It has been difficult at times to determine just where the point of decision has been reached regarding the final details of some project, yet it is a known fact that some of these vexing problems have not been resolved without considerable research, debate, a give-and-take consideration, and much prayer. In the end, however, we are happy to say that a unanimity of opinion has been attained, and the high quality of materials and workmanship has set a pattern which we are committed to continue.

This building stands today as a monument to the architectural genius of Henry C. Smith, who was the General Church Architect at the time it was conceived and the original plans were drawn.

As a young man I watched the excavation work in progress. I saw the footings go down to solid rock, saw the foundation walls rise out of the ground, watched the steel being placed piece upon piece and the spidery network grow. I recall the thrill that was expressed by the building superintendent Lysle Weeks, Architect Henry C. Smith, President F. M. Smith, and other General Church officers, as well as by the workmen and members, the day the two steel girders which had been taking form from opposite sides of the building came together in the center. By a little maneuvering the kingpin was put in place and the hot rivets began to give off a shower of sparks as the driver rammed them home against the solid bucking bar of the buckler.

President
W. Wallace

Since then, as we sometimes say, a great deal of water has gone over the dam. Some of the original planning has had to be changed. Some things which were thought to be essential have given way to what we feel are improvements to allow for a better utilization of the available facilities. I will not attempt to delineate these in detail. Suffice to say, they were made and that during the depression days we struggled.

Tributes

It was into this picture that the present Presiding Bishop, G. Leslie DeLapp, came as a counselor to Bishop L. F. P. Curry, then the Presiding Bishop. I do not intend to dwell on this, but I do want to pause long enough to pay tribute to Bishop DeLapp and his counselors, Henry L. Livingston and Walter N. Johnson, for the untiring devotion and manifest skills evidenced in the part they have played in the present as well as the past projects directed toward the completion of the building. If it had not been for their tireless efforts in directing the money-raising projects, pushing the follow-through on plans, contracts, adjustments, and a thousand-and-one other details, we could not meet here tonight in this sacred chamber in its present completed state.

I feel sure, however, that they would want you to know that there are dozens—yes, literally hundreds—who have worked with them—John Boren, C. D. Neff, W. E. Timms, Everett Berndt, William Ihde, and Harold Higgins of our own staff; Superintendent Jess Bennett of the Messina Brothers Construction Company, general contractors; J. H. Mackay Electric Company; W. T. Conroy, plumbing; Carl Weiss, sheet metal; and Wilford Burton, carpeting, just to mention a few. Architects D. Kent Frower and Robert B. Bloomgarten; Consulting Architect Joseph D. Murphy; Bolt, Beranek, and Newman, acoustical experts; Hare and Hare, landscape architects; Albert Hancock, representing Hoover Brothers, distributors for the American Seating Company—all of these people, mentioned previously by Bishop DeLapp, and many others have given a great deal, even beyond the call of duty, to make this occasion possible.

If time would permit we could tell you many human interest stories about this project. For instance, there were the two plasterers who wanted to stay on the job because they felt that no one else could finish it up satisfactorily—and probably they couldn't have. Others stayed even though they knew the job was running out and they might not get in on the ground floor at some new development. We appreciate this kind of support.

Multiple Purpose

We realize that many who have made significant contributions to completing the building thus far are not with us tonight. We regret this fact. It was deemed necessary, for testing purposes, to have a meeting in the chamber prior to the convening of General Conference. Our gathering tonight serves a multiple purpose, testing, consecrating, and dedicating.

This service could very properly be called a consecration service inasmuch as we are here tonight consecrating our lives in this service of dedication in which these facilities are set apart to the fulfillment of God's purposes in us. However, inasmuch as our terminology gives a connotation to the word "dedicate" as meaning that the facilities which we are presenting in their completed form have been paid for, this is a service of dedication. It will be hollow and meaningless if we do not at the same time dedicate our lives and our talents to the divine purposes of God, our heavenly Father. While we do not dedicate our buildings until they have been paid for, we are continually dedicating our lives to the many purposes which come to our hands to do. If we cannot find ourselves in a position to dedicate wholeheartedly our lives to his service, we will find that much of the joy and happiness which could be ours will not come to us. We rejoice to have this beautiful meeting place, especially for the General Conference, and we express our gratitude to the people and to God who has made all good things possible.

It was extremely important for us to do what we have done. We feel that it is imperative that the Auditorium shall be finished and that the church shall be freed to go from this to the other tasks which await it.

May God's blessing richly attend us as we move forward in his name and for his sake.

Auditorium Conference Chamber

Dedication Prayer

ALMIGHTY GOD, our heavenly Father, on whose will we depend for life and on whose love we depend for salvation, we stand together to give thanks to thee for all those whom thou hast called and guided down the generations—the seers, the planners, the builders—and for all the great things that they have wrought in thy name and for thy cause.

Such faithful servants and their great deeds are always present in thy sight. Among them we remember those who with Noah built the ark of salvation; or who with Solomon adorned the temple at Jerusalem; or who with Nehemiah refused to be turned aside from the work of renewal; or who—in this present dispensation—gave their precious things that the walls of the Temple might more fittingly reflect thy light. All these served thee in their day and generation, and the inspiration of their deeds reaches us to this very hour. Loving thee, and remembering them, we have sought a worthy place in their tradition.

Here in this chamber and at this time, we remember with gratitude thy servant, our prophet-leader, who—nearly two-score years ago—called for the building of this place of assembly and worship. We thank thee for him and for the people who responded to his vision with a mind and a heart to build.

Many of thy Saints from all parts of this land and from many other lands have made great sacrifices in order that the foundation of this building might be well and truly laid and the superstructure tall and finely raised. Impeded by war and depression, distracted by competing wants and needs, grown old with the passing years, they and their children have nevertheless kept the vision.

And now we meet in the name of and on behalf of all who have had part in the work that has been done to offer and dedicate to thee this Conference Chamber with its furnishings and approaches, which we bring free of debt or encumbrance and offer for thy service and for thy glory. Receive it, we pray thee, as a gift made possible by thine own bounty, and grace it with thy presence and favor that its manifest beauty shall be both the prophecy and the minister of its growing glory. So let thy Spirit rest upon it that it shall be progressively sanctified in the beauty of the ministries which are here exercised, in the love for thee and thy truth which is here expressed, in the heartfelt praise which is here uplifted, in the fellowship of good men which is here experienced, in the building of thy kingdom which is here advanced. And may those who assemble here know it as a truly holy place and meet here from time to time with high purpose, with keen expectancy, and with ready will.

May many influences for good reach out from this place to the church in all its parts and enterprises, and to the community and the nation and the world, for this day and for many generations yet to come.

And bless, we pray thee, those who shall continue to build here. Bless those who give and those who pray; bless those who dream and those who plan; bless those who build and those who direct, that the great work shall come to completion and be matched by many another work, each appropriate to its place, and all standing as monuments to thy loving kindness; that the great evangel shall be sounded and thy name be known in all the earth and glorified forever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

Tribute to Contributors to the Auditorium Project

WE PAY TRIBUTE to those whose financial contributions have made possible the completion of this General Conference Chamber. The achievement of financial goals of the church brings spiritual rewards. This has been clearly demonstrated in the progress made by the church since the beginning of, as well as throughout the years of, economic depression of the 1930's and in the ensuing years of our war economy. These latter years have been marked by inflationary trends.

The development of our financial policy made in 1931 and approved by the General Conference of 1932 gave impetus to our whole program of Zionism organization and world evangelism as well as bringing stabilization to our financial structure.

It is impractical to discuss the broad features of that policy at this time, but it is important to note the relationship of that policy to the occasion which brings us together tonight, the first meeting in this completed General Conference Chamber.

In 1931 there was a mortgage indebtedness on the uncompleted structure of $335,000.00. Our church, along with many other institutions, businesses, and individuals, faced the tremendous task of meeting financial obligations while at the same time carrying on the work of Christian ministry. This had to be done despite the disastrous effects of a shrinking income in an acute period of deflation.

The solution to this problem was found in a rigid application of the commandments given to the church to teach more fully the principles of individual stewardship and to heed the admonitions contained in the law to keep the church free from debt. This solution found expression in a call to the church, which was succinctly expressed in the words, "Keep the law."

This building became a most significant symbol in the crusade of the church to free itself from financial obligations. It was used graphically to portray the step by step progress of the church as the debt was eliminated.

Cleared of Debt

The Saints' Herald of December 14, 1940, carried on its front cover a picture of the Auditorium with a small portion of the cloud of debt still remaining on the building at that time, $25,000.00. This and the balance of all church debt was cleared in the next year. The enthusiastic and consistent leadership given throughout the church from the First Presidency and other members of the Joint Council, the Order of Bishops, the Seventies, Evangelists, stake, district, and branch officers, brought a response from the priesthood and members of the church until in unified effort the importance of completing our world headquarters building, along with other projects, became a goal to be achieved.

Through the years, the surplus funds of the church have been allocated to meet the many needs of its institutions and for the completion of this building. Application of surplus funds in preferential consideration of the Auditorium could undoubtedly have made possible its completion several years ago. However, our financial policy called for a well-balanced program which resulted in advancement in all departments. Hence, what we see here tonight in this completed General Conference Chamber is matched in all areas of our church work, as is evidenced in the consistent increase of new houses of worship, new headquarters buildings in Germany, Holland, Australia, and the Society Islands (this latter is to be started soon), and in the expansion of our institutions.

Present Value

It is interesting to note the amount of funds applied to this building throughout the years. The building was commenced in 1927. By 1931, an amount of $709,000.00 was invested; from 1945 to 1948, $28,000.00; 1950, $211,000.00; 1951 to 1953, $312,000.00; 1954, $169,000.00; 1955, $375,000.00; 1956, $165,000.00; and 1957 and 1958, $1,420,000.00, or a total of $3,392,000.00. Total appraised value, six million dollars.

One may well ask, "Where did this money come from?" It came from thousands of people throughout the entire church, from members in organized stakes and districts, as well as in unorganized areas. It came from widows and children, from businessmen, from professional people, from those who labor in field and factory. More than any other project ever undertaken by the church, it has caught the imagination and support of the thousands of our church members. Funds came from across the seas, east and west, from Maine, California, and Hawaii, from Canada to the Mexican border.

The Builders

This world headquarters building was the dream and goal of President F. M. Smith. It was designed through the skill of Church Architect Henry C. Smith. However, in its present state of completion and as it will stand finally it is a composite achievement of several architects, builders, and contractors who have participated throughout the years in its construction. The most recent have been, in addition to the Weeks Construction Company,

Messina Brothers	General
J. H. Mackay Electrical Company	Electrical
W. T. Conroy	Heating and Plumbing
Carl Weiss	Ventilating
Wilfred Burton	Carpeting
Hoover Brothers (American Seating)	Seating

Architects:

- Henry C. Smith
- Bloomgarten and Frohwerk
- Joseph Murphy, St. Louis, Consultant

Acoustics:

Symbolic Ensign

We of the Bishopric have appreciated the contributions of all. In the final analysis, it was all made possible and brought into fruition by the sacrificial endeavors and contributions of the thousands of our church members throughout the church. To these we pay our tribute today and shall ever be conscious of their love for Christ and his church as it is reflected in this monumental structure now and for generations to come.

This is indeed a building which belongs to all the people of the church and shall stand as an ensign symbolic of the gathering of the Saints from many places to the land of Zion.

Our Financial Goals

THE ACHIEVEMENT of the goals approved by the recent General Conference pertaining to additional work on the Auditorium will require a continuation of the fine financial support given to this project in recent years by our church members. The response of those who saw the completed Conference Chamber has been most encouraging and rewarding.

As a church, we have worked for and looked forward to the completion of this building for years. The fact that the General Conference of 1960 will be one of the most important in the history of the church was clearly indicated in the action of the General Conference, which designated that the next project would be "the completion of the lower auditorium, the front wings, the south portico of the building, and the south elevator, before the General Conference of 1960." We shall therefore put forth every effort possible to so organize our work that opportunity will be given to the members of our church to participate in the accomplishment of this important project.

We feel confident that these immediate goals can be accomplished. There is, however, much more than this to be accomplished. We think it imperative that we give to our people a rather complete picture of our total needs so that in the work of organization and implementation of our financial program throughout the church, everyone may be informed regarding these needs and plan for giving accordingly.

The church members throughout the years have responded to the "Keep the Law" program. In so doing, the church was able to free itself from debt; reserve funds have been established; church edifices have been constructed, many of them financed through the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund; our institutions have been expanded; headquarters buildings in missions abroad have been built; our missionary force has been strengthened; the number of tithepayers has increased; more members have complied with the law of accounting. All of this indicates excellent progress, and it is our opinion that this is the result of a well-balanced program which has included all the activities and interests of the church.

The General Conference just concluded brought spiritual stimulus to our people. It also brought increased responsibilities to all of us. It unanimously adopted the largest budgets in the history of the church:

1959	2,089,379.00
Total	$4,111,732.84

These budgetary needs must be considered along with the needs for the Auditorium. In the last decade we have been able to raise consistently more money than our actual operating expenses. Such increases have made it possible to appropriate funds for our institutions and reserves to which reference has been made. This favorable situation must continue. The trend in 1958 is favorable, as indicated in the following:

INCOME AND EXPENSE FOR NINE MONTHS ENDING ON SEPTEMBER 30, 1958

Income
Tithing	$1,650,760.06
Offering	16,769.32
Bequests	4,363.27
Total Income		$1,671,892.65
Total Operating Expense		1,318,055.25
		$ 353,837.40
Other Income		38,577.17
Net Income		$ 392,414.57

(Note: September figures approximate.)

We call attention to the fact, however, that income usually falls off in a General Conference month. We hope that will not have held true in October of this year. We trust that all who have felt the fine spiritual uplift of our Conference will give expression to it in branches and in groups and that there will be an increasing upward trend in tithes and offerings for the remainder of this Conference period.

The General Conference appropriation of $100,000.00 for the Auditorium, added to an amount of approximately $30,000.00 on hand, makes it possible to proceed with the plans and specifications, but before the work authorized by the General Conference should actually begin, we will need to raise an additional $100,000.00 before the close of 1958. Quotas are already assigned to stakes and districts for Auditorium funds for 1958. Some groups have raised their quotas for this year; others are putting forth commendable efforts to do so. Auditorium campaign quotas will also be assigned to stakes and districts for the year 1959. We shall keep our members informed as to progress being made in the raising of these funds.

We are convinced that these are days of great opportunity for the church. We look forward in faith to the accomplishment of these financial goals. From our past experience, we are certain that progress will be made in proportion to our willingness to "Keep the Law." To this each and every member may commit himself.

Called to Be Saints

AS PARENTS when we hear a small voice raised in anguish, our first thought usually is "What's happened?" and then, "Is it our child?" We first have to determine what happened, hoping nothing serious has occurred, because if there is a serious accident something must be done immediately and the proper persons must be notified. It is natural that we feel a deeper concern for our own flesh and blood, our own friends, our own property.

If we went strictly according to our natural inclinations, we would do many things that we now know to be injurious to the best interests of society. It was Jesus Christ who taught us that all men are our neighbors and that we should learn to treat others with the same concern for their problems that we would want them to show were we in the other person's position. We are all travelers on the road to Jericho, and if we stand divided among ourselves, the wrongs of Jericho road will continue to flourish. Anyone could be the next victim.

Recently a child who thought her heart was broken came home in tears. Two neighbor children and their playmates were digging a hole in their yard where, fortunately for them, they had permission to dig. The other children had said: "Go away! There isn't room for you." This supreme wisdom was born of the judgment gained in the space of from six to eleven years time. The pronouncement was made to a four-and-one-half-year-old girl.

There was some basis for the feeling, since there was a difference in interests due to the variation in ages. It was a snobbish attitude nevertheless. We cannot expect more than that out of children, since patience and kindness are virtues that must be taught by correction and example. It appears that many, even in an "enlightened age," have not taken this philosophy to heart. Even in the church we can never have more than a theory of the world-wide fellowship of Saints if we consider members who transfer from one branch into another as "outsiders" until they have spent a period of from three to six years establishing themselves. People with provincial minds are not equipped to demonstrate a global gospel.

Rivalry and Hurt Feelings

What did the little girl's parents do? They understood that those who live by the sword also perish by the sword whether it is wielded verbally or otherwise. (If we win an engagement here, it may be lost in eternity when we must give an accounting for every idle word.) So she was given a place to dig in an unused portion of the garden in her own yard.

All went well until the other children remarked that after all their fox hole was deeper than hers and therefore a better work of art. This caused another outburst, and her parents had to explain that it is not important as to who digs the deepest, unless those digging are engaged in competition.

If not curbed at its source, this rivalry will echo from church school, choir, and pulpit in later years. If we allow ourselves to be annoyed each time someone baits us, we will always be hurt and in a bad temper because there will always be those who will make it their business to see that we feel inferior. This will be done if we allow our own feeling of inadequacy to make us vulnerable to the conscious and the unintentional hurts inflicted by someone who may be only working out of his own feeling of inferiority.

Courtesy Pays

Years ago there was a local grocer who had no competition for some time. Then another grocer moved into the neighborhood. Friction arose if the first grocer learned that one of his customers had traded with the "enemy." A little later, a child arrived in the home of the first grocer. It was not long before the mother antagonized more customers by taking up quarrels which arose between her child and others. It seemed a pity when this grocer failed in business. He was not really such a bad fellow. He just forgot to maintain good public relations.

This failure can also freeze people out of the kingdom of God. Yet the same courtesy that serves us so well in dealing with others will also stand us in good stead in our relationships with family, neighbors, friends, and fellow church members.

Thus we go through life, blaming our dissatisfactions on our neighbors, God, or the Devil. It will always be that way until we learn our weaknesses and our strength. In this way we can build up our weakness and also concentrate on making the most of the things we are able to use out of the talents we have. Unless we learn to do this, we may incur spiritual death if we permit our faults to lead us too far.

Facing the Problem

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not." This was written by the Apostle John. Since this letter was written almost two thousand years ago, it is not likely that we will feel any offense toward him for what he wrote. But, child or adult, our actions and reactions betray our lack of maturity wherever it may exist. Only the perfect (angels are the spirits of just men made perfect) are exempt from John's statement: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." This is sound logic. The first step in overcoming a difficulty is to recognize that a difficulty exists. After that, the only realistic approach left for us is to face the problem. From this point onward, the problem is doomed to defeat because it cannot stand the revealing light of day which permits us to see what the problem is.

Prayer is an aid to honesty that cannot be found in the same measure anywhere else, for God-consciousness is designed to minimize the stubbornness and the embarrassment we might feel in any other presence. We must not deceive ourselves in thinking that anything is hidden from God. If we understand this, in facing him we must also look at ourselves. Jesus said: "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. For every one who doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be re-proved. But he who loveth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest."

Pleasure in the Will of God

A world in which all hurtful things are remedied can come about only as we all work, with the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, to build godlike characters within ourselves. We have changed many things in our physical world for our own good, but man cannot change man. That can be done only with the help of God. In his letter to the members of the church at Corinth, the Apostle Paul points out that they are called to be saints.

This summons is on requiring us to forsake the inconsistencies marking our conduct before we were called to be saints. Many respond to this call by entering the kingdom of God; but at this point, it is easy to forget that the entire purpose of the call was that we might enter into sainthood. We do not refer to the pose mentioned by Isaiah: "Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day." This call, instead, is to the honest in heart who sincerely find pleasure in doing the will of God.

Becoming Like God

The infant does not become a fully grown person merely by letting the automatic action of physical growth take its course. He exercises his power to train mind and muscle to do his bidding. Neither does a Christian become a saint without effort. There are no automatic devices to control the tongue, the temper, or the unrighteous desires of the human heart. This action takes place only after firm determination that this is the right thing to do. When one has been baptized by the water and the Spirit of God, having no mental reservations, he ought to find that he has a greater desire to do what is right.

Limited goals will probably lead to limited ways of life. Vast projects should not be attempted by lazy men. Jesus expressed this idea in these words: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." We may have Sunday clothing; but there is no time in God's schedule for Sunday crosses, and we are all using God's time. He put us here to give us a chance to grow up. To develop to our utmost capacity is to become like God, in as far as that is possible to us on this plane of existence. To fail to make this development is to fall short of the glory of God. This failure loses for us the opportunity—even the ability—to enjoy God's society.

Preventing Problems

The enduring of trials makes us stronger for the bearing of other burdens, for there will be other burdens to bear. There are burdens which become lighter to the extent that we learn to bear them. As we grow in strength, we become able to meet trials yet unseen by us. God has promised never to call upon us to bear more than we are able.

It is wise to guard against creating problems for ourselves such as those arising out of the spirit of rivalry, contending for mastery of others, argumentativeness, being overly critical, too ambitious; all of these and more have held back the work of God in all ages as it pertains to what he is willing to help men do for themselves.

As we mature beneath the tutelage of God's Spirit, we will not care particularly who wins an argument, and envy or jealousy will depart. We consider too much our own feelings, when our salvation lies in keeping our minds upon Christ's example. There is no place in the kingdom for such double-mindedness. It will not work.

Fruits of Sainly Living

When we have achieved the proper quality of life, our business meetings will be places where our share of the Lord's business is considered in holiness and transacted in peace. Our club meetings will be places where the Spirit of God reigns, enhancing fellowship. Our prayer and fellowship services will be meetings where people will be standing in the streets for lack of room in our churches, because God meets with those who are willing to meet him unreservedly. No such spirit remains among those who forfeit their blessings because of lack of attendance and unsainly conduct.

When there are enough saintly people in the kingdom, "Then shall they say, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings unto them, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings unto them of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice, together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion" (Isaiah 52: 7, 8).

Life Eternal

As tiny plants depart from mother seed
To send their roots and stems through earth to heed
God's urge to feast on solar rays and dew,
They push aside a clod or stone to view
A vast new world in which to grow and live.

As songbirds leave their mother's nest to mate,
And heed divine desires to match their fate
With other birds whose beauty seems to glow;
Their songs of love and life are sung to show
The urge sublime to procreate and live.

As man matures from hungers planted there
For food to live and grow, and later share
A life of love with one whose choice is so
Devout, divine approval makes him know
To give of love if he's to truly live.

As many body cells unite to grow
Into a man—with intellect to know
Of cosmic urges toward the kingdom goals;
So does mankind combine in groups of souls—
Zionic symphonies of men who live.

Decay and growth are both essential so
That sacred paths from past to future go Through time, which is but one dimension of Eternal life; subdued by death, whereof,
Men climb to even greater heights—to live.

ARNOLD A. SPILLER

The Lost Art of Reading Aloud

THE CHILDREN KNOW something which their elders have all but forgotten. They know that one of the most enjoyable experiences of life is to listen to someone read aloud. As soon as most children learn to read and can no longer cajole an adult into reading to them, they follow the example of their elders and begin to read silently altogether. Before long they forget the great joy of their nonreading days, and they join the ranks of those who deprive themselves of this pleasure.

In less sophisticated and pre-television ages, reading aloud was an important part of the lives of many people. The earliest pieces of literature of our western civilization were handed down orally and almost verbatim generation after generation via the campfires and great halls of ancient Greece. In their printed form the Iliad and the Odyssey still convey the excitement of adventure, the horror of war, the tenderness of love and devotion, and a wide range of human foibles, but one can imagine the added thrill of hearing the famous episodes recited with all the color which the human voice can produce. From that day until the time that books became plentiful, the oral expression of imaginative literature, prose and poetry, and the oral reading of Holy Writ were popular. When ownership of books became common, and when most people learned to read, adults began to forget and only children remember that it is fun to read aloud.

Our own day has seen something of a revival of this lost art. During the war the movie actor Charles Laughton visited veterans' hospitals and read to the wounded, many of whom could not read for themselves. The men were so pleased with the reading that they invited him back repeatedly, and it occurred to him that audiences all over the country might enjoy this kind of entertainment. His highly successful ventures included a play read by actors seated on high stools without benefit of costumes or scenery; a reading of a long, dramatic narrative poem by actors reinforced by a chorus but without costumes or scenery; and a personal solo reading tour presenting in a relaxed, informal manner a variety of well-known and little-known selections from dog-eared books. Since then Laughton has written frequently for national magazines, suggesting that one need not be a professional interpreter to enjoy reading aloud and listening with family and friends. The validity of his theory regarding this new way of presenting drama has been demonstrated in the Independence community with the successful presentations of Benet's A Child Is Born at Christmas time with no costumes and no scenery. Many audiences have found that their own imaginations provide more effective trappings for a play than can be created by stage sets and costumes. Laughton's theory regarding this new kind of recreation for the home is equally valid.

Those who have, in their adult lives, continued to read fiction, poetry, and essays are more or less aware of the power of this kind of literature. For instance, imaginative literature gives a variety of vicarious experiences by means of which we escape for a few hours from the routine surroundings of every day life. Submitting one's attention to the wisdom or humor of an essayist or to the charm of a poet provides much-needed relaxation in a tense, hurried world. The value of literature does not end here, however. The literary artist often sees life more clearly than less perceptive human beings. The novelist, for example, in telling a particular story can help his reader attain a similar insight. The beginnings of tolerance in the reader may come, amid the chuckles over the hilarious second part of Huckleberry Finn, as it comes to Huck and Tom when they realize that Negro Jim is white inside after he gives up his chance for freedom in order to save Tom's life. A less dogmatic, should we say a more Christian, approach to sin may be suggested by a reading of The Scarlet Letter or My Antonia. A more compassionate understanding of people and their motivations, a better comprehension of the problems faced by society—these are only a few of the rewards of literature. They are the rewards of silent reading, and certainly we are not suggesting that oral reading should replace its much more efficient counterpart. For an occasional activity, however, oral reading adds another dimension to the power of literature. It often makes even more vivid the meaning of a passage. The most effective way I know to make a section live for my world literature students is to read it aloud. I am not an especially skillful oral reader, but I have seen indifferent, rock and roll university sophomores and juniors begin to respond to the pathos of Andromache's farewell to Hector from the Iliad, or to the majestic beauty of the Psalms, or to the eloquent statement of religious toleration in the parable of the three rings from Lessing's Nathan the Wise. I have seen a roomful of boy friends and roommates, present only out of loyalty to the interpretation students whose assignment it was to present an evening of reading, smile with delight over Peter Pan and sit in awed silence at the close of the Twenty-third Psalm.

THE SOCIAL VALUES of the oral reading of literature are many. A critic of the Pollyanna school found praise recently for our national devotion to television by saying that at least television had put the center of recreation back in the home. Reading aloud is a simpler and cheaper method of doing the same thing. Every mother should read frequently to her small children. So should every father. It is one of the joys of parenthood, and one of its responsibilities. As soon as I saw the Thurber book on the children's shelf of the library, I knew my husband, who reads frequently to our children, was trapped again. And so he was, this time not by the children or me but by his own enjoyment of Thurber. For when he saw it among the books that Sunday afternoon as the children and I assembled on the bed for our daily ritual of "nap story," he said, "Thurber—I'll read that one." We all settled back to listen to Many Moons. The six-year-old and I enjoyed it thoroughly. It was too old for the three-year-old, so she leafed quietly through her favorite books giving the story occasional attention. The baby played happily, not understanding a word but glad to be with the family. It was a good family experience. Reading aloud can enrich the family altar. Many passages of Scripture seem to have been intended for oral reading. Older children and adults can benefit much from participation in the reading of parts of Genesis, Job, some of the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Gospels, and many more. Smaller youngsters enjoy children's Bible stories and at a very early age appreciate some of the Psalms and the Christmas story.

The circle can be widened to include the friends who come in for an evening. If the hosts have overcome the misconception that reading aloud is foolish and a little childish, the guests will soon lose their inhibitions too. I remember a cold Missouri February several years ago during our university days. One of the rare occasions when we had friends in for dinner we decided to spend the evening reading. Since it was almost valentine day, and since our guests were two engaged couples from the church group, we opened our Thurber to the clever essay on courtship. One Thurber called for another and finally we stopped laughing long enough to follow Laughton's advice to "Stop reading and start talking." As they left our guests' sincerity convinced us that they had had as much fun as we had. The occasions for this simple entertainment are limitless. Friends of ours read aloud in the car as they drive long distances on their yearly vacation or before retiring in their motel. A middle-aged husband and wife frequently spend an evening reading to each other.

If you are intrigued by the idea of reading aloud, the problem of what to read need not trouble you. When you have an audience of children the appropriate age shelf in the library will yield a wealth of good children's books. Trade "finds" with other mothers. To start it going here are a few of my recent discoveries: The Dr. Suess books, the Charlotte Steiner books, Johnny Jack and His Beginnings, by Pearl Buck, Good-bye, Bunny Bangs, by Doratheia Dana. R. I. Stevenson's A Child's Garden of Verses is a standard work. For older children, Mark Twain, parts of Gulliver's Travels, Don Quixote, and Kipling's Jungle Books are standard. Dickens is worth a try with this age, and nonfictional biographies may offer a needed directive. Adults will find new meaning and enjoyment in these children's classics and will enjoy ranging over short stories, essays, and parts of longer fiction from a host of authors. Sample widely, and be sure to include some LaFontaine, Conrad, Melville, Thurber, Boccaccio, Please Don't Eat the Daisies by Jean Kerr, and Cheaper by the Dozen. The field is limited only by personal preferences and taste.

A flexible, experimental approach is essential. New fields of material should be tried, selection should be on the basis of sincere preference and not on any preconceived idea of what one "should like." Variations should be sought. For example, some people have been successful with frequent play-reading sessions. And finally, no regret should be wasted on the failure to read as skillfully as a professional. The enjoyment here does not rest on the ability of the reader as much as on his willingness to give himself up to the power of the selection. In addition, a little participation will produce surprising results.

As old as our culture, the practice of reading aloud is as new as the group and the selection. After all, with a good library near by and an uninhibited spirit, who needs television?

Alto Singing and Zionitic Living

TRYING TO LIVE a Zionitic life is in many ways similar to carrying the alto part in congregational singing. Both are done voluntarily. Both require a degree of skill and are learned through practice and frequent referral to the books containing directions—words and musical notes in the hymnal, and the commandments of God in the Scriptures. Both create beauty and harmony when done well.

At times you may be the only person in the congregation singing alto. If your voice is strong and clear it will still be heard. At times you may be the only one in your neighborhood trying to live a Zionitic life. If your actions and conduct are upright and full of love they will be noticed and will attract others.

Probably no one will praise you for your part in the congregational singing. Many times no one will give verbal appreciation of your Zionitic life, even if it is helpful. In each instance you must remember the typing student's practice sentence: "The reward of a job well done is to have done it." In addition there is this promise from I Corinthians 15: 58: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

When you are learning to sing alto you make mistakes and produce sour notes at times. Or you waver. Singing the melody along with the others seems so much easier. Even after you have sung it awhile you still make mistakes. But the song goes on and you must continue to the next notes if there is to be harmony while the song lasts. Having a strong, experienced alto near you helps.

When you first desire to live a Zionitic life you make mistakes, too. You waver at times. To go along with the world would be so much less demanding. But time passes. If you do not go about living a Zionitic life your opportunity will be lost. You must continue in spite of mistakes if the harmony of Zion is to be established. Having a strong example like Jesus near you is a necessity. Also helpful are the testimonies of others strong in the faith.

In 1950 came this revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 142: 5 b): "It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed." Won't you add your voice to the song of Zion building before the music ends?

Ghana Nurse

Miss Nagel and two of her patients,
Kafi and Comfort

"There is much Christian work to be done in Africa." That is the testimony of Jean Nagel, Ghana nurse.

Jean is a 1948 graduate of the "San" School of Nursing. For the past five years she has been a missionary nurse in Worawora, Togoland, which last year became part of the new African nation of Ghana.

It is a life of many satisfactions, according to Jean, despite what most people would consider inconveniences and discomforts. The hospital is in the "bush" country, about 175 miles from the coast. There is little contact with the outside world.

Worawora is in a hot, humid cocoa-growing area. When Jean first arrived, the little hospital was just beginning to operate in an adobe building donated by a local planter. In 1957, however, the hospital moved into comfortable new quarters, a 100-bed hospital complete with X ray, laundry, operating room, pharmacy, and nurses' hostel. The nineteen cement block buildings of the hospital are connected by covered passageways. The hospital was built with funds granted by the Ghana government ($122,000) and with some assistance from an Evangelical and Reformed church in Philadelphia.

"It is not like nursing at the 'San,'" Jean said. "But the training I received there was very good.

"At our hospital in Worawora we cannot run lab tests as we would here in the States. We do not have the facilities. It is necessary to determine the nature of the illness or injury by the symptoms rather than by laboratory tests.

"There are some diseases similar to the ones here, and there are also others that you find mostly in the tropics, such as yaws, malaria, 'river blindness,' sleeping sickness, leprosy, and tropical ulcers."

There are two white German doctors at the hospital at the present. There are five white nurses from the United States and Germany. They are aided by native personnel.

The hospital has recently added a nurses' training school. Jean speculates that as soon as the native nurses are well enough trained and in sufficient number and native doctors are available, the white missionary doctors and nurses will leave the hospital in native hands.

The white doctors and nurses are assigned to the hospital by the Evangelical and Reformed Church's Board of Missions. However, the hospital belongs to the Evangelical and Reformed church in Ghana, and the doctors and nurses work under the local church's direction. The church operates another medical mission in Ghana and has others in India and Honduras. In Ghana and other needy countries it also operates agricultural missions and educational missions.

Jean says she used to spend about half of her time in missionary work and half in nursing. However, with the addition of the nurses' training school, she is now more nurse than missionary.

Her duties include nursing in the hospital where she is in charge of the operating room, pharmacy, central supply, and outpatient department, and also helping to teach student nurses. In addition, she finds some time for teaching Bible classes.

Through the efforts of the medical mission, many of the natives in the surrounding area have accepted Christianity.

"We treat many Moslems and pagans," Jean said. "There is much Christian work to be done in this part of Africa. We have found the people very appreciative of our services and most are eager to hear the Christian message."

She said the new nation is rapidly progressing and is extremely conscious of the need to prove itself to the world. The government is working to improve health and educational facilities and thus welcomes the hospital at Worawora.

One thing that does disturb the pro-American people of Ghana is the news of incidents like those at Little Rock. "It does not sound good to the Africans, but I think most of the educated ones recognize the trouble here as sectional and not an indication of our whole national attitude," Jean said.

Why did Jean choose to go to Africa to be a nurse? "Because God seemed to lead me in that direction," is her answer.

After completing her course at the "San" in 1948, she attended Moody Bible Institute. After finishing there she felt she wanted to serve in a foreign mission. She applied to her church's mission board and was assigned to Worawora where the hospital was just getting started.

She began her work in Ghana in 1952. Since then she has served two periods of two and one half years each. In between assignments she receives a leave to return to the States. She is now home on leave and will return to Ghana in March.

Jean's home is in Independence. While here she spends much of her time speaking before church groups and does some brushing up in the latest nursing methods.

Looking toward returning to the hospital at Worawora and the natives who depend on her and others like her for spiritual and physical ministry, Jean said, "This is the most rewarding and satisfying work I know of. I intend to give my life to it."

Question Time

Question

Since many of the hymns in the new hymnal have amens at the end, how can we know when it is correct to sing them, or do we assume that they should always be sung?

California

E. C. N.

Answer

Amens were provided at the close of hymns in The Hymnal, which are prayer hymns. More and more congregations in the church are wanting to close prayer hymns with amens. When they were not available in the Saints' Hymnal in written form, they were sometimes improvised with less than satisfactory effect.

In The Hymnal, amens are available for those who wish to use them.

In the opinion of this writer, if the hymn has a written amen at its close, it should be sung as a matter of course.

F. S. WEDDLE

Question

What does the baptismal covenant consist of? Should the one asking for baptism repeat this covenant? Where is this covenant found?

California

F. M. D.

Answer

1. There is no formal baptismal covenant to be repeated by the candidate. A covenant is an agreement between two persons or parties. In water baptism the individual is giving expression to his part of an agreement. The agreement consists of taking upon one's self the name of Jesus Christ and being determined to follow him to the end. In water baptism the individual presents himself to God through the authoritative minister. The other part of the agreement is expressed in the laying on of hands, when, in effect, God says, "My spirit will guide and direct you." Thus, the agreement is complete, and a covenant has been made.

2. Essentially, baptism by immersion is the physical symbol of an individual's spiritual rebirth. What is taking place is death to sin and resurrection to a new life of righteousness. This symbol grows out of the eternal significance of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ but begins in a dedication of life to follow that Christ. This determination to follow Christ is the covenant, but it is something that must be felt or sensed rather than spoken or repeated verbally. This desire to follow Christ is expressed in the form of water baptism. The covenant is not repeated by the individual as one might read a written agreement; most certainly, however, it is implied.

3. This agreement cannot be found written in exact words for the candidate to memorize and repeat verbatim. To appreciate that the covenant is made and that baptism is its expression note Mosiah 9: 39-49. Verse 41 reads, "Now I say unto you, If this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him . . ." Read also II Nephi 13: 14-17 and Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Address questions to Herald editors rather than to panel members. Only questions with the contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention. —Editor.

Seventy-eight Years Ago

In 1880 the editor of the Chicago Evening Journal for February 25 quoted the following from the last chapter of the Book of Moroni, which is the last book in the Book of Mormon:

And God shall shew unto you, that that which I have written is true. And again I would exhort you, that ye would come unto Christ, and lay hold upon every good gift and touch not the evil gift, nor the unclean thing. And awake, and arise from the dust, O Jerusalem; yea, and put on thy beautiful garments, O daughter of Zion, and strengthen thy stakes, and enlarge thy borders for ever, that thou mayest no more be confounded, that the covenants of the eternal Father which he hath made unto thee, O house of Israel, may be fulfilled. Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and if ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; and if by the grace of God ye are perfect in Christ, ye can in no wise deny the power of God. And again, if ye, by the grace of God, are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father, unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy without spot. And now I bid unto all, farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God, until my spirit and body shall again reunite, and I am brought forth triumphant through the air, to meet you before the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah, the eternal Judge of both quick and dead. Amen.

Then the editor followed with this statement among others: "It must be conceded that no church on earth sets forth man's religious duties more explicitly."

He then followed another paragraph with this statement: "If the doctrines taught in the Book of Mormon were rigidly followed, human lives would be better in whatever pertains to love to God and charity towards men."

It would seem to be no less so today.

Book Review

God Can Heal You Now

By Emily Gardiner
Neal

Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Price, $3.50

Beginning as an agnostic, with considerable scientific and medical information, the author, a journalist, began to be curious about the accounts of spiritual healings that came to her attention. Deciding to expose a "racket," she investigated. What she learned brought about her conversion, and she presents some of the evidence in this book.

Here are numerous true accounts of people healed by the power of God's Spirit; notes on the lives of men and women, ministers and lay folk, and their experiences in healing; and here, also, are directions to help individuals and groups who need and desire to be healed.

The findings of this book, founded on Scripture, are harmonious with the beliefs and experiences of many in our own church, and should be a help to those who need assistance in their search for health. It accords with our own fundamental faith in the mercy, love, and healing power of God.

The author says, "Wherever you are, wherever you may be, the healing power of God is available to you today just as it was two thousand years ago when as many as touched the hem of his garment 'were made perfectly whole (Matthew 14: 36).'"

There is hope offered here for those cases in which spiritual and mental factors are involved in physical conditions. Our people need a better understanding of the resources contained in the gospel for their welfare, and many will find such help and understanding in this book.

Unusual Baptism Record

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.—For the past four years, the people of Port Huron congregation have been enjoying a unique experience. Each month, without a single exception, new communicants have been partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper for the first time.

This singular record began in September, 1954. Since that time there have been one or more baptismal services held in the church every month, thus adding new members to the roll.

A prospect list, used by the pastor and other priesthood members, appears to be the keynote to the success of this endeavor. Personal calls by the pastor and priesthood members have played a role in continuing to win new members and friends for the church.—

by Naomi Russell

Here is something really new for Christmas. All five programs can be produced by any small choral group and two or three speakers. The stage settings are simple, but effective. There is still time to prepare one for this year.

These programs were written originally for the Cantanina Chorus and produced at the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri. The music was written for treble voices in three parts. However, most of it is available for mixed chorus or in solo form.

The beauty of the music and the dignity of the words combine to make any of these a Christmas program that will long be remembered.

And Finally...

"I LOVE ME"

This is often said as a mild rebuke to those who sound egotistical. Self-centeredness, commonly called selfishness, is considered bad, antisocial, and unchristian. A reasonable amount of self-esteem is needed, but when this becomes adulation or self-love one's friends will forsake him.

The second of the great commandments is: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." This is an acknowledgment of a justifiable degree of pride. Paul wrote the Ephesian saints (5:29): "No man ever yet hated his own flesh." All of us look out for Number One. It takes a poised and clever person to keep his ego from showing. Demonstrating our love for our neighbor by thoughtful acts of service and generous praise, while trying our best to conceal our own self-esteem, should pay off.

FIRST THINGS

The wise men of antiquity, when they wished to make the whole world peaceful and happy, first put their own states into proper order. Before putting their states into proper order, they regulated their own families. Before regulating their families, they regulated themselves.

Before regulating themselves, they tried to be sincere in their thoughts. Before being sincere in their thoughts, they tried to see things exactly as they really were.

—Confucius

NOT BEDFAST

Those who have endured the hardship of poor health will appreciate the story of a minister who called on a crippled woman who spent much of her time in bed. This day he found her in a wheel chair. When he inquired how she was, she answered fervently, "Poorly, thank God."

SIGNIFICANT SIGNAL

Driving to class at the School of the Restoration shortly after dark one evening, I met a car with its lights off. By one easy flick of my lights, the driver of the on coming car got the signal and turned his on. Many times in our experiences of life there are people who need only a "signal" from us and their pathway would be lighted. Thus many of the dangers they would encounter could be eliminated.

GREATEST GOOD

The important thing in life is not so much the ability to do good work as the ability to create conditions in which it can be done.

—Ashley Havinden

TRIPLE TROUBLE

Democracy is threatened by the inertia of good people, by the selfishness of a few people, and by the evil designs of most people.

—Stanley King

MEANS AND ENDS

Not only must the ends which true democracy seeks be moral and just, but the means used to secure these ends must also be moral and just.

Counselors F. Henry Edwards and M. L. Draper

First Presidency Reorganized

*Revelations Name W. Wallace Smith,
F. Henry Edwards, Maurice L. Draper*

THE REORGANIZATION of the First Presidency at the October General Conference brought together three men of long experience in the church.

W. Wallace Smith, fifth president of the church, is a grandson of Joseph Smith, Jr., the martyr, and a son of Joseph Smith III. He is a brother of Frederick Madison Smith and Israel A. Smith, who were also presidents of the church.

Brother Wallace was designated for the office in a document left by the late President Israel A. Smith who was killed June 14 in an auto accident. Action on the document was the first item of business when the General Conference met in Independence October 5-12. Following his unanimous approval by the Conference, President Smith was ordained in a special evening service Monday, October 6.

The ordination was under the hands of Apostles Paul M. Hanson, D. T. Williams, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and High Priest Ward A. Hougas. Apostle Hanson was the spokesman.

Before coming to the First Presidency, Brother Wallace served as an apostle in the Southern States Mission and Southwest States Mission. He served as a counselor to President Israel A. Smith for eight years.

He is a graduate of Graceland College and the University of Missouri. In 1924 he was married to Rosamond Bunnell. They have two children, Dr. Wallace Smith and Mrs. Rosalee Elser.

Wednesday, October 8, President Smith presented a document to the General Conference which was accepted as a revelation to the church. The document named F. Henry Edwards and Maurice L. Draper to complete the quorum of the First Presidency. They were ordained counselors to the president in an ordination service Wednesday evening in the Auditorium.

The document said President Edwards was to be sustained as a counselor to the president "by reason of his preparation through long years of faithful service and should be ordained for the strength and support he can give to his associates and in the councils of my church."

Brother Edwards has been a member of the First Presidency since 1946. He first became a church appointee in his native England in 1920. He was ordained an apostle at the age of twenty-five and served in the Council of Twelve for nearly a quarter of a century.

He was married to Alice M. Smith in 1924. They have three children, Seventy Lyman F. Edwards, Mrs. Ruth Fairbanks, and Paul M. Edwards.

President Draper has served the church as an appointee since he was nineteen years old. He became an apostle in 1947 at the age of twenty-nine. He has labored in many parts of the United States and the Australasian Mission.

Brother Draper was married to Olive Ruth Willis in 1940. Their three children are David, Edward, and Janette—all students.

Greetings from the First Presidency

TO THE SAINTS IN ALL THE WORLD:

In a very special sense, at this time in the history of the church, we stand at the threshold of a new era. Aware of the lessons of the past and pausing to consider the problems and challenges of the future, both immediate and more distant, we look forward to a time of substantial and significant achievement.

The particular circumstances of the present times suggest that the problems and opportunities now confronting the church should be approached with thoughtful consideration of the new era into which we are moving, as well as in devotion to the purposes and ideals that have been fundamental in the work of the church from its beginning. We rejoice in the belief that the people of the church are fully aware of the precious heritage of the past as well as of the splendid opportunities of the future.

The General Conference of 1958 has brought changes in the personnel of some high offices in the church. Those called to new responsibilities are accepting their tasks humbly and sincerely. Those called from the Council of Twelve into the Order of Evangelists, Brethren D. T. Williams, and E. J. Gleazer, Sr., are entering into their new fields of service. The new Presiding Patriarch, Evangelist Roy A. Cheville, has accepted his call with high spiritual expectancy. The new members of the Council of Twelve, Apostles C. D. Neff and C. A. Cole, are challenged by the spirit and opportunities of their calling. In his present circumstances, the former president of the Twelve, Brother Paul M. Hanson, relieved of the long-maintained burden of executive responsibility, will be free to contribute as he desires to the spiritual ministry of the church. Brother Elbert, though no longer weighted with the cares of high office, will continue his ministry of reconciliation and spiritual power in the church.

To these and others whose ordinations were approved by the General Conference, and to others whose callings and duties are unfolding in the course of administrative procedure, we extend our good wishes and pray for their blessing in their respective ministries.

The present times and circumstances call for a new evaluation of the opportunities of the church to minister to human need. Members of the standing ministry need to seek new growth in the skills and insights required in their offices.

The general councils and orders should search, in the growing spirit of fraternity which blesses the church today, for the significant values in the instruction of the law "to enable the bonds of indecision to be loosed and the fulfillment of my purposes to be accomplished" (Doctrine and Covenants 145).

We need financial resources for many worthy purposes having their origin in the ideals of the kingdom. The paying of tithes alone will not suffice for the total task. The Saints are challenged to a higher level of devotion, to a keener insight into the magnitude of our calling, to a more complete response to the obligations of stewardship. Missions around the world cry for our ministry. Both those now opened and those which ought to be opened are made up of people like those already known to the Saints among the Germans, Norwegians, Dutch, English, Latin Americans, Polynesians, Australasians, Japanese, Koreans, and Pakistani.

The institutions of Zion—those that we have and those that are yet to be established—will need the strength and resources, the support and the personnel that devoted church people can contribute to them.

More than money and materials are needed for these purposes. We need most of all people who are motivated by devotion, skill, wisdom, and spiritual power. Let those now possessing these qualities be multiplied many times, and the necessary material resources will flow like a flood into the ministries of Zion.

With you, we are challenged by the needs of our day. With you, we are filled with hope by the promises of the gospel. With you, we are moved by the urgency of the ministry of the Holy Spirit.

May the grace and power of the Lord Jesus attend us all in our labors with him for the salvation of men.

Your servants in the Lord,

High Priests to Meet

We are taking this opportunity to make a preliminary announcement regarding the proposed Conference of High Priests to be held at Kirtland, Ohio, October 8 through 11, 1959. With this early announcement we are suggesting that as many high priests as possible will arrange their affairs so that they can be available. They are urgently invited to attend the proposed conference.

It will be expected that as in former gatherings of this kind there will be a strong note of worship throughout our meetings together. This will extend from the opening service at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, October 8, to the final Communion and dedication service on Sunday afternoon, October 11. It is anticipated that all of the gatherings will be held in the Temple, and the spirit of worship should pervade all of our meetings. The keynote of the classwork will be wide participation by those present.

Considerable work has been done on the Temple since we met there last, and it is anticipated that the facilities will be adequate, including heat; but it will be necessary for us to make spiritual preparation, and we strongly urge that it is not too early to begin this preparation. While the burden of preparation will fall most heavily upon the high priests themselves, it will be necessary for all of the church to support them; in this we are sure we can depend upon the members to do their part.

Those who have attended such gatherings in the past will be immediately aware of the value which was gained by traveling together.

Consequently we suggest that it is not too early to start making arrangements for travel so that these values gained through fellowship can be maintained.

Additional information will come at a later date regarding the physical arrangements necessary for the conference.

Messiah Performance in Auditorium

The forty-second annual performance of Handel's Messiah by the Independence Messiah Choir, with soloists and orchestra, will be given Sunday evening, November 23, at 7:30 p.m., in the General Conference Chamber of the Auditorium. The performance will also involve the recording of the program which will be released to radio stations for the Christmas season broadcast.

The excellent acoustics combined with the comfort and beauty of the newly completed auditorium should make the Conference Chamber the ideal setting for the 1958 performance. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m., and last until 10:15 p.m. Doors will close at 7:20 p.m. The program will include an intermission.

The larger number of seats makes it unnecessary to require tickets or otherwise restrict attendance. All members are encouraged to attend and bring their friends. Branches or other groups are urged to plan attendance in a body. Children below junior high age, however, cannot be admitted because of the demands of quality recording for absolute quiet in the auditorium during the performance as well as because of its length.

This will mark the nineteenth year for the broadcast which, as in recent years, will be heard in many places around the world. Further information regarding the broadcast including lists of radio stations will appear in subsequent issues of the Herald. Publicity materials will be mailed to pastors for use in local advertising around December 1.

Blessed Are the Plodders

I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

—Psalm 84: 10.

MOST OF WHAT we hear from day to day, and most of what is written, not only now but throughout all history, is concerned with key personalities. We hear about Moses, Noah, the Duke of Wellington, Julius Caesar, Napoleon, and hundreds of other such personalities continually, but seldom do we hear of any tribute to the common man, whom we shall term the Plodder. There are exceptions of course, but the yeoman service of the common man and woman has never been (in any sense) portrayed in its true light. We think of John Paul Jones and his brilliant naval victories against overwhelming odds, but do we ever think of the thousands of sailors who died helping attain those victories? Or of the wives and children who carried on after the death of their loved ones? We remember Lee and Grant, giving scant thought to the thousands who gave their lives, to say nothing of their dear ones who waited for their return in vain. In truth, we all easily become hero worshipers. We like to read about Superman, Robin Hood, the Lone Ranger, and such characters both real and fictional. The history of the common man is not usually considered an interesting subject.

It is true that key figures and leaders are very important, and no one would honestly wish to diminish their brightness; although we must note that the truly great men have been humble and very common at heart. Without Moses, where would the Israelitish nation be? Without Joseph Smith (or some one like him) where would our church be? How long would it have been before America was discovered, had not a man with the character and convictions of Columbus come along? These leaders are important, but again we must remember that Columbus could not have sailed a ship alone.

We find it easy to forget Jesus' statement, "Except ye become as a little child . . ." Or his command, "Consider the lilies of the field. They toil not neither do they spin . . ." or in other words continue to do nothing but their duty. Jesus tried in every way possible to avoid personal notoriety, because he was showing the way for the average man (all men), the Plodder. And it was upon the shoulders of common men (lowly fishermen) that he left the task of building his church on earth.

We think of being a common person—a Plodder if you will—as an unhappy fate. All of us want to be important and famous. We want to do important things. We would all rather die gloriously than to live monotonously. But when we do, we are usually thinking only of ourselves.

Lincoln once remarked, "God must have loved the common people, because he made so many of them." And is it not well that such is the case? Consider an entire nation composed only of Elijahs, Napoleons, or even John the Baptists! Upon the shoulders of the common people rests the burden of building a church, a community, or a nation. They are the ones who give continuous service day after day, who give the stability that any organization must have.

The visit of a missionary with the Spirit that he brings with him is a marvelous help to any church group no matter how large. But the local Plodders must take over the job of teaching and completing the conversion of those that he may baptize. They must provide the conditions whereby missionary work is most fruitful. Too many times they must provide more than even a reasonable amount of service in order to keep things going at all. Most of the times the depth of their consecration is known only to God.

While God knows the hearts of men and the degree of their consecration, one man is rarely able to evaluate properly the behavior of another. However, all of us have known lay members or members of the local priesthood (may we say Plodders?) whose very presence made everyone feel warm, friendly, and happy. These are the kindly souls who think little of themselves and who are always trying to do whatever task they can. These are the people for whom no tasks are objectionable, who can always be counted upon, whose feelings are not on their "shirt sleeves." It seems that they never need more than an occasional encouraging word—which they too rarely get.

IN HIS BOOK, The Problem of Pain, C. S. Lewis makes a statement that we would do well to consider carefully. He postulates that if Adam, in his original state—at home and at ease in the presence of God—were among us, we would probably "look down our nose" at him and disregard him (like the priest and the Levite in Christ's parable of the good Samaritan). He would probably be unkempt and unshaven, possibly stooped over, slow of speech, and with no obvious personal beauty. Only a few of the most holy (humble) would deign to notice him, but after they had talked with him, looked into his eyes, and felt the Spirit that was with him, they would want to fall and worship at his feet.

It is inconceivable that Adam should be sent among us in his original state, but if we look around us we may be surprised to see many a lowly and unpretentious person, who has gone a long way toward this spiritual status. I have met such people, whose very presence made me feel so humble that I knew they must live very close to Him. I wonder how many times we have all actually spoken with angelic persons and have not been ready spiritually to discern their presence! The trouble often is that we are too busy looking at the glittering personalities (or more likely looking at ourselves) really to see what our fellow men are like. In our search for greatness, we forget that those who serve and serve unselfishly are taking steps toward eternal greatness. The leaders of our church who are giving their lives to serve are great only because of the type of service they are giving. In fact, I believe that they would consider it an honor to be included in the group I have referred to as Plodders.

