WHAT THE PROPHET declares is true of everyone. It is very clearly illustrated in the person and ministry of Jesus Christ. What led Jesus at the age of twelve when at the Passover in Jerusalem to seek out the temple was his desire to be about his Father's business. In his unbroken cherishing of such an outlook on life he "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." In his ministry in the synagogue in Nazareth, his bearing, choice of Scripture, and manner of presenting his thoughts were such that "the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him, . . . and all bear him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth."

A leading council of ministers in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the one composed of men holding the office of Seventy. Their duties, privileges, and responsibilities set forth by Jesus, as recorded in Luke 10: 1-12, are very similar to the instructions and commandments given by the Lord to his apostles relating to their ministry recorded in the tenth chapter of Matthew's writings.

A great struggle is on in the world for the possession of minds and souls. In the magnifying of their calling, the Seventies are presenting to men the one thing they most need—the power to become sons of God through Jesus Christ. They are a blessing to the world in affirming that true religion should not be replaced by a universal materialism. One of the reasons for the restoration of God's church through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith and others was the essential need in the world of the ministerial office of the Seventy.

Who knows when God first began preparing for the work of those now officiating in the office of Seventy? Perhaps as nearly as can be answered, it was when they began responding to the movements of God's Spirit and power in their lives. From their earliest recollection, numerous and diverse have been their experiences, some entailing the deepest sorrow and others the greatest joy. Of the Master it is written, "We have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." So many of the Seventies have drunk deeply from the cup of sorrow, but they also have experienced unspeakable heavenly joys. This means that in the working of God's providence they are equipped to hear the world's throbbing heart. Only those so in touch with the pulse of the world are truly fitted to proclaim the "glad tidings of great joy" to a lost world. The Seventies are honored in having a part in preparing a worth-while welcome to be extended to Christ when he comes in the clouds of heaven as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. They are contributing by setting in motion the forces leading to the day when "the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." They are enthroning in the hearts of men the joy of eternal salvation. They are helping souls wandering in darkness to find Christ's church. Of sinners they are making Saints.

THUS IT IS SEEN that the Seventies compose one of the leading councils of God's church. They were in the New Testament church, and are in the church of today.

The first Seventies of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints were selected and ordained at the April, 1853, Conference held in Zarahemla, Wisconsin, although there were Seventies in the church prior to the death of the prophet Joseph Smith, which occurred in 1844. Following his death, when the forces of evil were seeking the destruction of the church and the members of the Reorganized Church were few, during the heat of the day the Seventies in the conflict occupied in the front trenches giving unstintingly, faithfully, and sacrificially of their services to the church and the world. Since that time the labors of the Seventies have continuously and definitely contributed in placing the church of Jesus Christ in its present encouraging position of honor and strength. Truly the Seventies occupy a prominent place in the ministerial ranks of the church.

A Correction

I am distressed to find an error in typing or copying in the editorial about the David Whitmer heirlooms in the Herald of March 16, 1953, to which I may have been at least a party in error. The name of the donor was unfortunately misspelled. Mrs. Helen Blankmyer was properly named in advance notes about the matter; but in the final article the name was given as Blankenship.

I trust this explanation with my humble apology will heal any injury resulting from the mistake.

"WINNING OUR WORLD FOR CHRIST"

Stake and district presidents, pastors, missionary co-ordinators, other Melchisedec priesthood members, and others directly concerned with pastoral or missionary work:

You may still register and attend the Institute in Evangelism in Independence, April 12 to 17. If unable to register in advance, do it Sunday morning between 9:00 and 10:45 a.m. at the Auditorium.

Help make your congregation an effective missionary center by participating in the Institute.

ATTEND OPENING SERVICES

The preaching services on the opening day of the Institute in Evangelism will be open to all members and friends of the church who find it possible to attend. The Center Stake congregations are dismissing the eleven o'clock services so that all might worship together at the Auditorium. It is anticipated that other members, particularly within driving range of Independence, will want to attend.

F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency will deliver the sermon at eleven o'clock, with Apostle Paul M. Hanson speaking at 2:00 p.m. Both services will be held at the Auditorium.

Evening preaching services will be conducted at Central Church in Kansas City and the following churches in Independence: Stone Church (upper and lower auditoriums), West College, Englewood, Walnut Park, and Enoch Hill.

Granville Trowbridge Dies

The church is again reminded of the cost of its growth and progress in the passing of a man who served in both local and General Church capacities. As a young man he was active in the St. Louis Zion's Religio and then served as president of the General Church Religio. In 1921 he was called to Independence to be business manager of the Herald Publishing House and supervised moving of the publishing plant from Lamoni and combining it with the Ensign plant. He also supervised the rehabilitation of the old Swope Mansion for use as a community center. When the Institute was established there, he taught business courses in the night school.

In 1924 he returned to St. Louis to the railroad job he had left, co-operating in a church economy move. Three years later he came back to Independence to act as secretary to President F. M. Smith over a two-year period. In 1929 he returned to railroading, but was located in Nashville, Arkansas. For the next thirteen years he labored hard to build up the work of the church in that area, serving as district president and bishop's agent. Until his health failed in 1944 he poured himself out in loving ministry to the people and to their Christ. He has gone to a well-earned rest.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

A copy of the February 26 Fremont Eagle, Fremont, Indiana, has been sent to the First Presidency. It contains a front page article, "Latter Day Saints Are Not Mormons," from which the following is excerpted:

The members of a little white church about four miles out of town would like their fellow citizens to know that, while they are of the Latter Day Saint faith, they are not Mormons. . . . They strenuously deny the claims of Salt Lake City Mormons that Joseph Smith, the founder of Latter Day Saintism, ever taught or practiced polygamy. . . . The facts are, so says Elder Arthur Middleton, pastor of this little church just out of town, that polygamy was first publicly announced as a doctrine of the church by Brigham Young. . . . Elder Middleton claims that no Protestant church was ever more active in combating the evil doctrine than the Reorganized Church with headquarters in Independence. . . . This group asserts also that the Book of Mormon is stronger in its language condemning polygamy than the Bible.

An article and picture will appear in the April 27 issue of the Herald regarding the new Waller Memorial chapel in Hawaii. However, the following is a letter received from Sister Ruth W. Nelson, daughter of Gilbert J. Waller, which expresses her appreciation for the occasion:

My sister, Christiana Waller, niece Lorna Mills, and I arrived on Saturday morning, February 14, to be present at the formal opening and consecration service of the Memorial Chapel built to the glory of God and in memory of father's work for Christ.

We shall never forget the wonderful welcome we received on our arrival Saturday in Honolulu. It was heart-warming—a real Hawaiian Aloha.

The luau on Saturday evening was most enjoyable; about four hundred people were present, among whom were the Governor of Hawaii and the wife of the mayor of Honolulu, who represented her husband who was ill in the hospital.

The pageant of Hawaiian history was well presented; those taking part represented some of the beautiful and cultured young women of our church in these islands.

The formal opening services yesterday were inspiring and beautiful in every way; we all felt proud and thankful to be present at such a wonderful occasion and were deeply touched by the expression of appreciation and acknowledgment of the work accomplished by father as given in the splendid sermon by Apostle Gleazer and the loving expressions of the membership.

The Chapel is beautiful with its simplicity of line and atmosphere of Hawaii—all so appropriate for worship in this beautiful land.

Brother Crownover and all his fellow workers can well be proud of their accomplishment and the membership grateful and inspired to have such a beautiful church home to attend and to which they can bring their friends.

We wanted to write and express to you our deep appreciation for the beautiful memorial to our father's memory and his loving devotion to the Master's work.

In return he had the love of these people of the isles of the Pacific, and greater reward no one could have. "For love is the fulfilling of the law."

Christie and Lorna join me in Aloha to you.

Sincerely,
RUTH W. NELSON

History of the Seventies

THE HISTORICAL BACKGROUND of the Seventies extends into the remote ages of the Old Testament, even to the time when the Lord said to Moses:

Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee.

And I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.—Numbers 11: 16, 17, Inspired Version.

The Sanhedrin, composed of seventy men of priestly rank among the Jews, evidently is derived from the seventy authorized in the Mosaic law. Though this relationship is not definite there is evidence to support it.

The first record of the existence of the office of seventy in New Testament times is the declaration in Luke 10: 1 that the "Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two by two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come." Later these seventy returned with joy saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." Though this first account of the Quorum of Seventy is brief, it is rich in its implications of the power resident within the office of Seventy.

Seventies in the Restored Church

In the early church of the Restoration the first Quorum of Seventy was organized on February 28, 1835. At a church council forty-five men were called and ordained within a few days of this date. These called to the Seventy were to be "minute men" at the front ranks of the army of missionaries sent forth by God through the church to work under the direction of the Twelve. It is well to remember that the first members of the Council of Twelve of the Restoration were chosen February 14, 1835, fourteen years prior to the selection of the first Seventies. A unique relationship exists between the Quorum of Seventy and the Council of Twelve. The names of the first men of the Quorum of Seventy in the Restoration are as follows:

Hiram Winters, Elias Hutchins, Henry Shibley, Roger Orton, J. B. Smith, Harvey Stanley, Jedediah M. Grant, Lyman Sherman, Joseph Hancock, Lyman Smith, Peter Buchanan, David Elliot, Almon W. Babbitt, Levi Gifford, and Joseph B. Nobles.

Lorenzo Booth, Zera S. Cole, Leonard Rich, Harrison Burgess, Alden Burdick, William F. Cahoon, Harper Riggs, Bradford Elliot, Burr Riggs, Lewis Robbins, Darwin Richardson, Joseph Young, Alexander Badlam, Zebedee Coltrin, Solomon Angel.

John D. Parker, Daniel Stearns, Hiram Stratton, Sylvester Smith, William Pratt, Ezra Thayre, Levi W. Hancock, Solomon Warner, Israel Barlow, Willard Snow, Hazen Aldrich, Charles Kelley, Jenkins Salisbury, George A. Smith, and Nathan B. Baldwin (see Church History Volume 1, page 549).

The exact date of the calling and ordination of the first Presidents of Seventies is not clear. It is evident that Joseph Young and Sylvester Smith were ordained Presidents of the Seventies on March 1, 1835 (Millennial Star, Volume 15, page 230). The next reference to the Presidents of the Seventies is dated May 2, 1835.

A grand Council was held in Kirtland, composed of the following officers of the Church, viz: Presidents Joseph Smith, Jr., David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, Joseph Smith, Sr., and Hyrum Smith, with the Council of the Twelve Apostles, Bishop Partridge and Council, Bishop Whitney and Council, and some of the Seventy, with their Presidents, viz., Sylvester Smith, Leonard Rich, Lyman Sherman, Hazen Aldrich, Joseph Young and Levi Hancock, and many elders from different parts; President Joseph Smith, Jr., presiding.—Millennial Star, Volume 15, page 261.

During January, 1836, provision was made for the organization and ordination of the Second Quorum of Seventy. On February 3, 1836, "President Alva Beeman [President of the Elders Quorum] handed in seventy [names] of his Quorum, designed for another Seventy if God will" (Church History, Volume 2, page 22). There is no evidence that there were more than two Quorums of Seventies at the death of Joseph Smith.

At the General Conference held October, 1844 (four months after the Prophet's death), a resolution was passed electing Joseph Young as First President over all the Quorums of the Seventies. At this same conference a motion prevailed "that all in the Elders Quorum under the age of thirty-five should be ordained into the Seventies, if they are in good standing and will accept it." All priests, teachers, deacons, and members who were recommended for ordination were asked to withdraw from the assembly and receive ordination into the Seventies. At the close of this unusual conference and procedure, eleven Quorums of Seventies were filled and forty elders had been named for the Twelfth Quorum of Seventy. It is not clear upon what basis of the ecclesiastical law of the church such a sudden and apparently wild expansion of the Quorums of Seventy could be justified.

However, we must keep in mind that the apostasy led by Brigham Young was in motion. By January, 1846, there were at least thirty Quorums.

The Reorganization and the Quorums of Seventy

On April 6, 1853, at a conference in Zarahemla, Wisconsin, the first Seventies of the Reorganization were called and ordained. They were as follows:

We have no detailed account of how they were chosen or by whom they were ordained.

Various men were added to this group of Seventies until the General Conference at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860. At this Conference the following men were chosen as Presidents of Seventies:

James Blakeslee, Crowell G. Lanphear, Archibald M. Wilsey, John A. McIntosh, Edmund C. Briggs, William D. Morton, and George Ratick.

Several other men were ordained to the office of Seventy at this Conference. Thus the First Quorum of Seventy in the Reorganization was organized.

Second and Third Quorums of Seventies in the Reorganization

The Second Quorum of Seventy was organized on April 14, 1892, at Independence, Missouri. Columbus Scott was elected President of the Quorum, and Thomas W. Williams, Secretary.

A Third Quorum of Seventy was organized April 15, 1905, with Hyrum O. Smith as President at a General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa.

As the church developed its pastoral ministry during the 1920's with the curtailment of men in the missionary field because of the economic recession of the early twenties and the economic and business depression of the thirties, the personnel of the active Seventies dwindled until two quorums were depleted. The Third Quorum was disbanded at a General Conference on April 14, 1926, the membership being absorbed by the other two Quorums. The Second Quorum was merged with the First Quorum at the General Conference of April 11, 1942. Today we have only one Quorum of Seventy. However, the church has more High Priests under General Conference appointment to compensate for the reduction of Seventies.

JOHN BLACKMORE

The Privilege of Being a Seventy

Z. Z. Renfroe

FAITH IN THE CHURCH of Jesus Christ is not founded upon human testimony, but that which is revealed by the power of God. However, the testimonies of my parents, under the conviction of this power, made an indelible impression upon my life. I was reared in a very devout home. My father, Elder B. F. Renfroe, was a member of the first Quorum of Seventy and served the church for a number of years as a missionary. My mother, a most humble and sacrificial woman, worked unceasingly to keep my father in the mission field. Each homecoming of my father was awaited with great anticipation by our family, for he always related his missionary experiences which gave us spiritual insight as to the truthfulness of the gospel.

As an infant I was blessed by Elder Heman C. Smith who revealed, under the inspiration of the Spirit, that I would occupy in the same office as my father, a Seventy. This was fulfilled at the Centennial Conference of 1930. I was called and ordained to the Council of Presidents of Seventy in 1938, and to the office of Senior President of the Council of the Presidents of Seventy in 1952.

In my twenty-three years of service in the Quorum of Seventy I have enjoyed many rich experiences; these have given me an infallible testimony of my call as a special witness for Christ. One such testimony occurred several years ago while I was ministering in Oklahoma. As I was preparing to leave Tulsa for my home in Davidson, Oklahoma, Elder Hubert Case asked me to go by Seiling to administer to a member there. I agreed to do this. On leaving Tulsa I came to a division of the highways; one went west, the other south. Either would take me to my home, but the western route went by Seiling. Under some compulsion other than my own I turned south; after traveling a few miles I stopped my car and reasoned to myself why I had taken this highway instead of the western one as I had intended. An impulse so compelling was upon me that I continued on the southern route. As I entered Chickasha I recalled that a family of Saints lived there somewhere on Oregon Street. When I arrived at that street I turned right and drove for several blocks without knowing my destination. I parked and decided to inquire where this family lived. For some strange reason, I walked across the street and knocked on a door; when the door was opened, I was astonished to find that it was the home of the family I was seeking. Upon opening the door, Sister Norris recognized me. Tearfully she said, "Brother Renfroe, we have been praying today for an elder to come to us as my husband is seriously ill and suffering so much." She escorted me to his bedside, and I administered to Brother Norris. Following the administration he received immediate relief from the intense pain and bore a marvelous testimony as to the power of the guidance from God in his ministry. Under the inspiration of the Spirit he admonished me to continue my work with the guidance of the same Spirit which had directed me to him that day, and if faithful to my calling as a special witness for Christ I would be an instrument in the hands of the Lord in bring many souls to a knowledge of the gospel of Christ. I rejoiced as I left their home that God had worked through me to bring such a blessing to this family.

The admonition given me that day by Brother Norris has been fulfilled, as I have had the privilege of bringing many fine people into the church and kingdom of God. It has been a special privilege for me to be able to serve the church as a member of the Seventy, and to be associated with such a fine group of men who are called and ordained to be special witnesses for Jesus Christ. During this centennial year of the Reorganization of the Seventy, let us pray more Seventies may be sent into the field.

My Testimony of the Restoration

Russell F. Ralston

MY TESTIMONY of Jesus Christ and his work in this latter day as found in his church restored in 1830 by the power of God is a testimony born of the Spirit of God. It has been upheld by the most intelligent investigation that I have been able to make and sustained by an ever-increasing faith in the power, purpose, and very nature of the only true God and Jesus Christ his Son.

I am fortunate in that I was born into a Christian home. The sincere conviction of my parents that God is a God of supreme love, mercy, justice, and intelligence soon became a part of my growing concept of life. However, through years of school and study I was challenged by the fact that many good people rejected as preposterous and unbelievable some of the most fundamental of the concepts given me in my church and home. Added to this came the problem of atheism and some of the scientific theories that tended to lead me in that direction. The time came when childlike faith and the teachings and testimony of my parents were not enough; I had to have a testimony and knowledge of my own. Thus, I had to make as intelligent an investigation as possible of the whole matter, for I was convinced that anything true would stand under the closest and most intelligent scrutiny men could give it.

In my study I soon became convinced that the findings of true science strengthened the position of true belief in God and his creation of the world. The more I found about life and the physical world the stronger became my conviction that nothing, from the smallest amoeba to the infinite expanse of the universe itself, could have become a reality simply by chance. The more I studied the more I realized that life, the universe and all, could only be the result of a well-planned effort by a supreme being so intelligent and powerful as to be able to set each thing in its own place and provide by law the possibility of its achieving the purpose of its creation.

In my first position as a teacher in the public schools, I found no church of my faith in the town where I was, although there was one in a neighboring community. I attended my church on Sunday mornings and returned Sunday evenings to help in one of the Protestant churches in the town where I was employed. I worked happily this way for seven years. I was accepted into the ministerial fellowship and met with the ministers of other groups frequently. They were good men, and for the most part their lives commanded my admiration and respect. However, it was here that my faith in the Restoration was put to the test many times. I studied as much as I could and compared as nearly as possible their beliefs with the ones I held dear. Never did I find the things I had been taught to be wanting for scriptural evidence. I found many times that their teachings actually interpreted God to be less than a God of love, mercy, and justice. Each time I observed this I found that the doctrine of Christ coming through the Restoration answered the need and revealed God as the loving Heavenly Father that he is.

However, God knew that I needed an experience, and I am convinced that he provided one. In one of the ministerial meetings I was kindly challenged to defend the salient beliefs of the Restoration which make them distinct from all others. My heart sank, for I felt unqualified to meet this; yet there was nothing else to do. As I began I am sure the Spirit of God rested upon me and in the period that followed I related things and explained Scripture that I myself never before clearly understood. My remarks were kindly received, even though I questioned the authority of these very men. I believe that today I can count those men among my very good friends. Never again was I challenged by them as to my beliefs. My testimony was greatly increased, for in my need God had blessed me. To my small intellect and meager knowledge he had added the intelligence of his Holy Spirit; all things I had been taught of him were brought to my remembrance, and things I did not know were made part of my knowledge.

LATER YEARS brought many more pleasant experiences with other groups. However, in my worship with them I found something lacking; I often felt empty and half fed. Only as I worshiped with the Saints of God in these latter days did I feel the fullness for which I hungered.

In my work in Utah, I have been surrounded by the magnitude of the temporal power of the Mormon church, its wealth, and its numbers of people. There has come the challenge of a theology which places law above God, making him nothing more than a man who has progressed beyond other men; and who by power of the laws he understands and continues to discover controls the destiny of the universe. I could not reject this religion, though it was completely different from any Christian religion I had contacted, without first giving it the same scrutiny and study I had given my own and others.

In my study I found a man-made logic that seemed almost rational and reasonable. I found a maneuvering of the Scriptures, and a speculation beyond that which was actually taught; this, if followed without the constant measure of the gospel of Christ, would lead one to the Mormon point of view. Time and time again in my study, the Spirit of God rested upon me and opened to my mind the Scriptures which have borne witness of the true gospel of Christ. Many times Mormon elders brought out points I had never considered. However, my testimony has grown stronger each time, for always God has blessed me with his Spirit to the extent that when I have prayed or studied he has directed me to the answer which would draw me closer to him.

I THANK GOD for the increasing strength and conviction that is mine as my testimony grows within me, for by this testimony I know that God, our Heavenly Father, is a God of love, mercy, and justice; he is concerned with each of us individually and as a social group; he is infinite and unchangeable, the same yesterday, today, and forever. By the power of his love he sent his Son that those who believe in him and accept in word and deed his way of life may become the sons of God. Christ came in the meridian of time to begin the work that would eventually permit men to share the victory with him over sin, misery, pain, and death and thus live triumphantly with God and Christ. Although he came to his own and his own received him not, the love of God and his Son is so great that they could not reject man. Thus, in these latter days God has set his hand again a second time; he has sent his angel flying in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to restore to the earth. Through his beloved Son he has restored this gospel and his church to the earth once more to be an instrument in his hands for the building of his kingdom upon the earth. By the testimony that God has given me I say unhesitatingly that this, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is divine in its origin and purpose, and that through it the purposes of God will be accomplished among men.

Why I Am a Seventy

George A. Njeim

THE LAW OF THE LORD is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." One thing should be added to this statement of the Psalmist to make his observation applicable to my testimony, and that is: the law can only be absorbed when "precept comes upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little."

The summer of 1914 saw the advent of World War I; it also struck a note of fear and concern to the hearts of millions in the Old World which has not been erased, even after the passing of thirty-nine years. If any, the note is sounding louder and louder, and its reverberation has reached the ears of the once happy, carefree Americans. One good thing was accomplished, however. It shook me out of the slumber which had been induced by false security. The needs of my soul became real, and existing faith seemed to fall short of satisfying its demands.

I was reared a Roman Catholic, and the traditions of the fathers did not fill in the hunger of my religious side of life. Protestantism was argumentative, opinionated, and at best was ersatz. This resolved me to my Catholic faith, but I was far from satisfied.

In August of that year the message of the restored gospel came to me. At first it sounded strange and as far from reality as the country it came from was far from my country. After investigation and meditation I came slowly to the realization that that was the genuine thing I had been looking for. The experiences of Joseph Smith impressed me most favorably. There was a young man whose soul did undergo the same conflict that my soul was undergoing, and finally he found peace and rest in the revelation of God through a series of heavenly visitations.

That was enough for me. This was not the voice of the priest chanting a mass; neither was it the voice of the minister giving his own views on scriptural truth; it was the voice of the Eternal One warning sinful humanity of the destruction that is soon to come upon the world. Revelation such as this young man had needed verification, and the world conflict that began two months before the message reached my ears was a star witness of its truthfulness. In addition to that there came the voice of the Almighty to my soul, bearing record that this destruction would continue with greater intensity if the people would not return to God. Missionary U. W. Greene was permitted to remain with us for only about a month; then the war forced him out of the country.

Before he left, however, I saw to it that I heard enough of the message, and what I had heard was sufficient to cause me to ask for baptism. A few days after that he left us, and I was the only Reorganized Latter Day Saint in my country. Eight years passed like this; by the time I heard of the church again I was a young man without any definite faith and with little concern for religion.

MY REACQUAINTANCE with the church came through the mail. A missionary, Elder Harry Passman, was assigned to the Near East and he wrote to me. I felt strange belonging to a church about which I knew very little. I put the letter away and tried to think no more about it. But the seed had been placed in favorable ground, and I could not keep it from growing. Likewise, my thoughts about my connection with the church were not easily dismissed. A feeling of loneliness came upon me that was hard to explain.

After fifteen days of mental agitation I answered the letter and decided to go to Palestine and meet Mr. Passman. I was with him for a year and a half, and during this period I had my Gethsemane as well as experiencing the glorious morn of a new resurrection that put me on the road I am now traveling. I discovered, to my satisfaction, that my church is biblically true in its teachings and also in its organization and aim. During this period also I received the divine evidence of my ultimate priestly calling—an evidence that filled me with concern and uneasiness. I was reared with the idea of becoming a priest in the Catholic Church, and the thought of holy orders was definitely distasteful to me. It was not easy for me to reconcile myself to the divine will.

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and J. F. Curtis came to our home soon after, and I was informed of my calling to the office of an elder. My fears overwhelmed me again, and I petitioned for time to think over the matter. My wish was granted. My fears arose as the result of the weight that I attached to priestly ministry and to the recognition of my human weakness, but there was no escaping from the divine will. I had the evidence of my calling months before it was given and presented to me by Apostle Hanson. Jonah was not able to flee from his mission, and neither was it within my power to flee from His holy will and be happy. The summer of 1924 was one of continual retrospection for me, and it brought an overhauling of my life and attitude. I then resolved to come to America where I could be with people of like faith and where it would be easier for me to make a change.

COMING TO AMERICA posed other barriers; the greatest of them was the desire for material gain. After five years of vacillation I finally clung to my birthright and turned my back on the mess of pottage. The Conference of 1930 placed me under appointment, and during August of that year I was ordained to the eldership of the church. Apostle John W. Rushton used to say that he was "in love with his profession and calling." So am I.

My ordination did not remove the sense of inadequacy from my mind. As I looked upon the work I was called to do and examined myself, I found an almost unbridgeable gap. Joseph Smith prayed regarding his standing with God, and was rewarded by the visit of a heavenly messenger. I was not looking for a heavenly messenger, but I was certainly looking for an evidence that my sins were remitted. A psychologist might laugh off such feelings as a "guilt complex," but I should like to see one who is not intoxicated with self-sufficiency and is without them. For a long time after I went to the field of labor, the question of my fitness was a subject of prayer with me. Finally I was rewarded by a revelation of the Almighty which assured me that my sins were forgiven, not because of any good that is within me but because of my interest in the salvation of others. From that moment on my life ceased to be my own; it belongs to Him who has redeemed and called me to do his will; it belongs to sinful humanity to whom I was called to minister. Like Paul, I am constrained to say, "Wo is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

No one is too poor to share something with another.

Opportunity to drift is not freedom.

A wise man is like a straight pin—his head keeps him from going too far.

A Growing Testimony

James C. Daugherty

RECENTLY I RECEIVED a request for my testimony of why I am a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. At first, I thought it would not be difficult to give, because the Lord has surely been good to me and mine. However, as I sat down to put my testimony in writing I found it more difficult than I supposed—not because I do not have a testimony, but because my testimony cannot be dated; it is a growing experience. It is enhanced with every missionary meeting I hold and with every other bit of ministry I perform.

However, I have attempted to put in writing ten reasons why I belong to what I believe with all my heart is the church of Jesus Christ.

1. The church extends to me an opportunity for fellowship and friendship; it offers me association with the right kind of people when I need it most. Among its members I find many good people who are unselfish and who receive their greatest joy in serving others.

2. Because of the standards and ideals taught by the church, I realize that my membership is significant. Because the church stands for freedom, liberty, and justice, I am assured that democracy will endure. Therefore I realize that the church —the gospel of Christ—of which I am a part is the greatest movement of all time.

3. It gives me a purpose in life. The church interprets Deity in terminology I can comprehend and causes me to realize that God cares for the most insignificant and wayward of his creatures.

4. The teachings of the church on immortality assure me that man is more than a biological organism. I know that the grave is not the end, but the beginning of a fuller life and that man will receive his just reward for the deeds done while living in the flesh.

5. In the church I find comfort even in the trials of life. When I am called upon to pass through difficult experiences, I find the love of God in the shadow of every cross. His truth is always before me to give me strength to suffer and patience to endure.

6. The church holds before me the vision of Christ and his kingdom. In light of them, I am dissatisfied with my selfish ways. I am challenged to do better and to try to become more like him. Because of this, I respond to his call to repent that I may share in his redeeming grace.

7. As I study the teachings of the church and participate in its activities, I experience a greater revelation of God. I know that the Scriptures are not closed with the last book of the Bible, but that God speaks today through his church and his prophets. His divine will is continually being manifest through his called ministers.

8. The ministers of the church of Jesus Christ are not restricted to just one profession. They are chosen by divine revelation, God doing the choosing by and through his Holy Spirit. They are chosen and ordained from all walks of life, some to receive appointment and others to minister as they work at their professions. I am convinced this is the practical plan Christ used and committed to his church in these days.

9. My church gives me an opportunity to share in its service to mankind. It challenges me to face up to my responsibilities by paying my tithing and by supporting it with my presence and using all my talents for its good. Therefore I consider it an honor and a privilege to share what I have in bearing my testimony of its worthwhileness.

10. The church of the Only Begotten offers me an opportunity to participate in a divine plan that will help humanity in this trying hour. It holds before me the ideals of God's kingdom and allows me and my family to share in building a community which is based on faith in God, and which must be shared with my fellow-man. This is my hope in a disheartened and disillusioned world.

For these reasons, my membership in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has become the most vital and significant thing in my life. Therefore, as a member of Council of Presidents of Seventy, I have dedicated my life to witness before others to the eternal truths and joys that the gospel has provided me. That others may be attracted and converted as I have been is my hope and prayer.

Zionizing Our Evangelism

Glen H. Johnson

JESUS AND THE MAJOR PROPHETS laid emphasis on the gospel of the kingdom of God on earth. This theme became the central burden of their preaching ministry. Against the doctrines of each generation, prophets have been sent to men to bring them back to the heart of God's work on earth—the building of his kingdom in the hearts and minds of people, and consequently in their individual and collective conduct. Anyone who has any sense of discernment regarding the work of God through the ages realizes this function. With an understanding of the work of the kingdom of God among men as the central core, we realize the true meaning of the principles, laws, and doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ. After all, if we are to represent truly the One who called us into this glorious ministry to be his servants, we must understand his point of view.

The scriptural evidence of the theme of the kingdom (Zion) is found throughout the Inspired Version, the Book of Mormon, and especially in the Doctrine and Covenants. Look for a moment at the emphasis placed by Isaiah, one of the major prophets of the past: "... and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this" (Isaiah 9: 7, I.V.). The Israelites were to reveal this kingdom, but they would not respond to the voice which would gather them into such a relationship.

Jesus wept over Jerusalem because the Jews would not listen to the message of the gathering. "How often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and ye would not" (Matthew 23: 37, I.V.). The result? Desolation! Now in this day, the gathering of Judah is taking place, and the way is being prepared for the gospel of the kingdom of God to be preached to Israel again.

In Book of Mormon times the major reason for the separation of the seed of Joseph through Manasseh was to "raise up a righteous branch." This was not fully accomplished until Jesus visited America and proclaimed his gospel. For nearly two hundred years the Nephites lived in a Zion condition. Every area of life was caught up in this kingdom way of living. This message is the heart of the Book of Mormon witness, and as such represents the fullness of the gospel which Jesus preached—the gospel of the kingdom. And in the Doctrine and Covenants the theme of the kingdom (Zion) is again emphasized.

THE MESSAGE which we bear is this coming kingdom on earth again. Anything we might have to say about church organization, priesthood, ordinances, etc., can be meaningful only when it is seen that these have their value when related to the all-important task of the kingdom. And, in my estimation, no true value and meaning can be gained from these "parts" of the ecclesiastical system called the church unless they are pointed toward the Zion enterprise. Church organization does not and cannot exist as an end in itself.

If the church attempts to maintain its spiritual life without struggling to give birth to the kingdom it shall be barren of spiritual gifts, power, and life. Read in this connection, "And blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; and if they endure unto the end, they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb" (1 Nephi 3: 187, Book of Mormon). And again in latter-day revelation these words, "... in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld" (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3; read Section 65 also). It is my firm conviction that when the church constantly and progressively moves toward the establishing of Zion, it shall come rapidly to its true spiritual life.

The message of Zion is the gospel which we bear in all the world. It should be the burden of our preaching and teaching ministry. Whenever we move out to convert people unto Christ, we must present to them the gospel of the kingdom. For, the moment they are a part of the church through baptism by water and of the Spirit, they of necessity are enlisted in the kingdom enterprise.

I KNOW this to be true, though rather sketchily stated here, because the struggles in my own life for a message to proclaim in my ministry were rewarded when the gospel of the kingdom (Zion) came clearly and forcefully through the revelation of the Holy Ghost. And in the declaration of this message my ministry has been enriched and rewarded by the revelation of God himself to me, pointing out definitely and clearly that this is his gospel, and it has found pleasure in his sight. For all this, I owe him grateful thanks and continued devotion to the task and joy of continuing to proclaim this gospel to all who are willing to hear. This is why I say we must Zionize our evangelism if we are to fulfill our task as missionaries and witnesses for Christ. Let us continue to bear witness of him and his gospel. I know this to be true; do you?

Centenary of the Seventy of the Reorganization

Tom Worth

IT IS A PLEASURE to write from England for this special issue of the Herald commemorating the centenary of the Seventy of the Reorganization.

The foundation, the center, the head of the church is our Lord Jesus Christ. Authority comes from the head and renders its service through the various orders of priesthood. The significance and effectiveness of our purpose demand a dynamic, productive missionary arm. The Seventies, as the second missionary quorum of the church, are in their work closely related to and associated with the first missionary quorum—the Twelve—to whom they are directly responsible. The Twelve minister under the direction of the First Presidency of the church.

The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13.

And these Seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.

The Twelve and Seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing, and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.

It could, therefore, be no more appropriate to have local Seventies in the missionary arm than to have local Apostles. There is, of course, the provision for local missionary elders. The Seventy is better qualified than the local missionary elder in that, added to his proved effectiveness as a preacher and minister with a passion for winning souls to the Savior, he serves in an administrative and executive capacity. The Seventy, like the Apostle, is a special witness of the Lord Jesus in all the world. He also may act and officiate in every part of the ministry of a high priest, yet he is neither a high priest nor an Apostle, but a very necessary link between the two. Briefly stated, the Seventies are to evangelize, to build up and regulate churches, and to participate in church government. There may be seven quorums of Seventy, but at present only the first quorum is organized. The quorum of Seventies, one of the three leading councils of the church, in emergencies has the responsibility of concurrent jurisdiction with the Twelve and the First Presidency.

In England, the ministry of the Seventy has been represented quite ably through the years. Two Seventies are there at the moment. This is a tremendously large and important field of evangelism; its challenge, scope, and possibilities are untold. As the right men become available and their calling manifest, the whole field of evangelism must be better covered by the ministry of the Seventies than it is at the present time. Open-air preaching and public debate were once characteristic of the approach to proselytizing in England but that day is past. Today the most productive missionary ministry of the Seventy includes the proved methods of personal testimony, preaching series, nonmember family meetings, cottage meetings, and visual-aid series, either in homes or congregations. It will be a happy day for the Apostle in charge—and indeed for all concerned—when the British Isles Mission gains and keeps one hundred baptized converts yearly. To this challenge and beyond it, the Seventies naturally address themselves. May the Lord, through them, add daily to the church such as should be saved.

SPEAKING PERSONALLY, I might add that I received full-time church appointment on July 1, 1939. In April, 1946, during my visit to the United States, I was ordained to the office of Seventy under the hands of Brother E. Y. Hunker. Continuing my ministry there and in Canada, I had the privilege of winning and baptizing many good Saints. I found people eager to listen to the restored gospel, and their willing response was most encouraging. Among the principal places in which I ministered were Independence, Kansas City, Nauvoo, Chicago, Houston, Detroit, Toronto, Salt Lake City, Kirtland, and Brooklyn. Returning to England, my native land, in December, 1948, I took up my work immediately and have found pleasure therein.

There are seventeen branches here with a total membership around fourteen hundred. Church work was hampered seriously by wartime conditions, but it is to the lasting credit of the Saints here that they remained loyal to the church throughout. Since the war, missionary work has been emphasized and expanded once again with a fair degree of success. I have had the pleasure of ministering in every branch here, and I value the confidence and support of both the priesthood and the Saints. The witness of the Spirit is an inspiration to me in my ministry; it confirms my faith and deepens my testimony of the Restoration. I count it a privilege to be able to serve.

A Rewarding Work

Floyd Potter

IT WAS IN JUNE, 1939, that I entered the mission field. I was nineteen at the time. Apostle Mesley had approached me three months earlier, and I had promised to pray over the invitation to accept appointment as a two-year locally sustained missionary.

It did not take me long to make up my mind. For some time previously my thoughts had been repeatedly turned toward the prospect of one day serving in the field. These aspirations had been taking shape for about three years, from the time when I had become truly converted to Christ, and a positive awareness of this church's divine mission had begun to expand my soul.

After entering the field in June, my ordination to the office of elder took place the following month. I was driven by a deep desire to have some positive personal assurance about the call being of divine origin to fast and pray for light in the matter for three days prior to ordination. Nothing was given me, but I decided to go forward in faith anyway.

Through the ensuing years of assignments in the Northern New South Wales District, and from 1942 in the New Zealand mission, I was to receive ample evidence and assurance of divine leading as I tried to magnify my office and calling. Extraordinary confirmation came in several remarkable healings under my hands, the casting out of an evil spirit on one occasion, and a vivid spiritual dream on another.

But often I felt dissatisfied with the quality of my work, and many times weighed the pros and cons of quitting the field to continue to labor as a local elder. During this period of doubt and indecision I received the 1947 General Conference Daily Herald. I was amazed to read therein of my calling to the Seventy. It had been presented and ratified, several of the elders speaking in confirmation.

My thoughts turned to a statement in my patriarchal blessing given through Evangelist J. H. N. Jones, when I was sixteen: "And if thou art faithful thy calling will be made manifest, and the way will be prepared, as the more mature years come, for responsibility to be placed upon thee." Being called to the office of elder only three years afterward had scarcely seemed to fulfill this prophecy. Nineteen years could hardly be called "the more mature years." Right there the call to the Seventy, eight years later, seemed to fit in.

After being ordained I seemed to find a new life in the ministry. I felt greater assurance and facility in my labors. No longer did I have any misgivings about continuing in the general ministry. Before a year had passed, the Lord spoke to me in commendation by the spirit of prophecy through an elder in whose branch I was laboring. The spirit accompanying the message changed a routine prayer and testimony meeting into a spiritual feast for everyone present. Under its continuing influence some hours later, I preached the most powerful sermon of my experience to that date.

I rejoice in the great privilege that is mine to represent this marvelous work on a full-time basis. The joy to be experienced in this type of work must surely far exceed that to be found in most other avocations in life. Though the labor of begetting spiritual children unto Christ is most

The Power of God a Reality

Elwin R. Vest

WHENEVER ONE WILLINGLY and unselfishly works for the Master he feels the directive power of the Holy Spirit in his effort. In man's extremity there most often comes an added witness of godly power to supplement and augment the work of the humble servant as he faces his "in service" hour of need. Since coming on this mission in the Pacific I have often felt such an uplifting hand, powerful in its love, directing my efforts to bring the gospel message to those who are so direly in need of its comfort.

At present my family and I are assigned to missionary-pastoral responsibility in Hilo, Hawaii. This we re-often exacting and filled with disappointments, it is rewarding to be able to plant the seed, nurture it, and sometimes see it grow to fullness.

It would be most unjust not to mention here the steadfast devotion of my good wife who, though behind the scenes, has helped immeasurably to maintain my morale and do her own part, too, in the many ways expected of a true missionary helpmeet.

That we may all assist in pushing forward this work, "from the ends of the earth" even unto Zion, is my prayer.

fer to as the "Big Island" because of its size; it is much larger than all the other islands grouped together. In past months one of our friends wrote asking if we had learned to speak the language of the Island. That would be quite a task, as there are many different tongues used to some extent in this part of God's vineyard. English is most widely used and is the only language spoken in the public schools. Pidgin English is a mixture of many languages: Japanese, Chinese, Filipino, French, Hawaiian, and Portuguese, and until one becomes accustomed to its usage it is very difficult to understand. However, I have come to know that neither the global location nor the medium of communication used can be a barrier against the power of God's Spirit.

I have enjoyed that power on many occasions during the past two years, especially as I have held cottage meetings in homes where some did not speak nor understand the English language. On such occasions it has been necessary for me to find some church member to act as interpreter. Most of such work is done in Japanese homes, for there are many Japanese parents and grandparents in the Islands who are first generation from their homeland and very few of them understand or speak English. Of course the children use English, for they are educated in English-speaking schools, but they continue to use their parents' language at home.

I believe you would be interested in a word picture of one of these homes, the type of meeting used, and the testimony that came in power as we ministered there.

HACHIRO AND MASAKO are second-generation Japanese. They speak excellent English, but Masako's foster mother, who also lives in the home, understands only her native tongue. She has friends who do not understand English who also came to the home for our meetings.

The Japanese home which retains its old national characteristics—and this one does—is very quaint. The floor is covered with wall-to-wall matting or goza, and there is very little furniture. A tsukue or desk, low enough that one may sit on the floor to use it, stands in one corner, and there are vases of flowers in distinctive Japanese arrangement on little pedestals here and there about the room. Flat, square pillows, zabutons, are piled against the wall, and there is an altar, lavishly decorated, at which the Buddhists worship.

Upon entering the home you remove your shoes. First, because it is a cultural and ceremonial custom; and, second, because it helps greatly to keep the floor clean. If you were going to sit on your parlor floor for every occasion you wouldn't want people to walk on it with dusty shoes, would you? You should sometime try the supreme comfort of removing your shoes while visiting. I have become so used to the habit that I now find myself a bit uneasy when I go into a home where it is proper to enter with my shoes on. Each evening as Brother Kashimoto, then a priest and recently ordained an elder, and I entered Masako and Hachiro's home we removed our shoes. After exchanging greetings we would set up our visual-aid equipment and arrange ourselves in a semicircle on the floor, seating ourselves upon the zabutons.

In contemplating such a service we realized that we faced many problems and that without the assistance and direction of Almighty God there could be no solution for them. Here was a family unit, the members of which were nearly all Buddhist, and those who weren't belonged to no church at all for lack of understanding. What a challenge! We faced with our friends a world of experience which was entirely new to them, and in a different way new to us. Some never had heard of a Bible, and those who had heard of it had never seen inside one, nor had they heard of its teachings. Questions arose: "Where did this book come from?" "Who is this Jesus?"

"How can he save a person?" The whole concept of salvation from a Christian standpoint is entirely revolutionary to the Buddhist mind. From evening to evening we continued the explanations. I would show pictures, read Scriptures, and make some brief comment. Then Brother Kashimoto would take over and explain in Japanese what I had said. As we met in the home we felt an ever-increasing power of God's Spirit prompting and directing our efforts. Many times as Brother Kashimoto interpreted my words to those who could not understand, I felt a mighty surge of spiritual power and knew of a surety that these good people were receiving their testimony of truth.

Later, when I stood with Masako and then with Hachiro in the waters of baptism, a mighty all-enveloping love swept over me, and I knew of what Peter spoke when he said, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that heareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

I am indeed happy that I can take my place as a "special witness and ambassador for Christ" as we hear the great commission directing into all the world to teach and baptize in the "name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

"The church is admonished again that all movements toward Zion and the Gathering and temporalities connected therewith are within my law, and all things should be done in order."—D. and C. 140: 5.

"The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies."—D. and C. 140: 5.

"The church is admonished again that joint responsibility is laid on all."—D. and C. 141: 8.

A Missionary to Tahiti

Seventy Vivian Sorensen, his wife, Gwendoline, and their children: Beth, 8; Marvia, 5; and Trevor Charles, 2.

Seventy Vivian Sorensen, a native of Australia, has spent much of his time in Tahiti since accepting General Church appointment. At present he is serving as mission president, bishop's agent, mission statistician, and branch president of Tarona. He is also medical consultant for numerous natives and is called upon for many of the administrations to the six hundred members directly under his care. Since he is supervising the building of two churches and the purchasing of lands for further church expansion, he often has to meet with government officials. Some of his other duties, he explains with tongue in cheek, are "acting as Solomon in cases of disagreement and attending to the mechanical troubles of the mission station wagon." His testimony is this: "Through all my efforts I have been wonderfully blessed and sustained by my Heavenly Father."

Men can see the truth rightly only in humility.

Forgiveness is the odor flowers give when trampled upon. (Quoted by Ralph W. Sockman.)

Regarding the new "Revised Standard Version" of the Bible.

DOROTHY THOMPSON is one of the ablest and most interesting of the commentators on world events currently writing for the press. In addition to all that, she is deeply religious and a constant reader of the Bible.

In the Ladies' Home Journal for March of this year she has an outstanding article on "The Old Bible and the New." She refers to the King James Version of the Bible and the new "Revised Standard Version," published last fall and sponsored by the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

She presents a dozen or more texts from various books of the Bible which she thinks are fair samples of many which she holds have been robbed of strength, simplicity, and beauty in the new version, and all to no point.

In fact she says that she finds the new version inferior on nearly every page to the one it seeks to supplant. She thinks it weaker, less vivid, less beautiful, less inspired. She concludes that if she could have no version other than this new one, she would read it. But she "would always hear as an overtone, to its flatter, if more modern speech, the distant thunder and majestic music" of the King James Version.

There seems no good reason why we should discard our own Inspired Version of the Bible in favor of this new revision. The Inspired Version holds to the beautiful and majestic language of the King James Version, but corrects many obvious errors and restores some important matter that had been lost.

Question Time

Question:

Was there any type of plant or animal life on the Western Hemisphere when the Jaredites landed?
Missouri

V. L. B.

Answer:

Apparently there was abundance of plant life in America when the Jaredites landed about 2200 B. C. Though it is stated in the Book of Mormon that they brought with them "seeds of every kind," there is also the fact that about half the world's agricultural products of today were not known to the rest of mankind at the time of the discovery of America by Columbus. These include the potato, the sweet potato, all the beans except the soybean and the horse bean, all the varieties of pumpkin and squash, watermelons, tomatoes, peanuts, a great variety of berries, and medicinal herbs and plants. Maize, commonly called corn, was also unknown to Europe when it was found growing in America, though it is claimed by some that it was known in Asia.

To what extent these were developed from plants indigenous to America by the Jaredites and the Nephites, we can only conjecture.

Concerning animal life, the Book of Mormon indicates the Jaredites brought with them male and female of their flocks of every kind, as well as birds, fish, and honeybees (pages 716, 726). We note that after their arrival they had cattle, sheep, swine, goats, horses, asses, elephants, cureloms, cumoms, and other animals (page 737). In a number of museums in the United States and Canada we have seen remains of horses, elephants, mastodons, camels, tapirs, saber-toothed tigers, megatheriums, and other animals which had become extinct before the arrival of Columbus. How many of these animals—if any—were species brought by the Jaredites in their eight little barges, we do not know. Doubtless there were animals in the Western Hemisphere before the arrival of the Jaredites. Scientists estimate the age of many fossil animals of America as much as or beyond a million years. Their estimates may be exaggerated. For further study of the subject, see America's Lost Civilizations, chapters IV, V, and VIII.

Question:

When nominations for office are made in a business meeting, is it according to parliamentary procedure to vote on the last one first?
Oklahoma

E. R. C.

Answer:

The custom of voting on the last nomination first has prevailed in many of our assemblies for a long time. It seems to be without official backing at the present time. The present tendency in most books on parliamentary procedure, including Robert's Rules of Order, is to legalize the placing of nominations to vote in the order in which they were received by the assembly.

WARD A. HOUGAS

Question:

Why do we permit unordained persons to teach in our church schools when we would not permit them to preach in the pulpit? Wherein is the essential difference which permits the practice? Wouldn't our church schools lay a better foundation of knowledge and belief in our young persons if their church school faculties were composed of ordained men? Wouldn't there be more light and power in the teaching which would hold our young people better?

Missouri

G. T.

Answer:

Good preaching contains elements of good teaching. Good teaching reflects the spirit of righteous purpose present in all good preaching. However, preaching and teaching are not subject to common definition, for real preaching ministry is made possible because of divine call. Evidence, however, does not indicate that effective teaching requires this same authority.

Modern-day revelation redefines the basis of preaching: "Behold, I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 8a. The Scriptures do admonish priesthood to teach, but they do not restrict teaching to priesthood. In this regard Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5a, b, c reads:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. And all this ye shall observe to do as I have commanded concerning your teaching, until the fullness of my Scriptures is given.

Many revelations stress teaching and learning. Parents are admonished in no uncertain terms in Section 68: 4a to teach their children the gospel of Christ. Does this mean that teaching is to be done solely by the father, and then only if he is a member of the priesthood?

The church school is a mutual endeavor. The pastor (presiding elder) is in charge of religious education, and all organized teaching in the church school takes place under his over-all supervision. The quotation "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; . . ." (Section 119: 8b) is not to be interpreted as minimizing the significance of priesthood authority.

Because our church schools are schools of the church, they do call for active priesthood support. All things being equal, members of the priesthood whose aptitudes, interests, purposes, preparation, and available time qualify them, ought to reflect teaching of superior quality.

The Scriptures do not speak either for or against women and laymen teaching in church schools. Where God has not commanded, man is free to decide. To use wisdom in this matter is a righteous goal, and to function intelligently is the utilization of divine revelation.

Where would many well-established branches be today if some consecrated woman had not launched out in church school endeavor?

Musings of a Housewife

By Enid Stubbart DeBarthe

WHEN WE GREET LOVED ONES we usually express concern for their health, their family welfare, and their economic well-being. We express regret over ill health, financial need, or lack of family adjustment. These things directly affect our happiness.

My mother once expressed the longing of her heart toward her children when she wrote, "If only a mother could ask, 'Son, Daughter, how is it with your soul?'" Many of us have felt this unspoken question when we greeted a loved one with a casual "How are you?"

When the handclasp is warm, the smile is unbidden, and the eyes meet ours in frank, direct affection, we know all is well and our hearts are uplifted. Yet, I know as a mother that, though all seems well to outward appearances, a parent looks at the growing personalities in the home and prays, "Lord, how is it with their souls?"

Attendance at church school and other public worship services helps us to know what problems our brothers and sisters are meeting, and how they have answered the problem we may be pondering today. The family altar is one of the best ways a family can gauge its spiritual welfare. The spoken prayer, the willingness to participate, the mutual understanding and love that grow out of the experiences of family worship are outward indications of the health of the soul.

It would not be according to custom to ask anyone we are interested in, "How is it with your soul today?" But why should we not? Does not God ask it of each of us each Communion service?

Lasso the Mind

Perhaps most of us experience times when our thoughts are like a squirrel on a treadmill, going around and never arriving. This is especially true if one is ill, unduly worried, or deeply grieved. Quite some time ago I became rather ill and had to spend several weeks taking a rest cure. I could not sleep. Food would not stay down. One problem seemed to bring on another, and I could see no solution. I was bound that I should reason each problem through to a solution which would be strictly intelligent and never emotional. So my mind mulled and stewed until I could find no peace or rest.

Only when I became so weary with my struggle that I just had to let go entirely did I discover the secret of my troubles. I did not know how to relax.

I lay down to rest as the doctor ordered, but I couldn't let the bed hold me. Though on the bed, I was still tense, thinking of the things I should be doing, resenting my physical weakness, worrying about the final outcome. But when I learned to let go and let the bed have me, I learned to sleep again. When I learned to breathe as though I were asleep and to lasso my galloping mind and stake it to my pillow, I found rest. Sometimes the mind broke away and had to be lassoed several times before sleep came, but in time it learned to stay staked to the pillow.

The word "worry" is derived from the Anglo-Saxon wyrgan meaning to strangle. Prolonged worry does strangle the functions of the body even to destruction if it is not rebuked.

When I find worries pressing me, I say, "What can you do about it?"

All right, go do it. Nothing? O.K. Let it be for now!"

And sometimes I pray, "God, you take over now. I'm too tired and don't know what to do. When there is something I can do about it, help me to know, and I'll try again."

Childish? No! I believe that was what Jesus meant when he said, "Come unto me, ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It isn't refusing to bear our own burdens. It is only laying them down until our strength is renewed to take them up and perhaps rearrange them and discover what excess baggage we bear. I believe it is what is meant by "Be still, and know that I am God."

Sharpened Perception

Perceiving our brother's needs and problems is not always easy to do. Our prejudices and superstitions keep us from seeing clearly. Trying to find comfort for our own lack by looking for greater lack in someone else never suited me. I resent having someone say, "You can always find someone worse off than you are." It seems to me such thinking anesthetizes our senses to our own lack.

If, however, such a comparison arouses my sympathies to the extent that I will make an effort to soften another's despair, then such a searching is good. But really to understand another's needs or feelings, we have to have a measure of his experiences.

Our perception is sharpened by grief, hunger, cold, pain—and by joy, achievement, deep content. Unless we know both extremes we do not see clearly. Unless from the valley of despair we have cried out, "Oh, God—if there is a God!" we cannot understand when others say, "But how can we know there is a God? We want to know for ourselves." And having found God, we can promise them that they too may know.

My Wednesday

By Barbara Peavy

IT WAS APRIL. The emphasis in the junior department was on the experiences of the boy Joseph and the organization of the church on April 6, 1830. I still remember the warm glow which seemed to fill my heart when, with the other eleven-year-olds, I stood and lustily sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet." The lack of musical quality was compensated by depth of conviction and a great deal of enthusiasm.

Then in Zion's League several years later, another experience of this nature happened. Again it was April. Restoration Week had been celebrated, and at the closing dedication service we sang, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

Each of these experiences brought new significance to the role of prophetic leadership which had brought the church forth under the direction of God over a hundred years ago.

Unless we have hungered until the very sight of food made our stomachs retch, we cannot fully understand the warped vision of the hungry. Unless our whole beings have been taut with the constriction of grief, we cannot fully comprehend another's sorrow.

Many have said to me, "Why do you suppose God lets his children suffer?" Usually there isn't much I can say. But unless we have experienced love, anger, the frustrations and hopes of youth, the secure love of middle-age, the anxieties and fulfillment of parenthood, the grief of death, the pain of unwise choices, the hell of wanting most to do or undo that which cannot be done or undone—unless we have experienced some of these things, how can we comprehend the mercy of an unfailing, all-kind, loving, almighty Father?

But now, when I sing this song, I find myself even more grateful to my Heavenly Father for an opportunity to share with many other people in a prophetic mission—building the kingdom of God on earth—under the leadership of his servant, our prophet, seer, and revelator, the president of the church.

IT WASN'T APRIL—instead it was a beautiful fall day in Independence. And it was Wednesday, which made me even happier. One of the most enjoyable responsibilities which is mine here at the publishing house is being the "news hound" on Wednesdays at the Auditorium. The "News and Notes" column has been one of the happiest assignments I've ever had. Each week when I go to the Auditorium and interview those people who are ministering to our church, listen to their experiences with Saints in every area, I have been aware of a sense of growth and development in their reports. It has been like listening to a stethoscope on the heartbeat of the church, and it has brought a new appreciation for the devotion and zeal of men and women of the General Church.

This was not an unusual Wednesday. The day was beautiful, and the walk to the Auditorium was exhilarating, but nothing in the day or the walk indicated that something very wonderful was going to happen. My first stop at the Auditorium was at the office of the First Presidency. "I think there is some news in the offing this morning," one of the secretaries said, and I waited while he checked with members of the Presidency.

"President Israel has just returned from Illinois, and has something interesting to tell you," he said when he returned. I went back to President Smith's office and listened as he related the story behind a trunk which had been given the church by a member of the David Whitmer family. "Pleasure" was hardly the word to describe his reaction to the gift. As I started to leave, he asked, "Would you like to see the trunk?" This in itself was a thrill, and I listened as he told how the trunk had been protected through the years and some of the interesting and valuable articles it contained. We stood beside the small leather trunk, and Brother Israel reached out to unfasten the lock.

No one had spoken, there was only the sound of the "click" of the lock. Yet in that moment, I knew that Israel A. Smith was a Prophet of God—just as had been his grandfather, Young Joseph.

No one had said, "This man is a prophet of God." But I knew that he carried the same powers as had the prophets of old and the modern day prophets, too.

LANGUAGE OFTEN LIMITS US in moments of deepest feelings, and I could only stand quietly and listen to the man called of God tell of some of the experiences of David Whitmer. It was as though time had let us live in the spirit of the early days of the Restoration. Then he asked if I would like to see the Joint Council Room.

I followed Brother Israel up the ramp to the new Joint Council Room. There seemed to be an invitation to pray as we entered. Just as the little leather trunk had created an appreciation for the past and our heritage, the worshipful setting of the Joint Council Room represented growth, progress, the church on the move.

It is April again. No doubt in many congregations special services will be held commemorating the Restoration Movement. "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet" will be sung by all ages. I shall stand with the members of my congregation and with them thank God for prophetic leadership—not just in 1830, but today as well. And with my congregation I shall pledge greater devotion to the kingdom of God.

Zion's Leagues

Around the World

What Makes a Zion's League Tick?

Why do some Leagues succeed so well and have so much fun doing it while others barely move along? Doubtless there are many different reasons. But one of the best ways of finding out is to take a look at Leagues that are doing things. Following are brief accounts of the recent activities of three Leagues in different parts of the world.

Clay Cross, England:

From the Clay Cross Zion's League—a very active group in a small branch of about eighty members near Chesterfield, England (about one hundred and fifty miles north of London)—has come a copy of their mimeographed paper called "Progress." The paper was sent to the General Church Youth Office by Barrie Fox, League president—or leader, as he is called there—at the suggestion of Donald Lents, missionary in England. Under the title "Zion's League News" this report of the League's activities appeared in "Progress." It was written by the League secretary, Margaret Whitworth:

On August 28, 1952, we began the new session with a grand opening night. The old members were reinvited, along with all the young people of the church who were over twelve. We are pleased to report that we now have a membership of forty-five (all between twelve and twenty-five) the majority of whom are proud possessors of our new Zion's League badges.

The League is now able to hold two meetings each week. On Monday night we have recreation, and on Thursday we begin with a short opening service followed by general discussion, refreshments, question periods, debates, and so forth; and we usually round the evening off with games.

On Thursday, October 2, we shared a pleasant evening with some of the Sutton-in-Ashfield Zion's League members who came to visit us. Brother Don Lents, our mission president, was guest speaker; later he amused us with some American skit songs. These were followed by a film show directed by Bill Leivers.

The following Sunday was Harvest Festival and at the evening service the Zion's League choir sang two choral numbers. Fred Shaw, the Zion's League vice-leader, favored us with a solo. Brother John Holmes from Sutton-in-Ashfield Branch directed the choir.

An indoor campfire was held around an electric campfire on the evening of October 16. We presented "A battle of the sexes" evening—boys versus girls—with questions, games, and debates. Although at one time the boys had a good lead, in a thrilling finish the girls drew level, and the evening ended very happily.

Stone Church, Independence, Missouri

From our largest congregation, the Stone Church in Independence, comes the following report of the Senior Zion's League, one of two Zion's Leagues in that congregation, written by a League member, Katie Cooper:

Twenty-five baskets and parcels of food were prepared by the Stone Church Senior Zion's League in order that nine needy families in Independence might enjoy a happy Thanksgiving season. At Christmas this project was repeated for seven families. In previous years, the young people have divided into groups and canvassed for food products. This year, however, announcements were made in the church bulletin and in the group prayer meetings, and the Stone Church congregation responded well in donating an abundance of supplies and some money for the preparation of these baskets. Those who received food were very appreciative and expressed their humble, sincere gratitude.

Another service rendered by the Stone Church League was a program especially planned for the girls at Hilltop School on January 11. These girls range in age from six to sixteen; they are orphans and children from broken homes. The program was presented in such a manner as to allow the girls themselves to participate actively in the evening's activities, which they apparently enjoyed a great deal.

During and following the program at Hilltop, the Leaguers met several of the girls and had personal visits; some were shown through the dining room where Christmas decorations were still on display. Not only did the girls at Hilltop receive something from this experience, but the Zion's League went away that night with new insight and desire to follow up with a greater service to these girls in the future.

The Stone Church Senior Zion's League, with its average attendance of about fifty, participates in many activities in the Center Stake, both of a local and stake-wide nature. At the conclusion of the campus program last fall, Don Elefson was elected to the office of president, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baker were chosen to succeed Doris Oakman in the capacity of League leaders. Others elected were Barbara Barnhard, vice-president; Chloe Palmer, secretary; and Paul Christiansen, treasurer.

The League meets regularly on Sunday evening at eight-forty-five in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church with the worship, study, service, and recreation commissions each taking turn at planning the programs. On December 11 an extra activity was held in the form of a skating party at Buckner, Missouri.

Several of the young people had a part in the presentation of "The Patched Coat," directed by Bernice Wehrli, during the Drama Festival held each year in Independence. The play this year received a rating of "Excellent."

Balmain, Sydney, Australia

From Balmain, the largest of four branches of the church in greater Sydney, Australia, comes a third report as given in "Vision," the youth magazine for the Australasian Mission. The Balmain League has between thirty and forty active Leaguers of high school and college age in a branch of about three hundred members. While the report covers a fall month, the weather there would be equivalent to late winter in the States. This report was written by the League leader, Marion Parton:

On September 5 a music appreciation evening was held at the home of Brother and Sister F. Rawson. Brother Rawson gave a very interesting talk on music in the church and the influence music has in people's lives. We also took the opportunity of saying farewell to Patricia Ballard who, like many other young schoolteachers, has to go to the country for service (as assigned by the State Educational Service). We are looking forward to seeing Patricia home for the school holidays.

We all enjoyed a hobby night on the twelfth of this month. Four Leaguers brought along their hobbies for exhibition. Valda Stewart, whose hobby is acting, gave us a very good interpretation of "Richard II." Jocelyn Parkes, who is interested in ballet, gave a short talk on mood and character portrayed in ballet; she also showed us two beautiful scrapbooks on ballet, which are a credit to her. Dennis Ferrett brought along his camera to take a photo of the League; after three attempts the picture was finally taken. The high light of the evening was when Raymond Harrison (now working on his Ph.D. in chemical engineering) demonstrated how we must have oxygen to have fire. This sounded simple enough, but when he put a match to his baby "Atom Bomb," it was a wonder that there were any of us left to tell the story.

The League meeting on the nineteenth took the form of letter writing. Since many of our friends have gone overseas and also into the country, we took the opportunity to write and tell them what was going on in the Zion's Leagues. Book reviews were given by four Leaguers on the twenty-sixth. These proved to be educational.

To end our month's activities we attended an early morning prayer service at the home of Brother and Sister C. McLaughlin on Sunday the twenty-eighth; the theme was "We Witness Through Earnest Prayer." The cost of the breakfast was 2 shillings (about 50c) for each person. This was donated to the Building Fund by Sister McLaughlin.

GENERAL CHURCH YOUTH OFFICE

God DOES Belong in a Marriage

By Barbara Bryant

I AM a freshman at Graceland College. A few years ago I was devoutly interested in God, the church, and the mechanics of religion. Now my mind seems cluttered with a thousand questions—all "Why?" Because I am planning to be married this summer, several of my questions are about the home I will be helping to establish. Recently I asked my mother this question, "Why does God in the lives of people make a marriage more successful?" This is what she told me.

One big reason is that God's being in or out of the lives of a couple determines the kind of people they associate with. Those not interested in the church are not happy with the kind of people who are interested in church. Probably it is a guilty feeling because they know they should be interested; therefore they tend to stay away from people who are church-minded. If they don't associate with other couples who are interested in the church they will associate with someone, so they look for friends among those who are not so good as they think they are. It is easier to feel "above" others than "beneath" them—as they do among the church folks when they, deep down in their hearts, know they should be church folks too.

In associating with these people, at first they are shocked at some of the things they do, but still, because they feel "above" them, they continue to go with them. Gradually, however, they are no longer shocked; they just tolerate the things they at first looked down on. As they continue their association, this "toleration" becomes indifference. Next they participate in them, too—first just as a lark, then as a matter of habit. It is a natural, gradual period of degeneration.

Now being among church people works exactly the same. At first the skeptical will feel disgusted with what they call the "stiffness" of church people. They may say they'd never be like that. However, gradually, they find themselves participating a little more and more until they are feeling the spirit of the work and are putting their whole selves into it. This naturally makes them better people. An Apostle once said that for a man to make a good minister he had to be wholeheartedly in love with his wife. Ministry for the Lord should bring out the most love there is in a man or woman for his or her companion.

A happy marriage isn't made overnight. It is like a kernel of corn put into the soil. It doesn't become corn so you can make corn muffins overnight. But after you have tended it, watered it, and the sun has baked it, it can be cut down with a sickle very quickly and die. After the sickle has been put to it, it doesn't take long for it to go sour, to wilt and die, because the life is gone. That is the way God works in the lives of married people. He is the life that makes it much, much easier to grow in love and to be happy. Without that life, it is a struggle.

My mother sent this advice in a letter. I am still a perplexed teenager, but one of my "why's" has been answered. As I think about this letter, I'm not so sure but what the shade covering my window of assurance and trust in God has been lifted.

Briefs

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your reports brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your reports, we hope you will understand.

Men Approved for Priesthood

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT.—The Joplin, Missouri, Branch was host to the district conference on March 8. District President Stephen Black was in charge. The following men were recommended for ordination and approved by vote: as elders, Bert Parkhurst, Vinita, Oklahoma, and John Leslie, Joplin, Missouri; as priests, Don Sunderman, Vinita, Oklahoma; John Mount, Miami, Oklahoma; Joseph Rook, Miami, Oklahoma; James Alben, Independence, Kansas; as teachers, Floyd Nichol and Dr. Athol Cochran of Joplin; as deacons, Lowell Raffety, Vinita, Oklahoma; Ova Ramsey, Vinita, Oklahoma; James Skiles and Leo Nash of Joplin.

The morning speaker was Amos T. Higdon, former district president. A class was conducted by Elder Frank Kyser of Miami in the morning, and the prayer service was under the direction of Brother Black.

A quartet from Miami sang at the afternoon meeting. Mrs. Alma Swan sang a solo, and Mrs. C. L. Rook and Mrs. Verde Gaston from Miami served as organists. Don Guinee from Miami directed the singing.

The Zion's League held its district retreat at the reunion grounds near Racine, Missouri, February 22.—Reported by MRS. ROY HELLER

District Priesthood Meets

DE KALB, TEXAS.—A priesthood meeting was held March 1, with visitors from the Arkansas-Louisiana District. The visiting ministry was Elder James Renfro from Hot Springs, Arkansas; Elder Coney Fuller from Eros, Louisiana; Elder R. L. Morrison from Rodessa, Louisiana; Evangelist J. Charles May from Independence, Missouri; Priest Frank Owens from Texarkana; Elder T. B. Sharp from Winthrop, Arkansas. This meeting was a climax of meetings held by J. Charles May. Brother May gave several blessings while here.—Reported by WILMA FRANCES NICKS

Plan for New Reunion Site

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The district conference was held in Redlands, March 7 and 8 with Saints in attendance.

The conference opened in the Odd Fellows Hall where the members of the Redlands mission meet each Sunday morning. District President John Davis made the opening remarks. Classwork followed with Bishop D. B. Carmichael teaching the men's class, Sisters Faye Davis and Ada Hampton in charge of the women's forum, Elder Hugh Kensler teaching the young people, Brother Davis speaking to all branch and mission pastors and the district leader of music, and Brother Warren Tait conducting a class on the techniques of church music. Of particular interest to the women of the district was a letter read by Sister Hampton from Sister Nelson Van Fleet, district leader of women who sent greetings from Hawaii where she and Brother Van Fleet are vacationing.

At the conclusion of the afternoon classwork, the women of the Redlands mission served dinner.

Business meeting convened in the evening. On the stand were Brethren Hugh Kensler, Rodney Engel, Herald Wixom, D. B. Carmichael, Stanley Kelley, with John Davis in charge.

The names of the following brethren were presented and approved for priesthood ordination: Santa Barbara, Howell P. Hughes, elder; Gordon S. Berg, deacon; Bakersfield, Russell E. Hampton, priest; Normand E. Slick, priest; San Bernardino, Clifford McGuire, priest; Ontario, George C. Swain, priest.

It was noted that there are now five active and growing missions in the district: Redlands, Riverside, El Cajon, National City, and Escondido.

The joint project of the Los Angeles Stake and the Southern California District in the purchase of a reunion site was presented by Bishop D. B. Carmichael. He explained that approximately forty acres of wooded land adjacent to Idyllwild had been purchased and discussed the immediate as well as future costs involved in development of the ground. There was an enthusiastic acceptance by the group of their responsibility in raising funds for this undertaking.

The Sunday morning program began with a breakfast for the Zion's League council of the district with their leader, Hugh Kensler, in charge. A general prayer meeting followed at nine o'clock with Brethren John Davis, Peter Whalley, Rodney Engel, and President F. Henry Edwards on the stand.

At the eleven o'clock service President Edwards was the speaker.

Participating in the ministry of music were the following: Warren Tait, Barbara McGuire, and Barbara Savage giving musical preludes to each service; Fred Savage, soloist at the morning preaching hour; and the district choir.—Reported by PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL

District Retreat Held

DENVER, COLORADO.—A district-wide young adult retreat was held in Denver, January 17-18. It was the culminating retreat of a series of three regional retreats held throughout Eastern Colorado District since reunion in August.

There were one hundred ten registered adults and a few children in attendance. This included a representation from the following branches: Seibert, Wray, Colorado Springs, Yuma, Fort Morgan, Genoa, Denver, Fort Collins, and Boulder in Colorado and Champion, Nebraska; Cheyenne, Wyoming, and Independence, Missouri. A Colorado School of Mines student from Peru, South America, was also present.

High lights of the retreat which had as its theme, "Christ of the Latter Days," featured classes by Gerald Gabriel, district missionary; Ward A. Hougas, district president; and Elder Perry Mair; a forum discussion led by the district young adult council; a tour through the plant of the Denver Post, a local newspaper; a buffet banquet; an early morning prayer service; a talent show, in which all the represented groups participated; an evensong; and a concluding sermon by Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs.

Glen Rose, district young adult supervisor, and the Denver young adults were in charge of the retreat.—Reported by MARY E. CASH

Three Men Called to Priesthood

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—During the service on February 1, three young men received the call to the priesthood through the pastor, Elder Elbert Guilbert, and were later voted upon and approved at a branch business meeting. They were Robert Alberts, called to the office of priest, and Donald Davis and Paul Cline called to office of deacon.

The pastor attended the Professional and Business Men's Institute in Independence, Missouri, February 11-14.

Improvements on Church Building

WALTHILL, NEBRASKA.—At the annual business meeting, the following officers were elected: pastor, Russell Maryott; secretary, Bessie Taylor; treasurer, George Taylor; church school director and Zion's League leader, Mazie Wingett; women's leader, Beulah Maryott.

The officers of the Zion's League were installed at a candlelight service on November 16. All the members were presented membership cards. The League entertained the Fremont, Nebraska, League on December 7. A panel discussion, "Youth's Part in Building the Kingdom of God," using young people from each League was conducted. A social hour following the panel was held at the Maryott home. On December 21, the Walthill League was entertained at an oyster supper at Fremont. The evening was spent visiting shut-ins, some of whom were not members of the church. The young people sang carols for them.

The choir with the co-operation of the church school presented a Christmas vesper service. The program was under the direction of the choir director, Russell Maryott.

The quarterly fellowship dinner was held in October. District President Frank Fry showed pictures taken while he was serving as a missionary in England.

Seventy James Daugherty was a guest speaker on September 24.

The women's department meets in the homes of members twice a month. Several money-making plans have been used successfully. The money is being used to improve the church building. Improvements to date include a new baptismal font, new carpeting for the aisle, and choir robes which were made by the group. The floor and pulpit have also been refinished.

Danny Lee Maryott, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Maryott, was blessed January 5 by his grandfather, Elder Russell Maryott, and Elder George Taylor.

On December 28, Betty and Lucille Calkins were baptized. On February 22, Gustavus White, his wife Laura and three of their children, Francia, Laura May, and Lethia, were baptized. The ordinance was performed by Elder Russell Maryott. Brother and Sister White's other children, Frank, Gustavus, Jr., and Lavone were blessed at a service on March 8.—Reported by MAZIE WINGETT

Retreat for Young People Held

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—A district youth retreat was held at the Moundville Branch on February 21 and 22. Opening services were directed by the district missionary, James S. Menzies. Classwork was conducted during the afternoon under the direction of Sister Dell Menzies, Don Treiber, and Neil Nixon. The evening's services were concluded by a narration entitled "The Lord Hath Need of Thee," directed and narrated by Brother Menzies, assisted by choral and reading groups using a large percentage of the young people present.

Sunday's services began with a fellowship. A class was taught by Brother Lawrence H. Phillips, district young people's leader, followed by the eleven o'clock sermon by Brother Menzies. The district youth choir sang under the direction of Sister Anna Schoenian, director of music. The noon meal was served in the dining rooms of the church by the women of the Moundville Branch.

A forum was held in the afternoon. The retreat was closed by a service of dedication.—Reported by MABEL L. SMITH

District Women Meet

MOBILE DISTRICT.—An institute for the women of the district was held February 8, at Escatawpa, Mississippi. Representatives from nine branches were present. The general theme was "Kingdom Witnesses." Elders Jack Pray and A. N. Barnes presided over a fellowship service, and Brother Pray lectured at the following hour. The men of the branch prepared a covered dish lunch at noon. District Leader Lola McQueen presided at a meeting in the afternoon. Edna Miller explained the importance of the Handbook and stressed the use by all leaders and members. Annie Mae Lavinghouze was the soloist. At the following meeting, Sister Helen Pray was the speaker. There was a record attendance at the institute.

The Mobile and Pensacola Districts sponsored a religious education institute at the Mobile Branch, March 7 and 8. Apostle Reed M. Holmes was the guest teacher.—Reported by MYRTLE JENNINGS

Three Baptized

MARLIN, TEXAS.—Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe conducted a missionary series, February 22-March 8. There was a baptismal service on March 8, at which time the following people were baptized: Alice Chane, Will Spicer, and Dennise Hale. The candidates were baptized by Elder Earl R. Allen, pastor of the Marlin Branch. Confirmation service was held following the baptismal service.—Reported by ARTHUR P. ALLEN

Elder Arthur Rock, of the General Church radio and audio-visual department, gave a lecture recital at Lee's Summit, Missouri, March 27. He presented an oral interpretation of "Lost Boundaries."

WEDDLE IN WICHITA

Elder Franklyn S. Weddle, director of music for the General Church, was in Wichita, Kansas, March 28 and 29. On Saturday he served as an adjudicator for the Naftzger Young Artists auditions for the Wichita society. On Sunday he preached the eleven o'clock sermon at the Wichita church, after instructing a class for the priesthood in the morning. He conducted a class for music workers in the branch in the afternoon.

They Stand Tall

REAL LIFE STORIES OF GREAT MEN AND WOMEN

by Kenneth Hall

You don't have to stand more than six feet tall to be head and shoulders above the crowd. The true height of a man or woman who "stands tall" is measured by how good and great they are. This is a book of fifteen stories for worship, church school classes, and good reading that will appeal to all ages above the primary group.

Request for Prayers

Mrs. Fred Womack, Mayer, Arizona, requests prayers for a nonmember friend, Grace Garretson, who is suffering with arthritis.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Edna Richardson, 503 Blue Ridge, Kansas City, Missouri, who has been ill for years.

Prayers are requested for the physical recovery of Mrs. A. F. Puckett of Hillsboro, Ohio, and for the spiritual welfare of her children.

J. C. McConaughy, Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, requests prayers for himself. He has no vision in his right eye, and only half vision in his left. He also has arthritis. He would like to be able to see well enough to read and take care of himself.

ENGAGEMENTS

Bernauer-Hands

Mr. and Mrs. Floris M. Hands of Kansas City, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara, to Norman L. Bernauer, son of Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Bernauer of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Both are graduates of Graceland College, and Norman is a member of the WDAF-TV staff in Kansas City. The wedding is planned for late summer.

WEDDINGS

Wagner-Levitt

Dena J. Levitt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Levitt of Kalispell, Montana, and George F. Wagner, son of Mrs. Tillie Wagner of Butte, Montana, and Mr. John Wagner of Bigford, Montana, were married February 13 at the home of the bride's parents. Elder Joseph W. Minthorn performed the wedding ceremony.

Fisher-Hansen

Joan Hansen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Hansen of Bedison, Missouri, and Lt. Paul Fisher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fisher of Maryville, Missouri, were married March 22 at the Reorganized Church in Bedison, Elder Emery Jennings officiating. Both are graduates of Northwest Missouri State College. The bride also attended Graceland and at present is teaching in Lamoni High School. They will make their home in Detroit, Michigan, where Lt. Fisher is stationed with the Air Corps.

DEATHS

BARHAM.—Jean Marie, was born November 8, 1896, and died January 9, 1953, at her home in Delhi, Ontario. She had been a devoted member of the Reorganized Church since July 17, 1921, and was active also in the Women's Institute and the Home-School Association.

She is survived by her husband; three daughters: Mrs. William McLeod, Mrs. Ernest Paquette, and Mary, all of Delhi; five sons: Bert, Robert, Ross, and Leslie of Delhi, and John of London, Ontario; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Porter Chapel, Elders J. C. Stuart and Clarence Weeks officiating. Interment was in Delhi cemetery.

EMMETT.—Charles Stephen, son of Joseph and Frances Cleveland Emmett, was born October 10, 1880, at Reed City, Michigan (date of death not given). With his family he moved from Michigan to Kansas City, Kansas, in 1885, and in 1895 to Kansas City, Missouri, where he spent the remainder of his life. For the past forty-five years he had operated retail bakeries in various parts of the city. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight and was a devoted member throughout his life.

Surviving are three brothers: William J., Claude L. and Silas W. Emmett, all of Kansas City. Mrs. Emmett died in 1938. Funeral services were conducted by Elder E. W. Lloyd.

JOHNSON.—Ramon J., son of Richard R. and Elizabeth Patmore Johnson, was born June 30, 1897, at Parish, Illinois, and died March 12, 1953, at St. Joseph Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri. He spent his early childhood in Knob Noster, Missouri, then moved to Independence. On April 12, 1930, he was married to Lillian M. Barnett, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 27, 1906, and had held the office of teacher since September 29, 1940. He attended the Mt. Washington Church and was president of the second quorum of teachers in Center Stake.

Besides his wife he leaves two stepsons: LeRoy A. and Donald E. Barnett; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Violet Cole; a sister, Mrs. Bessie Curtis; and two step-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Mt. Washington Church. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

OWINGS.—Allen G., was born in 1877 at Harrisburg, Oregon, and died March 6, 1953, at his home near Atherton, Missouri. He was married in May, 1902, to Pearl Crandell, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1952 at the Atherton Reorganized Church. He was baptized in 1921, ordained a teacher in 1924, and an elder in 1927. Since 1943 he and his family had lived on a farm near Atherton.

He is survived by his wife, Pearl; a daughter, Miss Mildred Owings of the home; two sons: Marshall of Independence and Henry of Geary; and one grandson. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Wendell Van Tuyl and Ammon Beebe at the church in Atherton. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WHITE.—Mary Emma, daughter of Charles Martin and Harriett Ann Mills, was born June 29, 1869, in Pittsfield, Illinois, and died February 26, 1953, at her home in Independence, Missouri, where she had resided since 1884. She was married on December 6, 1894, to Alfred D. White; four children were born to them. A daughter, Helen White Eslin, died in 1928, and her husband in 1941. Baptized on October 3, 1886, she was a devoted worker all her life. For many years she served in the church school in first the Brick Church and later in Stone Church. She was a charter member of the Hawthorne Society, organized to raise funds for the purchase of the Stone Church organ.

Surviving are two sons: Paul White of the home and Frank White of Independence; a daughter, Mable White, also of the home; two brothers: C. W. and C. A. Mills, both of Independence; and four grandchildren.

THE VOICE

Some new people moved in next door and brought their dog with them. He is old, as dogs go, a kind of canine patriarch, all seriousness, dignity, and responsibility. He is going blind, too, and finds it difficult to identify his friends. When we came out the door, he challenged us with a loud bark, as a faithful guardian should. Then we spoke to him and soon made friends. Now he listens for the familiar voice, and when he hears it he puts aside his authority and wags his tail.

We think it worth while to be kind to pets and to all small things. The mood of kindness is a pleasant thing to cultivate. The practice makes it so much easier to be kind to people. The art of kindness is one of the best of all the arts of life. L. J. L.

CRUCIFIED ANEW

I've seen my Savior crucified anew
Upon a cross built up by hate and greed,
More ruthlessly betrayed than Judas did,
The crown of thorns more mockingly his mead.

I found him with his friends but cast aside
While petty quarrels and rivalry held sway,
His friends preferring self to brotherhood,
Unheeding that destruction lay that way.

We cannot sense the greatness of his love.
Our love is cramped and narrowed by four walls.
We seek and vie for greatness, but forget
His counsel that the greatest serve them all.

More cruel far than cross of wood could be,
Or nails that tore, or spear that pierced his side,
We crucify our Lord anew upon
The cross of broken faith and love denied.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Heard on the radio: It isn't what you eat that makes ulcers in your stomach; it's what's eating you.

SEEK YE FIRST

Seek ye for world riches?
Seek ye for world fame?
Or seek ye for the kingdom
Established in His name?

Earthly joys will perish,
Earthly "suns" will wane;
But if ye seek the kingdom
Ye shall not seek in vain.

Then, seek ye not the fleeting
To quench your mortal thirst,
Heaven's treasure-store is promised those Who seek the kingdom first.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

We'd Like
You to Know . . .

Harry L. Doty

FOLLOWING IN THE FOOTSTEPS of his father has been a happy experience for Harry L. Doty. His father, B. H. Doty, was under General Church appointment as a Seventy for nineteen years. Harry was ordained a Seventy in 1950. He says, "My experience in the church, especially under appointment, has been the happiest in my life." He was born in 1911 and since he was eight years old when he was baptized, he has "always been in the church." He has held all the offices in a branch that a man can, as well as all the district offices. When he accepted General Church appointment, he was music director, counselor to the district president, and pastor of the Traverse City Branch, where he had been pastor for ten years.

He is one appointee who was sent to his home area and since then has not moved. He was born in South Boardman, Michigan. In 1920 he moved to Traverse City where he has lived ever since. After high school—he was ordained a priest when he was a senior—he went to work in a grocery store and stayed for twelve years. After that he was a salesman for a meat packing company. When he accepted church appointment in 1949 he was sales manager for the company.

In 1931 he married Vera V. Donner. They have three daughters, Nancy Dee, 14; Darlene Kay, 10; and Diane Vera, 3. He is a county official for the Girl Scouts, and committee chairman for the Boy Scouts. His hobbies are photography, fishing, and meeting people. His special interest is exploring new areas of ministry in the church.

ATTEND EDITORS' MEETING IN WASHINGTON

President Israel A. Smith, accompanied by Elder Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor, attended the Associated Church Press Annual Meeting of the editors held in Washington, D. C., on April 8, 9, and 10. President Smith returned for the beginning of the Institute in Evangelism on April 12. Brother Hartshorn traveled to Richmond Hill, New York, where he visited his brother, L. A. Hartshorn, and preached at the Brooklyn Branch on April 12. He returned to Independence on April 13.

SPEAKS IN INDIANA

President F. Henry Edwards spoke at the Easter Sunday service in Gary, Indiana. The branch also observed the anniversary of the first year in the new church on that day. Elder D. H. Smith is the pastor at Gary.

AT EASTER SERVICE

President W. Wallace Smith was at Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri, for the Easter Communion service, associated with Elder Fred O. Davies, stake president, and Bishop Howard Miller. On the evening of April 6, Brother and Sister Smith were in Warrensburg, Missouri, to attend a meeting of the Central Missouri Stake in commemoration of the anniversary of the founding of the church. Following a worship service which was arranged by Elder Harry Simons, stake president, Sister Smith spoke to the group on "The Call of the Church to the Companions of Priesthood." Brother Smith spoke on "The Call of the Church to the Members of the Priesthood."

ATTEND INSTITUTE IN CHICAGO

Bishop and Mrs. G. L. DeLapp attended the women's institute April 9 and 10 at the Brainerd Branch in Chicago, Illinois. Bishop DeLapp was the speaker at the banquet on Thursday evening, and both he and Sister DeLapp were instructors at the institute, which had as its theme, "The Keys of the Kingdom." Brother DeLapp spoke regarding his trip to the European missions in his talk at the banquet.

HOLD MEETINGS

Members of the Councils of Twelve and Seventy met April 8, 9, and 10 in the West College Street Church. The Seventies held meetings Friday and Saturday of the same week.

MESLE IN CHICAGO

Elder Carl Mesle, General Church youth director, attended a youth conference of the Chicago District, April 3 and 4. He was the guest speaker at the banquet on Saturday. Then he went to Ann Arbor, Michigan, on Saturday night to meet with Dr. Lawrence Brockway in regard to plans for the fall College Students Conference, which, it is hoped, will be held in Rochester, New York, over the Labor Day week end.

SPEAKS AT SERVICE

Elder Charles D. Neff was in El Dorado Springs, Missouri, on April 3. He spoke at a union service for Good Friday.

Jesus Saves?

"And thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matthew 1: 21.

WE WERE DRIVING HOME for the holidays. As we rounded a blind curve an old car passed us at high speed, a very dangerous highway practice. On the back of the car was a sign, "Jesus Saves."

In the next few moments a number of reflections came to mind regarding that foolish and dangerous driver and the sign he carried on his car.

Will Jesus save that driver in his folly? If a person ever needed someone to save him, that young fellow did.

And if Jesus saves, what does he save one from? Under what conditions does he save? We doubted that the young man who had the sign ever thought of these things.

Jesus saves? Well, that one requires some thinking. What kind of people does Jesus save?

I KNEW A MAN who was reared in a church home. He attended Sunday school, and when the time came he was baptized and confirmed with a fine little group of children. In his school days he was a promising lad, and the church people had great hope for him. After his university studies were finished, he went into business and the church people heard less of him for a time. He was succeeding in his work, and he associated with people who valued success above all else in life.

Then he took up some of their interests and ways. He began to accept the liquor they offered him. Soon the habit fastened itself upon him, and he could not quit. More and more money was poured out in drink, and it took more of his time, too. Then his work began to fail, and he lost his job. He tried time after time to quit, but the chain of this bondage was too strong to be broken.

He became desperate. He knew that unless he could find help, he would be lost and ruined. What could he do? When he lost his job, his money went; and when his money was gone, his friends left him, too. There was no one to care. He felt utterly alone.

Then he remembered his childhood faith and the prayers that the family had said at home. He recalled the blessings that had come to them in times of need. He remembered his Heavenly Father.

So, from the depths of despair, he began to pray. He turned to God in the conviction that there was nowhere else to go. He placed his life in God's hands and made a covenant that if God would help him to be free of his sin, restoring him to freedom and health, he would live a different life. And the miracle for which he prayed happened to him. He was made free of the sin that becomes death. He was like a new man.

Yes, Jesus saves. He saved this man from drink and despair. Why? Because the man wanted to be saved, and he sought the way of salvation.

THERE WAS A MAN who from his earliest youth was the victim of a terrible temper. Of course the circumstances of his life, the trials and problems he had, were partly responsible. But he was partly responsible, too; for he let himself be subject to conditions rather than rising above them to control them.

When he was old enough to work he found that he could not keep a job very long. He was a good workman, and for a little while it would seem that everything was going to be all right. Then one day somebody would say or do something, perhaps stupidly or meanly, that would arouse the wild nature within him. Flying into a rage, he would feel the storm of passion sweeping over him, and he would become like a fiend. He shouted and swore and said things that he could not remember later on. When it was over, he was sick, exhausted and ashamed. He wanted to die, but he did not have the courage to take his own life. But his job would be gone, and he went away to another place to begin life again.

Then he had a vision of himself in a fit of anger, and in that vision he saw himself as one possessed of an evil demon. And he knew that sorrow would be the reward and death the end of his ways.

Then someone saw something good deep in his soul and wanted to save him. He told the man the gospel story, and the day came when the two men knelt side by side, as brothers in spirit, to pray for the afflicted one. And the end of that story, after many days of anxiety and prayer, was that he stood up in a prayer meeting to bear a testimony of his new freedom. He took the gospel into his life.

Yes, Jesus saves. He saved that man from a terrible fate.

IN EVERY LIFE there is some fatal poison of character that can destroy us, and will destroy us if we do not find the means and the power to control it. But there is also dormant within us something that makes us heirs of the promises of heaven, something that calls us to be the sons and daughters of God. It is the Lord Jesus, and he alone, who can call it out and make it grow.

"Jesus Saves"—two little words that make skeptics laugh, and the foolish turn aside. They seem so dogmatic, so platitudinous. Yet wise men and women know that they are of the eternal truth that lies at the heart of the world.

Yes, Jesus saves. He saves those who love and seek him because they have a great need of him.

Dr. G. L. Harrington Dead

Just as the Herald goes to press, Monday, April 13, we are advised of the death of Dr. G. Leonard Harrington of 1406 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Further details will be given in a later issue of the Herald. Dr. Harrington was the General Church physician for quite a number of years.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Notice to Pastors and Parents

Under the heading, "Things to Get Done," The Pastor's Handbook has reminded each pastor to make plans for a prebaptismal class between Easter and Children's Day.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

We are indeed pleased to make prominent the following interesting and informative letter dated March 6, 1953, from Brother and Sister R. L. Amsberry, formerly of Denison, Iowa, now in Iran:

The Amsberrys are in the heart of the Moslem world at Meshed, the city of the Moslem shrine, second only to Mecca. Thousands of pilgrims come to this city every year to visit their shrine. It is so sacred to the people that a story is told of a young couple on their honeymoon who visited the shrine. The place was so crowded that the young man became ill and vomited on the floor. He was taken and beheaded for defiling the shrine. We are also told that if a pig should be turned loose in it, the people would destroy the building.

My work here is that of regional (state) and vocational agriculturist or state supervisor. For the time being, I also am in charge of the general education program for the region. This week and next, while the director is away, I am acting regional director in charge of all Point 4 (technical co-operation in Iran) work here in Meshed. This includes work in agriculture, education, health, veterinarian, engineering, etc. So

This announcement was made in January, February, March, and again in April.

This is a reminder to those who had good intentions but didn't get the prebaptismal class started. There is still time. Order immediately sufficient copies of This Is Jesus' Church (Herald House, 50c per copy), appoint a teacher, and enlist the children. Make sure you have all who were blessed eight years ago, plus the others.

Parents, you can help get this class started. Bring your children to the pastor for prebaptismal training. Volunteer to help. You can assist in making Children's Day, 1953, a day they will remember.

REED M. HOLMES

General Director

Department of Religious Education

far, I like the work; the people are very courteous and co-operative. Only occasionally do I see "Yankee, Go Home" here. There are many of these signs in Tehran. Apparently they are placed by boys who are hired to write them but do not know what they mean. Usually a few days later the signs will have been covered over with mud or plaster by some of the Iranian people. The Americans do not pay much attention to them.

Administrators of the Point 4 program, because of the similarity of Iran to Utah, have made a contract with Utah University to supply personnel. Consequently there are many Mormon boys here. Practically all we have met have been very fine people. Surprisingly, most of the men are elders, high priests, or seventies. I wonder if they are taking advantage of their opportunity here. Because of the similarity of the names of the two churches, I am asked why the difference. Of course, I then proceed to explain.

We have met a host of very fine people from all over the world, and have had an opportunity to tell several of them about our church. One couple, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Hartsinger, Expert Du Bureau International Du Travail, Geneve, loaned by the Holland Government to the United Nations to help set up labor laws here, live in Rotterdam. I seemed to have lost their address, but I had sent it to the Herald to forward a Book of Mormon and an Inspired Version to them. We spent many hours explaining the church to them, and they always came back for more. I hope that Apostle Oakman will visit them while he is in Holland. We believe that someday they will join the church and will be of great help. Both Mrs. Amsberry and I felt as if we should call them Brother and Sister from the time we met them. Our friendship has been mutual from the start. The manager of the hotel where we spent a month in Tehran asked if we could suggest a home where they could send their boy to live in the States while attending school there from the sixth grade through college. We told them of the home of my brother and of Ellsworth Johnson at Chariton, Iowa, home of Mrs. Amsberry's niece. We told Mr. and Mrs. Sharifi that the boy would be expected to attend church in these homes, but that he would not be asked to join the church without parental consent. They were perfectly agreeable to this. They said they were only sorry that their boy couldn't be in our home. They hoped that if we returned in two years their second boy might return with us and live with us while he attends school. They did not seem to expect other than the boys would become Christian.

Although we may not be able to tell of our church to these people in a direct way, we believe we are fortunate in being able to enter into their lives because of our official capacity. We hope that we can conduct ourselves so that these people will want to know something about us and what makes us act the way we do. We also hope that we will be able to do enough for them that they will remember us to the extent that if and when the gospel can be brought to them, they will want to accept it. In the meantime, perhaps we can tell the story to other Americans and technicians from other countries. Needless to say, we try not to miss any opportunities.

We would recommend that other members of the church apply for service under Point 4. There is a need for technicians in many fields. Those interested may write the Federal Security Agency, Washington 25, D.C., for application blanks.

The political flare-ups in Iran give us some concern, but so far we have not worried about them. I guess they are more or less a normal way of life here as in Latin America.

I will be glad when the Heralds catch up with us and we can keep in touch, if not currently, with what is going on in America. Our prayers are with you.

The following is excerpted from a letter from Ray Whiting, written after three weeks of ministry at Springfield, Missouri:

Seventeen people gave their names for baptism, thirteen of whom were baptized while I was there. The other four will be baptized later.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The Positive Fruitage of Eternal Judgment

By Fred O. Davies

A sermon given at the Campus on August 3, 1952

WE UNDERSTAND that the purpose of the church, in comparison to most other denominations, is to seek to bring forth and establish the rule of Christ upon the earth. The kingdom of God is the intent of God in the restoring of the gospel. The kingdom of God is salvation, for salvation is only to be seen, measured, decreed, and determined in terms of the kingdom. Whenever we think of salvation in its fullest interpretation we must of necessity consider it in terms of the kingdom.

Our attitude toward the challenge of the church, the judgment that we pass upon it, will decide for us in terms of our salvation, either heaven or hell—whatever we might imply by those two particular words. Most people today tend to interpret salvation in terms of either going to heaven or going to hell. It is not my intention to dwell upon those two words and all that they might mean. I hardly think that we will have to wait till we move through the veil that guards the door to immortal life in order to know what salvation is; right here upon this earth we can find out as we participate in the establishing of the kingdom.

We should have accomplished one thing by this time in the Campus series. Any doubts that we might have had concerning the kingdom of God should have been done away with; any doubts that we might have had concerning the purpose of the church should have been done away with. All of the speakers I have heard have mentioned that the primary purpose of our individually coming into a baptismal covenant with Jesus Christ, and the purpose of the Restoration Movement, is to seek to bring forth and establish the kingdom. There is a great need for us to emphasize this thought, because of the things that do happen both in the church and out of the church.

A CHURCH SCHOOL TEACHER came to me and said, "Brother Davies, what are we going to do? We teach the children both in the church school on Sunday and in our vacation church school about the kingdom of God. We tell them of Zion and what it means and what it entails—the glory of it, the purpose and majesty of it. Yet when they go home some parents say it cannot be." After being told at church school the promise of God, these children go home with all their childish enthusiasm to their parents and try to tell them of what they have learned. Then some of these parents send those children back to their teachers with the observation that Mommy or Daddy say it cannot be. Straightway those children are torn between the beliefs and the presentation of the teacher and the decree of father and mother.

In some instances I suppose those parents are not members of our church; those who are, obviously have never had the vision of the kingdom. Some may be members of the church who, because of lack of neighborliness in their vicinity, have lost their faith.

They could have said to their children, "Well, we need that kind of thing; and while it may seem impossible in my lifetime, at least I'll try to help you do something about it." That is the kind of impediments our teachers face as they endeavor to spread this promise of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

On the other hand we have heard men say that it is not sufficient for them just to believe in the kingdom, it is not sufficient for them just to say that it might be possible in their children's time. One particular elder stood forth boldly and said, "I have ceased to talk about its being possible in my children's time, or my children's children's time. I am from now on going to say that it is possible in my day." That is the attitude of those who are really kingdom minded. I wish that more of the ministry would take the attitude reflected in this man's preaching as he talks about the kingdom of God being possible in his day. I would like us to believe tonight that it is possible. I would like us to think in terms of the attitude and the spirit of this man who said, "It will be in my day." I am not very old, yet I have seen the world turned upside down. Military, economic, social, and scientific powers have turned this world upside down. We live in the age when tremendous changes take place overnight, therefore we should be cautious when we say that the kingdom of God cannot be now or in an age to come.

I have just turned forty years of age, and yet I know from experience that the German nation has twice during my life risen to military power and under different leadership has endeavored to conquer the world.

I have seen the great nation of Russia turn from a monarchy, a government by the emperor, to the Communistic state that it is today. I have seen the nation of Great Britain come down from the leadership of the world in every sense of that word and take second or third place among the nations. Recently King Faruk of Egypt thought he was established firmly upon his throne and able to defy the western powers including Great Britain; then some general in his own army took over the leadership of that country, and the next thing we knew King Faruk had abdicated and was living on an island in the Mediterranean.

WE LIVE IN A TIME when tremendous changes of different kinds take place. Therefore we cannot discount the possibility of great changes developing in the fashioning of the kingdom of God. This country itself is symbolic of the possibility of immediate and tremendous transformation. By way of illustration, I went to Colorado recently. One of the things one is expected to do is to visit Pike's Peak. Before I went to Pike's Peak, I visited the shrine of Will Rogers. On that particular shrine in the mountains of Colorado there is an inscription that says in the year 1806 a lieutenant of the American Army, as he climbed those mountains with his party, looked to Pike's Peak and said, "No mortal man shall ever scale yon heights." He returned to Washington leaving that statement to be handed down generation to generation. I am one of thousands, I suppose, who have driven their automobiles around that winding path cut by men to the very top of that peak toward which Lieutenant Pike looked. Some things are impossible according to some men, but we now live when the hopes of good men can be realized.

In a book my daughter received from high school called Adventures in American Literature I read that in the year 1600 or thereabouts when the Pilgrim Fathers first landed upon the shores of America they lived between the sea and the forest, afraid of what was beyond the fringe. For a while they lived in huts and holes in the ground or in caves which they dug for themselves. Those people were met by Indians who were sometimes friendly and sometimes otherwise. Then, according to a certain law that was passed in Philadelphia later, these people were made to move into houses of stone or brick in order to guarantee or assure that some progress would be made.

Can you imagine that 350 years ago this United States was inhabited by just a few hundred people who were content to abide in holes in the ground? It demanding vision and power on the part of others to urge these people to move from such conditions. You and I see land populated now by millions of people. We see it spanned by great railroads and highways. We can travel in an airplane from almost any city to any other city in a matter of minutes or hours, compared to the weeks and months our forefathers took. We gain from these simple illustrations a better idea of what is possible.

Furthermore, we should give thanks to God and rejoice when we think that these people came from many countries with different backgrounds and customs, yet merged and molded themselves into a united nation under the desire for freedom and a firm belief in God. The conviction that God had endowed every man with certain rights not only inspired them in their adventurous conquest of this country's resources, but was the foundation of their understanding of government. They developed a system of government, characterized by the statement beloved of all Americans, "... of the people, by the people, for the people." This was not achieved over a period of thousands of years, but a mere hundred or two. Take all of these factors—a wild and challenging country vast in size and possibilities, a handful of people from different nations united in a desire for freedom—and in a period of about three hundred years (1600 to 1953) the United States of today—God's own country—was built.

By presenting these facts we are producing evidence of man's ability, in partnership with God, to achieve great things. We are now able to pass judgment—eternal judgment, one might say—and the verdict is that the kingdom is possible.

H. G. Wells was looking back on the apparent progress of mankind when he endeavored to evaluate the scientific and engineering achievements of the nations of the earth. When he looked back over the span of time he observed that there was a certain date when "light and truth" seemed to rest upon mankind. It was then that men began to do wonderful things they had never done before. He said the year 1830 marked that date. We of the Restoration say it is not incidental, because God himself said that light and truth should break forth from the earth in 1830. I believe that light and truth pervaded all the realms of nature in God's universe. At the same time that God blessed Joseph Smith with the hope and promise of the gospel, other men were enlightened in their scientific achievement. Thus 1830 is an important date in a twofold way. What I am saying is that men of science who probe into the mysteries of the universe do so in accordance with law. Just as it applies in the physical realm, so it applies in what we would call the spiritual realm, if we can distinguish between the two.

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9 explains that there are kingdoms and laws which govern them, and that which is governed by law is also preserved by law. That is what any scientist will tell us. If he abides by the laws which govern the particular field in which he is working, certain results will come. Scientists know that our Heavenly Father's vast universe is governed and ruled by those laws. Sometimes we say they are divine. Those laws bring into being eternal judgment. Unless we abide by them the judgment will be to our condemnation. If we turn to Genesis 6: 62, 63 in the Inspired Version we'll find statements that are in keeping with those found in Section 85 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

A DAM WAS GIVEN to understand that he must be born again into the kingdom of heaven, of water and of the spirit, and be cleansed by blood:

... even the blood of mine Only Begotten, that ye may be sanctified from all sin and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For by the water ye keep the commandment, by the Spirit ye are justified, and by the blood ye are sanctified.

Those three elements which are so natural and essential to everyday life God himself takes and uses in terms of the gospel. If we abide by these laws we can be transformed. We can discover what we are capable of really being in terms of sons and daughters of God. He says that if we abide by these laws, which might be considered spiritual and yet contain physical elements, we can discover the mysteries of the kingdom.

"By the water ye keep the commandment"—through obedience. "By the Spirit ye are justified"—here is the assurance that we are doing the right thing. "By the blood ye are sanctified"—set apart and made holy. Sometimes we are accused of not believing in the blood of Jesus Christ as being essential to salvation. Our friends of other denominations may tell us we don't stress the blood of Jesus Christ enough. Yet, according to the Inspired Version, these three elements, typical of the laws of God, are binding upon us.

Thus we are saying that at all times eternal judgment is God's judgment. While there is a special day called Judgment Day on the other side of the veil, there is more to it than that. Every day is judgment day. Eternal judgment is not altogether a question of time. It is a question of quality. We are judged by the hour. Every day, week, and month that goes by, judgment is passed upon us either to our good or otherwise. Eternal judgment is the means whereby all through life God's rights are proected and men receive according to their attitudes. To supplement that thought, in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12 we find:

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise ye could not abound.

GOD HIMSELF preserves those things that rightfully belong to him by laws he has set and gives to men those things which they are worthy of, according to their attitudes. Eternal judgment is not only a part of life; it is life itself. It is typical of God's character. It is eternal in a sense of quality rather than in duration of time.

Eternal judgment demands that we see things as God sees them and then act accordingly, practicing the judgments of God with regard to our own actions. Eternal judgment demands that we look upon things about us as God looks upon them, and having seen them in his way we practice the evaluation of God with regard to our own actions.

This guardianship on the part of God in terms of eternal judgment was symbolized in the Garden of Eden. I don't think any of us can talk about eternal judgment without giving consideration to the Garden of Eden. In Genesis 3: 31 we find that God—after he had sent Adam and Eve out of the Garden and all that it represented—placed cherubim and a flaming sword at its gate. The significant thing about this particular Scripture is "This flaming sword turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life." It wasn't stationary, it wasn't just held by cherubim so that a man could avoid it and go on one side or the other. It is symbolic of this guardianship, this judgment, that God himself sets by the laws that are in operation. This sword is the word of God. It is a symbol of light and truth. In Revelation 1: 16 John talks about the personage he saw: "... in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shining in his strength." When John asked what it represented, he was told that he had come in judgment upon the churches in that day.

In Revelation 19 we find the idea of the word of God going forth from the mouth of this personage "clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called The Word of God . . . and out of his mouth proceedeth the word of God, and with it he will smite the nations; and he will rule them with the word of his mouth; and he treadeth the wine-press in the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on a vesture, and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS." The flaming sword, a symbol of light and truth, is the word of God. It symbolizes the laws of eternal judgment which operate and function in all the realms of life. If we abide by them, the positive fruitage will be the kingdom. God desires that this church shall not be like the churches in the day of John on the Isle of Patmos when they were found neither hot nor cold, but lukewarm. We are to be a church that shall be a judge, set upon a hill.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out. Behold, I, the Lord, have made my church in these last days, like unto a judge sitting on a hill, or in a high place, to judge the nations; for it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars, and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

This helps us appreciate the possibilities of what we would call the positive fruitage of eternal judgment.

God looks to the day when, as the result of our obedience to these eternal laws, the judgment to be passed upon us or the result of our actions will be as a church set on the hill. There, because of our quality of life, we shall judge the things that pertain to the kingdom of God or Zion. The liars and hypocrites, because of this righteous power, shall be cast out from the midst of the people. His church will set standards and maintain them to the extent that the rest of the nations of the earth will say, "Come, let us go up to Zion and learn of her ways, for out of Zion goeth forth the law." They will be able to see for themselves the things that are worth while and lasting in life. This judgment which we shall offer to the world will be the comparison that the nations of the earth shall be able to make between what they have and what we have. Psalm 48 suggests that someday all evil will be wiped away. Think of the ideal that is fostered by the Psalmist in this.

I AM WONDERING if we should take time to talk about the evils. If we do, it should be with the idea that it inspires us to think of the more positive things that could come forth. It is a tragic world in which we live, full of contradictions. It is a day and a time when men hardly know which way to turn.

Is this our judgment?

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.

The kingdom won't come at the snap of the fingers. It will come through obedience to the laws of God.

Eternal judgment is a lifelong thing. We live in wonderful times, fraught with wonderful possibilities if we will endeavor to do the things that God wants us to do. Some of us consider that the kingdom of God is a problem to be faced. Some think it a burden to be borne. Some think of it as an opportunity to work with God. Can we not also say it is a way of life? Tonight we individually pass judgment upon the question of whether the kingdom of God can come upon the earth. "Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." —Matthew 25: 35.

The kingdom of God requires that we be of service to our fellow-men. It is not a problem; it is not a task; it is not a burden to be borne. It is a challenge. It is a wonderful opportunity. When we consider judgment we find that those who least expect reward will receive it, but those who thought they would be rewarded will be cast out from the presence of God (Matthew 25: 42-47).

Is there anything that the world needs today greater than service and ministry? According to Matthew, Christ will judge us by our ability to see and appreciate the needs of others in their everyday life. That helps us understand why God is mightily concerned that his kingdom be established here on this earth. Let us be determined to abide by the laws and principles of our Heavenly Father so that Zion shall come soon and the nations of the earth shall be judged by the things they find therein.

The "New" Bible After Six Months

INTEREST in the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, which came out early in October, appears to be growing on account of criticisms for and against it by the clergy and Bible students. It seems also to have revived somewhat the old issue between "fundamentalism" and the so-called "higher criticism."

Recent press reports show that among the clergy there are two positive camps, with some remaining neutral—one group enthusiastically for it; one as earnestly loyal to the King James.

We presume that the fundamentalists, however, will be more "vocal" than others, since people naturally are resentful of anything that attacks the citadel of established order. We might refrain from making any note of the controversy but for our belief that all this agitation tends to stimulate the public to do more Bible reading and studying, and that we certainly recommend.

A Presbyterian minister says:

I am for it. It is a very worth-while and good translation. Of course, I prefer some of the wordings of the King James Version, but since 1611 certain manuscripts have come to light which give a better basis for a translation.

This new translation brings up to date some points in the King James where that version is not so clear and concise as the manuscripts would indicate. The new version is not in any sense meant to do away with the King James. In many ways it follows the earlier work. But I believe the Revised Version does make an important contribution to a better understanding of the Scriptures.

A Baptist reverend has preached an entire sermon on the topic: "Ten Objections to the New Bible":

The more I study this version the more objections I find to it. It seems to me that the new Bible is an effort on the part of the modernists to weaken the fundamental doctrines of our faith. It is subtly done, usually in the footnotes, trying to prove that it is in the less authoritative manuscripts that we find clearly taught the virgin birth, the deity, and the physical resurrection of our Lord.

These three doctrines have for a half century been under attack by the liberal theologians and, having failed in the past to win their case in the court of Christian public opinion, they now resort to tampering with the eternal word of God itself.

Another strenuous objection has been made to change in the new Bible in Isaiah 7: 14, where the word "virgin" has been changed to "a young woman." Some say it denies the supernatural fact of Christ's ascension by omitting from Luke 24: 51 the words "and carried up into heaven."

The deity of Christ is "discounted," it is asserted by others, in Matthew 27: 54 and Mark 15: 39, where the new translation uses the word "a" instead of "the" in the following: "Truly this was the son of God."

A prominent Methodist preacher supports the King James, but does not resist the new version. He says:

The Guiding Light

HOW BEAUTIFUL a light can be—the welcoming lights of home, the beacon of an airport, the tiny night light, the small glow of a flashlight, or the electric lights on again after a storm. We often feel, when a strenuous night has passed, that "truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun."

Not long ago, journeying as tourists, we had to rise early and continue our way. We had spent the night in a motel in Clovis, New Mexico. Just outside the city we encountered fog, dense fog. We crept along, all eyes alert for signs, "Curve ahead," "Side Road," or "Narrow Bridge." These were there for our safety, yet scarcely discernable in the fog. It seemed almost folly to continue, when out of a tiny village along came another car to the highway, just ahead of us. Now instead of one pair of headlights we had two. Our light reached to his light. His light penetrated a bit farther into the fog. This driver seemed to be a person who knew the territory and traveled with more speed than we had allowed ourselves. Keeping a safe distance from him, yet close enough to make use of his guiding light, we trav-

The Bible does not stand on the word "virgin" or any other word or any thousand words. The trouble is too many of us have taken away much of the majesty of God and given it to the book that tells about him. When we coronate our Bible we take it out of life where it belongs. We bow down before it, instead of getting up and following it.

I believe in the Bible, and I believe that it is the inspired word of God. But that does not mean that God had to dot every "i" and cross every "t" in the original texts or in any translation. Personally, I prefer the King James Version because I believe divinely inspired men have written into it the most worshipful expression of the English language.

The wisdom of our position respecting the Bible, which we have taken from the beginning of our work, has been established, we believe, since we have accepted what is true without committing ourselves to any idea of its infallibility:

"We believe the Bible contains the word of God."

That, we recognize, is within the belief of all Christians.

We feel the present discussion is enlightening and therefore profitable.

eled with more speed and less tension. That stranger will never know what an aid he was to us. We would thank him if we could.

But what about our light? Looking behind us, we discovered another load of passengers making as much use of our light as we were of the stranger ahead. The three of us traveled together until the light of day dispelled the darkness of the fog. We no more needed the aid of each other and lost our fellow travelers.

Life is full of guiding lights. The freshman girl looks up to some senior lass and wishes to be like her. A Cub Scout makes a hero of the boy who wears the eagle. A church school teacher or a neighbor becomes the unknown ideal of another in contacts of friendship. A pastor leads his flock with spiritual light. How careful we must be about where our lights shall lead!

Christ is our great Guiding Light. We have only to look, and our Light will always be there. Following him we in turn need not fear for those who make use of our lights. None of us shall be harmed by curves ahead or narrow ways.

That All Could See

By Mrs. C. Myron Zerr

TRAVELING THE LENGTH and breadth of this great country is a part of my husband's occupation, and whenever possible I go along. It has always been our custom to find the church wherever we are, and we have carried the handy Church Directory for many years. A traveling soul needs the replenishment of Spirit found in the "House of the Lord" and knows the true meaning of the song, "the friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road are the friends of my Master, the children of God." Sometimes the visitors may make a contribution.

This fall we made a very lengthy trip through several states, and driving along we often wondered if there were any Saints in these far-from-Zion places. As we neared one particular town for a two-day stop, our minds were drawn toward finding the church. We had not heard of any organized group in this place, but it was Wednesday and we wanted to go to prayer meeting. Upon arrival, we couldn't find our Directory. However, the thought pressed us. We drove about the town and saw several other churches, but not ours. We looked in the telephone directory. There was no listing. So we decided there must not be any Reorganized Latter Day Saints here and gave up the search. Perhaps we didn't follow the right procedure. Perhaps we should have inquired at the Police Station or the City Hall. Anyway, we didn't find it.

Later, while we were on our way home, something wonderful caught our eye as the highway made a sweeping turn toward Miami, Oklahoma. It was a beautiful, well-made sign inviting us to OUR church, with the location given. It wasn't the time of day for services but we just had to drive off the main road and see the church. We decided it must be a nice one to have a sign like that, and we were there in a very short time. Chances are there is an active group at that place. A little closer home we had the same happy experience upon entering Nevada, Missouri. "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints welcomes you." Only travelers know the feeling this can bring.

Thousands and thousands of eyes see these signs each year, and no one can calculate their far-reaching effects. A simple, yet attractive sign can be made by members for from $10 to $15. (Some of our churches do not even have signs in front of their meeting places.) It is fine to draw people to the church by good lives, but when a member mentions the name of the church to a friend, it helps if the other can reply that he has heard of the church already. Effective advertising can be done through the telephone directory also, with an extra listing of the pastor's number under the name of the church. This extra listing is very nominal—usually about $.25 per month. Every time a local caller looks for a telephone number beginning near the "Re" section he would see the name of the church. Also, through these efforts, more traveling members (GI or civilian) could keep in touch with the church. The newspaper, radio, and TV offer other mediums, when finances permit.

Advertising implies action, interest, and something worth while. God hung out his brightest star to announce to all the world that Jesus was born. Jesus taught that the wise man put his light on a candlestick so that all could see.

It has been our experience that 99 per cent of our churches would fall in the category of the first place mentioned in this article, without signs, telephone listing, or other means of communication. We were surprised to learn recently through the Herald "Briefs" that there is an organized church group there with considerable activity—but not that all could see. We looked, but how could we have found it?

And by the way, how could we find our church in YOUR town?

The Life of Hubert Case

Kingfisher, Oklahoma

A very interesting thing took place at Kingfisher, Oklahoma, while Hubert was engaged in Indian work there. The Baptist preacher had four congregations, but the Indians had almost all left his church. He was doing all he could to keep them, however, and he was very kind to Hubert. When he started to preach to the Indians, the minister would invite him to stay all night at his house to talk about the Indians. He said, "If you can do anything with them, go ahead. I will help you all I can, because I cannot help them any more."

After Hubert had baptized some 150 of them, that minister's church took him out of the Indian work and sent a man from Boston to stop the Reorganized Latter Day Saints. One of the first things this man did was to write letters against the Saints to all the Indians. The Indians would bring the letters to Hubert, who would just smile and tell them the other minister was hurting himself.

Hubert told an Indian one day that the first time he saw the man on the street to point him out to him, as he wanted to talk to him. The Indian did so a few days later while the man and his wife were sitting in their spring wagon. Hubert walked across the street and spoke to them, asking the man if his name were Gibbs. He answered, "Yes, it is."

Hubert said, "Are you the man who has been writing these ugly letters to the Indians about the Latter Day Saints?" He hesitated, but answered, "Yes, I am."

Hubert said, "Another question. Do you profess to be a Christian?"

He replied, "Why, certainly."

Hubert said, "Do you remember that Jesus said, 'Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so unto them'? Would you like for me to treat you that way?"

He answered, "No, I would not."

Hubert said, "You haven't hurt me, but you have ruined yourself. These Indians are all my friends, and your influence with them is gone forever." The man went to his home in Watonga, sent in his resignation to his church, and left the country. None of the Indians ever saw him again.

While we lived in Kingfisher, we became well acquainted with many of the Cheyenne Indians. Their young people liked to come to our home to be married. Of course their Indian ceremony had already been performed, but they would come for Hubert to complete the ritual. Those who call them stoics should see how they would tremble when they stood to be married by a minister. Just like white people—who are taught to hide their feelings—when so solemn a moment comes they can't control themselves entirely. There were almost no divorces or cases of men leaving their wives while we were in Kingfisher. If a man did leave his family, he was ostracized by his tribe.

A Memorable Communion Service

At one time Hubert was with one of our men who was preaching to a group of Otoes. When the man finished his sermon, an old Indian said to Hubert, "We want you to tell us what we must do. We could not understand this man, but we Indians want an experience with God that we may know we are doing his will." When Hubert rose to his feet, he quoted the statement of Jesus, "Ye must be born again." Then he went on, "The very next verse says, 'Ye must be born of the water, and of the Spirit, or ye cannot enter the kingdom.' The kingdom of God cannot be builded by theory of man. It must be builded by the power of God, by men who have an experience with him, and people who love to enjoy his Spirit. We go back to the early days of the church and read the marvelous experiences of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and other men of those early days. They received revelations from God and built by revelations and power."

When he finished his short talk, they were much pleased, and soon afterward a number of them were baptized. In the afternoon of this same day they held a meeting to administer the Communion to those who had been baptized. When they were ready to serve the Communion, two women arose and said they had had hard feelings toward each other, but they were sorry, and each asked the other to forgive her. Their tears showed they truly repented.

To Eastern Oklahoma

Hubert was very glad when the day of debates passed. Sometimes the results were good, but more often they did harm, estranging former good friends and neighbors. He frequently wished he had never had a debate. During this year his time was spent mostly in the eastern part of the state. He had been formerly assigned to the central and western parts. In the eastern part he found many new fields. Here, as in the rest of the state where Saints had located, there were openings for preaching. One of the greatest opportunities he ever found was in Sperry. In the early days of the Restoration men believed literally that "he who is warned should warn his neighbor." Some still do this. Earl D. Bailey was the best fireside preacher we ever knew, and the man who succeeded him, Brother Ward Rumsey, aided by his wife, visited many people, especially those who did not attend church.

Every newcomer in town or countryside was visited and invited to come to church. If a missionary has such co-operation from the local forces, he is sure to meet with success. At his first meeting there Hubert preached fourteen times and baptized fourteen persons.

Brother Alva Christensen met Hubert at Foraker, Oklahoma. They preached there about a month and baptized thirty people. They also preached at Washunga and baptized twenty-five, some white people, some Indians. Groups were organized in both places. Hubert also preached at Seminole, Stroud, Holdenville, and Haileyville during the fall and winter of 1915. Upon his return to Kingfisher we talked the situation over and resolved to move from Kingfisher to Lamoni, Iowa. Our two oldest girls were fast growing up. We had no church of our own in Kingfisher, and we felt they should have those privileges.

Move to Lamoni

Accordingly we made arrangements, and in January, 1916, we moved to Lamoni. At the beginning of the semester Cicely started to Graceland, Dorothy to high school, and Ardyce to grade school. We lived with Mrs. Vredenburg, my sister, until April, when we rented the old Lambert place. Hubert returned to Oklahoma and endured a severe winter there. He held some meetings near Brother H. K. Rowland's and in Reeding. Conference was in Lamoni, and when it was over we moved into the Lambert house. Hubert soon was obliged to return to Oklahoma. He went to Reeding to conduct a meeting; there were quite a few members around there and before long a Sunday school was organized.

He made a short visit to the western part of the state. Brother Rowland took him in his car, and they visited El Reno and Weatherford, where they visited the Goads and Downeys. From there they went to Eagle City, Seiling, Leedy (where they called on Brother and Sister Haines), and on into Cheyenne. Eric and Texola, which is a border town, were their next stops. Finally they arrived at Davidson, where Brother B. F. Renfroe was living. On the return trip they stopped at Bessie to visit the group of Indians there; then they went on to Clinton, where they baptized three, and back to Weatherford, where Hubert preached to a full house. They visited Saints at Hinton, Geary, and Calumet, driving about six hundred miles in all. This was Brother Rowland's first missionary trip and Hubert's first missionary trip in a car. On their way home, Brother Tom Tennery paid one hundred dollars tithing to be forwarded to the bishop. They helped many to make out their inventories on this trip. The day after their return, Brother Rowland took Hubert to visit five Indian camps (Cheyennes), stopping at the Sordens in Kingfisher. Then they went on to Reeding and visited the Saints there.

It was now the first of April and time to return home. Hubert was in Reeding only a few days, when he went to Independence for Conference. He was fortunate enough to get an opportunity (rare in those days) to ride down in a car. A revelation was given in the early part of the Conference calling B. R. McGuire to the office of Presiding Bishop. Hubert was appointed to Nebraska for the next two years.

When he returned home, he decided to build us a house in Lamoni so we bought a lot, and he began work at once. He was able to get quite a lot of help on it that could not have been procured so readily had not all the missionaries been home then. Brother Holloway and Brother Elmer Long worked quite a lot on the building; in an amazingly short time it was finished, and we were living in it. The day we moved in he left for Omaha—his new field of labor.

Omaha

While in Omaha he made his home at Brother Ed Marmoy's. Omaha was the first large city in which he had ever labored for any length of time. The art of visiting homes and bringing back those who were discouraged, which he had learned while a priest of the branch, was just as useful and fruitful as ever. There was wonderful co-operation from the officers of the branch, including the presiding elder, H. A. Scott. Hubert greatly enjoyed his stay in Omaha, which was broken by frequent visits to other groups in that area.

His father and mother and one brother lived at Decatur, Nebraska, and he was at their home several times. He held one tent meeting at Macy for the Indian people, making his home during that time with John Irving, who was married to a white woman.

With W. E. Shakespeare he held another tent meeting here the following year. Each time some Indians were baptized. These two tent meetings prepared for and led up to the final great meeting which was held a year or two later. Hubert found that he obtained much better hearings by visiting homes during the day and holding meetings at night at some home; since it was spring the Indian agent did not wish them to gather a large crowd together. Almost every Sunday twenty to twenty-five were baptized. After fifty-one had joined, Hubert sent for Brother and Sister P. R. Burton. Hubert and Brother Burton continued the meetings in the same way, both preaching short sermons at night in an Indian home. At the close of the meeting each evening some Indian would arise and give his name for baptism. His wife would then give her name, and if they had children of baptismal age, their names would be given also.

This group of meetings culminated in a Communion service for all who had been baptized. It was held on the bank of a creek where the baptizing had been done, and the seating of the large crowd was arranged by one of the Indian brothers, Amos Lamson.

He called all the church members to be seated in the front of the great assembly. It was on a hillside, and all the children who had been baptized were seated in front, the older converts behind them, and the others following as they wished. There were hundreds present, and the sight was inspiring. After Communion, twenty-six babies were blessed. The last two were little boys of four and five years, who rose of their own accord and walked down and knelt at the elders' feet to be blessed. The scene was so inspiring that many of those stoical people shed tears. This day was the culmination of long weeks of cottage meetings, the greatest Hubert ever helped to conduct.

After holding a tent meeting in West Omaha, he came home to Lamoni for the reunion. It was an outstanding spiritual reunion. When it was over we returned to our home, and he ate his first meal in our new house. His visit at home was short, and he returned to Decatur, Nebraska, September 19 to attend district conference there. At this conference his youngest brother, Bernard Case, was ordained to the office of elder. This brother has remained in that vicinity all these years, most of the time serving as president of Decatur Branch.

During Omaha's fall celebration called the "Aksarben"—Nebraska spelled backward—he, for the first time in his life, saw a president of the United States. This was Woodrow Wilson, one of the chief personalities at the celebration.

Omaha Church Dedicated

On October 15, 1916, the church in Omaha was dedicated. Bishop B. R. McGuire preached the dedicatory sermon, Heman C. Smith offered the prayer, and Hubert had charge of the meeting. The church was filled to capacity. The next day our youngest daughter, Ardyce, arrived, having made the trip with some friends. She went to have some dental work done. She and her father both were cared for at Brother and Sister Marmoy's. They came home the next week. Hubert's errand was to have a furnace put in the new house. We had found that the hard coal burner we had put up would not heat even the living room. He accomplished the job in just a week and returned to Omaha.

A Healing

Hubert was called to administer to Sister Josie Herrington. Brother J. M. Baker was with him. They found her in great distress, suffering a violent gallstone attack. Her heart was so weak that the surgeons refused to operate. Brother Baker and Hubert, after fasting all day, administered to her. She received instant relief, and as they started to leave a voice said to Hubert, "Go back and lay your hands again on my handmaiden and she shall be healed." After telling Brother Baker what he had heard, they went back and told her of the experience. Again they laid their hands on her head, and they felt the great power come down. The woman was instantly healed and was never again troubled with that illness.

Soon after this was Thanksgiving. He received a letter from Moorhead, Iowa, our old home, asking him to come and preach the Thanksgiving sermon. He went and saw many old friends, including my sister, Mrs. J. E. Wilson, at whose home he spent the night.

These Things I Offer You

By Roy A. Cheville

IN MID-FEBRUARY I participated in Religious Emphasis Week at Kansas State Teachers College in Pittsburg. The visiting staff of religious leaders included Dr. Blake Smith, pastor of University Baptist Church of Austin, Texas; the Reverend Oscar Bonny, minister of the Rosedale Congregational Church in Kansas City, Kansas; Miss Alice Otterness of Chicago of the National Lutheran Council; Father F. J. Baumstark of the Roman Catholic Church; Rabbi Charles Latz of Joplin; and myself. On the first day in a symposium each was requested to present in six minutes a testimonial of the basic convictions on which he based his beliefs, his life. This was not to be an apologia or an argument, but an affirmation of foundational faith. These presentations were followed by a question-answer hour growing out of the testimonials. This is my testimony to the symposium.

"I can bring you only what I have. These are the insights and convictions on which I build my life. They come slowly. No one can wave a theological wand over my head and give them to me. Furthermore, they must keep undergoing the continuing development which healthy religious growth requires.

"It is well to tell you university people that I struggled to bring the many phases of university studies into integration. I was in college during what historians are now calling the 'roaring twenties.' Everything seemed at loose ends in a wave of liberalism. All at once I was exposed to sociology, biology, biblical criticism, inductive theology, comparative religion, philosophy, and the like. It was a dithering experience. I kept at it, so that what I bring today is not hearsay, not transmitted creed, but the foundation of my life. It is the product of my creative work in the fellowship of my people with God.

"I summarize these in four fundamentals:

"1. I believe in the eventual superordination of righteousness. This is a daring affirmation. It was heralded by the Hebrew prophets. It was declared by Jesus. Thomas Masaryk, father of Czechoslovakia, believed it when he said governments founded on force looked well until the last five minutes. This holds that cleverness, military might, materialism eventually go down before goodness. It affirms that righteousness constitutes power. My God is a god of creative goodness. I stake my life on this.

"2. I believe in the amplitude of the spiritual resources of the universe.

"The foundations of our universe are supporting the conception of the oneness of things. There is an abundance of spiritual resources. It is for us to discover the means of tapping them, of connecting with them. The preceding affirmation requires that I shall be righteous and shall use these powers to righteous ends if I shall be a recipient of them. In so many fields we are coming to discover physical powers. We are amateurs in the utilization of spiritual resources.

"3. I believe in potential companionship for all men with God.

"God is not a frightening judge, not a distant dictator, not a vindictive ruler, not an absentee landlord. He is my Father. He is the same for every one of us. This brings all men together in brotherly relationship. The word 'potential' carries important significance. Companionship has to be cultivated. I have to fit myself for it. At first it may sound forward. It is not so intended. It carries the spirit of our being at home with God.

"4. I believe in the contemporary expanding revelation of God.

"I am stirred by the use of light as a conception of religion. We associate life and love as essential aspects of this light. My God has no secrets he wants to keep from me. He wants me to grow in understanding so I can work with him. There is no time or book limit on this continuing experience of revelation. It is conditioned by my capacity and by my responsiveness. I believe in a revealing God. I see Christ as the revelation of God in expression that is meaningful to me.

"Out of these fundamentals grow conceptions of religion, of church, of Scriptures, of salvation, of man's destiny. I shall keep growing in their understanding, and their application.

"These give a direction and a tone to life. They give a sense of belonging in my Father's world. This faith I offer you.

"I can give you the spirit of my theology in these lines I penned a short while ago. They express my outlook toward my universe and my sense of relationship to God.

It may be I shall never trace
The orbits in the sky,
Nor learn the myriad mysteries
That in the planets lie.
Yet, whatever investigation,
One revelation
Of cosmic order
Discloses through all creation
A design that is divine.

I cannot tell to those I meet
The eternal mind of God,
Yet I can speak of One I know
The way of service trod.
And whenever in indecision
About my mission,
Or worth, or fitness,
I can hear with the youth of vision,
"Tis my Son, O hear ye Him!"

A First in Progress

GLEN E. HOLMES of Inglewood, California, has won the distinction of being the first member in all the church to receive a Fourth Certificate of Progress.

It is very fitting that Brother Holmes should have earned this first new certificate, because of his very real interest in religious education work in the Los Angeles Stake. Admirably fitted with an alert mind, plus a deep-seated love of the work of God developed during his thirty-four years as a member of the church of Jesus Christ, he has given place in his life for much study of the things of God, but he has not been content to learn for himself alone. His chief concern for a number of years has been to interest others also in the importance of studying in order that they might become more proficient members and workers in the church.

Coming up through the ranks, Brother Holmes has served the church as a teacher, elder, and now high priest. He was also a member of the Los Angeles Stake Presidency for two years; however, he resigned as counselor to the stake president last fall in order to promote to the fullest extent possible the cause of religious education work in his area. If any misgivings troubled him temporarily over this move, these were dispelled when words of encouragement were spoken by the officiating apostle as he was set apart as a member of the Stake High Council. This comforting experience he felt to be assurance that his decision to give undivided time to this very important phase of the work had been acceptable to God. Hence, he has been giving undivided attention to study and its promotion.

By this worthy example, we trust that many others will feel the urge to settle down to a program of study, by which it is scarcely possible to escape joy and satisfaction. If one is inclined to doubt that studying can give joy and satisfaction, just let him ask Glen E. Holmes.

An excellent place to begin your studies, if you have not already made that start, is by getting in touch with the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. You will be sent a free copy of Bulletin No. 104.

Question:

Is it necessary to have a written request from a person desiring to withdraw from the church?

Missouri

C. G. M.

Answer:

Yes. Such a request should be submitted to the pastor or other church officer concerned. He is informed concerning the established procedure of the church in such matters.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Question:

Please give Scripture proof as to keeping a record of those who belong to the church—in other words, keeping names on church books.

Texas

E. C.

Answer:

I assume that the question does not limit "Scripture" to the Bible. Since the Bible is not a textbook on church government, we are dependent upon modern revelation for much of the detail that undoubtedly was known by those whose writings make up the New Testament. However, since these details were so well known and a part of the experience both of the writers and the recipients of their writings, they did not bother to include them. For example, the New Testament does not authorize the use of church buildings nor indicate definitely whether they even had them.

Doctrine and Covenants (17:25) cares for one of these details. It is as follows:

It shall be the duty of the several churches composing the church of Christ to send one or more of their teachers to attend the several conferences, held by the elders of the church, with a list of the names of the several members uniting themselves with the church since the last conference, or send by the hand of some priest, so that a regular list of all the names of the whole church may be kept in a book, by one of the elders, whoever the other elders shall appoint from time to time, and also if any have been expelled from the church, so that their names may be blotted out of the General Church record of names.

The wisdom of keeping records as herein directed has been amply demonstrated in experience. As the church grows, new uses for membership records are discovered so we may expect that increasingly this modern Scripture will vindicate itself and the prophet.

Question:

Is it against the will of God to use wine for seasoning or as an alcoholic beverage for an appetizer before meals or during meals, or a pleasurable mellow after-drink, or as a stimulant to the body?

Wisconsin

N. F.

Answer:

If alcoholic beverages are classed as strong drinks (as is done by this writer) there are several Scriptures dealing with them. Doctrine and Covenants 86:1c admonishes against the use of strong drinks. Section 26:1d, speaking of strong drink, commands, "ye shall partake of none." Section 119:3d says that we shall "be not addicted to strong drink in any form."

If a stimulant is needed for the body and is prescribed by a reputable physician to be taken medicinally, cautious adherence should be given to the limitations of the prescription. Such prescriptions seem to be rare indeed, much more so than a quarter of a century ago.

While there is much that is good and to be desired when friends may fellowship over a cup or glass of beverage, we will be wise and within the law if we restrict ourselves to harmless beverages; these will make our fellowship of richer and higher quality.

A. ORLIN CROWNOVER

Question:

Did John the Baptist hold the Melchisedec priesthood at the time he baptized Jesus Christ?

Kansas

MRS. A. S.

Answer:

Doctrine and Covenants 83:4c reads:

Therefore, he [God] took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued.

Exodus 34:1, 2, I.V., reads:

... for I will take away the priesthood out of their midst; therefore my holy order, and the ordinances thereof, shall not go before them.

This evidently was the holy or Melchisedec priesthood, for with it the holy order and ordinances thereof were taken, and we find that the Aaronic priesthood continued.

II Chronicles 26 relates that King Uzziah invaded the holy sanctuary permitted only to priests, descendants of Aaron, and that Uzziah was smitten with leprosy. This proves that the Aaronic priesthood did continue through the ages. Luke 1 relates the account of Zacharias, a priest. He was informed that to him and Elizabeth a son was to be born, and that he should be named John. John, a descendant of Aaron through both parents, would properly inherit the right to be a priest according to law of lineage. John, later known as John the Baptist, was sent from God to baptize with water (John 1:6, 32).

Hebrews 5:5, 10 states that Christ was a high priest, called of God a high priest after the order of Melchizedek. There is no mention in the Bible of anyone's holding the priesthood of this order after Moses till Christ. Hebrews 5:1 and 8:3 inform the reader that ordaining men to the high priesthood was a practice in the New Testament church after it was restored in and through Christ. It was of necessity conferred upon others that the holy ordinances of the gospel of Christ might be administered. The priesthood was changed to administer the gospel law. The old law of carnal commandments and the priesthood provided to administer them could not produce perfection, therefore the Melchisedec priesthood was given with the gospel to make effective "the power of an endless life" (Hebrews 7:11-16).

We may safely conclude that John the Baptist held the office of priest, after the order of Aaron, and was specially ordained to be the first priest of the New Testament church.

Manifold More in This Present Time

By Marian Willmarth

ASHES TO ASHES, and dust to dust." The minister uttered the closing words of the ritual, as he sprinkled a handful of earth over the casket, but they had little meaning for Maggie Rollins as she turned from the open grave, followed by sympathetic friends and neighbors.

A cold numbness had seized her three days before when the doctor had said, "It's all over, Mrs. Rollins." Her heart was like a chunk of ice in her breast, and her mind was too dazed to feel acute sorrow. Her friends marveled at the cool detachment with which she saw to the minutest detail—going to the funeral home to pick out the casket, insisting on buying the dainty pink shroud and filmy underclothing, even selecting the soft slippers for her daughter's feet.

And now, as the funeral cortege wound its way through Walnut Hill Cemetery on its return to the city, she lay back in the seat enveloped in that numbness which left her devoid of feeling.

Everything seemed unreal as she entered the familiar room. Kind neighbors had restored the house to order, putting the davenport back in its accustomed place where a short time ago the casket had stood. As she came through the door, she noticed one white rosebud under the edge of a chair. Strange they had missed it when they tidied the room. She stooped and picked it up, and walking to a table placed it between the pages of a Bible which lay there.

They watched her as she sat down in an easy chair before the open grate where a gas log burned, dispelling the chill of late March. The embracing arms of the chair and the warmth of the fire seemed to enfold her as she sat with closed eyes. The ice that had gathered around her heart the evening Margaret died seemed slowly melting, and before she knew it she was sobbing wildly. Someone in the room uttered a fervent "Thank God," while another said, "She'll be better now." They let her cry till the storm was spent, then one by one they slipped away, leaving her in the care of a trusted friend.

They had tried to put out of sight articles belonging to Margaret, but as Maggie went about the house in the days that followed she would see a slipper peering from beneath a chest of drawers, or find a lacy handkerchief with the fragrance of cologne still clinging to it. Through blinding tears she would place them in a box she was preparing to send to the war impoverished.

MAGGIE TOOK TO OBSERVING young girls as she went for groceries or walked to and from church. She was always seeking a face that would remind her of her loved one. She met Linda on the stairs the day she returned to work at the store. She was startled by the striking resemblance of this stranger to her daughter. She had the same golden curls, dark, wide-set eyes, and softly curving cheeks, the tall, slender body and graceful carriage. But this girl's eyes held a hint of sadness which Margaret's had lacked. Margaret had lived a happy life, untouched by sorrow, except the death of her father, and she had been too young to remember much about that.

Maggie saw the new clerk in the infant's department as she went downstairs for lunch. She nodded and smiled at her as she passed her counter. The girl's sad eyes smiled back. Maggie's heart went out in pity. All day she wondered what had caused her unhappiness. Maybe she just imagined it. Was her own loneliness making her morbid? Somehow she felt akin to all suffering humanity.

Day after day she met Linda, usually on the stairs. She looked forward to their morning greeting and thought of her evenings as she sat by her lonely fireside. One morning they had stopped to chat for a few minutes before going to their respective departments. Their conversation was impersonal, but Maggie's day was happier because of the brief contact. She was struck daily by the resemblance of this girl to Margaret. Even her little mannerisms tugged poignantly at Maggie's heart. "Who is that girl?" she inquired of one of the clerks, and was disappointed when she was told that her name was Linda Pearson. What had she expected it to be? Surely not Margaret.

APRIL DRAGGED WEARILY toward the first of May. One evening Maggie returned home from a wearing day behind the counter. She was desperately low in spirit and after a hasty supper sat down before the fireplace. The rain dripped dismally from the eaves outside the window, and she shivered as she thought of the "low green tent" in Walnut Hill. Going over to the table she picked up the Bible and returned to her seat by the fire. The pages fell open to where she had placed the white rosebud on the day of the funeral. It was bruised and yellow now and emitted a faint perfume. She pressed it tenderly to her cheek. Through tears she glanced down at the printed page. One portion seemed to stand out in bold relief. She read, "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting."

"Lord, I left parents, brothers, and sisters to follow thee," she wept, "and now I sit alone."

In memory she stood by the old pasture gate. She saw him coming across the field, his dark head thrown back as he drank in the beauty of the moon-drenched night. She recalled the look of gladness that spread over his face when he saw her standing there. She covered her face with her hands to shut out that shining look, as she whispered, "Phil, darling, you must come no farther. Father forbids you to come here after tonight."

"I see," he replied, "do you forbid me, too?"

"What can I do?" she cried. "If I marry you, Father will disown me."

She seemed to hear Phil's low-spoken question, "What will you do about the church?"

Distinctly she remembered her answer, "I know the gospel is true, but what can I do?"

Across the years Phil's answer came ringing, "There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting."

She watched him as he turned away, watched him until he was swallowed up by the night, then with lagging footsteps she crept slowly up the lane to the house.

She recalled the days that followed. She could hear her mother's tearful pleading to forget this mad idea of uniting with a people so maligned and hated. "There are other young men better than he," her parents reasoned. "You'll soon forget him and his fantastic religion, and we'll all be happy again."

She had tried, but happiness had taken wings. Nowhere could she find peace. She felt like a traitor, a Judas, betraying her Savior. The days dragged endlessly by. Finally in desperation she wrote to Phil. "I can bear it no longer; come for me. 'Your people shall be my people, and your God my God'."

Could she ever forget what followed? Vividly she recalled the group gathered on the vine-covered porch as she went down the lane to where Phil waited in a light spring wagon. Her father's voice as vindictive as ever spanned the years. "Go, disobedient child, and never enter my door again." The last voice she heard above her mother's anguished cry was that of her sister, Anna, "I'll always love you, Maggie."

She and Phil had built a home together. The love of the gospel and the fellowship of Saints had helped to compensate for the loss of family and old friends. But one dark night in December she found herself alone, but not quite alone, for as she stood looking down at Margaret asleep in her crib, she knew she still had much for which to live. "But now she has been taken. I have tried to be faithful, Lord," she sobbed.

SHE SAT MUSING in the gathering dusk until, overcome by her sad meditations, she wearily rose and prepared for bed. As she lay in the darkness an overwhelming desire to visit Margaret's grave swept over her. "If I could only share her narrow bed, and forget this loneliness and grief," she wept. "Tomorrow is my afternoon off. I shall go to the cemetery," she decided as she drifted off to sleep.

The next afternoon when she came from the store she stopped at a floral shop to purchase a dozen yellow roses. The low-hanging clouds prophesied more rain as she left the bus at the gates of the cemetery. She made her way over the sodden ground to Margaret's grave. Tenderly she arranged the roses upon the grave, then sat down upon a rustic bench beneath a willow tree. Overhead in the branches a mourning dove cooed his doleful complaint. Through her tears she read the inscription chiseled on the shaft of white marble. "'Margaret Rollins, age 20.' Too young to die," she wept, as a spirit of rebellion seized her. "Why did God permit it?" she questioned.

From out her consciousness the words of the poet intruded upon her grief:

Alas for him who never sees the stars shine through his cypress-trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away, nor looks to see the breaking day across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned in hours of faith, the truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death, and Love can never lose its own.

"Who hath not learned in hours of faith," she repeated. Many times, in the assemblies of the Saints, she had testified to the hope of the resurrection. What was it the Apostle Paul had said? She searched the recesses of her mind for the quotation, but it evaded her. "Who, hopeless, lays his dead away . . ." she whispered, and like Mary of old she cried, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my daughter had not died." She sat with her face buried in her hands, while scathing tears trickled through her fingers.

SHE STARTED UP. Surely a voice had spoken, but there was nothing but the wind sighing among the trees. "If in this life only we have hope we are of all men most miserable." That was it! That was the quotation she had been trying to recall. Had she been sorrowing as they who have no hope? The words of Jesus flooded her mind. "I am the resurrection and the life." The warm glow of the Spirit enveloped her, and she felt new courage surge through her. In gratitude she raised her eyes. The sun had broken through the low-hanging clouds and a late sunbeam lit up the shaft of white marble. With a new buoyancy she rose to go. As she walked down the gravel path a young girl emerged from behind an oleander bush. A startled cry escaped Maggie's lips. "Margaret," she gasped.

"Mrs. Rollins," Linda cried in astonishment.

"Miss Pearson," Maggie apologized, "you startled me so. For a moment I thought—"

"What is it?" Linda inquired, as she noted the pallor of Maggie's cheek.

"Just that you look so much like Margaret," Maggie replied in a shaken voice.

"Your daughter?" Linda asked. "The girls at the store told me of your loss."

Maggie nodded. "But you have known sorrow too. Why are you here?"

Maggie followed as Linda turned and walked toward a stone that marked two graves where the grass had not yet grown.

"My mother and father," she said in a voice weighted with tears.

Maggie gazed at the freshly chiseled names. "Anna Holden Pearson. Born 1912," she read. "Miss Pearson," she cried. "Anna Holden!"

"That was her maiden name," Linda replied, unaware of the rapid beating of Maggie's heart.

"Can it be possible?" Maggie whispered, as she leaned weakly against the granite slab.

"What is it?" Linda asked in alarm.

"Anna Holden—that was my sister's name. Miss Pearson—Linda," she cried, "have you ever heard your mother speak of her sister Maggie?"

"Many times," Linda replied, bewildered. "But, Mrs. Rollins, what is wrong?" she urged. "You look so strange."

"Linda, don't you see?" Maggie cried. "Your mother's name, your resemblance to Margaret, doesn't it mean anything to you?"

"You mean?" Linda gasped.

"That your mother was my sister." She held out her arms to Linda. Their tears mingled, as Linda told how her parents had moved to this town after their marriage, and of the tragic accident that had orphaned her. "And to think we lived in the same town," Maggie grieved. "But tell me, is Mother—" and she paused, afraid to voice the question.

"Very much alive," Linda smiled. "And Father?" Maggie asked. She wept silently as Linda told of the old father who sat in the shade of the vine-covered porch, praying for the return of the daughter he had so ruthlessly driven from home.

Arm in arm they walked from the cemetery. As they boarded the bus on their return to the city, they talked of the dear ones at home.

Later that night with Linda in Margaret's bed, Maggie sat down to write a letter.

Two days later as they stepped from the train at the old familiar depot, a white-haired man came down the platform toward them. Maggie ran to meet him, and as she held his shrunken frame close, her tears fell on his silver hair. Softly she whispered, "Manifold more in this present time, and in the life to come life everlasting."

"And Jesus looked round about; and said unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of my Father! And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus spake again and said unto them, Children, how hard is it for them who trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!"
—Mark 10: 22, 23

IF I HAD BEEN A HEBREW Pharisee of Jesus' time, I would have been astonished at such a heretical utterance as this. My surprise would have turned (as did the Pharisees') into hate for the teaching, as well as for the one who spoke it. Why? Because my heritage would have demanded it. The Pharisees were the "most righteous" men of the day by the standards of their times and according to the requirements of rabbinical teaching. They hadn't yet completely discarded the theory that prosperity was an indication of God's favor, as a blessing upon the righteous. Their wealth made it so much easier to observe the book of expensive and ornate rituals and ceremonies of their culture, and these observances were the key to the kingdom of God, as they saw it. The poor, underprivileged, poverty-stricken, and hence wicked masses of Jewry had little hope for salvation.

But Christ came along with the astounding news of the kingdom which seemed to defy the law book and the rich heritage of God's own chosen ones. He dared to imply that the poor oppressed peoples had the potentialities of the kingdom life. Even worse, he bluntly taught that the kingdom would come hard for those who trusted in riches. Considerable wealth was necessary for one to be a devout observer of Judaism.

IF I WERE one of the twelve men who robbed Brinks, Inc., of over $1,000,000 some time ago and chanced to read this Scripture, I would more than likely ignore the message, perhaps even find it amusing. Because of my lack of insight into the meaning and function of wealth, I surely wouldn't understand the relation of those words to me. My life would be a defiance of my crying need to discover and adjust to the life-giving processes of the universe. I would be living under the illusion that the abundance of things creates the abundant life. In my frantic search for security, I would place emphasis upon the acquisition of power and wealth, and consequently experience a simultaneous shrinkage of my personality.

I would face the reality when all these things, these status-producing tangibles, would escape me in the passing of a second, and I would find my hollow self crying from the depths of my shallowness for forgiveness from a God with whom I had never shared a problem, a joy, or a weakness. My small universe, built and molded with myself at its heart, would crumble, simply because its focal point of operation, myself, would be fallen. Strange how I would expect God to be savingly near, when I would have built my life as far from his presence as the misused intelligence he gave me could build.

BUT I AM NOT an ancient Hebrew Pharisee, nor am I one of the twelve who robbed Brinks, Inc. I am a student who has read this passage of Scripture, and I discover that it gives me a new insight into the abundant life. In this Scripture Christ is piercing my heart and mind with one part of his kingdom message. He is saying to me: "I feel that you must quit rationalizing yourself into (or out of) the kingdom of God. You need to keep a diligent eye open to an eternal truth, which, if ignored, will do much to wreck your soul: 'Means have a very quiet, subtle way of becoming ends.' You must share with me one of the deep convictions for which I died on the cross. I tried to teach men nearly two thousand years ago that the desire to possess is a cunning threat to the godly development of the human soul. My Father tried to teach this before I came to earth. I am still trying to teach the same thing today. The desire to possess is a cunning threat to the godly development of the human soul.

"You have been created to share a peaceful dominion over the earth with your fellow-men, so my Father has spoken in the Scriptures. It follows, then, that if you are to share this God-willed dominion over his earth, you must choose to learn from him and unite yourself with his laws which alone can give that kingdom for which men were intended."

As I read and reread this Scripture, I am impressed very strongly with how the message found in those few lines applies to me today as I prepare for my future vocation. To the extent that I fail to comply freely with this principle of life, the earth shall have dominion over me. To the extent that I align my life with this kingdom law (and much more), God will be happy, because his purposes will be having fuller sway in my life.

If I trust in riches, I shall become a slave to them. If I trust in God, any degree of riches which he entrusts to my care will be my servant to further the Christly happiness of all men everywhere. This is the message of Christ in this Scripture to me today. I pray that tomorrow the message will be more meaningful. I pray that ten years from now my life will be a fulfillment-in-process of this testimony. Indeed, I pray that my fellow-men, through obedience to this principle, will come a step closer to the abundant life which Christ is trying to give us. Christ has spoken in this Scripture to me today. What does Christ, in those few lines, say to you?

Girl Guide Mirla Jewett of Chilliwack, British Columbia, who wears above her right pocket the first "Religion and Life" emblem presented to a Canadian girl of our church.

Canadian Girl Guide Honored

Mirla Jewett

Mirla Jewett, sixteen-year-old Girl Guide of Chilliwack, British Columbia, Canada, has the honor of receiving from the General Church the first "Light of Life" religious award pin presented to a Canadian girl. She is also the first Reorganized Latter Day Saint girl to receive the "Religion and Life" emblem of the Girl Guides of Canada. While the latter award may be earned by a girl of any religious denomination who has satisfactorily completed the requirements of her own church, Mirla is the first girl in her district and one of the very first girls of Canada to receive this emblem.

She is a member of the Second Chilliwack Girl Guide Company of which her mother, Mrs. Mary Jewett, is captain. Mirla is a First Class Guide and the company leader. She has been active in Guide work for the past six years and has earned sixteen proficiency badges. She enjoys working with children and is a pack leader for the Second Chilliwack Brownies, the younger group.

She was selected to represent the Chilliwack Guide groups at the National Guide camp, Connaught Range, near Ottawa this past summer. Girls qualifying for this honor must be Second Class Guides and have high character, have attended at least two Guide camps, and evidence aptitude for leadership. Approximately nine hundred girls throughout the Dominion, all outstanding Girl Guides, attended the camp, together with twenty-six other girls from the United States, Holland, England, France, and Brazil. All expenses were paid for the trip, and the girls traveled in special trains.

As one activity of their ten days in camp, they visited Ottawa, the capital city of Canada. Also while in camp, each girl was allowed to attend her own church in Ottawa. Pastor Alex E. Caldwell drove out for Mirla and Ethel Piedt of Victoria, British Columbia, one of the national camp leaders. (Both Mirla and her mother received their early Guide training under the leadership of Sister Piedt.)

Mirla has one brother, David, eleven years old. Their father was lost at sea while serving in the Canadian Navy during World War II.

Mirla is a grade eleven student at Chilliwack High School where she is a member of the Glee Club, the Girls' Hi-Y Club, and the bowling team. Her hobbies are music and sewing. She makes many of her own clothes.

She was baptized at Victoria, British Columbia, when she was eight years old and has always been active in church work, winning prizes for perfect attendance at church school. She has served as secretary to the church school and Zion's League, has been in charge of Zion's League worship services, and has assisted in the kindergarten work at Silver Lake Reunion. For one year she served as president of the children in the district. While living in Vancouver she sang in the choir and at times played the piano for junior church. Since moving to Chilliwack she has taught a primary class in church school.

In fulfilling requirements for the "Light of Life" award of the church and the "Religion and Life" award of Girl Guides, Mirla gave a minimum of one hundred and fifty hours of service to the church, completed a series of study requirements, complied with the financial law of the church, including keeping the stewardship record book continuously during the time she was completing her requirements, attended church, participated in its services and in daily individual worship, and made specific advancement in her own activity program—Girl Guides. For special help with her work, Mirla gives credit to her mother, who encouraged her; to Sister Edwin Spargo, who assisted her with study requirements and acted as examiner for a part of the work to the pastors of the two cities in which she resided, Elders Calvin Taylor of Vancouver and Duncan Calder of Chilliwack; and to District President Samuel G. Clark of Vancouver, who presented the pin.

While in Vancouver, Mirla was a Cadet of the St. John's Ambulance Association, of which the Queen of the British Empire is honorary head. This organization, officially known as the "Order of St. John of Jerusalem," specializes in first aid, home nursing, hospital practice, and related work. As a member, Mirla has won certificates for first aid and home nursing, and was awarded a silver bracelet for being on the winning team in first-aid competition. She greatly misses this activity, since there is no comparable organization in Chilliwack. Her ambition, since she was a young girl, has been to become a nurse, and her greatest desire is that she might be able to train at the Sanitarium.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of widespread interest which members of the church have in conditions in Zion, we believe Herald readers will be interested in the following report which was made to the Stake Conference on January 30, 1953.

THE FOLLOWING is a summary of observations pertaining to the work of the kingdom over a ten-year period from 1943 through 1952.

The membership of the Center Place in 1943 was 7,195, which has increased each year since that date, closing the year of 1952 with 9,817 members on file.

In 1943 we had ten congregations. Since that time we have added six congregations and one mission.

Our average attendance for the morning preaching service for the year 1943 was 2,297. The number has increased each year with an average morning preaching attendance in 1952 of 3,700. The average evening preaching attendance in 1943 was 1,232; in 1952 it was 1,500.

In 1943 our average church school attendance was 2,251. There has been a steady increase each year, and we close 1952 with an average morning attendance of 3,637.

The total average attendance at prayer service in 1943 was 868. There has been an increase each year with an average attendance in 1952 of 1,430.

In 1943 the total number of baptisms for the Center Place was 178, with a slight increase each year with the exception of 1946, 1951, and 1952. In 1946 we had 212 baptisms; in 1947, 262; in 1948, 276; in 1949, 279; in 1950, 330; in 1951, 321; and in 1952, 264. With the able assistance of Brother Eugene A. Theys, now assigned to our stake, we hope to be able to direct the attention of our people to our basic mission, that of converting souls to Christ and his work. There is a great field of missionary opportunity in the Center Place, and even though we have a sizable number of church members living within a relatively small area there are hundreds of people who are unchurched and haven't heard our message as yet.

OUR TOTAL NUMBER of statement filers in 1946 was 1,079. There has been a substantial increase each year with a total of 2,431 in 1952.

Our total local income for 1943 was $36,460.92 with a gradual increase until in 1952 the total was $198,446.02.

The General Church offering from the Center Place in 1943 was $88,437.68. There has been a steady increase in tithes and offerings with $242,789.00 contributed in 1952 to the General Church.

The total contributions, both general and local (exclusive of special activity funds), amounted to $441,244.02, or an average contribution for each member of $44.95. Both the appropriations we have made at this conference are for funds for missions, indicating that we are planning to open up the work in new areas in the Center Place in 1953. We are planning to build the first unit of our Walnut Park mission at James Downey and Holke Roads sometime during the present year. We are also surveying an area north of Independence, hoping to purchase lots on which to build a church somewhere north of Silver Lane, bounded on the west by River Boulevard and on the east by the extension of Noland Road. This is a fast-growing residential area, and we already have a nucleus of active church members in this area. Our great need is for money in order to provide quarters for worship and other activity. We are anxious to expand the work in the Englewood area. The time for this expansion is already long past due, and with the support of the Englewood congregation and the Center Stake we feel that we should move into that area as soon as possible to organize another group.

As we view the work of the Lord in the Center Place, we can readily see its expansion; there is an increased number of our people participating in the work, not only in the services of the congregation, but also financially. An increasing number of people have become unified in the work and are very eager to follow the leadership that is provided them by the General Church and the stake.

WE KNOW THAT GOD has blessed us as we have worked together, and we feel that the hastening time is upon us. We also feel the definite need to try hard to perfect our lives; to overcome our sins; to cast out any hatred or jealousy; and to give Christ first place in our lives. We have the privilege of being a light to the membership of the church and to the world. With this privilege we have the responsibility of keeping our eyes single to the glory of God, using all of our talents, time, and material possessions for the purpose of building God's kingdom. Our responsibility is one of recognizing God as our Creator; Christ as our King; and ourselves as the subjects and stewards under the precious direction and blessings of God.

As we look to the program ahead, we see two great needs in the Center Stake. One is for more Saints devoted to the cause of Christ—members who put him first in everything they do rather than seeking dollars, better homes, finer cars, and greater luxuries for selfish purposes. We need to have the conviction that we can be the happiest and the most prosperous of all people if we keep God's laws in their entirety and recognize our stewardship responsibilities in relationship to him. Our other great need is sufficient income to care for our building expansion, for more adequate houses for worship, for centers of learning, study, and recreation.

We are in the midst of a tremendous building program, yet we are not building fast enough to provide for our needs. There is no question in our minds but that we could do better missionary work, convert more souls to Christ, and do a better job of pastoral ministry if we had adequate church housing. Even though we had a very fine income in 1952 and are pleased with the many sacrifices that were made, yet we are in desperate need of sufficient finances to care for our present needs. We could open up four or five congregations within thirty days that would be strong units if we had a place to house them. Our problem is not one of insufficient members or leaders for congregations and groups; our problem is in the field of finance.

