by-day living in its spirit and practice.

How About Remission at the Lord's Table?

Some may wish to add here that the regular partaking of the Lord's Supper ensures our continuing forgiveness. There is scant evidence in any of the Standard Books which suggests that the primary purpose of this sacrament is for extending forgiveness. There are commandments to partake only in worthiness, and special directions about the need for harmonious relationships with one's brothers and sisters if the "love feast" is to be effectual. But, we repeat, the purpose of this sacrament is not to offer us remission of sins. If such were the case, one might well expect to find some reference to it in the noble, exalted words of the communion prayers, commanded by revelation. Review the rendition of these prayers found in two of the Standard Books, Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, 23, and Moroni chapters 4 and 5.

Analysis of them reveals that we partake for these reasons:

- (1) In remembrance of the body (and blood) of Christ
- (2) As a witness that we (a) willingly bear the name of Christ, (b) will always remember him, (c) will keep his commandments
- (3) That we may always have his Spirit to be with us

How Do We Retain a Remission of Sins?

The Scriptures do tell us rather specifically how we may "retain the remission of our sins." Let us here examine this phrase and its context. King Benjamin is the speaker. It is his farewell address to the people he has served so long and faithfully. Part of it reads:

If ye have known of his goodness, and have tasted of his love, and have received a remission of your sins, which causeth such exceeding great joy in your souls, even so I would that ye should remember, and always retain in remembrance, the greatness of God, and your nothingness, and his goodness and long suffering towards you unworthy creatures, and humble yourselves even in the depths of humility, calling on the name of the Lord daily, and standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come, which was spoken by the mouth of the angel; and behold I say unto you, that if ye do this, ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins.—Mosiah 2: 19-22.

Benjamin's list of the spiritual attitudes and practices which contribute to continuous forgiveness is by no means exhaustive. We turn to one of the remaining references on the subject in the Book of Mormon, and discover several other qualifying factors added:

Others were abasing themselves, succoring those who stood in need of their succor, such as imparting their substance to the poor and needy; feeding the hungry; and suffering all manner of afflictions, for Christ's sake, who should come according to the spirit of prophecy, looking forward to that day, thus retaining a remission of their sins.—Alma 2: 20.

Taken together, these prophetic discourses admonish us to:

- (1) Always retain in remembrance, (a) the greatness of God, (b) and our own nothingness, (c) his goodness and long suffering toward us unworthy creatures
- (2) Humble ourselves in the depths of humility
- (3) Call upon the name of the Lord daily
- (4) Stand steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come (the completed kingdom, etc.)
- (5) Succor those who stand in need of succor
- (6) Suffer whatever afflictions may come on us, for Christ's sake

Three Other Vital Factors

The foregoing considerations are excellent and indispensable. We wish to add some others by way of further clarification. If we are to retain a remission of our sins, we must do these things:

(a) Recognize sin for what it is: One of the indexes of our spiritual maturity is the attitude we have toward sin in general, and our own sins in particular. No true spiritual development can be expected in a life which views sin in a casual, indifferent, cavalier, or cynical manner. The prophets have all evinced an unyielding opposition to sin in all forms and under all circumstances. They deliver to us the attitude of God: "The Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance."—Alma 21: 18; Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5f.

Nephi, in his "psalm" of praise, gives us an insight into his noble yearnings for a sin-free existence:

O wretched man that I am; yea, my heart sorroweth because of my flesh. My soul grieveth because of mine iniquities. I am encompassed about because of the temptations and

"Messiah" Soloists for the 1953 Broadcast

Pictured above are the soloists who will sing with the Independence "Messiah" Choir in the nation-wide broadcast on December 20 over C.B.S. Left to right they are Donna Silsby Weddle, contralto; Ralph Nielsen, tenor; Floyd Worthington, bass; Florence Manning, soprano. All are professional artists who have sung in "The Messiah" many times. Of special interest to church members is the fact that Mrs. Weddle is a well-known musician in the church, and Mr. Worthington received part of his voice training from Paul Craig.

the sins which doth so easily beset me. And when I desire to rejoice, my heart groaneth because of my sins.—II Nephi 3: 31-34.

Wilt thou make me that I may shake at the appearance of sin?—II Nephi 3: 53.

Also, concerning certain high priests, it is recorded:

Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin, save it were with abhorrence.—Alma 10: 4.

Such exalted, idealistic sensitivity to spiritual values is typical of truly prophetic souls. To an ever-increasing degree we must identify ourselves with such a viewpoint. As we become imbued with it, we truly desire to "retain a remission of our sins," by continually securing God's forgiveness as may be required.

(b) Be ever vigilant against sin's encroaching influence. Returning to King Benjamin's sermon, we read:

But this much I can tell you, that if ye do not watch yourselves, and your thoughts, and your words, and your deeds, and observe to keep the commandments of God, and continue in the faith of what ye have heard concerning the coming of our Lord, even unto the end of your lives, ye must perish.—Mosiah 2: 49.

The sum total of responsible human activity is included in these three: thoughts, words, and deeds. To keep such careful check of these areas as admonished by Benjamin does not imply that we should become morbid about our sins, or yet so introspective that we sink into despair as we view our many failings. It does imply our need to live in a state of "relaxed vigilance," determined to thwart the enticements of Satan, resist the siren calls of the world, and offset the undue demands of "the flesh." Christ's own admonition is of special interest here: "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26: 38, Inspired Version).

(c) Willingly confess our sins.

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—I John 1: 9.

Cease to do evil, learn to do well. . . . Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.—Isaiah 1: 16-18.

In such wholesome assurance we find the secret of continuous accessibility to divine forgiveness; there is no direction to wait for the sacramental emblems to obtain remission. As soon as we are aware of the intrusion of sin, that is the time to confess it and receive thereby from God the assurance of his fullest forgiveness.

Retaining a Remission from Day to Day

Toward the end of his discourse, Benjamin hints at a very practical aspect of the retaining of divine favor:

Now, for the sake of these things I have spoken unto you; that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God.—Mosiah 2: 42.

Benjamin would apparently divide life into a day-to-day existence of living in the spirit of repentance and forgiveness. Perhaps he had in mind the commendable plan to review the day's activities as we retire to rest each night. Offenses and omissions become apparent at that time, some of which may not have been noticed in the rush of the day's busyness. The true spirit of repentance will give us the grace to seek forgiveness, with the determination to avoid such sins in the future.

Thus it will be seen, "retaining a remission of our sins" calls for action, continuous striving after righteousness in a positive sense, and constant vigilance against the encroaching influence of sin. The phrase is synonymous with others from sacred writ. Paul defines it as being "alive in Christ," or "living in the Spirit." Retaining a remission of our sins is in direct ratio to the quality of spiritual life we lead. The soul-exalting effects of forgiveness once received in repentance and baptism can be maintained and expanded only according to our willingness to live continually for Christ.

With such a frame of mind and consistent practice of repentance we may reasonably expect to retain a remission of our sins. If we do not choose to so live, we hazard our spiritual future and effectiveness. "The former sins shall return, saith the Lord your God."

Feed My Lambs

By Floy L. Bennett

WHEN THE LORD commanded Peter, "Feed my lambs," I think he was saying, "Children are very important people in my kingdom. They need and deserve your ministry as well as do the adults." So far as I have been able to discover, authorities pretty well agree that Peter was a man's man. He is thought to have been big, husky, bold—utterly lacking in those qualities usually attributed to the effeminate man; yet the Lord asked him to minister to the children.

In our present Christian society children have been taken out of the family pew at church and placed in the basement, annex, or storage room where they are expected to learn how to worship God. In relatively few instances has a priesthood member been sent with them. The work of ministering to children has been turned over to the women. Have we forgotten that children need the ministry of the ordained minister as well as adults do? What man of the priesthood today feels the same degree of pride when asked to speak at junior church in the basement as he would if asked to speak to the adults in the main auditorium? Some of them perhaps, but not many.

Priesthood ministry to children is too often thought of as a lesser ministry, arguments to the contrary notwithstanding. Look around you. See for yourself. It is not my wish to indicate that all priesthood members could, if they would, minister with equal effectiveness to children in their special church services. But is it beyond the realm of possibility to suppose that God might choose certain ones specifically for that particular ministry? Many of our able men of the priesthood have a talent for ministering to the lambs but have not been encouraged or allowed to develop this talent.

One capable junior worker, a woman, recently said, "We discover a man who likes children, one who is interested in them enough to assume responsibility for their spiritual growth, a man who studies and prays that he may be really effective; then about the time his study and prayer begins to pay dividends in increased attendance, interest, and growth among the children, someone snatches him away and makes a pastor out of him. Then the adults demand all of his time, and the children must suffer the loss." Has such a man been promoted when he is moved from the junior church pastorate to pastor of the entire congregation? Is being a junior pastor or a primary pastor to be a mere steppingstone to something bigger and better?—What is bigger and better? Where can a man function with greater honor to God and, incidentally, to himself?

MANY OF US who have spent years working with children know that the height of spiritual development possible with these small ones has seldom been reached. No wonder we lose our children to the church. No wonder junior church is often "something to be endured until I'm old enough to do and go where I please." No wonder that the junior high boys and girls feel like strangers in the congregation with adults. They have not been prepared for it when they were young children by a consecrated and trained priesthood ministry. Instead they are suddenly transferred from a situation in which storytelling is the main event of the day (by personnel almost entirely made up of women) to church on an adult level. They have not been allowed to grow up; they are expected to jump suddenly from one environment to another for which they are not mentally, emotionally, or spiritually prepared. Is not this preparation the responsibility of priesthood?

We hear a great deal about getting down on the level of the child's understanding. Is it not possible we have overworked this idea? It is true that the child is more limited in vocabulary, experience, and general maturity than the adult, but one of the most common causes of lack of interest among children, especially of junior age, is that they feel they are being talked down to. An audience should always have to reach up to grasp the message a speaker gives, not stoop down. There is stimulation for growth in reaching—the kind of growth that prepares the child for happy and satisfying participation in the adult church situation.

THANK GOD for the women who have struggled with the burden when members of the priesthood, for various reasons, have not done it. Women have done a noble job and have given much. They do study to show themselves approved. They study the psychology of the age group with which they work. They buy many books on the subject of worship for children. They learn about visual aids and creative dramatics. They devote much time to preparation. As a result, these women usually do a better job with children than the priesthood members, not because they have more innate ability or adaptation for it, but because they have accepted their job as a stewardship and have worked to grow on the job. The children will always need the consecrated and trained women, but they also need trained priesthood to direct them in their worship—priesthood who believe in the importance of such a ministry and accept the challenge of such a stewardship. This is not to discredit in any way the outstanding work done for the children by a few of our ordained men, but too few are giving this type of ministry, and too few children are enjoying the blessing of such ministry.

It is the opinion of many that a priesthood institute which does not include a class to instruct those who have a particular talent for and interest in ministering to children is falling short of the possibilities inherent in a priesthood institute.

FAMILY MINISTRY, which necessarily includes children, is not enough. Priesthood members are needed in the children's religious services. I wish it might be said that our children of today look toward the ministry of the priesthood with joyous expectancy and hope. They do not. They have been disappointed too often. Too frequently they have been subjected to a tedious monologue, conveyed with hackneyed and meaningless phrases which do not touch them at all. It is just as understandable and no less interesting to them than it would be to an adult audience, but children are less tolerant and have not learned the "fine art" of thinking about incidents of another time and place while they give the appearance of rapt attention.

Children are just as frequently bored by the conscientious but unwise speaker who oversimplifies in an effort to adapt his message to them. Illustrations are fine for both children and adults, but to reduce the "preaching service" to a storytelling period every Sunday is to fail in the ultimate objective of the children's (especially juniors) worship service.

It is not my purpose to criticize unkindly the work that is being done by our divinely called and consecrated priesthood groups. As a lay member I have a real appreciation, respect, and love for them. Their ministry encourages and supports us when we are weak and rejoices with us when we are strong. In fact we value it so highly that we want it for our children. Feed my sheep? Yes, that must be done. But let us not forget the lambs, lest they become lost before they attain the status of sheep.

A very wise person has said that he who bends down to listen to the words of a child increases his own stature. Children are so receptive, so responsive, so ready to be fed. Let us remember the command of Christ—"Feed my lambs."

In Public Service

WE HAVE BEEN GRATIFIED in observing the expanding area of public service by members and officials of the church. To help in all good causes is our civic duty. It is indeed an effective way to demonstrate our way of life. At the moment of writing I am thinking of the service our able Presiding Bishop, Elder G. Leslie DeLapp, has given and is still giving the people of Independence and Jackson County, Missouri.

A few years ago the writer was instrumental in having Bishop DeLapp appointed as one of a commission of fourteen freeholders to draft a charter form of government for Jackson County. In his work he came in contact with many public-spirited and prominent citizens. This committee did its work well, but, unfortunately, the charter proposed was rejected by the voters, largely if not wholly, in my opinion, because of the resistance of reactionary influences.

I believe it is proper to consider briefly Bishop DeLapp's activities in a civic way, labors—and I mean just that—which he has carried on in addition to the specific responsibilities of his office in the church, which have not been neglected, to which he has been invited because of his standing in the community.

For something over ten years he has served as a member of the Board of Trustees of Blue Cross. In more recent years he has served as a member of the executive committee and is now the chairman of the Public Relations Committee of Blue Cross. His interest in this field has always been very keen, due to the fact that this nonprofit organization affords one of the best agencies through which average people can provide themselves with hospitalization when the need arises. He also has an interest in this which is definitely tied in with our hospital and the health needs of our church. Blue Cross strengthens the financial operations of all hospitals that are members, and therefore any contribution that he has made in this field has been with this two-fold interest—the need of our people and the meeting of the problems of health in the community in a broader way.

IN THE YEARS that he has served on our own hospital board he has had an interest in the work of the hospital council, which up to the present time has been largely a group representing the administrators of hospitals. The participation on the part of members of the boards of trustees of various hospitals has been quite limited. Recently the complexity of problems arising in hospital administration involving costs, personnel, etc., has brought to the foreground the need for a more efficient organization of such a council than has been possible hitherto with limited professional personnel available and with very meager funds for the financing of the operations of the council. Five or six months ago a number of board members—most of them presidents of the boards of different hospitals in the greater Kansas City area—were called together, and Bishop DeLapp was invited to meet with them. The Sanitarium Board took action authorizing that he do so. In a recent report of activities in this regard, Bishop DeLapp says:

We have been meeting quite regularly during recent months and have given consideration to problems of the operations of hospitals from the point of view of the boards of trustees. We have been very much aware in our discussions and studies of the need for co-ordination of accounting and operational procedures, as well as consideration of capital needs for the construction of hospitals. Because of the need for assembling such data we naturally have looked toward the organization of a hospital council that would be staffed with well-trained, professional people. To do this certain funds are required, and these members with whom I have been meeting have been giving consideration to such organization and to developing sources of income that would make possible the employment of a professional staff.

From this group of trustees a committee was appointed, of which I was a member. We developed a proposal to be submitted to the Kansas City Association of Trusts and Foundations. Other problems have been discussed by this group of board members, and I have found it most interesting to note the intense interest that these businessmen have in the welfare of the community and their desire to serve it through voluntary service to and through the hospitals. They are indeed a splendid group of community-minded men, and I feel this is a most important development in hospital work in this community.

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS Bishop DeLapp has also served on the Community Chest, one time as president, and subsequently on the executive committee of the Rural Jackson County Community Chest. This year he has done the least work of any year, due to illness and his church responsibilities.

A few weeks ago he was asked to serve on a committee of nine under the chairmanship of Mr. Ray Niles of Kansas City to make evaluations of the proposals developed by the Regional Planning Committee and the County Court for voting machines and improvements to the Court House in Kansas City and a new building to house the new Circuit Court for eastern Jackson County and to provide other needed facilities in eastern Jackson County. This committee recommended to the county court the setting of a date for an election for the approval of a bond issue for these purposes. This committee will continue to function until this comes before the voters.

In addition to the foregoing, he has been asked to serve as a member of a committee on the school bonds for the city of Independence.

ONE GOES THROUGH a certain period of service to the community wherein he accepts certain responsibilities. Some to which Brother DeLapp has given attention in the past and in which he has served are the following:

Member Jackson County Charter Commission, 1949 (to which reference has been made); President of Kiwanis Club, 1947; President, Knife and Fork Club; member of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, Independence; member of the Board of the American Cancer Society, Kansas City Chapter.

At the present time he has been added to the Board of Family Service, which is one of the agencies financed through the United Funds program. Family Service gives special attention and consideration to the establishment and maintaining of homes for youth, education in the field of domestic relations, etc.

I am sure our readers will be pleased to know what is being done by our Presiding Bishop to give our movement prestige. The writer, as a colleague, gives this merited recognition and congratulates him on the fine reputation accorded him by all who know him and for his splendid achievements.

There are others of our representatives who are also serving well in a civic way at the Center Place to whom we may make reference at a later time.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God

PART III

By Charles R. Hield

After the Thousand Years

At the end of the thousand years Satan shall be freed for a "little season" and then shall come up in battle against Christ and his saints:

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."—Revelation 20: 7-10. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 85: 35; Revelations 17: 14.)

We may be sure that Christ will be busy with his Saints, helping them perfect their own lives and teaching them how to better tell the message of truth to others during that thousand years. Obviously it will be those who in this life have prepared themselves, and are experienced here in building kingdom of God citizenship, who will be of most assistance to Christ in the millennium. Some evidently will be given positions of authority (see Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7), and will "reign" with him in his righteous government.

Then comes the final judgment. Satan, and the other sons of perdition, will be placed in a location of no glory, that shall be "as" a lake of fire. (Read Book of Mormon, II Nephi 6: 31-74, pages 107-110; Matthew 12: 31, 32; Hebrews 10: 29; 6: 4-6.)

All must appear before God, the Father, and Christ, the Son, for judgment. All will have again obtained their physical, perfect bodies—some in the first resurrection at the coming of Christ and the beginning of the millennium, while others will not come forth until the end of the thousand years at the time of the second resurrection. Christ shall by this time have been victorious over all people and powers:

And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard

I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.—Revelation 5: 13.

Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name:

That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Philippians 2: 9-11. (Read also Doctrine and Covenants 85: 31; 76: 7; Book of Mormon, Mosiah 11: 196-199, page 289.)

Evidently both God and Christ will have part in the final judgment:

And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works.—Revelation 20: 11-13.

The Book of Mormon makes a clear statement about the last judgment:

The spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, . . .

And we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt.

Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; . . .

And shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil.—Book of Mormon, Alma 8: 100-102, 104, page 342.

How much of the judgment the Father will commit to the Son is not known, but evidently much of it. Some of this judgment Christ shall make at his coming, for there must be a determining who shall be allowed to be in the millennium and who shall not:

For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.—John 5: 22.

We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.—Romans 14: 10.

I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing in his kingdom.—II Timothy 4: 1.

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.—Matthew 25: 31, 32.

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matthew 16: 27.

For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.—II Corinthians 5: 10. (See also Acts 17: 31.)

Naturally, in the Doctrine and Covenants the power in judgment of the Christ is also mentioned:

I am Alpha and Omega, Christ the Lord; yea, even I am He, the beginning and the end, the Redeemer of the world: I having accomplished and finished the will of him whose I am, even the Father, concerning me; having done this, that I might subdue all things unto myself; retaining all power, even to the destroying of Satan and his works at the end of the world, and the last great day of judgment, which I shall pass upon the inhabitants thereof, judging every man according to his works, and the deeds which he has done.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1.

. . . concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: . . . these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

The Glories

That the judgment will place most people in three different levels of glory is made clear in the Bible:

There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.

So also is the resurrection of the dead.—I Corinthians 15: 40-42. (Read also II Corinthians 12: 2.)

Those of celestial glory are described in modern revelation. They are they who have received the testimony of Jesus, have been baptized, have been valiant in their testimony of him, etc. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.)

Terrestrial glory is given to the honorable men of the earth, who were blinded by the craftiness of men—those who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh but afterward received it. They will be those who have not been valiant in the testimony of Jesus, etc. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6.)

Telesstial glory is compared to the glory of the stars (as we see them) as differentiated from the moon and the sun. Those who receive this glory—

Are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus [i.e. refused to accept it]; these are they who deny not the Holy Spirit; these are they who are thrust down to hell; these are they who shall not be redeemed from the Devil, until the last resurrection.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

Death and hell shall be done away with. (See Revelation 20: 14.)

While our earth shall be made over for the millennial reign, it shall again be changed and improved more for the abode of the righteous in celestial glory. After the last judgment, John the Revelator tells of the following vision:

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, . . .

And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new.—Revelation 21: 1, 2, 5.

When the thousand years are ended, . . . the heaven and the earth shall be consumed, and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 6.

God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son, shall be present personally in celestial glory and minister to its citizens. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.) Those in terrestrial glory shall receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the fullness of the Father (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6). These also shall receive of the Holy Spirit through the ministrations of the celestial. Those in the celestial glory shall be as innumerable as the sands upon the seashore; and while they shall have bowed the knee and shall have confessed to Him who sits upon the throne forever and ever and shall be ministered to by the Holy Spirit through the ministrations of the terrestrial, yet "where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end" (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7).

Summary

What a life Jesus Christ, the Son of God has lived, is living, and will live! Note, in summary, the life of Christ:

With God the Father in the beginning
Appointed heir of all things
By inheritance obtained a more excellent name
Anointed above his fellows
The Son can do nothing of himself.
His Father is greater than he.
All power given to Christ in heaven and earth
Christ's doctrine is the doctrine of the Father.
The Father will send the Comforter at the Son's request.
Firstborn of every creature
Under the Father he created the heavens and the earth.
Defeated Lucifer in the battle of heaven
Christ, the head of the church, which is named after him
Created Adam

Appeared in his spiritual body to the Brother of Jared, 2200 B.C.
The God of Israel; the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob
The God of the whole earth
The God of the land
Took the city of Enoch to his bosom
Keeps the wicked in chains of darkness until the judgment
Has the keys of hell and death
Gave the law of Moses Softened the heart of Pharaoh
Christ is our lawgiver.
Spoke by the mouths of his holy prophets
Announced his coming to the world "on the morrow"
Born as a babe in Bethlehem
Organized his church, ordained apostles, baptized, etc.
Performed many miracles in Palestine
Crucified by those he sought to save
Went to preach to the spirits in prison
Came to America, announced by his Father
Selected his twelve disciples in America
He ministered, preached, etc., to the Nephites.
Went to visit the Lost Tribes
Still busy working with his Father
An unchangeable Christ—same yesterday, today and forever
Appeared with the Father to the prophet Joseph Smith
Called "Jehovah" by Joseph Smith
Our one Advocate and Mediator with the Father
Speaks to the church and the righteous today
Puts words in the mouth of his prophets today also
The only name—Jesus Christ—by which man may be saved
Directs the building of Zion, the New Jerusalem
Enoch's Zion shall return.
Christ's temple shall be built for his return.
Those who are in the north countries shall return.
Christ will appear suddenly in the heavens.
Righteous shall be caught up to meet him
The first resurrection: first the just
The heathen, and those who knew not the law, also in the first resurrection
Christ will minister and teach in the millennium.
Christ and the righteous to reign for 1,000 years
No war, no sickness—peace, love, etc., in the millennium
The Devil confined during the 1,000 years
Many nations shall come to Zion to learn of Christ's ways.
Many shall be joined to the Lord.
The second resurrection
Satan freed for a "little season"
Final battle between the righteous and the forces of evil
Satan overcome and cast with his angels into the lake of fire
The final judgment by God and Christ
Celestial, terrestrial, and telestial glory
God and Christ personally in celestial glory
Christ and the righteous minister also to the terrestrial.
The Holy Spirit, through the terrestrial, ministers to the telestial.
God and Christ rule forever and ever.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God, what a wonderful personality he is! How faithful, how loyal, how worthy he is to receive power, wisdom, honor, riches, strength, glory, and blessings!

We should be happy that we have such a clear account of his life and accomplishments in the Three Standard Books: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Well does the Christ merit his many titles: King of Kings, Lamb of God, Prince of Peace, Lord of Lords, The God of the Earth, Counselor, Marvelous, Wonderful, The Mighty Lord, etc. Yet he also was a great general, a great contractor, a great humanitarian whose prime concern was to his Father's will, and to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man through love and godly government.

What a balanced perspective he has of life and its purpose! Being the Creator of the heavens and the earth, knowing where gold, platinum, and uranium are, yet being interested in wealth only as it will further the development and perfection of a godlike citizen of the kingdom of his Father. He never lets the immediate—the problems of the moment—becloud his vision of life from the beginning until the end of time. How faithful, how diligent, how valiant, how courageous he is! He is positive that in the long run the great and good laws of his Father will win. He knows truth shall win in the end, and error shall fail.

What a perfect example his life is for every moment of our lives! May we, too, catch the diligence, the faithfulness, and the courage of the Son of God and fashion our lives from beginning to end as he does.

Christ comes to everyone in the world, pleading for loyalty and faithfulness to his program. He passes on to us the same challenge which his Father gave to him: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20: 21).

Some who have little knowledge about the teachings of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have asked us if we believe in Christ. The answer is most emphatically, "Yes." We believe in him perhaps more than any other people. We know he is the true Son of God. We talk of Christ; we rejoice in Christ; we preach of Christ. We believe he is unchangeable. We believe he spoke to his people in times past and still does today. We seek under his direction to give our lives to his cause and help him build the kingdom of God. He calls his people "friends" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 8). We do not aspire to be gods as Lucifer did (Isaiah 14: 14); but we seek humbly, yet with courage and intelligence, to serve with the Christ in the world's greatest task—the building of the kingdom of God. Christ has said: ". . . if you keep my commandments you shall . . . be glorified in me, as I am in the Father" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 3).

Overcoming Today's Tensions

By Grant Dobson

All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, have consulted together to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm decree, that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days, save of thee, O king, he shall be cast into the den of lions. . . .

Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime.—Daniel 6: 7, 10.

IN RECENT YEARS such words as "frustration," "sublimation," "suppression," "inhibition," and "drives" have become a rather familiar part of man's vocabulary. While these terms have taken on wider usage and are more fully recognized as important factors in human living, there is still pointed disagreement concerning the relative place each of these principles should have in the life of man.

One extreme maintains that the ego should seldom, if ever, be frustrated, and that suppression and inhibition should have only a small place in daily living. When possible, the basic drives should be satisfied. In addition to this it is also contended that, since guilt comes only after we violate some ideal which the positive superego, conscience, has set up as being the good pattern, man will be healthier mentally if he avoids the erecting of such ideals. The thesis here maintained is that guilt, as a product of the mind, can be avoided by carefully establishing ideals within the moral reach of the individual, or at least by rearranging his values.

IT IS TRUE that many have become discouraged because of the inability to reach the high goals set up, either by themselves or others. Because of this they developed conflicts, and in some cases an attitude of defeatism. Certainly they experience considerable unhappiness and wonder if it is worth the struggle. Because they usually have their eyes fastened upon what they consider as their abject failures, they do not notice the triumph in their lives. They do not consider the many things which they have overcome, nor do they see how successful they have been on many occasions. Some have stood where they are and have chosen as immediate goals that which might well, in many cases, take years to accomplish. In academic work children have often set goals which have been beyond all hope of achievement, and as a consequence, incurable discouragement has resulted. Even though a revision of values may become necessary, in the final analysis man must aspire to greater nobility else his progress will become static.

In his better moments he realizes that what is best for the group should take precedence over personal desires, and that which is best for the greatest number should be the basis for decision and judgment. The most valuable athlete is the one who thinks first of the team instead of personal glory. Participation in an activity for the sake of personal reward at the expense of others cannot lead to the development and the enhancement of the group. If there is no alternative, the frustration of the individual is preferred to the frustration of the finest hopes of many. Distinction should be made between frustrations and barriers. While frustration might, ideally at least, be considered of value in referring only to those of misguided or evil intent, barriers on the other hand are essential in all lives, as growth is dependent upon conquest. Only as problems are met, solved, and conquered is there development. The complete absence of barriers in the life of a child would result in a maladjusted personality.

ANOTHER SCHOOL of thought insists that man must be subservient to all the taboos and restraints of society regardless of their merit. According to this view the letter of the law must be observed, with scant attention focused on the spirit behind it. Here emphasis is placed on mere abstention, satisfaction arising through prevention of self-indulgence. By this standard the value of the man is reflected according to the number of worldly pleasures he can renounce.

This type of person is so busy being negative that he has little time for the accomplishment of great affirmative achievements. He develops into a personality of gloom, always speaking against certain activities without offering adequate replacement. Should this type of person be found within the church, many fine inquiring people might look outside the church for the spiritual fellowship they seek. Quite often people steeped in negativism find themselves prey to the very forces they denounce.

Such may be subject to serious conflict, perhaps because of secret admiration for the thing denounced. The house is swept, garnished, and empty.

Negativism, however, has its place. There are times when man must have the moral courage to say, "No." Daniel could unhesitatingly refuse the food and wine of the king. This choice was not born of a desire for mere self-denial or because of a whimsical desire to be different, but because he wished to remain physically, mentally, and spiritually alert.

ONE CAN ONLY CONJECTURE about Daniel. The account of his life is lacking in detail. True, brief flashes of his splendor are recorded, but the account of the preparatory years of his life is quite meager. While he must have been subject to the temptations and worldly tugs of mankind in general, he seems to have been able to submerge whatever frustration and turmoil there may have been in devotion to a heavenly mission.

While all men have choices to make, not often does life or death hang in the balance. No one can possibly know the thinking of Daniel during this period of crisis. Might not this whisper have come? "Daniel, you can pray to God in secret and he will hear you just as he always has. After all this probation period is only for thirty days. Why risk your life by overt prayer when you can approach him while within the confines of your closet? God will understand that such sacrifice is unnecessary. After all it will be better to compromise now than to lose your life and all opportunity for future service."

Daniel must have faced innumerable temptations, for only so many temptations overcome could produce such character. No doubt the secret of this man's greatness lies in the fact that he went upon his knees and prayed, giving thanks to his God. The priests and presidents of that day admitted that the only occasion they could expect to find against Daniel would be in regard to his worship of God. Would that the only criticism of modern man were that he worshipped God!

Seldom has a man risked so much for something seemingly so little. No doubt many ridiculed him. Through it all he remained serene, poised, unruffled, confident, and at peace. For such an attitude and outlook the price was not too great. This is the quality which all men have sought, but the beckoning future has been too distant and the environment of the present too enticing. To Daniel the issues were not trifling. His God was so real and personal that he must bear testimony of values that were superior to even life itself. For the sake of his brethren and unborn generations there could be no compromise. To compromise meant the acceptance of a stratum of living inferior to that which he already experienced. This he would not do.