I CAN'T FORGET the case of a woman who came very close to being a perfect example of charity and unselfishness. Her children were well brought up and active in church and community work; they were clean, well mannered, and well taught. She was always present at services. No task was too menial or difficult for her to attempt, and she held with dignity any office given her. All of the branch members looked to her because of her stability. However I once heard her state in a testimony meeting that she wished she could do something worth while for the church and its people, that she had never been worthy to be spoken to in prophecy or to receive any other noteworthy message from the Lord; she wondered if her life had been a complete failure. Truly there are some heights of consecration that can only be reached by the humble! It is with such people in mind that I wish to say again, "Blessed are the Plodders." I fervently thank God for the yeoman service of such people, for in the service that they are giving their fellow men they are really serving Him.

It is always very hard for us Plodders to see that we are doing anything worth while. We seem to be always at the bottom of the "heap." Nothing that we do seems to be of any value. Everyone else does things better and more easily. Discouragement seems to be the usual order of the day. We plan great things, and they all seem to come to naught. We find it easy to forget that a great deed is really the sum of many little ones.

I remember an ancient record dug up in archaeological excavations (Chaldea, I believe) whose inscription has been of help to me. I no longer have the exact words, but the meaning is as follows: "I am Shushan the King. I was a gardener in the service of the King. My services as a gardener were pleasing unto the King, and I became King." Note the humble status. There is no self-praise nor show of importance; merely the simple statement, "I became King."

WE WON'T become kings, but we have an opportunity to be something far greater—sons of God. All he asks is that we do what we can of the tasks before us, do them well and faithfully . . . and this crown is ours. We may not see in this life how well we have done our tasks, but there will come a time when our "services as a gardener" will allow us to reach a state greater than that known by any earthly king. Is it any wonder that I say, "Blessed are the Plodders"? The plodders who have the work of the Lord first in their hearts, and who carry the Lord's work on their shoulders. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren . . ."

One of the troubles with being a Plodder is that we are too often asked to do more than we feel we are able to do. Sometimes the tasks are tiresome, monotonous, and distasteful. Sometimes, although a great opportunity, they seem impossible. Moses was very happily tending the flocks of Jethro, well out of the reach of Pharaoh, when the Lord commanded him to lead Israel out of Egypt—a seemingly impossible task. Apparently not only was he a hunted man in Egypt, but he was not too highly regarded by his own people. And he could not talk very well! If we add to this the fact that Moses was said to be the meekest man on the face of the earth, we have more of an idea of the magnitude of the job. He knew he was not big enough for the job, but he accepted it—and became Moses. Likewise David was a happy shepherd boy—a far reach from a king. He was, however, consecrated to God in all his daily tasks. His services were acceptable, and he became King of Israel (and father—in human lineage—to our Lord).

Few of us are ever given tasks of such magnitude, but all of us are given tasks of equal importance! The little things, when well done, are big in the eyes of the Lord. There are no substitutes for reliability, stability, and charity. These things start at home. And if we give our alms (do our deeds) in secret, the Lord will reward us openly; if we do them only to be seen of men, we shall get our reward and satisfaction from men. We are all given to become sons of God. God gives to us different talents and expects different works in return. He will be the judge. We need never worry about how important we are, merely what we keep first in our lives. If we faithfully do our work "as a gardener" (or as a Plodder) we shall find it acceptable to our King, and we shall have peace in this life and in all worlds to come.

To Find Peace

WORDS FROM the papers on the newsstand seemed to jump out at me as I passed by. "Cold War!" "H-Bomb Tests!" "Guided Missiles!"

I walked on to the corner to an unobstructed view of the great freeways crossing one under another. The sound of the traffic rose up with a steady hum, broken often by a loud "whoosh" as large vehicles passed underneath and then out of the huge arches.

At the intersection where I stood, there was a constant stream of traffic, stopping impatiently only for the red light. Faces all around me registered tension, irritability, anger, anxiety.

Where was everyone going in such a hurry?

As though in answer to my unvoiced question, a verse of Scripture came to mind, concerning the last days.

*. . . many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.*¹

I crossed the street and walked on a few blocks away from the freeway.

*And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity . . .*²

*Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. For the powers of heaven shall be shaken.*³

Meditating upon this, I became aware of the muted tones of an organ rising above the now distant sound of traffic.

"Come, Ye Thankful People, Come"

I was nearing a small ivy-covered church, and from the parking place at the side smiling men, women, and children were leaving their cars and going inside.

I stepped through the open door.

Golden Age of Mathematics

Long before Sputnik I orbited, mathematicians and mathematics teachers knew that mathematics was approaching its golden age. It has long been recognized that development of the physical sciences is inescapably dependent upon the development of mathematical models which represent idealized simplifications of physical phenomena. These mathematical models provide a means for studying and predicting physical phenomena and relating them in a consistent theoretical system.

It is now increasingly recognized that the blossoming of the social and life sciences and their achievement of high status as sciences is likewise dependent upon the development of mathematical models for all aspects of the behavior of living organisms. Much development has been made in this area, and it seems certain that vast developments are to be made.

Needed in Many Fields

Future historians may characterize our era as the "Age of the Atom." However, I think they may decide that an even more significant characterization would be the "Age of Increased Knowledge." The prophets have predicted that in the last days knowledge should be increased in the earth and men should run to and fro. In every field of endeavor knowledge is increasing, and there is an increasingly recognized necessity that it be subjected to mathematical analysis.

Any serious-minded collegian who expects to go far in the study of psychology, sociology, economics, or biology will find an increasing emphasis on mathematics. A student who does not have the necessary mathematical background will be as seriously handicapped in future studies in the behavioral sciences as he would be in the physical sciences. To make this specific: it is increasingly clear that sociologists and economists need mathematics at least through calculus.

A number of professional organizations are developing and publicizing trends in mathematics education which are destined in the immediate or near future to make radical changes in mathematics curricula on all levels: elementary, secondary, and collegiate.

Necessary Preparation

As the trends develop, the young people of the church and their counselors must be alert lest they be caught unprepared and face such difficulties at the collegiate level in preparation for a career as to cause them to surrender their goals and change to less desired ones. If a student is ever going to need calculus then he needs to know this when he is in high school and can prepare for it.

Persons directly and greatly affected will be students, parents, teachers, school administrators, school board members, voters, and taxpayers. Any people falling under any of these categories would be wise to avail themselves of information in order that they may not be negligent and unprepared for changes which are coming. Like many other progressive colleges, Graceland is keeping closely in touch with these changes, and the youth of the church who seek entrance need to be prepared.

The following sources of information are recommended:

1. National Council of Teachers of Mathematics, 1201 - 16th Street, Washington 6, D. C., pamphlet, As We See It.
2. Commission on Mathematics, College Entrance Examination Board, 425 West 117 Street, New York 27, N. Y., pamphlet, Modern Mathematics and Its Place in the Secondary School. Ask for any other literature and reports pertaining to the work of the commission.
3. Committee on the Undergraduate Program, Mathematical Association of America. The pamphlet, Outline of Recommended Courses, may be procured by writing to H. M. Gehman, Math Association of America, University of Buffalo, Buffalo 14, N. Y.

Every year at Graceland College some students regret that they did not take more mathematics in high school.

Let us not be "too late with too little."

Letters of Tribute

Elder Elbert A. Smith
Independence, Missouri

Dear Brother Smith:

We consider it to be both an obligation and a work of love to respond to the action of the recent General Conference in acknowledging our appreciation and gratitude to you for your service to the church during sixty years under appointment, from 1898 until the present time. Our regard is evidenced in part by the fraternal term "Brother Elbert" as you have been affectionately called by all the church.

We are reminded that you became an editor of the Saints' Herald on November 1, 1906, and that your first editorial appeared in the issue of November 7. From that time you have rendered distinguished service to the people of the church through the printed word.

It would be difficult to number here your many services. We can cite the statistics, but they are a small part of the total score. You became counselor to President Joseph Smith on April 20, 1909, and served until his death in 1914. On May 5, 1915, you became a counselor to President Frederick M. Smith and continued until your ordination as Presiding Patriarch on April 10, 1938. Thus you have served the church in the Presidency for twenty-nine years, and as a spiritual father for a few months more than twenty years—almost fifty years in these two high offices.

But far more important than the great length of your services to the church has been the quality of that service.

In your editorial work you introduced new journalistic features to improve the quality of church publications. You were a pioneer in the use of photographs, especially of church people, and the columns of the Herald were brightened with pictures now historically important. You brought to your writing the warmth of a personal touch, a beautiful style, and a love of people.

In your administrative work, you always favored a ministry of love and reconciliation, of gentleness with the erring, of mercy and kindness. In your decisions you were guided by the Holy Spirit. When we were overshadowed by the times of trouble, you stood as one of the strong men whose ministry helped to heal personal wounds and promoted the fellowship of spiritual unity.

Few men have been able to approach you, Brother Elbert, in the ministry of prayer. Your humility, clearness, simplicity, and trust have been as a shining light to the church. In prayer you have taught us the direct and unobstructed approach to the heavenly Father.

At this time we are grateful that God has spared you in your wonderful ministry so many years. You ministered to our fathers and mothers as you have to us. And we would not forget the faithful companion who shared so many of your years of service, and the two sons who grew up in your home to make their own contribution to the work of the church.

As you retire, we express our deep love and our great appreciation, and pray that God may continue to bless you in the years that remain for you to live among us. For we know that as long as you live, you will continue to be under the appointment of God as a spiritual father to this people.

Elder Paul M. Hanson

Dear Brother Hanson:

With a deep sense of gratitude we give honor to you, our beloved brother, in behalf of General Conference. The mind of God, expressed to the prophet and shared with the world, gave due recognition to the worthiness of you who have labored shoulder to shoulder with four prophets of the Restoration. The revelation contains this tribute: "Few in my church have served as long and as faithfully as my servant, Paul M. Hanson."

Born in the state of Iowa in 1878, baptized in 1893, appointee minister since 1908 and apostle for forty-five years, you served the church with distinction in every phase of your labor. You were President of the Council of Twelve Apostles from April, 1934, until you were honorably released from your responsibilities in the Council during the General Conference of 1958.

Noteworthy in the long tenure of your excellent service has been your great and abiding concern for the advancement of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the far places. Your voice has been heard in many lands, for your ministerial assignments took you to Australia, the Islands of the Sea, Europe, the Holy Land, and many other areas of the world.

Among your interests and achievements, one has claimed your special attention: the discovery of archaeological evidences validating the Book of Mormon. Your research has been extensive. You have led the way for many who have been challenged by your concern and your scholarship. Always you have been the student, with a passion for truth and with exemplary restraint in regard to your conclusions.

Wherever you have gone you are known as a Christian gentleman, noted for the dignity of your bearing, your unimpeachable integrity, the courage of your convictions, the wisdom of your counsel, and the quiet humor in your eyes. Adults respect you, while children turn instinctively and with open hearts to you who merit unlimited confidence and affection.

You walk among us as a true minister of Jesus Christ.

Elder D. T. Williams

Dear Brother Williams:

Words are inadequate when we attempt to express the feelings of the heart. If all the people of the church who have come under the influence of your life and ministry could speak at this moment there would be many heartfelt expressions of gratitude for what you have done in terms of leading them toward God and his kingdom.

Each man writes his own history. Few like you have held high the banner of King Immanuel and have represented such a worthy cause as the building of Zion. The church has been enriched by your testimony through the years, and many souls have been won and reconciled to God through your testimony of Christ and his saving grace.

No man stands alone when engaged in the cause of righteousness. His life is always influenced by the impress of his associates. We are sure your life has been blessed, not only by the holy influence of the Spirit of God but by the support of a devoted companion and friends who have stood by you.

Your years of ministry in a number of priestly functions have ranged from deacon, priest, elder, high priest, apostle, and now patriarch. This office to which you have now been called and ordained will no doubt be an expression of the sum of your years of wisdom born of your experience with God and good men. May the latter years of your life bring forth the kind of spiritual ministry which will lead many into the presence of the God of Israel.

May the Lord continue to bless you richly as you enter into your calling as a spiritual father in the church. The future course of your life has been clearly stated. That you may be blessed by Him who called you is our humble prayer.

GLEN H. JOHNSON

Elder Edmund J. Gleazer
Independence, Missouri

Dear Brother Gleazer:

At the 1958 General Conference of the church the undersigned were appointed to prepare a suitable statement expressing the gratitude of the Saints for your extended ministry as one of the general officers of the church.

The Saints have long taken pride in the fact that you who were not born within the folds of the church, but accepted the message of the Restoration while yet in your teens, should have stood so high in the councils of the church and rendered such distinguished service therein.

After serving as an elder and as a seventy you were called into the apostolic council by the word of revelation at the Conference of 1922. Almost immediately you moved into the forefront of the missionary preachers of the church, and to your outstanding ability in this field was added your great talents as a leader in public worship and as an able and far-sighted administrator.

Your friendly disposition, your enthusiasm, and your intuitive grasp of the essentials in complex situations have endeared you to the people of the church wherever you have labored. Since you have served in every apostolic field in the United States and Canada, as well as in Hawaii and Europe, this has meant that for more than a third of a century your name has been a household word among those who appreciate the importance of ministerial leadership.

In the quorum work of the Council of Twelve your wide acquaintance with church affairs, your understanding of the essentials of the Restoration message, your keen humor, and your penetrating insight have combined to make your contribution of outstanding value. As your earlier contribution was mellowed with your growing experience and enriched by the insights won in leadership through dark and difficult years, you came to be recognized as one of the most valuable members of the Council, and the brethren frequently turned to you for guidance where experience and devotion were of major concern.

With your brethren of the Council of Twelve you have had part in many Joint Councils with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric and with the First Presidency and the Seventy. You have also participated in the work of the Board of Appropriation. In all these activities you have been a significant factor in the decisions made and in the growth accomplished.

Now that your thirty-six years of service in the apostolic council have been terminated by the voice of inspiration and the action of the church, and you have been set apart to other duties, we want you to know of our abiding affection and good will. The church has been enriched by your long and able service. You will be missed in the Councils where you have served with such distinction. But the entire church will take great satisfaction in the ministry upon which you now enter and for which you are so peculiarly qualified.

We trust that you will be blessed in mind and body and spirit and will long continue among us as the servant of God and one of our beloved ministers and brethren.

Elder Ward A. Hougas
Denver, Colorado

Dear Brother Hougas:

We are pleased to recognize the ministry of leadership you have given as president of the Quorum of High Priests since 1932, a period of over twenty-six years. During this time you have presided over the deliberations of the quorum with dignity and fairness.

During your administration, your chief concern has been for the spiritual growth and development of the high priesthood of the church. You have given yourself diligently to the task of raising the efficiency of the quorum and promoting better co-operation and understanding with and between the administrative officers of the church.

During the period of your presidency over the High Priests' Quorum, the church has passed through a significant period in its history. The economic strains of the depression of the 1930's were a tax on the resources of the church in every way. The strength of the church in that time of crisis was due in part to the quality of high priestly ministry by the quorum over which you presided.

In the trying times of World War II and the period of international uncertainty which persists to the present day, the spiritual stability of the Saints is strengthened by the leadership of the high priests of the church. We are sure that the activities of the quorum under your presiding authority have contributed to this significant ministry.

Under your gavel the quorum has deliberated over such important matters as marriage and home standards, the administration of the ordinances, and other aspects of interpretation and application of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

On behalf of the church we wish to extend the appreciation of your brethren and of the Saints for your long service as president of the Quorum of High Priests and to assure you of our prayerful support in the ministry which you shall continue to give in the cause of the kingdom.

Independence, Missouri

Dear Friend and Brother:

Your retirement as General Church Physician brings to the attention of the church and its officers the many splendid services that you have performed for the church and its people throughout the years of your practice of medicine in the city of Independence.

We are reminded that you served as Assistant Church Physician from 1932 to 1946, when Dr. A. W. Teel retired from the office; that you then accepted an invitation to assume the duties and responsibilities devolving upon the Church Physician; and that you continued devotedly in the work of this office until the present time.

Negro Lessons in Christianity

In Little Rock there are two kinds of Christians

IN LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS, and several similar southern communities, the world is seeing today's best display of practical Christianity in action.

The scene is reminiscent of third century Rome and Jackson County in the 1830's.

Persecution, the challenge that has always brought out the best in Christianity, is again rampant, this time in southern cities that would deny first-class citizenship to their colored citizens.

There is no need to recount in detail the trials southern Negroes have had to withstand: the duplicity of governors who would use public money to suppress a minority, strong-arm terrorism, taxation without franchise, vilification.

That the Negro leaders who are fighting for their rights in Faubus-land are bearing strong Christian witness is affirmed in a recent Christian Century article by Lauren A. Smith. He is a Protestant minister and, until recently, the state editor of an Arkansas newspaper.

He describes a meeting of Little Rock Negro leaders in a basement. He was the only white man present and was asked to open the meeting with prayer.

While the small group of Negroes met in the basement to discuss the opening of Central High School, the Supreme Court was listening to segregation lawyers, the Arkansas legislature was in special session to pass laws to fight integration, and the governor of the state was inflaming segregationists with radio and TV speeches.

Despite the forces arrayed against them, Mr. Smith writes, the Negroes were not afraid.

Working with God

"There were no banalities in the basement like those coming from free-swinging, overliquored state legislators in their after-hours marathons," the article states. "In the basement there was no ill-will, no hatred, no element of threat, no denunciation of legal authority. In the basement they were walking with their Master. Some of the best Christians in Arkansas are Negroes in the N.A.A.C.P."

The Negro leaders are, Mr. White wrote, "more like the Apostles in the book of Acts than possibly any other group to be found in the nation today—certainly much more so than any other collection of people in Arkansas."

He points out that Mrs. Daisy Bates, Negro leader of the N.A.A.C.P. in Little Rock, has been slandered all over Arkansas by segregationists. She lives with steel grating over her windows to protect her from bombs and bricks. The newspaper owned by her husband has lost 60 per cent of its advertisers. But this does not stop them in their quest of justice for their colored brothers and sisters.

This on-the-scene evaluation of Negro integration leaders furnishes background for another testimony—that of Dr. Martin Luther King, Negro minister and integration leader who has won the respect of even his foes.

Southern Christians

At the recent National Conference on Christian Education at Purdue University, Dr. King led the morning worship services. One evening a panel of white teen-agers interviewed Dr. King as part of the program. The discussion was reported in Youth magazine, published by the United Church of Christ. One of the questions was "Can you tell us what is the feeling of the people of the Christian church in the South? Is most of the trouble caused by those outside the church?"

Here is part of Dr. King's answer:

"I don't feel that most of the trouble is caused by people outside the church. It is unfortunately true that the Christian church is probably the strongest supporter of segregation that you would find in the South. That is unfortunate.

"You have church people who defend segregation on the basis of the Bible. You have church people who argue on cultural and sociological bases, and this has convinced a lot of persons in the South."

"What God Wants"

Dr. King was also asked how his fight for racial equality has affected his home and family.

His answer:

"Naturally we have gone through a great deal of hardship in the struggle. We went through many tense moments when our home was bombed. And we still get threats as we did before. But we have lived with it and have gone through it with a faith that we are devoting ourselves to a cause that is greater than our physical life. And in this struggle we are not alone; God is with us because we are trying to be with him and his purpose. The struggle for integration is more than a secular struggle; it is a struggle to make this world what God wants it to be.

"God wants men to live together as brothers and respect the dignity of all human personality. I feel in struggling with this I am struggling for what God wants me to do even if it means physical death. And if physical death is a means to accomplishing God's will, then it is no worse than the psychological death my family and others will know under the present segregated system."

Those are words the early Saints besieged in Independence, Haun's Mill, and Nauvoo would have stood up to cheer. They would have understood.

The Lesson for Us

These testimonies are not cited to prove Negro integrationists are all righteous, nor to prove that white segregationists are all unrighteous. But they are presented to show that there is something we can learn from the Christian Negroes in the South: faith despite persecution, assurance despite hysteria, godliness despite devilry.

There is a determination, a devotion to cause, a willingness to suffer from which we can learn. Although we may never again be called on to endure large-scale physical opposition, we can find no better example today for dedication to a Christian cause than the southern Negro leaders who are motivated by Christ. And the dedication they exhibit in seeking their goals is the same dedication we need to reach ours.

To Us-ward

WHILE READING we sometimes observe a word that appeals to us with special significance. Such was the case with me recently as I read the fortieth Psalm. The Psalmist makes use of the word "us-ward" as he strongly and beautifully acknowledges the concern and lavish preparations for mankind. In the fifth verse of this psalm we read these words: "Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward; they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered."

As the holiday season approaches, this bit of sacred recognition of God's interest in our happiness and welfare has recurred to my mind time and again, especially before Thanksgiving Day when trying to take an inventory of the things for which I was most thankful. Thanksgiving is such a prelude to our Christmas celebration, for after being humbly grateful for one whole month for the manifold blessings of earth, sky, and sea—which we, too, have found cannot "be reckoned up in order"—we are overwhelmed that because of God's great love to us-ward, he gave to the world the unspeakable gift of his own son that all who would may have eternal life. Life, abundant life, eternal life is freely offered to those who will accept the gift which is priceless compared to all others.

As we approach the annual commemoration of the Christ child's birth, we thank him for the great sacrifices he made for us; we thank him for his many demonstrations of divine love, his life upon earth, his teachings, his power over evil and death, and the hope that his promises give us.

We of the church reorganized thank him also for many precious truths which have been restored to the inspired word of God and for continued revelations of his will and purpose to us-ward.

ADDIE C. VAN SYOC

Praise Him

THE MONTH OF NOVEMBER and thanksgiving are almost synonymous in our thinking. This is true, not alone or even primarily because of the fact that Thanksgiving Day falls in November, but more especially, I think, because there are so many things to be grateful for at this time of the year.

Here in the middle west, where of late years Indian summers have become the rule rather than the exception, we find ourselves deep in November with the taste of summer still on our lips, the scent of burning leaves in our nostrils, and a succession of crisp, frosty nights to suggest that winter will surely come.

For most of us winter holds no fears. Our fruit shelves gleam with the glory that was summer. The power mower has been cleaned and put away for the winter. Screens are down and storm windows up. The furnace has been checked for efficiency, and the thermostat in the living room has been clicking on and off irregularly but faithfully just to let us know it will be on the job when we really need it.

If creature comfort were our only need we certainly would be blessed. But Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone . . ."

Having made us, God is aware of our needs. He knew that in our childishness we would reach outward and upward for a Father's love. He knew that in our loneliness we would need to gather, as a people, about a common altar to worship and talk about a better way of life. He knew that we would need a set of rules for living, values to consider, and goals to work for. And so, as his children, he made us heirs to the gospel of the kingdom.

Once more we are the recipients of divine providence. Our hearts melt in the presence of such love. Our minds become electrified with the light and truth inherent within the gospel. We fall to our knees in humility as we whisper, "O Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him?"

Then as our gratitude rises to new heights, our awareness of our obligations to God and man becomes a very real thing. Love and service become our watchwords, and as we search the gospel for the needs of each hour we find that it comes completely equipped with the tools that will help us to build Zion.

The gospel proclaims Zion. It announces without fanfare but with a quiet certainty that the will of the Father shall be accomplished. Then as a purified and enlightened people we will love God too much to break a single commandment. We will live together in unity of mind and spirit—desiring to give rather than to receive, to serve rather than to be served, and to love rather than to be loved.

Having kept the commandments, we shall receive the promise.

HAZEL CHAMBERS

Take Nothing for Granted

WHEN MY FRIEND Genie returned from New York where she and her husband and two children had spent their vacation, she said, "You know, it's a funny thing; my left thumb has been sort of limp ever since we left Independence, except sometimes it jerks . . . and I can't control it." I looked at her thumb, but seeing nothing obviously different about it, I said, "Probably just fatigue. After all, traveling with two energetic youngsters like Donna and Clark would leave almost anyone slightly limp." I said it flippantly, thinking that Gene—a nurse—should know better than to ask a layman like me to diagnose her malady.

That was over five years ago. In the intervening years I have developed a genuine respect for people's ailments. I have also become sharply aware that good health is not to be taken lightly. Vicariously, I have experienced the terror of incurable disease meting out its slow death on what was once a healthy, pain-free body.

Gene's thumb did not get better. After three or four months it became flabby, useless—and the limpness began to spread over her whole hand. Within a year she was unable to grasp and hold anything in her left hand; it dangled from her wrist like a rubber glove filled with mush. After a score of tests, she was given the verdict: multiple sclerosis.

Accepting her role as a partial cripple was not easy for Gene. She who had spent years as a nurse at the Sanitarium did not want to quit helping and start being helped, but there are many tasks that require two hands, and eventually she allowed her friends to assist when she could find no way to get the job done by herself. It was then that I began going to her house on Saturdays.

I tried not to notice or comment on the deteriorating hand—and then the arm—when I was with her. It was not pleasant to see. As I walked home from her house I would wonder how I'd manage if it were my hand that was useless, and almost without realizing I would be thinking, "Thank you, dear Lord, for giving me two good hands to work with," and I'd clinch them into tight fists, then spread them wide, marveling at what a wonderful tool the human hand is.

Another year passed, and Gene began to get the same symptoms in her leg and foot—limpness and muscle spasms. Despite the new awkwardness that came with her progressing afflic-tion, she continued to do most of her housework, attend church, and visit school when Donna—now in kindergarten—was in a program. She did what any wise person would do: kept busy and tried to think of how to help others. The women's department made her a Friendly Visitor, and she spent hours telephoning those she felt she could cheer with her conversation. Driving was laborious, but she refused to give up this means of contacting people as long as she felt she was not a hazard on the road. I used to wonder how those she visited felt as she parked in front of their homes, haltingly got out of the car, and dragged her lame foot along the walk as she hobbled to their doors. Whatever may have been troubling them must have seemed small indeed. I guess I had never realized before what a privilege the ability to walk is—at least I don't remember giving any special thanks for two good legs and two good feet.

THE THIRD YEAR found Gene hanging on to furniture to get around the house; her right leg was weakening, too. She placed chairs at strategic places, tied the doors back firmly so that she could grasp the knobs, and had her husband remove all the thresholds so that she wouldn't trip as she slid along. She insisted that the children learn to dress themselves, do the dishes, and help with the cooking. As long as the church women did most of the laundry and heavy cleaning, she would not hear to having full-time help. "We'll manage" was a stock phrase in the Phillips household. She continued to attend church, and often at prayer service she would arise and count her blessings.

Four years passed, and Gene reluctantly took to the wheel chair. She had several bad falls trying to walk on her unreliable feet, so there was no other solution. One afternoon, while the children were at school, she fell on the kitchen floor. Unable to get up, but unwilling to spend several hours doing nothing constructive, she wiggled over to where a damp cloth lay that she had been using to clean shelves and, with her one good hand, washed the baseboard as far as she could reach. This is one part of the house-cleaning routine I had always dreaded, but somehow it has never seemed such a chore since then.

I WAS SHOCKED one day to find that her left arm had slipped completely out of the shoulder socket. The weight of it caused her great discomfort, and often she would ask me to pick up her hand and place it in her lap so there would be less pull. After she stopped walking, her feet would swell and turn a sort of bluish purple as they dangled lifelessly from the chair. "Lifelessly" is hardly the right adverb, because sclerosis, while blocking the nerve impulse that results in motion, does not affect the sensory nerves. Gene used to say that cold felt colder, heat hotter, pain sharper, and hunger more demanding than in her pre-sclerosis days. I noticed, too, that she cried easily—and it was, for me, a horrible thing to hear. This woman, who had been my happy roommate, was now almost a total invalid, and hearing her cry was like listening to an animal caught in a trap—a desperate, frantic cry.

I remember one day, as I was cleaning in another room, I heard her sobbing. Running to her I asked, "What's the matter, Genie?" But she could manage only enough breath to say, "Move." I thought she wanted her chair moved—but that wasn't it. So I moved her feet to another position; still she sobbed. Not knowing what else to do I stood behind her and began rubbing her back. Her head moved suddenly forward, and when she got her breath, she said, "It was my head. When I lean back too far I can't breathe—but I'm too weak to straighten up by myself."

As the weeks passed, I learned more and more to anticipate her needs, because—with her weakened diaphragm—speaking became increasingly difficult. This was perhaps one of the greatest blows to her; she could no longer use the telephone, and her voice was so faint she could not even awaken her husband at night to massage her muscles when they went into sudden spasms.

These were the days I had to force myself to be with her. It is a terrible thing to watch a friend die by inches. Each time I told her good-by and shut the door behind me I would shudder a little; what was happening to Gene just should not be, but it was—and I was completely unable to stop it. And then I would remember that there were many Genes in the world—and many more able-bodied people walking around without even realizing that such suffering exists. Perhaps because they have never had occasion to look on the misshapen, helpless forms of those who are invalids, they never know what tremendous faculties they possess. After watching Gene choke and gasp for breath, I know that the ability to breathe deeply and speak clearly is something to give thanks for daily.

FIVE YEARS passed, and Gene was confined to a hospital bed at home. It took two women—one by day and one by night—to care for her. In between their shifts her husband became her most efficient nurse. He was the one who could best understand her halting words as speech became more and more difficult. He did all that he could to make life as pleasant as possible for her—from placing the air-conditioner where she would get maximum benefit from it during the hot months to hanging an electric clock where she could best see it from her bed. He did something even more important—he gave her daily reassurance of his concern for her, and he was affectionate. More than once I have seen him pick up one of her emaciated hands, pat it, and ask, "Anything I can do for you, Honey, before I leave?" The part of the marriage vow that goes ". . . to love and to cherish, in sickness and in health," has taken on new meaning for me since watching Phil in those tender moments.

Inevitably the day came when Gene had to be taken to the hospital. Her labored breathing called for oxygen, and her nonfunctioning throat muscles necessitated intravenous feeding. Communication was almost impossible until Phil hit upon the idea of going through the alphabet, letter by letter, with instruction to Gene to blink her eyes "yes" when he came to the right letter, thus spelling out a word at a time until she could get her message across.

This morning Genie died. It is sad when a much-needed wife, mother, nurse, and church worker is taken, but with many of her other friends I have said, "I'm glad her suffering is over." And this brings to me a new appreciation for death. What a wise provision in the eternal plan that physical suffering can be terminated! How terrifying it would be if there were no release from incurable afflictions!

I look again at my hands on the typewriter and remember those first words of thanksgiving I offered as I walked from my stricken friend's house. Life is very kind to me, and for this blessing I am grateful. Yet when I think of Gene's newly-found peace after her years of suffering, I know that she, too, has received a blessing.

Thanking God

"Train up a child in the way it should go" is usually applied to the parents in teaching their little ones the way of God. Yet often it is the child who opens the way and leads the parents or even the grandparents to a closer walk with him.

Once there was a lonely little girl whose parents seldom went to church or Sunday school, yet this little one begged to be taken at every opportunity. She talked of God and Jesus often, which astonished all who heard her.

One day her mother took her to visit her grandmother living in the country. No sooner had they arrived than the child scampered away in search of her beloved animal friends in the barnyard. The mother cat with kittens, the dog, and even the pigs were a delight to her.

The grandmother watched with pride and anticipation. Soon the little one hovered over, dropped to her knees, and with face turned upward and small hands clasped before her, began to open and close her mouth. Fearfully the grandmother called to the mother, "Come quickly!"

"Patricia, what are you doing?" cried the mother.

"I'm thanking God for these baby kitties he gave me to play with," came the answer.

A little ashamedly the mother and grandmother turned away with a greater determination to walk more closely with their little one as she attempted to worship the Giver of all good things.

Thanksgiving Prayer

Our Father,
With thankfulness we set apart this day,
Aware all we deem good
Is come of Thee.

How can we best our gratitude express?
We would not have our words the only means (Words being idle when they have no deed),
But ask a keener sense so we may know the need
That we can fill, and then complying show
Our true thanksgiving.

With this illumination in our lives,
We shall live joyfully—live vitally.
Thou gavest life, and we Treat reverently all life
Because it is Thy gift.

Thou gavest life
But left it for us here,
Who, having it abundantly,
May share
And in the sharing see
That no man has a need unfilled.

Then shall all men of earth
As at one table bow
And truly thank Thee.

Church Women in the News

Carol Lowery – Jane Rowe

Author and Compiler of Book of Poetry

RECENTLY FEATURED in the Little Rock (Arkansas) Democrat and the Paris (Tennessee) Post-Intelligencer, was the story of two sisters, Mrs. Carol Lynn Lowery and Miss Jane Rowe, and a book of poetry which is the result of their mutual efforts. The book, Carol Lynn, contains a collection of poems written by Mrs. Lowery, who has been blind since birth. This was prepared and submitted to the publisher by Miss Rowe, an employee in the guest relations department of the American Broadcasting System in New York City. The little volume is now available at numerous bookstores, including Herald House.

Carol was first "in the news" at the age of three, when it was discovered that she had an amazing vocabulary of over 2,000 words. After high school she attended Graceland College, Henderson State Teachers College, and the Southwest Rehabilitation Center for the Blind. In 1954 she was married to Calvin Lowery, a graduate of the Arkansas School for the Blind; they have one child, a son, who was born with normal vision. Their home is in Mansfield, Tennessee.

Both Carol and Jane became members of the Reorganized Church on July 22, 1951, when they were living in Creston, Iowa. A year later, following the death of their father, they moved from Iowa to Arkansas, where their mother, Mrs. Stella Rowe, still resides. Although Carol is unable to attend services because she and her husband live fifteen miles from the nearest branch, she continues to serve the church by proofreading Braille manuscripts for the Department of Religious Education. At present she is working on The Story of the Church.

The two sisters are the only members of their family who belong to the Reorganized Church; however, it was with their parents' consent that they joined.

Jane, who is studying art and dancing while working in New York, won the award as the outstanding feminine juvenile star of the 1956-57 season at the Community Theater in Little Rock.

A copy of the book was produced in Braille for Carol by the Lighthouse for the Blind. The fifty-five selections used in it begin with verses she wrote as a child and end with those written after she became a wife and mother. She is now twenty-five years old.

These lines from "Compensation," the final poem in her book, reveal the moving sensitivity of her work:

Two old wives sit by their winter fire
And softly talk of me:
"Did you know she's blind?" "Why, no!"
"Oh, I don't know what I'd do
If I couldn't see."
You would feel, I think with quiet tolerance,
The contours of the earth beneath your feet,
The hot confusion of a city street,
The tranquil coolness of a rural plain. . . .
"Do you think," one of the old wives asks,
"That if she were to go to church and pray,
God would have mercy and would make her whole?"
"Perhaps, for such things have been done before."
And I think: How could I be so greedy
As to ask for more
When I have already the throbbing rhythm of music
Shaking the very foundation of my soul,
The smell of the earth in the early morning,
The breathless thrill of a summer night,
When young love is trembling at its beginning,
The warm surrender of being kissed?
With all these things, how could I beg my God
To give me the very little I have missed?

(A review of the book appears on page 18 of this issue.)

"Carol Lynn"

By Carol Lynn Rowe Lowery

This is a unique collection of poems by a blind woman whose sensitivity and beauty of soul gives her the power to "see" many things that the sighted will never see.

Written from her sixth year on (she is now twenty-five), her poetry demonstrates her growth both as a person and a poet. She writes not only of sounds, fragrances and of things that can be touched, but of such silent and unreachable wonders as clouds and stars, of love and despair, of birth and death. But most of all she writes of LIFE!

Crusade Report from Chicago

Prayer, planning, and publicity bring results to Chicago evangelistic program

A GROUP of Chicago priesthood members met to discuss the evangelistic program of their Chicago congregations in October, 1957. They represented the Brainerd Branch and its two missions, Homewood and LeClaire Courts. The question which many asked was "What can we do that has worked elsewhere and that has never been tried in Chicago? We want something that will work here." Elbert Boren, Brainerd pastor, had been cultivating an idea for several months and was waiting for an opportunity to present it. This seemed like the proper time.

Why Not Have a Crusade?

For the past several years the Herald had been giving excellent publicity to the crusades held throughout the United States and Canada. They had proved successful in every area. Enthusiastic testimony was also spread by any who had worked at or had attended them. Good converts always resulted. Many new contacts had been made from those who attended, and cottage meetings were set in operation. Goodly numbers filed tithing statements. Financially, the crusades were always self-supporting and ended with a surplus for future missionary expansion. With this introduction, Brother Boren enthusiastically suggested, "Why not have a crusade?"

Initial Preparation

It was important to select a speaker. Correspondence was directed to the apostles concerned; since those in charge were requesting a speaker out of their own apostolic field it would be slightly more difficult to clear. Other responsibilities and assignments made it apparently impossible to acquire the speaker they had requested. Yet they continued their plans, feeling confident that all would work out well. March Joint Council sessions affected some changes in appointee personnel. Apostle Williams immediately suggested I contact Elbert Boren and District President Lyle Woodstock, and complete plans for this anticipated endeavor.

Several contacts were made by mail and telephone to establish the dates and set up committees of responsibilities. By the first of June, when I had my first opportunity to meet with these congregations and committees, a lot of work already had been done. Enthusiasm was high, pointing to greater growth. In June final plans were made. The work of the committees was discussed. Advertising was planned. Goals were established. Sights were lifted prayerfully. We were on the way.

Publicity and Literature

With the complete support of District President Lyle Woodstock, Elbert Boren, John Cooper, and their workers went to work on publicity. A series of letters was mailed to all the members and a number of friends. The branch and district papers also carried announcements of the imminent crusade. Newspapers were employed in further advertising.

Several thousand folders were printed and distributed by mail and by personal contact. Silk-screened banners were prepared announcing the crusade and made available for automobiles. During the crusade it was not unusual even in a city the size of Chicago to drive up to an automobile with such a banner on its bumper.

Telephone committees went to work making contacts daily. An elderly Saint, Sister Sarah Baton (eighty-six years old), wanted to help. She was placed on the telephone committee and made phone calls day after day covering several pages in the Chicago Telephone Directory. During the crusade she was in attendance one hour early every night. She never missed a service.

Some of the best publicity was the daily enthusiasm of many people who were busy inviting friends to attend. In addition, nightly bulletins were attractively prepared throughout the entire crusade.

A selection of fifty-five hundred tracts was ordered from Herald House and distributed free along with twenty complimentary copies of the Book of Mormon during the evangelistic activity. A bookstore was also set up; in it almost two hundred dollars worth of Herald House books dealing with our message was sold. The distinctives of the Restoration were clearly revealed in this excellent missionary literature.

Brother Boren said, "This concerted effort brought the name of the church to a great number of people who had no previous contact with the church. We purchased radio time for a series of four Sunday broadcasts, bringing to the people of Chicago a distinctive message as well as an invitation to attend the crusade."

One of the great facets of publicity employed was the excellent planning of a men's banquet in August and a women's banquet in September, at which time I was present to speak. In addition to the contacts, these banquets provided almost six hundred dollars toward the crusade expenses.

Into the Crusade

Plans were well deliberated; enthusiasm had continued to mount; numerous contacts had been made; the night toward which all this activity was directed was upon us—September 7 had arrived. Some had wondered if we should have rented the Calumet High School Auditorium or if we should have tried our first crusade in one of our church buildings. More and more cars drove up; more and more people filed into the school auditorium. Finally a deacon said, "We have more people here than could fit into any one of our Chicago churches." Optimism was justified in that hour; the attendance reached near four hundred in comparison to previous series high of one hundred and twenty-five. Throughout each night the attendance was higher than could have been accommodated in our Chicago churches.

Visitors from eleven states and one United States Territory attended. The attendance cards revealed they came from Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Florida, California, Arizona, and Hawaii. A couple from Pennsylvania were on vacation at Chicago and never missed a night of the crusade.

A couple who attended the Kansas City crusade in March were in attendance on the opening night in Chicago. A couple who attended the Middletown, Ohio, crusade in February were in Independence when they read the announcement of the Chicago Crusade in the Herald. They returned to Middletown by way of Chicago in order to attend the opening service and leave their good wishes and prayers.

Another young couple from southern Illinois took their vacation during the Chicago endeavor because they wanted to bring a nonmember relative from Chicago to the crusade. Many such testimonies of support and devotion could be added to this report.

Problem

We faced a major problem on the opening night of our endeavor. The building had extremely bad acoustics. The reverberations threatened to destroy the efforts toward which so many had devotedly exerted themselves. The next night a group of elders met to appeal to Him who has separated waters, stilled seas, spoken from a flaming bush, and whose glory is eternally revealed. These elders felt that a change of location would destroy some of the continuity and effect of our advertising. Prayers of appeal in deep humility and devotion were directed to the God of miracles. Each man there knelt and prayed, believing. During the ensuing days what had been a problem became a great force for the unification of the people present as they evidenced a common concern over a common problem. Although the problem prevailed slightly, the power of God was magnified to such an extent that all who desired had no problem in hearing the sermons and prayers and in entering wholeheartedly into the spirit of worship. Testimonies were given by many in reference to what they considered a miracle.

The spirit of the Almighty was prominent every night. The co-operation of the workers was commendable. Each knew his or her job and did it well. The eager missionary experience and enthusiasm of Seventies Lou Zonker and James Everett were immeasurably valuable. The full co-operation and assistance of District President Lyle Woodstock were commendable. The zeal of Bishop James Burdick was contributory to success. Elbert Boren and John Cooper, who headed up the crusade, seemed indefatigable. The full support of all Chicago pastors and congregations expanded the crusade into a city-wide experience. Teamwork was at its best. Results were assured. God would surely bless these fine workers and their efforts—and bless them he did!

Results

Eleven decisions were secured for baptism. Brainerd reports an increase of 10 per cent in membership by baptisms so far this year.

Twenty requests for assistance in filing tithing statements were secured. Bishop Burdick was on the job eager to offer assistance. He reports a 15 per cent increase in tithe filers in the Chicago District this year.

One teacher who never fully understood tithing statements expressed his personal appreciation for the crusade which brought him the desire to be a better steward; this resulted in the filing of his first statement. He then went to the pastor requesting the names of all who have not filed so he can visit them to bear testimony of the joy which came to him and his companion when they complied with this law of the celestial kingdom.

Friendship cards revealed that at least 149 nonmember friends heard and were challenged by the distinctive message of the Restoration. These are being contacted in follow-up ministry. Seven cottage meetings were arranged to begin immediately following the crusade. This will keep a good core of priesthood busy in evangelism for some time. This large group of nonmembers represented 21 Lutherans, 12 Roman Catholics, 10 Methodists, 9 Presbyterians, 7 Baptists, 6 United Brethren, 5 members of the Community Church, 3 Christians, 2 Congregationalists, 2 of the Reformed Church, 1 of the Salvation Army, 1 Unitarian, and 70 who listed no church membership. What an opportunity for future evangelism!

Members and nonmembers alike wrote dedicatory statements on the backs of their friendship cards. It was most encouraging to read of a request for baptism, or help to file a tithing statement, or a priesthood member's desire to improve his priesthood stewardship, or parents wishing to dedicate their homes and children to the preparation needed for greater contributions to the restored church. There were 231 such testimonies written besides the many expressed.

Advertising

A city the size of Chicago made necessary a lot of advertising to give adequate coverage. The total costs approximated $2,000. Yet the entire expense was met and a surplus of almost one fifth that amount was realized to expand evangelism in that area.

The spirit of God like a fire is still burning. Our cities can be evangelized with effort, appropriations, faith, and zealous teamwork. Chicago's goals are now higher. A priesthood Communion service on the last Saturday night saw 67 per cent of the district's priesthood members in attendance. They were unanimous in their desire to see a crusade become an annual event in Chicago. Plans are underway for such an activity in 1959. The 1959 crusade will be established upon the results of this past experience and the dedications of the priesthood met in the final Communion dedication service where every man bore testimony of his desire to fulfill his calling. Elbert Boren, reporting the crusade to Apostle Williams, was enthusiastic.

Elbert Boren's Report

The original intent of the crusade was to bring about increased interest in missionary activity of the branch, but most important to bring about a unification of the Brainerd congregation and priesthood. This has been accomplished in a most dramatic manner—dramatic not so much in the method but in the extent of unification. . . . For the first time I can see Brainerd membership and priesthood attempting to fit into the total picture. Priesthood members found the importance of their calling—particularly the deacons, who now realize the contribution they can make in the total picture of the branch as they fulfill the duties of their office.

To hear our message on the radio for the first time, to feel the enthusiasm of nonmembers concerning our message as it was preached, to see the general acceptance of the invitations that were presented to nonmembers, and to recognize that they are but a part of a larger organization, these have led this congregation to a much greater appreciation of its church—an appreciation that is filled with enthusiasm to share.

For myself I have received a recognition of the need for increased activity, a hunger on the part of a great many people as they search for the truth of our message, and most of all, a recognition of the power of God to support and direct all of us if we but seek him humbly and in complete dedication. All the heartaches and weariness of the months of preparation have been forgotten in the new found joy that has come to me and my family as we have dedicated our time and efforts to this endeavor.

Graceland Gazette

■ President Harvey H. Grice; Don Booz, Director of Public Relations and Development; and Aaron Coonce, chairman of the Graceland College Development Council, have returned from a trip to the west coast. The purpose of the trip was to meet with the West Coast Regional Development Council, to give people an opportunity to meet Dr. Grice who in turn appeared at various alumni gatherings and banquets, and to hold meetings with friends of Graceland to interpret future plans of the college as well as its current programs. The trip included fifteen cities.

The West Coast Regional Development Council, which is one of the three national councils, was created by the Graceland College Board of Trustees. It comprises sixty business and professional men and women. The primary intentions of the council are to extend public relations, to promote and interpret wills and bequests, to seek information about foundation grants, and to investigate capital gifts on the annual basis. The college appreciates the support of the West Coast Council.

■ On October 24 members of the college administration and board met with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to discuss means of implementing the 150,000 dollars worth of debenture bonds given the college by the General Conference toward the construction of a new food service building and girls' dormitory. Sale of these bonds will be made through General Church channels, and the responsibility of these assets will rest with the Graceland Foundation and existing Iowa Corporations previously organized for such purpose. The Graceland Foundation and Board of Trustees will be meeting in the near future to discuss action to be taken on the sale of these bonds.

■ Irving Boll, a representative of the German government and a former journalist, spoke to the assembly Wednesday, October 29, on "Germany in the World Today." He was introduced by Gerd Neumann, a freshman from Chicago, Illinois, but born in Kiel, Germany. Speaking of German disunity, Mr. Boll said that at present about eighteen million Germans live under Soviet rule—the cause for his country's present relationship with the United Nations. He attributed the reconstruction of Germany to the hard work of the German people, to the governmental policy, and to Marshall Plan aid from the United States.

■ Uplifting the spiritual life of the campus congregation through the ministry of music is the role played by the Graceland College Chapel Choir. The main function of this group of sixty-three students, directed by Mabel Hyde, is to sing for regular Sunday morning services, special Wednesday evening meetings, seasonal vespers, and other occasions when the services of the choir are needed.

The choir has been active during the first quarter and now looks forward to a busy schedule. Future events of the semester for the choir are a special Thanksgiving vesper service November 23 at the Lamoni church and participation in the Christmas benedictory service at the Student Center on December 17.

■ The Graceland College Concert Choir, under the direction of Henry Anderson, has a full and busy schedule again this year. The choir's calendar includes a pop concert to be given in co-operation with the orchestra in November. During the Christmas season, it will participate in the presentation of Handel's Messiah.

In the spring the choir will go on tour. The planning of this project has just begun. As the schedule permits, the choir will participate in the services held at the Lamoni church. Also occasional appearances in the campus services and assemblies are anticipated.

■ The Chanticleers, an American concert quartet, appeared in Lamoni Tuesday evening, November 4. They were sponsored by Graceland College and the Lamoni community as part of the lectures and concerts series. This vocal group is now in its sixth season and making its third consecutive coast-to-coast tour.

Singing great vocal music of many kinds and presenting it in a way which has been called "theater, in its finest sense," the Chanticleers have completely revised the concept of "male quartet." Each Chanticleer has a background rich in opera, radio, television, concert, theater, and choral work; and each voice, in contrast to the ordinary ensemble "blend," is of outstanding solo caliber.

■ The Tarkio Owls of Tarkio, Missouri, celebrated their home-coming with a 19-13 victory over the Graceland Yellow Jackets October 25. On Friday night, October 31, Graceland dumped the Drake "B" and Frosh football team, 20-13, on Graceland's home field.

Between the Covers of the Doctrine and Covenants

by Verda Bryant

cloth, $3.00

Are your children well acquainted with the revelations that govern our church today? How did Joseph Smith receive them? What are they?

Verda Bryant has written this little volume with the purpose of making the Doctrine and Covenants and its precious message understandable to our children. Since the Doctrine and Covenants itself does not tell a story, Mrs. Bryant has woven the necessary historical facts around the actual revelations in a remarkably interesting manner.

It is a fine companion book to her previous volume, Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon.

More Light on the Dead Sea Scrolls

By Millar Burrows

The Viking Press, Inc.

Price: $6.50

It has been more than ten years since the first cache was discovered (1947 or possibly 1945) of ancient documents which are now known as the Dead Sea Scrolls. During the first several years after their discovery, little was known about the Scrolls, and their value was doubtful to uncertain. In 1955 Dr. Millar Burrows, Biblical Theology Professor at Yale Divinity School, published his first book on this subject, "The Dead Sea Scrolls." Dr. Burrows now points out that his first book was out of date as soon as it was published. He states that in only two and one-half years a great exploration and translation have taken place which have made necessary this second writing.

While much of the material found in the caves at Qumran, near the northwest corner of the Dead Sea, is yet to be translated, a great amount of it has been identified and pieced together. The manuscripts are Hebrew and Aramaic, and some are on copper scrolls. They include a complete manuscript of the book of Isaiah about a thousand years older than the earliest Hebrew manuscript previously known. Several other partial manuscripts are later in date but still much older than manuscripts previously used.

To the south of Qumran a few miles is Murabbaat where several other caves have been excavated. The writings from the Qumran caves date from more than one hundred years before Christ and at least part of the manuscripts were apparently printed right on the site by a Jewish monastic community identified with the Essenes. The Murabbaat texts date from the second century after Christ but are still older than those from which much of our present Bible was printed.

The Murabbaat discoveries began in 1951, and in 1952 a third discovery was made at Mird about three miles northwest of Qumran. It contained manuscripts of the Byzantine period in several languages. At least one more location has been reported by Bedouins who were unable to return to the site. By far the richest find thus far was Cave 4 at Qumran.

The translations of the author which are included in the book are in a language much more like the one we use today than the King

James Version for example. One wonders whether the author intentionally used modern language for easiness, or whether the Jewish language of near Christ's time on earth lent itself to our expressions today. Among the translated portions, "The Genesis Apocryphon" and "The Rule of the Congregation" are very interesting. There are several bits of translations thought to comprise part of the pseudepigrapha (false-scriptural writings of some minor prophets or rulers), which nevertheless cast considerable light on more important documents.

Dr. Burrows deals very interestingly with the beliefs of the Qumran sect. One chapter is titled "God, Spirits, Angels, and Demons" and another is "Man, Sin, and Salvation." One of the most interesting discussions was in answer to the question, "Was Jesus an Essene?"

Students and others interested in this subject will find the book well worth reading.

I Believe in God

By Bishop Costen J. Harrell

Abingdon Press, 1958

Price $1.25

The chapters deal with The Reality of God, God in Nature, God in Man, God in Christ, and Faith Is the Key. Usually one would need to read hundreds of pages to cover the matter here given. The author, obviously, intended no large volume, but rather aimed to serve well with as little cost in time and money as he could. He has shared facts of inestimable worth about the Supreme Being to stimulate the reader's faith and enlarge his knowledge and reverence for God. He gives many reasons for a satisfying faith in God.

The chapters deal with such facts as "Belief in God is inescapable," "God is a person," "Is creation a product of chance or intelligence?" "Order in every detail of creation," "The soul's experience of God," "The fact of Christ," "Faith is belief, it is commitment, it is assurance, it is the key that unlocks God's treasures of grace, it is the gleam that lights our way until we come to the City of God."

This book is of value to ministers, teachers, and readers of every walk in life. It is vital reading for the Christian or the investigator. I take pleasure in recommending it without reservation for all.

Reaching People from the Pulpit

By Dwight E. Stevenson and Charles F. Diehl

Harper and Brothers

Price: $3.00

This book deserves a prominent place in the library of every preaching minister. Dealing with effective sermon delivery, the authors have skillfully woven physical, mental, and spiritual factors into a delightful presentation.

Each chapter covers a separate topic but does so in such a flowing manner as to eliminate any possibility of abruptness or disunity between chapters. Exceptionally interesting are Chapters 7 and 9: "What Are You Saying Emotionally?" and "The Creative Moment of Delivery." An excerpt from Chapter 7, page 75, exemplifies the type of guidance and counsel offered throughout (on constructive criticism): "There is a rule of thumb which may prove useful: If you find yourself taking pleasure in criticizing your 'friend,' you are secretly wounding him for your own gratification; but if you find it difficult to criticize him, if you feel compelled to do it in his interest but against your own inclinations, you are probably helping him. You cannot knock a man down as long as you have your arm around him."

Reaching People from the Pulpit encourages a never-ending program of development and improvement. Included in its contents are "A Self-help Program for Individuals," appendixes of rating sheets and speech improvement exercises, and an admirable bibliography.

Carol Lynn

By Carol Lynn Rowe Lowery

Exposition Press, 1958

Price: $2.50

This is a collection book for your library. It is personal and warm and inspiring. Written by a blind girl, it is a self-portrait of life as she has viewed it from childhood into the maturity of marriage and motherhood. Mrs. Lowery is twenty-five now, is married to a sightless man, and has a two-year-old boy who has normal vision. From these experiences she has written the poems contained in this fifty-four page book.

The verses written as a child of six grow and expand in understanding and completeness until a loveliness of expression forms the balance of the poems collected in this volume. There is a quality of sensitivity and naïvete that the reader comes to enjoy and look for.

Sighted people can learn of beauties surrounding them they may miss without the "eyes" of this sightless observer of life. She reveals her feelings toward life and the complex situations confronted by us all as if she were standing next to them and analyzing them for their true value.

You will not consider this a volume of worship poetry, but you will find yourself selecting it from among your other books time and again to learn of worship. In many respects it is a self-portrait of all persons, sorted out and reflected in one individual.

A Serviceman's Tribute to Ft. Worth Branch

THE FELLOWSHIP of the Saints as demonstrated to visiting servicemen by the Fort Worth, Texas, congregation is beautifully described in the following extract from a letter to the Committee on Ministry to Armed Forces Personnel.