However, we have faith in the membership and in the plan of our Lord in the building up of the City of Zion. In our work during the past years, we have grown to appreciate the Saints in Independence; we know that many of them do sacrifice for the work of the kingdom. It is our prayer and aim as leaders in the Stake to guide them on to greater achievements that our goal might be realized in the near future. It is important that Zion shall become a reality—for ourselves, our children,

Personality in the News

Marion Lindquist

Marion Lindquist was music director of the Forrest, Illinois, Branch until July, 1951, when he was drafted. The December 2, 1952, issue of the 372 Treabune, a publication of the 372nd Engineer Aviation Battalion, featured an article which indicated that Marion had represented the church by witnessing in his everyday life in the service.

The article, entitled "Lindquist of A Company Cops Soldier of the Month," stated that Marion, a corporal and construction worker in Company A, has been named by a battalion-wide board as "Engineer of the Month." The award was based on over-all soldiering as well as jobs rendered. It was also stated by Marion's captain and his sergeant, "Lindquist does everything well."

A battalion parade was held in his honor, and he was escorted to the reviewing stand to receive his award from the colonel. Since the award he has passed his tests to become a corporal. He is stationed at Eglin Air Force Base in Florida.

When not serving in the Air Force he lives with his parents on a farm at Chatsworth, Illinois. District President Lloyd E. Cleveland commended Marion and said that he was willing to serve the branch when called upon. He served two years as an auditor before his election to the office of music director. Lives of quality are needed in a congregation of any size, but Marion's ministry was outstanding in the small group with whom he worshiped. His quiet, modest, and unassuming devotion to the cause of the church found expression in service to his fellow-man.

our neighbors and friends, the Saints scattered throughout the world—in fact, for the world itself. We look forward to this year with great hope and expectancy in the field of new openings in our area, in increased baptisms with an increased number of our people indicating their stewardship responsibilities, and with increased contributions locally and generally for the expanding work of the kingdom. We pledge to you people and all members of the Center Stake our best in leadership and devotion to the cause of Christ. We deeply appreciate the able leadership and assistance of our stake bishopric, our stake leaders, our pastors, and all others who have joined with us in the great challenge of kingdom-building.

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your reports brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your reports, we hope you will understand.

Women Raising Funds

DAVIS CITY, IOWA.—The Zion's League held a progressive supper and watch party on New Year's Eve, following the regular weekly prayer service, which was held in the Marjorie Colyer home. The League is under the leadership of Elder Roy MacDonald.

Cottage prayer meetings are held each Wednesday evening in the various homes. At the present time several are taking the teacher-training classwork, which is held prior to the prayer service. This class is taught by Brother Luther Snethen, church school leader. The text is Exploring the Church, by Elbert A. Smith.

The young adult class which is taught by Mrs. Cleo Boswell meets each month for a social and sing. They met at the home of R. M. Ballantyne on February 26. Eighteen adults and fourteen children were present.

Mrs. Luther Snethen attended the capping exercises for student nurses at the Sanitarium. Her daughter, Tessie, is a member of the class.

The women's department is active under the leadership of Minnie Yarrington and her counselors, Una Scott and Alice Bolon. The group meets regularly each first and third Friday for worship and study. It has sponsored several money-raising projects to assist with the basement fund.

Recent speakers from Lamoni, Iowa, have included Dr. E. E. Gamet, Delmar Goode, Alma Shakespeare, and Floyd Mortimore.

Herald House Sunday was observed March 8. The pastor, Elder Hollis Yarrington, was the speaker at this service.

Bert Snethen of the U. S. Navy and stationed in California returned to his post of duty on March 8, following a leave. He traveled there with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Snethen and children.—Reported by MARJORIE COLYER

Presidency in Stake

LOS ANGELES STAKE.—A visiting program designed for contact with each home once a month is being initiated in congregations of the stake, under direction of the stake presidency. Compton reported that all but twelve families were contacted in January. Burbank reported a perfect record of contact, and Temple City reported 62 per cent.

President F. Henry Edwards addressed the young people on February 27, the priesthood members and wives on February 28, and the stake conference on March 1.

Glen Holmes of the stake has been awarded the fourth certificate of progress, the first ever awarded under an expansion of the General Church program of leadership training. This is the highest credit that can be earned.

President Israel A. Smith visited the stake near the end of the year.

Branch Officers Elected

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—Six were baptized in the mission in the past year. Mr. and Mrs. Earl Yates and son Val and Earnest Jorgensen were baptized by Elder John Rodley. Elder J. F. Ruchaber was in charge of the service. Mazelle Gaither and son Larry were baptized by Priest Harry Ruchaber. Brother Ruchaber was also in charge of this service. Music at the services was furnished by Doris Friend, Thelma and Amaryelis Ruchaber.

The yearly business meeting was held in August under the direction of District President J. L. Verhei. The following officers were elected: Elder John Rodley, pastor; Earl Yates, church school director; Anna Laird, secretary and treasurer; Bob Buckingham, music leader; Viola Yates, women's leader; Dale Johnson, young people's leader; Maxine Rodley, social leader; Earnest Jorgensen, Binger Laird, and J. F. Ruchaber, building committee; J. F. Ruchaber, auditor; Helen Goins, historian; Doris Friend, publicity; and Harry Ruchaber, associate pastor (appointed).

Earl Yates was ordained a teacher by Elder Rodley, assisted by Elder Ruchaber. Herbert Hough was ordained a deacon by Elder Ruchaber assisted by Elder Rodley. The ordinations took place at the fall district conference at Portland, Oregon.

Over six hundred dollars has been raised for the building fund.—Reported by DORIS FRIEND

Missionary Visits Branch

GERING, NEBRASKA.—On October 5, there were visitors from Santa Cruz, California. They were Brother and Sister W. G. Godfrey and their daughter Judy who were visiting the O. J. Peck family of Minatare, Nebraska.

Brother and Sister Gordon Harshman of Chadron, Nebraska, visited the branch on October 19. They come the third Sunday of each month. They replace Brother and Sister Gene Connell of Fort Collins, Colorado, who visited the third Sunday previous to this time.

Valden and Esther Rundell went to Champion, Nebraska, October 4 and 5, to a youth retreat.

District President Ward A. Hougas of Denver and Apostle D. Blair Jensen of Independence visited on October 28.

The pastor and Sister Elden A. Burkey accompanied by Valden and Esther Rundell went to Cheyenne, Wyoming, November 8 and 9, to attend youth retreat.

Elder Les Gardner of Australia, young appointee, was with the group for two weeks until December 8. He left then to continue his missionary work in Cheyenne, Wyoming.

During the Christmas vacation three young people of the branch were home from different areas. They were Gwen Crozier who is in training at the Sanitarium in Independence, Gary Harsin of Graceland, and Gerald Harsin stationed at Big Springs, Texas.

Joyce Harsin has gone to Kearney, Nebraska, where her parents now live.

Sister Doris Harsin and her son, Dale, of Kearney, were visitors on January 25.

On February 10, the Zion's League gave a chili supper and a short program at the church.

Sister Leslie Boodry of Angora, Nebraska, died and was buried at Bayard, Nebraska, March 5, with Elder Ward A. Hougas of Denver, Colorado, in charge of the service.

Brother and Sister Burkey and Sister Rundell attended the district conference at Denver, Colorado, March 7 and 8.—Reported by MRS. C. H. FLEMING

Evangelist Dies

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—The spring conference of the district was held at Wellsburg, March 14 and 15, with Apostle D. T. Williams and District President Samuel M. Zonker presiding. The theme of the conference was "Heirs of the Kingdom."

The opening service was held on Saturday evening, with Brother Zonker giving the welcoming remarks. The invocation was given by Evangelist Robert E. Rodgers. Brother Williams gave the evening message, and Elder John Treiber, pastor of the Wellsburg Branch, offered the benediction.

The Sunday services began with a priesthood meeting with Brother Williams in charge. It was at the fellowship service following this that Brother Rodgers was stricken with a heart attack. He died soon after. He had been ill for several months, and his sudden death brought sorrow and grief to all who knew him. The fellowship service was adjourned until eleven o'clock. At that time the worship service was opened with prayer by Elder Clyde S. Rice, and the sermon was preached by Brother Williams. His subject was the "Twenty-third Psalm," and he endeavored to bring comfort and condolence to the group because of the tragic happening of the morning.

The Wellsburg choir sang "Abide With Me," directed by Neil Nixon.

Dinner was served by the women's department of Wellsburg in the new dining room which has just been completed, together with a new kitchen.

Further services of the conference were canceled.—Reported by MABEL SMITH

New District President Appointed

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND DISTRICT.—The biannual conference of the district met with the Boston Branch on March 7 and 8. Apostle D. T. Williams was present, associated with Elder Jacques Pement, district president and his counselors. The first session on Saturday was the women's class under direction of Florence Sinclair, district women's leader. Associated with her and addressing the group were Bessie Barton of Attleboro, Marion Tift of Providence, Kathryn Armeson of Dennis Port, and Imogene Pement of Boston.

The second session was religious education under the direction of Mildred Carter, district supervisor, assisted by Jacques Pement and Albert Fisher. The Zion's League met under the direction of Elder William Guthrie.

Saturday evening, Sanford Fisher and Ralph Hardy who attended the Business Men's Institute at Independence gave a detailed report of that meeting followed by a short musical and social hour at which refreshments were served.

On Sunday a capacity congregation filled the church for a prayer and testimony service which was followed by a sermon by Brother D. T. Williams.

An excellent dinner was served by the younger branch women.

The business of the district was largely caught up by the confirmation and acceptance of Jacques Pement, appointee to replace Brother Clinton Saxton who for health reasons was returned to California.

A talk by the bishop's agent, George Armeson, and a tentative policy program by Brother Pement closed the conference.—Reported by FLORENCE FISHER

Two Men Ordained

CRESCENT, IOWA.—There was a social on March 8, for Brother and Sister J. E. Hoyt who recently moved to Crescent.

Brother Peter Larsen from Council Bluffs spoke to us Sunday, March 22.

Harley Butler is acting pastor and is organizing the priesthood of the branch for more active duties. Robert Butler was ordained to the office of priest, and Harold Wilson, deacon, bringing the priesthood membership to seven.

The women's department headed by Evelyn Wilson has started its work for their autumn festival and bazaar.—Reported by MARY HOYT

Two Candidates Baptized

MACON, MISSOURI.—Donald Gean, son of Mrs. Lila Cheever, and Martin Lloyd, son of Brother and Sister Lloyd Clark, were baptized January 25 at Bevier, Missouri. The confirmation service was held following the Communion service on February 1. The candidates were confirmed by Elder Carl Weeks.—Reported by MRS. KATHRYN H. BAILEY

Shows Slides of Tahiti

POPLAR CREEK BRANCH, XENIA, ILLINOIS.—In September, Evangelist J. Charles May held a series for two weeks, showing pictures of the South Sea Islands and singing in their native tongue. Sister May was at the closing services on Saturday and Sunday. A basket dinner was held on the closing Sunday.

In February, the Flora, Brush Creek, and Poplar Creek Branches held a two weeks' series with Apostle D. O. Chesworth in charge. After services the last night of the series a social was held in the dining hall.

The branch held a family night just before Christmas. There was also a New Year's Eve watch party and fellowship service held.

Every Thursday afternoon the women's department meet to quilt. The women also clean the church. Once a month a birthday dinner is held in honor of those who had birthdays during the month.

The Zion's League meets every Monday night. They presented a Christmas program under the leadership of Brother Eben Slover. They also sponsored an old-fashioned pie supper in the fall. They had a chili supper at Earl Burkitt's home and have other plans to raise money for the branch building fund.

Elder George Wolfe from Mt. Vernon is the speaker every third Sunday night. Brother Chesworth and Sam Anderson visited the branch in February. Brother Yokum and Tommy Racine were also guest speakers in January and February.

The pastor, Elder Bradford Henson, speaks to the Salem mission on the third Sunday night each month, and Elder Stanley Greathouse speaks there on the first Sunday night of the month.—Reported by IONA GREATHOUSE

Missionary Series Held

AKRON, OHIO.—A series of missionary sermons has been held, with three baptisms, and a great increase of spirit and attendance. The three people who were baptized are Elouise Ravenscroft, Johnnie Costick, and Harold Shaeffer.

Elders Loyd Adams and Harry Black, both of Kirtland, Ohio, had charge of the meetings and alternated in the preaching services. The meetings ran nightly from February 15 to 20.

Elder Charles Brockway, Kirtland District president, has just returned from Europe, where for the last two months he has worked on research for the Goodrich Rubber Company. Brother Brockway stayed one night with Louis Zonker, appointee to Germany. He visited Cologne, Germany; Paris, France; Geneva, Switzerland; and London, England.

In December the women's department held a bake sale, bazaar, and supper. They made $205 which they gave to the building fund.

On December 11 the Daughters of Zion held their annual Christmas party at the church. Sister Doris Ritz gave several stories of the carols which the group sang. The devotions were led by Sister Gertrude Crowther. Refreshments were served by Sister Burress McPherson, women's leader, assisted by Sister Etta Squires.

On December 21 the children's department, under the direction of Sister Edith Brockway, supervisor, gave their annual Christmas pageant in song and story.

On January 18 Karl Edward, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Horst, was blessed by High Priest E. Guy Hammond and Elder Hubert Mitchell. On February 1, David Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Kirkland, was blessed by Elders Hubert Mitchell and Grover Douglas.

The Zion's League held a spaghetti supper at the church January 30 clearing thirty dollars. Don Crowther was chef in charge.—Reported by RANKIN DAVIS

Progress on Building

FIRST CHURCH, PORTLAND, OREGON.—A potluck dinner at the IOOF Hall was held during the month of January for the purpose of raising money for the building fund. A contribution of one dollar by each person was asked for and during the evening additional money was received and pledged, bringing the total raised for the night to $601. The priesthood of the branch planned and presented the program for the dinner.

A baptism service was held on February 1 at the Central Branch and the following five new members were added to the First Church:

A Good Book for Your Child

God Planned It That Way

by Carolyn Edna Mueller

A child's wonderings about God and his world, and the mother's satisfying replies, are expressed in this book in lovely rhythmic lines.

The rain, wind, sunshine, and darkness are explained simply and beautifully as part of God's plan. The child learns how he is a part of the plan, too. An Abingdon-Cokesbury publication.

Mrs. Dorothy Moore, Kenneth and Howard Proctor, Deanna Buckendorf, and Mrs. Peggy Breuner. These new members were confirmed during the regular Wednesday evening prayer service at the home of Albert Gardner on February 4. There was an attendance of fifty-four members to this service.

The Zion's League was in charge of the morning service on February 8 and the program they presented included a number of patriotic hymns by the League chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Freeda Moore, and a short talk by Elder Fred W. Hawes.

Guest speakers who recently preached during the eleven o'clock hour include District President J. L. Verhei on January 25, Elder Harold Carpenter, district church school director, on February 15; and Elder Syd Dawbarn, who recently arrived in Portland from England, February 22.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Larson held open house at their home on January 18 in honor of High Priest Marcus H. Cook on his eighty-ninth birthday. Brother Cook has served the church in various capacities since 1909, most of that time being spent in the Oregon District.

The Laurel Guild held their annual rummage sale on February 18, and a total of one hundred sixty dollars was raised toward the building fund. A mystery sister party which is the Laurel Guild's annual affair was held at the home of Mrs. Caroline Larsen, their leader, on February 10 and was sponsored jointly by the guild and the Mariettas, the young women's group of the Laurel Guild.

A farewell party was held recently in honor of Arthur and Gay Minor at the Straight home. Mr. and Mrs. Minor have moved from Portland to Astoria, Oregon, where they expect to make their home permanently. They were presented with a lamp by the group.

The World Day of Prayer was observed February 20, with the Grace Baptist Church serving as the host church. First Church presented their part of the day's program at 10:20 a.m., and the group was invited to come for the day and bring lunch which was served at noon in the lower auditorium.

A short religious play was given during the morning worship hour on Sunday, February 22, and was under the direction of the branch dramatic leader, Carol Lampard, assisted by her mother, Mrs. Lil Lampard.

A new class has been organized and meets every Sunday evening at seven-thirty at the home of Alex Feduik. The purpose of this class is to have a "church in action" or CIA as it is called. Various teachers are chosen as instructors, and have included Elder Clifford Bryson, Chester Gregory, church school director for the branch, and Mrs. Erma Wehlitz.

A Zion's League chorus has recently been organized under the direction of Mrs. Freeda Moore, and the group meets each Sunday evening during the Zion's League hour at the Moore home for practice. They have participated in two programs recently and plan to continue to build their group in number and ability in order to assist in programs whenever they are able to. The attendance in this group ranges from twenty to thirty members.

Progress on the First Church building is continuing and an additional loan has recently been obtained from the General Church which will enable them to almost completely finish the building. The outside of the structure, including the siding, roofing, painting, windows, and doors, has already been completed as well as the basement floors, plumbing, electrical work, and furnace installation. The larger portion of the labor has been contributed by the members of the branch and volunteer help will continue until it is completed. Elder Elmer Larson is in charge of the building project.—Reported by E. STROYNOFF

Bishop DeLapp Speaker

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.—Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the evening speaker at the branch on Sunday, March 15. He was also guest speaker for the Wilburton Lions Club the following Tuesday night. Apostle D. Blair Jensen accompanied Bishop DeLapp to Wilburton.—Reported by MRS. CHARLES MONTANA

Priesthood Institute Held

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—President F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker on January 4. Brother Edwards also stayed to serve as guest speaker at the annual priesthood banquet the following evening.

Brother and Sister E. C. J. Swanson who are leaving the city were given farewells at the banquet.

Sister Marjorie Cross directed the vesper service at North Church on December 21. Bill Sanderson is the new Scoutmaster of Troop 100.

Elder E. Y. Hunker conducted missionary services February 22-March 1.

The following new appointments have been made by Elder E. E. Smith, city pastor: Elder Jerry Glandon succeeds Elder Robert Brush as pastor of Hilltop mission; Elder Brush succeeds John Roberts, Jr., as South Church school director.

Dr. F. M. McDowell and Elder James Menzies were guest instructors at the district priesthood institute March 13-15. The theme discussed was "The Grass Roots of Pastoral Care and Evangelism."

The following children have been blessed since the first of the year: Ronald Alvin, son of Amanda and Elmer Smith; Cinda Lou, daughter of Courtney and Dick Hunter; Loyd Wayne, son of Annabell and Walter Ross; Cathy Ann, daughter of Brother and Sister William Neal; and Janis Ann, daughter of Mary Lou and Roy Ash.

Wanda Downard and son Donald, Russel Smith, Marjorie Wagner, and Joan Cooper have been baptized.—Reported by ROBERT J. MILLER

Golden Wedding Anniversary

The E. R. Moores

Elder and Mrs. E. R. Moore of Portland, Oregon, were honored on the occasion of their fiftieth wedding anniversary with a reception on December 24 at the home of their son, Gerald, in Portland. Mrs. Moore, the former Maggie Hawes, moved with her parents to Condon, Oregon, in 1900; Mr. Moore had lived there since 1885, when he went with his parents from California. Both are members of the Reorganized Church, and Elder Moore served as pastor of the Condon group before moving to Portland in 1940, where they attend First Church. They have two sons: Claude and Gerald of Portland; a daughter, Mrs. Hazel Sankey of Mitchell, Oregon; and three grandchildren.

TRUST

It is something great in your life when you learn that you can trust God. But your religious development does not arrive until you become the kind of person that God can trust. He needs that kind of people. L. J. L.

"Count your obligations
Name them one by one,
And it will surprise you
What the Lord wants done."

An empty wagon makes the most noise, but it does not deliver the goods.

Oratory: The ability to make deep noises from the chest and sound like important messages from the brain.

TO THEE

Whatever humble thing we do,
Lord, help us do it well,
That every moment of each day
Thy love and praise may tell.

Inspire us, Lord, to speak the words
That thou wouldst have us say;
Hasten our hands to do the task
That must be done today.

Help us hold our light up high
That others, too, may see,
And groping souls discern the way
That leads, dear Lord, to thee.

Edith G. Beggs

SENTENCE PHILOSOPHIES

A mile in the morning seems like half a mile; a mile in the afternoon seems like two. It is all a matter of how you feel.

Take but one step in the right direction, and you will be nearer God.

Happiness is a habit, cultivate it.

Religion is not the refuge of the weak but the weapon of the strong.

The less able we are to deal with other people, the more we see to criticize in them.

The achievement of a happy marriage begins in childhood.

No one needs a smile quite as much as he who has none left to give.

The man who talks and thinks only of himself is hopelessly uneducated no matter how instructed he may be.

No man who is resolved to make the most of himself can spare time for personal contention.

Methods of Evangelism

By Apostle Maurice Draper

This 84-page, paper-bound book was the text used at the Institute in Evangelism. It includes some of the materials first published in 1942 in the "Missionary Manual." The information is clear, logical, accurate, and valuable to everyone participating in the evangelistic mission of the church.

Topics included are personal evangelism, missionary cottage meetings, missionary preaching, audio-visual materials, and questions asked and objections raised.

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT SMITH HOME

President Israel A. Smith has returned to the office following a trip to Washington, D. C., where he attended the Associated Church Press Annual Meeting of editors, April 8, 9, and 10. He was accompanied on the trip by Elder Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor.

INSTITUTE HELD

President F. Henry Edwards gave the first sermon at the Institute in Evangelism which began April 12. A worship service had been held in the Stone Church for the registered delegates prior to the morning preaching service. Brother Edwards preached at the Auditorium and the congregations of the Center Stake joined the registrants for the service. Over six thousand people heard the sermon. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, president of the Council of Twelve, preached the afternoon sermon. Services were held in the various congregations in the evening.

GIVES OPENING ADDRESS

President W. Wallace Smith gave the worship talk at the opening service of the Institute in Evangelism on April 12. The service was held for all registrants in the Stone Church. Apostles D. O. Chesworth and R. M. Holmes were in charge of the morning worship services which were held each day of the institute.

APOSTLE DAVEY SPEAKS

Apostle Roscoe E. Davey spent March 29 in Central Missouri Stake. He spoke at the eleven o'clock service at Warrensburg and met with the stake presidency, high council, bishopric, missionaries, and branch presidents in the afternoon. He was the speaker at Holden for the evening services. On Easter Sunday, April 5, he was the speaker at the Quindaro Church in the Kansas City Stake.

CHURCH REMODELED

Apostle Percy E. Farrow in company with Bishop Joseph Baldwin and Seventy James Renfroe attended a district conference April 5 at Hot Springs, Arkansas. This was the opening service in the newly remodeled church.

HOLDS SERVICES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Elder Charles D. Neff is holding a series for young people on Sunday evenings at the Guggell Park Church in the Center Stake. On Wednesday evenings he is the moderator at a vocational guidance series sponsored by the Liberty Street Zion's League. Guggell Park, East Independence, and Eden Heights Leagues also attend this series.

IN NAUVOO DISTRICT

Elder F. Carl Mesle, General Church youth director, was at Fort Madison, Iowa, for the Nauvoo District youth conference which was a Restoration Festival. Mrs. Betty Tripp is the district youth leader.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Warren H. Chelline

THE H.," says Brother Chelline, "stands for 'Herman,' a name often used for the buffoon character in comedies, but one worn with distinction by my father and passed on to me." This remark might label Warren as a minister with a good sense of humor—which he is. Another statement indicates something else: "I love my work as a pastor, although I feel grossly inferior to the responsibility." This shows him to be a humble man. Two phases of his church work especially appeal to him, he admits: visiting in the homes of the Saints and friends, and standing in the pulpit preaching the gospel. He'd never get anything else done if he spent the time in home visiting that he'd like to, he says, but he also loves to slip away once or twice a year to preach "a good old missionary series." Another love is attending reunions.

Warren was nineteen years old when he went under General Church appointment. That was in 1942, the same year he was ordained a priest. He spent four years traveling over eastern, middle-western and southern missions of the United States. He was ordained an elder in 1945. In 1946 he was appointed to Detroit-Windsor District and was pastor at Windsor, Ontario, for two years. He spent one year again as a traveling missionary in Michigan, and then in 1949 he was appointed to Port Huron. The area has recently been organized into the Blue Water Branch with four congregations totaling eleven hundred membership.

He is active in community work, especially the YMCA; International Ministerial Association (he is president of the Port Huron Ministerial Association); Saint Clair County Advisory Planning Commission; Community Chest; and Boy Scouts. In the latter organization he is Explorer Advisor for Troop 21; "skipper" of the Sea Explorer Ship "Griffin"; and chairman of the Church Awards Committee, Blue Water Council.

Last year he was elected to membership in the "Order of the Arrow," a Scout honor campers' society, and was given the "Scouters' Award Key" for advanced training and service as an adult leader.

He was born in September, 1923, at Jonesport, Maine, where his father was a General Church missionary. He was graduated from Cranston High School, Rhode Island, in 1941 with membership in Rhode Island Honor Society and a scholarship to Brown University, which he attended for three semesters. His hobbies are camping, photography, and sound recording.

He married Bonnibelle Nelson on New Year's Day, 1950. With pride they remember that President Israel Smith performed the ceremony.

Truth

INQUIRY HAS REACHED me respecting a statement I have heretofore made about the introduction of Mormon polygamy, and it may not be amiss to restate my position and the reason for it.

In the first place, the doctrine of polygamy was never submitted to the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which was organized by Joseph Smith—never at any time by any person. Nor was it ever submitted at any time by any person to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which in doctrines, tenets, and practice is the only Latter Day Saint organization that can possibly qualify as the lawful and rightful successor to that original church.

The latter-day church that openly and publicly practiced the so-called doctrine of plural marriage was the Mormon Church from and after 1852. Prior to that year the practice was secret and had been often and consistently denied by the leading officials of that organization.

We believe and aver as a fact that no specific action was ever taken by the Mormon Church itself in General Conference capacity to accept or approve such doctrine and practice, though in after years formal actions to endorse the "standard books" of that church might be construed by the liberal-minded as an approval.

Notwithstanding some statements officially made by them, I allege it to be a fact and their own records show that no action was taken by the Mormons themselves at that memorable Conference of August 29, 1852, either to reject or approve the document which their leaders read and "proclaimed" as a revelation through Joseph Smith. The official minutes of that Conference show that no action was taken; no action was asked for; no motion of any kind was proposed respecting it.

Any legislation concerning it would have been damaging. Action to approve would have been a public admission that they had been violating the law of God already approved and in the books. And the leaders, already caught in the mesh of plural marriage, were crafty enough to avoid presenting the question for action or vote by the people.

IN THE LIGHT of the true and recorded facts about that Conference, it is strange indeed that in an official publication of the Mormon Church the following statement would be made (I quote from page 836 of their Doctrine and Covenants Commentary, published by Deseret Book Company, Salt Lake City, Utah):

As has been stated in the introductory notes, the doctrine of plural marriage was made known to the Prophet in 1831, or 1832, although the Revelation on the subject was not committed to writing until the year 1843.

It should be noted that even then it was not given to the church. This step was taken on the 29th of August, 1852, when the Revelation was read to a General Conference in the "Old Tabernacle," Salt Lake City, and accepted by the assembly as a revelation from God and part of the law of the Church. In voting for the Revelation . . .

This statement contains a gross misrepresentation of fact, as the document was not put to a vote, and no vote of any kind respecting it was offered, asked for, or presented for decision.

However, truth sometimes comes forward—even by inadvertence as in this instance—and I wish to call attention to this sentence, following the reference to the Revelation (so-called) having been committed to writing in 1843: "It should be noted that even then it was not given to the church. This step was taken on the 29th of August, 1852 . . ."

Now this plain statement, in connection with the uncontroverted fact that Joseph Smith was killed in 1844, is proof that Joseph Smith did not "give" the document to that church (meaning, of course, the Mormons).

In all the unsatisfactory record about polygamy and the alleged revelation (now Section 132 in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants), there is no evidence whatsoever connecting Joseph Smith with the document, except Brigham Young's allegation that he (Joseph) had dictated it to William Clayton (who, incidentally, was not Joseph's secretary in 1843). The Clayton copy, Young said, was "burnt" by Emma Smith.

From and after that there is no evidence—hearsay or otherwise—to show how a copy, or a second copy if there was any such—ever got into the possession of Brigham Young.

IF JOSEPH RECEIVED any such revelation—which we have denied and will continue to deny—we know he did not present it to his church during his lifetime. If he, in his discretion, was withholding it, when during the interim of thirteen months did he do anything or make any decision of any kind about it which might be construed as authorizing it to be presented to any church? And if he did give instructions about it, is it not strange that he said to keep it a secret for eight years and then have it "proclaimed"—not approved as had all of his previous and unquestioned revelations?

The whole story is weak and falls to the ground when critically examined.

In this good year of 1953, we, the posterity of Joseph Smith, again and again challenge Mormon claims about the matter and reaffirm what our grandmother, Emma Smith, the elect lady, said, that it was a "lie out of whole cloth."

But now we have an official admission by Mormon authorities that Joseph Smith did not "give" Utah polygamy to that church!

God knows—and we know—that it was never presented to any other church organization in this enlightened and civilized world.

Miss Alice Anson Appointed Superintendent of Resthaven

We are very glad to announce that Miss Alice Anson, Registered Nurse, has been appointed as Superintendent of Resthaven to succeed Miss Helen Weeks.

Miss Anson assumes this responsibility with a very fine background of experience, as well as having served as assistant to Miss Weeks from January to August, 1952. Previous to that time she had administrative experience, having been supervisor of a fifty-bed surgical floor at the Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Gaylord, Michigan, from January, 1939, to February, 1940, leaving there to serve as Director of Nurses in the Hillsdale Community Health Center Hospital at Hillsdale, Michigan, where she served from February, 1940, to April, 1945. From December, 1946, to June, 1951, she was Director of Nurses at Iroquois Hospital in Watseka, Illinois. In each of these last two positions she served as assistant to the Hospital Administrator, being responsible for maintaining and directing the work of the nursing department.

We are glad to make this announcement and commend Miss Anson both to the church at large and to those living in as well as those serving this institution of the church.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Southwest Texas District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Robert I. Wakeman, Box 287, Uvalde, Texas, as bishop's agent of the Southwest Texas District succeeding Brother Floyd Jett, whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of May and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Wakeman at the above address.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Jett for the years of service that he has rendered in this office.

We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother Jett during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother Wakeman to them for their favorable consideration and support.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following report has been received from Apostle Arthur A. Oakman:

I have recently completed an extensive trip through southern Germany with Elders Victor Witte and Louis Zonker. In the centers such as Offenbach, Stuttgart, and Augsburg, where there are members of the church, there is a fine opportunity for stabilization, growth, and expansion of the work. Brother Witte is acquainting himself with the field which Brother Zonker knows well. Brother Zonker is very well loved by members of the church in Germany. His use of the German language is quite acceptable to them, and he has been interpreting for Brother Witte and for me. In England excellent work is being done by the appointees Thomas Worth and Eric Rowe, who labor under the direction of Donald Lents. To date, for the first three months of this year, twenty baptisms have been reported. Five or six more decisions in addition to these twenty have been secured and baptismal services are being arranged.

From Elder Wilford G. Winholtz, Silver Spring, Maryland:

I should like to express my appreciation for the ministry and stimulation which I received at the recent Business and Professional Men's Institute. The activities exceeded my highest expectations. I am appreciative of the foresight and leadership demonstrated and the formulation of such a program and the genuine atmosphere of democratic participation. It cannot be commended too highly. I trust that this is but the beginning of such an era.

From the interest manifest in such a gathering and the spirited discussions which took place, I feel confident that significant results can be in the offing if this potential reservoir is tapped and utilized for the solution of our church problems. As for myself, I should like to repeat part of my testimony during the closing session, "My every waking hour which is not demanded by the immediate requirements of family and daily work are available to the church as long as I retain identification with it."

In sharing in the common concern with many others I should like to see due emphasis given to the problems discussed at the Institute in our over-all program to evangelize the world and to Zionize the church. Indeed, I believe that when one is but a small fraction of its counterpart it renders the other virtually impotent. Our message as an entity of this twofold program requires that the word of evangelism be coupled with the deed of Zionite endeavor. Our church history over the years bears adequate testimony to this concept. I sincerely hope and pray that the groundwork now laid and the high level of interest might be maintained and utilized and that the impetus of divine guidance might bring forth the results required of each according to his particular abilities.

From President W. Wallace Smith:

While I was attending a meeting held at Warrensburg by the Central Missouri Stake, commemorating the date of the founding of the church on April 6, 1830, I mentioned in my talk to the priesthood and wives who had gathered there the fact that our church membership was 149,990, just 10 short of 150,000. After I sat down, Stake President Harry Simons commented on my remarks, saying that I could inform the statistician it was over the 150,000 mark because baptisms in the stake for Easter Sunday totaled 18. We were indeed happy to have this good report.

How Much Love?

A sermon given at the Washington, D.C., Branch on August 30, 1952

By Ray Zinser

As the Father loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love.

If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.—John 15: 9-14.

MANY IMMEDIATE ASSOCIATIONS come to our minds when the word "love" is used. Some of the most common associations will include love for a sweetheart, a wife, a husband, children, and members of the family. To others, whether admitted or not, love means a fondness for money, political power, position in society, perhaps an academic degree, the love of pleasure, or the strong motivation to win the love of someone else.

Jesus accepted the love which one should have for family and close friends; however, Jesus suggested that Christian love had some deeper roots than that which is experienced in terms of physical passions, immediate surroundings, or that which one might more commonly associate with love.

Love in a Christian Framework

Jesus invited people to place love in a "Christian" framework. In his ministry, many questions were asked of him. Some of the questions were deliberate attempts to trap him. Others were asked with serious intent. In either case, the Christ answered back with great insight. One such question began this way, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus answered saying,

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment.

And the second is like unto it; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 37-40.

Jesus placed God as the center of the universe, and love then came within the framework of loving God with all one's heart, soul, and mind. Joseph Smith renewed by revelation this message in August, 1831:

Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

This is basic to the "restored" gospel which Joseph Smith brought to the earth in the early part of the nineteenth century. He also reiterated the important commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

A Measuring Stick

Jesus proposed that we first of all love God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength. The invitation was to see the great creative processes of God—the eternal creation—or a glimpse of the infinite. This was the invitation to set goals and standards to meet those which are in accordance with divine law. Christ was inviting us to give our all for the attainment of godly objectives.

Our heart certainly includes our attitudes, emotions, desires, and purposes. Might involves stick-to-itiveness and will power. Mind catches up intellect, education (formal and informal), the desire to keep up with current events, desire to learn languages, to study science and all good books. Strength includes actual physical exertion not only for daily bread, but also for the prosecution of the gospel message in building Zion and spreading the message.

Thus Christ presented a measuring stick for Christian love demonstrated in giving heart, might, mind, and strength when we love God completely. Another measuring stick was suggested in the proposal that we love our neighbor as ourself. Jesus knew that because of personal ego including self-centeredness and often an undue concern for self, because we tend to perceive all of life through our own senses, we come to an attachment of our own personality or "self." Jesus knew this would provide a good base for a symbolism or simple association to give strength to his point. He merely suggested that we love our neighbor with the same intensity that we love our self.

The Christ, through divine insight and personal association with people, knew that personality development necessarily involves self-centeredness. However, he also comprehended that before we become "sons and daughters of God" something beyond this self-centeredness must exist. It exists through loving God and then loving neighbor. In addition, creation could best be realized by all in society if the creative processes were equally shared and if equal opportunities could be given everyone to achieve the best possible development capable within each person.

Jesus said that we should love our neighbors as ourselves. While most of us can agree on this generalization, many of us will probably differ in answer to the all-important question, "Who is my neighbor?" Thus we can cleverly and unscrupulously send up a smoke screen for our rationalizations if we wish. My neighbor can be my best friend. My neighbor may not necessarily have to live next door to me. My neighbors may be the people I do things with most—my dinner circle, my study group, my college class, my vocational group, or my church group.

But . . . is my neighbor a Negro? All Negroes? Are my neighbors Japanese? Mexicans? Catholics? Utah Mormons? Is my neighbor one with whom I disagree most violently? Is my neighbor one who does not see eye to eye with me on architecture or on the concept of democratic procedures in congregational life? Is my neighbor the diseased, delinquent, criminal, prostitute, orphan, the poor, the untutored?

Jesus had this same question asked of him:

And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou?

And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.

And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do and thou shalt live.—Luke 10: 25-28.

Jesus recognized this answer by his interrogator as correct in terms of a generalization; indeed, a very safe generalization which we hide behind many times. However, let us turn to the lawyer's next question. Perhaps he was sincere in it. Perhaps he was attempting to trap Jesus, or perhaps he was attempting to justify a guilty conscience when he asked, "And who is my neighbor?" (Luke 10: 29)

Jesus answered the question, as he did many times, with a story. The "story" answer could explain a point without big words and without complex language which often gets in the way of simple communication. The answer was the story of the good Samaritan. It is well for us to study carefully the implications of this story:

And Jesus answering, said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

And by chance, there came down a certain priest that way; and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side of the way.

And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked upon him, and passed by on the other side of the way; for they desired in their hearts that it might not be known that they had seen him.

But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

And on the morrow, when he departed, he took money, and gave to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

Who now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him who fell among the thieves?

And he said, He who showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go and do likewise.—Luke 10: 31-38, Inspired Version.

The story is especially meaningful when we consider that the residents of Jerusalem and those from Samaria were not on friendly terms. In fact, considerable hatred was felt on both sides. But even with this condition the Samaritan had "compassion"—that is to say he had "empathy," he could put himself in the place of the wounded. What did the priest and Levite do? They deliberately ignored the wounded man, pretending not to see him. It is difficult for most of us to give liberally to our best "neighbors" when they are in need, let alone our enemies.

How typical of so many of us to turn our heads the other way or close our eyes when we don't want to see something; particularly when our prejudices, our fears, our unfounded biases incline us to sins of omission as well as sins of commission.

Daring exploits have been recorded of those who literally give their lives for their friends, their "neighbors," or their family members. Navy chaplains have literally drowned after giving their life jackets to seamen who had no life jackets after an "abandon ship." There are those who hazard and often lose their lives in protecting or saving children from harm. There are those who go into fires to save people and who are consumed or seriously injured by the act. There are those who die in childbirth to bring forth life. There is no doubt that these are supreme acts of love as Jesus suggested.

However, not all can or have opportunity to give up life literally as a manifestation of true Christian love. But all can come to a greater understanding of the implications of loving God with heart, might, mind, and strength, before anything else.

Love of God first is compatible with love of husband, wife, kinfolk, friends, and so on. Loving God will provide the means by which we can have greater possibilities of loving others and seeing the Christian relationships in life associations. Loving God first and above all else will also bring the comprehension that we are co-participants with God in the marvelous processes of creation—all that we do aids or inhibits creation in personality development and in the continuing stream of kingdom-building processes. Loving God and our fellow-men will motivate us to give all our energies in building the kingdom of God now.

The keenest sense of urgency for building the kingdom of God can only come with the deepest sentiments of love for God and fellow-men. This involves loving neighbor as self, and this specifically includes loving all people, all races, all colors, all nationalities, and all those of different creeds.

This involves loving those with whom we disagree. Love is usually in its most difficult test when we try to love our ardent critics or those with whom we constantly disagree. Christian love is not complete in mere generalizations nor in the lip service many of us give to our generalizations. Christian love is manifest in active participation with peoples of diverse characteristics.

Some Specific Steps

May I suggest some specific steps which we can take in giving practical demonstration to Christian love?

First of all, we must come to an understanding of the purposes of God and the objectives of the Zion process. Each person must be led to an understanding of his role in the creation process and the way in which his personality develops. We must create an active, aggressive, congregational life, seeking to evangelize and win friends to the gospel by deeds as well as words. This is a consideration of not only "mission" possibilities but the possibilities of evangelism among present members.

An educational program in congregational life must include an outline of the Zion process and the part to be played by the Center Place and center stakes, by the regions round about and outer districts and missions. Some questions must be answered in this respect. Whom should we encourage to "gather" right now? What forms of financial aid should be established for Zion experimentation in specifically designated areas? What goals have General Church and subadministrative units established?

Another key educational program to be developed is one which seeks to understand what congregational democracy involves. There exists some confusion in many of our congregations over a practical, working meaning of democracy. Our general theory is sound and fairly well known, however. But the specifics are still confused and must be attacked by experimental work in democratic procedures beginning with business meetings and running through the whole administrative process and group action seeking common consent.

There should be a serious concern for protection of minority rights and representation. The majority rarely has to worry because its numerical supremacy is usually self-protective. The moral obligation of the majority must always include protection of minority rights and expression, just as the minority must carry the moral obligation of supporting the majority decision once it is fully explained, understood, and democratically arrived at in group action.

This involves a fond love and protection and encouragement for those who have the courage to present differing and unpopular opinions. Our church should be particularly sensitive to minority rights and unpopular opinions because of our own history. What happened in Nauvoo from 1844 to 1846 also ought to motivate us to assiduously apply democratic principles in our church life.

Our attention must be turned to the establishment of stewardships in the congregation whereby those fitted by training and experience will be given opportunities for the exercise of their stewardship possibilities. Leadership by clique, especially over a period of continuing years, is dangerous not only to the purposes of the group but to the leadership program. The leadership program should include a continual recruitment and training program for church school teachers and workers in all areas of congregational life. "Understudy" and on-the-job-training are essential.

Each congregation, as well as larger administrative units, should have a comprehensive general plan for its activities whereby each specific activity, including church school, preaching, and departmental work, fits into a plan. Each activity must serve a function related to the overall objectives.

Our love should be so motivating that we will want to attend church to be with others in common pursuits, to worship God in truth and righteousness, and to support the many activities of the church. Somehow, we must build a congregational life where peak attendance is not noticeable only at Easter or at crucial business meetings.

These specific steps can demonstrate love on the most practical level and will be expressive of the higher values which accrue when we consider our stewardship in terms of eternity and immortality. Love begins with faith in God and his work, in repentance and a renewal of spirit which all make those of differing nationalities, colors, and personality types objects of our deepest love and concern.

The kingdom of God on earth (Zion) will flourish, not in the ethereal generalizations giving brave lip service to Christian love but in the practical details of living the kingdom way of life as suggested in some of the specific steps which we can take today.

The greatest adventure of this life is found in giving our lives to others in Christian love by aggressively pursuing objectives of the kingdom of God. "Seek ye first to establish the kingdom of God" is a command never more urgently needed than today. Christian love and diligent work in achieving the specific steps just mentioned will significantly assist us in building Zion in our time.

Why Did Joseph Smith Read James 1:5 ?

By Evan A. Fry

SINCE THE PUBLICATION of my little tract, The Restoration Story, a number of people have commented on the account I give there of how Joseph Smith came to read the familiar passage in James 1:5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." The story I use in my tract is that he heard a sermon on this text preached during the series of revival meetings with which every student of church history is familiar, and that as a result of this sermon he opened his Bible to the verse in question to read it for himself.

There has somehow grown up among our people a totally unsubstantiated belief that Joseph Smith was miraculously directed to study that verse. Several of the people who have questioned me about this belief objected to the "sermon text" story because it seemed to contradict this belief in a miraculous direction toward that verse.

I believe I first read the story that a sermon directed Joseph's attention to James 1:5 in a Mormon publication, Francis W. Kirkham's A New Witness for Christ in America, Volume I, page 44. Mr. Kirkham gave the original source as Zion's Ensign, but did not name volume, page number, or date, since he had quoted the story as reprinted in the Deseret News for January 20, 1894. Presuming that publication in the Ensign would have preceded that publication by only a short time, I searched the January, 1894, files of Zion's Ensign and found the quotation on page 6 of the issue for January 13. It was an account of an interview with William Smith, brother of Joseph the Martyr, given sometime in November, 1893, when William Smith was eighty-two years old. E. C. Briggs put the questions during the interview, and J. W. Peterson made note of the replies, writing them out later for publication in the Ensign. On the basis of this article, I included in my tract the statement that Joseph's attention was directed to James 1:5 by a sermon which used this passage as a text.

A partial quotation from this article is as follows:

"What caused Joseph to ask for guidance as to what church he ought to join?" asked Brother Briggs.

"Why, there was a joint revival," was the reply, "in the neighborhood between the Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians; they had succeeded in stirring up quite a feeling, and after the meeting the question arose which church should have the converts. Reverend Stockton was president of the meeting and suggested that it was their meeting and under their care [Reverend Stockton was the Presbyterian minister and the revival meetings were held in his church. E. F.] and they had a church there and ought to join the Presbyterians, but as Father did not like the Reverend Stockton very well, our folks hesitated. The next evening a Reverend Mr. Lane of the Methodists preached a sermon on 'What Church Shall I Join,' and the burden of his discourse was to ask God, using as a text, 'If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally.' And of course when Joseph went home and was looking over the text, he was impressed to do just what the preacher had said, and going out in the woods with childlike, simple trusting faith, believing that God meant just what he said, he kneeled down and prayed. . . .

I BELIEVE that this account in no way conflicts with the one told by Joseph Smith himself, but on the other hand, presents it in a much more advantageous light for our purposes. Joseph Smith does not say how or why he came to be reading James 1:5. In Volume I, page 8, of the Church History, he is quoted as saying: "While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse . . ." He does not give any explanation of how he—a boy of fifteen—happened to turn to this verse, nor does he claim that his turning to it was spiritually directed or supernatural in any way. What could be more natural than that he would turn to a verse which he had heard expounded from the pulpit in a sermon just previously? There is no conflict here between Joseph Smith's account and William Smith's account in 1893. They are two accounts of the same story.

I believe that the significance of the story for our purposes is this: The union revival meetings were being held in the Presbyterian Church under the leadership of the Reverend Mr. Stockton, the Presbyterian minister. But the minister who used the text from James 1:5, according to William Smith, was a Reverend Mr. Lane, a Methodist minister—evidently one of the ministers co-operating in the union revival service.

IN a letter from Oliver Cowdery to W. W. Phelps, published in the Messenger and Advocate for December, 1834, Volume 1, Number 3, the following interesting passage appears with respect to the revival and the part played in it by the Reverend Mr. Lane.

It is necessary to premise this account by relating the situation of the public mind relative to religion, at this time. One Mr. Lane, a presiding elder of the Methodist Church, visited Palmyra and vicinity. Elder Lane was a talented man possessing a good share of literary endowments and apparent humility. There was a great awakening, or excitement raised on the subject of religion, and much inquiry for the word of life. Large additions were made to the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches. . . .

Mr. Lane's manner of communication was peculiarly calculated to awaken the intellect of the hearer and arouse the sinner to look about him for safety. . . . Much good instruction was always drawn from his discourses on the Scriptures, and in common with others, our brother's [Joseph Smith, Jr.'s] mind became awakened.

For a length of time the reformation seemed to move in a harmonious manner, but as the excitement ceased, or those who had expressed anxieties had professed a belief in the pardoning influence and condescension of the Savior, a general struggle was made by the leading characters of the different sects for proselytes. Then strife seemed to take the place of that apparent union and harmony which had previously characterized the moves and exhortations of the old professors, and a cry—I am right; you are wrong—was introduced in their stead.

In this general strife for followers, his mother, one sister, and two of his natural brothers were persuaded to unite with the Presbyterians. This gave opportunity for further reflection and, as will be seen in the sequel, laid a foundation, or was one means of laying a foundation, for the attestation of the truths, or professions of truth, contained in that record called the word of God.

According to William Smith's interview, it was this Reverend Mr. Lane, a presiding elder of the Methodist Church, who in his sermon advised the people to "ask of God" if they were in doubt about which church to join. This assertion fits naturally into Oliver Cowdery's picture of the confusion and bickering which followed the peak of the revival meetings. It also fits in with Joseph's seeming liking for Mr. Lane (in which he may have followed the preference of his father, who did not like the Presbyterian minister, the Reverend Stockton) and Joseph's expressed preference for the Methodist faith (see Church History, Volume I, page 7, fourth line from the bottom of page).

WHEN Joseph Smith "asked of God" and received an answer no one was more startled or more skeptical than the Reverend Mr. Lane, in spite of the belief in the promise expressed in his sermon. On page 10, Volume I of the Church History, Joseph Smith relates the story of his visit to "one of the Methodist preachers who was very active in the before-mentioned religious excitement." To my mind, this could

Church Helps in Leadership Training

By John R. Darling

SOMETIMES it is easier to tell what something is by first defining what it is not. President Frederick M. Smith was once asked: "What is an expert?"

"Well," answered the President, "it isn't the fellow who blows in, blows off, and blows out."

This is not an article about how attending church helps one to become a leader; and it isn't a discussion of some proposed blueprint for training leaders; and it isn't some new formula for discovering leaders—important as these might be. "Well, what is it then?" you ask.

Its purpose is to point out how the church can and does help train present leaders of leaders—those persons who already have their eyes, ears, and hearts open to the cause of Jesus Christ; those persons who already are witnessing a centrality of purpose in efforts to lead others to accept this same cause.

One sometimes experiences rude awakening when he learns that he has been appointed or elected a leader (particularly to a branch office that has been voted so unanimously in his absence) and discovers that he has but a faint idea of what the job entails. At this moment, any previous interest and schooling in the theory and practice of leadership pays dividends. Fundamental principles in leadership training take on new value.

What is the incentive that undergirds leadership? The prophet Alma introduces us to an attitude which is fundamental. It is presented in the one word, desire. If one does not desire to be, he will not be. To this ought to be added the thought that sustained desire calls for sustained motivation. That which guarantees this continued zeal in the cause of Christ is found in the teaching of the Apostle Paul in his letter to the Colossians (3:23): "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men."

Study Good Leaders

Meetings are often attended where the purpose requires action by the group. Who were the leaders? Did those in charge lead, or were the real leaders other persons in the group? A group takes action only when led to do so. Whoever is able to influence group response is functioning with the power of leadership. The degree of group allegiance determines the intensity of this power. Leadership, be it good or bad, is being given when a group is following. The real leaders not only call the signals but obtain group response in harmony with these signals.

Enthusiasm, conviction, self-confidence, intelligence, and willingness to accept constructive criticism are among the attributes usually associated with good leadership. Those leaders who are concerned with the refining of group process—in other words, Christian democracy in action—usually receive the hearty support of followers who themselves are dedicated to preserving faith in group process—or in other words, the social order of the kingdom.

Both Matthew (7:12) and Luke (11:10) noted a statement of the Master which gives encouragement to those who lead for Christ and his cause: "Seek, and ye shall find." As one studies different expressions of leadership under various conditions, he will learn. As one seeks to find good examples as patterns for action, he finds. These are promises. Study material is not all in books; many times it is most easily understood in living examples. As one must go to a well-stocked library for recorded reference, he must search out and study real leaders at work if he is to learn about leadership.

It has been said that common bonds of understanding result through association. There is no guarantee that appreciation necessarily develops through association, nor should it. But as a law of learning we might paraphrase "When in Rome do as the Romans do" with "When in Rome study the Romans." To this we might add, "There is no substitute for firsthand experience." Potential leaders develop skills through observing, evaluating, and practicing those appreciations and understandings which leadership at its best reflects.

Practice Leadership

An oft-quoted truth, "We learn to do by doing," applies to the development of skillful leadership. Jesus set a developmental pattern for effective leadership training. In Acts 1:1 is recorded a concise formula: "Jesus began both to do and to teach." Directly stated and so frequently implied in patriarchal blessings is the admonition to accept new responsibilities as they are offered. Advancement in the refining process of our gifts, the acquiring of new insights by evaluating old procedures, the sustaining of enthusiasm for a cause calls for continued growth. It is all too frequently observed that zest for a cause is much stronger among new converts. There is nothing more discouraging to new members in the church, for example, than to observe cancerous indifference among those whose testimonies once rang with dedication. The theology of the Restoration re-emphasizes that receiving is in proportion to the operation of the principle of giving. Refining stewardship in all things, including the giving of leadership, is the God-given design for happiness. In the epistle to the Hebrews (6:3-6) Paul recorded doctrine that warns of the sorrow that results from inactivity:

And we will go on unto perfection if God permit. For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again unto repentance; seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

We are all leaders. Whether we are good or poor leaders will be measured by concern versus indifference.

If it were true that "we're all in the same boat," and that the practice of "eat, drink, and be merry" is fast becoming a mutual goal, meditation on this theory will uncover the force of evil design. What is the power of leadership to which we give allegiance? Jesus drew the profile of leaders for God when he said: "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Leaders for God may be likened to a strong man in a boat who has set his course by a goal on the horizon, and with his eye upon the point from which he shoved off rows with purpose to achieve.

Become a Leader

The leader each of us is to become prays, studies, sets goals, and responds with reasonable service in harmony with that which God reveals. "Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:6d.

Our agency permits us to choose to do God's way or choose to do otherwise, but we are free agents only when we do God's way. "That which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do

Part XIII

R. W. Scott

THE NEXT SUNDAY when Hubert preached on the duties of the Saints, Brother R. W. Scott arose at the close of the service and related a dream which he had had the previous night. In that dream he stood in the shelter of a building while a great snowstorm raged. He saw a man coming up the street facing the storm; he stopped to wipe the snow out of his eyes, and Brother Scott saw it was Hubert. He was leading a sheep, and after he put it in the shelter he started out again. Brother Scott asked, "Brother Case, where are you going?"

Hubert answered, "Why, Brother Scott, there are many of them out there, and I must bring them in." Then the dream ended.

Brother Scott continued, "I am now ready to offer my life service to the Master to help in his work."

On December 20 at prayer meeting, Hubert was presented a purse containing $130, the greatest collection and offering he had ever received.

He came home on December 23 for Christmas and remained over the holidays to visit relatives and enjoy the family, returning to Omaha on January 6, 1917. He spent that whole month visiting the sick and administering both in homes and hospitals, preaching on Sundays and holding priesthood meetings on Monday evenings and prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings. Great interest and good attendance marked all these meetings. At the priesthood meetings scarcely a man would be absent. This continued for months.

In February I wrote him to meet me at St. Joseph for a trip I wanted to make. We went to Camden Point, Missouri, and remained there overnight with the Montagues. They received us with open arms, and when we left next day, I carried with me the first copy of our family genealogy I had ever seen. They had lent it to me without question, although I had never met them before. It was not in very good shape, and I had it rebound at the Herald House before returning it the next spring.

Hubert was at home ten days; we greatly enjoyed this brief visit. The girls were busy at school and at work. He returned to Omaha and finding the pastor out of town on business took his place, preaching three times on Sunday—one being a funeral sermon. He baptized eleven people and made many pastoral visits. On March 21 he came home as I was very sick. It was hard for him to leave Omaha, as the pastor was still absent and the whole burden was resting on him. He remained at home until the Conference was over.

In April he was assigned to Omaha as city missionary. As Brother Scott had not returned from Texas yet, Hubert was obliged to take his place as pastor. Every day he visited and sought for scattered members who had not attended for long periods of time; he succeeded in bringing many of them back to church.

Five Thousand Indians

He received a letter from President F. M. Smith asking him to go to Oklahoma with him to visit the Indians. This was late in June. He came to Lamoni, and he and Brother Smith went to Oklahoma together. They were met at El Reno by Brother A. W. Sanders who took them to Watonga, where there was a gathering of 5,000 Indians. Many of our Indian members were in this crowd. Both Brother Smith and Hubert preached to them at this great gathering. This and other trips they took gave Brother Smith a very good understanding of the missionary work among the Indians.

They attended another meeting near Calumet, and another near Kingfisher. Then they visited the Otoes, Iowas, Sacs, and Foxes, then various camps of the Osages and Kaws. This trip, and the one among the Omahas and Winnebagos in Nebraska, gave President Smith the greatest understanding of the Indian question of any of the church leaders.

Hubert returned to Omaha on August 11 and soon left for the Lamoni Reunion. This was a very spiritual reunion all the way through. The gifts of prophecy and tongues were enjoyed. After the reunion Hubert returned to Omaha and with R. W. Scott visited the Saints in Logan, Iowa.

On returning to Omaha he held a lawn meeting at Brother J. M. Baker's home; it lasted two weeks with excellent attendance and interest. Some were baptized, and many encouraged and inspired. The branch was strengthened by the additions from these outlying sections.

Omaha

Hubert has never enjoyed working with any group of men more than those in Omaha because there was so much of brotherly kindness and co-operation among them. Many members who had grown cold were enlivened again, and they felt there was great good done in the city, as well as in many smaller towns throughout the district. A very interesting experience occurred in prayer meeting one Wednesday night in Omaha. Hubert had decided not to take part in this meeting, so he sat far back in the church. There was such a long silence that he finally got up. As he rose to his feet he saw beautiful writing in large letters across the front of the church. As he read one line it would disappear and another would flash across the building. He read each line as it appeared, and when the writing ceased, he stopped also. Then he told them where he had seen the message he had just given. The time was fully occupied from then until the close of the meeting. During his stay, Hubert helped to build and organize a second congregation in Omaha called the South Omaha Branch. He spent some time with this branch before leaving for General Conference. He came home first and urged me to go with him. A kind sister, Miss Nellie Grover, offered to stay with my girls and pay my fare if I would go with him to Independence. Gratefully I accepted her offer and had a very enjoyable experience. We went home much pleased because Hubert was appointed to Lamoni for the year.

After returning to Lamoni, he was much occupied for some time with business affairs. He held meetings during the month of May in neighboring school districts, using the schoolhouses for services.

Marriage of Daughter

Early in June our oldest daughter, Cicely, was married. Ever since her first semester at Graceland, she had been dating Arthur Church. He was intensely interested in wireless telegraphy and had built a receiving set in a room of his father's home at Lamoni. This was the first wireless receiving station west of the Mississippi. He had taught a class in wireless at Graceland in 1917-1918. He was now expecting to be called into the Army very soon, and wanted to be married before he left. Cicely had been working in the Herald Publishing House as stenographer to Brother Carmichael, and she continued there until he returned from the Army. They were married on June 2, 1918, at our home, Brother Elbert Smith officiating.

Hubert held tent meetings at Creston, Chariton, and Lucas, with good attendance and interest. Quite a number were baptized at each place. At Pleasanton also he held a fine meeting and some were baptized. It lasted more than a month with large crowds and great interest. He came home for the reunion at Lamoni. We all moved to tents at the reunion grounds. It was a wonderful meeting, well attended and very spiritual.

This was the fall and winter of the flu epidemic. Brother R. V. Hopkins and Hubert went day and night for weeks administering to the sick. It is a notable fact that, because of the goodness and mercy of God, there was only one death in Lamoni and near vicinity.

Indian Member Healed

Hubert was assigned again to Oklahoma in 1919. On his way he stopped over in Independence. There he witnessed a remarkable healing among the Indians. A man by the name of Orrin Turtle brought his wife to the Sanitarium to be operated on for gallstones. They both wanted to be baptized before she went to the Sanitarium, so Hubert baptized them. When Dr. Tom Twyman, who did the operating, discovered she had a terrible cancer he said, "In my judgment, the best thing would be to sew her up." Dr. Messenger asked Hubert to take the Indians out and tell them she could not live more than two weeks. Dr. Messenger said, "You go and get the elders." So Hubert got an elder and came back after she was conscious. He asked her if she would like for them to pray for her and anoint her with oil, as she knew our custom among the Indians. "Oh, yes," she said, "I would."

Hubert administered to her and went on to Oklahoma that day to his work down there. He met her on the street in Kingfisher four weeks after that. She said, "Look here, Brother Case, I haven't had a pain since you administered to me." That was about twenty-eight years ago and she is living yet.

A Home in Independence

Hubert was requested to go to Pertle Springs, Missouri, where a reunion was being held. He was there several days, and went on to Holden to see Sister Devore, who was alone and sick. We remembered her fondly from our association in the South Seas. This was the last time he ever saw her. He went on to Oklahoma City, and his work in that state. He visited many branches, including the Indians, and made a few new openings. When the year was over he returned to Lamoni, with the idea that it would be much better for us to live in the Center Place.

Our son-in-law, Arthur Church, was also anxious to move to Independence, so Hubert and Arthur bought a large house on Maple Street just across from the high school. Then we sold our property in Lamoni and moved to Independence. The old house was roomy enough for all of us. Arthur took the rooms upstairs, and we lived downstairs. We all had plenty of room and were very comfortable in that house.

Hubert went on to Oklahoma to his work. Dorothy, our second daughter, found work also in the office of the Quorum of Twelve as stenographer. Both Dorothy and Ardyce enjoyed attending the Sabbath school class of Mrs. Mansel Williams. This class was held for years after its organization that spring of 1919.

Oklahoma Reunion

Early in the fall the Oklahoma Reunion was to be held in Red Rock. Hubert was anxious for us to come down, so we decided to go. It proved to be a very rainy week, but the reunion was wonderful. Brother Gomer T. Griffiths was in charge of the reunion, also Brothers J. W. Wight and R. V. Hopkins. Some Indians from Red Rock were in attendance. The reunion ground was right around their council building, and whenever it looked too much like rain, Brother Griffiths would say, "Well, let's adjourn to the Council House. We always have a good meeting there." An Indian by the name of Jack Koshiway began attending meetings just out of curiosity. He had read his Bible more than most of the Indians and at one time he selected thirty men and baptized them, just because he said they were so sinful they needed it. One day he sat in prayer meeting, and Brother Griffiths spoke to him by the Spirit. He also heard prophecy and the gift of tongues through Elders Wight and Hopkins. At the close of the meeting, Brother Griffiths baptized twenty-eight, including Jack Koshiway and Chief Hoke Dent and his wife. Hoke Dent was an old man at that time, but he lived on to be 105. His wife was ninety-nine when she passed away. Their son, Ralph Dent, is now chief of the Otoe tribe.

They are good faithful members of this church, and often ask for someone to come and preach to them.

Speaking in Indian Languages

Another incident impressed Hubert very much. At one of the Conferences, as he was getting ready to go to prayer meeting, he saw an Indian getting off the streetcar and spoke to him. His name was Oliver Lamere, a Winnebago Indian from Nebraska. He was a nationally known lecturer, and Hubert had met him a number of times when he was working with the Omaha Indians because the reservations joined. Hubert said, "Come on, Oliver, let's go to the prayer meeting. It is starting in a few minutes." The church was packed. They went right down in front of the pulpit.

During the meeting J. W. Wight arose and spoke in the gift of tongues and gave the interpretation. This noted Indian said to Hubert, "He spoke in the Sioux language, and I understood every word of it." Presently R. V. Hopkins arose and spoke in tongues and gave the interpretation. Phillip Cook, an elder in the church and a Cheyenne Indian, told Hubert at the close, "I understood that language. He spoke in Cherokee."

Daughter's Illness

Ardyce and I left the Red Rock reunion before its close. She had but one more year of high school when we left Lamoni, and I had promised her that we would go back for the school year so that she might graduate with her class. But it was not to be so. We had been there just about two weeks, when she became ill with typhoid. I had to telegraph Hubert to come from his mission. She was very ill, and as soon as we dared to move her we took her to Independence by train. Dr. Hills of Lamoni came with us and sat by her cot in the baggage car with us. He never left her side until she was safe in the Sanitarium, when Dr. G. L. Harrington took charge of her. She came out of the coma she was in, soon after, and although she had a second run of the fever, it was not nearly so bad as the first. When she recovered, it was entirely too late to go back and try to catch up. She finished high school at Independence the next year.

Dorothy, who had remained in Oklahoma to visit friends, came home when she heard of Ardyce's illness and helped all she could to take care of her. She soon found work in the General Church offices, where she remained a long time.

Waller Memorial Chapel

By A. Orlin Crownover

THE FORMAL OPENING and consecration services of the Waller Memorial Chapel, 1666 Mott-Smith Drive, Honolulu, were held February 15, 1953. The service at ten-thirty Sunday morning climaxed the activities of the conference which was held Friday through Sunday.

This lovely edifice, situated at the entrance to Makiki valley, was built in honor of Evangelist Gilbert J. Waller who was the founder of the church in Hawaii in 1890, having been converted in San Francisco the previous year. Brother Waller was active in the business and social life of Hawaii for fifty-four years and was with the Hawaii Meat Company the greater part of that time. He died in San Francisco in 1945.

Daughters Attend Conference

Present for the conference were two of Brother Waller's daughters, Miss Christiana Waller and Mrs. Ruth Waller Nelson of San Francisco, and a granddaughter, Miss Lorna Mills of Laguna Beach, California. They arrived on the "Lurline."

Among the high lights of the service Sunday morning was the unveiling of a bronze plaque in memory of Evangelist Waller. Miss Waller and Miss Mills participated in the unveiling, and Mrs. Nelson spoke in appreciation of the life of their father and the local church people who had erected a most fitting memorial. A recording by Brother Waller was used with touching dignity at this point.

Tribute by Apostle Gleazer

Speaking on "Our Sense of Commission," Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who came from Independence, Missouri, for the consecration service, said, "Gilbert Waller had a profound sense of commission." To an overflow audience he emphasized the fact that "all who follow in the footsteps of such leadership must have that same sense of commission," and he made an analogy to Lincoln's "Gettysburg Address" in stressing the need for men to rally to the task of carrying forward the work thus far "so nobly advanced."

Contributions to the service were made by Emma Kaawakauo, Jr., organist, and the choir under the direction of Emma Kaawakauo, Sr. The congregation sang "Faith of Our Fathers," after which District President A. Orlin Crownover read a brief biography of Patriarch Waller and offered the prayer of consecration.

Others assisting in the service were Elders Elwin R. Vest and Henry Mahi, counselors to the district president, and Tsuna Miyamoto, district bishop's agent.

Governor Present for "Luau"

Governor Oren E. Long, who expressed his regrets at not being able to attend the Sunday service, was present at the luau held Saturday evening in which the newly reconstructed annex was filled to overflowing. The governor, speaking to the assembly, recalled his first meeting with Gilbert J. Waller on an interisland steamer thirty-six years ago, and related how his respect for Mr. Waller grew during succeeding years. He spoke of his admiration for the new chapel and praised the efforts of the people who made the edifice possible. Speaking with strong conviction on the place of the church as an institution in the community, the governor said, "In the western world the church has ever held great importance in our society, and in American democracy it must continue its strong influence in the brotherhood of men."

Mayor John H. Wilson, who was confined with influenza, sent his regrets at not being able to attend; however, Mrs.

Wilson was present. Also in attendance was Mrs. Bina Mossman, Republican national committeewoman.

The afternoon and evening activities held at the conference included a business session at one-thirty in the afternoon and a district women's tea and reception at five, over which Mrs. Inez Vest of Hilo presided. The conference closed with an ordination service at seven in which Eugene Painter, Virgil Bradley, and David Kaleikau were ordained to the priesthood.

Distinctive Construction of Chapel

The chapel, which is constructed of native black lava stone, reinforced concrete, and hollow tile, is designed to harmonize with existing church buildings. The doors and all pulpit furnishings are of native koa wood. The tile adjacent to the doors was cut from coral excavated from shallow water near the island. The cathedral glass over the cantilever canopy covering the entrance is pale lavender, and the indoor garden behind the altar and baptistry, lighted by the glass roof, is appraised the most beautiful setting of any chapel in Hawaii. The edifice has cost approximately $43,000, exclusive of furnishings.

The old church, now called the annex, has been reconstructed to house a junior church chapel, a dining hall, a large stage, classrooms, and recreation area.

A Foundation of Zion

By Howard F. Miller

Thou shalt have part in laying the foundation of Zion.

THESE ARE WORDS from a prophecy given to Gilbert J. Waller by Joseph Smith III. This young businessman, who had been converted to the church not many years before, must have been thrilled to hear the prophet of God say to him, "Because of thy faith, thy integrity, and thy love for the gospel of Christ thou shalt have part in laying the foundation of Zion."

I first met Brother Waller while I was a pastor in Arizona in 1935. There he told me about that great promise, and I could see within him a desire to go to the Center Place of Zion and fulfill that promise. When I met him again on my way to Hawaii as a missionary in 1943, he told me again of the promise God had made to him and the hope he had to one day reside in Zion and help build the foundation.

In 1944, on my return from the Islands, I visited Brother Waller at his sick bed in San Francisco. After I had administered to him he told me again of the promise God had made, and I felt I could see hope within him, in spite of his age, to go to Zion. Before I returned to the island the following February, Brother Waller died. The land he had previously purchased for a home in Zion, not far from the home of President Frederick M. Smith, was sold—still vacant lots.

Naturally his friends wondered about his promise, "Thou shalt have a part in laying the foundation of Zion." They knew he had made plans several times to leave his business and church work to others in the Islands and move to Zion. Each time these plans were changed and Brother Waller remained in Hawaii to serve until he retired from his business after fifty years of ministry to the church. Had this good man not been faithful? Had he not worked diligently in the Lord's vineyard? Why did he never get to Zion?

The respect the island people had for this good brother was reflected in their response in making preparation for the erection of the Waller Memorial Chapel in Honolulu as a church center.

One day we were working in a drizzling rain excavating for the basement of one of the buildings. We were using a large scoop attached to a tractor to take the dirt out. It was most unpleasant work with mud underfoot, but it had to be done; we accepted our responsibility and continued to work because of the urgency of the task.

That day one Hawaiian brother who had worked hard on the project asked, "When do you expect to finish the foundation?" It seemed for a moment our Heavenly Father blessed me with a clear and new understanding of those words I had heard so often from the revelation given to Brother Waller: "Thou shalt have part in laying the foundation of Zion."

In a moment I reviewed the history of Brother Waller and his work. In 1889 he was the only member of the church in Hawaii; it was a struggle for him to get the first missionary appointed to help him in the days when the monarchy was being overthrown and foreigners were disliked in the Islands. It had been difficult to start the first mission and keep it alive, and to establish the first Japanese and Chinese church schools. Later there was the task of starting the work on the other islands. There were financial problems too. By 1939 when he left the Islands for retirement Brother Waller looked back upon three congregations in Honolulu, one congregation and two missions on the island of Hawaii, and members on the islands of Maui, Kauai, Molokai, and Lanai. About 850 members on the Islands were Hawaiians, Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, and Filipinos whose parents had worshiped the gods of the Orient and the Kahuna of the Islands; now they were followers of Christ, and many of them served as pastors, elders, teachers, and workers in the church.

While Brother Waller served in Hawaii there must have been many of those drizzling unpleasant days, filled with hours of trial and difficulty, but because of the urgency of the task he labored on, laying the foundation for the gospel and Zion in the lives of people representing many nations.

When that day shall come that all the nations of the earth have been gathered to Zion, Brother Waller will realize that the promises of God are sure and the words of his prophets true. Because of his faith, his integrity, and his love for the gospel of Christ he has had part in laying the foundation of Zion.

Question Time

Question:

Is there any Scripture proof that the insane person will be sane beyond the grave or in the world to come?
Texas E. C.

Answer:

There is no Scripture of which we are aware speaking directly upon this point; however, there are some texts which have a bearing upon it.

It is generally recognized that defects of mentality are due to physical, not spiritual, causes so insanity and other abnormal conditions of mind do not carry over into the life beyond, every spirit retaining the power of intelligence designed of God in its creation.

Little children are not capable of thinking and acting in matters of moral responsibility, and consequently are not accountable before God for their actions. That condition is extended into adult years in those deprived of normal mentality. Both groups are without sin and are saved in the kingdom of God. Here are several of the texts:

He that knoweth not good from evil is blameless.—Alma 15: 56.

Sin is not imputed to those who have no law.—Romans 5: 13.

If ye were blind [referring to mental blindness] ye should have no sin.—Jesus.—John 9: 41.

His blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them.—Mosiah 1: 107.

All little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law.—Moroni 8: 25.

He that hath no understanding, it remaineth in me to do according as it is written.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 14.
CHARLES FRY

Question:

If "the spirit of the prophet is subject to the prophet," as we are told in the revelations to the church, would anybody other than the prophet himself have the right to give to the church what he withheld from it?

Missouri

I. N. T.

Answer:

Obviously no. If a prophet goes to his grave with sealed lips as to something withheld by him, nobody would have the right to speak for him after his death. Lips that could not be forced to speak in life certainly cannot be pried open in the grave.

A case in point is this: not admitting in any way that Joseph Smith received the alleged revelation on marriage—for we have ever denied it—where is there any evidence that he delegated or attempted to delegate to any other person the authority to speak for him with respect to matters which in his judgment he did not present to the church? Did any prophet in history ever speak for a dead prophet? Christ, the greatest prophet of all, did but quote what had been written by prophets who preceded him, and he had the record to support him.

To attempt to speak for the Prophet after he was dead for a decade, without proof of any delegation of authority to do so, was highly illegal, an act of supreme presumption on the part of Brigham Young, a gross injustice on Joseph Smith, and an imposition on the church.

Question:

May a person withdraw from the church without joining another church?
Missouri C. G. M.

Answer:

Yes. Anyone showing a persistent desire to withdraw, and against whom no charges are pending, may have his name taken from the church records. There is no requirement that any other church shall be involved.

Peace at Home

EVERYWHERE IN THE WORLD TODAY the heartfelt need for new sources of peace is sensed. The message of the Restoration, divinely fitted to meet the needs of this age, provides for the satisfaction of this longing for peace in the establishment of Zion homes—consecrated hearthstones out of which Zion may shine. These homes will be of such quality that all who enter may sense there the peace of lives lived in love and righteousness.

About twenty years ago in a very fine quarterly titled "Working for a Home," Leonard Lea and Eugene Closson defined home thus:

Home: A world of strife shut out; a world of love shut in.

Home: The place where the small are great and the great are small.

Home: The father's kingdom, the mother's world, and the children's paradise.

Home: The place where we grumble the most and are treated the best.

Home: The center of our affection around which the heart's best wishes twine.

Home: The place where our stomachs get three square meals a day and our hearts a thousand.

Home: The only place on earth where the faults and failings of humanity are hidden under the sweet mantle of charity.

Let me say quickly that peace at home is not a static condition, not a perpetual calm such as is often expressed in the typical cemetery sign or title, "Perpetual Peace." Under the home roof there is seldom that type of peace, for the members are constantly growing and changing; the situation is never static. Creative development has to come through new experience, pain, debate, disappointment, and suffering. There are bound to be differences of opinion, edges rubbing off, and problems to solve. Home is not an oasis of calm but an arena where each has free choice and free expression as far as it does not infringe on the good of the whole or the rights of others. There are always things to be ironed out, but when these problems are met in an atmosphere of affection, tolerance, and Christian patience home becomes the one place on earth where man can find peace and security.

TO HAVE PEACE AT HOME we must be at peace with ourselves. Some modern religions which stress mental therapy are characterized as successful mechanisms of escape from the distasteful and painful realities of human existence. But the restored gospel, while it recognizes God as willing to be present in every human experience also recognizes some human ills which it is the Lord's will we should bear. It teaches us to rise above these ills in spirit, to recognize them, and adjust our lives to them rather than to refuse to face their reality. Instead of a mechanism of escape, which sooner or later must reach the end of its tether, Christ's gospel gives us very definite compensation for all the ills of life. It is a truism among psychologists that compensation and adjustment are far more wholesome mental panaceas than any escape mechanism. We can't run away from life, but if we make proper adjustment, compensations come.

As good Latter Day Saints we seek by proper nutrition, adequate hours of sleep, and a temperate life to build up a mentally healthy state. We seek God's help and healing in times of illness and distress. But whatever comes, we live in faith that rises above fears and tensions. We learn to "bear the burdens of the body of which the Spirit of healing from the Lord in faith or the use of that which medical wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted them to perform that the blessing of peace may be upon all" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9).

Being at peace with ourselves as women we are not too hard on ourselves; we do not attempt impossible perfectionism in the details of our life at home, and above all, we avoid trying to wash tomorrow's dishes today—"One step enough" for us! We learn to pray as Peter Marshall prayed before the Senate, "Help us to do our best this day and be content with today's troubles, so that we shall not borrow the troubles of tomorrow. Save us from the sin of worrying lest stomach ulcers be the badge of our lack of faith." We are not called to be martyrs but happy, well-poised, serene women.

To have peace at home a woman must be at peace with her husband. Catherine Marshall writes, "Into our marriage came an ever deepening fusion of heart and mind, though never a static peace—a harmony growing out of diversity in unity, the most melodious harmony there is. We came to see this oneness between us as the open door by which the Spirit of God poured into our lives and work." Incompatibility is one of the most frequently named causes of dissension and divorce in the modern marriage. Compatible means "capable of existing in harmony." Compatibility usually depends on a certain congeniality of tastes, ideals, moral standards, religious and emotional trends. But actually compatibility does not mean identical or like personalities. Husband and wife must complement each other. Certain weaknesses in one need to be offset by certain strengths in the other; for example, impatience in the husband must be offset by calmness and a sense of humor in the wife. If one is extravagant, the other should be thrifty; if one is radical, the other conservative. If one is positive, a degree of willingness by the other to yield frequently will make life happier. If one is dreamily impractical, the other had better possess a certain hard practicality.

WHILE WE WOMEN no longer promise to obey, our marriage covenant emphasizes a mutuality of life, yet if our husbands are of rugged, pronounced tastes, we shall need to go the second mile or farther and yield often if we are to have peace at home. Peter Marshall loved the sea, and every room in their home abounded in sea pictures—not that Catherine didn't try to slip in a flower print or landscape occasionally. In buying rugs, draperies, or overstuffed furniture, he always wanted blue. Fortunately, said Catherine, she liked blue, too. Peter collected clocks so there were thirteen clocks in the house, all meticulously wound and regulated. Yet Catherine was not a weak character. In their marriage the Marshalls were always striving to push through new frontiers in understanding each other in their sharing of life. They found their differences could never become serious or bitter so long as they could pray together. After the household grew in numbers, they discovered, too, that family prayers did not take the place of the more intimate husband-and-wife prayers.

Early they discovered that the important thing in marriage was not the differences between them but the determination to work them out. No two lives are fused into perfect oneness without a certain amount of painful adjustment. "All marriages have to be lived on earth. Heaven comes to earth only as we work for it."

Here is a parting admonition for the woman who would be at peace with her husband; do not try to make him over or train him into a new mold of life or personality. Brown-ing's picture of peaceful marriage is still beautiful and true:

Through the long years liker must they grow,
The man be more of woman, she of man;
He gain in sweetness and in moral height,
Nor lose the wrestling thews that throw the world:
She, mental breadth, nor fail in child-ward care,
Nor lose the childlike in the larger mind;
Until at last she sets herself to man
Like perfect music unto noble words.

IF THERE IS PEACE at home we as mothers must be at peace with our children. From the first, beginning at toddler stage and before, there must be a sure basis of understanding and love upon which we and our children can iron out difficulties. A good parent accepts a child as he is, without trying to make him over to fit the parental ideal of what he should be. This means that we must know our child and understand his limitations and personality trends. If we really understand him, we shall have the thrill of seeing this new strange little personality blossom and grow into a real person whose particular precious talents and interests are a constant marvel to us.

A recent article lists, as a very real danger to our children, parental ambition which threatens family life and child health by setting up impossible standards for the child. This is declared by psychologists and experts to be one of the most prevalent dangers for the child. Such is especially prevalent with the middle-class parents. We are too apt to stretch every nerve that our children shall excell—in music, art, scholarship, popularity. One young mother (a college graduate) has a kindergarten who is already making weekly visits to a psychiatrist.

We should always try to orient the child in the definite realization that he is a person of worth and concern to us. He must never be made to feel he is a criminal but helped to see what causes social undesirability and to want to be rid of such habits. It is dangerous to make too many rules or be too arbitrary. We should know when to ignore little mistakes and concentrate on constructive criticism, giving generous praise for the things done well. Every child today needs more than ever before to avoid a chronic feeling or state of insecurity in this world of cold war and international insecurity, yet we must not be over protective. We can teach the child by example and attitude that falls, hurts, and disappointments are but small events in the larger picture. We can help him to meet them with prayer, optimism, and faith.

Sometimes radio, television, and moving pictures are listed as dangers to the modern home and child. These can, by careful selection, be helps and not hindrances. Here, as in all things, balance, temperance, wise choices, a conditioning to the better things can help achieve peace at home. An atmosphere of parental anxiety should be avoided.

In this age of anxiety faith is our greatest stabilizer—the kind of faith which says definitely and without compromise all things work together for good to those who love the Lord. We must strive to be the best that we can be and trust Christ for the outcome. This attitude is catching and will give our children the basis for peace in their lives.

We need not power or splendor;
Wide hall or lordly dome;
The good, the true, the tender,
These form the wealth of home.

The Show Is On

By Carol Freeman

Bruce Riley, Trampoline artist

IT WAS A WONDERFUL, big, noisy crowd that filled the basement gymnasium of the Auditorium last February 8. From makeshift dressing rooms along the sides of the gaily decorated arena, Leaguers—paint-stained and weary from a day of excitement and work—peered happily out at the jovial multitude.

By eight o'clock a thousand persons had filled the specially installed bleachers; the many rows of chairs were full, and some people were even standing around the edges. Reminiscing, spectators compared the crowd in spirit and size to a Grace-land Rally at General Conference.

A flare of the drums, a trumpet fanfare, and the show was on its way!

"Ladies and gentlemen, the Zion's Leagues of Independence present the greatest little show on earth—'Phenomena'!"

In turn, "Phenomena" presented to its audience a gala evening of thrills, fun, and music in a circus-like atmosphere. The gymnasium was transformed with red and orange crepe-paper streamers and five hundred balloons into a gigantic big top. The uniformed band from William Chrisman High School played spirited marches from the top stage while the acts were presented on a special stage constructed on the main floor.

The main event of the evening was a sensational trampoline act featuring Bob Shedd of the Independence Gudgell Park League and Bruce Riley of Omaha, Nebraska, now attending Nebraska University at Lincoln. Bruce was an Olympic finalist in gymnastics last year at Pennsylvania State College. He is an active priest and one of the outstanding athletes in the nation.

PHENOMENA" WAS TRIUMPHANT, but it took more than the music, fun, and decorations to make it successful. What made it go? People and ideas. Work and zeal. These were the ingredients of its success.

"Phenomena" was born when the Center Stake Zion's League decided to buy a trampoline to use at activity night which is held every Saturday evening in the Auditorium gymnasium. The League Cabinet suggested that the group sponsor a talent show at activity night and invite the entire community. An offering could be taken and the proceeds applied toward the purchase of the trampoline. The trampoline could be featured and actually prove to the people its value. The offering collected at "Phenomena" totaled over $250 and was enough to complete paying for the trampoline.

The actual task of organizing and carrying through plans for "Phenomena" were turned over to two Leagues. Gudgell Park, a League with twenty active members, undertook to develop a theme and organize an original program around it. Spring Branch League, a group with about thirty active members, was placed in charge of the decorations and staging.

The publicity committee was organized by the Stake League Cabinet. Refreshment concessions were under the supervision of the West College Zion's League.

New Horizons

After the circus theme had been selected, there came days of telephone calls to every League president and community organization that might have an act for the show. When February 8 finally arrived twenty acts were organized and coordinated. The ringmaster, Norman Bernauer, was a Graceland alum who is now an announcer on the Kansas City television station. Two complete evenings were spent in organizing the program and outlining a script. Then there were nights of looking for costumes and gathering supplies. One of the most difficult things was costuming a circus parade of animals. The problem was solved by the Gudgell Park group which has an annual fair every summer. Costumes were provided for a bear on roller skates, a monkey on a bicycle, the "old gray mare," and others. Three fellows from that League costumed as clowns stole the show with their antics.

THE GROUPS sat down one evening to plan the lighting, seating arrangement, and final decorations. Another night they met at Spring Branch Church to cut and sew crepe paper into long strips of streamers.

The afternoon of the production Leaguers met in the basement gymnasium and set to work raising the crepe-paper canopy, setting the stage, placing the chairs, painting signs, and installing the stage lights and public address system. A few were able to go home for supper, but most of them stayed to add the last touches and greet the earliest arrivals.

No Zion's League is too small to produce its own phenomenal event. One League of six active members in the Southern Mission entertained forty-five other young people. In Texas a League of twelve members sponsored evenings of food and fun for their small branch every three months. The average attendance was from fifty to seventy-five persons.

What made "Phenomena" go? What makes your Zion's League go? People and ideas. Work and zeal.

■ On Friday, March 27, two small boys were playing with matches in the haymow of the college barn; as a result the whole barn went up in flames. The barn burned so fast that when the fire department arrived it was already too far gone to save. However, water was put on near-by buildings to prevent the fire spreading. The college barn and silo were completely destroyed and there was also a considerable loss of grain, hay, ensilage, milking equipment, tools and implements.

■ The Student Selection Committee announces that at present 162 new students have been accepted for 1953-54.

■ Open House was held at Walker Hall Sunday, April 12, from 2:30 to 4:00 p.m. All Graceland students, faculty, administration members, and Lamoni townspeople were invited to attend.

■ Miss Ruth York received word that she has been granted an exchange teaching position in Belgium for the school year, 1953-54, by the State Department under the Fulbright Act. She will be on a year's leave of absence from Graceland to fulfill this exchange position. She will be teaching an English language course while in Belgium. At present, Miss York is teaching French, Spanish, and literature appreciation courses. She is a graduate of Graceland and the State University of Iowa. During the summers, she has also attended Harvard, the University of Geneva at Switzerland, and the University of Mexico in Mexico City. Miss York comes from Melrose, Massachusetts.

■ "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," a cantata written by S. Coleridge-Taylor, was presented Saturday, March 21. Coach R. A. Carter was tenor soloist portraying Chibiabos, and Bob Holloway was the dancer portraying good continually; wherefore, everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God."—Moroni 7: 11.

What helps does the church provide in leadership training? From the past and present come our answers. Through the church and its cause are introduced revelations of God in living examples of great personal leadership at its best, the eternal truths of recorded leadership in historical fact and scriptural instruction, the Spirit of Truth as the perfect teacher.

These church helps we receive. To say "church helps" means giving as well as receiving, for the church is not some they who must give that we may receive, but we who must give that they—all the world—may receive. And so to develop our interest, potential ability, biographical epitaph now: "He lived in the cause of leadership for Christ" only indicates our growing appreciation of the covenant we have made with Christ in his kingdom. "Whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive, if you will knock it shall be opened unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 2b, c.

Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Lasley

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Lasley of Vancouver, Washington, observed their golden wedding anniversary by holding open house at their home on February 22. They were married on February 24, 1903, at El Dorado Springs, Missouri. For the past twenty-one years they have made their home in Clark County, Washington. They have eight children: Mrs. Sylvia Root of Tillamook, Oregon; Mrs. Mildred Munson of Spokane, Washington; Marion Lasley of Garibaldi, Oregon; Albert Lasley of the home; Mrs. Ruth Beavens of North Bonneville, Washington; Edna Lasley of Salem, Oregon; Mrs. June Crooker and Waldo Lasley of Klamath Falls, Oregon. They also have thirteen grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Lasley are active members of the Vancouver Branch.

Letters

The Evangelist

Evangelists are mentioned in Ephesians 4: 11, 12 with apostles and prophets, as "given for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."

In Doctrine and Covenants 125: 3 added light is given on the work of the patriarch as an evangelical minister. He is to comfort the Saints, to be a father to the church, to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such, to lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessings, and if so led to point out the lineage of the one being blessed.

I was seventeen years old when I came into the church. I had read the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants before I was baptized. For a number of years I heard little said about patriarchal blessings. When I began to hear more I was skeptical. I knew the ancient patriarchs blessed their sons and that some of those blessings affect us of the church in these days, but as an office in the church, I couldn't see that it had a place. I had not yet seen the revelation of 1891.

After wrestling with the problem for some years I came to believe that patriarchs were called to their work of giving blessings, yet I did not recognize them as evangelists. In a time of urgency I felt that if ever I needed a blessing it was then. Without it I could not go on with the church writing I had been doing, for it seemed I was in danger of a nervous breakdown.

Brother Joseph Lambert, who knew nothing of my condition, gave me my blessing. He spoke by the Spirit of God. After the first few paragraphs, he said, "I bless thee that thou mayest continue thy work." He told me that when I was weak in body and in mind, I had called on the Lord for help, my prayers had been answered and I was able each time to do what was expected of me. All this was true. I continued the writing without difficulty until the work was completed.

In my blessing there was this promise: "In the darkest time that will come, he will not forsake thee, but will take thee by the hand and lead thee, lovingly, wisely, and safely." That darkest time came when my health failed and I had to give up my church work.

I received my blessing in 1908. In 1918 I had the flu, followed by slight paralysis of my left side, and my heart was affected. I could move slowly about the house, but anything away from home was out of the question. It was a heartbreaking experience when I realized I could not resume my Sunday school and women's work. I knew that I had been divinely led but now my work was gone and I had forgotten the promise. As I lay weeping one night, I said aloud, "I guess there will be no more leading." Then the Lord spoke to me asking, "Has he forsaken you?" I said, "No." "Then will he lead you?" I answered, "He surely will. If one part is true, the other must be too." Then I was made to feel the melting tenderness of the love of God. Verses that had been given me by the Spirit came to mind, ending with the words, "In death I'll fear no evil. He'll still be at my side."

When I prayed to know if there was any way I might serve, the loving Father gave me a work that I could do at home; I wrote hymn stories.

And now I can say, "I know that God lives and cares for his children." The Lord had spoken to me in the words of my blessing, given ten years before by his servant the patriarch. This was another evidence to me that this is God's church and that the patriarch is his minister of the order of evangelists given for the comforting and perfecting of the Saints.

I have thought it fitting and beautiful that Brother Elbert should be Presiding Evangelist and father to the church. I am glad now to recognize that each patriarch, as an evangelist, is in a way a father to the church. I have sought counsel in important matters of our Lamoni Evangelist Roy A. Chevillie.

It has taken me a long time to be informed and happy about God's evangelical ministry. I am grateful that I have come to know he leads us along, waiting for us to learn and accept the provisions he has made for our good.

Growing in Stature

By IDALEE WOLF VONK

Fifty-two Junior worship programs based on the theme of Luke 2: 52. Each program develops one character quality in which boys and girls should "grow." Such qualities are Sharing, Honesty, Forgiveness, etc. Each program features a story and object lesson that the child can prepare ahead of time. Correlated handwork is mentioned. Included also are playlets, poems, and four special day programs. This is a helpful book for reunion and vacation church school. 256 pages. A Standard publication.

Family Circles Completed

We are very happy to tell you of the following missionary experience.

On Sunday morning, December 28, 1952, six members of the Merle L'Hommedieu family were baptized at Central Church. Included in the group were Mrs. Lva L'Hommedieu; three daughters, Mrs. Arlene Beaman, Mrs. Maxine Gatewood, and Miss Yvonne L'Hommedieu; a son, Duane L'Hommedieu; and a son-in-law, Cecil Beaman. Another son, R. F. L'Hommedieu, his wife, and two children were baptized several weeks earlier in Cameron, Missouri. Mr. L'Hommedieu has been a member of the church since his boyhood. The other members of the L'Hommedieu family became interested in the church through weekly cottage meetings held in their home by Elder Earl Shalley.

Elder Shalley is the local missionary coordinator for Central congregation in Kansas City. By occupation he is radio broadcaster attached to the Kansas City Police force. Despite changes in shift work he continues to hold cottage meetings whenever possible.

It is also interesting to add that when a young man, Earl Shalley was not too interested in the church, but it seems the grandmother of the L'Hommedieus took him off to one side and really talked to him. Her testimony bore fruit, although at that time she didn't realize she was winning to the church a young man who years later would be the means of converting her relatives.

From a Serviceman in Korea

I am on duty with the 58th Field as liaison officer from my parent unit. The ability and energy of these sturdy R.O.K. soldiers never cease to surprise me. Given the material and benefit of our advice they will drive the Chinese out of their country and rebuild it into a proud nation. The last time I saw them under fire (January 23 on Big Nori) their courage was amazing. Under murderous mortar and automatic weapon fire they advanced up a hill to plant their flag in the face of the enemy. That flag is now only a rag, but it symbolizes their nation exactly—battered, torn, bankrupt, but not beaten!

The cold weather here has ceased, and this morning rain fell for four hours. It smells like spring, although the rice paddies are still slabbed with ice. They should soon be green if this mild weather continues.

I am planning to visit when I get home. When that will be is the big question—probably around October 1 if there are no big changes in international, war, or rotation policies.

Rehabilitation—for Christ

The dictionary says rehabilitation means "restore to a good condition." I have had to work for rehabilitation in my life since I came back from the service. I was born and reared in the Reorganized Church and attended meetings as regularly as I could, but when I went into the Navy I got on the wrong path; when I returned I certainly wasn't the boy I was when I left for service. The devil knew when I reached my weakest moments—just as he knows when anyone is most easily tempted and tries to drag him down—and when I followed his leadings, I found only grief and trouble. Ten years later I woke up to what was happening to me, so I started rehabilitating my life—for Christ. I feel a lot better now than I used to; it's as if the bonds of sin had dropped from me. I want to do whatever my Heavenly Father wishes me to, and I want to do it as zealously as I possibly can.

I have found that if a person has enough will power he can do things that seem impossible to the ordinary man. With God all things are possible. My advice is that if you trust in the Lord and try to serve him, you will receive what is best for you. It may not come in the way you want it to, but what he sends will be what is best for you. May God be with you.

In Appreciation of "Sunday School Is Anywhere"

The article, "Sunday School Is Anywhere," appealed to me because several times I have lived in large camps where I have conducted at homemade Sunday school. Once in a logging camp I had a dozen little children come to my cabin on Sundays. Sometimes we would hike a mile or so singing hymns together. Another time we lived in a hop camp for nearly a year, and I had another little group there. I also had a group in a strawberry camp. I have not seen any of the children I worked with since, but I have the satisfaction of knowing that I did my best in teaching our faith to others.

It seems to me that people in larger cities aren't as open-minded about religion as those in places where they must work hard for a living and live in less comfortable circumstances. Sometimes I long to go back to hard times. The luxuries of today are making us lazy.

We all should start working harder at home if we cannot take others to church with us. We can live an "every day Sunday school life," and have answers ready when questions are asked. I am truly going to try. How about you?

From a Subscriber

I have just renewed my subscriptions to the Herald and Daily Bread. They both mean much to me, and I have received a lot of spiritual enlightenment from them. After I have finished reading them, I pass them on to others here at the sanatorium. One nurse likes Daily Bread so well she's going to subscribe for it.

Nearly eight years have gone by since I left the tuberculosis sanatorium before. This spring I had a virus infection, and after having X rays I knew I would have to come back. I was so weak I could hardly get around until Elders Cecil Billings and George Knowlton administered to me. I feel unworthy of the blessing I received and the comfort God has given me. I wish I could share with those who are less fortunate. I appreciate very much the prayers offered for me; I feel that I still need to be remembered by my friends. The doctor says faith and courage will help me much.

Play Given in Branch

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—Mrs. Beatrice Albertson was baptized by her father-in-law, G. F. Albertson, on January 9. The pastor of the First Christian Church offered his baptismal font for the service because recent storms had rendered the use of the outdoor stream impractical. Confirmation services were conducted in the branch in the evening by Elder H. D. Hintz.

The vesper service of January 18 included a religious play, "Have Thine Own Way," under the direction of Mrs. H. D. Hintz. Participants were Mrs. Ira Sliger, Miss Marjorie Hintz, Miss Betty Ultican, and Mr. Robert Lowry. This group ministered to the Yuba City mission by repeating the play on the evening of February 8, at which time John Muceus of Fresno sang a solo.

On January 16, a birthday party for the entire branch was sponsored by the women's department. Guests and members found places at the table marked with their names and birth dates in the decorated lower auditorium. A cake baked by Mrs. Ira Sliger was presented to Mrs. Annie Richardson whose birthday fell on the party date. Sister Harold Plumb directed the junior choir. Sisters S. D. Glatz, Sliger, and Leon Ultican planned the party. New folding tables made by Brethren H. M. Brown, Paul Hurst, and Leon Ultican were used for the first time.

Participating in the women's department vesper service on January 25 were Sisters L. L. Ultican, F. W. Selby, Robert Cooper, Harold Plumb, Alvah Riley, Ira Sliger, and S. D. Glatz. The service was repeated for the Yuba City mission on March 1.

Brother George C. Price has painted the entry way in the church so that it resembles blond grained wood.

On February 1, nine foreign students of Chico State College entertained twenty-five foreign students from the University of California at Berkeley, who were touring northern California, at a tea in Westminster Hall of the Presbyterian Church. The Foreign Student Committee of the Chico Council of Church Women assisted the local students. Representing the local branch were Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Hintz, Mrs. Cora B. Hintz, Miss Elsa Boydston, and Robert Lowry. The countries represented were Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, Peru, Chile, India, Holland, Germany, Korea, Japan, China, Turkey, England, Czechoslovakia, and France.

The pastor attended the Business and Professional Men's Institute in Independence, February 10-14.

Mrs. George C. Price represented the church at the World Day of Prayer program of the Chico Council of Church Women, February 20.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Sliger, Leon Ultican, Marjorie Hintz, Robert Lowry, and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Hintz attended the Northern California District conference on February 20-22.

H. M. Brown directed the Lenten meditations each Wednesday evening.

Sisters L. Ultican, D. Glatz, I. Sliger and H. Plumb formed the committee in charge of the box supper sponsored by the women's department on February 27.

Newcomers welcomed to the branch are Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wise and Mrs. Gwyneth Hart and family.

Miss Betty Ultican of the branch won first place in the public speaking contest sponsored by the local Lions Club.

The seventh annual home-coming of the branch was held March 7-8. Classes were conducted by Elder Dave Elliott of Modesto and Bishop E. C. Burdick.

The congregation of the African Methodist Episcopal Church worshiped in the branch on March 15 when their pastor, Rev. E. L. Branch, preached the sermon.

Attending the men's retreat March 20-22 at Happy Valley reunion grounds at Santa Cruz were H. M. Brown, Leon Ultican, Paul Hurst, G. F. Albertson, and H. D. Hintz.

Babies Blessed

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.—John R. Grice of Port Huron held a series during the middle of February. The closing day a baptismal service was held at which time two young ladies united with the church.

The women have attended two regional institutes recently held at Greenville and Grand Rapids respectively.

Elder Garnet Smith of Grand Rapids was guest speaker for the evening of March 1.

The building fund is growing slowly, but at present several activities are being planned that will help to swell the fund a great deal. Present standing of the fund is $3,633.

On March 8, a service of the blessing of children was held at which time the following babies were blessed by Elders William Farwig, V. Swager and C. Sheffer: John Alan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tovey; Brenda Lee and Linda Lou, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Bowman; Gary Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. Morse; Richard Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kemp; and Connie Irene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Sheffer.

A farewell party was held recently for Julia Evans, Jr., who has gone into the armed forces. Another one of the young men leaving soon is Robert Waldo whose party was held on March 20.

Apostle at District Conference

SOUTHWEST TEXAS.—Southwest Texas District met in conference at San Antonio, March 21-22. Saturday morning a worship service directed by Dick Porter was followed by classes for the men, taught by Apostle Charles R. Hield; young people, taught by missionary Charles Kornman; women, taught by Florence Neely; and children, taught by various workers in the education building. A general class, instructed by Bishop J. E. Baldwin, preceded luncheon.

The afternoon business meeting was presided over by Brother Hield. A budget pro-rated among the branches was adopted to cover expenses for the district missionary. A resolution was passed and a moment of silent prayer was observed in memory of Joe and Florence Berry who were killed in an automobile accident last fall. Filling the vacancies occasioned by their deaths, J. E. Wilder was elected district president and Frances McCormick, district women's leader. Two new members were elected to the reunion committee, C. E. Bowden, Rio Grande Valley Branch, and Bonard Morse, Austin.

The following ordinations were approved: to the office of elder, Donald McCormick, Austin, and Wayne Jackel, Rio Grande Valley Branch; priest, Raymond Jackel, Corpus Christi; deacon, Elmer Beard, San Antonio mission.

Floyd Jett and Donald McCormick were appointed counselors to the district president. Austin was approved as the site of the next winter conference.

A period of recreation directed by the Zion's League followed the business meeting. A basket lunch was served in the evening. Brother Baldwin delivered the evening sermon, followed by a social for the young people.

Sunday's services began with a prayer service, directed by Brother Hield. The service opened with the ordination of Donald McCormick by Brother Hield and J. E. Wilder. Brother Kornman made the opening remarks.

Classes were followed by the morning sermon by Brother Kornman. The conference adjourned following a covered dish luncheon in the education building.—Reported by LILLIAN MORSE

District Priesthood Meets

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—On the evening of March 16, a group of priesthood members of the Toronto District met at the Hamilton Branch for a Communion service. District President John Booth was in charge of the service, and Bishop L. W. Kohlman was the speaker. The forty men were seated around tables which were formed into the shape of a cross and covered with white linen. At the head of the cross was a picture of Christ in a worship setting of the Three Standard Books and the Communion emblems. The room was lighted by candles. After the Communion service, a prayer and testimony period was held. This is the third consecutive year that such a service has been held for the district priesthood in the branch.—Reported by H. HORSLEY

Special Easter Services Held

SOUTHEAST PORTLAND BRANCH, OREGON.—Evangelist Mark Yeoman was the guest speaker for Easter Sunday. An early morning prayer service was held with Pastor Lester Comer in charge. Walter Blaine, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Barker, was blessed by Elders Elmer Larson and P. G. Hager.

The Easter program by the entire junior department was presented under the direction of Sister Grace Comer.

The "Easter Story" was presented in the evening with slides. Background music was furnished by the choir, under the direction of Perry Hunt. Solos were sung by Marjorie Taylor and Ray Trotter. Don Comer was the narrator. The program was conducted under the supervision of Marilyn Trotter.

On March 29, Robert Teeters, Ella Mae Baugh, and Jackilyn Hull were baptized by Brother Comer.

In November four young men of the branch were ordained. They were Benarr Taylor, an elder; Albert Sharp, a priest; Elbert Hartshorn, a teacher; and Carroll Darr, a deacon.

Missionary James Kemp conducted a two weeks' series in the branch during November. In addition to the ordinary services he presented a singing sermon which included his scriptures, short explanations, and solos.

Services were held on Thanksgiving Day, beginning with a prayer service in the morning and culminating with a basket dinner at noon.

At Thanksgiving and Christmas, services were held for the presenting of an offering for the needy. Contributions of food, clothing and money were presented at the altar.

A Christmas pageant was presented under the direction of Perry Hunt. Sister Grace Comer directed the junior department's presentation for the occasion. Background music was furnished by the choir and Brother Comer was the narrator.

A contest was conducted during the sale of Christmas cards. The losing side entertained the winners with a dinner and program. Sister Margaret Holm was in charge of the project. Proceeds from the sale were $331.25.

The young adult group is holding meetings twice a month in the various homes. They are studying the Book of Mormon with Elbert Hartshorn as the teacher. Officers serving this group are Carroll Darr, president; Tresa Sharp, vice-president; and Lois Hartshorn, secretary-treasurer.

Two young men of the branch have returned after serving in the armed services. Corporal Don Comer has served for the past two years in the army anti-aircraft division. He has been stationed at Camp Hanford, Washington. Pfc. Virgil Snively returned in January after a year's service in the Army in Korea. He was in the service for twenty months.—Reported by TRESA C. SHARP

Seventy Holds Series

TORRINGTON, WYOMING.—Luther S. Troyer, Seventy, of Billings, Montana, held a series, March 14-March 22. He showed slides as well as preached. Bradley Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Babcock, was blessed.

The priesthood institute for the western Nebraska, Wyoming, and South Dakota area was held in the branch at Torrington, March 14 and 15.

The institute for the women of this area was held at the Armory in Torrington on March 14. It was directed by Sister Horter of Casper.

The Saints served the evening meal on Saturday at the Armory for the priesthood and women's group. On Sunday about 150 Saints were present for the day's services and the basket dinner held at noon at the church.

On March 6 a supper sponsored by the men was given at the church. Fifty-two dollars was raised.—Reported by LULA B. HAVELY

Apostle Gleazer on Island

HILO, HAWAII.—On February 19, Apostle Edmund J. and Mrs. Gleazer arrived for a week on the island. A two-day institute was held also. They were accompanied on the trip by Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Van Fleet of Upland, California, and by District President A. Orlin Crownover of Honolulu.

The first event was a Japanese bekka dinner and a variety program with one hundred people attending. The food was prepared under the supervision of Sister Clara Camara and Brother Andrew Kashimoto, with several members doing the actual cooking over charcoal stoves at the table. The entertainment included several ceremonial Japanese dances, Hawaiian songs and hulas, and piano solos and duets.

On February 21, the institute began. The pastor of the branch, Seventy Elwin R. Vest, conducted the opening worship service. The class sessions were conducted by Sisters Gleazer and Van Fleet who spoke on "Work of the Women in the church"; Brother Gleazer on "Place of Men and Priesthood in the Church"; and Brother Crownover, "Place of Youth in the Church."

The Sunday morning services began with the regular church school at the Waiakea-kai mission followed by a fellowship service at the branch. Brother Gleazer was the speaker. A confirmation and ordination service was held in which Calvin Kashimoto and Richard Iseri, Jr., were confirmed, and Andrew Kashimoto and Susumu Shigemasa were ordained to the office of priest and elder respectively.

Brother and Sister Vest conducted the guests on a trip around the island, stopping at Kohala to meet with the Saints there, as well as with other members throughout the island. The first day of the trip was a holiday and four cars carrying Saints took the trip up the Hamakua Coast. The group ate lunch together.

On Wednesday evening Brother Gleazer preached his farewell sermon. At the close of the service the Saints extended their aloha to the Gleazers and Van Fleets and presented them with appropriate gifts.—Reported by CAROLYN SHALLEY

Three Men Approved for Ordination

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE DISTRICT.—The mid-term conference convened at Paris, Tennessee, February 21-22, directed by Robert T. Cochran, district president, assisted by J. H. Yager, Jerry Fitch, and H. F. Vann. Brother Yager was in charge of the opening prayer service. The women's department leaders from all the branches participated in the worship service. The following instructed classes: J. H. Yager, men's class; Sister Dessie Hunt, women's class; Don Sutton, young people's class; Hazel Withee, music class.

The names of three young men were presented for approval for ordination. They are Jim Key of Memphis, elder, and William Earl Wilson and Ralph Booth of Paris, deacons. The reunion committee recommended to the conference an eighteen-acre tract of land on Kentucky Lake, near Paris, to be purchased and used as a reunion grounds. The conference body voted unanimously to proceed in the purchase of this ground, subject to the approval of the Apostle in charge.

The women's department served a spaghetti supper, followed by a talent show at which Bill Sutton was master of ceremonies. Roy V. Hunt was the evening speaker.

Brother Yager spoke on Sunday morning following the general prayer service.

The church school institute was held in Memphis, Tennessee. Apostle Reed M. Holmes directed the institute which included the Arkansas-Louisiana District. The Memphis women's department under the direction of Louise Creach served the meals.—Reported by ALMA COCHRAN

Class Organized

NEVADA, MISSOURI.—On June 2, 1949, eleven members of the young adult class met at the home of Brother and Sister Harold Mahurin for the purpose of organizing the class. Sister Jennie Mahurin was elected leader. During the first year the group invited the two elders of the branch to meet and lecture to them on the Book of Mormon. Brethren John Noyes and Marion Goodfeller did this, and one baptism result was noted.

The group meets twice a month at the homes of the members. The first meeting is a worship and business meeting, the second is a worship and recreation meeting. All members are a committee of one to visit the sick and needy, and to report to the group anyone in need. Many projects to help people have been organized. The membership now numbers twenty-eight.

The group has purchased the Saints' Herald for the city library, as well as for needy people. The material has been obtained to remodel the church. Pictures for worship services have been purchased, and racks have been made and placed in the bus and train depots. Members bring their old Heralds to the church and the pastor places them in these racks. The name for the group is "R.L.D.S. Helping Hands." Elder Amos T. Higdon is the class teacher.—Reported by MRS. HAROLD MAHURIN

Mission Organized

OSAGE, WYOMING.—The Osage and Newcastle, Wyoming, groups were organized into a mission on March 1. Elder L. S. Troyer, Billings, Montana, and Elder E. C. Judson, Wheatland, Wyoming, were present at that time. Paul M. Hanson, Apostle in charge of the district, appointed Elder Forrest C. Julius as pastor of the mission and other officers were appointed by him. They were approved by the congregation and Brethren Troyer and Julius.

The officers appointed were as follows: Brother Julius, pastor, church school director, and young people's leader; Ollie Olds, secretary; Violet Julius, treasurer; Harry Spargur, sustained solicitor; Carol Pollat, auditor; Sybil Jackson, women's leader; Leona Spargur, music director; Dorothy Cheek, church historian; Virginia Mathis, publicity agent.

Brother Troyer recently held a series of missionary meetings.

The mission has bought a schoolhouse for its church. Plans are being made to move this building to Osage. Plans include the construction of a basement and the enlargement of the building. This will be the only church in Osage.

have been none other than the Reverend Mr. Lane, who had said, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God which church to join." But when Joseph claimed to have received an answer to his query according to the promise, what happened?

Joseph says: "I was greatly surprised at his behavior; he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the devil; that there was no such thing as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there would never be any more of them."

Can you think of a better example to illustrate what Joseph was told in his first vision: "They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

This story is doubly interesting to me because I have visited the village of Palmyra, New York, have stood on the site of the old Presbyterian Church where this sermon was preached, and have stood beside the headstone of Alvin Smith, Joseph's brother, who is buried in the old churchyard. The old church burned to the ground not long after Joseph heard the Reverend Mr. Lane preach there, and a new one was constructed half a block to the south on the intersection of the two main highways that run through Palmyra. On each of the four corners of this intersection there stands today a church building, each belonging to a different denomination. In Palmyra, as in many other places today, men are still crying, "Lo here," and "Lo there," and still refusing to believe that the promise of James 1:5 is valid today, or to carry out the advice given by the Reverend Mr. Lane in his sermon in 1823.

UNHAPPY PRISONERS

Why did we have a rash of prison riots last year? Can it be that guards have suddenly turned tyrants and provoked their forcibly detained guests of the government?

Evidence is clear that the POW riots on Koje Island were politically inspired, but that seems to have no influence in the U.S.A. penitentiaries.

Our suspicion is that prisoners just don't like the place and want out. Having been used to getting what they want by fair means or foul, they think it worth the gamble to organize for a mass break. Since so little has been gained, the rash is quite likely to subside soon.

Convicts should be impressed that their sentence is remedial rather than for personal happiness and free meals.

MADNESS

You have heard people say, "There is method in my madness." Ah, poor souls, how often they are mistaken. The reverse is true many times. There is madness in their methods.

FORCEFUL PREACHING

Dr. Kidd, a well-known preacher of Aberdeen, Scotland, in bygone days, once spied a man sleeping peacefully through all his fulminations. He lifted his Bible and threw it with unerring aim at the head of the offender, shouting, "If you don't hear the Word of God, I'll make you feel it!"

Identify your branch

This is a large bright blue and yellow sign specifically designed to be a uniform and familiar way for everyone to locate all Reorganized Latter Day Saint churches. The road marker features the church seal at the top, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in large letters, and leaves space for your branch name and address. Please do not make your branch message longer than 15 or 16 letters to each line.

The road marker is 23" x 31" and is made from heavy steel. The colors are applied separately by a silk screen enamel process and will last long years of rain and sun. Each is punched with holes for easy erecting.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Clifford Cole

AMONG THE IMPORTANT DECISIONS that set the course of my life and that of my family," says Clifford Cole, "is one which grew out of the 1935 reunion at Devil's Tower." It was at that time that Clifford was called and ordained to the office of priest. Under the impulsions of the experiences of the reunion, he found himself moved with a compelling desire to minister to the people of God, and more especially to the children and youth.

A very active participant in these plans was the girl to whom he was engaged to be married, Miss Lucile Hartshorn. Together they chose to enter the occupation of teaching, for it seemed to them that this offered an opportunity for their ministry to find expression. They also felt that the continued educational preparation they would make for teaching would help fit them for the service they hoped to render to the church. They both began teaching in the rural schools of Wyoming that fall and were married the following spring.

As finances permitted, they went on for further education together at the State University of Wyoming, Graceland College, and Central Missouri State Teachers College. Clifford received his Bachelor of Science in Education in 1943. During the next four years he taught in the high schools of Lamoni and Bellevue, Iowa, continuing his graduate study at the University of Chicago and the University of Iowa.

In 1947 he responded to the call of the church, to enter church appointment, and was assigned to Northwest Iowa District where he served as district president.

During the summer of 1951, an emergency need arose at Graceland for a dean of students. Brother Cole accepted a leave of absence from church appointment to serve at Graceland until a new dean of students could be secured. He is expected to re-enter church appointment next July. His assignment will be with the Department of Religious Education.

The Coles have three children: Alethea 15, Beverly 7, and Lawrence Dean 4. They are people who believe in doing things together; when Brother Cole is under appointment, they are all in service with him.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT SMITH SPEAKS

President Israel A. Smith spoke to the Englewood congregation in the Center Stake on April 19. He spoke regarding Sanitarium Day.

AT FAR WEST STAKE

President F. Henry Edwards was at the Far West Stake conference in St. Joseph, Missouri, April 19. He was associated with Stake President Emery Jennings, and Stake Bishop Lewis Lansberg. He reports an excellent conference.

SPEAKS AT ENOCH HILL

President W. Wallace Smith was the morning speaker at the Enoch Hill Church in the Center Stake on Sanitarium Day.

SEVENTIES BACK TO FIELDS

The Presidents of Seventy report a fine spirit at their council meetings which were held just prior to the Institute on Evangelism. Glen Johnson and George Njeim returned to their fields immediately following the institute. Russell Ralston left Independence on April 22 to return to his territory in time for the Utah District conference. James Daugherty left Independence on April 24 for three weeks in Nebraska, visiting Clearwater, Inman, and Nebraska City, concluding with a priesthood institute at Grand Island, Nebraska, on May 17. Z. Z. Renfroe is remaining in the Center Place for a short time to complete some work. Brother Renfroe remarked on the outstanding spirit of unity at the recent meetings of the Presidents of Seventy and the quorum meetings.

YOUTH RETREAT HELD

Elder F. Carl Mesle was at the Arkansas-Louisiana District youth retreat April 18 and 19, held at Camp Tahkodah at Bald Knob, Arkansas. Seventy James Renfroe, district president, was associated with Brother Mesle. Also on the staff of the retreat were Mrs. Lillian Powell of Chatham, Louisiana, district youth leader; and Don Sutton, district youth leader of the Kentucky-Tennessee District. Brother Sutton and young people from his district were guests at the retreat.

SPEAKS TO CHURCH SCHOOL LEADERS

Elder John Darling, director of leadership training in the department of religious education of the General Church, met on April 19 with the church school supervisors and teachers at Central Church in the Kansas City Stake in their monthly meeting. The subject considered was "Looking Forward in Religious Education." After this meeting, Brother Darling spoke to the entire church school at their morning worship period. He reports outstanding growth and development in attendance and participation in the congregation. W. S. Bennett is the director of religious education of the Kansas City Stake. The church schools in the stake are making preparation at the present time to participate in the leadership-training course, "Ways of Teaching."

DR. McDOWELL AT CHELSEA

Dr. F. M. McDowell spoke to the Chelsea congregation in the Kansas City Stake on April 19 in the interest of Sanitarium Day.

The Dangers of Criticism

Criticism is a weapon that can destroy human happiness and hope, estrange families and break up homes, weaken organizations, divide congregations, and close churches. It can strike you and those you love.

AT SOME TIME in our lives, most of us have taken up the weapons of criticism. Our hearts have hardened, and we have looked at some persons and some things with narrowed eyes. What happened to us at those times? What happened to others?

You and I have not always been critics. Sometimes we are on the constructive, affirmative side. Few people are critics all their lives, though some seem to be. We don't have to be critics. This is subject to our control.

Are you—the occasional critic—willing to take one clear, honest look with us at this thing that we do sometimes? Shall we try to see what it is, and what it does?

Danger to the Critic

One of the great dangers of criticism is that it harms people; and in the long run it harms the critic most of all.

It was said in olden times, "The scorner is an abomination to men."¹ "The scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off."²

An Israelite once asked Moses, "Who made thee . . . a judge over us?"³ And before that question Moses fled from Egypt.

Many people suffer from the sharp words of the critic and from the unkindness of heart that is sometimes back of them. These people are not cruel enough to reply in kind. Most of the time they prefer to suffer in silence and let things pass. They seem to forget, but inwardly there are the wounds that remind them.

Only when they are goaded to desperation, only when they can endure no more, do they arise and overwhelm the critic and leave him vanquished. The anger of peaceful people can be a terrible thing when it is aroused. The critic does not understand it. He does not know how to take it. He cannot suffer in silence as his victims so often do. He complains. He cries. He shows his weakness to the world. He did not intend, and so forth, and so on.

Danger of Being Misunderstood

If the critic speaks the truth, there may be a few who will understand him; but many will not understand him, and therefore will hate him. That is his constant peril.

If he is able to speak the truth wisely and intelligently, more will understand him; but there will still be those who would be willing to hew his cross and dig his grave.

If he speaks the truth in love, many will understand and follow him.

Danger of Error

If he speaks the truth!

The real danger of the critic is that—through ignorance of the facts, and other things—what he says may be a part of the truth, or a lie. The curse of the critic is that he is often wrong and does not know it until too late.

The honest critic should ask himself, "Is this really true?" And keep quiet until he knows.

All of us—part-time critics, full-time critics, professional and amateur, right and wrong—fail on this point at some time.

Danger of Malice

The critic has serious reasons for examining his motives. If they come from malice—any form of ill will—jealously or envy, the critic places himself as well as other people in danger. Every gun has its recoil. Every bomb explodes in all directions; and while the blast reaches the victim first, it may expend its greatest power eventually upon those who made and set it.

Evil, the origin of malice, is not careful of its victims. Like a poison it will burn all lips that touch it. And he who sends a poison to another has first drunk of it himself.

The purpose of evil is to destroy. Its object is not only the individual, but the race. Ultimately, those who serve the cause of evil are working for their own destruction.

There is another aspect of this part of our consideration. The critic who sees evil everywhere reveals the inward state of his own soul. What is innocent in others may look like guilt to him because of the spiritual darkness that is inside of him. What he sees on the screen of life may be a shadowgraph of the content of his mind. When the critic opens his mouth to speak of the mistakes and sins of others, he may simply be revealing his own. All language discloses more concerning the writer or speaker than anyone else.

Danger to the Home

The critic can find wrong in anything and anybody but himself. Imagine the apprehensions of a child, or a wife, or a husband, who knows that anything he does or says, even in kindness and innocence, may be taken up maliciously and called wrong, or stupid, or evil. This causes fear, worry, and insecurity. It creates recurrent pain. The home that contains a critic cannot keep its foundations strong. It is in danger of going to pieces.

There is sometimes a member of a family that enjoys causing pain and embarrassment to others. He

Institute in Evangelism

We are happy to report that the recent Institute in Evangelism reported a registration of 369 men. These came from 31 states, Hawaii, and the provinces of Ontario and Saskatchewan in Canada, and included 123 pastors and 29 district presidents.

Outlines of the presentations will be available as soon as possible through the Herald House. These materials will be recommended for use in evangelistic efforts throughout the church.

We appreciate sincerely the efforts of all who attended, members of the committees who planned the institute, as well as the many who participated in its program.

Classwork or Workshop for Priesthood at Reunions

We present herewith three possible alternative courses of study—to be used in classes and/or workshops—for priesthood members at reunions. We suggest that the administrative officers concerned with the plans and program of each reunion give careful thought to the choice of one as being most suitable to their reunion. A discussion of the suggested use of the materials will be presented in a later edition of the Saints' Herald.

I. METHODS IN EVANGELISM—a workshop or class devoted to study, discussion, demonstration, and practice of the various methods of conducting the work of evangelism. Suggested text: Methods in Evangelism by Maurice L. Draper (Herald House, $1.00).

II. THE KINGDOM-BUILDING PROGRAM—to help each man become informed concerning a new and fresh approach to pastoral ministry and priesthood visiting. A mimeographed workbook will be available.

III. WAYS OF TEACHING—to help continue to improve the ministry of teaching for the priesthood, which is called to teach. Suggested text: Ways of Teaching, by Karen Anderson (Herald House, 90c).

In some instances it has been found desirable, or at least practicable, to invite unordained men to attend and participate in such priesthood classwork. We believe such men could profitably pursue any one of the above studies. If the number of men available for classwork is large it may be well to divide them into two groups; namely: priesthood and nonpriesthood. In such a case similar general topics could be pursued with slightly different emphases.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Lee Oliver, Pensacola, Fla.

We were happy to have President Israel Smith and Apostle Percy Farrow with us for our district conference on March 21 and 22. Four men were ordained to the office of deacon at the conference.

On Good Friday we showed the movie, "King of Kings"; many people commented that they were grateful to get to see it. At 6:30 Easter Sunday morning we had a sunrise Communion service; it was an outstanding experience. Our 11:00 service drew a record attendance, and in the evening the choir presented an Easter pageant, "Answer of the Cross," based on the Seven Last Words. The total offering taken on Easter Sunday amounted to nearly three hundred dollars, including tithes and oblation.

Because of the nonmember response to "King of Kings" we are wondering if we could film the story of the Restoration. We believe the results could be far reaching.

From Elder Fred O. Davies, president of Kansas City Stake:

We have just concluded a "week of prayer" in our Kansas City Stake—the first of its kind according to comments from old-time members. It did a lot of good, and the support from all sources was splendid. Our attendance fluctuated a little, but it was good considering the distances the people had to travel. Some people never missed a night; others came one, two, or more, which means about seven hundred and fifty different people attended at some time.

Figures for the week and Easter Sunday morning attendance at the respective congregations follows:

"Week of Prayer" attendance:

Sunday, March 29	459
Monday, March 30	300
Tuesday, March 31	298
Wednesday, April 1	410
Thursday, April 2	340
Friday, April 3	394
Sunday, April 5	524

Easter Sunday attendance:

Total2,425
Greater Kansas City14,906

The pastors seem greatly encouraged, and have personally expressed their thanks for the privilege of ministry in the "week of prayer."

From V. D. Ruch, pastor at Council Bluffs, Iowa:

We had an attendance of 1,060 at our Communion services Sunday morning. I had anticipated an attendance of about 800 and scheduled two Communion services, one at 8:30 and the other at 11 o'clock, with the thought in mind that I would rather have two services of 400 each than one of 800. The result was that we had 264 people at the early service and 796 at the second one. In spite of our large church we had to seat some of the people in the small chapel where they could hear the service over the public address system but could not see it. We had 555 at our church school at 9:45 a.m. Our average church school attendance when we were in the old church was less than 300. We had 421 on Palm Sunday and 555 on Easter. We are working toward an average attendance of about five hundred.

Quite a number of visitors attend each Sunday—people who have never attended our church before. We feel that our new building is quite a missionary asset and will help draw people to us. Some of our members who have been inactive for years are coming to church again.

The Harvest of Life

What Shall It Be?

By J. A. Koehler

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God in the last days; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

A Harvest Proclamation

That is the harvest of life proclamation of the (prophet of) Restoration. It is a revealing and comprehensive proclamation of the utmost importance. Reorganized Latter Day Saints say it is a divinely inspired proclamation, a proclamation of God.

The proclaimer said, "This is the time of a marvelous harvest. It summons all who have 'desires to serve God' to that harvest. It specifies the price of that harvest. And it declares that all who will pay that price shall receive salvation to their souls; they shall reap the harvest of life."

Two Significations of Harvest

As a verb, harvest signifies "to reap," as when a farmer harvests his wheat. It signifies "to reap as a result or consequence of any exertion or endeavor," as when a great physician receives honors due him for services rendered to man; or as when one—anyone—experiences the feeling which accompanies the consciousness of having devoted his time, his talents, and/or his goods to the attainment of a worthy object, the accomplishment of a great purpose, or the promotion of a great enterprise.

As a verb, harvest signifies an action, an effort, an endeavor, a means to ends.

As a noun, harvest signifies "the product of any toil, exertion, or endeavor."

Two Applications of Harvest

The farmer's application of the harvesting principle is literal; it is a natural-world application. Religion's application is usually figurative; it is a spiritual-world application.

Which application concerns you most? Which challenges you? Which inspires you most? Or is one application as important to you as another?

Various Harvest Representations

The voices of religion have brought the idea of the harvest of life before the mind in various ways. "Keep well thy heart, for out of it are the issues of life" is one of them. The story of Joseph's disclosure of his identity to his brethren is another. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown . . ." is another. The idea of the harvest of life, both in its generality and in its particulars, has been represented in ways which are both interesting and enlightening; and what is more, they are inspiriting—as in the case of Malachi's "Now we call the proud happy" and so on, and St. Paul's "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

The voices of religion have made many literal applications of harvest, too; for practical affairs, which must be conducted aright to make abundant the harvest of life, lie within the field of true religion. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat . . ." is one of those applications. "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand" is another. And "If Zion do these things she shall prosper" (which is the idea set forth by Jesus: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you") is another. "Religion" has made literal applications of the harvesting idea or principle that bear heavily upon its figurative applications, upon both our present and our future fates and fortunes.

Sowing and Reaping

All harvesting involves both sowing and reaping, either by persons or by peoples or by both. "Nevertheless, in your temporal affairs you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld" implicates sowings by both persons and peoples, as does "bring all the tithes into the storehouse" (Malachi 3), and much else. It is impossible to lone-wolf our way into the Zion estate, for Zion is a social symphony which may be performed only through "an organization of My people"; it is a communal enterprise.

Much reaping by persons of that which they have sown individually may be done, of course. Persons reap habits because they sow acts. Some persons reap better crops of wheat or corn because they, individually, do better sowing. There is much personal reaping through individual sowing.

And, of course, all nations, all communities, all organized civil societies, all "peoples" both sow and reap. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," "Cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished" (Isaiah 40: 1-10), and much else refer to the sowing and reaping—the harvesting—of peoples.

Sowing Conditions Reaping

That is one of the implications of "Whatsoever a man soweth that also shall he reap." It is the meaning of "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." It is the force of "If Zion do these things, she shall prosper." Surely the truth that sowing conditions reaping has been established through experience—experiences of both persons and peoples.

And, of course, that means that the answer to the question, "What shall the harvest be?" is "It shall be that which is sown."

The First Concern of True Religion

The characteristic of the religion of the truth, the religion that accords with the requirements of human nature and with the circumstances of man's being, is this: it is an action, because it is a way of life, and life is function—normal function. So the field of that religion is the sum of all the good affairs upon the right conduct of which the more abundant life, the welfare of the soul, depends.

As an action that religion is first truth—sowing throughout that field; and in the moral area of that field it is righteousness-sowing. Contemplate the harvest proclamation of the prophet of Restoration; contemplate the message of any kingdom-prophet; contemplate the sayings of Jesus; wherever you may look there is evidence that the first concern of the religion of the truth, the sensible or intelligent religion, is the sowing which must be done to reap the harvest of life.

Reaping Without Sowing

Before the division of labor, in agrarian societies, in feudal times as in the household of Abram, wherever men could reap only that which they had sown, the first harvest concern was to subdue the earth, to till the soil, to attend to seed-sowing and the cultivation of the crop—which is a way of sowing that conditions the reaping.

But in the childhood of the race, possibly in its infancy, some men contrived to reap that which other men had sown—as much of it as they could "reap" without killing "the goose that laid the egg." Through vassalage, servitude, slavery, even when the tilling of the soil—the sowing—was of first importance to everyone, some men sought only to reap that which others had sown.

Of the uses which have been made of money and finance and property in general, especially of one kind of capitalism, through which means some men live by the sweat of other men's brows—by which they tap the flow of the social income or reap that which others have sown—we need not treat here. We only remind ourselves that in the ordinary relations of man to man, in the matter of food and clothing and houses and the rest, it is far from 100 per cent true that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

If it were positively true in all these vital relations, some people who now live in "marble mansions" would have no habitations; some cupboards that are now filled with delicacies would contain not even a bone to feed the dog; some of the best-clothed people would be naked.

So, because society is acquisitive, under the division of labor, there are many opportunities and enticements to reap that which others have sown. The planlessness of society and the want of economic opportunity, of course, have much to do with that state of affairs. All we may say is that in "bread and butter" relations between individuals, it is not 100 per cent true—it is not true universally—that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." There are many "idlers" who eat the bread and wear the garments of the laborer; many persons who "sow" without regard to the effects of their sowings upon the reapings of their peoples, many who take out of the social cupboard while putting nothing in.

Eternity's Personal Harvests

There is only one relation of which I know in which it is certain that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," and that is the personal relations of individuals to God. In that relation—which is a moral relationship—there can be no shortchanging, no reaping by one of that which others have sown.

And, generally or on the whole, in the long run, that is why the harvest of life in the present world is as good as it is. Morality is as high as it is principally because men have a sense of that personal relationship to God, without which there can be no sustained elevated morality.

So in this aspect of the harvest of life, the reaping of which we may make certain through right personal relations to God, through acceptance of the responsibilities of moral agency, we may rejoice evermore.

Unfavorable Circumstances

Roger Bacon said, "It is on account of the ignorance of others with whom I have had to deal that I have not been able to accomplish more"; that he could not sow to better advantage, or do more to improve the condition of man; that the reaping of the thirteenth century was so poor; that the lot of man was not less horrible; that the harvest of the goods of life was so lean.

Many men have been in Bacon's fix. The prophet of the Restoration was one of them. Even Jesus said, "How oft would I have gathered you . . . but ye would not." You should be able to name others.

So even he who sows well in the circumstances may be "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief"; he may say, "I repent me now that I have given myself so much trouble for the love of science" that I have sowed so resolutely at such costs.

Since I am not the judge of all the earth, I do not know how such repentance will affect the individual's harvest, or how personal accounts with God will stand in the closing of the books. There are many questions of absolution, beneficence, and the like, to which I do not know the answers. But of this I am sure: in general, in the end, the harvest will be as poor or as rich as we make it by the manner in which we relate ourselves to man and God by our sowing.

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8-10 says something that bears upon such questions. And so does "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," and much else.

But forgiveness or not, I am unable to see how the idler can reap the satisfactions, the happiness, of the laborer; how the intemperate man—even if he is forgiven at the bar of "justice"—can reap the satisfactions of sobriety; how the man who sows foolishly or scantily can reap the rewards of the man who sows wisely with liberal hand; how the man who says, "I repent me that I have given myself so much trouble" can reap the harvest of the man who says, "I will not cease to plow by reason of the cold," for he who does that shall "beg in the harvest, and have nothing"; for it is impossible to reap "wheat" through the sowing of "tares," to reap the harvest of life without living.

Sowing Interdependence

"It is on account of the ignorance of others . . . that I have not been able to accomplish more," and the rest which I have just said means that persons may be limited in their seed-sowing by the sowing of other persons.

That is because a man cannot live his life alone; it is because human life is a unity as well as a totality. Even in the matter of moral choices the person is limited in his real freedom by that which there is to choose from. If there were no church choir, for example, he could not choose to be a member; he could not choose effectually. He might say, as Lincoln did, "O God, if you ever give me a chance, I promise I will hit it [Negro slavery] hard," but he might not get that chance.

The "chances" of persons to do some harvesting—either sowing or reaping or both—are conditioned in that which other persons, in the capacity of peoples especially, choose to do.

There is much that must be left unsaid here about this, but I can hardly refrain from remarking that the fact that much harvestings of persons and peoples are interdependent gives us an interest in the harvesting of others.

We care, for example, whether other men sow seeds of drunkenness and crime, because it affects our harvesting. We care whether "the government" staggers for the wall like the blind (Isaiah 59), because it affects our harvesting. We care about the sowing of the church, for whether or not there will be a Zion harvest depends upon the kind of seed-sowing the church does. We care even about the convictions of persons respecting their relations to God, for they are our religious associates. There can be no exalted church morality in which to share if persons will not accept the responsibilities of moral agency, which is personal seed-sowing related to God.

In Babylon we are not really free to do some harvesting that may be done in Zion. So, whether we are interested or not, we do have interests in the harvestings, the sowings and reapings of others.

The Restoration Opportunity

The Restoration opportunity to harvest is unprecedented; it is singular; it is momentous. "The field" was never so "white" to harvest as it is today; for the seed-sowing of the centuries has brought forth, produced, yielded civilization's greatest crisis. "In the last days" harvesting may be done by "My people," which was never done before. It must be done to undo the evil that has been wrought, cumulatively, by the seed-sowings of the past; which must be undone to reap the harvest of life.

The land must be "redeemed"; the birthright of the individual which has been sold for a mess of pottage—sour pottage—the right of an "inheritance" in the earth must be restored. Irresponsible men must be made accountable as stewards over their own properties through a communal application of the Stewardship principle in the work of Restoration through a process of "consecration"; through "an organization of My people"; through bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion; through sowing seeds of kingdom-building righteousness.

The business of peoples must be restored to them, and they must attend to it properly. There is much more to the story; and every representative of this church should be able to tell it.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

I mean, here, the harvest proclaimed by the voice of the Restoration. Both as a process of sowing and as a matter of reaping, the answer to that question is being given daily, hourly, by you and me.

What feelings do we nurture? What thoughts do we think? In what do we interest ourselves? How do we employ our heads and hearts and hands? What are the practices that arise from our thoughts and feelings? In the answers to such questions is to be seen the answer to the question, "What shall the harvest be?" for the sowing conditions the reaping.

Why Such Sowing?

Why the kind of sowing that both persons and peoples have been doing throughout the ages, the sowing that has set the stage for Restoration; the sowing that has made the "field white . . . to harvest"? Why do peoples, nations, governments even today sow such seeds of calamity?

Why do church people say and do so many things that lead nowhere? Why do they sow rounds of novelty and variety instead of seeds of progression?

Paul gave part of the answer in the third chapter of II Timothy and the first chapter of Romans—and what an indictment! Edward Murrow said, "It almost makes us wish that Noah had missed the boat." Parts of the answer are to be found in the fifty-ninth chapter of Isaiah, the first section of Doctrine and Covenants, and elsewhere.

One writer said, "The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold," so "he shall beg in the harvest and have nothing." Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2 gives part of the answer, and, by implication, so do 85: 21 and 4: 1. Read them. For the harvest of which Restoration is a proclamation is not to be reaped by a people which sows seeds of slovenly thinking, procrastination, self-adulation, and so on.

The business of harvesting is in our hands; we may conduct it as we will. But the manner of that conduct is the answer to the question, "What shall the harvest be?"

A man said to me, "You will never live to see Zion." I said, "Perhaps not. But I will live to see something that you will not live to see; I will live to see a man who tried. And that is all the prophet of the harvest lived to see. And I will reap a harvest of satisfaction of which you will know nothing." For it is certain that, in his personal relations to God, as a free moral agent, "Whosoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The harvest is in our hands. In that which we sow is the answer to the question, "What shall it be?"

feels his inferiority and dissatisfaction. He tries to bring others down to his own level. But when he has done this everybody feels worse.

Danger in the Church

Constant criticism is dangerous to any church. It is easier to criticize the officers than it is to help them. Criticism develops disloyalty and opposition. It creates division and strife among the people. It causes unrest and uncertainty. It is the wedge that evil drives to separate the people from each other and from their leaders.

The Right to Criticize

Is there such a thing as the right to criticize? We think that the Bill of Rights (including the right of the freedom of speech) has its place in the church as well as in the nation. We must endure the critic as long as he is honest and not merely throwing up a dust screen to hide his own sins.

But there is such a thing as being fair. Has the critic invested his time, work, and money in the church? Then he has a right to say something. If he has given nothing and done nothing, he may speak, but what right has he to be considered?

The Good Criticism

Another danger, on the opposite side of the subject: we must always keep in mind the possibility that the criticism may be both true and good. If we heed it, we may be saved from other dangers far worse.

Criticism may be a lantern hanging over a dangerous hole or a washout on the road. It may mark the unsafe bridge or building. It may be the red signal light at a railway crossing when the train is coming.

It would be a serious mistake to reject all criticism as such. This would be to throw away one of the greatest protections.

Our final and greatest danger is that we may fail to regard and consider the good and valuable criticism. L. J. L.

Of One Blood

By Leona Hands

One God and Father of all, who is above all and through all, and in you all.
—Ephesians 4: 6

A YOUNG PILOT stationed overseas was on a routine flight mission. Flying along at an altitude of 20,000 feet he looked down upon the earth below and made an interesting discovery. There were no boundary lines between nations. The various countries were not painted in different colors as they were on the maps he had studied so carefully. It was impossible to tell where one country ended and another began. Neither could he distinguish any difference in the people, for he was unable to observe the color of their skins or hear the various languages they spoke.

As he pondered these things a significant thought came to him. This is the way God must see the world—without boundary, nationality, color, or tongue. These people scattered over the face of the earth were all his children, created according to his plan and purpose.

Because of his early religious training, the young man was deeply impressed. Writing home of his experience he added the Scripture that had come to his mind as he flew along: "And God hath made of one blood all nations of the earth for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation."

Nothing has so served to point up the statement "of one blood" as have the recent conflicts in which the world has been involved. All blood is the same color, and has the same properties. The life-giving and life-saving blood plasma so priceless on the field of battle has been made from the blood of many races and is used interchangeably to serve men of all nations.

Hearts, too, are the same color. Long ago the prophet Samuel was reproved by God when he, in his own wisdom, thought to choose a king from among the stalwart sons of Jesse. "Look not on the countenance or on the height of his stature," God told Samuel, "for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

The unchanging love of God encompasses the earth and is so great as to be beyond the comprehension of the human mind. There is no space that it does not fill.

"How can one measure the love of God?" a writer asks. "As high as the heavens above the earth; how high is that?"

As far as the east from the west; how far is that?" There are no mathematical terms to express the measure of God's love for his creation. It is measureless.

THROUGH THE WONDERS of nature God has shown evidence of equal love for his earthly children by richly endowing every country in the world. The same green grass carpets the lands of all nations. He has strewn the flowers of the fields lavishly in every corner of the globe. The grandeur of mountains, the beauties of lakes and streams are universally enjoyed by men everywhere.

Someone has suggested that the beautiful song whose words have been set to the music of "Finlandia" be adopted as a hymn for world brotherhood.

This is my song, O God of all the nations,
A song of peace for lands afar, and mine.
This is my home, the country where my heart is,
This is my hope, my dream, and my shrine.
But other hearts in other lands are beating
With hopes and dreams that are the same as mine.

My country's skies are bluer than the ocean,
The sunlight beams on clover leaf and pine;
But other lands have sunlight, too, and clover,
And other skies are just as blue as mine.
O hear my prayer, thou God of all the nations,
A prayer of peace for other lands and mine.

Many nations might rightfully claim this to be a song of their homeland. But the words have been written by an unknown author. Who can say what country the poet has reference to? The same blue sky and sunlight is over all. And God himself has planted the love of country in the hearts of men.

IT HAS BEEN SAID that music is a universal language. All nationalities share the love of good music. Men of every color, race, and creed have given freely of their talents for the world's enjoyment and pleasure. Our best-loved symphonies, oratorios, hymns, and folksongs have been written by inspired composers from a wide variety of lands and are enjoyed by people the world over.

Just as God has permitted every land an equal share of the bounties and beauties of nature, so also has he distributed his gifts and talents equally among his children. This is evident not only in the realm of music. All nations have contributed richly to the world at large in the fields of literature, painting, drama, science, and medicine.

In these latter fields, the findings of men of different nationalities have served to benefit mankind everywhere. From birth until death the human race owes a debt of gratitude to the efforts of many unknown friends of other lands. One writer says:

A 1948 report of the Rockefeller Foundation reminds us of a world friendship which no nation should be allowed to forget. The findings of this great center of scientific research are used to benefit the people of all lands. Experts from many countries have gathered here to study disease. It was an Austrian who perfected the technique of blood transfusions. How many Americans, Germans, Italians, and other nationalities owe their lives to this unknown friend? A Japanese scientist isolated the bacillus of tetanus. A Russian majored in typhoid research, and an Italian has waged a successful battle against malaria. Perhaps best known are the Curies who devoted their lives to research in controlling infection and insuring safety from rabies and surgical infection. A German helped control diphtheria, and an Englishman conquered smallpox. The list of benefactors continues to grow as new discoveries are made. Working together, men of science are fighting and winning the battle against mankind's universal enemy, disease.

THE BASIC NEEDS of the human race are fundamental: shelter, food, and clothing. All men have the capacity to learn, to love, and to suffer. Theodore Roosevelt has said, "There are only two races in this world. The good and the bad—and they are everywhere." On another occasion he wrote, "The nineteenth century made the world a neighborhood; the twentieth century must make it a brotherhood."

An unknown poet contributes the following:

And all men are my kin
Since every man has been
Blood of my blood;
I glory in the grace
And strength of every race,
And joy in every trace
Of brotherhood.

T. Z. Koo, a Chinese, has made this observation: "There are differences of race, color, speech, and customs; and we can find clashing viewpoints beneath the surface in every land, but in Christ all things hold together." He is truly the hope of the world.

We know that vast numbers of people are illiterate, uneducated, and unevangelized. World brotherhood is still a vision, a dream of the future in the hearts of men.

Someone has asked, "When that day of the true brotherhood of man is realized, will God bring to pass a miracle and make our skins of one color?"

In answer one of our evangelists has stated, "Perhaps a greater miracle will occur when each man, united in the common bond of love for God can look into the face of his fellow-man with no awareness of the color of his skin."

Question Time

Question:

In Matthew 16: 19 Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." We hear many definitions of "the rock" in the world today, and several in our church. Some say the rock to which Jesus referred is Jesus himself, and some say it is the revelation from God of the truth that Jesus is the Christ. What is correct?

Ohio

C. F. D.

Answer:

Revelation has two connotations: that which is revealed truth to the inner man by the Holy Spirit, and that which is demonstrated in Christ, "the Word made Flesh." These two are inseparably connected. Both are required to comprehend revelation.

God has always brought himself in contact with man's mind by internal revelation. Peter's knowledge of Christ's works did not enable him to say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of God." This knowledge came through internal revelation. Christ himself verified this fact by saying, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

The Spirit which quickened the minds of the prophets in previous generations quickened the mind of Peter. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" was a prophetic utterance and had its full meaning in the resurrected Christ. Jesus recognized that Peter had only a partial understanding of his divine commission and proceeded to reveal the fuller truth through his teachings.

Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ. From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples how he must go into Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and raised again the third day.—Matt. 16: 20, 21.

The full significance of Christ's teaching could not be comprehended by human intellect. It had to be revealed through the Holy Spirit (internal revelation). "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—I Cor. 12: 3. John, in recording the great sermon in which Christ declared himself to be the bread of life, said:

Many therefore of his disciples when they heard this said, This is a hard saying. Who can hear it? From this time forth many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him.

They were present when he fed the five thousand and healed the sick; they had listened to his teachings, yet they turned away to follow him no more. Intellect was not enough. Only those who had received the internal revelation declared, "Only thou hast the words of eternal life," and were willing to follow him to their death.

The rock upon which the church was built was hid from the eyes of man to be visioned only through faith and the revelation of God the Father.

Question:

Is it proper to administer the communion to persons baptized but not yet confirmed?
California

H. D. G.

Answer:

It is not proper to administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to persons who have been baptized but not confirmed.

The sacrament of baptism is not completed until the confirmation has been completed, for this is the second part of the ordinance. Confirmation carries with it the ratification, or making valid of the baptismal act of immersion. Without confirmation of the Holy Spirit, right to full communion in Christ's church is denied.

Question:

Do Christians from all churches go to paradise at death?
Oklahoma

L. S.

Answer:

People are not grouped or placed in paradise or elsewhere in the future world merely upon their church membership status here. All upright and honorable persons who have lived up to the light and opportunities they have had may find place after death in paradise, whether they have or have not been members of the church, though we should keep in mind that paradise is not their final abode, but a temporary one for the spirits of the righteous. Obedience to Christ and his gospel is essential to salvation in the kingdom of God. Those who have not the privilege of hearing it in this life will hear it in the spirit world, and by receiving Christ may be worthy of the resurrection and the kingdom of God when he comes.

Question:

Harold Velt's The Sacred Book of Ancient America, page 42, in referring to a revelation given to Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris just before they were allowed to view the plates, says: "You shall have a view of the plates, and also the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, which were given to the Brother of Jared upon the mount, when he talked with the Lord face to face."

If these were given to Jared's brother, how did it happen that Laban had them at the time Lehi left Jerusalem?
California

Mrs. H. J. S.

Answer:

The quotation referred to is from Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1. Obviously the qualifying clause, "which were given to the Brother of Jared upon the mount," was not intended to apply to the whole of the paragraph, but to the last antecedent, the Urim and Thummim. For instance, the records kept upon the plates of brass many centuries after the death of the Brother of Jared could not have been in the hands of the Brother of Jared, nor is it likely that he had ever possessed the sword of Laban; yet these are included in the same sentence.

We know of nothing Laban possessed that had been in the hands of the Brother of Jared, for it is not stated that the Urim and Thummim were brought with the plates from Jerusalem 600 B.C.

When God Intervened

By Melva Crum

ONE SATURDAY AFTERNOON in early February the doorbell rang at my home in Tokyo. On answering it I found a young American boy in a Marine uniform. He wanted to know if this was where Carl Crum lived. I knew who he was immediately, for early in the week we had received a letter from Lawrence Davenport mailed from the Naval Hospital in Yokosuka, Japan, where he was recovering from wounds received in Korea. Early that morning my husband had made arrangements with Captain John Faurot to go by train to Yokosuka to see this boy.

We had a good visit while we waited for the men to return. I'd like to tell you in his words—as nearly as I can remember them—the story he told me that afternoon.

"It was at the place in Korea known as Bunker Hill that I was wounded. It was about two o'clock in the afternoon of the last day of the year. I had been on the front lines thirteen days when I was sent to an outpost about a mile ahead of the lines. There had been some activity, but at the moment it was quiet. We were expecting a New Year's Eve attack and were given permission to test our weapons. I put on my battle vest and went outside the bunker. I had been there several times without my vest, but this time for some reason I put it on.

"I had fired about eight rounds from my carbine when I noticed an enemy mortar shell explode not far away. I knew the next one would be close, so I set my gun down and turned to enter the bunker. That turn saved my life. Just then a mortar shell struck the sandbags beside me and exploded.

"I knew I was hit. I heard a sound like a gong being struck and felt the impact of the shrapnel. The worst of it (so I thought at the time) hit me in the left side of my head, neck, and face. It blew my helmet completely away.

"The lieutenant in the bunker looked me over and had to make a quick decision. He thought of that long, unprotected mile I would have to be carried in full view of the enemy. He could call for a smoke screen to cover the area, but that would take fifteen or twenty minutes. He knew I didn't have that much time. All he could do was to ask for volunteers to carry me back to the line. Everyone knew how dangerous it would be."

He paused and his eyes misted over as he relived that moment in his memory. There was a lump in my own throat as I waited for him to continue.

"Eight men—eight of the fellows, mind you, stepped up and volunteered to carry me out!" No wonder the memory brought tears to his eyes! My own were brimming over as I thought, "Greater love hath no man . . ."

"So we started that long mile knowing the enemy was watching us. Sure we were scared! Anyone would be. We kept expecting the guns to start popping. But do you know what? Not one shot was fired!

"Soon we were back at the line and I was placed in a jeep ambulance which took me to an aid station. There the medics slapped temporary bandages on me and loaded me into a waiting helicopter. In less than fifteen minutes from the time I arrived at the aid station I was bandaged, loaded into the plane, and taken to the hospital ship 'Comfort' out in the bay.

"There were many pieces of shrapnel still embedded in my vest. It had stopped all but the very worst. When the medics removed it they found two more wounds in my back. One piece of shrapnel had gone between my ribs into a lung, but the vest had closed up the area till it was airtight. I was thankful they had not taken it off in the bunker. The doctor told me I was lucky that air from the outside had not entered my lung through the wound.

"I had wonderful care on the 'Comfort.' I was there twenty-four days being patched and repaired and having the worst of the shrapnel removed. The doctors tell me I'll have about 70 per cent normal hearing in this ear. The long scar across my lower jaw was caused by a piece of metal which ripped into my face and removed two lower teeth."

I examined his face and was pleased to see that as far as scars were concerned he had little to worry about. It was no worse than some I've seen on football players.

We laughed together at the thoughts of his endeavors to force a large wad of chewing gum between his teeth. The nurses had insisted that he chew gum to keep his facial muscles limber. They didn't care if he liked it or not, he had to chew it.

He became serious again as he said, "Sister Crum, I know the Lord protected me out there, and I'll never forget it. It wasn't just chance that caused me to put on my vest that afternoon, and it wasn't just chance that I turned away as that shell exploded. I know it, and I'll never forget. And when I think of those eight fellows who volunteered—"

That was a month ago. Yesterday we saw Lawrence for the fourth time and find he is to be discharged from the hospital this week. We do not know if the review board will send him back to Korea or home, but we do not worry about his future. I'm sure his desire to serve God and his church is sincere, and he will occupy with honor the office in the priesthood to which he had been ordained in his home branch at La Crosse, Wisconsin.

To Larry the Battle of Bunker Hill will no longer be associated with the American Revolution. It will be a place in faraway Korea where God intervened in his behalf; and though his body will bear some scars from his experience there, he will have no scars on his soul.

Listening

By Edna J. Wilder

NEARLY ANY DAILY PAPER anywhere will contain a few such headlines as these: "Girl Jumps Off Bridge"; "Man Found Dead in Locked Hotel Room"; "Middle-aged Woman Commits Suicide"; "Boy Found Dead in Parked Car"; "Husband Kills Wife and Four Children."

Many of these untimely deaths might have been prevented if the victims had known just one person who would have voluntarily listened to their particular problem. No matter how forlorn you may be, somewhere near you there is a kindred being to listen while you solve your own problem by talking it out.

Others need you to listen to them. You may be vitally important to someone today; tomorrow may be too late. You may be the one who can help prevent a tragedy. Bridges were made to cross; cars were made to drive; guns were made for protection and hunting wild game for food. None are to be used for the destruction of human life.

Years ago I heard a crippled man tell how good life had been to him. He always had time to listen to people, but very few ever found time to listen to him. The little hunchback who lived alone at the end of the street was a forgotten man. After a very trying session with poor health, the friendly little man disappeared from the streets. Several days later, someone broke into his humble home and found him dead—a bullet hole through his brain. Someone had stayed away too long.

In these days of transient living, it may seem impossible to know anyone long enough to listen, but you should try to as often as you can.

Listening always pays off; not just for the speaker, but for you too. You will get a real lift when you exercise this divine privilege. The papers could use their space to much better advantage than printing untimely obituaries that might have been prevented.

Are you listening?

ON JUNE 10, 1952, seventeen-year-old Dorothy Henderson was graduated from Anacostia High School in Washington, D.C. This ordinary item might have been mentioned on the society page of her community newspaper, but the event of June 10, not Dorothy's high school graduation but her parents', appeared as a feature article in several of the Washington papers.

The story behind the high school diplomas of Lillian and Melvin Henderson, Dorothy's parents, is one of determination. An early marriage and rearing four children were reasons enough for the Hendersons to postpone plans to complete their education. Now, at forty-four, they have achieved one of their goals in life.

Determined to go on to school, Melvin completed a course at Benjamin Franklin University in 1943. However, he could not receive a degree because he had not completed his high school courses. An assistant in the district assessor's office, he finished his high school science work and qualified for a diploma. This required one year of evening classes at Anacostia High School.

Lillian's courses took three years of evening classes. There were church activities, home responsibilities, and lessons, which kept her three years busy. One of the thrills of the Henderson family came when Lillian was selected by the 115 graduating students to give the welcoming student address at the ceremonies.

She is the ways and means committee chairman of the branch in Washington, D.C. Lillian and her family actively support branch activities, and Dorothy is now a student at Graceland College. Lillian May, the oldest daughter, now Mrs. Robert Carr, also attended Graceland College. The other children are Fay, fourteen, a junior high school student, and Janet Ruth, seven, a grade school student.

Better qualified now to serve in community, vocational, and branch life, the Hendersons find new meaning in Benjamin Franklin's statement, "An investment in knowledge pays the best interest."

The Life of Hubert Case Part XIV

By Alice Montague Case

Alice and Hubert Case, 1922

Healings

Hubert was driving to Oklahoma in 1920 west of Yates Center where he was going to perform a marriage ceremony for one of the Van Valkenburgs whom he had baptized in Oklahoma. He was undecided as to just where those people lived, and he drove about a quarter of a mile off the road to a house to inquire the way. When he got there the lady of the house said, "Oh, Brother Case, come in here." He discovered it was the Harrison Rudd family, whom we had known in Iowa. She said, "Come in here, for Harrison is very sick, and Sunshine, our daughter, has tuberculosis." He administered to both of them. Ted Beck who at that time was not a member of the church was there and witnessed the administration. Both of the sick were healed. It was such a miraculous thing to see Sunshine raised up from tuberculosis that it was one of the things that brought Ted Beck into the church. He told Hubert about Sunshine's being healed years afterward. Sunshine became Ted's wife.

About 1925 Hubert was holding a meeting at Sperry, Oklahoma, and was ready to close his meeting to go home for Christmas. Brother Gleazer was with him the last meeting on Sunday, and they were both going to Independence for Christmas. Hubert received a letter from Brother Goad asking him to come to their place about 150 miles to the southwest at Weatherford, Oklahoma, and administer to his wife, for the doctors had given her up to die. He took the train for Weatherford, and Brother Gleazer went on to Wichita. When Hubert reached Weatherford that Monday afternoon, Brother Goad met him at the train, took him out to his home, and told him how desperately sick his wife was. Hubert told him that she was a humble person, one of great faith, and he believed God would heal her. When they got to the house some four miles in the country, Hubert offered prayer. Brother Goad bowed down with him and cried as if his heart would break. Hubert arose and administered to her, and she was instantly healed. He told Brother Goad that he had one of the best of women, that the Lord had recognized her faith when she was patient, and that she was one of God's chosen ones.

He asked Hubert when he would speak over the radio, and Hubert said, "I am planning to speak tonight when I get home." He said, "I want you to tell of this healing and dedicate this service to my wife. I won't tell her about it; I will just tune in and get your announcement and your talk."

Hubert received a letter from him a day or two after that. He wrote, "I have never seen her so happy over anything as that radio service. We all enjoyed it very much." They had three little boys, and her healing was a lesson for life to those children.

The "Great Healer"

At Jenks, Oklahoma, a little town eleven miles south of Tulsa, Hubert went to baptize our niece's daughter. On his arrival there, he told her that little Dorothy, her daughter, should hear some sermons before she was baptized, to which my niece agreed. Hubert rented a vacant store building in the town, put in seats, advertised his meeting, and filled the building the first night; crowds continued to come for three consecutive nights.

Hubert heard about the "great healer," Raymond T. Ritchie, who had been in Tulsa three months. Most of the people had been up there to see the healer, but he had gone away, and the excitement had not yet subsided, so there was much talk about him.

The fourth night when Hubert arose to speak, the Spirit of the Lord came on him in great power, and he said, "I have heard much in the last three days about Raymond T. Ritchie and how he healed the sick. He never claimed that he healed the sick, although he was advertised as the 'great healer.' But as the people passed by him in line, he would say to them as he touched them, 'If you have faith to believe, God will heal you.' But God has given me power to heal all your incurables. You have many among you here who were taken to Raymond T. Ritchie, who were not healed. Bring them to me, and they shall be healed."

At the close of this meeting, two men came to Hubert, asking that he go to their homes. One asked him to go that very night.

Two More Healed

He went with him a mile and a half out in the oil field. The man told Hubert how many times he had taken his wife to Raymond Ritchie to be healed because she was dying of tuberculosis. She had been bedfast for a year and a half. Hubert explained to these people about our belief in regard to healing of the sick. The Spirit of God came upon him and he knew after he anointed the woman that she would be healed. After he administered to her, the fever left immediately.

The next morning Hubert saw her husband, Mr. Bruce, in town and asked him how his wife was. He said, "She got up and prepared breakfast this morning, and she is coming to your meeting tonight." She was baptized during that series of meetings.

The other man said, "You come to my house tomorrow morning at nine o'clock," and Hubert went. Cancer had eaten out two of his wife's ribs; the opening was nine inches long and eight inches across. Hubert knew instantly when he laid his hands on her head that she was healed. The husband could not get anyone to take care of her because the stench of the cancer was so bad. Her healing made that series of meetings of great interest to the town and the whole community.

Hubert baptized thirty-two people and raised money from the town to build a new church. He put up most of that building with his own hands while he was conducting meetings. He got more money from nonmembers than he did from the Saints.