A GAINST THE BACKGROUND of the recorded Scripture referred to, what is the answer to many perplexing questions of our day? In the field of recreation is the activity chosen because of its popularity or because of its inherent worth? On the other hand is it avoided merely because it is popular? In case of abstention, what activity is chosen to replace it? Does the modern Daniel drink intoxicants because it is sociable, good business, or good politics? If he doesn't drink, does he spend more time trying to understand and help those who do, rather than in criticizing them? Are memberships in social organizations used to promote selfish interests, or are they avenues of service?

In a day of sexual freedom is the modern Daniel just a little afraid to let people know that he has some high ideals? After witnessing the careless abandon of others, would he envy men who seemingly care nothing for their family ties? On the other hand if he does successfully abstain from immoral pursuits, how much better is he as a husband and father? Does he use the time to share his love with his wife and children, or is he a neutral—being neither unfaithful nor affectionate?

MODERN LIFE with its speed, uncertainties, and vicious propaganda needs people with deep convictions, but not mere negative convictions. There must be deep convictions about a cause much greater than themselves. Whole-hearted devotion to a great cause lessens the mental stress aggravated by the complexities of modern society. That devotion must be so great and the cause so noble that the main purpose of the individual must be to assist in the enhancement of this movement. He must be so positive that his ministry can be accepted by all regardless of race or social standing. Not even the rebuffs and seeming insincerity of others deter him from his mission. Furthermore, he never stoops to inferior methods even to achieve worthy ends.

As man grows in spiritual stature he comes to understand that the church is not negative but is God's finest way of lifting humanity. As he sees the beauty of positive living, frustrations and conflicts fade as he seeks to expand himself in unselfish service. His own life is swept and garnished, but it is not empty. He understands and appreciates more thoroughly the words of Jesus who said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Forgiveness and Peace

THE OTHER AFTERNOON I was watching a demonstration of modern psychiatric techniques used with our boys as they come home from the wars. One boy was not able to hear because of a psychosis that made him shut out words or sounds that he did not want to hear or remember. The result was almost total deafness.

The Spirit seemed to be near me, opening my eyes to something I had never realized before. I had known the power of prayer in our own lives, but I had never before realized that when Christ told us to "confess our sins" he meant exactly what he said. I knew that I must be humble enough to recognize my own sins and to ask forgiveness. As a result of asking for his forgiveness and help, I then felt impelled to go to one who I thought had wronged me, and I asked him to forgive me for doing or saying anything that had offended him. In so doing, I gained a friend, and my own mind was at peace. I knew that I had not been entirely to blame for whatever misunderstanding had occurred, but I knew that I was losing something that I did not want to lose. When I had obeyed that second portion of the law I was happy.

Many of us have ambitions for service in the church. Some want to serve one way and some another. When opportunities are few there can be disappointment and resentment. Some have even left the church because of it. I have myself been terribly hurt because of man's unfairness, and it would have been easy to be so resentful that I would have left the church and all her good works.

As I watched that psychiatrist at work I realized that this is God's method of dealing with people. Christ told us to confess to God those secret resentments that darken our hearts and cause us to rebel. He wants us to tell him each joy and sorrow. As a man talks to God about his disappointments and the ambitions of his heart, the strain of living is lessened. His poise is regained by faith in the certainty that God hears and cares. When we tell him frankly of ourselves and our most secret thoughts, there can be no sense of impending doom to frighten us into actual physical illness. In the warmth of his forgiving love we begin to see and understand ourselves and others.

The Good Part

By Lenora Nixon

MARTHA SIGHED as she sank wearily into the chair made of soft palms. She glanced over the immaculate room, searching every corner for any evidence of dirt that she had missed. She jumped up hastily and with the hem of her dress, flicked a speck of dust from the cloth on the table. Then she again sat down in her chair, leaned her head back, closed her tired eyelids, and let her hands hang limply at her sides.

She was ready to receive the ladies of the village for their weekly meeting. She would have time for this much-needed moment of relaxation, for she knew she would be busy the rest of the evening arranging the delectable foods, most of which she had prepared during the day. She quietly dozed until awakened by a call.

"Hail, Martha, may I enter?" asked Esther, who stood hesitating by the doorway.

"Welcome," quickly replied Martha, "Pray come in."

"How nice your house looks. How do you keep it so dustless?" asked Esther in her soft voice.

Before Martha could answer, laughing voices were heard. The other women were coming to the doorway.

"Enter, enter," urged Martha, and soon the room was full of chattering maidens attired in loose flowing robes, some with their long heavy hair hanging around their shoulders, and others with their locks braided.

"Ah, 'tis good to meet again in your home," said Rachel.

"I, too, am pleased to be here," said Rebecca. "Always, when one comes to the home of Mary and Martha, one finds cleanliness. Surely both of you have toiled much today to prepare your home for this visit."

Mary inclined her head a moment and murmured softly, "I did not do much. I was preparing the law and words of the kingdom for our meeting, and," she added brightly, "I do pray it proves acceptable. It is the parable of the talents."

"It can be well said that everyone knows the talent of Martha," said Elizabeth admiringly. "She possesses the art of homemaking."

Martha smiled happily and smoothed the folds of the soft cloth which hung from the long table.

THE MEETING PROGRESSED, and a sweet quietness fell over the women as Mary told the story of the talents that she had heard the Master tell so often. In her earnestness her face shone, and her voice was clear and firm as she told them again of the good things within their reach, through service. She told them of the great work to be done by all. They murmured among themselves, "How does Mary know so many things of such sacred nature?"

"How came to you words of the hidden mysteries, and how can you speak so freely of your knowledge?" asked Ruth.

"Ah," Martha replied, somewhat testily, "she spends so much time talking and listening to our friend Jesus when he visits our home. But come, I want you to try my fish cakes. I have ground some wheat and added it, and I find a good result."

"They are good," exclaimed Ruth, "very good. I shall prepare some in like manner tomorrow for my Simon. He will receive great pleasure from their taste. But look, Martha, how did you make these colorful jars which hold your spices and breads?"

Again Martha beamed happily as she told of gathering berries in the glade and crushing them into a soft pulp. Then she stained the bulrushes with the red and blue juices and wove them into the colorful jars.

"I saw how they stained my hands with a lasting hue and decided to try the juices on other things. Wait," she continued, and left the room, returning with a delicate pink cloth. Amid the exclamations of pleasure, she told of blending the colors and material; the result was the pretty cover for the table.

"To be so talented must be very desirable, indeed," sighed Rachel.

MARY SAID NOTHING but sat quietly, her eyes thoughtful, her hands gently turning the sticks of the scroll as she perused its contents.

Soon the ladies left for their respective homes, and Mary and Martha were again alone.

Martha hurriedly tidied up the room, murmuring as she did so of her weariness and desire to retire. Mary dutifully helped Martha, and soon the two sisters returned, Martha too weary to read from the law or even to pray as she sank on her cot and restlessly slept.

The next day Mary came rushing in and exclaimed excitedly, "Martha, Jesus of Nazareth is coming. See yonder he enters the road leading to our doorway!"

Martha hastily picked up a stray cloth and straightened the bowl of wild berries in the center of the table, meanwhile lamenting her untidy home.

"Hail, Martha," softly spoke the Master from the doorway. "I trust all is well with thee?"

"Yea, I do well. Enter and rest thyself awhile, and I will prepare sustenance."

Home Column

AS JESUS ENTERED the room Martha smoothed the cloth on the divan and bade him lie down and remove his sandals. As Jesus reclined upon the low divan, he closed his weary eyes and sighed softly. At once Mary pulled forward a low stool and sat at the foot of the Master. "Tell me," she eagerly besought him, "where hast thou been; what hast thou been doing?" The Master sat up and at once seemed to be renewed in spirit and in body as with shining eyes he recounted experiences of his ministry.

"Mary," called Martha sharply from the kitchen, "will you come and take up the meal cakes?" Mary rose obediently, and as soon as she had finished her task, she sat again at the feet of Jesus and continued her questionings.

Often the Master gazed with troubled eyes in the direction of the laboring Martha. When she again called Mary, he sadly shook his downcast head and pondered.

Finally Martha burst into the room and spoke with irritation.

"Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me."

Jesus was silent a moment then he spoke pleadingly. "Martha, Martha, why art thou so careful and so troubled about so many things? Thou knowest that I do not come often into thy home. These things that concern thee so much will be taken away from thee someday. It is good to serve in the home, Martha, and there are times to do so, but Mary, thy sister, has seen the one thing which is needful and which will never be taken from her. She has chosen the good part—that which will sustain her when she can no longer serve in the home.

"And now I must depart for other fields, for there is much to be done. I trust I will soon meet again with you. Farewell." He gently touched her arm in leaving.

A very chastened Martha bade the Savior farewell. She turned to Mary and with troubled eyes asked humbly, "Wilt thou help me to learn the good part, too?"

FOR UNTO THEE IS GIVEN

TODAY when my seven-year-old girls came for their expression lessons I said—all full of the spirit of Christmas—"Now, let's write a Christmas puppet show."

My head was full of delightful characters which could be created by little hands and revolve around the idea of a toyshop or Santa's workshop. My pencil was poised above the paper, waiting to record their opinions and ideas, since this was to be their production from start to finish.

"How about starting with a clown," I said brightly, hoping to stimulate their imaginations.

Nancy's face fell. "Oh!" she said in disappointment, "why can't we do one about the baby Jesus?"

"Yes," chorused the others, "we can make angels and Mary and Joseph. We can sing 'Away in a Manger' and 'Silent Night'."

Indeed they can. I felt ashamed that I had thought they would not desire to re-create the most beautiful scene ever enacted when God gave us the hope of the world. With a great deal of satisfaction I watched the little puppet show unfold in the words of these little mouths and the ideas of these little minds.

It will be a beautiful puppet show! When the curtains part, the angels will be hovering close as Joseph and Mary watch over the babe in the age-old tradition. From behind curtain will come little-girl voices lifted in "Away in a Manger." Then, after the beautiful—if quavering—lines are spoken, and the audience is hushed, we will all sing "Silent Night."

... and I'm sure God will smile on those homemade puppets and the purity in children's hearts.

LOUISE WRIGLEY

BAPTISMAL DAY LETTER

My Son,

Today you were baptized! Not until you have a son of your own will you understand the joy and pride I felt as I watched you walk to the edge of the baptismal font.

Eight years seems such a short while to instill within one small boy the principles of our belief. There was a time when I questioned the wisdom of baptism at so early an age and wondered if, perhaps, Jesus might have made a mistake. Yet the admonition is there, "inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; . . ."

My doubting too obviously showed how little I knew concerning the mind of a little child. Although you were just out of babyhood, I had to recognize the depth of understanding and intelligence concerning those things which had to do with the spiritual make-up of your soul. It was then I began to be frightened as to my own shortcomings and lack of wisdom and many times found myself breathing the prayer, "Please be patient with me."

I sometimes feel I am not a good parent. Because of my own selfish desires, I have not taken the time to teach when the opportunity presented itself. I have neglected to pause from my day's activities to pray with you. I have been cross and impatient and unwise in my discipline.

Eight years is a tender age—but not too tender if the parents have done their part. "O Lord, give me wisdom, understanding, intelligence, and, most of all, patience to guide this little soul which has been entrusted to my care that he shall have a fair and just opportunity to learn of thee that he might be a son of thine."

And Son, "Please be patient with me."

Gracelanders Corporation - Japan

By Verda E. Bryant

HOW FAR-REACHING is Graceland College, our International College?"

A letter arrived at our house that I feel will be of interest to the readers of the Herald and to those interested in Graceland. As it lay in a group of others on the table I saw only the printed return address. I noted the word "Graceland," but having had a son and daughter in Graceland for the last three years I knew it was not a Graceland return address. Looking closer I saw a picture of the tower and the words "Exporters and Importers," and even before I picked the letter from the group and saw the other identifying Japanese marks, I knew it must be from Kisuke Sekine, or "Seeky" as his American friends call him. He spent two and a half years at Graceland and was a good friend of our son, Blair.

As the letter was addressed to "Mr. and Mrs.," I opened it to a very interesting letterhead, which had been repeated in miniature as an envelope return address. I saw a circle indicating the world with a large "G C" within it. Within the G is a line drawing of the Graceland tower and within the C is a pine tree on a hill. A double line, as a pathway, gracefully encircles the globe and extends from one end of the paper to the other.

Then I read the letter, parts of which I quote:

I am very pleased to write this letter to inform you that I have newly established an export and import business firm, GRACELANDERS CORPORATION, which is named after Graceland College, and opened up its markets in both South and North American Continents.

He tells of the type of business he entered into, includes a personal message, and continues:

Beside my business interests my basic intention of establishing Gracelanders Corporation is to promote our friendly relationship among the nations. By doing business with other nations I hope that I can get to know their cultural, historical, social, and religious backgrounds, so that someday I can contribute to build a healthy Zionistic society in every corner of the earth through the mutual understandings and assistances.

I am, with many high hopes and ideals, looking forward to this new business venture, and shall do my utmost efforts in every possible way to make a go of it.

AFTER READING this letter, I reminisced a bit back to our acquaintance with "Seeky," the lad from Tokyo, Japan. He told us that he began learning the English language in earnest on the boat crossing the Pacific. Some former Gracelanders, whom he had met in Japan, told him about Graceland and from his first consideration of attending an American College, he thought of but one—Graceland.

"Seeky" arrived at Graceland sometime in February, 1951, and was assigned to West Hall, where our son lived. At first language was a terrific barrier, but the young Japanese lad learned quickly, and the boys all tried to help him.

He spent his first Christmas in America with us. After his first day or two with us his shyness left, and we spent hours in conversation. Sometimes he would ask us to explain a word, sometimes he would not be able to explain what he wished because he did not know the right words.

We tried to tell him about Christmas customs. We explained to him about Jesus being born in a manger. He did not know who Jesus was or what a manger was. For us, who have grown from babyhood knowing about Jesus, it seemed strange that a grown man would be hearing his first news about the baby Jesus.

He marveled at the elaborate decorations in Independence and in Kansas City, particularly the night scene of the Plaza district. Decorations and goods available in the stores were a source of wonderment. The idea of gift-giving dazzled him, and he wanted to know the connection between it and the birth of the Christ child.

SEEKY" WAS AMAZED at the constant singing of carols over the loud speakers on the square. Oh, yes, he told us, they played the Christmas carols in Japan for the benefit of the Americans who were then in occupation forces, but to the Japanese they meant nothing. He began to appreciate them as he heard the Christmas story, and remarked that he would like to take an album of carols back to Japan with him so his friends might hear them. Under our Christmas tree on Christmas Eve he found the wanted album of records.

He went on part of the tour which my husband makes as Santa each year visiting the children of our part of town, colorfully bedecked as the old man from the North Pole. "Seeky" wanted to know the relationship of the comical old man in red to the birth of Jesus. We tried to explain, but so many of the words we used, particularly the seasonable ones, were totally strange to him, and we probably only puzzled him all the more.

One of the much discussed topics was food. "Seeky" always ate his bread dry. There is no butter and only a few milk products in Japan, he informed us, and he didn't want to get used to it here in America as he couldn't have it when he went back to Japan.

WE GAVE HIM an opportunity to cook us a typical Japanese meal. We let him do his own shopping, explained the workings of the electric stove, and turned him loose in the kitchen. He happily spent the afternoon there, while we wondered a little skeptically about what kind of concoctions he would produce.

There was rice, of course, though he explained it wasn't just like the Japanese rice, but he couldn't find the words to explain the difference. Over the rice was a vegetable and meat sauce, something similar to chop suey, heavily flavored with curry. Chop suey, we were told, is an American version of an Oriental food.

There was a fruit salad, made of apples, pineapples, and bananas, with dressing. Fruits are plentiful in Japan. Then there were the chestnuts! How he happened to find chestnuts I'll never know. I never saw them in our store before, and only once since. He boiled them, then peeled them, and sweetened them with some kind of a sugar sauce. There was a huge bowl of them.

Everything was good except the chestnuts. We ate them gingerly, but "Seeky" enjoyed them immensely and ate them warmed over for several meals.

When we confessed we had been concerned about whether he would feed us "bird's-nest" soup, he laughed and laughed. We never did quite understand if it was really just a joke or if there was some type of flavoring extracted from certain kinds of bird's nests.

SEKKY" showed us some of his books and the current newspapers that were forwarded to him here. We were interested in the comics which, though we couldn't read a word and the meaning escaped us, fascinated us because the drawings showed an entirely different way of life. We were amazed that their books not only began at the back, which fact we had already known, but that their lines run vertical on the page rather than horizontal.

"Seeky" also spent General Conference of 1952 with us. One thing we noticed about this Japanese lad was his eagerness to learn. In the time—almost a month—that he spent with us, we noticed that he never wasted a minute. Every spare moment he spent with his books or seeking information in other ways.

We were much interested to learn that during his second summer in America he joined our church. His recent letter to us indicates that he has caught the Graceland spirit and that the ideals of the church are uppermost in his mind.

We are most happy that we had the opportunity of becoming acquainted with this fine young man, and we know that we better understand his country through having known him. We hope with him that the outreach of his fellowship with the Saints in America will eventually be as far reaching as will the dealings of the new company, Gracelanders Corporation, managed by Kisuke Sekine, at 316 Nakayama, in Hanno Iriuma Saitama, Japan.

GAZETTE

■ Station KGRA presented its first live show of the year, "Variety on Parade," Saturday, November 21, in the chapel. It featured Don Carter and his guitar, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Four Polecats; The Sextet Without a Name; and Walt Denney on his accordion, Stockton, California. Vocalists were Jim Nelson, Wataha, Illinois; Marilyn Eidt, Bay City, Michigan; and Darlene Votava, Independence, Missouri.

■ The Graceland Yellow Jackets defeated Kemper Military Academy, November 13, with a score of 25 to 0. This was the final game of the season with Graceland winning the Conference Title.

■ Graceland College's Thanksgiving holidays began Wednesday, November 25 at 2:00, and extended through Sunday, November 29. Most of the students went home or visited the homes of friends. However, a number of students remained on the campus during this period. They were all housed in Walker and Gunsolley Halls during the four days' recess.

■ Christmas decorations on the Graceland campus were lighted on the evening of December 5. Following the trimming of the tree, a movie, "The Miracle on Thirty-fourth Street," was shown in the Student Center.

Helps Along the Way

I am just past middle age, and suddenly I realize I have probably only twenty or twenty-five years ahead of me. Looking back I wonder if I have made the best of every opportunity and if I have profited by my mistakes. I should have learned by now to meet any situation calmly and with poise, but no two situations are alike, and—human nature being what it is—I still need help. Often I have found this by praying. Sometimes, too, I have picked up a Herald and received inspiration from what I read in it. Heralds, unlike some publications, never grow old. In time of need they are good to turn to for guidance and encouragement.

TESSIE G. HAGUE

Clearwater, Nebraska

From a Colored Priesthood Member

After I joined the Reorganized Church I visited with the Saints in Pittsburg, Kansas. That is where I was ordained a priest. During the service of ordination I felt the Holy Spirit come upon me, and it remained with me from that Sunday afternoon until Monday noon.

The members in Pittsburg were good people. I remember once when I went there to attend a district conference, the temperature was near zero and the Negro rooming house where I stayed had no fire in the room. It was so cold my watch froze, and I did not get to service on time. Brother Ellis Short preached on Sunday morning, and when he had finished his sermon he came to me and said, "Brother Carson, where have you been all morning?" I told him my plight, and he said the Saints would find a better place for me to stay (Brother Short lived in Independence). Elder J. Arthur Davis took me to his home and treated me as if I were the whitest man in Pittsburg. Elder Davis was a very kind person. One morning after breakfast he said, "Brother Carson, you go in the living room with my wife and daughter, and I will wash the dishes." While I was there a man came to the front door and asked for something to eat. Mrs. Davis told him to go around to the kitchen, and her husband would feed him.

Elder Charles Fry has come to my home and stayed overnight and eaten with me. He came from Pittsburg to Chanute to lay hands on and confirm a few people that I had baptized. Once when I was sick for a week or more, Brother Howard Baltz and Brother Roy Hill came to sit with me. Brother Hill also has eaten at our table, and we have visited him in his home. While Brother Baltz was attending junior college in Chanute he asked me one day, "Brother John, would you like to take a two-year course at the college?" I said, "Yes, if they'll accept me." In a day or two he said, "Brother John, come on over to the college tomorrow morning; I think you can get in." I did get in and attended two years. It did me a world of good. Brother Baltz became a teacher at the college in Warrensburg, Missouri.

We have been helped by many people. Ray Whiting and his good wife have invited me to their home during General Conference; they also kept two colored Saints from Florida at their house.

We must love people of all races and treat them just as we would like to be treated. I am not displeased with my color or my race. In fact, if it were possible for me to change, I would not want to do so. I would love to be free to worship with the Saints everywhere and be of one heart with them. If Zion is built, it shall be built by people such as those I have mentioned. They must be meek and humble and full of love—which is perfection. We are made perfect by and through the gospel. The Lord has said, "Ye are therefore commanded to be perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." Some will say perfection is impossible, but surely we can reach it if God has said we should. Let us love each other, repent from dead works, and go on unto perfection.

A Memorable Experience

(The following is from a letter to Elbert A. Smith written by Evangelist J. Charles May.)

Recently I had the pleasure of baptizing two of my grandchildren at the Walnut Park church. These two grandchildren, Linda Lee May and Mary Catherine Closson, are both fifth-generation Latter Day Saints: Linda Lee May through her Great-grandmother Lively, and Mary Catherine Closson, through both the Livelys and the Clossons. Sunday before last, these two new members of the church were confirmed by Elder Glenn Closson, Sr., and myself, the two grandfathers.

At the baptismal service, and also at the confirmation service, I was reminded of the experience of my mother and grandmother, which took place in Ontario, Canada, in my mother's girlhood days. My grandfather, William Lively, was a section foreman on the railroad some little distance from Chatham, Ontario. One winter day in 1866, while my grandfather was at work on the railroad, my Grandmother Lively, and my mother, then a girl just past thirteen years old, heard a knock at the door. It was a stranger, who asked if there was anyone in the home who was interested in the gospel and would like to have it explained. My mother said that they were interested, and my grandmother, overhearing the conversation, invited the stranger to come in.

Neither my grandmother nor mother belonged to any church, but they had attended various churches and were religiously inclined. They had studied the Bible but had never found a church that measured up to their understanding of the Scriptures, and they had wondered about the conflicting teachings of the various churches.

This stranger began his explanation of the Scriptures by reading certain passages; then he would ask questions and give answers. He read Mark 16:14-21 concerning the great commission given by Christ to his apostles, where Christ said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe. . . ." He asked, "What was the gospel that they were commanded to preach?" Then he called their attention to Hebrews 6:1, 2, where the Apostle Paul enumerated the six fundamental principles of the gospel—faith, repentance, baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection, and the eternal judgment. He then asked what kind of church they were baptized into upon hearing the gospel of Christ. In answer, he read I Corinthians 12:28 and Ephesians 4:11, which state that God set in the church apostles and prophets and other officers, and that Christ gave them for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ. He referred to the gifts of the spirit mentioned in I Corinthians 12:4-11 and the signs that Jesus said should follow them that believe (Mark 16:16-19). After calling their attention to other passages of Scripture, he closed his talk with the statement of Paul found in Galatians 1:8, 9: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

My mother told me that as this stranger spoke it came with power, and it seemed to her as though she were taking a cool, refreshing drink from the fountain of living water. At times while listening to this message presented by the stranger, she was reminded of a verse which she had often read in the Scriptures: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares" (Hebrews 13:2).

Before leaving them, this stranger said that he wanted to make his identity known, that he was a messenger sent to them from the courts of glory, and that in order for them to be assured that he was who he claimed to be, that he would tell them of some things that were to come to pass. He said that in the year 1870 there would be a war in Europe between two great nations, that much blood would be shed, and that a famous general would lose his power. Then turning to Grandmother Lively and pointing to her, he said, "The time will come when you and your family shall hear this gospel preached by God's servants, and you and your children, and your children's children shall obey this gospel, which has been restored to the earth in these the latter days." Then he departed.

In 1870 the Franco-Prussian war took place, and Napoleon the Third lost his power. Later, and in December, 1875, my mother heard the gospel preached by Elder J. J. Cornish at London, Ontario, and the first sermon she heard was like the message she and her mother heard from the angel nine years before. My mother was the first of the Livelys to hear and obey the angel's message. She was baptized on December 29, 1875, in the River Thames at London, Ontario, by Elder Cornish. It was about ten o'clock at night and a bright light came down from above, continuing to shine until she and Sister William Bushnell (formerly Mrs. John Taylor) were baptized. The account of this baptism is found in Church History, Volume 4.

When I was ordained to the office of evangelist I was told that I had a rich heritage. I am thankful to God for this heritage, for this gospel has been handed down to me through a consecrated father and mother as an angel's message. My favorite song, which I have used as my missionary campaign song throughout the forty-four years of my ministry for the church, has been and still is

What was witnessed in the heavens?
Why, an angel earthward bound.
Had he something with him bringing?
Yes—the gospel—joyful sound!
It was to be preached in power
Upon earth, the angel said—
To all men, all tongues and nations,
That upon its face are spread.

My mother has mentioned this experience to me at various times, and her testimony of it was written and sent with me to be translated and read to the native Saints when I first went to the Society Islands in 1909. There it was published in the island mission paper, Te Orometua, and several members of the ministry have asked me to write it up, that it might be published in the church periodicals. Some of the uncertain minor details of her experience have been left out, but that which I have written in this account is true and has been indelibly impressed upon my mind. I trust that it shall remain with me always.

Youth Rally Held

REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN.—A youth rally was held for Saskatchewan young people, with a banquet Saturday evening, October 10, followed by a talent program. On Sunday morning, breakfast was served at the church at eight o'clock, with a youth and adult prayer service following. At the church school hour, Elder Renfroe taught the youth class, and Elder Harder taught the adult class. The children had their respective teachers.

A panel discussion was held at two in the afternoon, with Elders Renfroe and Harder in charge. The congregation was divided into five groups, with a leader selected for each group. The groups were given seven minutes to ask questions concerning the place of youth in the church. Anyone in the different groups could arise and express his opinion in answer to the questions. This was a lively and stimulating feature.

A preaching service was held in the evening, with Elder Renfroe as speaker, and Elder Harder in charge of showing slides of Graceland College.

Breakfast was served at the church Monday morning, with separate services for youth and adults following. Classes and a forum, "What's on Your Mind," were held after the early services.

A dedication service was held at two o'clock.

Elder Renfroe spoke during the week on the gospel and its principles.

The Skylarks and Junior Choir had a tea and a home-cooking sale, to raise money for the building fund. They cleared $25.25. These children are under twelve years old.—Reported by IDA MAE BERGERSEN

Thirty-one Baptisms

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.—Much credit goes to the young people and their leader, Flora Workman, for the number of baptisms during the year. Thirty-one people were baptized; this is a record number. The Easton mission, a part of the Fresno Branch, had ten of these baptisms. Ethan Godfrey has charge of this mission.

The women's department has raised $1,371.13 for the building fund. Grounds for a new church have been purchased, and construction is planned for the near future.

At the recent branch election on September 27, Edward E. Workman, Sr., was re-elected pastor for the twelfth consecutive time. His counselors are Clinton K. Saxton and William Beck. Others elected include James Reynolds, director of religious education; Calvin J. Nephew, youth leader; Marguerite Eastwood, women's leader; Flora Workman, recorder; Maxine Gilleland, secretary; Alvin Woods, auditor; Ed Fugate, treasurer; Doris Bullard, publicity agent.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer recently visited the area. Brother Clinton K. Saxton, General Church appointee, has done a good work since he came to Fresno last year.—Reported by DORIS BULLARD

Missionary Series Held

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—Pastor Thomas Beil was in charge of the annual business meeting held August 23. The following were elected: pastor, Elder Russell H. Bessire; counselors, Elders Glenn Haviland and Lloyd Stewart; director of religious education, Lloyd Stewart; youth leader, Melba Bessire; women's department leader, Frances Stewart; music director, Jennie Jordison; drama, Jane Isola; treasurer, Robert Brown; secretary-recorder, historian, and publicity agent, Nellie MacDougall; auditors, Harold Korell and George Anderson; solicitor, Orral Hartwig; book steward, Arthur Davis; missionary supervisor, D. C. Holden; home visitor, George Anderson; custodian, William Davis; landscaping and decorating, Agnes Tooker; librarian, Alene Henry; "Clarion Call" and Sunday bulletin, Burdett Tordoff; finance committee, D. C. Holden, Audy Henry, and Agnes Tooker; building committee, D. C. Holden, Lloyd Stewart, Harold Korell, Audy Henry, and Paul Stanfield.

The members of the San Leandro Branch are working on the church, and expect it to be completed in the next few months.

Sybil Dianne, daughter of Brother and Sister Orral Hartwig, was baptized by Elder William Hall on July 26 at East Bay Church.

David Burdett, infant son of Brother and Sister E. Burdett Tordoff, was blessed by Elders Beil and Bessire at the San Leandro Church on September 27.

Elder Louis J. Ostertag of Los Angeles Stake, held a series of missionary meetings at San Leandro Branch October 4-11. These meetings were well attended by local and nearby branch members and several interested non-members. A reception was given for Brother Ostertag in the church social hall on Sunday evening, October 4. Sister Ostertag was in attendance the latter part of the series.

A dinner prepared and served by the men of the branch was given Friday evening, October 16. This was a successful project, netting over one hundred dollars, a part of which came from candy sold at the dinner by the Zion's League.—Reported by NELLIE MACDOUGALL

History of Mission and Branch

HUNTSVILLE, MISSOURI.—The mission was organized in the home of John Harris on December 4, 1949. Brother E. Jennings, assisted by Brother Moffit, of Far West Stake, was in charge. Morris Worden acted as pastor, with Ellen Kelly as secretary and Sister Worden as pianist.

On February 15, 1950, the group began meetings in the Mount Hope schoolhouse near Huntsville. In July, a church school was organized, with Fred Jackson in charge, Helen Swan acting as secretary and music director, Fred F. and Kathryn Jackson as senior class teachers, and Morris Worden as junior teacher.

On July 9, Joan Heathman, Ellen Kelly, and Richard Morgan were baptized by Carl Weeks of Bevier.

It was decided to purchase property on July 19, and Morris Worden, Lester Davis, and R. Burton acted as trustees, with John Harris arranging a loan. The present meeting place in Huntsville was purchased. Payments have been met to date, and at the present time the building is being reconditioned and a furnace has been installed. The women have helped to equip a kitchen, and in other ways.