Since my arrival, I've been able to attend church regularly with the Saints of the Fort Worth Branch, which is fifty-two miles east of the camp. I was welcomed warmly into their congregation, and the joy of being able to worship with them—along with the feeling of close comradeship that is so much a part of our church—far surpasses any sacrifice I have to make in attending. This past Sunday was exceptionally pleasing, for at my invitation one of the officers in my class (not a member of the church) went with me to our church. Not only was he warmly received, but we both were invited to eat potluck dinner with the group after the eleven o'clock service. Much later as we were driving home he mentioned how overwhelmed he was with the reception, how close the people were to one another, and what a wonderful spirit of love for their fellow man they had. He went on to say that he had never really found this before in any church that he has attended. I've been explaining the restored gospel to him as best I can and, although he has made no commitments, he is willing to listen, and sometimes that is half the battle in conversion. I'm going to continue extending the invitation to him to attend church with me in the hope that someday he will be motivated to accept our doctrine and become a member of our church.—1st Lt. Kent W. Bennetts, MSC.

Until recently, Lt. Bennetts served as commanding officer of the Medical Detachment of an AAA Missile Battalion near Pittsburgh where he was active in the North Hills mission. His new assignment has taken him to Camp Wolters, where he is learning to fly the "windmills" in a course in helicopter aviation. He describes his schedule in these words:

The hours are pretty arduous; built around the familiar quotation, "Early to bed, and early to rise. . . ." We are up at the crack of dawn and on the flight line warming up the ships at 6:20 A.M. Then in the afternoon we attend classes until 6:40 P.M., so this makes a well-rounded thirteen-hour day. By the time we've settled down for the evening, it's time to go to bed. Fortunately, Saturdays and Sundays are left open to use as we see fit.

From Camp Wolters he expects to go to Fort Rucker, Alabama, for a like period of time, then, when graduated, to receive a permanent assignment.

Lt. Bennetts is typical of our many members in military service who work under heavy pressures during the week (and often during the week ends) and who are hungry for opportunities to worship.

Blessed are the Saints who minister to these men, for they also shall be ministered to.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Sarratt of Independence, Missouri, observed their golden wedding anniversary on September 28 at their home; over two hundred friends and relatives were present for the occasion. They were married September 27, 1908, in Nebraska City, Nebraska. They lived in Strong and Geneva, Nebraska, for eleven years, and in Genoa, Colorado, for seven years before moving to Independence in 1926. Both have been members of the Reorganized Church over fifty years. Brother Sarratt was ordained a priest in 1924 and an elder in 1939. He served as counselor to the pastor of Second Church for six years. Sister Sarratt has served as women's leader, choir member, and church school worker.

Four of their five children were with them on their fiftieth wedding anniversary: Corlyn and Amos Sarratt, Adys Lewis, and Helen Snow, all of Independence. Also present were their twin granddaughters, Claudia and Sylvia Lewis. A daughter, Verneal Sarratt of Vista, California, was unable to attend.

Memories of Israel A. Smith

I have known of the Smith family since I was a child. My parents often spoke of Young Joseph and his sons, and I read of them in church literature. It was not until the General Conference of 1954, however, that I was privileged to meet any of them. One evening I was sitting on the front row when Brother Israel passed. I arose and spoke his name, and he greeted me warmly. I said, "Brother Israel, I would also like to meet Elbert Smith. I have read his articles and books since I was a young girl." He said, "Why not meet him now, he is on the platform." He took my arm and guided me to Brother Elbert, who arose, bowed, and spoke to me. Then Brother Israel led me back to my seat before returning to the platform. I have never, since that time, felt unimportant in or to the church.

I know that the whole church was saddened and shocked by his tragic death. I feel it a great loss also, but though he is gone, the occasion of my meeting him remains a vivid, pleasant memory.

God Was There

My husband, the late Calvin Sears, former pastor of New Haven Branch, told me of an experience he had after attending a priesthood institute held in Independence. The classes and services had been inspiring, and as he rode home on the train he thought of the fine experiences he had had. He had his brief case beside him on the seat and was about to take some of the books out to read when a man came along and spoke to him. Calvin invited him to share the seat. He was a businessman on his way home, and they talked on various subjects. Finally the man asked Calvin what he did for a living, and Calvin replied that he worked for the New Haven Railroad as a civil engineer. The man said, "But you don't work at that all the time, do you? I thought you were a minister." Calvin was dressed in an ordinary business suit, so the man could not have come to the conclusion because of what he was wearing. "I am a minister," he said, "but not a full-time one. I do not receive pay for the work I do in the ministry." Then he showed the man his elder's card and asked, "Why did you think I was a minister? I'm not dressed in clerical garb." The man answered, "But you have been talking with God."

"Why do you say that?" Calvin asked. And the man replied, "Because it shows in your face. Your whole personality shines from your experience."

Calvin told me when he arrived home that he wasn't surprised at what the man said, for truly God was at the institute with those who gathered there.

Helped by Administration

Recently I had an experience that strengthened my faith. After X rays and laboratory tests, I was scheduled for surgery. However, the evening before I was to have the operation, I called for the elders to administer to me. The main theme of their prayers was that the doctors might be guided to do what was best and that I might have a testimony. The doctors consulted again that night and, upon restudying the X rays, decided that the operation was unnecessary. They kept me in the hospital for treatment, however, and later said I should have a blood transfusion. I couldn't see that I needed it, so I asked if it were absolutely necessary. The doctor said, "Yes, definitely." The morning I was supposed to receive it he took another blood test. The verdict then was that I didn't need the transfusion.

The day the doctors came to my room when I was to have had surgery, I said, "You may not believe that a higher power directs men today, but you doctors were divinely directed last night during your consultation." One of them said, "We know it." The other agreed.

I don't believe I would be here now had I not called the elders. God has been very good to me all through my life. Though at times my prayers seemingly have gone unheard, this has been for my own good. Please pray that I may help to bring cheer and comfort to others, and in this way repay my Master for his kindness to me.

During these years you have given valuable service and faithful attendance at the meetings of the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital; you have served on the medical staff of the hospital; you have contributed in a most valuable way in consultation on the work of the hospital, its expansion and development; you have served as an instructor of nurses in the School of Nursing; you have been generous far beyond the call of duty in caring for missionaries and General Church personnel; you have served devotedly in many lines of committee work. And beyond all your many medical duties and services, you have been the good and kindly friend, the wise counselor, the sympathetic and understanding companion of many people.

It is your distinction to have served as the last officer of the church to bear the appointment of General Church Physician; and we rejoice that, although your labors are to be lightened, the church is not to be deprived of the benefits of your counsel, for you will serve under appointment as a member of the newly formed Medical Council.

At this time we wish you to be assured of the warm appreciation and the abiding gratitude of the church, of the General Conference, and of the officers and members that you have served so long and so well.

It is our privilege to thank you and wish you well, trusting that you will be blessed in the spirit of the ideals you have served and the Power you have served so faithfully.

In highest esteem, fraternity, and affection.

G. L. DELAPP

HERE IS SOMETHING NEW

A certificate of appreciation to be presented upon acceptance of new responsibilities. It contains useful suggestions to help new workers grow in spiritual leadership.

It should be presented at the installation service. It is appropriate for branch and mission installation services, and for departmental installations (women, Zion's League, church school, and other groups).

Printed on parchment, it is a lovely reminder of your church's recognition of service, and of responsibilities in new office.

TRACT REVIEW

Latter Day Saints and What They Believe

A. B. Phillips, distinguished writer and research historian, is the author of this tract. It has been a favorite for more than thirty years and, until the past five years, was one of the "Angel Message Series." Because of its enduring qualities, it has been continued as a separate tract since the discontinuation of that series.

Now in a pocket-size edition of 32 pages, this tract deftly summarizes the most important history, doctrine, and teachings of the Restoration movement.

Brother Phillips first asks the reader to inquire of Latter Day Saints rather than their enemies if they would truly like to know what Latter Day Saints believe. He points out, "Error and ignorance have led to untold misery, superstition, and disappointment in every age. Knowledge of the truth has led to progress, prosperity, uprightness, brotherhood, and salvation. It is gain, and not loss, to investigate and learn the truth."

From that beginning he unfolds the story of the Restoration and discusses the beliefs of the church. The subdivisions of the tract include the following titles: Spiritual Darkness in the Apostasy, How the Gospel Was Restored, Error in the Creeds, Church of Jesus Christ Restored, Restoration Foretold in Scripture, The Name of the Church, Why Called Latter Day Saints, Our Claims Upheld in Court, The Prophet's Successor, What the Restoration Restored, An Ancient Sacred Record, and many other subjects.

Single copy price is 14 cents. In quantities of 1000, this price is reduced to 7 cents each.

MAKE-BELIEVE RELIGION

Two little girls were playing "lady." This cannot be done by little girls without costumes. Some dresses, shoes, and hats cast off by the older members of the family served their purpose. It did not even make a difference to one little lady that she had the right shoe on the left foot.

But what a difference a dozen more years will make! Some adults like to play church. They dress up and give the Lord those Sundays when it is not appropriate to visit at Grandma's, to go fishing, or do yard work. But when one does put in an appearance on Easter, Christmas, or Communion Sunday, it is important to have the right hair-do, the advanced-season hat, the correct tie, and it makes quite a difference which shoe the foot is in.

New Apostles Begin Work

Changes in Council Affect Hanson, Hield, Gleazer, Williams, Draper, Cole, and Neff

NOT LONG AFTER the last gavel fell to adjourn the 1958 General Conference, members of the Council of Twelve were leaving for their field assignments. In the group were some new faces, and some familiar ones were missing.

The new faces are those of Charles D. Neff and Clifford A. Cole who were ordained apostles at the General Conference. Missing from the Council are Maurice L. Draper, who became a member of the First Presidency, and Apostles Paul M. Hanson, E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and D. T. Williams, who were honorably released.

New president of the Council of Twelve, filling the vacancy left by Apostle Hanson, is Apostle Charles R. Hield. He has been a member of the Council for twenty years and previously served as its secretary. Apostle Arthur Oakman is the new council secretary.

Apostle Neff was formerly an assistant to the First Presidency. He is now the apostle in charge for the Central Stakes Mission, in addition to several districts in Iowa, Illinois, and Nebraska, and the Missouri Missionary Development Area.

Through his wife Brother Neff was converted to the church and baptized just twelve years ago. He served as an appointee pastor in Omaha, Nebraska, for four years. As an assistant to the First Presidency his duties included making arrangements for the huge General Conferences, preparing the Pastor's Handbook each year, and heading the Committee on Ministry to Armed Forces Personnel.

Apostle Cole is assigned to Ontario, Canada, and Michigan. He was formerly Director of the Department of Religious Education. During the five years that he was head of the department he saw its personnel increase, an extensive curriculum research project almost completed, and many new materials developed.

Brother Cole has also served as Northwest Iowa District president and Dean of Graceland College.

The three men released from the Council of Twelve continue to labor under Conference appointment. Brother Hanson will work under the direction of the First Presidency as a high priest. Brothers Gleazer and Williams were ordained to the Order of Evangelists.

Did God Say "No"?

ONE OF THE MOST helpful and comforting assurances which any soul can have is that God loves him. Because man knows his own failures and weaknesses, it is hard for him to believe that God could even be concerned about him. Yet it is a satisfying thought that God really cares. Therefore one tries to believe, to have faith. Such faith gives dignity to the human flesh and lends an upward pull to the spirit of man.

This faith grows by what it feeds on. If nurtured by the testimonies of those who have had experiences with divine powers and speak with conviction, one's faith becomes steadfast and strong. He begins to see evidences of divine love in his own life which were overlooked or discounted before. Then man usually begins to ask for more evidences and more assurances of God's love. When he can point to answered prayers, he testifies with joyous heart. He "knows" that God loves him because he asked for certain blessings and they were received.

Then comes the searching question, If answered prayer proves there is a God of love, then does unanswered prayer prove the opposite? Isn't there the possibility that God heard and answered, and that the answer was "No"? Isn't it childish to think that our heavenly Father loves us only when he gives us our way or grants us the things we think we want?

In the field of logic it takes just as positive evidence to deny a thing as it does to affirm it. God is under no covenant obligation to speak or to perform a miracle. He cannot be tempted to give a personal demonstration of power because of pity or our promises.

Jesus emphasized this when he was taken by the Spirit to a pinnacle of the temple and invited by Satan to cast himself down, "For it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." Jesus answered, "It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

Many times we rush into prayer when emotionally upset and implore God to speak to us or to miraculously heal a loved one or to change another's mental set which seems to be wrong. Intelligent prayer does not come out of a hysterical mind. The ground on which we stand when we talk to God is holy.

"Men ought always to pray and not to faint," said Jesus. This does not say we should always be praying. Neither should we pray only when we feel weak or faint. He was encouraging those who felt helpless and inadequate to seek divine aid. "Ask and ye shall receive." James warns, "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering."

ONE SISTER told me that she "never bothered God with trivial things." But when she got up against a stone wall, she prayed and God heard her. I asked her if she didn't think there might be fewer "stone walls" if she prayed more often. I refrained from asking her if God didn't say "No" sometimes.

Members of this church need to remind themselves of the Lord's rebuke (Section 98: 3, given December 16, 1883) to those who had "envyings, and strifes and lustful and covetous desires among them." As a result of the deviations God was "slow to hearken unto their prayers." Then follows this significant indictment: "In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me."

AS GOD'S CHILDREN we should keep in mind that he wants to open the windows of heaven and pour out spiritual blessings. Jesus once asked, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?"

Why does he have to say "No"? Take a look around you. What happens to children and grandchildren who get everything they ask for and many things they do not ask for? Spoiling children is a favorite pastime of some otherwise well-meaning people. God has made rewards conditioned on works. He is no respecter of persons. To grant special favors to the unworthy (God being the judge) is to confirm them in their evil ways. No doubt blessings come to sinners, notwithstanding their waywardness, because of their needs and their potentials. But there must be a close relation between righteousness and blessings. James affirms, "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (James 5: 16).

Back in the days when waywardness in boys was referred to as "sowing wild oats," a friend was trying to convince himself and confuse me by arguing that his father loved him

Baptismal Report for September

There were 535 baptismal reports received in the Department of Statistics in September, 1958. This is 41 more than were received in September of last year. There have been 4,092 baptismal reports received in the first nine months of 1958. This is 84 baptisms less than were received in the same period last year. OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

On October 24 a meeting of staff members of the five church institutions met for a luncheon conference at the Sanitarium.

Brother A. Neal Deaver was the host and moderated the discussion on mutual problems. Each person was given an opportunity to see where he might better fit in the over-all program.

Graceland was represented by President Harvey Grice, Vice-president James White, Publicity Director Don Booz, and Dean Harold Condit.

The School of the Restoration was represented by its director, L. Wayne Updike.

Herald House was represented by Manager Kenneth Graham and Managing Editor C. B. Hartshorn.

The Sanitarium and Hospital was represented by the Administrator A. Neal Deaver and Chaplain Robert Farnham.

The School of Nursing was represented by Miss Nelle Morgan, director of nursing, and Miss Vida Butterworth, educational director.

At the end of a three-hour session it was generally agreed that future meetings should be planned. President Grice and Director Updike were asked to assume the responsibility for setting the date and planning the agenda.

Notice has been received that the Plano (Illinois) Branch celebrated the ninetieth anniversary of the dedication of its church Sunday, November 23. Elder Evan A. Fry, General Church historian, was guest speaker at one of the services. Plano is known as the cradle of the Reorganization, and this building was the first one built under the Reorganization.

The Aurora Beacon-News devoted a cover page and two additional pages in its November 15 issue to pictures and story of the birth and growth of the Plano church.

Elder O. C. Henson, Jr., appointee in Florida, writes of the recent organization of a new district there:

The Central Florida District was organized November 2, 1958 (to become effective January 1, 1959), with Apostle R. E. Davey presiding. There were one hundred and fifty persons in attendance, representing the six congregations within the district boundaries. There was a very fine spirit of fellowship and expectancy.

The Jacksonville Branch was organized October 26, and we are looking forward to the organization of the St. Petersburg Branch on November 9. This brings to a total of five the branches that have been organized in the past thirty months in this area. This is indicative of the growth taking place in Florida.

There are some areas in which we are experiencing phenomenal growth. The Ft. Lauderdale Branch, for instance, has doubled in membership since its organization over two years ago. The newly organized Jacksonville Branch has been experiencing both growth and stability in a very commendable way, as is also true with the Orlando Branch. There have been many persons of excellent quality baptized into the church through this period of time.

Without a doubt there is a greater spirit of anticipation and devotion throughout this area since General Conference.

Deadline for New Church Directory

December 5 is the last date that information for the 1959 Church Directory can be received. This information is usually supplied by district and stake presidents, but if a local pastor has information of changes that has not yet been forwarded to the district president he may send this directly to "Church Directory, Herald House, Box 477, Independence, Missouri." The name and address of the pastor and the address of the church building or meeting place should be included.

Death of J. N. Muir

Word has been received of the death of J. N. Muir of Port Huron, Michigan. Brother Muir was an elder for about forty-five years and was an important factor in the development of the Port Huron and Flint-Port Huron Districts. Until five years ago he served as bishop's agent in the Port Huron District—a tenure of thirty-one years.

The Continuing Challenges of the Gathering

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion.

IN THE FEW YEARS that I have devoted to the study of the purposes of God, I have found one passage of Scripture which has been particularly helpful: "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." "Zion" has always eluded a precise definition, for me, at least. Perhaps it has been the same for you. But this Scripture has given me new hope because it does not so much oblige me to build Zion, which is God's and to be created by his grace, but rather it obliges me to do things that will cause Zion to be. I have found that when I let love temper my relations with others I am in a measure causing Zion. If I am faithful in my stewardship of time, talents, and material things, I am seeking to bring forth and establish the things that cause Zion to be. I find it easier to center my attention on these definite things, because if I were simply to set out to build Zion, I would hardly know which direction to go, because I haven't yet structured it fully in my mind.

Seek . . . and Establish

Let me emphasize briefly two points of this particular introduction. The Lord says to do two things about the cause of Zion. He says to seek to bring it forth, and then establish it. I think these are two very important steps for those of us who are interested in achieving the purpose of God here in this place. We must first bring forth the cause of Zion in our own lives; establishing it comes later. We know that many things produced in life are not lasting. Unfortunately this is true of the virtues in many people's lives. Many good things are produced in a preaching service in terms of people's convictions. Many good things are produced in a worship service in regard to motivating people to be more like what God would have them to be. They are "brought forth" but unfortunately they are not "established."

More Than a Geographical Gathering

One of the causes of Zion is the Gathering. Too many times the Gathering is thought of as being merely a geographical phenomenon; in fact, I think it enters into our thinking sometimes that as far as the Gathering is concerned its fulfillment has come to us. Here in Independence we are gathered; we are together; we are in the place appointed of

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand.

And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.

—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12-14.

God. But looking through the Scriptures that deal with the Gathering and the role it is to play in the kingdom of God, we discover that something remains yet undone because the thing that the Gathering is to accomplish in the church isn't yet fully achieved nor experienced.

In studying the Scriptures that deal with the Gathering, I have been astounded to see that the majority of times the Gathering is mentioned, especially in the Bible, reference is made to something other than being together geographically. Simple geographical gathering is not a distinctive thing in our world today. In the very beginning of time God accomplished a gathering by putting Adam and Eve together. Since then men have steadily attempted to gather according to their convictions, their needs, or their mutual happiness. But in our complex society such geographical gatherings, instead of leading to unity, often promote discord because they bring people together who are not gathered intellectually. Living in close proximity they irritate one another because of their differences of opinion and points of view.

Unwilling "Children"

I like the words of Jesus found in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew. In this familiar passage Jesus is pictured in the closing days of his ministry, agonized by the willful failure of his own people to appropriate for themselves the blessings of the Gathering. In contemplating the city that he would like to be able to call his own, he says, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, ye who will kill the prophets and stone them who are sent unto you, how often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." It is of interest that Jesus talks about the Gathering and his willingness to bring together the people of Jerusalem.

At once we are confronted with a problem. There was no need for a geographical gathering here; the Jews were already gathered geographically. They lived within the confines of the city of Jerusalem and out over Judea. And yet in the great travail of his soul, Jesus said, "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but ye would not."

That analogy of the hen and chickens leads us to discover something of what he meant by the Gathering. All of us have either lived on a farm at some time or visited one and seen a mother hen with her little chicks. Often they fan out from her on their own, seeking food for themselves and exploring the world around them. We also know that as soon as the mother hen gives the signal the chickens all come running to her and gather under her wings for the protection she affords them. They all mutually understand where security can be found. Of what value would her signal be if they were not gathered intellectually? Without sharing this community of understanding they might well all run off in different directions—one under a chicken house, another under a bush somewhere, another under a tree.

One in Mind

Jesus used this analysis to attempt to point out that the thing he wished for Jerusalem was for its people to gather intellectually. He wanted their minds to be one, their loyalties one, their intentions one, their values and hopes one. They were already physically together, but they were religiously divided into sects and factions. They wouldn't fellowship with each other even within the framework of the Judaistic society. They divided off into the Pharisees, the Sadducees, the Essenes, and other antagonistic sects. They didn't value the same things. What Jesus wanted was for them to be one in mind.

I am interested in the description of the city of God in Enoch's time. We today are attempting to bring forth and establish that which Enoch and his people enjoyed. They caused Zion by distinctive living on a daily basis. In searching the description given of Enoch's Zion, I was interested to note that geographical togetherness was hardly mentioned; it was taken for granted.

"The Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind." First, they were gathered intellectually. Second, they dwelt in righteousness. Third, there were no poor among them (and that doesn't mean material poverty alone; spiritual poverty had been abolished by the disciplines of study, fellowship, worship, and service).

The Price of Unity

This idea of unity is interesting. We are always talking about it—about how the church should be one, how congregations should be unified; yet we don't mention the price that necessarily must be paid for unity. Two people who are in unity with each other are agreed as touching significant things. The only way they can achieve this state of unity is for each to abandon the opinions and ideas that might be adverse or out of harmony with the other's. That is the price of unity—but who is to say that one man's ideas are worthy of the other man's loyalty? This question has plagued both men and nations. People wonder which is right, democracy or communism. The communists seek to unite the world on their conditions; they say communism is truth, and capitalism is not. We reverse it and say no, communism must be abandoned if unity is to prevail. Both of these concepts originate with men, and who is to say that one man's idea is better than another's?

Think of the marvelous achievement these people in Enoch's time made to be able to perceive that unity was possible only at the expense of wrong ideas. The great discovery they made was that they would be united only on God's terms. Because of this marvelous discovery they produced a unified society in which God was the common denominator, but first they experienced the necessity of abandoning inadequate thought, insufficient living, and corrupted intention. No man insisted on his own will, but rather all mutually insisted on God's will, and unity became a precious by-product.

Singleness of Heart

We might investigate another attempt on the part of men to build the City of God. This occurred during the New Testament times. I am always thrilled when I read this account in the second and fourth chapters of the book of Acts. Though it consists of only about ten verses, I find inspiration in this very simple testimony that Luke wrote about the efforts of the early Christians to establish the kingdom of God on earth; "They that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common." Material things? Possibly, but it was more than that. They sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all as every man had need.

I am confident that this comment about having all things common referred primarily to material things, but I am also confident that in actual experience they had more than just the material things common. The account goes on to say that they experienced a condition called "singleness of heart"—simply one heart in the entire group. When one man suffered, all suffered with him; one man's adversity was the adversity of the group. One man's prosperity was the prosperity of the group. These people strove for singleness of heart; they had things in common, including the emotions of the soul brought about by the experiences of life. When one experienced discouragement, or a tragedy befell him, instead of others in the group saying, "My, I'm glad that isn't I," they had the insight and the spiritual power to say, "I will share this burden with my brother." Through the disciplines of love they learned how to participate in another's grief and care that another had suffered loss. When someone made a great success of some venture of consequence in the eyes of God, the others would not say, "Well, yes, he did it," while wishing they might have been the one who had. Instead they rejoiced with him, saying, "This is a victory for the kingdom of God." They had things common, and their hearts were filled with the spirit of community endeavor. They were gathered geographically, but more important they were gathered intellectually, and through this type of gathering they caused Zion.

One Divine Intention

In the latter days God has again talked about Zion in the Doctrine and Covenants. He is not going to be satisfied with anything less than total achievement. In Section 94, verse 5, he defines Zion, emphasizing the gathering of the "pure in heart."

You may ask, "How do you tie purity of heart into the idea of being gathered intellectually?" Does purity of heart mean that you don't think bad things, you don't have evil intentions? Seemingly the Apostle James struck the keynote in defining what purity of heart is. He said, "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded" (James 4: 8). When a man's heart is impure, he is double-minded. The Danish philosopher Kierkegaard has said that to be "pure in heart" is to will one thing, to have one divine intention in life, to be free from corrupting influences and contradictory intentions.

Zion is the pure in heart—a society of people who will one thing, who have one overwhelming intention in life that is uncorrupted by other loyalties. I, as every other man, must ask, "Am I pure in heart? Do I will one thing?" If I do, it best be the thing that God wills. And if I will what God wills, I am gathered to him. When another man wills the thing that God wills—not particularly the thing that I will—suddenly he discovers that he is one with me, not because I forced him to abandon his opinions in favor of mine, but because he saw the wisdom of uniting his thought-life with God, and I saw the wisdom of uniting my thought-life with God. This brings the miraculous outcome. We are one; we are gathered intellectually; and because of this we can go through life as one with God.

Dangers of Proximity

Now let us consider some of the problems that Zion could bring to us and also some of the achievements that it could make possible. You know that simply getting together geographically can cause as many disasters as it can achievements. You know that in your own home, you live in close proximity to other persons. You are gathered geographically, but you know also what agony that physical proximity brings you when you are at odds with other members of your household. Being together physically but apart intellectually is a dependable formula for conflict.

So it is in the kingdom of God. The gathering together of people can produce tragedy or great achievement. It all depends on the gathering of the minds of people. When they are united in their loyalties, their intentions, and their motivations, men can cause Zion.

It is interesting that in the eighteenth chapter of the book of Revelation the Apostle John referring to the latter days spoke of the presence of "Babylon" or "the world." Ancient Babel, as you know, was a place of confusion, and the term "Babylon" (babblers) has become synonymous with confusion. Wherever evil exists, confusion exists. The two are inseparable. John wrote that an angel will come declaring that Babylon the great has fallen. Then he added, "Come out of her, my people. Be not partakers of her plagues."

Transferring Loyalties

Despite all our modern wonders, there is very little possibility that we will be able to gather physically out of the world and establish Zion as a satellite circling the earth. But we can gather our loyalties that have been attached to the things of the world which have no eternal worth and attach them to something which does have a future.

Loyalty is like a magnet; it always seeks to attach itself to something. It can't be held in reserve; it can be transferred only from one thing to another. If we take our loyalty from one thing, saying, "I am not going to give my loyalty to that any more, I am going to hold it in reserve," we soon discover that it is taken from us and attached to something else. In gathering out of Babylon, we must quickly disattach our loyalty from the things of the world and attach them to the things of God. In our evangelistic work with our friends and neighbors, when we win their loyalty from Babylon, let us be positive that we give them something to place their loyalty in so that it will not again "slip through their fingers" and find its way back to its former attachment.

"To Put a Price On"

Our loyalties need to be gathered to the things that count—truth, honesty, stewardship. Think what could be produced through that type of gathering! I remember the Norwegian word for appreciate. At the beginning of my ministry in Norway I wanted again and again to use the correct term, but I never used the right one. Finally I asked someone who knew English and Norwegian what the word for appreciate was, and he said, "sette pris på" which means "to put a price on." That, I think, is better than English. When we appreciate anything we "put a price on it." We are saying, "This thing has value to me." We need to gather ourselves in terms of the things we put a price on. We need to gather ourselves in regards to values in life, things that make an ultimate difference, things that have a future.

I think of a story just now of a woman on the "Titanic" who, like most of the other passengers was very rich in "things." Taking the tour as a luxury, she took with her on the boat her jewels and furs so that she could participate noticeably in the social activities on board. Then suddenly, while yet at sea, came the ripping noise of the iceberg plunging its way into the bow of that ship. She was told that she had three minutes to gather her valuables, so she rushed to her room and came back—with three oranges in her hand. That was all. When she was suddenly face to face with eternity, her sense of values changed.

United Convictions

How many of us have an eye single to the glory of God? Do we face eternity realistically? Are we in a position never to have to switch our values? I think back to the Conference of 1952 when we spent a day and a half talking about whether ministers of this church should be reverends, elders, ministers, or what. For a day and a half we spent the Lord's precious time talking about whether a man ought to be "reverend," which one delegate insisted meant "terrible," or an "elder." The Kansas City Star the day after that had a long column about what the Latter Day Saints were doing in their Conference, and there it was recorded that they were talking about whether their ministers should be reverends or not. I thought, What a need to unite our convictions about things that make a difference, things that have some eternal significance.

Latter Day Saints should have a deep and abiding conviction about the value and divinity and purpose of the Book of Mormon. That conviction should be held so deeply that it becomes their first missionary tool in reaching the hearts of other peoples; for this reason it was given to the church. They should have a deep conviction about the prophetic ministry of Joseph Smith, the possibility of Zion, and the brotherhood of man. It should be so deep that it motivates extraordinary actions on their part.

Many of us are gathered geographically, but we need to consider carefully the gathering of our minds that Zion might yet be. Christ said, "This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." To comprehend God and his Son is eternal life. When we, through our lives, our study, and our deliberate effort to comprehend Christ, come to some degree of comprehension of him, we should allow that understanding to claim our loyalties. When we do, we shall have gathered our intellect, and the powers of Zion shall be released for the achievement of her treasured purpose.

Senior Adults:

Your Problem

You may be afraid of growing old, of being pushed aside by younger people, of becoming useless, and of losing your place in business, social life, and church work.

Your health isn't as good as it used to be. You no longer have the sparkling energy, the zest for life, the ability to get up and go that you formerly had. Work that you once did easily looks harder now. You have hours of depression and fear. Your bifocals are stronger; your biceps are weaker; your biscuspid are artificial. It isn't fun.

People have begun to defer to you. The young call you "brother," and you remember that their fathers and mothers called you by your first name all your life. They let you go tottering into the church door first as if you were a frail old lady. You take it sweetly on the outside, but on the inside you take it hard. It isn't their fault nor your fault, but that doesn't make it any easier to bear.

You wonder if there is anything you can do about it. There is. Quite a lot, in fact.

Forget Your Age

The best way to deal with age is to forget it. Of course you must operate within your strength and obey the doctor's orders if you want to keep on living. But don't brood or worry about your years.

Grandmother, put your shawl away in mothballs and get out of the rocking chair. Grandfather, put your cane in the hall closet and show that you can walk without one.

Stop thinking of age. Think only of life. Quit thinking about the fact that you are older than others. Once mature, the mind has no age. Keep it alive, and it will serve you to the end of your days.

Especially with younger people, assume no privileges, no superior or imaginary wisdom, no special right to respectful attention on account of your years. If you forget age and treat young people as your equal, they will forget it, too, and treat you as their equal. They are really very kind about the matter if given a chance. This makes life wonderfully exhilarating.

Never Retire

It is too dangerous. It kills some people in two years or less. It disturbs others dangerously. You may need to change jobs and take up lighter work. You may need shorter hours. You may have to switch from employment to hobbies, but keep doing something. It is good to learn something new, something different. It brightens your mind, challenges and stimulates you. A job is better than a hobby because there is an incentive in being paid for service rendered. One likes to continue contributing something to the work of the world. It is an honorable thing to do.

If a man retires and does nothing he may feel useless and lose his self-respect, his sense of importance. All his life he has gone out into the world every day, met the people, done some work. To lose this importance is serious.

Accept Humble Jobs

It isn't necessary to start at the top or to finish there. The time is long past since business schools trained young men only to be presidents of banks and railroads. There weren't enough openings.

Now they train the lads to begin low and work up.

Be willing to take a humble job. Don't say, "Put me in charge or I won't help." Whatever you do, be sure that it is well done and completely done, in the way you were asked to do it. There is no prejudice in the world against competent workmanship. A little job well done is a better recommendation than a big job botched.

Quit Repeating the Old Stories

Telling the same stories over and over again is a mark of age and senility. You are really on the shelf if you do this. Listen for the underground murmur when you start a story. If young people mutter, "Oh, oh, here we go again!" you had better cough, excuse yourself and never mention it again.

One man had told me a certain long and tedious story, containing a number of nice credit lines to himself, three times. The fourth time he came in and began to tell it, I said, "Brother, you have already told me this story three times." "Did I?" he inquired, disappointed. "Yes," I said firmly, "you did!" "Well, all right!" he said, and went right ahead and told it again. The next time he called to see me I wasn't in.

Live in the present, not in the past. Quit remembering too much. It dates you. You are not required to be prehistoric.

Quit Being Negative

Be careful not to take a gloomy, dependent view of the world. Avoid negative comments. They are signs of senescence. If you disapprove of everything, you are getting too old, and fate may soon remove you from the world of which you are too critical. In fact, you remove yourself.

Guard against Your Enemies

Your enemies are within, not outside. Fear, laziness, and stubbornness are your enemies now. Be careful, or they will get you.

We live not just in knowing, which is necessary, but in acting, too. Your gifts and works will be accepted gratefully as long as they serve the world's need, and as long as you give them in the right spirit.

Keep Learning

If you are normal and keep your sight, you can learn anything at seventy that you could learn at seventeen—that is, with the mind. The body, of course, can't do what it could when you were young.

It is only by continuing to learn that you can accommodate yourself to the rapidly changing world. New ideas, new ways, new things to do occur every day. You must be able to change or you will become obsolete and die. Adaptation is the key to life and service.

Learn from Younger People

Be willing to learn from younger people. They have ideas for the future. They speak for coming generations. Because they will inherit the future, it will be theirs when it is no longer yours.

The great Renaissance philosopher, Erasmus of Holland, said: "Although I am an old man, it will not shame me to learn from a young man, if he teaches me more evident doctrines with evangelical gentleness." The meanings of the words in that last phrase have changed in three hundred and fifty years, but the intent is clear, especially in the first part.

Be willing to take suggestions and directions from young people. If they are educated and trained, ask questions and listen to their answers. It will do you good.

It is better to admit your ignorance than to have it exposed by somebody else.

When young people find that you will listen to them, they in turn will listen to you. They are quite fair about it, generally.

Quit Bossing

It is hard for old people to quit bossing, making decisions for others who are perfectly capable of making their own decisions, always giving out "suggestions" that have a kind of imperative intent.

President and Mrs. Smith Visit Air Base

President and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith were recent guests of Major General John D. Stevenson, Commandant at Richards-Gebauer Air Force Base, near Kansas City. Colonel Sheridan, public information officer for the Central Air Defense Command, extended the invitation to make an official visit to the headquarters of this Command. During the course of the visit, President and Mrs. Smith enjoyed a most cordial discussion of the church with General Stevenson.

If old people break this rule they will find themselves left out of things. They will be left sitting at home alone with nothing to do. They must be careful of this if they wish to be kept in the current of daily life.

You Have the Power to Change

All you need is this idea, and you can take care of every other problem. Too many people say, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." That isn't true. Any dog, if he is hungry, will learn new places to find food. He doesn't need a teacher. He will find out for himself. This can be verified in experience at any time.

You are an intelligent human being, and you can learn, too. John said, "The truth will make you free." New ideas will make you free of old limitations and errors.

There is a story of a man held in a French prison for many years. Food and drink were brought to him, but otherwise nobody paid any attention to him. One day he noticed that there was no lock on his cell door. He pushed it gently, and it swung open. He walked down the hall and away to freedom. He could have done it twenty years before.

All he needed was the idea. All you need is a better idea.

Margaret Mead, a famous anthropologist, visited the Manus tribe in the Admiralty Islands of the Pacific in 1928 and 1953. In that time the people had changed from savagery to civilization. Adults had made the change—senior adults. She wrote of them in New Lives for Old in Vogue for May, 1957. She said that the adults do all the new things first, invent the new things, discover new things, and use them first. The significant fact is that anybody can change. The recognition that you have changed and that you will do so again and again is strategic. The fatal idea is to think that you cannot.

It is a matter of simple faith and direct action. If you think you're through, you are. If you think there is a lot of good service in you yet, you can find it and deliver it.

If your old career of service has come to an end, look for a new one. Study and prepare for it. Then go to work. Live while you live. Let old age wait. One man kept young until he died, simply because he forgot to get old. He by-passed senility. You don't have to be a problem in geriatrics!

INCOME TAX SAVINGS FOR CHURCH WORKERS

NONAPPOINTEE district presidents, pastors, priesthood members, women's department workers, and others who incur travel and automobile expense in connection with service to the church should familiarize themselves with their right to deduct for Federal Income Tax purposes their actual out-of-pocket expenses as a charitable contribution. The following government bulletin sets forth the basic policy of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in allowing such deductions:

You may claim a deduction for out-of-pocket expenses, for which you are not reimbursed, paid in rendering services to a qualified organization. This includes any out-of-pocket transportation expense of operating your car, as for example—gas, oil, etc., and bus fare. It includes the cost of transportation from your home to the location at which you serve. But, it does not include depreciation on your car. Reasonable expenditures for meals and lodging necessarily paid while away from home in the course of rendering donated services to the organization are also deductible. The phrase "while away from home" has the same meaning as Chapter 14.

See Your Income Tax 1958 Edition for Individuals, Treasury Department, Internal Revenue Bureau, Number 17, page 86.

The following check list will assist you in interpreting this government directive:

1. Only actual out-of-pocket expenses incurred while traveling in church service can be taken as a charitable contribution. No deduction can be taken for the value of time contributed in rendering such service.

2. Travel and out-of-town expenses while on church business are not deductible as travel expenses incurred in pursuit of a trade or business. They should be shown in the section of your tax return reserved for contributions.

3. In years past, some church workers have used an estimated figure of seven or eight cents a mile in computing their travel expenses while engaged in church work. In many cases this figure has been accepted, perhaps due to the fact that not all returns are audited. However, where returns are carefully audited, the government may not accept an estimated figure. The following formula should be acceptable to the government as a means of computing these expenses:

(a) Figure the net car expense, for the year, less items of fixed expense such as insurance, depreciation, and license fees.

(b) Total the number of miles driven in church work and determine the percentage this figure is of the total miles driven during the years.

(c) Apply this percentage to the net automobile expense for the year to get the net deduction allowable.

4. It should be emphasized in connection with this formula that fixed yearly expenses such as automobile insurance, depreciation, and license fees should not be included in computing the

We Hasten the Day

We live in an age of envy, greed, and high pressure where the general idea so often seems to be to outdo our fellow man without regard to how. The world is perishing for the lack of brotherly love. We are faced each day with startling examples of man's inhumanity to man, his disregard of justice and rights of others, his intolerance, impatience, and general thoughtlessness.

As Latter Day Saints we are privileged to call many "brother" or "sister" and in turn be called the same by them, but let us not forget that it is up to us to put into daily practice the principles and teachings of Jesus. Doing this, we hasten the day of universal brotherhood. With the approach of another holiday season may we take inventory of our lives and seriously consider what we have left undone, then firmly resolve to emulate the example of Him who came not to be served but to serve. Let us rededicate ourselves to the practice as well as the preaching of truth, light, and love. Thus we hasten the day of universal peace and good will to all men, everywhere.

total automobile expense for the year. The government reasoning in this regard is that these expenses would have to be paid whether the car was used in church work or not. The deduction is restricted to the actual cost of such items as gasoline, oil, repairs, bus or train fare, and meals and lodging costs when out of town.

5. Another method of computing the contribution which should be acceptable to the tax board would be to keep an accurate record of actual travel costs while engaged in church service. This record should include mileage actually driven in church service and the cost of such items as gasoline, oil, train fare, etc. Record books of this kind are usually accepted by the government. It is also advisable to save canceled checks and expense receipts; however, where no accurate records are kept of church travel, the government may, in some cases, accept an estimated figure of so many cents per mile. However, under law, the Director of Internal Revenue in your area would not be obligated to accept such an estimate.

6. In many cases, church workers are reimbursed for their travel expenses by those to whom they minister. It should be emphasized in this connection that you may claim a deduction only for out-of-pocket expenses for which you are not reimbursed.

The amount of reimbursement should be reported as income and cannot be shown as a contribution.

7. It should also be emphasized that this deduction as a charitable contribution is not limited to priesthood members. Women's department workers, youth leaders, etc., are also entitled to the deduction.

8. Full-time church appointees, of course, show their travel and ministerial costs as a business expense and not as a contribution since service to the church is their employment.

9. Persons living in states which have an income tax law should consult the state income tax office to determine whether or not their state will follow the federal rule quoted. Additional information about the federal return may be obtained by writing your nearest Director of Internal Revenue.

Most of the service performed for the church is given on a voluntary basis without pay. Many persons render such service at considerable personal sacrifice to themselves and their families. The position of the government in allowing a deduction for the cost of travel expenses while engaged in church work should be of considerable help to the church's many faithful workers.

“San” Opens New Library

A NEW LIBRARY was formally opened by the “San” School of Nursing on September 21.

It is located on the top floor of the Nurses’ Residence building. The spacious library occupies the entire area that was formerly used as a cafeteria.

The new library is a sharp contrast to the old one that was previously adjacent to the nurses’ lounge. Where before there was room for only eight students to be seated in the library, there is now room for about thirty at study tables, plus a lounge area for browsing and reading. And no longer is there the noise of piano and TV from the nurses’ lounge on the main floor to disturb studying. The new library on the top floor is quiet.

“I see a lot more studying going on,” said the librarian, Mrs. Myrtle Quitmyer, R.N. “The girls appreciate and use the new library. Their attitude and conduct in the library are affected by the new pleasant and quiet surroundings.”

Much of the time the student nurses operate the library by themselves. It is open, by request of the students, from early morning to late at night, every day. When Mrs. Quitmyer is not on duty, the students are in charge of the library.

“There is no ‘monkey business’ in the library,” Mrs. Quitmyer said. “The girls have been frustrated with an inadequate library for so long that they make good use of this one.

“When they come into the library they immediately settle down to study. It is wonderful to see their attitude. Of course, a girl who becomes a student nurse is dedicated to her job to begin with and takes it seriously. This is a pretty wonderful group of girls.”

The library was planned by the Remington Rand Library Bureau and furnished with that company’s equipment. The many bookshelves, card catalog, and librarian’s desk are of light birch and very attractive. The room is light green in color and has fluorescent lights.

At present the library contains about three thousand volumes. There are nursing texts, medical books, books in the fields of history, science, religion, biography, art, music, political science, and other fields of higher learning. There is also a large section of fiction for pleasure reading. The library regularly receives some thirty periodicals.

Student Nurses Now Enjoy Quiet, Convenient Space

“Unfortunately,” Mrs. Quitmyer noted, “many of the books required by a nursing library are very expensive.” She picked one off the self to illustrate her point. It was a book on skin diseases and cost $35. “We have only a limited amount of money each year to add books,” she said. “We hope for financial contributions. Right now one of our greatest needs is a set of Encyclopaedia Britannica, which we do not have.”

Mrs. Quitmyer pointed out that the library also accepts book donations. However, the books accepted are usually in certain specific fields, and the library reserves the right to refuse books which are not needed.

Vida Butterworth, R.N., educational director at the “San,” said it is too early to determine the effect the new library will have on students’ grades, but it is evident that the new facility is well used and should help the school educate better nurses.

“The new library will be a great help both to students who study there and to faculty members who prepare their lessons there,” Miss Butterworth said.

Let Us Help Make These People Free

A Way Must Be Found

The South of my generation will never integrate her colored population of her own free will—not in a year, three years, or thirty years. This I believe. She hasn't been willing to in ninety years, and there are increasing signs that she is no more willing to do so now than in 1865. Is her will to be forced again by bloodshed? God forbid. Yet there must be found a way for these United States of America to give the colored people the dignity of human beings.

I was not reared near colored people. My knowledge of them as a child was mainly from history, Uncle Tom's Cabin, and chance remarks in conversations. My first sight of them was when in high school I went to a near-by city. They were quite a curiosity to me. Of course after marrying and coming to Detroit I saw many of them. I think my sympathies were always with them so long as they kept their place—in the colored neighborhoods and in the colored schools.

When I started to work for the government I made the remark after the first colored girl came to work there, "I'm certainly glad I don't work in the VR and E Division." Of course that condition didn't exist for long. Now of twenty-one girls I supervise, eighteen are colored, and I would as soon be neighbor or roommate in a hospital ward to any one of them as to any whites I know. While once I said, "All colored people look alike to me," they have now become individual, dignified human beings. Their "place" is no different than any place. I know I am not yet lily white in my thinking about them, but I have progressed.

Changing Opinions

When my son was taking his third premedical year in Wayne State University he took a course called Race Relations. He wrote on "Race Relations in My Church" for his term paper. He put a lot of research into it. He had a young colored Latter Day Saint man to church with him and to our home for dinner afterward to get material for his paper. He was quite proud of it when it was completed. When I read it I cried. I begged him to write something else, or alter it, but not to hand it in as it was to the shame of the church. He refused and received the highest grade on it.

This term paper was considerably from the colored people's point of view. (They do have viewpoints which are as worthy of consideration as ours.) I think it was a large factor in my changing opinions, along with our increased contacts with colored people at work.

Graceland's Part

Our church's race relations as told in this term paper were probably no different than history on the subject that might be written by a member of many other churches. But that shouldn't be true. Our history should be so superior, so much more humanitarian, so much more idealistic than that of any other church that there should be no comparison. Jesus said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5: 22). I think my son's viewpoint on the subject was greatly formed in Graceland College. I can recall that a few years previously two of our young missionaries just recently out of Graceland advanced some very liberal views on race relations during dinnertime conversation. I was shocked at the time but was prepared for such liberal views when my two sons returned from Graceland thinking similarly. I am proud now of Graceland's part in this humanitarian development of thought.

Fear and Motivating Force

I know the white people of the South have a deep-seated revulsion, abhorrence, or some such unpleasant feeling with regard to contact with colored people on an equal level. I don't understand it, since I do not have the same cultural background. It is not connected with their conscience. It concerns the category in which they place the colored people—admittedly higher than animals but certainly lower than the white race. That some Negroes have risen high in the world and many are living on a standard equal to the average whites changes their feelings not at all. They believe that these are exceptions, not the rule.

I think there are some who are burying their heads "in sand" so that they cannot or will not have to admit changing conditions. I think there is some jealousy of Negro advancement also. But fear is perhaps the greatest motivating force in the South's determination to keep the status quo. They are afraid of intermarriage. Successfully integrated schools of long standing prove this fear groundless. There is a deeper underlying fear that stalks them daily I believe. A song our neighbor used to sing goes like this:

I've got a white man a working for me.
I've got him right where I want him, you see.
I may stand a loss,
I don't care the cost,
It's worth a heap of money just to be the boss.
Just to see the sweat popping out on his brow,
I've got him right where I want him now.
It maka no matta,
Whether white or a blacka . . .
I've got a white man working for me.

This I believe is the fear that stalks the white people daily. They are afraid that the colored people will become too powerful, get the upper hand, and treat them as they have treated the colored people. There are many today who favor lynchings and incite mobs who have the spirit of Pharaoh who ordered Israel's male children slain so those slaves would not become too numerous and some day conquer them.

Jesus told a parable of a dishonest steward who made friends with his creditors so that it might be well with him when his time of reckoning came with his master. We should take advice from that story to make friends with the colored people and treat them as equals now so that when they are granted full citizenship in very deed they will not be tempted to seek revenge. That day will come because we can't stop progress. We may slow it up, but change continues on. It may be woe to those who put the stumbling block in the way, for I don't suppose Negroes are any less human in mercy than are whites.

Double Standard

I hear frequently, "Why, colored people are treated real good in the South." I guess that's true of a few fortunates who are like chattels. They have good housing—for "niggers"—all their living expenses paid, no worries, just work and keep their place. Never yet have I heard a white person admit he'd want to be treated "good" in the same way. White people whose generations have never been enslaved could not tolerate such patronizingly "good" treatment. It's good treatment for a "nigger" but not good enough for a white person. He wants freedom to choose his own place. Just the insulting appellation of "nigger" indicates how little respect is had for a colored person. And most Southern whites want to keep it that way. Whoever gave whites the right to state the "place" that Negroes should keep? Who made us lords over them? Certainly not God.

The September 1 Time magazine quoted statistics for the state of Alabama which indicate how well the Negroes are treated in that state. It is not an exception. Since 1927 four persons have been executed for robbery, all Negroes. For various crimes since 1927, twenty-two white and 124 Negroes have been electrocuted. Does this show that the Negro is less responsible, less an intelligent person than the whites? No! It proves that Negroes as a whole are not treated well, do not have as good schools and educational privileges, do not have equal opportunities for dignified work at living wages, and do not have equal justice in the courts. And some white people want to keep it that way. They'll fight by fair means or foul to keep the Negro in his place so that he can never rise to a higher level of a living standard, intellectually or economically.

Noah's Folly

People in our church will mention the curse on the descendants of Ham, quoting from the Bible to prove that the Negroes are to be slaves. Only in the restored church could this argument be used because of this phrase in the Inspired Version, "and a veil of darkness shall cover him" (Genesis 9: 30). Commentators say that the descendants of Ham are Africans, but this quotation is the only scriptural confirmation that I know of. Here is the point missed: God didn't curse Canaan. Noah did—in a drunken hangover. And it wasn't his grandson Canaan that had displeased Noah, but his son, Ham. What Noah did to Canaan and his posterity was most abominable. As head of the tribe he could enforce the servitude. Noah started slavery, not God. Surely we could never believe God instituted such a practice, and when people quote that Scripture to uphold a lower estate for the Negroes they are really saying that they condone or approve slavery because they believe God cursed Canaan. Let's not miss the point—it was Noah who cursed Canaan and started slavery.

Some may say that if Noah predicted it, it must have been God's will because Noah was a righteous man. Caiaphas "being high priest that year" prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation. Caiaphas was not a righteous man, yet he prophesied. They both prophesied because they were spiritual leaders of the people, not because their deeds were righteous.

The chapter heading of Genesis 9 says "Noah's folly, the results of it." Surely no persons or peoples have suffered so much and for so long from one man's folly as has the Negro race. And the white people of our nation, because it is to their advantage and inflates their ego, continue this curse.

A Grievous Sin

History has proved that slavery is very hard for any people to throw off because of what it does to their spirits. That is the only reason the Negroes tolerate the treatment they get today. It's in their blood to be subservient. We have respect for the Indian because he could not be enslaved; for the adverse reason we lack respect for the Negro because he was. The children of Israel were not the highest quality of people either when they escaped slavery in Egypt, but they recovered. The colored people are recovering their self-respect also. It is producing "growing pains." They have not a Moses to deliver them by a mighty hand. We could make it much easier for them.

How different are God's cursings than Noah's. Cain was cursed, but God put a mark on him for his protection against being murdered, promising, "Whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold." Canaan, who was cursed, was only the grandson of Noah, an innocent party to his grandfather's displeasure—not a criminal. Yet Noah sentenced him and his posterity to slavery.

The Lamanites were cursed in the skin by God for their wickedness. They were promised that they "shall be a white and a delightful people" (II Nephi 12: 84) when they become righteous and accept Christ as their Savior. We can see that God is merciful and forgiving. Not so with Noah. Although the colored people of our land as a whole are religious, there is no promise given for their release from their ancestors' guilt and curse. And neither are we today willing to give them full release. In that we are party to Noah's sin, and I believe it a very grievous sin in the sight of God.

Foolish Questions

Noah prophesied, "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren" (Genesis 9: 29). White people think they have a right to patronize colored people because of that prophecy. The Lord told Abraham that Israel

The Dangerous “Easy Way”

THE THOUGHT was expressed at our recent General Conference, both in an official way and in small conversational groups, that our church is now standing at the threshold of a new era. This brings into sharper focus for many of us the immediate necessity for personal inventory. While it is true that we have made great progress in recent years, it is evident to all of us that we still lack many qualities of a personal and collective nature if we intend to see the fulfillment of the Zionite dream.

We have been divinely warned of the sifting time, and surely we must agree that we are now living in such a time. We cannot argue the fact that as trials and disappointments come many otherwise staunch members of the church become discouraged and, unaware of the ultimate results, begin little by little to absent themselves from the activities and associations of church life. However, hardships are not responsible for the total percentage of failures within the church. I firmly believe that we are most susceptible to falling away in times of comfort and prosperity. There are many of us who, when we realize we have reached our extremity, remember the source of all help and then in penitence go to our heavenly Father, and very often, as we can testify, the Lord has reached in love and tender compassion to bless us. It is no particular mark of religious distinction that we turn to God when we are convinced he is the only way out of our dilemma. It is when things are going well—our jobs are secure, the bank balance is more than adequate, our family's health is excellent, and the social and business worlds vie for our attention—that the sifting time can so easily take effect in our lives.

There is a short passage in Revelation (3:17) which I need to repeat to myself quite often: “. . . thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.” Most of us need not look to others, for we have many times, allowed the press of the world to interfere with our complete yielding to the Master, and to that extent we have sifted from us the divine blessings which otherwise could have been ours. We may be sincere in thinking certain things are necessary, but we must also be honest. There is a difference! We should ask ourselves honestly, “What difference will this decision make to me in eternity?”

None of us like to be criticised. That is only human. Yet it is quite evident that we have not yet reached that state of perfection which Christ holds out to us, so we must admit, whether we like it or not, that there is yet something lacking in our lives. Nephi's older brothers remonstrated on one occasion (1 Nephi 5:1, 2), “Thou hast declared unto us hard things, more than we are able to bear,” and Nephi continued, “. . . I knew that I had spoken hard things against the wicked, according to the truth; and the righteous have I justified, . . . wherefore, the guilty taketh the truth to be hard, for it cutteth them to the very center.” In modern day vernacular, he could have said, “It's the truth that hurts!”

We have one of two choices to make in the matter if we intend to be kingdom-building material. Either we scrutinize ourselves honestly and adequately, then do some changing by our own initiative, or else we must be prepared to hear some “hard” things spoken by those who are inspired by divinity to see our shortcomings. If we need to be told to “set in order” our own homes, as were some other good but negligent servants (Doctrine and Covenants 90:7-9), let us busy ourselves in such an endeavor. If we need to have Section 59 of the Doctrine and Covenants reread to us, to be willing to forego some innocent (?) pleasure in order that we keep the Lord's day holy, then by all means let's listen, and do something about it. Or should we need to have someone call to our attention that most delicate of subjects, money, let us realize God never takes without returning even more, and as we willingly share our personal possessions God increases our spiritual understanding.