Sperry, Oklahoma, was a remarkable place. Almost invariably, wherever Hubert preached, he baptized as many people as he preached sermons. He baptized fifty people at one meeting. Another time he preached ninety days and baptized ninety people.

Hearing Restored

One night after preaching was over, a lady said to him, "Brother Case, I have completely lost my hearing. I want to be administered to so that I may get my hearing back."

After most of the people had gone, Hubert called the rest of them to order again and told them that Sister Katie Hogue wished to be administered to, and if there were any others who desired administration for them to come forward. There were five in all.

Sister Katie was the last one of the five to receive administration. Afterward the pastor's wife came to him and asked, "Brother Case, did you hear someone else talking while you were offering that prayer?" He said, "No, I didn't." Another woman came up and asked the same question. He said, "No, I did not hear anyone talking. If I had it would have bothered me." He then asked them what the voice said. They replied that it repeated the words of his prayer. Then he turned to Sister Hogue and asked her if she heard it. She said, "I heard the voice, and I heard what you said. I am healed. I can hear everything."

In the summer of 1922 our second daughter, Dorothy, was married to Richard M. Maloney, Sr., in our home, Cyril Wight officiating.

Hubert returned to Oklahoma soon after this, holding meetings at Skiatook, Shidler, and Washunga. There were good groups at all these places and some were added every time services were held by any of our men. There was a reunion held at Washunga, and a number of young people were baptized. During these years our work was growing and spreading; nearly every place where Hubert and others baptized a group, a branch would be organized. This development came because they stayed long enough that the people thoroughly understood the gospel before they were baptized. This was possibly the reason for the success of his ministry in this state—the thorough understanding of the gospel by those who were baptized.

Paying a Debt in Minneapolis

About this time we decided to sell the house on Maple Street, Independence, Missouri. This we did, and bought on West Walnut. After remodeling the house, we moved in, and remained there seventeen years.

In the summer of 1924 Hubert was moved from Oklahoma to Minneapolis for three months; while there he lived at the DeLapp home. I also visited there for two weeks later on in the summer. The Saints there had a heavy debt on their church, and after his experience at Oklahoma City at the State Fair Hubert urged them to see what they could do by way of paying off their debt.

The Minnesota State Fair was at hand, and they decided to see what they could do to raise money. Being authorized by the branch, Hubert went to the fairgrounds and rented a large building for $700 for the eight days of the fair. Then equipment had to be bought, which amounted to $2,500. The church people, though frightened at the heavy expense incurred, cheerfully did the heavy work of preparing and keeping up the dining hall. It proved a success. About 2,500 ate at their tables each day, and on Labor Day the number was 5,000. The sum cleared after all expenses were paid was about $2,000. Despite the hard work the Saints thought it was worth while. Everybody in the branch helped and worked in harmony and good will. Soon after the fair was over Elder Ray Whiting came to Minneapolis, and Hubert had the pleasure of presenting him as their new pastor. He offered his own resignation at that meeting and returned to Oklahoma.

During my visit to Minneapolis and the DeLapp home, I had invited Sister DeLapp, if she came to Conference the next spring, to stay at our house. This she did. Her son Leslie brought her there, and as the roads were bad I also urged him to spend the night there. Thus it happened that he met our daughter, Ardyce.

Marriage of Daughter Ardyce

The acquaintance made at the Conference of 1926 between our daughter and Leslie DeLapp grew fast and soon culminated in their wedding on August 25, 1926. He took her to Minneapolis to live. So the children at home now were only grandchildren, one of whom—Richard Maloney—with his mother remained in our home until he had finished high school.

Hubert returned to Oklahoma, Sapulpa being his first stop. He also preached at Keifer, Bristow, Yale, and Drumright. Good interest was shown at all these points.

From there he went to Holdenville. After that he returned home for the Conference of 1926. Being reappointed to Oklahoma, he visited Hartshorne, where there was a branch already organized, also Wilburton and Fanshaw. He then visited Calumet and other groups of pioneer Saints.

With Ed Dillon

From the San Springs Reunion near Tulsa, he came with Brother and Sister Ed Dillon to Independence. This was a very good spiritual reunion, and one of its outstanding features was the number of young people who made their start in the work of the church. Some had been baptized in childhood; some had just been baptized; but all were filled with interest and zeal and became active workers in the church. Among the older people who were baptized at that reunion was B. A. Howard, father of Merle Howard.

The object of the Dillons' drive to Independence was to get Hubert and me to accompany them on a trip to Kirtland Reunion. None of us had ever seen that historic spot, and we were eager to go but had little time for preparation. However, we made ready with as little delay as possible and started on our way.

Kirtland Temple

The drive across Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, and part of Ohio was very interesting to all of us, as we had not seen those states. But Kirtland was the most outstanding feature of our trip. As we drove up over the hills and caught our first glimpse of the Temple, we were all thrilled. We were truly inspired as we walked up to the door and read that inscription, "The House of the Lord."

When Hubert preached his first sermon in the Temple, the Spirit was present in great power; it was a taste of heaven to us as it is to all the Saints who go there. We have heard many speak of that building as the most sacred spot they have ever visited.

From there we visited Hill Cumorah and other historic places, then started westward to Nauvoo.

Sadness at Nauvoo

There was a great feeling of sadness for us about Nauvoo. We saw the homes where Joseph had lived, and which were well preserved. But the fact that the temple no longer stood upon the hill, and the sight of those great stones from its walls, now used in a Catholic school building, gave us a feeling of sorrow for "what might have been." Hubert's grandparents were baptized by Oliver Cowdery on his first mission to Independence. When the Saints were driven out of Missouri the Case family went to Nauvoo, where the grandfather worked for Joseph Smith. Their testimony concerning Joseph Smith's connection with polygamy was that it was all false. They said a finer, cleaner man than Joseph Smith never lived, and they had opportunity to know as they worked in his house and grounds for a long time. My people had lived there too, so the place seemed rather a sad one to both of us.

Mother's Day

By Stella Wild

WE ALL KNOW the story of Moses and how, when he was a baby, Pharaoh ordered that all Israelite children be killed to prevent the Israelites from becoming more powerful than the Egyptians. Fearful of Moses' plight, his mother laid him in an ark made of bulrushes, closed the lid, and set the ark among the flags at the river's edge trusting God would watch over him. His sister Miriam also watched from a distance wondering what might happen to him. In a short while Pharaoh's daughter came to bathe in the river, and she noticed the ark. She summoned her servant to bring it to her. As she opened the lid the baby began to cry and lifted up his little hands begging for her to take him up. The princess was not cruel like her father; she felt sorry for the child. "It is one of the Hebrew's babies," she said, and just then a little girl came running up. "Shall I call a Hebrew woman to take care of the child for you?" Miriam asked timidly. Pharaoh's daughter already loved the baby, and she was glad to have a nurse for him. As soon as the princess consented, Miriam went directly to her mother. As these two returned the princess commanded her, "Take this child with thee, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee wages." The heart of the good mother was filled with silent thanksgiving as she took her son, Moses, from the princess.

During the following years she knew the joy of rearing her own child, of teaching him the glories of God, the value of prayer, and the knowledge of his forefathers. She cared for his childhood injuries and directed his association with playmates. When Moses was old enough to receive instructions from the scholars of the royal household, his mother had to return him to the princess. But no instructions, however skilled the teacher might be, could overshadow the instructions of Moses' mother. She did her part well, for in her hands rested the preservation of the Hebrew religion. If she had not planted her religion deep in the heart of Moses, he might have stepped aside and worshiped the idols of Egypt.

Because an Israelite mother knew how to care for her child, a nation was turned from the worship of idols to the worship of God. Here was a mother who knew what her responsibilities were, and she took care of them.

NEXT SUNDAY is Mother's Day—a day when we, as mothers, are to be honored. If we examine ourselves, can we truthfully say we are worthy of this? Have we followed the example the mother of Moses has presented to us? The responsibility of our children is ours; that is God's plan. Are we training them to be kingdom builders? Are we teaching them to love one another as God loves us? Are we teaching them how to pray? Our devotions and sacrifices are essential if we choose to do God's will. I think the Dads could be included too, for our example in the home is the most powerful means of teaching. Are we living Christ-centered lives? Have we built a Zion home? Jesus, the Way Shower, blessed the children and asked God to direct them. So must we. We must constantly try to make their paths lead toward God. It is not enough that we wash and iron their clothes, keep the house clean, and feed them. We do not live by bread alone—we live by love and hope and happiness also. It is under these that we grow in character, and they cost nothing but the willingness to give. We should let our children know we love them—let them think of us as happy to work for them. When we think of ourselves as servants of the Lord, doing good works, we shall give thanks for the opportunity to serve.

A Mother's Day Offering

I HAVE ALWAYS had a desire to give something on Mother's Day in memory of my own mother, who died many years ago, so I have remembered by sending gifts and cards to other mothers. I also have wanted to give something to the church, and have decided to make it a Mother's Day offering.

On Mother's Day during the church school hour an offering was taken which amounted to eight dollars and fifty-one cents. A picture of a mother was placed on the altar for the program worship service, and two boys brought the offering to the altar placing it at the base of the picture. This is not a money-making scheme, rather it affords those who wish to do so a chance to give something in memory of their mothers that will help the church most of them so dearly loved. I suggest that a picture of Emma Smith, our church mother, be used for this service.

Puddles of Faith

By Ella Lambkin

I OFTEN THINK of an illustration I once heard. We are like children playing on the seashore. With our little spades we dig holes in the sand. When the sea comes up and fills our little wells we are happy. We scarcely notice the great force of the sea only a few steps away.

Some time ago I attended a district conference where the general prayer service was to be held in the upper auditorium while the young people met in the basement. I was concerned with these young people. I worked with some of them. I prayed that, if both services could not be blessed, the blessing go to the young people.

I attended a very dull service, but when I heard that the young people had an interesting experience I was happy. I had received just what I asked for. Since then I have been ashamed of that prayer. It must have been almost an insult to God—the idea that his power was not great enough to cover two services on different floors of the same building. I was still playing with my little puddles of faith on the shore, and they must have been pretty shallow.

THIS LAST SPRING I lay one day very discouraged because I was such a burden to my family. A stroke had made me helpless on one side. I begged God to help me walk so that I could wait on myself. I would try to be patient with my helpless hand. So quickly that it surprised my friends I learned to walk—not perfectly, but well enough so that I could wait on myself and get much pleasure from life besides. I got just what I asked for. I am still shaking hands with my left hand while I try to be patient waiting for my right hand to regain its usefulness.

One time when I had some slight success with my work I found that pride was getting the better of me. It didn't seem that I could control it.

I asked God to help me to see myself as I really was. Believe me, that prayer was answered, and I came through the week with not a vestige of pride left. I saw my life as a series of mistakes that had probably affected my family and friends. Some "good deeds" turned wrong side out looked very different.

AT ANOTHER TIME I was attending a class which discussed every week the building of Zion, and every week we decided that we were not ready and that was the reason Zion was not more of a reality. Finally I asked what it was that we were doing or not doing that held us back. Why didn't we find out what it was and correct the trouble? What were we waiting for?

That night alone in my room the question came to me, "Are you willing to spend every minute of your life doing the things you think God wants you to do?" There was my problem. I had felt prompted to do some missionary work that I did not feel capable of doing. I wasted minutes, probably hours, that could easily be put to better use.

I had seen my life with all its raw seams showing. Now I discovered my part in holding up the Zion-ic program. I did resolve to try to do better, but my resolve had little courage behind it, because it looked like too big a job. I was still playing with my little puddles of faith, forgetting that just a prayer away was that vast sea of power waiting for me to draw upon it.

Only a prayer away, but it must be a prayer of wholehearted giving and a willingness to accept the wider, deeper living that an answer to that prayer would bring. Our little puddles are comfortable little holes in the warm, shifting sand. They do not require much of us. Dare we look beyond them to the larger, deeper prayer that lies between them and the boundless power awaiting us, knowing that this great power will bring greater responsibilities?

An Avenue to Worship

By Ruby Strand

"I don't know enough about music to say the right things but I do know when I've heard something fine. It gives me a feeling of having worshiped."

This statement expresses the sentiments of a great many of us who are not musicians. On the Sunday night of the Messiah broadcast by our choir, I had one of the outstanding worship experiences of my life. In former years I was sometimes handicapped by poor reception and had found myself thinking of that phase of the presentation to such an extent that I missed much of the message. Too, there were times when I had thought too much of the quality of the voices and hindered my worship. But this night, with a prayer in my heart not only for the participants but for all those who were gathered in their homes and elsewhere throughout the world listening to this great oratorio, I worshiped. It was an experience I trust I shall never forget, for I relived the Scriptures which had been put to music and felt an intense longing to render a greater service in kingdom building. Tears came to my eyes many times, and I think I must have sensed a portion of the sorrow that Jesus felt when he wept over Jerusalem. I knew that my Redeemer lived and that he was reaching down to all people who would listen to the message of that great masterpiece. Yes, I heard something fine, and I worshiped in a measure that I shall never forget.

A Letter to Mom

Dear Mom:

I preached a sermon last night--in the rain--but it wasn't the kind of preaching you hear at church. I was on the way to the evening service when I saw an accident up ahead. I passed two tangled cars and noticed that one of them had a woman and three children in it. Apparently none of them were hurt, but they looked bewildered. I was hurrying so I wouldn't be late to church, but as I passed that car and stopped for the light ahead, I remembered my mother with her three children. . . . I remembered how you took us lots of places to make up for other things that we couldn't afford; how you drove that old car even though it scared you half to death. You didn't let on, but we knew that you were afraid. Once when we were crossing four sets of railroad tracks, the watchman put the gate down in front of us and you got all excited and the car stalled on the tracks. We could hear the onrushing Big 4 as it approached the crossing. Frantically you got all of us out of the car and behind the gate just in time to see the Limited race through the crossing on the next track. It was hair-raising excitement for us kids, but by the time the caboose passed, we could almost laugh. Ben and Sara didn't notice, but even when we were all safe, you kept praying--for that old car. It represented our life's savings that had taken sweat and tears and sacrifice, but more than that, the car was the means by which you helped to give us vision. Every week, after living in cramped quarters in a dirty neighborhood, you dressed us up and loaded us into that old car and drove us past the big houses, past the big factories, out through the country, and then to the top of Germantown Pike where we could look down on the whole Miami Valley. Regardless of the life we were living, those rides showed us the great promises of the future.

I ran to the car with the woman and children in it. All of them were crying. I shouted, "Hey, can I come in?"

The door opened, and I entered rapidly, for the rain was coming down in torrents.

"Is everyone all right?"

From the back seat, through tears, came, "Yea-ah but--"

"But what?" I asked, and then before anyone could answer, I went on, "How could an eleven-year-old girl cry when she isn't hurt?"

"How did you know?" she stammered.

I went right on, "And your brother--thirteen years old and he's crying."

The boy straightened up and said, "Hey, Mom, who is this guy?"

Before Mom could answer (and of course she didn't know either) the little girl in the corner spoke up, "Bet ya can't guess my age!"

I scratched my head and figured. Then I pulled one out of thin air, "You're seven."

Before I had recovered from guessing right, she said, "Sure, but you can't guess my name."

I came right back, "What does it start with?"

The older sister stopped sniffing and spoke up, "He guessed my age first, so it's my turn." Turning to me, "It starts with 'M' and has four letters."

Miracles were happening fast . . . it had to be Mary . . . it was!

We went on this way until we were all laughing, and everybody but the mother had forgotten about the accident. (Out of twelve guesses, I hit nine on the nose.)

I sensed the mother's concern, so I got out and examined the cars to determine who was at fault. While I looked, I prayed for additional words of comfort. Sure enough, the other car was at fault.

The police arrived, and an officer asked the mother to get into the patrol car with the driver of the other car. The children and I got into my car, turned on the radio, and listened to a story. The wreckers arrived and pulled the cars apart, then hauled them off in different directions.

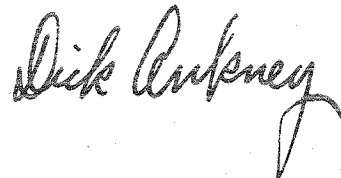

Soon the mother was back. The police had fixed the responsibility on the other driver. I drove them all to a Main Street restaurant and we all ate fried chicken together. I did some little tricks of magic like making a half dollar disappear and changing two nickels into two dimes, and the kids loved it. Then I drove them home. When we arrived someone noticed that a light was on in the house, and they got scared all over again because no one remembered having a light on before they left for their ride.

They stayed in the car while I went through the house to be sure that no one was there. Then they came in, and the kids coaxed me to stay for a while.

After I had entertained them until they were almost glad that they had had an accident, I explained my church and what we believe. Then I excused myself.

That's the story, Mom. Funny thing, I had been wondering all that day what I could do to repay you for being a wonderful mother.

Love,

P.S. The accident might not have happened if the father had been driving. He's in Korea.

Fifteen Scouts Receive

"God and Country" Awards

THIRTEEN BOYS of the Center Stake recently were presented their final award and badges in the "God and Country" religious award program of the church. This represents the largest group of the church to receive this award since the first presentation to fourteen Scouts from six different cities in 1946.

On Sunday morning, October 19, 1952, at the eleven o'clock service in the Stone Church awards were given to eight of these boys: Gordon Heady, Harry Mangum, Joseph Mangum, William Nichols, Tom Quick, Robert Rannie, Mark Thoman, and Gerry Westwood. On Sunday, November 9, the other five boys were similarly honored by the West College Street congregation, and received their awards. These boys were John Darling, Jr., Everett Graffeo, John Hiles, James Johnson, and Reginald Stoner.

Two other boys finished the work and received their awards earlier as both were leaving Independence: James Brand, Jr., who is now attending Southern Methodist University in Dallas; and David Kohlman, whose parents, Bishop and Mrs. Leslie W. Kohlman, were assigned to serve in Guelph, Ontario, Canada. Three others of this class, Robert L. Hall, Edward Goold, and Ronald Goold, have completed their requirements and will receive their awards within the next month.

Of this group of twenty, thirteen are Eagle Scouts; three are Star Scouts, and two are First Class.

All these boys completed their requirements under the leadership of Arthur B. Taylor, an Independence lawyer and Scouter of many years' experience, in an experimental church school class organized in the fall of 1950 at Stone Church. Brother Taylor prepared the course of study for the year's work, with from seven to thirteen lessons spent on each of these phases of church study: Old Testament, New Testament,

Lower,
Arthur B. Taylor, teacher; John Hiles; Gordon Heady; Harry Mangum; Joseph Mangum; Robert Rannie; William Nichols, Jr.; Everett Graffeo; and Kenneth H. Taylor, assistant teacher.*

Church History, Book of Mormon, and the beliefs of the church.

Twenty boys from Stone Church and West College Street Church started the class, two moved from the city, and two additional boys joined. All twenty have completed the course; fifteen have received the "God and Country" award; and the other five are finishing requirements other than study.

As a result of the success of this class, Brother Taylor has started another class for boys, and seven other congregations in the Center Stake have organized similar "God and Country" church school classes. Approximately seventy-five boys are enrolled in these classes.

Throughout the forty-three years of its existence, the Boy Scouts of America has proved to its satisfaction that troops sponsored by churches, as a general rule, are more stable and enduring than those sponsored by other agencies. The national Boy Scout organization, together with church leaders of the Jewish, Catholic, Lutheran, and Protestant faiths, planned for official religious awards following the completion of requirements ascertained by the individual denominations. These requirements include a study of the beliefs of the sponsoring denomination, service to the church and community, and the furthering of worship and religious habits of the individual Scout.

Each denomination of the Protestant group was given the privilege either of accepting the general Protestant requirements or of writing its own. This church, after consultation with representative persons interested, chose to prepare its own requirements. Dr. Floyd M. McDowell, director of the Department of Religious Education at the time, was chairman of a committee of pastors, youth leaders, and church Scout leaders. The resulting religious award program was submitted to and approved by the National Council of Boy Scouts of America. Like Scouting itself, the program is divided into six steps. On attaining the sixth award, the Scout is entitled to the "God and Country" badge to be worn in a place of honor beside that reserved for the Eagle award.

Every Boy Scout of the church, member or nonmember, individually or with others, may enroll for and complete the work required for the badge.

Elizabeth McMicken

If I have found the Christ anywhere, I have found him in the lives of the Saints who have been faithful to their calling. Such a Saint is a ninety-four-year-old member, Elizabeth McMicken, of Los Angeles. She lives with her daughter, Sister Betty Cusick, and Bill—Betty's husband. She has other children, members of the church, and all love her as dearly as she loves them. Time and again she praises her children. This is typical of motherhood—but somehow, in the case of Sister McMicken, one feels that this expression of love comes from a lifetime of intimate care which has merited the devoted service of her children.

As her pastor, I call upon her often, and every visit is ministry to me. Her gracious, pleasant manner, her recognition of the importance of the task of the church, her readiness to say kind things about her fellow-men—these and other attributes of her personality have caused me to visit her often.

She feels that her Heavenly Father is very close to her. She readily testifies of the nearness of the Holy Spirit—how she senses by its presence that the Saints are praying for her. She recognizes that God has sustained her throughout life, and to him she gives praise and honor.

One experience she tells of happened during a short period of time when she was unable to walk with ease. For a while she was even confined to her bed.

As she relates the story she tells of how beautifully clean her room was kept—of how comfortable she had been made to feel. Then she tells that while she lay there one day pondering on her physical condition, a beautiful lady, dressed in clothing as "white as the driven snow," appeared in the window. The beautiful lady, whom she believes to have been a messenger from heaven, stepped into her room, placed her hand on Sister McMicken, and said, "You will walk again." Very shortly her ability to walk returned.

Although unable to attend services, Sister McMicken—or Grandma Mickey as many fondly call her—lives on the memory of past association with Saints, of the visits she receives from Saints, of reading the Herald and receiving letters from loved ones near and far. Her address is 4252 Walton, Los Angeles 37, California.

Letters

A Testimony of Goodness

I enjoy reading the Herald and other church publications. I especially like to read the testimonies of others. I have felt impressed to stand up in prayer service and testify of God's goodness more often than I have done so. Truly I can say he is the answer to all our problems. He has been my staff to lean on in time of trouble; my strength in every trial. He has healed my sick body and has given me courage to go on when the way was rough. I rejoice to think how gracious he has been to me and my loved ones. I desire to gain wisdom and knowledge to be able to give more efficient service to him and to help others who are in need.

From a Retired Elder

As a retired elder I have wondered what I might do to help share the gospel. I have decided to distribute tracts through the mail and in person. I take many addresses from the telephone directory for this. I have experienced much satisfaction in doing this, and I feel that in some cases difficulties in home life are being smoothed out as a result of this ministry. My daily distribution has reached one hundred and ten families; I hope to continue until I have contacted a thousand.

A Memorable Experience

Aboard the 3:26 p.m. north-bound bus from Lamoni, Iowa, on December 19 forty-six of us Gracelanders were headed happily toward various destinations for the holidays. Although the roads were perilously icy and the visibility poor, the atmosphere within the bus was cheery, and the walls resounded with Alma Mater songs, and Christmas carols.

Then at 5:40 p.m., just five miles from Des Moines, the bus struck a truck. It was several seconds later and several feet farther on that we came to a complete stop. During those intervening seconds the bus had gone over a seven-foot embankment and remained, miraculously, right side up. During the moment previous to the crash and the interim of uncontrolled movement, there were no hysterical screams or cries. The first sounds after were the moans of the driver who was pinned underneath the wreckage. His first words were to inquire about his passengers. A quick inventory revealed only minor injuries—a blackened eye, chin cuts, lip abrasions, lost teeth, broken noses, and a fractured jaw. The injured did not complain, and there was no panic. When the ambulance arrived the bus driver was able to walk to it with some assistance; the other victims were taken away for treatment also, leaving quite a group of uninjured still in the bus. Again, singing served as a release for taut nerves, and then someone suggested we have prayer. Our spokesman adequately disclosed the words of thanks within all of our hearts. After the prayer all joined in the hymn of "Consecration." As we finished singing, another bus came for us.

Such an accident could have happened to any group, but probably few could have taken it as calmly as this one did. The sound of the collision has faded from our ears, and the sight has lost its sharpness but all of us will long remember the experience. Life is more precious to us now, and our prayers of gratitude are more frequent. Christmas means

A NEW TRACT

What and How Shall I Tell My Neighbor?

BY EVAN FRY

This is a tract for church members to help you know how to better approach your neighbor with the gospel message. The text gives basic steps that help you to convert potential Reorganized Latter Day Saints everywhere.

The author of this tract, Evan Fry, is under general appointment. In 1940 he became Radio Minister for the church and is at present the speaker for the radio series, "Hear Ye Him." He has written many other tracts, study courses, and books for the church.

more to us, mainly because we realize we might never have had another one.

I no longer think of this as an accident but, rather, as an incident that increased my awareness of the preciousness of life. I pray that the experience may always remain a challenge to us.

Note of Appreciation

I desire to express my personal thanks to the many friends who have tendered their sympathy at the death of my father, David A. Oakman. Such expressions have meant much at a difficult time.

40 Highfield Road ARTHUR A. OAKMAN
Nuneaton, England

"I Was Sick and Ye Visited Me"

On March 15 I was in a motor accident and received severe injuries to my back, hip, and leg. I am well on the way to recovery now, but during the first week my injuries caused me great pain. I realize now that I had not known the true meaning of the word "suffering." For a few days I was not sure at all that I would recover, and at the time it didn't seem to matter much.

Strange to say, out of this experience have come other compensations which are very wonderful indeed. The Scriptures state that we grow by the things that we suffer, and learn obedience in the same way. "Whom God loves he chasteneth."

"I was sick and ye visited me." The meaning of this text, the words of Jesus, have moved right out of the pages of the Bible and into my very life. Each day when the postman came to the hospital, he brought me bundles of messages of encouragement, sympathy, and assurance of prayers. Visitors they were, like little wells of sparkling living water bringing their refreshing message into my suffering gloom, giving me hope and courage.

It was in this way that I discovered the true value of friends. Letters and get-well cards are as much a visit as is a personal call, when such is not possible.

Easter will be on Sunday as I write, but will have passed away when you read this letter. However to talk about Christ is never out of date, and he is involved in the drama of my story.

I was practicing with the combined churches' choir for the beautiful cantata, "Victory Divine," and was enjoying it very much until the accident cut short my part in it. One night while in the hospital during the early stages of treatment while pain sought to crush the will to live out of me, some of the words of the cantata kept running through my mind. It was where Jesus' suffering was described: "We thought he was the Son of God,

His Mercy was complete.

The path of sorrow he has trod, and found not victory but sad defeat . . ."

Presently I became aware of the crucifix which hung on the wall in the ward. This depicts Jesus nailed to the cross and suffering there. It carried my attention to Jesus then, and, for the first time I think, I became fully aware of the terrible suffering of our Lord as he walked alone the path of sorrow. I thought of all the kind messages which had come to me and assurances of your prayers, and I imagined that I could see all of you out there praying for me. Suddenly I knew that I could make it. "I was sick and ye visited me."

Gratefully and humbly I say, "thanks, thanks very, very much."

On Mother's Day

By Myron F. LaPointe

IT IS VERY FITTING that one day of the year is set aside as "Mother's Day." It is also very fitting that that day is Sunday. This should be a time to pay tribute to mothers on the basis of the God-given purpose of motherhood.

In retrospect, we do not often see the mother directly in places of honor and fame, but her children bring her untold joys because of their honorable and worthy achievements. Usually when we see boys and girls, men and women of high repute, we find that their mothers are women of quality and high Christian ideals. However, the God-given right of free agency enables individuals to rise above inferior heredity, environment, and background, through the principles and doctrines of life as taught by the Christ. For that we are thankful.

Let us not make this a day to eulogize mothers only because they have brought children into the world. Let us pay tribute where tribute is due—to our godly mothers, whether they be rich or poor, beautiful or homely, highly educated or poorly learned, leaders or followers, and also to the unfortunate women who have not been able to experience the joys of motherhood.

Children obey your mother and your father in the Lord; for this is right.

Honor thy father and mother; fathers and mothers provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.—Adapted from Ephesians 6: 1, 2, and 4.

Mothers should so love their children that they will discipline in love, direct with wisdom, and hold the respect of those under their charge.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. . . . She will do him good all the days of her life. . . . Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also and he praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all. Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.—Proverbs 31: 10-12, 25-31.

May mother and her companion share equally the responsibilities and joys of parenthood.

Methods of Evangelism

By Apostle Maurice Draper

This 84-page, paper-bound book was the text used at the Institute in Evangelism. It includes some of the materials first published in 1942 in the "Missionary Manual." The information is clear, logical, accurate, and valuable to everyone participating in the evangelistic mission of the church.

Topics included are personal evangelism, missionary cottage meetings, missionary preaching, audio-visual materials, and questions asked and objections raised.

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your report brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your reports, we hope you will understand.

Visitors to Branch

SPARTA, WISCONSIN.—Elder Cecil Robbins was in charge of a series of meetings held in December. On December 15, a baptismal service was held with Victor Lakowske and Johnny Brockman the candidates.

On February 15, the Harley Morris family of Madison visited the branch. Brother Morris delivered the morning message. Mrs. Samuel Toomey, Sammy, and Sister Nettie Hattie visited at the Owen Brockman home recently. Sister Toomey was in charge of the lesson at the women's department meeting on February 20.

Elder and Mrs. Cecil Robbins have moved to Sparta. They were given a surprise housewarming on March 15.

The Zion's League under the leadership of James Schorr has been active in the branch. They have been assisted by Brother Robbins.

Several members of the congregation attended conference held March 14 and 15 at Madison.—Reported by MRS. FLOYD HELGESEN

District Conference Held

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—The spring conference of the Nauvoo District was held at Fort Madison, Iowa, March 21 and 22, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth and District President Max Hromek, presiding.

The conference officially opened with a class led by Brother Chesworth. Following the afternoon classes, supper was served in the lower auditorium by the women of the Fort Madison Branch. Brother Chesworth preached the evening sermon.

The theme for the prayer service on Sunday morning was "Service Through Love." District Missionary Fred C. Banta presented the opening remarks. There were over 250 people in the congregation. Brother Chesworth preached during the morning hour. At noon a basket dinner was held in the lower auditorium.

The congregation met for the district business meeting in the afternoon. Two priesthood calls were brought before the group to be voted upon: Brother Raymond Brown, Mt. Pleasant, called to the office of priest, and Brother Theodore Bourland, Farmington, called the office of deacon; they were unanimously agreed upon.

The district president then presented a request for money to be put at the disposal to further the work of the new mission in Mt. Pleasant. His request was granted. Several other matters were brought before the membership followed by a brief report on the activities of the priesthood, given by Elder B. A. Galbraith.—Reported by BETTY TRIPP

New Paper for District

IDAHO DISTRICT.—Evangelist J. F. Curtis closed a series of meetings in New Plymouth February 22. The saints in New Plymouth had a basket lunch for him the last day with a record attendance of seventy people. Visitors came from Baker, Oregon; and Emmett, Weiser, Nampa, Boise, and Pocatello, Idaho. A prayer and testimony meeting was held in the afternoon. Oscar, James, and John Stout were blessed by Brother Curtis and Brother Fry from Boise, during the New Plymouth series. Brother Curtis was also presented with a recording machine from some of the Idaho Saints who felt he needed it very much in giving his patriarchal blessings. He stayed over an extra day in New Plymouth after receiving the recording machine in order to give patriarchal blessings.

The Nampa mission sponsored a box supper and social February 27 and made over two hundred dollars which will be used to help purchase equipment for the new church building.

Something new has been added to the Idaho District—"The Idaho Sentinel." It is edited and published by Melba Rae Barnett and Ruby Y. Brown of Pocatello, Idaho. It is hoped it will in some ways take the place of the "Vigil." Anyone desiring to send in news or contributions toward the expense of the same should contact one of the above at 1040 East Terry, Pocatello, Idaho.

The Pocatello mission sponsored a baked ham dinner at "Club Haven," March 13, and made a little over one hundred dollars which is to be used in helping complete the basement of the church so dinners can be given in the church. Brother Myron Montgomery is still meeting with the Saints in Blackfoot, on Sunday afternoons.—Reported by RUBY Y. BROWN

Branch Has Social

SWEET HOME, OREGON.—The branch held a social on March 21 at the high school cafeteria. A chicken-pie dinner was held, and the entertainment featured group singing led by Elder James Kemp, musical numbers, and skits. Brother Kemp, his wife Helen, and their two children were special guests of the branch. They are living in Portland, Oregon. A blanket was presented to them by the women's group.—Reported by MAUD BOWSER

District Youth Rally Held

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—The Alberta District youth rally was held March 6-8. A class was held under the direction of the district youth leader, Alan Johnstone; Kenneth Nevels directed a fellowship hour. Elder Howard W. Fisher, district president, Elder David K. Lamour, and Kenneth Nevels were in charge of the rally. Young people from Calgary, Mirror, Grassland, Warburg, Bon Accord, Leduc, Millet, Edmonton, Namao, Hayter, Alberta; and Macklin, Saskatchewan, met for the rally. Brother Fisher was the guest speaker at the banquet in the evening. On Sunday morning the young people attended a fellowship service, and in the afternoon a dedication service was held.—Reported by MURIEL M. PEARSE

Skylarks Have Banquet

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.—On March 7, the Zion's League held their annual banquet. The guest speaker was Elder Clifford Spellberry of Niagara Falls, New York. Guests were present from Lowbanks, Humber Bay, Ontario; and Niagara Falls, New York. The women's department served the banquet, and Bill Stover, League leader, served as master of ceremonies.

On March 12, an Irish stew supper served by the women's department raised thirty dollars. On March 18, the women had a tea in order to raise funds to help the Ottawa Saints in their efforts to raise money to build a church. The tea was held at the home of Sister Mona Cochrane and was well attended. Sister Helen Scott served the lunch. A total contribution of twenty-five dollars was noted.

On March 22, Brother Ben Hewitt of Toronto was in the branch. He taught the adult church school class in the morning and preached the evening sermon.

On March 28, the Skylarks under the supervision of their leader, Sister Margaret Canham, held a banquet. The women, under the leadership of Sister Scott, provided the banquet. Visitors attended from Lowbanks, Port Colborne, Ontario; and Niagara Falls, New York. Sister Yvonne Snider of Port Colborne was the guest speaker. Pastors from visiting branches were introduced and gave short addresses. Movies were shown under the supervision of Brother Bill Hartford of St. Catherines.—Reported by AUDREY WARE

WICHITA, KANSAS.—The district conference of the Kansas District was held February 28-March 1. Ronald E. Manuel, district president, directed the business meeting. Participating in the business meeting were Elder J. C. Shannon, and brethren Clarence Owen, Sam Larkin, Myron LaPointe, Lyndon Robinson, Bob Wilson, Ralston Jennings, C. S. Gose, Joe Endicott, also Sisters Gose, Sowell, Opal Endicott, Dorothy Dodd, and Dolly Owen. Apostle D. Blair Jensen was present for the conference.—Reported by M. LEONARD SPEER

Servicemen Welcomed to Branch

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—The branch president, Donald McCormick, was called recently to the office of elder; his ordination took place at the district conference in San Antonio.

The branch is at present interested in moving the present church building to a site nearer into town. On a recent visit to the branch, Bishop J. E. Baldwin with Brother McCormick reviewed the various lots available. Brother Baldwin preached twice during his stay.

Since the beginning of the year, the women's department has sponsored two food sales at the county courthouse. In both ventures the entire branch co-operated in food and cash donations; both ventures were successful financially. On Friday, February 6, the women were in charge of a branch valentine party.

A Junior Zion's League has been organized; they held a TV party at the McCormick home recently.

In January, members of the priesthood and their wives met at the pastor's home for a banquet and a social evening.

Eugene Millner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Millner, was inducted into the army in January; he is now stationed at Fort Lewis near Tacoma, Washington.

The branch welcomes several servicemen stationed near by: Ronald Pool, Randall Ellis, Bill Herrod, and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Clark, all of Independence.

Three in the branch helped out at the work week end held at the reunion grounds in Banderita. Also several branch members have been elected or appointed to district jobs: Donald McCormick, counselor to the district president; Frances McCormick, district women's leader; Bonard Morse, reunion committeeman; Lillian Morse, district historian. Austin Branch will be host to the next winter conference of the Southwest Texas District.

The branch members regret losing the Parrott family. Brother Parrott's work has taken them to Florida. However, they welcome Charles Renfroe, a new student at the University of Texas, and the Johnnie Foster family from San Antonio.

District President J. E. Wilder was a recent guest speaker in the branch.—Reported by LILLIAN MORSE

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Vancouver Branch, 3409 L Street, is moving forward with all departments active, under the leadership of Paul Fishel, pastor, and his assistants. Regular cottage meetings were held in homes during the week in preparation for the missionary series to start March 15 with Seventy George Njeim as speaker.

The women's group meets twice monthly with devotion, study, and a social period. Attendance is from twelve to twenty. A recent chili supper followed by two short plays, presented by the women, was enjoyed. The second play was "The New Neighbor" from Guidelines to Leadership. The money raised from this project and from a bazaar in late March will be used to equip the new kitchen when completed.

The Zion's League which has met weekly for basketball games in a grade school gym also participated in the monthly district skating party in Portland. They meet once a month, with Russell Fishel as president, and have a class study every Sunday evening at the church. Jay and Evalyn Ellithorpe are supervisors. The young people are also members of the choir which provides anthems for the morning services. Wanda Taylor is choir director; Vivian Hull is accompanist.

The children's department of the church school, under the direction of Evalyn Ellithorpe, assisted by Ruth Phillips and Mildred Jones, will present a drama entitled "The Wonderful Message" on Palm Sunday for the morning service. For the Easter worship, Gypsy Root will direct an Easter drama, "The Symbol of the Cross," and the choir will sing a number of anthems. District President J. L. Verhei will bring the Easter message. Recent speakers have been Elder Gordon Lampard and Evangelist Mark Yeoman, both of Portland, and the local ministry, M. H. Cook, F. E. Chapman, Harold Carpenter, Bob Taylor, Walter Webberly, and the pastor, Elder Dawbarn and family, who recently arrived from England, are visiting the Lampard family. On Sunday, March 1, Elder Dawbarn was the speaker in Vancouver.

Elder F. E. Chapman was able to attend the Business Men's Institute in Independence and brought back an interesting report of this meeting. Another visitor and guest soloist was Elsie Prothero who arrived by plane from Hawaii and brought some beautiful native flowers with her. At a young adult social, Sister Prothero displayed many Hawaiian souvenirs and showed pictures in color of church families in the islands.

Brother and Sister Amos Lasley commemorated their golden wedding anniversary on February 22 with open house at their home. Only four of their eight children were able to be present, but all shared in the happy occasion. One son, Albert, the book steward of the branch, offered a fine testimony of the value of the Saints' Herald in their home, as a part of the Herald House program.—Reported by RUBY FISHEL

Branch Has New Pastor

FORT MADISON, IOWA.—A turkey dinner was held at noon on Thanksgiving Day in the lower auditorium of the church. All the food except the turkeys was donated. Tables for the church school were purchased and the Auditorium Fund quota was met with the offering.

Elder M. E. Francis resigned as pastor of the branch. He moved to Burlington, Iowa, to be near his work. Elder W. H. Gunn was selected to replace Brother Francis. Mrs. John Loren was chosen to take the place of Genevieve Francis as children's supervisor.

Seventy John T. Puckett held a series of meetings, November 30-December 12. Eather

Owens, L. F. Francis, Ronald McKoon, all of Fort Madison, and Bernard Galbraith of Nauvoo, Illinois, were baptized at the conclusion of the series.

Elder Fred C. Banta, Nauvoo, Illinois, held a series of cottage meetings, January 4-18.

January 25 was Inventory Sunday. All members were invited to have their financial statements ready to file that day. Bishop Howard Miller was present and delivered the morning message. Brother E. Y. Hunker delivered the evening message.

On February 22, James Clark, Edwin Day, and Karen Brown were baptized. The baptismal service was in the morning, and the confirmation service was held that evening. The following Sunday the new members participated in their first Communion service.—Reported by J. DARWIN SWEEZER

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT.—The first youth retreat of the new year was held at the district reunion grounds at Racine, Missouri, February 21 and 22. Chaplain Almer Sheehy of the Independence Sanitarium was the guest speaker. The theme for the retreat was "Truth." Classes were taught by Brother Sheehy and Stephen Black, district president. Recreation and evenings were directed by Barbara and Bill Bayless of Aurora, Missouri. A fellowship service was held on Sunday and Brother Sheehy delivered the morning sermon. Eighty-five registered with Elsie Shank, registrar; however, over one hundred were in attendance on Sunday. Meals were served by Sisters Mary Plumb and Hilde Shank of Carthage, Missouri.—Reported by SANDRA TRIMBLE

Class Has Contest

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—Under the direction of Elder Lee R. Oliver, pastor, the following have been baptized: Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Fazenbaker, G. W. Grimsley, Ralph Roberson, and James W. Veasey, Jr. The Zion Builders Class, composed of young married people, is conducting a contest to increase the attendance. Mrs. Lucille Oliver is the teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Dixon are leaders of the "Blue" and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hall are leaders of the "Red." The attendance has increased.—Reported by J. D. HALL

Speaker From Iraq

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—The women's department held a mother-daughter dinner on March 19. The decorations were carried out with a spring theme. The program included group singing, talent features by the young daughters, Glynnia Dixon, Alice Gilbert, Sharon Shepherd, Charlene Angel, and Nancy Angel, and a reading of a group of mother poems by Mrs. Lea Black.

An ordination service was held at the evening service on March 15. Joe D. Rook was ordained to the office of priest by Elders C. L. Rook and B. A. Howard; John K. Mount was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Howard and Stephen A. Black; and O. N. Ramsey was ordained to the office of deacon by Brethren Alvin Smith and Rook.

At the Communion service on March 1, Marilyn Sue, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd McVay, was blessed by Elders Alvin Smith and D. W. Guinee. Stephen Black, district president, held a class for members of the priesthood in the afternoon. Evangelist Henry Castings of Des Moines, Iowa, was the guest speaker at the evening service.

The women's department during the month of February had projects of a rummage sale, bake sale, and fish dinner which netted $138.50.

The young matrons entertained their husbands with a valentine party, a buffet supper, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Angel.

Family night was held on January 29, with a potluck dinner. The program for the evening was under the direction of the men. One of the high lights of the program was an informal talk given by one of the foreign students, a Mohammedan, who is attending N. E. O. A. & M. College at Miami. He explained many interesting facts and customs about his native country of Iraq.—Reported by BETTY L. KYSER

Branch Officers Elected

CORINTH, ONTARIO.—The annual business meeting of the branch was held September 5 at the home of Sister Ruth Somers. Preceding the meeting a potluck supper was held. Elder H. Marshall, 1951-52 pastor, presided at the meeting, except for the election of officers at which time District President J. C. Stuart presided. The following branch officers were elected: pastor, Elder A. Barham; women's leader and music director, Mary Hill, Sr.; young people's leader, John Law; church school director, Archie Hill; secretary-treasurer, H. Jenny; assistant secretary-treasurer, and librarian, A. Kennedy; auditors, B. Hill and H. Marshall.

On October 26, the branch observed its seventy-sixth anniversary. The guest speaker was Brother J. C. Stuart. Brother Archie Hill was ordained to the office of priest by Elders A. Barham and Les Hill at the morning service. The members of the congregation and their guests attended a basket lunch at the Women's Institute Hall at noon.

The annual Christmas concert and potluck supper was held on December 17.

During the Christmas vacation, Bea Robin Duff who is attending Graceland was ordained to the office of priest by Elders J. C. Stuart and A. Barham.

On February 4, the priesthood met to begin planning for branch missionary endeavor and cottage meetings.—Reported by A. W. KENNEDY

Nine Candidates Baptized

WENATCHEE, WASHINGTON.—Missionary Aleah Koury met with the branch February 22-March 7, using Kodachrome slides and illuminated chalk talks.

Mary Frances, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Ronald C. Smith, was blessed by Aleah Koury, assisted by her father.

A baptism service was held March 7 as a result of Brother Koury's missionary series. Brother Smith baptized the following people: Sally Carlene Mendenhall, Anna Ellen Beaty, Larry Bruce Mendenhall, Ernest Bayer, Jr., Nola Whynetta Bayer, Ernest Bayer, Sr., Anna Frances Hord, Myrtle Maude Wentworth, and Virginia Maude Ireland.

Members from the Bridgeport mission met on March 15 with the branch for the confirmation service. Dale Johnson led the prayer. Elders Lou Johnson, Bryon Bockingham, Wesley Louitt, and Ronald Smith assisted Brother Koury. A potluck supper and fellowship followed.—Reported by REA M. KEENER

Correction

In the February 23 issue of the Saints' Herald on page 20 under "Briefs," Hopewell, Oregon, it was stated that Hopewell was organized into a branch on February 1. This was an error. The spirit of discernment was obviously working with the district president, J. L. Verhei, and he was moved to postpone the organization until such time as the members have been taught more fully in regards to the organization and function of a branch as interrelated to the church as a whole.—Reported by VIVIAN LINDEROTH

DEATHS

SHERMAN.—Mabel Etta, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Warnica Smith, was born in 1877 at Franklin, Pennsylvania, and died February 24, 1953, at Sault Ste Marie, Ontario. In 1907 she was married to Ira Horace Sherman who preceded her in death in 1948. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1944.

Surviving are two daughters: Marion Hyldtoft of London, Ontario, and Ruth Berry of Mitchell, South Dakota; a son, Joseph Sherman of Hamilton, Ontario; a sister, Mrs. Mary Power of Franklin, Pennsylvania; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Priest A. R. Nott and Elder G. A. Edwards.

WEST.—Ellsworth Miles, son of Evan A. and Mollie Davis, was born August 7, 1885, at Nashville, Missouri, and died February 13, 1953, at his home in Denver, Colorado. He operated wholesale and retail bakeries for many years. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth and received great blessings through administration during his long illness.

He is survived by his wife Addie; a daughter, Mrs. Fred Kemp of the home; four sons: Robert L. and William D. of Denver; Jack L. of Berkeley, California; and Ellsworth M., Jr., of Anchorage, Alaska; a brother, John Davis of Modesto, California; a sister, Freda Milburn of Independence, Missouri; and twelve grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Ward Hougas. Interment was in Crown Hill Cemetery, Denver.

JOICE.—Dr. Charles A., son of Charles B. and Alta N. Whitehead Joice, was born December 3, 1892, at South Boardman, Michigan, and died March 31, 1953, at his home in Independence, Missouri, after a brief illness. On October 2, 1901, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. On April 9, 1922, he was ordained a teacher, and on September 10, 1933, an elder. At the time of his death he was the elder in charge of Group Three in Stone Church area. On September 19, 1913, he was married to Bessie E. Fetter, who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves a son, Maurice E. of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Alice M. Talcott, also of Independence; and two nephews, Warren and Wayne Fetter, who made their home with him. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Jay E. Keck at the Stone Church in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HARVEY.—Mary, was born March 3, 1858, in Glasgow, Scotland, and died March 31, 1953, at Battle Ground, Washington. She was baptized on July 15, 1894, and was a charter member of the Vancouver, Washington, Branch. The first services of that group were held in her home in 1906.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Mary Shippy of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Helen Crumley of Astoria, Oregon; Mrs. Wanda Walkley of Grand Ronde, Oregon; a son, John P. Harvey of Myrtle Creek, Oregon; fourteen grandchildren; and twenty-nine great grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Vancouver by Elder Paul Fishel.

BOND.—Edgar Earl, was born September 23, 1902, at Pawnee City, Nebraska, and died September 6, 1952, of a heart attack in the post office at Maitland, Missouri, where he was employed as a clerk. His mother died when he was nine months old, and he and his father made their home with his grandparents. Here he was cared for by his aunts, May and Retta Bond. On April 20, 1940, he was married to Faye Bernice Conz; one son, William Stephen, was born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1910.

He leaves his wife and son, of the home, and his aunt, Miss May Bond, of Santa Rosa, California. Funeral services were held at the Campbell Chapel in Maitland, Elder I. M. Ross and Evangelist Royal E. Woodley officiating. Interment was in the Knights of Pythias Cemetery in Maitland.

STERRETT.—Alice, daughter of Clarence H. and Katie Brayman Deyo, was born September 9, 1896, at McCune, Kansas, and died March 17, 1953, at her home in Independence, Missouri, after several years illness. On May 12, 1917, she was married to Anthony Blaine Sterrett; five children were born to them. During World War II three sons were in service and she was a member of the Army War Mothers. The family had lived in Independence the past thirty-five years.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Mrs. R. F. Kuhnlein of Independence; four sons: Charles H., Edward B., and Richard of Independence, and Robert E. of Tulsa, Oklahoma; a sister, Mrs. E. L. McIntosh; and fourteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elder Glaude A. Smith and the Reverend Robert M. Lehew officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LONGSTRETH.—Alice Mabel, daughter of Clarence W. and Henrietta Grant Earle, was born March 6, 1873, near Roseville, California, and died March 9, 1953, in Sacramento, California. Her father was an elder, and served as pastor at Los Angeles, Stockton, and Sacramento at various times. She had been a member of the church since February 8, 1886. Her husband, Edwin D. Longstreth, preceded her in death.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Mildred Curtis of San Francisco; two grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in East Lawn Chapel, Pastor Myron Reed Schall officiating. Interment was in East Lawn Cemetery.

ROBERTSON.—Anna, was born June 24, 1875, in Warren County, Iowa, and died October 23, 1952. She was married to Frank Robertson on January 18, 1893; both were baptized into the Reorganized Church in December, 1907. She spent most of her married life in Ackworth, Iowa.

She is survived by a brother in Nebraska and a sister in California. Funeral services were held in Indianola, Iowa, by Elders Herbert M. Scott and Don Cackler. Interment was in Belmont Cemetery near Milo, Iowa.

ANDERSON.—Levi E., son of Charles and Anna Anderson, was born September 2, 1873, in Ogden City, Utah, and died January 22, 1952, in Des Moines, Iowa. He was married on January 9, 1899, to Libby B. Wood. He spent most of his life in Iowa.

He is survived by a brother, John Anderson of Lamoni, Iowa, and four grandchildren. Elder Herbert M. Scott conducted the funeral service.

ANWAY.—Pearl, daughter of William and Julia Prock, was born in Alliance, Iowa, on December 23, 1901, and died March 20, 1953, in Des Moines, Iowa. On October 23, 1920, she was married to Elmer Anway, who survives her.

She also leaves a daughter, Mrs. Kenneth Myers, and a son, Darel, of Des Moines; two sisters: Mrs. John Reeves of Des Moines and Mrs. George Collins of Scotland, Arkansas; and five brothers: Louis, Benny, and Norman Prock of Des Moines; Tom and Richard Prock of Scotland, Arkansas. Elder Herbert Scott officiated at the funeral service.

DRISKILL.—Walter Elmor, son of Elmor and Emma Driskill, was born in August, 1875, at Andover, Missouri, and died October 20, 1952, in Des Moines, Iowa. He was married on September 24, 1898, to Blanche Reed, who preceded him in 1931. Later he was married to Tillie Gallagher, who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Velma Breazeale of Des Moines; two sons; Homer of Des Moines and Cecil of Blythedale, Missouri; a stepson, Harlan Gallagher of Des Moines; and a stepdaughter, Mrs. Thelma Biddle of Des Moines. Elder Herbert M. Scott conducted the funeral service.

HOSLER.—Anna, daughter of Peter and Margaret Ferguson, was born February 11, 1863, at Yale, Michigan, and died December 6, 1952, in Des Moines, Iowa. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church when she was a bride and remained a devoted member throughout her life.

Surviving are four daughters: Alice Hosler, Dessie Miller, Margaret Joice, and Leta Gillespie, all of Des Moines; and two sons: Bert Hosler of Midland, Michigan, and Willard Hosler of Independence, Missouri. Elders Herbert M. Scott and Clyde McDonald officiated at the funeral service.

PRICE.—Sarah Ann, daughter of John and Eliza Morgan, was born December 22, 1875, in Sodom, Ohio, and died August 13, 1951, in Des Moines, Iowa. She was married on June 20, 1898, to Joshua Price. She was a niece of Elder William Lewis and a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Lillian Beener of Des Moines and Mrs. Emma Sweeney of Perry, Iowa; and two sons: Frank C. of Des Moines and James E. of Clark Lake, Iowa.

TRUMAN.—Goldie May, was born February 23, 1887, at Urbana, Illinois, and died April 6, 1953. She is survived by her husband, Joseph; three daughters: Mrs. L. J. Knapp, Mrs. F. L. Nash, and Mrs. J. H. Highgenbaten; a son, Carl; and a brother, E. V. Skain. Funeral services were conducted April 9 in Des Moines, Iowa, Pastor Herbert M. Scott officiating.

THE ART OF TEACHING

The funded knowledge of each generation is passed on by teachers—not just by the professionals but by all of us. One of the ancients observed, "I can learn something from every man I meet, for in some particular he is my superior."

I heard a new definition of a teacher recently which applies only on the secondary school level. "A teacher is a textbook wired for sound."

Mothers and church school teachers, as well as classroom pedagogues, can improve their methods if they will learn well the axiom of education, "Unless the pupil has learned, the teacher hasn't taught." C. B. H.

A SINNER'S PRAYER

Help me to resist my temptations, O Lord, and not just consult them. L. J. L.

INTERMEDIARY

What is a mother's work?

She is to bear and care for heaven's progeny,
To love as God has loved,
Wisely, well, and tenderly.

When there is fear

She is the strength of twenty angels
Standing near.

When there is pain

She is God's intern
Bringing health again.

When there is doubt

She is the wisdom of all ages
Speaking out.

This is a mother's work:

To stand upon the earth and place the hands
Of little children
In the hand of God.

Naomi Russell

If you lend a helping hand you'll have less time to borrow trouble.

MEDITATIONS OVER AN EMPTY CUP

There is no insurance against an aching heart.

When you don't need it, you will have offers of help from all sides. But when you need them worst, the helpers will all have disappeared.

Sometime in your life you will feel utterly alone. Then, if you look up, you may find that God is near.

Be careful how you start out to search for truth. You cannot know at the beginning what the final cost will be, in time, money, and tears. "The truth will make you free," but it will not be free. The cost is often high.

The saddest thing in experience is to discover too late that when you were offered the Bread of Life, you chose a stone instead. But keep the stone anyhow. Though it may for a time seem of little worth, the day may come when you will esteem it as the Pearl of Great Price.

This is a large bright blue and yellow sign specifically designed to be a uniform and familiar way for everyone to locate all Reorganized Latter Day Saint churches. The road marker features the church seal at the top, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in large letters, and leaves space for your branch name and address. Please do not make your branch message longer than 15 or 16 letters to each line.

The road marker is 23" x 31" and is made from heavy steel. The colors are applied separately by a silk screen enamel process and will last long years of rain and sun. Each is punched with holes for easy erecting.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

SPEAKS AT GRACELAND

President F. Henry Edwards was in Lamoni, Iowa, April 26. He spoke to the Graceland student body at their morning service and also addressed the members of the student body priesthood.

SPEAKS AT GUDGELL PARK

President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker at the morning service at Gudgell Park in the Center Stake of Zion on April 26.

COLLEGE STUDENTS' INSTITUTE HELD

Approximately eighty-five young people registered at a college students' institute held in Warrensburg, Missouri, April 25 and 26. Representing the General Church were Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, Elders Charles Neff, F. M. McDowell, Harry Simons, Merle Guthrie, W. C. Becker. Also on the staff were Professors Howard Baltz, Ronald Smith, and Dr. John Blumen-schein. Bishop DeLapp gave the opening address and was the speaker at the banquet in the evening. The group met in forums under the leadership of the other men. Brother Neff gave the closing sermon.

APOSTLE RECOVERING

Apostle E. J. Gleazer is in the Independence Sanitarium where he is making satisfactory recovery. He is expected to be at his usual tasks in a relatively short time.

DISTRICT INSTITUTE HELD

Elder John Darling, director of leadership training in the Department of Religious Education of the General Church, attended an institute for the Eastern Colorado District, April 25 and 26. The institute was under the direction of Wesley F. Evans. A training school on the course "Ways of Teaching," which is being promoted church-wide, was held. Attendance of leaders from nearly every branch in the district was noted. Definite plans were made by these leaders to conduct training school on the same material in their own branches.

NEWS OF WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Mrs. Pauline Arnson, chairman of the General Church department of women, spoke at the mother-son banquet in Des Moines, Iowa, April 25. She represented the department at the Des Moines District women's institute the following day.

Mrs. Clarence Skinner attended an institute for women of the Southern Missouri District held at Thayer, April 25 and 26. She was the guest speaker.

Mrs. Samuel Burgess spoke at the institute on Evangelism the day the various departments were represented.

ATTEND CAMPING INSTITUTE

Elder Lee Hart, Center Stake youth leader; and Edna Easter, representative of the department of religious education; four Graceland students; Miss Doris Marriott of the Graceland faculty; George Knotts, student at Kansas University; and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Hands of the Kansas City Stake were the representatives of the church at the annual spring institute of the Missouri Valley Section of the American Camping Association. The institute was held at Knobnoster State Park, April 17, 18, and 19. The church group was in charge of the Sunday worship service. At the business meeting that afternoon, Elder F. Carl Mesle was retained as the vice-president of the A. C. A.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

John Edward Booth

ELDER BOOTH was not baptized until May 11, 1941, when he was twenty-six years old. But within three years he had been ordained a deacon (February 22, 1942), a priest (April 11, 1943), and an elder (October 3, 1943), and had accepted General Church appointment as president of the Eastern Michigan District. Later he was ordained a high priest on April 13, 1947.

John served in his first appointment for two years before being transferred to the Southern Ohio District in 1946 where he was city pastor in Columbus. His last appointment came in 1950 as the president of Toronto (Ontario) District and pastor of the Toronto congregation.

His work before accepting church appointment was as a tool-and-diemaker. He entered the Henry Ford Trade School in Detroit, Michigan, when he was thirteen to learn the trade. "I feel that my experience in the trade school has been most helpful to me in the interest of church work," he says. "Here I learned to appreciate the value of time and money, for I earned money as I followed through in the learning of the trade." He also attended the Ford Motor Company Apprentice School from which he was graduated in 1936. He later attended Ohio State University during 1949 as a special student in education.

He worked as a tool-and-diemaker from 1932 to 1940. During the war from 1940 to 1944 he was a machine shop instructor in the Henry Ford Trade School. He feels that his experience in teaching young men seventeen and eighteen years old added to his value as a minister.

A native of McGregor, Michigan, John was married in May, 1932, to Helen F. Najjar. They have two children, Howard J., fourteen, and Sandra L., twelve.

He likes sports, especially baseball and fishing. He also enjoys taking and showing movies of church activities, and working with people.

"For Good and Evil"

THE STORY OF JOSEPH SMITH began with his account of a visitation by the angel Moroni, in which, among other things, he was told that his "name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people."

One of the things that always impressed me was the entire absence of any attempt to avoid the impact of attacks upon the church, its foundations and doctrines, and upon Joseph Smith himself. If one will take occasion to investigate, he will find that almost from the very beginning, as soon as the church had facilities for printing and publishing, articles about and against, editorial attacks, and books adverse to the cause were freely mentioned and quoted in the columns of our church papers.

If Joseph Smith had been a conscious and conscienceless fraud, as so many of his time believed, does it seem reasonable, or according to our understanding of human frailties, that vicious and often malicious attacks upon him and the church would have been given attention in a press controlled by him and his associates?

Now after more than a century, hundreds, yes thousands of books, pamphlets, magazine articles, and all media of the printed word have been published about the Prophet and the religious movement he began. Much of these are inimical and unfriendly, since his enemies have been many. Much has been published on his behalf, for he has never lacked defenders. So the printed word has proved a fulfillment of the prophecy given him by his angelic visitor.

WHEN GRACELAND COLLEGE was founded, one of the first faculty members was Thomas Jefferson Fitzpatrick, a rare human being. He was a descendant of Thomas Jefferson and was named after that great man. After a short connection with our college, he sought employment elsewhere for a time, then returned to the Graceland Campus for a few years. While there he met and married Mary Linder, another Graceland teacher and a most excellent person.

Leaving Graceland in 1912 he became connected with the University of Nebraska, and, after a long record as a member of its faculty, he was retired a few years ago. He died very suddenly and unexpectedly in March, 1952.

Professor Fitzpatrick was a keen and wise collector of books. He was a scientist and collected scientific works. He was a historian also, and it appears now that his early professional contact with our church at Lamoni had aroused an interest in Latter Day Saint literature, or, as the world might put it, Mormoniana, for after his death it was found that he had accumulated one of the finest collections in this line.

UPON APPLICATION by Professor Fitzpatrick's heirs, an administrator was appointed by the courts and his entire library was sold recently.

We watched developments as best we could and of course were desirous of acquiring the special Latter Day Saint portion of this library, but the appraised value and the expeditious disposal of it put it quite beyond our ability to acquire—much to our regret. However, through the efficient and wise counsel of Mr. Frank Glenn, bibliophile de luxe, book collector and dealer of Kansas City, this portion of the Fitzpatrick library has been purchased by the Kansas City Public Library, which pleases us very much, as it will now become accessible to the public of the Kansas City metropolitan area of which we are a part.

As this whole matter is of interest to us, and especially to those who knew this exceptional man now deceased, we are publishing the following account of the public library purchase which appeared in the Kansas City Star of Thursday, February 19, 1953.

Wealth of American Material In 20,000-Book Library Purchase

The job of unpacking and examining 20,000 books and pamphlets which include rare and unusual items acquired by the public library last week could well be likened to taking stock of the contents of a newly found treasure chest.

The volumes, now in the basement of the library building, are part of the private library of the late Thomas Jefferson Fitzpatrick, professor emeritus at the University of Nebraska. Three large vans transported the library's purchase, along with the remainder of the private collection that was bought by Frank Glenn, Kansas City book broker and publisher, to Kansas City last week.

First Editions Are Found

The books were amassed by Fitzpatrick in a lifetime of collecting and include many first editions and works that are out of print and not available in ordinary book markets. The public library acquired all books on Americana in the collection.

Richard Sealock, chief librarian, and his assistants have started the job of checking the material in the purchase for unusually valuable items. Some volumes already have been identified as first editions, and a handbill which may prove to be a printed copy of Lincoln's emancipation proclamation, issued in 1861, was found Saturday between the pages of one of the books.

Of particular significance are the many histories of this area, including what may be the most complete collection of books and pamphlets on the Mormon church in existence. Books concerning the Mormon church in Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri filled fourteen shelves in a bookcase in Fitzpatrick's home. A complete history of the early days of the Mormon church in Independence is given in the books and pamphlets, which date from the 1830's.

Date on an Expedition

Considered by Sealock as one of the most valuable parts of the acquisition is a large amount of material on the Lewis

Baptismal Report

That there continues to be a lag in baptisms is indicated by the number reported to the Department of Statistics. There were 192 reported in February. This is 45 less than was reported in February, 1952. For January and February there have been 364 baptisms reported. This is 97 less than reported for these two months in 1952.

Districts from which 10 or more baptisms were reported in February, 1953, are as follows: Southwestern Texas, 14; Idaho, 11; Oregon, 11; Eastern Colorado, 10; and Owen Sound, 10.

The five branches reporting the highest number of baptisms in February, 1953, are as follows: San Antonio, Texas, 9; Denver, Colorado, 8; South Bend-Mishawaka, Indiana, 8; Richland, Washington, 7; and Sweet Home, Oregon, 7.

Nauvoo Mansion House

In recent years considerable money and time have been spent in developing and improving the grounds at Nauvoo. With the passing of years these buildings take on increasing value as historical sites. It is therefore deemed advisable to set up safeguards in every way possible to preserve these buildings for the future.

In keeping with this objective, the Mansion House will no longer be available for overnight guests. We are sure that this will be appreciated by the members of the church throughout the country.

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Mrs. N. Dawborn, Independence, Missouri, formerly of Warrington, England:

Five years ago my husband was elected to be pastor of the church in Warrington. He was a bus driver, and his hours of working, including Sunday, were such that he found it difficult to do what he needed to as pastor. We had a nice home that was tithed and dedicated to the service of God, but we decided to sell it in order to buy a little business so that my husband would have more time to devote to the church. This business had a license to sell cigarettes; at that time the demand for them was greater than the supply, so they assured a good income, as well as attracting customers for other items. Since we had taught our own children and the young people at church that tobacco was harmful we figured we couldn't continue to warn against it and then sell it across the counter, so we quit carrying it. Some people thought we were foolish, but we prayed about the matter and found our faith was rewarded. We made a living and, at the same time, my husband was able to spend more time on church work.

When we decided to sell the business to enable us to come to the United States, there was a shortage of money and the price of property was falling, yet we sold to the first customer for the amount we had paid plus the cost of alterations we had made (and minus the cigarette license). To us this is a sure testimony that God will not fail those who take him at his word.

From Robert Farnham, president of Lamoni Stake:

We had ten baptisms Sunday—five from Lamoni, and five from the Bethany mission. Those from Bethany are the first to be baptized since the mission was opened, and all came from one family. This makes a total of twenty baptisms for the Stake in 1953.

From Heaven or of Men

By Chris B. Hartshorn

A sermon preached at West College Church, September 21, 1952
From a wire recording by Elmer Hart

When he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders . . . came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? And who gave thee this authority? . . . Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if you tell me, I, likewise, will tell you by what authority I do these things. The baptism of John, whence was it? From heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people. For all people held John as a prophet. And they answered Jesus and said, We cannot tell.—Matthew 21: 21-24, Inspired Version.

THIS IS THE hundredth anniversary of the Reorganization of the church. One hundred years ago last June the initial conference was held which resulted in the work of this Reorganization. Perhaps it would be well to talk to you about the principles and personalities of the Reorganization.

From my earliest recollections the history and doctrines of the church have by turns delighted and perplexed me. When I was in church school, or prayer meeting, or heard a spiritually endowed sermon, it all seemed so clear that I felt secure and happy in the work. Then when I got out among my associates and heard some cutting statements or criticisms, I wasn't quite so sure.

In the Scriptures and history one finds real evidence that in man's social development it hasn't all been white or black. We can't line up in groups and say these events are all good and these are all bad. There are grays in the picture. Sometimes when we find there are grays in the picture of our home circle, our relatives, our church, or our nation, we get discouraged. We want things perfect.

I remember this incident being told of a fourteen-year-old girl in a church school class. The teacher was laboring to convince the girls in the class that only one perfect being had ever lived upon this earth, and that was Christ Jesus. This one girl was just a little bit perplexed, and finally after the teacher labored on the point she spoke up in protest, "But you don't know Mr. Jones who boards at our place."

WE DON'T KNOW all people, that's true. It is so like young people to have faith and to think that people are perfect. Sometimes we haven't got out of adolescence. Someone that we admire very much seems perfect to us, and we refuse to admit imperfections. We want our heroes to be perfect.

Abraham, Moses, David, Peter, Joseph Smith, and David Whitmer were not perfect men. They were human. They were fallible. Perhaps you don't want to know about the fallibility of men. You may be of a school that wants to hear: "We are saved by grace. Jesus Christ did it all. Glory hallelujah."

Recently here in Independence an evangelist of another church was going to show up the Reorganized Latter Day Saints and others. His objection to Latter Day Saints was "They say all the time, 'Do, do, do.' But Jesus did it all." That was his theory.

Christ said,

Many shall say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name; and in thy name cast out devils; and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I say, Ye never knew me; depart from me ye that work iniquity.—Matthew 7: 32, 33.

Our esteem of drinking water is colored somewhat by its source. And our ideas of human perfection are relative. Of necessity they must be so. Even Paul had his thorn in the flesh, and he had to learn that the grace of God was sufficient for him through faith.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints are told over and over about the vision in the woods in 1820, but too few of us have heard of the vision of 1853. Angels visited the earth then too, and men saw them. Some of you have never been told about the refection of the church of the Restoration in 1841, but let me read something to you.

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 10f and following says,

But I command you, all ye my Saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me.

This had reference to the Nauvoo Temple.

But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11a.

IT IS A MATTER of history that on October 1, 1841, the prophet said they were to discontinue their baptisms for their dead in the Mississippi River and not to resume the practice until the temple was finished. Then they would receive directions from the Lord.

I refer now to the conference for the reorganization of the church, which was made necessary by this rejection. I know there are some of us who are wondering, "What about the little stone that Daniel saw, which was cut out of the mountain without hands and was to roll forth and break the image and that in these days shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which never shall be destroyed?" (Daniel 2:44, 45) Others will say, "When the angel that John saw on the Isle of Patmos (Revelation 14) came to earth, he had the everlasting gospel to be restored to mankind for the last time. How is it His work must have a reorganization?" Well, it doesn't mean that the church was destroyed. It does not mean that the restoration was a lost cause. It does mean, however, that reorganization had to be undertaken because of the rejection of the church.

IN THIS CONFERENCE of June, 1851, at Beloit, Wisconsin, Jason W. Briggs was chosen to preside. Certain important things were decided upon. First, we look toward the West, for following the death of the prophet in 1844 a large group had gone west under Brigham Young who had been one of the twelve. The first thing they decided at this conference was to reject the contentions of Brigham Young and others who had claimed leadership, such as James Strang, William Smith, and Joseph Woods.

Second, they decided that the successor to Joseph Smith, Jr., was to be his seed, according to the law and prophecies of God. If none of his seed had been willing to come forth, there would have been no Reorganization, but if God had directed their work and said that this was their task, certainly in his own due time he would bring forth the true successor, the son of Joseph Smith.

Third, they decided that no one could claim the presidency of the church until he had first been ordained president of the high priesthood. Some of you were present when Brother Israel Smith was ordained and became president of the church. He wasn't ordained as president; he was ordained as president of the high priesthood, but by that ordination he became president of the church.

Fourth, "We shall recognize as valid all ordinations, and will fellowship all who have acted in purvey of such authority."

Last, the church of Christ as organized on April 6, 1830, exists wherever six or more Saints are organized according to the pattern in the Doctrine and Covenants (Church History, Volume 3, page 209 ff.).

A number of important things were clarified in their thinking. These people knew where they were going. They weren't headed for Utah or any other place. They weren't going to be disturbed by those who claimed they had been ordained as successors to Joseph Smith. They were going to wait for the legal successor.

They were not going to be disturbed by those who said, "Well, those who drifted out of the church by inactivity or by accepting other leaders are no longer worthy to be called Saints and are not members of his kingdom." The position of these men of the Reorganization was that only their own disobedience or sinfulness individually should take from them the rights to officiate under the authority of the ordinations which they had received in the original church.

THAT FALL another conference was held at Yellowstone, Wisconsin, and here they decided that the highest authority among the priesthood represents—not is, but represents—the legitimate president as the presiding authority; for until God should move to bring the rightful leader, somebody had to represent him.

I have read in the Scriptures of some of the difficulties that came about even before Christ left this earth. Some of his disciples wanted to know what was going to happen and who was greatest among them, or who had priority. In Matthew 18: 1-4 you can read about this. He said the greatest is he who is humble as a little child. In Matthew 23: 8 he told them that he who was greatest was the servant of all. There have been some real problems of leadership. Men were not ambitious for themselves, but they wanted to know. So on January 9, 1853, these who maintained the original faith came together again. In the meantime something had happened out West—something that upset the Reorganization very much. Brigham Young had brought a document which he called "the revelation on plural marriage," which we refer to more commonly as polygamy. He said this had been under lock and key from the year 1843. So one of the first things that this little group of the Reorganization wanted to learn was how the brethren stood on this document. Their action was to pray to God to know whether there was anything in this as a revelation from heaven. And the answer came back, "Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of God. It is not of me. I abhor it. My law is as it is found in the Doctrine and Covenants, the same yesterday, today, and forever."

ON MARCH 20, 1853, they had another meeting, and at this time they had some other problems such as an infant church trying to organize and get in motion would naturally have. Another thing bothered them: There were some men in the previous conference who had accepted ordination in some other factions, particularly William B. Smith, a brother of the prophet. These claimed to be apostles because of those ordinations, and so the group wanted to know about the validity of those ordinations. The answer they received was this:

These men who were ordained apostles by William Smith were not acceptable as ministers in this church.

Then they were given this further command: "Organize yourselves, for ere long I shall require the prophet at your hands." They did not know altogether what that meant, but they did have a sense of the auspicious that somehow or other into their charge was coming a very great responsibility, and they should organize themselves—but how? They were in deep trouble. If they disobeyed or refused they would go forward in darkness, but how would they accomplish this? They attempted to seek light, and they were told to appoint a day for prayer and fasting. They came together very soon, but with the brethren who came on this day to try to organize came the Prince of Darkness. You know how he will come sometimes when you are trying very hard? He can get into prayer meetings and business meetings, because it is his purpose to upset and to thwart the work of God. Well, they found out why this was. Some hadn't fasted as they had been requested. Some came who were not members. Those in charge preached during the day and put off the prayer meeting till night.

When they came together at night, they were in a much better spirit. They asked God to show them how to organize. "Who is to be the legal heir of the presidency of the church?" they asked. The Spirit wasn't so strong as on some other occasions (for instance, June, 1852), but there was a good feeling, and after they had prayed for some time, Brother H. H. Deam asked the chairman of the conference if he had received any answer. The chairman replied, "No." Then Deam said, "I think I have received it." He was told to write it out, and another meeting was set for April 5, 1853.

When the men came together they were told this one thing in the spirit of prophecy, "Organize according to what is written." They supposed that this meant what was written in the Doctrine and Covenants, but they didn't know who was the highest in authority. There were nineteen elders present, two of them being high priests and one of them a president of the seventy. As they tried to settle this among themselves, ill feelings seemed to develop. Men in their earnestness would argue for their point of view as if, were it not accepted, the whole cause would be lost. "We could not organize. God had asked us to do something that we could not do," they said, so they adjourned, agreeing to meet on the evening of April 6 in prayer and testimony.

When they came together on this date for a short time it seemed that the Prince of Darkness was again in their midst, but then their leader arose and rebuked the Devil. The change was instantaneous. Brother Deam then arose and said, "Brethren, the Spirit tells me that I have something in my possession which we need." Then he read the revelation which he had received at the previous meeting (Ibid., page 217).

In substance it was to "do all things according to pattern. Let the greatest preside at the conference. Let three be appointed to select seven as apostles, the president of the conference and two others assist in ordaining them, the senior of them to preside. Then these seven were to select twelve to act as members of the high council." This was the plan of organization and shortly after it had been read some of the men sprang to their feet saying, "Angels, brethren, are near us."

"The glory of God, such as I have never witnessed before in my twenty-three years of ministry, was manifested," said Brother Zenos Gurley. Three saw visions. The recording angel was present. J. W. Briggs says, "This seemed to be enough light to enable us to move understandingly." The choice of a presiding officer lay between a high priest and a seventy, but the decision still wasn't easy. They spent two whole days with a temporary president discussing questions relating to organization. J. W. Briggs was finally chosen after a nine-to-nine vote of the eldership in one of the most memorable meetings of the Reorganization. An appeal to heaven was to be made on the following day.

ON THAT DATE—April 7, 1853—an outstanding demonstration of power and light and unity prevailed. Many sang in tongues in perfect harmony as if they were a practiced choir, and they sang the interpretation. Prophecy and visions were exercised. Angels appeared and were seen by some. A recording angel with partially unrolled parchment was seen.

On the next day the revelation of March 20 was accepted by unanimous vote, and its provisions were to be carried out. When the seven met to choose the twelve of the high council, Brother Briggs proposed that a rule of courtesy should be followed, and the oldest should be chosen to preside among the seven. This fell upon Z. H. Gurley, Sr., but because of his age and impairment of hearing, he refused the honor. Then H. H. Deam, being the next oldest, was nominated. He too refused, claiming that the rule of courtesy was only for temporary organization.

Now these seven men were apostles of the church. J. W. Briggs was then elected. Brother Gurley said concerning this, "We were told the Lord had withheld his Spirit from his elders to show them one thing: that had they succeeded in the beginning, they would have felt they had the wisdom to do all these things in their own strength." The Lord said, "You would all have apostatized. As it is, many were turned back, but sufficient will remain true and faithful, carrying out the work and the purposes of the kingdom of God."—Ibid., page 220.

THIS CONFERENCE ADOPTED some important principles. I want to mention a few of them very briefly.

First, the church had been disorganized or rejected as a church. I have already read to you from the Doctrine and Covenants that the people were rejected because of their failures, but this rejection was as a church and not as individuals.

Second, those individuals who were not rejected were entitled to divine light on the duties which they had to perform.

Third, they had a commandment to organize.

Fourth, discharging the duty of presidency was out of their reach and had to be left for one to whom the promise pertained. They had therefore one who was only to represent the presidency, not to act as president.

Fifth, in preparation for the coming of the prophet there had to be a calling to power of those who should ordain him.

Last, it was decided that the highest authority for the time should do the presiding and represent the presidency.

Now this is clear and concise. There is no assumption or false starts in this program. The light came to them as they moved out as far as they could. When they reached this point and got down humbly on their knees in fasting and prayer, more light came. That's the only way, brothers and sisters, that we appreciate light. God cannot give us a college education because of prayer. Neither can he give us a spiritual education because of prayer. We must move out and feel our need, appreciate what we have, and see how we can apply more light; then it comes to us.

SOME HAVE QUESTIONED the legal and spiritual validity of this Reorganization. They raise such questions as "Can a stream rise higher than its source? Can men holding the high priesthood ordain somebody to be president of the high priesthood?" The analogy there is not quite true. Men are called and ordained by the authority of the Holy Spirit in the ones who ordain them, and there is no higher priesthood than the Melchisedec priesthood. All the rest of these are appendages or parts of it. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained in May, 1829, to the Aaronic priesthood under the hands of an angel who identified himself as John the Baptist. All other ordinations in the church came from that authority. So you see, when we are challenged by others that the stream is rising higher than its source, it just isn't true. The source is God's commandment, and the organization is from heaven. Brother Gurley said that out of this experience they "learned what every Latter Day Saint must learn, that a command from God is authority to do all that he requires, be it more or less."

In the language of my text, "Is our authority from heaven or from men?" If you say from the evidence we have presented that God had more to do with it than men, for they could not have accomplished what was done in their own light, wisdom, and power, then I'm going to ask you another question: "What are you doing to meet your own responsibility in it?" God becomes our spiritual Father, and we are his children through obedience. Therefore the church, the instrument of the ordinances we obey, is our mother. God is our father; the church is our mother; and we should know something about our mother. It's not enough just to say that she is the bearer of precious gifts through the grace of Christ. She has traveled and brought forth power. "We are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation."

Jesus never attempted to do all that needed to be done so we might be righteous men and women. He has invited us to come into the fold, to become members of his church and kingdom here upon earth, and to let the church mother us. For as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, so we, too, should love and sustain her.

Is it of men or of God? That's the question. If you decide that God has in these last days manifested his power and light and wisdom and love in this marvelous way, act upon that light for your present happiness and eternal salvation.

Are you looking for truth, or looking for argument?

Unwillingness to affirm becomes in fact denial.

The world grows more mysterious the more we know about it.

God loves some men for the enemies they make.

The impure shall see all—save God.

Godly Leadership and Common Consent

By Thomas R. Beil

THE BUSINESS MEETING MINUTES of our branches many times reveal the quality of leadership among our people. Also revealed is our use or misuse of the principle of common consent. The following illustrates the point. The business meeting of a branch had progressed through the election of officers. The minutes of that meeting record that each and every name placed before the body was the nomination of the presiding officer. There were no other nominations. The minutes also record the statement made by the presiding officer as the election came to a close: "It's a good healthy sign when things run so smoothly!"

Is such a condition a good healthy sign or is it an indication of a dictatorial domination rather than godly leadership? Does it indicate that our people are "at ease in Zion" rather than diligently considering their God-given right of common consent?

As early as July, 1830, the Saints were enjoined to see that "all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith, for all things you shall receive by faith."¹ This instruction has been re-emphasized through the years. Even as late as 1947 the indication of revelation is that though counsel may be sought and given, this counsel is "not intended to dictate or to deny any man his agency."²

No one would seek to deny administrative authority the right of nomination, but all should defend the right of the people to do likewise. Administrative leadership should be expected to search out information and vital statistics for growth of the work, but it should also encourage a proper dissemination of such information to the Saints that they might be able to discuss and act intelligently upon issues presented and not upon the recommendation of leaders only.

The matter of common consent suggests people acting and interacting—people thinking and sharing thought—people deciding and standing by the decision of the majority. It has been defined as the right of people to approve or disapprove that which their leaders suggest. To accept this definition limits common consent to the leadership, and in effect limits the ability of the gospel we preach in its power to develop a people who know how to use agency.

Let us hasten to admit that, in most instances, where administrative leadership presents all issues to the business meeting, the right of people to nominate or initiate legislation has rarely, if ever, been denied; however, the attitude developed by this leadership is such that people sit quietly by, saying nothing for fear of what may take place after the meeting when life resumes its normal course. Another unfortunate fact is that our business meetings, instead of being attended by most of our people, are woefully lacking in support. One leader said, "If I do not name the officers and bring to the people the issues, how can I get my program across?" So the question arises, Whose program are we attempting to promote among the people? For leadership to admit the necessity of such methods is admission of lack of preparation for guiding people to the attainment of the abundant life.

It seems that the Lord, in presenting the principle of common consent, was (as he often is) far ahead of the thinking of the time in which it was presented. Today we speak of "group dynamics" and mean the force within the group which makes it successful or unsuccessful. Since "men are that they might have joy"³ it would seem the process of group dynamics in the church of Jesus Christ is that which would achieve joy among the Saints. Since the proper use of agency has so much to do with our ultimate happiness, God in his great wisdom has made available a method by which we may learn to choose (or use agency) wisely. That method is the plan of salvation, the fundamental principles of which end in eternal judgment "when we see things as he [God] sees them and evaluate our lives and those of others with his Spirit."⁴

SINCE MORE than self is involved, since all Saints are the "body of Christ," and that body, in order to work properly, must have unity among its members, God has suggested that the principle of "common consent . . . by much prayer and faith" is the means of arriving at a just and equitable solution of the problems along the way—and not alone the problems but also the discovery of living in joy together even before the problems arise.

How is this done? By what methods may we achieve a way of life in our branches which will employ the principle of common consent? The answer to these questions would lead to a lifelong study which would demand that volumes be written. Nevertheless, there are some simple steps which will help; these in the hands of the right people may start the process moving.

Primary requirement in this effort will be godly leadership. It requires a ministry composed of conscientious men who know that righteousness means "right relationships" as much as it means piety and sobriety. Leaders of group activity within the church (Zion's League, young adult work, women's department leaders, Mid-Spanner Groups, etc.) must recognize the great value of the human soul and wish to do everything possible to bring from the lives of people the potential God has placed within them. Godly leadership is constantly alert to the divine purposes as they relate to the bringing "to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

Such leadership will make use of methods, devices, and equipment through which the inner desires and hopes of the people might be made known. Such leadership will seek to discover the strengths and abilities within the group and then lead toward the shaping of a program which will utilize these in the unfolding of the fuller work of the kingdom of God on earth.

Most of the methods, devices, and equipment suggested are simple and readily understood. If used properly they will assist in fostering the growth of persons within the group and growth within the group itself. The following helps have been used with effectiveness:

Idea-sharing Sessions: If a group is fairly large it may be divided during the course of one or many of its sessions for the purpose of allowing everyone a chance to talk. Reporters for the smaller groups (after perhaps five to ten minutes of discussion in the small groups) bring the findings to the total group. This provides greater freedom and fuller participation.

Role-playing: This technique may be used effectively as a demonstration or presentation to a large meeting and may serve to present a problem before it becomes an item of general discussion. It may even be used to cause persons taking part to sense the feeling of certain situations where conflict may be present or might occur.

Check Lists: This device is seldom used, yet it is a valuable indication of unexpressed desires, especially in small groups where various alternatives may be studied. Check lists may be used to reveal desires of members, to indicate preferences, to enumerate abilities, to evaluate feelings and impressions of a meeting or a program. They may lead to healthy discussion of the varieties of responses to the program. They may also be used to record feelings in larger group meetings where opinions might otherwise be lost.

Group Observer: One person who understands group life may be placed within the group to help members become aware of what is happening. Thus, by recognizing the feelings and forces in their own group, members may better appreciate what happens in other groups to which they belong.

Perhaps the most important element in the use of such techniques is the attitude of the leader. His attitude is revealed in his action toward members and in what he believes about people. Godly leadership believes that the soul has real value, and that each is precious to the Heavenly Father. Godly leadership believes that each person wants to become more mature, responsible, and independent. Godly leadership will not frustrate the desires for growth in individuals but will try to create the conditions by which persons may become Saints of God in the fullest sense—growth “in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man.”

Godly leadership recognizes the authority of the group and accepts the group's decisions. Godly leadership does not feel it knows what is best for the group but rather respects the group in its right of sharing in decision-making. Godly leadership sees its most important task in the development of an atmosphere in which everyone can share and participate, expressing thought freely, and yet be accepted by the group. Godly leadership exercises prophetic insight through which it sees in people “the foundations of the kingdom of God . . . sees the towers of Zion arise in the righteousness of God's people,”⁵ and then works with the people in such a manner as to bring these potentials to full fruition.

Now the test of godly leadership is not alone belief in a set of principles. The test of such leadership is that, believing in such principles, a change in conduct will result. The leader then becomes a worker with people, promoting the “common consent in the church, by much prayer and by faith,” thus bringing to real life the process of theocratic-democracy—the ideal to which we all subscribe.

and Clark expedition. Among the various reports concerning the exploration is a journal written by Patrick Gass, who was a member of the group which Lewis and Clark led through the Louisiana Territory. Entitled “A Journal of the Travels of a Corps of Discovery,” it is a first edition, published in 1807.

Other items of value to students of history are the histories of counties in Iowa and Nebraska, accounts of the Pike expedition which resulted in the discovery of Pike's Peak, and a collection of emigrant guidebooks to the West.

Published in the early 1800's, the guidebooks termed that section of the United States now known as the Middle West as the West. “Steele's Guide to the Western States and California,” published in 1849, listed Independence as a starting point on the long trek to the Pacific coast.

Includes Indian Grammar

Volumes on the American Indian are among the unclassified material. An Indian grammar, published by the Presbyterian Missionary press in 1848, analyzes the language of the Iowa and Missouri Indians. Several books of this sort in the collection were used by missionaries who found that it was necessary to reduce Indian languages to written form in order to translate the Bible for various tribes.

Two valuable additions to the library shelves are more than 1,500 volumes of poetry, including the works of Hamlin Garland, Walt Whitman, and Emerson Hough. A total of 1,000 volumes on Lincoln will add substantially to the library's collection of works on the emancipator.

Sealock said the library staff has only started on the job of unpacking and classifying the books and pamphlets. He estimates that it will take more than a year to catalogue and index the wealth of material. It will be placed in the Missouri room of the library for reference use.

Add to Lore of West

“These books and pamphlets will not be merely museum items,” Sealock said. “Their true value lies in the fact that they are being added to material already in the library, making our research facilities more complete.”

Opportunity for the library to purchase part of the Fitzpatrick collection came through Malcolm Wyer, Denver librarian, who served at one time as adviser to the Linda Hall library trustees here. He was a personal friend of the owner for forty-five years and directed the sale of the books toward Kansas City groups, Sealock said.

The books and pamphlets were purchased by the library for $35,000 from the Fitzpatrick estate. Sealock and four librarians spent five days in Lincoln preparing them for shipment.

“The books stacked in Fitzpatrick's house in Lincoln were one of the most unusual sights I have seen in my life,” Sealock said.

When a heart attack brought death March 28, 1952, to the 84-year-old Fitzpatrick, he died on a small couch sandwiched between books in a room of a 13-room house in Lincoln—a house packed with what authorities had estimated at ninety tons of books. Entrance through the front door was impossible because it was jammed with books.

Toil to Sort Volumes

The Kansas City librarians worked in the unheated house and in a small 1-story house next door, which also was filled with books. Then they went to a farmhouse near Iowa City, Iowa, where the rest of the collection was kept. Many of the volumes not yet have been closely examined because they were hastily packed for shipment.

The remainder of the collection was purchased by Glenn, who acquired Fitzpatrick's large collection of scientific works for $53,000.

Fitzpatrick had a large collection in botany and ecology, including a full set of Linnaeus, the eighteenth century father of botany. Several of the books acquired by Glenn came originally from the library of Thomas Jefferson and from the Randolph family library in Virginia. Fitzpatrick traced his ancestry to both families.

The Lord's Prayer

From time to time the Herald has carried peculiar translations or versions of the Lord's Prayer as found in Matthew 6: 10-16. Bishop A. T. Trapp of England sends us this clipping from the Daily Express of a version written by the Reverend Walter Grainge White.

Our Heavenly Father! May your name be hallowed; your sway be owned; and your will be done; as in the heavens, so, also, upon earth. Give us “bread” for our needs from day to day. Forgive us our neglected duties as we have forgiven those who have neglected their duty to us; leading us out of temptation; delivering us from evil. Amen.

In commenting on the prayer the author said, “What could be more absurd than to ask God not to lead us into temptation; just as if he would do so. It is blasphemy.” C. B. H.

More Work at Minneapolis

While at Nauvoo, Hubert received a call from the Saints of the Minneapolis, Minnesota, Branch asking him to come back and help run their dining hall again at the State Fair. The Dillons were willing, so we all drove from Nauvoo to Minneapolis. This gave me a chance to visit with our daughter. She and I did not stay at the fairgrounds much. I was not feeling very well and was unable to help as most of the sisters did. Many turned out and helped vigorously, and the result was a profit larger than the year before. These two years reduced the debt decidedly. They were a noble band of workers, notably Sister L. L. DeLapp and Sister Lundeen. Many others also are worthy of mention.

We returned home with the Dillons, stopping overnight with my sister, Mrs. Frank Thompson. From there to Independence was not a long drive, but the Dillons remained overnight, and next morning they and Hubert left for Oklahoma City.

Brother Dillon took Hubert to El Reno soon after, and he started a tent meeting in the Fair addition. It lasted thirty days and resulted in thirty baptisms. About a month later he returned, preached thirty more sermons, and baptized thirty more people. This was a decided lift to the El Reno Branch, and just at that time old Brother J. M. Terry came from Independence and took charge of the work in that place. Things went well there as long as Brother Terry remained; this was not long as he was an old man and his strength was hardly sufficient for any appointment. When he left, Brother H. K. Rowland took charge of the branch and continued there for a number of years. His task was a hard one, as he lived eighteen miles away on a farm. With all his work on the farm, if it was possible to get over the roads, he was there every Sunday.

Through all those busy years it was a pleasure to Hubert to drive over the state, as he knew the Saints wherever they were located. He made a special effort to visit the homes of scattered members and helped them to keep the faith.

Detroit, Michigan

In 1929, when he was holding a meeting in Tulsa, Brother Gleazer succeeded in transferring him to Detroit. He went to Detroit in February, accompanying Brother Emmet Lancaster who had been sent to Detroit as pastor. Hubert was to be city missionary.

When they arrived in Detroit, they were given a reception by the Saints. There was a large crowd, and the people all were very kind in their greetings to the new men. At this time the church was stressing the idea of "completing the family circle." This was the sort of work Hubert had always been doing, and he entered into it with great zeal and good success. After getting started, and finding where people lived, he visited days and evenings completing many family circles. Baptismal services were held every Sunday. The four men who assisted in this visiting were Blakeslee Smith, L. J. Richards, Wilbert Richards, and A. E. Boos. Brother Gleazer suggested that he appoint Blakeslee Smith to do the baptizing for a certain length of time, to give him a start in his missionary work. This he did, until he had baptized forty-one. Hubert's long years of experience in missionary work had taught him the art of getting decisions from those who believed but procrastinated. Most of the baptisms came from that kind of people, most often the father of a church family or the husband of a woman who was a member.

Missionary Helps

At first he had no means of transportation of his own. All his helpers had cars, and he depended on them. Later a car was provided. Brother Richard Hartnell gave him $50.00 to buy books for missionary use. This was a great help. He was called to go all over the city to administer to the sick. This brought many into the church, because it gave him an opportunity to talk to families. By the end of his first six months in Detroit, he had a missionary campaign under way that reaped a great harvest.

In May, 1929, Brother Lancaster and Hubert drove to Tulsa and Independence, taking Sister Helen Lancaster and me to Detroit with them when they returned. After that they felt more at home in the great city. A very busy summer followed, as interest increased in various parts of the city. There was always something to do, somewhere the elders needed to go.

Immediately after the Christmas celebration, we started for Independence. When the holidays were over Hubert went back to Detroit, while I remained in Independence to make preparation for General Conference in April, 1930.

Upon Hubert's return—as he now had his own means of transportation—he was busier than ever. If anyone has the idea that a missionary in a city has an easy time, that person should have followed Hubert around Detroit. He would come in at night very tired. After eating, and possibly resting a few minutes, one of his helpers would call for him to accompany him on some mission. It had to be very stormy indeed if they were not all visiting somewhere every evening.

By Alice Montague Case

One of the regrettable things of the first part of his stay in Detroit was the lack of interest shown in the Sunday evening attendance at Central Church. At that time Hubert was much interested in a series of articles written by Elbert Smith dramatizing church history. He suggested the branch take up the idea and present those short dramas at the Sunday evening services. The people were enthusiastic about it, and from the very first night, the historical sketches were a great success, and the church was filled to overflowing. Hubert followed them with sermonettes. It was really a thrill to see those dramas enacted. It affected the people to the point of shedding tears, even though the actors were only amateurs.

Administrations

Hubert was called one day to Brother A. E. Boos's home to administer to Sister Boos. I went with him, and we found her suffering from an infected jaw where a tooth had been removed. Her jaw was so swollen that she could not speak. Hubert administered to her, and in a few moments she said, "Look, the swelling is going down!" It was, and in a short time her jaw was reduced almost to normal.

At another time he was called to Grace Hospital to administer to two children who had polio. They had been moved into the death ward. Brother Lancaster was with him, and the nurse said, as she led them to the children, "They are dying." But after receiving administration, these two children were soon removed from the ward; both made speedy recoveries and had no bad after effects so common to this dread disease.

The Incident of the Potatoes

Not long after that, a woman invited Hubert to go to her house and eat dinner; she and her family did not belong to the church and wanted to discuss it. Hubert told her he would, but when he got ready to go, he found he had to preach at River Rouge after teaching his church school class. This was ten miles away. He asked Brother Boos to drive, and his wife went with them. Hubert hesitated to take both of them where only he was invited to eat with the people, but he needed the transportation so it worked out that all three went.

When they arrived at the home, they found a very small house. Hubert apologized for bringing extra guests, but the people said it was all right. The lunch was nearly ready when they arrived. There was little to eat, and the potatoes seemed not much larger than walnuts. There were so few on the plate that each person took but one apiece of those tiny potatoes. Hubert talked to the people about the church while they ate. Sister Boos said the woman never went to the kitchen to get more potatoes, yet she passed the plate again and it was heaping full. The next time they each took two potatoes. There was little other food on the table so she passed the potatoes a third time, and again they all took some. When they had finished eating, Hubert said, "I have a baptismal service at three o'clock and we have only a little while to visit, so let's don't take any time for doing dishes."

They all sat down and he told them the story of the Restoration and a number of his missionary experiences. When they got ready to go he apologized again for bringing company. The woman said, "Don't apologize again for bringing company. Look at that table. There is more food there than we had to start with, and if you had not blessed that food, there would not have been enough to go around."

It was quite a little time after that before Hubert baptized those young people because the man was an infidel and so was his father; they wanted to read the books. Hubert left The Call at Evening with them, and they got other books to read. When Hubert was transferred from Detroit to central Michigan, they drove to Bay City—over one hundred miles away when the thermometer stood at 20 below zero to be baptized. Frank Sheufelt, the man, was ordained an elder later and is one of the fine workers in a Detroit congregation today.

Healed of Cancer

In the fall of 1930 Sister Floyd Moore was very ill and was taken to the hospital. The doctors pronounced her disease cancer of the intestines and said she could live but a few days. She wanted to see her children, and the doctors said she might as well be taken home as she was beyond all medical help.

After she was taken home Hubert and Brother George Booth administered to her. Just before the administration her sister said, "I know you can be healed! I was healed of a broken neck, and I am not a member of the church!" That administration was one of the greatest manifestations of power Hubert had ever witnessed.

About two hours later, Brother Moore called for them to come again. Hubert was on the other side of the city, so Brother Booth went alone. He administered to her again, and she was healed. All her symptoms immediately disappeared, and the next day she was able to be up. The specialist had asked if she were alive the next morning to let him know. When he came and saw her moving around without pain, he asked, "How do you feel?" She replied that she felt perfectly well. He asked what had happened and when she told him he said, "A greater physician than man has healed you. You are well."

Further Work in Detroit

The missionary work went on with as much interest and vigor throughout the winter as had ever been known during his stay in Detroit. He enjoyed his work, and although there were many hindrances, the branch grew. During the last year, he taught a Doctrine and Covenants class at Central Church which he greatly enjoyed. The average attendance at this class was sixty. Baptisms continued to be frequent as long as Hubert worked in Detroit. He received word that spring that he was to be transferred to the Central District in Michigan.

After a short rest at home with me and our daughter, Dorothy—who, with her family, was with us at that time—he returned to Bay City, Michigan, which was in his mission. He made his home at Brother E. S. White's. He had been appointed district president, so he had to drive a great deal. Brother White took him in his car wherever he wished to go, until Hubert bought a used car

Converting a Bootlegger

Hubert made his headquarters in Bay City with Brother E. S. White for about three years. During that time he was pastor of the branch and also served in district work. This is one of the earliest experiences of appointee pastors. A bootlegger lived next door to the church in Bay City. He had a beautiful flower garden, and Hubert used to talk with him about his flowers. One day the man complained to Brother White that somebody had reported him to the police. He thought it was Hubert, but Brother White said, "It couldn't have been, because he doesn't know about your bootlegging. I can tell you who did report you, though—it was the preacher across the road on the other side of our church." That made the man feel kindly toward Hubert, and it was not long until he started coming to church. He quit his bootlegging and, with his family, was baptized. The last Hubert heard of him he was leading the branch orchestra.

An Accident

In 1933, the second year of Hubert's stay in central Michigan, he was persuaded by Brother White and others to accompany them to Lansing to attend a prohibition convention. The car in which Hubert rode was driven by a fifteen-year-old boy who insisted on going seventy miles an hour. The car was old, and Hubert talked to the boy, trying to persuade him to slow down but to no avail. On their return trip, while driving at full speed the boy lost control of the car; it went into a creek over a high bank. All six of the occupants went out through the top of the car. Hubert fell with his head in the creek, absolutely insensible from the shock.

Some farmers living near hurried to the scene and dragged him up against the bank. They noticed that the scalp was torn from his head so that it hung down over his ear. They pulled the scalp in place as well as they could and tried to hold it there, plastering a handful of burdock burs on his head. They helped the others who needed help, then carried Hubert to the nearest farmhouse and laid him on a cot. They then phoned to Saginaw, which was the nearest town having a hospital, to send an ambulance. It was twenty-three miles away. After quite a long wait, while he continued to lie unconscious, the ambulance arrived. The engine developed trouble, and attendants had to phone and wait for another ambulance. Finally he was taken to the hospital, and the doctors took charge. He knew nothing until the following morning, when he opened his eyes and saw a doctor standing by him.

He asked, "What happened to me?" The doctor answered, "The Indians got hold of you and scalped you." "Oh, no," Hubert answered, "Indians don't scalp anyone nowadays. The white people do that!"

The doctor turned to the nurse and said, "Give this man something to eat." Hubert was in the hospital only one week. On that first day he wrote me a card telling me he had been in an accident, but making light of it. I did not dream it was such a bad injury until he came home soon afterward.

Race Track Reunion

By Mrs. Eugene Gamet

THE PHONE RANG as I was in the midst of frying doughnuts, and I wondered why phones always ring when it seems impossible to answer.

"Hello, hello. . . . Yes, this is Gunsolley Hall, Lamoni, Iowa, Mrs. Gamet speaking."

"Warrensburg, Missouri, calling."

"Is that you, Mother? Can you and Dad be ready Friday morning for a trip through the Black Hills with us?"

Our son-in-law, Bishop Willard Becker, was going as an instructor to the Race Track Reunion in Montana. We hurriedly packed our bags and were on our way early Friday morning. With Willard and Doris we enjoyed everything we saw our first day, stopping at Valentine, Nebraska, for the night.

The next morning we started for the Black Hills, where Mr. Gamet and I lived the first year after we were married. It took me some time to get used to the mountains; we drove around curves, first a long ways up and then a long ways down. When I looked out the car window down the mountainsides I sometimes would have to close my eyes. But of course when I did that I missed seeing the beauty of the scenery.

We spent a little time in Hot Springs, South Dakota, where we lived when our son, the present Dr. Elmo Gamet, was born. We were amazed how everything had changed in forty-two years.

We drove on to Mt. Rushmore, and when we reached the peak and looked across at the faces, I felt a reverence in my heart for the men who left their work at the top of the mountain.

Upon leaving the hills we saw a herd of buffalo and several tame burros. The burros stopped the car, looking for something to eat. Saturday noon, we reached Laurel, Montana. We were delighted to be making such good time. When we came back to the car after lunch we found it would not start, and every garage was closed in the city at noon. Willard finally located some mechanics who said they would try to repair the car. They worked all afternoon and they could not get it running so Willard took a train on to Deer Lodge, as he was the speaker in the morning.

Mrs. Becker, Mr. Gamet, and I got rooms at a hotel in Laurel until Tuesday noon. (I am still in doubt about those mechanics taking three days to repair the car.) Finally the car was ready and we started on our way.

AROUND SIX O'CLOCK we arrived at Race Track. The Saints own the grounds, two large buildings, and a few smaller ones for campers' use. Tents are available also. One of the large buildings is a chapel; the other is a dining hall. On one end of the chapel are four rooms, which the Saints had furnished for Apostle Paul Hanson; Patriarch and Sister Lundeen; Sister Alice Burgess, her daughter, Florence, and children; Bishop and Mrs. Becker; Mr. Gamet and me.

The Saints had driven miles to be at this reunion where they could worship and play together. When they gathered in the dining hall around the tables they seemed to be one big family. When time came for classes or worship, everyone was in his place ready to listen.

One afternoon we went up in the mountains to Lake Rock Creek in the heart of the Rockies. The young people went swimming and boating; the men played horseshoe; the rest visited and did as they chose. Before darkness came, we had a wiener roast; we returned to camp a bit weary but happy because we were experiencing such a friendly association.

AS I SAT among these Saints on the banks of the lake, surrounded by mountains, I felt as if we had drawn apart from the world for a while. This is an artificial lake owned by a rancher. Several summer cottages are in the pines along the shores. Irrigation makes the valley beautiful; grain and potatoes are the principle crops produced. A few of the Saints had cottages, and we were invited to spend some time in one of the cottages, but Willard felt the need of returning home.

We enjoyed our week with these Saints, and I felt I understood a little more about God at the end of it. I am sure he is mindful of his people wherever they are.

On our way home we drove through Yellowstone National Park, seeing the many wonders of nature. After leaving the mountains, I felt I had been near to God, for only he could make the mountains, rocks, trees, and waterfalls as beautiful as they are.

These words seem to fit my memory of Race Track Reunion and our trip:

O God, how wonderful thou art,
On the mountain heights, the plains, or the seas,
O God, our Father, how wonderful.

Spiritual Bargains for Kingdom-building

By Helen A. Mills

TODAY we observe in our newspapers, on radio, and television offers of many bargains. But frequently we are unaware of the spiritual bargains that are available in our church life. The bargains we are looking for are there, but we have to search for them.

Clearance sales are, perhaps, the most popular in the business world. In the kingdom-building there is also a clearance, in a sense, for we are told, "God will not always strive with man." So we have to see the need for spiritual shopping. If we find no need for increasing our ability and seeking the places available to serve, these spiritual bargains will not be available to us always.

It is with a wonderful feeling of love toward our homes and dear ones that we shop for untold bargains to make their physical lives more pleasant. So attitude is the first material for which we shop. As in looking for quality in materials for everyday life is necessary, so also have we to search for grades of quality in the intangibles. There is the attitude of indifference, and of lukewarm tolerance. But if we're searching for first grade quality, the top attitude is love. The fruits of the spirit, we're told, are love, joy, meekness, but unless we have charity, these will avail us nothing. When we know of the character material available, we start shopping for opportunities to learn how to serve.

We are offered classes that will teach us how better to fit ourselves for service in the business world. Various institutes are conducted in phases of teaching, selling, etc. The kingdom-building program offers no less. We have such teachers as Thelona D. Stevens, Chris B. Harts-horn, and Roy Chevillie to help us. There is no fee, only the cost of material needed. But we must make ourselves available. We must choose with a prayerful heart how we can better serve and build.

There's no room for those who say, "I don't have any opportunity to serve," or, "I can't do anything; I just listen." We need the listener, but listeners also must seek to learn how to serve in the building of the kingdom, for it's "everybody's business." Walter Winchell once made this remark, "You need help to hit the top, but you can hit the bottom alone."

With our every desire to learn how and where to serve, there's a "Silent Partner" to help us along the way. Let's start a spiritual shopping tour today. Let's seek ways to become better fitted to serve in this kingdom-building here on earth.

Remember Lot's Wife

JESUS TRIED TO IMPRESS his listeners with the importance of building the kingdom of God.

"Remember Lot's wife . . . remember Lot's wife" kept running through my mind after I returned from Racine Reunion last summer. What did those attending the reunion and the experience of Lot's wife have in common? Lot's wife was ministered to by angels and immediately ignored their instruction. Have we that were privileged to sit and receive instruction from those inspired to teach forgotten their instruction? Have we forgotten the services when the Spirit of God urged us to make resolutions to serve better? Have we forgotten the times the Lord spoke through his servants, blessing the people and telling them the good things he has in store for them if obedient?

Now that we are back in our old surroundings perhaps our part in helping to build the kingdom doesn't seem so important; perhaps, like Lot's wife, we are looking back and giving our time to activities that are not of kingdom-building quality. In this day of preparation for Christ's coming we are not willing to disassociate ourselves from those things that hinder our growth and development to become more Christlike. The spiritual enlightenment we received at reunion has faded.

The instruction Jesus gave the people when he was here teaching them seems to be applicable here. He said, "Go ye into your homes, and ponder upon the things I have said, and ask of the Father in my name, that ye may understand, and prepare your minds for the morrow, and I will come unto you again."—III Nephi 8: 3.

Now we have the opportunity to ponder upon the things that were given last year and also to prepare our minds for the next reunion. By daily prayer and study and by striving to serve our fellow-men we can be better prepared to receive and understand the many good things that will be there for us. Our Heavenly Father has much to give if we will make preparation to receive it. Of course we're not afraid of being turned to a pillar of salt as was Lot's wife; but when we receive so freely from God, yet fail to serve and share, we die spiritually and fail in our stewardship. We fail to be in tune with Deity, and the kingdom-building instructions we received seem to be of little importance to us.

LOLA MCCOLLAM

Jerry Sutton

The Conversion of Jerry Sutton

By Blair McClain

Richard Booth

YOUNG PEOPLE who attended camp at Blue Water Reunion grounds near Lexington, Michigan, July 6 to 13 last year will beyond a doubt carry with them through the years many of the fine experiences they enjoyed there. Among the outstanding contributions made was that of seventeen-year-old Jerry Sutton from Carleton, Michigan, a non-member. He and his church friend, Richard Booth, were sponsored by the Order of Elks and the Carleton Rotary Club to attend the youth camp the week before in Lansing at Wolverine Boys' State, where they became close friends. A few days before camp, Richard—not wanting to go to youth camp alone—called on Jerry who lives about a mile from town; Jerry readily consented to go with him. The following are statements made by these two young men at a Wednesday evening prayer service just after their return.

Jerry Sutton's Testimony

When Dick and I left Carleton on Sunday afternoon for youth camp, all I thought about was having a good time. We were just going camping. I asked a few questions and knew we were on our way to the Blue Water Reunion grounds. When we arrived and stepped out of the car I met two people, Bob Flanders and John Rogers. They were very friendly and made me feel at home. By Monday night I knew nearly everyone on the grounds. The morning worship was wonderful and the classwork was interesting; I was eager and willing to learn about the church. It's fun to be with a bunch of girls and boys, doing dishes, singing, and having fun together. At our campfires I don't know how we could have been nearer to God, because it seemed He came and sat in our midst. I think everyone was conscious of this. I am not a member of the Reorganized Church, but I learned a lot the last five days at youth camp. I had never met Ned Jacobson, who is the professor of engineering at Graceland College, but in our classwork I learned to love him. He is a great teacher and was able to direct my mind into channels of thought that were new and interesting. It will take me a long time to absorb what he said, but I know when I think of youth camp I will remember his teaching; many of the things he said will stay with me always. I think he is one of the finest persons I have ever met. There were a lot of other nice people too; our instructors were wonderful. They were not on a vacation; they were there without pay, but I know they received many blessings as compensation.

In the afternoon we would have sports and then go swimming in Lake Huron. We were in the center of a "green cathedral" in God's out-of-doors. He was always close to us; his trees, bushes, and flowers made me conscious of something I cannot express in words. I think I will remember it all my life.

At the Saturday night campfire we were asked what we thought of youth camp. Young people cried, and some told of how near they came to missing it. They had learned to love this place and each other with all their heart, because God was there. He had walked and talked with them. My eyes were opened in a way they had never been before. Many truths were revealed to me. When you sit beside people you have learned to love and they have taught you the things you want to know, you don't forget. I think I have had my share of experiences, but this week at youth camp has been the most outstanding of them all.

Sunday morning there was Communion followed by a prayer service; during this service I believe I was most deeply touched. I wanted to bear my testimony with the others so I stood up and spoke, but I had more to say that I couldn't put into words. It was in my heart and I know God knew what I was trying to say.

If you have children, don't keep them away from youth camp; they will learn something there that will be with them all their lives. A number of young people have written in my camp book; one said, "Never smash the picture I have of you in my mind and in my heart. I am glad you could join us at youth camp and do your part in this wonderful work. I hope you can come to our reunion and youth camp next year." The things the young people wrote in my book mean much to me. When the time came to break camp all of us cried; we didn't want to leave because there our hearts and souls had been woven together into a bond of Christian fellowship. Let your children go to youth camp where they will learn more about Christ and walk with him forever.

Richard Booth's Testimony

Jerry didn't leave much for me to say. Youth camp meant much to me, and I shall never forget it. The men Jerry referred to and others were a real challenge; I want to pattern my life after them. One of the high points was the fireside chats presented by Ned Jacobson; he led us deep into the field of neutrons and protons. I couldn't keep up with him, but as a result of his teachings I have a great deal of respect for him and his ideals.

Monday afternoon when Art Karpeles asked me to give a talk at fireside, I wondered what I would say. When evening came I had pretty well in mind what it would be. Then I listened to a girl give her talk, and when I stood up, I didn't say at all the things I had planned on, but the words came easily; I had no trouble at all.

When you are out there with a group of young people and yet alone, knowing you are an individual with just a fire or embers to look into, you feel close to God. The Saturday night campfire was outstanding, as one by one the young people stood and gave expression of what youth camp meant to them. Their ideas about youth camp were different, but when you put them all together it made a perfect picture.

The Sunday morning Communion and prayer service was outstanding; I shall never forget it. There were very few who didn't take part. When the time came to separate, there were some to whom I had become so attached that I couldn't say good-bye; I didn't want to leave. When I stop and think how near I came to missing youth camp it makes me shudder; I won't miss any camps in the future if I can possibly arrange to go. I know that everyone who attends will receive something he will carry with him all his life. This has been a most wonderful experience. I thought Boys' State was great, but at youth camp we were with a completely different group of people. Their thoughts and ideals are on a higher standard. Our counselors gave up a lot to be with us, but I know they would gladly come again. This, too, is a challenge to me.

ALTHOUGH Jerry was not a member of the church he took an active part in the various services and once he worked until nearly 3:00 a.m. on the camp paper. After he had left youth camp he was asked if he planned to attend reunion, and his answer was, "If I can earn money enough to go, nothing can keep me away." He was given employment for this purpose, and his experiences at Blue Water Reunion were a repetition of what he experienced at youth camp. His willingness to learn and his ability to remember were outstanding. His sincerity gave him a warm place in the hearts of all the people, young and old. As the week went on no one knew exactly what was in Jerry's heart, though it was very evident the good Spirit was working with him. On Saturday evening alone in his tent he prayed for a long time, wrestling through clouds of confusion. Then he prayed again for light and understanding. He thought of his parents—members of another church; they had been kind to him, and he didn't want to hurt them, yet he stood at the crossroads; a decision must be made. Finally alone—and yet not alone—he won the initial step in becoming a covenant child of God; when he emerged from the tent, the weight of decision had been lifted from his shoulders, and he almost ran until he found

Bob Flanders. He put his arms around Bob, then Vincent Harrison, who was to be his pastor, telling them of his decision. A little later Jerry, Richard, and Bud Heaviland walked into the cottage occupied by Brother and Sister George Booth; they were all smiling. Jerry kissed Sister Booth and called her mother. Then turning to the bed where Brother Booth had already retired, he put his arms around him and said, "I am going to be baptized tomorrow." Later he called his parents, who gave their consent for his baptism. Then the three boys sang, "Lord, Lord, Lord, you sure have been good to me."

On Sunday morning Jerry bore his testimony and told a large group of young people that he was going to be baptized. While he was talking, several of the young people stood to bear their testimonies. Bob Flanders baptized Jerry in the blue water of Lake Huron that afternoon.

Great Things Are Simple

Professor Albert Einstein is said to have labored more than thirty years on his Unified Field Theory. The heart of that work can be expressed in about two lines of print—mathematical equations—no more than two such lines as we have here. Yet they combine the laws of light, energy, and gravitation in a relationship no other philosopher or scientist has ever approached. After thirty-five years, he is still working, checking to see if they are true. His usual scientific equipment is a pad of paper and a pencil; his best laboratory, his magnificent mind. It was his recommendation that persuaded President Roosevelt to undertake the Manhattan Project that resulted in the atom bomb at a time when other nations were already working on it. His great thoughts have their setting in a simple, kindly life. L. J. L.

New Horizons

Question Time

Question:

Whom should we go out to convert or teach the gospel to—the better class or down-and-out sinners?

Colorado

L. M. O.

Answer:

The church has as its task the fulfilling of a specific commission. That commission is caught up in the command of Jesus: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." As long as we remember this we shall keep alive the spirit of the Latter Day work.

We should go out and convert or teach the gospel to all who are willing to hear the message whether they be of the "better class" or "the down-and-out sinner," and then expect that those who hear shall be willing to accept the responsibilities and duties required by membership in the church. There is only one code of righteousness in the kingdom of God, and those who desire salvation in that kingdom must meet the demands of that level of righteousness. The man at the lower levels of living must come up higher, and the man at the exalted levels must humble himself to meet the demands of the kingdom way of life.

However, there are situations where due caution must be exercised in receiving people into membership in the church. In case of wives or children, the husband or parents' consent must be first obtained (D. and C. 111:4). Those members who are divorced for adultery should not be received if they have remarried; or if not, evidence of repentance is demanded (Ibid., 42:20).

GLEN H. JOHNSON

Question:

I am in doubt whether there is scriptural authority for the blessing of oil for use in administration of the sick, and I hesitate to do anything without proper authority.

Missouri

Elder X

Answer:

There are a number of scriptural citations about the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick: Mark 6:7; Luke 13:13; Mark 16:19; Luke 4:40;

Mormon 4:87; D. and C. 42:12. James 5:14, 15 (see also Mark 6:14, I.V.), makes reference to the use of oil. It is as follows:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

Evidently this from James (fifth chapter) has been held to be sufficient authority for the practice which has existed in our church from the beginning. Since the Inspired Version has it the same as above quoted from James, the implication is that the reading is correct.

We respect you for your desire to keep within the law. That is commendable; but in our opinion there must be virtue in using the oil, and since it is a holy rite or ordinance, we see no objection but much virtue in blessing the oil, since by so doing the oil is apt to be kept exclusively for administration. It has the support of precedent throughout a hundred and twenty years, and all the men we have known among the priesthood have accepted the practice.

Question:

Does our church approve the giving of door and consolation prizes at church suppers or dinners in our church?

Arizona

E. K. T.

Answer:

Considering our feeling as a church toward speculation and gambling, which are closely related, I would say it is hardly in the interests of a good appearance to give such prizes. While the amounts are usually small and the purpose somewhat different from the major forms of gambling, still the element of chance is dominant as it is in gambling. It would seem to be a poor practice from the point of view of the church in its relationship to the community.

WARD A. HOUGAS

Question:

Please explain Luke 14:26. Is it a mistake? Why does it say a man should "hate" anyone?

Texas

D. V.

Answer:

The Scripture referred to in the question above quotes Jesus as saying:

If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.

And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.—Luke 14:26, 27.

The intent of Jesus in this statement may be better understood when considered in connection with the following statement recorded in Matthew 10:37, 38:

He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

It seems quite evident that the negative approach given in Luke and translated as "hate" is stated in a positive manner by Matthew as "loveth . . . more."

It is of interest to note that the same idiom translated as "hate" in Luke 14:26 is similarly used in the Hebrew Talmud where it is said of handsome Rabbis that "if they hated their beauty they would be more learned." In other words, if they thought less of their personal appearance they would be better scholars.

We feel justified therefore in assuming that the Scripture called in question does not mean that a disciple's relatives are to be hated by him in the sense that we commonly use the term "hate," but rather that they must take second place in his regard. Jesus was warning his followers that the call to discipleship is absolute. It cannot be subordinate to any other loyalty or even to life itself.

When one reads the total statement made in Luke 14:25-33, one sees Jesus looking at the multitude, many of whom had not as yet sensed the full meaning or cost of discipleship in such a great calling. To these "fair-weather friends" he was saying in substance, "This is a big job. You had better count the cost now, because if you are not ready to give me your highest loyalty and place the building of the kingdom of God above everything else, you are not ready to be my disciples." In Appreciation of the Sanitarium

The beautiful buildings and landscaped grounds of the Sanitarium held little meaning for me until the last two weeks in March when I was a patient there. From now on Sanitarium Day will hold more significance for me because I shall know my contribution is helping to carry on a great cause. One can sense the presence of God's Spirit within its walls, and those who serve the patients seem to want to do all in their power to bring comfort and healing. I thoroughly enjoyed the visits of Chaplain Sheehy, and I have only the deepest respect for and confidence in Dr. Grabske.

I am very grateful for the Saints of Independence who visited me while I was hospitalized. I returned to my home feeling that the church is making splendid progress. My faith has been strengthened, and I am determined to live more worthy of membership in the church than ever before.

Grateful for the "Herald"

I love to read the letters in the Herald, and I also enjoy the other articles and sermons. I read and reread Lois Moore's "Our Heritage of Spiritual Power," and I thought Ron Kirlin's article was very fine. I am seventy-seven years old and my eyes are not as good as they were when I was younger, but I am thankful I am still able to read.

I pray not for greatness, wealth, or freedom from care, but that I may bring other souls to Christ.

Note of Thanks

I want to thank all the Saints who remembered me in prayer and fasting during my recent operation. I also appreciate the many cards and letters I received. It is impossible for me to answer them all personally, but I want those who wrote to know that God did bless me. The operation was very successful, and I am again able to attend church and perform my daily tasks.

For More Worshipful Services

No matter where you attend services, you usually find people who arrive early, others on time, and others late. My arrival depends on the transportation of various friends, and so is dictated by their timing. I have attended branches where the early arrivals enter into a song service. I approve of this, because the songs I had known since childhood brought pleasant memories and made me grateful that I had been a part of the church for so long. The newer hymns with which I was not so familiar I could listen to appreciatively while others sang and thus get in a receptive mood for the service to follow.

I find the atmosphere which helps me to be most responsive to the message is one of quiet orderliness beautified by organ music. Such a setting makes me glad I am in church; I can meditate or offer a silent prayer and thus be ready for the service when it begins.

I have always looked on church as being the house of the Lord, and I have felt reverence for it. For me attending church isn't just "something to go through with and have over." I like to leave with enough inspiration to guide me through my everyday life in the week to come.

There is such a short span of time being given to God, I think we should make it as beautiful and significant as possible.

Grateful for Prayers

I want my friends, especially those in Grand Rapids, to know how much I have appreciated their prayers. I have undergone major surgery three times in the past two years (twice in less than six months) and before the last operation I needed courage to endure the ordeal that faced me. I received administration at the April Communion service, and while the elders had their hands on my head I felt God's Spirit fill my whole being. I entered the hospital the following week and was released ten days later. The surgeon said I had come through very well. I am happy to be home again and on the road to recovery.

I pray that God may bless others as he has me.

Memories of Liberty Street Church

(Note: Old Liberty Street Church in Independence has been torn down to make way for the widening of Truman Road. The writer of this letter, like many other people who have worshiped in this building, felt pangs of nostalgia when the last service was held there. A new church is being constructed on Liberty Street not far from the site of the old one.)

On Sunday, April 26, the last meeting was held in the old Liberty Street Church.

Saturday the men worked all day taking things that could be moved, and Sunday morning the church was so bare it made me feel lonely. It was like an old lady who had almost lived out her life—run down and a little dirty.

As I looked around, I wondered what they would say if suddenly the walls and pews were to start talking. There have been weddings with happy people; there have been funerals with people sad, feeling as if their worlds had ended; there have been wonderful prayer meetings where God's Spirit was present.

To me it has been the only church home I've known since I was baptized seven years ago. It was not a new church, all shining and clean, but there I found the Spirit of my Savior, and it became very dear to me; also, I learned to love my brothers and sisters and always found joy in seeing them.

Last night when services were over, people stood around as if they hated to leave. After I was outside I looked at the beautiful stained glass windows; never before did they look so beautiful and shine so brightly. There were tears in my eyes and a lump in my throat because I felt I was losing an old friend.

Now that it is torn down I wonder where the bricks and lumber will go, and what they will be used for. I hope somehow that they will take some of the spirit and love that has been felt in Liberty Street Church and bring happiness wherever they are used.

I'm sure our new church will be nice. The love of Christ and the love we have for each other made old Liberty Street a friendly place, and the new church will be the same. May we always keep it that way.

Fifty-first Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. W. A. Damon of the Cincinnati, Ohio, Branch observed their fifty-first wedding anniversary on Monday, April 2. They were married at Kenton, Kentucky, in 1902. They have three sons: George A. of Independence, Kentucky; Paul A. of Kenton, Kentucky; and Edwin G. of Covington, Kentucky; a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Jackson of Covington; eleven grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Franklin Eyman of Cedar Vale, Kansas, observed their golden wedding anniversary on March 29 by holding open house at their home. They were married on March 25, 1903, in Lakin, Kansas. They have been members of the Reorganized Church since August 4, 1921. Their children are Mrs. Ralph Hardie of Chase, Kansas, and Mrs. F. A. Gasser of Arkansas City, Kansas. They also have a foster son, Harlan M. Skidmore; a granddaughter; three grandsons; and a foster granddaughter.

Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Guy and Jennie Barr Randall, both formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, and now living at R. R. 2, Downer Addition, Sheridan, Wyoming, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary on April 22, 1953. They are favorably remembered by old-time citizens of Lamoni and vicinity.

Fortieth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Mayne of Independence, Missouri, held open house at their home on March 19 to celebrate their fortieth wedding anniversary. They were married March 19, 1913, in Independence. Both are members of the Reorganized Church, and Mr. Mayne has been an employee of the Sanitarium for the past twenty-six years.

Church Men in the News

Roy Delbert Johnston

We have been very proud of you in your high position. On many occasions you have upheld the honor and dignity of your office. We are none the less proud of you now.

Brother Johnston was born in Kent County in 1894 and was baptized May 4, 1941. He is an elder and faithful in his support of the Bothwell Branch. He teaches the young adult class.

In 1916 he married Muriel Sumner; they have five children, three boys and two girls, all married. He was discharged from the Canadian Army in 1918 and then started to work for Brother S. A. Johnston in a flour and feed mill at Bothwell. After six years the business was sold, but Brother Delbert Johnston has continued to work for the new owners and has been a foreman since that time.

"I have been keenly interested in community life," he states, "the responsibility of everyone to the place in which he lives, and the moral uplift of its citizens. I am humbly grateful to the citizens of Bothwell for the honor shown me upon my retirement from municipal life."

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your report brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your reports, we hope you will understand.

Five Baptized in Branch

FOREST GROVE, OREGON.—The following people were baptized and confirmed on March 29: Larry Wayne Anderson, Gary Dean Wick, Ida May Wolford, and Pearl Illman, baptized by Elder Ray Huggett; and Paul Edward Blake, baptized by Melvin D. Blake.

Missionary James Kemp held a series of meetings March 29-April 5. His opening sermon was in music. Brother Kemp sang and was accompanied on the piano by his wife.—Reported by MRS. H. B. ANDERSON

Ordination Service Held

DINUBA, CALIFORNIA.—Elder David C. Elliott, pastor of the Modesto Branch, met with the group for the Easter Communion service, and gave the Communion address.

At this service Elmer C. Fowler was ordained to the office of teacher by Elders G. E. McGoon and Vernon Cline.

Others of the priesthood who have visited and preached are Elder Clinton Saxton, missionary pastor of this district; Elder A. O. Woods of Fresno; Elder Erwin Fields, pastor of the San Leandro Branch; Elder Eber Peachen of Bakersfield; Elder John Moffett and Sister Moffett of Modesto. Brother Moffett occupied the morning hour after which the Saints assembled in the women's club house for a picnic luncheon.

At two o'clock in the afternoon Sister Moffett spoke to the women's group at the church.—Reported by LULA F. PARK

Branch Building Fund Growing

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO.—The pastor of the branch is Harold Schneebeck; assistant pastor, Ralph Sivets; and counselors, J. D. Curtis and Ray Ebling. Pat Darnell is the music director, and the women of the branch made choir robes which were worn for the first time on Easter morning.

Sister W. W. Poe and Sister Dorothy Nell Brown are leaders of the women's groups. Sister Poe's group meets twice a month and is studying "Women's Stewardship Responsibilities." Sister Brown's group is studying the Book of Mormon.

The church is being redecorated and the building fund is growing.

Series Held

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, CANADA.—Elder William McMurray of Guelph, Ontario, held a series of meetings at the branch. Extra chairs were obtained and the mission hall was filled to capacity. Follow-up services are planned.—Reported by NORA GLOYERS

Church Building Repaired

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN.—District President and Mrs. John W. Blackstock of Prudenville visited the branch March 30 when Sister Blackstock met with the women's department for study and discussion of the work of the year.

ON JANUARY 21 the town of Bothwell, Ontario, honored Brother Delbert Johnston as he retired from municipal life after twenty-seven years of service. In the presentation address the sentiments of the community were caught up as follows:

After sitting on the public school board and the council board for over twelve years and in the mayor's chair for fifteen years, your term of office expired on December 31.

You step down from public life without the loss of one worthy qualification that you possessed when you entered upon your official duties. Nor has the tongue of slander, in all the lapse of time since then, been able to stain a single attribute of your character. Your course has been satisfactory in every way to the good folk of this town.

STORIES FOR CHURCH SCHOOL

The Round Window

by Elizabeth C. Allstrom

This is a 127-page book with twelve church school stories for children to hear and enjoy. The round window symbolizes God's round world and each story is about a part of this world. Messages center around helping, offering, building a church, taking on responsibility, and participating in God's big family. A Friendship Press Book.

HERALD HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

Repairs and alterations have been made on the church building. Elder Charles Martin was in charge of the work.

Elder and Mrs. Charles Martin and Sister Mabel Grinnell went to Independence on April 10 where Brother Martin attended the Institute in Evangelism. Sister Martin and Sister Grinnell visited friends and relatives while there.

The Easter services were held at the church for a capacity congregation.—Reported by BLANCHE HILL

Babies Blessed

BOONE, IOWA.—During the Communion service on November 2, Paul Winans, Jr., was ordained a member of the Aaronic priesthood. He was ordained by Henry Castings, assisted by Ward Johnson.

Cheryl Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Veryl Jennings, born February 27, was blessed on Easter Sunday by the pastor, Elder A. Paul Winans, assisted by Elder Myron Wood. Leslie Kirk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Purvis, born November 2, was blessed on the same day by Brother Wood, assisted by Brother Winans.—Reported by MRS. ETHEL E. JOHNSON

Special Services Held

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS.—The Sabine area mission held a special Easter service. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tryon were blessed. Louis and Thyria were blessed by the district president, C. W. Tischer, assisted by Elder J. Henry Porter, and Vickey was blessed by Brother Porter, assisted by Brother Tischer.

Visitors from Houston were Brother Tischer, Mr. and Mrs. Diamond and daughter Ann. Brother Tischer was in charge of the morning services at which twenty-four persons were present. A basket lunch and egg hunt were held in Terrell Park in Beaumont.

A special evening service was held with "The Upper Room" as the theme. Brother Porter was in charge of the service. Walter Tryon gave the call to worship. Others on the program were Ralph Sherrell, Glen Porter, Alice Swanson, Mrs. J. H. Porter, Bob Leeble, and Rethel Sherrell.—Reported by RALPH V. SHERRELL

Eight Children Blessed

SABETHA, KANSAS.—Eight children were blessed on March 15. Before the morning sermon by Will Twombly, Fred Marsh and Lynn White blessed Bruce and Paul, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Yarber; Joseph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Estle; and David, son of Mr. and Mrs. Merlin White. Then in the evening prior to the sermon by Robert Parker, Steven, Constance, Carolyn, and Gary, children of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Chandler, were blessed.

There were forty-one people at church school, fifty-nine at the morning service, and sixty at the evening meeting.

Meetings are held in the city library and the building fund is rapidly growing.—Reported by MRS. LYNN WHITE

Branch Organized

HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.—Seventy John Puckett, general supervisor of the Missouri missionary area, and Elder John Guinee, pastor of the church at Jefferson City, were in charge of a meeting on March 9. The mission was organized into a branch, and the following officers were elected: pastor, Elder Wayne Peters; counselors, Floyd Bowman, Joe Brown; church school director, Floyd Hull; assistant church school director, Dan Connor; young adult leader, Richard Howell; Zion's League leaders, Brother and Sister Alva King; director of music, Mrs. Raymond Howell; women's leader, Mrs. Lucille Peters; branch secretary,

Mrs. Russell Lair; solicitor and historian, Mrs. Wayne Peters; treasurer, Cecil Peters; recorder, Mrs. Elizabeth Peters; and building fund committee, Floyd Hull, Joe Brown, and Alva King.—Reported by MRS. EDGAR CASH

Missions Organized

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA.—Outstanding in the history of the branch is the success of the Riverside and Redlands missions, which were organized two years ago. Sunday morning attendance is more than fifty at each of the missions. And the San Bernardino congregation is nearly as large as before the formation of the missions.

Elder William Murray was placed in charge of the Redlands mission, with Elmer Chase and Clifford McGuire assisting. Brother McGuire was recently ordained a priest. They are assisted now also by Floyd Simpson, who moved to Redlands from Joplin, Missouri.

Herman Bausell and Millard Caldwell began the Riverside mission. Major Caldwell has since been ordained an elder in Japan. Others active in Riverside include Charles Mottashed, elder; Earl Peters and Irvin Buschbaum, priests; Clifford Peters and Dan Jarvis, teachers; and George Steele, deacon.

High Priest Herald G. Wixom presides over the branch and its missions and serves as counselor to District President John Davis. Elders Fred Savage and James F. Cooper are counselors to Brother Wixom.

Charles Landon directs the Aaronic visiting program. Benjamin E. Green supervises the Sunday evening activities, which have included lesson study, orchestra practice, quiz sessions, and preaching.

The director of religious education is Lawrence McCauley. Mary Brinkerhoff and Anna Mae Hoach direct the women's activities. Fred Savage is in charge of the young people's activities, and Robert Nichol supervises the Zion's League.

Within recent months the following have been in the branch: President F. Henry Edwards; Patriarchs Elbert A. Smith, William Patterson, and Louis J. Ostertag; Seventies Glen Johnson and Wayne Simmons; and District President John Davis.—Reported by WILSON RITCHIE

Missionary Series Held

AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO.—During the month of March, Seventy F. Edward Butterworth and Missionary Elder Robert Flanders of the Detroit International Stake met in the branch. Following two weeks of visiting they held a two weeks' series of lectures on "What We Believe" in the Amherstburg public school. Special programs featuring Pauline Frisby, noted soprano; Mrs. Lawrence Randall, harpist; local talent, and movies preceded each lecture.

A hardtime patch party and potluck supper was held following the series. Costumes of rags and tatters were worn. Brother Flanders led the group singing and Brother Butterworth provided entertainment with songs in Tahitian. Irving Jones presented the brethren with gifts from the branch following the program.

The young adult group was host to a children's party on March 5.

On Easter Sunday, Evangelist Booth was the speaker at the morning service. An Easter Communion service was held that evening at which Carl Nicholson was the speaker.

The branch has announced the purchase of a lot in town and plans are in progress to raise money for a new church building.

Mrs. Harvey Jones has been appointed principal in charge of the summer vacation church school.—Reported by DOREEN JONES

"Cry Room" Installed

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The branch officially opened its new "cry room" on Easter Sunday. It is a specially constructed room at the rear of the church which has been made soundproof. It has two picture windows of double thickness. An amplifying system has been installed. Cribs and other play equipment as well as seats have been installed. Parents in there may still participate in the services. Deacons may enter the room when the offering plate is passed, and the priests may take the Communion to the parents during the Communion services.

Make Church History Puppets

PAINESVILLE, OHIO.—On December 22, eight members of the women's department finished their civilian defense first aid course, under the direction of Brother Rex Mason, civilian defense co-ordinator for the area. Those finishing the courses are Mrs. Harry T. Freeman, Mrs. Enoch Christenson, Mrs. Ed. Bushnell, Mrs. Paul Gifford, Mrs. Claude Bushnell, Mrs. Homer Barnhouse, Mrs. Leonard Wilcox, Mrs. Arthur Webster.

The women's department turned over to the branch solicitor, Harry Freeman, one hundred dollars to apply on the branch Auditorium fund for 1952. They are now putting forth extra effort to swell the building fund. A special day every other week has been set aside for sewing carpet rags, which will be woven into rugs, for which the department now has several orders. The branch is planning some improvements in the building as soon as proper arrangements can be effected. Several of the women have been dressing puppets in costumes of the early days of the church. These will be used by the young women of Zion's League who are planning a puppet show to commemorate the founding of the church.

On February 19 a potluck supper was held at the home of Brother and Sister Merle Wilcox, after which Brother Freeman showed colored slides of his recent trip west.

On March 19, twenty-four members and visitors of the women's department gathered at the home of Sister Dora Wilcox for a quarterly birthday dinner. They were entertained by Kirtland Temple pastor, Elder Harry Black, assisted by Sister Black. Brother Black showed a series of slides on Book of Mormon lands, with his lecture. During the program, which preceded the lecture, Anna Belle Rasey and Bessie Bushnell sang a duet. There were six members of the department honored during the dinner served at noon.

The Zion's League held a pie social at the home of Brother and Sister Leonard Wilcox on March 19, and the proceeds were added to their portion of the building fund. The Leaguers are having two study classes a month. At one class they study What Is Christ's Church? under John Hardy, and at the other they study The Church Member's Manual under the direction of the pastor.

Sallman's picture, "His Presence," has been purchased by the branch, with the cost being borne equally by the women's department, the branch, the church school, and the Zion's League. The picture has been hung on the wall back of the altar. The women's department plans to purchase a light for the picture.

On March 15, Robert Bogner was baptized by Brother Black at Kirtland, and was confirmed at the Temple evening service.

At the present time the branch has two cottage meetings series under way, with visiting ministry from Kirtland assisting with the lectures. A third series is planned to start in the near future.—Reported by LUCY GIFFORD

Recital Held

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—The branch presented Paul Deaver in a Chopin recital on March 7. This was the third recital in a series, the proceeds of which are to go to the fund for a new church organ. He was assisted by his sister, Eldoralynne Dunaway.

Temme Lou, the infant daughter of Lt. and Mrs. Louis Miller of Glendale, Arizona, was blessed March 15 by Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elder W. P. Hubble.

Louis Cozby and his wife Mimia Cozby of Mayer, Arizona, were baptized on April 5 by Louis Miller. Mrs. Cozby was confirmed by Elders K. Tsuji and Paul Bear. Mr. Cozby was confirmed by Elder Keith Rogers and Paul Bear. Twenty-seven members from Prescott and Mayer, Arizona, were present at the baptisms and Easter services. Brother Bear and Brother Tsuji have been holding bimonthly meetings with the group in Prescott. After the services the Prescott members visited in the homes of Brother and Sister Maben Speer and Brother and Sister John Senter.—Reported by R. M. KUNKLE

Women Contribute to Sanitarium

WOODBINE, IOWA.—At the annual business meeting in September, the following officers were elected: pastor, Francis Harper, Sr.; church school director, Lloyd Donn; secretary and branch historian, Mabelle Pett; treasurer, Richard Young; women's leader, Rhea Young; music leader, Ervin Rosenberger; book steward, Una Young; assistant book steward, Bessie Harper; branch solicitor, Joseph Hamer; building committee, Lloyd Donn, Richard Young, and Rhea Young. The pastor selected Lloyd Donn and Roy M. Shumate as his counselors.

On November 16, the annual home-coming services were held. The morning speaker was Elder Frank Fry, former resident of Woodbine, now pastor at Omaha, Nebraska. A basket dinner followed the service with a program in the afternoon.

A new Hammond electric organ was purchased for the branch in November.

A smorgasbord was held in November. An oyster supper, sponsored by the men of the branch, was held on February 5. The proceeds from both suppers were added to the organ fund.

The children and young people of the branch presented the Christmas program.

Doretta, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Swift, Jr., was blessed on January 4 by Elders E. L. Edwards and F. A. Harper.

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell was the speaker on February 22. In the evening he conducted classes for priesthood and members.

District President Sylvester Coleman held a series of Sunday evening classes for six weeks beginning in February.

Members of the Zion's League meet for study each Sunday evening. They have recreation twice each month.

The general women's department meets the first Thursday of each month for study, social, and work. The young women's group of B. Z. H. Circle meets the last Thursday for study.

Recently the women of the branch donated and hemmed a large number of tea towels to be sent with others from the district to the Sanitarium at Independence.

The junior choir is directed by Sister Gladys Watkins. The organist is Sister Erma Hammitt.

The pastor, Brother Harper, was in Des Moines, Iowa, March 31, where he was asked to open the House of Representatives and the Senate that morning with prayer. He was a guest of Representative Darrington from Harrison County.—Reported by MABELLE PETT

Ordination Service Held

SOAP LAKE, WASHINGTON.—On March 22, an ordination and confirmation service was held at the Moses Lake mission. Kenneth E. Savage was ordained to the office of priest by Elbert Dempsey and Vern Webb, and Bill Van Fleet was ordained to the office of elder by Vern Webb and Charles Emslie. Sue Van Fleet was then confirmed by Charles Emslie and her father, Bill Van Fleet. She was baptized on March 15. A potluck dinner was held at the Savage home in Soap Lake following the service.—Reported by VIRGINIA SAVAGE

Conference Held

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—The annual Arizona, New Mexico, and West Texas winter conference was held at Tucson, Arizona, March 28 and 29. The conference was attended by one hundred and fifty people. There were twenty-eight members of the priesthood present. Saturday afternoon a general class was taught by Charles R. Hield, Apostle in the area. Another later class was taught by Frank McDonald, supervising pastor of this area. At 6:00 p.m. a potluck supper was given to all members attending by the Tucson women's department.

"Latter Day Saints? Oh, Yes . . .

I know all about you."

Apostle Reed Holmes, Director of Religious Education, has answered this common statement in a brand-new tract. He states the doctrinal principles of the church and shows why we believe them to be true. Your congregation can especially use this for advance preparation for a missionary service or cottage meetings among nonmembers.

Mission Improves Building

PRITCHETT, COLORADO.—The group began meeting in April, 1950, at the community building near Utleyville. The group grew in size until in January, 1951, when work began on a new building. It was completed in February, 1951. The Saints worked together and other Saints in different areas contributed to the building which is used now.

The following men have ministered in the group: J. D. Curtis, John Banks, Gerald Gabriel, Clarence Owens, Dale, Floyd, and Ralph Coen, Charles Leake, Arthur Gibbs, James Daugherty, Ward A. Hougas, Malcolm B. Barrows, E. R. Sivets, D. Blair Jensen, and Conrad Graybill. Brother Graybill is the pastor; he lives two hundred miles away.

The women's department held their yearly bazaar and dinner in December and raised $160 and finished paying the remainder of the church debt. Part of the money can be used to improve the building. The group became a mission in 1952 at the district conference.—Reported by VIRGIL M. LACKEY

Apostle in Branch

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—High Priest and Mrs. C. A. Vernon visited the mission on November 30. Brother Vernon spoke about the Doctrine and Covenants Institute which had been held in Independence in the fall.

A called district business meeting and women's institute was held December 6 and 7 in Oklahoma City. Those in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Limb, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Mrs. Fred Andrus, and Mrs. Robert Cavanaugh.

Elder Otis J. Stevens, district counselor, conducted a business meeting on January 25.

Apostle D. Blair Jensen and District President Alfred H. Yale were present for a Friday night service on February 27. They shared the hour in speaking to the congregation. The pastor, Glenn Limb, was in charge of the service.

Robert Cavanaugh, Paul Storm, O. E. Pender, Glenn Limb, W. T. Bozarth, and Graham S. Hart attended the district men's meeting at Tulsa on March 13.—Reported by MRS. GRHAM S. HART

Nonmember Aids in Organ Purchase

EAST LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—Under the leadership of the pastor, Virgil E. Sheppard, who has served in this office for the past four years, the church debt has been paid and a lot has been purchased. A nursery for the church school has been erected on the lot. New seats, velvet drapes at the windows, and curtains to match have been put in the church. A nonmember furnished some money for an organ which the branch hopes to purchase this year.

The choir under the direction of Velma Engle, accompanied by Marie Sheppard at the organ, presented the Easter service.

Elder Richard D. Andersen completed a series of meetings in March with five baptisms resulting.

Lacygne Van Eaton, leader of the women's department, supervises four active groups. The LaDaSa group is led by June Seagrave; E La Sana, Esther Salinas; Dorcas, Marie Sheppard; and the Thursday Club, Sister Van Eaton.

Don Howery, religious education leader, is training four young men who take charge for one month each. They are James Campbell, David Williams, John Lee, and Edwin Johnson.

Other officers of the branch are Dottie Lee, junior church leader; Vivian Foster, book steward; Austeen Johnson, treasurer; Billy Mark, secretary; Marie Sheppard, recorder; Juanita Thompson, historian; Opal Payne, children's supervisor; Edwin Johnson, bishop's agent; Cecil Johnson, custodian; Ann Jayser and J. G. Mark, finance committee; W. A.

Gray, publicity agent; Virgil Lunn, visiting and administering to the sick; W. A. Gray, William Hetrick, Herbert Hetrick, and Cecil Johnson, visiting new members.

The Men's Club meets the last Friday evening of each month.

The following men compose the priesthood of the branch: Virgil E. Sheppard, high priest; L. L. Sutherland, high priest; William Hetrick, elder; Virgil Lunn, elder; Johame Bunt, elder; Don Howery, priest; Edwin Johnson, priest; Royce Foster, elder; Jack Van Eaton, elder; W. A. Gray, teacher, Herbert Hetrick, teacher; Cecil Johnson, deacon; Austeen Johnson, deacon; and James Campbell, priest.—Reported by WILLIAM GRAY

Branch Holds Family Night

CENTRALIA, ILLINOIS.—District Missionary D. L. Kyser of Marion conducted cottage meetings three weeks in February. He was assisted in this by the pastor, Elder Charles Wesner and Eugene Greer. One baptism resulted from these efforts. Gale Sweeney was baptized on March 15 by Brother Greer and confirmed March 22 at the evening service by Elders W. W. Colvin, E. E. Thomas, and Charles Wesner.

Elder and Mrs. Floyd Henson and infant son of Flora were visitors on March 8 when Brother Henson was the speaker for the Zion's League. The Leaguers sponsored the evening service. Those participating included Jerry Shelton, Norma Greer, Nancy Shelton, Elaine Sweeney, and Jo Shelton.

Other visiting speakers have been Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Brother Russell Ellis, district church school director, and Elder George Wolfe.

One evening each month is set aside for family night. Mrs. Edith Halsapple and Mrs. Virginia Wesner are the members of the committee in charge. Forty members were present for the first meeting in February.—Reported by GRACE SCARBOROUGH

Patriarch Visits Branch

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.—Beginning with the month of February it was decided to hold basket dinners following church services once each month. The first dinner was held on February 15 with Elder Harry Pedersen of Long Beach, California, as special guest.

The branch was well represented at the district conference held at Redlands, California, March 7 and 8. The name of Howell Hughes was submitted for his ordination to the office of elder and Gordon Berg to the office of deacon. These were approved and the ordinations were performed March 15 with Elders John Davis, district president, and Roy Curtis, branch pastor, officiating. After the ordination, Brother Davis spoke to the congregation.

A pageant was presented by the young women and children of the branch on Easter Sunday under the supervision of Lillian Tsoutsouvas, drama director.

On April 11 and 12, the branch was visited by Evangelist and Mrs. Louis Ostertag. Brother Ostertag gave blessings while in the branch and spoke at the women's activity day which was April 12. Those receiving their blessings were Adra Ellis, Yvonne Curtis, Verdelle High, Marshall Curtis, Gordon Berg, and John Tsoutsouvas.

The service on April 12 was conducted by the women's department as a part of their year's activities. The theme of the service was the same as their theme for the year, "I'm pressing on the upward way."

Walter David, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Poole, was blessed during the April 12 services by Brethren Curtis and Ostertag.—Reported by JOHN TSOUTSOUVAS

DEATHS

TROWBRIDGE.—Granville Sherwood, son of Margaret and Stephen Trowbridge, was born November 22, 1878, in Galveston, Texas, and died March 26, 1953, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of seventeen, ordained a priest on December 10, 1911, and an elder on December 15, 1912. His interest in Religio work led to his becoming secretary and then president of that organization for the General Church. He also served as business manager for the Herald Publishing House for a while and helped in rehabilitating the old Swope Mansion in Independence as a community center. He assisted in organizing one of the first vacation Bible schools in Zion and taught business courses in the Institute sponsored by the church. In his later life he was called to the office of high priest and served as president and bishop's agent for the Arkansas-Louisiana District. On December 25, 1900, he was married to Myrtle Mowry, who survives him. Two of their five children, Walter and Donald, preceded him in death.

Surviving are two daughters: Myrtle Kenney of Independence, Missouri, and Dorothy Edwards of Baltimore, Maryland; a son, Kenneth Trowbridge of Kansas City, Missouri; two brothers: Richard Trowbridge of Kinderpost, Missouri, and William Trowbridge of Oak Park, Illinois; nine grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude Smith and L. F. P. Curry officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BAILEY.—Clara Etta, daughter of James and Naomi Huffman, was born May 8, 1874, at Monticello, Indiana, and died April 10, 1953, in Centralia, Washington. On October 10, 1895, she was married to John F. Bailey; eight children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August, 1916.

Besides her husband she leaves five sons: Harold R. of Minot, North Dakota; Luther R. of Chehalis, Washington; Willard F., Howard F., and Ernest L. of Centralia; three daughters: Mrs. Martin Army of Centralia; Mrs. Lottie Holme of Puyallup, Washington, and Mrs. Tom Miller of Columbus, Ohio; two sisters: Mrs. John Miller of Ronan, Montana, and Mrs. India Burrows of Logansport, Indiana; twenty-eight grandchildren; and seventeen great-grandchildren. The funeral service was held at the Newell-Hoerling Chapel in Centralia, Elder William W. Belcher officiating. Interment was in Mt. View Burial Park.

BODRY.—Dora A. Paul, was born September 2, 1868, in New York and died March 1, 1953, in Angora, Nebraska. In 1874 she moved with her parents to Nebraska, where on November 19, 1885, she was married to Leslie Bodry. Eleven children were born to them. The oldest son, James, preceded her in death in 1935. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since January, 1895.

Besides her husband she is survived by five sons: Leslie of Lincoln; David of Lyman; Frank of Angora; Warren of Alliance; and Theodore of Beaumont, Texas; five daughters: Ila Lawrence of Bayard; Eunice Hanich of Minatare; Edith Roth of Gering; Phebe Johnson of Noxon, Montana; and Dorothy Hogue of Council Grove, Kansas; twenty-eight grandchildren; thirteen great-grandchildren; three sisters; and one brother. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Ward Hougas. Burial was in the cemetery at Bayard.

CONNELL.—Minnie Dorothea, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Mittendorf, was born October 7, 1874, in Clay Center, Kansas, and died March 6, 1953, in the Coffeyville Memorial Hospital, Coffeyville, Kansas. She was married on September 4, 1904, to W. A. Connell, who survives her. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in September, 1911, and was a consecrated worker the remainder of her life. She especially loved teaching children and believed in keeping the financial law strictly.

Besides her husband she leaves a son, William Eugene of Fort Collins, Colorado; two daughters: Mrs. Monty Hunter of Rupert, Idaho, and Mrs. Louis Hancock of Des Plaines, Illinois; two sisters; four brothers; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Skinner Chapel, District President Stephen Black officiating. Burial was in Robbins Cemetery, Coffeyville.

JACK.—John A., was born in Proton, Ontario, and died January 4, 1953, at his home in Peekskill, New York, at the age of eighty-seven. He had been an employee of the New York Central Railroad, retiring in 1937. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1907.

He is survived by his wife, Euphemia; three daughters: Mrs. Ethel Squire of Brooklyn, New York; Mrs. Lucile Bronson of Peekskill, New York; and Mrs. Hazel Hain of Ridgewood, New Jersey. A son, Earl, preceded him in death. Funeral services were conducted by High Priest John T. Conway. Interment was in Hillside Cemetery, Peekskill.

...And Finally

CONVERSATION PIECE

Don't laugh at the man who seems to be talking to himself. He may be saying a prayer.

The real pleasure of talking to yourself is that there are no rude interruptions, and no disrespectful inattention. But you may be bored to death.

Let's invent a nice dignified name for talking to yourself. How would "intra-communication" do? Or "unilogue"? The psychiatrists may have a better word for it. . . .

"There is a time . . . to every purpose under heaven . . . a time to keep silence, and a time to speak."—Ecclesiastes 3. Most people learn to talk in the second year. At what age do they learn to keep quiet? . . .

The most difficult problem in conversation is to get others to keep quiet so you can talk.

Learning stops when you talk. It proceeds when you listen.

Twenty years ago Eddie Cantor said, "Home is a place where everybody talks and nobody listens." So he saved his remarks for the stage and radio, and millions of people paid for a chance to hear. Now he is rich. That's what an unappreciative family can do for a man.

There was company for dinner. All evening he talked eloquently of faraway places, splendid events and charming people. The hosts hardly uttered a word. It was late when he rose to go, and he said, "This has been a wonderful evening. I enjoyed the conversation so much." If you want to make people happy, listen to them. It is the supreme flattery.

In every human being something seems to be planted that wants to be articulate. Some people express themselves in music, some in art, sports, literature, public oratory or private gossip, propaganda or politics, poetry or prayer. But it is all for an audience—the hope of an ideal audience: people—silent people waiting with uplifted, expectant faces and shining eyes for what is to come. L. J. L.

TIME FOR WHAT?

We don't visit our neighbors and friends as did our parents because "we don't have time." We don't study our Sunday school lessons or read the "Herald" or Scriptures as the previous generations for the same reason. Yet we are spending literally billions of dollars for labor and time-saving devices. Men never had so much leisure time as now. If we fritter it away on second-best or unworthy pursuits it is sure to damn us.

Isn't it generally true that we find time for what we want most to do? C. B. H.

ALONG LIFE'S WAY

If you were walking from the well carrying a bucket of water and someone jostled against you, there could be spilled from the bucket only that which it contained. As you walk along the way of life, people are constantly bumping into you. If your life is full of ill nature, bad temper, and ugly disposition, those things will be spilled from it. If it is full of Christian spirit, you will spill a smile or some pleasant remark. You can spill from your bucket that which it contains.

Sylvester R. Coleman

BORN IN INDEPENDENCE on February 6, 1919, Sylvester R. Coleman was baptized July 15, 1928, at Buckner, Missouri, and spent most of the next twelve years going to school. He was graduated from Buckner High School in 1936. Later on he took some extension courses from the University of Kansas and attended Greenville College, Greenville, Illinois, for one semester. He worked at Montgomery Ward and Company in Kansas City for some time and was later employed by Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, where he worked eight years before and after his army service.

Brother Coleman says sports, especially basketball, and radio mechanics are his hobbies. He played basketball while in high school and for some years later, being on the Independence R.L.D.S. all-star basketball team in 1939 and 1940. He received training in radio repair while in the Army Air Force and served with the Fourteenth Air Force—the famed Flying Tigers—in India and China with a radio mobile unit.

Just before and after his ordination as a priest on October 13, 1940, he was Zion's League president and young people's leader for the Independence Walnut Park congregation and was also active in city-wide youth activities. He served in the Walnut Park priesthood until inducted into the armed forces in April, 1943. Discharged as a staff sergeant at the end of 1945, he returned to employment with the telephone company and again became active in the ministry. He was ordained an elder on February 23, 1947, and served as a group elder at Walnut Park until becoming pastor of Second Church in Independence early in 1948, six months before he accepted Conference appointment in October.

His first assignment was to the Southeastern Illinois District where he served as pastor of the Flora, Illinois, congregation until November, 1950, as district president through October, 1951, and as missionary. He was ordained a Seventy in February, 1951. His second and latest assignment came in October of last year to the Northwestern Iowa District, where he is district president. He and his family live at Logan, Iowa.

Brother Coleman married LaVona Mae Crabb on October 27, 1939. They have two children, Dennis Keith, four, and Sylvia Roxanne, nine.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

IN SANITARIUM

President Israel A. Smith was in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital for a week of rest and a checkup.

AT OMAHA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

President F. Henry Edwards was at Omaha, Nebraska, for the district conference. He was associated with Elder Frank Fry, district president and pastor of the Omaha Branch. Twelve young men were approved for ordination.

SPEAKS AT RESTHAVEN

President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker at the Communion service at Resthaven in the Center Stake on May 3. He was associated with Elders Harry Sprague and Earl Audet. Elder William Inman is the pastor at Resthaven.

INSTITUTE IN TEXAS

Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley and Apostle Charles R. Hield attended a priesthood and women's institute for the Central Texas District, May 9-10. The theme for the institute was "Witnessing for Christ."

Brother Mesley met with students of Michigan and Ontario at Graceland on May 3, and was the speaker at the Lamoni Church on that day.

APOSTLE GLEAZER HOME

Apostle E. J. Gleazer is now at home where he is recuperating after spending three weeks in the Sanitarium. He is indeed grateful for the services of the doctors and nurses at the San, and wishes to express his thanks for the prayers of the Saints as well as the many greeting cards received.

NURSES GRADUATE

Bishop Walter N. Johnson delivered the graduation address for the twenty-two members of the 1953 class of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing on May 5 at the Stone Church. The class was presented by Miss Vida Butterworth, educational director, and diplomas were presented by President W. Wallace Smith. Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, superintendent emeritus, presented pins, assisted by Miss Nelle Morgan, superintendent of nurses.

GROUP AT NAUVOO

Dr. F. M. McDowell was at Nauvoo, Illinois, May 2, 3, and 4, with a group of young people for a retreat planned and conducted by church students at the University of Missouri at Columbia. There were ten students from Columbia, four visiting young people from Graceland, and five young people and young adults from Moberly, Missouri, in the group. Three of the group were nonmembers. Brother McDowell was assisted by Elder Fred J. Banta, appointee at Nauvoo. Brother McDowell reported that the high point of the retreat was an early morning Communion service which was held at the Mansion House. The group toured Nauvoo and also visited the Carthage jail. Outstanding co-operation by the Nauvoo Saints was reported.