In 1951 the mission was organized as a branch, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Elder John Puckett in charge. Morris Worden continued as pastor until he moved to Independence, Missouri, when he was succeeded by Clyde McCollum.

Two elders and two priests have been ordained, and about fifty persons are enrolled. Visiting priesthood members from Bevier Branch have encouraged the group.

At the business meeting held September 30, 1953, the following new officers were elected: R. Burton, pastor; Lydia Burton, women's leader; Margaret McCollum, children's leader; Dewayne Wheatly, church school director; Sister Adams, Zion's League leader; Kathryn Bales, young people's leader; Helen Swan, secretary and music director; Clyde McCollum, treasurer; Velda Burton, flower chairman; Kathryn Jackson, historian; Brothers Adams and Comstock, auditors; Brother Wheatly, publicity.

Brother John Puckett announced the area meeting to be held November 22.—Reported by MRS. FRED F. JACKSON

Pastors Named

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—Far West Stake conference was held October 18 in the Lafayette high school auditorium, with Stake President Emery E. Jennings presiding. Robert G. Kirkwood of Osborn, Missouri, and John Henry Wittrock, of St. Joseph, Missouri, were approved for ordination to the office of priest, and Herbert Wayne Cook of Hamilton, Missouri, was approved for ordination to the office of deacon.

Thirty delegates were elected to represent Far West Stake at the General Conference in April.

Pastors for the twenty congregations were elected as follows: Atchison, Evan R. Agenstein, with Eldon McKee and Gilbert Hedrick as associates; Bedison, Orville Fannon; Bigelow, John Newhart; Cameron, David Coffman; Fanning, Samuel Twombly; Far West, Charles Mengal; Gallatin, William Rounds; Guilford, Kenneth Nelson; Hamilton, Dodge Dunlap; Liberty, Orville Binnicker; Maple Grove, Wesley Ballinger; Maryville, Charles Powell; Maysville, Arnold Adams, with Robert Delaney as associates; Osborn, Albert Millard; Sabetha, E. New Families in Area

SUMMERSVILLE, MISSOURI.—At the close of a series of missionary meetings held November 1-15, with Elder W. E. Williams as speaker, the branch had a business session, followed by a basket dinner.

The calling of William LeRoy Webb to the office of deacon was confirmed and approved.

Four new families have recently moved into the area of Summersville branch.—Reported by M. E. WEBB

One Ordained

ANABEL, MISSOURI.—Lloyd Clarke was ordained to the office of elder by Elders A. Wayne Hough, of Jefferson City, Missouri, and Carl Weeks of Bevier, at the Macon Church at a special service on November 11.

Elder John Puckett was in charge of the service, and delivered the opening address.

Missionary services were planned for early in December.—Reported by MRS. KATHRYN H. BAILEY

Mission Organized into Branch

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—The mission was organized into a branch on Sunday, November 8, with Apostle Charles Hield presiding at the business meeting. A motion was made and carried unanimously to retain the recently elected officers of the mission as branch officers. These officers are Alvie A. Barrett, pastor; Gerald Rose, church school director; Paul May, assistant church school director; Georgia Rose, women's leader; Zelma

Schrader, secretary; Ray Ling, treasurer; Alice Catalano, publicity; and Dick Martin, building fund chairman. Until this time, Elder Barrett has served as pastor by appointment of the Apostle in charge. At this meeting Elders George Winegar and Paul May were appointed as counselors by the pastor. Seventy-seven were present for the meeting.

Preceding the business meeting, an impressive ordination service was held, at which Gerald Rose and Paul May were ordained to the office of elder by Apostle Hield, and John Shadel was ordained to the office of teacher by Elder Barrett.

On November 15, five children were blessed. They were the two sons of Roy and Gene Dobson, and the three sons of DeForest and Margaret Rushing.

Elder William Patterson held a six-day missionary meeting in September.

The women's department has an active membership of twenty-five, and are sponsoring several projects, including shellcraft, bake sales, and bazaars and rummage sales. They contributed $585.00 to the building fund during the year.

Services will continue in the VFW hall, at 416 North Second Street, until a church building can be obtained.—Reported by ALICE CATALANO

New Members Welcomed

WEYBURN, SASKATCHEWAN.—A successful series of meetings was held September 30-October 8 by Brother Z. Z. Renfroe. The attendance was large, and the group welcomed three new members, Sister Lynne Leflar, Sister Edna Slimmons, and Sister Lillian Jahnke.

The Daughters of Zion sponsored a fowl supper in the Hostess club on November 4. Members and friends attended, and over one hundred dollars was taken in for the building fund.

The Zion's League has set up church signs on the four highways leading to the city.

A social evening was enjoyed October 23 at the Clayton Ireland home, and a Halloween party was held October 31. Brother Art Bergersen brought a carload of young people from Regina.—Reported by ALICE JANSON

Remodeling Near Completion

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.—Elder J. H. Yager conducted a series of missionary meetings and cottage meetings in the branch and Centerton mission during the month of October.

The remodeling program is near completion. The limestone exterior is finished, new flooring has been put on the upper and lower auditorium, and new pews, rostrum furniture and furnishings have been added for the junior church school. The lawn has been landscaped, and new evergreens planted. Some painting and repairing still needs to be done.

New officers are Elder Wayne Smelser, pastor; Elder Robert M. Anderson, assistant pastor; Pauline Bunnell, secretary; Velma Smelser, treasurer; Robert Anderson, church school director; Pearl McIntosh, women's department leader; Gordon Rhodes, youth leader; and Tom Taylor, music director.—Reported by BETTY ANDERSON

Two New Members

CALUMET, OKLAHOMA.—Two members have been added to the church roll at Laneville as the result of the work of Elder Wallace Jackson in the community and around El Reno.

Mrs. Sophia Ward was baptized September 20 by Elder Colin Clevenger, and Mrs. Viola Walbaum was baptized October 20. Mrs. Ward was confirmed by Colvin Clevenger, and Mrs. Walbaum by Wallace Jackson.—Reported by Augusta Powell

Officers Chosen

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: pastor, Elder Charles Shippy; clerk, Mercene Howard; treasurer, George Shippy; publicity, Elder F. C. Baptisms Increasing O'NEILL, NEBRASKA.—Avery Graham was baptized and confirmed on Sunday, June 7, by Elder James Daugherty at Bonesteel.

On Sunday morning, June 28, Clarence and Beatrice Colfax and Merlyn and Earlene Schrunk, all of Clearwater, were baptized by Elder Daugherty. Elders Harold Reid and Myron LaPointe confirmed Merlyn. Elders LaPointe and Reid confirmed Earlene. Merlyn and Earlene are children of Brother and Sister Earl Schrunk. Elders LaPointe and Daugherty confirmed Beatrice Colfax, and Elders Daugherty and LaPointe confirmed Clarence Colfax. The five children of Brother and Sister Colfax were blessed, with Elders LaPointe, Daugherty, and Reid officiating.

District conference was held June 28. Elder LaPointe replaced Elder Daugherty as district president. Three delegates chosen were Tom Jones, Sister Lois Ries, and one alternate.

Elder Reid was elected to represent the district at the coming General Conference.

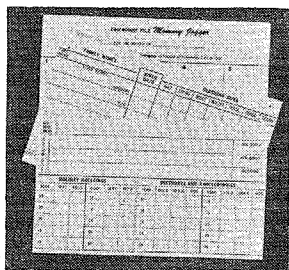

Three men were ordained to the priesthood. They were Martin Neilan of Bonesteel, South Dakota, who was ordained to the office of deacon by Elders Reid and LaPointe; Ralph Schrunk, of Atkinson, who was ordained to the office of priest by Elders LaPointe and Reid; and Willis Hague of Clearwater, who was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Daugherty and LaPointe. Brother Ralph Schrunk is now pastor of the Inman Branch, and Brother Willis Hague is pastor of the Clearwater Branch.

Elder Reid baptized Mrs. Wayne Patras and her daughter, Janice, and son, Thomas, on July 27 in the Elkhorn River. They were confirmed by Brother Reid.

Harvey Morter, of Ainsworth, was baptized in the Niobrara River by Elder Reid on August 2, and was later confirmed at his home.

Elder LaPointe conducted evangelistic services in the district during September and October. District Day was held October 11 at Inman. The program consisted of a prayer meeting and preaching service in the morning,

They were confirmed by Elders Reid and LaPointe.

Marva and Levi Morsbach of Neligh, David Morsbach of Inman, and Charity and Raymond Conard, of Clearwater, were baptized in the Inman church font and confirmed by Elder LaPointe on Sunday morning, October 25.—Reported by MARGARET PRUSS

Preparation Day

BERRYDALE, FLORIDA.—The women of Pensacola District met on August 13 for a day of fellowship. This was designated as "Preparation Day." All leaders of each branch were requested to be present and report on the year's activities and plans for the new year.

The group assembled at nine forty-five in the morning. Sister Lula Jernigan, district leader, gave a short talk on looking for the beautiful. Reports were read from Belleview, Atmore, Dixonville, Milton, Berrydale, Brewton, and Pensacola.

Mrs. Solomon of Belleview told how their group had sponsored a banquet for the purpose of obtaining funds to purchase choir robes. Mrs. Beasley, of Atmore, told of enjoyable fellowship suppers which netted twenty-two dollars for their building fund. Mrs. Shell, of Dixonville, told of the quilt they made and sold for their project. Mrs. Hall, of Milton, told about their potluck supper which netted sixty dollars. This group also donated shrubs to the new Santa Rosa hospital. Mrs. Bob Mixon, of Berrydale, told of several ways in which their group had raised funds. The women had fish suppers, a bazaar, bake sales, concession stands, and ice-cream socials, and sold cards and made a quilt to raise money. Mrs. Beatrice Langham of Brewton stated that her group had sponsored all-night sings, concession stands, sandwich sales, rummage sales, Stanley parties, and other projects. This netted them $1,526.30. These ladies also were active in civic and community projects such as the crippled children's clinic and bloodmobile. Mrs. Freda Rogers, of Pensacola, told of the fish, steak, and chicken dinners sponsored by the group, and also their "Sip and Sup" monthly meetings on Sunday nights. Each six weeks they take up their dime envelopes, which gives every woman an opportunity to participate. These and other activities netted the women $1,167.55.

Elder Lee Oliver, district president, delivered the eleven o'clock sermon, on the theme, "Spiritual Growth."

Mrs. Barnes, Mrs. Mead, and Mrs. Oliver sang "Christ of the Upward Way."

At twelve the groups were dismissed for lunch and reassembled at one thirty. "A Challenge to Christian Ideals" was the theme for the evening service. At this time Sister Lula Jernigan gave a talk on "A Challenge to the Women."—Reported by MARGARET VICKREY

Six Are Baptized

XENIA, ILLINOIS.—Elder John R. Grice held a two weeks' series of meetings September 5-19. Attendance was good, and at the close of the meetings, six were baptized. They were Marilyn Shehorn, Patsy Henson, Ann Greathouse, Ernie Stubbers, Arkie Henson, and Oscar Cook. Brother Grice also held a series of meetings at Brush Creek, and baptized a number there.

Recent Sunday night speakers have included Charlie Wesner, of Centralia, and Chester Cisne, of Brush Creek.

The Zion's League had a sale November 21 to raise money for the building fund. They enjoyed a skating party at Salem three weeks earlier.

The women of the branch served lunch at an antique sale, and have done quilting to raise money for the church fund.—Reported by IONA GREATHOUSE

Two to Be Ordained

BUTLER, MISSOURI.—The branch met in business session on September 23, with Apostle Arthur Oakman in charge. Brother Oakman recommended that Elder E. E. Gamet be sustained as pastor for the coming year. This recommendation was accepted. Other officers elected were secretary, Ocie Burg; music supervisor, Sister Bertha Rogers; auditor, William Noe; director of religious education, Allen Piatt; young people's leader, Leroy Beckham; treasurer, Earl Williams; adult supervisor, Raymond Anders; book steward, Thelma Piatt; bishop's agent, Charles Sutton; women's leader, Elizabeth Deems; and children's supervisor, Mildred Ingram.

An organ fund was set aside, with C. A. Burg, Bertha Rogers, and Thelma Piatt on the committee.

Brother Franklyn Weddle was the speaker October 11.

On October 25, the Rich Hill District conference was held in Butler. Because of an injury, Apostle Oakman was not able to meet with the group, and Apostle Percy Farrow occupied in his absence.

In the business meeting, at which Brother Farrow was in charge, Elder William Williams was recommended as district president. This recommendation was accepted. Other officers were secretary, Ruth Curtis; treasurer, C. A. Burg; music supervisor, Bertha Rogers; young people's leader, Joe Anway; women's leader, Mildred Ingram; director of religious education, James McCollum.

It was approved by the conference that Brothers D. C. Allison and A. M. McCarty be ordained as priest and deacon respectively.—Reported by OCIE BURG

The Christmas Story

It's both a book and a manger set!

True to the Bible, simple and reverent, it tells of the Nativity in such a charming way that the young will never forget. The book is large and printed in type especially selected for children's reading. A sixteen-piece manger set in full color makes the Christmas story come to life. The stand-up pieces can be used in sand tables, on mantels, in the classrooms, under the Christmas tree. Warner Press

BE SURE TO READ THIS!

Aleta Runkle

THE NEW MUSIC BOOK for children is just off the press—The Book of Little Hymns and Other Songs. There are thirty-eight songs for children, ages three to nine. The pages are beautifully illustrated. The book is appealing both in content and design.

Now don't stop here with the thought, "I'm no musician—this is not for me." That's why I didn't put the word "music" in the title. You might just have flipped the page and not looked at this.

Are you a parent of a child or children anywhere from three to nine? Then you need this in your home. Children love to have their parents share in their play. What a fine evening you can have singing around the piano. If you don't have an instrument, the songs can be sung easily without accompaniment. This can be one of the interesting Christmas gifts for your children. You just have time to order one through your book steward—or if there is no book steward in your congregation you can order directly from Herald House.

All of you teachers in the kindergarten and primary departments will want one of these books immediately. It is full of the kind of songs you have been needing—you know, the specific variety that exactly fits some thought you want to present. You have been looking for this kind of book but haven't been able to find it. I have searched, too. Imagine now having not only an excellent song to share with the children but an appealing illustration as well.

Your church school directors will want one so that you will be aware of the materials your teachers are needing. It would be well to buy individual copies for your older primary children. They will experience a great thrill in having the book in their hands.

Grandpa and Grandma, I have thought of you, too. You know how you wish you had all of the children's toys and playthings when they come to visit you. Here will be a new bit of entertainment for them. Surprise them with this book on their next visit. Keep it in your house so that it will always be available when the children come to see you. Don't worry that they will tire of it on successive visits. Children love familiar books. How many times have they asked you to read the same story from the same book?

You may not be a parent. You may not be a teacher or a church school director. You may not be a grandpa or grandma. I am sure that you are one thing—a friend. Do you have difficulty finding appropriate Christmas gifts for some of those close to you? Last year it was perfume—the year before, stationery. If your friend has young children, this book is your answer. Maybe you have some little friends you always remember at Christmas. This will be something different.

The committee has worked on this book for five years. We are proud to present it to you as we say, "Here it is. It's ready." Price $2.50

CHRISTMAS SETTING

When the spirit of Christmas is all through the house, don't forget the most beautiful aspect of the Christmas season—a spirit of worship. Then, let the family Bible stand open at the immortal Christmas story. Underline it in red or green if you like, and for a change from the Christmas creche, get a single stalk of glistening ivy with a few red berries, or a delicate white Christmas rose. Perhaps you will want to have ceramic angels hovering over, much as the heavenly host hovered on that holiest of days.

Do not neglect the reading of the simple passages. They are like music when read with humility. Your record player can provide a muted background of Christmas carols for your holiday meditation.

Whatever your plan, have worship in your heart so that each time you glance at or gather before your little family worship scene, your hearts will be glad and warm with your thankfulness for Christ and his church.

BASIC CREED!

Work is love made visible. And if you cannot work with love, but only with distaste, it is better that you should leave your work and sit at the gate of the temple and take alms from those who work with joy.—Author unknown

"X" FOR CHRIST?

"X" implies that we are so busy in the Christmas season that we don't have "time" to spell out the whole word, . . . that we do not have "room" to spell out "Christ" . . . that we do not know the "real meaning" of Christmas in this day and age. "X" is the mathematical symbol of an unknown quantity. —"Christian Herald"

TOO CROWDED

Is your life crowded with too many things to do? Too many places to go? Too much shopping, too much visiting, too frequent coming and going? It is time to be careful. When life becomes too crowded, the better things are often crowded out. Do you ever notice that inferior duties make the most insistent demands?

When life is too crowded for the good things, it is too crowded.

Charles Alfred Davies

CHARLES DAVIES is the son of a seventy, E. H. Davies, who spent thirty-five years in the mission field. Brother Davies has been under General Church appointment since 1929, serving in all the states of the Commonwealth of Australia and also in New Zealand. He has been an appointee pastor during the whole period with the exception of the last two years. He has twice acted for a period of nine months as mission president when there has been no Apostle in Australia.

Brother Davies was born in Perth, Western Australia, and baptized in 1914. He was graduated from Unley High School in South Australia in 1922 and obtained a certificate to teach from the Victoria Training School in 1925. He taught for a period in the Victorian Education Department and later served four years as senior housemaster at the Hale School in Western Australia (a resident high school taking students up to nineteen years). From this position he resigned to accept General Church appointment.

In 1929 he married Elsa V. E. Alberts, sister of Bishop Donald A. Alberts who visited the United States in 1948.

His first appointment under General Church assignment was with Elder Harold I. Velt, whose pastorate he took when Brother Velt was transferred to the United States. His work throughout his appointment has been in missionary pastorates and in religious education.

Brother Davies instituted the annual training school in Australia known as Wandell College. This has functioned annually in January since 1946. As many as sixty students from fifteen to forty years old have been accommodated in residence for an intense training period involving approximately eighty lectures. The school has a staff of six, mainly appointees. Brother Davies has acted as principal since its inception.

To see such men as Les Gardner, Jack Imrie, and Vivien Sorensen, who at one time trained in this school and who are now full-time appointees working in fields far from him, is the source of deepest satisfaction to Brother Davies. "When viewing these men whom I once tutored all work under appointment, I receive my greatest 'kick,'" he says.

Wandell College first was held in the Davies' home. It is now conducted in the Leichhardt church. Over 300 students have taken courses.

At present there are three states included in his missionary responsibility—Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia—2,000 miles from boundary to boundary.

Brother Davies was ordained a priest in 1928, an elder in 1929, and a high priest in 1941. He compiled the Church Member's Manual and is associate editor of the Standard, the Australian church magazine.

His wife is the director of the women's department of the Australasian Mission. They have two children: Marjorie (Mrs. James Germly) and Robin, 21. The Davies are proud of their one grandson, Michael Charles, born in February this year.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY MEET

President Israel A. Smith reports that the Presidents of Seventy held sessions the week of December 7-11 in Salt Lake City, with Z. Z. Renfroe in charge.

JOINT COUNCIL SESSIONS CONTINUE

Members of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Council of Twelve have been meeting in joint council since December 1, to attend to routine matters and to hold discussion preparatory to the coming General Conference.

VISITS FIRST PRESIDENCY

Elder Herbert Scott of Des Moines visited the First Presidency at church headquarters on December 7.

AT AUDITORIUM FUND DINNER

Walter N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric was in Des Moines, Iowa, December 4, where he spoke at a dinner held to raise money for the Auditorium fund. Bishop Stephen Robinson reported that a number of branches in that district have already exceeded their Auditorium fund quotas.

On December 5, Bishop Johnson looked over church properties in the area with members of the district bishopric.

HANSONS HONORED FOR LONG SERVICE

The members of the Council of Twelve and their wives entertained President and Mrs. Paul M. Hanson at a dinner commemorating their forty years of service on Tuesday evening, December 8. A beautiful table lamp was presented to the Hansons. Apostle D. T. Williams was spokesman for the group, and good wishes from the various areas of the world where Brother Hanson has served were brought by each Council member.

AT DISTRICT PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE

Apostle Percy Farrow and Merle Guthrie, Church Statistician, attended the Kentucky-Tennessee District priesthood institute held at Jacks Creek, Tennessee, December 5-6. They taught classes, and Brother Farrow was the Sunday morning speaker.

AT NAUVOO BRANCH AND FORT MADISON, IOWA

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was with the Nauvoo Branch Sunday, December 6, where he talked to the church school class, assisted with the Communion service, and preached. In the afternoon, he was present at the district priesthood meeting at Fort Madison, Iowa.

WORKSHOP FOR KINGDOM-BUILDING PROGRAM

A workshop on the experimental "Kingdom-building Program," through which priesthood members work to encourage every member participation, was held on Tuesday, December 8. Those who attended the workshop included Robert Farnham, president of Lamoni Stake; Charles V. Graham, president of Center Stake; Harry J. One Born to Challenge

EVERYONE LOVES a baby—at least, almost everyone! Of course they do some rather annoying things at times, such as keeping us awake at night with extended crying sessions. And they cause quite a bit of work most of the time. But, all in all, they're mighty nice to have around.

Even landlords don't seem to mind little babies. It's a few months later that they begin to ask you to find new living quarters. For some reason or other, it seems that as the child grows older the number of people who adore him grows smaller. There is an increasing number who express dissatisfaction with his behavior. By the time he reaches adulthood, the circle of those who especially love him has usually narrowed to a few relatives and friends.

Well, maybe that isn't a truly scientific picture to paint of the maturing process. But most certainly the adult isn't accepted as a friend—or loved—just because he's an adult: he has to exhibit some qualities of personality that are appreciated. He can't get by with just being "cute." And if he is very aggressive in trying to achieve some goal, he will probably find many who will not agree with him and will try to hinder his achieving it.

NEARLY TWO THOUSAND YEARS ago, a baby was born. He started very early having enemies. There was one who was anxious to kill him as soon as he was born. And he was a fearful fellow—a king—who would stop at nothing to eliminate his protagonists.

It isn't often that a baby is considered a challenge to power. But this situation was unusual, for the king had been informed that a baby was to be his rival; it was to be "king of the Jews." The royalty of Herod the Great was about to be interrupted, he felt. A new prince had been born; his "star" had been seen rising over the horizon, aiming toward its zenith.

King Herod did not react much differently than many others have reacted in similar circumstances. Many people have annihilated, or tried to annihilate, threats to their power in a moment of fear. I imagine that if all of us were really honest with ourselves we'd discover many occasions when we've tried to do the same thing on a small scale.

Brother Elbert A. Smith has written, in one of his famous John Howard stories, of the time when a young preacher overheard a conversation among older ministers. One of the group seemed bitter and critical. "These young preachers will be getting ahead of us," he rasped. "We are pushed aside all the time, and these young whippersnappers are pushed forward." Others joined his lament until a dignified gentleman spoke, "We sing, 'God is calling now to battle, both the aged and the youth.' There is room in this work for all, and all are needed. As for me, I do not care how many young men get ahead of me. The more the better. And if any young man gets ahead of me I will get behind him and push with all my might."

The attitude of the critical minister has probably entered most of our minds at times. And sometimes we haven't had the stabilizing influence of the encouraging word given by the "dignified gentleman." So we have allowed this resentment to grow toward the individual or thing which threatens to submerge us below the surface of popular acclaim and recognition. We become a miniature Herod, willing to destroy much to maintain status quo.

THERE ALWAYS SEEMS to be great resistance to change, no matter how good it may eventually be. A few followers can always be found when a new leader or a new fad is introduced to the world. But there are usually strong human forces resisting the change for fear they or their possessions and power will be usurped. Even the best of changes will not be made without considerable opposition. Often it is the better ones that are held back.

THE MESSAGE of "peace, good will toward men" has been and still is struggling to gain acceptance in the world. Its originator was very aggressive in teaching and practicing this philosophy; but his words and actions presaged a change in religious, political, and economic affairs. He was crucified through the efforts of religious fanatics who felt most the effects of his powerful message as it crashed down the secure walls of their profession. Christ, at first, was just an upstart, but later a formidable "foe" to be destroyed! Control of power was at stake.

Even though Christ's crucifixion brought us victory over death and the grave, the struggle for peace and understanding in this life still continues. There are those who have not even learned to "live and let live," let alone "live and help live." Many of us have yet to learn to boost others to heights that are above us. It takes a changed life to be able to express the attitude caught up in the words of Bishop Albert Carmichael, spoken on the occasion of another man's success: "Boy, I'm not jealous of you—I'm jealous for you."

The babe in the manger grew to be a man—a real man, the champion of both poor and rich, of young and old. He still fosters, through people "who care," the principle of the abundant and understanding life. He continually searches for others to fill his ranks.

Other babies will be born this Christmas . . . and will grow into adulthood. They will have a pattern before them of a perfect life. Someday, some babies will change the world—by following the challenge of Christ to his disciples, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

The Auditorium - a Place of Fulfillment

The Presiding Bishopric

"... faith, if it have not works is dead."—James 2: 17.

THE PRESIDING BISHOP, G. Leslie DeLapp, and his counselors, Henry L. Livingston and Walter N. Johnson, have been given a great responsibility and a great promise:

The Bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the Bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure; and they will be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 3.

To bishops, their agents, and the army of solicitors that reach out into each branch comes the privilege of assisting the members to match their faith by their works in rendering a true account of their stewardship over material blessings.

These material blessings when shared provide for those in need, for the care of the appointees and their families, for the support of church institutions, for building houses of worship, for establishing the storehouse, and for laying the foundation of Zion. Unless the tithes, offerings, and consecrations of surplus come into the treasury of the church, the Bishopric cannot perform these duties.

The great program of the Gathering rests with the Bishop. Saints desiring to move to Zion and the regions around need his counsel, for he is to be a judge in Israel in divisions of heritages (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32). And he is a judge to sit in judgment upon transgressors in case difficulties arise to necessitate bishop's courts.

In compliance with the law, the Bishop must search out and care for the poor and needy (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23). This is done in branches, districts, and through the General Church by solicitors, bishop's agents, and bishops under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. In the further discharge of this duty, church-sponsored homes for the aged are operated—Resthaven in Independence and the Saints' Home in Lamoni. Resthaven cares for thirty-one guests and the Saints' Home cares for twelve.

The responsibility of the membership is given in the law as follows:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

Because of the varied interests over which the Bishop in his temporal responsibilities presides, it is necessary for many departments to be organized to care for this work under his direction. The above pictured staff of thirty-seven persons is used to carry out this work, involving the following departments:

A Farm Management Department under Bishop N. Ray Carmichael gives detailed management and supervision to approximately 7,500 acres of farm land owned by the church in Jackson and adjoining counties.

The Kind of Christmas We Need This Year

TEXTS:

By Roy A. Cheville

Watchman, what of the night?—
Isaiah 21: 11.

Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; . . . together shall they sing.
—Isaiah 52: 8.

ONE JULY NOON I was standing in the tower atop the central hill fortress of old Nuremberg in Bavaria. Below was the city with remnants of medieval fortifications. Here and there were smaller wall towers. The countryside stretched out in panoramic view. I turned back the calendar several centuries. In my mind's eye I could see a sentinel where I was standing. It was his responsibility to report to the guard of the city any danger he might detect. The safety of the dwellers depended upon the accuracy of his eye.

I was there at noon on a clear day. It was not difficult to read the landscape. Some days, however, would be very cloudy. Even later in that day of mine the sun would set. When night would fall the guard would have to watch carefully. He could miss dangers lurking near or far away. He could misinterpret what he saw. He could make threatening attackers out of something insignificant. He could make a mountain out of a molehill. These very things can happen with us, today, as we look out over our countryside. We can miss some signs and misinterpret others.

Right easily I could imagine a guard in the city below calling up to the sentinel in the Nuremberg fortress, "Watchman, what of the night?" From his reply would be builded the program of action for the city. From it would come the watchword for the day. From it would be listed the priority needs. It was more than a required ritual to ask the man in the tower for the day's or night's outlook. It was a matter of survival.

We are concerned with the building of our program for Christmas, 1953. We could sit down and juggle a calendar out of the miscellany of yesterday. Rather, let us look about the countryside of our world, discover its needs that call us to action, and build accordingly. Most of us sense perplexities and problems within our times. Right fittingly we call up to ask the watchman, "What of the night?"

Isaiah at the Watchtower

Isaiah lived in troubled times. He had need to peer at the heavens for signs of each coming day. His country had been conquered and exploited. His people were divided by class distinctions. At such a time Isaiah spoke out in the name of God, "I have set watchmen upon thy walls" (62: 6). These should have been the interpreters of the times who would speak out clearly and boldly. But many of them were too concerned with themselves, too tied to a dead past. So Isaiah was forced to admit, "His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, . . . dumb, . . . sleeping" (56: 10). There was no hope from such as they: they would not and could not read the signs.

Today you and I have dual responsibilities. We not only call to the watchmen; we are the watchmen. We are to make the reply. This Christmas waits on our watchword, on our program of action.

The Ancients' Anxiety over Portents

The ancients were always seeking signs. They searched the heavens for a star, a wind, or a flight of birds that would indicate the disposition and intent of their gods. This was a kind of future-telling that was easy to read. It exacted little of the watcher. No repentance was required. No personal discipline was called for. No spiritual alertness was needed to equip them for some insight. They just had to look up and see the omens. Jesus denounced this kind of sign-seeking as shallow and ineffective. He wanted the signs of the soul, not of the skies.

Stories of the first Christmas are replete with this ancient interest in sign-seeking. The Magi came from afar because they read the astrological indications of some unusual event. The planets were supposed to have a controlling interest in human lives. The mere shining of a brilliant star could call forth the curiosity of the multitudes. It could lead them with empty hearts and curious spirit to gaze at some shrine or personage.

Reading the Signs

In the investigation that followed the debacle at Pearl Harbor some military men complained that there were no signs to warn them of impending attack. If one day a hostile plane had dropped a bomb, the watchers might have been alerted. A wise investigator replied that the open-eyed person does not need such plain evidence. He can piece together bits of happenings and discover trends and meanings. It takes keen perception to do this. This holds for spiritual alertness as well.

Those of us who are comparatively immature want the less exacting, the dramatic way. We ask for a cloud or a meteor in the sky. We would like to have the star of Bethlehem light up the heavens. We would have celestial singers fill the celestial space. It would please us if God by some magic charm would change the hearts of men to good will. Today's promises are not for this way that requires so little of us. God is searching for those who will rise to the level of insight and discovering, for those who will read the social, the spiritual signs, and piece them together with meaning.