Several summers ago our family vacationed in Minnesota, where we rested, fished, and played together for ten days. This involved a Sunday, and we made plans before leaving home to attend whatever church might be available by packing our good clothes to take along. Accordingly, when Sunday arrived, we drove into town and attended a lovely little Lutheran church. Upon returning to our cabin we ate lunch and were then faced with the problem of how to lunch ourselves for the remainder of the afternoon. The girls were small—six and seven—and restless as any youngsters would be. We talked the situation over and rationalized that since we had come to Minnesota to fish surely it would be all right to fish, especially (we comforted ourselves) since we had attended church that morning. Now I don't presume to make decisions for anyone else, but Melvin and I have wished a thousand times since then that we hadn't gone fishing on Sunday. At the time we excused ourselves, but now I realize we could have planned for those hours in the afternoon, just as we had planned for the morning. It would have been easy, and should have been just as much second nature to pack some Zion's Hopes, Bible stories, and quiet games as it was to take our Sunday clothing. We have discussed this apparent blunder with the girls, and with the Lord, too, I might add, and feel perhaps it can yet serve a purpose, as we know now from personal experience how sincere we can be in some of our decisions, and yet how we can make mistakes because we have not been honest in ascertaining their total effect.

In attempting to prepare our girls for the future, we have tried to point out the necessity of anticipating situations which will call for a righteous decision; not in the sense of “borrowing trouble” but rather in preparation for temptations which have come to all of us, and which must surely come to our children. Sunday observance, as you might guess, is a subject we have discussed, as well as dancing, smoking, petting, final authority of parents, proper curfew time, and others. It is our belief that at such times when pressures of temptations increase our children will need the strength of righteous decisions already made and firmly planted in the mind and conscience. We have no guarantee that all these temptations and many more will be bypassed easily. On the contrary we fully expect times of great inner struggle. But we have been promised help not of our own making at such times, and it is for this help we shall ask in these trials. There are many subjects about which we are still undecided. The amount and type of televiewing on Sunday is just one, and our family would appreciate reading in the Herald thoughts expressed by others in the church on this matter.

OURS IS NOT an exemplary family, and many have been our failures, but we have found that we need not depend entirely on our own wisdom and strength when problems arise. I relate the following experience, hoping it might be of some help to others and in no way wishing to imply that our wisdom is above the average.

When our oldest daughter, Ann, was in the first grade she came home one evening and declared that she wanted to replace her piano lessons with dancing lessons. When we inquired further, she told us that one of her little friends had been asked, for the third time that year, to dance at the school program the next week. Now we are no different from other parents in that we are proud of our children and want the very best for them, and I could understand why Ann wanted to share in some of the glory of performance. And I must confess in my prejudiced mother love, I felt that Ann was every bit as impressive with her little hands on the piano keys as her friend was in her little dancing slippers! It wasn't hard to see why Ann had chosen this little girl as her "ideal," for she was cute as a button and had natural leadership ability. I knew this was an important moment, not only in Ann's life but in mine, and silently I asked the Lord to help me say the right thing.

We started out by discussing how Jesus had placed all of us on the earth for one primary purpose, and that was to do all we could in this life to help him, in order that we might spend our next life with him. We discussed how he had given each of us an equal time—twenty-four hours each day—to accomplish all the good possible. Immediately she said, "Go to church!" To this I explained that going to church was necessary but by no means sufficient in itself, and that we should prepare ourselves to offer service as we attend church. Then I proposed this question: "Let us imagine for a moment that we canceled your piano lessons and gave you dancing lessons instead. Can you think of some appropriate time when you might share your talent at church? Perhaps as preworship during the church school hour, or junior church, or preaching service, or to replace the meditative music preceding prayer service?" It didn't take her long to discover none of the suggested times would lend opportunity for such a contribution. Then in turn we discussed the possibilities of her serving the church in the same hours, only by playing the piano. The argument was conclusive, but I could see she still reserved just a "corner of desire" as she contemplated that school program. Then we discussed our stewardship—not only of the twenty-four hours daily we have but also of our money. I explained that it would be Daddy's and Mother's money which went for dancing lessons, and neither of us felt we wanted that kind of stewardship with the Lord. But I did tell her that all of us are responsible for our own stewardship, and if when she were old enough to earn money she still wanted to take dancing lessons it would be between her and the Lord; her parents would not interfere. To this, Avis, who was then four years old exploded, "So there! I can too dance!" And she may do it. But I hope she will be so uncomfortable she won't enjoy it! (Is that wicked of me?)

But the most important thing about this entire affair is what happened the following day. The school principal called to ask if Ann had something prepared that she could play at the same school program in which her little friend was to dance. Now some people may prefer to think it just happened that way; but I was then and am now only too glad to give the Lord credit for showing me his love and concern in the "little things."

God has called us to be a light unto the world (Matthew 5:16), which means that every decision we make, large or small, determines our ultimate character. We must be willing to accept the fact that whether we like it or not, our lives and our conduct affect other people. It isn't easy to be left behind by the crowd because of our higher ideals, but it is worth it if in place of the noisy multitudes we can sense the quiet commendation of the Holy Spirit.

As members of the church we should be especially careful that we do nothing to offend the tender spirit of those who have glimpsed a higher way and who refrain from some of those things we, as yet, are sincere in accepting. Lehi in his vision (1 Nephi 2:68 ff.) saw those approaching the tree of life, and even after having tasted of its fruits, some turned aside because they were overcome by the judgments of those scoffers who ridiculed them. What a dreadful thing to be responsible for one's falling away because of our spiritual nearsightedness!

The time has not been wasted since the Restoration, but it is evident it has not been put to its fullest use. We are not responsible for the failures of those who have gone before, but this is our day of accounting, and the decisions we make daily will constitute our worthiness to take part in the ultimate establishment of Zion. Let us not deceive ourselves; we shall be in that day what we choose to make of ourselves today!

Fall

The burnished leaves are falling from the trees,
And then, as if to bid a last farewell,
They waver, flutter on the autumn breeze.
Their lifeless forms of winter winds foretell.

The days now worn and tired from summer's heat,
And bored with shouts and laughter, flowers and rain,
Are gray and chilled and ready to retreat,
Till babbling brooks awaken them again.

The woodlands in a purple haze imbued,
Are silent save for busy squirrels that run
Upon their grotesque branches, rough and nude.
They seem to sense their work is almost done.

Then they, like other creatures of the wild,
Are ready for the winter winds to blow.
All nature with the fervor of a child
Is waiting for the magic wrought by snow.

A Demonstrable Faith

What Is Faith?

We are told in Hebrews 11:1 that "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Perhaps an illustration or two will make it more tangible.

Faith caused the woman who had been diseased for twelve years to desire to touch the hem of Christ's garment that she might be healed. She was not disappointed. Jesus turned about and when he saw her said, "Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole" (Matthew 9: 28).

Faith caused the two blind men to cry unto Jesus, as he passed by, that they might be healed. Even the opposition of the multitude to their cries did not silence them. They cried the louder. Jesus had mercy on them and healed them by touching their eyes. Immediately they could see (Matthew 20: 30-34).

There are numerous other incidents. Perhaps you say, "But I cannot have that kind of faith." How do you know you can't? Have you tried?

Faith—a Growing Thing

Alma, a great preacher of ancient times, told the people, "Even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of the word." This tells us that even the desire to believe, if we nurture it, will grow until faith will be made possible.

In Matthew 17: 20 we have a record of Christ's telling his disciples, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove unto yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." The mustard seed is very small, no larger than a pinhead. But what happens when it is put in the ground and nurtured? A large plant results. Harper's Bible Dictionary tells us this plant grew wild along the Plain of Gennesaret, where Jesus taught the multitudes. It grew to the height of twelve to fifteen feet. The Bible states in Matthew 13: 31 that the mustard is "the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof."

This would tend to illustrate that even if our faith is so small we have only a desire to believe, nurture will cause it to grow to great proportions.

Source of Information on Faith

Perchance you are saying, "But all the evidences you have given me are from the Scriptures. If I do not have faith in God, how can I accept his Scriptures as evidence?"

If you wanted to learn about life, where would you seek your information? In books in the biological field, would you not? If you wished to learn how to synthesize or analyze various compounds, would you not turn to the field of chemistry? Then, if you wish to learn about God, where is a better place to look than in his written word?

Testing Information

If you were not willing to accept that which former biologists have written about life or that which former chemists have written about compounds, how could you learn about these things? Of course, you can go into the laboratories and by experimentation prove many of them yourself.

I challenge you to do the same with faith in God. Go into the laboratory of life. Start, if necessary, with only that small desire to believe. Nurture it. Study the Scriptures to get your pattern of procedure. Pray to the God in whom you are trying to believe. Be honest with yourself and God. Allow the good promptings of your mind to work in your life. Remember this must be an honest and sincere effort. At the end of a year, summarize your testings. What have you found? Has your faith grown? If so, continue on with your experiment. It may take a lifetime to reach the ultimate, but the returns along the way will be gratifying.

Far-reaching Results

Twelve young people were being honored at a banquet for completing the Youth for Christ venture. They were ordinary young people in dress, in giggles, in chattering, and in getting fun out of every minute, but they were unique in other ways. There was a feeling of achievement and challenge in the work of the Lord. It had not been easy, and the hardest part was when each one rose to tell what the venture had meant to him. Those of us who heard them could not help feeling the need to find this same sort of fellowship and challenge in the work of the Lord. The two missionaries who led the program had pioneered in our district in a way that would have far-reaching results within and without the youth groups.

"Carol Lynn"

By Carol Lynn Rowe Lowery

This is a unique collection of poems by a blind woman whose sensitivity and beauty of soul gives her the power to "see" many things that the sighted will never see.

Written from her sixth year on (she is now twenty-five), her poetry demonstrates her growth both as a person and a poet. She writes not only of sounds, fragrances and of things that can be touched, but of such silent and unreachable wonders as clouds and stars, of love and despair, of birth and death. But most of all she writes of LIFE!

Help Make These People Free

would be in bondage four hundred years. Were the Pharaohs blessed or even exonerated in fulfilling that prophecy? The prophets foretold that Christ should be slain. Were Judas and the Jews blessed or even exonerated in fulfilling that prophecy? What foolish questions. Neither are the white people of our nation or any other country blessed or exonerated; rather they are cursed in fulfilling Noah's curse by keeping the Negro in servitude to any degree, and it is servitude for them to be made to keep their "place"—a place dictated by the white man.

No doubt in the history of mankind slavery has served some purpose. Jesus said, "Offenses must come, but woe to him by whom the offense cometh." We as a church, as a nation, should never be party to this offense to fellow human beings. In our day and age of enlightenment and intelligence there can be no purpose served in holding back the colored people among us other than to show our depravity, selfishness, inhumanity, cruelty, and how less than true Christians we are who are blessed with fair skins. In this we are judged.

Segregation in Heaven?

Will worthy colored people go to heaven? Will there be segregation there? How will good white people be able to tolerate standing side by side before the throne of God with these whom they have known to be colored when they can't stand sitting next to them on a bus, in church, or lying in the next bed beside them in a hospital ward? Won't Negroes be colored in heaven? Will we see only their white souls? Then why can't we see them here and treat them equally as God does?

I think that, as it was the new generation of Israelites who were able to conquer and enter into the promised land of Canaan, it will also be the new generation of our land—through education and integration, freer of bigotry, prejudices, and intolerances than are we—that will let these downtrodden people become free in very deed to be the intelligent, industrious, and high moral citizens and church members that many are now, and all have the potential to become.

Let the people of our church, both in the North and South, help make these people free.

Correction

In the article, "Negro Lessons in Christianity," which appeared on pages 10 and 11 of the November 24 issue, the word "curse" (fifth line of the last paragraph) is a typographical error. It should be "cause."

Church Man in the News

Wilbur Francis Peters

Advocates Stewardship of the Soil

WILBUR PETERS was recently named Comisssoiner of the Year, according to an article appearing in the Logan, Iowa, Herald-Observer for September 4, 1958. He was selected from region two of Iowa, which comprises twelve counties in western Iowa.

Brother Peters has been active in soil conservation work since he began farming near Persia, Iowa. He has a farm plan on the eighty acres that he owns and operates, and on the additional land which he rents.

He has served as a Commissioner of the Harrison Soil Conservation District for eight years. He is a member of the Little Sioux Watershed Advisory Group, a member of the Extension Group Advisory Committee, and serves on the Harrison ASC committee. He is an active community worker.

For the first nine years of their married life, he and his wife farmed near Shelby, Iowa, but during the depression years and the drought they had "rough going." In 1940 their crops were totally destroyed by hail, and they moved to San Diego, California.

For five and one-half years he worked with the Ryan Aeronautical Company there, but he had always worked with soil and livestock and was not content with factory work. In January, 1946, the family returned to Iowa, to a farm near Persia, where Mrs. Peters was born and had spent her early life.

There they began to attend the Reorganized Church, and they enrolled their daughters, Bonita Jean and Lois Ann, in the church school. In 1950 Wilbur and his two daughters were baptized.

At about that time, he became aware that the land was being tilled without much thought being given to providing security for future generations. He began to apply soil conservation measures.

Soon he was asked to fill a vacancy on the governing body of the Harrison County Soil Conservation District. (This governing body establishes policy and directs the activities of the Soil Conservation Service.) He served out his appointment and was elected for a six-year term.

Through listening to sermons and studying church literature, Wilbur came to feel that he could serve mankind and God by helping to promote good stewardship of the soil by encouraging people to protect the land.

His activities in promoting stewardship of the soil with special emphasis on development of watersheds led to his being selected as outstanding commissioner in region two.

Brother Peters, who serves as branch treasurer, was born in Shelby, Iowa, October 18, 1908. He graduated in 1926 from high school at Tennant, Iowa. On June 1, 1931, he married Hallie I. Chapman; their daughters are now seventeen and twenty-one years old. The older daughter, Bonita Jean, is the wife of Dale Nordman; they live in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Brother Peters raises apples as a hobby, and has a small orchard, but his major interest in farming is in soil conservation. He was recently appointed as a Regional Director.

Freshman Class Elects Officers

"San" Student Honored by District Association

Barbara Thoman of Independence, a junior student, has been chosen by the District Student Nurse Association to be recruitment chairman. It will be Barbara's responsibility to carry on activities to inspire qualified young women to enter schools of nursing.

Student Nurse Loan Fund Memorial to a "San" Graduate

Gene DeBarthe Phillips, class of 1941, died at the "San" on October 24, 1958. Her many friends and former patients have contributed to a fund which her husband, Palmer C. Phillips, has set aside as the Gene DeBarthe Phillips Student Nurse Loan Fund. There could not be a more fitting memorial to Gene, as she was always interested in helping others.

This is the first loan fund set up as a memorial to a graduate of the "San." The administration of the school is indeed glad to have such a tribute to one of the graduates. Those wishing to add to the fund may send their contribution to the "San" or to Mr. Phillips (813 North Union, Independence, Missouri).

State Educational Director Visits the School

Miss Catherine Genss, Educational Director for the Missouri State Board of Nursing, visited the "San" on October 21 and 22. The purpose of her visit was to analyze the school for the granting of the annual state license. She spent the two days interviewing students and faculty and analyzing the curriculum. The "San" school has been approved by the Missouri State Board ever since the program began.

Atchison, Kansas, Future Nurse Club Visits "San"

The Future Nurse Club of the Atchison, Kansas, high school toured the "San" and School of Nursing on October 22. Eight young girls, who hope to become professional nurses, and their two advisers were received by Carrah Hendrix, student president, and Diana Lockwood, clinical instructor. After the tour, refreshments were served in the cafeteria, and the "future nurses" had an opportunity to ask questions about nursing.

Educational Float in Independence Parade

The annual Halloween parade in Independence has become an event which is an-icipated by the residents of the community. It was begun years ago to keep young people constructively occupied on Halloween. Floats are now entered by the civic clubs, churches, schools, and other organizations. The 1958 parade was proclaimed outstanding by the local and Kansas City newspapers.

The float of the School of Nursing portrayed the conquering of the poliomyelitis virus. Student nurses were dressed to portray the virus, and placards and equipment described how to prevent the spread of polio. Student nurses urged the watchers to get their polio vaccine. Anne Welch of Independence and Carol Duke of Peoria, Illinois, were the designers of the float.

Anonymous Gift

Monday morning, November 3, was anything but "blue Monday" in the office of the hospital administrator, A. Neal Deaver. Mr. Deaver was very pleasantly surprised by John Faurot of the business office bringing him a $1,000.00 bill—a gift to the hospital by someone who did not wish to have his (or her) name known. This was indeed a welcome gift.

Did God Say "No"?

more than his sister, who had always been faithful and obedient, because he had done much more for him, financially and otherwise. I didn't know his father at the time, but he later confirmed my suspicion that the boy had misunderstood the evidence.

There are as many unwise parents as there are easily deceived boys and girls. Marriage carries no built-in guarantee of wisdom nor infallible insights into life's problems. We continue the self-indulgence and have the same narrow-minded ways after the ceremony of marriage as we took to the altar. The development of a Christlike personality depends on quite different considerations. But there is one thing in all of life of which we can be certain: God is all-wise and understands us well enough to answer some of our prayers by saying "No"!

Always Be Careful

"Always be careful" is a well-known slogan. It applies to everything from crossing the street to safety measures which should be observed while building picnic fires in the forest. However, when we see this slogan in print, we usually think of it as applying to our physical safety or to the preservation of something material. Seldom—perhaps never—do we make this slogan apply to our soul. Yet we should be more careful with it than with anything else. It is our most prized possession; only one soul is supplied to each individual.

This is sufficient reason for us to do all we can to preserve our souls by observing the gospel laws and acknowledging Christ as our Savior. If we are always careful with this great gift, which our Creator has bestowed on us, he will someday greet us with the salutation, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Then what joy will be ours for having always been careful.

Translators and Translations

By Harold L. Phillips

Warner Press, 1958

Price $2.00

This book of only 104 pages is written in a very pleasing narrative style. As its title suggests, it traces the translations of the Bible from the days before Wycliffe down through the King James Version to the most recent translations. The material is factual. It is quite evident that the author has done considerable research to compile a book of this sort and do it in such readable style.

This little book would be quite valuable to anyone interested in the history of the English Bible and the circumstances surrounding the many translations that have been made since the day of Wycliffe. In the preface of this book the author states his work is purely introductory, "a taste which it is hoped will tempt the reader to explore further."

A run-down of the five chapters gives a good idea of the contents of the book. Chapter I introduces some of the translator-pioneers such as John Wycliffe and William Tyndale. Chapter II tells of the veritable flood of Bibles that came one after the other between the time of Tyndale and the King James Version. Chapter III deals specifically with the translation of the King James Version and the intricacies of its translation and the translators. Chapter IV brings the reader down to the Bibles of mainly the nineteenth century and their translations. Chapter V deals chiefly with the more widely known modern speech translations and sketches the background of the Revised Standard Version.

Because of the space problems involved the author has had to confine his works largely to the Protestant translation activities.

I would recommend this book to anyone interested in an introductory work in this area of Bible translations and translators.

The Unity of Mankind

By Chester Warren Quimby

Price $3.50

In this enlightened age we face a gigantic issue which will defeat us if it is not corrected. It is the need for unity. The author introduces his book with the biblical story of man's attempting to reach heaven by building a tower which resulted in God's judgment of confusion of languages which has ever since been a constant source of dividing men.

However, he points out that he has learned there are also the natural divisions of geography, distance, and color. There are the divisions of nationality, culture, and religion. Added to these are the personal divisions of wealth, varying degrees of ability, education, profession, age, and prejudice. The author says that we must learn to live above these divisions. "Unity can come only from some power beyond ourselves that can lift us to a higher plane of life, where our differences are healed; where, though they continue to exist, they no longer matter."

The following four chapters of the six-chapter book deal with his interpretation of Paul's letter to the Ephesians, in which Paul lifted men from the deep-rooted human divisions to the unity found in God's divine purpose. He points out that the selfish and base sins referred to by Paul could be overcome only in Christ. A chapter deals with the church and its purpose in developing this unity.

If this book is read in the light of the gospel of the Restoration as we have come to understand it, then it will be of value and our devotion to the cause of Christ more appreciated.

Power Through Prayer Groups

by Helen Smith Shoemaker

price, $2.00

This is an exceptionally fine contribution to the study of prayer and its effect in the lives of people. Writing from a background of rich experience combined with research the author presents a step-by-step guide on how prayer groups may be organized.

The power of love, the fact of healing, and human needs are dealt with in a very spirited manner, and the effectiveness of these prayer groups must be based on concern and intensity. Though little effort is made toward exploring the theological aspects of prayer the writer does, nevertheless, adequately deal with the efficacy of stimulated prayer. Thus the book has merit for both the ministry and the members of the church. The spiritually healthy person desires a keener concept of prayer on the basis of current human need; and the ministry certainly is eager for enlightenment with regards to the fresh and varied approaches to the ever present need of spiritual growth.

The emphasis, "in unity there is strength," offers an inspiring thought as it is related to prayer. Worship is woven into the total setting as a necessity to this strength found in unity. Fellowship must be desired and sought, for it is rightly cited as a most effective prelude to deep concern for others. It also opens avenues and channels through which the Spirit of God can move, this being a consequence of daily obedience and love.

This is indeed a revealing book and will prompt most readers to engage further in the study of prayer. The very personal approach will cause them to feel the warmth and the closeness of persons, though not directly acquainted, who are in need of love and who need devoted, sincere prayers.

And Finally...

SEVEN-UP APPROACH TO MISSIONARY ENDEAVORS

1. The "size-up"—evaluation of yourself and others, knowing the personal attributes of your neighbors and friends, their potentials, and the value that they will be to the church and that the church will be to them.
2. The "round-up"—the first real contacts through which lasting friendships are built, the beginning of personal understanding, and the groundwork for a missionary outlook.
3. The "warm-up"—the real meat of the approach, with true knowledge, full understanding, and complete surrender to the project in its entire worth.
4. The "perk-up"—the spark of zeal necessary to bring knowledge and understanding to the pitch of desire, and the place where the new recruit actually takes the step.
5. The "write-up"—where the newly persuaded literally "signs the dotted line" and places the signature of his repentance on the line of his baptism.
6. The "check-up"—the continuing contact with new members, with continuous moral support so that you and they remain firm in their desires and convictions.

7. The "build-up"—through which you and the new member work together to build the kingdom, build personal lives toward perfection, and build the membership through witnessing and additional missionary activities.

Which leads to the repetition of the whole seven steps again—seven being the magic number which leads to happiness, wholesomeness, and righteousness. Thus Zion might well become that mythical "seventh heaven" reached by the Seven-Up stairs by which you climb from sinful oblivion to godly awareness.

CLASS DISTINCTION

We can earn human affection and respect only through understanding. It is our relationship with people—as individuals—which makes our own world rich or poor.

—Charles H. Percy

LOVE THAT SINNER

It sounds righteous to say, "We should hate the sin but love the sinner." It's very true, but there are few that do. It is so human to identify the wrong with the wrongdoer.

A sister confided, "I have come to the place that I actually loath him, and yet at times he is really nice to me. I don't know what to do about it."

"It is just as simple as this: ask God to forgive you, and then pray that He will help him overcome his faults."

Prayer does change people, and in particular the one who prays. In "Pilgrim's Progress" John Bunyan observes, "Prayer will make a man quit sinning or sin will make him quit praying."

Elder R. A. Cheville Becomes Presiding Patriarch

He will remain at Graceland, until responsibilities can be reassigned

DR. ROY A. CHEVILLE of Lamoni, Iowa, is the new presiding patriarch of the church, succeeding Elbert A. Smith who held the position for twenty years.

The revelation presented by President W. Wallace Smith at the October Conference stated:

Due to the infirmities of the flesh, my beloved and faithful servant Elbert A. Smith has responded to the direction of the Spirit in resigning his office as presiding patriarch of the church.

To fill this position in my church Roy A. Cheville is called and should be chosen and set apart to this high and holy office, and be given the responsibility of presiding over the brethren of the patriarchal order as presiding patriarch.

At present Dr. Cheville is on the faculty at Graceland College where he has served for thirty-five years. He is also director of its religious activities.

In a recent letter to members of the patriarchal order he pointed out:

Hundreds of people have asked about my plans. They have been wanting to know if I will move to Independence. They wonder if I am going to leave Graceland. They hope I will not try to do two jobs.

The call and the ordination took place so quickly that I did not have time to plan. The commitments and responsibilities at Graceland College are so many and so complicated I cannot leave at an instant. Yet the pull and sense of responsibility of the new assignment is with me.

... All correspondence about reporting blessings, filing them, and procuring materials will go to the office in the Auditorium where the secretary of the order and the secretary of the office will attend to these matters.

Dr. Cheville also pointed out that he has been working on reducing his work load at Graceland. Dr. Lloyd Young has begun serving as associate director of religious activities there, and more responsibility will go to him.

Brother Cheville first went to Graceland in 1919 in a class assembled for religious education. Illness caused a change in his plans for church appointment. In 1920 he returned to the college. During these years he promised once to prepare for missionary work in Scandinavia and again in Spanish-speaking countries. But foreign missions were not to be his field. Before graduation in 1921 President G. N. Briggs asked him to plan to return to Graceland to teach religious education.

In 1923 he returned to Graceland as a member of the faculty. He has studied at Drake University, Des Moines University, Iowa State Teachers College, University of California, and University of Chicago. The latter school has granted him four degrees: Ph.B. (1922); A.M. (1923); B.D. (1925); and Ph.D. (1942).

During his many years on the Graceland Hill, "Doc" Cheville has been a friend and spiritual father to many hundreds of students. He has also served at different times as counselor to the branch and stake president.

In 1929 Dr. Cheville was married to Nell Weldon. He has one son, Dick, a medical student, and a daughter, Charlotte, who is also attending college. Mrs. Cheville died in December, 1957.

So What – and the So-whatter

"And they said, What is that to us?" —Matthew 27: 4.

A FRIEND RECENTLY told how that he had explained the gospel to a man who listened to the end and then said, "So what?"

The church member felt that he was confronted with an impasse and did not know anything further to say.

Is there any answer to the question, "So what?" We think there is.

When Judas went to the chief priests and elders who were about to crucify Jesus and told them of the terrible moral problem in which he and they had become involved, they replied, "What is that to us? See thou to it." In other words, "So what?"

Contemptuous, scornful, ruthless, unmindful of principle they were. They thought they could evade their responsibility and throw all of it upon the shoulders of Judas. Time was to reveal their error.

In two thousand years of suffering, exile, blood, and death, they and their descendants, justly or unjustly, have paid dearly for that attitude, and yet to this day they have failed to expiate the sin because they still maintain the attitude.

Now, if you please, let's get back to the so what and the so-whatter. So what may be taken as a symbol, a token of our age. Americans have learned in a superficial way to so-what each other and the world, and the world so-whats them back again. The Communists are doing it all the time. Korea—so what? Poland—so what? Hungary—so what? Someday, in terror and suffering, they will find out what.

We may not know the answer, but history will find one for us, as it has found the answer to many another impertinent human question. And, historically, we may be facing the answer to that question in what the atomic bomb will do to us. It could end with our perishing in the cinders of an immolated civilization, in silence and oblivion.

Let's look at the question, "So what?" a bit critically. There is nothing behind it, nothing in it, and nothing for its future. It is the absolute zero of argumentative devices. It can be manufactured endlessly in the vacuum of unfurnished minds, and any goon can utter it without reflection and without an idea. It is a parrot's question, echoing in a gilt cage of sophistry.

This question is an attempt to shrug off responsibility for the human situation in which we are involved, and from which we cannot escape by any such cheap device. The answer comes when the hand of fate descends, like a swatter upon an impudent and offending fly, replying, "This is what!"

Suppose you tell the gospel message to someone, and he says, "So what?" What can you do? What can you say to him?

You can tell him that there are two kinds of powers in the world, good and evil; that their consequences can be seen easily by anyone who will open his eyes and look at the truth; that there is war between the two principles, supreme good and unredeemed evil; it began as a war in heaven, and intransigent evil continues today as the enemy of God. There is no neutral ground because there is no power to defend it. We must take sides if we are not to perish, and it is the part of love and wisdom to take the side of God, our Maker and Savior. There will be some who will prefer to be on the side of the great Destroyer.

It is up to each individual human being to make a choice. He must choose either eternal good or unrepentant evil. If he does not choose either one, he falls into the neutral ground, the "outer darkness" of which Jesus warned, where the soul is lost.

The answer to "so what?" must be a decision by the so-whatter. It is up to him. Christ can save him only if he makes a decision for Christ. It is as simple as that.

There is an answer to the impudent, empty, irrelevant question, "So what?" The Christian who has learned of the love and power of God, and who understands the moral and spiritual character of the world and the universe in which we live, has the answer to the question. What he will need is the courage to give it expression.

Observance of Human Rights Day

The tenth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations falls on December 10. In thirty articles of Declaration sets forth various political, economic, social, and personal rights which should be the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family.

Although not enforceable law, the Declaration has proved to be a moral and humanitarian influence in the world, and is being used increasingly as a source of law. It has a marked influence on the new constitutions written in many new nations, and is being cited in various opinions of judgments of the International Court of Justice.

As a part of some church service during the month of December, recognition of the principles for which this Declaration stands would obviously be apropos in this age of struggle for national and individual freedoms.

Official

General Conference Organization, Function, and Procedure

In the 1958 Conference Bulletin, pages 83, 93, and 103, will be found resolutions submitted to the recent General Conference. One of these has to do with the organization and function of General Conference. The other has to do with the appointment of a special Conference Rules Committee. These proposals were referred to a committee to be appointed by the First Presidency, and they have been so referred. The committee consists of the following:

- Elder F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency
- Elder D. Blair Jensen of the Council of Twelve
- Elder Henry L. Livingston of the Presiding Bishopric
- Elder Ward A. Hougas of the Quorum of High Priests
- Elder Russell F. Ralston of the Presidents of Seventy

Those interested should note that the first preamble of the proposed resolution entitled "Organization and Function of General Conference" (Bulletin: 83) is a recital of a resolution proposed for consideration at the General Conference of 1956 but denied by that Conference. The "Statement of the First Presidency concerning this matter" referred to in the second preamble to this proposed resolution is part of a much larger statement by the First Presidency, advising against adoption of the proposed resolution now incorporated as the first item in the preamble under consideration. The Conference adopted this statement of the First Presidency as a substitute for what has been previously submitted.

The Conversion of Apostle Paul

Artist Thoman's conception of Paul

And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus, and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven; and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest; it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.—

ACTS 9: 3-6.

The Price of Conversion

We have become so familiar with the major events of Saul's conversion that we often fail to sense some of the deeper and no less significant meanings which give body to the later life and ministry of the Apostle Paul. We all know of the vision which left him physically blinded. I have often wondered at the wisdom of the Lord in converting a man and in the process leaving him physically handicapped which would lessen his ability to perform the task given, unless this was the prelude to the next necessary step in the preparation process. At this point the record states:

And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

Paul immediately shows the polish of his training and education. Even in this initial experience he is not content with merely knowing that Christ is the Messiah, the Son of God. This is the crowning dynamic to everything else, but there must be something else. Everything worth while has a price, though not necessarily in the economic realm. He would not be very content or sympathetic with people who were merely brought into the church through their emotions.

Emotion is necessary and fine. Love is an emotion—and who can serve unless he loves? But the warm feeling of sure knowledge of Christ's being what he claims to be is not enough to a future Christian of the stature of Paul. He wants to know, "What wilt thou have me do!"

Only a recapitulation of the life of Paul would even touch on the essentials to the Lord's full answer to that question, but I'm interested primarily in isolating beginnings here. The Lord told him, "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." The Lord certainly could have instantly healed Paul. We often lay so much stress on the physical condition of Paul and his subsequent healing that we fail to see that this was only a portion of the sickness from which he was suffering and for which he needed ministry.

An Elite by Birth

Paul was confused. All his previous training—and it had been quite extensive—was that the Christians were a deluded, odd, malignant, morally destructive sect. Paul was a Pharisee where the letter of the law was more important than the spirit. He could boast of a tutorial education which was among the best. He was a man educated in geography, philosophy, and history as well as religion. He was versed in languages and could conduct even his own defense in the full command of the grammar and rhetoric of the elite. He was an "elite." He had already traveled far. He knew people in high places and even had letters and credentials from them for his intended nefarious acts. He knew the world both from his formal education and from the even greater learning process of seeing it for himself. He could quote the literary giants and legendary greats both secular and religious. This Paul was a great catch. His oratory could sway kings and magistrates and throw fear into tormentors and captors alike. Even in the later humility and degradation of bonds, his voice and intelligence would prove to shine through and halt men in their acts. He carried an authority and a power to sway men long before he ever became a Christian.

Blind of Soul

What was Paul's greatest healing? Sight from physical blindness? No, that was decidedly secondary. The instructions were that he must go to the city where he would be "sold" what he must do. Here is a new twist in the man who was self-proclaimed a "Pharisee and a son of a Pharisee"—the same type or class of men Jesus once characterized as being so sure of their knowledge of their own righteousness that they "could despise others." Paul's background up to his conversion bears out that his fanaticism would tend to put him in that branch of the Pharisees. His reputation certainly bears it out. This bull-headed, self-righteous man was blind in more ways than one long before he ever began his fateful journey to Damascus to bind up Christians. It was this blindness that was of so much greater import to his potential ministry for Christ than was his physical blindness.

A man without sight has undoubtedly a handicap to the total fulfilling of his Christian ministry, but not one that is impossible to overcome. Even a blind Paul could have performed a most marvelous ministry. But an egotistical, self-righteous, supercritical, demanding, overbearing man, regardless of his educational polish and proved intellectual acumen, could never do the work that Christ had in mind for Paul.

The Humbling Process

Paul's actual healing was foreshadowed by the portentous and somewhat horrendous-sounding words that hit him when he was instructed to go and he would be "told" what he was to do. Paul was not the type to be put off when he asked an honest question. Furthermore he wasn't the type to be sent to cool his heels and then be told at someone else's convenience what he should do. He was a teller, not a hearer. It is one of the faults of great men that they often wear their prestige near the surface. To keep an ambassador or any V.I.P. waiting can be interpreted only as a slight or insult, and important men through history have used such incidentals as an indication of their host's esteem toward them. Protocol is very real. Wars have been fought for nothing more important than a real or imagined slight to some dignitary. Paul's real education was now to begin as he was treated by Jesus, not as an important dignitary or man of high station but as only the human which he essentially was and as such he needed to be "told."

A high spiritual experience can often be later rationalized. Many a well-educated man who has borne his testimony of spiritual blessings as a young man has later been the victim of his own intellectual process of "rationalization" in his university or other sophisticating experiences. All too often the university man is affected by the spirit of a meeting, but when he is again in the presence of his more familiar forms of stimuli, books, abstract knowledge, and sophisticated friends, the "spirit" is soon forgotten or smugly classified as a weak moment of exposure of the more aboriginal human element. Even the Apostle Paul might have succumbed to this more insidious temptation. Lesser and possibly greater men certainly have. Even Paul must have had his tempting moments in this field. Who knows what his "thorn" in the flesh was in reality?

Accepting the Christians

Paul needed another conviction. Not a new conviction, but a confirming conviction; one more associated with the factuality of existence. No one among men, except Paul, knows just what went on in his mind and the struggle of those three days in Damascus. All we know is that he prayed as he had never prayed before. His mind must have led him finally to call for help from the hated Christians. It is one thing to be converted to love Christ and quite another to love Christians. Christ was other worldly, divine, omniscient, and all the other adjectives one might lavish in a feeble attempt to describe his majesty. It wouldn't be hard to accept Christ as the Son of God after such a convincing display of power as Paul had experienced. But what about the Christians—those breakoffs, outcasts, nonconformists of the pure Jewish religion? They denied all that he had learned from his own father and from education as to the superiority of the fasts, the offerings, tithes, rituals, and washings. They polluted ritual into anxious living, and placed more emphasis on the taste of true practical religious obedience than on the detached, ethereal, exotic beauty of the word alone. Yes, he'd seen these Christians stand as real faithful stalwarts and die without whimpering, but many a misguided fanatic could do that. Or was it more than raw fanaticism that made Christians do that? These experiences now began to take on confirming relationships in Paul's mind but were not converting evidence of themselves.

Three Days of Soul-searching

The calling out in his extremity for help is another story. How could such a one as Ananias assist the great intellectual giant, Saul of Tarsus? Now that Paul had said "yes," was that not enough for this Jesus? Could Paul not now by dint of his proved superiority carry on as a natural leader? What possible importance did it have that he must become acquainted with the crude uneducated lowly Christian Ananias? Herein was Paul's true temptation, I believe. He needed to know that in the kingdom of which Christ preached, it wasn't just the strong, the intellectually blessed, and the financially able who were to rule—at least not by these attributes. He needed to know that the authority of a true servant of Christ comes through a call and is possibly sustained and supported by these other attributes or attainments, and that the message as taught by Christ was a common endeavor, not a rule of the elite as the Pharisees proclaimed.

This was a movement which had for its goal the joy of the masses, the utilization of the inherent capabilities of all men—just because they were men, and not because of any external happenstance of fickle blessing of fate, such as birth, wealth, or educational attainments. Christianity must be a "we" movement, not an "I" movement. The intent of Christian salvation is collective, not selective. It is selective only as every individual has the collective opportunity of selection, and it ceases to be selective once the selection is made. The real key to understanding Paul as the Apostle to the Gentiles is not to be found in his extensive journeys; these were results, not the impetus to a great ideal. The answer is in the struggle that took place those three days in the city of Damascus, culminating in the calling of a lowly elder to administer to the great Saul of Tarsus.

New Vision

I am of the opinion that the description of his finding sight described as "fell from his eyes as it had been scales" was an attempt to describe many things. Here Paul had another vision of the meaning of the kingdom—of an organized total practical community. Paul's erstwhile friends and unwitting enemies often ascribe to him the credit for the establishment of an organized church. In direct opposition to such fallacy, I believe he obtained an early vision of the church in its true potential in the experience with Ananias and was just as true to his testimony of it as he was with the continued proclamation that Jesus is the Christ.

Here was the fruition of the promise that he would be told what to do. He now understood that sincerity and education weren't everything. A man's social position does not automatically entitle him to the keys of heaven, nor to rule and superiority in the opinions over all things sacred here on earth. Christ called fishermen to positions of leadership. What a travesty that must have appeared to the Saul of Tarsus, and yet what an inevitable requisite it appeared to be after his experience with Ananias.

Christian Equality

Let us go back to the weaknesses of Paul. One of them was his continuing desire to make his opinions decisive. Several times we see where this even generated some friction in the early bodies of the church. But then what man worth his salt isn't a bit forceful and opinionated at times? The danger comes when one man is so recognizably head and shoulders above the rest of the crowd in the plaudits of the world that it becomes an almost irresistible temptation to push his convictions beyond their validity.

I believe it to be historically conceded that Paul had few if any peers in the qualities and quantities of his secular attainments within the membership of the church. It demanded something of a deep conviction and emotional equilibrium to submit at times to just the plain, raw, academically unadorned, unpolished spiritual truths and logic of such crude men as these fishermen of Galilee who were now proclaimed by his new accepted society as not only his peers but in some areas even his administrative superiors. It is hard for me to feel that all this alteration of person and personality was affected in a moment on the road to Damascus. It was the dynamic; but those three horrible, soul-searching days culminated by the laying on of hands of an uncultured, fearful, timid Ananias were equally important in the grounding and stabilizing of this great Apostle to be.

Exalted Discipleship

Perhaps no less important lesson was given Ananias. Here was a man, simple in his faith, and of such a purity that he could entertain the presence of the voice of the Lord in vision. Immediately upon receiving instruction to go to Saul he entered into a deliberate and involved argument on all the reasons why he should not be requested to take upon himself such a task. He pointed out quite logically that Saul was a persecutor, and that in all likelihood to openly proclaim himself as a Christian before Saul would be equivalent to signing his own death warrant. He even bolstered his argument by saying, "I have heard by many of this man," as though somehow the magnitude of human numbers could mitigate the sheer, absolute validity of a command from the Master.

What possible consistent use could Christ have in openly and somewhat flagrantly putting one of his chosen servants into such an impossible situation? Could not Ananias serve better by serving longer? At this stage in the new church a sincere and devoted servant such as Ananias was certainly a valuable asset and not one to be expended so easily by ostensibly sending him to his certain death. However, he finally did go to show Saul "How great things he must suffer for my name's sake."

This spiritual union of the fearful, timid Ananias and the formerly violent, arrogant Saul must have been one of the most spiritually exciting and enlightening of the New Testament age. It is such a tragedy that we are denied so much of the background knowledge of the great events which transpired in those early days. Ananias learned that when God commands the servant must obey, for the Lord in his respect for the servant will never command that which is against his eternal right and welfare. Ananias must have shared his testimony at length with the newly converted Saul, and it must have strengthened his testimony just as such an experience today would strengthen ours. It is no little thing to have the Lord send a servant to the man and place where needed under such a trying situation as prevailed in Damascus then.

A man who prays only for a vision, who is not willing to assume the possible excruciating consequences of asking, "What am I to do?" and then obeying when being "told" what to do, is not fooling the Lord but himself, and even that is doubtful. This man Paul proved further his total conversion through exerting his unchanged personality trait of acting upon a conviction. He was immediately baptized, and as soon as practicable set out preaching and witnessing for Christ.

Reconciliation

By M. H. Siegfried

DO THE FACTS of Christianity ever change? This is a question which may provoke some degree of controversy. It is a question which has been asked over and over through the ages by persons of varying degrees of philosophical concept.

Yet, in analyzing the question thoroughly, I find the only logical answer is that the facts of Christianity never change. They are the same in our age as they were in the days of Adam, when first they were preached on earth. The interpretations of these facts alter from age to age and from generation to generation, just as our concepts of the planetary system change as we learn more about it. However, the facts are the same as concern the solar system; they are unchanging. "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever."

The stars move in their orbits in the night just as they did when Abraham still lived in the Chaldean hill country. The constellations roam about the unmeasured distances of the stellar universe, untouched, unmolested, and unharmed, the same as when David watched his father's sheep feeding among the hills of Judea. We set our clocks and watches by the chronometers in Washington, D.C., because these are set by the stars which never lose or gain a second.

The facts of life and the human body do not change—just our concepts of them. Our hearts beat the same number of times per minute as they did when Homer wrote the Iliad or when Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood. The muscles of Julius Caesar developed and aged in his day the same as those of Khrushchev today.

How very much the theories of medicine and the practice of the medical arts have changed. Concepts of one thousand years ago were too limited to meet the growing needs of the expanding volume of information available to the students of today. When these old ideas are superseded by additional knowledge, they must be discarded. But biological laws have not changed; man himself has made only superficial change—the style of his hair cut, how he trims his beard (or shaves it off entirely), the type of clothes he wears. The processes of thinking remain the same. Man's conclusions are changed by the additional knowledge made available by the exercise of these processes.

The facts of Christianity are fixed, as the stars of heaven, the processes of the mind, the sight of the eye, the hearing of the ear, the circulation of blood, the heartbeat. As long as man needs saving, it will be true that the world needs Christ, its Savior. That he died for sin is as true as all the facts recited are true concerning man and the universe. He did not come for a day or a year or a generation or a nation. He came to save all men, in all ages, in all lands, and in all nations, regardless of the bounds of their habitations.

Without a doubt we have higher, perhaps better, conceptions of "God the eternal Father and of Jesus Christ his son," than the ancients had. If we do have, it is because of our experiences with them, we know more about them and their love and majesty.

When I survey the boundless sea,
And then the sky above;
The hand of majesty I see,
And then His boundless love.

We must interpret Christ in terms of our present abundance of facts about life and about our knowledge of the Christ who came to save the world.

The church is trying to work out an interpretation of Christ's great meaning to all the world—not just Palestine or the United States or a Zion of our concept of one hundred years ago, but of God's concept of Zion for all the world for all time. That interpretation must, like all Christian principles, be simple yet meaningful. But it must be all-embracing, cover all the aspects of the conduct of man toward man and of his relationship with God for purposes of eternal life. Christianity is the essence of simplicity; but it has been buried in theology, pedagogy, and formalities until the whole theory needs to be "born again." It needs to be dressed simply but given the halo of Christ on the cross, or standing in the temple at the age of twelve, or being baptized by John, or making the blind to see, or raising the dead, or as he appeared to those who saw him after he was resurrected, or as his power was magnificently manifested on Pentecost, or as he said to Peter, "I will build my church," or as he stood by the young boy in New York in 1820, challenging him to a life of devotion to the call then being made to restore, rejuvenate, and simplify the new interpretation of the basic principles of Christianity and to make it alive with power.

This new interpretation of Christ must be a reincarnation of spiritual power, simply understood and felt far beyond any words or dressing to express it.

This modern, up-to-date interpretation of Jesus so much needed today must take the teachings of Christ and show them to the inquiring mind "in all the world." It must not just put them on a billboard but "persuade" people to see them, show them.

This can be accomplished only by the working of the Holy Ghost. Without this powerful factor the whole process will be fruitless, impotent, and without hope.

"Be ye reconciled to God."

Elderly Guests Need Mail, Visits, Entertainment

SINCE ITS OPENING in 1956, Resthaven has accommodated guests in its new quarters on Truman Road, across the street from the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

According to Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, assistant to the Presiding Bishopric in charge of the nursing home, Resthaven has served many elderly Saints but could serve more if facilities were available. He explained that the new building has a capacity of sixty-five guests. The annex, a large home to the west, holds nineteen more for a total of eighty-four. There is always a waiting list, he said. Usually the waiting list includes fifty names or more.

Experts in nursing home care generally agree that the new Resthaven ranks with the best in the country. It is one of the few nursing homes licensed in the Kansas City area.

And Saints who visit the home, especially those who have members of their family living there, testify that the care given at Resthaven is excellent.

However, more is needed. Bishop Kelley says the guests at Resthaven enjoy the monthly birthday parties directed by Miss Gertrude Copeland and Mrs. Edith Lewis. And they also enjoy the weekly worship services conducted at Resthaven by Elders Harry Sprague and William Inman. But there is a need for more diversion, entertainment, participation.

Mrs. Nancy Kennedy, supervising practical nurse at Resthaven, said the guests would welcome groups who wish to visit with different forms of entertainment. She said the people at Resthaven love to sing and love to hear groups sing. They would like to see colored slides of travels in the United States and abroad. They would enjoy individuals who could come in to read to them. And they would certainly appreciate seeing visitors at any time.

Sister Kennedy recalled a youth group in Oklahoma that sent a gift "grab-bag" to Resthaven guests at Christmas. When they drew the gifts, some of the men opened their packages to find earrings and aprons and some of the women found ties and cuff links. They enjoyed opening the gifts, trading, and especially knowing that someone was thinking of them.

She also recalled many groups who have stopped to sing for the guests, not only at Christmas but at other times of the year.

Also many people send useful items to the home, she said. Right now Resthaven especially needs new bibs of turkish toweling.

Bishop Kelley, Sister Kennedy, the practical nurses, the ministers, and all who are associated in the care of the Saints at Resthaven readily testify that church members everywhere can help bring happiness to those at the nursing home by remembering them with visits, with mail, and any other way that will bring diversion and new interest.

A Latter Day Saint by Conviction

The Church Needs More Devoted Members Whose Actions Prove Their Convictions

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.—Galatians 3: 27.

Why Are You a Latter Day Saint?

If someone were to ask you why you are a Latter Day Saint, what would be your answer? Would it be words of conviction and personal experiences or words of excuse and uncertainty?

I called on an elderly brother one time who wasn't very stable in the church. In the course of our conversation I asked him why he was a Latter Day Saint. He replied, "Well, sir, I guess I'm one who just married into the church. You see, my wife was a stanch member, and she kept . . . well, you know. I thought I'd better join so things would ease up a bit."

I also recall visiting a middle-aged woman who had been inactive for about twelve years. When I asked her how she came in contact with the church, she answered, "Why, the Saint's church was just down the road from where we lived. You might say it was the most convenient church to go to at the time. My folks didn't go, but they always sent us when we were kids. Later we were baptized because we were told it was the right thing to do. Mother always wanted this done, and she felt the Saint's church could do it as good as any other. She never went much for that sprinkling business. I heard her tell Dad one time that baptism by immersion was the only thing that would do us onery kids any good. Ha! Later she swore up and down the preacher didn't hold us under long enough. Ha, Ha! You know, it's too bad we don't live close to that church any more. We sure used to have some good times. I wouldn't mind going back there someday just to see how things are getting along."

Recently I called on a young man for the purpose of helping him find his place in the church. We needed him and realized that his talents, along with strong convictions, could fill a vital spot in the life of a small church group. When I asked him the same question, he said, "My folks were all members of the church. I guess I was just born to be one. I know I'm not very active, but I still believe in the church. I never had a desire to shop around for anything else . . . so I guess that's why I'm a Latter Day Saint now."

Inseparable Companionship

Actually there's nothing wrong with being a Latter Day Saint by birth, or because the church was convenient, or even because a companion was a member first. Some of our best members found the gospel in these ways and have made outstanding contributions. But the previous answers are not sufficient within themselves. They lack a note of conviction.

When people are baptized in God's appointed way, they become members of his church, and the church body is only too happy to welcome their fellowship. But it is also evident that God wants them to become members of his church and family because they themselves are truly convinced of its rightness—convinced that the restored gospel is true. They should be converted to the idea that they individually need the church and the church needs them in inseparable companionship.

Conviction and Devotion

Latter Day Saints should at some time during their lives have an experience with God that brings them to a point where their membership in the church becomes a matter of deep personal devotion. Such devotion is an absolute necessity if God's kingdom is to become a full reality here on the earth. Conviction and devotion may thus become synonymous. They work hand in hand and belong together. Where you find one you will find the other. When one is lacking the other is not completely matured. Who, then, is a Latter Day Saint by conviction? One who is devoted to the kingdom's every need and strives to find a place for himself to give personal ministry. It is evident that an indifferent people with mediocre attitudes will never be able to demonstrate God's way of eternal life.

It does my heart good to know that there are many Latter Day Saints who sing with conviction, "I have found the glorious gospel that was taught in former years." These are members who are solid as a rock in this work—stable, dependable, loyal, hard-working—who, if asked to give reasons for being Latter Day Saints, could bear outstanding testimonies. These are the Saints who have heeded the advice found in I Peter 3: 15: "Be ready always to give an answer with meekness and fear to every man that asketh of you a reason for the hope that is in you."

Efforts Bring Results

People who carry strong testimonies did not obtain them through procrastination, of that we can be sure. Nor are they in the restored gospel because it is the easiest road to walk, or the softest religion to embrace. Their assurance came as a result of personal application, knowing that what they have found and accepted is workable in their lives and the lives of others. We know that eventually their efforts will produce results that bring peaceful living with God and their fellow men.

We should not lose sight of the need to convert those who can and will make a contribution toward Zion, nor should we forget to encourage our own people to do the same. However, it is one thing to be willing to accept responsibility and another to be qualified for it. The church needs people who are endeavoring to become qualified experts to meet its challenge today:

PASTORS—who can bring a people together in unity and minister in love and humility; whose personalities can reach lives of varied backgrounds.

LEADERS—who know what must be done, where they're going, and how to get there.

PREACHERS—who can inspire people to make righteous decisions.

MISSIONARIES—who can convert others to Christ and the restored gospel; men who have the keys to unlock hard, prejudiced, and indifferent hearts.

TEACHERS—who are skilled in giving knowledge to a searching world.

MUSICIANS—who can thrill the hearts of worshipers.

ARTISTS—who can create and construct to lift the eyes of men upward.

CITIZENS—who can demonstrate Zionism living in community life, lifting it to a higher plane.

MOTHERS AND FATHERS—who are skilled and devoted to parenthood, establishing their home life and families in the light of our Zionism belief.

Great strides have been and are being made toward our goal, but there is always room for more devoted members whose actions prove that they are Latter Day Saints by conviction.

Well-known Anesthesiologist Accepts Appointment to Honorary Medical Staff at Sanitarium

Dr. Keown to Honorary Medical Post

DR. KENNETH K. KEOWN, Professor of Anesthesiology at the University of Missouri, has accepted appointment to the honorary medical staff of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital according to President W. Wallace Smith, chairman of the Board of Trustees. Honorary staff membership is extended by the board of trustees upon the recommendation of the medical executive committee of the hospital.

Since September, 1957, Dr. Keown has been serving as Professor and Head of the Section of Anesthesiology, University of Missouri School of Medicine. Prior to that time he spent a decade at the Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, associated with Dr. Charles P. Bailey, one of the foremost heart surgeons in the United States, where their pioneering in "deep freeze" surgery brought the young Dr. Keown an international reputation as "the grand old man" of anesthesiology. Life, Time, and other magazines reflected the wide medical acclaim accorded his work in devising elaborate techniques for anesthetizing patients and running analytical tests during inside-the-heart surgery which permitted the operating team to know exactly at any given moment the physical condition of the patient. His techniques developed at Hahnemann are rapidly becoming standard practice throughout the world with resulting success in saving many lives.

Kenneth Keown was born May 25, 1917, to Mrs. Sibyl E. Richards Keown and Dr. Charles Keown who served many years as an active staff member of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. He attended William Chrisman High School in Independence, Graceland College, and the Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia where he received his M.D. degree, attained his specialty, and did his research in anesthesiology with Dr. Bailey and others.

Currently Ken, as he is known to his many friends, finds his chief interest in furthering the training of medical students and residents in anesthesiology at the Missouri School of Medicine. He teaches at four levels of medical education: undergraduate, graduate, state wide, and national. In connection with his great interest in learning more of the physiology of patients with heart disease, Dr. Keown is continuing in the study of causes of heart diseases and heart irregularities with animal experimentation. He has also aided in the instituting at Columbia of the program of open heart surgery which involves the use of an artificial heart and artificial lungs while the heart is open and surgery within the heart is made feasible.

Dr. Keown now resides in Columbia, Missouri, with his wife, the former Helen J. Mooney, and their two children, Kenneth, Jr., eleven, and Linda Jane, nine. In addition to many local interests, he is a member of the American Medical Association and the American Society of Anesthesiology.