IN BOISE, IDAHO

Elder Evan Fry, radio minister, attended the Idaho District spring conference at Boise, May 1, 2, 3. He preached Friday night, Sunday morning, and Sunday night, taught two classes, and was the guest speaker at the banquet on Saturday night. Evangelist J. F. Curtis and Seventy G. Wayne Smith were also guest ministers at the conference.

A File on Courage

"When Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage."

—Acts 28: 15.

THE HUMAN SPIRIT has its low ebbs of weakness as well as its high tides of power, its bleak dusks of fear and its glorious dawns of hope. Sometimes life seems wonderful and the heart soars on wings. On other days one thinks with Hamlet, "How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable seem to me all the uses of this world," or one goes deeper into gloom with Macbeth who said life was "a tale told by an idiot."

When the worst times come, one should reach for the Psalms and start reading, for they alone contain the Balm of Gilead, the great medicament of broken spirits and wounded hearts. When eyes are half-blinded by tears, they are easiest to read, for the words are mostly familiar and the reader need not see very well. It is best to read them kneeling.

FOR MANY MOODS and occasions there are other books, each one bringing its own brand of enlightenment and inspiration. To some of them the reader goes back many times, as to the homes of friends, knowing that he will find there something good for his soul because he has found it before. Sometimes the mood calls for "A Book of Verses underneath the Bough" by Omar Khayyám, sometimes for that Victorian fantasy, Alice in Wonderland. For times of soul-searching there is nothing better than the Confessions of St. Augustine, and it has no equal as an accompaniment for sprinkling ashes in the hair and scratching the places rubbed raw by sackcloth. In a perverse mood one may pick up Bennett Cerf's Shake Well Before Using, which has a bit of a tang. Perhaps the dean of all sentimental volumes is Long, Long Ago, by Alexander Woolcott.

SINCE 1949, when it pleased heaven to bless all troubled hearts through the pen of a woman, we have read and reread Answer Without Ceasing by Margaret Lee Runbeck. And we have lent and shall lend many times that blessed volume of faith and trust, grateful when a friend brings it back with misty eyes saying, "Thank you so much!"

Now comes a new volume by Edward R. Murrow, that elder brother who helped us to keep strong and firm through the dark years of the war when, from the bomb shelters and ruins of our sister nation, he greeted us, "This is London"—Edward Murrow, who in these still troubled and sorrowful times helps to keep some thread of sanity in the news. In a volume called This I Believe, he has collected "The Personal Philosophies of One Hundred Thoughtful Men and Women."

Each contribution is only two pages long, including the tiniest bit of interesting biography about the writer. Especially precious and memorable are Joyce Grenfell's "The Art of Bouncing Back," and Helen Hayes' "A Morning Prayer in a Little Church." You will be surprised at the literary talent of General Lewis B. Hershey, and you will appreciate the words of the elder statesman, Herbert Hoover, "I See No Doom Down an Alley." Perhaps the great gem of all is the sketch by the poet Robert Hillyer, "Escape the Dark Destructive Force." It is beautiful enough for Scripture. Or you may prefer the tender and memorable "I Beseech You to Look" by Olga Koussevitzky.

While one of these sketches was being read aloud, a lady exclaimed, "Let's keep a file on courage, and put that in it!" Yes, let's make a file on courage, or a big loose-leaf book, with plenty of room for expansion. There is great need of courage these days, and we should always have some of it handy, ready for emergency use, if not for ourselves, then for others. The angels of this world are the folk who, when others come to them in trouble, have something for body and soul that will help.

MANY MODERN HOMES in these days have a small office in some corner or other. Sometimes, though not always, there is a little desk and a portable typewriter that can be pulled from under a shelf. The phone may be near. Then a file, with drawers for the alphabetical arrangement of the common manila folders into which clippings from magazines and typewritten material can be put away for easy finding when it is wanted again. Under the C's place a special envelope or folder for "Courage." If you have nothing else or nothing better at the present moment, something from this writing will make a beginning. Then keep watch and something more will come along—something read in a magazine, something a friend says, or some little experience that looks like an answer to prayer.

"Be of good courage" is the admonition of Scripture. "Be not afraid," said Jesus. If you have no human relative in the world, you are not utterly alone. You have your Heavenly Father, and he loves you. In all the ways he can, and according to his wisdom, he helps you and sends things your way, if you can only recognize them. If he doesn't answer your prayer as you wish, it is because he has something better for you. Let the fact that he knows and cares give you courage and hope.

What did Paul see? He saw the saints coming his way. Then he thanked God and took courage. Look and take courage.

Appointments and Transfers by the Joint Council

The following appointments and transfers were made at recent sessions of the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric:

Lynn A. Smith, Evangelist, the Central Stakes

A. Wayne Hough, Missouri Development Area

James C. Daugherty, Central Illinois, from Kansas and Nebraska

Myron F. LaPointe, Nebraska, from Kansas, Wichita objective

Allen Breckenridge, Alabama District and Lower Florida, from Kansas City Stake

William McMurray, Unorganized Ontario as Seventy in Charge, with Ottawa as objective, from Ontario.

A. Leslie Gardner, Owen Sound, Manitoulin Island and Sault Ste Marie, from Nebraska

John G. Wight, St. Louis and Spring River districts, from St. Louis District and Missouri Development Area

Stanley W. Johnson, New York and Scranton Districts, from New York District

Bishop Howard F. Miller having resigned from appointment, Bishop J. E. Baldwin will be recommended to the Kansas City Stake for selection as stake bishop.

Other appointments approved by the Council will be announced when some details have been cleared.

Church Secretary Appointed

Charles Neff has been appointed to act as secretary of the church in the stead of the late Frank McDonald. This appointment is subject to the approval of the next General Conference.

Notice to Administrative Officers

The law stated in Doctrine and Covenants 42:7e requires that persons guilty of a certain repeated transgression shall be expelled from the church. This offense necessarily involves fidelity to marital partners, but this is not always understood by pastors who, fortunately, have little experience in this field.

To avoid the possibility that persons shall be excluded from the church who might have been retained if the law had been more perfectly understood, we wish to advise all administrative officers concerned that no expulsions from the church should be authorized without prior court action, preferably by the Bishop's Court. This rule should be followed even when successive confessions are available.

The procedure here indicated has been discussed with the Standing High Council and has the approval of the Council.

Elder L. E. Scott Granted Leave of Absence

The Joint Council has acted favorably but with sincere regret on the request of Brother Lewis E. Scott for a leave of absence to enable him to give his attention to personal business interests. His services will therefore no longer be available.

Brother Scott has eased the load of the Presiding Bishopric considerably in the time that he has been in their office, and has rendered valuable help to many of the congregations with their building projects, and has also served well in respect to some of the institutional projects now under way. His loss will therefore be felt keenly.

Respectfully submitted,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
By Israel A. Smith

Death of Frank McDonald

With regret we inform the church of the passing of Frank McDonald, one of our most distinguished appointee high priests, which occurred at a hospital in Phoenix, Arizona, on May 4. His death came suddenly, following what appeared to be splendid recovery from a heart attack which had hospitalized him for three weeks.

Brother McDonald was the church secretary. His approval for the position by the General Conference came in 1950, after he had served many years as one of the recording secretaries for the Conference. His able ministry as secretary will be remembered by many who have been at General Conference in recent years.

His appointee ministry began in 1930 when he was sent to the Spring River District. Since that time, he has served as pastor at Walnut Park, Omaha, Council Bluffs, Chicago, and St. Louis. At the time of his death, he was supervising minister of the Arizona District.

Brother McDonald's ordination to the high priesthood took place on March 1, 1933. He served as a priest from 1917 until 1922, at which time he was ordained to the office of elder.

He leaves his wife, Winsome; his daughter, Mary; and a sister, Nell Cavanaugh. The funeral was held Friday, May 8, at the Walnut Park Church in Independence. Elder Charles F. Putnam preached the sermon; he was assisted by Elder Charles D. Neff. F. H. E.

The Kingdom of God Will Be Produced by

Those Who Will It So

A sermon preached at the Campus on June 29, 1952

By Edmund J. Gleazer, Sr.

I TRUST WE ALL BELIEVE in the literal establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth. I also trust we believe that the God of heaven, in preparation for the establishment of the kingdom, made possible the restoration of the gospel and the reorganization of this church. Since I was converted to this work I have believed the reason this church was organized was that there was no other organization at that time qualified, equipped, and empowered to bring to pass the kingdom of God. I'm perfectly aware of all the good that is being done by the various organizations of men, but this church has a specific responsibility before God, and that is to bring forth on the earth God's kingdom and a manifestation of his righteousness.

I should like to distinguish between faith and belief. Some of us believe certain things will take place. We are told by our Lord that even the devils believed and trembled. But faith goes beyond belief. Faith is dynamic to this extent: those of us who have it will move forward to accomplish that which we believe—in other words, that which we envision we will to accomplish.

Time and again we have used the theme "Together with God we build the kingdom." I certainly believe that this church is adequate as an institution, with its ordinances and doctrines, with all of its helps and government, with its ministers and the manner in which they have been called, set apart, and assigned their specific duties. I believe that this church is fully equipped to bring to pass the kingdom of God on earth. But I think that we could make a distinction between the organization as such and those of us who are members of the organization. Paul has said that we are the body of Christ and members in particular. It is one thing for God to give us a church that he was pleased to call his and to say, as he did some years ago, that it was the only church upon the face of the earth with which he was well pleased. Some folks back in those days misunderstood that statement and thought God was talking about them as individuals. He was talking about the institution which he established. He was talking about the means that he had ordained to convert men to the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ and that he has business with us today. His business is to bring to pass sonship in us, and as a consequence of our becoming sons of God our behavior shall become such that the kingdom of God shall be a reality on the earth. I regard the church as a means to this end. The first seven verses of the twelfth chapter of Revelation make it very clear that the church which God would organize in this dispensation of time would eventually bring forth the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

I never have had any quarrel with what God has done. Occasionally I hear complaints by members of the church who are disillusioned, dissatisfied, or upset, but I have yet to hear any of our people finding fault with the Almighty. We usually find fault with each other. And if we are looking for faults, we can find plenty of them.

The fact is, God has done about all he can do to bring to pass the establishment of his kingdom. We recognize, possibly more than any other people in the world, that he has bestowed upon us the gift of agency—the right to choose for ourselves. God will not take away that agency; he will not impose himself upon us. We are his creatures. We have the possibility of becoming his sons in reality, but we are going to become his sons through the use of our agency—by our own choosing—and not by force or coercion. Because this is so, we recognize that there is no real hope for the world, no possibility for universal salvation as far as the nations are concerned, until we yield complete obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. As a consequence of observing his law and his counsel, we transform our natures and become his sons and daughters in reality.

It is necessary, therefore, for those of us who would become his children to exercise the principle of faith. Faith has well been defined as the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

As missionaries we used to emphasize the gospel ladder, the necessity of having faith in God and repentance from dead works, baptism by immersion, the laying on of hands for the baptism of the spirit, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. But the difficulty we have observed through the years is that, while we emphasize faith to those who are not yet members, after we join the church we seem to ignore the principle. I believe that this principle of faith has been neglected and that this neglect is one of the basic reasons why we have not yet realized the kingdom of God to the extent we have hoped for by this time. It might seem strange to some that I should even insinuate that members of the body of Christ may be lax in the exercise of the principle of faith. What is hindering us—if we are being hindered—in bringing to pass the kingdom?

I'D LIKE TO RECALL some of the promises of God. Here is one from the book of Psalms:

The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.—Psalm 50: 1-5.

The first two verses of this Psalm have to do with history. The mighty God had spoken, and the Psalmist was very well aware of that fact, as was every other person familiar with the manner in which God behaved. It was also a fact that out of the perfection of beauty, God had shone. We've heard it said, over and over again, "What has been, can be."

Some tell us that while it's a good idea to envision the kingdom of God, it cannot be realized in this world. I believe that is the spirit of apostasy. Certainly it is not representative of the faith of this people. God would never require from us that which is impossible for us to accomplish. Furthermore, he has told us over and over again that he will lead in the accomplishment of any service which is required on behalf of his people. I'm glad as Saints we are thinking of the second coming of Christ. It seemed for a while that we were forgetting that important event. The Psalmist said: "Our God shall come and shall not keep silence. A fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him."

All we need to do today is to use our powers of observation to "see the fire." Forces having the same effect as fire are moving throughout the world. This is a tempestuous period, a time of trial and tribulation, a period of judgment. The very fact that we are observing this portion of the prophecy should help us to recognize that any portion of a prophecy in having its fulfillment indicates that what has not yet been fulfilled shall come to pass.

"He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people."—Verse 4. How can he judge his people unless he gives them an invitation and can determine who they are by the manner in which they respond? How can there be judgment unless some standard is set up?

GATHER MY SAINTS together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Verse 5.

There is our task. Events transpiring in the world today show the fulfillment of prophecy pertaining to the people of Judah. I sincerely doubt that all the Jews shall return to Palestine. I don't know what we'd do in this country if they did. Chances are we'd be bankrupt if they took their treasure with them. I also doubt that God intended for all Saints to be gathered to Independence and the regions round about. But I do know he has given instruction that the church of the living God—not this member, or some other member—but the church shall so function that those who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice shall be gathered to Independence and the regions round about. Those who are qualified to enter into such an arrangement of Christian brotherhood, where the will of God shall be expressed in all of their daily affairs, are to come. I believe that the manner of the gathering is selective. I also hold that there are in the church sufficient spiritually qualified men and women who, if they were brought together in community relationship, could even today demonstrate the effectiveness of the kingdom of God. Some of us are going to be held responsible for any part we have failed to play in giving leadership and incentive to this type of movement.

When it seemed necessary for this country to enter into the Korean war I saw an object lesson. The entire resources of the United States were marshaled. Our government called young men and women to the colors and gave them the best training possible. Probably no army was ever so well trained, but it wasn't an individual affair by any means. The entire nation was called to help—it was a national emergency. And while we have not yet entered into a full-fledged war, according to those who preside in Washington, provision has been made for the entire resources of the United States to be thrown into the conflict if necessary.

THIS MATTER of establishing Zion is not the business of any one individual either. It is not the responsibility of this family or that. It is not a question of making enough money to become established in business and then transferring to the Center Place. The difficulty is that when most people make enough money, they don't transfer. Their businesses possess them. There is no man in this church exempt from playing his part in the Zion project. That's why I'm attempting to emphasize the principle of faith.

First, we must exercise faith to the extent that we believe Zion can become a reality. (I'm using the word "Zion" as synonymous with the kingdom.) I get discouraged when I hear people say that we're going to have to wait until the kingdom is brought to earth by God and his Saints. I am disappointed when I hear people say we're not good enough to bring to pass the kingdom of God. Well, maybe we're not good enough, but God requires that we become good enough. And it's possible to become good enough as a people to produce the righteousness of his kingdom. It requires faith in the project.

Do we believe as the pioneers of this church believed in the possibility of establishing the literal kingdom of God? They manifested their belief by their willingness to move from place to place. They may not always have used wisdom, but they believed in God and worked to bring to pass gatherings of his people in Kirtland, Independence, Far West, and Nauvoo. There were some mistakes, it's true, but thank God they believed in a literal gathering.

WHEN WE AS A CHURCH reach the place officially where we fail to believe in the Gathering, we'll be in apostasy and become just another church. We must have faith, not only in the project and in God but in each other. Time and time again when members under the leadership of Frederick M. Smith caught the vision of an actual gathering and the establishment of a Christian order of society, they stepped aside and debated with each other over prerogatives, until they became divided, consumed their strength among themselves, and the kingdom was not established. But God did not withdraw his Spirit from the church; he continued to minister to this people.

The evidence of that power was in the late General Conference; it is moving through the leadership of this church.

The power of God can make leaders of men who, without that power, would never command respect. The power of God can move out in assemblies to touch those who have been indifferent for a number of years, and they will respond to that power. His spirit is moving not only in the church but among those who are not yet members and bringing to pass conversion in their lives. Today we hear of experiences such as we read about in the Old and New Testaments and also in the Book of Mormon. God is moving in behalf of this people, and as a consequence of that power, I can testify that I see a manifestation of increased faith in the church.

JESUS TAUGHT HIS DISCIPLES to pray after this manner: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Would anyone in this congregation dare say that Jesus Christ was a hypocrite? Would anyone say that he taught his people to pray for a myth? Psychologists say that the actual purpose of prayer is to help us become what we pray for. Any man who dares pray "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth . . ." and doesn't believe in the possibility of that prayer being answered better stop saying it until he is converted. Jesus knew the possibility of man's bringing forth the kingdom when he counseled his disciples: "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness." We haven't yet caught the significance of his statement, "and all these things shall be added unto thee." Talk about a solution for economic problems. There it is. Set man right with God, and all social, economic, and political problems are solved. God never would have said to the prophet, "Gather my Saints together unto me," if such a thing were not practicable.

There was a certain woman who had faith that Jesus Christ had power. I don't know whether she fully accepted him, but she knew that he had power to heal and needed his blessing. When she had an opportunity to get close enough to Christ she touched the hem of his garment. Jesus said to her, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." I'm wondering how many of us have touched the hem of his garment? Any of us who are close enough to Jesus Christ to make contact with him cannot help being committed to the kingdom ideal, nor can we help working for its realization. When we notice anyone in this organization who has lost faith in the establishment of Zion and the bringing to pass of the kingdom of God we should pray for him, because he has departed from the faith. He's out of touch with God.

THIS QUESTION of having a dynamic faith appeals to me more now than ever before. If we were given the opportunity, most of us would testify that we've no fault to find with Christ; we've no fault to find with this organization. But we look upon each other and see our limitations. Sometimes we may lose confidence in ourselves. Loss of confidence is detrimental to the establishment of the kingdom of God. I doubt that there is a perfect individual on this earth.

I've been able to see the power of God manifested in my brothers and sisters. I'm conscious of human weaknesses and human limitations, yet where men are responsive to the Spirit of God, he can and does move through them. If I'm going to have faith in the kingdom idea, then I'm going to have faith in God and in my fellow-men.

A NUMBER OF YEARS AGO I was in Oklahoma. At that time we were buying land in and around Atherton. Word of the land purchase spread rapidly. A brother of the church came to me and said he was concerned for his son and wife and grandchildren. "Brother Gleazer," he said, "I want you to keep close touch with what is going on around Atherton. If you know of any land anywhere near there that is for sale, I'd like to buy it for my son. I want my boy and his wife and my grandchildren to have a better environment, but I'm not ready to go on this stewardship proposition yet. I want to see how it's going to work. If you'll be kind enough to keep your eye on what they are doing there, and if there is any chance of your getting my family anywhere near, you let me know."

I think we've had too many people like this in the church. They want someone else to make the venture. Either they're lacking faith in God or they're lacking faith in their brothers. I often wonder how this church would have got started if individuals had stood aside to watch what the other person was going to do.

It took me many years to learn that a lack of faith on my part is responsible for my lack of Christianity. It is one thing to profess I am a Saint; it's another thing to be what I profess. Most of us who insist on our friends and neighbors accepting the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ have not yet yielded obedience to the fullness of that same gospel ourselves. Too many times we're more or less seasonable in the manner of our obedience. There are certain periods like General Conference, Communion Sunday, and the institutes when we're quite active. On such occasions, we say, "The Lord can depend upon me." But most of us have yet to learn that it's very, very difficult to become a son of God in reality. Our behavior must become similar to the behavior of Jesus Christ, and this is not easy.

IT IS GOING TO TAKE all of our power plus the powers of heaven to bring to pass the kingdom on earth. That's why I appreciate the Scripture in the twelfth chapter of Revelation, where the church is pictured as a woman, travailing in pain waiting to be delivered. She went down into the valley of the shadow of death to bring forth the kingdom of God. I'm wondering tonight to what extent we as a people are travailing in pain to bring forth the kingdom.

I know F. Henry Edwards' attitude on matters of peace. When one of the outstanding orators of the church arose at General Conference once and said, "Let's put ourselves on record as standing for peace," I noticed that Brother Edwards wasn't as enthusiastic as I thought he should be. I happened to be sitting next to him at the time and asked him why he wasn't. He whispered to me, "We have no right to do that." That surprised me. Of all the men in the church who stood for peace, this man, I thought, was perhaps the most willing to sacrifice for it. He said, "Not until the time we as a people demonstrate that we're willing to die, if need be, to bring to pass peace have we a right to go on record for it."

It reminded me of when we passed another resolution at Conference and only one man voted against it. Dr. Joseph Luff was one of my heroes, and I was upset that day when he voted in the negative. That was in 1920, and we voted to go on a stewardship basis. You know what has happened. We've had Zion ever since, all of us stewards—by legislation. I think Dr. Luff was the only wise man in that assembly. This picture of the woman going down in the valley of the shadow of death is a picture of what must transpire in this institution. I'm asking to what extent are we willing to suffer, to travail in pain, to bring forth the kingdom of God. We talk about faith, but we haven't started to exercise faith in this regard.

I'VE HEARD IT SAID that we lack personnel or material resources. The people who say this haven't put their finger on what we're talking about tonight. We don't lack personnel, and we don't lack material resources. In some regards I think our material resources are standing in the way. People in their private fortunes often lose sight of God and their need for him. They trust in riches. I have witnessed over and over again what happens to people who get rich. The same thing can apply to an institution. I think that what we need today is faith—in God, in the project, and in each other—faith that will move us forward as the children of God have moved forward in other dispensations of time.

Faith is not mere credulity. Faith is the assurance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen. And what a history we've had as a people. A backward look will show us where the power of God has moved in behalf of this institution.

AT ONE TIME several years ago I was deeply concerned about leadership, resources, personnel, and some other things. The Spirit of God came to me with a message while I was in a gathering of young adults at Odessa. A portion of that message was this: "I, the Lord thy God, who brought this church forth out of obscurity and darkness, still have my Cowderys, my Harrises, and my Rigdons in reserve." That was four or five years ago. I have seen the fulfilling of that promise, and I see it continuing to be fulfilled daily. Notice the order in which that was given. What good would Joseph Smith have accomplished without an Oliver Cowdery?

Some of our people today are advising God that he made a mistake for having anything to do with one as ignorant as Joseph Smith. Well, the Lord picked Joseph Smith; he didn't consult anyone about it, and I think he made a wise choice, but he also secured an Oliver Cowdery. That wasn't an accident. It wasn't accidental that Joseph Smith went out in the woods to pray. He was led by the Spirit of God. If we don't want to give him any other credit, we must admit that he followed divine leadership. It wasn't an accident that Oliver Cowdery was brought in contact with Joseph Smith.

It wasn't an accident that Sidney Rigdon had been moved upon by the same Spirit and not only prepared himself but prepared a congregation so that it formed a nucleus of a new organization, known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

MY FAITH is so basic that I am definitely of the opinion there is today sufficient funds to accomplish God's purpose, and the men who have these funds would be willing to place them at the disposal of the church if they could see that they were to be utilized to bring forth the kingdom of God. Reorganized Latter Day Saints of all people should awake and manifest such faith as they've never shown before.

WE OBSERVED TODAY what a lack of faith and disobedience is doing to the civilized world. I'm wondering how long we're going to have to wait on those who have named the name of Jesus Christ and professed discipleship to prove what faith and obedience can bring to pass in community work. No people on this earth are charged with a responsibility such as we. None are honored as we are.

I'm not speaking out of a feeling of discouragement, because I'm absolutely confident according to that which is written, that if we do not learn obedience any other way, we shall learn by the things we suffer. There will be enough who "travail in pain" so that the kingdom will be a reality. The Lord God has never asked the accomplishment of any task that can't be realized; for he has provided the means of its accomplishment. We are not dealing with individuals alone in this movement; we are dealing with Divinity, and Divinity eventually will reach a sufficient number of men and women who will be obedient. As a consequence of their obedience to the laws of God, the kingdom will be a reality.

In the year 1833 the Saints were told this:

Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you. And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion. There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.

The following, known as the Fishing River revelation, was given in a time of hardship:

Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Bishop J. A. Koehler quoted this statement: "If ye would that I give unto you a place in the celestial kingdom you must prepare yourself by doing the things that I require at your hands." If there is abundance already, if God had done all that he can, what lack we yet save the faith to put into practice the divine requirements?

"And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her." I'm getting tired of being known as a member of a disgruntled branch of Mormonism. Even when members of the presidential party came to Independence they gave us credit for being the "pioneers who crossed the plains to Utah." Whose fault is that?

Surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, THE PURE IN HEART; therefore let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn; for, behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly—

as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet, it shall not be stayed until the Lord come; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations, and all their wicked works; nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her.—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

I'M TAKING THE POSITION that as members of this church we haven't observed the "all things." It is one thing to profess the means of salvation; it's something else to utilize the means of salvation. There are definite steps that God has required of us, and until we take them the kingdom cannot be realized. The principle necessary to take these steps is faith.

May God help us to recognize as never before that a lack of faith will postpone the establishment of his kingdom. A lack of faith on the part of those who are not identified with the body of Christ is bad enough, but a lack of faith on the part of those who claim to be the chosen people—who claim to be the Saints of God—is damnable.

May we have faith in God's church, a church which he himself has called out of the wilderness.

If we believe in God, then we should work with him to bring to pass his purposes so that we'll be in a position to make a contribution to the nations of this earth in harmony with prophecy. Thus we'll find the peace and a satisfaction that passes understanding.

Question Time

Question:

When our church teaches quietness, peacefulness, and orderliness in our services, what is meant by the shouting of Hosanna as indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5?

Missouri

H. C. K.

Answer:

Hosanna is a Hebrew word, meaning Save, we pray. It was used by the multitudes as they thronged in our Lord's triumphal procession into Jerusalem (see Matt. 21: 9, 15; Mark 11: 9, 10; John 12: 13). It has come to be understood as an expression of praise and adoration, and was so used upon one occasion in Kirtland Temple.

Perhaps one of the most effective ways of "crying hosanna" is through choral singing, as we were privileged to enjoy in the rendition of The Course of Time and The Messiah. Yet even there, without proper spiritual attitude on the part of those who sing and those who hear, it would not be pleasing to God (see D. and C. 119: 6). Praise and adoration must first be from the heart, otherwise the mere singing or "shouting" of words would be hypocrisy. Paul advised, "... singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord" (Eph. 5: 19).

We would suggest then that the advice to "cry Hosanna" would require living so closely to God in faithful service that we be filled with the Spirit, letting wisdom direct as to the appropriateness of volume of voice in giving expression to our praises.

Question:

Does it tell in the Bible where and when the children who die will be tried, if they are to be tried, even after the thousand years?

Missouri

J. C. M.

Answer:

No. Neither does it say that children who die have any need of being tried. They are redeemed through Christ and saved in the kingdom of God.

Since the Scriptures speak of Satan being loosed at the end of the thousand years, some have supposed it was for the purpose of his tempting those who had died in childhood before they suffered temptation in this world. But these came forth in the first resurrection and had been with Christ during the thousand years. There will be people living on earth in mortality during the millennium, and it will be these whom Satan will tempt and lead astray, many of them to the destruction of their souls. Satan cannot tempt the redeemed.

Question:

Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1b reads, "... inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him." Does this mean it is all right to take strong drink in the Communion service?

Section 86: 3d reads, "... shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint." Logically it seems that these two should be reversed; e.g., run and not faint. Please explain.

Iowa

J. H. T.

Answer:

The first part of this question is answered in Doctrine and Covenants 26: 1d which reads, "wherefore a commandment I give unto you, that you shall not purchase wine, neither strong drink of your enemies; wherefore ye shall partake of none, except it be made new among you; yea, in this my Father's kingdom which shall be built upon the earth." Thus we see that wine which has aged or become strong is unacceptable.

Joseph Smith, writing in Volume 17 of the Herald, May 1, 1870, adds to the foregoing by saying, "The emblems should be prepared beforehand and should be good, sweet bread and the pure wine of the grape, if wine is used. When wine is used it should be made by the Saints, of the pure juice of the grape." This is in keeping with Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1c.

In the second part of this question, it may seem that a more logical statement would permit a rearrangement as is suggested. However, this need not disturb us, for the meaning is not misconstrued. The important lesson in this Scripture is that we recognize and appreciate the physical and spiritual powers vouchsafed to those who keep the "word of wisdom" and other laws pertaining to the well-being of man.

Question:

Should persons be baptized upon demand when they do not have a knowledge of the work?

California

H. D. G.

Answer:

The simple demand for baptism is not enough. The Lord has made this plain in the Doctrine and Covenants, stating certain evidences need to be present:

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

By this we see there are certain evidences needed:

1. A broken heart and contrite spirit
2. A witness of true repentance from sin
3. A willingness to be identified as Christ's before the world
4. A determination to serve Christ always
5. Works worthy of the high calling in Christ

There is no indication in any of this, however, that the person needs to have arrived at a state of perfect knowledge. If what you mean is knowledge of all phases of Christlike living, then we are forced to say, such is not required of the person who asks for baptism, for perfect knowledge comes through living close to Christ. Baptism is the beginning of such living, not the end in itself. On the other hand, if you mean the understanding of the fact that Christ must become a part of their very lives and their acceptance of that fact, then most certainly that kind of knowledge is needed.

The Indians Need Our Help

By Roy Weldon

ABOUT ONE HUNDRED BILLS concerning Indian affairs have been introduced into the House and Senate since the Eighty-third Congress convened. Some of these bills are for the genuine welfare of the Indians, but several are dangerous to their welfare and if enacted will give selfish white interests the opportunity they have long been waiting for—to grab the diminishing supply of good land still remaining in Indian hands.

I have long been a member and have co-operated with the Indian Rights Association of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, which is sounding a call for the defeat of the following bills before the Eighty-third Congress:

S-335 by Senator Butler of Nebraska
S-330 by Senator Butler of Nebraska
S-331 by Senator Butler of Nebraska
S-2 by Senator McCarran of Nevada
H.R.—1921—Native Alaska Land Rights (should be amended to protect Alaska Indians)

Some of these bills would remove restrictions and protection for Indian lands. Authorities on Indian welfare say: "Past experience has generally shown that where all restrictions have been removed on Indian land, it soon passes into white ownership, either by direct sale (often at a fraction of its value), by taxation, or through encumbrance."¹

Congress needs to be reminded of its gross failure to provide schools and health services for the Navajo Indians according to Public Law 474. Eight out of ten Navajos can neither speak, read, nor write English. Fourteen thousand Navajo children have no school facilities. Three out of ten Navajo children die before they are ten years old.

HUMANITARIAN CONSIDERATIONS alone ought to be sufficient to move us to write our Senators and Congressmen in behalf of Indian welfare. We Reorganized Latter Day Saints, however, have strong reasons in addition to humanitarian sympathies for supporting the cause of Indian welfare. The Book of Mormon is the greatest Indian welfare movement of our time. It is the testimony of the Indian fathers, written with the expectancy that the Gentiles would carry it to the Lamanites. The Book of Mormon contains glowing promises to the Lamanites, including the endowment (III Nephi 10: 1-4) and the prophecy that when they shall accept Christ they shall blossom as the rose and become a white and delightsome people.

Senators and Congressmen are responsive to appeals from their constituents. Writing a letter to your Congressman requires little effort and investment on your part and can do very much for an unfortunate yet noble race of people. It is to be hoped that many readers of the Herald will co-operate in this movement.

In addition to writing Senators and Congressmen, Herald readers may also write to members of Congressional Committees on Indian Affairs. Following is a list of names of members of these committees. They may be addressed in care of the United States Senate, Washington, D.C. (if a Senator), or in care of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. (if a Congressman).

Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs: Hugh Butler, Nebraska, chairman; Eugene D. Millikin, Colorado; Guy Gordon, Oregon; George W. Malone, Nevada; Arthur V. Watkins, Utah; Henry C. Dworshak, Idaho; Thomas H. Kuchel, California; Frank A. Barrett, Wyoming; James E. Murray, Montana; Clinton P. Anderson, New Mexico; Russell B. Long, Louisiana; George A. Smathers, Florida; Earle C. Clements, Kentucky; Henry M. Jackson, Washington; Price Daniel, Texas.

Subcommittee on Indian Affairs: Arthur V. Watkins, Utah, Chairman;

Henry C. Dworshak, Idaho; Clinton P. Anderson, New Mexico; Thomas H. Kuchel, California; George A. Smathers, Florida.

House Subcommittee on Indian Affairs: Wm. H. Harrison, Wyoming, Chairman; Wesley A. D'Ewart, Montana; Norris Poulson, California; John P. Saylor, Pennsylvania; J. Ernest Wharton, New York; E. Y. Berry, South Dakota; Jack Westland, Washington; John J. Rhodes, Arizona; Clair Engle, California; Wayne N. Aspinall, Colorado; James G. Donovan, New York; Eugene J. McCarthy, Minnesota; James Hadley, Florida; George A. Shuford, North Carolina; E. L. Bartlett, Alaska.

(Free leaflets on Indian welfare can be obtained by writing, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kansas.)

I conclude with an excerpt from the March 26, 1953, newsletter of the Indian Rights Association—

The economic resources of most Indian groups are entirely inadequate to support them. Resulting directly are extreme poverty with hunger, poor and crowded housing, lack of sanitation, much sickness and high death rates of both adults and children.

The threat of the loss of their land holds many Indian groups in the grip of fear and insecurity. This was the uppermost concern of the Indians of the Five Tribes area of Oklahoma when Mr. Lindley visited them last summer. Many of these Indians seldom, if ever, leave their remote communities. They know no other way of life.

Lack of education, disease, poverty, and low morale are the principal handicaps of his people, says W. W. Keeler, Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma and Vice-President of the Phillips Petroleum Company.

As a Nation we are morally and legally obligated to protect land holdings of the Indian people and to assure education, health and welfare services to them.

It is our job as citizens to see that the Federal and State Governments give the help which is their part. Only as an aroused and sustained public opinion demands it, will our Indian population receive justice and fair play. Our Association is committed to this purpose. We ask your continued co-operation in this task.

The Testimony of W. W. Blair

IN THE LATTER PART of November, 1856, after nightfall, two young men entered my store, and at first sight I was impressed that they were Latter Day Saint ministers, though in those times we never saw or heard of any ministers of that denomination in our vicinity, except the ones before mentioned. I perceived that they watched my movements with manifest interest, and this continuing, I at length concluded that they wished to confer with me on business matters. I therefore stepped forward and accosted them, when the younger of the two, who afterward proved to be Edmund C. Briggs, called me by name and greeted me with "Good evening." He explained who he was, and introduced me to his companion, Samuel H. Gurley.

In questioning them I learned they had just come from Amboy and desired to visit me. I at once took them to my home, and on the way there asked them what called them into that region at that time, and they said they were sent forth of God by prophecy from Zarahemla, Wisconsin, to visit the Latter Day Saints and tell them that the Lord was reviving his work, had begun the reorganization of the church in that region, that the Spirit of the Lord was teaching and guiding the Saints in a great degree, and that it had been revealed to them, at various times, in various places, and through different persons, that the time was near at hand when the Lord would call Joseph, the son of Joseph Smith the Seer, to lead the church. In this they seemed very sanguine, but it all sounded to me as idle tales. However, I was glad to meet them, for in those times we seldom saw anyone who claimed to be a Latter Day Saint. On reaching my home I introduced them to my family, had refreshments prepared for them, and resolved to learn what I could in respect to their faith and the work they represented.

THAT EVENING we engaged, in a room by ourselves, in a spirited discussion of the matters they presented, and continued it until the next morning near three o'clock. It was now Sunday, and after our morning repast we again repaired to the parlor, and after fervent prayer as before, in which we all joined, we again entered on a critical discussion of the theories advocated by them. This continued until near noon, and it found us no nearer united than at the beginning. They now seemed to abandon the idea of convincing me of their theories by argument, and in order not to appear opinionated or beyond the reach of argument, I said to them if they knew their position to be correct on matters under consideration to go ahead and that I might possibly learn it by and by.

Brother Gurley, who had been the chief speaker hitherto, seemed reluctant to say anything further, whereupon Brother Briggs rose to his feet, took the Book of Mormon from the table, leafed it over rapidly as if seeking to find some particular passage, and then placing his hand to his mouth and trembling from head to feet, while the tears coursed down his cheeks, seemed to read these words, "I, the Lord, will have mercy upon whom I will have mercy, and I will forgive whom I will forgive." But these words are nowhere to be found in the Book of Mormon.

Just as soon as he began speaking, the Holy Spirit, such as had borne witness to me of the doctrine of Christ at the beginning, seemed to fill the room and also the persons of all present with its enlightening, convincing, and heavenly power. Brother Briggs raised his right hand and broke forth with a prophecy directed to me, declaring what had been my desires and intentions, declaring also that I would soon be released from my temporal affairs, would be called to the ministry, would be made "an apostle of the Lamb of God," would be called to preach the gospel and "thresh the Gentiles by the power of God's Spirit"; he said that the Lord would soon call Joseph, the son of Joseph the Seer, to be president of the church, and that the standard then erected would never fall, also that the work of the Lord would go forth in power and triumph until its final completion. He pronounced by prophecy the blessing of health upon my household, this, no doubt, referring to my wife and our little daughter, Mary Caroline, both of whom for the sixteen months preceding had been in very poor health, but after which they became strong and vigorous. When Brother Briggs sat down, Brother Gurley arose and spoke with great liberty and power in the spirit of prophecy.

The manifestation of the Spirit of God on this occasion was greater, more searching and assuring than anything I had ever before witnessed.

Relating these experiences to my wife, and assuring her that the young men were indeed the servants of God (a matter she had doubted), she replied that she knew they were such, for the Lord, in answer to her secret prayer that morning, had given her witness that they were.

During the brief stay of these two inexperienced young ministers, the Lord gave abundant evidence through the Holy Spirit that they were his servants, and that their mission was indeed ordained of him.

The Life of Hubert Case

Part XVI

Central Michigan District

Hubert felt it an honor to follow one of the greatest missionaries of the Reorganization, Brother J. J. Cornish. Brother Cornish gathered in groups of people wherever he went; later these groups became branches. At the time Hubert was there, there were about thirty branches in the district. He found the field and his work very interesting. Among the men who were of valuable service as teachers of the priesthood were L. E. Grice of Saginaw, and M. A. Summerfield of Tawas City. At that time Bay City, Saginaw, Midland, and Beaverton were the largest branches in the district. His endeavor was to build up all the branches, and he worked among them constantly. Many young people were gathered into the church during his stay in the district.

An Unusual Healing

A very wonderful healing occurred in Bay City. It happened to a Catholic woman, who had completely lost her mental balance and had been that way over four years. A lady who knew the family told Brother White and Hubert about her, asking that they go to see her. They went and found her in a most pitiful condition. The woman would sit in her chair without speaking all day long. She paid no attention to her husband or children and did nothing for them. Hubert and Brother White sat down and talked with her and the family. They explained the words of the Bible concerning administration and said that it must be done by those having authority.

After receiving family consent, they administered to her, and Hubert discerned that she was possessed of a dumb spirit. In confirmation of the anointing he rebuked the spirit, commanding it to leave her.

They went away, and her husband told them the next time he saw them, that immediately after they left she arose and went into the kitchen to resume her work, remarking how dirty things were. That, as far as they knew, was the end of her trouble. The family, however, did not seek to learn more about the gospel.

Converts at Whittemore

Hubert conducted a very successful meeting at Whittemore. After two weeks he held a Sunday afternoon baptismal service. At it he noticed a tall bald-headed man who listened very intently to every word. When the baptism was over he came to Hubert and asked him where he was to preach that night. When Hubert told him Whittemore, he said he would be there. The outcome was that he and his family—several daughters and sons-in-law—were baptized.

During the next month he traveled over the district, visiting all the Saints he could find in every branch of the district. At Whittemore the pastor asked him, when he returned, to visit each home and talk with the members, telling his experiences instead of holding preaching services.

One of the bright spots in his memory is the calling of the district to assemble at Beaverton to celebrate his fortieth anniversary in missionary work. This call was made by a counselor to the district president, L. E. Grice. A large crowd filled the church for an all-day meeting, and the whole day was wonderful. But the morning prayer meeting was a pentecostal shower of blessing.

When he returned home that spring, we made a short visit to Oklahoma, when our niece's son was graduated from Stillwater College. When we returned home we celebrated Hubert's birthday with a family dinner at our oldest daughter's home. Hubert preached twice that day in the Stone Church.

Further Work in Michigan

Upon his return to Michigan in 1934 he preached with spiritual power at Houghton Lake. After that he drove and visited and preached continually until Christmas time, when he again returned home for a month.

He held a fine three weeks' series at Gladwin. Some were baptized, and all were strengthened. His work in this part of Michigan was a continual moving from place to place wherever he seemed most needed. As reunion time approached, he began seeking a suitable location. He found a beautiful grove near Edenville and managed to get the grounds which a wealthy man had prepared for a picnic area. There were several large buildings, one of which we used for services and others for dormitories and dining hall. The owner let us have the grounds and buildings rent free and attended the meetings as regularly as the Saints themselves. The next reunion was held there also, and when Hubert arrived, the owner, Mr. Wixom, showed him to a three-room cabin which he had built especially for Hubert to occupy. It was furnished, and Hubert with other missionaries were very comfortable.

Not long after the reunion Hubert came home for a short time, and I went back with him to Michigan for a while. We drove to Lamoni, where we stayed overnight with relatives; from there we went to Nauvoo and spent some time hunting in the old cemetery for the graves of my people. We then drove on and made many visits in central Michigan, which we both enjoyed very much. We drove pretty well all over the district, calling on the Saints and making acquaintances with many who have since moved to Independence. After about six weeks, we returned to Independence, and Hubert was asked to go to Sperry, Oklahoma, to hold meetings. With the consent of the missionary in charge, he went, held a two weeks' series and baptized twenty-two persons. After his return to Michigan his next important meeting was held at Midland, where he baptized quite a number and helped to reorganize the branch.

Other Appointments

In 1936 Hubert was appointed again to Oklahoma after seven years absence from that field. He started in at Tulsa and adjacent towns, going from there to Oklahoma City, El Reno, and on farther west. He continued to work in Oklahoma and Texas for ten years.

After the reunion in Oklahoma that year he was asked to go to Aledo, Illinois, for the reunion. There he met Brother Wilmer Gilbert, whom he had not seen for years. He was happy to travel over the Oklahoma country again, and reaped a harvest of baptisms. In company with Brother Z. Z. Renfroe, he went to Houston that fall and held meetings. From there they went to Fort Worth, Dallas, Wichita Falls, and back into Oklahoma. Hubert went on to Seminole to help reorganize the branch; here he held a series of meetings and baptized twenty persons. This helped greatly to build up the branch.

In 1939 I went to Oklahoma with him, and we decided to revisit our old home at Redmoon. We have always been sorry we did so because it was such a scene of devastation and ruin. The house had burned down. The trees that had been so carefully set out were cut down. There was nothing left but the cellar and cistern. We drove away with heavy hearts, and wished we had not gone.

One of the outstanding meetings of that year was at Canton, Oklahoma, where the members built a church while Hubert and Z. Z. Renfroe held a meeting. It was finished and dedicated by Elbert A. Smith before Hubert left the neighborhood.

That same year he took our grandson, Richard Montague Maloney, with him to the Bandera and Hearne (Texas) Reunions and from there north to the Guthrie, Oklahoma, Reunion.

Young People at Waterloo

When they returned home, I joined them, and we drove to Waterloo, Iowa, to visit my sister, Mrs. Vredenburg, and her daughter, Mrs. R. W. Travis. We were in Waterloo five days, and on Sunday we all attended service at the little church. It was a Communion service and there were only a few present when it began. As we stood for the opening hymn about twenty-five or thirty young people came in. The following prayer service was one of the most spiritual I have ever attended. Many—if not all—of these young people who came in were attending the Teachers College at Cedar Falls. They bore wonderful testimonies which made the meeting outstanding. After the meeting was over, we learned that many of them were from western Iowa, and their parents were well known to us.

When we returned home, Hubert took the train for Calumet, Oklahoma. There he held a series for the purpose of reviving the branch. He went from there to Bartlesville near the Kansas line, where he held an outstanding meeting with a goodly number of baptisms resulting. Some of the new members were ordained; this gave the branch some much-needed workers. He drove from one part of the state to another, as he was called, and there were always fine meetings and numbers of baptisms. He also held several series in Texas, which was also his mission field.

Houston

Early in January, 1942, we went to Houston for a three months' stay. We found an apartment and were at home by ourselves, except when we visited elsewhere. We were there by request of Brother A. V. Arnold, president of the branch. Hubert spent most of his time visiting families designated by Brother Arnold, wherein one or more were members; he tried to unite the family circle as he had done in other cities. Hubert assured them that he wanted no office in the branch but hoped for assistance in this work from each of them. It is a pleasure to say that he reaped a bountiful harvest of souls and left many families happily united in church work. He still considers that the uniting of families in church work is one of the best phases of missionary work.

The Valley

After visiting Houston we drove to San Antonio. While there we went to see the town of Bandera, which we had often heard was very near the place where the Lyman Wight colony had settled. We called on one of the members of that company, Mrs. Hay, a very old lady who was then confined to her bed, but who still could converse with people. She was one of the Ballantyne family who had married and remained in Bandera, after the rest of the company started northward. According to the teaching of Lyman Wight, "Young Joseph" was the true successor of his father, and when he took his place the people were to go to him and join his following; so most of these people had gone north. We visited the museum in Bandera, which contained a really fine collection from many parts of the world. But the part that interested us most was a small room filled with relics from the settlement of the colony. There was a copper plate with the names of the families that had been members engraved on it; also chairs, made entirely by hand; hand machines; wooden frames with cowhide seats; and pieces of harness made of home-tanned skins. We were much interested in all these things and advise anyone who visits Bandera to go to the museum.

In driving down to "the valley," we found we never before had driven so far in a straight line. It was practically without curves all the way south. We found the church (the only one of our denomination in the valley), took a cabin in Weslaco, and remained there almost a month. After we found the branch president, Eugene Wilder, he arranged for Hubert to hold a series of meetings for two weeks. We did lots of sight-seeing in this semitropical part of Texas, picking grapefruit from the trees for the first time. We also went through the grapefruit canning factory, watching the whole proceedings, from the vat of water where the rinds are washed to the cans rolling over the long counter to be labeled. It was an interesting visit.

Matamoras, Mexico

One day we drove to Brownsville, crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico, and drove to the town of Matamoras. It was astounding to see the difference so few miles made. Brownsville was a well-paved up-to-date city; Matamoras was like a town of a century ago with ox-drawn carts. We found a few things we could afford to take home to the grandchildren, but we had little time to stay and were soon on our way back to Weslaco.

When the meeting was over at Alamo, we drove to San Antonio. After a few days we went to Fort Worth, where another meeting was held, and then we started for home.

After the April, 1942, Conference Hubert returned to Oklahoma and Texas. This year he spent much time in eastern Oklahoma at Henrietta, Seminole, Harts-horne, Fanshawe, Poteau, and Wilburton. In the summer he held a tent meeting at Poteau; enough baptisms resulted to form a group capable of being organized into a branch. Brother Clifford Gaither donated a building, which was utilized as a church; this provided for the needs of the group.

A Fine Colored Family

Farther south in the state near Fort Lawson, Hubert held a meeting in a grove, where we had a large attendance and great interest. One interested listener was a colored man who sat by himself just within hearing distance of the speaker. (This was because of the segregation law in Oklahoma.) He was there every night and listened very carefully, but did not ask for baptism when a number of others were baptized. Afterward he asked one of the local elders to baptize him, and his request was granted. He talked the gospel continually to his own people until many of them believed. He subscribed for the church papers and bought many books. At length he had to ask for an elder to come to his assistance, as he had no authority to baptize. The man was ordained an elder and eventually baptized more than thirty people.

Hubert visited his home one day, taking Brother F. E. Dillon and a young missionary with him. Seldom had they enjoyed a more interesting visit. All members of the family belonged to the church and were interested in it. The man, whose name was Gassoway, played the piano and sang beautifully, and his son sang with him. The son had been graduated from high school and hoped to go on to college. The young missionary was much surprised and greatly interested in these people.

Walking in Obedience

By Florence Sanford Ourth

THE SCRIPTURES tell us that we are created in the image of God and Christ, who are perfect, we believe, not only in light and intelligence but also in physical being.

Matthew tells us, "Jesus grew up . . . and waxed strong." In his book, The Man Nobody Knows, Bruce Barton pictures Christ as radiating such a physical strength as well as a spiritual power that, at a word, disciples left their business to enlist in an unknown cause; crowds followed him wherever he went, partly, perhaps, because of his strength as a leader. He radiated a health that created faith and confidence in those who came to be healed. His strength was such that the money-changers dared not turn on him when he drove them out of the temple. Although he fell under the weight of the cross, his nerves were like steel carrying him calmly through the week of trial and the crucifixion.

Being created in his image, we also should have this radiant health and strength that truly reflects him. In Ephesians 4: 13 we are told that the organization of the church was set up for the perfecting of the saints that "we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature and the fullness of Christ."

WHEN THE GOSPEL was restored to earth, it contained the plan for the perfecting of every phase of our life. In Section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants is recorded the revelation of God's will in our temporal salvation, for he has provided the means whereby we can have this radiant health and strength.

This revelation, which we speak of as the Word of Wisdom, came to the church in 1833. In those days, food was thought of as something to keep up one's strength and satisfy hunger. But this revelation gives us to understand that there is a definite relationship between the food we eat and our health, both physical and mental. In recent years the science of nutrition, which is a comparatively new field, has vindicated this and has built up a large amount of knowledge that has proved vital to our well-being.

We find nutritionists, highly recognized in their field, saying:

The food an individual eats fundamentally affects his health, stamina, nervous condition, morale, and mental functioning. . . . Children can be made taller, more energetic, mentally superior to what they would be without the improvements in diet that are now possible. . . . The choice of one's daily food is a large factor in the ability to work at full efficiency and without undue fatigue. . . . Through our use of everyday foods we can build higher health and efficiency even in those who are already healthy and efficient. . . . If we have begun the full benefit of the newer nutrition soon enough we can add seven to ten years to our lives and these years are not to be thought of as added to old age; rather they are inserted at the prime of life. . . . Our knowledge of nutrition makes it possible to improve not only the life histories of ourselves but of our children and our grandchildren in ways which had been regarded as beyond the power of science until now.

The United States Government has worked out the Basic Seven Food Guide for well-balanced meals to help us make use of this newer knowledge of nutrition. And we discover it embodies the principles outlined in our Word of Wisdom. Reading this revelation we find first we are warned, even as Adam and Eve were warned about the food that they should not eat, that there are three things we should not use: wine and strong drink (and it has been suggested that we could well include the cola drinks in this class); tobacco; and hot drinks. Joseph Smith, through whom the revelation came, is on record as saying that tea and coffee are included in the term "hot drinks."

Then the Lord very simply outlines for us the basic foods which he has "ordained" for our use: herbs (vegetables); fruits to be used in the season thereof; flesh of beasts and of fowls, to be used sparingly and only in times of winter or cold or famine; and grain, particularly wheat, to be used as the staff of life.

BUT THIS IS ONLY HALF of the keeping of the Word of Wisdom, the other half lies in "walking in obedience to the commandments." Nutritionists have become very conscious of the outer man, but there is the inner man, the intangible part of us, the spirit that gives life to the body, that also needs nourishment. And this nourishment will be supplied when "we walk in obedience to the commandments."

Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word of God" (Luke 4: 4).

As a little girl I listened to my mother read the story of the Israelites who, because of wickedness, were punished by being bitten by poisonous snakes. Moses was told to erect a brazen serpent, and everyone who looked on it was saved from death. I could not understand why some were so stubborn that they would not look when they had every thing to gain and nothing to lose. Yet this was only a type, for many of us fail to "look" and study the Scriptures that contain life. Many of us fail to take advantage of the promise made in Deuteronomy 6: 2 wherein we are promised that the lives of our children may be prolonged by following the instruction, "Thou shalt teach them [the words of God] diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou riseth up."

Apostle Arthur Oakman once told us that if we would spend fifteen minutes a day in study and prayer, the church would move forward far more rapidly. The word of God would bring life not only to us, but to the church and eventually to the world.

ADAM AND EVE had the ideal arrangement. They were given both physical food and spiritual food; God came and talked to them often, and they were exposed to the light of his presence. We, too, have this privilege—though we may not be conscious of it—for God has told us that when two or three are met together in his name, there he will be in the midst to bless. When we go to church on Sundays and Wednesday nights we are exposed to the light of his presence; I believe our spirits absorb that light, even as our bodies absorb vitamin D from the sun.

From this close contact with God through study, prayer, and worship will come a growing faith that will give us peace of mind and sustain us in the emergencies of life. For no matter how careful we have been to eat the right foods, when fear, trial, and sorrow come it is our faith that will keep us from being shaken.

WE ARE TOLD that it is useless to attempt to cure disease dealing with the physical body alone, because the emotions and the mind affect glandular secretion and digestion. Fear, remorse, sorrow, anger, and hate are emotions which generate injurious compounds in our bodies, some of which are extremely poisonous, while agreeable emotions of love, happiness, gratitude, and cheerfulness generate chemical compounds of nutritious value that stimulate the cells to manufacture energy. During the heightened emotion of joy, we secrete a hormone that causes strength and endurance.

No doubt that is the reason the Lord has told us again and again, "Be of good cheer. . . . Lift up your hearts and rejoice." He has also told us, "Forget not the gladness of youth. . . . Bear the burdens of body which the spirit of healing . . . does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform that the blessing of peace may be upon all" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6, 9).

Obedying the great commandment to love God and our neighbors has a profound effect upon our well-being. All of us have seen the plain girl who, when she falls in love and is loved, becomes radiant and even beautiful. So important is the emotion of love that the Lord tells us we cannot afford to hate even our enemies.

He also tells us that love is expressed in service. "If you love me you will serve me." Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12 says, "Thou shalt not be idle." Work is necessary for our spiritual and physical welfare. That is why the Lord created a world with lots of work to be done. Dr. Arnold A. Hutschnecker, in his book, The Will to Live, says that the instinct to remain alive is bolstered by our desire to create, to discover, to accomplish; and everywhere, every day, people go about their tasks without weariness if they are enthusiastic about and believe in what they are doing. He tells us that muscles which are used do not age until late in life; a mind which is used need never age at all. When we stop learning, when we stop being interested, when we stop using our bodies, we begin to grow old.

THE HAPPIEST PEOPLE are those who have work to do and feel necessary to the welfare of others. And happiness generates well-being. In the "Golden Age" of the Book of Mormon we find that the people on this continent, to whom Christ appeared after his ascension and taught the way of life, record in their writings that they "did walk after the commandments which they had received from their Lord." And "the love of God . . . did dwell in the hearts of the people" and "surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God:" and as a result they "did wax strong . . . and became an exceeding fair and delightful people" (IV Nephi, chapter 1).

Archaeologists are finding in the ruins of Central and South America evidences of a culture that has not been equaled even by our modern races. Dr. McLester, President of the American Medical Association, says:

In the past, science has conferred on those people who have availed themselves of the newer knowledge of infectious diseases better health and greater average length of life. In the future it promises to those races who will take advantage of the newer knowledge of nutrition, a larger stature, greater vigor, increased longevity, and a higher level of cultural attainment.

There lies yet ahead of us the best years of health, happiness, and culture if we are willing to follow not just a "basic seven" but a "basic eight" which will include "walking in obedience to the commandments."

Brother E. Y. Hunker has said he is convinced that there are certain "key Scriptures" and if only we could get hold of them they would unlock much.

I believe the statement, "all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments," is the key Scripture in the Word of Wisdom that will unlock for those who live by it the blessings of . . . health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and [they] shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, will give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them.

What's in a Prayer?

By Naomi Russell

I'M NOT AT ALL SURE what the ratio of faith to logic is in the answering of prayer, neither do I understand how much human desires control the decisions of Deity, but of this I am fairly certain: prayer should be used with discretion.

I have known good people who have died of injury or illness despite the fact that hundreds of prayers were made for their recovery. I don't doubt that those who prayed had faith, and certainly their requests were, by human standards, legitimate. I have known of others, also seriously injured or dangerously ill, who have made miraculous recoveries after a single administration. Some of these have used wisely their blessings; others have prostituted them. One man, mangled in an automobile accident, was so grateful for the fact he received strength to endure the long period of painful convalescence and eventually was able to walk again that he pledged his life to ministering to others. Another man, dying of cancer, was healed through administration. He returned to his home a tyrant; he beat his wife and children until they had to go live with relatives; he ignored all the words of wisdom advocated by the church, and a few years later he died—an alcoholic. People have attempted to explain these unexplainables; I no longer try. There is a reason, of course, for God is above capriciousness, but we who cannot read the divine blueprint only frustrate ourselves by trying to guess at it. One thing I feel free to write on, however, is the etiquette of prayer.

WHEN I WAS VERY YOUNG I used to pray, the night before a picnic, "God, make the sun shine tomorrow." It didn't matter much to me if we needed rain or not; I was concerned only that the grass be dry and the sky clear, because if they weren't there would be no picnic, and I didn't want me to be disappointed.

Later on I prayed, "Dear Lord, please make this boy like me." The object of my desire changed often, but I felt no qualms about demanding top assistance in my campaigns. It never seemed to occur to me that agency should figure in to the situation. God, I knew, could do anything, and if all I needed to make me blissfully happy was the attention of one particular boy, then I saw no reason why I shouldn't tell Him to get busy and do something about it. I wonder, if I had received a revelation that I should cultivate a feeling of affection toward someone I didn't particularly care for, how I would have responded. I probably would have said, "Look, Lord, why don't you keep out of this?" Yet I asked him to "make" somebody like me.

AS OTHER PEOPLE, I sometimes try to camouflage personal wants by wrapping them all up in good reasons why they should be granted. I used to help plan League programs, and as I did so I often prayed, "Lord, help me to make this good. If there are nonmembers present, they may become interested in the church if they are favorably impressed by the quality of the service. Perhaps there will be those in attendance who are weak in the faith and will be strengthened if what I have to offer is just right." On the surface such prayers were in order, but underneath—so far underneath that I could hardly recognize it myself—was ego. I enjoyed having people say, "Where do you get such original ideas? It must be nice to be so talented!" So far as I know not one person was ever converted nor one "weak in the faith" made strong because of my efforts.

And speaking of talent, it took me a long time to realize that it is not something a person creates himself just because he wants it. Every normal person has some special ability; it is his to use or ignore, as he chooses, but he is not the originator of it. Some people are not satisfied with the gift that is given them, and, instead of cultivating it, they spend their lives praying for another.

A psychology teacher I had in college tried to point this out to the class one day by telling of a friend of his who thought he should be a surgeon. He wanted to relieve suffering; he wanted to make new discoveries in the field of surgery; he wanted the world to be a healthier, happier place because of the work he would do. He was a poor man and had to earn money the hard way to pay his expenses, but he did quite well scholastically and felt that the sacrifices he made were worth while. But when it came to working with cadavers—when he actually had to apply what he had learned—he couldn't do it. The whole business sickened him, and he had to give it up. So often we ask God to make us what we want to be whether we have the natural ability or not. We ask to be choir directors when we are best equipped to be primary teachers; we ask to be pastors when we are called to be deacons.

■ Twelve members of the French class, accompanied by Miss Ruth York and Miss Betty Mosier, attended the Slavenska-Franklin Ballet at the KRNT Theatre in Des Moines on the evening of April 14. There were four parts to the performance: Symphonic variations, "A Streetcar Named Desire," Mademoiselle Fifi, and "The Nutcracker Suite."

■ KGRA's second annual "Bigger Show" was presented Friday, April 24, in the Memorial Student Center. Norman Bernhauer, TV program director for Station WDAF in Kansas City, Missouri, was the guest star, and Charles Hield was M.C.

THERE IS MUCH I do not understand about prayer, but—unknown factor that it is—I know there are certain rules of courtesy to be observed. Perhaps there are occasions when we are justified in asking God to "make" something happen—when there is no underlying selfish motive and when it fits into the master plan, but what mortal is wise enough to know? It is better, I think, to plan an indoor rainy-day party as an alternate to a picnic than to pray, "God, make the sun shine." It is better to pray, "Help me to become likable," than to pray, "Lord, make him like me." It is better to pray, "Help me to be genuinely interested in the welfare of others, whether I plan the service or not," than to pray, "Help me make this good" with the idea of reaping compliments. It is better to pray, "God, direct me to use wisely the abilities you have given me," than to pray, "Make me what I want to be."

We might, next time we pray, listen to what we're saying. Are we sending up demands to heaven, or are we asking for help, with a "thy will, not mine" attached?

■ A welcome was extended to all students, faculty members, and town folks to visit the interior of the new campus dormitory, Patroness Hall, on April 19 and the Herald "Angels" at Herald Hall on April 26. Patroness accommodates 74; Herald, 43.

■ The sixty-voice Drake University Choir of Des Moines presented a concert in the Memorial Student Center on April 20. The concert consisted of religious songs, operas, and arias.

■ Miss Mariette M. Delahaut, at present teaching French and geography in a girls' high school at Dinant, Belgium, will be the foreign exchange teacher on the campus next year. She worked in Germany for Civil Service of the War and State Department of the United States during 1946-48, and in the secretariat for two sessions of the United Nations assembly in Paris, France. Miss Delahaut is qualified to teach French, Spanish, and English.

■ Members and faculty sponsors of the three Graceland communication staffs (KGRA, Acacia, Tower) were invited to a supper at the Coliseum on Thursday, April 30. A brief program was presented afterward.

■ Mrs. Effie Bell, Director of Women's Residence and counselor at Walker Hall, will sail on the "Queen Mary" June 10, 1953, to Europe. This conducted tour, The Olson, will take her into England, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and France. She will return to the United States in August.

■ The appointment of David M. Haseltine as Director of Housing has been approved by the Board of Trustees. Mr. Haseltine is a graduate of Graceland College, class of 1935, and has a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration from the University of Kansas. In addition to business experience, he has served as senior training officer with the Veterans Administration at St. Louis, Missouri. He also did personnel work with the Army during the occupation of Japan.

■ The Board of Trustees has approved the appointment of Lila Davis as teacher of women's physical education to replace Miss Doris Marriott. Miss Davis is being graduated this spring from Central Missouri State College with physical education as her major. She was graduated from Graceland in 1951.

■ The Board has approved the appointment of Harold Neal of Toronto, Canada, as a replacement for Mr. Graves. Mr. Neal has his Bachelor's degree from the University of Toronto. He has served as conductor of many orchestras and bands, including two years as conductor of the Toronto Civic Orchestra under Dr. Heins Unger. He has conducted the all-varsity mixed chorus of the University of Toronto and the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra, and has taught strings, reeds, and orchestra at Upper Canada College.

■ On April 8 an anniversary service of the Reorganization of the church was held by the campus congregation in the Lamoni Church. The "pioneers" were dressed in the costumes of those days. Each gave a testimonial of his or her experience. For the "lineage" Olive Thomas Mortimore spoke; for the newcomers, Barry Fuller. A fitting climax was an ordination service, signifying that the Reorganization carries on today.

Raymond Booker Outstanding Educator

five and one half years. He holds a Master's degree from Kansas State Teachers College and has begun work toward a Doctor's degree at the University of Alabama.

Brother Booker has been active in teacher organizations and was a national officer of the Department of Elementary School Principals of the National Education Association for seven years, advancing from fifth to first vice-president of the department. In that capacity, he represented the Southeastern Region, composed of the states of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, and North and South Carolina.

He is a former state president of the Department of Elementary Principals and is now head of the audio-visual department of the Alabama Education Association.

In the Mobile Public School System he is chairman of the in-service committee a system-wide group for profession improvement. He is president of the Mobile Teachers' Association and was the first president of the local chapter of Phi Delta Kappa, a professional society for men teachers.

To some men this would be a full-time job, but Brother Raymond, an elder, has found time to serve in his local branch. He has acted as pastor, associate pastor, church school teacher, youth leader, and Boy Scout leader. At the present time he is pastor of the Robertsdale, Alabama, Branch, and a member of the curriculum advisory committee of the General Church department of religious education.

Brother Raymond's greatest ministry has probably been in the many hours given to young people in counseling. Many of the men and women in the South can bear testimony of the encouragement and inspiration which they found through conversation with him.

These are tributes valued by any educator.

BARBARA PEAVY

"To prepare us for complete living is the function which education has to discharge," Spencer said. The challenge of directing minds of young people came early to Raymond Booker. Today his training, devotion, and skill have been rewarded. Not only can he see in the lives of the young people of the South some of his dreams becoming realities, but as the new assistant to the superintendent of the Mobile County public school system, he will have greater opportunities to serve.

"Brother Raymond," as he is known by most of the Saints in the South, has held many responsible positions. He is a native of Missouri and has been with the Mobile County public school system since 1935, when he joined the faculty of Barton Academy. Before coming to Mobile, he was teacher and principal in Kansas high schools.

He has been principal of the Glendale, Prichard, and Prichard Homes Schools since December, 1949. Before that time he served as principal of a grade school in Mobile for

Editor's Note to Reporters: We are trying to share these columns with several hundred branches. It is obvious that to be fair to all, you should make your report brief (300 to 500 words) and send them in not oftener than twice a year. "Herald" readers are interested in your branch activities which have church-wide interest. If we find it necessary to further condense your reports, we hope you will understand.

Mission Organized

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—On March 5, a mission was organized under the direction of Percy E. Farrow, Apostle in charge of the Southern Mission. The group holds services at 118 East 21st Street. Elbert H. Powell who was appointed pastor has been conducting church school since then. Other officers appointed by Brother Farrow are treasurer, Louise Wyatt; secretary, Lucy Ann Enge; women's leader, Ola Edgar; young people's leader, Pat Varner; auditor, Walter B. Babcock; and music director, Joan Prager.

Brother Farrow was in Jacksonville, March 4-6 and conducted meetings. President Israel A. Smith joined him on March 6. Other visiting ministers have been Lee R. Oliver and J. D. Hall, Pensacola, Florida; George Hall, Milton, Florida; and Walter Wirebough, Bradner, Ohio.

The mission meeting each Sunday for church school is at 10:00 a.m. Preaching is held at 11:00 a.m. The Zion's League meets on Sunday night, and a study class meets at the same hour. The book Restoration: A Study in Prophecy, by Elbert A. Smith, is the topic for the study class. Prayer meeting is held on Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m.

The women's department was organized in December. It is known as the Friendship Circle. They have recently purchased a Communion set and songbooks for the church. On March 18, they sponsored a chicken gumbo supper.

The League was in charge of the Easter service, followed by an egg hunt and picnic at the home of Brother and Sister Babcock.—Reported by HARVEY POWELL

Present Hymnals to Branch

FLORA, ILLINOIS.—A sunrise service began the Easter activities, followed by a worship service conducted by the children's department, classes, a combined Communion service and Easter service, and preaching service in the evening.

On April 8, Rebecca Henson was baptized by her grandfather, Elder Otto Henson, and confirmed by Elders S. E. Anderson and Otto Henson.

The branch young people have purchased and donated one hundred Hymnals for Youth to the branch. These were dedicated at a special service on April 12. Floyd Henson, young people's leader, gave a short talk, after which he presented the books to the pastor, Harry Henson. The pastor then spoke to the congregation and offered the dedicatory prayer.

Several branch young people attended the Southeastern Illinois District young people's "Restoration Festival" in Mount Vernon, Illinois, April 18 and 19.—Reported by MRS. PRISCILLA HENSON

Men Ordained

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.—A branch business meeting was held February 23. The names of the following men were presented and approved for calls to the priesthood: deacons, Leo Nash and James Skiles; teacher, Floyd

Nichol and Athol Cochran; elder, John Leslie. Evangelist Henry Castings from Des Moines was the speaker on February 22.

The interior of the lower auditorium has been decorated, and a fellowship dinner was held to celebrate this accomplishment on February 25. A prayer service was held following the dinner.

On March 1, Brent Charles, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Neal Farris, was blessed by Elders Stephen A. Black and David Lohr. Evangelist J. Frank Curtis of Washington assisted with the prayer service on April 1 and taught the women's study group on April 2. He remained in the branch to assist with the Easter program.

The children presented the Easter program at the church school hour. Alma Smith, Mary Cochran, and Lela Brooks were in charge. Minnie Goodman was in charge of the decorations and Alma Swan led the singing. After the Communion service, Apostle C. G. Mesley gave the Easter message.

An ordination service was held in the evening when Dr. Athol Cochran and Floyd Nichol were ordained to the office of teacher, and James Skiles and Leo Nash were ordained deacons.

On April 11, the women's study group served the young matrons and husbands their spring banquet in the church dining hall. The Zion's League girls assisted in serving.

Elder and Mrs. W. R. Hillman of Fairview, Montana, and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Hunley of California were guests at the morning and evening service on March 15. J. T. Linder was the speaker. He was assisted by Floyd Nichol and three Zion's Leaguers, Margo and Linda Irwine and Eugene Nash.

On March 18, the branch held a covered dish luncheon. Following this, John Leslie was ordained an elder. He is to leave soon for the Armed Forces. Around seventy-five Saints and friends attended the services. On March 31, the Leaguers gave a pie and chili social to raise money for a sign for the church.

The junior choir presented a vesper service on April 3 under the direction of Alma Swan, accompanied by Delores Bone. Guests included Sherman and Irene Sheppard, and James Daugherty and son Harlin.

Fourteen women of the Joplin Branch attended the women's retreat on April 19.

Dale Swall of Lee's Summit, stationed at Camp Crowder, is serving in the music department.—Reported by RACHEL TROYER

Baptismal Service Held

BOISE, IDAHO.—J. F. Curtis from Spokane was a visitor in January.

G. Wayne Smith, district missionary, began a three weeks' series of cottage meetings January 4. The following were baptized at the close of the meetings: Sharon and Barbara McGill, William Dillon, Betty and Roberta Richards, Eugene Briggs, and Jimmie Funderburg. A week later Sam Thornton was baptized by Brother Condit.

The annual birthday dinner was held January 30. A table was set for each month. Admission was two cents for each year of age up to fifty years.

Several Boise Saints went to Nampa in February to a box social. The money raised was used for Nampa's new church building.

Leonard Hoisington from Portland, a former Boise resident, was guest speaker February 15.

Russell Ralston met March 8 with the Idaho-Utah youth camp committee. Those attending from Hagerman were the pastor, Lyle Gilmore, and family; and Silas and Reverie Condit; from Rupert, Pastor Tom Ultican and family. The youth camp will be held out of Pocatello next summer.

The women's group has been holding monthly luncheons. A plant sale was held at the close of the March luncheon and proved successful. The women's group put on a play the evening of March 21. The Nampa men assisted in the program.

Harry S. Fry, district president, was guest speaker the morning of March 16.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Foster have returned from Georgia where they attended the wedding of their son, Billy.—Reported by JOSEPHINE BRIGGS

Institute Held

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—Elders Percy E. Farrow and Franklyn S. Weddle were at the branch on February 4. Brother Weddle conducted a service on music for worship. Elder H. I. Velt was guest minister for a series of services February 22-March 8. Kodachrome slides were shown each evening at seven o'clock followed by a preaching service. A combined class for men, women, and young adults met each Sunday morning at church school for Brother Velt's class. Special music for the services was provided by Sister Anice McBride.

A priesthood institute was held February 28-29, under the direction of Elders Farrow and Reed Holmes, assisted by the pastor, Floyd Burt. The Miami and Orlando Branches attended. Brother Holmes conducted classes on practical teaching helps and how to increase the membership through activity.

Brother Farrow spoke on Sunday morning. The special music was by Sister Doris Fredrick of Orlando. Over one hundred and fifty people attended the service. Many areas of the United States and Canada were represented at the institute.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN

Entire Family Baptized

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.—The members of the local priesthood attended a district priesthood meeting in Durham, under the direction of Elder Gordon Farrow. Leslie W. Kohlman was a speaker at the meeting.

Missionary Al M. Pelletier held a series December 7-21. The concluding service was a baptismal and confirmation service. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Drury, Rose Merry, and Iris Dale Allan of Owen Sound, Eddie Tasker of Port Elgin, and Judy Mason of Wiarton were baptized. The following participated in the service: Gordon Farrow, Al Pelletier, F. B. Belrose, Aubry Mason, Iden Leeder, Joe Yager, B. Belrose.

Brother and Sister William Barnes celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on December 26.

The priesthood met again on January 25, at Durham. Apostle C. George Mesley met with them. Brother Farrow was associated with Brother Mesley.

Brother Pelletier officiated at a baptismal service on January 27. The following were baptized: Nancy Dianna, William Larry, and Douglas Lanselot Shrank of Port Elgin; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Dey, Arnold Walter Radimacker, William Saltone Hutchinson of Collingwood; Darlene Mercedes Baltus and Brother and Sister Thomas McGaskill Yates of Owen Sound. The above were confirmed the same evening by Elders B. Belrose, Pelletier, Carl Leeder, Harry Davis, Aubry Mason, F. B. Belrose, M. J. Perkins, and Lloyd G. Belrose. These baptisms introduced two new homes to the church and united two homes.

Brother Judson Carnahan and son, Allan, were baptized on February 4, by Brother Pelletier. Brethren B. Belrose, Pelletier, Gordon Farrow, and M. J. Perkins confirmed them.

In 1952, the branch purchased a new H. Minshall organ. This year plans have been made to alter the rostrum and buy new furniture.

Elder and Sister M. J. Perkins and Janice, formerly of the Toronto Branch, have been welcomed to the congregation.

Bill Carnahan and Frank Silverthorn of the branch are now attending Graceland College.

Sister Shirley Leeder was baptized March 8 by Elder Iden Leeder of Port Elgin and confirmed by Elwood Smythe of Toronto and Iden Leeder. This unites another family in the church. The Leeders are teaching school in Shallow Lake.

On March 15, a family was baptized. Brother and Sister John Ironmonger and children, George, Jim, June, and Gladys, were baptized. Joan Karn, a friend of the ironmongers, was also baptized. Brother B. Belrose officiated at the service. The confirmation service was held

Children Blessed

OELWEIN, IOWA.—The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: pastor, Evert McFarlane; counselors, Russell Shippy and Harvey Pratt; church school director and music director, Ruth Stella; secretary, Bernice Pratt; treasurer and attendance recorder, Margaret Shippy; solicitor, Russell Shippy; book steward and historian, Beth McFarlane; publicity agent and Herald correspondent, Odetta Brundige.

The women's group were very active this past year, under the leadership of Beth McFarlane. Eight hundred and seventy-six friendly visits were reported. There were several bake sales, one apron sale, and four suppers. The new leader for this year is Pearl Beckner. Meetings are held twice a month in the homes, with the hostess in charge of the devotionals. Church books were sent to the boys in service at Christmas time and plants and other gifts were sent to the aged members who were shut in.

The following children were blessed by Brother McFarlane: Connie Jo, Katherine Jean, Nancy Ann Marie, and Vicki Lynn, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Elve Bunting, also Susan Beth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Evert McFarlane.

On April 6 the group helped Brother and Sister David Smith celebrate their golden wedding with a surprise supper. A gift was presented to them.

Oelwein was honored by a visit from Israel A. Smith this past year. Other guest speakers were Elder Otha Clark, Atherton, Missouri, Elder D. M. Cassidy, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Elder Clarence Beal, Clinton, Iowa. The district president, W. J. Breshears of Rock Island, Illinois, has met with the branch several times.—Reported by ODETTA BRUNDIGE

Players Win Trophy

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—On October 26, the twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Accord were blessed. Judy Lynn was blessed by Elder Leonard Stiegel, assisted by Elder Clyde McKee. Jane Ann was blessed by Brother McKee, assisted by Brother Stiegel.

Martha Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Todd of Geneseo, Illinois, was blessed by Brother Stiegel and Elder Lee White.

The women's department presented a panel discussion on stewardship on January 16. Elder Charles Shippey, pastor of the Davenport Branch; Elder John Stiegel, bishop's agent; Evelyn Breshears of Rock Island, and Katherine Schroeder of Moline were on the panel. Leonard Stiegel served as moderator.

James Bradbury was confirmed by Clyde McKee, assisted by Lee White, on February 1.

A special business meeting was called by pastor, Orville C. Short, on February 4. Apostle R. E. Davey was in charge. Brother Short submitted his resignation which was accepted, and District President W. J. Breshears was nominated and elected as pastor of the branch. On February 8, Brother Breshears called a meeting of all priesthood, teachers, departmental workers, and members for the purpose of organizing a working plan.

The branch Thespians entered the Marshall Dramatic contest, sponsored by the playground and recreation commission of Rock Island, on February 13. They presented the play, "Sit Down to Supper," and won third place, receiving the Fort Trophy. The following participated: Joe Conolly, Leila Sutherland, Clyde McKee, and Russel Armour. The director was Winifred Stiegel. The Playcrafters Trophy was presented to Russel Armour as the best supporting player.

A spaghetti supper was held by the women's auxiliary on February 27. The profits are to be used for kitchen equipment. They have placed Feather in the Wind in the Davenport, Moline, and Rock Island public libraries.

A special priesthood Communion service was held on February 28. Sixteen members were present. Pastor Charles Shippey of Davenport and Pastor Richard Martin of Moline were special guests.

On March 1, the Zion's League with Ellen Roys as leader held an early morning prayer service. Elders O. C. Short and L. A. White were in charge.—Reported by ROSE BOWEN

Young Adult Group Active

BELOIT, WISCONSIN.—The young adults have been active completing plans to install a gas furnace.

A party was held January 31 at Mervin and Shirley Steinmetz' home with sixteen members of the group present.

On February 28, Clyde and Bessie Funk were hosts at Edgerton with twenty-four members of the group present. Twelve members were entertained at Eph and Pauline Johnson's home on March 21.

A social was held March 7 at which $39.40 was raised, making a total of $90.65 in the treasury.

An ordination service was held on March 29 at which Marion Hermanson was ordained to the office of elder by Elders Harry Wasson and Clyde Funk, and Gilbert Marshall was ordained to the office of priest by Brother Funk and Brother Wasson.

Baptismal Service Held

BRIDGEPORT, WASHINGTON.—March 1 Mr. and Mrs. Hight visited the church. Brother Hight lectured the men's group, and Sister Hight was the speaker for the women's group. Brother Hight also presented the morning sermon.

Elder Aleah Koury conducted a series which included slide lectures March 9-14.

A baptismal service was held on March 14 when the following were baptized by Brother Koury: Ruth Windle, Barbara Windle, Jay Windle, Jerome Windle, Jim Henton, Hazel Henton, and Yvonne Bower. The confirmation service was held March 29 with Elders Lovet, Johnson, Buckingham, Beck, and Landon officiating. A covered dish luncheon was held following the service.

On April 9 the Zion's League was organized under the leadership of Robert Buckingham of Wenatchee and Dale Johnson.

Dale Johnson, pastor, was ordained to the office of elder on March 29 by Brother Beck of Spokane.—Reported by YVONNE BOWER

Observes Family Night

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—Visiting speakers since October 1 have included Matt D. Crownover, Earl Wilcox, Lloyd Whiting, Marvin Cox, Jack Reninger, Harold Height, Bishop Monte Lasater, James Kemp, Harold Kluseman, Carlos and Melvern Crownover.

Family night is an outstanding occasion once a month. Attendance has averaged about forty-five and several programs have been given.

A vesper service was one event of the Christmas season, the main feature of which was the opening of the presents for the new church home Walla Walla Saints are enjoying. No solicitation was made, and no offering taken, but the gifts brought were valued at about $150. Other gifts have been brought since, until the furnishings are almost adequate.

Elder James Kemp held a series of services March 8-15. Special musical numbers were supplied by Brother Kemp, Mildred Faircloth, Mildred Cox, and Vida Fletcher. Mrs. Ruth Perry sang at another service.

The women's meetings have been marked by several outstanding programs.

Elder Orva Croft and wife have been a great help to the mission since they came.—Reported by LEOTA HILL

Training Class Held

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—The Zion's League sponsored a backwards box supper with the women buying the boxes on March 22. The proceeds went to "Operation Opportunity" which is a project started by our service boys in Korea to aid a Korean boy to attend Graceland College.

Elder Alan Tyree began a three weeks' missionary series with cottage meetings on March 22. The cottage meetings were alternated with preaching services at the church on Wednesday nights and Sundays. At the conclusion of the series five names were given for baptism.

A baptismal service was held on Sunday afternoon April 19. Mrs. Dorothy Cline and Mrs. Virginia Williams were baptized by their brother, and Sharon Kay Williams by her uncle, Howard Hays; Mrs. Doris Thornton and George Longworth were baptized by Joe D. Rook. Leonard Angel of Fairland was baptized by Elder O. A. Duncan. A confirmation service followed at the evening service. Mrs. Cline was confirmed by Elders Arthur Dixon and B. F. Kyser; Mrs. Williams by Elders Kyser and Alvin Smith; Sharon Kay by Elders D. W. Guinee and Duncan; Mrs. Thornton by Elders Matthew Crownover and Dixon; and George Longworth by Elders Smith and B. A. Howard.

The Graceland College Concert Band on its spring tour presented a concert in the Auditorium of the N.E.O.A. & M. College on the evening of March 30. They also played for the high school assembly in the afternoon. The Zion's League entertained with a mixer in the lower auditorium of the church following the concert. Members of the band and their sponsors were overnight guests in the homes of the Saints. Joan Staton of Miami is a member of the band.

About eighteen members of the women's department attended the district women's retreat at Racine, Missouri, on April 9. Several members took articles of handwork for the exhibit during the noon hour.

Pfc. Bob Adams who is stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, was a visitor at the morning services on April 19.

DIRECTS ORCHESTRA AT FESTIVAL

Elder Franklyn Weddle, General Church director of music, is proofreading the new German Hymnal. Brother Weddle directed the adult chorus and Independence Symphony Orchestra at the eighth annual church music festival on the evening of May 6. The chorus of 200 school children was directed by Aleta Runkle. Between 3,000 and 4,000 persons attended the festival.

LEAGUE CABINET IN OZARKS

Eleven members of the city-wide Zion's League cabinet of the Center Stake of Zion spent May 4 and 5 in the Ozarks. Elder Lee Hart, Center Stake youth leader, directed the Communion service which was held on Sunday.

MUSIC INSTITUTE HELD

Elder Franklyn S. Weddle, General Church music director, was in North Charleroi, Pennsylvania, at the Lock Four Branch on April 24. He preached the evening sermon. April 25 and 26 he was in Pittsburgh for a music institute which he conducted.

Facts About Pentecost

PENTECOST is probably the most ancient religious festival which we celebrate today.

In the ancient Jewish calendar, Pentecost, or the Feast of Weeks, was dedicated to gratitude to God for the gift to Noah of the "Covenant" (involving the regular and orderly sequence of events in the physical universe—"seedtime and harvest"). Later, Pentecost became associated with the giving of the Law to Moses at Mount Sinai, and in many countries there was a practice of holding services at which the Scriptures were read all through the night. While most other Jewish festivals were just for their own community, this one paid a great deal of attention to including strangers, or those of other faiths who happened to be in the home or community at the time.

The Christian Pentecost had its origin when the Christian community of Jerusalem (120 people) gathered together to celebrate this age-old festival, fifty days after the resurrection. At that time, according to the second chapter of the Book of Acts, the Holy Spirit which Jesus had promised his followers descended upon them in tongues of fire, and some three thousand converts were made to the new religion. Many historians date from that event the founding of the Christian church, and in particular its sense of world-wide mission and responsibility.

In the early church Pentecost ranked with Christmas and Easter as the third great festival of the Christian year. The Pentecost period (Easter to Whitsunday) was considered a time for special emphasis on evangelism. Whitsunday (White Sunday) on which the fifty-day period ends was so called because of the white garments often worn by the devout at this favorite period for baptism.

In 1953 Pentecost Sunday falls, in the Protestant, Eastern Orthodox and Anglican church, on May 24. In the Eastern Orthodox churches, which use a different calendar for figuring their church year, Pentecost, like Easter, is usually celebrated one week later than in the western churches. In 1953 the date is the same for eastern and western churches.—World Council of Churches Bulletin

YOUTH

It has been written and said that the young are cruel and inconsiderate. But lately I have met so many splendid young folk who have been kind and good that I have been wondering about that statement. Many of them have been hurt and treated unfairly, so they are defensive and afraid. But when they find that you love them, they drop the barriers between youth and age, their hearts warm up, and they speak their thoughts freely. This can happen only if you remember that you are their equal, never any more, perhaps a little less. The young want and need older friends, persons of experience. They are not class-conscious unless they are forced to be. I cannot help having a tremendous respect for the parents and the homes that have produced so many fine young men and women.

READERS FIRST

Clarence W. Hall, executive editor of "The Christian Century" recently gave this paraphrasing of the first and second commandments for editors:

1. Thou shalt know thy readers.
2. Them and them only shalt thou serve.

Explaining further he urged that each article should be examined by asking, "How many of my readers will be interested?" If the answer obviously is "only a few," then say, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

A SHORT RIDE

Life is like a journey taken on a train
With a pair of travelers at each window pane.
I may sit beside you all the journey through,
Or I may sit elsewhere, never knowing you.
But if fate should mark me to sit by your side,
Let's be pleasant travelers, it's so short a ride.

HANDICAPPED DOCTOR

I once read of a tremendous train crash in Britain. Suffering people, broken-limbed, writhing in excruciating pain, lay all around the tracks. Presently a man who didn't seem to be injured at all said, "Excuse me, but aren't you Dr. So-and-So?"

"Yes," replied the doctor, "that's my name."

"Well," said he, "why don't you do something? Can't you see all these people in agony!"

The doctor replied with tears pouring down his face, "I would—but I have no instruments!"

Today a bruised and dying world cries out to God, "Why don't You do something?" and God seems to reply, "I would, but I have no instruments!"—Stephen Olford in "Moody Monthly."

HOW BIG IS THE WEDDING RING?

It should be so small that there is no room in it for a third person, man or woman. It should be so big that it will reach around the world if, of necessity, the business of life takes the one party to the covenant that far from the other. The home is built around love—and love refuses to recognize distance.—From "Marriage and Home-Building" by Elbert A. Smith.

Study Course Texts

by APOSTLE MAURICE DRAPER

This 84-page, paper-bound book was the text used at the Institute in Evangelism. It includes some of the materials first published in 1942 in the "Missionary Manual." The information is clear, logical, accurate, and valuable to every-one participating in the evangelistic mission of the church.

Topics included are personal evangelism, missionary cot-tage meetings, missionary preaching, audio-visual materials, and questions asked and objections raised.

Recommended for reunion study by the Department of Priesthood Education.

Ways of Teaching

by KAREN ANDERSON

"Ways of Teaching" is the essential companion of every church school teacher. In clear, concise words, the book discusses the work of the church school, how to teach so that children learn, and many other important topics. Recommended for reunion study by the Department of Priesthood Education. Published by the Mulehberg Press.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

John W. Banks

BECAUSE SOMEONE PUT a young man to work in the church, today John Banks is an appointee pastor in Canada. He prepared to teach high school commercial courses when he was at Central Missouri State College in Warrensburg. After he taught one year in Seligman, Missouri, he went to San Diego, California, to become an employee in the Consolidated-Vultee Aircraft Plant. There's where his interest and service in the church were really expanded. He was placed in charge of the midweek prayer services, taught two adult church school classes each Sunday, and took his turn preaching. Here in August, 1942, he was ordained an elder by Apostle John W. Rushton. He entered the missionary field the same month.

In 1947 he married Corinne Tabor. They have two children, Deborah Ann, 3, and John Thomas, 1. "We love it in Canada," says Brother Banks. He is pastor at Chatham and president of Chatham District, his first assignment out of the United States. For nearly eleven years he has served as missionary in Arizona, California, Ohio, and Colorado, and as pastor at Kirtland, Ohio; Midland, Michigan; and Chatham, Ontario. While in Michigan he served also as district president of the South-Central Michigan District.

John has varied interests. He still retains an interest in sports which figured big in his high school days in Warrensburg. He and his brother Loy played in the Missouri state basketball tournament in 1934 and 1935. Their team won third in the state in the latter year. He coached basketball the year he taught. He enjoys photography. His special interests include theological literature and philosophical thought.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT BACK TO OFFICE

President Israel A. Smith has returned to the office to resume his regular duties following a week in the Sanitarium for a rest and a checkup.

BLESSES GRANDSON

President F. Henry Edwards was in Lawrence, Kansas, on May 10, where he blessed his grandson, David Paul. The child is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Edwards of Lawrence.

PREACHES AT SECOND CHURCH

President W. Wallace Smith preached the Mother's Day, May 10, sermon at Second Church in the Center Stake of Zion. Elder Herman Chelline is the pastor.

RECREATION CENTER FOR HOSPITAL

Seventeen civic and professional groups sponsored the National Hospital Day Tea and Reception held May 12 at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Two hundred persons were present for the opening of the new recreation center. Greetings were given by President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Henry L. Livingston, representatives of the board of trustees.

PREACHES AT STONE CHURCH

Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith preached at the Stone Church at the morning services on May 10. His sermon was concerning Mother's Day.

INSTITUTE IN TEXAS

An institute for priesthood members and women was held for the Southwest Texas District at San Antonio, May 23, 24. Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley and Apostle Charles R. Hield were on the program for the institute which had as its theme "Witnessing for Christ."

APOSTLE CHESWORTH IN IOWA

Apostle D. O. Chesworth preached in Burlington, Iowa, May 3, following the Communion service. That evening he preached in Fort Madison, Iowa, where representatives of five other branches had gathered. On May 9 and 10 he was associated with Elders Alma Andrews and D. L. Kyser at Brush Creek, Illinois, for a priesthood meeting of central and southeastern Illinois.

McDOWELL HONORED

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell has been announced as president-elect of the Independence Optimist Club, to take office July 1. He attended a district meeting of the club held at St. Joseph, Missouri, May 7, 8, and 9. Robert Andrew, a young church man, represented Independence in the oratorical contest. Elder Warren Haskins also attended the district meeting. Brother McDowell gave the Mother's Day sermon at Quindaro, Kansas City Stake.

NEW WOMEN'S LEADER

Sister Katherine Wilson was honored at a dinner following the last meeting of the Center Stake women. She was presented a gift by the women of the stake in appreciation of her services, and Sister W. Wallace Smith was announced as the new stake women's leader. The meeting and dinner were held on May 7.

God's Power Is Big Enough

"I will abide in thy tabernacle forever: I will trust in the covert of thy wings."—Psalm 61: 4.

THE SPEAKER was young, and he was doing his best to make the sermon a vehicle of ministry to the people. It was evident that at some time in his experience he had found God, and that he had come back from the meeting a changed man.

A great sermon may be summarized in a sentence or two. Its greatness derives not from the speaker but from the truth that his message bears.

In this sermon, everything that was said seemed to converge, in one way or another, upon this central theme: "God's power is big enough to cover all your needs." It was a statement that seemed to be forged in the same fires of trial and beaten upon the same anvil of suffering as the Psalms were. It was something that David, surrounded by danger and threatened by enemies, would have understood.

A MAN of many years of journalistic experience stood at the speaker's stand. In utmost seriousness he was trying to prepare the people before him for the technical and professional responsibilities of a newspaper career. He said this: "Newspaper policy is based on constant peril."

In the quest for speed in the gathering and publishing of news, the staff must try to avoid mistakes—the mistakes that destroy public confidence and endanger the paper. The mistakes that bring criticism, suits for libel, or protests from irate readers can be very costly. The editor must try to build his own small island of safety on a foundation of truth.

A Christian life is something like that. It is lived in constant peril.

The Christian soul is surrounded by danger. Yet it is possible to find an island of safety upon a foundation of truth, warmed by the sunlight of God's love.

WE ARE SURROUNDED by danger all our lives. There is danger of war—danger to our young men who must go away to fight, danger in new and more powerful weapons if an enemy should decide to attack. The electricity in our homes, the traffic on the streets, the presence of sinister persons and evil places in our communities, the threat of disease—all these mean that death is never very far away, from our days in the cradle to our rest in the grave.

Yet there are islands of safety in the world and in life, too. Job discovered one, David described them in his songs. Jesus showed his disciples the way to find them.

ISLANDS OF SAFETY in a sea of peril! Memories of the past and hope for the future pour into the mind.

We think of the church. Whether we enter it alone, or in a crowd of friends, there is something reassuring in the experience. When we are hungry for the presence of God, we come here to be fed. When the soul is weak, we come here for strength. Where there are decisions to be made requiring more than human wisdom, we come here for help. When life beats on the soul like a wild storm, we come here for a safe harbor.

We think of the Scriptures and turn the pages reverently, hoping to find some passage that will have personal meaning and application. We hold our small lives up to the great Standard, trusting that at some point there will be a fit, and a help.

We think of prayer as an island of safety. Storms sweep over the spirit, and we hope that our house is built upon the solid rock of eternal truth, not upon the shifting sands of worldly materialism. We touch that rock in the first phrase of the prayer, "Our Father." Prayer opens a window toward heaven, and the divine light streams down, sweeping the shadows of the storm clouds from the face of the petitioner.

We think of our home as an island of safety. Here are the loved ones. Here are the familiar treasures. Here is the refuge when we are sick, the comfort for discouragement, the support that lets us know we are not alone. Here is the family altar; here are the daily prayers. Here is the concern of those who love us, not because they must, but because they wish to do so.

GOD'S POWER is big enough. It is big enough to cover all our needs. It is bigger than this life. It is bigger than death. It is as great as eternity. It can never be exhausted, no matter how much is drawn from it. It is not the right of a privileged few to take it, leaving others without. It includes earth and heaven. It takes in pleasure and pain. It encompasses joy and sorrow. It can meet any emergency.

And it is for all of us. We are not little and unimportant in the sight of God. We are worth as much to him as anyone on earth.

Let us look at the stars. Our system of mathematics is not great enough to calculate the number of light-years of distance between us and the one farthest away. In all that space, there is no point to be found that is "beyond his love and care."

Official

Conference in Korea

While the following is of general interest to the church, we urge that special attention be given it by close relatives of servicemen on duty in Korea. The men who are on Brother Caldwell's mailing list have been notified, but we are certain he is not informed of the whereabouts of all our members in the Far East Command. Therefore, it will be helpful if members at home will assume the responsibility of sending the following to their acquaintances who are stationed in the Korean area.

The entire church is urged to give prayerful support to this splendid endeavor by our men in Korea. This will be the second conference held in that area, and we trust it will be successful. We are indeed appreciative of the co-operation of the military in making it possible for our men to obtain leaves and travel permits to enable them to participate.

The following is from "The News Letter From Korea," edited by Elder (Major) Millard Caldwell:

THE CONFERENCE PROGRAM (Tentative)

Location: Seoul City Command, Headquarters Area

Dates: June 6, 7, 8.

For Reorganized Latter Day Saint members only. Since this will be duly recognized by the Eighth Army authorities as an organized conference, they prefer to have only bona fide members in attendance. This measure is intended only to "cut out" those who would make this a holiday trip.

Saturday, June 6

Members should arrive no later than 1100 hours and go to the Seoul City Command headquarters to register and receive billet.

1330—Priesthood Meeting

1500—Preaching Service

1900—Business Meeting

Sunday, June 7

0830—Sacrament Service

1030—Preaching Service or Roundtable discussion

1330—Preaching Service

Remainder of day open for activities to be scheduled later.

Monday, June 8

No plans definitely made. The conference may have to be terminated Sunday night to permit men to get back to their units for duty on the morning of the ninth. It is not yet known whether the eighth (Monday) must be used as travel time or not.

Each unit will be notified through official (military) channels of the necessary data relative to issuing orders to men who desire to attend.

Across the Desk

From Victor J. Witte, Rotterdam, Holland, dated April 28:

We have been very busy since coming to Europe. The mission house in Rotterdam has been redecorated and, to some extent, remodeled. The Compiers have moved into the lower floor. They are good neighbors, and Anton is developing in his field of appointment. I have made two extended trips into Germany covering the entire mission, and have made the complete round of the Holland Mission and back to three places for the second time. Anton and I leave for Oslo tomorrow. Brother Oakman will meet us there, and we shall make a complete tour of the Scandinavian countries. Then we shall go back to Hannover, Germany, for a week-end institute on May 22, 23, and 24.

Brother Oakman had Louis Zonker and me come to England for the priesthood institute in Manchester. This was a fine experience for all of us. I appreciated the good spirit of the men in the British Mission. Apparently Don Lents is doing an excellent job.

Angels in Your House

A sermon preached at Buffalo, New York, January 25, 1953

By S. W. Johnson

ONE OF THE MOST disliked jobs on the newspaper for which I worked several years ago was the routine covering of the line-up of men arrested for vagrancy. It was obvious to anyone who had the assignment several times that the same faces appeared over and over again. To me this was discouraging, and I couldn't understand why these men didn't take jobs that were offered them frequently by war plants in the city.

A burly police sergeant answered my mute question one day by saying that these men had established no purpose in life other than mere existence, and since their lives on the city's curbstone allowed for that their grimy daily routine seemed sufficient.

About the same time that I was working on these assignments I became acquainted with a cripple who was a hard worker and a better-than-average newspaper man. His life had been one of sorrow; he had lost three children in the war and also his wife shortly after peace had come. Still, he did his job, and he did it well. His personal motto was "I always do the best with what I have to make this world a better place." Despite his handicap and his numerous misfortunes, he was the sort of person people liked to work with. His presence made the day seem brighter and the working hours go faster.

This man had a purpose.

THESE TWO EXAMPLES are actually stories of stewardship. One man has defined stewardship as the effective management of all one's resources toward the accomplishment of a set goal. These two types of men provide for us a study in contrasts. The vagrant on the street lacks a purpose which would require him to group his resources and take advantage of what the environment is offering him. Hence he must be considered a poor steward. The other man who works in the office has placed a goal in life which challenges him to assemble all of his resources so that he might more effectively achieve his goal. This man, by our definition, is a good steward.

This definition of stewardship would be changed somewhat if we applied it to religion or to the church, but its essentials would remain the same. Perhaps it would read this way: "Stewardship is the effective management of all one's resources for the building of the kingdom of God." He who is a good steward would be he who takes the advantages offered him by society, environment, and faith to help build the kingdom of God.

AS WE REFLECT upon the Scriptures we realize that it has been some time since Abraham entertained the angels in his tent, as recorded in Genesis. Many years have passed since the Lord told him of Sodom's fate and of God's gift to him, Isaac. But even through the elapsed centuries we realize that the message which the angels brought to the patriarch helped him to make his life more effective as he prepared himself for God's gift, and later as he prepared Isaac for God's use.

Though we now live in houses instead of tents, and though our homes are in America instead of Asia, we still have the opportunity to entertain angels every day. Perhaps the usual angel which we entertain is not a heavenly personage such as were Abraham's visitors, but the angel's purpose remains the same. We entertain countless angels every day who bring gifts from God to help us make our lives more effective.

For example, many of us entertain the angel of Good Health for years on end. This angel makes us more effective in reaching our goals by permitting us to do a better job in our particular efforts. Without it, we would have difficulty in doing many tasks which we perform each day without much conscious effort. Truly, health is a gift from God.

Intelligence is an angelic gift from God which makes us more effective. It gives us more productive power in our tasks and we turn out results faster and better because of its blessing.

Sometimes a little Pride or perhaps Faith-in-self acts as an angel as it keeps prodding us and prevents us from losing sight of our goals as have the men who are arrested as vagrants. Without this desire to accomplish we would be poor stewards indeed.

Purpose in itself is a blessing of God. When we entertain this disguised angel consistently we find that the fruits of our lives are developing faster and are more numerous than those produced by a wandering, aimless individual. Truly, this is an angel that we should entertain every day.

PERHAPS OF ALL THESE the greatest angel is Purpose. It was this angel which led Moses to the Pharaoh; it was this angel which stayed with the leaders of Israel throughout the journey in the wilderness. It was because of this angel that the Israelites took over Canaan, and thus it was the land of the Jews when the star stood still over Bethlehem. It was the angel of Purpose which led to that night.

It was the angel of Purpose that led a small group of men to pause in prayer and then vote for independence in the late eighteenth century. Yes, and it was this same angel that caused these men to write the articles of religious freedom on the pages of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Because of this angel moving in lives less than two hundred years ago, we are worshiping here today in safety and without fear of persecution.

There was a middle-aged woman in New York City who went regularly every week to a florist shop on Fifth Avenue and purchased several dozen roses for the grave of her son. It was the job of the florist to place the flowers on the grave, since she never visited the scene herself. Upon one visit, however, the woman said she wanted to take the flowers to the grave herself. Her doctor had told her that she was suffering from an incurable disease which placed definite limits on her life expectancy. The clerk, embarrassed, stammered a bit and then was forced to tell the woman that he had never taken the flowers to the grave but had instead taken them to local institutions and distributed them there. The woman was angry and promised never to return to the shop again, even if she should live. Months went by, and then one day the same woman entered the shop, obviously in good spirits and seemingly in good health. The story she told is one for us to remember. She, too, had decided upon reflection that she would take the flowers to the living and had endeavored to make as many trips as finances and her strength during her last few months of life would permit. Now she had outlived the most hopeful predictions of her doctors and was actually getting well. The doctors had told her that her new purpose in life had helped her get her mind off herself and her health was improving.

The angel of Purpose actually gave this woman additional years of life. Truly, such a thing must be a gift from God.

We have seen how the angel of Purpose played a vital part in the life of the Israelites and in the life of this woman living in our age. What place does this angel occupy in our life?

SURELY YOU HAVE SEEN the angel of Purpose in your life. It brings love into your life through giving at Christmas time. It gives you charity as you give to those in need. It brings you generosity as you give blood to the Red Cross or buy a sheet of Christmas Seals.

The missionary who visits you in your home has purposes and goals in life which give him added enthusiasm and effectiveness. The desire to spread the message of eternal life, to minister to the spiritual needs of men, and to see the building of the kingdom spurs him on to additional service. Yet the most effective missionary realizes that the only possible way he can help in this kingdom-building project is by being a good steward in all respects. He must organize his resources toward the fulfillment of this goal of kingdom-building.

THE TERM "STEWARD" stems from an Old English word meaning "he who keeps his master's goods." With this origin in mind we find the title of "steward" suddenly taking on new meaning and depth for us. It is not a mere definition of a good man; it is a title to be treasured and honored. From the Old English we find that the term later developed to mean "he who knows his master's mind." With this interpretation we see before our eyes the title of "steward" taking on all the aspects of a sacred trust. He who knows his Master's mind must certainly be a favored child in the service of God. He who is a steward certainly does have a title of honor and a position of trust.

Whether we are stewards or not has a direct correlation with our belief in God. An impersonal, cold, aloof God could own nothing and would have no contact or desire for contact with man. Yet the warm, personal, creative God which we worship must necessarily by creative inheritance own all. That which we have is merely held in trust for God. He who cares well for his master's goods is a steward.

In the treasured trust of stewardship God says, "This I have given."

Then when we file our financial inventory we are merely saying, "These gifts I acknowledge!"

And when we tithe we say, "This debt I honor."

Evidently no man takes upon himself the sacred title of steward who does not have communion with God in all aspects of the law. He then who does not obey the principle of the inventory cannot correctly obey the law of tithe. The Doctrine and Covenants (118: 4) says, "Let no man deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me." By this would we see that the man who does not account for his gifts or acknowledge them deceives himself and therefore casts out the angel of Intelligence and the angel of Purpose.

SOME HAVE SAID that they cannot read where the requirements for salvation specifically command the principle of inventory, yet the picture presented us remains clear.

The law says only one thing must be: "It is appointed unto every man, once to die." This is certain. The Scriptures do not say "This is thus," without qualification. They more often say, "This is the specific result of a certain action." Consequently the Scripture does not say man must be baptized. It merely says that he must be baptized to enter into the kingdom of God. The laws of nature, which are God's, do not say man must eat or must drink or sleep. Instead they say that he must do these things or suffer death. The law of stewardship is congruent with these in principle. God has never said that man must be a steward, but he has said that man, to have abundant life both here and hereafter, must be a steward.

God has given us the choice which we call agency in stewardship, just as he has given us the choice of loving or not loving our children. Stewardship should be a natural reaction to communion with God, just as love is a natural reaction to communion with our children. God has given us agency; agency is not a license for lawlessness but the liberty to do righteousness. God does not say, "You must." He does say, "You must, if!"

TO BECOME children of Christ we must understand his mind. This is one of the original definitions of stewardship. We must truly be keepers of our Master's goods, and we must necessarily become followers who know our Master's mind.

It is true that by our works we shall be known. And, to become heirs of the kingdom which we seek, we must have kingdom-building purposes and motives. Again the angel of Purpose enters into our life just as it did into the life of the cripple in the newspaper office.

The right purpose or motive is the root of our plant of faith. Obedience to the laws of God is the fruit of this same plant. Obedience to the laws of God entails a communion with God that makes our lives more effective.

It has been said that a church has no value except in its ability to contribute to the enrichment of personality and communion with God. We might equally say that a man or woman is of no value to God, the church, or self, who has not absorbed the frank and urgent call of

Random Thoughts

MY SON LYNN had planned to sit with me in the congregation during the morning service at Central Church in Los Angeles, but at the last moment he came to me and apologized, "I am sorry, but I must join the choir this morning. They are short handed." I asked, "Do they sing with their hands?"

My remark was intended to be funny, or at least facetious. However, before the week was over I saw a choir on television whose members sang with their hands. Not a word was spoken as they sang a hymn and as their minister preached to them. This was a congregation of deaf mutes. The choir, in robes, sang the hymn in sign language and apparently in perfect unison. It was a new experience to me—perhaps not to you. It impressed me again with the fact that devout men under any sort of handicap will seek to worship God and praise his name. What a challenge to those who are neither blind nor deaf nor mute!

About the latest thing I have heard is that veterinarians say most city dogs are neurotic. Deacon Goodentart would say, "It seems that our modern civilization is something that should not happen to a dog."

I stepped on the scales in a downtown store in Los Angeles, put a penny in the slot, and in return received the usual small slip of paper. On one side of the paper my weight was given—below par. On the other side was my character reading: "You are inclined to be haughty and proud. Think more of others and you will fare much better socially." The machine seemed to be in an especially bad mood that day. But what can one expect for a penny these times?

God for men to become stewards, a call to know his mind.

Zaccheus' giving one half to the poor was commendable; Mary's box of alabaster was not wasted; the widow's mite was a blessed liberality—all because they possessed loving hearts, and their gifts and actions were worthy expressions of their love. They knew their Master's mind, and their actions bore testimony that they also realized they were keepers of their Master's goods. They were good stewards.

Our activity in regard to the following of the financial law is designed to help and encourage us to do the same thing—to perform worthy expressions of our love.

From Two Prayers

Passing now from the ridiculous to the sublime. Recently I had occasion to reread copies of two prayers offered by two men of diverse temperaments—remarkable prayers by remarkable men.

Robert Louis Stevenson was a man of great talents who refused to permit tragic ill health to break his spirit. He made no formal profession of religion, so far as I know, but seemed to have a profound faith. These lines are from one of his prayers:

Lord, receive our supplications for this house, family, and country. Protect the innocent, restrain the greedy, and the treacherous. Lead us out of turbulence into a quiet land. Look down upon ourselves and upon our absent dear ones; give us health, food, bright weather, and light hearts. In what we meditate of evil, frustrate our will; in what of good, further our endeavors. Cause injuries to be forgot and benefits to be remembered. Let us lie down without fear and arise with exultation. For his sake in whose word we now conclude, Amen.

The other prayer was uttered by a man, given to the profession of religion and good deeds, known as Saint Francis:

Lord make me an instrument of thy peace. That where there is hatred I may bring love. That where there is wrong I may bring the spirit of forgiveness. That where there is discord I may bring harmony. That where there is error I may bring truth. That where there is doubt I may bring faith. That where there is despair I may bring hope.

Lord, that I may seek rather to comfort than to be comforted. To understand rather than to be understood. To love rather than to be loved. For it is by giving that one receives. It is by self-forgetting that one finds. It is by forgiving that one is forgiven. It is by dying that one awakens to eternal life.

A seven-year-old lad of my acquaintance was playing in the front room of his home. He was seized with an unfortunate ambition to stand on the davenport and dive across the coffee table. On the way he contacted a bit of glassware, a cherished family heirloom. The result was disastrous to the heirloom. The lad was banished to solitary confinement in his room. Soon, however, I heard him whistling. Tiptoeing to his door, I said, "Is that you whistling, Eric?" He answered, "Yes—but I am not happy."

It takes courage to whistle or sing or smile when one is not too happy. It is easier to weep on someone's shoulder. That may help, too, briefly, but not as a habit. Eric whistled his grief away, was released from his imprisonment, and came back into grace.

When I faced a very difficult trial in my life I said to a friend who also was my physician, "I don't know yet what I have back of it, but I am going to try to put up a front." That was a homely Yankee idiom—to "put up a front." My friend replied with an equally homely bit of philosophy, "Often it helps to put up a front—and then live up to it."

A Picture Lesson

By Robert J. Miller

HOFMANN'S PICTURE is one which is probably familiar to all who read this—the picture of Christ kneeling before a rock with clasped hands, praying to his Father in heaven. His face is lifted, and a radiance seems to emanate from it as he prays, "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done." In the background under a tree are the forms of three men deep in sleep. It is the scene in Gethsemane, before Judas arrives with those who will take him captive.

Recently I saw before this picture an assembly of children in junior church. Brother Myron Myers, a priest in charge of the service, stood near and invited the little ones to study it carefully for a couple of minutes. Then he asked them to tell what they had seen in the picture.

Instantly the little hands were raised with an eagerness to tell what they saw. All recognized the figure as that of Christ, and some gave information concerning what he was doing; still others mentioned the tree in the background, the three men sleeping, the glow about the face of Christ, the vine growing up beside the rock and the grass.

Through it all, I became aware of the wisdom Brother Myers was using, and had the assurance that he was directed by the Holy Spirit. Such verses as "Suffer the little children to come unto me" and "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones" came to mind, as I noted the manner in which he held their interest, gained their confidence, gave them assurance, and made them feel important and equal.

It was easy to discern the important thing which Brother Myers did not overlook: regardless of how small the observation, how unimportant the particular detail may have been in relation to the theme, he made it important. For everything in the picture was created by the power of God, and in every instance he was able to make an observation or point out a lesson.

Is it any wonder he held their interest and gave them assurance? Yet we have all seen this one point of teaching and administrative etiquette abused often.

It was a real pleasure to be a part of this service; to feel the eagerness, interest, and "sense of belonging" which each child displayed. Surely the Spirit of the Master was there saying:

Suffer these little ones to come unto me, and take heed that ye despise not [overlook] one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven.—Matthew 18: 10.

"The Seven League Boots" of Error

Legend: Error travels seven leagues while Truth is getting his boots on.

IT SEEMS that recent months have witnessed a "round" of misrepresentations about Joseph Smith and the work of the Restoration. We have been and are doing all possible to correct them; Brother John Blackmore is being kept quite busy in checking up on recent magazine and news articles.

One of the latest is taken from True, the Man's Magazine, April, 1953, issue, apparently from a question and answer department. It is as follows:

Q: Who started polygamy in the Mormon Church? Leroy Clarke, Shelbina, Mo.

A: Plural marriages were introduced by Joseph Smith, founder of the Church of Christ of Latter-day Saints. The church officially ended it by the manifesto of its president, Wilford Woodruff, in 1890.

Webster's Dictionary has eight different definitions of the verb "introduce." Under no one of them can it reasonably be held that Joseph Smith introduced or could possibly have introduced polygamy on the basis of the allegations of the Mormons themselves.

A person who is not a member of the Reorganization recently sent me the item from True and suggested he would like to see a correction in that Magazine. I have addressed the following letter to him:

When our members are alert and helpful in forwarding to us unfavorable or false statements about the church, we always endeavor to show our appreciation. How much more appreciative we should be when those not of the faith give evidence of their interest in our welfare. So, indeed, we thank you for your letter of March 25.

A number of persons have sent us clippings from True, and we have taken steps to do what we can to correct the error.

There are many evidences that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist and that he was not responsible for any such a doctrine as polygamy.

Recently I picked up a booklet, "The Story of the Mormon Pioneers," by W. Cleon Skousen. It was published by "the 223rd Quorum of Seventies, San Fernando Stake," which of course is one of the spiritual bodies of the Mormon Church.

Mr. Skousen, on page 12 of this book, states:

"Contrary to popular belief, so-called plural marriage was not one of the causes which led to the expulsion of the Mormons from Illinois. Nor had it been in Missouri. In fact, that principle was not made an issue until 1852 which was five years after the Mormons had settled in the Rocky Mountains."

Here is another and very authoritative statement taken from a Mormon publication, The Doctrine and Covenants, with introduction by Hyrum M. Smith of the Council of the Twelve Apostles and Janne M. Sjodahl, published by the Deseret Book Company in 1950:

General Notes

"As has been stated in the introductory notes, the doctrine of plural marriage was made known to the Prophet in 1831, or 1832, although the revelation on the subject was not committed to writing until the year 1843. It should be noted that even then it was not given to the church. This step was taken on the 29th of August, 1852, when the revelation was read to a General Conference in . . . Salt Lake City, and accepted by the assembly as a revelation from God and part of the law of the church. In voting for the revelation, the Saints firmly believed . . ."

I have italicized certain parts of this in order to deal specifically with them.

In the first place, we cannot keep from commenting that this statement was anything but ingenuous.

First, it is unthinkable that they had to speculate about—evidently very unsure—the year or time if and when such a startling innovation was first made known "to the prophet."

But it was not "given to the church" in 1843. That "step" was taken nine years after being reduced to writing and more than eight years after Joseph Smith was killed.

In the light of these statements is any candid and unbiased person going to conclude that Joseph Smith "started polygamy" or that, as True Magazine said, he "introduced" polygamy in the Mormon Church?

Now, it was not a General Conference (as stated) of the Mormon Church—it was a "special conference" called for the one and only purpose of—not "accepting" doctrine, but of sending or appointing missionaries.

And, to cap the climax of Mormon misrepresentation, there was no voting and no motion and no action of any kind taken on that twenty-ninth day of August, 1852.

In the famous Temple Lot case in the Federal Court, Judge Phillips said:

"Claim is made by the Utah Church that this doctrine is predicated on a revelation made to Joseph Smith in July, 1843. No such revelation was ever made public during the life of Joseph Smith, and under the law of the church it could not become an article of faith and belief until submitted to and adopted by the church. THIS WAS NEVER DONE." (Italics and caps mine. I.A.S.)

On that point, then, it is a case of res adjudicata, meaning an adjudicated fact.

In addition we have written to True asking that the editor publish a statement submitted to refute the magazine's answer to Mr. Clarke as well as to Mr. Clarke himself.

Question Time

Question:

Was Matthew in error in saying that Zacharias, son of Barachias, was slain between the temple and the altar (Matthew 23: 35, A.V.)?

(See Zechariah 1:1) Zechariah the son of Berechiah lived after the Babylonian captivity about 519 B. C.

Was Luke more accurate? (See Luke 11: 51) He says Zacharias (no mention of his father) perished between the altar and the temple.

Luke's reference could be to Zechariah the son of Jehoida who was "stoned with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord," II Chronicles 24: 20-22 (about 839 B. C.). The Inspired Version does not correct this.

Answer:

Difficulties often arise over points of personal relationship mentioned in the Scriptures, especially in the expression "son of" which the dictionary says "is used in Scripture language to imply almost any kind of descent or succession." It is sometimes used to express the relation of grandson to grandfather, or even more remote relation as in the case of Christ being the "son of David." The seeming conflict over Zechariah being the son of Barachias, and in another place the son of Iddo, may be thus explained.

In speaking of Zechariah, doubt as to the identity of the person named may very easily arise when we note that Dr. Young's concordance lists no less than twenty-seven different Zechariahs. The Priest Zachariah slain in the temple court at the order of King Joash about 839 B. C. might have been the one referred to by Matthew and Luke, but we doubt it. Jesus' statement, "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar," seems to refer to something more recent than the crime of Joash; in fact Jesus puts the blood of Zacharias directly upon the Jews of his day. It is not safe to assume that Matthew made a mistake here. Bible scholars and commentators have never agreed on the identity of Zacharias.

In the absence of any certain knowledge of error we would not expect any change to be made in the Inspired Version. Nor was it the intent in making the Inspired Version that such technical errors involving nonimportant points should be corrected. Had that been the policy we as a church would have been involved in a hundred disputes to one under the present circumstances, which however correct we would have had no evidence to maintain.

Question:

I have been asked concerning our attitude toward the book, No Man Knows My History. What is it? Ohio

H. W. B.

Answer:

The author of this book did nothing but republish in her volume many of the lies and misrepresentations that had been set out in various attacks on the church from John C. Bennett's book, published in 1842, down to the present.

Mrs. Brodie's book impeaches her integrity as a historian. This has been proved by Dr. Francis W. Kirkham and others, as she took statements away from their contexts that suited her inordinate desire to blacken the reputation of Joseph Smith, a thing no person of intellectual honesty will do.

She, by using a harmless statement by the Prophet as the title for her book—one that could easily be explained—placed on it a sinister meaning.

We have heretofore dealt with the question of "libel of the dead," but probably should restate: The English courts have sustained actions for libel brought by the descendants of deceased persons, on the theory that they were damaged by untruthful statements about the dead. But the American courts have held that living persons cannot be damaged by libellous statements concerning the dead. This is a strange law indeed!

Because of this American "law," we, the posterity of Joseph Smith, are precluded; we have no chance to maintain legal action for damages and therefore are barred from securing decisions—or even pursuing in court any claim that statements made about our ancestor are not true.

We are left to bear the burden of these untruthful things as best we may. The travesty of it all is that the Mormons, who have made the records in support of Mrs. Brodie, Vardis Fisher, and others of like ilk, still claim to be friends of the Prophet—strange as that seems!

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Question:

If Jesus was on earth in 1830, was he in body or Spirit? Since then, is he ruling his kingdom on earth from his throne in the presence of God?

Missouri

C. Mc.

Answer:

The prevalent belief that when Jesus ascended to heaven he left the world to the care of men, keeping himself aloof from earthly affairs until he should return at his second coming, is grievously in error. Christ perpetually maintains his oversight over affairs on earth (which is not to say that he determined all things as they occur, but that he overrules to the accomplishing of his appointed ends), and in so doing ministers by the presence and power of his Spirit, and on occasion when necessary comes in person as he did to Saul of Tarsus, and to John the Revelator, and later to Joseph Smith in 1820, and to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in 1836.

One of the prophets said that after his resurrection Jesus "standeth to judge the world" (Mosiah 1: 105). This has no reference to the final day of judgment, but to the continuing process of overseeing and regulating the affairs of earth, sometimes in blessing and sometimes in judgment. "The Lord shall come down upon the world with a curse to judgment." His "eyes are upon all men," and "mine arm is over all the earth." He is the "one Shepherd over all the earth," and he "shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst." No doubt much of his work is directed from heaven, but some of it is done in person.

George Adams

Reorganization Pioneer

By Thomas S. Williams

It is strange that men should see sublime inspiration in the ruins of an old church and see none in the ruins of an old man.—G. K. Chesterton

Recently my friend, Emmanuel Roberts, and I visited an old cemetery a few miles south of Lamoni, Iowa. The purpose of our visit was to locate the grave of a man who had been prominent in the early history of our town.

The inscription on the gravestone reads as follows:

George Adams, Died December 1, 1890, 70 years

Mary A. Adams, Died August 30, 1890, 74 years

The life story of George, unlike many biographies, does not have a happy ending. Much may be learned from a study of the life of this unhappy man.

While gathering facts for such a biography it is well to recall Carlile's words: "The worst in a man is not the real clue to him," and also Coe's from Motives of Men: "We have every reason to expect that minute scrutiny will reveal some sort of smallness in any great man. What we should beware of is the obscuring of what is admirable by the dust that goes into the air when these smallnesses are dug out."

The Saints' Herald of 1890 records that George Adams was baptized March 7, 1864, by H. H. Morgan at Watsonville, California, and that he "lived joyfully in fellowship with the Saints for many years." We find in the Pacific Slope Conference minutes that he was installed as president of the Watsonville Branch in 1863. The exact date of his baptism is therefore uncertain.

He reported his ministerial labors to the conference of the Watsonville area in October, 1864. It is written that many of the elders reporting to this conference were ministers in the day of Joseph the Seer. George may have been one of them.

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS Brother Adams was an ardent laborer on the west coast. In 1865 he was sustained by the Pacific Slope Conference as president of the Santa Cruz District. The years of 1868-70 he was appointed to the city of San Francisco, associated with Elder Hervey Green. Due to the distance of California from the headquarters of the church, the Pacific Slope Conference took on the features of a General Conference; hence Brother Adams' appointments by that conference. That his work was acceptable to the church is evidenced by a number of statements. In one instance Elder W. W. Blair wrote "George Adams is doing well."

The religious fervor of Brother Adams during this period of his life is revealed in a letter he wrote to The True Latter Day Saints' Herald dated March 6, 1871. I quote in part:

I send for publication the mournful intelligence of the death of Brother Josiah Butterfield, the beloved president of the Watsonville Branch. He died as he had lived . . . bearing a faithful testimony of the truth of the latter day work, and his word no man can gainsay. . . . Death to him was powerless at the approach of eternal life, and he will by the power of the redemption come forth in the morning of the resurrection clothed in a more glorious body to reign upon a renovated earth. O that his family may try to emulate his example and live as he lived. Then it will be well with them as it was with him. Death would be swallowed up in victory.

GEORGE ADAMS, associated with Hervey Green, presided over the Pacific Slope Conference in 1872. He reported that he had baptized two since the last conference and that he had labored to the best of his ability although he "had no faith in the willingness of the people to hear."

He also attended the Conference of 1873 held at Plano, Illinois. Reporting by request on the conditions in California, he stated that the people were indifferent to religion, the population being made up of an adventurous, speculating class. However, the brethren in that territory were doing their best.

At this Conference Brother Adams was approved as a member of the first quorum of elders. He did not return to California but located on a farm near Lamoni.

At this time Lamoni Branch, known as "The Colony" had a membership of sixty-four and was located about one and a half miles southwest of the present site of Lamoni. Here George again engaged actively in the work. His home was ever open to visiting elders. In a letter to the Saints' Herald dated August 9, 1873, Alexander H. Smith reported a visit to his home: "We enjoyed the hospitality of George Adams whose estimable lady made us as welcome as a mother could have done."

IN AN AFTERNOON SESSION of the fall conference of 1874 of the Decatur District, now known as the Lamoni Stake, George Adams was elected to preside over the district. However, in the evening of that day he declined to accept the presidency because he would be "unable to leave home enough to do the work." During the previous summer he had purchased a farm and found himself a very busy man. He had also become a stockholder in the United Order of Enoch.

Another fact which indicates that he and his good wife were held in high esteem is that during the visits which Joseph Smith made to the Colony he chose to abide in their home. According to a statement from Joseph, the Adams home was located on "one of the most southwesterly farms in the Colony."

It was in the Adams home that a historic meeting took place in 1877. There Joseph renewed his acquaintance with Moses Meeder of California. As a result of this meeting Mr. Meeder purchased a tract of land and deeded it to the church. Together they visioned this tract as being occupied by a larger and more permanent church building, the Herald Publishing House, then located in Plano, Illinois, and by church offices, by a storehouse, and by other structures foreseen by these church pioneers.

Two years later it was learned that the railroad company which had been expected to run a line through this little settlement had changed its plans. A spur of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy was about to be built connecting Leon and Mount Ayr. Accordingly Brother Adams sold his farmland and moved his house into the village.

Here he became the miller, having purchased a gristmill in 1884, from Peter Harris, then prominent among the church members. After four years of operation he sold the mill to James Allen. Today Willard C. Moon, grandson of the latter, operates a modern mill on the same site.

Within the village of Lamoni George Adams became as busily engaged in economic, civil, and religious affairs as he had in the Colony. When in 1879 it was learned that the railroad might be persuaded to pass through Lamoni on its way from Leon to Mount Ayr, several individuals almost immediately entered into an agreement to obligate themselves each in proportion to the value the assessor had placed upon his property to furnish the aid the company required. Brother Adams was one of these. He was a member of the committee which built the Brick Church. An ardent promoter of civil growth, he championed the incorporation of the town, and is listed among the voters in the election which brought that decision in 1885.

THIS BRIEF SKETCH of George Adams reveals that he was strong in character, firm in his beliefs, and dedicated to the promulgation of right as he saw it. However, according to the record, he and his good wife "in their later years met certain disaffected ministers and members who craftily plied them with harmful stories concerning Joseph the Seer till they became confused and darkened in mind."

This was a time in the history of the church when not all saw eye to eye on some organizational matters. Some broke away and organized according to their convictions. That George Adams, whose long life had been filled with good works, should become disaffected is sad indeed. We are convinced that he did so only after much anguish of thought.

George and his wife testified to many wonderful experiences during their active years, yet separated themselves from the group with which they had been so closely united when controversy arose over the organization of one of its quorums. Their lives support a statement made by Dr. Starbuck of the State University of Iowa: "Religion as an experience unites. Religion as an organizational pattern divides."

Two quotations from Thomas Carlyle come to mind also: "The gifted man is he who sees the essential point and leaves all the rest aside as surplusages." And, "Quackery gives birth to nothing, gives death to all things. We shall not see into the true heart of anything if we look merely at the quackeries of it." And from the Bell Telephone Company: "When we take our eyes off the goal we see the obstacle."

George Adams—stalwart, constructive, consecrated—was in his life the sublime inspiration spoken of by Chesterton in the opening statement of this biography. We catch a glimpse of it even in his distressed and heartbroken demise.

A MISSIONARY OF THE CHURCH

The Life of Hubert Case

PART XVII

Hitchhikers

Hubert attended the Texas reunions at Bandera and Hearne, afterward going north to those in Oklahoma. All of these were well attended and spiritual meetings. Many young people were in attendance at all of them. As he was returning home from the Guthrie Reunion he drove by Henrietta to settle some branch difficulty. From there he drove to Pryor, Oklahoma, where he stopped for gasoline. Here he met two soldier boys from Fort Sam Houston; they seemed to be entirely without funds and when they found he was going north asked for a ride. His car had but one seat and the day was extremely hot; he asked if either of them could drive; one said he could, so he took them along. That boy could really drive, and did so all the way to Independence. When they arrived at the house all was dark and no one was there. Hubert telephoned from a neighbor's to our daughter, Mrs. DeLapp. I had planned to stay there overnight, but they brought me home right away, and we soon went in. The soldiers were very tired and sleepy, so Hubert took them upstairs to bed, opened the windows and doors, and then prepared to retire himself. Next morning we gave them breakfast, and he took them in the car to Highway 71 so they could continue their way to Minneapolis.

Hubert often gave hitchhikers rides. Once, when returning to Michigan after a visit home, after crossing the Mississippi at Hannibal, he picked up a young man. He asked him who he was, and he told his name, saying he had worked for his brother at Carthage all summer and wanted to go to his home in Tennessee. He took the man into the car, found he could drive, and let him have the wheel. He drove all the way to Springfield, Illinois, while Hubert told him the story of the gospel. He never had heard it before, and he said as he got out of the car, "You have changed my whole life. I shall live like a Christian from this time on."

Training Young Missionaries

On our return to Independence, we stopped at Fort Worth for a short period, then drove on home to make ready for Conference. Appointed for the next two years to Oklahoma and Texas, Hubert had been asked to take certain young men and train them for missionary work. At first there were three who went with him for three months. Starting at Sperry and Skiatook they made a tour through Shidler, Kaw City, Ponca, Enid, Eagle City, Canton, Calumet, El Reno, Seminole, and Hartshorne in Oklahoma, and Dallas and Fort Worth in Texas. The four of them visited all these towns, holding meetings for about two weeks in each place. They finished at Wilburton, Fanshawe, and Poteau, then returned to Independence for the Ministerial Conference.

By Alice Montague Case

Later, with Jack Wight and Harry Engle he visited some other places. He has watched with great interest the development of these young men.

At Work After Superannuation

Hubert put in the rest of his time up to his superannuation in 1944 in Oklahoma and Texas, keeping as busy as he ever had been and traveling a great deal over the two states. He spent quite a while with Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, a man whom he loved to work with, during these last two years.

Having sold our house on West Walnut Street, Independence, we moved to 316 West Kansas, Independence, our present location. This was in May, 1944. Hubert did not slacken his missionary work but found plenty to do in Independence. Brother G. E. Tickemyer, who was then pastor, asked him to take care of missionary work in the city. He worked just as hard and put in just as long hours as he ever had, driving his own car and making from ten to twenty calls every day. He often administered to the sick, and there were many cases of divine healing. There were also numerous baptisms.

Illness and Recovery

This work went on for the remainder of that year and until April 18, 1945, when he was stricken with a blood clot on the heart. He was bedfast for fifteen weeks, but slowly regained enough strength to get about town and administer to sick ones in our home. Gradually he became able to go to others who called, as he does at the present time. The greatest compensation he feels he has received for the abrupt ending of his busy living and work is the time it has given him for meditation and prayer, which he seldom could find before. For the first time he learned how to pray in the Spirit and what it means to be wakeful at night, and pray and commune with the Father for hours at a time. It made him understand how Jesus communed with the Father, as is mentioned in the Bible. We celebrated our fifty-eighth wedding anniversary on September 30, 1952.

The End

Improving Worship Services in the Women's Department

A talk given at the Southern New England District Conference

By Kathryn Armeson

TO IMPROVE WORSHIP in women's work, let us discard some of our old, worn-out practices. The general song-reading-prayer type of worship has had its day and should be replaced with a change and purpose. Peter Marshall changed, with a purpose, the worship service of the Senate. His prayers were distinctive and had meaning for the day and hour. Washington's government men sought the inside room rather than the closed door of the outside when he conducted worship.

We want women to be inside and seated, looking forward to the worship period. Let's ease out the sewing and quilting some days for a good worshipful program (not "just-a" program). Let's make our non-member friends feel they are associates in our fellowship by giving them a part in it. We can do this without omitting any of the distinctiveness of Reorganized Latter Day Saintism. Our friends may learn something warm, wonderful, and different about our devotions, so we should never be backward in inviting them in.

What will bring about a change to make us all feel that we are drawn a little closer together and nearer God at our meetings? We are commanded to love God and fellow-men. To learn to love was the essence of Christ's teachings. God gave a pattern of how to love—"with heart, mind, and strength." In terms of everyday living we love with our emotions, our intelligence, our actions.

One of the ways we learn to love and worship is by using pictures. Before the day of visual aids we depend on the voice for pictures—mental pictures. Even today we do not always need visual aids for our interpretations. Sister Pauline Arneson can stand in a bare hall and present a worship period that makes us picture life as it should be. She has a quiet charm and a conviction that lifts our sights. Sister Blanche Mesley can stand in a basement with steam pipes overhead and paint verbal pictures of life and love as real as those on canvas. Brother Newman Wilson of Jonesport, Maine, has a gift of expression that makes us picture God's love for man down through the ages from Moses to Joseph Smith. The gifts of storytelling and intelligent delineating with words should be encouraged as a mode of worship. Mental pictures can produce emotions and desires in us that make us want to act the part of a Saint. Voice and drama and song form pictures for the ear, heart, and mind.

Graphic pictures have their place in worship too. A blackboard, an eraser, and a piece of chalk are the basic tools for illustration and may be used with good results, even by an inexperienced artist. Using the side of the chalk (first flattening the surfaces) one can easily sketch in the wooded scene of Joseph Smith's experience and teach a lesson on James 1: 5—" . . . let him ask of God."

There is another picture which works out well with flannelgraph board. I used this with Arthur Oakman's lesson, "The Everlasting Covenant," at a women's meeting. (By the way, Brother Oakman says the everlasting covenant in our Inspired Version—Gen. 9: 22, 23—of the Bible should be memorized and on the lips of every woman, man, and child in the church.) New light on this covenant came when I worked out the rainbow with Zion directly under it. We generally think, in our childhood, of the flood and the promise of no more deluges when we see it. But God set the bow in the cloud for a greater lesson; it was to be a reminder of a covenant with his people—applying to our day also—"when thy posterity shall look upward, then shall Zion look downward."

Vivid portrayals may be made on flannelgraph. In teaching the "Universality of God and Immortality of Man," I chose an ancient American Indian design symbolic of eternal life. (This is what I mean by bringing out the distinctiveness of Reorganized Latter Day Saintism. Use of the Inspired Version and Book of Mormon tends to point up differences, without being too pointed.)

The flannelgraph needs to be brought up from the children's department and used in adult work also. The lesson of Moses and the burning bush can be effectively depicted. We should stop with the words, "Take off thy shoes, for the place where thou standest is holy ground," and apply them to ourselves. On busy Sunday mornings as we comb the last curl, match an earring, and push the children so they will be on time, a voice might say to us, "Stop all this fuss; learn to plan better; the service to which you are going is a holy service." We, as Zion builders, need a lesson on holy places, emphasizing calm, serene preparation for ourselves, our children, our husbands. We should think of the admonition of God to Moses and check ourselves.

We need to look for thought-provoking lessons instead of sweet, easy-to-take lessons. They can give a higher spiritual tone to our worship together and to all our days thereafter.

We come now to some basic art pictures. Two "don't's" we need to remember are these: don't use art pictures too often, and don't use pictures for art's sake only. We should choose suitable pictures for the time of year, for the lesson of the hour, and for those to whom we are talking. We should use pictures in our worship services as carefully as we use them in our homes (for eye appeal and because it does something to us inside) choosing them for color, topic, and good placing.

The picture I have chosen for today is especially suited to Easter, but it also may be used on other very special occasions. It is "The Lord's Last Supper," by Elsie Anna Woods. I have chosen it instead of the famous Leonardo da Vinci painting because of its distinct lesson.

Let me review briefly the da Vinci lesson. This famous artist painted his picture on the walls of the monastery dining room in Italy. He used Italian figures and painted the same tables, dishes, and linen as the monks were using daily. It was to be a lesson to them. He centered his art idea around the unique statement of Christ's, "One of you will betray me." The picture is full of character study as each disciple is asking, "Lord, is it I?" This picture, therefore, has deep significance and should not be belittled or overlooked; just as it was painted for the monks, we, too, as women, learn that we must be constantly walking uprightly lest we at any time betray the honor and confidence placed in us by God, the church, our husbands, and our children.

This Elsie Wood's painting has a happier quality. She spent a great deal of time in and about Jerusalem, going back to the hillsides of Judea and Galilee to seek out the older Jews and their customs. She has painted much of their actual living. Many of these paintings may be purchased as slides for the projector and flashed on the screen for worship services.

In her picture Elsie Anna Wood has centered Christ with the light of the burning oil brightening his face and reflecting on his twelve disciples. The disciples are seated in different positions around the straw-colored mat on which is the flat round loaf of unleavened bread. The eye is immediately drawn to Christ's upraised hand, for in it is the cup. The artist chose the title, "And he took the cup and gave thanks." To me it brings warmth and happiness to the words, "Do this till I come," which words I like to remember at Communion service. Renewing our covenant with the Greatest One the world has known is our privilege on the first Sunday of each month. This first Communion was a very intimate occasion. Only the twelve came to this last supper. I can see the need of our priesthood members having their closed Communion at times. Perhaps there are times when we, as women, should have our own Communion—maybe a prayer-day worship service.

The Protestant Federated Council of Church Women holds prayer days of peace on which they serve Communion. We cannot pray for that world peace, because of our unique belief in Doctrine and Covenants 1, nor do we partake of their Communion, because of our particular teaching on priesthood authority. How much more, then, do we need to get together and have a prayer day for Zion, on which we repeat the covenant of Zion as set in the "bow in the cloud." Zion is the answer to world peace, and we hold it in our hand—waiting for "the spirituality of our people." We need only to love our fellow-men enough and Zion will come. Let us call in our pastor or another member of the priesthood and have a worship service of prayer and the Communion of the Lord's Supper. Then let us pray for the peace that only Zion can bring.

How do I use this painting of Miss Woods? In these days of three dimensional pictures I would take out, so to speak, the main objects—the cup and light—and place this silver Communion cup at the lower right—and the soft light of the candle here at the lower left. Then I would say, "You women of today have a work, a bigger and better work to do, for you are part of the great light in the world that can bring love and peace to all about you."

Into All the World—Through Study!

Leadership training classes are good for many reasons. A foremost reason is that of the possibility for evangelism, which is plainly shown in the following comment made by an active pastor:

I can see some wonderful results of our studies for credit. Two or three weeks ago I baptized Mrs. _____. She is an outstanding person, and we are glad to have her as a member. Also, I have baptized two other women, and Sister _____'s daughter. All of these are converts made through our study classes.

New classes are registering daily. Wouldn't you like to register with a class of friends to study for a special reason? Why not discuss it with your pastor? For details of the plan write to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Request a free copy of Bulletin No. 104.

The Good Old Days

By Marie Gosline

IT WAS PAUL who wrote, "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." Today we are strong on proving all things, but are we holding fast to that which is good? If this age would salvage all the good out of the past, add it to the knowledge of the present, and toss in a little of the vision of the future, what a wonderful age it would be!

Many of us would never want to return to the "good old days." Certainly not one of us would ask another to go back to the horse and buggy in the present era of automobiles, airplanes, radio, and television. The past—in the church as well as in other phases of living—is gone. Let's develop an upward look and aim toward greater accomplishments. Let's cherish our heritage in the church enough that we'll want to do something about it. The past is gone, but there are some good parts of it to which we should hold fast.

A few nights ago we were guests in the home of a family of musicians. The father—our host—was of Swedish descent. He mentioned that when he was growing up nearly every evening his mother would play the piano, his father the violin, and all the children would gather around and sing. He said he knew they may have been poor as far as material goods were concerned, but they were rich in spirit. He went on to say that he thought it was sad that homes today have lost this touch of the past which should be kept forever. Then he went to the piano and started to play. We sang everything from "Sweet Hour of Prayer" to "Beulah Land," which was probably our favorite.

*I'm living on the mountain
Underneath the cloudless sky.
I'm drinking from the fountain
That never will run dry.
Oh, yes, I'm feasting from the manna
Of a bountiful supply,
For I am dwelling in Beulah Land.*

AS LATTER DAY SAINTS, we, too, are "living on the mountain underneath the cloudless sky." We should therefore be extra cautious of our conduct and manners and appearance. We may think that it doesn't matter what we wear, that God looks on the heart only, but we must ever remember that we are on the mountain, and we are being looked at. Those in the lowlands know that we are Reorganized Latter Day Saints. If we are not neat and clean, if our homes are not well kept, if our gardens are full of weeds, our neighbors will notice and may judge the church by our standards.

A man who has gone far in his profession told me this story about a fellow named Bill who learned the hard way that it pays to dress well. Bill was ambitious and had plenty of ability, but he wasn't particular about his personal appearance. He came from a little mining town in the northern part of the state, and when he came to work in the city, he wore flowered ties (and they were big flowers) and striped shirts. Sometimes his hair was shaggy, his shoes were unshined, and his trousers unpressed. After Bill had lost out on a few promotions, his superior called him in one day and said, "Bill, please don't be offended when I tell you what's holding you back. I like you, and that's why I'm saying this. You're O.K. in every way but the way you dress. Now I don't expect you to go overboard and buy a lot of new clothes on your salary, but the next time you get a shirt, make it a plain white one. Then buy a plain tie, or one with a tiny stripe or figure. You can have your shoes shined for a dime, and your hair cut for fifty cents. It won't cost much for you to have your trousers pressed either. That's all, Bill."

This happened several years ago. The other day Bill took time off from his work as vice-president of a company to stop by and thank his former employer for the advice he had given.

JESUS EXPECTS MORE of us, as Reorganized Latter Day Saints, than he does of our neighbors. Remember that old story, "Scarlet Sister Mary"? It is about a young girl who lost her way and stepped from the narrow path. Two of the lesser characters were admonished by their mother, "Just because she's gone and done wrong doesn't make it right for you two to do the same. She doesn't have the blood in her veins you have in yours. It'd be worse for you to do it, and your punishment would be greater. I expect more—twice and over as much—from you as I ever did from her. She's not to blame half as much as I'd blame you if you did the same thing. Yours is a rich heritage, and it's your job to live up to it."

The Restoration Festival in Northwestern Illinois

RESTORATION FESTIVAL means many things to many people. Since the General Conference of 1947, it has been the Zion's League's way of celebrating the anniversary of the Restoration Movement. And yet, to each League it is unique, for each has its own method of celebration.

In 1949 and 1950 when youth work was organized on a district level in the Northeastern Illinois District, the celebration of the Restoration was included in the program. At the historic old stone church in Plano, which was the first headquarters of the Reorganization after Joseph III came to head the church, the first Northeastern Illinois Festival

As Saints we have drunk from the "fountain that never will run dry." We have His blood in our veins, and it would be worse for us to do wrong than for our neighbors who have not accepted the gospel message. Jesus himself has set the law for us to live by. We drink from the fountain on the first Sunday of every month. Does this Communion leave us with a clean heart and pure thoughts? "This do in remembrance of me" should mean much to us. When we remember the agonizing last days Christ spent on earth, surely we will put aside our pet grievances and grudges as we commune at his table.

We, of all people, should be "feasting from the manna of a bountiful supply." Christ has promised many good things to us if we will but heed his voice. We have much to be thankful for, and our heritage is part of it. Let's "hold fast to that which is good," but let's not stop with just a eulogy. Let's add that part to the present, with a taste of the future thrown in, and go on to greater things.

was held. This was under the leadership of Arnold Settles, district youth supervisor, and it set the pattern for future celebrations for the Leaguers in this area.

In 1951 the DeKalb Branch was host to the young people for their big event. In 1952 and in 1953 the services were held at Mission Branch. This is another historic branch of the Reorganization, being one of the very first church buildings after the Reorganization in 1853.

Some Leagues have banquets; some have parties; some have missionary series. Some Leagues have events scheduled over a whole week; some over week ends; some use a single day.

The Festival of the Northeastern Illinois young people is a one-day gathering, which in its classwork, luncheon, and worship services includes all the fields of emphasis in Zion's League work: worship, study, service, and recreation.

This year's Restoration Festival was held March 29. The theme centered around youth and the restored church. The early morning fellowship service set the tone of the day. The theme was "Heirs of the Kingdom" with Vernon K. Pettit, district youth supervisor, in charge.

The church school hour was devoted to a class on "Youth and the Financial Law," taught by Elder Arnold Settles.

Elder Lyle Woodstock, church appointee and president of the Chicago District, was the speaker for the worship hour. He used the topic "Youth Building the Kingdom."

Lunch was potluck served in the lower auditorium of the church. Here, through conversation and singing, social fellowship was established.

As a final service the young people joined in a dedication period. Two inspirational talks were presented by William Pike, Sr., district religious education director, on "Youth in the Early Restoration," and Burdette Heun, district bishop's agent, on "Youth's Avenues of Service Today." Responding to the occasion several of the young people gave short talks on "What the Church Means to Me."

This is the way Northeastern Illinois District celebrates the anniversary of the Restoration each year. It is one of the methods used by young people all over the world to show their devotion to their church. It is one of the methods by which the young people of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are united in the cause of Christ, regardless of where they live.

While I sat, entranced,

Running the hot sand through my

Feeling the wind's caress upon my

For two years he has been on the Communication Committee of the Louisville area of the Civil Defense Group and Chairman of the Communication Committee of the transportation section of that group.

Brother Burwell was baptized June 22, 1913. Three years after this he was ordained to the office of priest. He has served in various offices in the priesthood since that time, being ordained an elder in 1921; a high priest in 1941; and an evangelist in 1950.

He has found a great deal of pleasure in his work with the railroad company, for he travels to various areas and finds ample opportunity to minister to people.

He is well qualified to minister with his background of service. He has been appointed district president of the Southern Indiana District twice to fill out unexpired terms when General Church appointees have been moved. He has also held several district offices and for twenty years has served as pastor of the Louisville Branch.

Brother Burwell has stated his desire to serve as follows: "If I have a hobby it is to get acquainted with the Saints in the various parts of the country through which my work carries me."

From a "Herald" Reader in Korea

I want to express my appreciation for the privilege of being able to take the Herald while serving in Korea with the Marine Corps. I find the articles inspirational; they help keep a person closer to the right type of living. It is very easy to drift away from the Lord and indulge in things which are wrong when one is in service and does not have the association of church members.

I hope that by faith, prayer, and work we can help to bring about the building of Christ's kingdom here on the earth. If we each do our part, we can benefit humanity in all the world.

From a "Guidelines" Subscriber

No leader in the church should be without the information, help, and guidance found in Guidelines. This publication should be in the home of everyone interested in proclaiming the gospel and building the kingdom. It contains much that can be of help to all who are called to positions of leadership and responsibility in the church if they will but study and apply to their work those things that are presented.

When I received my first copy and began to read it I was not in the least sorry that I had subscribed. May God bless those who publish and those who contribute to Guidelines that each issue may be as interesting and helpful as the issues I have received.

Asks for Prayers

Many years ago I had the desire to tell others about this gospel, but I was made to know I hadn't applied it to my own life well enough to testify of it to others. Since then I have tried to qualify spiritually. I have been shown that the gospel will be preached here in Washington. Elders came twice last year from Oklahoma City to preach. There are only four of us here, but we may be able to have meetings some day that will interest our neighbors. I love to read the Herald; I have especially enjoyed Hubert Case's story.

We ask the Saints to pray that we may be able to establish the work in this town.

Tribute to the Crums

I have been fortunate in being able to spend a couple of Sundays a month in Tokyo with Brother and Sister Crum. They are doing a wonderful job here by helping add a little touch of home and church for the fellows who come in contact with them. It has been about five months since I first met them, and they have added greatly to my spiritual growth during this time. A day in their home has helped a lot of lonely fellows and given their souls a lift. The work they are doing is worthy of highest praise.

Through the Crums I became acquainted with Bob Baker of Idaho and Larry Davenport of Wisconsin as well as a number of other church members. Larry was wounded in Korea and was hospitalized for about ten weeks. The three of us have had some wonderful experiences together. Larry is back in the States now and we are happy for him, although we miss him greatly.

I want to pay tribute, too, to my wife, the former Loretta Arnold. We met at Graceland the year before last and were married September 23, 1952. She is a devoted worker in the church, and through her I have come much closer to God. Our deep faith in and love for each other has enabled us to bear being parted.

I am grateful that I have had the opportunity to talk to several fellows and help awaken an interest in religion in them. I feel that God has enlightened me on occasions so that I could tell the story of the gospel better than I could with my own limited ability. Here I have had a chance to tell my beliefs to others that I never had before. These conversations have been memorable experiences.

To whom are you telling the story?

Philosophy from a Korean Hilltop

I have just finished reading an issue of the Herald "from cover to cover" while sitting here on a hill in Korea. I want to thank the members of Flint, Michigan, Branch (where I was baptized as a youngster) for their thoughtfulness in sending the Herald to me and to others who are stationed in foreign lands.

I am part of one of a number of radio relay teams that form a branch of the communication system here in Korea. We are in operation around the clock, and if one of the relay stations should fail, it could result in the loss of many lives. We feel our responsibility keenly.

Since I have been here I have had little opportunity to attend religious services. Since we operate from mountaintops, we are isolated from camp activities, including religious meetings. In the six months I have been here I have gone to services only twice. But even this isolation cannot keep a man from worshipping God in his own humble way.

The other day I discovered a spring in the side of our mountain. I have watched the flow of this spring increase as days go by, and as I have watched, I've thought of it as a branch of the church, adding its bit to the larger stream (district) which eventually becomes a part of the ocean (Zion). When enough streams reach their goal, the ocean of Zion will become a reality. We each must strive to enlarge the springs that feed the streams that run into that ocean of peace.

I would like to hear from any who care to write to me.

NEW CHURCH IN AUSTRALIA

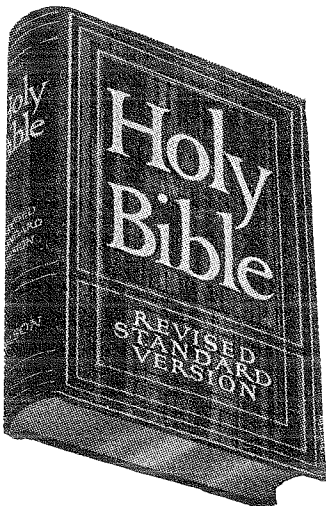

ONE OF THE OUTSTANDING achievements of the branch at Guildford, Sydney, N.S.W., Australia, was that on the opening day of services, April 12, in the new church, fifty-four nonmember children and young people from the surrounding district attended church school. The following Sunday this number was increased to seventy.

The mayor of Parramatta, E. A. Mobbs, represented the community at the opening service. Others on the program included Elders R. E. McLaughlin, Norman Smith, D. A. Alberts, W. J. Swain, and Seventies A. F. Burdekin, and Floyd Potter. The Guildford choir and Sybil Bannister, soloist, provided music for the service.

The building is a frame structure on brick foundations with tiled roof and brick vestibule. Total plans call for the addition of church school classrooms and social hall to give an "L" shape appearance when completed. The interior of the building has some very modern features, including fluorescent lighting. It is equipped with Queensland maple pews and chancel furniture.

Prior to the opening of the building the Saints met in the Masonic Hall. A steady growth in membership made possible the completion of the building. The congregation now numbers fifty-three. Brother Norman Smith, a local businessman, is the pastor of the branch.

A Christian Concept of Property

By the Reverend Calvin W. Franz

CONTRARY to the doctrines of Socialism and Communism that all property belongs to the state, the concept of private property is Christian, soundly and firmly based on the standards set by the early church of Jerusalem.

Now this must be rightly understood, for it has been subjected to much gross misinterpretation.

These early Christians had the "right spirit." It was that of love which was basic in the early Christian concept of private property. It is still basic, though much of the dispute over property results from an un-Christian spirit of covetousness which is the underlying evil.

Nevertheless the church of Jerusalem recognized the principle of private property. The disciple really did own his property. It was his; what "he possessed was his own." But confusion has arisen from the next statement, "They had all things in common."

This did not mean common ownership. It meant the ownership that recognized the Christian principle of sharing with those in need, the principle of stewardship as taught by Christ.

Furthermore, the owner of property thought in terms only of sharing his possessions when necessary, not the possessions of somebody else. The trouble today is that too many treat someone else's property, not their own, as if it were common property. But these are not "disciples," at least not of Jesus Christ; they may be disciples of Karl Marx.

The principle of sharing is Christian, and these early Christians shared with those less fortunate than they.

But how? Through the church. It was private sharing, not a bureaucratic hand-out of possessions taken away from others. And whatever one shared of his property or possessions with another was not done by law or by force. It was entirely voluntary.

The early church of Jerusalem recognized private property. The early Christians were property owners in name and fact, but they saw themselves only as stewards of their worldly possessions, and the duty of mutual helpfulness seemed to them as natural as that in the family circle. But private property was not sacrificed. No one was forced to sell his house or land. When it took place it was done by the constraint of love, and only where there was a real need was a donation given.

Davies, stake president, was in charge of the services.

Work has begun on the new church at Raytown. The pastor is Luzon Maxwell.

One hundred and three members of the priesthood of the stake met at Central Church on March 26 to make preparations for the stake Week of Prayer. Brother Davies was in charge of the service assisted by Bishop Howard Miller, Warren Hinderks, and other members of the priesthood.

A group of senior adult leaders from congregations in the stake met at Central Church on March 8 to discuss the progress of the program. Sister Gladys Carter, stake promoter of senior adults, and Fred Young, adult promoter for the stake, explained some points about the program and answered questions. Senior adults are now organized in over half of the congregations in the stake.

Missionary Endeavor in District

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—Over eighty members of the priesthood and their wives of this district and the Chicago District met for a priesthood banquet November 14 in Aurora, Illinois. On November 15, the men met in sessions all day with Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Seventy Cecil Ettinger, and Elder Lyle Woodstock. All-day classes were provided for the women on the theme "We Support Our Priesthood."

Several evangelistic series have been held throughout the district. Brother Ettinger was present in DeKalb for three weeks in January and five days at Mission Branch in February. Missionary Elder Delbert Smith spent two weeks at the Ottawa, Illinois, Branch. These services resulted in two baptisms.

On March 29 the young people of the district met at the Mission Branch for their annual Restoration Festival.

During its spring tour the Graceland College Concert Choir appeared at the Plano Branch for a concert and overnight stay on March 29. The Mission Branch was host to the group on April 2.

The semiannual conference of the district was held in Aurora with Brother Ettinger and Brother Chesworth present. Classwork was held on Saturday with Brother Ettinger presenting an illustrated lecture in the evening. A Communion service was held in the evening. Following a breakfast on Easter morning, Brother Chesworth preached at the morning worship service.

The business meeting was presided over by the district president, Lloyd Cleveland. Gerald Blakely of Plano was approved for ordination to the office of elder; John Pement, DeSelm, priest; Louis Howard, DeKalb, teacher.

Brother Chesworth preached following the business meeting and Brother Ettinger concluded the day with his evening sermon.—Reported by DOROTHY ANDERSON

Camp Schedule 1953

SCHLOTZHAUER.—Henry D., was born April 9, 1884, and died March 4, 1953, at his home near Rostock, Ontario. He served the church as a deacon, priest, and elder, being active in the Stratford and Rostock Branches for about fifty years.

He is survived by his wife, Caroline; three sons: Percy of Stratford, Alvin of Gadshill, and Howard of London; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. C. Stuart and Alex Smith. Interment was in Rostock cemetery.

TANDBERG.—Stewart Columbus, son of Mathilde Louise and Olaus Tandberg, was born March 8, 1903, at Toledo, Ohio, and died May 4, 1953, in Brooklyn, New York, where he had made his home the past fifteen years. His parents came to America from Oslo, Norway, in 1894, settling in Ohio, where they became members of the Reorganized Church in 1905. In 1912 they moved to Independence where Stewart was baptized on April 7, 1912. He was ordained to the office of deacon on November 7, 1926, and was a member of the Stone Church orchestra.

He is survived by a daughter, Oleen Louise Smith; a sister, Mrs. Mabel Short; two brothers: Hans Tandberg of St. Louis, Missouri, and G. Leonard Tandberg of Puente, California; and one granddaughter. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CONDIT.—Jennie Melvina, daughter of John and Charlotte Dennis, was born June 18, 1872, at Knoxville, Iowa, and died January 20, 1953, in Hagerman, Idaho. With her parents she moved to Malta, Idaho, in 1887, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 22, 1892. On December 29 of that year she was married to James Ervin Condit, and the following year they homesteaded in Hagerman, where they resided for fifty-nine years. She was a leader in church and community affairs, serving as a school trustee for years and holding various offices in the local branch. At the time of her death she was a church school teacher and district historian, an office she had held for seventeen years. She had been a constant subscriber to the Herald for over sixty years.

She is survived by her husband; two daughters: Jennie Mae Vreeland of Hagerman and Josephine Utican of Tuttle, Idaho; a son, Lloyd Condit of Boise, Idaho; six grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

KELLER.—Ernest G., son of Gottlieb and Frederika Bulling Keller, was born November 16, 1892, at Agnew, Nebraska, and died March 21, 1953, at his home near Eustis, Nebraska. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 15, 1917; in 1933 he was ordained a teacher, and in 1938 an elder. For fourteen years he served as pastor of the Eustis group, and for three years as president of the Southern Nebraska District.

He is survived by his wife, Bertha; two sons: Dana of Omaha, Nebraska, and Gerald of Albuquerque, New Mexico; a daughter, Portia Meares of Lansing, Michigan; a step-daughter, Velda Welch of Cozad, Nebraska; three brothers: Fred of Eustis; Theodore of New Raymer, Colorado; and George of Elwood, Nebraska; four sisters: Henrietta Shakespeare of Lamoni, Iowa; Julia Brölliar of Wilbur, Nebraska; Edna Faunce of Julesburg, Colorado; and Eva Hedrick of Atchison, Kansas; and seven grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Eustis, Elders Francis Schrunck and Clarence Williams officiating. Burial was in Eustis cemetery.

WALKER.—Walter A., was born July 11, 1890, in Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, and died April 23, 1953, at his home in Madison, Wisconsin. In 1911 he was married to Irene Ellis, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December 17, 1933.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Nona Dutton, and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Myron Curry. Burial was in Forest Hill Cemetery.