The Oslo Youth Conference

In July, 1947, some 1,300 Christian young people and their leaders from 71 countries met in Oslo. The war had just closed. Suffering and want abounded. Hopes had been shattered. Confusion and uncertainty were everywhere. Martin Niemöller of Germany could truthfully say, "Optimism is fading away." Yet in magnificent faith he could affirm, "The future is . . . for those who belong to Christ. Keep your flame of faith burning." He was reading the signs of the times as he mounted the watchtower. Yes, he sensed the setbacks, the meanness, the hatreds, the cynicism, the hungers. Yet he could see farther than others were seeing. With the eye of dynamic faith he could see signs of promise.

This was a time that tried men's souls. Many lost faith. The stronghearted youth wrote in three languages on the front wall of their meeting place, "Jesus Christ Is Lord." The simplicity of the watchword was eloquent. Its tone was affirmative. Others might elevate arms, governments, and superficial victory. Here Jesus Christ was made the center of reference. He was the world's greatest creed, its one hope.

Watchmen for Today

Today in our observance of the Christmas season, we can become very busy doing the conventional things. We can hang wreaths of holly and evergreens. We can decorate our Christmas trees. We can sing our carols. We can string our bright Christmas lights. We can wrap our packages with tinsel papers. We can send out our yuletide cards. We can light candles in our vesper services. We can pile high our tables in Christmas feasts. Yet all of this can miss the mark.

What are the needs of the times? What of our branches, our families, our communities, our nation, our world, our church? What do we watchmen of today see and say?

Watchword of the First Christmas

The Bethlehem watchwords were heralded to a world that desperately needed them: "Peace on earth, good will to men!" The Greco-Roman world was a weary one. I doubt that there has been a more spiritually bankrupt period in our history. There was a surface appearance of wealth and peace. Underneath was spiritual impoverishment. The masses held to the old gods superstitiously. Wiser men either poked fun at them or tolerated them for the populace. Moral qualities were not associated with them. There was little or no foundation for or motivation toward inner or social peace. To such a sensuous, shallow world watchmen called, "Peace!" and "Good will!"

Yet this was more than a watchword. The "word became flesh and dwelt among men, full of grace and truth." Jesus, whom disciples hailed as Christ, became the very embodiment of this Christmas message. He was the Prince of Peace; he was the Shepherd of Love. The Father knew that men needed to see a revelation of this watchword in the life of the watchman himself.

Watchwords for 1954

As I look over our world today I bring you four watchwords: "holiness," "helpfulness," "home," and "hope." I speak them to a world that needs them. I ask you as watchmen to sound them. I call upon you to carry them into whatever place you go. I charge you to make them incarnate in your lives. We have yet a few days in which to practice them among ourselves. Then we shall carry them far. No angel chorus is going to sing them for us. We are to be the heralds. This year I entreat you to lift your observance of Christmas above the commonplace. I plead that you do not drift into the observance of the Christmastide. Think well what you as watchmen are going to be saying.

A Day for Holiness

It may sound trite to say we need a holy day, but it must be said. That is the basic quality of a holiday. Centuries ago God enjoined his chosen people to be holy. The directive still stands. During these centuries we have often stereotyped the idea of holiness. Sometimes it has suggested oddities and strange peculiarities, such as wearing whiskers, garbing in identifying clothes, abstaining from food, employing a "holy" tone in speaking, spending hours in vigils and prayers, and denying one's self comforts and enjoyments. Here again the signs were external. It would be quite easy to ascribe holiness to any one of us if this quality could be identified by some pin or coat or accessory.

Holiness is an inner quality that can be detected only through association, only through discovering the qualities of the soul. A holy person is dedicated to God. Only those can be dedicated to Him who share his nature. Only those can truly celebrate Christmas who carry the spirit of Christ in his anniversaries.

Our times need this righteousness. We have programs and more programs for social reform. Most of them are doomed to fall apart; they are leaving out this basic quality of holiness. Not long ago Dr. W. A. Vesser 't Hooft commented, "Churches and movements have too often tried to have the kingdom without righteousness." From my watchtower I see a world desperately in need of personal and social righteousness.

This kind of righteousness that characterizes the Christ of Christmas is not a refraining, passive goodness; it is an active, adventurous saintliness. It is in the midst of things, making the kingdom come true. Such a view also conceives of sinfulness as aggressive and assertive. I have never been much concerned about the Devil, but I can join in a bit of rhyme from childhood:

The Devil is voted not to be
And of course the Devil is gone,
But simple folk would like to know
Who carries the business on.

Devilish business is going to be abroad in our land. We can wink our eye and say, "That's just merrymaking at holiday time. We can expect that." Or we can spend our time lamenting the evils of the day. There is another possibility: we can be busy with attractive goodness and crowd out the sordid and ungodly.

There can be drinking, gambling, loose sex indulgence, jealousy, backbiting, debts, and hangovers. But there can also be clean, happy, wholesome observances of the holiday. This will come if such as you put your influence and creativeness to the work of making them happen.

Let's come close home with this. In these remaining days before Christmas let's be a holy people. Let's come clean before the Lord. Out of our common life shall go the petty jarrings, the smutty stories, the inconsiderateness, the flubbing on our academic, social, and industrial stewardships, the forgetfulness of others. Let's be a holy people unto the Lord. Let's make Christmas a holy day.

A Holiday of Helpfulness

There can be no holiness without helpfulness. Once Jesus said that the mere giving of a cup of cold water in his name was service to him. It is implied that the giving was in his spirit. There is something striking in the narrative of the first Christmas: As soon as people caught the spirit of the message they went to Bethlehem to give. With each gift something of the giver went, too.

I am lifted each Christmas season as I see the multiple expressions of kindly helpfulness. I find ever so much potential for goodness inside every one of us. We repair and paint toys for poor children. We send baskets of food to needy families. We drop our coins in kettles along the street for social service. We greet one another a bit kindlier. Even a Scrooge is touched by the spirit of the season. Our faith in human nature is lifted.

Let us not be content with a general diffused feeling of helpfulness. Let us now begin singling out some specific expressions. Is there some shut-in in your home town who would enjoy a visit from you? Is there a congregation that would be happy as you help to decorate the place of worship? Is there a mother whose heart would be happy as you share in the odd jobs around the house? Is there some youngster who would be thrilled if you stopped to chat for a moment? Let's make it a holiday of helpfulness.

A Home Festival

Third, let us speak out the watchword, "Home!" Christmas began with a family around a manger. Let us give priority to home observance! To this immediate family circle we add the church. We refer to it as "the household of faith." We greet the members as "brother" and "sister." We are growing into world-around pictures of familial brotherhood.

To Graceland Students

We hear ever so much lamenting these days about the disintegrating of the modern family. This Christmas let's declare a moratorium on these lamentations. Rather let us devote our energies to achieving good Christmas experiences in our own families. Some of you come from homes that are not in very healthy conditions: some of them are torn with disharmony or are weak with indifference. Some are wobbling in confusion. You can be the leaven of Christmas spirit as you return home with fresh expectations and buoyant cheer. Plan simple things that the family can do together. Some of you will be visitors in homes. You hold a significant role. Those who come from distant places can carry the greetings of your homeland and further the universal outlook for Christ's anniversary. Make this Christmas significant in your family. Lead out in some devotional experience, simple yet suited to the situation.

You will be going back to your home congregation. By the time you leave the campus you will have participated in many a Christmas party, serenade, and worship service. Let these be the take-off for a co-operative participation in the life of the branch at home. Tell them of the good Christmas activities of the college, but do not parade them. It is well to remember that persons of gentility do not indulge in comparisons in some areas of life.

Well do I remember how the friendly folk of my small branch in central Iowa were anxious about my return from college that first Christmas. They were frank enough to tell me that they had been wondering if I would come back putting on airs and parading collegiate ways. Would I come back decked out in college boy clothes? Would I decline to participate in the simple Christmas Eve program? Would I shake hands with the Saints as I had always done? Would I sit on the back seat as an observer? Or, most of all, would I stay away from the meetings? Likewise your home branch will be wondering about you. If you go back with aloofness or superiority there will be doubt about the place of our college, and there will be disappointment over you. I charge you to go back with a friendly handshake, a word of greeting, and a readiness to participate.

In all the busyness of the vacation time, it will be likely that you will find yourself in a round of activities. If you are in Independence, there will be gatherings of Gracelanders. You will plan parties and socials; you will be going to meetings and conferences. Save an evening or two for the family. Go with your people to the house of the Lord. Keep the home hearth fire the center of your Christmas observance.

A Time for Hope

Christmas, 1953, must carry a message of hope. It can be convincing only by the people who are convinced that there is a future for those who work with God. Nihilism, existentialism, and communism build their interpretations upon human life without any upward pulls of divine empowerment. We shall do well to be honest and acknowledge that communism is speaking out as a system of human optimism. We shall need to look beneath its surface and discover the eventual disillusionment. We detect a hopelessness abroad in our world, especially in Europe, as many turn from expectancy for today toward fulfillment in the hereafter. It is an unhealthy time for religion when it postpones all its hopes until future life. This Christmas, let us speak out boldly that there is hope—that there is hope for our world, for our church, for ourselves.

A Christian refuses to haul down the banner of hope and surrender to the forces of despair. He may be somewhat pessimistic about immediate conditions, but he must be expectant about the long-time victory of righteousness. In Goethe's Faust, when the angels and the Devil are struggling over the hero's fate, the angels say,

Whoever keeps always striving,
Him we are able to save.

That is the affirmation of the Christian gospel. As long as any person and any people genuinely want to rise above where they are, the angels will come to support them in uplifting activities.

One night in Jerusalem the Man of Galilee talked to twelve men in his farewell conversation. He knew that in a short while he would be arrested, jeered, insulted, abandoned by disciples, and crucified. His faith rose in magnificent triumph as he looked down the centuries and testified, "I have overcome the world." He knew that no satanic forces could block the eventual achievement of peace and good will. We who honor him this Christmastide must carry this hope.

Do You Believe This Matters?

It is going to be comparatively easy for us to go on as if we had never been taught. We can even repeat the four needed watchwords for this year's Christmas: "holiness," "helpfulness," "home," and "hope." When the watchman calls this to us can we go back and be as we were before? Dr. Elton Trueblood has spoken of "the fellowship of the concerned." By this he meant those who joined in "the exciting venture of faith in which we bet that God really is, that this is his world, and that he is like Jesus Christ." This Christmas needs those who together are genuinely committed to such a daring belief.

A few years ago a representative of a great oil company met on an ocean liner a missionary returning from China. This missionary was so well informed about that land that the oilman wanted him to work for his company in the opening of their business in China. At first $10,000 a year was offered. Then $20,000. Then $25,000. Then he was asked to name his own figure; the businessman did not understand. At last the missionary replied: "The salary you offered first is large enough. I am making only $1,200 a year. It is not your salary that is too small; it is your job. I have a bigger job than you can possibly offer." Would that every one of us could feel the pull of such a job! I can think of no bigger one.

Christmas in Palenque

LUSH TROPICAL JUNGLES stretch across part of southern Mexico. The humid lowland region, bounded by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Yucatan's brush country, British Honduras' Caribbean coast, and the mountains of Chiapas and Guatemala, forms one of Mexico's most isolated and underdeveloped areas. The few inhabitants—among Mexico's most backward—eke out a difficult existence. Encrusted with tall, vine-entangled trees, dense underbrush, stagnant swamps, and rampaging mud-sworled rivers, infested with insect hordes, feverish tropical diseases, and sweltering under a continually humid climate, this region resists the advance of modern civilization.

But long before the white men came, this same area was the home of one of the world's most highly advanced ancient civilizations—the early Mayan Empire, with a population numbering hundreds of thousands. They built many cities and villages, erected imposing public buildings of stone, carried on prosperous commerce and agriculture, and developed arts and sciences. The early Mayan Empire disintegrated abruptly and mysteriously over 1,000 years ago. Cities, homes, and farms were abandoned. Stone buildings crumbled under the attacks of time and the jungle and were soon hidden under soil and dense vegetation. There they lay for many centuries. Mainly in the last 75 years modern scientists have "discovered" these ancient cities. Men are slowly digging out their buildings, bones, tools, pottery. A few of the buildings are being restored.

MUTE EVIDENCES of a great civilization which once existed in a region which defies modern man's civilization, these ancient stone cities (and their mysterious builders) are an intriguing paradox. Especially perplexing are indications of similarities of ancient American civilization to early Near East cultures and to Christianity. These include Jewish customs and religious beliefs, Egyptian architecture and writing, and legends of a bearded white god worshiped by the ancients—a god born of a virgin and crucified upon a cross. Who were these ancient peoples? From where did they come? How do they fit into the pattern of history? Scientists puzzle these questions and disagree in their answers. But none can dispute that the stone cities of southern Mexico's jungles, and other ancient cities found in Central and South America, are striking monuments to cultured people and superlative early civilizations.

Scientists hope they may someday stumble across historical writings explaining the mystery of these ancient American civilizations. One such historical record does exist today. It was not found by scientists, and most scientists are either ignorant of it or are prejudiced against it by the unusual circumstances of its discovery. But anyone acquainted with Christ's church restored in the latter times has access to this divinely preserved religious history of the ancient Americans—the Book of Mormon. Its pages reveal the origin of these people, their civilized development, knowledge of Christ, and the corrupting and eventual downfall of their nation. Sponsored by the church as valuable divine Scripture, the Book of Mormon's historical accuracy is verified by scientific discoveries of the remains of the ancient civilizations.

Color pictures of these remains are occasionally useful as one of many aids in forwarding Christ's church today. Four church members—Page Bruch, Kenneth Raveill, Ward Weldon, and I—recently traveled into southern Mexico's jungles to photograph ancient ruined cities in these Book of Mormon lands. Our experiences in visiting the ruined city of Palenque, and the present-day native village near by (also called Palenque), suggested this article.

TRAVEL into this great jungle region is difficult. Few automobile roads exist, and none are extensive. Natives walk or ride burros along vine-hung trails or ply their dugout canoes on rain-swollen rivers. Small airplanes skip down onto a few bumpy little airstrips cleared in the jungle. One lone railroad pokes its way hesitantly through the encroaching vegetation, connecting Mexico proper with its Yucatan peninsula. Fortunately this railroad passes near Palenque. We met the train at its northern terminal, Coatzacoalcos.

Train travel in Mexico is a unique experience, much different than the plush, streamlined system in the United States. Every mile from Coatzacoalcos to Palenque tested our perseverance. Movement is miserably slow. Every cluster of jungle huts becomes a stopover. Torrential rains periodically wash out bridges and whole sections of track. Many stretches of soggy roadbed delayed progress, the train edging along at five miles an hour, ties and rails oozing up and down under the weight of the passing train. The cars, of 1900 vintage, had been made and apparently worn out in the U.S. before being purchased by the Mexican railroad. They sagged and weaved in every possible direction. Railroad engineers start and stop the train in rail-grinding lurches, sometimes sending people and belongings sprawling through the cars. Second-class cars, where we and the natives traveled for financial reasons, offered the scant comfort of straight-backed wooden benches. We spent several days and nights aboard this train before alighting at Palenque. The nights were a particularly unique experience. Hurling through the jungle night in a crowded, creaking, dimly lit coach, holding down valuable camera equipment under our intertwined legs, constantly shifting aching spinal columns against wooden bench slats, and being leaned on by heavy-breathing Indian fellow travelers, we feigned sleep but got little.

WE REACHED PALENQUE about eight thirty on a rainy morning two days before Christmas. It was the first day that a heavy cloud mantle had threatened our picture-taking. In other ruined cities we had enjoyed intense sunlight with fluffy white clouds floating across the sky—perfect conditions for color pictures. Our relief in getting off the train was tempered by disappointment in the weather. Palenque village lies a few miles from the train station, and the ancient ruins a few miles beyond the village. A road of sorts connects them. We chugged off to the village aboard a battered U.S. army surplus station wagon, its gas and tires freighted in by train. The village is on a stretch of rolling ground cleared from the jungle near a small, muddy river. A few hundred inhabitants live in homes of saplings or rough-hewn planks, some with thatched roofs and dirt floors. Others have corrugated metal roofs to fend off the region's eighty inch annual rainfall.

We stowed our belongings in one shack proclaiming itself a "hotel" and inquired how to reach the ruins. A second truck (the village boasted two of them) was waiting to take visitors to the ruins, seven miles away. We asked their price—40 pesos (about $5.00 in U.S. money). In no great hurry because of the heavy-hanging clouds, and in a bargaining mood, we stalled and haggled over the price. To our small surprise three other visitors got aboard and the truck left without us. "Well, who cares?" we said. The truck would be back later, or we could hunt up the other truck and get a cheaper price. The clouds over the ruins still blotted out necessary sunlight. We could wait awhile. And we still had our 40 pesos!

Palace in Palenque

Hours passed, and the clouds began to show signs of breaking. Still no truck. Then natives told us it remained at the ruins all day! We found that the other truck traveled only between the railroad and the village and did not usually take visitors to the ruins, and that its driver had disappeared into Palenque's back alleys. Now we became concerned. The sun's rays were streaking through the clouds here and there. We were losing valuable time for pictures of those important ruins. We would hike it afoot! But the natives said, "Too far, too long time." Sizing up our load of six cameras and accessory equipment, we had to agree. Concern became frantic worry. We made a desperate search for the driver of the first truck, and finally found him. After some time and a sharp exchange in Spanish, we talked him into taking us. The price: 40 pesos! We paid it meekly. Because of our indecision and unwillingness to pay the price originally, we had wasted nearly four hours of valuable time and had almost missed seeing the ruins at all that day. After seeing and photographing spectacular Palenque, we realized that the privilege was worth many times the price we paid.

ANCIENT PALENQUE's stone buildings are perched part way up the side of a low range of jungle mountains. A recently built roadway, showing occasional traces of asphalt, winds through the jungle from the present village to the ancient ruined city. Rounding the final uphill bend of the road, we saw our goal above us. Through towering trees we beheld Palenque, its crumbling ruins barely raising themselves out of their green mantle. The sun, conquering the last heavy cloud masses, glistened on numberless moist plant surfaces and evoked rising mists. In wonderment we gazed upon the sacred city of the ancient Mayas. We felt in the presence of something very old and very important. Several temples elevated on pyramids and a great sprawling palace topped by a four-story tower bespoke the splendor of earlier days. Surrounding them had once been private dwellings (probably of wood) and beyond were farm lands. The stone edifices left standing were just the public buildings, ancient Palenque's "downtown."

Palenque's ruins are indeed quite old. The accumulation of muted time hangs over them like a pall. The Nephites may have built the structures originally, and the Lamanites may have occupied and added to them after the Nephites were destroyed. Palenque's ruins are important in archaeological support of the Book of Mormon. Though fallen into decay, they reveal a high degree of culture in art and architecture. Several pyramids suggest relationship with ancient Egypt. The cross of Christ was carved in several places in the ruins, supporting the Book of Mormon's record of our Lord's visiting and establishing his gospel there. Two temples display the cross prominently. One, set high on a steep-sloped pyramid, is named "Temple of the Cross." Inside this vaulted sanctuary excavators found a large stone tablet inscribed with hieroglyphics and featuring in its center an ornamented cross worshiped by two priests. A plaster replica of this tablet is in the foyer of our Auditorium in Independence. The original tablet is now displayed in Mexico City's National Museum.

We quickly dispersed in our photographic endeavors, clambering through tangled underbrush and over crumbling, slippery stone ramparts for vantage points to record the wonders of Palenque for home congregations. For two days we enjoyed clear weather; then, on the morning we left Palenque, the gray drizzle again curtailed off the sun, and it rained all that day.

NEW DISCOVERIES are continually made in the search for the remains of ancient America's civilizations. They further verify the record of the Book of Mormon. A very important discovery about pyramids was made in Palenque during the summer of 1952. The peculiar parallel between pyramids in Egypt and pyramids in Central America is explained by the Book of Mormon record that the ancient inhabitants of America were Israelites from Palestine who migrated here, bringing with them a knowledge of Egyptian culture and architecture. But scientists, unwilling to accept this historical record, claim that the pyramids just happened to develop among the ancient Mayas without any direct relationship to Egypt. Besides, they say, Egypt's pyramids were built to memorialize nobility buried in inner chambers, whereas America's pyramids are solid pedestals elevating places of worship built on top.

Such a pyramid at Palenque does elevate a temple, and was once thought to be a solid pedestal. But when scientists probed into its interior, they made one of the most astounding discoveries in American archaeology in recent years. The pyramid, they found, was not just a solid mass of rubble inside. It contained a large inner chamber in the form of a cross. There, in a magnificent hewn-stone sarcophagus, lay the remains of one of Palenque's ancient rulers, surrounded with evidences of regal splendor. Carved on a large stone slab forming the lid of the sarcophagus was another ornamented cross. Here, in America, was a pyramid built for precisely the same purpose as those in Egypt—for the burial of kings! We were thrilled to be among the first visitors to be permitted to go inside this pyramid and view its burial chamber.

WE EMERGED from inside the pyramid to survey Palenque again in the warm light of late afternoon. All about us lay the remains of a once splendid city, part of a prosperous ancient civilization. Scientists say the city was suddenly deserted over 1,000 years ago, due to some unknown but overwhelming catastrophe. The people migrated or were destroyed, the wooden homes disintegrated, and stone buildings and farm lands were covered with jungle vegetation. The broken stone buildings that remained were pitiful reminders of a fallen nation. Why?

The Book of Mormon records that the ancient civilization declined because of disobedience to God's laws; it flouted Christ's church and gospel and became swamped in the morass of moral and political corruption. Refusing to repent and "ripening in iniquity," the ancient nation plunged willfully into the abyss of divine retribution and was destroyed. Desolate Palenque is a memento to the high civilization and subsequent low degradation and rebellious downfall of one group of God's creatures.

Visiting the ancient ruins of Book of Mormon lands is not necessarily an elating, uplifting experience. It may be for pleasure-bent tourists, but, knowing of the Book of Mormon, we felt the sobering realization of how low men could sink after having once basked in the love of Christ, of how precisely the Lord's words are fulfilled, and of how utterly overpowering his righteous judgments are. Mormon writes that some among the Gentiles will "sorrow for the destruction of this people; they will sorrow that this people had not repented, that they might have been clasped in the arms of Jesus." We felt a degree of this sorrow.

WE COMPLETED our photographic work and returned to Palenque village. It was Christmas Eve, and we would spend the night in the village before continuing our journey by train the next day. Far from home and loved ones, we longed for church worship and family gatherings in observing our Lord's birth. We resolved to observe how Palenque village celebrated Christmas Eve. The celebration was less religious than we had expected.

Latin America's dominant religion has long kept these peoples in spiritual bondage. The rising forces of democracy and human rights, plus apathy and disinterest, are spelling the doom of the church's complete control. We saw dramatic evidence of its waning power on that Christmas Eve in Palenque.

Indians dressed in freshly laundered white cotton best had been gathering in the village throughout the day. They stood in small groups, exchanging news, expectantly awaiting the fiesta activities of the evening. Two kinds of preparations were going forward. In the metal-roofed shack which served as the church, the visiting priest was preparing for the special Mass. In two places about fifty yards from the church, one on either side, preparations not of a worshipful character were going on. One was a private dwelling, the other was what served as a public fiesta hall. In both places three-or four-piece marimba bands were warming up. Stacked near by were many cases of beer and a few of more concentrated potency. What was now quietly occupying its corked bottles would soon enliven the dancing feet of Palenque's celebrants and eventually rage and pound in their reeling brains. Fortunately, the religious service began first. Had the jag-tuned marimba bands sounded off first, the divine service would have been lost in the shuffle.

Twenty or thirty women and as many children had filed slowly into the church. We four, making ourselves as inconspicuous as possible, mingled with a few men drifting toward the makeshift church. We stood quietly in the shadows and peered in through the door. At the front was a statue of the town's patron saint, flanked by a few inexpensive items of ritualistic regalia that the parish owned. Those inside sat down on rough plank benches. Counting those outside, there were perhaps sixty in all. Inside, the women held lighted candles, and the children fingered little clay whistles. The order to strike up the band had not yet been given, but most of Palenque's men and a good share of its women and children were noisily awaiting it at the neighboring buildings. We few at church worship were definitely in the minority.

THE PUDGY priest entered the chapel, clad in purple robes. His eyes and lips glistened in the flickering candlelight, he began the Mass in a rapid singsong. Intermittently the worshipers shared in the memorized chant. The women and older children sang their part in heavy-voiced disharmony, accompanied by the younger children puffing their shrill clay whistles. Then the priest began his ritual again. We could not help comparing this with the quiet, orderly devotion of mind and soul which Christ requires of his followers. The Mass had continued perhaps halfway when the two marimba dances broke out, all but drowning out the service. A candlelit procession followed the chapel ritual. Some of the "faithful," their superficial duty done, deserted the procession and joined the ranks of the celebrants. The noisy night soon enveloped the small procession of worshipers.

We looked in on one of the gay spots before retiring for the night. The hour was early yet, but festivities were in full swing and increasing in tempo. We felt the prevailing spirit of sensuality and realized that God's moral laws would probably be broken many times that night. We thought of the ancient ruins shrouded in jungle darkness a few miles away, and of the abominations which contributed to its inhabitants' downfall. Satan still walked in the land, ensnaring the hearts of many, leading them to seek happiness in sin. Dissonant, brassy marimbas, heavily pounded drums, tinny trumpets and clarinets, methodically pounding feet, rakish shouts and laughter, people enlivened by cheap liquor and goaded by pleasure and desire—such was Palenque on Christmas Eve. It was a hollow mockery of a celebration meant to honor Christ. The uproar continued into the night. Our sleep was fitful, broken by outbursts of revelry. As if darkness best suited them and they feared the revealing light of day, the celebrants ceased only as dawn's first rays streaked the sky.

WHEN WE AROSE early on Christmas morning, the air seemed very peaceful. Empty bottles and an occasional sprawled reveler whose befuddled mind couldn't direct his feet homeward were the only reminders of the night's uproar. We rejoiced in the quietness and prepared our own observance of Christmas—the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Somewhere in this land of America, many centuries before, the resurrected Christ had placed bread and wine—the emblems of his atonement—before his Nephite disciples. Before departing for our train journey on this Christmas Day, we wished to worship our Lord together in this memorial sacrament. We lacked the customary emblems, but remembered Doctrine and Covenants 26: 1: "It mattereth not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, when ye partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to my glory." Our bread was a small hard loaf, product of Palenque's native bakers. Purified water in a common canteen cup served as our wine. Lacking the precise printed words of the prayers of blessing, we wrote them from memory. A priest, a teacher, and two elders of the restored church of Jesus Christ shared together in this beautiful sacrament. In a land whose ancient inhabitants had forgotten and whose present inhabitants did not know how to remember the Lord, we cherished the privilege of partaking of these blessed emblems in memory of Christ. We then shared in a brief service of prayer and testimony. The Holy Spirit blessed us, verifying the scriptural promise: "where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

Shortly we boarded the waiting truck and bounced off to the railroad station. The priest of the previous night's Mass was also awaiting the train. He recognized us, and we greeted him in Spanish. We told him we were believers in Christ, trying also to serve the Lord. We asked why so many chose the marimba celebrations, neglecting the worship of the Mass. He replied sorrowfully, "No son de La Fe"—"They are not of The Faith." In this priest, representing the declining power of a form of godliness, and in the drunken revelry which eclipsed his efforts on the previous night, we saw the preparation of the field for the planting of the seed of the fullness of Christ's gospel. We felt the need for laborers to declare repentance to these people, exhorting them to worship Christ not just halfway on set occasions but always in full purpose of heart.

THE RUINED BUILDINGS and archaeological remains are interesting, but they are not really our main concern. Our interest in the ancients, and the moldering stone cities they left behind, is only passing and insignificant. Their souls rest in the hands of God, and their ruined buildings in the care of earth and time. We can do little to improve the lot of either. But the present-day descendants of these people—souls now in the bondage of darkness and sin—are our great concern. The people of Palenque, and many of their kind throughout the Americas, are of Lamanite and Nephite descent. Their forefathers' wickedness, God's earthly judgment, and their own actions have brought them to their present condition of bondage in ignorance, poverty, disease, sin, and spiritual darkness. Though they have dwindled in unbelief for these many generations, they are still part of God's covenant people, and divine love and mercy are still extended to them. The Lord promised to the disobedient Adam: "As thou hast fallen, thou mayest be redeemed, even all mankind, even as many as will." The Lord has made definite promises to the fallen descendants of the house of Israel in America. If they will repent and obey when the fullness of the gospel is preached among them, they will "blossom as the rose," and "become again a white and delightful people." Scriptural blessings upon these people, now dark-skinned and in spiritual darkness, include the promise that they will have a major share in building the New Jerusalem. The Lord is greatly concerned about these people and their spiritual needs today. We should also be concerned, and show our concern in action. The keys to their eternal welfare have been entrusted to the Gentiles, members of the restored church of Jesus Christ. These keys are the fullness of the gospel and the Book of Mormon, designed by divine power to call these remnant peoples of the Lamanites and Nephites to the Lord of their salvation. We are called to be valiant soldiers in a great battle for the souls of these Lamanite remnants against Satan, the enemy of all righteousness.

The spiritual blessings of eternity are promised to all who receive the gospel of Christ and obey faithfully to the end. The open door of eternal salvation is set before the Jews, the Lamanite remnant, the Gentiles, and all the world. We have been given a knowledge of that door. We have been commanded to make known to all men the way of life and how to walk therein. We have been entrusted with a most serious responsibility, and we cannot attain the celestial kingdom unless we are valiant in the testimony of Christ. By our selfish refusal to consecrate ourselves fully and declare this gospel of the kingdom to all men everywhere, we mock God, bring ourselves under condemnation, and withhold the light of Christ from many who would follow him if they only knew. Among those many are the people of Palenque and their Lamanite kindred in other countries. As we left Palenque on that Christmas morning, we earnestly desired that the day would soon come when these people would be gathered to Christ, their Redeemer, and become perfected in him.

A Matter of Good Will

By Heber F. Colvin

And there were in the same country, shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And lo, an angel of the Lord appeared unto them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. But the angel said unto them, Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord. And this is the way you shall find the babe, he is wrapped in swaddling clothes, and is lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel, a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will to men.—Luke 2: 8-14.

HOW SHOULD MEN regard the Christmas story—as a beautiful myth conveniently traded upon as one of the most effective merchandising aids of modern times; a divinely sponsored play, staged for no other purpose than that of a birth announcement; or as the dawning of a bright star of hope for the human race?

The angel announced good tidings of great joy which should be to all people. Each person was to be comforted by hope and find joy in the thing that this Child would do. It was to mean peace and good will to men.

In his adult years at the close of his earthly life, Jesus made this statement to Pontius Pilate, the Roman who sentenced him to death: "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." In his earlier ministry he had said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." His mission, then, was not concerned with gaining world dominion but was to reveal important truths.