Do We Testify of Him?

WHEN THE HOME FOR THE AGED was still in Lamoni, we had an elderly sister who never bore her testimony. She was concerned about it because she had read in Doctrine and Covenants 76:6 that those who were not valiant in testimony would inherit the terrestrial glory.

While I was visiting with her one day she told me why she did not bear her testimony. She was Danish and had not mastered the English language well, and she was afraid that people would laugh at her. And yet, time after time, she would ask that we sing her favorite hymn, "My Jesus, I Love Thee." She could not sing, but her heart followed the words as the rest of us sang. What greater testimony could she have borne?

We have been commanded in these last days to testify of Jesus. What does it mean to be valiant in testimony? The definition of valiant is courageous or fearless in the face of danger. If we consider this definition, then it would apply particularly to bearing a testimony before the world.

Living Testimonies

Each day we testify of Jesus by the way in which we live. We who live chiefly among the Saints find this is not hard to do. It is when we must go out into the world and its temptations and wickedness and refuse courageously to do those things that are wrong, holding up Christ as our example, that we may be said to be valiant in testimony.

One synonym for valiant given in Roget's Thesaurus is "confident." A synonym for confident is "unhesitatingly." If we use the word "unhesitatingly" in place of valiant, it would apply very well to our bearing our testimony in the prayer and testimony service.

To testify in the service set apart for that purpose is good. It gives us strength to accomplish God's purpose in us. It can bring unity in a group or congregation. But how shall we testify?

Too Busy to Listen

In a reunion the people were so busy talking (testifying) that there was no time to listen to what God might have had to say.

In the 1954 Lamoni Reunion, Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., gave a sermon on "The Living God Speaks." His thoughts were so fine that I shall quote him. "Under what conditions does He speak? We pray unto Him so often, 'Lord, do this for us; do that for us. Give us rain. Give us good crops. Make us humble.' We ask him to do so much. But I wonder if we do this sometimes. Did you ever have somebody ask you a question like this? 'Ed, did you have a good summer?' and before you can tell him about the good summer he directs his attention somewhere else or has something he wants to say himself. You start telling him about the summer, but he isn't paying any attention. Perhaps God gets a little impatient sometimes because we say, 'Lord, give us intelligence; give us the answer; help us do this, Amen.' And away we go! He wants to talk to us. He wants to reveal himself. He wants to encourage us. But we have spent all of our time in talking and none in listening."

This applies equally well in our testifying. It is true we do need good testimonies. If no one testified the service would fail completely. But we need to use wisdom in our testifying.

Brevity Pays

In our hurried existence, everything points to brevity. Digest magazines are top sellers. The short, short story brings top payment. Today people want everything they read to be as brief as possible.

It would be well to consider this when we testify. We need to learn to be concise in telling experiences. The wordy individual drives the Spirit from a service. To hold the attention of others we must tell our experiences interestingly and to the point. If we do not hold the interest of those in the congregation, their minds will wander, and the Spirit will fly out the window.

No one cares to hear about our operation, how awful we looked, or how awful we felt. What everyone is interested in is how God has blessed us in healings and inspirational guidance in solving our problems.

In the eighteenth chapter of Luke it was the publican with his short prayer, "God, be merciful to me a sinner," that Christ recognized, rather than the Pharisee whose lengthy prayer merely exalted himself.

Preparation

If I stand to testify, I must feel the urge to do so. I must feel the power of the Spirit surging through me until I cannot keep my seat. When I have borne a testimony, not having felt the prompting of the Spirit, it has seemed that my testimony fell flat.

If we prepare our hearts and minds before we attend a service of this kind, there will be those who will testify according to the promptings of the Spirit. If we do this there will be no lengthy preachings and wordy descriptions.

On August 31, 1831, this message was given and is recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 62:1: "For the testimony which ye have borne is recorded in heaven for the angels to look upon, and they rejoice over you."

Before you stand to testify again, ask yourself this question: Will this testimony be such that it will be recorded in heaven for the angels to look upon and rejoice over?

You can make it so. Make the telling of your experience interesting; be brief, and testify of Jesus.

Enlightened Allegiance

WHY ARE YOU a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ? Is it because your parents brought you up in their church and you saw no reason to differ with them? Did you marry into the church? Perhaps you met the church through friends and studied yourself into membership. Some claim to have studied themselves out of the church and are proud of their present enlightened condition. I have some such friends—good, honest, intelligent people with questing minds and willing hearts and hands. What really happened in these cases? Was their study careful enough?

I have concluded that no one has a really strong faith until it is tested and refined in the processes of trial, doubt, questing, prayerful study, and finally purged in the fire of the Holy Spirit. Even those who have the "gift of faith" from childhood have to have that faith tried and refined to fit an enlarging and expanding life experience.

A Tried Faith

No human being is forever free of trials, nor should anyone desire to be forever sheltered from adversity. It is only through struggle and adversity and the exerted will to rise above difficulty that any human organism can grow or even continue to exist. We are not interested in merely existing. We are concerned with growth—spiritual as well as mental and physical—and not growth alone, but maturity. Jesus is the supreme example of spiritual maturity. And his maturity did not come without trial and temptation.

- Is there a person who can truthfully say he or she has never doubted the truth of the gospel, the special mission of the restored church, or perhaps even the existence of God? If there is such a person, then I doubt the depth of conviction, the height of maturity, churchwise.

Lo Here, Lo There

Perhaps my first test of conviction came as a young woman trying to take the gospel message to my neighbors. I soon learned that often their convictions were as strong as mine, and they could quote Scripture even more freely than I. There have been several times when I have been sought as a convert here or there, and I early learned the futility of argument, the security of personal, intensive, prayerful study.

As a youth I lived one winter at a Presbyterian parsonage in a small town where I was attending school. At the request of the minister, and since I was isolated from my own church, I taught in the church school, wrote the Christmas play, and was active in youth services. The pastor was a good man and very earnestly endeavored to win me from my own church to his. I read his books, and we spent long evenings discussing our differing viewpoints. He revealed his personal disbelief in the teachings of his church concerning infant baptism or eternal damnation, though he baptized the babies of his congregation. He could not believe that an uneducated man like Joseph Smith might have had a vision or received the plates of the Book of Mormon.

On these points my faith was unwavering, for I had read the Book of Mormon as a mere child and had a strong evidence of its divinity. Not only this, but I had a personal experience with God in healings, in visions, and in the reception of the Holy Ghost at confirmation. Had I not had these experiences I probably could not have withstood the earnest endeavor of this man to win me to his cause, for, like every youth, I wanted to feel needed and appreciated.

The Question of Healings

My next experience of "lo here, lo there," was with a completely invalidated neighbor. This mother had lain completely helpless for years, a victim of arthritis, dutifully cared for by her school-age daughter. How my heart ached for this family.

About once a week I would bundle my two babies into the roadster and drive across the Wyoming prairie to spend an afternoon with this woman, taking her delicacies, massaging her weary body, and reading to her from her Bible or some of my church books. She came to anticipate my visits and seemed to live for them from week to week.

This woman was converted to Christian Science and was unwavering in her belief. She gave me her books, and I read them carefully, since her daughter was reading my church books between visits. From this experience I learned that my church was not unique as a church of healing. But as I compared beliefs I found hers so pitifully lacking in the scope of mission which I saw in my church. I could not doubt the divinity of my church, but I could doubt that all other churches were evil.

It was after we came out of isolation into a stake of Zion that I had my most severe test of this kind. One of my near neighbors, a Seventh-Day Adventist with a missionary zeal that put me to shame, became my close friend. As we began to visit each other frequently we found we shared a mutual interest in study and began to discuss religion. This woman rocked my sureness of belief harder than it had ever been rocked.

I finally decided to yield the Sabbath day question (still unconvinced, but sure that she would then yield the question of immortality). I discovered that without latter-day revelation I had little support for some of my cherished beliefs. Was it true that we do sleep in the grave—that there is no life after death except for those who accept Christ and awake at his coming, that hell is really an erroneous translation of the Hebrew and Greek terms for grave?

I was wading through this maze of conflicting ideas when it was necessary for me to attend the double funeral of my small niece and nephew. As the soloist sang "Sleep, Little Lambs, Sleep," anguish of soul and desire to know the truth swept over me until I knew that without God's help I should completely break. In answer to my silent plea for help I was immediately given an open vision of paradise and saw these two children there with my beloved grandfather, who had died three years previously after many years of service in the Quorum of Seventy. These three were not dead! They were as alive as I and were continuing their quest for knowledge just as eagerly as they had in this life.

Where was doubt now? Gone, completely. I had passed through trial, doubt, questing, study, and had been freed through the power of the Holy Ghost.

All this leads up to the main thought I wish to present. Jesus was tried no doubt in many ways and on several occasions. The trials we read most about were the temptations of Satan after the forty-day fast of Jesus in the wilderness. These temptations closely parallel the Apostle John's list of three major weaknesses of the flesh: (1) pride of life, (2) lust of flesh, and (3) lust of eye (I John 2: 16).

Three Temptations

The first temptation that came to Jesus in this experience was the "lust of flesh." He was hungry, and Satan appealed to an inborn need of all flesh. The downfall of many is the lust of flesh—a full stomach, a satisfied body. But Jesus answered, "It is written, that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God" (Luke 4: 4).

The second temptation was "lust of eye." All the kingdoms of the world were placed in view, and all that Jesus' eye fell upon was promised him. Man's desire to find security in possessions is one of the major pitfalls of the flesh. Again Jesus answered, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Do we sometimes serve our possessions rather than using them to serve God?

The will to live is God-given. This will-to-live is twisted by Satan to fear of death, and many a soul has spent a lifetime in bondage through fear of death. Part of the mission of Christ was to help mankind overcome this fear (Hebrews 2: 15), to teach the way of eternal life, and to be the first fruits of the resurrection. If Satan could tempt Christ to reveal prematurely his power over life and death before Christ could teach mankind the way of eternal life and the nature of life after death, Satan would win. Doubtless Satan's promise to Jesus, quoted from Scripture, would have proved a lie. Satan said in this last temptation, using Jesus' own weapon, "It is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee; and in his hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." (See Psalm 91: 11-12.—Italics are mine.)

Jesus knew his mission was only begun and he must not jeopardize it with a premature urge to free man from the fear of death, man's pride of life. Jesus answered Satan, "It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (There are many other implications in the temptations of Jesus which cannot be analyzed here.)

It Is Written

How many troubles we as a church could have avoided (or might yet be spared) if we each knew more surely what is written. One of the problems I should like to cite is the name of our church. In Church History, Volume 1, page 77, we find Joseph Smith quoted as saying, "I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. . . ." We find on page 453 that at Kirtland in May, 1834, the matter of the church name was taken before the conference because the church was being called by various names. The clerks of that conference recorded the name approved as "The Church of the Latter Day Saints." Confusion remained. Finally at Far West in 1838 a revelation was given concerning the name of the church (Church History, Volume 2, page 151) ". . . For thus shall my church be called in the last days, even the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Since no conference action was taken to approve this message, it is not a law unto the church, but for me, "it is written."

Other challenges I have faced are interpretations of church leadership, succession in presidency, the supposed current coming of John the Baptist, the date of the restoration, and the apostasy of latter days. Some things still require a reservation of judgment.

My most recent experience with "lo, here, lo there," has been with friends who try to tell me the church I represent is in apostasy. They quote Malachi 3: 1 to prove to me that John the Baptist will lead the church out of apostasy. In Church History, Volume 1, pages 35-36, we learn that John the Baptist conferred the Aaronic priesthood on Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. In Volume 2, page 47, we read that at Kirtland Temple on Sunday, April 3, 1836, Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith went behind the pulpit vail and bowed in silent prayer.

Christ to Temple

Joseph says the Lord stood before them and told them he accepted the temple and promised, "I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house; yea, I will appear unto my servants, and speak unto them with mine own voice. . . ." Certain qualifications were given to this promise. Today Kirtland Temple is a holy house, sacred to this people, known far and near.

Then Moses appeared and committed to Joseph and Oliver the "keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the Ten Tribes from the land of the north."

Then Elias appeared. Since Elias means "restorer" and has been used to refer to more than one, we shall defer judgment. In Matthew 17: 10-14, I.V., Jesus refers to John the Baptist as Elias and speaks also of another who should restore all things. In Mark 9: 34, 9-11, I.V., John the Baptist and Moses appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration. Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 c mentions two personages as Elias. The Elias who appeared to Zacharias to announce the coming of John the Baptist was the angel, Gabriel (Luke 1: 11, 19, I.V.). Most Bible commentaries refer to Elias as Elijah.

The fourth visitant on this occasion in Kirtland Temple was Elijah who said, "Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. Therefore the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands. . . ."

In Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2 d we read, "And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me" (italics mine). In the face of all this, how could I long doubt or ever accept the invitation to leave the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

Examine Your Doubts

Examine your doubts. Where do they come from? What path do they indicate? What has been written?

Question your faith, but know the facts; search for the truth; keep always alert for evidences for and against, and defer judgment until all the facts are in or sufficient evidence is available to leave no room for doubt. Above all, keep your doubts to yourself for the time being. You might destroy the faith of one too immature in conviction to withstand the test you may bring him. Don't be critical of your church or its leaders, past or present.

Interesting Personalities

The Clinton Sisters

complete more than a century of teaching

SCHOOL BELLS did not ring this fall for Mrs. Floy Lane and Mrs. Winnie Coker, sisters, of Grannis, Arkansas, who retired from teaching after having taught forty years and thirty-eight years respectively.

A third sister, Mrs. Gladys Crockett, is now teaching her thirty-seventh year in the Gillham, Arkansas, grade school.

These three teachers, known in the vicinity as "the Clinton sisters," are the daughters of Mrs. Ella Clinton and the late Mr. Ed Clinton of Grannis.

Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Coker, and Mrs. Crockett have one hundred and fifteen years of teaching service behind them. All but five of the one hundred and fifteen years were spent in the Gillham-Grannis Consolidated School District.

Mrs. Lane was the "dean" of the trio. She began her teaching career at Potter School in Polk County, Arkansas, at the age of sixteen. Her salary at that time was forty dollars a month, which was above average pay. She paid ten dollars a month for board.

Mrs. Coker taught her first school year at the age of seventeen years. She served as principal of the Grannis School for thirty years.

Mrs. Crockett, the youngest of the trio, has the distinction of having been actually licensed to teach when she was only thirteen years old, but it was not until she was sixteen that she taught her first school in the Gillham-Grannis District, where she still teaches first grade. She is also a past president of the Sevier County Teachers' Association.

Mrs. Crockett and Mrs. Lane served their county and state as delegates to the National Education Convention in San Francisco in 1951 and the National Education Centennial Convention in Philadelphia in 1957.

Another sister, Mrs. Bertha Crager, also began as a teacher, but then became postmistress at Grannis, a position which she has held the past thirty-eight years. A brother, B. H. Clinton of Texarkana, has been employed by the International Creosoting and Construction Company the past thirty-five years.

All of the sisters make their homes in Grannis, Arkansas, where they have lived most of their lives. They have been members of the Reorganized Church since their youth. All are active in church work.

Sister Coker served as organist for more than thirty years, and Sisters Crockett and Crager have taught church school classes for many years.

Their mother, who had her eighty-second birthday in July, is also active in church work. She has served as church recorder, treasurer, and tithing solicitor for the Grannis mission for more than forty years. She recently wrote the history of the Grannis congregation for the General Church Historian.

Their father was in the lumber business for years prior to his death and at one time was associated in business with Elis Short.

The Arkansas Gazette and the Sevier County newspaper have both printed articles and pictures of these three "teaching sisters."

Have Something to Say

A group of people visited a friend who had recently bought a tape recorder. "Bring it out, Fred," suggested one. In response to this request, he set it up and invited each visitor to use it. As all took turns at the microphone, they stammered a few incoherent words, then gave up saying, "I don't know what to say." Finally one man took the microphone. "I know that my Redeemer liveth," he testified.

Just as this man had something to say when the opportunity arose, we should always have an endorsement ready to give the gospel whenever the opportunity arises. Surely, if we are valiant with the testimony of Christ and tell others of his restored church, we will enlighten many people and bring souls to God.

Bargain Hunting

ARE YOU a typical American? If so, you are probably very interested in finding bargains. Most of us are tempted at some time or another by this fascinating lure. We comb the daily papers for advertised sales. We search the bargain basements in our department stores. We wear out a quarter's worth of shoe leather—to say nothing of our toes and our tempers—to save a few pennies on a purchase that has been reduced for quick sale.

In one of our large cities is a building containing fifty thousand square feet of space devoted entirely to "bargains." In it are signs boldly proclaiming "The World's Biggest Bargains." Hundreds of people with very limited income mill around the counters looking and buying. But the fact is that these hundreds of shoppers are not finding bargains—they are buying junk.

Perhaps some of us are guilty of bargain hunting in our religious life. We just might be looking for something with a sale tag on it—something that can be purchased cheap. Let us be discriminating in our spiritual purchases. Merchandise in the church of the living God does not have to be offered at a reduced sale. It is an investment that proves worthy of its price tag.

Thousands of us have just returned from General Conference, where it was made known by the Spirit of God that this church offers no bargains; the price we must pay to become possessors of this gospel is not too high for the lowliest nor too low for the highest. It does have a price tag—marked "service." We might handle the merchandise of this church, but we cannot possess it unless we are willing to serve. We can rest assured that we will receive value for what we invest, but let us not be deceived by some antiquated phrase from the past—that the gospel is "free as the water we drink." Perhaps it is, but as someone else has said, "It has to be piped in." Plumbing these days is an expensive item.

Neither can we bargain with our time. Too many of us sell ourselves short. Time is valuable and should be used wisely. It, too, must be used to bring about the biggest dividend for our investment. Too many unplanned days and unplanned activities consume precious moments that need to be used constructively in building the kingdom of God.

Sir John Lubbock relates in The Use of Time that Pietro Medici is said to have once employed Michelangelo to make a statue of snow. We say that was a waste of time, but frequently we waste our precious time in deciding trifles, doing unrewarding things, and planning actions that should have been made habitual. A company once advertised a hair tonic with this slogan: "Use your head—save your hair." We might paraphrase this and say, "Use your head—save your time."

The church moves forward. We should all have a burning desire to move forward with it. But we cannot move forward on the efforts of someone else. We must earnestly face the fact that each of us must quit "bargain hunting" and make an honest investment. We must be willing to pay the price for the thing we wish to possess. We cannot sit back and wait for Johnny or Mary to do the many jobs awaiting our hands. Johnny and Mary are working out their own salvation—not ours.

Let us not be guilty of "buying junk." Let us find the real bargains in our spiritual lives. There are good returns from the right investments of service in the kingdom of God. Let us look forward and move forward toward the accomplishment of God's great purpose in our lives, remembering that the price tag bears the label, "service."

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1 b.

Who Are the Delinquents?

Apropos the great feeling of concern about the problem of juvenile delinquency, and the conduct of the young people, here is something to make parents think of their responsibilities. It is quoted from the Chicago Tribune:

Parental training has been growing more and more lax. . . . In another generation, unless parents take a decided stand for their rights, they will be ruled by the children. . . .

The lack of parental training at home is responsible for the lack of salutary discipline in the schools and the lawlessness which prevails among the children out of the schools. The old-fashioned idea of juvenile government is rapidly disappearing, and in its place the children are governing the parents. This has increased to such an extent that children are mainly sent to school to get rid of them, and when not in school are sent out on the streets for the same reason, where they remain until midnight or thereabouts. The damage which they are thus prevented from doing at home they do not hesitate to inflict upon other people, and with absolute impunity, because the person of a small boy is regarded as sacred however much of a nuisance and evil he may become. There is not one case in a hundred where children are trained to yield implicit obedience to their parents or to have that respect for their elders which was the rule fifty or sixty years ago.

Does this sound true, and do you agree with it? Very well, now consider the date when it was published. The Saints' Herald of August 11, 1897, quoted it from the Chicago Tribune.

This was not written about the little "monsters" of today. If you are in your sixties or seventies, it was written about you and your generation. If you are younger, it was written about your parents or possibly your grandparents.

Perfection—the "Golden Age"—always seems to have been about the time the speaker or writer was a child; and if you believe him, he "was good, and very, very good," and rarely, or hardly ever, "bad or horrid." L. J. L.

Criticism is destructive. It will destroy your own faith and undermine the faith of others. To keep one's doubts or criticisms to one's self is not blind allegiance or a means of fostering blindness. It is only refraining from being a tempter to self and others.

Question if you will, but study just as hard to support your faith as you do to disprove it. It is tragic to see once active persons in the church become carping critics of their predecessors or associates in the church. Their families always suffer and usually some members are lost in allegiance to the cause of Christ.

Teach the peaceable things of the kingdom (see Doctrine and Covenants 35: 1; 39: 2; 42: 17 a). Never give up your faith until you have sought diligently the answers to your problems. Your loyalty to your church should be based on the results of testing, on faith verified through study, and the witness which comes from the Holy Ghost. Blind allegiance is never good. Enlightened allegiance builds strength to meet every test.

We Still Have Pioneers

(A story of nonresidents in evangelistic action)

THE HEAVENLY Father has many wonderful ways to reach his people. It is small wonder the Apostle Paul labored under the conviction that they were "called to be saints."

Three decades ago a young lady left a small Illinois town of five hundred population. No one there had heard of Latter Day Saintism to the point of interest. About fifteen years ago this same lady heard about the gospel restored and was converted to it in southern Missouri. She returned to Cave in Rock, Illinois, just a few years ago. There she married Ted Simmons and settled in their new home.

Opportunities to share the gospel with her companion seemed futile until one night when she was reading the Book of Mormon he jokingly made light of religion and grafting men who have made merchandise of people. "How much did the man who wrote that book make?" he asked facetiously. Grada Pearl answered, a little hurt but with a burning conviction, "Ted, the man who wrote this book was a prophet of God. He suffered persecution for his beliefs and finally was killed by a mob because of this religion." A change came over Ted right there and repentantly he spoke, "Let me read that book. If Joseph Smith was willing to die for what he believed, I should be willing to read it. I know from Scripture that prophets were killed and other believers persecuted." This was the turning point in Ted Simmons' life.

It wasn't long before he accepted the gospel. In March, 1957, he was the first one to be baptized in the Cave in Rock group. Now there were two to tell the story, and tell it they did.

A devoted nonresident pastor who accepted his work as a stewardship made a contact with the only member there in 1955. That night, after visiting with Grada Pearl Simmons, he came to his wife and said, "Today I met a missionary." Brother and Sister Norman Jackson traveled back a number of times to keep this contact alive. They did not complain about the time it took to drive that one hundred and twenty-five-mile round trip. They only knew that here was a soul who needed the ministry of the priesthood.

Brother Jackson invited other priesthood members from the district to make visits there with him, and a number of them did. In October, 1957, Brother Jackson arranged for the Seventy assigned to the district to conduct a missionary series at Cave in Rock. Seventy Cecil Robbins shared in this pioneering series to baptize four other people. Further cottage meetings brought two more into the church in March, 1958.

Brother Ted Simmons, in the church a year, witnessed these cottage meetings, felt he could conduct some, and with borrowed slides, screen, and projector, held a series of five cottage meetings.

Four more persons were ready for baptism in June, 1958. These four live across the Ohio River in Kentucky.

In February, 1958, they organized the first church school group there and have been meeting every week since. They still have no priesthood, but the future holds great assurances.

In the heat of August another preaching series was held. The group mailed out five hundred printed invitations, borrowed a country schoolhouse, and prepared for the preaching ministry of Seventy A. M. Pelletier. The smallest attendance was twenty-three, but it mounted to fifty-four and forty-three nonmembers in attendance who wanted to hear this message which is still so new in that area. On August 22 three more were baptized in the Ohio River.

In April, 1957, only one nonresident Saint lived at Cave in Rock; in September, 1958, there were seventeen members. Two of these now serve as the caretakers at the Brush Creek Reunion Grounds. Brother Simmons is continuing cottage meetings. Arrangements are made for regular Sunday night speakers to come from other congregations, the nearest being thirty-five miles away. More decisions and commitments in baptism are expected.

When these people learned that thirty-five members and a couple of priesthood members were needed as a minimum for mission organization, they expressed with the faith of believing children, "Oh, we should be ready for mission organization in a year or a year and a half." To be in Cave in Rock for a week, to see the faith of these good people, and to minister to them is to believe that they will do it. Even more, in a few years they could be a strong and effective branch.

Great God, grant such courage and vision to other small groups so they might tell the story convincingly that more may be won.

A. M. PELLETIER, JR.

This story of the Apostle Paul is vividly told and should help your junior age child become better acquainted with Paul as a real, live individual, rather than just another Bible story character. It is from the "Heroes for God" series.

Book Review

More
New Testament Words .

By William Barclay

Harper and Brothers

Price, $3.00

This book is a sequel to an earlier volume entitled A New Testament Wordbook. It represents the continuing effort of the author to show the everyday meaning of words used in classical Greek and Hellenistic writings, with particular emphasis on their development and use by New Testament writers. This volume discusses twenty-four key words. The typical pattern employed presents the meaning and usage of the word in classical Greek followed by some discussion of the appearance of the word in secular literature, then a discussion of the use of the word by New Testament writers together with some excellent exposition.

This volume should be of special interest to those who are concerned with New Testament doctrine and theology. It is of value to members of the priesthood who are interested in gaining a better understanding of the relationship between literal translation and the distinctive interpretation that is attached to the Scriptures in the church. For instance, consider the word aiōnios, the word for eternity. In discussing its use in the description of the principle of eternal life of which Jesus spoke much, Dr. Barclay says, "Simply to take it as meaning lasting for ever is not enough. In all these passages we must remember the essential meaning of Aionios . . . [it] is the word of eternity as opposed to and contrasted with time. It is the word of deity as opposed and contrasted with humanity." There is much in what the author writes which strengthens the understanding and conviction of the reader whose doctrinal interpretation accords with the traditional thinking of the church. To this sound basis the writer brings a depth of concept which should enrich the current understanding of most readers.

Out of the Dust

Out of the dust the prophets of long ago have spoken to us with words of comfort and counsel. Paul Wellington has gathered some of the gems from the Book of Mormon into this little volume.

It is excellent for member and nonmember alike. Under such headings as Belief, Hope, Prayer, and Peace will be found suitable readings for personal and public devotions.

At the beginning of each subject is a reproduction of one of the characters sent to Professor Anthon.

It is a beautiful little booklet and would make an ideal Christmas gift for that nonmember friend, or for that college son or daughter, or buy it for yourself.

Apostle Neff at District Conference

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.—The branch was host to the fall conference of the Waterloo-Clinton District on Sunday, October 25. There was a good representation from the entire district. This was the first conference Charles D. Neff had attended as an apostle.

The afternoon business meeting was preceded by the morning prayer and testimony service and a preaching service, with Brother Neff as speaker. At noon the women's department provided the meal in the lower auditorium.

The afternoon business meeting was called to order by District President Clarence M. Beil of Clinton. District Counselor J. D. Anderson of Iowa City gave the invocation. Brother Beil conducted the usual district business.

The district then approved the action of the Iowa City mission in purchasing a large home in Iowa City to serve as a student and worship center for University of Iowa students and permanent residents of Iowa City.

The following priesthood calls were presented and approved: office of deacon, Russell Hoke, Anamosa; office of priest, Leonard Joslin and Jerry Naylor of Anamosa, and James Moss, Jr., of Oelwein. Apostle Neff then guided the conference in election of district officers.

New officers are Clarence M. Beil, president; Roy Hanes and J. D. Anderson, counselors; Carl Wenzholz, treasurer; Laurine Clark, secretary and recorder; Evert McFarlane, bishop's agent; Fern Hynden, director of women; Richard C. Setterberg, publicity; Burton R. Baptisms on Ranch of Pastor

BARSTOW, CALIFORNIA.—The mission added two to their membership when Pastor Donald E. Phelps baptized his son Larry, eight years old, and Mrs. Emma Hanes, formerly of Weir, Kansas, who is eighty-five years old. Sister Hanes is the mother of Rhoda Phelps, formerly of Pittsburg, Kansas. She came to Barstow in July to make her home with Sister Phelps.

Once before Sister Hanes had decided to be baptized, but the baptism did not take place after her daughters, Ruth Babcock and Rhoda Phelps, had made arrangements. She had only been in Barstow a month when she surprised everyone by saying she wanted to be baptized.

Since Barstow has no baptismal font, Brother Phelps decided to use the swimming pool on their ranch in Hinkley, California. A small group gathered on August 3 to witness the baptisms of the oldest and youngest in the mission.

Sister Hanes has been seriously ill since September 26, but has since shown improvement and is busily engaged in her hobby of piecing quilts. Sister Hanes now completes four generations aligned for Christ and his kingdom.—Reported by VI TARLING

Able to Attend Conference

The Friday evening before Conference I lifted a tea kettle of boiling water from the stove and, for no apparent reason, let it fall. As it struck the edge of the stove and tipped toward me, the lid fell off. My first thought was "I'll be burned so badly I can't attend Conference," and then I prayed, "God help me." The water splashed on me and the floor at my feet, but I was not burned. I was very grateful. The only reason I could think of why this happened was that God wished me to know he was looking after me.

I enjoyed the Conference and was especially pleased with the wisdom, humility, and harmony in evidence at it.

Each New Day a Gift

It is some time yet until Christmas, but the stores are decorated for the holidays. On the radio we hear advertised many things that would make ideal gifts for our friends, our families, and our loved ones. On television we see suggested items for our Christmas shopping list.

We receive and give gifts not only at Christmas but on special occasions throughout the year. These are appreciated not only for the gifts themselves but for the spirit of the givers.

I well remember that when our youngest son was small—about a second grader—he brought home on a special occasion a folded sheet of colored construction paper that the teacher had helped him decorate with crayon. Written on the front in his childish penmanship were the words: "To My Mother." Inside was a piece of paper tucked into a slit; on this was written "I Love You." Money could not have bought a more appreciated gift. Later—perhaps a year or so after he had given it to me—I was looking at it and found a dollar bill hidden in it. ("Dad" must have had some part in this.) I somehow had missed it when I received the card. This son is now in the service of his country and we seldom see him. Today I still treasure the memory of what he did as a child.

It doesn't always take money for gifts. If we live close to our heavenly Father, we will be able to recognize avenues of service. We may never know the value our services can be to others.

This morning, while going about my daily tasks, I was thinking of the gifts I have received and am still receiving from God. One seemed to stand out above the others: a new day. I thought, It is early, I have the whole day before me. What am I going to do with it? I can rush through it with tasks that will consume each hour and still I will not get everything done that I would like to do. Or I can take this gift and ask my Master to help me recognize opportunities to draw close to him. In so doing, I shall experience the greatest joys this life can afford.

Today isn't "just another day" unless we choose to make it so. It is a gift to us from God to do with as we will. From whom could we receive a gift to be more appreciated?

Trust in God

As I renew my subscription to the Herald I also wish to bear my testimony of one very important experience I've had recently. I have learned to put my full trust in God and let him take charge over things beyond my control.

If your problem has been trying to carry your burdens by yourself, I suggest you do as I have done. You will rejoice to find how much lighter those burdens will become. You will find new peace of mind.

Let us not worry over those things we cannot control. Rather, let us pray "Thy will be done, Father," and leave the rest to him. That which we can control deserves our concern, but that which is beyond our power to deal with we must leave to Him, lest it destroy us.

And Finally...

I LIKE STEEPLES

I like church steeples. Tall towers above the trees, gleaming white steeples, dotting the wooded countryside, are a constant reminder of man's reach for God. In quiet cities on Sunday morn choirs of bells from slate steeples which arch the sky raise hearts above the sordid city's grime and draw careworn eyes up to towering cross and heaven above. I like steeples. "Useless" they may be, but beautiful to me; "nonfunctional" to some, but to me inspiring symbols of man's need for God's love for man. Where are these ancient steeples? Disappearing with generations past and gone? New churches rise with practical square bell towers or squat vestigial skeletons that barely can be seen, leaving skylines clustered with smokestacks, skyscrapers, pent-houses, and theater marquees as modern symbols to denote man's new love and the objects of his worship. Oh, architects who strive to please utility and passing fads, restore to me the tall and graceful steeple as a constant memory of the sacrifice of God's son for me and the ultimate victory of truth that yet must be.

ISOLATION

Most people attend a convention to be with a group because of some common interest. With a registration of over eight thousand it was difficult to find a place where two friends could meet for private conversation around the Auditorium at General Conference time. As I entered the building one afternoon by the south entrance, two young ladies were in conversation while sitting on the cement steps. "Enjoying the fresh air?" I inquired. "We were in need of isolation." The reply set up a chain of thoughts. Conferences are helpful for achieving certain ends, but there are times when friends need to commune while insulated from the ears of others. A face-to-face talk with a friend has no substitute. The tie that binds becomes more firm. A few minutes of "ice-o-lation" helps us put rumors at rest and problems "on ice." Perhaps our nervous systems would respond favorably to set periods of insulation from the clang of the phone, the blare of the radio and TV, and the chatter of the crowd. Isolation with man's personal Friend and communion with him through reading his Word might keep the psychiatrist away. C. B. H.

JUST A MINUTE

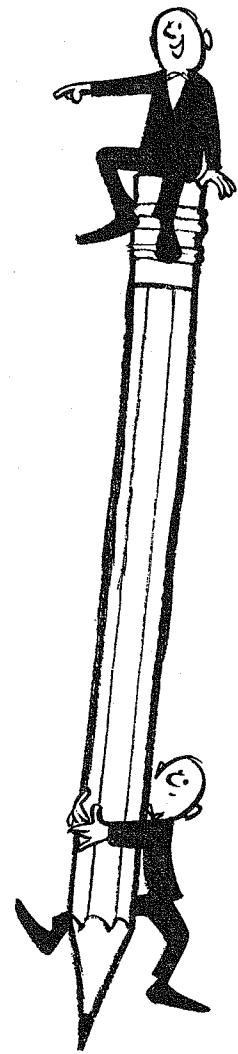

Yes, a minute has only sixty seconds in it, but in that length of time we could make a decision which would change our whole life or one that would abruptly end it. That's all it takes, just sixty seconds. This minute is something which seems thrust upon us—something which we cannot refuse. It has been allotted to us by Providence. So far as our own mental capacities are concerned, we have no recollection of seeking or choosing it, but it is up to each of us to use it to the very best of our ability. If we lose this minute we suffer; and if we abuse it, the same is true. It is a small thing—this present minute—but our whole future can be affected by what we do with it.

Accounting and financial responsibility are recognized as an integral part of the doctrine of the church. To make this accounting readily within the reach of all members of the church, three account books have been prepared: one for the very young, My Stewardship Book; one for those a little older with more financial problems, Youth Income and Expense Record; and for those who are married or with family expense problems there is the Family Income, Expense and Budget Record.

Three Take Up New Offices

Tickemyer, Westwood, and Young Begin New Responsibilities

THREE PERSONS who accepted new responsibilities at the recent General Conference were Garland E. Tickemyer, Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Jr., and Fred L. Young.

Following the resignation of Ward A. Hougas as president of the high priests' quorum, Brother Tickemyer was chosen to fill the vacancy. Previously he had served as president of Los Angeles Stake since 1950. He was set apart as president of the quorum of high priests under the hands of Presidents Maurice L. Draper and F. Henry Edwards.

Brother Tickemyer has served the church as an appointee for nearly twenty-five years. During this time he has pioneered in several fields. He developed co-educational junior and junior high camping programs for children eight to fourteen years old and had much to do with establishing the pattern for metropolitan decentralization that has influenced administrative procedures throughout the church. He was also the first minister of our church invited to join the Independence Ministerial Alliance.

During his years of ministry, Brother Tickemyer has served as pastor in Wichita, president of the Southwestern Kansas District, pastor of the Stone Church, pastor of the Central Los Angeles Church, and president of the Los Angeles Metropolitan District.

Now Brother Tickemyer is pioneering again, this time in the newly created position of interdistrict co-ordinator. He is assigned as co-ordinator of the Northwest Texas, Southeast Texas, and Southwest Texas Districts. Elder Duane Couey has been assigned as president of Los Angeles Stake subject to approval by the stake conference, replacing Brother Tickemyer.

The Tickemyer family consists of Brother Tickemyer, his wife, Hazel, and two sons, Garland Lee and David Kent.

Also at the Conference, Mrs. S. A. Burgess resigned as director of the Department of Women. Appointed to be her successor is Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Jr., of Independence.

Sister Westwood has been active in the Stone Church women's department for six years and served as leader for two years. Last year she was secretary of the Center Stake women's department. She is completing her nineteenth year as director of the Cantanina Chorus, a Stone Church choir of young women. Mrs. Westwood's husband, J. T. Westwood, Jr., has been church school superintendent at the Stone Church for the past six years. They have two sons, Gerry and Tom.

Elder Fred L. Young became General Church secretary succeeding Charles Neff who was ordained to the Council of Twelve. Elder Young will also continue as executive secretary to the First Presidency, a position he has held for five years.

Brother Young has served as assistant General Church secretary and will move easily into his new responsibility. Roy Stearns, executive secretary to the Council of Twelve, will be the new assistant General Church secretary. Brother Young has been an elder since 1954 and is active in Center Stake as a speaker and teacher. His ordination to the high priesthood has been authorized and will take place at an early date.

Mrs. Young is the former Lucy Barber. They have two daughters, Krisna Kay and Andrea Sue.

The "Missing Books" of the Bible

THE HOLY BIBLE is not a book but a library of books. The Inspired Version has sixty-five "book" titles, the Douay Version (Catholic) has seventy-three, while the Authorized Version (King James) has sixty-six. All of the modern versions also have sixty-six.

The Compendium of the Scriptures lists (page 122) twenty-one books which are mentioned in the Bible which are not to be found in the collection of sacred writings. Neither are they found among the Apocrypha which is part of the Douay Version and is also published separately.

The Song of Solomon is missing from the Inspired Version. When Joseph Smith, Jr., was engaged in the work of correcting the Scriptures and came to the Song, he wrote on it simply, "The Song of Solomon is not inspired writing."

The Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary of the Bible says, ". . . for a long while there was dispute as to its canonicity, and it is a singular fact that the Song is never referred to in the other Old Testament books, the Old Testament Apocrypha, the New Testament, Philo, or Josephus. . . . All modern scholars are agreed that Solomon could not possibly have written the Song which now bears his name" (pages 860, 862).

One needs to read only the first chapter of the Song to tell that it is not of scriptural quality. However, it is significant that the young prophet, Joseph Smith, was the first one brave enough to omit it from the canon. According to his statement, as published in the Times and Seasons, Volume 6, page 802, he finished his work on the Holy Scriptures

(Inspired Version) "this day" (July 2, 1833). Perhaps it was not courage which caused him to reject this part of the Bible. Rather it was his implicit faith in the divine guidance which led him. There is not any evidence that he ever hesitated because of what the world might think of him or do to him when he believed that the Lord had spoken.

The Reorganized Church has never accepted the Apocryphal books as Scripture. The Prophet inquired of the Lord as he was engaged in correcting the King James Version of the Bible as to whether these books should be included in the revision. The following revelation was received March 9, 1833, on the subject:

There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men. Verily I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated.—Doctrine and Covenants 88: 1.

It would seem that a similar statement could be made about all the other documents which are referred to as "missing books" of the Bible. Those who search them for statements to their liking and quote them to sustain a particular point of view are risking deception. Through the centuries charlatans have used the names of others to make their message sound authoritative.

In the light of the revelation quoted, it is possible that the passages one might select would be from the interpolated and untrue parts.

What Did the Man Say?

SINCE 1831 books and articles have appeared with increasing regularity in this country concerning the founder of the Latter Day Saint church. The Berrian Library of New York City had a section with "over seven hundred volumes classified under Mormonism" some fifteen years ago. It is safe to presume that Joseph Smith's name is prominent in every one of these—and further, that he is discussed in scurrilous, defamatory, and with unsupported charges in many if not all of them.

No other person of world-wide prominence occupies such a unique place in the field of literature. Why should the founder of a religious sect which influenced the lives and thinking of tens of millions during the past one and a quarter centuries be so universally distrusted and persecuted by writers? In recent years much of the literature seems to come from persons who have once been associated with Latter Day Saintism and in writing against it try to justify their tergiversation. Then there is another class of denominational writers who prepare short courses for class consumption which will anticipate the home visitation of Mormon missionaries.

As a tree is to be judged by its fruit, so a man should be judged by what he writes and does, and not by what his enemies say about him. Smith testified that an angel told him ". . . my name . . . should be good and evil spoken of among all people." Ample evidence supports the fulfillment of this prophecy. The enigma which the evidence does not explain is why the writers and editors of this literature never find anything that the man said which they consider worthy of printing. Must they write only sensational, anti-Mormon copy to get into print?

Considering that he lived only thirty-nine years, Joseph Smith, Jr., was a prodigious writer. Much of his work will compare favorably with that found in the Old and New Testaments. Literary integrity seems to demand that someday soon some of the writers will examine it from an objective viewpoint and have the courage say, "Here is the reason the man lives today even though he was mobbed and murdered over a century ago and has been literarily crucified almost every year since."

Excellent Response to 1958 Auditorium Fund Needs

The latest analysis of 1958 Auditorium contributions reveals the pleasant fact that almost one fourth of the districts and stakes have reached 1958 quotas by the end of October. This gratifying response to the needs of the Auditorium is eloquent witness that this important edifice belongs to all the people of the church.

Such devotion as this deserves recognition by the entire membership. We are therefore listing immediately below the names of the "honor areas" (beginning with the area with the highest percentage of quota raised):

- 1 Red River (North Dakota)
- 2 Kansas City Stake
- 3 Arizona
- 4 Oklahoma City
- 5 Alberta (Canada)
- 6 Joplin
- 7 North East Illinois
- 8 Niagara
- 9 Los Angeles Stake
- 10 Center Stake
- 11 Kansas-Colorado
- 12 Nebraska
- 13 Lamoni Stake
- 14 Maine
- 15 Kaw Valley (Kansas)
- 16 Utah - S. E. Idaho
- 17 Toronto Metropolitan
- 18 Galesburg
- 19 Western Oklahoma
- 20 Mobile
- 21 Rich Hill

The percentages of quota raised vary in the above list from 199 to 100.5 per cent.

The ten month total of Auditorium contributions from all domestic districts (plus Hawaii) and stakes indicates that 90 per cent of the church-wide 1958 Auditorium quota has been achieved as of October 31.

As gratifying as the response this year to Auditorium needs has been, we nevertheless must emphasize that the construction objectives immediately ahead do not allow us the luxury of relaxing in the final weeks of 1958. Indeed, our goals to be completed before 1960 (as specified by the recent General Conference) can be achieved only if the above-named "honor areas" continue to contribute to the Auditorium along with the districts and stakes which have not yet reached 1958 quotas. It is significant that almost 60 per cent of the districts and stakes at the end of ten months were behind schedule in regard to their 1958 quotas.

We therefore urge the membership to give serious consideration to including the Auditorium on its Christmas gift list this year. As in the past, and in accordance with the will of the General Conference, all Christmas Offerings will go toward completion of the Auditorium.

Remembering the Auditorium at Christmas time will not only insure the reaching of 1958 quotas but give significant impetus to the task immediately ahead. To this end all of us are committed.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

Across the Desk

Elder David Judd, who is serving as guide at the Nauvoo Historical Properties, reports an increase in visitors to the site:

During October of this year, we had 3,352 visitors as compared with 2,032 for the previous best October on record (1956). The total so far this year (to November 1) is 19,446. This does not, however, include the months of January and February for which there are no records. The previous best year was 19,000. We will easily exceed 20,000 this year.

August broke all records for total number of visitors in one month. A total of 5,349 compares with a previous high of 3,600. Sales of literature and slides have been unusually high, too. Sales for this year so far are over $2,200 as compared to last year's record of $1,406. Offerings and donations are running about even with last year.

From Robert S. Farnham, chaplain of the "San":

The hospital employs 344 persons on a full-time basis and 82 on a part-time basis. Forty-five per cent of the employees belong to other faiths, and nearly every Christian religion is represented. Some who work at the "San" come from distant places: Australia, Korea, Hawaii, Alaska, Latvia, Germany, England, and Canada. There are 118 student nurses in addition to the employees. All these working together in the spirit of co-operation make a good team.

Some bring years of training and experience to their work. Precision and skill are necessary. Others do manual labor. Some bring special talents that are needed to expedite the work and keep things running smoothly, but there is something more. These people bring a quality of mind and heart that lifts the routine task to purposeful service—in fact, a real ministry. Some of these employees have left positions where the pay check was larger so that they might work here. At the end of the day they know their energies have been spent in a good cause, and someone has been helped in time of need.

We Have a Stewardship

It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor . . . that every man may give an account unto me.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22; 101: 2.

AS A LAD in exile in Egypt, Mary's son must have been very familiar with the story of Herod the Great. The immediate proclamation by the army of the rule of Archelaus, king of Judea, sent the new would-be king to Rome from Jericho to seek the sanction of Augustus. Having received the emperor's favor, Archelaus, with the title of ethnarch, returned to Palestine to rule with a cruel hand. This reminds us of some of the tactics employed by Fascism and Communism—elimination of all opponents.

Years later as the earthly ministry of Christ was drawing to an end some felt that he would employ the same method to restore lost glory to Israel and set up the kingdom of God. However, they soon learned the kingdom of God was not by coercion but by love and right choices of a people who had learned to love with the same love that prompted the Nazarene to give himself on the Cross of Calvary.

Glory to God

Christ in this manner gave an acceptable accounting to God for that with which he had been entrusted—the eternal life of man through the gospel of regeneration. What is the thing with which we as members of the Church of Jesus Christ have been entrusted and charged as stewards? Is it not the gospel of our Lord? "Go ye into all the world" implies that the rich, poor, white, black, American, and all others are to receive the gospel. Paul said, "Let a man so account . . . as . . . stewards . . . of God" (I Corinthians 4: 1). Peter wrote of "good stewards of the manifold grace of God" (I Peter 4: 10). To every member is given the gospel as a trust. As stewards for God it is obligatory for us to do business with the gospel. In the hands of stewards (good businessmen for Christ) it has an amazing power in overcoming the powers of men that would oppose God's kingdom on earth, whose song has always been "Glory to men in the highest" instead of "Glory to God in the highest."

All-inclusive Stewardship

To the true Christian, stewardship of the gospel involves stewardship of all else that he has. Having submitted ourselves to God in baptism, we are not our own and claim nothing as our own. We have been given the opportunity by God of using the things of the world, which he has created, as a trust fund. Stewardship of the gospel reveals the true value of all material gains. Faithful stewardship of the gospel is using the wealth of the world, under God's guidance, to aid in bringing to pass the "immortality and eternal life of man."

No Time to Waste

Stewardship of the gospel involves our time and makes it imperative that our time be spent creatively. In the time allotted to man by God there is enough for him to accomplish the tasks assigned him but none to waste. All proper use of time is related to the kingdom—the business of stewards. Daily work, rest, refreshment, recreation, worship, devotion, service, and soul-winning should be so designed as to promulgate the gospel of our Lord. Time spent with no relation to spreading the gospel is wasted and a sin for which man is held accountable. A steward of the gospel of Christ is never satisfied with the twenty-four hours of any given day. He can see so much unfinished work at the close of the day that he wishes there were more hours to spend in the service of his Lord.

To aid us to make good use of our time, why not begin at 6:00 A.M. on a given day and record the activities for every hour during the next twenty-four-hour period, allowing time for sleeping, and see how many hours could have been spent more usefully? The results of such an understanding might prove to be very enlightening. The question here is not how much time the Lord has allotted us, but how we use the time given. If, as stewards, we learn well the task of carrying forward the work entrusted to our care, God will provide an eternity for us to carry the work to completion. A developed ability to manage profitably the things of God here through wisely spent time is a guarantee of eternal life hereafter.

Wise Use of Talents

Talent is to be devoted to this service of God. Too often it is used for other purposes. Sometimes we think of our talents as a means for achieving fame, wealth, or power. We seem to forget how quickly the things of the world have lost their value for men of the past who have not given God a place in their lives, and how soon they can again become worthless for those who misuse their talents to this end only. The test of life's accomplishments is What did I do with the gospel of Christ? If we have used our abilities to do business with the gospel, life has been profitable; but if they have been used to gain other ends, life has been drudgery.

Stewardship is partnership with God, and since the kingdom of God is not by coercion, our Father permits us to use our talents as we choose. Wise management trains us to handle greater things and more talents, for we are told, "Whosoever receiveth, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath" (Matthew 13: 10, I.V.). Stewardship of the gospel of Christ is an exclusive privilege of the dedicated people of God.

All Are Called

Every member of the Church of Jesus Christ has this privilege and responsibility. In Luke 19: 13, Jesus said, "He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds." In this parable of the nobleman, we note that he called all the servants he had and delivered to each of them a pound. Every person who receives membership in the Church of Jesus Christ receives the gospel as his pound with which to do business. The spread of the gospel is not the task of the priesthood and chief missionary quorums of the church only. The laity, including every man, woman, and child, has an obligation to do business according to the gospel principles so that the kingdom of God might come on earth as it is in heaven.

This stewardship responsibility is clearly stamped "Not Transferable." It cannot be shifted to anyone else. Each has his pound and must account for the profit he has made as he has used it. Each must answer for the use of his powers and possessions in spreading the life-giving news. Others may have more and be able to do things I cannot, but my responsibility is to use wisely the possessions and talents that have been given me that I might show an increase as I do business with my pounds.

Our growth and expansion of abilities is measured by our diligence. If our measure is stingy, God will necessarily measure accordingly the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, and talents that permit us to be profitable stewards. When we use wisely that which God has already given, we cultivate the capacity to receive more. As our knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom expand, Zion will be more nearly perfected.

The Salvation of Souls

Too often we have thought of stewardship in terms of an annual accounting to be sent to the Presiding Bishopric instead of a means to develop character and build life. I once read a story about a farmer, the father of six boys, who was rebuked by his neighbor because he kept his sons so busy at farm work. "Tom," said the neighbor, "you don't have to work your boys so hard to raise a crop." "I'm not worried about raising a crop," was the answer. "I'm raising boys."

God is not greatly concerned with our financial reports or accountings as such. He is concerned with the development of men and women who can be trusted with the concerns of his eternal plan—the building of the kingdom of God for the salvation of the soul of man. Can we afford to take lightly our part in this great task by being poor stewards? Can we afford to use our talents to other ends? Need we be concerned about soul-winning and the gathering of material to bring this to pass? One so concerned will see the accounting rendered to the Presiding Bishopric of material wealth as only a natural consequence of our righteous concern for the things of God. Could it be that our cardinal sin is negligence? Do we lay the gospel away in a napkin by so doing and feel that since we have kept it in this manner we will satisfy the Lord? Good stewards are profitable servants.

Always an Increase

Uselessness is sin. What had the fig tree done that Jesus cursed? Nothing. It hadn't given off poisonous fruit; it gave none. What had the priest and Levite done in the story of the good Samaritan? Nothing. A good steward must be diligent. If a man is able to perform physical labor and will not, he is not a good steward of money. A member of the Church of Jesus Christ who is a leader by his abilities and will not take positions of leadership is not a good steward of talent. A person who can witness for Christ as a missionary and will not do so is not a good steward of the gospel of Christ.

One class of stewards does not appear in the parable of the pounds. That is the class who used the pound without profit. All who used it showed a gain. There is no losing group. No one who tries to do business by gospel principles fails. No life devoted to the Master's service is fruitless. Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up . . . will draw all men unto me" (John 12: 32). If we will only lift high the flag of King Immanuel, he will bring victory.

How near to perfection might Zion now be had we been good stewards. We must not, we dare not, neglect the stewardship entrusted to us by God. We must cultivate a passionate desire for the souls of men who know not the full gospel of our Lord. The world depends upon us. God depends upon us.

Now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation. It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor.

Move Ahead on Auditorium

Plans for finishing the lower auditorium are being finalized and will soon be sent out for bids, according to the Presiding Bishopric.

The October General Conference voted to continue construction work at the Auditorium and set the 1960 Conference as a goal for finishing the lower auditorium, stone facing on the front wings, another elevator, and a south portico.

When the plans for work on the lower auditorium have been approved and bids accepted, work will begin as soon as funds are available. At present plans call for work on the lower auditorium to begin first. Other work will follow later.

The Bishopric is again asking that members make a Christmas offering to the Auditorium. It is hoped that these offerings will make it possible to go ahead and contract for most of the work that has been planned for the next eighteen months.

Remarkable gains have been made in the past few years in increasing the number of contributors to the Auditorium fund and also in size of contributions. Current records show that about 50,000 persons contribute to the General Church in a year. The number of persons that contribute to the Auditorium is smaller, however.

It was recently pointed out in the columns of the Herald that it would only be necessary for half the Saints to contribute one dollar a week for less than three months for all the work to be completed on the Auditorium. However, only about one third of the Saints are now carrying the load financially.

Following General Conference, there was $130,000 on hand for continuing Auditorium construction. The Presiding Bishopric has set an additional $100,000 as the goal for the first of the year. It is hoped that much of this can be raised in the Christmas offering.

Contributions to help continue Auditorium work may be made through the duplex envelopes or mailed directly to the Presiding Bishopric at the Auditorium in Independence.

The 1958 Messiah Broadcast from the General Conference Chamber

THE RECENTLY COMPLETED Conference Chamber of the Auditorium which was designed to offer ministry to the church and community is playing a new and wider role this year as it provides an appropriate setting for the annual broadcast of Handel's Messiah by the church-sponsored Independence Messiah Choir.

Messiah performances have been presented before to local audiences in the Auditorium as well as in the Stone Church, but for many years it was necessary, in order to secure acoustical perfection, to make the broadcast from a Kansas City hotel. Later the new Van Horn High School Auditorium in Independence provided the setting for the performances as well as for the broadcast recording. This year upon the completion of the General Conference Chamber with its many acoustical improvements it was felt that the performance again could be presented in the Auditorium and for the first time could also be recorded there for distribution to radio stations for the Christmas season broadcast.

The striking beauty, as well as the new comforts of the Conference Chamber, will be in the mind's eye of thousands of our church members, who participated in the last General Conference, as they listen to this year's broadcast of the Messiah. Thousands of our members and friends who have not sat in this fine chamber will be able to enjoy its acoustical qualities.