WILSON.—Wayne, was born December 4, 1895, and died April 4, 1953. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March, 1916, and was ordained (office not given) and served as pastor of the Indian Creek Branch in West Virginia for four months preceding his final illness. He also belonged to the Benikeyan Shrine in Charleston and the Chelyan Lodge, A.F. and A.M. He is survived by his wife, Laura, and five children.

...And Finally

HAVE YOU READ?

Once I forced myself to read a 1223 page novel because people whom I esteemed kept asking me, "Have you read _____ (name censored)?"

I'm glad more people are subscribing to the "Herald," "Guidelines," and "Daily Bread" than ever before, but I suspect it would help if you would say to them, "Did you read this month's or this week's issue?" and name some specially satisfying articles. C. B. H.

HELPFULNESS IN ZION

At the heart of Zion there are several kinds of help for the people. The first of these is self-help. For our own good and development, we must not ask God or other people to do anything for us that we can do for ourselves. A planned society must not take away individual initiative, enterprise, and responsibility. Zion will step in to help at the point where we cannot help ourselves.

It is the task of Zion not only to produce the good work, but also to train the good workman. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," said Jesus, thus establishing the dignity of labor. It is not the purpose of Zion to produce and support a society of pious drones. There must be many to do the helping. There will be plenty of volunteers to receive the help, and to need it. L. J. L.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Freedom of speech gives man the right to speak his mind and make known his opinions; yet it does not give him the right to malign his neighbor, or to say aught that is detrimental to his neighbor's welfare or the welfare of his country. However, he may condemn any act or condition which is harmful to the general public and he may work for the correction of the same. H. L. Whipple

A LIVING SERMON

I'd rather see a sermon
Than hear one any day;
I'd rather one should walk with me
Than merely show the way.

The eye's a better pupil
And more willing than the ear;
Fine counsel is confusing,
But example's always clear.

And the best of all the preachers
Are the men who live their creeds,
For to see the sermon in action
Is what everybody needs.

I can soon learn how to do it
If you'll let me see it done;
I can watch your hands in action,
But your tongue too fast may run.

And the sermon you deliver
May be wise and very true;
But I'd rather get my lesson
By observing what you do.

For I may misunderstand you,
And the high advice you give;
But there's no misunderstanding
How you act and how you live.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Frederick Crew Banta

I WAS TRICKED into becoming active in the church by being elected to the office of church school director when I wasn't present. Then I didn't have the will to refuse when told about it. To me it is evidence that God was working with me." This is the statement of Fred Banta, appointee guide at Nauvoo, Illinois.

Fred was born in 1923 at Houston, Texas, and was baptized when he was eight years old. He was graduated from Sam Houston High School in 1940 and studied two years at the University of Houston. In September, 1942, he enlisted in the U. S. Air Corps Reserve and was soon called into service. The majority of his three years in the army were spent in training, pilot school, armory school, B-17 and B-29 gunnery school. He was honorably discharged in 1946 and worked for a year with the Federal Public Housing Authority. He returned to the University of Texas in the fall of 1947 under the GI Bill of Rights, majoring in accounting. He received his Bachelor of Business Administration in 1949.

While attending the University at Austin, Texas, he became interested in life and its purpose. It was then he began seriously to look into that which he had possessed since childhood—his religion. He became active and within a few months began teaching a class. In his study for this class he began finding the knowledge he was seeking.

After graduation he worked for the Trans-Texas Airways and for a dredging company as office manager until May, 1952. At this time he went under General Church appointment.

It was in 1949 when, home from college, he was elected to the office in the church school. In 1951 he was ordained to the office of priest; in October, 1952, in Nauvoo District he was ordained an elder.

He married Janet Katherine Hall of San Antonio, Texas, on June 19, 1952. Of her he says, "She is the best addition to my life, other than my acceptance of the gospel. Her help and encouragement as a partner have filled a real void."

He is associated with the Boy Scouts of America and enjoys golf, tennis, and bowling as hobbies.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

IN WEST VIRGINIA

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp were present for the dedication of the church at Beckley, West Virginia, May 24.

ATTEND SPECIAL MEETING

President F. Henry Edwards was in town over the week end of May 17. He preached at Guggell Park on Sunday morning.

A special business meeting of the Kansas City Stake was held when Bishop J. E. Baldwin was set apart as stake bishop, and Elder Don Graham as member of the stake high council. General officers present were F. Henry Edwards and W. Wallace Smith of the Presidency, Apostle Roscoe Davey, G. L. DeLapp and Henry Livingston of the Presiding Bishopric. A vote of thanks for his services was extended to retiring Bishop Howard Miller.

APOSTLE IN NEBRASKA

Apostle D. Blair Jensen held an institute for the Central Nebraska District at Inman, Nebraska, May 3, associated with Seventy James Daugherty. He then spent ten days in Eastern Colorado District with a priesthood institute at Denver on May 10. He went to North Platte, Nebraska, for May 15, and held a district institute for the Southern Nebraska District at Grand Island on May 17.

IN CENTRAL ILLINOIS

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was at the Central Illinois District conference at Beardstown, Illinois, on May 24. On May 31, he attended the Chicago District conference.

DR. McDOWELL IN DES MOINES

Dr. F. M. McDowell preached at Walnut Park in the Center Stake on the morning of May 17. That evening he preached at Second Church. On May 18, he addressed the Men's Club in Des Moines, Iowa, at their annual gathering at which they entertain their wives.

ATTENDS YOUTH CONFERENCE

Elder C. D. Neff was in St. Louis, May 16 and 17, for a district youth conference. He preached in the St. Louis Branch on Sunday morning and Sunday evening. The district youth leader is Herbert Tourville.

BANQUET FOR SENIORS

One hundred seniors, pastors, and stake officials of Independence congregations attended a banquet given in honor of graduating seniors May 19. The dinner was served at the South Chrysler Church by the women's department under the direction of Mrs. Alvin Heaviland. Elder Herbert Lively, pastor of the Walnut Park Congregation, was the banquet speaker. The stake youth director, Lee Hart, was master of ceremonies. The invocation was given by Stake President Charles Graham, the benediction by Bishop Harold Cackler.

GIVES BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS

Elder Charles V. Graham, Center Stake President, was the speaker at the annual senior sermon program on May 17 in Independence. Brother Graham spoke on "A Great Idea." Elder Herbert Lively of the stake presidency read the Scripture.

Who Is Entitled to Celestial Glory

Question Time in the Herald for February 23, 1953, presented a discussion of baptism for the dead, in which Elder Ralston gave a quotation from Church History, Volume 2, page 16, which, according to the account given by the Prophet Joseph Smith, was "the voice of the Lord unto" him, as follows:

All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts.

A member of our apostolic quorum has written to the First Presidency as follows:

This week's Saints' Herald (February 23) carries an answer to a question in which Brother Ralston cites Church History, Volume 2, page 16. In this quotation a report is printed of a vision which Joseph had in the Kirtland Temple, January 21, 1836.

This vision has never had General Conference approval, has it? It was not presented as a revelation for action. Using an excellent contribution from President I. A. Smith last May, 1952, we are instructed as to the relative place of Scriptures, Inspired Version, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, etc.

Should this vision, which hasn't had church approval, and which does alter our message, be used to permit "celestial glory" as a possibility for those who did not accept the gospel on earth through the channel of baptism? Doctrine and Covenants 76:6 states that those who died without law, the spirits of men kept in prison and honorable men of the earth who were blinded by the craftiness of men, would receive terrestrial glory but not celestial.

Since getting this letter we have examined paragraph 6 to discover wherein the statement from Church History adds to or detracts or changes the meaning of paragraph 6, and since it seems reasonably clear, we see no necessity of attempting any explanation, and will satisfy ourselves—though it may not satisfy others—with a discussion of "The voice of the Lord" statement, which was quoted in Question Time.

We choose to leave with our readers the question of whether the statement of January 21, 1836, contradicts Section 76. If it does contradict it, it cannot take precedence, for the reason that Section 76 was approved by the General Assembly of August 17, 1835, and the "voice of the Lord," as given and as recorded in Church History, was never presented to the church for acceptance or approval.

Like some other speculative questions we encounter occasionally, we are of the opinion that there is no violent disagreement between Section 76 and this "voice of the Lord" statement—in fact no disagreement that cannot be harmonized within reason.

But if there is, our course is clear: Section 76 must prevail over the other.

Having said this, we wish to say that an analysis of the "voice of the Lord" in 1836 discloses the significant fact that whether those who had theretofore died would be permitted or those who live afterward would be admitted to celestial glory, in both cases, the judgment of the Lord would be on the basis—first and primarily and fundamentally—on "works" and "according to the desire of their hearts," that is, an acceptance of God's plan.

Latter-day Resurrection

We hear much about the crucifixion of Jesus, but much less respecting his mighty triumph, the Resurrection; much about the incarnation of the Word in the person of Jesus, but little concerning the crucifixion of the Word (truth) itself and its mighty resurrection into newness of life. In fact few of those termed Christians have even heard that there was a crucifixion and burial of the Word, let alone that the Word has been resurrected in all its fullness, beauty, and glory.

Jesus was crucified at Golgotha on a cross of rampant selfishness—between two thieves who may be said to represent the stealing away of our most precious gifts: truth and light. The two thieves are philosophy and tradition. Perhaps tradition may find a place in paradise, for it may reflect some light. But there is no place in eternity for the deceptive philosophies of men which steal away truth. There is no place in paradise, much less in Celestial Glory, for the philosophies of Aristotle as glossed over by Thomas Aquinas and blessed and sanctioned by the great church of the world as being "the word of the living God."

How precious then, to those who have had their eyes and understanding opened to see light and truth, is the resurrected fullness of the Word in the Book of Mormon, confirmed and established by the Inspired Version and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We have indeed witnessed a magnificent and glorious resurrection in our day.

Church on TV

We are pleased to announce that the Town Topics program on WDAF-TV (Kansas City) will devote its fifteen-minute program on June 1 to subject matter and personalities of interest to all members and friends of the church. To be presented at 12:15 p.m., the program will feature eight minutes of motion picture footage of the ancient Maya ruins in Mexico—with accompanying authentic Mexican music—plus an interview with Apostle Charles R. Hield to explain the pictures and the reasons for our interest in archaeology of ancient America.

The movies are a part of those taken a few months ago by Kenneth Raveill of the Audio-Visual Department. Production of the program is also under the supervision of that department.

Are the Children Ready?

All over the church, pastors are preparing the children who are anticipating baptism on Children's Day, June 14, by a special course of training. This text, prepared a few years ago as a prebaptismal course, is entitled This Is Jesus' Church. It contains an overview of the fundamental doctrines of the church and has some material for memorization.

Parents should take an interest in this training course, see that time is designated for the children to make the proper preparation for each lesson, and that the memorization work is completed. The child is especially susceptible to this training in anticipation of his baptism, but still he needs the interest and direction of the parents. This opportunity may not come again. We hope that it will be given proper consideration now.

Death of Dr. G. L. Harrington

Dr. G. Leonard Harrington, 67, well-known psychiatrist and former church physician, died at his home in Independence on April 12. Funeral services were held April 16, with Elder L. F. P. Curry in charge. His wife passed away exactly six months previous to his death.

Dr. Harrington was widely known as a psychoanalyst. He studied at the University of Kansas and in Germany, Paris, New York, and Chicago. A member of the American Psychoanalytic Association and the American Psychiatric Association, he was also associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Kansas medical school. Many who attended the last General Conference will remember him as a lecturer there.

Brother Harrington served as superintendent of the Sanitarium from 1918 to 1924 and was church physician from 1918 to 1925. He accepted both positions after serving overseas with the medical corps during World War I.

He was ordained a priest in 1907, an elder in 1915, and a high priest in 1916. He was also a member of the First High Council of the Independence Stake.

Surviving are a son, Dr. G. Leonard Harrington II, on the staff of Winter General Hospital in Topeka; a daughter, Mrs. Alice Myra Mosser, Minneapolis; a sister, Miss Evelyn Harrington of Independence; and a brother, Elbert Harrington of St. Joseph, Missouri.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Bishopric received a telegram from Missionary Warren Chelline May 22 saying that the tornado which hit Port Huron, Michigan, and Sarnia, Ontario, the previous night had done no damage to persons or property of members of the church.

Apostle Oakman writes that the rather extensive repairs to our Dutch property located at 2 Annastraat, Rotterdam, are going forward satisfactorily, and that Elder Anton Compier and his family are now housed here with the Witte family. Brother Oakman goes on to say that missionary prospects in England are excellent and there have been a record number of baptisms so far in the year; in addition, there are several decisions already at hand. A recent mission priesthood institute was well attended and was blessed by the outpouring of the Spirit. Brother Oakman took recordings of some songs by the attending priesthood; these have been since enjoyed by some of the ministry at headquarters, re-mindings those who have labored in the British field of the very moving quality of British hymn singing.

Herbert Scott, pastor at Des Moines, Iowa, sent the following clipping from the Des Moines Register.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The prayer in the house of representatives was given Monday [May 4] by Bishop Stephen Robinson, of Des Moines, of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints.

Representative Paul Cunningham (Rep., Ia.) said Bishop Robinson is the first minister of his church to give the prayer opening a session of the house. Steve C. Robinson, a son of Bishop Robinson, is a page in the house.

From Apostle Charles R. Hield, Marlin, Texas, May 16:

This is to report that I visited Waco and found none of our members hurt (beyond minor scratches) from the tornado. The home (rented) of M. R. Reneau was severely damaged so he and his family are moving to a new home they are rushing to completion. Some people had windows broken and chimneys damaged. There is no need of clothing or financial aid, I am informed, for our people. Several hundred homes were destroyed, however, and the central business area is ruined. People are not allowed yet in the worst area unless they have rescue business.

Seeking for the City

By Gerald Gabriel

But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. . . . For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.—Hebrews 11: 6-10.

SOME OF MY MOST enjoyable experiences have been those in which I have had a part in helping others to understand and accept the gospel. I have in mind a baptismal service when seven were baptized and the Good Spirit was much in evidence. As I raised my hand and said, "Having been commissioned . . ." I knew God had commissioned me for the task.

At the close of the service a man came to me and said, "Brother Gabriel, we don't want to rush you away, but the weather bureau reports a storm for this area this afternoon." I was out on the plains, two hundred miles from home. He knew what that meant, but as yet I had not experienced a storm in that area. As quickly as possible I started for home to be with my family during the holidays. Much of the highway was icy, but with caution I drove with ease for the first two hours. Suddenly the wind arose and driving on the slippery roads became more difficult. Soon snow began to fall and night was approaching. The fifty-mile-an-hour gale of wind blowing the snow made it impossible for me to look ahead any distance, and at times I could not see the road immediately in front of the car. I dared not stop because of the danger involved; all I could do was go on. For three hours I drove unable to see but praying and trusting I was on the road.

All at once everything cleared and I found myself on a knoll. I felt the wheels slip on the snow-covered highway and remembered that less than a month ago a car had gone off the pavement near here on just such a night as this. The driver was pinned in the wreckage and was found frozen the next morning. I continued to pray for help and guidance. The steering wheel seemed to be taken over by an unseen hand; I felt the car right itself, and I continued on my way. A few minutes later I was mounting another knoll, the roads were clearing, the sky was clear overhead, and the moon was shining. Suddenly Pikes Peak and Cheyenne Mountain loomed ahead in the moonlight with their snow-covered caps, and in the valley below was the city—my destination. I never saw it more beautiful. Christmas lights twinkled a welcome. All seemed to be peace below. It was my city of the "lost horizon," my "Shangri-la." A few minutes later, as I drove on, I saw the neon sign of a beer tavern with many cars surrounding it, but I sped on home where there was warmth, peace, safety, and love.

Looking for a City

The world, like Abraham, has been looking for a city which has foundations, whose builder and maker is God. King Nebuchadnezzar built a city laid out four square surrounded by a great wall some two hundred feet high, and sixty miles in circumference. The top of that wall was wide enough for four chariots to drive abreast. This city, in the minds of some, represented freedom, security, peace, a degree of equality, and was thought to be indestructible. However, it was captured in Belshazzar's day. As he drank wine from the sacred vessels of the temple he saw the handwriting on the wall. Darius is said to have turned aside the course of the river and to drive in on dry land beneath the great wall of the city and it fell.

The Greeks, likewise, tried to build a city secure. This was one of the earliest experiments in self-government. It also fell to another power—the Roman kingdom.

The Quest for the City

The quests for Utopia have had a tremendous influence upon present forms of governments, but each in its turn has vanished to be recorded as another dream.

I have in my library a book entitled The Quest for Utopia which contains a representative sampling of imaginary societies from 1850 to 1950. It explains about thirty such dreams of various idealists. As I study these imaginary societies, I cannot help seeing the vision of one age becoming a reality in the next. It is the spark that has stimulated the minds of great leaders for the reshaping of future societies. There seems to be several things in common about these societies. One is that the author seldom faces reality. To start such a society he must get away from the present state of affairs, so he either goes to a remote area where civilization does not exist or wipes out the present society with a catastrophe. The new society is then built by "wiser, healthier, more tolerant, and more generous" men in which there are freedom, security, peace, equality, and hope for survival. The would-be builders of a better society must face reality—a fact that Reorganized Latter Day Saints cannot overlook in their hopes and dreams for Zion.

The work of Edward Bellamy (1850-1898) has had more influence on Utopian thinking in America than that of any other man. His writings in Looking Backward and Equality are said, by some students, to be masterpieces. The book The Quest for Utopia by Negley and Patrick, published by Henry Schuaan, is a book of interest for Zion-minded Saints.

If you are reading for amusement try Chauncey Thomas' The Crystal Button, an adventure in the forty-ninth century; Dr. Theodore Hertzka's Freeland, John Macmillan Brown's Liamora, H. G. Well's A Modern Utopia, or Francis Bacon's New Atlantis. All of these are, of course, fictional.

Abraham was looking for a literal city, whose builder and maker was God. He must have expected God to use men in that accomplishment. Experiments of the past have most certainly had an influence upon today's governments. Plato's Republic, Robert Owen's "New Harmony Colony" and some of the other early attempts in America (those in Delaware date as far back as 1663), most of which were short lived, were influential in the forming of our Constitution and Declaration of Independence. Dr. Arthur Bestor's recent publication, Backwoods Utopias, lists some 130 of such attempts in America before 1860. Actually there have been about three hundred in America. Invariably these have had a tendency to grow clannish, tending to "draw a circle" that leaves others out.

One of the requirements for Utopianism is geographical isolation, and to some extent social and economic isolation—an "out of the world" idea—usually a self-sufficient community. About one fourth of these three hundred experiments died the first year. Religious motivation has played its part in these experiments by both Jew and Gentile. To mention only a few: Seventh-Day Adventist, Baptist, the Brethren, the Shakers, Church of God, United Christians, Mennonites, Moravians, Quakers, Amanas, and Latter Day Saints. In most cases these, too, tend to be short lived. With interest we note a few of our own. In the early Church: Kirtland, Independence, Nauvoo, Far West; later: the Order of Enoch, Lamoni, and Voree (James J. Strang's Order of Enoch in Wisconsin). Still more modern ones having a tinge of Utopianism are Atherton, Kennett, Walnut Park Development Association, and Nashua, all in Missouri.

Our Government Is Looking

From the beginning of our nation we have been looking for a city. The earliest settlers were looking for freedom. The outgrowth was the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the "Four Freedoms." During the years of struggle as a nation, we have had growing pains associated with panics which cause us to look for security. The results have been old-age pensions, child welfare, and homes for the orphaned, crippled, or insane, the ever normal granary, planned crop allotments, policies and laws to control our economic system, public works, and social security. The coming of the industrial revolution brought what appeared to be massed slavery at the bottom with the Rockefellers, Astors, Morgans, Fords, and Vanderbilts at the top. The struggle for equality brought competition, unions, labor laws, graduated income tax, higher education, hospitalization insurance, and other reform programs in the interest of the laborer. With the coming of the atomic and hydrogen bomb, germ warfare, and guided missiles, we now think in terms of survival. The United Nations has made some progress toward this goal. Brotherly love and concern have likewise progressed. The idea of "one world" is certainly having its effect. Yet we have many things to suffer before we learn to survive.

Zion the Kingdom

Some Saints have thought in terms of isolation—out of this world, self-sufficient communities—and have drawn circles to cut their brothers out. Jesus is said to have mentioned the word "church" twice during his ministry; the kingdom was mentioned about one hundred times. There were certain requirements to be met by the individual and society before the kingdom could be a reality, but as in many things about the kingdom, he was never specific. I suppose if he had not spoken of it in parables we would likely have been thinking in terms of the "letter of the law" rather than the "spirit of the law." We would be pharisaical by not going into the kingdom ourselves nor permitting others to enter. We would find ourselves in a straight jacket.

There are a number of things about the kingdom that can be defined:

1. It is to have a small beginning. It is compared to leaven, mustard seed, a pearl, a little flock. In fact, it started with one man—Christ—who was rejected. "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner" (Luke 20: 17).

2. It is to begin in the hearts and minds of men. It will be a God-man-brother (all mankind) relationship and bring about freedom through truth, security through love, equality through brotherly kindness, and survival through peace.

3. It is to be almost unnoticed at first. The kingdom comes not by observation (Luke 17: 10) but is like a net cast quietly into the sea bringing results by catching fish of every kind.

4. Yet it will become a marvelous work and a wonder. "The wisdom of the wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid." Man will not be able to direct his own steps, but of necessity will learn to depend upon God.

5. The kingdom will become an ensign to all the world. The world is seeking freedom, security, equality, and survival.

"And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations" (Matthew 24: 32).

And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go, and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2: 2-4.

For, behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come, when the nations of the earth shall tremble because of her, and shall fear because of her terrible ones. The Lord hath spoken it. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8.

6. Righteousness is essential. "Those who serve me in righteousness and in truth unto the end, . . . to them will I reveal all mysteries; . . . concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom"—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 2. (See also Romans 14: 17; I Corinthians 4: 20.)

Based Upon Certain Principles

The Sermon on the Mount contains some of the most important teachings of Jesus. The kingdom is not to be built otherwise. Modern-day revelation brings us certain principles also:

1. "It is my purpose to provide for my saints; . . . but it must needs be done in mine own way."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

2. "The fullness of the earth is yours."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4.

3. "Organize yourselves."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

4. Certain men shall be appointed to look after the needy (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8).

5. "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread . . . of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

6. "Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 3.

7. "Equal in temporal things."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

8. Pure in heart, of one heart and mind (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2).

9. Accountable unto God. Clean, frugal, noncomplaining (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9).

10. "Cease to be covetous . . . cease to find fault."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

The Kingdom as Leaven

I am sure the early leaders of the church would be much surprised if they could now awaken to see some of the teachings (for which they were persecuted) being taught by the popular churches. Here are a few of them: a revealing God, Christ as co-Creator, blessing of little children, the second coming of Christ, the millennium, stewardships, restoration of Jerusalem, restoration of the gospel, and the Gathering.

Joseph would be pleased to see the popular books and magazines telling of ancient cities being found in Central and South America. It would be most interesting to him to read some of the modern archaeological publications telling of the three migrations from the land of Israel and the dates 2200 B. C. and 600 B. C., worship of a supreme God, the bearded white God, having a description like that of Christ, the practice of Christianity before Columbus, knowledge of the Old Testament, and skill in the arts and sciences that in some respects surpass ours today.

Edward Partridge, the first bishop of the Restoration, would be pleasantly surprised at some of the present-day government programs that were not at all out of harmony with the teachings of the church in his day—the ever-normal granary (storehouse), Marshall Plan, old-age pensions, social security, orphanages, welfare programs (oblation), and the Farm-Home Administration Program (stewardship and private ownership of land).

We think it stupid that the Jews would not accept Christ as the Messiah because he did not bring them out of Roman bondage; they had traditioned themselves in the thought that his kingdom would be like that of David's. They were unable to recognize the potential when it was among them. They could have had freedom, equality, security, and survival under his teachings, but they demanded something else. I wonder if we are closing our eyes and saying much the same. Perhaps the little "leaven" is slowly losing its power to ferment.

"The Kingdom Has Already Come Unto You" (Luke 17: 22)

As I look back on that hazardous drive to my home before the Christmas holidays I am reminded of our hopes for the kingdom. My home city was there, and I had but to go to it. Once I had started the going was rough, but I could not turn back and still expect to reach my destination. "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God." Nor was I able to reach it without divine help, without sacrifice, without diligently seeking for it. I could have made other choices. I could have taken a chance and stopped the car to spend the night along the roadside (or what I thought to be the shoulder), letting the motor idle and hoping that I would not be overcome with gas from the exhaust, or that I would not be hit by an oncoming car, or that the fuel would hold out until the storm broke. When I saw the signs and advertisements announcing the tavern I could have said, "This is not the city," and gone elsewhere in search of it. It is recorded that Lucifer was once an archangel but was dissatisfied with heaven. II Peter 2: 4 tells us that other angels in heaven were dissatisfied and sinned and were cast out. I can hardly conceive of a kingdom where we will not have the opportunity to make choices, a kingdom where we will not have adjustments to make and problems to solve, or a kingdom in which we cannot work. I wonder if we were standing in the middle of the kingdom if we would recognize it or see something wrong with it and want to go some other place? When I arrived home I found what I had been seeking. The Jews have likewise been seeking the re-establishment of their homeland; they were never able to realize it until they were persecuted wherever they went and the time for the fulfillment of prophecies was fully ripe. The world seeks a City whose builder and maker is God—a city where there is freedom, security, equality, and survival. We march forward in faith looking for a city whose builder and maker is God. The following road signs along the way may be helpful and encouraging in our progress:

As I live, even so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah: and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men; and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.—Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3.

The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zionic conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.—Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5.

The hopes of my people and the goals of my church, while not yet fully realized, and at times and to many seemingly distant, are closer to realization than many recognize. It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed.—Doctrine and Covenants 142: 5.

The Eternal Hope

The kingdom is our eternal hope. Shall we not seek it diligently, regardless of turbulent times or evils that surround us? A way of freedom, peace, equality, security, and now survival calls for us as witnesses to all the world.

Pioneer Intolerance

That others than the Latter Day Saints suffered from intolerance and bigotry in Missouri is shown by the story of W. F. Sanders in the Kansas City Times for February 23, 1953.

Colonel George S. Park in 1837 bought land near the present site of Kansas City, Missouri, and platted the town of Parkville. In 1853, over twenty years after the difficulty of the Saints in Independence, he started there a weekly newspaper, the Industrial Luminary. Colonel Park in June, 1854, also established a claim in Kansas. Here the conflict between the slavery and abolition elements waxed strong when settlers from the East came to support abolition. In April, 1855, Colonel Park and 200 eastern settlers consolidated interests and established the town of Boston, Kansas, later renamed Manhattan.

Quoting from Mr. Sanders:

In the same year Colonel Park also was active at Parkville. The Industrial Luminary, started in July, 1853, in partnership with a man named Cundiff, soon was in trouble with the slavery element. The diary of Goodnow, now in the files of the Kansas State Historical Society at Topeka, relates under date of Monday, April 30, 1855:

"Rode to Parkville and dined with G. S. Park. He leaves next Friday to save his life from pro-slavery mob."

W. M. Paxton's Annals of Platte County gives this background of the trouble:

"After the frauds perpetrated in the Kansas election of March 30, 1855, the following article appeared in the Industrial Luminary; 'There is virtually no law in Kansas and no security for life and property, save in the sense of honor and justice cherished by every true pioneer. This may save the country from bloodshed; but the government is held up to ridicule and contempt and its authority disregarded.'"

The reaction of the slavery element was prompt. The Annals relate, under date of April 14, 1855:

"On this date the Kansas Leaguers (a subsidiary institution to carry into effect the decrees of the Platte County Self-Defensive Association) appeared in the streets of Parkville, their hearts fired by flaming speeches. The press was borne of many; a banner was hoisted aloft, and amid songs and acclamations, the press and material were consigned to the yellow waters of the turbid Missouri."

Colonel Park was away at the time. He was allowed three weeks to return and settle up his business, and to "leave the state or be hung," as the Leaguers put it.

George Park left Parkville but later was induced to return. In after years he was instrumental through personal and material support, in the establishment of both Park College at Parkville and Kansas State College at Manhattan. Unlike Joseph Smith, who also with his friends opposed slavery on the western frontier, George Park lived to a ripe age, dying in 1890 at the age of seventy-nine.

Every Man Is Accountable

By B. A. Galbraith

THE AVERAGE EMPLOYEE working at a pace which might reasonably be considered a fair day's work could increase his output by 25 to 100 per cent of present production" is the considered opinion of a qualified writer in a recent edition of the Harvard Business Review. This is condemning evidence that the average person, including good Reorganized Latter Day Saints, has not yet learned the full meaning nor the real impact upon our economy of a deliberate attempt to practice the law and adhere to the teachings of stewardship.

Each individual, to a greater or lesser degree, is patterned upon the preconceived ideas of his own making. We have a tendency to limit our effectiveness to contribute to our own and other's welfare by telling ourselves that we lack the ability and do not have the drive we so much admire in others. This may be true from where we now stand, but let us try to reason that the other person did not know that he was gifted with drive and ability until he put into practice the beliefs that he had. We must try out our convictions and enjoy the satisfaction of their realization. We should put into effect our hopes and aspirations. Too frequently we deprive ourselves of the satisfaction that comes with accomplishment by a shrug that "we don't care." We cannot justify an attitude of indifference when it is the Lord's good pleasure that we should have a more abundant life. If we have the will to do, and then with a conviction charged with knowledge do it, it is amazing how simple success really is. We should, however, guard against the self-centeredness that precludes all advice and counsel. If we have initiative enough to try, we should be intelligent enough to listen. One person's opinion or attitude toward a problem does not make that opinion final and binding. We should consider the opinions of those who have made a study of the subject matter of our concern. Only by giving a fair reception to the opinion of others, and then analyzing it in the light of our own knowledge and experience, can we hope to enjoy the mature thinking of competent people. Too often we misconstrue the meaning of someone's opinion or thought by our preconceived idea of what we think he meant or will say, influenced by our personal approach toward the subject.

WHEN WE READ the familiar Scripture, "Every man is accountable," we immediately think in terms of financial reporting to the Bishopric. We seldom look beyond the material into the mind that controls the material. When do we search out our personal possibilities for service by uncovering our innate abilities? We all have one or more developed talents, but we also possess natural abilities of which we have only a limited knowledge or none at all. This is the material we must mine and use in the building of the kingdom. The mind of man is a wonderful thing, but augmented by the inspirations of Divinity its possibilities are inconceivable.

Let us concentrate our thoughts on the effect of our contributing to the limit of our capacity. First, let us be honest with ourselves and establish the level we intend to live by. We have the choice of two standards. Will it be the one by which we are capable of contributing to the welfare of the over-all society, or will we be satisfied to meet the economic needs of the moment? In terms of modern technology this would mean that (1) sufficient goods could be produced to influence the economic law of supply and demand to the extent that all of our present purchases could be made for half price, or (2) just sufficient effort will be contributed to produce goods so that the means of livelihood is maintained. This last attitude is the factor which makes the disparity between dollar value and real value. Economic wages versus real wages means a depreciated dollar or a one hundred cent dollar. If we are making it difficult for worthy people to live off a fixed income, then we are accountable. We are conscious of the trust we exercise over the nine tenths of our means; we are conscious that it is proper to be a good steward of our money. Must it stop there?

A STUDY of the Apostle Peter informs us that he was not learned in the culture of the ruling class of the land in which he resided, but he did know well the sacred history of his own people. Interpreted into the language of our time this would imply that we have the choice of being a follower or a leader. To be learned in the culture and habits of the socially conscious people of today, we would have to know the popular brands, the brands of distinction, the etiquette of the cocktail party. Hours and hours would have to be spent learning the rules of canasta and other time-consuming forms of entertainment. On the other hand, to be learned in the sacred history of our own heritage we would necessarily have to spend time acquiring a knowledge of our history. We would be stimulated by the inhalations of the gospel philosophy; we would become intoxicated with the writings of Alma, the speech of King Benjamin, the counsel of Moroni, and the exploits of Helaman and countless others in the Nephite history—a part of the true history of America. We would be conscious of the admonition in Doctrine and Covenants, Section 85, to read all good books and become learned in the things that matter and are of consequence in developing a desirable personality. "To be learned

Together With God, by Elizabeth B. Jones, Warner Press, $1.00.

"It is not my purpose to give advice or to tell other parents how to rear their children. Being a parent is such a sacred trust that none of us feel qualified to tell others how it should be done." It is in this manner that the author—who, as the editors say, is a "consecrated Christian, Sunday school worker, writer, and successful mother of four children"—introduces her book. She does not claim to have written anything totally new, but the old has been presented in such a refreshing style that interest is held throughout. Mrs. Jones shares in a most charming fashion the richness of her own experiences in helping her children to feel "at home with God" and to "walk through an open door to worship and deeper love for him." She deals with such subjects as "Building Companionship With Our Children," "Knowing God's World Helps Children to Know God," and "The Importance of Teaching Christian Stewardship." These are only three of twelve intensely interesting chapters.

The book is very readable, far from stiff or "preachy," filled with many practical suggestions for all who desire to build and enjoy happy Christian homes. While written primarily for the parents of children from the ages of six through eight, all who love children and want to improve the spiritual quality of their homes will be challenged by this book.

The author hits upon some very fundamental truths which lie deep within the hearts of all consecrated parents. For example, she points out that if carefully nurtured in the teachings of Christ, the eight-year-old is capable of understanding what it means to become a follower of Jesus and is ready for baptism.

Consideration is given to many of the modern problems confronting parents. The author makes the observation that "radio and television can help to build happy memories, but can also be a definite menace to Christian family life" and says they should be regarded prayerfully and carefully.

Mrs. Jones places the responsibility of religious education where it rightfully belongs, emphasizing that the task of the church school teacher is that of supplementing the teachings in the home. She does not believe that parents are justified in shifting this blessed privilege to the shoulders of the teacher who has them such a short while. She brings out that "children are far more important than things, and time spent with them is far more rewarding and of eternal value."

"Thoughts for the Children" is a helpful feature of the book which has been included to make it of use for the whole family.

I would wholeheartedly recommend the prayerful reading of this book to all who have the building of strong Christian character into the lives of boys and girls at heart and would encourage them to walk together with God.

RUBY STRAND

The Better Church School, by John Leslie Lobinger. The Pilgrim Press, Boston, 1952, 160 pages, $2.00.

What is good Christian education today? How do the better church schools, large and small, get that way? Where are the answers to the common problems a branch has to face in achieving a good educational program? The Better Church School, challenging and practical throughout, gives satisfying answers to these basic questions.

Dr. Lobinger has spent years in helping churches build better church schools. Based on this experience he presents new ideas and refreshing reminders of the ones we already know. We believe that if all church school administrative officers and teachers would read this book, note parts for future reference, and make adaptation of recommendations where applicable, we would have many more effective church schools.

The affirmation, "Without teaching, the church has no future," motivates careful consideration of each chapter. The ten chapter headings are "What Are We Driving At?" "From Age to Age," "The Curriculum," "Memory Work," "The Place of Missionary Education," "The Home Comes First," "How Can the Church Train Volunteer Workers?" "Special Days in the Church School," "Do We Have Time Enough?" "The Responsible Leadership."

Each chapter closes with suggestions for group discussion and activity. Simple construction and creative imagination noted in the entire book makes for helpful and interesting reading.

JOHN R. DARLING

Making Good as Young Couples, by T. Otto Nall and Bert H. Davis, Association Press, price $2.00.

In my opinion this book should be on every minister's shelf. Making Good as Young Couples is a compilation of personal interviews by Dr. Nall, editor of The Christian Advocate, official Methodist weekly, and Mr. Davis, a businessman of Utica, New York, and associate editor of Christian Endeavor World.

Too many ministers neglect or forget an important part of their ministry, which is counseling. It has been said that the measure of a man's ministry can be determined by the number of people who seek him as a counselor. On the flyleaf of the book is stated, "Making Good as Young Couples, is, of course, designed primarily for young couples themselves, but pastoral counselors, marriage counselors and engaged couples will also find this unusual book helpful."

If two young people having difficulties in adjustment could find themselves in one of these seventeen "typical" marriages, the wise counsel and helpful solutions should help them to solve their problems as others have. Interfaith marriages, the "other couple," the husband's job-required absence from home, children's inherited disagreeable traits, irritating behavior and spitefulness, the "in-laws," and other typical problems are discussed. All who want to fulfill their counseling ministry will find that ministry strengthened as they read from these interviews the two major factors affecting the success of any marriage: the effects of outsiders—relatives, friends, work associates, and others—upon the lives of husband and wife within their own home; and the potential of the positive influence of the church.

The Scriptures state, "Read all good books." Truly, here is a good book to guide us as we strive to become better people.

More Prayer Meeting Topics, by Vivian Ahrendt, Warner Press, price $1.50.

This book can be very helpful to the members of the church, and to the presiding officers in a prayer service. Those who supervise a prayer meeting are well aware of the need for illustrated and appropriate themes, stories, and poems. A prayer service needs, among other things, at least two outstanding aspects: it needs a good theme, and a good theme must lead to action on the part of those in attendance. This book offers some very fine themes which will serve this purpose, but in many instances, it will need to be adapted to the Reorganized Latter Day Saint procedure.

There are stories of faith and prayer as outlined by many prominent men and women in America who have accomplished great things and have sought publicity for these accomplishments. They have witnessed and testified how God has answered their prayers through healing, financial success, trials, and many other ways. These illustrations can be supplemented by stories of faith from members of the local congregation.

Utah Historical Quarterly

Reviews "Joseph Smith III and the Restoration"

Joseph Smith's eldest son and namesake, "young Joseph," who was but twelve years old at his father's martyrdom in 1844, lived to be eighty-two. In the evening of his life, after half a century's arduous ministry as president of the Reorganized Church (1860-1910), he dictated his memoirs "without desire to deal with the mysterious or to make claim to a life greatly differing from the ordinary." These memoirs were published serially in the Saints' Herald in 1934-37 and altogether would fill three volumes. The present edition is a one-volume condensation of the Herald series.

Whatever a succession of editors may have wrought (the memoirs were dictated to a son, edited by a daughter, condensed by a granddaughter, further reduced by the present publishers), the book as it stands is an unassuming but significant record amounting to a history of the Reorganization as well as an autobiography. And, to be sure, it is one long

There are twenty-two significant prayer meeting themes in the book which can be employed satisfactorily. It is inspiring to read how God has helped men and women of faith to accomplish his work. It will assist those who are sick and praying for healing, and those who are disturbed mentally and spiritually. It will help those who have a burning desire to build the kingdom, through its suggestions for patience and perseverance; and it will strengthen those who feel the need for a greater faith. It points out that others have met trouble victoriously, that prayer really does bring an answer, and that as long as we shall live there will be trouble at one time or another in our lives. The book discusses how much prayer and patience have brought about desirable results in the lives of people. It sets forth the fact that the Great Physician is still at work. It points out that our needs, if taken to our Heavenly Father, will be supplied much as a child's wants are supplied when taken to its father. And that if we shut our eyes to the discouragements of life and pray, believing, "the victories of prayer can be won even by the weakest."

With our faith, comes a responsibility, that of carrying the gospel to others. This book points out that we must help them, too, to believe and develop faith, and that just as surely as the resurrection, so shall God's promises to us be fulfilled.

HERBERT M. SCOTT

sermon against polygamy. But the prevailing impression, reinforced by the unadorned prose—a prose so placid and a tone so unvaryingly well-tempered, in fact, that events are often robbed of their rightful drama—is that the telling is honest. Young Joseph does not hesitate to describe his inward struggle when at twenty-eight he decided to embrace the cause of the Reorganization. The mantle of his spectacular prophet father made no dramatic descent upon the son; by contrast young Joseph seems a kindly and devoted country parson, but his modest testimonies of receiving instruction through dreams, of hearing inner voices, and of enjoying "the presence of the Spirit" are convincing; his revelations, particularly Section 116, entitling Negroes to the priesthood, are dignified and thoughtful documents.

Courage marked his life: he once pulled out his watch and gave his newly-wed wife five minutes to decide whether she would stay with him or yield to her mother's strong opposition to the "Mormon preacher"; as a young justice of the peace in Nauvoo, where he had continued to live until 1866, he outfaced old Mormon-haters who threatened to run him out of town (eventually he was candidate for mayor); he undertook four missions to Utah, lair of the "Brighamites," to track down every alleged evidence that his father had introduced polygamy, forthrightly interviewing every woman supposed to have been his father's plural wife, and finding every rumor groundless ("to make the name of Latter Day Saints honorable again" was the preoccupation of his life); he remained on cordial terms with most of his "Brighamite" cousins on his Uncle Hyrum's side, though he could not conceal his satisfaction at the thought that during the days of the anti-polygamy crusade he could walk the streets of Salt Lake City openly while his cousin Joseph F. Smith had to hide from federal marshals; he saw the Reorganization through dark days of discouragement when it was crippled in numbers and resources but lived to see it found Graceland College, publish the Inspired Translation of the Bible (the only manuscript of all the Prophet's which Emma managed to retain), plant foreign missions, survive the burning of the Herald office, and establish headquarters at Independence.

As is to be expected in a Josephite work, Brigham Young is the villain of the piece, Brigham and all his works.

The fine equanimity of the autobiographer breaks down in every allusion to Brigham and polygamy; even the boyish recollection that Brigham's blue eyes seemed "rather closely veiled" is qualified with "through habit or design." Emma Smith, on the other hand, traditionally treated in Utah versions as a thorn in her husband's side, emerges as a woman more sinned against (by the Brighamites) than sinning. Vignettes of Emma riding Old Charlie, of her grief at her husband's death, of her merriment at Major Bidamon's loss of his toupee when he came courting add details to a portrait of a woman still too obscurely known in Mormon history.

Glimpses, too, of early Mormon personalities and places, all too fleeting, embroider the reminiscences: W. W. Phelps, "a singular man, spare of flesh . . . methodical and studious in his habits . . . carrying about with him a notebook in which he would enter anything in the way of a rhyme or couplet . . ."; Willard Richards, "quite corpulent, with a fair, smooth face, and ordinarily pleasant manner"; old Farmer Lott of high, piping voice, wrestling the prophet who, in white flannel coat and vest and soft gray trousers, challenged him in front of the store one day; Heber C. Kimball, who had "a fatherly manner toward boys"; John C. Bennett, who "looked like Bonaparte" on horseback; Alpheus Cutler, mountainous, tobacco-stained, and babbling like a child when Joseph Smith III encountered him and his pitiful band of dissenters in Iowa. The memoirs are a vivid record of what happened in and around Nauvoo after the exodus, years which have left a hiatus in Utah histories.

There is much in Joseph Smith III that can interest only the faithful Reorganite and much which may startle and displease Utah Mormons. His bias and occasional petulance are only too evident. But no reader can fail to appreciate its wealth of historical information or fail to respect the intelligence and integrity of a man who amid the very scenes that saw the dissolution of his father's dream and among the very people who had spilled his father's blood won for the name of Smith a new respect and for his church an honored reputation. For a man who would no doubt have preferred the quiet service of the country law office but who became instead the evangel of a remnant of "old stock" Mormons in response to what he considered a clear call, that is no mean achievement. In his memoirs, the son of the prophet has erected his own most fitting monument.

Thinking of Zion

By Harry Whipple

THE PROBLEMS pertaining to the establishment of Zion and the hopes of the Saints to see Zion become an actuality probably have caused more discussion among church members than any other topics. The condition under which the Saints must live in the world today, as well as the increasing anti-Christ influence spreading over a large part of the earth, emphasizes the need for action to hasten the Gathering. That the need to gather is great most will agree. However, the time, the method of gathering, and the part each one must play are not so clear.

The Lord has said that Zion might be redeemed even now, but the Saints are not ready. It would appear from this that the preparation of the Saints for the task will determine when. But when will we take seriously the teachings of the prophets and become the pure in heart? People are too prone to consider instruction as applying to someone else. We are sure the message was intended for Brother or Sister "So-and-so"—not for us; we are all right. So we go merrily on our way, striving to get a little more of this world's goods, not realizing how poor we are in spirit. If any leisure time is available we gather around the television set. Most of the programs we see fail to measure up to the high moral standards which Christian people should demand. But in a fully established Zion, radio and television programs will inspire and build Christlike characters as well as furnish wholesome entertainment for the whole family.

IN THE MEANTIME we are in the world, but we need not be of the world. We do not have to conform to the ways of worldly people. By our example we can be an influence for good in our community. As long as we conform to the world we will not be developing Zionite traits. Only men and women of integrity and vision who have the spirit of brotherly love and are willing to subordinate self-interests to group interests can expect to receive the necessary inspiration for Zionite leadership. An abiding faith in God and the gospel plan, coupled with a sense of responsibility toward all mankind, should furnish the motivating force which compels action.

However, it's not enough that we love only those of our faith; we must love all men, for Jesus said, "Love your enemies." It is not enough that we seek to establish Zion to save ourselves; Zion must be set up as an ensign to the people, as an example of a better way of life, to draw the nations of the earth to Christ. It is to be established in a time when the nations are in great need of such an example. That time is here. The spread of the Communist philosophy, in which men are mere puppets of the state without right of choice or the opportunity to achieve higher things, threatens to engulf the whole world. Only a strong, God-fearing people will be able to stand against it.

We must begin now to prepare ourselves to assist in this great work. We must begin now in our own communities to live the exemplary life, keeping all the commandments including the financial law.

ONCE A YOUNG MAN came to Jesus and asked him, "Master, what must I do to be saved?" Jesus began listing the things mentioned in the law: "Love God; love thy fellow-men; give to the poor . . ." And the young man said, "All these things have I done from my youth. What lack I yet?" And Jesus said, "Go, sell that thou hast, and come and follow me." It is said that the young man "went away sad, for he had much possessions."

Many of us are like that young man. We place too great an emphasis on the value of our worldly possessions; or we have habits which we refuse to correct; or we leave undone some things which should be done. If we allow any of these faults to exist in us, then we are showing a reluctance to render complete obedience to the gospel law. It might be well for us to examine ourselves, using the words of the prophets as a yardstick, to see how we measure up to the instruction given.

To assist in this work we must be humble and full of love.

Zion is the pure in heart.

We must file our tithing statements and pay our tithes; for by so doing we recognize God as our father, the bishop as his duly called representative to receive the tithe, and ourselves as his stewards.

We should learn to live peacefully together in our homes, in our branches, and in our communities, that we may be prepared to live together in the larger group which shall be Zion.

What My Religion Means to Me

By R. J. Jones

EDITOR'S NOTE: Brother Jones is an evangelist. Besides his church responsibilities he is director of distribution, personnel and public relations, and manager of the Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, warehouse of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company. He is a member of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce and belongs to several worthy organizations of the city. He was asked by a local newspaper to write his views in a pre-Easter daily column. This is his statement.

MY RELIGION means to me a way of life, joyful living, now. It reveals to me that in order to have friends, I must be one, not only through Brotherhood Week or the Lenten season, but all the days of my years.

It says I must be kindly, cheerful, loyal to my own creed, and respectful of the convictions of others.

It tells me that as an individual, I am responsible for the development of my personal talents to the maximum—that I must be a good citizen, not tolerant of everything and standing for nothing, but understanding human frailties, ever willing to lend a hand to help the less fortunate.

My religion lifts man from the mass and makes him a responsible individual, always seeking to raise society, not level it to the lowest common denominator.

It insists I face life unafraid of those who seek to make capital gain of social discontent to secure political influence.

It convinces me there is one God, the Creator of the universe, the God of Isaac and of Jacob, the same God who made of one blood all flesh, the same God who said through his Son, "When you do it unto the least of these, my brethren, you do it unto me"; the same God who has said in this last dispensation of time that the Americas are a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall serve him, the true and only God.

My religion means that I must be square with the world, with one hand reaching to mankind—the other toward God.

Question Time

Question:

Please give Scripture quotations from the New Testament and Book of Mormon, after Christ's church was organized, which are used to prove the place and need of the Presidency and high priests. Michigan Mrs. L. E. S.

Answer:

The New Testament gives very little of the history of the church and its officers. There is nothing as to when, where, or by whom the church was organized. The twelve apostles are named, but only a few incidental references as to who took the lead. There is almost nothing as to priesthood, and only incidental mention of a part of the offices. Historical information on these matters is as meager in the Book of Mormon as in the New Testament. Some of the implicational references pointing to Peter as probable head of the church, and to James and John as probable associates with him in that office, are as follows:

Matthew 16: 20—To Peter: "I give unto you the keys of the kingdom of heaven." Keys are indicative of authority; this was said to no other man.

John 21: 15—Three times Jesus said to Peter after his resurrection: "Feed my sheep." This was not said to the other apostles and suggests pre-eminence and oversight in caring for the church.

Matthew 17: 1-7; Mark 9: 1-7—Peter, James, and John were chosen by the Lord to accompany him to the mount of transfiguration, a special recognition above other apostles.

Luke 24: 33; I Corinthians 15: 5—Peter was the first apostle to whom Jesus appeared after his resurrection.

Acts 2: 1-18—On the day of Pentecost Peter became spokesman for the whole body of the ministry gathered there.

Acts 1: 15-26—In the assembly of the church prior to Pentecost, Peter presented the matter of filling the vacancy left by Judas and the choosing of Matthias.

Mark 16: 5—The women who first came to the tomb were directed by the angel to tell the disciples and Peter that Jesus would go before them into Galilee.

Acts 9: 31-43; 10: 1—Peter, probably in fulfillment of his commission to care for the flock, made a pastoral tour of practically all Palestine, including Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, finishing at Lydda, Joppa, and Caesarea. This was a mission which would hardly have been undertaken by any other than the head of the church. He duplicated the works of Christ, preaching the gospel, edifying the saints, healing Aeneas of an eight-year-old hopeless affliction, raising Dorcas from the dead, and opening up the gospel to the Gentiles at Caesarea.

Smith's Bible Dictionary says, "There can be no doubt that Peter held the first place among the apostles."

In the Book of Mormon there is nothing as to any president or presidency of the church. Christ chose twelve "disciples," not apostles, and apparently placed the work in their hands. With the primary church at Jerusalem the Lord did not attempt to duplicate the organization in America; consequently no mention is made of any presiding authority, neither of apostles or seventies, etc. Apparently the group in America was organized more as a subsidiary or mission group of the church in Jerusalem.

In restoring the church in 1830 the form of organization followed strictly the pattern given in the revelations of God to the church at the time. Priesthood authority was conferred, the "keys of the kingdom" being given; offices were named and men called and placed in them. Revelation was the only way possible to determine the structural form to be built. In this form a head, called the president, was provided, to be assisted by two counselors; this president was also a prophet, seer, and revelator. Through him revelations were given to the church.

High priests are mentioned in both the New Testament and Book of Mormon, but little is known of their functions. They are placed in the church and their work defined.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

In Doctrine and Covenants 75: 3 the missionaries are told, concerning the villages and cities in which they were not received, as they passed from that house they should "shake off the dust of your feet as a testimony against them; and you shall be filled with joy and gladness and know this, that in the day of judgment you shall be judges of that house, and condemn them." Is this a Christian attitude?

Oregon

Mrs. M. C. T.

Answer:

In many instances the language of the Doctrine and Covenants is the same as that used in the Bible. The statement referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 75: 3 is one of those instances. In Matthew 10: 12, Mark 6: 11, Luke 9: 5 (Inspired Version) we find almost the same wording. As you study these quotations and learn the history back of them, it is clear that such an act was to be as a symbol.

I quote from The One Volume Bible Commentary by J. R. Dummelow, page 662: "The Rabbis taught that the dust of heathen lands defiled. They said, 'The dust of Syria defiles, as well as the dust of other heathen countries.' The act of the apostles, therefore, signified that the city that rejected them was no better than heathen."

Thus we see that such an act against a person or persons is an indication that they have been given every opportunity to receive the gospel of Christ but have deliberately rejected it. This act, when done in the proper spirit, cannot be anything but Christian, for all who reject Christ must be condemned at the last day. The testimony of the missionary would be the strongest evidence against them and, by the same token, in the day of judgment he would be judge of that house.

The Scripture in question thus indicates that members of the priesthood have the responsibility of passing judgment in some cases, but such judgment should be done only when accompanied by the Spirit of God. Brother F. H. Edwards in his Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants says:

If the elders are to follow this practice, how particular they ought to be to see that they properly present the word to those whose homes they visit. No sincere servant of God can register the formal protest of such an act as this unless he feels that he has done his best, in the Spirit of the Master, and that his Master has been deliberately rejected.

If at First You Don't Succeed

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

TWO WORDS I was not allowed to use when I was a child were "I can't."

I must have been one who sought the path of least resistance and tried to get out of doing anything difficult. I can still hear Mother say, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

Those lines were part of a poem that Mother learned from her Fourth Reader of the McGuffey Eclectic Series. I still have the old book with its yellowed pages of stories and poems, all with their morals so obvious. "Where there is a will there is a way." "Waste not, want not." "Honesty is the best policy." "Try, try again." Mother passed them all on to me as she saw need from time to time, and they had a marked influence on the development of my personality and character. I especially remember the one, "Try, try again," perhaps because Mother felt the need of repeating it so often to me. It went like this:

'Tis a lesson you should heed,
Try, try again;
If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try again;
Then your courage should appear,
For, if you will persevere,
You will conquer, never fear;
Try, try again.

Once or twice though you should fail,
Try, try again;
If you would at last prevail,
Try, try again;
If we strive, 'tis no disgrace,
Though we do not win the race;
What should you do in the case?
Try, try again.

If you find your task is hard,
Try, try again;
Time will bring you your reward,

Try, try again;
All that other folks can do,
Why, with patience, should not you?
Only keep this rule in view,
Try, try again.

As a result of the lesson I learned from this teaching, I have a very determined spirit. If I begin a task, I see to it that I complete it, regardless of how difficult or how disagreeable it may be. Because I am of that turn of mind, I admire the trait in others.

I was pleased with one who is dear to me when she entered a class in a hospital in preparation for work as a nurse's aid. The class was fairly large to begin with, but as time went on the number grew less and less. After a few weeks the doctor in charge asked the few remaining girls if they intended to complete the course, because if they didn't, there would be no point in going on with it. When he asked Susie she answered, "I never begin anything that I don't finish."

ABOUT TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS AGO we moved from Ohio to Nebraska. My husband worked a long distance from home; he came home Saturdays at midnight and went back to work after our Sunday dinner. Since we attended Sunday school and church, there was little time for us to be together. I was very lonesome away from family and friends, so when I met another young woman who had the same problem, we decided to live together. To do this I needed to buy a bed. Since our residence lacked permanence, I bought a folding bed. That night after the dishes were done I went to my room to set up the bed. I soon found that I had started out wrong and all I had was a mass of tangled chains. Hour after hour I worked with the thing. I even yielded to the weakness of tears, yet I worked doggedly on. At four o'clock in the morning I had the thing untangled and could crawl into bed. The next morning when I told Naomi what trouble I had had she asked me why I hadn't called her, she might have been able to help me.

Perhaps my determination had caused me to have a stubborn streak. Anyway, I never thought of asking anyone to help me with anything. Mother had instilled this trait in me so forcefully that I depended on no one but myself. Naomi's words caused me to do some thinking along this line. I saw where I hadn't even been asking God's help with my problems.

I HADN'T BEEN in the church very long at that time, but as I look back I can see where my development in this work began with that incident. It was then that I began asking God to help me whenever the need arose. The admonition of Alma to his people (Alma 16: 219, 220) showed me that God expected me to do just that. "Cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks; cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day and evening. . . . Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them: cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase." Those people were farmers and shepherds, but that admonition could apply to all vocations. In any vocation there are problems that arise and obstacles to overcome, and God is ever ready to help us.

Recently I heard my husband tell of an experience he had about thirty years ago. He had hired out on a farm to see if I would like rural life. My home had always been in Toledo, Ohio. The man my husband worked for was quite hard up, and he used the money that we had saved to buy feed for the stock. After we were on the farm for two months the man left for town one day and never came back. He did not pay us back, nor did he pay the wages due us for those two months. We lacked the tools to work the ground properly to put in the crop. My husband went ahead as best he could. One morning he rode through the field to sow oats. At the other end of the field he stopped and prayed, "Lord, you know that I haven't the tools to prepare this ground as it should be for this crop. I have done the best that I could under the circumstances. Bless my efforts that we may have those things that we need." That crop of oats was the best that had been on that field for twenty years. The story of it went the rounds of the countryside, and people drove past to see for themselves since that particular piece of land was known to be very poor.

That was only one instance where man's extremity was God's opportunity to prove his eagerness to help. God does not want us to be slothful servants and depend upon him for everything without any effort on our part. Nor does he want us to depend upon ourselves too completely and exclude him. He expects us to try to do what we can for ourselves, and then if we ask him he will assist us.

I HAVE MADE many mistakes and many times the going has been rough, but God has never failed me since I have learned not to depend upon myself wholly.

"Once or twice though you should fail, if you strive, 'tis no disgrace." We may fail, but in the end we will succeed if we put our trust in God. After all, our greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall. God only wants us to try.

In the light of this lesson, two lines of "Admonition" take on new meaning.

Peril waits upon the heedless,
Grace upon the souls who try.

Timesavers

BY RUBY STRAND

At a recent early morning prayer service one of the men of our congregation gave a testimony which has stood out in my memory.

His business requires him to spend much time in his car, and he said that there were occasions when he was tempted to turn on the radio and listen to programs of mediocre quality as he drove along. Then he realized that he was a steward over this time, and that he must use it wisely in prayer and meditation. He said that as he had done this a greater conviction had come to him and he felt added strength for the task which was his in the work of the kingdom.

We, too, should exercise our stewardship with wisdom, and respect our minds so much that we will not permit that which is of poor quality to find residence there. Much of the reading material and many of the movies, radio, and television shows make garbage pails of our minds. They are of no value in the nurturing of a Christlike character. When the great prophet of old said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," he could have been speaking of those of us today who use the precious time given us in ways that are not soul stretching.

Show Me the Way to Go Home

You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?

SUE WISTFULLY WATCHED the bride repeat, "I do," as puzzling thoughts ran through her head. Would she ever participate in that sacrament? She watched these and others establish their homes, have children. Some of the women had husbands in the ministry and gave warm hospitality to their guests. Others with their families contributed talents, professions, and business skills to their communities. Would she ever be able to do likewise? She read Fundamentals by F. H. Edwards, including the chapters on marriage and home life, pamphlets on Reorganized Latter Day Saint home life, articles in the Herald, and other church publications. She read about Emma Smith and other fine women of the church. Eternal silence still reigned in her life.

She had a few crushes on fellows that other girls eventually married. One had inspired her to be more intellectual, one to become neater and more vivacious, one to be more modest and reserved. They were not the ones. She had prayed about a few of them, because she was positive each was the "one" at the time he appeared in her life, but a few years torn from the calendar proved this to be false.

She visited homes in the different branches, collecting ideas on decorating, management, personal relationships. She had a few apartment experiences with other girls with their miniature homes. She personally knew happy and unhappy marriages, growing ones and precarious ones. Some took it in stride, while others seemed to struggle every step of the way.

She was ready to admit she didn't have what it took. Since she didn't, it was better to remain as she was. She had departed from the "God, please bless Mr. So-and-So's and my relationship" prayer to "Dear God, please guide my relationship with Mr. Anybody." Later it became "Dear God, please bless Mr. Gentleman and me in our casual friendship."

Tonight her prayer was "Dear God, show me the way to go home—thy eternal home—and to be content with the friends and rich experiences thou dost give so abundantly en route."

UNCHOSEN

Hands That Serve By Mrs. Wayne N. Holmes

IT WAS COMMUNION SUNDAY at the Stone Church, and I was thoughtfully listening to the organ prelude in preparation for the service. This service, I learned later, was to furnish significance and understanding for all subsequent Communion services. For it was on this occasion, under the influence of the Spirit of God, that I was permitted to see for one brief moment, beyond personal prejudices and pettiness the beauty and strength of man's inner self—much as I should imagine God himself sees us all.

From where I was seated in the balcony I could see very clearly the priesthood members who had been designated to serve the Communion emblems to us. My first impression as I observed this group of men was the variation of appearances. Some were small in stature, some average, and others very large; some were distinguished and well groomed, while others were common, unassuming, and unimpressive. Some had thick hair; others had receding hairlines; still others showed greater degrees of baldness. Some were young, some middle-aged, and others were being pushed surely but kindly into the aged classification.

Varied professions were also represented in this group of serving priesthood members. I saw a physician, a carpenter, a mechanic, an artist, a musician, and others.

I noted also a wide range of personalities. Here was one man whom I could, in my own mind, parallel with Christ's disciple, Paul. Another resembled what I believe James, the brother of Jesus, was like; while still another possessed the impetuosity and unpredictability of Peter. And I thought how God's wisdom had so willed it this way. One personality seemed to amplify and enhance the other, and I was made aware that in these variations was the possibility of ministry to all persons. There came to me a focusing on the fundamental goodness of each of these men and a diminishing importance on the stature, profession, and personality of each. Each had qualified in the sight of God to serve us the precious emblems on Communion day. Each had an allegiance to the same God as he knew Him, and in each was the same life's goal—to assist God in bringing heaven on earth. Each was equally sincere in his priesthood responsibilities. Each was honest and upright in his own profession and calling.

HAVING GAINED this understanding and appreciation for the men themselves, I began to notice their hands. There was, of course, similar variations here. The carpenter's hands were bruised and scratched, calloused and sturdy. The physician's hands were neat, well groomed, immaculate; his fingernails were clean and uniform. The mechanic's hands showed signs of scrubbing, but despite this there remained traces of grease and ruggedness. The artist's and musician's hands were expressive and distinctive.

The meeting had now progressed to the serving of the emblems. The prayer of blessing had been offered, and the serving priesthood members were descending from the steps, each to take his portion of the emblems to serve to us. And once again God, through his spirit, permitted me to see these men not as the imperfect individuals I perhaps had thought them to be but rather as servants of God, all striving for perfection.

The carpenter was the first to reach for the consecrated bread. But the appearance of his hands had changed. They were still bruised and scratched, but now I noted in these same hands strength and patience which I had overlooked before. In fact, these things so predominated the calluses and sturdiness which I had previously noted that a wave of appreciation seized me for the hands which depicted strength and diligence. They were suddenly beautiful hands!

Next the physician descended from the steps and took the emblems which he was to serve. Now his hands were no longer simply neat and clean, but I could read into them tenderness as well. They denoted great skill and devotion to the profession their master had chosen. These hands were now God-given, self-disciplined, merciful!

Next came the mechanic whom I had previously noticed. Except now I saw his hands scoured with service to others. The grease and ruggedness which I previously noted faded into the background, for now they were cleansed with an active love for his fellow-man. I also recalled vividly the times I had seen this man sit on other occasions in church and minister tenderly and lovingly with these same work-stained hands to his little child. These hands were no longer work-stained and rugged but were, in the eyes of God and those who understood God's way, loving and useful and well qualified to serve me the emblems of the broken body and spilled blood of Christ, whose message to mankind was one of service and helpfulness and love.

There were, of course, others who held out their hands to receive the emblems for serving, but the other one I particularly noted was the artist. Hands that before seemed only distinctive and expressive were now speaking to me happiness, beauty, and grace—qualities too rarely depicted in the hands given men by God who is himself the essence of happiness, beauty, and grace. Yes, these hands were likewise qualified to serve the emblems of Christ's body and blood.

I COULDN'T HELP comparing these hands which I had observed. All were as different as the men themselves; yet all were devoted and dedicated to a common purpose—that of serving God—and all as fully qualified in their own way. It occurred to me that none had set out to qualify to serve the emblems, but that this worthiness came through qualifying first to serve humanity in one way or another.

I looked up as the emblems were being offered to me. I took my portion, then folded my own hands in my lap and critically examined them. How did they appear to God? How did my friends see them? Would they ever be classified as beautiful? Useful? Tender?

I determined that they would be—that I would begin that day to write into my life, and thus into my hands, usefulness and service. But how would I do it? I turned to God in silent prayer and asked him to show me avenues of service whereby I might develop beautiful hands, even as Jesus whose hands were pierced on that sad day by unseeing individuals.

The congregation was singing the consecration song, and I sang out, "Take my hands and let them move at the impulse of thy love" as though I were soloing the part. For this time I really meant what I was singing with all my heart, soul, and mind.

George Knotts

—the first to sculpture
Kansas Jayhawk

WHILE the University of Kansas Jayhawk is well known from coast to coast, and motorists for more than a generation have noted the peppy blue and red Jayhawk families parading across the back windows of automobiles—yet it was not until George Knotts, a K. U. junior, set to work on this major task that the Jayhawk appeared in three dimensions. An article and photograph of George at work on his carving was featured in the Sunday edition of the Topeka Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. The finished Jayhawk, cut from Louisiana limestone, so pleased the university officials that they purchased it for permanent display. The two hundred dollars received for this, George's first sculptured piece, will be used toward his university expenses. Chancellor Franklin D. Murphy then asked George to create a Jayhawk in bronze. For this task the University is planning to install the forge and other equipment for working with bronze.

In his art education course, George has had instruction and practice in various art mediums. During this first semester he ranked highest of all students in art education and is instructing children's art classes. In jewelry designing and construction, he has made many beautiful pieces, several of which he used as Christmas gifts. His latest design is a club key accepted by K. U. Radio Players. This will be manufactured in quantity by a Kansas City jeweler.

Although George has completed only one semester of art instruction, his mother reports he has been interested in art all his life. Through the years, George has unselfishly shared his talent for the benefit of others, and the quality of his work brings continual requests: camp "logs," posters, Stepping Stones, Graceland Acacia, Graceland Alumni letterhead, a livelier Graceland "Yellow Jacket," newspaper advertising, and store windows. His signature—two single knots on a rope—is becoming quite well known. In recent months, in addition to his volunteer contributions, George has been accepting art orders, using the money to assist with the expenses of his education.

George's birthplace is Langley, Oklahoma. Until he was eighteen years old he was isolated from church privileges. However, being well taught by his mother, he became a member of the church when he was nine. Through these early years he participated in the activities of other denominations. For his senior year of high school, his mother moved with George to Vinita, Oklahoma, and there he attended church services (a church school mission) for the first time. He has been intensely interested in the work of the church since. He thinks a lot of his "Mom," Mrs. Lola Knotts, and it isn't necessary to read between the lines to discover his love for her and his appreciation for all she has done for him through the years. Mrs. Knotts is postmistress at Langley, where she has served fourteen years. She has been and is helping George with the expenses of his education.

George attended his first youth camp of the church in 1950, a charter member of the camp organized at Racine, Missouri. Immediately his leadership qualities in sports, art, and counseling came to the fore. He also attended his first reunion that summer. He returned to Camp Wakonda the following summer as art editor of the camp log and assisted in sports, counseling, and nearly every other phase of camp life. It was interesting to observe George making a few hasty pencil strokes during a campfire service and later watching a whole campfire scene emerge from it; or seeing a baseball scene grow from one young camper posed for a moment with his "bat," a stick from the end of a canvas cot, across his shoulder.

Because of his good work in the Joplin camp in the summer of '51, he was invited to attend the Center Stake youth camp immediately following. The next summer George took on full staff responsibilities at the Center Stake camp, being in charge of the riflery range, assisting at the water front, and helping with archery instruction and other sports. Shortly after he had agreed to serve at the church camp, the Kansas City, Missouri, YMCA offered George a staff position for the summer at Camp Gravois in the Missouri Ozarks. He accepted, reserving permission to serve in the church camp. At Gravois, George made rapid progress and was promoted to program director before the summer was half over. He is hired again for this summer, and plans to go back as assistant director.

Camp Gravois closed just in time for George to take advantage of a scholarship to the American Red Cross aquatic regional school held in the Ozarks, qualifying him as Water Safety Instructor, accredited to teach boating, canoeing, and all grades of swimming and life saving. "God seems to be on our side," George wrote at one time, marveling how opportunities and schedules seemed to work out so smoothly for him; but he might also have expressed it another way: "All things work together for good to them that love God."

As a Boy Scout, George attended the National Jamboree at Valley Forge in 1950. He is an expert with the rifle, and lettered in football and basketball during his four years of high school and in football his freshman year at Graceland. He selected art education for his vocation so that he might serve young people in two major areas of interest—art and camping. At K.U. George is continuing his participation in church life and is a member of Liahona, the R.L.D.S. Campus group. On Sunday mornings he serves regularly in the Lawrence Branch helping supervise the young children.

George's personality is the rare combination of good humor, wit, and seriousness that makes him popular with young people and brings them to him for counseling in their personal problems. He is modest concerning his accomplishments, and it is most difficult to get him to talk of his honors, but his trail of good works tells its own story.

GAZETTE

■ The annual May Festival was held May 1 in the Memorial Student Center. The theme this year was Arabian Nights. The Maharajah and Maharani for the May Festival were Barbara Woods from Inglewood, California, and Russell Hampton from Bakersfield, California. The scene of the program took place in an Arabian palace where Maharajah Jim Andrews and Scherazade Janis Williams reigned over their royal subjects. Scherazade told many stories about Sinbad the Sailor.

■ Graceland's Student Publications and Radio Boards have announced their selection for leaders of next year's communications staffs (Tower, Acacia, KGRA). Cora June Hintz from Chico, California, will be editor of the 1953-54 Tower. Phillip Stark from Independence will be business manager of the weekly newspaper. Donna Davey, also from Independence, will edit the '54 Acacia. Business Manager of the yearbook is Dave Freeman, also from Independence. Fred Heaviland of Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, will be KGRA's station manager, and Max Noe of Lamoni will be business manager. Dick Blandin from Chicago, Illinois, will be chief engineer and Don Breshears of Rock Island, Illinois, will be program director.

■ Thirty-five members of Graceland's camping class left for Nauvoo, Illinois, on May 8 for a three-day visit. The total schedule and program of activities for the sixth annual trip to this historic town was planned by the students of the class. They toured the cheese factory and Carthage jail, and participated in church devotional services, classes in nature, crafts, and boating.

■ Barbara Keairnes from Allentown, Pennsylvania, was elected the 1953-54 president of Walker Hall. Other officers are secretary-treasurer, Floy Baughman, Dow City, Iowa; devotions chairman, Faye Barnes, Falco, Alabama; social chairman, Marilyn Gabriel, Worthington, Ohio; and librarian, Alice Johnson, Fort Madison, Iowa.

■ The Student Selection Committee accepted 215 new students on May 1. There are new students accepted from thirty different states and from five foreign countries. There will be two new students from Canada, one from Hawaii, two from Australia, three from Norway, and one from Japan. At this same time last year, ninety students had been accepted by the committee.

... and a Branch Was Born

A Brief History of the Vinita, Oklahoma, Group

ON OCTOBER 18, 1951, Apostle D. O. Chesworth, District President Stephen A. Black, and several interested priesthood members met with the Saints of Vinita, Oklahoma, and organized a branch from their mission. Twenty-two were present.

That sounds easy, doesn't it? You might say, "We want a branch, let's organize one," and that is all you have to do. There is much more to it than this.

If you are afraid of work, don't try to build up a branch. If you give up when people get their feelings hurt—when they've been looking for something or some reason to quit anyway—don't try it. If you aren't ready to teach, lead the singing, play the piano, be women's leader, church school director, children's leader, Zion's League leader, or sweep, dust, or give any service, then a branch isn't very important to you. But it can be done—with God's help and a few consecrated workers.

We weren't perfect, but God surely knew our hearts, for, as we look back, we can see where he has quietly guided our footsteps in the right direction and encouraged us when we became disheartened.

In February, 1945, after visiting the only member of the priesthood, Elder Lea Lamons, we made plans to start class-work. There were six members. Three of those were Brother and Sister Lamons and their granddaughter. The others were members whose companions did not belong to the church. We started meeting on Thursday night every week. We said we'd meet and study, for sometime we might need teachers for classes. Because we were creating within ourselves a greater desire for church association, we began to attend the services of branches twenty-five and thirty miles away so that our children might be in classes and for the help we could get and give in those branches.

Some of us drove twenty-five miles daily to vacation church school and helped with it. Those three hundred miles driven in six days were very profitable. As a result we determined to hold one ourselves the next year—and we did. It was conducted in a private home and, much to our surprise, instead of the twelve or fourteen we had planned for we had an average daily attendance of twenty-seven. Three baptisms came as a direct result of the school.

BY THIS TIME we were meeting in the B.B. and P. W. Club Room in the basement of the City Hall. Not all was smooth, for we soon had to move to the County Court Room to keep meeting, then to the basement of the Court House. This was fine for a while, but as soon as other organizations learned of the basement being cleaned it was soon used for Scout meetings and other activities.

One Wednesday evening when we went for prayer service a punching bag was set up for boxing practice. Then there was the Sunday morning we found an empty room staring at us. Not one chair was left, but there was a box. Necessity forced us to purchase chairs which we got from the reunion committee. With fifty new chairs and our piano, which had been given to us by a Reorganized Latter Day Saint woman and her Methodist husband (the Kenreighs), we were better equipped than we had been yet. All the while we were busy in different ways adding to our building fund and looking for property. A lot with some kind of building was preferred so we'd have a meeting place of our own without the accompaniment of the punching bag. Finally, we found a nice site with a usable house on it. Against opposition by some and indifference by others we purchased the property with the help of a loan from the bishop, and in October, 1952, we became the legal owners.

WE'RE STILL A SMALL GROUP, averaging about thirty-three for church school, but we had a record for 1952 of 89 per cent statement filers and a high number of tithepayers.

We have people like the Ellisons who drive thirty-six miles; they have not missed more than two or three Sundays in the last year and have attended most of the prayer meetings on Wednesday nights. Such consecrated people do the branch a lot of good. Other families moved in because there was a group of Saints meeting here. This was true of the Raffetys, Genrichs, and Sundermans. Our pastor, C. L. Rook of Miami, drives thirty miles from his home for our Sunday morning and Wednesday evening services. This shows a little of the willingness to sacrifice for the furthering of the work.

It has been hard at times. Sometimes it's discouraging and then encouraging. At times personalities have clashed, and the members who could not be interested in the work continually burdened the priesthood. But there has been the happiness of meeting together with those of like faith, and when we raise our voices in songs of praise and thanksgiving to the God who has made it possible, we are made to rejoice. These moments are worth all trials, for we would not be able to fully appreciate what we have if we had not had the "growing pains" of a group, a mission, and finally a branch.

If you were to come to Vinita, you would not see a large, beautiful new church building, but no one can deny or fail to recognize the beauty of God's Holy Spirit which we are privileged to enjoy in this work. LELA PARKHURST

Sixty-second Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. Joseph William Stobaugh of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their sixty-second wedding anniversary on May 6. Both were born in Illinois—Mr. Stobaugh on December 17, 1867, and Mrs. Stobaugh on March 19, 1874. They were married in Ft. Madison, Iowa, where they lived until 1909. From then until 1929 they made their home in Kansas City, and since then have resided in Independence. They were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1897. Brother Stobaugh was ordained a teacher in 1898, a priest in 1914, and an elder in 1916. They have seven children: Mrs. Viola Davidson, Mrs. Edna Ladd, and Stanley J. Stobaugh of Kansas City; Mrs. Mary Helm, James W. and Mason H. Stobaugh of Independence; and Mrs. Effie Hunter of Dayton, Ohio. They also have fourteen grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

Twelve Men to Priesthood

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The Northeast Nebraska District conference was held in Omaha, May 2 and 3. It opened with a priesthood dinner on Saturday. About seventy-five members of the priesthood and their wives were present. President F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker.

There was a prayer service on Sunday morning. The Fremont Zion's League presented the morning worship service, and the Fremont adult choir sang. Brother Edwards taught a general class following this. The Omaha choir presented the music for the morning Communion service.

Following a basket dinner, a business meeting was held at which time the following men were recommended for ordination to the priesthood: Alfred Curtis, Jr., deacon; Joe Hanna, deacon; Wendell Wallace, priest; Lee Conger, priest; Dana Keller, priest; Ervan Graham, priest; Ed Goold, teacher; Millard Gollehon, elder, from Omaha; Harold Newton, elder; William Taylor, priest; and Gerald Kruse, priest, from Fremont; Ruben Hughes, priest, from Columbus.

The Walthill choir presented the music for the afternoon service at which Brother Edwards was the guest speaker.

Craig Bradbury and Charles Larsen were selected from the local high schools to attend the annual Boys' State to be held June 7 and 13 at Lincoln, Nebraska.

Edna Postelwait and Milton Class were baptized by Clifford Constance and confirmed by Elders Frank Fry, Clifford Constance, and H. A. Merchant.—Reported by RUTH LYDIA LOVING

Regional Institute Held

DES MOINES, IOWA.—On March 20-22, a regional church school institute, sponsored by the General Church department of religious education, under the direction of Apostle Reed Holmes, was conducted in the Des Moines, Iowa, church, with Northwestern Iowa, Southwestern Iowa, Rock Island, Illinois, and Des Moines Districts and Lamoni Stake participating.

Apostle R. E. Davey and Elder Arthur Rock, audio-visual director, were special guests. The program was planned, in addition to those named, by District President Ralph Wicker and the Des Moines District director of religious education, Mrs. Harold N. Freberg.

Several hundred were in attendance during the institute. The institute was inaugurated on Friday night with Brother Holmes outlining its purpose. Beginning early on Saturday morning demonstration classes were held, showing various methods of teaching. The first twenty minutes of each session were given to demonstration. The remaining time was spent in evaluation and discussion of the demonstration. Brother Holmes conducted each discussion period.

On Sunday morning, Brother Rock delivered a sermon on "The value and need of religious education within the church." Brother Rock brought with him a display of audio-visual materials which were examined and demonstrated throughout the institute.

Mrs. Rosalie Oliver represented the Herald Publishing House with a selection of church school helps, books, aids, and periodicals.

The Des Moines Saints furnished lodging and meals for the institute guests. This is the first institute of this kind and is to be followed by others in different regions.—Reported by HERBERT SCOTT

Mission Purchases Building

NATIONAL CITY, CALIFORNIA.—On March 1, the mission moved into the church building which was purchased from the Christian Science group. It is located at 1004 D Avenue.

On March 7 and 8, the Southern California District conference was held at Redlands with S. D. Walker and W. Bruce Bozarth in attendance from the National City mission.

March 15 was the official dedication service at which Peter S. Whalley was the guest speaker.

On March 29, C. Crawford, sixty-eight years old, was baptized by the pastor, Elder Ellis Shimel. The service was held at the San Diego Branch.

A special business meeting was held April 12 at which time it was decided to paint the interior of the building and to add on the building to the extent of 408 square feet.

On April 18 and 19, the priesthood attended the Southern California District priesthood retreat at Crestline, leaving the women's department in charge of the morning service on April 19.—Reported by W. BRUCE BOZARTH

Church School Institute Held

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—Sister Verda Bryant of Independence was the guest director of the vacation church school institute held at Central Church, on March 22, 23, and 24. An average of eighty-five persons attended her classes in preparation for the eight vacation schools which will be held in the stake in June. The material she presented illustrates the new project method which will be used this year. Each project will be constructed by groups of boys and girls working together, rather than single projects by individuals.

Another stake-wide event of interest was the ninth annual talent program which was held on Sunday afternoon, April 19, at Central Church. Ten congregations were represented in the forty-two numbers on our program. Entries were as follows: junior piano, eight;

Women Attend Meeting

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—A statewide institute for women under the supervision of Ruth Simons, stake women's leader, was held at Buckner, Missouri, April 30. The theme was "I Can Strengthen the Kingdom."

The Marshall women started the day with a family worship demonstration. A panel discussion on "What Doth the Lord Require of Me?" was held in the morning with selected topics and speakers as follows: Blanche Norman, Warrensburg, "I Shall Study"; Helen Gard, Holden, "I Worship and Exercise Self-control"; Muriel Richardson, Marshall, "I Desire Right Relationships and Attitudes"; Florence Hughes, Atherton, "I Show Reverence to God and Respect Toward the Church and Her Members"; and Dolores Young, Richmond, "I Seek Good Health." A sack lunch with dessert and drink being furnished by the hostess group was served at noon.

Closing activities were testimonials from previously chosen representatives from each group who could say "This we know!" This service was conducted by the stake presidency and was then left open to others also to take part. Special music was contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Flynn, Mrs. Hazel Engelbrecht, Mrs. Velma Smith, Mrs. Edith Magargee, and Mrs. Melba Troyer.

WARRENSBURG

The Warrensburg congregation held an evangelistic series, conducted by Evangelist Harold I. Velt, May 10-24. On Sunday, May 3, three adults were baptized, Irvin Rubottom and his wife, Helen, and Lottie Bailey. Vacation church school was held the first week in June.

OAK GROVE

One of the most active departments of the Oak Grove congregation is the children's department. In February the department sponsored the family night activity. A prebaptismal class was held.

Teachers and workers preparing for vacation church school attended the stake vacation church school institute held at Buckner on April 7, a vacation church school conference held at Odessa during the second week in April, and sponsored by the Lafayette County Council of Churches, and also the Stone Church training sessions held from April 27 to May 1.

Zion's Leaguers are under the direction of Sister Osa Heath. One Sunday afternoon they sponsored a fellowship hour, another Sunday afternoon was spent in making posters for a bake sale, and they are now working on a two-hour comedy to be presented in the town in order to raise money for the budget. They sponsored a skating party at the Buckner rink, held a debate on "Which Has the Most Harmful Effects on the Human Body—Alcohol or Tobacco?" and also presented a tithing and talent offering service at church.

The young adults, under the supervision of Aubrey Miller, have charge of one evening service each month and usually invite a visiting minister. They sponsored a program at a recent family night. Under the leadership of Elder Leonard Smith and the other officers and leaders, all departments of the work are moving forward. There were seventeen baptisms in the congregation in 1952.—Reported by MARY EAGAN

Restoration Festival Held

RACINE, MISSOURI.—The third annual Restoration Festival was held for the young people of Spring River and Rich Hill Districts, April 25 and 26, at the Ozark Reunion grounds, Racine, Missouri, under the direction of the district youth leader, Harry A. Shank. The theme for the festival was "The Reorganization Lives in Us." The guest speaker was Roy Cheville of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. Attending with Brother Cheville from the college were Barry Fuller, Sydney, Australia; Frank Hester, Flushing, Michigan; Vernon Robinson, Winston, Ontario, Canada; Eldred F. Spain, Carthage, Missouri.

Brother Cheville and Stephen Black, district president, taught the classes. Recreation and evensong were under the direction of Bill and Barbara Bayless, with the help of the Graceland students. The theme for the testimonial fellowship on Sunday was "We Covenant for a New Day." Brother Cheville delivered the morning sermon. One hundred and one were registered. However, approximately 125 attended on Sunday. Meals were served by Sisters Hilde Shank and Bonnie Shank of Carthage, Missouri.—Reported by SANDRA TRIMBLE

Remodeled Church at Tabor

The church at Tabor, Iowa, which had been under reconstruction and enlargement since September, was opened for services on Sunday, February 22. The activities of the day began with a prayer service at which the Saints expressed their appreciation for God's blessings in their building project. Pastor Morton Birkley was in charge of the service. President Israel A. Smith gave the dedicatory sermon at 11:00 a.m., and District President Charles Putman offered the dedicatory prayer. Elder Evan A. Fry, Radio Minister for the church, spoke in the afternoon, and Seventy John Loren began a series of missionary meetings in the evening. Music was provided by the young people's choir, with Elder James Dempsey as soloist. Many nonmember friends, as well as district officers and people from other branches, attended these special services.

The new addition to the church is 20 by 32 feet; it joins the original building on the south side. The entire church was redecorated, the ceiling lowered, fluorescent lighting installed, the heating system reconditioned, and new hardwood flooring laid throughout with carpeting for the rostrum and aisles.

All the work was donated by the branch except the services of one carpenter and the plasterers. The total cost, excluding the donated work, was slightly over four thousand dollars.

is good," says Alma, "if we hearken unto the counsel of God." Education is the tool that gives us the power to differentiate between that which is for our good and that which will detract us from enjoying the full expression of our individual personalities.

Every man is accountable. To be obedient to the challenge is to find the key to personal success. Service to God and fellow-man produces the element of mental balance which is essential to the successful experiences of everyday living. To be indifferent or disobedient leaves us ever trying to secure that satisfaction that will always be a nebulous prize to those who will not count the cost and make the decision.

LAST DRINK

One morning when a drunkard awoke a doctor was waiting by his bed. The doctor said, "This is your fifty-fifth trip here, Bill."

"Could I have a drink to celebrate the bad news, Doc?"

"I'll give you the drink if you'll do something for me first."

"But what can I do?"

"A young fellow was brought here last night for the first time. You look horrible this morning, Bill. I want the young fellow to have a good look at you. Perhaps it will keep him from coming here again."

"Hot chance, but it's a deal."

Bill stumbled down the hall.

"A man should find out in time that some people cannot stand alcohol," he said to the young man. Bill thought of his boyhood training and the Sermon on the Mount. He talked eagerly. He said, "Only a power greater than yourself can give you strength."

"What can I do?" retorted the young man.

Bill was amazed to hear himself say, "Pray, and then let me help you." Bill became enthusiastic as the boy showed some interest. They talked all morning. They promised to be friends and to buck each other up.

Bill has never taken another drink, but he has been back to the hospital many times to help others.

Thus was founded Alcoholics Anonymous with its thousands of reformed drinkers all over the world.—Bessie Tarrington

A MATCH FOR THE JOB

A mother noticed her little daughter trying to move the dining-room table so she could retrieve a toy. "No, no, baby, the table is too big for you to move!" She indignantly replied, "No, it's not, I'm just as big as it is!"

Small people of determination are being matched against "too big" jobs every day and proving that they are big enough for their jobs. Our will is much more important than our width. C. B. H.

OUTPOSTS OF ZION

Zion means this: an orderly society of church people gathered together where they can help each other. Fortunate are those who can come to the great gathering of the Saints.

But there are many who cannot come to the great Gathering. They must remain where they are to keep alive the branches as recruiting stations for the army of the Lord. These members, however, need not be denied all the blessings of the Gathering. They can make the branches and missions outposts of Zion, where they can have their own small orderly societies of church people gathered to help each other. L. J. L.

HELPFULNESS

Objections stated by an investigator rarely need to be met by flat denial. It is more helpful to answer as though there is a reason for the objection.

The principle to be watched is that you are trying to help your friend see for himself; you are not trying to win an argument, and you are certainly not trying to make your friend feel insignificant. F. H. E.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Harry William Black

HARRY IS PASTOR and guide at Kirtland Temple—which is a long way from “home.” He was born in 1927 at Stockport, England, a town noted, he says, “for cotton mills, hats, and rain.” He started his scholastic training at the Cale Green Council School at the age of five. At fourteen he apprenticed himself to the plumbing and heating trades, going to Stockport College during the evenings. After seven years of working and schooling he became “the proud possessor” of a City and Guilds certificate, the highest award for theoretical and practical plumbing. Along with this he obtained a Whitworth Scholarship representing the student having the highest grades within a certain geographical area. Continuing his education in the field of sanitation and building he received a certificate for passing the first half of a course set for a sanitary engineer’s diploma. At this point opportunity came to attend Graceland. Because he desired to serve God to a greater degree, his immediate occupation was ended, and he turned his attention to other studies.

His two years at Graceland were fruitful and happy, though there were times when he wished himself home again. The nostalgia soon passed. He served a year as a social club president and a year as freshman vice-president. During his second year he served on the student council.

“Looking back over my life,” he says, “I sense a feeling of gratitude for those who helped me over the obstacles of youth—mother, father, teacher, workmates. Being brought up in a small branch of the church I appreciated the little things, and though I was often discouraged, I never walked alone.”

He was baptized in 1940. In his home congregation he served as church school superintendent. In 1947 in England he was ordained to the office of priest and in 1952 at St. Joseph, Missouri, to the office of elder. Since going under full-time appointment in 1951 he has served in the Kaw Valley, Far West Stake, and now at Kirtland. In 1951 he married Allene McClaran whom he met at Graceland.

He says he hasn’t time for hobbies, but he likes to sing.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

IN WEST VIRGINIA

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp were in Beckley, West Virginia, May 23 and 24. Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker on Saturday evening, and on Sunday morning following a fellowship service, sermons were given by Bishop DeLapp and President Smith. The services were to dedicate the church in Beckley.

PREACHES AT STONE CHURCH

President W. Wallace Smith preached the morning sermons at Stone Church on May 24. His topic was “Kingdom Qualities.”

BACK FROM TEXAS

Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley and Apostle Charles R. Hield have returned from Texas where they conducted institutes for men and women in Houston on May 10, and in San Antonio on May 24. Brother and Sister Mesley spent the interim visiting members in the state of Texas, and Brother Hield made a tour with Norman Cox of the Central Texas District.

APOSTLE RETURNS FROM SOUTH

Apostle Percy Farrow was at a district conference held in McKenzie, Alabama, May 17, for the Alabama District. The church was filled to capacity. Brother Farrow reports a fine spirit. Elders Franklyn Steiner and Marvin Salter assisted in the ministry of the conference. On May 24, Brother Farrow was in Jacksonville, Florida, for an ordination service in the newly organized mission. He reports that the pastor, Elbert Powell, was ordained to the office of elder; Walter Babcock, priest; and Harvey Powell, deacon. Brother Farrow says that improvements are being made on the Brewton Reunion grounds in preparation for the reunion which will be held beginning June 20.

HOLDS SERIES

Seventy Eugene Theys held a missionary series with the Spring Branch congregation, May 24-31, with the exception of May 30. The pastor of the congregation is Elder Warren Haskins.

VACATION CHURCH SCHOOLS OPEN

Summer vacation church schools have opened in the Center Stake. Schools were held from May 25 to June 5 at Stone Church, Walnut Park, East Independence, Gudgell Park, and South Chrysler. They opened on June 1 to continue to June 12 at Eden Heights, Enoch Hill, Liberty Street, Second Church, Slover Park, and Spring Branch.

CHORUS IN CONCERT

The annual spring concert of the Cantanina Chorus was held at the Stone Church on May 26. The offering received at the concert was given to the Stone Church building fund. Mrs. Katherine Westwood directed the chorus.

PROGRAM HELD FOR SENIORS

The Center Stake youth department sponsored a graduation party for the seniors following the commencement program on May 22. The party was under the direction of Lee Hart, stake youth director, and Mr. and Mrs. James Culter, chairmen of the planning committee.

The Humility of Great Minds

"The great man humbleth himself."

—Isaiah 2: 9

THE GREAT MAN humbles himself. He is not humbled by circumstances, masters, or superior officers. He is not humbled by reverses or misfortunes, by scorn or contempt. These things cannot put him down, because he has already put himself down before they came.

The great man doesn't need to exalt himself. If he is really great, other people will take care of his fame. If he is not great, no pretense will deceive them.

Jesus was simply stating a law of life, not a threat, when he said:

Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.—Luke 14: 11.

Distinction is something that comes to a man from the public in recognition of what he is and does. A great man doesn't have to worry about it. He simply has it.

THIS IS A TRUE STORY of a man who meant to be good. When he made mistakes it was simply because he didn't know any better, like most of us. As a teacher, he often spoke of what a great man would do or think or say. From his intimate knowledge of the great man, the students came to the conclusion that he was speaking automorphically, that the great man he always had in mind was himself. With such a case of autolatry, he hurt many a young student and showed a kind of lofty contempt for average persons by treating them like something in a test tube, to be used as subjects of experiments at his pleasure.

Then life put him in a test tube and made an experiment of him, and he came out with something less than the excellence he had imagined. Eventually he learned and changed his ways. But the lesson was a costly one.

A SPLendid PIECE of spiritual insight by Paul is called to mind:

For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think.—Romans 12: 3.

This is a common fault. Some people try to make others little in order that they may seem big. They push others into the shadows to monopolize the spotlight for themselves. Mistakes are always the fault of others, achievements and successes are their own doings.

Society organizes against such persons and eventually brings them down. Few tears are shed for them when they fall. And why should anybody be unhappy when a man is forced to see the truth about himself, even if it is unpleasant?

SOME PEOPLE are proud because of what they know. But if they will remember how little a part it is of the vast field of knowledge, and how ignorant they are, they will not be proud.

Some people are proud because of their wealth. But it must all be left behind when death comes; and not one cent of it can be taken into eternity. If money is a man's only wealth, he is poor indeed.

Some are proud because of their family. But each must work out his own salvation. We can never get to heaven because of what grandfather did.

Some are proud because of position. But positions cannot be held forever. And the position is often greater than the man.

All these subjects of pride are external. There is nothing inherent about them. They can all be separated from us.

WE NEED TO REMEMBER something—how very great God is, and how small we are in comparison to him.

Look into the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.—Isaiah 51: 1.

He knows everything; we know so little. He has all power; we are so weak. He is wise; we are often foolish. He is good, wonderfully, marvelously, completely good; we are so full of sins that we should be ashamed to look at him. The list could be vastly lengthened. William Knox, an Eighteenth Century poet, wrote: "Oh why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

The truth is, it shouldn't.

We should realize that God is not so haughty that he expects us to crawl like worms. He simply wants us to keep proper perspective and not get any queer ideas about our importance.

THERE IS AN IMITATION of humility, as there is of every good thing. Charles Dickens, in David Copperfield, described the hypocrite, Uriah Heep, who pretended to be humble but was really very ambitious and unscrupulous. His kind of humility was abominable.

A person can be humble without groveling in the dust. He can be sure of his own knowledge, without thinking he invented truth. He can try to be good without thinking he is perfect.

Perhaps we can make the grade if we remember that we are no better than anybody else, and that our faults may be just as offensive in the sight of God as the faults of another, though they may be very different. Humility is a way of standing beside other people and praying, "Lord, be merciful to us!" L. J. L.

Elder Marion Blakely is hereby appointed as supervising pastor of the Arizona-New Mexico unorganized territory. This appointment gives the power and authority to work with the Apostle, C. R. Hield, to carry on area activities and reunion.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
By W. Wallace Smith

A young elder from out of town was in Kansas City recently. He bought a hat and wanted to pay by check but was not known at the store. In response to a request that he identify himself he handed over his wallet containing his driver's license, civic club membership card, elder's ordination card, etc. The store owner looked these over until he came to the ordination card, instructed the clerk that the check would be all right, and settled down to a rather extended discussion of the work of the church in the Kansas City area.

We are pleased to note that the March issue of the Illinois Alumni News (Illinois University) paid tribute to Bishop William Wellman by carrying a large picture of him and Sister Wellman, along with a news story. We quote from the article:

He is one of the University's most distinguished graduates in architecture and is now a resident of Omaha. He retired September 1, 1951, as an employee of the Union Pacific Railroad after thirty-one years of service.

Mr. Wellman began work for the railroad as an architectural draftsman, soon was promoted to the rank of architect, then general architect, and finally consulting architect, a title he still holds even though retired.

He planned and supervised the construction of thousands of buildings during his thirty-one years of service, and company officials point out that there has never been a single failure of any kind—not a weak foundation, nor a sagging roof truss. He has to his credit notable work in New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle. He can't use his railroad pass and go in any direction without seeing his handicraft all about him.

He is the subject of lengthy articles in National Encyclopedia of American Biography (1940), and Who's Who in Railroading.

In more recent years his sight has failed considerably, but he keeps active and in touch with everything through the aid of Mrs. Wellman, whose interests are his.

The Wellmans are active members of the Omaha, Nebraska, Branch.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following letter, written by C. Albert Brackenbury, was sent to the office of the First Presidency by Garland E. Tickemyer, president of Los Angeles Stake:

While I have this matter fresh in my mind I want to pass the information on to you. Perhaps it will give you the same satisfying lift I experienced.

I have occasion to make frequent visits to the bank headquarters in the course of performing my job with the bank [of America]. Last Monday it was necessary for me to discuss some personnel matters with the head of that department. He was formerly my assistant in one of my branches so, naturally, was aware of my church affiliation.

He told me that quite a number of our people had been hired and in no instance had they proved to be other than exceptional employees. Then he asked, "Why is that? Is there something basic about your religion that develops this type of employee?" Well, he asked for it, so I told him.

I said that most Latter Day Saints are taught at their mothers' knees honesty, integrity, clean thought habits, clean living, and always to serve their fellow men; also that a good Latter Day Saint lives what he believes seven days of the week and not just on Sundays; that they are living only by the grace of God—to develop for the real and everlasting life to follow. Because of these beliefs a Latter Day Saint should do more than a "satisfactory" job. I said, "Perhaps those are the things that make us a 'peculiar' people in the modern world."

The concensus of opinion of those listening to the conversation was that the ills of modern industry would be infinitesimal indeed if more workers with those standards could be hired. It is indeed satisfying to know that being a Latter Day Saint identifies one with a certain standard of values in the minds of non-members. Yet it is a real responsibility too, and I wish every Latter Day Saint were aware of it. We can't all preach the Latter Day gospel but we can live it and by so doing make this world the thing of beauty it is meant to be.

These thoughts are somewhat sobering. They make me want to spread the word to other Latter Day Saints to be on their toes. We're being watched, and I hope we all can set a good example for the watchers who are anxiously looking for guideposts in a very confused world.

Our Responsibility to Children

By Dan E. Waite

See page 23

Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms and put his hands upon them, and blessed them.—Mark 10: 14-16.

IN THE ORDINANCE of blessing little children, they are presented to God for his protecting care. The father and mother also by this act pledge openly to instill into the life of the child Christian fundamentals and principles of belief and conduct.

The development of the child's attitude and thinking is extremely important and is largely the responsibility of the parents as well as others with whom the child has contact. Contrary to what many of us believe, this development occurs much more readily and rapidly than we realize. In our home we have noted some interesting comments from our little girl. As I returned home for supper one evening she met me at the door and excitedly informed me we were having "Scotch tape" pie for supper. It would have been easy to laugh off her statement as a smart saying, but there was a serious association going on in her mind. She had played with Scotch tape, and after hearing the word "butterscotch" from her mother, she became confused. It was necessary to show her how the word "Scotch" could be used to indicate entirely different ideas. This association of ideas constitutes a developing and growing mind.

YOUNGSTERS often think more than we give them credit for. Early in life they are able to associate spiritually wholesome ideas as well as ideas about material things. But by the same token, and tragically so, children also associate ideas and thoughts morally unstable. The sin that we as parents commit is in not keeping pace with their ideas and thoughts and by not inhibiting the unhealthy ones and giving new stimulation and nurture to those worth developing. The growth of the spiritual mind is equally important as the development and growth of the physical body. We seldom neglect to emphasize the importance of naps and regular meals, but how many of us regularly read a Bible story to our children or teach them how to pray?

The statement, "Don't teach a child about God and His church until he can understand," is as foolish as saying, "Don't give him anything to eat until he can distinguish the value of various foods." The church has been criticized occasionally because of its stand in regard to baptizing eight-year-olds. But herein is at least part of the wisdom involved in that counsel—children are more receptive and willing to learn the laws of God and doctrine of the church at this early age. As parents we owe them this training, and we must not deny it. Even though children cannot truly determine and understand all the details, they know (and are satisfied) that certain things are right. Therefore, by exposing them to this training, we are fulfilling our obligation to them and to God. A true parent wants his children to have nothing but the best, and that best will naturally have to be determined by the parents (see Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4).

THE WHOLE OF A CHILD is growing all the time, and every part needs its nurture, guidance, and stimulation. When a child is learning to walk, he needs assistance at first. Later, before he becomes efficient, he will need experience. Even the muscles controlling the reflex of accommodation in the eye will not function, unless they have experience and practice. In one of the South American countries it is the practice to place a red bag over each child's head for the first year. It is removed only for eating. Consequently, when the bag is removed permanently the eye muscles cannot accommodate. The light is injurious to the eyes, and they often become swollen shut. This is merely another reason why, if we would develop into a smoothly integrated being, we must guide each part of the body to maturity.

Never is it possible on a moment's notice to say, "Now we will learn this," and teach it without previous training as we so often attempt to do with religious concepts. The responsibility of this development of the body and especially the mind rests on the family which is the smallest basic social unit.

We do not always have to teach our children actively, although much teaching is necessary. They seem to possess an innate ability to catch our outlook on life, our attitudes and thinking, and the manner in which we live. They readily sense a feeling of unhappiness or dissension if present in the home. Our three-year-old doesn't understand all of our worship service from Daily Bread, but she's very disappointed if we neglect it. Evidently she enjoys the spirit of the service and the sense of family security when we do something together.

IF A CHILD GROWS up in a home with people of clean habits, who love God and respond to the call of the church, he will have learned many valuable truths that could never have been obtained from any written laws or catechism. Kahill Gibran has said that parents are the bows from which their children as living arrows are sent. This is why the child's parents must be a living cell of the church if ever they are to achieve any corporate propagation and accomplish the will of God. "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

It is easy for us to depend on a child's entire religious training taking place in the church school in one or two hours a week. What a fallacy and impossibility! We should set aside a portion of each day for prayer, meditation, and Bible reading. Such minutes at the disposal of the Holy Spirit may be the key in developing our children spiritually and may well prepare us as parents to be truly adequate teachers. Sunday school should only supplement religious training at home.

IHAVE BEEN REFERRING to our responsibilities as parents, but as citizens of communities we also have responsibilities. For by our social standards, we are products of our society. Children choose idols or measuring sticks of people whom they love, admire, or respect. This may often be an uncle or aunt; very often it is the pastor or local doctor. It is usually little, insignificant things about these people that children notice and remember. In my own experience, I remember that I have always loved horses, particularly when I was a child. Once I saw an older man, whom I had always respected, whip and swear at his horse. Now the horse may have very well deserved punishment, but I have always had a feeling of disrespect for that man. As adults in our communities, let us constantly beware of the type of measuring stick we are to the little folks.

It has often been said that the first five years of a child's life are the most important in developing character and personality. Some psychologists claim that anything a child is exposed to will in later years be easier to relearn or will come back more readily. If this be correct, then again the responsibilities rest upon us as parents. Who of us wouldn't want Christlike standards to be most evident in the lives of our children or young friends?

Books

Your Teen-Ager and You, by Audrey J. Williamson, Warner Press, $1.00.

This book is the last volume in a series of four under the general title "The Christian Home," and was planned for Christian parents of young people from twelve to eighteen years old. The author is the mother of three children who have passed through the adolescent stage, so she speaks from experience.

The suggestions she gives are designed to be used as helps in formulating one's own plan of guidance for adolescents, and not as infallible rules. However, she does give very practical ideas and suggestions, rather than idealistic generalities.

The book is divided into ten chapters, beginning with "How Do We Start?" and viewing the problem from all angles, such as "Is My Teen-Ager Normal?" "What Is Our Home Like?" "Am I the Right Kind of Parent?" and "Has My Teen-Ager Found His Place in the Church?" At the end of each chapter additional source materials are listed.

Let us remember that children are our God-given stewardships. They come through us but not strictly from us. They are with us, but they do not belong to us. Children do not want the money we earn or even the luxuries that it will buy. They want the most inexpensive things in the world which only we can give: love, care, and security. We owe all of these to our children.

O Lord, God, who art the Lord and giver of life, we thank thee for the promise of a child.

Help us to do all in our power by our own life and example, both now and in the future, to guard and guide the life which thou hast given.

Grant, we pray thee, that with this fresh gift of life to us, there may be given an increase of love one to another, and enable us to minister to all the little ones whom thou hast given us, in all wisdom, love, and faithfulness, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Author unknown.

Mrs. Williamson has quite effectively covered all the phases of the teen-ager's life and all of the causes of friction between teen-agers and their parents. She deals with each in the light of Christian beliefs and ideals, even though she is brief.

Members of our church will notice a different concept of religious experience and conversion, but in spite of references to participation in altar services, and other activities which we do not have, the general pattern comes closer to our own ideals of conduct than many discussions. The author refers numerous times to the fact that the Christian teen-ager's ideals may make him different from those around him; she gives suggestions for offsetting this and helping him to become integrated into activities around him.

Any thoughtful, conscientious parent feels his great inadequacy many times, especially when faced with adolescents and their problems. This little volume, while at times criticizing, gives great encouragement, very practical aid, and certainly stimulates constructive thought about one's own plan for living.

AARONA BOOKER KOHLMAN

Not One Shall Be Lost

By L. S. Wight

THE STANDARDS set up by Jesus during his earthly ministry are safe measuring sticks to use when trying to determine relative values. One such has been my favorite text for many years. It epitomizes Christ's interest in the importance of saving those born into the church: "Even so, it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish" (Matthew 18: 14). This statement was made in connection with the incident when his disciples were more concerned about which one of them would be the greatest in heaven. Jesus rebuked them by saying that if they could not minister to the needs of the little ones in their midst, they could not even enter the kingdom of heaven.

He took advantage of this opportunity to impress on them, for their own sake and for the sake of posterity, that the first and most important responsibility of everyone who aspires to share in the kingdom-building project is to learn how to minister to the needs of others. It seems to be a hard lesson, but it has been proved in so many ways by so many people that it should not be necessary to belabor the point in this article.

OUR FIRST CONCERN should be to minister to the needs of our children and young people. Only to the extent that we do this can we hope to have future growth. That desired growth will come in proportion to the way we make these succeeding generations want to become a part of a group receiving the blessings of the gospel in everyday living. That it is being recognized more and more is evidenced in the growth which we see all around us. The young people of the church are taking active part in greater numbers. More and more adults are realizing that the only way in which they can receive the things which they want from the operation of the gospel is first to give self in the service of others, particularly to the younger members of the group.

A new and important application of this principle has been forced into my thinking in a dramatic way. I would like to share the experience with everyone who is sincerely interested in doing all possible to make certain that all of our young people have full opportunity to participate in all the church has (or should have) for them during their growing years.

My companion and I attended Graceland's twenty-eighth annual homecoming. It had been several years since we had had this opportunity, and it ministered to us greatly. But the warmth of the feeling developed in this sharing was tempered by deep concern when we realized certain things which have prompted this article. Before I expose this concern let me review the causes of the warmth which made us cognizant of the fact that the Zion-building plans of the General Church are being consistently developed and nurtured in the association of our church young people at Graceland.

HOMEcoming FOR VISITORS usually starts on Friday evening with a humorous play of some kind. This is appropriate for the time when interest is centered in greeting old friends. It made us feel good to see so many friends coming back to greet other friends who are interested in doing what they can to further the Zion-building program. The Saturday morning general meeting when students and alumni met was a happy occasion. Then the Alumni got down to the business of planning more things to do for Graceland. This was followed by the football game, which proved to be a pleasant event of homecoming with Graceland winning from Burlington Junior College. It was a good, clean, hard-fought game, typical of what Gracelanders should stand for in their relation to students of other schools.

By the time the Saturday evening program was presented it was evident that the spirit of fun and hilarity had been replaced with deeper emotions. It was also evident that our lack of facilities is becoming more and more serious. There was hardly standing room left in the gymnasium, which is the only place on the campus for housing a large group of people. The central theme seemed to be the memories of those who had been in attendance in the years ending with the figure "2." It began by recognition being paid to those present who were on the campus in 1902 and ended with an expression of hopes for those who will be there in 1962. The entire program was so well planned that it left us with the profound feeling of assurance that Graceland will go on directing the lives of an increasing number of young people. But in that reverie of memories and hopes we were made more than ever conscious of the fact that Graceland is but the instrument through which we can do our part to make this important work most effective.

BY THE TIME the doors were closed at nine o'clock on Sunday morning for a typical Graceland fellowship, a spiritual atmosphere pervaded the entire assembly. Under the guidance of Doctor Cheville who seems to be able to remember the first names of all who ever attend Graceland, we shared in a service which will last long in our memories. The closing was one of the most beautiful spiritual experiences it has ever been our privilege to enjoy. There was not time for all to participate, and Brother Cheville suggested that the meeting would be closed with "The Lord's Prayer" sung by Sister Pauline Frisby of Detroit. It was indeed a prayer from every heart in that audience. Then Brother Cheville said simply that this was the expression in song from a mother whose daughter is making a fine record in Graceland. In that simple statement it was evident to all of us that color lines were forgotten. Racial barriers were hurdled by a group of souls who, in that very experience, came a step closer to God. It became a symphony of souls reaching up for the divine help so necessary if they are to accomplish their Zion hopes.

Following this most beautiful service, Apostle Oakman preached the homecoming sermon. He carried through the theme of memories by taking us back with him to the time when he learned the lessons of fundamental truths. He let us share with him the happy moments when he would sit alone listening to the music from some of the great masters. He shared with us the enlightenment which came to him in his genealogical excursions. As he helped us look forward into the past and backward into the future, he did not forget his good sense of humor in assuring us that certain dates which he quoted were correct because he had looked them up that morning. He stirred memories of the finer moments which all of us have had at certain times in our lives and helped us fasten our anchors to the worth-while thoughts which can come only from such experiences.

THEN THAT UNEASY WEIGHT of concern registered again! It had been a wonderful spiritual experience which closed on a high level. But during that fine prayer meeting and the preaching service one thought kept coming back to haunt us. We had been told that it was necessary this year to establish a ceiling on enrollments. While we sat there receiving and enjoying this typical Graceland ministry, we realized that today our church college is reaching the point where its capacity must be expanded if it is to meet the needs of all who wish to attend. It dawned on us that we might be in the same relative situation as Christ's disciples when he rebuked them for being concerned about who would be first in line to share in the kingdom. Christ emphasized that they should have been concerned first about ministering to others, that they could have what they wanted only by first making it possible for others to share those blessings with them. Are we today any less responsible to others than were the original disciples?

Wouldn't it be ironical if at the very moment when Graceland has started the new agricultural department, it would become necessary to turn away some who may have been looking forward for years to attending Graceland? This move to serve the agricultural needs of the church by a new course of study of Graceland has stirred our imaginations as few other changes have. Our church has its roots in the land. We have been told repeatedly to buy land; yet we have not been sufficiently alert to make it possible for our church school to serve the educational needs of those whose first interest is agriculture. Now we have made a start so that those young people who can have not more than two years in their church school, and who will go back to help develop Zion farms, will have a chance to be associated with other church young people of their age. It will also make it possible for those who expect to go on to make this work a profession to have a background of at least two years association with hundreds of other young people whose religious ideals are identical. No other move could possibly mean as much to the development of the church's ideals in agriculture. And yet, at this moment it might become necessary for Graceland to say "no" to some of these young people.

IS IT ANY WONDER that we were disturbed in the very warmth of that beautiful service as Sister Frisby spoke in song for each of us in our outreach for divine understanding? Is it any wonder that as Brother Oakman shared with us some experiences which have developed his ability to express the divine in daily living that we became concerned for those who might be denied a chance to share in these experiences?

The very success of all the efforts to build hope into our young people only makes the situation more serious. To make it more personal my companion and I exchanged notes following the meeting to find that we had each been thinking of the same thing. We have six grandchildren who have heard of nothing educationally but Graceland from both parents and grandparents. Suppose that after these years of looking forward they must be given a "no" when the time comes to enter Graceland. What will they think of a church which develops a hope but fails to provide the means to make that hope a reality? This discomforting thought hit us hard as we wondered what they would think of their grandparents who may have failed to do their part to help develop needed facilities at Graceland. We left homecoming humbled in spirit and with a feeling of dedication to give all that we can to help relieve this situation. We have no right to contemplate the enjoyment of the fine things that have come from Graceland when that energy should be going into making it certain that all young people who want to enter can do so.

During that spiritual experience my mind went back to the time when Graceland was but a dream. I can remember when the old "Ad" building was being erected. I had the happy privilege of knowing Sister Marietta Walker who started Graceland with her dreams and hopes for the youth of the church. She had no background of development for those dreams; she started from scratch. Her dreams were the subject of some ridicule. There were those who could not see any sense in putting up a building out in the country for a school. Today she could have come back with us and shared in the reality. Today, approximately six hundred of her church's young people can share in an association during their scholastic experience which will tie them to the Zion hopes of the church.

But would she have been happy to content herself only with thoughts of what has been done? If I knew her as well as I believe I did, I am certain that she would not have let her thoughts dwell on what has been done. She would still have been dreaming about what is necessary to make sure that when the time comes Graceland will be equipped to minister to six thousand instead of six hundred. She was a pioneer. The need for pioneers is just as great today as it was when she had her first Graceland dream. Her dream had back of it only the reality of a cow pasture. Our dream today has behind it the reality of a successful development. All we need to do is to direct our dreams toward adding to that which we already have.

Are we going to be content to sit back and bask in the enjoyment of what we have? Are we going to risk the censure of Christ who told his disciples that they must turn their attention to others instead of self? Are we going to be content with what has been done, or are we going to take to heart that censure of Jesus and spend our time and talents in an effort to make sure that we develop our church facilities so that not one shall be lost?

If you ever find happiness by hunting for it, you will find it as the old woman did her lost spectacles, safe on her own nose all the time.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

He Kept the Faith

By J. F. Schofield

Sermon given at the funeral of Elder David A. Oakman, Enfield, England, March 12, 1953

I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11: 25.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.—Revelation 14: 13.

WE HAVE COME to pay a last tribute to a husband, a father, a neighbor, a very good friend, and a minister in the church. In all these aspects of life he has carried with him the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and this is our opportunity to pay our respects to a life that has been well lived. We shall be at a loss without his cheer, his counsel, and his godly advice, but our loss is the gain of heaven. He has left us in body, but his spirit and influence will remain with us, and we shall always remember him. On many occasions in the future we shall refer to him; we shall ask, "Do you remember such and such a thing he said? Was it not marvelous the way he said it?" He has left a mark on each of our lives—an indelible mark that cannot be erased. We have felt through his influence the spirit of Jesus Christ.

PERHAPS one of the proudest achievements of his life was the fact that his six children were well founded and grounded in the church. Think for a moment of this achievement and what a fine influence it can be. We would refer to the two separated by the mighty deep—Doris and May. Though absent from us in body, they are with us in spirit at this moment. They, too, must feel very proud of their father's achievement. Yes, he was able to say that his children were grounded in the church. That should be a challenge to all of us who are parents. If we do nothing else in life than to implant in our children the love of the gospel, our lives will not have been lived in vain. He did that very well indeed. Through his children his spirit and influence will continue to grow to bless mankind.

In referring to his life, I think that without question each of us can refer to Brother Oakman's contribution as blessed. There is not one of us who at any time has had such an unfortunate experience with him that we are sorry we knew him. This is a wonderful achievement. There are not many people of whom we can say, as we do of him now, that the memory of their life is very pleasant and will remain with us always. That is a fine challenge and example to each of us.

Perhaps his outstanding virtue was his devotion to the church. He was very proud to belong to it and to serve it for well over fifty years. It held him in the time of storm and tempest, in the time of trial and pain; it can be said that he was a man who built his house upon a rock.

I HAVE TWO very special recollections of him.

Only a few months ago he was in terrible physical pain because of arthritis in his knees. The average person would have cried out at the pain he was enduring. He said, "I was reading the Scriptures today—that part of John where it says, 'Let not your heart be troubled.' That applies to me now. I must not allow physical pain to interfere with my heart and soul." He still held on to the truth, and his heart was not troubled.

The next time we are in pain, let us think of our departed brother and be not troubled in heart or soul.

Do you remember his last testimony at the Communion service in January when he said that he had been thinking of the joys of the gospel? He had been thinking of the Pearl of Great Price, and he said he had come to the conclusion that these joys and pearls were very cheap. The joys of the gospel are cheap to those who desire them. Our Heavenly Father wants us to seek them so the gospel of the kingdom shall be more properly expressed in our human lives.

These two memories I shall cherish because of my very happy association with him.

What shall I say to the family to remove grief and sorrow and burden of this moment? We knew him well enough to know that he would not cause us any pain; and as he looks upon us at this moment from the Courts of Glory, he grieves because of our bereavement. Let us not cause grief in heaven because of our tears; let us turn our tears into praise and prayers, thanking God that he has been with us and that we were permitted to have him as a husband, as a father, a neighbor, a friend, and a minister in the church. He is our example. Praise be to God that we were fortunate enough to know him.

From our grief and sorrow there should come to us a prayer of praise and adoration. May the words of Jesus—"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted"—be a reality in each of our lives. If our brother were standing here now he would probably use the words of the Apostle Paul:

Watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.

It can be truthfully said of our brother that he fought a good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith.

A Child's Prayer

By Joy Juergens

NOW I LAY ME down to sleep . . ." How I love that little prayer! Yet, it was not the first I learned, nor was it often used, for my first prayers usually began, "Dear God in Heaven," or "Dear Father . . ."

To the best of my knowledge, I learned to pray on my four-year-old knees at the side of my parents' bed. My earliest recollections include the family prayer each night. Both of my brothers were older and had experienced these occasions many times. In my young eyes they were veterans. Thus it was quite an occasion when, one evening as the family knelt, my father asked, "Joy, do you want to pray tonight?" I never dreamed of refusing and in my humble way I tried to talk to God. I can't say I felt any communion with him at that time, but I certainly was proud to represent my family at so important a meeting.

As the years went on and I grew, my prayers grew, too. No longer was it "God, bless us this night," but rather, "God, let us sleep well to rise up strong and do thy will on the morrow."

Table grace was much the same type of ceremony. There, too, my prayers grew from a mumbled, "God, bless this food" to "Lord, grant that the food we eat may make us able to do thy will."

But table grace and evening prayer are not the only occasions when I stop my everyday affairs to speak with my Master. I don't remember when I first started my personal prayers, nor do I remember ever being taught to pray personally; that just seemed to come naturally.

Perhaps had I not been taught in my childhood to thank my Heavenly Father, I would not now have the comfort of such conversation. But I was taught so to speak with my Lord, and today I am grateful to my parents for their teaching and to my father for his invitation, "Joy, do you want to pray tonight?"

Palestine in Prophecy

EDITOR'S NOTE:

From the very beginning of the Restoration Movement our ministers all have called attention to the prediction in the eleventh chapter of Isaiah telling of the return of the Jews to their homeland. We have been rather fond of quoting that in the latter days "He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four quarters of the earth." Our feeling that this was a time yet future to 1830 was based largely on the following verse which says, "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

The writer of the following article may present views which are unpalatable but true at the present stage of the development of Israel. We feel sure that "Herald" readers will find considerable interest in his views.

MANY religious Jews regard the founding of the Israeli state as infinitely more than a humanitarian accomplishment, or a mere political coup d'état. They consider it as a liberation of the Jewish people from the bondage of their centuries-long galuth (exile), and look upon it as of equal importance with the Exodus movement of Moses' day and the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity. They hail the establishment of the new state as proof positive that the Jewish people are still God's chosen people through whom he will yet accomplish the world's redemption. The most enthusiastic among the Jewish religious element envision a revival of the ancient theocracy, with all its far-reaching implications. "For," say they, "out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isaiah 2:3).

Nor are religious Jews alone in attaching such flattering significance to the newly formed state. There are many Christians who view this matter in much the same light. Taking the aforementioned prophecies—which met their complete fulfillment in the return of the Jews from Babylon—out of their chronological setting, they apply them to the founding of the Israeli government. By so doing they are not only wresting Scripture, but are encouraging false hopes in the hearts of the credulous—hopes which, like a mirage of the desert, must sooner or later end in bitter disillusionment, if not in the shipwreck of faith itself.

MODERN ZIONISM was launched as a political, and not as a religious, movement. Its leaders had purely political and humanitarian objectives—the establishment of an independent political state. These founders thought in terms of salvaging Jewish lives out of the gehenna of Hitlerism rather than building a religious theocracy. Israel's parliament, the Knesset, is composed largely of non-religious or religiously indifferent delegates. The three major political parties in Israel—the Mapai (labor party), Mapam (leftist labor party), and the General Zionists—are avowedly political in their objectives. The few religious factions, like the Mizrahi (moderately Orthodox) and the Agudat (ultra-Orthodox), wield but little influence, and their political strength is negligible.

We must also bear in mind that the state of Israel contains but a small fraction of world Jewry. In all, there are 12,000,000 Jews in the world. Of these approximately 1,000,000, or about 8 per cent, have settled in Israel. In New York City alone, with its 2,250,000 Jews, there are more than twice as many of Abraham's literal progeny as in all of Palestine. There are 5,500,000 Hebrews in the United States and Canada, and about 4,000,000 are scattered throughout the rest of the world. True to prophecy, the Jewish race to this day sadly resembles the fragments of a broken vessel, "that cannot be made whole again" (Jeremiah 19:11).

BUT WHILE IT IS TRUE that God no longer deals with the Hebrews as a nation, he still regards them with tender love individually. Paul tells us, "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes" (Romans 11:28). Through the gracious provision of the gospel, every son and daughter of Abraham is given ample opportunity of being reinstated into favor with God. For as the Gentiles are, by virtue of their faith in Christ, grafted into the natural olive tree—which is a figure of the true faith, the faith of Abraham—so the Jews, "if they abide not still in unbelief," can be regrafted into this same olive tree from which they have been broken off because of their unbelief, "for God is able to graft them in again" (verses 17-24).

According to Scripture, all who are in Christ, both Jew and Gentile, constitute the Israel of God. We read that Christ "hath made both [Jew and Gentile] one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between" them (Ephsians 2:14). It is God's purpose that through faith in Christ "Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel" (Ephesians 3:6).

In the Talmudic tract, Pirke Abot (Sayings of the Fathers), it is stated, "All Israel [meaning all who are Jews by birth] shall have a part in the world to come." But according to Scriptures, being a Jew by birth does not automatically make one an Israelite:

For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children.—Romans 9:6, 7.

For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.—Romans 2:28, 29.

And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.—Galatians 3:29.

For "blindness in part is happened to [literal] Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel [both Jewish and Gentile believers in Christ] shall be saved" (Romans 11:25, 26).

GOD PROMISED ABRAHAM infinitely more than modern Zionism ever has hoped or planned to attain. Abraham was promised the whole world (Romans 4:13)! This promise, however, did not refer to the world in its present imperfect and sinful state, but to the "new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II Peter 3:13). The capital of the new earth will not be the earthly Jerusalem, for "Jerusalem which now is, . . . is in bondage," and shall remain so until the return of Jesus and the end of the world (Galatians 4:25; Luke 21:24). "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."—Galatians 4:26.

This magnificent heavenly city is described in Revelation 21. Abraham understood this divine plan, "for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Hebrews 11:10).

However, before anyone can enter that heavenly city, the Scriptures inform us that the resurrection of the righteous must first take place. We read, "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves and bring you into the land of Israel."—Ezekiel 37:12. This is to take place at Christ's second coming, when he [Jesus] shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matthew 24:31). Abraham, together with the redeemed of all the ages who now sleep in Jesus, shall then hear the voice of the great Life Giver as he calls them forth from their dusty beds, and then shall eternity with its unfading joys be ushered in.

FROM THE FOREGOING it is clear that there are in reality two distinct Zion movements in the world today. One is of earthly origin, centered around the diminutive state of Israel, whose objectives, while humane and praiseworthy, are at best but a temporary expedient. We know that political tides are changeable, and in the ebb and flow of human passions no government is forever secure. Even those governments which appear strong shall, we are told, eventually be ground into powder under the mighty impact of Christ's second coming (Daniel 2: 44).

The other Zion movement is of heavenly origin, conceived in the immutable councils of the Eternal God and founded upon the promises contained in God's unerring and unchangeable word. Its goal is Mount Zion, the City of God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and the new heaven and the new earth "wherein dwelleth righteousness," which will be the territory of God's eternal kingdom for his redeemed. The glories of that kingdom far surpass the most ambitious plans and the fondest dreams of man, for "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (I Corinthians 2: 9).

Jesus will ere long return to reap the precious fruit of his sacrifice on Calvary's cross. He is now, according to his promise, preparing mansions for the redeemed in his Father's house, the "peaceable habitation" and "quiet resting places," spoken of by the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah 32: 18). While our Savior is engaged in this work above, he is here on earth by his Holy Spirit preparing the hearts and characters of his followers in order that they may become fit subjects for his kingdom. These chosen ones from among Jews as well as Gentiles are permitting Jesus so to transform their lives that they shall obtain not merely a title to that glorious kingdom, but a fitness for its exalted objectives, its holy joys and pleasures.

EVENTS PROCLAIM in thunder tones that "the end of all things is at hand," and that Jesus' coming is imminent. We have almost reached the end of the road. With eyes of faith we can discern the gates of yonder city beckoning us, and ere long when Christ returns, the great host of the redeemed will ascend heavenward and enter that celestial city singing the song of victory over sin and the grave.

And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.—Isaiah 35: 10.

Will you not, dear reader, pray for Abraham's literal seed, so that they might find salvation through Christ? And will you not join God's elect of every nation who are preparing to have a part in that triumphal procession whose destination is that city which Abraham saw afar off? There at the pearly gates Jesus will welcome you, saying,

Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.—Matthew 25: 34.

The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come.—Revelation 22: 17.

The Light in Our Eyes

By Stan Mackenzie

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understanding.

—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3a

FOR TWO THOUSAND YEARS, master painters have applied their highest art in picturing Jesus' eyes. Some of their masterpieces are so compelling that thousands have felt like kneeling in worship, once they have looked into the pictured eyes—or like moving hastily out of range of the searching glance. Yet even as photo portraiture seldom captures the real spiritual powers behind a person's face, so the great painters have fallen short of portraying the wondrous light that shone from Jesus' eyes.

His disciples for a time must have stood abashed before the glowing intensity and searching power of his eyes—clumsy Peter shifting from one foot to the other, John getting red in the face, Andrew looking about for some other place—until after the resurrection, when they had learned of the transforming power and tender mercy of the light that glowed from the eyes of their master.

Indeed Jesus must have had marvelous eyes—eyes with divinely granted light that penetrated to the most obscure recess of each soul he beheld; eyes that brought to him a clear image of the minutest good that lay in a soul; eyes that gave him a true vision of the maximum good which a soul could accomplish under the inspiration and power of his Spirit.

The light of his eyes shone through the persecutive works of Saul and revealed an outstanding apostle. The light of his eyes shone upon the immaturity and the unlearned mind of a fifteen-year-old boy and disclosed the Latter Day prophet. Through the Holy Spirit Jesus has restored to us the privilege and opportunity of receiving divine light that our eyes also may see the good, no matter how minute nor how dormant, in our fellows that they too may be activated into his service.

HOWEVER, now and then after some humble member has accomplished a worth-while work, we hear leaders and others exclaim, "Why, I didn't know he could do that!" or "I just don't see how he does it!"

Yet the humble member may have been consecrated, willing, and perhaps ready for years; or, if not prepared, awaiting higher ministry that would condition him. But no one had appeared sooner with a portion of the marvelous light that shines in the eyes of the Master to see and evaluate his potentialities. Or perhaps those who might have seen were blinded by outward appearance, or prejudice, or personal preference, or—

In Ethiopia a blind beggar came to a Protestant mission week after week over a long time, begging alms. Finally a missionary with eyes to see discovered that even the blind, black beggar had a soul and potentialities. Since then the blind beggar has become the spiritual leader of more than a dozen churches, with 6,000 adherents and 2,000 baptized members.

A grizzled old Indian journeyed across forbidding mountains in the wilds of Mexico to visit a Protestant mission. At first no one paid much attention to him, though someone did give him a portion of a gospel in Spanish, which the viejo was able to read after a fashion. Then two missionaries looked at him with seeing eyes. Before long hundreds in the viejo's tribe were baptized, then a gospel was translated into his Indian tongue, and soon the Word was spreading across mountain ranges to still other tribes.

Jesus has marvelous eyes—eyes that never fail to see our neglect of our fellow-men, our oversights of talents he himself has given them. Neither do they miss our every kindness and encouragement to our brothers.

Jesus has ordained that our eyes, too, shall be marvelous—marvelous with love and kindness; marvelous with alertness to other's talents and abilities; marvelous with "intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."

Meeting the Needs Around Us

A Mother's Experience in a New Neighborhood

By Alberta Chatburn

SEVERAL YEARS AGO in a small town in Iowa my son Thomas, age four, and daughter Ann, age eight, and I lived with relatives. Every night after carrying Thomas upstairs to our room—for he was a victim of rheumatic fever—I would have a worship service with the children in the confines of our bedroom. How thankful we were that the three of us were together and that Thomas was improving, but how earnestly we prayed that some day we could have a home in the city where their daddy could be home and our family be united.

One evening in August my husband called and informed us that he had found a house. It wasn't what he wanted, but it was all that he could find. The school near by was one of the best in the city, and the church was close, but he was concerned about the neighborhood which was far from being desirable.

That night as I carried Thomas up the stairs, the children were bubbling over with happiness and questions. How long would it be? Did we have a fireplace? Was there a fenced-in yard for the dog? Would daddy get home often? How far to school? "Oh, Mother, just think, we can all be together again!"

How grateful we were as we knelt in prayer. Surely that night God's goodness to us seemed far beyond the words that our full hearts could express.

The following weeks were full of excitement for us as we prepared for our home, the first home that would be our very own.

September finally came, and we settled down in our little house. The children were extremely happy and not conscious of the undesirable surroundings. Ann had started to school, and Thomas was fast improving. He could go to church and was hopeful that by the following year he would be able to go to school.

Our family worship was indeed full of thankfulness, for it seemed to us that our blessings were far beyond what we deserved.

WE WERE CONCERNED about the children around us. Some did not attend any church, while others went only when it was convenient. It was far from a peaceful neighborhood. Thomas and Ann could not understand why happiness shouldn't abound where families are together.

The following summer came. It would soon be a year since we had come to this city, and we sensed even more our responsibility to those around us; yet we had done nothing.

At a preaching service our pastor mentioned that each one of us should meet the needs around us. This was a new thought, and in sharing it with the children, we made it a subject of prayer in our worship. Always we were grateful and wanted to be worthy of living as a united family where the opportunities were so numerous.

One warm afternoon in August as we were mowing and cleaning the yard, Thomas and Ann asked if it would be all right if we had our worship service at five o'clock. They informed me they wished to fix the worship center. I went about finishing the yard, thinking how wonderful it was to have a home. Thomas was well enough that his activities were not so limited. If only we could do something about our surroundings so that our children could grow up in a better neighborhood. I began to think about my neighbor, Mrs. Jones, who lived next door. She was really kindhearted but so tired and overworked—no wonder it seemed hard for her to get along with people. What was wrong? Neighbors should speak and be on friendly terms.

I was interrupted in my thoughts by Ann's calling that everything was ready. It would seem good to rest awhile, I thought, as I took off my yard gloves and prepared to wash my hands before the service. I was instructed by the children to close my eyes as Thomas on one side and Ann on the other led me into the living room. When I was allowed to open my eyes, I immediately looked at the corner of the room where, on the piano bench, the worship center was arranged. The bench was covered with freshly mowed grass, and here and there in just the right places were flowers, while in the center was a picture of Christ; candles burned on each side. It was so pretty I could not help gasping, "How beautiful. Oh, children, I wish we could share this with the other children in the neighborhood." Thomas and Ann begged, "Mother, could we ask them?"

THAT IS HOW our worship service started. The unusual thing was that only one little girl, Jane, was outside at the time. She joined us, and as we were reading Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon and Jane was of our faith, the service went off as was planned.

The next day Jane's mother asked if her daughter might come again to our family worship service. That evening Jane, Thomas, and Ann invited three little boys of the neighborhood. This service consisted of prayer, songs, and Bible stories.

Later the boys' mother expressed her appreciation for the sharing of our service with her sons and asked if they would be welcome to attend each time. That night, just before the service began, Jane's mother asked if some of the children of a friend of hers would be welcome to come. With our "congregation" grown to ten we decided to have each Monday night at seven o'clock the time for our worship service.

I tried to plan the service as I thought a mother with a large family would and to keep in mind that the service belonged to the children. By the time we had our eighth meeting on the sixteenth of October there were twenty-five in our worship group, consisting of children between the ages of four and fourteen. By now it had well outgrown the bounds of our neighborhood.

THE CHILDREN loved to sing, so the first half hour was spent in our dining room. This was their part of the service. Five or six children would stand up in front and lead the others in singing. Sometimes there would be little Sue, five, to Jim, thirteen, leading the fun songs. This appealed to even the most bashful child. It helped to make it his service—one he could take part in. Many songs had action in them to interest the smaller children. They, in turn, were willing to learn and sing the songs that those of junior high age enjoyed. It was a thrill to hear those children lead, and be led, in their own service of song.

Introducing the last half hour—sometimes to the accompaniment of instrumental music, sometimes while we hummed a song—we would file quietly into the living room and take our places in the chairs or on the floor, facing the worship center which had been prepared by the children. The seating did become a problem, as at times there were between twenty-five and thirty-five children in a not-too-large living room.

We always began our service by praying in unison: "Father, in this little home we come to worship thee. Help us to feel thee very near as we worship together. Amen."

The service generally consisted of story, Scripture, and songs. At the close there would be many prayers. Things happened during the course of our worship services to cause our hearts to be saddened. One little girl's mother died, another boy's mother had a very serious operation, while another member of one of our families was suffering from what seemed an incurable disease. About all these things each of us was prayerfully concerned. Sickness was the only reason anyone stayed home, for none desired to share a cold with the others.

Occasionally there were fun nights, just as one big family would have. Sometimes guests, who did so much to help us, provided slides. Maybe someone who came would play the piano while we sang. At closing time we would join in "The Old, Old Path," our theme song, and say a prayer.

Twice a month refreshments were served. On Valentine's Day a mother baked valentine cakes for us. Another time we had what we called "Everybody's Birthday Party." Because so many of the children came to my door and showed me their birthday gifts, we thought it would be nice to celebrate all birthdays, so we had this combined party. Thirty little cakes, each with candles, were lit and we sang "Happy Birthday, Everybody."

In May, at the end of our first season of services, I invited the pastor of my congregation to attend a party. This was our last meeting, and thirty-eight of us enjoyed a talk by the minister and a song session, ending with ice cream and cake. Those who had good attendance during the winter were expected at this service; needless to say all were eligible to attend.

The children and their parents were very nice about the guests I invited, for the majority of the children were not of our church. They represented many different faiths, and some attended no church at all. So it was that I leaned heavily upon those of my own congregation. Ministers and other workers generously consented to come to my home to give of their already-too-limited time, for we all felt that there is no more important field of ministry than to a group of children. With this knowledge I felt justified to ask busy people to participate.

AFTER THE CLOSE of our services when I was out in the yard

I noticed my neighbor, Mrs. Patrick, walking down the alley. As she passed she spoke to Mrs. Jones who was working in her flower garden. Mrs. Jones raised up from her digging and asked her if she would like a bouquet of flowers.

Surely our prayers were more than answered. Not only was there unity among the children, but the parents were striving to be neighborly. I humbly thanked God for a nearness to a more peaceful neighborhood, yet I sensed how much harder we must try to meet the needs around us that we could be more worthy of such blessings.

With the opening of school, the Monday night worship services started again. With their growth, I realized that help would be necessary. A friend kindly consented to give Monday evenings to us. Again we found the need to be great for this type of service because of its continuous growth both in numbers and in interest. I was thrilled with the results of my efforts, but I felt very dependent upon divine guidance.

One mother of several children, who was not of our faith, said it was so cold and bad one night that she thought it was unwise to bring the children. She was made sorry for her decision as the children were unhappy over missing the service. We had children from all different types of homes and faiths, but together we worshiped.

Although we have moved from this neighborhood, which terminated our participation in this program, it was indeed a privilege to be a part of the project while it lasted. I feel that in a small way we attempted to meet the needs around us. I believe that our neighbors and our surroundings are important, and if we seek divine guidance we will be able to meet those needs.

How I Was Won

*Dear Chuck—

Since that Sunday a few weeks ago when you baptized me, I've had opportunity to bring into focus in my thinking the ingredients of what I suppose is a testimony.

The baptismal service at the retreat, more than anything else it seems, made it possible for me to publicly declare my allegiance to Christ and to identify myself with a force greater than myself for the accomplishment of a better way of life. I was proud to do that, and I appreciate the beauty, dignity, and spiritual impressiveness of that ceremony as well as the confirmation and Communion services which followed.

Baptism provided opportunity to break with the past--in every way save memory. I dislike the lingering memory of the outlook on life I harbored for too many years. There's little use to dwell on that phase of my past, so I guess it can best be summed up in the thoughts of the man who wrote:

"I read in a Book that a Man called Christ went about doing good. It is very disconcerting to me that I am so easily satisfied with just going about."

Actually, that's how this wonderful experience started. I was just "going about" in my home town in the northern part of the state when I found a real friend. His name was Ordean. He was a member of the church, although he didn't wear a label or expound always about the merits of his religion. He was simply a friend of the highest caliber. We attended high school together and played on the same baseball team. When he moved with his family to Independence, I missed him.

Fortunately for me, my family later decided to transfer to the Kansas City area and chose Independence as a place to live. I was privileged to renew my friendship with Ordean. He invited me to play ball with other young people of the church at the Campus. In the course of things, he also invited me to attend Zion's League with him. Although my folks were not church people--thus my religious experience was very limited--it seemed easy to go to League with Ordean and participate in its program. Religion seems such a practical thing with Reorganized Latter Day Saint young people. The kids were friendly; I felt I belonged. I hope I can be that kind of witness.

Then there was Joy, the League leader. She has been a terrific influence. She isn't what you'd call dynamic; she doesn't even look the part. I've never heard her make a speech or seen her "up front" for any reason. She's always in the background pushing others forward, encouraging the officers and giving quiet--yet effective--counsel to those needing it.

It was Joy I told about the deep unquenchable warmth--remember, you said in our series that is one way to determine the time for decision--which couldn't be denied and which seemed to confirm as truth that which I had seen and felt; I wanted to join. It was easy to tell her.

Of course, I appreciated the youth rally; Lee, Almer, you, and the other leaders helped immensely. And the Sunday night missionary series you conducted for our League at the church was the clincher. Your informal, practical discussions brought religion right down to our level. It was during the closing nights of the series that I could no longer squelch the warm feeling inside.

But there wouldn't have been the "lump-in-the-throat" experiences without all that went before. So, I'm just grateful to everyone.

Well, I'm in the Army now--left the day after the baptismal service. I suppose it would be easy to just "go about" here. That is, under normal circumstances. But there's another harboring memory which is more impressive than the unlikeable one. I believe we agreed at retreat "baptism to identify and profess allegiance, confirmation to receive help from God, and Communion to help us remember." I haven't forgotten.

You'll hear more from me later.

Sincerely,

Harold

P.S. My parents appreciated the retreat and the impressive services. My sister has already made her decision, and I think my folks might like to hear more of the message of the church.

Dream Dreams

By Sadi Moon Nagel

ON THE OPENING PAGE of Fundamentals, President F. Henry Edwards makes this statement: "No man ever achieves distinction in a worthy field who does not believe some great truth with all his heart and mind. . . . What we believe matters tremendously, not as a substitute for right doing, but as a guide in right doing."

That's what we're going to talk about—what you believe about yourself.

First, let's make the simple assumption that you are a church member, and you want to "serve the Lord."

Next, let's review some facts. Here are some scriptural promises God has given you:

I give unto you to be the light of the world.

Unto every man is given a gift.

He prepareth a way to accomplish all his works.

Seek ye first the kingdom and all things shall be added unto you.

Whatsoever thing ye shall ask in faith, believing that ye shall receive in the name of Christ, ye shall receive it.

Now here are three admonitions:

Ye must not perform anything unto the Lord, save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father . . . that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee.

Keep my commandments.

Faith without works is dead.

From these statements alone we can draw some conclusions. God wants Reorganized Latter Day Saints to be leaders. He wants each of us to dream some long, long dreams about what we might become and what we might do for him.

Another conclusion: each of us can become that which we dream of being, and God is there to help us.

And the third conclusion: Belief, hope, faith in ourselves, whatever we choose to label it, is tremendously important.

LEE HART, who is now director of youth activities in the Center Stake of Zion, in his youth gave much thought in trying to find what he wanted to do with his life for the Lord. While he was at Graceland he looked at his own interests and capabilities as objectively as he could. He sought wise counsel. And then he set his course. In his mind he said, "I want to serve the church in the field of group and youth work." Lee didn't know what channels would open up to him. He never dreamed that someday he would be the appointee youth minister that he is today, but without wavering he made up his mind. "This I'm going to do," he said. The mental picture of himself working in this capacity somewhere, somehow, never left his thinking.

After a liberal arts curriculum at Graceland, Lee went to Chicago, where he enrolled at George Williams College and took a B.S. in community recreation and an M.S. in group work administration. He worked part time in Chicago's YMCA's and spent one summer supervising the Campus recreation program in Independence.

And when he was prepared, things opened up. A stake youth director was needed. When the ministers in charge looked about they saw Lee, who had qualified himself—in training and in spirit.

NOW LET'S CONSIDER YOU. Have you dreams that you are almost afraid to dream? Don't be afraid. Remember the statement that Joseph Smith read, "Ask in faith, nothing wavering."

God has made you so you can help yourself, sometimes without your even knowing it. Sounds strange, doesn't it? But here's what it is. You have heard of your subconscious mind. It's something few people understand much about. Like electricity, we use it though we can't explain it entirely. There are even laws we understand and apply concerning it, yet most of us are rather afraid of it. But God knows all about it. How many times he has told us to believe. You see, by believing in a thing with all your heart, mind, and strength, your subconscious mind works for you and helps that thing to come about.

So do this, if your dreams don't yet have feet. Picture in your mind what you want to do. Picture it as completely as you can. Be sure it is something in keeping with your capabilities. Be sure that what you plan to be or do is to be used in the "search for the kingdom." Next pray that God will consecrate your efforts to your good and his glory. Then gather facts and train yourself—this may take years. And don't forget: never lose the mental picture of what you are going to be. That is important, for that subconscious mind of yours cannot work for you if you don't do that for it. Things will open up.

YOU MAY NEED to set some intermediate goals. In all your goals be as explicit as you can. Work from goal to goal. If your first major hurdle is getting to college, keep telling your subconscious, "I'm going to college. I'm going to because I want to train myself as an able servant." If necessary, sit in front of a mirror and tell it to yourself aloud, over and over until you believe it.

Be patient. Repeat it over and over. Keep praying for guidance. Be willing to work at the opportunities which will open themselves to you. And you'll become what you want to be.

Question:

Is the practice of playing bingo for prizes—cash or otherwise—disapproved by the church, and is it wrong to indulge in this social activity of various societies, fraternities, etc.?

Colorado

G. D. B.

Answer:

This question is fundamentally the same question as asked and answered in the issue of February 2, 1953, regarding the giving of door prizes. The whole field whittles down to that of the matter of gambling. It is very difficult to draw a line between these seemingly simple matters and the more serious problems of organized gambling. It would seem to be the safe rule for members of the church to refrain from such activities. Most certainly the church must "disapprove" such things. In spite of the fact that these things seem small and of a social nature, yet they quickly open the door to greater experiments in this field. Such activities also tend to dull the conscience in the making of proper choices.

WARD A. HOUGAS

Question:

Why is the Doctrine and Covenants used instead of the Book of Commandments?

Michigan

MRS. L. E. S.

Answer:

The Book of Commandments was never a complete book. While it was being published at Independence, Missouri, in 1833, the printing plant was destroyed by a mob, the type scattered in the street, and the few printed sheets thrown to the winds. The plant was not restored, and the publication of the book was for the time abandoned, though individuals gathered enough sheets to bind several copies of the half-printed work, several of which are still extant.

The next year, at Kirtland, Ohio, members of a committee appointed to prepare the revelations for publication reported their work to a General Assembly or conference of the church, and the compilation was formally adopted under the title of "The Book of Doctrine and Covenants." Its publication was authorized on September 24, 1834. Thus the Book of Doctrine and Covenants became a part of the church's officially approved Scriptures, which the Book of Commandments never was (see Church History, Vol. I, pages 572-582).

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is it right for one who smokes to join the church? A young man, an excellent prospect in every other respect, is hesitating on this point. He has tried several times to quit without success.

Texas

MRS. P. H.

Answer:

The church of Jesus Christ is a saving institution. No one ever fully overcomes all habits before entering the church. We have had a tendency to hold up the smoking habit as one of the most undesirable ones, and at times considered it as a test of fellowship. We have even set up this one as a barrier to membership. In this we should be most wise and considerate.

There is nothing I know of in the Scriptures which prohibits anyone from joining the church who has the smoking habit. However, members of the church should be clean in every respect. Those who contemplate membership should expect that this habit be eliminated as well as others not so obvious. The use of tobacco in any form should be avoided.

There is a possibility that too much reference has been made to this young man's smoking habit and not enough emphasis on the more fundamental aspects of the kingdom of God. True value judgments cannot be set up if reference is made entirely to this habit. If anyone really wants to overcome the smoking habit it can be done, especially if that person is anxious to relate himself to God and his purposes.

The Bible in the Lives of Great Americans

By George R. Farnum

Boston Lawyer and Former Assistant Attorney-General of the United States

A YOUNG FRIEND, training with the Marines at Parris Island, wrote me that he was given a Bible with the following inscription by the President: "As Commander-in-Chief, I take pleasure in commending the reading of the Bible to all who serve in the armed forces of the United States. Throughout the centuries men of many faiths and diverse origins have found in the sacred book words of wisdom, counsel and inspiration. It is a fountain of strength and now, as always, an aid in attaining the highest aspirations of the human soul." The truth of this lofty utterance is illustrated in the lives of many of our own great men of the past.

The religious views of Thomas Jefferson—based on his own interpretation of the Scriptures—are highly revealing of his independent character and staunch championship of what he called "the common right of freedom of conscience." Admonishing a friend, he once wrote, "Say nothing of my religion. It is known to my God and myself alone," adding, "Its evidence before the world is to be sought in my life; if that has been honest and dutiful to society, the religion which has regulated it cannot be a bad one." At another time he declared, "I must ever believe that religion substantially good which produces an honest life, and we have been authorized by one whom you and I equally respect, to judge of the tree by its fruit."

He has left singular proof of his preoccupation with the Gospels. At a time when he was, as he said, "overwhelmed with other business"—which we can well believe—he selected and arranged in chronological order such passages as he thought best calculated to present the message which Jesus sought to impart. This he described as "an abridgment of the New Testament for the use of the Indians, unembarrassed with matter of fact or faith beyond the level of their comprehension." Later he enlarged this work to include Greek, Latin, and French texts in parallel columns, entitling it, "The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth." This has come to be known as the Jefferson Bible. Of it he said, among other things, "It is a document of proof that I am a real Christian, that is to say, a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus."

Benjamin Franklin has been characterized by his distinguished biographer, Carl Van Doren, as "a great pagan sceptic." Nevertheless, he appears to have been a faithful Bible reader. Asked by the president of Yale toward the close of his life concerning his religious views, he declared, "As to Jesus of Nazareth . . . I think the system of morals and his religion, as he left them to us, the best the world ever saw or is likely to see." He concluded with a passage reminiscent of Jefferson for its tolerance, "I have ever let others enjoy their religious sentiments, without reflecting on them for those that appeared to me unsupportable or even absurd. All sects here, and we have a great variety, have experienced my good will in assisting them with subscriptions for building their new places of worship, and, as I never opposed any of their doctrines, I hope to go out of the world in peace with them all." Incidentally, he once took an ancient story, revised the theme, cast it into appropriate language, and under the title "A Parable Against Persecution" proposed it as a new chapter in the Bible for inclusion in Genesis.

TO GEORGE WASHINGTON the Bible was, as he called it, "the power and benign light of revelation." He was a faithful student of its text and devoted many hours to meditation over its transcendent message to mankind. His life testifies to the courage, strength, faith, and fortitude that he drew from this source. As Jefferson prepared his own "bible" and Franklin composed an original parable, so Washington wrote with his own hand a book of private prayers which he entitled "The Daily Sacrifice."

To Robert E. Lee the sacred texts were a source of never-failing strength in hours of trial and peril, and of deep solace in days of sorrow and defeat. He once described the Bible as "a book which supplies the place of all others, and cannot be replaced by any other," adding on another occasion, "No one ever becomes too old to study [its] precious truths." In a letter written for the guidance of a young man, he wrote, "Above all things, learn at once to worship your Creator and to do His will as revealed in His Holy Book." To a minister of the gospel, who bitterly declaimed against the threatened course of the federal authorities after the War, Lee said, "Doctor, there is a good old book which I read and you preach from, which says, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you.' Do you think your remarks this evening were quite in the spirit of that teaching?" The preacher, having apologized for his observations, Lee concluded, "I have fought against the people of the North because I believed that they were seeking to wrest from the South its dearest rights. But I have never cherished toward them bitter or vindictive feelings, and have never seen the day when I did not pray for them."

P ATHETICALLY DEFICIENT in schooling, which he once computed as less than a year in the aggregate, the boy Lincoln avidly turned to the few books which were available. Among these was the Bible. It remained his support and comfort all the days of his life. His friend, Billy Brown, said of him, "There ain't any doubt he knew it pretty near by heart." Addressing the Springfield (Illinois) Bible Society in 1850, he declared, "It is suited to men in all conditions of life, and includes all the duties they owe to their Creator, to themselves, and to their fellow men." To a colored delegation that called at the White House, he described it as "the best gift God has given to men." To Josiah Speed in the last year of the War, he confided he was "profitably engaged in reading the Bible," adding the counsel, "Take all this book upon reason that you can and the balance upon faith and you will live and die a better man."

His thoughts, emotions, and imagination were profoundly affected by the baffling paradoxes and contradictions of the Old Testament, by the drama and pathos of its simple and passionate narratives, by its noble poetry, and by its austere and heroic spirit. He felt, as he read, something of the majesty and awe of the eternal and nameless Presence, who from its pages seemed to speak to him betimes as to Moses "mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches." His feelings were deeply stirred by the haunting music and mystic appeal of the Psalms. In the New Testament he found refuge and strength in those years when it seemed little short of a miracle that any man could carry so grievous a load of work and responsibility, so sore a burden of care and sorrow. The Sermon on the Mount, he asserted, "contained the essence of all law and justice." He once wistfully said of the Beatitudes, "I have sometimes thought I might claim the benefit of the one that pronounces a blessing upon those who hunger and thirst after righteousness." He regarded the Lord's Prayer as the sublimest composition in human language.

In his celebrated debates with Douglas there are passages, declared his English biographer, Lord Charnwood, that are arresting for a beauty characteristic of one who has learned to feel and to speak with the authors of the Bible. Of his Second Inaugural the same authority added, "Probably no speech of a modern statesman uses so unreservedly the language of intense religious feeling." With what aptness and moving power he quotes the Scriptures to fortify his lofty thought and to heighten the simple beauty of his language! "Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that men should dare ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered—that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His purposes. 'Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh.'" And again, "Fondly do we hope—ferently do we pray that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue . . . as was said three thousand years ago, so still must it be said, 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'"—Reprinted by permission from The Lawyer, September, 1943, Vol. 7, No. 1.

From Apostle Arthur Oakman, Hannover, Germany, May 23:

We have completed arrangements for a service personnel institute to be held at Boblingen, near Stuttgart, June 3 and 4. Through Chaplain Engstrom EUCOM issued authority for this gathering in Weekly Directive No. 20 of May 15, page 3, paragraph 5, Army Regulation 210-10, paragraph 11. This directive was read through to all units May 15 so that every one of the forty-seven people we know of would thus be apprised of the location and date of the gathering. Special leave is granted to the men to attend this affair, and the leave in no way is deducted from their regular time off.

We are using Army facilities throughout the time of the institute—sleeping quarters, gathering rooms, and mess hall. The program will include social fellowship, classwork, and a preaching service. Details of this program will be forwarded to you after the institute, together with comments on its success and probable value.

Men Ordained to Priesthood

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—On September 28, 1952, Kathleen Donahue was baptized by her grandfather, Joseph Roby, at Los Angeles Central Church and confirmed on Sunday morning, October 12, at Pasadena by Elders Harry K. Waylett and Evan Inslee.

And on December 17 John, son of Brother and Sister C. R. Walton, was baptized by Lawrence Emerson and confirmed on December 21, by Elders W. W. Powers and Charles Skinner.

On the morning of November 27, the second annual Thanksgiving service with breakfast following was held at the new Pasadena Church.

A bazaar and enchilada dinner was held at the church on November 14. Approximately $250 was cleared at this time, and this with the money from other projects made it possible for the women's department to put another $500 into the building fund for the first six months of the fiscal year.

On the afternoon of December 21, Elder and Mrs. E. D. Chase, former pastor of the Pasadena mission and now living in Yucaipa, were honored by their daughters with a reception in the annex on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

And on March 15, Dr. L. O. Brockway, another former pastor of the mission, was guest speaker at the eleven o'clock service where he was greeted warmly by the five remaining members of the old mission, as well as the remainder of the congregation. Dr. Brockway has been instructor at the University of Michigan since leaving the West Coast.

A turkey dinner was given in the annex on February 22.

The annex was the setting for a womanless wedding on the evening of March 27. For the amusement and pleasure of the guests and to procure some new cooking utensils, the "wedding gifts for the bride" were given to the women's department for use in the kitchen.

The first Thursday of the month the women hold a luncheon, followed by a devotional program and a talk by a guest speaker. Those who have been speakers are Louis J. Ostertag, G. E. Tickemyer, Richard Andersen, William Patterson and Louise Scott Wrigley.

During the working periods, "Strengthening Our Spiritual Powers" has been read and discussed.

On Saturday evening, April 25, the congregation sponsored an enchilada dinner. Jean Nelson made the enchiladas and Helen Weaver was chairman of the project which was given for the benefit of the stake children's camp to be held in August on the new reunion grounds at Idylwild.

On March 1, at the stake conference held in Central Church, the following men from the Pasadena congregation were called to the priesthood: Lawrence Emerson, Reece Walker, Joseph Weaver, and Harvey Smith. The ordinations were held on March 22, with Stake President G. E. Tickemyer giving the charge to the candidates. Lawrence Emerson was ordained to the office of elder by Elders Tickemyer and W. K. McElwain; Reece Walker to the office of priest by Elders W. W. Powers and Harry K. Waylett; Joseph Weaver to the office of teacher, Elders Waylett and Powers officiating; and Harvey Smith to the office of deacon by Elders W. K. McElwain and G. E. Tickemyer.

A series of evening missionary services was conducted at the Pasadena Church by Evangelist W. W. Patterson from March 4 to 13.

Services are held on Sunday evening beginning with a missionary class at 6:30 conducted by Elder W. W. Powers, with a further service at 7:30.

Prayer services at 7:30 on Wednesday evenings are well attended, with attendance increasing from week to week.—Reported by EDNAH M. STRONG

Zion's League Retreat

BAKER, OREGON.—Elder Clinton Dobson and Brother Quick of Camas, Oregon, visited in Baker, April 11 and 12. The Saturday evening service was a cottage preaching service.

Sunday services began with an early morning prayer service followed by church school and the eleven o'clock preaching service. Brother Dobson brought the morning message.

On April 26, the Zion's League traveled to Wallowa under the sponsorship of Brother and Sister Reginald Fritschle for a Zion's League retreat. Services were held at Mrs. Mabel Miller's home. Elder Wilcox came from LaGrande. Others coming were the Wilmot Hunt family from Pondsosa and Elder and Mrs. John McKee.

On May 4, Elder J. F. Curtis came to Baker from the Idaho District spring conference and held a week of cottage services. On Thursday he traveled to Halfway to administer to isolated Saints there. Services were concluded Sunday with regular Sunday morning meetings and afternoon prayer and fellowship service. Brother Curtis preached the Mother's Day sermon Sunday morning.

Building Almost Completed

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—Seventy Glen H. Johnson held a series of meetings at the San Leandro Church, from January 11 to 21, 1953. He also held cottage meetings and visited the members in their homes. A reception was held for Brother Johnson after service on Sunday evening, January 11.

Wesley John, son of Richard and Rose Mary Adams, was blessed November 16, by Elders Lewis Adams and Paul Stanfield. Claudia Sue, daughter of Bob and Ruth Brown, was blessed December 14 by Elders James Cummings and Harold Cline.

On March 15, the branch was saddened by the passing of Sister Mardel Holden, wife of Pastor D. C. Holden. Sister Holden passed away in church at Santa Rosa, California, where she and Brother Holden had gone to attend church and visit relatives.

The wedding of Alice Hale and Robert Coleman was held at the church on March 28, 1953. The ceremony was performed by Elder George Anderson. The Colemans will make their home in San Leandro.