A blanket folded and stored away warms no one. Before it can bestow any comfort, it must be put to use. Truth can be as comfortless as an unused blanket unless it is applied to practical uses.

THERE IS AN ENDLESS ARRAY of truths. We have discovered many facts concerning biology, metallurgy, engineering, medical science, and psychology, to name only a few of our areas of knowledge. Jesus did not comment on these subjects, yet he had the most profound understanding of all the sciences, for by him the worlds were made and "without him was not anything made which was made." These fields he left to us that we might find happiness in creating, pleasure in exploring, satisfaction in aiding one another, and understanding in thinking God's thoughts after him. By this method, some have found God who could not see him in any other way. What we have not been able to do for ourselves, Jesus came to do; he set an example and tried to teach us how to prepare for eternal life in the fullest degree possible.

We feel that our delving into science has released those who utilize our findings from much drudgery and many discomforts. Disease and pain are slowly being vanquished. Frontiers of time and space are gradually being pushed back. We are beginning to realize dreams that once seemed impossible of fulfillment. With all of this, the master secret of life and perfect contentment escapes us, and human behavior trails far behind our other gains. Complete destruction threatens unless we are able to mend this mortal flaw.

JESUS TAUGHT that we must become new creatures before we can ever enjoy a life superior to the one we now have. "You must be born again," he told one who inquired after the facts of eternal life. An ancient prophet, Isaiah, speaking by the will of God, stated:

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate; therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.

This is part of the indictment against mankind.

The great black plague is a centuries-old account of death during the Dark Ages that almost decimated the human race; the Spanish influenza epidemic of recent years is more readily recalled. Surely these indicate a "burning" of earth's inhabitants. The curse is indicated in other manners also. Our prisons are overflowing, in a supposedly enlightened age. Mental institutions cannot adequately care for their patients. The incidence of such cases is so alarming the problem may develop into a national one. Of greater concern in the minds of some is the more spectacular type of violence perpetuated in the memory of ruined Berlin, Coventry, Nagasaki, and Hiroshima. Americans remember Pearl Harbor with sorrow. The madness continues to grow. Korea is the latest in the long list of crimes against humanity. Communism, Iran, Iraq, Egypt, Kenya Colony, and the Jewish-Arab problem threaten to engulf the entire globe in flames.

WHY MUST THE HISTORY of our world be written in blood and tears? Do not intolerance, hatred, lust, greed, and inordinate ambition breed the distrust that blazes into anger, causing people and nations to commit evil against each other?

If we are to be free from these ills, we must gain our freedom by changing our thinking and practices. To do this, we must place our faith in a higher power than our own. Each of us, as a law unto himself, goes his own selfish way serving his own ends. In this way we destroy one another, and society perishes as a result. Jesus taught, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." The second commandment is like the first. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The rebirth and the everlasting covenant spoken of by the Christ and Isaiah are the same. The baptism by immersion, fire, and the Holy Ghost—which both John the Baptist and Jesus taught—is the everlasting covenant. The person so baptized, in effect, covenants that he will submit himself to a program of education which Christ has to teach. He is truly born again, for the Spirit of God dwells within him; as long as he keeps himself worthy, he continues to impart to his learning greater powers of understanding than he himself possesses. His thinking and his conduct are given a moral hue. Yet self-discipline is necessary, for God makes a right way of life possible, but he forces no one. Our development must be made by our own efforts, not by God. He will lend us aid, but we must do our share of the work.

THE STUDENT LEARNS in time that kindness is a universal language understood by all intelligent persons. He finds that love tends to beget love and desires that nothing but what is kind and just shall be done to all men as well as to himself. This type of living creates an atmosphere which banishes fear and brings to thinking a new perspective. People who trust in God find solutions to their problems in proportion to their faith and the earnestness of their personal application in working out their problems.

To the world we would say: Jesus Christ + you = salvation. Christ could never "do it all" without assuming control of the human will. In that event, the personality would be his, not ours, and we would be slaves subject to his control. Jesus will never permit that to happen. The love of God is not selfish nor coercive. God is love, but he is also wise and just. When we have a proper regard for God and others, we find a proper respect for ourselves and thus are made whole. Christ made salvation possible. The rest is up to us.

When we follow the laws God has given and obey the direction of his Spirit, the answer to all problems will be correct solutions. Happiness is the inevitable result. John, the apostle of love, said:

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.—1 John 1: 5-10.

TO PEOPLE OF GOOD WILL, these are good tidings of great joy. A more abundant life here and unending life in the eternal world are possible only when we are willing to practice right principles of living. Referring to his approaching departure from this world to go to his Father's house, Jesus said, "And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." Thomas said to him, "Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?" Jesus replied: "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also."

Basically the plan for peace, prosperity, and happiness is in existence. To learn the plan we must know Christ, but we cannot know him unless we know his program. Only when there are enough men of good will available to carry out this program can these blessings be obtained permanently. As a race we should be able to see the truth of the proverb: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."

To men of God comes the clear vision to see that God has not failed in his purposes. Men have failed to respond to his call for them to repent and be born again. Only men of good will can enjoy the peace and happiness that comes from the possession of a clean heart and hands. This is essentially a matter of good will.

For the believing, practicing segment of Christian society, the star of hope never ceases to shine. Because of these people, the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. These, by their faith and their works, pray with the Psalmist, "Lead me in the way everlasting."

The Baby Jesus vs. Santa Claus

By Ruby Troyer

IF SUCH a case should ever come to court in an endeavor to prove which of the two received the most prominence in thoughts, actions, and expenditure of time and money at this season of the year, no doubt the "defendant" in the case would win. As we mingle with the crowds and hear the din of Christmas carols, excited voices, and cash registers—we wonder just whose fault it is.

In my opinion the true meaning and feeling of Christmas should and must come through the church and home. Indeed, Santa Claus is a delightful fellow. The expression on our son's face, caught by a photographer in a large Chicago store as he sat on Santa's lap, is a joy to behold. Wonderment, rapture, and complete childlike faith in Santa's power are written there. But do we bring Santa into our Christmas church program too much?

It was my privilege to attend a Christmas program at a school in which my son was a student at the time. The children were dressed in native costumes of many countries. Their part was to enter quietly and pay silent homage to the Christ child and the holy family. The only speaker was, appropriately, a "boy angel" dressed in white robes, who spoke clearly and distinctly, telling the story of the scenes. The older children sang the carols clearly and sweetly from the balcony. All was quietness and reverence during the program, and not one mention was made of Santa Claus. As the parents left that auditorium their quietness denoted the fact that they, too, had felt the real Christmas spirit.

A FEW DAYS LATER I attended the program in our own church. The Christmas tree held a prominent place, a great deal of the program centered on Santa Claus, and at the end Santa entered and confusion reigned! Children were running and handing out presents; they unwrapped the presents and scattered the paper and tinsel all over the church; they played noisily in the aisles with their new toys; there was loud talk and laughter as presents were shown, and some sat quietly in disappointment as they hadn't received more than one or two gifts compared to the several received by others. My husband and I left the church that evening feeling that it had been desecrated.

Am I wrong in wishing to see the Christmas tree banished from the church auditorium, to see Santa Claus banished from the church program? The children would not be deprived of any need or pleasure, as we would continue to have the celebration in our homes, in the schoolrooms, and in the downtown stores. If Christ held the prominent place in our Christmas church programs, they may even get a better understanding of the mission of the Baby Jesus.

As I have witnessed, year after year, the same type of program in our church buildings—sometimes as a spectator, sometimes helping to produce those programs—I have had a growing feeling that Christ is not pleased with our interpretation of his birth by honoring Santa Claus more in His church than we do Him. Am I wrong?

The Legal Department, under the direction of C. L. Olson, handles all General Church legal matters, including houses of worship and General Church property. In addition, he cares for the income tax returns of appointees.

The work of the general office is supervised by W. E. Timms, who is also manager of the building. The work is channeled through the following departments:

The Accounting Department handles all cash, checks, and ledgers, and deals with the bishop's agents' reports.

The Tithepayer's Service is the department which keeps a confidential record of contributors, contributions, and files on annual tithing statements and inventories.

The I.B.M. Department is a mechanized system of posting the statements of General Church contributions which are mailed annually to all contributors. It also acts as a service department to the Tithepayer's Service and Statistical Departments.

The Insurance Department handles the insurance on all General Church properties and records the coverage on local churches. Its services are available in an advisory capacity to any congregation on these matters. All church-owned automobiles are also insured through this department.

A Storeroom Department serves the offices in the distribution of stationery and provides a mimeograph service, distributing duplex envelopes and other materials on a church-wide basis. A Maintenance Supplies System is also incorporated within this department. All incoming and outgoing materials used in construction work as well as all the office supplies are received and inventoried here.

The Maintenance Department, with W. O. Ihde as superintendent, keeps the Auditorium and other church property in order and repair.

A combined Telephone Exchange and Information Bureau opens off the foyer, and the operator, together with the guides in the adjoining guide offices, assist the many tourists and visitors who stop at this interesting building.

The Presiding Bishopric's office is on the third level of the northwest side of the building.

The Best Gifts

By Margaret Gibson

IT IS STRANGE about Christmas. We have had many to remember, of course. When we were little we were up before daylight tearing into the parlor for our stockings. In the dim, frosty light the tree was mysterious and glowing.

Mother would bring our bathrobes, and we'd put them on over our pajamas, then start in on our presents. There would be shrieks of delight—and tissue paper all over the place. The kitten would dive for the papers and ribbons, and we would laugh at him.

The Christmas that meant the most to our family, I think, was during the depression. Father had been out of work for weeks. He had walked the streets of New York looking for something to do until his suit was thin and his shoe soles were almost worn through. My brother was earning six dollars a week as an office boy, and he spent most of it to keep the rest of us fed. Grandmother was with us at Christmas as usual. We loved to have her. She was fun, and we were all the family she had.

We were going to have hamburger for Christmas—it was twelve cents a pound that year—but the day before Christmas Grandmother called my brother, Gilbert, to her. They whispered awhile and then the two of them went out. Together they went into a little store under the Third Avenue elevated tracks, and there Grandmother bought a turkey. I think it was the smallest, thinnest turkey I have ever seen. As I recall it, it was not much bigger than a crow. But there was something special about this turkey—it was a gift of love. We praised it. We appreciated it. We made a point of going to the oven and sniffing at it with anticipation—when Grandmother was where she could see and hear us.

Our only platter was broken, so the turkey was served in our wooden chopping bowl. But how we enjoyed it!

OUR GIFTS were few and simple, but dearer to us than any we ever received. The handkerchief I gave my brother was exactly the kind he liked, he told me earnestly, and just what he needed. Mother was delighted with the calendar I gave her. It was the one thing she wanted for her kitchen more than anything else. The hair ribbon my brother gave me was just right for Sunday, and red was my favorite color!

We all helped with the dishes, and then we went into the living room. The piano was out of tune, but we never noticed that, as Father played the beloved Christmas carols. We sang and hummed as the music flowed into the room.

It grew dark as we sat there, and Mother lighted the Christmas candles, left over from the year before, and set them on the mantel. The light flickered over the room, on Grandmother's gray head, on Father's hands as they glided over the keys, and it glowed in Mother's beautiful dark eyes.

As Father's music faded away, we began to talk. The same spirit seemed to possess us all, for each of us in turn spoke of some occasion in the past when we had been especially close together as a family. Moments were recalled when our parents had helped us more than they had realized, or when we children had made them happy; or when Grandmother had been particularly thoughtful of us all. There was nothing studied about our talking; we pointed no morals; we were not sentimental—but all of our hearts were aglow as we listened.

It began to get cold in the room. The landlord was cutting down the heat. It must have been cold for nearly a half hour before we noticed it. Then Grandmother yawned politely and said it had been such a lovely, full day that she was tired and if we'd excuse her, she'd go to bed. We all said "good night," and she trotted down the hall, drawing her little shawl closely about her.

The rest of us stayed up a little longer. The chimes were playing in a near-by church, the candles were still burning on our mantel, and there was "peace on earth and good will to men."

The First American Christmas Tree

A YOUNG GERMAN IMMIGRANT, August Imgard, introduced the Christmas tree to America. Born in Bavaria, he came to America and joined other members of his family who made their home in Wooster, Ohio. Christmas drew near and to young Imgard it proved a season of dismal anticipation. He missed the expectation of the fund of entertainment and observance which marked the day in his homeland. So he decided to have a Christmas tree, just as he had done before he sailed to America. Young Imgard went into the woods outside of Wooster and chopped down a spruce tree. From the village tinsmith, he obtained a star fashioned of tin. Paper decorations were made, and America's first Christmas tree blossomed out in all its glory in the Imgard home on December 24, 1847.

The novelty appealed to the good people of Wooster. Children and grownups alike flocked to look upon it. It was not long before the whole village was gathered about the home.

Another year came. This time, however, the little village was bright with Christmas trees in every home. The tinsmith found himself occupied in contriving stars and other symbols to add to the decorations. Paper was fashioned into festoons. Popcorn was strung, as were cranberries, to bedeck the green branches. In those pioneer days it was difficult to secure the many knickknacks and novelties which have since come into being. But pioneer children were quite satisfied with the home-made decorations.

Out of Wooster the custom spread. Before long, all Ohio had adopted the Christmas tree; and, from this spot, it spread throughout the States.

The tomb of August Imgard stands on Madison Hill in Wooster. A lighted Christmas tree stands at its door—a tribute to the man who first brought to America the symbol of peace and love and hope that is Christmas.

Help Your Child to Enjoy Christmas

By Nettie Chappelow Lake

I'M SCISSORING AIR HOLES around this star so it can twink better!" The four-year-old with the blunt scissors wasn't wondering what in the world to give Aunt Kate. She hadn't elbowed other tired shoppers trying to find the one perfect doll in a take-off-able dress. She hadn't decided at the last minute to make orange marmalade for a dozen people by a pet family recipe. She wasn't in a dither about clearing up a messy closet in the guest room, or making gingerbread men for the tree, or doing something about the stair carpet before the company came.

I couldn't "twink" very well myself. I'd left no air holes in my day. Her sweet, calm absorption suddenly made me realize that I was not getting ready to give my family the best holiday gift of all—a relaxed, happy time together.

At Christmas we adults think about bright-colored balls and pretty lights, gay candles in the window, and packages holding surprises. Mailbox and kitchen are stuffed full of good things. As parents we start out simply by wanting to make our children very, very happy. Then we build up excitement and tensions. Sometimes we just can't resist driving a bargain: "You certainly aren't going to get that wonderful so-an-so if you can't behave better than this!" Hints of the exciting surprises, or promises that a long-looked-for toy is actually already hidden in the house, may make the waiting almost too much for some youngsters to bear.

Then comes the great day itself. I remember how we looked forward to the first Christmas that we would really understand toys. All the lovely things were for the first child. My parents couldn't wait to unload the tree into her arms. But as they watched her she became more and more bewildered. The bright blur of toys around her wasn't making her the happiest girl in the world after all. Finally the too-muchness broke into words: "I don't like this new doll, I want my old doll."

THROUGH THE YEARS that children have been growing up in our home, we've changed our Christmas celebration a lot. It started that Christmas with the first child's confusion over so many things. Once on a holiday visit I had seen a child do a charming thing. The family tree had been on Christmas Eve after an early supper. The next evening after supper Terry had Christmas treats over again. "Now I have nice presents for you good people," he announced, standing on tiptoe beside the tree. Toys and books were still stacked there. Solemnly he distributed them, giving his toys to the grownups with accompanying speeches. Each evening when supper was over, he repeated the ceremony.

We tried out Terry's plan. Now we stretch our family Christmas over several days. On Christmas Day we all choose from the tree certain gifts we want to open—say three gifts each. If there are guests, we always open their gifts while they are present. We see that each youngster has a book and perhaps some gift for outdoor play like skates or sled. There can be outdoor play and quiet reading to relieve the tension of indoor excitement. The youngsters have time to enjoy the few things they do get. They are glad to help make Christmas last as long as possible. Sometimes by paring the daily allowance of presents down after Christmas to a package a day, we can still have a package to open on January 1.

MAYBE ANOTHER THING about us will surprise you. We actually get the tree lights plugged in around mid-December. Not on the tree, of course. They may be arranged in the doll house, or they may light up several little houses on the children's desks. We get out the tree ornaments early, too, and arrange them in a big bowl on the coffee table. If a child picks one up and it breaks, he'll be very careful next time.

We think enjoying the round, shining prettiness is worth a little breakage. We agree with James L. Hymes, the noted child authority, who says in his booklet Enjoy Your Child:

Your one-year-old or your two-year-old or three-year-old is going to break some of your nice things. . . . Decide for yourself what breakage you can take with a smile and what would simply break your heart. In making your decision remember that children cost money. It costs money to give birth to them, it costs money to clothe and feed them, it costs money to send them to college. It costs money for them to be explorers and investigators too. Don't try to get too much of a bargain during these few years. You will get what you paid for. And you have to be willing to spend some money if you want to build a sense of independence, curiosity, and a vigorous investigating spirit.

By the time our tree is trimmed, the youngsters are familiar with these wondrous lights and ornaments and they aren't so tempted to finger them.

We've found that letting the children help trim the tree also helps them to leave it trimmed, once the job is finished. True, we did have one Christmas when they had different ideas of how the tree should be dressed; I had to give each of them a side to trim. In this way Christmas becomes the merriest occasion for all the family. It pays dividends in happiness. Let Christmas be a day to be remembered, and also let the Christ child enter into the family fold.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them"

We often hear the quotation, "A little child shall lead them."

Hester's mother had taught her to sing "Away in a manger." She was only two years old, so of course she did not have an extensive vocabulary. But she liked to sing in her own childish way and could carry a tune well for her age.

Hester greatly enjoyed Christmas with its beautiful tree and all the gifts. The morning after Christmas, she teased to go to the barn with her daddy. The weather was quite cold, but her mother dressed her warmly. When she was ready to go, Hester ran to her nursery and took her own little pillow from her bed and tucked it under her arm. As she started to walk out the door her mother said, "No, Hester, you cannot take your little pillow to the barn. That's no place for a pillow."

Hester burst into tears and cried so hard her mother took her in her arms to comfort her. Then she asked, "Why do you want to take your pillow to the barn?"

Hester lisped through tears and sobs, "Poo little Lord Jesus in a manger all cold, no pillow for his little head."

Her heart was full of love and sympathy. She wanted to give her own pillow for the little baby Jesus. Her mother told her that the baby had grown up and was not in the manger now.

What a challenge comes to each of us as we plan our Christmas gifts. We so love to give to our friends and family. Many often give beyond their means, and little if any, is left to give to the building up of the kingdom that Christ gave to the world. Let us pause and think this year at Christmas of the whole world groaning with war and trouble. It needs the gospel that Jesus Christ taught and gave his life for.

When we celebrate his birth, ought we not to give to the cause that he brought to the world by dying on the cross? Let us prove more worthy this Christmas.

So Little to Give

By Louise Scott Wrigley

MAMA LOOKED around her big kitchen for the tenth time that evening. "Ah, what a wonderful place to be," she breathed, deftly pulling a sheet of Christmas cookies out of the modern oven. What a change from the black years of famine and war and terror she could remember. Impulsively she whirled into the other room where Hulda sat looking in six-year-old wonder at the small Christmas tree they had just finished decorating. She swept Hulda right off her feet.

"I love you, I love you," Mama whispered. Hulda looked only mildly surprised since Mama was given to these sudden bursts of love ever since they all came to America. Somehow, America had done something very special for Mama.

Perhaps it was that Mama had found a job right away in a bakery which paid more than Mama had dreamed possible. Perhaps it had been this little house that Mr. Jenkins, the baker, and his wife had helped them find. Or maybe it had been the paper route brother Hans had been able to get so that there were extra nickels jingling in the sugar bowl for an American ice-cream cone for Hulda and Anna, who was eight, and even Tjark who, at ten, was almost too big for such foolishness. Anyway, Hulda shrugged, something had come over Mama. She sang as she baked Christmas surprises right now in the kitchen. She sang as she dusted. She sang as she walked back and forth to work at the bakery. Oh, how Hulda loved to visit Mama at the bakery, and especially now at Christmas when she was making so many old-country goodies to tempt the Christmas appetites of these Americans who came into the little shop just to buy her wares.

"You have brought me prosperity, Mama Schroeder," the fat baker would boom.

"Ah, Mr. Jenkins," Mama would say, "it could not compare with what you have brought all of us. We are together, well and happy and ——" And then the tears would come to Mama's eyes. In the excitement of school and new friends and a strange country, it was hard for Hulda to recall all the things that Mama remembered that made her cry.

AND NOW here was their first Christmas among their new friends. Christmas here was quite unlike the old-world Christmas. For one thing, Kris Kringle waited on every corner with his little pot and was in the department stores as well. This confused Hulda and Anna and Tjark who were used to having Kris Kringle stomp through their door in a flurry of snow, once and only once each year.

Now Mama was back in the living room.

"Ah, Hans," she was saying, "what shall I give for Christmas to all these lovely people who have done so much for me? How can we give gifts when we have so little money? It is Christmas Eve and I am empty-handed," and she rocked back and forth, her head in her hands.

"Mama," soothed Hans, patting her head awkwardly. "Mama, Christmas is for gladness, not tears. They surely wouldn't want you to cry over them," he joked lamely.

"Of course not," Mama brightened. "How foolish I am. Tears will not help. Tears never help anything," she added softly, getting that faraway look in her eyes that Hans didn't like her to have. It meant that Mama, in her mind, was cold and hungry once again. It meant Mama was missing Papa and was perhaps even remembering how she had sat on the floor with his head in her lap, moaning, "Papa, speak to me. Don't leave me now, Papa," on that dreadful gray morning when a firebomb gutted their house in Würzburg.

"Mama, Mama," cried Anna eagerly, wanting to bring Mama back to the happy present. Mama's face softened in the light of the Christmas tree. Yes, she was back from her terrible memories. Hulda squeezed against her mother. "Mama," she echoed, "let's sing 'Oh Tannenbaum.' It is such a lovely tune."

"Ja," smiled Mama. "Come, children, let us sing the old carols together. That is much the best way to spend this evening. We will think of the Christ child as we sing."

The clear strains filled the little house with love. Hans's voice was deep against Mama's lead as she held the younger voices true and sweet.

WELL, THAT WAS PRETTY," exclaimed Mama, pleased at the harmony her small singers had produced. Then she jumped up from her chair. "Why, little ones, I have just thought of a Christmas gift for our friends!"

"What, Mama, what?" Anna jumped up and down with excitement. She loved surprises almost better than any of the other little Schroeders.

"You shall see," said Mama, nodding mysteriously. From under her collar she pulled the thin, gold chain she always wore. At the end hung a small key.

"Oh, the trunk," breathed Hulda. "We are going to open the trunk!"

The children all gathered around. Even Hans stood close beside Tjark. He loved to look into the trunk—the one thing which held some of the happiness he could remember in Germany.

A friend had given them this sturdy trunk for their few belongings after the house was destroyed. Mama had insisted on bringing it to America and had put away their old life in it, so to speak.

The lid fell back. The children shrieked with delight. Here, carefully folded, were the bright costumes of their native Germany. Here were the woolen skirts, the heavy jackets they had worn when they arrived.

"My," mused Mama, "you have all grown. Let's see what will fit." By much trading and trying the children were soon outfitted.

"How do we look?" chortled Anna, dancing around for Mama to see.

"Hold still," Mama laughed, "until I can see whether you are all together. Yes, you are, and now we are going calling on our good neighbors to bring them a gift of song. It is so little to give, but we have little save love. We shall go first to Baker Jenkins' house."

OUTSIDE the little brown house where the Jenkinses lived, the world was sheathed in a night-before-Christmas snow. The peace which lay upon the world did not come inside, for the Jenkinses were quarreling. It was over a silly thing—whether Mr. Jenkins should read the evening paper and doze by the fire as he usually did or whether he should help Mrs. Jenkins finish decorating the Christmas tree she had been working on all afternoon. Mr. Jenkins was frowning. Mrs. Jenkins was frowning. Hot words were swimming in both heads when on the night broke the sound of caroling. Mr. Jenkins rubbed a clear spot in the steamy windowpane. Mrs. Jenkins stood close beside Mr. Jenkins.

"Why, they're dressed in old-country costumes," exclaimed Mrs. Jenkins. "How appropriate for Christmas carols and Christmas Eve." Somehow, the hot words had been forgotten. The carolers waved and turned up the street. Mr. Jenkins put his arm around Mrs. Jenkins, drawing her over to the fire. The evening paper lay forgotten where he had dropped it.

UP THE STREET lived the Carters. Mr. Carter was a lawyer who had helped Mama get settled in her adopted country. Mrs. Carter had done many nice things for the Schroeders. She had brought clothing. She had sent customers to Mr. Jenkins' shop for Mama's goodies. She had been a kind friend. But Christmas shopping had been hard on Mrs. Carter. Right this minute she was trying to think if she had missed anyone or had overlooked anything for Jimmie. She did love her son, and she wanted everything to be just right.

"Oh, Jimmie," she snapped, "can't you leave those silly cranberry chains off the tree? You know I have all new decorations this year, and cranberry chains simply don't go with blue and gold ornaments."

Jimmie Carter flushed and pulled his cranberry chain off the limb where he had laid it. He had had fun stringing it. Maybe that was fun enough, without actually using it on the tree. Dad had slipped him the cranberries and had even sat on the edge of his bed telling about the fun he and his brothers used to have on the farm at Christmas when Grandmother and Grandfather let them decorate the whole tree with cranberries and popcorn.

Jimmie turned to leave the room. Christmas was kind of a lonesome time. You couldn't wrap packages because you didn't get the corners right. Mother was always so cross around Christmas. She was just tired, Jimmie guessed, with all the charity work she did, the parties she gave, the people she remembered. For a moment he wished savagely that he could have his own mother instead of sharing her all the time.

"Mildred. Jimmie. Come to the window." That was Dad calling from the study. When they joined him, he had the French windows open.

"The snow is blowing in, Frank," chided Mrs. Carter.

"Sshhh," replied Mr. Carter. Through the windows whispered the gentle strains of "Silent Night."

"They are singing it in German," said Mrs. Carter, leaning out to peer at the carolers. "It's a woman and four children. Do bring them in for hot chocolate, Frank," she smiled, as the carol faded into the night. But the carolers had slipped away. Mrs. Carter leaned out to take a deep breath as she closed the French windows. When she turned around, her face was serene.

"Jimmie," she said slowly, "I think I had forgotten what Christmas really means. Run and get your cranberry chain and the needle. I have some more cranberries in the kitchen, and we'll all string some. The only way for a family to do things right is all together!"

ON THE HILL far above the bakery shop and the Christmas trees lining every window along the street stood a large house, alone. In the window shone a solitary light. Nowhere could be seen the bright Christmas lights that winked from other windows. The house was sad and silent.

Inside the darkened living room sat Lynn and Henry Jameson. Lynn had taught school and helped Mama's children with their faltering English. Many times her sweet voice had patiently repeated the elusive sounds over and over. With love in her eyes she had helped them. Lynn had loved everyone then because she was filled with love, waiting for the baby soon to be born. But now, the baby was dead. What a cold, hard word! What a time to have it happen—just six weeks before Christmas.

The closet still held the packages she and Henry had shopped for—a brown teddy bear, a roly-poly clown, a jack-in-the-box. Lynn buried her head in her hands as she remembered over and over again.

"Let's have a Christmas tree at least," Henry had urged.

"Oh, I just couldn't!" she had cried.

Into the cold house seeped the warm strains of a lullaby of love.

*Away in a manger, no crib for his bed,
The little Lord Jesus lay down his sweet head.
The stars in the sky looked down where he lay,
The little Lord Jesus, asleep on the hay.*

Lynn and Henry sprang to their feet and rushed to the window. This was too much to bear. But the opened window revealed a sweet-faced mother and her four children. This heart could mean no harm nor hurt. Why, it was Mrs. Schroeder, who had known so much of heartbreak herself.

The tears which Lynn had held for so many icy weeks spilled from her in a rush. They washed her clean, and purged her of a stony grief.

"Henry," she lifted her head from her husband's shoulder. "It isn't too late to find a baby we can share with on this Christmas Eve. I'll bet the orphanage is still having its Christmas party. Let's hurry!"

They ran for their coats and gathered up the gifts that had been purchased in love. They would be given in love.

Back home Mama and the children were pulling off snowy woolens and stamping the wet whiteness from their boots.

"Oh, Mama, that was fun," said Anna. "The singing really made it seem like Christmas."

"Yes, it was fun," murmured Mama, and shook her head, "but it was so little to give."

cave stable in the hill and see for ourselves."

JOEL AND NATHAN lay stretched out full length on the grass which covered the hillside above the valley where the little town of Bethlehem was built. Climbing the steep trail under the hot rays of the afternoon sun had been hard work, and both boys were ready to rest by the time they had reached the top.

"And you say the sheep were stirring about all evening?" questioned Nathan as a starter to his friend's story of what had happened the night before.

"Yes," answered Joel. "They kept moving, although they made no baaing sounds. The air was still—very still. Not a leaf on a bush was rustling. And the night was black—a soft, velvety blackness that I could almost feel. The stars above seemed so high and so small, like candles set too far away to give light to earth."

Nathan sat up. He untied the straps of his sandals. Taking them off, he shook out the sharp bits of stone which had edged in on his trip. "And when did you see this light that was brighter than the sun at noonday?" he queried. His voice sounded doubting.

"Oh, it must have been about midnight," replied Joel. "I was half asleep by my father's side when suddenly I heard beautiful music. I remember opening my eyes quickly and then putting my arm over them at first. There was a dazzling light all around us. The sheep were no longer moving about but lying quietly."

"Hm-m-m," mused Nathan, putting his sandals back on and tying the straps. "You might still have been asleep and dreamed it all, you know."

"I couldn't have been!" Joel said strongly. "When I could see for the brightness all around, I saw angels—many, many of them—in the air above us. They were singing: 'Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will to men.'"

"And when the angels had disappeared, my father said to the other shepherds, 'Let's go to Bethlehem and see what has happened. We can leave our sons to care for the sheep.' After Father and the other shepherds had gone, I saw that the night was no longer black. It was lighted by one huge star over Bethlehem."

NATHAN STOOD UP and looked down into the valley. He tapped on the ground with the stick he had used for a cane on his walk. "Now where is this stable, the one your father said held the baby?" he asked.

Joel was up with a bound. Laying one hand lightly on the shoulder of his friend's striped robe, he pointed down into the valley with the other. "There, beyond the rows of olive trees. See that rounded hill behind the inn? In that hill is the cave stable where the baby is—the baby who was born to be our Savior, Father says."