This year's forty-second performance offered by the church as a Christmas gift to Messiah listeners will feature two new soloists: Audrey Paul, a young contralto from Chicago, and Howard Jarratt, tenor from New York. Soloists familiar to the listening audience will be Maud Nosler, soprano, and Richard Schreiber, bass, both of Chicago. Familiar also will be the harpsichord of Dorothy Lane, another Chicagoan.

An unusual feature of the broadcast will be the orchestral accompaniment of thirty-two members of the Kansas City Philharmonic, selected to play the original Handel orchestration including the harpsichord and organ. The orchestra will support the 250 voices of church members and friends representing many faiths from Independence, Kansas City, and surrounding communities, who comprise the 1958 Messiah Choir.

Directing the entire production will be Franklyn S. Weddle, music director of the church serving his sixteenth year in this important role. He has been assisted this year by Frank K. Hunter, recently assigned to the church music department. At the organ will be Bethel Knoche, radio choir organist.

For the nineteenth consecutive year Messiah will be presented nationwide and abroad over the air waves by the church. More than 600 stations throughout the United States, Canada, Hawaii, Alaska, and other nations will carry the program this year.

To enable local congregations to take maximum advantage of this major event of interest to music lovers everywhere, Messiah publicity materials have been sent to all pastors in the domestic field and to centers in missions abroad. Attractive posters have been supplied for church bulletin boards. Materials have been provided for advertising in newspapers and on the radio. It is hoped that every member will be alert to the possibilities of acquainting others with the church through this broadcast.

You can be of tremendous assistance by conducting a personal campaign to invite your friends to listen. Listening parties are popular in the homes of members and can easily be arranged in co-operation with the program of your branch by a few telephone calls.

May your Christmas and that of your friends be enriched, and may the mission of the church be enhanced through the ministry of Messiah.

Magic in Goodness

Think of yourself as one whose business it is to distribute goodness and beauty. Act in harmony with such thinking and people will turn to you as growing things turn to the sun. You will make them feel better. You will enrich their lives. You will nourish them. They, in turn, will share their love and helpfulness with you. There is magic in goodness not realized by many of us.

Crisis within the Church

As I CONSIDER the condition of the church today I see it at a crossroad. On one hand is the road leading to the fulfillment of the hopes of the Restoration in the achievement of the "marvelous work and a wonder." On the other hand is the road leading to a long period of decadence in which the church becomes increasingly satisfied with the status quo, and that status gradually deteriorates. On one hand lies untold opportunities and blessing; on the other, sorrow, wasted effort, and sin.

Any organization that is born, grows, and continues to live must have a purpose justifying its existence and the time, energies, and other resources necessary for its survival. The greater the significance of the purpose the more imposing will become the organization and the greater will be the sacrifice made to ensure that the organization prospers and fulfills its purpose.

On these grounds the Church of Jesus Christ, with the kingdom of God and the salvation of mankind as its goal, should be the greatest organization on earth and elicit from its members the greatest consecration and sacrifice. However, to our sadness and shame, the Church of Jesus Christ—on earth—does not have these characteristics. The reason is that the church—that is, the composite of its members—does not have the establishment of the kingdom of God as its purpose. I am not referring to our avowed purpose but to our real purpose as testified by our actions and the things that motivate us.

To What Purpose?

To what purposes have we given ourselves as members of His church? We have given ourselves to the maintenance of church attendance, to the winning of the respect of local communities, to the payment of the church debt, to the building of the Auditorium and more acceptable houses of worship, and to the winning of converts, if we mention the more laudable ones. But these purposes are wanting. They are not bad. Our mistake has been that through ignorance, neglect, lack of foresight, or for some other reason we have allowed them to become our primary goals to the suppression of those purposes which are truly first.

They are secondary and can only remain so. Taken by themselves they are empty and in many respects worldly. They hardly call for a martyr; one does not give his life for such causes. Perhaps this is why we have drawn them to us. We do not have to sacrifice even one meal to be able to make a contribution to debt reduction or the Auditorium fund and thus feel that we have contributed to "the work of the church." It is relatively easy to persuade people to join a group that is respected in public opinion and provides nice facilities.

The Kingdom Comes First

The purposes which we must take as those of greatest importance are given to us in Scripture. Jesus said, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."¹

It may be argued that these goals are too all-encompassing, too general to be taken as something to be accomplished in the daily life of the individual Saint. It can be argued that these over-all goals must be broken down so that one does not become discouraged before he sees any progress in the accomplishment of his aims. However, when the intermediate goals are allowed to obscure those of ultimate significance, or if they are allowed to push expected realization of the ultimate goals so far into the future as to prevent them from providing definite, recognizable motivation in the current activities of people, then the intermediate goals not only have lost their usefulness but also have become a hindrance in serving the real purpose of the organization.

In what way does the real acceptance of the kingdom of God and his righteousness as our primary goal contribute to improvement in our daily actions? We are told many things about the kingdom of God and there are, without doubt, many aspects of it. Yet the one characteristic that is basic is this: Christ is king. Whoever desires to be a citizen within the kingdom of God cannot escape the fact that he must likewise want to accept Christ as his sovereign Lord.

Any good citizen of even an earthly kingdom does not willy-nilly disregard the laws of the king. Anyone who truly desires to be a citizen of the kingdom of God cannot in any conceivable way consciously wish to or allow himself to disregard a commandment of the Lord. If he does, it is abundantly clear that he would not want to live under the reign of Christ in the first place. The desire of obedience must be so strong as to overcome all other desires, even the desire for life itself. As Jesus said, "If any man come to me, and . . . is afraid to lay down his life for my sake, [he] cannot be my disciple."²

Baptism an Important Step

In a very real sense, anyone who truly accepts Jesus as the king of his life becomes a part of Christ's kingdom, for where He reigns supreme He is king and that place is his kingdom. This is why baptism into his church can be considered entrance into his kingdom. Baptism represents the burial of all desires and ambitions to do other than what Jesus would have us do; it is also an expression of our determination to "always remember him and keep his commandments." However, we allowed our concept of baptism, or at least our teaching concerning it, to degenerate. I am sure that a great many of our candidates for baptism feel that they are just becoming members of an organization. They have no realization that they are expected to yield up their personal, selfish desires and accept in humility the entire will of the Father.

Selfishness Is Sin

The result is that in many ways and in many of their activities these people, as well as many others within the church, remain basically selfish. For example, witness the proportion of our members making their annual accounting to the bishop. This selfishness, regardless of how it is demonstrated, is sin. God commands: "he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out."³ In light of this, such selfishness becomes serious indeed. Furthermore, those who are responsible for administering God's laws, and who through either neglect or refusal fail to carry out this commandment, are just as guilty and probably more so than the one guilty of the selfishness.

While in some respects the bringing forth of the kingdom of God may appear to be a long-time process, the decision to place Christ above self or indeed anything else can be made in a matter of seconds. It will take time for the individual to learn all the things that Christ would have him to do, but these things will be done as soon as they are learned if the basic loyalty has been established. And without this loyalty there will never be a kingdom of God on earth. Building churches and Auditoriums and "converting" large numbers of people who are unwilling to make this basic decision will never guarantee that it will be made or even necessarily encourage it.

The Paramount Goal

For this reason the church must make the kingdom of God, with Christ as king in very deed, the paramount goal, and the daily goal, not only of the church as a whole but also of each member in even his most insignificant activity. Anyone who willfully refuses to do this is unworthy of the Christ. Inasmuch as the church refuses or fails to do this, it can never progress beyond its present position and most likely will deteriorate in spirituality.

In addition to building up his kingdom we are to establish his righteousness. This follows naturally from the necessity of being obedient to the King. But what is righteousness in everyday language? Righteousness is concerned chiefly with service to God and Christ, and this means service to mankind—all of mankind. "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," and "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me."⁴

Wholehearted Service

This desire to serve mankind must be just as strong as the desire to serve Christ, for in the final analysis they are one and the same service. In certain instances Jesus stated these things very clearly. When a man came to him offering his services, Jesus replied, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."⁵ If our Creator gave up so much in service to us, can we rightfully demand for ourselves more than he kept? As long as there is one person on the face of the earth who is underfed, poorly clothed, diseased, or in need in any other way, and we refuse to minister to that need, we are obstinately refusing our service to Christ the King. It is rebellion against the kingdom of God.

God requires this service of us not only because it leads to the Zion society in which men will be free of hate, greed, fear, want, and turmoil, in which they will enjoy peace, love, a sense of achievement, and contentment, but also because as we enter into this service we gain the ability to liberate our souls from the carnal trivia of selfish, time-bound concern and are able to comprehend and fit ourselves into the eternal purposes of God which are broader than the horizon and more enduring than time.

Within Reach

Is the achievement of such goals beyond the hope of our present church organization? Not at all! The first step required is that we seek first the kingdom. If we fulfill each commandment he has given and each additional one he gives, he will not detain us. On the contrary, he pleads with us that we come and drink of the waters of life freely. All who will come may come.

The question of greatest concern is this: Will we open our eyes to the opportunity that is ours which promises salvation to this troubled world? Will we be big enough to accept the challenge of the call and receive the blessings that God would give? Or will we insist on rendering up our devotions to those little, puny gods of selfish gratification and indulgence, and thus wander down the dark, dreary road to stagnation?

There is crisis within the church!

Ministry Is Our Heritage

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16: 15.

IT IS OUR DUTY as heirs to expound, preach and teach the gospel to all nations, kindred, tongues, and people. Some might say that we who do not hold office are mere members and that such activity is for the men of the ministry. But this is not so. Even as members we are duty bound to minister to those around us.

This we must do by living lives that set an example for others to follow. We must ourselves become Christlike. What of our spiritual life? Does the Holy Spirit dwell in us as it should, or only to the extent that we allow it? "Are we alive in Christ?"

Do we as members attend prayer meetings regularly? In such meetings are we able to commune with our heavenly Father, whereby blessings of strength and courage can be obtained, sometimes direct from God, sometimes from the prayers and testimonies of others? We can by our own investment in these meetings give similar strength and courage to others in need.

Are we in complete harmony one with the other regarding the teachings and laws of the church? If not, have we ever attempted to find out why this is so? Lack of "light and truth" seems to be the answer. Is it so impossible that in these the latter days we are unable to understand one another? In the days of Enoch there was harmony in thought and mind; in this righteous condition unity reigned supreme.

We must pray to condition ourselves to receive the Holy Spirit of understanding, truth, and light. In so doing we shall become vessels of righteousness. Concern for our fellow man will be uppermost in our mind.

Past mistakes should be reminders only and not constantly dwelt upon. We cannot afford to look back; we must press ever forward. That backward glance could cost us precious ground.

Our heritage is such that we should use it to advantage not only for our own salvation but for our children's and our children's children's.

No greater ministry can be wrought than that of our actions and deeds. By them we set an example to others as to the way God would have us live.

Los Angeles Stake Singers at the Starlight Bowl

A FESTIVAL OF FAITH

THIS IS more than a news story. It is a testimony from a community whose leaders wish to place greater emphasis on religious and cultural activities; and it is a testimony from our church people who know that when we witness for God, rich blessings are ours.

A rare privilege was given to the people of the Los Angeles Stake when, on September 28, they participated in a program presented by four major faiths in the city of Burbank, California. It was unique because the program was divided into four segments—Jewish, Roman Catholic, Protestant, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Starlight Bowl is an amphitheater nestled in the foothills above Burbank. The warm, clear night and full moon enhanced the setting. Over three thousand people sat in reverence during the beautiful tableaux and choir presentations. The first tableau portrayed Moses on Mount Sinai. Because it was a religious holiday, the Jewish choir could not take part, so recorded music from the soundtrack of "The Ten Commandments" was used instead.

Members of the Catholic choir, representing three congregations, wore dark red robes. An Ave Maria was sung, introducing a living picture of the Madonna and angels. The faces and clothing of the figures were white; under blue lighting, they resembled statuary. Palestrina's "Gloria Patri," a Plainsong, and a Gregorian Chant were followed by a story and tableau depicting the life of Mother Cabrini, who founded a school for girls in Burbank. The Catholics closed their portion of the program with "Venite Exultemus" by Vittoria.

As the curtains opened on the Protestants, the audience saw many different styles and colors of robes. There were two hundred singers representing thirteen Protestant churches. A tableau showed St. Paul preaching; and then the narrator quoted from Ephesians 4: 1-13: "I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called . . ." Another scene depicted Sunday worship, with a small congregation and a minister. A stained glass window formed the background. The choir sang special arrangements of well-known hymns, "Beautiful Savior," and "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind." After the Lord's Prayer was read, another tableau showed people kneeling at the foot of the cross. "Ye Servants of God" concluded the Protestant's portion of the festival program.

The curtains opened again to show our singers wearing black robes with white stoles. The narrator briefly told of Joseph Smith's early visions, his finding of the plates, and the organization of the church in 1830. It was also brought out that the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints believe that their church has the same officers and teaches the same doctrine that Christ introduced into his church when he was on earth. Following the introduction, the choir sang, "Redeemer of Israel," and then the narrator read from Mosiah 2: 13-17: "Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth . . ." Another hymn, "Afar in Old Judea," introduced the tableau which showed a minister in white shirt and trousers about to baptize a young girl, who also was wearing white. They appeared to be standing in a font. The background was a symbolical painting of the river Jordan. During this scene, the familiar words from John 3: 5-8 (Inspired) were read: "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The anthem, "Salvation Is Created" by Tschesnokoff was sung. The narrator closed with more of Jesus' words from the Inspired Version: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matthew 28: 17-19). The organ played strains of "Fountain of All Revelation," as the curtain closed.

Words cannot describe the impact of the finale'. The combined choirs of all faiths (over three hundred voices) sang the stirring "God of Our Fathers," accompanied by organ, piano, brass and percussion! A tableau showed the Statue of Liberty standing high on a pedestal. Grouped at the base were men representing the ministry of the different faiths. Our minister wore the white clothing of the baptismal scene. It was a wonderful evening, a thrilling experience!

Perhaps no one person contributed more to the success of the evening than the narrator, who read so beautifully the stories and Scriptures of each faith. He is Nelson Leigh, an actor who for many years played the part of Christ in the Los Angeles Pilgrimage Play. The conductor of the massed chorus was Milton Young, an instructor at Glendale City College. Eunice Farber, a member of our Sherman Oaks congregation, conducted our choir. Reverend Robert Goodwin of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, and chairman of the Religious Emphasis Committee, was co-ordinator of the Festival. Under his leadership, the committee members worked in harmony and friendship. Several of them spoke of their feeling that God had been with them through the planning and presentation of the program.

As was mentioned before, this is a testimony, first of all, from a community. Burbank, for many years, had a parade and carnival known as "Burbank on Parade." It was a good money-maker, but many people objected, feeling that emphasis on cultural activities and civic progress would be better. Two or three years ago the city council canceled the carnival plans, and a committee was formed to head a yearly "Festival of Progress." This affair lasts a week and includes a Festival of Nations, Festival of Art, Festival of Sports, and so on. This year, the idea for a Festival of Faith was initiated. A Religious Emphasis Committee was appointed. Each of the forty-three churches and synagogues in the city was invited to take part. Twenty responded. It had been hoped to plan a script which would combine the faiths into one unit, but this seemed impossible on short notice. It was easier to divide the program into four parts: Jewish, Catholic, Protestant, and "Mormon." The two Mormon wards bowed out when they found our church was planning to take part. At first, it appeared that our small congregation (eighty active members) would be stopped right there. However, the Religious Emphasis Committee unanimously voted to allow us to enlist help from stake singers. Our stake leaders were enthusiastic about the idea, and our people responded in a way which warmed and uplifted us all. There were sixty-five singers, representing thirteen of our twenty congregations. The stake covers a large area, and many of them had long drives to rehearsals. However, as was also stated before, this is a testimony from a witnessing people. It seems significant that September's theme was "Our Heritage, a Stimulus for Witnessing."

JEAN SORENSON

Unto Us a Child Is Born

WHEN A CHILD is born into our home, we as its physical parents greet it with a feeling of awe. There is something of the divine in a tiny babe. It is such a joyful occasion to be the parents of a new baby that we invite our friends and neighbors to rejoice with us. Quite often we experience a sense of consecration: we will do many things for our child, provide it with luxuries that we did not get to enjoy, and in turn our child will be great in whatever way we define greatness. I wonder if selfishness—the feeling of possession—isn't the strongest of all. This is our child; in him, or her, our failures will be turned to successes, our unfulfilled dreams will be realized.

As the child begins to develop into an individual we may experience many emotional upheavals. How often have we stood in wonder at the development of our child beyond our fondest hopes? Have we ever observed in dismay some weakness of our own intensified in our child? Have we ever been exasperated when a lesson we try to teach is completely disregarded?

Sometimes mutual love between parent and child becomes stronger through the years, but all too often there comes a parting of the ways when the child is determined to assert his own personality. Why must this be? It is inevitable that along with normal growth there comes a time when the child no longer needs to depend on the parents. Is some of the friction caused by parents wishing to postpone this time and the children equally wanting to hasten it?

Much has been said in our modern world about rearing children without inhibitions. There seems to be a great deal of feeling that parents should not influence their child, it might prevent free development. Perhaps there is a tendency on the part of the parents to avoid responsibility. Most parents do not hesitate in using authority in matters of food and clothing, also in the small amenities of social culture; yet in the larger and more vital matters of a spiritual nature they often hesitate. Is it really more important for the child to be polite to human friends than to learn to say "thank you" to God? I wonder if any parent has the answer to just how much authority should be brought to bear on a child, when to use firm disciplinary measures, when to use only a very gentle influence, and when to insist that the child should make his own decision.

If there were not something in the parent and child relationship that would promote the highest development of both, God would surely have provided a different method of populating the earth. Our children do not come to us just to satisfy our own carnal desires, to build up our ego, or to bring unnecessary burdens upon us. Yet we should accept the responsibility for what it is, to help guide another individual and lead him in the path toward God. There is a possibility of learning a higher type of love, conquering selfishness, and attaining a spiritual growth that can be gained in no other way. The child must move from the center of his own little universe to the outer circle and get a true focus of God as the center of the universe. He can accomplish this with the help of consecrated parents who can forget their own selfish desires and be more interested in the welfare and development of another.

If we can walk life's path with our child for a little way, see what he sees, feel what he feels, and watch his personality develop and expand, encouraging the expression of his better self, we will grow, too, and become better people for the experience.

Our Savior was born into the world a physical babe, the same as any human being. He grew physically, mentally, and spiritually. He walked with the children of men; he shared their joys and sorrows, their hopes and desires; he experienced the pride of accomplishment and the frustration of failure in small things; he learned to understand why each one thinks, speaks, and acts as he does. Perhaps we could come nearer to attaining that godly love if we tried harder to understand and did less interfering in the lives of our fellow men.

CORA EGGERT

Prometheus -- 1958

ZEUUS, the all-powerful Greek god, chose Prometheus, one of the conquered Titans, to help him finish the job of creation. Prometheus loved man and was so generous with his gifts that he soon ran out and was faced with the overwhelming desire to give greater gifts to man. He desired above all to give fire, which he knew would have to be stolen from the divine altar at the probable cost of his life.

The story tells us, "He had counted the cost beforehand and was prepared to pay it to the uttermost. Now he only felt a great desire to spread the fire through all the world, to kindle hope and aspirations in man and set him in the way of attaining them." Prometheus gave this gift to man and suffered most of his life as a result, until the mighty Hercules, in later mythological accounts, freed him from his torture.

There is an urgent need today for men and women to become "Prometheus — 1958." We need to count the cost, prepare to pay it, and be filled with a consuming desire to spread the fire throughout the world, to kindle hope and aspiration in man and set him in the way of attaining them. Perhaps the tragedy of this generation has been that our sensitiveness has been dulled. We can make all sorts of excuses as to the type of experiences to which we have been exposed which have been responsible for this insensibility, but when we face life honestly we know that Apostle Hanson was right when he said, "Where there is divine love there is divine sensitiveness." The good Samaritan "saw and had compassion." Many of us see and then walk on the other side of the road with our habitual pious expression, "Isn't that too bad." When Helen Keller was asked what she thought was the greatest tragedy that could befall a person, she answered "Having eyes, and see not." John Dewey has said, "We are so thoroughly externalized that it is rather trying to attend to what we are."

WE'RE an outgoing people and proud of it to such an extent that the word "introspective" has become a label of morbidity. The public has seeped through the normal dikes of privacy until there is no seclusion left. We live distracted by distractions from distractions. We are entertained, addressed, educated, observed, conditioned on all sides for all kinds of purposes. "Only in sleep does God have a chance any longer to minister to us." We are so seldom home to ourselves that it takes a great deal to awaken a response in us.

Following the first world war, Jules Romains wrote a book in which he had one of his characters say,

I sometimes find myself wondering in a sudden panic whether I'm not in the way of developing great numb patches in my sensibility of which I shall never be cured even if I do come through this war. Delicacy of feeling! What a wonderful expression. Shall I ever again know what delicacy of feeling is? I may be nervous, irritable, exasperated by trifles, but shall I ever recover that sensitiveness which is the mark of civilized man? I see myself transformed into a sort of invalid who has suffered an amputation of all his delicate sentiments—like a man who has lost his fingers and can only feel with a couple of stumps. And there will be millions of us like that.

Have you ever felt that you have lost your fingers and are just feeling with a couple of stumps? Have you kept the divine love so there is still "divine sensitiveness" in your soul? Often we selfishly build a "protective coat" around our most sensitive self because we don't want to be hurt by unkind people or unfortunate circumstances and in so doing we deny ourselves some of the divine nature which makes it possible for us to respond to divine urgings. "Where there is divine love there is divine sensitiveness."

HOW LONG since you have felt the desire to spread the fire through the world, to kindle hope and aspiration in man? Has your world dwarfed in significance to just your family, your problems, your life? I am not discounting the preoccupation which all of the foregoing involves, but women of faith can still find time for "spreading the fire throughout the world," for they don't attempt to carry the burden of their unsolved problems. Women of faith face problems realistically, talk them over with God, place the burden there, and with the words "let not your heart be troubled . . . ye believe in God" ringing in their ears they go out to reach those who need to have the hope and aspiration kindled, and to set these people in the way of attaining them.

Recently I have known some of the physical torment and illness of trying to carry a burden alone. Each time I knelt in prayer I told the Lord I was leaving it with him, but I found myself taking it with me and continuing to mull over the details, rehash the implications, and try to solve it with human intelligence. Then one day the Lord said, "Leave this with me and go and do something for me." I found a physically exhaustive service project for the afternoon and came home with the first feeling of buoyancy I had experienced in many days, and knew a little more about what the Master meant when he said, "If you would find your life, lose it." This desire to kindle the fire has such therapeutic advantages that we will be forced to it in self-defense, if not out of divine love.

THE DESIRE to spread fire throughout the world is not sufficient. The cost must be counted, and we must be prepared to pay it. "Which of you intending to build sitteth not down and counteth the cost." "If any man would come after me let him deny himself . . ." When we consider the price others have paid for achievement in things of the spirit, it should shame us for the nonchalance and comfort-loving ease with which we have expected to reap a harvest for which we have never toiled. Men of spiritual genius have shown us that the relationship of God and man becomes concrete and living in a person who has been able to achieve an excellence in the realm of religion as a scientist would achieve in his profession by the same insight and devotion. "The world needs saints of genius just as a city stricken by a plague needs a doctor." Some of the price involved in spreading the fire has been paid for us; and as a part of making ourselves personally prepared for serving as the "connecting link" for this age, we must sense with deep appreciation those who have gone before us who have made this hour possible for us.

SAMUEL MILLER in his Great Realities discusses some of our failures in worship, and he lists our "restricted vision" as one of them. He says we have so completely immersed ourselves in the present that we have cut ourselves off at the roots. "When we bring our lamps for worship we will need more than the oil of the moment—however spontaneous and sincere that may be. The church is old; being old, it is also eternal; to worship the present moment is far too small to afford us ample ground for the gestures of the soul."

I always feel a great affinity with those who have gone before as I read Section 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants. God told Joseph that the part of the Book of Mormon which was lost is to be found in greater detail on the smaller plates. "Behold, all the remainder of this work, does contain those parts of my gospel which my holy prophets . . . and also my disciples, desired in their prayers, should come forth unto this people. And I said unto them, that it should be granted unto them according to their faith in their prayers; yea, and this was their faith, that my gospel which I gave unto them . . . might come unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and also, all that had become Lamanites, because of their dissensions. Their faith in their prayers was, that this gospel should be made known also, if it were possible that other nations should possess this land. . . . They did leave a blessing upon this land in their prayers, that whosoever should believe in this gospel, in this land, might have eternal life."

Those who went before left a blessing upon this land. They were able to look down the ages and feel a concern for those yet unborn and desire for them the fullness of the gospel. What sort of concern have you felt for people? What price are you paying that the rich heritage which is yours might be preserved and passed on to others? This is your day. No one else can perform the task which God intended you to do.

FRANK KAFLA in his book The Trial uses a parable to show the importance of the present. Before a great door stands a guard who is approached by a man seeking entrance. When the man asks if he might enter, the guards refuse, telling him he cannot enter now. Disappointed, the man sits down to wait. He tells the guard about his life, gives him small gifts, grows older, and as the years pass looks more and more longingly at the door. When he can no longer rise and death seems near, he asks the guard why in all these years no one else has come seeking admittance to that door. Then the guard shouts, for the man's hearing is failing, "No one but you could gain admittance through this door since it was intended only for you. I go now to shut it . . ." This tells the story of many of us. Many of us stand at the door waiting. We came to enter but we did not—something held us back—something made us sit down and wait. Years went by and we never entered the door which was meant only for us.

As we look at history for concrete reality we can find three disciplined souls who changed the course of human events—Socrates, Paul, and Gandhi. These men saw that the whole life must be disciplined if the soul was to benefit. Most of the dramatic duel of thought on which Socrates spent his life took place in a gymnasium. Paul said he had disciplined himself as an athlete disciplines. Gandhi used to limit fasting and nonviolence through which he developed a powerful intensity of spirit which enabled him to sway nations. The struggle of these men involved every aspect of life. Training the soul is merely expanding the limits of our life so that we shall be sensitive and understanding in those regions where we now are unresponsive.

Samuel Miller in his book Great Realities uses these expressive words, "Our life is like a spectrum. Most of us live within the visible area, but there are great stretches of light at both ends of the spectrum—powerful waves of energy—more powerful in a sense than those which give us light. And to live only in this narrow limit of the visible is to distort ourselves and make dwarfs of us who might otherwise be souls."

At a regional conference of college and professional people, Brother Ed Ford used a striking illustration which has stayed with me through the years. He had us imagine we were small children playing in a room with a three-foot ceiling. Then he pictured that group of children growing into tall young men and women, but the ceiling remained unchanged, and he pictured vividly the distorted figures which would be in that room. He then made that analogous to our spiritual life. Our spiritual ceilings have not been lifted, and we have remained dwarfed and distorted spiritually.

THE COST of spreading the fire is the cost of penetrating those low spiritual ceilings under which we've been trapped and haven't found the way out. It is the cost of singleness of purpose . . . "Martha, you are troubled about many things. One thing is needful and Mary hath chosen the better part." In the Moffatt translation, "Blessed are they who are not double minded, for they shall be admitted into the intimate presence of God."

It is the cost of aloneness in which the central core is strengthened for the outreach. "Be still and know that I am God."

It is the cost of togetherness . . . "therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar and there rememberest thy brother hath aught against thee; leave thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift." Many of our gifts are not acceptable, for we have not kept this admonition. Individualism has stood in the way of effective worship. Since it is a corporate act our relationships with people must be right.

It is the cost of self-denial. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself." Frederick Neitz in his book The Birth of Tragedy has a twentieth century enthusiast standing before the beauty and grandeur which once was Rome and exclaiming about it. To such a one the aged Athenian, looking up to him with sublime eyes, says, "Say this also, thou curious stranger: what must this people have suffered that they might become thus beautiful."

May we cultivate the divine love that our souls may be sensitive to the urgent needs of those about us. May we set our own homes and lives in order that we might be able to have an effective outreach to others. May we have the all-consuming desire to spread the fire throughout the world, to kindle hope and aspirations in the man and set him in the way of attaining them. May we be Prometheus — 1958!

Boys' Home Named to Honor W. Frank Clifton

THE NEW residence of the Working Boys' Home of Toronto was recently named in honor of W. Frank Clifton, a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Brother Clifton has been an alderman of the city of Toronto since 1946 and has taken an active interest in the home over a period of twenty years as a member of the Board of Management.

Clifton House was officially opened October 20. The opening was attended by the minister of public welfare of Ontario and the mayor of Toronto. The lieutenant-governor of Ontario was the speaker. Elder Orlin Crownover offered the dedicatory prayer.

Brother Clifton lived in the Working Boy's Home himself in 1907-1908. He has since founded a successful business which bears his name.

The program of the opening ceremonies said:

"For many years he has devoted time and energy to work on behalf of handicapped children, serving as chairman or as a member of the crippled children's committees of the Shriners, the Kiwanis, the Gus Ryder Pool, and other service groups.

"His success and example will serve as an inspiration for present and future boys who make their home Clifton House."

Original Greek Gives New Meaning to Bible Teaching

ALTHOUGH a number of recent Bible translators have gone back to early Greek manuscripts for basic research, a new book published with the average churchman in mind now makes available a better understanding of the precise meanings of certain words and expressions in the Bible that have been erroneously translated from the Greek language.

The book, Light from the Greek New Testament, is written by Boyce W. Blackwelder, a graduate of Anderson College in Anderson, Indiana, and also the School of Religion at Butler University and Northern Baptist Theological Seminary in Chicago. He received his Doctor of Theology degree at the Chicago school. The book is published by Warner Press, official publishers of the Church of God.

Latter Day Saints will be interested in noting some of the interpretations which this book presents.

Upon This Rock: Matthew 16: 18 (19, I.V.) has at least two major interpretations when the phrase, "upon this rock I will build my church," is considered. The Catholic church has held that the "rock" was Peter, the apostle. Others have held that the "rock" was Christ or the revelation of Christ. The author of this book points out that the Greek petros is used to identify Peter, and means "stones small enough to be picked up and thrown by hand." Petra, the Greek word used in Matthew 16: 18, means "a mass or cliff of rocks, or simply of the substance which we call rock." So something other than Peter is identified in this Scripture. The author holds that it refers to Christ, since "petra" is used metaphorically several times to indicate Christ (Romans 9: 33; I Corinthians 10: 4; I Peter 2: 8)." Over two pages in this book are devoted to a full explanation of these terms.

Binding and Loosing: Jesus' words about binding and loosing, as recorded in Matthew 16: 19 (20, I. V.) and 18: 18, are explained in the light of the tense of the verbs used in the original Greek. The author says that the original text shows these verbs to be future perfect passive participles and that they should read: (Matthew 16: 19) "I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but whatever you may bind on earth shall have been bound in heaven, and whatever you may loose on earth shall have been loosed in heaven;" (Matthew 18: 18) "Whatsoever you may bind upon earth shall have been bound in heaven, and whatsoever you may loose upon earth shall have been loosed in heaven." The author comments: "Man is only the servant or ambassador of the Almighty. God is sovereign, and gives to no human being the prerogative of pronouncing the salvation or the damnation of any soul. Clergymen, therefore, are not judges who decide the destinies of their hearers. They are proclaimers of salvation on divine terms."

Salvation, a Continuous Process: Several Scriptures indicate that salvation or eternal life comes as a result of a particular act. Dr. Blackwelder refers to John 1: 11, 12; 3: 14-16; 3: 36; 5: 24; 3: 18 and other Scriptures. Then he points out the error of the present translation of these verses in most Bibles. Referring to one example he uses (John 3: 36), we note that the author again emphasizes that the verbs there used are participles. The verse should read: "He that goes on trusting on the Son continues to have everlasting life." Another example (I Corinthians 1: 18) should read, "For the preaching of the cross is to those who are perishing foolishness; but unto us which are being saved it is the power of God." The author comments: "Redemption involves both the initial act of believing in (receiving) Jesus Christ and the continuous attitude of commitment to him. . . . By faith the believer enters a state of righteousness where he remains as long as he is the trusting one."

Eternal Life, a Quality: In the author's discussion of the previous subject, he supports the Latter Day Saint viewpoint of eternal life (compare with Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2, a-e). He writes, "Eternal life is not merely a matter of endless existence; it is a quality of life, the God-kind of life. All men, by their very nature, are immortal. Likewise Satan and the demons have endless existence. The New Testament does not equate never-ending being with eternal life. Only Christians, that is, individuals who have received Jesus Christ and are trusting in him, have eternal life, because it is experienced by faith. It is redemption through and fellowship with the Son of God and with the Father. Our Lord defines it in John 17: 3 . . ."

The Godhead: Discussing the articles (a, an, the) of speech, Dr. Blackwelder comments that there are important theological implications reflected in the syntax of the article. In John 1: 1 (King James Version), John's expression, "The Logos [Word] was God," is a very significant example. Dr. Blackwelder says, "If the article were used also with theos [God], the statement would mean that all of God was expressed in the Logos. As it is, the Logos is not "a God" nor equated with the sum total of God. The other persons of the Trinity are implied in theos. The Christian doctrine of the Trinity is that Jesus Christ the Son is theos (God), but not ho theos, that is, the Son is not the whole Godhead."

In another place in his book, discussing the same verse (John 1: 1), he quotes, "And the Logos was with God [pros ton theon]." On these words he comments, "The preposition pros carries the idea of 'face to face,' and implies not merely co-existence but personal communion and thus separate personality . . . person to person face to face with each other eternally." In connection with this interpretation, read the clear statement in the Inspired Version (John 1: 1-5) and compare with King James Bible.

The Voice and the Light: The apparent contradiction between Acts 9: 7 and Acts 22: 9 (King James Bible), in which is found the experience of Paul's companions hearing a voice and seeing a light (and person), is explained through an understanding of the grammatical cases used in the expressions. Acts 9: 7 says the men heard a voice but saw no man. Blackwelder says the correct translation indicates "they saw the light but did not see Jesus." Acts 22: 9 which says the men saw the light but heard not the voice is interpreted to mean "they heard the voice, or sound, but did not hear to the extent that they understood." (The Inspired Version gives a different interpretation to eliminate the inconsistency of the King James Version.)

Silence of Women: "Let your women keep silence in the churches" (I Corinthians 14: 34, 35) has been interpreted by many as a command to keep women from participating in public services.

Blackwelder says it was merely an exhortation to the women to stop disturbing the services with whisperings to their husbands. (The Greek word used here means primarily to utter sounds, not necessarily intelligible words.) "The men with their learning had little difficulty grasping the message. Not so with the women. Hence their questions produced an undertone of noise which was confusing to an audience." Verse 35 verifies this view with the added instruction, "let them ask their husbands at home . . ."

Baptism for the Dead: Blackwelder says that the preposition huper, translated "for," should be translated to an English preposition which denotes "causative action"—it should read "for the sake of" or "because of." He then comments, "There is strong logic for translating Paul's statement, 'baptized because of the dead,' inasmuch as the death of Christians frequently leads to the conversion of their survivors. It is a well-attested fact of history that the exhortations of dying Christians have often constrained loved ones to receive the Christ."

Many other examples of "light from the Greek" are contained in this book. Students interested in further research will enjoy reading all of it. It is available through Herald House.

Gott Mit Uns

THIS MORNING as I was watering the plants in the Auditorium I heard a faint rustle up in the balcony. I discovered that a young lady had entered and stood leaning against the wall. In fancy I could hear her breathing a silent prayer for help for the tasks of the day. A moment later I heard a man come in; he sat down and put his head in his hands. Then another came in and sat for a few moments. Recognizing me, he spoke softly, saying he wanted to get away from the phone for a moment to meditate.

I remember an experience I had when I first came to the Auditorium to work. I too stepped through the doors off the foyer, asking for assurance, when a voice spoke, "This is the Lord's house." I went away thankful. I then recalled that during the war against Hitler's armies a sign was put up in front of the trenches, "Gott Mit Uns," and the allies had a sign on their side, "God is with us." Each side said its prayers to that end.

It seems there is a yearning everywhere in the heart of men to find their God, and especially when they feel inadequate, but most of the time they don't take time to really try to find him.

I wish all who read this might be able to come into the Auditorium and sit a moment and find strength or wisdom or knowledge for the occasion as they find their God there. But perhaps if all can't come to the Auditorium or even to church they can find a quiet place at home where they can sit quietly meditating and searching for God. Finding him they will receive that which they need for the day.

The Things That Remain

By Dean W. R. Inge

Harper and Brothers, 1958

Price, $3.00

This book by a Church of England scholar and theologian provides interesting reading; though perhaps it is not suitable for casual perusal it offers some good comparisons and stimulating thoughts. Members of the ministry will find the early chapters thought provoking and not too far removed from Restoration beliefs.

The book is based on a series of twenty sermons centered around the special days of the Christian church calendar (such as Trinity Sunday and Whitsunday).

Mr. Inge was appointed Dean of St. Paul's, and at his death in 1954 it was said, "England will not see his like again"—a reference to his eminence as a classical scholar, Platonist, philosopher, theologian, moralist, and political theorist. The range, learning, and literary qualities of his messages made him outstanding as a preacher and writer. This selection presents the best of his thought and genius. His style is not too heavy for the average good reader, yet is stimulating enough for any intellectual.

The first five chapter headings are

1. The Kingdom of God
2. The Meaning and Purpose of the Incarnation
3. The Vision of the City
4. The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit
5. The Doctrine of the Trinity

These have what might be called doctrinal content without being argumentative. In some instances, the author merely presents other possibilities of interpretation from the generally accepted theories, with the method of presenting rather than the idea being original.

The remaining chapters are all subjects which have been dealt with over and over again by the various writers. However, under such headings as "Walking in the Light," "Holiness, the Poetry of Religion," "Asceticism," "The Efficacy of Prayer," "The Nature of Religious Faith," "Finishing the Work God Gave Us" Mr. Inge provides some new approaches and illustrates basic Christian attitudes. All in all, it is a book worth reading.

The Transformation of the Twelve

By Gaston Foote

Abingdon Press, 1958

Price, $2.00

This study of the transformation of ordinary men into apostles of our Lord Christ is enlightening, thought provoking, and interesting reading. Doctor Foote originally prepared sermons for his Fort Worth congregation of the First Methodist Church and later developed these sermons into the chapters of keen insight into the lives of the original twelve apostles—plus Paul, who later aligned his life with the life of the Master.

Because of this, the book challenges those who read it today. From the chapter on Peter subtitled, From Pebbles to Rock, Doctor Foote concludes: "From shifting sand to solid rock—that is the journey Peter made in his lifetime. Endowed with valiance, spotted with vacillation, crowned with victory. That is the portrait of the chief of the disciples. That can be your portrait too."

The subtitles of the succeeding chapters also hint of the lessons we learn from the lives of the apostles: Andrew, from person to person; James, from selfishness to sacrifice; John, from temper to tenderness; Phillip, from inquiry to insight; Nathanael, from prejudice to purity; Thomas, from doubt to dedication; Matthew, from business to brotherhood; James and Thaddaeus, from silence to sainthood; Simon, from patriotism to evangelism; Judas, from resentment to ruin; and Paul, from murderer to missionary.

Because each chapter was originally a sermon preached, the minister who reads this book will find the homiletic style helpful in his own ministry of preaching. Because each chapter is a study of the life of an apostle of Christ, the student will find the information contained therein of such nature as to add to his own growing comprehension of the Scriptures. Because each chapter presents a lesson to be learned, the devotional leader will find an application that can be used in his own life. Because the style of writing is easy to read, the occasional reader will find gems of thought which can be picked up in a moment of quiet meditation.

The concluding illustration helps one to see the over-all nature of the book. The story is told that when Leonardo da Vinci painted fruit on the table in his picture of the Last Supper a crowd of people watched over his shoulder. He saw them looking at the fruit and obliterated it with a stroke of the brush. Then pointing to the face of Christ, he said, "Don't look down there. Look up here." The purpose of the transformation of the twelve is to point us to Christ that we, too, may be transformed and enjoy the reward of the abundant life.

Student Nurses Hear Evangelists

The November worship service for the student nurses was devoted to learning of the work of the evangelist and patriarch in the church. Evangelists F. M. McDowell, Harry Barto, and Lynn Smith met with the students on the evening of November 5 to present an overview of the work; then for a short period the group broke up into three smaller units for discussion and question planning. The large group reassembled, and the students asked specific questions about patriarchal blessings and other facets of patriarchal ministry. Marjorie Doig of Independence, worship chairman, reports a fine religious experience by those present.

Alumnae Bazaar

The annual bazaar of the Alumnae was held in the School Recreation Building on November 6. Contributions from Alumnae members came from many states. This annual bazaar provides an excellent opportunity for alums of the school to participate in a project which someday is going to make a fine contribution to the school and the church. Faye Franklin, class of 1921, is finance chairman of the Alumnae; she and her committee are concentrating on accumulating a fund with which to build a chapel here. The 1958 bazaar added approximately $600 to the fund.

"Miss Student Nurse" Representative Chosen

Eileen Streling of Pontiac, Michigan, was chosen by the student nurses at the "San" to represent them in the district "Miss Student Nurse" contest. This contest will be held in the auditorium of the College of St. Teresa. Each of the seven schools in the district will have a representative participating. This contest is a part of the State Student Nurse Association's recruitment program.

Eileen was chosen for her achievement in the theory and practice of nursing and her leadership activities in the school.

Capping Service

Forty-two first-year student nurses received their white caps during an impressive ceremony in the Stone Church on the evening of November 16. The address of the evening was given by Chaplain Robert Farnham, who was introduced by A. Neal Deaver, hospital administrator. The student nurse chorus under the direction of Evan A. Fry, accompanied by Barbara Phelps of Tracy, California, sang two anthems. Invocation and benediction were offered by Vance Link, M. D., and Elder Glaude A. Smith.

Carah Hendrix, student president, explained the significance of the candle. Vida Butterworth, educational director, talked about the meaning of the cap to a nurse. Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent emeritus, assisted by instructors Margaret Walker and Lola Campbell, conducted the candlelighting ceremony. The caps were given to the students by Nelle Morgan, director of nursing, and Shirley Butler, director of nursing service. After receiving their caps, the students stood with bowed heads and lighted candles while Roy Stearns sang "My Task." Mrs. Robert Sherman was at the organ.

Those receiving caps were Barbara Armstrong, Kansas City; Brenda Armstrong, Taylorville, Illinois; Wilma Bailey, Kansas City; LaFern Bryant, East Wilton, Maine; Marilee Clemens, Independence; Donna Cundiff, Kansas City, Kansas; Sandra Deck, Kansas City, Kansas; Carole Jean Ernsberger, Charlotte, Michigan; Marna Eitter, Independence; Anna Graybill, Kansas City; Betty Ann Hardin, Poteau, Oklahoma; Joyce Higbee, Jackson Center, Pennsylvania; Rena Hobbs, Century, Florida; Marcia Johnson, Independence; Vera Kimrey, Rich Hill, Missouri; Lucy Ann Laur, Gaylord, Michigan; Lynda Leavey, Kansas City, Kansas; Carole Leth, Clitherall, Minnesota; Sharon Lohnes, Kansas City; Nancy Morlock, Willowick, Ohio; Patricia Ohrn, Lamoni, Iowa; Marja Parker, Des Moines, Iowa; Cheryl Ann Reshaw, Dubuque, Iowa; Kathleen Roberts, Edwardsville, Illinois; Muriel Salts, Battle Lake, Minnesota; Judith Schorr, Tomah, Wisconsin; Beverly Smith, Cedar Falls, Iowa; Darlene Sparks, Boyne City, Michigan; Bettie Jean Steiner, Theodore, Alabama; Rebecca Stephens, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Judith Swart, Kansas City; Ione Sybrant, Casper, Wyoming; Yasuko Taira, Honolulu, Hawaii; Janice Tobeck, Bovey, Minnesota; LaDean Travis, Holyoke, Colorado; Nancy Vun-Cannon, Eaton, Ohio; Marlene Willison, Waterloo, Iowa; Donna Wilson, Newport, Arkansas; Betty Wood, Milton, Florida; Gail Woodstock, Independence; Elvira Woodward, Cohasset, Minnesota; and Doris Yocum, Independence.

Besides her three daughters and four sons she leaves eighteen grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren. Private graveside rites were held at the Mulberry Cemetery and a memorial service was conducted at the church that evening. Her grandson, President Maurice L. Draper, officiated.

RAMSEY.—Martha Ella, died November 25, 1958, in a Tulsa convalescent home at the age of eighty. A native of Mississippi she moved to Sand Springs, Oklahoma in 1948. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. R. W. Hollingsworth of Sand Springs and Mrs. Blanche Loomis of New York; two sisters; seven grandchildren; eleven great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Burial was in Woodland Cemetery.

Letters

Grateful Even in Grief

I have approached this holiday season with misgivings and dread. Just this one year I have wished there was no special season of rejoicing. My husband died less than six months ago, and it has been hard to face the future without him. He seemed so young to die at forty. But I have tried to accept this with courage and hope for the future. I know that God has been good to me, for even in my heartaches and trials he has given me comfort and a desire to go on living for my children. Someone has said, "I cried because I had no shoes, and then I met someone who had no feet." Above all else I am thankful for the twenty truly happy years I had with my husband. I am thankful for the church and the tower of strength it was for us both. I am grateful to our pastor and the elders who always came when we called. I want also express my appreciation for the hundreds of prayers offered in our behalf, and for the cards and letters we received from all over the States. I am thankful for the many friends who demonstrated for us the love of God through Alvin's months of illness and who still stand by me as I try to adjust to this change in my life. Through all this I know that God is good.

Concerning Integration

I have been a subscriber to the Saints' Herald since 1941 when I was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I have always been proud of the church, and I am proud to be a citizen of the state of Arkansas.

In the November 24, 1958, issue I noticed the article on page 10 ["Negro Lessons in Christianity" by Roger Yarrington] which makes one wonder if we are still a church or if we are more interested in politics.

In the past six years I have lived in Missouri, Oklahoma, and Indiana; the latter state was integrated. I have never been in favor of integration, and I do not believe it was intended that the white race and the colored race should be mixed and have intermarriages, which would happen if the United States would become entirely integrated. I was raised in the north, but I don't think it behooves anyone, not even our church members to tell the people of the south how to run their affairs. I don't think that I or the church should judge who is the better Christian. The Bible says, "Judge not that ye may be judged." The reason that our Congress passed this bill was solely politics and was upheld by the Supreme Court. Both bodies were Democratic-controlled, and both parties were only looking for more votes. The Supreme Court and Congress won for their side. With the white and colored votes, integration will probably be forced upon us.

I hope you will take space in your next edition to let the Christian people of Arkansas, especially the white population, know that they are as good Christians as the colored race. It may help you to look into some of the private lives of those you speak so highly of.

I have met people from all over the United States and from several foreign countries and I have never met better Christian people than in Arkansas.

C. G. GILLMAN
Hot Springs, Arkansas

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The article mentioned does not state that white people are not as good Christians as Negroes. Rather, the author of the article concerned agrees wholeheartedly with General Conference Resolution 995: "The gospel is for all mankind. It knows no distinction of race or color." In other words, being a good Christian does not depend on one's color. However, it can depend on how one feels about color. In the preceding letter the statement concerning "the reason our Congress passed this bill . . ." it is not clear to what bill is referred. Equal rights for people of all color is a guarantee found in the Constitution.

This letter is one of several received regarding the article on integration.)

CHRISTMAS IN SUMMER

The first Christmas card comes from far away and down under, sent by Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Windsor of Drummoyne, New South Wales, Australia. It's spring there now, and when Christmas comes it will be summer.

The card is a beautiful color picture of two of the many strange flowering plants for which the Austral lands are noted. One is the Tasmanian waratah, honey-laden flowering shrub, and the other is the Richea Dracophylla, an inhabitant of mountain ravines. One is red and one is yellow, and it's fun to guess which flower bears which name.

Hearts are warm, literally, and heads too, at Christmas time, down under. And we can envy them their sunny skies as we face our icy winds and plow through our drifted snow. Or will they envy us our frost pictures on the windowpanes, the fun of skating on ponds, and scenes of merry children sledding on white-coated hillsides?

"HOLD THAT LINE!"

Are you one of those churchgoers who prefer to sit near the aisle? So am I. However, I get a guilty conscience often when I force others to crawl over me, tilt the hat of some nice lady sitting in the pew ahead, and divert the worship attitude of others in my pew. Of course, I usually extend others the common courtesies and even prefer my brother most of the time, but I just like an aisle seat.

Two small girls were overheard discussing their grandmothers' habits. One asked, "Why does your grandmother read her Bible all the time?"

"I don't know," replied her friend, "unless she is cramming for the finals."

Changes in Order of Evangelists

THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS grew considerably at the October General Conference. Sixteen men were ordained to the order, bringing the total number of evangelists to 104.

Chief change in the order was the naming of a new presiding patriarch—Dr. Roy A. Cheville—to succeed Elbert A. Smith.

Brother Elbert has served the church as presiding patriarch for twenty years. Previously he was a member of the First Presidency for nearly thirty years. He was a counselor to Presidents Joseph Smith III and Frederick M. Smith.

Last March 8 Brother Elbert was eighty-seven years old. He is still a frequent contributor to the church periodicals. During his years of ministry he has written several books—Timbers for the Temple, Joe Pine, Square Blocks, On Memory's Beam—and many doctrinal tracts. His occasional Herald Column, "Blue Pencil notes," was very popular for many years and was also made into a book. He was an editor of either Autumn Leaves or the Saints' Herald for over thirty-five years.

He will continue to serve the church as a patriarch. His assignment places him under the direction of the First Presidency.

Dr. Cheville will remain on the faculty of Graceland College until his duties there can be reassigned.

The revelation presented to the General Conference by President W. Wallace Smith gave new meaning and definition to the work of the Order of Evangelists.

Part of the revelation concerned Apostles E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and D. T. Williams. It directed that they should be honorably released from their responsibilities in the Council of Twelve and ordained to the office of evangelist.

This part of the revelation stated:

While there is but one office in the patriarchal order, there are multiple functions. All my servants who have been called to this office will not be equally proficient in each of the separate functions. My servant Daniel T. Williams has ability to counsel, advise, and give blessings. If faithful, my servant Edmund J. Gleazer will be especially blessed in the ministry of the preached word while he maintains his health and vigor. These, my sons, are now called to be patriarchs . . .

Both men were ordained to the Order of Evangelists at the October Conference and are now assigned to the direction of the First Presidency, in harmony with the terms of the revelation.

Evangelist D. T. Williams has served as a full-time church appointee since 1914. Before becoming an apostle in 1922 he was a member of the Lamoni Stake presidency.

In 1911 Brother Williams was married to Agnes Marion Scott. They have two daughters, Mrs. Ruth Banks and Mrs. Betty Brown.

Evangelist E. J. Gleazer, Sr., entered full-time church work in 1916 and became a member of the Council of Twelve in 1922 with Brother Williams. Previously, he served as a Seventy.

Brother Gleazer was born in Belfast, Ireland, and moved to the United States as a young man. He married Jane Laurie in 1915. They have three children: Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Mrs. Ruth Wood, and Mrs. Eleanor Whiting.

Others ordained to the evangelical order at the General Conference were

A Christmas Message

The church is nearing the close of another year, and this is a time when it seems natural to take an inventory of our spiritual and material blessings, counting the benefits that have been given to us by a generous Providence, as well as the losses that have been experienced in the conditions of the world. Among all the gifts of God, we are reminded at this season of the gift of the Son, in the Advent and the Incarnation.

For the benefits of the year—the accomplishment of objectives, the completion of important projects in the Auditorium, and for the evidences of progress in many lines of church work—we are humbly thankful to the heavenly Father.

As we contemplate the sacred events traditionally associated with this season of the year, and we consider them in relation to the happenings of 1958, our thoughts and feelings are stirred by an undercurrent of awareness, something deeper than feeling, something more profound than thought. There is a sense in which the world, with all its historical record, is standing in the presence of God, and waiting for a judgment that is being formed that will speak to us in events that are yet to come.

Within the church, out of our awareness of the closeness of Divinity, out of the sacred Immanence, comes a conviction that we have more than something to be shared with the world; we have something special to share with each other. There are depths of faith and trust, of divine love and understanding, that can be felt and understood only by those who have heard the call of the Spirit to come out of the world and have found shelter in the folds of the faith against the perils of whatever storms and darkness may come.

In these circumstances, and at this special time of the year, the significance and importance of the Holy Child to the world in general and to us in particular are illustrated and made manifest in every ordinary little child in a human home. For every child has something in common with the Christ child, and in some respects resembles him. In many a home today a child is playing on the floor. The present belongs to his parents and elders: the world is theirs. But time will evict them soon, and the future will belong to the child. It will be his inheritance.

Somewhere in the future there will be a time that will belong to the Child—the Eternal Child—and he will be the Hope of the World. We believe that it is in this hope, and in none other, that we can put our trust.

Even as Jesus "called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them," so God, the heavenly Father, sent his Child to us long ago, and set him in the midst of us forever, to teach us and to give us the imperishable hope of eternity.

Somewhere above the place of the Nativity we have seen a star; its light shining in a world of darkness and confusion has given us hope, a sense of direction, the assurance that God cares and continues to love his children.

We are living in an age when the songs of the angel chorus are met with the roaring of jet aircraft preparing for war. The light of the Star of Bethlehem shines peacefully as powerful rockets are pointed at the moon, and satellites are sent into outer space. The land where the Wise Men of the East worshiped the infant Jesus lies under the threat of destruction by intercontinental ballistic missiles. Yet, in spite of these things, we do not despair, for we believe that God cannot lose control of the world, and that Christ will eventually be its King.

We take this opportunity to send a message of good will, of faith and trust, of hope and courage to our people. In their worship at home and in their churches may they find peace and reassurance in the Spirit of God and in the fellowship of the Christ who came into the world as a helpless child and remains forever with us as the Son of God, who will be our King.

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

William F. Horn, Netherlands Mission President, and Bishop Anton D. Compier have written letters telling of the opening of their new church and mission house in Rotterdam. A composite of these letters follows:

On Saturday, November 29, the new Netherlands Mission church was officially opened. This occasion was one that the Saints had been looking forward to for many months, and it represents for them the beginning of a new era.