Easter Sunday, April 5, Lloyd Stewart was ordained to the office of elder. The ordination prayer was given by Elder Holden, who was assisted by Elder Anderson.

The church, which was started in 1949, is nearing completion. It is expected to be finished in a few months. Inside finishing and landscaping the grounds are the principle work to be done. Work has gone forward as money for material has been made available. Most of the work and some materials have been donated by church members and friends. The women's department has helped on the building fund and other branch expenses by sponsoring suppers, luncheons, bazaars, and quilting.—Reported by NELLIE D. MACDOUGALL

Retreat Held

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—Over seventy members of the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods gathered April 25 and 26 at the Crippled Children's Camp in the San Bernardino Mountains for the Southern California District priesthood retreat.

The theme was "He That Is Ordained of God and Sent Forth Is the Possessor of All Things." Meditation and instructions were directed by John Davis, Rodney Engel, Harold Wixom, Louis Ostertag, and David Carmichael of the district and Seventy Glen Johnson.

Warren Best was in charge of the dining room. Sister Ann Jasper was chief cook. A Communion service was held Saturday evening and a dedication service on Sunday morning.—Reported by HUGH KENSLE

LOCK FOUR, PENNSYLVANIA.—The following were baptized and confirmed on November 16: Robert Eugene Johnston and Carnie Lorraine Johnston were baptized by Seventy James Menzies; Frances Lorraine and Cindy Marie Johnston were baptized by Henry Bollinger, Jr. Elders Ben Cooper, Sr., and Ben Warner, Sr., confirmed Robert Eugene; Elders Don R. Ross, Sr., and Don R. Ross, Jr., confirmed Frances Lorraine; Elder Menzies confirmed Cindy Marie and Carnie Lorraine. Brother Menzies also blessed Cheri-Jean Johnston.—Reported by LILLIAN ZOLLARS

Studying Church Literature

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—Members of the Bible class have been studying Restoration and Prophecy, by Elbert A. Smith, and Fundamentals, by F. Henry Edwards.

A morning prayer service was held May 17.—Reported by GLADYS L. HEGWOOD

Plans for Building Progress

CHADRON, NEBRASKA.—Apostle Jensen, Elder Ward A. Hougas, and Hylton Lamphere, bishop's agent, met with the Saints on May 5 to complete plans for the purchasing of a church building.

After consideration, approval for purchase was given. The branch now meets in their own building.

Since the women organized in November they have held a bazaar and rummage sale where approximately $150 was raised toward the building fund. The women also hold a food sale once a month. In the past weeks the following have visited the branch: Wesley Evans and family, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Harshman, and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Rose and daughter Cindy from Denver, Colorado.

Brother Hougas and wife visited on the evening of April 31. Elder Hougas gave an illustrated sermon.—Reported by Mrs. RUTH CARRICK

Visiting Ministers Assist Mission

SALINA, KANSAS.—The mission held a family night just before Christmas at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Henry and Mrs. Maude Reiff.

Captain Robert Doan was stationed at S.H.A.F.B. in September. He and family contributed to the Sunday services held at the YMCA Building, until he was discharged from the armed forces. The Doans returned to their home in Alamogordo, New Mexico, January 10.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Henry and family were visitors on April 5 and assisted in the Easter program.

The guest speaker on April 19 was Elder Earl Sheppard. Brother Sheppard presided over the Communion, prayer, and testimony service, during which each person participated. Sister Essie Sheppard, district religious education director, stressed a teacher's religious training study course.

Sister Deane Holder, district women's leader, spoke on April 26.

Elder J. C. Shannon of the district presidency, and Sister Shannon were visitors on May 14. Brother Shannon gave the "God and Country" Boy Scout pledge to Frank Munden, Jr. Brother Shannon preached and conducted a prayer and testimony service and also served Communion.

The women's work is under the leadership of Sister Marguerite Tyree. They meet the first and third Wednesday to study and sew for the Independence Sanitarium.—Reported by EDNA F. HENRY

Baby Blessed

New Pastor Holds Series

COAL HILL, MISSOURI.—The branch held a missionary series February 22 to March 15 with the new pastor, Seventy H. E. Winegar, preaching. The Zion's League meets every Sunday evening. Brother Orvin Smith of El Dorado Springs comes the first Sunday night of each month and gives illustrated lectures. Sister Bertie Gould is the church school director.—Reported by JOHN WOOD

Seventy Holds Services

CENTRAL NEBRASKA DISTRICT.—On March 8, Elder Francis Schrunk of Lincoln conducted all-day services at Inman. Brother Schrunk officiated in the blessing of his great-niece Sheryl Nadine Elkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Elkins.

Elder Harold H. Reid, assistant district president, conducts services at Clearwater and Inman, Nebraska, and Bonesteel, South Dakota, each month.

Elder Joseph Coon of Beemer, Nebraska, conducted a Communion service at Inman on Easter Sunday. District President James C. Daugherty conducted missionary sermons and slide lectures at Clearwater, April 26-May 1, and at Inman and Atkinson, May 4-8.

The district conference with Apostle D. Blair Jensen in charge was held at Inman, May 2 and 3. On May 3, Ara Kay Hogue, son of Brother and Sister Willis Hogue, and Wanda Patras, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Patras, all of Clearwater, were baptized by Brother Daugherty in the font in the church at Inman. Ara Kay was confirmed by Elders Jensen and Reid, and Wanda was confirmed by Elders Reid and Jensen.

Plans were made for further services to be conducted by Brother Daugherty in June at Bonesteel, Ainsworth, Valentine, Burwell, Comstock, and Clearwater.—Reported by MARGARET H. PRUSE

Women's Institute Held

THAYER, MISSOURI.—The district women's leader, Katie Branch, directed the women's institute held at Thayer on April 11 and 12. Sister Clarence Skinner represented the General Church Council of Women, and was the guest speaker. Also serving on the program of the institute were Brother W. E. Williams and family, Sister Kelley from Bernie, Missouri, and Brother and Sister Gomer Malone. A picture of Christ was presented to the Thayer Saints at the closing meeting, by the women of the district. The pastor of the branch is George Fink.—Reported by MRS. E. M. NEFF

Candidates Baptized

MEDOC, MISSOURI.—Brother Ted Linder of Joplin conducted a series of missionary meetings at the church March 1-8.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reynolds and son Leigh were honored at a farewell party, March 17. They returned to their home in Sidney, Montana, after spending the winter on their farm in the Medoc area.

The branch held a work day on March 28, to begin redecorating the church basement. The women's department sponsored a rummage sale on April 4. Proceeds amounted to $32.

Seventy Luther Troyer was guest speaker at the morning service on April 5. At noon a basket dinner was held.

On April 26, Darlene Capps, Joann Capps, and Judith Ann Troyer were baptized by Elder William Miller. The confirmation service was held Sunday evening. The candidates were confirmed by Elders William Miller, L. A. Johnson, and Clifford Miller.

The women's department refinished the floors of the main auditorium on May 12. A deer supper was held in the church basement on May 13.—Reported by WARREN ELDRED

Children Blessed

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.—On April 3, a special Good Friday candlelight service was held. It was a pageant entitled "Why Pray for Others?"

The choir presented the cantata, "The Dawn of Easter," on April 5. Mona Cochrane directed the choir.

On May 3, Dorothy Gwendolyn, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hartford, was blessed by Elders Al Pelletier and Charles Tomlinson. Brother Hartford is the church school director.

On May 17, Ronald Eddie, son of Brother and Sister G. Benesko, was blessed by Elder G. Towers and C. Tomlinson. Jacqueline Lionne, daughter of Brother and Sister Alf Gendron, was blessed by Elders C. Tomlinson and M. Ware.

Brother Pelletier conducted a series May 10-21. His final sermon was followed by a social hour in the basement of the church.—Reported by AUDREY V. WARE

Memorial for Elder McDonald

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The branch, under the direction of Elder Frank Fry, held a memorial service on May 17 for Elder Frank McDonald. High tribute was paid to the fine contribution Brother McDonald made to the work of the church in Omaha. He served as pastor of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Branches from 1936 to 1940 and labored diligently in both cities.—Reported by R. W. SCOTT

Cottage Meetings Held

VINITA, OKLAHOMA.—The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Loyd Leroy Carter, Tricia Ann, was blessed March 1 by her great-grandfather, Elder Lea Lamons, and Elder Clarence Rook.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Avo Davis, has been raising money for the building fund. They are studying "Women's Distinctive Stewardship" by Thelona Stevens, taught by Lela Parkhurst.

The priesthood retreat, May 15-17, at the reunion grounds was attended by C. L. Rook, Bert Parkhurst, Roy Raffety, and Don Sunderman.—Reported by LELA PARKHURST

Missionary Series Held

SOUTH WALES.—Apostle Arthur Oakman, assisted by Seventy Tom Worth, held a series of missionary services with the Skewen Branch, April 12-26. Three new members were baptized. The first service was held on the afternoon of April 12 at which Brother Worth was the speaker. This service was followed by a tea served by the women's department. Immediately preceding the evening service, the children's church school was held, conducted by the director, Brother Aubrey Evans. Brother Oakman gave the evening sermon; fifty-six people were present.

On April 15, Brother Oakman spoke to the women's department. The meeting was under the leadership of Sister Lily Farrage. Brother Worth spoke at the evening service.

On April 19, Bishop A. T. Trapp of Gloucester presided over the afternoon service. A combined service was held at Penllergaer in the evening. The attendance was 130, which is the largest meeting held in South Wales for a number of years. The Llanelly Branch also attended. Brother Oakman was the speaker.

The young people's department held the regular meeting on April 22. Brother Worth spoke on "Talents." He was also the evening speaker.

The baptismal service was held on April 25 at the "Adulam" Chapel at Bonymaen. Brother Worth baptized Mrs. Phyllis Punchedard and daughter Margaret and George James of Penllergaer. Brother Oakman was in charge of the service. This makes a total of seven new members to join the church in the past year. The branch was only organized in November, 1952.

On April 26, a service was held at the Moose Hall in Neath. It was a fellowship service with Brother Worth in charge. The confirmation service with Elders Donald Hughes and Tom Worth participating was held preceding the evening preaching service. Brother Oakman was the speaker.—Reported by BEATRICE EVANS

Women's Group Active

LANCASTER, OHIO.—During the month of February preaching services were broadcast over local radio station WHOK at 10:30 a.m. Elder George Howdyshell, pastor, preached on February 1 and 15. Elder H. A. Griffin preached on February 8 and 22.

A Communion service was held on the evening of February 1. The speakers for the month of February at the evening meetings were Howard D. Koontz, Edward L. Smith, and A. E. Anderton of Columbus, Ohio.

The Communion service on March 1 was held in the morning. On March 8, Elder E. E. Smith of Columbus was the speaker. On March 29, Elder Jesse Reed of Plain City, Ohio, was the speaker at both evening and morning services.

The women's department meets the first Thursday evenings of each month. They have painted and redecorated the basement and the baptismal font.

Speakers for the month of April were H. A. Griffin and E. E. Smith of Columbus, Kyle Reed, H. D. Koontz, Edward L. Smith, George Howdyshell, and Paul Ellwood of Columbus.

On May 7, the women's department met in the church basement with twenty mothers and eighteen children at a mother-daughter-son banquet. Lillian Hallarn decorated the table. Brother Anderton preached the Mother's Day sermon on May 10.—Reported by CORA STONE-BURNER

Appreciation of Blessings

I've been teaching the primaries in church school recently of God's care for his people. Because I've watched for experiences to show this in my life, I've become more conscious of just how much God really does care.

One morning before I left for work (I am employed as a clerk at the post office) I noticed the thick fog outside. I knelt beside my bed—a morning habit—and asked God's protection. I asked that he would help me see as I drove. All the way the fog was lifted a safe distance ahead so I could see clearly. About halfway there I noticed that others had their windshield wipers turned on, then realized that mine weren't nor was my windshield even damp. A feeling of thankfulness filled my heart.

Recently the claim clerk from the main post office in Tulsa telephoned me to ask about a C.O.D. fund that should have been sent in from my branch in December. I looked through my records and could find nothing on the matter, so I forgot about it. A few days later the post office station examiner came out to check my stock. The boy who had received it said he had been paid for the C.O.D. The examiner wanted to check my balance. Nothing like this had happened to me in the ten years I had worked as a clerk. As I thought of it a voice seemed to direct me to look through my receipts again. I checked December, January, and February, each twice, to no avail. I was about to return the receipts to their place when again I felt the strong urge to keep looking. This time I looked back in the November receipts. Only three or four receipts back I found what I was searching for. The company that sent the C.O.D. package had sent a tracer claiming they had mailed it in December. They had made a mistake in their date.

The examiner asked, "How did you ever happen to look back in November's files? Not one clerk in 10,000 would have thought to do that." After he left and took an account of the receipts with him I began to wonder in my own mind why I looked back in November's file; then the Spirit of the Master rested upon me, and tears began to stream down my cheeks as I thanked him for his goodness.

Since working with children I have grown to experience a kind of love I've never known before. Their love is a challenge to me. I pray that I may become as a little child and see only the good in people and in all about me.

Broken Homes

This letter is the result of my thinking on the theme presented in the church program for Sunday, May 3, regarding family life and Christian homes. When a man and woman take the marriage vows, they pledge themselves to each other before God and his servant. They promise to love each other and keep themselves for each other until death parts them, not just until one or the other gets angry. I see no reason why this part of God's law should be considered any more outmoded than other parts of it. The Scriptures admonish everyone to be truthful. In the courts of the land oaths are taken with one hand on the Bible, signifying truthfulness. Should it be any different in God's court? When one of his servants pronounces a couple man and wife, if either leaves the other, it is lying to God. Those who are being married have earthly witnesses to their contract; if they do not live up to it, they have lied to each other before these witnesses as well as before God.

Since they "twain are one flesh," they are injuring a part of their own bodies by mistreating the other. Members of the church should try especially to keep the commandments of their Heavenly Father. If they cannot live together peacefully now, how can they hope to do better later? That every Reorganized Latter Day Saint may live so he will be acceptable in Zion is my prayer.

Food for the Soul

I have been a teacher for the past several years in what is commonly known as the Creole School. The children who attend are underprivileged, but they have inspired me in many ways and I love them. They have also caused me to do better church work.

As I sat in my class this morning and heard the Scripture being read (John 4: 32) I remembered some "out loud" thinking of one of the little eight-year-old boys. Robin ran into the schoolroom for a bite to eat at the morning recess. He took the lid from the half gallon bucket and said, "Potatoes, potatoes! One of these days I'm going have you slam full of puddin'." As I watched him I thought of the pattern of life these children need, which includes spiritual food. I also thought of the work Latter Day Saints could do with these people. Next year I plan to help these children learn more about Christ's pattern of life. Although they lack a balanced physical diet, they all can have the food that Christ spoke of when he said, "I have meat . . . that ye know not of."

Why I Am a Reorganized Latter Day Saint

Poverty caused me to take my trials to God in prayer. I had prayed for a long time, many times a day, and it seemed as though it didn't change things at all, and as I knelt to pray it seemed the tempter was there saying, "What are you doing this for? It is all foolishness; there is no sense in it." I cried out with a loud voice, "O God, show me something in this little book that I shall not doubt." It was a pamphlet songbook, and when I opened the book it was all dimmed out except the heading of one song, "Trust in God and Do the Right." I was amazed. I didn't know God worked like that, but I knew then that God heard my prayers. I thought I would read something that would help me feel better, and the longer I looked at those words the bigger and blacker they were. I kept my eyes on them until they dimmed away. I never remembered raising my eyes, but when those words faded they seemed to be written across my room up near the ceiling. I have gone through many trials but I realize trials make us fit subjects for the kingdom.

Letter of Appreciation

I appreciate the Herald very much. Since we do not have church privileges it is our missionary. I have especially enjoyed reading the story of Hubert Case's life. I can't say that I read the Herald from "start to finish" because I begin with "And Finally" first.

I want to thank the Saints and my friends who prayed for me while I was recuperating from a broken hip. It is now as good as before. The doctor said that I would be troubled with arthritis, but I have not been bothered. I give my Heavenly Father credit for restoring my health.

Impressed to Pray

I had a dream several years ago concerning a brother in the church. Brother X and his family lived hundreds of miles from me, and I had not heard from them for over a year. I knew nothing of the work he was doing at the time of my dream. I dreamed that I was walking with him on a high plateau when we noticed a large boulder. Coming from behind it I heard the sound of many people laughing, shouting, and seeming to have a good time. Suddenly I realized I was alone, and then I heard Brother X calling for help. I went around the boulder and saw that he had tried to jump across a very deep canyon and had landed with one foot on a projecting rock on the far side, while his other foot was on a similar projection on the side nearest me. As I ran near I saw small tongues of fire leaping up out of the canyon. I called, "Don't let your feet slip," and then I ran for a rope to use in rescuing him. As I ran I saw a large black building from which a great throng of people were coming. I watched to see where they were going when, to my dismay, I saw them go to the rim where the canyon was wide, then disappear. They did not seem at all concerned about where they were going. As I watched I thought, surely Brother X isn't in the danger I thought he was; I'll go back and see. This time I went nearer the edge and saw that where the canyon was wider a great fire raged. Those who went over the edge disappeared into the smoke. Filled with fear I called out to Brother X, "Don't let your feet slip—there is no bottom to this canyon." Then I started again for help. When I awoke I was shaking with fright.

I could not understand this dream. I knew Brother X was a faithful member of the church—one I considered not at all likely to "slip." Gradually I dismissed the dream from my thinking. Two weeks later, before retiring, I read in I Nephi the vision Lehi had seen. I went to bed and the dream returned to me with such force that I arose and wrote to Brother and Sister X, telling them of my experiences.

Later in the year they stopped to visit, and it was then that Brother X told of his work at the time of my dream. He said it kept him away from home all week, and that the people with whom he stayed were very worldly. They spent their evenings drinking, dancing, and playing cards. They invited Brother X to join them on these occasions, but he refused. He would go to his room but could hear the din of the merry-makers until far into the night. He felt this made him unpopular, particularly as they continued to invite him to join them, and at times he was tempted to do so. One Saturday night he returned home and his wife read him the letter I had sent. As she read they both realized the Lord was watching over them and warning them against yielding to temptation. He said that during the previous week he had thought he might just as well join the crowd, since he had to be there. He considered the dream a timely warning.

We are thankful that our heavenly Father watches over his children.

In Appreciation

I am taking this means of thanking my many friends for the cards, letters, and flowers sent me during my recent illness in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Receiving the cheery messages and knowing my friends were all remembering me helped greatly.

Also I want to thank Elder Patterson, Elder Walters, and Chaplain Sheehy for the many times they came to my assistance; through their administrations I found relief from pain in sleep. I am grateful to all the doctors, nurses, and members of the hospital staff who served me in any way. May the Lord continue to bless them in their efforts.

Creston — A Story of Consecration

BEHIND EVERY NEW CHURCH building is a story—a story of love, devotion, sacrifice, and service. Creston, Iowa, is no exception. When eleven Saints met for the organization of the branch in 1882 they carried the dream of a building and a place in community life for the church. On August 26 their dream was realized. President Israel A. Smith told the capacity crowd that met for the consecration service, "We consecrate here a place of worship of God, a shrine and temple that becomes the outward symbol of spiritual well being." The Saints of Creston and the people of the community could appreciate this outward symbol.

Three years ago the building campaign began. This drive was not to be an intermittent program. The campaign enlisted the help of all ninety of the Saints in the branch. The businesses of the community were solicited for assistance and several hundred dollars were contributed by them.

Two young men in the congregation gave a series of music recitals in branches of other towns, and money raised from freewill offerings at these recitals was added to the fund. They held recitals in Chariton, Lamoni, Des Moines, and Creston, Iowa; Omaha, Nebraska; and Pittsburgh and North Charleroi, Pennsylvania.

Monthly bake sales were sponsored by women who contributed their own baked goods. Some of them took special orders for baked goods in their homes and then contributed the money raised to the fund. "More than one thousand chicken pies have gone into our new building," one of the sisters of the branch remarked.

The drive was a co-operative endeavor. Two of the women made an arrangement. One, a young mother, was qualified to teach in the junior college in town. The other woman took care of her children, and the young mother contributed her entire salary to the building fund.

One of the women of the congregation sold an antique diamond ring which had been in her family for years and then gave the money to the church.

MUCH OF THE LABOR on the building was done by volunteer workers of the Creston group and neighboring congregations. Many of the business firms of the town generously helped in the building through selling necessary materials at a church discount.

Frank Price, designer of the building, and Mrs. Lloyd Peery, who helped with the decorating, generously contributed of their services without asking remuneration.

The dedication service was held with the President of the church, district leaders, civic officials, and Saints from the surrounding territory participating in the worship. The words of special dedication music were written by one of the women of the branch and set to music by a priesthood member.

Creston's story is not ended, however. The growth in membership to an active group of approximately ninety Saints bears testimony that the branch is concerned with spiritual growth, too. The church was featured recently in a full-page article in two editions of the Creston News Advertiser. Pictures of the new building, the priesthood, members of the women's group, and the speakers at the consecration service accompanied the article. The editor of the paper was one of the speakers at the service.

The people of the branch have found a new meaning in Nehemiah's statement, "So builded they . . . for the people had a mind to work."

BIRTHS

A son, Richard Lynn, was born April 25 to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Plumlee, Jr., of Orange, Texas. Mrs. Plumlee is the former Ardyce Strong. Both parents attended Graceland College.

A daughter, Cynthia Lee, was born on March 25 to Dorris and Inge McKinney. She was blessed on May 10 by Elder O. T. Hayer at Forrest, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. David W. Lawrence of Flint, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter on April 30. She has been named Denna Lacy.

A daughter, Darlene Louise, was born on December 5 in Leon, Iowa, to Mr. and Mrs. Guy W. Stewart, Jr., of Lamoni, Iowa. She was blessed on February 8 by Elders Roscoe Faunce and Clifford Cole. Mrs. Stewart is the former Joanne Mousseau of Detroit, Michigan. Mr. Stewart is a 1953 graduate of Graceland.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter O. Hubble of St. Joseph, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Janice Louise, born May 16. Mrs. Hubble is the former Pollyanna Bolinger of Independence, Missouri.

DEATHS

BIGGS.—Isabelle Adelaide, daughter of Charles and Isabelle McLean, was born February 23, 1875, at Moneymore, Ontario, and died February 10, 1953, in Independence, Missouri. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church over forty-five years. Her first husband, Elder Alma Booker, was a missionary, and she traveled with him until his death in 1929. She resided in Kirtland, Ohio, with her second husband, Joseph Biggs, until his death in 1948; then she moved to Independence.

She is survived by one sister, Mrs. James Pycoc of Toronto, Canada. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders A. W. Sheehy and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BRANNON.—Ammon James, son of R. O. and Nora Brannon, was born March 30, 1913, at Fanshawe, Oklahoma, and was electrocuted on March 30, 1953, while operating a test drill at Stigler, Oklahoma. On April 17, 1937, he was married to Jewel Dean Hall, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 11, 1951, and was ordained a priest on August 24, 1952. He had served as church school director for the past eighteen months, taught the senior class for one year, was young people's leader, and served on the building committee.

Besides his wife he leaves five children: Helen Gaye, Bobby James, Marvin Neil, Gene Arnold, and Lonnie Dale, all of the home; his father and mother of Muse, Oklahoma; his maternal grandmother, Decie Herrington of LeFlore, Oklahoma; two sisters: Oma Lee and Sibyl Loftis of Ukiah, California; and five brothers: Chester of Fanshawe; Orvin of Muse; Herbert of Camp Polk, Louisiana; Doyle of Susanville, California; and Roy of Ukiah. Funeral services were held in the Fanshawe High School auditorium (the church had been destroyed by fire), Elders Wallace Jackson and Clarence McGowen and High Priest O. O. Dollins officiating. Interment was in the Fanshawe cemetery.

Introducing

DANIEL E. WAITE, Iowa City, Iowa (page 5), is a student in the graduate school of oral surgery at the University of Iowa. However, he is determined not to lose his touch with the church while carrying this heavy load and is acting as pastor of the college group. He was born in Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1926. Later he moved to Alberta and was baptized in Ribstone in 1934. He was graduated from Graceland College in 1948 and married Alice Carlile the same year. They have two children: Christine, 4, and Tommy, 2. He enrolled as a student of the University of Edmonton, but his course was interrupted by a period of Army service in 1944 to 1946. He was president of the O.W.L. group at Graceland and is a member of the junior A.D.A. at Iowa University. He was ordained a priest in 1951 and an elder in 1952.

GLORIFYING THE PRESENT

Too often in our plans or apprehension for the future and our remembrance of things past, we overlook the intrinsic significance and opportunity of the present.

God did not stress "I was," or "I will be," but rather, "I am." God is Love; He is with us and in us now.

Let us polish our consciousness to the supreme reality of this fact. Let this thought remind us that of all that was or will be, the present, alone, is our own to do with what we will: to do those thoughtful things we have the sudden warm impulse to do, to curb the hasty tongue, to steer a firmer course toward our ideals.

All we ever have within our grasp is now; all we ever have control over is the present.
May Moler Worthington

PLENTY OF ROOM

An elderly man and wife, without luggage, applied for a room in a small Philadelphia hotel. "There is no room available," replied the clerk, "but it's storming. Would you be willing to sleep in my bed?" The elderly couple hesitated. "Oh, I'll get along all right," said the clerk.

Next morning the elderly man said to the clerk, "You should be the boss of the biggest hotel in the United States. Perhaps I'll build one for you."

In two years the clerk was invited to New York by his guest of the stormy night, who took him to Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street and said, "This is the hotel that I built for you to manage."

It was the Waldorf-Astoria, and his benefactor was William Waldor Astor.—Bessie Tarrington

THE CLOUDS WILL LIFT

Storms and tornadoes have taken the lives of many people across the country in recent weeks. Viewed statistically, the numbers are not great, but a person is more than a statistic. Every one lost makes a break in a family circle and brings grief to many others. How helpless we are to protect ourselves and our loved ones from such natural disasters. As for the lost ones, we can only trust that God keeps them somewhere, forever safe from further harm.

One feels awe and fear as he sees the great accumulation of storm clouds, the violent turbulence of the air, the lightning-like incandescent nails driven into the earth. There are hours of fury, and after a while the clouds lift and drift away.

Those who survive must wait patiently and in hope for the clouds to lift, knowing that no matter how heavy they are, they will be rolled away.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Robert Melvin Russell

IN ONE WAY Melvin Russell may be considered a typical Reorganized Latter Day Saint minister. It can be summed up in a statement by his wife, Eleanor: "Melvin doesn't seem to have a hobby any more. He spends every waking moment working and making plans for the church." With him it is a lifetime, all-around-the-clock job. For the past three years he has been pastor at Flint, Michigan, and president of the Flint-Port Huron District. The Saints in Flint have almost finished rebuilding their Hamilton Church. He has done the work of a general contractor besides all the backbreaking, hard work he could find time to do. This spring the first unit of an East Side Church will begin. Without doubt, he will be there every spare minute.

Melvin Russell was born in 1898 in Dundalk, Ontario, and was baptized in 1909. He was graduated from high school in Dundalk in 1918 and later from Orillia Teachers College in Ontario. He has taken some courses at Drake and Omaha Universities. He first went under appointment in May, 1929, as president of Central Nebraska District. He was pastor in Omaha, Nebraska, from March to October, 1931, when he was released along with a great number of others because of the depression. In April, 1938, he was reappointed and sent to Des Moines, Iowa, as pastor, and president of Des Moines District. In 1944 he became pastor of Omaha again and resident of the Northeastern Nebraska District. Beginning in 1946 he spent three years as city pastor in St. Joseph, Missouri. Since then he has been in Flint.

Besides his work as a full-time minister he has taught school for two years, worked six years for the Wayne County Road Commission of Detroit, and five years for a machine company in Wichita, Kansas (between mission appointments).

In 1930 he married Eleanor Williams. They have four children: Reta, 21, graduates from Michigan State College this spring; Robert, 19, and David, 18, both have been attending Graceland College this year; and William, 14, is at home.

Brother Russell is a high priest, ordained May 15, 1938, by Apostle George Lewis at the Stone Church.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT SMITH AT ST. LOUIS

May 19 President Israel A. Smith spoke at the evening service at the St. Louis, Missouri, Branch.

STATISTICIAN REPORTS

Merle Guthrie, General Church statistician, has reported that out of 243 baptisms in March forty-one families have been united in the church. June 7 Brother Guthrie attended a Rock Island District priesthood institute in Illinois.

SHOWS SLIDES

Seventy Eugene Theys showed slides and preached June 7 for the Blue Ridge congregation in the Center Stake. The slides were taken in Germany.

AT GREAT LAKES AREA

Arthur Rock, General Church audio-visuals director, attended two regional church school institutes—Columbus, Ohio, May 22-24, and Flint, Michigan, May 29-31. In Columbus he preached at North Church in the morning and presented a sound film at South Church Sunday evening. At Flint he preached in the morning at the East Side Church; that evening he presented a sound film at the Hamilton Avenue Branch. Brother Rock reported an unusually large enrollment and fine interest in these institutes.

WEDDLE TO SOUTHERN AREA

Franklyn S. Weddle, church music director, left Independence June 3 to attend music institutes in the southern area at Paris and Memphis, Tennessee; Caraway, Bald Knob, Little Rock, Arkansas; West Monroe, Louisiana; and Texarkana, Texas. He completed his travels at the Hot Springs, Arkansas, institute.

MESLE IN MICHIGAN

Elder F. Carl Mesle visited five Michigan districts recently. He held Zion's League leaders' conferences in the Northern, South Central, Central, Eastern, and Southern Districts. Also during this trip, Brother Mesle met with members of the Committee on Ministry to College Students to plan the "Pilgrimage to Palmyra," the fall conference which will be held Labor Day week end at Rochester, New York.

AWARDED GOLD SEALS

Three of the Gold Seal awards given for highest scholarship at the Graceland Commencement exercises May 29 were given to Independence youth. They were Lucille McCormick, Viola Velt, and Alice Eastwood. Miss Eastwood also received the Silver Seal for her "Acacia" work. The other Gold Seal winner was Lynn Ourth of Nauvoo, Illinois.

IN DES MOINES DISTRICT

Elder Charles D. Neff was in the Des Moines District May 30 and 31. On Saturday he met with the staff for the coming Des Moines youth camp at the grounds at Guthrie Center. On Sunday he was the speaker at Ames, Iowa.

The Lift of the Spirit

"The spirit lifted me up."

—Ezekiel 3: 14

THROUGH A WINDOW TO THE EAST I see two trees on a hilltop with the sky as their background. They are only common trees. No traveler on the road would notice anything to distinguish them from millions of their kind along the highways of the Middle West.

But recently, a few minutes before sunrise, there was a rose dawn that flushed the eastern sky with beauty, and for half an hour the two trees were glorified beyond description, seeming almost transparent in that early light.

The most common things become radiant when light shines through them. A cloud is a dull gray until sunlight strikes it and transforms it into a thing of beauty. The sparkle of the diamond has its origin not in stone but in light.

So, too, our lives may be dull and meaningless until the Spirit of God touches and transforms them. It is wise to remember that the glory and beauty which comes into human life has its origin not in the flesh but in the spirit.

THE PROPHET EZEKIEL expressed great truth when he exclaimed, "The spirit lifted me up." It made of him something that he had not been before. It took him afar and enlarged his horizons. It made the difference between a man and a prophet, between a citizen concerned with his own affairs and a leader concerned with the fate of God's people.

A young girl may seem quite drab to strangers. But when she falls in love her eyes shine and there is something radiant about her. If her marriage is a good one, she may manage to keep some of that glow all the rest of her life, as many women do.

But if she is not happy she soon loses it and becomes dull and ordinary again.

TAKE A SINGLE SENTENCE from the gospel and isolate it from the great miracle that has so long deprived it of the consideration it deserves. Even to mention its origin would be to risk having it lost again by diverting attention to something else. Identify it later if you wish, but first look for the great love of humanity revealed in it.

Jesus took him by the hand and lifted him up.

He was down, and he could not get up by himself. His family, his friends, and neighbors all thought that it was permanent, and that he would never rise again. But Jesus showed them that was a mistake. Anybody else might have touched that man's hand, and there would have been no response whatever. With Jesus it was different. When he touched the hand, the man arose. There was a transformation of the physical by the spiritual.

Two items of great significance emerge from the statement. The first is the respect for human life, the care for an individual person. "Jesus took him by the hand." That was an expression of love and compassion. Jesus took the man's hand in a time of trouble. Death and sorrow were in the home, and it seemed to the people from all their previous experience that there would be no solution for this problem. But Jesus put out his hand, took the hand of the man, and the solution came.

The second item of significance was that Jesus was not content simply to raise Lazarus from the dead. He used it as a demonstration of the truth of eternal life. Jesus looked beyond the physical to the spiritual. The light of heaven shone through the physical facts of life. The spirit was more important than the body—transcended it, transformed it.

THERE ARE MANY THINGS IN LIFE that cast us down. We meet reverses. We become discouraged. There are times when we think that God has forgotten us, that we mean no more to him than the animals in the forests and fields, that we struggle only to fail, that we live only to perish, and that he does not care.

Then out of the darkness a light shines; we feel the presence of a power that is not of this earth, and we are aware of the working of spiritual factors far greater than anything we have ever known. Circumstances change, and the course of events is altered until the tragedies and misfortunes are swept away; in their places the divine blessings are like a shining light.

The Lord reaches down and takes us by the hand. And he lifts us up.

But if we stopped here, our lesson in spiritual maturity would be incomplete, and we would have paused only half way toward the understanding of the divine love.

Wherever we go, we find people with problems, people in trouble. They do not know the Heavenly Father, and they know nothing of prayer. But their pain, trouble, and need are very great.

Jesus did not wait for God to reach down and touch Lazarus. He himself reached out and took Lazarus by the hand. In that act he served as an instrument of God, and the divine glory shone through him.

You may find a time, before very long, when somebody comes to you for help. You can reach out your hand and lift somebody up. Your hand, for the moment, can be one of God's hands. Will you do it?

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Presidency has received a copy of the Memorial Service program from the Missouri House of Representatives which was held on May 29, 1953. The invocation was given by Elder E. P. Darnell who is state representative from Johnson County. Of interest to church people is the fact that in the list of former members who had died in recent months was Dr. Ambrose Teel, who was a member of the forty-seventh General Assembly. Herald readers will remember Dr. Teel as church physician for a number of years.

Some Herald readers have called the attention of the Presidency to another expose' of Joseph Smith which appeared recently in Gospel Gleaners published at Springfield, Missouri. In due time we shall deal with this through the Herald. In the meantime we hope our people will be patient in the knowledge that it shall receive due attention.

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith has made available the following letter from Apostle A. A. Oakman:

Annastraat 2, Rotterdam
May 28, 1953

Over two years ago three patriarchs were ordained here. Mosterdik of Rotterdam, Beil of Hannover, and Thum of Berlin. None of these men had ever functioned in the giving of blessings, a matter which had worried me for some time. I felt that they were called, but I did not know how to get them started. The men were willing but very hesitant and needed some additional stimulus to help them through the first blessing. In Germany no blessing had ever been given, and to my knowledge no patriarch had ever been there. Their work was desperately needed, so I asked John Worth to come over from England. Although he is over eighty years old, he is still vigorous in mind. I then asked Brother Beil and Brother Mosterdik if they would work with John in giving their first blessing. They agreed. So John came over last week, and he was wonderful. At a conference in Hannover he gave Beil his patriarchal blessing—which was taken on tape and I reported. Beil cannot understand English, but after the blessing he stood up and told the people he understood in German all that had been said to him in English. After it was transcribed (he could hardly wait to get it) and translated into German, I asked him if it was the same as he understood and he choked up and said, "It is exactly as I understood it." The next day in a little service with the appointees he gave two blessings and was very greatly uplifted.

Now, he is going to fly into Berlin with us on June 24 and get Brother Thum started in his patriarchal work. Strangely enough this blessing was given on the anniversary of the day of Pentecost, and I can assure you that the same spirit which made every man hear Peter's sermon in his own tongue enabled Brother Beil to understand perfectly the language of the English patriarch. Surely the weapons of God, though not carnal, are "mighty in God to the breaking down of barriers."

Last night here in Rotterdam Brother Mosterdik gave his first blessing. Brother Worth also gave one in a service arranged for that purpose. I am very happy in the knowledge that I have had a small part in this ministry.

I am arranging for these blessings, given in a foreign tongue to be sent to your office in that language, with a translation in English of those in Dutch. Perhaps Elli Rosenthal or someone else of the German-speaking group in Independence can translate the German for the record in the office.

Church Press Editors Meet in Washington, D. C.

While Senate and House investigating committees are checking on all phases of influence inspired by godless Communism, the attack on some leaders in the church movements in America from these sources seem strange. At the opening session of a three-day conference of the Associated Church Press, April 8-10, G. Bromley Oxnam, bishop of the Methodist Church in the Washington area, unveiled some of the subtle forces at work which tend to undermine the power of the church. In this address the bishop explained, "The difference between the FBI and the Committee investigation is that the former evaluates its findings while the Committee does not. Anything that is said before the Committee is released to the daily papers and errors are apt to be accepted as fact. My name was linked with twelve Communist front organizations. I belonged to only three of these and resigned before the Attorney General named them as Communist front organizations."

President Israel A. Smith and I attended this conference and listened to many editors and publication specialists of national repute discuss editorial problems. Besides meeting and making some friends for the church among the group, we had a dinner meeting with the local pastor, Raymond Hurst; the appointee district president, John Conway; and Stanley Fike, executive secretary to Missouri's junior Senator, Stuart Symington. Senator Milton Young entertained us at luncheon in the Senate dining room, pointing out many Senators whose names frequently have been on radio and in the press. Afterward he sat with us in the Senate gallery while we heard some of the debate on the Tidelands Oil Bill.

We will make no attempt to present our impressions of the many helpful addresses at the editors' conference, but our readers might be interested in these samples.

L. B. Reynolds, editor of the Message magazine, said:

"The church and the press will rise and fall together. The constrictions of doctrinal limits imposed by our denominations are good, otherwise editors might tend to soar in the sky rather than represent the church."

G. Elson Ruff, editor of the Lutheran, the new president of the Associated Church Press, speaking on "News Services and News Interpretations," said:

"Opinion is at a very low ebb. People do not care what we think. A much greater impact is made on the mind through the news columns—information—than in editorial opinion."

Charles W. Hall, executive editor of the Christian Herald, on "Feature Articles," said:

If a writer cannot interest a reader in the first two or three paragraphs, probably he cannot anywhere else.

The ending of any article should make the reader very glad or very mad.

No editor can inject life into a piece that is born dead.

The mood and spirit are all important. The average reader reaction to an article is emotional, not mental.

Put more fire into your article or vice versa.

Among the many other pleasant memories we carried from the Washington scene was a scheduled visit to the White House April 9. The President turned on his charm during a brief talk in which he paid tribute to the moral values of the church press. C. B. H.

The Symbol of the Eagle

By A. J. Corbett

THE BIBLE IS RICH in symbolism. That is, its teachings are made clear as they are represented by something else that is easier to understand. God used symbols for this purpose from the very beginning. One of his first symbols was a "lamb" which represented the deep and profound mysteries of the redemptive work of Jesus. His was the first work which heaven began on earth for the salvation of fallen man.

And he [God] gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God; and should offer the firstlings of their flocks for an offering unto the Lord. . . . And after many days, an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying, Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord. And Adam said unto him, I know not, save the Lord commanded me. And then the angel spake, saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.—Genesis 4: 5-7, Inspired Version.

This symbol of the lamb followed the human family throughout all its history. It typified the atoning work of Jesus Christ, and much could be written concerning it. Jesus was still the Lamb of God, even down to the end of New Testament history, and he still is. The Bible uses many such symbols.

The eagle is often used, for its habits and way of life were well known to the prophets. Isaiah, writing of the faithful people of the Lord, said: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles" (Isaiah 40: 13). The eagle is a molting bird. Annually it loses its feathers and with them some of its strength and vitality. With a new coat of feathers its strength returns, and it flies high into the sky; hence Isaiah's symbolizing. Moses used the same symbol in reminding Israel of its protection and deliverance by the Lord. He said, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, and fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; so the Lord alone did lead him [Jacob]" (Deuteronomy 32: 11, 12). When the eaglets are young and still in the nest, the mother bird is said to fly above them, circling around above the nest to show them how to fly. In their early attempts the young eaglets soon tire and she will fly beneath and take them on her own wings back to the safety of the nest.

Ezekiel in his prophecy uses the symbol of two eagles (chapter 17). He tells of the work of both these eagles, and in the context their mission is explained. The first was a large eagle with great long wings. It came to Lebanon and took the highest branch of the cedar. It "cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it off into a land of traffic; [and] set it in a city of merchants." All that this eagle did is told down to the twelfth verse of the chapter. Now it reads: "Know ye not what these things mean?" It then tells of the captivity of Judah into Babylon. The "top of the young twigs" that went into captivity was Jehoiachin the king. He was only eighteen years old when Nebuchadnezzar took him and the others into Babylon (II Kings 24).

The mission of the second eagle begins with Ezekiel 17: 22. It tells of another "young twig" cropped off and planted on a high mountain. God was to plant it in the mountain of the height of Israel where it would bring forth boughs and bear fruit and be a goodly cedar. Under it would dwell all the fowl of every wing in the shadow of its branches.

All the trees of the field would know that the Lord had brought down the high tree and had exalted the low tree and had dried up the green tree and made the dry tree flourish. This prophecy surely refers to the transfer of Mulek, the son of King Zedekiah, to the land of Zion. How closely the promise made to him resembles the blessing given to Joseph and the land of his inheritance! This second "young twig, a tender one" refers to Mulek, the only surviving son of King Zedekiah, who also was taken into Babylon. "And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah and bound him with fetters of brass and carried him to Babylon."—II Kings 25: 7, 11.

In Omni 1: 25, 26, the transit of his son, the "young twig," is told.

Now, there was great rejoicing among the people of Zarahemla; and also, Zarahemla [the king] did rejoice exceedingly, because the Lord had sent the people of Mosiah with the plates of brass which contained the record of the Jews. Behold, it came to pass that Mosiah discovered that the people of Zarahemla came out from Jerusalem, at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon.

History thus verifies the truth of Ezekiel's symbol of the two eagles.

THE TWELFTH CHAPTER of Revelation is another remarkable prophecy of the symbol of the eagle. Its interpretation, however, is not stated in the chapter. It reads:

Therefore, to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might flee into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.—Revelation 12: 14.

No prophecy of Scripture is of spiritual worth unless it can be deciphered and understood. Peter said, "We have . . . a more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy, to which word . . . ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light which shineth in a dark place" (II Peter 1: 19). When the light of other Scripture is turned on this twelfth chapter of Revelation, it becomes one of the Bible's brightest gems and shines out with a spiritual luster of wonderful value in the Restoration. We can give its interpretation because we possess the added record of the Book of Mormon and the writings of the modern prophet and seer, Joseph Smith. It states that the "woman" is the church of God. The symbol of the eagle is applied to her. She was given wings of a great eagle that she might "flee" into the wilderness into her place "where she is nourished for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent" (verse 14).

Surely the woman (church) had to change her place of location. Her first place in those days was Palestine, but given wings to "flee" and a "place" to go to she changed her location. It was somewhere in the "wilderness." Where or what is the wilderness? Cruden said it can be a dry or barren place or a dry or barren people. He quotes Isaiah 41: 18: "I will make the wilderness a pool of water." This, he said, means that these people are like a dry and barren wilderness. "I will water them abundantly with my blessings and make them fruitful and beautiful." Jeremiah the prophet says that God himself is compared to a wilderness. "Have I been a barren wilderness to Israel?" (Jeremiah 2: 31). Have not I accommodated you with all necessities at all times?

The wilderness is clearly defined in Doctrine and Covenants 84: 1. The parable of the wheat and tares is explained.

The great persecutor of the church, the apostate, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose heart the enemy, even Satan, sitteth to reign, behold, he soweth tares, wherefore the tares choke the wheat and drive the church into the wilderness.

This means the church can lose itself when it is overcome among an evil and satanic opposition. Such conditions brought about the apostasy. The church went into the world wilderness. That is why the woman was given wings that she might flee to another place. She made a new home across the ocean where her kingdom, Zion, could be brought forth. Jesus went across there also; he said they were "his sheep" and his church was established among them. He chose other "twelve disciples," gave them his gospel, authorized their ministry to baptize and give the emblems of his flesh and blood. To them he preached "the sermon on the mount," even as in Palestine. The church continued there for four centuries and declined with the fall of the Nephites till it ceased to function.

ITS PURE DOCTRINE was never lost; Moroni, who held the "keys" of that record, hid it up in the Hill Cumorah. There, with the Urim and Thummim, it was preserved—"nourished"—till the 1,260 years had ended. There in the wilderness hidden from the face of the serpent, the gospel—the living word, the "rod of iron"—was awaiting its rule of the nations. The wilderness from which the woman (church) did come forth was from among the peoples of all classes and nations who were upon that land. The tares of Satan had brought about the apostasy of the eastern church. Its pure doctrine and message were lost, but in the western world it was preserved. The woman (church) had surely "fled" to her "place" provided by the Lord.

What constitutes her powerful wings? The record is most specific; it says she had two wings of a great eagle. There must be some prophetic reason for stating the number. If you turn to the blessing of Joseph given him by Moses (Deuteronomy 33) you will find this comparison: "His horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim and . . . the thousands of Manasseh." This bullock had "two horns" and they were the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh who would do the gathering at the end of the earth. The woman had "two wings" and they, too, are Ephraim and Manasseh. The horns of the bullock and the wings of the woman are engaged in the same work of the Restoration.

When Jesus built his church in the West he was among the seed of Manasseh. "And Aminadi was a descendant of Nephi, who was the son of Lehi, who came out of the land of Jerusalem, who was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt."—Alma 8: 3. The Nephites were of that tribe. Moroni, who last handled the records, was a Nephite of the tribe of Manasseh. He held the "keys" of the record, hid the "book of plates" in Cumorah, and appeared as an angel and handed them to Joseph Smith. What a powerful wing Manasseh is to the church (woman). According to the blessing of Joseph, the work of Ephraim would be ten times greater than that of Manasseh, who built the church in the Nephite wilderness; for Ephraim's work would be in the restoration to all the nations. The coming forth of the Nephite record, the Book of Mormon, would begin the work.

THE LINEAGE OF JOSEPH SMITH is stated in Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3, and like Manasseh, his brotherly tribe, he, an Ephraimite, had been preserved in the wilderness of the world.

Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

Joseph Smith is a direct descendant of Joseph who was sold into Egypt (Genesis 50: 33, Inspired Version). His seed through the long years had been in the world wilderness. "Ephraim . . . hath mixed himself among the people" (Hosea 7: 8), and "I have written to him the great things of my law" (Hosea 8: 12).

When the Mayflower carried the Pilgrim Fathers from the Old World to the new, the seed of Ephraim was on board. The Ephraimite progenitors of Joseph were among them. They went to the land of the church (woman). The "great things of God's law" were waiting for them there. From the hand of the angel Moroni, Joseph received them, fulfilling the prophecy that the "stick of Joseph would be in the hand of Ephraim."

Jeremiah, the prophet, said (31: 9) that in the time of the gathering, Ephraim would be the "first-born" of God. That is a sure ministerial appointment. God selected Levi to be his "first-born" in Israel, and that tribe ministered to them throughout their history. The thousands of Manasseh were in the Nephite church, but the ten thousands will be Ephraim's in the ministerial work of the Restoration.

The whole twelfth chapter of Revelation is in sections. By careful study it can be rightly defined. John was up in heaven and saw a great sign of things as they would be on earth. He saw the woman (church) with her starry crown; she was with child, crying, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. By this description it was to be an immediate birth. She brought forth a "man child" who would rule the nations with a rod of iron. "And they said unto me [Nephi], What meaneth the rod of iron which our father saw, that leadeth to the tree? And I said unto them, that it was the word of God."—I Nephi 4: 38. The man child was caught up to God and his throne because a great red dragon with seven heads and ten horns was waiting to devour it. This is also the beast of Daniel 7: 7 and of Revelation 13. It represents Satan and his evil, destroying powers as they would be in the world. Michael, who holds the "keys of salvation" (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3), with his heavenly host defeated the satanic dragon so that it "prevailed not against him, or the man child, nor the woman who had been delivered of her pains and brought forth the kingdom of our God and of his Christ."

That completes the whole story: (1) of the church, (2) her man child delivered, (3) the would-be devourer of her child, (4) the fleeing into the wilderness of the woman to a prepared place, and (5) her bringing forth of the kingdom of God. The woman who represents the church is really the embryo kingdom, and some day it will shine forth in all its heavenly beauty. When it does it will be the Zion we are all trying to build.

THE "KINGDOM" is not the "man child" that was caught up. The church has not yet brought the kingdom forth. After the days of Jesus she went into the "wilderness" and not up to heaven. What was it that was "caught up" to heaven? The remaining part of the twelfth chapter of Revelation tells of the earthly story of the church. The Devil and his angels were cast down to earth where the church really is.

And after these things I heard another voice saying, Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, yea, and they who dwell upon the islands of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath because he knoweth that he hath but a short time (verse 12).

Then it states that the Devil, being cast out, persecutes the woman who brought forth the man child. This is the second time in the chapter that the birth of the man child is stated. "Therefore, to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might flee . . . into her place, where she is nourished" for 1,260 years from the face of the dragon. He cast out of his mouth water as a flood to carry away the woman in the flood, but the earth helped the woman and opened its mouth and swallowed up the flood that the serpent cast out of his mouth. Cruden states that "waters" stands for troubles and afflictions and quotes David, saying: "Save me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul" (Psalm 69: 1). Christ also speaks of the baptism of his afflictions (Matthew 20: 21). The term "earth" means the people. "The whole earth was of the same language, and of the same speech" (Genesis 11: 1). "Sing unto the Lord, all the earth" (Psalm 96: 1). He says the word "mouth" stands for "speaking arrogantly, insolently, and without fear of God, bidding defiance both to God and man, blaspheming God's name and reviling his servants."

Surely all these derivations show positively the working of Satan against the church of Christ. His afflictions of its people and his blasphemies against God and Christ caused the ultimate downfall of the Jerusalem church, and thus it fled into the wilderness. The earth (people) of the world swallowed up the satanic flood, for the woman had fled and his devilish work was expended on them. How truly the restored church knows of his final wrath against the "remnant of her seed who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus." All this shows the earthly history of the church of Jesus, Satan's war against it and his final warring against it in its restoration.

THE MAN CHILD, twice mentioned in the chapter, must have some definite meaning. The church in the revelation is a woman, the feminine gender. What did she bring forth that was "masculine"? Her priesthood alone is of that gender, as only men are ordained to it. In the days of Jesus she brought forth that child at once. She was pained to be delivered of it. Jesus is the head of the church and always was. Both he and John were baptizing people into the church before it was organized; that is, with its twelve apostles and other ministerial organization.

The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and many were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins.—Mark 1: 2-4.

And they came unto John and said, . . . Rabbi, he who was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and he receiveth of all people who come unto him.—John 3: 27.

When therefore the pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John. . . . Now the Lord knew this though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples.—John 4: 1, 3.

Into what were Jesus and John baptizing these disciples? Surely into Jesus' church, although it was not yet organized. Here was a great Melchisedec high priest and one of the Aaronic order baptizing people. No wonder the woman, which is the church of God, was pained to bring forth her man child. As soon as it was large enough the head of the church, Jesus, called his twelve apostles. "And God hath set in the church first apostles." These were secondarily prophets, for their writings with prophecies are recorded in the New Testament. Third, they were teachers, for Jesus sent them out to teach all nations. Later the seventies were added to the priesthood. These were all men, the "man child" the church was pained to deliver, for the growth of the church needed ministers. So did its program and purpose. The man child was soon sent out to all nations with the "rod of iron," the gospel, the word of God. The church of those days was not something new, but it was again being restored to the earth. John's very name, Elias, means "restorer." The church of Jesus dates back to the beginning. Melchisedec preached the gospel to Abraham; he received tithes from him and as a priest of the most high God gave him bread and wine which surely was a church ordinance.

AS A MEMBER of the Melchisedec priesthood, I have received the tithes of the people, for I have been a counselor to the bishop. I have given bread and wine to the "seed of Abraham" (by adoption) in these days and have preached the gospel to them. This is what Melchisedec did, so he must have had the church with him in his day. Moses was "in the church in the wilderness" in his day, and he, too, followed Christ. Even at that time and place the church was in the wilderness. It came out at Jerusalem when Jesus and John started baptizing. From its very inception there, Satan tried to devour it, but he failed to conquer its valiant priesthood members. They were killed, as Jesus said both they and he would be, but the heavens above received them all. Jesus, the head, was crucified and ascended (caught up) to God and his throne. "So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God" (Mark 16: 20). John was beheaded; he, too, was caught up, for he returned again to the earth as a "messenger in a great cloud of light" and brought back the priesthood in the latter day. Peter, James, and John, who hold the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood (see Church History), had sent him to the earth, so they, too, must have been "caught up" to God. Most of the apostles came to a violent end through the evil powers of Satan, but the heavens received them all. "If they live here let them live unto me; and if they die let them die unto me, for they shall rest from all their labors here, and shall continue their works" (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 27e).

A Tribute to Music and Musicians

By Elbert A. Smith

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE for me to speak as might a critic trained and skilled in musical lore. I may speak humbly as one of thousands whose lives have been enriched by the ministry of music in the church. Such a ministry is rendered in our many congregations by scores of men and women who, recognizing the especial "gifts and callings of God unto them," bring a trained, consecrated, and sacrificial offering.

Music and religion are inseparably wedded—"that which God hath joined together." He chose to herald the birth of Christ with a song sung by the heavenly choir.

As the life and ministry of Christ in the flesh drew to a full close, after he had served the bread and the wine to his disciples assembled in an upper room, and following his sermon and his prayer, he joined with them, as his last act of worship in their assembly, in singing a hymn. "And when they had sung a hymn they went out into the mount of Olives." What hymn did they sing? Probably one of the psalms. Possibly the Twenty-third Psalm: "... though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death." He was entering that shadow. First he joined in singing a hymn. He may have led the singing. A song has helped many who were entering the valley and those who have seen loved ones enter the valley and pass for a time from view.

In this present life practically every one of our church services is opened and closed with music. This is true of preaching meetings, business meetings, worship services, and the Communion of the Lord's Supper. Music enriches the marriage ceremony, the baptismal covenant, the blessing of children, and ordinations to the ministry. It softens the griefs of those who mourn. It helps us find and keep touch with God. It cast the evil spirit out of King Saul and still invites sinners to return to the throne of Grace.

MUSIC HAS ITS PLACE in our recreations and our festivals. It may be our passport to an enriched and broader fellowship. John Sheehy, of pleasant memory, was on board a train in Canada. He was among strangers and lonely. So he passed through the coaches, one by one, humming "The Old, Old Path." At last in one coach a man leaped to his feet with outstretched hand for John to clasp. Through the medium of that song the Lord had introduced two of his friends.

If you were a stranger, wandering the streets of Berlin, London, Sydney, Honolulu, Papeete, passing a little chapel, you might hear the congregation singing "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." No matter in what language it was sung, you would recognize your own. Through that ministry of music the Lord would say to you, "Come in. These are my friends. They shall be your friends also."

Over the years we have had many gifted hymn writers. We have had many gifted choristers and leaders of congregational singing. We have had and still have these talented and consecrated people, generous in sharing their gifts. I may mention a few—not by way of favoritism but as ensamples of the many. Some of us still remember Mark Forscutt and his baton. Many who have forgotten him still sing his hymns. We remember F. G. Pitt and his song, "God Is so Good to Me." In Canada and Michigan Saints recall the leadership of Louise E. Evans in the musical circles of those regions. We also remember Hoxie and his violin.

Independence, as the Center Place, has been most fortunate in having the services over the years of a host of men and women of rare ability. Naturally I think of Paul Craig, having watched him as a lad singing in the little choir in Burlington, Iowa, where I was pastor. He is one of many, too numerous to mention, who have given their best to our musical organization in Zion—and their best is better than just good.

I am thinking also of many far-flung branches and missions in each of which may be found one or a few who bear the chief responsibility in this part of our church service. You may never have heard their names. The traveling missionary finds them everywhere. For example, in the little branch in Pittsburg, Kansas, I have had pleasure at times in watching Sister Irma Landrum lead the congregational singing. She puts so much sparkle and enthusiasm in her task, which she obviously loves, that I, who am no songster, join in the hymn singing—quietly, so that my mistakes might not be noticed.

During the past four winters I have enjoyed the musical renditions of the choir in Los Angeles Central Church. For the past several years this choir has been developed under the leadership of Colin Ferrett and his good wife, Rae, with the help of others. God gave these people a gift. They have developed it and offer it freely to the church, so that our own well-loved Franklyn Weddle is reported to have said that this rather small choir is one of the best in the church.

A year ago when we had the opportunity in Los Angeles to have our Conference Sunday service televised, we felt justly proud of that choir. On a greater scale we have rejoiced when listening to our Messiah Choir over a nation-wide radio network. Our musicians have before them a rich and expanding field for service. May God bless them in it.

A Father's Prayer on Father's Day

Dear Father in heaven, today is Father's Day. Just why a day has been set apart for fathers I do not know. We don't seem so necessary to our children as mothers, so it rather embarrasses me to have folks reminding me that this is Father's Day. Of course I'm proud of my children; and when they call me "dad" or "pop" or "father" I swell up inside with a warm joy and a happy pride. Is that the way you feel, Lord, when we call you "Father"?

When I look into the faces of my son and daughter I think I understand you a little better. You love your children, and I love mine. But you are God, and I am only a man. You are wise and loving beyond anything I can comprehend. In the person of your Son you died upon the cross for your children. But, God, it was my wife who went down into the valley of the shadow to bring our babies into the world. All I could do was pace the floor and pray for her. And when they placed our baby in her arms, it was my high privilege to see the mother love light in her eyes. And then, Lord, I remembered that I was a father. At that moment I felt myself in rags and tatters, unequal to the high calling of fatherhood. How could I ever become worthy of this great blessing and responsibility that had come to me? And then, Father in heaven, I remembered you, and called upon you—as I am calling upon you today.

Help me, I pray, to be the kind of father I ought to be to our children. I'll need all the assistance you can give me to rear them right. And if I slip or stumble sometimes, dear God, don't let them see, but cleanse the evil from my heart and accept me as your son again that my children may accept me as their father.

I thank thee, Father, that I can work so they may have shelter and food and clothes. I do not ask that I may be the center around which their lives revolve, but it would make me happy indeed if sometimes they would tell me they love me. You know what I mean, Lord, because you are my Father and I am your son; and I say to you today, "I love you from my heart." Amen. LEONARD S. RHODES

Question Time

Question:

Are there Scriptures to substantiate the thought that at the creation of man, in the spirit world, he requested the Creator to make this earth his home?

Iowa

MRS. A. R. A.

Answer:

We know of none. The general teaching of Scripture seems to be away from such a thought. The Inspired Version shows that the creation of the heavens (which encompasses the solar system), the earth, and the whole human race was all part of one great united plan, including the physical creation of man on the earth as part of the means to bring about his immortality and eternal life, and to prepare him for a higher status designed of God. Such a plan would hardly allow of man's coming to earth to be left to his own choosing, except as it might be with the third part who forfeited their right to come by transgression (D. and C. 28: 10). It was evidently the design of God that all should come, for only in so coming could the purpose of God in creation be fulfilled.

The statement in Job 38: 7 concerning the creation of the earth, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy," is often interpreted as the rejoicing of all mankind at the prospect of having habitation upon the earth. It may have been, but it still leaves their coming a matter of divine design rather than one of human request.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Is there a forgiveness, through the plan of salvation, for the crime of premeditated murder, or is such sin identified with the "sin against the Holy Ghost"? Michigan

N. S.

Answer:

The law of the church of Jesus Christ makes the crime of murder—the premeditated shedding of innocent blood, or what is commonly called "first degree murder"—an unforgivable offense, identifying it with sinning against the Holy Ghost; it is sin against the Holy Ghost. The law applies to church members and not necessarily to nonmembers, the difference being that one sins against the greater light and knowledge of God and the other does not. This is not to say that the nonmember may kill with impunity, but that he is still within the possibility of repentance and forgiveness. To the children of God the law is this:

And now, behold, I speak unto the church. Thou shalt not kill; but he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come. And again, I say, Thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6, 7. (See also I John 3: 15.)

The death referred to is spiritual; and there is no recovery or redemption from spiritual death. For the man who has had the light of the gospel, and has known the love of God, to descend to this deep sin is to sin against light and knowledge, which is unforgivable. It is not only the killing of a man but also the crucifying of Christ to himself and putting himself beyond repentance.

Question:

Where in the Scriptures is it stated that the Jews as a nation will accept Christ as their true Messiah? Will it be before or at Christ's second coming? Also, where is the phrase, "a nation born in a day"?

Iowa

MRS. A. R. A.

Answer:

There are many prophecies that point to the national conversion of the Jews to Christ. Chief among them is the statement of Paul to the Roman saints (Romans 11: 24, 26). First, the Lord must come to Sion (Zion) before he goes out of Sion and "turn away ungodliness from Jacob." The Lord has not yet come to Zion. Many of the elders have associated this statement of Paul's with the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah which prophesies the final conflict for Jerusalem and the appearing of the Lord on the Mount of Olives to assist in the battle. The battle is now going on. Some think that since the Jews have returned to Palestine their national existence is secure. This, however, is not the case. The United Nations have been successful only in securing an armistice and not a peace in that land. But one thing which Zechariah tells us about has already been fulfilled; Jerusalem is divided between Jew and Arab.

The messages of the Book of Mormon regarding the gathering of the Jews and their final settlement in Palestine is based on their acceptance of the restored gospel. (See II Nephi 7: 12 ff.; 11: 25-28; Jacob 3: 26, 27; III Nephi 9: 64-69.) The Jews have not yet accepted that Christ or his gospel. The church has been instructed to take the gospel to the Gentile nations first and then to the Jews (D. and C. 104: 13, 34). We have not as yet received instruction to go to the Jews.

The prophetic evidence in Zechariah 13 points again to the fact that Jews will not accept him until after his second coming (note verse 6).

Our people have always pointed to "a nation born in a day" as a sign of instant conversion, but I have failed to see the statement in the Scriptures. This does not mean that statement is not there. It may be there; if it is, I have not come across it. There are, however, other statements that point to the opposite—that is that the conversion of the nations will be hastened, but it will come about gradually. The closing chapter of Isaiah is a prophecy of the reign of peace, and verse 8 may have been taken as the basis for instant conversion. This verse should not be divorced from its context. The prophet is asking a question: Is it possible for the earth to produce in one day? And is it possible for a nation to come into being all at once? The answer he gives is "no." As an expectant mother can't give birth to a child without travail (verse 7) so also a nation is not expected to come into being without struggle (see also Zechariah 2: 10).

Poliomyelitis

(Polio or Infantile Paralysis)

By J. E. Andes, M.D.

Definition—Poliomyelitis is an acute, contagious virus disease which usually occurs in children (but may attack people of any age). The disease is characterized by a sudden onset starting with fever and malaise (feeling of being ill), and frequently by vomiting, diarrhea, and symptoms of a common cold. In some cases, this is followed by partial or complete paralysis of one or more muscle groups, which paralysis may be temporary or permanent. The disease tends to occur in epidemics during the summer and early fall months.

Actually polio is a generalized virus infection that in most victims resembles a common cold or intestinal upset. It is frequently diagnosed as such, as the diagnosis can be made only (except by detailed laboratory tests) when the typical paralytic symptoms appear. And paralysis fortunately occurs only in a small percentage of the cases; however, the serious crippling nature of the paralytic process is such as to make the disease dreaded by all.

Cause—The cause of polio is a living organism or "thing" called a virus. It is too small to be seen except by the use of the electron microscope. It is readily destroyed by most strong antiseptics and by heating to a temperature of 60° centigrade. Chlorination of water usually does not destroy the virus, although the pasteurization process does. In fact, the organism is quite easily killed by heat but is not easily affected by many common antiseptics.

Methods of Transmission—Polio is largely a disease of children for the reason that most adults are already immune to it by having had the disease already. However, it may occur at any age. The term "infantile paralysis" came into being as a result of the state of affairs a century ago. Before we had any specific knowledge of micro-organisms (bacteria, viruses, etc.), and their role in the cause of disease, there was no attempt to keep anything about a baby sterile. Milk, water, and foods were all contaminated by those who handled them, and even isolation of contagious cases of disease was only partially and poorly carried out. As a result, most babies were early exposed to polio, even while nursing (an important factor as we will note later); therefore, the paralytic cases were seen in babies and young children as a rule. Now with pure water, sterile foods, examination of food handlers, strict isolation of most contagious cases, many (or most) children are not exposed to the disease until they are eight to ten years old.

Actually, there are several methods of spreading polio. First, the host or source of the disease may be an actual case or merely a carrier. Since most cases have only the symptoms of a common cold or intestinal upset, we can see how easily this is accomplished. Epidemics may go on for some time before a paralytic case appears and isolation is practiced. Carriers are those people who have had the disease and recovered, but who continue to carry the living virus in their bodies. The part carriers play is not known, and it is probably a relatively unimportant factor.

One gets the disease by contact with a case (or carrier) directly or indirectly. In schools, every sort of direct contact is possible, in classrooms and on the playgrounds. In fact it is virtually impossible to keep a child from coming in contact with cases (or carriers). Common use of erasers, pencils, playground equipment, swimming pools, etc., illustrates the complexity of the problem. Swimming pools are an especially important method of carrying the virus. But any place where people get together—school, theater, train, bus, church, store, or even a crowded street—is a source of contact. Since the organisms are found largely in the respiratory (mouth, throat, nose, and lungs) and gastrointestinal tracts, coughing and sneezing are very common methods of spread. Drinking impure water, eating contaminated foods and coming in contact with sewage are also sources. Certain foods are of especial importance—milk, fresh vegetables and fruits—since they are often consumed without cooking.

I should add that extra-human reservoirs of the virus exist. Only man and monkeys can have the disease, but flies, other mammals, and birds may act as carriers.

Most cases occur in summer and early fall, a reason why summer camps are so often incriminated. Also a recent tonsillectomy (within six weeks) appears to render the child more susceptible to having the disease in a serious form.

Effect on the body—In the usual abortive (nonparalytic) cases, the only changes noted in the body are similar to those found in a cold or "stomach upset." In the paralytic cases, the motor nerve cells of the spinal cord or brain are damaged or killed. If damaged, the cells recover; if dead, there is permanent loss of function of the muscle groups that these nerves enervate. Any preventive measure must come before these cells are involved or before the illness actually starts.

Symptoms—The incubation period (time elapsing from the time of contact with the disease until the symptoms appear) is about ten days, but may range from five to thirty-five days. The symptoms are usually those of a mild illness of short duration (abortive cases—no paralysis). There is a few degrees of fever, malaise, headache, sore throat, restlessness, irritability, and often vomiting and diarrhea. Sometimes there is pain and stiffness in the back and neck. The symptoms usually disappear in three or four days without treatment.

In a paralytic case, the illness starts in the same way and continues two or three days. Then the serious symptoms begin to appear. There is usually a second rise of temperature about the third day accompanied by stiffness of the neck, headache, marked restlessness, fretfulness, and even stupor. The involved muscles are somewhat stiff and tender, and the child cries if they are touched or moved. Within a few days the temperature falls to normal, as a rule, and paralysis of one or more muscle groups is noted. The spasticity is replaced by inability to move the muscle, although the muscles remain somewhat tender for several weeks. Occasionally, paralysis may be noted as the first sign of illness, and the first signs (fever, etc.) may be absent or undetectable.

In the bulbar cases (involving the brain), the picture is more serious, depending on the part involved. The patient may experience difficulty in swallowing, moving the face, lips, eyes, or tongue, and in breathing. The voice may have a nasal tone due to paralysis of the throat muscles, or be hoarse due to paralysis of the vocal cords. Respiration may be labored or impossible. All these symptoms and the source of the disease depends on how badly the nerve cells are injured. Patients who cannot breathe have been kept in respirators (iron lungs) for periods as long as two years.

Diagnosis—This should be made by a physician. Frequently the paralytic effects are so obvious as to make the diagnosis easy, but often laboratory tests (examination of the spinal fluid, agglutinations, etc.) are needed.

Prognosis—The outcome is impossible to predict at the onset. The amount of fever is of little or no value in determining the severity and final end result, although its duration is of value. The extent of paralysis (number of muscles involved) is of some value, although completely paralyzed cases have come out with no permanent paralysis. As a rule, if paralysis exists at the end of three or four weeks, complete recovery cannot be expected. Certain epidemics have a larger number of paralytic cases; others have a higher percentage of bulbar (brain) cases, which are those that may end fatally.

Treatment—This should be left entirely to a physician and a well-trained hospital staff. It consists largely of proper food and rest, sedatives, hot packs for pain and muscle spasm, and re-education and physical therapy at the proper time to assist partly damaged muscles in recovering as completely as possible. Serious bulbar cases may need special therapy such as respirators (iron lungs). No attempt should be made to use the affected muscle while it is in the painful (spastic) stage. Actually treatment of paralytic cases leaves much to be desired, and the proper method of approach to the problem seems to be in preventing the disease.

Prevention—Prevention can be accomplished by complete isolation—an impossible task. No one wants to live on an island alone, and no one wants to live in a Buck Rogers type of space suit all his life. Actually, there is little to be accomplished by trying to protect a child too much, except during an epidemic. If the child is susceptible, he will eventually get the disease! Certainly, during epidemics swimming pools should be closed; if they are not, mothers can keep their children with any respiratory symptoms at home during the time they are ill at least.

There is good evidence that if a child contracts the disease while nursing its mother, it has the disease in the abortive (nonparalytic) form.

Some years ago two men landed by plane among an Eskimo tribe, and one of the men shortly became ill with polio. Every member of the tribe contracted the disease. Many died, and about one fourth of the survivors over two years old had some residual paralytic symptoms. The nursing children (two years and younger) had the disease (as proved by subsequent tests), but not one was paralyzed. In the light of this and other observations it would appear to be desirable for every baby to be inoculated with the virus while nursing its mother. This is also a good argument for mothers to nurse their children, as only an occasional cow is found to have this protective quality in its milk.

Recent studies have given great hope in absolutely eradicating (by prevention) this horrible disease. The first is a vaccine made from the killed virus. This vaccine is now only in the experimental stage, but in monkeys it appears to give complete (permanent) immunity to the malady when the vaccine is administered properly, such as with smallpox vaccine. The vaccine also appears harmless. If it turns out as we all hope and believe, polio will soon follow the course of smallpox as a completely preventable disease.

In epidemics another (shorter) form of protection is now available. Immune globulin (a protein taken from human blood serum of people who have had the disease) will partially or completely protect a child for a period of five to eight weeks. The serum is injected into the muscles and must be given before the symptoms have appeared, preferably before contact with the disease. Also, it must be repeated every five to six weeks to insure continued immunity. Although this new procedure promises to be of great value during the coming polio season, we should stress that it is temporary, only partially effective in some cases, and expensive. Obviously its greatest use will be where a known exposure has occurred.

Brotherhood Will Come

By Mrs. Lee R. Oliver

THE BUS WAS CROWDED. There was a sign in the rear which read "Colored." The hour was late, nearly midnight, when the bus stopped at the last gate before leaving the military camp. Among others, a tired Negro woman stepped upon the bus, and the driver closed the door. She dropped in her dime and tried to get through the mass of people to the rear. Finding this impossible, she stood still. By this time the driver was on his way; however, noticing that the woman did not move to the rear, he immediately stopped the bus and in a loud voice ordered her to leave the bus. Meekly she requested the fare back since that was all she had. He sneered an emphatic "no." As she stood for a second not quite knowing what to do, a dozen soldiers reached into their pockets. One a little quicker than the others gave her a dime. She stepped wearily off the bus to await the half-hour interval before another came.

The reunion had been excellent. The spirit of God had been there in abundance. A group of Negro Saints had tended the kitchen, preparing and serving the food. They had done a splendid job, and God's spirit had been with them. A young person had spoken to the leader of the crew and said, "Thanks a lot, Brother, for all your help." The boy's father standing close by immediately spoke up, "Come here." The young person went to his father. "Don't ever call him brother again," the father said, "he's no brother of yours."

As district president of a district in the Southern Mission, my husband has under his care a Negro mission of some twenty people. One recent Sunday night he spoke for them. Our six-year-old daughter and I accompanied him. These colored Saints received his message in a spirit of humility and deep need. After the service as we stood talking, I noticed our daughter who had been sitting with the daughter of the Negro pastor. The two children were talking and laughing, and finally I saw them walking with arms around each other toward the pulpit to inspect the flowers there. What a picture that was! A lump came into my throat. I felt that somewhere here was the answer to the racial problem, as well as the key to the building of Zion. I knew in that moment

God must have looked down and smiled. Somewhere in the hearts of those two children, so young and so utterly unprejudiced, lay the message that would one day unfold to all men the eternal fatherhood of God and the true brotherhood of man.

In the deep South, there are laws with which we must comply. Segregation arises out of necessity. We sing, "In Christ there is no east nor west, in him no south nor north; but one great brotherhood of man throughout the whole wide earth." Yet for many of our people, the realization that the Negro is also a son of God, and a brother to all men, is a bitter pill which they cannot swallow. My heart goes out to these people who have suffered so because of the lack of love and understanding in the hearts of the white man.

Economic Experiments in Israel

EDITOR'S NOTE: The March-April issue of Land Reborn, published by the American Christian Palestine Committee, contains an article "Kibbutz and Moshav" by Harry W. Flannery, who is editor of the American Federation of Labor News-Reporter. It will be of interest to those members of the church who are concerned about adventures in economic organization with social and religious ends in view. The greater part of the article is quoted here:

NOTHING IN ISRAEL is more interesting or more different than the kibbutz and its later variations, the moshav and the work villages (md'a baroth). And nothing can better tell the story of the spirit and enterprise of those who pioneered this democratic experiment in the Near East.

A kibbutz is a communal village in which the members work not for profit, but security, with their needs taken care of out of a common fund. All property in a kibbutz is collectively owned, with work shared. All kibbutzniks eat in a central dining hall. All the children live in special quarters, and are with their parents only for the hours after work is done before bedtime. Kibbutz problems are settled in general assembly, where social and cultural meetings also take place.

The first kibbutz was set up 44 years ago, back in 1909, at Degania, in the Jordan Valley near the Sea of Galilee.

The Degania project flourished so well that others were set up all over Palestine, and so many were in Degania itself that it was broken up into two—Degania Aleph, or A, which today has a population of 450, and Degania Bet, or B, with a population of 570.

Another type of settlement, the moshav ovdim, was meanwhile set up by followers of a different social-economic theory. One of these is Nahalal (Trail Blazer), founded in 1921 in the middle of a pestilential swamp.

At Nahalal, the village land, as in the kibbutz, was rented from the Jewish National Fund and held "in the name of the Jewish people." Instead of holding the land communally, each family was given about 26¼ acres to farm as its own. Loans from a then new world-wide Jewish organization, called the Jewish Foundation Fund, enabled each family to build its own house, where the children lived with their parents. Each family worked its own plot, and, after community taxes, had its own profits to do with as it wished.

In the moshav, as in the kibbutz, hired labor was prohibited. All made their purchases of seed and larger and more expensive machinery co-operatively, and shared the use of the latter. Each family had its obligations to the others, to keep its plot productive, to devote 1½ acres to wood trees, and follow a fixed schedule of crop rotation on the remainder. The idea of the Moshavim is catching on. There are 240 so far and they are growing in number faster than the kibbutzim.

Other variations have taken place. Those who preferred the trades to agriculture have gathered together in villages to make cement, plywood, knit goods and to operate printing presses, shoe factories, ship-repair yards, and marble quarries. Some are religious settlements where men and women take as their motto, "Torah and work."

The Two Philosophies

By F. Alexander Magoun and R. Carter Nyman

MAN IS AN ASTOUNDING CREATURE—positively dazzling in his sudden achievements in some areas and equally unexpected in his persistent failure in other areas. . . . Why this amazing progress in the area of science and engineering but almost none in the area of interpersonal relations? The difference can be neither accidental nor incidental. . . .

What gets us into all this trouble? Clearly not our inescapable dependency on nature, for science and engineering have made this dependency increasingly secure and productive. Science and engineering have given us, in the short space of three hundred years, undreamed-of progress in the fields of transportation, communication, agriculture, medicine, clothing, housing, and manufacturing. No longer need we fear starvation or death from exposure. It is not our inescapable dependency on nature which bedevils us; it is our inescapable dependency on each other. This is still both frightening and insecure. . . .

Why has the scientist been so successful? Because he has a self-correcting philosophy of continually searching for more truth, through reason, and with integrity. He has devised the most amazing procedure ever followed for increasing knowledge. His method is to begin with the systematic investigation of a small area. This is done by carefully planned, honest experiments and the honest analysis of their results. These gradually widen in scope as his knowledge increases. He recognizes and carefully labels all assumptions. He accepts as true only those results which are exact, objectively measurable, and reliably repeatable.

As a result, when a scientist says something he is believed in a way no lawyer, no executive, no politician, and no clergyman is ever believed, for he is believed around the world. He is not repeating the preachments of one thousand years ago. He is not relying on some legal precedent. He is not trying to prove himself right. Indeed, he is the very first to try to prove himself wrong. He is trying to find truth, based on objective facts which any competent person can check.

HOW HAS OUR APPROACH to the problems of human relations differed from our approach to the problems of nature? Despite ages of experience our dependence on each other has remained insecure and terrifying. . . . Surely the true foundations of constructive politics and righteous religion are as unfailingly dependable as those of physics or chemistry. Instead of recognizing our assumptions in these areas, examining honestly and critically what our experience shows, we have stopped with prejudice and dogma. Here we do not yet have a self-correcting philosophy of experiment, examination, and critical revision in the light of truth, approached through reason and with integrity. . . . If the diplomats of the United Nations should honestly try to find the best impartial solutions to our international differences, their constituents would rise against them with the cry, "You sold us down the river." This is no self-correcting procedure. Nevertheless, the happiness as well as the wealth of the world lies in the application of a self-correcting philosophy.

In human relations most of us have been consistent in our efforts to dominate: by coercion when we felt strong, by enticement when we felt weak. We are political, not scientific, in our interpersonal philosophy. The technique of the politician (not to be confused with the statesman)—be he in the home, the school, the factory, the sanctuary, or in the government—employs both enticement and coercion. . . . Here, then, are the two basic philosophies of which all others are but variants: on the one hand, the philosophy of finding the true nature of things and co-operating with them in terms of that nature; on the other hand, the philosophy of domination—by enticement if possible, by coercion if necessary. . . .

Our trouble is not so much that we have concentrated on material things and ignored spiritual things; it is that we have attacked our spiritual problems and our material problems with virtually opposite methods. In human relations we have tried to conquer; in science we have tried to understand the nature of what we were dealing with and to co-operate with that nature. In the one area we have sought "power over"; in the other, "solution with." The contrast in results is as great as the difference in method. . . .

BUT WHAT ABOUT POWER? It cannot be avoided in any consideration of either science or of human relations. . . . The problem is to see that interpersonal power is used in a constructive, well-integrated manner whether it be the power of parents, of teachers, of labor, of management, of the clergy, or of government officials. This cannot be accomplished unless and until the philosophy of domination is honestly replaced by a self-correcting philosophy of unceasing search for more adequate truth by rational methods.

The argument that without hope of heaven or fear of hell men become unmanageable reveals the subconscious idea of power over other people behind these teachings. It also is a commentary on the political concept of God which accompanies them. There is imperialism in religion wherever there is a political philosophy behind religion. But what kind of God would create people who must be controlled by coercion or enticement, people who are born evil, people who become virtuous only by being saved from themselves through overcoming themselves as they were created? (This is not to be confused with overcoming their false selves after they have been forced outside their true natures by people who wanted power over them.)

Certainly not all moral truth is already known. No true seeker can ever be arrogant for long in his conviction that he has the whole answer. The real blasphemy is believing that we have answers that are ultimate and final—that we know the whole truth. We do not and we never can understand God, but by adopting the philosophy of the scientist we can discover more and more of the laws by which He causes the planets to revolve, the grass to grow, or a family to be held together in love. . . .

IN ORDER TO HAVE a happier world we do not need better brains, nor do we need to change human nature any more than the scientists have needed to change nature. As they changed their approach to nature, so we need to change our treatment of human nature. For co-operation and happiness we need only to adopt in industry, in religion, in politics, and in the home—giving them edge as well as new shape—the same self-correcting philosophy which has taken the scientists so far, so fast in the last two hundred years. . . .

The great task and hope of mankind has now become the transformation of an interpersonal relatedness of coercion, enticement, and fear into one of co-operation. For this, the prime requisite is a populace with a philosophy which will allow us to work together. To say "God give us enlightened leadership" is only to "pass the buck" in lazy, wishful thinking. Each one of us has an inescapable responsibility to be a builder of constructive relationships in his own life—and to be it with a faith that transcends the defeats of the moment. . . .

The most important problem for the individual, and therefore for the world—since all the world has is individuals—is how to achieve a relatedness which will result in happiness and peace of

Building the Kingdom

By Marie Gosline

IT WILL TAKE COURAGE, faith, and determination to build the kingdom. It must be built of strong timbers and the foundation must be firm. We, as a church, must be able to produce if we are going to save the world.

A few weeks ago the bridge which leads across the creek in front of our home became unsafe. This did not happen all at once. My husband, being an engineer, saw it coming, and for months each time he crossed the bridge with me he'd put his foot in a certain spot and say, "It's weak here. I'll have to build a new bridge." Then at last it gave way. One Saturday morning he tore the remainder apart and started a new one. He found that the old one had been made entirely of pine, and that was the reason it was so short lived. The new bridge is made of redwood. It has a good foundation—I helped mix the cement and I know it will last.

The Saints who will build the kingdom must be made of redwood. We can use only men and women of character for that great task. We can use only those of strong fiber and muscle. We cannot use any pine. If the kingdom of the Lord is worth building, it's worth building well.

The world is not interested in how we build the kingdom. It doesn't care about our ways and means of presenting the gospel. What it wants to know is "What does your church have that other churches lack? What can you produce?"

LAST FALL we were seated across the luncheon table from a little woman who was the mother of the football hero for whom the luncheon was given. Some would have called her dowdy. To say the least, she was far from "stylish." But no one cared particularly. Everyone at the luncheon was aware only of the courage of this little person. She was in the process of rearing five children, and doing it alone on "next to nothing." All five were either college graduates or would be within a few years. The oldest one was a graduate in physics from Harvard. The second one, "Steve," the football player, was a major in physics at the University of California. Two other children, a son and a daughter, were at "State." The fifth child was still in high school.

Steve was proud of his mother that day, and she was proud of him. One could tell it by the way her eyes danced when she said, "I'm Stevie's mother."

The world didn't care that the seams in her hose were crooked. The world didn't care that her low-heeled shoes only made her appear more "dumpy." But the world was interested in what she had produced. If we go anywhere in the church, if we reach our goal, it will be only because we have men and women in our ranks who can produce!

THERE ARE VERY FEW who enter the waters of baptism and come out converted. Conversion does not always come all at once. It is more often a slow, steady process. When a grown person asks for baptism it is well that emotionalism, which has no part in our faith, does not enter in, but that we approach the matter in a practical manner and ask members these questions: Does the candidate have the proper background to be a good Reorganized Latter Day Saint? Can the church help him to be a better Christian, and, in turn, can he be of some service to the church? Has what little faith he has developed so far been placed in the Heavenly Father, or has it been placed in the person in charge of the branch, the convention, or the reunion service? What has he produced in his life thus far that makes one think he will be fit timber in building the kingdom?

A few months ago a new book came from the publishers. It is called O Rugged Land of Gold and is the story of a woman who found herself left entirely alone, one fall, in Alaska. She lived through the long, long winter and had her baby alone, unaided. Before help came in the spring, she carried her little one to the shore of the lake, dipped her hand in the icy water, and christened her child. What courage and what faith she must have had! There was not a splinter of "pine" in her body. She was made of redwood.

IT IS A WARMING THOUGHT that there are many in the world today who have the Lord. All is not sin and strife. There are many who have the Lord Jesus Christ, and hence belong to his immense family. There are many outside our faith who are doing their utmost to spread the gospel of Jesus.

I have an acquaintance who is not a member of our faith, yet each time she writes to me she encloses a little printed prayer. It may be just a couple of verses, but the prayer is always inside the envelope. What a thoughtful way to tell friends, "I'm on the Lord's side. He's my friend, and I am his." It pays to advertise. Just as there are many who belong to Christ's family here in the United States of America, I remember that in other lands this is not true. I remember that when our luggage was examined in Saudi Arabia, it was thoroughly searched for Bibles, bells of any kind, and crosses—anything that reminded one of Christianity. None of these were allowed in the country. This, interesting as it may be, is quite beside the point, which is that others here in the United States are advertising their belief in God. Why aren't we doing the same?

Our church has much to offer but nothing greater than the close band between one member and another. When this band tightens and becomes strong enough, the kingdom will be built. Mary, a relative of mine, spent one summer in the Hawaiian Islands. On her first Sunday there she attended our church—I believe this happened in Honolulu although I am not sure. After the services the pastor's wife invited Mary to her home for dinner, much to Mary's surprise, as she had not expected to receive such hospitality. She remarked to her hostess that she did very well to entertain perfect strangers in such a lavish manner. The pastor's wife replied, "Strangers? Whoever heard of such a thing? There is no one who is a stranger to me in the church!"

Perhaps it is because we are so few that we cling to one another so closely. And in this unity there is strength—strength for the countless menial tasks which come to us every day—strength for that greatest of tasks, the building of the kingdom.

AS WE GO ON to complete the task which lies before us, let us develop within ourselves the grit, zeal, courage, and determination it's going to take to build our kingdom of a lasting quality—redwood. Let us become fit timber in the work of the Lord, for as we go on in this work we will have to be as strong in this faith as the David who slew Goliath was strong in his. Building the kingdom is not like eating a bowl of cherries. Building the kingdom is going to be hard work. Let us show the world that, as individuals and as a church, we have what it takes. We can and we will produce. We will accomplish something. Let us not build of little splinters of pine. Let us build the kingdom of redwood—strong, lasting, durable, and beautiful.

Memories

and the Thoughts They Give Us

By Emma V. Freeman

A tent, or a cottage, Oh, why should I care,
They're building a palace for me over there.
Though exiled from home, yet still I may sing,
"All glory to God, I'm a child of the King."

THESE WORDS kept running through my mind, and as I sang them I thought of how my mother had sung this song.

Mother knew what it meant to have little in this world. Her father had died in the Civil War when she was about ten years old. She had eight brothers and sisters, and four were younger than she. Her mother, knowing no other way to care for her family, placed my mother in homes to work for her board. After she married, she and father homesteaded. She told me many times of how she felt the Lord cared for her. She joined the United Brethren Church when very young. No doubt this was the reason she put so much feeling in the song as she sang, because she knew the powers of her Lord in this life and had faith in that which was to be.

God always blesses those who draw near to him. We have been told to remember him as the giver of all that is good. He blesses some with wisdom and knowledge, and they are able to stand in special places in this world, but they should remember when they attain these high positions that God loves the soul of every man and desires he should be saved. He can take men and women from poverty, as well as from wealth, and polish them until they will become instruments in his hands for good. He desires each soul to become a steward for him. He loved men and women so much that he came to the world in the most humble circumstances, and because of this those who were proud in heart would not listen to his words, though they were attended with everything that would bring life to the soul. We can see him holding out his hands to Jerusalem and saying, "Oh, Jerusalem! Jerusalem! . . . how often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Possibly, had Elijah been dressed as a prince when he came to Ahab's palace, Ahab would not have tried so hard to kill him. Yet Elijah demonstrated before Israel that the Lord was God, and that he was the servant of the Lord, in the great demonstration on Mount Carmel when fire from heaven burned the sacrifice on the altar, though drenched with water, as the prophet had asked.

WE HEAR IT STATED, "A man may be poor, but if he keeps the law of God, he will not stay poor." We wonder why, if this be true, the Lord told us of the beggar, Lazarus, who afterward was received into Abraham's bosom. Our Lord knows the heart of every man and woman who makes a covenant with him. If he knows riches might cause a man to stray from him, when in poverty this man would make his Lord first, is he not doing this man a favor when he does not make him rich, or help him to become rich?

There are many things in life which we enjoy to the fullest, but it is worth our while to seek for that Spirit which brings us peace and assurance in times of trouble, sickness, poverty, or pain. To know our Lord is near sees us through conditions we could not of our own selves face and keep our sanity; knowing him gives us strength to encourage others about us.

John Brown's Spirit

By Alice Crossan

ON THE WAY UP John Brown had time to think of many things. About his fatal case of pneumonia, for instance—and the very recent novelty of viewing himself in the past tense, with a white cloth laid neatly over his features. He thought, too, of those he hoped to meet on the Other Side—if he were good enough. But most of all, he still puzzled over the matter that had worried him so much while he had been still conscious in the hospital. How much could any man count on divine forgiveness? Had his own repentance been sufficient? Now that all material worries were done away, the question was of paramount importance.

Still, worry could not help. So he began, rather whimsically, to think how his obituary might read, in a day or two on earth. He had been only fifty-nine. He felt a little sorry about that. It seemed to John Brown that more time had been due him—at least, he had expected more. But the case of pneumonia was the result of his own carelessness, after all.

What could be said about the life of John Brown? Looking back at it, he was faintly surprised at how uneventful it would appear. He had been born on a farm in Indiana. He had been graduated from high school and university, where he had met and married Anita. He had been in World War I, and he was the father of Captain David Brown, now in Korea. Anita and the newborn girl had long been in Heaven, of that he felt sure. He had been left to rear David alone, and he was rather proud of his success. During his lifetime he had enjoyed further success as a newspaperman. But now, what could still have been a profitable life had been ended once and for all by an inglorious case of pneumonia.

While he smiled at his unimportance to world progress, he was suddenly keenly aware, too, of a great new personal value that he had formerly taken for granted. There was potentiality in his immortal soul! If this were not so, he realized, he would not now be on his way toward his judgment and reward.

I suppose, meditated John Brown, that my training as a newspaperman is what makes me aware of what is now happening to me. If only I could take some notes! But then one is allowed to bring nothing. And perhaps there is no chance of getting my story into print on the Other Side, anyhow. But what an adventure this is, and how full of human interest! Not a Chronicle reader but would be interested in the life-after-death of its former editor!

NOW HE TOOK a careful look around to see how he was progressing on the upward way. Far ahead he could see the gates, but he was still too far out to know to what place he was coming. He hoped that it would be Paradise. This trend of thought brought him back sharply to the matter of forgiveness. He had read all he could find on the subject, both in ancient and modern-day revelation, yet he had always felt that divine grace might not cover him in spite of his repentance. He had broken one of the Ten Commandments, and he knew that his guilt loomed large. If only he had been given another chance—but then he felt that he had never actually had much of a chance in the first place.

As he drew closer he began to see the gates clearly, and there were groups of people standing about expectantly, as if they waited in a crowded railway station. He could see others going in ahead of him, and he noted that each one was met by a messenger.

JOHN BROWN was expected at the gates that day, and a messenger awaited him as he stepped through. Something about the personage who was to be his guide seemed amazingly familiar, but he could not remember ever having known him. So as they walked away, he said conversationally, "I seem to recognize you, but I can't remember your name. It's a bad habit of mine."

His messenger smiled kindly. "My name is Peter Braun, but I imagine that won't help you much."

John Brown shook his head. "Not a bit," he admitted, "but our names are very similar. Mine is Brown. I guess the world is full of them," he added.

"I'm sure you've known a number of people in your lifetime," Peter said. "We have met someplace briefly. I asked to be assigned to you, and I am to show you the city. Just follow me, please."

As they strode along together John Brown spoke of his trip up, and Peter listened with such interest and answered all questions so thoughtfully that John Brown felt that he had met a friend.

Curious, he turned at last to his guide. "You said you asked to be assigned to me. Is that right?"

"Yes, that's right," answered Peter. "I've had time to watch you from here for many years. I knew that you were a newspaper editor on earth. I found that especially interesting, since I was also much interested in writing."

"What sort of writing did you do?" asked John, hastily trying to associate the name with books or articles he had read.

"Rather heavy stuff, I'm afraid," smiled Peter. "Economics and sociology—subjects like that. I wanted to write a book, but the most I ever got done were a few articles in my student days. But I've been going on with my work here, you know. I've always been interested in people and how they live in groups. The Zionism idea was never presented to me in earthly life, but here we are making all preparations for the kingdom to go to earth. I wish that I might have known about it while I was on earth—but my life was short. I could not have done much anyway, I suppose."

UPON HEARING THESE WORDS, John Brown was smitten with remorse. We've known about Zionism living for years, on earth, he reflected sadly, but most people are like me. They don't do much toward making it a reality—they just want to wait for it to come down out of heaven. And still, we understood, I'm sure, that those in heaven were waiting for us to get ready. I wish I had done more—and I wish that I could somehow warn my son. If only I could prevent his making the same mistake!

Peter was reading his thoughts. "I'm sure we all feel as you do when we come over," he said gravely. "Our greatest earthly sin seems to be self-centeredness. We want to do our will first and God's will last."

John Brown was rather amazed at having his thoughts interpreted so clearly. But then he remembered where he was, and a new thought came to him. If his messenger knew this much about people, perhaps he might also know the answer to the burning question.

"Tell me," he implored, "to what extent may we count on forgiveness for sins we have committed?"

"I might answer with another question," smiled Peter understandingly. "What is your reason for seeking forgiveness? Is it simply to escape punishment, or is it a genuine wish to reconstruct that which was damaged by sin and to go on with redoubled effort?"

John Brown's answer was truthful, since in the presence of divinity there can be nothing but truth. "It is my wish," he said, "to use whatever abilities I have to the utmost, from this hour forward, if it is possible for me to do so. And even on earth that was my sincere desire."

PETER UNDERSTOOD. He opened his mouth and began to answer. "You know the word of the Lord, given by revelation in 1831," he said, and he quoted. "The Lord forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death. My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it shall be required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds."

John Brown had read and pondered this Scripture many times.

"This was a difficult thing for me to do," said Peter. "There was one who wronged me in life, whom I had no opportunity to forgive while I was there. Until this hour, it has been a burden on my soul."

"Your words comfort me," said John Brown gratefully. "I fear the judgment, but I trust in Christ's mercy."

Peter's face shone with a heavenly light. "His love and forgiveness exceed that of any mortal man or of any of the hosts of heaven," he said. Then he placed his hand on John's arm, for they had come to a flight of steps above which rose an imposing structure. "I must leave you here," he added. "This is the place of judgment, and you, like every man, are now alone. But before I go, I want you to know that I am glad to have you for my friend. We shall meet again."

Loath to see his friend depart, John gripped his hand and asked, "Have you been here many years?"

Peter smiled strangely. "I came over in 1917—during the first world war," he said. And with those words he vanished from sight.

John Brown was left standing alone on the steps that lead to the bar of eternal judgment. As he stood there, hesitating, truth filled his mind. His remorse was so great that he felt as if his very soul were weeping. There had been so much that he might have done. What could he say had been more important than the building of the kingdom? And now, forevermore, his time was gone. If only his son might know—if somehow he might make David realize how short a lifetime can be, and how much needed yet to be done! But his time was gone, and David, too, was alone.

He looked upward toward the doors of the house of judgment, and his weakness was so great that he fell upon his knees, his head bowed. What could he say to his Lord to explain his guilt? For now, too, by the power of divine intelligence, he was permitted to know where he had seen Peter, the man who might have been his best friend on earth, had they been permitted friendship. How could a man fathom the wisdom and the glory of God? He had met his sin face to face here at the feet of Christ, just as he had once met Peter face to face in the bloody woods of France. What better person to explain forgiveness to him than the man he had once killed?

New Horizons

J. Arthur Davis

I WAS BORN IN WALES on April 4, 1860, and was brought to America by my parents when I was one and one-half years old. My parents were members of the original church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830 and, not knowing anything of the incongruities introduced by Brigham Young and others, went to Utah.

Before coming to this country my father had helped to translate the Book of Mormon into the Welsh language. In Utah he soon found that the teachings and practices of the church did not agree with the teachings of the Three Books, and as a consequence he immediately became dissatisfied.

With a number of other men, he went to Wyoming to work on the Union Pacific Railroad then being built from Omaha to Ogden. David and Alexander Smith, on a mission to reclaim members who had been blinded by false doctrines, came to their camp. After they had preached three sermons the men in camp all agreed that they told the truth. When my father returned to Utah he was baptized into the Reorganization.

Through her zeal, my mother, when I was eight years old, had had me baptized into the Utah Church. Singular as it may seem, I so greatly disliked the man who baptized me that I was very unhappy about it. When I learned that my father was going to be baptized again, I asked my parents to let me be baptized again also. The joyous feeling that came to me in this baptism remains with me to this day. A few years later my mother and brother were baptized.

Kansas had just become a state, and Brother Stephen Maloney had written to the Herald (then published in Plano) that there was government land in the new state, so my father went there, took up a homestead, and moved his family there.

THE CHURCH soon thereafter requested him to take a mission to Wales, which he did, leaving mother with us children on the new homestead. There were several other families of Saints living in Labette County. I was rather confused because my father was so far away for so long a time preaching the gospel while the neighbor men were at home preaching in our community. Also there were other fine families in the community that belonged to other churches. To me there was little difference. All religions seemed much the same, and I became resentful that father was away so much, leaving mother with the burden of establishing a home in a new country with children too young to be of much help. My brother, Evan, and I were thus forced to assume responsibility when quite young.

There was a band of Saints living in Cherokee County known as Pleasant View Branch. They persuaded mother to move there. They built her a nice little house, and there I grew to know more of the religion of my father, but still I was not satisfied. It seemed to me the sacrifice was too great. When he was home on one occasion I mustered up courage to approach him regarding those things which were disturbing me. He soon succeeded in getting me to see the superiority of the claims of the church that he represented. As I developed in the knowledge of my church, with the help of noble men who composed the priesthood of the branch—men such as Jasper Richards, Isaac Ross, and Richard and Charlie Byrd—who had been followers of Lyman Wight, it was not long until I had the conviction that I wanted to take a part in promulgating the cause that I was convinced was superior to anything else. My first call was to be an elder, and I was ordained on January 13, 1884, by my father and C. M. Fulks. I started preaching locally. With my horse and buggy I drove to many of the schoolhouses in the county to preach. Later I was urged by E. L. Kelley, M. T. Short, and many of the men of the local groups to take a mission. I was called to the office of Seventy and ordained under the hands of Brother Duncan Campbell and Brother E. C. Brand.

THEN I WAS ASSIGNED my first mission to Little Sioux and Pottawatomie Districts. This was in 1888. I was in the field continuously, with only a short leave of absence when I needed to stay with my family, until the Centennial Conference of 1930, when I was superannuated.

My second mission was to Minnesota with A. H. Smith. He took me to Minneapolis and left me there to labor alone. There were a few Saints, including old Brother Daugherty and his daughter, Mrs. Smith. The only thing I could do was go on the street to preach. I was wholly inexperienced in this and hesitated to undertake it. The first night I preached two ladies came up and asked me where my church was. I replied that I had none. Then each one asked me to use her house. This I did, alternating each evening, since they were just across the street from each other. After hearing a few sermons these two ladies were baptized near Minnehaha Falls. From then on the membership grew rapidly. Brother Eli Steadman joined me, and we organized the Minneapolis Branch. Then we wrote to Brother Alexander Smith what we had done. He kindly informed us that we had proceeded without authority, but he recognized the wisdom of the organization and let it stand. And the Minneapolis Branch is alive today. That was my first lesson in seeking counsel of those in charge, and I never forgot it.

I am just giving a synopsis of my labors and not trying to go into details, as unfortunately my diaries have been lost and I cannot trust my memory.

I was married and had one child before I went into the mission field. My family grew until I had ten children, and my wife and I experienced the hardship of maintaining a home and rearing a family on the meager allowance of those days when the church had so little money. The loyalty of my wife who insisted that I stay in the field kept me at the post of duty, a thing which I never regretted. The mother of my children passed away, and I afterward married a widow with three daughters. It is to her that much of the credit goes for bringing all the children into the church, helping to educate them, and allowing me to stay under appointment. Three of my sons now are elders.

I filled many important missions as submissionary in charge and district president. I served in the Council of Presidents of Seventy for a number of years and was then ordained a high priest, a position which I continue to hold. I have had many wonderful experiences in serving as a minister for Christ. I shall mention only one, which was a healing.

I WAS PRESIDENT of the Idaho District in 1926 when I received a letter from President Fred M. Smith stating that a sister in Idaho Falls had asked that an elder be sent to administer to her. I proceeded to Idaho Falls and there learned that she lived twelve miles from the town. Snow covered the roads. I had no money and therefore started walking. I was overtaken by a man who was hauling beets from the community where I was going to the railroad. He gave me a lift. In our conversation I learned that he was a Mormon. He told me of the lady's illness and that there was no chance for her recovering. She had been administered to by the Mormon elders. When I arrived I found the house full of Mormon women who sarcastically said to the sister, "You'll be all right now. Here's your preacher." At noontime they all left to get their lunches. Her husband came in and I said to him, "You know why I'm here." He said, "Yes." I asked if he objected, and he said, "No." He prayed with me and I proceeded to administer. There was a wonderful spirit present. Recently I received a letter from this sister who now lives in Twin Falls, Idaho. I am happy to share her testimony with the Saints:

J. Arthur Davis
Independence, Missouri
Dear Brother Davis:

About two weeks ago I talked to Sister Anson Moore who was visiting her daughter in Jerome, Idaho.

In the course of the conversation she told me that she had seen you and that you were planning to write an autobiography of your life and desired the details concerning my case of healing through administration.

In the spring of 1926 I was stricken with peritoneal tuberculosis. After having an operation the doctor told my family I possibly would live three days, but God ruled otherwise.

Desiring to be administered to by the laying on of hands, I wrote President Fred M. Smith, who in turn wrote you, if I am correct. You came, and I received a great blessing. It was November 24, 1926.

The doctor told me, after I had survived the operation, that I would have to lie in bed for five years. I was found to have tuberculosis of the peritoneum, from which very few people ever recovered at that time.

Being administered to on the twenty-fourth of November, I stayed in bed until about December 5, at which time I felt perfectly well and able to do my own housework. I went to see the doctor three times after that. The last time was in March, when he told me I was well and able to be about my household duties. I told him I had been doing just that for the past three months. He was much surprised and said, "Mrs. Harmon, I will have to admit that a greater power than man has come to your assistance, so remarkable is your recovery."

Many doctors examined me and said, "What a remarkable recovery!" They had never seen such a case before.

Again I want to thank you for coming to my home at that time. Had not God spared my life I do not know whether my children would ever have known of this gospel or not. Now all of them belong to the church. My husband, who used to be a Mormon, is now a member of the Reorganized Church. Through our efforts, with a few others, we have a nice little mission here in Twin Falls, Idaho, and I have lived to see my first grandchildren baptized into the church.

How thankful I am to my Heavenly Father for his watch care and keeping over his children and for his ministers he has sent out and given authority to act for him. May God bless you in your work.

Your sister in the gospel

After laboring all these years for the church I am stronger in my belief that the church will accomplish its mission. Every day I see prophecy being fulfilled. I have perfect confidence in the present leaders and the men, young and old, who are now in the active ministry and those who will yet be called. The outlook, to me, is better than it has ever been.

Briefs

Women's Department Organized

CLOVIS, NEW MEXICO.—Church school was held in the home of Brother R. E. Price on November 13, after which a dinner was served to the thirty-two people present. In the afternoon, the district women's leader, Lena Carson, met with the six women present and helped organize a women's department. Sister Ruth Price was elected president; Geneva Henson, vice-president; Ida Lou Inge, secretary and treasurer.

On March 6, a box supper was held at the Community Building of Santa Fe Heights in Clovis. The money raised totaled $62.44, and was donated to the building fund by the women's department.

Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs held a series of meetings in Clovis and Portales March 15-April 1. There were three baptisms as follows: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Beard and their daughter Kay. Billie and Donnie Beard and Kennie White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ken White, were blessed.—Reported by IDA LOU INGE

Soprano Soloist at Banquet

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.—A pre-Easter breakfast was held in the lower auditorium on Maundy Thursday morning for the women of the church and their friends. The breakfast was under the direction of Mrs. Frances Carlson, with Mrs. Nellie Mottashed of Belding, Michigan, as guest speaker.

The Graceland College Concert Choir visited the city on March 31. They gave a concert in Lee High School, a radio broadcast from a local station, and presented a concert to a capacity crowd at the church in the evening.

The women's department sponsored the Sunday evening service on April 26, with the Mother's Club presenting a short pageant entitled "The Light of the World" under the direction of Anna Mae Harvey and Isabel Phillips.

The annual mother and daughter banquet sponsored by the women's department with Mrs. Francis Osborne in charge was held May 15 in the church. The program was arranged by the club under the direction of Mary Lou Jeffries, with Mattie Willis, Battlecreek, Michigan, soprano, guest soloist.—Reported by ISABEL PHILLIPS

District League Meeting

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The junior and senior Zion's Leagues from the New York-Philadelphia District had their annual "Restoration Festival" April 24-26 in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia League welcomed sixty guests from out of town. The theme of the meeting was "Keys to the Kingdom." Ralph Bobbitt, Paul Frisby, and Ray Zinser were in charge.

The women's department, under the direction of Sister Mays, is saving labels in order to help pay for the Hammond spinet, purchased in March.

Family night is held one Friday night each month. In April, the Gatley family entertained with Hawaiian selections.

The women's department from the First Church and the Northeast Chapel gave Sister Bobbitt a housewarming shower.—Reported by SANDRA DYMOND

Anniversary Services Held

LONDON, ONTARIO.—The Highbury congregation celebrated its fifth anniversary on May 23 and 24. About ninety people attended the Saturday evening supper. Brother and Sister Wes Lott received congratulations on their fiftieth wedding anniversary. Elder Carl Muir was the speaker. On Sunday Elder John Booth, pastor of the Toronto Branch, was the guest speaker. Dr. Evan Shute, pastor, was in charge of the service.—Reported by TOM GLOVER

Vacation Church School Held

VAN CLEAVE, MISSISSIPPI.—The vacation church school closed on May 22. There was an enrollment of forty-five, but due to an epidemic of measles, the average attendance was thirty-four, with twenty-four perfect attendance awards given. The following received awards for outstanding classwork: Joellen Rogers, Linda Parrish, Henry Tanner, Raymond Burt, and Jerry Burt. Mrs. H. E. Jennings was the principal, assisted by the following: Mrs. Myrtle Moe, secretary and pianist; Miss Betty Goff, storyteller; Mrs. Clyde Parrish, Mrs. Dean Rouse, Mrs. L. P. Hawley, Mrs. Ernest Goff, Mrs. Albert Goff, Mrs. John Tillman, Mrs. Cecil McMillan, and Mrs. Murray Holden, teachers.

The annual home-coming services were held on May 24, with about two hundred people present. Guest speakers were Elder A. N. Barnes of Escatawpa, Mississippi, and Elder R. L. Booker of Mobile, Alabama.

Missionary services were held March 29-April 5, with Evangelist J. Charles May visiting. Several received blessings from Brother May.—Reported by MRS. MYRTLE MOE

Missionary Series Held

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA.—A missionary series was conducted recently by Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, who gave illustrated lectures and presented travelogs of Alaska and Hawaii. Attendance averaged seventy-five or eighty each night. On May 10 Brother Gibbs baptized Mrs. R. O. Burks, Mr. Frank Childers, Charles R. Muse, Nancy Kay Ridings, Larry and Kenneth Childers. Confirmation services followed at the eleven o'clock hour with Brother Ray Carrow and Brother William Creviston assisting. Delores Jean Crownover, baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Crownover of Odell, Texas, was blessed at the same service.

The ladies' auxiliary entertained the branch with a picnic supper recently in the city park.

A study class on "Ways of Teaching" was recently organized with ten registered for the course. They are meeting in the home of Mrs. Hallie Spraggins each Wednesday night.—Reported by MRS. H. G. HOOD

Men Ordained

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Elder J. A. Pray and family of Mobile, Alabama, visited with the mission on May 23 and 24. Brother Pray and Brother Farrow were the speakers. An ordination service was held on Sunday afternoon when the following were ordained: Elbert Powell, elder; Walter B. Babcock, priest; and Harvey Powell, deacon. The women of the mission served the noon meal.—Reported by MRS. E. H. POWELL

Dedication Service Held

FULTON, IOWA.—A special dedication service was held at the Fulton, Iowa, church Sunday, April 26. At this time a new pulpit was presented to the branch in memory of Amos W. and Edna L. Heide by their six children and families. The service was opened and conducted by the pastor, Glen H. Sherman, and talks were given by Alma J. Heide and M. G. Brooks, both of Lamoni, Iowa. Cleo L. Heide of Independence, Missouri, delivered the sermon. Two new altar chairs were presented by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Campbell, and a pair of oak collection trays was made and presented by Lloyd Heide.—Reported by MRS. ALLEN RIPPLE mind. Happiness is not the temporary diversion of gaiety or pleasure but the sense of well-being which comes from an adequately lived life. Its companion is not freedom from disturbing influences but meeting them with peace of mind.

The Two Philosophies

We are not born sinful. We are born seeking what gives us happiness and wanting to avoid that which gives us pain. The fact that we are more happy in a loving relationship than we are in a fighting one would convince the natural scientist that loving relationships are closer to the reality of mankind than destruction, brutality, and frustration. His philosophy, applied to human relations, would even lead him to believe that man was intended to experience beauty, to be treated with dignity, to have self-respect, inspiration, friendship, happiness, and hope, and to be whole and wholesome.

Exactly as the scientist begins with something small that he can handle, correcting his mistakes as he goes along, so we must begin with ourselves and widen out from there to the family, the community, the factory, the nation, and finally to the world. Only thus can we make our dependency on each other secure. There is no other road by which to achieve freedom to work together co-operatively, for there is no other philosophy consistent with the highest standards of religion, morality, and human values.

The voice of Michael on the banks of the Susquehanna, detecting the Devil when he appeared as an angel of light [his method of warring on the seed who have the testimony of Jesus]. The voice of Peter, James, and John in the wilderness between Harmony, . . . declaring themselves as possessing the keys of the kingdom, and of the dispensation of the fullness of times. . . . And the voice of Michael, the archangel; the voice of Gabriel, and of Raphael, and of divers angels, from Michael or Adam, down to the present time, all declaring each one their dispensation, their rights, their keys, their honors, their majesty and glory, and the power of their priesthood. —Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20, 21.

Moroni, another earthly servant of the church, ascended after death. He, too, feared the satanic power through the Lamanites who would kill any who testified of Jesus. He returned to the earth as an angel, thus continuing his ministerial work. These were all the "man child" of the church of God throughout its history. The woman (church) has never yet, since the days of Enoch, brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ. It will again be Zion when that is accomplished.

WHEN JOSEPH SMITH, the Ephraimite, had his lineage declared by the Lord, there was still one thing needed before he could function. The power and authority that was taken from the earth had to be brought back from heaven. John, the messenger of the Lord, returned with it. "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me, and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple." —Malachi 3: 1.

In no sense whatever can the church or kingdom of God be called masculine. It is composed of men and women, boys and girls. Take away its few thousand men of the ministry, its man child, and it could not function at all. The Lord gave the gender of the child for a definite reason, and history reveals all the incidents stated in the revelation concerning it. The symbol of the eagle with her two great wings is surely one of the gems of revelation that God has given. How well both Manasseh and Ephraim have fortified and preserved her identity through the long wilderness years! It was Ephraim, who—at the end of the long 1,260 years, and with the record of Manasseh, the Book of Mormon, in his hand—gave the woman (church) restored vitality among the children of men. It was Manasseh who wrote and preserved her pure doctrine and finally handed it on to Ephraim, his brother. This truly brought the woman out of the wilderness. "And verily, verily I say unto you that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

This wilderness was across the ocean where Jesus had long before established his church in the place where the symbol, woman (the church), with her eagle wings, would bring forth Zion, the kingdom of God: ". . . to receive this same testimony, among this generation, in this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" (Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3).

It was in the land of the Nephites that it came forth, where Manasseh had lived and where the Ephraimites journeyed and will be gathered. As Joseph's blessing says: "These two horns will push the people together to the ends of the earth, the thousands of Manasseh and the ten thousands of Ephraim." If two tribes can be two horns, then two tribes also can be two wings. In both prophecies they are doing the same work. The symbol of the eagle is further stated by the prophet who said: "Ho to the land shadowing with wings, beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." Truly the woman has "two wings of a great eagle" for even the topography of her land is as the wings of a great eagle stretched across the globe. In that land is her place, even the wilderness of her hiding, where her pure message was preserved for the ultimate salvation of all who will receive it.

Two sons, Howard and Walter, preceded her in death. Funeral services were conducted by Elder James A. Thomas and O. W. Tuck at the Hansen Chapel in Worthington, Minnesota. Burial was in the Worthington Cemetery.

PORTER.—Roselean W., was born November 10, 1868, at Semmes, Alabama, and died May 2, 1953, at Prichard, Alabama. She was married on January 3, 1883, to Julius Addison Porter; six children were born to them. Mr. Porter and three sons preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for over fifty years.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Laura Powell of Theodore, Alabama; Mrs. Ruth Campbell and Mrs. Idell Rawis of Prichard, Alabama; six grandchildren; nine great-grandchildren; and three great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders J. A. Pray and R. L. Booker at the Reorganized Church in Mobile. Burial was in Wolf Ridge Cemetery.

Sixty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. William M. Mills of the Santa Ana, California, Branch observed their sixty-fifth wedding anniversary on Thursday, May 7. They were married at Los Angeles, California, in 1888 by Mr. Mills's father, Elder D. S. Mills. Their children are Mrs. Evanelia Farley, Orange, California; Miss Adelia Mills, Orange, California; Mrs. Rebecca Nimmo, Independence, Missouri; Clarence Mills, Durham, California; and Walter Mills, Trabuco, California. One son, Roy Mills, is deceased. There are also twelve grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mills are members of the Reorganized Church.

Introducing

ANDREW JOHN CORBETT, Sydney, Australia, page 5, came into the church in 1904 by divine guidance. He had Sunday school training as a boy; as he grew older he felt a need of church training for his two children. He says, "I started out looking for a church to join. After several Sundays I did not know where to go next. Then an audible voice spoke to me and said, 'If you will be saved, go to the Latter Day Saint Church.'" The next Sunday he occupied a back seat in the Balmain Church. Soon he was baptized by Gomer R. Wells and has been a member of that branch ever since.

Brother Corbett was born in 1875. He married Amy Thearle in 1901 (deceased May, 1946). To them were born four daughters and two sons. Following his public school education he went to work, but he has been a student all his life and has written much for the church papers. His hobbies are oil painting and verse writing.

He was associated with Sydney's largest publishing house for thirty years and was foreman at the time he was called into the mission field in 1918. He was ordained a deacon in 1905, a priest and elder in 1908, high priest in 1914, and counselor to Bishop Lewis in 1921. When Bishop Lewis died, Brother Corbett and W. J. Haworth were made trustees to the church property in Australia. He has presided over the Balmain, Richmond, and Brisbane Branches. He has also been president of the Southern New South Wales, the Victoria, and Queensland Districts at various times. He was superannuated in 1952. He has seen five generations of his family worship in the Balmain Church, and recently had the privilege of blessing two great-grandchildren.

CLOCKS

One of the misfortunes of the modern age is the disappearance of the old-fashioned grandfather clock. With musical ceremony it counted the hours, and special melodies marked the quarter, half, and three quarter intervals. In between, the measured tick-tock reminded everyone of the ancient platitude, "Tempus fugit."

Of course it was placed in the hall with the umbrella stand and the coatrack, with charcoal portraits of Uncle Wilberforce and Aunt Mathilda watching it. But its sonorous voice could be heard above the discreet conversation in the parlor, and the controlled laughter of those Victorian times and manners.

When conversation paused, the clock's solemn voice could be heard reminding all that, "Art is long and time is fleeting,

And our hearts though stout and brave
Still like muffled drums are beating

Funeral marches to the grave."

The clock ruled entire families with a kind of austere majesty. It told them when to get up, when to eat, when children must be pushed out the door for their reluctant journey to school, and when it was time to go to bed. Even the most charming visitors were told, in the clock's impersonal way, when it was time to go home. And the amorous swain, lingering beyond the time of his welcome, was a dolt if he did not heed the voice of the clock, stand up, and ask for his hat.

Modern electric clocks are such mute witnesses for the passing of time. They have no drama, no fanfare, no excitement, no authoritative voice to command obedience. And some of them have such queer, impressionistic hands and faces that you can't tell the time even if you look at them, as if they were meant to confuse a person rather than inform him. Visitors stay too late, the family loses sleep, the swain bores the girl and loses her, and everybody is grouchy the next day.

With our wonderful genius and intelligence, we keep progressing, but in doing so we leave behind and forget many things that are finer and better than the new things we invent. Perhaps, sometime in the next century, somebody will discover something as good and useful as the grandfather clock.

JUSTICE

Anyone who uses the Constitution as a shield while he seeks to tear down and to destroy the principles for which it stands should be denied the rights guaranteed therein.

H. L. Whipple

SOLUTION

The problem of the white American and the Negro American . . . like all the great problems of mankind, at bottom is a religious problem, and the religious solution must be made before any other solution can be effective. It will, in fact, never be solved exclusively on human terms.—"Time," December 30, 1946.

Faith is holding reasonable convictions in realms beyond the reach of final demonstration; and as well, it is thrusting out one's life upon those convictions as though they were true.—From Walter N. Johnson

The Walls of Zion

by Addie Spaulding Stowell

A new book! "The Walls of Zion" is a historical novel that brings you facts along with fiction. It is a story of pioneer life in the early days of our church. The reader will follow the church from its beginning to the time when the Saints were forced to abandon all in Missouri in 1833. Order your copy today.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Howard Whalley Fisher

When Howard Fisher was a little boy he began to pray that someday he might be a missionary. He also prayed that he might be given the ability to sing, at least to carry a tune, so he could help serve God in that way. He started practicing with his mother and by the next Christmas he was able to sing carols with the rest of the family. When he started he had a range of four notes.

As he was growing up his prayers continued. He lived on a farm with three brothers and five sisters. The Fishers were an isolated family, and the children learned much of the gospel by reading books and stories together. "The hours we spent reading helped to cement our beliefs in the gospel when we were still young," he says.

He has always enjoyed work, whether it was farming, which later became a sideline, or teaching. He has been a teacher and a principal in the schools of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, for about five years. He is now the appointee missionary in Saskatchewan.

Howard was born in Birsay, Saskatchewan, in 1926 and was baptized when he was eight. He was graduated from Weyburn School, grade twelve, normal school, and from Saskatoon University. There he received a permanent superior certificate in education.

In 1949 he married Marion Virginia Thomson. They have two children, Loretta, two and a half years old, and Grant, not quite one. His special interest is the "kingdom of God," while his hobbies include softball, curling, boat riding, and wood-working. His wife adds another one—teasing. He was ordained a priest in 1947 and an elder in 1950.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

DAVEY COMPLETES SERIES

Apostle Roscoe Davey completed three weeks of missionary activity in the Kansas City Stake area on June 7. Branches included were Quindaro, Malvern Hill, and Central.

GLEAZER REPORTS

Apostle E. J. Gleazer continues to improve, following a recent illness, and is frequently back in his office. He now plans to leave Independence June 22 for California, and to attend the Northern California Reunion at Santa Cruz, July 5-12.

HANSON AND RENFROE VISIT CANADA

Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe have completed a month's visit in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. They report that prospects are encouraging for church work in Winnipeg, Weyburn, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, and Calgary.

WOMEN'S COUNCIL ADJOURNS FOR SUMMER

The Women's Council held its final formal session June 10. This was the last regular meeting until September.

At this time the women finished their report, "Women and Evangelism," to be added to the material presented at the Institute of Evangelism held in April. The women also discussed their coming reunion assignments.

HOLMES ATTENDS INSTITUTES

Apostle Reed Holmes has recently returned to Independence, following his attendance at institutes and gatherings from May 16 to June 7. These gatherings included church school institutes at Louisville, Kentucky, and Southern Indiana District, May 16-17; regional institutes at Columbus, Ohio, May 22-24; and Flint, Michigan, May 29-31. Other contacts were Evansville, Indiana, May 15; Middletown, Ohio, May 19; Dayton, Ohio, May 20. The Eastern Michigan District held two regional priesthood gatherings June 3 and 4. His final regional institute was in London, Ontario, June 5-7.

The Columbus, Flint, and London institutes followed the demonstration approach, which included the laboratory experience of actually teaching classes, followed by class evaluations. This new approach placed the emphasis on "doing."

BANQUET CLIMAXES PRIESTHOOD CLASSES

The evening of June 5 the priesthood members of the Center Stake of Zion, with their wives, held a banquet at the Auditorium. Mrs. Walter Johnson spoke on "A Wife's Attitude Toward a Husband's Ministry." Bishop Walter Johnson spoke on "How the Family Can Enrich the Work of the Ministers." The General Church Presidency and Bishopric attended. The banquet served as a climax to a six weeks' session of priesthood classes.

These classes were the third session held this year. Herbert Lively of the stake presidency was in charge of the Melchisedec priesthood school. Instructors of the three quorums were Almer Sheehy, Floyd McDowell, Reed Holmes, and John Darling. School for the Aaronic priesthood members was in charge of Harold Cackler. Instructors were Brother Cackler, John A. Robinson, Marion Talcott, Trevor Norton, and J. E. Kelsey.

Lectures on Faith

A Pertinent Question Considered

WE HAVE BEEN mildly reproached because Lectures on Faith, recently published in booklet form, were not left, as they were at first, as an "integral" part of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Our attention has been called to the following quotation from paragraph 4 of Section 108A, as follows:

Elder John Smith, taking the lead of the high council in Kirtland, bore record that the revelations in said book were true, and that the lectures were judiciously arranged and compiled, and were profitable for doctrine.

This inquiring brother (of another faction) cites this single isolated reference in the minutes of the General Assembly in support of his contention that the Lectures were thereby approved and endorsed or authorized as fully as were the revelations. The question thus raised is, of course, both serious and pertinent, and it is worthy of careful consideration: May we properly assume, because John Smith testified as he did, that approval of the Lectures as an integral portion of the book was contemplated by all members of the General Assembly? That is the question.

It will be noted that in the quotation there is a comma after the word "compiled," leaving it open to construction as to what is referred to in the following clause: "and were profitable for doctrine." From the statements made by others, I am inclined to believe the final clause referred to the revelations.

It may also be thought by some that the Lectures were submitted for approval along with the revelations, because when the book was first published the Lectures were included in it.

Let us examine the whole record. The heading of Section 108A sets out that at a meeting of the General Assembly on September 24, 1834, a committee had been appointed "to arrange the items of doctrine of Jesus Christ for the government of his church . . ." which "items are to be taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which have been given to said church up to this date, or shall be until such arrangement is made." (Italics mine. I. A. S.)

Here it was specifically provided that the sources from which the "items of doctrine" were to be taken were limited to the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and "the revelations . . ." Could this authorization be held to include matter from other sources or by whomsoever "prepared," the original committee or others? We do not think so.

REFERENCE in our Church History was made to "Lectures on theology for publication in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which the committee appointed last September [are] now compiling." This did not indicate they were to be a part of the doctrines, simply because they were to be published in the book.

Paragraph 4 of Section 108A states that after the General Assembly was organized, and "after a hymn was sung, President Cowdery arose and introduced the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in behalf of the committee." I believe we should assume that in this report the committee did not draw from sources not expressly authorized in the original action. I cannot interpret this record to mean that anything but the revelations were referred to as having been presented, discussed, and approved, for the following reasons:

John Smith, from whom we have quoted, bore record that "the revelations" were true. Levi Jackman "bore testimony" that the "revelations in said book were true."

The Twelve (paragraph 5) bore witness that "the commandments" were true. These could not have included the Lectures.

There are, it is true, some references to "the book" which might be held to include contents other than the revelations if indeed "the book," as it later was published (with the Lectures), had at the time been in printed or published form, which of course was not a fact.

Summarizing briefly: The committee was not directed to bring in any such new matter as these Lectures were, and apparently it did not include in its report any reference to them. Under these circumstances, I cannot believe that the Lectures on Faith were even considered "for doctrine" by the General Assembly; therefore we must hold they were not approved by that Assembly.

For these reasons there was no necessity to include them in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and when they were finally discontinued, the action was entirely lawful.

Nauvoo Memorial Service

Special services commemorating the event of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith will be conducted at Nauvoo Sunday, June 28, at 2:00 p.m. The Nauvoo District, under the direction of Elder Max L. Hromek, will be in general charge of arrangements. Elder Eugene Theys, missionary co-ordinator of Center Stake, will give the address, and the music group directed by Franklyn Weddle will furnish appropriate hymns. Participating in the wreath ceremony will be Reginald A. Smith, grandson of the prophet, Gina Smith, great-granddaughter, and Chris Smith, great-grandson.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Word has been received of the death of two women who have given years of service to the church. Mrs. James V. Dent of Chatham, Ontario, died on May 16, and Miss Mabel Clark of Toronto, Ontario, died on May 21. Miss Clark, a sister of President Wallace Smith's mother, has been known as "Aunt Mabel" by nearly everyone who has ever had anything to do with Toronto Branch.

The following came to the Presidency's office from Merle Guthrie, Church Statistician. These figures are not passed on to Herald readers in boastfulness but in sincere appreciation of the diligent efforts of all who are helping in the ever-present task of sharing the gospel.

With the completion of the figures for February, we find that the enrollment of the church has passed the 150,000 mark. As of February 28, 1953, it was 150,006.

Elder Harry W. Black, who is giving good service as Kirtland Temple minister and pastor at Kirtland, shares this letter with us:

Cuyahoga Heights School
4820 East Seventy-first
Cleveland 25, Ohio
May 25, 1953

Dear Mr. Black:

My students and I wish to express to you our sincere appreciation for your kindness in making our visit to Kirtland Temple so pleasant and so very interesting, enlightening, and educational. All of us voted the visit a very worth-while adventure. In fact, several students and parents have already looked for further details about this religious group. The tour has opened vistas of curiosity and a desire for enlarging their horizons of knowledge, which is one of the larger goals of education not easily accomplished with a text book.

Thank you so much for your time and information. We are deeply indebted to you and your church.

Sincerely yours,
CHRISTINE W. WEST

From the Detroit International Stake office:

The opening prayer at the session of legislature of Michigan State Senate in Lansing on March 18 was offered by Elder David E. Dowker of Detroit, Michigan. He is the first member of the Reorganized Church to perform this service.

Elder Dowker was also invited to offer the opening prayer at the Sixty-fourth Annual Convention of the Michigan Federation of Labor at Fort Shelby Hotel in Detroit on May 25.

The following telegram was received from D. O. Chesworth on June 8:

First reunion of the season officially opened today Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, with excellent attendance, larger than usual, with people in excellent spirits. Weather cool.

Apostle Gleazer has shared with us a recent letter from Elder Don Landon, who is working in Oregon. Brother Landon says, in part:

The conference in Portland was well attended and a good spirit prevailed. The work of Brother Njeim again was superb.

Prior to the conference, I spent two weeks in Hood River Branch. We were successful in gaining five baptismal decisions and creating other prospects who are seriously investigating the message. I went on the radio the first week and spoke fifteen minutes each day. We received many favorable comments from residents of Hood River Valley. Attendance the second week jumped 300 per cent. The priesthood is very enthused about evangelistic work. Two young men, who are permanent residents, are working together on cottage meetings and doing a fine job.

In Hood River a total of seventy-one visits were made—thirty-four nonmember and thirty-seven member. Five cottage meetings were held, and ten sermons preached. Four doctrinal sermons were delivered over station KIHRR.

From all indications, Oregon District will have a good baptismal record this year.

From Brother W. J. Haworth, 46 Henley Street, Drummoyne, New South Wales, Australia, May 28, 1953:

When you and Brother Siegfried were here you visited the home of John Story Rodger and wife. He was a nephew of the Australian pioneer missionary, Gland Rodger. You may know that Sister Rodger passed to her reward two years ago at the age of seventy-seven.

Evangelist Swain and I officiated at the obsequies of J. S. Rodger this afternoon. Born January 1, 1864, he had attained the ripe age of eighty-nine years. He was baptized by his uncle in February, 1879, at the small village of Bungwahl, through which you passed en route to Tiona reunion grounds.

He was a sawmiller and lived at various places in his long life. Traveling ministers were received into his home with gladness and with every courtesy from Sister Rodger and the family. During the past few years they made their home in Sydney.

A fine Christian gentleman, a magistrate for his country, an honored member of his church, he has passed to a sure reward.

Time is creeping up on me also, and toward the end of last year my health was not too good, but the Lord has been kind and I am back to the normal for an eighty-year-old.

I am grateful for God's blessings directly and through the ministries of the church. Sister Haworth joins me in sending you best wishes.

Freedom Unlimited

The Challenge to Zion-building

By Paul Wellington

A MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE would really be astounded—after a century of sleep—to awaken in today's twentieth century of scientific invention. Today's commonplace would be a miracle to him.

Yes, Rip's horse or bicycle has been replaced by the auto; his primitive steamboat is now a huge diesel (and soon, atomic) ocean liner; and that which was not even a dream has become a jet airplane zooming through the skies at a thousand or more miles an hour.

Rip's Indian friends no longer send smoke signals; nor does his white brother ride the pony express. They now pick up a telephone, or send a telegram, or operate a "ham" radio station, and communicate across the thousands of miles instantaneously.

No longer is his home lighted with a candle, or even a kerosene lamp. It is flooded with electrically produced brilliance. A machine now washes for his wife; another preserves his food through home refrigeration; another mixes ingredients for the cake he will eat at dinner. He will ride to work on a streetcar or trolley bus activated by electricity.

And added to this continually growing list of Rip's new "miracles" are the many thousands of other lesser or greater conveniences, labor-saving devices, and conveyances, speeding up transportation and communication. All of the stored-up energy of Rip's earth is being released into action.

The other two billion typical Rip Van Winkles of the earth are uncovering the hidden secret forces of "their" universe and are putting them to work. And they are becoming free—free to travel; free to communicate with many, many people all over the world; free from many social pressures of their tribes, clans, and communities; free from the continuous struggle to "just survive."

The Challenge

These particular freedoms probably find their greatest expression today in the United States—the land where most Reorganized Latter Day Saints reside—the land prophesied by their leaders as the center of a new "one world" kingdom, Zion. And to those who hold dear the ideal of assisting in the building of this kingdom, this freedom offers a challenge. For this freedom, uncontrolled, threatens to destroy the very organization developed for producing Zion. Its threat is internal: it pulls many of the workers of the church (the organization) away from duties and responsibilities previously taken for granted. It blots out or blurs the vision (of many) of a "good land," and substitutes in its place a "rich land."

It's a different "world" in which we now live, compared to one hundred years ago. Compare, for instance, your own experience of living today with the pattern of one hundred years ago, as typically pictured in this account of Creekville:

Creekville is a tiny village of sixteen houses, stretching for a distance of a half mile along a mountain stream. . . . There is no railroad, and the only road is a secondary road that leads to no other town but turns around a mountain and connects with a highway which leads out of the mountains. . . .

The residents of the village are culturally homogeneous. Most of them are or have been farmers, and the rest trade with farmers or sell services to them. Their families have lived in the vicinity for many years. . . . They share a rich heritage of folklore and folk customs.

The people know one another well, and have known all about each other for all their lives together. Any new development is immediately common knowledge. Young people who spend more than two or three evening engagements together, for example, will find that they have unofficially announced an expected wedding. A resident, contending that there had been no unhappy marriages in Creekville in the last fifteen years, offered as evidence the proposition that "If there had been an unhappy marriage, everyone would have known about it."

In Creekville there is little privacy or individualism, and little desire for it. When neighbors come for a brief visit they do not knock on the door, but simply walk in. There is also a custom of dropping in for a visit at mealtime without an invitation, and it is expected that the host and hostess will in time pay a return visit. When there is illness or other trouble, word spreads and people come to aid without being called. . . . the neighbors come in with baskets of food, and . . . help in the chores and the care of the children. . . .

Selfish competition for property is at a minimum. There is very little pressure to "keep up with the neighbors," but rather it is considered a disgrace to live beyond one's means. . . .

Social control is of course very strong in Creekville. . . . If a man ever becomes intoxicated, his reputation is permanently damaged. It is practically impossible to keep people from finding out about this. . . . Once a minister's son drank too heavily, and from then on no "nice" girl in Creekville would consider going out with him.

Even laziness is something of a sin in Creekville. The nicest thing that can be said about a person is that he is a good worker. . . . A cruel reflection was pronounced on the laziness of a resident who died at the unconventionally young age of sixty, "You can rust out as well as wear out."

There are no illegitimate children in the community, and such sex irregularity as does occur furnishes material for conversation for some years. Serious crimes practically never occur. . . . Suicide is also unknown in the community. . . .

The development of family and kinship relations promotes continuity of the local culture. There are many who live with relatives, and those who do not do so make a practice of visiting often if relatives live near by. If the relatives live at a distance, they make a pilgrimage at least once a year. The continuity of generations is strong, and old people usually live with their children. Harmony between old and younger generations is the rule. . . . It is never possible to send the old people to the poorhouse. It would be a disgrace that no family in Creekville would want on its conscience. . . .

Old persons are much respected and, far from being regarded as obsolete, are admired for their vigor and for their wisdom. . . . When an old person dies it is a calamity, and his wise sayings may be quoted for several years afterward. Children are characteristically at ease with old persons—one child remarked to a grandparent, "When you talk to me you are my own age."¹

Yes, life has changed radically in the United States since the modern-day inception of Zion. An 80 per cent rural population has changed in a century to an 80 per cent urban population. People don't work together and depend intimately on each other as they did fivescore years ago. They don't have to. Their routines and traditions have been disrupted by movement and contact with people of different ideals. They have been placed "on their own" in making most decisions of social relationships where social control no longer has a rule. In many phases of life, they have reached the stage of not knowing for sure what decisions to make—what will be right or wrong. This freedom has loosed the social bonds that held them together and set their pattern of life; but increased wisdom to control this freedom has not accompanied it.

The Effects

How has this freedom of movement, communication, and social control affected us and our way of life? How has it affected Zion-building?

First, it has tended to eliminate all things sacred. Traditions, habits, sayings, and beliefs which in the past were held in great respect are now challenged and doubted. Not only have concepts of religion been affected, but all phases of living beginning with the fundamental home and family have been changed. No person, thing, or idea is allowed to exist as sacred or respected until proved to the satisfaction of each individual in society. The nation no longer has a "gold standard" of morality or excellence. Hundreds of standards exist and vary from community to community. The average citizen associates daily with many people of varying standards, and gradually his concepts of life take on some aspects of his friends' viewpoints. Soon he discovers that those things he holds sacred are not viewed as such by others. He begins to doubt his own beliefs once so sacred. His life is changing. So is "his" Zion.

Second, it has overemphasized "individualism": individual interests and tastes, rights and personal freedoms. In sacred societies of the past, there has been the tendency toward communal ownership, uniformity in dress, and equality in material possessions. Today's freedom brings an opposite emphasis: no two women want to be seen in public in dresses of like design. We want houses that look different. Interior decorations vary radically. Complete changes of style in clothing, furniture, autos, and so on, come at frequent intervals. Community and home recreation and play often lose out to entertainments of a more individualistic nature: the movie, commercialized sports, and so forth. Even members of the same family go their separate ways of individualism.

In a society like Creekville, individual freedom is of minor importance. Behavior of the individual is well defined. He has no right to do "just as he pleases." Co-operative living limits the range of activity that can be allowed to each person.

Today it is not yet known just where the "happy medium" of personal freedom lies. Can a strike be allowed to paralyze and destroy a nation? How far can this freedom be allowed to extend? We do not know, but we continue to search and probe the limits of our individual rights.

Third, out of this individualism have arisen less durable satisfactions. In the most integrated and harmonious groups, the most joyous experiences appear to be social. Group approval is sought more than any other good, and condemnation is dreaded more than any other penalty. The pleasures of social life, songs, games, and conversations have the strongest and steadiest appeal, and the more individualistic physical pleasures are secondary. These latter gratifications become important primarily as persons become more and more individualistic and are therefore partially deprived of the opportunity to know and enjoy the pleasures of social activities. And the satisfaction they provide is less complete and less durable than that furnished by the group recreation. This, at least, is the inference that seems correct in view of the choices made by those who are able to engage in either type.

Today's attempt to find happiness causes many to turn to the "unreality" of movies and pulp magazines; others search for satisfactions in eating, drinking, café and night club life, or in patronizing commercialized vices.

Fourth, among the consequences of such individuation and segmentation of the population is the tendency of persons to distrust the members of groups other than their own. Among political, economic, racial, and religious groups mutual suspicions are numerous. Employers frequently accuse union leaders of attempting to take over the business, while the latter accuse the employers of trying to destroy labor unions. The more touchy Southerners accuse the Northern people of trying to destroy their traditional way of life. Extreme feminists claim that men conspire to deprive women of their rights. Catholics and Protestants (and Latter Day Saints) misrepresent the intentions of one another. The Democrats and Republicans are "sure" that the other is most dishonest and ill-fitted for the job of presiding over affairs of government.

And fifth, as a result of these stages of change due to this modern-day freedom, a feeling of great unrest pervades our country and the whole world. Here at home we see it expressed in many ways: some wander over the nation seeking more pleasant employment or climate or housing, always in vague pursuit of a more satisfactory life; others stay "put" on their jobs but seek satisfactions in trips and vacations nearly every week end. Nothing completely satisfies. The worry of sickness, war, depression, inflation, and so on, is constantly pressing down on the minds of millions. Suicide and other crimes of a sadistic nature grow in numbers. Throughout the world, internal revolution often is the result of this unrest.

The Problem

The church and its members are definitely affected by the changes which have come about through the increased freedoms of movement, communication, and social control. And our primary goal of building Zion is in danger of never becoming a reality if these changes continue to "infect" our membership.

How can Zion exist without its inhabitants having a sacred concern for standards of morals and for spiritual qualities?

How can Zion exist with individualism running rampant—without restraint of personal liberties and concern for the "group"?

How can Zion exist if its proponents have no desire for the durable satisfactions of group co-operation?

How can Zion exist with the seeds of mutual distrust within?

How can Zion exist when its people have such great unrest (as displayed by the constantly changing membership in every local congregation)?

Shall we advocate the elimination of these freedoms and go back to the "good old days"?

No, that's not the answer!

Individual freedom must be, or Zion won't be! This freedom is part of the divine plan to bring about Zion. It is part of the great awakening which began this past century—and must continue. Freedom of agency is a necessary element in developing the personalities capable of Zion living. It is especially recognized in the Christian viewpoint of religious growth. Of course, in our present state of imperfection we misuse it. But Zion-building is the process whereby we learn to control its use.

The know-how of using our newfound freedoms is the great unexplored field ahead for future work. How can we control and direct our freedoms in such a way as to achieve the goals that we desire? Freedom has its laws. It has its boundaries and limits. It is vitally tied into all relationships of man with fellow man and with his Creator. Many people would be a law unto themselves but discover, often to their sorrow, that they cannot make or control freedom's laws. These laws have been eternally the same since the existence of man, and those who would try to break them or disregard them have been crushed. Zion builders are no special favorites. They must discover how these laws work and apply them.

That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment.—D. and C. 85: 8.

The Solution

Modern-day revelation points the way to those who are zealously concerned with making Zion a reality. It says that Zion-building can be accelerated if certain steps are followed:

Assemble . . . organize . . . prepare . . . sanctify . . . purify . . . yourselves . . . teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; . . . be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, . . . things which have been; . . . which are; . . . which must shortly come to pass; . . . wars . . . perplexities of the nations; . . . a knowledge also of countries.—D. and C. 85: 20, 21.

Most of us are illiterates in laws that pertain to the kingdom of God. Our public schools give only a smattering of knowledge pertaining to personalities, morals, human relationships, and stewardships. The "blueprint for abundant living" is so complicated (or simple) that most of our untrained minds and unseeing eyes cannot comprehend even the first steps necessary to kingdom-building. Few details have been discussed or written about them. Few experiments have been attempted. Even a definition of the "kingdom" cannot be fully agreed upon except in the most general terms.

How then do we gain this knowledge and wisdom essential to Zion-building? Through "self-control."

The twentieth century birth of freedom has loosed us from much of the forced pressures to study, to think, to collect our senses. It has loosed us from much social responsibility.

But it has freed us to "voluntarily" assemble, organize, prepare, sanctify, and purify ourselves. We are free to teach one another; free to be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God. We are free to study governments, wars, the perplexities of nations, and so on. We are free to ask our Creator for insight into the meanings of the riddles of our universe—his creation.

And our continued freedom hinges on the correct use of laws we now know—and the discovery of new and higher laws of the universe.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—II Timothy 2: 15.

Abide ye in the liberty wherewith ye are made free.—D. and C. 85: 24.

MORONI TRAXLER

Be Not Afraid

By Roy A. Cheville

Funeral sermon of Moroni Traxler given in the Reorganized Church at Lamoni, Iowa, April 12, 1953.

THE SAINTS OF ALL AGES have carried an inner assurance that eventually righteousness would triumph. They have declared good news of God's sustaining help for those who would qualify for this divine assistance. This conviction has given hope and courage.

Such a saint and prophet was Isaiah. About 700 B.C., from his vantage place in Jerusalem, he looked out on a world that must have appeared to be spiritually topsy-turvy. Assyria, recognized by cruelty and plunder, was the reigning world power. The Ten Tribes had just been carried into captivity and were now lost to recognition. Even in Judah selfish officials and ritualistic priests stood in the way of spiritual reform. Yet Isaiah would not go down in hopelessness. He raised his voice with affirmative courage:

O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength, lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God.—Isaiah 40: 9.

This watchword of Isaiah has been the stay of ever so many saints—Be not afraid! Behold your God! I speak of this today because I believe it was the life slogan of Moroni Traxler, whom we honor today. He believed it. He lived by it. He witnessed of it.

AGAIN AND AGAIN Jesus called his disciples from the way of fear. His birth had been announced by a chorus of angels who opened their annunciation with the assuring words, "Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy" (Luke 2: 10). His ministry was to close with the Great Commission in which he was to charge his apostles to go into all the world with the promise of his sustaining companionship.

Between this celestial announcement and his farewell commission, Jesus was to say many a time to his disciples, "Be not afraid." One day when he came walking toward his disciples on a storm-tossed Sea of Galilee he greeted the frightened mariners with the salutation, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid" (Matthew 14: 27). When they recognized their Lord, their fears were dispelled. One day Jesus selected three of his more intimate associates and went on retreat to a high mountain. To this small company there came the enveloping spiritual presence that testified, "This is my beloved Son . . . hear ye him!" The awe-stricken disciples fell to their knees. Jesus touched them and spoke to restore their confidence, "Arise, and be not afraid!" (Matthew 17: 7) The word "arise" is significant. When we surmount our fears, we are standing, facing squarely into the future. Once again when the resurrected Jesus met some of his followers a short way from the tomb, he addressed the trembling ones, "Be not afraid, go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me" (Matthew 28: 10). Those words, "go" and "tell," ought to be emphasized. When we rise above our fears, we become doers and witnesses. We turn outwardly into something that gives us a hold on life.

JESUS SPOKE of a faith that rises above fear. Love would transform the fear of the Lord until it was no longer fear. As we survey history, we conclude that religion based on fear never reaches the highest levels. Fear of hell can never prepare us for an eternity of happiness. Bertrand Russell wrote a chapter for the book, If I Could Preach Just Once. In it he said that if he were to give a farewell address he would call on humanity to eliminate fear. If Bertrand Russell, a self-styled atheist, would make such a statement, what ought not a Christian say? Healthy religion develops hopeful outlooks. It does not breed fears, phobias, apprehensions, and complexes.

A maturing faith engenders a progressive sense of fitness to face the future.

One of the tragedies too frequently seen is that of adults in their senior years letting themselves fall into a run-down attitude toward life, with nothing left to anticipate but death and release from life.

Moroni Traxler expected and prayed that the fortunes of the church would see their best days after he had gone on. This is a true index of a noble spirit. Selfish souls are not concerned about what happens after they leave the stage of life's drama. Saints of buoyant faith see their lives as chapters in an eternal drama which will continue after they have played their parts. All this was evidenced in Moroni's contributing to this house of worship. From his earnings he set aside more than he could afford to give. Once, when he came to me with a ten-dollar contribution, I suggested that it was too much. Then I caught the glint in his eye and received the gift as a consecration. He said something like this, "The Saints will need a home whether I am here to meet in the house or not." I believe he worshiped here only once. His spirit, like those of others who believed without fear, is woven into the spiritual structure of this place.

It was my good fortune to travel to Kirtland with "Rony" a couple of years ago to the conference of high priests. He might have dwelt on the spiritual glories of a century ago when the Saints had a pentecostal experience. But no, he was happy to sense the moving power of the Spirit of God in the temple of the Lord today. This spiritual endowment sent him out fearless and unafraid about the church of tomorrow.

MORONI TRAXLER had an unusual spiritual intuition. His sensitive spirit caught rays of inspiration. From these he often glimpsed the signs of things to come. This enabled him to face life with poise and equanimity. It took him to the brink of eternity and made him expectant for it.

A year ago he called me to his home. He thought the invitation to go a little more imminent than it was. Another year was to go by. That day he was wearily, but he smiled and greeted me as he had always done. He called me "Royal Baking Powder—always rising." Sometimes he would say, "Be sure you keep your rising spiritual power." He spoke these things with seeming jest, but underneath was a spiritual conviction he wished to convey. He loved the gospel of Jesus Christ with everything in him. He wanted the good work to be carried on after he was gone. Jesus always directed his disciples who were to face life without fear to look outward and forward.

Tennyson in "Ulysses" tells of an aged warrior who had beached his boat and hung up his sword. He became bored with his retirement and idleness and at last called his men around him with these words, "Come, my friends, 'Tis not too late to seek a newer world." He would move at slower pace; he would turn to different arts. But he would still be alert to the unfolding possibilities of a tomorrow. And he would be unafraid. Each day could have a renewed confidence. It was so with "Rony."

Dr. Lillian Marten, founder of the Old Age Counselor Center in San Francisco, has concluded that much of the so-called loss of memory in our later years is due to lack of interest in the present. She insists that older people can sit in reminiscence of the past, of indifference to the present, and apprehension of tomorrow. She further affirms that senior adults can keep mental faculties alert by learning to find satisfaction in the present and by turning outwardly from themselves to "causes" of consequence. This is simply the Christian gospel in action.

A FEW WEEKS ago the college students from Indiana came to our house for a social evening. Arthur Gage of Indianapolis had sent a small sum for refreshments. We used the money to buy a book for the library to be given in his honor. And what did we buy? A small volume, The Best Is Yet To Be. The title was drawn from Robert Browning's lines in Rabbi Ben Ezra:

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be, . . .
Trust God: see all,
Nor be afraid.

In this little testimonial book, Paul Marves tells of sitting beside the hospital bed of an elderly woman who had just been informed by her doctor that she had only a few weeks to live. She chose to keep this to herself to avoid distressing others. Her minister friend inquired, "You are not afraid?" "No," she replied, "I look upon it as a great adventure. I have had a full life. Now I wait to see what is beyond. I believe in God and trust in him. I am not afraid."

This was the tone of life of our friend Moroni. We refresh our minds with the story of his eighty-six years.

MORONI TRAXLER, son of John and Esther Traxler, was born in Louisville, Ontario, January 5, 1867. There he grew to young manhood, and in 1885, at the age of eighteen, he came with his parents to the United States, locating on a farm in the Evergreen neighborhood in Missouri. He resided there with them until September 17, 1890, when he was united in marriage to Nellie Grenawalt and they established their own home on a farm in the same community.

In 1895 it was made known to Moroni that he should return to Canada, so he purchased the Canadian farm from his father and with his wife and small daughter, Myrl, went back to Louisville. He at once became active in church work and was made president of Lindsay Branch. In 1902 he was ordained to the office of elder at the Ridgetown conference in Ontario. While Moroni and his wife lived in Canada, four children were born to them: Nina, now Mrs. Ben Crouch of Bethany, Missouri; Earl, now deceased; Esther, now Mrs. Tom France of Lamoni; and Lenore, now Mrs. John Van Wert of Portland, Oregon. In 1903 he returned with his family to Lamoni; here three more children were born to them: Lee, of San Rafael, California; Ralph Moroni, now deceased; and Anabel, now Mrs. Paul Jaques of Indianapolis, Indiana.

For many years Moroni was associated with the Watrous Nursery Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and traveled for it as a landscape gardener. He was an ardent lover of flowers; he delighted in his work. After the years of depression, when the Watrous Company was dissolved, Moroni worked as salesman for the Meredith Publishing Company of Des Moines. He continued with this organization until, because of his age, he was retired from active traveling.

For the last few years he assisted at the Kelley Implement Company of Lamoni and was on active duty until the evening of November 17, 1951, when he was stricken with a heart attack, from which he never fully recovered. Since the death of his wife three years ago, Moroni has made his home with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Tom France. It was from their home he was taken to the hospital at Leon, Iowa, on Wednesday, April 8, where he passed away in the evening.

IN 1875 Moroni was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, and throughout his entire life he has been dedicated to the work of the church. He delighted to be able to preach the gospel and never failed to embrace an opportunity to explain the principles of his church; because of him many accepted the faith. He was always willing and glad to go whenever called to assist in administering to the sick and fulfilled this part of his calling until his last illness.

On August 4, 1907, he was ordained to the office of high priest. "Rony," as he was always known, has held preaching services at many branches of the church, and his friends in this and surrounding territories are legion. He never failed to see the bright side of any circumstance, no matter how dark things might appear to be, and always even when his heart was heaviest he would try to lighten the burden of others by making a joke. This endearing characteristic has been a great source of comfort to his family during his illness.

Besides the surviving four daughters and one son, he leaves to mourn his passing twelve grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

RONY," would want this memorial service to be one of cheerful expectancy and confident faith. He knew the ups and downs of fortune. Never did he permit hard times or seeming frustration of plans to submerge him. Never did he allow later years of reduced activity to make him stale or soured in the hopes of the kingdom of God. When in recent months he sensed he would not be restored to active life, he grew in anticipation of the great beyond but never with the idea of hostility to the present life.

Last summer at the Blue Water Reunion in Michigan I was to speak on Sunday morning. The building was crowded to the doors. As we sang the opening hymn a certain apprehensiveness came to me, and I wondered if I would be adequate to minister to that large expectant congregation. Then Pauline Frisby, in sure soprano voice sang as if she were speaking to me the aria from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," "Be not afraid—I am he that comforteth. Who art thou that thou shouldst be afraid of a man?" From the infinite source of supply, assurance came to me and I ministered under the Spirit of God. I know the power of this message to the Saints.

Moroni knew this assurance. He leaves us the heritage of a joyful faith, a gospel of glad tidings, and an expectancy of good things to come. The gospel meant so much that he loved to tell it. He leaves us this assuring slogan: "Be not afraid! Behold thy God! Be of good cheer!"

The "San" Chapel

By Faye Franklin

Note: Because of the continued growth of the School of Nursing at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and due to the fact that adequate facilities for chapel services are not available within the hospital building itself or the student nurses' home, it is proposed by the Sanitarium Board that a suitable chapel be erected for the purpose of worship. Because of other needs, the building of such a chapel will necessarily be postponed until such time as the board sees fit to authorize it. In the meantime there are certain organizations that have been working to raise funds which would go toward the building of this chapel. We are printing herewith an article which is in the nature of a report of the Alumnae Association of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing. We recommend that such a worthy endeavor could very well receive the support and active participation of other groups; and when it is deemed advisable, this chapel will be erected.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

By W. Wallace Smith

Why a Chapel?

More and more we are seeing and sensing the need of a chapel at the "San." We, the Nurses Alumnae, have started a fund for a chapel.

A revelation given through our prophet and leader, Joseph Smith III, was the beginning of a movement toward a place for care of the sick. The "San" opened her doors in 1909. Many of us walked the halls of the "Old San," caring for those who came there. We have witnessed many blessings to ill ones through the years.

In the beginning our chapel services were held in the nurses' dining room; after breakfast we pushed back our chairs and stood in a circle, sang a song or two, and one of our nurses offered a prayer. Occasionally we had some elder to worship with us.

I well remember the first chapel service I heard. I was a patient in the "San" before I entered the School of Nursing. The morning that I went to surgery, I awoke and heard the nurses singing. That morning they sang, "God Will Take Care of You." It comforted me and gave me courage to face the day. A hospital and its routine were strange to me, and the singing of the hymn brought peace. Each morning after that, I tried to be awake to listen to the singing by the nurses.

We have a full-time chaplain now, devoted to meeting the spiritual needs of hospital personnel and the patients. We meet for chapel services in one of the classrooms on the first floor of the hospital. The growth of the School of Nursing and the hospital has helped us to see how necessary a chapel is if we are to meet the spiritual needs of our student nurses and the patients.

A chapel would give the "San":

A place for fellowship services
A place for special services: Easter, Thanksgiving, and Christmas
A place where weddings could be solemnized.

A place to hold the capping service
A place to hold services for patients
So many times we need to slip away for a few minutes of quiet meditation. The chapel, quiet and restful, would give the needed lift to one harassed by the cares and problems of the ill. The loved ones of the patient could go to the chapel for a few minutes to commune with their God.

In the new chapel we would need a communication system that would permit the patients in each of the rooms of the hospital to hear and participate in the worship. We would need a good organ so that music could be a part of the worship service.

Fund-raising

The past two years we have been concentrating our efforts on the building of such a chapel. Last Conference Brother Howard Miller came to us suggesting a Hawaiian Luau. None of us knew what a Luau was, let alone how to prepare it, but we learned. A large tent covering seven thousand square feet was set up on the Campus grounds, tables were arranged, and six two hundred-pound pigs were roasted in pits. Pits and pigs were filled with hot lava rocks and covered with ti leaves and green corn, canvas and earth, and allowed to roast three to four hours.

Salmon, donated by a good friend, came from the Oregon coast and was cured here. Halibut came from the west coast and was dried in Kansas City. Pineapples, ti leaves, and orchids were sent from the Hawaiian Islands. Lava rock was sent from Arizona, and bananas from Louisiana. Thus food and equipment were gathered in and prepared.

We cleared $3,556.69 on this project. The Luau was the real beginning of our chapel fund.

Several memorials to loved ones have been given to the chapel fund. A little boy had an incurable disease and died at the "San." He was loved by all who attended him. The parents, not members of the church, gave a donation to the chapel fund as a memorial to him. This was the first of such contributions. Helen Weeks, a "San" graduate and Superintendent of Resthaven, died, and her sisters are adding to the Chapel Fund as a memorial to her. Her family and a friend—a nonmember—have given to this fund. This friend said, "Helen was deeply interested in a chapel, and I want to do this in memory of her."

Gifts of money have been contributed in memory of the father and mother of our church physician, Dr. C. F. Grabske.

There may be others who would like to so remember their friends or loved ones. All such memorials will be gratefully received, carefully listed, and used for the chapel at the "San."

The Mission of Jesus

MATTHEW says that Jesus now has four fishermen associated with him as he goes about all Galilee "teaching and preaching the gospel of the kingdom in their synagogues."

Jesus is engaged in his Father's business of building the kingdom by preaching the gospel. Preaching the gospel is the work of kingdom builders. It is the work of the ministry called of God today to preach the gospel—the gospel of Jesus! There is no other gospel to preach. Do we dare to learn the "preaching message" of Jesus and preach it? We must! Shall we preach a creed or preach Jesus? The answer is obvious.