"Well, if I had been watching the sheep with you last night and had seen the strange happenings for myself, perhaps I could believe such a story," Nathan said slowly. He added, "We'd better be starting toward home. The sun is down, and it will be hard to keep on the trail after dark."

Down the rocky path the two boys walked, saying very little as they went, but stepping along quickly. They were almost to the valley when Nathan said, "Surely it ought to be dark by now."

"Look!" cried Joel, grabbing his friend's arm and pointing upward.

In the sky a huge star shone brightly, its radiance outlining the inn and the rounded hill which held the stable.

"See," said Joel, shaking Nathan's arm gently, "the sign of our Savior's birth."

Nathan muttered something under his breath—something Joel couldn't understand. Aloud he said, "Let's go to this

IN THE VALLEY others must have had the same idea as Nathan. Little groups of people were scurrying along through the brightly lighted streets of Bethlehem.

"Never saw starlight as bright as this," muttered Nathan. This time Joel understood him.

It was some time before the two boys could edge their way through the crowd around the stable door. And when they did, they stared in amazement. Upon a manger bed of clean, fresh hay slept a little one tightly wrapped in swaddling bands, as was the Jewish custom. Bending fondly over him was a beautiful young woman, and standing protectively near was a sturdy man whose hands bore the marks of his trade—carpentry.

The crowd stood in awed silence. For a long time Nathan and Joel stared without saying a word. Finally Nathan whispered, "Let's go."

Back through the quiet crowd the two boys pushed their way to the street. Slowly walking along toward home, Nathan turned his head to say, "I believe your story. I'm sorry I ever doubted." There was a note of shame in his voice.

"What makes you believe now?" asked Joel.

"To see Him is to know and believe. Even brighter than the star is the light shining from the baby's face," replied Nathan. "And his name is ———?"

"Jesus." The word came from Joel's lips softly and reverently.

Christmas Gifts

By G. Everett Berndt

Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also. When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him; and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.—Matthew 2: 7-11.

THE CHRISTMAS SEASON is upon us, and very soon Christmas as a holiday will be here. This means different things to different people. To most, it means they must hurry to get those last few gifts that were forgotten or that were hard to decide on. To many children the suspense of wondering what they will get becomes almost too much to stand, and they redouble their efforts to peek in the closet or to trick Mommy into telling. Merchants are wondering if they will sell all that they ordered or if they will end up with a stack of surplus merchandise that will have to be placed on sale or carried over until next year. Fathers are concerned with finding just the right tree to fit into the living room without paying for an acre of land that doesn't come with it. Some will be reminded that on Sunday the church also will commemorate the birth of Jesus, and they will have to remember to get up and go to services. A few—far too few—are busily engaged in preparing for a devout observance of worship at home or at church.

It is not my intention to rave about a commercialized Christmas. I have no fight with the idea of gift-giving at this time of the year. In fact, I think our Heavenly Father set the example when he "gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Along with the gift he also exemplified the only real reason for giving, for it was because he so loved the world that he gave his Son. God so loved us that he was not content to see us isolated from him by sin and ignorance. So he gave to us his Son that through his ministry, his life, and his church we might be reconciled to him, redeemed from darkness to eternal life.

THE WISE MEN seem to have furnished us with a precedent for giving gifts at the commemoration of the Savior's birth. We know very little about these men, even though many have attempted to name them and give them attributes not found in Matthew's account.

They may have come out of courtesy to pay homage to a new king and out of custom brought gifts with them. Yet because the account tells us that they fell down and worshiped him, it seems evident that the experience became something more than a social call. They must have realized that he was not just king of the Jews—that his presence had significance for all people. With this conviction their costly gifts must have seemed humble and inadequate.

The gospel of Luke tells us that some shepherds also visited the child Jesus. Although later writers suggest that these visitors would certainly have brought gifts also, Luke does not record it. While it matters very little whether they did or not, it seems logical that these shepherds who left their fields in the night, upon seeing and hearing the heavenly host and going with haste to see the child, would not have much with them that they could give as a gift to a baby. Yet they had something to give that was infinitely more precious to Christ and to God than the most costly of presents. They apparently gave themselves—at least for a while—for the account says that the "shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them." That kind of gift can be given only out of love and devotion.

I SUPPOSE all parents have to face the innocently selfish attitude of their children around Christmas or their birthdays. Most small children are primarily interested in what they are going to get and even at times rebel at the thought of giving to their friends or family gifts bought for that specific purpose. As children get older, they learn what love is and how they can express it to others by giving, but the desire to get is still there. They have merely found out that it isn't proper to express their own desires too often. We adults are not too far removed from this attitude. It may be true that the receiving of gifts has lost much of its allure for many of us. We say we get our satisfaction out of giving to our children and spend lavishly on them with the feeling of being great givers. Yet this, too, is selfish. While our giving rises out of our love for our children and a desire to make them happy, we are selfish if it remains within the family circle.

Christmas ought to be at least the one time in the year when we look outside of our family and even outside of our circle of friends for objects of our giving. Jesus cannot possibly fulfill his purpose of reconciling us to God if we are not reconciled to one another. We can't love God without loving our fellow men. This love for our neighbors is not always best expressed by a Christmas basket or some gift purchased in a store. It is often best shown by an act of kindness or a friendly visit. So far as we know, the shepherds just came to see the Messiah and perhaps talk to his parents. Still I think this was appreciated as much as were the gifts of the Wise Men.

WITH ALL of this giving of gifts we are apt to forget whose birthday it really is that we are celebrating. The first one on our Christmas list each year ought to be Christ himself. We may have already planned to remember him in some way this year, but if we haven't, it is not too late. Of course, it is not possible to hand him a gift or some money to buy himself something, but to most of us Jesus is represented by some church or religious body, and I feel sure that a worth-while gift given to his church will be recognized by God as a gift to his Son.

The best gift that we can offer, however, is the gift of our lives. First, in order for it to be a worthy gift, it must be a righteous life. This does not imply that we must be perfect, but rather that we recognize our sins and are striving, with God's help, to overcome them. Second, in order for it to be a gift at all, it must be a life of service. Here again, there are many ways that we can give service to God by serving his people. Numerous organizations and agencies are striving to bring benefits of various kinds to our community, state, and country. The church needs our help to enable it to accomplish the manifold tasks before it. To seek out one of these movements and volunteer our help would be a gift similar to that brought by the shepherds.

We have been the recipients of bountiful gifts from God, many of which we have taken for granted. The greatest of all—the gift of eternal life made possible through his Son—can be ours only if we are willing to give our lives first.

"The Messiah"

By Kleta H. Finley

CHRISTMAS IN AMERICA is not like Christmas in any other land—for it is like Christmas in many lands.

As children of other countries became children of America they brought with them to their new homes and churches rich treasures of custom and tradition; and into the pattern that is now America's Christmas have been woven the colorful threads of Christmas everywhere.

We have carols from England, the Christmas tree from Saxony, the yule log from France, the Christmas crib from Poland, and the bird's Christmas tree from Norway.

These and many other delightful traditions are a part of Christmas in America.

And though we don't know when or how it started, one of the most relevant and inspiring traditions is the presentation of The Messiah by various choral groups during the Christmas season.

We are happy that our church participates in this manner in the celebration of Christ's birth, witnessing our faith in and appreciation for the prophecy and the principles of legitimate prophecy, revelation, repentance, resurrection, and atonement today as basic to life, without which there could be little faith, hope, or love.

Of all the thousands of words in the Bible Handel seems to have selected the most potent historically and personally. While the text clearly tells the historical facts of (1) the dejection of Israel, (2) her consolation and hope in the prophecies fortelling the coming of a Messiah or Savior, (3) her joy at his entrance into this life, (4) his wonderful example of living, (5) the tragedy of her rejection of him, (6) his triumph over all sin and death itself (spiritual and physical), and (7) the thanksgiving of those who believed and understood that the atonement had been achieved through him, we sense also within our personal lives this same sequence of growth and development.

THE MESSIAH" has a personal as well as a historical message.

We follow the same pattern personally as we cast here and there seeking the satisfaction needed in daily well-being, receiving a bit of hope as we begin to seek his way in faith. This faith is rewarded with joy at the advent of the "Messiah" into our lives. As we go along in life, we are prone to stray like sheep, trying our own way rather than our Master's. Then, realizing our situation, we seek his help for power to overcome selfishness and again return to him. Our thanksgiving is real when we recognize the meaning from the experience of being submissive to his will or "at one" with him.

The Messiah dramatizes not only the experiences of a great people and a great Person—the son of God—with these principles of life but also the experience of each one of us today as we seek to find and walk in his way.

The same fears and confusions are evident in our personal and social living today until we begin to admit more of the Messiah, the Savior, with his qualities of love, concern for others, and willingness to be used as God chooses.

The words are wise and beautiful, the choicest from the Scriptures.

The music shows a wonderful understanding of the significance of the words. Handel senses with the Hebrew people their confusion, pain, joy, triumph, and thanks. He no doubt sensed this same sequence of growth in his attempt to live like the Master. The Messiah is the work of a master of music, appreciating in a very real sense the significance of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of the Master of Men.

The Kind of Christmas We Need This Year

Signs of Promise

Look about you at your world! Yes, there is orneriness, misery, bribery, exploitation, graft, hatred, licentiousness. There is irresponsibility, indifference, self-centeredness. Look beyond all these and you find spiritual hungers, loneliness, unrest with undesirable conditions. Look further and you will see decency, social service, happy homes, clean friendship, and honest industry. Look even further and you will discover prophetic insights, visions of world fellowship, and ministries of love. You will meet lives made worthy through repentance to good deeds, evangelism for the good of others, and search for light and truth.

Only the spiritually alert go beyond the surface. Only they detect the things which, pieced together, give clues to our tomorrow. We ask a watchman of limited vision about what he sees. "Nothing much, nothing I care to see," may be his reply. Ask one who sees beneath our veneers, and he will report our frailties, our weaknesses, our shortcomings. But he will also see the slowly moving spiritual forces at work that the casual looker fails to detect.

Watchmen, tall us of the night,
What its signs of promise are.
Traveler, o'er yon mountain height
See that glory-beaming star.

It is the star of Bethlehem. It is sending forth beams that lead us to holy living, to helpful friendliness, to godly homes, to eternal hope. Our Christmas needs this light. Go forth to reflect its luminance to all the world.

pendence, and Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education.

Sentiment was unanimous as to the need and value of this program. As a result, the "workbook" will be perfected in harmony with suggestions given at the meeting, and will be printed and made available for General Church use.

Others who have experimented with the program but who were unable to attend were J. W. Breshears, president of the Rock Island District; Ralph Wicker, president of Des Moines District; Lyle Woodstock, president of Chicago District; and Emery E. Jennings, president of Far West Stake.

WOMEN'S COUNCIL ACTIVITIES

An all-day council meeting was held on Monday, December 7, with Mrs. W. Wallace Smith attending. Plans for the women's reception to be held at General Conference were discussed.

Four members of the Council attended a one-day conference on marriage and family relations held in Kansas City on December 8 by Dr. Paul Popenoe. They were Mrs. George Mesley, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, Mrs. J. Harry Paxton, and Mrs. S. S. Arnson.

Mrs. Burgess has been guest teacher during the past month at three institutes for women held at Richmond, Missouri, for Central Missouri Stake, at Lawrence, Kansas, for the Kaw Valley District, and at Fort Madison, Iowa, for the Nauvoo District.

Successful 1953 Reunion

ROCK ISLAND DISTRICT.—The most unusual reunion of the Rock Island District was held August 1 to 9, at Camp Milan, south of Milan, Illinois. From the first registration and orientation meeting held Saturday, August 1, to its close, the reunion was characterized by a remarkable spirit of peace, love, unity, and co-operation. As a "venture in Zion's living" those in attendance had a taste of what unity can do.

The general classes, on the "Challenge of the Restoration," with Dr. F. M. McDowell as monitor, were above the ordinary in participation and attendance. Each day's class was presented in a different manner and included panels, roundtables, skits, dramatizations, use of hidden microphones, and short talks. The priesthood, young people, and women's department participated in the various presentations. A skit on stewardship written by Winifred Stiegel starred John Stiegel as a bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Angell who wanted to go to Zion and had made no preparation, and Mr. and Mrs. John Harrington, who had fulfilled the requirements. The young people dramatized how a revelation becomes a part of the Doctrine and Covenants. The priesthood dramatized the last service of the General Conference.

With the general classes setting a fine background, the prayer services following were above the average, and real testimonies were borne. The spirit of admonition was present on several occasions to bless and rebuke, to strengthen and encourage for the task ahead. During the last prayer service, in charge of District President W. J. Breshears, prayers were given by C. S. Shippy representing the elders, James Archibald, the priests, George Waddell, Sr., the teachers, and George C. Shippy, the deacons. Dr. F. M. McDowell gave the summons to serve, followed by responses from Elder H. P. Jones representing pastors, Clarence M. Beil, the priesthood, Ruth Shippy, the women, H. L. Braun, the young people, Etta Cosner, the children's department, Jack Waddell for the senior Zion's League, Myron Krueger, junior Zion's League, and C. H. McKee, children.

Dr. F. M. McDowell, assisted by Apostle R. E. Davey, preached the first Sunday morning, using as his subject "What Seek Ye Here?" Special music was rendered by the Moline Choir under the direction of Sr. Ruth Shock.

About four hundred attended the Communion service held Sunday afternoon in charge of Brother Breshears.

The Moline Choir presented a vesper service. The evening services from Sunday through Friday nights were evangelistic in nature with illustrated sermons on prophecy given by Apostle R. E. Davey. This was an outstanding contribution to the reunion.

The priesthood class met daily with Dr. McDowell, who used "The Kingdom-building Program" as a guide. Approximately thirty were in attendance including pastors from Davenport, Rock Island, Moline, Waterloo, Muscatine, Clinton, and Oelwein. This was a workshop in nature; demonstrations were given and actual priesthood visits were made on the grounds.

The women's department, under the direction of Sr. Ruth Shippy, also carried on a workshop, electing a leader for the week, with Elder Leonard Stiegel acting as pastor for the "branch election." The leader called the meeting together and other officers were elected who met and selected committees. An installation service was carried out to show "how." The programs were varied each day. On Tuesday, Sr. Thelona Stevens taught "Women Accept the Challenge of the Restoration;" on Wednesday, Sr. Aleta Runkle gave a talk, "Preparing our children for music service in the church." On Thursday, Zion's Daughters of Muscatine presented the playlet, "A New Neighbor," and the Davenport women presented a cradle roll playlet, "Calling All Babies." Discussion followed, and the afternoon was spent in registering all cradle roll children, and in friendly visiting. On Friday, Apostle R. E. Davey talked on "Zion's Homes and Juvenile Delinquency." On Friday afternoon the annual tea was held, in charge of the social and program committees selected earlier in the week. The ways and means committee had earned the money to pay for the refreshments. On Saturday ways and means were discussed with a summary and challenge given by Sr. Shippy.

The Zion's League was divided into Senior and Junior Leagues under the direction of Harold L. Braun and Sr. Margaret Braun, respectively. They were assisted by William Gardner and Jim Archibald. The commissions were organized and set to work, and each young person had a job to do. They had study classes, prayer services, recreation, and campfires. They also enjoyed the ministry of Sisters Stevens and Runkle and Brothers McDowell and Davey. Roller skating, swimming, baseball, and volleyball were most enjoyed. A moonlight hike was held, followed by a watermelon feast in the dining hall.

At 4:00 P.M. Monday through Saturday, Sister Thelona Stevens headed a teacher training class, using "Ways of Teaching" as her text. About 50 attended this class. She was assisted by Sr. Winifred Stiegel, Director of Religious Education for the district.

Sister Etta Cosner was in charge of the children's division at Reunion with approximately 111 boys and girls in attendance. On Saturday evening the children's department put on the pageant "Jesus Speaks" as the culmination of their week's work, and displayed the finished handcraft.

The adult campfire, held after services on Wednesday evening, was in the charge of Dr. F. M. McDowell. A combined campfire for adults and youth was held Friday evening.

Elder C. M. Beil was in charge of the dining hall, assisted by Rose Bowen, Emma Lindley, Verna Giles, and Brother and Sister George Waddell, Sr. The women of the various local women's departments took their turns assisting at appointed times. About 600 meals were served daily.

George Waddell, Sr., had charge of the concession stand, which was open only during recreational hours and after services.

Elder Leonard L. Stiegel was in charge of registration and reported 171 permanent campers, 124 non-campers, and more who did not register but attended daily. Helen Stiegel was book steward for Herald House.

Ruth Sharrar was camp nurse.

Orville Short, reunion treasurer, was on the job day and night, providing accommodations, and helping all things to run smoothly.—Reported by RUTH I. SHIPPY

Eight Called to Priesthood

GRAND VALLEY, ONTARIO.—The Owen Sound District conference was held at Grand Valley, Ontario, October 25, with Elder Gordon Farrow and his counselors in charge.

The theme for the morning worship service was "The Need of Study."

Missionary Les Gardner spoke at the eleven o'clock hour on the subject of sharing.

A dinner was served at noon in the lower auditorium by the women's department of the branch.

At the afternoon business session, Gordon Farrow was unanimously re-elected district president, and he selected Fred McLean of Guelph, and Arthur Dunn, of Fergus, as his counselors.

Other officers elected were Mrs. Benson Belrose, of Owen Sound, secretary; George T. Furness, of Owen Sound, treasurer; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Davis, directors of religious education, children's supervisor, and pastor; Mrs. Gordon Farrow, of Wiarton, music director; Alma Leeder, of Shallow Lake, youth leader;

Delegates were chosen to attend the 1954 General Conference.

The following calls to the priesthood were approved by the conference: Ed Bachelor, of Proton, to the office of elder; Earl Snell, of Redickville, to the office of elder; Joseph Stoutenberg, of Ravenna, to the office of priest; Ralph Farrett, of Wiarton, to the office of priest; Sam Robinson, of Wiarton, to the office of priest; Edgar Botting, of Wiarton, to the office of deacon; Barry Belrose, of Owen Sound, to the office of deacon; and George Cameron, of Owen Sound, to the office of deacon.

District President Farrow reported increased interest throughout the district during the year.

The bishop's agent reported a marked improvement over last year. Thirty-nine more financial statements were filed during the first nine months of the year.—Reported by ELIZABETH BELROSE

Fall Conference Held

PORTLAND, OREGON.—The Northern Oregon and Southern Washington District held its fall conference October 16-18.

The first service of the conference was held at Central Church in Portland. A sermon was given by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, with Elder Harold Carpenter in charge, assisted by Elders William Brewster and Gordon Lampard. Following this service a barbecue was held in the lower auditorium, with Keith Kinart, Lloyd Shannon, and Clinton Dobson as chefs. Honorary chefs were Apostle Gleazer, Bishop Monte E. Lasater, and District President J. L. Verhei. Hostesses were Reata Kinart, Verl Rogers, and Leona Carpenter.

On Saturday the meetings were held at the Masonic hall. A worship service began at 8:30 a.m., followed by a prayer and fellowship service with Apostle Gleazer in charge, assisted by Elders Verhei, Landon, Whiting, and Lasater.

Classes were held at ten o'clock. The teachers for this period were Elder Verhei, men's class; Sister Effie Verhei, women's class; Brother and Sister Robert Taylor, children's class.

At the eleven o'clock hour, classes were taught by Apostle Gleazer, who had the men's class, Brother Lasater, who taught the women's class, and Brother and Sister Herbert Hawley, who taught the children's class.

Lunch was served in the basement with Sister Reata Kinart in charge.

At two o'clock, the business meeting was held, with Apostle Gleazer in charge. The following officers were elected: district president, J. L. Verhei; church school director, Harold Carpenter; women's leader, Reata Kinart; music leader, James Kemp; Zion's League leader; Keith Kinart; secretary, Roy D. Keiser; treasurer, Milton Becker; auditor, Leonard Hoisington; historian, Lillian Livingston; drama and publicity, Leona Carpenter; bishop, Monte E. Lasater; associates to the district president, Elders Miles Whiting, F. E. Chapman, Harold Carpenter, Lloyd Shannon, Roy Keiser, Keith Kinart, Clinton Dobson, Earnest Webberley, Cleo Thompson, Raymond Huggett, and Herbert Hawley.

Elder James Kemp taught the evening class for adults, and Elders Keith Kinart and Robert Dixon taught the young people's class. A song service followed, with Elder Lloyd Shannon in charge, followed by a sermon by Brother Lasater. Elder Paul Fishel was in charge of this service, assisted by Elders Albert Nelson and Lester Comer.

On Sunday a worship of music was presented, followed by a prayer and fellowship meeting, with Apostle Gleazer in charge, assisted by Brothers Verhei, Lasater, Kemp, Orman Salisbury, and members of the district presidency.

Apostle Gleazer spoke at the eleven o'clock hour. Brother Verhei was in charge of the service, assisted by Brothers Mark Yoeman and George Speed. Children's classes were held between the hours of eleven and twelve. Brother and Sister Ray Rogers were in charge.

After lunch, a dedication and ordination service was held. The following men were ordained to the priesthood: Reginald Clark to the office of elder by Elder Kinart; Arthur Minor to the office of elder by Elder Albert Nelson; Farrell Quick to the office of priest by Elder Verhei; John Henderson to the office of priest by Elder Whiting; Jack French to the office of deacon by Elder Carpenter; and Dean Coburn to the office of deacon by Elder F. E. Chapman.

The closing service was a sermon by Brother Landon. Brother Chapman was in charge of this service, assisted by Brothers Livingston and Webberley.

Those in charge of housing were Sisters Verhei, Comer, and Aileen Hartley.

Elders Albert Nelson and Wayne Lapworth were in charge of administrations. Roy Keiser was in charge of registrations, assisted by Kathleen Lawler. Brother Reginald Clark was in charge of flower arrangement. Music for the conference was under the direction of Elder Lloyd Shannon. Solos were sung by Elder James Kemp and Sisters Della Dobson, Freda Moore, and Blanche Wirick.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

Business Meeting Held

NAMPA, IDAHO.—The women's department met November 5 at the home of Sister Leola Cram in Melba. A worship period and lesson study were held. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

On November 19, the women's department met at the home of Sister Ada Dennis, in Nampa. The lesson period was used to make table ornaments which were used at the Idaho District conference in Boise on November 21. A worship period closed the meeting, after which refreshments were served. Several women were in Boise on Saturday, November 21, to decorate the tables at Columbian Hall for the conference banquet held that evening. A Thanksgiving theme was used in decorating. The main centerpieces were gold horns of plenty filled with fruits and vegetables.

Girls from the Nampa Zion's League served the banquet.

Church services were not held in Nampa mission on Sunday, November 22, since Idaho District conference was in session, and many Saints from Nampa attended.

A business meeting was held at the church on November 17. The new finance committee members appointed were Brothers Jesse Talish, Carl Newton, and Floyd Suttle.

Two business meetings of the Zion's League were held during November, with Brother Carl Newton, League supervisor, in charge.

Private and Mrs. Harold Shaffer arrived in Nampa, November 12, from Camp Leonard Wood, Missouri, to visit their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Shaffer of Homedale, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Reeves of Nampa. Private Shaffer will report for overseas duty on November 27, at Camp Kilmer, New Jersey. Mrs. Shaffer will remain in Nampa while her husband is away.

Brother and Sister Howard Sheldon and son, David, arrived in Nampa, October 15, from Great Lakes, Illinois, to visit relatives and friends. Brother Sheldon, who is a hospital corpsman in the Navy, left, October 23, for San Francisco and an overseas assignment in the Marianas Islands. Sister Sheldon and David will make their home at 2119 Second Street in Nampa.

The Wednesday evening prayer service which has been previously held at the Nampa church has been changed to cottage meetings for the winter months. The first cottage meeting was held November 11 at the home of Brother and Sister J. C. Ford.

There was a special Thanksgiving service on Wednesday evening at the church.

Brother Carl Newton is music director instead of Sister Dallas Newton, as was reported.—Reported by NELLIE REEVES

VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

There was once a dear old lady in straightened circumstances, yet she was full of the spirit of thankfulness and was always helping others whenever and wherever she could. She often took part in newspaper and magazine contests, being lucky enough occasionally to add a few dollars to her scanty income. One day a certain magazine offered prizes for the best definitions of "poverty." Surely here was a subject she was well qualified to write about! So—she went to work with the idea and sent in her entry, then patiently awaited the returns.

In due time she received a letter from the magazine publishers. She opened it with trembling fingers, hoping it might contain a check for at least a few dollars. Imagine her amazement and joy when she found a check for the grand award, an amount sufficient to keep her nicely for the rest of her days! In the letter accompanying the check the judges expressed their pleasure and satisfaction in awarding the first prize to her for her definition:

"Poverty is a state of being helpless to help the helpless."

SPIRITUAL DEATH . . .

Best way to murder Christmas is to act bored or "sophisticated" about it.

GIFT WRAPPINGS

If you truly want your Christmas gifts packaged prettily this year, tie them with heart strings.

A CITIZEN'S GIFT!

Uncle Sam—the world's Santa Claus!—himself deserves a gift. Of gold—our militant loyalty. Of frankincense—our intelligent guidance. Of myrrh—our devout prayers.

CHANGING TIMES

"One of America's troubles," says soft-spoken Howard Pyle, governor of Arizona, "is that too many adults and not enough children believe in Santa Claus."

CONVINCED NOW?

Christmas isn't important? You'll just ignore it? All the armies that ever marched, all the navies ever built, all the parliaments that ever sat have never affected the world as the one solitary Life!

SHOCKINGLY IRREGULAR!

A musical notation above one of the Christmas carols in our hymn book reads, "Irregular." I should say so! The whole thing was highly irregular! A Baby in a barn. What could be more irregular? A thought comes from this notation: We have in Christianity a most irregular religion; we worship a most irregular God. His ways are now past finding out. Anything can happen. The worst enemies of vital Christianity are those who have tried to regularize it, to take out its fantastic, peculiar qualities and leave it no different from anything else.

Arthur Leslie Gardner

ARTHUR LESLIE GARDNER spent the first twenty years of his life in Australia. He was born in Wallsend, New South Wales, on August 24, 1929, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church ten years later.

Les set his goal to attend Graceland early. Prior to his coming to the States, following his graduation from Newcastle Boys High School, he worked four years to save money for his trip abroad. "I went to bed one evening quite unsuspecting and woke up the next morning with only half the value of my money left—devaluation had set in." His final arrival in the States and attendance at Graceland is a story of perseverance and conviction. In 1950 he enrolled at Graceland where he was a member of the Student Council, a student group pastor, and member of the Lambda Delta Sigma. He was ordained a deacon in 1948 and an elder in 1952. He accepted church appointment and was sent to Nebraska immediately following graduation from Graceland.

Les has found many experiences to strengthen his testimony of the Restoration as he has worked in various areas. "My testimony of the church is a growing one. The assurance of the actuality of the kingdom has come as I have worked and given myself to it." Currently he is serving in the Owen Sound, Manitoulin Island, and Sault Ste Marie areas.

THE PALACE of the Governor is at Uxmal, in the State of Yucatán, Mexico. It is located on the Mérida-Campache highway about 77 kilometers south of Mérida.

This building rests upon the topmost terrace of three large platforms. The first is about 594 by 503 feet and 39 feet high; the second is about 392 by 89 feet and 23 feet high; while the last surrounds the place rather closely and is only 31 inches high. The palace proper is 322 feet long, 39 wide, and 23 high, with its stairway facing the southeast.

Sylvanus Morely, eminent archaeologist, says of this building:

The Governor's Palace at Uxmal is, in my opinion, the most magnificent, the most spectacular single building ever erected in the Americas in pre-Columbian times. The elaborate and rich mosaics decorating its four facades are composed of some twenty thousand specially cut and fitted stone elements. The edges of these intricately shaped elements are sharply cut, their surfaces smoothly dressed, and the elements themselves exactly fitted one to another in the exceedingly intricate patterns of the mosaics. The individual elements of these great mosaic facades are enormous, single stones frequently measuring a yard in length and weighing up to several hundred pounds.

The Governor's Palace probably was the administrative center of the area. The structure was originally divided into three sections with two huge corbeled-stone roof-vaulting arcades. These passageways have by later construction been walled up and made into two rooms each. There are twenty-four rooms in the palace, ten rooms in the larger central section, and five in each end section, plus the four new rooms made in the arcades. Each of the corners have large stone decorative masks, five masks high. Along the top is found the undulating body of a serpent. Over the central door is the carving of a throne, upon which are remains of what was once evidently a human figure with huge feathered headdress.

What we may properly call the true Mayan architectural renaissance, the neoclassic period of Mayan architecture, is to be found at Uxmal. The Mexican influence so strongly noticed at Chichén Itzá is almost nonexistent at Uxmal.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT ISRAEL SMITH IS SPEAKER

Center Stake of Zion Conference was held at the Auditorium on Sunday, December 13, with Charles V. Graham, Glaude Smith, and Herbert Lively, members of the stake presidency, in charge of arrangements.

At the morning business session, eighteen pastors were approved for the eighteen congregations, and thirty-three men were recommended for and accepted calls to the priesthood.

A 200-voice choir directed by Fred Weddle sang at the nine o'clock service, and a 200-voice children's choir directed by Aleta Runkle sang at the worship service. President Israel A. Smith addressed the conference at eleven o'clock. This is the first time he has spoken to the church since his illness last summer.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS ADDRESSES WOMEN OF CENTER STAKE

Activities for the calendar year for Center Stake of Zion women closed on December 4 with a candlelighting service, followed by a reception at Stone Church honoring stake officials. President F. Henry Edwards delivered an address entitled "Worship the Father in His Name." In the traditional manner, little children gathered around the English lampost to sing carols, under the direction of program chairman, Mrs. John R. Darling. The candlelighting service was by Mrs. W. Wallace Smith, stake women's leader, and her assistant, Mrs. E. Hale Haas. Stake President C. V. Graham, with congregational leaders and Daughters of Zion representatives, also participated in the service.

GUESTS AT LUNCHEON FOR TRUMAN

Truman Road was officially opened here on Wednesday, December 16, with a speech by former president Harry S. Truman, followed by a luncheon for state, county, and city officials who have worked on the recent road improvements. President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp were guests at the luncheon.

ATTENDS DISTRICT ANNIVERSARY OBSERVANCE

Apostle D. T. Williams was at Wellsburg, West Virginia, the week end of December 12-13 to attend the district anniversary celebration there. Brother Samuel Zonker is district president.

COMPLETES MISSIONARY SERIES

Apostle Roscoe Davey concluded a missionary series at South Chrysler Church in Center Stake of Zion on December 13. A good attendance was reported. Brother Davey used slides to illustrate his sermons on the practical application of the gospel in the church. Orville Hiles is pastor at South Chrysler.