The service was well attended; every seat in the church was filled, and additional chairs were provided. Approximately two hundred were present. For our church, and in general here, that is quite a number. This included members and friends, architects, contractors, laborers, and members of the press.

The service itself was very simple. It was opened with a hymn followed with a prayer by our pastor here, Brother J. de Wild. Bishop Compier then presented an introduction and background of the building program, giving recognition to those who had an active part in the construction. He also expressed appreciation to city officials for making this wonderful lot available to us. We hope the Saints of Rotterdam will always show themselves worthy of this building.

Elder de Wild then offered a special prayer of blessing on the building, and Brother Horn addressed the people explaining "what we believe." The traditional Latter Day Saint hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," was sung during the service.

The location of the church is unique for the city of Rotterdam. It stands in a beautiful place, apart from all surrounding homes. The building with its unusual tower attracts the attention of all who pass by. Inside the building are many meaningful attractions. The entrance is inviting and warm. Within the church are to be found a beautiful baptismal font built in natural stone, a large cross on the wall above the font, and a permanent Communion table situated on the podium.

[Both the Compier and Horn families have moved into the new apartments connected with the building.] We have been very busy ever since, of course, getting straightened up and ready for the opening services. On Sunday (November 30) we also had a few special services; attendance at these was good.

Comments from both our own people and nonmembers indicate that people in general are surprised that this building looks so nice on both the inside and the outside. The garden around it is filled with plants, and the whole surroundings are beautiful.

Brother Horn closes his letter with these words:

We wish to express our thankfulness to our heavenly Father and to the church for the opportunity and stewardship in the Netherlands Mission. We wish to pay recognition to the tireless and devoted effort of Bishop Compier during the construction of the church to Brother Victor Witte for his years of planning. We are looking forward to the coming year when General Church officials may be present to dedicate the new building.

Brother Compier comments at the close of his letter:

We certainly appreciate what the church has done for us and hope that we shall always be worthy of its confidence. Personally I want to thank you for the trust you have put in me in letting me handle so many of the details of this project. I feel that God has richly blessed me in this. I had worries about selling our previous church home, but it worked out very nicely. Other similar properties have been on sale for six months or longer, yet we were able to sell rather easily and at what I feel was a fair price.

In closing I would like to extend a hearty welcome to the Saints to come see this fine building. It is truly representative of our message.

The Day before Christmas

This week we celebrate the birth of the Son of Man, our Lord Jesus Christ. His coming to the world as a babe in Bethlehem was the result of years of preparation. So often we think of Christ's being born in the manger as a baby without any previous experience—without having had anything to do with the world. As a matter of fact, he came as the result of a very interesting and vital decision on his part. What a difference if he hadn't made that decision! I have wondered, as I've read the Book of Mormon, if the faithful followers of the prophets in America didn't think that perhaps he had changed his mind and wasn't going to come to earth.

Parallels

We find our Lord was very busy, and I shall attempt to try to bring an appreciation of the parallel our life has with his. Being born in Palestine was but one event in his long life. Scripture tells us he was "with the Father in the beginning." He was in charge of speaking divine truth all through the years of the Old Testament. He is the one the Father selected to be our Savior and Redeemer back at the beginning of time. Men have need of an example, someone to teach them personally the laws of eternity, that they might learn the ways of peace and have joy. In the Inspired Version we find an account of some conversation which God, Christ, and others had in heaven. Here the Lord, speaking to Moses, says:

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou has commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning; and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me: Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever. Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down; and he became Satan. —Genesis 3: 1-4, I.V.

Directed by the Father

When Christ was born in the manger in Palestine, this was according to a plan agreed upon probably hundreds of years before. It was a question of who was to be the Redeemer and Savior of mankind, who was to be in charge of the world, who was to come and try to win men back to live with God on his plan of salvation. Christ was very busy before he was born in Palestine. The Scriptures tell us in many places (Ether 1: 77, 79-81; Doctrine and Covenants 90: 1 d, f; 28: 1, 9; 58: 6 g) that Christ created man—that is, physical man—under the direction of the Father. God is always the presiding authority in the Godhead. Jesus said:

I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6: 38. (Read also John 4: 34; Matthew 26: 42)

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7: 16. (See also III Nephi 5: 32.)

Some things, such as the time of the end of the world, the Father does not share with the Son (Mark 13: 47, I.V.; Matthew 24: 43, I.V.)

Note Christ's words in the Book of Mormon:

On the morrow come I into the world, to shew unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.—III Nephi 1: 13.

So we know it was Christ who put the words into the mouths of the prophets in the Old Testament. It was Christ who gave the Law of Moses as the Inspired Version informs us in Matthew 9: 18, 19, and as the Book of Mormon informs us in III Nephi 7: 4-6. He was the one who took to himself the Zion of Enoch as related in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1. He was the one who softened the heart of Pharaoh (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8). He was known in the Book of Mormon as the Christ who was to be crucified (I Nephi 5: 233-242). He was known as the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He was known as the God of the whole earth (III Nephi 5: 14), the God of the land (Ether 1: 35). He was the lawgiver (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1, 5).

From the Beginning

It is interesting that the Book of Mormon people seemed to know more about the Christ than did the people of the Old Testament time in Asia Minor. In America they looked forward to the coming and reign of Christ, the Son of God. Christ appeared to them personally. He spoke many times by the mouths of his prophets in Book of Mormon times, but one time about 2200 B.C. he also appeared personally to the Brother of Jared (Ether 1: 76-83)—appeared in his spiritual body because he hadn't taken upon himself a physical body as yet. He said: "Behold, I am Jesus Christ." I am very interested in that, because some believe that Jesus Christ was not Jesus Christ until he took a physical body; but here, very plainly, he said, "Behold, I am Jesus Christ . . . this body which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit." He was Jesus Christ from the beginning of time. Christ spoke through the Prophet Nephi, as recorded in II Nephi 15: 12-15, early in Book of Mormon history. Nephi wrote these words:

And if ye shall believe in Christ, ye will believe in these words; for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men that they should do good. And if they are not the words of Christ, judge ye; for Christ will shew unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar; and ye shall know that I have been commanded of him to write these things, notwithstanding my weakness.

So you see hundreds of years before Christ appeared as a baby, before he took a physical body, he was in charge of the world, trying to help mankind, appearing personally, talking personally. He foresaw the failure of the people of Book of Mormon times and knew that they would apostatize, yet he promised Enos and others that he would bring the gospel back to their descendents (Enos 1:19-28).

At one time (II Nephi 7:12) he said: "When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance."

The coming of Christ as a babe in the manger was but a small part of a long life lived in compliance with the plan of eternity. It was the act of a Savior who has the responsibility in his heart for men, leaving them their agency, their free will, their right of self-determination. It is a step which he made in his plan for our redemption and our return to God.

Appearance in America

A little closer to the time of the birth of Christ, Jesus again spoke through Samuel the Lamanite in America, telling of the coming of three days of light—a day of light, no darkness at night, and another day of light. Then some people should rise from the dead. I was very interested, recently, in translating the account of Christ's being in America, as related in III Nephi. After his resurrection, he appeared on the American continent. He called Nephi (the son of Nephi and grandson of Helaman) and asked why some of the prophecy which he had given earlier was not recorded.

And when Nephi had brought forth the records, and laid them before him, he cast his eyes upon them, and said, Verily, I say unto you, I commanded my servant Samuel, the Lamanite, that he should testify unto this people that at the day that the Father should glorify his name in me, that there were many saints who should arise from the dead, and should appear unto many, and should minister unto them. And he said unto them, Were it not so? And his disciples answered him and said, Yea, Lord, Samuel did prophesy according to thy words, and they were all fulfilled. And Jesus said unto them, How be it that ye have not written this thing, that many saints did arise and appear unto many, and did minister unto them? And it came to pass that Nephi remembered that this thing had not been written. And it came to pass that Jesus commanded that it should be written; therefore it was written according as he commanded.—III Nephi 10:35-41.

The Great Decision

Christ, right up to the time of his advent upon this earth, was concerned with men and communicated with them. The decision he made to appear in Palestine as a babe was one he had made a long time before with his Father. It was quite important that he kept that resolve and carried out his offer to his Father. He did this in spite of the foreknowledge he had of crucifixion, pain, and physical death. This should give us a deeper appreciation of our Lord and Savior. Think of his suffering here on the earth, yet he could come to Nephi the day before the righteous in America were to be destroyed and say unto them, "Lift up your head and be of good cheer. . . . On this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world" (III Nephi 1:12).

What courage and determination he had! He was not forced—he had his own agency. He could have refused.

Charles
Hield

Suppose he had decided not to come, not to undergo the scourging, the crown of thorns, the nails in his hands and feet, and the sword in his side. Suppose Satan had been given charge of the world, taking away our agency, making us puppets with no volition, no will power, no right to choose. One of the marvelous things of all history is that Christ remained true to his determination, his character, and his personality. He came to earth in spite of the suffering he knew he would have to endure. He said in effect to the praying Nephi, "On the morrow I come into the world, so be of good cheer. Your enemies will not kill you."

Father and Son

In this character of the Christ is revealed the type of character possessed by the Father. No wonder the Father many times said, "This is my beloved Son. Hear ye him." In my opinion, the Father doesn't appear too often. Sometimes when he appears he does so with the Son—as when they came to Joseph Smith in the grove. I am most interested that Joseph Smith asked both of them the question, "Which church shall I join?" Notice that the Father did not answer that question. The Father pointed to the Son and said: "This is my beloved Son, hear him." In effect he was saying: "He will answer your question." And it was Christ who answered the question. What a marvelous individual! All power has been given to him by his Father.

The Power of Christ

I always enjoy the oratorio The Messiah and that beautiful passage from Revelation 5:12, "Worthy is the Lamb . . . to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Christ had all power given to him. He never claimed that he was the source of power. The Holy Spirit, the Comforter, he gets from his Father and passes it on to us (John 15:26). The power of the Holy Spirit emanates from God, the Father, and is given to the Son who uses it to help us.

When we think of the power of dictators today, we appreciate more the use Christ made of these things. Let us meditate a moment on all the power which Christ has. He it was who created the heavens and the earth and all the things which are in them—our food, our clothes, the sun, intelligence, the sound waves by which we hear. Most of us are fascinated by the strides scientists have made. Now they are trying to solve the problem of heat in rockets and missiles. Heat, up to now, has mainly been obtained from wood, coal, oil, and electricity. In an advertisement in the Reader's Digest I noticed that scientists now have perfected a method by which they can take heat out of the air. Absolute cold is 460° below zero; anything above that has some heat in it, and even in zero weather these machines can take the heat out of the air and warm our homes with it. British scientists talk about "heavy water" or "heavy hydrogen" from which they can also extract heat. Someday we may be able to heat our homes from sea water.

Shared Glory

God shares everything with us. Nothing has he kept for himself alone. Once I had the opportunity to visit Versailles in France and see the beautiful flower gardens, the pools, and the statues which the kings of France kept almost exclusively for themselves. I went to Rome and saw the gardens of Nero. I also tried to get into the Vatican gardens but failed. God shares all his powers with his Son and seeks also to help us.

Christ, too, seeks our co-operation to build, with him, a kingdom of God. He calls us friends; he says we may sit on his right hand. If worthy, we may rule with him. To those who merit it, he will give "authority" in the kingdom to come. He tries to teach us the right use of wealth. There is nothing wrong with wealth if it is used rightly. He would have us be wise—for the right use of knowledge is wisdom. There is nothing wrong with intelligence if man will use it to bless mankind.

Christ comes to give us poise and tries to get us to understand how wonderful we may become—the marvelous potentialities which we have within us. He needs us and offers us an opportunity to work with him if we merit it.

From John 14:12 we read: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do." These are not the words of a man who would try to be a dictator and make slaves of us and grind us down by exploitation. These are the words of one who is trying to raise us to a great potential, a great future, even to live with him.

Satan's Way

We learn from the Scriptures how Satan from the very beginning fought against Christ and his plan. The Devil never has blessed man, in spite of his many promises. The Book of Mormon is largely a story of a great tragedy. This fact slows me up as I translate, almost with tears in my eyes, for I find these people often failing to obey God and even revolting against him. I have recently been translating what is known as the "Lament of Mormon." This occurs after the great battle at the Hill Cumorah. All of his people except twenty-four out of two hundred and thirty thousand were killed. Mormon's account says:

And their flesh, and bones, and blood lay upon the face of the earth, being left by the hands of those who slew them, to moulder upon the land, and to crumble and to return to their mother earth. And my soul was rent with anguish, because of the slain of my people, and I cried, O ye fair ones, how could ye have departed from the ways of the Lord! O ye fair ones, how could ye have rejected that Jesus, who stood with open arms to receive you! Behold, if ye had not done this, ye would not have fallen. But behold, ye are fallen, and I mourn your loss. O ye fair sons and daughters, ye fathers and mothers, ye husbands and wives, ye fair ones, how is it that ye could have fallen! But behold, ye are gone, and my sorrows can not bring your return; and the day soon cometh that your mortal must put on immortality, and these bodies which are now mouldering in corruption, must soon become incorruptible bodies; and then ye must stand before the judgment seat of Christ, to be judged according to your works; and if it so be that ye are righteous, then are ye blessed with your fathers who have gone before you. O that ye had repented before this great destruction had come upon you. But behold, ye are gone, and the Father, yea, the eternal Father of heaven knoweth your state; and he doeth with you according to his justice and mercy.—Mormon 3:17-23.

Why people will follow the false, lying whisperings of Satan is hard for us to understand. With a greed for power, he urges on the murderer. The Book of Mormon is full of such acts—the killing of kings and chief justices. Satan would have us flout the laws of virtue. He urges the misuse of wealth, foments secret societies of gangsters, and stirs up hatreds and war.

The Kingdom

Christ, on the other hand, came to the world and sacrificed himself in order to share with us and to bring us peace and happiness. It is very hard to understand why some people reject our Lord. His world is a different world from Satan's. It is a world free from bloodshed, war, and murder; a world which someday shall be free from disease, tensions, and graft. Yet it is a very real kingdom which he is trying to build.

From the beginning of time he has kept steadily to the task. His coming to the earth was just one event in a long life. He was in Palestine only about thirty-two years, but what a courageous individual he was! I wish we could understand a little better the expanse of time covered in the life of Christ. It did not begin and end with his life in Palestine.

Christmas and Christ

I have no particular objections to our little nursery rhyme, "Twas the night before Christmas and all through the house not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse," and the myth that Santa Claus comes down the chimney with his big bag of toys. It would be a shame, however, if we should think of Christmas only in terms of Santa Claus. Christmas should commemorate the day of fulfillment of a great decision by the Son of God to come down, live, and try to help us find truth in his Father's laws. It was to cost him a lot of suffering, a final agonizing crucifixion and death. Yet he came.

For a Purpose

We should realize, also, that our lives parallel in many ways the life of our Lord Jesus Christ. We, too, were with God in the beginning. We don't know much about our pre-existence; in fact, we know more about Christ's pre-existence than we do about our own. Some people have guessed that we are what we are today because of the progress which we made before we came here. It would be a shame to make progress and become members of the church and then lose eternal life, wouldn't it? We are here now and we are here for a purpose. God has placed us here in preparation for a great life in the world to come. We know that we are all going to die. We are not here very long either—just a dot of time in the calendar of eternity. We don't know how long it will be before the end of the world—we think of the thousand years of the millennium, and then endless time. Man lives, on an average, about sixty-seven years today. We must never forget that it is God and Christ who rule. Satan is a vile deceiver. Christ is trying to help us develop so that he can use us here as well as in eternity. We should have an expanding appreciation of this Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, and rejoice in the many right decisions which he makes.

The Victory

Christ said, "As my Father has sent me, even so send I you." Think of the commission which the Christ felt within his soul when his Father sent him to us! (And he himself volunteered to come.) It is his victory, by the way, not our victory that we celebrate in his resurrection at Easter. Well may we stop and think through our own lives from the beginning to the end of time. There will be a thousand years of the millennium. Then we shall be in that last battle, probably all of us, on one side or the other. We shall appear in that last judgment when all men, who are the sons of Adam, shall stand before the judgment bar of Christ and be judged according to our works (Mormon 1: 86). Then we shall merit celestial glory, which is compared to the sun, glorious and endless in its time; terrestrial glory, limited as is the moon; the lower telestial glory; or the lake of fire. Perhaps I should not mention these, but here we are to celebrate in a few days one of the greatest decisions of all mankind—the decision of the Christ to come to the world. Well may we rejoice that he made the right decision.

Celestial Assignment

We are called upon to make decisions every day. The decisions which we make today and tomorrow will determine our happiness here and determine our place in eternity. God and Christ are going to develop a righteous people that they may have in eternity. If we will not become that people we may be sure he will raise up another people who will. "On the morrow" we, too, need to make decisions as the Christ made his decisions. Can we say, "On the morrow I will try to have a greater faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and his program"?

Zion will be redeemed! Christ and his Father will win in the end! Do we have that faith? Are we willing to bet our all—our life, our home, our future, our talents, and our money that God will win? Can we say: "Tomorrow I am going to try to have a more active faith in God"? "Tomorrow, I am going to try to understand the expanding meaning of repentance a little better"? Repentance is putting off unworthy things and learning to do better, according to the plan of eternity, that we may be entitled to the power of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is a power which comes to those who help the Christ build his kingdom. It comes for no other purpose and to no other people. May we be worthy of a celestial assignment with God in the future.

On the Morrow

"On the morrow," we can well say in this season of the year, "I want to develop my talents and use them better than I have in the past. Help me to build the kingdom. On the morrow I am going to try to help my family understand Christ and his plan for all of us." What some parents are going to suffer someday in eternity when they realize that they have gone through life and not taught their children the truths of eternal living. Most men spend twenty-five years of their lives learning a job in order to earn a living for the next fifty years. Then they die unprepared to enter with Christ into the endless years of eternity. "On the morrow," we may well say, "I will seek to help the Christ in this battle with Satan for the souls of men. On the morrow I shall be a better steward over my wealth and my property." Only about 50 per cent of the members of the church contribute financially to the church.

Tomorrow, next week, next month, some of these years, we are going to leave this world and this life. Four men, the newspapers tell us, have volunteered to go in an intercontinental ballistics missile in an attempt to fly to the moon. We all are going to make a trip someday into a new world. If righteous, we shall be caught up above the earth, and the earth shall be celestialized; we should be fitted to live in that new world. We should resolve to prepare to live a life of eternal quality; accept the offer of the King of kings who rules the past, present, and future; resolve to work with him. Every day that the Christ lived he thought of tomorrow. Tomorrow was another day, and each tomorrow he carried out his decisions and resolves to be a better servant of his Father and to help build his righteous kingdom. We, too, have tomorrows to live, and tomorrow we can make new and better resolutions. We should, with Christ, be making decisions that will also help build the kingdom.

Eternal Decisions

I am fascinated by the story of our people who moved from New York to Ohio, then made the decision to leave Ohio and come to Independence. When they were driven out of this center area, they went to Far West, then to Nauvoo, and then back to Independence. Even today about 15 to 20 per cent of our people move or live away from church privileges. We are all interested in George and Biloine Young who returned recently from Cali, Colombia—interested in the decisions they made in their lives. They went to South America and got employment there in order to try to help the church. They hoped a nucleus of people might be converted down there and thus help to get the gospel moving through Latin America. We have one family here in the church that they helped convert. Many are also interested in John and Marian Blumenschein who, in Honduras, are making decisions—some of the great decisions of their eternal life. I say their eternal life because we are all pray that God will bless them, as I know you do, in their life in Central America.

Another passage which has helped me is found in Luke 22: 29. "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my father hath appointed unto me." This is a wonderful Christ, isn't he? He loves us with all his heart. What a sacrifice he made! Living all down through the expanse of time, yet he decided to come and die because he loves us—because he wants to help us and give us poise and authority with himself.

Christmas week! We may think of the babe in the manger—the little, innocent child—but let's think more of the Son of God who came as a part of a great plan. His whole lifetime is devoted to demonstrating the quality of life which we, too, may acquire. That was an event of world-shattering importance, the decision the Son of God made a long time before and faithfully kept. We, too, I repeat, have decisions to make. He urges us to understand and make wise decisions, even at some sacrifice and some cost. May we catch a view of eternity, as he did, realizing what life is all about—what it really should mean to us! The greatest offer any man has ever made the Christ makes to us. The greatest sacrifice ever made he made for us.

His Own

I was a little surprised to find in the Book of Mormon that Christ should say no other nation on earth, no other people, would have crucified their God but the Jews. If he had come to any other people and worked the miracles that he did, they would have accepted him. Yet he came to the Jews.

Some people think that other planets may be inhabited. We don't know. Christ may have gone to other planets. He created the heavens and the earth and all things in them. Is it possible that the people on other planets may have accepted the Christ and obeyed his commandments? Could it be that they did not revolt and stupidly listen to the whisperings of Satan as we do here on this earth? We don't know. At least we were given a new chance when Christ came to us with all the love of his heart and said, "Tomorrow come I into the world." What a decision!

I pray that your decision and my decision may parallel that of the Christ—that we may catch the vision that he caught and see what life is all about, here, in Paradise, during the millennium, and through eternity with God.

The Magic of Christmas

JONATHAN LISTENED intently. There it was again—the most beautiful music he had ever heard! He gazed up into the heavens and his eyes filled with wonder at the brightness of the stars; they were like tiny jewels glowing with an unusual luster. One star was so big and bright that it cast a glow of light clear down to the earth. Then all at once he heard angels singing, and their message filled the air: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men."

The boy was nine years old. His father, Demetrius, was a shepherd who tended sheep in the hills near Bethlehem. Tonight, Jonathan was helping his father, who was with the other shepherds not far away. He wanted to go to his father and tell him what had happened, but he had promised not to leave the sheep.

It wasn't long, however, until Demetrius appeared. "Hurry, son," he said. "We have a journey to make, and we mustn't lose time." Jonathan could tell by the tone of his father's voice that he knew. Somehow, even to the mind of a nine-year-old, the seriousness and wonderment of this night began to grow. Jonathan was eager to start on the journey, for he felt that it had something to do with the stars, the brightness, and the beautiful music. There seemed to be a magic around everything, in the air, in the faces of the men, in the sky, and even among the sheep.

Jonathan was a good boy, reared in the traditions and ways of Abraham. He loved to listen to the rabbi as he read to them from the Scriptures. He especially liked to hear the passage from Isaiah about the child who would one day be born, who would lead the people of God from their sins and bring comfort and peace to them.

Soon the shepherds appeared at the gate of the city. They seemed to know right where they were going. The boy followed, asking no questions. Down a narrow street, behind a big inn, they stopped. "Why," said Jonathan to himself, "they are going into a stable!" As they entered, his eyes took in the surroundings. He saw the cattle and the straw. Then his eyes rested on a man, who stood tall and erect. Near him was a beautiful woman who sat smiling as she gazed down on a manger. Jonathan looked at the woman. He had never seen such a lovely face, and yet she seemed to be looking not at the child before her but down a long, long path.

One by one the shepherds approached the manger and looked at the child. They knelt and praised God for his goodness to them. His father knelt, and as he did so, he quoted from Isaiah, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of peace!" Then he knew! Jonathan understood for the first time that here was the infant foretold by the prophets of old who would one day save the people from their sins. His nine-year-old heart was bursting with joy!

Then it was his turn to look into the manger. The child was sleeping, but even as Jonathan looked, the infant's eyes opened and gazed into his. As he did so, Jonathan saw the same glow of light that had appeared in the heavens, a light so bright and beautiful that it bathed the entire stable in its brilliance. He wished he could stay there forever, but he was in a hurry to tell his mother what had happened. He was certain that he would never forget this night, nor the magic that had been given to him.

Jonathan remembered this night many years later when he stood beneath a cross on the hill called Golgotha and looked into the face of one called the Christ. With tears streaming down his cheeks, he remembered the glow that had flowed from the face of the Christ child to his, and he wondered why God had permitted his only Son to be crucified by cruel men. His heart was heavy for he had followed the Christ, had believed in his teachings, had witnessed many miracles, and had seen this light shed on many who had come to love and follow him. It was magic—this love which caused a man so good and pure to give his life for those who were so unkind and selfish.

Jonathan looked up again into the face of Christ, and as he did he saw once more that glow of light which filled his being, as he heard the words, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Jonathan knelt then and once more the magic of the light of God flowed into his heart, easing the ache that was there.

LATER AS JONATHAN and his friend, Cleopas, were walking down the dusty road to Emmaus they discussed the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. They found it hard to understand why his life had to be taken. They longed for the old days when they had followed him around the countryside. Soon a stranger joined them, and the three of them went on their way. The stranger expounded the Scriptures to them, trying to ease their doubts and fears. When they reached Jonathan's home as they were breaking bread, suddenly Jonathan had an unusual feeling, something akin to that which he had felt when he was a boy of nine. He looked closely into the face of the stranger. Joy flooded his being, for he knew that it was the Christ. Again the light had shined! At last he knew there was no death, and that here truly was the real magic of Christ and his Way.

Down through the ages of time this light has shined in the dark places of sin and despair, for the real magic of Christmas is the love of God—his mercy and forgiveness toward man, his redemption from sin, and the victory over death and the grave.

Thanks be to God, for his unspeakable gift, for the light which has shone in the darkness pointing the way to God and life eternal!

Out of the Dust, a book of selected passages from the Book of Mormon, recently won a certificate of merit from the Curtis Paper Company of Newark, Delaware.

The certificate states that the award was made “for the exercise of outstanding skill and craftsmanship in the field of the Graphic Arts.”

Presentation of the certificate was made by Richard W. Miller, assistant sales manager of Wertgame Paper Company, local distributors for Curtis. He awarded the certificate in a special meeting of employees at Herald House. Paul A. Wellington, editor and designer of Out of the Dust, and Gilbert D. Gordon, production manager at Herald House, accepted the award for the publishing house.

In his presentation, Richard Miller stated that Curtis Paper Company makes several such awards each year. Winners are usually selected from a field of 700 to 1,000 entries. He said there have been over 700 entries from Wertgame Paper Company during the years he has worked there and only five have won certificates of merit. “So you know the award means something,” he added.

Winners of the certificates are chosen by an independent group of printing analysts in New York, Brother Miller said.

The Hymnal as an Aid to Kingdom Building

A New Era

With the advent of The Hymnal the church has entered a new era of musical expression. We have become aware of the real value of hymn singing as a source of meditation and inspiration. As we endeavor to be a vital people having vital experiences, we sense the need to develop a cultural expression of that vitality. Such an expression can be accomplished by an enlightened usage of our hymnody. We must sing with the Spirit and with understanding before we can truly say that we are a singing people.

The study and practice of hymns has usually been done in the song service before or after the regular preaching service. Other special services for this purpose have been arranged in place of the preaching service. Some opportunities present themselves in the family circle. As in former times families gather around the piano to sing old hymns and learn new ones. Often other friends or families are invited to share this experience.

In the Lamoni Stake special congregational musical evenings during the week have been made attractive by the use of special guest soloists or local talent (vocal, choral, or instrumental) interspersed between the hymn groups. Inviting authors to bear their personal testimony of their hymns has added greatly to the effectiveness of some of these services.

Acquiring a Working Knowledge

There are many ways in which we can gain a working knowledge of our hymnody. One such approach considers the material as follows:

- (a) New hymns set to familiar music
- (b) Familiar hymns set to new music
- (c) New hymns set to new music
- (d) Familiar hymns set to familiar but different music

While using examples from some of these groupings, one may run across the reluctance which we all share to learn anything new. We need only to realize that all treasures are bought for a price, even the treasures of fellowship and love. In acquiring the “good” things of life we must always exert effort. How empty our lives would be if we had remained obstinate against accepting new friendships, new discoveries, new beauties. Yet this acceptance has cost us something of cultivation and understanding in order to reap the full rewards of their presentation. In music, a good melody, while not necessarily catchy or at first easy to remember, wears well, and, as with other treasures of life, we are able to value its beauty the more we use it. New hymns and new hymn melodies soon become old friends according to the degree of our cultivation and effort to make them so.

Classification of Hymns

Another way to become acquainted with the new hymnal is through a consideration of the classifications of the hymns, their categories. One of the most important reasons why we have a new hymnal is because of the need for expression of those experiences and that knowledge gained by a growing church over the past years. In other words we need to sing of the things which tie us more closely to our particular tasks in this present phase of kingdom building. The answer to this need has resulted in the expansion of certain categories of hymns and the creation of entirely new ones, along with the inclusion of many more original hymns by Restoration hymnists and musicians. The category of baptism, for instance, has been expanded from five to twelve hymns; that of the blessing of children from two to six. The brotherhood of man classification was expanded from eleven to thirty-two; revelation, from twelve to twenty-five; and hymns of Zion from twenty-eight to forty. Others were likewise expanded.

Some of the newer categories are dedication (churches, organs, cornerstones) fruits of the Spirit, health and healing, marriage and the home, ordination, inner peace-calm, priesthood, tithing, and music.

One of the most effective approaches to a study of the new hymnal is through the content and the circumstances surrounding the writing of our own contemporary hymns. Much excellent information is found in the book They Sang of the Restoration by Dr. Roy A. Cheville. There are also a number of fine texts dealing with hymnology such as The Gospel in Hymns by Albert Edward Bailey which deals with the background and interpretation of the hymns of the great Protestant movements from Henry VIII's break with Rome to modern hymns of world unification. A number of our own hymns have been effectively treated by Franklyn S. Weddle in the pages of the Herald during the past few years.

These are only a few of the ways in which we can get better acquainted with The Hymnal and gain a working knowledge of its contents. Of special help in this respect, of course, is the companion book How to Use the Hymnal.

Hymn Service Suggestion

The following is just one example recently used in a series of congregational hymn services and musical evenings throughout the Lamoni Stake. This particular arrangement is timed for about an hour and fifteen minutes.

INTRODUCTION

OPENING REMARKS: "The Value of Hymn Singing" * Pastor

HYMN 297: "Admonition" Minister of Music

(This hymn was discussed before singing from the standpoint of content and circumstances. It was felt that the service was better started with an "old" hymn.)

HYMN 294: "What a Glorious Thing to Be"

(This hymn was first discussed as a familiar hymn set to new music. How the "character" of the poetry was strengthened by the change in the music was pointed out. The new music was first introduced by a mixed quartet of young singers. It is not fair of course to expect small congregations to join enthusiastically in the singing of a new hymn without some sort of preparation, the more the better. When a special group or soloist could not be had, the recording by the Radio Choir was used.)

SPECIAL MUSICAL NUMBER

(This was either a violin solo, piano solo, or vocal or choral number, and was calculated to add to the idea of a congregational musical evening.)

HYMN 287: "Afar in Old Judea"

(This was discussed as a new hymn set to a new tune as well as an example of a contemporary Restoration hymn. Content and circumstances were also discussed. The hymn was presented first by the quartet, as were all "new" hymn tunes.)

* The great prototype of modern hymnody is of course the Book of Psalms. It is poetry meant for singing. There are prayer psalms, laments, praises, teaching psalms (dealing with the problems of sickness and death, or the prosperity of the wicked), psalms of faith and trust (the great Twenty-third Psalm), royalty psalms, and many others. So it is with our hymns. When pastors plan our worship services and desire to stimulate, promote, or direct us in certain principles of worship they have as material aids hymns which can be used as prayers, or meditation on right relationships with God, or to express gratitude and praise, or as a testimony to strengthen those who are weak, or as an admonition, or to express the outgoing evangelical spirit of sharing with others the good news of the kingdom.

HYMN 375: "Here We Come, Dear Lord, to Thee"

(This hymn was used as an example of a new category, that of health and healing. It was also mentioned as a new hymn set to familiar music. Its reflective character was stressed, both as to poetry and music. It was urged that although this is of a quiet, reflective nature, full of meaning, it ought not to be too slow or dragging in tempo nor used only as a prayer-meeting hymn.)

HYMN: 198: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" (Third tune)

(In contrast to the preceding hymn this is an example of a hymn of joy, or of an evangelical nature. It was also used as a familiar hymn set to new music. It was introduced by the quartet, and the congregation was invited to stand to sing.)

SPECIAL MUSICAL NUMBER

HYMN 130: "O God, Our Help in Ages Past"

(This was used as an example of one of the truly great hymns, the common property of all Christian peoples. Its content and circumstances were discussed and the congregation was invited to stand and make this their closing hymn of praise and trust in the Lord God. Under such circumstances the descant sung by girls of the quartet was most effective.)

CLOSING PRAYER

Pastor

One of the most valuable aspects of hymn singing is that we can give personal expression and group expression at one and the same time. While we worship through hymns in a very personal way, we gain comfort, strength, and inspiration from the flow of the Spirit which is resident and active in the whole congregation of worshipers. We receive instruction and we instruct others through the teaching and admonition of the hymn. The highest purpose of hymns, as with other testimonies and sacred literature, is that they are a source of inspiration. Inspiration stimulates the desire for activity. Inspired activity produces achievement. It is our calling to achieve the building of the kingdom of God. We dare not fail.

Let There Be Light

In the early days of the United States Congress, a heated argument arose and continued throughout the afternoon. The hour grew late, and as the room became dark an elderly statesman arose and said, "Mr. Speaker, it is getting dark. I move you that we adjourn until tomorrow."

Without giving time for anyone to second the motion, a young member leaped to his feet and shouted, "Mr. Speaker, it is getting very dark. I move you that we bring in the candles!"

A thick darkness enshrouded the world nineteen hundred years ago. Those to whom light had dawned were under the oppressive yoke of Rome. Outside the Holy Land the world was inhabited by idolatrous pagans whose world was peopled with strange and often fearsome gods. The darkness was the more appalling because there was no hope. Into that world a light dawned. Hope was born in the form of a little child.

The "peace on earth" heralded by the angelic hosts on that morning when the new light dawned was eventually to reach all nations. It did not mean that all wars would cease, for not all men would receive the light. It did mean that, even in the midst of war and turmoil, light and peace would come into the souls of those who place their trust in the Prince of Peace.

The world is dark and some would "adjourn until tomorrow." The task of liberty-loving and Christ-worshiping people is to keep lighting the candles in the hearts of all to whom they can carry the message of hope. We must "bring in the candles" of the Christian faith.

Women in a Witnessing Fellowship*

A Sense of Calling

One of the distinctive characteristics of the followers of Christ is their sense of calling. They are called to a Christian life and Christian fellowship. The highest calling that comes to any person is the calling to be a Saint. Because of this, the followers of Christ see all of life from the viewpoint of their calling which is to be expressed through discipleship. Their vocational choices, their social responsibilities, even their homes, are seen first and foremost from the viewpoint of their stewardship with Christ.

In the early days of the church the Prophet startled his followers by declaring:

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1 a-c.

We have long understood that the men of the priesthood were called by the spirit of revelation and wisdom to function in the various offices of the Aaronic and Melchisedec orders, but these are special callings for certain specific functions of ministry. In the larger sense, all those who have been touched by the Spirit of God and who have entered the waters of baptism to covenant with him are made partakers, both of his glory and of his responsibility. They are commanded to "seek . . . first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."

Born Again

Because Saints have been touched by the Holy Spirit, they can never be the same again. Old things are done away. The Apostle Paul, writing to the Saints of Corinth, said, "If any man live in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (II Corinthians 5: 17). Life, to the follower of Christ, takes on new meanings, and the purposes for which one lives can never be the same as they were before the Spirit of God touched his soul. It is the very nature of Christian discipleship that those who accept responsibility with Christ as they enter the waters of baptism and receive the Spirit of God through confirmation of the Holy Ghost are made new creatures. Jesus could find no better term to express this than to say they were reborn. When Jesus was questioned by Nicodemus, he said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

While there are many interpretations that could be given to this statement, it is true that one whose life is not touched by the Spirit of God is blind to the things of the kingdom. He is surrounded by the holiness of God's creation and the evidences of God's grace but does not sense it. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said that if one should mix iron filings with sand and then search for the filings with the naked eye he might conclude that there were few if any present. If, however, he should draw a magnet through the sand he would be amazed at the filings clinging to the magnet.

So it is with the thankful heart. It goes through life drawing to it the abundance of God's love. It is refreshed where others are parched, enriched where others see only poverty, and made glad where others see no hope. For the early Saints, life had never been so beautiful as it was when they sensed, through the Spirit of God which rested upon them, the serenity of their own souls and the majesty of the plan of God. This brought hope beyond all hopes and made all things which they had done before their rebirth seem to be trifling and of no great lasting value. They could only express it by saying that those things which were outside of the covenant relationship which they had with God were dead works.

Where was fear? It was gone. The early Christian disciples went out more fearless than any soldier on the battlefield. Underneath were the everlasting arms which assured them that even death itself should be beautiful, seen in the light of their new understanding. Those who have been touched by the Spirit of God and lifted up in their faith in him live victoriously, no matter what the circumstances around them may be. Though they may live under the iron heel of oppression or find themselves and their loved ones crushed by disease and poverty, yet in spirit they rise above these. Without this spiritual reserve, no amassing of the securities or possessions of this world can bring lasting comfort. We speak of the poor little rich children. This is no imaginary paradox. The fears, anxieties, and sheer weight of the mad scramble in life tears the soul apart unless it is rooted in the eternal.

The Need for God

We live in a day when the life span has been lengthened, when the living standard goes beyond the wildest imagination of those who lived a century ago, and when time and space have been diminished, even beyond the imaginings of the author of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp. Yet the terrible specter of war clutches at our hearts, and anxieties are on every hand. We live in a world where we ought to have the most to be thankful for, but which, without Christ, is only fraught with fear, anxiety, and dread.

One cannot look at the world without a tremendous awareness of the fact that the greatest need of all humanity is the need to find God. Men need to lose themselves to the things of this world in order to find themselves in the new life made possible through Christ. They need to be born again.

We have been recipients of this heritage and of this Spirit. It is no wonder that Joseph said a marvelous work and a wonder was about to come forth among the children of men. What greater or more marvelous work could possibly come forth? No discovery of power, no invention of machines, or even control of outer space could bring any such hope as that which came to the disciples of the risen Lord. Theirs was a prophetic life made so by the testimony of Jesus. The renewing of life, the sense of partnership with God, the oneness with the universe, the assurance of life eternal were the gifts of God through Christ which led the Apostle Paul to burst forth in praise, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

* A talk given October 6 to the women at General Conference

Called to Witness

Every person who is reborn has the testimony of the gospel. He is called of God and commissioned to witness for him. There enters into his heart the passionate desire to win others that they, too, may share the wonderful life made possible through belief in and commitment to the Lord Jesus Christ. Like the Three Nephites and John the Beloved, the glory which could come from immediately entering into the presence of God is overshadowed only by the glory of service to our fellows. Thus every member of the witnessing fellowship becomes an instrument through which God can lead others into a similar rebirth. This is the "good news" of the gospel. Under such a spirit, one can love all men. Jesus said of his disciples:

I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love only them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same?—Matthew 5: 46-48.

Christian Love

It is no mark of Christian discipleship that we love those who love us. All people do that. But to long for the unreached until our hearts are wrung with anguish when we see them in ways of sin, to pray for them, and to do good unto them when they despitefully use us, to know how desperately God cares, and how blindly they blunder, is Christian. It is this spirit which makes us able to say, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." No man who feels the love of Christ and knows the longings in the heart of God for the souls of other people can ever hate others but always sees what their lives might be if they, too, could be reborn. Saints are like the mother who searches for her straying children, never resents when they hurt her but carries her sorrow, buoyed up by faith and spurred on by love.

A faith and love of this quality is dynamic and unquarable. A ministry given by such disciples of Christ must touch the lives of those about them. The greatest weapon which the church has is the love of its members. This calling is not reserved for a few. It is a calling of all. It is because of this that the Prophet said, "If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called." God calls all those who share his passion for the souls of men.

Danger of Being "Sidetracked"

The church today is called to witness. Its major purpose is the witnessing outreach that touches the lives of men and women to bring the light of the Spirit of God into their souls, for where this light comes, darkness is dispelled and new joy enters their hearts. They, too, are reborn. As they join ranks, the army of the Lord grows, and they share with us in the purposes of Christ. The Spirit of the Lord rests upon such a dynamically moving fellowship, and because it does, the church goes forth to share as one with Christ "to preach the gospel to the poor, . . . to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and the recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord" (Luke 4: 18). It can do no less. Our greatest danger always is that we, somehow, shall be sidetracked into some good but less worthy cause. If one loses the perspective of the Holy Spirit, his works become dead, even though he works feverishly to accomplish those things which he considers good. He loses the power to bring the Holy Spirit into the lives of others.

It makes little difference how much social welfare work we may do. Unless first and foremost we bring the Spirit of God into the lives of those around us, we fail in our purpose. We can make statistics by the number of our calls, the dinners served, the money contributed to the building fund, and, like the woman of Dickens' story, become so busy in the work of the church that we no longer have time to say our prayers.

In the very fervor of our good activities, we may lose the Spirit of God. When this happens dissension arises in our midst and feelings are hurt by those who feel that their contribution is not sufficiently recognized or their point of view not followed. The church which was to be the bride of Christ becomes only another institution of the world, having set out with high hopes to bring the ministry of his Spirit, but ending up offering chaff. We are the channels; it is Christ that heals, not us. He alone can comfort. Only in him are things made eternal. The cup of cold water has little power in itself—only as the cup of cold water is given in the name of Christ, only as it becomes something beyond water and touches the Spirit is it worthy of the bride.

"Ye Are Witnesses"

Consider for a moment if Christ should come to you personally and commission you with the responsibility of winning your city to him, where would you start? What would you do? How would you express in your life the Spirit of Christ that it might touch the lives of others? Would this knowledge make a difference in your vocational choices, the place where you choose to live, the nature of your home, your preparation in study, the organization of your life? Be assured this is no hypothetical question, for this is exactly what Christ has done. "Ye are witnesses," he said. "If ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest." "It is yet day when all can work. The night will come . . ."

We have been called to gather together. Through the fellowship of the church, we may express in communities the way of life which is Christ's. In such communities we may support each other as we grow in wisdom and knowledge and unity within.

The choices which we make in the development of our families are tremendously important. The consideration of marriage is significant and important to the church, for through our homes there must go out the most effective testimony of the new life which we have found in Christ. In Zion's homes, faith may be shared by children and parents alike, that their dedication to God may unify them in a combined witness to the community and to the world. It is because of this that the First Presidency, speaking in reference to marriage, said, "Members of the church should not enter into this covenant relationship with persons who do not realize its sacramental nature, or who do not feel deeply their spiritual obligation to abide by its sacrificial demands, as well as to enjoy its happy rewards."

Opportunities on Every Hand

It is to our condemnation that we often stand with hands by our sides, feeling that there is nothing for us to do. When one asks himself the question, "How should I begin to convert others and bring the witness of Christ to my community?" he is amazed by the opportunities to be found on every hand: homes which could be given a new peace and

I Had an Experience

IN THE EARLY DAYS of my missionary travels in the German Mission, I spent much of my time in looking up the isolated members and those who had been driven out of other European countries into Germany.

One morning I had an early appointment. I arose early to prepare myself for the service of that evening. I felt directed to prepare my sermon from the Book of Mormon Scriptures. As I studied that morning, I found it extremely difficult to read German to my satisfaction. I found the time slipping away, and still I felt dissatisfied with reading my Scripture lesson aloud. Realizing the passing of time and the importance of preparing myself further for the evening service, I closed the book and stuck it into my pocket.

I hurried to the nearest streetcar line. While waiting for my car, I again started reading my Scripture. When the streetcar arrived, I found a place on the rear platform of the crowded car. Again I removed the Book of Mormon from my pocket and started to read. It wasn't long until I felt as though someone were looking at me. I raised my eyes to the top of my book and saw a man standing on the far side of the platform. He was trying to read the title of my book. Realizing the many missionary opportunities that were ours in Germany during those very trying times, I thought perhaps I should make it easier for him to read the name of the book.

A few seconds later I felt someone touch my arm. I looked up again to see that the man had moved closer. He raised his hat and spoke to me as he pointed to the Book of Mormon. "Do you believe in this book?" "Yes, I do," I replied. "In fact I am a minister who teaches from it." His

This stranger of a few moments before became a man I felt that I had known all my life. He began immediately to tell me a very unusual and yet wonderful experience. He and his family had been driven out of Poland because of their German background. Their expulsion had come so quickly, and the many transfers from one displaced persons' camp to another had caused them to lose all contact with the church members they had known in Poland. They found the years slipping rapidly by and their children growing up without the church. This was of great concern to this good man and his wife.

That morning as they prepared their morning meal, and before he took leave from his family to go out to look for work, they had decided to again make it a matter of prayer concerning their finding other church members of our faith. He then told me that when I had entered the streetcar he had felt a strong attraction toward me. When I removed the book from my pocket and started to read, he recognized the Book of Mormon immediately and was even more sure when I raised the book high enough for him to see the title.

It was again confirmed to me that God had seen fit for me to become an instrument in leading one of his scattered families back to the fold. That evening the family was again reunited with one of our church groups. The children are receiving the necessary ministry for the years ahead to tie them to the church. "God works in mysterious ways, his wonders to perform."

Jesus Supplied Our Greatest Need

JESUS CHRIST came into the world that we might have life more abundantly and to save those who were lost, if they would accept his way of life. He promised eternal life to all who were obedient to his commandments. The Son of God came into the world to condemn sin in the flesh and to save the sinner from his sins. While God loves the sinner, he hates the sin.

The Son of God, Creator of all things, gave up his throne in heaven and humbled himself to become one of us. He met the same temptations we meet, and he conquered his own body. To the Cross of Calvary he bore our sins, and died in order that we might possess a knowledge of his life and gospel.

Now he is in the presence of his Father as our personal representative. We have the pledge of our Savior that, having conquered sin in the flesh, he will finally destroy sin and restore men to perfection as in the beginning. Then they may dwell in a sanctified world where sin will never intrude.

Our future peace of mind, our happiness in this life, and our eternal future are dependent on intimate friendship with the crucified, risen, and ascended Savior. He will supply our greatest need and completely change our lives.

THERE IS A STORY (which I got from "Faith for Today Bible Correspondence Course") of a pagan youth who was reading the Christian's Bible. His mind was troubled as he thought of the religions of the Orient. He studied their various philosophies, vainly hoping to discover peace of mind and spiritual contentment. One night he dreamed that he had fallen into a deep, slimy pit. It was filled with mire, and the youth was terribly frightened. He struggled to climb out of it, but the steep walls were a prison to him. The more he tried to free himself, the deeper he sank in the mire. In his great fear he cried loudly for help.

Presently he heard footsteps, and looking up, he saw the face of the ancient Zoroaster peering over the muddy wall. He begged the originator of fire worship to help him out of the pit. Zoroaster lighted a fire above the miry pit and told the imprisoned youth to follow the light and climb out of his prison. The boy struggled to obey, but could not free himself; he only became the more imprisoned in the muck around him. Again and again he called for help.

After a long time he heard footsteps above. In answer to his renewed cries, another face peered down at him. He immediately recognized the great philosopher, Confucius, and pleaded with him to help him out of the horrible pit into which he had fallen. Confucius smiled benignly on the slime-covered prisoner and told him that he should have known better than to go near the danger spot. "Man who avoids a pit never falls into it" was his parting counsel as he left the lad to die in his filthy prison. The advice was good but useless now that he was in the pit, and the despairing youth called desperately for some source of deliverance.

After what seemed an age, the young man heard footsteps the third time, and looked up expectantly. He heard a voice in the gathering darkness, and in the dim light recognized the round face of the revered Buddha. Buddha's reply to the desperate youth's cry for help came in the form of a lecture on the glorious happiness of those who are freed from physical bodies. His preachment finished, the great Buddha turned away and disappeared into the night.

THE LAD STRUGGLED to free himself, but to no avail. In final desperation he cried for someone to lift him out of the pit and save his life. With tears of utter despair he fell back into the muck, exhausted and hopeless. The very darkness seemed to thicken about him. All the teachings and instructions of the great philosophers of the ages were useless now. They only weighed him down in despondency.

As he lay there utterly discouraged, the darkness about him seemed to glow faintly. A soft light grew brighter and brighter, and his ear again caught the encouraging sound of footsteps. He looked up to see the face of a stranger—a kind face. As he looked he cried out, "Lord, save me!"

It was the Stranger of Galilee who looked down in love and pity upon a dying soul in need of a Savior. Jesus spoke no word of condemnation. He found no fault. He preached no sermon. But in answer to the dying youth's pleading he threw himself to the ground, and reaching down with his nailed-scarred hands to the prisoner in the pit below, he bade the despairing youth to put his hands in his. Then He lifted him out of the mire and set his feet on solid ground. The youth stood there waiting for some condemning word, but none came. Instead, the Christ smiled on the young man, and directed him to wash the filth from him. When he was clean, the Master with a comforting smile said, "Go, and sin no more."

THE BOY AWOKE with a start. His dream helped him to understand why Jesus Christ is enshrined in the hearts of millions and why so many believe on his name. There came to his mind two texts from the Christian's Bible: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12: 32).

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16).

Women in a Witnessing Fellowship

serenity if they could be visited and receive ministry from those who radiate the Spirit of God; unnumbered homes invaded by sickness where a "Dorcas" is needed; unnumbered children on the streets who would welcome the ministry of any good woman who would open her cookie jar, tell them stories of the gospel, and organize a Skylark band or a Cub Scout den. We can't find enough women to lead Oriole circles. We are destitute for good church school teachers, camp counselors, reunion workers. In this day of working mothers, the opportunities are unnumbered for our church women to open nurseries where children can be given love and stability such as comes from a Christian home.

The Power of Women

In all these, as one moves out to serve in the Spirit of Christ, the doors open wide to bear testimony. One of the greatest reserves of power in the church is to be found in our women, especially those whose families are old enough to be in school and who have hours in the day when they can be of service. There is no limit to the witness which such women can and often do give in every branch of our church. These accept the opportunities to visit and talk of the gospel, to care for the children, to help the sick, to go into the home of another to study the Scripture, to pray with the broken-hearted, and to invite others into the fellowship of the church.

We have sometimes felt that somehow we were waiting for some great thing to happen before we begin to serve, some call from the bishop to gather, some spiritual endowment, some declaration that the time has now arrived for the church to go forward. The field is white already to harvest. The time not only has arrived—it is nearly past. The women of the church hold within their hands possibilities of rendering services in every community where we have a branch.

It is important that we go into our branches sensing the love of God within our own hearts and moved by a passionate desire to share it in our communities. As we share this Spirit and this love, the ministry and endowment of the Spirit of God will come to the membership of the church. It shall be truly said that God will pour out his Spirit upon all flesh "and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit" (Joel 2: 28, 29).

This is the call to women in a witnessing fellowship for Christ.

Mother and Daughter

"San" Graduates

NEW TO THE "SAN" School of Nursing were the two "mother-daughter" teams, resulting from the 1958 graduation of Helen Busch Chamberlain and Editha Hough. Helen is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Busch of Wichita, Kansas. Mrs. Busch, formerly Vida Hemstock, was graduated from the "San" in the class of 1929. Editha is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hough of Independence. Mrs. Hough, formerly Elizabeth Grant, was graduated with the class of 1932.

Mrs. Busch is actively engaged in nursing in Wichita. Helen, now an R.N., has returned to Wichita to practice her profession. She hopes she can "be as good a nurse as mother."

Mrs. Hough is head nurse on the surgical floor of the "San" and is making a fine contribution in our church hospital. Editha, now an R.N., has accepted a position in Houston, Texas, for the present. On leaving the "San" her parting remark was "I'll probably be back before long."

Having had this relationship with these two student nurses and their nurse mothers this past three years, the School of Nursing Administrators are looking forward to more such "mother-daughter" teams, as the children of "San" graduates reach the age of choosing their careers.

Excerpts from a Christmas letter written by John and Janice Leslie of Speedway, Indiana

THIS IS THE TIME of the year when we begin to prepare the gifts we will give loved ones. With Thanksgiving behind, the Christmas season is upon us—sometimes it seems—all too soon. But what better way to begin this glorious season than by reliving again a present you gave many years ago—the gift given at the time of your baptism into Christ's church, your life?

Have you decided what your gift to the Master will be this year? Will it be the promise of consecration, that willingness to give again your life to Christ? Don't you think he deserves this gift from you?

Are you planning to give another talent? If you gave one last year, will Christ now have only two of your talents? If you have but one talent to give, will this be the year you present it to God and Christ?

Are you going to give the gift of your financial contributions, or perhaps the gift of recognition of your stewardship obligation—the filing of a financial statement?

Will you give a new member? The first time you give this gift is the best, but it's something you can continually give and enjoy.

Maybe you've already wrapped your gift and it's ready to present at the proper time. Have you put a "Do Not Open until Christmas" sticker on the package? You might be giving a gift that to be appreciated should be worn with use. It could be all your talents: musical abilities, writing skills, your unusual knack for working with people?

There are many things that are yours to give—exclusively yours. Have you selected only one and plan to give the rest another time?

Or will you give Christ one gift that is more important to him than anything else you have to give—everything you are today . . . and the person you will be tomorrow?

It's a great gift that you can give . . . yourself, heart and soul. Daily you can give to Christ things that will make religion powerful and meaningful for you. It could be your helping hand, your smile, neighborliness, your charity—the things you do automatically—the gifts that have the stamp of your personality on them. These are the things that Christ wants from you for Christmas this year.

But this is a time for exchanging gifts. What is the gift that Christ has for you? Can you tear a small hole into his package and get a glimpse (prophetically, at least) of what's in store for you?

But first, what are the presents from years past?

You received the gift of the Son of God, his church, a great religious heritage, the strength gained from persecution of years past, the Restoration movement, your opportunity to accept Christ as your personal Savior, and the blessings that have been yours in days gone by. You undoubtedly can think of many more.

But what will be the gifts this year?

For each it may be a different gift. It may be a blessing you've prayed for, or, it might be one that you least expect, but God does have a gift for you.

Christmas is near. Enter into the festivities with your usual vigor. Prepare your gift, but don't wait until Christmas to give it to the Master. Give it today. Right now.

Sermon Seeds from the Gospels

By
Webb B. Garrison

Fleming H. Revell
Company, 1958

Price, $1.95

Mr. Webb B. Garrison has attempted a unique approach with evident success to some of the most pertinent Scriptures found in the writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, in his book Sermon Seeds from the Gospels.