Matthew 4:22 says Jesus preached in all Galilee in the synagogues and healed all manner of sickness. Healing the sick is God's business. He permits men to study the laws that make for healing. Man, by knowledge and skill, joins God in healing broken bodies. God also ordained that through his ministry the sick shall be healed.

Jesus went forth to build the kingdom by preaching and healing the sick. Healing the sick is indeed an evidence of God's interest in the welfare of mankind.

Question Time

Question:

Of what priesthood will the firstborn of the sons of Aaron—who hold the right of presidency over the Aaronic priesthood—be (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2)?

Missouri

M. S. D.

Answer:

The priesthood belonging to the sons or descendants of Aaron is that of the office of bishop in the Aaronic order, the line of the firstborn sons holding the right of presidency over that order, or the office of presiding bishop, others than the firstborn serving as bishops in general.

This office was established in Israel by the choosing of Aaron and his sons to officiate therein, with the covenant that "their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations," Aaron occupying the presiding office, and his sons under him, the eldest or firstborn succeeding from generation to generation (see Exodus 40: 13-15; Numbers 20: 25).

The Lord established the office of bishop in this church, and in harmony with the covenant or pledge made to Aaron and his seed, laid down the law that those called to the office of bishop must be of the lineage of Aaron. However, the law further provides that "the presidency of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, have a right to officiate in all the offices of the church," and may appoint high priests of the Melchisedec order to officiate in the office of bishop when no legal descendants of Aaron can be found (see Doctrine and Covenants 104: 4; 68: 2). Our present bishops are all of the Melchisedec priesthood.

It is not humanly known who are descendants of Aaron, though the Lord has provided that such may in his own time be named by revelation through the head of the church, but up to this time the office has been under the charge of the higher priesthood. No doubt when the more perfect Zion organization is developed the sons of Aaron will be restored to their rightful place again.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

If the Melchisedec priesthood was returned with Alma, why did Christ require rebaptism of Nephi and all those with him at the time of His appearance here (III Nephi 9: 12, 13)?

Minnesota

Mrs. D. D. S.

Answer:

The brevity of the Book of Mormon leaves us with no direct evidence on this difficult point, but a careful and extended study of the record from Alma down to Christ does bring to light a very probable explanation.

From Alma's time the building up and perpetuation of the church was a continual struggle against the forces of evil which arose within and without. During that period the nation was in decline, and the church suffered many perversions and deflections, frequently reaching a very low stage. Notwithstanding the people had the gospel and the higher priesthood, the law of Moses was still in force with its restrictions. Political troubles with rebellions against both the government and the church, leading to wars and confusion, were frequent; in the end the subversive secret organization of "Gadianton Robbers," somewhat comparable to Communism of today, undermined society to the ultimate breaking up of the government (Helaman 2: 166; III Nephi 4: 37).

Three years before Christ appeared the church was destroyed save some traces among the Lamanites, notwithstanding the faithful labors of Nephi and others to maintain it (III Nephi 3: 15). The whole nation had become corrupted involving the church; it was ripe for destruction, which came at the crucifixion of Christ when by hurricane, earthquake, lightning, volcanic eruptions, and tidal waves, sixteen of the leading cities were utterly destroyed. Only the scattered remnants—probably in the rural parts—were left; Nephi and some others of the faithful were among the survivors.

It was to this broken remnant that Christ appeared after his resurrection, giving to them the gospel in its purity and telling them the law of Moses was done away. He introduced baptism, having called twelve men to his ministry and giving them authority to baptize and build up his church. In doing this he made an entirely new beginning. What was left of the old could be merged into the new, leaving out the errors and perversities with which the church had long been plagued. It was like discarding an old garment for a new one. Christ's procedure in Palestine was much the same.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

If I join the Reorganized Church, will I lose my friends?

Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

It is possible that you will lose your friends if you join the church of Jesus Christ. Which is of the most value to you, the keeping of friends or the missing of eternal life in this world as well as in the world to come? Jesus said, "He that will not leave father, mother, brother, or friends is not worthy of me, and cannot be my disciple."

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

What was the power to "seal" mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2 and 68: 1?

Answer:

This term refers to the authority given God's messengers to confirm their message upon those to whom it was delivered. Those who received it were to receive eternal life, while those who rejected it were condemned. Work done in the name of the Lord was the work of God, and its consequences were sealed upon the people by those who ministered, some of it being inspired prophetically and therefore being as if God himself had spoken to them directly. Thus was power given his disciples to act in his name, if done according to his instructions.

THE SCRIPTURES make it plain that man was in the beginning with God. Genesis 2: 5, 6, 9, Inspired Version, says:

For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. . . . And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men and not yet a man to till the ground, for in heaven created I them, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air. . . . Nevertheless, all things were before created, but spiritually were they created and made, according to my word.

Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4b-6 says: "Ye were also in the beginning with the Father; that which is Spirit, even the Spirit of truth. . . . Man was also in the beginning with God. . . . Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning."

Because of these statements, it is presumed by some people that each and every individual that ever was, or ever will be, was individually created in heaven before the world was, and that each one had to wait his turn to come to the earth to receive a body of flesh. It is further believed that sometime after conception and before birth the spirit individual must come to earth and enter a baby body of flesh.

It is further advanced that some of these spirits, being in the spirit world and having their agency, took sides in the war in heaven, some fighting on the side of God, others on the side of Satan, and still others remaining neutral. As a result of the defeat of Satan and his forces, those who fought with him were cast out of heaven and can never have bodies, while those who were neutral did not lose their bodies, but must now have a colored body. It has also been advocated that some who are born with a crippled body were born so because in the spirit world they almost decided to fight on the side of Satan, but at the last moment changed their minds. Those who fought for God are the humans who have come, or who will come to the earth, and these had, have, or will have bodies—white ones.

If, to some degree, our condition here on earth is or was determined by the decisions we made in the spirit world, then it follows that since there were a certain number of spirits created, the time will come when the last spirit of man shall have come into the world, and then generation will stop.

THIS REASONING raises some very perplexing questions. For instance, if a certain number of spirits are to be born before generation stops and this part of the purposes of God is fulfilled, will God send a certain number of spirits to certain parents? If so, then they must have a certain number of offspring; and if this is correct, then God has taken from parents their agency, which thing he will not do. On the other hand, since man has his agency, God must await the pleasure of humanity in order to get the supply of spirits in heaven used up. And when the time comes that there are only two or three spirits left in the spirit realm to be born, will there be only two or three women left on the earth to become mothers, or will the rest of the women suddenly become sterile?

Furthermore, if God must send little spirits to earth every time mothers become pregnant, then God becomes subject to the will and passions of human beings, for he is forced, even by the passion of the wicked, to be a partner in bringing to birth also the diseased and the illegitimate, by sending little innocent spirits into diseased and illegitimate bodies. To this degree men dictate to God, and he must obey—that is, if God sends spirits to unborn babies that spirits might have bodies. Since God gave man power to produce of his kind and also gave man his agency, then man can determine if he will have children, when he will have them, and how many he will have. Thus God must stand by and await the pleasure and passion of man, and at a certain time, determined by man, God must send a spirit into whosoever becomes pregnant.

Is God the servant of the passions of man? If we were all created individually before the world was, and if the only way we can have bodies is to be sent to pregnant mothers, then God must so serve man—and not only man but every animal, bird, fish, and bug, for these too are "living souls" and were spiritually created before the world was. Conception, in the main, is the same in all. To believe such would make us guilty of being among those who had "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things" (Romans 1: 23). There must be some other explanation of the creation.

WHEN GOD SAID he "created" all things, did he mean that he actually formed the separate and individual spirit of each and every individual and creature? Or did he mean that he planned or thought out a plan for the existence of men and animals, birds and trees? The Gospel Plan was a creation of God, too, before the world was, and Christ was the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world"; yet the Plan was only "thought out." Christ was not actually killed before the world was. The Plan of repentance, baptism, tithing, and stewardships was only a "planned creation" by thought; it was not actually accomplished. Is it not quite possible that the word "create" as used in Genesis might mean a creation in and of the mind of God, a plan conceived by the mental processes of Divinity?

This would agree with one of the definitions of "create" as given by Webster: "To produce as a work of thought or imagination." This would also be in harmony with the story of creation as given in Genesis, for after the "thought creation" was finished, there was "not yet a man to till the ground, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air." Yet God had given instructions to whale and winged fowl, which would be impossible to do except in thought, as there was no flesh upon the earth, nor in the water, nor in the air. Therefore, God had "thought out" these instructions, but he began to form these things later.

This idea of creation is also quite in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4, 5. "Ye were also in the beginning with the Father, that which is spirit, even the Spirit of truth. . . ." Man is of the substance called "spirit." Spirit is eternal, and is not created or made. It always existed. Spirit is of God. The Spirit was "breathed" out of God, so it was with God in the beginning, and it was "breathed" into the clay form of Adam, and here man began, and here he became a "living soul," the "first flesh upon the earth, and first man also." Here is man's beginning. He did not exist before.

WHY LOOK FOR man's beginning any place else, when God says that here on the earth is where man began? Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5 agrees: "Man was also in the beginning with God." The next line or two explains how: "Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be." Man, being of the spirit of truth, or intelligence, always existed in substance but not in individual form. This substance, intelligence or light of truth, was with God always. It cannot be created or made.

Webster's definition of "create," "to produce as a work of thought," is supported by Joseph Smith, the Martyr, as found in Lectures on Faith. In speaking of Christ he says, "possessing the same mind with the Father, which mind is the Holy Spirit . . . being filled with the fullness of the mind of the Father; or in other words, the spirit." Here mind and spirit are used interchangeably. A spiritual creation is a mind creation—a "thought out" plan.

That is what Genesis says, "but spiritually were they created and made." When God "breathed" into Adam the substance which always existed, Adam became. He took life there and was a "living soul." There was nothing said about God going to the spirit world and getting a little baby spirit to put into the clay body of Adam.

Another reason why man was also in the beginning with God is that man is also made of element or material. Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5 says, "the elements are eternal." Therefore, like the spirit, it "was not created or made, neither indeed can be." The material from which man was made always existed. It was in the beginning with God but not in the form of man. Later God "formed" some of this material and then from that time forward what God had planned or thought out, or mind created, or produced as a work of thought, actually existed in individual form.

There are two processes necessary before man or God can make anything. There is first the planning—the mental, or spiritual. One must first "think" it through, which is purely a spiritual process. Then, after the plan is made, he turns to the second process, the forming of the element or material into the form previously created mentally.

This is exactly what God did. He did not create spirits in the sense that he actually made individual beings in the spirit world, for intelligence or the light of truth "was not created or made, neither indeed can be." And since "elements are eternal" God did not need to make them either; he only thought out the plan for bringing element and spirit together. Then much later God formed man and breathed the spirit of himself into the element, making man a living soul, the "first man also."

Why should anyone try to go back farther than this and put a half-man up in the spirit world? Later God formed Eve from a part of the life-giving body of Adam. Nothing was said here about God getting a little girl spirit from the spirit world to put into Eve. God had already "breathed" the breath of power of life into Adam, and also the power to continue that life. He then told Adam and Eve to multiply and to produce of their kind.

OF WHAT KIND is man? Is he only flesh? No, he is spirit and body. Therefore, he has the power from his spirit and body to produce both spirit and body. There is no need for God to stand by waiting for females to become pregnant that he might send down a spirit. Neither is God a partner to unholy birth nor to unwise birth. When God made man he gave him his agency along with the power to produce of his kind. He is holding man accountable for the way he uses those powers. Nor does God send parents their children. He made them capable of producing their own children. Therefore, it is for parents to decide if they will have children, and when, and how many. There is no loss of agency this way of either man or God.

Doctrine and Covenants 90:6 says, "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning." The beginning of individual spirits is at conception, and they are innocent in the "infant state." But as they grow up, because of the Fall, men become sinful. Yet "God having redeemed man from the Fall" (through Christ and the gospel) men become again in their infant state, innocent before God. God is speaking here of man's "infant" state, not his pre-existent state, for there was none.

It is a well-established fact that at conception there is life. The life-giving forces of male and female coming together form another life, and where life is there is spirit. There can be no life without spirit; "The body without the spirit is dead" (James 2: 25, Inspired Version). Therefore, where there is a live body there is spirit. Otherwise that which is conceived in a mother is only dead flesh for a period of time. This is contrary to known facts, for the newly conceived child, even though microscopic in size, is alive and growing, therefore it possesses a spirit. There is no need for God to send another spirit, for the unborn child has received one with the life that came from its parents. When God commanded Adam and Eve to multiply, he started the procreation processes which continue to this day. All agree that the millions of tons of human flesh that have lived all came from the microscopic seed of Adam and Eve. Why not believe also that the life which was breathed into Adam, which life was spirit, was also passed on to succeeding generations, especially since God so commanded, the Bible so states, and science so proves?

MAN'S BEGINNING was on earth. God said so, except as he was conceived in the mind of God. Then, after the earth had been formed, and after there had been a war in heaven, and after the Devil and his angels had been cast out of heaven, God said to his Only Begotten Son, "Let us make man." God did not say this to Satan, for he had been cast out before God made man. Therefore neither Adam nor any other man was in heaven before the war in heaven. He could not have had any part in it, since he was not yet made and did not exist. He did not make any choices in regard to that war. Man could not have had a white body, nor a dark body, nor a crippled body, neither was his standing before God determined before the war in heaven nor his priesthood nor his membership in the church of God, for man did not exist before that war. That war was fought over man who had not been made yet. After that time God said, "Let us make man." Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10 says as much: "Adam being tempted of the Devil, for, behold, the Devil was before Adam . . ."

The Devil had to come to earth to tempt Adam, because he was cast out of heaven before Adam even existed.

Neither is Adam "Michael the Archangel." Doctrine and Covenants 104: 28 tells of a gathering of great men, among whom was Adam, and these men rose up and "called him Michael, the Prince, the Archangel," and of his position among men. But God, being present, did not call Adam "Michael." He called him a prince, saying, "a multitude of nations shall come of thee." In other words, there was in Adam both flesh and spirit from which would come a "multitude of nations" of flesh and spirit. Adam was called "Michael" as these men wished to honor him since he stood on the earth in a position similar to Michael in heaven.

In Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 Adam is again so honored, but Adam and not Michael the Archangel is referred to, for God says, "the father of all, the prince of all," as he also said to Adam in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 28. However, Doctrine and Covenants 85: 33, 35 settles the fact that Adam is not Michael the Archangel when it says that Michael is the seventh angel. Adam never was an angel, for Psalm 8: 5 says that man "is a little lower than the angels."

The Bible speaks of three groups or levels of beings. First, there are God, Christ, and Lucifer, the son of the morning, who, as far as we know, always existed. Next, there are the angels or spirits who, as far as any record shows,

Mothers on the Firing Line

By Enna Nielsen James

IT IS BOTH A PLEASURE and an honor to address you, although I feel very inadequate to speak on the subject at issue. Some forty years ago I was sure I knew all the answers. But there is something mysterious about this business of motherhood. It seems that the more I learn about it the more I realize how little I know. So today—four children, eight grandchildren, and one great-grandchild later—I humbly confess I know little for certain about what does or does not constitute a good mother.

Just the same I haven't lived through two generations and started on a third without picking up a thought or two which might be worth passing along. First and foremost I have learned that each generation produces its own type of mother—the kind best suited to fill the needs of that particular hour. The daintily shod, smartly groomed mother of today would be poorly fitted to fill the coarse boots of the pioneer mother who crossed the plains in a covered wagon with her man or walked beside him those thousands of miles helping to push a handcart containing all the family's worldly possessions. On the other hand, that same rugged pioneer woman would doubtless have been utterly confounded had she suddenly been thrown into the midst of the swift-moving life which her modern sister takes in stride. Motherhood is not a static station but an ever-changing one—one of which it is impossible to say with certainty that "this is thus and that is so."

For example: there was a time—not so long ago either—when the Whistler type of mother was in style. You know what I mean—the old gray-haired mother with wrinkled brow seated in her rocking chair, a shawl about her shoulders and her work-gnarled hands folded patiently in her lap. This was the symbol of motherhood which was lauded in song, poetry, and picture, and about which sentiment was poured forth on Mother's Day. With all due respect and admiration for Whistler's magnificent painting, that brand of mother is out today.

THE SYMBOL OF MOTHERHOOD at this hour in history stands shoulders squared for action on the firing line of a new era of time—and not even gray hairs excuse her from active duty. The day of sentimentality for motherhood has gone with the winds of time and change; the hour of stern reality is here.

We hear it in the call of women for duty in service to their country; we see it in woman's activity at the polling booth; in jobs political, industrial, and social; we even see it in their competition with men in games of sport. Above all, we see evidence of the changing times in the actions of our youngsters and hear it in the free and frank manner in which they address their elders. Often we of the passing age charge the younger generation with being impolite, blasé, smart alecky; granted that when carried too far their behavior becomes exactly that. But by and large it is evidence of a new outlook on the part of youth—a fearless calling of a spade a spade—a broader, more clear-sighted acceptance of their elders on a level with their own thinking.

Where "mother" a few years back was someone to be revered and obeyed without question, she is now someone whose judgment is challenged without regard for her years or station—in the same way that the judgment of a playmate or companion might be challenged. While to those of us who so vividly recall the different days, this crisp, often crusty frankness is many times hard to take—or even to listen to, for that matter—on the whole I have come to regard it as healthy for the mother as well as the child. For why should I expect my children to put me on a pedestal simply because, through no choice of theirs, I happened to bring them into the world? It is nature's plan for the female to bear the young—be that female beast or human. And because I was born female and follow nature's plan, this does not give me special dispensation to be loved, respected, or admired by my offspring unless as a human being I measure up worthy of love, respect, and admiration. So here is a challenge to the modern mother. Rather than having her feelings hurt by her child's frank evaluation of her, she had better do her best to measure up, or else, if she doesn't, she is apt to have her rating announced straight from the shoulders of this amazing, new-era offspring of hers.

THERE IS NO DENYING the fact that the young mother of today faces much broader problems than we of forty years ago faced. When we were children at school and studied about people in lands far across the sea, we did so in the aggregate. That is, Swedish people were people who lived in a country called Sweden. Irish people lived in a country called Ireland. That was all there was to it—except for our being able to point out these countries on the map or globe. (I use these two countries merely as examples, the same was true of all nations.)

Today Sweden is no longer looked on in mass population but as a land of individuals like ourselves. The same with Ireland. There's a difference there. A tremendous difference. It was easy for America as a nation to live at peace with Sweden and Ireland as nations. It is something else again for Johnny and Susie here in Omaha to live peaceably with Hans and Anna in Stockholm—with Mike and Kathleen in Belfast.

Fifty years ago when there was a catastrophe in Ireland—a famine or a flood perhaps—we would shrug our shoulders and say, "Too bad what happened in Ireland, isn't it?" Maybe we'd go as far as to say a little prayer or two, but, after all, Ireland was just a foreign country and it was so far away its troubles didn't mean too much to us. Today with the world puckered so closely together, we see an altogether different picture. Given the same conditions we would immediately send food, clothing, medicines, and perhaps doctors and nurses. And they wouldn't be sent to Ireland as a nation—but to Mr. and Mrs. Murphy and their children, John and Mary; to Mr. and Mrs. Gillagon and the five little Gillagons. Life the world over has resolved itself into the personal equation; it has become individualized, and what affects the people of Europe and Asia affects us here in America and vice versa.

It boils down to this then. Not only must the modern mother teach her child to understand the boy and girl next door and in the next block, but she must make him aware of the boys and girls in China, in India, in Alaska, in South America. It is no longer enough to take a bowl of soup to Nellie next door because she is sick with a cold. There are sick Nellites the world over who need bowls of soup. It is the same with fuel, clothing, books, and everything that goes into the making of intelligent, worth-while living. So in order that her child may become a fully rounded individual, able to take his place in this socially and economically unified world, the young mother must be imbued with world-wide vision; she must be filled with an all-inclusive empathy. Only by such an extension of understanding can she point her children toward a free and peaceful world tomorrow.

SO THE MOTHER of today stands on a new frontier—a terrifyingly portentous frontier. She is every bit as much a pioneer as was her great-grandmother who crossed the plains in a covered wagon. In fact, her frontier is of far greater proportions, for it reaches not merely to the Pacific coast but to the far corners of the earth—into the home and heart of every race and nation. It means not the mere settlement of a new country but possibly the very survival of civilization.

In the narrower sphere of the home, the mother's job is no less involved and thought demanding. She must be the greater spoke in the parental wheel in rearing sons and daughters, not simply to become worthy men and women but to become worthy husbands and wives, responsible fathers and mothers. This, of course, has always been the case, at least among civilized people. But in recent years we have become vividly conscious of the tie-up between child and adult, and with realization comes responsibility.

Another prime obligation is to teach children to stand on their own feet, to make their own decisions, to assume responsibility, and to face life squarely and unafraid. That is a large order and not always a comfortable one to fill, especially for the mother. Her natural tendency is to shield her offspring from hardship and trouble or even from unpleasantness. To stand by watching them struggle without shouldering that struggle herself goes very much against the grain of motherhood. Reaching a helping hand isn't bad if kept within bounds, if it doesn't lead to a tendency to do the child's thinking for him and at times actually to glory in the child's dependence. I once heard a mother gloat over the fact that her teen-age son was helpless when on his own—that he needed her shoulder to lean on. Rather than gloat over such a tendency that mother should have felt alarmed; she should have examined herself to find the cause of her son's dependency and set about rectifying errors which were evidently being made in his rearing.

Examinations for the armed forces, especially in the last war, found an amazingly large number of "mamma boys" on the draft list. These draftees were found to crack up more easily when put to the test than those who had been taught to be independent. Divorce courts, too, list pampering as a potent factor in marital disagreements. So, while loving care and solicitude are as necessary as sunlight in the bringing up of children, when given in too big doses they can work harm just as overdoses of sunshine can cause dangerous sunburn.

It appears therefore that from the start apron strings had better be long and that they had best be cut as soon as possible, and that even at the expense of the child's getting his fingers burned once in a while. Better that he should burn his fingers a little in small fires when young while healing is easy than for him to be consumed by unquenchable fires later on.

A GREAT DEAL of stress is being placed these modern days on the matter of creating a feeling of insecurity in a child by doing this or not doing that—that an inferiority complex is developed by denying a child that which is possessed by a playmate. Granted that there is some basis for truth in such assertions, I can't help feeling that too great emphasis is being placed on this particular phase of child rearing.

Take my own case, for example—if you will pardon my being personal. My parents came from Denmark to America when I was very young—my father with all of six big shining silver dollars in his pocket! During the years of my upbringing, father and mother went through the usual painful ordeal of foreigners getting oriented, plus the struggle for bread and butter in a strange land with strange ways and a strange language. By modern security rules my personality should have been completely squashed because my pinafores were made of calico while the

Conspicuously Christian

By Josephine Montgomery

How many customers would you lose if you keep Harry on?

FOR A PEOPLE supposed to be peculiar, many Latter Day Saints are awfully ordinary. Perhaps it bothers me most because I feel it happening to me. When that thought struck me the other day I hurried to get our dictionary to look up the meaning of "peculiar." In what way should the word be applied to Latter Day Saints in general, and to me in particular? Here is what I found: "Peculiar—Belonging to an individual; privately owned; not common. Characteristic of one only, as a person, place, class, race, or nation; distinctive. Different from the normal or usual; singular, hence, special; particular."

Out of all that, I like best the descriptive word "distinctive." Then I asked myself, "Distinctive in what way?" The thought immediately came back, "Latter Day Saints should be distinctive (peculiar) because they are conspicuously Christlike." Perhaps it was whimsy, but from that a sort of slogan formed. "The peculiarity of Latter Day Saints: conspicuous Christianity above and beyond the call of doctrine."

My train of thought might have stopped there if it had not been for a magazine article telling of some people who really practice conspicuous Christianity in a way that would shame many of our members—myself included. These people call themselves the "Christophers," and are described as one of the most spectacular, unusual, and pertinent organizations in the world. There are no chapters, no committees, no meetings, no dues, and no buttons. Anyone can be a Christopher, and it is up to each individual to decide for himself what he will do.

THE CHRISTOPHER MOVEMENT was founded seven years ago by a Roman Catholic priest, Father James Keller. Before some of our not-so-peculiar Saints snort, "Oh, a Catholic society!" let me assure them that not all Catholics are Christophers any more than all Latter Day Saints are peculiar for their conspicuous Christianity. And not all Christophers are Catholics. Many members of Protestant churches consider themselves members of this movement—there may even be a Latter Day Saint or two among them.

The essence of the Christopher movement is individual action—the practice of conspicuously Christlike activity. Every great accomplishment the world has ever known was begun by one man, from the birth of Christianity itself to the start of the industrial revolution. To many people of Christ's day he was just "that crazy carpenter who tramps up and down the country talking about love and brotherhood and all that silly sentimentality." To his neighbors, James Watt was a good-for-nothing who sat and stared like a fool at his mother's tea kettle. Yet each of these men in his own way started a revolution that affected most of mankind.

In his book, You Can Change the World, Father Keller outlines his philosophy of the worth of individual action. In effect he says this: "It's your world. If you don't like it, go out and change it. Declare war on godlessness wherever and in whatever form you find it. Don't just think about how awful things are. Do something. If you want to burn off a fog, start lighting fires. If you are afraid of what Communism is doing to the world, go out and work as hard as the Communists are working. If you are scared chartreuse at the thought of an atomic war, start preventing such a war by actively promoting tolerance, love, and understanding among all people, races, and classes." The basic reason behind the Christopher movement is to get people to act instead of merely talk. A Chinese proverb sums it up neatly: "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness."

SOME INTELLECTUALS, both in and out of Father Keller's own church, scoff at his work because they say it's not original, his slogans are trite, the man himself is not a profound thinker. Father Keller's friends admit the charges are true. But, they add, when he borrows ideas he makes them work better than the originators, his slogans fire the average man to action, and he is a profound doer. The key word in the whole movement is "action." And in their criticism, the intellectuals point up their own weakness. They merely curse the darkness while Father Keller and his Christophers are busy lighting candles.

The kind of action Christophers take is up to each individual. There are no exact rules to cover every situation. How could there be? For example take the case of a housewife who found that the operator of her neighborhood gas station was going to fire a Negro attendant for no reason but the fact that some customers had complained about his color. What should she do? There was no rule to help her decide. There was only the thought, This is an injustice. Do something about it. The woman went to the owner and asked, "How many customers would you lose if you keep Harry on?"

"About twenty."

"All right. Don't fire him. I'll get you twenty new customers to take the place of the ones you lose."

She told the story to her friends and neighbors. They rallied behind her, and in a few days she brought the owner of the gas station more new customers than he lost by keeping the Negro boy on as attendant.

Or take the experience of the three girls in a midwestern city. They went to a roller-skating rink, but when they tried to buy tickets, the cashier said, "Nothing doing. You two white girls can go in, but not the nigger. Our other customers wouldn't like having a nigger skating with them."

The girls were Christophers, dedicated to action, willing to change the world if they didn't like it—and they didn't like this. The two white girls bought tickets and went in while their friend waited outside. Half an hour later they came out and told the cashier, "We asked all the people in there if they'd mind if our friend came in, and they said they'd be glad to have her."

Perhaps you're not impressed. Maybe you think neither of these cases is unusual or that the people involved did any more than common justice and a Christian spirit would demand. You're right, of course. But the point is this, Would you have thought of offering to recruit new customers so that the Negro boy could keep his job? Would you have cared enough to bestir yourself to action? Would you have cared enough for your Negro friend to go into a crowded roller rink and ask everyone there if she could come in? Or would you have just sniffed to the cashier, "If that's the way you feel about it we don't want to skate on your old rink"? If you answer honestly, you can classify yourself

Frank Church

Chosen as Student Soloist

FRANK CHURCH, seventeen-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. Charles F. Church, Jr., Independence, Missouri, was chosen cello soloist by the Independence Symphony Orchestra for its children's concert given February 8. The auditions were held last December and were sponsored by the Community Music Association of Independence. The judges announced that Frank was selected because of the fine tone and control he was able to exercise over his instrument. They also stated that his technical ability was such that he would be able to demand the respect of the elementary students. Frank is a student of Norman Hollander, principal cellist with the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra.

Last fall, after auditions, he was selected principal cellist of the Missouri State High School Orchestra which played for the Annual State Teachers Convention in Kansas City. For the last two years, he has won a rating of I (superior) at the Missouri State Music Contest at the University of Missouri, and last year he was one of four high school students selected by auditions to present the annual Mu Phi Epsilon "Young Artists Recital" at the University of Kansas. At present he is playing second chair cello after three years as a member of the Independence Symphony Orchestra.

Wherever Frank goes, because of his ability as a leader, he is called upon for service. He was president of the high school orchestra, president of the high school Spanish Club, captain and staff member of the ROTC. He is a past president of the Future Teachers of America and was elected to membership in the National Honor Society at William Chrisman High School.

During the past three years he has played cello solos at various churches in Independence. He has been active for several years in the Zion's League, both at Liberty Street and West College, and is a past president of the West College Zion's League. He has also been a member of the Liberty Street choir for two years.

Following the example of both his older brothers, Barton and Charles, Frank has been intensely interested in Scouting. He has earned the God and Country Award as well as becoming an Eagle Scout.

He has attended youth camp at Lake Doniphan for two years and is quite interested in swimming, hiking, fishing, and "fly-tying."

Frank was graduated from William Chrisman this spring and plans to attend Graceland the next two years to continue his training in music. On the night of his graduation he was awarded a one hundred dollar scholarship by the Independence Music Club.

New Horizons

Evangelist John W. Worth of Highams Park, London, England, visited America to attend the 1946 General Conference. He is the father of Seventy Thomas E. Worth. His other son, Albert, and daughters, Violet and Rose, are active in Enfield Branch.

Octogenarian Honored

Patriarch John W. Worth was honored by the Enfield (England) Branch on Sunday May 10, the occasion of his eightieth birthday. At the evening service Pastor J. F. Schofield paid a warm tribute to the patriarch's ministry when he read from Doctrine and Covenants 125: 3 the duties pertaining to that office and stated that Brother Worth had fulfilled these. He observed that there had been no question of retirement with advancing years, but rather the richness of Brother Worth's ministry had increased. This was evidenced by the fact that at Whitsun he planned to visit Hannover, Germany, for a priesthood institute there.

On behalf of the branch he was presented a leather wallet. In accepting the gift he said that he felt it was not what he had done, but what God had been able to do through him, that was being honored. He felt that he had done no more than his duty.

A family party was held the previous day at which twenty-one members were present, including eight children and seven grandchildren. Brother Worth received over 170 greetings.

He was baptized in March, 1897, at London, ordained a priest in 1899, an elder in July, 1900, and a patriarch in December, 1940.

Seattle District Promotes "Ways of Teaching"

A marvelous little leadership training course with the above title is now being promoted by the Department of Religious Education in its church-wide program for improving church school teaching. Every teacher is urged to complete this study before the new church school year beginning this fall. The study text, Ways of Teaching by Karen Andersen, is available at the Herald House for 90c.

All teachers and parents everywhere will find practical suggestions for solving such problems as:

1. What are some of the best ways to hold pupil interest? (page 25)
2. How can the teacher control a group of youngsters at a picnic, party, excursion, or assembly? (page 67)
3. How can we help a child overcome the habit of kicking, pinching, etc.? (page 75)
4. How does the successful teacher prepare for the class session? (page 77)
5. What can a teacher do to help the shy, unlovely, or frequently absent child? (page 52)
6. What shall be used during the class period: stories, songs, pictures, questions and answers, choral readings, lectures, dramas? (page 82)

other little girls wore lawn or dimity or dotted Swiss. I should have crawled into a shell of futility through a feeling of degrading poverty because we so often had only bread and milk for supper while the little boy next door boasted of roast beef and apple pie, or because his sister had a store-bought doll while mine was the best my mother could do with rags.

However, to my knowledge, neither of these calamities happened. In fact I do not recall ever feeling conscious of poverty. I lay this not to my own immunity to the situation but to the way my parents handled it; that we were in any way doing without or lacking in material things was never brought to our attention.

Always there was manifest a spirit of thankfulness for blessings received. Our home, simple and poor though it was, meant sanctuary to myself and my two brothers. And priest and priestess of that sanctuary were Father and Mother. Where they presided all was well and no harm could come. This, to my notion, is the important factor in this insecurity consciousness we hear so much about today, the attitude of the parents, especially the mothers, to this gadget-filled, advertisement-mad era in which we live. Wanting unnecessary things causes much of this feeling of insecurity.

But even with all the worry and responsibility and work there is no substitute for the privilege of being a mother. And, to my way of thinking, the greatest reward for any sacrifice made throughout the years is for the mother to someday meet her child as adult to adult without the child-mother relationship standing as an unscalable wall between; to see her children as distinct, self-thinking individuals, not appendages of herself.

And now in closing, a toast to mothers on the firing line—be they blonde, brunette, or redhead—be they old or young or in between. May heaven bless them all and crown their efforts with success!

Pre-existence—But How?

also always existed, but who are less in power than God and Christ. One third of these rebelled against God and became the servants of Satan. Then there is man. Psalm 8: 5 says, "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." So man never was an angel but was made a little lower than the angels.

Hebrews 2: 16 in speaking of Christ agrees with this also when it says, "For verily, he took not on him the likeness of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." Christ stepped from his high estate with God, passed down through the angel level, and took upon himself the third level, that of Abraham and all men.

THERE ARE A FEW Scriptures that are somewhat confusing, but a careful reading will either make the meaning clear or reveal the inconsistency of the translation. One is Genesis 5: 9, 10. Here God is speaking to Cain about Satan, but from the reading one might not get this idea at first, for it says, "and thou shalt rule over him, for from this time forth thou shalt be the father of his lies. Thou shalt be called Perdition, for thou wast also before the world." Surely God would not say that Cain shall "rule" over Satan, nor "from this time forth . . . be the father of his lies." Cain soon died, so he could not "from this time forth" be the father of the Devil's lies. Neither is Cain "Perdition." Genesis 3: 5 tells us who is the "father of lies." It says, "Even the devil, the father of all lies." Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3 says that the Devil "was called Perdition." We know that neither Cain nor any other man can rule over Satan. But we also know that Satan did rule over Cain, for God said to Cain, Genesis 5: 9, "Satan desireth to have thee, and except thou shalt hearken unto my commandments, I will deliver thee up, and it shall be unto thee according to his desire."

Another such error is in Proverbs 8. Solomon appears to be speaking of himself, when, in fact, in part he is speaking of Christ, especially in verses 20-35, Inspired Version: "I lead in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment. That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance; . . . I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. . . . For whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord." This could not possibly be true of wicked Solomon. But it is true of the Christ, for those who find Christ find life.

Some are confused with the statement of Alma in the Book of Mormon (Alma 9: 63-73), but a careful reading will reveal that not one word is said about pre-existence. Of some men who had received priesthood, it is said that they were "called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God on account of their exceeding faith and good works." Of course God knows all things, even to the end of time, but this is vastly different from men being in the spirit world. It is the "holy calling" which was prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts. Alma 9: 47-49 makes it plain that man's first knowledge of the Plan of Salvation was here on earth, not up in the spirit world. "He [God] saw that it was expedient that men should know concerning the things whereof he had appointed unto them; therefore, he sent angels to converse with them, who caused men to behold his glory. And they began from that time forth to call on his name." Men had to learn of God here. They did not know of it over there.

YES, MAN WAS in the beginning with God, because he is of God, and came from God. Man was breathed out of God into Adam, "which is many," and Adam passed that spirit and life on to "many," even down to our day and generation. As man dies, that same spirit which he receives from Adam, and thus through the generations of his parents, will go back to God who gave it. Since spirit and element are eternal, and "was not created or made," then all things were also in the beginning with God, but not anything in the form it now is.

Dr. Strong, in his Systematic Theology, discussed quite at length the various opinions and theories of the origin of the soul and pre-existence as advocated by such men as Plato, Origen, Aristotle, and then by more modern men such as Kant, Julius Müller, and Edward Beecher. In the light of all this, Dr. Strong's summary and conclusions in regard to pre-existence are as follows: "It is not only wholly without support from Scripture, but it directly contradicts the Mosaic account of man's creation in the image of God, and Paul's description of all evil and death in the human race as a result of Adam's sin." And again he says that pre-existence "regards the earth father as begetting only the body of his child—certainly not the father of the child's highest part. This makes the beast to possess nobler power of propagation than man, for the beast multiplies himself after his own image. And finally it seems best to accord with Scripture which represents God as creating the species in Adam and as increasing and perpetuating it through secondary agencies. Only once is breathed into man's nostril the breath of life, and after man's formation God ceases from his work of creation."

As Strong suggests, the only possible way for spiritual lineage to exist is that spirit as well as body is and must be passed down from father to child, for if, as some used to believe, all men were created as separate individual spirits, then there was nothing to pass on, as it was all fixed before the world was. Abraham could give nothing spiritual to any other spirit, since they were all created at the same time and had no connection with each other. And according to the decadent idea that only the flesh is passed on by the parents, then there cannot possibly be anything to spiritual inheritance or lineage. All Abraham, or any other man, could pass on to his son would be some physical characteristics, since the spirit of his child was also formed at the same time the father's spirit was formed. The only possible way for spiritual lineage is for the parents to pass on from themselves their spiritual characteristics, as well as their physical characteristics.

Abraham was not co-existent with Christ in the spirit world. Jesus said, "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8: 58). Job was not co-existent with Christ in the spirit world. If so why would God ask such foolish questions as these would be (Job 38)? "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding." Or, "Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened?" or, "Who laid the cornerstone thereof?" If Job had been in the spirit world before the world was, and if he was capable of deciding for or against God, why did he not stand up and "declare" that he did have understanding? No, Job was not there!

John was not co-existent with Christ in the spirit world. "After me cometh a man who is preferred before me; for he was before me, and I knew him." Some may think that John knew him in the spirit world because he said, "I knew him," but such would be mistaken. In verse 32 John tells how he knew him. "And I knew him; for he who sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me; Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." It is inconceivable that John could have been in the spirit world and decided to fight on the side of Christ and still not know him. No, John was not there.

As the forests were in the first acorn, so were all men breathed into Adam with their many physical and spiritual characteristics, and Adam became a living soul, the first man also, "the father of all."

Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Randall of Sheridan, Wyoming, observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary on April 22. They were married in Lamoni, Iowa, in 1893, where they made their home until 1910, when they homesteaded in Montana. Since 1930 they have been residents of Wyoming. Both are members of the Reorganized Church.

The Randall's son, Lynn, and his wife, of Seagoville, Texas, visited Sheridan in February for a family reunion and were not present for the anniversary celebration, but two daughters, Mrs. J. E. McCormack and Mrs. Dessa Shreve, were with them for the occasion. They also have another daughter, Mrs. Doris M. Clawson; thirteen grandchildren; and twenty-four great-grandchildren.

New Church at Nampa

NAMPA, IDAHO.—The first services were held in the new church building at Nampa, Idaho, on Sunday, May 31. The Saints at Nampa are organized as a mission under the direction of the Boise Branch. The church is located at the corner of Fairview and Meffan Streets.

The new church was consecrated May 31. The invocation was given by Elder Gomer Condit, a welcome address by Elder Lester Dellenbaugh, and talks by Elders Cecil Gilmore, pastor of Boise Branch; J. C. Ford, pastor of Nampa mission; and Seventy Luther Troyer. Wanda Carson sang "Bless This House." Evangelist Silas Condit offered the prayer.

At the eleven o'clock service, Cyndi Lu Taylor, daughter of Byron and Delores Taylor, was blessed by Elders Cecil Gilmore and J. C. Ford. A solo was sung by Mary Cram. Seventy Luther Troyer presented the sermon. There were 135 present.

Brother Troyer's services continued during the week, with slides and lectures each evening.—Reported by MYRTLE YEAGER

Increases Building Fund

AVA, MISSOURI.—October 17 Brother and Sister L. P. Epps directed a young people's play, after which pies were sold. Proceeds were over $100.00 to be used for a reunion ground swimming pool and the local building fund.

October 19 Bishop Howard Miller of Kansas City, Missouri, spoke at the morning service, and at the Pleasant Green schoolhouse that evening.

Elder and Mrs. Raymond Stone and family and Rozema Morris attended the youth retreat at Pittsburg, Kansas, November 8 and 9.

December 11 the women's department sponsored a bazaar and candy sale, netting $132.00 for the building fund.

A Christmas program was given at Pleasant Green schoolhouse December 21 by their church school; the Ava group gave theirs in the evening.

Elder Stephen A. Black spent January 5 visiting in Ava. He preached at Mansfield in the evening.

Mrs. Eldon Morris was presented with a certificate of award for her outstanding leadership in 4-H Club work in Douglas County, Missouri.

Brother Ray Whiting was the speaker in Ava February 8. He held a two weeks' series of meetings at Mansfield.

March 21 the Zion's League gave a play and sold pies, netting about $65.00 to help pay for the classrooms in the new church.

Easter Sunday afternoon the Ava Branch and Pleasant Green group met together for the baptism of Edgar Jaynes.

Joy Lynn Stone, Joe Ben Stone, and Rozema Morris attended the Restoration Festival at the Racine reunion grounds April 25-26.

Carl Morris and Joy Lynn Stone were graduated from Ava High School. Elder Stephen A. Black preached the baccalaureate sermon May 10.—Reported by MRS. C. B. FREEMAN

Missionary Cottage Meetings

OREGON DISTRICT.—The spring conference was held May 29-31 in the Washington Masonic Hall. Attendance was approximately seven hundred.

The Friday evening banquet was under the direction of Sister Effie Verhei. Elder Harold Carpenter was master of ceremonies; principal speakers were Sister Reata Rinart, Oregon District women's leader, and Seventy George A. Njeim.

Classes were taught by Elders George A. Njeim, Monte E. Lasater, James Kemp, Don Landon, Harold Carpenter, Kieth Rinart, Robert Taylor, Sisters Effie Verhei, Reata Rinart, Mable Ray, and Shirley Thompson.

Pastors attending from the southern part of the district were Elders Harold Crooker, Tom Coffman, and John Rodley; from the eastern part, Elders Will Ferguson, Reginald Fritchle and Vern Mikesell. Idaho District President Harry S. Fry, accompanied by his wife, attended. He assisted the Oregon District president in presiding.

Elder James Kemp preached Saturday night and Seventy George A. Njeim preached Sunday at both services. The babies of Brother and Sister John Henderson, formerly of Bend, and Elder and Sister Vern Mikesell of Harper were blessed by Evangelist Mark Yeoman and Elder Vern Mikesell. Several were baptized Sunday afternoon at Central Church by Elder Paul Fishel, pastor of the Vancouver Branch.

Following the conference Elder Don Landon began missionary cottage meetings at First Church. This new building was then nearing completion.

Elders Lloyd Shannon and Clinton Dobson directed a worship and dedication service Sunday afternoon. Those participating were Elders Sam Morris and Lloyd Shannon, Sisters Warda Murphy and Della Dobson, Jack Livingston, the Lyle Fowler family, and Sister Shirley Landon.

The institutes following the conference are Hood River, June 7; Klamath Falls, June 13-14; Myrtle Point, June 20-21.—Reported by J. L. VERHEI

J. F. Curtis in Idaho

IDAHO DISTRICT.—Since January, 1953, Evangelist J. F. Curtis has been traveling throughout the district. At Pocatello he opened a series of meetings January 25, at which time District President Harry S. and Mrs. Fry visited. While there Brother Curtis gave thirteen patriarchal blessings, blessed three children, and held a baptismal service February 1. Five Baker Saints visited New Plymouth, February 22, for another series by Brother Curtis. During his stay in Idaho Brother Curtis was presented with a recording machine for his use in giving blessings.

In December Seventy Wayne Smith held a three weeks' series of meetings in Hagerman. Oregon District President J. L. Verhei spent February 7 and 8 in Baker. On February 8, he spoke at New Plymouth. Seventy Luther Troyer visited New Plymouth in January.

The Ladasa Club of Boise held a turkey dinner to raise funds for the Auditorium. Nampa Saints have been working on their new church; they raised $200.00 in February for its equipment.

Since 1953 there have been twenty-eight baptisms in the district. New members from Pocatello are Mrs. Dee Barnett, Dale Bolingbroke, Mr. and Mrs. Everett Alldredge, Charlie Nelson and son Larry, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Chaney, and Mr. Robert N. Brown and son Duane; from Weiser are Shirley Stout, Oscar Stout, Esther Mitchell, and Thomas Mitchell; from Boise is Sam Thornton; New Plymouth are Mr. and Mrs. Butler and two sons; Hagerman are Mr. and Mrs. Hale Glauner, Mr. and Mrs. James Stapleton, Mr. Walter French, Miss Henritta Jenkins and Miss Evelyn Vinson; and from Buhl are Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Nipper.

Eight children were blessed: from Boise was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Gilling of Oregon; Nampa were Stephen Wayne and Stephanie Lynn, children of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Lewis; Pocatello were Franklin J. Barnett son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Barnett, James Reed son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Cunningham, Rhonda and Jerry Alldredge, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Alldredge, young son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Williams.

Three were ordained: Hagerman—Charles Vreeland, elder; Howard Carlson, priest. Dale E. Ushlin from New Plymouth was ordained a priest.—Reported by RUBY Y. BROWN

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.—Larry Don, Junior, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Sutton, was blessed on May 10, 1953, by Elders R. T. Cochran and Ralph Schrader.

Gordon Bayless, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy L. Key, was blessed on March 22, 1953, by Elders Jimmy Renfro and Adelbert Withee.

Gwendolyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Doyle Lee, was blessed on April 19, 1953, by Elders R. T. Cochran and Tom Gough.—Reported by MRS. ALMA COCHRAN

as a Christian or a talk-only reformer right here.

I'M NOT A CHRISTOPHER. I wish I were. If I were I would be more active in building the kingdom. If I were, I probably wouldn't be sitting here writing this article—I'd be out doing the things I'm writing about. For I'm one of the people this article is intended to reach—the not-so-peculiar Latter Day Saints who think about what's wrong with the world, talk about it, and never lift a finger to set things right. I remember my first General Conference mainly because of a guilty conscience. Several times during the week while I was part of a busy, laughing group, I looked up and saw three Negroes, two men and a woman. They were always alone, always on the out-skirts of the crowd, always looking rather wistful. My impulse was to go up to them, speak, introduce myself, be friendly. But I didn't. I just thought about it. If I had been a Christopher, I might have changed the world that week for them—and for myself.

You don't have to be a Catholic to be a Christopher. You don't have to be formally initiated, or pay dues, or be put on any roll. You can start anywhere, anytime, in the privacy of your own heart. I started this morning and saw all the weakness, the pettiness, the selfishness that other people can only suspect are in me, but which I know are really there. And yet, I can change the world—if I care enough to work at it. I can be a peculiar Latter Day Saint—if I want Zion badly enough to build it now in my own life. I can be conspicuously Christian.

AND SO CAN YOU!

Sixty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. Josiah E. Matthews of Columbus, Ohio, Branch were honored by members of that congregation on March 19, 1953, their sixty-fifth wedding anniversary. They were married in Syracuse, Ohio, and moved to Columbus in 1896, where Elder Matthews pioneered in establishing the branch. A fitting program, with music and poetic tributes, was arranged for the occasion. A wedding cake and an orchid for the bride were part of the celebration.

The Matthewses have two daughters: Maude Reeves of Columbus and Eva Ottenbacher of Indiana; three grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. One daughter, Helen Bonham, is deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron E. Beebe of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Gil Ann, born May 27. Mrs. Beebe is the former Jean Wintermeyer. Mrs. Beebe is an instructor at Graceland College.

Twin sons, Jerry Carl and Gary William, were born on May 25 to Mr. and Mrs. William Webb of Elmira, New York. Mrs. Webb is the former Carol Wenzholz. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

DEATHS

GRICE.—Annie, daughter of Luke and Mary Grice, was born October 28, 1857, at Aldershot, Ontario, and died May 1, 1953, in Harrison, Ontario. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 28, 1892.

She was the sole survivor of a family of eight daughters and two sons. Funeral services were conducted by Elders D. B. Perkins and Aubrey Mason. Interment was in Harrison cemetery.

MCANINCH.—John A., a native of Stirling, Ontario, died May 3 at the age of sixty-nine. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church many years and held the office of elder. He was also active in civic affairs and served as an alderman for twelve years. He was a loyal Orange man of the highest order of the Black Knights, L.O.L. 998. For forty-four years he worked as a railway engineer, retiring two years before the appointed time because of ill health.

He is survived by his wife, Florence; four daughters: Mrs. Arnold Ware and Mrs. Gordon Garrett of Niagara Falls, Ontario; Mrs. Alex McCormack of Toronto, Ontario; and Miss Mazie McAninch of the home; a son, Ashley McAninch of Hamilton, Ontario; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Charles Tomlinson and Al Pelletier. A memorial service was held by members of the L.O.L. in the chapel previous to the funeral.

Introducing

ENNA NIELSON JAMES (page 14) was born in Denmark, the daughter of Jens and Catherine Nielson. At the age of two, she came with her parents to America, settling in South Omaha. There, in 1907, she married Jesse Leroy James. They are the parents of three sons and one daughter, all now married and with families of their own.

Many years ago while living on a farm in Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. James heard and gladly accepted the Restoration message. They now are members of the Omaha Branch.

Mrs. James's hobby is writing. She has recently published a book entitled The Lost Faith, in which she traces the similarities between the ancient legends as found in Longfellow's "Song of Hiawatha," and the history, incidents, and philosophy of the Book of Mormon peoples. She believes the American Indians originally had a high religious culture, which included a knowledge of Christ and his people.

Mrs. James has been active in women's clubs in Nebraska, serving two years as district and two years as state chairman of legislation for the Federation of Women's Clubs. She is interested in writing poetry and short stories, and is at present working on a novel based on homesteading experiences in Montana.

SECURITY

In the passing of millennium of time men have tried in many ways to abrogate the ancient laws of life. They have been afraid of insecurity and have tried to overcome it. Yet the statement of the Lord in the Bible is still there, and it still seems to apply. The soil still brings forth "thorns and thistles" as well as good food, and there are the thorns of loss and the thistles of disappointment in life too. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" has not changed since the beginning of history.

Perhaps it is because we need the driving necessity of hunger and want to keep us from getting lazy. We need effort to keep us strong and well. Work, that seems a curse to the thoughtless, is one of our best blessings. Our security lies in strength. L. J. L.

TRUST

The day is bright and the air is filled
With the singing of birds,
Yet I, thy child, walk in darkness,
I cannot see one step ahead.
Take my hand, O Lord,
And lead me gently,
For I am heartsick and weary
In body and mind;
I stumble often.
Keep me close to thy side;
Show me the way;
Give me strength to go on
With head held high and eyes clear
To see the light.
Amen.

A FEW WILD SHOTS

A woman spends her first eighteen years waiting for a man to come. Then the man spends the next forty years waiting for her to come.

Necessary eating never hurts anyone. It's the recreational stuffing that wrecks the figure. If men could devote to their businesses the same zeal, interest, and enthusiasm that they give to golf, fishing, and other sports, more of them would succeed.

Why is it that so many people become sad when they discuss religion? Perhaps it is because of the poignant reflection that their sins will be catching up with them before too long.

Don't delay repentance too long. If you miss the glory train you miss it, because there won't be any more going that way. L. J. L.

INFRINGEMENT

Liberty is not license. It does not give anyone the right to infringe upon the rights and privileges of others. H. L. Whipple

GIVE AND GET

Zion will not be established until there are enough of the right kind of people—those who do not ask what they can get out of it, but the bigger question, what can they give to it. There will never be a time when God's people are not called upon to help each other.

The most important part of the Scriptures is that dealing with service. L. J. L.

to Know . . .

Elroy Edward Hanton

IN THE FALL of 1936 at a prayer service with the Saints, Elroy E. Hanton presented his first public testimony of God's goodness to him. He was a member of the Methodist Church at that time and was known for his leadership in church school, music, recreation, and activity among young people. Fourteen years passed before he made any other public testimony. During these years he was engaged in night school work at the Port Huron Junior College in connection with the Civilian Pilot's Training Program. He crossed the border into Canada and answered a call of volunteer duty as an instructor in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Three years later he transferred to the United States Air Forces and served with the Ferry Command in the United States, Canada, and Alaska. As a pilot and officer for both countries he was able to attend a great number of special schools for advanced training in the field of aviation.

In 1942 he was married to Wanda Eileen Grice, Port Huron, Michigan. When he was released from active service, they made their home in Port Huron where he was employed by the Mueller Brass Company as senior product designer of the Development Engineering Department.

At Erie Beach, Ontario, in 1950 he presented his second testimony and was baptized by Patriarch John R. Grice. Later he was confirmed by Brother Grice and Apostle Percy Farrow. He became actively engaged as Scoutmaster, solicitor, custodian, church school teacher, choir member, and associate pastor. He was ordained to the office of priest in 1951 and to the office of elder in 1952. He was called to full-time ministry in November, 1952, and assigned as missionary-pastor to Eastern and Central Michigan Districts.

Brother Hanton and his wife occupy the parsonage in Sandusky, Michigan, with their two sons, Dan Edward, 10, and Donald Elroy, 7.

His hobbies are chess, golf, music, and hunting. He was graduated with an honor award in debating from high school in 1936. He is especially interested in worship services in the church.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT AT CEREMONY

President Israel A. Smith turned the first spadeful of earth in the ground-breaking ceremony of the new Walnut Park Mission in the Center Stake on June 14. Elder Glaude Smith, pastor of the Stone Church, represented the stake presidency. In the evening, Brother Israel Smith presided at the service at the Campus.

AT WALNUT PARK

President F. Henry Edwards preached the Children's Day sermon at Walnut Park in the Center Stake.

IN ILLINOIS

President W. Wallace Smith and Sister Smith were at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, for a women's institute held June 13. Mrs. Smith taught the women's classes. Brother Smith also taught a class and preached. Mrs. Donald Kyser is the district women's leader. On Sunday, June 14, Brother Smith spoke to the southeastern Illinois branches gathered at the Brush Creek reunion grounds. Elder Jack Wight preached in the afternoon. W. W. Colvin is the district president. On Sunday night Brother Smith preached at the Centralia, Illinois, Branch where Elder Charles Wesner is the pastor.

AT DISTRICT CONFERENCES

Apostle D. T. Williams attended a district conference at Youngstown, Ohio, on May 16 and 17. The following week end he was at Beckley, West Virginia, with President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp for the opening of the new church there. On May 30 and 31, he was in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for a district conference at which Don R. Ross, Sr., was ordained to the office of high priest. Brother Ross is the district president. On June 13 and 14, Brother Williams was at Wellsburg, West Virginia, where a district conference was held. Five men were ordained at this conference.

SPEAKS AT CAMPUS

Apostle Charles R. Hield was the speaker at the Campus on June 14, for the evening service. On June 10, he addressed the Independence Optimist Club.

PREACHES ON CHILDREN'S DAY

Apostle Reed M. Holmes preached the two morning sermons at Stone Church on Children's Day.

NEW BRANCH ORGANIZED

Apostle Percy Farrow was at Jack's Creek, Tennessee, on June 10, when the new branch was organized. Seventy J. H. Yager assisted Brother Farrow. C. B. Bailey was continued as pastor of the branch. Brother Farrow reports that Elder Franklyn Weddle of the General Church Radio and Music Department has just completed a trip through Tennessee, Arkansas, and Louisiana, holding institutes at Paris, Tennessee, and Hot Springs, Arkansas. On June 9, Brother Farrow and Brother Weddle were in Bald Knob, Arkansas, where two young men, Jack Willis and Gillan Emde, were ordained to the office of priest. Brother Farrow also reported that the Kentucky-Tennessee District is negotiating for the purchase of reunion grounds.

CHILDREN BAPTIZED

Eighty-two children were baptized on Children's Day in the Center Stake. That brings the total baptized this year to 166.

Proclaim Liberty

"Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."—Leviticus 25: 10.

THE CONCEPT OF LIBERTY has been a growing thing with me since childhood. Never has there been a time when I was not fond of "having my own way." Like all children, before I could argue for the freedom to do what I wanted the way I wanted to do it, I tried crying for it—and sometimes won. But that was in a small world of little ideas within a very young and immature head. The Statue of Liberty, the Declaration of Independence, and "befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land" had no meaning.

On July 1, Canada celebrates its Dominion Day; three days later comes Independence Day for the U.S.A. Both of these great democracies won their liberty to govern themselves through fratricidal struggles. Today many of us take our liberty for granted—it always has been, hence it always will be. Yet the advances made toward individual freedom have been slow and painful. It is always in danger of being diluted or dissolved. John P. Curran once wrote, "The condition upon which God hath given liberty to man is eternal vigilance; which condition if he break, servitude is at once the consequence of his crime and the punishment of his guilt."

THE IDEA of social responsibility develops slowly in race or ethnic group. Under the impact of Christian democracy this social consciousness has been somewhat accelerated. At many spots in the civilized world, individual liberty is a thin veneer which has cracked and peeled. The theory that "might makes right" and belief in the "divine right of kings to rule" still live, though stated in other terms. Statism, which has grown up in the communist empire, is at war with personal conscience and the divine law of human agency. The antidote is not to hope that things will work themselves out, nor yet to resort to the arbitrament of war. It lies wholly in practicing and preaching liberty under law and respect for personality.

Lincoln once stated the case this way: "Among freemen there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet, and . . . they who take such appeal are sure to lose their case and pay the cost."

In 1951 some distinguished Americans, including the Honorable Herbert Hoover and Douglas MacArthur, organized Spiritual Mobilization, a group to carry on their work "to emphasize our religious heritage and its relationship to our freedom" through its "Committee to Proclaim Liberty." This committee has urged the clergymen of America to observe Independence Week (June 28 - July 5, 1953) by emphasizing some phase of the subject, "Freedom Under God." The program is not confined to the churches. Civic clubs, newspapers and magazines, radio and TV stations, businessmen and individuals are asked to support the idea that freedom cannot stand without a spiritual foundation.

THE YEAR OF JUBILEE in ancient Israel had much social and economic significance. Every seventh year "shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land." And after seven such sabbaths had passed, or every fifty years, "ye shall return every man unto his possession." Men who had become dispossessed by debt, sickness, or sale were permitted to come back into their heritage through this process of jubilee. Thus Israel was commanded to "proclaim liberty throughout all the land."

Much valuable city business property is now being built on other men's land by the purchase of a long-time lease. It is hard to understand how such costly buildings will pay out in ninety-nine years, but when the leasehold expires the landowner gets the building free from encumbrance. The Israelites' system made the change of owners just half as long. Walt Whitman once explained his love for animals by saying, "They have no mania for owning things."

MANY YEARS AGO Oliver Goldsmith made this observation: "I have traveled in many countries, yet everywhere I find riches just another name for freedom. In no country have I found that men love liberty so much as not to be willing to subject the liberties of other men unto their own."

Everywhere today men are talking about security for themselves and their families. They want economic security without the loss of personal liberties. What usually happens is that they start by trading the latter for the former with a good chance of eventually losing both. Men are easily misled by promises and do not examine the hidden costs for these uncertain securities.

It is necessary that mature persons proclaim liberty lest they lose some of the precious heritage of freedom. If people become concerned only when those liberties are impaired, if like children they do their crying or proclaiming only when their own way is blocked, they are unworthy of freedom. Likewise they need to remember that liberty is not a one-way street. Unless they are concerned enough to support and uphold the constitutional rights of every other citizen, regardless of his wealth, creed, or color, they are sure eventually to lose their own. Freedom under God implies sharing the costs of liberty.

TODAY I HELD in my hand each piece of American coin. The word "liberty" is printed on each, from the lowly penny to the silver dollar. It does not follow that the more of these coins one has to his credit the more he proclaims liberty. They also have stamped on their sides, "In God we trust." Yet Americans are not outstandingly people of mighty faith—except in the power of the dollar to give them security. Riches still mean freedom to do pretty much as one pleases. If men are to be really secure and happy, they had best take Paul's advice, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. 5: 1).

Independence Day is upon us. While we thank God for the blessings of national liberty, we need to be reminded that he has designed that this freedom shall be for all men. As Lincoln said of this nation, the world is now facing a grave issue. Can it "continue to exist half slave and half free?" Let's use our power and influence, small though it be, to free those in bondage by proclaiming liberty.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From a letter written by Edwin L. Crosby, M.D., Director of Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, to A. Neal Deaver, Administrator of the Independence Sanitarium:

On April 19, 1953, the Board of Commissioners of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals approved the recommendation that the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital receive full accreditation. As you know, this is a result of the evaluation of the hospital survey conducted on March 20, 1953, by Doctor Gaylord R. Hess, a field representative of the Joint Commission.

Full accreditation will continue until such time as another survey conducted under the auspices of the Commission indicates that it should be changed.

You will find attached recommendations for the improvement of the quality of patient care made as a result of the survey. These warrant your attention, insofar as possible, before the next visit of a representative of the Joint Commission. In the meantime, we should appreciate your keeping us informed of progress made.

The Board of Commissioners also approved the format of a Certificate of Accreditation which we will send you as soon as it is available from the printers.

If you have any further questions, please let us know.

We received the following from Appointee L. S. Troyer concerning the new church at Nampa, Idaho:

The Nampa church is very beautiful inside and outside. The state inspector told Elder J. C. Ford, who is the pastor, that it was the nicest church building he had ever seen erected by volunteer laborers.

Brother Earl Shortridge of Boise Branch drew the plans for the building, and much of it was erected by members of the Nampa congregation.

We offer our congratulations to the congregation and trust that all who attend shall have a fine spiritual experience in this new church as they continue to worship in it.

Reuben Polton Atkins, a well-known citizen of Independence and a member who had reached his ninety-th birthday, recently passed to his reward. A patriarch in years, he was typically patriarchal in appearance. In our presidency files we have Brother Atkins' affidavit that, as a youth, he heard Brigham Young say to members of a congregation in the Salt Lake Tabernacle that if they would but follow him he "would lead them past Christ in glory."

Apostle Oakman informs us that Elder Floyd F. Engstrom, Post Chaplain at Kaiserlautern has been promoted to the rank of Major. Major Engstrom has been doing excellent work, and we are very proud to have him represent the church in his Army duties and in his relations with the Saints of Germany and the GI's stationed there.

Children Are in Danger

Many editors and public officials have joined in the safety campaign in recent months. Highways are becoming more crowded, and the accident rate has been increasing nearly every year. There seems to be little hope that the memory or judgment of small children will be lengthened or improved by these campaigns; therefore, it is up to the adults to think for children who are likely to cross the street quite unconscious of the traffic that is bearing down upon them. Running from behind parked cars is especially tempting to children who want to recover a ball or get across the street.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Bulletin of May 19 points out that there are 21,000,000 cyclists now on our streets and roadways, and that 600 of these lose their lives annually. About two thirds of these fatalities occur between the months of May and October, and nine out of every ten are boys between the ages of 5 and 19.

The fact that the injury is due to the fault of the bicyclist will not relieve the heartache to the parents of the victim or to the one who has caused the fatality. Children are quite apt to get in front of motor vehicles and cross from one lane to the other. This is the most common violation of safety practices according to this bulletin. Carrying an extra passenger on the bicycle has also been responsible for many deaths. Each one could or should join this safety campaign to try to save the lives of children. C. B. H.

By the Same Spirit

By Robert J. Miller

But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.—I Corinthians 8: 6.

THIS IS THE TESTIMONY of the disciples of Christ who have received a witness through his Spirit and acknowledge the existence of but one God, the Father of all things which are eternal. For of God are all things eternal, even Jesus Christ. This we must believe or our faith is vain.

We believe in a God who was not created or made, who was before all things and of whom all things consist. He is God, the Father, from eternity to eternity, whose highest attribute is the divine mind, and whose glory is intelligence; and intelligence is something which cannot be created or made; it is the light of truth (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5).

With God all things are of eternal value, for their light is truth; and their living power is a portion of divine intelligence which God has placed therein to remain forever, independent and free to act in its apportioned sphere (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5). All matter has life; and because of the kinship which exists between God and all things, all things eternal are subject to his power. That which is of God is his to command.

The spiritual creation of all things is of God and is the assignment of aspects of divine mind and intelligence to the countless things which God has said shall make up the sum total of his works. Thus he was able to say in the days of creation, "Let there be light. . . . Let there be a firmament. . . . Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so" (Genesis 1). This was the testimony of God to Moses: "I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things" (Genesis 1: 2, Inspired Version).

The testimony of the disciples of Christ continues with the affirmation that there is but one Lord, the Only Begotten of the Father who was with God from the beginning (Genesis 1: 2, 27; John 1: 1-10; Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4) "by whom are all things, and we by him." For by Christ all things acquired their spiritual and physical form, which were so ordained of God; even we, the choice creation of the Father (Genesis 2: 5-9, Inspired Version).

Two apostles in the early days of the church gave clear testimony concerning the high calling of Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father. Paul said:

For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.—Colossians 1: 16, 17.

John said:

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made.—John 1: 1-3.

The worlds were made by him. Men were made by him. All things were made by him, and through him, and of him. And I, John, bare record that I beheld his glory, as the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; even the Spirit of truth which came and dwelt in the flesh, and dwelt among us.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 1f, g.

These testimonies acclaim the fact that all things are of God, by his Only Begotten, Jesus Christ—

Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Philippians 2: 6-11.

Jesus, by whom all things exist, was obedient to the will of God in all things. He never sought to take the glory, but was faithful in giving unto God all credit for his authority and power. His acknowledgment was recorded by John, the beloved disciple: "The Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise" (John 5: 19). "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works" (John 14: 10).

Jesus is the Master workman in whom God brought into being the things he proposed and commanded should be. Jesus exercises the power and authority and gives diligent attention through the ages to the great work of God. Jesus consecrated himself to the work of God and was "given a name which is above every name."

Yes, it was Jesus who dared to aspire to equality with God yet "made himself of no reputation," was made in the likeness of men, and became obedient unto death. It was Jesus who was the Only Begotten of the Father, because in him did all fullness dwell (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 2). In him God came as the spirit of truth, and by the Holy Spirit of truth within him he became the creator, lawgiver, counselor, our advocate with the Father, and our Salvation.

"The Spirit of truth is of God" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4c). It is the Spirit which was born in the mind of God through divine intelligence, the Spirit which gives life to all things, and meaning to existence (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3b). Truth is the only Spirit born of the mind of God.

Jesus bore testimony many times that he is the Spirit of truth (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4c; John 14: 17). In him the Spirit born of God dwelt in its fullness. Consider the words of the prophet Abinadi:

God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God: and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son; the Father because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son, because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and Son: and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth.—Mosiiah 8: 28-31.

BY JESUS CHRIST are all things, "and we by him," for all things owe their existence to the Spirit of truth, which is of God. Herein lies the answer to the "fellowship of the mystery" (Ephesians 3: 9) mentioned by Paul and stated by Jesus when he talked to the Father: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us" (John 17: 21).

By Jesus Christ, we are.

He is the greatest personality in worlds without end, because in him was caught up all the truth of God; in him all truth was perfect in its expression; in him we see the true picture of what God can do in the lives of men. Our personalities become as great as the amount of truth we exercise in our lives. In Christ we see it operating in its fullest sense.

"If there be no Christ, there be no God; and if there be no God, we are not, for there could have been no creation."—II Nephi 8: 13.

By the Word all things came into existence. Had there been no spirit of truth (law) to bring things to pass, to govern the behavior of created things, to create intelligent beings, all would have been void; and there would be no God, for there would have been nothing created, or no one to acclaim him God.

But there is a spirit of truth (law), and it is personified in Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father. "There is a God, and he is Christ; and he cometh in the fullness of his own time."—II Nephi 8: 14.

IN GOD AND CHRIST we see two distinct personalities; but they are so identical in purpose, thought, behavior, and attributes that they are as one. This is clearly expressed by Christ in his words to the Father as he prayed for those whom God had given him from among the children of men, and also for those who shall believe on him through their words (John 17: 17-26).

God and Christ are not only united in all things, but it is the will of God that man also share his close fellowship through eternity. For God "hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."—Ephesians 1: 4, 5.

God has not created us of himself, by Jesus Christ, and then cast us aside and forgotten us. But rather it is his work and his glory, "to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man" (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23).

Paul, whose commission it was to help in this divine purpose, said:

I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, in one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 1-7.

Paul, who received his understanding of the divine plan direct from Christ (Galatians 1:12), often emphasized the fact that all the work of God and his Christ is caught up through the workings of one spirit—the spirit of truth. For it was by this one spirit that all things have been created or made. And the spirit which brought them into being must also preserve their existence.

We do not walk after our own ways and bring to pass righteousness, but by unified endeavor, having "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all," we seek and shall arrive at the same end—eternal peace and fellowship in the family of the Father.

THE CHURCH, or the body of Christ, has many functions, and "unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Ephesians 4: 7).

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4: 11-16.

To the Corinthians Paul said,

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—I Corinthians 12: 4-7.

Then Paul goes on to enumerate different gifts given to different people but says they are all by the same spirit. He concludes by saying:

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many.—I Cor. 12: 13, 14.

Concerning the different gifts of the Spirit, Moroni makes this observation: "There are different ways that these gifts are administered; but it is the same God who worketh all in all; and they are given by the manifestations of the Spirit of God unto men, to profit them."—Moroni 10: 9.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Romans 8: 14). For "he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit" (I Corinthians 6: 17). Those who are joined unto the Lord are of the household of faith; they are those with whom God is well pleased; they are those who will help build Zion.

JESUS SAID on one occasion, "Who-soever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother" (Matthew 12: 44). The obedient are heirs of the kingdom, because they obey the law. They will be members of the family of God, for it is they who love the Lord their God. Jesus was given a name which is above every name because of his humility and perfect obedience. By obedience we can enjoy the same

Assigned to Tahiti

Elder Alan Tyree, his wife, Gladys, and their three-month-old son, Lawrence Wayne, left Independence on May 16 for Los Angeles on the first lap of their 9,304-mile trip to Tahiti. Elder Tyree, who has been under General Church appointment since September, 1950, is replacing Elder Allen Breckenridge who returned from the South Sea Island Mission last year.

Mrs. Tyree, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Omohundro of Glendora, California, was a secretary in the Council of Twelve office before her marriage.

Spirit which Jesus enjoys and become members of his body. We can take upon us his name.

Jesus said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him" (John 14: 23). "We will come" (Father and Son) in the Spirit and dwell within, that by this one Spirit there may be harmony and a fullness of joy.

By one and the same Spirit the purposes of God will be fulfilled. This spirit harmony will be achieved between the two eternal, spirit and element, and there will be a fullness of joy (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5). And by these forces—this Spirit in the hearts of men, man's love for his God and his fellow man will surmount all barriers and overcome all things; Zion will come, and Christ will reign in his kingdom among his own.

Behold, that which you hear is as the voice of one crying in the wilderness; in the wilderness, because you can not see him; my voice, because my voice is Spirit; my Spirit is truth: truth abideth and hath no end; and if it be in you it shall abound.

And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 17, 18.

The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise ye could not abound.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12e, f.

The Solemnities of Eternity

By Edwin Spargo

Treasure these things up in your hearts, and let the solemnities of eternity rest upon your minds. Be sober. Keep all my commandments. Even so. Amen.

—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 8

LET THE SOLEMNITIES of eternity rest upon your minds" was good advice in the year 1831, and after 122 years this advice is even more important to us now, though we live in a world much different than when this revelation was given.

We are members of a unique church in that we believe God speaks not only in natural phenomena but in an orderly manner to man. The men through whom he speaks are known to us as his servants, the prophets. We believe that when God speaks all controversy should cease. His revealed word becomes law and must be obeyed if we are to be worthy of his blessings.

In Old Testament times, it was considered an unpardonable sin for a prophet to speak and say nothing, for that meant God had not spoken through him. It is still a sin for a man to speak in the name of God and say things that fail to express divine authority. We are living in a day when men refuse to believe that God speaks. And if he does, why listen to him, they ask. Men think they are able to manage without his help.

Jesus asked his listeners, "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" Yet, in spite of this statement, man has tried to add to his stature by his thinking, his learning, and his skill in the field of science. He has tried several times to build towers of Babel. Today, he believes he stands head and shoulders above his predecessors. He looks back upon his grandfather's day with disdain, because he feels he knows and has achieved more than his forefathers. He cries out, "Man has conquered land, sea, and air. He has raised himself many cubits and in time shall be heir to all things, without God."

RECENTLY I SAW A FILM produced by the Canadian government on the dairying industries. It began with a picture of a cow eating hay; then it showed the farmer's wife making butter in the old-fashioned way. The film went on to show how butter, cheese, ice cream, and the multiple varieties of milk foods are now produced by modern methods. Yet the picture closed with the cow still chewing hay. Man must still receive his milk supply from the source God gave—the humble cow—the same as his forefathers did in ages past.

I was interested in Brother George Njeim's statements in his recent series in our branch. He said that in the early centuries after the apostles, men had faith in God, but in the course of time the age of reason began to be ushered in, forcing faith to the background. This was followed by the age of materialism and humanism, and faith in God was pushed farther back. In the early part of the eighteen hundreds such men as Marx, Engels, and Darwin began teaching their philosophies; with their advent, faith in God as a Creator and source of all things was a belief to be destroyed.

About the same time another young man, Joseph Smith, came upon the scene. He declared that God is, and that Jesus Christ lives. He declared that this same God created the heavens, the earth, and all flesh in the air, in the sea, and upon the earth. He required that man should serve God and love his neighbor as himself. Among other things, God told Joseph Smith, "I will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid." Before this prophet, these and other wise and learned men have perished. They even perish before their own philosophies, for they have not the answers to the problems which they have created. Today we are faced with the calamities of wars, revolution, famine, and internal strife. Every day sixty-five thousand babies are born, with the food supply getting less and less. Man's inhumanity to man still makes countless thousands mourn.

GOD KNEW that these conditions would come upon the earth. Because he did he called forth his servant Joseph Smith and spoke to him from heaven. He also spoke for a reason other than prophesying of physical sufferings that were coming. He showed that they had their counterpart in the spiritual conditions among men. These come under the condemnation of God, for "they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

We, as a church, are living in a world today where men's hearts are failing them for fear of the conditions that are upon the earth. In order that our minds would transcend above the sorrow and strife caused by unrest, instability of nations, crime within our own nation, the breakdown of morals among adults and youths, competition in business and employment, the Lord spoke through his servant and said, "Let the solemnities of eternity rest upon your minds."

Statements like this convince me that they are the words of an inspired prophet. Joseph Smith was not able to give such a tremendous statement out of his own wisdom.

"Let the solemnities of eternity rest upon your minds." In other words the Lord was saying, "Let the solemn events that are coming, of infinite duration, free you from worries that trouble you now!" The prophet was telling us to observe all the formal ceremonies of the gospel which will eventually lead up to the judgment day. This is a very solemn event which we must face, when we will be required to give an account of our lives. At this time some will receive eternal life and others eternal punishment.

THIS SOLEMNITY of eternity was stated by the Master in the following words, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Those who have believed and been baptized have their minds at rest, for it is only those who have been obedient who will be able to stand unashamed and unafraid in that great Day of Judgment. Those who don't believe, whether they were immersed or not, will never have peace of mind, nor rest to their souls.

Paul put it in a very concise way in Philippians 4: 9: "Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you." We have learned, received, and heard many things that give us rest, assurance, and peace, which can come only through Jesus Christ. We have learned that it is the purpose of God to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. We have received through his Spirit the divine assurances of the truthfulness of the gospel.

We have heard the testimonies of those who have tried and tested the words of Jesus Christ and of those who know that this church was brought into existence through direct command from heaven to Joseph Smith, giving him a commission to organize the church in harmony with the biblical pattern. One hundred and twenty-three years now prove the divine calling of this man, for he was not a theologian, nor a scholar, nor did he know doctrine. Time has proved that the Holy Spirit directed him, that the angels taught him the mysteries of the kingdom. Time has proved he was inspired to bring forth the Book of Mormon and the Holy Scriptures, giving us a source of information concerning divine things. These testimonies cannot be received by those who do not believe and obey.

Throughout the years since 1830, the church has grown from an audience of one, who worshiped God in order that he might come to know a better way, to a church with a worldwide mission. Japan is the latest field of endeavor. There the Communion is being served; men are being ordained; church services are being held; the frontiers of the church are extending. We are to think upon these things—these solemnities of eternity—for as we think of them we have peace of mind, and we are not tossed about by every wind of doctrine. Solemnities are great events, the great days of infinite duration which are coming. We are to think upon these things, then even in this turbulent world we shall have peace of mind, because they are coming through the divine will of God.

These are some of the solemnities of eternity which are coming: Zion will be, the Holy City will be peopled by those who are righteous. The church of the first-born, including the City of Enoch, will return to the earth. Christ himself will return with the righteous. With him shall come the group of men redeemed from among men, who became perfect through the gospel. Christ will reign in the millennium following the first resurrection; then comes the second resurrection, the binding of Satan, the destruction of death and hell, with no more pain, no more sorrow, no more tears, and finally God himself shall dwell with his people. As we think upon these things our minds are at rest. We must make sure our lives are in rapport with divine things so that we may be prepared for these great events and great days.

"Let the solemnities of eternity rest upon our minds."

Books

Angel Unaware, by Dale Evans Rogers, Fleming H. Revell Company, price $1.00.

The author of this appealing little book is a mother who has been faced with a tragic experience. She gave birth to a child with an appalling handicap. How the family accepted this experience will be a challenge to every reader.

The story is told by Robin Elizabeth Rogers as her mother believed she lived it in her brief sojourn on earth. Robin called it her "earthly mission," and she relates what she accomplished in two short years before her death on August 24, 1952. Shortly after, she tells her Heavenly Father the story of her life as a member of the Rogers family. Throughout the book Robin speaks of God being there to comfort and strengthen her in pain and suffering. The unique style in which the story is told will be a comfort to many parents with similar experiences.

Robin had two sisters and a brother who were very much concerned about her. Their prayers were always in her behalf. They learned to be thoughtful and unselfish and were brought closer together through their love for her.

The author had faith that Robin could be healed, but as time went on she realized that it was not God's will, and she accepted the fact. Her attitude and that of her husband changed completely as they loved and cared for this little girl.

Roy and Dale Rogers are nationally known in the entertainment world and are loved by both young and old. Their lives were enriched by what seemed at first to be an overwhelming tragedy.

This is a story of faith and courage. In the troubled world of today we need to have a deeper appreciation of the victories won in the lives of people all around us. This book should be a help and an inspiration to all who read it.

RUTH MCFARLANE

Summer Phantasy

By Courtney Hunter

(See page 23.)

THE TRAIN STATION was bubbling with a concentrated activity. The burning heat of midsummer had cut a wide swath through the town and deposited its ripe and sweating harvest all at once into the midst of the rickety little building the townspeople called a "station." The cause of all this confusion was the appearance of three streamline trains which had roared in on the single track, one right behind the other. They were quiet now, but the engineers were still in their seats and the porters were hurriedly helping people on board.

On the blackboard inside, the station master had scrawled in chalk:

Train One—Sun Valley—2 p.m.

Train Two—Luna Hills—3 p.m.

Train Three—Astral Park—4 p.m.

A young woman with bright eyes rushed to the end of the line at the ticket window. In one crooked arm she carried a stack of books and her glance often bent downward to caress their worn jackets. She quickly observed that it wasn't money that bought tickets for these vacation trains. With wonder and pleased astonishment she heard the ticket agent demand an answer to a question. That's all there was to it—just like a quiz show. She buttoned her ears to all sounds except the questions and answers. The local college professor of nuclear physics quite primly said, "Train One, if you please."

The ticket agent asked, "Do you believe in Jesus Christ?"

Without hesitation the professor replied, "Yes," and picked up his ticket and strode toward the track.

The pastor of the young woman's church wore a worried wrinkle on his forehead, but it quickly disappeared when he heard, "How old was Joseph Smith when the angel first appeared?"

He heaved a thankful, "Fifteen," and waved his hand as he passed.

MOST OF THE REQUESTS were for Train One. Some had been refused tickets because they couldn't answer their individual questions, but the bright-eyed young woman with the stack of books glowed with confidence as she answered each question in her mind.

One of her neighbors, the leader of the women's department, smilingly said to the ticket seller, "Luna Hills, please."

Her question, "Describe in detail the litigation of the Temple Lot Suit," she skillfully answered.

She spoke to the young woman on passing, "I've been looking forward to this trip for such a long time. Do have a good time where you're going."

The young woman thought, Why on earth would she choose Luna Hills in preference to Sun Valley? She acted as if she didn't even see the first train.

THERE WAS JUST ONE MAN ahead of her. Then a buzzing fly, quite intent on making a pylon of her head, caused her to shake her short curls in impatience, and by the time she had distracted the insect's attention from herself, she stood before the ticket agent. His eyes were weary, and when she said, "Sun Valley," he peered at her closely and then from a mouth, dry and stiff, the question fuzzed at her. "Describe the technical aspects of landscape oil painting as it might be expressed through the lips of Van Ruysdael."

Stupidly she complained, "I'm no artist. I've never had any interest in painting. Surely you could ask me something with which I am familiar. I could answer all the questions of those before me."

The ticket agent flipped a page in his book and then said, "Yes, I do have an alternate question here for you. What is humility?"

The words fled from her lips, yet she knew with sinking desperation that they wouldn't be enough. "Humility is recognizing God as the knower of all things. Humility is to be always seeking the truth. Humility is a willingness to learn and a realization that one never can know everything."

He shook his head from side to side and said, "Yes, that's right, but it isn't enough. Didn't you hear the man right before you? I asked him the very same question."

She clicked the heel of her shoe against the rough board floor and fought the chaos inside her mind. "What is missing? What is missing?"

The man spoke gently, "The line behind you is long. Please step aside until you think of it."

SHE WALKED TO THE BENCH and slipped her firm young body down against the time-eaten planks. She scratched the cracked varnish with a well-kept fingernail and watched the screen inside her head flash pictures from a huge projector. She saw Jesus, with a towel looped around his waist, bend over and wash Peter's feet. She eyed a little wonderingly the picture of Christ, with his wrists tied, standing forlornly before the Sanhedrin. Passages of Scripture blinked off and on as a robot neon sign. She felt herself on a school gym floor of many years ago and it was with much elation that she tossed the basketball through the net to win the county championship for her team just as the closing whistle blew. She turned abruptly to join in the celebration and collided heavily with a dark-skinned guard on the other team. Her lip curled a little, and then in a burst of fellowship and sympathy and keen understanding she blurted, "Pardon me, Katie. Let me help you up."

Then a pair of jumping quotation marks settled down and compressed a few words into bold relief on the white screen. "And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge;

Two Prophets

By Ella Lambkin

THE BIBLE tells us about two prophets, interesting because their work is so similar that we are apt to ask, "Now was that Elisha or Elijah?" Yet their lives and methods of work were so very different that we wonder if they could have been serving the same God.

Their names are confusingly alike, but the contrast in the two men begins immediately and continues through their lives—Elijah startling and spectacular, Elisha neighborly and homey. Elijah comes out of the nowhere into the here and appears before the king, denouncing him bitterly and proclaiming a drought. Then he disappears. The first mention of Elisha is of his life with his father and mother, doing their plowing for them.

Each of two women had a son. Each son died and each was treated by Elijah and Elisha. The differences were typical. Elijah appeared one day at the home of a widow and demanded food. He had been fed by the ravens, but the brook from which he drank had dried up. At his insistence the woman gave him an upper room and fed him through the period of the drought. The mother and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing."

The lump in her throat dissolved, and she raced to the window. The ticket agent looked at her again and said, "I know. You know now that others are learning, too, and their learning, though it be but two and two are four, is as acceptable to God as your knowledge of the most intricate mathematical equation an Einstein mind could evolve. It's too late. The train for Sun Valley just pulled out. Perhaps next summer"—

She interrupted, "There won't be any more summers like this one," and she tucked the books tightly under her arm. Already her thoughts were dwelling on the air-conditioned drugstore and a coke.

of the boy Elisha healed was a friend. In his travels he often passed their place. Because she and her husband enjoyed his visits so much they prepared an upper room for his comfort and begged him to stop whenever he passed that way.

While Elijah stayed with the widow her food supplies never failed as he had promised her, and the words have brought comfort to Christians throughout the ages: "And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail."

Elisha's experience of increasing a supply of oil miraculously is such a neighborly, quiet experience it is little known. A woman's husband had died. His creditors had come to take her two sons into slavery to satisfy his debt. In her trouble she came to Elisha. What should she do? All she had in the house was a pot of oil. Elisha told this worried mother to borrow all of the vessels she could from her neighbors and pour oil from her pot into all of the vessels. She did as he suggested, and all of the vessels were filled. From the sale of the oil she paid her husband's debts and saved her sons.

MOST OF US ARE familiar with Elijah's contact with the government—how he denounced the king and told him that a famine was coming upon his people because of their wickedness. The famine lasted for three years and closed with that spectacular scene on Mount Carmel when four hundred and fifty of the priests of Baal held a contest with Elijah. The prophet introduced the contest with the dramatic cry, "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." After the contest was over Elijah condemned the four hundred and fifty priests of Baal to death and assured the king that the drought would be broken. A little cloud only as large as a man's hand appeared over the mountaintop from the Mediterranean, but Elijah warned the king and his people to get home as fast as possible. Elijah himself ran ahead of the chariots.

How familiar the spectacular story of Elijah, but how many know the interesting story of Elisha and his dealings with the government? Israel was at war with Syria. The prophet Elisha told the king where the Syrian army was going to attack each time so that the Israelite army was at the right spot and was prepared to fight. So consistently did this happen that the Syrian king decided he had a spy in his army who was informing the Israelites. When he discovered that Elisha was the informer, he sent a large army down to Dothan to get one man. One morning Elisha's servant came running to tell him that they were surrounded by the enemy with horses and chariots. Elisha prayed, and the servant's eyes were opened so he could see that the mountains were full of horses and chariots of fire—a greater army than that surrounding the city. Again Elisha prayed, and when he went out to the Syrian soldiers to ask them what they wanted, their eyes were so closed that they did not recognize him. He offered to lead them to the person they wanted and when their normal vision was restored they found themselves surrounded by the Israelite army. Naturally the Israelites wanted to take advantage of their good fortune and kill the Syrians. That might have been Elijah's way, but Elisha told the Israelites to feed the Syrians and let them go.

Even in death we find this typical contrast. Elijah ascended to heaven in a chariot of fire. Elisha died in his bed. Soon after Elisha's death and burial some soldiers were preparing to bury a comrade. They saw their enemies coming and, not having time to finish their work, they threw their comrade into Elisha's sepulcher. When the dead body touched the body of Elisha, life came back and the soldier sprang up.

These two prophets were very different in disposition and methods of work, yet each served God acceptably and powerfully.

E. C. Briggs The First Missionary to Utah

By Addie Spaulding Stowell

JESUS SAID, "He that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back is not worthy of me." The building of the kingdom of God should always be uppermost in our minds. But in our building let us not forget we are drawing on spiritual resources of those who laid the foundation for our structure—those who bore the burden of mobocracy and persecution in the early days of the Restoration.

There are many whose image lingers in our memory as the bulwark of our faith, and we are grateful for their good works and sacrifices. Many good people have had a spiritual influence over my life, but there is one I would particularly like to tell about because he, Edmund C. Briggs, was one of the pillars that held the gospel banner aloft when the Saints were numbed by the loss of their leader.

After the prophet, Joseph Smith, Jr., was killed, many were deceived by ambitious leaders, but there were others who remained steadfast in their faith. E. C. Briggs was not only firm in his convictions, but he proclaimed them to the world.

I was closely associated with Brother Briggs and his good wife during his declining years, and I should like to pay tribute to his memory.

EDMUND C. BRIGGS was born in February, 1835. He was seven years old when he first heard about the restored gospel. Although a young child, like Samuel of old, he was interested in the gospel message. When he learned to read he read the Times and Seasons, and others read the paper to him. His mother, Polly Briggs, was a close companion during his growing-up years, and from the Times and Seasons they both received much of their knowledge of the church.

They lived at Beloit, Wisconsin, where Jason W. Briggs, a high priest, was president of the Beloit Branch. He had organized the Beloit Branch in 1843, and it had never been disorganized. He continued as president and the branch continued functioning as a body of the church organized in 1830 by Joseph Smith, Jr. They were biding their time until the legal successor, the prophet's son, should take his place as leader of the church.

It was at Beloit that the faithful followers of Joseph Smith, Jr., met together for a conference in June, 1852, to reorganize the church which had been so ruthlessly disrupted after Joseph's death.

Jason W. Briggs was in charge of the conference. Although Edmund was only seventeen at that time, he did not miss any details, and during the years that followed he was alert to all their activities.

In November, 1851, prior to the memorable conference of 1852, Edmund Briggs was ill and given up to die. He was staying with his brother, Silas Briggs, in Jefferson County, Wisconsin. A messenger was sent to his mother saying she should come at once if she wanted to see him alive. On November 18, 1851, while he was in this stricken condition, a prophecy was given that he would live and come into the church and stand with his brothers in the Restoration Movement. Soon after the conference of 1852 he was baptized and shortly after ordained to the priesthood.

At a meeting of the church on November 20, 1856, Brother Briggs was appointed to his first active mission. At the conference of April 6, 1860, he was ordained president of the Seventies. On October 6, 1860, he was ordained an apostle at the semiannual conference. In 1863 he was sent on a mission to Utah. His life there was one long unhappy experience. There were times when he stood his ground and faced his murderous enemies, and times when he thought it best not to be found. During his years of ministry he labored in thirty-five states and territories, and in Canada.

I WAS ASSOCIATED FIRST with Sister Briggs. She owned a horse and buggy and often we took rides together on the roads around Lamon. When Brother Briggs came home finally to settle down to retirement, he and his wife visited us frequently, and he got a taste of my apple pie. That was his weakness—he liked pie.

"Sister Addie," he begged, "will you make pies for me if I bring you the ingredients? Emma doesn't like to make pie."

I refrained from telling him I didn't like to make pie either. At that moment I believe I felt something like the widow woman who made the little cake for Elijah. I was reluctant to obligate myself to such a task, yet I felt it would be serving one of God's noble servants and that would be a small way to show my appreciation for his life of sacrifice. From that time until his death I made pies for him.

He had apple and cherry trees on his place. He stored the apples in his basement. In cherry season he picked the cherries and brought them with his cherry pitter, sugar, and jars out to my house, and he would pit while I canned them. He was like a little child in his expressions of joy at the pretty red cherries as they sat in rows of gleaming jars on the kitchen cabinet.

I was well paid by the spirituality he brought to my life and the lives of my children as they listened attentively while he told of his experiences.

One Saturday evening he came out to get his pies, and the children and I rode back to town with him. Joseph, my husband, worked in a grocery store in town, and grocery stores remained open until the band quit playing. Nearly every Saturday night the children and I went downtown to be with him and hear the band play.

This particular Saturday evening as we were riding along we faced the west, and some black thunderheads loomed up above the horizon. Brother Briggs had been talking and explaining the Scriptures to me, but all at once he pointed to those clouds and exclaimed, "When I see a magnificent display of nature like that I begin to visualize the magnitude of God's power and might, and his Spirit descends upon me in great abundance. I can feel it at this moment to such a degree that I can testify of a Supreme Being, for I know that he is."

I looked toward him and his countenance shone. A brightness was about him like a halo. I felt it as a power within my soul.

His recital of some of his experiences was amusing because he could see the humorous side of life. He would laugh heartily when telling of how sometimes he evaded the question when asked how many missionaries the church had in the field. "You know," he would chuckle, "I didn't want to tell them I was the only one, and I had to get around it somehow."

EDMUND C. BRIGGS stood firm through all the conflicting turmoil, and he launched out into a hostile world alone to carry the message of the Restoration—crying repentance. In his faith he strengthened the Saints with the assurance that in God's own due time the son of Joseph Smith, Jr., would come forth and take his rightful place as prophet, seer, and revelator by order of his lineage and the blessing and appointment of his father.

When the time came to lay his physical body down we had the assurance that the spirit, which was Edmund C. Briggs, would find rest with those who had faithfully borne their burdens in "the testimony of Jesus."

Question Time

Question:

What are the unpardonable sins?
Wisconsin E. E.

Answer:

All sins which men have committed, when they repent, shall be forgiven them; for I came to preach repentance unto the sons of men. And blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme, shall be forgiven them that come unto me and do the works which they see me do.—Mark 3: 22, 23, I. V.

In the light of this teaching there is no set list of sins which can be termed unpardonable. All sins are pardonable when men repent. But on the other hand any and all sin is unpardonable so long as it remains unrepented of. Jesus goes on to say:

But there is a sin which shall not be forgiven. He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness; . . . and they shall inherit eternal damnation.

When by the gospel accompanied by the Spirit of God, a man is called upon to repent of his sinful ways, the Spirit carrying that command into his heart inasmuch that he recognizes it as being of God, there is offered the greatest and highest opportunity that can come in his life; if he heeds the call and turns to righteousness he is accepted of God and will receive eternal life. But if, allowing time for deliberation, he decides to reject that call, and continue apart from God in his life of sin, there is nothing more that God can do for that man. The Spirit is withdrawn and that permanently, and there is no desire to repent. That man has sinned against the Holy Spirit by which salvation might have been gained and cuts himself off from its saving power, leaving himself exposed to the spirit of the adversary. This is sinning against the Holy Ghost.

Question:

Please explain Psalm 15: 5 concerning the borrowing and lending of money.
Oklahoma R. H. C.

Answer:

Psalm 15: 5 reads: "He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."

I suppose that the question in mind is whether or not it is wrong to lend money or goods to another and charge for the use of it. This charge is called interest. Let us not become confused in the use of the words "interest" and "usury."

Webster's new Collegiate Dictionary gives the following definition of usury:

1. A premium paid for a loan of money or goods (obsolete).
2. The lending out of money for the use of it.
3. An unconscionable amount of interest. Law—in excess of the legal rate charged the borrower for the use of money.

The first definition, marked obsolete, is probably ruled out because a premium could mean any amount. It might be the legal or lawful rate or it might be an exorbitant or unlawful amount.

Most states in the United States fix by statute the lawful rate that may be charged for the use of money; beyond that percentage is considered usury.

In Deuteronomy 23: 19, 20 it is suggested that if you lend something to your brother it should be without charge, but "unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury."

If we interpret this to mean that this interest charge that may be made to a stranger is only the legal rate, well and good, but if we say that in dealing with a stranger we are privileged to stick him for all we can, that is a most unchristian attitude and very wrong.

In the parable in Matthew 25: 13-27 the servant is commended for having increased his talent by investing it for lawful gain.

Question:

Has the so-called healing in this church ever restored the disfigured body as before? If your answer is "yes" then I question, was it immediately as when Christ healed, so those present could see?
Oregon Mrs. V. B.

Answer:

An instance is recorded in the biography of Elder Joseph F. Burton, of the little son of Thomas Carter, who was afflicted with a severe curvature of the spine and intense suffering. After administration by Elder Burton and another elder the child fell into a peaceful sleep, and later was found to be entirely healed. (See Journal of History, Vol. 7, p. 147.)

I have had the personal experience of having a twisted foot and crushed ankle with great pain, of a character as to insure a lifelong crippling deformity, healed in answer to prayer; relief came instantaneously, though complete healing required a few days.

If similar cases known to various Saints were gathered up they would fill a volume, but it has been a policy of the church not to publicize or emphasize the matter of healings, such being incidental to the major work of healing the soul. I could tell of blind eyes restored to sight, and other healings, some immediate and some more slowly. Such things are given of God not to boast of, or to display before the world, but for the benefit of the Saints and the confirming of their faith. Jesus diligently avoided publicity, often telling the healed ones to "tell no man." When Jairus sought him to come and heal his daughter, he forbade the crowd to follow him. Upon arrival at the home the house was filled with mourners, for she had died, but he put them all out and then raised her to life.

Because occasionally healing was instantaneous it is not to be supposed that such was or is the rule. Jesus never promised instantaneous healing, the promise being "they shall recover."

Building Spiritual Reserves Through Prayer, Faith, Study

By Mrs. Lyle Woodstock

WOMEN OF THE Reorganized Church are seeking ways to build spiritual reserves in their homes to meet the needs of a constantly changing world. They are concerned with teaching their children that God will be able to strengthen, guide, and direct them in paths of righteousness and truth. They sense the need for a growing faith, ever building the family into a Zion unit which has spiritual strength and reserves to meet the problems and trials that face families today. They know how greatly direct communication with God is needed—how much they need to know his will, his love, and his purpose for mankind.

Prayer is the vital, compelling experience with God which enables us to fulfill his purposes in us. Apostle Hield has said, "Following a straight course to the accomplishment of God's purposes for us is possible only through asking his direction and then obediently following the instructions." God entices, invites, and even commands us to pray. We are admonished in II Nephi 14: 11, "For if ye would hearken unto the spirit which teaches a man to pray, ye would know that ye must pray: for the evil spirit teaches not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray."

THE SCRIPTURES give us instruction on how to pray as evidenced in the Lord's Prayer. We are to "pray without ceasing" (I Thessalonians 5: 17). In Luke 18: 1 we find,

"And he spake a parable unto them . . . that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." There is nothing too small to pray about; in our homes we need constant prayer as a guide to keep us in tune with the eternal laws of God.

We are told to pray in secret: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly" (Matthew 6: 6). It is good always to have a prayer in our hearts. We need often to go off by ourselves and humbly commune with God and Christ. We need to take time for meditation, for in silence we sometimes hear the still small voice that comes to minister to our needs.

First we have a desire to pray, then we learn to have a prayer in our hearts. This leads to the experience of prayer and communion with Him which we have when we seek him in secret.

As we grow in understanding of prayer we follow another step and offer prayers to our Heavenly Father in public. This is not always easy, but it makes us think more about why we pray and for what we pray. When we publicly witness for the Master, we realize we must walk on a higher plane than we have walked before. We receive much strength as we listen to the instruction of God in this respect, for he tells us in Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4: "And again, I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart, yea, before the world as well as in secret; in public as well as in private."

One of the most comforting experiences we mothers can have is to go to God in prayer for our children when they are ill. Somehow we know that they are in God's hands, that he will care for them, and that his love and guidance will be with them. Most children have great faith, and they are blessed through our prayers. Sometimes it is wise for us to request administration by the priesthood; children are helped to grow in faith and understanding of God's purposes on such occasions.

Perhaps the most difficult prayers to offer are for those who have wronged or hurt us. Yet God has told us we must do this if we are to be his children. In Matthew 5: 46 we read, "But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." We grow in the likeness of Christ when we teach our children to pray sincerely and humbly for those who have hurt them. When our families learn how to pray, what to pray for, and to pray without ceasing, Zion will prosper, and God's eternal laws will be our daily guide and strength.

WE BUILD SPIRITUAL RESERVES as we consistently seek to increase our faith. Our faith is tried many times when we hear disturbing news of our national leaders, when we see the truths of God being denied daily in the lives of those about us. How, then, can we have a growing faith? Faith is one of the gifts of the Spirit, but it is necessary that we want to have it. God has many blessings for us, but he wants us to seek them. In the Book of Mormon we read,

Home Column

But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith; yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words.—Alma 16: 151.

God's promises are sure, and we must have a growing faith if we are to rise up higher. In his letter to the Hebrews (11: 6) Paul says, "Without faith it is impossible to please him," but He rewards those who "diligently seek him."

If we have faith we have no need to fear, for God will direct our paths. Our children need to learn of God's word. They meet many temptations daily, and sometimes their strength fails them. What a strength we can give them through the Scriptures. In Proverbs 3: 5, 6 we read, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." In latter-day Scripture another promise is given us:

Verily, verily I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy, and then shall ye know, or by this shall you know, all things whatsoever you desire of me, which is pertaining unto things of righteousness, in faith believing in me that you shall receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 7.

OUR CHILDREN have a great need for a demonstration of faith on the part of the adults of the church. The greatest impact my mother has had on my life is her unwavering faith. It burns in her life regardless of the trials or discouragements that come. It touches all who know her. Such a faith is a rock on which to build lives of dedicated service to the Master. The faith of elderly people can be a beautiful thing and an inspiration to those who are just beginning their service to God and his church. As we try to build spiritual reserves we must keep faith with God and with our fellow men, for faith builds; lack of faith destroys. A growing faith is demonstrated by a life of increasing service to God through his church.

The restored church always has been distinctive for its emphasis on education and study. In June, 1831, the Lord spoke to Oliver Cowdery and William W. Phelps, giving them instruction concerning the printing and selecting and writing of books for schools that little children also might receive instruction. The first schools in Kansas City and Independence were erected by Saints.

If we are to be wise stewards, we must know God's plan and be able to teach it to others. There are many scriptural references pointing out that God intends us to study so that we will know for ourselves his eternal purposes. The Book of Mormon tells us in II Nephi 14: 4, 5: "Feast upon the words of Christ; for behold the words of Christ will tell you all things what ye should do . . . if ye can not understand them, it will be because ye ask not, neither do ye knock." In Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10 we are admonished: "Study my word" but "first seek to obtain my word," and in 85: 36, "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith." God calls today for workers qualified for the great task of building the kingdom. He has given us the plan; he also gives us the strength and help to use his plan. If we are faithful, God promises eternal life.

He speaks to us today through the Doctrine and Covenants: "Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold, he that hath eternal life is rich" (10:3).

Through prayer, faith, and study we can live spiritually today and build spiritual reserves for tomorrow in our individual lives, in our homes, in our church, and in our community. As we build let us remember that true prayer, faith, and study are given expression by service for the Master in the building of the kingdom of God here on earth.

In Light or Shadow?

This morning I was scanning an editorial about summer camps which are available to the crippled and palsied children. "The camp program," said the writer, "is designed to challenge the youngster to live in the light of his capabilities, not in the shadow of his handicaps."

This phrase struck me forcibly. What an opportunity for those youngsters! What a valuable lesson for them to learn. Many of us, fortunate to be normal in every respect, have not taken to heart this important truth, and are at this moment living in the shadow of our handicaps instead of in the light of our capabilities. Too many of us reach out for the convenient excuse, "I can't," and hide behind its flimsiness rather than honestly evaluating our possibilities and building upon them.

Living is now, not tomorrow. How much can we do today? What more can we accomplish? How can we reach higher, stretch taller mentally and spiritually? Shall it be light or shadow? It is up to us.

A Look at the Institute

On College Student Conferences

In keeping with the practice of our holding conferences and institutes for various interest groups such as women, priesthood, and young people, the church is now seeking to minister to the peculiar needs of college students by encouraging conferences for them, too.

In addition to the annual Fall College Student Conference, such as that to be held at Rochester, New York, September 5 to 7 this year, there have sprung up regional gatherings of students interested in the church. This spring, two such conferences were held—one on the campus of Michigan State College at Lansing on April 11 and 12, and the other at Central Missouri State Teachers College, Warrensburg, on April 25 and 26. Each gathering, arranged largely by the student group of the host campus, served several of our thirty church campus groups.

From the College Student Institute at Warrensburg, Missouri, the theme of which was "Education for Service," came the following brief articles written as reactions by students in attendance. We hope that next year there will be more such institutes to serve a larger number of our church campus groups and their friends.

CARL MESLE, Secretary,

Committee on Ministry to College People

HOW CAN I SERVE the church? Where will my profession fit in? Can I witness for the church as a doctor, a teacher, a journalist? These were some of the problems faced at the College Student Institute. Right at the very heart of this institute was this challenge: I am a student who wants to serve the church. How can I use my educational opportunities as a means of serving?

We talked about the problems involved in preparing for our professions. Our thoughts were directed to the educational influences in our daily lives. We attempted to find ways to use our professions in giving service to the church. In the discussion groups we saw and heard young men and women who were deeply concerned about their field of vocation. We were students who had a vital interest in the Restoration Movement but did not know how we could best contribute to it.

I think we felt the call of service as much as Peter, Matthew, or Paul did in an earlier day. Our Heavenly Father needs men and women who have desires to serve, and this counsel has come to the church in our day: "If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest."

We were filled with all the usual aspirations of and needs for young people, but we sensed an awareness of responsibility and opportunity that is probably unparalleled in the church. We college students have access to the latest developments in business, agriculture, engineering, and medicine. These can help us to serve mankind and, in turn, the church—but we need more. We need a deep faith in God and a knowledge of his purposes for man. We must know about the church. We need to put on the cloak of Christ's gospel and wear it always.

In this world of books we can become educated to serve. We should desire to excel in scholastic achievement, to participate in campus activities, to be responsible citizens.

These are definitely formative years for us. As we grasp new concepts, gain bits of knowledge, and find ways to cope with problems, we will largely form the foundation for all our later actions.

We realize that our stewardship involves everything we possess in the way of talents and time. It is our opportunity to make these college years productive ones, both for ourselves and for the church.

WE SEE THE NEED to locate in our profession where there is also available a church relationship. We understand the desirability of wisely choosing our profession. In the light of these things, it seems most important that, regardless of our choice, we go all out for the profession we do choose, and we know that there is some opportunity in every field.

We are all called to serve, and we present ourselves to the church for service. Perhaps we can be pioneers in a movement that will help young people to see their stewardship in educational aspirations, that will inspire them to seek stronger church ties in their college days, that will aid them in visualizing the closeness of their professional fields and church activity.

Education that is motivated by a desire to serve is what we vision. We see a vision of books and faith combined. We see the vision of students of chemistry, nursing, law, and music who are saying, "Here am I, O Lord, send me."

As we take a look back at the institute we are aware that there were no world-shattering problems solved, but our eyes were opened to the endless possibilities that young people, especially college students, have. There is a need for service, and with an education we will be better able to serve. From this institute we move out to serve.

Needed: A More Adequate Program

By Mary Cooper

LIFE CAN GET mighty tedious sometimes, especially for college and university students. And it takes something such as the College Student Institute held at Warrensburg this spring to get them out of this rut of busy-busyness with no regard to other important and worth-while contributions.

Too often students lose contact with God while involved in university life, and many times it's a hard old road to get back in tune with Christ.

Highly respected professors and their disbelief tend to make students question, as do situations and problems encountered in laboratory and texts which do not prove, so to speak, biblical teachings.

It is at this point that students need someone who understands to exercise the art of listening and give much-needed guidance and advice. And this is where the college student groups at each of the universities enter the picture. By conversing together, worshipping together, studying together, serving together, and recreating together, they gain a feeling of unity and closeness to God in a period when doubts tend to reign supreme.

All this is just a preliminary or background to the point that student groups are invaluable. But they would render a much greater service if they were better organized and had some continuity which carried over from year to year.

IT SEEMS TO ME that not only do we need student groups at university and college centers throughout the country, but we need an active, progressive, and continuous program at each school. For this is the point at which many students drop by the wayside. It is here, so it seems to me, that the church needs to establish a strong foothold for students to hang to.

Also, here is the point and place where many are searching for truth, which presents a splendid opportunity for evangelism. Busy students who double as leaders for their group—and often for the branch—need support to cope with such situations.

I feel that to meet adequately and successfully the needs of a college group—individually and collectively—each individual must contribute as much as possible. But due to school work, this contribution is limited, so I believe college groups need more help. Other church student groups on campuses have full-time leaders who provide continuity in addition to many other valuable services. Why shouldn't we?

Bill Higdon Awarded a Fellowship

Bill Higdon, son of Bishop and Mrs. Earl T. Higdon, has been awarded a fellowship by the National Science Foundation. The National Science Foundation, the directors of which are appointed by the President of the United States, is an organization which functions to control and co-ordinate scientific inquiry in the United States, especially as it relates to national defense, and to encourage young scholars in science. Its funds are appropriated by Congress. Bill was awarded the fellowship to study toward his Ph.D. in the field of soils at the University of Missouri. His wife, the former Barbara McFarlane, is also working toward a doctorate in the field of speech. She is an instructor in speech at the University of Missouri. The Higdon's have a year-old daughter, Miriam.

New Horizons

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Lewis of Archbald, Pennsylvania, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary by holding a reception at their home. They were married January 17, 1903, at Merthyr Tydfil, Glamorganshire, South Wales. Brother Lewis has been a member of the Reorganized Church for sixty-five years and holds the office of priest; Sister Lewis has been a member about forty-three years. They are active workers in Archbald Branch. Brother Lewis is choir director; he also has led bands and taught music.

The Lewises have four children: Leonard of the home; Gilbert of New Castle, Delaware; Edward of Binghamton, New York, and Mrs. Stanley La-Polt of Springfield, Ohio; ten grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Note of Thanks

Since my accident on January 4 I have received many cards and letters, as well as reminders that I have been the subject of special prayers. I am thankful for these and pray that God may continue to manifest his interest in his people. He has been mindful of my needs and blessed me richly. Soon I hope to discard my crutches, as I am much better.

True Vowkeepers

In these days when the breakup of homes seems to be so common, and lurid stories of incompatibility and faithlessness are found frequently in newspapers and magazines, the Herald is glad to note that a Kansas City couple, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Aurand of 4915 Baltimore Avenue, invited couples throughout the United States who have celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary to join with them in an annual celebration.

The following clipping, sent by Sister R. L. Fulk of Holt, Missouri, is taken from the Kansas City Star:

"There still are many more folks making a go of their wedding vows than there are divorced persons," Aurand commented. "People are living longer and happier together through better medical knowledge and Christian education.

"We believe the world is growing a little better year by year. The stable marriages of yesteryear have helped to make it that way, and these successful couples should be honored."

THE PATTERN

Dear friend . . . what lovelier words than these Have fallen from the lips of man?
What depth of beauty lives within
The heart of God's great plan!

The love for friends that grew from out
The great and burning love of him
Shall warm us with its steady glow
When every earthly hope grows dim.

There is no friend like him who lived
Beneath the shadow of the cross.
None took his life—he laid it down—
Nor ever counted it a loss.

And so because the love of God
Forever was, and will not end;
Man finds it in his heart of hearts
To gently whisper, brother . . . friend.

A Testimony of Faith

I am very young in the church, having been a member only two years, but I have received assurance of the authenticity of the restored gospel. My companion and I were of another faith, yet he always defended the Reorganized Church even when he knew little about it.

When we were considering buying a home in Fanshawe, I got down on my knees and prayed that if it be God's will for us to have this house we would be able to buy it in the near future. In less than a month we were living in it (the house had belonged to a member of the church). We began attending services with the Saints, and in March Elder Bill Haden conducted a two weeks' series of meetings. At the close of the series my companion and I and four of our five children were baptized; the fifth was blessed.

When I became skeptical about some of the divine claims I prayed for God to make known to me in some way if they were true. As I prayed a voice spoke to me, "Didn't you pray for this home?" All doubts were immediately removed from my mind. I am very grateful for this.

God's Spirit was constantly with me during the death of my husband on March 30 and also at the death of my mother on May 2. Had it not been for the heartfelt sympathy and kind deeds of the good people here and elsewhere, as well as the "touch of the Master's hand," I could not have endured these experiences. Now I have a greater desire than ever to direct my life that my children may, through my influence, qualify for citizenship in God's kingdom.

May I have your prayers?

Pennies for Graceland

I have just finished reading Feather in the Wind. Madelyn Galbraith is a very interesting writer—there was not a dull chapter in the book, and I enjoyed every page. I was glad that she gave the Book of Mormon such an important place—to me it is the most wonderful book in the world. I spend much time marking what I think are important passages and sending copies of the book to persons I think might be interested in ancient American history. I don't think we can ever thank our Heavenly Father enough for revealing it to us. When we read how God has never forgotten his covenant with Abraham and his seed (Acts 3:25) and his promise to the Gentiles of salvation through obedience to the gospel, we should be truly thankful. The covenant God made with the house of Israel must have been considered important by the prophets of the Book of Mormon, as it is mentioned over thirty-five times. The Book of Mormon certainly teaches that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

I celebrated my eightieth birthday on June 1. I have been a member of the Reorganized Church for over fifty-five years. During this time I have seen much progress in the work. I was an active worker until the last five years, which I have spent in a wheel chair.

When I read L. S. Wight's article in the June 9 Herald I decided I wanted to help Graceland. My means are limited, but I have started a "penny a day fund for Graceland" which, at the end of the year, will be $3.65. If a thousand or two thousand people would do this, it would add a lot to the regular Graceland Day offering. I keep my penny jar where everyone can see it. If I get some donations, I shall be able to give even more.

Greetings From

Mrs. F. G. Pitt

I have been thinking of the many years of happiness I have had in telling the gospel story, and today I would be so happy to rededicate in an active way my life to the service of the Master. I realize I do not have much longer to serve, so I wish to make the most of the opportunities given me.

My travels have been limited in the past few years, but I have taken especial notice of our faithful Sunday school teachers, some of whom I recall through the years, always to be found at their post of duty. I feel certain their reward will be great.

As some of you may recall, Brother Pitt and I represented our church at the World's Exposition in San Francisco, California. Most of the religions of the world were there represented. Many had large reception rooms with comfortable chairs, etc., while we stood in the great aisle space from around ten in the morning until six or seven or later each evening except Sundays. We had a long table with our church literature and a chair at either end and a sign above saying, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—our literature is free."

Many hundreds passed through this aisle each day. There was a constant stream of people at times, and we were busy. Some were very interested and would seat themselves to hear more. I recall many who returned several times to ask questions and to listen as we explained to others. In leaving some said, "You have the most reasonable explanation of the gospel we have heard." I cannot forget two ladies who seated themselves to hear more, and when Brother Pitt walked over where we were they said, "Mr. Pitt, your wife is sowing seed here that may bear fruit in Atlantic City."

One of my outstanding experiences was this. A lady came along at the noon hour, stopped, read the sign, and began to look through our literature. I did not approach her at once, as I wished her to make her selections first. When she had done so and was about to walk away weeping I went to her and said, "Our literature is free. We'll be glad to have you help yourself." She replied, "This is all I want," and left. She had picked up the Zion's Hope, and on it was the picture of Jesus—the one I had liked so much when I was a little girl. I looked after her and my prayer was that there might be something in that copy which would touch her heart and bring her back to the fold. I felt she had wandered away from the tender Shepherd's care, but now this little Sunday school paper of better days gone by had brought memories to her.

I am truly appreciative of all the privileges that have been mine in traveling throughout the world with the gospel message, walking along the shores of Galilee, and through the many villages where Jesus walked and taught. I am grateful that I was able to assist Brother Pitt in his work as Temple attendant. There in the "House of the Lord" we spent each day telling the gospel story to the many hundreds who visited Kirtland each season. Before we were to leave at the close of the season, I had this experience. A party of four—two ladies and two gentlemen—came in and registered; one was a clergyman. After we told them the gospel story and the history of the Temple, they left. In a few days the clergyman returned and asked me if I would tell the same story to a party he would bring the next day. They came, and then the following day this gentleman returned alone. He was very interested and said, "I believe what you have said.

I feel I am preaching for a salary and parsonage while my heart is here with you people." Then he asked "What can I do?" I replied, "I wish Mr. Pitt were here to talk with you, but he is in Willoughby today; however, I will tell you this. You know Jesus said, 'I am the way, the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by Me.' What did Jesus do? Well, first he went away to the River Jordan to be baptized. Why did he go so far? I know it is quite a distance, for I have gone there several times when in Jerusalem. He went for two reasons: One was, his servant John was there baptizing. The other was, 'there was much water there.' Water was scarce around Jerusalem when we were there, but had just a little in a bowl been sufficient for baptism, Jesus would not needed to have gone so far. He who is our leader, our witness, and our example, went to John and was immersed in water. Inasmuch as that was his way, it is our way, our mode of baptism."

I told him, "Sometimes when one obeys he may lose a friend or loved one by so doing, but in his choice he has preferred to heed the voice of the Good Shepherd who said, 'My sheep know my voice and a stranger they will not follow.' We saw in Bethlehem and other parts of the Holy Land how the sheep and little lambs recognized only their shepherd's voice. Now you ask what can you do. Well, I can safely tell you to take it to the Lord in prayer, asking for guidance with a determination to follow where he leads, for the promise is 'Ask and ye shall receive. Seek and ye shall find. Knock and it shall be opened unto you.'"

I am more than appreciative of the wonderful companionship I had with Brother Pitt. I find consolation now in the thought that I cannot recall a time or opportunity I did not accept in the gospel work. I appreciate also my loved ones and many dear Saints and friends in all parts of the world with whom we visited and whose hospitality we shared.

At this writing I am in "City Beautiful"—Orlando, Florida—where I now make my home. Many evenings as I sit on the veranda I look up into the starry heavens and marvel at the handiwork of God. As I look up I recall the statement in the Bible, "There is one glory of the sun, one of the moon, and one of the stars, and as one star differeth from another star in glory, so shall it be in the resurrection" (I Corinthians 15: 41, 42). How kind and wonderful and just is our Heavenly Father who will reward all for the good they have done. Even a cup of cold water given a disciple will carry its reward. Then I look at the moon. It is beautiful, but it is a reflected glory compared to the sun.

We of Orlando were made happy recently by a visit from President Israel Smith who spent a few days with us as the guest of his niece, Doris Fredrick, and her family. Brother and Sister Velt of Independence, Missouri, also visited Orlando and spent an afternoon with me. I remember Sister Velt when she was a girl in Sydney, Australia. My nephew, Harlow Fredrick, and his wife are kind to me in every way. The family—Audentia, Bettye, Buddy, and Janet with their companions—all see that "Aunt Rosie" has every attention.

I celebrated my eightieth birthday recently. I realize the years are passing, though I do not dwell upon that, for such is life for us all.

I wish to thank all who have remembered me with cards or messages through the years. In closing I say from the depths of my heart

I love to tell the story
'Twill be my theme in glory
To tell the old, old story
Of Jesus and his love.

Restoration Banquet at Chico

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—A candlelight portrayal of the Lord's Last Supper was the special observance for Maundy Thursday evening at the church, with Ira Sliger, Harold Plumb, H. M. Brown, Leon Ultican, Paul Hurst, Robert Lowry, and the pastor taking part.

Representing the church at the Good Friday services sponsored by the local ministerial alliance, the pastor spoke on the theme, "It Is Finished." Following the service the new film of the resurrection story, "I Beheld His Glory," sponsored by the Chico Council of Church Women received an enthusiastic audience. A member of the local branch was publicity director for this project.

Stake Bishop J. Stanley Kelley of Los Angeles delivered the Easter morning service, using the topic, "New Horizons." This was the second visit to Chico for Bishop and Mrs. Kelley. He also presented the evening message.

On April 6 the Zion's League presented the Restoration Banquet. A tableau of early scenes from church history was portrayed which included "Joseph Praying in the Grove," "The Translation," "The Martyrs," and "A Typical R.L.D.S. Family of Today."

Playing the lead part in a three-act play at Aymer Jay Hamilton school on April 10 was eleven-year-old Glenn Selby.

The baptisms of Robert Lowry and Loren Plumb were conducted by the pastor, H. D. Hintz, in Chico Creek, Sunday, April 12.

Dr. William Stegeman of Chico State College spoke to the congregation on "Children and the Community" the evening of May 14.

On May 15 a combination farewell and bridal shower was given for Miss Marjorie Hintz, bride-elect of John A. Muceus of Fresno, in the patio garden of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Albertson.

Approximately $120.00 was cleared by the women's department at the District Fair May 20-24.

David Gene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Copper, and Kathleen Rose, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Crawford, were blessed by Elders George C. Price and H. D. Hintz on May 31 at the eleven o'clock service.—Reported by HELEN E. HINTZ.

Church School Has Open House

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—On March 8 District President L. A. MacDonald gave a report on the priesthood conference which he attended in Independence February 11-14.

A men's retreat was held at Happy Valley March 20-22. Many from the branch attended. A meeting of young adults of the district was held in Sacramento in April.

Special services were held in the morning on Palm Sunday with Communion service in the evening. Two identical services were held on Easter morning. In the evening a play entitled "He Lives" was presented under the direction of Mabelle Nephew.

A business meeting was held on April 1 to consider the report of the committee appointed to study proposed bylaws for governing Happy Valley.

The Northern California Graceland Association presented a talent show at the church on April 10.

Mother's Day observance included special music by the choir and a sermon by the pastor in the morning. A play was presented in the evening under the direction of Jewell Dawson.

On May 17, Elder R. H. Porter of San Jose was guest speaker.

A home talent program directed by Phillipa Gann was presented at the monthly branch dinner May 15.

The women's department held a rummage sale May 21-23.

A number from the branch participated in the work camp at Happy Valley during the Memorial Day week end.

Babies blessed recently were Cynthia Rae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Glauner, April 26; Lorrie Lavina Vincent, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Vincent, May 4; Janet Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ferris, May 17; Susan Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Damron, May 10; Jeri Diana, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Al Gilding, May 24.

The church school held open house on June 7. Parents especially were invited to visit their children's classes and observe the work being done. Pastor Myron R. Schall presided at the Communion service in the morning and preached his farewell sermon in the evening before leaving for an absence of two months. He and Mrs. Schall plan to visit their son, Myron R., Jr., and wife in Seattle, Washington, then go to the pastor's former home in Colorado, visiting several branches en route.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Hanton Holds Series

WEST BRANCH, MICHIGAN.—Elder Hanton of Sandusky, Michigan, held a two-week series of meetings March 22-April 3. The closing day, Good Friday, four young boys—Billy and Richard Hamilton, Glen Goff, and Andrew Goulder—were baptized. They were confirmed Easter evening by Elder Ben Ouderkirk, pastor. A Communion service followed.

Easter morning John Blackstock, district president, was the speaker. Attendance was 101.

The annual bazaar and bake sale was held May 2 to raise money for the building fund. The Junior Zion's League, under the leadership of Sister Viola Spencer, has also been active in raising money for this fund.

Sunday, May 3, Bishop Beck was the guest speaker.

Louanne Lee, infant daughter of Sgt. and Mrs. Lee Selms, was blessed on Sunday, May 3, by Elder Ouderkirk and Bishop Beck.—Reported by EDNA MATTHEWS

Baptisms in Branch

GRAND VALLEY, ONTARIO.—On Children's Day, June 14, Gerald Clark, Donna Graham, and Marlene Ferns were baptized by R. J. Farthing, pastor, with the confirmations at the ten o'clock service following. The officiating ministers were Elders John H. Taylor, Walter Clark, and R. J. Farthing.

At this service the same elders blessed three infants: Janis, daughter of Alvin and Nelda Taylor; Douglas, son of Grant and Mildred Taylor; and Marylin, daughter of Willard and Lenora Taylor.—Reported by R. J. FARTHING.

Improvements Made on Building

AURORA, ILLINOIS.—Apostle D. O. Chesworth was guest speaker February 4. Once a month Seventy Cecil Ettinger has presented messages to near capacity crowds. The efforts of these brethren were highlighted during the Easter week end when the spring conference of the Northeastern Illinois District was held. Three priesthood lectures were given in connection with the theme of Christ's death and resurrection. Out-of-town speakers have been Burdette Huen and William Pike from Plano Branch and Buren Lenox of Chicago.

The Zion's League activities have been continuing with good attendance. Fourteen young people attended the district Restoration Festival held at Mission Branch in March. A number of speakers have lectured to the Leaguers and also have taken part in panel discussions on questions of faith and the church. A number of projects have been undertaken, such as painting the church floors and assisting in raising funds on the building project under the direction of Brother and Sister Vernon and Anne Pettit.

The work on the church basement has been progressing. The ducts for the furnace have been installed and most of the kitchen equipment has been set into place. The lawn has been landscaped and seeded, and bushes planted along the outside stairway.

The women's council hold their meetings every two weeks. Three special speakers, Sister Ruth Wildermuth of Plano Branch, Sister Doris Woodstock of Chicago, Illinois; and Apostle D. O. Chesworth of Lamoni, Iowa, presented different viewpoints on the church work.

The council has sponsored a covered dish supper once a month with the proceeds given to the building fund. Each family drew the name of another family to be entertained at dinner, the donation to be added to the building fund.

Priesthood classes are held every two weeks with Charles Homuth as teacher. Nonpriesthood men have been attending all meetings. A worship class hour designed to learn methods to improve the services of the church has been taught by the pastor, Paul Gouty, each Wednesday evening. The worship service is conducted each Sunday by guest leaders.

The social activities of the Aurora group have been well supported. All organized groups meet regularly once a month for some form of recreation. The children had a Peter Pan party at the Paramount Theatre. The children's robed choir sang on April 19, observing Sanitarium Day.

The branch extends a cordial invitation to all Saints, especially those traveling around during their vacation, to attend services at the church located at Cedar and Locust Streets, three blocks north of Lincoln Highway Number 30—west side of city.—Reported by CHARLES REEDY

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.—Evangelist Ray Whiting held a series of meetings April 19 to May 1, with an average attendance of about one hundred persons. On Wednesday night, April 22, a fellowship was held in honor of the nonmembers attending the services. The choir sang each night with the exception of April 27 when the Carthage choir sang. Sister May Gray directed the Joplin choir, assisted by Dale Swall and Robert Leslie. Special numbers were given by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Trimble of Pittsburg, Kansas, accompanied by Kenneth Cooper of East St. Louis. Sandra Trimble of Webb City and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shank of Carthage also gave special numbers. The two groups of the women's department met at the church on April 28 for a covered dish luncheon. The program featured a devotional by the pastor, Elder Stephen Black and Sister Black. The speaker was Brother Whiting.

On May 2, Brother Black baptized Truman Siler, Mrs. Charles Treece, and Mrs. Carl Simpson. On Sunday afternoon, May 3, six people were baptized at the Joplin church. They were Charles Caywood, a former Baptist minister, and his wife and daughter, Mrs. Mary Caywood and Schyrle Caywood. Elder L. D. Alridge of the Noel, Missouri, mission baptized them. The other three candidates baptized by Brother Black were Alison Nichol, Mary Watkins, and George Siler. The confirmation service was held that evening with Elders Black, Seth Spangler, and David Lohr confirming. On May 8, the young matrons of the Joplin and Webb City Branches sponsored a mother-daughter party. Those in charge were Mary Cochran, Lois Leslie, and May Gray. Four gifts were presented. One was to Emma Carter as the only charter member of the branch now living, and three were given to mothers who had sons now serving the church in the office of Seventy.

A Mother's Day program was given by the children at the church school hour. Karen Lekan, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Kingore, was blessed by Elders Black and Lohr.

The Social Workers' Class met May 14 and voted to buy six signs to be placed on the highways directing people to the church.

The Joplin radio program time is changed from eight forty-five to ten-thirty on Sunday morning over the same station.

The study group and young matron's group of the women's department elected officers for the coming year. Those elected were study group president, Ina McKinley; vice-president, Pauline Tedder; secretary and treasurer, Inez Benton; young matron's president, Mary Frances Grett; vice-president, Helen Siler; secretary, Phyllis Nichol; treasurer, Ruth Guinnee; and reporter, Lorine Irvine.

Vacation church school was held June 1-12. An average of forty-five children attended. Mary Cochran was in charge of the school. Other workers were Brother and Sister Black, Brother Spangler, Mary Spangler, Mae Nash, Margaret Skileo, Margo Irvine, Lois Leslie, Mae Smith, Ada Gurley, Jean Loah, Gwen Rolleg, Minnie Goodman, Phyllis Nichol, Elsie Grossman, Nellie Lasalle, Linda Irvine, and Vera Karlstrom.

High school graduates are Delores Bone and Gary Benton. The boys in service who visited home in May were Jay McKinley, Don Nash, and Harold Mink.

On June 12, a picnic was held for Bible school workers, and on June 14, an achievement program was held. Four children were baptized at a service following. They were Sherryl Giet by her grandfather, Elder Fred Graves; Christopher Black, Richard Junke, and Douglas Brooks were baptized by the pastor. Sherryl was confirmed by Elders Black and Graves; Chris by Elders Lohr and Black; Douglas by Elders Graves and Lohr; and Richard by Elders Black and Lohr. The junior class sang "Jacob's Ladder," directed by Margaret Skiles. Lorine Carrows accompanied them. Michele and Lauren Black sang a duet. The pastor and Elder Graves were in charge, and Brother Lohr gave the confirmation message. This brings the baptism total for the year to ten.—Reported by MRS. RACHEL M. TROYER

DEATHS

WHITE.—Miranda Jane, daughter of William and Margaret McCullough, was born September 27, 1870, in Iowa and died June 1, 1953. In 1887 she was married to Samuel Lee White, who preceded her in death. Two daughters, Neola Hatcher and Enid Baird, and a son, Reid White, also preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for thirty-five years.

Surviving are four daughters: Reba Burditt and Evalena Mueller of Hugoton, Kansas; Allie Milstead of Aberdeen, South Dakota; Erma Cooter of Salinas, California; a son, Mahor Rex White of Fort Riley, Kansas; three sisters and one brother, all of Osgood, Missouri; twenty grandchildren; and thirty-four great-grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by C. E. Owen and Dale B. Coen.

ATKINS.—Reuben Polton, was born September 15, 1862, at Salt Lake City, Utah, and died March 31, 1953, at the Independence Sanitarium. With his parents he left Utah at the age of seven, moving to Illinois. In his youth he traveled for the Elliott and Beasley Publishing Company of Chicago. On one of his trips he met Karen Marie Jensen to whom he was married on October 16, 1887; six children were born to them. Two daughters preceded him in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December 4, 1870, and always bore a strong testimony of the divinity of the Restoration Movement. One of his outstanding experiences was when he met David Whitmer who, with upraised hand, repeated from memory his testimony in the Book of Mormon. Brother Atkins spent most of his life in Independence.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Helen Atkins of the home; Mrs. Florence M. Moore of Independence; and Mrs. Dottie Short of Republic, Missouri; a son, Clarence Roy Atkins of Independence; six grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and one brother, Henry Atkins of Los Angeles, California. Funeral services were held at Speaks Chapel in Independence, President Israel A. Smith and Elder Paul Kelsey officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

McKIM.—Burton L., son of William and Carrie McKim, was born January 3, 1881, in Deloit, Iowa, and died May 17, 1953, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 18, 1892, ordained a priest on February 9, 1910, and an elder on November 12, 1911. He served as a missionary several years, his first mission being to Hawaii. He also was assigned to the Utah Mission. On November 25, 1914, he was married to Floy Wind, who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Viva Ellen Higdon of Oakland, California; two sons: William W. of the home and Robert L. of Kansas City, Missouri; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at West College Church in Independence, Elders Evan A. Fry and William F. Bolinger officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

McMILLAN.—William, born November 15, 1882, at Lesmahagow, Scotland, and died May 3, 1953, at Victoria, British Columbia. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 20, 1917. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Henry Piedt. Interment was in Royal Oak Cemetery.

ADEY.—Elizabeth, was born January 25, 1869, in Leicestershire, England, and died May 31, 1953, in Des Moines, Iowa. She was married on November 5, 1887, to Matthew Adey. Since her youth she had been a devoted member of the Reorganized Church. Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Laura Backlund of Des Moines; Mrs. Frank S. Nelson of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Mrs. C. M. Childers of Chicago, Illinois; and Mrs. Marvin Brown, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and a brother, Homer Hull of Des Moines. Funeral services were held in the Des Moines Central Church, Pastor Herbert M. Scott officiating.

EMMETT.—William J., son of Joseph and Francis Emmett, was born November 16, 1877, in Reed City, Michigan, and died May 27, 1953, in Kansas City, Missouri. His wife, the former Valla Crayne, preceded him in death in 1928. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since he was eight years old.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Catherine Colgan of Kansas City, Missouri, and two brothers. Funeral services were held at the Willert Chapel in Kansas City, Elder E. W. Lloyd officiating. Burial was in Mt. Moriah Cemetery.

HEAD.—Madge E., was born September 17, 1881, at Creston, Iowa, and died May 14, 1953, at her home in Stewartville, Missouri. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for many years and its progress was her first interest.

Surviving are two brothers: Walter W. Head of Stamford, Connecticut, and Alfred Head of Honeywell, Kansas; and two sisters: Mrs. Bruman Bowen of St. Joseph, Missouri, and Mrs. B. R. Rollett of Stewartville. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Emery E. Jennings and Frank L. Henderks. Interment was in the Stewartville cemetery.

LONG.—Frederick George, was born in 1888 at Toronto, Ontario, and died May 22, 1953, in Toronto. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church many years ago and held the office of elder.

He is survived by his wife, Charlotte Elizabeth Clark; five daughters: Luella Glandon of Wayne, Michigan; Margaret Scott and Betty Davis of Scarboro; Ruth Flint of Toronto; and Patricia of the home; five sons: Frederick of Severn Bridge; Harold of Nobleton; Charles of Trenton; Frank and David of Toronto; two sisters: Nellie Christie and Ethel Thorpe of Toronto; and two brothers: Stanley and William Long of Toronto. Two sons, Norman and William, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the William Sherrin Chapel, Elder J. L. Prentice officiating. Interment was in Pine Hill Cemetery.

SKINNER.—George Edward, was born October 1, 1894, near Hersey, Michigan, and died May 12, 1952, at the Wainwright, Alberta, Hospital. He was married in November, 1914, to Mary Hager, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August, 1914.

Besides his wife he leaves ten children: Mrs. J. A. Merriman, Mrs. J. E. Deans, Mrs. R. Cobourne, Arvid, George, Kenneth, John, Edward, Donald, and Stewart; a brother, Joe; two sisters: Mrs. A. L. Kilpatrick and Mrs. Charlene Hamilton; his mother; and sixteen grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder William Cornish. Burial was in Long Lake Cemetery.

STEPHENS.—Arminia May, was born December 23, 1874, in Boomer Township, Iowa, and died May 30, 1953, at the Jennie Edmundson Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She spent her entire life in Pottawattamie County, managing a cafe at Neola for twenty-eight years before moving to Council Bluffs in 1939. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth.

She is survived by a son, O. L. Stephens of Great Falls, Montana; a sister, Mrs. Myrtle Goodwater of Mesa, Arizona; and a brother, R. J. Burbridge of Council Bluffs. The funeral was held at Woodring Chapel in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Grange Cemetery near Council Bluffs.

WINN.—A 2/c Ted V., was born April 21, 1933, at Jonesboro, Arkansas, and was killed September 30, 1952, while serving in the Armed Forces at March Air Force Base, Riverside, California. Before enlisting on April 13, 1950, he attended Sacramento High School. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 8, 1941.

He is survived by his mother, Mildred Simmonds; his stepfather, Bill Simmonds, and a sister, Mrs. Lila Venell Howard, all of Sacramento; and his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Elrod of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were held at Klump's Chapel of Flowers in Sacramento, Elder L. A. MacDonald officiating. Interment was in the Odd Fellow's Cemetery, Sacramento.

ROBERSON.—Kenneth Duane, died June 1, 1953, at the Escambia General Hospital in Pensacola, Florida, at the age of six. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Roberson; a brother, Larry; and a sister, Dianne, all of Pensacola; and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. McCurdy of Jay, Florida. Funeral services were held at Coldwater Cemetery by Elder A. D. McCall.

FISHER.—William Rice, was born June 13, 1886, in Indiana and died March 10, 1953, at Tolfree Memorial Hospital in West Branch, Michigan, after a lingering illness. He had lived in Michigan since his youth and was engaged in farming. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 6, 1917, ordained a teacher on October 17, 1917, and an elder on September 22, 1918. Throughout his life he was active in church work.

He leaves his wife, Eva; a daughter, Mrs. Tulalia Boomer of Wayne, Michigan; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Steuermol Chapel, Elder John Humphrey officiating. Burial was in Brookside Cemetery.

DAMRON.—Milton Wesley, was born November 6, 1864, in Kaufman County, Texas, and died June 1, 1953, in southern California, where he was a well-known rancher. Surviving are three daughters: Margaret Knapp, Lola Wiekler, and Mamie Tyler; and a son, Don Damron. Funeral services were held at the Wee Kirk O' the Heather in Forest Lawn Cemetery in Los Angeles, Elder G. E. Tickeymer officiating.

GRAVES.—Ernest Oscar, son of Samuel and Cora Graves, was born January 23, 1879, at Cherokee, Kansas, and died May 21, 1953, at his home in Springfield, Colorado. On September 28, 1902, he was married to Eva Fall, who survives him. Two sons, Ernie and Glen, preceded him in death. Later in life he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member until his death.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Lois Lee Shane of Pueblo, Colorado; a son, Max F. Graves of Redwood City, California; six grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. Alice Wentworth of Stillwater, Oklahoma; and a brother, Arthur Graves of Kansas City, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted at Springfield by Lemuel Dyke and at Buffalo, Oklahoma, by Clarence Owen.

DIEM.—Ernest James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Diem, was born January 24, 1900, in Carsonville, Michigan, and died June 10, 1953, at his home near Carsonville. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 3, 1909, and since August 27, 1933, had served in the office of priest in Sandusky Branch.

He is survived by his wife, Sarah; five sons: Kenneth, Floyd, Ralph, Robert, and Howard; a daughter, Lenor, all of the home; his parents; and his twin brother, Earl. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Elroy Hanton and Alma Campbell. Interment was in Washington Cemetery, Carsonville.

Introducing

COURTNEY LEE HUNTER, Columbus, Ohio (page 10), has a "... dream to see the artful use of fiction emerge as a powerful influence in the evangelistic ministry." She was born thirty years ago in Cleveland, Ohio. Ten years ago she was married to Richard F. Hunter. While he was in military service, she took on the job of driving a four-wheeled tandem army truck for the mess hall.

She was graduated from the Glassboro, New Jersey, high school in 1941. She studied in Ohio State University from 1941 to 1943. Her hobby is raising flowers. She has a special interest in the religious education of children.

The Hunters have three children: Michael, 6; Jody, 5; and Cinda, 7 months. Sister Hunter has belonged to the church five years.

EDWIN SPARGO, Vancouver, British Columbia (page 8), seems to operate his retail food business, with his brother Stanley, so as to pay expenses while promoting the work of the kingdom. He is counselor to the pastor of Vancouver Branch and to the president of the British Columbia District. He is also nonresident pastor for the district and district historian. He has a preaching schedule which takes him all through the district. He has just been appointed as the official representative of the church as incorporated in Canada.

Brother Spargo was born in Wiggan, Lancashire, England, in 1899. He moved to Canada in 1910 and has conducted his business in the same location for forty years. He was educated in the schools of England and Canada. He also took night courses in theology, church history, and New Testament in Greek.

His hobbies are visiting the sick in hospitals and homes and visiting the aged. Brother Spargo is a member of the British Columbia Art and Historical Society. He was ordained a deacon in 1930 and an elder in 1934. He comes from a long line of Latter Day Saints; even his great grandparents were church members.

THOUGHTS

Our deeper religious life has its real beginning when we wonder about God.

We can learn about God in two ways. We can read or hear what others have to say about him, or we can have our own experience. Most people find that it is best to have some of both.

The contemplation of God is something like listening to great music. We may not understand all of it, we may not know very much about it, but we can appreciate it.

If you have any doubts about him, just look around and you will find his fingerprints nearly everywhere in nature—little signs and evidences that he has been here. And if you look in the right way you may even see him in the glory of dawn, in the radiance of a star, or in the beautiful love of a human soul.

It is probable that we learn more about God in times of trouble, because then we have greater need of him and try harder to draw near to him.

When we pray we expect immediate answers and assurances. If they do not come soon, we wonder and doubt. But if we are patient, we will notice slight changes in the course of events, or in our power to meet them. These things remind us that he has not forgotten.
L. J. L.

QUALITIES OF GOD

What marks God as being God? Here are sixteen qualities that mark him as being divine: His love for humanity, his unchangeability, his faith, his patience, his success, his perfection, his order, his eternity, his intelligence, his concern for the individual, his omnipotence, his creativeness, his recognition of man's co-creativity, his omnipresence, his truth and beauty, and his holiness. The biggest thing about God is that he is holy—unchangeably and all-powerfully good.
Cheville

FOCUS

What the mind dwells upon is what makes the man. If he watches for iniquity he may commit iniquity. If he centers his attention on evil he will become evil. How important it is for man to have his mind saturated with the things of the kingdom! If we look at Christ, we will become like him.
Arthur Oakman

CRITERIA FOR JUDGING

That which is good will show itself with certain merit. If it is bad, that too will show in certain ways.
L. F. P. Curry

RESPECT

True freedom exists only so long as the people recognize the rights and privileges of others and control their own acts accordingly.

The only way to "prove" that this is the true church is by the way the members conduct themselves.
Thomas Worth

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Gilbert Wayne Smith

I HAVE ALWAYS FELT that God guided and directed me to prepare for the work of a church appointee." With assurance G. Wayne Smith thus ministers effectively in his present assignment as missionary in the Idaho District.

Wayne said he was so shy during his school days that he didn't go out for activities that he would have enjoyed. Rather he found his major field of expression in the work of the church where he sang in the choir, worked in the church school, and shared in other activities of the branch. That shyness was later overcome in part by working in a retail grocery store as a clerk.

Wayne was born in Knoxville, Iowa, in 1921 and was graduated from school there in 1939. He was baptized when he was nine years old at Des Moines, Iowa. The war years he spent in the aviation branch of the United States Marine Corps. After being discharged he was employed in St. Louis as a cashier for a large corporation, studying accounting at night school. It wasn't until after he received church appointment that he received some formal college credits, those being from North Central College at Naperville, Illinois.

In 1946 he married Rosaleene Coumerilh. Of her he has said, "She shared my hopes of being of greater service to the church." They have three children: Barbara Jean, 5, David Wayne, 2, and Cheryl Lynn, 1.

In 1947 he was ordained a priest; in 1948 an elder; and in 1951 a seventy. Wayne's special interest is the advancement of the work of the church. He likes to sing and read. His hobbies are collecting good religious books and doing odd jobs at home for his wife.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

IN ST. LOUIS

President Israel A. Smith addressed the Men's Club of St. Louis, Missouri, on June 19 and was the guest speaker at the branch on June 21. He left Independence on June 26 to be at the final week end of the Gulf States Reunion.

PREACHES IN CENTER STAKE

President F. Henry Edwards preached the two morning sermons at the Stone Church on June 21.

AT DISTRICT CONFERENCE

President W. Wallace Smith attended the semiannual conference of the Northwest Iowa District at Tabor, Iowa, on June 21. A fellowship service, preaching service, and afternoon classes were held, followed by a business meeting. Brother Smith preached in the morning and taught the men's class in the afternoon. Sister Smith taught the women's class. Sylvester Coleman is the district president, and John Loren is the district missionary.

RETURNS FROM MICHIGAN

Apostle C. George Mesley has returned from a series of contacts with smaller branches in Michigan and Ontario and two religious education institutes, Michigan-wide in Flint and Ontario-wide in London, in association with Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder Arthur Rock. Brother Mesley was at the first anniversary services at the new church in Grand Rapids.

BLESSES GRANDDAUGHTER

Apostle D. T. Williams blessed his granddaughter, Julie Anne Brown, at the Stone Church on June 21. The child was born on February 2, 1953, which was the birthday of President Israel A. Smith. Brother Williams' other granddaughter, Janie Banks, was born on January 21, 1947, which was the birthday of Frederick M. Smith, former president of the church.

PROGRAM PROGRESSING

Dr. F. M. McDowell spoke at Slover Park in the Center Stake on June 21. He reports that his department is mailing the first edition of the mimeographed workbook on "The Kingdom-building Program" to reunion workers during the week of June 24.

IN KAW VALLEY DISTRICT

Elder O. Kenneth Byrn, assistant to the Center Stake Presidency, was the guest speaker at a young adult retreat held at Topeka, Kansas, for the Kaw Valley District, May 16 and 17.

TEACHES AT REUNION

Mrs. Benjamin F. Moats, of the General Church Council of Women, left Independence on June 20 to attend the Gulf States Reunion at Brewton, Alabama. She instructed the women's classes.

An Everlasting Light

"The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light."
—Isaiah 60: 19.

THE WORKING OUT of the purposes of God in history may be symbolized in two short statements from the Bible.

The beginning of the world was chaos enveloped in shadows. "Darkness was upon the face of the deep," says Genesis. Then millenniums passed and we look into the future clear down to the end of time. The scene is heaven, and among the many details of description given in Revelation we find this: "There shall be no night there."

In between these two extremes, there is the long story of man's slow and painful advancement, with many a detour, much losing of the way, and frequent regressions. We are on the way and, as it appears from where we are, not very far along. Spiritually and intellectually, literally and figuratively, the human race is engaged in an effort to emerge from darkness into light.

HOW OFTEN WE FEEL that we are walking in darkness. Our skies of hope are heavy and overcast. Little clouds of worry obscure our sunlight. Tensions and fears make us feel that God is far away, that our prayers do not go through the mists that lie between us and his throne, that we are strangers to grace, orphaned from the divine love.

Whatever the adversary may be, he lives and works and exercises his greatest power in darkness. Paul in the Ephesian letter mentioned significantly "the rulers of the darkness of this world."

On the other hand, John assures us, "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Good is identified with light, as evil is identified with darkness. These are the extremes, and all the variations and shades of difference lie between them.

WHAT ARE THE THINGS that can turn the light to darkness for us? For one thing, we may turn our backs on God. "I stood with my back to the light," St. Augustine wrote in his Confessions. Faced in the wrong direction, the darkness in which we walk may simply be our own shadows.

A cloud of hatred or dislike for any other person will not only come between us and those others but it will also come between us and God. "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth" (I John 2: 11).

Selfishness can turn our light to darkness. For as soon as we yield to selfishness, we begin to conspire against others, plan ways to deal to their disadvantage, and become furtive because we must hide our true thoughts and motives. Only in darkness can anything be hidden. The man who has something to hide will seek darkness of one kind or another.

It is notable that one of the preventives of crime is to have a city well lighted. Store owners are advised to keep lights on at night. Criminals are afraid of being seen. Darkness is the habitat of evil. And it may be said that the principle of evil is darker than any physical darkness in this world.

So, also, the principle of goodness is the essence of light. The faces of good people are often radiant with light. If you have watched, you have seen shadows playing across the faces of persons whose emotions were changing.

Light and darkness are subject to the conditions of mind and spirit. The soul has control of them.

WHAT CAN WE DO to bring a return of light? Certain things are necessary.

The first step is prayer. If we have wandered, we must look for God. We must try to get back on the path from which we have wandered.

Second, we should read the Scriptures. Which ones to read will be determined by our need. If we are not strangers to the books, we will remember our favorites and turn to them.

Third, we must forgive anyone against whom we have any resentment or dislike whatever. We simply cannot carry hatred into the presence of God. And if we will not drop our hatred, we cannot go. That is why Jesus admonished, "First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." We can't give God anything he would care to have if we carry hatred in our hearts.

LET US NOW RETURN to the promise of our text. "The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light."

In the old days, all lights burned out. They still do. The oil is consumed, the wick is charred, the lamp is bare. The flame flickers low and is finally extinguished. Even some of the war memorials were dedicated with torches that were to "burn forever, never to go out." But when a new war came and security was at stake, they went out with the rest. A new generation does not fulfill promises made by ancestors.

But the promise of God is different. It is an unfulfilling promise. The light is there forever. It does not go out. We may become separated from it; we may turn our backs to it; but it is always there. And when we turn to God again, we will find his light still burning.

Official Statement

At recent meetings of the Council of Presidents of Seventy, the matter of releasing men from the Quorum of Seventy was considered. As a result of our consideration, and with the approval of the First Quorum of Seventy, the following brethren have been honorably released due to age:

- Ernest N. Burt
- J. D. Curtis
- B. H. Doty
- James Pycock
- W. E. Shakespeare

We feel that these men in being released from the Quorum of Seventy leave a challenge for the rest of us. We pray that individually and as a Quorum we may as efficiently serve God and his church.

THE COUNCIL OF PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY

By Russell F. Ralston, Secretary

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Elder Carl Crum, Tokyo, Japan, June 15:

I have just returned from Korea where I attended the servicemen's conference held in Seoul, Korea, June 8 to 11. The meetings had been scheduled for an earlier date but had to be postponed because of difficulties in getting billeting facilities. The attendance was not as large as had been expected, due no doubt to restrictions on leave and misunderstanding as to dates of the conference.

The theme was "The Available Kingdom," with emphasis on the desire and willingness to assist in making the kingdom available. All the fellows were grateful for the opportunity to get together and worship. Their main concern seemed to be to pray, get close to God, and bear testimony of his goodness. There was abundant evidence of the presence of the good Spirit, and words of encouragement and council were given, by the Spirit, to Brother Caldwell; the message was well received. He requested that I convey to you the fact that he accepts the challenge of assisting in making the kingdom available wherever and whenever his talents and ability are required.

We were disappointed that Col. D. A. Gough and Capt. John Farout could not be present. I am grateful for the assistance given by Brothers Gough and Caldwell in making possible my attendance. I hope my contribution toward the success of the conference will in some way repay them for their faith and efforts in my behalf. I was glad to go and doubly glad that I could be of service.

We have just received a copy of the June 15, 1953, issue of MacLean's which is described as Canada's national magazine. The leading article is concerned with "Vitamin E, The Great Heart Controversy." This article tells the story of the struggle made by Drs. Evan and Wilfrid Shute and their associates for recognition of Vitamin E as a valuable agent in the treatment of diseases of the heart and blood vessels. We are not competent to pass on the merits or demerits of the issues in question, although we are interested to note that the article is by no means adverse to the Shute claims. But we do find ourselves interested, as Herald readers will probably be, in the following quotations:

The private lives of the Shutes are the reverse of their stormy professional careers. Evan, forty-seven, is an ordained minister of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This is not the Mormon church, he is careful to point out, but the original group which remained in the East when the pioneers who were to become the Mormons headed for Utah.

Evan not only preaches regularly, but is a poet and essayist who has published seven volumes under the name "Vere Jameson." He was something of an infant prodigy. He had his high school entrance at nine and his medical degree at twenty-one.

Evan gave up one of the biggest obstetrical practices in western Ontario to work for the foundation. What's more, he donated all his outstanding fees, amounting to ten thousand dollars, to the foundation. Wilfrid worked for months without salary until the new foundation was on its feet. If there's one thing the Shutes have, it is complete sincerity and belief in their work.

Herald readers will be interested in the following excerpt from the current Center Stake News over the signature of Stake President Charles V. Graham:

We are happy to show the results of our missionary efforts in the Stake during the past six months. These figures show those baptized prior to Children's Day by cottage-meeting effort and Children's Day baptisms.

Since the writing of this article several more baptisms have been reported due to the cottage and family meetings being held in the Stake. We trust that during this next six months more of our local priesthood will show an interest in this phase of work and join the missionary forces in the Stake under the direction of our Stake Missionary Co-ordinator.

Our congratulations to the Center Stake officers and to missionary co-ordinator E. A. Theys of the Seventy.

From John W. Blackstock, president of Central Michigan District, June 16:

I thought it would be of interest to you to know we held our first services in the new Houghton Lake church this past week end.

Everyone who sees the building feels that we have a lot of church for the amount of money invested. It is 32 by 76 feet, and I think we'll be able to complete it for less than $8,000. If I were a prophet, I would say this is but the beginning of the growth of the church in this area. With good district supervision we should need another church at Prudenville in five years.

The Cost of Discipleship

By C. R. Ettinger

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10: 10.

IN THE BEGINNING God created man in his image. In the process of creation God gave to man his agency, the right of choice. Man might have been created without agency, but without it he could not have been created in the Father's image; he could not have shared with the Creator; he could not have been a creature of eternity. Man chose the selfish way, rather than making the Father's will his. However, seeing this possibility, Jehovah ordained the plan of salvation from the beginning, whereby man might again come into the light of truth.

Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." He saw the poor, narrow, fettered, impoverished life of man, pitied it, and then sought to broaden, emancipate, and enrich it. Man had forged his own fetters with the bonds of selfishness, greed, hate, and lust. He was so mired in the clay of self-content and ignorance that only help from above could accomplish the miracle of regeneration. The poet, reformer, and philosopher have called men upward. The prophet revealed light and truth through the inspiration of God. Yet it was like putting new paint on a rotted post. The abundant life could come only as regeneration began from within. The Master said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." He saw the stubborn, stony heart of man and was willing to give his life for it. The lowly Nazarene did not have to die. He was the Son of God. He was sinless. "The wages of sin is death." He did not have to die, but he saw that in dying he could show men two things: (1) the ghastliness of sin because He was sinless, yet the unbending will and sinfulness of man had placed him upon the cross; and (2) not even death could overcome him. He allowed himself to become encompassed by the tentacles of death, but death could not hold the Captive captive. Because of his sonship, because of his sinlessness, because of his saviorhood, he burst the shackles of death and showed to us the enlargement of life. By walking in his light, by partaking of his righteousness we can share the more abundant life.

LIFE MEANS MORE to man now than it has in any period of history. Copernicus, Galileo, Gutenberg, Columbus, Watt, Franklin, Marconi, Fulton, Livingstone, Edison, Ford, and a host of others have added much to material life. With the advent of modern technology, living has become much easier, much richer, much fuller. However, the good life is still limited by those who would prey upon their fellow men, limited by inconsistencies, limited by physical and mental incapacities.

Life is most limited, however, by our lack of spiritual growth. It has been said that Christianity impairs life because it warns us to refrain from the "pleasures" of the world. It is the message of Jesus that only by his truth can we be truly free. His way is not the way of restriction but the way of freedom and exaltation. By him we can be free of the crimes of violence and passion that bind the mind and warp the soul. By him we can be free of avarice and greed that would destroy our sense of happiness. By him we, too, might feel the embrace of death and conquer. This is the secret of power, of self-conquest, of world conquest—to live a life so large it cannot be defeated by the ills of time.

Yet we must ask, "What is the cost of this discipleship?" In the present age some of us are very conscious of costs. When we go to purchase an article, one of our final questions before purchase must necessarily be "What does it cost?" We are now engaged in the task of completing the Auditorium and are confronted each day with the cost of steel, brick, stone, and a number of other materials that go into its construction. Still can we say that these combined costs represent the cost of the Auditorium? Can we say that the skills of the workmen and their devotion to the task would contribute to the total cost? We must add the lives of the people—the widow who gives her mite and the rich man who gives his thousands. Their dreams, their devotions, and their faith are couched in the total cost.

HOW DO WE really define cost? We are rightly proud today of the church's Christmas gift to the nation. We thrill with inspiration as we share in listening to The Messiah. For a moment let us estimate its cost. Many would say that it is represented by the money paid to the Columbia Broadcasting System for the radio time to present this program. Others would hasten to add the hiring of musicians from the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra. Still others might think of the hours of devoted practice by the chorus and add that to our mounting cost. A musician would add the skill of Franklyn Weddle in directing, encouraging, and interpreting as a major factor of cost. Still, do we know the total cost? Recently I purchased recordings of The Messiah for $10.50. To me that was the cost—until I listened. As I listened, I realized that I had not purchased The Messiah. I had purchased only the phonograph records. Only if I could sense the inspiration that came to Handel, if I could understand his sacrifice for his inspiration, if I could, through the instrumentality of music, live the message that he wanted to give to the world, then only could I pay the cost of The Messiah.

The rich young ruler came to Jesus to ask him the cost of discipleship. As the Master outlined some of the costs, the young man answered, "All these have I kept from my youth up." Jesus replied, "Yet thou lackest one thing; sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, follow me." This was the cost to the rich young ruler. He had built a God of riches. He had placed his whole trust in material gain. Unless he could destroy this false ideal, it would be a cancer to his soul. He looked to riches merely for possession, placing the love of money foremost in his life. The cost to him was to "sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor"; but the cost was too great. The rich young man went away sorrowing.

Recently I had the privilege of telling the story of the Restoration to a very fine young lady. It was a thrilling experience, because she and others in the cottage meetings thrilled to the confirming witness of God's truth each evening. Toward the end of the series of meetings she told me that she knew the spirit of truth had been guiding her all of her life toward the restored church; however, if she accepted this truth it might cost her her fiancé, a very personable young man. I drove home Friday evening to prepare for the baptismal service to be held on Sunday. My heart was heavy, for this young lady had not yet asked for baptism. As I drove, it seemed that the car began to be filled with light, and for nearly five miles I wept unashamed, for I knew that I had shared in an experience with Christ. The next evening I received a call from this lady. Her words were, "Brother Ettinger, is it too late for me to be baptized?" My heart rejoiced, for I knew that no price was too great, and she recognized the value received.