FINAL REHEARSALS HELD

Final "Messiah" chorus rehearsal was held Friday evening, December 18, with rehearsal for the soloists the following evening.

Rehearsals for "The Nativity" by Dr. Wallace Shute are also being held, with Arthur Rock directing the play, Franklyn Weddle directing the incidental music written for the play by Myron McTavish, and Fred Weddle conducting. "The Nativity" will be presented December 23 at Stone Church.

OFFICE OF
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

December 22, 1953

New Year's Greetings:

The first issue of the Herald for 1954 will be Number 1 of Volume 101, and as we write, the closing days of 1953 are passing quickly.

The task of editing and printing a weekly of twenty-four pages is indeed not an easy one. No one who has not had firsthand knowledge of the work entailed can have an adequate idea of what is required. The present editorial staff of the Herald, however, does realize what is involved, since one of the First Presidency was engaged as managing editor for some years (1903-1913), and another member was editor of Zion's Ensign for a similar period (1928-1932), and now for several years we have again carried editorial responsibility.

Elder Isaac Sheen was sole editor when the True Latter Day Saints' Herald appeared in 1860. A little later Joseph Smith III was placed in charge, and ever since one or more--and for many years now--all the members of the First Presidency have acted as editors in chief. The editorial staff necessarily has been enlarged, and in addition to the First Presidency, we note the following present members: Leonard J. Lea, Chris B. Hartshorn, Naomi Russell, Paul A. Wellington, and Audrey Stubbart. Our Business Manager is Kenneth L. Graham.

On behalf of the entire editorial and managerial force, we send greetings to the church and pledge our best efforts to keep up a standard of excellence that will merit the continued approval of our subscribers and readers. And may all succeeding volumes of this official organ carry a message to the people that will enhance and bless the lives of all who patronize it.

And since the editors in chief constitute the First Presidency, we accept this occasion to express gratitude for the help given us by others of the staff and wish for them and for all the priesthood and church departments and councils and members everywhere our very best wishes for a prosperous new year.

W. Wallace Smith

Across the Desk

The First Presidency

From Emery Jennings, president of Far West Stake:

I have just received a fine report from Grace Salisbury, stake director of women. Three years ago the women agreed to raise money by personal offerings for the stake missionary mission fund as an annual objective for a period of five years. We thought they would probably raise about a thousand each year; however, Sister Salisbury reports that she turned in $2,277.48, which now makes us a total of $4,700.32 in our missionary reserve fund, all of which has been raised by the women of our stake. This money will be available to promote missionary work in the starting of new missions, the purchase of equipment, etc.

If the women continue to do as well in the next two years as they have in the past two, they will have raised $10,000 in the five-year period.

From a letter of Apostle D. T. Williams, dated November 3, 1953:

In keeping with your authorization, I officiated in the ordination of Brother Perce R. Judd to the office of high priest at the conference in Norwalk, Connecticut, last Sunday. There was a beautiful spirit present.

I wish also to report the organization of the new New York Metropolitan District. Brother Judd was elected district president. His address is 73-03 Little Neck Parkway, Floral Park, New York. I think he is an excellent man for this place. The new district seems to be off to a good start.

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Nauvoo District:

We are moving forward with considerable rapidity in Nauvoo District. On brief notice that I would be available last Sunday, forty-six men of the priesthood gathered at Fort Madison, Iowa, and we had an excellent meeting.

During the past three years in Nauvoo District we have baptized 122 persons, or forty-one a year. During the previous twelve years only 141 were baptized, or twenty a year. We have been able to open missions at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and Carthage, Illinois, and have observed a revival in Keokuk, Iowa.

The new highway signs made available by the church have been set up on both sides of Montrose, Iowa. They are very attractive.

Our missionary appointment in this district allows only five months for missionary endeavor; the other seven months are used for guide service. If a full-time appointee were made available for Nauvoo District we could expect a speeding up of our missionary achievement.

From Sgt. J. M. Sparkes, Whitehorse, Yukon Territory:

Attached is the report of the baptism of Cecile Leschinski, which I have withheld to this date pending a permanent address of the candidate.

I might add that I was ordained to the priesthood just before leaving Vancouver, British Columbia, for this northern posting with the Canadian Army. Although we do not have a church here, when we first arrived two years ago there were two other church families here—the Barnetts and the Paynes. We had our meetings together whenever possible and held Sunday school for our children. Since these members have “departed for the outside,” as we call going back to civilization, we are left alone—my wife, three children, and myself. However, we do keep the church alive in our home and never miss Communion on the first Sunday of each month.

During my stay here I have had many problems, since I am new in the work; one was a triple funeral. I do not hesitate to say that the spiritual help I have received when I needed it most has carried me far. God has always been at my side when I have reached for his helping hand. For this I give my humble thanks and rededicate my life to serving him at every possible opportunity.

We ask the prayers of the Saints that our efforts may be effective. For the last two years I have been superintendent in the army church school of 125 children, and both my wife and I teach classes.

The baptism I have reported, which is the first for our church in the Yukon, was performed in a natural hot springs pool a few miles from town. I pray it will not be the last.

In the pamphlet, “The State of Iowa Welcomes You,” a one-page feature appears on “The Mormon Trail.” President Israel A. Smith deserves credit for getting a change made in the original copy which failed to discriminate between the Mormon Church and the Reorganized Church. The feature is as follows:

In a rural community in the state of New York in 1827 Joseph Smith, Jr., announced he had some gold plates bearing inscriptions which he claimed contained the religious and civil history of the early inhabitants of America. The plates were translated and published as the Book of Mormon. Smith established a church in New York. His followers moved into Ohio, then into Missouri, then into Illinois where they built a city of 20,000 members at Nauvoo.

In 1844, because of political influences and religious differences, bitter persecution culminated in the killing of the leader of the church and his brother, Hyrum Smith, by a mob at Carthage, Illinois. The Nauvoo church broke into factions.

Brigham Young, leader of the larger faction, set out for Utah to establish a church home, defining the course through Iowa as the “Mormon Trail.” The exodus began in February, 1846, and by the middle of May 16,000 had crossed into Iowa.

They established eight camps or stations in Iowa. Among them were Sugar Creek, Richardson’s Point, Garden Grove of Decatur County, Mount Pisgah in Union County, Miller’s Hollow in Pottawattamie County, later named Kaneshville and then Council Bluffs. The Mormon Trail across Iowa traversed eleven counties: Lee, Van Buren, David, Appanoose, Wayne, Decatur, Lucas, Clarke, Union, Cass, and Pottawattamie.

Before completing the journey through Iowa, evidence revealed that polygamy was being practiced secretly by the leaders. Opposition arose. Some turned back to Wisconsin and others scattered in western Iowa. They sent a Mormon battalion to the Mexican War. In 1852-60 they established the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which in 1881 made its headquarters in Lamoni, Iowa. There they established Graceland College. The headquarters of this organization moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1907. Israel A. Smith, grandson of the founder, is now president of the church.

Blessed Are the Peacemakers

By Z. Z. Renfroe

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever. In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted.—Micah 4: 1-6.

And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.—Isaiah 32: 17.

Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee.—Isaiah 26: 2, 3.

IN FORMING the universe, the Great Creator held the planets like plastic clay between his fingers. He could look into the future and see the destiny of each nation, each community, and each individual. For it is indeed true that not only each nation and community has its own place in the universal scheme but each individual citizen has been placed in his own particular niche for a distinct purpose of the Creator and has his own work to perform in God's infinite plan.

We believe that each nation and community, as well as each individual, has a God-given task. Every normal man has been given a yearning to step out into this great universe and find himself. Our rendering obedience to God's laws and keeping his commandments will be the realization of his plan.

The all-seeing eye looked down through the ages to the period in which we live. He saw the place that only a great nation could fill. So out of the things not seen, he created the land of America for the working out of his infinite plan of the latter days. The Creator could see the need for a particular people to populate this land, so out of every nation came immigrants to North America. These people are not of one nationality, but they are of all nations—they are Americans. This has come through the intermingling of the peoples of all nations.

It was of this land and of these people that the prophets spoke when foretelling the Restoration of the gospel in the latter day:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

The Lord proclaimed through his prophet that some time after the year of ninety-six an angel would come and restore the everlasting gospel to the earth. This was to be the same unchangeable gospel preached by the apostles on the day of Pentecost, where the Spirit of God brought such a spirit of unity that the various nationalities present heard the marvelous words of God in their own tongues. It was to be felt again in the early days of the Restoration also.

That same spirit of unity must come again! Then beneath the influence of a mightier love we shall have a nobler people. It must prevail before we can have peace, for it is impossible to have peace on earth without unity.

WHAT IS PEACE? It is the opposite of selfish passion, toil, labor, and effort. Peace dwells in the soul in which there is no desire demanding an impossible gratification, a state in which there is no misery, no sting, no remorse. There are but two things that can break this peace: first, the discord between the mind of man and the lot which he is called to inherit; and, second, the discord between the affections or powers of the soul and the injustice and degradation which he sees in this world. Where these things do not exist, and where a man is content with his lot, where the flesh is subdued to the spirit, and where he believes with all his heart that all is right, there is peace. To this the apostle said, "Ye are called to the service of the church." Jesus said:

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light.

And again:

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you.

This peace of God supplies the deepest cravings of the soul. The deepest desire of man is not for exaltation or gratification of his every desire; it is a craving for peace with God. If I were to give you a slip of paper and ask you to write what the world needs more than anything else, I am sure that most of you would write "peace." Church membership does not guarantee us happiness, but obedience to the divine law of God will bring peace to our souls. But there are many kinds of peace that are advanced by the people of the world that are not godlike.

There is a peace in the hearts of enemies who lie close together on the battlefield. They are dead; they no longer grasp the weapons of war. The animosity of their hearts is silenced. That is the peace of death.

There are many other types of peace advanced by individuals and nations. They say that universal peace may be had if we follow their terms. The Communists say that we may have peace if we liquidate capitalism, democracy, freedom of speech, and freedom of religion. They say this is the way to bring about peace.

The western nations, in order to offset this school of thought, entered into a military alliance known as NATO where they would meet force with force. They would use the law advanced by Moses—"an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." In that way they would keep the peace.

Then there is another ideology advanced by the conscientious objector, who says that he does not believe in war, that it is against God's law to register for military duty. In order to offset this, military men have succeeded in passing a law known as the draft act. This put these people into two years of nonmilitary service, and that division flourished during World War II.

TO MAKE PEACE is to do more than abolish strife or to make people and nations be peaceable. We may keep the peace without having peace. We may bring about a cessation of hostilities without being peacemakers.

The Roman Empire brought about peace within her borders, but according to the meaning of Jesus she was not a peacemaker. Her enemies within lost the will to fight; they kept the peace by fear, which was a weakness.

There may be peace through weakness, where the individual feels that he isn't strong enough to fight his enemies. As an illustration, I was in a small town in Texas where there were two vicious bulldogs. I had been told that nearly every time they met they fought. One day I was on the street when they began a fight which I thought would not end. But finally the fighting ceased when the dogs were completely exhausted. They were lying under a tree, glowering at each other; they seemed to wish they had the strength to resume the fight. As we look at the nations of the earth, we see that the reason some of them are not fighting now is because they have not the strength to fight. They have been bled white; they are not fighting because of weakness—and that is a temporary peace.

Then there is the peace of indifference. This may be illustrated by the story of Rip Van Winkle. It was said that he and his wife had some very stormy sessions, but one day there seemed to be peace in the home. This was not because Rip and his wife had reached an understanding of their problems; it was because one morning old Rip arose early, took his shotgun, walked into the woods, and took a twenty-year nap. There was peace, but it was the peace of indifference.

THE PEACEMAKER to whom Jesus speaks does a constructive and a positive work. He renders obedience to the divine law and the will of God, and his life bears the fruits of the Spirit—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." The nations or the individuals who possess these fruits of the Spirit will crowd out all the destroying forces of hate and war. This spirit drives out suspicion by confidence, enmity and misunderstanding by understanding and good will. The Spirit of Jesus Christ puts love instead of hate.

Those who possess the fruits of the Spirit will no longer fear or fight each other. They will be at peace, for peace is a gift of Christ: "The fruits of righteousness are sown in peace" (James 3: 18). "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace" (Psalm 37: 37).

Peace means molding into one. As war divides families and individuals, so peace restores them to the state of unity giving them one object and one interest—that of being their brother's keeper. A peacemaker labors for the public good and feels his own interest promoted as he works for the interest of others. Each for all and all for Christ is the true objective of the peacemaker.

We need peacemakers because there are so few of them as nations and individuals. As we look about us today, we see strife and discord on every hand. This I say, not minimizing the marvelous advancement that has been made. We cannot look at the nations of the earth with open eyes and fail to see that there has been encouraging progress. The very fact that there is a United Nations organization proves we are progressing. Yet with all that has been done and all that is being done, world peace has not been realized. We are far from a community of men and a world federation.

Think first of the strife of man against his maker. This is as old as human history. Adam caused strife in the beginning by disobedience. He was created by God and commanded not to eat of the forbidden fruit, but he disobeyed. When God came into the garden, Adam and Eve ran and hid from him, and God had to cry out to Adam, "Where art thou?" After breaking the law, instead of running to God and saying, "Where art thou, God? I need Thee," Adam hid and God had to call to him. Man today is still breaking the law and then trying to hide from God, but God continues to seek after him. I am sure we are aware that there is a chasm between humanity and God, but for some this breach has been healed. The supreme tragedy is that there are not a sufficient number in our world who are on friendly terms with God, and the man who is at war with God is at civil war with his own soul.

ISAAH WRITES, "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." This statement is true, for the wicked have not the peace of God. If we shut God out of our lives, there may be a certain kind of peace, but not the peace of God. The hog was content in a pigsty, but the prodigal son was made for something better. He sought for a better place to live. Let us paraphrase the story of the prodigal son. I would like to bring two parallels: the attitude of the prodigal and that of his elder brother.

The prodigal son asked his father for his portion of the goods that he might make a journey into a foreign country. His father divided his goods, and this younger son went into a foreign country and spent all his substance in riotous living. When he came to want, he hired himself to a citizen of the country. He was without food so he ate husks with the swine, and when he came to himself, he said, "How many hired servants in my father's house have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! I will arise and go to my father, and will say, 'Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee; and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me a hired servant.'" Then he went to his father, and when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him and ran to kiss him.

The kiss was a seal of forgiveness. Then the father said to the servants, "Go and bring the best robe and place it on him." The robe had significance. Isaiah says, "For he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness." Here it is revealed that the prodigal put on the robe as a symbol of righteousness—after he confessed his faults by saying he was no longer worthy to be called his father's son.

The father said, "Put a ring on his finger and shoes on his feet." The ring had significance also. The prodigal was not going to be made a servant but was to be restored to his father's household: that is, he was to have the authority to represent the father's house. The ring designated the authority. As a parallel, you will remember that when Joseph was sold into Egypt and the king made him the chief ruler, he placed a signet ring upon his finger. This designated the king's authority. Here the prodigal was restored with full authority into his father's house.

The shoes also have meaning, for Paul said to the Ephesians, "You have your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

Then there was the love feast. This may be illustrated by the Saints coming together to partake of the emblems of the Lord's Supper. They do it in remembrance of Jesus Christ, and to be in complete fellowship with all the church. This parable brings to our attention the steps of complete conversion of the sinner as he becomes a child of God.

THE SECOND PARALLEL of the parable is the attitude of the older brother. When he came home and saw that all were celebrating, he called a servant and asked what it meant. The servant said, "Thy younger brother has returned, and thy father has killed for him the fatted calf." The elder brother would not go in. Why did he stay on the outside? Because there was envy in his heart. So his father came out to entreat him. The father asked the elder son what was the trouble. He said, "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed at any time thy commandment and thou never gavest me a kid, but as soon as this thy son was come which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf." His father said unto him, "All that I have is thine; it is right that I should make merry and rejoice, for this thy brother was dead and is alive again and was lost and is found."

In this parable Jesus shows that some people are outside the kingdom of God because of hate and envy and that those who commit grosser sins and are conscious of them can, by repenting, return to the Father's house.

We need peacemakers because enmity and strife are so costly. I am sure you will agree that the most expensive thing in all the world is hate. Animosity between man and man, and between man and God, is the source of all wretchedness. Each one should examine his own life. He should not look into the lives of others to try to find their weaker points but should examine himself to see if he harbors hate, enmity, and jealousy in his own life. If so, he must repent of it and seek the higher laws of the kingdom of God. Hate is costly. Think of its cost to those who hate and those who are hated. There is nothing more harmful.

Many organizations have been disrupted because of hate. Branches of the church have had their usefulness and their spiritual strength impaired by it. When given right of way it turns homes into hell and lives into disfavor with both God and man. Hate between nations causes war, which is certainly a curse to the world. Hate is the most deadly foe of mankind. It kills bodies and destroys souls. It robs the poor of their physical needs, causes famines, lowers the moral standards of nations, and brings untold grief and suffering. If you would like to know something of the suffering war causes, visit the veterans' hospitals from east to west and north to south in the United States alone. War takes the best of our young men and women.

Finally, we need peacemakers because peace will not come of itself. Peace must be made. We may drift into war, but if peace is to be realized, it must come through persistent effort. We must do more than dream about it and pray for it; we must make peace by being obedient to the law of God, and everyone must become a peacemaker.

HOW CAN PEACE be made? It will not be through hate, that is certain. A nation cannot bring about peace by war. As individuals we have learned that we cannot get along with our neighbors by carrying a six-shooter or mounting a machine gun on our front porch and defying them to pass on the front street. But nations have not learned this.

We are agreed that one Saint cannot hate another and still be in good fellowship with Christ, but how slow we have been in recognizing that one nation cannot hate another. How slow we have been in learning we cannot be Saints individually and pagans nationally. How slow we have been in recognizing that we cannot be good Samaritans individually and highwaymen, priests, or Levites nationally. We are aware of the fact that love cannot be born of hate. Job says, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one."

That which is born of love is love, and that which is born of hate is hate. Hate can only be killed by love. How are we to become peacemakers? By bringing ourselves into a right relationship with Jesus Christ. He is the supreme peacemaker; he is the Prince of Peace! He came to teach us to say, "Our Father." In so saying, we will recognize in every man a brother. The mission of Jesus Christ was to teach men to seek for the spirit of unity. For in the prayer recorded by John, Jesus prayed that "they might be one, even as we are one." There must be the spirit of unity prevailing if there is to be a brotherhood of men and a fatherhood of God.

Jesus said, "He that is not for me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." Here he places men in two positions, and two positions only. There are those who are for him, and those who are against him. Those who are for him make his plans their plans, his work their work, and his purposes real in their lives. Those who oppose his plans fight against his church and in so doing prolong the gathering of his people to Zion. Jesus made it clear that all who create strife and discord are arrayed against God. Whosoever cherishes hate in his heart and makes it easier for men and women to mistrust or to mistreat each other, whosoever is hard to live with in the home, regardless of his church affiliation, is fighting against God. Jesus said, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." We need to serve God. Our need tonight in the community and in the nation is to become peacemakers.

A PEACEMAKER will not be a promoter of strife and contention. He will help support the spirit of unity and peace and good will. Peacemakers are partakers of divine blessings and are called the children of God. It is the Father's nature to make peace. He is called the God of Peace; Jesus is the Prince of Peace; and his message is the gospel of Peace. Then, what is peacemaking? We may not be sure of its full meaning, but we have the supreme example of a peacemaker in Jesus Christ. He stressed that through obedience to the gospel law we may have that peace of God which passes all understanding and shall keep our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ.

This gospel law is clearly defined by Jesus: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man shall do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7: 16, 17). According to Jesus, if any man desires a knowledge of the divinity of God and Christ, he must obey the doctrine; for He promises a knowledge to all those who render obedience to the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

I was discussing these principles with a man not so many years ago, and he said, "Mr. Renfroe, I believe that as far as the Bible is concerned, the church you represent is in harmony with Christ's church. The reason I have not been baptized is that I would like for God to strike me down as he struck Paul down." I said, "God didn't promise he was going to strike people down in order for them to sense the need of obeying his laws. You say you believe the gospel; if you believe it, why don't you obey it?" After we prayed together, he asked for some time to think this through, and finally he made his decision. At the baptismal service there was a marvelous spirit present, and that same spirit attended the confirmation. After the service he came to me with tears and said, "Brother Renfroe, the power of the Spirit was much greater than I had anticipated; this is the greatest thing I have ever had in my life."

Jesus knew it would be, and that is why he said, "He that doeth the will of the Father shall know." This Spirit will bring to our hearts and souls the peace of God that will cast out fear. We must not be a fearful people; we must be peace loving. Jesus said, "Fear not even unto death, for in this life your joy is not full, but your joy is filled in me." We must cast fear out of our lives and obey the principles of the gospel.

WHAT ARE THESE principles? Paul in Hebrews 6: 1, 2 says, "Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." Paul enumerates six principles that he calls the principles of the doctrine of Christ. These principles can be found in the teaching of Jesus Christ and are recorded in the Four Gospels. It is clearly stated by Paul that if we want to go on to perfection we must comply with these doctrinal teachings of Christ; or, in other words, if we desire to obtain the celestial glory in the kingdom we must obey the principles of the doctrine of Christ. The first four principles have to do with our salvation here and now. That is, we must repent from dead works, have faith toward God, and obey the doctrines of the baptisms and laying on of hands. These, I say, must be obeyed; and the way we apply these first four principles to our lives will determine the judgment and the resurrection in which we shall come forth.

I have heard people ask, "Why do you continue to stress these first principles? It seems when you comply with them once, that would be sufficient." My friends, we never get away from repentance. As long as we are here in this life, and as long as we yield to temptation, it will be necessary for us to repent. Paul says, "We all have come short of the glory of God." There are not many days in our lives when we don't need to repent. That is why the Lord spoke to the latter-day prophet and said, "Preach nothing but repentance to this generation." When Jesus came down the coast of Galilee he said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

THIS DOCTRINE was a "call to the kingdom." We know the kingdom of God tarries; but why? Because of the false views of the purposes of life! Our present social troubles are only outward symptoms of a deep-seated disease, a false view of the ends of living. Man's chief aim should be to glorify God and enjoy him forever, but the pagan idea is pleasure. The scientist, the dramatist, the novelist are all seeking to give man a world of play. Paul says that in the last days people will be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

One of the great problems of our world today is that we have advanced more rapidly scientifically than we have spiritually. We are living in the machine age, but we are not living in a religious age. Knowledge has increased as Daniel prophesied. "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." I am sure he was pointing to the present age, for knowledge has increased and men are traveling with great speed.

With all that has been done and is being done scientifically, it is to be doubted that we who live in this great mechanical age are better men and women than those who rode in oxcarts and sent messages by runners. Why then all this material progress unless men and women grow up morally and spiritually in their world? Our most desperate need today is not more machinery but better people to operate the machinery we already have; not finer homes and furnishings but better men and women to put into the homes we already have built. This is not a problem that the scientist can solve. Character cannot be produced in a test tube; only by reaching the soul can we solve our problems.

In some way we must reach the heart of man. He does not need a change of scenery; he needs a cure. He does not need a revolution; he needs a re-creation. Give him a new heart, a new mind, a new will, and a new motive for personal living as Jesus offered, and you will turn these troubled times into the golden age. The trouble is not in the setting of the stage but in the actors. Salvation is a personal matter. Sin is personal. When we sin, we pay personally. Society will never be better than those who comprise it. There have been those who have felt that the kingdom of God could be ushered in in some mass movement by political and social reform, but the golden age will not arrive in that way.

You may unite men in certain temporal purposes, but you cannot forcefully unite souls. This is an individual matter. Love is the force that will bring the kingdom—the love of God and the love for people. The love of God comes through obedience to the law of God. By obeying his laws we may have personal testimonies that will awaken our souls to a greater responsibility to the kingdom ideas. There will also come a personal testimony as to the divinity of Christ and his love for us. We must be so in touch with Christ that he can reveal his love to us. In return for his mercy, we will go out and witness for him. As a result of our rich experiences with him, we can say to all men everywhere, "We love Christ, for he has done so much for us." We then will work for him by letting his love shine through us.

I HAD AN EXPERIENCE recently that I brought the love of Christ into my soul as I had never felt it before. I was traveling to Canada by train. As I boarded the train in Kansas City, I noticed a young man sitting on the front seat who had had a terrible accident. One eye and the flesh had been torn from the side of his face.

After we had traveled some distance, I noticed the young man move to the lounge, feeling his way along. I said to the lady sitting across from him, "That young man must be blind." She replied, "Yes, he is blind. He is my husband, and has just returned from Korea where he received those wounds."

When the young man came back, I began talking to him and told him I was a missionary for the church. He seemed very happy and came back to sit with me. He appeared to be very interested in religion. I found that he was very intelligent and well educated, having a master's degree. He asked me many questions about the church and said he was earnestly seeking for the right one. He said that before he was injured, he had never thought much about religion. Then he told me of his accident. He said that as he was leading his men up near the front lines, a shell burst near him and tore away a part of his face. He was carried back and a bandage was placed over his face and his eye for a long time. The morning the doctor removed the bandage, there was still hope that he might have vision, but on looking, the doctor said, "John, I have bad news for you. You will never see the light of day again. You are blind." The young man said, "No one can ever know the feeling that came over me. I wept and I thought, How can I stand this? What can I do? How will my wife accept this? I was afraid she might leave me, and my soul was filled with anguish. As the doctor did plastic surgery, I suffered much. One day while I was tossing on the bed, a soldier near me said, 'John, if you would do one thing, I am sure you would get relief.' I asked, 'What is that?' He replied, 'Why don't you pray? Every time I pray I have received relief.' From that time I began to pray and every time I prayed I received help. The suffering was more endurable and the grace of God came to me to such an extent that I knew my wife and family would accept me. On my return home, and since, my wife has been just grand. God has been good to me—and this Christ, oh, I love him!"

Certainly my heart was touched and my soul stirred to the depths of humility by this testimony. Here was a young man who had gone through so much and still he could say, "God has been good—and this Christ, he means so much to me!"

I HOPE that each of us can carry a testimony in our heart of that love which Christ can give only to those who are obedient. I hope we will leave the places of complacency and go out into the world that is before us and win men to him that they may say, "I love him, for he has meant so much to me." Even in sorrow and suffering, Jesus can give us the peace that passes all understanding. When we are obedient to his laws, the works of the flesh will be turned into the fruits of the Spirit. Then when we have enough of those whose lives are motivated by the fruits of the Spirit and who are willing to sacrifice their time and talents carrying the message of Christ into all the world, we can have peace on earth and good will toward men. When from the Occident to the Orient people will say, "We want to keep the gospel law, for we love this Christ; he means so much to us," then and then only can we beat our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning-hooks. Then only can we convert the implements of war into instruments of service by making man the master of his own heart and a servant of society.

This is our task. Are we willing to pledge our allegiance anew to the church to conserve her strength in its purity and make her chief among those that serve mankind, serving with justice and right?

I feel almost like King Benjamin in the Book of Mormon times when he stood before the great multitude which had assembled and said that all who were desirous of keeping his commandments (and that would mean for all those who have been warned to warn their neighbors) should enter into a covenant. And the record says that they all, but the little children, did so. We need laborers in the vineyard if there is to be peace on earth. We should pledge our support to a great revival—not merely a revival of the home or society, but of individuals, that each may be stirred to active service in spreading the gospel of peace. I plead with you to give yourself to this task.

IF YOU DESIRE to become a member or if you would like to have someone explain further the laws of the kingdom, then contact one of the elders of the congregation where you worship. He will be happy to come to your home and talk about the good things of the kingdom.

That the peace of God may shine upon your faces and that each of you may be stirred to a greater sphere of usefulness in the work of the kingdom of God is my prayer.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING

ONCE HEARD someone say, "Congregational singing is the pulse that tells the spiritual heartbeat of the group that is singing."

Last summer I worshiped with the Saints in St. Louis one Sunday. It was a beautiful day and we especially enjoyed it, because there had come a break in the heat of the Midwest. We felt like going to the house of the Lord with thankful hearts. A very friendly hostess greeted me and asked that I sign among the visitors. I noticed at the end of the line a place for remarks. I had nothing as yet to remark, having just entered the vestibule.

The church was nice within, making me want to worship. One of the windows contained a picture of a young lad looking up the gospel ladder. The speaker that morning called our attention to the window and asked that its message not become commonplace to us. There was no choir. Summer vacations were responsible. A notice in the bulletin said the choir would resume services in September. We did not miss the choir too much because the congregation filled in. Even though I was informed that half the congregation was at the Brush Creek Reunion, the Saints remaining certainly gave their best to the Master in the music of that day. I made use of the remark column as I left the church, saying that if congregational singing were a spiritual pulse, then St. Louis is a healthy group.

Sometimes the elderly and afflicted cannot help in the singing part of a service but the "young men with voices strong yet tender, and maids with clear, sweet tones of youth" may lift their voices in the Maker's praise. It is an avenue of service for all.

What impression are you leaving a visitor of the healthiness of your group? While you are singing next Sunday, listen also. See if you can judge the spirituality of your branch. If it does not meet your expectations ask yourself if you are not partly to blame.

The Law of Surplus Is Basic

By Fred Immer

IN READING the Herald I am amazed at how many things have been written under the heading of "debatable topics" regarding the hereafter and our pre-existence in the spirit world and so little regarding our earthly existence and the complexities of our temporal life. It seems that today when people are so confused with the social problems that confront civilization we should give a little more thought to what the revelations of God have been to us as a church; then possibly we could arrive at a saner solution than we can by reading the headlines in our papers and the articles in our magazines.

From the beginning of time our Creator has been trying to instruct us in the way we should go, even in our temporalities, so that we might bring about a more equitable way of life among ourselves as members of his church. This would enable us to bring Zion into being, the "city set upon a hill" that will demonstrate to the nations of the earth a proper way of life. I believe that the correct use of surplus which is accumulated above man's needs and just wants is the answer to the economic ills of the world and can remove the fundamental causes of war.

THE HISTORY of the surplus property in the Scriptures goes back to the days of Abram.

In Genesis 14 we find an account of Abram's going on a raid with his men to rescue Lot, his brother's son, who had been abducted. When he returned he gave to Melchizedek, king of Salem, tithes of all the booty he had taken. Melchizedek was the high priest, and the keeper of the storehouse, "him whom God had appointed to receive tithes for the poor" (verses 37, 38). Verse 39 gives an account of what we presume was a tithing of Abram's surplus: "Wherefore, Abraham paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." It was about the same theory as our "needs and just wants" in latter-day revelation.

After Abram's time there wasn't much more written about tithing until in the days of Moses, except that Jacob made a promise that he would give a tenth unto God (28: 22). Then the law of Moses was given which was a schoolmaster to guide them until Christ should come.