Since these writings came forth in a period of time so very far from yet so very near our day, it seems the obvious needs constant consideration—the obvious needs of course being that present tense application, fresh interpretation with a more concerted effort toward plumbing the depth and breadth of written truths, is both our privilege and our obligation. Occasionally some author happens along to confront us with such a challenge.

Though Mr. Garrison brings some provoking thoughts and certainly delights in modern day application by simile, he makes no effort to exhaust any one point—only to pierce and further explore. He points out that logic is often transcended. "No one can say why a tiny seed should produce a big plant, when some big seed yields a small plant." He concludes that just as Christ found comparisons in the most "simple and familiar of events," that surely if we could discover this, or at least be more aware of this truth in our complex society, we would reap big dividends and our capacities would be increased. In this, then, our minds would become fertile soil and the seeds from the gospels, as well as divine revelation sought for in this day, would bring them into closer relationship with their Creator. For in the "simple" and "familiar" comes the overpowering gift of humility and love which might well draw men into the presence of the Almighty.

It is very interesting to note the author's remarkable explanations to what appear to be the most common expressions in Scripture. The keen element of the practical is quite rewarding. There is no substitute, in his opinion, for the cultivating of some of these little seeds "in the rich soil of one's own life and thought."

Since the Bible is the most read book in all the world, it seems reasonable that men and women in every walk of life would appreciate such a fine book as Mr. Garrison has written with its fresh and stimulating approach.

Mary of Nazareth

By Esther Kellner

Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc. 1958

Price $3.95

This is a delightful and tender story. It is filled with the warmth of the world's greatest love, and the expression through Mary of that love, in the gift of the Son of God. The author is faithful in almost every detail to the New Testament record of those tremendous events which took place between the betrothal of Mary to Joseph and the resurrection of Jesus from death to life.

Interestingly, the author portrays not Mary the mother of Jesus, but Mary wife of Cleopas, as the mother of James and Joses, Simon and Jude. The reasons for this opinion are given in a brief appendix.

Appreciation of Mary has been dulled in many minds by the adulation of Mary as the mother of God. It is refreshing therefore to read of a human Mary, simply the earthly mother of the Son of God. This book is a powerful tribute to that mother and her husband Joseph.

While there is no attempt to explain away the miraculous, Jesus too is revealed as a very human being. He is shown as a baby needing protection, a youth receiving instruction, and a man knowing temptation. The early establishment of the Way, like the latter-day Restoration, is shown to be at first largely a family matter. At this season of the year we can earnestly suggest that those wishing to refresh their minds with the story of Jesus might well do so through the eyes of Mary of Nazareth.

Power in Preaching

Price, $2.25

In these thought-filled pages W. E. Sangster seeks to answer such questions as "How can I be a better messenger for God?" and "How can I preach with Power?"

It involves learning how to become and how to remain a channel of the Holy Spirit; it involves ceaseless vigilance to keep intact within the soul the citadel of faith both in the gospel itself and in preaching as God's supreme method in its proclamation.

"No pulpit has power if it lacks deep faith in the message itself and in preaching as God's supreme method in making his message known. Men who retain faith in the message, though little in preaching, tend to put the major stress of their work on other aspects of the church's activity."

"No medium offers God the conditions he is seeking so much as preaching. God is seeking to break through and challenge the wayward soul, or speak peace to that broken and contrite heart, or give clear guidance to that befogged mind, and this is the way he normally chooses to do it."

The preacher's task is to "Preach about God, to show man his own real nature, to expose sin, to announce the way of salvation, to hold up in a hundred ways the wonder of atonement, to tell of the work of the Holy Spirit. When all is said and done, the questions which every thinking being wants answered amid the chances and changes of this mortal life are very few. Does God care? Is there a meaning in life? Does life go on? What is God's purpose with me? . . . Good preaching offers a convincing answer to these questions—preaching directed to the people's need. . . . It deals with centralities. And no sustained ministry is worthy which fails to do that."

Throughout the book the author emphasizes the springs from which true preaching flows: the centralities of faith, the sources of warmth and conviction, the necessity of prayer at the heart of all preparation to preach. He also points to clear-cut methods for preachers: work at it, make it plain, make it practical. Although this is a brief discussion, the reader will find it a guide for power in preaching.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Roger,

Having just finished reading your article in the November 24 Saints' Herald entitled "Negro Lessons in Christianity," I must express my heartfelt gratitude to you and the others of the editorial staff who have so courageously accepted the responsibility of expressing a forthright view on a controversial issue.

It is greatly encouraging that through our official church voice we have as a group chosen to "stand up and be counted" among Christians as believers in the eternal truths of unqualified love for our fellows and responsibility for their welfare in spite of prevailing prejudices.

My deep concern, however, is not only for those enlightened Negroes who are sincerely and humbly struggling in a great and just cause, but for those of lighter skin who find their hearts hardened against their brothers. May they come to know as Peter did and stand to proclaim with him: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him" (Acts 10: 34, 35).

We have all engaged in a great and marvelous work which has room only for concern and love for all of our fellow men. As the Church of Jesus Christ, to support anything less would be to deny our Savior and fail in the divine commission he has given us.

Thank you for your expression of our responsibility.

And Finally...

"HE THAT HUMBLETH HIMSELF . . ."

Tall men have problems in addition to getting in a comfortable position to sleep in a standard sized bed. I was reminded of another recently—which is to talk to others on their own level instead of talking down at them.

Following an informal dinner meeting, Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg, Kansas City's great religious and civic leader, looked up from his five-foot-eight height and inquired of President Smith, "You are somewhat over six feet, aren't you?" Without any condescension in his voice Brother Wallace replied, "Oh, I am only five feet eighteen inches."

QUOTABLES

Troubles are like company—the more you fuss over them the longer they stay.

Most men don't recognize opportunity when they see it, for it is usually dressed in overalls and means hard work.

Defeat is not bitter if you don't swallow it. Good judgment is the result of experience which is the result of poor judgment.

STEPPINGSTONES

The man who has not struggled with difficulty after difficulty cannot know the joy of genuine success. Face them and fight your way over them. There is more satisfaction in putting forth effort than in gloating over easily won profits. The rungs in the ladder of success are composed of difficulties. It is harder to climb than to stroll along level road or dawdle down hill. But every man who wants to rise above the level of the beast desires to ascend, not descend. Difficulties are steppingstones leading to the top. Therefore do not dodge them, do not run away from them.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Ruth E. Harold

I KNOW THE GOSPEL has contributed a great deal to my enjoyment of nursing and has given me strength and courage which I have tried to share with my patients."

That is the testimony of Mrs. Ruth E. Harold, R.N. and general floor supervisor at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Ruth is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Elser, church members who came to the United States from Germany in response to the gospel message. She attended William Chrisman high school in Independence and was graduated as the class valedictorian. In 1956 she was graduated from the University of Kansas Medical Center with a bachelor of science and registered nurse degrees. She was named the outstanding student nurse of her graduating class.

Following graduation Ruth was an instructor in the School of Nursing at Ponca City, Oklahoma, and then in the School of Nursing at St. Joseph's Hospital, Alton, Illinois. She is a member of the American Nurses Association.

In 1956 she was married to Lane W. Harold in the Stone Church. He holds the office of priest.

Ruth says, "My desires are to support my husband in his church work and to make ours a Zionitic home. I also want to continue to serve in my profession in some way and encourage young people to investigate the health fields. Through such avenues of service the spirit and the message of the church can be spread and others can be brought to warmth, joy, and hope which we in the fellowship of the church enjoy."

Story of Student Nurse and Disaster Picture Now Available for Showing in Congregations

Two 16mm. sound motion pictures are now available from the "San" for showings in church congregations.

One of the color movies is "The Story of the Student Nurse." This new picture took three years to film. It reveals the experiences of a typical student nurse at the "San" School of Nursing.

Charles Blanchard at the "San" took most of the picture. Central figure in the story is Jean Hodges of Lamoni, Iowa, who recently was graduated from the school. Calvin Company in Kansas City has just completed processing the film.

The other picture is "Disaster at Twilight" which records the story of the tornado which swept the southern suburbs of Kansas City on May 20, 1957. The film was made by a professional photographer who was on duty the night of the disaster. It shows the storm, the destruction, and the relief given to the disaster victims by local hospitals, and emergency organizations.

Although this film has been available only for a short time, it has already been shown eighty-two times in Independence.

"San" Releases Two Films

Both pictures run twelve minutes. They are accompanied by a script for a fifteen-minute talk. An entire program using both films can be produced in less than an hour.

All reservations for the pictures should be addressed to the Administrator, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Independence, Missouri.

A. Neal Deaver, "San" administrator, said reservations will be honored on a "first come, first serve" basis. There is no charge for the use of the films. The only expense to the user will be the return postage and insurance.

A Quiet and Peaceful Life

I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving thanks, be made for all men; . . . that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.—I Timothy 2: 1, 2.

WE HAVE HEARD and read much about the need of peace in the world, and we have even felt free to utter a few words on the subject among ourselves, our words tending to point out that the world would find peace if men would observe the principles of the gospel. And in saying this much we were undoubtedly right.

We could carry the thought a little further, with considerable profit, and establish a condition of peace and harmony among ourselves, perhaps demonstrating by our example that our doctrine is so good that it actually works.

Occasional flaring of feeling and emotion, and expression of temper, may serve to remind us that we have not yet managed to effect a perfect mastery of the doctrine of peace.

During most of his period of more than fifty years of service in the church, President Joseph Smith III had to meet this weakness among the church people. One notable statement of his to the General Conference of 1902 remains to us as a piece of wise counsel, which is as good and necessary for the church today as it was more than fifty years ago. On Thursday, April 10 he spoke to the Conference, from which we quote:

One of the peculiar frailties of the Latter Day Saint elders is the disposition to resent. . . . I think for the peace of the conference and for the reaching of proper conclusions, we must forego that disposition in ourselves to resent or retort, and not get so excited in our zeal in the discussion of any question that we give voice to anything that may be counted an indignity or covert fling. We too frequently do it. . . . I want you to bear this in mind, that in the discussion of things that are vexing we may grow vehement and say things that in our cooler moments we would not. . . . I do not know how it is with you, but I know I have been kept awake half the night over a speech in which I have said things that I should not have said, especially that part which might possibly refer to a reflection.

If we can judge from a reading of the events of those long gone days, it was not only the elders who forgot the limits of discretion and Christian courtesy. So much for the problem of good relationships within the church. President Smith also offered admonitions on good relationships outside the church, in another statement to the same Conference: "I advise you not to be harsh. The day is coming when there must be a better unity of effort and a more kindly spirit exhibited in our preaching. Our success will be better if we show them the better side without compromising the teachings we are holding."

Throughout his years of service, President Smith strove in all kindness to teach the people how to better public relations within the church and with the world about.

The "disposition to resent" is a human quality, not exclusively a church quality. It comes to us from the world and from the race, not from the gospel or from the kingdom of God. Great troubles have grown from it, both in the world and in the church. It is one of the weapons of the Adversary to defeat us and bring us down to ruin, to prevent the building of the kingdom and thwart the redemption of Zion. We have more to fear from this enemy within our ranks than from any opposition that may confront us from the outside.

Something like this has happened many times in the history of the church. Some official action or decision has been made, in which the only motive has been to serve the church and do good. Then someone misunderstood it, magnified it out of proportion, professed to see sinister motives in it, and began an outcry against it. Actions and reactions, feelings and resentment developed until there was trouble on a more or less serious scale.

As human beings we are often too sensitive: we resent things that were never intended to offend. When we are scratched, we think the remedy is to hurt somebody else worse. This has never worked.

One thing has been noted in our history; some who have offended most frequently have been the first and the loudest to cry hurt when the slightest criticism has returned to them. Some have wished to criticize freely, but were determined to hush all criticism of themselves.

In reading over the files of our church publications, one is impressed by the great patience of President Joseph Smith, by his restraint and self-control, his mildness under the most trying provocations and severe testing. If he ever gave way to feeling, it was only after the most extended of trials.

We today can profit by his example. We must learn to be patient, slow to resent, and quick to understand and forgive. And as Paul indicated, if we want peace we must make it a subject of prayer.

Stakes and districts from which the five highest total number of reports were received are as follows: Center Stake of Zion—34; Los Angeles Stake—24; Chicago District—19; Southern Ohio District—18; Flint-Port Huron District—17.

The Stewardship Educational Program in relation to present urgent financial needs.

The land purchase program and use. In this connection, a presentation was made by Bishops N. Ray Carmichael and Willard Becker, and by Don Elefson, church farm manager. Wilford Winholtz, who is with Community Studies now engaged in over-all community planning for the six-county area, presented the work of that organization. This presentation was helpful in consideration of the church needs and program.

Further consideration was given to the problem of homes for the aged in the Center Place and other areas.

Brethren Carroll Olson and Don Benton made a presentation regarding wills and other documents which was most helpful in giving information to the members of the order. It will be helpful in advising members as to the possibility of making provision for the church to share in estates.

Also included on the agenda was the subject of stewardship organizations, foreign mission costs and other needs, and several other items pertaining to the specific work of the members of this order.

The First Presidency found it possible to attend much of the discussion. An excellent spirit prevailed throughout the entire sessions.

The bishops in attendance were as follows: Ted A. Beck (Pacific Northwest); Francis E. Hansen (Los Angeles); Hudson P. Grundy (Canada); Harold Cash (New England); O. Kenneth Byrn (Detroit); Lewis E. Landsberg (Michigan); Leslie W. Kohlman (Iowa); Stephen Robinson (Iowa); James Burdick (Chicago); W. Edmund Ford (Wisconsin); G. L. DeLapp, Henry L. Livingston, and Walter N. THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC
By G. Leslie DeLapp

Order of Bishops Meetings

The Order of Bishops convened Tuesday, December 16; sessions continued throughout that day and through Wednesday and Thursday. The Presiding Bishopric felt it advisable to call the order together because of the need to consider plans for the raising of funds to make possible the commitments made by action of the General Conference, of October, 1958. The General Conference authorized further work on the auditorium, specifically "the completion of the lower auditorium, the front wings, the south portico of the building, and the south elevator, before the General Conference of 1960."

Plans were discussed for the raising of the necessary funds to accomplish this.

Consideration was also given to the task of raising the balance of the budget for the year 1958 and the budget for 1959, which amounts to $2,089,379.00 and $2,022,353.84 respectively.

The whole financial situation of the church and also in the areas represented by the bishops in attendance was reviewed. It was the consensus that financial goals, in addition to the amount required for the Auditorium, must be set at not less than $2,500,000 for each year in order to take care of the capital needs for reserves and institutional requirements. While this seems a large undertaking, the bishops are confident that with the continued support of the members of the church, it can be accomplished. Final figures relative to the cost of the completion of the work on the Auditorium were not available as the plans have just been completed and final estimates of the cost have not been provided. Consideration was given to the plans.

Many other phases of the work of the bishopric were discussed at length. Included in the agenda were the following:

Second-class postage paid at Independence, Missouri. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $4.00 per year in advance in U.S.A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $4.25 per year; other countries, $5.00 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Printed in the United States of America.

Let a Man Examine Himself

Significance of the Communion

Jesus said, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life" (John 6: 54). On the occasion of his last Passover meal with the disciples, Jesus gave further instruction about the meaning of this statement through the creation of the Eucharist.

And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave it unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you.—Luke 22: 19, 20.

Paul comments at considerable length on the meaning of the Lord's Supper in his first letter to the Corinthians (Chapters 10, 11 and 12). Together with instructions as to the significance of the Sacrament, he discusses the conditions of worthiness on the part of the communicants.

Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh condemnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.—I Corinthians 11: 27-29.

Determination of worthiness is based upon the purpose of the ordinance. Obviously anyone who abuses the Lord's Supper by carelessly ignoring or willfully misapplying its symbolic form to any purpose other than that intended by Jesus is unworthy and comes under the condemnation described by Paul.

Aspects of the Ordinance

The spiritual purpose of this ordinance has various aspects. These are inherent in the form of the sacrament itself and are referred to in numerous scriptural passages.

Commemoration — ". . . in remembrance of my body . . . of my blood" (Matthew 26: 22, 24; Mark 14: 21, 23).

Covenant or Testament — ". . . my blood of the new testament" (Matthew 26: 24), ". . . new testament in my blood" (Luke 22: 20).

Communion — "communion of the blood . . . of the body of Christ" (I Corinthians 10: 16).

Though these by no means are listed as a complete analysis of the spiritual values of the Lord's Supper, they are undoubtedly fundamental to adequate understanding of the purpose of the ordinance. Let us examine them more closely.

Commemoration

Memory is a marvelous feature of human consciousness. Without it there would be no continuity to life. An organism without memory and recall is incapable of learning, reasoning, or planning. Moral power requires control of action in terms of valid purpose, but how can this be unless memory reproduces in one's consciousness the purpose to which he is committed? Awareness of purpose depends upon the retention and evaluation of experience. The more frequently and dramatically one is reminded of experiences out of which he has drawn significant directing values, the greater will be the moral power in them.

Consider, then, the tremendous impact in the lives of those who actually shared in the flesh with Jesus the miracles, teaching, travels, hardships, victories, disappointments, and final triumph of resurrection! They were not likely to forget the events. Jesus provided a means whereby they would also remember and gain continually greater insight into the meaning of the events.

He established a memorial drama in which the physical symbols are an aid to memory. In the dramatic act symbolizing his death and resurrection, the Master not only revitalized the memory of the original disciples but made it possible for those whose knowledge comes by testimony to enter into the spirit of the original experience by continually re-enacting it symbolically. Thus, though not physically present at Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection, we do have a physical experience which brings into focus the meaning of that which we did not ourselves originally share.

A little thought will make clear the tremendous difference in the effect produced by a mere intellectual reminder of a historical fact and that of dramatic participation in a symbolic re-enactment of that event. Memory is strengthened repeatedly by actual physical experience in eating and drinking under the awareness that the substances involved are the emblems of Jesus' body and blood.

Covenant

This is what makes the Lord's Supper a "sacrament." The Latin term "sacramentum" means "oath" or "solemn promise." It is more than a memorial. The Eucharist involves a declaration of divine intent, the validity of which is guaranteed by the nature of Deity. It remains only for man to respond to the conditions of God's promises if he is to receive their benefits. The "covenant" is in effect when we assume responsibility for the conditions imposed on man.

What are some of the specific promises of Jesus in connection with the Lord's Supper?

1. "Eternal life" (John 6: 54).
2. To be raised up "in the resurrection of the just at the last day" (John 6: 54).
3. To be nourished spiritually, "for my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed" (John 6: 55).
4. Union with the life of Christ, for "he that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him" (John 6: 56).

These "solemn promises" are the obligations revealed as in the nature of Deity in relation to this "sacrament."

Man's obligations are equally clear. They are generalized in the terms of the prayers of consecration offered over the bread and wine (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, 23).

1. ". . . in remembrance of the body of thy Son."
2. ". . . witness . . . that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son."
3. ". . . keep his commandments."

Approach

In addition to what is said above about memory and commemoration we note here that the communicant's approach to the ordinance involves a conscious effort to remember. He is obligated to think about the relationship between the symbolic bread and the body of Jesus. It is impossible to do so without one's thoughts being led to the meaning and promises of Jesus' ministry—the mystery of the Incarnation, the parables, the miracles, the love which motivated Jesus in Gethsemane and on Calvary, and the power of the Resurrection. The spirit of the Communion leads to contemplation of the magnificent revelation of this sacrificial ministry of love. We accept responsibility to consciously meditate about the meaning of such a revelation.

Response

Those who have committed themselves to the Saviorhood of Jesus find in the Lord's Supper a testimony of discipleship. Even limited insight into the true significance of his nature and ministry requires some kind of response. One cannot be confronted with the facts of Jesus' life and death and resurrection without being moved. Those who believe are obliged to follow him. To take upon themselves his name means to become members of his fellowship. This is done in baptism by water and the Spirit. Ananias was instructed of the Lord to minister to Saul of Tarsus, who was to suffer "great things . . . for my name's sake" (Acts 9: 16). Saul was baptized and became the bearer of the name of Jesus Christ among many people.

On the occasion of the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15), James quotes Peter's testimony that God ministered to the Gentiles to "take out of them a people for his name" (Acts 15: 14). It is apparent that taking upon oneself the name of the Christ means commitment to him and the obligations of his church. Nephi prophesied of the Lamb of God and declared that the Holy Ghost is promised to those who, among other things, "are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism" (II Nephi 13: 16).

Obedience

Memory and commitment lead naturally to the third emphasis—to keep his commandments. The flow of ideas here is important. Obedience is the result of inner impulses rather than external compulsion. The difference is akin to that between the Christian covenant and the Law of Moses. The follower of Christ keeps the commandments of Christ because of the kind of person the disciple is by the grace of God. Under the Law of Moses obedience is spelled out in external forms, motivated by the laws of retribution as dramatized in compulsory bloody sacrifices.

In the Lord's Supper we declare that we obey him because we love him. We love him because he first loved us. His love is dramatized in the symbolism of the bread and wine.

Thus the Eucharist is a covenant. Promises by all parties are inherent in its form and setting. The obligations mutually undertaken are the expression of love. No covenant is more binding than that which is guaranteed by the moral nature of the parties concerned.

Communion

This word has its origins in the Latin terms "com"—together and "munia"—duties. There is here an implied interdependence and mutual activity. The central person in such communion is Jesus. The Roman Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation is an effort to explain the communion of men with the Son of God in a material sense by suggesting the literal mingling of the elements of the body of Jesus with the bodies of the communicants. We believe rather in the presence of the Lord in the ordinance by the Holy Spirit, in the sacrament as a whole, through representation in the priesthood and in the symbolic elements.

Whatever may be the process through which he is present, Jesus said: "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me" (John 6: 56, 57).

Spiritual Unity

The illustration of the church as the "body of Christ" is effectively used by Paul to show that communion involves unity in diversity. This is the principle emphasized in I Corinthians 12. Since we are all baptized into one body, our diversity is integrated into a spiritual unity in which the qualities of the whole are richer by far than those of any of the parts. Thus hands and feet belong together; eyes and ears are one through their membership in the body, even though their functions differ widely. How wonderfully is the body—an integrated whole—enriched by these various functions!

The Lord's Supper promotes the unity of the "body of Christ" made up of persons with greatly diverse features and characteristics: "For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread" (I Corinthians 10: 17). Those who belong to Christ belong to each other. Their communion is with the Lord, and in him with each other.

One in Christ

In this aspect of the Eucharist is a powerful argument for the doctrine of close communion. Unity is not achieved by the mechanical act of eating together. Persons with no shared deep convictions about such matters as ministerial authority or the need for the Restoration of the gospel are not "one in Christ," no matter how tolerant they may be of each other. No doubt it was a thought something like this which led Jesus to say, as Nephi records his words: "Behold, there shall one be ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name" (III Nephi 8: 32).

That the Lord's Supper was so considered anciently in the New Testament church is evident from the writings of the "church fathers" in the early centuries.

But let no one eat or drink of the Eucharist but those baptized into the name of the Lord.—Didache, IX.

And this food is called among us Eucharist; and no one is allowed to partake of it unless he believes that what we teach is true, and has been washed in the laver for the remission of sins and for regeneration and is living as Christ enjoins.—Justin Martyr.

Worthiness

"Let a man examine himself."—I Corinthians 11: 28.

The question is sometimes raised as to what constitutes "worthiness." It is apparent from the foregoing that worthiness involves repentance, commitment in baptism, determination to obey the commandments, and the spirit of mutuality in those who participate.

The spirit of the communicants may well be described by the revealed word that "I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds" (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2 e). Note also the divine command to forgive our enemies even when they are unrepentant, and that if protective action becomes necessary, it is taken in the hope that repentance and adjustment will even then permit forgiveness (Doctrine and 95: 7).

In all cases ministry should be offered by church officers to promote reconciliation when there are conflicts, but the decision for partaking rests with the individual. "Let a man examine himself" is advice which places responsibility on the individual. The statement by Paul that "one who partook of the Lord's supper unworthily would eat and drink 'damnation to his soul' (I Corinthians 11: 29) has resulted in many Christians refusing to partake because of a natural but perhaps oversensitive feeling of modesty, which senses the personal unworthiness which attaches more or less to all Christians." (Adamson, The Christian Doctrine of the Lord's Supper, page 16). But it is quite clear that Paul did not have in mind this personal unworthiness so much as he did the manner, time, and place of celebrating the rite, and perhaps even the authority of the one administering it. Paul exhorted the unworthy ones to return to the table under other and proper conditions.

Moral and Spiritual Requirements

The Lord's supper is designed to furnish spiritual food, divine food, and should be taken, when properly and authoritatively served, as physical food is taken to sustain the physical body and strength when it has been properly served. This is not to say, however, that there shall not be made on the part of the communicant adequate preparation to sit at the table of his Lord properly qualified, by penitence of soul and contrition of heart, to partake of divine food and grace. Then he can communicate with heart filled to overflowing with thanks to God for his goodness and mercy in providing room at the gracious festal board for every follower of the lowly Nazarene, and receive strength and spiritual blessing flowing from the Spirit of the Christ to his own soul.—Saints' Herald, 1913, page 1052, President F. M. Smith.

The responsibility of the communicant is to examine himself. It being assumed that the formal requirements are met, such as baptism and church membership, and proper priesthood authority, the individual who partakes is under the obligation to satisfy moral and spiritual requirements. These have to do with attitudes and conduct and relations with others.

Reconciliation

Responsibility of church officers cannot properly be applied to this area of decision. Ministry of reconciliation may include the suggestion that a rebellious person is not in the proper attitude to receive the Communion emblems. But the sacrament itself may prove to be the means of spiritual grace by which a change of attitude is effected. When ministry is offered to one who is offended, let him be reminded of the consequences of human rebellion as dramatized in the Lord's Supper. Then let him examine himself and make his own decision.

Personal responsibility at this point is further indicated by the word of God that "if any have trespassed, let him not partake until he makes reconciliation" (Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1 d). For the presiding officers to assume the duty of evaluating attitudes and conduct on an informal basis would violate a basic intent of their ministry. It would make detectives of them, searching for clues of misconduct and suspicious of the motivations behind honestly committed errors of judgment.

Withholding can be justified only on the basis of formal actions having to do with the fundamental requirement of church membership in good standing. Otherwise, worthiness is to be determined by the person who "examines himself" in the light of priesthood ministry and guidance by the Holy Spirit.

A Motivating Force

It is the duty of the disciple to make himself worthy. This does not mean that by some actions he "earns the right" or is able to claim divine grace by demonstrated merit. It does mean that he responds to the gifts of God humbly and in the spirit of devotion. He will seek reconciliation with his fellows. He will cleanse his heart and adjust his attitudes. The purpose of the Lord's Supper is, among other things, to supply motivation for the disciple to become worthy.

If one is invited to dinner by an honored friend, he doesn't say, "I can't go because my clothes are dirty and I am grimy from the experiences of the day." On the contrary, he hastens to bathe and clothe himself in fresh attire and make himself presentable.

Self-examination does not, then, point toward excuses for not attending the Lord's Supper. It calls attention to the preparations required to make the communicant presentable in the presence of the Lord and his guests. In this manner "let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup" (I Corinthians 11: 28).

Invisible Support

For every problem in this world there is a solution. It may not be the solution we think we want—the kind for which we are looking, hoping, and praying. On the other hand, it may be a better solution. At any rate, God has more to do with solutions than we know. This is the heart of the message of Christ and even of the Bible itself. Jesus said at various times, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer. I have overcome the world. If ye have faith, nothing shall be impossible to you. The things that are impossible with men are possible with God."

Many people attempt to go through life on their own, with no invisible means of support. They look upon themselves as men or women of faith, yet in actual practice their faith is not even a good crutch. No matter who we are we need help, especially when we are in a predicament. See how magnificently Paul tells of what this support meant to him. "We are troubled on every side but not distressed. We are perplexed but not in despair, persecuted but not forsaken, cast down but not destroyed." Let us seek this aid regularly and faithfully depend on our invisible support; it is ever near.

New Church at Worthington, Ohio

WORTHINGTON, just north of Columbus, Ohio, on state route 23, is a small, quiet cultural city founded in 1803. It makes a fitting background and setting for the Worthington mission, sponsored by the North congregation of Columbus, Ohio, Branch. It was organized November 13, 1949, under the direction of Elder John Booth, with Elder Donald J. Gabriel serving as its first pastor.

The first services were held in the home of Dr. Margaret Barker, at 11 East Southington Avenue, with an average attendance soon reaching forty-five. By 1955 the attendance had so completely outgrown the available space that it became necessary for the group to rent space in the Worthington Memorial Hall on Granville Road. Here the mission continued its rapid growth and soon became too large for this place also.

This situation was foreseen by the Saints in 1951, and under the direction of Elder Merle E. Howard, who was then branch president, a building fund began to take shape and grow. Under the direction of the next branch president, Elder E. Elwood Smith, a building committee was authorized and became active, and priority on building improvements of the Columbus Branch was given toward the new church building. In July, 1953, four lots were purchased at the intersection of Hartford Street and Park Boulevard.

Through determination, sacrifice, and hard work, it was possible to expedite the work and to let a contract for this new house of worship.

On November 24, 1957, the Saints of the Columbus Branch met at the site of the present building for a groundbreaking ceremony, at which time Elder Donald J. Gabriel, pastor of the mission, turned the earth.

From the beginning the mission has been a spark plug in kingdom building. The Worthy Builders' Circle of the department of women was organized in January, 1950. The members have been diligent in service projects and money-raising ventures such as bake sales, dinners, and family night social evenings. They are also engaged in cultural and spiritual studies. There has been an active vacation church school since 1950. The choir was organized in 1950. The mission also participated in civic affairs within the community, such as the spring festival of music and the world day of prayer.

The consecration service was held October 26, at 2:30 P.M., Branch President E. E. Smith presiding. He also gave the welcome address. The congregation sang "Redeemer of Israel," after which Apostle Donald V. Lents offered the invocation and introduced the speaker, President Maurice L. Draper. Elder Donald J. Gabriel gave the talk of pastoral acceptance on behalf of the Worthington congregation. Bishop Henry L. Livingston offered the consecration prayer. The hymn "Consecration" was sung, and Brother Lents gave the benediction.

The building is constructed of cement block and red brick. The outside features are floodlights, seeded lawn, and ample off-street parking facilities. The sanctuary has a seating capacity of 150, including the choir and rostrum areas. The multi-purpose room behind the glass-enclosed sanctuary affords approximately eighty additional seats for overflow crowds. This area is divided by wooden folding doors into classrooms and can be used as well for a reception and dining area. The walls of the sanctuary are a light blue. The pews, chancel, organ, and trim are of blond finish. The organ was a gift to the church in memory of Donald Downard, who served on the building committee before his death.

Beige carpeting is in the center aisle of an asphalt tile floor. The rostrum has a modern pulpit-Communion table. The baptismal font which is at the rear of the chancel area is separated from the main chancel by blue drapes. Other features include an equipped nursery, a modern kitchen, rest rooms, radiant heating, stained glass church seal in the east wall, and a large tooled leather church seal in the main entrance.

The future looks bright for the work of the church. A good number of young people have attended or are planning to attend Graceland College and are getting advanced work in educational fields. The church school classes are well attended, and there is a spirit of devotion and interest in the work of the kingdom.

The Salvation of Infants and Little Children

IT IS SAID THAT infants and little children are saved because "of such is the kingdom of God." But what is the nature or degree of this salvation? Are they saved into the celestial glory along with those who lived a long and troublesome life, fraught with severe temptations that had to be resisted or conquered, and who earned this glory by their complete obedience to the celestial law and by their good works? Could one with no normal education at all and with no acquired skills be completely happy and compatible with those having exceptional formal education and acquired skills? Would they feel it fair and right that they share the rewards earned by others under very trying conditions of life, when they themselves had done absolutely nothing to earn such a reward? Perhaps we shall never know the complete answer to these questions in this life, but a close study of familiar Scripture may enlarge our understanding.

Familiar Scriptures

Several Scriptures have been used to prove that children, who die before they reach the age of accountability, will be saved in the celestial kingdom. These Scriptures include such statements as recorded in Luke 18: 16, 17 and Book of Mormon 628: 51. But possibly among the favorite quotations are these: "Little children are alive in Christ" (Book of Mormon 769: 13), and "I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the years of accountability, are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven" (Church History, Volume II, page 16).

Are we justified in accepting these quotations as the final word of God regarding the destiny of the infant dead? We are admonished to "search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life" (John 5: 40). Paul said: "They . . . searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so" (Acts 17: 11).

In 1902 the Lord, speaking through Joseph Smith III, said: "The book of Doctrine and Covenants, as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10). Also in Doctrine and Covenants 125: 15 we are admonished: "The spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets." It is my understanding that when any revelation is presented to the church for acceptance, it is weighed against previous revelations and prophecies, and if no contradictions are found it is considered strong evidence that it could be divine.

It has been the practice of our ministry, when considering other principles of doctrine, to interpret them in the light of context and of other Scripture. For example, we are not content to accept Ephesians 2: 8, 9 to prove that all we need do to be saved is to believe Jesus is the Christ and that he saves us by his grace. We insist that we also use other Scriptures which add the concept of our being rewarded by our works, and we cite such Scriptures as James 2: 23 to justify it. Would it not be a violation of our claim for thus weighing one Scripture with others to get at the best interpretation if we fail to apply this principle also to the question of infant salvation? It is with this idea of total evaluation that I call attention to other Scriptures which need evaluation and explanation in their relationship to infant salvation.

Those Who Died without the Law

Mormon told his son Moroni that little children who are alive in Christ are in the same category with those who died without the law:

Wherefore all children are alike unto me; wherefore I love little children with a perfect love; and they are all alike, and partakers of salvation. . . . For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law. For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law.—Book of Mormon 769: 18, 25, 26.

Since infants and little children appear to be in the same classification with those who died without the law, we look to Section 76: 6 which gives us a picture of who will be resurrected with terrestrial bodies and to this glory. We observe that it includes those who died without law. However, it also says that these were taught later in the prison house, so they may be able to use their agency to make their choice after being tempted. If they were not to be able to receive the gospel and make a choice, there would be no purpose in Christ's visiting them in the prison house to teach them. Although the Scriptures make no specific mention of children being taught in paradise, or wherever their spirits may be, neither do they deny this possibility.

Only One Way to Achieve Salvation

King Benjamin (Book of Mormon 217: 116-118, 120) is emphatic in his declaration that there is no other name given, nor any other way nor means whereby salvation come, except in and through the name of Christ and his atonement. He suggests that we must become as a little child, who is obedient to his father and pliable and able to be taught. Why suggest that these qualities are necessary for salvation if the child is not to be taught somewhere so he can make his choice?

This same king (page 220: 10-12) again suggests that salvation comes to him who trusts and obeys the Lord to the end of his life. He says that salvation comes to none else and emphasizes: ". . . This is the means whereby salvation cometh. And there is none other salvation, save this which hath been spoken of; neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved, except the conditions which I have told you."

This same emphasis is given by Amulek, who made no exception of the infants and little children when he said, "And he shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life; and salvation cometh to none else" (pages 341: 96).

Law and Punishment

In Alma's instruction to his son, Corianton (454: 104-107), after explaining the principle of law and punishment, he said: "And thus they are restored into his presence; to be judged according to their works; according to the law and justice; for behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved." Can the infant dead and little children under the age of accountability repent and be judged according to their works if they are not taught somewhere and later tested?

Council in Heaven

(Genesis 3: 1-5 and Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3)

God at no time has permitted man's agency to be taken from him. This was not permitted even in the spirit world before man was placed on the earth. Since Lucifer sought to save all men regardless of what they wanted or did, and thus become a god, he was cast out of heaven with a third of the host of heaven (Revelation 12: 4). It would appear that to deny infants and little children the agency to choose after once hearing and understanding the gospel would be equivalent to robbing them of their agency, a thing even God would not permit in the great council of heaven. This concept is strengthened by many references in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 84: 99, 100; 346: 40-56).

Saved by Grace and by Works

There are many references in the Scriptures, including the Three Standard books of the church, that emphasize the principle of our being saved from the penalty of original sin through the atonement of Christ; the reward we achieve will be based entirely upon the works we bring to Christ. We suggest such Scriptures as John 5: 25, Ephesians 2: 8, 9, James 2: 23, Book of Mormon 430: 228-236; 452: 84-97; 450: 66; Matthew 16: 30; Romans 2: 6; I Corinthians 3: 8; II Corinthians 5: 10; I Peter 1: 17; Revelation 2: 23; 20: 12, 13 which informs us that we are saved by grace of the atonement and that we are rewarded according to our works. I find no exception for infants or little children to this basis for our reward in any of the Three Standard books of the church.

I Go to Prepare a Place for You

(John 14: 1-4)

When Jesus admonished his disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me," he told them that there were many mansions in his father's house, but none of these mansions which had been prepared from the foundation of the world were to be assigned to the disciples. He told them: "I go to prepare a place for you." Their places were not yet prepared. These places were for only the brethren—Christ's obedient followers. Christ explains in his parable of the sheep and the goats (Matthew 25: 32-46) that the sheep are those who ministered to the brethren (members of Christ's church—see Matthew 12: 41-44) and because of this ministry, even though they did not know they gave it (did not recognize them as followers of Christ, did not even know his church) they would inherit the kingdom (mansion) prepared from the foundation of the world. These honorable men of the earth, the sheep, are those who are to be rewarded for their works and will be given terrestrial bodies in the terrestrial glory.

Christ told his disciples (John 14: 1-4) that because they believed in God and Christ (they had heard and accepted his message) he would go and prepare a place for them. He did not identify this as a celestial reward, but it presumably is. This concept of acceptance and obedience as a prerequisite to celestial reward is strengthened by Book of Mormon 108: 41, 42, and 48. If the infant dead and little children do not meet this qualification of hearing and accepting, we see no justification in the belief that when Christ went to prepare a place for his disciples he meant to include them in this mission. However, we believe the infant dead, who elect to accept Christ after being taught after death, could be included.

Only Those Who Call on the Name of the Lord . . .

The Apostle Paul asks the question (Romans 10: 13-15):

For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?

Did Paul forget the infant dead when he made this all-inclusive statement? If not, it would indicate that they must be caught somewhere in the spirit world.

Again, in Romans 14: 11 and Philippians 2: 9-11, Paul indicates that the time will come when every tongue will confess Jesus, and every knee will bow to him. How can these infant dead confess, and therefore bow to him, if they are denied the opportunity to hear of him and his gospel of salvation, and thereby make their choice to confess him?

Infant Dead Saved in the Celestial Kingdom (Church History, Volume II, page 16)

A revelation was quoted near the beginning of this article which said that the infant dead are saved in the celestial kingdom. We believe it well also to quote a few lines preceding that statement:

"All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts."

And I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the years of accountability, are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven.

In this revelation, no limiting conditions are mentioned in relation to the celestial salvation of children who die before the age of accountability; that is, "right desires" and "right choices" are not listed as requirements for the celestial salvation of children. However, isn't it highly probable that if they had lived, many of them would have had evil desires and would not have accepted the gospel? The description of the three glories suggests that the number who make wrong choices far outnumber those who will achieve celestial or even terrestrial glory. Joseph was told that adults who died without the law, but who would have accepted it if given the opportunity, are heirs. Could it be that when Joseph Smith was given this revelation this provision was meant also to apply to the infant dead? Since we are not told this specifically, we can choose either to accept the statement as the final word of God or to interpret it in the light of other Scriptures which unfold to a fuller concept of God and his plan of salvation. If we accept this as the final word and meaning of God, then how are we to interpret the Scriptures mentioned which emphatically say:

1. "For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law."
2. "And there is none other salvation, save this which has been spoken of: neither is there any conditions whereby man can be saved, except the conditions which I have told you."
3. "And salvation cometh to none else."
4. "And thus, none but the truly penitent are saved."
5. The eternal and universal law of agency denied to none.
6. Salvation through faith and grace of the atonement, but reward for our works.
7. Christ went to prepare a place for the brethren (baptized members), not for the sheep.
8. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."
9. "And every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall swear to God."

In none of these scriptural references do we find any exception made for the infant dead.

It has been suggested that it is not godlike to consign a murdered non-Christian to hell and eternal damnation, while his murderer, who confesses Christ just before the trap is sprung on the gallows, goes to heaven to live with the just and holy men of the ages. Is it any more godlike to save the infant dead, including little children who died only one day before they reach the age of accountability, without their being required to hear and accept the gospel by the exercise of agency, while those who are only one day older, or the age of eight, must be tested during the little season following the millennium?

We see in such a concept of infant salvation an unjust God. In consideration of the revelation to Joseph Smith recorded in the Church History and quoted above, we could conceive it just and fair that such infants who would have accepted the gospel if given the opportunity in this life be later taught the gospel in the spirit world and achieve the celestial kingdom. But we are not prepared to accept the idea that the high percentage of them who would not have accepted the gospel in this life be also saved in this kingdom. If they are to be saved too in the celestial kingdom, what happened to the law of agency which God never denied anyone, even in the spirit world before man was placed on the earth? What was wrong with Paul and the Book of Mormon prophets who were so emphatic in their statements of the plan of salvation?

Again, we believe one statement of revelation ought not to conflict with revelations given at any previous time. Even Paul asserted that he taught nothing but what was revealed by Jesus the Christ (Galatians 1: 11, 12), and Paul has been quoted above to suggest other requirements for infant salvation. We see no conflict with the revelation to Joseph Smith when we suggest that these little children, who would not have chosen to accept Christ had they been permitted to live, be taught somewhere in the spirit world. Then their agency of choice will determine the glory they achieve. The honorable men of the earth and children who just reached the age of eight (or the lowest age of accountability) will have to make their choice after being taught in the spirit world. So why is it not just and fair that a child who lacks only one day of reaching the age of eight be required to prove himself if he would have failed to accept Christ had he lived?

I prefer to believe that the canon of Scripture is not full regarding the destiny of the infant dead. It is hard to understand why Section 76: 6 of the Doctrine and Covenants seems to include little children in the category of the honorable men of the earth who will achieve the terrestrial glory instead of giving some of them the chance to achieve celestial glory if their choices would have been right had they lived. Again, we prefer to believe that the canon of Scripture is not full but that if we understood the plan of salvation as God conceives it, all of the Scripture cited would be in complete harmony. God did not intend to deny little children the use of agency, but even those who would have accepted the gospel in this life if given the chance to live will be given that chance in the spirit world. Then, by the exercise of agency, they will complete their preparation for the celestial glory.

"Once I was in frantic despair," the woman said. "There was no one I could ask for help. Finally, in my desperation, I turned to God and prayed."

Some time ago I met this new acquaintance. Then gradually I learned of her tremendous hardships and struggles. For over seventeen years she had been supporting herself and her completely invalid son.

"You know," she went on, "I was surprised one day when God did answer my prayer—and in such an unusual way. I was working in the garden when I suddenly became aware of a spiritual presence near me. I looked up and saw, as in a vision, a heavenly being with a halo around his head. He didn't say anything. But I felt that a great burden was being lifted from my shoulders. His presence gave me a feeling that God was personally concerned about me, and that he was helping me through my difficulties."

She handed me a rather large book with a plain red cover. On the front cover were three letters embossed in gold, "TNT."

I opened the book and was surprised to see the Scriptures of the New Testament printed in large type. The words seemed to jump out at me as I turned the well-worn pages. Here and there were several heavily underlined verses of Scripture.

"I inherited this Bible from my mother," she said. "I treasure it above anything else. I especially like the big type—it's not so easy to slur over the words and imply preconceived notions. The words strike you with a force—like TNT!"

In reply I ventured the opinion that the size of the type face was second in importance. The significant thing is that in studying God's Word we will be given the divine TNT for solving our personal and social problems.

A true testimony of Christ leaves no room for doubt

I Had an Experience

IN THE LIFE and thought of nearly everyone there comes a time of doubt, or at least very serious questioning, as to the validity of the basic story of the Scriptures. In my life such a period came at a time when my personal philosophy and theology was demanding an explanation in law for all that has or will take place. Such doubts were tending to undermine my spiritual structure without me being too much aware of their existence.

During the summer of 1948 I was sent by Apostle Jensen on a special missionary assignment into the northern peninsula of Michigan. During the weeks spent there I attempted to prepare a sermon for the Kirtland reunion which was scheduled to convene in August—a reunion which, due to circumstances, never did take place. My preparation for it, however, was to become one of the most outstanding of my church experiences.

The theme for the reunions that summer was, "We Witness for Christ." I had chosen a sermon theme, "The Witness of the Earth that Jesus Is the Christ." My reading and note-making had continued for several weeks, and finally the approaching deadline demanded they be completed and organized. I was in the midst of my final series at Sault Ste Marie in northern Michigan. In my room, provided through the hospitality of Brother and Sister King, I was attempting to bring into final focus the central thoughts of my sermon. I was reading a book written by the German scientist Rudolph Stromberg. The title was The Soul of the Universe. At the same time I was browsing through several sections of the Doctrine and Covenants as my mind was stimulated by Dr. Stromberg's analysis of the life and ultimate death of the earth. The spirit of prayer and earnest seeking for understanding was in my heart and mind, yet I cannot say that I had any real expectancy of receiving help beyond what I was willing to "study out in my own mind," which phrase seemed to sum up the fundamentals of my theology at that moment.

Help did come to me, however, in a very wonderful manner. It seemed as if a wall of darkness suddenly exploded and my mind was enveloped in a light of understanding and revelation which, though it lasted but for a moment, was so vivid and intense that it burned into my soul with such force that truth did not just fall into place, it was fused into a new element. Out of the experience I emerged a new creature. I could not but think of the admonition of the Lord, "Give heed unto my word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow." Such a witness and testimony were surety mine.

One basic fact was all that God had revealed through this experience. This fact I had not sought. So simple it was that I felt I already knew it, but as I studied it over later, I realized that I did have a problem in this field of deep importance. So basic it was, in fact, that I seldom spoke as one who had authority. It was the simple testimony of the miracle of the birth of Jesus. He was born of a virgin in whose body the seed of life had been quickened by the Holy Spirit. I saw not only that it was true but how it was true.

Only someone who has been for a moment in the Spirit of God will know of the reaction in my physical body. It seemed to burst with gratitude. I felt I must humbly kneel before him whom I then knew to be most surely the light of truth and Lord of all. I wept with joy as I felt the cleansing force of the experience. As I write of this experience now ten years later I again sense the presence of the Spirit which gave it birth. I feel anew the thrill of its truth.

It may seem paradoxical, but the sermon on which I was working was never finished. The notes for it are still in my file today on the same paper which held them at that time. It is my testimony, however, that I have not preached a sermon since that time which has not carried part of the impact of that experience. Often since then I have felt the confirmation of the same power as I have borne witness of the living Christ. All three of our scriptural records seemed to reflect a new light. I ceased to worry about the language in which their testimony was couched. I stopped wondering about the means through which they were written or preserved. Their one harmonious melody of truth had struck a chord in my soul which still vibrates with the testimony that Jesus is the Christ.

Night

The stars hang low; I hear the night owl's call.
Thy deep tranquillity must surely penetrate man's soul,
And he will rest, though he's not reached his goal.
Would it were so!

Ah, Night, thy wings can bring but superficial rest,
For many a care is borne in many a breast,
And man, though tired in body from life's exacting toll,
Must wrestle on with weary mind and battered soul.
Night, what balm hast thou?

Oh, Night, let thy Creator in men's hearts abide.

Question

Luke 3: 23, I.V., says, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Explain this baptism with fire, how it is received, and what purpose it serves.

MRS. B. D.

Indiana

Answer

The statement by Jesus and the apostles that the repentant should be baptized by the Holy Ghost and with fire (see Luke 3: 23 and Acts 2: 3) refers to the confirming Spirit which comes in response to the laying on of hands after repentance and baptism. Fire was used as a purifying symbol in the Old Testament in altar services. Deuteronomy 4: 24 says, "The Lord thy God is a consuming fire."

When the Spirit rested upon the baptized believer on the day of Pentecost, it was in cloven tongues of fire, not the kind that would consume clothing or hair, but some visible evidence of the Holy Spirit. Malachi 3: 2 refers to the refiner's fire. The refiner would watch the silver in the crucible and keep the flame burning until the baser metal had all come to the top and been skimmed off. Then agitation in the metal would cease and the workman could see his face in the silver as in a mirror. This is like the symbolism of baptism by fire and the Spirit. When one receives the Holy Spirit and it works to refine the sin and dross from his life, he is cleansed as by fire.

Question

Is there any way of determining how many wise men there were who followed the star at the time of Christ's birth, and do we know their names?

O. D. S.

Answer

The Scriptures do not provide any answer to the question you raise. Tradition says that there were three and that their names were Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar. Tradition also says that their bodies were brought to Constantinople by the Empress Helena. Afterwards they were transferred to Milan, Italy, and finally to Cologne. They are known in history traditionally as the "Three Kings of Cologne."

The Thief

By Archie Joscelyn

The Thief is the life story of a man called Amos who was destined to be one of the thieves crucified with Jesus. The lives of the two men, Amos and Jesus, run dramatically parallel. They were born in Bethlehem on the same night and their parents were confronted with the "no room in the inn sign." The parents of the one possessing great wealth were able to secure adequate shelter; the parents of the other found shelter only in a stable.

The fortune of the one, however, was soon dissipated, given as a bribe to one of Herod's executioners sent out to kill all the male children under two years of age. In this manner the life of Amos was spared only to be lived in poverty and crime—leading him to become the thief.

Vividly and dramatically portrayed are these dreadful hours of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus as seen through the eyes of the now repentant thief. Again and again the soldier guards are amazed that Amos seemed ever more concerned about the sufferings of Jesus than his own. When the guards warned him, "You'll be crucified with the Nazarene," he replied, "I know, my father always believed that I should share a great destiny with him. If this is his, what better can I ask? Let be, it is God's will." So it is that Hannai, the other thief, reviled Jesus bitterly from his cross. Amos, forgetful of his own agony, befriends Jesus as one who has done nothing wrong and yet whose sufferings are greater than his.

In the end, "Twisting his head to look at Jesus," Amos says, "Jesus, remember me when you come in your kingly power." To this Jesus made answer, "Truly I say to you today you will be with me in Paradise."

Interwoven with the story of the thief is an account of the trials and sufferings of his sister, Rebecca, and those of Silvanus, son of one of the Wise Men, all of whom in the end return to the Holy Land in search of that King, "the one who heals and saves."

I recommend this story as one which sheds light on the times of Christ and will grip the heart of the reader throughout its pages, more especially in its most dramatic conclusion.

The author, Archie Joscelyn, was born in Great Falls, Montana, and has spent most of his life in the West. He spent years in the study of history, especially the history of the times covered by The Thief. He is the author of many short stories of a religious nature which have been accepted by Sunday school papers and by general magazines.

News from England

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—The year has been one of progress. A major operation was the renewal of the floor in the main church building. Except for the laying of polished wood blocks over the new concrete foundation, all labor was donated by the men and young people.

At a service of thanksgiving for the accomplishment of this task, a representative of each section of the "working party" spoke of the fellowship of the work, which exceeded the difficulties involved.

At the business meeting in September, Elder Frank W. Judd retired from the pastorate, and Elder Albert F. Worth was elected. His counselors are Bishop J. F. Schofield and Elder F. W. Judd. Seventy Eric S. Rowe and local priesthood members have been engaged in missionary work, and six were added to the branch by baptism. On Children's Day, Patricia and Pearl Tadgell were baptized. On September 14, Marion Cook, Kenneth Isaac, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Richards (of Cippenham) were baptized. Mrs. Phyllis Spray and Stephen Tadgell were baptized September 28. And Finally...

HOW TO GET AHEAD

The human mind should be like a good hotel—open the year around.

—William Lyon Phelps

BECOMING PROCESS

Life is not a rigid business of being but a lively process of becoming.

—Ford Lewis

DESTINY

As the sun creates your shadow, God creates your soul—but in each case it is you who determine the shape of it.

—The Country Parson

HIDDEN BEAUTY

A few years ago, a certain personable young man who is now one of the General Church officers, came to our branch as pastor. One of his first meetings was with the Zion's League. He talked on some amusing items and then he sang a little song which began, "I know how homely I am." We laughed with him, and he had us sing along with him. It went on to say, "But I don't mind it."

Later the point of the message in this short warm fellowship has come to mind. Humbleness and reality mixed into a four-line verse set to the music of a familiar hymn brought the thought that regardless of our physical imperfections, the Spirit of God still works through us and the light shines in ever so homely a countenance to reveal the hidden beauty within.

VARIATION ON A THEME

And there were in this same country, men traveling the highways by night, keeping watch over their stocks and bonds. And lo, a new star appeared in the heavens, and the brilliance of it shone round about them, and they were afraid—until they turned on their radios and heard the good news: "Fear not, for behold, we bring you glad tidings. Unto you is given this day, from the launching pad at Cape Canaveral, a new four-ton satellite, which is called Project Score."

And suddenly there was a multitude of commentators, praising science and saying, "Glory to the Advance Research Project Agency, for this will so impress the world that no nation will dare go to war against us."

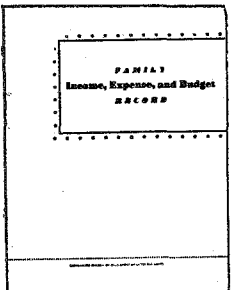

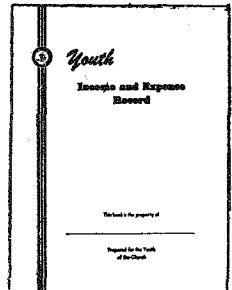

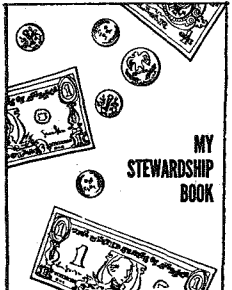

And the wise men, seeing the new star in the south, rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And they brought forth their savings and invested them with Wall Street, for they said, "Surely the time is right. At last we have peace on earth."

Accounting and financial responsibility are recognized as an integral part of the doctrine of the church. To make this accounting readily within the reach of all members of the church, three account books have been prepared: one for the very young, My Stewardship Book; one for those a little older with more financial problems, Youth Income and Expense Record; and for those who are married or with family expense problems there is the Family Income, Expense and Budget Record.