WHAT IS THE COST of discipleship? Is it the money that we give in tithes and offerings? In our present world, money is very necessary in sending out those whose calling it is to preach the gospel. Money is necessary in maintaining our local churches. We share in the worldwide ministry of Christ as we give of our tithes and offerings, but they do not represent the total cost of discipleship. There is one final cost, however, that we all must pay for true discipleship. We must give to Christ our souls, for only in giving our souls can we truly possess them. Halfway measures will not be sufficient. Even as halfhearted practice cannot produce a musical masterpiece, so also halfhearted devotion cannot help us to grow in the spiritual nature of our Savior. The cost of discipleship involves our entire being—using our time, talent, and the material opportunities to build the kingdom of God.

One final question must enter our thinking. What is the value received? In the words of the Advocate, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." The promise of the more abundant life in this world and in the world to come is marvelous recompense for our endeavors. In the twentieth and twenty-first chapters of Revelation we find:

Blessed and holy are they who have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ. . . . And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

What joy, what eternal bliss we find in these words! The floodgates of our soul should burst with rapture at the grace of God who in these last days has restored light and truth to the world. In our day he has set his hand the second time. He "has set up an ensign for the nations." We live in an age when everyone looks for bargains. Here is the greatest bargain in the world—eternal life in return for our devotion in building that life in the cause of the kingdom of our Lord here upon the earth. With such a song of redeeming love, who can fail to sing that the world might hear?

Sunday School Theaters

Church observers in Washington are smiling over the ironical fact that many of the hundreds of theaters now closing in all parts of the nation because of the television competition are being sold to religious groups, to be used for Sunday school meetings or for actual church services. The National Association of Real Estate Boards, with headquarters here, reporting on the depressive effect theater closings have on real estate in suburban and semidowntown areas, says that the use of such buildings for religious purposes seems to be a prime stimulus in business for the depressed adjoining properties. For decades, many ministers have preached against having movies open on Sundays. Now, hundreds of them are closing for good, and the buildings are being used by religious groups.—The Washington Religious Review

Swen Swenson

Prepared by Sadi Moon Nagel

Part I

SWEN SWENSON was born on March 4, 1853, the second child in the home of poor parents near Helsingfors in the southern part of Sweden. He started to school at six and fulfilled the required eight years of schooling. During the summers he herded sheep, wandering the hill-sides in his wooden shoes, wearing the simple clothing made by his mother, and meditating on the goodness of God in whom he had a deep faith.

Because they were poor and food was scarce the Swensons learned gratitude to God and frugality in the use of that which was theirs. At fifteen, after his schooling which was required by law was completed, Swen was employed by a wealthy man who had paid his mother ten dollars for his year's work. Because he had found Swen honest and dependable, the next year the man gave Swen's mother, now a widow, twenty dollars for Swen's services.

Swen worked the following four years at mining. At twenty-one he had saved five hundred dollars from his small earnings and was determined to go to America, the land of opportunity. So it was that in 1874 he bought second-class passage on a ship bound for America, paying one hundred dollars. He went to Indiana and Illinois, where he first spent time with relatives and then found employment with other businessmen and farmers.

DURING THE NEXT YEAR he saw a young lady in a dream and sensed that she was the girl he would marry. He had never seen her. One day his employer sent him on an errand to the home of the town banker. He was told to take the package to the back door and give it to the servant who would answer the door. When the door opened the young lady Swen saw was the same one he had seen in his dream. They became acquainted and after three years were married. Cecilia and Swen were both twenty-four years old.

They moved to Missouri where they rented farms for a few years and finally purchased one of their own near Lebec. There were a few Reorganized Latter Day Saints who were neighbors to the Swensons. On one occasion some of them were helping Swen put up his hay. Swen, wanting to get it all in, offered to pay them if they would keep at it until the job was finished. They refused because a minister of the Reorganized Church was holding a debate in the community with a Christian minister. These church members wanted to go hear him and invited Swen to come too. He assented, and his wife agreed to go too if "they preached from the Bible." If not she "just wouldn't listen."

The minister was I. N. White. Cecilia Swenson sat near the front of the church during the debate. While Brother White was talking a voice spoke to her saying, "This is my church which you have been praying to find for many years. You and your husband both shall join it." Cecilia didn't tell Swen of her experience. After three months, during which time they both regularly attended meetings at the Reorganized Church, Cecilia said to Swen, "The Lord has revealed to me that this is the true church of Jesus Christ. If you have no objection I would like you to go along with me and be baptized."

Swen was very angry. He stamped his foot and said, "You can go if you want to, but as for me, I have been baptized once and I don't intend to be again." Nevertheless, both of them continued to attend the meetings. Several days later one of his Reorganized Latter Day Saint neighbors said to him, "Swen, can you prove by the Bible that God has commanded that little children should be baptized by sprinkling?" Swen was sure he could. His friend asked him to find the chapter and verse. "If you can find it," he said to Swen, "I'll buy you a new hat." After looking through his Bible without success Swen went to a Lutheran minister. The minister told him it couldn't be found in the Bible because it wasn't there. He explained that it was a tradition of the church. Swen was disappointed.

IT WAS THE WINTER of 1887 and Swen and Cecilia were still both attending the meetings. Cecilia said little of her desire to Swen. One evening the minister told the congregation that he would be leaving soon, and that the next day he would baptize anyone who wished to become a member of the church. That night at home Cecilia went out to the smokehouse where she knelt and prayed: "Lord, has not the time come that you will move upon my husband to obey the gospel?" A voice spoke to her saying, "Ask him when you go in the house and you shall receive the desire of your heart." When she came into the room Cecilia asked Swen, "What do you think about the gospel the Reorganized Latter Day Saints preach? Do you think it is true, and do you intend to obey it?" Swen answered, "Cecilia, if God will spare my life until the morning, I will hitch up the horses and we will go and be baptized." While Cecilia had been praying out in the smokehouse a voice had spoken to Swen saying, "Swen, you are a mean man. You are killing your wife, and you are fighting God." Swen was shaken.

In the morning they went to the creek to be baptized. Cecilia had not been well. She said to Swen, "After I am baptized in that cold water, I may be sick several days."

Swen answered, "If this is the work of God, you ought to get better." It was February 9, 1887, and the creek was covered with ice. Brother I. N. White, from whom they had first heard the gospel story, broke the ice in the creek and baptized them. Swen was baptized first. When Cecilia had been baptized and had come out of the water a radiance shone around her. She cried out, "Swen, I am healed." Never again was she troubled with the affliction.

They were confirmed the same day by Elders I. N. White and Alfred White. In the confirmation, it was revealed to Swen that he was to preach the gospel to the Gentiles and to his own nation.

AFTER SIX MONTHS in the church Swen became troubled, wondering if he had received the Holy Spirit. He prayed earnestly during the night, and a vision opened to him of a narrow pathway leading to heaven. He saw many people with eyes, who yet were apparently unable to see. A voice spoke to him, "Do you see these people who are blind? I want you to preach the gospel to them and show them the narrow pathway which leads to heaven." Again the voice spoke to him and said, "You are now baptized with the Holy Ghost." He told only his wife of the experience, after she promised not to say anything of it to anyone.

The following Wednesday at prayer meeting the gift of tongues was evidenced. Elder Abner Lloyd gave the interpretation. A part of the message was to Swen, telling him that he was a "chosen vessel," called to preach the gospel to the Gentiles and to his own nation. God had made public what he was afraid to say.

ON JULY 20, 1888, Swen was ordained an elder. The next morning he got a notice from Elder I. N. White directing him to go to Stockton, Missouri, and hold meetings. There was only one family of Saints in Stockton, but they were very enthusiastic about the church. They sent their children around among the neighbors telling them about the meetings. The people responded to the invitation, and the schoolhouse was filled. Swen prayed for help in his first sermon, the first he had ever preached. There were tears in the eyes of many in the congregation when he finished. He had preached over an hour and was afraid that he had told them all he knew.

The next day he fasted and prayed and studied the Scriptures. That night and each of the following nights he felt that he was able to say what the Lord wanted him to say.

After that first series he was joined by Daniel Tucker, a priest. Together they traveled among the people near Osceola and Lowry City, Missouri, for about a year. They traveled without "purse or scrip" and were cared for adequately. Several were baptized during that year.

The next year a Baptist preacher wrote to I. N. White asking him to come to Johnson City, Missouri, to explain the gospel. Brother White was unable to go and sent Swen instead, and Swen invited Elder Henry Way to accompany him. When Swen talked plainly concerning the gospel, some people were offended and were going to close the schoolhouse where the meetings were being held. A professed atheist, Mr. Winchester, approached Swen after the last meeting before the school was to be closed and said, "Will you preach for me tomorrow night?"

"If the school is closed I will have no place to preach," answered Swen.

Mr. Winchester said, "I pay more taxes than anybody around here. I will have the schoolhouse open for you to preach." The following afternoon just before school was out Mr. Winchester came to school carrying his rifle and said to the teacher, "We are going to have preaching here tonight."

The teacher said he had been told to lock the school and take the key with him. "If you do," said Mr. Winchester, "I will unlock it as fast as you lock it." The children went home and told their parents what had happened and there was a large crowd there that night. Just before the service was to begin Mr. Winchester stood before the people and said, "I do not believe in God or the Bible, but if this man does not preach from the Bible I will tell him to leave. If he does he can preach here. I will leave it to you to tell me whether he does or not. If he does, I will shoot anyone who molests him."

Swen continued preaching. He had been staying with the Baptist minister but soon was invited to stay at the Winchesters. Mrs. Winchester was a well-educated woman, but she had lost her speech. She was later baptized, as were also the Baptist minister and his wife. Swen moved to another area to work, but the story of Mrs. Winchester was not yet finished. She became ill and called for elders. Rufus White came to administer to her. Mrs. Winchester not only was healed of her illness but her speech was restored. This miracle was told over the whole community. Members of the church to which she had previously belonged denounced her as a hypocrite, saying she could have spoken before if she had wanted to.

ABOUT THAT TIME a General Conference was to be held, and Swen wanted to attend. He went to the Lord in prayer about it. The Lord answered Swen's prayer by telling him, "I can pour out my spirit upon you here where you are working as well as at Independence." He was holding services at Coal Hill. On the Sunday morning of Conference, a beautiful Spirit was present at the Coal Hill meeting which extended from nine in the morning until three in the afternoon. Several spoke in tongues. One man sang in tongues, and angels sang with him. The people melted in tears under the Spirit. One woman asked for baptism during the service. God had been true to the promise he had given Swen.

Brother Henry Way, with whom Swen Swenson had been doing missionary work in Missouri, returned to his home in Minnesota. A tiny handful of Saints who met together regularly fell to talking of the many good Swedish and Scottish people there who should hear the gospel. Brother Way rose to his feet and said, "I know just the man to come preach to these Swedes in their own language. His name is Swen Swenson." Several of the people provided money to send for Swen with the promise that when he had finished his work there they would provide transportation for him to go back.

SWEN ARRIVED in Minnesota amid the heavy winter snows. He stayed at the home of Brother McCloud, a Scot, in Cormorent. With that as his headquarters he went about preaching in the area. After a while he wondered where he should go next. He prayed, "Lord, I do not know where the people are who will obey this gospel, but you do. Will you direct me where to go?" During the night he was told to go to Audubon. The next morning at breakfast Brother McCloud asked him where he thought he would go that day. Swen said, "The Lord has told me to go to Audubon." Then he told Brother McCloud that the Lord had come and spoken to him.

"Well, after having the Lord in my house, the least I can do is to take you part way on your journey," said Brother McCloud. It was fifteen miles to Audubon. They talked the gospel as they drove and they had soon traveled twelve of the fifteen miles. Swen then took his suitcases and walked the rest of the way. He came to the home of a family of church members. The woman was very pessimistic about any prospects being found in that community. "You won't be able to get anyone to come to the services. We've already had some fine speakers who were not able to get the people out." She herself promised to come only two nights because she "knew there wouldn't be anyone there." Swen went around to the neighbors and found five families who promised to come hear him. After the first night Swen went around visiting new families each day, and the attendance kept increasing. After some time he baptized twelve people. His pessimistic hostess said, "Well, that's all. You won't be able to get any more."

A MAN AND HIS WIFE who were Congregationalists had attended the services regularly but had not been convinced of the truth of the message which Swen was preaching. His hostess declared that he'd never be able to baptize them. In a dream that night Swen saw the deacon and his wife come to him with tears in their eyes, and the deacon said, "Swen, my wife and I were greatly troubled last night and we could get no rest. We want you to baptize us." The next morning Swen told his hostess with assurance that the deacon and his wife were going to be baptized. She was doubtful. "You can write it down," Swen said, "that I said they would be."

A week later, when Swen was about to leave the area, the deacon and his wife came to the home where Swen was staying to buy some wheat for seeding. The deacon said to Swen, "Swen, last night my wife and I were greatly troubled and could get no rest. We want you to baptize us before you leave." Swen and his converts went to a lake adjoining the property where he baptized them.

Swen next preached in Detroit, Minnesota, about twelve miles away. After a week a woman wanted to be baptized. The day chosen for her baptism turned out to be very cold—about fifty degrees below zero. The woman was not well, and her family thought the baptism should be postponed till she was better. "Not a hair of her head will be harmed," said Swen. They dug the snow away, broke the ice, and put a ladder in the water. Swen froze his fingers getting the water ready for the baptism, but the lady, after her baptism, was never afflicted again.

BROTHER MC CLOUD made arrangements for Swen to go to Pelican Rapids. Here he stayed with some people named Erickson. They had six children whom they sent to tell the neighbors that there was a "preacher from Missouri" staying with them who was going to hold services in the schoolhouse. A good crowd came, and the Spirit rested upon Swen so that he gave a good sermon. The congregation was moved deeply. Some said, "God has sent you. Never did we hear such preaching." This enthusiasm continued for several days before Swen found out that they did not know that he was a minister for the Reorganized Church.

Finally Mr. Erickson asked, "Who has sent you to us?" Swen told him it was Brother McCloud. Then he knew Swen was a Reorganized Latter Day Saint. But the news traveled slowly, and his congregation remained large. From then on, however, he was careful to identify himself. After two weeks he baptized seven people. He dreamed that he would baptize Hans Erickson, his host, but he made the mistake of telling Mr. Erickson his dream, and thus threw the man on his guard. It was three years before that happened.

In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.—Saint Paul.

ALL EXISTENCE has its origin in the activity of Deity, who dwells in blessedness and light—dwells in the realm known to us as spiritual. He is personal—such a One as to reveal himself and act in special ways to order his purpose in holiness and righteousness.

In the story of the birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus of Nazareth we have the record of such special activity. Before this act was consummated there was long preparation in Israel through the prophets. By law and ordinance also were men taught in what manner to look for the coming of the Lord's anointed. We trace a divine superintendence of the course and special genius of nations surrounding Israel, as well as in Israel itself. Through the Romans, law, unity, and order were imposed on the ancient world, thus providing an arena in which the special act could be proclaimed. The Greeks, whose culture conquered the Romans after the Romans had conquered Greece, provided the philosophy and its genius in which the act could be interpreted and bequeathed to those who should come after. But Israel, Rome, and Greece, while each playing a part, find their pivotal significance in the act itself—the Incarnation.

Jesus—so runs the record—was born by no activity of the human will, save only the acquiescence of the Virgin Mother in the Divine will. He called men to such fellowship with God as had never before been conceived; yet such calling was not incongruous with the fellowship he himself experienced. He was killed by those he called to share his blessedness, yet prayed for them as he expired, asking forgiveness "for they know not what they do." He rose bodily from the tomb and after convincing those who sought righteousness that indeed he had conquered death, he enacted the parable of the Ascension. Thus was liberated in the world a new and transforming power. He was not understood at first even by his intimate followers. They grew into knowledge of him, through the operation of the drama of his life as it was lived before them.

At first they thought of him as a man. Yet from the beginning there was about him something mysterious which called forth a progressive apprehension which issued in the declaration of Caesarea Philippi and ended in their adoring worship. But the confession of St. Peter is not a declaration of the deity of Jesus. It acknowledges him as the promised Messiah, and superhuman thereby.

MANY TODAY believe that there was in Jesus something more than man, and that something was divinity, and they thus identify the terms "superhuman" and "divine." The people of those early days made no such assumption. The disciples, from Caesarea Philippi on, believed the master to be more than human—superhuman, perhaps a celestial being—a special and peculiar son of God. But they did not yet conceive him as GOD the SON.

Thomas, the doubter, uttered an exclamation of devotion which certainly identifies the Lord with God. But it is an isolated utterance, the full import of which was not then grasped. It is significant that Jesus received at their hands honors done only to the invisible Jehovah, and he received these honors without protest. It is significant also that he did not stand before them and say in so many words, "I am Jehovah." To have done so would have baffled and overwhelmed them. That doctrine was to be formulated later. For it must be remembered that they were Jews, and to identify man with God—to confuse the creature with the Creator—was anathema to them. No verbal statement, therefore, would do. It would tend to defeat the full realization as to who he was. Yet his acts and sayings made possible no other interpretation of his Being, so that Paul later could say, "In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

AT PENTECOST, Peter conceived Jesus as exalted, "both Lord and Christ." There seemed to be nothing in the sermon to suggest to Peter that Jesus was himself the God of Israel. Not yet had the full realization dawned upon them. But when Stephen was stoned a change took place. Not only was Stephen the first martyr, but he was the first Christian of whose death we have any record. He saw Jesus at the right hand of God. That in itself does not yet carry us beyond the Celestial Messiah common to apocalyptic literature. But the words Stephen uttered are significant: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"! Thus the first Christian to die commended his spirit to Jesus Christ. It was a devotional utterance that placed Jesus on an equality with God. It was not a dogmatic statement reached after a process of close reasoning. It was the cry of triumph and peace. What are the implications here? First comes Christian experience, then reflection upon that experience so that Christian theology is a veritable science.

Undoubtedly Stephen was the main instrumentality in the conversion of St. Paul. Paul freed Christianity from the limitations of Judaism. His conversion was different from that of Peter and the rest. Theirs was a gradual enlightenment, while he came in a sudden blaze of glory. For Paul, from the first, Jesus Christ was the Celestial Messiah. After that came the reconciliation to God which he experienced through fellowship with Jesus Christ. Then last of all came the gradual dawning realization that the whole creation and history of man hinges upon the revelation and atonement of Jesus Christ.

IT WAS PAUL who stated emphatically, "In Christ dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." He called him "the image of the invisible God," and said, "God was, in Christ, reconciling the world to himself." Upon two occasions he made definite assertions that Jesus Christ was God: "The pillar and ground of the truth is, (and without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness,) God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory" (I Timothy 3: 16). And again, "And the promises which are made unto the fathers; and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ was, who is God over all, blessed for ever. Amen" (Romans 9: 5).

Paul's frequent use of the word "Lord" indicates that undoubtedly he identifies Jesus with the Jehovah of the Old Testament. Thus it was a process of gradual enlightenment which marked the growth in the minds of the church of the full realization of the Deity of Jesus Christ.

Nowhere is this assertion more pointedly supported than in a survey of the Apocalypse. An interesting fact stands out here. In the early chapters there is close association with the heavenly Christ and the Almighty God. But in chapter 22, verse 13, Christ himself is represented as claiming to be "Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last," and thus specifically claims to be, by this assertion, the only one. The meaning of this process is clear. After the seer experienced the whole course of human events and watched Christ exercise divine functions throughout his vision, then and then only did the Lord Jesus present himself to John as the Almighty God.

The reason for this order of emphasis in the book of Revelation is plain, when we remember the disciples were Jews. To identify any other with Jehovah, or to deify a man as the Greeks did Heracles or the Romans did their Caesars, was to the followers of Christ unthinkable. These pagan deities were man "writ large," and the process of self-hypnotism by which Caesars were exalted meant admission to a pantheon where, with other gods, they shared certain finite functions, and all had certain known defects. But the apostles came to recognize their friend and master as the One Almighty God. There was not the slightest natural tendency for them to do this. Even their recognition of him as Messiah made the result even more difficult to achieve, because in Jewish thought Jehovah and the Messiah were two beings and not one.

THUS, LONG BEFORE explicit statements found in Revelation are uttered, we find the experience upon which the doctrine rests. To the apostles Jesus was a superman by the time the last journey to Jerusalem was undertaken. After Stephen was killed it was realized that Christ was related to men's souls as only God himself could possibly be. Paul called Jesus, "Lord," and when John finally proclaimed the deity of Christ in so many words, he was only making explicit in formal statement what was already the substance of the faith but had not until then been formulated. Paul, also, had around him many who were frequently ready to take issue with him. But no one quarreled with him about his exalted Christology. Perhaps one may attribute this absence of strife in the realm of doctrine to the presence of the Holy Spirit, who, Jesus promised, was to guide them into "all truth." Thus the doctrine of the Godhead of Jesus is a scientific formulation of experience—a formulation of experience, that is, not in the temporal sense related to the elements but in the spiritual sense related to the moral world.

SOMETHING ELSE far more important even than the foregoing needs to be said. That Jesus Christ is the Jehovah of the Old Testament seems clear and of value. Of greater value, however, is the enlargement, the enrichment, the limitless expansion of the understanding of God which was brought to men by the life, the death, the resurrection and the teaching of Christ. Somehow, after his ascension the apostles had to make room in their thinking for a tremendous and startlingly new conception. This could not be done at once. To them it was like the dawning of a new day—a process inevitable yet continuously lawful. It was right that God should be like Jesus. When time sanctified their experience, they came to know that he who has the values of God was none other than God himself.

The Jews believed in the oneness or in the unity of God. For them there could not be two all-rulers. This fundamental idea of the unity of God and of his holiness blesses our Western world today—although we should always remember that it cost a thousand years of effort and suffering to bring it forth. "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord." How utterly essential when polytheism was rampant all around them that the Jews should first conceive this unity in its mathematical simplicity. In order of emergence and historical significance, "I am God, besides me there is none else" is totally and absolutely vital.

After Jesus came, that fundamental dogma remains. There are not three Gods, but one. But the Unity of God which before the advent of Jesus was apprehended in its mathematical simplicity was seen afterward to include within it some distinctions. God is almighty; Jesus seemed limited in his power over the souls of men by what he could persuade them to obey. God is all-knowing, but Jesus experienced frustration and disappointment. God never asks "Why?" Jesus not only asked "Why?" but asked it in such circumstances as seemed to the apostles to rob him of all authority. "We hoped," they said in disappointment, "it had been he who should have redeemed Israel."

So, then, since Jesus Christ is God in the flesh, in God are aspects or elements of being which surpass our powers of comprehension—since we are limited by our understanding of our own personality. Man cannot comprehend God. "Ein Begriffner Gott ist kein Gott" (A God comprehended is no God).—Tersteegen. But God can encompass man. To deny the supremacy of the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is false. Yet to affirm on the other hand that Jesus Christ is less than God is to deny the validity of the sources of all our knowledge of God. This problem of distinctions within the Godhead was further augmented when men experienced the redeeming and sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost. So the doctrine of the Trinity was formulated—an attempt to put into human language how God was related to himself and how constituted in his own being.

CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY and its formulation rests upon experience and is thereby scientific in its process of elucidation. But in this matter of the being and life of God, it is frankly agnostic. It could not be otherwise. God is above and beyond man. Anything man achieves is made possible by his utter dependence upon God. Science, art, and morality all inhere in him, and under the blessing of his Spirit alone they are refined and purified. The creeds were never formulated to define God but to set the limits to certain erroneous conceptions about his nature and being arising in the course of time. They are like the fences around a pasture. Within them there is food, outside there is hunger. But this does not mean that one set of words is as true as another, nor that one position is as true as another when thinking about the Godhead.

The whole of creation is presented to man in grades or stratas—"kingdoms" as they are called in Section 85—physical, chemical, vegetable, animal, and man. Corresponding with these and manifesting in part their characteristics we have inertia, motion, self-motion with consciousness, and then self-motion with self-consciousness in man; and in the human kingdom, when self-consciousness has added to it self-determination and purposive action, we have personality.

Now, personality also exists in grades. The more a man is indwelt by the spiritual realm above, the greater his sense of obligation to others. The lower exists to be indwelt in the higher. We shall think more accurately of God in terms of personality than if we make analogies on the animal or vegetable level—or indeed if we do as the Greeks, think of him as an object of intellectual contemplation rather than as one who "wants" and "loves" and "hates." Personality is the highest known expression of the process we know as the universe. God must be at least personal. Since it is true that God is seen in Jesus Christ, then the divine personality cannot be a single individual only. God is not "a" person in the mathematical "one" sense. But there is, on the other hand, only one God.

So, as a formula of elucidation, not as a final statement of a solution, came the simple affirmation which assuredly is Christian: "The Father is God, the Son is God, the Holy Ghost is God. Yet there are not three Gods, but one God." As the Spirit indicates—"which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal" (Section 17: 5h). The divine personality is above and beyond us. We cannot understand how one can be three, or three can be one. But such a formula accords with Christian experience. Even before Christ came, Isaiah "saw the Lord," and exclaimed "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," thus adumbrating later Christian experience and formula.

Such a formula is supported by Scripture, and it explains as does no other how the social graces imposed on man as moral obligations, and growing out of the apprehension of God's utter holiness, were in their fullness always in the eternal God. Love, joy, and peace can have no ultimate meaning if God be, as some think, a solitary uncreated individual who somehow created Jesus Christ out of nothing so that it could be said of him, "there was a time when Christ was not."

HOW FAR CAN WE understand this amazing formula? If we asked how we, the creatures, are distinguished from each other in our separateness, some help is offered. People differ from each other partly because they have different centers of consciousness. Each man's governing and ruling principle inheres in a "body," which is related to time, and which is differentiable by certain characteristics from every other, by family, race, nation. Even identical twins must stand side by side to view the same picture, and as they do the angle of vision is distinct in each case. Even if they stand in the same place one following the other, subtle changes have taken place in the picture, in the environment, and the view is different. People differ in another regard. Each is a child of his own parents, a product of his school, a member of the community and nation in which he dwells. These differences seem accidental and arbitrary. They are a condition of our finitude. They are brought about because we are creatures, and our creation involves time and is conditioned in space. But if we could conceive a consciousness (which we cannot do) investing the whole range of creation and encompassing time and space, these differences and distinctions, it seems, would largely disappear.

In Jesus, God is incarnate, and because God is one and not many it is not part of God who is incarnate; certainly it is not a deity of lesser importance or power; it is God himself. So Paul could say truly, "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." God, in one of the Three Persons, or centers of his one spiritual being, is incarnate in Jesus Christ. Although Christ is coequal in glory with God, that glory (Christ's) is derivative. He surrendered it before coming here and accepted the limitation of glory imposed by human conditions. He asked for what was rightfully his before the world was, deriving this glory from the fact that he himself was the second Person of the Trinity. Thus all the language Jesus used here on earth, saying, "My Father is greater than I," is not incompatible with his being equal with God. Certainly in latter-day revelation when speaking to Martin Harris about judgment he leaves no doubt as to his own view of his status. ". . . for behold, I, God have suffered these things for all . . . which suffering caused myself, even God the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain."

WHEN WE TURN to study the impression left on us by the figure outlined in the Four Gospels, we are amazed at the significance of what he said and did. The main concern of the synoptic evangelists is history—not theology. They desire to tell a story. There is, for example, no attempt to formulate a doctrine of the Atonement, even though the passion and death are told in minute detail. In them there is recorded no attempt on the part of Jesus to overwhelm men with his miracles. He relied on acts and words of mercy and grace. He evidenced an intimacy of communion with God unhindered by sin. Surely such an exhibition in a sinful world was as great a miracle as could have been. He claimed to be the Judge of men and nations. He called the law of Moses divine, and altered it. He said he was the mediator between God and man and invited all to come to him for rest. Who but God could utter such things and not be deemed a lunatic?

But the Incarnation was real. He who lived and died was fully man, perfect man, real man—the second Person of the Trinity dwelling in "a tabernacle of clay." It was an intensely human life he lived—yet he lived without sin. He was subjected in hope by the Father, and tempted as we are, except that he did not feel any temptation arising from any sin of his own committed in the past. He grew in knowledge and stature like others. But he knew a communion with God which he discovered other men did not share. This he knew was his calling, to be the Messiah, so after baptism he proclaimed the coming kingdom, calling men to repentance and to the life and power that come from communion with him. He went about doing good—praying real prayers and suffering real agony, the cry of a redeeming humanity for a humanity not yet redeemed. Then came the supreme glory of the uttermost sacrifice when, on Calvary, love laid the foundation of the kingdom of God in the midst of all creation, which itself was rent in twain for the purpose. He emerged triumphant from the earth, bringing with him a redeemed natural order, first in his own body and afterward in the bodies of those whom he won by their faith in him. Thus he came fully to complete manhood and knew that he was more than man (this being part of the limitation of understanding)—more than one sent of God. He claimed for himself the glory which rightfully was his before the world was.

SO, COMING TO HIM, we may justly believe and say, "We know now that God has for us not only a sympathetic understanding, but has, in Jesus Christ, undergone a real human experience." In the Godhead, for all time and eternity, there is a record of our humanity as it should be and will be through faith; in this consciousness we may approach without fear and "draw nigh." Jesus Christ is God. Jesus Christ is man. "And unto the Lamb be glory and power, honor and dominion for ever and ever—for he is King of Kings and Lord of Lords, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

A Good Soldier

How do you make a good soldier? Here's the prescription Chaplain Simmie P. Holland distributes to the members of his Army congregation at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland:

A Prescription for all Soldiers:

Take 5 drops of good manners, 12 ounces of common sense, 10 ounces of consideration, and 1 ounce of behavior. Boil them down to normal; add a little self-respect and general behavior. Sweeten with manhood and human pride. Take 5 drops three times a day before meals; use it with prayer. When praying, use common sense; only ask your needs and leave off your wants; and don't forget to say "Amen." Squalling and moaning is not praying. You may have this prescription filled at the house of understanding next door to reasoning.—Fact Sheet 6-105-53, Department of the Army

Question Time

Question:

What special evidence can we bring to nonmembers which will justify the additional writing in the Inspired Version of the Book of Genesis?

Missouri

L. W. H.

Answer:

The question as to the new revelation in Genesis is broad in scope and impossible of a satisfactory answer in this column. But we note a few brief points, dealing with it almost entirely on the basis of its timeliness and fitness to this modern era.

A NEW TESTIMONY OF THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST

The age has brought criticism of the Bible's testimony of Christ exceeding all that ever went before, and the faith of the Christian world in the Christ has been largely broken down. But what was written into Genesis through revelation to Joseph Smith established a new testimony of his divinity. It records God's revelation of himself to Adam and other patriarchs, and they knew him. His relation to the world as Creator, Savior, and Redeemer is declared. He was the God of all men from the beginning. The revelation harmonizes with and confirms other revealed truth, and in its essential points is adapted to the times, giving grounds for a revival of faith.

INSPIRED VERSION AND EVOLUTION

A striking fact relative to the Inspired Version is that it sets up a divine standard incompatible with evolution. Instead of man's beginning in a state of inanity, with a mind no higher than that of the beast, the new revelation describes the first man on the earth as of full capacity physically and mentally—of necessity undeveloped but capable of rapid advancement, having qualification to talk with God, receive revelation, entertain angel visitants, and commune with the Holy Spirit. Adam quickly learned through divine ministration to record for posterity the truths revealed. There were no cave men in God's creation.

Instead of evolution (Darwinian), the book shows devolution. Man declined. Through sin he became debased, retrogressing slowly into mental darkness and savagery.

In both these points revelation spoke first declaring against the coming theory of evolution.

REVELATION OR FABLE?

Modern criticism of Genesis has urged that the account is but the assemblage of myths, fables, traditions, and so forth, having no standing as truth. Before this criticism was established the new account in Genesis had been given by revelation, describing the creation, Eden, the fall, the origin of human life, and so on. It comes in the first person rather than the third, the Author being, "I, the Lord God." It is God speaking—first to Moses, then by revealed translation to Joseph Smith. Moses wrote it anciently, and Joseph Smith wrote it modernly. Folklore had nothing to do with it. It stands today as the voice of God fresh from the heavens directly to the modern world.

WHEN THE GOSPEL WAS REVEALED

Christian teaching generally attributes the coming of the gospel with its priesthood, its ordinances, and its doctrines at the time of Christ's appearing. The new revelation in Genesis shows that the whole gospel was revealed at the beginning, manifesting God's impartial concern for the whole human race. Adam was baptized and received the Holy Spirit which testified of the divine Sonship of the coming Christ. Enoch saw his resurrection and testified of it. The absence of the gospel in later times came about through sin and apostasy.

WHAT WAS INVOLVED IN THE CREATION ACCOUNT?

It was a general assumption when the Inspired Version was made in 1832—and the idea still persists—that the Genesis account of creation involved the whole astronomical universe; that all things were created at that time. On this point astronomy has struck some devastating blows upon the faith of those who believed it, casting unjust discredit upon the whole Scripture. The new revelation specifies that the account deals only with "this heaven and this earth," referring to the solar system, all of which was created by a single process. Thus it removed one of the great stumbling blocks to the Christian faith.

OTHER POINTS CLARIFIED

There are a number of other points clarified by the Inspired Version making belief easy and consistent, such as the identity and origin of Satan, the principle of free moral agency, the reality of sin, the fact of human responsibility, and the assurance that the whole creation described had in the mind of God one great and far-reaching purpose in the development of man to a point greatly beyond the possibilities of this life. And there are others.

This revelation supplied a world's need. Neither Joseph Smith nor any other man could have written this account of himself. It is God's message to a falling world, and its greatest witness is time.

Question:

How did the Inspired Version come to be? I have heard several different explanations. Maybe you could clear this up for me.

Calif.

SGT. K. R. S.

Answer:

In the vault of the Historian's office we have the original Bible which Joseph Smith used in his work of correcting the Scriptures. We also have the original manuscript of the Inspired Version which was preserved by Emma Smith. An examination of these sources indicate that sometimes the whole chapter was rewritten in correcting the Scriptures, as in the book of Genesis. As the work proceeded, merely the changes to be made were written and identified by the chapter and verse.

The whole work of correcting the Scriptures was directed by the spirit of revelation. It was commenced about June, 1830, by Joseph Smith, Jr., assisted by Sidney Rigdon. Technically it is not a translation, though some of our literature and custom among the Saints has given it that title. In reality it is an inspired correction and restoration of the Scriptures. Joseph did not have a manuscript in a foreign language to translate. He used a copy of the King James Version for the correction. The first edition of the Inspired Version was published by the Reorganized Church in 1867. Read the Preface to the present edition for further information.

One Woman's Counsel

THIS YEAR marks a quarter of a century for me of membership in the Reorganized Church. It has been a very illuminating and strengthening experience but by no means an easy one. Through all of the trials and blessings I have tried to put my stewardship first in my life, to witness to others that this is the "pearl of great price," beside which all other jewels are mere baubles. Many times, however, in my zeal to warn others I failed to see the danger of overzealousness.

Members of the church who attend regularly are constant recipients of advice to "put first things first," to file financial statements and keep the law, to be mindful of the church's dire need of leadership and prepare in those fields of service in which we feel we may have any talent. We are also cautioned to pray constantly, to remember Sunday evening attendance is poor, to take more interest in prayer services, to learn to enjoy all the services, and not to attend only when Brother Apostle is speaking. We are warned against backbiting, encouraged to go to reunion for spiritual growth, reminded of the example we are to the world.

THE average church member needs these reminders, as is evidenced by the astounding lack of obedience to the financial law, by the tremendous loss of potential membership in our homes, and by the complacency which is typical of most of our branches. These members do not appreciate the marvelous blessings that are theirs, nor fully understand the power they refuse to utilize. If the Saints in America could see and know the conditions under which our members abroad live, and yet see their "move mountains" faith and their "do something about it" membership, they would indeed be humbled and put their hands to now rusty plows.

Of course there are those Saints—small minority though they be —who are aware of their blessings and their responsibility of stewardship, who really seek to make each action in their lives serve some purpose toward the building of the kingdom. These are the people who are willing and eager to use whatever talents they have to assist in the work. Being willing is only the first step. The second step is to ascertain where the Lord would have us serve and in what capacity. This sometimes takes quite a bit of doing, especially if we have any preconceived ideas of what lines our service should take. Many times our most obvious talent is not the one the Lord needs the most at the particular part of the vineyard where we may be laboring.

IN MY PATRIARCHAL BLESSING, which I received in my early youth, I was told that the Lord had blessed me with the gifts of patience and tenderness that I might fulfill my mission as a wife and mother. I felt my responsibilities along this line very keenly, but apparently not keenly enough to prevent my husband from getting the idea that the church was more important in my life than he was. We had many disagreements on tithing. It took me years to realize that it would be better to pay the smaller amount he wanted to pay and agree on it than it was to pay what I felt we owed and cause friction in the home. Zion can be built only with Zion families, and Saints who would live in Zion must needs learn first to set their own homes in order. No one sees us more often than the members of our families, and even though they may be trying at times, we must learn to live like Saints at home if we are to become the light of the world. The best testimony we can offer to the truthfulness of this gospel is a flesh-and-blood example of the charity Jesus taught.

My home was almost lost before I saw that to save it I would have to withdraw from the many church activities in which I was engaged and earnestly set about the task of showing my husband that he was important to me. To many it may seem that the life of active service demands a great deal of a person and is almost too much to ask. But I can say from experience that it is much harder to sit quietly on the sidelines when you hear the cry for leadership, and you have qualified yourself for service with leadership training, or to let the plea for choir singers go unanswered when you have trained to be a singer, or to refrain from attending prayer service when you need the spiritual comfort available there. For anyone who has an earnest conviction about his stewardship, it is much more difficult to be idle than to serve.

But perhaps I do not understand the Lord's purpose in me. It could be that all the training I took to become a teacher was necessary to impress one difficult pupil, my husband. How do I know that the Lord will not one day call him to the priesthood if he accepts the gospel, and his service to others will be far more valuable than the handful I might sing to or teach? We are told if we labor all our lives and save only one soul, our joy will be great with our Father in his kingdom. It is also possible that my husband may die a nonmember, but if he does, I don't want the reason to be that I was not valiant in my testimony. Neither do I want it to be because I was too valiant, but rather, if such a thing should happen, I would the reason should be that he exercised his agency. To some it is given to plant the seed, to some to water, and to some to gather the increase. If it is my lot only to plant, then I want to plant in the best way.

This is written in the hope that it may be of assistance to someone who may be traveling a similar road to mine, and may give that person comfort to remain faithful to the task to its conclusion. Remember that the Lord moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform, and that all things work together for good to those who love the Lord.

Drama as a Devotional Art

By Imogene Pement

WHEN I TOOK A COURSE in dramatic production at Graceland and chose "Drama in the Church" for the title of a theme I had to write, I had no idea this would ever turn out to be my chief hobby. It is a stimulating one, and I believe it has great possibilities for helping to create a clearer understanding of God's purposes as well as happier, more closely knit groups of individuals in branches.

Source materials for some of the things I shall cover have been found in Let Us Worship by Chris B. Hartshorn; Drama in the Church by Fred Eastman and Louis Wilson; and selected readings from the monthly periodical, Drama. All of these will serve as excellent references for anyone desiring to pursue the subject further.

"The purpose of a pageant is not merely to entertain, although the entertaining feature is an important factor in its success. The purpose of a pageant [as far as the audience is concerned] is to convey a truth in an entertaining, attractive way; to present an appeal to eye and ear in such a manner as to make a vivid impression of the reality of a truth. . . . But there is another purpose . . . of equal importance, and that is the influence upon those taking part in the pageant. The characters should become living beings to the participants, and, furthermore, in the practicing and preparation, those taking part should be receiving training in one of the fundamental arts of life—that of getting on well with others. Added to this is the deepening of the motive of true service, as those taking part are helped to feel that they are rendering a service to the work of the kingdom in presentation of the pageant." (Henrietta Heron, Pageants for the Year, pages 5, 6—Quoted from Let Us Worship.)

ACTING OUT PARABLES, plots, historical scenes, and stories on the stage has power. Mrs. Lea discusses this subject in her article in the Priesthood Journal, October, 1937, as follows:

"Drama appeals to every age because the dramatic instinct is deeply rooted within us. It appears at about the age of three years and continues throughout life. The child's mind deals with the concrete. His religion is symbolic. He comprehends it by seeing it exemplified by human beings in action. When the story of the good Samaritan is dramatized, he can understand the situation of the man from Jericho as well as the thoughts and feelings of the priest, the Levite, and the Samaritan. He learns the meaning of true brotherhood because he has seen it portrayed. Thus he is brought closer to the truth of religion and the kingdom of God.

"The youth creates characters out of his imagination that are concerned with the formation of ideals and finds comfort in his accomplishment. When he takes a part in a religious play, he enters into the life of the character and is edified by doing so. No one can participate in or witness a performance of the Christmas or Easter story without finding himself in closer contact with the divine.

"The adult lives over again many events of his own life through drama, solves his problems, clarifies his thoughts and ideas, and looks toward his future life. Thus is his soul uplifted, and he is drawn toward God." (Mrs. Lea's article is quoted from Let Us Worship.)

DRAMA HAS ITS PLACE in church school worship, although such is limited mostly because of the delicacy with which it must be handled. If a short dramatic sketch is used in place of a story, talk, or picture interpretation, it must be worshipful in its content, and artistically and reverently acted. If the sketch becomes a "show," its worshipful value is nil. It should be the heart of the worship service, preceded by a musical prelude, and perhaps by a hymn and a prayer. Scripture, special music, and some poetry may give the play additional support, providing all these have the theme of the drama strongly accented. Short plays or skits may be followed by a sermonette. If such a sketch is crudely done so that the mechanics are noticed by the worshiper, or if it doesn't fit in smoothly with the service and seem a part of it, the worship value is lost. The longer plays should be the climax of the worship and need only be followed by a benediction and musical postlude. If such a play is chosen to take the place of a Sunday evening sermon, special care should be exercised in its selection. Drama has reached a phase of large quantity, but the quality of most of our religious dramas is still low. Church leaders have little vision of what religious drama might be. Churches have seen in drama only a means of visualizing their stewardship message or an activity to keep young people busy. Directors ask for simple plays which can be given with only a few rehearsals and no royalty. It isn't any wonder that people would rather go to a movie where months of painstaking care has been put on one production. A religious drama is certainly not less important than one for entertainment only! Many churches have only the "free-will" offering to meet their expenses; therefore, they cannot afford to spend more than five dollars, so those in charge choose a cheap play and get cheap results. The audience dwindles, consequently, and less offering is available. Still cheaper plays have to be purchased. This causes the players to become discouraged and give up. On the other hand, good results could come if the leaders would say, "We will choose a good play. It has higher royalty, but we will advertize and draw a larger crowd." The large audience will inspire the players, and an inspired audience will come again and again. The churches which have had the best success in play production have found that only first-class plays have the quality necessary to reward players or to make the audience want to come back for the next production.

PRAYER IS A MOST important part of the planning and production of a religious drama, for without the Spirit of God, the most carefully planned service will be empty. One should clearly define in his own mind the lesson he wants to reach the hearts of his audience and pray for wisdom and inspiration in his preparation. Then he should ask for the presence of the Holy Spirit before presenting it to the people.

Watching a religious drama unfold (which has been carefully and prayerfully chosen and directed) is a rewarding experience to the play cast and audience alike. It lifts all concerned, stirs their noblest emotions, and sends them away with a deepened sense of fellowship with God and man.

Why Pray?

By Viola Velt and Lynn Ourth

WHY PRAY? That was our problem. Sometimes we felt as if we'd been merely saying words. Other times we didn't even want to pray and wondered why. We knew we should, but it didn't seem that God would be pleased with duty prayers. Somehow we had to develop a willingness to pray. These questions initiated our exploration of the meaning of prayer.

Many prayers we'd heard seemed to come under two main categories—giving thanks and asking blessings. In order to picture God's reaction to these we tried, on a smaller scale, to imagine a friend's reaction. Suppose we met a friend on the street and said, "Thanks, John, for the five dollars you gave me yesterday. You're a good friend. I wonder if you could give me six dollars now. I need it to pay the grocery bill tomorrow," and then abruptly walked away. Surely something would be lacking in a friendship if that were as far as it went.

Or sometimes prayer seemed like this: "John, would you please come and help us finish the addition to the new church tomorrow?" Then after doing it deliberately by ourselves we'd either thank him for his help (not received), or blame him for making it go wrong.

THESE TYPES of prayers didn't satisfy. True prayer, we thought, should include a companionship with God, and not only directing requests, but doing and living with him. Prayer should be opening a channel between ourselves and God. Even more so than with friends, it should be a two-way conversation. Prayer is a conscious willingness on our part to see everyday living as God does. It is allowing his words and truth to combine with our own thinking as we study a psychology book or discuss with a friend his personal problem. We should not separate prayer from activity but consult God as we work with him. Then we thought of the Book of Mormon, II Nephi 14: 11, 12. It clicked! Only by combining prayer with activity could we "pray always, and not faint."

No wonder we hadn't wanted to pray. We hadn't even interacted with God as we had with our friends. Difficulty in praying had risen from the fact that our concept of prayer just hadn't grown up to match our expanded concept of God. In prayer we still talked to God just as we had when we were children. We had grown in the daytime, and then every night at prayer time we had tried to crawl into a shell that fitted years ago. It was too tight! It hurt. Prayer should be enjoyable.

PRAYER IS A PRIVILEGE. We have sometimes thought how interesting it would be to talk with outstanding people in their fields—Einstein, Browning, Handel, Halliburton. Yet what greater pleasure it should be to talk with God, whose knowledge encompasses and surpasses all of any field we might explore. It was then we discovered another reason why prayer hadn't been enjoyable. We had blamed God for our limited, boring prayers. Communication with great people would be of little value if we didn't talk their language. We'd have to build up experience which would enable us to discuss their fields with understanding and intelligence. Otherwise we would have nothing to converse about. So with prayer, we had lacked the understanding to discuss with God his purposes. When two friends have both explored common interests together, they have a good time. We found we needed to adopt more of God's interests.

PRAYER SHOULD BE an exacting experience. It should stretch us to our highest level of thinking. And this is good for us. It brings into vivid reality our highest goals and refreshes our desires. Constantly doing this, we will engage in activities that achieve our goals; therefore establishing goals in prayer defines the activities in which we engage. In taking time and effort to see God's viewpoint we will assimilate it into our lives. We will become more like God. We will be enabled to see with new objectivity and perspective insights of our own actions and growth. Constantly doing with God would indeed be life! This is why pray.

So from this exploration we emerged with a new understanding of prayer, a new appreciation for a great friend.

Pilgrimage to Palmyra

Special Feature of Eastern College Student Conference

A PILGRIMAGE TO PALMYRA will be one of several features of the annual fall College Student Conference scheduled this year at Rochester, New York, over Labor Day week end, September 5, 6 and 7. The conference, provided under the direction of the First Presidency, is designed primarily for college and professional people, though others interested are invited to attend.

This is the first college student conference to be held in New York, where it is expected to serve people from eastern Canada and New England as well as from other eastern states, the South, and Midwest. Previous conferences have been held in Chicago, Independence, Kirtland, and Lamoni.

Housing at University of Rochester

One of the major problems in setting up the conference, that of finding suitable housing for a large group, was solved by the University of Rochester which has generously opened its women's campus near downtown Rochester with comfortable accommodations for single students and married couples at reasonable costs. Conference headquarters will be in the YMCA (or YWCA) where all meetings can be held and meals served.

Theme

A conference theme, challenging to highly trained church members, has been selected by the General Church Committee on Ministry to College People, of which Dr. L. O. Brockway is chairman. It is "The Professional in the Kingdom." Conference fellowship, speeches, forums, and worship will center about daily themes as follows:

Saturday—"What Is the Kingdom?"

Sunday—"Who Builds the Kingdom?"

Monday—"Do I Build?"

General Church men will participate with professional and business people and students. The conference will open Saturday evening with a dinner and the keynote address, and continue through Monday noon. On Sunday afternoon the conference will move in a body to Palmyra and the scenes of early church history. There they will visit the grove where Joseph Smith went as a boy to pray over a perplexing problem and where he received the first vision which led to the organization of the church. The Joseph Smith home will be visited, as well as Hill Cumorah where a special worship service is to be conducted. While a large number of people are being invited to take part, the program is so arranged that everyone present may have some part in the discussion, fellowship, and worship.

Purpose

The purpose of the fall conference is to share a special ministry with students from our college campuses and others whose heavy responsibilities in professional or business life often tend to crowd out the normal opportunities to give or to receive ministry. The attempt is also made at such conferences to co-ordinate the thinking of highly trained people between the movements and programs of the church and the greater part they might expect to play in kingdom-building. It is hoped that every effort will be made by those concerned to take advantage of this unusual opportunity to be brought up to date on the progress of the church and to share their thinking with church leaders.

Registration

Costs of the conference are being kept as low as possible. Registration for students is $1.00; for others, $3.00. All those planning to attend are asked to send their registration or letter of intention to College Student Conference, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri; not later than August 24. CARL MESLE

The Condition of Children in the Millennium

By D. H. Schmidt

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Limited space will not permit many articles on the same subject to be printed. The author is addressing his article to a statement recently published in Question Time that children "will be resurrected at His coming to inherit celestial glory."—EDITORS

I BELIEVE children who die before they reach the years of accountability are saved in the sense that they are under no condemnation. They are guiltless of knowingly violating any law, but their salvation at first must differ from those who inherit celestial glory.

Celestial salvation is an attainment, an achievement that must be worked out by all who inherit it, either in this life or the beyond. If dying innocent would qualify one to enter there, it would have been better for most of us to have died before we became accountable for our conduct.

Jesus said, "Strait is the gate and narrow the way and few there be that find it." I do not think he would have said this if the teeming millions who die and have died before the years of accountability are celestially saved.

It is written, "He that is not able to abide a celestial law cannot abide a celestial kingdom." When the question was asked, "Who are these arrayed in white?" the answer given was "These are they who came out of great tribulation, they have achieved, they have borne the cross, they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

I believe "he that continueth faithful to the end shall be saved" cannot include those who died without law.

Justice requires that if I walk with the white-robed throng, I shall have qualified the same as did the others. For me to inherit celestial glory without having carried the cross would be in violation of the eternal law of compensation. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap." The law of cause and effect cannot be set aside; there must be justice in judgment. Those who have not tasted the bitter can hardly enjoy the sweet.

When Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," he evidently meant what is expressed in his saying in Matthew 18: 3: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." He did not mean that the kingdom is composed of little children, but of people as pure in heart and as innocent as these little ones.

Those who have borne the cross and conformed to the gospel of Christ are entitled to celestial glory. Those who have died without law, including children, also shall come forth in the first resurrection. During the millennium these latter will have the opportunity of conforming to celestial law and becoming heirs of celestial reward.

Those who grow into maturity here are wonderfully privileged in having the opportunity to perfect their lives so that their sins have gone before them to judgment. Then at death they are qualified for an inheritance in celestial glory.

I do not understand why we should be careful in preserving the lives of children if they are safe, and thereby subject them to the hazard of this life's temptations. Nor can I understand the policy of civilizing and preaching to heathens to bring them to a condition where their chance for celestial life is slim, if there is no special compensation to those who go all the way with Christ.

Misleading Cigarette Advertising

By Glen R. Sheppard, M.D.
University of Kansas Medical Center

DESPITE misleading pseudomedical claims to the contrary in national cigarette advertising, smoking is harmful to some people and is never helpful. Doctors who smoke do so not because of but rather in spite of their medical knowledge.

There is considerable evidence that your chances of having lung cancer are increased if you smoke a package or more of cigarettes daily.

Smoking constricts the arteries supplying the skin and outer muscles of the arms and legs. Therefore, those people who have such forms of artery disease as Buerger's disease or Raynaud's disease must give up smoking completely if they expect to benefit from other medical treatment designed to save their toes, feet, and fingers.

Some doctors advise people against smoking who have peptic ulcer, coronary artery disease, or frequently repeated or chronic bronchial inflammation, and for at least a few weeks following heart attacks.

When doctors advise against smoking, they regard all brands of cigarettes as having the same effect and different only in regard to flavor and packaging. This is not the impression you would get from the advertising of cigarette companies.

Better Business Bureaus, who work constantly to build honesty in advertising and selling and to increase public confidence in all business, have joined with the Federal Trade Commission in another move against misleading cigarette advertising. The February 18, 1953, issue of the Kansas City Better Business Bureau Bulletin has five full pages devoted to the case against cigarette advertising. It is well worth your reading. You can get a copy by writing the Kansas City Better Business Bureau, enclosing a three-cent stamp for return postage.

When a cigarette company advertises that "a medical specialist's tests" reveal that smoking their cigarettes does not "adversely affect the nose, throat, and accessory organs of a group of people who smoked ten to forty cigarettes a day," you should insist on answers to a number of questions. First, who is the medical specialist and what are his qualifications? Is he actually a specialist in diseases of ear, nose, and throat? Second, how many people were tested and what were these tests? The advertising agency so far has failed to release this specific information.

The Federal Trade Commission repeatedly has attempted to restrain the use of false or misleading claims in cigarette advertising. In 1951 the Federal Trade Commission, after a careful examination of the facts, stated that the tobacco constituents of the products of several different tobacco companies are similar.

It found that "smoking cannot be considered under any circumstances as beneficial to any of the body systems, that nicotine is not a therapeutic agent for any purpose, that it is a poison and a killing poison." It also found "that in the process of smoking, the body is invaded by other constituent elements of the cigarette, causing local irritation of the mouth, throat, and lungs."

This would seem perfectly clear and unequivocal. Yet, subsequently a cigarette company turned this statement around for its own advertising purposes. Its claim now is that "no other leading cigarette is less irritating or easier on the throat or contains less nicotine." In other words, this is reverse English on the factual claim that all cigarettes are similar and that all are irritating and contain nicotine.

The Better Business Bureau Bulletin has the complete story on cigarette advertising versus the real facts and medical opinion. By my arrangement, it is available to you.—Reprinted with permission from the March 25, 1953, issue of Better Business Bureau Bulletin, of Kansas City, Missouri.

Dr. Floyd Skelton

Dr. Floyd Skelton, now of Prairie Village, Kansas, has received a fellowship from the American Heart Association. The following item about him appeared in the Kansas City Star of June 4, 1953:

Dr. Floyd R. Skelton, Stratford, Ontario, pathology instructor at the University of Kansas Medical Center, has been awarded a one-year research fellowship by the American Heart Association.

The fellowship, which begins July 1, carries with it a grant of $4,250. It was awarded in order that Dr. Skelton might continue promising research which he carried on in Canada. He is interested in the mechanism of high blood pressure, particularly as it may be caused by certain naturally occurring chemical substances in the body.

The physician plans to study the effect on rats' blood pressure of injecting synthetic chemicals which are chemically similar to those put out by the adrenal glands and testes.

He came to the United States from Montreal, Canada, last year to further his studies in cancer and pathology. He received his medical degree from the University of Western Ontario in 1947 and received a Ph.D. degree from the University of Montreal in 1952.

Dr. Skelton holds the office of priest and attends Prairie Village congregation.

Jesse Cady—"Mr. 5,000"

Jesse Cady of East Moline, Illinois, enrolled in the International Harvester's Central School and discovered he was "Mr. 5,000." Brother Cady's prominent place in public interest was a statistical milestone for his company. Because of his devotion to the church this became an opportunity for him to witness in his professional role.

For two weeks he attended classes in the school in Chicago; a three-page pictorial feature in the Harvester World, the International Harvester's company magazine, told his story. The feature gave Brother Cady's position as a minister for the church a great deal of the credit for his ability to speak.

Brother Cady is an elder in the Moline, Illinois, Branch. He is one of the counselors to the branch president and is the district choir director.

First Youth Retreat in District

ALABAMA DISTRICT.—The district youth retreat was held March 28 and 29 in Montgomery. The attendance was about 117, with 90 per cent in attendance before the first class session began.

After the morning classes along the theme of the retreat "What Seek Ye?" lunch was served at the church. That afternoon planned recreation was carried out through the local YMCA. The dining hall of the Montgomery First Christian Church was the setting for the banquet on Saturday night. The banquet was brought to a close with the Easter story presented by the district youth leader, Harry A. Engle. He used flannelgraph scenes to illustrate his talk.

A fellowship service was held Sunday morning. Following the morning worship dinner was served with the Montgomery Branch.

On Sunday afternoon, guided tours were provided by the local Zion's League to places of historic interest through the capital city. "Landmarks of the Confederacy" was the theme of the tour.—Reported by MELVIN JOHNSON

Institute Held

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS DISTRICT.—The San Antonio Branch and mission were hosts to a priesthood and women's institute May 23-24. The staff included Apostle and Sister C. G. Mesley and Apostle Charles Hield. Brother Mesley was in charge of the men's classes and worship service. He also preached. Mrs. Mesley taught the women's classes. Apostle Hield taught the general class, and was in charge of the prayer service and the closing dedication service. In this he was assisted by Brothers Mesley and F. P. Hall. Others participating in this service were District President J. E. Wilder; Floyd E. Jett, pastor of the San Antonio Branch; Robert Wakeman, non-resident pastor; Billie Hall, priest; Wayne Jackel, leader of Brownsville group; Mrs.

Wayne Simmons of Rio Grande Valley; Mrs. Frances McCormick, district women's leader; Mrs. Emma Sasse, local women's leader; and Mrs. Florene Neely, church school superintendent. The choir was accompanied by Miss Emma Jackson at the organ.—Reported by MRS. RUTH HARP

Active Zion's League

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—At a special meeting conducted by the Zion's League, the pastor, Elder C. C. Taylor, presented the members of both the Senior League and the Junior League with the Zion's League membership cards. The Leagues have been doing many helpful things, including sending clothes and food to needy people, painting the church, and starting to raise money for a recreation hall.

On June 13, three new members were baptized. They were Archie Palmer, Richard Palmer, and Donna Ross.—Reported by DONA STANBRIDGE

Two Candidates Baptized

RAPID CITY, SOUTH DAKOTA.—On June 7, Fred and Ione Hunt of Lead, South Dakota, were baptized by Roy Shumate, Sr., of Woodbine, Iowa. The service was held in a stream near Rapid City during the ten o'clock service hour. The group then returned to the church for the eleven o'clock service where Sister Hunt was confirmed by Elder Dale Larsen of Deadwood, South Dakota, assisted by Elder George Mefferd of Rapid City; Brother Hunt was confirmed by Brother Mefferd, assisted by Brother Larsen.—Reported by DALE E. LARSEN

Youth Rally Held

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO DISTRICT.—The Zion's Leaguers of the district held a youth rally on April 26 in the Durham Community Centre. Serving on the staff were Elders Gordon Farrow of Warton, Alex Cadwell of Guelph, William McMurray and Benson Belrose of Owen Sound, and Evan Shute of London. The district youth supervisor, Alma Leeder, was in charge of the activities.

America's Ancient Civilizations

by A. Hyatt Verrill and Ruth Verrill

This is a brand-new book that discusses current theories and discoveries about the fascinating civilizations of the Mayas, the Aztecs, and the Incas. The fellowship service in the morning was directed by William McMurray. The morning preaching was by Benson Belrose. A question panel was conducted by Alma Leeder in the afternoon, with the members of the panel as follows: Alex Cadwell, William McMurray, Benson Belrose, and Gordon Farrow.

The guest speaker for the day was Dr. Evan Shute of London. "Choose Ye This Day" was the theme of his sermon.

Over one hundred young people attended the rally.—Reported by A. J. V. LEEDER

Candidate Confirmed

SABINE, TEXAS.—Apostle Charles R. Hield and Seventy Norman Cox visited the Port Arthur, Texas, mission on May 11 and 12. On May 11 the meeting was held at the home of Brother and Sister Walter Tryon, and on May 12, at the home of Brother and Sister Ralph Sherrell. Brother Hield gave an illustrated lecture on the new slides he brought back from his recent trip to Central America. Brother Cox preached the next evening.

Many of the group attended the institute at Houston, May 9 and 10.

Elder W. W. Strong and family visited on May 31. Brother Strong blessed his grandson, Richard Plumlee, son of Brother and Sister Charles Plumlee of Orange, Texas.

On June 7, Brother C. W. Tischer and Brother and Sister Banta of Houston, Texas, visited the mission. Sister Banta, district women's president, gave a talk to the women of the mission. A confirmation service was held for Sister Walter Tryon who was baptized at the institute in Houston. Brother C. W. Tischer officiated, assisted by J. Henry Porter.—Reported by RALPH V. SHERRELL

Men Approved for Ordination

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.—A special conference was held at Port Elgin, May 31, with the district president, Gordon Farrow, presiding. A business session was held at which the following were approved for ordination to the priesthood: George Moore, Owen Sound, elder; John Snell, Redickville; Alma Leeder, Port Elgin; MacKinnon Irvine and Stanley King, Owen Sound; Albert Reid and Layton Robinson, Wiarton, priests; Arthur John Miller, Port Elgin, and Calvin Robinson, Wiarton, teachers; Wayne Miller, Port Elgin; Clive Chisholm and Gordon Smith, Wiarton; Lowell Davis and Gerald Davis, Collingwood, deacons.

Classes were conducted for the various groups in the afternoon. Bishop L. W. Kohlman spoke to the priesthood. Elder M. J. Perkins of Owen Sound addressed the young people. Sister Anne Davis of Collingwood was in charge of the children. Sister Rosiland Reid of Wiarton spoke to the women's group about "Teen-ager's Problems as Related to the Church." Sister Aarona Kohlman's topic was "Developing Our Talents in Our Branches," and "Nursing" was the topic of Sister Edna McCarrell.

Bishop Kohlman's topic for the afternoon service was "Stewardship of Our Lives." A basket lunch was served at noon.—Reported by ELIZABETH BELROSE

Progress Made on Building

CALGARY, ALBERTA.—Howard Fisher, missionary for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, conducted a series from April 26 to May 10. At the conclusion of the series, Wilma Rost was baptized by Brother Fisher, and confirmed by Elders Fisher and F. L. Dickson.

Marilyn Richards was baptized December 6 by Elder F. L. Dickson. She was confirmed by Elders Dickson and A. D. McLeod. Mary Cronkhite was baptized January 25 by Elder A. D. McLeod. She was confirmed by Elders W. H. Atkinson and C. M. Miller.

Elders C. H. Hobart and Z. Z. Renfroe and Apostle Paul M. Hanson have visited the branch. Brother Hanson addressed the congregation in the morning and evening on May 24.

The lower auditorium of the church has now been completed, and plans for completion of the upper auditorium are progressing.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Mary Richards, has held a coronation tea, bazaar, and sale of home cooking.

A number of young people, escorted by Brother W. Hayden and Elder Fisher, attended the interdistrict youth rally at Ribstone, Alberta, May 16-18. The classes and services were conducted by Elders Fisher and Hobart.—Reported by MRS. J. R. DICKSON

Missionary Endeavor in Area

DES MOINES, IOWA.—Twenty-four people were baptized in the Des Moines Branch on Children's Day. Seven of the candidates were from the Highland Park mission, and six others were from Runnells, and Rhodes, Iowa. The largest attendance in the city of Des Moines which has ever been noted was present for the service.

The district financial observance day was held, with Bishop Stephen Robinson presiding.

Apostles Reed M. Holmes and Roscoe E. Davey, and Elder Arthur Rock presided over a regional church school institute, including the Lamoni Stake and the Northwestern Iowa, Southwestern Iowa, Rock Island, Illinois, and Des Moines, Iowa, Districts participating, with the district president, Ralph Wicker, and Mrs. Florence Freberg planning the details. A district young people's convention was held in Des Moines, under the direction of the district youth leader, Jack Ross. Charles Neff was the guest speaker. A priesthood institute was held with Dr. F. M. McDowell as guest speaker.

The annual vacation church school was held June 8-12. An average of one hundred children attended daily. The achievement program which climaxed the school was held on Friday evening.

The branch recently purchased a lot in the southern part of the city on which to erect a new church for the Fort Des Moines mission.

Within the next couple of months, the branch will replace the old opera seats now in use in the Central Church with the new pews.

Seventy Eugene Theys spoke to the Men's Club concerning the development of the German Mission. Kenneth Raveill spoke at another meeting of the Men's Club concerning new developments in South America as it touches the Book of Mormon, and Dr. McDowell spoke at the closing meeting of the club on "Success and its relation to the church."

Pauline Arnsen of the General Church Council of Women was the guest speaker at the mother-son banquet and district women's institute.

The district missionary, Seventy William Haden, conducted six weeks of missionary services in the West Des Moines and Fort Des Moines missions and Central Church.—Reported by BARBARA BLAIR

Baptismal Service Held

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.—On June 14, Children's Day, Elmo Enlow baptized Judy Franklin, Richard A. Gregg, Mrs. Maggie Coleman, and Mr. Donald Coleman at 6:00 p.m. in Glenn Lake. Confirmation services followed at 7:30 p.m. Elder Robert Glenn used as his text, "The Witnesses Speak," displaying the Three Standard Books.—Reported by ODEE ELLEN CAMPBELL

ANNIVERSARY

The first church of the Reorganization in Independence, Missouri, was dedicated on July 6, 1884, by Joseph Smith III. It stood at East Lexington and Pearl Streets. It was hailed as a great occasion signifying "the return" of the Saints as promised. We now have sixteen congregations and two missions here.

...And Finally

JOURNEY INTO THE PAST

Have you ever had a young girl adopt you as her foster parents (quite unofficially, of course) during a school year away from her own people? Well, it's considerable fun to be so adopted. You are included in so many things, like fudge-making for the boy friend in the service, cakes and letters from home, family news, and a spectator seat on many an interesting event.

One of these gave us a journey into the past. We were invited to the house for the high occasion when Brother Bob was to be home for a visit from his duties in the military service.

We turned off the big highway onto a blacktop road for a few miles, drove through little towns filled with sleepy content, past country homes and churches—all the quiet hinterland life that the fast transcontinental travelers never see. . . .

The big old-fashioned white house was surrounded by a wide lawn, neatly mowed. There were spreading trees, with deep cool shade so comfortable in summer, an iris garden in full bloom with hundreds of varieties, and a rock garden. There was a deep well with plenty of cold sweet water. The barns were far enough back so that the little community of domestic animals did not bother the human neighbors.

Inside the house, dinner was cooking on an old kitchen range, but it was assisted by a modern refrigerator. Rows of African violets filled a window. In the big living room were comfortable chairs for everybody, and no one was crowded. The history of this house was the family history. It had seen the passing of the years, the growth of children, maturity, birth, and death.

Then Brother came home—a tall, handsome, friendly lad, his heart unchanged, his essential good character unaffected by all his experiences. He ate his dinner down and didn't wait for dessert because he wanted to go to an evening meeting at the church and hear the minister's talk. He drank in the life and love of his home eagerly like one who had been thirsty for it a long time. It was easy to see how much this meant to all of them.

It was an old-fashioned home, an old-fashioned kind of people, generous, genuine, honest, and kind. Their farming was modern and scientific, but they had seen "modernism" and knew its merits and faults. They had simply passed it by as something of no particular importance or interest to them. They did not care for pretense, show, or sophistication.

Tomorrow we must go back to the modern world, but here is a memory of something old and beautiful to which a hungry heart can turn in a time of spiritual need. L. J. L.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Donald D. Landon

I COUNT IT A PRIVILEGE of inestimable value to have been reared in the church," says Don Landon, appointee missionary to Oregon District. His conversion to the church took the form of a continuous growth from early childhood. He felt the pulsations of the Spirit of God as he bore his testimony when ten years old. "The succeeding years have endowed me with knowledge of the rightness of the Restoration. My testimony is still developing."

Preaching the gospel was a cherished ambition since early childhood for Don, when he heard his father preach. The ambition was pretty much buried as he grew up. He thought it was just a dream.

Born in 1930, he grew up in Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he was graduated from high school in 1948. He attended Graceland College from 1948 to 1950, where he edited the Tower, was a member of the student council and Lambda Delta Sigma. Then he went to the University of Iowa where he remained until June, 1951, when he received a communication from the joint council requesting him to take appointment. He entered the mission field with a background of political science and journalism.

His first appointment took him to the Northwest. Here he married Shirley Johnson of Seattle, Washington, in May, 1952. "She is a most valuable supporter-critic," he says.

The General Conference of 1952 appointed him to the Oregon District where he is working at the present. Don was ordained an elder in 1951. His fondest ambition is to see a community of people living the laws of the kingdom. His hobbies are music and writing.

News and Notes

FROM HEADQUARTERS

PRESIDENT AT REUNION

President Israel A. Smith, who was in attendance at the Gulf States Reunion at Brewton, Alabama, reports that it was a great success despite the heavy rains of the last three days. He was the speaker at the preaching service at 11:00 a.m., June 28.

SPEAKS IN ZION

President F. Henry Edwards preached at West College in Independence on June 26. On June 27, he was associated with Bishop G. L. DeLapp and the stake presidency and stake bishopric at the conference in Zion at which time Elders Kenneth Byrn and Monte L. Parker were ordained to the office of high priest. Brother Edwards is the only member of the presidency in the office at this time as Presidents Israel A. and Wallace Smith are at reunions.

CAMPUS SPEAKER

Bishop Walter N. Johnson was the evening speaker at the Campus in the Center Stake of Zion on June 26.

AT COUNCIL BLUFFS

Apostle C. George Mesley preached on June 26 at Council Bluffs, Iowa. That afternoon he performed the wedding ceremony of Elder Robert Flanders to Sally Harding.

RETURNS FROM REUNION

Apostle Charles R. Hield was at the Texas Reunion at Bandera, Texas, June 19 to 28. It was the largest reunion in the history of Texas, with 450 people camping during the week. The attendance was about 650 on the week ends. Facilities have been improved on the grounds, Brother Hield reports. General Church men who were on the staff with Brother Hield included F. Carl Mesle, Wayne Simmons, Norman Cox, Charles Kornman, and Lewis Landsberg.

HOME FROM FIELD

Apostle D. Blair Jensen has returned to the office from a trip during which he covered the Central Oklahoma District, the Kansas District, and Nebraska. He attended a meeting at Wichita, Kansas, June 19, at which time Elder Ron Manuel was installed as pastor to replace Elder Myron LaPointe who is going to Nebraska to replace Seventy James Daugherty who will go to Central Illinois District. Brother Jensen reports that the missionary spirit is growing, and successful youth camps are being held in these areas.

PASSION PLAY IN REHEARSAL

Rehearsals have begun on the passion play drama, "Other Sheep I Have," which will be given in the Auditorium, August 13 and 14. The drama will not only portray Christ's ministry in Jerusalem but will also cover his post-resurrection ministry in Zarahemla. Sponsored by the Walnut Park and Eden Heights Zion's Leagues, roles will be assumed by a number of Independence people. Alta Seal is in charge of stage settings which will extend over the front area of the Auditorium. A thirty-foot temple will be part of the stage setting.

An Understanding Heart

"Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad."

—I Kings 3: 9

THE BIBLICAL NARRATIVE surrounding this remarkable prayer begins with these words:

In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night: and God said, Ask what I shall give thee.

With such a freedom of choice, it would not be surprising if a man chose wealth, glory, power, or some other personal benefit. The distinctive fact here is the character of Solomon's choice. He chose what was most needed for the welfare of his people. It did not occur to him to use such an opportunity to satisfy his personal desires, if he had any. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that his personal desire was for the good of the people.

And, as often occurs in life, the unselfish choice not only accomplished its noble purpose but brought to Solomon the best rewards anyone could have desired.

WHAT IS AN understanding heart? The ancient people knew what modern psychologists are finding out: that a personality cannot be separated into a series or a group of independent functions; a person is an entity; all his parts work together to make him what he is. When the Scriptures speak of a man's heart, it is certainly intended to include his intelligence, feelings, attitudes, purposes, and principles.

Put together such statements as these: "The glory of God is intelligence," and "God is love." This will give you an idea of it. It is something that knows, loves, and has good will. It is something like what was said of Jesus: "He went about doing good."

The understanding heart is often accompanied by the serving hand. Action follows perception as a natural course of events.

WHEN THE LORD made the offer of a gift, Solomon was prepared. He knew what he wanted. He had probably meditated with some concern upon his deficiencies and shortcomings as an inexperienced ruler. And he had a very high regard, a great respect for his people. Great rulers respect their people; bad ones often do not.

So Solomon did not hesitate, did not ask for further time to consider the matter. He laid his heavy problem before the Lord and asked for what would give him most help. If we can judge, we would say the Lord must have been pleased to bestow that gift. The request was a credit to the man. And regardless of what was to happen in the future, the Lord knew what he was doing when he made the gift. It accomplished good at a time when good was greatly needed. Solomon was better fitted to receive it than any other person living in his time.

THE WHOLE DISCUSSION up to this point would be valueless if it did not lead to one conclusion: we, too, need understanding hearts. We should try to understand other people and their problems in order to make better, wiser, and kinder adjustments to them. And, where possible, we need to understand ourselves.

Putting it even more clearly, we need a better understanding of other people's virtues and merits, their problems and hurts. We need a clearer understanding of our own faults and limitations.

Experience offers us a few keys to understanding:

1. There is a motive for everything in human behavior. Every act, every thought, every expression is a reaction to something else.

2. Each new problem has grown in the soil of an older one.

3. So many things people do or say arise out of something that has been done or said to them. People's mistakes often originate in other people's mistakes.

4. People feel first. Then, often, they act at random and not always very intelligently. In a few cases they may think clearly about it. Only a superior mind is qualified for this part.

5. What we face is a problem in human relationships in which a wrong solution has been tried.

6. It is our responsibility and opportunity to learn the facts back of the problem and to try to find another and a better solution.

It is a great thing to aspire to have an understanding heart. Not many of us can reach that kind of perfection—very few, in fact. But all of us can try, with the reasonable hope of making a little improvement, a little progress.

There are two great areas where understanding hearts are most needed: the home and the church.

If you have access to a copy of Newsweek for April 27, turn to page 102, under the department "Medicine," which deals with "Small Fry Ulcers"—the inflammation and hemorrhage of the stomach in children due to lesions caused by worry, fear, and punishment, by being unwanted and mistreated. All over the country, homes that should be bits of heaven have been turned into hells of torment by parents who do not have understanding hearts.

And many of these same people, seeking solutions for their problems in church, find the same difficulties there, and the troubles of many a church have their origin in the homes and are brought to the congregation where they are magnified and multiplied.

One of the greatest needs of our time is for all of us to try to have understanding hearts. L. J. L.

Church School Handbook

Attention is called to the recent revision of the Church School Handbook, an official guidebook prepared by the Department of Religious Education. Contents include sections on history and objectives of religious education; organizing the church school; the work of stake, district, congregation or branch church school directors and other church school officers; a statement of church school curriculum; suggestions for improving church school worship, teaching, and evaluation; training possibilities through the Christian Education and Leadership Training Curriculum; helps in establishing a church school library; and a review of approved activity programs of the church.

Administrative officers and church school workers are urged to familiarize themselves with this Church School Handbook and to consider it an approved guide in this area.

Vacancies at the Sanitarium

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital has vacancies in two departments which offer good professional and vocational opportunities.

There is a position for a graduate physical-therapist in the physical therapy department, a department started within the last year which is growing very rapidly. This person will be second in line of authority in the department. At present, approximately 50 per cent of the cases treated are post-polio children. This position lends itself to professional growth and personal service and is compensated for at salary prevailing in this area.

Two student opportunities are available in the hospital pathology department for medical technologist in training. The student is paid from the first month while in school with

Auditorium Progress Report

AT A RECENT MEETING of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with the architects, a decision was made relative to the design for the center front and foyer of the Auditorium building. A considerable amount of work and study has been done in connection with this in recent months, and the above picture shows a front view of the model which has been redesigned. In our opinion, this is a very definite improvement over all that has been presented in the past.

The meeting was attended by our architect, Mr. D. K. Frohwerk of Bloomington and Frohwerk, Kansas City, Missouri; Mr. Joseph D. Murphy, Consulting Architect from St. Louis, Missouri; and Mr. Robert B. Newman, with the firm of Bolt, Beranek, and Newman, Consultants in Acoustics, Cambridge, Massachusetts. We are sure that all interested in the construction of this building will be pleased to note the addition of Mr. Newman to our staff of architects. We feel that we now have a very fine professional service that should meet all of our needs in connection with this building.

Authorization has been given to the architects to proceed with the drawing of final plans and specifications for the center front and the foyer. Every effort will be made to have construction well under way by the next General Conference. Studies of the loud-speaking system have already been authorized, and we are hopeful that there will be definite improvement in the loud-speaking system for next Conference.

We are therefore organizing our forces to increase subscriptions for this project beginning September 1 to contact members throughout the church to give them opportunity to contribute. This does not in any way suggest that those who are in a position to give withhold their contributions until that time.

compensation increasing at the end of each three months. The length of training is one year, to prepare for state examinations for medical technologist. Two years of college are required.

Young people interested in these opportunities at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital should contact A. N. Deaver, Administrator.

Apostle Hield on TV, July 13

Members and friends in the WDAF-TV area will be pleased to learn that the "Town Topics" program scheduled for June 1 will be presented on Monday, July 13. This rescheduling was made necessary by labor difficulties at the station which prevented its operation at the time the program was originally scheduled.

To be presented at 12:15 p.m., the program will feature eight minutes of motion picture footage of the ancient Maya ruins in Mexico—with accompanying authentic Mexican music—plus an interview with Apostle Charles R. Hield to explain the pictures and the reasons for our interest in archaeology of ancient America.

The movies are a part of those taken a few months ago by Kenneth Raveill of the Audio-Visual Department. Production of the program is also under the supervision of that department.

Clifford Cole Assigned

Brother Clifford Cole has been serving as Dean of students of Graceland College for the past two years on leave from General Conference appointment. In harmony with recent action of the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, Brother Cole has now assumed his new responsibilities as Director of Children's Work in the Department of Religious Education. We are very happy to have Brother Cole available for this important field of General Church ministry.

Responsibilities of Truth

By Ray Zinser

Baccalaureate sermon given at Graceland College,
Lamoni, Iowa, on Sunday, May 24, 1953

"The glory of God is intelligence."—
Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6

Introduction

We worship God this morning through the baccalaureate service. We shall concern ourselves with the responsibilities inseparably connected with truth. At the close of this service it is my hope that we shall be motivated to accept and to fulfill the responsibilities of truth.

Two assumptions form the frame of reference for this service. The first is taken from the illuminating statement given to Joseph Smith in May, 1833:

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

The second assumption is taken from God's revelation in the New Testament:

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8: 32.

These statements should be particularly apropos for those who have spent many hours together in the pursuit of truth.

If we can accept these basic assumptions—and certainly there is ample evidence to support them—something important must logically follow. We are saying that intelligence—light or truth—is of major importance to God, and truth is the means by which freedom is to come to man.

Thesis

My thesis then follows: Assuming that the glory of God is intelligence, or truth, and that the truth shall make us free, we must make the solemn commitment—the dedication of our lives to the fulfillment of the responsibilities inherent in truth, responsibilities in the form of opportunities and obligations. We must use every technique in our power to discover and utilize truth. By so doing our freedom—personal and social—is assured.

Science and Religion

How, then, shall we discover truth? Two basic techniques may be used. One is the scientific method. The other is divine revelation. Science and religion are two parts of the same basic process in the revelation of truth. While separate and different in methodology, scientific truth and divine truth are inseparable in origin and purpose and validate each other. The admonition to "seek learning by study and by faith" symbolizes the inseparable unity of truth whether by scientific or by divine channels.

An Exacting Process

The revelation of truth by science is an exacting process by which we determine what is, and the manifold relationships of phenomena with each other. The revelation of truth through religion is equally exacting as we come to an understanding of those elements of truth not immediately available through the scientific process, but which may be revealed by direct revelation from God or through the inspirational channels of God.

Objectives of Our Religion

What, then, are the objectives of our religion? Our religion must make us more intelligent than we could possibly be without it. It must provide the means for more truth, for greater intelligence than we can obtain through science alone. Our religion—in all its forms, functions, and manifestations—is calculated to make us better persons by making us wiser, to make us more useful by making us more intelligent.

Thus our religion seeks above all to motivate us to develop our capacities and our abilities to their most ideal expression, to enlighten our understanding, whether in the physical, biological, or social sciences, the humanities, or theology.

Creation

Science, however, is amoral—that is without morals—and hence does not give any value to its findings. Science cannot affirm ultimate values. Thus we must go to divine truth for purposes of life. From divine truth we discover that—

... were it possible that man could number the particles of the earth, and millions of earths like this, it would not be a beginning to the number of your creations.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 6.

The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleteth the measure of its creation.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

We can rightfully infer that the ultimate of all life is bound up with creation or the release of creative power. Each entity, each organism, each element, each human being has a "potential" to fulfill its measure of creation.

Creation is eternal. It is a continuous process—ever occurring and ever evolving. This we learn from prophetic insight:

The heavens, they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, . . . and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

Just as the galaxies of the heaven are a part of eternity, so is man a part of the infinite divine plan:

. . . for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

In an infinite creation there is an infinite life for man, an immortality—an eternal life.

Divine truth says that part of the eternal plan is to give each person equal opportunity to develop his possibilities and to release his creativity to the highest possible level. Divine truth also says that each person is sacred and must be allowed the joy and dignity of creative living. Scientific truth affirms the possibility of this.

The Kingdom of God

Human beings by nature, by creative endowment, are so constructed that they arrive at their personalities through social interaction—participation with other human beings. The only means available for man to survive biologically or socially is through human groups. Thus, any creativity, any expression and development which comes to man, will be through the auspices of his groups.

Divine truth points out that the best possible participation in eternal life today and tomorrow will come only as the kind of social groupings are developed in which godly ways—that is creative ways—are the fabric of all thinking and acting of the group. Thus, divine revelation presented the truth of the kingdom of God more commonly called Zion. Men must have the freedom for participation with God in the most ideal or creative fashion. This can occur only when men are "organized" and "gathered" together in Zion communities.

Through the social processes of the Zion community the Zion personality emerges—more intelligent, more wise, more enlightened, and more creative, because that personality has the wider channels open for his development, achievement, and creation. The Zion personality is able to develop free from insidious influence of the frauds, imposition, and treachery which are perpetuated by unscrupulous and ungodly cultural patterns.

It is a freedom for creative or godly living.

Evangelization

The infinite in man requires a sharing of creation possibilities and creative expression with others. We commonly call it evangelization. The greatest creative release for all men will come only as all are given equal opportunity for adequate food, clothing, shelter, education, vocation, and for mental, physical, and emotional health. Sharing the gospel message is not only spreading the story of God and the story of the "Restoration" but also is completely bound up with creating conditions by which truth in all areas of life may be understood and practiced by all men.

Our World Today

But what of our world today? You have had sacred moments of experimental Zion participation on this campus. You now leave your laboratory demonstration founded on this campus by truth and nurtured by divine inspiration. The larger world that you now go to is a world neither all good nor all bad. Because of the tremendous advances in truth—expressed in science, education, and technology—never before has civilization been confronted with greater light. And yet, unfortunately, never before have we been confronted with greater darkness. This makes even more urgent our responsibility to separate fact from fiction, truth from falsehood, and myth from reality.

Wars and Rumors of War

Wars and rumors of war are literally with us.

The Communists have elaborate plans for the conquest of southeast Asia; for the neutralization of Scandinavia, Germany, and Japan; for the alienation of the Latin Americas; for splitting the western allies; for the subversion of the governments in western Europe; for unrelenting harassment of the United States; and for the eventual and unequivocal domination, tyranny, and exploitation of the world. All this comes at a time when the so-called Soviet peace campaign is being perpetuated. This is another fraud characteristic of Communist treachery.

In every corner of the world today saboteurs, infiltrators, and fellow travelers have raised the hammer and sickle—symbols of the powerful and ungodly destructive forces. The perversion of truth and the crude, ugly trampling down of freedom in every form are great threats to democratic government by free men. We are in the position where an unfortunate incident could bring total war with all its monstrous results to the world.

Potential for Good or Evil

What, then, may we do as we are threatened by the hideous Communist Frankenstein monster, by the political inquisitors on the home front, and by the muddleheadedness of so many of us who claim indifference as a right and social irresponsibility as a privilege? Shall we forsake the evil one? Shall we forsake those forces twisting truth and obliterating freedom?

Knowledge is power, and power in any form has potential for good or evil. The vulturous enemy of man is not his science, his intelligence, or his technology. Nor is it his prolific electronic, atomic, rocket age. Rather the enemy of man is his prostrated sense of values and his moral inadequacy. It is modern man's worship of scientific truth which is completely amoral and without values. It is man's naïve denial of divine truth and the denial of ultimate purposes of life revealed in divine truth.

Our laboratories are energetically conducting research into atomic and hydrogen energy. Physical and bacteriological weapons are being perfected which could result in indescribable destruction. This afternoon, tonight, or tomorrow our planet may become a fiery holocaust.

Our generation is presented with the choice between the use of intelligence and truth to build a peaceful, efficient, creative world, or the use of truth in perverted and tyrannous ways for a series of desperate Armageddons.

Our microscopes can assist us in developing deadly viruses to contaminate water supplies and vegetation areas for immense populations, or they can help us in discovering the cause of cancer.

Our laboratories can give us bigger and more explosive bombs to return us to radioactive dust; or they can bring us nuclear energy for transportation, industrial power, medical healing, and rocket ships for space travel.

Our social sciences can give us techniques to control the masses through clever, unscrupulous manipulation of public opinion, or they can give us techniques by which people can participate in enlightened civic and political life.

Our poets can write eulogies to our war heroes, or our poets can write praises of our Schweitzers, our Sister Kennys, or our Kagawas. Our music may be written for marching soldiers, or for genuine festivals of peace.

Is Religion a Blessing or Curse?

Religion, like any great power potential, can be a blessing or an insidious curse. Religion can be the opium of the people, or it can be the means by which freedom is provided through the practical demonstration of ultimate values revealed in divine truth.

The misuse of truth for centuries after Christ's death resulted in strong negative reactions to Christianity. Religion was used to enslave and subjugate. The power of divine truth was twisted and perverted to accomplish the evil ends of political tyranny, economic exploitation, and the blinding of men's minds and hearts.

The revival of learning and the birth of science developed in sharp opposition to religion as practiced in the Dark Ages. The concept of the conflict of science and religion arose. This myth gained prominence as it was used to break the strangle hold of religious tyranny.

Truth Restored

The revival of learning through science had its counterpart in the Reformation and the latter-day Restoration. In 1830 Joseph Smith dramatically asserted that he was a prophet of God, and that his mission in life was to re-establish Christ's church on earth and to reveal eternal truth to mankind. Joseph Smith was commissioned to courageously proclaim the compatibility of science and religion and that divine truth through religion properly understood and properly practiced would indeed free man to release all his energies and talents for creative purposes.

Joseph Smith's divine revelation began with "Hear Him"—the Christ—hear the basic principles of truth and freedom which are inherently connected with Christ's message. It is life abundant when we know the truth and practice it in all the practical details of everyday living.

Responsibilities of Truth

What, then, are the dedications demanded by truth today? What are the commitments which we should make because of the opportunities and obligations of truth?

1. Establishing the kingdom of God.—We have the responsibility of first seeking to establish the kingdom of God. This means we must become an active part of the organizing and gathering together of all who share our beliefs into Zionite communities. This involves the gathering together of the rich, the wise, the learned, and the noble. This involves a purity of heart, geographical locations, an alert community citizenship, divine direction, and the working out of the Zionite blueprint.

2. Education.—We have the responsibility of making education available to all without regard to class, money, family, race, sex, nationality, or any other superficial identification. Zion will be developed only by an enlightened people free from misconceptions, ignorance, bigotry, and myths—free for the discovery and utilization of truth. The truth you now possess because of your life on the hill demands that you continue your education in some form for the rest of your lives. The truth you now possess also makes yours the responsibility for eventually being a part of Zionite communities in which free education through university work will be provided for all who are capable of receiving it—such as envisioned in the noble experiment at Nauvoo in 1841-1844.

3. Vocation.—We are responsible for selecting vocations which will give us the greatest amount of happiness and creative release. Selection should be based on personal capacity, personal interests and inclinations, and on special needs of the emerging Zionite communities.

4. Role of women.—It means that we are responsible for shattering the myth that the role of women should be only in the home. The role of women in an enlightened society includes not only the beauty of the stewardship of marriage and children but the challenge and contribution of professional women in industry, business, education, home economics, politics, social welfare, civil service, and every other available vocational area. And as important as church dinners are, there are yet other areas in thinking and leadership to be performed by women in the local congregation. Women must also be a vital part of future institutes such as the institute on economic problems of Zion.

5. Residence.—We have the responsibility of selecting residences in terms of the total Zionite process. Many of us should definitely consider the immediate possibility of locating in the Center Stake areas. And those locating in regions round about, in outlying districts, and in areas abroad, should do so only in the frame of reference of Zionite development and proximity to church congregations. The truth of the Gathering is so commanding that our church will accomplish its majestic mission in life only if and when we gather enough people in designated geographical areas and put into practice our concepts of truth in all areas of everyday living. The greatest progress spiritually, evangelistically, morally, socially, personally, and economically will come only when we follow the truth given to us repeatedly since 1830 to gather together in Zionite communities and to participate in the Zionite process in the outer areas.

6. Social and Economic Objectives.—The tyranny of ungodly social and economic systems is forcefully demonstrated by data of science and by revelation of divine truth. We ought to be able to see with clear vision that Zionite or godly personalities can develop best only when the social and economic systems are Zionite in nature. We have the responsibility of abiding by the financial principles of Zion-building, including surplus consecration, tithing, and the support of branch budgets, special offerings, and building funds. We have the specific responsibility of fulfilling the surplus consecration principle. When demonstrated by godly, enlightened people, even our imagination cannot project all of the unlimited possibilities of the surplus consecration plan.

7. Race and minority relationships.—We have the urgent responsibility for allowing truth to give freedom from the morass of confusion, untruths, and prejudice in the field of social problems, particularly race and minority relationships. Scientific data and divine truth are united once more in revealing that all peoples, all races, all colors, all kinds are to share equally. This means Zionite communities that are not segregated; it means vocational life free of discrimination; it means equal political rights. It means opportunity for intercultural and international relations in Zionite communities on the basis of compatibilities, mutual interests, and common purposes rather than the evil prohibitions perpetuated by myths of superiorities and inferiorities.

8. University Work.—Those of us who plan to go on to advanced college and university work are committed to seek out those institutions where concentrations of church-member students are already located. The truth of Zionite association demands that a continuing process of contact, worship, and fellowship be provided while we are attending our next educational institution. We also have the responsibility of taking advantage of the objectives and functions of the Ministry to College People organization.

9. Military service.—We have the responsibility of carrying out our military service when called upon. The hope of all truth, scientific or divine, is completely dependent upon the cultural environment within which truth can operate. As a church we are committed to eternal truth in any form. We are committed, likewise, to our share in the price of freedom. Even though warfare and killing are ungodly and ugly, the only way in which we shall survive will be through the auspices of a democratic nation and an eventual free world.

10. Congregational participation.—We are responsible for the active, enlightened participation as leaders and members of our home church congregations. As difficult as it may be at times we have the responsibility of participating in congregational work. Though our efforts may be resisted when we threaten outdated forms and functions we must diligently pursue Zionite objectives in our congregations.

11. Research and experimentation.—Divine and scientific truth require constant research. This means study and fact finding. It means that the experimental approach can be used in all phases of living. We must experiment upon the words of truth, whether received from scientific or divine sources.

Lip Service

If our religion is to make us more wise, more intelligent, and more highly motivated than we could possibly be without it, we must not fall victim to the lip service manifest in current life. So many of us talk about truth, affirming its value but denying its application by our actions.

We go to Wednesday night fellowship and give our testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel, then often maliciously gossip about our classmates and associates on Thursday or violate their right to quiet hours in the dorm on Friday night. We voice our dedication to "all truth," and then refuse to use scientific methods of soil conservation on our farms.

We preach truth and freedom on Sunday, and then teach our classes and carry out our administrative responsibilities dictatorially on Monday.

We pray that divine truth shall be revealed and that Zion shall be built, but we fail to support those agencies of the local community, nation, and world which are attempting to provide a better life for all.

We proclaim the truth of free government and condemn dirty politics and dirty politicians, and then fail to support honest candidates or fail to allow our own names to be submitted for nomination.

We affirm the truth of the harmful effects of tobacco and liquor, and then overeat, fail to get adequate sleep, or pursue a harmful diet.

We loyally attend every church service, but fail to pay our bills to our doctors, dentists, and other creditors.

We defend our own right to free speech with righteous regard, and then condemn the criticism or opposition of the dissenter.

We affirm free speech, and then do everything in our power to block the ideas of those with whom we disagree.

We say it is a truth that God loves all people, then conveniently rationalize our prejudice by alleging a divine curse upon peoples of other colors.

We seek the scientific truth from a medical specialist when we are ill, but we will gullibly believe myths and untruths about the Negro and other minorities.

Or we defend our indifference or inertia by saying we don't want to be hypocrites. Or we do nothing or try nothing for fear we shall not be perfectionists.

Our affirmation of truth must see a continual reduction in lip service and a continual increase in the practical application of truth.

The Restored Church

The church claiming to "restore" divine truth and to accept scientific truth affirms that life is eternal. We are but one fleeting moment in the total span of immortality. But what a moment! It is ours for responsible and abundant living, or ours for irresponsibility and misery without end.

And it is not enough that we shall merely discover divine and scientific truth. Rather, we must dedicate our lives, our all, to the fulfillment of the responsibilities of truth—I specifically mean in the dating situation, in courtship, in marriage, on the athletic field, in family relationships, in the world of business, in professional life, in the classroom, in the dormitory, on the farm, in the city—wherever we are and whatever we are doing.

Challenge

The challenge is before you.

Candidates for graduation, your answer to the challenge of truth will be determined largely by the pattern you set in the next two years. If you turn your backs on the opportunities and obligations of truth you will condemn yourselves to misery without end. You will condemn yourselves to your own hell by failing to allow yourselves to come to the optimum fruition of your possibilities.

Class of 1954, your answer to the challenge this fall will determine how dynamic the "Graceland spirit" and the Graceland Zionite laboratory shall be for the Graceland family of 1953-1954.

Faculty and staff, your answer to the challenge will determine how inspiring your guiding genius will be next year and in years to come in the classroom, in the dining hall, in the business office, in the dormitories, in the buildings and grounds work.

Friends and parents, your challenge will be answered in the ways you incorporate these Gracelanders into congregational life, in the ways you grant opportunities for the returning Gracelanders to use their knowledge, methods, and skills—bold, new, or different—for the uplift and enrichment of congregational life.

All of us are committed to do away with outmoded ideas, outdated methods, and all those things which do not reveal truth or which do not utilize truth. Now is the time for all of us to find the path which leads to Zion, for only within Zion can there be the dynamic blending of divine truth and scientific truth in action. This is the mission of our religion. This is our raison d'être—our reason for being—our special mission, which will find expression only through Zionite communities.

Fellowship

Shall we then walk this path together in the search for truth and in fulfilling responsibilities of truth? Along this "old, old path" is the most genuine and sustaining fellowship imaginable with each other and with God.

The glory of God is indeed intelligence, light or truth, and the truth shall indeed make us free. Now is the sacred moment for our dedication to the majestic opportunities and the solemn obligations—the responsibilities of truth.

Trusting God

By Bessie Tarrington

WHILE WORKING in a gold mine near Oradelfen, Colorado, a man named Jack Jones was killed in a powder blast. He left a wife and two small children. She had poor health and no money. She rented a log cabin and took in washings for the miners and prospectors. There were long periods when she was too ill to work and had no income to pay rent, buy food, or get fuel.

With all of her misfortunes she was the staunchest Christian in Oradelfen. She retained her faith that God would come to her rescue.

Bart Atkins, the town's atheist, was proud of his disbelief. He enjoyed starting religious arguments with Mrs. Jones and telling her that God wouldn't perform miracles for her.

In late autumn there was no firewood in the Jones's home and no money with which to purchase it. People were too busy digging for gold to chop down trees for a poor widow.

One cold morning Mrs. Jones knelt down with her two children and prayed long for God to help her by sending some firewood.

Just outside the cabin window, Bart Atkins stood listening. He muttered, "It's a shame that fool woman refuses to learn anything from experience. On her knees praying to empty air! I'll show her."

He started down the road and met a neighbor who asked, "Why in such a hurry, Bart?"

"I'm going to prove to that Jones woman once and for all there ain't no God. He won't send her the firewood, so I'm going to get it myself."

An Era of Harmony

Statement of President Israel A. Smith, April 16, 1953

Morning Worship, Evangelism Institute

I SENSE THE GREAT IMPORTANCE of the endeavors here and feel that this is another evidence of the devotion and sacrifices of the ministry of the church. It is also symbolic of the spirit of fraternalism and of fellowship which we have seen growing from time to time in the church.

I trust that you'll pardon the personal reference, but looking back to 1946 when the church expressed its willingness or desire to have me assume certain responsibilities, I felt at the time and so expressed it to some of the brethren that I had the assurance that my life would be extended for at least ten years. Seven of those years have passed, and notwithstanding my desire to serve the church and the devotion I feel to the cause of Christ and the Restoration, in saying, as other brethren have said this morning, "Here am I, send me," the thought comes to me with considerable force that I do not have as much to offer as they have, at least in the point of years.

Looking about me I do not see anybody in this congregation who has reached the years that I have by the calendar. Perhaps some of you are older in your arteries and thus actually older than I am. But I trust and hope that the lives of all of you will be extended for your ministry and for the sake of the people of the church.

Having seen during the years that have gone before somewhat of the results of jealousies in the official circles of the church, I recall expressing a thought uppermost in my mind to the Conference of 1946 that I would not be envious or jealous because of the excellencies of the men with whom I should work in the councils of the church. On the contrary I would ever keep in mind that I should be proud that we had men of ability to work with in the church.

At that time, too, on the second day of the Conference, when the ordinations of my counselors had been authorized and they had been ordained, I remember saying to them—and they have reminded me of it at various times—"I do not know how long a tenure we will have. I do not know whether our administration will be brilliant, successful, or otherwise, but if we can have a part in bringing about harmony in the councils of the church and through the councils of the church bring harmony to the priesthood of the church, and through the priesthood of the church bring harmony to the body of the membership of the church, it will be a considerable contribution."

I had the satisfaction of having Brother Garver, before he passed away, call this statement to my attention and say that he believed we had largely accomplished this objective. And Brother Edwards has so kindly expressed himself to me since then.

I T'S A GREAT COMMISSION that has come to the priesthood of the church. Since we as an organization are recognized from time to time in a national way, we have deemed it wisdom to respond to invitations to come to Washington. Brother D. T. Williams here, of the apostolic quorum, was recently in Washington attending a convention supervised by the government. Acting on the suggestion made to me, I accompanied Brother Chris Hartshorn, managing editor of Herald House, to Washington a few days ago to attend the meeting of the editors of religious journals, magazines, and papers. There on one of the mornings we were ushered into the White House and had the pleasure of having the President of the United States come and speak to us briefly.

Now no good American citizen hesitates to answer to the call of the President of the United States. How great a privilege we would deem it to be asked to do something on behalf of this great country of which we are a part! Yet a commission from the President of the United States is nothing in comparison with the dignity and the sacredness of a call to the priesthood to labor in conjunction with the church and among the people of the church. I'm sure that all of you appreciate the dignity and the sacredness of your call. The Savior, in his last appearance before his disciples, enjoined them to go into all the world and baptize and call upon those whom they baptized to observe "all things whatsoever I have commanded"—that is, of course, those things which make up the law of the church.

And we are told in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants that it is our duty to warn the world. I've sometimes wondered if in that warning, in carrying out this commission in the world, we are not somewhat limited, because it said that it should come through the "mouths of my servants, whom I have chosen." Indeed a very serious obligation is upon us in respect to these things. Conviction comes through the spoken word, undoubtedly, and all the evidences that are reaching our offices point to the fact that the army of the Lord is growing from day to day.

I 'VE SOMETIMES HEARD the suggestion made that we were not bringing into the church the right kind of people, and I rather believe that that is an indictment of God himself, since Paul told us that one would plant, another would water, but God "giveth the increase." Whatever increase we have in the church, God gives to us. The gospel net does catch many kinds of people, the same as a net dropped into the sea catches many kinds of fish. Some of them do not stay with us. Some of them have to be thrown out. But the Savior, in opening his missionary work at the synagogue in Nazareth, called for the "book of the law" and read what Isaiah said would be His work. He started out by saying, "I have been anointed of the Lord to preach the gospel to the poor." And then we were told that not many wise, not many noble, heard the Savior, but the poor heard him gladly. So let us have a great appreciation for the poor who are attracted to and who come in and become part of the body of Christ.

Now my blessing goes with all of the good brethren of the ministry, especially since we are directly involved in a supervisory way over the standing ministry. To you who do not often come here to Independence, we say that we are mindful of your strenuous duties. And then when we remember that most of you are engaged in secular affairs, we feel that you are entitled to great credit. We are concerned in your work, and indeed in all of the work in the church.

This institute, I believe, as other institutes which we have held in recent years, will go down in history as a very successful movement. To that end I join with you in asking for the blessings of Almighty God.

Part II

SWEN WAS OUT WALKING in the woods one day near Cormorent, Minnesota, when he met a Mr. Smith who had come to hunt and fish. Mr. Smith was a road-master on the railroad and a good man. Some friends of his had been hearing Swen preach in Cormorent, so when Swen introduced himself he was not unknown. That day in the woods the Spirit of the Lord rested upon Swen and also upon Mr. Smith, and the tears rolled down his cheeks as he heard the gospel story. His friends invited him to go to the preaching, and he said he would if Swen were going to preach, because it was the first time in his life that anyone had been able to bring the tears to his eyes by talking to him of religion. His friends asked Swen if he were going to preach. "Well," he said, "if the Lord will give me his Spirit it will be all right. Otherwise, it will be just plain Swen, and I might not be able to preach any better than any other man. Mr. Smith would be very disappointed in my preaching then." However, when he preached the Spirit of the Lord was there in abundance, and Mr. Smith was converted by the power of God. He gave his name for baptism and became a faithful worker in the church. Through his efforts Charles Lundeen was influenced to go hear Swen. Brother Lundeen and his daughter both were baptized.

SWEN SWENSON WENT TO UTAH in 1902 to preach the gospel. He had a miserable year there, because he spent his time denouncing the Mormons for their sins. He reminded them that they had strayed from the true teachings of Christ. He baptized a few, but after a year he was glad to leave. He returned to his home in Missouri and did some missionary work in his own district. One night he prayed, "I will go where you want me to go and I'll say what you want me to say. Lord, you tell me where you want me to go, and I will go there."

The answer came, "I want you to go back to Utah."

"Oh, no, Lord," cried Swen, "any place but Utah. I didn't accomplish anything there."

"Swen, I want you to go to Utah."

Later Swen was talking to President Joseph Smith who told him that he would be sent to Minnesota. But when the appointments were read Swen's assignment was to Utah. It had been revealed to members of the Joint Council that the Lord wanted Swen to go to Utah.

This time Swen preached of Christ Jesus. He did not tell the people about their transgressions. The Lord blessed him, and during the four years in Utah he was able to baptize many souls into the church. During his third year of preaching there, the church in Utah called in one of its missionaries from Norway to meet Swen and debate the gospel with him. So far there had been no one who could stand up to him. This man, Oscar Okerlind, invited Swen to his home. Mr. Okerlind prayed of the Lord, "Who is this man? Does he have authority to preach and baptize? What priesthood does he hold? He tells me that even though I have been baptized two times you do not recognize the baptisms."

The Lord answered his prayer and told him that Swen was a chosen vessel in His hands, that he held the Melchisedec priesthood and that He, the Lord, had sent him there. In the morning Mr. Okerlind was awake before Swen and knocked at his door. "I know who you are and who has sent you," he said to Swen.

Swen did not understand. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Last night I prayed to the Lord and asked him to tell me who you were and who had sent you. The Lord said he had sent you. I want you to baptize me and my wife today."

Swen baptized the Okerlinds and several others.

ON JUNE 10, 1906, Swen Swenson and David Lundquist started from Independence on the long journey to Sweden. Fifteen years before, Brother I. N. White had a vision in which he had seen that Swen some day would journey to Sweden to carry the gospel. Brother White was so happy at the fulfillment of his vision that the tears rolled down his cheeks. Swen and David arrived in Göteborg, Sweden, near the end of June.

When they had been there about a month the two men parted company, Swen going to the southern part of Sweden, and David going to the eastern part, each to his former home. Swen visited the home in Billisholm, where he had stayed during the years he had worked in the coal mines. The people were glad to have him as their guest but were satisfied with their own religion and not at all receptive to Swen's story of the everlasting gospel. He visited some of his cousins, and again they were glad to see him, but they wanted nothing to do with his message, for they had been poisoned by the story as told by the Mormons and they judged him to be one also.

ABOUT SIX MILES from Billisholm, Swen found that he could have the use of the schoolhouse for preaching, if he would fix his own fire and furnish the fuel. He walked the six miles, carrying coal and kindling, built the fire to warm the building, and carried on the service. Then he walked back to his friend's home after the evening services. One night in the dark Swen fell down in a ditch at the side of the road and it took him all the next day to clean his clothes so he would be ready to preach again on the next night.

That night the brother with whom he was staying went with him and asked a man who lived near the schoolhouse if Swen could not sleep on a cot there in their home so he would not have to walk so far and carry such a load. The man consented and said that he could sleep there, but he was not to eat with them.

On the first night that Swen walked home with them, he talked with them and they became very friendly. The family sat down to eat rice and milk and asked Swen if he would not like a dish of rice with them. He said he would if they wanted him to. After that they offered him food each time they ate.

Swen had a good congregation each night. One evening after preaching, he asked the man where he stayed how much he owed him for staying there. The man said, "Three dollars," and Swen paid him the money. The next night Swen was preaching on the resurrection and he quoted Jesus: "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." In his sermon Swen said, "What you do to the least, you do to Jesus." The Lord sent his Spirit in abundance during Swen's preaching that night, and the congregation was moved. The man with whom Swen had been staying came to him and said, with tears rolling down his cheeks, "Here, you take half of what you gave me. I want some reward to be laid up for me in heaven."

Swen went back to Billisholm, feeling a little discouraged that he had not been able to baptize any. However, he had a good congregation in Billisholm and baptized some there. This encouraged him in the work.

HE SPENT CHRISTMAS with the wife and daughter of a dead brother. On Christmas morning his niece Eline invited him to the Lutheran service called "Otto-song," a service of singing and rejoicing. It started at four a.m. and lasted until seven. Then they went home for breakfast. Eline asked him how he liked the service and he told her it was all right, but that if Jesus Christ had been there they would have thrown Him out of the church, because He would have told them that they were not teaching His doctrine. Eline opened her eyes wide in amazement, "But, Uncle, we were singing 'Glory to God,' and the whole service was to give glory to him."

"Nevertheless," Swen said, "you do not know the doctrine of Jesus nor practice it." Later that morning he took her to attend the Salvation Army service. After lunch they went to a Methodist service, then later a Baptist. Next morning they got up early and attended a Catholic Mass. Swen explained to Eline that if it had not been for Martin Luther she might have belonged to the Catholic Church. Eline wanted to know why her Uncle Swen was showing her all these different services. "To show you," he said, "that there is some truth in all the churches but not enough of the doctrine of Christ."

SWEN COMPLETED TWO YEARS of preaching the gospel in Sweden. He had been disappointed because his own relatives would not accept it, though he tried the best he knew. Joyfully he returned to his loved ones in the United States, arriving in time for the General Conference of 1908 in Independence. For two years he was missionary in Far West Stake. Here he was successful in baptizing many people. In 1910 the General Conference sent him back to Minnesota to preach among the Scandinavian people. He visited the family of Brother McCloud with whom he had spent much time on his earlier mission. Brother McCloud was dead now, but he had a large family and many relatives, most of whom had not accepted the gospel. In a vision Swen was shown that he would baptize quite a few young people into the church. He told Brother McCloud's grandchildren that the heavens were weeping over them, because their grandfather and grandmother had done everything they could to bring the gospel to others and here their own family had not accepted it. Swen baptized thirteen members of Brother McCloud's family.

In Minneapolis a fine young church member named Bertha Cereal was concerned about the matter of dancing. She asked Swen, "What do you think about dancing? Do you think it is wicked?"

Swen said, "I am like the Irishman; I would like to ask you a question first before I answer your question. Would you like to be in a dance hall when Jesus Christ came to receive his church?"

"No, indeed, Swen," Bertha said. "I would be ashamed to be in a dance hall when Christ comes."

"Well, then," said Swen, "the next time you feel you would like to go to a dance, go into your room and lock the door, get down on your knees and tell Jesus that you want to go to a dance and have a good time and that you want him to go with you. If you receive an answer that he will go with you, then it is all right to go to the dance."

Bertha said, "Swen, I would be ashamed to ask Jesus Christ to go with me to a dance." She was convinced that dancing was wrong. Later she married a Catholic boy who after fifteen years joined the church of the Restoration.

The next Conference sent Swen to Florida where he spent three years. One year he baptized forty people. In 1915 his son George died, leaving a widow and eight children in the state of Washington. The General Church officials kindly sent Swen to Washington where he was able to look after the family. There was no insurance, and the family was in dire circumstances. Some of Swen's friends in Independence gave him twenty-five dollars for the family. Others contributed, and through the influence of a friend a banker gave two lots with an old house which could be rebuilt for the family. The land was deeded to Swen's daughter-in-law, and the Saints who lived in the neighborhood rebuilt the old house. The church and the government each gave some money for the support of the family while the children were growing up. Swen could see that God's hand was over them. During the three years he spent in Washington he converted many people. Then in 1918, badly afflicted with asthma, he went back home.

SWEN RETURNED home to Cameron, Missouri, a very sick man. His doctor gave him only a few days to live unless he could move immediately to a more suitable climate. In a day or two Swen received a letter from a man named Charles Zion. Swen didn't know anyone by this name. Upon reading the letter he found that a young woman Swen had known in Colorado had married this man. They had heard that Swen was in poor health and had written to invite him to make his home with them in Colorado until he improved, and at no cost to him. He was able, after some difficulty, to obtain a commission from the First Presidency to preach in Colorado.

After a short time in the mountains Swen felt much better. Three months later he and his friends went to Colorado Springs to reunion. At the end of reunion he was asked to stay there. E. R. Sutton was pastor of the Colorado Springs Branch. At a prayer meeting one night a man stood and bore his testimony saying that in a vision he had been shown that if Swen Swenson would administer to his father, who was very sick, his father would be healed. The man who bore this testimony was Brother Charles Anderson of Albin, Wyoming. Brother Sutton told him that if he went to Wyoming he would probably get sick again, but finally Swen gave his consent to go.

Swen found that Mr. Anderson's father, who did not belong to the church, was very sick and had been in bed three years. When Swen administered to him he received a wonderful blessing. Swen stayed in the Anderson home and preached the gospel while he was there. After Swen had been there a week, Mr. Anderson asked for baptism. He was baptized in a stock tank. The next day he was up walking around the house. Three days later he was driving all over the Anderson ranch in a car. People in the neighborhood were justly amazed, and many came to hear Swen preach.

FROM THEN ON Swen spent his time traveling as before but staying only short periods here and there. He and his wife sold their home in Missouri and then spent some time with their children in Iowa and Colorado. From 1923 to 1925 he spent much of the time caring for his wife, who had a severe illness. She was so glad to have him home that, save for her illness, she was happier those years than ever before. She died in Independence in 1925 in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jacob Andes.

Swen continued to travel. He went to Utah, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, and back to Missouri, retracing the steps he had taken earlier in his life, baptizing and preaching wherever he went.

He was active and alert to his death. When he was a young man in Colorado he had seen in vision the words, written in gold letters on the mountains, "You will live to be ninety years old." This prophecy was fulfilled. Swen had attacks of asthma occasionally, and sometimes was very sick with them. Except for those times he was active and busy, always preaching and visiting. In January, 1944, he preached his last sermon at the Spring Branch Church in Independence, Missouri. A week later he died. His memory is loved and respected by the thousands whose lives he touched with the gospel.

Opening the Doors of Faith—A guidance for the Christian home where there are preschool children, by Mildred Speakes Edwards, Warner Press, Anderson, Indiana, price $1.00.

This book is a staff of information that parents of small children and church teachers of preschoolers can lean on with honest confidence. Well-selected subjects are discussed in a clear and instructive manner. There are numerous stories, poems, songs, and Bible verses suitable for young minds to grasp. One chapter deals with how the adult can present information about special holidays to little ones.

The book is a superb investment for your dollar.

EMMA M. PHILLIPS

More Power for Your Church by Willard A. Pleuthner is not the work of one man but of hundreds. For the minister or lay member who wants to help his church take its place in the community or world, this book has plans based upon competent authority and thousands of varied experiences and situations.

It covers such phases of church service as getting more people to work in the church; educational methods in stimulating evangelism; greater inspiration for a working congregation; organization and work for unordained men; and tying the teen-age group into the life, work, and worship of the church.

It has several good suggestions for adult groups, projects for the "oldtimers," methods and ideas about uniting religion with everyday life, some thoughts about the minister, several ways of raising money for the church, ways of expanding the church, methods of conducting a membership canvas for financial support, both locally and extended

(these might well be adapted to ministry in the homes), a plan for furnishing flowers for the church services, making the church a power for good in the community, varied ideas for using the radio and television in church work, public relations, suggestions for the church bulletin, stimulating reading of the Scriptures, the place for drama in the church, and other ideas.

This book has over four hundred pages packed with ready-to-use ideas, and several are worked out in minute detail. Some of the plans would need to be remodeled to meet the specific needs of this church and for small to larger congregations. Actually no worker, whether ordained or layman, could fail to get many practical ideas. This book, once its value is recognized, should become a constant handbook for ideas and methods of their execution. There is scarcely a situation that it does not cover in several ways. It is not written for a person lacking in imagination, ability, courage, and devotion to Christ and his church, yet it would not fail to stimulate anyone desiring to serve well. This is published by Farras, Straus, and Young, Inc., and may be purchased from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, for $3.50.

The Spirit That Counts

Reunions are current this season of the year. They are anticipated with great expectancy, and experienced with satisfaction. We return elated spiritually as a result of our associations together. Our concepts of life's great purpose are broadened, and we find a new insight into our personal responsibilities and stewardships. It is well that these things are ours to enjoy, but if, upon our returning to everyday living, we do not make our branches and home communities better places for our having had these reunion experiences, it is better that we had never attended, for we are held accountable for these things. From our reunion we must transfer and integrate into all of life's activities the spiritual motivation we received from our reunion experiences.

This realization is essential and finds expression in the services we render to our daily associates. We must qualify in righteous living, for we are debtors to God for our having had his Spirit to minister to us. Ethereal concepts of his great purpose in us and our heightened comprehension of the Zionite process are useless if they do not find fruition in commonplace activities which result in a better branch and community which will produce a people more qualified for the work that is intrusted to all. "A charge to keep we have, a God to glorify."

Arising from our reunion experience is a personal testimony of our spiritual revitalization which we attribute to our week of fellowship service. This precipitates the question of what actually constitutes a testimony. A testimony is not a sermonette, nor is it a tale of woe and personal tribulation. A testimony is always positive in nature.

Christ, Peter, or Paul in their sufferings never complained. A testimony is an affirmation of the truthfulness of the message of this work, the blessings that are ours as a result of God's grace as extended to us, and finds fruit in our determination and motivation to do something to further the kingdom endeavor to the greatest extent of our capabilities. The good that the larger group derives from our testimony comes as a result of our sincerity, inspiration, and determination. The spirit in which our testimony is born is the essential qualification.

Why We Are Tempted

By Wonza Simmers

IS THE WILL of God supreme? Is it his will that man's inhumanity to man continue? These are some of the questions concerning Deity that plague many people. We live in a world filled with malice, guile, hypocrisy, envy, and evil-doing.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7.

We must decide what we shall plant in this fertile ground. There is an influence ever present with us, ever seeking to perfect or destroy the precious vitality of our souls.

Even before the creation was in effect the force of evil bloomed, seeking to destroy and to overcome the power and glory of God. This awful monster has great power over all things, subject only to God and the will of man. We must ever guard against being misled by this one "Who transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light, and stirreth up the children of men unto . . . murder, and all manner of secret works" (II Nephi 6: 23).

Is it God's will that he shall permit this evil to be present among men?

Do we like cake? Is it not sweeter and more pleasing to the taste than plain bread? Yet is it not pleasant also to have bread? How should we be able to appreciate the flavor of cake if we had never sampled the solid fare of bread? These things must be that we may prove ourselves worthy of the reward that awaits us.

For it must needs be, that there is an opposition to all things. . . . Wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself, save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other.—II Nephi 1: 81, 99, 100.

Wherefore, all things which are good, cometh of God; and that which is evil, cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually. But behold, that which is of God, inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God.—Moroni 7: 10, 11.

We are told to judge the good and the evil with an eye to intelligence. The way to judge is easy, for the Spirit of Christ is given to everyone that he may see the way of truth and light. This is a promise that Jesus gave us, for he said, "I will not leave you comfortless, I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, . . . even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not." Of this Comforter, Jesus said, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance."

NOW THAT WE REALIZE we are to be tempted, shall we be able to meet this temptation?

There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.—I Corinthians 10: 13.

Jesus was able to overcome his tempters, and there were many. He instructed us to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. We know that the result of yielding to temptation is sin, and the result of sin is death!

Consider the finality of death. Our probation here upon the earth will then cease, and we shall stand at the judgment in eternity.

Wherefore I beseech of you, brethren, that ye should search diligently in the light of Christ, that ye may know good from evil; and if ye will lay hold upon every good thing, and condemn it not, ye certainly will be a child of Christ.—Moroni 7: 18.

It must be that the love of God will fill our hearts and that we shall strive with all our might, mind, and strength to overcome the master of evil before we can ever hope for an improvement in conditions. We live in a world of wickedness, and the time is fast approaching when all this will cease to be. Therefore we must volunteer to help accomplish the task which Christ willingly took upon himself, though it called for the sacrifice of his life. Few of us are willing to sacrifice our lives. Perhaps we shall never be called upon to give so much, but we should be willing to meet our tasks with a glad heart and eager hands.

And now my beloved brethren, if this be the case that these things are true which I have spoken unto you, and God will shew unto you with power and great glory at the last day, that they are true; and if they are true, has the day of miracles ceased?—Moroni 7: 37.

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.—Rev. 21: 4.

Dry Note

President Eisenhower does not approve of the consumption of liquor at the White House. An order has been issued banning drinking by members of the White House executive staff during business hours or at any time while at their offices. Clergymen who have talked with Mr. Eisenhower say they are well satisfied that his position is sincere and that there will be very little drinking at the White House during his administration.—From the Pentecostal Evangel.

Music in Worship

By Marian R. Tift

A talk given at the Southern New England District conference

WHAT IS THE PLACE of music in our worship service? When we hear the word "worship," we probably recall our own individual experiences and form our own mental pictures of what we call worship. The housewife may think of the many times she has worshiped alone as she has gone about her daily chores. Some may think of their family worship periods. The child, too, may have his or her own concept of worship. Last winter when it was announced over the radio that a school bus was lost in a blizzard, Marsha, my daughter, came to me quite upset and concerned about the children in the bus. I suggested she say a little prayer and ask the Lord to help those searching for the bus and the children. She went to her room and in her small way "worshiped." There are, no doubt, many other ways to worship, but I think in the end we will recall our worship together with our own congregation in the house of the Lord.

ONE OF THE DICTIONARIES defines worship as "reverence with great respect" and in the book Let Us Worship, by Chris B. Hartshorn, there is a statement by Andrew Fletcher who lived during the seventeenth century. He said, "Give me the making of the songs of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws." It is a dramatic way of emphasizing the power of song to mold the thinking of people. Religion is older than sacred music, and in Mr. Hartshorn's book we read that back in the early days Luther and other religious leaders realized the power of music and provided hymns so that all might participate in the service of song, which up to then had been reserved for only the clergy. The spoken word should be the most important part of the service, but I believe that music can and should play an important part in our service of worship. So shall we say that worship and music go hand in hand, and the quality and type of sacred music used in our services will determine the degree of our spiritual experiences, our preparation for the service as a whole, and the benefits we receive.

HOW OFTEN have you entered your place of worship and been disturbed from the very beginning by inappropriate organ meditations? This has happened to me many times, and it has had a great effect upon my mood throughout the service. Some of us are more sensitive than others in this respect, but music does have an emotional effect upon us and should be directed in the right way. It is most important that a worship service be planned as a unit, with the music carrying out the general theme of the sermon for that day. Without the elements of unity and emotion our worship experiences would not be entirely satisfactory. From the time the organist strikes the first note of the prelude until the last response is played or sung we should have experienced a time of quiet meditation, a release of the soul, a feeling of having communed with God, that our hearts and minds have been at peace and that we have received the lesson of the day. Much is lost if these things have not been accomplished.

While the organist, the choir, or soloist can help set the tempo of the meeting the congregational singing of carefully chosen hymns can also bring us closer together. The hymns should further tell the story of the day. We are known as a "singing church." In this phase of worship we can all participate and add our part to the service. We should train ourselves to learn good hymns, for what we enjoy singing is not always a standard of good music. Other than being suitable for a particular service, hymns should be chosen for their rhythm (which should be dignified), for their harmony, and for their suitability to the congregation. This is true of all kinds of music. The type of congregation is very important. Because we have small and large branches, each branch should do what it can do best, remembering that something simple but done well is more appropriate than something above the group's capabilities.

NOT ONLY SHOULD WE be concerned with our adult meetings but also with the junior and primary groups. Here we can train the children from early church school days to know and learn good music, and we should encourage those particularly interested in music to take lessons of all kinds. From this group come our workers of tomorrow and, if trained early, they will be able to give a better, more intelligent service as they take up the work in the years ahead. All children love to sing. It gives them a feeling of participation and of being an important part of the service. Several times this winter I have played the piano for our primary group in Providence and have had an opportunity to see how Mrs. Hallgreen works with this group. They have their own little songs, and each song they learn tells a story or teaches a lesson they will remember for a long time. This younger group is a difficult one to work with, and it is hard for us to realize the children's capabilities. I was interested in what Mrs. Hallgreen said one day: "I work with the children because I want to, not because I have to. I enjoy it." This attitude is reflected in her work, and the children love her. How much more we could accomplish if we worked with this same attitude.

IT WOULD BE NICE if our branches were large enough to have junior choirs, for then the groundwork could be done early, and our senior choirs would benefit a great deal. Unfortunately, this isn't the case in our district; most of us have all we can do to get a few together to participate in the service of music. Maybe our trouble is in educating our people in the field of music. Maybe a great many still feel that the service of music is relatively unimportant. I think that once we enjoy music to the extent that we have been lifted up—when we feel that music has lent dignity to the service and has helped unite it—we shall accomplish greater things.

In Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6, we find: "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of Spirit in them that sing and them that hear is blessed, and acceptable with God."

Music is harmony; music is a perfect medium for worship. May our worship become perfect through the kind of music we have, thus making our minds and hearts more receptive to the Spirit of God.

Conditioning a Child to Cultural Enjoyment

(The following thoughts were expressed by Sister F. O. (Donna) Weddle in connection with her study of The Latter Day Saint Home of Today and Tomorrow, by Alice Burgess, which she took for credit with the Department of Religious Education.)

WE CAN CONDITION our children to a great extent as far as their cultural tastes are concerned. Much good can be accomplished through books. Every little child likes to be read to, and there are a lot of things available for children which are both enjoyable and character-building. On the other hand, there are a lot of books which may do harm, or at least do no good. Wise parents will choose reading material carefully and make many good books available when the child is ready to start reading for himself. Magazines also should be chosen carefully. If children develop good reading interests, these should be nurtured.

As a musician I am very aware of the possibility of conditioning a child to the enjoyment of music. Since both my husband and I are musicians we have built up quite a record library. We have listened to our records a great deal and found that at a very early age our first child was beginning to respond noticeably.

When he was four years old he was beginning to distinguish the style of various composers. On one occasion he was turning the dial of the radio and stopped on some delightful orchestral music. He said, "That sounds like The Messiah." It wasn't The Messiah, but it was an orchestral suite by the same composer, and any musician would have recognized it as Handel.

Since neither my husband nor I have any use for "popular" music, it never is heard in our home. However, in tuning the radio every once in a while Ronnie will come across a "blues" singer or a crooner; he just giggles about it. He has asked me several times why they sing so silly. Of course, he may possibly go through a period of enjoying jazz bands (and may I have the patience and understanding I will need!), but I believe that the foundation is being laid for him to have the capacity to enjoy good music all his life. I've seen it work in other homes.

We can condition our children for cultural enjoyment.

Thank God for Home

Thank God for home!
For shelter from the rain and sun,
For bedtime when the day is done,
For break of dawn through windows trim,
For singing birds on springtime limb,
For meals to cook, and floors to sweep,
Even for vigils we must keep.
Thank him for each familiar task,
And when we kneel in prayer, let's ask
That through the onward-coming years,
In spite of war-bred doubts and fears,
We still may have, with his good will,
Fireside, and latch, and window sill.

Thank God for home!
For loved one off to daily work,
Happy his duty not to shirk.
For children, playing merrily,
Born in the land where men are free.
Thank him for books for them to read,
And for the many things they need
To help make lives the kind he meant
When to this world his Son he sent.
Thank Him, indeed, while yet we may;
These things more precious grow each day.
Praise him for stars and stripes that fly;
Raise grateful voices to the sky.

Thank God for home!
For blest Zionic plan
Which points the way wherein we can Attain, and more abundantly,
The life he promised you and me.
Thank him for family altar, where
We may with one another share
Rest when a busy day is done,
Or promise, at a new one come.
Thank him for all these things and more,
Pray for his presence in rich store
To come, abide, and give us still
Fireside, and latch, and window sill.

Reflections on "The Wide-open Door"

An address given at the Sophomore
Cap and Gown Assembly

By Kisuke Sekine

I am convinced that the hope for peace lies in our ability to understand each other. I believe that what people of the world today need is a simple human understanding and a faith in their fellow men.

SUPPOSE YOU WERE IN MY PLACE this morning, standing here right at this moment, wearing cap and gown, and you were to summarize your two years' Graceland experience into a few minutes. I wonder what your speech would be?

If I were writing a little book, this might be called Chapter I.

Almost two and a half years ago I came to Graceland from a country which was little known to most of the students on the campus at that time. I came to America with one particular thing in mind: that is, to find the answer to my long-time question: "Can't all nations live together harmoniously without fighting?"

I was very much concerned with this question, for my boyhood was upset by the senseless wars in which I lost my family, relatives, and friends.

For a short while I was not so sure whether the sacrifice I made in order to come to America was really worth while, for I was confronted with countless confusions and disappointments. But as I began to open my eyes and ears to the broader and deeper world, I realized that this trip was worth far more than my small sacrifice.

As I participated in the campus activities I met many students who came from all over the United States, representing their own peculiar background. One year I had a Canadian student as my roommate. During one summer I worked with a student who came from Holland. Sometimes I went to campfire and fellowship services with Australian students. From time to time I went roller skating with English students.

In these serious moments of worship experiences and in these joyous moments of recreation we came to know each other; we came to love each other; we came to understand and appreciate each other.

Someone has said this is a two-way process. I like that term very much, for through Graceland I met America, Canada, Mexico, Guatemala, England, Australia, and the States. Through me Gracelanders have come to know my country, Japan.

WE ALL KNOW that when two different cultures meet they do not always agree. Many times we differed in our opinions and concepts, but because of these conflicts we grew. Together we grew up in the ideals of this institution. Together we came to the place where we could all appreciate one another's culture.

When we differed in our opinions or concepts, we did not fight about it; we compromised.

Through these two years of experience at Graceland I have come to believe that all nations can live together peacefully and harmoniously. But today, when we listen to the news over the radio, or when we read the papers, what do we hear? What do we see?

War is still going on. People are still fighting each other—in Korea, Viet Nam, Laos, even in the Malayan jungle. Any belief that military power alone can solve the problems is not only wishful thinking but is very dangerous thinking.

THROUGH THESE TWO YEARS I have found out that one of the essential factors of our friendship is an honest effort to understand each other's culture, religion, and history. Most of us are ignorant of any aspect of the other's life. We have too long excused inexcusable ignorance behind outworn expressions such as "mysterious East" and "inscrutable Oriental." We must now make a genuine effort to know each other as human beings and to understand our differing customs. If we are to win and keep friends among the nations, we must communicate to each other our passionate belief in the dignity and worth of the individual.

I have also found that true democracy is neither rich nor poor. The only essential of democracy that has meaning to the world is its belief in human dignity and human worth—its belief that all men, black, white, red, or yellow, are created equal, with the same rights to live, to speak freely, to worship according to their own conscience, to till their own soil, and reap the benefits of their own labors.

As I face the reality that I must leave this place very soon, I shall do so not with sorrow and regret in my heart but rather with a cheerful spirit, a feeling of satisfaction in worth-while experiences, and a sense of great responsibilities that lie before me as I prepare myself to leave. I am not going home alone but with the spirit and the fellowship of Graceland that I gained through the past two years' associations with every one of you on the campus—an association that is deeply rooted in the soil of Christian ideals and understandings.

Somehow I am praying this morning that I may be able to become a stepping-stone among the nations. Chapter I will be over soon, and Chapter II will begin within a week or so. We must keep this story going on. We must not fail the challenge.

Sometimes this sort of experience seems very small at first, but it has great potentialities and can become a great and significant movement, if we only keep our faith in our fellow men and our trust in them.

Let us not underestimate the tasks that we are facing today as we leave this place, for it will take the best of our ideals and our spirit. It should be, then, the fervent prayer of every thoughtful Graceland that we dedicate ourselves to this end before time runs out.

How Honest Are You?

When you register, do you fill in the space marked "religion" with the word "Protestant"?

When someone offers you a drink, do you alibi your refusal with a bad stomach or some other somatic complaint?

When the pastor invites you to church, do you beg off on the excuse of "studies," then sleep in a couple of hours?

What is your excuse for not keeping the Word of Wisdom?

Do you have any trouble with professors who "have it in for you"?

Is there any relation between your unpaid tithing bill and the fact that the Lord won't sue you?

If the church means so much to you, how do you explain the fact that you don't tell your friends about it?

Do you find it hard to give up a pet theory after you find out it isn't true?

Do you ever find yourself boasting about what great things you would have done if you had had an opportunity?

Can you face the relationship between where the Zion program is today and where you are in your spiritual development?

Do you hide behind a camouflage of slang so people won't think you are religious?

By the way, have you ever measured the content of your own sermon against your behavior?

Does status play any part in the motivation behind your church activity?

Can you take honest criticism?

Do you ever think the second time of the words you said at a consecration service?

"Teen of the Week"

Sharon Erickson

The Omaha World Herald recently featured Sharon Erickson "Teen of the Week" for the entire Omaha, Nebraska, area. The write up given her at that time contains a report of many of the features which qualify her for church-wide recognition and tribute. The following is quoted from the World Herald article:

Any edition of a Who's Who at Benson High this year would have to include the name of Sharon Erickson.

For Sharon, an attractive brown-eyed blonde, has the happy combination of beauty and brains that makes her a natural leader. Her mental prowess is mirrored in the fact that she has received constant Honor Roll mention since entering Benson and has maintained an A-minus record during her three-plus years at the school.

The fact that she ruled as Benson homecoming queen this fall attests to her feminine charm.

But the current Teen of the Week, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parker Erickson, 2406 North Fifty-sixth Street, has many other feathers in her extracurricular bonnet.

Her interests include student government, music, journalism, and athletics, and she has harvested considerable success in each field.

A member of the Student Council for three years, she served on the group's progress committee as a sophomore. She also was elected to serve as County Government Day treasurer last year and was an alternate to the Girls State session in Lincoln last summer.

Sharon is a member of the Benson girls' sextet and senior choir this year after serving her musical apprenticeship in the glee club and junior choir.

Her journalistic achievements include two years of reporting for the Benson News. But Sharon's greatest love is athletics. She first gained prominence as a freshman, acting as treasurer of the Green Peppers, the school's first-year pep club.

She now is president of the Cottontails, upperclass pep group, and is serving her third year as a cheer leader. Her yell-belle duties this year include coaching the sophomore cheering squad.

First vice-president of the Girls' "O" Club, Sharon already has qualified for her first state award for participation in athletics and will earn her second state honor before the year is out. And despite the heavy academic and extracurricular load, she is an ardent church worker.

She is president of the youth group of the Latter Day Saints (Reorganized) Church. She also serves as a substitute Sunday school teacher and last summer worked as secretary of the church Bible school.

As suggested in the article, Sharon is president of the Zion's League this year, after having served in several other offices previously. In addition to her League work, she goes to prayer meetings on Wednesdays and church every Sunday. For the past four years she has attended youth camp and reunion.

Sharon has been elected to the National Honor Society and also to Quill and Scroll, an international journalism society. She will enter Graceland this fall when she will begin her training to become a physical education instructor.

Question Time

Question:

Please explain to a nonmember that the Scripture, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" refers to everyone but babies.

Michigan

Mrs. A. E.

Answer:

Baptism is for the remission of sin—and sin is a knowing, willful transgression of the law of God. II Corinthians 5: 10 states: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." The assumption that a baby—or anyone—is guilty of ancestral or Adamic sin is not supported by holy Scripture. Ezekiel 18: 2, 3 reads: "What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel." The statement, "except a man be born of water and the Spirit," surely indicates a development beyond that of a baby. Such a command was given to a person old enough to understand and to need and obey it. Christ shows one of the prerequisites of baptism to be belief: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16: 15, 16). Peter is recorded as commanding: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38). It should be certain to all that a baby cannot repent or exercise faith as preparation for baptism. Jesus affirmed the innocence of children: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 18: 3). Further declaring the kingdom quality of innocence of little children, Jesus, in Matthew 19: 14, said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, . . . for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Then he performed the only appropriate ordinance for babies; "And he laid his hands on them and departed thence."

The inheritance from Adam affecting babies is death: "As in Adam all die." But this, in its eternal effect, is canceled by the death and resurrection of Christ, for "even so in Christ shall all be made alive." ALMA C. ANDREWS

Question:

D. and C. 124: 3 states: ". . . directed by the spirit of revelation and wisdom they may choose another." If a revelation is already given, why would the spirit of revelation direct to choose another? Saskatchewan Mrs. A. M. B.

Answer:

Every communication to the church has to be interpreted in the light of the times of its presentation. This phrase was in the document presented to the General Conference of 1897. Certain needs for man power in leading positions of the church were apparent. Joseph Smith was alone in the First Presidency. W. W. Blair, his counselor, had died at the close of the preceding General Conference. There were some strains in quorum relations. The comments made by Joseph Smith during the Conference indicated he was concerned that "internal dissension" be avoided. He was anxious that the Conference maintain harmony and lay out sound patterns of procedure.

A. H. Smith had been president of the Twelve since 1890. Now he was designated to be a counselor in the First Presidency and to be the Presiding Patriarch. At least three ways were possible for naming his successor as president of the Twelve: (1) seniority in service, (2) designation in a revelation to the church, or (3) selection by the Council of Twelve. For any of these the free and understanding voice of the church and of the quorum was needed. Revelation in its higher levels does not take away deliberation and choice. Apparently this document sought to combine counsel and choice in a working arrangement. Without alternatives there is no choice. It is worth noting that this was sought in 1890 when the direction to the church was "my servant A. H. Smith may be chosen president of the Twelve."

The integrity of the Twelve was assured in the procedures of the Conference. Three men were designated for ordination to the apostolic ministry. Action concerning W. H. Kelley was "deferred until the changes provided for by the revelation were made in the Quorum of Twelve." On the day after the approval of the document the Twelve brought in this report:

Brother William H. Kelley was unanimously chosen president of the quorum, and a resolution was passed requesting the Conference to provide for his ordination at as early a time as practicable.

The consent of the Twelve harmonized with the counsel in the revelation.

I admit that for some time the phrase involved in this inquiry was problematical to me. It seemed strange that one man should be recommended with stipulation that another might be chosen if the spirit of revelation so led. It concerned me until I began to see the deliberative aspect of revelation. So often we miss this as we emphasize the dictatorial quality in which God is thought of as issuing some dictum that we are to receive without consideration.

In the years around 1897 the prophet was endeavoring to avoid anything dictatorial. The people were being schooled in their responsibilities in administrative affairs. If they did not see fit to take the recommendation that W. H. Kelley be named, they could seek direction for another procedure. There is more than one possibility in carrying forward the work of the church. Many times God's purposes have to wait for human insights to become adjusted that his work may proceed. In this instance an outstanding feature is that when the Twelve were permitted to make a choice they selected the man designated. In this pervasive inspiration, the counsel of the prophet and the choice of the Twelve accord.

Letters

Pathos on the Front Line

(From a letter to Audentia Anderson, Omaha, Nebraska)

Plans for the meeting in Seoul of our church members are still on, but I'm afraid I can't count on going. I am responsible for a battery of howitzers now, and to insure continuity of operations I cannot leave yet. We moved over to this position last month and are now in the ruins of Chorura, in the otherwise beautiful Chorura Valley. This is truly the "land of morning calm" except for the nervous bark of artillery and the cacophonous rattle of machine guns. We aren't too close to the main line of resistance, but the valley is flat as a billiard table with "the line" crossing the middle. Enemy artillery is quite active around our forward position, and there is plenty of work and excitement for everyone.

The night before last I lost (for all practical purposes) a lieutenant. He came in from his forward observation post a mental wreck. He was so completely terrified by the horror and noise of battle that he couldn't eat and was barely rational in speech. I talked to him for an hour or so, and by midnight he had calmed down enough to go to bed. By the next forenoon he was his old self again except for a bleak expression in his eyes. I got him a job at headquarters so he won't have to face another situation his nervous system can't stand.

This was the second case I've seen here, and my heart goes out to those suffering lads. Only a man who has felt the stark terror and seen the horrible scenes of battle firsthand can realize what a terrific strain it is to retain one's sanity and continue to operate.

This is a pretty tame war, judged by World War II standards, but there are times when it is a little too realistic for the men involved. This morning I visited the infantry company that I spent November and December with as a "forward observer." There were only two men left of the old gang—the first sergeant and the company's houseboy. Fifty-eight had been wounded and eleven killed in one night, out of the 192 men committed. My hat is off to the doughboy! We have some bad times in the artillery, but nothing compared to what the foot soldier faces.

Help in Time of Need

I have recently renewed my Herald subscription; it means much to me because I am isolated and the only member of the church in my home. The past four and a half years our ministers have been coming down to Mankato once a month to hold meetings for the scattered Saints in this area, and for a while we had a good-sized group. Now, however, only a few families are left, as the others moved away. We feel that much good is being accomplished, though, even if progress is slow.

Several years ago I became seriously ill and was taken to the hospital. The third night I was there, the nurse called my husband and told him I might not live until morning. When the doctor came in I told him I didn't think I could take it much longer. I tried to sleep, but I could not seem to relax unless I was given a shot. As the days went by and the fever continued, I grew weaker and weaker. I had hesitated to call the elders, as Minneapolis was the nearest branch and that was over a hundred miles away. Finally I asked my husband to call, and two of the elders came. After receiving administration I felt relieved and encouraged, but I did not get well immediately. Now I am thankful that the long period of recuperation gave me an opportunity to study. I came to know God as a friend, as well as Ruler of the universe, and I often felt his Spirit with me. I had plenty of time to meditate and study, and on one occasion I was able to defend his cause clearly and effectively. His Spirit was with me in great abundance as I did so, and the thought came to me that God must truly appreciate the little things we do for him.

I shall ever be grateful to those who wrote encouraging letters to me at that time, and to Velma Richee who sent me a bottle of consecrated oil. Although I was isolated, I never really felt that I was alone. Through the experiences I have had I have come to understand more fully God's great love for humanity, and I also understand others better than I did before.

Letter of Appreciation

Five years ago we moved from Little Current, Manitoulin Island, to Wiarton, Ontario. I had always lived near Little Current and worshiped with the Saints there for twenty-four years. With reluctance I left the fellowship of these good people, but in Wiarton I found the same love that is present in our congregations everywhere.

We rejoice that we have been able to help our children catch a glimpse of the kingdom. They are married now and have established homes of their own. Those who married non-members have had their companions join them in the church. Our youngest son, Calvin, has been called to the office of teacher; Vernon and Leighton have held the priesthood for two years. We feel that we have been greatly blessed through our children.

My husband and I are cooks on a Canadian freighter that carries coal, grain, ore, and pulpwood across the Great Lakes. We miss very much the opportunity of attending services during the nine months that we are on the boat each year. We go to church whenever we have a chance, and my husband assists when he is needed.

Each year the waters of the Lakes seem to become more turbulent, and often we have felt our great dependence on God. He has heard us in our hours of need and has protected us. I am grateful, too, for the dreams I have had to comfort me.

The Herald and Daily Bread bring us many fine messages. I have especially enjoyed the letters and the Word of Wisdom articles. We have had better health than we had known before observing this divine instruction. After Christmas we took our youngest son and his wife back to Graceland. In Nauvoo we attended Communion service and were happy to see whole-wheat bread being used. Returning home we stopped at the home of Brother and Sister Harold Smith for lunch. We had heard about their stone-ground wheat flour and the good work they had done at the reunions telling people about the whole-wheat flour. We are happy to see that study in the field of nutrition is proving that the Word of Wisdom is scientifically true. This strengthens our faith. God does not intend for us to be sick, but until we learn to take his counsel we cannot expect to have good health.

Six Children Baptized

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI.—On April 12, three babies were blessed. The pastor, A. N. Barnes, blessed Eloise Joette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Kasby, and Daniel Elmer, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Sherman. Kathryn Darlene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Billy Graham, was blessed by Elder Gordon Gibson.

The Mobile District conference was held at Escatawpa on May 17 under the ministry of the district presidency, Elders Jack Pray, Wayne Hough, and A. N. Barnes. The women's department of the local congregation served lunch at noon.

The Cantata, "Easter Bells," was given by the senior choir on Easter evening. Soloists were Daniel McQueen, tenor; Mary Jo Davis and Mabel Byrd, altos; Doris Pierce, Charline Coker, and Margaret Ann Davis, sopranos. The choir is directed by Sister Madella Barnes.

The Zion's League, under the direction of Jimmy Roberts, honored the mothers of the community with a reception at the church on Mother's Day. All departments of the church have been working together, completing the pews for the main auditorium and finishing the lower auditorium.

Vacation church school was held at the church on the week of June 1. The principal, Mrs. Dorothy Griffin, reported an average attendance of sixty-five. On June 14, Children's Day, six children were baptized by Hildred Thomas and James Roberts. At this service, the junior choir, directed by Mary Jo Davis, sang "The Old, Old Path." The candidates were Cedric Thomas, Charles McQueen, Michael Roberts, Carole Williams, Terry Breland, and Connie Rogers. The confirmation service was held at the church on June 24. Frank Bickle was ordained to the office of deacon on June 21 by Elders A. N. Barnes and C. L. Barnes.—Reported by MARGARET ANN DAVIS

Flags Presented to Branch

GARY, INDIANA.—The branch celebrated its first anniversary in the church building on Easter Sunday with all-day services. President F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker.

Beginning the first of May, the district missionary, Seventy Cecil Ettinger, held a series of cottage meetings and visited in the homes of the members, concluding with a week of preaching services in the church, using slides to illustrate his lectures. Following the last service, a social was held in the lower auditorium at which the family of Brother Ettinger was also present.

On May 17, Lowell, husband of Sister Thelma Conrad, and Linda, daughter of Brother and Sister Bennie Darter, were baptized. They were confirmed at the eleven o'clock service by Elders D. H. Smith and Cecil Ettinger.

On May 24, preceding the morning preaching service, the church flag, donated by the women's department, and the United States flag, donated by Carl Hedelius, were presented to the branch. The ceremony was by the junior church and Elder A. H. Tomlinson was the morning speaker.

On May 31, the district conference convened at the church with Apostle D. O. Chesworth and District President Lyle Woodstock in charge.—Reported by MARIAN TOMLINSON

Baptisms in Mission

WILLAPA, WASHINGTON.—A potluck dinner was held by the mission following the morning services on May 24, after which three candidates were baptized in Lake Sylvia by the pastor, Elder O. L. Oppelt. The candidates, Joseph Rothlin, Robert Kain, Jr., and Allen Schrotberger were confirmed that afternoon by Brother Oppelt. Brother Rothlin is a young dairy farmer, and Bobby and Allen are eight-year-olds who have been reared in the church.

The IWA Hall in Raymond is used for church school and other Sunday services. Brother and Sister Oppelt drive from their home in Shelton, seventy miles away, to minister to the group. The church school has about twenty-seven members; the Tiona Club (the women's department) has about twelve members.—Reported by NINA B. WOLFENBARGER

Youth Groups Organized

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—Apostle D. T. Williams was in the branch on January 21 and February 15, and Elder William Conway visited the branch on March 22. W. T. Guthrie was in the branch from January 22 to February 1.

Elder Orrin Wilcox visited in the branch for a short while during his tour of the country.

A special Easter program was arranged by Lily Vitek.

The Mother's Day service was directed by the pastor, A. A. Mehlich. A special feature was the playing of a record from Grace Edwards Faunce of Lamoni, Iowa, to surprise her mother Lettie Edwards, the oldest mother in the branch. A floral tribute from the branch was presented to Sister Edwards. Corsages of flowers were presented to the other mothers who were present.

The Zion's League was organized under the direction of Bob Simpson, and the young adults organized the Ladasa Club under Gary Jones.

Cottage meetings under the direction of A. G. Edwards, Sr., and Robert Sparks resulted in the baptism of Enid Mosley, Anthony Meeker and Janet Meeker, Thomas and Richard Willinger, and Melvin Keim on June 14. They were confirmed on June 21.

Dr. Paul Edwards has been called to active service in the Navy and is now stationed at Bainbridge.

The Laurel Club held a dinner to sponsor several young people to youth camp at Deer Park.

Arthur G. Edwards, Sr., delivered the baccalaureate address at Dundalk High School to an audience of approximately five hundred.—Reported by WONZA SIMMERS

Mission Is Growing

OSCEOLA, MISSOURI.—Under the leadership of the pastor, Charlie Crabtree, the mission meets at the Presbyterian Church, at the south edge of town on Highway Thirteen in the afternoon on Sundays. Church school is held from 1:30 to 2:30, and preaching from 2:30 to 3:30.

The Zion's League is under the supervision of Brother and Sister Charlie Myers. Brother W. S. Macrae was the speaker on June 21. He spoke on the "Ministry of Pain." He brought his little portable organ he had used in the missionary field for several years. Two young sisters came with him to sing and play the organ.

Tom Tompson comes from Independence to speak to the group.

The women's department had a bake sale on June 20 to raise money for the building fund.—Reported by MRS. CHARLIE CRABTREE

Mission Organized

ASHTABULA, OHIO.—On March 22, at the YWCA, the district president, Charles Brockway, and his assistants, Bishop J. F. Wildermuth and Elder B. Scott Liston, met with the Saints for the purpose of organizing their church school into a mission.

The following officers were elected to serve until October: pastor, Glenn Bishop; treasurer, Paul Landon; church school director, Harold Fishel; secretary and recorder, Shirley Bishop; women's leader, Eleanor Landon; and music director, Gladys Fishel. The following committees were appointed: finance, Warren Bishop, Eleanor Landon, and Marilyn Hall; building, Homer Penhollow, Gladys Fishel, and Shirley Bishop; auditing, Margaret Ashbaugh and Carl Ashbaugh.

Upon his return from Graceland in June, Carl Ashbaugh was appointed to be young people's leader.

During the Kirtland District conference, May 9, Daniel Ashbaugh and Dorothea and John Gross were baptized by the pastor. The women's department was organized the same day under the direction of the district women's leader, Sister Othel Smith. The following women were elected as officers: vice-president, Dorene Penhollow; secretary, Dorothea Gross; and treasurer, Margaret Ashbaugh.

Glenn Bishop was ordained to the office of elder on May 10 by J. F. Wildermuth and B. Scott Liston.

Howard Penhollow, wounded in Korea, was welcomed home on June 1.

On June 21, Seventy Cecil Ettinger blessed Kris-Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hall, born on June 5. Brother Ettinger was assisted by Glenn Bishop at the blessing and was the morning and evening speaker.

Cheryl Lou Landon, born on May 31, was blessed by Elders Bishop and Liston on June 28. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Landon.

On June 14, the local radio station at Ashtabula, WICA, broadcast the first of a series of sermons by Elder Evan Fry. These fifteen-minute programs are sponsored by the women's department of the Kirtland District.

On July 2, the women's department held an ice cream social at the home of Brother and Sister Paul Landon for the benefit of the mission building fund.—Reported by SHIRLEY BISHOP

Young Adults Meet

SEIBERT, COLORADO.—The month of June was an active month for the Seibert mission. Five Leaguers attended the district youth camp at Palmer Lake. Those attending were Jackie Boren, Doris Fuller, Floyd Reid, Laveta Reid, and Roger Reid. The young adult group had a picnic and campfire with the district missionary, Gerald Gabriel, as guest speaker for the evening program. Twenty young adults were in attendance. Brother Gabriel baptized eleven people at the close of a series of three weeks of cottage meetings. Six babies have been blessed during the three-week period with Elders J. D. Curtis and Owen Self assisting in the blessings and confirmations.—Reported by BETTY REID

Forty-one Baptisms Children's Day

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—The following baptisms were reported on Children's Day; Bennington, four; Central, eleven; Chelsea, four; Eastbrook, two; Grandview, Kansas, two; Grandview, Missouri, four; Malvern Hill, five; Prairie Village, one; Quindaro, five; Shawnee Drive, two; and Van Brunt, one.

A Zion's League retreat was held at Lake Doniphan, June 13 and 14. Leaders were Almer Sheehy, Twyla Scherer, Fred O. Davies, Joseph E. Baldwin. A baptismal service was held on Sunday when Elder Davis of Malvern Hill baptized Judy Carol, the daughter of Clyde and Irene Beard, who are the young people's leaders at Malvern Hill. Meals were provided under the direction of Opal Howe and the women of Shawnee Drive. Eddie Smith, a professional chef in the group, assisted.

Officers Elected

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The branch held its annual business meeting on June 24, under the direction of Jacque Pement, president of the New England District.

The following officers were re-elected for the coming year: Elder Leonard Chesworth, pastor; Earl Wright, treasurer; Lorraine Garfield Cookson, secretary; Ernest Wright, church school director; Beatrice Wright, chairman women's department; G. Edmund Stearns, historian and publicity agent. The budget for the coming year was adopted. A Zion's League and Junior League have been formed in the past year. The membership of the branch was given as seventy-one, with about sixty-one active members. Jean Chesworth is in charge of the music.—Reported by G. EDMUND STEARNS

News and Notes

DEPARTMENT ACTIVE

Clifford Cole, formerly of the Graceland faculty, has joined the staff of the Department of Religious Education as the director of children's work.

Edna Easter of the department served as director of the Skylark, Oriole, and senior girls' camps held at Lake Doniphan. Serving as a cabin counselor at the Oriole Camp was DeLores Tandy, also of the department. Elder Lee Hart, Center Stake youth director, was associate counselor for the girls' camps.

NEFF AT OMAHA

Elder Charles D. Neff was in Omaha, Nebraska, on June 14, to perform a wedding ceremony. That morning he assisted in the worship service at the church.

AT MEMORIAL SERVICE

Elder Franklyn Weddle conducted an institute in Indianapolis, Indiana, June 19 and 20. He was at New Albany, and Evansville, Indiana; and Louisville, Kentucky. He preached at Nauvoo, Illinois, on June 26, and had charge of the music at the memorial service that afternoon. A choir of eleven voices from Independence and Kansas City sang at this service at which Elder Eugene Theys was the guest speaker.

Mission in Mt. Dora

"Because of the intense desire of a brother and sister to please their mother and to help others of their faith, a new church has been established in Mount Dora." This was the opening paragraph of an article in the February 5 issue of the Mount Dora (Florida) Topics.

It was a newsworthy event when the unpretentious home of the late Edith Fish was converted into a church building where members of an active mission now meet.

The devotion and zeal of one family carries the thread of the story. Mrs. D. Fletcher Crane (the former Gladys Wise) and her brother, Dr. Robert Wise, became concerned about the distance their mother, Mrs. Harry Wise, must travel to get to the church at Orlando. Sister Wise had been ill for some time.

When the house which had been the home of the late Edith Fish—the aunt of Fletcher Crane, became vacated, Sister Crane and her brother conceived the idea of establishing a mission in Mount Dora.

Dr. Wise serves as pastor of the church, and he and his sister, assisted by a few Saints, have spent a great deal of time redecorating the home. Pews are replacing the chairs that were in use at the opening of the mission. Work is being done on church school rooms, and plans include replacing the scarf-covered radio cabinet with a real pulpit.

The Mount Dora Topic featured a well-written account of the Reorganization, as well as the background of the Wise family who organized the mission.

Formerly of Minnesota, the Wises were faithful adherents of the original beliefs of the church. Their faith in the Reorganization was with them when they moved to Mount Dora. When a mission of the church was established in Orlando, about thirty-two miles away, they were among its first members.

Today, still zealous and enthusiastic, the family serves, with the growing congregation of twenty-five Saints, in the work of the kingdom. BARBARA PEAVY HOWARD

To Meet the Day

BY FRANCIS ELLIS AND VIRGINIA CHURCH

This book of 116 meditations is intended primarily for youth in their early and late teens. They may be read alone or just as effectively in devotional services.

Each meditation is one page long, begins with a Bible quotation, has a short story, and is concluded with a prayer. The entire book brings both inspiration and instruction in a clear, readable style. An Abingdon-Cokesbury publication. 128 pages.

...And Finally

MEMORY

The home where we visited seemed to have everything for happiness. It even had a grand-ma—rare in these days when small homes and crowded apartments send older folk off to rest homes and retreats for the aged.

Everybody deferred to her. Maybe it was the fact that everybody deferred a little too much, seemed overly anxious to please, that made us wonder.

Later there was an occasion to mention her vigor, her alert intelligence, her remarkable personality.

"Yes," said one of the young people, "that's true. But she also has the power to make everybody miserable."

What a memory to leave behind when she goes! The weight of years, the infirmities of health, the loss of a companion, and sharing the home life of others does not make things easy for Grandma, nor for those who care for her.

The flattering epitaphs on the gravestones are not the only ones. Others, more honest and realistic, are carved in the minds of those we should love. What a pity that anyone should earn an epitaph like this: "She had the power to make everybody miserable!" L. J. L.

SLAVES

The person with an ungovernable temper is sick—physically free, but in moral captivity. A married couple who have not severed their parental apron strings are sick—physically free, but emotionally immature. The person addicted with chronic alcoholism is sick—free by political definition, but enslaved by his moral instability. The person who seeks to escape the normal responsibilities of life is sick—politically free, but in bondage to irresponsibility. The person incapable of coming to conclusions on simple matters and standing by the same is sick—politically free, but in fetters to indecision. D. D. W. Davis

ELEMENTS OF REPENTANCE

1. Face the facts about ourselves, and assume the responsibility for them.
2. Recognize that there is power available to remedy the situation.
3. Turn around to a new way of life with a conviction of victory as we turn. Cheville

THIS DAY

This is the day I meant to do
The family wash—and mend a few Worn knees, frayed heels—and bake a cake.
But see the lake!
It pulled me out
To where the water lilies sprout,
Where proud new ducks, like balls of fuzz,
Flip-flop their tails as Mother does.
And baby fish go twinkling by.
Yes, I
And my small, eager, brown-eyed son
Turned dreamy backs on work undone
And found that God made flowers and grass,
Small winds that tickle as they pass,
Slim pines that lean against the breeze,
And small smooth rocks—yes, all of these—
And in this peaceful hour, we knew
God made us, too.

We'd Like You
to Know . . .

Charles Vincent Graham

ON THE VERY FIRST SUNDAY that, as a young boy, he attended a church school class in the unfinished basement of the Quindaro church in Kansas City Stake, Charles Graham's conversion began. The pastor was the teacher, and he told the story about Joseph Smith's vision in the grove and the following events. Though Charles had never read any literature of this church there was a burning within his soul which told him that what the pastor said was true. He has never doubted it to this day.