In the New Testament we find even less regarding the financial law. Christ mentioned the Pharisees' paying tithes of mint, and anise, and cummin. There were also a few words by the Apostle Paul in his letter to the Hebrews (Hebrews 7: 5), and the account of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5: 1-10).

IN OUR PRESENT DISPENSATION God has given us some very clear instructions by way of revelation. Back in the early 1830's, the Saints were told to move to Ohio and there the financial law would be given. After moving they received not only a law comparable to the Ten Commandments but also some instructions regarding industriousness, humility, and faith. The financial law dealt principally with the consecration of property and moneys for the benefit of the poor—or, in other words, the surplus for the storehouse that was to be established. Still there were no details as to tithing.

Then in 1831 at Kirtland, Section 64 was given. Verse 5 mentioned that it was a day for the tithing "of my people," but it gave no instruction as to procedure.

In April, 1832, a revelation was received regarding the rights of children whose parents did not have the means to give them inheritances. They were to be provided for through the storehouse, which storehouse was to be kept by the consecrations of the church, or by the consecration of surplus.

FROM THERE we move on to September, 1832, when Section 83 was given. In verse 23 Bishop Newel K. Whitney was instructed "to travel round about among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their needs by humbling the rich and the proud."

After this, there were no more revelations regarding the financial law for some time. The Saints had settled around Independence, Missouri. After being driven out of there, and while trying to establish themselves at Far West, they reached a point where it seemed they could go no farther without more divine guidance. Then they called upon the Lord, desiring to know what was required of them by way of tithing. It was at this time that Section 106 was received. Of all the revelations man has ever received from the days of Adam down to our present time, there never was anything so concise and yet in such detail as this section received July 8, 1838:

In answer to the question, O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for tithing?

1. Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.

2. Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen.

All their surplus property was required as "the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that those who have been thus tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest [increase] annually." A reading of verse 2 would lead one to the conclusion that this law was given for those who gather; it seems to be very positive in saying that they "shall observe this or not be found worthy to abide among you." It states further that unless this law is observed "it shall not be a land of Zion unto you." Also it shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion.

Notice that the revelation says they shall do this thing—a very positive statement—and if they do not they shall not "abide among you." Some will contend that this would take away man's agency, but I hardly think so; for no one is compelled to go to Zion. To those who gather properly there must be rules governing; without rules there can be no Zion.

THE LAW OF SURPLUS is basic. Without it there can be no storehouse worthy of the name; without the storehouse there can be no Zion. If we lose our ideal of Zion we are in danger of "being just another church" instead of the church.

Surely with all the confusion of communism, capitalism, fascism, etc., and the need of real security in this world, we should be solving the problems of our generation to truly fulfill our mission.

Section 106 is plain and simple; it should be used as a guidepost to the highway that is to be cast up which will lead to the "city set upon a hill." The time seems opportune for Zion to become a reality—an ensign to the nations of the earth—before men in their ignorance and greed for power destroy all that is worth while.

Plateaus

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

*Lord, lift me up and let me stand,
By faith, on heaven's tableland;
A higher plane than I have found,
Lord, plant my feet on higher ground.*

DURING MY JUNIOR YEAR in college I had a rather unusual experience in a teacher-training class in which we conscientiously practiced the skills we later would teach. For a period of about a month I had been passing typing speed tests at the rate of 75 words per minute, seemingly no more or no less regardless of how much effort I exerted. I had reached a typing plateau.

About this time the world champion typist was a Negro, Cortez Peters, and a tour of the larger cities was being sponsored by a typewriter firm, so Mr. Peters came to our classroom to demonstrate his skill and show shortcuts to rapidity in typing. He typed 200 words per minute with only one error, occasioned by someone's touching the typewriter as he typed. He gave his usual talk, but what he said added little to our actual knowledge about the fundamentals of typing.

After this typing champion had left, we settled down to the routine of the classroom and prepared to take another speed test; my own expectation was for the same old rating at the end of fifteen minutes. But this was not the case! When the score was computed, my teacher and I were both pleasantly surprised to find that my speed had jumped ten words per minute, and on subsequent speed tests I crept slowly upward.

Why did this occur? Nothing that Mr. Peters had said added to my ability. The only explanation we could find was that I had unconsciously watched his hand position and changed my own accordingly. Or possibly the fact that I realized such high accomplishments were possible spurred me on to greater effort and, in the end, greater achievement. In later years, after having had teaching experience, I found that such plateaus of learning are frequent and occur in a somewhat regular cycle, varying with the temperament and abilities of the individual concerned. When this occurs the teacher is challenged to find the needed impetus to break the plateau and send the student upward.

THERE IS DEFINITELY in existence a religious plateau—a time when individuals feel an inertia due to discouragements, physical or mental fatigue, actual personal persecution, or any number of other factors. When this time arrives, the man or woman begins to evidence the common symptoms, not attending church so regularly, seeing more faults among church friends, feeling that prayer is useless and that life is hard and monotonous. You know what I mean, for undoubtedly you have experienced the same thing more than once.

If the church member will go back into his own history he will often be able to cure his own religious disease, for he will realize that this situation is only a repetition of experiences of former days. He will recognize that with an added exertion on his own part, a change in emphasis to a new phase of religious life, or making new friends, he will be back up to his former religious level and gain new ground. Luckily, the majority of church members do just this, although they may not be conscious of the fact that this situation is common.

Yearly the church loses many churchgoers because they are not able to overcome their religious plateaus. Teen-agers stop their church school attendance because they're tired of hearing the "same old Bible stories." The old-faithful of the men's class becomes an attendance backslider because he's "sick and tired of the same old discussions." The preaching services dwindle because "Brother So-and-So puts up the same old speakers, and they preach on the same old subjects." The prayer meeting loses attendance because the "testimonies never seem to contain a new thought." You've heard these excuses, and you may have given them yourself.

THERE ARE TWO THINGS which must be realized when this condition exists in the life of an individual or the whole congregation. First of all, the branch must realize that its entire program must continuously vary in approach and interest-getting in order that some phase of it will reach each person. Priesthood members are challenged to keep their ministry on an ever-growing basis in order to present an ever-increasing spiritual foundation for the group and its membership. The officers of the branch should feel the need for change, modification, elimination, and new blood in the organization so that every individual layman feels himself an essential part of the whole. The teachers of the church school, supervisors of departments, and the participants in the weekly programs must bear in mind that the only reason for their existence is to change the lives of those people to whom they minister.

But what of the individual himself who is on this plateau? He feels that he is accomplishing nothing, that somehow the whole church program is adding nothing to his reason for living, that his associates are neglecting or ignoring his existence, and that he might just as well resign, retire, and retract. This is a religious disease, and stern medicine will bring prompt relief if administered with understanding. The identical medicine is not effective in all cases.

WHAT IS IT that gave you your last lift in the church? Maybe you attended reunion this year. That made you realize there is a real spirit of Zion in the church and you may share. Possibly your district or branch held a religious education institute. Here, in the midst of classwork, you realized that there is so much to learn and so much to be done that it is really a privilege to be a member of a group which is working at such a great task.

In all probability a General Church representative has visited your local branch recently. He brought with him the news of accomplishments in similar branches, a report of increased baptismal rate, climbing tithing contributions, and "just imagine, with an extra effort, we can finish the Auditorium." Or a member of your local priesthood came to visit in your home. He talked with you about the problems and the family, and when you knelt in prayer at his departure, you realized that it was good to be a Latter Day Saint.

Perhaps you felt an increased inspiration during a Communion service. Or you went to visit in another group and found yourself taken into the hearts of the Saints in that locality. Or you read a fine new book. I could go on endlessly listing little things which can change an individual's life. The one which may lift you from a plateau might go unnoticed by your neighbor. His inspiration might not be potent enough to carry into your life. The cure for this religious affliction must be personal, based upon the causes of fatigue and the personal outlook of the one concerned.

THE MOST IMPORTANT THING about religious plateaus is that they be recognized. If they are falsely diagnosed as some other disease, the church member may be lost; he may even lose his soul. The person who has been active and spiritually moved, if cut from church associations through his own or others' actions, becomes so much more sour than the casual attendant who drops by the wayside. It would appear that even the Devil is on the outlook for those in the midst of plateaus to wean them away from the path of good to the highway of evil and discontent.

Newly Formed District

HADDONFIELD, NEW JERSEY.—The first annual conference of the newly formed Philadelphia Metropolitan District was held at First Church, Howard and Ontario Streets, in Philadelphia, November 7-8. Apostle D. T. Williams was in charge. Because of bad weather and road conditions, Saints from Allentown Branch were unable to attend.

The following officers were elected: Ralph Bobbitt, district president; Elizabeth Teal, secretary; Evangeline Mays, women's department; Robert Matthews, church school director; Samuel Worrell, bishop's agent; Louise Herman, historian; Rena Matthews, music; Ellis Butterworth, treasurer; A. Haines Troth, publicity; Henry Beers, youth leader.

After a name for the district was chosen, a budget was adopted. The conference approved the following men for ordination: Finis Easter to the office of elder, and A. Haines Troth to the office of priest. These men are from the Haddonfield Branch. Adolphus Edwards III, of Allentown, was approved for the office of deacon. He is attending Graceland College. The meeting was concluded with the election of delegates to the General Conference in April.

Brother John T. Conway brought the message at the Sunday morning prayer service, and Apostle Williams preached at the morning and evening services to conclude the activities.—Reported by FLORENCE DONNELLY

Branch and Mission Growing

McDERMOTT, OHIO.—The members of the branch met September 25 for the annual business meeting, with District President Floyd Rockwell in charge. The following officers were elected: pastor, Harry Byars; branch secretary, Marie Crabtree; treasurer, Mabelle Byars; church school director, Everett Orin; women's leader, Ruth Shope; young people's leader, Margaret Guilkey; music director, Marie Crabtree.

Several Saints attended district conference at Dayton, Ohio.

On November 8, Brother George F. Coburn was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Calvin French and Harry Byars.

Several of the young people attended youth camp at Canter's Cave in Jackson, Ohio, August 16-23.

The infant daughter of Jack and Emma Martin was blessed at the evening worship service on September 20 by Pastor Byars.

Carl Mesle, Director of Youth Activities, met with the Zion's League on Saturday, August 15. Missionary Calvin French held a series of meetings using the Book of Mormon slides. Much interest was shown in these activities. Several nonmembers attended. Music was furnished for the series by the choir. Sister LaVonne French, district music director, was present four nights and contributed much to the music department.

On October 30 twenty-four members of the young adult class met at the home of Sister Ruth Eichenlaub for a Halloween party.

The Zion's League meets on Tuesday of each week for a study and recreation period.

The women's department meets each Wednesday night for a study on the Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants. They are also trying to raise money to put into the building fund.

New members who have recently moved to McDermott are the David Klukas family from Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

The Rarden mission of the McDermont Branch is in the care of Brother M. Copas. Church school and Sunday preaching services are being held each week.

On August 23, seven new members were added to the group by baptism.—Reported by MARIE CRABTREE

Attend Stake Conference

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—At the stake conference held at Central Church in Los Angeles on Sunday, September 13, Elder Harry K. Waylett was again elected pastor of the Pasadena congregation. He named Elders Warren K. McElwain and Lawrence Emerson as his counselors.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: church school director, Elder Ray Bridenbecker; music director, June Cheresch; youth leader, Bruce Bridenbecker; women's leader, Mrs. Ottilla Bridenbecker; book steward, Harvey Smith; secretary, Ruth Derk; treasurer, Joseph Weaver; recorder, Earlita Inslee; librarian, Gertrude Kirkpatrick; historian, Bertha Tave; director of drama, Anna Crum; custodian, Alan Ingamells.

On May 7 a box social was sponsored by the Zion's League to raise funds toward black topping the parking area. The black topping has been done, and is a great improvement.

An early morning priesthood breakfast was held at the home of Brother and Sister G. C. McKee in Los Angeles on May 17, with eighteen present. The breakfast was prepared by Brothers Joseph Roby and McKee.

At the stake conference Brother McKee was called to the office of priest and ordained in Pasadena on October 4, under the hands of Harry K. Waylett and Lewis Scott.

A mother and daughter banquet was served in the annex on the evening of May 15, at which time the cooking and serving was done by the men of the congregation in a very professional manner. Brother Cecil Walton was in charge. At the conclusion of the dinner the "Thursdays" staged a style show of mothers' fashions down through the ages, with June Cheresch as narrator.

At an impressive service at Central Church on June 7, five children from the Pasadena congregation were baptized by Elders Evan Inslee and Lawrence Emerson. They were Sally Hutchcroft, Michael Thompson, Joseph Hughes, Jack Shafer, and Jimmy Hamel. They were confirmed on Children's Day in Pasadena by Elders Harry Waylett, Evan Inslee, and Lawrence Emerson.

On July 5 at East Los Angeles, Sharon Dennis was baptized by Elder Warren K. McElwain and confirmed on July 12 at Pasadena by Elders Inslee and Charles E. Skinner. On August 30, Cheryl Walker and Betty Briggs were baptized by Brother Reese Walker at East Los Angeles, and confirmed on September 6 by Elders Waylett and Skinner.

The second annual vacation church school was held from June 22 to July 3, with thirty children and eleven staff members present, two of the staff being nonmembers. June Cheresch was in charge. Activities were culminated in an achievement night, when the children displayed what they had learned and done.

The eighth birthday of the Pasadena Branch was celebrated on the evening of June 26, with a dinner. Mrs. Anna Crum was in charge.

A father and son breakfast was held in the park at Alhambra on the morning of Father's Day, June 21, with thirty fathers and sons present. Brother Joseph Roby was in charge, with Sister Roby baking biscuits for all.

A number of men of the congregation attended the Aaronic priesthood retreat at Idyllwild on the week end of July 18-19, at which time work on the grounds was accomplished as well as spiritual work.

Ottilla Bridenbecker, Vie Frcka, and Connie Ingamells did the cooking for those who spent Labor Day week end at the reunion grounds.

A breakfast for the men of the congregation was held in the annex on the morning of November 9, with twenty-five present.

Two rummage sales were sponsored by the "Thursdays," which netted $160 for the building fund.

The dinner and bazaar held by the women's department on the afternoon and evening of November 20 was one of the most successful ever held, adding over $350 to the treasury.

The third annual early morning prayer service and breakfast took place at the church on Thanksgiving morning, at which there was a good attendance and a good spirit prevailing.—Reported by EDNAH M. STRONG

Southern Oregon District Organized

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Apostle E. J. Gleazer and the Oregon District officers met in Eugene, Oregon, with the Saints of southern Oregon to organize a new district to be known as the Southern Oregon District.

This meeting was held in the church in Eugene at Third and Monroe Streets on Saturday, October 10. Bishop M. E. Lasater taught a class at eight in the evening, followed by a song fest led by Pastor Thomas Coffman of Myrtle Point. Refreshments were served by the women's department of Eugene.

The business meeting for the organization of the district and election of officers was called for ten the next morning, with Apostle Gleazer and Elder J. L. Verhei, president of the Oregon District, in charge. The invocation was by Bishop Lasater. Roy D. Keiser, Oregon District secretary, was appointed to serve as secretary pro tem.

To be included in Southern Oregon District are the branches of Eugene, Roseburg, Myrtle Point, and Bend, and the missions of Klamath Falls, Medford, Grants Pass, Bandon, and Cottage Grove, and all Saints living throughout that area in Oregon. Also to be ministered to by Southern Oregon District are the missions of Lakeview and Burns, Oregon, and Crescent City, Eureka, and Alturas, California.

Officers elected for the Southern Oregon District were district president, Don Landon; secretary, Joseph Ruchaber; treasurer, Thomas Coffman; bishop, Monte E. Lasater; auditor, James Wood; church school director, Milton Petrie; women's leader, Rena Whittington; young people's leader, Noel King, and church historian, Gueld Barnhart.

Counselors to the district president will be submitted for approval at the spring conference. Recommended to the conference for ordination were H. R. Watts of Madras, Oregon, to the office of elder; Earl Petrie of Grants Pass, Oregon, to the office of elder; Richard Petrie of Bend, Oregon, to the office of elder; Harry F. Ruchaber of Roseburg, Oregon, to the office of elder; Kenneth Moye of Bend, Oregon, to the office of priest; Duane Coop of Eugene, Oregon, to the office of priest; Laverne Moye of Bend, Oregon, to the office of deacon; Cecil Barnhart of Eugene, Oregon, to the office of deacon; William C. Buckbee of Eugene, Oregon, to the office of deacon.

All men were approved by the conference.

Apostle Gleazer preached at the eleven o'clock hour, with about 311 members in attendance from the newly organized district, and the newly elected district president, Elder Don Landon, in charge.

Sister Reata Kinart, women's leader for the Oregon District, was in charge of the noon lunch served in the basement of the church.

Missionary James Kemp preached the closing sermon.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

Pre-Thanksgiving Festivities

LAMONI, IOWA.—Brother Jerry Runkle presided at the annual Oland Branch business meeting in September, at which time Eugene Tabor was chosen as pastor of the Oland Branch.

On Sunday, October 25, Deborah Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Lee Heaviland, was blessed by Elders Tabor and Roy Kopp.

After the service on Sunday morning, November 22, the members of the branch and their guests enjoyed a pre-Thanksgiving basket dinner in the church. In the afternoon M. G. Brooks showed slides of their trip through New Mexico, after which the priesthood members attended a meeting of instruction for the coming year's work, at Lamoni.

The women's department is studying the book The Life and Ministry of Jesus, by F. Henry Edwards. Meetings include worship, study, and recreation.—Reported by VERA E. BLAIR.

District Conference Held

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.—The Arkansas-Louisiana District conference was held November 22 with Apostle Percy E. Farrow in charge.

New district officers elected are as follows: district president, James E. Renfro; counselors, R. L. Morrison and Harry Larsh; secretary, R. L. Morrison; treasurer, Charles Freeman; auditors, Dale Edwards and Frank Owens; women's leader, Mrs. Frank Owens; young people's leader, Gillen Emde; music director, Lela Owens; religious education director, C. C. Fuller; nonresident pastor, T. B. Sharp; recorder, William Carr; reporter, Lela Owens; historian, Mrs. Norma Edwards; bishop's agent, Dale Edwards.

Committee members elected were as follows: priesthood education committee, C. C. Fuller, E. C. Nuckles, and Paul Booth; reunion committee, R. L. Morrison and Delmar Cook; finance committee, James E. Renfro, Charles Freeman, and Marion Huntsman.

The over-all theme for the conference was "The Field is White and Ready to Harvest." Two discussion classes were led by Apostle Farrow on Saturday afternoon.

The business meeting began Saturday evening, with reports from district officers. Business conducted included election of officers, presentation and approval of the district budget, election of delegates to General Conference, acceptance of the Kentucky-Tennessee District's invitation to hold a joint reunion at Memphis (subject to change by district and General Church officials) and approval of the following calls to the priesthood: Carrol Donathan to the office of elder, Charles Freeman to the office of priest, William Carr to the office of priest, Edward Wilson to the office of teacher, and James Nicks to the office of deacon.

Discussion groups for the men, women, and young people were held Sunday morning. The theme for the discussion was "How We Can Contribute."

Apostle Farrow's sermon, "Reap While the Day Lasts," and a dedication service concluded the conference.—Reported by LELA OWENS

Officers Held Over for New Year

SALEM, OREGON.—A young mother was baptized on Sunday, November 1, and her infant daughter was blessed the same day. Elder George W. Speed officiated at the baptism, and Elders Speed and William C. Swain blessed the baby. The confirmation took place November 8, under the hands of Elders Swain and Willard L. Hartnell.

Reginald G. Clark was ordained to the office of elder and Dean Coburn to the office of deacon at the district conference. Brother Clark is taking the pastorship of the Albany-Corvallis mission over which he has had charge for some time. Dean Coburn will serve at Salem.

Recently the women's department was able to assist a family that had lost all its possessions by fire. Although not members, this family by means of publicity and much support by members of the church and other citizens, received clothing, furniture, food, and money enough to resume housekeeping.

The women's department has also planned a parcel auction for after the holidays, with parcels coming by mail from all over the United States and Canada. The money from the auction will be used for the church building fund.

Salem Branch had its annual business meeting recently. Almost all officers were retained from the previous term. They were George W. Speed, pastor; William C. Swain and Willard L. Hartnell, counselors; William N. Swain, church school director; Irene Speed, women's leader; Mary Lou Swain, music director; Olive Penrod, social chairman; Willard Hartnell, Edith Bechtol, and Irene Speed, building committee members; Clara Coburn, Zion's League supervisor; Caleb Clark, branch solicitor and treasurer; Jessie Penrod, librarian; Nellie Ann Currier, book steward; Benjamin O. Longsdorf, historian; and William C. Swain, branch clerk and publicity agent.

The young women have organized into a group called the Maneca Circle, with Clara Coburn as their president. They sponsor the nursery and are doing missionary work.

Elder Don Landon has been actively engaged in missionary work in and around Salem.—Reported by WILLIAM C. SWAIN

District Conference

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—"All Are Called" was the theme of the Saturday morning prayer service of the Seattle District conference held October 24. Apostle E. J. Gleazer gave the opening remarks.

Classes followed throughout the day. Elder Aleah Koury taught the eleven o'clock class. Bishop Monte Lasater spoke on financial obligations during the first class period on Saturday afternoon. While Brother Lasater continued his class for the women, the men, particularly the priesthood members, met with Elder Howard Sheehy. Following the afternoon classes, Brother Ray Sowers showed slides taken at Camp Kintah in 1953.

On Saturday evening, Apostle Gleazer spoke on the third commandment, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." His sermon referred to taking the name of Jesus Christ upon us at baptism.

The Sunday services of the conference were held at the Scottish Rite Temple, 1115 Broadway. Brother Gleazer was the morning speaker.

At the afternoon business session, the following men were recommended for ordination: from Yakima, Gary Brown, priest, and Darrell Day, priest; from Tacoma, Bob Logan, deacon; from Everett, Harold Johnson, elder, Roy Knight, priest, Gayle Scafe, priest, Kenneth Scafe, deacon, and Richard Gilberts, deacon; from Seattle First, Byron Insee, elder, Loren McDole, elder, and Roy Glomstad, elder; from Seattle Second, Franz Winegar, elder, Kenneth Nelson, elder, and Harvey Coleman, priest.

ple's director; Grace Nichols, music; Ruth Selzer, women's leader. The following were sustained: Monte Lasater, bishop; Adolph Lundeen, evangelist, and Florence Merriman, historian. Paul Anderson is to be missionary supervisor to Wenatchee-Yakima territory.—Reported by MILDRED SHEEHY

Interesting Book Review

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—A district meeting of the women's department was held at the church in Fort Madison on Thursday, November 19, under the supervision of District Leader B. A. Galbraith. A fellowship service was held at ten o'clock, with Elder Fred Banta in charge. Sister Alice Burgess, of Independence, Missouri, gave an inspirational talk on prayer.

A potluck dinner was served at noon. In the afternoon, Sister Burgess reviewed the book Joseph Smith III. This was of particular interest to the Nauvoo delegation, since much of Joseph Smith's life was spent at Nauvoo. Many interesting details of the old city were related, as well as stories of his father and mother. In his manhood, Joseph III had served Nauvoo as alderman, school director, and justice of the peace. It gave everyone a greater appreciation for the leaders of our church.—Reported by FLORENCE OURTH

Church Building Improved

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The branch business meeting was held September 23. Improvements to the church include hardwood floors for the chapel, new carpeting for the chapel aisles and the rostrum as well as the front classroom, new wiring in the church building, a new lighted sign for the church lawn, new lawn between the porch of the church and the parsonage, further work on the refinishing of the church pews, and wrought-iron handrails installed beside the church porch steps.

The following officers were elected: Russell F. Ralston, branch president; Silas Egan, Jr., religious education leader; Ardis Everett, women's leader; Lura Louise Jones, children's supervisor; Alice Fredenberg, secretary and recorder; Robert Fredenberg, Zion's League sponsor; Florence Ralston, music supervisor; Betty Wardle, treasurer; Arlis Joy, custodian. James Wardle will continue as branch solicitor. Counselors to the branch president are Gustav Gerwien, Silas Egan, and James Wardle. Lura Louise Jones will continue as branch historian.

Ann Land and Audrey Hamilton were re-elected to serve as auditors. Named on the improvement committee were Robert Fredenberg, chairman, Ardis Everett, and James Wardle. The finance committee consists of Henry Eggen, chairman, Ann Land, and Silas Egan, Jr.—Reported by LURA LOUISE JONES

Pastor's Grandchildren Blessed

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA.—At a meeting of the mission at the home of Pastor Robert Hampton on November 18, the two grandchildren of Brother Hampton were blessed. Louanne Denise Hampton was blessed by Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Elder Robert Hampton. She is the daughter of Paul and Mary Hampton. Stanley Van Hampton was blessed by Seventy Russell F. Ralston and Elder Robert Hampton. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Eugene Hampton.

Brother Hanson spoke on his travels to Palestine, the Holy Land, and Brother Ralston was the speaker on November 18.—Reported by GENEVIEVE DEXTER

DEATHS

DOWNEY.—Abigail Rose, daughter of Gilbert and Cynthia Watson, was born April 28, 1869, in Binghamton, Wisconsin, and died December 1, 1953, in Independence, Missouri. She moved to Nebraska at the age of seventeen where she taught school for four years. She was married on March 6, 1890, to John Henry Logeman, who died June 12, 1933. With her husband and four children she moved to Independence, in 1908, where she was superintendent of the junior department at Stone Church for four years. In 1935 she was married to Charles Downey; they made their home in Michigan for thirteen years, then returned to Independence because of her poor health. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1892.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Cynthia DeLong of Lamoni, Iowa; and three sons: Arden of Riverside, California; Ammon and Jerard of Independence. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith and Evangelist Arthur E. Stoff at the Roland Speaks Chapel. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HOWE.—Erma Acker, was born January 3, 1882, in Reed City, Michigan, and died November 11, 1953, at her home in Horton, Michigan. She was married on June 24, 1903, to Fred N. Howe, who preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April 5, 1896.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Winnifred Causie of Litchfield, Michigan; Mrs. Ione Ebert of Pigeon, Michigan; and Phyllis Bernice of Horton; a son, William A. of Horton; a sister, Mrs. Joseph Johnson of Rapid River, Michigan; a brother, William V. Acker of Chatham, Michigan; and six grandchildren. A daughter, Mary Irena, died on June 20, 1952. Funeral services were held at Hanover, Michigan, Elder E. J. Grigg officiating. Interment was in Horton cemetery.

HAYTON.—Thomas H., Sr., son of Thomas S. and Mary Hayton, was born July 16, 1890, at Lehigh, Missouri, and died November 3, 1953, at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. He spent most of his early life in or near Joplin, Missouri, where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and in 1915 was married to Harriet Renick, who survives him. In 1927 they moved to Oklahoma where he managed a dairy farm at Ardmore; three years later he became manager of the Gaylord Guernsey Farm in Oklahoma City and continued to work in that position until his death.

Besides his wife he leaves a son, Thomas H., Jr., of Oklahoma City; five sisters: Mrs. Pearl Elrick of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Marie Fuller of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Frances Dunham, Mrs. Ethel Amick, and Mrs. Donna Winters of Roscoe, Missouri; three brothers: Victor of Parma, Idaho; Randolph of Independence, Missouri; and George of Roscoe; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder G. Stewart Wight at the Sherman Chapel in Oklahoma City. Interment was in Memorial Park Cemetery.

PFANMILLER.—Alvin Michael, son of William and Mabel Pfanmiller, was born June 21, 1898, at Rosedale, Kansas, and died November 8, 1953, in Lincoln, Nebraska, after several months of illness. On September 26, 1925, he was married to Celia Ruth Smith and moved to Lincoln where for twenty-eight years he was employed by the Van Sickle Glass and Paint Company. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 24, 1930, and on January 4, 1931, was ordained a deacon. He served faithfully in this capacity until his death. During World War I he saw service on six fronts and received the French Croix de Guerre, the Silver Star, and the Divisional Four Regaire. He was a member of the American Legion and the Second Division Association.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Alvin W. of El Segundo, California; two sisters: Mabel Bender of Kansas City, Kansas, and Ruth Williams of Baldwin Park, California; and three grandchildren.

COATNEY.—Zeralda Ann, daughter of P. F. and Missouri L. Lunday, was born August 13, 1870, near Fortescue, Missouri, and died November 26, 1953, at her son's home in Fortescue. On December 24, 1885, she was married to William Coatney who died on August 18, 1942. Six of their eight children also preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1924.

She is survived by one son, Harry Coatney of Fortescue; a daughter, Mrs. Grace Brown of Bigelow, Missouri; a brother, George Lunday; four grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. The funeral service was conducted by Evangelist O. Salisbury at Mound City, Missouri.

...And Finally

PEACE WITHIN

The bright poinsettias are blooming,
It is Christmas time again,
And everywhere these words are heard,
"Peace, good will toward men."
There is no peace upon the earth
Except the peace within
That comes from Christ to guide us each
And keep us free from sin.

Marie Sheppard

THE MODERN PENALTY

John Milton may have regained paradise, but John Public in the latter days has regained his hell. The day after Yalta was announced, an inventor of Russian birth rode down in the elevator with me. "Well, Doctor," he said, "Word War III began yesterday." Whether historically he is right or not, certainly in modern warfare, in the threat of obliteration in warfare to come, in the racial violence on the domestic scene, modern man has found a modern equivalent of hell.

MOONLIGHT

Last summer when the sun was in the north, the moon hovered low over Dixie. Now the sun has gone south for the winter (as who would not if he could), and the moon shines brightly on the Canadian border. Ask an expert to tell you why, and he will give you plenty of reasons, all but one—the ultimate reason. That he will not know.

Ancient people conjectured mystic and spiritual influences and significances in the moon, and they, too, had reasons, but not the ultimate ones. Modern people see the moon simply as a thing of beauty, a factor in tides and a stimulant to the imaginations of lovers. Yet it is safe to say that there are important facts about the moon that are still unknown to modern scientists.

It would be a rash and stupid man who would pretend to know all there is to be known about anything. God has reserved certain knowledge of his creation that he has not yet revealed to anyone.

DO UNTO OTHERS . . .

Some people think charity is giving to others the advice they cannot use themselves.

—"The District Leader"

DEFT DEFINITION

The church is a fellowship of friends. It is a movement with a sense of mission.

Roy Cheville

TELEWISDOM

Prayer is a telephone which hangs on the wall of our souls. . . . Prayer without sincere desire of the soul is comparable to speaking into a telephone when the lines are down. There is no chance that such prayers can reach central.
